THE NEWS OF THE CHURCH

Edited by
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD

The annual conference of Liberal Evangelicals of the Church was held in Philadelphia on June 4th and 5th with the attendance running from 200 to 300 at the various sessions, depending on the hour of the day and the intensity of the heat. Like most Church affairs it was a joyous occasion, marked by real fellowship.

Liberal Evangelicals, in case you do not know, are those who declare "that dogmatism concerning 'faith' or 'order' endangers the pursuit of truth, and that the need of the Church is not for propaganda of exclusive claims but rather an open-minded search of all Christian reality within which whatever is divine in its own inheritance, as also in the inheritance of other communions, may be trusted to survive." They further declare that "the test of the Church in this time will be its power to carry the gospel of Christ not only to the life of the individual but to all the spheres of men's social, economic, national and international relationships, and that to fulfill this purpose Episcopalians should seek a progressive cooperation in worship and work with all Christians of kindred spirit."

Believing these things one can readily imagine what subjects were dealt with at this conference. Dean Washburn of the Cambridge Seminary led off with a paper on "Our conception of the ministry" which was a scholarly presentation of the liberal point of view on the matter of orders. The gist of it, I should say, was that our orders are no better than the other fellows and that we would do well to be less snooty on that particular matter. In the afternoon Professor Norman Nash of Cambridge (there were lots of professors about, with Cambridge, Alexandria and Philadelphia chiefly represented) read a paper on "The social implications of religion from the liberal evangelical point of view." He brought out the principles of brotherhood, service and individual worth that stand out in the gospel narrative and declared it to be the job of the Church to apply them socially. He thought this might be done without scrapping our democratic institutions by going either fascist or communist. He was followed by the Rev. J. Howard Melish, rector of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, who stated that God was at work in the world, often in strange places, and got headlines in the papers the next morning for saying that he thought God was very definitely at work in Russia.

BISHOP PARSONS
Addresses Liberal Evangelicals

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin of Richmond, talked about young people, contending that there were about a dozen different sorts, all of whom could be reached by a clergyman who has the good sense to study their needs and problems. A number of college pastors spoke during the discussion period, notably the Rev. Henry Lewis of the University of Michigan and the Rev. John Harris of Dartmouth, both of whom presented cheerful pictures of the college boys and girls.

Monday evening was the high spot of the affair, with Bishop Taitt welcoming the conference to his diocese by telling a couple of funny stories, and Presiding Bishop Perry was on hand with a short address on the subject of Liberalism. Then came Bishop Parsons of California, contending in a common-sense sort of way that both liberals and evangelicals were necessary to the Church and that if you could combine both in one man so much the better.

The following day the Rev. Howard C. Robbins of the General Seminary and the Rev. Bradford Young of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, presented illuminating and practical papers on the subject of Worship. Dr. Robbins seemed to feel that the present Prayer Book would do very well, but he was less enthusiastic about the Hymnal and urged another revision. Mr. Young, true liberal, was all for experimentation in worship and gave valuable suggestions to those who wanted to follow his advice, particularly by calling attention to the Gray Book, a book of prayers and services edited originally in England but more recently adapted to American use. It should be added that Mr. Young, while advocating freedom in worship for the liberal, insisted that the Anglo-Catholic should be granted the right to have service of Benediction and whatever else he wants.

The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn of Cambridge then again turned the attention of the conference to the college man by talking quite informally for an hour or so about their attitudes on every conceivable subject from football to companionate marriage. It was entertaining.

An abstract of a paper on the subject of war by the Rev. Elmore McKee, unable to be present, was presented in the afternoon, after which there was an address on the same subject by Bishop Gilbert of New York, followed by perhaps the most animated discussion of the conference. Mr. McKee declared himself to be an uncompromising opponent of the war system and declared that it was one of the chief tasks of the Church to put war and the war system out of business. He concluded his paper by advocating an international Church conference on the subject, to be followed by an educational campaign against war on the part of all the churches. Bishop Gilbert took much the same position and as a practical measure advocated a whole-hearted support of the peace program of the Federal Council of Churches. Indeed he said that the Episcopal Church should belong to the Federal Council—that he was tired of going around to the back door, which he had to do as an Episcopalian, when he wanted so much to march right in at the front door. This remark was greeted with warm applause.

Then the chaplain of West Point, the Rev. Roscoe Foust, came to the platform and did his best to reconcile the Christian religion with the war system. The men at West Point, he said, have real respect for the Episcopal Church but have no use whatever for the Federal Council of Churches. They got hot and bothered every time they read about a peace sermon since they are convinced that all of them are "canned" sermons that came from the Federal Council. The Rev. Lawson Willard stressed the need of getting to the economic roots of modern war. He also got a hand when he said that the pastoral of the House of Bishops, previously praised by Bishop Gilbert, could not be taken seriously as long as the Bishops refused to repent for the action taken against Bishop Paul Jones. (Funny how that man does arise to plague people). The Rev. Spear Knebel also spoke on the importance of an economic approach to the whole question. Bishop Parsons then made the point that it was rather difficult for the House of Bishops to be penitent for the Paul Jones affair, since most of those now in the House of Bishops were not there when that action was taken. He advocated a well thought out program of peace education. The session was closed by the Rev. Norman Nash who contended that radicals who found all wars springing from economic life were over-simplifying the matter, and that an economic revolution that would do away with the profit system would not remove all causes for war.

The concluding paper of the conference was by Bishop Washburn of Newark on "The Appeal of Jesus to Modern Life", an extremely able and inspiring plea for more earnest evangelism on the part of Church people generally.

The conference, to its great credit, was marked by that search for trust that is characteristic of those who class themselves as liberals. Convictions, passionately expressed, there were too, but one rather got the impression that they were individual convictions rather than the convictions of a group that had been welded into anything that could be called a movement. Evangelical fervor for "an open-minded search" comes hard for an individual, let alone a group. It therefore remains to be seen whether those sponsoring this new Church movement can line up an enthusiastic following. One can however report that they made a fine beginning in this first general conference and wish them the best of luck for the future.

The Rev. Howard C. Robbins was elected chairman to succeed the Rev. W. Russell Bowie; the Rev. J. Howard Melish was elected vice-chairman; the Rev. Brook Stabler of Philadelphia, secretary; Mr. William DuBose, treasurer. The executive committee consists of the Rev. H. N. Arrowsmith Jr. of Baltimore, the Rev. George Trowbridge of New York; the Rev. W. Russell Bowie; the Rev. A. B. Kinsolving of Garden City; the Rev. Phillips Osgood of Boston and the Rev. Robert Rogers of Brooklyn.

Upon motion of the Rev. Richard Preston of Worcester, Mass., a committee is to be appointed by the executive committee to work out a program for the application of the teachings of the New Testament to modern social, industrial and international life.

C. L. I. D. Meeting In New York

Bishop Parsons of California and the Rev. J. Howard Melish of Brooklyn were the speakers at a luncheon meeting of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, held in New York on June 7th. Plans were discussed for activities in connection with the coming General Convention.

Two Sermons In New York

Several thousand sailors marched into the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Sunday last, headed by Admiral Sellers, and listened to a sermon on the subject of war and peace by Bishop Manning. He declared that everyone was opposed to war "and no one, I believe, is more earnestly opposed to it than the officers and men of our navy and of our army". The Bishop declared that the Church "in its very nature must be opposed to war because war is irreconcilable with the setting up of the Kingdom of Christ in this world for which the Church exists. But this does not mean that the Church, or the Christian religion, condemns the use of force when this is necessary for the maintenance of right and peace and for the restraint of the wrong doer." He stated that the extreme pacifist position, taken by many clergymen today, represented neither sound thinking nor true religion and was doing much harm since "it was repelling strong men from the Church." "There are situations in which a man who would not use force, and all the force at his command, would be unworthy of the respect of his fellow men. There are situations in which the use of force for the protection of others is an act of the highest self sacrifice and love, and so long as sin and crime are in the world there will continue to be such situations."

I am not quite persuaded to this position myself, though I did only the other night hear a communist leader develop the same argument, less polished but possibly as effectively, before a huge mass meeting of the unemployed. "The bosses," he shouted, "are allowing you and your families to live in hovels and to go without food. And I say that the man who won't fight to change this rotten system is a dirty rat." Comrade Manning of Morningside Heights—greeting from Comrade Broder of Union Square.

Clerical Pensions Almost Quadrupled

The average age allowance for the clergy under the Church Pension Fund has increased to approximately $1,000 annually, nearly four times the 1917 average of $262. The highest pension at present, according to the report of the president, Mr. William Fellowes Morgan, is $1,500, though he expresses the hope that the future will see many pensions at a higher figure. The annual pension roll has increased from $470,- 000 ten years ago to the present annual total of over $1,100,000.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

FOLLOWING the practice of last summer we are to alternate with eight and sixteen page numbers during the summer. It enables our editors to get a rest and it saves money—gives you a rest from some of us also which no doubt will be welcomed. You will be presented with the news each week; with articles and the news every other week. In September we will return to the sixteen pages each week, when we will start one or two new features, presently to be announced. The September issues will also deal with issues that are to come before General Convention. It is our hope that those taking Bundles will continue them through the summer, and that many others will place orders now for Bundles to start in September to run at least through the General Convention period.

Bishop Hulse of Cuba reports marked progress in Church life in spite of increasing economic distress and political unrest. He writes of strikes and riots which made it dangerous to go on the street yet he declares that he can find no particular antagonism to the Church. The situation "has added to our difficulties during the year. But in spite of dangers and difficulties our missionaries have gone about their task with increasing success if we can judge by the statistics."

Catholics Warned Against Fascism

Asserting that the Catholic Church in Canada and the United States is "showing a disposition to play with the various Fascist elements that are developing on this continent" the Catholic Record of Canada warns that "it is a dangerous and unprofitable game." "If the courtship now going on between Catholicism and the Fascists should blossom into any kind of marriage—even a 'marriage of convenience'—the Catholic Church in Canada is done," the Record declares. "For, paradoxically, if you like, the Catholic Church thrives and grows on Liberalism, not on the reactionary spirit that breeds Fascism."

"The Church was never so feeble spiritually as when it was most narrow temporally. It was never so great spiritually as when it stuck to its spiritual functions and looked with a detached and tolerant viewpoint upon temporal affairs. During the burnings of the Inquisition, the Church was at its lowest moral ebb. The flood tide of its greatness came when its Popes withdrew into the Vatican and held themselves aloof from earthly bickering.

"If the Church had had any characteristic qualifications to govern temporal affairs, if it had had any economic sense, it might now have ruled the world. But its manifold and manifest failures along that line in the middle ages defined its perpetual function quite clearly.

"The Catholic Church has no part in politics, certainly not in that type of politics that propounds a theory so utterly at variance with its broad, tolerant and usually progressive policies."

Reaching Churchmen In Rural Connecticut

Following the direction of the signs that say "Emmanuel Church" along the winding Connecticut road twelve miles from Middletown, one comes to an open-country church at Killingworth, one of the missions ministered to by the Rev. George B. Gilbert. Here on May 24 gathered the members of the Woman's Auxiliary from the Middlesex Archdeaconry for their annual spring meeting, their numbers augmented by the residents of the countryside until the church overflowed and an amplifier carried the service to a hundred or more outside. The speaker was the Rev. Goodrich R. Fenner, secretary for rural work on the National Council's social service department, who spoke on the responsibility of the Church for work in rural communities.

It has been the custom of this parish for the twenty-one years Mr. Gilbert has been there to have its mid-day meal together on the Sundays when there is a service; they cook over an out-door oven in good weather, otherwise in part of the church building.

Among the people now living in that region are several recent arrivals from the city, driven out by the depression and establishing new homes on the land. One of these reported that Mr. Gilbert had come to call on them before they had their household goods unpacked, in contrast to the city caller's formality which would probably have telephoned first for an appointment.

each presenting their arguments. The newspapers made a great deal of it naturally, and the lady later apologized for her action, though she stated that she did so only because she interrupted the service. Church Observes Canadian Night

St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, was jammed on May 20th for the annual observance of Canadian Night. The annual event, coming always on the Sunday nearest Empire Day, is a gesture of good-will on the part of the cathedral to all Canadians, and numbers of English and Canadians always attend. The special preacher on this occasion was Dean C. E. Riley of Christ Church Cathedral, Hamilton, Ontario. Attending the service was the Essex Scottish Regiment, the Sons and Daughters of St. George, the Canadian Legion, and clergymen from both sides of the border.

Bishop Abbott Has Anniversary

The fifth anniversary of the consecration of H. P. Almon Abbott as Bishop of Lexington was observed on May 15th. There was a luncheon, attended by all of the clergy and about 250 of the laity, with many of the mountain people who have been confirmed by Bishop Abbott among those present. It was announced that during the past five years the indebtedness of the diocese had been reduced from $74,815 to $5,212, which is certainly something to boast about these days. But that isn't all: the number of clergy has about doubled, pledges to National Council work have been met, every parish and mission is manned, three new churches have been built, with a fourth now under construction, while the fabric of the rural churches has been restored, including the development of the mountain work.
