That maker of paradoxes, G. K. Chesterton, has apparently evolved the greatest paradox of his life in getting himself drafted into the British army. His girth alone, which makes him the favorite and frequent impersonator of Dr. Johnson at fairs and festivals, would seem to preclude him from the life of camp and trenches. But the paradox, as the New York Times sees it, is that this is the very kind of life to which he has been all the time destined.—Literary Digest.

A temporary frame addition to the parish house of St. Mark's Church, Toledo, O., is under construction to tide over the time when the fine Gothic stone church will be enlarged to meet all the needs of the parish according to the original plans. The addition is to be made for the reopening of the Sunday School in September. New offices and a library and reading room as well as quarters for the primary department of the Sunday School will be provided in the extension. The Rev. R. S. Chalmers is rector of the parish.

The Rev. F. R. Godolphin, rector of Grace Church, Oak Park, Ill., who is serving as a civilian chaplain at Camp Bowie, Texas, says: "The Camp sites are rather dreary, for there is not a tree of any kind and not very much grass. When the winds blow—and they blow almost all the time—there is about as much of Texas in the air as underfoot and everything is quickly covered with fine dust. To my amusement, I am occasionally advertised as Chaplin Godolphin on the 'Y' bulletin boards, and perhaps this is one reason why the men gather, expecting to see a man with a funny walk."

The Rev. Arthur P. Kelley, formerly pastor of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Westboro, Mass., has been killed at the Marne. He had been with the American army in France for a year, serving first as a private. At the time of his death he was first sergeant in the 103rd Ambulance Corps, 101st Sanitary Train. He enlisted at Framingham, Mass., two years ago, and his first field duty was at the Mexican border.

The Rev. Mr. Kelley was 37 years old, and was a native of Nashua, N. H. He was graduated from Trinity College and from the General Theological Seminary.

A memorial service, consisting of appropriate hymns, sentences, psalms, Scripture lessons, and prayers, has been set forth by the Bishop of Massachusetts, to be used in "Commemoration of one who has given his life for the country." The office was prepared at the request of Bishop Lawrence by Dean Rousmaniere of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, and the Rev. John W. Suter. It is a neatly printed leaflet of twelve pages. Copies may be obtained of the Secretary, St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, for five cents each, or from the Fort Hill Press, 176 High St., Boston, at four cents each in lots of fifty or more; or they may be ordered through the office of THE WITNESS, Hobart, Indiana.

In response to repeated requests from the Bishops and Missionaries in the Orient, Mr. John Wood, Foreign Secretary of the Board of Missions, expects to spend next autumn and winter visiting the Far Eastern mission Fields. Sailing from San Francisco early in October, he will first visit in the Hawaiian Islands, then spend about two months in Japan. From there his itinerary takes him south to the Philippines for January and February of 1919. March, April and May will be spent in China. After a visit to the Church of England Missions in Peking neighborhood and Korea. Mr. Wood expects to return to Japan and sail from Yokohama early in June, 1919.

An Earnest Appeal

A year ago St. Michael's Mission School was opened to the children of the Arapahoe people. Eighty children, half starved and diseased, presented themselves for admission. It was not possible to refuse them, though the Mission had neither sufficient funds nor equipment with which to work. It accepted the challenge of the Aparahoe people, and is today ministering to the whole tribe. Last year our boys came as day pupils, for there was no place to house them. There were no school buildings. In order to hold the school together, it will be necessary to erect a school building and dormitory for boys. This will cost $15,000. The building is now under construction. The confidence of the Arapahoe people in St. Michael's Mission is a challenge to whole Church. The work is one of unprecedented promise.

The world today is fighting for the existance of small peoples. The Arapahoes, commonly accounted one of our most difficult tribes, are responding to a degree hitherto unknown in Indian work. They need your help. This new building offers a splendid opportunity for a memorial gift to a much-abused people. Contributions in any sum will be welcome and may be sent to Bishop Thomas at Cheyenne, or to the Warden, the Rev. Royal H. Balcom, St. Michael's Mission, Wind River, Wyoming.

A SAFE and ATTRACTIVE PLAN

For Women's Church Organizations and War Relief Societies

TO RAISE MONEY.

MRS. GUTGESELL'S CHRISTMAS NOVELTY GIFT BOOK

Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.

NO INVESTMENT SPLENDID PROFITS

For information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:

MRS. A. A. GUTGESEE, MINNEAPOLIS,
400-402 Sixth Avenue South MINN.

SHATTUCK SCHOOOL

Has behind it the Experience, Traditions and Ideals of fifty years. ¶Is a College Preparatory School with military drill and discipline under U. S. War Dep't. Reserve Officers' Training Corps. ¶In Grounds, Building and Equipment is equalled by but few schools. ¶Applications for the School Year, 1918-19, are now being filed. An early enrollment will be necessary this year. ¶or catalogue address C. W. NEWHALL, Headmaster, Box 452. Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn.

SETTLEMENT TRAINING SCHOOL

LA GRANGE SETTLEMENT LA GRANGE, GA.

A PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH TRAINING SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL WORKERS

Courses in Settlement Nursing, Kindergarten Work, and special course of one year in Church and Social Work for graduates.

REV. R. T. PHILLIPS, Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II, NO. 84 | HOBART, INDIANA, AUGUST 10, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATTWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

A MID-WEST CONFERENCE

For a few days I have been privileged to enjoy a rare treat, a sojourn in one of the most delightful spots in the heart of the Mid-West—Racine College. Summoned thither to share in the Summer Conference for Church Workers of the Province of the Mid-West, I left home with little premonition of the pleasures that were in store for me. The trip westward to Chicago was the usual sleepless nightmare on a sleeper, for one who looks on a night in a Pullman as a jail sentence in a warming oven realizes what it means to have a nightmare when half awake for eight hours. From Chicago a comfortable ride north gave me my first glimpse of Great Lakes, our training station for the navy. It seemed that for a mile we passed the barracks which sheltered the white-clad boys who swarmed the open spaces—another evidence of the determination of our people to make the highways of the sea safe from the murderous deeds of a people debauched and inhuman. My mind reverted to a trip from Portsmouth, England, to the Isle of Wight, in 1913, during which I saw the Solent dotted with English warships, that mighty and valorous element in the defense of humanity, and I realized that these boys, on similar ships, would soon be the guardians of the liberties of the world.

But the train sped on, and soon we reached Racine, a splendid little city on Lake Michigan. A craft of the mosquito fleet (with which Detroit has covered the earth, and whose sting is apparent when its driver conducts the charge) took me to the edge of the city and into the precincts of that spot, Racine College, hallowed by the names of Kemper and DeKoven. The first glimpse of the place is impressive. Situated on a high bluff, overlooking Lake Michigan, is a very long row of irregular buildings, so arranged as to present one continuous front to the beholder, and suggesting at once the traditional English schools. On the other side of this group is a spacious grove, with noble trees, and, beyond, several other detached buildings, with the charm of reasonable age upon them. In the midst of the grove, directly in the heart of the group, as its substance is in the heart of those who teach and who learn there, is the Chapel of St. John, a simple yet impressive church.

The first notion that arises in this quiet and cool place, away from the clamor and the tumult of the cities, is that Racine is an expression of the spiritual aspirations of consecrated men, and also that it is a place which men, many men, have loved with deep devotion. There are many evidences of that love for its memories and traditions. Clustered about that grove, and in those buildings, are the associations of youth and effort that cast a fine glow, as of a mellowing sunset, upon its walls and within its halls. It is like a loved and well-worn book, to which we turn again and again, partly for new realization of its truth, partly for a renewal of our old first impressions—a book whose thumb marks and underscorings and penciled notes do not disfigure it, but which actually add to its attractiveness.

That was my first impression of Racine, an impression which grew deeper as I talked with those who knew it and loved it. In all these respects it is like my own college, Kenyon. It will be one of the disasters of our modern life if such places are not preserved in their full efficiency, to give of their spirit to many generations. They are sacred spots, real sacraments of true learning, in which the mental training is reinforced by the mightiest forces that ever moulded men, an appreciation of the spiritual treasures of the past, and an assimilation of the unseen, yet pervading, atmosphere of courage, hope and faith, on which the giants of preceding generations fought their good fight. Men of the Middle-West, immersed in things that perish, do not let the sacred fires die out in such consecrated places as Racine and Kenyon, or the world will be poorer for your riches.

The Conference itself was a notable success. Too much cannot be said for the committee who managed it, and for those who by their attendance assured its value. Not to the faculty alone, who were giving of their best in these quiet surroundings, but to a devoted assembly of learners, students, workers, must a tribute be paid. The earnest attention of the students inspired the faculty, and the real contributions of the faculty aroused the attention of the students. The faculty came from without the Province as well as from within it, and the willingness of the teachers from New York State and elsewhere to give of their ripe experience to the Conference was but an evidence of how worthily they thought that their best was bestowed. Bishops, parish priests, laymen and women workers in auxiliaries and Sunday schools assembled here to gather inspiration for their scattered works. Unfortunate indeed was that person who might have attended that Conference and did not.

It is not my purpose to "report" the sessions. Worthier pens than mine will do that, and I urge you to read the reports. My purpose in this paper is to touch the things that possibly the reports will not touch, and record that which we do not put into reports, so that those who were there may see it all with another's eyes, and that those who were not there may be prompted, next year, if railroad fares are too high, to walk to Racine for the enjoyment of it all.

First, we had the Bishops. I realize that it is a little risky to write in this intimate fashion about Bishops. It might tend to develop an opinion that Bishops are quite human members of the human family, instead of ecclesiastical dignitaries, whose presence at such an occasion is necessary to make it canonical, or part of the presiding furniture of an assembly, like the gavel, for example. Now be prepared for a little gasp, my reader, when I say, not too loudly, for some Bishop may overhear, that our Bishops are princes of good (I crossed out the word "fellows") companions. So with the Bishops at the Conference. There was its president, gracious, kindly, sympathetic, manly, commending his religion by his every tone and act. It was worth the visit to Racine to have that Bishop put his arm around one's shoulder and to walk along under the trees in affectionate discourse. And there was our other Bishop, manly, direct, devoted, companionable, whose Episcopal unconsciousness and simplicity was an ornament to his high office. Those who were there know who I mean, and those who were not there should come and get acquainted.

May I mention one name, Dr. Rogers, warden of Racine College, upon whose shoulders rests the great responsibility for the future of the college? His position made him host to the Conference in a special sense, and the delightful way in which he impressed his guests with his concern for their comfort, and his constant participation in all their activities, both educational and recreational, did much to enhance the feeling of the visitors that they were about his hearthstone, with equal freedom to work, pray and play.

(To be continued)

Dr. Stires Becomes "Y" Worker in France

Just before starting for France the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, Rector of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street, sent a letter to each of the 236 boys on the Honor Roll of the Church, the great majority of whom are in France. At the head of the letter is a small picture of the entrance to St. Thomas'. Dr. Stires addressed each letter "My dear friend and comrade." He sent them from his summer home at Bolton Landing, Lake George, and says in part:

"The little picture above will recall a spot dear to you, where heartfelt prayers are constantly offered for you and the glorious cause in which you are engaged.

"You can easily see the number, 236, on the Service Flag, though you cannot see what inspires many who pass—the four gold stars of the deathless ones who have already offered 'the full measure of devotion'.

"You have been sorely missed, but our pain has been conquered by our pride in you. You are in the front line of true Americans. You understand the issue; your intelligence, your character, your humanity have filled you with the clean wrath of God against the biggest and basest war ever begun to rob and enslave mankind.

"Some weeks ago a cable message from the Y. M. C. A. headquarters in France invited twenty clergymen by name to come over and help by talking to the men at the front. I expect to start within two days, and I will perhaps be greeting some of our St. Thomas' men before this letter reaches them. If I should be so fortunate as to find you, I shall count upon your telling me of any way in which I may really serve you or the others."

Fiftieth Anniversary in Wyoming

The Eleventh Annual Convocation was held at Christ Church, Douglas. The occasion was also a celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Church life in the Missionary District of Wyoming.

The Convocation was opened by a celebration of the Holy Communion. The sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. N. S. Thomas, S. T. D., Bishop of Wyoming, who gave a resume of the accomplishments of fifty years in Wyoming, reading extracts from letters of former workers in the District. Following the service, preliminary organization of the Convocation was effected, which was completed in the afternoon.

The Bishop's address, which was read in the afternoon, dealt with the vital statistics of the year, and pointed out the fact that during fifty years of Church life in Wyoming but one man had offered himself from the District as a candidate for Holy Orders, and he an Araphoe Indian, the Rev. Sherman Coolidge. A special committee was appointed to consider the question of recruits for the ministry.

Two were ordained to the diaconate and two advanced to the priesthood on Sunday morning. As a special act of courtesy, the pastors of the Methodist and Congregationalist Churches closed their services and requested their congregations to attend the ordination. The pastors were invited to vest and take part in the procession, which they gladly did.

The great regret of the Convocation was that so many of the clergy and lay delegates were prevented, by floods and washouts, from being present. The followng telegram was received by Bishop Thomas, and was greatly enjoyed by the members of the Convocaton:

"Lander, Wyo.

"Through flood and mud, about 20 of us are here, but there is a great gulf between us, so that those who would pass from us to you cannot. Now, unless the Convocaton can pass from you to us, we are afrad we will not hear our Moses and the Prophets at ths time. Express our regrets, and say to the Convocation that not trouble to send any water. We are not dry.

T. S. TALIAFERRO, JR.,
"LUCY R. TALIAFERRO.
"MRS. FRANK WAXELBERGER,
"MRS. JOSEPH W. ARMSTRONG,
"AIMEE SCHEPP,
"DR. SCHEPP, Etc., Etc."

A SPLENDID TRIBUTE TO DEAN WHITE

This is what "Trench and Camp", published at Camp McArthur, Texas, says of Dean White, as he leaves camp to take up his duties in New York City as domestic secretary of the Board of Missions. Our readers know Dean White well through his "Missionary Messages from the Church's Holy Days", as they appear week after week on our second page, and we are glad that he has been appreciated by our soldier boys and has won this well-merited tribute:

"Francis S. White, known to Waco people and beloved by McArthur soldiers as Dean White, will leave today to assume his new high duties as secretary of the Mission Board of the Episcopal Church.

"Dean of the Cathedral at Grand Rapids, he left his work to come to McArthur with the Michigan Guardsmen. Here he has served, and with distinction, in every capacity as a Y. M. C. A. secretary. When the athletic director of a building was absent, Dean White put sporting blood into all the tired soldiers, and made them relish the fun. If they wanted to sing, he was there. As an educational director, he has made many soldiers realize the need for reading and writing, and helped them on their way. In his religious direction, he apparently understood just their difficulties, and made the way easy for wandering feet.

"For several months he has acted solely as a camp pastor for the Episcopal Church. Here again he made plain his human understanding and laid the foundations broadly and with a strength that has proved the safeguarding of many men.

"Dean White has had his own lessons, and takes from McArthur the true reward of his unselfish service. His profit lies in the fact that there are but two things now wrong with humans — prejudice and self-sufficiency. He says that the first prevents men from getting on the right highway simply because they will not permit themselves to be convinced. Dean White says that self-sufficiency is even a greater cause for error, because the individual cheerfully admits that he has nothing to learn, and is therefore hopeless.

"Dean White has been the faithful servant of many, and he now goes to a larger field. Camp McArthur will wish him God-speed, and hope that his ways will be crowded with friends who will love him and value him as he has been loved and valued here."

THE "RELIGION OF THE TRENCHES" BACK TO FIRST PRINCIPLES

The world is hearing a great deal these days about "the religion of the trenches".

The young men of all nations now at war, we are told, when they return to their homes, will take back with them something entirely new in theology, a conception of the Deity and of man's relation to the Creator different from anything hitherto impressed upon the human intellect.

This has a refreshing sound and is pleasing to the ears of men and women everywhere who are struggling with their own spiritual problems, and at the same time trying to harmonize the theories and practices of others with their own feeble conceptions of religion.

Some of us are old-fashioned enough to doubt that the men in the trenches will discover in the horrors of war and bring back with them anything that is essentially new, although they may return to the work-a-day world possessed of deeper and finer religious convictions than they entertained before they went forth to kill and destroy.

There are some of us who believe that these boys, instead of discovering something new in theology, will find something that is very old indeed—the plain and simple Gospel and religion of the Christ. And if, perchance, they come to the realization that there is no middle ground in this theology, that a man must live either within the law or without it, the war may have been worth while after all.

The man in the trenches will get this new impulse from one of three sources. It will come to him as a consequence of being face to face with death, as a result of his mingling man to man with his fellows on a plane where wealth and social standing and ancestry melt away in the presence of genuine manhood and spiritual power, or with his contact with the materialism of Prussian philosophy, out of which have come the horrible practices of the warfare of the Hun of the Twentieth Century.

Opposed to the selfishness and brutality of the Hun, the man in the trenches will set up the altruism and the charity of the Christ, and against the bestiality of the German soldiery he will invoke that beatific pronouncement, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

The prediction that the man in the trenches will bring back with him a new, a more robust, a more positive theology, is based, no doubt, upon the feverish search for a remedy for present day spiritual ills. The tendency of humanity has been away from the landmarks of Christianity. They are too exacting, they interfere too much with the freedom of that degree of inherent depravity which is supposed to lurk in the frame of mankind generally.

A large part of the world is seeking a religion that will soothe and satisfy the conscience without disarranging the plans of the flesh. There is nothing new or strange about this. It has been the way of earth from the beginning, but the human soul has never entirely lost its hold on the eternal truths of this life and the life to come, and it never will. The destiny of the race is fixed. It is upward and onward.

Germany forgot God, or rather her rulers erected a spurious Deity for their blind followers to worship, and behind whom they have concealed their brutish and selfish designs and purposes, and German materialism has brought down upon it the fury of mankind. Its death knell is sounded.

The religion of the trenches will not be new. It is as old as Calvary. It dates back to the Cross. If mankind is saved, it must be by that sign. The man, or the nation that forgets God and closes the eye to the Crucified Christ can have no peace.

That must be the religion of the trenches and of the universe. Every man's conscience tells him what it means. He can neither deceive himself nor anybody else about its obligations.—Harry Giovanolli, in the Lexington (Ky.) Leader.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE MISSIONARY MOTIVE AND THE MISSIONARY PRAYER

By the Rev. Francis S. White

"That they all may be one." Out of the heart of the seventeenth of St. John sounds this cry to heaven: "As Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me." A missionary is one sent. So with reverence let us repeat the truth that in His earthly life Jesus Christ was the ideal missionary and the missionary's ideal. In this ejaculation of Jesus Christ we find the Christian's objective. This tells us why the Church should be the Church of the Reconciliation, and why the ministry is empowered to say, "We, in Christ's stead, do beseech you". This throws light on why the average man or woman who refuses to do his or her share in the unifying process is, in God's sight, "good for nothing". And having this objective, shall not the earnest Christian make all things, from his words and phrases, down through his household benevolences, into his Church activities, illuminate his life with this hope? The missionary is a praying man. With him or her it becomes as natural to pray as to breathe, and when he is praying there comes unbidden the voice that breathes in unutterable longing for the fulfillment of the Divine mission—the vision of unity. Too many of the people are not yet enamored of that vision. Too many parishes, and missions, and dioceses, too many officials of the Church, have not yet learned that the secret of ultimate success lies in the right use of prayer for the accomplishment of that vision of unity.

Our blessed Lord taught men the roots of prayer—the secret of the branches, and the flowers, and the fruit of prayer, when He taught men the Lord's prayer. It is the tap root of all prayer. When one absorbs spiritual power through the right use of that prayer, he has become a full-fledged missionary. That is one reason for its frequent use in all our services. Let us take the prayer as our Mother Church gives it to us, and see if it has not some message for us which will make better Christians, that is, better missionaries, of us. You will recall that the prayer has seven petitions, apart from the address and the ascription. Of these seven, three are for God's glory, and four for man's needs. Let us start with the address:

1. Our Father who art in heaven. If "mother" is the dearest word in any tongue, surely "father" is a close second. The word was very often and very sweet on the tongue of our Saviour. In its use He found comfort and strength and stimulus. And these qualities came to our Lord not from lip usage, nor from an attitude of mind, but from a manner of life. He lived a Son's life; He did His Father's business; He identified Himself with His Father. What a difference there is between that word "Father" on the lips of Jesus Christ, and the same word on the lips of His children by adoption and grace! As individuals and as members of the family of God, let us resolve to say that word "Father" with greater reverence and affection; let us resolve to act as sons; let us show by our acts that we really believe that God is our Father— our Father, mind you! That word "our" should be the cry of the clan; we should be eager to say it and live it. Just the proper use of those two words, "Our Father", could change the whole atmosphere of a parish; barriers would naturally tumble down; affectations would cease; pretensions would drop; we would become spiritually natural and naturally spiritual.

"Who art in heaven." This phrase, qualifying the Father's life, shows us what the grain of our life should be. We Christians are not unworldly but other worldly people. Our lives, words, deeds, thoughts are to bear the hall mark of "our own true native land". "Heavenly" men and women are not really and truly "star gazers", "fanatics", "queer"; they are the people who bear about them an atmosphere which is not affected nor assumed, but is distinctly other worldly. But we can never be other worldly people until God has become to us a true Father; and that relationship begins when we yield to His calling, and turn ourselves "about face" toward Him and His house in a whole-hearted manner.

---

2. "Hallowed be Thy name". The missionary who knows his business aims to name the whole family in heaven and earth a "holy" family. The parish is to be a Holy Name parish; the parishioners are to remember that "a good name is better than riches", but a holy name is the passport to eternal blessedness. The missionary realizes that a nation, a community, is only a whole nation, a healthy nation, a holy nation, as its parts and portions are whole, healthy and holy. So the priest and people who pray "Hallowed be Thy name" should add, "by me". Wherever God puts His name, that person, place or thing has the capacity for radiating holiness. So not only the Book and the Rite and the Minister should be reflecting the name, but the daily word, and the household and business etiquette, and the ordinary and extraordinary acts of kindness and of love, in the place of the market and the place of the forum, should shine with the beauty of holiness. Why not, pray?

---

3. "Thy Kingdom come." One kingdom! one ruler! Not a federation, not a combination held together by elasticity and ruled by slackness, but a well organized, rightly articulated, royal household, presided over by "the King of kings and Lord of lords". Jesus was practical; He believed in method and system, but only as means to an end. A kingdom is not the external trappings of royalty, nor the court language, nor the ritual of one "to the manor born", but a kingdom is a company of people whose hearts are tied to the heart of their leader, whose spirits respond to the spirit of the leader, whose lives are the lives of men held together by the life of love for each other, and for the leader. The kingdom which will tie men together in outward union is the kingdom of spiritual ideals rooted in a love of truth. This Kingdom for whose coming men pray and work must be in the hearts of men. That is why the Holy Spirit is needed; that is why the Church is the abiding place of the Holy Spirit. Men's hearts must be touched, inspired, inflamed, fused together by the action and unction of God the Holy Ghost to see that Jesus is the Way, the Truth, the Life. When men see this, then they come together for good, and that coming together for good is a hastening of the Kingdom.

---

4. "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." How is God's will done in heaven? "He spake and it was done, He commanded and it stood fast." Obedience is the way to work out the will of the One who commands the heavenly ranks and orders. So by us men must God's will be done. "Thy will be done, by us, by me." "I have manifested Thy name," says our Lord, "unto the men which Thou gavest Me. * * * for I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest Me." When we say this petition we say it ignorantly and unwisely if we do not realize that God expects to work out his will on earth, through us, not in spite of us. Therefore, how very necessary it is for men to know that will of God; how important that they gather together in one place to learn more of that will, and to plan for the working out of that will in efforts that shall not reduplicate, and cut across, and slacken, and retard that will. What humility and heart-searching this phrase should produce in us who are bound to pray that prayer. God help us to study God's will as it is revealed by the Church, through the Bible, more seriously than ever before. How necessary it is, also, for us to sanctify ourselves, in order that those to whom we go may be sanctified through the truth! Obedience will bring sanctification. Let us realize that this petition for God's glory is worthily repeated only when we resolve to obey God's word and to do His commandments immediately we learn them. An obedient following of the spirit of this petition would fill missionary coffers, build up parishes, stop Church feuds, prevent waste in the administration of God's gifts to men, bring about Church union, hasten the day of that humble, holy and obedient following of Christ which will make the unbelieving world believe that God did truly send His Son into the world to redeem the world. Let us pray this petition very humbly, but with intense earnestness, realizing that to make its appeal bear fruit we must, as individuals, be ready to do our individual part in doing God's will on earth in a whole-hearted manner.

5. "Give us this day our daily bread!" To get good out of God's gifts we must work for them. To ask with the tongue only, and expect that unreliable member to bring the food which will nourish and upbuild is childish and unthinkable. Jesus Christ worked for the bread that really nourished Him: "I have bread to eat that ye wot not of." And Jesus Christ earned His daily bread with His hands as well as His head. "He went about doing good." We can well believe that the Truth did not live off the bounty of a few good women. The man who lives only by his wits is not the person who daily grows "in favor with God and man". It is true that God is the author of every true and perfect gift; but gifts from God, whether temporal or eternal, material or spiritual, are given us in the raw state, so to speak. "Bread" implies the working up of raw material into a finished product. So, whatever meaning we give to "bread", and it must be a meaning large enough to include food for heart and mind as well as body, remember that God gives us the grain with the chaff, and it is "up to us" to separate the wheat from the chaff and grind and bake the grain before we can eat and assimilate it. Notice, too, that bread-making is a social act—it involves co-operation and interdependence. The right kind of bread-making draws all people into closer and more harmonious relations, from the Giver of the seed, through the tiller of the soil, and the harvester of the grain, and the grinder at the mill, and the man who carries the flour, and the maker of the oven, and the hewer of the wood, and the builder of the fire, and the maker of the pans, and the fomenter of the yeast, to the mixer, and the baker, and the distributor of the bread. "Give us our bread." It is a unifying prayer, and was meant to level all sorts and conditions of men to that platform where the people with common needs shall find themselves co-operating, in dependence on the Giver of the original gift, and interdependence on one another, to create the bread by which man satisfies this mortal existence. This is the social phrase of the missionary's petition; and the clearer your vision of "our Father", the more inclusive will be your embrace of those whom you will gather together in your plea for "our daily bread".

---

6. "And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." What a wonderful thing is forgiveness! Who can forgive, however, but God only? That is to say, who can "blot out" but God only? The most forgiving of human mothers, fathers or friends may forgive freely—may even rise to such heights of Christlike compassion as to wish their offenders God's blessing and happiness, but they cannot forget! Only God can mercifully pardon and blot out all transgressions, because He only can weigh all causes contributing to the sinner's fall. Here in this prayer does Jesus Christ stamp His Cross and passion. Here every sinner should pause and mourn and yet rejoice; here every wronged soul is made to pause, if his mind be working with his lips, for he has to say that little word as", "forgive us as we forgive those who trespass against us". When men begin to realize the awful level to which sin reduces them, they will come together to the one mercy seat. One family of restored children, not restored criminals, is what God wants us to form. You who by tradition and the grace of God have been able to keep close to the fair life of Christ have it in your heart to make the repentant ones feel that they have a welcome place in the one Church. You who have sensed God's pardon and peace through forgiveness, spend your life in bringing that atmosphere of a truly penitent life into the household of God. Let God use you to speak his message of forgiveness strong and clear. Especially seek out those who fall by the way of your own weakness, and as you sense God's forgiveness, help them to find it, too. Thus can we hope to make the cross the rallying point for a united Christendom and, in a small measure, contribute to the peace of the world.

---

7. "And lead us not into temptation." Temptation here cannot mean those trials and tribulations which in resisting give one strength of character. We do not ask God not to lead us where muscles and fiber, moral, mental, spiritual, will grow strong and powerful by reason of resistance. But we do pray Him not to lead us into paths of life where the temptations will hurt us because we do not recognize them as temptations, or this might be the cry of a wounded soul for help. To paraphrase it, we might say, "Lord, I am so weak, so tired fighting! Please do not test me this day with things which will prove my downfall". It is the cry of the creature to the Creator; of the helpless to the Helpful One; of the battered sinner to the strong Saviour. It is the natural cry of a tired child to the parent who knows that the uphill path must be trod, in order that the home and home comforts may be reached before nightfall. Jesus Christ makes provision for his weak and little children in this petition. He makes allowance for the ignorant and foolish, as well as the faint-hearted and footsore pilgrims of the night. As we utter the petition, we can see them all—the hesitating, the weak, the weary, the despondent—who do not recognize the temptations in those attitudes, because of the frailty of their flesh, or who do see these human frailties as temptations and pray that this day they may not have to encounter them. It is the cry of one who founded His Church not alone for the stern, self-contained rigorist, but for the easy-going, simple-minded, double-minded man who is apt to be unstable in all his ways until he is endued with power from on high. Let us say the phrase as an intercession as well as a petition. It will result in drawing the strong and weak together in the bonds of help and assistance, and so help fulfil the missionary's ideal of unity.

---

8. "But deliver us from the evil one." Sin involves a separation. The devil is a divider. Flying from such a one, we will find in our effort to reach the Deliverer that we draw closer to one another. A growing circumspection rings the crowd about a common center. Fighting a common foe, we pool our plans, and find a common working policy, with a common Captain for the forces. The entire Lord's prayer draws men together. It is a unifying prayer. The more we pray it in our heads, the more we will live it in our lives, the closer will we come together. God help us to realize the importance of the missionary's motive. It will give added meaning to the missionary's prayer. To recognize the danger of the evil one is to solidify and unify the Christian Church. And for this we may believe our Lord works and prays in His Father's home. Why not resolve to do the same thing in our earthly homes?

---

9. "For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen." Joining with the angels and archangels, we end our petitions with an echo of the heavenly song. It is a flash of worship, but it shows us trailing clouds of glory that make one loathe to close the prayer "forever and ever". We say: Mind cannot take it in, this eternal song, but the tongue hangs on to the word in order to establish the heart of the one who prays it. It is for this, too, that the Church must work and struggle here in time; it is for this heavenly worship that she must make her earthly worship a preparation. It is for the Kingdom and the power and the glory of the Lord that she must ever pray! And so must you.

PERSONAL RELIGION — AIDS AND HELPS BY THE WAY

Edited by Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio

PEACE

Peace is not silence or the absence of noise. Men find the peace of God in the suffering and hell of battle. Peace is not a quality of life peculiar to the next world, as is suggested by our cemetery inscriptions. Peace is here and now, at the heart of all enduring struggle for righteousness, the present possession and inheritance of the sons of God. Peace is the product of right relationships. Sin and wrong doing take man out of his true relationship with God and man. The result is friction, remorse, mental suffering. Forgiveness is the resetting of our life in right adjustment with God. The result is pardon and peace. Peace is, therefore, the basis of the most intense service to the needs of others. It is life set out on its true course, drawing all its strength and energy from God. Peace is thus an inner serenity of life which passes the understanding and keeps the whole life, heart and mind close to God.

PEACE I LEAVE WITH YOU, MY PEACE I GIVE UNTO YOU.

PRAYERS

O God, may I find in Thee peace and rest and joy. Lift up my soul above the weary round of harrassing thoughts to Thy eternal Presence. Lift up my soul to the pure, bright, serene, radiant atmosphere of Thy Presence, that there I may breathe freely, there repose in Thy Love, there be at rest from myself, and from all things that dishearten me; and thence return, arrayed in Thy Peace, to do and bear what shall please Thee. Amen.

O God Eternal Spirit, grant us to live in the consciousness of Thy Indwelling Presence, that we may ever know and follow the path Thou hast prepared for us to walk in. Help us to learn from Thy dear Son, Jesus Christ, meekness and lowliness of heart, in the doing of Thy will, and to Thee ascribe all the power and glory. Grant us the vision to hope for those things we see not, and the patience to wait Thy time of fulfillment, rejoiceing in everything Thou hast given with the joy that no man can take from us; that, living according to Thy laws, we may daily find peace, in the fulfillment of all Thy promises given us by Thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS

A. M.	P. M.
Psalm 4.	Isaiah 55.
Psalm 122.	Proverbs 3:5-26.
Psalm 85.	Luke 1:68-80.
Psalm 72.	Luke 2:25-33.
Psalm 37:23-41.	Philippians 4:1-10.
Ephesians 2.	John 14:25-31.
Romans 8:1-8.	John 20:19-31.

Bishop Goes to France

The Rt. Rev. James DeWolfe Perry, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island, has sailed for France, to take the place of the Rt. Rev. Dr. John N. McCormick, Bishop of Western Michigan, who was incapacitated for service at the front in a gas attack, and has returned to his diocese.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Theodore Irving Reese, Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Ohio, who has succeeder Bishop Perry as Chairman of tht Church War Commission, visited the various cantonments in the Diocese of Southern Virginia with Bishop Tucker the later part of July. At Camp Lee, with the guidance of the Rev. Robert B. Nelson assisted by Mr. Percy J. Knapp of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, a ministerial alliancee of the chaplains of the army and the civilian chaplains was formed. The Bishop visited Camps Sturat, Hill and Eustace on the peninsula between Fortress Monroe and Lee Hall, and conferred as to the Church's work with the Rev. Henry G. Lane of Newport News, Archdeacon Ernest A. Rich, and Mr. Bain of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The work of the voluntreer chaplains and of the Brotherhood representatives in these camps has brought gratifying results.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

WAGES

Glory of warrior, glory of orator, glory of song,
Paid with a voice flying by to be lost on an endless sea—
Glory of Virtue, to fight, to struggle, to right the wrong—
Nay, but she aim'd not at glory, no lover of glory she!
Give her the glory of going on, and still to be.

The wages of sin is death: if the wages of Virtue be dust,
Would she have heart to endure for the life of the worm and the fly?
She desires no isles of the blest, no quiet seats of the just,
To rest in a golden grove, or to bask in a summer sky:
Give her the wages of going on, and not to die.

—Alfred Tennyson.

(This argument of immortality was first printed in 1868.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
L. W. APPLEGATE.....Publisher
JAMES SHEERIN GEORGE P. ATWATER HENRY J. MIKELL
FRANCIS S. WHITE JAMES WISE
EDWARD C. CHORLEY

Published every Saturday at Hobart, Ind., where all business communications should be addressed.
SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

ADVERTISING RATES

Three dollars an inch each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates revised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

5% for two months; 10% for three months; 15% for six months; 20% for twelve months.

All news matter, Diocesan and Parish papers, intended for THE WITNESS, should be sent to the Rev. Charles J. Shutt, 312 Warren Street, Mankato, Minn.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

EDITORIAL

Panaceas

In every disease to which mortal man is subject there are those who have an infallible panacea.

For many years the proprietors did a thriving business in this country by claiming to heal anything, from a lame foot to a sore head. Most of these patent medicines have gone the way of all rogues, because they have been exposed (often after much harm has been done), and folks have returned to the old reliable family doctor, who was too modest to advertise and too truthful to claim that he could heal everything and anything that was submitted to him for treatment.

The same kind of cheap panaceas are offered us for other ills than those of the body.

There are those who have never made a success at any little business who claim that they can solve the most stupendous of all business, viz: the wrongs of society. Like Mr. Trotzky, they have a panacea for the Russian Empire. Now, Mr. Trotzky never did anything in his life to give one the impression that he could run a boys' boarding school, but he has a panacea for all Russia, and unfortunately for that poor victim, there was some one to hold her while he poured his poisonous concoction of envy, malice and all uncharitableness down her throat. The poor illiterate Russian peasant looked on and applauded, for was he not able now to revenge himself on those who had been his masters? with what result? The patient is doing as well as could be expected. The operation was a success, but poor Russia is dying of starvation. True, little could be said for the Russian aristocracy, but less can be said, not merely for the ability, but for the kindliness, of the illiterate peasant.

He was the victim of the misrule of the aristocrat; he is now the victim of his own improvidence and incapacity. In Russia today it is a crime to be refined and cultured. It is a virtue to be brutal and incompetent.

True, all the cultured were not kindly, but many of them were. Now kindness has fled, and there is not even the remnant that there was before.

We have the same brood of incompetent theorists and malicious opponents of order, who do nothing well but hate. And they tell us that the panacea of society is to be found in the rule of the mob!

One Russian said to me, in defense of Lenine, that "of every hundred Bolshevki," Lenine had said, "sixty-five were rogues, thirty-four were incompetents, and one was an honest man."

But what a confession of imbecility. If that is a true estimate, who would favor the rule of such a majority? What can the one man do? There can be no remedy for society that does not begin with the kindness of the individual. When a man comes with a panacea for human ills, one must first ask whether he himself is free from bitterness.

No one can gather figs from thorns, and your bitter-root will have no fruit but wormwood and gall. And if behind him is a malicious mob, in which dishonesty and stupidity are in the overwhelming ascendancy, what form of social order can produce figs?

No one is more cognizant of the ills of human society than your humble servant, but because a member of my family is sick, I am not going to call in either the quack, or the mob that listens to the quack, to heal him of his wounds.

In religion it is the same. I was in Nantucket recently, when fifty-two whales swam ashore and lay stranded on the beach, like logs, except that their tails were thrashing. As I looked upon these pitiful objects being harpooned by those who wished to try out their oil, I could not help saying to myself, "You look like whales, but you act like Russians."

Why they got themselves into such a plight no one could tell me, but there they were, by their own act, delivering themselves in to the rendering tank.

So the Lord called us sheep. I have heard of sheep, following some leader, going by the hundreds over a precipice. So men rush from their folds, led by foolish rams, into what? Not green pastures nor still waters, but rocky precipices and muddy waters.

So the reformers of all ages have been distinguished by two qualities—the dissensions of their own households and the glittering promises of millenial bliss.

Pardon me if I am skeptical. Wisdom is not born with us. We inherit most of the blessings that we enjoy from the industry and piety of our ancestors. We live in a world which is unfair to them in both qualities.

The man on the street loves neither his work nor his God, but has an infatuated idea of the importance of his own opinions and a bitter envy of those who have succeeded in the game that he would have liked to have played, but couldn't. So he proposes to break up the game and start another, in which he will have the important part.

He will be the leader of a party, of a sect, of a cult, and he asks me to follow his game. I question his disinterestedness in my welfare. I prefer the game that I am playing to one that is gotten up by the discontented. I lack faith in its latter end. For all of these panaceas for human woes have as their chief capital the faithful labors of honest men. It was our Constitution and the labors of our statesmen that brought about the liberty we now enjoy. I distrust any form of license which disparages their labors and substitutes the jejune vaporings of theorists. So the Christian freedom which we enjoy is the fruit of the labors of those who have identified their lives with and perpetuated their lives in Christ's holy Church.

There is a class of men who begin their reformations by despising all that their fathers have done before them. I trust them not. No wise nor true reformation of Church or state can begin in the metaphysical speculations of the human brain. Unless it is founded on the experience of the past, it will come to naught.

As Christ said, not one jot nor tittle of the law should be destroyed, but fulfilled. And so I believe in an eternal city that has foundations in the past.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colorado.

How do you reconcile the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill", with our participation in this war?

The Ten Commandments were given to the individual Jew as the guide for his moral conduct. He who gave the Ten Commandments to the Hebrews also told them to exterminate the Philistines.

This seems an inconsistency at first, but Christ gives us the explanation in the Sermon on the Mount, when He tells us that this commandment means thou shalt not hate thy brother. In private conduct we have no right to hate, and so we must not kill, because in doing these things we destroy our souls. But war is not an individual act which is the result of personal malice, but it is the action of the state for the preservation of the liberty of its citizens. Of course the state would have no right to wage a war of aggression for its own personal profit, but when the state is threatened by Philistines or Huns, it has the right to protect itself from the invasion of its enemies, as God told the Israelites to do.

The rules of private conduct have their purpose in preparing men for eternal life. The laws of the state have their purpose in safeguarding the life and liberty of its citizens in this world. The laws of morality are alike for the individual and for the state, but the state is a creation of God for the preservation of its citizens, and there are some things which the state may do which individuals may not do, although in the matter of killing the state has allowed the individual to kill in self-defense.

Will you kindly publish two or three brief forms of blessings before meals?

I would suggest:

At breakfast: "Bless, O Lord this food to our use, and ourselves to Thy service; for Christ's sake. Amen."

At noonday: "Bless, O Lord, those soldiers in Church and state who are fighting for us, and may we do our part to sustain them as Thou feedest us."

At evening: "For these and all our mercies throughout this day make us truly grateful; through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Will you please explain the parable of the unjust steward?

In the first place, the translation is a poor one. St. Luke xvi:9 should read: "Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when it fails they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

There are three things to be observed in reading this parable:

1st. That the parable is intended to illustrate just one point. Our Lord is not commending the morals of the unjust steward, but his resourcefulness. In fact, in verse 11, our Lord repudiates the morals of the steward. His own master, not our Lord, commended the unjust steward.

2nd. Our Lord evidently tells His apostles that a little worldly wisdom would save worldly people from suffering the results of their own misuse of God's treasure, of which they are stewards, for

3rd. By using some of their wealth for God's poor, they would make friends whose prayers and intercessions would avail with God, and these worldly people would find that their use of God's treasure would avail them much in their eternal habitations.

In short, the wealthy man is God's steward. He has conducted his business badly; God is going to put him out of his stewardship. But he has used some of this treasure to the benefit of the poor. So they pray to God for him, and God hears their prayers.

None of our wealth is our own. If we will not use it in God's service, then use it for God's people, and their prayers will have power with God.

Sanctuary of Prayer

A PRAYER FOR VICTORY

Unto Thee, O Lord, we cry in the night of the world's darkness, for the coming of the dawn of peace.

We know that the earth is Thine, and that the hearts of all men are in Thy keeping.

Remember, we pray Thee, the desolate homes, the long suspense of waiting, the sorrows of the exiled and the poor, the growth of hate, the hindrance of good—and make an end of war.

By the love we bear to fathers, brothers, lovers and sons, by the long agony of trench and battle field and hospital, by the woe brought home to the hearts of mothers, and by the orphaned children's cry, hasten Thou the coming of the ages of good will.

Grant that our own entrance as a nation into this world strife, in solemn obligation to duty, may lead to its more speedy conclusion. Raise up in every nation leaders, who, even in the dark day of battle, shall be planning for the work of peace. Show us each our part in the redemption of the world from cruelty and hatred, and make us all strong and faithful and make us all faithful and strong and brave.

Guard and gutde our soldiers, sailallies, especially when in posts of peculiar danger. Give patience, courage ors and aviators, and those of our and faith to the wounded and dying. Watch over our physicians and nurses; bestow upon them wise judgment and skillful hands.

Grant victory to the cause of righteousness, and enduring peace with honor.

All of which we ask in the Name of the Prince of Peace, Thy Son our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.—St. Peter's (Chicago) Chronicle.

Berkeley Divinity School
Middletown, Conn.
Address REV. WILLIAM PALMER LADD, Dean

—ST. ALBAN'S SCHOOL—
KNOXVILLE, ILL.
For Church Boys and Others.
Certificate admits to University.
Moderate Rates for Board and Tuition. Write the Rector:
REV. L. B. HASTINGS
117 N. Peoria Street, Chicago

BRECK SCHOOL 2095 Commonwealth Avenue,
ST. PAUL, MINN.
Located in St. Anthony Park, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, possessing the advantage of access to both. One block from the campus of the Agricultural Department of the University. Offers a complete High School course, and will fit students for any college. Students of the University may register for work in religious subjects. Terms very moderate. Apply to Rev. C. E. Haupt, Superintendent.

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY
Sewanee, Tennessee, 2,300 feet elevation in the Cumberland Mountains. Ideal health conditions. Broadest certificate privileges. Highest rating War Department. Best moral and social influences. Owned and controlled by the twenty Southern Dioceses of the Episcopal Church. For catalogue Address the Superintendent.

Virginia Episcopal School
(LYNCHBURG, VA.)
For boys of character, position and ability, whose means will not permit them to attend our more expensive schools. Prepares at cost for college, university or immediate entrance upon the duties of life. Made possible by gifts of founders. Special terms to clergymen. Boarders for the present are limited to seventy-eight. One hundred and six acres of land. The session begins September 19, 1918. Apply for information and catalogue to the Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Rector.
Rev. Thomas Kinloch Nelson, Vice Rector.

National Cathedral School
A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof building in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College certificate privilege. Music, Art, Advanced, and Special Courses.
THE BISHOP OF WASHINGTON,
President of the Board of Trustees
JESSIE C. McDONALD, M. S., Principal
HELEN L. WEBSTER, Ph. D.,
Academic Head
141t Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Cathedral School for Girls
ORLANDO, FLORIDA
High class Boarding and Day School. College Preparatory and General Courses. Capable Teachers. Careful Home Life. Delightful Climate. Low Rates.
Rev. Roderick P. Cobb, Rector.
19th year opens Oct. 2.

Racine College
RACINE, WISCONSIN
A Church School for your boy. Academy and Junior College.
B. Talbot Rogers, M. A., D. D., Warden.

—THE—
HANNAH MORE ACADEMY
Simplicity and Excellence
Maryland Church School for Girls. Catalogue. Reisterstown, Md.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelin, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE".
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind in America.
Address:
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls' College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President.
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal.

HOWE SCHOOL A thorough preparatory school for a limited number of well-bred boys.
For illustrated circulars, address the Rector,
REV. JOHN H. McKinzie, D. D.,
Box W. Howe, Indiana.

KENYON COLLEGE THE ONLY CHURCH COLLEGE IN THE WEST
FOUNDED 1824
Offers to young men four-year courses, leading to the Bachelor's Degree
Military training under Government Instructor is officially recognized by the War Department.
For information, address President William F. Peirce, Gambier, Ohio.

Porter Military Academy
A National School A CHURCH SCHOOL Founded 1867
242 boys from 25 States and four foreign countries. Preparation for college or business by sympathetic tutoring and under the strongest influences for Christian manhood. Habits of obedience, promptness, cleanliness and self-reliance are inculcated by the strict but stimulating military discipline. An R. O. T. C. School. Mild, healthful climate permits out of door sports all year around. Gymnasium and swimming pool Unusually liberal terms. A broader preparation that the public school can give. A Lower School for smaller boys.
Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Rector
Box 604, Charleston, S. C.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

Thirteen states have ratified the National Prohibition Amendment this year.

The Rev. Dr. William Mercer Green, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, Miss., declined his election as Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Mississippi owing to error in the balloting at the recent Special Council. Another meeting of the council will probably be held at an early date to coorect the error.

Bishop Tucker of Southern Virginia has four sons in the sacred ministry of the Church, three of whom are in war service, and the Missionary Bishop of Kyoto. Five other sons are in the United States army, and another son, Dr. Augustine Tucker, who married Bishop Cheshire's daughter, is a medical missionary in China. The Rev. Luke Matthew White, rector of St. Luke's Church, Montclaire, N. Y., is a son-in-law of the Bishop.

A beautiful English flag was presented by Englishmen to Trinity Church, Tyrone, Pa., and dedicated on a recent Sunday morning. Mr. Thomas A. Mathers carried the flag in the procession following the Cross and the Stars and Stripes. In presenting the flag, Mr. Mathers paid a high tribute to the American colors, the parish service flag, the Red Cross banner, and the British emblem. The Rev. Frank T. Cady, Rector, graciously accepted and blessed the gift, and in a forceful address reviewed our many reasons for gratefulness as a nation to the mother country and the indebtedness of the American to the English Church.

Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch, the eminent sociologist, Presbyterian divine, Professor of History in the Rochester (N. Y.) Theological Seminary, and author, died July 25th. In the early days of his ministry he worked for eleven years in a tenement section of New York City, refusing several invitations to editorial and educational positions. In 1897 he became professor at Rochester Theological Seminary, first of the New Testament, and since 1902 of Church History. He had published several books during his missionary years, but he first came into public notice in 1907 through the publication of "Christianity and the Social Crisis," which immediately achieved a remarkable success, and has often been called an epoch making book. Over twenty thousand of his "Social Principles of Jesus" were sold in one year. The "Prayers of the Social Awakening" have been more quoted and reprinted than any of his writings. His books are widely read by Christians of every name in this and other lands have been a dominant force in moulding public opinion.

Personals

The Rev. Donald F. Schumann, who has served as curate in St. Thomas' Chapel, New York City, since last November, will take up Y. M. C. A. work in American Camps after Sept. 1.

The Rev. Millward W. Riker of the Chapel of the Intercession, New York City, accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Henderson, Ky., and took charge the Ninth Sunday after Trinity.

The Bishop of South Dakota gives a banner to the Sunday school giving the largest per capita offering for missions. This year it was won by Grace Church, Huron, which gave an offering of $3.26 per child.

Quentin Roosevelt, of the American Aviation Corps, who met death while engaged in battle with the Germans, was a graduate of Gorton School, of which the Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, Rector of St. John's Church, Gorton, Mass., is the headmaster.

The Rev. Irving Goddard of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has received and accepted the rectorship of Emmanuel Church, La Grange, Ill., a suburb Chicago, and will enter upon his new duties the later part of September.

The Rev. D. R. Ottman, Rector of Trinity Church, Trinidad, Col., has been appointed First Lieutenant Chaplain of the Field Signal Corps, and reports for duty at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, on August 15th. Mr. Ottmann is a graduate of the University of the South and the Sewanee Military Academy.

The Rev. Dr. Sumner, Bishop of Oregon, and Mrs. Sumner are enjoy- a visit in the East.

The Rev. J. W. Bleker of Fitzgerald, Va., has received a call to the Rectorship of St. Peter's Church, Fernandina, Fla.

The Rev. Harry Lee Virden, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Winfield, Kas., has been appointed a chaplain in th United States army, with the rank of lieutenant and is on duty at Fort Funsten and Fort Rley, Kas. He tried four times to enlist in the aviation corps but was rejected because of a weak heart.

The Rev. George G. Ware, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Kearney, Neb gave the address at a union Chautauqua service in his city on Sunday morning, July 21st, taking for hi theme, "The New Christianity."

The Rev. S. Ezra Neikirk, Rector of St. James' Church, Pittston, Pa., has taken summer duty in Trinity Church, Geneva, N. Y. (the Rev. C. M. Sills, Rector), and with his family will occupy Trinity Rectory until September 1st.

The Rev. John A. Collins, a recent recent graduate of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific and assistant to the Rev. A. W.. N. Porter, Rector of St. James' Church, Los Angeles, Cal., is now in charge of the Church of the Holy Saviour, Santa Clara, ar St. Thomas' Church, Sunnyvale, Cal.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Gailor, Bishop of Tennessee, quietly celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his elevation to the Episcopate on St. James' Day, July 25th. He was the recipient of many affectionate congratulations in person and by telegram and remembered in prayers of thanksgiving at services held in many parishes of the Diocese. He was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee in 1893, and succeeded the late Bishop Quintard as Diocesan in 1898.

The Rev. Charles Carver, a well known actor and playwright, at present a member of the Vaughan-Glase Co., has announced his intention of leaving the stage with the purpose of becoming a candidate for holy orders. He gave the address at a special service for the Actors' Church Alliance, of which he is the vice president, held in St. Paul's Church, Rochester, N. Y., on Sunday evening, July 21st.

The Rev. Baker P. Lee, who recently resigned the rectorship of Christ Church, Los Angeles, and applied for commission in the United States army, has been urged to reconsider his resignation. The parish was heavily in debt and the Church property was sold for a consideration reported to have been over $100,000. At the last service conducted by the Rev. Mr. Lee, the parish treasurer made a statement to the congregation and asked for an expression on a proposal to erect a new Church edifice. The response was immediate and enthusiastic. Pledges were made amounting to over $17,000, and the lots donated on condition that Mr. Lee be retained as rector, and several other large pledges, including one of $5,000, were made on condition that the same amounts were raised from other sources. The parish will have about $5,000 on hand from the sale of the property after the indebtedness is cleared away.

Appeal for School Founded by Bishop Hare

The Bishop of South Dakota, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Hugh L. Burleson, makes the following striking appeal to the friends of the late Bishop Hare and of All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, both in and outside of South Dakota, to help secure a Liberty Loan Endowment Fund of $100,000:

"If asked what monument best perpetuates the memory of Bishop Hare, would you point to the granite cross beside the Cathedral, or would you take the inquirer to All Saints' School, standing on the crest of its commanding hill? The one is a beautiful, cold stone; the other, a living, breathing organism, filled with his spirit.

"This greater monument is endangered by war. Everywhere Church schools are hard pressed, and some are giving up the struggle. Unless reenforcements arrive, many more must give way. All Saints' shares this serious situation. The cost of our largest items of expenditure has doubled in four years, and this financial burden—the heaviest which the Bishop has to bear—increases with each passing week. What shall we do?

"Three courses of action might be suggested:

"1. Close the school. Impossible! Unthinkable! Neither South Dakota nor the Church at large would consent to see the home of Bishop Hare —the place where, most of all, his spirit still lives and works—fail and fall.

"2. Increase the tuition. The very large increase necessary might be made and the work go on, but the school would have failed its founder. It would no longer be the place where families of modest means—the rank and file of our Churchfolk in South Dakota—could send their daughters.

"3. Enlarge the endowment. This is the one proper solution. With $100,000 more we could be safe, and the fine work of this splendid school would go on unhindered."

Already a few small bonds have been given locally, and a Churchwoman in Philadelphia has taken out a $500 bond. In closing his appeal, Bishop Burleson says: "Make the war help to repair the damage which the war has wrought."

Nevada Convocation

The Eleventh Annual Convocation of Nevada has just closed its sessions. All the clergy canonically resident and working in the state were present; also lay delegates, representing more parishes and missions than usual.

At the opening service, a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Bishop read his annual address. He made an earnest appeal that all work for prohibition, as the Church in Nevada began the present campaign in the state; that we "clean up" Nevada against the time the soldiers return from the war; that an effort be made to get the next Legislature to enact laws concerning the reading of the Bible in the public schools, and to change the form of marriage license so it will give previous marital conditions, and that all answers be sworn to before the Clerk of the Court.

The evening of the first day a missoinary meeting was held, with addresses on Indians and on Alaska.

In reply to a communication from Wyoming, suggesting the formation of a new Province, Nevada voted to remain with the Province of the Pacific.

The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That in our present day preaching there should be a renewed and vigorous appeal to "The wrath of God which is revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness of men", and to God's love, not only as benevolent and healing, but also as a "consuming fire", and that the Bishop issue a pastoral in Advent along these lines.

Also that the Bishop appoint a committee to "consider fully and make report on some definite plan of beginning a Cathedral Foundation for Nevada, not only to give the Bishop his own rightful church, but also to make it a bond of corporate and of spiritual unity which shall in its growth, in coming time, bind into one all the varied Christian forces of the state."

Canons were adopted changing the convocational year to January 1st, on business methods and finance and on Church Pension Fund.

Plans were started for a celebration next year of the fiftieth anniversary of the consecration of Ozi W. Whitaker as Bishop of Nevada.

The Committee on the State of the Church reminded the Convocation that statistics covered but eight months, as at this time we change our year to January 1st from May 1st. The report showed at least some small growth in almost every phase of our work.

The Woman's Auxiliary had a corporate celebration of the Holy Communion and a special session of the Convocation. It was reported that the number of branches had more than doubled during the past year.

The next Convocation will meet in Reno, on the last Sunday in January, 1919.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

By G. W. J.

It is said in London that a permit has been granted to the Rt. Rev. Charles Gore, Bishop of Oxford since 1911, to visit the United States. The Bishop of Oxford and other British public men and Churchmen were invited last January to make a speaking tour of the United States, under the auspices of the National Committee on Churches and the Moral Aims of the War. The committee announced that its purpose in seeking to bring to America prominent Britishers, including ex-Premier Asquith, Viscount Bryce, Viscount Grey and Arthur Henderson, was to promote unity between America and her European allies during the war, and to prepare public opinion for a league of nations after the war.—Boston Herald.

Milton, Shakespeare or Homer, even, should be living now. Material for an epic such as their hands alone have ever fashioned fills the air these days. We fain would entrust such a magic task to attested powers like theirs. But lacking their return, may we not hope that an adequate soul will yet arise to envisage the epic of our day. Such a voice must be looked for, in all probability, on the other side of the Atlantic. For no one in America can fully realize what the coming of our troops, now a million strong, "over there", with millions soon to follow, has meant to peoples whose homes are, or once were, in the war's maelstrom. The practical military aid which this event achievs also torpedoed leagues of sea- affords nations long wasted by un- speakable sufferings and losses, is readily enough conceived. But its meaning to their blasted yet unyielding hearts is inevitably beyond our power of full comprehension, and herein is the story's dramatic grandeur. This is a romance of the human spirit which will doubtless glow in the coming literature of France, Italy or Belgium, of England or racy Scotland, some day when the widely variant genius of those lands shall have recovered power to gleam forth in full splendor. Let the strange security of a child's mind against disabling gloom serve to give token of what may find full expression by and by. A thirteen-year-old girl in France was asked by her teacher to write a theme on the coming of the Americans to help drive out the invaders. This is what she wrote:

"It was a little river—almost a brook. It was called the Yser. One could talk from one side to the other without raising one's voice. The birds could fly over it with one sweep of their wings. And on its banks there were millions of men, the one turned toward the other, eye to eye. But the difference which separated them was greater than that between the stars in the sky. It was the difference which separates justice from injustice. The ocean is so great that the seagulls do not dare to cross it. During seven days and seven nights the great steamships of America, going at full speed, must drive through the deep waters before the lighthouses of France come into view. But from one side to another hearts are touched across torpedoed leagues of sea- ing. — Odette Gastinel." — Extract from Editorial, Boston Herald.

DR. TEUSLER OF JAPAN HONORED

The Founder of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, Appointed Head of Red Cross Unit in Siberia

Bishop McKim cables from Tokyo, Japan, that Dr. Rudolph Tuesler, director of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, has been asked by the American Red Cross authorities in Washington to serve as head of the Red Cross unit accompanying the American forces go- United States in Tokyo, no other the hearty approval of Bishop McKim, has accepted the appointment. That the approval of the Board of Missions will be equally hearty is assured by the fact that last November the Board agreed that St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, should be placed at the disposal of the Red Cross as a base hospital, in case troops were sent into Eastern Siberia.

Dr. Teusler is a Virginia Churchman, who went to Japan as a medical missionary in 1900. In the following year he opened St. Luke's Hospital on a modest scale. By his professional skill, executive ability and winning personality, Dr. Teusler has developed St. Luke's, until it is now one of the leading Christian institutions of the Orient.

For the last five years Dr. Teusler, with the approval of the General Convention and the Board of Missions, and with the co-operation of many friends in Japan and the United States, has been working on plans for a great expansion of St. Luke's. Nearly $500,000 have been given in Japan and in this country. Land has been purchased near the present hospital at a cost of about $260,000. When Dr. Teusler returned to Japan last April, he took with him the preliminary drawings for the first three units of the new plant. It is estimated that these three will cost about $400,000.

Dr. Teusler's assignment to Siberia will necessitate delay in maturing and executing the far-sighted plans which Bishop McKim and he have been so carefully preparing.

One of the American ambassadors to Japan said, some time ago that during the years he represented the United States in Tokyo, on other American in Japan had done so much to interpret Japan and America to each other, and to cement the friendship of the two nations as had Dr. Teusler.

Give

"Give as you would if an angel
Awaited your gift at the door;
Give as you would if tomorrow
Found you where waiting is o'er;
Give as you would to the Master
If you met His searching look;
Give as you would of your substance,
If His hand the offering took."

Refined young woman wanted to assist in parish and light household duties. Training unnecessary, but must be willing, giving undivided attention. Monthly, fifty and room. Address, A B, care of THE WITNESS, Hobart, Ind.

A SAFE and ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Women's Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY.
MRS. GUTGESELL'S CHRISTMAS NOVELTY GIFT BOOK
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
NO INVESTMENT SPLENDID PROFITS
For information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

THE OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Teabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918. 8-10-13

SHATTUCK SCHOOOL
Has behind it the Experience, Traditions and Ideals of fifty years. ¶Is a College Preparatory School with military drill and discipline under U. S. War Dep't. Reserve Officers' Training Corps. ¶In Grounds, Building and equipment is equaled by but few schools. "The school is full for 1918-1919. Enrollment should be made now for 1919-20."
Box 452. Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn.

SETTLEMENT TRAINING SCHOOL
LA GRANGE SETTLEMENT LA GRANGE, GA.
A PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH TRAINING SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL WORKERS
Courses in Settlement Nursing, Kindergarten Work, and special course of one year in Church and Social Work for graduates.
REV. R. T. PHILLIPS, Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II, NO. 85 | HOBART, INDIANA, AUGUST 17, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

II.

(Continued from last week)

The Summer Conference for Church Workers at Racine was a praying conference. Five times a day it assembled for devotions, four times within the church and once under the trees. The church reminded me of the college chapels of Oxford and Cambridge, with the seats running parallel to the wall on opposite sides of the nave. Finished in sombre fashion, as was the custom when it was built, and shut out from the glare of the sun by the trees that stand guard about it and overshadow it with their gracious shadows, it had an atmosphere distinctly inviting to those accustomed to the glare and garishness of modern structures of every sort. On the exterior, it had one interesting feature: Set at irregular intervals within its ivy-clad brick walls, like jewels of remembrance in a garment, were small stones, each bearing the date of one of the classes of the college. The earliest I discovered was in the sixties.

It was near the church that the sunset service was held each evening—a simple service of hymn and prayer, with words of wisdom, never to be forgotten, from one whose earnestness and kindliness were apparent in his face and in his voice.

The music of the Conference, too, was a delight. Under the competent leadership of the precentors, we explored the new Hymnal and learned the charm of plain song.

But the Conference was not without its modern note. Lectures by a well known priest of the Church upon modern problems of capital, poverty and feminism attracted large audiences. The speaker was good-naturedly attacked with sword, broadsword, staff and broomstick, but he wields a skillful rapier, and gave no ground. With only the fervor of enthusiasm, and not with the warmth of ill-feeling, the Conference attacked these subjects. And we of the clergy learned some things to profit by. One outspoken woman said: "I wish the clergy would tell us of our modern problems, and stop discussing the Assyrians". (Applause.) The question of electing women to vestries was discussed—largely by the women. I am afraid that we men sometimes hide behind things as they are, and are willing to let others do the discussing. Our canonical privileges are not seriously affected yet, so we perhaps adopt the subterfuge of the adage, "The surest way to convince a woman is to agree with her". At any rate, we agreed that women would make splendid members of a vestry.

Nor did we forget that for many of those in attendance the Conference was a vacation. Is it not strange that when we enter again the precincts of a college we feel a renewal of the old college oversight and discipline, and also a mischievous desire to play a prank or two. I really felt that perhaps I might be called before the president when I stayed up one night to learn whether the clock struck 12 with the same impartial tone that it struck four or five. I thought that I detected a rebuke in its vigorous tolling of the midnight hour, and I scampered in to escape its doubtless frowning face, quite apparent in the clear moonlight. Being one of the faculty, I did not indulge in any pranks, but I was the intended victim of one. On the register, my room was entered as 20, but I actually occupied 21, the former room having been preempted by a dignitary, a well known canon of the Church. A conferee, perhaps a junior warden from a mid-west parish, desirous of impressing me with his literary bent, took a number of books and put them in the bed of room 20. Whether the conferee selected them on purpose, or whether he did not recognize them, I do not know, but the books proved to be Bibles. The canon who was actually in room 20 discovered them when he retired, much to his astonishment. The junior warden, if such he was, learned later of his mistake, and confessed to me, and I made explanations which were graciously accepted.

So many young people were in attendance as their summer vacation that their natural instincts and enthusiasm prompted them to arrange for a marshmallow tournament. It was held on the beach, with the gentle waves of Lake Michigan rippling at its feet, and also over the feet of any incautious person who ventured too near the water. We all became young again that night and entered the tournament with zest. It was a decorous contest, as to which one had the virtue of the best appetite, and the virtue was its own reward, for the marshmallows were distributed without stint.

It gave one confidence in the eternal youthfulness of the human heart to see a Bishop and a warden (clerical) and presidents of Woman's Auxiliaries, and countless others, gathered about a beach-fire and holding forth a stick, upon the end of which was a marshmallow. The full moon, always well and favorably known as a welcome patron of such occasions, cast a glow of romance over the faces, whitened with just a suspicion of powdered sugar. After the tournament was over, and the enthusiastic offered their toasted dainties in vain to satiated contestants, we gathered about the fire and told stories.

Old Noah must have been a little bit uneasy in his sleep that night, for by inference his ears were burning because stories he invented in the Ark were retold, but without acknowledgment of their source. But Noah knew. Who was it about that camp fire that muttered those lines of Kipling about Homer (I am not sure that I quote this correctly, and the meter may be straggly, because I am writing this on the Twentieth Century Limited, homeward bound), but the murmurer said something like this:

"When 'Omer smote his bloomin' lyre
He'd heard men sing on land and sea,
And what he thought he might require
He went and took, the same as me."

We had, too, the familiar songs, concluding with "America" and "The Star Spangled Banner", and then home.

I wrote those words, "and then home", with careless abandon. They do not begin to describe, or even suggest, the process. For the college stands on a bluff, and the fire was on the beach many feet below. In the semi-darkness, the so-called path to the beach was shrouded from sight. It was only when one was launched upon it that its true nature revealed itself. It was more of a chute than a path, but going down a chute is relatively easy, especially when one starts with some reckless motion at the top. But "going home" was different. Even persons with such angelic dispositions as those present could not "slide up" a chute whose tread was loose sand. We could not float up nor soar up, even those buoyed with such "airy nothings" as marshmallows. It was a good, stiff climb, with many a slip and an accumulation of "sand" sufficient for any enterprise. But by forming a squad of men, and below them "linked (what's that word?) long drawn out", we managed to get home.

(To be continued)

The Racine Confercnce

The last Synod of the Province of the Mid-West authorized a committee to take up the matter of holding a summer school. When the members of the committee met, it became apparent that the Province wanted not a summer school, but something more comprehensive. The result was "The Conference of Church Workers", which has just completed a most successful session at Racine College, Racine, Wis. It would be difficult to find a more ideal place for such a conference. The traditions and atmosphere of old Racine seemed to shed a benediction upon the meeting. Two hundred and twenty-four persons from twenty-four dioceses were in attendance. The courses included missions from many angles, presented by Misses Tillotson, Giles Wethers and Smith, and Bishop Burleson; Religious Education, presented by the Rev. C. H. Young and the Rev. B. T. Kemerer, and Mesdames MacWhorter and Atkinson, and Misses Murray, Green and Noyes. Dr. St. George gave a history of the Communion Office. Dean Bell gave courses of lectures on the Church's social obligations. Dr. Atwater outlined a method of successful parish organization, and Mr. Spencer presented an outline of work among boys and men, as it can be accomplished through the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Chaplain Frank E. Wilson brought a stirring message from Camp Grant.

Several series of moving pictures were given in the evenings. On Sunday the Presiding Bishop came to bring a special message and to give his benediction to the Conference.

The closing service was a beautiful Vespers, with a sermon by Bishop Burleson, followed by a pilgrimage, led by the choir and clergy, to the grave of the Rev. James DeKoven, D. D. The Conference was brought to an end with a Corporate Communion on Friday morning.

Every one was impressed by the friendliness, the earnest work and the deep spiritual tone of the Conference. Its life was centered about the Altar, where the daily sacrifice was offered. Each morning the Bishop of Fond du Lac gave a spiritual meditation upon the opening chapter of St. John's Gospel, and at the Sunset Vespers Dr. Ferris spoke upon the message of the Gospels.

Every one present was impressed with the spirit of the Conference. The warden, the Rev. B. T. Rogers, and staff of the college, the Church people and citizens of Racine made all the members of the Conference feel how sincerely they enjoyed their presence.

A unanimous vote was passed asking the Synod to make the Conference a yearly feature of Church work in the Province.

A Great Patriotic Service

ANGLICANS, ROMAN CATHOLICS, PROTESTANTS AND JEWS PARTICIPATE

An unusual and almost unprecedented service was held lately in the great Memorial Hall auditorium of the city of Columbus, Ohio. All the churches of the capital city of Ohio closed their doors Sunday evening to join in this great union service. Never before had there been such a service in the history of the city. Roman Catholic, Protestant, Jewish—all were represented in the vast throng that gathered in the huge auditorium. The occasion was the inauguration of the campaign for the sale of the War Savings Stamps, which continued throughout the following week. But the service stood for more than that. It was a service of dedication of the talents and time and energy and money of the city of Columbus to a great cause, in recognition of the fact of God's relation to that cause.

Upon the immense stage were seated ministers representing every Church found in the city of Columbus. In the center was seated Bishop Theo. I. Reese of the Diocese of Southern Ohio. On his right hand there was a Roman Catholic Bishop, on his left a Jewish rabbi, and on either side were seated representative ministers from all the Churches of various names, including several Negro ministers. Each had a part in the wonderfully impressive service.

The Roman Catholic Bishop opened the service with the Lord's Prayer and a brief address. The vow of allegiance was given by the congregation, led by a Christian Science healer. A Protestant minister read a letter from the venerable Dr. Washington Gladden, who was too ill to be present, but wished to express his great delight in the fact that "the impossible was to happen", and that the Churches of Columbus, without regard to creed, color, race or class distinction, should at last be brought together as one great organization in the great cause of humanity.

This was followed by several addresses by the different ministers, all speaking in a deeply religious vein. The Scripture was St. Paul's twelfth chapter of his first letter to the Corinthians. A prayer was offered by a Baptist minister—the same prayer which was offered at the first meeting of the Continental Congress by the Rector of an Episcopal Church in Philadelphia. Bishop Theo I. Reese was asked to pronounce the benediction.

Over five thousand people crowded the great auditorium, and another thousand, who were unable to gain admittance for lack of seats, held an overflow meeting in front of Memorial Hall. Back of the speakers on the platform were seated a choir of 200 people, men, women, boys and girls, drawn from all the choirs of the city. Patriotic and religious hymns had a large place in the evening's program. In this the choir and congregation were led and directed by Mr. Karl Koenig, organist and choirmaster of Trinity Episcopal Church of Columbus. The whole affair was conducted with a spirit of unity and harmony which was immensely impressive. During the week following, queries came from every part of the United States to Columbus by mail and telegraph, "How did you do it?"

DR. GREEN GIVES REASONS FOR DECLINING ELECTION AS BISHOP COADJUTOR

The Rev. Dr. William Mercer Green, Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, Miss., who was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Mississippi at a special Council held last June, has sent to Bishop Bratton the following communication in which he reconsiders his formal acceptance of the honor conferred upon him.

"My Dear Bishop—Since the apparent discrepancy in the balloting of the special council which elected me to the office of Bishop coadjutor was called to my attention, the matter has been much upon my mind and heart. I have been trying to see clearly my duty in the matter, seeking Divine guidance.

"I took no action until the chancellor's voice could be heard. He has spoken decisively for the entire legality of the election. In his decision you have expressed yourself as concurring. Others, whose judgment I respect, are so persuaded. I am entirely satisfied that my election will stand in any court of law.

"My friends, yourself included, have advised me to accept this decision as settling the question. I have tried to do so, but I find I cannot. An election to the episcopate must, in my conviction, be above the necessity of legal adjudication That which requires legal vindication or explanation is to that extent not flawless. If it should be God's will that I serve Him in His Church as a Bishop, the election must be above moral as well as legal question. I am very sure that good men will differ with me as to the clearness with which the voice of the council spoke its choice, in view of the facts since presented by our secretary. My election and consecration, once consummated, cannot be undone. It is for time and eternity. I cannot permit them to be consummated as long as the necessity for any explanation or vindication of them, moral or legal, exists.

"I am constrained, therefore, to reconsider my acceptance of the election. I am not acting hastily: I have come slowly to my decision. I have delayed until I feel in my heart that I am right, and that it is to the best interest of our holy Church and our beloved diocese that I so act. I must under the conditions decline election.

"I hope you and my brethren in the diocese will know that it is with great regret that I lay upon you the task of reopening this solemn matter. Forgive me if I seem to distrust the advice of wise friends, and arbitrarily to follow my own counsel. But God has spoken to my conscience, and He being my helper, I can do no other.

"Praying God's blessing upon you and our diocese, I am yours in Christ and His Church.

"WILLIAM MERCER GREEN."

Emergency Call For Nurses

THE RED CROSS CALLS FOR ONE THOUSAND A WEEK

A thousand graduate nurses must be sent overseas each week for the next two months to meet the requirements of the allied armies, according to the word that has reached us from Lake Division Red Cross headquarters.

The "thousand a week" request to the Red Cross has been made by Surgeon General Gorgas, and Miss Anna Gladwin, acting director of the Lake Division Nursing Bureau, has appealed to Red Cross organizations throughout Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky to speed up enrollment of eligible nurses.

In the six months ending July 31, 703 nurses had been enrolled from these three states—537 from Ohio, 136 from Indiana and 30 from Kentucky; 291 were enrolled in July. August and September must each produce at least triple that figure.

Appreciating that public health must not be permitted to suffer, the Red Cross has been pushing its home care of the sick and its first aid care courses, as well as co-operating with other agencies in recruiting student nurses to fill the depleted ranks of the hospitals.

Notice has gone out that the pay of nurses going into active military service has been increased to $75 a month for overseas duty and $60 a month for work in camps and cantonments in America. This is in addition to board and lodging, and to the same war risk insurance privileges that are granted soldiers, sailors and marines.

"Nurses will respond to this imperative call if the people in each town will conserve the nurse power and impress upon the nurses that the 'greatest mother in the world' must have thousands of them to meet its obligation to the government," says Miss Gladwin.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

The vestry of Christ Church, Raleigh, N. C. owing to the increased cost of living, voluntarily increased the salary of their rector, the Rev. Mr. Barber, $300.

Recent German war orders, which fell into the hands of the allies, put a ban on strong drink: "Avoid drinking wine and alcohol. These drinks render you unfit for combat and will bring severe punishment."

All Churches in England observed the fourth anniversary of the great war on Sunday, August 4th, by holding special patrioic services. Prayers of thanksgiving were offered throughout the empire for American aid in the war.

Ninety-seven girls' clubs have been established under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., in cities and towns adjacent to army camps, which give the girls something to think about besides the romance of khaki, and supplement the individual homes in providing wholesome entertainment and recreation for the soldiers

The initials of each of the men and women engaged in war service appear under the star assigned to them on the two service flags of the St. John's Evangelist Church, St. Paul, Minn. A brother of the Rev. Edward M. Cross, Rector of St. John's, has recently enlisted in the Marines. There is a total of 146 gone from the parish.

Bishop McCormick wishes to correct the item in our last issue that he is home incapacitated by a gas attack in France. He is here for a time to care for certain duties in his Diocese and at Washington, according to a plan agreed upon with the War Commission that he should alternate with Bishop Perry at stated intervals in over seas duties.

St. Mark's Parish, Chicago, has purchased the residence of Mrs. Neuberger, owner of the Boston store that city, and a $40,000 church and parish house will be erected on the site. The house is of granite construction, three stories high and contains twenty-one rooms, representing an original expenditure of $100,000. The garage will be converted into a parish house.

A service flag was dedicated in the Church of the Epiphany, Sedan, Kas., on a recent Sunday. The parish is vacant and the arrangements for the dedication of the flag at an earlier date had to be postponed owing to the fact that it was impossible to secure the services of a rector or other clergyman, because of a shortage in the Diocese and throughout the United States, occasioned by enlistments.

The wife and daughter Helen, of the Rev. Fuller Swift, Rector St. Clement's, El Paso, together with the Rev. George Daland, the Curate-Organist, and his wife and daughter, while returning by automobile from a Sunday night service held at Fort Bliss, were run into by an army car. The entire party was much shaken and bruised and the car smashed. Miss Helen Swift was thrown out and suffered a concussion of the brain. Under expert medical care she is improving slowly and it is thought she will recover.

More than two hundred Australian Anzacs attended the services at Trinity Church and an equal number at St. Peter's Church, New York City, on Sunday, July 28th, stopping over in the city on their way to the front. A special service was held in their honor at Trinity Church. A message to the Australian soldiers from the Rev. Dr. Manning, who is serving as a volunteer chaplain at Camp Upton, was read by the Rev. Edward L. Reed, one of the junior curates of the parish, The Rev. H. H. Coles, Chaplain of the Australian Navy, preached the sermon. At three o'clock in the afternoon Bishop Burch confirmed twenty-eight of the soldiers

Our attention has been called to errors in a report of the death of th Rev. W. T. Forsythe, a highly valued priest of the Diocese of Maine, which appeared in a recent number of THE WITNESS. Mr. Forsythe was ordained by the elder Bishop Williams of Quebec, father of the present Bishop. He served in that Diocese not five years but sixteen, and then at Middlebury, Vt., not Middleburg, Va., for many years, and then Enosburg Falls and Richford in the same Diocese, until he went to Maine in 1914, so that he was fifteen years in Vermont and four in Maine, making nineteen years in the United States after serving sixteen years in Canada.

The handsome new St Clement's Church, Buffalo, N. Y., constructed of red tapestry brick with white stone trimmings in gothic style, was formally dedicated on Sunday afternoon, July 28th. Over twenty clergymen of Buffalo and nearby cities and towns were in attendance, including the following who took part in the service: the Rev. William Salisbury, rector of St. Clement's; the Rev. G. A. Shaw, rector of Grace Church, Buffalo; the Rev G. Sherman Burrows Rev. Dr. C. D Broughton of the Church of the Ascension, Buffalo; the Rev. Phillip W. Mosher of St. Peter's Church, Niagara Falls. After the service a flag was raised in front of the church. The Rev. David H. Weeks of Niagara Falls, spoke briefly and the congregation sang patriotic songs.

Personals

The University of Southern California has conferred the degree of Juris Doctor on the Rev. Timon E. Owens of Los Angeles.

The Rev. W. H. Willard-Jones, B. D, has been appointed by the War Commission, Camp Chaplain at Camp Perry and Proving Ground. All mail for the chaplain should be addressed to the Proving Grounds, Camp Perry, Ohio.

The Rev. Leonard K. Smith has resigned the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Des Moines, Iowa, owing to the continued ill health of his family in that climate, and has accepted a call to several points in the missionary District of Spokane, Wash., with headquarters at Prosser.

Mr. Nicholas H. Chavasse, an earnest Churchman, who died last month at his home in Henderson, N. C., and was buried from the Church of the Holy Innocents, was a brother of the Bishop of Liverpool, and of the late Sir Thomas Chavasse of Birmingham, England.

The Rev. Harry Idle, assistant to the Rev. Samuel Tyler in St. Luke's Church, Rochester, N. Y., has been accepted for overseas service by the Y .M. C. A. War Commission, and is now probably on his way to France. He was presented with a purse by the congregation at a meeting of the Men's Club of the Parish held in his honor, Thursday evening, July 25th.

The Rev. E. C. Prosser, Rector of St. John's Church, Columbus, O., and correspondent to THE WITNESS for the Diocese of Southern Ohio, is spending the month of August in St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., with relatives and friends. His father, the Rev. J. W. Prosser, who has been a priest of the Diocese of Minnesota for the past thirty years, is a district superintendent of the Minnesota Children's Home, St. Paul.

The Rev. G. G. Bennett entered upon his duties as Rector of St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, Minn, on the last Sunday in July, succeeding the Rt. Rev. Dr. Remington, Suffragan Bishop of South Dakota who is for the present serving as chaplain with the Minneapolis Base Hospital Unit. Mr. Bennett was formerly Rector of the Church of the Incarnation at Great Falls, Mont., and spent several weeks in Y. M. C. A service before taking up his work in Minneapolis

The Rev. Albert R. Parker, Rector of St. John's Church, Fall River, Mass., has assumed his duties as chaplain of the United States Naval Radio School at Harvard University, to which he was appointed recently. Up to the time of his appointment he was a member and officer of the Seventeenth Massachusetts Regiment, State Guard. He was an officer of the regimental supply company, with the rank of Second Lieutenant, and then appointed chaplain of the regiment with the rank of Chaplain. The Rev. Charles A. Jackson, Rector of the Church of the Ascension, a brother-in-law of Chaplain Parker, has been appointed chaplain of the Seventeenth Regiment to succeed him. Chaplain Jackson was one of the color Sergeants of the regiment.

A Letter from Bishop McCormick

HOME AGAIN FROM THE FRONT

Returning from France, after having represented the War Commission there since last October, I beg to thank the Church papers and the Church people for a cordial welcome home.

I am glad to report that our Church work is now well established overseas. Bishop Perry of Rhode Island has gone over to take my place. At the expiration of six months of thereabouts I shall hope to relieve him, and thereafter it will be turn about, so that there will always be one of us abroad who has had the chance to become familiar with the situation. Mr. H. C. Ross, who, in spite of newspaper descriptions to the contrary, is not a clergyman, but a Boston layman, remains as secretary, and the office of the Commission continues to be in the guild house of Holy Trinity Church, 23 Ave de l'Alma, Paris. Bishop Perry's mailing address will be the same as mine, in care of Morgan, Harjes & Co., 31 Boulevard Haussmann, Paris.

As reported from time to time through the Church papers, the Paris office is card cataloguing all our men, as far and as fast as their names can be obtained, and every man on arrival in France receives a letter notifying him of the representation of his own Church through its Commission, and of the desire of the Commission to help him in every possible way. We are in close touch with all our chaplains and with many hundreds of our men, and this touch should become more and more beneficial as the war goes on. I urge our Church people to send the names of all our men as they go over, and to use the Paris office freely and fully for information and for communication. Its usefulness has been demonstrated and its establishment has been a hundredfold justified. Our Church was the first to be represented by a Bishop or an authorized official, and our initiative in this regard has made a marked impression. As is generally known, Bishop Lawrence continues to be chairman of the War Commission, and Bishop Perry's place as chairman of the Executive Committee has been taken by Bishop Reese, and the Rev. Dr. Washburn is installed as secretary. All communications addressed to the War Commission, 14 Wall Street, New York, will receive immediate attention.

While I am in this country, I shall be most happy to answer any questions and to supply any information. I have already had some sixty or seventy requests for sermons, addresses, etc., and I hope to comply with as many of these requests as time and space will permit.

I have been asked to say something, as the result of experience and observation, in regard to the clergy who wish to volunteer for overseas work, and since my return I have received many letters on this subject. Outside direct military service, there are only three ways in which a clergyman of our Church can go, namely, with the American Red Cross, with the Y. M. C. A. or as a chaplain in the army. The Y. M. C. A. is calling for a large increase of men, and quite a number of our clergy are serving with it. They may go as secretaries or as special speakers on the various Y. M. C. A. circuits. With the Red Cross several of our clergy have gone as workers among civilians and refugees, or as searchers in hospitals. Some of them, on arrival in France, have been transferred to the chaplains' bureau, and are now serving as hospital chaplains. The Red Cross Bureau of Hospital Chaplains, of which I was the chief, and in which Bishop Perry succeeds me, comprises the chaplains of base hospitals, evacuation hospitals, mobile units and Red Cross emergency hospitals. Many of our clergy are in this service, and at the present time it would not seem wise to send others, as we already have considerably more than our share. Until quite recently, no other Church seemed to be ready to act in this capacity, and our men were almost the only ones to respond. It now seems probable that the army may decide to take over the whole hospital chaplaincy service, putting the men under army commissions, and until this point is decided, recruiting for the Red Cross hospital chaplain service will be suspended. Application to go as chaplains in the army should be made through the Bishop of Washington, and we will be entitled to our quota of the new chaplains, and must supply them. Of course, all men enlisting as army chaplains must be ready to serve for the duration of the war, and must comply with all army requirements

In regard to the whole subject of our clergy who desire to go abroad, I do not wish to seem presumptuous in speaking to my brothers, either of the episcopate or of the priesthood, but I may be allowed to make one or two suggestions, founded, as I have said, on experience and observation. It would hardly seem to me worth while for any Bishop who is in active charge of a diocese to go overseas, except in some directly representative and administrative capacity. The army does not know exactly how to place or how to treat an itinerant Bishop serving in an apparently non-episcopal position. Nor, in my judgment, would the position of Y. M. C. A. secretary or base hospital chaplain, either of which position could as well be filled by a priest, appear quite to justify a Bishop in suspending for any considerable period the exercise of his episcopal office in his own diocese. I submit this with all deference, merely as my own opinion, and without any criticism of any of my brothers who have come to a different conclusion; but I should be surprised if, after actual experience, their opinion did not agree with mine. When Bishops come over in strange and unfamiliar relations, the army might be pardoned for saying, "Bishops we know and chaplains we know, but who are ye"?

As to the other clergy, the question would have to be decided in each case on its merits. Quite naturally we all want to go, and, going, we all want to be at the front. But no man should go merely for the sake of going. Of course we must keep up the supply of chaplains, and we must be ready instantly and adequately to meet any other demand for the ministrations of religion. But it does not seem to me that it is necessary for a clergyman to undertake to do work that can just as well be done by a layman, if in so doing he suspends his own proper function and ceases to act ministerially. If the war goes on, as it seems likely to do, there will be urgent need, whether over here or over there, for every ordained priest of the Church to function as such in the cure of souls, be that cure with the army abroad or at home, or with the people of his own parish, who are back of the fighting men and supporting the fighting men. If the number of troops rises towards the five million objective, there will be a corresponding rise in the number of chaplains required for the army and in the ever expanding navy. This increase we must meet, and we must correspondingly provide for filling vacancies in the regular parochial work and in the mission field.

Before closing, I wish to bear witness to the loyalty, the bravery, the devotion, and the quiet, modest usefulness of our clergy now serving abroad. Chaplain Danker, who has given his life, is but one of many, both in the regimental and in the hospital service, of whom the Church at home has reason to be proud. Let us remember them in our prayers, and let us hold up their hands in their awful and glorious task. As to what is for each of us his own duty, we must try to keep a proper sense of values, fearlessly to analyze our own motives, and to give just appreciation to advice and authority. Above all things, we must seek by prayer, obedience and self-sacrifice to find out what is the all-conclusive will of God.

Restoration and Deposition

Bishop Weller of the Diocese of Fond du Lac announces:

"On the 21st day of June, 1918, in the presence of Rev. George C. Story and Rev. Arnold G. Fowkes, priests, I remitted and terminated the sentence of deposition from the ministry pronounced by my predecessor, the late Bishop of Fond du Lac, Sept. 4, 1898, upon Rev. Charles A. Hayden, priest, and restored him to the full exercise of the priestly office."

"On the 21st day of June, 1918, in the presence of Rev. George C. Story and Rev. Arnold G. Fowkes, priests, I deposed from the ministry of the Church, Rev. Arthur Clement Chapman, presbyter, he having been suspended from the ministry by me previously, following a declaration in writing, not subsequently withdrawn, that he had renounced the ministry of the Church."

MEMORIAL TABLETS AND HONOR ROLLS
U. S. AND SERVICE FLAGS

Stained Glass Windows - Venetian Mosaics
Altars, Pulpits, Lecturns, Rails,
Candlesticks

Altar and Processional Crosses

SPAULDING & CO.
Michigan Ave. and VanBuren St.
CHICAGO

Collegiate School, Military
for Boys, Denver, Colo.

All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations. Adress REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

A SAFE and ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Women's Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY.
MRS. GUTGESELL'S CHRISTMAS NOVELTY GIFT BOOK
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
NO INVESTMENT SPLENDID PROFITS
For information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL, MINNEAPOLIS,
400-402 Sixth Avenue South MINN.

SHATTUCK SCHOOOL
Has behind it the Experience, Traditions and Ideals of fifty years. ¶Is a College Preparatory School with military drill and discipline under U. S. War Dep't. Reserve Officers' Training Corps. ¶In Grounds, Building and equipment is equaled by but few schools. "The school is full for 1918-1919. Enrollment should be made now for 1919-20."
Box 452. Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn.

SETTLEMENT TRAINING SCHOOL
LA GRANGE SETTLEMENT LA GRANGE, GA.
A PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH TRAINING SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL WORKERS
Courses in Settlement Nursing, Kindergarten Work, and special course of one year in Church and Social Work for graduates.
REV. R. T. PHILLIPS, Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
L. W. APPLEGATE.....Publisher
JAMES SHEERIN GEORGE P. ATWATER HENRY J. MIKELL
FRANCIS S. WHITE JAMES WISE
EDWARD C. CHORLEY

Published every Saturday at Hobart, Ind., where all business communications should be addressed.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

ADVERTISING RATES

Three dollars an inch each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates revised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

5% for two months; 10% for three months; 15% for six months; 20% for twelve months.

All news matter, Diocesan and Parish papers, intended for THE WITNESS, should be sent to the Rev. Charles J. Shutt, 312 Warren Street, Mankato, Minn.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

EDITORIAL

Vox Populi

I have heard several noted religious speakers talk on the subject of religion lately, and I am sorry to say that I am shocked to discover in certain academic circles a tendency toward a religion that differs from that of the Kaiser (and I suppose as a loyal American I ought to thank God for that) in only one particular, in that it is a religion made in America, and not one made in Germany.

Of course the kind of a religion that an American would manufacture is a much kinder, gentler sort of a religion than that turned out in Berlin, but, then, it has the same wretched limitation. You can't pump any more water out of a cistern than that which is in it. That is where a cistern differs from a spring.

Let me quote from one of the very finest of these American orators:

"There will be better preaching and larger aggregate attendance upon preaching when the function has been centered in a small number of persons selected by the only finally conclusive test—the popular demand for their message."

Another of the finest, in bringing back a message from the front, gravely informs us that "there is no demand for Church unity among the men at the front, merely that each denomination shall be more liberal."

Now these two speeches, made by two thoughtful, earnest gentlemen, represent a very common American sentiment: "It is not what God wants, but what we want."

It is expressed by others, less able and more platitudinous, who talk of a modern religion and new thought and Twentieth Century ideas.

I may be very dull, but I can't see any high spiritual possibilities springing from even the unanimous opinion of the estimable gentlemen with whom I play golf, nor a plebiscite from the Chamber of Commerce, or an assembly of organized labor, or even the very cosmopolitan body that we call Congress.

You can't add a million people together as you add dollars. If you have a million dollars, you have a great deal more power than if you have one dollar. But a million John Smiths will know mighty little more than one John Smith about God. In fact, what one John Smith knows about God will pretty nearly neutralize what the other John Smith believes.

If we could assemble spiritual assets as we assemble material dollars, then, when we wanted to know something, we would appoint a very large committee to wrestle with it; but we act very differently. When we want to know something, we consult one specialist, and the poor unfortunate who assembles eight specialists has very little chance for recovery. Eight specialists do not know eight times as much as one specialist.

The curious thing is that the Christian religion comes to us from God through Christ, as a revelation on the authority of His Word, for "He spake as one having authority, and not as the Scribes and Pharisees". His "Verily, verily I say unto you" was not the popular demand of the multitude, but frequently the thing that the multitude did not want to hear.

The Father had sent Him, and therefore He spake. As the Father had sent Him, so He sent the Apostles; and, as St. Paul said, "that which he had received" was the message that he had delivered, and though an angel from heaven spake any other message he was not to be believed.

But Americans do not like authority, and they do not like dogma. Why? Because they have been abused. Of course they have. So have marriage, and money, and medicine. What of it? We put up with authority when we are at war, and with the most arbitrary dogma when we are sick; and I reckon that we need to learn obedience by the things that we suffer.

But we are like children. I used to think adults were supermen; now I know that most of them are children, and many of them very spoiled children.

I simply can't enthuse over the religion that they may create.

There is nothing, we know, that has been worse abused than civil authority. The Kaiser is a standing spectacle of that kind of abuse; and the Bolsheviki, having had a Czar (which is nothing but Kaiser badly spelled), say all authority must be abolished but the authority which they exercise, and that is just one shade worse than the authority of the Czar.

Well, I've heard a lot about the Reformers and their overthrow of the Pope. Yet I would have more freedom under the Pope, except in the matter of some very formal observances, than I would have in a Methodist Conference or a Presbyterian Synod.

The truth of the matter is that I never saw a job yet that somebody did not have to boss, if it was to be done right. And somebody has to boss this religious job. It isn't a question of having a boss. We have one in this war, and it is a good thing we have. The question is whether he has any constitutional authority to be a boss, and whether, as a boss, he is sane and kind.

Well, to my mind, neither the Kaiser nor the people are good bosses. The one is too arbitrary and the other is too promiscuous and uncertain.

I have mixed up a good deal of late with popular religion. I like its enthusiasm and its friendliness. Who does not like these things? But I am impressed also with its shallowness and ineffectiveness. We are fighting just as ruthless an enemy as the Hun. I don't see much difference between the Hun and the Devil—in fact, the Devil is always with us, and he is a master in the art of warfare.

Surely, if we are to overcome the evil in society, it will be by the same agency that has been successful before, and that agency is the power of Jesus Christ manifested through a united and organized body of Christians. If unity is valuable to the allies, it is to the Church, and if concentrated authority is necessary in fighting the Hun, it is in fighting the Devil.

In either case, it is not what we like, but what we need, and it is not what we Americans prefer, but what our God has commanded.

Personally, I am sick and tired of the man who stands up and shouts against authority and dogma, and then lays down his dogma with an absolute authority.

He can't help doing that. The most dogmatic men I know are those who insist that we shall have no dogma.

If we succeeded in having no dogma, we would stop thinking, and the arbitrary man is not the President, who has a very definite authority, and very clear-cut dogma, but it is the ramping and roaring pacifist, who will have no authority but his own arbitrary assertion of his right to oppose all constituted authority, and no dogma but his own vaporings.

His first cousin doesn't go to church, and doesn't believe anything but the things he doesn't believe. May the Lord have mercy on his soul.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colorado

Does Christian Science deny the Divinity of our Lord?

As they define the word "divinity", probably not; but as the Christian religion of nineteen centuries has used the word Divinity, most certainly they do deny it, for the Christian doctrine of the Divinity of Christ, that God, the second person in the blessed Trinity, took on flesh and tabernacled among us, thus becoming Jesus Christ, both God and man, is not the Christian Science doctrine of our Lord's Divinity.

Could a child of Presbyterian parents be baptized in the Church because the parents liked the service?

Most certainly the child of Presbyterian parents, if baptized at all, would be baptized in the Church, for there is nowhere else in which anybody can really be baptized. Whether the Prayer Book service of baptism could be used would depend upon their furnishing suitable sponsors.

This Church does not go into the question of intention as to why the parents want the child to be baptized, but rather demands some assurance that the child shall be brought up to lead a godly and a Christian life.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER

"I do not believe in vows, and do not think that women ought to be under their husbands' control in this free democratic country. I am an ardent suffragist, and gladly did my bit to help gain the vote of the downtrodden sex, etc., etc."

In gaining the vote for your sex you subjected them to the necessity of taking the vow of citizenship, but that did not place them under the governor's control, but merely caused them to assist in delegating to the governor certain powers that can be better administered by one than by a million.

So the Church does not put women under their husbands' control by taking the marriage vow. That is not the purpose of the vow. But it delegates to the man that which can be done better by one than by two; but the husband's responsibility is as great or greater than that of the wife to the husband. The family is an institution, like the state, and the fact that in every institution we are required to obey some one is good for us. For to obey is better than sacrifice, and Christ Himself learned obedience by the things He suffered.

As we have said before, the word "obey" has no such servile meaning as some would attach to it. It implies obedience merely in the sphere in which obedience is necessary to united action. The soldier obeys his captain, not as a slave, but because unity of action in the regiment can be secured in no other way.

There is no such list of clergy as you request, nor is any clergyman of the Church authorized to change the wording of the marriage service.

Is it not right for an old gentleman to wear a skull cap in church?

Most certainly he may do this.

Is it not permissible for a woman to take off her head covering in church, if faint?

Again, most certainly, but she should not cultivate the habit of being faint.

The rule about head covering for men and women in church is much on the same par as the etiquette of the drawing room. There are times when men go into drawing rooms with their hats off and women with theirs on. Nobody will put them out if the man wears his hat and the woman doesn't, but everybody will feel uncomfortable. So why do it? excepting that anybody would excuse an old man for wearing a skull cap, or anybody would excuse a faint woman for resting her head.

The rule of common sense must be observed alongside with the rule of propriety. In neither case is it an immoral act, merely a matter of propriety, but the law of propriety is fully as inexorable in civilized society as the statutes of the land. At least, no one wants to break either.

I do not believe the thing rests upon the authority of St. Paul. We do not wash one another's feet because Christ did. The thing rests, rather on the ecumenical custom of the Church, which had its basis on the fitness of things. You can no more explain it than you can explain why you take off your hat in the parlor, when calling, and your wife keep's hers on.

There are conventional customs, and the man who doesn't observe them gets the reputation of being peculiar, not wicked.

I hesitate to say that St. Paul was mistaken—I will agree that he spoke many things hard to understand.

Refined young woman wanted to assist in parish and light household duties. Training unnecessary, but must be willing, giving undivided attention. Monthly, fifty and room. Address, A B, care of THE WITNESS, Hobart, Ind.

—ST. ALBAN'S SCHOOL—
KNOXVILLE, ILL.
For Church Boys and Others.
Certificate admits to University.
Moderate Rates for Board and Tuition. Write the Rector:
REV. L. B. HASTINGS
117 N. Peoria Street, Chicago

BRECK SCHOOL 2095 Commonwealth Avenue,
ST. PAUL, MINN.
Located in St. Anthony Park, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, possessing the advantage of access to both. One block from the campus of the Agricultural Department of the University. Offers a complete High School course, and will fit students for any college. Students of the University may register for work in religious subjects. Terms very moderate. Apply to Rev. C. E. Haupt, Superintendent.

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY
Sewanee, Tennessee, 2,300 feet elevation in the Cumberland Mountains. Ideal health conditions. Broadest certificate privileges. Highest rating War Department. Best moral and social influences. Owned and controlled by the twenty Southern Dioceses of the Episcopal Church. For catalogue Address the Superintendent.

Virginia Episcopal School
(LYNCHBURG, VA.)
For boys of character, position and ability, whose means will not permit them to attend our more expensive schools. Prepares at cost for college, university or immediate entrance upon the duties of life. Made possible by gifts of founders. Special terms to clergymen. Boarders for the present are limited to seventy-eight. One hundred and six acres of land. The session begins September 19, 1918. Apply for information and catalogue to the Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Rector.
Rev. Thomas Kinloch Nelson. Vice Rector.

National Cathedral School
A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof building in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College certificate privilege. Music, Art, Advanced, and Special Courses.
THE BISHOP OF WASHINGTON, President of the Board of Trustees
JESSIE C. McDONALD, M. S., Principal
HELEN L. WEBSTER, Ph. D., Academic Head
141t Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Cathedral School for Girls
ORLANDO, FLORIDA
High class Boarding and Day School. College Preparatory and General Courses. Capable Teachers. Careful Home Life. Delightful Climate. Low Rates.
Rev. Roderick P. Cobb, Rector.
19th year opens Oct. 2.

Racine College
RACINE, WISCONSIN
A Church School for your boy. Academy and Junior College.
B. Talbot Rogers, M. A., D. D., Warden.

—THE— HANNAH MORE ACADEMY
Simplicity and Excellence
Maryland Church School for Girls. Catalogue. Reisterstown, Md.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelin, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE".
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind in America.
Address:
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls' College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President.
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal.

HOWE SCHOOL A thorough preparatory school for a limited number of well-bred boys. For illustrated circulars, address the Rector,
REV. JOHN H. McKinzie, D. D.,
Box W. Howe, Indiana.

Berkeley Divinity School
Middletown, Conn.
Address REV. WILLIAM PALMER LADD, Dean

THE OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Teabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918. 8-10-13

Porter Military Academy
A National School A CHURCH SCHOOL Founded 1867
242 boys from 25 States and four foreign countries. Preparation for college or business by sympathetic tutoring and under the strongest influences for Christian manhood. Habits of obedience, promptness, cleanliness and self-reliance are inculcated by the strict but stimulating military discipline. An R. O. T. C. School. Mild, healthful climate permits out of door sports all year around. Gymnasium and swimming pool Unusually liberal terms. A broader preparation that the public school can give. A Lower School for smaller boys.
Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Rector
Box 604, Charleston, S. C.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE MISSIONARY AND THE PUBLIC CONFESSIONS OF THE CHURCH

By the Rev. Francis S. White

"Here am I, send me," said Isaiah, when he went to church and heard God calling for some one to be His missionary. It was a wonderful service, reflecting glory, and worship, and honor due to God, the thrice Holy One, and as the sound and sight and the odors of the worshipful service stirred Isaiah's soul to its depths, he made his lamentation and confession: "Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone: because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."

Confessions that count are made only by those who have met God face to face, and have seen in Him not so much the judge and arbiter of human destiny, as they have seen in Him the perfect beauty of holiness. As the glory and the beauty and the fragrance of a holy life become objectively visible to an earnest, observing soul, so do his self-loathing and inner trembling become more sincere. Superficial folks never touch the depths of penitence; people to whom religion is only good manners toward a suspected Presence cannot find relief in confession. A real confession is evidence of life stirred to its depths. That is why the Church makes provision of confession in both her public and private services. Let us take the formal confessions which our mother, the Church, puts into our mouths, and see if they have not some real and living message for this week's meditation.

In the Prayer Book we find a form of confession in the Daily Prayers, the Holy Communion Service and Family Prayers, in the Visitation of the Sick and the Visitation of the Imprisoned, sin-sick souls are offered the medicine of the Cross, which is absolution reached through a detailed confession of one's sins. And in the forms of prayer to be used at sea we read, "When there shall be imminent danger, as many as can be spared from necessary service in the ship shall be called together and make an humble confession of their sin to God, in which every one ought seriously to reflect upon those particular sins of which his conscience shall accuse him." This is to be followed by the Confession used in the Holy Communion service, which in turn is followed by the Absolution and the "Our Father".

A GENERAL CONFESSION

Almighty and most merciful Father; We have erred, and strayed from thy ways like lost sheep. We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts. We have offended against thy holy laws. We have left undone those things which we ought to have done; And we have done those things which we ought not to have done; and there is no health in us. But thou, O Lord, have mercy upon us, miserable offenders. Spare thou those, O God, who confess their faults. Restore thou those who are penitent; According to thy promises declared unto mankind in Christ Jesus our Lord. And grant, O most merciful Father, for his sake; That we may hereafter live a godly, righteous and sober life, to the glory of thy holy Name. Amen.

We have "erred", "followed too much", "offended", "left undone", and "done". Thus do we recite the verbs which show us what we really are: easily influenced, self-indulgent, self-centered, sick at heart. Do these words describe you or your parish? As you utter them day by day or Sunday after Sunday, do the phrases slip from your lips so that the confession is emptied of meaning? "Miserable offenders!" Did any one ever object to that pharse in your presence, and were you inclined to agree with the objector? "Miserable" is one whom God pities. Who are the miserable offenders in God's sight? Who are those whose actions cause the world to stumble? Are they not those who honor the Lord with their lips, but dishonor Him with their lives—men and women who admire Christ, but who put the claims of self between the wish of God and their obedience to His desire, as expressed in His commandments? God's wish and His command is that all men should come to know Him and love Him. The man who is content to know the Blessed One, and to claim the comfort and help of that Blessed One for his unique possession, even to the neglect of others, can be written down as a miserable offender. These people are sinners against their own souls as much as those of us who by word or deed have transgressed the moral laws. There is no difference before God between the man who neglects the second commandment and the man who neglects the seventh. For both men are miserable when they see themselves as God sees them—when they see what God wants them to be, and what they really are in danger of becoming—when they catch a vision of God's people as they might have been had they only been willing to subordinate self and put God where He belongs.

"Spare" and "restore". The shame that accompanies confession is of little use unless its blush of contrition is also the flush of earnest resolution. To admit one's sins of omission or commission does not entitle one to be spared. One is spared only that he may redeem his past. One is restored because he has given evidence that his contrition is more than skin deep. To confess that we have done little or nothing to make God's way known upon earth, His saving health to all nations, is no sign that God's pity will restore us. The sparing and the restoring take place when we begin to make up for past neglect and opposition. If the Church men and women of this generation would only wake up to the fact that God cannot forgive unless they truly repent, and that they have not truly repented until they begin to make amends for past neglect, you would see a restoration of the Church to her teaching and healing functions, and you would witness a preaching that would change men's cold hearts to liquid, purifying fires of wise enthusiasm and sober determination.

"Godly", "righteous" and "sober" Let us tie up our wills to these words. Search their meanings, and you will find that where their contents are little understood, there will you find a heathen community. And if, after you see this truth in all its force, you still stay indifferent to the mission work of the Church, know of a certainty that your general confession never has come from your heart, but is a shooting forth of the lips which is disgraceful and insulting to the love and patience and pity of God.

THE CONFESSION IN THE COMMUNION OFFICE

Almighty God, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Maker of all things, Judge of all men; We acknowledge and bewail our manifold sins and wickedness, Which we, from time to time, most grievously have committed, By thought, word and deed, Against thy Divine Majesty, Provoking most justly thy wrath and indignation against us. We do earnestly repent, And are heartily sorry for these our misdoings; the remembrance of them is grievous unto us; The burden of them is intolerable. Have mercy upon us, Have mercy upon us, most merciful Father; for thy Son our Lord Jesus Christ's sake, Forgive us all that is past; And grant that we may ever hereafter Serve and please thee In newness of life, To the honour and glory of thy Name; Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

"Father", "Maker", "Judge". These are words that chisel out a Being more or less distinct to our spiritual perceptions. They are words which shrine ideas that make life not only tolerable, but tolerant. Where a Supreme Being is not thought of in these terms, there is the Church needed. As long as there are places on the earth where men do not yet come together, or neglect to come together, with these words on their lips, so long are we bound to do our utmost to win those places out of darkness into light; and to refuse or neglect to do it is sin.

"We acknowledge and bewail." Strong words these—the language of emotion begotten of conviction—words which have a backward gaze, reviewing the past in the light of the eternal and Divine, and in that light seeing how intolerable that past is.

"Earnestly repent", "heartily sorry". What is it that will make those words as real to the little child of twelve, as he prepares for his communion, as they will be real to the person whose face burns as he thinks of his deeds and thoughts and words? Would it be self-examination in the light of Sinai? Would it not rather be self-examination in the light of the Beatitudes—the light of happiness? Or in the light of the thirteenth of First Corinthians—the light of love? And both of these under the figure of the Crucified One?

The Holy Communion is an effort to feed the heart life of man with the heart life of God through the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. Sin obstructs the flow of this life, therefore a Christian's business is to put away sin and to neutralize the effects of sin. This calls for confession, for only confession wins the healing power of absolution; only true penitence makes confession real and vital; only a sight or glimpse of the beauty of a sinless life gives one true repentance. Remorse is no proper preparation for communion with the holy Christ, because remorse sees only inability to get away from one's past. Remorse looks only on the ruins one has made, without any plea for a new creation to take its place. True repentance has in view the intention to lead a new life. The new life is not the same old life on another page of history, but, when possible, another life on the same old page of history. And the new life comes from the heart life of the blessed Jesus. To get this new life, we must earnestly repent. The more we see of this life of Jesus, and the more we compare our lives with His, the more earnest will be our repentance, the more sincere will be our confession, the more jealous will we be for the reputation of the White Christ and the White Christ's Church, the more anxious will we be to add to its whiteness, and not be guilty of spotting that whiteness, the more anxious will we be that our negligences and ignorances shall not contribute to the weakening of his cause. All these contributing causes make the confession real and save us from the danger of using titanic words, with no appreciation of their power to destroy as well as help.

"For thy Son Jesus Christ's sake forgive us all that is past." Of our own selves we cannot conceive what punishment sin involves. The death of Jesus is what we must study as well as plead. The suffering, mutilated body of Jesus alone brings home to men the cost of winning forgiveness—the awfulness and horribleness of sin. This death it is which spells life, newness of life, to the awakened sinner. This is the substance of our preaching to the world: "Christ Jesus and Him crucified." Put the Crucified One between yourself and your past, and the beauty and power of His sacrifice will strengthen your penitence and transform your remorse. This is the only chance that parishes and parishioners will have to save themselves from despair and remorse as they contemplate a past that has been scornful and neglectful of missions, and so have crucified the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame in the sight of those who never yet have understood that the message of the Cross is a universal and eternal message, meant for all sorts and conditions of men, and not for the favored few.

THE CONFESSION IN FAMILY PRAYERS

Most merciful God, who art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, and hast promised forgiveness to all those who confess and forsake their sins; We come before thee in an humble sense of our own unworthiness, acknowledging our manifold transgressions of thy righteous laws. But, O gracious Father, who desireth not the death of a sinner, look upon us, we beseech thee, in mercy, and forgive us all our transgressions. Make us deeply sensible of the great evil of them; and work in us an hearty contrition; that we may obtain forgiveness at thy hands, who art ever ready to receive humble and penitent sinners; for the sake of thy Son Jesus Christ, our only Saviour and Redeemer. Amen.

"Purer eyes than to behold iniquity." Wouldn't it help the personal religious lives if family prayers were revived and children taught the shamefulness of doing or thinking in the sight of the pure God that which they would be ashamed to do or "think aloud" in the presence of the family? Let us teach our children to put themselves in the presence of God and look over each day before they go to bed, and talk it over with the gentle Jesus, as some fortunate ones do with their parents. If we had the home confessional, there would not be so much need for the Church confessional, because we would the more seriously "judge ourselves, brethren, that we be not judged of the Lord". Why not resolve to re-establish this self-examination time in the family life? And why not resolve to let that examination relate itself to our duties to fellow Christians, and more especially to non-Christians of our time? If we did these things in the bosom of the family, the result would be more life to the nourishing bosom of Mother Church.

"Deeply sensible." Jesus Christ is so anxious that we should not stay superficial, especially in our religious life. If we must run shallow in our lives, let the shallows appear in our work, or our amusements, but not in our religion. God and Church want us to be sensible way, way down in our hearts. And it is home religion that forces its way down into a man's heart; it is home worship and home searchings that get down below the surface; it is at home where one should be his or her real self. The Church's mission will never be what Christ ordered it to be until the home altars burn with the fires of service and sacrifice, until the home walls echo to the confessions of those who realize their lack in manifesting the beauty of a holy family. The home councils include plans for the advancement of God's Kingdom on earth. So in the worship of home, the worship of the prayer desk and the worship of the Altar are we taught the value of those real confessions which come from the heart of people who have seen and loved Jesus Christ, and wish to follow in the blessed steps of His most holy life. and who realize, as they see and follow, the reasons why they are so far behind Him in the way, and the importance of leading others less fortunate than ourselves in the same way, which is the missionary way.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

By G. W. J.

In these days, when our interest grows more and more world-wide, surely distant Liberia and Africa come in for a share; and while on the subject of interest, why not have more in our monthly magazine, the Spirit of Missions, about as world-wide and interesting a magazine as one could wish for.

Our interest in our missionaries and their work should be at least equal to our interest in our soldiers and our war work, which brings another question to one's mind: Why, when prayers are offered at Church services for our soldiers and our allies, do we not offer prayers for our missionaries at the same time?

Speaking of prayer, we read in the daily papers that three cardinals in the Roman communion have made an appeal to the people of America to pray three times daily for the guidance of our rulers, the success of our arms, the unity of nations and the welfare of heroes. Also that the business men, as well as women war workers in Evanston, Ill., will suspend thirty seconds at noon each day for silent prayer for the success of American and allied armies.

Here is a letter written by Mrs. F. H. Shults, the nurse in charge of the House of Hope, in Nopala, Mexico:

"About a year ago Bishop Aves asked me to go to Nopala, to the Casa de la Esperanza, to work under Dr. Aves for one month. If my work was satisfactory, and I liked it, we were to make further arrangements. When I had been there two weeks, Dr. Aves decided to leave the hospital and offer his services to the U. S. army, which services were accepted. I agreed to take charge of the hospital until a doctor could be secured. The work is most interesting, and I loved it and the people, especially the children.

"Of course there were cases which I could not handle, as, for instance, the woman we knew as Lina. That was a very serious case. I took her to Mexico City, with valuable help from Miss Whitaker, and placed her in an English hospital. Unfortunately, it was too late, for she died a month or so later.

"A little girl was brought in to us from the mountains, who had been shot just behind the knee. Gangrene had already set in. This case also I took to Mexico City, and again asked for and received Miss Whitaker's help. This child stayed one month at the American hospital. Dr. Ufelder operated twice without charge, grafting the bone from a sheep's leg on to the bone of the child's leg, which was a great success. I took her back at the end of a month to the Casa de la Esperanza, where she stayed two months longer, when her father took her home well. Her father says she continually asks to be taken back to the hospital.

"Following this, we had an epidemic of typhoid fever, and when I had five or six cases desperately ill, I asked for a doctor from Mexico. Dr. Carrion came and prescribed for the patients, and we paid for this visit from funds which the people at home had kindly sent to the hospital. Later, I met, at the home of a very sick man, Dr. Cosio of Huichapan, which is the next small town to Nopala. I found Dr. Cosio all one could desire as a doctor and a gentleman, and was able to arrange with him such cases as I could not handle by myself. For a number of months this doctor was prompt to serve, and no matter how much work he did, or how many patients he saw, or whether it took him one day or two days, he never charged over thirty-five pesos a visit. Two months ago he received an offer of a larger work and accepted, so we are again without a near-by doctor.

"In the fall came the disaster of the crops being frozen, which means much suffering. Since that time the Casa de la Esperanza has taken the place of a social center as well as a hospital. We have given clothing to sixty-eight children and to that many more adults. We have fed many mothers and infants, and we can scarcely keep count of a measure of corn here and a litre of milk there, and some fresh eggs for this one, and a little wine, even, when necessary.

"After December 1st we received three boxes of children's clothing from Massachusetts. At Christmas time came enough help to enable us to give a beautiful Christmas celebration, with some little gift to more than three hundred children. The Blue Book Store, the American Drug Co., the National Railroad, Bland Brothers and the Bible Society have given valuable help.

"In all of the work, Mrs. Salinas, the wife of our Mexican clergyman, has stood by me, always ready to render any assistance in her power. I have received from every one in the neighborhood the utmost courtesy. We all trust that the hospital will be of great help to the people in their hours of need. Six hundred and eighty-four people have been assisted, besides the beggars."

To this the Archdeacon adds: "Mrs. Shults' work with the sick and the hungry little babies goes on all the time. The funds given for milk and for other food for the little ones is being carefully used, and not lavishly expended, for it will have to cover a long time yet, and the new crop of corn is just beginning to look bright and give promise for the fall."

Two Bishops to be Consecrated

PRESIDING BISHOP ANNOUNCES ORDER OF SERVICE

BISHOP SUFFRAGAN OF N. C.

The Presiding Bishop has taken order for the ordination and consecration of the Rev. Henry Beard Delany, D. D., Suffragan Bishop-elect of the Diocese of North Carolina, as follows:

Time, 11 a. m., October 18, 1918 (St. Luke's Day).

Place, St. Augustine's Chapel, Raleigh, North Carolina.

Consecrators, Rt. Rev. Dr. Cheshire of North Carolina (presiding), Rt. Rev. Dr. Bratton of Mississippi, Rt. Rev. Dr. Darst of East Carolina.

Presenters, Rt. Rev. Dr. Weed of Florida, Rt. Rev. Dr. Leonard of Ohio.

Preacher, Rt. Rev. Dr. Lloyd.

Master of ceremonies, Rev. Henry L. Phillips, D. D.

BISHOP SUFFRAGAN OF ARK.

The Presiding Bishop has taken order for the ordination and consecration of the Rev. Edward Thomas Demby, Suffragan Bishop-elect of the Diocese of Arkansas, as follows:

Time, 10:30 a. m. St. Bartholomew's Day, Aug. 24, 1918.

Place, All Saints' Church, St. Louis, Mo.

Consecrators, Rt. Rev. Dr. Winchester, Bishop of Arkansas (presiding), Rt. Rev. Dr. Kinsolving, Bishop of Texas, Rt. Rev. Dr. Johnson, Bishop Coadjutor of Missouri.

Preacher, Rt. Rev. Dr. Gailor, Bishop of Tennessee.

Attending Presbyters, Rev. D. E. Johnson, D. D., Rev. F. A. Garrett.

Master of Ceremonies—Rev. H. W. Mizner.

DANL. S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II, NO. 86 | HOBART, INDIANA, AUGUST 24, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

A MID-WEST CONFERENCE
III.

(Continued from last week)

This informal affair, mentioned in my last article, promoted the acquaintance and friendliness so necessary to such a conference. At a meeting of the faculty the next day, it was determined that at future conferences the fact should be recognized that many people were having no other vacation than this, and that time and attention should be given to the recreational features. A committee will be appointed to supervize this part of the program. It was suggested by one of the faculty, who evidently takes things too seriously, that a baseball game should be arranged between the men and women members of vestries, and that the lecturer on feminism should umpire the game. Perhaps, after umpiring that game, he—no, I must not say that, for I do not believe it.

But the Conference got wind of that attitude of the faculty, and with a great shout of approval met on the campus that night for a real old-fashioned frolic. If the spirit of some ancient Racine student was hovering over the college that night, he would have believed that "humans", as he knew them, had vanished, and that goblins, elves, gnomes and sprites had issued from their hiding places and had once again taken possession of that classic grove. For in the silence of the night, and by the light of the moon, the noiseless forms fled back and forth among the trees on revel bent. (The censor, and perhaps a Bishop or two, would delete the words "silence" and "noiseless" above. I am describing our good intentions, however, so they stand.)

The very presence of so many earnest people at such a conference was a stimulus to any one who loves the Church. And one very wise arrangement was decided upon at the "faculty meeting". We decided to suggest that at each table in the dining room hereafter there be one "host", who remains at that table during the Conference, and that every one else sit at a different table each meal—a sort of an arrangement for "movable" and "immovable" feasters. It will certainly promote acquaintance, for the meal hours were most enjoyable. Not only was there ample provision for the needs of the inner man, but there was an abundance of interesting talk. We had, in addition, the uncertainty of what the announcements would be. Some were unique. The dining hall itself is a noble room, reminding me of a college common hall in Oxford, with its raised dais, occupied by dignitaries. For one meal, the patriarchal figure of the Presiding Bishop graced the regents' table.

The future of the Conference seems secure. It was not my privilege to remain to the last day and to hear the addresses at the closing of the Conference, but I have no doubt that they struck the note of optimism. So be prepared next year to come to Racine and to enjoy with us its delights.

I sat one evening in the quiet grove and feasted my eyes upon the picture of light and shadow, of the graceful outlines of the building and the fantastic shapes of the overhanging trees. My thoughts began to revolve around the great central problem of our Church, the capture of the Mid-West for religion, the durable, satisfying, and refreshing religion of the Church—the noble vision of men long dead, for the Mid-West seemed so remote from realization. Here at Racine was the only collegiate institution of our Church from Kenyon, in Ohio, to the Pacific coast. Who was responsible? Not such as founded Racine. Nor, indeed, may we be held responsible for the neglect of a generation that is past. But the future is always longer than the past, and we are responsible for the work of our generation, and for the opportunities open to us. For the Church, at least, no sooner does one opportunity close its door than another opens, in the changing pancrama of our civilization. I could picture Racine as a center of life and inspiration for the Church, training our boys, preparing them for college and the universities. And then, in the summer, I could see the campus and buildings crowded with Church workers, not for ten days only, but for two months, learning the laymen's duties, and going forth to parishes to become efficient and consecrated supporters of parish life. We have yet to learn that conquest means preparatory training—long, persevering. The future of our Church in this land depends upon the preparation of the whole body of people, priests and laymen alike, to go forth with power as the soldiers of the Son of God.

Two Beautiful Camp Services

Chaplain Wilson writes from Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., to his parish paper, St. Augustine's Messenger, Wilmette, Ill., that on a recent Sunday "I had two of the most interesting, and in many ways the most beautiful service I have had at any time in the camp. It was a fine, clear day, just warm enough to make outdoors the most desirable place to be had. A few minutes before 10 o'clock I ran down to the Fourth Officers' Training School with my portable Altar and a couple of Church boys whom I had picked up on the way. We found a group of men back of the officers' quarters on a pointed bit of a bluff which looks out over a bend in the Rock River. There, under a large oak tree, I set up my Altar, passed out my little books, and while the men sat around on the grass I began the service, just as we have it in our church at home. There were about fifty soldiers in our congregation, and when time for receiving the sacrament arrived, twenty-four came forward and knelt in the grass. We sang hymns, with no instrument to accompany us. I must confess that as I talked to those men seated about me on the ground above the river, the Christ who taught His people on the shores of Galilee seemed unwontedly near to us, and it was perfectly apparent that this Gospel had not lost its power of attraction. The second service was also out-of-doors, but was quite a different type. This was in the evening, at a Y. M. C. A. building in the far end of the camp. A dozen sturdy backs moved the piano through the back door, and the men gathered under the trees on the edge of a bit of woods. The evening was quiet and cool, and the sun was going down just beside us over the same Rock River. There were some six or seven hundred soldiers in our congregation, and they sang for fifteen minutes, until the woods re-echoed the old familiar tunes. Then I talked to them, and we closed with a prayer. A number of them came forward to speak to me when the service was done and, as is so often the case, I discovered some old friends from Chicago in the number. These were all new men, who had been in camp only a couple of weeks, and a better congregation one could not ask."

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

An Inspiring Message From Northfield, Massachusetts

Here we are, amid the hills of Massachusetts. Our bedroom window looks out upon a nearby forest, with tennis courts in the foreground. Beyond are the everlasting hills, with the most wonderful of natural environment all about. For the first time in its long history the Brotherhood of St. Andrew meets in nature's unspoiled setting, with no din of noisy traffic, no disconcerting cross currents of commercial enterprise. We are a mile from the nearest railroad, and to reach this place from its little station above the woods, on the opposite bank of the Connecticut River, one rides in a motor bus for two miles, crossing the bridge up the river. The Convention grounds are on a gently sloping table-land overlooking the quiet reaches of the beautiful river, with here and there a graceful bridge spanning its waters. To our rear are the forest-clad hills, dotted with many cottages, the modest summer homes of men and women, many of whom have made and are making their impress upon the educational and religious life of the world.

The Convention is meeting in the buildings and on the grounds of the Northfield Seminary, founded many years ago by the famous evangelist, Dwight L. Moody. His spirit pervades the place, while during and since his day men of power in the Christian world have here lifted their voices in bringing the missionary message.

The registration, at the time of this writing, indicates delegates from no fewer that thirty-six dioceses. In the limited space and time at our disposal we can hope to give only a word-picture of the meetings and services. We are powerless to convey to the readers of THE WITNESS more than the merest suggestion of the spiritual strength of the services and meetings, nor of the social pleasures of the gathering.

A happy beginning was made on Wednesday night, when, after a refreshing rain, some 200 delegates and their friends were received by the Bishop of Western Massachusetts and his sister, Miss Davies, the reception taking place in the parlors of the Northfield Hotel.

Six-thirty in the morning on the week days of the Convention has appeared not to be too early for the daily celebration of the Holy Communion, for the mornings thus far have brought out from one hundred to one hundred and fifty men, Father Sill of the Order of the Holy Cross celebrating and making the devotional addresses during the first three days. The beautiful Russell Sage Memorial Chapel, of Cram design, lends itself admirably to these services of Holy Communion, with its improvised but Churchly Altar rail, etc. It is a beautiful chapel, of Gothic design.

The conferences on "The Bible in the Personal Life", led by the Rev. Dr. Tomkins of Philadelphia, brought together in the large auditorium not only the full Convention, but also large numbers of summer residents. Dr. Tomkins has a peculiar gift in winning sympathetic interest for his devotional treatment of his subject during the opening days of the Convention, following Father Sill's early morning addresses, made a very spiritual beginning of each day.

Dr. William H. Jefferys, superintendent of the Philadelphia City Mission, followed Dr. Tomkins on Thursday and Friday in two admirable conferences on the "Development of the Prayer Life", using effectively a blackboard. On Saturday morning Mr. Warren Hires Turner, the treasurer of the Brotherhood, conducted what proved to be a most spirited and helpful general conference on "The Devotional Life of the Family. Mr. Turner pleaded for the return to the greatly neglected custom of daily family prayer and personal Bible reading. Many delegates contributed helpful suggestions.

One of the happiest series of conferences was that on "The Power of Personal Influence", led by President Bonsall on the three opening mornings. The Brotherhood's president has a quiet and persuasive way that has caused him to be well loved by all who know him, and his message is always a wholesome one, earnestly presented.

"All the afternoons for recreation" has been a slogan of the Convention prospectus, and our Brotherhood men and their friends have indeed enjoyed the wonders of this beautiful country-side. Swimming is up the river on a retired beach a mile away. Golf and tennis are near at hand. On Saturday afternoon a baseball game was played on the diamond in front of Marquard Hall, between the clergy and the laity, umpired by Bishop Davies. The laity won the game, and later won from the Juniors of the Convention; so it seems to have been the day of the laymen! Many long walks are being indulged in, the woods and mountains for miles around being generous in the matter of beautiful spots, some of them sightly, to which inviting woodland paths lead. Garnet Rock, a sightly ledge high above the Conference grounds, is one of these delightful spots, and is the Mecca for many delegates. Some thirty automobiles are parked beneath the trees of the Convention grounds—cars owned privately by those who have come in them from as far West as Chicago, and as far South as Richmond. It should be said they are parked only when not used in taking merry parties over the delightful country roads and through the woodland stretches, both up and down the Connecticut Valley.

The big Auditorium building, the main hall of the Convention, seating 2,400, has not only been sufficiently large to accommodate the considerable group of Brotherhood men, who have made up the nucleus of the Convention, but for the great evening meetings. We have been glad of its delightful and airy spaciousness. With its American flag over the speakers' platform, flanked on the one side by the National Service Flag of the Brotherhood and on the other by the Christian Flag, with its large or-

(Continued on page two)

SPECIAL NOTICE

Until further notice, which will follow in the course of two or three weeks, all communications intended for the news department and the Managing Editor of THE WITNESS should be addressed to Hobart, Indiana, the office of publication. The Rev. Charles J. Shutt, Managing Editor, has resigned from the Rectorship of St. John's Church, Mankato, Minn., and will hereafter devote a large part of his time to the paper, and be associated with the Rev. L. W. Applegate in the development of the Parish Leaflet Company. At present Mr. Shutt is in Chicago, where he will reside and open headquarters for THE WITNESS. An extended announcement of the new arrangement will be published the first week in September, when the paper will be enlarged to its usual size of eight pages.

Consecration Postponed

The Presiding Bishop gives notice that the order taken for the consecration of Archdeacon Demby, Suffragan Bishop-elect of Arkansas, on August 24, is revoked because of difficulties in securing attendance of Bishops.

The consecration will probably take place on St. Michael and All Angels' Day, September 29.

Rev. Dr. DuBose at Point of Death

Dean Emeritus of The University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.

The Rev. William P. DuBose, S. T. D., Dean Emeritus of the Theological Department of the University of the South, is lying dangerously ill at his residence in Sewanee, Tenn. It is feared that the last summons cannot be delayed for more than a few hours or days.

On Sunday, August 11, Dr. DuBose received the Holy Communion at the hands of Bishop Mikell of Atlanta, one of his "old boys".

He is now in the house where he lived when he first came to Sewanee, nearly half a century ago. His daughters, the Misses DuBose, and his son, the Reverend William Haskell DuBose, are with him.

Dr. DuBose is known for his published theological works, not only throughout the whole Anglican Communion, but among Christian scholars in many lands, Occidental and Oriental. To all Sewanee men, he is the living embodiment of the "Sewanee spirit". The influence of his life and thought, during the nearly completed half-century of his official connection with Sewanee, has been the dominant factor in shaping the ideals of that institution. Immensely transcending this sphere of influence, his interpretation of Christ's gospel has been a quickening and creative power, widely felt in the Christian thought of this age.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

Saint Bartholomew The Apostle August Twenty-fourth

By the Rev. Francis S. White

THE COLLECT

O Almighty and everlasting God, who didst give to thy Apostle Bartholomew grace truly to believe and to preach thy Word; Grant, we beseech thee, unto thy Church, to love that Word which he believed, and both to preach and receive the same; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Truly to believe" is the key that fits the lock of honest Christian living. No trifling with the articles of the Christian faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed; no faint-hearted muttering of those twelve simple statements in the congregation of the faithful. When doubt begins to fuss with the lock, begin to "preach the Word" by practicing those things you truly do believe. If the "Virgin Birth" causes your lips to tremble, show men that you do truly believe in God the Father. Preaching that Word will soon bring you into the heart of God's love and show you the necessity of Jesus Christ's advent. If the "Holy Ghost" is only a name, practice your faith in the Holy Catholic Church, and see how high and dry you will be landed, until the fact of the Lord and Giver of Life fills the Church and her sacraments and worship with light and joy and unction and life. Yes, indeed! truly to believe is the touchstone of true Christian living. And it is God who will help us to make our faith real, if we will only give Him the chance. "Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief." That verb "help" is the equivalent of the noun "grace", which we are taught to say God gave to St. Bartholomew. We are praying here for help to take God at His word. If we will offer God an honest and true heart, prejudice and self-deceit and guile will drop out of our life, and the Word of God will dwell in us richly, and we shall have joy in living the Christian life. "Take from me, O Lord, I pray Thee, all that hinders the reception of Thy Word; all pride and self-love, all worldliness and sensuality, all cowardice and disobedience."

"Grace to preach Thy Word." Preaching is of two kinds, audible and inaudible. Both are necessary, both are effective; but both will fail unless the preacher truly believes. And the inaudible preaching must correspond with the audible, otherwise we prove ourselves double-minded people, not of the tribe of Bartholomew. God expects us to go into all the world and preach. That is the Christian's duty, also his privilege. What we clerical and lay preachers often forget is that we cannot preach out of an empty soul. To have any persuasive power, our words and lives must be really and truly tied up to the Almighty and Everlasting God, in the belief that He will always help, always sustain, always back us up. Every missionary who believes this will be a successful preacher of the Word wherever he or she is placed.

"Grant unto Thy Church to love that Word." Love of the Bible is a good indication that one has caught the revelation which the Bible contains. When one can say from his heart, "The law of Thy mouth is dearer unto me than thousands of gold and silver". "Oh, how I love Thy law; all the day long is my study in it!" you may be confident that such an one is truly believing and preaching that Word. How do we stand this test? Do we rejoice in the revelation which God has made to men in His Word? Wise Bishop Hull, in this connection, says: "Rejoicing in this revelation, the Church cannot but desire to make others likewise partakers thereof." Is it not true that many of us admire God's Word rather than love it? Isn't it true that we own the Bible, and read the Bible, and study the Bible, boast about how many copies are yearly sold and given away, while all the time it is really a closed book. Love begets craving. If the Church loved God's Word, its members would crave that Word. If the Church loved Christ's sacraments, its members would crave those sacraments. If the Church loved Christ, its members would crave to do His will and keep His commandments. Let judgment begin with you and me in this house of God. How much of the burden and responsibility for seeking and saving that which is lost, which rested so heavily on Jesus Christ's shoulders, rests with like emphasis on our consciences? How anxious are we to preach and receive the Word which made a saint out of Bartholomew? How anxious are we to give others the like privilege? "Rejoicing in this revelation, the Church cannot but desire to make others likewise partakers thereof." If you or your parish or your diocese is cold about the mission work of the Church, is that not a rather good testimony to the fact that a lot of your enthusiasm for religion is a superficial, selfish, "put on" affair, rather than a genuine affair of the heart? Dear St. Bartholomew, pray Jesus Christ to give us the capacity to love His Word as thou didst love it, so we can preach and believe it as thou didst in thy day on earth!

FOR THE EPISTLE

By the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; (and they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch. And of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them. And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women.) Insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one.—Acts v:12.

"They were all with one accord in Solomon's porch." Missionary folks like to foregather with all kinds of people. The Church is for them an inspirational centre, and to it all are welcome who will stop, and look, and listen. "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us, and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son, Jesus Christ", said St. John in one of his letters. The Church should be a Solomon's porch for us who love the Lord Christ. There, if we gather together in His name, can we have fellowship with Him, for He has promised it, and He has never been caught breaking a promise. The joy of the porch meeting lay in the fact that they were all there "with one accord". Missionary folks should be the very first to promote unity of thought and action; they should be the very first to get the common point of view that "they all may be one" in purpose and action. People who see things, do things. If they see rightly, they do well; if their vision is distorted, they do ill. "By the hands of the Apostles were many signs and wonders wrought." Missionaries are people who do the apostolic work, and when they gather together they come as people of action, whose view point is focused on Jesus Christ and His great command. People who do not see the mission view point must find Church work most uninteresting; at least they themselves are most uninteresting to everybody but the infinitely patient One. The reason there are those who durst not join the ranks lies in the feeling that slackers cannot enjoy the company of workers—their view points are incompatible, as the lawyers say.

Just why the Church chose this chapter for the Epistle for St. Bartholomew's Day is not recorded in her archives; but one can learn this lesson from the record, namely, that the progress of God's work does not depend on any one man or woman, but it does depend on the co-operation of the "multitudes both of men and women" who believe. For crises, God always raises up a leader; but in the ordinary course of events, progress depends upon the whole company of people who are of one accord, and who love to do things for the good of the cause, and not for vainglory or self-advancement or self-advertisement. "Get the work done" is the rallying cry of such types of people who believe in what they are doing. When the work is done, Bartholomew's name will be on people's lips, but while they are in the thick of things Peter's shadow looms as the important thing, although the chronicler of the story inserts the words "at least", to make us think out things more clearly than we otherwise would.

Missionary work has to do with sick folk of all kinds. Those who see in a Church on earth only the elect, who can shut themselves in or sit in their pews in such a way that "of the rest durst no man join himself unto them", such folks are as far from having the mind of Christ as can possibly be imagined, for He came to call not the righteous, but sinners to repentance, and the Church is meant to be a place where all sorts and conditions of men come to be helped and healed. Also in the Church everything, even to a shadow, can be utilized to make heart-sick, head-sick, home-sick, body-sick people healed and healthy.

"The shadow of Peter passing by." St. Peter could have cast no shadow had he not stood in the sunlight. God has so arranged this world that when we utilize His gifts as He intended, our lives will reflect His healing touch. Literally and figuratively we can be wholesome folk by simply letting God work through us. I like to think of St. Bartholomew as being St. Peter's shadow. So closely did those Apostles live that one might be said to shadow another. It is not exegesis I am attempting here—just a fancy—but the fancy holds me. Men naturally are hero worshipers, and it is possible for Church people, standing close together in the light and life of the Son of God and Mary, to shadow some of the saints so closely that God's shining on them will include us also, and make our shadow, our influence, count for healing. God forgive us, God spare us and pity us if our shadows are of such a kind that they scorch and blight, instead of heal and help! Such results would indicate that we were not standing in the light of the love of God, but of some deadly imitation, which in turn brings us back to the thought that we are to pray to God to help us "truly to believe". "That ye may be sincere and without offense", prayed St. Paul for his friends. Sincere belief will correct so many false views, so much bad example, that this day's prayer should often be on our lips. Pray daily for grace to live a consistent life, so that your shadow, your deeds, your words, your thoughts, may help Jesus Christ fulfil His mission.

THE GOSPEL

And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth. Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.—St. Luke xxii:24.

"There was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest." Here crops out the age-long temptation which befalls every worker—to strive for a reputation. St. Bartholomew's Day is another notice from God that who a man is does not interest Him at all, in comparison with what a man is. Reputation concerns itself with peoples' names; character concerns itself with people's inner lives. In this day's Gospel Jesus says to us in so many words that titles (kings) and office (lordship) and doing good deeds (benefactors) are not to be the objects of our existence. Hence we infer they do not bulk as "first things" in the sight of the Maker of heaven and earth, who is the final judge of quick and dead, but that what God is really interested in is our appreciation of the fact that we are only one in the scheme of things (the younger) and that our business is to carry on the work (as he that doth serve). The man or woman who is in Church work for reputation is the one who aims to "sit at meat", who is frankly or secretly out for the title, or the office, or the benefactor's task. The man or woman whose heart is in the work for the work's sake is among the crowd as one who serves. In the promotion of any scheme there have to be those who sit at meat. There must be offices and office holders, and very, very often the right people get the proper offices; but it is a fact, nevertheless, that many people in Church work are often much more interested in the husk than in the kernel. The missionary society whose box is the biggest, and whose officers are most prominent at annual meetings, is not, for those reasons, apt to be the most helpful society in the parish or diocese. Those results may spring from parochial or diocesan pride rather than from the simple love and profound knowledge of the Christ and His Word. When a reputation has to be lived up to, there the seeds of strife can easily be sown. Hence the importance of being more concerned with obeying Christ's command than of being "accounted the greatest." When that day dawns, the Church will be in the way of doing what God expects and the world really wants her to do.

"Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations." The diocese, the parish, the individual that continues to fight the same temptations which Jesus fought in the wilderness, these are the ones who will find themselves doing king's work in a kingly way. The temptations are still here to satisfy personal needs, gratify temporal ambition, worship a Lucifer, instead of a Crucified One. Let us look out that we meet those temptations as the Master met them—by a remembrance of what is written in the Word. And to continue with Christ in His temptations we must love, and believe, and preach that word as Bartholomew did, and as countless others have done since his work on earth was finished.

"I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." The Church is no mid-air, misty thing—no invisible, intangible, metaphysical conception. It is a kingdom with officers, and tables, and judgment seats, and a routine life sustained by eating and drinking. But it is different from many organized associations of beings, in that its purpose is not to be ministered unto, but to minister; not to be a petty, isolated kingdom, but a universal kingdom; not to be a selection of the choice spirits, with an atmosphere of chill respectability and a reputation, but a gathering of those who need and of those who can help, all held together by the love of that Word which in honest and true hearts brings forth fruit to the glory of God.

Let us catch the vision St. Bartholomew's Day can teach. We need it in our individual and corporate lives. The history of the Church from one point of view is strewn with the corpses of those who strove for reputation, and achieved it, only to die of dry rot. Thank God, and bless God, the history of the Church from another angle is radiant with the lives of men and women whose deeds have not reflected glory on them, but on the Church and the Word, in which they believed so sincerely and wholeheartedly that multitudes both of men and women have been made whole and happy.

The judgment of the twelve tribes was not by word of mouth, but by example of life. The Lion of the Tribe of Judah did not raven like a wolf, and spoil and scatter, but He sacrificed His life and unified men by His life blood. Thus did He become King in a way which was a judgment on the ideas and ideals of the twelve tribes, showing them the glory of a vision which made the world a parish, and the parish a point of health-giving contact in the scheme to cover the earth with the knowledge of God as the waters cover the sea.

Rector of Large City Parish Works in Munition Plant

"Without any blare of trumpets, with no desire for self-advertising, soberly, modestly and silently, many Detroit, Mich., men of the cloth," says the Evening News of that city, "have divested themselves this summer of the livery of their order and gone forth to fit themselves for the work that lies before them. Nobody knew that the Rev. Paul Faude, Rector of one of the most fashionable Episcopal Churches of the city (St. Joseph's), had donned overalls and was working in a munitions plant, until a casual visitor to the plant happened to see him. The Rev. Mr. Faude is a man of giant physique—a splendid acquisition to any body of the world workers. Not only is he doing his bit, but he is gaining more first hand knowledge of the new world psychology in a week than he could gain in a year in the seclusion of his library."

Annual Convention Brotherhood of St. Andrew

An Inspiring Message From Northfield, Mass.

(Continued from page one)

gan to lead the singing, and with its great doors and windows open to the out-of-doors, it makes, in many respects the most delightful Convention hall the Brotherhood has ever had.

The first few days of the Convention have shown the wisdom of having for their conferences and night meetings this uncrowded place. Bishop McCormick, lately returned from overseas, held spellbound for an hour an audience that completely filled all but the gallery of the big hall, as he spoke to the topic, "The Church and the Nation", followed the next night by the Rev. Dr. Hopkins of Chicago, who talked of "The Church and Social Service", the audience being larger still.

"Round Top" is held in affectionate regard by all frequenters of Northfield. It is the little tree-covered mound adjoining the Auditorium, where are the graves of Mr. and Mrs. Moody. To this quiet and sacred spot some two hundred of the Brotherhood and their friends have gone each night at sundown for the "Round Top Meeting". Three capital addresses have already been given, with others to follow. The listeners gather on the grass, forming a horse-shoe group about the speaker, who stands near the base. A prayer is said to open, a hymn sung, and the speaker sounds each night a call to some form of Christian service. Those already making these addresses have been Mr. James H. Falconer of New York, on "The Reconsecration of Our Lives"; Mr. Leon C. Palmer, secretary of the Alabama Sunday School Association, on "The Call to Christian Work Among Boys", and Mr. Frederick S. Titsworth of Denver, on "The Call to Laymen for Service in the Church". These were all very direct appeals, hard to be resisted.

The Corporate Celebration of the Holy Communion brought together on Sunday morning a company of men that comfortably filled the nave of Sage Chapel. It was preceded on the night before by the Service of Preparation, at which the leader was the Rev. Charles LeV. Brine, Rector of Christ Church, Portsmouth, N. H., whose address made a deep impression. Bishop Davies was celebrant at the Corporate Communion, assisted by Bishop Olmsted of Central New York, Bishop Lloyd and Father Brine. It was a wonderful service, as the Brotherhood's Corporate Communion always is. The beautiful chapel, standing on the open campus, a silent witness, as it were, to the holy purposes of this fine girls' school, made an admirable place for our men in their annual joint gathering about the Lord's Table. And the Gloria in Excelsis was wonderful!

The Convention will continue until Wednesday, the 21st. A number of the Bishops, many of the clergy and an increasing number of laymen are enjoying what all unite in describing as one of the happiest and most profitable Brotherhood gatherings held in many years.

Church Kept Open During Summer

The custom of closing Trinity Church, Oshkosh, Wis., during hot weather has been abandoned this year. In support of the continuation of services throughout the summer, the Rev. Edwin W. Todd, Rector, says: "Going to church takes on a new meaning when we realize that the 'supporting trenches' reach back as far as the last pews in Trinity Church. We are taxed for every reserve of spiritual power and devotion we can muster in this day of days. It will be not simply lamentable, but tragic, if we fail now. The crisis of the war is probably coming this summer. Morale is impossible without religion, either 'over there' or 'over here'. Golf and automobiles won't do this summer on Sundays at 11 o'clock. To the colors, every one."

Dr. Manning, who is, by the way, greatly interested in the progress of THE WITNESS, has not been at the Sunday morning services in old Trinity since the last part of November, except Britain's Day, Aug. 4. He is busily engaged in the work among our soldiers at Camp Upton. "I am," he says, "still going on with my work there, and though we have many changes, the work is as interesting and as full of reality and inspiration as ever."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
L. W. APPLEGATE.....Publisher
JAMES SHEERIN GEORGE P. ATWATER HENRY J. MIKELL
FRANCIS S. WHITE JAMES WISE
EDWARD C. CHORLEY

Published every Saturday at Hobart, Ind., where all business communications should be addressed.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

ADVERTISING RATES

Three dollars an inch each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates revised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

5% for two months; 10% for three months; 15% for six months; 20% for twelve months.

All news matter, Diocesan and Parish papers, intended for THE WITNESS, should be sent to the Rev. Charles J. Shutt, 312 Warren Street, Mankato, Minn.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

EDITORIAL

Spiritual Forces

The balance of material things in the universe is maintained by that correlation of centripetal and centrifugal forces which permits neither to operate without the counterbalance of the other.

The same forces are at work in the spiritual world, and the lack of balance between them is responsible for much of the disintegration of the spiritual kingdom.

There is, and has been from the beginning of the Christian Church, a force which has attempted to emphasize the centralized idea of the Church.

Just as the Hebrews felt that to be a child of Abraham was enough to insure one's happiness and salvation, so in the early Church there was a strong party who desired to keep for themselves all the treasures of Christ, and looked with jealous eyes at the work of St. Paul in bringing in a host of Gentiles to share with the Hebrew Christians in the privileges of Christ's inheritance. This centripetal force was Hebraic in its origin, and represented a more or less static element in the early Church.

Then there were Grecianized Hebrews, who sympathized with the efforts to make Christianity a universal thing, that all men everywhere might participate in the promises of Christ.

Later on, these Grecian Christians ran counter to the more conservative elements in the Church, and fathered schools of thought of a most liberal character. This force became a strong centrifugal force, trying more and more to break down all barriers between the Church and society.

Unfortunately, these two forces have usually been antagonistic to one another in the ecclesiastical sphere, and have had very little sympathy with each other's position, whereas each sorely needs the other to counterbalance its own destructive tendency.

So far as I know, the Episcopal Church is the only ecclesiastical organization in modern times in which each tolerates the other sufficiently to include it in communion with itself.

Of course, the High Churchman represents the centripetal force and the Broad Churchman the centrifugal force in the religious world. Let us study the two and see the excellent thing for which each party is striving and how incomplete and inconclusive each is without the other.

For what is the High Churchman striving? Is it not for the preservation of the household of faith? He is very jealous of any one who would tear down the walls of Zion or invade the secret places of the sacred mysteries.

For what is the Broad Churchman striving but to give the good things of Christ to all the world, so that nobody may be deprived of that which Christ bequeathed to all men?

Now these two forces, instead of being mutually antagonistic to one another, are rather the complement of one another.

If we had no one but the High, the Church would become a rather narrow and exclusive ecclesiastical hierarchy, as the Roman Church in Italy has become. It would have very little in common with the state, and would be in no sense a leaven of society.

On the other hand, were the Broad Churchmen to have control of the Church, they would soon dissipate the faith and destroy the fabric which has preserved the same.

As I once said to a Broad Churchman, "Why do you not stand in the front door of your home every day and invite the passers-by in to dinner? Because you would destroy the sanctity of your home, and would bring up your children in a restaurant, instead of in a home. On the other hand, if you are so exclusive in your home as never to entertain any one but your own family circle, you will have a very narrow vision of life."

It is the High Churchman tugging to keep the sanctity of the home, and the Broad Churchman, tugging to let everybody in, that results in a fair principle of comprehension without an entire sacrifice of the edifice and its home life.

By the resultant operation of the two forces we get a balance which is comprehensive, without being too exclusive or too inclusive.

I do not know which is most needed today—that the Episcopal Church should have a more comprehensive program, or that the American people should have a more reverent conception of God and of the honor due unto His sanctuary.

I must confess that after several weeks of experience in various interdenominational meetings, in which I have tried to get their view point, I am not particularly impressed with their religious fervor. It seems so dependent upon having some one constantly to stir the waters that it lacks the value of a permanent character. On the other hand, I am most painfully conscious that no Yankees in the court of King Arthur could be more entirely oblivious of the sacred fitness of things. Strange, but the whole thing, as I have seen it staged, seems to lack any particular charm for which I would be willing to trade the atmosphere of our own services. An automobile that has to be so constantly cranked may be more exciting, but is certainly less satisfactory than one that starts and goes along without so much fuss.

And I am inclined to think, too, that those who do the starting are much more fussy about it than our own clergy, and far less effective in the devotional results.

But, on the other hand, I do not find, on close association with them, anything particularly for us to be afraid of, and I cannot for the life of me see why, without sacrificing those things which we hold dear, we should not seize every opportunity in which to impart to them such things as they need (and of which they are not aware), and for them to impart to us certain dynamic energies (of which I fear many of us are also not aware), and which we sorely need. In short, denominationalism is seeking, and some of them are rather cross about it, a centripetal force, and we are rather needing a centrifugal one; and while it may be a long time before these forces can be reconciled, they can at least come closer together than they are now without wrecking the machine.

But only on one basis, I believe. As a competitive denomination, the Church is a dismal failure. It is a good deal like Aesop's fable of the man and the ass. If we go on at all, it should be with the distinct understanding that we are not going to ask them to adopt our methods, and we are not going to abandon ours. The present approach is not one of Church unity, but of friendly intercourse, in which each must respect the domicile of the other. I do not believe that exchanging pulpits does any more good than exchanging fathers would help two families to live under the same roof.

If they want me to preach in their pulpits I am willing, but am under no illusion. As long as our canon law remains as it is, I cannot reciprocate, and I know of no particular reason why I should.

Let us preserve the sanctity of our home, but let us not be so hide-bound that we fail utterly to know that we have any neighbors, and, realizing that we have neighbors, let us be on as friendly terms as the circumstances will admit, even if their fathers did have a quarrel with ours.

But that is a very different thing from interchange of pulpits, and communions, and platforms. The former we can do with genuine friendliness—the latter is rather of the nature of pretense. For we do not change the facts by pretending that there is no difference—we just indulge in euphemistic platitudes. We do differ from them, and differ most radically, as they are very quick to see, and are not at all inclined to pass over. For example, they expect you to join with them in an ecclesiastical squat at their services, and they haven't the slightest intention of kneeling at yours. Any basis of union services will be on their terms, not ours, nor even an alternate use. We are far more apt to conform to their standards than they are to ours, even though we may admire their forms just as little as they do ours.

Church unity today is an irridescent dream, whatever it may be tomorrow; but it is a far better world if we are friendly one with another, and for the life of me I cannot see why not. And I plead not for a merger which is bound to dissolve itself, nor for a program in which each party has an ulterior motive, but rather that we may be friendly, if for no other motive than to make this a better world than it would be if we went on misunderstanding one another.

An Explanation

In an article concerning the retirement of Dr. Geer, Vicar of St. Paul's Chapel, New York City, which we quoted in a recent issue from the New York Times, there were one or two items in error. Referring to the time when St. Paul's was built, the article asserts that "it, rather than Trinity Church, at the head of Wall Street, was the place of worship of the officials of the English city". This is not quite historically correct. For twelve years Trinity Church was in ruins from fire. This was during the Washington period, and it was for this reason alone that Washington attended St. Paul's instead of Trinity. During this period, and until Trinity could be rebuilt, St. Paul's Chapel was used as the parish church.

The statement that "the Vicar who now retires solved the problem of staying rather than moving away" is also quite contrary to the fact. When this point was referred to Dr. Manning, the present Rector of Trinity, he referred admiringly to "the splendid work" of Dr. Geer, but added that any claim that there was even a thought of moving away was quite mistaken. "There never was in the remotest way," he declared, "any question of going or staying in connection with St. Paul's Chapel—and there could not be any such question any more than with Trinity itself. Both Trinity and St. Paul's are historic and national shrines, and the very thought of moving either of them would be impious. So far as I know, no one has ever suggested such a thing. The writer of this item must, I think, have had St. Paul's confused in his mind with St. John's."

In this expression, Dr. Manning is as zealous as all New Yorkers of intelligence are. They would be more shocked over the idea of removing, or in any way damaging, Trinity and St. Paul's than the world was because of the attack on the Cathedral at Rheims.

Activities of the G. F. S.

Various activities of the Girls' Friendly Society in the Diocese of New York are being continued during the summer. Many Branches are open for meetings. Through the kindness of Miss Chapin in allowing her school to be used again this season by our girls, Red Cross work, classes in French, lectures on current events have attracted large numbers of girls. There are recreation evenings and Saturday night dances with soldiers and sailors. The large yard of the school is a cool and attractive place for gatherings of young people. The war work of the Girls' Friendly shows itself in many branches of the Red Cross, with an auxiliary of the New York chapter at headquarters now in Miss Chapin's school. Many of the girls belong to the Girls' Patriotic Service League, and the society is represented in the War Camp Community Service by a secretary at New Rochelle. Another secretary will soon be sent to a near-by town, this last being made possible by assistance from the War Commission of the Church.

The Advent Call of the Woman's Auxiliary has received the formal cooperation of the G. F. S., the Girls' Friendly, as an organization, deciding to take part in this great call to united prayer during the first week in Advent. Miss Warren has kindly promised to address the girls on this subject Sept. 24, 1918.

—ST. ALBAN'S SCHOOL—
KNOXVILLE, ILL.
For Church Boys and Others.
Certificate admits to University.
Moderate Rates for Board and Tuition. Write the Rector:
REV. L. B. HASTINGS
117 N. Peoria Street, Chicago

BRECK SCHOOL 2095 Commonwealth Avenue,
ST. PAUL, MINN.
Located in St. Anthony Park, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, possessing the advantage of access to both. One block from the campus of the Agricultural Department of the University. Offers a complete High School course, and will fit students for any college. Students of the University may register for work in religious subjects. Terms very moderate. Apply to Rev. C. E. Haupt, Superintendent.

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY
Sewanee, Tennessee, 2,300 feet elevation in the Cumberland Mountains. Ideal health conditions. Broadest certificate privileges. Highest rating War Department. Best moral and social influences. Owned and controlled by the twenty Southern Dioceses of the Episcopal Church. For catalogue Address the Superintendent.

Virginia Episcopal School
(LYNCHBURG, VA.)
For boys of character, position and ability, whose means will not permit them to attend our more expensive schools. Prepares at cost for college, university or immediate entrance upon the duties of life. Made possible by gifts of founders. Special terms to clergymen. Boarders for the present are limited to seventy-eight. One hundred and six acres of land. The session begins September 19, 1918. Apply for information and catalogue to the Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Rector.
Rev. Thomas Kinloch Nelson, Vice Rector.

National Cathedral School
A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof building in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College certificate privilege. Music, Art, Advanced, and Special Courses.
THE BISHOP OF WASHINGTON,
President of the Board of Trustees
JESSIE C. McDONALD, M. S., Principal
HELEN L. WEBSTER, Ph. D.,
Academic Head
141t Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Cathedral School for Girls
ORLANDO, FLORIDA
High class Boarding and Day School. College Preparatory and General Courses. Capable Teachers. Careful Home Life. Delightful Climate. Low Rates.
Rev. Roderick P. Cobb, Rector.
19th year opens Oct. 2.

Racine College
RACINE, WISCONSIN
A Church School for your boy. Academy and Junior College.
B. Talbot Rogers, M. A., D. D., Warden.

—THE— HANNAH MORE ACADEMY
Simplicity and Excellence
Maryland Church School for Girls. Catalogue. Reisterstown, Md.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelin, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE".
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind in America.
Address:
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls' College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President.
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal.

HOWE SCHOOL A thorough preparatory school for a limited number of well-bred boys. For illustrated circulars, address the Rector,
REV. JOHN H. McKinzie, D. D.,
Box W. Howe, Indiana.

Berkeley Divinity School
Middletown, Conn.
Address REV. WILLIAM PALMER LADD, Dean

THE OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Teabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918. 8-10-13

Porter Military Academy
A National School A CHURCH SCHOOL Founded 1867
242 boys from 25 States and four foreign countries. Preparation for college or business by sympathetic tutoring and under the strongest influences for Christian manhood. Habits of obedience, promptness, cleanliness and self-reliance are inculcated by the strict but stimulating military discipline. An R. O. T. C. School. Mild, healthful climate permits out of door sports all year around. Gymnasium and swimming pool Unusually liberal terms. A broader preparation that the public school can give. A Lower School for smaller boys.
Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Rector
Box 604, Charleston, S. C.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

Girl Scouts of St. James' Church, Chicago, to the number of thirty-five, accompanied by Miss Caroline McIlvain, enjoyed an extended outing at Fish Creek, an island in Green Bay, having earned the necessary funds for their vacation picking fruit.

St. John's Church, Far Rockaway, L. I., has practically given over its parish house for Red Cross work. Surgical dressings are made there daily, and on one evening a week, and first aid classes meet there two evenings a week. The parish's Service Flag has sixty-six stars, one of which is gold.

Six days and six nights of continuous bombardment, and the women canteen workers of the Red Cross stationed at Epernay, south of Rheims, stayed at their posts feeding and caring for the wounded soldiers.

There are 105 men in war service from St. Paul's Church, Chicago. The Rector, the Rev. G. H. Thomas, has volunteered as chaplain for a Red Cross unit, and the organist, John A Richardson, has gone overseas as a musical director under the Y. M. C.A. The parish has contributed $1,000 to the Church War Commission.

"Two new linen albs have arrived from England, where they were purchased by the Guild a couple of months ago," says Trinity Parish News, Fort Wayne, Ind. "The price of these vestments, ready-made, is less than the material costs here. There was a small remittance for overpayment in the form of perfectly good U. S. three-cent stamps! We wonder where they got them?"

The Synod of the Eighth Province (Province of the Pacific) will be held at Seattle, Wash., in Trinity and St. Mark's Churches, Sept. 5-8. The Province consists of the Dioceses of Olympia, Oregon, Sacramento, California, Los Angeles, and the Missionary Districts of Idaho, Utah, Spokane, Eastern Oregon, Nevada, San Joaquin, Alaska, Honolulu, and the Philippine Islands. Bishop Nichols of California is president of the Synod and the Rev. Alfred Lockwood of Spokane is the secretary.

Christ Church, Portsmouth, N. H., was the scene of another notable service on Sunday, Aug. 4th, in recognition of the fifth anniversary of the entrance of our allies into the war. The service was a requiem Eucharist, choral, and sermon by the Rector, the Rev. C[illegible] Brine. The procession consisted [illegible] thurifer, crucifer, torch bearers, the clergy, trumpeters, choir boys, flag, choir men, the colors with guards, military and naval detachments. There were over 300 men, soldiers, sailors and marines, in attendance. The French divisional chaplain of marines represented France. Great Britain was represented by officers and Greece and Italy by civilians. A chaplain of the Knights of Columbus was also present. The service was Maunder in G. At the close of the service a volley was fired outside the church and taps sounded inside, and the clergy, acolytes and standard-bearers gathered before the Altar while the organ and trumpeters played "The Star Spangled Banner".

Christmas and Easter Day appear in the new Calendar published by the Chicago Church Federation Council, and sent to over 1,000 pastors of that city. It is a source of no little gratification and encouragement that the whole Christian world is coming to appreciate more and more the need of a due religious observance of the principal events of our blessed Lord's life. The Managing Editor of THE WITNESS recalls a sermon which he heard preached at Memphis, Tenn., many years ago, by the late Dr. Talmage of the Brooklyn Tabernacle on "Religious Intolerance", in the course of which the eminent divine stated that his saintly mother rebuked him, when a small boy, because he insisted upon tarrying before the open doors of an Episcopal church, enraptured by the beautiful music and floral decorations. "They are observing," said his mother, "that pagan day, Easter."

St. Andrew's Cross announces that "four more men of the Church have for the time given up business and joined the colors. They enlist in the service of the Nation, the Church and the Brotherhood. They represent the strong and active men of the Church". They are Percy Talbot of Grace Church, Muskogee, Okla., general agent of the traffic department of one of the railroads; Wm. Evans, organist and choir director in Grace Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Alexander Hamilton of St. Paul's Parish, Indianapolis, Ind., a vestryman, delegate to the Diocesan Convention and director of his Brotherhood Chapter; Prof. Samuel B. Hemingway of Christ Church, New Haven, Conn., assistant professor of English at Yale University.

In Trinity Church, New York City, the August 4th service was commemorative of Great Britain's entry into the war. On July 28th there was also a service of extraordinary interest, when 350 Australians, on the way to the front, attended the 11 o'clock service in Trinity. Their chaplain, the Rev. H. H. Cole, preached, and they were entertained at luncheon by the ladies in charge of Trinity Canteen. At Evensong, 3:30, twenty-eight of these men were confirmed by Bishop Burch. By these tokens, a few among many, it will be seen that Trinity is still doing her part in making world history.

Personals

Rev. O. F. Crawford formerly of Belleme, Ohio, now chaplain of the 310th trains, headquarters and military police has arrived safely over seas.

The Rev. F. H. Handsfield, Rector of the Church of the Atonement, Brooklyn, has accepted a call to the Church of the Ascension, Rockville Centre, L. I.

The Rev. Allen Greene, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Peabody, Mass., has accepted a call to St. John's Church, West Hoboken, N. J., and will take up his new duties the first of October.

Mr. F. Lyle Searing, vestryman, Sunday school superintendent and parish treasurer of St. John's Church, Mankato, Minn., has been accepted for war service by the Young Men's Christian Association, and expects to report for duty the first of October.

Bishop Burleson of South Dakota gave the address at a patriotic rally and community service held in the Coliseum at Sioux Falls, S. D., on Sunday evening, Aug. 18. His subject was "Orthodox Religion and the War".

The Rev. H. S. Osborn of Elizabeth City, N. C., assumed charge of St. James' Church, Petersburg, Va., on the first Sunday of this month, to serve during the indefinite leave of absence granted the Rev. E. P. Dandridge, who is serving as a chaplain in the army.

Bishop Parker of New Hampshire, as chaplain of the State Guard, with rank of captain, was in camp with four battalions of the Guard from four different points in the state during the month of July and held daily services, with short addresses, and made a very real place for himself in the lives of the men.

The Rev. Adelbert J. Smith of Seaford, L. I., has resigned his charge there, and on Sept. 1 will become resident chaplain at the Kingston Avenue Hospital for Contagious Diseases, Brooklyn, with special work for the sailors and soldiers who are patients there.

The Rev. John G. Hatton, Assistant Rector of St. Mark's Church, Portland, Oregon, has been unanimously elected Rector of the parish by the vestry, to succeed, Sept. 1st, the Rev. J. E. H. Simpson, who tendered his resignation to the vestry several weeks ago on account of declining health.

The Church of St. Mark, Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, L. I., has elected to its Rectorship the Rev. Arthur L. Charles, who has been locum tenens there since April 1st last. The Rev. Mr. Charles was previously assistant at Christ Church, Glen Ridge, N. J., and prior to that ministered in Canada, of which country he is a native. The Bishop has approved the election and Mr. Charles has accepted it.

A Notable Anniversary

On Sunday, Aug. 4th, the Rev. Dr. John Wright, Rector Emeritus of St. Paul's-on-the-Hill, St. Paul, Minn., commemorated the thirty-first anniversary of his connection with St. Paul's Parish. For nearly twenty-seven years of that time he was Rector, and in the last years of his rectorship was responsible for the removal of the parish from its old location in Lower Town to its present location on Summit Avenue, in the heart of the most rapidly growing residence section of the city, where the present stately edifice was erected.

In accordance with an established custom in the parish, Dr. Wright preached his annual sermon at the high celebration. Choosing as his text the words, "Beginning at Jerusalem" (St. Luke xxiv:47), the venerable Rector Emeritus delivered a message of unusual hope and encouragement for the present day. His theme was the historical and religious significance of the recapture of Jerusalem by the British. The presence of a number of friends and former parishioners of Dr. Wright made the occasion very happy and impressive. Among those present at the service was Mr. Edward Kopper, one of two surviving members of the vestry who in 1887 called Dr. Wright to St. Paul's Parish.

In a speech of welcome and congratulation, preceding the sermon, the present Rector of St. Paul's Parish, the Rev. E. H. Eckel, Jr., read letters from the Bishop of Minnesota, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of St. Paul, the Governor of the state, and the Mayor of St. Paul, all of them testifying to the love and esteem with which Dr. Wright is held in the community at large. Short excerpts from the letters follow:

Bishop McElwain: "I am sure that the joy must be uppermost in your mind as you look back upon those years of complete and faithful devotion, filled with good works, and crowned with the building of the beautiful new church. * * * A ministry like yours is all too rare today, and, as your Bishop, I want you to know how deeply we all appreciate it and its fruitfulness."

Archbishop Ireland: "Meeting you is always a charm, and I cannot but pray the Lord leave you on earth many years to come, and when the final day arrives, may you, with fullness of truth and divine affection, advance confidently towards the portals of the skies. Life is hurrying away from all of us. May every step we make be worthy of the smiles of the good Lord, whom to please is the sole object of life."

Governor Burnquist: "While you have been officially connected with this Church you have been directly and indirectly serving and ministering to all of the people of St. Paul. You have done much for the promotion of the spiritual and moral life of this city, and the people of St. Paul owe you a debt of gratitude for what you have done."

Mayor Hodgson: "In the years that Dr. Wright has labored in St. Paul his influence has blessed and helped thousands of human beings, made the human pathway clearer to those who have been in doubt, left cheer and courage in hearts that have struggled with sorrow and disappointment. He has been human, he has been kindly and, most of all, he has kept burning nightly before the people of this community the torch of hope, and his own life has glowed with the wonder of eternal meanings."

The Rev. Harry Lee Virden of Grace Church, Winfield, Kansas, was appointed as a voluntary chaplain at Camp Funston, effective June 1, 1918. He may be addressed "3rd Regiment, 164th Depot Brigade, Camp Funston, Kansas".

The Rev. Mr. Sidders, Rector of Grace Church, Wabasha, Minn., is "doing his bit" by actively engaging in scout work. As Scoutmaster of a troop of over 30 boys. he finds his spare time pretty full. The troop is the honor one of the county, coming out on top in recent Liberty Loan drives.

The Rev. Howard Codey, a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, who has been engaged in missionary work in the Diocese of Tennessee during his diaconate, was advanced to the priesthood at the Church of the Advent, Nashville, on Sunday, Aug. 4. Bishop Gailor officiated, and the Rev. Prentice A. Pugh, Rector of the Church of the Advent, the Rev. Thomas Dyke and the Rev. A. C. Killeffer assisted in the service.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

By G. W. J.

Those who keep track of the nations—something like a quarter of a hundred now—that are allied to blot out the Prussian menace must not fail to add the Onondagas to the list. They may not send an army of their own, for it is simpler to cooperate with their ally, the United States, but they add an interesting paragraph to their romantic history when they met around the council fire the other day and formally drew up a declaration of war against Germany. For the Onondagas, be it known, cherish proudly the tradition that they are an independent nation. A treaty they made with George Washington in 1783 made them so, and the treaty stands unrevoked and unbroken. More interesting still is it that they have their own grievance against Germany, namely, the indignities visited by German authorities on some members of the tribe who were traveling through that country with a circus before the war began. If they have been slow to act, let it be recalled that the Onondagas were a peaceful tribe of old, unlike the Mohawks and the Senecas, who were with them in the Iroquois Confederacy, and who had the frontiers to defend, while the Onondagas dwelt in the interior. But they were the official guardians of the council fire of the league, and when they sat around it, words of wisdom and justice were spoken. Washington gives out word that fully 6,000 Indians are with the colors on land and sea—good Americans all of them. Berlin has confessed the valor of the Sioux. There are gold stars on the Service Flag before the chapel on the Passamaquoddy reservation in Eastern Maine. The Onondaga braves who go to avenge the wrongs their tribal brethren suffered at German hands will fight under the same flag that Choctaws, Menominees and Osages have enlisted under, but they will not thereby abrogate their rights as members of a free and independent nation.

The Rev. James Jackson, D. D., who died on April 22nd, was for seventeen years president of Boone University. Dr. Jackson came to China from England in 1876, and lived at first at Hankow. After about two years he went to the United States, where he was engaged in mission work among the Chinese in New York City. He returned to China in 1882, under the Methodist Board, and worked in Wuhu and Kinkiang. At Wuhu he and his wife were at first almost the only foreigners in residence. In 1900 he left the Methodist mission and joined the Episcopal Church. In 1901 he was put in charge of Boone School, Wuchang, which was just developing into a college. Under his able management, it developed into Boone University, and while standards were steadily raised, the members increased from 100 to over 300.

Bishop Graves has sent to the Board of Missions a number of copies of the first triennial report of the Board of Missions of the Chinese Church to the Synod held in Shanghai in April. The Bishop asks that friends in this country who would like to have a copy of the report send not less than 10 cents in payment for it. Copies may be ordered from the Literature Department, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York,—Notes from Spirit of Missions.

"I hate them all!" said old Gaspard,
And in his weather-beaten face
The lines of bitterness grew hard;
For he had seen his dwelling-place
Laid waste in very wantonness,
And all his little treasures flung
Into that never-sated press
From which no wine, but gall, had sprung.
And not alone his heart was sore,
For in his frail old limbs he bore
Wounds of the heavy, ruthless hand
That weighed so cruelly of late
Upon the people and the land.
It was not hard to understand
Why old Gaspard should hate
Even the German lad who lay
His neighbor in the hospital—
The boy who pleaded night and day:
"Don't let me die! Don't let me die!
When I see the dawn I know
I shall live out that day, and then
I'm not afraid—till dark—but, oh,
How soon the night comes round again!
Don't let me die! Don't let me die!"
The old man muttered at each low,
Pitiful, half-delirious cry,
"They should die, had I the say,
In hell's own torment, one and all!"
And then would drag himself away,
Despite each motion's agony,
To where the wounded poilus lay,
And cheer them with his mimicry
Of barnyard voices, and his gay
Old songs of what life used to be.
One night the lad suddenly cried:
"Mother!" And though the sister knew—
He was so young, so terrified—
"You're safe—the east is light! she lied.
But "No!" he sobbed, "the cock must crow
Before the dawn!" They did not hear
A cripple crawl across the floor;
But all at once, outside the door,
In the court yard, shrill and clear,
Once, twice and thrice, chanticleer crew.
The blue eyes closed and the boy sighed:
"I'm not afraid, now day's begun;
I'll live—till——" With a smile he died.
And in that hour when he denied
The god of hate, I think that One
Passed through the hospital's dim yard,
And, turning, looked on old Gaspard.

—Amelia Josephine Burr, in Everybody's.

"Going Over" is the name of a new weekly publication, distributed free to every soldier in the American embarcation camps, by the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. Its publication has been made possible by the generosity of the management of the Brooklyn Eagle in donating their printing plant free for the purpose, and the self-sacrificing service of the men in the mechanical departments of the Daily Eagle. Its columns are alive with inspiring items of news, editorials and other reading matter inclined to strengthen the morale of the soldiers as they leave the home land.

Collegiate School, Military for Boys, Denver, Colo.

All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations. Adress REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

A SAFE and ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Women's Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY.
MRS. GUTGESELL'S CHRISTMAS NOVELTY GIFT BOOK
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
NO INVESTMENT SPLENDID PROFITS
For information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

SHATTUCK SCHOOOL

Has behind it the Experience, Traditions and Ideals of fifty years. ¶Is a College Preparatory School with military drill and discipline under U. S. War Dep't. Reserve Officers' Training Corps. ¶In Grounds, Building and equipment is equaled by but few schools. "The school is full for 1918-1919. Enrollment should be made now for 1919-20."

Box 452. Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn.

SETTLEMENT TRAINING SCHOOL

LA GRANGE SETTLEMENT LA GRANGE, GA.

A PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH TRAINING SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL WORKERS

Courses in Settlement Nursing, Kindergarten Work, and special course of one year in Church and Social Work for graduates.

REV. R. T. PHILLIPS, Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II, NO. 87 | HOBART, INDIANA, AUGUST 31, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

THE AMERICAN CHURCH IN PARIS— ITS MEANING—ITS NECESSITIES

The Rev. George P. Atwater

(I wish to commend to all readers of THE WITNESS the following articles concerning the work of the American Church in Paris. Dr. S. N. Watson, who has been Rector of the American Church since January, 1913, was formerly Rector of St. Paul's Church, Akron, Ohio. Those of us who learned to know both Dr. and Mrs. Watson so well realized how fortunate were both our Church and nation to have them at that great center of Christianity during these soul-trying years. Dr. Watson is a man of brilliant attainments, and has commanded the admiration and respect of the leaders of France By their devotion to the sufferers, both Dr. and Mrs. Watson have earned the gratitude not only of the peoples whom they so abundantly served, but of our own people. In the midst of so many calls, of whose value we may not be able to learn, at first hand, let us not overlook this appeal of our own representative, the man who has been immersed in the work, and who is as much qualified as any living American to interpret the needs of France to our American Church.

GEORGE P. ATWATER.)

Our American Church in Paris is in serious financial straits. The Rev. S. N. Watson, D. D., who was actively in charge of the Church until the 1st of April, 1918, and who is at present its Rector Emeritus, is in America for rest and a recuperation of health and strength, after six years of foreign service and four years of war work.

Dr. Watson is charged by the vestry with the mission of explaining to the friends of the Church in Paris its needs, and of securing the necessary funds for its maintenance. He has just received a letter, dated June 13th, from the Finance Committee of the vestry, which refers to a recent meeting of the vestry called to consider the financial situation, and which says: "At the meeting the melancholy fact emerged that since your departure the source of incoming contributions has been thereby dried up." The letter then goes on "to express the hope that we may still rely on you to help us with your appeal for the Church." And Dr. Watson's mission to this end has also been emphasized by a letter from the Rt. Rev. Dr. Israel, Bishop in charge of the European Churches, which was published some time since in American papers.

In order to make plain why it is our right and duty to make an earnest appeal to American friends for support of the Church in Paris, something of the past history of the Church must be told.

The present building was built in 1884, the parish house a little before that date, and the rectory was completed in 1913, the whole of the real property representing an expenditure of a million and a quarter of dollars, and it could not be reproduced today for twice that sum. It is the representative American building on the continent of Europe, this beautiful, cathedral-like church, and every American may be proud of it. Thirty thousand American travelers used to pass through its doors every year in the old days, and its mortuary chapel has been the inn which has housed temporarily the bodies of more than eight hundred Americans of every religious confession; and for the living or the dead, the hospitalities of that church in the Avenue de l'Alma were freely offered to all who would have them; and many are those who remember its grateful shelter when their hearts were heavy and they needed a place of rest.

The natural question arises, How, then, does such a Church, with such a property, find itself in financial need? The answer is easy—changing conditions of the American colony in Paris; no endowment to speak of and, lastly, the war. But really the war is but a minor incident; the same appeal would have been necessary, and the war has only aggravated and accentuated the condition. The Church always lived from hand to mouth, and in later years has always faced a deficit. When Dr. Watson took charge of the Church as its minister, there was an annual deficit to face, estimated at forty thousand francs a year. Some generous friends agreed to provide for that deficit for two years. Before the two years expired, the war was on, and since the war began, generous friends have not ceased to make provision for the Church's necessities by gifts sent to Dr. Watson, so that he can record with gratitude the fact that after four years of war, and the financial stress accompanying it, the Church today has not a cent of debt, and the invested funds are larger than when he took charge of the work, while he and Mrs. Watson have been enabled to distribute each year, in relief given in the name of American Christianity, a sum more than twice as large as that expended on the maintenance of the Church itself. Therefore the appeal made by the war itself has, up to now, rendered the support of the Church somewhat easier, because it was realized that the Church must go on, if its manifold ministrations are to continue, and the gifts sent from everywhere to Dr. Watson enabled him to supplement the scanty resources provided by the invested funds, which are the sole permanent revenue of the Church. This permanent revenue amounts to less than 10,000 francs per year, and in normal times the expenditure of the Church was about 140,000 francs a year. Since the war began, every possible expense has been cut off. There is but one assistant minister, where there were three; the choir school is closed, and the choir boys have been sent back to England; but for all that the expense is heavy. The actual maintenance of a building plant which represents an expenditure of a million of dollars is in proportion to its size and cost. The cost of heating is enormous, and the fires must be kept in the furnace, or the apparatus will be ruined, for it is old, and the water cannot be drawn from the pipes, and if they were to freeze a great damage would result, which would be irreparable.

Now, in normal times, the income of the Church was a stool which rested on three legs. One was the pew rent; another was the sum received in the offerings at public worship, and the third was the result of the gifts of generous friends who were traveling abroad, who, knowing the necessities of the Church, helped largely in its maintenance.

As to the pew rent: Before the war, one had to wait from two to four months, sometimes longer, to have a desirable sitting. Now, two-thirds of them are to be had. They have been given up. Their former holders are no longer there—hence a serious loss, and one which goes on increasing. The offerings are less than half what they used to be, and that is again a decreasing factor. And as for the gifts of generous American friends traveling abroad—unfortunately, in these days Americans are not traveling abroad for pleasure, with money in plenty to give to the Church. It is evident, then, that the normal income has been more than cut in half, at the best; and, unfortunately, the expenses cannot be cut proportionately, for those who serve the Church must live, and every item of living expense has more than doubled in Paris, and every material necessity has also proportionately increased in price; and, as has been seen, the income from investment is a negligible factor—it is so small in proportion to the need.

The Church is at present under the direct charge of Bishop Israel, Bishop of the European Churches, and the services are being provided by temporary ministrations, under his direction, the Rev. Dr. Beckman of the American Soldiers and Sailors' Club of Paris being the locum tenens. It is but right to say that the Rector Emeritus, Dr. Watson, receives no stipend whatsoever from the Church during his absence from Paris.

(To be continued)

Bishop Davies to Go to France

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Davies, Bishop of Western Massachusetts, has been asked by the War Council of the Y. M. C. A. to represent them overseas with the American Expeditionary Forces in special service. The Bishop is not at liberty to give the date of his departure, nor the duration of his stay abroad, further than to say that he expects to sail within a few weeks and to be back at work in his own diocese early in the new year. The exact nature of his work cannot be determined until he reaches Paris, as conditions at the front change so rapidly and suddenly. At the headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. in New York it is expected that the Bishop will be sent along the line, visiting the huts in the various camps and billets, and addressing the troops. He has already had some experience in preaching and ministering at the military camps and cantonments in New England. Over a thousand men from the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Western Massachusetts have gone to the colors, and Bishop Davies will be glad to get as near as he can to his own boys. The Governor of Massachusetts has sent by him a verbal message of affectionate greeting to the Massachusetts men overseas.

Should be Forced to Take a Vacation

In an interesting and lengthy report of a "Committee to Investigate Clerical Salaries", Diocese of Maryland, commenting upon clerical vacations, the committee says: "Many of the clergy state that they have a vacation, but that they do not take it, regularly or in full. The explanation usually is either that the minister is unable to finance a real vacation, or that the taking of a vacation would involve the closing of his church or churches. One rector of a country parish reports ten days' vacation in eight years; others have worse records. Some of the clergy pride themselves on never taking a vacation, and for these over-zealous brethren your committee has more pity than sympathy. The average clergyman, for the good of all concerned, ought to be forced out of his parish, if need be, at least a month every year."

Priest Killed in the Battle of the Marne

The Rev. Arthur P. Kelley, 37 years of age, formerly Rector of Grace Church, Tecumseh, Neb., was recently killed in action in France. He gave up his parish work at the outset of the war and enlisted as a private in the United States army. At the time of his death he was first sergeant in the 193rd Ambulance Corps, 101st Sanitary Train. He enlisted at Farmington, Mass. His first field duty was on the Mexican border. He was killed in the battle of the Marne.

A FEAST OF GOOD THINGS

The Annual Convention of the Brotherhood

(Continued from last week)

Our account of the Brotherhood Convention at East Northfield, Mass., in last week's issue of THE WITNESS brought us to the close of the annual Corporate Communion, celebrated in Sage Chapel. It had been a question among those managing the Convention whether the later service at 10:30 might better be held in the small chapel also, rather than in the great auditorium, where it was planned. The decision to hold the service in the auditorium proved a wise one, for the ground floor of the noble building was filled with a congregation numbering over 1,500, for which the chapel, seating but 1,000, would have been wholly inadequate. The big Congregational church of Northfield was closed, in order that its pastor and people might attend the Brotherhood's anniversary service, and hundreds came from the summer homes nestling among the trees on The Ridge, as well as from the village. These, in addition to the nearly 400 men and women who made up the Convention body, made a truly inspiring congregation.

A choir of Junior Convention members—with a few of the older ones—began the anniversary service by leading the great congregation in singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers", and after the prayers, Samuel H. Sayre, U. S. N., acted as color sergeant during the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner", coming upon the platform in uniform and holding aloft the Stars and Stripes. The service flag of the Brotherhood, with the blue stars in the design of a St. Andrew's Cross, a gold star at the intersection of the cross for those who have given their lives, was displayed over the organ, the absent thus having their symbolic part in the anniversary. The preacher was the Very Rev. Dr. Geo. Hodges, Dean of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge. In a sermon on "Goodness, Plus", he set forth the ideal Christian character. "The establishment of the Kingdom depends indeed upon our goodness, but it depends also on the reinforcement of our goodness by every possible development of ability and character. Piety," said the Dean, "needs personality and power to make it useful." The sermon was beautiful and helpful throughout, and the Collect for St. Andrew's Day and the Brotherhood hymn closed the service. At the close of Morning Prayer, and just before the sermon, the children in the congregation were allowed to go out, and found their way to Music Hall, across the campus, where Mr. Finney preached for them a little sermon suited to their years.

During the Convention the Juniors were in evidence, and they had many meetings of their own. That at Music Hall on Sunday afternoon drew a gathering which crowded it, and the boys were fortunate in having Bishop Hulse of Cuba as their chairman. "The Christian Life of the Boy" was the theme of the meeting, the young speakers being Charles E. Cole of Ascension Junior Chapter, Baltimore; Fred J. Bell of Christ Church Junior Chapter, Norfolk, and Gordon H. Thornton of St. Mary's Junior Chapter, South Manchester, Conn. The boys had as their topics, respectively, The Christian Life in Business, in the Home, and in the Church. They acquitted themselves with great credit. At the close of these papers, Bishop Hulse invited George H. Streaker of Philadelphia to lead the open conference, and many boys spoke to the topic.

At the early celebrations on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, the Rev. Charles D. Broughton, Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Buffalo, N. Y., was the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. John Mills Gilbert, the Rev. Geo. P. Atwater and the Rev. Alva E. Carpenter. Mr. Broughton delivered three beautiful and helpful addresses on the struggles and victories of the Christian life. The last of these services, unusually impressive throughout, was further solemnized by the reading of the Memorial Record and the singing of "For All the Saints Who From Their Labors Rest".

The Round Top meetings, held at twilight, were continued from last week. These were all challenge meetings, where was sounded the call to a larger service in the Church. On Sunday evening the challenge to the sacred ministry was made in a stirring and powerful address by the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, chaplain at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. Chaplain Bell made clear the unanswered call of a dying world for real prophets and priests of God—men accounting nothing worth while but the mission for which Christ lived and died. After the auditorium meeting immediately following Chaplain Bell's address, Fr. Sill gave an earnest and inspiring instruction to a group of men to whom the call of the sacred ministry, sounded so mightily by the chaplain, had made its appeal.

The call for laymen and the call for priests having been made separately, the "call to service in the mission field" followed, including both, and with tenfold insistence. This challenge was made in an impressive address by Dr. John W. Wood, foreign secretary of the Board of Missions. The vast field, its glorious service and its sure reward were described, and were their own persuasion.

Preceding the Forward Movement meeting, Mr. Benjamin F. Finney, chief secretary of the Brotherhood's army and navy department, in the last of the twilight gatherings, made an appeal from "the call to membership in the Brotherhood". Speaking from an experience in Brotherhood work covering more than a score of years, Mr. Finney, with an earnestness born of devotion, a courage backed by conviction and a high resolve supported by faith, asked for a consideration of the Brotherhood's claim, and offered a share in its benefits.

On Sunday evening Mr. Walter Kidde, chairman of the Brotherhood's Army and Navy Council, and later in the Convention elected second vice president of the Brotherhood, after the singing of some good missionary hymns, introduced the widest known and best beloved of all the Brotherhood's good Episcopal friends, the president of the Board of Missions, and Bishop Lloyd, in his sweetly assuring and characteristic way, talked about "The Progress of the Church's Mission". There was hope in every word of that address. It was majestic because of its simplicity. "The Church's mission," said Bishop Lloyd, "is that for which the Christ became incarnate: its mission is to show men the Father."

Looking toward the period of reconstruction that we are inevitably facing, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Theodore Irving Reese, Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Ohio, was invited to address the Convention on "The Church and Reconstruction". This address faced the issues that the Church must meet squarely, but unafraid. Bishop Reese handled this subject majestically, and yet he preached the simple Gospel of the Lord Jesus.

Mr. Walter Kidde then opened the conference on army and navy work. He briefly recounted the work done by this department of the Brotherhood, emphasizing the need of men of prayer and service to carry it to more glorious achievement; told of the cooperation of the Brotherhood with the Church War Commission and the Y. M. C. A., and read a cable message from Bishop Perry to the Convention:

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"Greetings From the Church Overseas". The war work and camp secretaries were called to the platform and received whole-hearted applause from the Convention. Mr. F. S. Titsworth, executive secretary of the Brotherhood's war work department, told of the beginning and development of the work, the difficulties that had been encountered and overcome, the magnitude of the undertaking, both in the office and in the field, with an insight into the response among the men in service, exhibited by the letters received from them.

Mr. G. Frank Shelby, secretary of personnel, related the organization of that side of the work, giving statistics that testified to the Brotherhood men's answer to the call. Mr. Shelby also spoke of the unique character of the Brotherhood work in the camps, and of the proposed enlargement of it overseas.

Mr. Shelby was followed by Camp Secretaries S. Mendelson Meehan, Percy J. Knapp, E. J. Walenta, Jr., Gordon Reese and F. W. Goodall. Mrs. Knapp, who worked with her husband in the camp hospitals, was escorted to the platform amid great applause.

Mr. B. F. Finney, chief secretary, closed the conference by giving outstanding examples of actual devotion and accomplishment on the part of the Brotherhood's camp secretaries, representative of the staff throughout.

"The Church's Work by and Among Boys" was the subject of a remarkably instructive and illuminating conference conducted by Mr. Leon C. Palmer. The underlying principle of all successful work among boys Mr. Palmer declared to be contained in Froebel's saying, "We learn from the child how to teach the child". He declared it to be the great boy problem of the Church, that she is reaching few boys and interesting fewer, and emphasized the need of an adequate literature, and of trained leaders to carry on a boys' movement, with due regard for the natural qualities of a boy's nature, his activity, his admiration of men, his fourfold life—physical, social, mental, religious, and his desire for unified loyalty.

Mr. Robert E. Anderson, the Convention's chairman and secretary of the Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Virginia, conducted an exceptionally suggestive and helpful conference, "The Brotherhood Man in the Sunday School". The paramount opportunity for service in the Sunday school Mr. Anderson pointed out as the teacher's field, but he suggested lines of service practically new to most Churchmen in the possibilities of the treasurer's and secretary's offices.

"The Lay Reader's Contribution to the Work of the Church" was an admirably conducted conference by Mr. G. T. Ballachey, one of the council members for the Diocese of Western New York. The work accomplished by lay readers in city missions, rural districts and corrective and charitable institutions, together with its wonderful opportunity for further development, was presented in a straightforward manner.

The first conference on "The Study of the Church's Mission", in charge of Dr. Wm. C. Sturgis, educational secretary of the Board of Missions, proved one of the most impressive hours of the entire Convention. Few, if any, left that conference without a secret re-consecration. It called for absolute surrender of head, heart and hand to the supreme mission of the Church and, if needful, it clinched the burning words of Bishop Lloyd and Dr. Wood in their presentation of the same great issue. The second of these conferences was a practical application and development of the great truth so inspirationally presented in the first hour.

An interesting conference that centered around what has become distinctively a Brotherhood activity was the one on Church attendance campaigns, when the stories of two notable ones were told by Charles Cain, director of St. Stephen's Chapter, Wissahickon, Pa., and Ernest S. Inglis, president of the Chicago Diocesan Assembly. Mr. Cain, by concrete illustration, related the story of a triumph in Church attendance effort made by his chapter, to which, later in the conference, his enthusiastic Rector, the Rev. E. N. LeBlanc, added his testimony. Among others, Bishop Lloyd entered into this conference and left some splendid suggestions with the rectors and men for co-operation in the extension of their parish work.

Mr. John D. Alexander, president of the Michigan Diocesan Assembly, conducted a conference on the purely spiritual features of the Brotherhood's threefold endeavor, "The Men's Communion". In a very able way he set forth its ideal and the methods for building it up as an institution of the Brotherhood.

Mr. Courtenay Barber, elected at this Convention first vice president of the Brotherhood, was chairman of the Forward Movement meeting, and in a delightful address summed up briefly the history, aim and accomplishment of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. and then outlined its advance program adopted by this thirty-third National Convention. The pledge cards of the Brotherhood Fund were distributed, and Mr. Barber presented as the speaker the Brotherhood's good friend, Bishop Lloyd, who in turn pleasantly referred to the old days of the Brotherhood during his early membership, and then touchingly moved and heartily inspired every man listening.

At the last session, the chairman, Mr. Anderson, summarized briefly his own impression of the Convention, and then announced the newly elected officers, as follows: President, Edward H. Bonsall, St. Matthew's, Philadelphia; first vice president, Courtenay Barber, Church of the Redeemer, Chicago; second vice president, Walter Kidde, St. Luke's, Montclair, N. J.; treasurer, Warren Hires Turner, Holy Trinity Chapter, Philadelphia; general secretary, Franklin S. Edmonds, St. Martin's in the Fields, Chestnut Hill, Pa.; executive secretary and editor of St. Andrew's Cross, George H. Randall, Holy Trinity Chapter, Philadelphia; field secretaries, G. Frank Shelby (temporarily transferred to war work), Benjamin F. Finney (temporarily transferred to war work), Franklin H. Spencer (transferred to work in central office), and Walter Miller Kalmey, who will have supervision of territory to be determined upon.

President Bonsall then delivered the "charge to the Brotherhood", a timely and irresistible charge, bearing the impress of a commander to his men. Referring to his re-election to the presidency of the Brotherhood, Mr. Bonsall said: "I am conscious, ever so conscious, of the privilege and responsibility to which you have called me. Certainly there is not any position in our Church among the laymen which calls for greater devotion and for greater need of your help. If we fail to measure up to the period of opportunity opening before us, it is going to mean tragedy among the men of our communion. Let us go forward in the confidence of a sure faith in Him whose crusade we are entering upon, seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness".

Many took part in the conference on "What I have Gained From the Convention, which proved a pleasing and helpful exchange of thoughts, and one of the most heartening features of the entire program. Mr. Finney was chairman. The Juniors were especially eager to testify to what they had gained from the Northfield Assembly of the Brotherhood, eight or ten of their delegation expressing enthusiastically their appreciation of the privilege of attendance. Bishop Hulse said it had been a gathering that would be incalculable in its results, both in personal Christian lives and in the great corporate life of the Church and nation. Dean Tait of Chester, Pa., characterized it as having been the most distinctively spiritual conference he had ever known. Dr. Atwater of Akron, Ohio, said that the business of the King was being done at the Brotherhood Convention, and that it was a great motive of spiritual power.

NOT PLANNED BY THE PROGRAM COMMITTEE

Fertility of resources and initiative on the part of the men resulted in many helpful features that had not been scheduled by the Program Committee. Among these were Bishop Olmsted's class on the study of the Prayer Book; Dr. Sturgis' meetings with Bible class and mission study groups; special army and navy department meetings led by the various camp secretaries; the "travelogue" lectures of Gordon Reese and "Johnny Fred"; a children's service conducted by Ben Finney on Sunday morning, and the sectional meetings of Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New England men. Ted Mercer and Tom Farmer, of course, could not evade one of their inspirational gatherings.

In the mornings, a "community sing" was held around the flag pole; Old Glory went up while the "Star Spangled Banner" was sung, and then Gordon Reese and the Rev. Mr. Le Blanc led the chorus in the singing of old favorites and of popular war songs. At noon each day there was a pause in the sessions of the Convention for the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" and for prayer in behalf of the nation, the men training and fighting, and the Church's missions. Morning Prayer was conducted by different priests and laymen in the parlors of the halls and dormitories, giving each a distinctively family atmosphere and strengthening the ties of Christian fellowship.

Ben Finney, at the request of many delegates, conducted two splendid instruction conferences on the formation of Brotherhood chapters. These were held on Round Top, and were impressive and helpful. These had been eagerly asked for.

A feature as pleasant as it had been unlooked for was the presentation of the work of the Pocket Testament League by Mr. C. M. Alexander. After a brief review of the magnificent work accomplished by this worthy organization, especially among the soldiers and sailors of the allied armies, Mr. Alexander proposed to teach Episcopalians one of the jilting tunes loved by the men in the camps, and offered as a reward to any man who would volunteer to sing a verse of it one of the pocket Testaments distributed by the League. He had four responses: Dr. Hopkins, Warren Hires Turner, the Rev. Mr. Broughton and Samuel H. Sayre, and this quartet, representing the clergy, the laity and the United States navy, mounted the platform and sang the hymn in chorus, to the delight of the entire Convention.

President Bonsall said a few parting words, the Brotherhood hymn was once more sung, and Bishop Hulse pronounced a benediction on the thirty-third annual Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States—a Convention that had developed a program of unique continuity, representing by its arrangement the life of the Christian man, which it successfully visualized in a community life of one week.

The Doors Will Not be Closed

All over this country there are instances of Church schools being obliged to close their doors and to suspend operations until this war is over. This, however, is not true of Rowland Hall, Salt Lake City. Because of the financial backing of the citizens of Salt Lake City, Rowland Hall will continue to serve its useful purpose. The Rowland Hall Finance Committee recently appointed by the Acting Bishop of Utah has as its chairman Dr. W. L. Ellerbeck, one of the leading citizens of this flourishing Western city. The treasurer of this committee is Mr. John M. Hayes, whose standing in the town may be known by the fact that he is also treasurer of the Utah Copper Company. A few other prominent citizens make up the personnel of the committee. It is attempting to raise a fund of $30,000, to provide against a possible deficit, extending over a period of five years. Ten thousand dollars has already been secured, and the committee feel confident of securing the balance.

Rowland Hall stands on high land, overlooking the valley, in a residential section of Salt Lake City. Its equipment is as good as that of many Eastern boarding schools, and far better than the average girls' school in this country. In the main building, each girl has a room to herself. There is no dormitory system. The school building has in it exceedingly well lighted class rooms. There is also a large gymnasium and a swimming pool. Between the home and school building, and opening into both, is the chapel, a consecrated building, used only for religious services.

Miss Eloise Tremain, the principal, has just resigned, to accept a similar position in Ferry Hall, Lake Forest, Illinois. Her successor will be Miss Minerva M. Buckner of Havergal College, Toronto. Miss Buckner will also teach French in the school. She has lived much abroad, and has had experience in teaching in Church schools in this country. Rowland Hall is most fortunate to have secured her services. With few exceptions, the faculty will remain as before.

Since its foundation, more than five thousand girls have gone to this school. With so many Church schools closing throughout the West, it would seem that Rowland Hall should this coming year have one of the best years in its history, and it is hoped that there will be applications for many boarders during the summer months. There are accommodations for over thirty boarding pupils. The day school will accommodate as many day pupils as present themselves.

Anniversary of First Cablegram

Friday, Aug. 16th, brought the sixtieth anniversary of the first cable message sent under the Atlantic. On that day, in 1858, the first cable was completed from Trinity Bay, Newfoundland, to Valencia, Ireland, and Cyrus W. Field and his associates saw the reward of their courage and faith.

At the time when the greatest war of the ages rocks the world, it is of special interest to recall that the first message carried the words, "Glory to God in the highest; on earth, peace, good will towards men". In the poem that Whittier wrote in honor of the event, which was much celebrated in both this country and England, this idea of international peace was elaborated, not simply because it was the text of that first message, but because it was the prevailing idea that nations and continents closely bound together in means of communication could not possibly have a serious quarrel.

Yet, curiously enough, the first exchange of greetings between Queen Victoria and President Buchanan seriously jarred the existing entente cordiale. The queen's message was unsigned and irritatingly brief, and for hours the resulting resentment caused the saying and printing of many things better left unsaid and unprinted. Then it became known that faulty working of the cable was responsible for the abrupt ending. President Buchanan sent a long and gracious message, and peace reigned again. That first cable, laid after four failures, was 2,500 miles long, weighed a ton to the mile, and the cost of the project was $1,834,500. For six weeks messages were exchanged, but they were of an experimental nature, and the cable was never opened to the public. At the end of six weeks the cable broke down completely.

Then seven years passed before the work was resumed, and the famous Great Eastern made its memorable voyage. The cable laid that time parted after a single trial, and then another year elapsed. The broken ends were picked up and spliced, and from that day in 1866 cable communication under the Atlantic has not ceased. There are now nearly a score of cables between this country and Europe, and dozens and scores, shorter and longer, under other oceans—more than 230,000 miles of ocean cable in all.—Editorial in Boston Herald.

The New Church at Camp Meade

The new Epiphany Chapel and House at Odenton, Maryland (Camp Meade), was recently blessed by Bishop Murray. The Rev. Dr. Washburn, Rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, who was largely instrumental in starting this work for the army, delivered the address. The keys were presented by Mr. George C. Thomas, secretary of the Diocesan War Commission, and the Rev. Dr. McKim of Washington presented the building on behalf of the donors, who are members of his parish. The Bishop accepted the building, and then gracefully turned it over to Brigadier General Nicholson. Bishop Garland, representing the Diocese of Pennsylvania, voiced the interest and generosity of Churchmen in that state, from which two-thirds of the soldiers at Camp Meade come.

Following the dedication, light refreshments were served. Then came what was generally acknowledged to be the climax of a splendid day—a young lieutenant was baptized. Immediately afterward, he and eight enlisted men received confirmation at the hands of Bishop Murray. We glean this information from the Maryland Churchman, which says:

"The dedication was made memorable by the presence of Miss Meade, a daughter of General Meade, who has presented to the house a fine picture of her father. Major P. F. Meade, who is a nephew of the General, in command of the remount station, also attended the service."

Bishop Tucker Ordains His Son

Mr. Francis Bland Tucker, the youngest of Bishop Tucker's thirteen children, was ordained to the diaconate in Virginia Beach, Va., Sunday morning, July 21st. The service was most remarkable, unusual and impressive. Morning Prayer was read at 9 o'clock by the Rev. Edward Patton Miner, Rector of Galilee. The ordination service began at 11 o'clock. The vested choir, under the direction of Mrs. Miner, entered the church in procession, headed by the two Altar boys, one bearing the United States flag and the other the service flag of Galilee, with its twenty stars. The Rev. Luke Matthew White (son-in-law of Bishop Tucker), rector of St. Luke's Church, Montclair, N. J., delivered an inspiring sermon, based upon thoughts suggested by the Sermon on the Mount. The Rev. James Hubbard Lloyd of Japan (nephew of Bishop Lloyd and cousin of Bishop Tucker), was the presenter. This was very appropriate, as Mr. Tucker had served for some two years as a teacher in one of our Church schools in Japan.

The ordination was a most touching scene—Bishop Tucker setting apart the fourth of his sons in the sacred ministry of the Church. The Bishop's voice trembled, and many in the congregation wept at seeing the manly youth, dressed in the uniform of a private soldier of the United States army, and also clad in the vestments of the Church, standing like a true soldier before his father, and in no uncertain voice making his vows to serve in the great army of Christ's Church Militant. Then he knelt and received the commission and the "khaki" covered Testament (which will contain the certificate of ordination). Then, as his first official act, Mr. Tucker turned and read the Gospel. A very large number of people remained and received the communion. The Rev. E. P. Miner acted as master of ceremonies and administered the "cup" at the communion. This service was also the annual missionary occasion at Virginia Beach. The Rev. James Hubbard Lloyd and the Rector spoke briefly upon missions, and the offering was almost double that ever before presented at Galilee on Missionary Day.

It is certainly worthy of remark that Bishop Tucker now has four sons and one son-in-law in the ministry of the Episcopal Church. Another son, Dr. Augustus Tucker (who married Bishop Cheshire's daughter), is one of our medical missionaries in China. One son is the Bishop of Kyoto, Japan. Five of the Bishop's sons are serving their country in the National Army. One is already in France. Three of the clergyman sons are also in the army.

Bishop Thurston in Hospital

Bishop Thurston (Eastern Oklahoma) was taken suddenly ill with an acute attack of appendicitis. He was taken to Hill Crest Hospital, Minneapolis and operated upon immediately. He is getting along all right, although he was seriously ill. He wishes it stated that he expects to be back at his work in Oklahoma early next month.

Sanctuary of Prayer

The following prayers were taken from a leaflet of war time prayers prepared for use in the Diocese of Montana, which Bishop Faber has issued, with special reference to the Advent call of the women of the Church:

FOR THE WOMEN AT HOME

O Merciful Father, who in Thy Holy Word dost teach us that in quietness and confidence shall be our strength; whose blessed Son commended her that chose the better part, sitting at His feet and hearing His word; Grant to the women at home a steadfast heart through faith in Thee; in every anxiety and grief, be Thou their stronghold whereunto they may alway resort. Help them to take up new burdens and unwonted tasks with a good courage. Above all, pour upon them the spirit of prayer and supplication, for the cleansing of our land from all offences against Thy purity and justice, and for the return of the people to Thee, that so we may look unto Thee and be saved; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FOR RED CROSS NURSES

O Father of mercies and God of all comfort, who didst send Thy Son to be the Saviour and Healer of Men; We thank Thee for those who have heard Thy call in the hour of distress and gone forth to minister to the wounded and the sick. Sustain them, gracious Lord, in their heavy and perilous task; grant them understanding and skill, sympathy and patience, that they may bring to the suffering relief of body and soul. In all dangers defend them; refresh their spirits in the midst of desolation and woe. And in Thy mercy shorten the days of tribulation; give peace in our time, and the healing of the nations; for His sake who came, not to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved, Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
L. W. APPLEGATE.....Publisher
JAMES SHEERIN GEORGE P. ATWATER HENRY J. MIKELL
FRANCIS S. WHITE JAMES WISE
EDWARD C. CHORLEY

Published every Saturday at Hobart, Ind., where all business communications should be addressed.
SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

ADVERTISING RATES

Three dollars an inch each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates revised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

5% for two months; 10% for three months; 15% for six months; 20% for twelve months.

All news matter, Diocesan and Parish papers, intended for THE WITNESS, should be sent to the Rev. Charles J. Shutt, 312 Warren Street, Mankato, Minn.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

EDITORIAL

The Passing of "The Question Box"

Dear Sir:

I have received your answers to my questions in THE WITNESS. Your replies to the first two questions certainly do not justify the former use of the expressions, "a lazy man's service" and "high mass", without qualifications.

In regard to the third question, you certainly know that it is the "intention" of the Protestant Episcopal Church, where there is a service of celebration of Holy Communion, that there shall be persons to commune. What you say is an attempt to cover up the insidious practice of a communion which is no communion, and which the Church does not prescribe.

To say that "you would not force people to receive at the late service, if they had already received at the early, or if they had made no preparation, or if their habit was to receive fasting, who had eaten breakfast',' is to beg the question, as there would be neither sense nor reason in having a late communion for such a congregation. Please be "sincere".

The above letter is one of several that I have received, and it indicates what one of the Editors, who has not seen these letters, has pointed out, viz: that "people will not ask questions to get your view point, but to justify their own position".

In conducting THE WITNESS, we agreed, so far as possible, to exclude theological controversy, and we have succeeded to a certain degree, as much as I had hoped.

But as my brother Editor has pointed out, we cannot run a "Question Box" and not drift into controversy, and the letter I publish at the head of this article is one of several proofs that he is right, and I have concluded to end the "Question Box" and substitute something else, as soon as the present stock of questions is exhausted.

I have my view point, and I fully realize that it is not the other man's. I can do no more than explain my position, to which I am entitled, and in which I try to be sincere. At least, I have not consciously been guilty of duplicity. I do not pretend to say what is the intention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, except as I see it. Anybody who is versed in the rather complex origin of that highly respectable body will think twice before he regards himself as an oracle of that kind.

It may be well, in this connection, to quote from one of the few places in which she takes up the matter of her intention, and that is from that very valuable and very little read portion of the Prayer Book known as the Preface.

I especially commend to my readers its opening words, which I am glad to quote: "It is a most invaluable part of that blessed liberty, wherewith Christ has made us free, that in His worship different forms and usages may, without offense, be allowed, provided the substance of the Faith be kept entire. And that in every Church, what cannot be clearly determined to belong to the doctrine must be referred to discipline; and therefore by common consent and authority may be altered, abridged, enlarged, amended or otherwise disposed of, as may seem most convenient for the satisfaction of the people, according to the various exigencies of times and occasions."

I wish that these words, which form a sort of charter of our liberties, might be carved in a brass plate upon the front door of our churches, for it breathes the spirit in which this Church strives to maintain itself in a land where every one wants to enforce his discipline on some one else. It reminds me of St. Paul's question as to who made you the judge of another man's conscience?

The fact that certain practices are matters of discipline, and not of faith, is to be found in the fact that they are so treated in nearly every diocese in this country, and that the widest latitude of use is freely granted by those who are in authority.

The greatest difficulty arises from the exercise of papal powers on the part of many of our members, who demand that the particular period in the history of the Church to which they look back with approval shall be regarded as sancrosanct by the rest of Churchmen. It may be the foundation of the Episcopal Church in this country; it may be the Elizabeth Settlement; it may be the rise of the Teutonic Roman Church, about the year 1000; it may be the Conciliar period; it may be the Apostolic period, but whenever it is, one would imagine that the Holy Spirit had come down in a second Pentecost, and then and there petrified human action into a permanent static paralysis.

This Church of ours has a peculiar distinction, of which I for one am rather jealous, and that is that instead of excluding from communion with you those who do not agree with you, it tries to include in the one body all those who accept the substance of the faith, which, so far as this Church is concerned, is contained in her Creeds.

I do not desire to exclude from the communion of the Church either Evangelical or Ritualist, and I am afraid that I do not sympathize with the man that does.

At the same time, I reserve the right to differ from them both, emphatically and radically, whenever I choose, and I cheerfully accord to him the same privilege.

I do not know how a family is to get along together, on a wide platform, in any other way.

I would that all who love liberty would see that this Church preserves for its members a real breadth of opinion—not merely the width of the rut you travel, but the breadth of the great highway in which travelers can pass one another without breaking up one another's machines.

Of course, every road has certain definite limits, and so has the Church, but ruts are not roads. Nor have we any right to call Evangelical or Ritualist insincere because he doesn't agree with us as to what the intention of this Church is, because, according to her own statement, her intention is that her members shall live and let live.

I am sorry, in a way, to give up the "Question Box", and I may reopen it again, under certain limitations, but I find that so many do not expect to be differed from in asking questions that for the present I prefer to close this department, as being prejudicial to the agreement which I made with my fellow Editors in starting THE WITNESS.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colorado

If Jesus was crucified on Friday, and was raised from the dead on Sunday, how can this be figured as "three days and three nights in the heart of the earth"?

This can be figured as three days (but not three nights), because of the Jewish method of reckoning, for the Jews counted the original one in a series. For example, the third house from your house would be, your house, one, the next house, two, and the house designated, three. In our phraseology, it would be the second house from yours. So Friday was the first day, Saturday the second day and Sunday the third day.

What does the Roman Church do with married priests who pervert her?

Of course, Rome does not recognize their priesthood, so they are treated as laymen. If they are married, and desire to enter the Roman Catholic priesthood, they must separate from their wives.

Why is violet the color for funerals?

Because purple (or violet) is the color for penitential seasons, due, possibly, to the fact that they put a purple robe upon Christ at the time of His crucifixion.

What is the symbolism of green?

Green is the color of nature, and so is the color used when no other color is appropriate.

What is the symbolism of the use of lights used in different numbers?

The two Eucharistic lights symbolize that Christ is the light of the world, and that He manifests Himself to us in His two natures—human and Divine.

Seven is the number of perfection, and so may symbolize the sevenfold gifts of the Holy Spirit.

What is meant by G. Matheson, when he says, "Moses alone does speak from beyond the grave; but it is not of things beyond, it is of things to be accomplished at Jerusalem?

He refers, no doubt, to the conversation of Christ with Moses and Elijah on the Mount of Transfiguration, and to the fact that Moses did not tell of the secrets of the other life, but rather of that which was vital to men, viz: Christ's passion at Jerusalem. (St. Luke ix:30-31.)

What right did St. Paul have to originate in the Church the teaching of the subjection of women and graft it into Christianity?

The Jewish religion alone, of all religions in antiquity, reverenced women. Outside of Israel they were scarcely regarded as having a soul. The teaching of St. Paul was a tremendous advance over anything that preceded that teaching. It reserved to man leadership, but gave to women rights equal to those of men, and demanded that men should treat women with a consideration that they had never before known. If you had lived in the days of St. Paul, you would have said that he had liberated women. Is it not expecting a good deal that St. Paul should have taught in the First Century a theory of woman's right to leadership that has hardly yet been demonstrated? What would have been the value of such teaching to the people of the First Century? They would not have been ready to receive it. He took a universal condition and elevated it to the highest possible place that it could be received by the temper of the times, and woman enjoys the position that she now occupies, as well as the one which many women seek to attain, to the position which woman was given in the early Christian Church, as contrasted with that which she received from every other source in antiquity, before that.

That St. Paul regarded his teaching as the last word on the subject is not indicated in an epistle written to the Corinthians in the middle of the First Century.

Most women have the children of the family under their control for the greater part of the time. How, then, can you say that men are the leaders of the brood? Does it not seem to you that those who do the work ought to get the credit? Has not history proved that St. Paul made a great mistake in I Cor. xi?

There are two or three questions here. One is of leadership, another of credit, another of St. Paul's mistakes.

A general gets the credit of a battle, but the soldiers do the fighting. The sergeants have more to do with the soldiers than the colonel, yet the colonel is the leader; and St. Paul should be judged by his teaching compared with his contemporaries, not by the standards of this age. Man's leadership has come to be largely a matter of family taste, but I have not yet reached the point where I admire the man who isn't the head of his family; at the same time I give women the credit of being the conscience of the average family, and of doing more for it than the man. If women are the natural leaders, why have they not wrested the leadership from the men? Is it not because men are the stronger by nature? Is not this true even among savages and in the animal world?

Now, the leadership of men may be very bad, and that of women might have been much better, but the former has been the universal fact. St. Paul was not recording a prophecy, but the facts as he saw them.

Now, it may be that men eventually will forfeit that leadership, but as a fact they have had it, and St. Paul cannot be blamed for not foreseeing that which has not yet come to pass.

Personally, I haven't the slightest objection to feminine leadership, wherever they develop the gift, but I should dislike to see it in this war.

—ST. ALBAN'S SCHOOL—
KNOXVILLE, ILL.
For Church Boys and Others.
Certificate admits to University.
Moderate Rates for Board and Tuition. Write the Rector:
REV. L. B. HASTINGS
117 N. Peoria Street, Chicago

BRECK SCHOOL 2095 Commonwealth Avenue,
ST. PAUL, MINN.
Located in St. Anthony Park, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, possessing the advantage of access to both. One block from the campus of the Agricultural Department of the University. Offers a complete High School course, and will fit students for any college. Students of the University may register for work in religious subjects. Terms very moderate. Apply to Rev. C. E. Haupt, Superintendent.

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY
Sewanee, Tennessee, 2,300 feet elevation in the Cumberland Mountains. Ideal health conditions. Broadest certificate privileges. Highest rating War Department. Best moral and social influences. Owned and controlled by the twenty Southern Dioceses of the Episcopal Church. For catalogue Address the Superintendent.

Virginia Episcopal School
(LYNCHBURG, VA.)
For boys of character, position and ability, whose means will not permit them to attend our more expensive schools. Prepares at cost for college, university or immediate entrance upon the duties of life. Made possible by gifts of founders. Special terms to clergymen. Boarders for the present are limited to seventy-eight. One hundred and six acres of land. The session begins September 19, 1918. Apply for information and catalogue to the Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Rector.
Rev. Thomas Kinloch Nelson, Vice Rector.

National Cathedral School
A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof building in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College certificate privilege. Music, Art, Advanced, and Special Courses.
THE BISHOP OF WASHINGTON,
President of the Board of Trustees
JESSIE C. McDONALD, M. S., Principal
HELEN L. WEBSTER, Ph. D.,
Academic Head
141t Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Cathedral School for Girls
ORLANDO, FLORIDA
High class Boarding and Day School. College Preparatory and General Courses. Capable Teachers. Careful Home Life. Delightful Climate. Low Rates.
Rev. Roderick P. Cobb, Rector.
19th year opens Oct. 2.

Racine College
RACINE, WISCONSIN
A Church School for your boy. Academy and Junior College.
B. Talbot Rogers, M. A., D. D., Warden.

—THE— HANNAH MORE ACADEMY
Simplicity and Excellence
Maryland Church School for Girls.
Catalogue. Reisterstown, Md.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelin, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE",
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind in America.
Address:
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls' College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President.
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal.

HOWE SCHOOL A thorough preparatory school for a limited number of well-bred boys.
For illustrated circulars, address the Rector,
REV. JOHN H. McKinzie, D. D.,
Box W. Howe, Indiana.

Berkeley Divinity School
Middletown, Conn.
Address REV. WILLIAM PALMER LADD, Dean

THE OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Teabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918. 8-10-13

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

A Red Cross tent has been placed in the church yard of Trinity Church, New York City, between the graves of Alexander Hamilton and Captain James Lawrence of the ship Chesapeake, which is being used for headquarters by war volunteer workers, employed down town, where they assemble for instructions and also leave their work when finished.

"The glad day is drawing near when psychology—part of the healing department left us by Jesus of Nazareth—will be so universally used that the custom of the so-called healing by drugs will drop into secondary importance," said the Rev. Dr. A. A. Morrison, Rector of Trinity Church, Portland, Oregon, in a recent sermon. "I am told that certain of my brethren anoint the sick with oil. This oil does not heal—far from it. The healing is something else. What is the end of it all? That mankind will more and more believe in Jesus of Nazareth and His mission here on earth."

The Springfield, Ill., Journal states that hundreds of people, including many prominent citizens of Illinois, attended a requiem celebration of the Holy Communion in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, that city, August 9th, in memory of Lieut. Elmer E. Hagler, who was killed in action overseas on July 19th, on the Aisne-Marne front. Lieut. Hagler had been baptized, confirmed and was a communicant in St. Paul's Church, had served as an Altar boy and sang in the choir. He received his degree of Bachelor of Arts at Harvard, in the class of 1916.

The graduation exercises of the Fourth School for Chaplains and Approved Chaplain Candidates took place August 15, 1918, at Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky. Extreme simplicity was the keynote of the ceremony. The 183 ministers and priests who successfully finished the course stood at attention in the mess hall of the school as the commanding general of Camp Taylor, the officers representing the adjutant general of the United States, the faculty of the school and the distinguished visitors entered the building and took their places. The opening prayer was offered by Major Chaplain Prudden, the school commandant. The order commissioning the chaplain candidates as first lieutenants and chaplains in the United States army was read by the officer representing the adjutant general. The adjutant of the School for chaplains then administered the oath of office to the newly made chaplains. The address to the candidates was made by Bishop McDowell of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Personals

The Rev. J. Coleman Horton has accepted the charge of St. George's, Lusk, Wyoming, and began his new duties on August 1st. Mr. Horton was formerly at Shoshone, Idaho.

The Ven. Joseph H. Dodshon, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, has been the special preacher this month at St. James' Church, Atlantic City, N. J.

The Rev. Stanley S. Kilbourne, Rector of Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis, Minn., on Sunday, Aug. 11th, preached for Bishop Thurston, who is ill, at Camp Memorial Chapel, Minnetonka Beach.

The Rev. Thomas Atkinson, Rector of the Church of the Nativity, Baltimore, Md., has been appointed by the Church War Commission, at the request of the Bishop of Tennessee, as resident chaplain at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

The Rev. Percy W. Jones, for the past two years Rector of St. George's Church, Griffin, Georgia, has resigned and accepted a call to Calvary Church, Americus, Ga.

The Rev. Edward M. Cross, Rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, is spending his summer holiday in Wyoming, taking care of the work at St. Luke's, Buffalo, which at present is minus a Rector. Mr. Cross was formerly Rector of St. Peter's, Sheridan, and as Dean of Sheridan had oversight over the territory which he is now so kindly caring for.

Bishop Brewster made his annual visitation to St. Andrew's Church, New Castle, Me., August 15th, administering confirmation and celebrating the Holy Communion the next morning. The Rev. Floyd Appleton of Harrisburg, Pa., has been in charge during July and August, preaching in disused Colonial churches in the neighborhood on Sunday afternoons.

The Rev. E. H. Merriman, Rector of Emmanuel Church, Rockford, Ill., is now the Church's clerical representative at Camp Grant, Ill., taking the place of Chaplain Wilson, who is leaving for France. Communications relating to men of the Church at Camp Grant should be addressed either to the Rev. Mr. Merriman or to Mr. E. A. Farmer, Y. M. C. A. No. 2, Camp Grant, Ill.

The Rev. John Munday has returned to Port Huron, Mich., and taken up his work again as Rector of Grace Church, after an eight months' sojourn in Los Angeles, Cal., for the benefit of Mrs. Munday's health. During his stay in Los Angeles Mr. Munday served on the clerical staff of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral. August 4th was the twenty-fifth anniversary of his rectorship in Grace Church Parish.

Bishop Dunn and Canon Hogbin Sail for Central America

The new Rector and Senior Canon of the Cathedral of St. John Baptist, Belize, B. H., has sailed for British Honduras from New Orleans. He is the Rev. Dr. Hogbin, an English clergyman, who has spent many years in Western Canada. He was Archdeacon of Calgary, but resigned to become garrison chaplain, with the rank of major. This he has now resigned to take up his important post in Central America. The Bishop of Honduras, the Rev. Dr. E. Arthur Dunn, who met him in New Orleans, sailed for Colon Aug. 12th, on his way to Bocas del Tors, Almirante, Port Limm, Germania and San Jose, in Costa Rica. It will be necessary for him again to return to New Orleans, unless he can find quick transportation to Greytown, Nicarauga. In October he hopes to welcome to Belize his brother, the Rev. Harold Dunn, and his family. A diocesan boat of the auxiliary schooner type would make easy this visit to some places where hundreds of loyal Church people have not seen a Bishop for nine years. Considerable support from American Church people for this work and an American branch of the Honduras Association is being formed. The Bishop and Mrs. Dunn are expected in the United States next year.

The Rev. A. F. Tenney Dies in N. Y. State

The Rev. Albert Francis Tenney, M. A., 71 years of age, for the past twenty-five years Rector of Christ Church, Pelham Manor, N. Y., died on August 10th, after a prolonged illness. He was a native of Massachusetts, a graduate of Amherst and the Union Theological Seminary, was ordained a deacon in 1882, and advanced to the priesthood the same year by Bishop Potter. He had held charges at Briar Cliff, N. Y., and Madison, N. J., and was assistant at St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, prior to his becoming Rector of Christ Church, Pelham Manor. He was instructor, for a time, of elocution at the General Theological Seminary, and was the author of "Elocution and Expression". During the Spanish-American war he served as chaplain of the Twenty-second New York regiment. The burial took place from Christ Church on Tuesday, August 13th.

Work of Rector Appreciated

Bishop Fiske of Central New York recently addressed a patriotic meeting in Grace Church, Carthage (the Rev. Frederic S. Eastman, Rector), under the auspices of the Men's Club, and suggested that the parish express their appreciation of the Rector's work by advancing his salary. The vestry promptly acted, and advanced Mr. Eastman's salary 25%. and also paid it for the previous year, beginning last Advent. Mr. Eastman conducts a weekly Boy Scout meeting, with 75 boys enrolled, when the Bible is regularly read.

The Great Club of Great Ideals for Great Americans, which he organized at the suggestion of Hon. Ben Lindsey of Denver, and who is honorary president, and Mr. J. L. Strickland, a vestryman and enthusiastic boys' worker, as president, had had great success. For years the Rector has been speaking to public schools on these ideals.

Five Practical Steps at North Dakota Convention

At the 34th Annual Convocation of the District of South Dakota, which met at Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, Messrs. A. H. Beer and H. T. Sackett were ordained to the diaconate and several matters of importance were considered in the business sessions, and favorably disposed of as follows:

1. The action taken by the clergy at the clericus of dividing the district into four deaneries. The object of these deaneries is to have small convocations in places where it is impossible to have a large gathering, and to look after the work of the Church in that immediate section. We shall arrange for such meetings the last of October or the first of November.

2. The Church put itself in line with the other portions of the Church and adopted Whitsunday as the Sunday when offerings shall be taken for General Missions under the one day's income plan.

3. That the District Endowment Fund be kept before the parishes and missions in the hope of ultimately releasing the General Board of Missions from providing the Bishop's salary, and that the date for the annual offering of this fund be changed from Whitsunday to the third Sunday in October.

4. The approval of the plan already tentatively in operation to place all stations where there are communicants, not already within a cure, under the care of the General Missionary or Archdeacon, and that rectors and parishes be requested to reach as many Church people outside of their own towns as possible.

5. That clergymen in charge of parishes, and missionaries, search for and register, and as far as possible minister by correspondence and otherwise to all members of the Church who may live in the country round about their cures.

Death of a Well Known Churchwoman

On the morning of July 11 Miss Nannie Warder died at her home in "The Toronto", Washington, D. C.

Her sudden death came as a great shock to her many friends, who gathered to attest by every act of honor their appreciation of her unselfish life. A devoted Churchwoman for years, her life was given to Church service. For six years she held the chair of natural science at Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colo., going from there to take the principalship of St. Mary's, Dallas, Texas. Then, answering the call of her beloved Right Reverend father in God, Bishop Quintard, she accepted the principalship of St. James' Hall, Bolivar, Tenn. Later, she became principal of Noble Institute, Anniston, Ala. Of her work there, Bishop Wilmer spoke warmly.

For the last fourteen years she has lived in Washington, where her unselfish devotion to her aged mother and sister, her interest in the broad issues of her country, gave a fitting climax to a noble life.

The last sad rites were conducted by the Rector of St. Paul's Church, the Rev. Dr. Robert Talbot.

Notes from Wyoming

A new institution which has this summer been developed in Wyoming is the Church Holiday House, situated at Encampment, the popularity of which is being proved by the number of guests accepting the hospitality of Bishop Thomas. The Holiday House stands next door to St. James' Church, and has recently been repaired and fully equipped for the benefit of the clergy and Church organizations of the district. The property is in the center of the town of Encampment, and but one-half mile from the finest fishing streams in the state, and through the kindness and foresight of the Bishop, a most delightful outing has been afforded to several of the clergy and workers of the Missionary District of Wyoming.

Mrs. M. Belknap Nash of Jackson has been appointed president of the Little Helpers in Wyoming, to succeed Mrs. R. B .W. Hutt, resigned.

Dr. Manning's Tribute to Great Britain

The Rev. Dr. Manning, Rector, paid a high tribute to Great Britain and the British people in Trinity Church on the commemoration of the fourth anniversary of Great Britain's entrance into the war. "With good reason, gladly and with whole hearts," said Dr. Manning, "we join in commemorating the day of Great Britain's entrance into the war. On this great day of decision we send to Britain our pledge of comradeship and brotherhood." In the course of an extended message "to her king, her government, and to the men and women of her great free empire", Dr. Manning said:

"We pay our tribute of honor without reserve, of admiration without measure, to your whole people for the part that you have played in these four years. In your great deeds, in the marvelous courage with which you have met the test, we feel a special pride, for you are not only our brethren in arms, we are bound to you by other and still deeper ties. We thank God that our men are now fighting beside you and our brethren of France. They will be with you in ever increasing numbers until the stern task is completed. We shall give our whole life and power as a people to this struggle. Never in any war that we have fought have our people been so united, so determined, so wholly certain of the righteousness of their cause as in this war. The war has made us glory in our close ties with Britain—the tie of a common language, the tie of common principles and ideals, and the tie of a common heritage of liberty, the tie still in large degree of stock and of blood.

"The fellowship and brotherhood of the English-speaking peoples does not need to be artificially created nor arranged by treaty. It exists as a fact, and we pray that it may ever endure."

Four Minute Men in Sunday School

To stir up activity in Sunday school work of Frazier Memorial Church at Phoenix, Maryland, the superintendent has recently put in operation a plan providing for a series of FOUR-MINUTE TALKS on instructive subjects by local laymen. The plan, which is novel, is intended to make the school attractive for grown-ups as well as the children, and promises to be productive of much good.

Other schools may find that this plan would be helpful to them, and we give below a copy of the superintendent's letter to the first speaker:

"To promote the efficiency of the Sunday school, I am arranging, beginning next Sunday, to have a series of FOUR MINUTE TALKS, one each Sunday morning, by representative men of our locality on subjects that will be interesting and instructive.

"The success of the school can be assured only through the loyal cooperation of all whom it affects, and I hope that there will be a hearty response to any calls that may be made to carry out this program.

"On the slate for the month of August, I have selected you to speak next Sunday on 'Loyalty', and will thank you to advise me at your earliest convenience whether or not you will be able to keep this appointment."

This Sunday school subscribes to THE WITNESS, and its aim is to put a copy each week in each home connected with the school.

Woman Worker Wanted in Porto Rico

In a letter recently received by the Rev. Dr. Gray, secretary of the General Board of Missions for Latin America, the Rev. Lefferd M. A. Haughwout, Priest-in-Charge of Holy Trinity Church, Ponce, Porto Rico, makes the following appeal:

"I feel the time has come when I must lose something of my inherent diffidence in speaking of my wants, for the work in which I am so deeply interested, and for which I am devoting important years of my life is at a standstill because I cannot secure a satisfactory woman worker. There is no one to teach in the Sunday school. * * * There is no one for the little children. * * * Since Easter we have had no music for Church or Sunday school, for lack of an organist.

"In fact, the work is going back, and all that I have accomplished so far will be lost unless a competent helper is sent at once. It is absolutely essential that she be able to take charge of the music.

"I simply must have some one, even if it is necessary to put a full page advertisement in The Spirit of Missions. Nor shall I be happy if it takes another winter to get some one. She must be on the ground not later than November 1st, and I want the very best there is, not a mere filler-in.

"The war has put new conceptions of efficiency into all of us, and we cannot be as tolerant of things as formerly. I don't believe our missionary 'administration' wants us to be. Won't you please do what you can to help?"

Vesper Hymn

Saviour, now the day is closing,
Hear our heart's last prayer to Thee;
In Thy hand hold Thou reposing
Battle men on land and sea.

Saviour, hear the last faint sighing
Murmured by the stricken brave;
Whisper to his soul, when dying,
Ransomed life beyond the grave.

Saviour, lower we are bending;
Hear tonight the warrior's prayer;
Visions of his loved ones sending,
Nestling in Thy tender care.

Saviour, hear our supplication;
Let not war our lives enslave;
Peace compel to every nation—
Rescue freedom from the grave.

—John K. Blogg.

May 31, 1918.

Collegiate School, Military
for Boys, Denver, Colo.

All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations.
Adress REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN,
Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

A SAFE and ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Women's Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY.
MRS. GUTGESELL'S CHRISTMAS NOVELTY GIFT BOOK
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
NO INVESTMENT SPLENDID PROFITS
For information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL, MINNEAPOLIS,
400-402 Sixth Avenue South MINN.

SHATTUCK SCHOOOL
Has behind it the Experience, Traditions and Ideals of fifty years. It is a College Preparatory School with military drill and discipline under U. S. War Dep't. Reserve Officers' Training Corps. In Grounds, Building and equipment is equaled by but few schools. "The school is full for 1918-1919. Enrollment should be made now for 1919-20."
Box 452. Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn.

SETTLEMENT TRAINING SCHOOL
LA GRANGE SETTLEMENT LA GRANGE, GA.
A PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH TRAINING SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL WORKERS
Courses in Settlement Nursing, Kindergarten Work, and special course of one year in Church and Social Work for graduates.
REV. R. T. PHILLIPS, Warden

Porter Military Academy
A National School A CHURCH SCHOOL Founded 1867
242 boys from 25 States and four foreign countries. Preparation for college or business by sympathetic tutoring and under the strongest influences for Christian manhood. Habits of obedience, promptness, cleanliness and self-reliance are inculcated by the strict but stimulating military discipline. An R. O. T. C. School. Mild, healthful climate permits out of door sports all year around. Gymnasium and swimming pool Unusually liberal terms. A broader preparation that the public school can give. A Lower School for smaller boys.
Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Rector
Box 604, Charleston, S. C.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II, No. 88 | HOBART, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 7, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

PLACE OF WOMEN IN THE CHURCH

Her Work is Now Big, Broad, Strong, But Not Big Enough

Miss Mary Bosworth

At a time when woman is pushing her way to the front lines in the commercial world, in the professional world, even in the political world, it is wise and right to consider what should be her place in the biggest of all big businesses—the Church. Woman has succeeded as doctor, lawyer, manager, bank director and member of congress in the so-called secular world. Her very success in these various departments of the work-a-day world proves she is capable—proves that great possibilities are within her, ready to burst forth into a song of service in any world that is made attractive to her, and at the same time allows an opportunity of attaining the heights to which her spirit soars. Capabilities she has—opportunity she wants!

In considering this question, let us first look at woman herself—let us stand her before a mirror and see a few of the great secrets it has to tell!

We see a brilliant reflection. We have to wait until our eyes grow accustomed to its wonders to interpret it, but as the vision clears we see what caused the illumination over all—woman's love, her central characteristic! It is powerful, all-absorbing. It takes different ways of showing itself: Sometimes it gives itself to the home circle; sometimes to strangers; sometimes to great uplifting movements, and many other things; but no matter upon whom or what, the point is, woman has this tremendous force—this greatest of assets, love. Far and wide it reaches, and generates into gentleness, patience, unselfishness, and all these splendid serving qualities. These are like the petals that grow from the heart of the rose, out of which only sweetness comes to enrich the lives of others. Love is a power, and is well expressed in these words: "The reign of love is mightier than the reign of law. Law touches the actions only; love touches the springs of action." Because this is true—because love is the pivot upon which woman's life moves, and because she possesses such an abundance of it, she is prepared to meet the issues of life in a peculiarly effective and valuable way.

But now the picture in the mirror has changed, and we see the words, "Advanced education" in large, brilliant letters grasped tightly in woman's uplifted hand. On her face, satisfaction—victory! She has been tried and found not wanting! Colleges and special training schools are open to her, and woman's mind makes them proud to hand her their diplomas! Her intellect is recognized!

Again the reflection changes, and we see woman's physical nature. This is a divided picture—one is woman in the home, the other woman out in the business world. As we glance into the home side, we see her busy from early morn to late at night, with all the petty annoyances and necessary duties that are entailed in managing all departments in the home and the bringing up of a family. This doesn't mean one concentrated thought, but various lines of thinking and doing. Woman not only stands up under it, but makes a success of it. The other side—the business world picture—shows even a harder life, as through long, hard hours, and all that goes with such conditions, woman works. Big demands are here made on her physically. Besides the natural strain on the nervous system, caused by the effort to get the task finished, and the energy expended, there are woman's constitutional changes and adjustments, which add to the burden, yet she meets it all and holds out in a most remarkable way. Thus we see, physically, woman is strong, and has great powers of endurance.

But the mirror is changing, and the last picture is reflected—woman on her knees, communing with her God. She knows wherein lies her power to do, strength to endure, and light to see aright. She lives close to Him—He is her friend.

Through the secrets of the mirror we see woman and her great working tool—Love; woman and her intellectuality; woman with great physical endurance, and woman, co-worker with God. Equipped in this way, she is ready to go forward, to carve an upward path, to lead the way to newer and better things.

Was woman always so rich?

Turn back the pages of history, and there you will see the answer in the negative. The status of women before Christ's coming visibly on the earth was extremely low and humbled and wretched. This was so true that His followers were greatly surprised at His friendship with women. The idea of a religious teacher talking to a woman was appalling! It was considered a disgrace! Woman was decidedly looked down upon and given a place at the back; but Jesus came to establish freedom, and this meant of mind and body, as well as spirit. Woman being bound by more chains than man, had more to be liberated from, so there is a greater difference in the woman of yesterday and the woman of today than in man, then and now. Her gratitude is everlasting to Him. He freed her when He chose to to be born of a blessed Virgin! He pointed the way to her when He appeared first to her after the resurrection, and bade her go tell the Apostles! He chose woman for His work. As somebody said: "Jesus consecrated woman's service."

The early Church recognized this, and gave woman a decided place to fill. The office was that of a deaconess, with the simple duty of caring for the wants of the body, and in a broader sense they rendered spiritual service also. Later, the deaconess' duties were restricted to a set form of ministry. Woman's service to the early Church was extensive. The Acts of the Apostles and writings of the early Bishops show that most of the large Church centers had women workers. They seem to have prayed, prophesied and taught in public, so their ministry was very valuable to the Church.

Realizing, then woman's emancipation, her part in the life of the early Church, her splendid tools, as shown by the mirror, then facing the Church of the present time, the world and its need, the question arises, "What is the place of woman in the Church today?"

Because nineteen hundred years have passed by with great mental development, progress in handiwork, inventions and discoveries, expansion of habitable areas of territory, increase of population and growth of Christianity, life is now much more complex, and demands more, yet there are more openings for woman now than ever before. Woman, on the other hand, has had nineteen hundred years of Christ's revelation, and is now prepared to take her rightful place—the foremost row!

As we glance over the Church's field of work, we hear woman's voice in the school room, home and abroad; we see her in many parts of the world in our hospitals, at the bedside of the sick, tending the patient tenderly and scientifically; we hear the clicking of the typewriter, as she does her secretarial work; we see her busy in social service centers; we read her opinions in books and magazines; we imagine her soft tread, as she walks as a sister; we watch her with interest and praise as she uses the surgeon's knife; we see her in the Sunday schools; we know her as General Educational Secretary; and we hear her sweet message as she takes the Christ into the homes of the heathen and the needy ones. Her work is now big, broad, strong, but not big enough, not broad enough, not strong enough!

After hearing the foregoing words, it would seem that there is nothing except the priesthood that woman is not in. Partially this is true, for what she is not decidedly in she influences. But a more positive force is necessary than that which is carried through others. Woman should represent herself.

(To be continued)

The Most Wonderful Organization in the World

The Rev. Samuel Tyler, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Rochester, N. Y., gave a series of very interesting talks at Sunday evening services on "The Soldier in the Melting Pot", based upon his experiences at Camp Sheridan, where he was engaged for some time in Y. M. C. A. work. Referring to the issuing of naturalization papers to a number of men who had been in the army for some time, but were not full-fledged American citizens, he stated that for the first time in the history of the nation a United States federal court was convened in a camp, and the men of eighteen nationalities took the oath of allegiance after their character and work had been vouched for by their officers, and they had answered the regular questions.

In this company, Mr. Tyler said, there were three Swiss, three French, one Brazilian, twenty-five Greeks, six Swedes, one Roumanian, one Servian, three Hollanders, seven Turks, one German, eight Danes, one hundred and twenty-five Russians, one hundred Italians and sixty-five Austro-Hungarians.

"These have passed into the great melting pot of our nationality and today are standing between us and we know not what," said Mr. Tyler. "It is typical of the great nation to which we belong. In camp also were Indians from Oklahoma who had an income of $2,000 a week from oil lands, but were serving Uncle Sam for $1 a day. There were found, too, men of the highest moral and intellectual character, and 'the rounder', who was being swept into a realization of the necessity of obeying rules.

"All these are being rapidly fused into the terrible machine of which we have need. It is the most wonderful organization in the world; no other nation could give it birth. It represents and reflects our nation, but its very existence presents a number of problems for the future.

"We talk of democracy, and thank God we do; but a democracy that is built entirely on education will not be the power we want in coming years. Education is necessary, but more is needed. One of the best educated nations in the world is Germany. The hope of the future is in religion, a democracy of God, in which the worth of the individual soul will be made known in the work of reorganizing the world; and in this way the kingdom which we believe is coming will be made manifest. Great responsibility rests on the Church and religion now, and it will be increased when the war is brought to its close."

"I won't force religion on my boys when we get to France," an Indiana chaplain is reported to have said when he was sworn in; "it's all up to them. If they can fight Germans and get away with it, that will cover a multitude of sins." Here is the Church militant with a vengeance, comments the Cleveland Plaindealer.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

The Synod of the Province of New England will be held at New Haven, Conn., October 22-23.

Bishop Brent and Dr. Macfarland of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America conducted a memorial service beside the grave of Lieut. Quentin Roosevelt, near Chamery, east of Fere-en-Tardenois.

St. John's Church, Elkhart, Indiana (Rev. William Wesley Daup, Rector), received $2,000 from the estate of the late W. G. Hill, who passed away on August 16. Mr. Hill was a leading merchant and honored citizen, and a member of the Congregational Church.

There are 3,294 chaplains in the British army, 1,844 of whom are clergymen of the English Church. Bishop Gwynne is in command of the Church of England chaplains in France, with the rank of major general. Dr. Sims of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland, who has been graded to the same rank, is in charge of chaplains belonging to other Churches than the Church of England.

The towns in Colorado that depend on gold mining have suffered heavy losses in population, due to the unprofitableness of mining gold, which is the only commodity which has remained fixed in value. Parishes in these towns have also, in consequence, suffered unusual losses, and it has been found advisable to change the status of the congregation in Cripple Creek, as at Leadville, from a parish to that of a mission.

Governor Edge of New Jersey has issued a proclamation suggesting that on the first Sunday in each month lodges, patriotic societies and citizens of the state in general be extended an invitation to churches of every name for prayer "for the men in the military service, and for the fathers, mothers and others of kin who are grieving for them, who have been left behind in body, but who are marching away step by step with them in heart."

One hundred of the British chaplains have been killed in action or died in war service, and many have been wounded and contracted diseases while in active service. Others, and not a few, have been made prisoners of war, most of whom have been released under the provisions of the Geneva Convention. Two clergymen have been decorated with the Victoria Cross, sixty have received distinguished service badges, two hundred and sixty have been given military crosses, and eleven have been honored with foreign orders. The army chaplain at the front is in a most hazardous service.

Bishop Williams of the Diocese of Michigan, in a strong declaration published in the daily papers, supported for the mayoralty of his See City, Detroit, Mr. James Couzens. In a series of reasons, the Bishop stated that "Mr. Couzens is precisely of the type of citizen whom we are all seeking for public life, and we ought to be thankful when we find them, namely, men whose character and ability have been thoroughly proved in private life and business, and therein crowned with a success and achievement, universally recognized as justly gained. Thus they turn from private pursuits and well earned leisure to devote themselves to public service. Such citizens make our best public servants."

St. Chrysostom's Church, Chicago, was honored by a visit, says the Parish Herald, from the Rt. Rev. Dr. Tuttle, Presiding Bishop of the American Church, "who stopped over while passing through Chicago to administer the rite of confirmation to a young lady who is leaving in the early fall to attend college, and wished to be confirmed before she left home. Bishop Tuttle, now more than fifty years a Bishop in the Church of God, and eighty-one years of age, was as hale and hearty as we found him during the General Convention of the Church in St. Louis two years ago, when he was the guest and host of honor of the whole Church.

Miss Eleanor J. Ridgway, writing from the Mission of St. John's-in-the-Wilderness, Allakaket, Koyukuk River, Alaska, says that her fellow worker, "Miss Koster, received a badly lacerated lip from the paw of one of our dogs, and went into Tanana the first day of May, after the trails were supposed to be closed. She was afraid of tetanus. I went with her to within 36 miles of Tanana, but there we found so much overflow water that I felt it was best for her to go on alone, and I came back. We had left here with two dog teams and two of our boys, so it was easy for her to go on with one. She was showing no signs of poison, so I felt she could go on the last day alone with the one boy, for that was the safe end of the trail. She went to the post surgeon, Dr. Leonard, and he took stitches, and she has come home very well indeed, and rested. Miss Rountree took very good care of her at our hospital in Tanana."

The Rt. Rev. Lewis W. Burton, D.D., Bishop of Lexington, recently officiated at three ordination services, in all of which the Ven. F. B. Wentworth, Archdeacon of the diocese and secretary of the Standing Committee, was the presenter, as follows: At. St. Andrew's Church (colored), Lexington, Mr. Egerton E. Hall was ordained deacon. Mr. Hall will have charge of St. Andrew's Mission. At the Church of the Nativity, Maysville, Mr. W. B. Dern, graduate of the Virginia Seminary, was ordained to the diaconate. The Rev. George H. Harris, dean of Margaret College, Versailles, was the preacher. Mr. Dern will be general missionary of the diocese. At Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, the Rev. Thomas L. Settle, deacon in charge of St. Mary's Church, Middlesboro, and of the mission at Pineville, was ordained to the priesthood. The preacher on this occasion was the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, Jr., Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort.

When the Rev. E. A. Edwards, Rector of Trinity Church, Lawrence, Kansas, was called to Camp Doniphan as chaplain, the vestry promptly granted him a leave of absence for a year, says the Gazette of that city. Later, when he was sent to France with the 149th Missouri Regiment, and it became evident he would not be able to return to his parish in a year, the vestry extended his leave of absence for the period of the war, and generously asked Mrs. Edwards to occupy the rectory with her boys until Mr. Edwards' return. The vestry declined to accept the resignation of Mr. Edwards, presented to take effect at the end of the first year.

Every Church family in Evergreen, Colo., is a subscriber to THE WITNESS.

If any project in your parish drags heavily or languishes, there is a weak spot somewhere. Find out that weak spot and change it into strength. That is your work.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE MISSIONARY MESSAGE AND THE MESSENGER

For Those Who are to be Admitted Into Holy Orders

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, who hast purchased to thyself an universal Church by the precious blood of thy dear Son; Mercifully look upon the same, and at this time so guide and govern the minds of thy servants, the Bishops and Pastors of thy flock, that they may lay hands suddenly on no man, but faithfully and wisely make choice of fit persons, to serve in the sacred Ministry of thy Church. And to those who shall be ordained to any holy function, give thy grace and heavenly benediction; that both by their life and doctrine they may show forth thy glory, and set forward the salvation of all men; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The stated Times of Ordination are the Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays after the First Sunday in Lent, the Feast of Pentecost, September 14th and December 13th. They are "days of fasting, on which the Church requires such a measure of abstinence as is more especially suited to extraordinary acts and exercises of devotion". So reads the rule of the Church on page 24 of her Book of Common Prayer, calling these seasons "Embertide seasons", and the days "Ember days". The clergy of the Episcopal Church average well, and as a class grade high among religious leaders. There are black shepherds, as there are black sheep; there are also some very weak "sisters" among the brethren of the clergy, and there are, alas! some of whom it can be said, "It were better for them if they had never been born"; but take them all in all, they are a class whom the laity can respect, and follow, and learn to love, and be proud of. And if they are not all that they should be, let us remember "the pit from whence they are digged and the rock whence they were hewn".. A boy gets his ideas of the clergy from his home folks. The laity have the responsibility cast on them of furnishing the material out of which the Holy Spirit is to produce their priests. I used to think the prophet should have said, "Like priest like people"; but I was wrong. It has to read, "Like people, like priest". With this thought in mind, let us answer these questions: How many of us fast on Ember days in order that our spirits may be more strong to supplicate God for our priests? How many parishes keep the Ember days with self-denial, in order to have more time and money to help the Church choose proper messengers of the Master's message? At how many homes do parents let their children hear them plan for the Ember meals, so that there shall be saved enough and to spare for the fighters of the Christian army, far from the base of supplies, or busy at the front, or learning at the cantonments, or in peril on land or sea, or recovering from wounds gotten in actual conflict with the powers of darkness, and with spiritual wickedness in high places? How many parents would let the Church conscript their sons "to publish glad tidings, tidings of peace, tidings of Jesus, redemption and release"? How many parishes are recruiting stations for officers' training camps? How many of you who read this could tell where your Bishop and your priests were trained, and how many training camps we have in our Church? And how many of us ever think of the training camps for women in the deaconess schools or the sisterhoods, who have proven their right to exist within the life of the Episcopal Church? "Holy Orders" there are, too, even if we seem to play upon words. God grant our laity may realize what a most important part they have to play in the development of that morale which will make for an army of officers who will not be "ashamed of the Gospel of Christ". When that day comes, our priesthood will become still more worthy of the phrase which was once applied to them, "stupor mundi", the wonder, the admiration of the world.

Let us see now what messages are hidden for us, parents of prospective priests, or candidates for Holy Orders, or priests after the order of Melchizidek, in these two collects for those who are to be admitted into Holy Orders:

"Hast purchased to Thyself." The Church belongs to God. It is His blood-won Kingdom on earth looking for that which needs Him; it is not a company of select people on earth looking for God, "if haply they might find Him". The Church is a "universal" Church: It holds all sorts and conditions of men; it publishes a message which includes all who will listen; it draws no color line; it has its ranks and orders, but on their crests are graven deep the words, Not to be ministered unto, but to minister". Men who are ranking officers have not chosen Him, but He has chosen them, and they are His ambassadors, His servants—a peculiar people, but only peculiar in that they recognize that they are feeble human instruments of a Divine, eternal, immortal Being, and that they have to give their accounting to Him, and not to those to whom they are sent to minister, for which reason they magnify their office and make it always evident that they have to obey God rather than man.

"Guide and govern the minds of Thy servants the Bishops and pastors of thy flock." Our Bishops are not irresponsible beings—they are part of a system which realizes that God guides and governs, through the "common" sense of the flock, which includes the laity as well as the clergy. Would that our Standing Committees took their duties toward candidates for Holy Orders more seriously, and made it a matter of conscience to meet and know those whom they recommend to the Bishops for ordination; and would that our vestries would have the same attitude towards the sons and daughters of their parishioners.

Meditate on these words, "suddenly", "faithfully", "wisely", "fit", "serve". "Suddenly" does not refer to the time, but rather to the preparation for ordination; "faithfully" and "wisely" are attached to the verb "make choice". Our poor Bishops have about as much "choice" in the matter of ordination as they have in the matter of appointments to parishes or missions. Most of our Bishops, priests and deacons are "fit" men; but many of them would "fit in" better if the Bishops of a Province and our Diocesan Bishops, with their Standing Committees, were given the power to place and replace men in parishes and mission stations where often now they are misfits, because some parish or some individual vestry stood on technical rights, and left the Bishop out of their counsels altogether. "Fit persons" has reference not only to the character of the candidates and their ability, but more particularly to their adaptability. Always have this in mind when you are urging people to consider whether they have a vocation to the religious life in the technical or formal meaning of that word "religious".

"Ordained to any holy function" would indicate that the Church is not a machine, but an organism. No machine can "function". Therefore those who are ordained must be led to recognize the fact that their duties are not mechanical nor perfunctory, but vital and vitalizing. Hence the necessity that "life and doctrine" be held together in a union which is not mechanical and arbitrary, but simply human and "holy".

"Show forth and set forward" indicates that the Church expects her ordinands to be continually "on the job", as the modern slang puts it. "Showing forth God's glory" is not the work of a Sunday morning sermon, or a beautifully ordered occasional ritual; it is a matter of constant reflection by life, a daily life, which is the same on the street, in the study, by one's self, as it is at the altar, or in the pulpit on the wonderful feast days of the Church's year. And "setting forward the salvation of all men" is the acid test of a clergyman's service. When a parson tells you that his parish is peculiar and different from any other parish, find out what kind of "salvation" he is setting forth, and you will be on the trail of that "Godly admonition" which will set his people free from their "peculiar differences", and make of the parson a man after God's own heart. God purchased His Church by blood, which means that He holds the Church as very much worth while as the big thing in a man's life. But the Church is only valuable as it makes men love God and live the Godlike life. Therefore her clergy are only valuable when they realize that their whole life is to be given over to showing forth God's glory, and setting forward all men's salvation. And the clergy who do this best will come from the ranks of that laity who have fasted and prayed and sacrificed to develop a set of men who can make real the ideals God planted in their hearts through Jesus Christ. Is that the kind of lay person you are? Is that the kind of laity you are striving to develop. Are the verbs and adverbs and adjectives in this first Collect vital and pulsing words for you? Try to make them something more than beautiful rhetorical phrases.

Almighty God, the giver of all good gifts, who of thy divine providence hast appointed divers Orders in thy Church; Give thy grace, we humbly beseech thee, to all those who are to be called to any office and administration in the same; and so replenish them with the truth of thy doctrine, and endue them with innocency of life, that they may faithfully serve before thee, to the glory of thy great Name, and the benefit of thy holy Church; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

This prayer turns the whole ardor of supplication to God for those who are on the eve of ordination. The clergy are to be reckoned among God's good gifts, and the divers orders have their place not simply for efficiency's sake, but for the development of good in the world. How terrifically solemn is the import of this thought!. No wonder St. Paul was inspired to write, for the comfort of those who feel they are called of God to be His messengers, this heartfelt cry, "Who is sufficient for these things"? Somehow the average youth who enters the ministry does not have this phase of things brought home to him or, if he does, his youthful enthusiasm carries him over the depths of their solemn import. It will be a good thing for the Church when Godly laymen will talk and pray with young men who are to be candidates for the ministry, using this Collect as a basis for their reflections and advice. The clergy need the point of view of the layman to save them from class consciousness and prejudice and short-sighted optimism. But the laity who give advice must be lovers of God, and also be able to appreciate "the truth of God's doctrine", as well as to insist on "innocency of life". The laity, to be helpful, should be intelligent as well as sympathetic. An uneducated laity, that is to say, a laity ignorant of the Church's teachings, is largely responsible for those inefficient clergy whom the laity are so fond of criticising and so unwilling to listen to on widely separated occasions.

"Those who are to be called" reminds us again that the ministry of the Church is not primarily a profession which a man adopts to earn a living. It is to be considered as a vocation to a life of service, the purpose of which is not gainful. The so-called non-productive classes have to make good the reason for their existence today, or they will eventually go into the discard, or, as the business world puts it, "be scrapped". The ministry of the Church, which bases its claim for recognition on the lines of a profession, such as law or medicine, will find difficulty ahead in this age, when preaching can often be better done by a layman than by a so-called "preacher". But the ministry which bases its claim for support, both moral and financial, on the ground of vocation can only maintain itself when the truth of the doctrine preached is identified with that innocency of life which is not silly, like a sheep's, but "wise as a serpent's and harmless as a dove's". The priest who faithfully serves God rather than mammon will make "his calling and election sure". He will not be a time-server nor a hypocrite; he will be a type whose daily life is adding to the glory of God's great name, and at the same time is an asset to the community where he lives, and therefore a benefit to the Church.

"Replenish" and "endue" indicate well the mind of the Church that her clergy are not infallible, and that they have this treasure of God in earthen vessels. The laity are reminded to "humbly beseech" God for their clergy. The clergy are reminded by these verbs that ordination does not "seal", in the sense of hermetically stopping up, their lives in the odor of sanctity, but that their usefulness and power lie in the ability and desire they disclose to be "replenished" and "endued" with the Word of God rather than the wisdom of man.

God help us to meditate often on the life and meaning of the priesthood. God help us to obey with wise and understanding hearts the directions of our dear Mother Church concerning the best way to keep the Ember days. When the faithful will keep these days with all their hearts' best devotion, the reaction on the lives and teachings of their clergy will again become evident in Apostolic fervor, sacrifice and power. "Brethren, pray for us!"

FORMS OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT

The Presbyterial Policy

The Rev. J. H. Young, D. D.

The Presbyterial polity is held by the twelve Presbyterian bodies, the Presbyterian Church North, the Presbyterian Church South, Cumberland Presbyterians, who recently merged with the Northern Church, and also by the Reformed Churches, four bodies, and, in a modified form, by the various Lutheran bodies, 24 in number, and the Methodist bodies. It would seem that American Protestantism was divided between the Congregational and Presbyterial polities into numerical equal parts.

In this form of polity the Presbytery rather than the congregation is the unit, as the power of ordaining ministers lies with the Presbytery. There are two classes of ministers—ruling elders and teaching elders. The ruling elders are chosen by the congregation for a definite term, usually a year, and are ordained by the teaching elder or pastor, yet the ministerial office is regarded as indelible, and after his term is up he remains an elder still.

The teaching elder, with his ruling elders as a council of advice, form the sessions, which is the source of all authority. It is the sessions which passes on all applicants for Church membership and holds the power of discipline.

The deacons are laymen, who have charge of the collections. In modern practice, these have been displaced by trustees.

Among the Reformed bodies the sessions is called the consistory, while among the Lutheran bodies it is usually called the Church council.

The Presbytery, from which the polity gets its name, is composed of the teaching elder (or pastor) from each congregation in that district, and one ruling elder from each congregation. The latter is chosen by the sessions and not by the congregation. The powers of the lay members of the congregation are strictly limited to choosing the ruling elders and the trustees.

The presbytery has power to ordain, install and judge ministers, supervise the business which is common to all the congregations, review the sessions records, hear and dispose of cases coming before it on complaint or appeal, and to have oversight of general denominational matters, subject to the authority of the synod. Among the Lutheran bodies, the presbytery is called the conference; in the Reformed Church it is called the classis.

The highest body is called the general assembly among Presbyterians, general synod by the Reformed Church and synod by Lutheran bodies. Its membership, among Presbyterians, who hold this polity in purest form, is strictly ministerial, consisting of one minister (teaching elder) from each presbytery and one ruling elder for each 24 members of that presbytery. There are no lay representatives in this body, as there are none in any governing body from the sessions upward.

In the case of the Methodist Episcopal Church decided modifications have been introduced into the polity. In place of the sessions is the official board, which meets in quarterly conference. This board is composed of the minister and all local preachers who may be in the congregation, together with the class leaders, superintendent of the Sunday school and trustees. Thus there are lay members on this board. The annual conference takes the place of the presbytery. In this there are only ministers. But in the general conference, which meets every four years, lay and ministerial members are in equal number. The Bishops are not regarded as a separate order, but as a separate office. They are pastors, with the power of ordaining, which power is given by the conference. It has never been asserted that the office is for life. In early days the title was superintendent instead of Bishop. It is because of the doctrine of the ministry that we class this body among the Presbyterial rather than the Episcopal bodies. The rule for ordination of a Bishop is that he must be ordained by three Bishops, or by one Bishop and two ministers.

The Presbyterial polity recognizes an authority higher than that of the congregation. Ordination is not from the congregation, but from the presbytery; the ministry has a larger than congregational authority. The idea of succession is emphasized; the ministry can be handed down only by those who have it; there is even the idea of tactual succession. Some ministers under this polity regard their office as the same as that of our Bishops, an elder over a council of elders.

The polity is a more strongly organized and centralized one than the congregational, and would be expected to preserve unity much better; but for some reason it does not seem to have done so; the divisions are as many under this form as under the other.

It has had, however, a profound effect upon the theory of the ministry among congregational bodies. The prevailing view today, among even bodies which hold to the congregational polity, is of a denominational ministry. The congregational polity, except as it lingers in lay representation, may be expected to die out under the pressure of stronger forms and need of unity.

The Necessity of Teaching

The other Sunday, at a visitation, Bishop Hall began a simple sermon on Grace by saying:

"It is a common report from army chaplains, in camps and at the front, that the soldiers, while often well-disposed, are as a rule shockingly ignorant of the Christian religion, its rule of faith and its rule of life. This complaint applies to many who are at least nominally Churchmen. Now, just so far as this is true, the men are ignorant because they have not been instructed. The fault must lie largely with the clergy, who, with all their preaching, have neglected to teach. Exhortation has been substituted for instruction, without which it does not seem that exhortation could have any base. I can honestly say," the Bishop went on, "that, with whatever success or failure, I have tried during my ministry in Vermont to teach, and I have begged others to make this the groundwork of their exhortation. With such reports or complaints as I have referred to, one must be all the more careful in expounding the elementary Christian truths for faith and for life. As I have frequently said, what is A, B C to the clergy and a few instructed people may very likely be X Y Z to the mass of the congregation. The better instructed people must bear with the repetition of simple truths. They may learn to see them more clearly in their relation one to another. People commonly know only fragmentary truths. They must be taught their religion as a whole in systematic fashion."

Let Us Not Grieve

Let us not grieve that lives so young and brave
And precious talents for the truth are spent;
What fitter sacrifice could one present,
Oppress'd humanity to serve and save,
From lies and death in life—worse than the grave?
Each proud immortal spirit will resent
Our selfish mourning. They who gladly went
To fight truth's battles, and, unmurm'ring, gave
Their all upon the torn and bloody field,
Fought a good fight, bold with a noble zeal,
Yet yearning for the day when wars shall cease.
They ask that we complete their work, nor yield
Till selfish force gives way to common weal,
And men shall freely choose to dwell at peace.

J. H. B.

Let us not forget that life is brief; that time hurries, and that what we do to make our memories of earth beautiful in heaven, and heaven itself more populous than ever, must be done at once.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE AMERICAN CHURCH IN PARIS— ITS MEANING—ITS NECESSITIES

The Rev. George P. Atwater

(Continued)

But the question will be asked—That rich American Colony in Paris, surely they can and ought to provide for their Church, even though the war has driven them away from Paris for a time; surely they ought to care for it now, above all, when it is in need, and surely they will come back again and care for it after the war: for the Church must still be there after the war. and the answer is easy: They will not come back, for they would have too far to come, most of them—most of them have joined the "Silent Majority." There is now no rich American Colony in Paris, and it is long enough since there has been one. Even in Dr. Morgan's time it had begun to disappear, and one of his heart-breakers was to see the Church steadily nearing the financial shoals; and the majority of those who were left were laid to rest early in the administration of Dr. Watson, who was Dr. Morgan's successor in office. There are a few Americans who still keep a residence in Paris, who are people of some means above the average of men, and they have been generous to the Church beyond their measure; but they cannot maintain it alone, least of all now, when all Americans "Over there" are bearing double burdens. It is from America, not ravaged by war, and not from those who are bearing the burden, the Church in Paris must claim her support; and that, not only for today, but for a long time to come. For it is true, the Church must be in Paris after the war, and there will be an American Colony again in Paris after the war, but it will not be the Colony of other days to whom the Church was endeared by manifold association; rather, it will be a new people against whom the Church must create her clinetele—the old are gone; those who are now in America, will hardly go back; the old ties are broken. And again, a new Colony like to the old Colony will not build itself up again in Paris after the war because life is different everywhere, and life will will be throngs of sight-seers in Paris be more than different there. There after the war; there will be hosts of people on business errends of one kind and another, there will be thousands of students there who once went to other places in Europe, and the Church will be infinitely needed; it may be needed more than ever: but the building up of a Colony of retired, conservative, well-to-do, gentle people such as was that older other Colony—that will not be. They came in other days to seek a well-earned ease where life was gentle and manners gay; they brought their families with them; travel was not easy; they stayed in Paris long enough to acquire the taste for Paris, for one must really learn to love Paris. There were no automobiles, and after a time, staying was easier than going, and they stayed and became a part of permanent life. But life does not move by such a measured pace nowadays, and it is easier to flit than to stay, and the restless fit is upon us all; and again, the same class of people will not come.

But as was said, the Church must be there. It used to hurt us deeply in the earlier days of the war, when some one would coldly write; "It is my opinion that if you cannot afford to maintain that rich and costly church in Paris, which spends such an awful sum of money when everyone is suffering, then you ought to shut it up." The Church in Paris was not a waste of money then and it is not a waste of money now, and it will be more than ever worth while in the days that are coming. First, for the days that are gone: It is infinitely worth while that the Church should have been there, all these war days, a corporate expression of our American Christianity, so that it could be said to the Church's representative after four years of war-word—Tell your people in America that Christianity will never be the same here again because of what you have done; we could never go back to our old narrow ways again, Catholic or Protestant or any of the rest of us; even if we wanted to we could not, the people would not let us. They have seen the visions of the largeness of the American Christianity." It is infinitely worth while that the Church should be there today, ministered to by our own clergymen called there by service, and where the congregation, now that the civilians are gone, is almost all in uniform. But, it will even more than ever be needed, more than ever worth while, this American Church in Europe, and above all, in Paris, after the war—after the war when the re-construction work commences. For re-construction work "over there" is not going to stop with houses and villages and men's and women's ways of gaining a livelihood; there is a re-construction of outward methods of the expression of an inward faith which is coming at the same time,—indeed, it has long since begun, and the war is, and has been, a potent factor in clearing men's vision as to non-essentials and of riveting their attention to the essentials.

God did not save this Church of ours with its unique heritage of the simplicity of the faith and the fullest Christian liberty, with a wholesome reverence for the past and a dignity in outward expression free from superstition, for no real purpose. We have a mission, as the Church of the Reconciliation, if we will live up to our opportunity. And it is in France that the problem of Christian Reconciliation is seen in its simplest terms, because in France there are really but two categories of Christians, French Catholics and French Protestants, and the issue is not confused by hundreds of sects as it is here in America. There also, religion partakes more of the character of a national expression than it does here, or can; in France patriotism tinctures all with its own glowing hue. They are French Catholics and French Protestants, and for France's sake they want to understand each other; they want to find some common medium of expression.

You must have lived amongst them intimately, to realize all the meaning of it; you must have known what the strivings of scholarly men like Fonsegrive were for, and others like him, who were trying so beautifully to interpret the soul of France to herself: you must have talked with the Cure' and the pastor in the country village; and with the peasants by the roadside; and above all, you must have been part of their life and so comprehensively use their language and their tongue that they will know that you know them and will give you their confidence, so that there will be said to you as was said more than once to the present rector emperitus of Paris by representatives of the strongest religious faiths of France, "Monsieur, nothing could be such a blessing to France as to have in her life something which corresponds to your American Church of the Avenue de l'Alma; a worship rendered in the language of the people, with dignity and beauty and with reverence, yet all of it inspired with the free spirit of a free people. We do not have it in France, any of us, either Catholic, or Protestant; yet, it is only so that the Catholic and Protestant can speak in common terms.

But outward evidence of the same longing is open to all. The leading Revue of its class in France is the Revue Hebdomadaire; its editor is Fernand Laudet. It recently contained an article by Julien de Narfon, and Fernand Laudet and Julien de Narfon were colleagues as the secretaries of the last French legation to the Vatican while France was still represented at home. Fernand Ludet publishes in the Revue an article which Julien de Narfon writes, and in this article, four pages are given to the explaining of just what this American Church of ours is; to the end that this also might be said "Evidently Rome cannot speak to Protestantism directly, but we have, occupy a medium position between the two and stretching her hands in both directions, the American Episcopal Church. Let us serve ourselves of this intermediary."

It is not a chimaera, this faith of ours, that there shall be a Church of the Reconciliation. Rome has seen the meaning of its coming. "Family of Nations" is the watch-word of civic peace and mutual understanding between peoples; it shall not be that the State outdistances the Church in a real progress toward Brotherhood; toward Peace amongst men on the Earth; and preparing its coming this Church of ours may have a very real part, if we will. Toward this end there is no more necessary impulse than the placinng on a basis of fullest vitality and efficiency, our American Church in Paris. It must be made possible that this Church and its ministers be given the power to represent in France and to the French people, and to other peoples,—for France and Paris will be the Mecca to which their eyes will turn; the largeness of the vision of our American concept of Christianity; and to so interpret it as to show in a manner they cannot mistake, our sympathy and our intelligent understanding of that is ever burning on the Altar of the intensely vital religious faith which Soul of France. If we miss the seizing of this opportunity in the largest possible way, we will be defaulting of our most blessed heritage. We have not our freedom as a gift for ourselves, but rather we would keep it, as a trust for others.

The rector emeritus of the Church in Paris will be in America for some months at least. The date of his return to Paris is undetermined and will depend largely upon two things: the obtaining the necessary rest and renewed strength to take up the work there again, and also, the obtaining of an assurance of ample financial support for the Church and for the large French and Belgian relief work which was created by himself and Mrs. Watson when the war began and which they are still carrying on by the help of groups of French and Belgian colleagues with whom they have worked from the beginning. Dr. Watson will be glad to give any added information needed to persons interested in the causes he represents here, and he makes an earnest appeal to all who believe in these causes, to make early and definite response. for the needs of the Church in Paris are immediate.

Dr. Watson may be addressed either care of the Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, or, Care of the National City Bank, Akron, Ohio.

The Blue Ridge Missionary Conference

Those who are watching the development from year to year of the Blue Ridge Missionary Conference in the South are more than ever convinced that it means mightily in furthering the Kingdom of God. The 1918 Conference was nothing short of wonderful. Some good work was done, but, better still, greater desire was expressed for more Normal training—the training that shows how to do the things we would do. It was no small thing for a Conference to "capture the imagination" of some of the leaders of the largest Episcopal Church School for Girls in America. This was done, and other things, far-reaching, perhaps, were set in motion. But greater than anything yet accomplished by far are the possibilities bound up in the Blue Ridge Missionary Conference.

Dr. W. C. Sturgis led the intercessions each day, using a Book of Prayers and Bible readings of his own arrangement. Those who were willing to take part used, as each preferred, one of the prayers in this booklet or his own. The thirty minutes set apart for this daily intercessory service was not sufficient time for all who seemed to desire to pray aloud to the Eternal Father for the Church, the coming of His Kingdom, the nation, our enemies or as the topic for the day happened to be.

The addresses of special interest were by Dr. Sturgis; the Hon. T. W. Bickett, Governor of North Carolina; the Bishop of Asheville; the Rev. Mr. Derbyshire of the A. E. F.; the Rev. Dr. Brown of the Philippine Islands, and Dr. R. W. Patton, on "The Nation, Church and Negro".

The Episcopal Church delegation was the largest. Many were there with marked qualifications for leadership, and almost half of our enrollment was young enough for foreign missionary service. Two of them were volunteers, and several others left the Conference thinking seriously of enlisting.

The classes attracting most of our Church people were: The two-hour normal class, with practice teaching by Miss Bertha Richards of our own communion; the one-hour normal class, led by Dr. H. H. Horne of New York University; the missionary education of children, by Mrs. E. C. Cronk, and the class on "The Negro in the South", led by Dr. Archibald Trowick.

Among the young women in attendance, there were ten from St. Mary's School, Raleigh, chaperoned by the wife of North Carolina's Governor.

THE BROTHERHOOD CONVENTION AT NORTHFIELD

Vivid Descriptive Impressions of Western Massachusetts, the Leaders and Events

The Rev. George P. Atwater

From our Summer Conference at Racine, Wis., I went to the Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at Northfield, Mass. It was a long jump, physically, and it brought me into an entirely different atmosphere. In the first place, Western Massachusetts differs from Wisconsin in its geographical features. Wisconsin is beautiful, and its rolling country and many lakes are charming. Our Northeastern Ohio presents the intermediate features of hilly country, with most attractive valleys and numerous lakes. But Western Massachusetts is truly splendid, with its mighty hills and sunlit valleys. It is no wonder that Bishop Davies calls it the most beautiful diocese in the world.

Northfield itself is a place to delight the soul. I do not care to describe it, but I wish I might give an impression of it. I reached the Northfield Academy grounds about dark, after a long drive through the dust of the roads that led my venturesome spirit eastward in my automobile. I was directed to Gould Hall, and made my entrance thereto at the rear of the building, where all parcels are to be left. Every automobilist will applaud this arrangement, for no matter how attractive are the scenic effects of Bishop Davies' jurisdiction, the dust thereof ruins one's personal scenery to such an extent that to sneak into Gould Hall by the back door, and later to emerge from the front, somewhat cleansed, is a most satisfactory plan. By the time I was ready to be seen publicly, night had fallen. So when I stepped forth from Gould Hall to find my way to the Convention Hall, I was in a strange world—a most impressive but totally unchartered world. Before me was a panorama whose details were not easily assorted and distinguished in the darkness. I could see the dim outlines of the hills on every side, and had an impression of distant buildings scattered about, but the great impression was of lights. Not a great burst of lights, or any white way effect, but just interesting lights. Holding sway in this kingdom of light was the well-known moon, which, like myself, had attended the Racine Conference (but for a different purpose); the stars shone discreetly, as if willing for a time to be eclipsed by the speakers of a convention; a clock tower peeped above the trees, pointing an admonishing finger to all idlers, and isolated lights about the grounds prompted curiosity as to their purpose. To add to the beauty of the hour, the northern lights began to flare up in long, broad streamers of radiance.

I tried to visualize the nature of the country and the contour of the land. Judging as best I could in the darkness, it seemed to me that nature had made a great level valley, surrounded by sentinel hills, and then in the heart of it some mighty force had lifted up a broad ridge, and on this ridge a great soul had builded the spiritual and material structure known as Northfield. And later on I went to Round Top, a little crest in the midst of the grove, and stood beside the grave of Dwight L. Moody. I realized that all Northfield gave evidence of at least one interpretation of the words, "Though ye are dead, yet shall ye live".

A Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is always an inspiration. This Convention was of unusual excellence, because of the place in which it was held. A convention in a city is nerve-exhausting, but here it was refreshing. There was a concentration about it at every hour that was impressive. I have always felt a little confused by the sight of a group of Church leaders standing about for hours in the lobby of some modern hotel. It was much more pleasant to see them amidst the quiet beauties of Northfield.

I do not wish to report the sessions. That has been done fully in the Church papers; but I do wish to give some of my impressions. In the beginning, I might say that the arrangements for the Convention were splendid, and the program was carried out with vigor to its very end. The ones responsible for the selection of speakers and for the plans of entertainment, and all the rest of it, are to be heartily commended and congratulated. Every session was interesting. No session was what Dean Hodges so deliciously calls a "figure", which, interpreted, is "an arrangement in which the voices, one by one, come in and the listeners, one by one, go out". One of the most interesting features was the large attendance at all of the sessions of the summer colony of Northfield, many of whom, no doubt, received their first knowledge of the ideals of our Church from this Convention.

Northfield was hospitality itself. The authorities seemed to greet us as personal guests and friends, and they co-operated in every way to make us comfortable. I have been to many a summer school and to many a convention, but I never had such comfortable quarters as the ones provided at Gould Hall. An Episcopal Convention was something of a novelty at Northfield, too, and the kindly people were interested in our "ways". The very accommodating and efficient young woman in charge of the office at Gould Hall said to me: "You men stay up later at night and get up earlier in the morning than any other people who come here." They were interested, too, in the fact that some of our laymen and an occasional clergyman smoked. Deplorable as you may consider it, it was the first time that smoking had been seen on the campus at Northfield. (What an ambiguous sentence! What is deplorable—the fact that we began it, or that it had not been begun before, or the fact that no one had seen it? But THE WITNESS aims to please, so let the sentence stand.) This rather impressed the night watchman, who was of the invisible smokers, as he beguiled the midnight hours, because he confided to the management that "the Episcopals were a bunch of regular fellows".

The sessions of the Convention were marked by deep spirituality, and an emphasis upon personal religion and personal service. It was a crowded program in some respects, as the morning session lasted four hours, which was somewhat too long for continuous attention. But the matter of it was varied, and interest did not lag. The afternoons were given over to recreation and special conferences. The evening began with a gathering and address at Round Top, which corresponded somewhat with the sunset service at Racine. Then followed a great meeting in the Auditorium.

I hesitate to speak of individual speeches or speakers. It would mean too long an article were I to attempt to refer to the men or their subjects. No doubt St. Andrew's Cross will publish full reports. Every Churchman should read those reports. I shall confine myself to general impressions.

(To be continued)

The Bishop of South Dakota on Church Unity

AN EXCERPT FROM HIS CONVENTION ADDRESS

"Out of the struggle there must come the consolidation of the Church of God. Already gracious overtures are being made by individuals and bodies of Christians, conspicuously that of the Presbyterian communion, recently passed by their General Assembly. It was a cause of regret to me and to many others that the House of Bishops felt compelled to act negatively upon the memorial sent to it by Dr. Newman Smythe and other distinguished clergy among our fellow Christians. Doubtless a positive acceptance of their suggestion at this time was not possible; but it would seem that when our brethren of other names are asking for our leadership and co-operation we should at least have some constructive suggestion to advance in reply to their overtures. This conviction is burning itself deeply into the minds of many Church people, and is being voiced by leaders of the stature of Bishop Brent. I hope that we may soon see real progress in the drawing together of Christendom for its common task in a world which so sorely needs 'the unity of spirit and the bond of peace.'"

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

JAPANESE SURPRISE A MISSIONARY

Dean Smith Meets With a Happy and Unexpected Reception

A little while ago, when Dean Smith of the West Coast Convocation was making one of his monthly visits to one particularly hard part of the field, plans were made to hold a little meeting in a hotel room and show some pictures with a radiopticon. This would give the opportunity for a little sermon and bring the workers into contact with some of the local people. There was one Churchman in the town, a very unobtrusive man, but no one else that could be counted on to help, though there were plenty who would probably try to hinder. Word had been sent to this Churchman that the dean and a Japanese deacon were coming, so he was at the station when the train arrived along about noon. The first surprise he sprung upon the party was in the shape of a neat post-card size invitation to the meeting, over his own signature and that of the head teacher in the local boys' high school, a former student of the dean's, though not a Christian. These had been printed and had been delivered in person by these men, in order to get out just the men that were wanted.

The next surprise came when it was announced that the meeting was to be held in the town primary school, an almost unheard of thing. It seems that the principal of this school had been invited, and had offered his school as a better place than the hotel. A few old fogy officials raised a feeble protest, but the permission was granted, with the result that they preached and showed pictures not to a handful of people in a little room in a hotel, but to 150 or more people, all that could crowd into the largest available room in that school.

More than this, almost as soon as they had settled in their hotel, a telephone call came for the dean, asking him to come and address the boys in the high school. He went, and tried to give the 500 or more youngsters something to think about at least. He also invited them all to the evening meeting. The principal, six or seven teachers and fifty odd students came, and when the meeting was over the principal and the teachers came to the hotel and stayed till midnight, asking questions and discussing those great problems of life that every thinking man must try to solve, and which Christ alone can fully answer.

Personals

The Rev. Wm. Porkess, Rector of Grace Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., who has been enjoying a vacation at East Norwich, L. I., returned to his parish on the 5th inst.

The Rev. Joseph Gunn of St. Bartholomew's Church, Ely, Nev., has accepted a call to Emmanuel Church, Kellogg, Idaho, and entered upon the new duty September 1st.

The Rev. J. F. Hamaker has resigned the Rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Greensboro, Ala., and accepted a call to the Church of the Holy Comforter, at Gadsden, in the same diocese.

The Rev. G. M. Royce has resigned from the Rectorship of St. Thomas' Church, New Windsor, N. Y., and will retire from active service in the ministry. He will continue to reside in New Windsor.

The Rev. Roland J. Bunten has accepted a call to the Church of the Holy Innocents, Highland Falls, N. Y. For several years past he has been a teacher at the Pawling School, Pawling, N. Y.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Wm. P. Remington, Bishop Coadjutor of South Dakota, and chaplain of the base hospital, Mayo Unit No. 26, has reached France, according to announcements received by Bishop Burleson.

The Rev. John S. Littell, D. D., has resigned the Rectorship of St. James' Church, Keene, N. H., and accepted a call to St. James' Church, West Hartford, Conn. Dr. Littell is the well known author of "George Washington, Christian", "Some Great Christian Jews", "The Historians and the English Reformation", and other pamphlets and books.

The Rev. Gerald Lewis, for the past two years librarian of the Church Missions House, New York, has been appointed acting Rector of St. Andrew's Church, New Platz, N. Y., and will enter upon his new work the first of October. Mrs. Lewis has been on the staff of the Educational Department of the General Board of Missions for four years.

Miss Sarah E. Conway of Liberia has returned safely to her station at Cape Mount. Last autumn Miss Conway was obliged to leave the field on account of ill health. She spent a few months in the Canary Island. Much difficulty was experienced, owing to German submarine activity, in getting a steamer for the mainland. Finally, on March 4, Miss Conway secured passage on a Spanish boat for Fernando Po, a small island off the west coast of South Africa, but about 1,000 miles east of Liberia. After making this long detour and waiting several weeks for a northbound boat, Miss Conway finally sailed for Freetown, about 250 miles north of her destination. From there she made her way inland to Cape Mount, arriving there five months after sailing from the Canaries. She was obliged to travel about three times the distance of the islands from Liberia, and twice steamed past Cape Mount and Monrovia without being able to land.

W. Loyall Gravatt, son of the Bishop of West Virginia, has enlisted, and is at Camp Lee, says the Church News of that diocese. He had been in the Dupont Powder Company before the breaking out of the war, and when we entered the conflict he resigned and enlisted, and was in training last winter at Camp Lee. The President of the United States, however, at the request of the Duponts, ordered him back to the factory. He has been at work there ever since at a good salary, but was restless and so anxious to enlist that his repeated applications finally obtained for him leave of absence during the war, and he entered as a private at Camp Lee on August 8th.

Pueblo Will Entertain the Synod of the Sixth Province

The parishes at Pueblo, Col., will entertain the Sixth Provincial Synod (Province of the Northwest), October 13th to 16th, inclusive. The indications are, owing to war conditions and the fact that Colorado is on the extreme edge of the province, that the attendance of clerical and lay delegates may not be large, but it is expected that most of the Bishops in the province will be present. The province includes the Dioceses of Duluth, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Iowa and Colorado, and the Missionary Districts of North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Western Nebraska and Western Colorado.

Minnesota Will Present a Car to Bishop McElwain

In a statement bearing upon the presentation of a car to the Bishop of Minnesota, Mrs. Goldsmith, a deanery secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, says:

"This is the age of wonderful opportunity. We give of our time, our means and ourselves to the great cause of helping. The time has now come when we of the Diocese of Minnesota can not only show our love for our dear Bishop, but manifest it in a material way. Those in closest touch with Bishop McElwain's work realized some time ago what a great help in the conservation of time and energy a car would be to him. The discontinuing of many local trains by order of the government has caused this need to become imperative, and an automobile is now an absolute necessity. This is true especially in regard to the rural work, and will also greatly expedite his keeping his many appointments in the cities. We must take into consideration the fact that our Bishop is doing all the work formerly accomplished by two Bishops, and we owe him all the assistance in our power. A committee from the Woman's Auxiliary approached him to inquire his attitude in regard to the matter. He was much pleased, and thought he could manage the upkeep should a car be given him. But the men wanted a finger in our pie, too, so the closed car about to be decided upon will be the gift of the entire diocese."

Announcement

THE WITNESS is gratified to announce that about the middle of September it will open a Chicago office, and that our Managing Editor, the Rev. Charles J. Shutt, will have charge of it.

THE WITNESS feels certain that its readers will recognize that this action is a real advance, and will understand it makes for the betterment in every way of a Church newspaper which so quickly and positively has met with the favor and support of Church people everywhere.

Beginning publication in response to a real need, the Editors' venture of faith has justified itself, and within twenty months THE WITNESS has met with such popular favor that this advance step has become not only necessary, but imperative.

The Editors have been widely separated, performing the duties of their various ministries far apart. Because of this we have worked under a great disadvantage. But now, with the opening of the new office, and the devotion of his whole time to our affairs, and the management of The Parish Leaflet Company, our Managing Editor will co-ordinate the work of the other Editors, and the result will be a vastly better paper.

None, more than the Editors, realize how far short of our ideal we have come. Yet, notwithstanding the limitations under which we have labored, we believe the principles upon which THE WITNESS was founded are true, and that a popular-priced, non-technical newspaper is what the Church has long demanded. Our rapid growth in circulation, the commendation of thousands of readers, the co-operation of leading Churchmen, both clerical and lay, freely giving their services, convince us that THE WITNESS occupies a unique and necessary place in the Church's life.

The Editors, without the consent of the Managing Editor, desire to place on record our personal satisfaction that the Rev. Mr. Shutt has consented to this new arrangement, made possible through the co-operation and enthusiasm of our publisher, the Rev. L. W. Applegate. For Mr. Shutt is not only a successful parish priest, as the record of his ministry testifies, but he is a born newspaper man. The son and brother of newspaper men, he has had many years of training for this particular field of labor. Enthusiastic, yet conservative, he, with the other Editors of THE WITNESS, has long had a vision of a Church newspaper for the people. Since his connection with THE WITNESS he has justified the high opinion his brother Editors held of him.

As News Editor, and later as Managing Editor, he has brought to his work a finely trained mind, peculiarly adapted to this purpose. Now that he is to give himself to this work, freed from parish duties, the Editors can assure our readers that the ideals with which we started will be more largely realized, and THE WITNESS continue in its course as the Church's most popular and helpful newspaper.

THE EDITORS.

Date Set for Consecration of Suffragan Bishop-elect Demby

Wequetonsing, Mich.,
August 31, 1918.

THE WITNESS:

The postponed consecration of Suffragan Bishop-elect Demby will take place (D. V.) in all Saints', St. Louis, on Sept. 29, 1918.

Faithfully,
DANIEL S. TUTTLE.
Presiding Bishop.

Boston is Not so Bad

P. W. Wilson, a correspondent of the London Daily News, has been amusing the British public with an account in his paper of the mental and moral peculiarities of the people of Boston, Mass., says Nomad, in the Transcript of that city. He makes them out to be rather a queer lot. Not half bad, you know, since they recently forgave the Archbishop of York his being a Bishop! "I can pay his grace no higher compliment," says Mr. Wilson "than to say that Boston almost pardoned his prelacy." He credits the whole thing to the goodness of the Archbishop, and never mentions that Boston has really grown quite accustomed to Bishops, and since Phillips Brooks has actually been able on occasion to hold them in affection.

He tells, however, how nearly Lord Bryce came to being mobbed once here in Boston because, at a luncheon, he referred to Bishop David A. Greer of New York as "my lord". Perhaps there are readers who can remember Lord Bryce, with hat lost and white hair disheveled, rushing wildly across the Common toward the security of Chestnut Street, with a howling mob of State Street Magnates after him, all yelling: "Down with the prelacy!" Perhaps—but the Nomad's memory is so short for public events like that, the incident has entirely passed out of his mind. If it had been the flight of a saucy dove across his nose, the Nomad would have remembered it.

OUR CHRIST

I know not how that Bethlehem's Babe
Could in the Godhead be;
I only know the Manger-Child
Has brought God's life to me.

I know not how that Calvary's Cross
A world from sin could free;
I only know its matchless love
Has brought God's love to me.

I know not how that Joseph's Tomb
Could solve Death's Mystery;
I know there is a Living Christ,
Our Immortality.

—Harry W. Farrington.

BRECK SCHOOL 2095 Commonwealth Avenue, ST. PAUL, MINN.
Located in St. Anthony Park, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, possessing the advantage of access to both. One block from the campus of the Agricultural Department of the University. Offers a complete High School course, and will fit students for any college. Students of the University may register for work in religious subjects. Terms very moderate. Apply to Rev. C. E. Haupt, Superintendent.

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY
Sewanee, Tennessee, 2,300 feet elevation in the Cumberland Mountains. Ideal health conditions. Broadest certificate privileges. Highest rating War Department. Best moral and social influences. Owned and controlled by the twenty Southern Dioceses of the Episcopal Church. For catalogue Address the Superintendent.

Virginia Episcopal School
(LYNCHBURG, VA.)
For boys of character, position and ability, whose means will not permit them to attend our more expensive schools. Prepares at cost for college, university or immediate entrance upon the duties of life. Made possible by gifts of founders. Special terms to clergymen. Boarders for the present are limited to seventy-eight. One hundred and six acres of land. The session begins September 19, 1918. Apply for information and catalogue to the Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Rector.
Rev. Thomas Kinloch Nelson, Vice Rector.

National Cathedral School
A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof building in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College certificate privilege. Music, Art, Advanced, and Special Courses.
THE BISHOP OF WASHINGTON, President of the Board of Trustees
JESSIE C. McDONALD, M. S., Principal
HELEN L. WEBSTER, Ph. D., Academic Head
141t Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Cathedral School for Girls
ORLANDO, FLORIDA
High class Boarding and Day School. College Preparatory and General Courses. Capable Teachers. Careful Home Life. Delightful Climate. Low Rates.
Rev. Roderick P. Cobb, Rector.
19th year opens Oct. 2.

Racine College
RACINE, WISCONSIN
A Church School for your boy. Academy and Junior College.
B. Talbot Rogers, M. A., D. D., Warden.

THE HANNAH MORE ACADEMY
Simplicity and Excellence
Maryland Church School for Girls.
Catalogue. Reisterstown, Md.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelin, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE".
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind in America.
Address:
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

—ST. ALBAN'S SCHOOL—
KNOXVILLE, ILL.
For Church Boys and Others.
Certificate admits to University.
Moderate Rates for Board and Tuition. Write the Rector:
REV. L. B. HASTINGS
117 N. Peoria Street, Chicago

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls' College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President.
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal.

Collegiate School, Military
for Boys, Denver, Colo.
All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations.
Adress REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN,
Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

A SAFE and ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Women's Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY.
MRS. GUTGESELL'S CHRISTMAS NOVELTY GIFT BOOK
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
NO INVESTMENT SPLENDID PROFITS
For information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL, MINNEAPOLIS,
400-402 Sixth Avenue South MINN.

SHATTUCK SCHOOOL
Has behind it the Experience, Traditions and Ideals of fifty years. ¶Is a College Preparatory School with military drill and discipline under U. S. War Dep't. Reserve Officers' Training Corps. ¶In Grounds, Building and p ment is equaled by but few schools. "The school is full for 1918-1919. Enrollment should be made now for19 19-20."
Box 452. Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn.

SETTLEMENT TRAINING SCHOOL
LA GRANGE SETTLEMENT LA GRANGE, GA.
A PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH TRAINING SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL WORKERS
Courses in Settlement Nursing, Kindergarten Work, and special course of one year in Church and Social Work for graduates.
REV. R. T. PHILLIPS, Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
L. W. APPLEGATE.....Publisher
JAMES SHEERIN GEORGE P. ATWATER HENRY J. MIKELL
FRANCIS S. WHITE JAMES WISE
EDWARD C. CHORLEY

Published every Saturday at Hobart, Ind., where all business communications should be addressed.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

ADVERTISING RATES

Three dollars an inch each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates revised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

5% for two months; 10% for three months; 15% for six months; 20% for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

NOTICE

Our Chicago office will be opened in the course of a few weeks. In the meantime, all news and other matter intended for publication in THE WITNESS should be addressed to the Rev. Charles J. Shutt, Managing Editor, Hobart, Indiana.

EDITORIAL

Blood-Guiltiness

What the Church needs today, and what the Church is going to need more and more, when the boys come back, is a body of consecrated laymen, who take seriously their vows as soldiers of Christ, and who realize that to fight the world, the flesh and the devil requires something more than a languid interest in the battle line.

I am met, frequently and everywhere, with the statement, more or less politely stated, that the fault with the Church lies in the ministry and its serious limitations. I am in a position to know the ministry and its limitations, and I have already conceded in these columns that the ministry has about the same percentage of failures as any other business or profession.

But there is another side to the picture which is not ordinarily dwelt upon, and which I see also, and that is that when the laymen get a live and energetic minister, they proceed to kill his enthusiasm by their failure to respond to his charms, charm he ever so wisely.

The poor minister is simply an alibi for the failure of laymen, who only fancy that they would work under a live wire. I want to say a word about the laity as soldiers who have sworn to fight manfully under Christ's banner until their lives end, and to whom there belong certain duties and responsibilities which have nothing to do with the character or calibre of the parish priest.

In the first place, it is the duty of every layman who has a family to be the priest in his own family, at his own hearthstone, which should be the family altar.

If the layman neglects his priesthood there, it is humanly impossible for any rector, however rare and able he may be, to repair the damage done by this neglect. It is the duty of a man to provide his own family with tthe food for his body, to see that his children are educated, and, if they have souls, to see that the children of the family are fed and trained in the fear of God. It is here that the weakness of the Church lies, in that the average man neglects the first and most important duty of life.

Historically, religion had its origin in the family. It was Abraham and his family who broke away from the vile religion of his day and set up a family altar, at which he worshiped the Lord God.

It was the devotion of that family that lay at the foundation of the religion of Israel. It was out of thirty years in the family life at Nazareth that Christ came to found the Christian faith.

It is in the family life of the nation today that its strength or weakness lies, and it is out of that family life that our young men and young women, who are to be the parents of the next generation, get their inspirations for good or evil.

The Church and the Sunday school are all right in their several functions, but neither one of them can be expected to be a substitute for the priesthood of the father whose moral cowardice or spiritual indolence has neglected to care for the souls of his own children.

"But how," asks the conscientious father, "can I exercise the priesthood of which you speak? I acknowledge," the man may say, "that I am not fulfilling an obligation that I cannot dispute. But I have never been told how to exercise that priesthood which is ordained of God."

This is a fair question and demands a plain answer.

What can the head of a family do by which he may discharge his obligation to those whom he dearly loves?

I would say that the first duty of a father is to bear testimony to his faith in God in his family.

It is like this: The village church is open each day for a daily service. Only two or three ever come. The bell rings; the pastor is there, and perhaps one or two of his flock. What is the value of that daily service to the community? ?

That service, too often neglected, is a daily testimony to the community that Christ is the Son of the Living God. If there be a bell that rings, it reminds the people that God reigns in heaven.

In the same way, there should be a daily recognition in the family life that God lives and that we are dependent upon Him. In some families this takes the form of family prayers, but the habits of the family may be such that this is scarcely practical.

I would suggest, then, two things which will be perfectly feasible, and which will be a daily reminder that God lives in that household:

The first is that the head of the house say grace at meals. It is very well to delegate this duty from time to time to other members of the family, but the father should not habitually neglect doing it. The sound of the father's voice addressing God is a direct testimony to the family that God is a reality to him. And the second is that the father say his own prayers daily in his chamber, and that this habit is especially valuable on such occasions as when the father may be in the same room with his children.

The fact that they know that the father of the family is in the habit of praying for them, and sometimes with them, makes the boy who respects his father respect his Heavenly Father also.

Then in the matter of Sunday worship: The father who puts the Sunday newspaper, golf or business before worship on the Lord's day may be able to preserve his own faith, but he is deliberately undermining the faith of the young that he may be brought in contact with.

The prayers of the Church are so solemn, and the atmosphere of God's presence in His sanctuary is made so real, that it is a distinct shock to his faith to discern that golf or business is really placed before them.

No amount of talking can overcome the force of example with the child. The boy thinks straightly. It is only when he becomes a man that he is deceived by camouflage. And the boy whose father says one thing and does another is a far worse example to the son than a poor minister. If you love your boy, do not rob him of his faith, that you may have a good time.

Do not misunderstand me. I do not presume to say that a father may not play golf on Sunday—I merely say that he cannot substitute golf for worship without teaching his son that God is not a reality, and that golf it.

The third duty that a father owes to his son, besides that of testimony and example, is the duty of interest.

The father who fails to take an interest in his son's education misses two things: first, the great joy which he will find in it, and second, the great stimulus that it will be to his son.

It is equally true in religion. Most fathers would learn much themselves, help their sons tremendously, and get joy out of the process, if they would make it a rule once a week to do something of a specific nature with his children. Sometimes this duty can be delegated to the mother, who may have more aptitude for it. But to read over the Sunday school lesson or a chapter in the Bible each Sunday with the boy would stimulate his interest, and also your own in your religion.

And may I suggest, in conclusion, that before you call the minister a poor stick, ask yourself this question, and answer it honestly: Isn't the minister doing his work in the parish for other people's children better than I am doing my work in the family for my own flesh and blood? And isn't my priesthood to my own sons just as sacred, and ought it not to be far more obligatory than any duty which he may possess as priest in the parish?

If you want an example in the Bible of the failure of a father to do his duty, read Exodus iv, verses 18-26.

To neglect the spiritual nurture of one's own children is to be guilty of their blood, in the language of the Old Testament. It is this which David means when he prays, "Deliver us from blood-guiltiness, O Lord", for he who through neglect encourages his children to sin is guilty of their blood at the last day.

A STUDY IN THE ACTS

By Bishop Johnson

St. Luke was a Christian who was probably an intimate friend of the Virgin Mother (for he records matters about the birth of Jesus which only an intimate friend and a physician would be apt to know).

He was probably a native of Macedonia, and Prof. Ramsey thinks he may have been the man of Macedonia whom St. Paul saw and recognized, and whose cry to "come over and help us" he heeded.

Macedonia is just north of Greece, and we know that, when St. Paul crossed over from Asia to Europe, St. Luke substitutes the first personal pronoun "we" for the third personal pronoun "he". (See Acts xvi: 9-11.) Moreover, we know that St. Luke was very familiar with Macedonia and the sea, but does not go into such detail in his description of Jerusalem and Palestine. Therefore scholars have supposed that he was a devout Jew from Macedonia who was a disciple of Jesus from the earliest days, having probably heard the Messiah on some of his pilgrimages to the Holy City.

It was no doubt an intimate knowledge of the Holy Family that caused him to write to Theophilus the story of Christ's life, and it was his intimate friendship for St. Paul that caused him to write the life of that great Apostle. At any rate, it was the same Luke, the beloved Physician, to whom we are indebted for the Gospel, and are also indebted for the Acts.

How faithful and true a friend of St. Paul St. Luke was we also know, from St. Paul's testimony, for he bore the supreme test of a friend, that, when all others had forsaken St. Paul, the latter writes, "Only Luke is with me".

St. Luke was a friend that stuck to St. Paul in season and out of season, and to that fact, and his great love for St. Paul, we owe it that we know what we do know about the early Church, for without the Acts of the Apostles we would be hopelessly at sea on that subject.

Now the reason why we should study this record of the early Church is in order that we may ascertain for ourselves how much of modern religion that calls itself Christian is really a part of that religion which Christ founded, and how much of it is utterly foreign and alien to the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

For I am convinced, and I think you will be, if you stop to think (which I regret to say few people do) that everything essential to Christian faith and practice, and necessary for man's salvation, would be there where the Christian Church began its life, not only because Christ would not leave out anything necessary for their salvation, but because their wonderful progress and success seems to indicate that they knew the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God in a way that we do not know, and were able to produce a form of virile Christian living that is well worth our study and emulation. The story of the Christian Church begins where the story of Christ's life and death, His resurrection and ascension, leaves off.

(Acts i:1-3.)

The first verse of the Acts refers to St. Luke's friend, Theophilus, which name is very probably not a cognomen, but a name of endearment in Christian fellowship, for the word means "a lover of God".

It also refers to St. Luke's Gospel as the account of all that Jesus began both to do and to teach, and these words form an excellent introduction to this "Lives of the Apostles", for that was what it was their labor of love to carry on, just that and nothing else.

"Of all that Jesus began to do and to teach until the day that He was taken up." Here the teaching and the doing would seem to have stopped, were it not for the fact that St. Luke goes on to explain, "after that Christ, through the Holy Ghost, had given commandments unto the Apostles whom He had chosen, speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God."

Now this modification deserves our attention, for it intimates that Christ had, during the days following His resurrection, known as the great forty days, taught the Apostles explicitly what they were to do in planning and organizing His Kingdom.

The author also emphasizes that Christ was seen of them during these forty days, demonstrating the fact that He had risen from the dead "by many infallible proofs".

Now, back of this special training which the Apostles enjoyed during these forty days is a particular background, which it may be well for us to study.

The Idea of the Kingdom

People think of the Christian religion in such different ways. With some it is merely an abstract philosophy; with others, an internal emotion; with others, an ethical culture.

Up to the time of Christ, from the days of Abraham, it was a definite institution—first the family of Abraham, then the tribes of Judah, then the kingdom of Israel.

Those to whom St. Luke was writing were familiar with the kingdom of Israel, and to those who first read these words, the phrase, "Kingdom of God" or "Kingdom of Heaven" would be at once associated with the other phrase, "kingdom of Israel" of which the earliest Christians were all members.

People interpret words and phrases in the light of previous association.

Today the argument rages fiercely as to whether Christ founded a visible institution, with definite marks and characteristics, or whether He merely "was a teacher come from God", who set forth certain chains of ideas. Whatever the argument may be now, there was no argument then, for to be a follower of Christ in the Pentecostal days was to be baptized into the fellowship of the saints and the household of faith.

The Old Testament teaching of the character of the Messiah's work in its relation to other kingdoms is well set forth in the Book of Daniel (ii:-44). "And in the days of these kings (i. e., the Roman kings) shall the God of Heaven set up a Kingdom, which shall never be destroyed." It is interesting to compare these words of the prophet with Christ's own words:

"Upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It may be well to say a word about our Lord's use of the word Church, in St. Matthew xvi:18, because He has not used the word before, and only uses it once again. Still, He uses the word, and we cannot, therefore, ignore it.

Christ uses the word Church for the first time when He has brought the Apostles to an acceptance of His Divinity, and, taking this declaration of St. Peter's faith, He makes the man and his faith the rock upon which he will build a definite something, which He calls "His Church", and which shall be eternal.

Having reached this point in His ministry, He at once begins to "show the disciples how He must be killed and raised again the third day" (verse 21). His active ministry has accomplished its work, and He begins His passion.

If Christ were going to found an institution, this would be the exact time when He would most likely mention it. For until the Apostles acknowledged His Divinity, the Church would have no reason for its existence. Having, therefore, stated upon St. Peter's confession that He would build a Church, He begins to prepare for that supreme sacrifice, which St. Paul so beautifully describes in Ephesians v:25-27: "Even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave Himself for it, that He might present it to Himself, a glorious Church."

Whatever Christ and St. Paul mean by their use of the word "Church" in such sentences as these, I am very sure that they do not mean—nothing.

The preaching of John the Baptist, and of the Apostles, and of Christ Himself, in the parables of St. Matt. xiii, and the conversation of Christ with Nicodemus, in St. John iii, would seem to indicate that Christ was not content to be merely a prophet or teacher, but claimed to be the founder of an institution that should prevail over all other institutions in the earth—an organism which should be the climax of all organisms—a kingdom which should absorb all other kingdoms. And so, when Christ, during the great forty days, was speaking to the Apostles of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God, He was speaking to them of something. What that something was it shall be our aim to show in these sketches in the Acts of the Apostles.

(To be continued.)

HOWE SCHOOL

A thorough preparatory school for a limited number of well-bred boys.

For illustrated circulars, address the Rector,

REV. JOHN H. McKinzie, D. D.,
Box W. Howe, Indiana

Berkeley Divinity School

Middletown, Conn.

Address REV. WILLIAM PALMER LADD, Dean

THE OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Teabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918. 8-10-13

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"THE NEW DEATH"

A Beautiful Re-emphasizing of the Christian Idea of Death

Book Review by Bishop Mikell

It was Christ who "brought immortality to life" by His own resurrection. He made man certain for the first time of the immortality of every man. He was the first-fruits, but not the whole harvest, of them that slept. Just as death was the common lot of every man, so the resurrection from the dead was now known to be the lot of every man. But it needed the almost universal harvest of death which the present war has reaped to impress anew on man's mind the hope and knowledge of a universal harvest of life after death.

This new hope, or rather renewal of the old hope, of immortality is a common thought in many writings concerning the war. But nowhere is it more beautifully expressed than in a recent volume by Winifred Kirkland, called "The New Death". She first brings before us the universal experience of death today:

"Never before in history has death been so prominent a fact. Always before it has been possible to avoid thinking about it. Today no one can escape the constant presence before his mind of dissolution. No one can forget them, no one can get away from them—those boys dead upon the battle fields of Europe. We are used to speaking of this or that friend's philosophy of life. The time has come when every one who is to live at peace with his own brain must possess also a philosophy of death."

To make clear the idea of the new aspect of death, the author considers it in relation to the idea of death that has characterized older generations. She reminds us of the Greek idea of a personal survival of the human personality in a region that was not heaven or hell, but in a region of pale, sunless existence, which was merely a lifeless reflection of earthly life. The ancient world rejoicing in sunshine and strength had only pity for the poor shade who had now "no steadfast strength nor power at all in moving, such as was aforetime in his supple limbs". As one reads, he remembers Alkestis going down into the gloom of the under world; he thinks of Antigone, as she bids farewell to the sun, and of the shades as they gather around the figure that has come to give them their relief, in Stephen Phillips' "Christ in Hades".

The next view of death Miss Kirkland considers is what she calls the medieval standpoint. "The life after death, instead of being a denuded reproduction of previous existence, was a glorious realization of it, reflecting in its imperial hierarchy of spirit the worldly hierarchy of Church and state. The Greek exalted the present at the expense of the future; the medieval man exalted the future at the expense of the present."

It is when Miss Kirkland speaks of the modern view of death that one for the first finds one's self in disagreement with her. The modern view of death, she says is the scientific and agnostic; it refuses to believe at all in life after death, or at best says that we can know nothing of it. Has the modern view of death of the average man been so materialistic and agnostic? Has not this been only the view of a few intellectuals, who indeed may think themselves the leaders of modern thought, but who have never really been able to convince themselves, and certainly have not been able to convince others, that this life is all and death the end of it all? Have these modern Athenians, who, "when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked"—are these modern Sadducees, who believe that there is no resurrection, been numerous or had great influence on thought? We acknowledge, indeed, that the average man has not always lived in this world as though he really believed in a life to come. But at the same time we wonder if Miss Kirkland really knows what the Christian Church has been teaching, and multitudes of Christians have believed of life after death? She says: "Before 1914, we have seen the disestablishment of the Church as an unquestioned arbiter." Perhaps she has dismissed the Church too summarily. Certainly we find nothing in her beautiful teaching on the spiritual aspect of death which the Church has not thought and been teaching for generations.

But if our author has given too important a place to the teachings of science or to the thinking of a few agnostic scientists, on the subject of death, when she says that "science has been an unquestioned arbiter", she goes on to say that since 1914 we have seen the disestablishment of science. We have seen what happened to people whom science commands, so that we can never again feel our old trust in its dicta. What has science to say about our young men dead? What comfort does it offer for their extinction or our own? Only the hideous relevation that it is science itself that is destroying the civilization which science itself built up." While we cannot agree that science has entirely built up our modern civilization—if it had, there would have been no people left with soul enough to hasten to the warfare against humanity—we are grateful that we may conclude from what Miss Kirkland says that after all not the failure of Christianity, but the success of science is responsible for the war.

It is of the new aspect of death which Miss Kirkland writes so beautifully, and whether it is as new as she thinks it is, we are glad to hope with her that it will have a more potent influence than ever before in our thoughts and lives. Of this she says: "The new death now entering history as an influence is not Greek, nor mediaeval, nor modern. It is so far mainly an immense yearning receptivity, an unprecedented humility of both brain and heart toward all the implications of survival. It is a great intuition entering into the lives of the simple, the sort of people who have made the past and will make the future. It does not matter in the least whether the intellectuals share this intuition, and it does not matter whether or not the intuition is true, or whether future generations returning to the lassitude of peace shall again deny the present perception—what matters is the effect upon emergent public life and private of the fact that everyday men and women are believing the dead alive."

The new thought of death is marked by a great humility. It is not that we think we know all about death and the life into which it leads, but that we no longer shun knowing or thinking; that we are no longer afraid to let our thoughts dwell on death; that we are willing to accept any teaching and any experience of death, and so rightly is our thought directed to the young men who are dying. Many quotations are given in this book from what the boys who have gone have said and practiced in regard to dying. This from Donald Hankey: "Never was such a triumph of spirit over matter. As for death, it was in a way the greatest joke of all. In a way, for if it was another fellow that was hit, it was an occasion for tenderness and grief. But if one of them was hit, Oh, death, where is thy sting? One by one death challenged them. One by one they smiled in his grim visage and refused to be dismayed. They had been lost, but they had found the path that led them home. And when at last they laid their lives at the feet of the Good Shepherd, what could they do but smile?"

Again, the new death is marked by a new sharing of sympathy. "The cry of a mother echoes from stricken Servia, 'O if I were the only mother who is weeping now, it would be nothing, but there are a million mothers weeping today'. It is from the sharing of grief that has sprung the new helpfulness that is expressing itself in every line of endeavor and activity in our life today. Again, the new thought of death has given men and women a new strength to bear sorrow and bereavement." One's own serenity in suffering must be the only sure way of helping one's neighbor. Our boys have died, therefore we must live, is an arresting and illogical conclusion; but surely it is the one that has long actuated both the armies and households of Europe, and must now support us of the United States, a nation still new to anguish."

The new thought of death impresses us anew with the thought of a spiritual growth of the soul after death, and the vivid life of immortality. This is beautifully expressed in these two quotations from Miss Kirkland's book:

"Ghosts do not say,
'Come, what was your record when you drew breath?'
But a big blot has hid each yesterday,
So poor, so manifestly incomplete.
And your bright Promise, withered long and sped
Is touched, stirs, rises, opens, and grows sweet,
And blossoms, and is you, when you are dead."

"But now my nights are filled with flowered dreams
Of singing warriors, beautiful and young;
Strong men and boys, within whose eyes there gleams
The triumph song of worlds unknown, unsung;
Grim Death has vanished, leaving in its stead
The shining glory of the living dead."

The whole aspect of the new idea of death which this beautiful book unfolds is a spiritual aspect, and therefore it is with a sense of disappointment that we come to Miss Kirkland's ideas of the religious views which she thinks will be the outcome of this attitude towards death. Of this she says: "The new religion, which expresses itself in purely moral performance, is not a religion, it is a system of ethics; it leaves out the spiritual element and gives itself only to practical good work. Moral performance must be the outcome of any true religion, but the motive power of that moral performance must be a spiritual force which can only come from worship of God. The worship of the person of Christ, which Miss Kirkland belittles, only can produce the copying of the character of Christ, which she exalts.

In her estimate of the religion of the future she says: "One cannot say whether the religion to come will clearly label itself Christian." If it does not, it will prove itself very ungrateful, for it is Christ who first brought immortality to light, and the idea of the new death is as old as Christ's resurrection.

Miss Winifred Kirkland's book is, however, a beautiful and thoughtful re-emphasizing of the Christian idea of death, and will bring peace and comfort to many bereaved hearts today. And therefore I thought it timely to write of it in our devotional column of THE WITNESS.

---

* *

I Will Do

What I Can

With What I Have

Where I Am

Now!

—Galilee Mission, Philadelphia

* *

The Most Religious Nation in the World

The Rev. Dr. Watson, Rector Emeritus of the American Church of the Holy Trinity, Paris, France, gave an address at a community service held in Akron, Ohio, on a recent Sunday evening, in the course of which he said that France is the most sincerely religious nation in the world. Not only those who stay at home are religious, but those going to fight, have developed a remarkable insight into the higher things of life. He predicted that the men returning from war would demand greater sincerity of the people at home. " The plight of the gentle-born is especially pitiful," Dr. Watson said, in speaking of the suffering in France. "They do not like to ask for assistance, especially for themselves. Very many of them were deprived of everything but their savings when the war broke out, and in the absence of the wage-earners of the family have had to spend that. The first two winters of the war they got along. Last winter it was a hard pinch, and this coming winter many of those women will die—too proud to beg of people who are also in hard straits."

The American Church is of great assistance to the French people. They do not hesitate to seek help there for those stricken by the war. Two hundred and forty thousand articles and about $40,000 in money were given out the past year.

From the standpoint of work, Christ defines the great man as he who prepares the way of the Lord. A great man's work is preparatory, not constructive. Finality is not given to human achievement.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by G. W. J.

The Boston Herald gives an interesting account of Lelland Hundson, from Paxson, Alaska (200 miles north of Fairbanks). Thinking he must register from "the States", he gave as his address his mother's, in Seattle. On May 22, he was ordered by the board at that place to report for duty. He asked for a two weeks' extension, because a boat did not leave Fairbanks until late in June, but he received a reply to "take the first train, or be classed as a deserter". The nearest railway is at White Horse, more than 1,200 miles away. He left Paxson May 26th, going 42 miles by dog teams in two days, in which he went through a blizzard; then 72 miles by buck-board in two days, in which he had four relays of horses; down the Tannana river and through the Bates rapids for 100 miles on a mail barge, and arrived at Fairbanks June 2nd. He took a steamer for Dawson June 20, and went 900 miles down the Tannana and up the Yukon, arriving at White Horse July 5th. While on the Yukon, which makes a wide bend and goes north to the Arctic Circle, Hudson, with 30 other selects, drilled on the upper deck of the boat, under the light of the midnight sun. He took the White Pass railroad from White Horse to Skagway, paying $20 for passage of 110 miles, and arrived in Skagway in time to engage passage on a boat for Seattle, which left July 7th and arrived there July 9th. He reported for duty, and when he presented vouchers for expenses of nearly $400, the officers became aware of the length of journey necessary to bring him there.

Somewhere about the date of Aug. 15, delegates from more than 50 theological schools in all sections of the country met at Harvard University for a three-day conference to discuss problems of theological education growing out of the war. Besides this, topics discussed included the causes affecting the number and quality of theological students, and measures to be taken to meet the shortage of ministers after the war. The delegates were addressed by President Lowell of Harvard, President Mackenzie of Hartford Theological Seminary, President Barbour of the Rochester Theological Seminary, Dean Bartlett of the Philadelphia Divinity School, and President McGiffert of Union Theological Seminary.

Accommodations for delegates and their wives were provided by the University in Gore Hall, one of the dormitories, and the conference sessions were held in the faculty room of University Hall. Many pleasant entertainments were planned as well.

The Literary Digest prints a poem by Thomas Maynard, which it describes as "an outpouring of a heart grateful for all the joy of living". Maynard is described as "having an honest interest in everything about him":

"God, who taught a lovely tune
To the lyric heart of June—
That fine tune she dances to
All the singing summer through;

Who makes the galleon clouds to swim
In the great skies bright and dim;
Who shows me as a flag unfurled
The gallant glory of the world;

Who leads me in His giant wars
To shout defiance to the stars,
And gives me, when we ride together,
A sword, a bugle and a feather;

Who calls my youthful throat to chaunt
When the specters, black and gaunt,
Straddle in my path, and fade,
To see me gaily unafraid;

Who set me singing from my birth
All the gladness of the earth—
All its joys and jollity
Singing in the heart of me!

In this chorus I have given
Praise to all that under heaven
Sweetly lives—and praise the most
To Father, Son and Holy Ghost!"

The Associated Press gives an account of the restoration of the parchment scrolls of the law to the various synagogues in Tel Aviv and Jaffa. "These scrolls of the law of Moses, all written by hand, and preserved in magnificently ornamented cases, some of them in solid silver, are the most holy possessions of every Jewish community. So when Djemal Pasha, in his hostility to the Zionists, carried out the tyrannical evacuation of the bulk of the Jewish population of Jaffa, in April, 1917, the Jews carried their sacred Toroth with them into exile, lest they should fall into the hands of the Turks. These sacred scrolls had been carefully guarded by the Jews at Petach Tikvah (Mulebbis), and were brought back in solemn procession to Jaffa. A triumphal arch was erected at the northern confines of Tel Avio, every house was decorated with flowers and bunting, and the whole of the Jewish population turned out. The chief rabbi of Jaffa invoked blessings upon the British government and the British army, and expressed the hope that success would crown the efforts of the Zionists' Commissioners. Then the shofar or ram's horn was blown and the scrolls were carried to the various synagogues to which they belonged. There were processions of school children crowned with flowers, the Yemenites carrying small lambs and bearing palms in their hands.

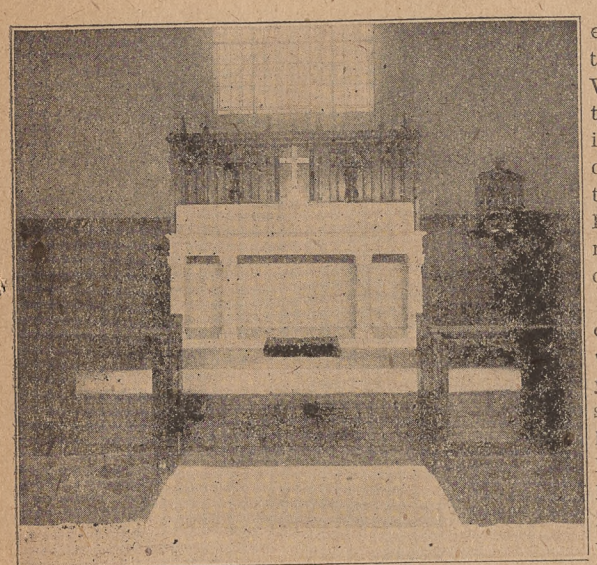
The Rev. Lyman Rollins of Marblehead, chaplain of the 101st Infantry, A. E. F., has been spending a few weeks in the United States, sent here by Gen. Pershing on war business. He preached in the Church of the Advent, Boston, and addressed a mass meeting in Faneuil Hall, Bostton. Extracts from his address follow:

"A gross materialism, working since the Franco-Prussian war, laid hold of the minds of the Germans, and has been working out until it manifested itself in a war machine. The same thing laid hold of us not long ago, manifesting itself in a different way, not in a military system, but in a commercialism that was stamping out of our lives and our souls and our society the very best that God had put into them.

"If we let God's purpose work out in us, we are coming out a cleaner and a purer people; our individual souls will be cleaner, our nation will be cleaner, the world will be purer, after it is all over.

"God is showing the world how far it can get away from Him when it goes on its own hook and not according to His plan. Frightful as the cost may be, I feel that somehow we shall come to realize that the results were worth the cost. God is overruling the selfish passions of men to create within these men something new and grand. This war is furnishing an opportunity for the Church of God the like of which it never had before, and perhaps will never have again. Our men are looking at life from a different angle. Every American soldier I meet has the essentials of religion within his soul. The military authorities are doing everything possible to safeguard your boys. These boys are utterly unselfish. They share and share alike. What a pity it is that we need a war to get us to pray! What will the Church of God do when these boys come back? Help the Churches and the people at home to realize what these boys are facing, the change that is taking place in them, and prepare for their home-coming."

Carrying a trunk full of photographs of relatives for the boys at the front, Chaplain Rollins sailed from an Atlantic port the other night for the war zone, leaving behind a last word of comfort that our men were well fed and cared for, and to pay no attention to disturbing rumors, which were only German propaganda, and to "give, and give until it hurts".



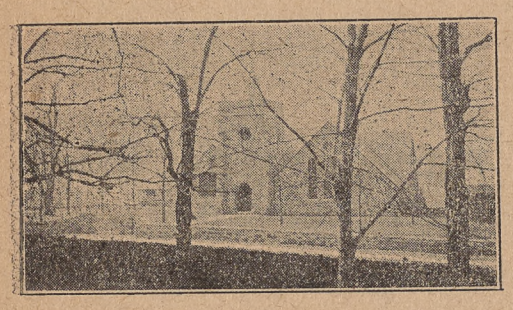
From all we've heard and read of the demands upon Chaplain Rollins, individually and collectively, and the ground covered by him during his short stay, we would think being in the war zone much easier and less strenuous.

It is estimated that the enrollment of students at the theological seminaries of the country has fallen off 50 per cent this fall by reason of the war. This means a further shortage of ministers in every religious body, and this prospect calls for emergency effort.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

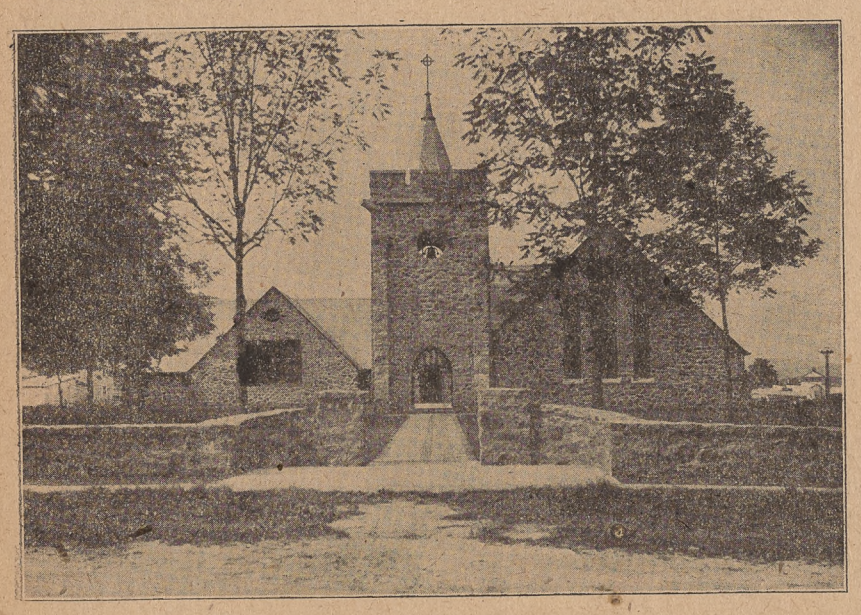
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A BEAUTIFUL RURAL CHURCH AT THE PLAINS, VIRGINIA



The most important event of recent years in the country parishes of Virginia was the consecration of the beautiful and ideally appointed church of massive stone construction—Grace Church, The Plains, Va., on Friday morning, June 28th, at 11 o'clock

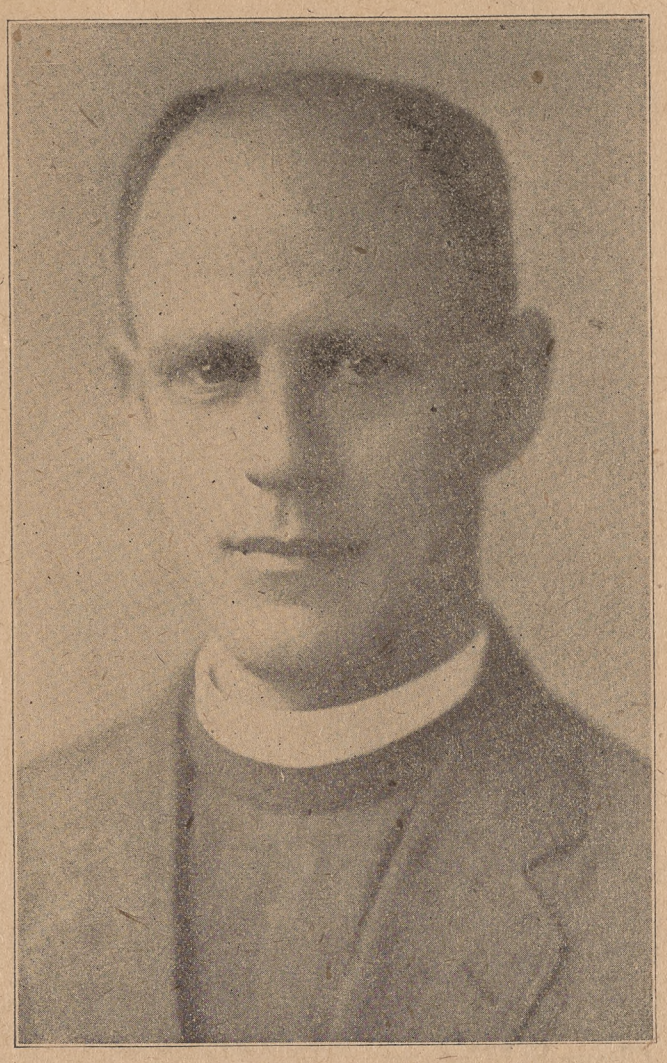
This "goodly parish church of rural Virginia" was commenced only two years ago, under the inspiration and splendid leadership of its present Rector, the Rev. Edmund Lee Woodward, M. A., M. D., supported by a loyal vestry and a people "with a mind for the work". It is a witness in stone of what great things God hath wrought where devoted hearts are united in His service. Here is a typical rural parish, which in four years has given a third of its former bounds to strengthen a weaker neighboring parish, doubled its own communicant membership, quadrupled its gifts for current support and missions, provided the unprecedented sum of nearly $50,000 for rebuilding the rectory and church and for a new parish house—an entire remaking of its equipment made the community life center about the church to a gratifying degree, and led its community and neighboring communities in patriotic endeavors which have received nation-wide commendation.



No wonder the hearts of many were full of thanksgiving to Almighty God for His good hand upon them in giving the opportunity and the ability to accomplish so great a work.

The happy day was all that happy hearts could wish in propitious sky and weather. In spite of busy harvest time, every seat was occupied, and extra chairs filled the aisles. The beloved Bishop of Virginia, the Rt. Rev. Robert A. Gibson, D. D., was consecrator, Bishop Brown being also present, with the Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., dean of the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, preacher of the day, and twelve other clergy, representing various parts of the diocese. The Rev. Dr. John McGill, former Rector of Grace Church, though too unwell to be present, sent a message of greeting, and similar messages were received from over fifty of the clergy and representative laity of Virginia and neighboring dioceses. The Revs. B. D. Chambers of Christ Church, Millwood, and Wilfred E. Roach of Trinity Church, Marshall, whose arrival was delayed by unforeseen contingencies, occupied seats in the congregation. The rest of the clergy were vested and took part in the service with the Bishops, as indicated below.

The Vestry receiving were: James R. Foster, Senior Warden and Treasurer; E. C. Turner, Junior Warden; A. W. Fleming, Register; N. L. Turner, J. H. C. Beverley, D. H. Meade, J. T. Cochran, A. E. Sinclair, R. R. Turner, R. Bland Beverley and R. M. Meetze.



The noble parish church, seating normally about 300, with its parish hall, with 500 capacity, was designed by Mr. Irwin Fleming, the well-known architect of Washington, who has spared no pains to make it a peculiarly fine example of early English rural Gothic architecture of the Thirteenth Century, the age of the Magna Charta of English liberties in Church and State.

The holy table of white Indiana limestone is of chaste dignity. Its massive proportions and pillared columns suggest the famous painting, "The Vigil". It is surmounted by an exquisitely carved reredos of old English fumed oak, in harmony with the completely appointed furnishings of quartered oak, and with the wainscot and open woodwork ceiling. The sanctuary is paved with Gothic tiles of blended tints, with quaint insets of Christian symbolism, designed after the sanctuary pavement of a Fourteenth Century church in Wiltshire, England.

The windows are of cathedral glass, with one memorial window of stained glass, the figure of St. Luke, the beloved physician.

The massive walls and tower, built of 1,000 four-horse loads of local stone hauled from the neighboring farms of R. H. Downman, Esq., and others, as a free-will offering of the farmer-owners, will stand for centuries to come. The variegated tints of green and brown in the rustic, unhewn stone give a rare charm to enhance the generally harmonious effect. The tower, Norman in its strength and proportions, is surmounted by a truncated spire, from which rises a beautiful Celtic cross of copper. The bell of the old church is at present hung in the tower, a prophecy of future chimes to peal forth in days to come rich harmonies to bid to the worship of the sanctuary.

The Rev. Dr. Edmund Lee Woodward

The cornerstone of the new church itself bears the date—1855—of the building of the former church, the name Grace and the date—1917—of the laying of the present cornerstone. Above it will be a tablet recording the fact that it was laid wih the silver trowel used in 1793 to lay the cornerstone of the National Capitol by George Washington, the Father of his Country and the faithful son of a rural Virginia parish, in which he served as vestryman.

The model parish hall, built as an annex to the church, is of the same material, and in harmonious keeping

Though the Church has been planted in Virginia since 1607, this is, so far as is known, the first time that a distinctively rural parish has attained anything like such a completeness of equipment for efficient work, in all its varied relationships of worship, teaching, social life, and general community helpfulness; or such a wealth of inspiring witness to the world-wide and age-long communion of saints whose lives give strength and beauty to that sanctuary not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Appreciation of Deceased Churchman

At dawn of July 10, the Rector of St. Mark's Church, Blue Rapids, Kas., was awakened in his tent at the Y. M. C. A. camp, southwest of town, by a stranger, who said: "Chan. Brown died suddenly this morning at 4 o'clock."

Three days later the body of Channing J. Brown was laid to rest from the precincts of the little church to which, for parish and Sunday school, he had self-sacrificingly given of his time and strength for many years. The church held hardly half the concourse of people that had gathered to honor his memory.

The death of Mr. Brown comes as a distinct and serious loss to town, county and diocese. Serving the state as an official for years, at Topeka, he later made his home at Blue Rapids, developing there a fine orchard, meanwhile giving of his rare executive ability for the development and upbuilding of many useful interests and institutions. As junior warden of St. Mark's, he made the interests of the Church unweariedly his own. As chairman of the County Y. M. C. A. Committee, he wrought a work whose possibilities are only just now becoming manifest. His Rector, coming back from the "Y" camp, where as director of nature study he came in touch, on two successive weeks, some forty boys and fifty girls, has become increasingly convinced of the high value of this work, which owes much to the executive ability of Channing Brown. In the counsels of the diocese Mr. Brown had long held an important part. It may not be widely known that he was a strongly formative element in the election of both of our present beloved Bishop and his equally honored predecessor; and representative people of the diocese will well remember how, a few years ago, when grave friction had begun to mar diocesan counsels, it was the diplomacy and tact of Channing Brown, quite as much as any other factor, that eliminated factional clashing and restored harmony. As a diplomat, Mr. Brown was rarely gifted, and his rare good sense, his firm persistence in what he held to be a right course, howsoever much of personal disadvantage might accrue to himself personally thereby, and his far-sighted outreach into the future in his planning for community interests, have made him one whom a whole community mourns.

In the early morning of July 28 a commemorative celebration was held in St. Mark's Church. Despite intense heat, many parishioners gathered to express their gratitude to God for the life and example of one whose large place in the Church and the community it will be very hard to fill.

P. D. PEABODY.

Diocese of Vermont

The recent order abolishing all Red Cross chaplaincies was issued a few days before two clergymen of the diocese, the Rev. F. B. Leach of Montpelier and the Rev. A. C. Wilson of Bellows Falls, both nominated by the War Commission, were to report in New York for final instructions before sailing for France a few days later. They will continue their parish work.

The Rev. W. C. Bernard, who is secretary of the convention, leaves Newport for Brattleboro Sept. 1. The former Rector of Brattleboro, the Rev. J. F. Virgin, is engaged in Boy Scout work in Harrisburg, Pa. During the summer the Rev. W. F. Madeley of the District of Tokyo has been in charge of the parish, before returning to Japan at the close of a year's furlough.

Bishop Hall, in the August number of the diocesan paper, The Mountain Echo, published an article on "The Declining Birth Rate", which deserves wide reading and serious consideration. The Bishop quotes most alarming comparative statistics from an address by Mr. Louis L. Dublin, statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., delivered before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and printed as a Congressional pamphlet.

Eucharistic Hymn

To Thee, dear Lord, I come in memory
Of that last supper's eucharistic grace,
Where Thou wert host, as Thou art even now,
Although but dimly I perceive Thy face.

I come, for Thou canst water change to wine,
And dost dispense sweet hospitality
To all the saints who follow in Thy steps,
That also I win immortality.

I come to Thee, whose love my pride has shamed,
And in repentance drewst me to my knees;
As I confess my sins, absolve them, thou,
That white again my robe Thine eyes may please.

To fire my heart with love to all mankind,
I come to share in Thy communion's grace
With all the saints, insuring comradeship
Which lacking, no communion could take place.

Repentant and forgiving, thus I come
To Thee, supremely potent, kind and wise,
To solve my problems, and my griefs console,
For healing of my body and my mind.

Guidance I need, at parting of the ways;
Wisdom I need, with enemy or friend;
Counsel I need, my problems to resolve,
For these upon Thy mercy I depend.

I come, and ask Thee work Thy miracle
In cup torrential of redeeming grace,
Which whoso drinks shall never thirst again;
In bread which other hunger shall quench.

To feed the body of my inner man,
So consciousness at death he may retain,
Developing all senses spiritual,
Thy voice, Thy touch, Thy vision to attain.

When round Thy throne with angels I am bid,
To share immortal feasts viaticum,
I shall desire I had been prepared
By eucharistic habits, so I come.

I come to Thee, for at this sacrament
Through matters veil the spirit clearest glow,
I apprehend the souls I loved that went before,
And join with them in prayers for their repose.

I come for strength, because Thou beckonest
To follow to a distant Calvary, me,
And though I rise to make that pilgrimage,
'Tis but in faith that near me Thou wilt stay.

I eat and drink, for this is victory!
There is no pain, no doubt, it cannot cure;
This happiness is my immortal life—
Henceforth my joy of heaven is secure!

Kenneth Sylvan Guthrie
Rector of All Saints' Church, New York.

A story of the late Father Fulton of Boston College which will be new to many persons is related by a correspondent of the New York Sun. While riding in a car past the Cathedral, the witty Jesuit was addressed by a man, who said that Catholics, instead of building expensive churches, would better give the money to the poor. "I think," replied Father Fulton, "I have heard that remark made before."

"By whom?" said the stranger.

"By one Judas Iscariot," was the reply.

Repentance, faith, the trembling cry of the sinner for pardon, those glances toward heaven that tell of new-born hope of peace, all aspirations for a better life, all longings for strength in our weakness, and light in our darkness—all these are gathered and fused together in a way too great, too tender, for expression in human language, in the Sacrament of HOLY BAPTISM.

The hand that is thrust into every hole will somewhere find a snake to bite it.—Ex.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Religious Work at the Great Lakes Station

There are three agencies helping the "boys" with their spiritual training at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, writes Mr. H. L. Choate, Brotherhood of St. Andrew secretary, who gives THE WITNESS the following interesting information. The first agency is the staff of official navy chaplains. In pre-war times, Chaplain Thompson, a clergyman of the Church, knew every boy on the station, when there were only 1,500 out there. But now, even with two assistants, what can he do with 20,000 men at a time? Counting that each man spends about four months on the station, 60,000 pass through it in one year. What can three navy chaplains do among so many? Then there is the Y. M. C. A. It has about 60 men on the station. Most of them are splendid men and are doing fine work. The station would be a barren place indeed without the Y. M. C. A. buildings and the secretaries who man them. But the Y. M. C. A. cannot take the place of the churches in military life any more than the Y. M. C. A. or Billy Sunday can in civilian life. It cannot speak to the Baptist boy with the same authority, and it cannot get the same response as a minister of the Baptist Church, so that Church sends its representatives to look after its boys. The Disciples, who have a great many men at Great Lakes, do the same. The Lutherans have two men, while the Unitarians and Christian Scientists have representatives who are on the ground part of the time. Our Church and the Roman Catholic have an additional reason for sending our own men to the Station, viz: to furnish the Holy Communion. The Roman Church has two priests on the ground, and we have Dean Bell, who was the first of all the civilian chaplains to arrive on the ground. This group of civilian pastors is the third agency. There is no attempt to proselyte on the part of any one, and we get along beautifully together. As an example of the way we look at things, I might tell you of Father Murphy's conversation with one of the jackies. A boy told Father Murphy he wanted to become a Catholic. Father Murphy inquired the reason, which was that the boy's pal was a Catholic. Father Murphy next inquired what Church the boy belonged to.

"Methodist."

"Do your father and mother know that you want to join the Catholic Church?"

"No, sir."

"Do you often go to the Methodist Church?"

"Not very often."

"Well, I think you'd better remain a Methodist and work at it a little harder."

In telling the story, Father Murphy explained that if the boy was a poor Methodist he thought he would be a poor Catholic.

An Appreciation of Miss Noyes

One of the most interesting and instructive teachers and lecturers at the Ypsilanti Summer School for Church Workers, held at Ypsilanti, under the auspices of the Detroit Archdeaconry Sunday School Institute, was Miss Vera L. Noyes of Chicago, Ill. Miss Noyes is teacher of Christian Nurture in Christ Church School, Gary, Ind. She was a daily instructor in the summer school, and gave one public lecture in St. Luke's Church, Ypsilanti, following a Bible lecture by Bishop C. D. Williams of Michigan. Her subject was the celebrated "Gary Plan" in its relation to religious education. The plan involves a Church school in connection with the public school, where pupils receive regularly so many hours of religious instruction each week. The treatment of the subject was clear and expressed in a pleasant style. She has a charm that mirrors the natural realm of childhood, in which she spends her life, and she stands as a living exponent and repository of the varied child spirit which she leads in Christian nurture.

Miss Noyes has been an art student and teacher, but now dedicates her education, accomplishments and fine ability to the little child. To listen to this devoted teacher inspires others to do better service.

A tribute to the influence of Christian nurture was involuntarily paid by a mother when she said: "Miss Noyes, please don't teach my little girl any more prayers, as I can hardly get her to bed now."

All true education is based upon right principles, and all right principles are so simple that a child can understand them. Truth, honesty, justice, love are the foundation stones upon which all the best of life must be built, and the idea of this Church school is that there is not a normal child of four or five that cannot be taught to understand them. The success of the "Gary Plan" is the best proof of the superiority of this ideal, and if at first this seems insignificant, let us be mindful of the child whom Sir Christopher carried over the stream, and which grew in force until it became a bulwark of strength.

Contributed by students at the Summer School.

Former New York Clergyman Dies in Virginia

The Rev. William Strother Jones, D. D., senior curate of St. Thomas' Church, New York City, until his resignation in June because of failing health, died lately at his home in Alexandria, Va., aged 66 years. He had been senior curate at St. Thomas' since 1911. He was a graduate of Washington and Lee University and of the General Theological Seminary, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1877 by Bishop Whittle. He had held parishes in Virginia, Maryland, Connecticut, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. He was deputy to the General Convention from the Diocese of Erie in 1904, 1907 and 1913. He is survived by his wife and three sons.

Study the Bible and Church History at Home

The trustees for the Anglican Library of the Society for the Home Study of Holy Scripture and Church History wish to extend and enlarge the work of the library collected by the late Miss Sarah Frances Smiley as a fitting memorial to her great life work. The trustees have issued an earnest appeal to all the old graduates, students and friends of the society to increase their support and interest in the society. The society hopes to have various branches of the library in different dioceses circulating from secretaryships in connection with the instruction papers, the sections moving annually. Three courses are under revision by the Rev. Dr. Easton, the Rev. Dr. Mercer and the Rev. Prof. Lewis of the Western Theological Seminary, Chicago. The whole of the revision of the library and its work is under the guidance of Bishop Matthews of New Jersey, Bishop Johnson of Colorado, the Rev. Dr. Fosbrook of the General Theological Seminary, and the Rev. Dr. Jenks. Additional courses of instructions can be outlined and lists of books supplied to readers, and books will be circulated from the library to members. Bishop Matthews is the president and Miss Gladys Baldwin of New York is the director and organizing secretary of the society. Subscriptions on the endowment and for membership should be sent to Mrs. Harlan Cleveland, treasurer, 125 East 38th Street, New York.

The second report of the Department of Army and Navy Work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, issued by the national headquarters at Philadelphia, covering the period from Jan. 1st to May 31st, 1918, contains 60 pages of very interesting information, including a resume of the work being done at army camps and naval training stations by civilian chaplains and Brotherhood secretaries, and a complete directory of the clergy of the Church and secretaries engaged in war work. When the report was closed, there were 68 laymen engaged in war work under the auspices of the Brotherhood—66 from the United States, representing 25 states, and two from Canada. In addition to these laymen in Brotherhood service, the department has secured the names of 125 Episcopal laymen in Y. M. C. A. camp work, and a smaller number in the service of the Red Cross. "We realize that this list represents only a small portion of the number actually engaged," says the report, "but of these laymen in war work, the Brotherhood secretaries have thus far located 27 who expect to enter Holy Orders at the close of the war. A search is being made for such men, and before the end of the war our hope is to be able to report to the Bishops many additional men who will desire to become postulants."

Killed in Action

The Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman

"They counted not their lives dear unto themselves."

"What did the field marshal die of?" asked a French colonel of one of his colleagues. "He died, sir, of having nothing to do." "Ah," responded the colonel, "that is enough to kill the best officer of us all." The vast majority of us do not suffer so much from inaction as from purposeless action. Few men are killed in action in our humdrum, commonplace, everyday life, but many of us are seriously conscious of the fact that, so far as our usefulness in the world is concerned, we ought to be.

The saddest column in our daily papers is that which tells of the loss of our boys at the front, and yet there is something about the unrecorded valor of these boys that gives us a thrill and inspires us with a new confidence in humankind. The noblest character Dickens ever portrayed was Sidney Carton, and let us remember the words with which he went to his death: "It is a far, far better thing that I do than I have ever done. It is a far, far better rest that I go to than I have ever known."

We reckon life by human standards, we appraise it by the measure we call success. Are we right in this? Judged by these standards, the men and women who have made the largest contributions to life have been failures. Robert Burns and Oliver Goldsmith died in poverty, Victor Hugo was an exile from his beloved France for nearly twenty years, and Jesus Christ was despised and finally crucified by His own people.

The roll of those killed in action is a long one, and it is the most sacred annal the world contains. No one bids for martyrdom, and yet every one knows that the finest and holiest enthusiasms of life are generated by those who die in action. No truer word has been written than that ancient one: "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." The great periods of inspiration have been those when it cost something to be a Christian.

The weakness of Twentieth Century religion, as well as its curse, is its spirit of smugness and self-ease. Religious practice in our day is a sort of self-indulgence in a form of refined aesthetic, somewhat intellectual and eminently respectable Sunday entertainment; something that requires neither physical nor mental effort on our part, but rather a quiet, placid and oftentimes soporific occupation that society regards as one of the concomitants of good breeding. Heroic faith, the faith that is founded upon the eternal and unchanging principles of righteousness, that dares to live by its profession day by day, this is less conspicuous now than it once was.

What are we to gather from these heroes of the battle front? What is to accrue to American manhood and womanhood as the result of their supreme sacrifice? We say soberly and advisedly, no man is fit to live in this country as the beneficiary of those who died in action, unless he solemnly resolves that they shall not have died in vain. Lincoln's immortal words have a solemn message for this hour:

"It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last, full measure of devotion."

Our love of country, our devotion to its highest ideals, our determination to live less selfishly, our finer recognition of those finer ties that bind us in a great fellowship, to which each one of us must make his definite contribution, our hatred of those things in our industrial and social life that cause strife and division, all these and many more things that are just and fair, and true and righteous, must we do, if these boys of ours, killed in action, are not to have died in vain.

America can no longer live its old, easy, independent, care-free life; it is costing too much. In the future we shall have to get away from our flabby, insular and insolent habits, and play the game of life by new rules. If we do not, the finger of a just scorn and reproach will be pointed at us by those who were killed in action.—Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

✠

If we hold on to sin for a day, we may have to hold on to it forever.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY

HOBART, INDIANA

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

We are prepared to print anything and everything a clergyman or a parish may need, from a one-page program to a handsomely bound book.

We have been studying, for over a quarter of a century, the requirements of the clergy and parishes, and we have incorporated into our standard supplies the very best ideas of the most successful and experienced men in the American Church.

We have worked out a system, based upon sound business principles, which enables us to furnish our patrons with parish papers, standard supplies, and all sorts of books, magazines and commercial printing at astonishingly low prices.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service, and for giving notices—"Lest he forget". Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM—In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS—New Families, Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial. 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT Cards—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 50 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.00. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant with God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England—A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People. A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text-book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies, $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock". Four-page Folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards. Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14) First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service, for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms—Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a hundred.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches) to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above Cards for One Dollar.

Vestibule Bracket—Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

Anything desired printed to order.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA
Worthy of Universal Adoption

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching", which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—

1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Missionary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES.

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson—a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts or Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
Henry VIII.
The Evening Service.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

OUR OFFERTORY ENVELOPE SYSTEM IS THE BEST AND CHEAPEST ON THE MARKET

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY.....

Porter Military Academy

A National School A CHURCH SCHOOL Founded 1867

242 boys from 25 States and four foreign countries. Preparation for college or business by sympathetic tutoring and under the strongest influences for Christian manhood. Habits of obedience, promptness, cleanliness and self-reliance are inculcated by the strict but stimulating military discipline. An R. O. T. C. School. Mild, healthful climate permits out of door sports all year around. Gymnasium and swimming pool Unusually liberal terms. A broader preparation that the public school can give. A Lower School for smaller boys.

Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Rector
Box 604, Charleston, S. C.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II, No. 89 | HOBART, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 14, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MUST HELP WIN THE WAR

A Great Teacher Training Camp to Be Conducted This Fall

The General Board of Religious Education has issued a series of circulars giving parishes and missions a well worked out plan to make a drive this fall in the interest of teacher training.

Every resource of America must be used to win the war. The Sunday school is one of these resources. It has to do with maintaining the spiritual morale of the country. In order for the Sunday school to do its best and biggest bit, the Sunday school teachers and officers must thoroughly understand the situation. To produce such an understanding, it is suggested that a conference be held in every parish and mission of Sunday school workers, and that the following topics be discussed: How has the war affected the Sunday school? How does the war challenge the Sunday school? What can we do that will help the Sunday school workers to effectively relate their school to the immediate needs?

A crisis is at hand. The teaching power of our Church is seriously threatened. Hundreds of Church schools have been depleted in their leadership by the war. Men have been called away. Women are carrying heavy responsibilities. Teachers are scarcer than ever. Now is the time to rally our teaching forces. Let the Church adopt the principle of the training camp. We must train more leaders of youth, and by intensive process if necessary. If we do not go forward we shall be forced backward by circumstances. Where there is a will there is a way. The Board urges rectors and superintendents to take action now to begin October next. All the leading Christian communions are preparing [illegible] simultaneous action in the matter of teacher training. The time for the drive has not been arbitrarily fixed. It is, however, suggested that it should begin about September 15, and continue for thirty days. In some sections the drive has been made, but in most sections it will be made some time during the latter part of this month and in October.

Five great objects are to be kept in view: A training class in every parish to train those who have never taught before; a monthly business meeting for every school of the officers and teachers to consider school betterment; a class to assist present teachers, giving the present leaders new inspiration and insight; specialized methods taught in every community—the fine points of teaching particular ages given in joint classes; attention called to the best printed helps for teachers, making use of the excellent literature now available for teachers.

The General Board of Religious Education is urging upon diocesan authorities in education a definite program for the campaign. Many Diocesan Boards have taken aceion. Every Church school should co-operate with their diocesan authorities and with the General Board of Religious Education to make the drive a success. Wherever no diocesan program is laid out, each parish should act. Let the rector or superintendent arrange a special meeting, to include every teacher and officer, to discuss the importance of teacher training, and how it may best be carried out in your school. The General Board will supply a program and literature for such a meeting if requested. Address inquiries to Parochial Department, General Board of Religious Education, 298 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

J. S. Armentrout presents the following strong points on the value and need of teachers' training in Church schools:

The call in the world today is for people who "know how". Knowledge of the way to accomplish results is desired in every worker, no matter what the task.

This need for those who "know how" is as great in the Sunday school as elsewhere. Increasingly it is being demanded that teachers and officers shall be trained for the task they have to do. Some of the reasons for this demand are:

Most Sunday schools can offer not more than one hour as a maximum time for instructions. This will include the entire period. Over against this, the school has at least five hours of the pupils' time for five days of the week. This one hour per week is all the time most children get for any systematic religious instruction. The value of this will depend, of course, on the ability of the teacher to use the time to the best advantage. If the teacher does not "know how", then the time will be in large measure lost, and so will that child's opportunity for religious education. The serious import of this will be increasingly recognized when we remember that only a limited number of children have any religious training other than that offered by the Church school.

The competition of other interests are varied, and compete for the interest of child and parent.

There is, first, the unconscious competition of the public school. This education has been emphasized. The training of these teachers has been insisted upon until both children and parents have come to feel that here is the important thing in educational life. The Church has not emphasized her education or insisted that her teachers get ready for their task, and so finds herself the loser in the competition.

Again, there is the active and very close competition of amusements, etc., for the interest of the child. It is unthinkable that the Church would try to meet this with any less than her best, or would count any work too great that would help the task.

No other work in the Church is greater than that of a Sunday school teacher. No other individual has a greater opportunity to shape life and mold character. A new realization of this fact is helping to intensify the demand for trained teachers.

But how may the teachers of the Sunday school be fitted for their task?

To this question there is only one possible answer—they must be fitted by training given in the local Church and school. The teacher training class in the local school is, at the present time, the most efficient answer to this demand for prepared teachers. No other agency can take its place. Each parish and school must face its own problem of teachers and attempt to meet the need through this means. That it is entirely possible to do so has been proven again and again. No parish and school fully alive to the needs of its children will neglect this work.

Right Literature Essential to Religious Education

We are indebted to Mr. S. G. Deam of Niles, Mich., for a copy of the preliminary recommendations from the Diocesan Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Western Michigan, which contains much matter of interest to Church people everywhere. Commenting upon the need of literature, the Board states that "unless the right literature is secured and used effectively, the work of religious education becomes increasingly difficult. Aside from the text books, and such reference books recommended in connection with them as the Church can afford to purchase, the parish should subscribe each year to "The Leader" for each of its teachers and each member of the teachers' training class.

"An ideal to work toward, and one we hope some day to put into operation, is to outline a reading course for adults, to guide them into a deeper comprehension of the Church's life and faith. In the meantime, however, every family in the diocese could be educating itself by subscribing to at least two Church papers, e. g., the Church Helper and either THE WITNESS or the Living Church. The Church school might be utilized in helping to bring this about by securing subscriptions during the day school vacation, or Saturdays. It should be a laudable object for the children to try to stimulate a desire in adults for an education along Church lines. It might even be credited as Church extension work on the five fields' chart of the school."

Mr. Deam, who is secretary of the Board, says: "I am a strong advocate of the duty of every Church family to subscribe for one or more of our Church papers, the same as a business firm subscribes for its particular trade journal. THE WITNESS has 'grown' to be an ideal Church paper, and should be in the hands of every Church family."

Bishop of Harrisburg Welcomes Metropolitan of Athens

A mass meeting of Greeks and Americans was held in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Saturday evening, Sept. 7, to welcome the Most Rev. Meletios, Metropolitan of Athens, to America. The Metropolitan was attended by Archimandrite Alexander, secretary of the Holy Synod of Greece, and Archimandrite Chrysostom, director of the Theological Seminary at Athens. The Rt. Rev. James Henry Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg, was present in his robes, attended by his chaplain, and delivered an address of greeting and welcome, on behalf of the Episcopal Church, in which he referred to the long-time friendly relations of the Greek and Anglican Churches, going back to Theodore of Tarsus, the Greek monk who became Archbishop of Canterbury. The Bishop mentioned the correspondence between the General Convention and the Holy Synod, and read a copy of the letter addressed to the American Church by a former Metropolitan of Athens, Theophilus, in 1872. About 3,000 people attended the gathering.

Bishop of Oxford In New York

Through the courtesy of the National Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War, it has been arranged for the Rt. Rev. Charles Gore, D. D., Bishop of Oxford, to Sunday, Sept. 22nd, in the morning, at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, and at Trinity Church, at Evensong, at 3:30 o'clock.

"Com' e Buona, l'America"

"Com' e buona, l'America! Com' e buona!"

"How good America is! How good!" exclaimed an old Italian woman before a Red Cross worker, at the time of the recent distribution of clothing at Perugia.

A little girl, tugging at the skirts of the old woman, was being addressed. The child bore an armful of new clothing, which had been made in Red Cross sewing rooms in America, for the use of refugees in Italy.

About 2,000 refugees from Caporetta are housed within Perugia's hospitable gates, some of them in palaces and private homes, others in public buildings, and a good many in an immense school building.—Red Cross News.

JAPANESE SEEKING FOR SOMETHING

Experience of Dean Smith With an Agnostic and at a School

In a town in which there is a boys' high school, which Dean P. A. Smith of Fukui, Japan, visits occasionally, there lives a teacher, an agnostic, who has a fine family of three boys and one girl. A short time ago this man sent a letter to the Dean, requesting him to come and teach the whole family about Christianity. It came so unexpectedly that it seemed suspicious, but examination proved it to be genuine. The man and his wife had been led by their family love and family cares to realize that without religion they could not rear their family aright, and the religion of Jesus Christ was the only one that offered any real hope and help. And all this in the family of a teacher in a school which only four or five years ago discharged a Christian teacher for daring to answer questions about the Bible, even in his own house!

In still another place the Dean was invited to bring his radiopticon and show pictures in a school dormitory. Naturally, he left his Bible pictures at home, hoping only for an opportunity to get acquainted with the boys and their teachers, and thus draw them later to the chapel. What was his surprise to hear a unanimous protest from the teachers and students: "Why didn't you bring your Bible pictures? We wanted to see them!" The upshot was another invitation, and the next time the Dean will have more faith, and give them what they want.

Another incident, small in itself, but giving the key to the ideas of many Japanese today, occurred a little while ago in a town near here. The local catechist was talking to a merchant, a plain, hard-headed, earnest, upright man, about the present moral condition in Japan. The merchant remarked: "I have been wondering for a long time what would be the best way to utilize Buddhism or Christianity, or both, for the moral uplift of the nation." The catechist's answer was straight to the point: "You have the cart before the horse, my friend," said he. "You want to use God or Buddha as if you were greater than they. Our strength lies in the fact that the Christian says, 'Here am I, use me', and puts himself in God's hands. Then he is able to do far more than he could if he tried to substitute his own feeble plans for God's great ones."

This set the man to thinking, and a few days later he said, "If I were not a Buddhist, I would become a Christian right now."

He is eagerly seeking, and there is little doubt that this earnest Buddhist will be an earnest Christian some day.

These incidents are recorded here not for their intrinsic value, but because they show that the Japanese people are seeking for something. More often than not they do not know what they are seeking, but they want it. In the words of a friend of the Dean's, a high school principal, "You Christians have something that we have not, and we want it. We do not yet know what it is, but we want it, for we know it is good, because of what we see in you." God grant that the Church may respond to the terrific challenge contained in these words.

Advocates the Conscription of Church Members

The Rev. Malcom Taylor of Taunton, Mass., makes the following interesting contribution to The Church Militant:

"Bishop Lawrence, in selecting from the clergy men for voluntary chaplains at the camps, has adopted the military method of conscription. He has not been asking for volunteers; he has been going to the men who seemed to him best fitted for the work and saying: 'I want you to go to Camp ——— for ——— months.' And they have gone. The reasonableness of this method, as well as the moral right of the Bishop to make such definite demands, has appealed to them. The more earnest men like to be commanded to undertake difficult tasks when they respect the authority from whence the orders come, and there is no higher human authority, nor one more worthy of respect, than that of the Christian Church.

"It would be well if the same method could be used by a Rector in securing the workers needed in his parish. We are not sure that it cannot; it might at least be tried. The subject is being discussed. Religious leaders are asking whether Church membership does not involve the obligation to serve wherever the call may come. It is not unreasonable to arge that Churches might draft their members for service as the state does, when an emergency arises. We are inclined to believe that such a method would be welcomed by the loyal members. It would also serve to draw more clearly the line between conventional and sincere discipleship."

An Unusual Showing for War Times

The $8,000 mortgage, of more that thirty years' standing, on the property of St. Paul's Parish, Council Bluffs, Ia., has been lifted. Also $4,000 floating indebtedness has been paid, and several thousand dollars have been expended in church and rectory improvements. The consecration of the church will probably take place in October or early in November. A number of memorials have been presented to the Church recently and blessed by the Rector, the Rev. Wilford E. Mann.

Prof. Christopher Thornton, F. D., Sc., London, has been engaged as organist and choirmaster, and will begin his duties the 16th Sunday after Trinity.

The service flag of the parish, containing 81 stars, was formally dedicated on a recent Sunday morning. Seventy-seven stars are for men in war service, three for Red Cross nurses and one for the telephone service overseas, and one gold star for P. Odway Thomas, son of the former choirmaster. A local daily states that Mr. Mann made a beautiful and stirring address, eulogizing the men in the great struggle for liberty, and to make the world safe for democracy.

An interesting feature of New York City Church life is the out-door Grace Parish service, Wednesday and Friday noon of each week. It is held in Huntington Close, a beautiful little yard at the corner of the church, where Broadway and Tenth Street join.

The noise is great from the street traffic, but the average voice reaches a line of men who hang to the fence on the Wanamaker store side, and while the distractions may disconcert the average preacher, he has the consolation of believing that an occasional word may reach a lonely or a troubled soul. Lately, the preacher has been advised to stand on a box, under a canopy, where the few who venture inside are seated. This mars the artistic effect of the use of a fine out-door pulpit, but probably is more effective in its human reach. From 50 to 150 people are purposely within hearing.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE MISSIONARY MESSAGE AND THE MESSENGER

St. Matthew The Apostle September 21st

By the Rev. Francis S. White

THE COLLECT

O Almighty God, who by thy blessed Son didst call Matthew from the receipt of custom to be an Apostle and Evangelist; Grant us grace to forsake all covetous desires, and inordinate love of riches, and to follow the same thy Son Jesus Christ, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

"Didst call Matthew from the receipt of custom." Every missionary should have a good business training. Most of them acquire it, after experience with vestrymen, who would "go to the wall" if they pursued the same methods in running their own business which they advocate in Church finance. One of the times that try the average clergyman's soul is the occasion when "a mere business man" begins a talk on the unbusiness-like methods of the clergy. There is enough truth in the statement to make the tradition a more or less fixed and imperishable one; but as a general rule the allegation is like that "science" which St. Paul described as "falsely so called". It would be well if every child in the Church was given a business training in the school systems of our day. St. Paul could turn his honest pennies because of the trade he learned at the same time he was learning the lessons the lawyer Gamaliel had to teach him. This great war time would help the Church's hold on her people if her clergy could step into the ranks of those who labor with their hands to keep the war ranks full and satisfactorily supplied.

Note that St. Matthew was called from the receipt of custom to be an Apostle and Evangelist. Learn from this that any school of life can produce saints; also that business men can be saints if they want to; and thank God, many of them are! If business and religion do not mix in some people's lives, the reason can probably be found in the peril of wealth. Remember what St. Paul wrote to St. Timothy along these lines: "They that desire to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare, and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in perdition. In the love of money is the root of all kinds of evil, which some reaching after have been led astray from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows." No one is safe from this virus. Apostles and Evangelists, in the ancient and modern uses of those titles, have been known to forget what the Psalmist had discovered, namely, that "the statutes of the Lord are right, and rejoice the heart; the commandment of the Lord is pure and giveth light unto the eyes. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold". So there is great need that the true missionary in any walk of life pray earnestly "to forsake all covetous desires and inordinate love of riches". Every patriotic citizen in our country is being helped now to an accomplishment of this supplication. Every war tax, every cry for benevolence, every demand for government loans at a rational rate of interest, every appeal for missionary endeavor, are all helping us to see the great peril we were in before God called us to our senses. Let us all, poor and rich together, as far as money goes, daily pray for daily grace to forsake, to turn our backs on, to "cut out" and "cut off" all those things which call for inordinate affection to keep them alive and flourishing. People are "things" crazy. There are not so many spendthrifts as there are misers in the world. Too many of us have what we softly term "the acquisitive habit". We grow attached to things instead of learning and striving to grow detached. Too many of us value our comforts, to the exclusion of any love for the souls of our fellow men. The value of learning detachment from things is that we may become more attached to God and man. Some people, for example, are so attached to the Church building of their childhood that they want their names kept on its roll of members, although the little, struggling Church in their neighborhood needs and wants the impulse of their active co-operation and membership. So the cause of God is weakened in the far-away and the near-by parish. And this is only a simple illustration of the way in which our desires grow into covetous desires, and our attachments or loves become inordinate. People will so love the comfortable incense and lights of a wonderful home Church service that they cannot see their way clear to give of their little or their much to send a human messenger of Jesus Christ to speak peace to them that are lost in sin and doubt and sorrow, without any altar, without hope, without any God. Yes, we are ever in danger of growing "things" crazy. Let us pray God for grace to forsake, to grow detached. But note that grace "to forsake" is asked for only that we may have strength and will power "to follow". The Christian miser "flocks by himself". When he learns to be detached from things and places, he "follows the Christ, the King". There is no advantage coming to the man who simply sacrifices; the results of his sacrifice must contribute to some constructive, upbuilding purpose and end. And the one who "forsakes all covetous desires and inordinate love of riches" will only find his vocation when he sees that the Jesus Christ whom he follows is something more than the best man that ever lived. To keep him steady in his course of "finding, following, keeping, struggling", there must be the conviction that "He liveth and reigneth, one God, world without end". The power and lure of things that can be seen, and felt, and owned, are not to be downed in the heart of a man by the life and words of a good man who died on a cross in Palestine about two thousand years ago. The power and lure of things can only be tempered and controlled by the words and life and help of One who is alive forever more, and hath all power in heaven and on earth, and knows and sees everything clear to the end, and will never leave nor forsake the one who forsakes all to follow Him. When we catch the purport of this prayer, we will be well on our way toward saintliness, and we will also be able to realize the perils of wealth and the glory of being able not to covet nor to love inordinately.

THE EPISTLE

Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not; but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.—II Cor. iv:1.

"As we have received mercy." "Count your blessings one by one", and in them all you will see the love and grace of a never-forgetful Father. When we are tempted to be faint-hearted in the presence of perplexities, let us count our mercies, and somehow "heart will grow brave again and arms strong".

"Renounced the hidden things of dishonesty." That word "renounce" is only of use when a man is determined on "a manifestation of the truth". One of the hidden things of dishonesty is "self-deceit". When we begin to deceive ourselves, the truth has gone out of our hearts, and there remains no possibility to renounce effectively. But, after all, "renounce", when unwisely emphasized, only leaves a man dry and discouraged. The best way to renounce is to so live in the sight of God that the conscience of any good beholder is bound to approve.

God wants us to be interested in handicraft, but not in crafty handling. Our hands should be able to minister to our own needs when an economic situation demands it; but when we handle the Word of God, it must not be for a living, but for life. It must be with the clergy as it is with the physician. Discovering something to help mankind, he is in honor bound to manifest that discovery in such a way as to commend himself to every man's conscience. A religious quack is a man who sets out to make money in the ministry. Such a man can never be anything more in the ministry than a hireling. These lines are not intended to furnish salve for the conscience of a layman who is content to let his parson struggle along on a stipend which barely cov rs the cost of living. Such procedure only tends to beget a race of hirelings, who are sometimes forced to yield to the temptation to sell their birthrights for a mess of pottage. The laborer in any part of God's vineyard, under the present economical system, whether priest or layman, is worthy of his hire. Not to adequately reward a man for services rendered is to beget in such a man, unless he be in very deed a saint of God, an inordinate love of riches, and a tendency to walk in craftiness, "keeping up an appearance", because his "self-respect" demands it, but by that very act learning how to handle the Word of God deceitfully, and becoming a time-server, instead of God's servant and man's server.

The god of this world is the god of appearance, who delights not in the sons of man, but the sons of Sham. Such a god and such a people are not able to stand in the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God. Such a crowd, in their desire for results, or appearance, or reputation, or advancement, are tempted to "handle the Word of God deceitfully", content to "get people in" under what might almost be called, from God's point of view, at least, "false pretenses. This Church of ours has a great chance to commend herself in the sight of God to every conscientious man who will listen to her preaching of the Church's year, which presents Christ Jesus, the Lord, and only brings in her preachers as "ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake", not for the sake of salary, or reward, or place, or position, or comfort, or luxury, or for any other sake than Jesus' sake. Such a preacher, lay or clerical, is not a son of Sham; he knows whose he is and whom he serves; he is light-hearted, but not light-headed; he is not lost, because he knows the way, the truth and the light. He is real, because Jesus is real to him. He is honest with all men, because he is honest with himself, and is not trying to make himself believe that Jesus is a demigod, but anything else but very God of very God. He does not have to handel the Word of God deceitfully, because he has put all guile not only out of his mouth, but out of his heart.

"Light out of darkness." God commands that result. Therefore we cannot be dark lantern Christians, cryptic Christians, occult Christians. Our knowledge is to be an illuminating knowledge, which the plain folks can understand. Plain folks, common people, always have heard Jesus gladly. If they seem not to have heard Him, it is because the sons of Sham have been trying a few dark lantern tricks on them, and they felt the point of the shears in their fleece, instead of the point of the Shepherd's crook, when the preaching began. The preacher's business is light-bearing. The missionary's business is light-bearing. Into the darkness caused by ignorance, doubt, sin, despair neglect, cruelty, viciousness, we are to come with a knowledge of Jesus Christ the Lord shining in our hearts. Preaching not ourselves, but Christ Jesus, light will come out of darkness, must come out of darkness, because God has commanded it.

A Jewish tax gatherer was a most impossible person, from the observation point of patriotism, religion, unselfishness and personal contact. But God made of that tax gatherer not only a speaker for Him, but a writer about Him, and what He did for the publican Levi He can do for you, my friend, and for any one else in this wide, wide world, if you and they will be honest with themselves and Him.

THE GOSPEL

And as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom; and he saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him. And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him and his disciples. And when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto his disciples. Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners? But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. But go ye and learn what that meaneth. I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.—St. Matt. ix:9.

"Sitting at the receipt of custom." St. Matthew had a steady and profitable job. It was not a popular job from the view point of a loyal lover of Jerusalem; but it was good business, and "business was business" as far as the man Matthew was concerned. "He should worry!" He worried so little that he sat at the receipt of customs. He was not on the defensive or offensive. "He was the product of his times", "the result of the system", phrases we hear once in a while today by way of explanation or excuse.

"Jesus saw Matthew, * * * and He saith, 'Follow me'." The challenge came, and we are not told whether it was expected or unexpected, so we will not conjecture. But we do know that Matthew knew what "Follow Me" meant, for whoever told St. Luke about the meeting, told that careful writer that Levi "left all, rose up and followed Him"—left his job, and his easy chair, and the busy meeting place, with the excitement that always attends a profitable position in a hostile or unsympathetic community; left the whole business. "Follow Me" does not permit of reservations. No "love, honor and obey", with the fingers crossed at "obey", when it comes to a life partnership with the Lover of men's souls. No sitting down when one begins to follow the Christ, the King, until the King sits down. And when the King sits down, the publicans and sinners, so tagged by the observing world, can sit down too—if they are His followers now. If in their hearts there is knowledge of God through Jesus—no matter how dark the past—out of it can shine light. God has so ordered it.

"When the Pharisees, the sons of Sham, saw it." That tribe which is always so concerned with "What will people say", is always around when some Levi is converted; and their criticisms and questions are feared by most men more than the criticisms and questions of the Almighty. It is a proof of genuine conversion when one can say, "With me it is a small matter whether I am judged by you, or of any man's judgment". St. Matthew was one of those thoroughly converted men. Along with the love of this world's goods he overcame the fear of the world's ridicule. He boldly invited others to meet our Lord. "Levi made Him a great feast in his own house, and there was a great company of publicans and others that sat down with them."

"When Jesus heard that." Most of us do not seem to act or talk as if we knew that Jesus is the unseen guest at every table, the unobserved Observer in every gathering, of either a public or private nature, the unnoticed Listener in every conversation. But this really describes His intimate relation to mortal man. Truly He is closer than breathing, nearer than hands and feet. Yet, in spite of this, what foolish, wicked, sinful things we think, and do, and say in His immaculate presence! God help us! God forgive us for our blind, unthinking shortsighted manner of living away from His presence.

"They that be whole need not a physician, but they that be sick." Prevention is so much better than cure. The homely phrase goes, "It is better to be safe than sorry". But the world is full of the sorrowful; and the message of the Church is meant for them as well as for the righteous. There is, however, no one who does not need the healing touch of Jesus Christ. Therefore there is no need for the sons of Sham to stand at people's doors and windows. But there are sons of Sham, because there are yet many people in the world who believe themselves righteous and despise others. And may God have mercy on their souls!—those who have yet to learn what that meaneth. "I will have mercy and not sacrifice". The word "mercy" is not in the vocabulary of the sons of Sham. They prate of sacrifice, whose only victim is the one whom nobody will sit down with at meat but Jesus Christ. Dear Lord Jesus, help us not to grow confused as to the place and meaning of both "mercy" and "sacrifice".

"I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." "Jesus calls us." Can you hear Him tenderly calling you? Are you willing that people shall not be sent to unstop the ears of those who cannot yet hear the Saviour's pleadings? Are you satisfied to have Jesus listen to you alone, and make no effort to help Him call other saints from the receipt of customs? Can you not see that to stint the mission work of the Church is to make it hard for Jesus Christ to call men to His side and His cause? You know, don't you, that He expects to use human voices to utter His call; human ears to hear the cries of the poor, helpless ones of the earth; human hands to bring the touch of brotherly helpfulness; human feet to lead others out of darkness into light? What if we fail Him? Blessed Saint Matthew, be an example to us to leave all and follow the Christ when He calls. May your words and your deeds be our stimulus and cheer. May your example be our joy to imitate. As we read of thy action in leaving all and following our common Saviour, may we read it in such a way as in our turn to give to others "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ".

His Battlements

"Take away the battlements, for they are not the Lord's."—Jeremiah v:10.

I built me a castle with towers fair—
Its walls were deep, and strong and wide;
There was room for soldiers, servants, friends,
But not one room for the Crucified.
Within, it is true, was a secret shrine,
Devoted to culture, wealth and power;
What king would remember the Nazarene
When his star was in the ascendant hour?

One morning I stood on my castle wall,
As the burning sunshine filled the sky.
Afar my eyes discerned a moving host
Of men, whose banners were waving high.
"Some brave little knight goes forth to war;
But he knows full well my mailed arm!"
And I grimly smiled in my insolence,
For no living king dared do me harm!

When suddenly over my airy towers,
In letters of blood on the morning sky,
An unseen hand was writing these words:
"Remove the battlements, they're not th[illegible] Lord's!"
[illegible] those dread words met m[illegible] eye
The earth was riven with frightful shocks;
My castle sank, and its mighty walls
Were a heap of dust and broken rocks.

My pride, my hopes and my strength were gone—
My wild ambitions were all denied.
It was then I remembered the Nazarene.
In trouble I called on the Crucified:
"O build Thy shrine in my inmost soul;
I will gladly give Thee complete control!
O bridge the gulf of my shame and sin;
Forgive me, pity me; enter Thou in.
Be Master and King, be Lord and Friend,
That Thy battlements may my soul defend!"

E. WADDELL.

A Task of Supreme Importance

"Our Church War Commission is charged with a task of supreme importance," says the Rev. Dr. Lacey of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y. "The war will leave an indelible impress on our boys. The ideals, dreams and aspirations, the interests and enthusiasms of our men at the front, represent the attitude that will dominate the next generation. As the soldiers of Charles VIII brought to France from their Italian campaigns the seed of the Renaissance, so our boys will bring home a new vision of values. We must see that the Church proves so powerful to them in the trenches that they will come back loving her with profound devotion. The work of strong, sympathetic chaplains and of sturdy laymen like our own Jowitt will go far toward establishing her for all time in the affections of the men."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

PLACE OF WOMEN IN THE CHURCH

Her Work is Now Big, Broad, Strong, But Not Big Enough

Miss Mary Bosworth

(Concluded)

There are some departments, which in all justice to woman, her capabilities and her part in the evangelization of the world for Christ, need her judgment, her understanding ability, her spirituality. Some of the authorities of the Church are broader than others; so in few cases, some of these departments allow woman but that is not enough—she should be in them in every instance.

First, there is the vestry! Woman as well as man forms the congregation. She is a partner in its life—is a shareholder! She invests her money in its business as well as man. As to time and energy, everybody know what her part is there. Who attends to the choir equipment, the vestments of the clergy, the altar linen and service, the church grounds, the organizations, money raising and most detail work? In most cases, it is woman. She does all this; and when it comes to the actual legislation of Parish affairs, she has no voice. I ask anybody, is this just? "Legislation without representation is tyranny" is a truth of many years; and in a day, when democracy is heard at every turn—when sermons are full of it and the speaker enthusiastic for it, it is quite startling to see the undemocratic vestry system stay in—it seems most inconsistent. The clergy and laymen would do well to literally wake up in their own Parish and see what an injustice is done to woman. The undemocratic system of the vestry is all wrong! Away with it, and put woman in her place!

Go next into the Sunday school, and who is the superintendent? Often a busy professional man or man of the commercial world. He knows practically nothing about the teaching principles and child psychology and various materials. Nobody blames him—he has not time for two big businesses! He might love to do justice to the Sunday school, but he has to earn a living down town; so his time and energy go there. What suffers? The Sunday school system. What else suffers? The development of the children. Anything else? Yes. The future Church. Still further? The mission field. I ask is this good stewardship of Church affairs, which is a sacred trust? Is it right to put such a person, good and willing though he is, in charge of the "Cradle of the Church," with all that that term signifies? No, a thousand times no, for it is wronging the child, the Parish, the city, the state, the nation, the world—it is not treating God right! Suppose you gave a friend a vast sum of money and asked him to carefully invest it. Instead, he put it into a weak business that nets no profits. What would you think of such a person who called himself a friend? In a way, it must hurt God to see the indifference and carelessness with which his sacred trust is handled. But take away the inefficient man and put woman in his place—woman trained as a teacher and accepting the position as her work, and watch the results change. She would be able to give it all her time, and could study new methods and hunt up new materials, thereby making it a real live thing. Can't you see her visiting new homes to see if the children go to any Sunday school? Can't you see her looking up absentees? Can't you see her planning programs, missionary and social? Can't you see her with the Sunday school as the first object of her life? Did you ever see the proverbial superintendent do and feel this way? Somebody might say, this is the rector's duty. Well, if he attends to everything he ought to, he certainly hasn't time for this all absorbing work. It is big enough to take the whole attention of one person and that a trained person. The salary of such a position would be more suitable to a woman's needs than a man's, so in every way she fits better into it. Do let the inefficient business man make way for the trained woman.

Spend a little time out among small town people and in the country and notice the indifference to and ignorance of Church affairs. Something is the matter—something is needed. Of course, the matter is a lack of ministerial administration, which in turn is due partially to a lack of money, but not entirely. The need can be answered with the paid woman diocesan educational secreetary and licensed layreaders.

We will consider the former first. Woman is waiting to be appointed as paid educational secretary. I specify "paid," because such a secretary would be very different from the volunteer educational secretary. Why is this so? Simply this—the volunteer is often a woman with ties, business or family, which restrict in a very great sense her movements and time. She can only make an occasional trip through the diocese, while regular visits should be made. She can only spend a few hours, now and then, in constructive work, while her whole time ought to be given to it. In this way, growth is seriously retarded. The paid worker is trained. and it is her special and only business to see that her diocese booms ahead as fast as possible and does its full share of things. She give herself to it. She is not bound to anything except it, so it becomes her responsibility, and she will see that the dead and dying spots give place to life. Such an educational secretary is needed in every diocese, and the business world is proof of the soundness of this truth. Listen:

The dry goods dealer has his traveling man in every district. It costs him something. Oh, yes, but it also gets him something! He counts the cost, but he also counts the profit! The profits are much larger than the cost. How do I know this? Because Mr. Dry Goods Man keeps his representative in the field. He is busy holding customers already gained, busy trying to get new ones, busy looking after their needs and troubles, and busy bending every effort to supply them. When he gets back to headquarters, a report is made. He is the middle man between need and supply, and the value of such a man is proven by the numbers of traveling men. I know of one house that has a hundred or more. Consequently, its business leaps ahead!

Why then is the Church so slow in adopting such a fine workable method? It cannot be on account of the money, for it proves to be a gain. It cannot be because the method is not known, for it is! It cannot be a lack of workers, for as John Lee says: "There are women, notably the younger women, the college graduates, the trained workers, who reluctantly turn their back on work in the Church to engage in less congenial occupation outside of the Church because they feel that the opportunity for women to do constructive work within the Church is discouragingly contracted and limited." It is plainly one thing: the Church is too slow in making changes, is too indifferent to opportunity, is too conservative. Put a paid woman educational secretary in a diocese and watch it drive ahead!

Now we come to the licensed woman layreader. There are many places where the clergy are not and where it is impossible to get a man to do layreader's work and where no money is available to pay the expense of sending one to and fro. The people need the services, so what is to be done? Give woman the authority to conduct them and all else that the layreader does—make her a layreader. In this capacity, she could do a big work for God. Somebody might say, why make her a licensed one? Simply because people are used to order and official authority in the Church as well as in other walks of life, and they conform more quickly to it. Another point is, if woman was in such a position, she would know what was expected of her and would be prepared to meet the situation. She could hold together many a scattered country population and villages and small towns where no service of any kind is held as it is. In this way, every gathering of people could be administered to.

Shall woman be allowed to speak in the Church? By all means, "yes," if she has a message to deliver that is of value. Often returned missionaries could do much to arouse the sleeping brethren, and often their message is just what is needed to broaden the vision of the Home Church. The rector could not handle their subject like they could—it is peculiarly their own—so give them a chance. Should there come along a woman specialist in social service work ,etc., whose knowledge and personality would awaken the people to a bigger and higher sense of their duty, give her, too, a chance and the congregation the privilege of hearing her message. There are some members of the Church who possibly could be won quicker by woman than man! Some few records prove this is true.

The last point I want to emphasize, is woman on all advisory, legislative, and executive committees, boards, and conventions; such as, the standing committee, diocesan councils, house of deputies, and the board of missions. Woman should be a part of these. Her work for the Church, home and abroad, is tremendous. Her part in the Church at large is as vital and as much in detail as the Parish. She studies situations, uses plans and methods, mixes with all kinds of people, so has a valuable contribution to make discussing conditions, in revising things, and in planning for the future. Her point of view is needed for the betterment of the work, so a place should be given her on the above mentioned committees, etc.

So in going over the road yet to be traveled by woman, she is ready and prepared to go to the farthest edge of the front lines, barring only one office—the priesthood. I bar this, not because woman isn't capable of filling it in as admirable a way as some of the other sex do, but just because Jesus Christ chose men for this. He blessed woman for the fullest service in the Church and never made a limitation in words to it, but it must be remembered He deliberately selected twelve men for the priesthood. Because He chose men for this work, He wanted men there and not their co-worker—woman.

If woman is given her full rights and is appointed to these other various places there will be no need of her in the priesthood, for there will be numbers to fill it as a result of her work in these new fields of labor.

Woman, Jesus Christ sounded the first note of your chord of wonderful development and service. The ages have added more notes of richness and beauty, and now the present is ready to fill in the missing ones to make it a perfect chord.

Appreciation of Dr. William Porcher DuBose

When a great man passes away it is natural for us to look for his prototype. Those who knew Dr. DuBose through his books alone might easily find in them characteristics of Aristotle or of Socrates, and so might place the great theologian in the category of these great thinkers. But those familiar with the doctor's personality think instinctively of the "disciple whom Jesus loved" when they think of him. For while it is true that the author of "Soteriology" and of the "Gospel in the Gospels" must be given place among the greatest in the realm of mind, it is none the less true that Dr. DuBose excelled in those qualities of the soul that make men loved. "To know him was to love him" will be the testimony of the thousands who felt the influence of his gentle spirit as they sat at the feet of his great wisdom.

In Dr. DuBose's life two remarkable things stand out. The first of these is that so profound a thinker could be so very human, and the second is that he established no school of theology—the disciples he made were not for himself, but for his Master.

The second of these things may be accounted for largely by the first. The doctor's character, so beautiful in its simplicity, so firm in its strength, was founded in the love of Christ. He was loved of little children and young girls. Men of mature years sought his handclasp, and boys always felt near to him in spirit. In the atmosphere of brotherliness which always surrounded him the esoteric could not flourish. However wide and deep his learning, it could fix no gulf between himself and those who profited by it. So while his influence on the mind of the Church will not soon wane, and while those who loved to walk with him in the flesh will yet walk with him in the spirit, there will be no DuBose school of theology.

Dr. DuBose was the last of that company of noble spirits which fixed the atmosphere of Sewanee for all time. To the zeal and fire of Quintard, the gallantry of Kirby Smith, the dignity of Gorgas, the perfect courtesy and great learning of Shoup, the force of Elliot, he brought a sweet reasonableness that blended the whole into "the Sewanee spirit".

Coming to the University first as chaplain, the doctor for forty-seven years exerted an influence no less strong than sweet. The effect of this influence was to bring men "to realize Christ". Whether as chaplain, as professor, as scholar or great thinker, or as plain man upon the street, men never failed to see in him one to whom Christ was real and very present.

His theology? Perhaps the following, written near the close of his life, and probably his last public utterance, may serve as an expression of this, and as a fit conclusion:

"Transcendal or immanental in our philosophy or theology, subjective or objective in our faith and religion, Protestant or Catholic in our bent or facing—let us realize that we are looking in opposite directions for the same thing, and that the thing is in fact on both sides and all sides of us. Let us turn from emphasizing and embittering our differences to recognizing and cultivating and enlarging our agreements. Let us fight a false objectivity with a truer objectivity, or a false subjectivity with only a truer subjectivity. Let us aim to give only what is true in our greater freedom—individualism, liberalism or Protestantism—to the great fact and truth of catholicity—or, on the other hand, what we know and feel to be true and necessary in Catholicism to those who in the one only Christ are taking liberties inconsistent with the unity of His person and His Church."—"The Subjective and Objective in Religion."—W. H. MacKellar, Associate Professor of English, University of the South, in Constructive Quarterly, March, 1918.

THE BROTHERHOOD CONVENTION AT NORTHFIELD

Interesting Stories Covering the Conven and Side Events

The Rev. George P. Atwater

(Concluded)

The Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew recently held at Northfield gave to many a man an opportunity to become better acquainted with earnest priests and laymen. This was a most delightful feature of the gathering. It is difficult to analyze the feeling that such a gathering of Eastern Churchmen differs from a similar gathering of men in the Mid-West. Perhaps it lies in the fact that Eastern men feel the momentum of the Church, long established in their midst, more than we do in the Mid-West. Even small parishes seem better seasoned and more secure. Perhaps they have not the shifting populations and the complex social problems that we must face. But personally they seem to be a hard working and devoted group of men, with much the same difficulties that confront the priest in every community.

Among the recreational features of the Convention was a baseball game between the clergy and the laity. In order to prevent any riots, the Bishop of Massachusetts was asked to act as umpire, which duty he performed in a most satisfactory manner. He was assisted by a competent layman from Philadelphia. The clergy found a real pitcher on their team, the Rector of a Church in Buffalo, and he grooved the ball over the plate in a most skillful fashion. We had a real catcher, too, but elsewhere we showed lack of practice and team work. A few days' practice would have made the team a wonder to behold. The laity showed some skill quite beyond our expectations, and beat us 7 to 1. Both umpires lived to see the game through.

The informal gatherings about the door of Gould Hall, after the evening session, were a feature of the day. Here it was that we related things old and new. One eminent Churchman, who conducts a boys' school, told us that whenever tramps stopped at the school to secure, if possible, a meal or two, the boys always reported their arrival by announcing that "a Rhodes scholar was at the kitchen door". This story fixed the name of "Rhodes scholar" upon the members of the group who sat up late at night to exchange confidences. Once or twice the manager of the hall appeared and told the "Rhodes scholars" that their conversation was so interesting that the guests within the building could not bear to miss a word by going to sleep. So courteously was this information given that those present cheerfully made their way to their rooms. But a "Rhodes scholar" at Northfield was a real refreshment after so many formal speeches at the sessions.

Perhaps the most novel and interesting session of the Convention was the conference on army and navy work. The Brotherhood has many men in the army camps and hospitals. They are doing a splendid work. We were thrilled by the stories of the few men who were summoned to the Convention from the camps to tell of the work. An almost unlimited field of labor is open to our Brotherhood men for real service in the camps.

One of the army secretaries gave us an illustration of group singing. The entire Convention assembled one evening near Betsey Moody cottage for a "sing". The leader, who had been leading soldier singing, was well qualified for the task. I could not but reflect upon the deeper meaning of this and similar occasions, and I came to the conclusion that people were pretty much the same the country over, and would follow any kind of inspiring leadership to good results. This conclusion was based upon a comparison of the Racine and Northfield gatherings — a comparison which in no way reflects upon either, but really emphasizes the superior type of the people who attend such conferences. In the traditional "wild and woolly" West at Racine, under the splendid leadership of two men, the assembly sang hymns from the New Hymnal, and practiced plain song! in the traditional "effete East" and at Northfield, the assembly sang popular songs, some of them very uncomplimentary to the Kaiser and his "terminus ad quem". They sang many of the songs inspired by the war, and with special vigor one that had to do with the island of Heligoland, a name whose syllabic structure lends itself to use as the integral part of a special route book for the Kaiser. These two experiences prompt me to remark that congregations are ready to sing if given a chance. Earlier in the Convention a well known song leader, who accompanies an evangelist, gave an object lesson in group singing by pretending that the men were a gathering of soldiers. He taught us a simple evangelical song, which had only twelve separate words, many times repeated, of course, and a tuneful melody; and that song was sung, whistled, shouted and hummed throughout the week. We might teach our congregations more hymns without even scratching the paint on a rubric. This is a method that has been tried with success.

This to the priest: At Morning Prayer announce to the congregation, at the time of the notices, that you shall have them remain for a few minutes after the service. Have the choir sing two verses of the recessional hymn, but not leave the chancel. The service is then rubrically, traditionally and actually ended. Then step to the center of the chancel and conduct, reverently, a choir rehearsal for ten minutes. If the service itself has not been too long, you will find that the congregation enjoys this experience. If any one objects to it, or is not interested, let him retire during the recessional.

One of the most outstanding impressions of the Convention was that we have a large body of intelligent, eager, religious laymen, who stand ready to give to the Church splendid service. While we are endeavoring to recruit the ministry, let us not fail to recruit the laity. They will bear many a burden if told definitely what to do. May the Brotherhood of St. Andrew live long in its service for the Master.

A Good Example

Master Nelson Crittenton, a lad in St. Paul's Church, Key West, Florida, has secured so far twenty-six subscriptions for THE WITNESS, and there are many more to follow. It shows what an energetic boy can do. His example ought to be followed by such a boy in every parish in the land. Who will break this record?

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

Within the next three months all volunteer chaplains in the various camps and army posts will give way to regularly commissioned chaplains.

The United States War Department forbids the serving of intoxicating drinks to officers and men of the army and navy who are guests in private homes.

During a severe electrical storm at Minden, La., the steeple of St. John's Church was struck by lightning and set on fire, and considerable damage was done before the fire was extinguished.

The clergy students who, on May 18, 1917, or since May 20, 1918, were preparing for the ministry in recognized theological or divinity schools, are in class 5 under the new draft classifications.

The United States destroys 7,000,000,000 pounds of foodstuffs annually in making alcoholic liquors, and the annual cost of drink and its results is $6,000,000,000—more than the sum of two Liberty Loans—according to the Congressional Record of July 6, 1917.

"One of our boys writes: 'I am in Boston, and it is just like heaven,'" says the Parish Notes of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y. This is certainly a high compliment to Boston, and we are sure Bishop Lawrence will have a thrill of delight when he receives this copy of Parish Notes."

The women of several parishes in St. Louis, Mo., are taking an active part in the campaign to sell War Savings Stamps. The ladies of St. John's Church had charge of "The Little White House" and served as hostesses at the War Savings booth one day recently. The sales for the day amounted to $2,113.

In the little town of Verbena, Ala., a bell rings for two minutes, beginning at 6 p. m. each day. During that time the people of the town quite generally cease their work, stand, and repeat these words: "God bless our president, our soldiers, our nation, and guide them on to victory".—Epworth Herald.

By the end of the year 1918 the American Red Cross will have expended in work of relief in Italy since the war began, and up to the end of 1918, at least $20,000,000. The strictest economy is observed in all branches of the work, and it is worthy of note that the purchasing power of every dollar contributed to the Red Cross, because of its vast field of voluntary endeavor and supply, is $1.59.

Bishop Sage is planning to work practically his whole missionary district from one common center, and is forming an association mission at the Cathedral, Salina, Kan. The unmarried men will live in the guild house, the married men in houses adjacent to the Cathedral, owned by the district. It is the Bishop's policy to pay the clergy salaries sufficient to live upon. The salaries are not large, but adequate. The missions pay their quotas to the Bishop direct, who pays all stipends.

The War Bureau of the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor has appointed the Rev. Edward Henry Eckel, Rector of St. Andrew's Parish, Fort Worth, as its representative in Tarrant County, Texas. Mr. Eckel and a committee of representative citizens whom he has associated with him are co-operating with the sheriff in plans for mobilizing the county prisoners in the reclamation of waste for clothing, munitions and cannon, and in securing, in conjunction with the draft boards, a closer application of the "work or fight" order, especially in relation to discharged and paroled prisoners and to rejected registrants.

"Christianity is an incisive demand of our times," says the Rev. Dr. Lacey of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y. "A writer in THE WITNESS speaks of the multiplication of weak mission stations, which exhaust the resources of the diocese and rarely blossom into strong centers of work. Among the little remnant of Nestorian Christians in Urumiah, Persia, there are seven missionary societies laboring to win these people from their ancient Christian Church to such modern interpretations as the Lutheran, the Swedish Augustana, the Plymouth Brethren, Dunkerds, Holiness Methodist, Southern Baptist, Northern Baptist!"

Bishop Woodcock has given his approval to the uniting, for a period of six months, of the parish of Calvary Church and St. Andrew's Parish, Louisville, Ky. It has also been approved by the vestries of both parishes, but it will be submitted to the congregations of each Church before it is definitely decided to carry out the idea. If it is confirmed by the congregations, the Rector of St. Andrew's, the Rev. Mr. Douglas, will be in charge of the combined Churches. The temporary uniting of the congregations will not be effective until October first, and will last for a period of six months, but will probably be extended, if found to work satisfactorily.—Diocese of Kentucky.

The Rev. Dr. Charles E. Tuke, Rector of St. Clement's Church, St. Paul, Minn., has issued through the columns of his parish paper, in large display type, a striking call to noonday prayer: "To win the war, we need all the available power in men, material, machinery, money. But we need, also, spiritual power! And that comes forth by prayer. Let us, then, definitely seek this power. At noonday every day, wherever we may be, let us pray for our cause and our men. In silent prayer, a few words will suffice. Here is a suggestion: 'Prosper our cause, O God, which we believe is Thy cause. Guard our men in soul and body. Show us our part in the battle. Help us to win a righteous peace; in Jesus' name. Amen.'"

The Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C., is making a comprehensive campaign for the support of schools and colleges, and for the maintenance of attendance upon them. President Wilson urges that "in so far as the draft law will permit, there should be no falling off in attendance in elementary schools, high schools or colleges is a matter of the very greatest importance, affecting both our strength in war and our national welfare and efficiency when the war is over." Mr. Claxton, commissioner of the bureau, urges the clergy and others to encourage parents "to make all sacrifice necessary to keep their sons and daughters in school. We must see to it that no boy or girl shall have less opportunity for education because of the war."

"We are particularly fortunate in having Dean Bell at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station," writes Mr. H. L. Choate, Brotherhood of St. Andrew secretary. "He is the acting chaplain for the detention camps, and speaks to each company as it comes into detention. He starts by saying he is going to give the boys a few 'hunches' about how a navy man acts. His talk is on a navy man's morals, his religion, his home, his officers. It is a wonderful talk, straight from the shoulder, and is given in true navy, 'hard-boiled' language. The dean has talked to over 110 companies in detention, and he never fails to reach the boys. He preaches at least once on Sundays, besides officiating at a celebration of the Holy Communion. Chaplain Williams conducts a third communion service in another part of the station. These services have been as real and helpful as any I have ever attended."

Personals

The Rt. Rev. Dr. William Lawrence, Bishop of Massachusetts, will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration Oct. 5th.

Bishop Woodcock of Kentucky, who was ill and under the care of a physician at his summer home at Leland, Mich., is greatly improved.

Lieut. Edwards, son of the Rev. J. H. Edwards, Rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest, Ill., and president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Chicago is in charge of the intelligence department of the U. S. Navy at Chicago.

Dr. David E. Gibson, a member of the vestry of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, and a lay reader, has conducted during the past twelve months 44 services in diocesan and municipal institutions, for the most part at the bridewell and the tuberculosis sanitarium.

The Rev. James H. Garner, Rector of Trinity Church, Moundsville, West Virginia, has accepted a call to act as Rector of Christ Church, Clarksburg, in the same diocese, during the absence of the Rev. J. T. Carter, who is serving as a chaplain in the National Army.

Bishop Sage, who spent the summer at Richard's Landing, St. Joseph's Island, Canada, has returned to his work in the Missionary District of Salina. On his way home, he spent a Sunday in Keokuk, Iowa, and conducted services in St. John's Church, of which he was the Rector prior to his consecration as a Bishop.

Miss E. C. Tillotson, educational secretary of the General Board of Missions, New York, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Allison of Ohio, spent the past week in conference with the women of the Missionary District of Spokane. The conference sessions were held at All Saints' Cathedral, Spokane.

* * * * * * * * * *
* WHO AM I? *
* Who am I? I am seen in church *
* at nearly every service. I stare *
* the minister in the face, and *
* laugh at his doctrines. I dis- *
* hearten him and cause him men- *
* tal anguish and worry. Because * * of me, sermons lose their grip *
* and effectiveness. Whole families *
* formerly were comforted within *
* my bosom, but have now forsaken *
* me. If they would, Christians * * could drive me out. They criticise *
* the minister when they should * * criticise me. Who am I? I am *
* the enemy within the gates. I * * am the devil's chief assistant. I * * am the empty pew.—E. Paul *
* Johnson. *
* * * * * * * * * *

Good Habits Will Help Win the War

The Oregon Churchman states that the author of the composition printed below, Logan F. Roe, is a member of the Good Shepherd Sunday school, Portland. He won first place in a competition which included four other schools, and is a four-minute man:

"Men and women of America! Upon you falls the responsibility of bringing up the flower of the eyes of the world—the boys and girls of America.

"This must be accomplished if we wish the world to be, in the next generation, a place worthy of being lived upon.

"In the war that rages over Europe now, millions of the youth, the coming pride of their country, have been slaughtered. They might have been the great leaders of a mighty tomorrow. But they are now six feet below the sod. And so on our boys and girls rests the mantle of the boys and girls who were the future scientists, writers, orators, doctors and inventors of tomorrow.

"Our children must be brought up strong and healthy to endure the mental labor of the coming generation. They will be the leaders of the world!

"The surviving children of France, England, Italy, Germany, Austria and Russia may have had some mental training, but they will be engaged in rebuilding their country, or, in other words, in physical labor.

"They will have no time to study scientifically, to invent, to write, to become orators or doctors.

"All of this, then, will fall to your sons and daughters.

"Men of America! Listen! Your sons and daughters are growing up to be the leaders of a great tomorrow. They must be healthy! Are you protecting their health?

"Are you raising children that are hale and hearty, or are you allowing their health to dwindle away? Do you smoke in the presence of your children? Do you plant in their souls a longing to smoke also? Do you, knowingly or unknowingly, harm their lungs by blowing smoke into their faces? Do you know that smoking at an early age wrecks the physical and nervous condition?

"Do you know that if your boy smokes at an early age he will make himself a nervous wreck?

"Do you have your child practice thrift? Does your child help others by buying Thrift Stamps? Are you preparing for the future of your sons and daughters? Do you intend to have your child to be one of the educated leaders of the world or a digger of ditches?

"Do you allow your child to spoil his stomach and to starve a few children 'over there' by eating too much sweets?

"Do you allow your child to destroy his health and to prolong the war by eating too much meat, wheat, butter, cake and pie, or does your child keep his health by eating much vegetables?

"Does your child have a garden? Are you teaching your child to help win the war?

"Will your child, on the road to success, travel on a corduroy road or a paved highway?

"Rememtber, that if you help your child now you help him in the future."

Services Wretchedly Read, Responses Die Out

Some prefer a choral service in which the responsive parts of the service are sung by the choir and congregation. Others are not fond of singing, and prefer to hear the service read. We should learn to be tolerant in religion and to enter into the spirit of any form of worship which expresses the devotion of the Church. There is one mistake which people often make who prefer a plain form of service. They think that poor reading is better than any kind of singing. When the service is sung, those who sing try to sing their very best, and there is a feeling that they are making a very serious effort to do so. If the singing is not good, they are criticised, and they criticise themselves. They know that only the best effort is worthy of the worship of Almighty God. But what a difference when the service is read! Any wretched reading of the service is good enough for Almighty God. One member of the congregation races ahead of everybody else. Another drags behind. There is no unison of words, no expression. The responses in the Litany die out, and only an individual here and there can be heard. Sometimes the "Amen" at the end of a prayer is so faint as to be scarcely audible. Now this is not spirituality. It is downright laziness. If the choir did as poorly with its singing it would not be tolerated. The services of the Prayer Book, whether they are read or spoken, are deeply impressive when intelligently rendered, and with a spirit of fitting devotion; but they are anything but impressive when hurriedly mumbled by an indifferent congregation. When yo go to church to worship Almighty God, realize that it is a most sacred privilege, and take part in the service with spirit and devotion, and make the public worship of God inspiring and impressive. No one can do this but yourself.—The Rev. E. W. Averill.

BRECK SCHOOL 2095 Commonwealth Avenue, ST. PAUL, MINN.
Located in St. Anthony Park, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, possessing the advantage of access to both. One block from the campus of the Agricultural Department of the University. Offers a complete High School course, and will fit students for any college. Students of the University may register for work in religious subjects. Terms very moderate. Apply to Rev. C. E. Haupt, Superintendent.

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY
Sewanee, Tennessee, 2,300 feet elevation in the Cumberland Mountains. Ideal health conditions. Broadest certificate privileges. Highest rating War Department. Best moral and social influences. Owned and controlled by the twenty Southern Dioceses of the Episcopal Church. For catalogue Address the Superintendent.

Virginia Episcopal School (LYNCHBURG, VA.)
For boys of character, position and ability, whose means will not permit them to attend our more expensive schools. Prepares at cost for college, university or immediate entrance upon the duties of life. Made possible by gifts of founders. Special terms to clergymen. Boarders for the present are limited to seventy-eight. One hundred and six acres of land. The session begins September 19, 1918. Apply for information and catalogue to the Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Rector. Rev. Thomas Kinloch Nelson, Vice Rector.

National Cathedral School
A Boarding and Day School for Girls. Fireproof building in Cathedral Close of 40 acres. College certificate privilege. Music, Art, Advanced, and Special Courses.
THE BISHOP OF WASHINGTON, President of the Board of Trustees
JESSIE C. McDONALD, M. S., Principal
HELEN L. WEBSTER, Ph. D., Academic Head
141t Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Cathedral School for Girls
ORLANDO, FLORIDA
High class Boarding and Day School. College Preparatory and General Courses. Capable Teachers. Careful Home Life. Delightful Climate. Low Rates.
Rev. Roderick P. Cobb, Rector.
19th year opens Oct. 2.

Racine College
RACINE, WISCONSIN
A Church School for your boy. Academy and Junior College.
B. Talbot Rogers, M. A., D. D., Warden.

—THE— HANNAH MORE ACADEMY
Simplicity and Excellence
Maryland Church School for Girls. Catalogue. Reisterstown, Md.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelin, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE".
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind in America.
Address:
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY, 1611 Flatiron Building New York City

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls' College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President.
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal

—ST. ALBAN'S SCHOOL—
KNOXVILLE, ILL.
For Church Boys and Others. Certificate admits to University. Moderate Rates for Board and Tuition. Write the Rector:
REV. L. B. HASTINGS
117 N. Peoria Street, Chicago

Collegiate School, Military
for Boys, Denver, Colo.
All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations.
Adress REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN,
Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

A SAFE and ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Women's Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY.
MRS. GUTGESELL'S CHRISTMAS NOVELTY GIFT BOOK
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
NO INVESTMENT SPLENDID PROFITS
For information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL. MINNEAPOLIS, 400-402 Sixth Avenue South MINN.

SHATTUCK SCHOOOL
¶As behind it the Experience, Traditions and Ideals of fifty years. ¶Is a College Preparatory School with military drill and discipline under U. S. War Dep't. Reserve Officers' Training Corps. ¶In Grounds, Building and equipment is equaled by but few schools. "The school is full for 1918-1919. Enrollment should be made now for1919-20."
Box 452. Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn.

SETTLEMENT TRAINING SCHOOL
LA GRANGE SETTLEMENT LA GRANGE, GA.
A PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH TRAINING SCHOOL FOR SOCIAL WORKERS
Courses in Settlement Nursing, Kindergarten Work, and special course of one year in Church and Social Work for graduates.
REV. R. T. PHILLIPS, Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
L. W. APPLEGATE.....Publisher
JAMES SHEERIN GEORGE P. ATWATER HENRY J. MIKELL
FRANCIS S. WHITE JAMES WISE
EDWARD C. CHORLEY

Published every Saturday at Hobart, Ind., where all business communications should be addressed.
SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

ADVERTISING RATES

Three dollars an inch each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates revised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

5% for two months; 10% for three months; 15% for six months; 20% for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

NOTICE

Our Chicago office will be opened in the course of a few weeks. In the meantime, all news and other matter intended for publication in THE WITNESS should be addressed to the Rev. Charles J. Shutt, Managing Editor, Hobart, Indiana.

EDITORIAL

SLACKERS

We are frequently reminded, in various ways, that one can be just as good a Christian without being a Christian at all, paradoxical as that may seem.

Of course the whole question depends on what being a Christian consists in. Words have a curious way of eluding thought, and meaning something entirely different than they did, because we want them so to do.

The poor, plodding peasant of the Sixteenth Century was known as a villain. He was a good goat upon which to unload the sins of society, so he became a villain. So, contrariwise, the thief with good social connections became an embezzler, while the liar of Anglo-Saxon days became a prevaricator, in good society.

In similar fashion, the parable which our Lord spoke for the benefit of the elder brother became known among Church folk as the parable of the prodigal son. It was a more convenient interpretation for respectable Church folk to put the emphasis upon the revelry of the younger son than to join in the condemnation of their own sins, as reflected in the scorching arraignment of the perfectly respectable elder brother.

After a similar manner, our Christian Science friends have read convenient meanings into such words as "matter", and "spirit", and sickness", and "sin", and people love to have it so.

In a similar way, our puritan ancestors repudiated the word "church", and sententiously called their places of worship meeting houses. But somehow the word church continued to have a respectability which they coveted, so meeting houses became churches, and platforms became altars, and superintendents became Bishops among our Methodist friends, and here also the Wesleyan Society became the Methodist Church.

In the same way, the word "Christian" has had a history, which, in spite of its convolutions, is interesting. When the disciples were first called Christians in Antioch it probably was regarded as an opprobrious epithet by those who bestowed it upon them, but because there was real worth in the thing so called, it became a title of which men became proud. Just as the word Yankee has passed through various shades of meaning, from that of one who drives a tight bargain to that of one who is a hero on the battlefield.

The truth of the matter is that whatever name you may give a thing, the name gets a reputation commensurate with the real value of the thing, and the word which one day represents an object of scorn may come to be a title of distinction.

Still, if we are going to have definite ideas, a word should have a definite meaning. Yet, if one wanted to start a riot in some interdenominational meeting called for the betterment of the Christian Church, let him merely introduce the question as follows: "Before we discuss the matter of bettering the Christian Church, let us define what we mean by the Christian Church." Yet isn't it rather foolish to attempt to better a thing which you can't define?

The difficulty lies in the fact that everybody wants to profit by the glorious history of the Christian Church, but few want to assume the definite responsibilities attached to membership therein.

Of course the Christian religion has suffered from those who have used their Christianity as a cloak for their own meanness.

Religious people are prone to certain sins. Naturally a man who refuses to sing will never be known as a poor singer. The man who never attempts anything doesn't make any mistakes.

That is a mighty poor reason, however, for not attempting anything. Better a poor soldier than a slacker, yet the slacker will tell you how poor the poor soldier is.

So, if one can be a soldier without being a soldier, that is, if he can get a job in which he may wear the uniform without ever hearing a gun, he is well within his rights, but he is really not entitled to the Croix de Guerre. He escapes all danger of being called a coward, and yet the coward has made his attempt to be a soldier.

I fancy there are no non-combatants in Christ's army. Yet the man who passes as a Christian citizen, and yet never took the oath of enlistment in Christ's army, is in a position in which he fancies he gets all the benefits of Christ's life without assuming any risk of being called a hypocrite. He is like the man who joins the National Guard in times of peace, and withdraws from service in times of war.

To be a Christian, one must be willing to bear the odium of being a Christian, for the enemy makes a man uncomfortable at times with his barrage of ridicule and contempt.

This war is doing a lot to make us think straight.

The Prussian egotism and hypocrisy is the same kind of egotism and hypocrisy that I have always objected to on the part of the self-sufficient curbstone anti-Christian, whose chief stock in trade is the sinfulness of the Church. It is like the Prussian who complains of the barbaric acts of the allies. Of course the allies are barbarous, for all war is barbaric, but it isn't the Prussians as should say so.

They have the same defense that they are not pretending to be humane, and that the allies are so pretending. But the question still remains, should not they attempt to be as humane as war can be? Of course the man who attempts nothing is pretending nothing,; but is that a virtue? Better attempt to be humane in war than to glorify brutality.

Better attempt to live the life of Christ, and fail, than to boast of your unwillingness to accept Him as your Master.

Hypocrisy today is to be found among those who trust in themselves that they are Prussians, and despise others.

A Christian is at least one who has definitely enlisted in the service of Christ and, as such soldier, is "carrying on", to the best of his ability, even though imperfectly, under His banner.

And such enlistment should be on the basis which Christ established, that a man shall be baptized, thus assuming the full responsibility of such service, with all of its odium as well as all of its privileges.

To hold off from enlistment because some soldiers are deserters and others are slackers is as treacherous as it would be to refuse service under the Stars and Stripes because some American soldiers are unworthy of their cause. Christianity has had its Judases and the U. S. A. its Benedict Arnolds, but neither the one nor the other justifies the slacker in his slacking.

It is sometimes asked why so many men fail to attend church and do their duty as Christians, and in the majority of cases the blame is laid upon the Church.

That is not where the blame belongs. The Church on earth is what by the grace of God men make it, and the man who holds off from the service of Christ because his brother is weak is not himself strong, but weaker than his weak brother. Men evade the service of Christ because they do not want to assume the spiritual responsibility and duty which such service demands. They do not want to make the spiritual exertion which such responsibility places upon them, so they say they are as good Christians as the Christians themselves, when they are not Christians at all. Neither will Christ so regard them.

A STUDY IN THE ACTS

By Bishop Johnson

"When they therefore were come together, they asked Him, saying, Lord wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?

"And He said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power."—Acts i:6-7.

The life and teachings of Jesus Christ indicate that the Christian life was to be a constant warfare against sin, and men from the very first attempted to make it something else that was just as good.

In the text, this took the form of a speculative inquiry as to the time of the restoration.

In order to understand the question which the disciples asked, one must realize that the Hebrews who asked it were out and out Zionists, who were looking forward to the restoration of Israel's rule in Jerusalem, to replace the bondage which the Jews were suffering under Roman rule.

One can imagine that Simon Zelotes may have asked this question because the party of zealots to whom he belonged were red-hot for the overthrow of the Roman power and the substitution of a Hebrew rule in Zion.

At any rate, the question was prompted by mingled feelings of religion and patriotism on the part of those who asked it.

Our Lord met the question with a rebuke. It was not the business to which their lives had been committed. They were to be witnesses to Him throughout the world, in order that they might be the instruments of the forgiveness of sin, and eternal life.

Any one who has ever presided over a meeting realizes how easy it is for men to be diverted from the question in hand to an endless discussion of some unimportant and petty diversion.

It was so here. It has been so many times since the Father had the world in hand. He kept the power over human affairs in His own hands.

It was not for them to know the times and the seasons. They were not to interrupt the unfolding of that power by idle and unseasonable questions. They were to do their work as men who had faith in the Father's power, and not as men whose curiosity must be satisfied before they would believe. There have been many similar questions asked since, and these questions, when persistently asked by groups of people, have developed sects of marvelous zeal, but whose fundamental propositions were incapable of producing effective results. Let me enumerate some of these interruptions to the unfolding of God's providential order.

There is Spiritualism. To those who have lost dear ones, the question, "Can the dead have intercourse with the living"? seems a very pertinent one. As a matter of fact it is most impertinent, as any history of Spiritualism will show.

For if we keep our minds on the great objective of Christ's life, that He should save the world from sin, one may well ask what bearing has a more or less desultory conversation with spirits in the other world have upon this great fact? Some say with Dives, "Nay, but if one talked with them from the dead, surely they will believe". Well, we have seen whole colonies of people who fancied that they had had conferences with the departed, and yet one looks in vain for any evidence that among such communities there has ever proceeded any great or effective zeal for redeeming men from sin.

It is a curious and morbid desire, which, when apparently gratified, has produced a dreary and inconsequential sect. No great motive power for righteousness has ever proceeded from those who ask irrelevant questions, merely to gratify a morbid curiosity.

We are living once again in the midst of a pre-millenarian wave of interest. The events of this war seem to bear out certain prophecies in the Book of Revelation. So have many other events, from the reign of Nero to that of William Hohenzollern. Be that as it may, St. Paul was bothered by the same kind of an interruption to his devoted and consecrated life.

The Church at Thessalonica was especially enthusiastic, so that St. Paul writes: "We ourselves glory in you among the Churches of God for your patience and faith." But he also writes to these pious Christians, "that ye be not soon shaken in mind or troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as though written by us, as though the day of Christ is at hand"; and again referring to these same disturbers of the peace of the Church, who were so possessed with millenarian ideas that they gave up their employment and gave away their goods, and refused to engage in any secular occupations: "We hear that there be some who walk among you, disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies; remember our command to you about such, that if any would not work, neither should he eat," Yet in all probability St. Paul believed that the day was near at hand; but that was not the thing which he had been commanded to teach. Nor would he submit to be sidetracked from his commission by any alluring prospects of a speedy millenium.

It is the same now. I note that many of our brethren among the denominations are at variance over this question, and that congregations are split in factions over this question. One can humbly ask, of what possible good? If Christ were coming tomorrow to judge the earth, would He rather find us quietly doing the things that He has asked us to do, or vociferously arguing what certain cryptic passages in the Book of Revelation might mean? When men stop work, they begin to discuss foolish questions, and what can be more unprofitable than to discuss matters which the Father has put in His own power?

If it was not for the Apostles to know such things, I know not why you should fancy that it is for you to exercise yourselves about them.

Again, I have frequently been interrupted in my work by those who have a new definition of God, a new theory of matter and spirit, a new fancy about sickness and sin, and at once they want to ditch the progress of the Christian Church, that their new theories may have the right of way.

There is nothing new about any of these things—spiritualism, millenarianism, new thought ideas. History fairly reeks with the repetition of all these curious deflections of Christ's Gospel from the main track upon which He placed it, viz: the forgiveness of sin and eternal life.

The only reason why so many people are deflected from the main purpose of fighting the sin within them is that, in the first place, they know nothing about the wearisome repetitions of these religious curiosities in histories, and, in the second place, that the average man would rather do anything than fight the sin in his own nature and carry on through the monotonous battle against evil.

The Christian religion is a business and, like all good business, it fights shy of speculation, even though the promoter may have the shares of stock embossed in glittering tinsel.

Life is a wearisome battle, and for that very reason the one who sticks to his job will win out, while the credulous individual who seeks to win out in various speculative enterprises will soon lose what treasure he has.

Yet men have ever been eager to substitute some speculative philosophy for the hard work of overcoming evil in one's own soul. At any rate, those who asked the question of Christ, in the text above, were not given any reason for pursuing the question further.

If we hold on to sin for a day, we may have to hold on to it forever.

HOWE SCHOOL A thorough preparatory school for a limited number of well-bred boys. For illustrated circulars, address the Rector.
REV. JOHN H. McKinzie, D. D.,
Box W Howe, Indiana

Berkeley Divinity School
Middletown, Conn.
Address REV. WILLIAM PALMER LADD Dean

THE OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Teabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918. 8-10-13

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY ADVENT CALL

By G. W. J.

We are told that "many diocesan branches (Woman's Auxiliary) are developing their plans for the Advent call, and that perhaps the two that have gone furthest at present are Southern Ohio and New York". We find in the Spirit of Missions a very clear and helpful letter, written by the diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary (Southern Ohio), Miss Elizabeth Matthews, to the messengers who are to carry out the plan there. We reproduce it in this column for the help it will give to the many outside of Southern Ohio who are trying to plan for the work, or perhaps to some who have given no thought to it as yet. Who knows? there may be others who have not even heard of it. This is a vast land, and there are many people in it who do not read Church papers, or who do not attend Church Conferences. But here is the letter:

"By the action of the delegates at the annual meeting, all the members of the Woman's Auxiliary in Southern Ohio are committed to the war work proposed to the Woman's Auxiliary throughout the nation, and known as the Advent Call. It is the biggest thing we have ever been asked to undertake. It will demand all our consecration, energy and thought to carry it out as it should be carried out; for, well executed, this concerted call to prayer will be a tremendous power in our own lives and in that of the Church, and that of the nation. The Advent Call is not to be lightly undertaken. We dare not play or pretend in the face of such power as we are asking God to exert in our behalf.

"As the plan involves so much, time will be needed in which the Bishops and the clergy of the diocese must organize and prepare the way for the necessary parochial and diocesan committees and meetings. However, we women need these summer months in which to prepare ourselves, for we must individually be equal to the task which later those in authority will lay on our shoulders. Do not let us lose the comparative leisure and quiet of the summer. Let us be praying and thinking, reading and discussing together, and facing the task we have set ourselves:

"1. The Advent Call demands of each one an absolute belief in the power of prayer, in God's willingness to use us, our souls and bodies, working through us, that His Kingdom may come, His will be done on earth. We best learn His will in prayer, and only through prayer can we set our wills in tune with His. We can best affect other human wills by praying for them, for only when on our knees and seeking God's will dare we, fallible beings, try to influence other human beings. For what does the word influence mean? It is derived from the same word as 'influx', a pouring or flowing in. To quote: 'Influence is the pouring in of personality into personality; it is the interpenetration of souls. All mankind, past and present, form one communion and fellowship, one inconceivably complex system of interpenetration. If you think it out it is a frightening thought—the immeasurable responsibility of every soul in its effect upon the whole of mankind.' Belief in prayer, then, means a positive faith in the solidarity of mankind, and that God rules this earth not by force, but by love and the spirit of sacrifice and service, exemplified once for all by the Cross of Christ. For when did the Cross ever mean as much to the world as it does today, and is it not because we ourselves are being influenced by the power of sacrifice—the lives given unstintingly by the young soldiers of our own and our allied armies? So let us take as our motto, 'Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer'. What do we American women need more than patient hope? And it is to be won only through continuing prayer. God, having given man free-will, will not rule on earth till men set their wills in accord with His. Hence the need and power of prayer.

"2. The Advent Call demands of us women not only belief in God, but love of Christ—such love for our Lord Jesus Christ as women showed Him 2,000 years ago in Palestine. We know they loved Him. De we realize what difficult things that love impelled them to undertake for Him? Think only of the women at the tomb going as witnesses of His resurrection to the incredulous, unbelieving disciples. It took courage and faith, but mainly love and knowledge of Him. The Advent Call means all this of us, and instead of three or four women at an empty tomb, think of the hosts of women today who do love and know Jesus Christ and the power of His resurrection. We can do greater things than the Marys did, if we do them with the same loving obedience.

"3. The Advent Call demands of us not only faith and love, but service. Having prepared ourselves in our homes this summer and through the training of institutes held next fall, we shall in December be called as Christian soldiers to go on active duty. The call to prayer and service must be made Church-wide, and can only be given effectively by willing messengers. Are you willing to be a messenger on such an errand? Or shall our quest be stayed because of the lack of willing feet? God forbid! Or if not chosen to be a messenger, there is other work for you to do. We shall need all as intercessors, for those who go on active service must feel that there are many on their knees, giving them power, courage and strength. There are two ways in which we may fail next autumn: First, by belittling this opportunity through lack of preparation. To prevent that we want as messengers women (nominated by their Rector and the president of their parish Auxiliary) who will consent to attend an institute of two days, held some time during the months of October and November, in a convenient center, at which time these chosen women will be spiritually prepared by the Bishop (or a clergyman appointed by him) and given practical detailed instruction by a woman who will have been appointed by the Executive Board for such service and prepared by attendance at a summer conference. Those women who, after attendance at an institute, are finally chosen as messengers will be sent during the first week of Advent into another parish or mission than their own and, conducted by a local woman, will call on every woman on the list furnished her, asking each one to sign a pledge card explaining its purpose, following any leading that may be opened for her, during the conversation, by the Holy Spirit, using tact and judgment in her witnessing, leaving prayer cards, when such are desired, and going on her way, 'nothing doubting but that God favorably alloweth this charitable work of ours', and faithfully and devoutly giving God thanks that we are called to the knowledge of His grace, and faith in Him.

"We may fail again by belittling our own ability to seize the opportunity made today by the war. To prevent this, will you not begin today to think and pray, determining that you will do what God asks of you next fall, nothing doubting but that He will surely give us His Holy Spirit and strengthen and comfort us, that we may indeed do His will. I ask all who read this to pray henceforth till December for our undertaking, and would suggest using the first Collect for Easter Day, with this in mind.

"I would also suggest that you read, and re-read, one or more of the short and inexpensive but very helpful books given in the list herewith, and that you do your utmost to enlist other women to read and to pray for God's blessing on our Advent Call."

The following list of books are given as helpful, and may be ordered from the publishers direct or from the Educational Department, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York:

Self-Training in Prayer—McNeile (50c).

After This Manner Pray Ye—McNeile (50c).

Have You Understood Christianity?—Carey (45c and 65c), Morehouse Publishing Co.

Prayer and Some of Its Difficulties—Carey (60c).

The Kingdom That Must Be Built—Carey (60c), Longman's.

The Meaning of Prayer—Fosdick (60c).

The Meaning of Faith—Fosdick ($1), Association Press.

The Cross at the Front—Tiplady ($1).

The Soul of a Soldier—Tiplady ($1.25), Revell.

The Glory of the Trenches—Dawson ($1), Lane.

False Reckoning

The Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman

"I only am left".—I Kings, xix:10.

There is a great tendency with us, especially at this critical time, to unduly overestimate our own importance in the large scheme of things. Occasionally the sudden death of some outstanding figure does cause a temporary flurry, with its accompanying short-lived panic, but we generally rise from these experiences with a larger consciousness of our folly and stupidity. No one is altogether indispensable; even a von Hindenburg may prove but a colossal wooden image, and his retirement but an incident of passing interest.

Luther's death did not hinder the progress of a vast reformation, nor did the assassin's bullet which slew a Lincoln halt or hinder the mighty plans of a reconstructed and reunited nation. No, our tendency to over- valuation of human agencies is altogether disproportionate. We recall that Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, on viewing the splendor of Trinity Church, Boston, "So all this depends upon a half inch of larynx in one man's throat". He was, of course, referring to the matchless genius of Phillips Brooks. But God does not leave His cause in the world without witnesses, and even the death of a Brooks does not restrict or retard the ever expanding Kingdom of Righteousness. The great prophet, Elijah, had experienced a severe defeat; a soulless king, with his profligate queen, had seemingly destroyed the efficiency of his work, and dissipated the splendid influences of the Church. It was while in a deep melancholy and a condition of depression that Elijah cried out: "I only am left, and they seek my life to take it away." The answer to this expression of too great self-reliance and self-importance was: "Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed to Baal," and with this stern reminder God sent the disheartened, self-important prophet back to his tasks and to the great work of reconstruction. Elijah had simply overestimated his own importance—that was all. He had assumed that God's Kingdom in the world could not go on without him, but he was utterly mistaken. Just now we need to be reminded of the fact, writ large in history, that "Man proposes, but God disposes."

Out of our present world chaos we must believe that some larger, more God-like plan is to come. Man's part in the Divine scheme of things is perfectly evident, but no man or nation, however great, is indispensable to the working out of God's plan. Humility is seemingly a lost virtue with us today, and at times we seem to think our little human scheme of things is all-important. It very frequently takes a catastrophe to bring us to our senses. We have one now; let us, then, with chastened pride, recognize that we may be useful just in so far as we acknowledge that behind all the world's strange tragedies, behind its vast armies—yes, and its plan-makers—is One who can make even the "wrath of man to turn to His praise".

Let us of America approach our new tasks at home and abroad with the clear consciousness that we are great and invincible only in so far as we fit into God's great and eternal purposes.

This war is to be won—every day makes it more evident—through acknowledged dependence upon God, and through co-operation with Him.

The assumed alliance of a Kaiser with his tribal god is an affront to the world's intelligence and a denial of its universal experience. Kings and czars and kaisers may depart, and all their miserable and unhallowed schemes may fail, but when they have played their little though tragic part, the order of the universe, like the stars in their courses, will go on, and all the federated powers of darkness cannot hinder it.

We like well those splendid lines of Cowper—they have a peculiar fitness for the present hour:

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.
Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter,
And He will make it plain."

—Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

FORMS OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT

The Prophetic Ministry

The Rev. J. H. Young, D. D.

There is a conception of the ministry which deserves separate mention, both for its own inherent interest and because of the influence which it has had upon American Protestantism. The Society of Friends, or Quakers, as they have popularly been called, have had an influence out of all proportion to their number.

The Society of Friends have a recognized ministry. Elders have the oversight to encourage young ministers and others, while ministers have a prophetic and evangelistic office. There is no ordination, but recognition of the office, which is regarded as coming direct from God. Under the freedom allowed to all members to exercise the gift of speaking in public, when a member has established a reputation in his own congregation, the preparative meeting of elders and ministers of that congregation reports to the quarterly meeting, which includes a number of congregations, that John Doe is recognized as having the inward gifts. If the quarterly meeting approve, he is ultimately mentioned to the yearly meeting, and having been recognized by them, the brother is thenceforth allowed to sit among the ministers and elders. All through it is distinctly a matter of public recognition of a Divine gift. There can be no ordination, as though the prophetic gift could be conferred, yet the individual is not left free to claim a gift. The organization reserves the right to "try the spirits, whether they be of God".

This idea of the ministry as a prophetic office has profoundly affected American Protestantism. The popular language which speaks of "Rev. Blank's pulpit" rises from this conception. The attitude of independence, which makes the average Protestant minister demand freedom from accountability to any denominational standards, means the same thing. I once heard a minister of the Disciples' Church (popularly known as Campbellite) say that he had never been ordained, and would never allow himself to be ordained. He had this idea of the ministry, and felt that ordination would be a denial of his gift from God. Investigation would probably show that a great many Protestants of all denominations regard ordination as a form of public recognition of the prophetic gift, rather than as the actual conferring of any office.

We need, then, a most careful distinction between the prophetic office and the priestly. The Christian Church, in all ages, has been blessed with prophets. Sometimes these have been clergy, and just as often they have been laity. The prophet is a man with a message for his time. Often that message has been expressed through the medium of poetry; sometimes through books or pamphlets; sometimes through editorials in a newspaper. Among the clergy there will be half a dozen prophets in each generation, but their prophetic gift does not come through ordination.

Ordination confers the priestly office, which is concerned with the administration of sacraments, and teaching, and the cure of souls. For the priestly office, no less than for the prophetic, there should be the call of God, and our Prayer Book recognizes this in the question to the candidate, "Do you believe in your heart that you are called of God?" etc. Yet for the administration of the Church's sacraments, and for teaching the truth handed down to the Church, there must be the formal conveying of authority, as in ordination. Just in proportion as the sacraments are lost sight of, and definite dogmatic truth minimized, will men lean towards the idea of the prophetic ministry and lose hold on the priestly.

The question of the sacraments, therefore, is vital in the discussion of reunion. There is no use discussing the ministry, or terms of recognition of each other, until some common ground is established as to the place of the sacraments. The Society of Friends, who, if they did not originate the idea of the prophetic ministry, at least have developed it to the logical completion, reject the sacraments. In so far as the same conception of the ministry prevails among Protestant bodies, or individual members of such bodies, we will find the sacraments regarded as mere means of testifying to the work of the Spirit in the man before the administration of the sacrament.

Those bodies which believe in sacramental grace make much of ordination. This will be obvious when one considers the Lutheran bodies, the Scotch Presbyterians and the old school Presbyterians in this country, or the Eastern section of the Reformed Church in this country. With such bodies the problem of terms of reunion would not seem to be hopeless; but where there is only the idea of a prophetic ministry there seems to be no common ground on which to meet for the opening of negotiations.

Awarding the Croix de Guerre

The following is a brief but vivid account of the awarding of the Croix de Guerre (published by the Rev. Dr. Tuke of St. Paul in St. Clement's Chimes), which was received from Miss Anne Williams, a member of that parish, who is at work with the American Red Cross in Paris:

"I was invited to a presentation of the Croix de Guerre, and it was most interesting.

"It was held at the Grand Palace. A guard of honor, composed of three hundred French soldiers, with a band, marched into the building, and this guard formed a square. They were most effective in their horizon blue uniforms.

"The band was stationed a short distance away; there was a table with all the various decorations at one side, and some high official presented them.

"First, three officials inspected the guard, then walked to the center of the square formed. The band played the 'Marsellaise', and the presentation began.

"Those to receive the decoration were seated inside of the square, and if the person receiving one was a very high official, he walked to the 'presentator'; if not, that official went to him.

"First, the official touched the man who was to receive the cross on each shoulder with his sword, pinned the cross on his coat, kissed him on both cheeks, and saluted, the band playing military music all the time.

"The other decorations were given with less ceremony.

"Then the families of men who had been killed received the decoration which the men would have had, had they lived.

"One wee little girl was presented with the Croix de Guerre for her father.

"It was too sweet. The official touched her on the shoulder with his sword, pinned the cross on her little dress and kissed her, and she put up her little arms.

"Then, the ceremony being over, the band played the 'Song of Departure', and marched out of the building. It was most impressive."

Do We Give Small Missions Too Much Money

The Church Helper publishes an appeal for more generous support of small missions, made in a personal letter written to a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Western Michigan. The author of the letter presents a number of strong reasons why the Church should see to it that small missions are efficiently maintained, in the course of which he says: "I have come to see that this missionary work is tremendous business. Our missions are children today; they will grow up into fathers and mothers who will beget new children to the Church. It takes twenty-one years to make a man—sometimes twenty-five or thirty. All that time the man in embryo has to be supported by money not his own. We can afford to lose money for a while on a mission. We WASTE thousands on our children. We give our children much more than they need; we give God's children much less than they need. A man starts his son up in business in one way; the Church sets her missions up in business in another way. We are afraid we will give a mission too much money. I wonder if in point of fact a mission has ever had too much money?"

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A Difficult Journey

By Archdeacon Stuck

On February 27 Archdeacon Stuck, then on his winter journey along the Arctic coast of Alaska, wrote from Point Barrow to a friend in the United States. The letter has recently reached its destination. Point Barrow is the most northerly mission station on the North American continent, if not in the world. The work there is carried on by the Presbyterian Church. Archdeacon Stuck says:

"The journey hither from Point Hope was hard. There can be no bleaker or more desolate country in the world, and the winds sweep over it bitterly and incessantly. For the greater part of the 350 or 400 miles our way lay along the beach—the rough sea ice on our left hand, the low-lying, snow-covered tundra on our right. Sometimes for days together we were on the surface of lagoons, separated from the sea by narrow sand spits. For two days we traveled in one continuous blinding snow storm, with a perfect hurricane of wind. Fortunately, it was from the south. Had it been against us, neither dog nor man could have faced it. The snow was driven into everything. Inside our grub-box, with the lid on, covered and re-covered with sled cloth, lashed on, we found snow. Inside the pages of my diary, fastened in its leather case, and the case within the hind sack of the sled, tied down with a moosehide flap, was snow. It seems almost impossible to exclude this finely-powdered, fiercely-driven snow by any carefulness of packing. We have nothing like these storms in the interior. On other days, a keen light air, that cut like a knife, blew against us at 30 degrees below zero. My nose was frozen so often that I cannot now tell by the sensation whether it is frozen or not.

"Our shelters at night were Eskimo igloos, which are to be found along the coast at intervals of from 20 to 35 miles, often at the mouths of small rivers. Sometimes they are occupied, and then the addition of my party crowded them unconscionably, so that there was no room for comfortable sleeping. Sometimes they were empty, and then we had to depend upon our primus stove for cooking and warmth—and were miserable enough. I should say that the chief hardship of travel on this coast is the wretched character of the night rests. If a man can be comfortable at night, he can stand hard travel and exposure all day; but when his nights are cheerless as well it is tough work.

"When we reached Wainwright, we had been traveling eleven days, and the kind and generous hospitality of the government teacher and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Forrest, was very highly appreciated. One must travel this coast to understand what such entertainment means. For three days we lay there—the whole while a fierce snowstorm raged—and they were days of feasting and delicious rest. I held service twice for the native people and baptized a half dozen, and was loath to depart again. We made the 100 miles to Point Barrow in three days, and were most kindly received by the old-time trader here, Mr. Brower, and by Dr. Spence and his wife, the Presbyterian missionaries.

"In the opinion of folks here, our troubles will begin when we start eastward, and the chief reason is the absence of dog feed. So far, we have fed our dogs upon seal meat, oogarok meat (that is the giant seal), whale meat and fish of all kinds. But along the north shore the great sea mammals are not caught save in the fall, for the hunting of them can take place only when the ice parts from the shore and leaves open water—which does not happen on the north coast as it does on the west. We are facing the necessity of hauling corn meal, rice and seal oil for the greatest part of the journey, and that means heavy loads. It also means cooking for the dogs every night, and that means camping where there is drift wood, which, fortunately, is much more plentiful ahead of us than it has been behind.

"Our wait of two weeks here is as much that the season may advance and the sun climb high as for the refreshment of ourselves and our dogs, and the acquaintance of the missionary activities of this place. Leaving here about the middle of March, the long days will already be with us, and by the time (one month, I hope) that we reach Herschel Island there will be no more than a few hours' darkness, so rapidly does the sun advance in these latitudes after the equinox is passed. Here, at Point Barrow, by the 20th of April it is light enough to see to shoot all night, and on the 11th of May the sun is seen at midnight. Herschel Island is, of course, farther south, but not so much farther as to make great difference."

If You Would Live Long Write Hymns

A good way for one to insure himself or herself a long life is to write a hymn or song that will live a long life, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press. Julia Ward Howe, author of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic", lived to be nearly 91 years old. Cardinal Newman, who gave to the world "Lead, Kindly Light", was 89 when he passed on, and "Fanny Crosby", responsible for "Jesus, Keep Me Near the Cross" and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus", was nearly 95 when she died.

We are indebted to the Brooklyn Eagle for the information that Professors Henry Gilmore, author of "He Leadeth Me", lived to be 84; that Mrs. Annie Sherwood Hawks, composer of "I Need Thee Every Hour", rounded out 82 years; that Dr. Sabine Baring-Gould, writer of "Onward, Christian Soldiers", is still happy in life at 84; that Lowell Mason, who wrote the music for many hymns, including "Nearer, My God, to Thee", became an octogenarian, and that Rev. Robert Lowry of "Shall We Gather at the River"? fame, spanned 73 years.

There was one common reason, doubtless, why these men and women, to whom the race is indebted, spent so many years on earth. The planet was not to them a vale of tears, but a pleasant abiding place preparatory to entrance into the house not made with hands. They kept their minds fresh and vigorous and serene with the sunshine of good deeds and of faith. Trusting in the loving care of the Most High, they did not worry themselves into illness and thus shorten their earthly sojourn. It pays to keep on good terms with conscience.

They Believe in Prayer

"It is on record that when the triumphant German hosts were sweeping on Paris in 1914, and suddenly swerved and gave it up, Lord Roberts was sitting with Lord Kitchener when the telegram announcing their unlooked for retreat was handed in. Lord Roberts, a firm believer in prayer, exclaimed, 'Only God Almighty could have done this.' 'Somebody must have been praying,' said Lord Kitchener.

"General Sir W. Robertson, in a letter regarding the intercession service at Queens' Hall, on May 7th, says: 'It is only when the whole empire unites in prayer, as well as in work, that we can look forward with confidence to a successful conclusion to this tragic war, and to a just and righteous peace.' Weighty words from such a man. A Frenchman, who knows General Foch, says that he is a firm and ardent believer in the power of prayer. 'We shall be saved by it,' he says, 'and it will not be the first time in this deadly struggle.' Lord Jellicoe, Sir David Beatty and Sir Douglass Haig hold firmly by that belief also."—Literary Digest.

"The Academy for Princes," by Olaf M. Norlie, Augsburg Publishing House, Minneapolis, Minn. Mr. Norlie's book is written in dialogue form, in simple style, and presents a conclusive argument in favor of Christian people recognizing the place of definite religious instruction in the education of their children. It would be a happy thing for the Episcopal Church if the head of every family would read it. He takes the position, which we are all taught to accept in theory, that children who are baptized are made members of Christ, children of God, and heirs of the Kingdom of Heaven. Therefore they are princes and are entitled to a princely training, and should have something which the public schools cannot furnish. Church schools and Sunday schools have decreased while the state schools have increased. But along side of the development of our public school system crime has increased, so that we have more murders in the United States than in all Europe combined, more divorces than in all Europe, more great criminals and embezzlers than in all Europe. While paying taxes cheerfully for the support of secular, public schools, church members grumble at giving one dollar a year to the support of church schools, and many of them openly declare that they do not believe in them. If baptized children are indeed heirs of the Kingdom, who will deny them the training of princes to fit them for their high estate?—The Rev. C. E. Haupt.

A Series of Summer Missions

Much has been said in the papers recently in regard to rural work, which well introduces the note that your correspondent had prepared from a rural parish, viz: Pruden Parish, Pittsylvania County, Va., Rev. Chiswell Dabney, Rector. This parish includes three churches and three mission stations, all of them in the country, not even in a village. They are at cross roads and conveniently located to the majority of the community. Mr. Dabney is in Chatham, which is his own parish, and in the center of this large field. He goes to one or more churches every Sunday, traveling in a Ford machine or horse and buggy. The roads are fair in summer time to all of them, and impossible to most of them in the winter time, except with a strong horse and buggy, and yet this noble soldier of the Cross, who was a courier on Gen. Lee's staff in the civil war, goes through all kinds of weather, ministering to these devoted parishioners, who, by the way, embrace a far greater number than his community.

The real purpose of making this note is to report the series of Pruden Missions which he had held this summer, and which is his custom to hold every summer. A good many of the neighboring clergy see the wonderful work Mr. Dabney is doing, the great importance of intensifying work during the summer months, going year after year to help him in the mission. As a result of these parish missions, he has from twenty to fifty confirmed annually. The people are not raised to the customs of the Church, and therefore the Mission Hymnal is used altogether during the mission, and an abbreviated form of Morning or Evening Prayer from the Prayer Book during his regular ministrations, hence the people who are possibly unable, for one reason or another, to follow the service, join in familiar hymns and are blessed with the preaching of the Gospel, and many of them partake of the sacrament, and therefore the Church is growing wonderfully in this rural section. And while the membership of these various Churches, as may be noted in the Church Year Book, are not very great, the people are moving to other parishes, and the writer has personal knowledge of dozens of parishes which are strengthened by communicants moving from Pruden Parish.

The missions held this year:

St. Barnabas, near Chalk Level, Rev. George F. Vest, missioner.

Grace, Museville, Rev. Arthur Kenyon, missioner.

St. Paul's, Peytonsburg, Rev. C. B. Bryan, D. D., missioner.

St. John's, Mount Airy, the Rev. John F. Coleman, missioner.

Dame Memorial, Dry Fork, Rev. G. Otis Mead, missioner.

St. James, Roundo, the Rector, missioner.

In regard to Pruden Parish, at the last Council of the diocese a division of the territory embraced in Pittsylvania County was made, taking a strip from Camden and also from Bannister, making a new parish, named after the Rev. C. O. Pruden, who thirty years ago went from the Seminary to Chatham, and in his own words he said after five years he considered his work done, and thought seriously of moving, but then there was a prospect of opening a mission, which he embraced, and continued until he had started four. Then Mr. Dabney came as his assistant. Afterward the Chatham Episcopal Institute was established, which is a flourishing girls' school. Now the Rev. Mr. Kenyon is Rector of Bannister and Mr. Dabney is Rector of Pruden, leaving Camden, which is chiefly the city of Danville, in the hands of the Rev. J. Cleveland Hall, who has been Rector for twenty-four years.

The Bishop of the diocese, Dr. Tucker, has the honor of having five sons in the armed service of the country. Recently one of his younger sons was ordained to the diaconate, having had a partial course at the Seminary, and is now a private in the Infantry. The Bishop himself served in the civil war, and the Diocese of Southern Virginia is proud of this noble soldier and of these his noble sons.

The Rt. Rev. A. C. Thompson held a special confirmation at Roanoke on Tuesday, Aug. 20th, confirming two children of the Rev. Mr. Elliott Boykin, whose family are spending the summer near the city. He himself is on his vacation and temporarily supplying St. Peter's Chapel, at Roanoke.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY

HOBART, INDIANA

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

We are prepared to print anything and everything a clergyman or a parish may need, from a one-page program to a handsomely bound book.

We have been studying, for over a quarter of a century, the requirements of the clergy and parishes, and we have incorporated into our standard supplies the very best ideas of the most successful and experienced men in the American Church.

We have worked out a system, based upon sound business principles, which enables us to furnish our patrons with parish papers, standard supplies, and all sorts of books, magazines and commercial printing at astonishingly low prices.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service, and for giving notices—"Lest he forget". Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM—In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS—New Families, Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial. 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT Cards—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 50 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.00. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant with God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England—A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People. A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text-book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies, $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock". Four-page Folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards. Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14) First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service, for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms—Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a hundred.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches) to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents. The three above Cards for One Dollar.

Vestibule Bracket—Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

Anything desired printed to order.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA
Worthy of Universal Adoption

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching", which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—

1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Missionary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES.

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson—a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts or Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
Henry VIII.
The Evening Service.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

OUR OFFERTORY ENVELOPE SYSTEM IS THE BEST AND CHEAPEST ON THE MARKET

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY.....

Porter Military Academy

A National School A CHURCH SCHOOL Founded 1867

242 boys from 25 States and four foreign countries. Preparation for college or business by sympathetic tutoring and under the strongest influences for Christian manhood. Habits of obedience, promptness, cleanliness and self-reliance are inculcated by the strict but stimulating military discipline. An R. O. T. C. School. Mild, healthful climate permits out of door sports all year around. Gymnasium and swimming pool Unusually liberal terms. A broader preparation that the public school can give. A Lower School for smaller boys.

Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Rector
Box 604, Charleston, S. C.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness Has Had a Remarkable Year

A year ago we asked the clergy, when they were planning during the vacation days for the new year of activity, what they would do for THE WITNESS. A GREAT MANY of the clergy RESPONDED—some of them SPLENDIDLY. They gave us A LOT OF GOOD IDEAS, and the whole year has been spent in the application of methods suggested TO REACH THE LAITY with a weekly Church paper.

WE HAVE HAD A REMARKABLE YEAR!

Thousands of Church families now take a weekly Church paper who never took one before, and, better still, they write us appreciative letters and say:

> "How Did We Ever Get Along Without It?

One clergyman wrote that he was having a strange experience.

> For the first time in twenty-five years, as he made his pastoral calls, his people talked about subjects of general interest in the Church, and deluged him with questions.

THEY SAW IT IN THE WITNESS

This alone makes us feel confident that the year has been productive of results that will be multiplied many fold as the years go by. It expresses our aim. WE ARE NOT IN THIS FIELD AS A COMPETITOR. We are reaching out to those who have not heretofore subscribed for any other Church paper, and we are also pleased to count among our friends and subscribers those who are readers of the excellent publications in the American Church, and it is our purpose to keep the ball rolling until the great mass of Church people do take and read THE WITNESS.

We have had a remarkable year also in demonstrating that a weekly Church paper can represent THE WHOLE CHURCH—a paper that the clergy generally have found desirable to heartily recommend to their parishioners who want news, first principles, inspiration, to be put in touch with the great beating heart of the Church—a paper that the average layman, as well as widely-read and well-informed clergyman and layman, enjoys reading, and makes him all the more loyal and deeply interested in the Parish, in the Diocese, and in the Church at large. To accomplish this in a single year is a great achievement. But we consider has been the steady flow of subscriptions and renewals during the year in which the demands of war have raked the pocket books of the masses of our people as never before. To establish and sustain a paper under such conditions is evidence that WE ARE A WELCOME GUEST.

The Most Remarkable Feature of the Year

> So we have made for ourselves a large place in the American Church.

We are, however, not unmindful of the fact that we have a very difficult problem to solve in the matter of winning our way into every Church family in the land. It cannot be solved in any ordinary way. There must be A NATIONAL MOVEMENT. It will require the hearty co-operation of every rector and missionary in the solution we suggest. Bright and intelligent as our people are, in closest touch with art, literature, trade, awake on National subjects, their tables literally overloaded with very varied literature, a great majority have never taken a weekly Church paper, and they are not in touch with the work of the Church outside their individual parishes. They have never acquired the habit of taking and reading a Church paper, and it is only educational methods that will ever develop the habit. IT IS A SHAME AND DISGRACE that belongs alone to us of all the Christian bodies, and IT OUGHT TO BE WIPED OUT! Think of it! One million families, and probably not over ten thousand laymen subscribe for the Church weekly press! ONLY ONE IN A HUNDRED! Here is an interesting way in which

THE DISGRACE WAS WIPED OUT

> By a clergyman who adopted our suggestion to have in the vestibule a "WITNESS Table." He ordered twenty-five copies a week. He did more than this: He took a copy into the chancel, and when he gave out the notices he called the attention of his congregation to a certain article, and made his own comment for about three minutes. The congregation were interested, and took home copies from THE WITNESS Table to read that article—and others. He did this every Sunday. The order was increased to fifty copies to meet the demand. A wise Bishop in the American Church once expressed the wish that every clergyman in the Diocese would take three minutes each week, at the time of giving notices, to explain to the people some Church principle or custom. Here is a valuable suggestion put into practice by the rector referred to, using THE WITNESS for the purpose, arousing the interest of his people, and educating them in the general life of the Church.

Our plan has worked out successfully in every instance where some such method of arousing the interest of the people has been followed. It has failed when the papers were placed upon the table and no further announcement made than that the papers were there. Other clergymen in their zeal ordered copies sent direct to their people, and paid for them out of their own pocket—and that was the end of it. Nobody cares very much for that which costs them nothing.

A WORKABLE PLAN

Out of our year's experience we are prepared to present a plan which we have every reason to believe is equal to the magnitude of the problem to be solved:

1. Place every family in your parish or mission on the regular subscription list for six weeks at ten cents each subscription.
2. Announce to your people from the chancel or by letter that you have done this, and if they do not wish to subscribe you will hold yourself personally responsible for the payment of ten cents for the six issues.
3. Present to them as strongly as possible the fact that this is a National Educational Movement to bring all the Church people in closer touch with the General Church, and to wipe out the stigma on the American Church due to the failure of the people to subscribe for and read the weekly Church papers. Make them feel that it will be a source of no little regret to you if a single family in your parish fails to subscribe for THE WITNESS, and thereby give to this movement his personal influence.
4. Interest the people from the chancel in some particular article each Sunday for at least the six weeks. During these weeks special articles will be found in each issue that will encourage the local effort.
5. Select the best solicitors you have in your parish to make the canvass for yearly subscriptions, and see that it is completed within the six weeks.

WE ALLOW A COMMISSION OF TWENTY CENTS ON EACH DOLLAR SUBSCRIPTION! At the end of six weeks you will pay the ten cents for each one who says "No", which will naturally come out of the commissions allowed, and the balance may go to some local Church work.

THE FIVE STRONG POINTS

indicated above—educative and interesting—will produce remarkable results, if followed to the letter. Leave out any one of the points and you weaken the plan.

> If every family in the American Church were placed on the subscription list for six weeks, and this plan followed with vigor to secure yearly subscriptions, we would have over a half million regular subscribers before the six weeks closed! Is it not worth the effort? Is there a single rector or missionary anywhere in the American Church who will refuse co-operation in this plan?

We urgently request each rector and missionary in every Diocese and Missionary District to co-operate with us in this simple, practical plan to interest the entire congregation. It applies equally to the largest city parish and the smallest country mission. It interferes with nothing else. It will help and strengthen every department of parish life. Fill out the following subscription blank without delay and return it to us:

SPECIAL SIX WEEKS' SUBSCRIPTION

Publisher of THE WITNESS,
Hobart, Indiana:

I hereby subscribe for ——— copies of THE WITNESS for a period of six weeks, to be sent to the enclosed list of families and individuals in

_____ _____ _____
Name of Church Town or city State

for which I agree to pay you the sum of ten cents for each subscription, unless within that period the individual extends his or her subscription for one year and includes the amount in that subscription.

The canvass for subscriptions is under the direction of

_____ _____
Name Street and number who will act as your representative in this parish, and with whom you may conduct all correspondence.

Dated, _____, 1918. Signed: _____

Let us impress upon you the importance of having a definite arrangement for the canvass, and put us in touch with the person in charge of it. A wise selection in this respect insures success. The person's name will appear as our representative in your parish on all copies of the first issue that goes to your people.

A PARISH WARDEN DID IT!

The Junior Warden of the Church of the Ascension, Middletown, Ohio, has secured twenty-two subscribers out of thirty-four families. At the present writing the canvass has not been completed, and only two families approached neglected to subscribe, for reasons not stated to us. The following letter, which is self-explanatory, was prepared by the Warden and sent to each family before making the canvass:

> Dear Friends:
>
> Have you ever heard of "THE WITNESS"? "THE WITNESS" is the newspaper of the Episcopal Church. It contains all the current Church news of paramount interest to you; events of Church interest from coast to coast; news of all the Conventions; general news of the missionary work abroad, and a constant stream of other important Church items.
>
> As a member of the Church it is a duty to keep posted on its doings world-wide. We know that you will not shirk a duty. You will receive a free copy of this interesting paper, "THE WITNESS", this week. Please take the time to peruse its contents, and you will agree that it is interesting, inspiring, and just the paper that you need to keep you in touch with current topics of our Church.
>
> "THE WITNESS" is delivered to your home regularly every week for the small sum of $1.00, less than two cents per week. The writer will call upon you in the near future, and anticipates the pleasure of entering your subscription for "THE WITNESS".
>
> "COME IN WITH US AND WE WILL DO THEE GOOD."

Do not delay. Strike while the iron is hot.

OUR PROPOSITION

Two Points to be Considered

I.

These are trying days for Parish papers, owing to Government regulations and the expense they incur. Why not use one or more columns of page eight of THE WITNESS once a month, or oftener, for Parish interests? The cost of printing will be only $2.00 a column, or fraction thereof, each issue. A few business advertising cards would pay the whole cost, if you see fit to defray the expense in that way. We send the paper to all subscribers in your Parish every week, and forward to you ten extra copies of the issue containing Parish notes for each column used.

This plan gives your people a General Church paper every week, a Parish Paper once a month and, in some cases, a Diocesan paper once a month—a very strong and influential combination.

II.

Will you adopt our plan to place every family in your Parish at once on the subscription list of THE WITNESS for six weeks while a vigorous canvass is conducted to find how many will remain on the list? We urge you to do this, whether you adopt THE WITNESS as your Parish Paper or not.

Give these two points your careful consideration, and let us know your decision by an early mail.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

You will notice by the articles on this page that we have just entered on a campaign to secure every Church family in the United States as a subscriber to THE WITNESS. A big task, but possible when the Church wakes up to what we are doing.

We hope some subscriber in each parish and mission will become responsible for our six weeks subscription plan outlined on this page. It is worthy of your effort. If you cannot undertake it, get some one else to do so

ANOTHER MATTER

The number of this issue is 89. Look at the number under your name on the address on the first page. If that number is less than 89, your renewal is due. Please send it now.

Help us all you can. Stay with us until we reach one million Church families.

To Guild Workers

The Editor takes pleasure in calling the attention of Guild workers to the plan of the Christmas Novelty Book (the advertisement appears in another column).

The Bishop of Minnesota has written a letter to Mrs. Gutgesell, in which he says he is "suggesting the book to Church workers throughout his diocese, and it gives the Editor great pleasure to say that he knows both Mrs. Gutgesell and the Novelty Book, and commends them both to your attention.

Bishop Francis Witnesses Miracles of Surgery

Bishop Francis of Indiana, who recently returned from the battle grounds in France, gives an interesting description of the "miracles of surgery" which came under his observation at Red Cross Hospital No. 2, in the Toul sector, where he was stationed. "Men with great holes in their abdomen," says the Bishop, "were soon made fit again, while bullets through the neck, which formerly would have been considered more than grave, are treated lightly by the wonderful surgeons who are 'making over' the men mangled in the great war for democracy. The men in the hospitals are the bravest of the brave. You never hear a whimper, and it makes an American proud to be of the same blood and faith as these heroes. When I saw what the Marines did at Chateau Thierry, it made me thrill with pride, and there have been many occasions since when an equal pride possessed me because of the wonderful work of our boys of the new army."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II, No. 90 | HOBART, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 21, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

Gov. Bickett of North Carolina was playing tennis the other day at a court near Raleigh. When he heard the sound of tolling bells he raised his hands and said: "Hold on, boys, there is the Angelus."

The game was stopped while the players joined the Governor in silent prayer.

If more Christians would establish praying-grounds, all sorts of things might happen.—The Mission Herald.

The Rev. Frank E. Wilson, who is on his way to France to serve at the front as a chaplain in the United States army, in offering his resignation to the vestry of St. Augustin's Church, Wilmette, Ill., which he had served as rector for several years, wrote: "Finally I would ask you not to forget me in your prayers. I do not ask you to pray for my safety, but that I may do my work well and faithfully and as God would have it done."

A conference of Sunday school teachers and parish workers of Trinity Church, Columbus, Ohio, was recently held to plan for the introduction of the "Christian Nurture System" of Sunday school lessons into Trinity Sunday School. Dr. Wm. E. Gardner, of the Board of Religious Education, New York, addressed the conference, and explained the system in detail to the Trinity workers. Several of the Sunday schools of Southern Ohio are introducing the "Christian Nurture System" of lessons into their curriculum this year.

The 178th Chapter meeting of the Northeastern Deanery, Diocese of Chicago, (the Rev. J. H. Edwards, Dean), will be held at St. Mark's Church, Evanston, Ill., on Monday, September 23rd. The Rev. James B. Haslam, Secretary of the Diocesan Social Service Commission, will read a paper at the morning session on "The Moving Picture Theater." The topic for discussion at the afternoon session will be "Parochial Conditions in War Times," led by the Rev. J. J. Steffens.

The Rev. F. B. Bartlett, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Aberdeen, S. D., returning home from a visitation to several points in the northeastern part of the state, expressed himself as amazed at the splendid attitude of the people on the ranches. "I never saw anything like it. People within a radius of fifteen and twenty miles would come to attend teh services held in the widely scattered school houses and took such a delight and such an interest in the services that it was a great inspiration to me."

On the last three Sundays in August, services in St. Mary's church, Newton Lower Falls, Mass., were in charge of the Rev. Edwin J. Skinner, of the diocese of Colorado. St. Mary's, one of the interesting suburban churches of which many are to be seen in the neighborhood of Boston, was built in 1814, and has been lovingly preserved true to its original architectural form, and as a depository for numerous articles—tablets, books, communion ware, etc., which association with the parish life of long ago now renders of priceless historic value.

Sept. 1 to 8, Trinity Church, Watertown, S. D., put on an every member canvass for parish support and missions as well as to stimulate the life of the parish in general. The Rev. Dr. C. C. Rollitt, the Provincial Secretary of the Province of the Northwest, was in Watertown the greater part of the week, assisting the rector, the Rev. S. S. Mitchell in conducting the campaign. Among the various meetings held was a men's supper at which 40 men were present, and final plans for the canvass were made. A men's organization for the parish was also formed at the same meeting. The speakers at the meeting were: the rector, Mr. Mitchell, the Rev. Dr. Rollitt, and the Rev. Paul Roberts of Brookings.

The Rev. Fuller Swift, Rector of St. Clement's Church, El Paso, Texas, gave the address at the dedication of a statue of liberty in his city, on September 2nd. In the course of his address Mr. Fuller said:

"The occasion bespeaks the advancement we in America have made in our short history toward that ideal which actuated the noblest efforts of our forefathers. It also tells, in actions that speak louder than words, the secret of our united efforts in these shadowed days of world conflict, and explains in part the meaning of our ability to combine our forces and resources in our holy determination to maintain for ourselves that which has already been attained, and of our willingness to reach the helping hand across the seas to those other nations so wearied in their long struggle to obtain for themselves and others the great blessing of liberty which we have in so large a way."

BISHOP SUMNER RETURNS TO OREGON

Bishop Sumner has returned to Portland after a two months' tour of the East, where he was called on Church business. He visited Chicago, New York, Boston and Washington, D. C., and spent several weeks with his mother at his boyhood home in and that the schools adjust themselves as wisely as possible to the new Manchester, N. H.

Bishop Sumner was called to Chicago early in July to accept the senior chaplaincy of the Great Lakes Naval station, with the rank of Lieutenant-Commander. He found after a conference with military authorities that to accept the commission would be to enter the service for the duration of the war. This would have meant abandonment of his work in the Oregon diocese, and the Church authorities in Washington, D. C., adcised him to decline the offer.

In New York Bishop Sumner spoke at Old Trinity Church. Later he attended the convention of the Brothers of St. Andrew in Northfield, Mass. In Chicago he occupied his old pulpit at the Cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul for a Sunday.—Portland (Ore.) Oregonian.

THE REV. E. H. ECKEL TO DIRECT PRISON WORK

The Washington War Bureau of the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor has notified Rev. E. H. Eckel, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church of Fort Worth of his appointment as official representative of the committee in Tarrant county, says the Fort Worth Telegram.

The National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor presented to the War Industries Board at its request a memorandum outlining a practical program for the utilization of the prisons and prisoners throughout the country in the production of war supplies, the Rev. Mr. Eckel said. The program called for the organization of a section of the War Industries Board to mobilize the prisons.

The work includes: Standardization of the industries and occupations, in penal institutions, national waste reclamation system, with the county penal institution as a unit; national road work system for prisoners; development of war prisoners' division in the Army; induction into industry and agriculture of discharged and paroled prisoners; Army and Navy waste proclamation, and development of camp gardens worked by prisoners.

In this work the National Committee on Prisons and Prison Labor is assisting both by conducting the researches on which activities are based, and by affording the salaried personnel to carry out the program.

The two things of paramount practical importance just at this time, the Rev. Mr. Eckel says, referring to his instructions, are the mobilization of jails and prisoners for the systematic reclamation of waste that may be made into clothing, cannon, shrapnel; and the closer application of the "work or fight" order.

SYNOD OF SIXTH PROVINCE WILL NOT BE HELD

The Sixth Provincial Synod, set for October 13th and 16th, inclusive, at Pueblo, Col., has been called off, by the senior Bishop reside intn the Province, because of the improbability of a quorum, which was determined by correspondence with the delegates. A meeting of the bishops of the Province may be called for the same date at some more central point.

FIRST SERVICE HELD ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO

A service of unusual interest was held in St. John's Church, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, on Sunday, September 8th—it being the celebration of the one hundredth year since services were started in that section of Ohio. The service was participated in by the clergy and choirs of eight neighboring parishes and missions, known as the Akron region. Bishop DuMoulin, in a stirring sermon, reviewed the progress of the last one hundred years and urged the people to greater zeal and sacrifice, such as the pioneers had practiced, and of which the present generation are the benefactors. Evensong was sung by seventy choristors and the large congregation with great fervor and was an inspiration to all present.

On account of the observance of "gasless" Sunday, a pilgrimage was made on Wednesday, the 11th inst., to the spot where the log cabin stood in which the first service was held.

CHURCH CLEAR OF DEBT.

St. Bartholomews Church, Benidji, Minn., was erected by the late Archdeacon Parshall. After his death the Church was left with a debt of $2,000 on Feb., 1916, and without regular services. Rev. George Backhurst of the Diocese of Albany, was appointed general missionary and superintendent of Indian Missions with residence at Bemidji. This summer he has spent his vacation travelling around the several Indian Reservations in a Ford car holding special missions of a week's duration in each place. Returning to Bemidji on Aug. 17th, he conducted a drive to pay off the debts. No other man volunteering for the work, he personally solicited the friends of the Mission and on St. Bartholomews Day, the patronal festival of the Church, a special Eucharist was offered, the debt being raised. The American Church Building Fund Commission acted nobly in the matter and greatly facilitated the liquidation. This is the third Church in the Diocese of Duluth that has cleared itself of debt during the great war. St. Pauls and Trinity Pro-Cathedral, Duluth, and now St. Bartholomew, Bemidji. Is the war teaching our people to be more liberal in offerings?

Archbishop Meletios and Bishop Darlington at Brooklyn.

A short account was given in the last number of The Witness of the welcome to America extended the Most Rev. Meletios, Metropolitan of Athens. His Grace officiated at a solemn Te Deum at the Greek Church of St. Constantine and delivered an address to the Creek community. The service was followed by a luncheon at Hotel Mohawk at which about 100 guests were present including the Greek Consul, Archimandrite Chrystomos of Athens, Very Rev. Alexander Papadopoulus, secretary of the Holy Synod, Rev. Frs. Lazaris and Kallimachus, Mr. Hamilcar Alivisatos of the ministry of education of Greece, Hon. Chr. Vassilacaki, deputy to the Greek parliament and the Rev. Dr. Lacey who was called on to deliver a greeting on behalf of the Episcopal Church.

The Metropolitan is a man of great simplicity and wide learning. He speaks Greek, French, Russian and Arabic fluently. Democracy has been the watch word of his public utterances in America. He stands firm for the active participation of Greece with the Allies. He is staunch in his opposition to German autocracy. Born in Crete, the country of the great Venizelos, he was connected with the patriarchate of Jerusalem under Damianos until he was made Archbishop of Cyprus from which post he came to Athens within the past year.

The Bishop of Harrisburg was in New York at the invitation of the Greek community to deliver the address of welcome to the Metropolitan of Athens at the mass meeting in Carnegie Hall. "Bishop Darlington is the same great hearted, brotherly friend who filled so big a place in the affections of Brooklyn before he went to his western diocese," says Dr. Lacey. "I was walking along Fifth Ave. when an automobile stopped. The occupant waved to me and a pleasant voice said 'Jump in Lacey, I want to talk to you.' It was Bishop Darlington speeding (though strictly within speed laws) to a wedding at Fort Lee. I rode out with him and his wife and charming daughter who wore an 'Oklahoma' hat-band in honor of her brother Gilbert, chaplain of the 'Oklahoma.' The Bishop invited me to act as his champion at several functions in honor of the Metropolitan and his attendants. This laid upon me no burden other than attendance at several Greek luncheons and at the great Carnegie Hall meeting of 5000 Greeks where the Metropolitan made his first public appearance. His office is one of the most distinguished and influential in Christendom. Some of his eminent predecessors have been in close touch with the Episcopal Church. Throphilus in 1872 sent a letter of greeting to our General Convention and Germanos in 1894 entertained Bishop Littlejohn at Athens."

MEETING OF WOMEN'S MISSIONARY ORGANIZATIONS AT COLUMBUS, OHIO

The third annual meeting of the Columbus Inter-Denominational Federation of Women's Missionary Organizations is called for the last Thursday in September. It will be held in the Indianola Presbyterian church. This organization is proving a potent force in the development of Church unity in Columbus. The Episcopal Church is represented in the executive committee of the organization by such leading Church workers as the wife of the bishop-coadjutor of the diocese, the wife of the rector of Trinity Church, and others who are also prominent in the social life of the city. The program for the present annual meeting will consist of a business meeting, a devotional service, a luncheon, inspirational talks on Mission work by women workers, both in the home and foreign fields, a question box, and class conference in Mission and Missoin Bible Study.

SOLDIERS CONFIRMED AT PLATTSBURG

One of the important pieces of work which the Church War Commission has carried forward this summer has been at Plattsburg, N. Y., the home of the training camp idea. From early June there have been in training from 3,000 to 3,500 college students. Ten per cent of this number were Churchmen. The Rev. Samuel Neal Kent, formerly chaplain of Lehigh University, was sent to assist the rector of Trinity Church, the Rev. Albert Gale. Chaplain Kent spent his time at the post practically acting as Camp Chaplain, there being none regularly commissioned. The students were given a celebration of the Holy Communion on Sunday mornings, and then attended the services at Trinity Church in large numbers both morning and evening. The evening service was given over to the members of the camp and was preceded by an open air song service conducted by the chaplain from the church steps. At all services men in uniform acted as chorister, flag bearer or crucifer.

The Church work reached its climax on Sunday, September 8th, as the camp drew to its close. The Rt. Rev. George Y. Bliss, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont, acting for the Bishop of Albany, visited this Church for the purpose of confirmation a large congregation gathered to see the rite administered to one officer and twelve students from the post. Two of the candidates had been baptized by the rector in preparation for the service. No more inspiring sight can be imagined than the line of young men in uniform presented by Chaplain Kent also in uniform, taking their stand to fight for spiritual as well as material ideals. At the celebration immediately following the Confirmation, the Bishop officiating, the members of the class made their first and corporate communion. Bishop Bliss preached a strong sermon on the "Character of a Man."

Among the many impressive services which the war conditions have brought to our churches this at Plattsburg must stand out for its significance.

THE REV. H. A. CHOUINARD DIES IN BALTIMORE

Word has been received at Kankakee, Ill., says the Democrat of that city, "of the death of the Rev. H. A. Chouinard, former rector of St. Paul's Church, on September 2nd at Baltimore. The Rev. Mr. Chouinard came here from Minnesota immediately after retirement of the Rev. Mr. Phillips. He served here three years and during that time both Mr. and Mrs. Chouinard were very popular in this city. Upon leaving here Mr. Chouinard became chaplain in the United States army and has served in that capacity ever since. He was stationed near Galveston, Texas, at the time of the flood and Mrs. Chouinard died soon after of typhoid fever contracted during the exposure at the time. Mr. Chouinard married again and is survived by his wife and one daughter, Betty, a child by his first marriage. For many months past, Mr. Chouinard has been at John's Hopkins hospital, Baltimore, taking the radium treatment for cancer. His death on September 2nd was the result of this ailment. His body was taken to Minneosta for burial."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Abundant Life

By Dr. James E. Freeman.

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

I think it was Phillips Brooks who once said, "The abundant life, the life full of completion haunts us all; we feel the thing we ought to be beating beneath the thing we are." This is undoubtedly true of the normal man or woman. It's a terrible thing to feel that we have finished the job, so far as life is concerned. To be always looking forward is life's normal attitude. This is not to say we should never pause to take a backward view, but it is to say that wholesome, satisfying living is forward-looking. Even age ought not to rob us of this inspiring practice.

The real secret of a rejuvenated life is to be found in the reasonable anticipation of better days and finer experiences yet to come. It's a satisfaction to deposit money in the bank against a rainy day, but this cannot be compared with the joy of drawing checks for the sheer satisfaction of giving pleasure to others and to ourselves in the days that are to be.

The Miser and the Lover of Life.

Herein is the difference between the miser who hoards and the lover of life who with discretion spends, that he may realize for himself and others the joy of living. Nothing could be farther from the truth than to assume that Jesus' system of life is one of restraint and stern limitations. He neither tought nor exemplified such a system. He fulfilled the law of His people that He might not be charged with disloyalty to time-honored customs, but His whole philosophy of life is one that calls for the fulfillment of life's finest and most satisfying ideals. The wedding feast to Him was far more appealing than the cloistered chambers of the schoolmen. He even compared His own companion-loving life with John's ascetic habit and its wilderness vigils.

Wherever religion has been interpreted to men as a system of "dont's" it has signally failed. Wherever it has worn the habiliments of the sombre and austere doctrinaire, it has repelled. Again, wherever it has been what Jesus designed it to be, a sound, wholesome, joy-producing system, that contributed to the abundant life, it has phenomenally succeeded. Of course, religion is incompatible with self-indulgence, excesses, and body and soul-destroying practices. On the other hand, it is the very well-spring of health and happiness to him who obeys its laws and reverently honors its principles.

Here Is the Remedy.

Do we not need just now a fresh and reasonable interpretation of Christ's plan of life? Do we not need to recognize that its primary design is to make us fit to live in a fit world? Why talk about political nostrums and systems as if they were panaceas for all human maladies? They never have cured and they never will cure those evils that destroy human happiness. We are, all of us, searching for a remedy to banish wars—wars domestic and wars international. Here is the remedy:

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The day of the abundant life is nearer at hand than ever before. The hand of the Nazarene is opening the door that shall usher a distracted world into the new country of man's largest and noblest fulfillment. Let us give the plan of living which Jesus taught a fair chance; in a word, let us stop being pious and try to be really religious. Let us reconstruct, if need be, our old, musty, dry-as-dust formulas; let us make public worship in all its expressions an appealing and winsome thing. Let us banish forever those morgue-like churches that are too suggestive of death and let us conspire, preachers and people alike, to make Sunday and all that it stands for the brightest, happiest day of the week.

The hair-shirt once expressed man's misconception of religion; he was only good when he was uncomfortable. "Sinners in the hands of an angry God" was a pulpit classic in another age. We have grown saner and, we believe, more Christian. The abundant life is the high note of the teaching of Jesus; let us make it the supreme purpose and aim of all our expressions of religion today.—Courtesy Minneapolis Tribune.

THE SILENCE OF GOD.

By A. S. Phelps.

In the face of the unparalleled catastrophe of world war we search with disquietude for its reason. Man's sin, pride, ambition? We question and know not, but God knows, and is silent. The future may bring us the answer but the present is silent.

God has spoken in the past, so His Holy Word tells us, but generation after generation passes and there is no spoken word. So it was in the Life of the Christ. For eighteen years of His time on earth there is no word, only silence.

So it is in Nature. The mighty redwood, the enduring oak, the long-lived cypress, seem to mock the futile generations of man, but no sound is heard; there is only silent growth as the many seasons come and go.

The everlasting hills tell us the world, too, is growing old and its story is written in their dense formations of life and death, of heat intense, and of glacial cold, but the mountains stand forever silent through the ages.

The sea has its secrets unknown to man of goodly ships engulfed and lives of men entombed, and we sometimes hear the roar of surf-beaten rock or sand, but it tells us naught.

"The stately ships go on
To their haven under the hill;
But oh for the touch of a vanished hand
And the sound of a voice that is still."

The sea is vast in its extent and power but still mightier in its silence.

"Thy way is in the sea and Thy paths in the deep waters and Thy footsteps are not known."

"The heavens declare the glory of God," but not in audible tones to man. Worlds are framed and solar systems are born and suns go black in the waves of eternity, but all in silence. The "music of the spheres" is like the "frozen music" of the great cathedrals, so great in divine harmonies that mere sound is overpassed.

Man Producer of Incessant Noise.

But man has become the producer of incessant noise. Through the exercise of his marvelous intelligence and skill, his locomotion, his manufactories and his wars are carried on with unceasing clamor and uproar. Formerly the noise of war was chiefly confined to the shout of battle, the clash of resounding arms and the cries of the wounded. But modern warfare increases the noise a thousand fold by continual nerve-shattersion, through an unbroken chain; ing explosions. The barrage, mingled with the bursting of shells of immense caliber, contributes an unspeakable din through which it is difficult to conceive how the soldier can even think intelligently. It might seem that the aviator, rising miles above the earthly tumult and confusion among the silent clouds, should have the clearest perception of the horrors of contending forces, yet even there the clatter of his motor carries the uproar of battle even into the skies.

God Alone Is Unmoved.

Above all God looks down in silence. He alone is unmoved amid the turbulence of man, and to learn truly of Him and His ways we must enter into the "peace of God which passeth all understanding." "Be still then and know that I am God." "I will be exalted among the heathen and I will be exalted in the earth."

Must we not learn that the Divine silence is God's greatest word to man? Only through that silence can we hear him speak. Neither the wind nor the fire nor the earthquake have the effect of the "still small voice," God is Love and the culmination of Divine Love appeared in that "silent night, holy night," when Jesus the Saviour was born.

When the forces of evil shall be vanquished in the way that it is given to man to fight and at last the right shall prevail, then we shall hear the voice of God through the silence of His eternal majesty even as it came to the disciples in the midst of the storm: "Why are ye so fearful, O ye of little faith?" "And He arose and rebuked the wind and said unto the waves, 'Peace, be still.' And the wind ceased and there was a great calm."

THE WISDOM OF A LABORER.

A poor laborer once stepped into a church porch to avoid a sudden downpour of rain. Noticing some people gathering for a baptismal service he went inside the church curiously. It was the first time he had ever heard the baptismal service for infants. He tells us:

"Well, the priest began to read the Gospel, and it was these words which stayed by me and made me see things as I never saw them before.

"They brought young children to Christ that He should touch them. And the disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus saw it He was much displeased, and said, Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God.

"I can never tell you how it was, but the way the priest said 'much displeased' and 'of such is the kingdom of God' sunk into my heart. I began to think about it, and when the little babies were brought to him, one by one, to be baptized, I seemed to see it all clear in a minute. I believe it was the Holy Spirit who touched my heart, and showed me that in baptism the little children are brought to Jesus their Saviour. He was much displeased with the disciples who did not want the children to trouble Him. The words seemed very strong when I thought them over. If our blessed Lord was much displeased at that, how much more must He be displeased with a careless man like me, a father, who never brought his little ones to the Saviour, nor showed them the way by setting them an example! I was struck to the heart at the thought, and when the christening was over I just sank down on my knees and asked God to forgive me and help me to do better. I made up my mind at that moment I would go regularly to church and would do all I could to keep the children near their blessed Saviour. I seemed all at once to feel how dreadful it would be if I kept the little ones back, when but for me they would have gone to their Lord and got His blessing.

"I believe I went out of the church a changed man."

In order to help other working men he put down some reasons for Infant Baptism, which he had collected as follows:

1. "The Saviour was much displeased" and they were His own Disciples, too, who would have kept the little children from Him.

2. He said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."

3. He took them up in His arms and blessed them, though they were most likely too young to understand His words.

4. He loves the children now, and when He gave His disciples command to go and preach and baptize, He did not say children were to be left out.

5. We read in the Bible that whole families were baptized, and we are not told that children were excluded.

6. St. Peter says: "Be baptized every one of you, for the promise is to you and your children." Then he thought the children fit subjects for Christian privileges.

7. The early Christians baptized their infants.

8. The promise of the Holy Spirit is to the baptized, and little children need that Holy Spirit as much as grown-up people. They can sin, so they need grace to keep them from sinning. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized."

9. The Bible says, "Train up a child the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." It does not say, leave a child alone, and let him choose for himself when he grows wise enough to understand such things, whether he will be God's child or no.

10. Little children die, and the only way the Bible promises that men shall be saved is through baptism. How dreadful will be our punishment then, if we displease our Lord by keeping the children from Him, because we think in our foolish hearts that baptism can do them no good! Who are we to doubt His power, His promise? Oh! let us do what He tells us, and leave the little ones in His hands.

In accordance with Jesus' command to "Forbid them not" the blessings of the Christian covenant, you are most cordially invited to bring your children at once to the Episcopal Church to be baptized.

ROBERT JAMES BELT.

West Plains, Mo.

"Show me a community in this country that is unwilling to bear its share of the Liberty Loan, the Red Cross, or other war burdens," says the Rev. A. W. S. Garden, Provincial Secretary of the Province of the Southwest, "and I will show you a community in which no red blooded American would care to live. Show me a church or congregation that is unwilling to bear its share of the world-wide problem of the Kingdom and I will show you a church to which no red blooded Christian can afford to belong."

THE UPPER ROOM

By the Rev. Carroll Lund Bates.

There was a fortunate man in Jerusalem on the Thursday of Christ's last week. He had a room which the Master used. It was a "large, upper room, furnished and prepared." It was meant that it should be "large" for there was room in it for both Jesus and His friends; it was fitting that it should be an "upper room," for it was the nearer to the sky, and suited to a Presence so holy; it was "furnished," and so contained a seat for the anticipated Guest, seats also for His friends, and a table for the Supper; it was right that it was "prepared," (swept and dusted, no doubt), that it should be fit for so great an occasion.

Our life is like a house with three stories. The lower story is the Body. A man's physical life is a very important part of him, yet, though this may seem contradictory, it is the least important. If the lower story of a house is destroyed, the house will tumble down; so, if a man's body fails, his other powers are weakened. Thus the body is important. Yet, the body is the least important (the lower story of human life), because it is the mere beginning of our life; we share it with the animal creation.

The second story of our life is the Mind. It rests upon the lower story. If the body is impaired, the Mind's power is weakened.

There are men in the world who live in the first (the lower), room of life alone. These men, of course, are mere human animals, and are foolish to neglect the higher rooms of their lives.

There are men again who know about and use the room in the second story of life, men who appreciate the intellectual life. That is praiseworthy. That is a great deal better than to dwell in the lower room of life exclusively.

But that is not all there is of life. Life has an "Upper Room." This upper room of life is the Soul. The upper room of our life has windows, and into these windows the sunlight streams, and this sunlight is our apprehension of God. The upper room is blown upon by all the breaths of Heaven. One of these breaths is Faith, another is Hope, another is Love, a tendency to human kindness, which has been so grossly challenged in this present war.

The upper room is "large," there is place in it for God and for men, God's children. The upper room, man's soul, is "furnished" by God. A part of its furnishment is a seat for God, the Guest, Himself; another part of its furnishment is a table waiting for the Bread which God can give and which the world cannot.

The men who live in the first story of life, or in the two lower stories, are never satisfied as they wish. While the Upper Room is vacant and the seat for God unoccupied, they can never be content. They know that as Augustine has said, "Thou hast made us for Thyself, and the soul is restless until it rests in Thee."

The kernel of Religion is in this: How shall I get God to come into my life and be my Guest? We must ask Him of course, but, before we can ask Him, we must really want Him. Before we want Him, we shall need to make sure that God is likeable, for, if He is not, we cannot genuinely want him. So our first task is to prepare our Upper Room by learning that God is likeable.

To assure ourselves that God is likeable we need only to lay hold on the primary postulate of the Christian Faith, which is that God's character is revealed in Jesus Christ.

People are looking out upon the horror of this war who say: "If God is likeable, why does He allow all this?" I do not know the answer in full, but I know it in part; and it is this: When God made man, He made him with a Will really free, and so man has been a mischief-maker.

That God is a likeable God, I know by my knowledge of Christ. Christ's word is my guarantee of this; Christ's Resurrection is my pledge; Christ's Cross is my warrant. By the Cross the God I have found likeable says to me, "I cannot yet explain; take (in lieu of the explanation I cannot yet give), my Pledge of sympathy."

Having so made sure that God is a likeable God, one wants God as a soul Guest of course. The next consideration can be then, How shall we get God as a Guest in our Upper Room.

If we are agreed as far as this, may we not exchange the word "God" for the word "Jesus"? May I not say that if you would have Jesus as a Guest in your Upper Room you must ask Him there; and ought you not to ask Him there in the ways that He has said?

First, therefore, pray. It is to be feared that some have been baptized, and some confirmed, and some have even come to the Holy Communion, who have never personally learned to talk with God themselves. If Jesus is to come and be your Guest, you must talk with God yourself; you must ask God to come into your life to comfort, empower and direct you.

If the God you thus talk to is, meanwhile, the God you see in Christ, all the rest of the Christian life will follow—almost of its own accord. You will of course want to be God's child in Christ; so you will be baptized, if you have not been baptized. Out of the pages of the Gospels, His Supper will gleam on you attractively, and you will want that.

And, finding that, you will find all. The Supper stands, in symbols, for all the fulfillment of the best ideals that you have had. You want God in your Upper Room, and there is Jesus as your Guest. You want a larger love of men; with Jesus in your Upper Room, there will come in also Jesus' friends. You want food that the world withholds, and there on the Table behold! His Bread.

Remember that Jesus cleansed the upper room Himself of Judas, the traitor. Thus, do not wait to make your own Upper Room clean, You will wait forever if you try. You cannot cleanse it. I must remind you that He who engages to come into your Upper Room as Guest, engages to come also as Physician. Let him in and let Him cleanse! When He comes, He will dismiss the doubt that has troubled you and which you really want cast out. When He comes, He will dismiss froward thoughts; when He comes, He will cast out your so persistent selfishness.

The great desire of God is to have men happy; with Him in the Upper Room as Guest, and so doing "all such good works as He hath prepared for them to walk in." And this desire of God is, really, the greatest desire of man. Let us invite God into our Upper Room, our soul. Let us ask Him in Christ's Name, which must mean, of course, in Jesus' way. So, what is at once God's great desire for us, and our great ideal for ourselves, shall fulfill itself; we shall begin to be truly glad, and remain glad forever!

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER.

A Boy's Prayer.

"Give me clean hands, clean words and clean thoughts; help me to stand for the Hard Right against the Easy Wrong; save me from habits that harm; teach me to work as hard and play as fair in Thy sight alone as if all the world saw; forgive me when I am unkind, and help me to forgive those who are unkind to me; keep me ready to help others at some cost to myself; send me chances to do a little good every day and so to grow more like Christ. For His name's sake. Amen."

A Personal Prayer.

O, God, my Heavenly Father, who hast brought me thus far in safety, comfort me with the remembrance of Thy care. When I am weary and fainthearted, inspire me with the vision of Thy purpose for my life; when I am tempted, make me strong; when I complain, teach me Thy patience; when I forget, remind me of Thy love; and so mercifully bring me to the close of each day, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

A Noon-day Prayer.

O, Lord God, to Whom alone belongeth victory, be with our armies in the day of battle. Use them as Thy instruments to drive the invader from Belgium, France and Italy; and hasten the day when righteousness and justice, liberty and peace shall be established in all lands. And sanctify, we beseech Thee, O Lord, this world war that it may lead the Nations to repentance and to a revival of true religion that Thy Name may be hallowed throughout the world. We ask in the Name of Thy Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

"Now that we cannot burn so much gasoline on Sunday," asserts the Rev. E. W. Averill of Ft. Wayne, Ind., "We find that we have more time for devotions."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A DOG AT THE FRONT IN FRANCE

A Marine Sees a Setter and Her Family Through at the Marne

By G. W. J.

Our soldiers in France publish a paper called, "The Stars and Stripes." In a recent edition, was this dog story from the front, a true narrative.

Belle is a setter, shabby white, with great spotches of chocolate brown in her coat. Her ears are brown and silken. Her ancestry is dubious. She is under size. No one in the regiment knows whence she came, nor why. When she joined the outfit in a sector near Verdun, she singled out one of the privates as her very own and attached herself to him for the duration of the war. The young marine would talk long and earnestly to her, and every one swore that Belle could "compree" English.

She used to curl up at his feet when he slept, or follow silently to keep him company at the listening post. She would sit hopefully in front of him whenever he settled down with his laden mess-kit, which the cooks always heaped extra high in honor of Belle. She was as used to war as the most weather-beaten poilu. The tremble of the ground did not disturb her and the whining whirr of the shells over head only made her twitch and wrinkle her nose in her sleep. She was trench broken. You could have put a plate of savory pork chops on the parapet and nothing would have induced her to go up after them.

She weathered many a gas attack. Her master contrived a protection for her by cutting down and twisting a French gas mask. At first this sack over her nose irritated her, but once, when she was trying to claw it off with her fore-paws, she got a whiff of the poisoned air. Then a great light dawned on Belle, and after that at the first alerte she would race for her mask. You could not have taken it from her until her master's pat on her back told her everything was all right.

Belle Presents Reg't With Puppies.

In the middle of May Belle presented a proud regiment with nine confused and wriggling puppies, black and white, or like their mother, brown and white and possessed of incredible appetites. Seven of these were alive and kicking when, not so very many days ago, the order came for the regiment to pull up stakes and speed across France to help stem the German tide north of the troubled Marne. In the rush of marching orders, Belle and her brood were forgotten by everyone, but the young marine. It never once entered his head to leave them behind. Somewhere he found a market basket and tumbled the litter into that. He would carry the pups, he explained, and the mother dog would trot at his heels. Now the amount of hardware a marine is expected to carry on the march is carefully calculated to the maximum strength of the average soldier, yet this marine found extra muscle somewhere for his precious basket. For 40 kilometers he carried his burden along the parched French highway. No one wanted to kid him out of it nor could have if they would. When there followed a long advance by camion, he yielded his place to the basket of wriggling pups, while he hung on the tail-board. But then there was more hiking and the basket proved too much. It seemed that the battle line was a long distance away. Solemnly the young marine killed four of the puppies, discarded the basket and slipped the other three into his shirt, while the mother dog trotted trustingly behind.

No Belle to Care for the Pups.

One night he found that one of the black and white pups was dead. The road, by this time, was black with hurrying troops, lumbering lorries, jostling the line of advancing ambulances, dust-gray columns of soldiers moving on as far ahead and as far behind as the eye could see. Passing silently in the other direction was the desolate procession of refugees from the invaded country side. Somewhere in this confusion Belle was lost. In the morning there was no sign of her, and the young marine begged a cup of milk from an old French woman and with an eye-dropper from his kit, he tried to feed the two pups. It did not work very well. Faintly veering wind brought down the valley from far ahead the sound of the cannon. Soon he would be in the thick of it and there was no Belle to care for the pups.

Two ambulances of a field hospital were passing. A lieutenant, who looked human, was in the front seat of one of them, the marine rushed up to him and thrust the puppies in his hands. "Take good care of them," he said. "I suppose I'll never see them again." And he was gone. A little later in the day that field hospital was pitching its tents and setting up its kitchens and tables in a deserted farm. Amid all the hurry of preparation for the big job ahead, they found time to worry about the pups. The problem, of course, was food. Finally, the first-sergeant hunted up a farm-bred private, and the two of them spent the evening chasing four nervous cows around a pasture trying vainly to capture enough milk to provide subsistence for the new additions to the personnel. But the next evening the problem was solved, for a fresh contingent of marines trooped by the farm and in their wake—tired, but undiscouraged—was Belle. The troops did not halt at the farm, but Belle did. At the gates she stopped dead in her tracks, drew in her lolling tongue, sniffed inquiringly in the evening air, and like a flash she raced to the distant tree where on a pile of discarded dressings in the shade, the pups were sleeping. All the corps men stopped work and marvelled. For the onlooker it was such a family reunion as warms the heart.

In Detached Hospital Service.

So, with renewed faith in her heart and only one worry left in her mind, Belle and her puppies settled down to detached service with this field hospital. The next day it was advisable to move down the valley to the shelter of a fine hillside chateau. In a grove of trees the tents were pitched and the cots for the expected patients ranged side by side. The wounded came hour after hour in a steady stream, and the boys of the hospital worked night and day. They could not keep track of all the cases, but there was one that did. Belle hung around and investigated each ambulance that backed up to the door of the receiving room. Then one evening they lifted out a young marine, listless in the half stupor of shell shock. To the busy workers he was just Case No. Such and Such, but there was no need to tell anyone who saw the wild jubilance of the dog, that Belle had found her own again. The first consciousness he had of his new surroundings was the feel of her rough pink tongue licking the dust from his face. And those who passed that way last, found two cots shoved together in the kindly shade of a spreading tree. On one the mother dog lay contented with her puppies. Fast asleep on the other, his arm thrown out so that one grimy hand could clutch her silken ear, lay the young marine. Before long they would have to ship him on to the evacuation hospital and from there to the base hospital, on and on. It was not very clear to anyone how another separation could be prevented. It was a perplexing question. But in their hearts they knew they could leave it to Belle.

SCHOOL FOR "UNDER BOY."

The establishment of a Church Farm School in one of the fertile and attractive spots of beautiful Eastern Pennsylvania by the Diocese of Pennsylvania is an innovation even in the broad field of social experiment meriting a full measure of success, which no doubt will be recorded in an early report. The Church Farm School is for "boys of lesser opportunity," according to an announcement, and its students will be limited strictly to those who otherwise would be deprived of "a chance to get somewhere." No boy who has access to school will be accepted, and the age limits have been fixed at from 12 to 15 years, a period that seems to have been overlooked in other efforts of social character and similar outlook. The Church Farm School is to provide opportunity only for the boys between the ages named who through force of circumstances have been shut out from other schools of technical teaching and possibly from all other places of learning.

For the present the enrollment will be limited by circumstances to 30 boys, who will be housed in two cottages, although those in charge have hundreds of applications already. War conditions have prevented the building of more than two cottages, but others will be added at the first opportunity and as many boys as possible admitted to the complete course of education and technical training. Agriculture will be the foremost objective, but boys who after a period display no aptitude or taste for agriculture will be given a choice between floriculture, engineering, printing or carpentering. The farm is already supplied with buildings and will be completely stocked with high-grade farm animals as utilities and study objects.

The boys "of lesser opportunity" who are fortunate enough to secure entrance to such a school cannot but feel that some of the unfortunate facts of the war have turned out well for them, since the agricultural difficulties were the chief reason for establishing the Church Farm School. Perhaps after the war the Government may establish hundreds of similar institutions to educate thousands of boys "of lesser opportunity" all over the country, since the object is to have prepared for the use of the Nation a trained force of agricultural workers. Private enterprise makes the beginning which reflects public opinion that will do the rest when conditions bring the demand.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

FROM THE PAST.

The Rev. George A. Ray, in the Merriam Park Churchman, St. Paul, Minn., relates the following interesting incident:

Among the "dons" or professors, during the Rector's undergraduate days was the Rev. Edward Ley King, who held more than any other man of his time the love of the student body. He was mortally injured on the morning of July 1, 1906, when the steamer train on which he was traveling to London left the rails at Salisbury Curve. The story of his last hours is a classic of self forgetfulness and triumphant faith which may wait for another time.

On the morning of Ascension Day, 1904, he entered the Rector's rooms in college, chatted for a few minutes, laid on the table the following stanzas which he had just written, and went out. They have never before seen the light, but without doubt will be interesting to many, who it may be, have never seen a copy of the Churchman:

Abide with me! quick breaks the morning light:
I leave Thine altar, where Thy Glory bright
Thou showest to the lowly contrite heart,
For where Thou hast appointed me my part.

The busy world awakens to its toil,
Its daily lot of sorrow, joy and moil;
And lest my faithless heart lose sight of Thee,
O Lord, my Master, stay, abide with me.

Mine eyes have seen Thee in Thy pledge of love;
Abide with me, and lift my heart above;
My feet have stood within Thy Holy Place,
O, guide me, guard me, hold me by Thy grace.

My tongue hath sung Thy praise and victory,
That I may triumph too, abide with me,
In truth to me Thou camest, God the Son,
Abide with me, and so—Thy will be done.
—Amen.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE LAUNCHING OF A SHIP.

"The launching of a ship now has profound significance for us," says the Rev. Dr. Jackson, Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Fall River, Mass. "In the earlier days there was something romantic about the first plunge of a ship into the sea; now there is dramatic power, for each and every ship is bearing some of the burden and is carrying the assurance of our nation into the world's conflict. No longer do we see a ship gliding into the water "As idle as a painted ship upon a painted ocean." Today a launching is the expression of our most determined national endeavor; we have gone out into the deep because we are pledged to seek the will of God as our guide. Today, more than ever, we are pledged to serve the Christ, the Master of men; and we are enlisted in His service, because we ultimately shall learn for ourselves and all mankind the power of his benediction. As I send out the first number of the seventh volume of our weekly leaflet, I pray that we may be launching our enterprise with determination and devotion to give our work allegiance and co-operate to the uttermost. Our sons and daughters and neighbors have gone on and overseas in the name of a great people: They are obedient to the commands of Christ as the Ruler of Nations; we, marked with the sign of the cross in the name of Christ, must not allow indifference, laziness, or selfish comfort to dull our vision: we must labor for that truer understanding of our peace as made known in the will of God. Let us pledge ourselves anew as faithful soldiers and servants of Christ Jesus our Lord.

A TENNESSEE AUXILIARY YEAR BOOK.

We are indebted to Mrs. Virginia C. Gerhart, Correspondent Church Periodical Club, Woman's Auxiliary, Diocese of Tennessee, for a copy of an attractively printed year book for the Mission Study Class of the Trinity branch of the Auxiliary, Clarksville, Tenn., which contains an unusual amount of good suggestions, readings, and a program inclined to command the interest of the members of the Auxiliary. The following headings will give our readers some idea of the Year Book's contents:

Prologue. Prayer. The Junior Society. The Prayer Circle, for those who cannot attend the Study Class. When the Nation Calls. Program for each month: A Call to the Colors. The Annual Parish Missionary Meeting. The American Church Before the Revolution, or a Church Without Apostles. The Advent Call. Epiphany. The Church With Apostles or the Episcopate in the New Nation. Sheperding the Scattered. Opening Prison Doors. The Tasks that Summon Us. Epilogue. References: Our Church and Our Country—Burleson. The Path of Labor. Spirit of Missions. The Witness. Missionary Leaflets. The following is one of the monthly programs:

JANUARY.

Epiphany.

Solo—Brightest and Best of the Sons of the Morning: Mrs. J. D. Slayden
Accompanist: Miss Emery
Gospel for the Epiphany
Mrs. Uffelmann

The Feast of Lights.

Tableau—The Wise Men
Directors: Mrs. Charles William Bailey and Miss Marable.
Unto the Lands Beyond—Stereopticon
Address: Rev. Mr. D. Ovies.
Personal Question: If the Christian Religion had not been brought by missionaries to your ancestors, where would you be now?

[redacted]

AROUND THE CORNER.

Around the corner I have a friend,
In this great city that has no end;
Yet days go by and weeks rush on,
And 'ere I know it, a year has gone
And I never see my old friend's face;
For life is a swift and terrible race.
He knows I like him just as well
As in the days when I rang his bell
And he rang mine.

We were younger then;
And now we are busy, tired men—
Tired with playing a foolish game;
Tired with trying to make a name.
"Tomorrow," I say, "I'll call on Jim,
Just to show I'm thinking of him."
But tomorrow comes—and tomorrow goes,
And the distance between us grows and grows.
Around the corner! yet miles away.
"Here's a telegram, sir,"
Jim died today!"
And that's what we get and deserve in the end,
Around the corner—a vanished friend.
—Charles Hanson Towne.

Some Congregations Like A Baby Clamoring For A Rattle

An interesting story is told in The Palm Branch, Diocese of Southern Florida, which reveals the secret of failure to prosper on the part of many parishes and missions, as follows:

"We know of a priest who has for years been the esteemed and successful Rector of a parish in a great city. This parish numbers 500 communicants and 800 Sunday school scholars, has property valued at $90,000, gives $10,000 annually for current expenses and makes large contributions to missions and charities.

"Some winters ago this Rector spent three or four months in a Florida town where our Church has a weak mission. He kindly gave services to the people of that mission, made frequent parochial calls, and in every way performed the duties of a priest-in-charge.

"Nobody could complain of any eccentricities of preaching, or ritual, or personality.

"But the people of the mission asked the Bishop not to arrange for the services of this priest another winter.

"Why? Oh, because he was not magnetic enough; he didn't crowd the church with 'outsiders' seeking sensations; he didn't, singlehanded, and out of his own resources, create the loyal interest and performance which those people were under obligation, by their baptismal vows, to manifest.

"Is it any wonder that such missions do not prosper? Is it any wonder that the Bishop finds himself unable to do aught for them?

"Truly, some congregations remind one of nothing else so much as of a baby clamoring for a rattle."

The South Dakota State College at Brookings has been designated as a training camp by the Government. There have been about 200 soldiers in training there for the past two months and detachments will be sent of about the same size all winter. This will give a new and bigger opportunity for the new church, which has recently been built in Brookings, to be of service. Before this order went into effect, it looked as if the college would have very few students during the coming year, but the soldiers will fill up the ranks left vacant by the large number of college boys in the service, and the missionary in charge, the Rev. Paul Roberts, will find plenty of chance for church work among the soldiers.

Gen. Pershing, who is a Churchman, makes the following strong appeal for the fatherless children of France:

"In the veins of the fatherless children of France courses the blood of heroes. Theirs is a heritage worth cherishing, a heritage which appeals to the deepest sentiments of the soul. What France through their fathers has done for humanity, France through them will do again.

"Save the fatherless children of France."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

stationed at Camp Dix.

The Rev. L. T. Gwynn, priest in charge of St. Christopher's, Oak Park, has gone to the front as Religous Secretary for the Y. M. C. A.

The Rev. Frank E. Wilson, voluntary chaplain at Camp Grant, has received a Federal commission and has left with his regiment for France.

The Rev. Floyd Cartwright, formerly Rector of St. Paul's Church, Beaufort, S. C., has assumed charge of his new parish, Christ Church, Smithfield, Va.

The Rev. Frank V. Hoag, priest in charge at Geneva diocese of Chicago, has received a Federal commission and has been assigned to the camp at Portland, Ore.

The Rev. Gilbert A. Ottmann has resigned as rector of Grace Church, Ocala, Southern Florida, and accepted a call to Trinity Church, Trinidad, Col., where he will begin work Oct. 1.

The Rev. John Johnson, Rector of Christ Church, Coxsackie, N. Y., and Greenville, N. Y., has accepted a call to become Rector of the Church of the Messiah, Rensselaer and St. Giles, Castleton, N. Y.

The Rev. W. D. Weigle, formerly rector of Trinity Church, Southwark, Philadelphia, Pa., has taken up his new work at St. Peter's Church, Helena, Mont., as director of religious education and social service.

The Rev. John Hatton, for the past three years associate rector at St. Mark's Church, Portland, Oregon, has succeeded the Rev. John E. H. Simpson in the rectorship. The Rev. Mr. Simpson resigned on account of failing health.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. J. N. McCormick Bishop of Western Michigan, was the preacher at a patriotic service held in the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Chicago, Sunday, Sept. 15. The consuls of the various allied nations accepted an invitation to be present.

The Rev. Ernest J. Hopper, Recto of Trinity Church, Utica, N. Y., ha been elected rector of St. John' Church, Cohoes, N. Y., and will prob ably accept and assume his new wor the first of October. He succeeds th Rev. Dr. F. S. Sill, who retired afte forty-one years of service.

The Rev. Frederick Hewitt, whos rectorship of Christ Church, Dear born, Mich., was compelted Sept. 18th has declined a call to become rector o Christ Church, Adrian, Mich., and ha accepted a call to be rector of St Philip and St. Stephens Church, De troit. He expects to be in residenc at the rectory, 688 McDougall Ave Detroit, by Oct. 1.

The Rev. Jos. W. Gunn, vicar of St Bartholomew's Church, Ely, Nevada has accepted a call as rector of Em manuel Church, Kellogg, Idaho. H made the journey from the old field t the new by auto, a distance of nearl 900 miles over mountain roads, an took duty in Kellogg September 8t All communications to The Diocesa Secretary of Nevada should be sent t the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. G. C. Hun ing, D. D., 505 Ridge St., Reno, N vada, until further notice.

The address of Chaplain Georg Ossman has been changed from Hou ton, Texas, to Camp Sheridan, 27t Machine Gun Bat., Montgomery, Al Chaplain Ossman left Houston th middle of July to attend the Arm Chaplain's Training School at Cam Zachary Taylor, Ky., where he re ceived his commission as chaplai with the rank of first lieutenant. H formerly served the Church Wa Commission at Ellington Field an Camp Logan, Houston, Texas.

The Rev. F. C. F. Randolph, st dent pastor for Episcopal studen at Ohio State University, has enlar ed his work so as to include wo among students at Dennison Unive sity, Granville, and Delaware. Epi copal students at any of these ins tutions are urged to communica with Mr. Randolph, who is very wi ing to be of any service to them possible. His Columbus address is No. 8 15th Ave., near the entrance to the university grounds. If the rectors, who have young people from their congregations in attendance at these institutions, would send the names of such to Mr. Randolph he would consider it a favor.

The Rev. W. S. Roberts, for the past ten years the missionary in charge of that part of South Dakota known as the Rosebud Country, which includes a section of country about the size of the State of Connecticut, has received his commission and gone as a chaplain. Mr. Roberts left his home in Dallas on Aug. 24 to report at Camp Dodge on the 26th. He was sent from there the next day to Hoboken to receive his equipment and be ready to sail at once. He has probably left this country by this time for his division had already been transported. During his absence the Rev. Mr. Nash, who lives at Winner will take charge of his work.

PRESIDENT WILSON URGES GENEROUS SCHOOL SUPPORT

By special request we publish below a letter addressed to Hon. Franklin A. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, by President Wilson:

My dear Mr. Secretary:

I am pleased to know that despite the unusual burdens imposed upon our people by the war they have maintained their schools and other agencies of education so nearly at their normal efficiency. That this should be continued throughout the war and that, in so far as the draft law will permit, there should be no falling off in attendance in elementary schools, high schools or colleges is a matter of the very greatest importance, affecting both our strength in war and our national warfare and efficiency when the war is over. So long as the war continues there will be constant need of very large numbers of men and women of the highest and most thorough training for war service in many lines. After the war there will be urgent need not only for trained leadership in all lines of industrial, commercial, social and civic life, but for a very high average of intelligence and preparation on the part of all the people. I would therefore urge that the people continue to give generous support to their schools of all grades and that the schools adjust themselves as wisely as possible to the new conditions to the end that no boy or girl shall have less opportunity fo

HOW ONE PARISH LOOKS AFTER THE BOYS

Christ Church, Elizabeth River Parish, Norfolk, Va., conducts a boys department of work under the direction of the Rev. A. G. Head. At the beginning of the work this fall a circular letter was sent to the parents in the parish, from which we clip the following:

You have a boy. You undoubtedly want him to be one of the best, but you sometimes hardly know how to deal with him.

You can manage all right during school hours, and perhaps for an hour or two in the evenings when he is studying, but after that, what?

Is he to be running the streets at all times with companions about whom you know little or nothing?

Is he to be allowed to go to the moving pictures whenever he feels like it, regardless of the fact that they are not always good for him to see?

Or would you prefer that he should be at all times under the influence of those whose only desire is to help to make him a clean, strong, manly boy? If that is what you want, we can help you.

We do not claim to be wonder workers, or to know it all—but we have a love for boys—we have many years' experience with them—we have been connected with a number of organizations for them—and out of all have built up a program which is interesting, up-to-date and well balanced, touching the boy at all points, physical, religious, intellectual, social and moral. It covers all his activities, indoor an doutdoor.

Here is the program. If it interests you, come and talk to us about it, and let us have your boy enrolled with us.

We start on Sunday morning in the Sunday school. Here we gradually learn our duty to God and our fellows, as well as our place and responsibiilty in the Church of God.

Most boys like to play at being soldier, and we believe that a little military drill and discipline is good for them, so on Monday afternoons we have the Christ Church Cadets.

Beside the military part of the organization we have a series of degrees, all of which are based upon things which the boy is learning and meeting with every day, thus teaching him observation, application and practical work.

Wednesday and Thursday afternoons are set apart for those boys who are too young for the Monday meeting, or who wish to take some special work a little more thoroughly.

Whenever the weather is fine we spend Sunday out of doors, and the weather does not always keep us at home, for we have our own Clubhouse at Ocean View, and can spend a happy time there in all kinds of weather. The clubhouse is built on a lot loaned by a member of the Church. Most of the material of which it is built was given by the Rector after the restoration of the Church; several friends have contributed materials and furnishings. The room has a large stove for heating in cool weather, and the kitchen is fitted with a cooking stove, etc., so that we are equipped either for a day's picnic or for a long camp. And what is most interesting is the fact that the work has all been done by the boys themselves.

We also teach the boys practical religious work, and you will find them taking part in the work and services of the Church under the direction of the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

If your boy shows any signs of having a singing voice, and you wish it to be cultivated, we will turn him over to Mr. J. J. Miller on Tuesday and Friday afternoons, and he will teach him how to use his voice so that he can take part in the worship of the Church by singing in the Choir.

Enroll your boy with us! We can take care of him every afternoon and on Saturdays! You will know where he is, and what company he is with at all times; he will be happy because he will be doing things which he likes to do, and will gradually become a well-developed boy, ready to take his place in the world.

RED CROSS RELIEF WORK IN SWITZERLAND

The War Council of the American Red Cross authorizes the following statement:

"The third installment of the report to the American people concerning the use being made of the Red Cross War Fund covers the activities of relief work in Switzerland, where the most urgent reasons for such work exists, the foremost of which is the necessity of caring for American soldiers in German prison camps, and the desire of the people of the United States to relieve Switzerland of a part of the great burden that the war has laid upon her.

"The report shows an expenditure to May 1, 1918, of $200,00.00, consisting of a gift of $125,000.00 to the Swiss Red Cross and a donation of $75,000.00 to assist the Swiss government in caring for interned Russians. The appropriation for the eight months from May 1, to December 1, 1918, amounts to $1,972,233.75.

"Of the neutral countries none has suffered so much from the war as Switzerland, and a glance at the map of Europe will easily explain why. Switzerland is the neutral pathway across which those who pass from Germany to the Allies, or from the Allies to the Central powers must go. For four years those inhabitants of Northern France and Belgium, who have been deported by Germany have been sent into Switzerland, and the Swiss government has been trying to care for them. For four years all prisoners, going in either direction, have passed through Swizerland and these, too, have been given assistance by the Swiss people. The American Red Cross has felt that the American people would wish to share with Switzerland the burden of caring for all of the Allies who passed across her borders, and so this work has been undertaken.

THE PRAYER OF THE BELL.

"There's a little town about sixty miles south of Birmingham on the Louisville & Nashville railroad called Verbena. The town is well named. It is redolent of the old-fashioned southern flower. It is peopled by simple farmer folk. Some substantial citizens of Montgomery keep summer homes there. There are few sounds about the place. An occasional mule team rattles down a red clay road drawing an empty wagon to the general stores, or bumps pleasantly back toward the Chilton County hills. Occasionally a gentle wind causes the leaves of the oak trees that shade the town to sigh one of those sighs of content that men breathe after a good meal or a good sermon or a well-rendered piece of music. It's as peaceful a place as can be found in Alabama or any other part of the world. It seems modelled after Goldsmith's 'Sweet Auburn.'

"There's a new sound there now. It is the Angelus of Strife. It calls the people of Verbena not only to worship, but to deeds. Every afternoon at six o'clock the bell of the Verbena church rings. It continues to ring for two minutes, and while its brazen song is lifted the people of Verbena stand and pray. When the sound begins the observance of its call is universal. Men halt in the street. Wagons are pulled up on the road. Women rise from their knitting or pause in their cookery—for they have early suppers in Verbena. The plowman halts his work and each repeats the prayer. Verbena calls it 'The Prayer of the Bell,' and it is said that men who have never been known to pray before, answer its call dutifully. With heads uncovered and bowed, each man, each woman, each child, each saint and each sinner repeat these words:—

" 'God bless our President, our Soldiers, our Nation, and guide them to Victory.' "

—Red Cross Magazine.

God bless the cheerful people—man, woman or child, old or young, illiterate or educated, handsome or homely. What the sun is to nature, what God is to the stricken heart, are cheerful people in the house and along the wayside. They go unobtrusively, unconsciously, about their mission, happiness beaming from their faces. We love to sit near them. We love the nature of their eye, the tone of their voices. Little children find them out quickly, amid the densest crowd, and, passing by the knitted brow and compressed lip, glide near, laying a confiding hand on their knee and lift their clear young eyes to those loving faces.—A. A. Willits.

THE CHURCH AND THE WAR.

But little is known by the general public, or even by the great body of the Church's members, of the splendid work our Church is doing to help win the war for democracy and righteousness. In the Diocese of Southern California we have not been lacking in providing for the men of our Church who in large numbers are enlisted in the military forces of the country. At the camps in San Diego, Riverside, Orange, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles Counties, at Linda Vista and San Pedro, and at every other point, the Church has been seeking the welfare of the men, and heartily sustaining them in their military preparations to meet the enemy.

It is not simply religious services on Sunday that have been provided for, but a constant oversight and help is given the men by an experienced and well informed civilian chaplain assisted by a wise and active layman, always on the ground, and ready to respond to every appeal or need of the young soldier for help or advice. The social side of the soldier is a chief concern of the Church at these camps, for there lies the chief danger which besets the soldier's life. He must be safeguarded from the evil influences which tempt him to go astray, and wise and tactful care is necessary. And to this duty the Church is seeking to fulfill the obligations belonging to it, as the protector and friend of the enlisted man.

It is a source of pride to us that the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Church's great lay association, has won the highest praise of the religious workers of our part of our country, for the sane and practical way in which it has sought to benefit the young men who claim allegiance to the Church, and its work has been made the pattern for others. Take the Brotherhood's work at Camp Kearny as a good illustration of what is being done. "Our secretary," says the report, "assisted Mr. Roudenbush in taking a religious census of the camp. They have now a card file of more than 500 Churchmen, which they are adding to daily. Two communion ervices have been arranged for each Sunday morning in the Church Federation House which was built by seven or more Christian Communions (ourselves among them) for their common use in camp work. These services have been held for the last month and the attendance is increasing weekly.

The Rev. H. C. Stone, of Philadelphia, is Assistant Religious Work Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. here, and Lieut. F. W. Clampett is chaplain of the 144th field artillery, and they are constantly on the alert to do their men a service. Social evenings are held in the Federation House for the men by the civilian chaplain, Mr. Roudenbush, and our secretary, Mr. Birmingham. Singers from the San Diego churches visit the camp on Sunday mornings and act as a choir at the services held there. Rev. Charles L. Barnes, Rector of St Paul's Church, San Diego, co-operates actively in the camp work. Mr. Birmingham's method of getting in touch with all Churchmen is to secure at least one key man in each company, and get him to line up the others. His key men also assist in bringing men to the Holy Communion, to the Monday evening socials, in encouraging them to attend the bible classes, and in bringing in candidates for Baptism and Confirmation." The report concludes, "Through our secretaries and correspondence we are safe in saying that we have organized upward of a thousand groups of personal workers in the army and navy, and have been the means of leading over three hundred and fifty men to Baptism and Confirmation." We are sure that parents and others will be glad to know these things, and that in every way, social, moral and religious, as well as military our young men are under the best of influences, and are receiving the most careful preparation for a worthy soldier's life.—The Churchman and Church Messenger.

RACINE COLLEGE
RACINE, WISCONSIN.
Students Army Training Unit opens October 1st.
Men over 18 and subject to Government Draft may enter.
Mess, Shelter, Clothing, Medical Attention and Tuition at Government Expense, and a Salary of $30 a month.
REGISTER NOW.
B. T. ROGERS, D. D., Warden.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana.....Publisher
All exchanges and articles for publication should be sent to the Managing Editor.
All subscriptions to the Publisher.

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS

GEORGE P. ATWATER GRACE W. JOHNSON FRANCIS S. WHITE
HENRY J. MIKELL JAMES SHEERIN
JAMES WISE

ADVERTISING RATES

Three dollars an inch each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

OFFICE OF PUBLICATION CHANGED.

The Witness will be published hereafter, beginning with the next number, at Chicago. All exchanges and articles for publication should be addressed to the Rev. Chas. J. Shutt, Managing Editor, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, Ill. Subscriptions and all remittances should be sent to the Rev. L. W. Applegate, Publisher, Hobart, Indiana.

EDITORIAL

CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY

The most needed arts in religion today are clear thinking and pure loving. We are to serve the Lord our God with all our mind (that is with our heads) and with all our love (that is with our hearts). To serve God with our heads is to think clearly. Shallow and confused thinking is not a sign of liberality, but rather of poverty. And the first question for the Christian to ask himself frankly and fearlessly is the one, "What think ye of Christ?"

Is He merely a wise teacher whose sayings are subject to revision by the wisdom of this age, and whose mistakes need to be corrected by His self-constituted critics?

Or is He the son of the living God, whose word is everlasting and whose truth endureth from generation to generation? Is He to be reviewed or obeyed? It makes a tremendous difference with my conduct whether I am to obey those over me or to correct their mistakes.

And next, if I accept Christ as my Lord and Master, it is most important that I should have a clear understanding as to the method by which His word is handed down to me.

Is there an infallible book, infallibly translated and infallibly understood by me, which is the only authority that I will accept?

Or is there an infallible Church presided over by an infallible Pope, whose word to me is law?

Or is there no such thing as infallibility in human affairs, and is there a reasonable standard of the faith which I may accept without stultifying my brain on the one hand or exaggerating my egoism on the other?

Ought I to run in the ruts of prejudice and declare that my ecclesiastical ancestors must have been right just because they are my ancestors?

Or is religion a matter of my own little mental cistern out of which I draw such water as may have fallen into it?

Am I in my religion an Imperialist or a Bolshevik or what?

Let's go down into our mental cellar and find out what kind of foundations our spiritual temple is standing upon?

Right here is where our paths diverge and therefore at this point we ought to think, for after you have started on one of these paths the process of your thinking will pursue the line that you have taken.

One road is marked an infallible book; another, an infallible man; another, prejudice; another, egoism; another, authority. Which road shall I follow, or am I one of those aimless tramps who say that "it makes no difference, one road is as good as another." Like a tramp, having no business in life, it makes no difference what way I go.

In selecting a road one usually has a purpose unless life be an aimless joy-ride.

Our Lord tells us our purpose. "Narrow is the way that leadeth to eternal life."

Christ came not into the world merely to tone up our culture. He was not crucified that we might have better sewarage or bigger libraries, excepting as these things are means to the great end, that we may inherit eternal life, and this life is in Jesus Christ. In very truth He is the way.

Christ established His kingdom that we might have eternal life.

Now what way of those mentioned shall we choose?

There are souls that crave an oracle. And there are souls that want no guide. You will find both kinds, not only in the Church, but also in the State.

Unquestionably civil government has been frightfully misused. More so than the Church. Tyrants have seized the people's rights and they are supported by timid souls who will have peace at any price.

There are anarchists who have overturned the State and they will have no will but their own.

And there are those who, turning wearily from each, have said, let us have a state in which the minimum of authority shall preserve the maximum of liberty, and so our fathers founded this nation. So also Englishmen have come, even in the most remote colonies, to cling to the State.

Yet England has had tyrants and England has seen the rabble in power, and she has learned that liberty must come through trusting neither those who claim divine rights as kings, nor those who claim omnipotent wisdom when sitting in the seats of the mighty. There was no misrule in England worse than that of the so-called Commonwealth.

All life is based on two things which are the source of its strength, viz., the common fund of human experience and the initial power of new discoveries. These two form the warp and the woof of human society.

He who would despise the authority of the past makes shipwreck by his callow theories. He who would crush out the freedom of the individual produces a nation of paralytics.

The Church is no different in this regard from the State. She, too, must bring out of her treasure things new and old. With one hand she must cling to the priceless traditions of the past, while with the other she reaches out for the new measures which time unfolds.

That is the principle of your respect for the authority of the State, a respect so great that you allow the State to come and take out of your house your only son and use his life for its purposes and ends.

Such was the respect which the early Christians gave to the authority of the Church.

But what was that authority? What is the authority that you respect in the U. S. A.? Neither the book of statutes, nor the man who is your President; neither an infallible oracle nor your own private volition, but that which makes up the State.

Two things—the Institutions which come down to us from the past—our courts and legislatures and legal precedents and universal customs—some written, some untold, but all going to make up not an oracular man or book or State, but a very fallible state, often mistaken but never wholly wrong.

The Church is no less that society which preserves for us the books and institutions and legal processes of the past, with a like and flexible use of the inspirations of the present, never allowing the one to wholly obscure the other.

An organization, like the State, marked by constitutional officers whose inauguration vows keep them in touch with the past, and whose free intelligence keeps them alive to the present.

Yet never so oracular that we refuse to think when they have spoken. Never so individually popular that we fail to weigh their utterances in the scales of the best traditions of the past.

No demagogue can swerve us from our inheritance by pleading his own importance; no stand patter can hold us from progress by his absolute dictum.

This is authority and this is the only kind of authority which men can respect as they think, and which they can criticize as they obey.

Neither absolutism nor individualism by itself has ever yet founded a State that could endure nor a Church that could hold together.

Let us learn our lessons of authority in the Church from the practice which we render to the State.

For no other kind of an organization can preserve a reverence for Christ with a respect for our own liberty as sons of God.

A STUDY IN THE ACTS

By Bishop Johnson

"And being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which sayeth He, ye have heard of me.

"For John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." Acts 1: 4-5.

The Promises of Christ.

Not only did Christ found a Kingdom, which was distinct from all other Kingdoms, but He also endowed it with a gift, which was distinct from all other gifts.

In these two points lies the chief distinction between the historic Church and those Christian bodies, which have separated from her and in these two points we shall find the culminating facts of our Lord's ministry.

Christ is not merely a teacher come from God, but He is the creative Word of God, by whose power a Kingdom was established and by whose grace that Kingdom was endowed with power.

To deny the existence of that Kingdom and of that power is to deny two of the most evident facts in Holy Scripture.

"Upon this rock I will build my Church," was the assertion of a promise that was consummated by the Apostles.

"It is expedient for you," speaking to the Apostles, "that I go away, for if I go away I will send you the Comforter."

Another promise, which had its fulfillment in the great fact of Pentecost, to which He refers by anticipation in the verses above quoted, was "the promise of the Father which ye have heard of me."

In these verses our Lord refers to John's baptism, but connects this gift of the Holy Ghost with a baptism of a different kind which they were about to receive after a wonderful and miraculous fashion.

John the Baptist baptized with water, and St. Paul (in Acts XIX, 1-6), thinks it necessary to rebaptize those who had received John's baptism, in order that they may be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus and in order that they may receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

When Protestantism broke with the historic Church, it substituted for the idea which had gripped the Church for fifteen centuries, another and different idea, which has long since fallen down completely.

It is true that the ancient idea of the Church had been frightfully abused by the arbitrary assumptions of the Roman hierarchy, but that meant neither that the ancient idea was false or that the new idea was correct.

Nothing has been more abused in civil government than the idea of civil power, but the fact that the principles of the Czar were wrong does not mean that the principles of the Bolsheviki are right. Better that there be a State, even though it be temporarily misused, than that the State should be destroyed and government be turned over to wild theorists.

Likewise the Church has suffered from those who have tyrannized over her, but society has not been reformed by the destruction of the Church.

Let us study the principle laid down by Christ in Acts I, 4-5 in the light of subsequent history, and we will see a radical and fundamental difference between Christ's ideas and those of the modern reformers.

If you are to put first things first in the teaching of Christ, it is found in the words "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly."

That is, with Christ, religion was to be a biological fact, something dealing with life, not a collection of opinions or theories about life.

In biology there are three main principles:

(1) The law of birth; everything that lives must have birth.

(2) The law of nourishment; everything that lives must be fed.

(3) The law of adaptation; everything that grows must adapt itself to the environment in which it lives, or else it will perish.

Christ built up such a system for comparing these three biological principles.

We have in the teachings of Christ:

(1) The law of birth: "Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven" (St. John III, 5).

(2) The law of nourishment: "Verily, verily I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the son of man and drink his blood, ye have no life in ye," (St. John VI, 53).

(3) The law of adaptation: "And He said, Verily, I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven."

Now the historic Church, whatever other faults it may have had, has always testified to all of these conditions which our Lord insisted upon as means of entering His Kingdom.

You must be baptized; you must be a communicant; you must be converted and learn as a little child.

The Protestant reformers arbitarily picked out the word "converted" and made it the sole condition for eternal life, ignoring the other conditions as unimportant, and then laid stress upon another thing which our Lord never mentioned as being of importance, viz: that you have certain peculiar theories about life, known as "confessions of faith," you will be saved.

That is they substituted for Christ's mandates their own opinions.

And now nobody cares about their confessions of faith, while the sacramental life of the Church is just as dear to those who have accepted it as it was in the early Church.

To go back to the verses under discussion. Christ referred to John's baptism as merely a baptism by water, but pointed his disciples to a better baptism, that which the Apostles were to receive in the miraculous tongues of fire and that which they were to perpetuate by baptizing all believers with water in the name of Jesus Christ and by the laying on of hands in the gift of the Holy Ghost. This is a historic fact that may be ignored but cannot be denied.

Whatever modern critics may say about the reality of the Gospels and the necessity of the sacraments; the Apostles who were nearest to Christ's teaching never felt.

For they stated that they were witnesses to the facts in Christ's life and that they baptized all those who believed.

And from this testimony of the Apostles the historic Church has never wavered. There are those who preach in the pulpits of the Church who state that the Gospels do not teach facts, but these preachers draw salaries for teaching that which is a violation of the vows that they made at ordination.

The Church has borne continuous testimony that the faith of a Christian rests upon the facts in Christ's life, and that the practice of a Christian is in obedience to Christ's commands, and that the sacraments of the Church are its life and hope, even as Christ has promised.

Christ promised us the forgiveness of sins in His way, not in ours, and He did not hesitate to put to shame the wisdom of men by what seemed to the Greeks to be mere foolishness.

Personally I prefer the foolishness of Christ to the wisdom of modern Greeks, for by their fruits should each be judged.

WANTED BY TWO MISSIONARIES IN KANSAS

Any one who has a Stereopticon Lantern to give away or loan for use until Jan. 1, 1919, in the Blue Valley Missions of Kansas is requested to write Mr. Charles Bailey, Box 247, Blue Rapids, Kansas. The Missions will pay freight charges.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelin, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of
"TEMPERANCE".

This magazine has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind in America.
Address:
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING

An organization for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes) pecially among women, and for the for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, esstrengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.

The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.

Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.

28½tf

A SAFE and ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Women's Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY.
MRS. GUTGESELL'S CHRISTMAS NOVELTY GIFT BOOK
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
NO INVESTMENT SPLENDID PROFITS
For information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A BISHOP'S LABOR DAY PASTORAL

A Comprehensive Statement on Subjects Relating to Labor

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Alfred Harding, Bishop of Washington, issued a strong pastoral letter to the clergy of his Diocese asking them to give special consideration to the anniversary of Labor Day, and on the Sunday immediately preceding it, to preach on subjects relating to labor. We publish below several excerpts from the Bishop's letter:

This is the most critical of all the years of the great world-war. Victory for the cause of righteousness, freedom and true democracy, now seen clearly approaching, depends in large degree for its speedy attainment on the united efforts, labors, prayers and sacrifices of the people of the United States. It goes without saying that back of our great army now in France, and that greater army now being organized, and back of our growing and highly efficient navy, must be the army of producers. There must be the builders of ships; the makers of munitions; of machinery; of all engines of warfare; the great army of farmers and agriculturists for the production of the stores of food needed for our soldiers and sailors and for all our people. There must also be the army of men engaged in transportation by land and sea.

The winning of the war depends therefore as much on the loyal co-operation of all the forces of labor as upon the valor of the fighting men and the wisdom of their leaders. Already we have gratifying evidence of the courage, endurance, and initiative of our soldiers in France and of the efficiency of our navy on the high seas.

We have also good reason to be encouraged by the spirit of co-operation manifested by our people in all sections of our country, in the success attending the sale of Liberty Bonds, in the conservation of food, in the response to the appeals of the Red Cross, the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, the appeals of the Churches, the appeals for relief for the destitute, the orphaned, the afflicted. We thank God for the splendid spirit of sacrifice of time and means evoked by this war.

Pernicious Influence of the Slacker, Pacifist and Profiteer.

If when this country entered the great conflict, some asked anxiously how the forces of labor would act in the emergency, Labor Day of 1918 brings an emphatic and inspiring answer which puts to silence these forebodings. As we review the past year, we have to recognize here and there the pernicious influence of the pacifist, the slacker, and the profiteer, and to deplore the fact that some in the ranks of labor have embarrassed the Government and hindered production by the inauguration of strikes, despite the counsel and appeals of the patriotic and far-seeing leaders of the great labor organizations not to adopt this method of adjusting differences in these times. We have also to deplore the fact that some employers have for their part refused to submit to arbitration, or to follow the decisions of properly constituted Boards of Conciliation.

Nevertheless the fact stands out clearly that the great body of workers, especially as represented by the Labor organizations in the American Federation of Labor, and the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy, has given unqualified assurance of loyalty and determination to support the war by united service.

We have also cause to be grateful that in this crisis our President, in addition to his other great services to the nation, has had the ability and the wisdom to appeal successfully to the heart and conscience of the laboring man. "Unquestionably," says a writer in the Atlantic Monthly, "the Administration has been sympathetic with organized labor." It is significant that the President should have been introduced by the Chairman of the last convention of the American Federation of Labor as "the man who has arisen to the great occasion and opportunity of our time, the spokesman of freedom, the interpreter of the aims and spirit of our times, the leader of thought and action among the men of the nations of the earth who aspire to freedom."

The Church Should Be Sympathetic.

The Church of Jesus Christ, who Himself set His seal to the high dignity of work by the labor of His own hands, should be deeply sympathetic with all workers both with hands and brain. She must be "witnessing both to small and great" her demand for justice—justice that will secure to the capitalist an equitable return for his investment of brains and money, and to the laborer such a share in the fruits of his industry as will secure the welfare of himself and family, and an atmosphere of happiness in his home and in all his associations.

We are glad to affirm that the Church in our day is not only sympathetic with the attainment of these objects, but actively engaged in promoting them. Christian people individually, and through their organizations, have been working for such hours of labor as will afford due opportunity and time for rest, recreation, and cultivation of the powers of the body, mind and soul. The Church has been insistent on the preservation of the Lord's Day from unnecessary demands for toil. Christian men and women, organized for social service, have worked for better housing, for the inspection of mines, shops and factories, for the securing to children their rights to education, and the enjoyment of a real childhood, for the bettering of the condition of women workers. These objects common to both the Church and the labor organizations should be prosecuted with increasing fervor and unflagging zeal.

The Church's great opportunity at this hour is to revive the spirit of fellowship one with another which was her distinguishing characteristic in her earliest days. Her mission is to bring the principles of her Master into full practical operation. She must have again a world conception, and show by her concern for all men, irrespective of race or nationality or religion, that she believes in the Brotherhood of Man, as dependent on the Fatherhood of God, revealed and mediated to us by Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord.

Must Strive for Full Justice Between Man and Man.

Looking to the future, and especially to the days when this war shall be over, we must see that the fruits of the great victory shall be conserved, that we secure those conditions of life and liberty that will make democracy safe and lasting. We must all strive for full justice between man and man. We should strive for such a readjustment of the relations of capital and labor as will bring co-operation and good will and mutual endeavor for the welfare of all elements of the community. A reorganization is bound to come. Let us strongly urge the capitalist and the employer to assume towards his brother of the labor order such a sympathetic attitude, such a oneness of interest as to give the country and especially labor itself the benefit of the united wisdom of the brotherhood.

Let us then devote the Sunday immediately preceding Labor Day to sermons expounding the true dignity of labor, the duty of the worker to live and work in the spirit of so high a calling, and the duty of the employer of labor to exhibit such a sympathetic attitude to his employes, such an effort to understand their point of view, such a spirit of fellowship, as we must have one with another, if the sacrifices that are bringing victory to our cause shall not be made in vain. Let us pray earnestly for our country that by these endeavors, peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety, may be established among us for all generations.

RECLAIMING MEN FOR THE ARMY.

No more important service in reclaiming men has ever been undertaken than the work the army is doing in the development battalions. As humanitarian program, the work promises much for the future of the country. This is especially true of the efforts that are being made on behalf of the negroes.

"Personnel" the official paper of the Personnel Department of the Army, states it is a well known fact that there is a limit to the number of available Class A men, for if we are to send overseas an army of the size now planned, we will find that it will not be easy to gather together such a huge number of physically fit men, and it is the part of wisdom to practice conservation of manpower.

The plan is to use the development battalions to reclaim for service, men who would otherwise be discharged from the service for physical disability.

Among the negroes in the development battalions the percentage of the diseased and the illiterate is high.

By provision of the Army regulations, the schools are conducted by the chaplains. Although running a development battalion school gives a chaplain much work. it also gives him a real opportunity to know the soldiers, and to win their confidence.

In ministering to a colored development battalion a chaplain's work is entirely different from what it would be with white soldiers, who are often hard to induce to attend religious services. The negroes hold services of their own on all occasions. Many of the men are preachers, and it is nothing uncommon to have four preaching services going on at the same time in one battalion.

One is very short-sighted who cannot see that these men in the development battalions will get a training which will make them useful now in taking the places of men who can be sent overseas, and which will make them better men and better citizens after the war. William Heilman, Chaplain, Development Battalion, No. 2, 161st Depot Brigade, Camp Grant, Ill.

"ONWARD"—SONG OF WORLD FREEDOM.

It is a privilege to present to the readers of The Witness, through the courtesy of the author, the Rev. Wm. P. Taylor, Rector of St. Paul's Church, East Orange, N. J., a song which deserves wide publication. It has been set to music by Frederick Hall, one time musical critic of the Philadelphia Press and now a most successful University chorus leader. Dean Robbins of New York has asked permission to use it at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The song, which follows, may be had of the Wadsworth Publishing Co., East Orange, N. J.

Wake, ye Freemen! Arm and onward!
Reckon not the toll!
Know ye not the cost of Freedom?
Know ye not her Roll?
Hark! that cry, all down the ages:
Flame the Righteous Sword!
Smite the tyrant! Break his legions!
Scatter wide his horde!

Onward, Freemen! On, straight onward!
Stay not ye for pain!
Men have suffered; Men must suffer
God's Right to maintain!
Sell ye not that blood-bought jewel!
Barter not the soul!
Doom, ye Might, the frightful monster,
Madd'ning for his goal!

Onward, Freemen! Onward, Freemen!
Sons of glorious sires!
On through seas of blood if need be!
On through purging fires!
God calls to you; Man calls for you:
Right ye the oppressed!
*Federate a world of Brothers,
Free to be their Best!

Onward! Further onward, Freemen—
War-born into Light!
See! The Commonwealth Eternal
Gleaming through the night!
Battle on for God's Own Country,
Kingdom Come, the Blest:
Perfect Freedom, Love Supernal,
God's Full Life—and Rest!

Refrain: Onward, then, ye Freemen!
Onward with your sires!
On, though hell opposes!
Brave ten thousand fires!
Onward, ever onward
By the road they trod!
On, Mankind, to Freedom,
Brotherhood and God!

*Tennyson: "The brotherhood of man a federate of the world."
P. Brown's definition of Liberty: "Freedom to be one's best."
(Copyrighted, 1918, in U. S. A., at Canada by Frederick Hall.)

A CORRECTION.

Akron, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Your proofreader has permitted one of my sentences to be given an unintelligible turn, in the issue of Sept. 7, in the article concerning the Brotherhood Convention. I wrote as follows:

"No session was what Dean Hodges so deliciously calls a 'Fugue,' which interpreted is: An arrangement in which the voices, one by one, come in, and the listeners, one by one, go out."

That is what I wrote. Your printer, some textual critic possibly, set up this sentence, as a sort of a puzzle, as follows:

"No session was what Dean Hodges so deliciously calls a 'Figure,' etc." That makes nonsense. Consult the dictionary for the word "Fugue."

I would not have written to correct this if it had been my own pleasantry in the first place, but I must protect Dean Hodges, from whose mouth never came an unintelligible witticism.

Very sincerely yours,
GEORGE P. ATWATER.

FORMS OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT

THE EPISCOPAL POLITY

The Rev. J. H. Young, D. D.

Under this title we mean to imply that form of Church government which was the only form, as admitted by all historians, from the middle of the 2d century to the 16th, and which has been the polity of three quarters of Christendom since the Reformation.

The essentials of this form: are (1) three orders of the Ministry, Bishops, Priests and Deacons: (2) ordination of a Bishop to be by three Bishops, and of a Priest by one Bishop. (See the ancient Apostolic Canons, which set forth the rule of the Church from the third century, if not earlier.)

Under these essentials there have been in various times and places, large differences. For example, in the early ages, and today in our own Church, the laity have a share in church government, while in the middle ages and in the Roman Church today they have no share. However strongly we may believe in lay representation it is not an essential of this polity. The Roman Church makes seven orders of the Ministry, yet, because they do distinguish between the three and the lesser, the polity is not affected. In like manner a National Church may or may not have Archdeacons, Deans and Archbishops; these do not affect the form of polity in any essential.

Necessity for Historic Continuity.

What does seem to be essential is that ordination should be by those whose orders have unquestioned historic continuity. This is not because of any doctrine of Apostolic Succes- such an idea is, of course, held by many, yet it does not form a part of the polity. Episcopal ordination, in place of mere congregational, is to give a larger authority than congregational to the minister. He is to be a minister in the Church Catholic, rather than in any local part. This idea underlies Presbyterial ordination, as well as ours. But the necessity for historic continuity appears when we remember that the Church has had an unbroken life, from the days of the Apostles onward.

To have the authority of the whole Church, therefore, instead of the authority of a part there must be conformity to the rules of the Church as a whole. Presbyterian succession goes no further back than the 16th century, and at that time marked a division; it is today a separative succession, and would of necessity remain so, even though all bodies which hold to it should unite. If we seek a unity which shall be larger than a new and great denomination; if we seek a unity which shall keep touch with the Church through the ages, we must find it under the rules of the Church Catholic as to Ordination.

Unitive Power of Episcopal Polity.

There is under this form of polity a bond of union which no other form possesses. The civil war in our own country offers a good illustration. All the Protestant bodies separated, either in the years preceding the war, or at its outbreak, and no schism so caused has been healed to this day. The Presbyterians North and South have for years considered the subject of reunion, as have also the Methodists, only to reject it every time. The Roman Church went through that cataclysm without a break. In the case of our own Church, the dioceses in the South argued that as a new government had been set up, they must organize the Church in the Confederate states, which they proceeded to do. In the North it was held that as the Confederacy was a rebellion, and not a lawful government, there was no division, and at the General Convention held during the war the roll of dioceses was called as usual, beginning with Alabama. Immediately after the war the Southern dioceses returned, and the temporary breach was healed. The unitive power of this polity does not lie in the title Bishop, for the Methodists have that, nor in any autocratic power in the office, for our Bishops have very little such power; it lies rather in the sense of unity with the ages through the Historic Ministry.

Spirit of Unity Depends Upon Ideas.

In all the talk of unity we hear scarcely a word as to the need of anything except the spirit of brotherhood; thus it is commonly taken for granted that before unity can come there must be free exchange of pulpits, and free transfer of members by letter.

But the spirit of unity depends, far more than is commonly supposed, upon ideas; there can be no unity except upon the basis of a doctrine which unites. There must first be the vision of the Church Catholic, the Church whose life has been unbroken, even though its members have at times refused to live together, or to work together. It is the lack of this vision which has left American Protestantism still in its minute divisions in spite of many years of free exchange of pulpits. And when that vision comes, we may be sure that it will bring with it the acceptance of the Historic Episcopate, because that form of ministry alone has Catholic authority, and it alone can provide the bond of Catholic unity.

WHAT OUR FRIENDS ARE SAYING

"I hope to give you a push in your commendable zeal and enterprise in endeavoring to reach every Church family in the land with your matchless WITNESS."—Arthur J. Watson, Pawtucket, R. I.

"How did we ever do without you?"—Margaret S. Stewart, St. Louis, Mo.

"A readable and helpful Church paper at a remarkably moderate price."—William Schouler, Baltimore, Md.

"I wonder how we ever got along without THE WITNESS."—Alex McMillan, Carlisle, Pa.

"Your paper is a real friend and joy to a busy woman—it would be a real deprivation to me to be without it. I wish every Churchman and woman might read it."

"I am glad to see that some Churchmen have the courage to start such a movement as a popular paper for every one in the Church. I am senior warden in our parish, and I will do what I can to interest our people."—J. H. Courtenay, Woodhaven, N. Y

"The good word for your paper is freely given every chance I get. Your paper is what I want, and I believe the average layman is with me."—G. H. Hackett, Boise, Idaho.

"I consider THE WITNESS one of the best missionaries we have."—Cordelia Veal, Rome, Ga.

"I have enjoyed THE WITNESS the past year more than I can express. May God bless you."—George Dyer, Nashua, N. H.

"THE WITNESS is the best Church paper I have ever had."—Mrs. S. J. Wigginton, Compton, Cal.

"I consider THE WITNESS a most valuable paper, and shall do what little I am able here to make it known."—E. L. Kniskern, M. D.

BISHOP GORE TO SPEAK IN CHICAGO.

The Rt. Reverend Charles Gore, D. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Oxford, England, will address a mass meeting at the Auditorium in Chicago, Friday evening, September 27, on "International Christian Fellowship in the War." His lecture tour is under the auspices of the National Inter-Church War Work Congress.

THE OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Teabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918. 8-10-13

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls' College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal

Collegiate School, Military
for Boys, Denver, Colo.
All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations.
Adress REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

THE DEATH OF PAN

By Eva Lee Matthews.

In the old days when all the world was young the fairies were just as big as we are and they used to play with human things quite freely. Often they were seen at play. All kinds of fairies there were. Those who lived in the tree were called dryads or hamadryads; those who lived in water, the fountains and rivers and sea were called nymphs. A good many mortals from time to time slipped away from ordinary human responsibilities into fairyland, and according to their motive or their former life they became satyrs, or centaurs or mermaids or Undines. In all cases they had to reliquish their souls; they bartered future immortality for the present and rather earthly immortality of fairy life. And how hard it was to win back their souls you may find out from reading the story of Undine by Fougue and of the Mermaid by Anderson. But very few ever cared to get their souls back. They led merry, irresponsible and unmoral lives in fairyland untroubled by conscience or by any remembrance of God. The King of Fairyland was named Pan and a jolly king he was, piping sweet music for the gay dances of his fairy folk and ordaining that none of his subjects should shed tears. In case of terror and pursuit of a nymph by a satyr he would good-naturedly turn the nymph into a waterfall or a rose bush and laugh at the surprised face of the satyr till he had to hold his sides to keep from bursting. Oh, he was a merry king and all the fairy folk did whatever he bade them and fairyland was a beautiful place full of music and dancing and play. If there were lessons, and it was whispered sometimes that King Pan was the great teacher of the magicians and witches and astrologers, those were all behind locked doors and no one but the pupils themselves, mostly humans, though sometimes fairies would learn magic, too, were admitted and they only one by one and sworn to secrecy. If Pan taught magic, as I have been told he did, he never seemed to care what his pupils would do with it or how they would use it. He himself did not use his powers of magic to harm human people, but he did not seem to mind if the people did to whom he taught it. That was their lookout, he thought, and if humans made war on humans, however they might do it, it was no business of his. And he went on whistling and merry while Circe, the wicked witch, turned men into pigs, and sirens sang men to their death. Pan sometimes dressed very gorgeously in robes made of exquisitely dyed and embroidered fabrics, sometimes very simply, with only a tunic of green leaves, and a wreath of flowers on his head. He had mines of silver and gold and gems with a race of slave fairies, or perhaps humans who had come to fairyland and had been used as slaves by King Pan, who was autocratic and capricious. These diggers under ground were called gnomes, and Pan, to keep them contented, used to let them decorate the caves they excavated and where they dwelt, never coming up to the light, with the precious metals and stones they were forever mining for, and would laugh in scorn at those who bartered sunshine for the hidden gold. Many centuries passed away, but centuries do not count for much in the life of a fairy, and there had been but little change in fairyland. Pan was growing perhaps more of a tyrant with the long exercise of undisputed power, but his rule was not questioned and the fairies obeyed him gladly and felt indeed that their happy existence was due to his power and his will. Then came strange premonitions of change. A little bird flew to Pan one day and told him that he had seen a bright and glorious angel, far more beautiful than any of the fairy tribe, one doubtless who had come from heaven, in talk with a young virgin drawing water at the fountain, and he had heard the Angel tell her that she should be Mother of the Universal King.

"So, Pan, you will be king no longer. You, too, will have to do homage to this Anointed One of Heaven," trilled the little bird. But Pan heard with a gloomy brow. His kingship had been undisputed so long he did not want to give it up to another, however great or wonderful or holy. But what could he do? The Child was to be born in a land which for ages had excluded the fairies. Neither Pan himself nor any of his nymphs or dryads or underground workers could go into a land which had an invisible barrier around it, but any fairy attempting to pass through heard the words, "Holy to the Lord!" and unseen hands pushed him back. In such a land the Child would be quite safe from Pan and his crew. But no such barrier existed for the birds and so he sent them as his messengers to bring him word of what happened in the Holy Land he could not enter. By and by news came to him. An owl flying by night had seen shepherds hurrying away from their flocks to find a Wonderful Child they were talking about that Angels had told them of. Then a hawk flew in and said three wise men had come from the East country asking for the Wonderful King of the Star. Then a little robin flew in with his breast all splashed with the blood of babies, slain by the wicked tyrant Herod. The bird was almost sobbing as he stammered out the dreadful tidings!

"Has the King Child perished then?" asked Pan. But the robin could could not tell. Then an eagle flew to Pan and said:

"I have seen the Child. His mother

[redacted]

looking at him and Pan felt He read the purpose in his heart. Abashed, he stood a while with the Child in his arms, then shaking his head resolutely turned toward where his swan was waiting for him, resting from its rapid flight. But ere he reached the outer boundary of the circle of fire light a star shot down from the blue vault of heaven and a Being of terrible brightness stood before him.

"Child of Earth!" said the Star bright being. "Dost thou come near to the Holy One only to steal and to refuse homage of thy proud and careless heart?" Into that rebellious heart I plunge the spear of light. Thy reign is over. Thou must die because thou hast dared to measure thy strength with the King of Heaven and Earth. No more may thy race mingle with the sons of men. Smaller and smaller shall they grow as they gradually vanish from the earth, which so long has been their playground." He took the Child from Pan's nerveless grasp, and at the same moment a sharp pain stung him to the heart. "It is Ithuriel's spear!" he cried and staggered over to his swan, which rose with him into the air and carried him back to his beloved gardens of Greece. But it was a dead Pan he brought back to the waiting Fairyland.

It is said that a ship was sailing close under the cliffs or Tarentum that night, and those on board were astonished and filled with fear to hear great wailing and sobbing, and through the noise of lamentation these words were clearly heard: "Great Pan is dead, Great Pan is dead, Great Pan is dead." And so the sound of the rowful lament swept by and all was still once more.

But from that day the fairy folk became invisible to man—a barrier [redacted]

3. There was no pope in the early Catholic Church.

4. The (so-called) Protestant Episcopal Church is a true part of the One, Apostolic Church, founded by our Lord Jesus Christ and His Apostles in Jerusalem.

5. The said Church has the original Priesthood, i. e., the unbroken consecration of Apostles, Presbyters and Deacons, generally known as Bishops, Priests and Deacons, reaching back to the first Apostles.

6. The Holy Communion is a memorial sacrifice, pleading the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ on the Cross.

7. There is a Real, Spiritual Presence of the Body and Blood of the Lord in the Holy Communion.

8. The Priesthood of the Anglican Church is as worthy of as much respect as any Priesthood in the world.

There is certainly one thing which, if the war succeeds in making plain, will prove a great blessing to the Christian world. We refer to the dangerous character of German philosophical books and theological writings, covertly or openly, concerned in emaculating the great doctrines of Jesus Christ, in destroying faith in the credibilty and inspiration of God's Holy Word, and in lowering moral conceptions of the Christian Church.—The Churchman and Church Messenger, Southern California.

"Slackers are the men who can be soldiers, but won't," says the Rev. J. A. Bazett-Jones, Locum-Tenens of St. Augustin's Church, Wilmette, Ill. "You cannot go to the front for various reasons, but at home you are bound to serve, and in serving God, you will be serving your country and helping our brave boys. There is the possibility of being slackers with God."

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY

HOBART, INDIANA

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

We are prepared to print anything and everything a clergyman or a parish may need, from a one-page program to a handsomely bound book.

We have been studying, for over a quarter of a century, the requirements of the clergy and parishes, and we have incorporated into our standard supplies the very best ideas of the most successful and experienced men in the American Church.

We have worked out a system, based upon sound business principles, which enables us to furnish our patrons with parish papers, standard supplies, and all sorts of books, magazines and commercial printing at astonishingly low prices.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service, and for giving notices—"Lest he forget". Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM—In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS—New Families, Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial. 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT Cards—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 50 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.00. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant with God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England—A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People. A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A textbook for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies, $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock". Four-page Folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards. Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14) First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service, for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms—Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a hundred.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches) to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.
The three above Cards for One Dollar.

Vestibule Bracket—Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

Anything desired printed to order.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA
Worthy of Universal Adoption

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching", which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—
1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Missionary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES.

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.
2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson—a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts or Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
Henry VIII.
The Evening Service.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

OUR OFFERTORY ENVELOPE SYSTEM IS THE BEST AND CHEAPEST ON THE MARKET

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY.....

TRUE EDUCATION

To educate the head, heart and hand—the head to think clearly and express thoughts in correct English, written, spelled or spoken; the heart for God, love, justice, honor, truth a[redacted]

PREACHING AT THE SACRAMENT

Preaching is a means to an end. What end? To the use of the sacraments in the Church. The Pentecostal sermon, the talk with the jailer and with the Eunuch—all led to baptism. And the Lord added to the Church daily. This was the result of Apostolic preaching.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE WORLD FOR WOMEN HAS CHANGED

The celebration of the 100th birthday anniversary of Lucy Stone on August 13th reminds us afresh how wonderfully the world for woman has changed in the course of a century. No where is this change more marked than in the realm of education. Lucy Stone, the pioneer suffragist of Massachusetts, was also the first Massachusetts woman to take a collegiate degree. Her brothers went to college, but when she expressed a wish to go, her father asked, "Is the child crazy"?

She picked berries and chestnuts and sold them to buy books. For years she taught district schools, studying and teaching alternately. At the low wages paid to women it took her nine years to earn the money to carry her to Oberlin, Ohio, then the only college in the country that admitted women. Crossing Lake Erie from Buffalo to Cleveland, she could not afford a state room, but slept on deck on a pile of grain sacks, among horses and freight, with a few other women who like herself, could only afford a "deck passage." At Oberlin she earned her way by teaching in the preparatory department of the college, and by doing house work at the Ladies' Boarding Hall at three cents an hour. Most of the students were poor, and the college furnished them board at one dollar a week; but she could not afford even this small sum, and during most of her course she cooked her food in her own room, boarding herself at less than fifty cents a week. Yet she kept healthy and happy and distinguished herself in her studies.

In college she formed a friendship with Antoinette L. Brown, who was destined to become the first ordained woman minister—a friendship cemented later in life by their marrying brothers. The young men of the class were required to hold debates as part of their college work. The girls were not allowed to debate but, were required to attend, in order to help form an audience for the boys. Lucy was intending to lecture and Antionette to preach. They begged to be allowed to debate. The professor in that department was liberal and consented. Tradition says the debate was a brilliant one; but the authorities forbade any more. Lucy and the other girls who wanted to debate persuaded an old colored woman to give them the occasional use of her small parlor. Coming by ones and twos, so as not to attract attention, they would gather there and discuss all sorts of deep and high subjects. Sometimes in summer they met in the woods. This was the first debating society ever formed among college girls.

At her graduation in 1847, Lucy was appointed to write an essay to be read at commencement, but she was notified that one of the professors would have to read it for her, as it would not be proper for a woman to read her own essay in public.

Rather than not read it herself she declined to write it.

When Oberlin celebrated its semicentennial, about forty years later, she was invited to be one of the speakers. The young women who now graduate in schools every year from a multitude of colleges, without meeting a word of criticism, have little idea of the hard path trodden by the pioneers. It is only by looking backward now and then that we realize how far we have advanced.—Editorial Boston Herald.

THINK ON THESE THINGS

By H. C. Tollman, D. D., LL. D.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report * * * think on these things."

We become what we make ourselves, and this depends largely on what we assimilate. A sculptor in the study of his model becomes like the ideal which possesses his soul. The painter of the landscape comes close to the soul of nature. The scholar approaches ever nearer to the heart of truth.

Thoughts are to the mind what food is to the body.

If we think mean thoughts, we shall become like our thoughts.

and I will show you a man who acts

Thoughts crystallize into acts and acts into character.

Show me a man who thinks of self, for self.

There is much meanness in the world, and if we search for it, and think upon it, it will ever haunt us.

The low and the small will sneak out of their hiding place and tabernacle with us.

But let a man go through the world with his eyes fixed on the stars and he will see a vision of God.

Man so often makes God like himself. A narrow man has a narrow God. A stern man has a stern God. The Pharisees were stern when they brought to Christ a woman taken in great sin. "Moses commanded us that such should be stoned." That is the law. Vast the difference between our Lord's judgment and theirs, a difference as great as between sunlight and frost. This was the verdict of a God of Love.

If we love darkness, our spiritual sight becomes darkened.

The visitor to Mammoth Cave sees in the Echo River the eyeless and colorless fish. We are told that these sightless creatures once had eyes which saw the light, that coming from the bright outside world into the stillness and eternal darkness of that cavern, which for them became a permanent home, their vision was gradually dimmed; it vanished utterly, till at length in successive generations nature itself ceased to supply the organs of sight.

This is nature's law everywhere; true not only of the physical eye, but true of the mental and spiritual eye; true of life in all its phases; true of the soul of man.

Despise with all the intensity of your mind two things, what is low and what is false; but instead of despising, learn to pity those who are low and false, for, as Sophocles says, "Such natures are for themselves the hardest to bear."

How can we get rid of the selfish, the mean, the impure? Not by driving them away, for they return. How do we make a dark room bright? Not by driving out the darkness, but by opening the shutters and letting God's sunlight stream in.

So it is with the soul. The true, the beautiful, the lovely, the pure, the holy are emanations from God which enter the heart of man if the windows of the soul are open to receive them. When Hercules wrestled with the nine-headed Hydra, Iolaus burned the wounds inflicted, for before this two new ones grew for every one which was struck off. Superficial treatment would not do. The place had to be burned with fire.

So sinful thoughts must be burned by the sun of Righteousness; yes, often by the fire of trial and affliction.

The sea mirrors the sky above it. It may reflect the dismal thunder cloud, the lurid lightning, or it may reflect the azure blue of God's fair heaven.

In the same way our lives reflect our thoughts, dismal, foul, envious; or radiant, loving, holy.

I ask that you read again the words of the Apostle, "Whatsoever things are true", etc., and that you ever "think on these things".

RED CROSS NEWS GRENADES

A number of disinfecting plants and water sterilizing outfits are being manufactured by the American Red Cross, which will turn them over to the Italian Sanitary authorities for military use.

The stripping of prisoners apparently takes place only at the front in the heat and confusion of battle. At the prisons, camp committees, appointed by the prisoners themselves, see that American prisoners receive and enjoy the supplies sent them. Each individual, moreover, returns a signed receipt card for each parcel to the American Red Cross representative at Berne.

The girls of the Smith College Relief Unit have opened a reading room for American and British soldiers. Regular visits also are paid to the American soldiers in the hospital at Beauvais. Wounded soldiers to the number of some 8,000 sometimes are fed in the course of a ten-day period. In one night the record of feeding 5,000 was made.

The American Red Cross rolling canteens in Italy recently distributed to 7,000 Italian soldiers packets containing socks, soap, cigarettes, chocolates, handkerchiefs. writing material and small mirrors and combs. Such packets will probably be distributed to some 40,000 more. They help to keep up the spirits of the fighters and are taken by the individual as evidence of America's direct participation in the war.

THE DISCIPLINE OF DISAPPOINTMENT

Some one has aptly said that "Disappointment is the grandmother of reflection", and that is only a quaint way of putting what we recognize at a second glance as a familiar truth. For, while the first result of a disappointment is likely to be sorrowful complaints and perhaps tears, a little sober afterthought often convinces us that the experience has a brighter as well as a darker side. Sometimes reflection shows us that we have been making a mountain out of a mole-hill, and that the trifle we missed was not worth making ourselves unhappy about. Sometimes we even see that what we sought was "better lost than won", and that the disappointment we wept over was even a blessing in disguise. God's greater plan for us, and for all things, is, so to speak, outside our little plans, and it is always working forward to fulfilment. Reflection may help us to understand that our failure was a concession to the success of God's wiser purpose, and that in itself ought to content us, for all God's plans are the deep-laid schemes of a loving Father for our highest good. But the most useful discipline of disappointment is to show us our own shortcomings. Perhaps our methods have been crude and faulty; perhaps we have not put our whole heart into the task before us. Nobody with a resolute spirit accepts failure tamely, and a bitter disappointment not in frequently paves the way to more successful effort.—East and West.

FOOD AND RELIGION

Today, as never before, the slogan is conservation. While there may be some question about our duty to enlist for active service at the front, there is absolutely no question about this matter of a sane and economical use of the necessities of life, and this particularly as it applies to food. But this conservation of food is not to show itself in the tendency to hoard by people who have thoughtlessly or selfishly undertaken to provide against the day of pressing need. It is a time when every man must take his chance with every other man. The ability to buy in excess of present needs is not the right to do so, especially as this imposes a hardship of the gravest kind upon those who have means sufficient for this day only. Looked at in this light, the hoarding of food is nothing less than the Turkish devastation of Armenia and the Prussian robbery of Belgium done up in the package of respectability.

On the other hand, the waste of food and the extravagant use of the staples of life can be avoided. America has been wasting fabulous sums in the food consigned to the garbage can. Under the most favorable conditions, waste is sin. Under present conditions, with part of the world starving for that which the other part casts away, it is an unspeakable crime against humanity.

THE CREED

The creed of the historic Church is a sign of unity. Therefore in public worship the Christian believer reaches his highest level of inspired emotion in the great confession of the common creed of Christendom. Then it is that he rises above himself—above his own individual experience of love, hope, aspiration, sorrow, or remorse—and links himself to the universal faith and hope of mankind. He transcends all the littlenesses of his own nature—all the limitations of his own age, with its narrow traditions, and prejiduces and ignorances.

THE FOLLY OF ESAU

He who, because of the false charms and enticing pleasures of this life, turns a deaf ear to God and duty is but another Esau traffickng away, in blind and foolish weakness, his birthright as a child of God and his inheritance to eternal life. He is as simple as the ignorant savage who barters away his store of diamonds and gold for a cheap but gaudy ribbon, or yields his freedom for a bottle of the white man's rum.

There came a time when Esau realized his folly, but could find no place for repentance, though he sought it in agony and tears. He could neither recall nor change the past, but was forced to drink, even to its bitter dregs the cup of sorrow and remorse which in heedless recklessness he had filled. Do not be an Esau.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

OPTIMISM

An able writer has said that the devils must be pessimists, because "they believe and tremble". There is no hopefulness in their belief.

There is a good deal of force in the suggestion. It shows the contrast between their condition and that of Christians. Christianity is a system of hopefulness. It is as much the duty of a Christian to have hope as it is for him to have faith. And he must manifest it on all occasions, or else what he takes in hand must fail.

There may be serious evils existing, there may be great difficulties to encounter, everything may seem to be against us. We must recognize these conditions and acknowledge the facts, but we must meet them with a counteracting influence. We must set the battle in array, confident of victory. We must know no such word as defeat. We must have ever before us the possibility and the results of success.

It was in this spirit that the Saviour entered upon His ministry, amid surroundings in every way antagonistic to His work and aims. He realized the existing conditions, but He knew the value of the soul of each man; He saw the possibilities of good in human nature; He knew the blessings that must follow obedience to His Gospel. Although He was subjected to the severest trials and bore the contradiction of sinners, He rejoiced in the sufferings; He despised the shame, and He brought the most glorious victory out of what seemed sure defeat.

Here is our example. This is the method. We may know the dark side, but we must look on the bright side. We may "be sorrowful but always rejoicing". Hopelessness never helped on any good work. Hopefulness always helps.

Has not the Saviour established His Church on earth and given it His promise that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it?" Shall His followers preach another gospel?

Is it not true that "he who now goeth on his way weeping, and bearing forth good seed, shall doubtless come again with joy and bring his sheaves with him?"

The fact is, there is no place in the Christian Church or in the Christian ranks for those who are constantly looking "on the dark side". Christianity is an inspiration, and "blue talk" never inspires, unless perchance it creates such contempt for the speaker that the determination for greater zeal takes possession of the mind and heart. In the darkest hour of the battle field the general brings out the best fighting qualities of every man by some word of encouragement and some deed of valor. So must it ever be in the armies of Christ, if we would "fight a good fight". Christians must be optimists.

HOLY PLACES

Not religion only, but human nature itself, demands the setting apart of sacred places and of places appointed for special uses and services. Reverence of manner, devotion of heart and voice, sacredness of place, God commands and man demands, if the best within us is to be fed and nourished and the noblest part of us is to survive and grow. The gifts and graces ministered by churches, erected, consecrated, used, subserve the glory of God and the good of men. They help man to discharge duty, for man's moral task in this world is summed up not in "the survival of the fittest", but in the effort to fit as many as possible to survive. And if gifts and graces center themselves in the church building as a storehouse, ready to be contributed and distributed as helps and blessings to brother men, we that are within may well join in the glad and grateful cry, "Master, it is good for us to be here"—Bishop Tuttle

CARDINAL VIRTUES

The real rank of four virtues—prudence, justice, courage and temperance—if they are to be called "virtues"—is properly expressed by the term "cardinal". They are virtues of the compass—those by which all others are directed and strengthened. They are not the greatest virtues, but the restraining or modifying virtues; thus prudence restrains zeal, justice restrains mercy, fortitude and temperance guide the entire system of the passions; and thus understood, these virtues properly assume their peculiar leading or guiding position in the system of Christian ethics.—Ruskin.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. No. 91. HOBART, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 28, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

"Have you trouble meeting your apportionment? The man who KNOWS gives," says The Spirit of Missions.

Leaders in the Roman Catholic Church see to it that ecclesiastical events of general interest are given wide publicity. It is the modern way of going out into the city streets and country lanes and compelling the people to come into the Lord's House. At the eighth annual convention of the Roman Catholic Press Association, held at Denver, Col., a movement was started to raise an endowment fund of $1,000,000 to establish a publicity service department.

December 1-5, 1918, is the time fixed for the Church-wide Woman's Auxiliary war work Advent Call to prayer and service.

Under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions of the Missionary District of Spokane, a meeting was held in the Cathedral at Spokane, Wash., on Tuesday, the 10th inst. ,at which addresses were given by Miss Tillotson, one of the secretaries of the Auxiliary to the General Board, New York, and Miss Allison of Ohio. The speakers outlined plans for Church work to be carried on throughout the country in war service at cantonments.

The first service of the Church ever held in Flint, Texas, was conducted there on Sunday, the 15th inst., by the Rev. Fuller Swift, rector of St. Clement's Church, El Paso, who was accompanied by the choir, the vestrymen and other members of St. Clement's parish.

A beautiful new rectory has been completed at Niobrara, Neb., and is now occupied by the Rev. R. A. Crickmer, rector of the local parish, and his family. The building and lots were given to the parish by Miss Aldrich of New York, in memory of her aunt, the late Mrs. Perry.

A meeting of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, Diocese of Central New York, was held on Thursday, the 12th inst., at St. Paul's Church, Syracuse. Mrs. Goodale, of Watertown, the Diocesan President, presided. Plans were formulated to participate in the Advent Call, when an effort will be made to arouse and deepen the spiritual life of the women of the American Church.

The General Synod of the English Church in Canada was held at Toronto beginning on Wednesday, September 11th. Bishop Darlington, of Harrisburg, and Bishop McCormick of Western Michigan, represented the American Church and brought greetings to the Synod.

A service of more than passing interest was held at St. Luke's Church, Pawtucket, R. I., on Sunday morning, September 25th, when an American flag was raised on a forty-foot pole, in front of the church. After the flag was unfurled the service was held in the open space back of the church, where a large platform had been erected and tastefully decorated. A choir of 200 voices rendered the music.

About three thousand persons were in attendance, including members of twenty-five local fraternal organizations, the Boy Scouts, the mayor of the city and other officials. The flag was presented to the parish by Mrs. John Hague. The Rev. Dr. Arthur J. Watson, the rector, made a stirring patriotic address.

A dedicatory service of the parish Honor Roll" was held at Grace Church, West Farms, New York City, recently, when the Rector, the Rev. Albert E. Bentley, preached a patriotic sermon, in the course of which he said: "Even pacifists agree that human nature reached some of the loftiest heights in war. Not all is brutality. Most of the brutality that is exhibited in war has its origin in the cold intellects and stony hearts of men who direct wars from their comfortable offices, and who never have known what it is to stand knee deep in freezing mud in trenches, or to stand on deck of a man-of-war as it plows through wintry seas on stormy nights. Most of the heroism,—practically all of the heroism—of the war is exhibited by the men who fight, and by our noble mothers who suffer. They are the living sacrifices, and God will not forget them."

Education is one of America's primary convictions" asserts truthfully the Rev. Dr. Jackson of Fall River, Mass. "One of the fundamental influences has been the emphasis placed upon education of all the citizens at the public expense. Today we again appreciate the wisdom of our pioneers. Democracy demands education; without it, the popular will is quickly led to the destruction of the democratic ideals. Religious education is growing to be another conviction to thinking Americans. Thoughtful leaders are now planning a system of training in religion which will be worthy and adequate. The educational ideal should determine all the work of every parish. The Church school is our chief means toward the educational aim."

Sunday, September 15th, was kept as a special day throughout in Grace Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., for it was the sixty-fifth anniversary of the Church's opening. A large and representative gathering of the different Parish organizations was present at the early celebration of the Holy Communion. In the morning prayer service the Church school attended in a body and united with a number of the parishioners. The rector, the Rev. William Porkess, preached a special sermon commemorative of the event. From Grace Church two have gone into the ministry of the Episcopal Church. A Y. M. C. A. worker and a gradaute nurse, members of the parish are now in France, in addition to a good sized list of young men serving their country.

A retreat for the clergy of the Diocese of Chicago will be conducted by Bishop Griswold at the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Chicago, beginning on Monday, September 30th, and closing on Friday, October 4th.

BISHOP TUTTLE VISITS MONTANA.

"A famous early Churchman of Montana is at Butte on a visit," says the Helena, Montana, Record, under date of September 12th, "the Rt. Rev. Dr. Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, Bishop of Missouri, and Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church of the United States. On next Sunday he will be present at both services in St. John's Church accompanied by Bishop Faber. It will be a meeting of the first Bishop and the one who has taken the place after the lapse of many years, with only one Bishop between, the late Bishop Brewer. Bishop Tuttle was the pioneer head of the Episcopal Church in Montana when this state was a missionary district and long before it became a diocese. Bishop Brewer succeeded him and held the place for years and saw the Church grow from a missionary district to a diocese. On his death, Bishop Faber, who was Coadjutor, suceeded him."

HELLENIC-AMERICAN LOYALTY MEETING.

Participated in by Archbishop Meletios, of Athens, and Bishop Griswold, of Chicago.

Archbishop Meletios, Metropolitan of Athens, Greece, was given a royal welcome at a great loyalty mass meeting held at the Auditourium Theater, Chicago, on Sunday evening, September 22nd, and delivered the principal address. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Illinois State Council of Defense and the Hellenic Central Executive Committee, comprising the Greek churches and all Greek societies of the city. In the front row of chairs on the stage were seated those who took part in the program, including His Grace, the Archbishop; the Rt. Rev. Dr. Sheldon M. Griswold, Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Chicago, who delivered a greeting from the American Anglican Church of his Diocese; the Very Rev. Alexander Papadopoulus, Secretary of the Holy Synod; the Rev. Frs. Lazaris and Kallimachus, and Mr. Alivisatos of the ministry of education of Greece; the Rev. C. H. Demetry, who gave the Invocation; Mr. Peter S. Lambros, a prominent American of the Chicago Greek community, who aroused much enthusiasm by his pungent patriotic utterances; the Hon. S. K. Pezas, General Consul of Greece, who delivered his message of greeting in his native tongue, and commanded the undivided attention of the audience. Judge John P. McGoorty presided. Every reference of the several speakers to the American flag, the President, and eminent citizens of the United States of the past and present, was enthusiastically applauded. The audience could not give full expression to their feelings by the ordinary method of hand-clapping, but would frequently rise to their feet and indulge in the waving of hands and hats and handkerchiefs. The response to the announcement made by the Archbishop that word had just been received that Nazareth, the boyhood home of the Saviour of the world, had been taken from the Turk by our allies, was thrilling.

There were about three thousand men and women in the audience, and on the stage back of those who participated in the program some two hundred representatives of the Greek race ,either by birth or extraction, American citizens for the most part, and several clergymen of the Anglican communion.

The presence of his Grace and so many ecclesiastics gave a decided religious tone to the meeting.

The Archbishop is making a tour of the United States, visiting the principal centers of population, not only as a representative of the Holy Synod of Greece, but also as the accredited representative of the great premier of his country, Venizelos, and is authorized to bring to the American people, and especially of the Hellenic group, greetings from his government, and a message of good will to all who are making a contribution to the great cause of freedom against the Prussian armies. He is a man of striking and winning personality — humble, spiritually-minded, a great linguist and scholar. He spoke in his native tongue. Democracy was his theme. Greece and people of the Hellenic race must actively support the Allies, and autocracy must forever be banished from the earth. The Metropolitan left no room for question as to where his sympathies are in the great war.

Bishop Griswold, in well-chosen words, welcomed his Grace to Chicago on behalf of the Diocese, and paid a high tribute to the large contribution Greece had made to the religious, political, philosophical, literary life, and in art to the world. He spoke immediately before the Metropolitan. "Very little has been left for me to say," said the Bishop, touching upon the contribution Greece has made to the world in the fields of art,, literature, philosophy and democracy. "But the biggest debt the world owes to Greece has not been mentioned by the speakers who preceded me—the gift of the only language in which accurate expression could be given to Christian theology. We must stand here strongly," asserted the Bishop, "as men of God, not only to make the world fit for freemen to live in, but also to make free men fit to live."

The meeting was altogether a mutual admiration Hellenic-American gathering.

A BISHOP'S WAR ACTIVITIES

Work of Bishop Darlington Highly Commended by Eminent Men

The Hon. W. Frank James, representative in the U. S. Congress from the 12th district, Michigan, in a recent speech before the House referred in a complimentary way to a pamphlet written by Bishop Darlington, and circulated by thousands among the German-speaking population of Pennsylvania, New York and other states. This was issued while the United States were still neutral, and was designed to show the German-American that the tie to Germany by language was not so strong as the ties of religion, justice and honor which bind all Germans in America to the United States, if it should enter the war, and to Great Britain, France and Italy, which were already engaged in the combat. The German language newspapers in this country at that time were practically all pro-German, and Bishop Darlington's leaflet in the German language was probably the first widely circulated printed matter to oppose the views of the pan-Germans. He received letters of thanks for it from the Archbishop of Canterbury, Sir Gilbert Parker and others of England, and from President Poincaire, of France, through Minister Ribot and Consul Liebert, of New York, and also from Ambassador Jusserand, of Washington. Dr. Odell, in the Atlantic Monthly, when he faulted the clergy for not being patriotic, probably never heard of this pamphlet, or of Bishop Darlington's many other war activities. He is head of the Serbian Church Relief Fund of America, was special appointee with Rabbi Wise and Father Clifford, to receive formally the Alsace-Loraine delegation when it arrived in this country, and was selected by the Greeks to receive Archbishop Meletius, Metropolitan of Athens, and his attendant representatives of the Synod, in Carnegie Hall, New York, Saturday night, Sept. 14, with the Rev. Mr. Lacy and Father Dabovitch, Serbian Archimandrite, and his chaplains.

War Poems Widely Circulated.

Bishop Darlington's fugitive poems on the war have also had wide circulation through the New York Times and the New York Herald, from which they have been copied in many parts of the United States and Canada. On August 5, 1918, the anniversary of Great Britain's entry into the war, he secured a meeting of the American Order of Cincinnati, the Sons of the Revolution and the Sons of the American Revolution in Frances Tavern, New York, where Washington bade farewell to his ocicers. He secured over sixty signatures, including those of ex-President Roosevelt, ex-President Taft, ex-Justice Hughes, Governor Whitman and others, to a cablegram of congratulation to David Lloyd George, which was answered the next day by the English Prime Minister. The resolutions have since been handsomely engrossed in book form and sent to London for preservation. As July 4th is American Independence Day, the Bishop suggested that August 4th should be celebrated hereafter on both sides of the Atlantic as "Dependence Day," showing that England can be depended upon to keep her treaties to little Belgium and the world, evidencing the interdependence of our two great nations.

The verses, as published in the New York Times, follow:

Independence and Dependence Days.
Philadelphia, July 4, 1776.
London, August 4, 1914.

In seventeen hundred and seventy-six, in Independence Hall,
The old Bell Ringer pulled the rope which told the news to all:
The Declaration, just then signed, convinced a waiting world
Our flag of thirteen stars and stripes for Freedom was unfurled—
That, rid of every outside rule, our rights we would maintain.
Faint hearts took courage in all lands when this word crossed the main.

In nineteen hundred and fourteen, on August fourth, you joined the war,
Defending oath-bound treaties and brave Belgium to restore.
Your Fourth is now Dependence Day, a day of noble worth,
We then but freed America—we'll soon free all the earth.
While truth is truth, and right is right, Hun lines shall not prevail;
God and my right your motto—our cause shall never fail.

We forged the first link in the chain to free ourselves and land.
France, our ally, the next link forged when she broke from tyrant's hand.
You wrought the third link when you thus this holy war began.
You shed your blood for others—for us and every man.
We fought you in the olden days, as brothers sometimes do.
Dependence Day has shown to us the praise that is your due.

With literature and language one, we sing the same loved songs,
For Shakespeare, Milton, Tennyson—each name to us belongs.
Our Washington and Lincoln are revered and praised by both,
With mingled blood in France today we pledge eternal truth.

Past doubts are gone forever, and all rivalry is done;
Henceforth, through war's dread cost, we face the future—ONE.

In his speech Representative James said:

"One of the best articles, stating why Germans by adoption and ancestry, should fight for this country, was written by Bishop J. H. Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg, Penn. This was circulated among Germans of Pennsylvania and adioining states and had much to do with the change of sentiment there.

He expressed the sentiment of us all when he said, "Many in this country are joined by the strong tie of kindred and ancestral love to the Fatherland, but this should not blind them to the fact that RIGHT IS RIGHT, and that right is often the direct of might. We should wish the right to win, so that peace may be soon and permanently "established upon the best and surest foundations." When the war party, now in control in Germany and Austria, is succeeded by the rational people taking their rightful leadership, there will be lasting peace, which, pray God, may never be broken again in the world's history."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

ST. MICHAEL AND ALL ANGELS

September 29.

By the Rev. Francis S. White.

The Collect.

O Everlasting God, who hast ordained and constituted the services of Angels and men in a wonderful order; Mercifully grant that, as Thy holy Angels always do Thee service in heaven, so, by Thy appointment, they may succor and defend us on earth; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"To Thee all Angels cry aloud the heavens and all the powers therein. To Thee Cherubim and Seraphim continually do cry, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth." A serving Church is a worshipping and worshipful Church. A singing Church should be a militant Church. A militant Church is the same thing as a missionary Church, provided it fights with the help of the Angels. Just what the Angels are and just how they are "ordered" we are not explicitly told, but we read of their existence in the Book of Realities. Therefore, our part is to accept them and to live daily in conscious recognition of their place in the scheme of things.

"A wonderful order." 'The proper study of mankind is man," said Pope in an age when it was fashionable to make quips about God. We have grown since that phrase was written. The whole creation is the proper study of mankind, and creation begins at genus without species and ends with species without genus. The nearer in our thought life we approach God, the Creator, the more real do Angels seem; and the more humble is our own estimate of ourselves. "A vision of Angels" has come to more than one of the saints of God. To recognize that they and we are part and parcel of the same order of created things is what makes the order a "wonderful order"; and the problem of becoming saints a stimulating process. Who can tell in the day's work of spiritual development what Angelic ministration may come to us?

A Practical Supplication.

This day's prayer, we note, is a more practical sort of supplication. Its phrases are pregnant with stimulus if we have any imagination to quicken them into life. Think of this one:

"As Thy holy Angels always do Thee service in heaven." When the Angels begin a work for the Everlasting God they keep it up until it is finished. No let up or let down in Angelic service; no self-exercise nor procrastinating, nor shifting of responsibility, nor dodging responsibility. A holy Angel at work is worth thinking about There is service or work going on in heaven. Heaven is not a place where spiritual loungers go around in trailing clouds of glory. At their work they sing. Heaven is a bright place, a joyous place, but evidently it is no place for a drone. The Angels always do God service in heaven. And the next food for our thought is found in the words, "So may they succour and defend us on earth." Evidently heaven and earth are close enough so that they can be full of God's glory: What brightness it brings into life to think of the Angels as near enough to succor near enough to defend. Wherever there is danger there are the Angels ready to help those who believe in a religion of the supernatural; wherever there is an agony there can the angels come to strengthen those who pray while in that agony. When men and women turn from sin to repentance, instantly there are those who speed with the good news to celestial places. One perceives the Angelic ministry, one does not see it. There are no winged beings visible to the optic nerve, but there are moments when one realizes that something not "of the earth earthy" has come to the rescue, has averted the evil or the harm. And this angelic service for man, for you and for me, is done by "appointment." God has His eye upon us, and His ear is "open to our complaint." The Church that keeps this truth living in the pews is a Church where holy Angels are thought of with love and gladness; and little children are not afraid to venture, but learn to come in and out of its portals with a reverent confidence born of knowledge that nothing therein will hurt them, because there one is looked after by the Holy Angels whom God appoints to care for them. "By thy appointment" makes the religion of the supernatural a very stimulating religion. It keeps a man from becoming a fatalist. It enriches the routine day of the humblest kind of workers and gives them the ability to dignify their work as being done with the help and co-operation of the unseen, which, after all, is the real and the worth-while part of life. Teach the little children to live this prayer and when they are come to years of discretion the religion of the supernatural will be for them the most natural thing in all the world.

For the Epistle. Rev. xii. 7.

There was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. And they overcame them by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death. Therefore, rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

"War in heaven!" Heaven is that state, place, condition where there is the possibility of doing something more than play harps and sing hosannas: although the singing and the fighting spirit are not alien and hostile spirits. "War in heaven" as St. John saw it was a conflict where the father of lies, who is the maker and lover of lies, struggles to make the real things and issues of life appear unreal. Heaven, whatever else it does or does not mean, stands as a harbor for reality.

"Who is like God?" is the translation of St. Michael's name. And when you have gotten so that what St. Michael's name stands for is worth fighting for, you are pretty near heaven, where the unrealities of the temporal life can no longer deceive you.

"Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of God, and the power of his Christ." These are the things that the Missionary Church has to offer men; and they are things connected with supernatural religion, for they concern the workings of the supernatural in a life where the "natural" is often thought of as the only thing worth fighting for. "Salvation" is a state of religious being. "I thank God that He hath called me to this state of salvation," called me to be through baptism a member of Christ, His child, and inheritor of the Kingdom of heaven; growing up with the Angels to guard me and help me; yes, watching me at the same time they are beholding the face of my Father in heaven.

Teach the children about the Angels, help them to understand that salvation is growing up in the sight of God and the Angels in the same way they are growing up in the sight of men. Teach the children that in this state of salvation they get "strength" from God in just the same way that they get strength for their bodies, by exercise and work and study and play. And remember that to be a good teacher you must be able to exemplify what you impart, and therefore so strive that you may be strong in the strength which God supplies through His eternal Son.

The Kingdom of God Is Come.

"Now is come the Kingdom of our God." St. John heard this proclaimed by a loud voice. It is the battle cry of the shepherds of the sheep. It is the rallying cry for those who have learned to test the strength of the supernatural life. "Thy Kingdom come." Oh, if it only would come! Note that even St. John in his vision did not dream that the kingdom has come. No! it IS come. Every little child that resists temptations helps the coming, every grown man who works for the realization of this petition which Jesus puts in his mouth helps the coming of the Kingdom of God. "The evangelization of the world now," in this, my generation! Does not the very saying of the phrase move you, thrill you? Think of having a vital and necessary part in the program headed, "NOW is come the Kingdom of God!" "And the power of His Christ." If there is no power in the religious world today the fault is not with the Source but with the receivers who lack transmission facilities, having grounded their spiritual wires. In other words, the Church, which has crowded out the Angels has crowded out "the power of His Christ," for wherever Christ breaks into the history of man always will you find the Angels. His religion is a supernatural religion; His power is a supernatural power; his Church is a supernatural Church, and for that reason they are the only real religion, power and church. Beware of the Church that scoffs at the Angels. War in heaven includes for the victorious ones, use of the Blood of the Lamb; and the ability not to lose their lives unto the death. That Church only will prevail that adheres to the Blood of the Lamb: that exacts the pouring of that Blood into the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, thus letting the loving actions of the members speak louder than their words of testimony.

"The devil hath but a short time." True! but he has time enough to drag you into hell, and through you wreck your parish church, if you do love your own life and are silent when your testimony is needed, and have no power of Christ to resist temptation and do nothing to bring about the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven. Learn to recognize Angels, otherwise it is possible for the devil to deceive even you.

The Gospel. St. Matt. xviii. 1.

At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And who shall receive one such little child in My name receiveth Me. But who shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh! wherefore if thy hand or foot ocend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire. Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.

"Now is come the Kingdom of our God," and the greatest one in it is as the little child whose companions are the Angels and other little children. The natural man has got to be converted to the supernatural before the Kingdom of God will mean anything much to him. When the "wise man" in the eyes of the thoughtless world can bring himself to that place where he can become as receptive and perceptive as a child, then that man is beginning to tread on holy ground. Philosophical language does not make nor keep men Christians. Most philosophers cannot explain what they mean after the fire of their thought has died into the ashes of their words. In a very real way the Gospel is and must be a simple Gospel. It must be plain and so real that a little child fresh from the teachings of a pious mother's heart can live it and love it.

"Who shall receive one such little child": The true Missionary Church makes wise and wide provision for the child life in its vicinity, and the more the Church shows its belief in Angels the more will little children love it and flock to it. Children and Angels go together; so when one causes a little child to go wrong, he not only harms the child, but he insults God and humiliates the Angels. The terrible thing about the devil is that he can fool and blind people so that they do not see how disbelief in Angels makes it very easy to cause little ones to stumble.

"If thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off." The Missionary Church has a message that cuts deep. Tenderness for a sinning soul, but severity with one's self. Mutilation is a dreadful act to contemplate, but better the shame of an outward deformity than the burning fires of remorse over the effects of deeds which can never be undone. If the Angels had been real to us in earlier years, it is more than likely that many deeds which caused others to stumble would never have been committed by us.

Christians Are Guilty of Much Offense to God and Man.

"Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones." The words of Jesus should cut their message into our inmost thought. "Take heed!" How heedless we are in much that concerns our religious life. We go about our ways, neglecting our prayers, heedless of other people's prayers—noisy, boisterous, rude, almost deserving the application "despise," though shrinking from its application to our attitude as Christians. But despise these little ones is often a true description of us: for many of us have limited the words "little ones" to those who are children in years, seemingly forgetful of the multitudes who are children in the experience of life. Christians in so-called heathen lands are guilty of much offense to God and man in this particular respect. Those Americans, so-called, are worthy of this Gospel-woe, who are so openly and obviously superior to or even contemptuous of the children of alien races who have come to live as our neighbors in this land of the free—very obviously forgetting that Angels are not racial any more than God is racial. Although there are evidences in the Bible that God has appointed Angelic guardians for the nations of the world. So let us remember that it might be better for us as a nation never to have come into existence, if we are to despise the rights and aims of the little nations of the world. St. Michael and All Angels Day has much to teach us. Let us not relegate it to the garret of neglected duties and teachings, for it has a very real lesson for us who live in a day when men are once again beginning to realize that the supernatural is after all the only real thing in all this wondrous universe.

THE VISION SPLENDID.

By John Oxenham.

Is the outcome of this latest world tragedy to be loss or gain? Under God it rests with ourselves.

The greatest world tragedy of all ended on the Cross, in what, to men of those days, seemed absolute loss; but that apparent loss has become life's greatest gain.

So far, the world's loss in material things in this war does not bear brooding upon. But even there in the apparent loss is not all loss. Our men, we know, are not lost except for a brief space to us who are left. To themselves, the gain of their translation is good to think upon. The minor loss, in treasure of all kinds, may prove gain if it bring us perforce to simpler living. And—the soul of the world has been shocked at last into true understanding of the inevitable and dire results of purely materialistic aims. It has seen the soul of a great nation deliberately self-poisoned at the fount by the worship of a false ideal. The one great loss to the world so far is the loss of the German soul. Time and the will thereto, may repair even that.

But, in certain directions, we are, most of us, conscious of some gain. The heroism of our men has been rivalled by the heroic endurance with which those at home have borne their losses. It is wonderful. It is magnificent.

Bruised and broken hearts are nearer and dearer to God than self-sufficient and self-satisfied ones. We have, most of us, felt ourselves, as never before, in the hands of God. And that is undoubted good. Amid all the horrors and confusions of these terrible times, the soul of life is groping back to the elementals and fundamentals as the only truly stable things left.

Much that we held essential has vanished in the fiery furnace. But, in the old story, it was in the fiery furnace that the Son of God was discovered walking with the captives; and the bonds which had bound them had disappeared in the flames and they were free men. God grant that that analogy holds true, and that we come forth from this furnace of affliction freed of our bonds and walking visibly, like them, with the Son of God.

If that be ours, then the new life after the war will be regulated on the broad basis of the best for each and all, and all the forces of reaction which strive against them will have to go. Right will rule.

If this fierce flame free us from the ruinous curse of drink, from the cancer of immorality, from the unhealthy housing-systems both in town and country, and gives us a fairer apportionment of the necessaries of life, a living wage to all workers, leasure to enjoy, and opportunities to possess and progress, it will have done much. If it level the dividing walls, and result in a Pact of nations which will insure Peace for all time, it will have done everything. This, our great sacrifice will then be turned to everlasting gain.

The wheels of life were skidding on the greasy ways of wealth and ease. We were leaving God out. This from which we are suffering is our own incurring.

God's Law is Right: right doing, righteousness. Who breaks, pays, in this as well as in all other laws, but most inevitably in this. We broke, in permitting amongst us and elsewhere, without protest, that which made for evil. We are paying. It is not punishment, but the simple righteous working of Inviolable Law.

And now, having paid in blood and tears and bitterness of woe now, with the spirit of God in us, with enlightened souls and widened hearts; we may look forward to the Vision Splendid of a new-made world.

Not only may,—we must! Every act is fruit of a thought. If we no not think good, we cannot act good. If we do not think deeply now, on that to which we hope to attain, we shall not be ready to act good when the time comes. The attainment may be delayed and discounted.

So, to the Vision Splendid of a world in which God and Right shall reign supreme, and may we all live to see it realized!

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER.

A Baptismal Prayer.

By Dean Rousmaniere.

Almighty and Merciful Father, we bless Thee for all Thy good gifts to us, Thy children. We bless Thee for the power to gladden one another by the warmth of love and the truth and tenderness of friendship. For the love given to us in our youth, for a father's watchfulness and a mother's care, we bless them. Freely we have received, freely may we give. Show us the light of Thy countenance in the face, little children, for they are Thy sacrament of innocence by which we may behold the King in His beauty. Let them remind us of whatsoever things are true, lovely and of good report, that we may trust in those things to do them.

By this water of baptism, we have recognized these children as Thine, made in Thy image, capable of that eternal life, "which is to know Thee and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent," and we have received them into the congregation of Christ's flock. So by the same sign we gratefully consecrate them to Thy obedient service. Let Thy fatherly hand, we beseech Thee, ever be over them, let Thy Holy Spirit ever be with them." May these parents so learn of Thee that they may rightly guide and teach the children whom Thou hast given them. May these children so grow in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man that they may lead all who love them to love Thee with heart and soul and mind. And we pray Thee, increase and multiply upon us all Thy mercy, that Thou, being our ruler and guide, we may so pass through things temporal that we lose not the things eternal. Grant this, O heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, our Lord. Amen.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

FIRST PAPER.

INTRODUCTORY.

The average layman is interested in the proposed revision of the Book of Common Prayer. The clergy have, in the main, already given the changes adopted by the last General Convention careful study, but so far nothing has been provided in the form of a simple treatment of the whole subject, considering the proposed changes seriatim and written in plain language for the information of the busy layman whose technical knowledge of liturgies is necessarily limited but whose love for and devotion to the Book of Common prayer are as marked as the love and devotion of the clergyman or the liturgical scholar.

At the request of the Bishop and of the Editors of The Witness this series of Notes on Prayer Book Revision has been compiled, and put in simple form for general reading, from an essay read by the author before the Atlanta (Georgia) Clerics.

The Book of Common Prayer now in use in the Church is known as the 1892 Book, because it was finally adopted and authorized by the General Convention held in the year 1892.

Method of Revising Prayer Book.

All changes in the Prayer Book are subject to Canonical regulation. It may be well, therefore, at the outset to state clearly just the method by which alterations and additions may be made.

Article X. of the Constitution of the Church, which refers to the Book of Common Prayer, reads in part as follows:

". . . . no alteration thereof or addition thereto shall be made unless the same shall be first proposed in one triennial meeting of the General Convention, and by a resolve thereof sent within six months to the Secretary of the Convention of every Diocese, to be made known by the Diocesan Convention at its next succeeding triennial meeting by majority of the whole number of Bishops entitled to vote in the House of Bishops, and by a majority of the House of Deputies voting by Orders."

The only exception to the above quoted law governing Prayer Book revision is in the case of amending the Table of Lessons, for which permission is granted to amend by a majority vote at any meeting of the General Convention without waiting for action until three years after the amendment is proposed.

The Proposed Alterations and Additions now before the Church for consideration and for action by each Diocese, is that portion of the Report of the Joint Commission on the Book of Common Prayer appointed by the General Convention of 1913 and adopted by the General Convention of 1916.

Some of the people are greatly exercised because, as they declare, "The Prayer Book is to be changed again, and just as we are becoming attached to the present Book. Such apprehensions are groundless. It will be a long time before the next, the final, revision is completed, and the next revised Prayer Book formally adopted and authorized for use. Practically six years have passed since the first official move was made looking toward another revision of the Book of Common Prayer, and so far we have touched but the smallest portion of the Report of the Commission, and that, the part about which there is likely to be the least discussion.

So much for the subject of Prayer Book revision in general. Let us see now just how the present alterations and additions finally reached the various Dioceses.

Revision of Prayer Book Authorized.

The movement for a further revision of our Prayer Book was officially brought before the Church by the adoption of a resolution upon the subject by the General Convention of 1913.

The definite wording of the resolution and the specific purpose it is to fulfill are of so great importance in this discussion that it may be well to quote the resolution in full:

"Resolved: That a joint Commission consisting of seven Bishops, seven Presbyters, and seven laymen be appointed to consider and report to the next General Convention such revision and enrichment of the Prayer Book as will adapt it to present conditions, if, in their judgment, such revision be necessary; provided, that no proposition involving the Faith and Doctrine of the Church shall be considered or reported upon by the Commission; and provided, that no proposal to change the title-page of the Prayer Book or the Name of the Church shall be referred to said Committee."

The Joint Committee as appointed under the above resolution of the General Convention held its first meeting in New York in April, 1914, and elected as its chairman the Right Reverend the Bishop of Pittsburgh. After faithful and painstaking work the Commission finally reported to the General Convention of 1916. The Schedule or Report of Proposed Changes covered more than 170 pages of printed matter. Of this Report the General Convention, after discussion and with certain changes, adopted about 30 pages of the Commission's Report, leaving practically 150 pages for the consideration of future Conventions, in addition to the final disposition of the small part accepted by the last General Convention.

In the paper next week we shall begin the examination of alterations and additions as adopted by the last General Convention and upon which our Diocesan Conventions must pass.

RED CROSS HOME SERVICE INSTITUTES.

To equip more workers with fundamentals for Red Cross Home Service, another series of Home Service Institutes, or "Plattsburgs," have been planned by the Department of Civilian Relief, Lake Division, American Red Cross.

Need for the new series of institutes may be seen in a recent report of this department in which it was shown that the number of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky families of soldiers and sailors assisted by chapter Home Service workers had grown to more than 13,000 a month. This number, it is pointed out, will greatly increase as more and more men are selected for military service.

Institutes are to be opened at Columbus, Sept. 23; at Cleveland, Oct. 15, and at Cincinnati, Nov. 5. A few days ago, Sept. 19, the first of the new series was opened at Indianapolis. All are made possible by the joint co-operation of universities and social agencies, in the cities in which they are held, with the Red Cross.

Each course consumes six weeks and includes twenty-four lectures with collateral reading and weekly conferences, together with 150 hours of field work, supervised by social agencies. Enrollment is limited, varying from twenty to twenty-five pupils to each institute.

Facts about War Risk Insurance, about Allotments and Allowances, about conducting an information service, about industrial problems due to the pressure of the war, about juvenile delinquency, about home dietetics—these are among the important subjects taught at these institutes as part of the American Red Cross pledge to sustain the soldiers' morale in camps and overseas by helping their families at home.

It demoralizes life and religion to believe that God does not desire the happiness of His creatures, just as surely as it demoralizes life and religion to imagine that He has no higher aim for them than that they should be happy.—Hugh Black.

CARRY ON

The Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman.

"No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

No man or leader ever so utterly and completely disesteemed the inconstant, the vacillating and the wavering as did Jesus Christ. He always dealt with life's positives and its affirmatives. There is something splendid about His unfailing perseverance in the face of all obstacles. We like the expression, "He set his face to go up to Jerusalem."

In all His dealings with men, especially with His disciples, He seeks to inspire them with a reasonable enthusiasm, a positive conviction, and an unwavering purpose. A doubting Thomas He makes an apostle of glorious power and martyr-like spirit. An impulsive and uncertain Simon He makes a Petros, a stone of adamant, impossible of dislodgment. He transforms the fanaticism and unreasoning zeal of Saul of Tarsus into the intelligent positiveness and heroic enthusiasm of Paul, the mighty apostle. What a magnificent evidence of this we have when the brutal Nero attempts to silence this hero of the cross; from his prison he cries in triumphant tones, "I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," and the enthusiasm of his zeal stirs even the household of the voluptuous emperor.

Desultory and indifferent as many of our modern tendencies are, capricious and mercurial as the present age may be, the world at large has a deep and unfailing admiration for the man or woman, who, with stout perseverance and in the face of all difficulties, prosecutes with indomitable energy, some definite purpose. It is not the man with the hoe, but the man with the plough who challenges our attention and admiration.

Balzac once said, "Genius is intensity." Yes, it is intensity, plus determination and perseverance. I will is the word of power. I can't is the word of weakness and despair. It's some Field, making several ineffective and immensely costly attempts to lay his cable that two continents may be intimately related, who wins ultimately the world's applause and its lasting gratitude. It's some Webster working 36 years on his dictionary; some Edward Gibbon spending 20 years on his Roman history; some Robert Louis Stevenson struggling against physical infirmities to complete his work, that leaves behind a monumemnt of enduring value and greatness.

Today the triumphant and irresistible slogan of the trenches is, "Carry On." A distinguished modern writer has said: "There are three kinds of people in the world: the wills, the won'ts, and the can'ts." We recall that Edward Irving wrote on the front page of his Greek Lexicon, "6 A. M. I, Edward Irving, promise by the grace of God to have mastered all the words in Alpha and Beta before 8 o'clock." He added later, "8 A. M. I, Edward Irving, by the grace of God have done it."

In no sphere of our life does the desultory tendency disclose itself more completely than in our religious habits and practices. We begin the life of faith with fine enthusiasm and splendid determination, only to find at length that we lack both conviction and perseverance. Our spiritual plowshare rusts in the furrow, our hands grow weary, and we lose our zest.

How unlike the Master we are. He saw at he end of His way the cross; yes, He saw it from the beginning, but it never gave Him pause nor, indeed, did its shadow for an instant cause Him to hesitate. Men thought when they lifted Him up upon the tree and when they heard His last cry that they had closed His career. Had they? It had only begun, and from the cross His sceptered hands have come to rule the world.

To learn early in life the lesson He taught, means, even in the face of every obstacle, to equip oneself for every emergency or exigency, and to come at length at the end of the road, not to defeat, but to flaming and glorious success.—Courtesy Minneapolis Tribune.

---

o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o
o o
o There is no beautifier of com- o
o plexion, or form, or behavior, o o like the wish to scatter joy and o o not pain around you."—Emer- o o son. o
o o
o o o o o o o o o o o o o o o

The Advent Call to Sleeping Virgins

The officers and members of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions in the Diocese of Southern Ohio, have been preparing for some time past to respond to the Church-wide War Advent Call to prayer and service, under the efficient and earnest leadership of Miss Elizabeth Matthews, Diocesan President. The Church Messenger, the official organ of the Diocese and the Bishops, calls attention to the importance of carrying out the plans of the women of the Church in a stirring editorial, as follows:

Our forefathers had a prescience of the greatness of our country when they drew the reverse of the Great Seal of the United States of America. There may be seen a pyramid on whose base is inscribed the date "1776." It is founded upon a substratum of rock, and rises upward step by step, but the last stone shows it to be unfinished. It is not a perfect pyramid, for the top is flat. But above it, suspended in the air is a triangle, inclosing an all-seeing eye, from which radiate, in all directions, shafts of light, while circling the whole is the motto, "Annuit Coeptus," "He hath favored our beginning."

The meaning is obvious, that the nation, no less than the individual, is complete only in Him, the despised triangular stone which has become the head of the corner of a redeemed humanity. The triangle is the symbol of the Trinity, and in Jesus Christ dwells all the fulness of the Godhead. Then He is the Light of the world, and so the guiding eye of the nations. But He who said to His redeemed, "I am the light of the world," also said to them, "Ye are the light of the world;" and in that connection, too, "Ye are the salt of the earth," and by the salt losing its savor, He must have meant a refusing of contact with Himself.

The lesson, therefore, of the reverse of the nation's great seal is that we should not let that triangle remain suspended in the air, but bring it down upon the pyramid, and so make the building complete. Make it the land of Christ's dear love, of which Lanier sang in 1876 in his great Centennial Ode.

Bishop White on His Knees in Prayer.

"Annuit Coeptus."

There is a picture, made immortal by the artist, which tells us how that favor was won, how the contact began, how the light of the guiding Eye was kindled in the heart of the nation, how the preserving salt of the "everlasting covenant" was imported.

The year 1777 was a dark year in the history of our country. Philadelphia, the capital of the thirteen confederated States, was in the hands of the enemy, "where they held high revel during the terribly severe winter, while the patriots shivered and starved at Valley Forge." And all the while, history tells us, that pacifist Americans hoarded the necessaries of life and contractors became rich. The farmers stole to the city with their choicest products, because they received the enemies' gold in payment and then they burned what they could not sell, to keep it from the famishing patriots. The whole country became in an immoral state like that of Germany today, a state of "idleness, dissipation and extravagance—speculation, peculation, and an insatiate thirst for riches"—Washington's own words—and, worst of all, the Commander in Chief was finally blamed for it all, and Congress was urged to remove him and put General Gates in his place. Had that been done, history would have been differently written.

But there was a Power above, the Power of the "Good Angel" of the Centennial Ode, the mighty Angel of the Covenant of whom Malachi sang, who was watching over His Israel, and the immortal picture is of the hour when that Power came down.

For there in that exiled Congress, in whose hands our country's fate was held trembling as in a balance, we see, in his robes of office, William White, the first great Bishop of Pennsylvania, on his knees in prayer, with the kneeling legislators all around him; and we know that then and there the contact was made, the Light of God was kindled, and the salt which has never since lost its savor was brought into the very heart of the nation.

We Must Follow Example of Our Forefathers.

Annuit Coeptus; and only as we have followed the example of our great forefathers, only as we have been a praying nation, only as we have recognized the Church as the prime necessary factor in a true civilization, only as the Thanksgiving proclamations of our Presidents and Governors have taken the stain of indifference to morality from our political party platforms, only thus far do we dare to lift up our heads and face the world.

But the Church, to be the light of the world, must have a light to shine, and to be the salt of the earth must not itself have lost its savor.

The Holy of Holies of the temple, whose outer court is the world, must be kept holy by the abiding presence of the Shekinah, if that outer court is to be kept from profanation.

The "Advent Call" is a call to the Church, to the sleeping virgins to arise and trim their lamps, and fill them from the great reservoir of power that is close at hand.

"Awake, awake, for night is flying;
The watchmen on the heights are crying,
Awake, Jerusalem, arise!
Midnight's solemn hour is tolling,
His chariot wheels are nearer rolling;
He comes; prepare, ye Virgins wise,
Rise up; with willing feet
Go forth, the Bridegroom meet;
Alleluia!
Bear through the night your well-trimmed light,
Speed forth to join the marriage rite."

It is a call from the women of the Church, in accordance with that first command to them, "Fear not. Go tell my brethren!" It is a call first of all to prayer, by which alone, as the President of our Auxiliary says, we may "set our wills in tune with His" who gave that command, and by which alone the Church may have that personal influence for righteousness that the world saw in Washington and Lincoln and McKinley, and that we see in our chief executive today.

And it is personal influence that moves the world.

"A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE."

The campaign to raise the Fourth Liberty Loan has begun in earnest. $6,000,000,000 must be subscribed and quickly by the people of the United States if we are to strengthen the morale of our boys "over there," break down the morale of our enemy and hasten the coming of the day of peace. In the face of the many glorious victories recently won by the first American army and our allies there is danger of the folks "over here" becoming over confident. The end of the war and the dawn of a permanent and righteous peace for the world may seem to be in sight, but no human being can tell when this shall come to pass. We may be sure, however, that the sooner we meet the requirements of the government at Washington the sooner will the joy be ours of celebrating the final victory. A little sacrifice now will forestall a greater sacrifice later on. "A stitch in time saves nine," and now is the psychological moment to take the stitch. But let no one vainly imagine that the war will be brought quickly to an end and a lasting and righteous peace secured by prompt and generous subscriptions to the Liberty Loan alone. Prayer must be combined with our subscriptions if this "consummation devoutly to be wished" is to be attained. Give until it hurts and pray without ceasing if you would make the largest and most effective contribution toward the winning of the war.

THE AMERICAN SPIRIT.

A boy was brought in with a broken leg. It had been an accident and not a wound won in battle. He had gotten in the way of a motor truck.

"Jest fix me up out here what you can," he said.

"You get to the hospital, son."

"Nix. Hospitals for those fellows that's hurt. I just got a busted pin. You fix me here and leave me here. . . . When you git a chance."

Somewhere, sometime, they had all gotten this thing. Out of the battle and the suffering, something better than they had ever known came to them. There was utter ignoring of self, and it was a thing wonderful to witness.

"We've got to have a new word in the language," said a Captain-surgeon, "Game won't do. These boys are something more than game. I've never seen anything like it. I don't know what it is." Even he, inured to suffering and to scenes of bloodshed, wiped his eyes. "They're—they're—why—they're something! Nobody was ever like them."—Red Triangle Press.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by G. W. J.

Albert Hurwitz, president of the Associated Young Men's Hebrew Associations of New England, has just received from Chaplain Lyman Rollins of the 101st infantry, H. E. F., who is an Episcopalian, acknowledgement of a letter of thanks sent him by Mr. Hurwitz for the splendid service rendered by Chaplain Rollins to the men of the Jewish faith with the American expeditionary forces. The letter follows :

"Thank you for your very kind and gracious letter, and Capt. Bernard L. Gorfinkle, for his good words to you. I hope I am deserving of all these nice things my friends say of me. At least they are an incentive to one to measure up.

"I don't feel I have done any more for the Jewish lad than a chaplain should, and no more than the Jewish chaplains I have met—would do for the Gentile boys. I feel I have really become a pretty good Jew as well as Gentile, for I have attended the services of Jewish boys and sat with my hat on. And while I could not keep our own feast of Easter I did keep the Passover, and for want of real Passover bread ate hardtack. Whenever I have buried a Jewish lad I have used the Jewish prayerbook service and found some Jewish boy to say Kaddish. So it goes. This life is revealing to us one thing. Jew or Gentile, Catholic or Protestant, we are coming to know and understand one another, and have found that while we have our differences, most of which are born with us, we are really not so different at heart, brothers and comrades."

Two Million Women Needed to Take the Places of Men.

Already plans are afoot for the mobilization of the women workers of the country in anticipation of the inevitable inroads that the new draft bill will make. Chairman Baruch, of the War Industries Board, says that "the country has barely begun to utilize its woman power," and tells the Washington correspondents that within a few weeks there will be a drive to list all the available women that they be called on as the need arises. Already, no fewer than 3,375,000 women, in response to an appeal of the National Council of Defense, have registered as willing to enter any work in which the government needs them. Not all that number would be found available for the work to be undertaken, but the response shows the spirit of America nwomanhood.

A Washington tabulation indicates that fully 2,000,000 women may be needed before a year from this time to take the places of men called away by the war, in addition to the large number now so employed, and it will not be a case of having to hunt for the women so much as to pick out those best qualified and who can take up the new tasks with the least harm to themselves and to society.

In England, according to late figures, no fewer than 4,538,000 women are now employed as workers, exclusive of domestic servants, nurses, saleswomen, teachers, etc. That is more than a fourth of all the women of England. A similar proportion here would put more than 10,000,000 women in industries directly related to the war. The census of 1910 showed 3,647,000 women workers in the United States, or about 8 per cent of the total number of women. Washington estimates that about 600,000 women have already taken the places of American men who have gone to the colors. To double that number or multiply it by ten is not impossible, though, of course, the process would upset many things and lead to many problems. The patriotism of American women will not be lacking. That is not the issue. But there are many things to consider in mobilizing them for war work.—Editorial, Boston Herald.

Christmas Will Not Be Abolished.

The earlier report that the Council of National Defense was to abolish our 1918 Christmas proves to have been much like that famous premature report of Mark Twain's death. Christmas will not only remain on the calendar, but the season of Christmas buying is to begin far earlier than usual. This year the familiar pleas for early Christmas planning and purchasing not only have official sanction, but are part of a definite arrangement that the Council of National Defense has made with the representatives of the manufacturers and merchants of the whole land. There is the definite understanding that holiday advertising shall put the main emphasis on useful articles, except in the case of gifts for very little folks. Merchants are going to keep their store forces and hours as close to normal as possible and to urge that purchasers will develop more generally the practice of carrying home parcels, and to help the whole scheme of transportation and distribution, the holiday shopping season will begin in October, instead of waiting until after Thanksgiving. That is a part of the program where the general co-operation of the public is necessary. In vain will the Council of National Defense and the manufacturers and merchants make agreements if the public does not patriotically grasp the opportunity of doing its part. It is not a trick to make the people buy more than usual. It is a fair and square attempt to distribute the load that commonly rises to a lofty peak in the latter part of December. And the attempt is made for reasons that have just as much to do with winning the war as the conservation of coal and gasoline and sugar. They involve the saving of labor, the prevention of railway congestion and the conservation of material that are needed in war work. Every good American family will give the situation its attention and will make its Christmas plans accordingly.—Editorial, Boston Herald.

A Battle Prayer.

Many war verses are seen in print these days, many of them very enjoyable, some written by the soldiers and some for them. Here is a battle-prayer taken from John Oxenham's "Fiery Cross":

Where'er thou be,
On land or sea,
Or in the air,
This little prayer
I pray for thee—
God keep thee ever,
Day and night,—
Face to the light,—
Thine armor bright,—
Thy 'scutcheon white,—
That no despite
Thine honor smite!
With infinite,
Sweet oversight,
God keep thee ever,
Heart's delight!
And guard thee whole,
Sweet body, soul,
And spirit high;
That, live or die,
Thou glorify
His Majesty;
And ever be,
Within His sight,
His true and upright,
Sweet and stainless,
Pure and sinless,
Perfect knight!

Virtual Slavery, Dense Ignorance, Hopeless Poverty and Moral Degredation in India.

The Episcopal Synod of the Province of India and Ceylon appointed a sub-committee to prepare a statement of the present situation in the various dioceses and to enlist the prayers and help of Churchmen throughout India and elsewhere, as follows:

"The outcasts of India, numbering some fifty millions, though in a state of virtual slavery, dense ignorance, hopeless poverty and moral degredation, constitute the backbone of the agricultural system of this country and form a very valuable economic asset to the state. Awakening from the lethargy of ages, these people are now feeling after freedom and the common rights of humanity, from which they and their forefathers have been debarred under the Hindu system of caste. This legitimate longing after a fuller life is naturally turning them to Christ. In many parts the conviction is growing among them that in Christ and in His Church alone lies their hope, and this finds expression in an insistent appeal for instruction, baptism and pastoral care.

So far about 150,000 of them have become members of our Church and several hundreds of thousands have been admitted into other Christian bodies. But notwithstanding all the arrangements made for pastoral care by the missionaries of our Church, much still remains to be done. The adequate and early provision of a trained pastoral agency and efficient educational institutions for training lay-workers, is vital for discharging the grave responsibilities imposed upon us by the movement. Neglect now will seriously tell upon the future welfare of the Indian Church.

But apart from the obligations of work already undertaken, there is the silent appeal of the millions beyond the order of the Church. In some regions large numbers are waiting for teachers. In other parts extensive movements towards the faith will be set on foot as soon as the knowledge of the Gospel penetrates. This constitutes a challenge which the Church cannot ignore. But the Church in India is absolutely helpless in the face of this opportunity, through lack of missionary forces, both foreign and indigenous, and funds for their support.

Meanwhile, the opportunity may pass away, as it did in certain parts of the country which witnessed large mass movements in former years. Convinced, therefore, that delay may work irreparable injury to the cause of the Kingdom of Christ in India, we put forth this statement so that the interests of the Church in India and abroad may be won and the prayers of the faithful stimulated on behalf of one of the greatest calls the Church in India has ever had to face.

The situation in regard to each diocese is as follows:

The Travancore Diocese has already gathered 36,000 converts. There are still 2,000,000 outcastes, who are at present accessible. The Church Missionary Society is responsible for this work.

The Madras Diocese has in its Telugre area 60,000 adherents. The Church Missionary Society and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel are both engaged in the task. A tenth only of the outcastes in the Telugre country have so far been gathered in.

In the Dornakal Diocese, the Church Missionary Society, the Indian Missionary Society of Tinnevelly Society and a Diocesan Mission have divided the work between them. There are at present 10,000 converts and about 2,000,000 are waiting to be gathered in. Eight talugs in the Diocese are absolutely untouched by any missionary society.

In the Bombay Diocese the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and the Church Missionary Society have mass movements going on in their fields. The number so far gathered in is 4,000.

In the Lucknow Diocese the movement was commenced in great force in the field under the Church Missionary Society. Over 10,000 have been gathered in.

In the Lahore Diocese 25,000 have been admitted into the Church by the Church Missionary Society. There are still 300,000 that can be brought in with proper effort.

These Dioceses urgently require additional missionaries to take charge of districts and institutions, schools for training Indian lay-workers and clergy, and money for the support of Indian agency and the erection of prayer-houses, village schools and educational establishments.

We beckon to our partners throughout the world and say: Brethren, pray, help.

HENRY MADRAS,
Convener of the Committee.

Contributions for mass movement work in India may be sent to any of the following:

The Secretary, C. M. S., Salisbury Square, London, E. C.

The Secretary, S. P. G., 15 Teglore St., Westmister, London.

The Metropolitan of India and Ceylon, The Palace, Calcutta.

You can unlock a man's whole life if you watch what words he uses most. We have each a small set of words which, though we are scarcely aware of it, we always work with, and which really express all that we mean by life or have found out of it.—Henry Drummond.

PERSONALS.

At the recent meeting of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Harrisburg, Mr. Edward Leeson Pielow was recommended to the bishop as a candidate for Holy Orders.

The Rev. Alan Pressley Wilson, lately in charge of our work at the Mont Alto Sanatarium, Diocese of Harrisburg, has accepted an appointment at Blossburg. His work will also include Antrim, and Arnot, two places in the neighborhood of Blossburg.

After a year as chaplain of Base Hospital No. 1, in France, the Rev. Francis B. Barnett, of Ridley Park, Philadelphia, has resigned and will don a uniform for active war service.

Spokane, Wash., has a new rector for St. James' and St. Peter's in the person of the Rev. Irving E. Baxter, who for eight years was rector at Napa, Cal. Kennewick is to have its new vicar early in October, the Rev. L. K. Smith, formerly vicar of St. Lukes, Des Moines, Iowa.

Bishop Page, of Spokane, Wash., spent the month of August with the boys at Camp Lewis, where his only son, the Rev. H. R. Page, is one of the chaplains.

Mrs. W. H. Allison and her sister, Miss Tillotson, recently conducted a very successful Women's Auxiliary Institute at All Saints' Parish House, Spokane, Wash., and it is hoped that as a result a great interest in the Women's Auxiliary will be felt all over the district.

The Rev. Edw. S. Doan, missionary at Roswell, N. M., has held two Missions in his field, the past summer, one at Glencoe, in the mountains, during the latter part of July, and the other at Artesia in August. In both places he helped in the harvest fields by day, and held his Mission services at night. Mr. Doan has opened up a new work in Hagerman, 25 miles south of Roswell, and half way between Roswell and Artesia. He was the preacher at the last open air service in Hagerman on Sunday night, August 15th. Regular services will be held in the Christian Church on the 1st and 3rd Sunday nights of the month. It is hoped that some steps may be taken in due time to purchase the Christian Church for the building is unused by that organization, and the property can be purchased at a reasonable price. The field is promising in this little town of 600 population.

The Bishop and Mrs. James Dow Morrison returned September 13th after two months at their summer home in the Adirondacks to Duluth, Minn. The Bishop is now on a two weeks visitation to a group of missions in the western part of the diocese.

Two, at least, of the clergy of the Diocese of Duluth, put their vacations to patriotic use. The Rev. W. E. Harmann of St. Peter's Church, Duluth, spent his vacation in the harvest fields on a farm near Litchfield, and the Rev. James Ward, rector of St. Paul's Church, Virginia, spent the month in a similar occupation in Eastern Montana.

THE CALL TO WORK.

The coming of fall calls us to work. The vacation idea is that one should get away from the ordinary pursuits, and by change of place and occupation get away, too, from the groove in which we move during the major part of the year. Vacations save many a man and many a woman from a nervous breakdown, and are not to be discouraged, but rather encouraged. The demands which modern civilization make are taking a heavy toll of lives, and greater rest and more time for recreation, which which constitute real recreation, are perhaps the only things which can meet the supreme demands which are made upon our strength and our nervous energy.—Canon W. H. Bliss.

WILL ESTABLISH THE A. C. A. IN AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.

The Rev. Walter E. Bently, Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Brooklyn, N. Y., founder and secretary of the Actors Church Alliance of America, is on his way to Australia and New Zeland to establish the Actors Church Alliance there in connection with the Actors Church Union of Great Britain and Ireland. This will make the work of the Alliance world wide, as it is also established in Canada and South Africa. On the eve of his departure, Mr. Bently, in a letter to the publisher, paid The Witness the following high compliment: "The Witness is an excellent institution—it is a real religious newspaper, not stiff, formal or stereotyped. It is so human and brotherly, and being such is sure to reach the hearts of all Church people eventually and become the greatest power for good. Its very name is an inspiration, for what is the Church but The Witness of God's invisible Presence in the world—the extension of His Incarnation in a divinely-human institution and organism?"

WANTED BY TWO MISSIONARIES IN KANSAS.

Any one who has a Stereopticon Lantern to give away or loan for use until Jan. 1, 1919, in the Blue Valley Missions of Kansas is requested to write Mr. Charles Bailey, Box 247, Blue Rapids, Kansas. The Missions will pay freight chages.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Reve. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffeila, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE."
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America. Address.
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING
An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.
The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.
Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.
28½tf

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL
OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal

Collegiate School, Military
for Boys, Denver, Colo.
All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations. Address REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

RACINE COLLEGE
RACINE, WISCONSIN.
Students' Army Training Unit opens October 1st.
Men over 18 and subject to Government Draft may enter.
Mess, Shelter, Clothing, Medical Attention and Tuition at Government Expense, and a Salry of $30 a month.
REGISTER NOW.
B. T. ROGERS, D.D., Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana.....Publisher
All exchanges and articles for publication should be sent to the Editor. All subscriptions to the Publisher.

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS

George P. Atwater Grace W. Johnson Francis S. White
Henry J. Mikell James Sherrin
James Wise

ADVERTISING RATES.

Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

EDITORIAL

REFLEX ACTION

The mind is constantly receiving impressions which are conveyed to it by means of certain nerves, running to the brain from the eye and the ear, and as a result of these various messages, the man puts forth a certain reflex action.

For example, if I am a silver-tongued orator, I can produce certain melodious sounds in connection with certain euphonious phrases which will go to the nerve centers of certain impressionable people in my audience, and these nerve centers will start the tear ducts flowing; but the same sounds traveling along the nerves of another man in the audience instead of inducing tears will produce language bordering on the profane.

That is, the reflex action in different folks is far from the same.

What makes the difference?

Well, it is the same kind of a difference as that which is induced in different men by the sight of a pile of wood and an axe. One man at once wants to seize the axe and go after the wood, whereas the other would go without a meal before he would think of picking up the axe.

So the sight of a person in distress will cause one man to stop and help, while two men pass by on the other side. Likewise the sight of an advancing column of the enemy's troops causes a soldier to fight and do deeds of heroism, while the sight of a masked burglar in his room would cause him to throw up his hands.

So the words of Christ caused one group of men to love Him, while another group, with identically the same bundle of nerves, are moved to crucify Him.

Reflex action is the immediate response that we make to any message coming to us over our nervous system.

In other words, incongruous as phrases often are, reflex action is the action that we make without reflection.

It is the immediate, invariable response that we make to any given sensation, because of our nature or temperament. It shows us our real soul.

And we differ so in our reflex actions. The bell rings and a telegram arrives. We open it and read the message of unwelcome news. One person goes into hysterical weeping, begins to talk excitedly and to stir up everyone in the house with the tidings; while another becomes calm, says little or nothing, at once begins to plan a course of conduct.

It is because of this habit of reflex action that we train men who are going to fight or to play.

We train them that each may produce the best instantaneous action under fire or in the baseball field.

It is the same in our religious life. Let us consider the communicant in a parish in the reflex action produced by certain circumstances.

The aforesaid communicant goes to church. If said person be the victim of an untrained past, he or she will at once react on everything disagreeable in the service. The mannerisms of the rector, one false note in the anthem, one disagreeable episode in the pew, and the immediate reaction is a complete upsetting of all spiritual values.

"But I am of such an artistic nature that the least discord upsets me," is the frequent excuse for what is really a lack of control and training in the process of reflex action.

You react upon an acid test. One drop of vinegar and you are thrown into a spiritual convulsion. You say that you are upset, and that is true.

An unpleasant incident turns your whole spiritual nature topsy-turvy.

The truth is that you have never disciplined yourself against the disagreeable. You are an untrained soldier in the army of the Lord. You easily become the victim of shell-shock in your spiritual life. This means not that you have a very fine nature, but rather that you are a mighty poor soldier.

You are constantly being upset by the mere incidents of the battle.

There is another form by which you can detect your value as a soldier by the processes of reflex action. You all know what a spoiled child is. The kindest, most courteous request from the mother, whose life is a constant sacrifice for the worthless brat, meets with scorn, insult, contempt, refusal. Well, if you were the rector of a parish, you could find, in various degrees, the same reaction from the spoiled children of the Church.

There are those, and I am afraid their name is legion, who always refuse the call to service unless such call can be put in such a way as to please their vanity..

Of course, if the church can offer them some position which carries with it a maximum of prestige with a minimum of work, these soldiers of Christ will serve; but if they get an idea that the task is disagreeable, that the service is exacting or in any way menial, they have no thought of Christ's sacrifice for them, but only of their own sensitive nature, which sees offense where none was intended.

The sensitive reaction is one of the greatest nuisances in the efficiency of parish work.

Then there is the pious individual who makes an emotional reaction. As Frank Crane has well said in his article on the "Road to Hell":

"The greatest sin against yourself is having a good impulse and not acting upon it. The human race may be divided into two classes—the potent and the impotent. The potent use their emotions to put force into their deeds, the impotent use their emotions for their own entertainment.

"There are people who go to church and make no effort to translate their Sunday feelings into every day activities. They are connoisseurs in sentiments, but in their actual lives they are petty, sordid, selfish."

How well do I know the type. With them a thrill takes the place of will. They love poetry and fiction and emotionahymns,—everything but hard work.

I listened recently to an eloquent and impassioned prayer from an eloquent religious secretary who was as impervious to real human sympathy as a crocodile. The capacity for glib expression is very dangerous, for it becomes such a deceptive camouflage for human sympathy. And the one who indulges in it over much becomes a pachyderm. You can't pierce the skin with a dum-dum bullet.

Someone has recently spoken of "the egotism which always distinguishes office-holders." It isn't so much egotism as a grandiloquent vocabulary.

Study your reflex actions. Not the things you do as a matter of reflection or necessity, but the things that you do on impulse.

The soul that can impulsively extract the sweetness out of his surroundings becomes a honey bee, whose life is well-stored, a veritable treasury of merit. It passes by the noxious weeds and sees only the flowers that conceal the honey. The other nature, with a propensity for detecting evil, will some day become a wasp, whose sting is as deadly as his life is useless.

Open your life to whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things; and as for the evil in men's lives, especially as it touches you personally, touch not, taste not, handle not, for they end in bitterness -the sort of bitterness whereby many are defiled.

A STUDY IN THE ACTS

By Bishop Johnson.

Act I:8-9.

"But ye shall receive power" after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and into the uttermost parts of the earth.

"And when He had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up and a cloud received Him out of their sight."

The last words of any great man have a peculiar interest, but when these last words are selected by the Master as a parting instruction for those who are left behind, they have a compelling significance.

These words printed above are the last words of instruction which Jesus Christ left to His Church.

We have already spoken of the work of the Holy Ghost, and the power which the Church was to receive in a supernatural way from her Divine Master.

You will here note that Christ attached to the gift of Pentecost the power which was to energize the Christian Church and make it the effective agency toward the evangelizing of the world.

"Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" implies that they did not have such power before Pentecost and that the gift of the Holy Ghost was a definite bestowal of divine energy.

We now consider the final commission which Christ gave to the Church before withdrawing His visible presence from it, "Ye shall be witnesses."

It is a peculiar thing upon which to lay the final emphasis, and yet it is the fundamental thing,—the one thing without which nothing else is worth while.

A disciple might be a great preacher and yet the final effect be, "as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal."

He might be a great philosopher so that "he understood all mysteries, and all knowledge," and yet the wisdom of man would be foolishness with God.

He might be a big philanthropist, full of great practical schemes for human betterment and yet build it all on shifting sand.

But if every Christian is first of all a witness to Christ, then the foundations are well laid, and other foundation has no man laid (St. Paul said "can," but after nineteen centuries we may say "has") that has been of universal value to mankind, than that which is laid in Jesus Christ.

Now, what is a witness? Let us analyze the word as our Lord uses it.

First. He is one who testifies to facts which have already occurred and not to possibilities which may occur, nor to theories which may or may not be established.

Christ has established certain facts which are of tremendous importance to mankind. He has been conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary. He has been crucified under Pontius Pilate and risen from the dead. He has lived a sinless life and preached a deathless gospel.

He had instituted sacraments of life and given them the spirit of power, and now He was ascending into Heaven, where He would have to make intercession for them.

These were the facts of which they were to be the witnesses.

How could they be witnesses? What was the qualification for one who was to take the place of Judas among the apostles?

"Wherefore of those men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that He was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of His resurrection."

The word "apostle" means 'one who has been sent"; the word "witness" implies for what he had been sent,—to tell the facts that "he had seen and heard." How could they best tell these facts? How can we best carry on their testimony?

(a) If men have an important thing which they wish to perpetuate they embody that faith in an institution. For example, our fathers loved liberty, but when they wished to perpetuate liberty, they embodied it in the constitution of the U. S. A.

So the founders of the great fraternal orders had certain truths which they wished to perpetuate; so they founded a fraternity which should carry out those principles.

So the apostles, in order that they might embody the truths entrusted to them, and under the authority of the Master, organized a great fraternal order known as the Church.

And so the first thing they did in order to have witnesses to Christ was to organize a society in which every member became a witness to Christ's life by publicly becoming a member of that body.

(b) If witnesses are going to be believed they must have a good reputation. After we have become a members of the Church, we become a witness to Christ. If we have a reputation for integrity, sincerity and decency, we become a good witness, but if we fail to do this, our testimony is injurious to the cause.

It is not that a witness is without faults, but rather that he is sincere that makes him most valuable as a witness.

Those who use their religion as a cloak of dishonesty become false witnesses who drive men away from Christ.

(c) Then there is the direct testimony of the individual.

Every time he goes to Church or says the creed in public, or speaks a word for Christ in public or in private he carries out Christ's last command. He is a witness to Christ whenever he goes to the altar to take part in the Holy Communion, "Ye do show forth the Lord's death till He come."

He is fulfilling his function as a witness of Christ.

To be a member of the Church, to live a sincere life, to be regular in your functions as a Christian are the ways in which you carry out Christ's commands and is the great test as to whether you really believe in the truth of those facts which Christ lived and died.

So the good witness of Christ is not the one who goes to church merely for what he gets out of it himself, but rather he who does his duty because he is a soldier of Christ and, as such, he must bear his testimony in season and out of season to the fact that Christ lived and died for us.

This is an entirely different conception of religion from that in which the sole test of your service lies in your own personal experience.

There is no reason why one should forego his personal experience, but that is not the same thing as the bearing witness, through our fidelity to the Christian Church, to all that Christ committed to us.

No commander will ever accept your blessed assurance that you are an acceptable soldier for those acts of fidelity by which you demonstrate to all men that you are a good soldier who carries on.

Ye shall be witnesses unto me, not only in Jerusalem, where you live, but also in Judaea, which might well represent your diocese, and in Samaria, which might represent our work among Negroes, Indians, and the like, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

OLD KING ALCOHOL IS DEAD.

Congress has driven the last spike in the coffin of old King Alcohol. His burial will take place, without ceremony, next July, if there is no hitch in the arrangements. He has been the most powerful and inhuman autocrat the world has ever known—holding within his relentless grasp a large percentage of the race, driving them onward and ever onward toward cruelty, and crime, and utimely graves; controlling political parties, dictating the policy of city, state and national administratons, subsidizing the press, muzzling business, and even here and there by subtle camouflaging wielding an undue influence over pulpit and pew. The next Fourth of July will be a greater day than ever for America and the whole world if we are able to celebrate at that time the anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the freedom of men from slavery to King Alcohol and the next most powerful and damnable enemy to civilization, the Prussian autocracy.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

NEWS FROM THE DIOCESES

INDIANAPOLIS NOTES.

Bishop Francis returned to the Diocese the first of the month and was greeted with great enthusiasm. He preached at Christ Church Sept. 8th in the morning and addressed a united service, participated in by all the congregation, at St. Paul's Church, in the evening. He spoke in most telling phrases concerning events across the sea and was heard with delight by assemblages that taxed the buildings to the utmost. His message is of the deepest worth and cannot but do good wherever delivered. Since that time he has been constantly in demand for addresses and the Chamber of Commerce made him the guest of honor at a notable dinner September 26th.

The clergy are back in their parishes after brief vacations, and the fall work begins auspiciously. The various service flags tell the story of the consecration of our young manhood. At St. George's Church, where Rev. George E. Young is the new vicar, a flag was dedicated September 8th with 24 stars. It was the gift of the vicar and was received with most appreciative manifestations. The ceremony brought out a well-filled church. The Woman's Auxiliary are planning their customary Michaelmas by the speakers will be the Advent Call to Prayer. The Diocese was represented at the Synod at Gambier by Rev. Horace W. Wood and Mrs. John White and Mrs. E. G. Peck. The Clericus will give their September dinner in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Francis. To this function the wives of the clergy are expected to come. Rev. Horace W. Wood has filled the position of chaplain at Fort Harrison admirably throughout the summer. The War Department has ordered him to present himself for examination as a permanency. His departure will be a great loss to the Diocese, should he be called away.

DIOCESE OF KANSAS NOTES.

The Southeast Deanery held its fall meeting at Grace Church, Chanute, the Rev. R. V. Borleer rector, Sept. 11, and 12. Every member was present. The afternoon session was given up to the Duplex System and the making of the canvass this fall. It was decided to try to make it cover the school as well as the Church. The first canvass will be November 3rd at Chanute, with the rector of Pittsburgh, the Rev. H. J. Harvey helping. At evening prayer, the Rev. W. E. Warren preached a good sermon. Dean Hawk celebrated the Holy Communion next morning at 7:30 a. m. The morning session was devoted to the Advent Call, Christian Nurture Course and the Silent Churches in the Deanery. The Rev. Mr. Warren was appointed to bring before the men the points for work and the Rev. Mr. Barber, the Church school work.

This fall it is planed to conduct a short conference at Grace Church, Chanute, on the Advent Call, by Miss Nellie Smith, when a few select women will be invited from each parish in the Deanery.

Grace Church school, Chanute, experimented recently in paid advertisement of its Rally and Promotion program and got the largest number present that had ever been present at the school hour. The school is putting in the Christian Nurture Course and has been working hard all the summer in making preparation for it by conducting a teachers' training class.

VERMONT NOTES.

On St. Matthew's Day in Trinity Church, Milton, the Bishop of the Diocese ordained the Rev. Arthur Albert Bessey to the priesthood, assisted by the Bishop Coadjutor, who preached the sermon, and four priests. Mr. Bessey will remain in charge of the cure of Milton and Georgia where he has spent his diaconate. The Bishop stayed in Milton for the following day, Sunday, preached and blessed a new Font recently placed in the church, and in the afternoon solemnized a war marriage, the bridegroom being just graduated from the aviation school at Princeton and having ten days furlough. On the previous Sunday the Bishop dedicated a service flag at Trinity Church, Winooski, the mill village adjoining Burlington, with twenty stars representing men belonging to the congregation in the national service.

Bishop Hall has addressed a vigorous letter of remonstrance to the Fuel Administrator concerning the squeezing of our parishes in the distribution of coal. A time of anxiety and sorrow and service is not the time for lessening the ministrations of religion, he says. Union services are not sanctioned by the diocese.

DIOCESE OF NEWARK NOTES.

The Newark Diocesan Journal just issued shows that there are 165 clergymen belonging to the Diocese and 138 Parishes and Missions. There are 21 candidates and postulants. The baptisms last year were 2,618 and confirmations 2,209; the number of communicants 41,536, with 2,493 Sunday School officers and teachers; 19,505 pupils. The receipts from all sources $1,049,225.00.

Recently appointed United States Chaplains are the Rev. Barrett P. Tyler, the Rev. J. Gregory Nabry, the Rev. S. Glover Dunseath, the Rev. H. V. B. Darlington, the Rev. Edgar W. Anderson, the Rev. Burnham N. Dell, while several others are awaiting appointment.

The Rev. Hiram R. Bennett has succeeded the Rev. Warren L. Rogers who gave three months at St. George's, Camp Dix, and Rev. Augustine Elmendorf has succeeded the Rev. Edwin S. Carson who gave three months service at Camp Merritt.

The Rev. William H. Watts and Rev. Robert Blickensderfer have recently gone to France in Y. M. C. A. service and the Rev. Robert S. Hooper to do like duty at Camp Oglethorpe. Several of the other Clergy have taken services in the Camps at home and in France. Thirty of the Clergy have been absent from their parishes in government service for considerable time.

The summer has seen many changes among the Clergy in the Newark Diocese. The Rev. Henry B. Todd has entered upon his work as rector of St. Paul's Church, Hoboken; the Rev. Chapman S. Lewis as rector of St. Stephen's Church, Jersey City; the Rev. Allen Greene comes to St. John's, West Hoboken, October 1st; the Rev. L. H. Nugent leaves Lyndhurst to be succeeded by the Rev. F. G. Faber. The Rev. A. Q. Plank has become curate at Grace Church, Newark, and the Rev. Donald Wonders, curate at Trinity, Newark. The Rev. Dwight W. Graham has accepted the rectorship of Trinity Church, Waterbury, Connecticut; the Rev. Roy J. Riblet has become rector of Christ Church, Harrison; Rev.. Hugh W. Dickinson has taken charge of Wortendyke and Glen Rock and Rev. John D. Kenney of Allendale; the Rev. W. S. Hohenschild has charge of St. Agnes, East Orange.

CONSECRATION OF TRINTY CATHEDRAL, DULUTH.

"From Car-barn to Cathedral" might well be the title of an account of the development of Trinity Cathedral, Duluth, Minn., which was consecrated with due ceremony by Bishop Morrison on the Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity.

In 1901, due to the growth of the city eastward, there had arisen the need for a Sunday School in the newer part of the city. Accordingly, the Bishop secured the use of a car-barn, which for some time had been vacant, at the corner of Twentieth Avenue East and Superior Street. Here, in what had been the office of the Street Railway Company, was opened an organized Sunday School, with thirty-five pupils and two teachers.

On Trinity Sunday of the same year the Bishop, for the first time, celebrated the Holy Communion in this room, which had been furnished with plain Altar and hangings, Prayer Desk and Lectern, with kitchen chairs in place of pews, and a cabinet organ. This room served as the Bishop's "Chapel of Ease" until 1904, when a weekly afternoon service was instituted, conducted by one of the city clergy.

In 1905 the Rev. Arthur H. Wurtele, now of Rochester, Minnesota, was called as priest in charge, and the work of the Church in the "old office room" began to move rapidly. The "Mission" was soon organized as a "Parish." The temporary furnishings gave place to handsome oak altar, lectern, prayer desk and pews, and a brass cross, candlesticks and vases were added. The "Bishop's Chapel" in the present Cathedral is a duplicate of the old office room and contains the furnishings given for it.

The cornerstone of the Cathedral was laid on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, September 29, 1906, and services were formally opened in the completed building on Trinity Sunday of the following year. Since that time, as well as in the years of "new things," the Cathedral work has been of that strong, constructive, telling sort that leaves an impression, not only on the membership of the parish, but on the community as well.

The Reverend Thomas W. MacLean, LL. D., succeeded Dean Wurtele in January, 1912, and resigned July first, 1917, when he felt impelled by age to go into the retired list. The Rev. Everett W. Courer assumed charge of the work on the second Sunday after Easter this year.

During the past year approximately eight thousand eight hundred dollars, besides current expenses, has been raised by the Cathedral congregation, and to these faithful Churchmen the day for the consecration of their Church was one of devout thanksgiving.

In the Consecration Services the Bishop of the Diocese was assisted by Bishop McElwain, of the Diocese of Minnesota, who was the preacher at both the morning and evening services, and was the the celebrant at the early morning Eucharist. The Reverend James Ward, of Virginia, Secretary of the Diocese, read the sentence of consecration, and he, with the Rev. Messrs. W. E. Hermann and E. W. Couper, assisted in the Holy Communion, which was largely attended by the members of the Cathedral Parish and other interested Churchmen.

The Instrument of Donation was read by Mr. George H. Crosby, Senior Warden of the Cathedral Parish.

The following gifts and memorials have been presented at various times:

For the Bishop's Chapel—Altar, lectern, prayer desk and pews, from Mr. O. G. Brice and Mr. R. B. Knox; cross, candlesticks and vases, from Mr. and Mrs. George H. Crosby.

For the Cathedral—Carpet, from Mr. J. Thomasson; altar brasses, from Mr. and Mrs. J. F. McLaren; font, from Mrs. R. B. Knox; pulpit, from St. Agnes Guild, Ogdensburg, N. Y.; sanctuary lamp, Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Merrill; sanctuary window, Mr. C. T. Fitzsimmons; Tiffany window, Mrs. Virginia Morris Ring; organ, Trinity Guild.

TEACHER TRAINING DRIVE IN CHICAGO.

The Diocesan Board of Religious Education of Chicago proposes to fall heartily into the plan of the General Board of Religious Education for a Teacher Training Drive this fall. The Board has proposed:

(1) A Training Class in each parish and mission, for new teachers and those who have not taught before.

(2) A monthly meeting of the staff (officers and teachers) of each school, for the discussion of the methods, problems, organization, etc., of the local school.

(3) Change the Institutes into real schools, with meetings once a month for real study, discussion and work. At the meetings there can be two periods:

(a) A general conference of the whole number to study pedagogy (the pupil and the teacher).

(b) Smaller group conferences for the study of special subjects.

PRAYER FOR VICTORY DAILY AT NOON ON BOARD OF TRADE

Not to be outdone by any other organization, the Chicago Board of Trade will hereafter observe one minute in silent prayer for victory for the allies and for speedy termination of the war. The bell will ring in the exchange hall promptly at noon, all trading will stop, and silence prevail while all join in prayer for help for the men in the fighting lines. It is the first time such an order has been issued. President A. Stanford White is a warden in St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Hyde Park.—Chicago Tribune.

Prayer is not conquering God's reluctance, but taking hold of God's willingness.—Phillips Brooks.

John Henry Houghton

By Susan Hcbbard Martin.

(From the New York Churchman.)

One morning last December there occurred at St. Mark's Church, Denver, Colorado, a funeral in the church that the city will not soon forget.

There were no dry eyes. Nor could there have been. And yet the dominant note of the service was the note of triumphant victory. From the little children up to the white-haired feeble men and women, all had come to pay their last tribute of loving devotion to the silent sleeper in the chancel. To each he had been a strong yet tender friend.

There are different grades of friendship as there are different grades of diamonds, but John Henry Houghton's friendship was "A gem of purest ray serene.' '

Few indeed are fitted by nature to be an understanding friend to people of all ages. Yet this was the remarkable accomplishment of Dr. Houghton. The children loved him, the young people flocked about him, young men and young women came to him in their perplexities and dilemmas, mothers and fathers and wives and husbands went to him, older people, discouraged and disheartened, made their way into his study, and arriving there found the comfort they had sought.

No one left his presence without a lightening of the burden and a stronger trust in God. He spoke no harsh words, he did not believe in them. He critcised no one. That was against his religion. His life, his beautiful life, was a daily and an hourly testimony to one, who stooping wrote these words in the sand, centuries ago, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.'

He was ever cheerful, bright, full of the love of God. He went in and out among the people of Denver like a benediction. His friends were not confined to his own parish. He was always reaching out beyond its confines to help those whose religious belief differed from his own.

One of the most prominent business men of Denver said to me once:

"I am no church member, I profess nothing, I have no creed, but there is one minister in Denver in whom I believe and whom I love. When I came here with a dying wife it was Dr. Houghton who sought me out. It was he who visited my loved one and brought her flowers. It was he who, when that dark hour closed about me and I was desolate, clasped hands with mine above the lifeless form of her I loved so well. He it was who preached the funeral sermon. He did things for me, a stranger, that no one else thought to do. And he did it for one who had no sympathy with the cause he represnted. But if there is one man in whom I believe—one man to whom I would give my last dollar if he needed it, that man is John Henry Houghton."

A poor mother came to me when he died.

"Oh," she cried, "Dr. Houghton is dead. How could I have lived through my daughter's illness and death had it not been for him? What will we do? What will the people of Denver do now that he is gone? Who will bind up our broken hearts and speak words of comfort to our sorrowing souls."

In all the history of Denver there has been no minister so beloved or one who has reached so many people. For twenty-five years he was the faithful and efficient rector of St. Mark's. For twenty-five years he did a work greater than that of any other minister in Denver among the children. Sunday afternoon he gave to them. At these services he always told a story, and so wonderful was his rendering of it that his Sunday afternoons became in a way famous. Lawyers, doctors, and business men fell into the habit of attending these children's meetings as a relaxation from the cares of the week, and came away helped as much as were the children themselves.

The failure of many ministers of the Gospel lies in their inability to reach and interest the young. Dr. Houghton could do this better than any man I ever knew. With his clear eyes of understanding he seemed to be able to read and understand the mind of every child. And how grateful they were for it.

A little girl came to me in tears: "Oh," she cried, "Dr. Houghton is dead. I loved him as I love no one else."

And there were tears in my eyes as well, for in the great sorrows of my life had he not reached forth sympathizing hands to me?

How beautiful was his life! How saintly his appearance. What an uplift and an inspiration he was to those who had fallen by the wayside in sin! For his creed was not to pull down, but to build up.

Like the face of Moses, his too shone with a radiance not of earth. Even the hardened man of the world, the unbeliever, and the scorner recognized the beauty of his life and made obedience to it.

Somehow Denver will never seem the same Denver again. It has lost its great friend and pastor. St. Mark's Church will live on, however, immeasurably enriched by the sacred memory of his Christlike life. And we who knew and loved him, even in our loss and tears, can repeat softly and reverently—

"There was a man sent from God, whose name was John."

PARISH OBSERVES ITS CENTENNIAL.

St. Paul Church, Parish Hill, New York, celebrated its one hundredth anniversary on Thursday, September 12th. There was a large gathering of Church people and citizens who participated in the several services and functions. Bishop Fisk officiated at a celebration of the Holy Communion and Bishop Olmstead gave an historical address. Mr. Charles H. Addington, the senior warden, read a paper, entitled, "History of St. Paul's Church." Spirited after-dinner talks were made by a number of the clergy and laymen present. The Utica Press, commenting upon the event, says, "For a Church in a small village, St. Paul's has had many distinguished and able men and women, both clerical and lay, come there. Uticans well remember the late Rev. John B. Wicks, whose fine, lovable character, shed sunshine wherever he went. Even his delightful letters, when he was a correspondent of a Utica paper, exerted a wide influence. He was a great lover of nature, the birds being his special friends, and their visits, songs and character he recorded in praise and verse. Rev. Mr. Wicks has gone to his reward, but his memory still lingers and is inseparable from the history of St. Paul's Church, Paris Hill."

WORK OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS IN FRANCE.

The following is authorized by the Red Cross War Council:

In carrying out its work in France, the American Red Cross, in all its activities had expended up to July 1, 1918, the sum of $36,613,682.73. Of this amount the sum of $15,453,-049.87 was apportioned to relief work among the soldiers and strictly military activities. The balance of $21,-160,632.86 was apportioned to relief work among refugees, the fight against tuberculosis and other activities that have to do especially with relieving the sufferings of the civilian population.

The demand for the six months ending December 31, 1918, has seemed greater than any similar period, and an appropriation has therefore been made for this period amounting to $34,582,827.57, of which $20,753,410.01 is for relief among refugees, rehabilitation of devastated areas, the fight against tuberculosis, operating expenses and other civil relief activities. Thus the entire sum expended and appropriated for relief work in France from the beginning of the war to December 31, 1918, will amount to more than $70,000,000.

Activities in France, the most stupendous ever undertaken by the American Red Cross or any other relief organization, have had, among other objects, the maintenance of the military morale of our allies, relief of distress among families of soldiers, war victims and other civilians, and welfare work among our own soldiers.

During the first few months the expenditures called for were much larger in the work among the civilians than the soldiers—more than a million dollars up to March of the present year. Since that time conditions have been reversed, owing to the great influx of American soldiers.

To be aware of God means that we must see Him in nature and in history, that we must perceive Him in the lives of our fellow-men, and we must find Him in the recesses of our souls.—George Wharton Pepper.

Benjamin Franklin gave the following good advice: 'Do not anticipate trouble or worry about what may never happen."—"Keep in The Sunlight."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"I SPEAK UNTO YOU FATHERS; I SPEAK UNTO YOU YOUNG MEN."

It has, unhappily, come to be true and so a common lament, that a great many of the men of our country do not attend the Religious Services of God's House on Sundays. And a further complaint is heard very often that so many people are utterly indifferent to the success of Christianity as to be unwilling to contribute anything to its support.

Now, while these complaints are very common among Christian people it does not appear that any well-conceived efforts are being made either to account for this condition or to overcome it. It is true that an individual clergyman here and there, oppressed with a sense of the seriousness of the situation, mentions and bewails this condition in a sermon, or even more frequently, but his words fall upon unprepared and unaroused hearers who think him making a display of enthusiasm quite out of place, and may call him a modern Jeremiah and rather disagreeable, as there may be strangers in Church, they think, who ought not to hear such disheartening words.

And so it comes about that many and many an earnest Mniister of Christ, himself seriously agected by the knowledge of present-day weakness and neglect on the part of the men, holds his peace rather than disturb the satisfid indifference of some vestryman whose idea of duty is a poor substitute for the zeal which is required of an active and earnest discipleship. And there follows the result that conditions have been growing in this direction all the time worse; and Christianity has seemed to be losing its grip upon the men all over the land.

What an opportunity the war and the spirit it has evoked, provides to deal with this momentous issue in a sensible way, and to meet it after the pattern of our country's provision for our war needs. What an opportunity presents itself to arouse the enthusiasm of the men in support of the demands of Christianity upon them in the same way that the government of this country has aroused them to do so well their patriotic duty and has stirred them so deeply as to make them very willing both to opur unlimited money into the Treasury, and to respond themseles with their lives in behalf of the great cause of freedom against Military tyranny and despotic rule.

The same spirit which moved men's hearts in patriotic devotion to their country's call, is the spirit that must be awakened to promote a recognition of the obligations men are under to respond to God's call in the service He enjoins, and in the work which He will bless them in undertaking against the powers of evil in the world. And this campaign of education and of patriotic devotion to God, must originate in the substantial manner that the country has shown is the way men in earnest display when seeking to arouse themselves and others in a great and noble cause.—The Churchman and Church Messenger of Southern California.

THE MINISTRY OF ANGELS.

A Meditation for St. Michael and All Angels Day.

The Rev. Percy T. Fenn D, D.

How prone we all are to forget the ministry of angels! We scarcely ever give it a thought! And yet the Bible. from cover to cover, is full of this wonderful ministry!

From the Cherubim who kept, with flaming sword, the way to that tree of life, in Eden, to the angel of the Apocalypse, we see these blessed spirits occupied in the discharge of their duties,—never resting, never faltering, never dismayed by our indifference to their ministrations.

Protestantism, for what reason we have never been able to discover, has little to say about the angels, in sermons, speech, or song, and many of us seem to have imbibed the Protestant spirit in this respect.

But we have done this in spite of the fact that our Mother Church is continually reminding us of the existence, the character and the beneficent work of angels.

The Church year unfolds their splendid work in its relation to our Lord. We hear the angel Gabriel announce to Mary that she is to be the mother of our Lord. We hear the angel chorus on the plains of Bethlehem at Christmas-tide; we see St. Joseph, warned by an angel, turning away from a vindictive Herod, we see the angels ministering to Christ in the wilderness, and again, in the Garden of Gethsemane we see the angel rolling away the stone from the sepulchre, announcing the resurrection, and accompanying our Lord to His home in the skies.

And then, through the Sundays that follow Trinity, we read in our Lord's teachings of the work of the angels, and of their guardianship of man! But on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels all his previous teachings seems to be gathered up into one supreme effort to impress the fact upon our minds, and to drive home its importance. Fortunately the Feast will fall on a Sunday this year, so some of us will learn, for the first time in many years, by Scripture, Collects, Hymns and Sermons, of the existence and the work of the angels.

Perhaps we forget them because they are invisible: but this is no excuse. The greatest powers and forces of nature as well as of grace, are as invisible as the angels are.

The meaning of the word "angel" both in the Hebrew and the Greek is messenger. They stand between God and man as the highest spiritual beings made by God, and their duty is to glorify God, and to minister to Him and to His children everywhere. This thought is expressed in one of the hymns appointed for this feast:

"These are Thy ministers, these dost Thou own,
God of Sabaoth, the nearest Thy throne;
These are Thy messengers, these dost Thou send,
Help of the helpless ones! man to defend."

At the beginning of the Middle Ages there were many stories of angelic apparitions, and belief in guardian angels was almost universal.

St. Michael is specially commemorated on the 29th of September because he is the Patron of the Church on earth, just as he was the Prince, or Tutelar Saint of the Jewish nation. And in the Anglican communion there are nearly a thousand church buildings named after him.

But it is the ministry of angels which strikes the key-note of this Feast. We think at this time of the nearness of the angels, of their untiring activity on our behalf, of their persistent ministrations in spite of our baffling indifference. And what a glorious thought it is!

God has told us in His Holy Word, that He sends His angels to take care of us. We may not be able to see him, but they are always near, always ministering to us. Just as an angel brought the food to Elijah, just as an angel shut the lions' mouths so that they could not hurt Daniel, so do they minister to us. "Every man," says a Turkish allegory, has two angels, one on his right shoulder and another on his left. When he does anything good, the angel on his right shoulder writes it down in his book and seals it, because what is done is done for ever. When he has done evil, the angel on his left shoulder writes it down; he waits till midnight; if before that the man bows down his head and exclaims, 'Gracious Allah, I have sinned, forgive me,' the angel rubs it out with a sponge; if not, at midnight he seals it, and the angel on the man's right shoulder weaps."

There is probably a good deal of truth in this little allegory! For we are distinctly told that the angels rejoice over one sinner that repenteth. And so we remember at this time our guardian angel. We are being watched over, and cared for, and clasped and cherished, and held up and delivered by the angels of God. They are fighting our battles for us against Satan and his evil agencies, they are whispering holy thoughts and aspirations as we trudge along the way of life, they are probably shielding us from temptation, from illness and from accident in the faithful performance of their duties. We can all remember some wonderful deliverances, some sudden and unexpected inspirations—may they not have been caused by the interpositions of the angels?

This is undoubtedly the teaching of the Bible and the Church, and this it is which makes the feast of St. Michael and all Angels so precious to us. If we seem to be cast out and uncared for, like poor Lazarus of old, let us remember that we are in the thoughts and in the keeping of God's good angels who will never cast us out, but who will, after their life-long ministry, convey us at last to Abraham's bosom.

The angel of the Lord encampeth about us by day and by night to preserve us from all danger, and he has been given charge of us to keep us in all our ways.

We hold the keys of Heaven within our hands,
The gift and heirloom of a former state,
And lie in infancy at Heaven's gate,
Transfigured in the light that streams along the lands!
Around our pillows golden ladders rise,
And up and down the skies,
With winger sandals shod,
The angels come, and go, the Messenggers of God!

Let us then keep the feast this year with grateful, appreciative hearts. Let us thank and adore God for the loving provision He has made for our safety, and let us resolve never to do anything, or to say anything that will make our guardian angel ashamed.

"O Everlasting God, Who hast ordained and constituted the services of angels and men in a wonderful order; mercifully grant that, as Thy Holy Angels always do Thee service in heaven, so, by Thy appointment, they may succor and defend us on earth; through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen." (Collect for St. Michael and all Angels.)

THE WOMAN ON THE STEPS.

Helen Dunn Creasy in the Mission Herald.

It was a bright, sunny Sunday, in the latter part of September with only the faintest suggestion of coldness in the air, but to the poor woman cowering on the steps of one of the city churches, the light breeze, which whipped her ragged garments, seemed to chill the very life-blood in her veins. The tattered calico dress, that is its youth had been only a poor parody on what it was meant to represent bravely attempted to cover her shaking limbs, but it was pitifully inadesuate. One emaciated foot to which clung a piece of torn leather, evidently once in the dim past a shoe, was tucked under her in a vain struggle for warmth; and in place of the other foot a stiff wooden peg protruded from under her skirt. The thin wrinkled hands, in which every bone was plainly visible, covered the sunken cheeks and sightless eyes, as though to protect them from the stares of the over curious. Every line of the drooping figure spoke loudly of utter dejection and excessive hunger, while the sun pitilessly revealed all of the furrows left by care and starvation on the time-worn face.

Just then the church bells pealed forth loudly in the Sabbath stillness and soon she could feel the congregation brush against her as they hurried past. Ever and anon a murmur of pity would penetrate her weary brain and a thankful feeling would flood through her veins bringing new life and hope, only to be drowned in disappointment as the owner of the voice hurried on.

Finally one man, kinder than the rest, stooped down and pressed a dollar bill into her wrinkled hand, but she was too exhausted to do more than murmmur a faint, "God bless you," as she pushed back her bonnet with a trembling hand. A dollar has had many possibilities when one has had nothing to eat but a small piece of dry bread, in the last twenty-four hours.

Inside the church the preacher was delivering a most inspiring sermon by which he related the parable of the Good Samaritan, while the congregation warmly wrapped in their expensive furs and comfortable in their cushioned seats thought with pity of that man of olden times, but never once thought of helping the poor shivering wisp of humanity crouching on the steps outside. One man, perhaps, experienced a feeling of contentment at he thought of a good deed in his opinion well done, and gazed around on his neighbors with a complacent air, while outside the woman shivered for the lack of proper nalment and nourishment.

Finally, feeling that motion might stir her sluggish blood and impart a degree of warmth to her paralyzed body the waif painfully rose and grasping her stick in her shrunken hand took a tottering step forward.

"Look at that old bundle of rags" cried a heedless youth, "why it's a woman, and she has fallen down."

The old woman had fainted—inside the church the voices of the comfortably clothed congregation rose on the magnificent strains of the Doxology, while in the heavens Jesus wept.

John Wesley once said: "I dare no more fret than I dare curse or swear."

IT WILL INSPIRE YOU TO GREATER CONSECRATION AND ZEAL.

After reading the following catechism, cut it out and hand it to some friend in your parish who does not read a Church paper.

Question. Why do you take a daily paper?

Answer. Because I want to know what is going on in the world, and to keep in touch with its life.

Q. Why do you take your home town paper?

A. For the same reason that I take a daily paper, and because I want to show my interest in local affairs.

Q. Why do you take one or more of the popular monthly magazines,

A. Because as an intelligent person I want to keep in touch with the world's thought.

Q. Why do you take the Ladies' Home Journal or the Woman's Home Companion?

A. Because I am a home-maker and a housekeeper, and their suggestions are very helpful.

Q. Why do you take a fashion magazine?

A. Because I want to be "up-to-date" in the styles.

Q. Would you employ a physician or an architect or any workman whose skill is required, if he never read his professional or trade journals?

A. Certainly not. I have no use for a self-sufficient person who "knows it all." This is a progressive age, full of progressive ideas—every man must know what his fellow workmen are doing.

Q. Do you know the name of the President of the United States,

A. Of course I do.

Q. Do you know the name of the President of the Episcopal Church in the United States—the Presiding Bishop?

A. I don't remember it just this moment.

Q. Would you know the name of the Bishop of your own Diocese, if he did not once in a while visit your parish?

A. How could I?

Q. What do you know about the Church—her principles, her teaching, her life—about the leaders who are 'doing things," moulding her thought—about the workers who are adopting her methods to present day conditions—the Parish Guilds and the Woman's Auxiliaries all over this broad land—the best things they are doing? Where can you get the information to be "up-to-date" in Church matters—progressive, intelligent? How can you keep in touch with her life unless you do as in all other departments of your life—take the papers?

You need not answer these questions.

The practical answer is a subscription to The Witness, which is published at the nominal price of only One Dollar a year, to keep you in close touch with the Church, and inspire you to a greater consecration and zeal in her purposes in your own Parish, in your Diocese, and throughout the world.

WHY HAVE YOU LOST THE HABIT?

It is not sufficient to say, "I have lost the habit of going to church."

Why have you lost the habit?

In what respect are the things which you do on Sunday morning superior to church-going?

Do these things touch your conscience and make it keener or instruct it and make it more accurate?

Do these things take away your conceit and at the same time inspire you with fresh confidence that is worth while to try to amend?

Do the substitutes for church-going give you a new sense of your common heritage with all men. your common interests, making your likeness to ordinary people far outweigh your dissimilarity? Do they awaken echoes of the deep, natural longings for nobler life and the vague suspicions that Soul of the World sympathizes with them and will, if asked, be glad to help them—longings which were old long before the pyramids were built?

This is what certainly comes to one who does regularly and frequently attend church with an open mind, willing to be taught of God through any agency which God may choose to employ, the prayers, the hymns, the readings from the Bible, the sermon, the building itself, the congregation, or any other element there present.

Face the facts then.—Milwaukee Church Times.

PRONUNCIATION OF WAR WORDS AND NAMES IN CURRENT USE.

The following list was compiled by the Washington Star, from the latest revisions of the New Standard, the Century, Webster's New International and Sir James Murray's New English Dictionary; from recent rulings of leading English lexicographers, and from information supplied by officers of the French commission, and by executive and departmental chiefs.

Ally (a-lie). Accent on second—not on first—syllable. Widely mispronounced.

Allies (a-lize). Accent on second—not on first—syllable.

Aeroplane (ay-er-a-plane). Accent on first syllable. Not air-a-plane.

Accouter (a-koo-ter). Accent on second syllable.

Caisson (kay-sen). Accent on first syllable.

Caponiere (kap-a-neer). Accent on third syllable.

Camouflage (kom-moo-flash), both a's as in "father"). Accent on last syllable.

Cantonment (kan-t'n-m'nt). Accent on first syllable preference of Century Dictionary, of President Wilson and Secretary Baker, and a majority of New Standard's board on disputed pronounciation; or (kan-toon-ment), accent on second syllable, preference of New Standard and of many military men. Kan-tonement is wrong.

Communique (kah-moo-nee-kay), first as as in "father," second as in "ate"). Accent on last syllable.

Khaki (kah-ki a as in "father"). Accent on first syllable.

Morale (mowe-rahl, a as in "father"). Accent on second syllable.

Lese-majeste (leez-maj-es-ty). Accent on "maj."

Polu (pwah-lu). Accent on first syllable, a as in "father."

Questionnaire (kes-yun-nair). Accent on third syllable. The Standard alone records qwes-chin-nair, accent on third syllable, which Dr. Vizetelly, managing editor of The Standard, declares an error. Questionnaire is the French form of the English "questionary."

Ukase (you-kace). Accent on second syllable.

Aisne (ane).

Amiens (ah-mi-ahn, a's as in "father"). Accent on third syllable; or, ay-mi-ens, accent on first syllable.

Arras (ahr-rahs, both a's as in "father"). Accent on second syllable.

Avignon (ah-vee-nyon, a as in "father," o as in "nor"). Accent on last syllable.

Avre (ah-v'r). Accent on first syllable.

Beauvais (bow-vay). Accent on second syllable.

Calais (kal-is). Accent on first syllable; or, (French) kah-lay, a as in "father," accent on second syllable.

Cambrai (kahn-bray). Accent on second syllable.

Dieppe (dee-ep). Accent on second syllable.

Foch, General (fawsh).

Moreuil (mow-rool). Accent on second syllable.

Montdidier (mawn-dee-dee-ay). Accent on last syllable.

St. Quentin (sahn-kahn-tahn), a's as in "father"). Accent on last syllable.

Noyon (nawn-yawn, first a as in "father," second as in "raw"). Accent on second syllable.

Oise (wahz, a as in "father").

Picardy (pick-er-dy). Accent on first syllable.

Rouen (roo-ahn). Accent on second syllable.

Trouville (troo-veel). Accent on second syllable.

Ypres (ee-peer). Accent on second syllable; or, 'epp'f.

THE PRAYER OF A BOY.

By the Dean of Norwich.

God, who created me
Nimble and light of limb,
In three elements free,
To run, to ride, to swim;
Not when the sense is dim,
But now from the heart of joy,
I would remember Him:
Take the thanks of a boy.

Jesus, King and Lord,
Whose are my foes to fight,
Grant me Thy sword,
Swift and sharp and bright.
Thee would I serve if I might;
And conquer if I can.
From day-dawn till night,
Take the strength of a man.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Laborer is Worthy of His Hire

From the Literary Digest.

In every crisis of national life the clergymen of America have stood in the forefront of patriotic endeavor; in every human crisis they have brought support and guidance, and comfort to souls in desperate need. Now is the time to measure the work and the needs of the preacher and pastor as men in other departments of work today are being measured, that their value may be rightly appraised and their needs fairly met.

The cost of living has greatly increased. Clothing, food, fuel, and all the daily incidentals that go to make up American life have gone up from thirty to a hundred per cent. And the loans and taxes for Freedom's war are ever making deeper drives into the purse. Wage-earners in every department of the nation's work have peen demanding more income, and their demands have been recognized as just and necessary. Railroad men and miners, lumberjacks and ship-builders, munition-workers, telegraph-operators, automobile-makers, and all the multitudes of skilled and unskilled laborers have been counted "worthy of their hire, and of higher hire. The United States Government, very recently, has raised the wages of two million railroad workers alone, giving the poorest paid men an increase of 43 per cent. Corporations and individual employers without number throughout the United States have taken similar atcion. Trade-unions are standing back of the men and using pressure when necessary to gain for them the means to live their lives and do their work as Americans should.

Who stands back of the clergy of America in these days of pressure? What great organization or compelling authority, what generous heart or spirit of fair play is winning for your minister, or pastor, or priest, or rabbi the salary increase that will give him strength, courage, efficiency, and success in his vital and exalted work for the welfare of the nation, and the Kingdom of God?

The Pastor Is Not a Cheap Man.

Your pastor is not a cheap man, not an unskilled laborer. He has brought long, careful training to his task. He was chosen with scrutinizing care as to his qualifications, and he is being measured today by high and exacting requirements in the performance of his work. Carry that measurement to its just conclusion. What salary would you expect to pay to the trained man in business of whom such important work and expert ability were required? Set down on paper some of the qualities and duties you demand of your pastor and then judge their value.

He must be a man among men, a man of force, tact, and agreeable personality, a good mixer, a man of knowledge, wisdom, and authority, whose presence commands respect and whose word carries conviction. He must be able to influence men and women, win their confidence, kindle their enthusiasm, direct their energies, and organize their working powers. He must be full of sympathy, ready with consolation, a strength in weakness, a bright light in times of darkness, and a never-failing source of inspiration to the souls of his people. You expect all this of him.

Your pastor, also, must be a successful head and center of your organized church activities, business, social and spiritual. On occasion, or as a regular part of his task, he must be an expert money-raiser. You engage him as your chief and leader, the general manager of your church, if not its actual creator, or savior from its difficulties. You put upon him a burden and a responsibility you would never dream of entrusting to any cheap man in business.

Nor are those his greatest tasks. He must read, and study, and meditate, and commune with the Infinite. He must understand men, and know their work, their trials, their problems, their temptations, their deep inner feelings and aspirations, and the avenues of helpful approach to their sympathies and convictions. He must know something of history, science, literature. He must be familiar with all social needs, and institutions, and methods. He must be able to interpret the Word of God with true spiritual insight, and practical application. He must stand before you in the pulpit on the Sabbath and deliver messages that search the soul, feed the mind, bring courage to the heart, make plain the path of daily life, and lift you nearer to heaven, or bring heaven nearer to earth.

In these days, also, your preacher must proclaim the ideals and principles of America. He must stir the patriotism of his young men and send them with strong hearts and noble vision into the service of their country. He must pastor them in the camps and follow them with his letters and prayers as they go across the sea to fight. The Government values him so highly that it has already called thousands of American clergymen into active service to shepherd the fighting men and help them win the war. At home the government calls him to be its mouthpiece in its appeals to its citizens for every form of patriotic service or economy prescribed as needful for victory. You expect your pastor to be equal to such demands and to do your church credit when called upon for public addresses or community action.

Clergymen's Salaries A Pitiful Shame.

When you have listed all the qualities and services you ask of your pastor, make out the bill for the amount your church ought to pay for such a man, and then move things to see that the church pays that bill. Never mind what has been done in the past, nor what long habit has accustomed the Church to believe can be done. The standing record of clergymen's salaries throughout this great rich nation is a pitiful shame, and belies the real heart and fairness of the American people. The average salary of clergymen in ten of the largest denominations is only $793 a year. What trade or business would tolerate such a condition?

The minister of your Church is a human being like the rest of us, and he is feeling the pressure of increased cost of living just as we do. But no government decree has raised his salary. No corporation or trade-union stands back of him. He does not go on strike. He simply trusts his people and works faithfully for them seven days a week, and many nights, and struggles to look respectable, and pay his bills, and perform the miracles expected of him, often for less than the salary of the young girl stenographer who teaches a class in his Sunday school or the wages of the man who lays the sidewalk in front of his church.

Among the more than two million readers of The Literary Digest are active and substantial members of thousands of churches throughout the United States. To them this appeal is made, in keeping with the urgent needs of the day, and the American spirit of justice and generosity. Give your minister a lift. Take the initiative now and have his salary increased to an amount which will come nearer to the real value of his services, and enable him to meet the increased cost of living. He is not demanding it, but he needs it none the less, and your own sense of right demands it for him. If his salary is $800, it ought to be made, at once, $1,200. If it is $1,000, it ought to be raised to $1,500. There is scarcely a church, large or small, anywhere in America that can not increase its pastor's salary at least 20 per cent. Money never was so plentiful. More actual cash—gold, silver and paper currency—is in circulation today than at any time in the nation's history, and there is a bigger share for every man, woman and child. See that your pastor gets his fair share of your profits and those of every member in your church.

Your Minister is Fighting For America.

Back up the soldiers of America who follow the flag to France! Billions for them! Nothing is too much nor too good for our soldiers of liberty. But now remember that your minister is one of the bravest, worthiest soldiers of all. He is fighting for America, for the righteousness that "exalteth a nation." He is fighting for America, as he puts his clean, valiant, patriotic spirit into the youth and into the men and women of his congregation and sends them out into the tasks of the week better fitted to answer America's call. He is fighting for the Kingdom of Heaven on earth, to help win its victories over the arch-enemy of the human race, the destroyer of bodies and souls. He is the soldier of mercy to those in distress, the ever-ready soldier of service to those who need help. Back him up with whole-hearted support and a quick, generous increase in salary.

We have taken this page to speak for the clergymen of America in this supreme crisis of the nation's readjustment, because we know that we are the one great devoted, indispensable body of faithful workers who have no spokesman. Only in this way has it seemed possible to reach the individual consciences and hearts of millions of men and women who, in all our experience, have never failed to respond to any just call.

NOT A SHOCK ABSORBER.

The Rev. Albert Martin, editor of The Church News, Diocese of Mississippi, comments as follows on a vacation experience at some point, not indicated, on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico:

Two days on the Gulf Coast has convinced us that as a Shock Absorber we are a poor success. Modesty forbids us to particularize and, besides, this issue has to go through the United States postoffice, and Uncle Sam is ver y keen in the nature of the literature in publications. Sufficient to say our two days' sojourn on the Coast reminded us of a song the boys used to sing:

"Said Aaron to Moses, 'Tis really sad to see
In taking of their morning dips,
The bathers are too free;
They appear at the sea-side
With scarcely any closes,
You really couldn't look at them—
O, couldn't I? said Moses."

We saw a great deal of the Summer Tourist on the Coast. We have given the matter much thought and we are compelled to confess that we cannot understand the psychology of wearing a raincoat which reaches down to one's very toes in the short trip to the beach, and then throwing the coat aside for ever and for good at the water's edge. Also we thought that bathers went bathing to go in the water. We have concluded that it must be because water dilutes everything—even sweet modesty.

The venerable Dr. Logan refers to the Good Old Times, and takes occasion to say that these are not the "Spacious Days of the Great Elizabeth." It seems to us that we have heard in the Good Old Times they used to bathe UNDER the bath house, in long skirts. And it is true that these are not the "Spacious Days of the Great Elizabeth." They are more spacious than the Great Elizabeth ever dreamed that days could be. In fact, these days seem to be wide open, the lid off and the sky for the limit. Here is a great opportunity for our Gulf Coast Clergy to create a Public Opinion.

A JUST AND LASTING PEACE.

"My hope and prayer for America today is that she may so wisely and forcibly expend her energies as to win this war against the foes of God and man, and together with our gallant Allies, establishing a just and lasting peace on the earth. * * * Beyond the perplexities of the hour I cherish a belief that the unification of the English-speaking peoples upon a broad and stable foundation of righteousness and service will realize the dreams of our chosen leaders on both sides of the Atlantic. Such a federation dedicated to the causes of humanity and justice, and held in closest alliance with freedom-loving nations everywhere will be one of the redemptive consequences of an unparalleled sacrifice."—Dr. Parkes Cadman.

WORK OF THE MISSIONARY EDUCATION MOVEMENT.

The Missionary Education Movement is engaged in a nation-wide cooperative effort to bring home to people the work and needs of missions throughout the world. Seventy-seven homes and foreign mission boards unite in using this Movement as a clearing house to produce literature for study in the churches. This literature and other helps are graded, as in the field of secular education.

The Movement was organized in July, 1902, at Silver Bay, on Lake George, N. Y.

The management is composed of mission board secretaries and laymen.

1,547,664 text-books have been published and sold in the sixteen years of the Movement's activities.

Millions of copies of kindred publications have been issued annually.

More than 100,000 mission study classes have been held. 2,000,000 members of these classes are now the leaders in the Churches. Many more millions, young and old, have been informed through other methods. Hundreds have entered Christian forms of life-work.

16,800 leaders have been given advanced teacher training in summer conferences for missionary leadership. More than twice that number have received like training in institutes and other educational gatherings.

To meet the war period deficit, provide the budget for the balance of 1918 and to the end of the fiscal year, December 1, 1918, a financial campaign is being made to raise $112,750.

Bishop Lloyd Commends Movement.

Bishop Lloyd, President of the General Board of Missions, has written the following letter in behalf of the Movement:

"Anything I can do to help the Missionary Education Movement will be grateful to me. I have watched it practically from the beginning, and it has seemed to me to be a very real influence, not only for bringing Christian people nearer together, but for making them to understand the significance of that mission which was intrusted to them. Anything that will strengthen this Movement will, I am sure, help mightily to establish civilization, since it will render positive assistance towards making people understand the Revelation which must be known and accepted before Civilization (Democracy) can be established in the earth. You have my best wishes—I wish I could help you financially. From what I have known of him I should say you have been fortunate in securing the Rev. Dr. Ball as Secretary. May he be blessed in his work."

THE PLAGUE OF PROFANITY.

This country now is cursed with a plague of profanity. There is more of it on the street than a year ago, license for which is found in messages from the pulpit. Some preachers indulge in swearing which is just as profane as any kind of swearing dare be. "To hell with the Kaiser," perhaps is the most frequent.

We think that the Kaiser is facing toward the bottomless pit; but that is no excuse for the objectionable language that is framed up for effect. There is no call for pulpit profanity—none whatever. He who engages in it wins applause, which, of course, is the reward he is seeking; but at the same time he sacrifices the respect of all the pure-minded and clean-hearted men in hi saudience. We cannot kill the Kaiser with words. Let us be decent i nour language, and not belittle ourselves and insult our Lord.—Religious Telescope.

A PRAYER.

Dear Lord, I humbly bow my head and pray to Thee;
In full contrition now I kneel, forgive Thou me!
Help me to live a better life I Thee implore,
Forgive my sins and let me learn, to love Thee more.

Far from Thy side how oft I stray, forgetting Thee;
Doing my will instead of Thine, so selfishly;
Look down in pity from Thy throne, even on me,
And help me by Thy guiding hand to serve but Thee.

Ungrateful would I be indeed, and great my loss,
To love Thee not, when Thou did'st die upon the Cross:
O may my walk through life's brief day lead but to Thee;
That when the end shall come I'll find, I'm safe with Thee!

S. Constance Boehm.

The American Red Cross canteen at " a center in France" runs so efficiently that it is possible to serve 600 men in fifteen minutes! Adjoining is a rest room with twenty baths and showers.—Red Cross Bulletin.

SPECIAL PRAYERS USED IN A CHICAGO SUBURBAN PARISH.

The following prayers, neatly printed in a small circular, have been presented to the members of Grace Church parish, Oak Park, Ill., with the request, "Paste this in your Prayer Book and use daily."

Prayers for Noon-Tide.

Blesesd Lord, Who hast promised to be with Thy people to the end of the world; be with our allied armies and navies, in this world conflict; give us the Victory and bring us to lasting peace through Victory. All of which we ask in the Name of Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

* * *

Almighty God, Giver of all good things, watch over our boys engaged in this great war; surround them with Thy protecting Love; and keep them and all others who are with our army and navy, from all evil, and under the shadow of Thy good Providence, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* *

O Lord, help us to do Thy Will; and bring us all home to Thee; all Home one with another; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

A WAR PRAYER

O Almighty and Eternal God, look down from Heaven, we humbly beseech Thee; behold and relieve the distress of nations and the weakness of men. Look upon the sufferings of Thy people, for whom Thy Beloved Son did suffer and gave His life a sacrifice. Let Thy richest blessings be upon this nation in its hour of perplexity and distress; be with it and also with the peoples who have been the forerunners, and are now our associates in this great war; be with us all in this present struggle; and grant us the will to do Thy will. Sanctify this people and grant it a right perception in all things. Let sacrifice triumph over selfishness, and reliance on Thee over weakness.

Teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom—the wisdom to be prepared in all things, ready for the days of terror and bitterness as for the days of rejoicing.

* * *

Teach men that Thou alone art King over all the earth; and give them a mind to work willingly and diligently for the coming of that great day when free men shall walk before Thee in righteousness.

* * *

Go with our boys in camp, field, trench, in the air and on the great waters. May those who pass under the baptism of blood pass into Thy Eternal Kingdom, as did the martyrs of old. Be with them in their hours of suffering and make Thyself known to them in hours of darkness.

* * *

Great victory in the arms of free peoples, and freedom and a long liberty to those who have yielded themselves to the slavery of earthly kings, and bring us all in peace at last, friends and foes, all home to Thee, all home one with another.

* *

And we pray that peace and righteousness may reign upon the earth, through Jesus Christ our Lord, the the Prince of Peace, through Whom we pray

"Our Father, Who art in Heaven."

* * *

A Prayer for Victory.

O most powerful and glorious Lord God, the Lord of Hosts, who rulest and commandest all things, and sittest upon the Throne judging right: Hear us, we humbly beseech Thee, and grant to us victory over all our enemies; and bring to us, through victory, peace forever more. All which we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* * *

The Rev. Dr. F. R. Godolphin is the Rector of Grace Church, and the Rev. S. R. S. Gray is the Assistant. Oak Park is one of the largest and most beautiful suburbs of Chicago, and Grace Church is one of the strongest parishes in the Diocese.

Let us, so far as may be, look at life steadily and whole. It is not all darkness; it has its crimson dawns, its rosy sunsets. Its blackest clouds have their silver embroideries, and through the rifts we may catch glimpsse of the radiant blue of heaven.—Canon Farrar.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. No. 92. HOBART, INDIANA, OCTOBER 5, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

INTER-CHURCH CONGRESS AT CHICAGO

Bishop Gore of Oxford and Dr. Guttery of Liverpool Address Mass Meeting.

A National Inter-Church war-work congress was held in Chicago, September 24-27, under the auspieces of the Chicago War-Work Committee of the churches and the moral aims of the war, and the National Commission on Inter-Church Federation. The general theme of the Congress was, "International Christian Fellowship in the War." A series of conferences were held at the Sherman House, followed by a public mass meeting, which closed the Congress, at the Auditorium theatre on the evening of the 27th ult. Four thousand loyal American citizens were in the audience. It was in many respects a great meeting but nothing like the enthusiasm prevailed as was manifested by the Greeks at their loyalty mass meeting held the previous Sunday evening at the Auditorium when Archbishop Meletios spoke, and when the National airs of all our allies were sung. The American National airs were sung at the Inter-Church meeting on Friday evening with a heartiness of spirit that was inspiring. But the singing was confined to American airs, although disintinguished Englishmen were the honored guests. Mr. L. Wilbur Messer General Secretary of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. presided. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Charles P. Anderson, Bishop of Chicago, gave the Invocation.

Mr. Goeffrey Bulter, Director of the British Bureau of Information in America, was the first speaker, taking for his subject, "Unity of the Allies and the Common Cause."

He asserted that "America is finding her soul and saving herself in the war." It was a carefully thought out and informing address. The principle speakers were the Rt. Rev. Dr. Charles Gore, Bishop of Oxford, England, and Dr. Arthur T. Guttery an eminent minister of the Primitive Methodist Church, Liverpool, England.

Bishop Gore is well known to Churchmen in the United States and throughout the world. His books are widely read by the clergy and laity of the Anglican Communion and his friendship for the laboring man has given him additional prominence. He came to the United States as an avowed apostle of the League of Nations Movement. His visit to this country was arranged through the American and British Departments of Public Information. The Bishop has held the title of Honorary Chaplain and later served as Chaplain in Ordinary to Queen Victoria and has also held the same position in the household of King Edward. The Bishop spoke on "Labor and the War." He said in part:

"It is a great privilege to an Englishman to be here in such a meeting as this. I cannot tell you how it thrills our hearts to witness the unanimity and enthusiasm that America is puting into the determination to win this war. In particular, I confess, it overwhelms one to find the great world of labor supporting the war. Ten years ago, in almost any part of the world, such a thing would have been impossible. Elements were at work then, which would have driven labor into opposition. The very thought of unanimity under such conditions as obtained would seem impossible. It is a miracle that has made unanimity possible. Labor knows what it is about. I am one of those who loved the German people and valued highly their men of genius, but the German spirit has been so devilish—destructive of the very principles of liberty that one rebels, and labor knows that, only through united action, liberty can be secured against military autocracy to which the German people have sold their souls. England was on the eve of a domestic war before the great war began. It was threatened by three internal wars, the Irish question, and a war of women against men, and a war of labor against capital. The women have gained what they wanted. The Irish question must yet be settled. In England the labor question is more mature than in the United States. In England labor long ago became conscious of explotation that has been going on for generations, that labor had been used to the advantage of the few. The principle of equality of opportunity for all men had been violated and there have been constant mutterings and strikes leading up almost to a declaration of war. We are reaping in England the just judgment of God for our treatment of labor. Labor in England today is suspicious. I believe these suspicions are unjustified. Labor drew up a program-reasonable but drastic. A commission was appointed on the Relation of the Church to Labor composed of eminent men in every walk of life, of which the Bishop was a member. The Commission will present a report at an early date which coincides with the labor program. The great middle class has declared in favor of labor. The old Church, the Church of England, comes in rather late, but better late than never. The Church is waking up—the English and the Free—the Church in all its parts, is waking up to the spiritual qualities of men. Has come to realize that the real message of Jesus Christ is a message of social justice. War for peace is a war of justice, and justice means the same thing in the relation of nation to nation as in the relation of individuals in the nations. Men are not all created equal. But every soul has the divine right to equal opportunity to make the best of life. To deprive any human being of the opportunity to realize his own being under favorable conditions and to stand and know himself is wrong. The invasion of Belgium made possible the support of labor in the war. The whole Church is waking up to the demand of equality, of opportunity for all men. We are on the road to victory, and you can be of great assistance to us, said the Bishop, in other ways than by showing enthusiasm for war by public utterances and in the newspapers, by demanding that the war shall be for peace and won for justice between nation and nation and between men of every color and class with the right and the opportunity to make the most of themselves for the glory of God."

The closest attention was given the Bishop throughout his address and his pungent sentences enlisted frequent applause.

Dr. Guttery came to this country directly from the American battle line in France. He is the recognized leader of his denomination and is one of the foremost public speakers in Great Britain. He spoke on "League of Nations."

"We have come," said Dr. Guttery "to the brighter days of victory—victory on the west by American boys over old and long trained military veterans—Victory in the East. Thank God Palastine is in the hands of the British and will never again come

(Continued on Page Six.)

BISHOP PERRY AT THE FRONT.

The Head Red Cross Chaplain in France—His First Message From Overseas.

The official organ of the Diocese of Rhode Island, The Record, makes the following comment upon Bishop Perry's appointment and work as Head Red Cross Chaplain in France:

With hundreds of young men from the several parishes on the firing line, many of the clergy on it, or very near it, in one capacity or another, the hearts of the people at home glow with sympathy, some almost bleeding with anxiety, even with sorrow for what has happened there. Members of parishes as well as members of families feel that they are represented there as they look on the stars in their service flags. Families are there, and parishes are there in spirit. Now, since Bishop Perry has left to take Bishop McCormick's place as the Head Red Cross Chaplain in France, the Diocese as a whole is there. He represents every soul, young and old, in it at the Front, that is what is felt. There is a deeper interest than ever in what is going on. The Church as well as the army is there.

He also represents the War Commission over there, and not only will he, as Head Red Cross Chaplain, have charge of the base hospitals located some distance from the front, the field hospitals placed wherever needed, and the evacuation hospitals very near the trenches, but whatever affects the welfare of the men of the Church in the army, or in any other branch of the service, will be under his charge. All this will bring him into direct contact with all sections of the fighting front. He is in it body, heart and soul, and is eminently fitted for it. His mind, his spirit and his executive ability as a Churchman has already been tested, as the Head of this Diocese, and on important committees of the Church at large. The patriotic spirit of the Perry's and the DeWolf's as shown in national affairs of the past is in him in the present crisis. While in training at Plattsburg as a soldier, his influence as a Bishop and a Christian was felt underneath his uniform. The field services he held there will be long remembered by those who had the privilege of taking part in them. He was a leader in the great Preparedness Movement in Providence. On the Church War Commission, he not only worked indefatigably in the Wall Street office, but wherever he was, he maintained a large correspondence, and was called now and again to Philadelphia, Chicago, Louisville or Washington for interviews with committees or with the Heads of the War and Navy Departments. Besides all this, he visited nearly all the great cantonments in the country east of the Rocky Mountains, and came not only in contact with those in command, but with the soldiers themselves, meeting many of them for personal talks, as well as having Holy Baptism, Confirmation and the celebration of the Holy Communion for them. He has become intimately acquainted with the men in preparation, with what is required of them and with their spirit. Now he is becoming acquainted with them in active service and with their still greater needs.

As the Standing Committee of the Diocese gave him leave of absence for the work of the War Commission, which he so successfully carried out, they have given him leave of absence for six months' service in France. Men, women and children in the Diocese are with him there, and are sure that they will be nobly represented. No detail will be too small not to be attended to, and no danger too great not to be met. He knows all young men from the Diocese by face as well as by name, for he has confirmed

(Continued on Page Four.)

WORK OF THE WAR COMMISSION

Status of Civilian Chaplains—Proposition to Join With Other Religious Bodies.

At a meeting of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church at Washington, D. C., on Wednesday, September 25, the following were the items of principal interest to the chaplains and people in general:

Since the last meeting of the Commission an order has been issued by the War Department, dated July 24, withdrawing the privileges of civilian chaplains and giving them three months' notice within which to settle their affairs and to withdraw from the camps.

It is uncertain as yet what kind of an interpretation will be put upon this order. Evidently the local commandant has a wide latitude of privilege in interpreting the order. In some camps the commandant has asked the civilian chaplains to prepare to withdraw; in other camps the commandant has placed the religious affairs of the camp in the hands of a divisional commissioned chaplain and has allowed him to associate with himself not only other commissioned chaplains but civilian chaplains as well. In at least one case a commandant has asked a civilian chaplain to assume a particular kind of work and has informally assured him of his continuance in the camp. In other words, it is impossible to say at present just what final action will be taken by the War Department, but is safe to prophesy that its policy will be clearly understood within a comparatively short period, and that thereafter the War Commission may be able to pursue its work with full knowledge of the conditions.

The Executive Secretary has written to bishops, civilian chaplains and others vitally concerned in this matter, requesting them not to encourage further appointments of civilian chaplains pending the final interpretation of this order, but also asking that those at present at work should continue at their posts and should in the meantime seek to discover the feeling of the local commandant on this matter. The War Commission has also, through the Executive Secretary, assured civilian chaplains already at work, that they will not suffer financially in consequence of any action on the part of the War Department.

In regard to the commissioned chaplains, it may be said that at present one commissioned chaplain is allowed for every twelve hundred men. There is as yet an insufficiency of commissioned chaplains to fill the need either in this country or abroad. Chaplains are, however, being appointed with greater haste than heretofore in order that the need may be met as quickly as possible.

The War Commission is giving each one of the commissioned chaplains overseas permission to draw on Bishop Perry for a sum not to exceed $100 a month, such sum to be used for the more effective despatch of his work among the soldiers.

Commissioned chaplains, both those who are students at the Army Chaplains' Training School and those who have not been ordered to that school, are given $100 apiece for their equipment. They are also allowed to borrow from the Commission any sum not exceeding $500 without interest for a period of eighteen months, with possibility of renewal. The loan is intended to enable our chaplains to begin their work in as thoroughly prepared a way as possible.

Commissioned chaplains stationed on this side are allowed by the Commissioned $50 a month for work among their men. The rule applies to chaplains in the navy as well as to those in the army. Civilian chaplains are given a like amount.

At present from fifteen to twenty chaplains of our Church are passing through each session of the Army Chaplains' Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky. The chances are that this number will be greatly increased within the next few weeks. The session of the school lasts about five weeks and covers the important branches of learning necessary to the official duty of the chaplain.

Chaplains of all three orders are equipped whenever possible with portable altars, Corona typewriters, service books, and with vestments when they are not already supplied.

Since the last meeting of the Commission the following organizations have affiliated themselves with the Commission: The Brotherhood of St. Andrew; the Church Periodical Club, and the Girls' Friendly Society. Preliminaries to an affiliation are at present being considered by the Joint Social Service Commission; the Guild of St. Barnabas and the General Board of Religious Education.

The terms of affiliation are, in general, that the society in question shall permit the chairman of the War Commission, or the chairman of the Executive Commimttee of the War Commission, or any member of the Executive Committee whom either may appoint, to preside over the meeting of the committee of such organization which has in its charge the war work of the organization; and, furthermore, that the detailed plans of work, together with the nominations of secretaries for field work and the salaries of workers, as well as all financial questions concerned with war work of said society, be finally passed upon at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the War Commission.

Practically all of the Chaplains of the Episcopal Church, recently graduated from the Army Chaplains' Training School, accepted the $100 offered by the Commission for equipment, and about twelve of them have, up to the present time, accepted the Commissions' offer for a loan of some part of $500.

The following appointments were made:

The Rev. Charles L'V Brine, Civilian Chaplain at Portsmouth Navy Yard.

The Rev. Arthur L. Seiter to succeed the Rev. Bruce V. Reddish at Camp Lee.

The Rev. John Wilkins, Civilian Chaplain at Great Lakes Training Station.

The Rev. Samuel Neal Kent. Civilian Chaplain at Newport under the direction of the Rhode Island Diocesan War Commission.

The following resignations were announced:

The Rev. Nathan Matthew, until recently Civilian Chaplain at Camp Sevier, S. C., who has accepted a call to Massachusettts.

The Rev. Henry O. Nash, until recently Civilian Chaplain at Camp Greene, who has received a commission as Army Chaplain.

The Rev. J. H. Webber-Thompson, until recently Civilian Chaplain at Camp Joseph E. Johnston, who has also received a commission in the Army.

The Rev. Dr. Milton, of Wilmington, North Carolina, was asked to make an examination of the oppor-

(Continued on Page Six.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A MISSIONARY MEDITATION

By Bishop Mikell

A Ray of Light From Bethlehem.

A member of the Woman's Auxiliary said to me the other day: "It is going to be impossible to get any one this year to think "Missionary thoughts or do Missionary Work."

Of course War Work is filling every heart and hand—and no one would leave undone any single effort for the winning of the War or the comfort of those who are winning the War.

And yet—if The Church is worth maintaining in peace time it is worth supporting in war time. If it is worth while to publish the tidings of Christ in peace time it is worth while to send it ringing—the knowledge of the Prince of Peace—around a war stricken and suffering world.

Anything less is to give up the whole position of Christianity. And so let us—even in the midst of busy efforts, of trenmendous pressure of work,—think every now and again of the light that shined in the world when Christ first came and through whose influence alone light the peace will shine once more. The world is dark—but how dark was the little town of Bethlehem that night?

The winter sun had early set and each simple inhabitant had hurried to his home ere the evening cold should come on with its bitter chill. Even the strangers within their gates, those who had come tor the taxing, were gathered in the Inn, and the irregular village streets were dark and desolate.

Only one little ray of light penetrates the gloom—it comes from the inn-stable where is born the Christ.

How wonderfully that little beam of light has grown and expanded through the centuries until it has irradiated and permeated human thought and human destiny.

A few years pass and the light suddenly breaks over Palestine. The Child of Bethlehem come to man's estate is declaring Himself to the world. "I am the light of the world," He cries out, "He that cometh to me shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life." And as they came to Him the light broke upon them and sad faces were illumined, and sinful lives were purified, and shoulders heavily laden were lifted up, and though the burden was not always taken away, the shoulders were strengthened to bear it; and the dark places of life were lighted up by having revealed the purposes of God. "That was the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

But the darkness comprehended it not; and the clouds of unbelief and rejection and hatred gathered about it, and thick darkness sought to overwhelm it and blot it out. "And they crucified Him." And there was darkness over all the earth.

As well might you thrust your hand into a sunbeam and try to crush it between your fingers!

The light broke out again; broke out in the lives and preaching of those who were sent to bear witness of that light.

And the little beam of Bethlehem began to irradiate the world.

Through Asia Minor the light shone; and men came out of their darkness, and basked in the brightness of it and warmed their hearts in the glowing warmth of it, and old error hid its head, and old evils fled away; as when you overturn some green moss-covered stone which has long been embedded in the earth and loathsome creeping things which live in darkness, suddenly exposed to the light of the sun go scampering away again into the gloom they love and thrive in.

The Torch Brought Into Europe.

And one day St. Paul grasped the torch and brought it blazing into Europe; and he set it up at Athens and Rome, a burning beacon in every city and country to light men to a newer and a better and a purer life. And once more the forces of darkness assembled themselves together to strive against the light, every brute force of the world fought against it, every subtle temptation of life sought to overcome to it and drive it out of the breast of men and women, and though they made the light flee here and there they never put it out; and though they overwhelmed it in one place it blazed in another, just as the flickering will o' the wisp will not be caught or put out, but always eludes and leads on the pursuer.

And at last the light filled the land, and its rays were scattered abroad over every country of Europe; into the dark forests of Germany St. Boniface, the Missionary, carried the light of the Gospel. St. Ulphilas carried the light to the Goths, St. Patrick to the Irish, St. Columba to the Scots, St. Aidan and St. Augustine to the Saxons, St. Gall to Switzerland, until at last all the Continent was uplifted and the barbaric races were softened and civilied. When the Barbarians swept down upon the Roman Empire and conquered it it was the power of Christianity that conquered them and tamed them and civilized them and saved the remnants of learning and art and gradually taught them again to the world in a happier day. Then from Europe the light of Bethlehem was spread to wild America. The early discoverers, adventurers though they were, dedicated the land they had lighted on to Christ as well as to their sovereign Lords of Spain, or England Portugal or France. Columbus raised the Cross beside the ensign of Spain when his splendid venture of faith was rewarded and land was found in a new world. Sir Francis Drake on the coast of the Pacific landed as he circumnavigated the globe, and had prayers from our Book of Common Prayer and Chaplain Hunt as he landed with the colony on the coast of the Atlantic assembled the people at once for prayers from the same book.

Colonies Founded in Name of Religion.

Nearly every Colony in this country was founded in the name of religion; and every early institution of learning was founded in the name of the Church, and for the purpose of bearing to the new land the Christianity which has moulded and shaped and uplifted the old.

From Bethlehem the light shined ever westward; and now back again into the ancient east from whence it came the light is reflected.

Its power is not lost; its aspiration to self-sacrifice is not weakened. Men and women, as brave, as endearing, and as determined as those who carried Christianity to Europe or shed its light abroad over the countries there, are giving themselves today to carry its light back again to the Continents of Asia and Africa; men as loyal to Christ the King as were the Crusaders are determined to supplant the crescent with the Cross and to redeem the East out of which Christ came from the religions which held it in darkness and thralldom to evil and superstition.

Then will the little light shining from Bethlehem cave envelope the world; every nation shall walk in it and shall realize that in walking in it the people have strength and peace and purity which no other world force can give; that they have a light which no education separated from the religion of Christ can give them; that they have a liberty which no social effort separated from Christianity can give them.

"Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For behold the darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and His glory shall be seen upon thee. And Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising."

The little beam of kindly light shining from the open door of the stable of Bethlehem in which Jesus the Christ is born! How little the ray of light; how large the encircling gloom; and yet in the light what hope, what peace, what strength, what confidence; because it comes from the birth of Him who is the hope and strength and confidence in the world.

This life of ours, may be as that little light shining out into the darkness, each life of ours may have the brightness and the hope that will dispel gloom, may have the strength that will struggle with the powers of darkness. How? By bringing our life into contact with that life which is the light of the world.

You have heard of those savages to whom some one gave a sun-dial; and who to show their care of the gift built a roof over it. Let us remove the roof from our lives, it shuts out the light. Let us let the light shine in upon us until it purifies our thoughts, and chases away the gloom from the dark corners of our lives, and shrivels up our meanness, and makes our whole life wholesome and sweet.

Then will we reflect the light; and others will see our lives shining, and we will be witnesses of that light which is the life of men; and some one through us will believe on Him.

PERSEVERANCE.

By Amos R. Wells, Litt. D., LL. D.

An old colored man was preaching on perseverance. "Pers'verance, mah bred'rin," he said, "means firstly to tuk hold; secondly to hold on; thirdly and lastly to nebber leave go."

That is a capital definition, because it takes into account the preliminary purpose, which is quite half of perseverance. D. L. Moody placed "stick-to-it-iveness" among the qualifications for service, and added, "When men ask me, 'Moody, what is the secret of your success?' I reply, 'Go to work and stay at work and you'll find out.'" Half the secret is going to work, the forming of the initial purpose, the adoption of the enterprise. The other half is staying at work.

But purpose, however fine, though it be the conception of a genius, is absolutely nothing unless perseverance takes it up and carries it on. Michael Angelo was a great genius, but how he toiled! He labored for seven long years decorating the Sistine Chapel. The muscles of his neck became so hard that he could not look down without bending his body. He did not for weeks at a time, take off his clothes when he slept. To lessen the delay, he took his food up on the scaffold with him. It was perseverance of the highest order that made those immortal frescoes.

I often pass the plain house fronting Boston Common where the great historian, William H. Prescott, labored during all the latter half of his life. He was practically blind and could use the one eye in which a little vision remained for only five or ten minutes a day, if at all. Yet he hired men to read to him and to decipher old manuscripts, and drilled his brain so that he could hold in his mind the exact wording of whose chapters at a time, revising them till they were ready for dictation and for the press. It was thus that he made the most vivid and picturesque histories even written. I look up with awe at the plain brick house, for there was fought one of the world's most valiant battles, a battle of perseverance that lasted for decades.

"Nevertheless" is one of the favorite mottoes of the German Emperor. In his public addresses he frequently quotes it, and often urges it upon young men as their life word. It may well be adopted by nurses as their word of victory. There are hardships in your calling, severe hardships? "Nevertheless." There are many difficulties, many annoyances? "Nevertheless." "Difficulties," said the wise old Greek, Epictetus, 'are things that show out what men are." They are the main revelations of character.

Success Never Rests on Chance.

Success in any calling never rests on chance. Strenuous qualities are always back of it. A successful worker is always a person of strong character.

"You will find that luck
Is only pluck
To try things over and over;
Patience and skill,
Courage and will
Are the four leaves of luck's clover."

There is never any luck about a great work, still less a small task. It is all like the wall which Dr. Christopher Wren had to batter down before he could build St. Paul's Cathedral in London. For a whole day a force of thirty men hurled a battering ram against that wall in vain. It was apparently as stout as before. The workmen wanted to cease their seemingly useless efforts, but Wren knew that they must be communicating motion to the particles of the wall and bade them perserve. On the second day the wall began to tremble at the top and fell in a few hours. So it is with the walls of difficulties that rise in the way of all earnest workers. Battering rams are needed to push them over, and days and weeks of battering; but no stroke, though it seem fruitless, is ever lost, provided only we continue the strokes. Some day the wall will topple over.

"The winner is sure to be the man
Who labors day by day,
For the world has found that the safest plan
Is to keep on pegging away."

Failure in perseverance makes the tragic failures of life. John Donaghue was a talented sculptor. Armour helped him to an art education. Studying in Rome, Donaghue made a great statue for the World's Fair in Chicago. It was a colossal, winged figure, forty feet high seated, with wings outspread, brooding. It represented the "Spirit of Creation." But the statue was not finished when the American battleship reached Rome to collect the art works for the exposition, and later Donaghue shipped it by a commercial line, but the could not pay the freight from New York to Chicago. Besides, the great statue was too large to be carried through the railroad tunnels. This failure broke Donaghue's spirit, and from that day he was a downcast wreck of a man, whose miserable life ended at last in the horror of suicide. He had not learned the fundamental lesson of perseverance.

Such lives would have been transformed if they had discovered joy and zest of fresh beginnings. "No soul was ever lost," wrote Faber, "because its fresh beginnings broke down; but thousands of souls have been lost because they would not make fresh beginnings." A striking little poem starts out thus:

"I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches
And all of our poor, selfish grief
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door,
And never be put on again.

There is just such a place; it is the threshold of each new day! As Susan Coolidge sings in one of the most inspiring of poems:

"Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the world made new;
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you,
A hope for me and a hope for you."

Approach Each New Day With Keen Expectation.

Approach each new day with keen expectation. No matter how many discouragements have crowded the days before, this may be the day when the clouds will break and the sun come out in glory. There must be a change, if we hold on long enough. Harriet Beecher Stowe once wrote this stout sentence: "When you get into a tight place, and everything goes against you till it seems as if you could not hold on a minute longer, never give up then, for that is just the place and time that the tide'll turn." Hold on a little longer. That "little longer" will win the victory.

I like to think of Gladstone and the wild young horse on which—for he was an expert rider—the great statesman was taking exercise one day. The horse plunged, ran off the road, made for a little iron gateway, and flew over it. Mr. Gladstone made up his mind to have the better of that horse. He turned him and sent him at the gate again. Over and over he forced the horse to jump the gate until the animmal's will was quite subdued and he trotted off docilely enough.

That is the way we are to handle the unruly elements and circumstanstances of our lives. They will run away with us will they? We'll teach them better! What are circumstances given us for, if not to make our own by purpose and perseverance?"

"Tired? Well, what of that?
Didst fancy life was spent on beds of ease,
Fluttering the rose leaves scattered by the breeze?
Come, rouse thee, work while it is called today!
Onward, arise—go forth upon the way!
"Hard? Well, and what of that?
Didst fancy life one summer holiday
With lessons none to learn and naught but play?
Go, get thee to thy task; conquer or die!
It must be learned—learn it, then, patiently."

The story is told of a little boy named Edwin, four years old. He had a picture in which a fierce-looking cow was running after a small boy. He looked at the picture a long time, then closed the book carefully and laid it away. A few days after he got the book and found the picture. Bringing his chubby fist down on the cow, he exclaimed triumphantly, "She ain't caught him yet!"

Is Discouragement after you? Run! With every new morning register the triumph, "She ain't caught me yet!" Set your mind on the object of your race; not on the pursing demons but on the happy goal. Soon the purpose in view will absorb your mind that you will forget the black demons behind you. I have always been stirred by this vigorous stanza by Oliver Wendell Holmes:

"Stick to your aim! The mongrel's hold will slip,
But only crowbars loose the bulldog's grip.
Small as he looks, the jaw that never yields
Drags down the bellowing monarch of the fields."

With perseverance the tables have turned. It is no longer the bull after you, but you after the bull! Some day you will catch him and bring him to earth.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER.

Daily Prayers.

O Lord God, in whom we live ,and move, and have our being, open our eyes that we may behold Thy Fatherly Presence ever about us. Draw our hearts ti Thee with the powes of Thy Love.

Teach us to be anxious for nothing; and when we have done what Thou has given us to do, help us, O God, our Saviour, to leave the issue to Thy wisdom.

Take from us all doubt and mistrust. Lift our thoughts up to Thee in heaven; and make us to know that all things are possible to us through Thy Son, our Redeemer. Amen.

O Thou Who wilt not let us go, although at times we wander from Thee, Who are nearer to us than anything that Thou hast made, and Who speakest to us by the still, small voice within, recall us unto Thyself from all our haste and waywardness, we beseech Thee, and keep us steadfast in our allegiance unto Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE RECTORY.

On farther side of shaded street
From ancient village church serene,
A small and modest dwelling neat,
This refuge from the world is seen.

Through every pane, in happy mood,
The sunshine seems to gleam, and show
An air of heavenly quietude
That few in this stern world can know.

The stately elms and maples near
Wave in Sabbath morning air;
A glimpse of garden in the rear
Adds beauty to the landscape fair.

The pastor, spare and somewhat gray,
Though quick of mind and young of heart,
The comely wife, the child at play,
Each makes the scene and plays a part.

The tolling bell to worship calls,
The godly folk to church repair;
A hymn is sung, a hush then falls;
The congregation kneels in prayer.

Abbott Morton Cooper.

Dedicated to the Reverend George Edward Faber.

A TE DEUM FOR THESE TIMES.

We thank Thee, Lord,
For mercies manifold in these dark days;
For Heart of Grace that would not suffer wrong;
For all the stirrings in the dead dry bones;
For bold self-steeling to the times' dread needs;
For every sacrifice of self to Thee;
Fo rease and wealth and life so freely given;
For Thy deep sounding of the hearts of men;
For Thy great opening of the hearts of men;
For Thy close knitting of the hearts of men;
For all who sprang to answer the great call;
For their high courage and self-sacrifice;
For their endurance under deadly stress;
For all the unknown heroes who have died
To keep the land inviolate and free.
For all who come back from the Gates of Death;
For all who pass to larger life with Thee,
And find in Thee the wider liberty;
For hope of righteous and Enduring Peace;
For hope of cleaner earth and closer heaven;
With burdened hearts, but faith unquenchable,
We thank Thee, Lord!

—From "All's Well," by John Ovenham.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

SECOND PAPER.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 1.—In the first rubric on page 1, omit the word always. Turn in your Prayer Book to page one and you will find the first rubric reads as follows,—"The Minister shall always begin the Morning Prayer by reading one or more of the following sentences of Scripture." The change proposed by the Commission is simply to drop from the rubric a superfluous word.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 2.—In the second rubric on page 1, omit the first six words, so that it shall read, "He may omit," etc. The purpose of this proposed change is to permit the omission of the Exhortation on a Sunday as well as on a week-day, as is the custom now. In the interest of simplifying the rubrics and especially as an aid toward directing and instructing those persons unfamiliar with Prayer Book usage, the writer is inclined to believe that, if any change is made, it might be better to omit the rubric altogether and instead to add to the rubric before the Exhortation, in brackets, something like that—or else pass at once to the Confession, first saying: "Let us humbly confess our sin to Almighty God," and after the Collect for Grace and a rubric, "The Minister may here end the Morning Prayer,' 'etc.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 3.—Add to the end of the third rubric on page 1, these words: "The same order may be followed on all week days save on Days of Fasting and Abstinence." Granted that this proposed rubrical change is a wise one, the phraseology used is open to objections. It is a needless burdening of the rubric with words. The addition of the words,—"Save on days of fasting and abstinence" suffice. The words "week days" in the proposed rubric are clearly superfluous because "days of fasting and abstinence' are always week days, all Sundays being festivals.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 4.—Substitute in place of the sentences at present in the Prayer Book, printing together in one section without breaks, but indicating in the margin those appropriate for certain seasons or days, the following sentences, namely. (Here follows the list it is proposed for the present sentences.) In these brief notes space does not warrant the printing of the list, nor a full and complete discussion of the proposed changes. An examination of the changes, taking together Morning and Evening Prayer shows the substitution of twenty-five sentences in Morning Prayer for the twenty-seven in the present Book and eighteen in Evening Prayer for the twenty-seven as at present. A brief summary of the proposed changes shows the following,—In Morning Prayer two new sentences are added, namely:—

"Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones. Isa. lvii. 15.

Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. Acts i. 8.

The first of the above sentences is a general and the second is placed as a special for Whitsunday. Two sentences have been transferred from Evening Prayer to Morning Prayer, namely,—"O send out Thy light," etc., which in the present Book is a proper one for Whitsunday but in the Proposed Book is a general for Morning Prayer. The sentence beginning,—"In Whom we have redemption," which in the present Book is a proper for Good Friday Evening Prayer has been made a proper for Morning Prayer on Good Friday. Two sentences from the Thanksgiving Day service in the present Prayer Book have been transferred as propers to Morning Prayer in the Proposed Book. Four sentences have been transposed as to location, namely,—"The hour cometh," etc., from a proper for Whitsunday to a general. "Rend your heart," etc., "The sacrifices of God," etc., "I will arise," etc., transposed from generals to specials for Lent.

Four sentences have been omitted, namely,—"Lord, correct me," etc., "Enter not into judgment," etc., "When the wicked man turneth," etc., and "Hide Thy face from my sins," etc.

In the office of Evening Prayer three new sentences have been provided, namely,—"The Gentiles shall come to Thy light," etc., as a proper for Epiphany. "All we like sheep have gone astray," etc., as a proper for Good Friday, and "Thanks be to God," etc., as proper for Easter Day.

One sentence has been transferred from Morning Prayer to Evening Prayer, namely,—"There is a river in the streams wherewith," etc., as a proper for Whitsunday evening. Three sentences in Evening Prayer have been changed as to location, namely,—"I acknowledge my transgressions," etc., "To the Lord our God," etc., and "If we say that we have no sin," etc., being made propers for Lent. In addition to the above mentioned changes, eleven of the sentences in the present Prayer Book have been omitted from the proposed Book. Further discussion of the sentences will be continued next week.

BISHHOP PERRY AT THE FRONT

(Continued from Page One.)

many of them. As a good shepherd, he will seek them out himself; if possible, and will find them, or else will send out others to reach them. Even to those of other Dioceses, he will be a Father in God. No call for help or for comfort will be uttered and not heeded. The Churchmen of Rhode Island are there in him, doing what is best for the spiritual uplift of those who are fighting for righteousness, justice and liberty. There is hardship in it, there is great danger. The Bishop is brave and intrepid, as well as wise and devout. He will shirk not, he will fear not. May God protect him with legions of angels and with the grace of Our Lord!

The Bishop's First Message.

This first message from overseas to my friends in the Diocese must be written en voyage if it is to reach the hands of our punctillious editor for publication, as promised, in the September Record. The admirable rules of censorship forbid explicit reference to dates and circumstances. It is enough to say that I sailed on a transport late in the month of July from an "unnamed Atlantic Port" to a point in Europe, wrapped in still darker secrecy.

Among the chances and changes of war time came a cable as from the clear skies of the last week in June requesting that a representative of the War Commission be sent immediately to France to take the place of Bishop McCormick, who was then returning home two months earlier than expected. At a meeting of the Commission four days later I was chosen for the duty and asked to sail as soon as arrangements could be made. On the following Saturday the matter was submitted to the Standing Committee which granted me a leave of absence for six months and took over the administration of diocesan affairs. During the time that the Chairman, Dr. Fiske, and other members of the Committee bear the responsibility of Ecclesiastical Authority I am sure that they will have the loyal and sympathetic support of the whole Diocese. There need be no reason for omitting nor postponing any of our regular work. Three Bishops, personally well known in Rhode Island, have kindly consented to make visitations in the Diocese when their services may be required.

The support of Diocesan and General Missions will not be allowed to suffer in this of all years. A large amount of the apportionment for general missions for the current period of fourteen months has yet to be raised before December 31, when the fiscal year of the Diocese and of the Board closes. The Chairman of our Missions Committee, Mr. Hilliker, will have the help of all the parishes in working to meet this obligation.

I shall carry on my journeys a delightful memory of my last service on the Sunday morning I left the Diocese. Our Church was a railroad station, beautifully appointed for the Celebration of Holy Communion and filled by the people of St. David's at Meshanticut. The Confirmation class of twelve, the communicants and earnest congregation all gave evidence of the genuine devotion and resourcefulness with which our youngest Mission is turning limited means to unlimited account. Since that Sunday I have had strange settings for my religious services, and I expect still stranger, but among them the scene in the Railroad Chapel at home will have left its lasting impression of spiritual vigor and its promise of missionary enterprise.

To return to my present adventure, there is but little that I can tell you as yet of my experiences or the nature of my mission. Every one who enters the war zone now must go in uniform and accredited by the Government. The overseas representative of the War Commission has, in addition to his work in that capacity, an appointment in the American Red Cross as Director of the Chaplain's Service Bureau with the duty of assigning chaplains to military hospitals in many parts of France. I am told that I shall also have resposibilities as a member of the "Committee of Six" which acts under the Secretary of War in certain matters pertaining to religious conditions in the Army. My headquarters will be in Paris, but there will be occasional and, I trust, increasing opportunities for official visits along the Front.

Of my fellow voyages I must not write specifically, and of course you will understand. In general I may say that they show just one more stage in the whole splendid process by which the men of America are stiffening to their task. As one follows them from their homes to the recruiting stations, to their places in the ranks, to the embarkation camps, then overseas, they justify our country's determination to estimate human nature at its highest. Indeed may we not find right here the essential differences between the enemy and the rest of the world which it has so stupidly misjudged and defied? We and our Allies are sending our men into the fight, not for the exercise of hatred but for the exaltation of an ideal, and every step on the way proves more clearly their capacity for it. Day after day on troop ship our men are shown in their true light at the crucial point in the process without chance for concealment or shams of sentiment. Whatever change may have been wrought in them leaves them, if anything, a little more human and direct, somewhat more earnest, and much more eager for every token of honest sympathy and spiritual help. I wonder if that little gem of poetry in prose which came not long since from the heart of a twelve-year-old girl somewhere in France is generally known at home. Here it is in English:

"It was only a little stream. It was called the Yser. It was narrow that a whisper could almost be heard from its other side and the swallows would fly across it without moving their wings. On its banks stood millions of men, eye to eye, yet the distance between them was so great it could not be measured. It was greater than the distance to the stars in the sky ;it was the distance, that separates right from wrong, justice from injustice. The ocean is so wide that the sea-gulls dare not cross it. For many, many days and nights the great American steamships make their way through the deep waters, before the lighthouses of France came into sight. And yet from one side of the ocean to the other, hearts are touching."

The lights on the other shore are now not far away. We have joined in our final service on board, a Celeration of Holy Communion at sunrise on this Feast of the Transfiguration. We have given thanks for deliverance "from the dangers of the sea, from the violence of the enemies, and from every other evil." What depth of meaning in those words these waters measure! We have made intercession for friends whose labours we hope soon to share, and for those at home who watch and serve. True it is that across the ocean hearts are touching in unceasing prayer. The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

Jame DeWolf Perry, Jr.

PAPERS ON THE PSALMS

By the Rt. Rev. A. C. A. Hall

First Paper

Introductory

The Psalter is the Hymnal provided for us in the Bible. In most of the other books of Holy Scripture God speaks to us; in the Psalms He teaches us how to speak to Him, in praise and thanksgiving, in penitence and supplication. We must not let this divinely provided manual of devotion be crowded out by modern hymn books, however appealing some of their compositions may be. It was a long while, four hundred years or so, before any metrical hymns were introduced into the services of the early Christian Church. At first the Psalms were found sufficient. These had been inherited from the Jewish Church; the Psalter, as we have it, was probably arranged for use in the Second Temple, built after the return of Israel from the exile in Babylon; our Lord and the Apostles would have joined in its songs, and these were continued in Christian assemblies for worship.

The Psalter through the greater part of the history of the Christian Church formed the chief supply of the words of worship, as the Holy Communion was the great act of worship. Our offices for Morning and Evening Prayer represent one great element of the historic Church's worship, of which the Psalter was a leading feature. Something may be said in a subsequent paper about the use of the Psalms in the Church's services. Here it is only mentioned in connection with a plea for an attempt on the part of all to gain a great familiarity with the Psalter, for its more intelligent use both in public worship and in private devotion. We would try to sing with the spirit and with the understanding also.

In these papers it is proposed to treat simply (1) of the gradual formation of the Book of Psalms; (2) of some difficulties that naturally suggest themselves in its use; (3) giving hints for joining in its public recitation and for its personal use; and then perhaps explaining the special appropriateness of Psalms appointed for particular days and seasons, as we come to them—Advent Christmas, Epiphany, Lent, etc.

A GOVERNMENT ORDER TO OUR READERS.

As you are doubtless aware, the Government, in its desire to conserve the manufacture and use of paper, has issued an order to newspapers to confine their subscription lists to those only who have paid in advance for their paper.

It has been a long-time custom for the religious press in the country to continue all subscriptions until the individual expressed a desire to discontinue and paid up to date. And there are good and strong reasons for that custom.

It is hard to change a custom, and the religious press will suffer untold harm unless the readers will catch the spirit of the Government order and show their patriotism by at once coming to the rescue with their renewal subscriptions.

Such an order is peculiarly trying to THE WITNESS. We are a new publication—steadily gaining—and we absolutely need to keep all our old subscribers while we add the new, until we reach "a paying basis."

It has cost a lot of money to start THE WITNESS. Its Board of Editors serve without any compensation. There must be many more subscribers before the publisher can pay the bills out of the receipts. Moreover, THE WITNESS would never have been started except as a means to reach every Church family in the land with a bright weekly Church newspaper at a price within the reach of all—only One Dollar a year.

In this emergency, we ask every one of our readers whose renewal is now due to come to the rescue—to send his or her dollar this week if possible—to hold up our hands while we accomplish the task we have undertaken. Write today! L. W. APPLEGATE, Publisher.

NO MAN'S LAND OF SPIRITUAL CONQUEST.

Between the lines of the opposing forces of the flesh and the spirit—no less in the individual than in the world—lies No Man's Land of Spiritual Conquest. It must be won. To win it the forces of Christianity must "go over the top" and takt it. But those who go over the top go to save, not destroy. They go to make this No Man's Land part of the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. There, within its area, its own peoples are to be left to develop its resources under the protection of Christianity and the leadership of their brothers in Christ.

The soldier of the Cross is a shepherd. His insignia is a staff, not a sword. In the No Man's Land of Spiritual Conquest there are the "other sheep" of which the Chief Shepherd spoke. It is the shepherd's duty to seek for "the hungry sheep that look up and are not fed" and to lead them towards the green pastures, beside the still waters of safety and comfort, so that there shall be, at last, one flock and one Shepherd.

Every engine of "force to the utmost" is necessary to win the war for a world peace. But we must not wait until that is achieved to marshal the forces of Christianity to win this No Man's Land. We must begin our spiritual mobilization at once. The soldier of the Cross must "go over the top" side by side with the soldier of the state. There must be no break in the lines of these allies or we will lose the golden opportunity that waits only upon achievement. But to be ready to go over the top the soldier must have more than nerve and enthusiasm. He must know how to fight. He must be trained in the use of the weapons put into his hands. And no soldier gets into the front-line trench who is unfit. We have many thousands of enthusiastic volunteers in the Christian forces of service. But we must remember that God is "all for quality," while we too often rely on quantity. As Professor Drummond used to say: "What is needed today is not more of us, but a better brand of us." It is to train the "better brand" that the Missionary Education Movement exists.

A well-known manufacturer has put the question of quality in a striking manner in his advertisements, to this effect: "As we could not improve the contents, we have improved the container." We cannot improve upon the "content" of religion. But we can improve the "container"—ourselves.—Frederick B. Hodgins.

The widespread disturbance of the times have effected all human activi- gain a greater familiarity with the religious life of the world could not escape. When patriotic self-immolation demands the harvest of lives over which the mothers of the world are weeping, the call of the sanctuary may not be so responsively hearkened to as during the quieter hours when mortals are not deafened by the booming of guns. But the mission of the Master must be carried out even during these tortured days of strife. While bodies are shattered, souls still must be saved, and the need of spiritual ministration may be the greater through the very increase of corporal wastage.—The Church Calendar.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

Six graduates of St. Luke's training school for nurses, Boise, Idaho, received their diplomas at a special service held in St. Michael's Cathedral, on Sunday evening, September 15th. Fifty nurses marched in the procession, singing with the choir, the Bishops, clergy, and congregation, "Onward Christian Soldiers." Bishop Tuttle gave the baccalaureate sermon, after which Bishop Funsten made a short talk to the graduates, congratulating them on their selection of so noble a profession and reminding them of the great need of nurses at the present time. Assisted by Mrs. Emery, the superintendent of St. Luke's Hospital, Bishop Funsten presened to the graduates their diplomas.

The inquisitive man in the back pew wants to know how long the parsons will be able to parsonize if, as is the fact, the cost of living continues to advance; and, at the same time, clerical salaries are in many instances reduced, and, in not a few instances, are several months overdue? You answer him. We'll hand him your letter.—Texas Churchman.

Chicagoans within the sound of the bells of St. James' Church are reminded daily of the obligation to pray "for the success of our arms," says the Tribune. At noon each day the bell is rung three minutes. After being rung nine times, or "three times three," it is tolled for the remainder of the period. This plan was adopted by the rector, the Rev. Dr. James S. Stone, in compliance with the recent request of the United States senate. Dr. Stone has expressed the hope that the custom may be observed by all churches of the city.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Rev. Dr. Daniel I. Odell, in the rectorship of the Church of the Annunciation, North Twelfth and Diamond streets, Philadelphia, was observed on Sunday, September 29th. There were two celebrations of the Holy Communion and Morning Prayer was said. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Rhinelander, Bishop of Pennsylvania, was the preacher at the late service. At solemn Evensong the Rev. James O. S. Huntington, O. H. C., was the preacher. On Thursday evening, October 3rd, a reception was tendered Dr. Odell in the Parish House by the Church wardens, vestrymen, and parishioners.

At the Church of the Atonement, Chicago, September 15th, a new processional cross and torches marked with the following inscription were blessed by the rector, the Rev. F. S. Fleming: "In thanksgiving for the entry of the British troops into Jerusalem in December 1917, and in memory of a British mother." This records the gift of a British officer of a processional cross and torches made last Christmas. The work was executed by Mr. Robert T. Walker in Boston and has been on exhibition in the east. The design of the crucifix includes the cross designed by Kirchmayer of Boston. The cross itself is the Cross of S. John of Jerusalem and in the intersections are placed respectively the English Rose, the Scotch Thistle, the French Fleur de Lis and the Irish Shamrock. The American shield is on the foreside and the British shield is on the other side of the staff. The whole cross is of brass and the corpus is silver. The torches to accompany it are also solid brass and are marked with the Cross of S. George and S. Andrew, respectively. At the service of dedication the flags of the allies and the Church flag were carried in procession. The special preacher was Captain Edwards of the Royal Fusileers who has been in the war since it began. He formerly was rector of a parish church in Hull, England. It made a very happy coincidence for the dedication of this memorial. The flags of the allies are to be presented to the parish within the month and will then hang in the church. Ninety-five names of men and women in war servict are represented on the honor roll of the parish, including ten gold stars.

The fall meeting of the South Side Sunday School Institute, Chicago, will be held next Tuesday, October 8th, at the Church of the Mediator, Morgan Park. Evensong will be conducted at 5:30 p. m., and the Rev. Arnold Lutton, rector of the Church of the Annunciation, will give a devotional address. After supper and social hour there will be a business session followed by an address on "Teacher Training Classes," by the Rev. Charles Herbert Young, President of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. Each Institute in the Diocese of Chicago is to have special sessions during the winter on Teacher Training, with the idea of increasing the efficiency of the schools and to meet the present day problems in religious education.

In making the transfer of our office of publication from Hobart to Chicago last week the printing material used in making up the forms of The Witness was delayed three days in transit by Express, and other complications, due to the war, the shortage of men and congested condition of the mails, made it impossible the past few weeks to get the paper to our subscribers on the usual date of delivery. We ask the indulgence of our readers while we are reorganizing to give them better service than in the past. Fortunate and happy is the man in these days that try men's souls who can, without becoming impatient or over critical, maintain his mental and spiritual equilibrium.

PERSONALS.

The Rev. G. W. R. Cadman, of Austin, Texas, is engaged in army Y. M. C. A. work in Canada.

Dean Fleetwood, of St. Mark's Cathedral, St. Lake City, Utah, has been appointed chairman of the publicity committee for the Churches in Utah in the interests of the Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign.

The Rev. George A. Ray, M.A., has handed in his resignation to Bishop McElwain as rector of St. Mary's Church, Merriam Park, St. Paul, Minn., to take effect December 1st, and the vestry has given him leave of absence until that date. For the next few months the Sunday services will be in charge of the Rev. Jay S. Budlong, who up to a few years ago, was the rector of All Saints' Church, Minneapolis, and more lately Dean of the Cathedral at Hastings, Nebraska. —Merriam Park Churchman.

Dr. Samuel Patterson, a public school teacher of New York, and a very active member of the Diocesan Board of Education, has been called, says The Leader, to Washington on government work. He had made plans for the Teacher Training Drive which will now be carried out by others.

The Rev. Franklin C. Sherman, rector of St. Paul's Church, Akron, O., will conduct a series of Church school conferences by invitation of Bishop Matthews, in the Diocese of New Jersey.

Bishop Lloyd, president of the General Board of Missions, New York, was the speaker at a joint rally and service of the several parishes in Scranton, Penn., on Sunday evening, September 9th.

Rev. Charles R. Tyner, rector of St. Luke's Church, Lincoln, Neb., returned from France, Sept. 19th, where he has been working with troops for the Y. M. C. A. for the past eleven months. The Rector of St. Luke's was attached to combat divisions and saw much of the war. He was severely gassed the morning our troops took Cantigny and worked for some time in the sector where Chaplain Danker was killed, was also with Dr. Bartlett when he was wounded.

The American troops are magnificent fighters and are an inspiration to the Allies who are now fighting as they never fought before. Since the victorious offensive of July the people of France are happier, conditions are growing better and the refugees are returning to their homes.

The Rev. Roman L. Harding, formerly of New York City, has taken up his work as vicar of All Saints' Church, Sterling, Colorado.

The Rev. Thomas F. Opie, rector of Christ Church, Pulaski, Va., has declined the offer of vicar of the Church of the Epiphany, St. Louis, Mo., and will remain in Pulaski. Mr. Opie has been in Pulaski only one year and this, together with the fact that he is identified with Pulaski's war activities, including the Red Cross, Loyal Advisory Board, four minute men, Liberty Loan Committee, etc., decided him to remain at his post. The Pulaski Southwest Times, in this connection, speaks highly of the good work Mr. Opie has done and refers to the efforts of the members of his congregation to retain his services.

MASSACHUSETTS WOMAN'S AUXILIARY.

A contributor to the Ascension Herald, Fall River, Mass., gives the following report of the Massachusetts Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions which held its first meeting of the season in the Cathedral Rooms, Boston, on the third Wednesday in September:

Mrs. Sterling, vice president, in charge of the Northwestern District, presided, as Mrs. Lowell, although much improved in health, is not yet allowed, by advice of her physician, to take up the responsibilities of office as president. A message of greeting from her was welcomed by the members and a cordial response sent in return.

We were reminded that the special task assigned for this year was what is termed the War Plan. Standing as a reserve line behind the men who are serving their country and the world, we must address ourselves to strengthen and increase the spiritual forces of our common life. First proposed by the general secretary at New York in the form of a week's intensive mission or "Advent Call" to the women of the Church, it will be developed in various dioceses as seems best to meet local conditions. Bishop Lawrence has provided an outline of activities to engage the devotion of every man and woman left at home. This he will commit to us at the Anniversary Service on October fifth. As Lloyd George says: "We must also prepare for the Blow of Peace."

Another reminder of equal importance was that, at the annual meeting on November sixth, each parish Branch must cast its ballot, through a delegate, on the question of adopting the New Organization. This has especial reference to the relation of the Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, giving it a constitution and a more definite position.

There were no visiting speakers at the meeting, but the hour was full of lively interest in the reports of our own officers upon the domestic field (including care for Indians and Colored people), the six Latin-American districts, China, the new junior plan, and the United Offering. Parish branches are urged to apply at once to these committees and to set forward a schedule of work for the entire Winter.

Mrs. Sterling suggested, in closing: "Never say 'Red Cross or Missions,' but 'Red Cross and the Mission of the Church.' The cross leads on to both."

WE MUST KEEP ON THE JOB

The war prospect is rapidly improving. But sunrise is not high noon, and we must not yield to the natural hope that the war is about to end, now that Germany finds the Americans really in it and thoroughly nt to do their work. For, such a hope is delusive and can only tend to make us relax in our war-tasks.

It is quite true that the Germans ought to see that they have no chance of winning, nor even of a drawn-game. It is probably true that their leaders do see this,—at least see defeat inevitable, unless something utterly incalculable at present should happen.

But these leaders are well aware that to give up the fight means their own destruction. A beaten Germany will repudiate the men and the caste responsible for the war. Those men cannot be worse off by prolonging the struggle. So, they will keep on until the mirage of a millionth chance has disappeared in the gloom of utter overthrow.

And such overthrow has by no means come yet. Germany still holds most of Belgium and much of France —to say nothing of Serbia and Roumania and Russia. There must be many bloody battles before their hosts are driven across the Rhine.

Therefore, it behooves all Americans to exert themselves to the utmost in their support of the great cause—to give, to exercise self-denial, to conform to all the rules and regulations of their government, and to pray.

The sun has risen; it will go on to noon; but it is not there yet. We are rightly encouraged at our present successes but we have not achieved our aim we must "keep on the job."

—Bishop Mann.

HANDLING DIFFICULT SITUATIONS.

In this column we hope to publish from time to time stories from the clergy covering their experiences in dealing with difficult situations. Names, for obvious reasons, are omitted. Such stories for publication in The Witness will be gratefully received.

The Burial Did Not Take Place From the Church.

"A prominent politician, a profane man who had during his lifetime frequently cursed the Church and the clergy, committed suicide. His good wife, a communicant, made somewhat elaborate preparations for the funeral and requested that the burial take place from the parish church. After reviewing, as I truthfully could, the many excellent qualities of the deceased, I said sympathetically to the good woman, 'Don't you think it would be taking unfair advantage of your husband, now that he is dead and cannot help himself, to drag his lifeless body into the church to which he was strongly opposed and would never enter when alive? Don't you think it would be far more appropriate and in keeping with his own wishes to bury him from this beautiful home which he loved and entered daily with so much joy and satisfaction?' 'I had not thought of it in that light,' she promptly replied, 'you are quite right, the arrangements will be changed to have the service in the home.'"

Pastors Refused to Bury a Saloon Keeper.

"A saloon keeper died in a small village near the city in which I was the rector of a parish. The four or five ministers in the village refused to officiate at the burial of the man. A leading citizen called me over the phone, informed me of the situation and asked me to officiate. I very readily complied with the request. The whole community turned out to the service, held at the grave, evidently as a protest against the conduct of their pastors. After the service one of the pastors waited upon me and asked me to attend a conference of his brother ministers. When I entered the conference I was informed by the leader that it was their opinion I had been guilty of a serious breech of Christian courtesy in burying the man and they felt I owed them an explanation and apology.

" 'Pardon me,' I said, addressing the leader and pastors, 'it seems to me you are guilty of a very griveous breech of Christian charity and if it were not a serious matter, your exceedingly narrow conduct would provoke laughter. Here was a man whom you were praying against and moving heaven and earth to get rid of for a number of years, and when he was Providentially, as you may think, removed, you were unwilling to bury him or comfort his family. I have no apology to offer.' They were apparently satisfied. Some months afterwards it was my privilege to baptize and present the saloon keeper's family to the Bishop for Confirmation and they became faithful and earnest communicants."

DR. LACEY'S ARTICLES.

In view of the visit to America of the Metropolitan of Athens a number of interested persons, Greeks and Americans, asked the Rev. T. J. Lacey, Ph.D., of Brooklyn, to prepare a series of articles on the "Greeks in America." These articles have appeared in the Tarpon Springs (Florida) "Evening Leader," and simultaneously in Greek translation in "Atlantis," an Hellenic daily paper of New York. The series closes this week with an article on the Metropolitan of Athens and his ideals. Dr. Lacey has made a close study of the Greek people, visiting the Greek colonies in the United States and becoming familiar with Hellenic life and thought. His doctor's thesis on "Social Heredity as Ilustrated in the Greek People" was translated into modern Greek some years ago. The substance of these articles will be published this year in book form by the Educational department of the Board of Missions for use in mission study classes.

LIVELY INTEREST IN THE ADVENT CALL

All over the country, wherever groups of Church people have been gathered together this summer either for work or play there has been a lively interest, and animated discussion of the Plan of the Advent Call. What is it? Does some one ask? It is not the purpose of this article to explain especially either it sorigin or its intent for considerable space in the various Church papers has already been given to the matter, but it is our hope, now, to arouse in the Church people of this diocese the splendid opportunity for service it offers. The movement is as broad as the Church itself, and its spiritual nature seems to open to us a particular hope in this, our country's hour of need. "After the war, our greatest problem will be—have we grown in vision sufficiently to meet our returning boys, and have we done our utmost to make the world fit for the democracy they shall have won?" An earnest, consecrated effort in carrying out the plan of the Advent Call will be a long step toward this end.—Texas Churchman.

WANTED BY TWO MISSIONARIES IN KANSAS.

Any one who has a Stereopticon Lantern to give away or loan for use until Jan. 1, 1919, in the Blue Valley Missions of Kansas is requested to write Mr. Charles Bailey, Box 247, Blue Rapids, Kansas. The Missions will pay freight chages.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Reve. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffeila, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of
"TEMPERANCE."
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America.
Address,
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING
An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.
The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.
Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.
28½ tf

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL
OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal

Collegiate School, Military
for Boys, Denver, Colo.
All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations. Address REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

RACINE COLLEGE
RACINE, WISCONSIN.
Students' Army Training Unit opens October 1st.
Men over 18 and subject to Government Draft may enter.
Mess, Shelter, Clothing, Medical Attention and Tuition at Government Expense, and a Salry of $30 a month.
REGISTER NOW.
B. T. ROGERS, D.D., Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana.....Publisher
All exchanges and articles for publication should be sent to the Managing Editor. All subscriptions to the Publisher.

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS

George P. Atwater Grace W. Johnson Francis S. White
Henry J. Mikell James Sherrin
James Wise

ADVERTISING RATES.

Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months;
20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

EDITORIAL

FIRST THINGS FIRST

Every institution ought to do first that thing which it was created to do.

This is what one means by saying, "Put first things first."

In order to get a clear idea of the function of the Christian Church. one should first study the purpose for which it was created.

What did Christ come to do? What things did He put first in His Gospel?

It is a commonplace to say that Christ came into the world to save sinners, and yet commonplace as it is, the fact is lost sight of today in the many needs of our changeable nature.

If we are sick, we want to get well; if we are poor, we want to make money; if ignorant, we want to be informed.

We each have one Pearl of Great Price which we are seeking.

With some this pearl is a rare postage stamp. (We once knew a young man who committed forgeries to buy postage stamps). With others, it is the righteousness of Jesus Christ.

There is some one desire in each of us for which we would gladly sell all that we have.

And that one desire expresses to us the one thing needful.

Now with Christ there is but one thing needful. "Seek ye the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness and all the rest shall be added unto you."

Christ died in order that you might be saved from sin, and St. Paul found that all the wisdom of the Greeks was foolishness with God, so that after preaching the wisdom of men at Athens, and without success, he was determined to know nothing among the Corinthians but "Christ and Him crucified."

This note of redemption from sin by the Cross of Christ, in order that we may attain to the resurrection from the dead and eternal life is the scarlet thread that runs through the Bible from cover to cover. It is the prophecy of the Old Testament. It is the theme of the Gospel. It is the revelation that God made to St. Paul in the road to Damascus (Acts xxvi.) to turn the Gentiles from darkness to light and from the power of Satan to that of God, that they might inherit the Kingdom.

It is the purpose of the Christian Church, as embodied in her ancient formularies, that we may obtain the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and life everlasting.

It is the function of the two great sacraments: Baptism (for the remission of sins) and the Holy Communion (that our sinful bodies may be cleansed by His Body and our souls washed through His most precious Blood).

It is the function of the Christian Ministry (that whosoever sins ye remit they are remitted).

Every way that you look at historic Christianity you find these marks that Christ lived, and the Church was founded for the remission of sins.

But many men do not feel the need for redemption from sin. This implies a sense of limitation and of failure in one's own life, while it is human nature to trust in ourselves that we are righteous and to despise others.

We may not see the sin in self, nor in those who immediately surround us, but this frightful war must bring home to each one of us that the greed and lust within ourselves, when taken in the aggregate, is a terrible thing, for the sin of man has destroyed millions of lives and centuries of industry. Yet the men who caused this war, and are responsible for this frightful destruction of life and property, are the men who prided themselves that they were benefactors of mankind, and producers of prosperity.

They have, on the contrary, produced the most frightful conditions that the world has ever seen.

They merely illustrate the principle that lust, when it is conceived, bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

And what is true on a large scale in an aggregate of individuals is true on a small scale in each one of us.

The sin that is within us will destroy us, unless we repent and avail ourselves of Christ's mercy, for sin is the most destructive force in the world.

But men pride themselves that they can put away sin by natural processes—by education, by legislation, by conventional ethical standards.

Surely, it is these substitutes for Christ's redemption that have been tried and found wanting in Europe.

Men have forsaken the Gospel of Christ as being inadequate, and have substituted scientific investigation, scientific laws, business efficiency as the greatest force for good in the world.

The Universities, the Chambers of Commerce, the Reichstags of the world have openly despised the Cross of Christ, and have sought to redeem men by these various substitutes, to the end that they have brought the whole temple of civilization in ruin upon themselves, and have filled the world with rapine and murder.

The Cross of Christ is the one power in history which has freed man from himself, just in proportion as he has believed in it.

It is the leaven in this war that triumphs over human selfishness and finds its solace in ministering to human needs.

We need to put a true valuation on the limitations of education and business, and to realize more vividly that there is none other name under Heaven by whom we can be redeemed from sin, but only the name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

For this war teaches us either that the Turk is right and God is a cruel force, and cruelty is the expression of His might, or else that sin is the cause of man's misery and destruction, and it is only because God so loved man, that He sent His Son to redeem man from sin. Certainly this war has taught us that sin is not a negligible force; that either it is the power of God or the power of satan.

And it certainly ought to impress upon the individual that he needs Christ within him if he would be free from blood-guiltiness.

Man was created to be righteous, and the life and death of Jesus Christ is the power of righteousness for them who will receive the same.

It is because we are not anxious for the thing, that we do not seek the redemption that is offered us.

A STUDY IN THE ACTS

By Bishop Johnson.

"And when He had spoken these things, while they beheld He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight." Acts i. 9.

Miracles.

The greatest miracles of the Bible are those connected with the life of Christ.

There are some who find difficulty in the Virgin birth. others explain away the resurrection; others regard the story of the ascension as belonging to the realm of legend.

But the sinless life of Christ is a greater miracle than any of these, and that miracle is attested by his own claim to be the sinless one; a claim that would be utterly shameful except that it had a basis in fact.

This miracle of the sinlessness of Christ is made more credible by the fact that He had no human father; that death could not overcome Him, and that, after overcoming death, and showing Himself alive to many witnesses He should be taken up out of their midst.

It is not one detached miracle that we are asked to accept, but the entire life of one who is unique among those who have lived upon earth.

It was the business of the Apostles to attest these facts and it has been the function of he Church to set forth its testimony in every article of faith, that it exists for the purpose of so attesting them. The Church stands for the whole Christ, not on the basis of human discovery but on the basis of the united tesimony of a jury of honest men.

As it was eminently fitting that the sinless One should have a unique origin in His birth, so it is fitting that He should finish His earthly career in a manner that would satisfy the ends of justice. If, because of sin death entered into the world, one can see a sufficient reason for death. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," is the statement of a necessary fact. For the sinner to go on in defiance of God would be to stultify the creation.

It is equally fitting that the sinless one should not be overcome by death, but that the Holy One should not see corruption.

Now I am fully aware that this is distasteful to that kind of a mind which refuses to see anything in creation but that which it has already experienced.

But the mere scientist lives in a non-moral world, and is oblivious to some of the most essential facts in man's experience. He fails to deal with man as a moral being and in that regard Germany is a scientific nation, but a dehumanized one.

Friendship, faith, love, penitence, adoration, forgiveness, sympathy, are not scientific terms but belong to the human side of life.

It is true that the world is built on scientific principles but it is also true that the God who made us, created in us certain non-scientific instincts which proceed unerringly to build up the moral world in which we live and in which the mere scientist is a Frankinstein. In that moral order in which we live, that most unscientific of all phenomena, sin, flourishes with all of its attendant misery and destruction.

There is nothing more unscientific and yet more human than this war, in which the human race struggles against a scientific exploitation of its members in the interest of efficiency.

Man not only sins, but he demands the right to sin and God sustains him in this demand.

The Sinless One did not impose upon the children of men, a Prussian peace, nor a Bolsheviki program of force. The miracle of man is life, growing out of seeds into its lukewarm and undreamed of possibilities.

It was contrary to all experience that a red hot ball of rock should take in life, or that this life so unscientifically begun should go on to new and unheard of forms of life.

Such progress or evolution was in every crisis of its growth something contrary to previous experience.

To me the Kingdom of Heaven is not a miracle passing my belief today in any way to be compared with the miracle of New York City from the standpoint of the cave man's science.

Science can prove the past but it can see the future only in past experience..

The imagination of those pioneers of a future life, who saw before their fellows that which was invisible to their crude companions, was as true a human faculty as the more mediocre mental qualities that could analyze and classify man's past experience.

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for" and the hope that anticipates the substance is that which lifts life out of the hopeless treadmill of a mere scientific interpretation. Christ was the pioneer of the faith that the possibilities of man's life is greater than his faith in those possibilities. The only difficulty that I find in accepting the miracles of Christ's birth and resurrection and ascension is that they are too good to be true; and I have learned to believe that God is a being who bestows upon righteous faith, even more than its expectation demands, and that He constantly unveils to men of faith that which in the light of human knowledge is too good to be true.

So Christ's life, beginning with His birth untainted by man's sin, flows on through its sinless life through the grave to its glorious resurrection, and then, after reviving man's failing faith during the great forty days following Easter, is taken up out of our midst and takes His place at the right hand of God, there to make intercession for us and to be with us, in the spirit, always.

The whole story is too wonderful to be the work of fiction, for it came on us from a quarter of the world and at a time when there were no such masters of fiction as the story of the Christ would demand.

As a work of fiction it would be as impossible as would the works of Shakespeare have been in Thibet. There were no artists in Judea that would have produced the masterpiece.

As a divine creation, it must be accepted in its entirety—as well chip off pieces from the work of Michael Angelo because we did not approve of their beauty as to detach from the story of the Christ, those facts with which it was endowed by its divine author.

They all stand or fall together, for they help to form that masterpiece whom we adore, our Master Christ Jesus, whose birth and resurrection and ascension were as unique as was His life, and they all unite to form the picture, not made by human hands but preserved for us by the testimony of those who preached the wonderfully things which they had most surely seen and heard, and which when once accepted in sincerity and truth forms the soundest and the truest basis for the conduct of human society.

BOLSHEVISM.

Bolshevism is a patchwork. It includes all sorts of differing and often conflicting forces; it includes socialists on the one hand and syndicalists on the other; it preaches pacifism and hatred of war, but in the same breath it preaches class war; it proclaims the principle of self-determination for nations, while it cuts across the boundary of nations with its doctrine of internationalism. The fact is that Bolshevism has not developed a definite programme at all. It is purely destructive. It is an emotion. It is the hunger of violent idealists for a union of workers throughout the world for the purpose of destroying what they call bourgeois society. The battle cry of Karl Marx is in reality the only bond of union: "Workers unite, you have the world before you, and have nothing to lose but your chains." It may be hard for us in Australia not to regard this cry as an unreasonable travesty of the facts; but some countries are less happily situated than Australia, and anyhow it is insane folly to ignore its power.

It was in the hope of rousing the German workers to join them and insist on immediate peace that Messrs. Trotsky and Lenin surrendered Russia into the hands of Germany at Brest Litovsk. The result we know. The immediate effect of Bolshevism has been to place Russia under the heel of the very form of Government which it sought to destroy. Far from forwarding the cause of democracy, it has put it back incalculably, as purely destructive methods always will.—English Archbishop of Brisbane.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

INTERVIEWS AND UTTERANCES

What the Leaders are Saying On Subjects of Present Day, Interest.

General Foch, in a letter to the New York Bible Society, says: "The Bible is certainly the best preparation that you can give to an American soldier about going into battle to sustain his magnificent ideal and his faith." A quarter of a million copies of the Bible have been given to our soldiers by the New York Bible Society.

"I drive around to six hospitals regularly and visit hundreds of the American wounded every day," writes the Rev. John S. Banks, rector of All Saints' Church, Cleveland, Ohio, and chaplain of the Red Cross in Paris, France, to the Rev. L. E. Sutherland of Cleveland. "I have six regular services and from six to ten short services every Sunday, I conduct funerals daily and write to all the families whose friends I bury. I am sometimes up all night meeting the convoys. It is a privilege to be here with the boys, they are so patient and so anxious to get back to the lines."

Mr. John W. Wood of the General Board of Missions, New York, in commenting upon Dr. Rudolph B. Teusler's position in Tokyo, Japan, where he has been doing such a splendid work as director of St. Luke's Hospital and numbers among his friends eminent men of the national government and city, says: "In fact, they recognize in him not only the leading foreign surgeon of Japan, but a devoted Christian worker. When the Baron Goto, acting on behalf of the imperial household, offered Doctor Teusler $25,000 for the new St. Luke's Hospital, it was made with the distinct understanding that St. Luke's was and should remain a Christian institution."

The appointment of Dr. Teusler as head of the Red Cross unit to accompany the American forces in Siberia, mentioned in a recent number of The Witness, promises to cement more fully the friendship between the two nations.

Archbishop Meletios of Athens, Greece, who is touring the United States at the head of a commission from his government, says "The unity in Russia is the Church. Throughout the country, from the farthest north to the south, all are members of the Greek Church and a faithful, religious people. The Bolsheviki know this power and fear it as is evidenced by their massacre of bishops and Church leaders." The Archbishop thinks the people of Russia will rise up against the evil influences working from without and that the revolt when it comes will be a religious war, for, he asserts, the Bolsheviki are primarily non-religious and anti-Christian. "Whether it will come before the war is over or not I cannot tell. I am inclined to think the evil force in Russia derives its power from the supposed German success and if they could see things from this side and know the advance of the allies, there would be swift action that would clear Russia forever. I fear, however, that this will not come until the war is over, and that Russia will never be of any aid to the allies."

Mrs. T. H. Tracy, President, in her address at the thirty-second annual meeting of the Nebraska Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, said: "The problems which confront us are rather appalling; many calls for help will crowd us in the coming year from all sides. The duties of citizenship will make insistent calls upon us all. Let our judgment be guided by prayer, that we may be inspired to a better service in our work for the Church and the hastening of Christ's Kingdom."

Bishop Gore of Oxford, England, during his recent visit to Chicago, stated that "The entrance of America, which had always kept aloof from the political struggles of other nations, into the war, typifies the meaning of the whole war, that is, the departure from the individual struggle for liberty and the foreshadowing of a League of Nations in the future. I believe that this league of nations to maintain a world peace is coming. Such a nation will spring from the fear of unchained science which is now destroying so many lives, from the love of peace, and from the claims of the Christian faith. And I should like to see Christian churches united as free nations are today united."

"The busy and stressful season for Church work has commenced. The outlook for the year is good, though new and difficult problems are to be solved and many obstacles surmounted," says the Rev. A. M. Hilliker, of Lonsdale, R. I. "Life is making great demands upon us today. The conditions are such as to challenge faith and test courage, but also to inspire progress. Customs are changing. Old things are passing. A new era is dawning. New standards of living and giving are being established. We can never go back to our former ways, nor can we continue in the old ruts and still survive and serve. This is as true and perhaps more true of the Church than of any other department of life. Shall the Church cling to the past or adapt itself to the present and possess the future? We are facing a crisis in the life of the Church. The future of the Church will in large degree be determined by the spirit and devotion with which we meet it. The best and most that we can give is but our reasonable service."

"One defect in the present hymn book," says the Rev. George A. Ray of St. Paul, Minn., "is that the tunes are set for high trebel voices, and the ordinary Church goer cannot get so high. It is to be hoped that this will be remedied in the new hymn, which is to be issued in the near future. Really, there ought to be at least two settings of many tunes, one lower than the other, though not necessarily set to the same hymn."

Lloyd George, Premier of England, says: "We must also prepare for the blow of peace."

The Rev. Clifton Macon, rector of Trinity Church, Oakland, Cal., thinks there is danger of the United States and our allies acceeding to appeals for peace by the Central Powers before our work is completed.

"There is," he says, "a real danger that we shall be led to stop before it is finished. There is a species of mankind, abnormally emotional, found in this country and Great Britain, known as the pacifist, which is as dangerous as the ultra militarist. Its members are already making their voices heard, and as soon as any considerable victory is won by the allies they will be more urgent. If the militarists are dangerous, the pacifists are more so, particularly in the face of such an enemy as Germany. Every pacifist is either consciously or unconsciously an ally of Germany, for nothing would be more acceptable to Germany, but more disastrous to the world, than an early peace. I say an early peace, not that the whole world does not desire peace at the earliest possible moment, but an early peace would mean a peace negotiated with the Germany military party, that party which has caused this world horror, which has not been defeated, which is not penitent, which knows no honor and could not be trusted to keep any agreement. The settlement whenever it comes must be with the German people, and not with them until the military party is defeated, discredited, repudiated and renounced by the German people themselves. In our charity and earnest desire to be fair we have hitherto made a distinction between the German military party and the German people, giving the latter credit for better principles than the former have exhibited. But our faith has begun to wane. We have no evidence at hand to show that our charitable judgments were justified; we do not hear them protesting against the frightful, bestial things their masters do, or of any dissent whatever from their aims or acts. Therefore, the burden of proof is with them, and it is near treason against a righteous cause to talk about peace and afterwar adjustments until the German people show signs of social instincts which would lead us to judge them safe to live with in the family of nations. Therefore our war is with the German people no less than with the military party and it cannot cease until the one is entirely put out of action, and until the other shows evidences of conversion, and gives sufficient guarantees of good behavior in the future. And the pacifists and all of like tendencies should cure themselves of the heresy by considering the patent fact that to conclude peace before Germany as a whole is defeated and brought to the bar of judgment, would not only invite a repetition of this world tragedy, but would be to prove disloyal and untrue to those brave men who have nobly fought and died in this cause. If they sacrificed their all that the world might be relieved of the peril of Germany we shall prove ourselves unworthy of them and contemptible cowards if we fail to 'carry on' until the work is completely done. In this matter let us not be ashamed to learn from the enemy one thing: we have all along given her the credit for thoroughness; let us show our loyalty to our noble heroic dead by continuing to fight till we shall have won a thorough victory."

INTER-CHURCH CONGRESS AT CHICAGO

(Continued from Page One.)

into the foul hands of Turkish misrule. Victory everywhere. But let us not become obsessed by our victories and listen to the immature cries for peace of the enemy. Bulgaria, that arch enemy has begun to whine and whimper for peace. Let them have peace but they must first bring forth fruit meet for repentance. Be patient with Russia. Eighty-five per cent of the Russians cannot read or write. It is divided by so many political parties and many creeds and smitten with delusions. We have another goal—a little farther away than the winning of the war. The war will be won—that is mathematically certain—sooner I think than many imagine. But when won? What then? We must, in some way, secure civilization. This can only be accomplished by a league of peace-loving nations. Only those nations that are fit must be admitted. Some nations will have to go into moral quarantine. They must be disinfected. The League must retain power to spank any nation which will not keep the peace. Such a League can only come to pass in a democracy. What is Democracy. No need to tell Americans. The people hold the political power and the end must be the people's good. Human rights come first—the right to live. Civilization must make law fit life, and not attempt to make life fit law. Just imagine a tailor attempting to make his customers fit the clothes instead of making the clothes fit his customers. The Constitution must fit the life of the people. The dirtiest urchin on the street has just as much right to his chance to live as any British prince or American millionaire. America has a soul as well as a Constitution. Great Britain has a soul as well as a Parliament. Many of the little nations crushed by Germany have nothing left but soul. Germany has no reverence for a nation's soul. As long as there is red blood in Britain and America Belgium shall have a resurrection. That's Democracy. A Democracy has never sanctioned war unless there was no other way out. Democracy is weak for war. Autocracy is just the opposite and unlike democracy acts without discussion. From a military point of view Germany should have won the war in six months, but she did not, and thank God she never can. Liberty is coming into her own, and will have genius enough to discover the road to keep the way of peace. Thank God when we have won we can then keep the peace of the world. It is after all the paradox of the Cross. Out of darknes shall come light—out of hate a regining love—out of death, life! and out of the tyranny that would curse the race shall come the soverignity of the Son of Man who shall keep safe the peace of the world."

By a standing vote the audience unanimously endorsed the following resolution endorsing President Wilson's prompt reply to Austria's peace note:

"We pledge our united support to the President and our army and navy in pursuing the war to a victorious conclusion, to the end that free institutions may be safeguarded the world around and that the right of self-determination may be assured to all peoples. And whether this victory comes soon or late, we will stand firm and unswerving to the end."

It may be that he contribution of the East to theology in our own day will so deepen our knowledge of Christian doctrine as to give us richer conceptions of the Faith than our duller Western minds have yet attained.—Bishop Fiske.

WORK OF THE WAR COMMISSION

(Continued from Page One.)

tunities for work in the vicinity of Fayettsville, N. C.

Reports were made in regard to possibilities for new Army work as well as for work in the newly constituted hospitals of the country.

A proposition was laid before the Commission for work among the Churches in the immediate vicinity of the universities and colleges, which have recently been taken over by the Army. The Executive Committee will give this matter careful consideration.

In the opinion of the Commission it was thought unwise to proceed with any new projects for buildings within the limts of the camps, inasmuch as the Commission is still uncertain what interpretation the War Department will put upon the order withdrawing civilian chaplains from the camps.

A propositon was laid before the Commission to join with the other Churches in a common drive for funds for the coming year. The proposition is of a two-fold nature, first, that there should be a common drive for funds; second, that there should be a common drive and a common fund, each Church, receiving that portion of the fund which is called for by the relation of its budget to the entire amount. This matter was referred to the Executive Committee with power to act. Suffice it to say, that there is a strong sentiment among the churches in general, that they should make a common appeal to the Church public.

Statement of Distribution for August, 1918, War Commission of the Episcopal Church.

Expenditures.

Chaplains' salaries		$ 6,134.58
Chaplain's equipment:
Portable altars	$ 920.04
Equipment	1,923.80
Hymns & prayers	3,846.47
		6,690.31
Chaplains' expenses		565.03
Special Chaplains' expenses		786.28
Brotherhood of St. Andrew		9,000.00
Printing		255.88
Miscellaneous	37.55
Office expense	100.27
Office supplies	40.00
Salaries (office)	393.66
Travelling exp.	1,129.61
		1,701.09
Army training school Chaplains		700.00
Loans to Chaplains		1,550.00
Appropriations for special work		2,100.00
Total expeditures, month of August		$29,483.17

Faithfully yours,
Henry B. Washburn.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE.

Sheridan's father and mother were living at Somerset, Ohio, when word came, that he had suffered a great defeat in the Shenandoah Valley. They slept none that night, but in the morning the old gentleman said:

"Mother, I'll go to the store and wait until the paper comes, get the news, and hurry back."

Old Mr. Sheridan was sitting on the steps of the store when a man rode up and called out, "Good news from Sheridan!"

Then one of the bystanders caught up the morning paper and read the account of Sheridan's return to the army; of his turning the tide; of the President's message of thanks; of Sheridan's heroic conduct and complete rout of the enemy.

That was enough for Mr. Sheridan. Mrs. Sheridan saw him coming, and hurried to the gate to get the tidings from Cedar Creek.

"Glory to God, mother, glory to God! Phil whipped 'em! The President has sent him the country's thanks."

After they had gone into the house the old lady suddenly became sober.

"What's the matter mother?"

"Father, did the paper say anything had happened to John?"

John was another son, a private in Sheridan's army in the valley.

But here was a mother's heart joyous over the great fame that had come to one son, yet in the midst of it all, remembering the other son, who was not a successful general, but only a faithful private in the ranks.

That is how God regards his children. Their places may be obscure, but He sees their work and loves them for doing it so faithfully.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

ACTIVE FAITH.

The world has been in turmoil for several years; what is to be the end?

Problems which would have staggered any previous age, have been confronting us, and new ones loom ahead. We need, to an unparalleled degree, guidance and a strength greater than our own. There is only one source from which we can hope to receive solution for our difficulties. We must sound the mind of God.

We crave understanding; He has not promised it. We pray for victory in our worldly conflicts; it may be delayed. We choose a sign of His favor and ask that it be vouchsafer; He only knows whether that is best.

He requires of us a venture of faith; faith in Him, in His abiding care, and in the ultimate triumph of goodness; faith in the strength that He will give to us to win our battles and to solve our problems during the war and after.

But this "faith" must be active not passive; eagerly co-operating with Him, not merely counting upon Him; using every capacity of body, mind, and spirit to accomplish what we believe to be His will, not supinely waiting for Him to settle our difficulties and then bestow some reward upon us.

As individuals, as a nation, as a world of human beings, we must draw close to God. learn to listen and to hear His voice, become respective to His gifts of nature and of grace; try to see clearly; and then go forth to battle with absolute confidence that He will guide us and empower us unto such accomplishments, as shall be for the good of mankind and the setting forward of the Kingdom of God.

Work, without prayer, is largely wasted. Prayer, without earnest effort to do our utmost, is of little worth, for it is either stupid, mechanical or insincere. We must couple prayer and work together, and give ourselves unstintingly to both. In large measure God will answer our prayers through us. Fight your way into an active faith.—The Rev. Frederick Budlong.

MESSAGE OF BISHOP TUTTLE TO UTAH FRIENDS.

During his visit in the west Bishop Tuttle sent the following message to his many friends in Utah through the courtesy of Dean Fleetwood of St. Mark's Cathedral, Salt Lake City:

Dear Brethren of St. Mark's and kind friends of Utah, all. The Dean most kindly gives me leave to say in the Monitor, How d'ye do?

In God's abounding mercy and good I am here once more to see your faces, and now to write you a greeting.

I hear you have forty-seven men at the front, or ready to spring forward to the front, in the war.

I thank God for your patriotism,—I am proud of you,—I love you.

God mercifully help us to be firm and strong and true to the flag of our country, the Stars and Stripes, which stands for righteousness and justice and international honor and chivalry to women and protection to children; and also firm and strong and true to the flag of our Saviour, the Cross which stands for faith and hope and love.

Your loving friend and old time Bishop,

Daniel S. Tuttle.

FIRE ALARM DRAWS CONGREGATION FROM CHURCH.

Bishop Faber of Montana, in his record of visitations, relates the following experience he had at Troy:

"At night our little Holy Trinity Chapel saw a fair congregation assembled, and after Evening Prayer I preached. As I was closing my sermon a fire alarm sounded—and seemed to sound very loudly and insistently. This in a small new town, with its many wooden buildings close together on the business street, is a serious enough matter. I told the people to feel free to leave, and leave they did; at least to find out where the fire was. Had there been any wind, Main street would have been doomed; for the fire was in an old lodging house used by railroad men, close in among a lot of shops back of one of the hotels. A few of my congregation came back shortly; the fire was under control, and no one hurt and no further danger. So I closed the service with prayers and blessing.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE BISHOP OF TEXAS ON SUMMER VACATIONS.

Furloughs of All Soldiers of the Church Militant Are At An End.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. G. W. Kinsolving who spent six weeks in the Adirondaks gives the following account in the Texas Churchman of his vacation and comments thereon:

In the much-advertised and very realistic French war narrative called "Under Fire," we are told of a visit paid by a little group of comrades in arms to Paris. They are amazed at the visions of comfort and happiness which are spread before them in the midst of war. And they wonder at the contrast between the life of the great metropolis and the life of the trenches to which they must return. How can great multitudes of their compatriots go on enjoying themselves at home while so mony others are living and fighting in the midst of constant misery and suffering?

So, one imagines, might some of our own boys feel if they were transported from the battle lines in far-off France to some of our American cities, and to some of our summer resorts in the country, such as the place where I have been resting for the past six weeks. Although one does not see the crowds of former summers, and although there is not the same spirit of gaity which makes the years of peace, yet there is little to suggest the stew and horrible realities of the vast conflict which has engulfed the civilized world as in a maelstrom. Here one watches the clouds and wonders whether they bode fair weather or rain. One enjoys the changing vistas across forest-rimmed lakes to distant mountain ranges. And here one pays attention to the glories of the sunset, and to the beauty of moonli and starlit nights. Both nature and human life seem peaceful and lovely.

When the war has drawn to a close, and a righteous and lasting peace has crowned the untild sacrifices of the Allies, no doubt these vacation regions will be even more popular than before. The strained and tired nerves of large numbers of people will call for such rest and refreshment as these lakes and mountains afford. For here are all sorts of invigorating occupations for young and for old. A noted Presbyterian minister from Brooklyn has spent many weeks trolling oon these lakes for bass and pickerel. Guides are always ready to conduct the fisherman to nearby lakes and streams, so that he may try out new fields. Camping is a delight to some people, and one may enjoy it here, either in tents or in the charming rustic dwellings which have been built here and there along the lake shores. Those who are fond of motoring may travel for hundreds of miles over the fine state roads, amid the most beautiful mountain scenery. Walking, mountain-climbing, golf, tennis, swimming and similar delights, may be indulged in by those who love them. The altitude is stimulating. Pure air, pure water, and pure food (served according to Hoover) assures good health. And so the Adirondack Preserve has every claim to being one of the finest vacation regions of this fair land of flowers.

We Have a Real Warfare Before Us.

But now the summer furlough of all soldiers of the Church Militant are at an end, and we must take our places once more in the ranks—for the trench warfare of the Christian life and for the successful offensives which we are going to conduct this year. Let us not forget that we all have a real warfare before us.

I hope to be back in my diocese by the first of October. I shall stop at St. Louis on my way home to assist in the consecration of Rev. Mr. Demby as suffragan-bishop of Arkansas, who will have charge of the colored work in the Southwest Province.

DR. MOTT'S STATEMENT CONCERNING THE CAMP PASTOR ORDER.

To the Editor of The Witness:

The public statement having been made in the press that I am responsible for the recent order of the War Department concerning Camp pastors, I wish to state that I am in no way, directly or indirectly, responsible for this order. I knew nothing about it until it had been settled by the War Department. I have received communications also, inquiring whether the National War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association has had anything to do with this action of the War Department. I have answered these communications, stating unqualifiedly that this organization has had nothing whatever to do with the matter. On the contrary, I am sure that it will be found on investigation in the various cantonments and camps throughout the country that the Association secretaries have as a rule done all in their power to help the Camp pastors in their work.

Let me add that I am a member of what is known as the Committee of Six, which has during the past year done all that it could to secure action on the part of the Government increasing the number of regular Army and Navy Chaplains and likewise to further any plans which could help them. I have been asked whether this Committee is not responsible for the recent action of the War Department concerning Camp pastors and wish to state that such is not the case.

I am sure that those who have through ignorance of the facts held me responsible for the Camp pastor order will do me the justice to correct their statements, in order that there may be no misunderstanding regarding my relation to this matter. My record shows that I have furthered the work of the Camp pastors, just as I have always advocated interdenominationalism and not non-denominationalism, believing that the stronger the denominations were the more powerful would be their co-operation in Christian service wherever co-operation was practicable and not inconsistent with conviction.

As for the merger of all war work organizations in one financial campaign, responsibility for which has also been laid, in part, to me, it is only right to say that I opposed the merger with all the power at my command until the President decided it should be made, when I loyally accepted his decision and am throwing myself heart and soul into a campaign to carry on a work essential to the welfare of our boys.

I kindly request that you will print this is your first issue, in justice to me, and especially that the great cause I represent may not suffer through misapprehension.

Sincerely yours,
John R. Mott.

IDAHO CATHEDRAL CONSECRATED.

Bishop Funsten Officiated and Bishop Tuttle Preached.

St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, Idaho, the Very Reverend Alward Chamberlain, dean, was consecrated on Sunday morning, September 15th, by the Rt. Rev. Dr. James B. Funsten, Bishop of the District. Following the consecration, says a local daily, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Daniels, S. Tuttle, pioneer Bishop of Idaho, who came from St. Louis to Boise for the event, preached the sermon, paying a glowing tribute to the work of the Church in Idaho, the foundation of which he laid half a century ago. The service was impressive and the congregation was the largest in the history of the cathedral.

The consecration sermon by Bishop Tuttle was taken from the 23rd verse of the 50th psalm, "Whosoever offereth me thanks and praise, he honoreth me; and to him that ordereth his conversation right will I show the salvation of God." The venerable bishop pointed out that from the earliest time man had erected temples for the worship of God and spoke a beautiful sentiment concerning the old testament, which he stated, was condemned by many, because it contained passages, not understood, but those passages, he compared to gnats and mosquitoes, declaring that the beautiful lessons and texts of the old testament should not be lost sight of and cast aside because a few passages were not clear. He then explained that the great lessons which ran through the testament were those of mercy, love and forgiveness.

Extends Congratulations.

Bishop Tuttle congratulated Bishop Funsten, Dean Chamberlaine and congregation in being able to consecrate the beauutiful temple for the worship of God as an accomplishment of love and faith to the divine principles for which they stood.

THE HANDSOME NEW CATHEDRAL WAS COMPLETED IN 1901. IT WAS BUILT AT A COST OF A LITTLE OVER $20,000. GRADUALLY THE DEBT WAS CLEARED UP BUT $7,000 STILL REMAINED TO BE PAID WHEN the Rev. Alward Chamberlaine became dean of the cathedral. His great desire was to clear the cathedral of debt and he determinedly set about the task with the result that on last Easter the last penny of the debt was cleared which made possible the great and glorious service held Sunday which brought to Boise the venerable Bishop Tuttle to take part in the crowning efforts of his work started so long ago and so well carried out by his successors.

Clergymen, who were present and assisted in the service were Archdeacon Stoy of Pocatello; the Rev. Dr. McLean; the Rev. Thomas Ashworth of Payette; the Rev. W. R. R. Simmons of Gooding, and the Rev. David H. Jones, rector of Christ Church.

THE DIOCESE OF MICHIGAN

The Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Michigan began its Teacher Training Drive with the cooperation of the Bishop, who on August first sent out a preparatory circular letter to the clergy and Church School superintendents. This was followed two weeks later by a letter from the Board enclosing literature supplied by the General Board and giving a detailed statement of the proposed Diocesan program. This has five aims for every parish and mission.

1. A Preparatory conference of workers, and, wherever possible, the formation of a permanent Parochial Board of Religious Education.
2. The observance of Teacher Training Sunday.
3. The appointment of delegates to the autumn archdeaconry meeting. Teacher training is to be the predominant subject at the meetings of the three Archdeaconries.
4. Co-operation with other communions in a community teacher training meeting.
5. A final conference to conserve results by securing recruits and beginning actual work in teacher training.

It is hoped that the results of this program will be two, a normal class in the Church School and training classes for present teachers.

In Wayne County the meeting of the Detroit Archdeaconry will be held in connection with a five-day meeting of the Detroit Sunday School Institute, which has also arranged a series of special conferences and classes for Church School Auxiliary leaders in the autumn and spring under the direction of Miss Frances Withers. The Woman's Auxiliary Institute for leaders of mission-study classes will be held in January as usual.

The Summer School for Church Workers, which has heretofore been under the auspices of the Detroit Archdeaconry, will next summer be under the official direction of the Diocesan Board.—The Leader.

A CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP CAMPAIGN.

A Drive in California to Put Churchpeople Right.

A Christian Stewardship Campaign will be conducted in the Diocese of California on Sunday afternoon, November 10th. Plans were worked out for the campaign at a conference held in St. Paul's Parish House, Oakland, on Sunday, September 22nd, preparation for which had previously been made by Bishop Nichols and a committee of the Standing Committee, consisting of the Rev. Dr. Parsons, the Rev. Mr. Cambridge and Messrs Langhorne and Wyckoof. At the conference the matter of the Campaign was fully presented by several speakers and steps initiated for an active and educational movement of preparation throughout the Diocese.

Bishop Nichols comments editorially as follows on the campaign in the Pacific Churchman:

A Campaign for Stewardship? Another drive? When is this thing going to stop? And a Drive for Stewardship? That somehow has a labor famine sound. Steamer stewards and club stewards we know, but what in the name of common sense has the Diocese of California to do with dabbling in questions of demand and supply there? Such a whimsy will at least serve to arouse attention to the fact that the Bible conception of stewardship is really that of economy in its widest application. Indeed the word translated "stewardship" is almost the exact counterpart of our word "economy." And the use of it is as comprehensive as that of St. Paul's whole ministry (Col. 1:25) and as technical as in the case of the unjust steward (St. Luke 16:2). Broadly speaking then our Christian Stewardship covers all we have at our disposal from God in terms of economy or making the most of it. It covers right use of our time, our faculties and our property. In this sense the Christian Steward is the Christian Economist. It is required that he be found faithful to all he is and all he has, as one that must render an accounting under the unerring audit of his God. His whole life is a sacred trust and squandering any part of it will be sure to find him out. It is an economy in which the waste is the most woeful thing in life.

The Objective of the Campaign.

What is the point of the Campaign? We hope no reader will be left with any doubt about that. It is signally and unequivocally to put us right as a people before God in our Stewardship of wage and income and any property possession we may have. We leave to the Campaign itsel fto elaborate and explain the details. But it is nothing more or less than a striving to fulfill in our lives what we profess with our lips: "All things come of Thee, O Lord, and of Thine own have we given Thee."

AN ARCHBISHOP'S PRONOUNCEMENT ON CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Reunion of Christendom Necessity of the World's True Progress.

The Most Rev. Dr. St. Claire G. A. Donaldson, Archbishop of Brisbane, Queensland, Australia, in his inaugural address delivered at the opening of the second session of the eighteenth Synod of the Diocese of Brisbane, had the following to say on the subject of the reunion of Christendom:

"I will mention one thing and one only about which I would fain kindle your hopes. Surely we cannot overestimate the significance of the growing hunger for reunion. Our whole attitude on the subject is changing rapidly, and I note the same swift development here as we have witnessed in the case of the missionary spirit—both winning their way directly people's attention is called. The sense of the Church's duty in the Mission Field has developed from being a hobby of a few, a subject of languid intermittent study, to be an environment, a necessity, an imperious call. Even so, the dream of reunion has advanced beyond the stage of speculative or academic interest. We have come now to see that the reunion of Christendom is likewise a necessity of the world's true progress. The absence of it is a paralyzing disease, and we become conscious that the divided Church pants for unity just as a sick man pants for air and health. Beneath the surface, the Church is in labour; future years are to witness a great awakening; and I cannot but believe that our new intolerance of our divisions is an indication of deep significance. Outwardly, it is true, there is little change in the situation, and the project of a World Conference on Faith and Order, the object of which is to work for reunion, has by no means yet taken hold of Christendom. The breach with Rome seems to have gone so deep and the forces of prejudice are so strong all round, that the ideal is voted an impossible one. But the significant fact is that the ideal holds us; possible or impossible, we are constrained to embrace it; and the project of this world conference appeals to our imagination and brings the ideal nearer. We are drawn in to work for it, and every task undertaken whets our appetite for more. I feel that the week of prayer observed throughout the world last January was epoch making in its spiritual effect, and it would appear that the first sign of God's answer to our prayers is a new sense of revolt. The present situation simply cannot continue. Something must be done. I believe that we of the Church of England are accused of hypocrisy because we talk of reunion but do so little. I am prepared to endure that imputation, for it is certainly better to wait than to do the wrong thing. But there are two roads along which we ought now to be making practical advance. First we must prepare for larger unity by seeking domestic unity within our own Church. If we criticise the political pacifist for preaching peace with all nations but war at home, so we must condemn the self-deception of the Churchman who seeks reunion outside but fosters party spirit in his own Church. I believe that we are learning unity in our own Church in Australia, and perhaps the greatest work the new Australian Board of Missions is doing at the present moment is the work of allaying suspicion, rivalry, and bitterness between our competing schools of thought; but Australia has had an unenviable notoriety for party spirit in the past and the evil spirit is not entirely exorcised yet. The second line of work is to dispel the ignorance which darkens existing Christian relations. We must balance our prayers for reunion with practical consideration for the position of our fellow Christians. I am constantly amazed at the extraordinary confusion in the minds of many of our non-episcopal friends as to the real attitude of the Church of England, and I am satisfied that we ourselves must plead guilty to the same kind of ignorance. Yet it is our bounden duty to know one another's position, to know exactly what each group of Christians believes itself to stand for as its fundamental and charateristic witness.

NEWARK'S PLANS FOR THE ADVENT CALL.

In the Diocese of Newark, New Jersey, the following tentative plan for parishes and missions to respond to the Advent Call has been published.

When the parish committee has secured and prepared its workers a letter signed by the rector will be sent out just before Advent, asking the presence of every woman at church on Advent Sunday, and that she will be at home at a specified time Monday or Tuesday.

Advent Sunday: Corporate Communion for all workers. Rector to present the plan to the congregation.

Monday: The messengers and intercessors commissioned by rector.

Monday and Tuesday: Visits and intercession.

Wednesday: Meeting for all women, to explain purpose and hope of the movement.

Thursday: Quiet Day. Instructions on Prayer.

Friday: Meeting to present the peculiar opportunities and responsibilities of women today.

Saturday: Intercessions.

First Sunday in Advent: Rector to sum up the work.

Wherever it is possible, daily Communion to be held throughout the week.

VALUABLE WORK IN TENNESSEE.

Rev. W. A. Jonnard of Johnson City, Tenn., in serving his diocese, has done a service for the whole Church. As chairman of the Committee on Parochial Education, he has issued a report on the work of the Committee that is worthy of the attention of every leader. It fills a pamphlet of twelve printed pages. An official system of records for the schools is provided. How to co-operate with the Junior Plan is described. The responsibility of each Vestry is stated and a committeeman appointed to follow up the subject. A list of valuable books for children is given. Summer Courses are recommended and five pages are given to what must be reliable statistics on attendance and enrollment.

The unique part of the report concerns Religion in the Home. In accordance with a resolution of the Diocesan Convention a questionnaire is addressed to every family in the diocese asking among other questions: Is the Bible ever read aloud in the home? Is grace said at meals? What religious paper or magazine is taken?

We believe that this is the first effort made by any diocese to get the facts on the most essential and yet the most difficult of religious education.

The principles underlying Mr. Jonnard's plan were proposed by the General Board in "Church Ideals" in 1915. They have been applied partially in most every diocese, but this is the first time that the whole program of Parochial Education has received such detailed and careful consideration.—The Leader.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A RECTOR'S MESSAGE TO HIS PEOPLE

The Rev. Dr. F. J. Barwell-Walker, rector of St. Paul's Church, LaPorte, Ind., has issued the following letter to his parishioners indicating how the boys at the front feel about some matters that should seriously concern all Christian people at home:

General Pershing and other generals of the Allies have said: "Only the prayers of ALL of our people can win us the victory." Prayer, therefore, is our most powerful ammunition.

The following extracts from some letters which appeared in the (English) "Church Times" will show you how the boys at the front feel about the matter.

Says "B. N.": "I am sure if the people at home fully realized what a help it is to us Churchmen out here to know that on a certain day of the week, in our respective churches, prayer is being offered up to God on our behalf, they would take care to be present. My advice to one and all at home is: Keep on with your prayers for your (President), country, soldiers and sailors. pray that peace may soon be restored, and do not forget to offer a great thankfulness for your Parish Church and Priest."

A week later appeared a letter from "H.," as follows: 'May I, as a wounded Tommy, of 18 months' experience of active service, express the hope that your readers will take to heart the words of 'B. N.'? If people at home only realized what a tremendous help it was to us at the front to know that we were being remembered daily at home, I am sure they would be more frequent and fervent in their prayers and Eucharists. Why do so few people use our free and open churches for daily private prayer? Why should not the spiirtual forces of our country be mobilized as well as the material, so that a continuous stream of intercession might arise to God from each Diocese every day of the year? Why is the daily Eucharist apparently so unattractive? Are people too tired to go? What if Tommy or Jack were too tired to fight? Is it inconvenient to go? Our men are suffering inconvenience, hardship and pain daily to save (America) and her churches from destruction. Let us back them up with our prayers, instead of hindering them with our indifference and slackness. 'He that is not with Me is against Me.'"

How Do You Spend Sunday?

Our boys are in the training camps and in the trenches. Do you spend your Sundays in furloughs of laziness or pleasure, without leave, and without first having used your ammunition?

Your boy or friend may be in danger in "No Man's Land," or ill in the hospital of a training camp. Do you dare go off on Sunday for amusement, or stay at home to entertain visitors, or for some other paltry reason, without having first come to God's House to cast about them the protection of your prayers?

Our forces overseas are commanded by two convinced Churchmen, General Pershing and Vice Admiral Sims. They are regular in meeting our Lord in the Holy Communion on Sunday. How long since you have made your communion?

To enable you to register your loyalty to God and country, I am sending you a membership card to our "Go to Church" Club. PLEASE USE IT REGULARLY.

Dr. Walker is using in his parish the "Go to Church Club" cards which may be had of the Parish Leaflet Co., Hobart, Ind.

All Christians need to know, and hold in contemplation, that suffering is not an incident of life here, but an essential culture. God cannot revive His own by any other means. Even His Son had to meet this criterion.—Watchman and Truth.

Just as you play without the music and do not think what notes you strike, though once you picked them out by slow and patient toil, so if you begin with set purpose, you will learn the law of kindness in utterance so perfectly, that it will be second nature to you, and make more music in your life than all the songs the sweetest voice has ever sung.—Frances E. Willard.

YOUR DUTY TO THE WAR CRIPPLE.

The cripple is not helpless but capable, provided the right job is found for him, and he is trained in preparation for it.

Idleness is the calamity too great to be borne. So what the cripple needs is the chance to work, and the encouragement to take advantage of it.

In the past we have done everything possible to make the cripple a failure. We have been lavish with sympathy and charity but short on giving him a real opportunity to make good. The attitude of the public has been a more baffling difficulty than the loss of a limb.

With our new responsibilities to the men disabled in fighting for us in this war, we must make our influence a help rather than hindrance.

It is no kindness to reduce them to the ignominy of dependence on others, for that makes them "crippled" indeed. We must put them back in the game, make them useful, and, in consequence, make life well worth living again.

Nothing short of this is a square deal to our men.

There are today many seriously crippled men—somt without legs, some even with both arms gone—who are doing their full share in the work of the world. But they had exceptional strength of character to overcome the difficulties placed in their path.

With a fair chance many others could do the same. In this light the problem is hopeful rather than discouraging.

The cripple needs thorough training for a trade which he can follow, and intelligent placement in employment. These the government will supply for the returning soldiers, but the responsibility for making this work effective rests with the public.

You can help to make life worth while for our crippled soldiers—

"By showing them real gratitude and respect, but avoiding hero-worship or sentimental sympathy."

"By expecting them to continue doing their duty and encouraging them in the effort."

"By finding them real jobs which they can hold down. If you are a worker, by seeking out positions in the shop or office which cripples can hold; if an employer, by reserving for cripples jobs they can properly fill, not as charity, but on the basis of competency alone."

"By helping others to a sensible and intelligent view of the matter."

We cannot now afford to leave in idleness men who can be useful producers. So as good patriots we can start with the cripples now among us and continue the work with the crippled soldiers when they return.

We may have cripples in the physical sense, but the moment we get them at a useful job the vital handicap disappears.

Can our crippled men count on you as a real friend?—The Ascension Herald, Fall River, Mass.

OUR DEAD.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John 15:13.

"On Flanders' fields where poppies blow,"
The dead are lying, row on row,
Beneath the poppies bending low;;
OUR dead are lying!

Gone for aye—
From life to death in but a day!
God grant to us that while they sleep,
Their memory we may ever keep.

From DEATH TO LIFE
Oh, rather say!—
That while they walk the higher way
We may within our hearts recall
That 'twas for US they gave their all—
Ah, God! How can such wonder be—
Such sacrifice to set men free!
'Twas thus Blessed Son did give HIS ALL that we, Thy sons, might live!

—Mary Opie, Pulaski, Va., in the Southern Churchman.

STIRRING UP THE MIND

The Rev. E. M. Cross.

It is a remarkable thing how little we are apt to use our minds in seeking God. Perhaps it is due to a feeling that He is to be apprehended by the heart rather than by the head, and so we have become a bit suspicious of rational methods of finding in God; we then have fallen back into a lazy habit of feeling that our hearts alone will lead us aright. If so, our mind needs to be stirred up! What a glorious thing it is to seek after God, and, finding Him through our own efforts, rejoice in the fact that no skepticism, no philosophy, no sorrow can take away our God! With our mind also, we formulate words which we use in speaking of and to Him.

We as Christians very naturally turn to the Saviour that we may be stirred up through a contemplation of His own sacred mind. And in so doing we find that He was keenly alive to things in the world about Him; an alertness that is to be noticed from the time His public appearance in the Temple to the end on His Cross; an alertness that also takes Him below the surface of things; for He sees children playing in the market, and their teachableness and grasp of the wonder of things causes Him to take them in His arms and hold them up for the world to notice, as illustrations of certain principles that we dare never lose sight of or forget. And yet that same far-reaching and seeing mind sems hardly to be aware of the evil that is so apparent to those who are about Him. How easy for him after having brought to light the false motives of His accusers, to dwell on them, that those who would entrap Him might be confounded; but rather is He seeking for the good which is capable of uprooting the evil. And withall, is that mind constantly busy. We sometimes think of Him, doubtless because of His claims, as one who was not mentally active; but a more careful observation must reveal Him as one constantly at work dwelling on the small as well as the great things of life.

Now, while we utter these observations on the mind of Christ, we very naturally are making a comparison between His mind and the minds of men; and the very wonderful thing about it is that there is a similarity, for all of these characteristics are to be found in those around us, not perfect in any one, nor complete nor balanced, but able to be discerned and emphasized. We have in truth the mind of Christ, which fact, when recognized, will surely produce a stirring in our mind and will. At first as we consider His mind and our own, we despair, and yet later mingled with the despair is is a joy that comes from the recognition of a likeness that can most surely be increased as the mind responds to the possibilities that underlie that likeness. We look at Him and He is above us: We look into His mind and He is—NEAR US!

May our minds be stirred again to a recognition of this truth!

NEWARK, N. J., NOTES.

The Rev. Francis H. Richey, of Asbury Park, has accepted the rectorship of St. George's Church, Vailsburg, to enter upon his duties about November 1st.

St. Paul's Church, Newark, has fitted up the second floor of its parish house with fifty beds for soldiers and sailors who may be in Newark on leave without a cheap, comfortable place where to spend the night. The week-end acommodation is not sufficient and other Churches will help out. A simple breakfast is provided. The work has been very satisfactory.

The Rev. Victor W. Mori, of Madison, has been appointed Archdeacon of Morristown, which includes the three western counties of the Diocese, in place of Archdeacon Tyler, who has become U. S. Chaplain in France. The Archdeaconry meetings are appointed as follows:

Newark at Short Hills, October 28th; St. Luke's, Paterson, October 29th; Jersey City, at Trinity, Hoboken, November 6th; Morristown, at Madison, November 7th.

Nearly all the clergy of the Diocese are brought together at these meetings for the discussion of living questions and the consideration of Diocesan affairs. In Paterson and Jersey City there is a good attendance of laymen in the evening.

Several building plans must be postponed because of the government regulations. At Vailsburg where a new Church building was planned it will probably be necessary to enlarge the parish house in an unexpensive way to meet the absolute need of the congregations gathered under the Rev. R. W. Conklin.

THE LITANY IN WAR TIMES

P. S. P. of the Field Artillery, in a letter to The Church Record, says:

I am writing from the battlefield of France, and it is late at night when our thoughts become more serious. I have just read the "Litany or General Supplication" of the Prayer Book by way of evening prayer, and it struck me forcibly in many passages as peculiarly appropriate in this time of our tribulation. I wonder whether those who wait at home have noticed how well in the supplications of the Litany are expressed our most earnest wishes and the prayers nearest to the hearts of all who are closely affected by this gigantic struggle.

"Remember not, Lord, our offences, . . . neither take thou vengeance of our sins: Spare us, good Lord, spare Thy people whom Thou hast redeemed with Thy most precious blood, and be not angry with us forever."

"From all evil and michief; from sin, . . . from all blindness of heart; from . . . hatred and malice; . . . from all inordinate and sinful affections; . . . from plague, pestilence, and famine; from battle and murder; . . . from all sedition, privy conspiracy and rebellion; . . . from hardness of heart and contempt of Thy Word and Commandment." Is it not an inclusive cry for deliverance from sins and dangers most imminent in these times?

And then,—"In all time of our tribulation; . . . in the hour of death; . . . Good Lord, deliver us." With death on all sides over here, the prayer takes on new meaning and earnestness.

And a little later, we beseech God to give to all nations unity, peace, and concord. It is the prayer ascending from all humanity.

There is no need of quoting more. In almost every word can be found a special meaning for our spiritual or national needs. It is only necessary to read with this in mind to see what I mean.

"O Lamb of God, who takest away the sins of the world, grant us Thy peace"—a spiritual peace—the peace of God which passeth all understanding, which can come to the soldiers in the midst of battle—to those at home under the stress of anxiety for loved ones exposed to unknown dangers—to those suffering the agony of separation and loss of sons in a far-off land.

Can we not use this Litany of ours, and pray into its words a special meaning for these war times? And when we come to the end, there is comfort in the beautiful words of Saint Paul, half prayer and half promise:

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with us all evermore."

"IMMENSELY GRATIFIED."

It makes all the difference in the world how you look at a thing. The Prussian Kaiser learns that a German mother has sacrificed nine sons in the war and he writes her a personal letter to tell her he is "immensely gratified" (!) and sends her his photograph with signature. Revolting, heartless egotism of a contemptible autocrat! Read his amazing letter, and then, to get a better taste in your mouth, read what Abraham Lincoln wrote to the mother who had lost five of her boys:

The Kaiser's Letter.

"His Majesty the Kaiser hears that you have sacrificed nine sons in defense of the Fatherland in the present war. His Majesty is immensely gratified at the fact, and in recognition is pleased to send you his photograph, with frame and autograph signature."

Lincoln's Letter.

"Dear Madame—I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the Adjutant General of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any words of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I cannot refrain from tendering to you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice on the altar of freedom.—The Montana Churchman.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF EXAMPLE.

Our Savior's method is superior to that of the world in securing co-operation because it rests upon the highest possible plane. A nation passes laws and compels obedience under penalty. Our Savior teaches us what He has done for us because He loves us and wishes us to have the fullest and richest life possible. He then offers opportunities of serving Him and calls upon us to do it of our own free will. The one is compulsory; the other voluntary. Both are necessary. The nation publishes its laws and organizes a system of police and courts of justice to enforce them. Our Savior says "If you love me, keep my commandments."

In methods of finance the nation makes its budget, estimating carefully what it will need to carry forward its work. It then informs the people what they must pay and demands it from them. The people sometimes grumble, but they pay. God's Kingdom needs money for its support and for its tremendous task of overcoming the power of Satan and bring to all men the blessings which Christ offers. Its leaders tell us what will be required and leave to our consciences whether we will be generous and pay our share, or shirk and let someone else pay for us, or see the Kingdom of God weakened and held back by our disoyality. What every- indicated in Malachi iii 8-12. Here one should give for God's work is again the standard is the highest possible, because it appeals to our free will and depends on our faith in God.

In the use of our time and work the nation to a large degree demands our service, and we give it gladly. The Savior quietly says, "Follow me," and lets obedience rest with the decision wrought by the love we feel in our hearts.

Our devotion to the needs of the nation is so loyal and so enthusiastically given that the word "slacker" shows the loathsome contempt in which we hold the man who does not measure up to our high standard of patriotism.

This is where the responsibility of example exerts so powerful an influence. We do our share gladly for the nation, because we wish to be loyal. Shall we be any less devoted to our Savior? The stability of the national life will be determined by our loyalty to Jesus Christ. It cannot stand unless it be built upon Him.. You and I who are called by His name have a responsibility of example to which we must fully measure.—The Rev. Charles H. Young.

A SOLDIERS LETTER TO HIS MOTHER.

The Minneapolis Tribune published the following letter from a Canadian soldier to his mother, written just before going into battle, which is worthy of wide publicity:

"Mother, dear, your letters worry me, worry me considerably. It is evident that you do not understand, but I shall put it to you this way: Do you realize that Christ was the first one to fall in the present war?

How? Well, simply this: The very principles for which Christ gave His life are identically those principles for which Britain is today giving her life-blood. It is an old struggle and Christ Himself was the first martyr to the cause. We are fighting for principles. Right against might. Would the world be worth living in if might, and might alone prevailed?

Therefore, mother, rather than pray that Harry and I should never be sent to the front, pray that we shall acquit ourselves like men and be strong for we are on duty primliary for God.

Don't feel badly if you hear that we have been specially detailed for dangerous work. Rather look on it as an honor and special privilege that we should be chosen for special duty in upholding the cause for which Christ laid down His life. If you pray for our return and only for our return it is selfishness. Our mothers have been called on to endure greater sacrifices than any we can endure in this war.

Pray for victory, for right; pray that we shall be able to do our duty faithfully and if we fall for the cause of Christ, remember, mother dear, that "greater love hath no man than this that he lay down his life for his friends."

Personally, I don't want to go back except with honor and a clear conscience of having done my duty. Life under any other circumstances after the war would not be worth while."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. No. 93. CHICAGO, ILL., AND HOBART, IND., OCTOBER 12, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

TO ENLIST LAYMEN IN THE CAUSE OF CHRIST AND HIS CHURCH

A Tremendously Important Undertaking by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Impelled by a realization of the duty of the Church in the present crisis, and looking toward the days of readjustment after the war, the leaders of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at the recent national Convention of the organization framed an Advance Program, by which to enlist the active, consecrated service of all laymen in the cause of Christ and His Church. There is growing among men a consciousness of a new and better world for all mankind—or the sacrifice on the battlefields of Europe shall be in vain. And as those who fight the enemies of God and right over there are nobly carrying on, they must find the Church at prayer and at work when they return; they have a right to expect the same devotion, consecration and courage in our work that they have shown in theirs. As Bishop Darst of East Carolina has said: "Not only does this tremendous hour in the world's history sound a clear call to the highest and finest service on the part of the clergy, but it calls in no uncertain tone for more complete consecration, more unslfish devotion on the part of the men and women who constitute the membership of Christ's Holy Church. The consecration must be willing, it must be entire—all we have, all we are! it must be now."

Thirty-five Years of Splendid Service.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the only national laymen's organization of the Church, is completing thirty-five years of splendid service. Its work among the enlisted men of the country in the various camps and overseas has demonstrated anew the spiritual power and the usefulness of the Order. With a vision of increased power and greater usefulness, the Brotherhood now calls for the cooperation of the Church's laymen to carry out the program adopted at Northfield.

The following Officers and Secretaries have been elected to lead the Brotherhood in the enlarged work about to be undertaken:

Edward H. Bonsall, St. Matthew's Chapter, Philadelphia, President; Courtenay Barber, Redeemer Chapter, Chicago, First Vice-President; Walter Kidde, St. Luke's Chapter, Montclair, New Jersey, Second Vice-President; Warren Hires Turner, Holy Trinity Chapter, Philadelphia, Treasurer; G. Frank Shelby, St. Mark's Chapter, Denver, General Secretary; George H. Randall, Holy Hrinity Chapter, Philadelphia, Associate General Secretary and Editor of ST. ANDREW'S CROSS; Franklin H. Spencer, Holy Apostles' Chapter, Chicago, Executive Secretary. Benjamin F. Finney, Christ Church Chapter, Savannah, Georgia, the Southern Secretary of the Brotherhood, is temporarily withdrawn from his field to continue his work as Chief Secretary of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood.

Mr. Shelby, the new General Secretary, is the oldest of the Brotherhood Secretaries in point of service, having been for a number of years Secretary of the New York Metropolitan District and later Secretary in charge of the great district west of Colorado and extending to the Pacific Coast. A year ago Mr. Shelby was taken from his field of work to become Secretary of the Bureau of Personnel of the Brotherhood's Army and Navy Department, from which position he has now been advanced to the General Secretaryship of the Brotherhood. He has served with marked ability and genuine consecration in all the positions he has filled and brings to his new office qualities of personal worth and the asset of a long and rich experience in religious work among men.

Under a strengthened and increased organization, with the inspiration of a vision of glorious service, and encouraged by a record of achievement in fullfilling its sole object, the spread of Christ's Kingdom, the Brotherhood solicits the universal enlistment of the men of the Church as it enters upon this important era of its life.

THE BROTHERHOOD'S ADVANCE PROGRAM

"The members of the Brotherhood accept special responsibility at this time to assist the Church in preparation for the return to their parishes of those men now enlisted in the service of the nation."

For thirty-five years the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has been faithfully following the guidance of the Master in the spread of Christ's Kingdom among men. As a result of the fidelity of men who have fought valiantly for the ideals of the Brotherhood, a foundation was laid for an immediate service for God and country at the outbreak of the war. The creating of the Army and Navy Department was alone made possible by this nationally organized lay work of the Church.

Working assiduously with the approval of the Church War Commission, this Department has established a new era in Brotherhood activities. When our country became an ally in the world war, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew immediately undertook to co-operate with the chaplains and other clergy in organizing for the spread of Christ's Kingdom in the camps, at the same time assuring those who were serving the Flag the sympathy, love and fellowship of the Church's Army at home. Seventy-two laymen, chiefly members of the Brotherhood, have responded to the appeal for personal workers in the cantonments, and today there are thirty-two men serving for periods of three, six or twelve months, or for the life of the war. The records of the work these laymen have accomplished show achievements for the Master. Enlisted men in the camps have been enrolled in Bible Classes, Personal Workers' Groups and Corporate Communion units, the influence of which is being felt throughout the camps and is being mirrored in the hearts of the men at home. These men of the Brotherhood are telling the men in the camps that when they return to their individual parishes they will find the Brotherhood of St. Andrew organized and extending a welcome for practical and inspiring service in the Church.

The Brotherhood Filling a Tremendously Important Place.

The Army and Navy Department is financed by the War Commission of the Church. Our work in the army camps and naval stations is in co-operation with the Young Men's Christian Association. The Secretary in charge of the Religious Work Bureau of the Young Men'c Christian Association clearly states the unique and tremendously important place in which the Brotherhood of St. Andrew

(Continued on page 6)

CHAPLAIN COMMENDED FOR HIS VALOR

The Rev. M. J. Baker, Jr., former assistant rector of St. Peter's Church, Uniontown Pa., has won commendation for heroic conduct at the front in France, where he is serving as a Y. M. C. A. chaplain with the American Expedtionary Forces. The report of the Y. M. C. A. National War Work Council follows:

"The Rev. Mandeville J. Barker of Uniontown, Pa., has been commended for valor by the commander of the brigade to which he is attached as a Y. M. C. A. worker, according to word just received by the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A. Going out ahead of the machine guns during an attack in the Aisne sector, he dressed the wounds of Americans and German alike, at one time being only 20 yards distant from a German outpost, from which he was hidden by a slight rise of ground.

"Maj. T. N. Vail, of Harrisburg, Pa., was in command of the machine gun detachment which went in advance of the infantry in an attack on positions at Glennes. They went ahead and opened an enfilading fire that carried the day. Capt. John Hasres of Scranton, Pa., led one group that got into some of the hottest places.

"Out in front of them toiled the Rev. Barker, working along on his hands and knees and finding plently of calls for his bandages and dressings. The clergyman came upon one German wounded in the leg, who was limping toward his own lines. Though unarmed, the 'Y' man halted him and bandaged the wound of the man, who was grateful enough to let the good Samaritan make his getaway."

ALL FEAR WAS STILLED.

An English woman, says the Minneapolis Tribune, describes a scene in a munition factory where more than a thousand girls and women worked. The lights suddenly were darkened because a German air machine was overhead. She writes:

We could hear the grinding of the Zeppelin engine, and we knew that if one shell fell on the glass roof above us, but few would live to see the dawn of another day. It was an awful moment, and presently the nerve of the women began to break. You could hear a sob here and there and a little scream, and presently someone, inspired by a message from on high, began to sing softly that beautiful hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." I wish that I could make you see and feel what it was like—that wonderful low melody stealing across the factory, taken up by every voice, and how it fell like a benediction upon the bowed heads and beating hearts, until all fear was stilled.

BONDS OF LIBERTY.

America is learning to save and serve. She is seeing the glory as well as the wisdom of sacrifice. No worthy appeal has been refused. Every "drive" for money has been oversubscribed because the spirit of stewardship is becoming universal. It is more than cheering. It is stimulating. Our Liberty Bonds have been so widely bought because the subscribers have been shown not only what each Bond can do—which is much—but what each buyer can do—which is far more. "The gift without the giver is bare," and happily America is visualizing itself as a nation at work.

We must encourage and develop this spirit. The people of this country have become accustomed to the notion of billions instead of millions, and they have not only thought in terms of billions, they have given billions to achieve the one supreme purpose of "winning the war." Already $10,000,000,000 have been loaned to the Government, not because of the lure of the interest, which is less than many business enterprises yield to the investor, but because of the purpose for which the money is needed.—From Between the Lines.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying On Subjects of Present Day Interest.

On to Berlin.

Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, in a recent speech, said: "On my calendar at Washington is but one engagement, the day I shall march behind the marine band with Pershing's soldiers into Berlin . I don't know the exact date yet, but it is coming as sure as God is in His heaven."

Why Not a Service Flag for Those Engaged in Religious Work?

"Probably every Parish in this land today has its service flag, a constant reminder of those who have gone forth to fight for our country," says the Rev. Dr. Jackson, of Fall River, Mass. "But how few Parishes have their service flags for those who have gone forth to fight directly for the Kingdom of our Lord. Would it not be an inspiring sight in any Parish Church to see the Flag of the Cross with stars grouped beneath, each star representing a life that is being devoted to some distinctly religious work? The number of stars seems pitfully small in comparison with the number now placed upon almost any Parish flag for the nation."

Suggests Frequent Use of Whitsunday Collect.

Mr. G. A. Thornton of the Musician's Association of Minnesota believes things musical should be done "decently and in order." In commenting upon the "advance which has been made in organ construction and the enlarged power of musical expression which "is not without danger so far as the performer is concerned," he says, speaking to a group of skilled musicians, "we have long ago put away childish things and are not likely to play down to the gallery for a little cheap applause. The organist has a more or less complete instrument comprising all shades of organ tone—diapasons, flutes, stops of string-like quality, reeds, etc. These are of great importance, they are his tools, but of still more importance is the judgment and experience of the individual who has to make use of them. Those who are members of the Episcopal Church would do well to use frequently the collect for Whitsunday, which is a petition for "a right judgment of things."

Strength and Power and Healing.

"The call to prayer and the consideration of spiritual things comes with a new force into many a home darkened by the shadow of the war," says Mrs. Hancock, President of the South Dakota branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. "The suffering and anguish will not be without result if they open our blind eyes and show us anew where strength and power and healing are to be found. Let us unite most heartily in preparing for and carrying out this Advent Call so that the mighty forces may be released which shall help to form the new and better days for which we long and the blessings be poured out which are only given to those who seek them."

Women to Put the Power of Prayer Behind the War.

Miss Grace Lindly, General Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, commenting upon the Advent Call, says:

"Much has been said about the awakening of the conscience of the American people, much about the morale of the nation, much about generosity for the world's appalling sufferings, and the women of America have taken a full share in all this. No one doubts that they have also exerted much spiritual power; their prayers, their courage, their services are proof of that, but the time has come when there should be a way of gaining and using the united spiritual power of the country's womanhood.

"It is the effort to awaken and use this tremendous power that the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions has decided upon as its war work. If the Auxiliary can get the women throughout our nation to put the power of prayer behind the struggle on the battlefield, and to prepare for the new time, making themselves more fit to share in the creation of that new world, they can render no greater service to the nation and to the Kingdom of God.

"The Auxiliary will make an effort to reach the women of American directly and indirectly: To do this, they will try first to reach and enlist all churchwomen. After this has been done and with the help of these women they will make an attempt to reach those not belonging to any religious body. The first part is to be undertaken next Advent. The second, not until the year after. The Woman's Auxialiary is also suggesting to the women of other communities that they shall attempt the same plan among themselves."

Keep the Moral Aim to the Front.

Bishop Gore, of Oxford, commenting upon his trip to the United States in behalf of the League of Nations movement, said:

"I am very keen about getting religious people of all kinds to throw themselves into pressing forward the idea of the League of Nations, leaving it, of course, to the politicians to settle the details, but asserting the principle.

"No one is more clear than I am as to the moral necessity of entering upon this awful war and of fighting it through; but I am exceedingly anxious that the moral aim in all this should be kept clearly to the front; and I fear that as the war goes on there is more and more necessity that great efforts should be made to secure this. The mere determination to beat Germany is apt to absorb all else. Whereas, in fact, we might defeat Germany and at the same time absorb so much of what is false in the spirit of the war as to defeat our professed aims in entering upon it. That is what makes me ready to do anything that lies in my power to keep the right moral principles of the war to the fore."

We Must Measure Up to New Ideals.

"It is not a question of the boys over there living up to the ideals of those at home it is a question of the folk here measuring up to the new-found ideals of the Americans who have gone to France."—Interview with Vance Thompson in Association Men.

Service and Sacrifice Attractive.

"The other day I read Coningsby Dawson's 'The Glory of the Trenches.' says Bishop Touret of Western Colorado, "and put it down wondering why it is that one finds so few men actively engaged in the work of the Church, for Dawson surely points out that religion is a man's affair. No one would accuse Harry Lauder of being a prig, but his 'Ministrel in France' is the work of a man who has found in his religion his one and only prop when life seemed to him to have stopped in the death of his dearly loved and only

(Continued on Page 6.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

St. Luke the Evangelist.

Oct. 18th.

By the Rev. Francis S. White.

The Collect.

Almighty God, who calledst Luke the Physician, whose praise is in the Gospel, to be an Evangelist, and Physician of the Soul; May it please thee that, by the wholesome medicines of the doctrine delivered by him, all the diseases of our souls may be healed; through the merits of thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Whose praise is in the Gospel." Who could want a finer tribute paid him than that? There never yet was a soul which was not warmed by praise, even though the praise might not have been entirely deserved. Man is grateful when his fellows find it in their hearts to speak well of him. But St. Luke's praise lay not in what men said about him, but in what he said about The Christ. That Gospel which tells of the Good Shepherd's dealings with His sick, sorrowful, sinful flock, is one which when men read they are enabled again and again to thank God and take courage. "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick!" So St. Luke's Gospel comes home, close home to those hungry, abashed souls who realize that though the sin be "by their own fault, by their own great fault," still it is possible to be healed of that sin. Such knowledge could not help but bring praise to its publisher, could it? To publish those tidings is the privilege and duty of every baptized person. Are you living up to your privilege, my friend? Are you doing that duty? If so, then you are the type of Christian Missionary "whose praise is in the Gospel."

And looking at it from another angle, what else is there you can spell to men, that is so beautiful, so worthy of being sung as praises to God, as this Gospel of Healing to the spiritually sick?

Wholesome Medicines Needed.

"The wholesome medicines": There are medicines whose effect can becom fearful and frightful in their results, because danger lies in their abuse or neglect. Many a man reads the comfortable words and drugs his soul thereby, because he has neglected to read and ponder over the warning woes of the Gospel. It is said of Esau that "he found no place for repentance though he sought it carefully with tears." Some of the sayings of Christ are hard sayings. The hard sayings may contain the wholesome medicines which we need if we are to become and remain sane and wholesome saints.

"Medicines of the doctrine delivered by him." St. Luke's teaching or doctrine or dogma was not his own, but came to him from the Christ. There are two sets of people in life who are dangerous to have around in times of sickness: Those who throw all medicines out of the window, and those who try to "doctor" themselves. So in our religious lives there are two equally fallacious or false classes: those who say "away with all 'dogma' or 'doctrine' or 'teaching,' and those who 'wrest' the scriptures to their own damnation." The Church that simply preaches the Gospel is not going to make healthy saints—she must teach the Gospel as well, and as patiently and enthusiastically as the chemist teaches chemistry, and the carpenter teaches carpentry, and any teacher of any department of life teaches the facts of his department. The parish that fails to teach will eventually die of dry rot; and the rot will attack the top root of Christian living, which is, "go into all the world," teaching as well as preaching.

The Church Belives in Soul Doctors.

"Diseases of our souls may be healed: through the merits of Jesus. How many of our Christians are carriers of soul sickness? To keep the feast of the physician saint is to remind ourselves that the Church believes in soul-doctors, as well as body-doctors. Because in the past she has neglected or exaggerated symptoms in herself as the Body of Christ spiritual "quacks" without number now beset her on every hand. There is none of us that can afford to neglect the physician of the soul. We need to examine ourselves, but we need to be examined, too, lest we carry in ourselves the poison of a sin which will harm others. Preventive medicine is so much better to take than curative or narcotic medicines. The wise parishioner is the one who does not shrink from the wise parson who fails not to teach as well as preach the doctrine delivered to him by Jesus Christ, for the health of His Body.

The Epistle. 2 Tim. iv. 5.

Watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry. For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me; for Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia. Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry. And Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments. Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works: of whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood our words.

The Difference Between Christians.

It does not say watch all things, but "watch in all things." A Christian who slides over "in," and "as," and "out of" and "through" is going to have a hard time being a Christian, and he is going to miss a lot of joy that comes from being a Christian. There is as much difference between the Christian who "watches all things," and the one who "watches in all things," as there is between the observer of a football game, and the player of that game. | "Side-line" Christianity has been more practiced by many of us, than "getting into the game." As a result we often seem to know how the game should be played, but we have neither the joy of the conflict, nor the sense of having been in something that was really worth while. This observation holds good about every department of the Church's work, which is only another name for mission work. Never in the history of the world was there greater need for "skilled" people than there is today; and to the professing as well as the practicing Christian there comes the challenge to make "full proof of our ministry."

Much of Our Religious Life Lacks Fire.

The Apostle who was about to leave the field of action said that the crown or garland was not alone for such fighters as he had been, (and notice that he did not say he was a good fighter, but called attention to the fact that the fight was good, was "worth while," was a good fight) but that the Righteous Judge would give that same crown to all those "who love His appearing." What does it mean to "love His appearing?" Does it not mean to have a genuine passion for the places where the Christ has said He would be present, be manifested? The current school girl phrase is "to be crazy" about such and such a thing, person of event. "To love His appearing" means to have madness which can be called divine—something like "the zeal of thine house," which the psalmist said under an impulse from on high, "hath even eaten me." So much of our religious life lacks fire, passion, eagerness, it is so cold and unenthusiastic and staid. It is not compressed; for there is no evidence of a power that is straining at the leash. A student of our national life said that, "on Fifth Avenue God seems hard to find." That is a hard criticism and was born of a church-going experience where "prayers were read and confessions uttered without any disquieting spiritual agony." Only those who are desperately in earnest are going to "love His appearing." Not to "love His appearing; not to be thrilled as we approach the thought of meeting the righteous Judge, is an indication that we need a St. Luke, a soul physician to help us diagnose our "case." Are we like Demas, or Alexander? Can the Christ as He makes His appearing at our Altar Prayer Meetings say of us what Paul said of Luke? or will He have to class us with Demas, or Crescens or Alexander? Again hold this thought for a few moments: If the Christ seems far off from you while you are doing your bounden duty, may it not be that He has sent you from a sense of His nearness in some such way as Paul sent Titus? At such a time hold fast to the love you have for his appearing and you can count on it that He will draw nigh to you as the time of your departure draws near. Only where the distance seems great between you and the Lover of your soul, be sure that you are doing your diligence. To "do thy diligence" means, to do the duty at hand with a zeal that is born of love. If the sexton would "do his diligence," if the vestryman would "do his diligence," if the usher, and the choir member, and the organist and the choir mother, and each and every member of each and every guild, and if the priest or the deacon or the bishop or the layreader, each and every one of them would only "do his diligence," there would come into that parish a zeal, a burning zeal, a heavenly warmth, a genuine fire, that would put vibrant meaning into confessions, and fill music with understanding, revivify the psalms, and inject life into creeds, and power into prayers. And when this thing happens then the man who comes to scoff will remain to pray.

"The Lord reward him according to his works." Here is one of those "wholesome medicines" that some men have forgotten to apply to themselves. "Verily I say unto you they have their reward," said Jesus about the Pharisees, who were such "poor actors" that they were content to seek the praise of man rather than the praise of God. Unfortunately, evil works get a reward as well as good works. The man who forgets this truth is the man who has persuaded himself that he needs no "soul doctor" and so becomes a prey for any religious quack who may chance to come his way.

The Gospel. St. Luke x. 1.

The Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come. Therefore, said he unto them, The harvest truly is very great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest. Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves. Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: and salute no man by the way. And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be unto this house. And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire.

Who knows that St. Luke was not among these other seventy who went out two by two? God's schools are so wonderfuly adapted to man's needs. If men would only be willing to go where the Lord "appoints," the mission cause would progress as surely and as successfully as it did when St. Luke wrote about it in his Church history. "Into every place whither he himself would come; Jesus would send forerunners. Why is it that we people of Church privliges do not see more clearly this truth and do our utmost to pave a way for "His appearing?" Because we are not on fire with a zeal for the House where the Lord has promised to meet with His people who are all sorts and conditions of men.

Slackers in Pews and Chancels.

"The laborers are few, the harvest is great." Were there ever such slackers as there are in many of the pews and chancels of Christian Churches today? And is the reason for this to be found in the statement that "there seem to be so few who really love the Lord's appearing? and is it an explanation of this state of affairs to say that men neglect or subordinate the teaching function in favor of the preaching function, both in the pulpit and pew?

"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest." The harvest is the Lord's business; that is why He is Lord of the harvest; but the sowing and the watering—that is our business. It is not our business to worry about the harvest, but it is very much our business to be concerned about the sowing and the watering; and that is just the part to which many of us pay the least attention. Everyone is out for results. God takes care of results; so the reason we pray to the Lord of the harvest is not for results but for laborers. It is through the laborers that the Lord will take care of the harvest. Like a good physician St. Luke gives us a stimulating medicine in this advice from The Beloved Savior. And His missionary work is no easy work—it is a dangerous occupation; it requires vigilant circumspection. To keep Christ manifest, is like keeping lambs in a region haunted by wolves lurking in the shadows. One has to keep his eyes open all the time if he expects to do what is expected of him, and come out alive unto God.

Another valuable prescription St. Luke prescribed for us is, "Carry neither purse nor scrip nor shoes; and solute no man by the way." Primary reliance on money, food, clothing or purely social service will not make the right type of converts to a real everyday working and workable religion. Such ideals make "nice Christians." The religion that sticks has to have the Son of Peace as the center of the family life, which is another name for the true religious life. The household of faith is not built on money or food or raiment, but on a friendly approach and fellowship, which recognizes that the bond of union is the Son of Peace, a peace which is not of the lips only, but ofthe heart first of all, and always first.

Laborers in the Harvest.

"In the same house remain." make your home. Don't make the mistake of bartering a birthright of interior peace for some material mess of pottage. The things they give to eat and drink will be the sort of things that will fit you to be the best kind of a laborer in the harvest. Your true work will be appreciated if you "remain in the house." But if the grass on the other side of the ecclesiastical fence looks so much sweeter than does the food inside, why, do not murmur if you find dissatisfaction in the results which make you a spiritual tramp, going about from house to house, learning the habits and speech of the slacker, and gradually becoming a menace rather than a help to the harvest, and those called to be laborers in that harvest.

UNANSWERED PRAYER

Rev. Williston M. Ford.

There is no such thing. The smallest stone dropped into a pool has its effect upon the water. You cannot do anything or say anything without some effect—the whole realm of nature and of life show nothing without its corresponding effect. This is a universal law. Results may be unencouraging, unexpected, unperceived; but they are absolutely and inevitably certain.

Moses prayed to see the Promised Land. He never saw it; but this prayer was answered in the large sense. His real longing was not to see a new country, but to forward the life of Israel; and his death, creating the leadership of Joshua, did this. Moses' praper was answered in the fullest sense.

Learning her son might go to Italy, Monica prayer fervently it should not be; he must not know the evil malignant there. But God sent Augustine straight to Italy. And the mother's prayer was answered in the conversion and consecrated life of St. Augustine.

St. Paul again and again besought relief from the infirmity which made him appear ridiculous in public. But no relief came. And his prayer was answered in the immense spiritual urge which his infirmity served to intensify.

What we pray to be spared can inspire. What we pray to escape can fulfill. We are always answered. God always answers our real needs. As the sage Tagore wrote: "Even didst Thou save me by hard refusals'.' That great apostle, Dr. Grenfell, has said: "We dare not question God's answer to prayer when we consider our imperfect knowledge and character." We have to go back to Plato's great prayer: "O, Zeus, grant me the good, whether I pray for it or not; put evil from me though I pray for it." The mystic John Tauler prayed in nearly the same words: "O God, we know not what is good for us; Thou knowest what it is, and for that we pray." This is the meaning of that supreme word in supreme Gethsemane—"Nevertheless."

If any one word is needed in prayer today and this coming year, it is this word "nevertheless." It has always been so. The bedridden woman, who prayed for the mountain opposite her window to remove itself was most a fool. Never confuse conviction with twaddle. "If ye abide in me, Ye shall ask what Ye will and it shall be done unto You!" This does not mean we can pray for anything and get it because of faith. It all depends on the "if." If we abide in Christ, we will ask in a Christ-like way—and, sure as daylight, we will get what we want as Christ-like people. We will get all the splendid hardship and happiness of a developing spiritual life. That is what we really want. That is really what we are praying for. When anyone prays like John Tauler, "Give me what Thou wilt, and how Thou wilt, and when Thou wilt," there is no doubt about the answer. We always get what we need. Prayer is always answered. The answer is often unexpected—it is sometimes unrealized. The answer to prayer is often a surprise and sometimes a revelation; but it is certain.

THE MOST POPULAR BOOK

The one best seller is the Bible. It has been translated into more than 100 languages, and it has an annual circulation of about 5,000,000 books, testaments and portions.

How many thousands of books about the Bible have been written no man knows, or cares.

As the days grow shorter and the evenings longer the question of what to read this fall perplexes many who like to make their leisure profitable.

Then—why not read the Bible In it there is versification which later poets have not excelled, stirring naratives of great adventure, biography of great men, the word which comforts, the thought which inspires, and a system of ethics so perfect that man has not yet compassed it.

Because it fits into the experience of all, because it applies to the conditions of every age and every land, the Bible is recognized as the world's leading classic. No man can claim to be educated unless he has studied the Bible.

These are hard years for the sensitive. The agony of Europe scars the mind. And something of the sadness of Europe spreads out and encompasses the peoples at the four corners of the earth.

Men talk less about the war than they did in its beginning, but they feel its horrors, its wastefulness, its hopelessness far more. And when the literature of the war proves too appalling and they seek relief in books of another kind, they require solace and stability.

In this mood they can appreciate the Bible with understanding, for it is the one book "wherein for several thousand years the spirit of man has found light and nourishment and an interpreting response to whatever is deepest in him."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

* * * * * *

THREE GATES OF GOLD.

If you are tempted to reveal a tale someone has told you about another.
Make it pass before you speak
Three Gates of Gold.
Three narrow Gates.
First—Is it True?
Then—Is it Needful?
and the next, last and narrowest
Is it Kind?
And if at last to leave your lips it passes through these Gateways Three,
Then you the tale may tell,
Nor fear what the result may be.

* * * * * *

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

By the Rt. Rev. Dr. A. C. A. Hall.

Third Paper.

Proposed change No. 4. (Continued from last week.)

The provision for additional Sentences as an enrichment of the Book of Common Prayer, as proposed by the Commission ought not to be made, in the opinion of the writer, at the cost of the omission of the four Sentences it is proposed to drop. The four Sentences the Commission proposes to drop are among those to be found in the 1552 Book (when the Sentences were first introduced into the choir offices of Matins and Evensong) and were evidently selected by the compilers of the 1552 Book because of their distinctive bearing upon the attitude of the soul in the worship of God. Their long association with the daily Offices in the English Church, to say nothing of their teaching value, make it seem unwise to omit them.

Let us examine them,briefly:

First, there is the familiar Sentence which has been used in the English Church for more than four hundred years ,namely, "When the wicked man," etc. The purpose of the compilers of the 1552 Book in placing this Sentence first in the choir Offices was because it emphasizes the religious hopes of the man who is conscious of his wickedness. Or, take another of the Sentences it is proposed to drop, namely—"Hide Thy face from my sins," etc. Here is the prayer of the soul conscious of its sins. Instead of dropping this Sentence it might well be made a proper for Ash Wednesday or left as a general because of its appropriateness when passing at once from the Sentences to the Confession. The two remaining Sentences, namely—"O Lord correct me," etc., and "Enter not into judgment," etc., are especially appropriate for Ash Wednesday and the Lenten season as prayers for correction tempered with mercy.

While considering the changes in the Sentences as proposed by the Commission, the writer suggests that the Sentence beginning "Because ye are sons," etc., a proper for Whitsunday Morning Prayer in the present Book might better be made a proper for Trinity Sunday. As a passage of Scripture mentioning the Three Persons of the Trinity it would seem logically to suggest itself as a proper for the Trinity.

Inasmuch as the Commission has deemed it wise to provide a new proper Sentence for Easter Day, might it not be well to add one of the verses from the nineteenth chapter of Revelation where the word alleluia occurs? At present there is no provision in the Prayer Book for the ancient usage of the word "Alleluia" on Easter Day. The repeated use of the word "Alleluia" on Easter Day was a common practice of the Church and is found in the vesper and other Offices from which the first English Book was compiled in 1549. Something might be added to the Prayer Book to keep pace with the provision so liberally made in the hymnal with its rich supply of Easter hymns.

There is one other proposed change to which attention may well be given. The Sentence beginning "If we say that we have no sin," etc., is made a proper for Lent. Of course, making a proper for Lent does not prohibit its use at other times. No other Sentence is quite so appropriate when the Confession immediately follows. There are other passages of Scripture well suited for the Lenten season. Why remove this one from its present place among the general Sentences?

A GOVERNMENT ORDER TO OUR READERS.

As you are doubtless aware, the Government, in its desire to conserve the manufacture and use of paper, has issued an order to newspapers to confine their subscription lists to those only who have paid in advance for their paper.

It has been a long-time custom for the religious press in the country to continue all subscriptions until the individual expressed a desire to discontinue and paid up to date. And there are good and strong reasons for that custom.

It is hard to change a custom, and the religious press will suffer untold harm unless the readers will catch the spirit of the Government order and show their patriotism by at once coming to the rescue with their renewal subscriptions.

Such an order is peculiarly trying to THE WITNESS. We are a new publication—steadily gaining—and we absolutely need to keep all our old subscribers while we add the new, until we reach "a paying basis."

It has cost a lot of money to start THE WITNESS. Its Board of Editors serve without any compensation. There must be many more subscribers before the publisher can pay the bills out of the receipts. Moreover, THE WITNESS would never have been started except as a means to reach every Church family in the land with a bright weekly Church newspaper at a price within the reach of all—only One Dollar a year.

In this emergency, we ask every one of our readers whose renewal is now due to come to the rescue—to send his or her dollar this week if possible—to hold up our hands while we accomplish the task we have undertaken. Write today! L. W. APPLEGATE, Publisher.

ANSWERS PRAYERS BY WIRELESS.

The Marconi operator in the Norwegian freighter Allstad injured his arm, and it became infected. There was no surgeon on board, but a call sent out by the freighter was picked up by the steamer Esperanza, on board of which was a Brooklyn physician. He undertook to answer the prayer for help and took the case. He diagnosed it by wireless, gave instructions for cleansing, sterilizing and subsequently dressing the arm, which was transmitted by wireless. Every day he ascertained how the patient was getting on, and renewed his instructions, until he had the satisfaction of knowing that with no means of practicing his healing art except the waves of ether that vibrated between them, he had answered a sufferer's prayer for relief, and had healed him.

Do you mean to tell me that such a prayer and its answer are perfectly possible, scientific, rational, but that it is not scientific or reasonable to expect that the great God of the universe, who made the ether and controls all the laws of vibration as well as of the circulation of the blood and the virility of disease germs could answer a prayer?—Rev. J. D. Cowan, D. D., in Christian Endeavor World.

SERVICE OF INTERCESSION FOR MEN IN THE WAR

A Beautiful Series of Prayers For the Flags of Our Allies

On Sunday, September 21st a service of intercession for soldiers, sailors and aviators was held at Christ Church, Joliet, Ill. Before the service the Rector, the Rev. T. DeWitt Tanner, blessed the flags of the European allied nations, also our own and war service flag.

The Greek flag was brought into the Church after the procesional hymn, while the Greek National Anthem was played on the organ—"The Hymn of Freedom." The flag was carried by Clyde Robinson.

The Prayer For The Greek Flag.

"O Lord, our God, we dedicate to Thee and to Thy service in this House of Prayer this flag of the free state of Greece. We ask Thy Guidance upon her new ruler, that he and his advisors may restore the confidence of their peoples in Thee. We thank Thee that even though she has just passed through a state of unrest, when a faithless monarch refused to execute the national mind, yet he has been set aside and the daring of her soldiers and their willingness to suffer has proven her desire to serve. Grant that this old nation may ever stand for the best thing and this flag never be dishonored by any low ideals, but that they may be an instrument in advancing Thy Kingdom. Through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The Serbian Flag.

The Serbian flag was next presented, carried by Harold Griffin White. "O, Serbians Rise"—the national anthem, was played. The flag was dedicated with the following prayer:

"O Lord our God, we dedicate to Thee and to Thy service in this House of Prayer this flag of the kingdom of Serbia. Be pleased to look upon this land now in possession of the enemy. Teach her people to be patient under adversity and to rely upon the strength that Thou canst give. Gird her citizens with strength to fight and her officers with wisdom and courage to lead on to victory. May no suspicion of disloyalty come into her midst and nothing deter her in her service to humanity. Through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The Italian Flag.

The Italian flag was carried by Nat. Rowell while Miss Elvira Lewis sang "Garibaldi's War Hymn. It was dedicated with the following prayer:

"O Lord our God, we dedicate to Thee and Thy service in this House of Prayer this flag of united Italy. We commend to Thee her King, her rulers, her brilliant leaders, her dauntless soldiers and sailors. We remember before Thee the willing service by which she entered the conflict for the freedom of the world, and we praise Thee for the courage and devotion with which she keeps the gates of her everlasting hills against the invading tyrant. Grant, we beseech Thee, that this ancient nation and our young republic may ever be united in the bonds of Christian love and work together for the advancement of Thy Kingdom. Through Christ our Lord."

The Belgium Flag.

The Belgium flag was caried in by Randall Grady while Miss Lewis sang "Brabanconne," the Belgium national anthem. It was dedicated with the following prayer:

"O Lord our God, we dedicate to Thee and to Thy service in this House of Prayer this flag of the ancient and honorable Kingdom of Belgium. Look with especial favor upon Thy servant Albert, the king, the appointed leader of a suffering people, deprived of home, yet fighting a common enemy who without honor, and unwilling to listen even to the promptings of humanity, has wantonly pillaged and destroyed a weak nation. Bless the people, renew their courage and grant that soon this banner may be victoriously caried back through the length and breadth of the home land. Knit this suffering people in love to this great republic and make us both to be faithful and true. Through Christ our Lord."

The Union Jack.

The Union Jack of Great Britain was carried while the choir and congregation sang "God Save the King. It was then dedicated with the following prayer:

"O Lord our God, we dedicate to Thee and Thy service in this House of Prayer, this flag of Great Britain, our sister nation in the unity of the Anglo-Saxon race. Bless and defend Thy servant George, most gracious King and Governor. Direct and inspire the hearts of his people, that guidance of the Holy Spirit in their work that in Thee and for Thee they may labor and be rewarded by Thee. Give us a willing spirit to follow the dictates of the Holy Ghost that this nation may be a God-fearing nation pledged to righteousness and justice among all the nations of the earth. Through Jesus Christ our Lord.

under this ancient cross, they may be willing instruments in Thy hand for the fulfilment of Thy mighty purpose to gather all nations into Thy Kingdom, that righteousness and justice may rule throughout the world. Through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The Tricolor of France.

The tricolor of France was brought in by Jack King while the choir and congregation sang "The Marseillaise." The prayer of dedication was then said:

"O Lord our God, we dedicate to Thee and Thy service in this House of Prayer, this flag of France. Have regard, we beseech Thee, to that fair land to which in Thy providence our country is bound by ties of lasting gratitude. We praise Thee that in the former time Thou didst guide her to send Lafayette to our aid, and that in this past year Thou hast led us to send Pershing and his men to the assistance of her valiant army. Grant that in the governments of both republics the divine ideals of justice, truth and peace be ever had in honor, and do Thou establish both countries in permanent brotherhood to the glory of Thy name. Throught Jesus Christ our Lord."

Last, the Stars and Stripes of our own beloved land were brought in and dedicated with the following prayer, after which "The Star Spangled Banner" was sung by all.

The Prayer of Dedication.

"O Lord God, we dedicate to Thee and to Thy service in this House of Prayer, this flag of our own beloved land. Its stripes and its stars. symbolical of a great past, and prophetic of a glorious future, leading our sons on in a conquest against the entrenched hosts of barbarism. Bless our President, guide our leaders and strengthen our people, defend, protect and sancitfy all who follow this banner on the world's battlefields. Keep them pure and true amid all temptations; give them patience and tenderness and the wisdom and the

The new srevice flag was then dedicated with the followinw prayer:

"O Lord our God, we dedicate to Thee and Thy service in this House of Prayer, this Service Flag of our parish. Its red border reminding us of the price of redemption from sin and its white field the purity purchased in the blood of Christ. These stars of gold and blue speaking in audible voice of our sons in military service and those partially concealed by the gold tell us of those who have made the supreme sacrifice.

"Bless these boys—O God—keep them, guard them—go before them, grant that we, looking upon this emblem, may ever remember that they have gone out into this service for us, and realizing this O God, grant us grace—to labor and strive unto sacrifice and follow on with a life of service. Through Jesus Christ our Lord."

After this prayer, the flags were placed in their special places and the special intercession service continued.

The rector preached a special patriotic sermon and endeavored to present the definite idea of special dependence upon God. Mr. K. H. Beuert played and the choir was augmented by many whom we always welcome as efficient helpers in our acts or worship.

PAPERS ON THE PSALMS

By the Rt. Rev. Dr. A. C. A. Hall

Second Paper.

Contents of the Psalter

"The Psalter or Psalms of David" is the title given in the Prayer Book to the collection. This is not to be understood as meaning that all, or the greater number of the Psalms were composed by David! His name, as that of "the sweet singer of Israel," is given to the whole collection to which he was thought to have been a chief contributor. In the same sort of way a collection of Wesley's Hymns may contain some written by others besides the brothers, John and Charles. As a matter of fact, the Psalter contains contributions from several smaller collections, the earliest of which was ascribed to David; others were compiled for musical guilds like the sons of Korah or of Asaph. These were by degrees gathered into Five Books of Psalms, the end of each of which is marked by a doxology not, except the last, a part of the Psalm itself (41:13; 72:18, 19; 89:50; 106:46.) These several books bear marks of editing that are of considerable interest to students, but about which we need not trouble in considering the devotional use of the Psalms.

What is of account for this purpose is the way in which the varied authorship, and occasions (personal, national, theological), and dates (covering at least 900 years from David through the Monarchy, the Exile, the Return down to the Maccabees), pledge to us an adaptability of the Psalms to all sorts of different persons, moods, and needs, more than would be possible in the case of a single author with his necessarily limited experience. In the Psalter the Church has found, we can find, prayers and praises for almost every need. Some of these greater occasions for Church and for Nation we shall consider later.

For personal private use we ought to learn our way about the Psalter so as to be able easily to turn to Psalms suitable for different circumstances and purposes. For instance, to mention but a few: Pss, 51, 130, 32 and 139 would naturally be thought of for penitential prayers; 26, 84, 101 and 116 in preparation for Holy Communion, and 23 and 16 in thanksgiving for the Sacrament; 63 is a morning devotion, and 4 a night prayer; 103 is a thanksgiving fit for any occasion; 91 and 121 are suited for travelers; 25 (the most personal perhaps of all the Psalms) is appropriate for a review of life; 27 is a protestation of trust in God, as is 119 of loyal obedience to every known expression of His will. In times of sickness, suffering and sorrow the Psalms appointed for Good Friday and Easter Eve, with others such as 42, 43 and 141, would be helpful.

Words of the Psalms provided for Christians, may be more and more application to ourselves.

2. A second difficulty comes from the obscurity of a good many passsages in the Psalms. Some cases are indeed blind in our translation. Many of these difficulties could be removed by a very little alteration, and this ought to be undertaken by the Church. In England they are doing it. Meanwhile anyone who can turn to the Revised Version (as given in the American Standard Bible) will generally find a plainer sentence freed from difficulty.

Where we cannot understand the meaning of a particular verse, we should just leave it for the time, going on with what is clear.

3. The third difficulty is of a different kind. We come across now and then in the Psalms expressions of hatred and prayers for vengeance, which our conscience tells us are alien to Christ's Spirit and unfit for Christian people to repeat. I entirely agree. Such verses should be omitted from the Psalms as they are arranged for use in the congregation. But this is what we must remember, that in compositions belonging to an earlier age, before our Lord's perfect example and teaching had been given, or His Spirit bestowed, we should expect much that comes short of the Christian standard. In reading these imprecations in the Psalms, as in the imperfect morals of some of God's servants of old time, we should learn how God has led on His people, leading them as they were able to receive His word.

"I like to see a man proud of the place in which he lives. I like to see a man live so that his place will be proud of him. Be honest, but hate no one; overturn a man's wrong doing, but do not overturn him unless it must be done in overturning the wrong. Stand with anybody that stands right; stand with him while he is right, but part with him when he goes wrong."—Abraham Lincoln.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

ITEMS

The first gold star on St. Anne's (Chicago) service flag was earned by the death of George W. Kimber, Jr., a communicant, who fell a victim to Spanish influenza at the Great Lakes Training Station Sunday. There are twenty-one stars on the flag—ten per cent of the communicant list.

Have you bought a Fourth Liberty Bond?

A fund of $200 is being raised by St. Paul's Church, Martin's Ferry, O., with which to purchase Liberty Bonds. The bonds will be the property of the Church and will form the beginning of a fund which may be added to from time to time. After the war the fund will be used for the purchase of a rectory or for any other purpose that may be decided upon.

The North Dakota Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions is raising $200 for Bishop Huntington's work in the Missionary District of Anking.

A bronze tablet of the Ten Commandments has been placed on the Court House at Pittsburgh, Pa.

A special Council of the Diocese of Western New York will be held at St. Paul's Church, Rochester, on next Tuesday, October 15, to elect a Bishop Coadjutor.

We now have a real Church School, transformed by magic by the Christian Nurture Series, says a report from Grace Church, Olathe, in the Western Colorado Evangel. The school is already larger, the average attendance has increased, and the average offering is double what it used to be. Every class has a treasurer who keeps account; and the class decides itself what to do with its money—giving to some need in the class, in the school, the Parish, the town, the District of Western Colorado, some national need, or to the world need of Missions. The teachers are so enthusiastic that they want to meet and talk about the new work every week. The Christian Nurture Series has jacked the whole School up. Everyone is interested.

The Forward Movement campaign for all Parishes in St. Paul, Minn., was started last week. The object of the movement is well stated by the Rev. Edward M. Cross for his Parish, St. John's, the Evangelist: The entire month of October and the first three days of November will be devoted to the facing of certain vital facts, and the mobilization of every atom of Christian energy and devotion to the laying of a foundation, upon which we can build for all time to come. In this effort we propose to see, as nearly as in our power lies, that no one, man, woman, or child, fails to realize what the issue at stake is. We propose to give each person an opportunity to "Play the Game." This phrase—"Play the Game," is not ordinarily regarded as elegant, but the universality of the use of it among the Allied forces on the Western Front has lifted it from the vulgar to the classic. "Playing the Game" means to take your part and do your duty plus. Our aim is effective Christian discipleship. It is a right aim. It is a necessary aim. It is a compelling aim . It requires that every member pray fervently, worship regularly, work intelligently, give conscientiously and co-operate loyally.

On St. Michael and All Angel's Day, Bishop E. A. Temple, assisted by Archdeacon Garner, dedicated the Chapel of All Saint's at Canyon, in the Missionary Diocese of North Texas. The Chapel is of brick construction, and of excellent design in simple early English, giving the impression of great solidity and endurance, and consists of nave and chancel, with a small sacristy.

The interior is as good, with its very complete furnishings, of a severe but beautiful simplicity, so helpful to an attitude of devotion in its complete harmony and traditional perfection.

The Chapel has been erected partly from a grant from the Board of Missions, partly by the diocesan committee of Church Extension, and by the small group of communicants in the area served by the Chapel, and is now free from debt.

The erection of the Chapel was mainly inspired by the needs of the students attending the huge Normal School of West Texas, located here, among whom are always a number of communicants, or young people interested in the Church.

The appreciation of the provision of the Chapel, was evident at the opening by the large number of the students and teachers who enthusiastically crowded the building, and thoroughly entered into the spirit of the service.

Regular services will be maintained in the Chapel, under the superintendence of the Archdeacon.

PERSONALS.

The Rev. John F. Hamaker, rector of St. Paul's Church, Greensboro, Ala., who volunteered his services for army Y. M. C. A. work, reported at New York City, October 5, for overseas duty.

The Rev. W. M. Cleveland has resigned the rectorship of St. Andrew's Church, Edwardsville, Ill., and has accepted work at Weston, in the Diocese of West Virginia.

The Rev. B. N. Defoe Wagner has accepted a call to Christ Church, Richmond, Va. Mr. Wagner, who is a Canadian, came to Virginia about two years ago for the benefit of Mrs. Wagner's health, and has rendered valuable services to parishes in Richmod. Mrs. Wagner has fully recovered and will take an active part in parish work. Christ Church has been without a rector since the resignation of the Rev. Charles W. Snyder, who left early in the summer to engage in army Y. M. C. A. work.

Mr. Percival Davis, organist for many years at Christ Church, Joliet, Ill., was wounded in "going over the top" early in September, and sent to an English hospital. It is not known how seriously he was injured.

The Rev. Alexander Coffin of Dickinson, N. D., assisted in a harvest field near Dickinson. He also attended a barn dance given in honor of two young farmers who were leaving for army service, making a short address during the evening.

On Tuesday, October 1, in Christ Church, St. Paul, Minn., the Bishop of Minnesota, the Rt. Rev. Dr. McElwain, ordained Robert James Ramsey, Ph. D., to the Diaconate. The Rev. W. S. Howard presented the candidate and the Bishop preached the sermon. Dr. Ramsey was formerly a Methodist minister.

The Rev. A. E. Whatham, formerly rector of Trinity Church, Louisville, Ky., has accepted work in the Diocese of Toronto, Canada.

THE ADVENT CALL IN CHICAGO

By Deaconess Fuller.

The Advent Call in the Diocese of Chicago is come out of the first stage of questioning into the second stage of active co-operation. The Bishop of the Diocese launched the call by a personal letter to each of the clergy, since when the Provincial Synod, met at Gambier, Ohio, passed a resolution as follows: "Resolved, that the Synod of the Province of the Mid West gratefully recognizes as most vital and timely the War Work of the Woman's Auxiliary of the whole Church, known as the Advent Call, and that we urge it as, not only our opportunity, but as a solemn duty for every clergyman in this Province to render hearty co-operation in this work of the Advent Call, and to make careful preparation for the follow up work consequent upon it." As a result, the clergy of the Diocese are giving their help in most practical fashion, granting opportunity to the diocesan leader to address meetings of their own body and gatherings of Church School teachers as well as planning for her to teach the women of their parishes with as little loss of time and energy as possible. It is needless to write of the part of the Woman's Auxiliary, which was the body first to propose the Call and which, in this diocese, is doing its [illegible] Name. Meetings have been held in various centers in the city, the suburbs and in the country for information about the Call, and each parish is asked to appoint a leader to be the means of communication with the Diocesan leader and to plan with the Rector of the Auxiliary president for the carrying out of the plan. The parishes are left free to work on their own lines, keeping to the great purpose of reaching every woman and girl with the Advent Call to greater loyalty to her religious duties in the coming year for the sake of Church and Country.

There has been a demand for a pledge card for children as well as women and this is being prepared, the cards being supplemented with a prayer leaflet. Conferences of the leaders and messengers are being arranged in each locality during October and November, and we believe that every parish and mission will be ready on Advent Sunday to carry the Call with the enthusiasm and devotion to be looked for in this diocese. Every effort is being made to add no unnecessary burden of work to the clergy or others, and the cost to each parish will be but one dollar ($1.00) per hundred cards and leaflets, besides the travelling expenses of the diocesan leader on her visits. Results may be anticipated such as can come alone from the ever-new power of a faithfully applied Christianity.

THE PITTSBURGH STREET SERVICE MOVEMENT.

Sunday afternoon, September 29th, on the corner of Smithfield Street and Second Avenue, a noted and notorious downtown center, under the auspices of the Episcopal churches of Pittsburg, the closing of the sixth year of street services was held. The Rev. William Porkess, Rector of Grace Church, Pittsburgh, presided, and the Rev. L. B. Whittemore, of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, and the Rev. John Magee, a missionary on furlough from China, were the speakers. A very large gathering of men was present, proving one of the best attendanances ever known. The personnel of these crowds has proved an interesting study. The bum and the degenerate have occasionally been seen. But the respectable, and in many cases the educated, have been present again and again in large numbers. No one knows where they come from, and no one knows where they go after each service. The intent look they have on their faces, while at the service, has been an inspiration to every speaker. This alone is a great argument for the movement, and if what is expressed by word of mouth, or in letters, forms any criterian, then a number of these men have been brought to a deeper realization of Christian truth. The season of 1918 consisted of eighteen successive Sunday afternoons, June to September, and there has always been each Sunday two short addresses; first-class instrumental music; and hymn-singing by the crowd, under the guidance of an able director. The hymns sung are on large frames, 8 ft. by 4 ft., and held in the center of the street, which is closed by the Mayor's order for one hour. A conservative estimate registers that considerably over three thousand men have been present during the recent summer. Five thousand cards, containing the Lord's Prayer and a Gospel Truth, briefly expressed, have been distributed by a corps of voluntary Christian workers. The co-operation of the Episcopal clergy has indeed been remarkable. Twenty-one of them have served in the capacity of speakers, a number speaking more than once. The laity have been well represented, in addresses given by two laymen. The expense of the movement, has throughout the six years, been freely met by thirty-five contributors. It is the hope of many of the clergy that an evolution will follow from this work, now so well established in Pittsburgh, in the forming of a City Mission Center. These street services are under the leadership of a committee of eight—four clergymen and four laymen, appointed annually by the Bishop of the Diocese.

The beloved of the Almighty are the rich who have the humility of the poor, and the poor who have the magnanimity of the rich.—Sadi.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Reve. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffeila, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE."
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America. Address.
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
[illegible]

DEATH OF NEW YORK RECTOR.

Cooperstown, N. Y., Sept. 24.—At his home in this village last evening occurred the death of the Rev. Ralph Birdsall, rector of Christ Church. He had been in poor health for a number of months. The deceased had pronounced literary ability as evidenced by his writings, and talents as a preacher, and his personal qualities caused him to be generally beloved. His death is sincerely mourned in the community.

The Rev. Mr. Birdsall was born at Stockton, Cal., December 27, 1871. His maternal grandfather, Philo Bennett, represented Otsego and Chenango counties in the Legislature some 85 years ago ,and he, in turn, was the son of one of the pioneers of Otsego County, Ebenezer Bennett, who came here from Connecticut in 1788. The Rev. Elias Birdsall, father of Ralph Birdsall, was born in Hammondsport. He was among the first missionaries of the Episcopal Church to reach the Pacific Coast, and became successfully the Rector of churches in Stockton, San Francisco, and finally in Los Angeles, where St. Paul's Church, which he built, is now the cathedral of the Bishop of Los Angeles.

Ralph Birdsall prepared for college in St. Paul's School, Los An- Yale University, from which he was graduated in 1895 with the usual B. A. degree. He entered in 1895 the General Theological Seminary in New York and the following year continued his studies at the Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Conn., where he went to become private secretary to the late Bishop Williams. The degree of A. M. was conferred by Yale University. In 1897 he accepted a call to the curacy of St. Paul's Church, Albany, and was ordained Deacon by Bishop Doane in the Cathedral of All Saints, beginning his duties at once. On St. Michael and All Angels' Day, 1898, he was ordained priest. In June, 1898, the chapel congregation was incorporated as an independent church and Mr. Birdsall was the first rector. He remained in this charge until January 1, 1903, when having received a call to become rector of Christ Church, Cooperstown, he came here to reside. The work of the Rev. Mr. Birdsall here came under the observation of the late Bishop Henry Codman Potter of New York City, who spent his summers in Cooperstown. His ability as a sermonizer was recognized by the Bishop, who personally caused several of his sermons to be published in pamphlet form, which gave them wide circulation. His writings include "The Story of Cooperstown," of which two editions have been nearly exhausted: "Fenimore Cooper's Grave at Cooperstown," and "Sermons In Summer."

August 25, 1904, the Rev. Mr. Birdsall was united in marriage with Miss Jessie Cicily Reid of Atlanta, Ga., one of the twin daughters of Judge Harry M. Reid. A daughter and a son have been born to them, Miss Gertrude, who is 13 years of age, and Master Ralph Birdsall, Jr., aged 6. Mr. Birdsall's mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Birdsall, and a sister, Miss Ruth Birdsall, are living in Staten Island; his brother, the Rev. Paul Birdsall, rector of Grace Chruch, Albany, is now doing Y. M. C. A. work among the boys overseas, and another brother, Godfrey Birdsall, is a resident of California.—Utica, N. Y., Dispatch.

When you feel ill and indisposed, and when in this condition your prayer is cold, heavy, filled with despondency, and even despair, do not be disheartened or despairing, for the Lord knows your sick and painful condition. Struggle against your infirmity, pray as much as you have strength to, and the Lord will not despise the infirmity of your flesh and spirit.—Father John.

There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so.—Shakespeare.

HONOR ROLLS and TABLETS
of Bronze and Marble
U. S. and SERVICE FLAGS
Memorial Windows
ALTARS, LECTURNS, PULPITS
Designs and estimates on request
Spaulding & Co.
Michigan Ave. & Van Buren St.
Chicago, Illinois.

WANTED BY TWO MISSIONARIES IN KANSAS.
Any one who has a Stereopticon Lantern to give away or loan for use until Jan. 1, 1919, in the Blue Valley Missions of Kansas is requested to write Mr. Charles Bailey, Box 247, Blue Rapids, Kansas. The Missions will pay freight chages.

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING
An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.
The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.
Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.
28½tf

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL
OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal

Collegiate School, Military
for Boys, Denver, Colo.
All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations. Address REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

RACINE COLLEGE
RACINE, WISCONSIN.
Students' Army Training Unit opens October 1st.
Men over 18 and subject to Government Draft may enter.
Mess, Shelter, Clothing, Medical Attention and Tuition at Government Expense, and a Salry of $30 a month.
REGISTER NOW.
B. T. ROGERS, D.D., Warden

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people, intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS

IRVING P. JOHNSON.....Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE.....Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT.....Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana.....Publisher
All exchanges and articles for publication should be sent to the Managing Editor. All sub scriptions to the Publisher.

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS

George P. Atwater Grace W. Johnson Francis S. White
Henry J. Mikell James Sherrin
James Wise

ADVERTISING RATES.

Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS

10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Ind., for transmission through the mails.

EDITORIAL

THE SUPREME TEST.

The Crusades formed a great religious and moral movement, which had for its object the release of the Holy Land from the unspeakable Moslem, and at the heighth of the movement it attained its objective by the capture of Jerusalem, but it broke down because of the jealousies between the French and English, and also because, while the objective was a most worthy one, the individuals who composed the armies failed to live up to the high standards which their cause demanded.

The Crusades ended in disaster, although the armies achieved success, just because individuals failed to put their cause first and to keep it there.

The Commonwealth under Cromwell succeeded in overcoming the armies of Monarchy and special privilege as represented by the Stuarts, and then fell to pieces because of internal jealousies between Congregationalists and Presbyterians, and the failure of individuals to forget self in the twenty years of increasing anarchy that prevailed.

In the Reformation those who were successful in resisting papal aggression fell out among themselves and nearly lost all they had won because of their mutual differences and of their inability to take part in a world wide program. As Bishop McCormick has well expressed it, each one tried to corner religion or else each sect retired to its own little corner to play its own little game.

It looks as though we were winning the war, but let no man think for one moment that when we have won the war that we have attained the cause for which we have been fighting.

Our young men may win the battles and our petty old men may lose the cause for which they have fought and died.

As one goes about today one is impressed with the unity of the nations in their common cause to whip the Germans, but one is also impressed with the fact that no large part of the populatioin at home is really learning the lessons of the war.

So far as efficiency goes, America is gradually approaching the maximum of that quality, and so long as the war lasts America will be a solidarity in its endeavor to reach that goal. But Germany is a most efficient nation and reached her maximum of efficiency long before any of the other nations had learned the abc's of that course. Hell we are inclined to think is a most efficient institution.

It is perfectly true that when you have collected your funds, and put over your drives, and entertained your soldier lads and provided them with everything for comfort and service that they may require, you have done well, but although you may do all this, and because of this your boys win the war, yet you haven't done more than did the Crusaders of old who captured Jerusalem—which for the first time in seven hundred years has been recaptured, together with the Holy Land.

What of it? Much everyway if we have the qualities to deserve the laurels which success bestows upon us.

It is a significant fact, however, that after the capture of Jerusalem, the Crusaders acted worse than the infidels; and that after the execution of Charles I, Cromwell committed every arbitrary act for which Charles was executed, and that after the Reformation, Luther, Calvin, and Wesley acted with as much assurance of infallibility as any pope.

It was significant that Cromwell after the success of his arms should have been obliged to write to the Presbyterian Assembly, "I beseech you in the cause of Jesus Christ to think that you may be mistaken."

There is no time so dangerous to any cause as the moment that success seems assured. It is then that we discern whether we have been animated as a whole by a really high motive, or whether each faction desires to win the war in order that his opinion, his profit, his interest may become paramount.

At present the lid is on and all the differences of faction may boil unperceived beneath the lid. The dangerous moment is when the lid of war necessity is removed and the boiling factions within find that their energy may be released.

What are the lessons of the war?

Of course there is the lesson that to fight evil, which is always united by a common interest you must have a united command.

Nations had to learn to subordinate their individual preferences to a common command and to sink their national prejudices in a movement for solidarity. Military men learned that and statesmen enforced it, but have Christians learned any lesson about fighting the devil from the manual of the allies in fighting the Kaiser?

Will the soldier boys who return from the big things at the front be nauseated with religion because of the petty things in the rear, or will they demand a united command, on such basis of authority as can be respected and maintained? Will the Y. M. C. A. become a sort of man's church after the war, or will it be content after spending hundreds of millions and having the right of way given them by the U. S. Government, to take a humble place as the auxiliary of the Church?

There was complaint before the war from many sources (not in one church) that it was too much a law unto itself and too little of a complement to the churches. What will it be hereafter?

And the forces of labor and capital who are contending with each other in efforts to be patriotic, and to give all for the Stars and Stripes, will they lie down like the lion and the lamb in the post bellum Millenium under those same Stars and Stripes?

In short, if the boys are fighting for universal liberty at the front, are we fighting so that we can notice it for a high standard of living in the rear.

It is a well known fact that reaction of some sort inevitably follows a period of excitement. After the fever we try to bring the patient home to the quiet and order of home.

To what will our boys come home? To fetes and fatted calves? Of course, but beware of coddling heroes overmuch. The modest ones will be disgusted because the heroes who advertize most will discover how advertising pays.

There is just one thing that can save us as a nation from the follies of victory and that is that we are humbler by success, and seek God in all times of our prosperity just as well as in all times of our adversity, and we will not do this unless we prepare. We need to be laying up the munitions of our spiritual warfare in these days, or victory will find us unprepared, Then it will not be the Red Cross drive, nor the Liberty Loan drive, nor the Triangular drive, but it will be how we as individuals have sought from God the way in which we should go.

That person who has deserted the House of God and the worship of our maker either to knit or to stew will find that to be 100 per cent American involves something more than material efficiency. The Hun could qualify on that score. It means to be equipped with that spiritual armor by which we can overcome all the fiery darts of the wicked one, and that armor cannot be made in a day.

To meet the great crisis of a nation demands preparedness, and the greatest crisis of this nation will be the day when having won the war, we shall begin to enter into that heritage of reverence for God and man, for which we have fought the war, and which earthly Eden we may inhabit only just so long as we deserve to dwell therein.

No nation can carry on a spiritual life on any higher spiritual plane than that which the individual men and women who compose that nation have attained for Christ and country.

To make the world safe for democracy is a meaningless epigram, unless we as individuals help to make ourselves the decent units of which a true democracy must be composed.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS

By Bishop Johnson.

And while they looked steadfastly toward Heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into Heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into Heaven.

Then returned they unto Jerusaleum from the Mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a Sabbath day's journey.—Acts I. 10-12.

The crowning miracle of the Ascension is to be followed by one more miracle when Jesus shall come again "in like manner as ye have seen Him go into Heaven.

The greatest of all miracles and the supreme test of all our faith is to be found in the second coming of Christ. For us the important thing is not the time of that coming but the fact that He will come again in glory.

To this great coming have looked with eyes of faith all the glorious company of martyrs, all the victims of human injustice, all those who have died in faith.

The faithful whether they die in their beds or on the battle-field, cast the yearning gaze of faith upon the final triumph of Jesus over the powers of sin and death.

The wonderful things that He did on earth can find their culmination only in that wonderful glory which shall be revealed in Him.

Jesus Christ is not only the hope of the righteous but in a real sense He is their only hope. For if Christ be not risen and if He has not power to come again, then we are of all men most miserable for we have believed a lie, and suffered wrongfully without any hope of redress.

Then would the mean men be justified and the cruelty that has slaughtered the innocent receive no recompense. As Christ is our only hope, so He is our justifiable hope.

For the Christian is one who believes fundamentally in the justice of nary men for His representatives, and just as He drew his lessons from the most ordinary events in life,—the house-wife sweeping her house, kneading the bread, the man tending sheep and plowing fields,—so he would have His disciples concerned with the faithful performance of the most ordinary duties of life.

The Christian religion is the sanctifying of the common and ordinary in life as contrasted with the curiosity which would seek the supernatural and the extraordinary.

It is as plain gospel of plain duties for plain people.

There are those who would make religion a search into the occult. It is marvellous how little Christ encouraged this quest.

His description of the future life and what happens after death is to be gathered from incidental references such as the words to the dying thief and the parable of Dives and Lazarus.

There is no attempt to delve into the metaphysical subtleties so fascinating to speculative minds. No effort to define matter and spirit, or to exploit the attributes of deity

"God is Love." The Word was made flesh" and so sanctified it. "God is spirit and they who worship Him must worship Him in spirit and truth."

One has merely to turn from the philosophical bombast put forth by various modern cults, to the words of the Gospel to note that Christ was the Savior of common folks, not the patron of dilletante philosophy.

His message was to service, not to curious gazing into the unknown.

To know Christ is to know enough to guide one on the way, and it is far better to be faithful than to be brilliant. I cannot wean my gaze from the sturdy figures of those who had seen so much, going along the dusty road of the Roman Empire—St. Philip going down to that dirty city of Samaria to preach Christ unto them. St. Paul taking pains to win the coarse soldier to whom he was handcuffed to the way of Christ.

It is more marvellous than the brilliancy of a Cicero or a Virgil, that these men, having been lifted up to heavenly visions should have gone along doing the humdrum duties of wayside preaching.

Surely Bishops, and city Rectors and wealthy wardens can learn a lesson from these men of Galilee. That whatever you have seen and heard and possess, there is no greater glory than to do the simple duties of interest in the man by the side of the road, though he be wounded by the society to which you and he belong.

It is marvellous to see the wonders of heavenly places and to be familiar with the seats of the mighty, but it is more marvellous, whatever the heights to which you may have ascended to find your highest glory in being a common man, glad to do any service to a brother, however common he may be.

Surely, if it be true that all men are brethren then there are no men who are beneath us in the service that we render. And if it be so that unless we become as little children we cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven, then let us cultivate the realities of Childhood, and have done with the buncombe by which we lay claim to be extraordinary folks.

These men of Galilee were of humble origin, like our great Lincoln, They were elevated like him to very high places, but they were reminded by an angel clad in white apparel to leave their Mounts of exaltation and go to the city, there to mingle with ordinary folk, that they might come to know Christ by knowing them.

There is no greater mission nor no more exalted title than any of us can claim, than that we are the children of the King, intent on doing the Kings business, rather than parading in the King's livery or wearing decorations in lieu of rendering service. Why stand ye gazing at the exalted heights? Your business is to go about your work as men of the Galilean, content to mingle with ordinary folk in ordinary clothes, with a keen interest in everything that concerns the common man, leaving the marvels of the unknown in order to concern ourselves with the needs of the least of these, our brethren.

GIVE.

"Give as you would if an angel
Awaited your gift at the door;
Give as you would if tomorrow
Found you where waiting is o'er;
Give as you would to the Master
If you met His searching look;
Give as you would of your substance,
If His hand the offering took."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BISHOP FUNSTEN'S PASTORAL LETTER

To Close the Churches Would Be a National Calamity.

The Bishop of Idaho has issued the following Pastoral letter to the Clergy and Church people of his Missionary District:

It seems fitting at this time that I as your Bishop should send you a word of greeting. Twenty years ago on the twentieth of October the General Convention of our Church elected me your leader. The past years have marked for us struggle and achievement. While we have not accomplished all we would have wished, for it is a new country and we are laying foundations and our difficulties are many, we have made notable advance and for this we thank God and take courage.

This great world war has introduced a new element of perplexity in providing for the work both in regard to clergymen and in regard to their support. Many of our clergymen have been called to war service and all available men are being used to fill their places. In addition the high cost of living makes the former salary far less than what is required for a decent support. Our ministers must be provided for or the churches must be permanently closed. The solution I purpose is to join several places together under one minister, and thus make up a reasonable salary. It is absolutely out of the question in these times to have a clergyman giving his entire time to a place unable to give a third of what is needed to carry on the work. If our people really love the Church they will gladly not only give their share to God's Church to help spread the Gospel, but also as far as possible, be themselves earnest personal missionaries in telling of the great things the Lord has done them in redeeming them from sin and eternal death.

The Church Is the Mightiest Influence For Righteousness.

While I deeply sympathize with all war work such as the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A. and St. Andrew's Brotherhood, I would have you realize that the Church is the mightiest influence in this nation for righteousneess. President Wilson, Gen. Pershing and every leading public man of any standing nationally will tell us that to close the churches, stop preaching the Gospel, would be a national calamity and would ultimately weaken if not destroy the morale of our army at the front. It is most unwise and unpatriotic for any one to say, "I will abandon my church and will give no means or time to its support. All I have is going to war activities." The Government has found the Church one of its strong war supports. It wants you to be just, that is, render unto Ceasar the things that are Ceasar's and unto God the things that are God's. We have got to prepare for peace. We are going to win this war and we will win it for righteousness. Now let us not forget, that the Church is the great preacher of righteousness. We need the active, open, Christ-declaring Church more than ever. We cannot afford to shut it up. We do not want any silent churches anywhere, especially in our State of Idaho. We pray that this nation may in all the future build its political as well as individual life in accordance with the teachings of Jesus of Gallilee. Consider it a patriotic duty to attend your church services regularly.

A Few Words to the Clergy.

This brings me to say a few words to our Clergymen. The easiest thing for you to do now is quit your post. You will not have much difficulty in getting secular work giving a larger support. Sometimes even war work would seem easier than to live with people who show you little sympathy or appreciation and who criticize with a lawless tongue. You feel that apparently a number would rather see the Church closed than be asked to give to a reluctant contribution. What does Christ think of these? You are doing His work and He had at last very much the same kind of criticism. Be patient. Be watchful. It is God's work, not ours. I would urge you, therefore, to resist the dulling influence of the times. Dominate your materialistic environments with a glowing, burning faith in Christ. Be an active, aggressive force for the extension of Christ's beautiful Gospel. Preach this Gospel in season and out. We hear a good deal from sickly sentimental religionists about the new religion which is going to come with the boys out of the trenches, but the only religion that they can bring that will count is the truth the Bible and Church have always had to give to every man who seeks it aright.

Do your part well. Be loyal to the commands of the General Church, especially in regard to the spread of Christ's Kingdom among men. Be loyal to all your district obligations. Be kind and considerate to your neighbors and congregation. In other words, the effective Clergyman must be spiritually minded or he will fail in his true work. With God's help we will not fail.

My prayer therefore is that God's Holy Spirit may be poured out on you more and more.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS.

(Continued from page 1)

son. I hope, therefore, that, as the men of the Church read the choicest war literature, they will come to the conclusion that the inspiration for Service and Sacrifice which are now so attractive to a whole world has really come from the life of the Son of Man and will be glad to become more intimately associated with the Church which He founded."

Must Not Let Church Work Flag.

"We must not let our Church work flag" says Mrs. Marion S. Peterkin, President of the West Virginia Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions. "No matter how much work we do for our country in this stressful time, we must engraft as it were the war work on the Church work. It means more and more, consistent, persistent, steady work, but we must be ready for it. Surely if our men and boys can endure all they are doing, we who are at home can sacrifice more time and energy and help both our country and our God. This is no time for thoughts of self, but of Him who gave Himself for us, and loved us with so great a love. We can never repay it. Let us measure up to our great opportunity for service."

Unspoken Call from France.

"From the battle fields of France there comes an unspoken call that should find an answer in every American's heart," says the Rev. E. W. Averill of Ft. Wayne, Ind. "The recent great events in Europe, the successes of American arms on the fields of France should spur every American to greater effort.

"Our people at home should not rest on the laurels of our soldiers in France. Every death on the field of honor in the line of duty and for our country's cause should be a call to us for every sacrifice and every exertion to aid the cause for which our soldiers are fighting, for which our soldiers have died.

"Increase production, decrease consumption, save, and lend to the government. Every cent lent to the United States is used to support, strengthen, and aid our soldiers in France."

WELCOME STRANGERS

Clergyman Turned Out of Two Pews in 1867 Makes a Plea For the Stranger in Church

The editor of the official organ of the Diocese of Los Angeles, the Rev. Dr. J. D. H. Browne, makes the following earnest plea for the stranger in church:

The Editor hopes some day when he gets old enough, he is now only in his seventy-fifth year, to publish his reminiscenses of his American (or United States) life. Born in Canada he came to Boston in 1867, matriculating at Harvard that year, and became acquainted with the American Church by visiting Trinity, Boston, on his first Sunday and being turned out of two pews in succession, in which, in the absence of ushers, he had in turn taken a seat for his devotions.

It is with a degree of wholesome enjoyment even now that he recalls the holy wrath of Henry Codman Potter, then the Assistant Rector of Trinity, on being informed of the reception the Canadian vistor had experienced, and at the indignant protest and caustic rebuke which he heard utterd from the Chancel on the following Sunday with which the Assistant Rector sought to justify his own outraged feelings, and made amends to the young man whose ill treatment he had so mercilessly condemned. It was a remarkable exhibition of what might be called the socialistic spirit that afterwards displayed itself in so many ways in the brilliant career of the aristocrat by birth and early training who became the successful Rector of Grace Church, and the distinguished Bishop of the Diocese of New York.

Strangers Receive Little Recognition.

All this, however, the writer wishes to employ as an introduction to what he would like to say in regard to the treatment of strangers, even in this year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighteen. It is true, almost beyond belief, that while strangers may not be turned out of a pew, visitors to our churches receive very little or no recognition at the hands of many of the Church people in city and country alike in the Diocese of Los Angeles as well as elsewhere throughout the land.. There are gratifying exceptions, but even where there is the appearance of a proper consideration for strangers by ushers, and where the people after the service gather outside the church doors, the stranger is often neglected and passes out of sight without having been approached in the friendly, brotherly way that should have been the welcome shown him, and without the invitation that would have made him feel at home at any future time.

While we may well rejoice that conditions have greatly improved in the last fifty years in many directions, and in this particular perhaps quite as much as others, yet the fact that so large a percentage of the people are non-churchgoers, should stimulate the greatest efforts to draw men and women, and young men especially, to the Church's services, and to encourage them to feel the fellowship which should always be the striking feature of Church life. A stranger, a visitor, should not only receive every courtesy at the hands of the Church officials, but should be made to feel the heartiness and sincerity of the welcome that greets him, so that the Church and her people shall always appeal to him, as above all other places and friends, a source of mutual understanding and blessing.

Our men "over there" are learning their lesson. They are resolved that the evil of the world "shall not pass." They speak lovingly of America as "God's Country" and they are trying o make the whole world a partner in heir inheritance. They are literally ighting "spiritual wickedness in high places." When they return "over ere" they are going to ask us what ve have done in their absence. The nswer we shall be able to give can nly be furnished by what we do ow. The invitation, "Come and ee," must be accepted before we can bey the command, "Go and preach." Only those who, like Andrew, have found the Christ," can bring their rothers to him. To change conditions we must be chnaged ourselves. What we are, our acts will be.—Frederick H. Hedges.

TO ENLIST LAYMEN—THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW.

(Continued from page 1)

is filling at this very critical time. He says:

Will you please state to the Executive Committee of your War Council that we, in the Religious Work Bureau, feel under great obligation to the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for the fine work your members have been doing in different camps. They have not only been an inspiration to our Secretaries in their lives and service, but their emphasis upon personal evengelism has proved contagious to the Christian men in the camps. I wish that some time I could bring before the members of your Executive Committee at greater length the debt of gratitude we owe your Brotherhood."

The foregoing statement that there is no substitute for the Brotherhood idea; and the service the Borterhood is rendering in the camps to satisfy the religious needs establishes beyond question its potential value and the sound principle of its operation.

A New Vision.

The work of the Army and Navy Department is a fulfillment of our ideals of personal Christian service among men and a demonstration of their unique and practical worth; but it is also a clear call to the other laymen of Christ's Church, the Army at Home. The vision is increasingly clear that our Commander-in-Chief, Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, desires us to mobilize for extended orders. And this preparing for peace in time of war calls for a consecration to carry on, and to prepare in each parish for the home-coming of our fighting men, but for each indivilual it must be a consecration that necessitates a closer intimacy with our Lord and a new loyalty to His Cause. To win, Christ's Army must measure up to the same high standard attained by our country's Army in gaining its objective. And this means the organization and training of men and boys in every parish throughout the Church, who shall generate spiritual power through prayer and who shall use that power in personal esrvice on behalf of the Kingdom.

God's call is to organize for the building of the superstructure on the foundation which He has given us. The call is personal; thank God, the answer is to be universal.

The Objectives.

With deep gratitude to God for the abundant blessings which we have received at His hands in these years of foundation building in the Brotherhood, and with a spirit of rejoicing for the privilege He has given us of obeying the command of His Holy Will, we shall, with the guidance of His Holy Spirit, further organize—

FOR the extension of Christ's Kingdom through the Enlistment of Men and Boys of the Church in Serving this High Objective.

TO create in every Parish a Service Group of Men and Boys who will be of Genuine Value to the Rector.

TO make Personal Prayer and Service a living factor in every Parish.

TO make practical the Threefold Endeavor in every Parish: Increasing Church Attendance, Men's Bible Classes, Men's Corporate Communions.

TO promote the Devotional Life of the Family through the Practice of Family Prayer.

TO bring fathers, older brothers and kinsmen of enlisted men into Practical and Inspiring Relationship to Christian Service.

TO show young men with Increasing Clearness the Vision of the Sacred Ministry, serving as Officers in Christ's Army.

TO strengthen the Brotherhood's Junior Department by training and actively enlisting Boys of every Parish in Christ's Army.

The Plan for an Advance Program.

To realize these objectives, a definite plan for an Advance Program, to be operating by January 1, 1919, briefly includes the following:

To place in the field as rapidly as possible eight Secretaries, one for each Porvince. To re-organize Chapters depleted by reason of enlistment of membership in our Nation fighting forces, and to organize new groups to serve actively in Christ's Army and Navy Camps and Stations.

have recently existed. These Secretaries will intensify the work throughout the Dioceses and be under the supervision of a general Secretary. The plan likewise provides for a Junior Department Secretary, whose entire time will be devoted to the Church's supreme opportunity, The Boy, bringing him into his proper relationship to the Church's Army and so training him for Christian service that he shall "not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, and manfully to fight under His banner, against sin, the world, and the devil; and to continue Christ's faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end."

The National Council of the Brotherhood has enthusiastically adopted the Advance Program; and a Committee of Churchmen, representatives of the various Provinces, is at work upon the financing of the undertaking. You are asked to share in the privilege of aiding the Church to prepare for the return of the men from the Front and for the realization of the new vision.

We are face to face with a condition, not a theory. Many of our best men—all honor to them—have entered the country's service, leaving vacancies in the Church's ranks and leadership. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew is the only national men's movement of the Church. Its sole object is the spread of Christ's Kingdom. Admitting human weakness, it has never failed the Church. It is today interpreting its object by the Rules of Prayer and Service among enlisted men; and it is carrying on at home. It is pre-eminently qualified by experience, organization and ideal to serve the Church during this period of reconstruction. Your parish must choose whether it shall join with and support the Brotherhood in mobilizing the laymen of the Church at a crucial hour and for the highest service to which a Christian man may respond.

A need never existed for the fulfillment of Christ's program and the establishment of Christ's Kingdom that could not be satisfied. With the knowledge that God is calling us to a larger service, our hearts are strengthened as we rejoice in the hope of every man's enthusiasm.

Edward H. Bonsall, President,
Courtenay Barber, First Vice-President,
Walter Kidde, Second Vice-President,
Warren Hires Turner, Treasurer,
G. Frank Shelby, General Secretary,
George H. Randall, Associate General Secretary,
Franklin H. Spencer, Executive Secretary.

LEARN TO WORK.

We are all learning to work. What a wonderful thing it is, too. Those of us who had some smattering knowledge of what real work was, are learning really to work, and the few of us who did not have the admirable habit are pressed into the service in one way or another.

A year or two ago, a two-line 6 point "want ad" was sufficient to obtain workmen for profitable employment in most communities, but times have changed. Large spaces are being used, and in addition to the mention of high wages and attractive surroundings, those engaged in war work add the patriotic appeal without being abolt to obtain all the good men they need.

Still another step has been taken, and in numerous communities, ordinances are being passed to punish men for loafing. So, quite soon, the old song—

Everybody works but father,
He sits around all day,
Feet in front of the fire

—will be completely out of harmony with the times. Mother may take in washing, and so may Sister Ann, but the law will have a job for our old man. If the old man will not answer advertisements offering attractive jobs, and will not go to work, the sheriff will cart him away to the stone pile, to give him a taste of the real thing.

It is expected, of course, that after father has been making little stones out of the bigger stones for a few weeks, he will realize that he might as well be engaged in more useful and more profitable employment.

This is all mighty fine and encouraging. It means that we will be better prepared for the war for business that will follow the war. It means that we will ,with greater ease, pay off the war debts that are piling up against future earnings.—Associated Advertising.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by G. W. J.

The death of Joyce Kilmer, "first of our well-known poets to fall since America entered the war," as the New York Sun remarks, "brings us up sharply again to a realization of the price that the peoples of the earth are paying." The price as well as the pride is pecularily felt by The Literary Digest, since our department of current poetry was under his direction for a number of years previous to his departure for France.

Fallen on the Western Front, "this poet, enthusiast, warrior patriot," says the Brooklyn Eagle, "has met the fate he went half-way to face."

His poem on the sinking of the Lusitania was read and quoted on many sides. This native Jersyman, born in New Brunswick thirty-two years ago, was, as his poem of grim indictment written on the sinking of the Lusitania shows, among the first Americans to be moved to the depths of their being by Germany's challenge to humanity and to civilization. The Newark News writes of him: "Giving up his journalistic and literary career in New York, he enlisted as a private seventeen days after the declaration of war by the U. S. on Germany, and accompanied the Rainbow Division in one of the earliest American contingents sailing for France. His promotion to a sergeantry indicated his aptitude for the new field that he entered. Reports have told that he was in the thick of the Marne fighting from the day that the Allied Offensive began till August 1, when he received his mortal wound. With the English poet, Rupert Brooke, who met his end at Gallipoli, and that other American poet, Alan Seegar, who, like Kilmer gave up his life on the soil of France, Kilmer's memory will remain an inspiration in the consecration of talent to the highest. Service no matter what sacrifice may be involved." Mr. Morley in the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, surmises that no two lines would have given Joyce Kilmer "more honest" pride than the two could he have seen them, that appeared in a double column front page of the Sunday Ledger."

Joyce Kilmer Poet Is Killed in Action.

Mr. Morley his friend says of him: "He found life intensely amusing, unspeakably interesting, his energy was unlimited, his courage stout. He attacked life at all points, rapidly gathered its complexities about him, and the more intricate it became the more zestful he found it. Nothing bewildered him, nothing terrified. By the time he was thirty he had attained an almost unique position in literary circles. He lectured on poetry, he interviewed famous men of letters, he was poet, editor, essayist, critic, anthologist.

He could turn out "copy" in any emergency. When he was run down by a train in New Jersey, he continued dictating from his bed in the hospital, and his weekly article for the New York Times reached the printer on schedule.

But beneath this whirling activity, which amused and amazed his friends there lay a deeper and quieter vein which was rich in its own passion. It is not becoming to prate of what lies in other men's souls; we all have our secrecies and sanctuaries, rarely acknowledged even to ourselves. But no one can read his poems without grasping his vigorious idealism, his keen sense of beauty, his devout and simple religion, his clutch on the preciousness of common things.

He was saved from too serious a self-estimate by his sense of humor."

The New York Times gives an account of his death: "Being attached to the Intelligence Department, it was the duty of Kilmer to preceede the battalion and discover the possible location of enemy guns and enemy 'No Man's Land,' and came back on a brief errand to the village! He was full of enthusiasm and eager to rush back into the woods, where he and others had discovered enemy guns.

A party moved out with him—the battalion slowly following. Then a patrol was sent forth with Kilmer in the lead, to establish the exact location of the guns.

Two hours later, the battalion advanced to clear the spot of the enemy. Kilmer was found lying on his stomach, on a bit of sloping ground, his eyes peering over the top of a natural trench. We ran toward him, thinking he was alive, but found him dead with a bullet in his brain. He was buried on the spot next to the grave of a heroic lieutenant who had just lost his life."

The Literary Digest.

Prayer of a Soldier in France.

The following poem was written by Joyce Kilmer, while in the trenches. It appeared in Good Housekeeping:

My shoulders ache beneath my pack
(Lie easier, Cross, upon His back).
I march with feet that burn and smart.
(Tread, Holy feet, upon my heart).
Men shout at me who may not speak
(They scourged Thy back and smote Thy cheek).
I may not lift a hand to clear
My eyes of salty drops that sear.
Then shall my fickle soul forget
(Thy Agony of Bloody Sweat?)
My rifle hand is stiff and numb
(From Thy pierced palm red rivers come).
Lord, Thou didst suffer more for me
Than all the hosts of land and sea.
So let me render back again
This millionth of Thy gift.—Amen.

Space does not permit much more, of this man's beautiful and clever poems but I feel I must add this one.

Trees.

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.
A tree whose hungry mouth is prest,
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast;
A tree that looks at God all day,
And lifts her leafy arms to pray;
A tree that may in Summer wear,
A crest of robins in her hair;
Upon whose bosom snow has lain;
Who intimately lives with rain.
Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

PLAN TO TRAIN BOYS AND GIRLS.

The following letter written by the Rev. Thomas Casady, Rector of The Church of the Ascension, Pueblo, Colorado, to his Parishioners, regarding the proper training of men, boys and girls, by the Church, may prove helpful to others who have already seen the great necessity of work among our young people and children, at the present time. (Indeed it seems almost the most necessary work of the Church).

The children of today are the citizens and the church of the future, and how best to train them for their responsibilities and promote in them the highest Christian citizenship, is the thought that should most occupy the minds of the more mature.

My dear Parishoners:

I am writing to you in behalf of your children, whom you have committed to my spiritual care. My personal interest in their religious welfare and nature is very real, their needs and interests occupy a large share of my time and thought. Will you not give this letter your very careful consideration and favor me with a prompt reply on the enclosed card, in order that I may know whether or not I may count on your full co-operation in the attempt I wish to make for their religious training?

The plan I have evolved, after months of careful consideration on every phase of the subject, is to called "The Children's Church." It has the complete approval of our Bishop Coadjutor, and, so experts in child-training tell me, is based upon correct psychological and pedagogical principles.

First let me explain the problem which confronts the present day church school worker. The modern church school in a small parish, such as ours, fails to train the children in anything more than the THEORY of religion and morals. Unless it is possible to furnish a very elaborate and expensive equipment, such as is beyond our means, we cannot provide training in the actual doing of the things taught. Children cannot be properly taught merely by the impress of rules upon their minds. Some appeal must be made to the will. Expression of truth is as essential in the development of the child as impression with truth. We lose a certain percentage of children to the life of the church because we fail to follow this vital principle. The present small number of young people in our parish and at the services is largely due to past failures in the church training of children. In order to avoid, so far as possible, a continuation of this condition, I have devised the plan of "The Children's Church."

The Plan.

To organize the children and young people as a parish is organized, with the exception of the primary department, which will remain as at present, occupying the main basement room, and under trained teachers. The business end of the Children's Church will be under the care of a young man's vestry. The altar work for this service will be done by a Junior Altar Guild. There will also be a Junior Auxiliary, doing missionary work, an Altar Boys' Guild, a Junior Choir, a Junior Red Cross, a Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and any other organizations that circumstances warrant. Through these organizations we shall endeavor to train the children and young people in the work of the church and equip them to take their places in the adult life of the parish when they come of age to do so.

The Sunday School session, as formerly conducted will be abolished, and in its place the folowing program will be adopted, beginning each Sunday at 9:15 a. m.

9:15 to 10:10 Service and Sermon by Rector.

10:15 to 10:45 Class instruction on the Bible.

First Sunday in each month, Morning Prayer.

Second Sunday in each month, Litany.

Third Sunday in each month, Holy Communion.

Fourth Sunday in each month, Patriotic Service.

Fifth Sunday in each month, Holy Communion.

The plan is to train our young people in the form and spirit of worship, to give them practical experience and responsibility in parish, social, missionary and patriotic work, and to give more definite and complete instruction in the teachings and ways of the church, as well as in the contents of Holy Scriptures. In this service the Rector will give an instruction each Sunday, which will take the place of Confirmation Class Instructions These instructions will cover a two year's course. The Junior Choir will sing at this service, boys will act as ushers and take all other parts usually taken by laymen. Children's duplex envelops will be used for offerings. Following this service will be the usual thirty minute class instruction customary in our former Sunday school. The whole program will require one and one-half hours, or one-half of the regular period of the morning session of day school. The activities of the program will be sufficiently varied and interesting to safeguard against restlessness and weariness on the part of the children. The 7:30 and 11:00 o'clock services will be as usual.

Provision will be made if there is a demand for it, for an adult Bible class in connection with the Children's Church, to accommodate parents or others who may find 9:15 a more convenient hour than 11 o'clock.

We cannot put this plan into successful operation without the loyal and enthusiastic support of all parents. We ask you to consider this plan carefully, to realize that it is suggested solely in the interests of the children and the church, and that no trouble is too great for the welfare of Christ's little ones. If you have any suggestions or objections to the plan, please voice them freely to me before we attempt to put into practice. I assure you all that no attempt will be made to introduce this plan without the approval of a large majority of the parents.

If it is introduced it will be carried through at least one year, regardless of protest or criticism. But I do not want to begin so important and radical a change in program although I am personally convinced of its merit, unless I have your hearty approval

Please answer the questions on the enclosed card, sign your name and mail to me at your earliest convenience.

Faithfully yours,
Thomas Casady, Rector.

Kindergarten and Care of Babies Recommended.

This is quite the finest plan I have read about so far and I am sure there need be no cause for worry for the future of the church of Pueblo, if this plan goes through. I earnestly hope it will, and I wish I lived there in order to have a hand in the new plan. How, if Mr. Casady has a kindergarten going on for the real small children, at the same hour as the church service for the adults, he will be conferring a great bone to the woman who wishes to attend but does not know what arrangements can be made for the safe care of her 3 to 5 year old child.

And if he has some woman or older girl, who will undertake the looking after the babies from birth to the age of three, keeping in touch with them and their mothers, during that interval until they arrive at Kindergarten age, and seeing that they attend, when the time arrives I'm sure there will be nothing lacking in the children's work of the Church of Ascension of Pueblo.

A RECTOR'S EXPERIENCE IN A MUNITIONS PLANT

The Rev. T. DeWitt Tanner, Rector of Christ Church, Joliet, Ill., desiring to be of service to the government in this time of need, put his technical skill to good use during his vacation in a munitions plant. "I found a place where they were glad to have me come and I might become a part of their institution for the short period at my disposal. This was in a plant where they were making gun mounts for the 9.4 inch French guns.

I went into the plant as any ordinary individual would go and hoped that my identity as a priest would not become known. I had the hope that I might in this way know men better, to feel their likes and dislikes, to realize the limits of their lives and the boundary lines by which they were surounded. But although I carried no word or sign to reveal my office, yet through the employment department probably because of the unusualness of it all, it was reported, and before noon of the first day the man working beside me came over and said: "Are you a priest?" So you see it is hard when a definite mark has been made upon your life, not to have it known of men.

The daily task was hard and the hours were long, from the time that I left the hotel until my return. It was 5:30 a.m. when I left and not until 7:15 p. m. or later could I get back to my dinner. I wore the overalls of the laboring man and incidentally, I think I was as dirty as any of them.

I had many pleasant experiences and had opportunity to speak many a word for the things which I know to be right. I only hope that in these weeks of daily intercourse with men whom I presume I shall never again see, I was able to leave an impulse for the best things. I remember distinctly the impression which I had at first in regard to the men beside me. It seemed to me that there was a lack of patriotism on the part of most of them, but I found later that these men were more patriotic than I thought. They were doing this work which the majority of them did not like—it was large and heavy and they were not used to it—because they felt it their duty. They were getting good wages, but they were buying bonds and doing the other things a patriot should do. Besides this, many of them were offering, and more expecting to go out into the great conflict itself.

I remember an amusing incident one day. The man beside me was a Frenchman; he said: "Why you come here to work? You loose your job?" I said: "I like to work—I want to help." "O, you like to work, he said, "I no like to work."

One thing that I have had borne in upon me by my experience is this—the size of the task that this government has before it. If this large institution which has been developed in a few months where 4,000 or 5,000 men are employed to make gun carriages for those guns and they are such a small part of the whole—what must be the expenditure of labor in this great conflict? What is my part? Just how far does my responsibility go? Is my ideal simply to "do my bit?"

If I have learned anything this summer, it is this—that I—yes you as well—must do more giving—sacrificing—saving—buying of bonds—hard work—but even more yet—more hard, consistent praying—the nearer we come to all these ideals the nearer we come to victory.

The giving of the few weeks I gave was as nothing, yet it, like the widow's mite was all I had to give and in the giving I was blessed. Are we all trying to do the same?

Let us not forget that there are two sides to dying—this earth side and the heaven side. The stars that go out when morning comes do not stop shining; only some other eyes in land are made glad by them.—M. T. Savage.

"DOIN' GOOD'S NO NEWS"

Dooley's friend said to him: "Dooley, the world is growing worse every day. Just look at the papers. There is nothing but murders and burglars and graft and divorces and all kinds of divilment reported." Dooley replied: "That's so, Hinnesey, according to reports, but ye must remember that doin' good's no news." Our Irish wit and philosopher spoke to the point. Evil attracts notice more than good because it is exceptional. It is sensational because it seldom happens. If evil were common and good rare, then good would be the sensational thing and would crowd evil off the front page of the newspapers and the newsboys would be crying it in special editions on the street. When a man beats his wife the whole town knows about it, but not even a remark is made about the many husbands who treat their wives with unfailing courtesy. When the sun is all splendor nobody looks at it, but when a tiny spot flecks its brightness everybody looks at it. If the sun were commonly dark a bright spot on its surface would set the astronomers agog and draw all eyes. It is because there is such an immense amount of good in the world and it stands at such a constant high level that it is not news and commands no attention. Evil is a great advertiser and knows how to get in the limelight, but good is modest and retiring and has little to say about its work. Just now the newspapers are all aflame with war news as though the whole planet had burst into a volcano of fire and blood. Hardly a good deed gets mentioned amidst the mass and flood of war stuff. But underneath the blackest storm the grass is still green and tender flowers are blooming, and underneath all these wars and rumors of war the old world is still green and fruitful with human affection and service and goodness. Goodness is in the majority. God is with it, and it will yet prevail.—Presbytenian Banner.

THE CHOICE.

The Spirit of America Speaks—
To the Judge of Right and Wrong
With Whom fulfillment lies
Our purpose and our power belong,
Our faith and secrifice.

Let Freedom's land rejoice!
Our ancient bonds are riven;
Once more to us the eternal choice
Of good or ill is given.

In the Gates of Death rejoice!
We see and hold the good—
Bear witness, Earth, we have made our choice
For Freedom's brotherhood.

Then praise the Lord Most High
Whose strength has saved us whole,
Who bade us choose that the Flesh should die
And not the living Soul!

—Rudyard Kipling.

"TIPPING THE LORD"

Mr. George Innes says there was a time in his life when he gave for missions as he gave to the porter on the sleeper or as he gave to the waiter at the hotel. He confesses that he was guilty of tipping the Lord. On a sleeper or in a first-class hotel it is not respectable to fail to give a gratuity to the porter or to the waiter in recognition of the service rendered. The berth and the meal are paid for in full; the tip is a matter of custom and good nature, and not a legal or moral obligation.

Mr. Innes gave regularly to support the local church of which he was a member, and in doing so felt that he discharged his obligation to the Lord. But he was willing to go farther, and he gave a trifle extra to extend the boundaries of the Redeemer's Kingdom. In doing what many other members of the church did there was no sense of obligation, no recognition of stewardship. Rather than be considered selfish and penurious, he gave the Lord a coin or a bill in precisely the same spirit as he gave a quarter or half a dollar to the boy that cleaned his shoes in the sleeper or to the waiter that supplied his needs at the table.—The Missionary Herald.

Many of our prayers are like letters which are insufficiently addressed. They get lost in the Dead Letter Office of Heaven. There is not sufficient direction about them.—Donald Sage Mackay.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MILITANT ATHEISM IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

It is startling to read in English books and periodicals of the widespread and pernicious influence of militant atheism in England. In the parks and public squares many thousands of people are harrangued by persuasive campaigners every Sunday, and among these eager listeners are many young people who nominally belong to the Church. It is estimated that more young people are drawn away from the Church every year through these open-air meetings than are added by confirmation. In addition to the subversive efforts of these public speakers, there are many atheistic periodicals of immense circulation, such as The Freethinker and The Literary Guide, which find their way especially into the homes of the working-classes and books by such clever writers as Mr. Joseph McCabe (the former Jesuit priest) and Mr. Blachford, which appeal to a more highly educated public.

The leader of the Labor Party in the House of Commons, Mr. Arthur Henderson, who is himself a Christian, has recently declared that "never within the last decade has Christianity been so seriously menaced as it is today in England by two grave dangers. The first is the alienation of the working-classes from the churches, and the second is the audacious and frenzied efforts of the enemy to capture the shy, soured, and distrustful masses for secularism."

Fortunately there are leaders in the Church of England who are fully alive to the folly of allowing this campaign to go on unopposed,—such men as the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of London. The Christian Evidence Society through its speakers is carrying on a vigorous campaign in the public places where the masses assemble. The organizing secretary of that society, the Rev. C. L. Drawbridge, has eloquently set forth the facts of the situation in his little book called "Popular Attacks on Christianity," published by the S. P. C. K.

In reading this book one is struck by the marked difference in conditions prevailing in the United States as compared with England. Apparently there is very little militant atheism to be found in this country. It is difficult to learn of any magazine of any importance. In places like Madison Square in New York City, one rarely hears an atheistic soap-box orator. We write subject to correction, and we should be glad to be informed of any atheistic campaign now being waged in this country.

We suspect that the almost total absence of militant atheism from the United States is wholly due to the fact that we have no established Church. Atheists in England are so embittered against Christianity because they feel it is unjust that they should be taxed to support a state religion which they do not believe in. Who can blame them? Atheists in this country exhibit no bitterness against Christians. If certain sections of our population prefer to believe in and practice the Christian religion, why should that be of any concern to unbelievers? This is a free country, where everyone may believe and worship according to the dictates of conscience. Christians need have no harsh feelings towards atheists, nor atheists towards Christians. So long as the Church remains established in England, it will keep alive a malevolent, vindictive campaign against the Christian faith, which will lure away from the Church an increasing number of her children every year.—Editorial in American Church Monthly.

MEN WHO COME BACK

There is something saddening about a man who has retrogaded. To see his spiritual wreckage and unswervingly to hold to one's faith in God and man—this is a severe test.

Seemingly consecrated, eager in his service for the Church, always ready for the emergency call, the Rector's right-hand man — all of these, and then, suddenly, he is gone. All his enthusiasm has died away, his interest may have ceased, he seldom or never is in his place in church. His life has found a lower plane, and in proportion to his former interest and usefulness, so is the magnitude and saddening spectacle of his decline.

There are many such—alas! too many. We need not discuss the causes, they are legion. The enroachments of the things of the world; a plane of prsonal living not in consonance with the life outwardly assumed; a secret hurt that is likely to be one of fancy only; very often a genuine weariness, the result of worry and over work—these and many other causes. In any event, he takes his birthright,and makes his exit, and for the time at least we see him no more.

But there is a brighter side . These men frequently come back. Unkindly criticism will not win them, nagging will not bring them back, a Pharisaical attitude of I-am-better-than thou will disgust and harden them. Mayhap their hearts are sore. They may be facing things of which we know not; sometimes in bitterness eating out their souls, misunderstood and misunderstanding. And God alone knows.

Give them a chance. Give God His supreme moment with them. Take them to Him in prayer. Consecrate them to Him. How miraculously will our contempt for them, our despair of them, be changed to compassion and love! And then, very often, they come back. And what a glorious resurrection when they do!

The world is blessed with earnest souls who have "come back." The spectacle of the prodigal on his journey home is one of the inspirations to the Christian life. Nothing more greatly stirs one's heart or moves to self-surrender. The fallen drunkard comes back; the prisoner in the jail comes back; the Christ deserter whom a secure conventional life shields from the world's view—comes back; the impure, the dishonest, the wilfully wicked, yes, the "merely indifferent," that most difficult of back sliders—they all are capable, following the Christ, of coming back.

And it is Christ who brings them back, not we. For these and all others of their like let us wait upon God in the great silences. Miracles are wrought of which we do not dream; and the greatest of all miracles is the working of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of men—of repentant men, of saved men, of men who came back.—St. Andrew's Cross.

THE CONQUEST OF FEAR.

Some years ago Speaker T. B. Reed wrote an article for one of our popular monthlies, discussing the greatest triumph of Christian civilization. He speaks of our pride in the achievements of man, in steam and electricity, which have well-nigh annihilated time and space, of the developments of wealth and art, of the achievements of surgery, etc. But he concludes that the "greatest triumph of the human race is the victory over the fear of the unknown, of demons, of witches and of all the false gods which have mocked men."

To the primitive man nature was full of terrors, the world was a group of powers, hostile and uncontrolled. Both sun and wind were ready to smite him; the mountains lured him up their sides into their inaccessible ravines, only to cast him down to sea awed and terrified him; the rivers overflowed their banks to carry off his cattle and to wash his tent down stream to the ocean. There death on or under the rocks. The was no such thing to him an inanimate matter. It was all alive and hostile and to be feared. Little wonder that he personified the parts and forces of nature as deities, strong and malevolent ones.

Then when the world did not furnish terrors enough, he invented others. The perils of nature were real, the terrors of imagination were worse. Man trembled before the dangers of pollution and the evil eye. He invented the caste system and the "taboo"—the curse of the dead and the "feng-shui."

The grip of superstition has been fierce and strong. To cast it off has been the mightiest struggle man ever went through, and even now it "has been won for less than one-third of the race."—The Expositor.

KINDERGARTEN TEACHERS NEEDED IN JAPAN

The Kindergarten has taken a foremost place in our work in Japan in commending the Church and her message to the Japanese people. We cannot begin to supply the demand for Kindergarten teachers by bringing young women from America. Even if it were possible to do this, it would not be a wise thing to do. It is perfectly practicable to train Japanese young women as Kindergarten teachers. Numbers of them are eager to be trained. We have made all our plans to open a school. Just as we thought all arrangements were satisfactorily made, we find that the young American woman whom we had counted upon to take charge of the Department will not be available. I wonder if it is possible for you, in the United States, where it is so easy to find trained helpers of all kinds, to imagine our dismay?

It is, however, very desirable that this plan should not be abandoned. We have in the first place erected a building for the purpose and a model kindergarten is already in operation. An even more important consideration is the demand for such work here in Kyoto. We have an opportunity to supply a real need, and in doing so, we shall be able to bring the influence of Christianity to bear in directions that would otherwise be closed to us.

Is there any one among your readers who would be willing to consider such a post of usefulness as this, or who knows of any one who would consider it? She should be, of course, sufficietntly proficient in the technical side of kindergarten work to take charge of a training class also she should possess a certain amount of executive ability and the force of character which would enable her to command the respect of those who work with her, and to influence strongly is that the head of such a department should be genuinely interested in the religious side of the work.

Mr. John W. Wood, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, will supply all necessary additional information.

H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER,
Bishop of Kyoto.

TEARS PUT OUT THE CANDLE-LIGHT.

Archdeacon Waddell of Mississippi, relates in the Church News, the following helpful incident for those who mourn, which was told him on his way to a graveyard to officiate at the burial of a child:

A lady lost her only little daughter and nearly grieved herself to death. A gentleman friend who was absent from the city at the time of the death went out to see her and to console her when he returned. She met him at the door with a light dress on and a smile on her face. He was astounded. "'Why, madam," he said, "I thought you were bowed down in grief. I came to try to console you and I can't understand how you meet me."

"Yes," she said, "I did grieve and nearly cried my eyes out. But I had a dream the other night which changed me. I dreamed that I saw a group of girls in that upper story, marching around in a circle, singing joyfully, each with a lighted candle in her hand. My little daughter was in the group, and when she passed me I saw her candle was not lighted. I exclaimed, "Oh, daughter, why is your candle not lighted?" She said, "Mother, those tears that you are shedding down have put my candle out."

I doubt not that this is very true. Our grief very often pains our loved ones in that upper story. In thinking of ourselves, we greatly mar their pleasure.

KEEPING WATCH OVER THEIR FLOCKS

Tolstoi tells a lovelyl story of two pilgrims who set out for Jerusalem. Yelesei stopped to help a starving family. He bought food, fetched water, split wood, started the great oven fire, nursed and fed the sick, redeemed the mortgage on the home, and bought back the cow, horse and scythe with which the living was earned. His money was all gone, and he could not hope to overtake his companion on the road, so he returned home and devoted himself again to daily duty. Yefim would not pause to help anyone. He reached Jerusalem, visited the sacred places, obtained earth from Calvary, water from the Jordan, and blessed amulets of every kind, but because of the throng he could not reach the Holy Sepulchre. Yet, "under the lamps themselves where the blessed fire burns before all," he saw a vision of Yelesei, wearing a halo of shining glory about his head. For Yefim had brought his body to the Holy Land, but Christ hemself had come to the soul of Yelesei. "And he learned that in this world God bids every one do his duty till death—in love and good deeds."

The shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks—doing ordinary duty—when the Christmas vision came to them.—The Expositor.

PARISH LEAFLET PUBLICATIONS

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

We are prepared to print anything and everything a clergyman or a parish may need, from a one-page program to a handsome bound book.

We have worked out a system, based upon sound business principles. which enables us to furnish our patrons with parish papers, standard supplies, and all sorts of books, magazines and commercial printing at atonishingly low prices.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM — For use in the service and for giving notices—"Lest he forget." Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM — In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS — New Families Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial. 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS —To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT CARDS — To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsers' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 25 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.50. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms — Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a 100.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches) to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above cards for One Dollar.

Vestibule Bracket — Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant With God— A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England — A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church—Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science — Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People—A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock". Four-page folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies, $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards.
   Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14). First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00.
    See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA
Worthy of Universal Adoption

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching," which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet, or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—

1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Missionary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES:—

The Misionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson —a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:—

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts or Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
The Evening Service.
Henry XIII.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

Sample copies of these suppiies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THF PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, IND.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. No. 94. CHICAGO, ILL., AND HOBART, IND., OCTOBER 19, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS

New Members Welcomed---Important Appropriations and Appointments.

Twenty-three members were present at the meeting of the Board of Missions on October 2, 1918. It was found that several of the members were in war work; Bishop Perry and Dr. Stires in France, and Dr. Freeman in this country.

The President welcomed the new Domestic Secretary, the Rev. Francis S. White. Mr. White begins his work as a result of the request of most of the Domestic Missionary Bishops. This is the opening of a most important department.

The President also welcomed two new members on the Board: The Right Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D. of Western Michigan, in place of the Bishop of Marquette, resigned, and Mr. Mortimer Matthews of Cincinnati, Ohio, in place of Mr. Stirling, both representatives of the Province of the Mid-West.

Dr. John W. Wood, Foreign Secretary, was not present at this meeting of the Board, owing to his visit to the distant missions of the Church. This visit is made at the urgent request of the Bishops in the Orient, and is most important at this time.

Canon Smart of Newfoundland Visits Board.

The President introduced the Rev. Canon Smart of Heart's Content, Newfoundland. Canon Smart was visiting the Board to bear the greetings of the Bishop, clergy and members of the Church of England in Newfoundland. In July, at the request of the Bishop and clergy, a representative of the Board of Missions visited the Biennial Synod of the Church of England in Newfoundland, and was received with great hospitality. Canon Smart, in addressing the Board, spoke of the progress toward self-support in Newfoundland, having cut down their appropriations from the S. P. G. from 15.000 in thirty years to less than 1,200 this year. By 1919 the Diocese of Newfoundland will be entirely self-supporting. What impressed the members of the Board greatly was the amount of the first Sunday school offering at the time of the Synod meeting, when the children gave $3,100 for the support of missionary work in the English Diocese of Shangtung, China.

Two of our Bishops in the Orient have lately celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their consecration as Missionary Bishops. One was Bishop Graves of Shanghai, and the other Bishop McKim of Tokyo. The Board adopted resolutions of congratulation and appreciation for their long and faithful service.

Western Colorado First To Complete It's Apportionment.

It was reported to the Board that the Missionary District of Western Colorado was the first Missionary District to complete its apportionment for the present year, and, in fact, it had been overpaid. It was also noted that the District of North Dakota had asked for an increase in its apportionment from $2,000 to $2,500.

The Apportionment Committee reported, recommending an apportionment of $1,590,000 for the year 1919, to be distributed to the various Dioeese and Missionary Districts, on the same basis as heretofore.

The Fort Valley Negro School in Fort Riley, Ga., having become a Church school and the Diocese of Atlanta and the American Church Institute for Negroes each having appropriated $2,000 a year toward the running expenses, the Board granted an appropriation of $6,000 also for this purpose, in accordance with the previous agreement.

The Treasurer reported that the receipts to September 25th were $11,793 less than last year. Gifts on account of the One Day's Income Plan amounted to $94,240 Sept. 1st.

Several vacancies in the lay membership of the Board were noted, but the election of new members was laid over until a later meeting.

Appropriations and Apportionments By The Executive Committee.

The first meeting of the executive committee of the the General Board of Missionaries after the summer vacation was held on October 1, 1918, at the Church Missions House, New York City.

Among the important things done in the Domestic Field, was the continuance of the appropriation from the Elizabeth S. Fowler Fund toward the education and support of eight daughters of deceased clergymen who have, at one time, been missionaries of this Church.

An appropriation of $1,547 was made for Utah, to aid the Acting Bishop to pay necessary expenses connected with Rowland Hall and St. Mark's Hospital.

Provision was made to clear off the debt on the Chapel of the Redeemer and King Hall, Oklahoma, which has been worrying the Bishop for a long while.

A loan of $10,000 was made to the District of Salina from the $100,000 Loan Fund created by the Board from Undesignated Legacies, to enable the Bishop to purchase a piece of property next to the Cathedral

In the Latin American Field, an appropriation of $700 was made in order to keep Hooker School open for the balance of the year.

Mr. Thomas J. Ash, a lay worker, was employed at La Romana, in Santo Domingo, to carry on a work there which is giving great promise.

In the Foreign Field, Miss Virginia Thomas was appointed to go to Point Hope, Alaska. The Rev. A. E. Butcher was transferred from Alaska to the Hawaiian Islands, and the Rev. J. Lamb Doty and Miss Laura L. Baugh were employed in the missionary work of the Hawaiian Islands.

In Japan, an appropriation was made to provide for the publication of literature in the vernacular, a great need for which has been felt.

Dr. Rudolph B. Teusler, head of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, has been appointed head of the Red Cross unit in Siberia. He was granted indefinite leave of absence so that he might take up this work. Eleven of our men from China and Japan, including the Bishop of Kyoto, are now engaged in war work.

The resignation of the Rev. R. A. Walke was accepted from the District of Kyoto.

In China, an appropriation was made to provide medical work of Kuling, District of Anking.

Two very important subjects in China were considered, but action was deferred pending further conference with the Bishops in the Orient. One was concerning the re-location of many of our Mission buildings in the District of Hankow, to provide for expansion of the work and increase in its efficiency. The other was the proposed amalgamation of St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospitals.

Miss R. G. Pumphrey was transferred from the District of Alaska to the District of Shanghai.

The Rev. John Magee of Manking, District of Shanghai, was given permission to appeal in Pittsburgh, for specials amounting to $20,000 for the development of a very important work among young men in Hsiakwan.

FULL STRENGTH OF THE CHURCH BACK OF CHAPLAINS

It will be a source of great comfort to the parents and families of the boys in camps and cantonments to know that the Church is doing everything possible to minister for their needs during the influenza epidemic. The Rt. Rev. Theodore Irving Reese, Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Ohio and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Church War Commission, sent a letter, under date of October 4th, to every civilian chaplain and regimental chaplain of the Church in our camps and naval stations, informing them that the full strength and resources of the Church are back of them in rendering help and comfort to the boys who are ill. The Bishop writes that letters are coming in daily revealing the heroic work the clergy are doing in the midst of the wide spread epidemic. The Bishop's letter to the chaplains follows:

"Appreciating that in the midst of this epidemic of influenza, your ministry is in the presence of conditions which create demands not only for spiritual help but also for material assistance, the War Commission wishes you to feel free to call upon it for such assistance as you may need.

"The Church relies upon you, as her representative, to see to it that our boys have every comfort and help in their sickness. The War Commission stands ready to support you in this service to their needs."

BISHOP GORE'S VISIT TO CHATANOOGA

The Rt. Rev. Charles Gore, D. D., D. C. L., invited by the Rev. Wythe L. Kinsolving, Minister-in-Charge of Saint Paul's Church Chattanooga, Tenn., added that city to his itinerary on Saturday the fifth of October.

A luncheon was served at the Patten Hotel by the vestry of St. Paul's Church, at which several leading citizens, including the Rev. W. C. Robertson of Christ Church and the Rev. Warner Forsyth of Grace and Thankful Memorial churches were present. After the luncheon Bishop Gore was conveyed to the Court House where the large auditorium was prepared by Mrs. Loring Clark and others for his reception. Leading pastors of the city, Y. M. C. A. Camp Secretaries and Judge Bachman were upon the platform, and prominent citizens constituted the greater part of his audience

He was introduced by Judge Bachman of the Supreme Court, and spoke most pleadingly and eloquently in behalf of the League of Nations, paying to President Wilson's New York address a high tribute.

It was epoch-making, said Bishop Gore, and the mind of the nation should follow the President in his masterful statesmanship in the vast realm of international and supernatural affairs. No spirit of mere nationalism could secure a future stable and lasting peace for the world.

After a pleasant automobile ride on historic Missionary Ridge, Bishop Gore left on The Dixie Flyer for Atlanta.

The twenty-second annual convention of the Sunday School Institute of the Diocese of Washington was held at the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., on Wednesday, October 16th. The Rev. Llewllyn N. Caley of Philadelphia gave an address at the morning session and in the afternoon addresses were made by Miss Ada B. Voute of St. Mark's Parish and by the Rev. Percey F. Hall of the Epiphany. Departmental conferences followed the addresses. The Sunday School exhibit was in charge of a committee of which the Rev. W. W. Shearer, Vicar of St. Columba's Chapel, is the Chairman. Bishop Harding gave the principal address at the public meeting in the evening.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

The Most Significant Document of the War.

"The most sifinificant spiritual document produced during the war is the after-the-war program of the British Labor Party," says Bishop Brent, Head Chaplain of our overseas forces.

Prayer Enlightened His Way.

"Faith in Life Eternal, in a God of goodness and compassion, has sustained me in the most trying hours. Prayer has enlightened my way," General Foch is quoted in the Atlantic Monthly to have written.

Not Permitted to Hooverize.

Bishop Gore, in speaking of the Hoover program to a reporter at Chattanooga the other day, remarked: "The people of England have been rationed for some time. If they are limiting or rationing the people of America they fail to let me indulge in any of it."

Dormant Church People Must Be Aroused.

"The dormant two-thirds of the Church's communicants must be aroused, if the work of the Church is to be a success" declared the Rev. Dr. Rollit, Secretary of the Sixth Provincial Synod, in an address at St. Mary's Church, St. Paul.

Our Commanders Are Religious Men.

"Our forces over seas are commanded by two deeply religious men," says the Rev. Dr. Wolcott, Rector of Trinity Church, Highland Park, Ill. "General Pershing and Vice Admiral Sims are both devout Churchmen. The former was confirmed by Bishop Brent, who is now Chaplain General on his staff. We all know that they are fighting men and we cannot read their messages without realizing that they are praying men too."

For Men Like You.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., says the following story is told of a man in uniform approaching New York on a ferry from Jersey City, who said to a girl standing near by, "Hello, Cutey, where are you going?" Then noticing the little badge she wore, he asked what it signified. "That indicates my membership in the Patriotic League," she replied. "And what kind of an organization may that be?" asked the soldier. "A society which we girls have gotten up to make New York safe for men like you," she said.

Mustn't Grumble At Sacrifice.

"Shame on any man or woman with so small a soul that he or she will grumble at being asked to share in the sacrifice required in these days," said the Rev. Ernest J. Craft, Rector of St. George's Church, Kansas City, in a public address. "Not only food, but money is vital to the victory of this war and America should write on all her temples, should grave everywhere the words of Moses, 'When the host goes forth to fight, then keep thee from every wicked thing," such os profiteering or shirking."

Dr. Stewart Meets a Beautiful Bishop.

The Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill., in a letter to his parishioners written in France, where he is serving as a Red Cross Chaplain at the great American Hospital at Neuilly, says: "On Sunday I went to mass in———in the morning, but first met on the street Monsignor the Bishop, all dressed in pontificalibus walking along the street with his Vicar-general. I stopped him, presented myself as an aumonier (chaplain), and asked for medals and crosses and rosaries for Catholics. Never have I met a more beautiful man. Of course he couldn't speak a word of English, but Professor Glace has not lived in vain, for my French, such as it is, served beautifully, and I found myself invited to his house where he pressed me to stay to dejeuner. This I declined, but accepted all sorts of things, including a very handsome silver cross which he gives to generals, chaplains, and commandants, a lot of beads, crosses, etc. little Mass Books, his picture with autographs, etc. After service I walked along a crooked street, and whom should I meet but Lytle Graham!—the first St. Luke's boy I have seen. That evening I conducted a service at six for nurses, officers and men, out in the open under trees in front of the chateau."

There Should Be More Co-Operation Among Nations.

"The war has developed our character in the right direction," said the Rt. Rev. Dr. Wakefield, Lord Bishop of Birmingham, England, in speaking of his own country during a sermon at Trinity Church, New York City.

The Bishop declined to enter the pulpit, says a New York paper, saying he wished to speak from the chancel, as he could get nearer the people. In the absence at Camp Upton of the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, he was presented by the Rev. Dr. Joseph P. McComas, senior assistant. Out of honor to him the British flag was carried in procession with the Stars and Stripes, and likewise the Union Jack was wound about the pulpit with the American flag. The congregation sang "God Save the King" and followed this with one verse of "The Star Spangled Banner."

"The war has developed our women and they are proving themselves worthy of the trust imposed on them," continued the Bishop. "I hope you believe me when I say that England is a stronger, truer country than it has ever been.

"After the war, when victory over Germany has been achieved, we must see to it that conditions which existed in the past do not rise again. We must never again be caught unprepared, and we must have a better understanding of international matters. And, likewise, we must develop a greater imagination. The quality that has distinguished you was your imagination.

"I believe there should be more cooperation among nations and that any competition that is engaged in should be of a healthy nature. In this way we shall be able to win the glorious ideals for which we are struggling."

The Church Commended For Remarkable Philanthropic Work.

"However much the Church may have failed to secure the judgment of public opinion in her favor with regard to her corporate relation to social issues and municipal affairs, it has unquestionably earned the enthusiastic commendation of the people for her remarkable philanthropic and charitable work in the larger cities especially," asserts the Rev. Dr. Browne, Editor of the Churchman and Church Messenger of Southern California. "In almost every one of the more than one hundred Dioceses of the Church throughout the country, Institutions of the very best quality and of the largest activities provide for the sick and needy, and the amelioration and comfort of the poor, supported by the members of the Church. In many places work like that of the Neighborhood Settlement, the Bishop's Guild, and the County and City Mission, of this Diocese is carried on under the loving care of Bishop's, Clergy and devoted laymen and women, in whose hands a wonderful degree of success has been attained in the relief and comfort of those whose

(Continued on page 7.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CITIZENSHIP IN TERMS OF THE KINGDOM

God Could Have Done it in Some Other Way, But He Looks to Us to Make it a Success.

By the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell.

The Church's adventure for God is an interesting and heroic thing, and there never was a time when the Church was given such an opportunity to determine whether she really believes that the Christ is the solution of the world's ills as she has right now; but when it comes to the question of the "Apportionment" for carrying on the Church's work, people somehow find it an uninteresting thing. Perhaps this is because it is so impersonal, or because the method of it is not understood.

It was the turning point in the life and history of the Church in America when the General Convention expressed the consciousness that the whole Church constituted the Missionary Society—that Church extension was the mission of every baptized member. Before that time the Church was feeble and langiushing. Following shortly afterwards, a new vigor and enthusiasm became manifest throughout the whole Body. The missionary vision, caught nine decades ago, under God, has been responsible not only for the world service that has been rendered, but also for the great growth and virility which marks the Church throughout our land today. I do not mean by that merely the (technical) Missionary Districts in the United States; I mean, equally as much, the strong settled Dioceses. They found their life by sharing it with others—just as the Master said any man would. That is the beauty of it—bearing one another's burdens always makes it easier to bear than our own.

The Church Intends to Pass Her Message On.

Having caught the vision which made effective her life, the Church set out to prove that she believes in it and intends to keep her message strong and pure by passing it on. She seriously meant what she said. To this end, in General Convention she created the Board of Missions as her agent in carrying out the Master's Great Commission and pledged herself to bear the expense of the undertaking. The Board, acting on this assurance, promised the Missionary Bishops certain funds with which to do the work and apportioned the expense to the various Dioceses and Missionary Districts as it was instructed to do. To be concrete, in the Spring of 1917, the Board ascertained from the Bishops not how much they would like to have for this work but how much they simply had to have to carry on the work. With the Bishops' estimates before it, the Board, in May, 1917, made up the budget for the fourteen-month period, November 1, 1917 to December 31, 1918. The Board of Missions is keeping its word. That word was given before one cent of the money had been received, but the Board acts on the assumption that Dioceses and Districts meant what they said when they agreed to foot the bills and is looking to them to make good their promise before December 31, 1918.

Being based on the budget worked out ahead of time, the apportionment represents merely the minimum needed from each congregation in order to meet the year's bills. It is not a tax. It is not a maximum bill to be paid with as little enthusiasm as paying the coal bill brings. It does not represent a maximum obligation which must be paid; but represents a minimum privilege below which a congregation should not dare to fall if it claims a loyalty to the Master and to the Church's promised word on His behalf.

The Talents God Has Given Us are Owed—Not Owned.

I once heard of a congregation—an "organized Mission"—where some of the members felt that the cost of putting glass in the basement windows of their Church should be credited on their apportionment for General Mission! Because they were a "Mission!" A congregation with that viewpoint probably always will be a Mission. Self-support never comes from neglect of any part of the full Christian obligation. Stewardship is one of the chief virtues of Christianity and the reason it is more blessed to give than to receive is because what we give is all that we really have. True stewardship connotes that the talents God has given us are owed—not owned. To bury them in the napkin of "parochialism" is to have them taken from us. The congregation that is not glad to share its gifts has failed to realize that if it had not been for Missions the good news of Jesus Christ never could have come to them; has failed in fact to realize the significance of being Christians at all. "The religion that is not willing to go everywhere is not fit to go anywhere."

The Burden Taken Out of Financial Affairs.

On the other hand it has been proven time and again that struggle and burden and anxiety can be taken out of parish financial affairs by engendering missionary enthusiasm. Only the other day a rector wrote me of a parish which had met its missionary apportionment for the first time, and the senior warden observed that it was the first time in his memory that the vestry did not need to go down in their pockets to make up a deficit in the current expenses of that struggling parish. Then there is the historic instance where fire destroyed a parish Church on Saturday night, and Sunday morning the rector held service on the steps of the charred edifice, preached on world vision and service—and sent teams out that afternoon on an Every Member Canvass for MISSIONS! The result? All apportionments provided for gladly and pledges made which insured the speedy rebuilding of the Church with a minimum of delay and debt. (Incidentally had he been actuated by motives of self-interest, he could not have adopted a better plan). "For every dollar spent outside of the congregation, ten dollars worth of enrgy is released within the congregation for the doing of their own work."

But to resume. If every congregation paid simply its minimum quota, represented by the apportionment, the Church would still be doing nothing more than provide the barest necessities. The Board's appropriations cover only salaries, rent and the usual running expenses. It does not permit of the building of churches, schools or missionaries' homes, or any such equipment of which our work is so sorely in need. We send out the Church's representatives really to "make bricks without straw." In order to get the equipment with which to work they must spend their well-earned furloughs here in the East soliciting special gifts for the purpose. Not a very restful or logical vacation to be sure; but it is the best they can do so long as the Church is content merely to care for irreducible minimum—and sometimes, alas, seeming content to reduce the irreducible.

The Apportionment Not a Tax, But a Test.

The apportionment is not a tax but a test. It is the effort to express spiritual things in material language. It is one of the tests of the consecration and fidelity with which the Christian gives himself to the task which our Lord left us to finish.

It is a means of expressing character—a chance to say not how much must I give nor how little dare I give; but what, according to my ability, is the measure of my gratitude and of my belief in the Christ as the Saviour of mankind.

The apportionment is an invitation to every single one, man, woman and child to share in the Church's Mission throughout the world. For instance, the children of the Sunday Schools, last year, by their offerings supported all the work done under the Board's auspices for a month and a half. All have a share in keeping open the lines of communication to the Church's Army in its fight against the hosts of darkness. So far as each individual is concerned, it is not a question of "paying apportionments;" but simply a question of what offering each one wants to make in loyalty to the Lord. If we give according to our ability and not simply according to the amounts the parish is apportioned, the work can be cared for without putting a strain on anyone and the cause of the Kingdom prospered. If each one will look upon the apportionment simply as a standard for guidance and then make offerings according as the Lord has blessed him, there will be no need to worry about whether the apportionment has been met or whether, indeed, there be any apportionment.

And are not these days in which all of us understand more clearly what we mean by making offerings?" The spirit of sacrifice and service is abroad in the land in an unprecedented way. By all rules, the better Christian a man is, the better patriot he is and surely now, if ever, the Church must lead and equip herself to keep safe the world's life after our men in France have made it safe. The Church's program this year calls for only as much as the Nation is spending every 50 minutes for war.

Everything Living Should Grow and Go.

With the commission to baptize, our Lord linked the commssion to "go into all the world." But quite apart from His command, it is of the very essence of the Gospel that it—like everything living—should grow and go. And the obligation to give is just as imperative as the obligation to go; that the Kingdom of God may be made real and present here and now, equipping men everywhere to have the more abundant life in this present world—preparing them for living primarily. Only incidentally for dying; the living is the best preparation for dying.

This, it seems to me, is the compelling logic of God's plan for His world as Jesus has revealed it to us. And the Church, by the apportionment system, is giving her answer to God's plan. She is going on her warfare by "counting the cost"—the least cost—biding her children to go "the second mile" of gratitude for the bringing in of His reign of peace and goodwill. The misionary program is not the peculiar property of the Board of Missions as some seem to think, but is the direct individual responsibility of every baptized person. The Board is but your agent, carrying out the behests of every single Church member. The apportionment is our way of backing up the Missionary message—the exercise of our franchise as citizens of the Kingdom.

When we look at China, for instance, and realize that she stands by the side of the Allies today because of her yearning for that priceless pearl democracy (essentially the product of Christianity), which Christian Missionaries have held up before her; when we consider such things, surely we cannot fail to seize our golden opportunity of crystallizing that yearning after the pattern of Jesus Christ; that Democracy may be the power for peace in the world and not a sort of dynamite with which people, who for lack of knowledge of Him not knowing how to use it, may set the world on fire again.

What is Your Answer?

The question for each of us is: how much do we value our citizenship in the Kingdom; do we really believe that Jesus Christ is the power of God unto Salvation—for individuals and nations alike; are we persuaded that unless we give a stimulating and affirmative answer to our fighting missionaries showing them that we are backing up Jesus Christ in earnest, the world can never be free from the menace of the horror which is claiming our beloved ones in France?

What is your answer to our Great Captain's commission to you, His soldier? You who are asking God to protect your son or brother "over there"—are you refusing or neglecting to do what He asks of you for His warfare? Let your answer be made to Him on your knees.

DISCOURSE OFTEN BETTER THAN THE MAN

"Go constantly to church, whoever preaches. The act of devotion in the Common Prayer Book is your principal business there, and if properly attended you will do more toward amending the heart than sermons generally can do. For they were composed by men of much greater piety and wisdom than our common composers of sermons can pretend to be, and therefore I wish you would never miss the prayer days; yet I do not mean that you should despise sermons, even of the preachers you dislike, for the discourse is often much better than the man, as sweet and clean waters come through very dirty earth."—Benjamin Franklin's Letter to his daughter.

"Do not say that your condition hinders your perfection. * * * There is no condition, save one of mortal sin, which, so far from being an obstacle, to your good, may not work for it, together with God's grace.—Bossuet.

WHAT IS THE CHURCH?

By the Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman

Many years ago Thomas Carlyle wrote a very remarkable book entitled Sartor Resartus, that startled the literary world for its uniqueness, its satire and its amazing portrayal of human ills and weaknesses. It was virtually an essay on the philosophy of clothes, an attempt to reveal common fallacies and foibles. We have sometimes wished that, without the element of satire or sarcasm, some one might with great consistency write an article on the place and function of the Church and our relation to it, disclosing in clear, simple and forceful English what constitutes the real, true and worthwhile motives for recognizing the Church as a necessary and indispensable agency in our idividual and corporate life. To an average layman, it might prove not only astounding but disheartening, to learn in what light the Church is regarded by many who attend it and by what unworthy standards they very frequently judge it. Probably the most widespread and popular criticism of the Church, be it Episcopal or other, is that it is a "cold church," or it is a "fashionable church," or it is a "rich man's church." All of these are equally mistaken and equally fallacious in any true conception of it. It can hardly be regarded as a misfortune that some rich people go to church, and we surely think it is no misfortune that some so-called fashionable people go to church. Or, again, we would hardly conceive it to be a misfortune that the Church lacked the characteristics and qualities of a club in which the sine qua non of fitness was the "glad hand."

In the main, the Rectors are made the burden-bearers of scapegoats for the Church has a fashionable element, or if a few rich people attend the sins of their congregations. If it, or if it is lacking in cordiality, the Rector is to blame. This is true of the Church generally over the country, as our observation has made it regarded in any sense as a social evident. Why the Church should be evident. Why the Church should be an sort or kind of people, we cannot understand. Again, we do not believe that the majority of the criticisms so popular and so frequently heard, are based upon either fact or a fair and generous estimate of the Church as an institution. A distinguished Englishman once said to Bishop Potter that the reason why he attended St. Paul's Cathedral was that he could go and come unobserved; that so far as he was concerned he wished to worship God unhindered and unlet by any environing circumstances. He had a decent and proper conception of worship, and, we submit, he had a fair idea of the dignity and uses of the House of God.

The Church, in a proper conception of it, is designed primarily and essentially for spiritual refreshment and inspiration. In our type of Church two outstanding ministries are evident, the ministry of the altar and the ministry of the pulpit. We believe there should be a proper recognition of the obligations of both of these ministries. The chancel and pulpit end of the Church is designed for the purposes of ministering to the needs of all the people of all kinds and classes, and in a proper conception of their functioning they are no respecters of persons. What is true of the ministry in the church must be true of the ministry out of the church. In other words, no Rector can long command the respect of people if he belongs to a clique, a party, or the socially elect. On the other hand, the great body of the Church is in the nave where the people worship. It is here that those forces are generated that make either for spiritual efficiency and the inspiration of the multitude, or for those divisive influences that create crack and cleavages.

What we are getting at is just this: If the ministry of the Church is for all the people, without discrimination, the ministry of the people to the Church must be disclosed in the recognition of the rights of all people, without discrimination; which means the barring of all those petty criticisms that are purely personal and selfish, and that only serve to embitter and destroy that tranquillity and inspiration of soul to which religion witnesses. Most of the coldness and indeed most of the criticalness that we experience in the Church is of our own making and is self-generated. In a great household there must be varieties, both of taste and temperatures, and if we have the right attitude and spirit, we will come to the House of God not as critics, but as lowly contributors to the weal and happiness of each and every one of its worshippers, be they rich or poor, be they high and low, be they fashionable or unfashionable, be they clothed in silks or homespun.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

Personal Obligations.

Let us meditate on the Faithfulness of God.—Psalm 34.

Let Us Give Thanks.

For the work of Redemption.

For the Incarnate Life of our Blessed Lord; for the foundation of the Church; for the institution for the Sacraments.

For God's Spiritual Mercies.

For our place in the Church; for our reception of the Sacraments; for instruction in the faith; for the guidance of the Holy Spirit; for the companionship of those who fear God; for growing knowledge of God; for hope of glory.

For God's Temporal Mercies.

For happy homes, kind parents, love of kindred and friends, health and prosperity; all kindness received.

For God's Gracious Discipline.

For wise reproofs by which we learned our failings; for troubles sent out of His very faithfulness; for temptations which lead us to trust Him; for sickness which made Him very near.

Let Us Pray.

For all those dear to us.

For all who are in any way a trial to us.

For those who have done us any good.

For those whom we have influenced for good or for evil.

For our employers or those whom we employ.

For our own diocese; our Bishop and clergy.

For our parish and its various activities.

All these spaces will be very easy to fill in.

"O Lord, Who blessest them that bless Thee, and makest them holy that put their trust in Thee, save Thy people and bless Thine inheritance; maintain the fulness of Thy Church, and sanctify those who come in love to greet the majesty of Thy House. Glorify us with Thy Divine Power, and forsake not those who put their trust in Thee."—Eastern Liturgy.—Prayer Leaflet.

"TAKE THE LOAN"

The following poem, written in May, 1861, by Edward Everett Hale, was set to music and sung throughout the country in the fall of that year.

Come, freemen of the land,
Come meet the great demand,
True heart and open hand—
Take the loan!
For the hope the prophets saw,
For the swords your brothers draw,
Take the loan!

Ye ladies of the land,
As ye love the gallant band
Who have drawn a soldier's brand,
Take the loan!
Who would bring them what she could
Who would give the soldiers food,
Who would staunch her brothers blood,
Take the loan!

All who saw our hosts pass by,
All who joined the parting cry,
When we bade them do or die,
Take the loan!
As ye wished their triumph then,
As ye hope to meet again,
And to meet their gaze like men,
Take the loan!

Who would press the great appeal,
Of our ranks of serried steel,
Put your shoulders to the wheel,
Take the loan!
That our prayer in truth may rise
Which we press with streaming eyes,
On the Lord of earth and skies,
Take the loan!

"Camouflage babies," soldiers call the children at the day nursery just established by the American Red Cross at the American army camouflage factory in France. While the 900 women workers are busy at the point, their babies stare wide-eyed at the Mother Goose paintings with which the camouflage artists have covered the doors, ceilings and walls of the nursery.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

Fourth Paper.

PROPOSED CHANGES NOS. 5, 6 and 7. These three proposed alterations may well be studied together as they have to do with the place and use of the form of absolution. The first change proposed is to amend the rubric of page 4 of the present Book so as to read as follows:

> To be made by the Priest alone, standing; the people still kneeling. The Priest at his discretion, may use ,instead of what follows, the Absolution from the Order for the Holy Communion.

This proposed change is followed by two others, namely, to begin a new paragraph on page 5, in the body of the Absolution, with the word "Wherefore." This alteration needs no comment.

The third change as proposed is to omit the rubric "Or this" on page 5 and the alternative Absolution following. The chief purpose of the prospective changes as above mentioned is obviously to practically confine the use of the shorter form of Absolution to the Communion Office where it properly belongs. It is true that the proposed change while omitting the second form of Absolution from the Morning Prayer does make rubrical provision for its use at the discretion of the Priest. This is an attempt by slow processes to bring about that which former revisers attempted to do by one action of General Convention. The changes here proposed is a step in the right direction if we are really seeking to enrich the Book of Common Prayer, and it is to be hoped that the next General Convention will agree to the proposal of the Commission by agreeing to the rubrical premission for the use of the second form of Absolution with the expectation that custom will pave the way for the omission of the discretionary use of the shorter form of Absolution in some later revision.

At the Conventions of 1883 and 1886 an effort was made to remove the shorter form of Absolution from the Offices of Morning and Evening Prayer and to substitute as an alternative form the Absolution according to the Sarum usage. The proposition was defeated and the 1892 Book appeared with both forms of Absolution printed in full. The present Commission has met the issue half way by providing for the omission of the printing of the second form of Absolution in Morning Prayer and providing for its use at the discretion of the Priest, and omitting both the printing and permission in Evening Prayer and substituting the Sarum form of Absolution.

The Alternative form of Absolution is peculiar to the American Prayer Book. A study of the first American Book shows very clearly that the Revisers had either very little knowledge of or else very little interest in liturgics so that time after time General Convention has been busy trying to enrich our Book by restoring some of the omissions or by dropping some of the additions in the Book of 1789. The compilers of the first American Book had before them the wonderfully fine model of the English Book, a book rich with sacred associations and that had stood well the test of trial and long usage. It was only necessary in setting forth the first American Book that changes be made to conform with the American form of Government. In other words, the English book must be adapted to the American Church. Instead the Compilers made a number of radical changes. For example: the printing of the alternative form of Absolution in the Choir Offices. The mutilating of the 95th Psalm and the addition of part of the 96th and calling it the Venite. The abbreviating of the Benedictus which resulted in the loss of the Memorial of the Incarnation at Morning Prayer. The introduction of the Nicene Creed in the Choir Offices. The shortening of the Versicles in Morning and Evening prayer and the omission of the Gospel Canticles in Evening Prayer. Some of these defects have been remedied by subsequent General Conventions.

DEAN OF DULUTH'S CLERGY, DR. RYAN

Rector of St. Paul's Resident of City for Quarter Century.

"Dr. W. A. Ryan, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, may lay undisputed claim to being the dean of Duluth's clergy, for he is, beyond question, the oldest clergyman—in point of continuous service—in the city," says the Duluth, Minn., Herald under date of October 8.

He is being congratulated these days, since it became known, on his service of twenty-five years as the head of St. Paul's. The acknowledement has come a few days late, as Dr. Ryan seemed disposed to let the event slide by without saying anything about it.

He has also been for twenty-five years the president and leading spirit of St. Luke's Hospital, which he built. He has been for twenty years the president and leading spirit of the Duluth Humane Society. He has been for all the years of his residence in Duluth a good and upright citizen, and his strong influence during these two and a half decades always has been for sound ideas and sound, constructive achievements.

When men who have been such upstanding and outstanding citizens of Duluth as Dr. Ryan has been for a quarter of a century, finally pass away, the community lays its flowers of tribute upon their graves. It is all too rarely that anybody thinks of paying the tribute of praise while they are living, and before their ears are closed forever to the appreciation they have earned. The Herald is glad to seize the occasion of this anniversary to pay its tribute to the life, influence and services of this fellow-citizen who is still living and still laboring in the fullness of his powers.

The vestry have given Dr. Ryan a substantial increase in salary to mark the completion of his twenty-five years of service.

When he came to Duluth the value of the church property was $6,000. At the end of a quarter of a century, the value of the property is $375,000. This consists of a beautiful new church, consecrated early this year, the Rectory, musical endowment and St. Luke's Hospital, and will be a lasting monument to Dr. Ryan's untiring efforts.

His congregations are noted for the many men who are regular attendants and for the hearty co-operation given him in all things tending to the welfare of this parish. May he be spared to minister to his people!

In connection with this anniversary it is worthy of note that the organist of St. Paul's, Mr. A. F. M. Custnace, rounded out a service of twenty-seven years in September, and the vestry also gave him a substantial increase in salary as a mark of esteem.

Mr. Custance ranks as one of the foremost organists in the country and the music at St. Paul's has long been noted outside of Duluth.

A BISHOP PRACTICES WHAT HE PREACHES

Bishop David H. Greer of New York delivered a stirring win-the-war address in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on a recent Sunday at a special service held under the auspices of the General War Time Commission, says a New York daily. Then he walked down the middle aisle and subscribed for a $1,000 Liberty Bond. The subscription was made through Dr. Edward H. Hall, chief usher at the Cathedral with J. Greer Zachary and George H. Sullivan, all ushers, who were appointed a committee by Dean Howard Chandler Robbins to receive subscriptions at the close of both services. They sold about $3,000 worth.

It was the first public appearance of Bishop Greer since his return last Thursday from his summer home at Northeast Harbor, Me. He seemed greatly improved in health.

Besides Bishop Greer's there were addresses by the Rev. Dr. Frank Mason North, representing the Methodist Church, and Professor William Adams Brown, of Union Theological Seminary, representing the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Brown explained that the commission is a year old and that it is composed of one hundred men, each engaged in war work representing his denomination.

"The commission has proved a voice through which the government has been able to speak to the Church," said Professor Brown.

Bishop Greer said that this war above all other wars in history has been lifting people to a higher moral level, springing from the deep and strong conviction that its issue is a moral issue involving the whole moral future and destiny of the world.

"It is a moral crusade," said Bishop Greer, "so far as this country and her Allies are concerned. It is a great moral crusade for moral causes and moral ends and for moral triumph over wanton and brutal force. Because we have this common moral aim, this common moral purpose, it is healing the divisions of Christendom."

BISHOP DUNN VISITS CANAL ZONE

On his way home from Panama and Costa Rica, Bishop Dunn of Honduras, arrived at New Orleans on St. Matthew's Day, preached in St. Paul's Church on Sunday the 22d, and went to Mobile to meet his brother the Rev. Harold C. Dunn and his family from Quebec, who will return with him to Belise to take up work in the Diocese. Of the 350 candidates confirmed on this trip, nearly half were for the American Church in the Canal Zone. In one day in Costa Rica, he held four confirmations at widely separated points, confirming 62 varying in age from 14 to 70, traveling 125 miles by motor car on the Railway, all in less than twelve hours. This work and one confirmation the day before, were all in charge of a most earnest priest, who continually moves up and down the railway. In two months the Bishop traveled 5,500 miles, 3,200 of which could have been avoided, if he had a boat of his own. Lack of reliable communication prevented him from visiting Nicaragua at this time, so that another very long trip to that republic will soon be necessary. Chaplain Carson in charge of the work in the Canal Zone suggested that the offerings at that time be given to start a boat fund to provide for so vital a need. It is hoped that gifts for this fund will now be forthcoming in abundance.

NEW YORK GREEK DAY PROCESSION.

Saturday, Oct. 5, was observed as "Greek" day in New York and the superb weather was auspicious for the public celebration at noon at the Altar of Liberty on South Avenue, where thousands of people witnessed the great parade. The Episcopal Church was represented on this occasion by the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Parker, attended by two priests as chaplains, the Rev. W. C. Emhardt of Philadelphia and Rev. Thomas J. Lacey, Ph. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y. They rode in the procession in a decorated car following that of the Metropolitan of Athens. The New York Herald says:

Preceding the exercises at the altar a reception to the Greek diplomatic party was held at the Waldorf-Astoria. Each of the guests, including a large delegation of prominent Greek-American, wore a rosette formed of the Greek colors. Martin Vogel, Assistant Treasurer of the United States, aided by George T. Wilson of the Liberty Loan Committee, welcomed the guests. The Metropolitan of Athens, Meletios Metaxikis, the highest dignitary of the Greek Church, who is in America on a religious mission, was present.

Native Born Greeks March.

Forming in Thirty-third street, the procession, headed by an honorary escort of the Twenty-second United States Infantry, together with their band and a squadron of seamen, marched down Fifth Avenue to the altar. At either side of the automobile bearing the Ambassador marched a Greek, arrayed in the picturesque garb of a Spartan soldier—one wearing a green cap and jacket with white skirt and stockings of white. As an additional guard of honor there marched before the Minister's automobile a company of native born Greeks who are now in the United States army.

The Greek national anthem was played when the guests took places upon the rostrum, while the vast assemblage cheered.

Following the Minister's address, the Greek national colors were raised upon the altar flagstaff by two of the Greek honor guard of United States soldiers. While the Greek anthem was played, flowers were placed upon the altar by Miss Iphegenia Branias, a native of Greece, who has been in America two years. Miss Branias, assisted by twelve flower girls, wore the costume of the Greek peasantry.

Following the playing of the national anthem, the procession reformed and marched up Fifth Avenue for an inspection of the Greek Block in the "Avenue of the Allies" at Forty-seventh street, afterwards going to luncheon at the Astor Hotel. Two thousand cheering civilians followed the entourage from the Altar to the hotel.

Among the prominent guests in addition to the Minister and the Metropolitan, where Bishop Edward M. Parker, of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New Hampshire, who was accompanied by Dr. T. J. Lacey, rector of the Church of the Redeemer Brooklyn; C. Panagopoulos, Greek Consul at New York; A. Maheras, Greek vice consul; L. Calvocoresses, president of the Greek Community Trinity; C. Voyolis, president of the Pan-Hellenic union; Panos Armyriotis, secretary of Greek Legation, Washington, and Mr. M. Travios, president of the Greek Industrial Commission.

After the formal exercises an enthusiastic rally of several thousand Greeks heard speakers in their own tongue praise the cause of democracy. A sea of Greek flags—blue and white with the cross—waved, and strong sounding cheers came from many throats.

ITALIAN WORK IN THE DIOCESE OF BETHLEHEM.

An interesting work among Italians is being done at Wind Gap and Northampton in the Diocese of Bethlehem. The Mission at Wind Gap, St. Mary's, has been in charge of the Rev. F. C. Capozzi, efficiently assisted by Mrs. Capozzi. The Rev. H. E A Durell, in a report to the Diocesan Convention on the Italian War Work, at St. Mary's says:

The Missioner ministers to his own people all through the slate belt and Mrs. Capozzi mothers all the Italian women and children in the vicinity of St. Mary's, even though she is greatly restricted by the care of her two infant children. Last year I reported Bennett Capozzi to this Convention; this year I crave the pleasure of introducing Josephine, a little Italian lady of less than a year's residence to her credit in the Capozzi's happy household.

The Reverend Father Capozzi reports 79 communicants at Wind Gap and 124 baptized; 23 communicants at West Bangor and 39 baptized; 7 communicants at Belfast and 12 baptized; 12 communicants at Nazareth and 17 baptized, and 12 communicants at Easton and Philipsburg, and 22 baptized, or a total of 133 communicants and 214 baptized. This, too, in the face of the fact that nine families, in which were twenty communicants, have moved away during the year.

The attendance at the services numbers regularly from thirty to thirty-five. The Sunday-school has fifty-five enrolled, with an average attendance of forty. Sixteen children have been baptized, five confirmed, and sixteen have made their first communions. On the occasion of the Bishop's spring visitation, the Italians were privileged to have a special service, pontifical in character, at which the Diocesan was vested in cope and mitre and carried his pastoral staff. Up to that time the Italians at St. Mary's never had such a service nor one which they more thoroughly enjoyed.

A vested choir of twenty-one is trained by Mrs. Capozzi, who also acts as organist. She is active also in the Sunday school, teaches a sewing class of girls, and is giving music lessons, free of charge, to eight children who have perfect attendance upon all the Church and Sunday school services.

Poverty is ever present among these people. Wages range from $2.25 to $2.75 per day and families from four members to a dozen. Often in winter children cannot come to the church because they have no shoes and the Missioner is unable to relieve all the cases of this kind. With even a modest fund at his disposal much real need could be met. There are large numbers of these people to whom the Church may minister acceptably, but the Church must bear the expense of this service. Both Mr. and Mrs. Capozzi are giving their best to these people, and that, too, despite the disadvantages under which they labor. They live three-quarters of a mile from the church and even with two babies Mrs. Capozzi has managed it somehow. This, however, is soon to be remedied. A bungalow is to be built at once on the far end of the church property so as not to interfere with the original plans of the rectory, parish house and church, but to provide a home for the Missioner and his family near the church.

Lincoln's famous phrase, "Government of the people, by the people, for the people" has been traced back to the days of Wyckliffe the Anglican Reformer. In the introduction of the Wyckliffe Bible, issued in 1384, are to be found these words: "The Bible is for the government of the people, by the people, and for the people."—The Churchman and Church Messenger, Southern California.

PAPERS ON THE PSALMS

By the Rt. Rev. Dr. A. C. A. Hall

THIRD PAPER.

Translations of the Psalter.

The Psalms were written, like the rest of the Old Testament, in Hebrew. Greek and Latin translations for a long time held possession in the Christian Church, and from these other translations were made. Here of course was a fruitful opportunity for mistakes, in translating from translations.

We have three English versions. The version in the Prayer Book, which we use in Church, is the oldest, being taken from the "Great Bible" of 1539. This was not from the Hebrew direct. It was retained for use in service when a translation generally more accurate was made in what we ordinarily call the Authorized Version of 1611, because it was familiar to the people and was thought better adapted for singing. The Revised Version of 1885 is still more accurate, being based on a better knowledge of Hebrew. As has been said, this, if referred to, will often clear up difficulties in the Prayer Book or Bible versions.

The Revised Version has also this great advantage, that it prints, not only in the Psalms but throughout the Bible, poetry as poetry, with its parallel lines. Hebrew poetry had no rhymes nor metre. Its great characteristic was rhythm, which is shown especially in the balance of clauses or lines when they are combined in a verse. A couplet of two corresponding lines presents the same thought in two slightly varying forms. (This system may be elaborated into groups of four or more corresponding clauses.)

About this there are two things to be said: (1) We can often guess, when a verse is difficult, what the meaning of one line must be, by seeing that it must correspond with the sense of the other.

(2) The colon in the middle of the verse in the Prayer Book version is not strictly speaking a punctuation mark; it rather, when poetry is printed in prose fashion, marks the end of a line. This mark ought always to be observed by a pause, in reading as well as in chanting. This both helps the sense, and keeps the readers together. In some English Cathedrals (Oxford for example), and elsewhere, the choir sings the Psalms by half verses, one side answering to the other. This rule should be observed in reading such a Psalm as 136, where the second half verse is throughout a refrain following on the telling of great acts of God.

The Psalms ought of course always to be sung when this is possible. We should not be content with reading hymns. And the chants, of whatever style, should be simple, so that all can join in them. Music helps to bring out the varying meaning of the Psalms, now exultant and now plaintive. Let us give to God of our best.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., and Hobart, Indiana.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Sherrin, James Wise

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months;
20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

INDEPENDENT ORACLES.

If you grant the premises upon which Germany has convinced herself of the rightness of her cause, it is difficult to see how the Germans could have acted otherwise than they did.

The premise was that the Emperor of the Germans was the infallible vicegerent of the Almighty and they, the Germans, were God's chosen people to impose divine Kultur upon the whole earth. If one is infallible, he cannot be mistaken and if any people can persuade themselves that they have an infallible leader, then they also persuade themselves that they are doing God's will in blindly following that leader. It was such an obsession that inspired twelve thousand students at Berlin to applaud the sentiments of an apostle of Kultur when he declared that there were "three things that have to be kept down: parliment, the people and the press." He might have added the pulpit as a fourth, for none have been more subservient in their acquiescence in the Prussian program than the preachers of Germany.

Is it any wonder that the ignorant anarchists of Europe regard education and religion as the enemies of liberty, when such sentiments as these find their echo in the professors and preachers of Germany?

It ought to make one think. For human nature runs along parallel lines in all departments of life. A false premise in the religious sphere is just as fatal to religion as a false premise in the political world is to society. And the first question for us all to consider is, whether a claim to infallibility in any sphere of human action is not a fallacy which results in the paralysis of the human conscience and the destruction of human liberty.

The moment a large mass of human beings succeed in finding an infallible oracle they cease to think.

The atrocities of Prussian propaganda were accepted by the people because for forty years they had been inoculated with the virus that the State could do no wrong, and that when their private judgment found itself in opposition to the decrees of the State, then private judgment must cease to act and accept without dispute the political dictum that cruelty is the will of God.

Of course such a conclusion is a reductio ad absurdim and results inevitably in its own destruction, but the people who accept and act thereon are the victims of their own false premise.

There can be no league of nations, no basis of ultimate settlement by any peace board when one of the members sitting at that board is incapable of error. He must be forcibly suppressed or he will force his will upon the whole.

In the attainments of a league of nations, there can be no other authority than the well-tried traditions of justice finding their expression in the common will of the whole assembly, or a majority of the same. This does not mean that the league of nations will despise all authority, as do the Bolsheveki. On the contrary, they establish authority. The traditions of government and justice which have been tried out by the experience of all nations form a definite basis of authority when they find their expression in the learned representatives of the various civil governments.

Infallible dictation is one thing; constituted authority another; and the rejection of all government still another. It is only by constitutional authority that the human race has come to enjoy life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. We have learned this in the political world. Germany and Russia are glaring examples of the folly of infallible emperors and incompetent theorists.

We have learned that in the civil sphere, but as usual the religious world is lagging on behind.

There are no precedents more tenacious than religious prejudices.

The theory of infallible authority has sprung from man's dislike to think in the spiritual realm, and so he has created infallible oracles to do his thinking for him.

One says the Pope and the Pope only is the infallible vicegerant of Christ; and another says "the Bible and the Bible only is the religion of protestants"; and still another swears by Mrs. Eddy, Joseph Smith or some other infallible prophet as the mouthpiece of divine wisdom. You can't argue with a person who has captured a divine oracle, for he has placed his pawn to think in a pawn shop.

God has not entrusted to either man or book any such oracular pawn.

It belongs to the Church as authority, belongs to the State to determine the traditions of Christianity as accepted by the experience of the human race, but in that the Church is not infallible any more than the government.

But what is the Church? Surely not the Roman Church, or the English Church or the Episcopal Church. These may or may not have preserved the traditions which Christ entrusted to her care. At best they are only fractions of the whole.

If we are ever going to fight the devil and all his works effectively we must have a united command, not under some divine oracle or imperial pretentions, but as the result of a league of Christians in which the opportunities of the present may be accepted without rejecting the best traditions of the past.

There must be an authority that adheres to the constitutional forms of church government and represents the accumulated wisdom of the ages.

Such a government will suit neither imperialists or Bolsheviki, but then their first premise invariably is that they cannot be mistaken.

It is only a body of men who may be mistaken, yet will accept the authority that is until it can be constitutionally changed, who will ever work out the problems of human society.

I do not believe, for example, that Bishops must govern any more than kings must rule, but I do maintain that any permanent league of nations who are going to work out the certainty of any unusual policy must accept the status quo as the basis from which they will determine the State which shall be hereafter.

Revolution or reformation may break up the status quo as it did in 1776 and in 1520, but revolutions cannot make a stable government (as in France and Russia) until they have been through chaos and come back to some principles of experience on which to base future experiments. The Commonwealth in England (1640-1660) had to summon back the infamous Chas. II, because they were unable otherwise to find a status quo from which they could work out the present constitutional government of England.

France after the revolution had to go back to an usurper before they could become a republic.

The United States was obliged to form a constitution based not upon the theories of dreamers, but on the experiences of the best educated body of men which this country ever saw in a constitutional convention, who used the precedents of parliments and courts as the basis of a new constitution. We can build only on the foundations that have been built, for other foundation can no man lay than has been laid.

We must learn in the readjustment of Christendom first, that there are no infallible oracles; second, that there is such a thing somewhere as constitutional authority; third, that wisdom was not born with us and will not die with us.

In short, we can learn much of the readjustment of the Church from imperialists, Bolsheviki, and those who believe in constitutional authority.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS

By Bishop Johnson.

"And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter and James and John and Andrew, Philip and Thomas, Bartholomew and Matthew, James, the son of Alphaeus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas, the brother of Jude.

"These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the woman, and Mary, the mother of Jesus and with his brethren."—Acts I, 13-14.

In an obscure upper room, the true identity of which has been lost, there took place the most far-reaching and important consultations that the world has ever known, for here the Holy Catholic Church was born by the operation of the Holy Ghost.

There was nothing in the personel of this little company to indicate the magnitude of the work in which they were engaged.

Several of them made their living by catching and selling fish; one was a tax gatherer; only one; Bartholomew (or Nathaniel, as he is elsewhere called), had any social position, the rest were of unknown occupation.

They were Jews for whom the pagan Roman culture had an ill-concealed contempt.

Their own countrymen had repudiated them as teachers of dangerous doctrines. They were, however, engaged in organizing an enterprise which would successfully cope with the operations of Greek philosophy, of Jewish prejudice and of Roman power, and would reach far beyond their wildest imagination in the scope of culture, power or religious devotion.

This little band of devoted disciples set to work on this tremendous program without any wealth, education, political power or social prestige.

They were of the very nature of Mother Earth, possessed only of those assets which are the common property of all mankind.

Like the mustard seed in their insignificant proportions, they were destined to grow into a tree, in the branches of which all nations of the earth would dwell.

Since such tremendous results could proceed from such plain men, it would seem desirable to investigate what they themselves regarded as the secret of their great success.

And first of all it lay in their simple-hearted devotion and obedience to Jesus Christ, and they knew Jesus as no one else on earth ever did. They had spent three years in intimate association with the man of Nazareth. They had camped with Him on many a trip; they had been behind the scenes in all of His miraculous ministrations; they had shared with Him in many critical episodes. They had known him as campers know one another, or as members of the same troupe become acquainted, or as soldiers become comrades. Their is no chance for mutual deception in three years of such intimate association as they had enjoyed.

They knew Christ, loved Him, adored Him, believed Him to be the Christ, the son of the living God.

But such intimate trust and devotion find their fixed value in the lives of those who are thus bound to one whom they regard as Lord and Master.

So one can determine the values of Mahomet's life from the character which such devoted attachment will invariably produce.

The lust, cruelty and fatalism of the sincere Mahomedan is but an index of the qualities of Mahomet himself.

So there were certain qualities which these men acquired because of their passion for Christ, which qualities give us a sure index of the character of their Master.

Chief among these qualities, one finds a passionate devotion to truth.

They told the truth even when its fierce light revealed their own shortcomings.

The denial of Peter, the doubt of Thomas, the follies of the sons of Zebedee, the cowardice of the whole body of Apostles are recorded with the same fidelity to truth as they recorded the acts of the Master, and they do this without giving any palliation or excuse for these faults.

Along with this passion for truth, we find an unselfish desire to be of service to others and one another. This love for the brethren carried them to the extravagant practice of having their goods in common; not easy for a Hebrew.

And in the third place we find the highest form of courage in that they hold neither their lives nor their reputations dear unto themselves, but gave either or both as the occasion might require.

To these individual qualities of truthfulness, unselfishness and courage, they added the corporate quality of fellowship.

Church unity with them was not an academic willingness to agree in a common program, nor the sticking together of a dozen separate planks in a rather rickety platform.

Theirs was the solidarity of mutual love and trust.

Had the twelve been modern Americans instead of Palestinians, we would at once have had eleven separate religions, the only tie that bound being their common hatred of Judas.

Just as the patriotism of America has been welded together by the common hatred of the Hun, so modern Protestantism finds its one source of unity in their common hatred, of Rome.

Let modern sects be deprived of their enemies and they fall to quarreling among themselves.

The unity of the Apostles was based on something deeper than an intellectual agreement. They loved one another in the fellowship of Christ, and no intellectual difference could break that fellowship.

Each sunk his own individuality into the common family.

It is difficult to see how otherwise Bartholomew and Simon the Zealot, or John and Thomas, could have been members one of another.

In the last three centuries we have been deflected by the useless ratiocinations of egotistical reformers from the family idea of religion to the academic one. We must first think alike and then we will agree with one another. The disagreeable person is the one who won't agree with us. Whereas nothing but the moral obliquity of a Judas could destroy the fellowship of the Apostles.

It was these individual and corporate qualities which made possible the founding of the Apostolic Church.

It is the lack of these qualities which divide Christendom today. We could get along without the rich, or the educated, or we could divest ourselves of the crass egotism that makes our opinions more important than divine love and human fellowship.

We are like spoiled children who would rather have their own way, than live in Christian fellowship, one with another.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

The District of Salina has an area greater than the State of New York, more than 50,000 square miles, and contains a population in excess of 500,000.

By special request of the Council of the Chamber of Commerce, Port Huron, Mich., the clergy of the city conducted a brief service of prayer to God for our country and our allies, in the Council room every day at noon.

The children at Geneva, Ill., will be given religious instruction in the public schools one hour each week, beginning next year. Favorable action was taken upon the question recently by the school board as the result of a petition presented in person by local priests and ministers.

The autumn confirmation classes of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, O., will commence October 26th. The most hopeful aspect of the work in the Cathedral last year was the confirmation of one hundred and thirty-four souls, the largest number in the history of the Cathedral organization.

A referendum on the subject of free pews will be taken at an early date by the Church of the Ascension, Fall River, Mass., and a canvas of the parish will be made for new pledges for weekly offerings through the duplex system the last week in this month. It is hoped that a sufficient revenue may be secured to enable the parish to abandon altogether the renting of the pews.

"Have you trouble in meeting your apportionment? The man who KNOWS, gives," says the Spirit of Missions—The Witness.

And, by the way, the two above periodicals, The Spirit of Missions and The Witness are two of the best and most sensible papers that reach our desk. Everybody ought to have both of them.—The Mississippi Church News.

Dr. McComas, senior assistant at Trinity Church, New York City, announces that as the Trinity Community House has been handed over to the government for lodging and a canteen for soldiers, the activities carried on there will be divided between Trinity Mission House, in Fulton Street, and St. Paul's House, in the rear of old St. Paul's Chapel.

A series of sermons concerning the spiritual implications of Labor's after-the-war program will be preached at St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill., by Dean Bernard Iddings Bell on the following subjects: "The National Minimum," "Democratized Industry," "Democratized Finance," and "Socialized Surplus." The Dean is civilian chaplain at the Great Lakes Training Station.

In conjunction with the War Camp Community Service, the Rev. Dr. Manning is now arranging for Trinity Parish, New York City, to give the use of several of its buildings to serve as quarters for soldiers and sailors, while staying in the city. The Trinity Church Parish Building at 90 Trinity Place, will be entirely turned over to this purpose, the Sunday school and other organizations being transferred temporarily to the Vestry building in the rear of St. Paul's churchyard. This work will be known as the Trinity Church Unit of the War Camp Community Service. The building will provide sleeping accomomdations for a large number of men, also a canteen, gymnasium equipment, pool tables and other facilities. All soldiers and sailors will be welcome in accordance with the general plan of the work of the War Camp Community Service. On 25th Street, in connection with Trinity Chapel, the parish school building and the old Rectory at 27 W. 25th Street, are to be used in the same manner. This work will be known as the Trinity Chapel Unit of the War Camp Community Service. This work will be carried on under the direction of committees consisting of members of the two congregations in conjunction with representatives of the War Camp Community Service.

At a recent meeting of the American Church Building Fund Commission, held at the Church Missions House, New York City, loans amounting to $47,500 were voted to the following Parishes and Missions: Church of the Good Shepherd, Athens, Ohio; St. Paul's Church, Key West, Florida; Ascension Parish House, Denver, Colorado; Grace Church Rectory, Muswogee, Oklahoma; St. John's Church, Bowling Green, Ohio; St. Luke's Church, Cedar Falls, Iowa; Church of the Redeemer Parish House, Cairo, Illinois; St. Matthew's Parish House, Dallas, Texas; St. Andrew's Parish House, Mayaguez, Porto Rico; St. Matthew's Rectory, Spokane, Washington; St. Ambrose's Rectory, Groton, New York; and St. Andrew's Rectory, Emporia, Kansas. Gifts amounting to $6,800 were voted to the following Parishes and Missions: Christ Church, Osaka, Japan; Mission Church, Tsuruga, Japan; Calvary Mission Rectory, Seaside, Oregon; St. Mark's Rectory, Hood River, Oregon; St. Barnabas' Church, Bemidji, Minnesota; St. George's Church, Cordova, Alaska; Emmanuel Church, Boyce, Virginia; Calvary Church, Rosebud Mission, South Dakota; Grace Church, Cespedes, Cuba; St. Luke's Church, Mabton, Washington; Christ Church Rectory, Anvik, Alaska; St. Stephen's Rectory, Fort Yukon, Alaska; Mission Rectory, Nanling, China; Mission Church, Sakai, Japan; and Mission Church, Tanabe, Japan. Grants amounting to $3,300 were voted to the following Parishes and Missions: St. John's Rectory, Auburn, New York; Grace Church Rectory, Riverside, Pennsylvania; Emmanuel Church Parish House, Shawnee, Oklahoma, and St. Paul's Church Rectory, Waxahachie, Texas.

PERSONALS

At the invitation of the Bishop of Montreal, the Rev. Dr. Manning of Trinity Church, New York, will conduct the annual Quiet Day for the clergy of the Diocese of Montreal. The services will commence on the evening of October 29th and will close with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist on the morning of the 31st.

The address of Rev. G. M. Dorwart, formerly rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, Paterson, N. J., and more recently locum-tenens at St. Mary's Church, Pacific Grove, and chaplain at St John's, Del Monte, California, is changed from Carmel-by-the Sea, California, to Deal Beach, New Jersey.

The Rev. Paul B. James, rector of All Saints' Church, Torrington, Wyoming, and Dean of his District, has accepted a call to Trinity Church, Iowa City, Iowa, and will take up his work there the first Sunday in December. He succeeds the Rev. D. C. Garret who has removed to the Diocese of Massachusetts. Dean James is a young man of great energy, ability and spirituality, peculiarly fitted to serve the Church in the University City of Iowa.

The Rev. T. W. Attridge has been called to Kenyon College as chaplain and rector of Harcourt Parish. He has accepted and will go into residence in the spring. In the meantime he will take duty in Christ Church, Cincinnati, relieving the rector, the Rev. Frank Nelson, who will go into war work this winter.

October 1st marked the beginning of the Rev. Albert Martin's twenty-third year as rector of Trinity Parish, Yazoo, Miss. A reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Martin, under the auspices of the Trinity Guild at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. James G. Holmes on the 5th inst. It was a beautiful expression of affectionate regard for Mr. and Mrs. Martin and grateful appreciation of Mr. Martin's noble and loyal services, says the Yazoo Sentinel. Mr. Martin, in addition to his other duties, is editing the official organ of his Diocese, The Mississippi Church News.

Mr. Alfred H. Peabody has just completed twenty-two years of continuous service as organist, and much of the time as choirmaster, in St. Mark's Cathedral, Salt Lake City, Utah.

The Rev. Carroll L. Bates, author of a series of pagents on the Christian Year which are widely used, completed his work as locum-tenens at Emmanuel Church, Norwich, N. Y., on the last Sunday in September. In compliance with a general request his last sermon was published in the Sun of that city. It was a patriotic message from the text, Galatians IV:30, which, in the course of his remarks, he paraphrased as follows: "Cast out the bond woman and her son (Germany) for the son of the bond woman (autocracy) shall not be heir with the son of the free woman (America), God bless her, and Democracy."

OBITUARY

Charles Emmett Buck, Priest.

The Rev. Charles E. Buck, rector of St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek, in the Diocese of Washington, D. C., for the past twenty years, died on October 2nd at Garfield Hospital, Washington following an operation. The funeral was held at his church on Friday, October 4th, at 2 p. m., in the presence of a large congregation with the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., and several of the clergy officiating. About thirty priests of the Diocese were present. Interment took place in the Rock Creek cemetery. Mr. Buck was Honorary Canon of the Cathedral, Secretary of the Board of Managers of the Diocesan Missionary Society, member of the Central Missionary Committee, and a member of the Committee on Canons.

Mr. Buck was born in Baltimore sixty-four years ago and was educated at schools in that city and at Charlotte Hall Military Academy, St. John's College and the Virginia Theological Seminary. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Emily C. Buck, three sons and two daughters.

Mrs. Maria Taylor.

On the morning of September 23rd, Maria Taylor beloved wife of the Rev. W. H. Hampton, Rector of Christ Church, Ironton, Ohio, passed into life eternal.

Though an invalid for many years from the effects of a fall, she led a life of usefullness and good work and was an example of Christian fortitude and cheerfulness.

The funeral was conducted at Christ Church, Ironton, by the Rev. A. E. Powell of All Saint's Church, Portsmouth, Ohio, and the Rev. G. H. Harrison of Calvary Church, Ashland, Ky., neighboring Rectors.

Mrs. Hampton was born in Danville, Ky., and was a great-grand daughter of General Zachary Taylor.

The burial was in Frankfort, Ky., on the 26th of September.

Mr. Jacob Kleinhans.

The demise of Mr. Jacob Kleinhans, one of the most prominent laymen of the Diocese of Western Michigan, occurred at the family residence in Grand Rapids, Mich., on Monday morning, September 30th. Death was due to heart trouble. Mr. Kleinhans had not been well for several months, but had been able to be up and about and to attend to his business affairs.

Mr. Kleinhans was born in Belvidere, N. J., January, 19, 1845. He was educated and admitted to the bar in New Jersey, removing in 1866 to Richester, Mich., where he resided but a few months, going to Grand Rapids, where he made his home until the time of his death, building up a large law practice and numbering among his clients many of the leading men of the city and the western part of the state.

He has represented the Diocese of Western Michigan at every General Convention since the Convention at Cincinnati, and has represented the Diocese at the meetings of the Fifth Missionary District, and also the Provincial Synod. He was a member of the Provincial Court of Appeals and was considered an authority on the Canons of his Diocese.

Mr. Kleinhans was one of the organizers of Grace Church Parish in 1875. He at that time was elected senior warden and has held the office continuously since. He was never absent from services unless ill or out of the city. For many years he was Chancellor of the Diocese of Western Michigan and a member of the standing committee of the church.

For years Mr. Kleinhans held a directorship in the Fourth National Bank and when his death was announced at the directors' meeting the board adjourned in honor of his memory.

On Feb. 25, 1879, Mr. Kleinhans was married at Grace Episcopal Church to Miss Emma Esster Miller, who with his two brothers, William H. Kleinhans of Nashville, Mich., and Edward L. Kleinhans of Buffalo, survives him.

A MESSAGE FROM BISHOP TUTTLE.

There has been appointed in the Province of Washington a Special Committee, of which Bishop Thomson, of Southern Virginia is chairman, and Dean Bartlett of the Philadelphia Divinity School is secretary, on the Recruiting and Support of Candidates for the Ministry.

In connection with the appointment the following Resolution was adopted by the Province, viz., "That the Committee should, through its Secretary, ask the Presiding Bishop of the Church to make a special appeal to all Church workers, lay and clerical, among the forces of the United States, asking them to act, as far as possible, as recruiting agents for the Ministry."

By enlistment or conscription our young men have been largely drafted into the military service of the country. Every one knows with what a fine spirit of alacrity they all have gathered to the colors. We are immensely proud of them. With them and among them have gone not a few of our young ministers and our candidates for Holy Orders and our boys and young men who were thinking about becoming ministers. In consequence there is coming or there has already come a dearth in the supply of pastors for our churches and missionaries for our posts.

In our great war there is in the army and navy a cry, loud and persistent, for "officers," "officers." In the great war which the Church is bound to keep up and means to keep up against ignorance and selfishness and faithlessness and sin, it is not strange that the same cry is uplifted for "officers," officers."

We beg, then, for help.

Help, O parents! In Spartan bravery of spirit, spite of the shrinking of the heart of flesh you have sent forth your boys to stand by the flag and to stand for the country. Will you not, also, when fit times come encourage your boys to enlist for service and leadership under the Saviour's flag and for His kingdom?

Help, O pastors! You have guided and cheered and blessed the young men of your flock in their goings forth to France and Flanders, and you have been proud to fix their stars on your service flags. Now turn, also, to cheer and guide some boys or a boy of your flock to take up the work, equally hard, though, thank God, unbloody, against the power of evil and for perishing souls.

Help, O American boys! The grownups hardly know how your heart swells and your blood tingles, each one, with the wish to throw yourselves into the war right now and do your bit, even though hard hits and cruel hearts should come. Ah, boys, in the ministry of the Church there are not wanting hard hits and some cruel hearts, but the Church wants you and needs you to be leaders there. I beg you come on.

Help, O soldiers and sailors and airmen! After you are discharged from this righteous war for truth and honor and justice and freedom, turn you one and another, I beg, into the ranks of the ministry, and fight there under the Church's banner against sin, the world and the devil, and continue Christ's faithful soldiers and servants and officers each one unto your life's end.

O parents, pastors, boys, soldiers, may God mercifully have us all in His holy keeping, and raise up officers for His Church Militant to meet her sore need!

(Signed) DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

St. Louis, Mo., October 3, 1918.

ALL CHURCHES IN WASHINGTON CLOSED

In compliance with the request of the District Commissioner every Church in the City of Washington, D. C., was closed on Sunday, October 6th.

In some instances Churches were closed up tightly but in many cases the several pastors had open-air services on lawns adjacent to their churches. The use of Dupont, Iowa, and Washington circles was granted to some congregations. Washington Circle is near to St. Paul's Church, 23rd Street, N. W. (the Rev. Robert Talbot, D D., Rector), and it was planned to hold a patriotic service there at 11:00 a. m. incidentally to boost the Fourth Liberty Loan, but this service was postponed to the following Sunday on account of rain. In the early morning the Holy Eucharist was celebrated in the open air court between St. Paul's church and the Parish Hall, and quite a large congregation attended.

A ban has been placed on all public services and entertainments and no public funerals can be held, only immediate relatives of the deceased are allowed to be present.

At the time of writing influenza fatalities in Washington show an encouraging reduction although the authorities are by no means hopeful that the crisis of the epidemic has been reached. Ninety-one deaths were reported from Saturday morning to Monday noon in the District. A total of 665 cases has been reported since yesterday, October 6th.

On Sunday morning, Oct. 6th, when all the Churches of Scranton were closed on account of the influenza epidemic the Rector of St. Mark's Church, Eugene A. Heim, called the Protestant Clergy together and invited them to unite with him in Prayer for the sick. All the Ministers of the City of Dunmore were present in the church and united with the Rector in the Litany of the Church and the prayers for the sick.

WANTED BY TWO MISSIONARIES IN KANSAS.

Any one who has a Stereopticon Lantern to give away or loan for use until Jan. 1, 1919, in the Blue Valley Missions of Kansas is requested to write Mr. Charles Bailey, Box 247, Blue Rapids, Kansas. The Missions will pay freight chages.

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal

Collegiate School, Military for Boys, Denver, Colo.
All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations. Address REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Reve. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffeila, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer.
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE."
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America. Address.
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by G. W. J.

The Anniversary of the composition of "The Star Spangled Banner," (known as National Anthem Day), was celebrated in the United States on Saturday, September 21st, by a drive to teach the public the words and music of the National Anthem. Three-quarters of a million copies of the anthem were distributed in numerous meetings arranged. One of the most inspiring of these meetings took place in New York City. In all parts of the city, thousands of men and women assembled in public parks and sang the National Anthem and memorized the words, adding the fifth verse, which was written by Oliver Wendell Holmes after the Civil War.

Justice F. K. Pendleton, grandson of the author of the anthem, told of its history for about 15,000 people, assembled in front of the City Hall.

Francis Scott Key was sent by President Madison under a flag of truce to treat for the surrender of certain prisoners held on board the hostile ships. His mission was completed only as the fleet prepared to open its night attack on Fort McHenry, at the entrance to the harbor of Baltimore. He was compelled to remain over night, and was an unwilling witness within the enemy lines of that attack. His apprehension for the outcome, his anxieties to know the result, his joy at the enemy's defeat, the outburst of triumph with final victory, were all typical of the feelings of the whole people as they waited in painful fear for news of the result of the conflict. He voiced his relief in a paen of exultation.

COLLEGE EDUCATION UNDER THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The plan under which the government is to direct the work of the colleges has not yet been made public in detail, but the essential feature of the situation seems to be that the final responsibility for the higher educational institutions of the country is placed upon Secretary Baker's already overburdened department. We are fortunately commtted to a military policy which demands the immediate use of enormous man-power. The new draft would naturally make short work of the men in the colleges, but to ease the severity of the strain somewhat, there is proposed the so-called "Student Army Training Corps." This is an arrangement under which students of draft age in the accepted institutions will be enrolled as privates in the United States army, with all the benefits and responsibilities thereby entailed and detailed for service at the various schools. There under military discipline and subject to call at any time, they are to be given a certain amount of training and instruction approved and probably prescribed by the war department. The benefits from an arrangement like this may be great. If the demands of the whole war machine as well as those of the battle-front, are carefully thought out, the possibilities of developing the engineers, doctors, chemists and other trained men so essential for the successful prosecution of the war are most encouraging. The student privates can be classified according to their aptitudes, and required to follow certain designated intensive but thorough courses of study. Every man would be stimulated to his maximum effort by the danger of military disgrace in the event of his failure, and by the opportunity for great service, through success. Fear of criticism as slackers would no longer keep men from their studies. The outlook is bright if the war department will not consider the colleges chiefly as barracks and training camps. Courses must necessarily be pruned of all non-essentials, instruction must be concentrated, the work must make up the lack of its former breadth by its intensity and seriousness.—Editorial Boston Herald.

THE PLAIN OF SHARON.

(From British war dispatch, Sept. 22, 1918.)

The infantry opened a way for the cavalry to pass through, and then there was a wonderful spectacle of long columns of British yeomanry and Australian light horse and picturesque Indian cavalry moving over a wide expanse of country through the coastal sector of the plain of Sharon to get the enemy's rear.

(From the Book of the Prophet Isaiah about 558 B. C.):

The earth mourneth and languisheth: Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down: Sharon is like a wilderness.

The wilderness and the dry land shall be glad; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it the excellency of Carmel and Sharon: they shall see the glory of the Lord, the excellency of our God. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold your God! vengeance will come, even the recompense of God; he will come and save you.

Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing; for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the glowing sand shall become a pool, and the thirsty ground springs of water: in the habitation of jackals where they lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes. And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for the redeemed; the way-faring men, yea fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor shall any ravenous beast go up thereon; they shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

Editorial Column, Boston Herald.

In regard to Palestine ,the question has been asked, what will the British do with it? The answer may be indicated by what they have done and what they are doing. They have cleared Turkish tyranny out of five-sixths of the country. Judea, Samaria, and Lower Galilee are free. Only Upper Galilee remains to be saved from the Turk and the German. Sir Edmund Allenby, always a brilliant cavalry leader, has proved himself also a master of manoeuvre, and he may be trusted to finish the work on the heels of the fleeing generalissimo, Field Marshal Liman von Sanders. The British entered a country destroyed by Turkish misrule, a country of persecution, poverty, famine and disease. They have swept persecutors and persecution before them, helped the destitute, fed the hungry and done great things for the public health. It was a healthy army that crossed the desert from Egypt into Palestine, carrying fresh water with it all the way through a line of American pipes, and one of the first undertakings has been the provision of water supplies for the people, instead of the stuff they obtained from polluted wells and malarial marshes. These marshes are being drained and once fertile land reclaimed. Jerusalem has been provided with a public water supply from near Hebron.

The people of that city and of all the country traversed by the liberators, are rejoicing and offering whatever help they can give. Almost the entire manhood of the Jewish agricultural colonies has volunteered for service with the Jewish battalions arriving from England. Jaffa and Jerusalem have contributed largely. Observers tell us that hope, gladness, enthusiasm are everywhere, with something like the revival of the ancient national spirit, and this in addition—a patriotism of native Christians and Moslems. Not for centuries has the Holy Land been such a happy land. What are the British to get out of it? The glory of going on, as they write one more good chapter into the history of the nation. If we understand aright, their plan is to leave the status and government to Palestine to be decided by the people of the country and the peace conference of the powers. The number of nationalities in the little territory may make the problem complex. Its ultimate solution is not unlikely to be autonomous government under international protection.

Editorial Boston Herald.

American prisoners in Germany are now receiving 85 per cent of the packages shipped to them, according to latest advices. The American Red Cross reports that the delivery of supplies to the prisoners is progressing satisfactorily, with less looting of the packages than heretofore, owing to the practice adopted of binding them with strap iron. The American Red Cross is paying each imprisoned officer $50 monthly, and is arranging to have uniforms for the officers made in Berne.

A mail agency has recently been established at Vladivostok, Siberia, for the purpose of serving the boys with the American army operating in that region. Letter postage between Vladivostok and points in the United States will be the same as the usual domestic rates charged here. Parcel post packages not exceeding seven pounds in weight will be accepted for delivery at Vladivostok at the rate of 12 cents for each pound. All mail matter sent to men in the American army should be addressed plainly, showing the army unit to which he belongs, and stating that he is a member of the American expeditionary force in Siberia.

It is better to write American Expeditionary Force, in full, on all overseas mail to soldiers rather than abbreviate to A. E. F. to distinguish from Austrailan Expeditionary Force, which has the same abbreviation.

In an old grave-yard, it matters not where, on a grave stone over a small child, is the following epitaph:

"She tasted of life's bitter cup,
Refused to drink the portion up;
But turned her little head aside
Disgusted with the taste, and died."

The foresight of King Pharaoh, who saved Egypt from famine by following the advice of Joseph, to store grains in years of plenty against a period of drouth foretold in the ruler's dreams, was cited by Herbert Hoover, U. S. food administrator, in a message to the federal board for New York, where he announced the intention of the government to place in storage every possible kernel that could be saved from the wheat harvest, as an insurance against want in case of lean crops in the future.

The Woolen Situation.

For several months the national government has had absolute control of the wool and woolen situation. It has purchased the entire domestic wool clip of a little less than 300,000,000 pounds. It has arranged with the British government for a certain amount of imported wool from Australia. It has created a federal agency of Boston merchants to setian. Not one pound of wool can be from the great source of South American supplies, in Uruguay and Argentina. Not one poun of wool can be brought from South Africa or any other foreign place or port without the supervision of the war trade board in Washington. A revolutionary change has come upon this great national industry upon which the comfort of 3,000,000 of our fighting men and 100,000,000 of our civilian population so vitally depends.

The other day "Current Affairs," the weekly journal of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, paid this industry the tribute of a comprehensive review, emphasizing the part that Boston is now the greatest wool market in the world, and New England with 430 mills or one-half of all in the United States, controls two-thirds of American wool manufacturing. The mountains of raw wool that come to the Summer Street warehouses from all quarters of the world come because the machinery is here in New England to card and comb and spin and weave them. The Boston wool trade has bodily foregone all thought of anything but working for the government. Because of the paramount war needs not one pound of wool is being released for the production of civilian fabrics. No immediate wool famine is to be feared (for the civilian population). Previous wool stocks of many mills are not yet exhausted, and are in part, available for civilian use. Some varieties of wool are not adaptable for army and navy uniforms. There is still a considerable amount of cloth and clothing in the United States, unsold by clothing manufacturers and merchants—a reserve sufficient for many months ahead. Moreover, the government has commanded, and the people must loyally accept, a greatly increased use of reworked wool and cotton so that the new wool may be constanly available for the boys "over there" whose need is greatest. British and French allies have been gladly practicing this economy since the first year of the war.

Every house hold should know these facts: That before the war the United States was consuming yearly about 600,000,000 pounds of raw wool, of which 285,000,000 pounds were grown in the United States and the rest imported; that the American army and navy, because a fighting man requires from 10 to 30 times as much wool as a civilian, will demand about 600,000,000 pounds of raw wool in the year ending next June, and although the warehouses are crowded, in Australia, South America and South Africa, the imperative military and naval needs of our allies and of the American Expeditionary Forces will leave very few ships this year, to bring the foreign wools to the United States. Meanwhile, our own domestic flocks are increasing, but can in the nature of things increase only slowly.—Editorial in Boston Herald.

A BIT OF WOMAN'S WORK IN HAITI.

Mrs. Battiste is wife of the priest-in-charge of Leogane District, Haiti, and also Secretary of the Haiti branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. The Rev. Mr. Battiste has had a serious illness and his wife writes on August 19th, of one of the Missions under his care:

Thor still continued her little mission, and every week sees other souls renouncing their superstitions. But there are no lay readers and no ministers. Yesterday, after singing and prayers, I broke the congregation up into five protions, giving a class to five different persons to instruct them in the Bible and Catechism.

"The Rev. A. R. Llowyd (Bishop Codmore's commissary in Haiti) is very energetic and a wonder (as to all he accomplishes). Since his coming all the clergy are laid up; first Mr. Balliste, the Rev. Mr. Macombe, and now Mr. Jones, so Mr. Lloyd has practically the work of three or four men on his shoulders. He has brought a splendid large church property, and is giving his attention to ferring the boys' school into the only house upon it. The Women's Auxiliary has helped him in preparing vestments for the two choirs (English and French). The Auxiliary is constantly suffering in Port au Prince, for as soon as we get one or two capable officers they are transferred elsewhere, life in Haiti at this moment being so difficult."

Miss Julia Emery, to whom the Witness is indebted for many of these letters that come from our church family living so far away from the home center, writes that, "The Arkansas readers of the Witness will probably be glad to hear of the Rev. Mr. Llowyd and all he is accomplishing, as he went from Arkansas to Haiti."

DIOCESE OF SOUTHERN VIRVINIA

Convocation Southwest Virvinia.

The One Hundred and Third Convention of the Convocation of Southwest Virginia met at St. Thomas's Church, Christiansburg, on October 1st and 3rd. There were sixteen Clergy in attendance. The meeting was characterized by great earnestness and devotion, hearing most excellent sermons and essays.

At ten o'clock Tuesday morning the Dean, Rev. F. H. Craighill, preached a sermon; that night the Rev. T. F. Opie preached a sermon.

The Convention sermon was preached at 11:00 o'clock on Wednesday morning by the Rev. J. W. C. Johnston, after which the Holy Communion was celebrated. The Right Rev. A. C. Thomson, Bishop Suffragram, preached Wednesday night and confirmed a class of two.

As usual Thursday evening services was devoted to missions. The speakers were Rev. C. Wallace Rible on "General Missions"; the Venerable A. Vaughn Colston on "Diocesan Missions." At this service Bishop Tucker presided and introduced the speakers.

The practical essay was read by the Rev. G. Otis Mead on "Teacher Training of the Sunday School," calling attention of the Convocation to the drive throughout all communions in the United States and Canada for teacher training and emphasizing its necessity, especially in preparation for the work during and following the war. The Theoretic essay was read by the Rev. Claudis F. Smith on "Christian Unity as a Result of the War." This was a scholarly paper, presenting the great subject in a broad and sane light. Many participated in the discussion and made it one of the leading features of the whole Convocation.

The Devotional Meetings on Wednesday and Thursday held at 9:30 a. m. were conducted by the Rev. J. B. Dunn, D.D., on the general subject "Of the Promise of the Dawn," developing the thought that the spirit of man is the power working through soul and body.

During the business sessions of the Convocation a resolution was passed endorsing the Diocesean paper edited by the Rev. C. Wallace Ribble, promising co-operation in his endeavors to make it a real force of the Diocese.

The matter of maintaining the missionary work of the Diocese came in for a general review and the Convocation urged the use of the Advent Mite Boxes to gather money for this purpose. Qnite a good deal of routine business was transacted and the following were the appointees for the next meeting, which is to be held at Pulaski:

Devotional Leader, the Rev. T. D. Dowie, Sweet Briar.

Convocation Preacher, the Rev. J. F. Burkes.

Writer of the Theoretic Essay, the Rev. T. K. Nelson.

Practical Essay, the Rev. T. F. Opie.

Subject of the Theoretical Essay selected by Convocation for next meeting is, "The Church in Relation to the Social Conditions After the War."

The Convocational Board of Religious Education was elected and composed the following: The Revs. T. D. Lewis, T. G. Faulkner, T. F. Opie, C. F. Smith, G. O. Mead.

News Notes.

The Rector of the Church at Wytheville expressed a desire to have the Summer Normal in his Parish, and it was unanimously decided to hold the sessions of the Summer Normal at that place the week after the public schools close next summer.

The people of Christiansburg were most bountiful in their hospitality and the members of the Convocation enjoyed to the fullest the delightful three days' stay in their midst.

The Annual Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Southwest Southern Virginia, which was to be held at Christ Church, Roanoke, has been postponed on account of the prevalence of influenza throughout the State.

Richard Roberts, youngest son of the Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Roberts, of Rocky Mount, Va., died of pneumonia at Sheffield, Ala., on Thursday, Oct. 3rd, and was buried in Rocky Mount Sunday afternoon, Oct. 6th.

Rev. A. Vaughn Colston has taken up work in and around Roanoke. He gives a service nearly every Sunday at St. Peter's Chapel, Roanoke, but also ministers at Buchanan, Fincastle and Grace Church in Botetourt, Amherst and Clifford, in Amherst County.

VERMONT NEWS

At St. Paul's, Burlington, the whole of the Parish House is given over for the care of sick soldiers during the epidemic of influenza. Some fifty-four are accomodated there, from the Signal Corps and the Mechanical School connected with the University.

The epidemic has interferred with plans that had been made by the Bishop Coadjutor and the Diocesan Board of Religious Education for the holding during October of several conferences on Sunday school work in different parts of the diocese.

The diocesan school for girls, Bishop Hopkins Hall, has begun its new year with the full number of boarders that can be accomodated.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

TWO INFORMING LETTERS

Deputation Will be Sent to Russian Church When Conditions Permit.

In August 1917 the Rt. Rev. Dr. Anderson, President of the World Conference Commission of the American Episcopal Church, cabled greetings to the Council of the Holy Orthodox Church of Russia, sitting for the first time for centuries as a free and democratic Church. At that Council, Tikhon, formerly the Russian Archbishop in New York, was elected Patriarch of All the Russians, and sent the following reply:

To His Eminence Right Reverend C. P. Anderson, Bishop of Chicago, President of the World Conference Commission of the American Episcopal Church.

Dear and Right Reverend Sir:

On behalf of the Council of the Holy Orthodox Church of Russia we beg to express once more our gratitude to the World Conference Commission presided over by you for its friendly greetings that were presented through Mr. Charles R. Crane on the opening day of the Russian Church Council's sessions in Moscow, August the twenty-eight, and received here with deep appreciation and unanimous vote of thanks.

May the Holy Spirit lead all Christendom to the final victory of the Cross and Gospel and to the Kingdom of Love over Spiritual darkness and hatred that nowadays—as never before—attempt to hurt and destroy the precious work of our Saviour. Let all Christians unite in earnest prayers for Russian Church in her struggles against the enemies of Christ and Religion!

As soon as the results of sessions of the Council of the Holy Orthodox Church of Russia are systematized we will feel our pleasure to communicate them to your friendliness and to the sympathy of the American Episcopal Church.

Please accept our best wishes to the coming day of the Blessed Christmas and kindly convey the same to the World Conference Commission, to Mr. R. H. Gardiner and to our good friends—the American Episcopal Church.

Our blessings to all!

(Cross) Tikhon, Patriarch of All the Russians, Chairman of the Council of the Holy Orthodox Russian Church.

V. Beneshevich, Secretary.

To this letter Bishop Anderson replied as follows:

The Most Reverend Tikhon, Patriarch of All the Russians, Chairman of the Council of the Holy Orthodox Russian Church, Moscow, Russia.

Your Holiness:

The kind letter which your Holiness sent through me to The World Conference Commission of the American Episcopal Church, in acknowledgement of our greetings to the Council of the Holy Orthodox Church of Russia, has been received with deep gratitude and affection. Owing, however, to the vicissitudes and difficulties of travel, the letter did not reach me until the month of April. It was read at a meeting of our Commission in New York in April, and immediately upon its reading the Commission joined in earnest prayer for your Holiness and for the Church and people of Russia. We associated ourselves with your Church and people and prayed that God would deliver us from our common enemies and from the enemies of Christ and religion, and that He would draw us together into a united allegiance to Christ and His Church and the welfare of the world.

The American Episcopal Church, as your Holiness well knows, has an abiding affection and admiration for the Russian Church, and especially in these days of common peril; and the American people long to join hands with the great Russian people in the fierce struggle for liberty and right that is going on in the world today.

With assurances of the profoundest interest in the performance of the great tasks which have fallen upon your Holiness in your exalted position, and with the further assurance of our constant sympathy and prayers, I am, on behalf of the World Conference Commission of the American Episcopal Church,

Yours sincerely and faithfully,

(Signed) C. P. Anderson,
President of the Commisson.

The Episcopal Commission had hoped to send a Depuation to attend the Council and invite the co-operation of the Russian Church in the World Conference, having been assured by many eminent Russians that the invitation would be cordially accepted. That Deputation will be sent as soon as conditions permit.

READ THE CHURCH PAPERS

We see with our eyes but we realize, or make real to ourselves, by the faculty of imagination.

Merely to see such activities of your Church as may chance to come within range of your eyes, is but a dull and uninspiring experience. It would be like catching a momentary glimpse every five minutes of a stirring motion picture. You would soon fall asleep.

The individual in any parish develops and encourages a torpid unconcern for the Church because he permits himself to think of his parish and its activities detached from the whole battle which the Church is waging. If we did not know through the newspapers and the activities of our government that there was a war, the making of bandages by devoted women would seem a meaningless and dreary task, unrelated to any human need. But the casualty lists in the newspapers transforms the work of rolling bandages into an inspiring enterprise.

If you want to know why the work of your parish is not a dull routine, but is a throbbing and thrilling effort, you must let imagination relate the activities of the parish to the work of the Church as a whole.

Reading, with alert imagination, is the extension to every part of our land and into every problem of life, of the gift of sight. We call it insight.

Not only to enlarge our knowledge, but to broaden our experience and to quicken our enthusiasm and to fortify our efforts in the Church, we must read the Church papers. We are, wilfully, partially blind to the greater meaning of every parish effort, if we fail to do so.

They will open up a new world. If you long to travel, read. If you would enrich life with a sense of living in a nation and not in the corner of a village, read. If you would journey through the places where the vital issues of life and God are manifesting themselves, that is, if you would journey through other parishes, other men's minds, other people's efforts, read the Church papers.

George P. Atwater.

MY IMPRESSIONS OF THE METROPOLITAN OF ATHENS

By Rev. T. J. Lacey, Ph.D.

The presence amongst us of the Most Rev. Meletios, archbishop of Athens and president of the holy synod of Greece, has given America the opportunity to first hand acquaintance with one of the most interesting personalities in the religious world today. It has been my rare privilege to come into pleasant association with him these past few days and I am sure Church people generally will be interested to know something of this eminent leader whose visit is creating such widespread interest.

Meletios was born in the island of Crete, the native place of the great Venizelos. He was associated with the patriarchate of Jerusalem for several years under Damianos. People of Florida will doubtless recall Bishop Gray's visit to Damianos in 1907.

From Jerusalem Meletios went to the island of Cyprus, where he became archbishop and remained there until his appointment as metropolitan of Athens within the past year. He is the head official of the Church in the Kingdom of Greece and stands high in the confidence of the king and prime minister, by whom he has been entrusted with this important mission to the allied countries. In France he was received with great cordiality by Premeir Clemenceau, and was hailed with enthusiasm by the press and the people.

Last week he was received by President Wilson. I met His Holiness at the great reception at Carnegie hall a week ago where about 5,000 Greeks and Americans met to bid him welcome. A few days later he paid me a visit at my office, coming unheralded in a simple informal, democratic way. Yesterday I was present at a dinner given in his honor at the Mohawk, our leading hotel. I had an hour's conversation with him and our subjects covered a wide range, political and ecclesiastical.

In the simplicity of his manner Meletios incarnates the democracy of ancient Athens. In appearance he reminds us of the ancient fathers of Christendom and doubtless our minds go back readily to the figure of St. Spiridion of Cyprus, his early predecessor in that famous island. Meletios speaks Greek, French, Russian, Arabic and Turkish. He has a clear voice and a very fluent utterance. He is gentle and fatherly in his bearing. Democracy is his passion. It is his theme on every occasion. He is a staunch adherent of the allied cause and stands for the active participation of Greece in the war against Germany autocracy. He expresses great admiration for President Wilson. The archbishop advocates in no uncertain terms the elimination of the Turks from Europe. They must be driven out of Anatolia, Constantinople, and Asia Minor, and put back in the territory that belongs to them as an Asiatic people. Smyrna, Idumea and the coast of Asia Minor should be at once annexed by Greece. This is the archbishop's program with which most of us find ourselves in full accord.

I am charmed by the metropolitan's graciousness and winsome personality. I am impressed by his marvelous grasp of the significance of political issues in their most intricate bearing. Above all I marvel at his complete devotion to his people, even the humblest. Like a true shepherd he identifies himself with the flock and is ready to spend and be spent in the service of his countrymen. His first words spoken in America reveal the spirit of his mission when he said

"I thank God that He deigned, in His goodness, to bring me safely over land and sea to this great country, to be among my own countrymen. It is my love for them that made me despise distance and dangers. The joy which I feel this moment, my beloved children, cannot be rendered in words."

WHITE PROPOSED AS MOURNING

The proposal recently made in England that white instead of black be worn in memory of its sodlier dead appeals to the modern mind as a startling innovation, yet as a matter of fact it is but a revival of an old custom. White was the accepted mourning color of the greater part of Europe, as it always has been of China, until the latter part of the Fifteenth Century.

The distinction of having first worn black to express grief belongs to Queen Anne of Brittany, the spouse of two successive monarchs of France. It was 417 years ago today, on April 7, 1498, that her first husband, Charles VIII, of France, joined the great majority, and his widow set all the tongues of France a wagging by appearinng in public clad entirely in black, instead of the conventional white usually worn by bereaved widows. After the first excitement had died down, however, it was generally agreed that Queen Anne had showed good taste, inasmuch as black is more sedate and melancholy, and so more expressive of grief than white. The innovation of Queen Anne was taken up by all the court, and soon spread among the people, and from France to other lands until in the course of a century black had supplanted white as a color expressive of mourning throughout the civilized world. About the only exception is Turkey—where violet is the mourning color.—Scrap Book.

"IT IS WORTH WHILE"

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell of Labrador tells of his reverie one night as he sat watching beside a sick child. The cold, barren Labrador offered no comforts for the body; the missionary was worn out by long journeys and nightly vigils; the fight against greedy merchants in Newfoundland had only just begun; there were no sympathetic fellow-workers in whom he could confide; the Christians in Labrador were few and far between, and those in England and the States seemed to have forgotten the missionary's existence. Efforts were being made by evil-doers to drive him out of the country. Was it any wonder that the thought came: "After all, is it worth while? Why not leave these people to themselves, and go home to England where friends and comforts are waiting? What is this sick boy to me—one whom I never saw until yesterday? Is it worth while fighting out the battle in this great lone land of ice and snow?" Just then there was a stir in the cot, a little cough, and the sick boy's eyes turned towards the doctor and a smile lighted up the pale face. A still, small voice seems to say: "Is it worth while. 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these least, my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age.'" — Pennsylvania School Journal.

A FABLE.

Once there was a Congregation that needed Money for repairing the Church, so the Women got together and decided to hold a Raspberry Festival. Sister Frisbie invited them to come and Carouse on her Front Lawn. Some 22 Members of the Flock flew out and brought a few Things to Wear, the Outlay for washable Finery running to about $8 per Head.

Mr. Frisbie got $9 worth of Chinese Lanterns and strung them around. He wanted to do the Thing up Brown so as to get a Puff in the Weekly. The Paper came out and said that the Frisbie Front Yard, with its Myriad Twinkling Lights, was a Veritable Fairy Land. That kind of a Notice is worth $9 of anybody's Money.

Mr Frisbie and three other Pillars of the Church devoted $7 worth of valuable Time to unloading Tables and Camp Stools.

The Women Folks ruined $14 worth of Complexion working in the hot Kitchen to make Angel Food and Fig Cake.

On the night of the Raspberry Orgy the Public came and trampled down $45 worth of Shrubbery.

When it came time to check up the Linen and Silverware it was found that $17 worth of Spoons with blue Thread tied around them had been lost in the Shuffle.

The Drip from the Candles ruined $29 worth of Summer Suits and Percale Shirt Waists.

Four Children gorged themselves and each was tied up in a True Lover's Knot with Cholera Morbus before another Sunrise.

After cleaning the Wreck, paying the Drayman and settling for the Ice Cream and Berries it was discovered that the Church was $6.80 to the Good, so everybody said it was a Grand Success.

MORAL: Anything to avoid dropping it in the Basket.

RELIGIOUS PLEA TO EMPLOYEES

The late railroad magnet, Mr. E. H. Harriman, sent to every man employed on his place at Arden, Orange County, N. Y., and to the men of Arden the following letter:

"The lack of interest on your part is discouraging to those who provide the means whereby you can have the important privilege of attending church services.

"Fair weather Christians are of no more use in a community than the same sort of laborer, milkman, dairyman, farmer, carpenter, blacksmith, railroad man or any kind of fair weather man.

"The opportunity is given your children for religious training at Sunday school and the church for yourselves and families.

"It is not a favor conferred on anyone else than yourselves and families.

"It is not a favor conferred on anyone else than yourselves if you avail yourselves of it.

"I hope by next Sunday that you will evidence more interest by attending the service.

Your faithfully,
"E. H. Harriman."

GO TO CINCINNATI AND FIND OUT

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Boyd Vincent, Bishop of Southern Ohio, has received the following letter from the Rt. Hon. and Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, D. D., Archbishop of York, Primate of England and Metropolitan, who visited the United States and Canada, sometime ago:

My Dear Bishop Vincent:

I have just read the pamphlet account you sent me of my visit to Cincinnati. It brings vividly back to my memory that most remarkable gathering of your fellow-citizens which I had the honor to address. I have continually fulfilled my promise which I then made, that if I were asked what America thinks about the war, I would say, "Go to Cincinnati and find out!" I must confess that it has been difficult to avoid a feeling if reaction after the exhiliration of such a visit as I paid to your city. It feels like leaving high ground where the breeze of hope, of confidence and enthusiasm was blowing, for a long and dusty road along the plain. But our people are still trudging with steadfastness of spirit, and they are immensely encouraged by all the help that comes from the United States.

(Signed) Cosmo Ebor.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS.

(Continued from page 1)

lot in life has been in these ways so greatly improved and blessed.

"We can proudly point to such Instiutions as Bishop Johnson has founded, or which he has acquired, in this part of the country, which possess a well-recognized value in the cause of true religion, as they minister to the needs of men, women and children, to better their condition, to brighten their lives, and to protect them from want and distress. And it is, indeed, cause for great thankfulness that this work in which the Church engages, is admitted on all sides to be one which she seems particularly qualified to undertake, and this because of the sympathetic zeal of her workers in ministering to the prisoners in Jails and Houses of Correction, to the inmates of Poor Farms, and to the needy people found in other public Institutions. But while this splendid showing ought to be very grateful to Church People, they must further recognize that the Church ought not to ignore the claims of work in other directions out of which good may come to the bodies and souls of men, and especially in connection with community interests she may hope to be of local importance and equally successful to the Praise and Glory of God."

OVERLOADED

A horse tugging up hill, with a wagon behind him, finally came to a standstill. The driver, mistaking his whiplash for equine muscle, gave some of it to the horse. There were two results: one was that the wagon got to the top of the hill; and the other was that the horse, shortly after died of the strain and exhaustion. He was overloaded. The overloading was easily done but not easily compensated for.

A child went to bed fretful, timid, nervous and "cross." He had a red spot on each cheek and forgot to say his prayers, until his overseer hustled him out onto his knees with a severe reprimand. He awoke in the middle of the night with fever and vomiting. His stomach had been overloaded. Loving parents had compelled him to "eat all that was on his plate," and part of that was somthing which nature declared unpalatable to him. On top of the parents' mistake came the child's mistake of eating one doughnut too many. Overloaded.

A school girl not very robust nor enduring, but yet ambitious and conscientious, became troubled with insomnia, nervousness and hysteria. She was overloaded with lessons, not because she needed to learn very much but because the textbook had to be gone through by the end of the term. She broke down from overloading—not from overlearning, for overloading insures underlearning.

A schoolboy, with muscles, like iron and skin like leather, pored over long, heavy lessons afternoon and night. He was so strong physically that he didn't break down. But had his lessons been about half as long and half as numerous, he would have learned a great deal more, and better enjoyed what he did learn. He was overloaded, also. Unlike the girl, his physical health didn't seem to suffer but like her, his mental development did.

A minister in preparing a sermon struck a capital point to make. From this he went on until it bristled all over like a chestnut burr and didn't stick anybody very hard, because there were too many points. It was overloaded. The people went away with no idea in particular. An arrow pierces because it has a single point. A chestnut burr irritates the surface only. It is overloaded with points. —Patterson Dubois in the World Evangel.

A Salvation Army lassie who was carrying on her work under shell-fire, asked if she was not afraid, said, "Yes, the shelling does get on my nerves at times. Then I think how much worse is the lot of the boys down the road in those swampy trenches. I think I have my worst fright at night, when the warring of the guns shakes our pans and kettles off the table. We sleep right back there, and these pans make a horrible noise when they fall." Does she think of giving up? No such case on record.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MR. GEORGE W. PEPPER AND PROHIBITION

(From Philadelphia North American)

"I look for a landslide for the Prohibition Amendment; I am beginning to suspect that this is one of those situations which sometimes present themselves under abnormal conditions when the politicians, usually the first to feel the shifting inclinations of the public mind, are unaware of just what is passing in the hearts of the people, and I believe that the people today in an overwhelming majority want prohibition."

George Wharton Pepper acknowledges that he is not prejudiced in favor of prohibition, that while he is earnestly in favor of it, that position is one to which he has lately come and one which does not result from the habits and convictions of his life.

Mr. Pepper, who is chairman of the Pennsylvania State Council of National Defense, wanted it understood that in speaking for the Prohibition Amendment, he was in no wise speaking as a representative of the National Defense Council, the views of which on prohibition he does not even know.

But he was speaking as an individual, and as an individual Mr. Pepper is one of the most thoroughly well qualified persons to speak on that question; he is one of the leading lawyers of the Philadelphia bar, and he is regarded by many as probably the most influential and most widely known active layman in the Episcopal Church in the United States, and he is a rather new addition to the ranks of those who believe that prohibition is a National issue.

"I have until the last three years been always a user of alcohol in moderate quantities; I was brought up that way, and I have always believed that it was a question for each man to settle for himself; but about three years ago I came to the conclusion that it was a matter of National policy, and I gave up liquor in any form.

"I have been through many parts of the State, and I find an enormous sentiment in favor of the ratification of the Federal amendment. I don't think the politicians realize this; those who usually make the most reliable predictions today fail to take into consideration how intensely the necessity of subjecting ourselves by compulsion to the same restrictions which all agree are necessary for our fighting men has taken hold upon the public conscience. I know innumerable striking instances of men who have always taken what liquor they wanted who today will not touch it, just because they do not regard it as particularly manly to accept defense from those whose individual desires in that regard have been ignored and to go on drinking in the safety of that defense brought by the other man's self-denial.

"Of course, that feeling does not logically lead to enforced prohibition, but when that sentiment becomes sufficiently powerful, it is going to lead to a change in the law itself; and I have become convinced that there is no such thing as an inherent right when it comes to personal habits. The real question at any given time is whether the curbing of the Nation's desires does not become a matter of National expediency.

"Then, again, it is essentially a National—not a local—question. It is ridiculous to say that Pennsylvania has a right to say that a man shall not drink, but it is entirely logical to say that the Nation has a right to say whether it will be a Nation without liquor or not. It is always a National question, as I see it, regardless of whether a Nation is at war or not.

"And prohibition as a permanent policy for the Nation is a wise one. I mean by permanent, such permanency as you attribute to Constitutional amendment.

We all feel that civilization had gained ground when vodka was abolished in Russia, now given the right to drink intoxicating liquors, and the right must apply as much to absinthe and to vodka as to any other form. If the State has the right to forbid a man to drink absinthe, it has the logical right to forbid him to drink anything else of that nature; it has a right to protect itself.

"The war has had an enormous influence in the great growth of the desire for prohibition; there are, I think three elements in this: first, the sentimental feeling that what the boys who are fighting have had to give up for us, we ought to give up on our part; second, the growing consciousness of the absolute necessity for not spending any money on unnecessary luxuries; and third, to some extent the still insufficient knowledge that the food staples have got to be economized. And it is my impression that a considerable amount of edible grain goes into the making of alcoholic drinks.

"The sentiment for prohibition is today so strong, it is such a vital question in the consciousness of the country that any public man who wants to be sure of popular confidence has to declare himself as either on one side of the question or on the other; he can't evade the issue today. In war times people have the right to exact from their public men the courage of leadership; if a public man today believes that the prohibition amendment is vicious and dangerous he ought to come out and say so; he must take his stand openly.

" I haven't made an exhaustive study of the results of the prohibition in the States where it has been tried, but what I have heard and seen has all led me to believe that the result is always beneficial. In Maine, where I make my summer home, I see the most astonishing improvement, and yet prohibition, probably has not been rigidly enforced in Maine. And Bob McKenty will tell you after Billy Sunday went through Luzerne and Lackawanna Counties, he made such an impression that it was decided to enforce the closing laws; since then, Bob says, those two counties, which furnished a tremendous percentage of the inmates of the Eastern Penitentiary have become almost negligible in his reports; the miners did not have any place to spend their money for booze on holidays, and they got into the habit of saving it; and the results are seen in the most astonishing dropping off in number of people sent from there to the penitentiary.

"Those are all reasons why I, personally, am now earnestly for the ratification of the Prohibition Amendment."

IT WOULD MEAN THE DEATH OF THE CHURCH

"It was the gifted Victorinus," says the "Lutheran," of Philadelphia, "who said to Simplician, 'I, too, expect to be a Christian.' He received the reply: 'I will not believe it until I see you at Church.' To this the noted orator retorted: 'Do Church walls make the Christian? Simplician was not to be vanquished and proudly answered: 'Not exactly; but our Lord said, He that denieth Me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is in Heaven.' That answer goes to the root of the matter. It brings out an element in church-going that is of great importance and that is little thought of by many Christians in our day—church-going as witness-bearing for Christ. To attend the services of God's house is to confess Christ before men. They who go to Church give notice to the world that they mean to be reckoned among those who have Christ for their Lord and Master. The Church member who is conspicuous by his absence from God's house is virtually denying Christ. He sets an example which would mean the death of the Church were all others to follow it, he practically teaches that worship and preaching of the Word are of little importance; and he does more to create and encourage disloyalty to the Church than if he were an unbeliever. While professedly in favor of the Church and religion, he casts the weight of his influence against it. And yet how many there are who do this very thing without once thinking of the denial of Christ their conduct implies."

A BOLD UTTERANCE OF SACRED ART.

That gifted mystic and poet, William Blake, in his book on Jerusalem, has a plate of the crucifixion. The atmosphere is sombre, save for one thin ray of sunshine that reveals Christ on the cross, and at the foot of the cross, not the fainting mother, not the beloved disciple, not the centurion or Joseph of Arimathea, but a solitary human figure of indistinguishable type, with outstretched arms, gazing upwards to the Christ. It is the very daring of genius, which in the moment of His supreme weakness sets the world with its wistful, passionate gesture of appeal in the presence of the Sufferer. And yet, perhaps, it is neither genius nor daring which accomplished so bold an utterance of sacred art, but simplest understanding of our Lord's own mind. We also can show how brave and loyal and victorious Christian souls can still be, and if we thus range ourselves on the Lord's side and claim, with proud humility, that He still draws all men unto Him and does not disappoint them when they come.—A. Connell.

A DOME HARMONIZES ALL DISCORDS

A beautiful incident is told by a traveler of his visit to the Cathedral of Pisa. He stood beneath its wonderful dome, spacious and symmetrical, and gazed with awe upon its beauties. Suddenly the air became instinct with melody. The great dome seemed full of harmony. The waves of the music vibrated to and fro, loudly beating against the walls, swelling into full accord like the roll of a great organ, and then dying away into soft, long drawn, far-reaching echoes, melting in silence in the distance. It was only the guide, who lingering behind a moment, had softly murmured a triple chord. But beneath that magic dome every sound resolves into harmony. No discord can reach the summit of that dome and live, every voice in the building, the slamming of seats, the tramping of feet, the murmur and bustle of the crowd are caught up, softened, harmonized, blended and echoed back in music.

If a dome, the work of man's hands, can thus harmonize all discords, can we doubt that under the great dome of heaven, God can make "all things work together for good to them that love him?" Every affliction, loss, grief or sorrow which God sends, every joy and happiness will be blended into harmony within the over arching dome of his grace, and be as the music of heaven.—Christian Observer.

HIS MISSIONARY WORK NOT ENDED

Roger Wolcott, who, for four years was a missionary teacher in the Soochow Academy, a preparatory school of St. John's University, Shanghai, China, resigned from the mission on July first and entered the service of the Chinese Government as an assistant District Inspector in the Salt Revenue Service. His knowledge of the Chinese people and language fits him for this important work which is under the direction of Sir Richard Dane, an Englishman of the best colonial administrator type. Roger was led to take this step chiefly by a desire to acquire official standing to enable him to approach and to meet on their own level the Chinese of the official and gentry classes, whose traditions and prejudices make them impervious to the ordinary missionary appeal. "Do not think that my missionary work is ended," he writes, "it is only just beginning." As a Chinese magistrate or Mandarin, he can now meet the upper class Chinese on their own ground. His post of duty at present is in the province of Chihli not far from Tientsin. Mrs. Wolcott and little Roger, a fine young Chinaman a little more than a year old, are spending the summer in this country and return to the flower-land in October.—Trinity Church, Highland Park (Ill.) Bulletin.

MEN DO NOT BELIEVE THESE THINGS

A man's whole life is busy laying up bankruptcy. His refusal to study when he was a boy; his laziness; his liking companions that were coarse and immoral; his slow and tardy application to business; his contempt of old-fashioned morality; his thinking "They were stupid and slow, but I am smart, and know how to do a thing or two;" his trickery in violating the laws and economics of the globe, of the social system, of commercial business—these little by little. though he seems to prosper, he is laying up; and by and by, when there is a panic, or a squeeze, and some sparks fall, they will blow him sky high—or the other way! He has been treasuring them up; and the explosion comes in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. Men are going on doing this in every direction, in their own nature, in that vast magazine of laws in what we are laying up effects upon effects, on every side. Oh, that there might be a balancing of the books at least once a year in the external and internal economy of the soul! But no, the angels of record do not speak; and men would not hear them if they did; for men do not believe these things.—H .W. Beecher.

SELLING TOBACCO AT THE FRONT

No man condemns cigarette smoking by growing boys more than the Y. M. C. A. and yet it finds itself among the largest distributors of tobacco in the world. The Government in committing the canteen business to the Association required it to handle tobacco as one of the conditions regarded as army ration and not generally injurious for hard trained, out of door living men. The idea of the canteen is to supply the men's needs and keep them from the cafes and the towns. On the question of smoking good men differ. We have no plea for tobacco, nor would we think of saying that a man could not be a Christian and smoke. We are in the business in France, however inconsistent it may be, of necessity. We don't like it. Our secretaries in France who serve the canteens, of whom a very considerable number are clergymen, tell us it puts them in so close touch with the men that it is most worth while. Big business men, leaders in the church of highest character, have taken their turn behind the counter as a Christian privilege and say it is worth going to France for. We say that if these men who have left their homes, serve under shell fire, go up to the very front trenches and along with other ministries provide men and boys tobacco and cigarettes, think it is worth the risk, and even to die for it, then we who are living safe and snug at home have no business to criticise them. If they are so convinced that they are there doing their Chritsian duty, that they will die for it, surely we have nothing to say.—Association Men.

LEARNING HOW TO LIVE.

The war is staging many horrors and atrocities but it is not without its advantages, too. For one thing, it is eaching the country that happiness does not consist in having a whole lot. From many pulpits has always thundered the philosophy of happiness based upon poverty, humility, obedience and sacrifice. The Divine vision of Christ presented this view of life to the world for the first time on the mountain side. People and nations had grown indifferent to His teachings and many in a lustful greed for money and power had learned to ridicule them. But the war suddenly jerks the minds and hearts of people back to a Christian standard. We have begun to realize that an efficient national life must be built upon sacrifice, obedience and a deep regard for the higher values of daily existence. We have been taught that money is good for the things that it can buy and not an especially valuable thing in itself. We are also being taught to buy only the things that we need and we are taught to need only those things that are absolutely necessary. And when all is said and done, we are much happier than we were before. Of course casualty lists continue to come in to us; the lonliness caused by the absence of our departed boys, can be healed only by their return. We are carrying a heavy cross of sorrow but even in this we have been taught how to live and be happy. Perhaps it is because the war has aroused in our minds an appréciation for principles and has taught us how to measure the sordid things of life by their eternal values.—Monthly Calendar

THE AMERICAN GIRL

Some one has said that when God made the American girl "He sent his angel messengers throughout all the star-strewn realms of space to gather all there was of beauty and brightness, of enchantment, of glamour. When these angels returned from their harvesting of beauty and threw down their glittering burden at his feet, he began in their wondering presence the fashioning of the American girl. He wrought with the gold and the gleam of the stars, shifting glories of the rainbow hues, and the pallid silver of the moon. He wrought with the crimson which swooned in the roses rubied heart with the pure, sweet snow which gleams from the lily's petals, and the fires and the flames which flash and leap from jewels' depth. Then glanc-in deep into his own bosom, he took of the love which gleamed there like some rare pearl beneath the wind-kissed waves of a summer sea, thrilled into the form he was fashioning, and all heaven and earth rejoiced, for, lo! he had wrought the American girl."

THE EXCLUSIVE AND THE EXCLUDED

It is the sole remaining boast of many an old downtown church that "once it was in the heart of the exclusive section of the city; now the neighborhood is dead." By which is meant that the exclusive have moved far hence because the excluded have "swarmed in." What has actually happened is that what was once a tame, stupid, artificial garden has suddenly become a riot of wild-flowers from the four corners of the earth. And the proprietors and the gardeners instead of glorying in the possibilities of the flower lands of Holy and Palestine, and of a dozen others, sell out and move and grow the same stiff and even stiffer "American Beauties," with the same fat round heads and the same or longer and stiffer necks. Think of a Christian parish having a missionary field deposited at its front door, and selling out and moving to get away from it! Which would appeal more strongly to the mind of Christ—the boast. "The old church was once in the heart of the exclusive section of the city," or the resolve, "Let us make the old church the heart of the excluded section of the City?" "Let the dead bury their dead. Come thou and follow Me."—From the City Missionary, Journal of the Philadelphia City Mission.

LORD KELVIN ON RELIGION AND SCIENCE

Lord Kelvin is one of the foremost scientists in the world. He has spent a lifetime delving into the mysteries of electricity, heat, magnetism, tidal action—in short, into almost all the problems of physics—and when he speaks the whole scientific world listens. His recent declarations of his views as to science and religion, first in an address at University College, London, and then in a letter to the London Times, are therefore of the greatest interest.

"Is there anything so absurd," he asks, "as to believe that a number of atoms by falling together of their own accord, can make a sprig of moss, a microbe, a living animal?" To explain these things, he says, or to explain any case of "the coming into existence or growth, or the continuation of the molecular combination presented in the bodies of living things," by such a phrase as "the fortuitous concourse of atoms" is "utterly absurd." "Here," he says, "scientific thought is compelled to accept the idea of creative power." And again: "Every action of human free will is a miracle to physical and chemical and mathmatical science."

He tells an anecdote of a walk in the country with Liebig forty years ago, in which he asked the savant whether he believed that the grass and flowers around them grew by mere chemical forces. Liebig's answer was: "No, no more than I believe that a book of botany describing them could grow by mere chemical forces."

The Red Cross is going into the dairy business in France. With 5,000 set aside for the purpose and with 1,000 cows loaned by the French government, a model dairy plant will be established at the largest American army hospital in France. The dairy will be operated by convalescent soldiers. Fresh milk daily for 20,000 injured fighting men is expected. Similar dairies at all of the French base hospitals are contemplated.

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING

An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.

The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.

Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.

28½tf

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL
OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. No. 95. CHICAGO, ILL., AND HOBART, IND., OCTOBER 26, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

A MESSAGE FROM BISHOP PERRY

Letters of General and Unusual Intesest Written to The Record and Friends

The October number of the official organ of the Diocese of Rhode Island comments as follows on Bishop Perry's absence, and publishes a number of his letters, extracts from which we print below:

Everywhere one goes in the Diocese he hears expressions of affection for Bishop Perry, and is conscious of the deep interest that is felt in his work in France as Head Red Cross Chaplain there. From clerks in stores, from station masters, from policemen, from telephone girls, from people on the street as well as from those in churches comes the question, "What is the latest news from the Bishop?"

The September number of the Record was thought by many to be the best ever issued, largely because of "The Bishop's First Message" and his portrait printed in it. There was such a demand for it that the edition was soon exhausted, and several hundred extra copies could have been disposed of. Every one is eager to hear every word the Bishop has to say and to know everything that he does over there, and in every household as well as in every church and mission station prayers are being offered for his guidance and protection.

One or two parishes before he left sent him officially letters of appreciation that deeply touched him, and there is not a parish, not a mission station in the Diocese that is not ready to do the same thing. If every one who knows him should write him what was felt, the Bishop might be almost overwhelmed with letters, and he could hardly do anything else than read them. His going to the front is without doubt welcomed by those there, and, moreover, has not only brought forward in those at home the love of his people for him, but also has helped largely to give them in some measure his devotion and patriotism, and has made more prominent in them the spirit that is in him.

In this condition of mind and heart "The Bishop's Second Message" will have the closest attention:

The Bishop's Message.

Lorraine, Sept. 9, 1918.

To the Readers of The Diocesan Record:

My Dear Friends—I am writing on a hillside far forward in the American sector. My home for nearly twenty-four hours is the Mobile Hospital of the Yale unit; my guest room one corner in an empty ward of eighty beds. Were it not for the military aspect of the camp, the trenches dug before the barracks for an abri, the ambulance evacuating the wounded from the wards, the outlook would present a picture of rural tranquillity. The villages in the valley below seem to be sleeping in unbroken peace. The farms are cultivated as if no hostile forces were near. Yet the hills and forest on all sides hide vast armies that at any moment might transform the scene to one of the great battles of the war. A little beyond the hill to the north are the German lines. Yesterday afternoon, on my way from an evacuation near by, I came over a portion of the road —"Dead Man's Curve," they call it— not far from the German lines and within full view of them. Among such scenes and in the presence of such uncertainties are the mobile and evacuation units at work. In the past week I have visited ten of these, besides as many more base hospitals further back of the lines. The former sort are models of compactness, neatness and adaptability. The mobiles can pack and move to another section in a few hours, like an Arab encampment. They number from two hundred to five hundred beds each; the evacuation hospitals from a thousand to three housand. Eight of the ten that I have visited have Chaplains of our Church. At this one, the Rev. Roger Anderson, O. H. C., has served since April, and though in khaki and engaged in military and practical duties of many kinds, is still unmistakably in name and in fact Father Anderson. The same degree of leadership is exercised by the Rev. Craig Stewart and the Rev. Leslie Kelley at their combined camps at another evacuation, by the Rev. John Lewis of Waterbury at his mobile hospital on the other side of the St. Mihiel Hill salient, and by the Rev. Sherrard Billings of Groton in Evacuation No. 1. They are all "Fathers" of their camps. Chaplain William Wood has just moved into a little mobile hospital on a hill facing Verdun, and the Rev. Samuel Booth and Dean Hicks have in the past week taken duty at two large Evacuations further to the east. The Church may be proud to have such men at these posts, and the army may well be grateful to them.

Spiritual Contact of Chaplains Close and Real.

The spiritual contact of the Chaplain with his flock at one of these units is very close and very real. When the wards are filled, his presence is in constant demand at every bedside. Often he has ten burials in one day. In quiet weeks the unit constitutes a parish of two hundred or three hundred persons, with all of whom he comes in daily contact. It is a united and sympathetic congregation which fills the chapel tent on Sunday. Last night I addressed nearly two hundred officers, nurses and orderlies, assembled like members of one family, singing their hymns without accompaniment, following the service in the dim light that helps to protect the camp from air raids. At reveille this morning I celebrated Holy Communion for a group of ten who arose before the sun to consecrate themselves to the tasks of the day. In the congregation was the head nurse, whom I had presented for confirmation twelve years ago when she was a young girl in my parish, and had been sent later to her hospital for training course. There was also a stalwart orderly whose name is well known in St. Stephen's Church, Providence, and in Middletown, Conn.

At the base hospital in which cities are all grouped about small villages I have spent small time as yet. Visits have been planned to the Rev. J. P. Conover at Brest, the Rev. A. L. Washburn and the Rev. Everett Smith at their hospitals. My first confirmation candidate in France was one of a "class" of nine in the ward of a Paris hospital. After the laying on of hands I turned back to the lad and asked him where he lived. "Providence, R. I.," was the answer.

Last week I saw our boys of the Field Artillery. For two weeks I had been searching for them on my journeys, and at two places had just missed them by a few hours. Riding to an evacuation hospital not far from the front with Chaplain Moody of the Headquarters Staff, I found them deep in camouflage on the border of a forest. There was no opportunity for a service, not even a general meeting. But for a good hour I was with them, visiting their headquarters, talking to one battery as they assembled for mess, to others in small groups. There were Parsons, Toll, the Langdons and boys from nearly every parish in the Diocese. Some had left the regiment for other assignments, and a few like Captain Davis and young McAllister, had fallen in the fight. General Edwards, with whom I dined two weeks ago, had words of highest praise for our Rhode Island batteries, and how well they looked!—keen, strong and clean; men to be proud of. They have had hard work to do and will have more, but never were men better prepared for the chances of war, nor for the changes and chances of life.

James DeWolf Perry, Jr.

From Private Letters.

Paris, August 21st.

I came back from G. H. with a young lieutenant of a machine gun outfit after six months of unrelieved work, fighting much of the time in the trenches; the only one of eighteen officers in his outfit who had not been killed.—The worn, tried look in their faces goes to one's heart, but those, who, like that young chap, are men all the way through, as are all the French officers that one meets, noble, humble and fine; and our boys along the country road sides and in the little villages are splendid in their

(Continued on page 7.)

CONSECRATION OF BISHOP COADJUTOR ELECT.

The Presiding Bishop has taken order for the Ordination and Consecration of the Rev. Clinton Simon Quinn, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor-elect of the Diocese of Texas, as follows:

Time: Thursday, October 24, 1918.

Place: Christ Church, Houston, Texas.

Consecrators: The Presiding Bishop; the Rt. Rev. Dr. Kinsolving, Bishop of Texas; the Rt. Rev. Dr. Capers, Bishop of West Texas.

Presenters: The Rt. Rev. Dr. Temple, Bishop of North Texas; the Rt. Rev. Dr. Moore, Bishop Coadjutor of Dallas.

Preacher: The Rt. Rev. Dr. Woodcock, Bishop of Kentucky.

Attending Presbyters: The Rev. Charles Clingman, the Rev. B. Duval Chambers.

Daniel S. Tuttle, Presiding Bishop.

INAUGURATION OF NEW DEAN AT BERKELEY.

The inauguration of the Rev. William Palmer Ladd, A.M., B.D., to the office of Dean of Berkeley Divinity School, Middeltown, Conn., will take place on the day of SS. Simon and Jude, October 28th, at 3:30 p. m. The Rt. Rev. C. B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop of Connecticut, will preside Supper will be served in the Deanery at 6:15 o'clock. In the evening at Holy Trinity Church, Dr. Karl Reiland and other speakers will give addresses on the general topic, "The Church and the International Situation." The Rt. Rev. E. C. Acheson, D.D., Suffragan Bishop of Connecticut, will preside.

The inauguration will be preceded by a mass meeting at the Middlesex Theatre on Sunday evening, the 27th inst., when addresses will be given by Bishop Gore, of Oxford, Eng., and others. Following the inauguration there will be a series of faculty conferences and other meetings. On Tuesday, the 29th inst.: Conference on "War-time Opportunities for the Church," led by the Bishop of Oxford and other speakers. Alumni luncheon and open meeting of Joint Committee of the Trustees and Alumni. Lecture by Dr. Dickinson S. Miller on "Psychology Applied to Parish Work." Conference on ways of making seminaries more directly serviceable to the parishes. Lecture by Dr. Duncan McDonald on "The Part Played by Mohammedanism in the War." Wednesday, the 30th inst.: Conference on "Social Reconstruction After the War." Open meeting of the Connecticut Social Service Commission, the Bishop of Connecticut presiding. Meeting of the American Ecclesiological Society, Dr. Milo Gates presiding. Lecture by Mr. Ralph Cram on "Art in the Service of Religion." Thursday, the 31st inst.: Conference on "Conduct of Services." Dr. Percy Dearmer and other speakers.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

The Allies Share in the Same Purpose.

"France and Belgium are examples of the dedication of whole nations, materially and spiritually, to one great purpose, with a determination to die rather than to lose," says ex-Governor Myron T. Herrick of Ohio. "That purpose is the defence of the principles on which her government and all true government is founded —the principles promulgated in the Sermon on the Mount two thousand years ago. France decided in the beginning that it was better to sacrifice everything, better that French people should all die, than submit again as in 1871, for that would be the extinction of her national life and the destruction of the soul of France. In that purpose and that determination the Allies all share. They are in the war to preserve inviolate their homes, their men and women from slavery. They are in the war to preserve liberty, to keep the spirit of freedom alive in the world. In that faith the men of the Allies are fighting; in that faith they shall in the consciousness of a cause that is just, conquer. Like Sir Galahad, their 'Strength is as the strength of ten, Because their hearts are pure.'"

Power is Nonsense, Pomp is Prattle.

"God forbid that our newspapers stuff us Americans with pride, as being the nation that saved humanity," said the Rev. H. L. Bowen of St. Paul's Church, Peoria, Ill., in an address at a banquet given at Grace Church, Galesburg, Ill., to college students. "Belgium saved humanity and we will see a great mistake enacted if when the treaty is made, Belgium does not have first seat at the table. Let us take our task humbly and not be proud. Sacrifice is essential. Power is nonsense. Pomp is prattle."

A Social War Prevented.

"If we had not had this war with Germany we would have had a social war in our own country," asserts the Rev. William Du Hamel, the vicar of St. Luke's Church, Reading, Pa. "Few realize how near we were to an industrial revolution. Not only the poverty of the masses of the working people, but even more the pride, arrogance, wastefulness and ostentation of the rich, and the plutocratic control of legislatures and courts that was stirring up discord and discontentment, would soon have brought upon us this catastrophe.

"Now the sky is clearing. It is what you are and are willing to give that counts today. The covetous, the selfish and the hoarders are relegated to the background. The real hero on whom we depend is not the man of brass and bluff, not the swaggerer or the bully, but the man who goes quietly into the fray at home or abroad, to do manfully and bravely his whole duty to God and for country.

"Don't boast about the war work you are doing, and don't try to advertise it. Just do it and do it faithfully. God knows every loving deed that glorifies your life. Genuine people, those whose regard is worth while, will sooner or later come to recognize your worth, and join you to their noble brotherhood. These shall inherit the best things of earth and enter into the glory of heaven."

Where Do Ministers Come From?

"When one stops to ask the question, 'Whence does the Church draw her ministry, and by what methods are ministers chosen?' one does not find answers ready to hand, says the Diocesan Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Bethlehem." To say that the ministry is recruited from the laity, while true, does not get us very far. The fact is, until quite recently no one ever heard of any plan whereby the idea of a call to the ministry was suggested to promising youths, and quietly followed up, until the conviction of a call came to the individual. Some of us, like the writer, forced their way in; neither Pastor, parents, nor Sunday-school teachers spoke of the ministry to us, and when after a long time it was falteringly suggested as a secretly cherished thought, it was rather frowned upon than hailed with satisfaction. But we have come upon different times today. The Church needs a constant supply of intelligent and godly Ministers; and she can have such a supply only if she take the necessary steps to secure it. By suggestion, by supervision, by encouragement, many a lad may be turned into the groove which will ultimately lead to his ordination. The decision must finally rest with him, of course, but sympathetic direction by Rectors and Sunday school teachers will be found most helpful influences in making a decision."

God and Country Show the Way.

Mr. George Gordon King, Treasurer of the General Board of Missions, in his October report to the clergy on the progress of the Apportionment says:

"Brothers and Sisters throughout the Church, but three months remain to complete our apportionments. Most parishes have not yet done so. There is still due the sum of $693,830.44. And this is but the minimum. Every dollar is needed and more too.

"Men today are seeing the Son of Man in a new light—witness the myriad host now bearing testimony to His Name. Their hearts throb with the promise that His Righteousness shall prevail upon Earth, and they are spending their blood on the fields in order to vanquish the forces of evil. And men now realize they are their brothers' keepers, and their tenderness is limited.

"May we too learn, maybe we have already done so, the lesson of forgetting self, and of substituting therefor, not obligation or duty, but prayer to Father and to Country for assignment of service. And God and Country show the way. All things we must do for our Country in these heavy days, and all things too for God and His children. Not a minimum in either case—but all things."

The Clergy Speak For God.

"In using the Invocation before the Sermon do we realize our claim that we are speaking in the name of the Blessed Trinity—speaking for God—?" asked Bishop Johnson of Southern California in addressing the clergy of his Diocese. "If so how careful we should be to prepare ourselves by Prayer and Study so that our people may value it as a message from Heaven."

The American People Are United.

"One thing struck me above all others in a recent trip through the West and Southwest" says Mr. Gerard in a letter to the New York Times, "the splendid unity of the American people, their determination to win the war, and the stand they take behind the great President who has led us with an efficiency to be envied by even the Great German General Staff.

As I traveled thousands of miles through states almost as large as the whole German Empire, States rich in all the resources needed for war, and, best of all, rich in fighters. I could not help thinking how poorly informed or helplessly feeble-minded was the German Emperor who so foolishly challenged to war the one hundred and ten millions of Amrica."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White.

SAINT SIMON AND SAINT JUDE, APOSTLES.

October 28.

The Collect.

O Almighty God, who hast built thy Church upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the head corner-stone; Grant us so to be joined together in unity of spirit by their doctrine, that we may be made an holy temple acceptable unto thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Amen.

"Built Thy Church upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets." Sometimes people talk as if the Church was a man built affair. This phrase is a call to us to adjust ourselves to the point of view that the Church builder is God. He decides on the fitness or unfitness of the stones of His temple. He will rightly place us in that temple which He is continuously building. Human judgment is not capable of making such decisions: it has to be reversed too many times. That is what Jesus meant when He said "the first shall be last and the last first." What God wants us to make sure of is giving Him material which can be edified by contact with the saints and with Jesus Christ. Of course God makes the Church out of people like you and me; sinful, weak, mortals, whom He straightens by His spirit, either directly or by contact—but most frequently by contact—contacts that are human and divine. Our lives must find at their foundation "Apostles and Prophets": that is to say God builds us into His Church by contacts with those of His people who by actions or words tie us up with the life of Jesus Christ. A foundation is not seen—by using this word, the Church teaches us to realize that what God builds on is that unseen thing we call "character," character formed by people who do the Acts of the Apostles, and think the thoughts of the prophets. And by putting St. Simon and St. Jude together, it may be that she suggests to us that "birds of a feather flock together," and that if we do not find holy people edifying, the trouble is most likely with our faulty living, though once in a while, it may be that the trouble rises from the poor or thin or false conception of holiness which the people have whose company does not help us or tend to draw out the best that is in us.

Measuring the Values of Life.

"Jesus Christ Himself being the head corner-stone." What makes the Church "worth-while" to each generation is the life of Jesus Christ tying the new members to the older saints and prophets. "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever" without Whom the Church of yesterday becomes a shell: the Church of today a chaos: the Church of tomorrow a fantastic dream—all of it unreal, unproductive, disappointing, deadly dull. Your business and mine as teachers and preachers of Jesus Christ is to see that He and His Cause are so vividly shown and proclaimed that all men everywhere may look unto Him and be saved. Our characters are to become edifying because they are touching His character: Our values of life are to be measured by the value we set on His life, whether we are talking with an Apostle or listening to a prophet.

"Grant us to be joined together in unity of spirit." If we seek to have the spirit of the Christ, we will develop points of contact, whereby we will find ourselves fitting in with one another as we speak of the doctrine of the Apostles and prophets. Our effort as Christians should be to discover the spirit in which a man seeks to express his values of life, because it is the spirit that profiteth. It is good to remember that it is a "gift" to be able to understand another man's point of view: therefore, it is shameful to ask God to give us the ability to understand the spirit of a fellowman, and then make no effort to render our understanding profitable for the whole body.

Other Spirits Besides the Holy Spirit.

"That we may be made a holy temple." God the Holy Ghost came that He might fill all things even, yes especially, temples. It is possible for us not to know what spirit we are of. There are other spirits besides the Holy Spirit. Therefore if the spirit which possesses us as we come together to talk of the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophets is a divisive spirit, a separatist spirit, a competitive spirit, how can the temple be a whole, be holy? "In unity of spirit, in the bond of peace, in righteousness of life" we Christians are to hold the faith. As we do this so shall we be acceptable unto God.

St. Simon and St. Jude are put together to remind us of the question "how can two walk together except they be agreed." The answer is that no two of us ever can walk together unless we strive to understand, each one of us, the spirit of the other. As we thus strive to understand others in a meek and holy spirit, God will see to it that we are joined together in a way acceptable unto Him, because He will show us that our common ground of understanding is the One Who said and proved it true that He is the Way as well as the Truth and the Life. May the spirit which held these two Apostles together in thought and word and deed be more and more evident in us as we walk together in the House of God, and strive to promote that unity of spirit which will make for righteousness of life in the community where we live.

The Epistle. St. Jude 1.

Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called: Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterwards destroyed them that believed not. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities.

"Sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." Let us remember that "sanctify" does not mean to be poured into a common mold which people have predetermined shall be known as saintliness. There can be as many kinds of saints as there are kinds of people. Let us remember that God's saints are not determined by their clothes, their attitudes nor platitudes. Making saints is a process of spiritual evolution; sainthood begins when the spirit of a man wakes up to the fact, as a fact, that God is his Father. Sacraments are the means through which the Holy Spirit is given a door of entrance into a man's thought-life. What one has to guard against is putting up a concrete dam of Gospel-hardening which will prevent the outflow of the Spirit. The more helpfully a man expresses himself as he comes into contact with his neighbor, the easier it is for God to make that man a saint. Here is where the Blessed Christ comes into a man's life, preserving that life, and keeping it from degenerating into a noxious center of morbid, self-centered religiosity: when we glimpse the Spirit of Him who sanctifies Himself "for their sakes," then we are saved, preserved, from taking ourselves too seriously, and thus hindering the spread of the Gospel. We are preserved to usefulness when we realize that our business in life is a vocation, a calling from God, to let Him do His healing, helpful, constructive, wholesome, sanctifying work through us.

The Common Salvation.

St. Jude found it was necessary to write about "the common salvation." Everyone needs salvation; everyone can have salvation: That is not "salvation" which emphasizes exclusion rather than inclusion. The common salvation ties Simon to Jude and makes them "earnest" in their struggle to keep and maintain that faith which will save men from becoming fanatics. Fanatics are people who go off at a tangent: for them the common salvation is a matter of the circumference rather than the centre. A spoke is no use to the circumference that does not hold fast to the centre. The common salvation includes all who will aim and struggle for adherence to "the faith as it is in Jesus," as the central fact of their lives.

The Christian who is not preserved in Jesus Christ, is the one who perverts the help or grace of Jesus into a something which is self-indulgence and which harms the common salvation instead of helping it. We all need this strong reminder from St. Jude: that the minute we loosen our hold on the faith which endures because it holds fast to Jesus Christ as the centre of the common salvation that very moment we will find ourselves losing the power to distinguish right from wrong: the spirit of good from the spirit of evil: our sense of values will become so confused that we will neglect the warning God has had kept for us in the history of the past, when those who held not to the revelation, which they had, became a menace to their people rather than a help to them; no matter whether they were slaves with no privileges, or angels with great privileges, or whole communities who felt that to minister to self no matter through what base agencies was their own concern and no one else's business.

Religious people are warned against the spiritual self-indulgence which isolates, divides, degenerates, debases a crowd: rather should they make it their bounden duty to adhere to, yes even to the point of fighting for, that spiritual allegiance to an ideal which gives adherence to the common life, unifies, purifies, uplifts it, and makes it a wolesome thing to live or die for.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ Is a Social Gospel.

In tying together St. Simon and St. Jude for our admiration and imitation, our Mother the Church makes it evident that in Church work it is not good to "go it alone." The Gospel of Jesus Christ is a Social Gospel: but the Gospel of society is only a good Gospel when men unite about the reason for and the author of that Gospel, and refuse steadfastly to replace the facts of the creed with the fancies of men's dreams, as possible cures for the sorrows, trials and sicknesses of the common people.

The call of this day is to visions and not dreams. Dreams are the occupations of minds when bodies are asleep; they are generally concerned with self-activities and self-indulgence. Visions are the occupations of those who more or less consciously see the Christ in their vocations, and so make it their business to translate what they see into acts for the common good, which is the common salvation.

Is not this Epistle with its warnings one of those letters it would do us good to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest in connection with the thought that God has called us to be His witnesses for the common salvation in our day and generation?

The Gospel. St. John xv. 17.

These things I command you, that ye love one another. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I said unto you, the servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep your's also. But all these things will they do unto you for my mane's sake, because they know not him that sent me. If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sin. He that hateth me hateth my Father also. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now they have both seen and hated both me and my Father. But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law. They hated me without a cause. But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedth from the Father, he shall testify of me: and ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning.

"These things I command you that ye love one another." The command that men readily obey is one where obedience is provoked by love. Soldiers who have a beloved Captain always manifest the best results of necessary discipline because the beloved captain only commands that which promotes the common good, the common salvation. True love is neither unreasoning nor unreasonable. There is a profound experience with the human heart evidenced in Jesus' words: "Woe unto you where all men speak well of you." The world's love is a self-centred love: the love that provokes the world's hatred is the self-sacrificing love, which puts the self-centred love on the defensive.

Why Did He Call Us Out of the World?

Jesus, the Christ, chooses men out of the world. He says, "Follow Me," and then He says, "Go into all the world," out of which world, a Godless, because a thoughtless world, I have called you. Why did He call us out of the world? So that we could serve that world for that world's good. Missions, so called, is not a popular subject because it puts unthinking people on the defensive, and people do not like to be put on the defensive. It carries with it an implication that is irritating. Persecution comes easy to the hand of one who has no good reason for his actions. The thoughtless person is apt to be of the tribe of persecutors because he neither reasons, nor loves in a reasonable way. "I did not think" explains more misery and shame than any other single phrase you can mention, except it be "Because I wanted to:" both which terms are the evidence of the service of self rather than the service of others as a life motive.

Those Who Have Vision Stay Faithful Unto Death.

"If I had not come and spoken unto them." "If I had not done among them the works"—"they had not had sin." The words and works of a Christian are erpected to stimulate the unthinking and stir up the self-satisfied, so that they will realize what sinners against their own souls they are. St. Simon and St. Jude are typical of those quiet, unobstrusive souls whom God can find in every congregation, whose words and deeds are stimulating to the faithful, but irritating to the faithless. It is the faithless men and women in a congregation whose lives and words react on the Cause of Christ exactly as if they were inspired by hatred. Faithlessness is the result of running around in a circle, instead of running out from a centre. Faithlessness results from looking on life as a treadmill, rather than an adventure for Christ in word and deed. Dreamers can become faithless. Those who have vision stay faithful unto death. The dreamers talk about their dreams. The men and women of vision tie their deeds up to what they see—"they hitch their wagon to a star." The dreamer comes to the Altar to satisfy himself. The person of vision comes to the Altar for strength to bear witness to what he has seen. The contest between these two classes of people begun ages ago led the cynical emperor to say "behold how these Christians love one another!" Yet to love one another is the command of Him who came to show men the Father who sanctifies His children. What heart searchings for each one of us lies in this day's Gospel! Are we, by any chance, enemies of the Cross of Christ? Causing the Christ to be hated by our unthinking words, our thoughtless acts?

"The Spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father shall testify of Me" saith Jesus. St. Jude writes "to them that are sanctified by God the Father." If we seek daily to be true in thought and word and deed, we have the authority of God and the witness of men that it will be impossible to be hated by any but those who are willing to bear like witness with ourselves to Him who hath proven Himself to be the most beloved of all Captains, and also the most hated of all the sons of God. Let us be sure then that we obey the commands of this beloved Captain: so shall we bear a witness that shall not be erratic, but straight and true because it starts from an ever growing knowledge and thoughtful appreciation of "Him Whose we are, and Whom we serve."

The bells have tongues
But cannot talk;
Could they their tale unfold,
I'm sure that they
Would soften it
By saying: "So we're tolled!"
—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

GOING TO THE RIGHT SOURCE.

The following is the first message of a series of eighteen cards distributed during the eighteen afternoon open air services held at Pittsburgh, Pa., June to September, the sixth successive year of the Movement. The Lord's Prayer is printed on the reverse side of each card.

If my automobile breaks down, and it is necessary to have it towed in, do I take it to a College professor? If I have a son and am anxious for him to be instructed in Latin, do I send him to a man who is simply an expert mechanic? I am after something definite in both cases. I want my automobile made right. I seek the treasure of special knowledge for my son. So in these two instances, I go to the man who knows, and who is able to put his knowledge into practice for my benefit. Now turn the other side of this card. A Prayer is there. It is THE Prayer given to us by our Lord, Saviour and perfect man. He is really appealing to us to show wisdom, and take our imperfect lives to the right source—to the Father. If we go earnestly, and often, we are bound to come nearer to what we know we ought to be, and also to what we can be. God through Jesus Christ, is more than willing to put us right and keep us so. All that is necessary is our willingness, ever kept alive by our determination. No day, however busy we may be, should be allowed to pass by without thoughtfully and prayerfully voicing the petitions of the Lord's Prayer.

IF I ONLY HAD MORE MONEY

Many a man has the fixed idea that to have more money would mean he could represent a much better life. It is true he could then have more pleasure. He could taste luxury once in a while. And also he could be spared the repeated inconvenience of trying to make both ends meet. But, let us look at the facts of life squarely in the face. What do we find? Pleasure, luxury and freedom from struggle are not the furnaces that turn out real men. It is very doubtful, if we fail to be genuine men with little means, that we are going to manifest any better manhood when a raise in salary or an increased income takes place. Why not be fully awake to "making good" with our manhood today? Then, and only then, are we really equipped for being strong men tomorrow. A man who keeps his eyes, his ears and his heart open can never stand still. He must march on in spite of every obstacle. He sees God, through Jesus Christ. Still more, he hears His voice. And even again, he invites Him to occupy the throne of his activities. Whether poor or rich financially, it makes no difference. The consciousness of the eality of God's presence in the world will eventually make man realize the full stature of his manhood.—Open Air Service Committee, Pittsburgh, Pa.

As a rule people can find time for anything they want to. Thousands and hundreds of people who cannot find time to perform their religious duties can find time and plenty of it, for everything else. Time for feasting and flirting, and dancing, and novel reading, and dressing, and play going, and fiddling, and fishing, and holidaying, and smoking, and party giving, and a hundred other harmless and unnecessary things. If you can't find time for religion, make time.—Church Messenger.

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING

An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.

The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.

Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.

28½tf

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

FIFTH PAPER

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

Proposed Change No. 8. Amend the second rubric on page 5, by omitting the words "both here and wheresoever else it is used in Divine Service."

The purpose of this change is to simplify the rubric and to remove the conflict that now appears to exist between the rubric governing the saying of the Lord's Prayer in the Choir Offices with the rubric in the Confirmation Office and the Lord's Prayer as said at the beginning of the Holy Communion Office.

Proposed Change No. 9. In the second rubric on page 6, omit all after the word "appointed," and insert in place thereof: "but Note, That on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday the Venite may be omitted." The purpose of this alteration is to permit the ommission of the Venite on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday. There is much more to this proposal than really appears on the surface. A similar proposition was made in the General Conventions of 1883 and 1886, and was defeated both times. There are three points for discussion suggested by Proposed Change No. 9.

1. Is the rubric as proposed by the Commission sufficiently broad enough in its scope? Why not add Holy Week?

2. If it is felt by the Commission that the Venite is not suitable for Ash Wednesday and Good Friday (and possibly others may feel that the Venite is not suitable for Advent, or Lent, for example), why not substitute an alternative canticle instead of providing by rubric for the ommission of the Venite? The De Profundis might well be used because it has the sanction of the usage of the Church for many centuries as obligatory in the Choir Offices during Lent. It is to be noted that the providing of an alternative canticle for the Venite would not be an innovation because already the Prayer Book makes provision for an alternative canticle in the place of Venite on Easter Day, Thanksgiving Day and when Morning Prayer is said upon the occasion of the Visitation of Prisoners.

3. While the Venite is under discussion why not omit the portion added from Psalm 96 and append the verses omitted from the English Book and restore the Venite complete. To do this would be to approve the proposal made in 1886. If the General Convention cannot agree regarding the proposal to omit the Venite on Good Friday and Ash Wednesday possibly the purpose of the Commission may be met by substituting the word "may" for "shall" in the present rubric which would permit the omission of the Venite at the discretion of the Minister.

Proposed Change No. 10. Amend the first sentence of the third rubric on page 6 so as to read as follows:

Then shall follow a portion of the Psalms, according to the Use of this Church.

Why this change is proposed is not easy to see. No doubt the Commission had some good reason in mind. The wording of the present rubric is sufficiently plain. However, there can be no objection to the change if it comes with the approval of the Commission.

WHEN THE BISHOP COMES.

When the Bishop visits a parish it brings to mind some considerations which at other times are apt to be forgotten. What is involved and implied in the visitation of the Bishop?

First, Confirmation. To the general public the most obvious fact in connection with the coming of the Bishop is the administration of the rite of Confirmation. Confirmation is, first of all, the public ratification, by persons brought up in the Church, of the vows and promises made for them by their sponsors in Baptism. It is taking upon themselves, before the people, the responsibility for their own spiritual lives. It is the public acknowledgement of Jesus Christ as Master and Saviour. In the case of persons brought up in other communions it means this, and it means also their admission into the communion and fellowship of this Church.

This Is the Original Way.

If it be asked why we adopt this method, the first answer is we didn't adopt it, we have simply continued it. This is the original way. This is the Scriptural method. This is what the Apostles did. When the Apostles in Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God they sent unto them Peter and John who laid their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost. Why do we continue that method? The answer is, why not? In other words, the burden of proof is on those who have forsaken the Biblical method and substituted something else. It is those who change who must give reasons for the change. The question is not up to us. It is not we who are on the defensive. Why do we continue the old way? The answer is, why not?

Second, Inspection of Outposts. The subject of Confirmation leads to a second consideration involved in the coming of the Bishop. It is the Inspection of Outposts by the Commander-in-Chief. The word Bishop means "Overseer." It is an ecclesiastical word, and its counterpart in the military profession is "Inspector-General." The Bishop's visitations therefore are a tour of inspection by the Inspector-General.

We Belong to a Church, Not to a Parish.

We are accustomed to hear the word "Church" applied to a local congregation. We use it loosely ourselves in the same way. But with us, speaking accurately, the Church is our entire Communion. The local organization is simply a parish, an outpost, a garrison. A garrison in an outpost does not think of itself as the army. A ship is not the navy. A local post office is not the Post Office Department. The visit of the Bishop reminds us that we belong to a Church, not to a parish; that we are part of the army, not simply a garrison; that we are enlisted in the navy, not in a ship. The Bishop is the outward and visible sign that we belong to a great historic, age-long, world-wide institution which has outposts everywhere, and that we have all its resources back of us and its power within us. Confirmation is not administered by the rector of the parish, who represents only the local congregation. It is administered by the Bishop who represents the entire Church. We are admitted, therefore, into the communion not of the local congregation or parish. The Bishop's act acomplishes something far wider than that. We are taken into the communion and fellowship of the entire Church throughout the world, including every parish, mission, outpost or garrison under the Church's jurisdiction. That is why we are Churchmen, not congregationalists. That is why it is that our imagination is stirred and our enthusiasm is kindled by the world-wide institution more than by the local organization. For while we are registered in, and attached to, a given parish, our citizenship is in the all-including Church.—(Edward Sullivan in The Church Militant.)

SOURCE OF A COMFORTING THOUGHT.

The Rev. H. C. Whedon of Rochester, N. Y., under date of October 15th, writes:

I was much interested in reading in The Witness just at hand the reference to Archdeacon Waddell and the story of the candle put out by a mourner's tears. Would it seem to you presumptuous if I say that my first acquaintance with that beautiful and truly comforting thought was in Holmes' "Immorality" (Oxford Library of Practical Theology). On page 151, in a chapter on "The Sin of Sadness," he writes:

"Is it not possible that our sadness is affecting their (the dead) happiness? . . . The thought is suggested very simply in a poem by William Barnes, the Dorsetshire poet, writing of a little child,—one of those little ones born to die, . . . A mother dreams that she sees her own dead child, joining in a procession of happy children in the 'Children's Kingdom.' Each child carries a lighted lamp, in honor of the Children's King. One lamp alone is dim, one child's joy alone is damped. It is that of her child. And why? The poem provides the answer:

I'd a dream tonight
As I fell asleep;
Oh, the touching sight
Makes me still to weep,
Of my little lad
Gone to make me sad.
Ah, the child I had
But was not to keep.

As in heaven high
I my child did seek,
There in train came by Children fair and meek
With a lamp alight,
Each in lily white,
Each was clear to sight,
But they did not speak.

Then a little sad,
Came my child in turn,
But the lamp he had,
Oh, it did not burn.
He to clear my doubt
Said, half turned about:
'Your tears put it out,
Mother, never mourn."

Canon Holmes adds, "It is at least a parable of the possible." He also refers to Hiawatha, viz., "We are ghosts of the departed, Souls of those who once were with you, etc."

I write this solely as a matter of interest, possibly to you and to the rest of the readers of The Witness, and while the subject is fresh in your columns.

A SOUTH DAKOTA INDIAN SCHOOL.

The Spirit of the School Is Beautiful and the Children are Happy.

We are indebted to Deaconess Baker for the following letter, written to the Diocese of Rhode Island by Florence L. Everett, formerly of Rhode Island, who recently entered upon her duties as a teacher in St. Elizabeth's School at Wapala, S. D.:

When I reached the end of my long railroad journey on the morning of Septemer fifth, I saw a small station, a few low houses, one or two stores and perhaps a dozen people,—that is about all.

At the train I was met by Deaconess Baker and was soon whisked away from even this tiny inhabited spot until after a ride of two or three miles, the buildings of St. Elizabeth's appeared upon my view. They looked exactly like a tiny village, for there was the Church with its Cross so clearly cut against the brilliant Dakota sky; the little rectory, where the Rev. Mr. Deloria, of whom you have heard so much, has his abode; the main school building containing the dormitories, kitchen, dining room, etc.; the Chapel, which is also the schoolroom; the barn and several smaller buildings beside.

My first feelings were those of deep joy and thankfulness that I had really reached St. Elizabeth's, and I have been here several weeks now and have never been happier in my life.

Indian Children Most Interesting.

The Indian children are most interesting and they have such fascinating names; for instance, Edward Good House sweeps my room every morning, and Leo Bird Horse and John Eagle Bull attend to the schoolroom, under my supervision, each day. Then we have Nellie Rattling-Thunder, Matilda Takes-the-Gun, Benjamin White Eagle, Magdalene Loves War, Esther No Heart, Henry Brown Wolf and others. Would not you enjoy teaching children with these appellations?

Our day begins early at St. Elizabeth's, for at six o'clock some of the older children who have duties before breakfast arise, and at six-thirty everybody is awake and stirring. We breakfast at seven, then go to Chapel for prayers, and after they are over, the children return to wash dishes, sweep dormitories, make beds, fill lamps, etc. Speaking of the latter, makes me realize how dangerous kerosene lamps are in these wooden buildings and how very inconvenient when we get up in the dead of night for a fire drill or perchance a real fire! But who knows? Perhaps some day the fairy electricity will be with us and then we shall merely press the button and we shall have abundant light.

It is a busy, lively period from seven forty-five until nine in the morning, but at that hour, all the little people, with nicely brushed hair and clean and shining faces, come to me in the schoolroom and then it is my delightful privilege to teach them until half past eleven each day. They are such bright and happy youngsters and are so responsive that it is a great pleasure to be with them, and as I look into their little dusky faces I am determined that they shall have the best that is in me each day.

I am glad that Rhode Island loves St. Elizabeth's, and I hope that she will continue to take an interest in it and realize with me that nothing we can give is too good for those children, both to make reparation for the past and to prepare them for future Christian citizenship.

Work Done by Boys and Girls.

While the little children are having lessons, the older boys and girls are busy with many duties about the house and farm, such as cooking, mending, laundry-work, etc., and then, as "turn about is fair play," in the afternoon they come to the schoolroom and Deaconess Baker, Miss Fingel and I enjoy with them the delights of English, Geography, History, Arithmetic, Reading, Spelling and the rest.

At this time, the little people are attending to their small duties, such as learning the Catechism, trying to sew, etc., but at four o'clock all the children have free time until supper, and oh, how they love to play!

Sad to say, while we have a beautiful playground, as far as space is concerned, we have nothing on it except two swings. Think of that equipment for fifty-two children! I, myself, have seen four or five boys in one of them at once and have wondered how the rope could possibly endure the strain. Yes, we have one thing more, an alluring mud puddle at the foot of the bluff on which the school stands. This is the outlet of our artesian well and thither the boys resort, when, as all boys will, they feel the need of some vent for their superfluous energy. But when they return to the house, you should see them—mud, mud everywhere! Shoes, stockings, overalls—truly, they are pictures indeed. All this could be prevented if we had suitable apparatus for their play, and at the same time for the development of good, sound, healthy bodies, too. This is one of Deaconess Baker's fondest dreams,—a well-equipped playground,—and I am sure that some day it must come true.

English is used here wholly in teaching at the school, but when the children are at play, you should hear them chatter in Dakota. It is very interesting to me, and I hope some day to understand and speak a little myself. Even now the children are teaching me, so we are mutually helpful, you see.

Everyone Seems to Attend Church.

It is a picturesque sight when the Indians drive up to Church in their two-horse wagons, with dogs and babies and the whole families, I guess, as everyone seems to attend service here. The men sit on one side of the Church and the women and children on the other, and all are very reverent indeed. The service, of course, is in Dakota, but with a Dakota Prayer Book and my English one, I love to follow it, and I realize strongly every Sunday, what we all know so well, that the love of Jesus Christ is indeed for all men everywhere.

The hymns, too, are sung in Dakota, but as they are set to familiar tunes, we all sing, whether we can pronounce correctly or not. By the way, you will be interested to know that "Kakpala" is a Dakota word and means "little creek." There is a small creek near us, which, a few miles from here, flows into the Missouri River, hence the appropriateness of our name.

I hope you have gotten some idea of our daily life here at St. Elizabeth's from my letter, and in closing, I want to say that the spirit of the school is beautiful, the children are as happy as the day is long, the teachers are most congenial, and altogether we have a happy, well-ordered, Christian home.

PAPERS ON THE PSALMS

By the Rt. Rev. Dr. A. C. A. Hall

FOURTH PAPER.

The Christian Meaning of the Psalms.

Notwithstanding the varied experiences of the writers of the Psalms (from David to the time of the Maccabees), the thought may well come, They were all men of one nation, and they were Jews. How then can their songs be fitting for constant use in the Christian Church? Let us make answer:

1. The Psalmists were men of one nation, but that nation was the Chosen People of God, whom He had singled out among the nations of the world, to receive His earlier teaching and to prepare the way for the coming of His Son and the setting up of His universal Church. The Jewish people was a school of religious instruction and training for the whole world. As the world received special lessons in government from the Romans and in Philosophy from the Greeks, so in Religion from the Jews. Their prayers and praises we may then well repeat and cherish.

2. The great religious ideas of th Psalmists (as of the Prophets) are not superseded by Christian teaching. On the other hand Christian teaching is distinctly based on them, and could hardly be understood without them.

The greatness and majesty of God, His mercy and His Justice:

The entire surrender of ourselves to His will in trustful obedience:

The manifestation of His wisdom and power and love in Nature and in History—

these are the great thoughts of the Psalms, which are common to the Old and the New Testaments, and which we need continually to have in mind.

3. This explains how naturally the Christian Church took over the Hymnal of the Jews. But in a further sense Christians made the Psalms their own. They saw in the Psalms, as in the Prophecies, continual promises which had their full meaning and realization in our Lord Jesus Christ. The Old Testament was full of descriptions of the Great Messenger and Deliverer whom God would raise up. He was foretold not only by direct predictions but by all sorts of types and figures.

Every priest and teacher, every captain and king, every sufferer and saint pointed on to One in whom all these officers and characteristics should be combined, and who would perfectly accomplish what these earlier representatives did only partially and on a small scale. So, for instance, the songs that told of a king ruling in righteousness (72), of a warrior going forth to battle (20, 21, 45), of one gaining a victory through suffering (22), whatever their earlier reference, Christians applied to the Lord Jesus Christ, His work, His suffering, His victory, His reign.

4. This is the Christian meaning of the Psalter. We shall see continual illustrations of this as we consider some of the Psalms appointed for special use in connection with the Christian seasons.

It is not only that we say the Psalms about Christ, nor some of them to Christ, but we say them with Him. Words first spoken by others gain a new meaning from His lips, God's Son in our nature.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., and Hobart, Indiana.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

PEACE OBJECTIVES.

At a recent public meeting a minister said that America would not be satisfied until as many cities had been destroyed in Germany as Germany had destroyed in France.

To me, such a statement of the purpose of the United States is ghastly. Unless our sacred dead have died in vain, there will be a better world after the war than there was before. Not so rich a world, for I fancy the world will be very poor, scarcely able to pay its debts to itself, incongruous as that statement may seem, but a world richer in heavenly treasure by just so much as there has been taken out of it the diabolical spirit of the Hun and the things for which he stood.

But it will not be a better world if we descend to the level of the Hun and wreak our vengeance on civilian populations, bad as they may be.

It is the same kind of a question as the penal statutes against crime. Time was that the brutality of the offender was met by the brutality of the State.

But we have not so learned Christ. For modern methods in penal institutions have taught us that you cannot beat virtue into criminals.

True, you cannot reclaim all criminals by kindness, but you can reclaim a larger percentage by that method than by cruelty.

I am willing to grant that Germany is a criminal nation and that those responsible for the blackest of all crimes should pay the penalty, but I am not willing to use our American boys to carry out a program of revenge, for it will defeat the object for which they have fought and debase their present high standards of chivalry.

It was here that the Crusaders failed. They had a high objective, but they sank to the level of the unspeakable Turk in their morale.

---

than vengeance to come out of ew era, and it comes at the time
o strike.
ope from the days of Christ is centuries duration. (1) From he principle of imperialism held nal tyranny of a superman with that the Germans have felt for the northern barbarians dom-followed five centuries of chaos

uy well describes as "barbarism feudal system arose two opposing of Hildebrand (1054), and Na-

se of the Holy Roman Empire, as someone has aptly said, the or an empire.
m in the struggle of France and called into being Parliament in n France, for without calling the common people into conference, the crowned heads could not make headway against the papal tiara.

(4) Then came the Reformation, with its convulsive shocks, and the world started on its nationalistic program. It was no longer a united Europe. Here arose an imperial government, and there a democracy, but in each nation the leaven of constitutional democracy was working. The plague of Nationalism lay in international diplomacy, which was responsible for handing Macedonia back to the brutal Turk, and for crushing the smaller nations in the interests of the larger.

It was from Wolsey and Richelieu to Cavour and Gladstone and Bismark, a game of lying intrigue and secret mendacity.

Gladstone's idea of splendid isolation was fully as selfish, if not as cruel as Bismark's policy of blood and iron: Each sought to make his nation the dominating factor in a purely selfish policy.

It was of these diplomats that Cavour once said, "If you tell the diplomats of Europe the truth, they do not know what you are talking of."

It is out of this background that Mr. Wilson has put forth his fourteen points, doing away with secret treaties and hidden alliances, and giving to each nation, however small, the right to its own existence and its own justice.

The nations are to come out of their splendid isolation by this blood and iron struggle into a new birth—that of some form of internationalism, which is but a long name for human brotherhood.

Out of the furnace of this war must come something better than revenge, something bigger than retaliation, and Germany need not be beaten for her past crimes so much as locked up from committing future ones.

The main issue today is not how to punish the Hun for what he has done. That will come from God anyway. But it is to so lock up the Hun that he cannot break out again.

The main issue of peace lies in the future rather than in the past. Not that one would not welcome the punishment of the Potsdam gang. If it can be done, let it be done, and done properly. But let us not be so obsessed with the idea of vengeance upon Germany that we lose sight of the idea of justice for the whole world.

There can be no more awful punishment than the mark of Cain which God has put on her forehead, and which will make all men shun her society for ages to come. Man cannot invent a punishment as cruel as the nemesis of her own iniquity.

But in the great issues that are involved we must not sacrifice too much to the idea of vengeance.

I am one who believes that Mr. Wilson and those around him know more about the issues involved than do the millions who regard themselves as competent to advise, and I believe that the people must be as loyal to the government in the difficult days before us as they have been in those that are past.

The government has made mistakes, but in the main it has been mighty effective, and there can be no doubt of its sincerity.

So now, in the job of bringing this war to an end, let us hope that the people will be willing to settle it, not in the heat of passion, but in the light of the great possibilities that lie before the world.

USE OF CHILDREN IN WAR DRIVES DISAPPROVED.

In a recently published letter in the newspapers, expressing the disapproval of the Junior Red Cross and of the Division of Education of the National War Savings Committee, of the exploitation of children for the purpose of collecting money, Dr. H. M. MacCracken and Dr. George D. Strayer, the heads of these organizations, have shown commendable courage and farsightedness. The increasing use of little children in "war drives" both for the government and for private funds in New York, Chicago and other large cities, has become a matter of serious concern to those interested in child welfare.

In spite of data from England and other warring countries showing the increase in juvenile delinquency since the beginning of the war, we have been in grave danger in our characteristic Yankee zeal, of encouraging young children to engage in collecting money entirely without adequate supervision or possibility of checking their receipts, regardless of the consequences. In the sale of thrift stamps, this evil has become most objectionable in some of our largest cities. Attractive children from four years of age and upwards have been sent out to peddle stamps in the street. Little girls unattended were sent into strange apartments and in crowded subways. In some cities keen competition among schools in the sale of stamps resulted in children being excused in squads from their classes to solicit business on the streets during school hours.

Such lowering of the standards brings a double evil. Its direct effort is to increase the influences and conditions which contribute to juvenile delinquence. Indirectly, by example, it encourages the breaking down of existing child labor laws. It manifestly becomes increasingly difficult to enforce a street trades law when girls and boys from eight to twelve years of age are everywhere on the streets selling thrift stamps or collecting money for war funds, or to enforce a statute regulating the use of child actors when other children are speaking night after night in theatres in the interest of Liberty Bonds.

All enlightened citizens agree in the belief that school children of the country should be given definite education in such times as these in patriotism, thrift, and war service. There are enough wholesome and safe forms of patriotic activity for children under present conditions without having them engage in those which are clearly unwise or of doubtful value. The closing exhortation in the letter referred to above is worthy of our most careful consideration:

> "The children are 'the hope of the world.' The generation will leave them a heavy legacy of world problems. The future waits upon their energy, their sanity, their breadth of vision. Our wisdom and foresight today must insure them the strength to meet the future."

It is to be hoped that the example thus set by these governmental agencies will be followed by the various private organizations in their war drives this fall and winter.—George A. Hall, Secretary New York Child Labor Committee, in Child Labor Bulletin.

AN ESSENTIAL EDUCATIONAL WORK.

The Young Women's Christian Association has dotted the country from California to Maine with thirty-four International Institutes, each engaged in breaking into little bits some isolated group of foreigners by introducing American ideals and American ways, and teaching the English language. Before 1919 ends it hopes to have two hundred International centers established; in some cases full-fledged International Institutes and in others American and Foreign Language Service Bureaus. It hopes to put one of these centers in any community where there are foreign-born women, or girls who have been raised in a foreign atmosphere. The standard of one unit for each camp comprises an American and two foreign-language workers. The mothers are reached through the girls, who are encouraged to engage in club activities in industrial centers. There they are taught domestic science, dressmaking, milinery, nursing, all the rudiments of education they were denied as children, instructed in hygiene and given higher ideals of morality.

CONCERNING ANGELS.

A clergyman in New York, Dr. Montague Geer, vicar of St. Paul's Chapel, asks "do we then really believe in angels?" and answers his question by saying that he believes the Angel Gabriel of the Annunciation has been working of late in the city of Galilee, named Nazareth. And he continues that the angels of the Nativity, of the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection have been helping General Allenby and his brave Britishers to win their victories in those regions of sacred memories. And he reiterates that he "believes in angels and so do you," not perhaps in a visible presence, but in those lofty inspirations that the important scenes of that locality excite. And then referring again to angels, Dr. Geer says:

"They have in large measure been driven out of our great universities and other seminaries of learning, out of our public schools, out of family life, and in far too great a way out of our churches. We have in far too many ways treated them with cold hospitality indeed."

Thus the doctor gets down to solid ground, where so much imagination is not required to maintain his angel theory, for he then refers to impulses derived from divine influences, which indeed seem to be so wanting in these days of rank materialism. To be a real man and a true believer, one must submit to these influences and give them the direction of his life and doctrine. It was Lincoln who spoke of the angels of our better nature and surely he was no dreamer. Whether angels flew about the Holy Land or not, everybody knows that Lincoln's angels are gathering about every true heart these days. To entertain those angels is one of the great purposes of the dreadful war.—Columbus (O.) Journal.

A DIRECT OBLIGATION UPON ALL.

The Central Diocesan Missionary Committee has issued a letter to the clergy and laity of the Diocese of Bethlehem, (Pa.) stating that, "The following resolution adopted by the last General Convention expresses the mind of the General and Provincial Boards of Missions exactly:

"Resolved, That hereafter it should be the unfailing policy of the Church, through the Board of Missions, to secure each year from its living members such an amount as may be needed each year to provide in full appropriations for the maintenance and extension of existing work."

This makes plain our duty. We, as the responsible heads of the several parishes and missions of the Diocese, must realize the situation and not rest content until each place under our care has seen the vision and responded to it fully.

The best possible way to get our missionary finances on a sound basis is by the regular and universal use of the duplex envelopes. This means a house to house canvass of the parish or mission. When such a canvass has been made the results are far beyond the highest expectation. Poor people will give weekly a sum that will total more than the average yearly subscription of the wealthier members of the congregation. And those who have not been contributing to the missionary funds will come to see the importance of so doing, if the responsible heads of the parishes and missions will put the matter as a direct obligation resting upon all of the members of the Church of God."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

Next Monday morning at 2 o'clock you will be expected to set your time piece back one hour.

The blessed sacrament of the altar is administered by intinction to communicants at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Southern Virginia was held at Roanoke, October 10th and 11th, in Christ Church. Dr. and Mrs. Harry Taylor of St. James' Hospital, Anking, China, were in attendance and addressed the meeting.

The next meeting of the Junior Clergy Missionary Association of the Diocese of New York will be held on Tuesday, November 12th, at the Church of the Holy Communion, when the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York City, will speak upon the subject, "The Church and the Army at Home." A report of the October meeting appears in our New York Letter in another column of this issue.

St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C., for colored young men and women, is endeavoring to raise an adequate endowment during this year in which it is celebrating its Fiftieth Annicersary. A number of Auxiliaries and Sunday Schools and other friends of the school have already contribueed or pledged Liberty Bonds for the purpose. It is earnestly hoped that others will follow their example, and thus help to put the school on a firm financial basis. Bonds or pledges may be sent directly to the Rev. A. B. Hunter, Raleigh, N. C., who is the Treasurer of the Fund, or to the Principal, the Rev. E. H. Goold, or through the Treasurer of the American Church Institute for Negroes, Mr. William Fellows Morgan, 416 Lafayette Street, New York City.

On account of the calling by the Government into service of many young persons in the various professions, many men who had retired are coming back to help in active work. Why should not the Church in its Sunday Schools and all activities have the advantage of the return to work of many who have drawn out? They are greatly needed.—Newark Churchman.

St. Paul's Church, Harrisburg, Pa., announces a series of profitable October evenings: October 6th—Choral service of invocation upon the year's work at the Harrisburg Academy and the High schools of the city. October 13th—"World Problems in Central America." Meeting to inaugurate the American Branch of the Honduras Church Association. October 20th—Boy Scout service. Address by the Rev. J. F. Virgin. October 27th—Popular picture service

The churches at St. Lake City, Utah, being closed on account of the influenza epidemic, one of the city dailies "conducted" a service in its columns for use on Sunday, October 13th. Dean Fleetwood, of St. Mark's Cathedral, was asked "to make the invocation." The sermon was preached by a Congregational minister, and the benediction was pronounced by one of the twelve apostles of the Mormon denomination. The article was published on a full page with the photographs of the three officiating clergymen," and the readers were asked to begin the service with reading or singing America and to close with Onward Christian Soldiers.

Get behind the government!
Live, give, work and pray for a Christian nation and a Christian world.
After the war of the kings, then the war of the King.
Wider and wider yet
The gates of the nations swing,
Clear and clearer still
The wonderful prophecies ring.
Go forth, ye hosts of the living God,
And conquer the earth for your King!
—Merriam Park Churchman, St. Paul, Minn.

The New York Evening Post says that a Minnesota man has invented a novel contribution box for churches. If a person drops in a quarter or more there is silence; if he contributes a dime a bell rings; a nickel sounds a whistel. If an unfortunate pretends to be asleep when the box is passed it wakens him with a watchman's rattle. It is said that a Nebraska man has perfected an invention which enables the user of a party telephone line to identfy any other subscriber who may be listening to his conversation. Even the milder transgressions are becoming impossible.

Dr. Marlay, Bishop of Waterford, once ordered his coachman to fetch some fresh water from the well (the footman being absent). To this the coachman venturel to object, saying: "his business was to drive, not to run on errands." "Well, then," said the bishop, "bring out the coach and horses, set the pitcher inside, and drive to the well," and thus the witty bishop gained his point, to the great amusement of the neighbors.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, Diocese of Newark, will be held November 20th in Trinity Cathedral and Parish House, Newark, N. J. The service of the Woman's Auxiliary and its various affiliated organizations in war time will have special consideration, and the fifteenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Lines, in that week will be remembered.

A curious case has been decided in the Swiss Courts. Mme. Waldevogel, the proprietress of a cafe in Zurich, had certain phrases in the Bible such as "Come to me, and I will give you rest," "Abide with me," etc. painted on the walls of the cafe. M. Liechti, a Swiss pastor, in a letter to the local newspapers condemned this manner of advertising in strong terms. Mme. Waldevogel brought an action for libel against him, claiming damages. The action was tried at Zurich. The judge described the suit as "an impudent advertisement," and ordered the plaintiff to pay all costs and give £2 to the pastor for a charity.—The Christian Register.

PROVINCIAL SYNOD POSTPONED.

Acting under the authority of the Ordinances of the Province of Washington, The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., President of the Province, announces the postponement of the Synod of the Province on account of the epidemic of influenza now raging, until a date to be settled later, prior to the meeting of the General Convention of 1919.

PERSONALS.

The Rev. Richard Wilkinson has taken up his work as rector of St. John's, Montgomery, Ala. He received a cordial welcome from his people.

The Rt. Rev. N. S. Thomas, of Wyoming, made a tour of the west in behalf of the National Security League's campaign for "Patriotism Through Education." He spoke before a number of schools, State Normal schools and teachers' institutes in Montana, Colorado and Idaho.

Bishop Capers of West Texas, returned some weeks ago from a long, happy vacation which he spent in Canada, made necessary by a very serious need for rest. He has returned refreshed and restored to health and is looking forward with enthusiasm to a very active year's work.

The Rev. J. F. Plummer, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Kokomo, Ind., has returned home from a visit with his parents at Fairibault, Minn., where he spent some time after recovering from his recent critical illness, and has resumed his parish work with renewed vigor.

Rev. B. F. Fleetwood, D.D., has served 22 years as dean of the Northern Deanery of Chicago. The Deanery takes in all the northern counties of Illinois. All these years the work has appealed to him in connection with his work as rector of Waterman Hall, Sycamore, Ill. Feeling that a younger man would better accomplish the work, he has formally resigned the office.—Sycamore (Ill.) Republican.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Gailor, Bishop of Tennessee, was the special preacher who gave an address before the Sunday Evening Club in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, on Sunday, October 13th, taking for his subject, "America's Nationalism." In the morning the Bishop preached a most edifying sermon at Trinity Church, where he was extended warm greetings at the close of the service by a number of friends who remembered him when he served the parish for a few months some twenty-five years ago.

APPEAL FOR THE UNITED STATES MARINES IN CUBA.

The Editor of The Witness:

There are some seven hundred United States Marines stationed in and around Santiago, Cuba, with whom, for the next six months, it will be my high privilege to live and work. These men stand much in need of all that the Church can do for them, both religiously and socially. In a foreign land, where there are no restrictions against the sale of liquor to men in the service, they are subjected to temptation which would not assail them in the camps at home, or in France. Part of our work will be to create new interests which will afford some protection against many pitfalls. We shall need a constant supply of papers, books, magazines, church papers, and records for the phonograph. I should like, also, to give every man a Christmas card, together with some little gift which will remind him of home. I appeal, therefore, to your many readers who are keenly interested in the welfare of our American boys, to mail such articles regularly every week or month. They can be sent at the postal rate of four ounces for one cent, and may be addressed to me, care of the Royal Bank of Canada, Santiago, Cuba. If any are disposed to contribute to a modest fund to be expended by the chaplain for the benefit of the men, such contributions may be sent to the same address, and will be duly acknowledged.

E. CLOWES CHORLEY,
Rector of St. Philip's in the Highlands, Garrison, N. Y.

ITINERARY OF MR. JOHN W. WOOD.

Mr. John W. Wood, secretary of the Board of Missions, sailed from San Francisco, October 7, to visit the Church's Missions in the Far East. The journey is undertaken upon the urgent and repeated requests of the bishops and missionaries. Mr. Wood is accompanied by Mr. Charles O. Ford, of Detroit, who will act as his secretary. Bishop Williams and the Church Club of Michigan have kindly released Mr. Ford from his important work for the diocese, in order that he may make the trip. Mr. Wood's itinerary is approximately as follows:

All dates after Oct. 23rd are approximate and subject to such slight changes as local steamer sailings may require.

October 5—Sail from San Francisco, S. S. Siberia Maru.
October 23—Arrival Yokohoma.
October 23-November 18—District of Tokyo. Address, care Bishop McKim, 38 Tsukiji, Tokyo.
November 19-December 12—District of Kyoto. Address, care of Bishop Tucker, Karasumaru-Dori, Shimotachi-Uri, Kyoto.
December 12-16—At Sea.
December 16-Jan. 26—District of Philippines. Address, care of Mr. John W. Shannon, 378 General Luna, Manila.
January 26-31—At Sea.
February 1-4—Hong Kong. Address, care of Rt. Rev. G. H. Lander, D.D., Victoria, Hong Kong.
February 4-5—At Sea.
February 8—Arrival Shanghai, care of Bishop Graves.
February 15-March 15—District of Hankow. Address, care of Bishop Roots, American Church Mission, Hankow, China.
March 16-April 10—District of Anking. Address, care of Bishop Huntington, American Church Mission, Anking, China.
April 10-May 10—District of Shanghai. Address, care of Bishop Graves, Jessfield, Shanghai, China
May 10-17—Peking. Address, care of Rt. Rev. F. L. Norris, D.D., Peking, China.
May 17-24—Peking to Tokyo via Korea Address, care of Rt. Rev. M. N. Trollope, D.D., Bishop's Lodge, Seikokwai, Seoul, Korea.
May 24-31—Tokyo. Address, as before.
June 1-11—At Sea.
June 11-35—District of Honolulu—Emma Square, Honolulu, T. H. Address, care of Bishop Restarick.
June 26-July 3—At Sea.
July 10—New York.

SPIRITUAL WORK IN A HOSPITAL

The Things a Chaplain Sees, and Hears, and Does, and Thinks and Prays About

We print below a series of interesting stories and comments from letters written to his parishoners by the Rev. Dr. Coupland, Rector of Trinity Church, New Orleans, La., from a hospital in France where he is serving as Chaplain:

It is wonderful what this terrible experience is doing for some of the men. One who was very badly wounded, developed pneumonia, and then contracted scarlet fever. He has suffered agony for over a month. He told me that this experience had done for him what nothing else had. It had made him pray for the first time in his life, and that he had promised himself and his Lord that if he lived, he would live a different life from that which he had always lived.

A few days ago I had the burial service over the bodies of two Germans. They were brought into the hospital as wounded prisoners and died. One of them was about twenty-five, the other one could not have been over sixteen. The older one had on his body a letter written to his father just before he went into battle, so we not only knew his name and that of his father, but also his rank and home. There was nothing whatever to identify the younger one.

I held eight services yesterday, the other six being held in different wards. These latter services are always a great joy to me for the boys are so reverent and so appreciative. It is wonderful the way they ask for them, and the manly, courgeous way in which they take part. Even when I go into wards which have not asked for services, and inquire of the boys whether they would like to have a service, the invariable answer comes: "Sure, we would like to have a service, Chaplain." Of course, we always pray for our country, for our soldiers, sailors and aviators, for our doctors and nurses and for the dear ones at home, and then we all say the Lord's Prayer together. Of all the touching things you ever heard, none could be more pathetic and yet inspiring than to listen to a ward full of these poor boys with arms and legs strung up, sometimes all four, saying: "Our Father, who art in Heaven." Even those crying from pain unbearable will control themselves and stop long enough to join in.

I went to see a very ill boy from Texas, and found he had but a little while left before he would start on the long journey from which none return. He was a fine lad. I found him very weak, but with mind perfectly clear. I had prayers with him, read a part of the 14th Chapter of St. John and St. John's description of the new Jerusalem in Revelation, after which I read the hymn, "Abide with Me, fast falls the eventide." When I had finished he reached out and took my hand and said, "I am a Christian, and have tried to live as one." He gave me his mother's name and address and asked me to write to her. After which I sat by him silently until he had crossed the stream which divides that fair land from ours, which was not more than a half hour. Certainly he passed on as a Christian should, for there was nothing but peace in his eye and calm in his heart, and his mind was clear until the last minute.

One thing has been made clear to me here, and it is this: While many of the men, perhaps most of them, who have not had good religious training in their homes are becoming hardened and cynical as a result of the war, and are drifting morally, the men who have the right kind of religious training at home are being made finer men every day by these same experiences of the war as terrible as they are. After all, it is not the experience that determines the results, it is the man and the man's use of the experiences that determines whether he deteriorates or whether he develops. And yet, I could give you also, striking illustrations of how this war is saving the souls of men whose souls were never awakened by anything else that ever came into their lives.

A STRAIGHTFORWARD TALK.

An Archdeacon Speaks In The Language of The Street With Sweetness of Expression.

The following story from "Trench and Camp," a soldier's paper published at Camp Meade, Maryland, tells of a talk, says The Church News, made by Archdeacon Smeade of Mississippi, known and loved by nearly every Mississippian:

Archdeacon George Gordon Smeade of the Episcopal diocese of Mississippi, told Meade men last week that the greatest temptations were those which would come to them in the trenches.

When he said these things he was speaking to men in various parts of the camp. He spoke in almost every hut.

But the most impressive meeting was that with the 7,000 colored men in the open air theatre. He said himself that it was the greatest experience in all his work as a minister of Christ.

"I love the colored man," said the speaker, who has lived his whole life in the Southland, "I like to talk to them."

His Kindly Nature.

There is no question that his words were understood. He spoke in the language of the street, but with that sweetness of expression and evident bigness of heart which made every man feel the truth of his appeal. It was not the voice of one who practices one thing and preaches another sort of life. He just made the men wish that they might each be as lovable and as virile a Christian as he.

The things which Dr. Smeade denounced were the vices which come to those who do not think, debauches with wine and women and profanity. Referring to those who said that a man could not maintain his purity because of physical reasons, he said:

"It is the most damnable lie ever perpetrated upon the young manhood of the world."

Illustrates With Story.

He told a story that will live long in the hearts of those who heard it. It was this:

A young man at the University of Virginia was the most popular man in college. He played upon the baseball team and was a great all-around athlete. He was a member of a Greek letter society. He was graduated with highest honors and then completed a four-year course in medicine.

Upon becoming a physician he announced that he was not going to remain in this country and earn a fortune, but would go to a certain foreign land, there to devote himself to healing those who would otherwise die of neglect. His work was successful, and, as he made his friends understand that his work was in the name of Him who died upon the cross, many were brought into the Christian fold. Telling of him, a man of the University remarked:

"I know of nobody connected with this institution who has made a greater impress upon it than he."

Dr. Smeade told the boys that this man of the story was being reproduced in the lives of thousands of soldiers, who were giving up their careers that others might enjoy freedom.

A PROSPEROUS PARISH.

The Rev. W. W. Daup, recently celebrated his fifth anniversary as Rector of St. John's Church, Elkhart, Ind. The parish has prospered spiritually and materially under his administration. One hundred and fifty three persons have been confirmed and 123 baptized, the property has been improved and many gifts have added to the beauty of the interior of the church. The parish is $12,000 better off than it was five years ago. In commenting upon his minstry in the parish, Mr Daup, says:

"Surely we have every reason to be grateful to the Father of all and taking our cue from what has been done, it is safe to say that the next five years will come freighted with greater blessings and achievements. We trust that all the people have learned in this time that the Rector is human, being composed of flesh and blood, and that he makes mistakes as others do, and cannot please all alike, any more than all others find it possible to please him. He wants you to uphold him. He wants you to uphold him and to know that an ill word from you may ruin his influence over many, while a word in his defense may enable him to save hundreds."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by G. W. J.

Shift Your Clock Back.

"The time to shift your clock back will be at 2 o'clock in the morning of October 27th. One need not feel that one must sit up until that early morning hour however, in order to turn back our clocks to where they were on March 16th, when the daylight saving plan became a law. When each one retires for the night, if the clock is set it will answer the purpose. And we are told not to set back the hands, as it disarranges the delicate mechanism of the clock. Only two ways then are left—to stop the clock for an hour —which might lead to much disarrangement of time; or to turn the hands around to the required hour. And we have the chance to make up that lost hour's sleep, when the clocks were all set ahead last March."

A Hundred Reasons for Buying Liberty Bonds.

America, Allies, Atrocities, Aces;
Belgium, Bombs, Bolsheviki and Bases;
Congress, Columbia, Camouflage, Crimes;
Doctors, Destroyers, Dogs, Dollars and Dimes;
Expeditions, Equipment, Enemy, Emma Gee;
Foes, Freedom, Food for France, Flag of the Free;
Germans and Generals, Gas, Gardens, Guns;
Hoover and Hospitals, Helmets and Huns;
Income Tax, Italy, Issues, Ideals;
Justice and Junkers and Juggernaut—wheels;
Kulture and "Kamerad"! Kaiser and Krieg;
Louvain, Lusitania, Liberty League;
Murders and Morale, Mails, Mascots and Mercies;
No Man's Land, Newspapers, Navy and Nurses;
Over There, Over the Top, Optimism;
Peace, Perseverance and Patriotism;
Quarters and Quarantine, Quickness and Quiet;
Rheims, Rifles, Russia, Ruthlessness, Riot;
Star-Spangled Banner, Smokes, Sugar and Soups;
Tommies, Tars, Trenches, Tanks, Taxes and Troops;
Uncle Sam, Uniforms, Units, U-Boats;
Victory, Vandals, Valor and Votes;
War-Workers' Wonderful Win-the-War Way;
Extra Xpenses, Am-Ex and X-Ray;
Y. M. C. A., Yanks, Yaphank, Yip! Yip!
Zest, Zeal and Zealotry, Zeppelins, Zip!

—Carolyn Wells in Life.

The following article was written by a Chinese living in Cambridge, Mass.:

China's Great War Day.

When the calamity befell Europe in 1914, few could foresee what it would bring about. It is no longer individuals brought closer together in pursuit of economic gain, but peoples in response to the call of justice. We obtain a greater proximity, not only of markets, but of popular governments; a greater nobility, not of capital and labor, but of political ideals and thoughts of which your great President is such an adroit and brilliant spokesman. For under the standard of justice, are aligned the peoples of the world, associated for a noble common cause. The international community of interest becomes more and more clearly perceived.

The Chinese people, however, have found this by-product of the great war peculiarly significant. First, our confidence in justice and right, which has been a firm outgrowth of the teachings of Confucius and other philosophers, and which has been rudely shaken by the predatory politics of the European statesmen, is being restored. It was no wonder that we rallied to the call of the justice's cause.

Second, we received added inspiration in the glory and triumph of democratic institutions, which we ourselves have busily been experimenting. But democracy was perilously near being overturned everwhere. It is natural that we have spared no effort in contributing every assistance which our present economic and military organizations would permit.

Tomorrow comes the day set apart in recognition of the stand China has taken in this war. It will always be an exalting day for her; it will not fail to prompt her toward greater efforts. Her internal feud—probably a necessary stage of her constitutional development — has occupied her troops; but she has sent contingents to the aid of the Siberian expedition. Her factories are of limited capacity; but she has in France hundreds of thousands of mechanics and artisans who must have replaced an army of an equal number. She would be the last to claim credit for whatever she might have contributed; but is awaiting confidently and fervently the dawn of the day when the irresistible ascent of the democratic ideal shall scatter the mist of mistrust and intrigue among the political units. Nations will evolve into an inter-nation and will be brought close together, even as markets have been by steam and electricity. Under the solar brilliancy of popular sovereignty, mankind will declare: "Now we are neighbors."

Chungtao T. Chu.

A Woman's Editorial for Women.

This is the day of propaganda, of drives, of campaigns, of Hooverism and Heroism, the day when the middle aged woman stands on an equality with youth and the old maid has come into her own. There is no rest for the soles of our feet or the wings of our brains, and never in the history of man (or woman) has woman held the place in the work of the world that she holds today. She campaigns like a veteran; she drives Liberty loans, Red Crosses and War Stamps with a deftness and success that prove the efficiency of her methods and the capability of her sex, and in the position accorded her surely the heart of the most ardent suffragist cannot but purr in satisfied content. If the world were not altogether too busy to give time to moral reflection it might be edifying to ponder upon the theory that by the whole-souled, self-forgetful giving of themselves and their energies to a common cause, women have gained that which all their revolutions, starvations and violence had failed to achieve.

Few will deny that, in this country, at all events, women were ready for war before the men and that by their example in word and deed they stirred American men to a spirit of patriotism to their country and of loyalty to the vision of an ideal that has never been surpassed. Nor have they taken special credit to themselves for it, because this is what women are here for—it is all in the day's work—but they have not stopped at this point. They have offered themselves in every usual and unusual capacity except that of fighting, and when the need comes they will give their lives for that purpose as readily and as valiantly as they have given to their country the lives of those who are nearest and dearest to them. Women of all nations have proved it, for though they have not fought, they have died on the fighting line, and no woman worthy of the name will hesitate to follow where they have led.

One may feel justly proud that no call has yet been made upon women to which they have not responded promptly and efficiently, and now far away and faint as yet, but clear and unmistakable is heard the first note of a call for a new order of recruit; a reserve force which has not yet been trained nor brought into action; but without which the success of the allied forces would be gravely questionable. Will women be true to their inherent perception and hear it? The regiment to be recruited is not popular; its ranks are undecorated with stripes or medals; Pershing has never, as yet, received them, and their only banners are Love and Patriotism, but upon it rests literally, not figuratively, the fate of nations—the Reserve Regiment of Homekeepers. We have this call as an echo from a country which has faced and risen to the solution of problems created by such a cataclysm as the world has never known; a country to which we stand in the relationship of child to parent, and nobly has our mother led the way.

In a recent "Message from an English woman to America" she says, in describing the work done by women in England:

"We come now to our last reserve of women—the great company of homekeepers—and believe me their hearts are just as full of fire as the others. They are obliged to stay within the four walls of the house because homes must be kept together, the children cared for, and the fires kept burning for the boys when they come home and for the men who are working at civilian occupations.

They are simply carrying on the every day drudgery which we women know so well, forgetting that It is the very Foundation of a Nation's Strength and Fineness." In those last words lies the keynote of the efficiency of a nation. Unless we bring into disciplined and ordered operation every agency at our disposal we are working at a disadvantage, and the fundamental profession of the Keeper of the Home is as necessary for the winning of the war as is the finished product it turns out; and the perfection of the finished article depends wholly upon the sterling quality of the foundations laid by the hands of the women. The conservation of food in its broad and general application is one of the ways in which women have done their best and most signal service and they are, so to speak, the commanding officers in that line, but they have not yet sent out their call for non-coms in the ranks. As yet they are all generals and C. O.'s and details are suffering for lack of individual attention. It is, or ought to be, a mortifying fact that not every woman is competent to be a non-com and, still less, a private. That is all right. Pershing is undoubtedly an expert in the kind of flour to be used or the number of loaves to be requisitioned, but if he were required to go into the regimental kitchen and make a batch of bread one might well tremble for the cause of democracy. But non-coms are a necessity. Every day we are seeing more and more clearly the need of trained non-coms in our kitchens to direct personally and individually the details of the battle of food, and the women who are possessed of this ability should be proud to place it at the disposal of the government.

Surely the need for adequate individual guidance in small things is crying as loudly for control as are broad and general principles. These are comparatively easy to formulate and set forth, but the real task lies in their individual application, and it takes an intelligence and knowledge of no mean calibre to order the details. It is well, and wholesome for body and soul, to give up this or go without that article of food in order that other countries or the men at the front should be supplied, but the working men and women at home must be properly nourished and above all, children and youth must be so fed by an intelligent use of the material at command that the physical as well as the spiritual foundations may be of equal stability, for they are interdependent the one upon the other. This is not an undertaking that "may be entered into lightly or unadvisedly," nor does the ability to deal with it competently come by instinct. It requires real study, real application and real hard, steady work, and when women have achieved that task they will have contributed a very essential element in the winning of the war.

A call is coming to the American woman which will be an immense strain on her generosity. To go into a munition factory or a bank or a shipbuilding plant in order to free men to go to the front is meritorious; it is likewise mildly interesting and a little exciting, but to go into one's kitchen to free one's cook or one's chore-man, both better fitted for the purpose, is a drab and dreary one, indeed, in the present highly-colored scheme of existence. Yet one may well wonder if it is not the more useful and telling note despite its monotone. The mistress of the house is the only person who can satisfactorily keep in condition the mind and body of the civilian husband working at home for the war, or provide the proper food, rest and recreation for the soldier at home on leave. Only she can hold the reins of domestic government firmly in her hands and drive the heterogeneous team of daily duties to a successful finish, and no woman is so admirably placed in a position to practice what is preached on the conservation of food as is the woman in her own home.

Then, how about the boys of from fifteen to nineteen? Just too young to enlist or go to the front, and yet whose bodies and minds and souls must be trained and prepared and brought to the pink of perfection against the day that is coming all too soon and their turn comes to go out to battle. The cook and the chore-man cannot do that; neither for that matter, can the commander-in-chief. That job lies exclusively in the hands of the non-com officer, and her only ranking is that of mother. Mother or deputy-mother, the duties assigned are much the same, and if many of the commissioned officers and half the number or weight of these upon their shoulders they would uunquestionably sink beneath the load.

No homekeeper in either the narrowest or the broadest sense will deny for a moment the arduousness of her task, but it is probable that few of them realize its seriousness and its importance.

Moreover, and be it said in all reverence, somebody must stay at home to pray. A story is told of Kitchener and another general as they stood together awaiting the issue of the battle of the Marne. Defeat seemed inevitable, but their fear was turned to wonder and their wonder to hope, and when that hope became a certainty, it is said that Kitchener of Khartoum turned to the other general and said briefly: "Somebody must have been praying." It is an old-fashioned method of warfare and one that has never been given a really fair chance, but in these days of psychological influence upon an army in the trenches of an army on its knees.

Five years ago one would not have dared to say this outside the four walls of one's room, but a new spirit of religion has been born on the battlefield of France which has animated the battlefield at home, and much of what before we knew only by faith we now see clearly. To labor is to pray, but, also, to pray is to labor, and only in the interchangeable harmonies of the two obligations is found the perfection of service.

The coming call to our women is new in the world as a war service, but old as the everlasting hills in the heart of a woman. To serve is inborn, inbred, the very core of her being, and no modernity or equality can cure her incorrigible habit of the giving of her service and herself though it be to her own effacement.

—Written by Mrs. R. Clipston Sturgis, author of the "Random Reflections of a Grandmother."

WONDERFUL WHISKY.

The following correspondence took place many years ago between Robert G. Ingersoll and his friend, Dr. Buckley, the eminent Methodist divine and editor:

"Dear Buckley—I send you some of the most wonderful whisky that ever drove a skeleton from the feast of painted landscapes in the brain of man. It is the mingled souls of wheat and corn. In it you will find the sunshine and shadows that chased each other over billowy fields, the breath of June, the carol of the lark, the dews of the night, the wealth of the Summer and Autumn's rich content, all golden with imprisoned light. Drink it and you will hear the voice of men and maidens suggesting the 'Harvest Home,' mingled with the laughter of children. Drink it, and you will feel within your blood the starred dawn, the dreamy, tawny duck of perfect days. For forty years this liquid joy has been confined within staves of oak, longing to touch the lips of man.

"Your friend,
"ROBERT G."

"My Dear Bob—I return to you some of the most wonderful whisky that ever brought a skeleton into the closet or painted scenes of lust and bloodshed in the brain of man. It is the ghost of wheat and corn, crazed by the loss of their natural bodies. In it you will find a transient sunshine chased by a shadow as cold as an arctic midnight, in which the breath of June grows icy, and the carol of the lark gives place to the foreboding cry of the eraven. Drink it and you shall have 'woe,' 'sorrow,' 'babbling' and 'wounds without a cause.' Your eyes shall behold strange women, and your heart shall utter perverse things. Drink it and you shall hear the voice of demons, shrinking women wailing, and worse than orphaned children mourning the loss of a father who lives. Drink it deep and long and serpents will hiss in your ears, coil themselves about your neck and seize you with their fangs. At last it 'biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder.' For forty years this liquid death has been confined within staves of oak, harmless there as purest water. I send it to you that you may put an enemy in your mouth to steal away your brain, and yet I call myself

"Your friend,
"BUCKLEY."

"God knows best how long the jewel must suffer the grinding of the wheel."—W. L. Watkinson, D. D.

A NOTABLE SERVICE.

Especially inspiring was the Allied Victory Service at St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 1st, the main object of which was to offer thanksgiving for the recent victories of the Allies, and intercession for a continuance of tne Divine favor. One striking feature of the service was its widely representative character. Perhaps rarely, if ever before, have representatives of so many nations of people been gathered within one church in the City of Brooklyn, or prhaps anywhere in the land. All the following nations were represented by Consul or Clergy, or both, namely: Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Servia, Greece, Cuba, China, Japan, Portugal, Siberia, Syria, and Bohemia. The service was a complete example of unity of thought and action, both on the part of the Church and State. Unusually interesting addresses were given by natives of Servia and Belgium. The Grand Procession of Church and State, with which the service began, was a magnificent spectacle, starting with the Boy Choir, led by the Crucifier. There followed in order, first: A detail of the United States Marines, then the clergy of the various countries, each preceded by an acolyte bearing the flag of his particular nation. Each clergyman was vested in his own robes, which varied all the way from the conventional street attire to the magnificent embroidered cope of the clergy of the Eastern Orthodox Church. After the procession had reached the Chancel, the various flags of the Allies were placed in position, presenting a somewhat gala appearance. The singing throughout was most spirited, especially "The Star Spangled Banner," the well known "Battle Hymn of the Republic," the title of which for this occasion was changed by the Rector to read "Battle Hymn of the Allies," which surely seemed a fitting title, judging by the fervor with which it was sung by all present. The most impressive and unique part of this service was at the end, when the various clergy grouped themselves about the altar. Behind each one stood an acolyte holding the flag of the country to which the clergyman belonged, with its flag dipped toward the altar. Each priest offered petitions in his own liturgy and intercessions in his own tongue for his own people, after which the Rector offered a general intercession for America and all the Allies, after which the benediction was pronounced by Bishop F. Courtney. A few moments of silent prayer followed, when the recessional started, the choir followed by the clergy and consul, like an army with banners, marching to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

This most unique and impressive service had its inception in the thought of the Rector of St. Ann's Church, that, inasmuch as all these various nations were working, fighting and sacrificing together, they ought also to be able to pray and worship together. It seemed most fitting also in connection with this Liberty Loan drive and in particular the observance of Liberty Day, that the various nations should gather together and come to God's altar to offer a united thanksgiving for His blessing on their efforts and for a continuance thereof.

The response on the part of those invited was so gratifying and enthusiastic as to prove beyond question, that the service met a real need of the community.

THEY CAN WHIP THE DEVIL

A German baron went with Bishop Ames to see the great review of the armies in Washington at the close of the war. Some soldiers came by with new uniforms. The Baron said, "What fine men!" The Army of the Potomac came by with firm tread. The baron said, "Bishop those men can whip the world!" Bishop Ames said, "They can?" By and by the Western army marched by. Their ranks were decimated and their uniforms were tattered. They swung along in open order. Some carried mess kettles on their shoulders; some had a chicken or a part of a ham hung on their guns. On they swung up Pennsylvania avenue, making all kinds of noises, imitating all kinds of animals as they passed the grandstand. The baron, springing up, threw his arms around Bishop Ames, saying, "Bishop, Bishop, those men can whip the devil."—Bishop Fitzgerald, in Western Christian Advocate.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

DIOCESAN NEWS

SOUTHERN OHIO.

The influenza epidemic has closed the churches in many of the cities and towns of Southern Ohio. Red Cross work and other war activities, however, still go on in the parish houses. Attempts to hold outdoor religious services have not been very successful on account of the cool weather.

The Advent Call of the Women's Auxiliary is receiving very special attention and preparation in this diocese. Plans are completed for a series of institutes to be held, one in each of the three convocations of the diocese, for the training of the messengers from each parish. Nearly every parish in the diocese has expressed its approval of the "Call" and its willingness to take active part in the movement.

The Mission of the Holy Spirit, which ministers to the religious life of Episcopal students at Ohio State University, has moved into a new building opposite the University Campus in Columbus. This move into larger and better quarters was necessitated by the increase in the number of students of the Episcopal Church enrolled this year at the State University Army Training School. The old quarters would not accommodate the new students, and the war department requires that new students enlisted in the Students' Army Training Schools shall attend the Sunday services of the church of their choice.

St. John's Church, Columbus, is using a novel plan for clearing the church building of mortgage indebtedness. Each family is asked to get and give one Liberty Bond to the church for the purpose of liquidating the mortgage. As there are about one hundred families identified with this church, it is hoped to completely wipe out the mortgage indebtedness through this means, the mortgage being for five thousand dollars. Over a thousand dollars has been pledged in this way in the past two weeks.

RHODE ISLAND.

The Church of the Good Shepherd, Pawtuxet, R. I., will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary on All Saint's Day. When the Rev. Asaph S. Weeks took charge of it twenty years or more ago, it was a mission parish. Now it is doing missionary work on its own account, gaining strength yearly and pushing out its influence constantly.

The Rector of St. Paul's Pawtucket, the Rev. R. A. Seilhamer, is planning much aggressive work for the coming winter. He himself is going to preach sermons on Sunday mornings on lively subjects, and on Sunday evenings, when there is not an elaborate musical service, he is to have preachers of some reputation for eloquence give the sermon. For ten Sunday eevnings, the Rev. John H. Robinette, Rector of Trinity Church, Pawtucket, will be the preacher. On one Sunday evening, October 20th, there will be a war service, when the Rev. Edward R. Evans will preach. On the morning of that day the preacher will be the former rector, the Rev. Marion Law, D. D. October 27th will be a Prohibition Sunday, and the preacher in the moring Henry Martyn Savville, lately rector Washington, D. C., of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

Vacancies in the rectorship of two parishes have been filled by two priests from outside of the Diocese. Trinity Church, Bristol, had been without a rector since the resignation over a year ago of the Rev. Charles E. McCoy to become the rector of St. Matthew's, Kenosha, in the Diocese of Milwaukee. Its new rector is the Rev. Frank Damrosch, Jr., of St. Luke's Church, Mechanicsville, in the Diocese of Albany. He began his duties at Bristol the first of this month. At the same time the Rev. Henry Martyn Saville, lately rector of the Church of the Ascension, Waltham, in the Diocese of Massachusetts, assumed the rectorship of St. Mary's Church, East Providence, left vacant the first of September by the Rev. H. C. Dana resigning and going to St. Peter's Church, Westchester, N. Y. A hearty welcome to Rhode Island is extended to both of them and the good wishes of many will attend them in their new work. In this time, when there is such a scarcity of clergy, the Diocese is fortunate in having the services of two such good men.

The Rev. George McClellan Fiske, D. D., for thirty-four years the rector of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, at a recent meeting of the vestry of the parish presented his resignation of the rectorship to take effect December 1st, which was only accepted after he explained fully that the reason of his doing so was that he had not fully recovered from his illness of last winter and he felt that the need of more rest had become imperative. Hardly any priest in the Diocese is better know or more highly esteemed, not only by Churchmen, but by the people generally of the city and State, than Dr. Fiske. For many years he has been a member of the Standing Committee and in several General Conventions he represented the Diocese as a delegate. He has won a place in the affections of the many who know him by his courtesy and his kindness. It is not an easy matter to give up what has virtually been one's life work, and Dr. Fiske's friends appreciate the struggle he must have had in his heart in resigning, and they regret greatly the cause of it, but they hope that by so doing he will have many years of usefulness to the Diocese and to the community added to his life.

TRAINING SCHOOLS FOR TEACHERS.

The Diocesan Board of Religious Education in Chicago, through the co-operation of the Sunday School Institutes of the diocese, has opened four teacher training schools in the city and suburbs, and has also encouraged the establishment of local study classes in those parishes and missions which cannot reach the larger schools.

The South Side Training School will be held at Christ Church, the Nort Side at St. Peter's Church, the West Side at St. Barnabas' Church, the West Suburban at Emmanuel, La Grange. Each institute has organized its own school, with its special activity. Meetngs will be held once a month. The program will be the same at each school. The first part of each meeting will take the form of a general conference upon "The Teacher," using Weigle's book as a basis. This will be followed by a short intermission and a devotional service. The second part will be devoted to group conferences on the various courses of the Christian Nurture Series. For such persons as are not using the Christian Nurture material there will be a special conference upon "The Pupil."

A great deal of interest has been aroused in this campaign, and the leaders hope to have not less than 400 teachers studying in the various groups.

FOR LITTLE AMERICANS.

Our Flag.

I know three little sisters;
I think you know them, too.
One in red, and one in white,
The other one is blue.

I know three little lessons
These three sisters tell.
The first is love, then purity,
And truth we love so well.

When we think of saving, let us try to think of saving other usable things than food. Boys and girls in these days are so active that there is a great deal of wear and tear, especially tear, on clothing. In play at home or at school, children should take good care of their clothing.

Just the best you can do,
Is the service asked of you.
—The Oregon Churchman.

"A certain English divine is reported to have recently remarked: 'Iam first a British subject and then a churchman.' It is just the same as if an American had said: 'Iam first an American and then a Christian.' I do not think much of the religion of a man who will relegate his Christianity to the background. I see no contradiction between loyalty to Christ and the allegiance to our civil rulers. I see nothing in the Constitution that is opposed to the gospel, and I see nothing in the gospel that is at variance with the Constitution.'"—Cardinal Gibbons, D. D.

"Life without industry is guilt, and industry without intellect is brutality. All the busy world of flying looms and whirling spindles begins in the quiet thought of some scholar cloistered in his closet."—Ruskin.

A MESSAGE FROM BISHOP PERRY.

(Continued from page 1)

behavior. I have seen thousands of them billeted in quaint little cottages, in farms and straggling towns, and everywhere they bear themselves as guests. Sometimes they make amusing pictures sitting in family groups under the vince-covered doorways and making friends with Pere, Mere, Petitjean and Marie in Yankee or in Dixie. One youth on guard on a nearly empty village street through which we rode, had sprung to a "present!" trying to hide his confusion behind a blushing countenance while across the narrow roadway a little girl of six with whom he had been playing was making grimaces at him.

Near the Front, Sept. 2nd and 3rd.

I have been as near the Front as my mission allowed. Yesterday Colonel Perkins of the Red Cross returned from G. H. Q. with his eyes flashing and his jaw set. "You should spend your time there for the next ten days," he said pointing to the critical points on the map near the line. "I'll go today," I answered, "if you will let me have your car." "Done," said he, and Captain Prosser added, "Go up to New Chatteau on the way and fill your car with supplies for the evacuation and mobile hospitals." I asked Moody to go with me, got pass, money and my kit at the "Episcopal palace" and jumped into the car with Moody for a dash at forty miles an hour for N., which we reached at four o'clock. There we found Capain Tilney, Elton Clark and others at the Ware House. "Not much stuff on hand," they said, "but here are one hundred and fifty pounds of chocolate and fifteen thousand cigarettes.' Perkins' chauffeur shook his head. "We've a broken spring. It's taking big risks." It was just a question between death for a broken spring, or for lack of sweets and smokes in hospitals. So we piled the stuff about us and threw the car into a road for Bar le Duc.

The Sweetest and Holiest Country in All France.

It was a golden afternoon in the sweetest and holiest country in all France. The sun was low, and the shadow of the hills lay in deep colors over the woods and villages when we rode into Domremy. Far up on the hill above the village, on the edge of a forest, a high towered Church marks the place of Joan's vision. Her home lies in a little sheltered close, under overhanging trees. As we stooped to enter her little room, lighted only by a ray from a small low window, the meaning of the war to the homes of France came to me as it had never come before. It was here that the daughter of a peasant family rose from her knees to save France for all time. I went from the house to the little village church, unchanged since she received her first Communion there, and I said a prayer for France before the Altar which is flooded by light from the eastern windows and is crowned by the flags of all the Allied nations. In the stall across the aisle from me knelt a village girl of fourteen with dark, wondering eyes. When Joan knelt there five hundred years ago the villagers believed, as most of us do, that miracles belonged to a time five hundred years before them.

Ministering to the Boys a Deep Satisfaction.

"I am sitting in a long hospital tent beside a fine young boy wounded, I fear, mortally. I have his mother's address so that I can write to her later and tell her how it is with her boy. This young man's suffering and probable death are part of what I see and experience—the fearful cost of this war. Beyond, in the next bed, is a fine Southern lad who has a big shocking wound and is about to go to the operating room. He seems to like to have me with him. When I have a little leisure, I like to sit and write near my boys, for their companionship is the sweetest thing in my life. There is such deep satisfaction in being with our fine, brave soldiers. They are so courageous and patient and have much to endure.

"This is an evacuation hospital, which was placed near the front before the line was pushed back. In these days a stream of wounded came to be cared for day and night, and another stream passed out to hospital trains which caried the men to base hospitals all over France. It was at that time that I came. In April I had been assigned to a hospital at St. Nazaire, where I worked until July 17, when I was relieved and came to Paris to be reassigned to other work. That day I was sent hastily here in the emergency and unless moved again, I shall remain with this unit until the Chaplain regularly assigned here comes. It is purposed then to place me in another base hospital.

A Wonderful Experience.

"This is such a wonderful experience. I am with the boys almost all my waking hours. Twice a day I make rounds. I find out their needs. I stand by at first dressings, which are so painful—such agony—I comfort the dying,—I try to,—and pray with them. Never before have I been so convinced of immortality as in this place. Where there is suffering and death in a great cause one learns to look at death more deeply as a gateway into larger immortality through which one sees the glory beyond, where the reason for this pain shall be better understood. Near by there is a cemetery with row on row of wooden crosses where I bury our brave dead and read the hallowed words of our burial office. Itis a lovely spot, with a beautiful wood close by. Above, in the sky, airplanes fly. Just before the burial of an English aviator, one came and scattered flowers. Such a place means so much. I always use the Collect for Easter Even. At St. Nazaire we had three volleys fired over the grave, but here this cannot be and taps are blown on the bugle.

These boys are so thoughtful. There is a lad here badly gassed and when I suggested doing things for him he was afraid it would keep me from those who needed me more.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Junior Clergy Missionary Association.

About fifty clergymen who are members of the Junior Clergy Missionary Association met at St. Michael's Church Oct. 7th. After half an hour of intercessions for missions and for the work of the chaplains of our armed forces, there was luncheon served by ladies of the parish, followed by a business meeting. The Rev. G. Aston Oldham, of St. Ann's, Brooklyn, is this year's president; the Rev. Harold G. Willis, vice-president; the Rev. J. Henry Fitzgerald, treasurer, and the Rev. E. Briggs Nash, of St. John's Cathedral, secretary. The devotional tone of the meetings of this association is very promising, and there seems to be no fear of even an extemporaneous word of prayer in the intercessions. The address of the day was by Bishop Reese, of Columbus, Ohio, who had illuminating things to say of "This Time and its Lessons." The meetings are held monthly in various parishes, and the topics for the year are arranged under the general head of "The Church and the Present Crisis." The appointed speakers include the Rev. Drs. Manning, Stires, Slattery, Gardner, Delaney and Fosbroke.

The Anglican and Eastern Association.

"The Anglican and Eastern Association for promoting intercommunion between the Anglican and Eastern Orthodox Churches" held a series of important meetings Oct. 6th and 7th, the Metropolitan of Athens being the honored and revered guest, with other members of his staff. His Grace preached in the Cathedral Sunday afternoon, and spoke again in the evening at St. Michael's with a dignitary of the Serbian Church, together with Bishops Darlington and Parker, who are greatly interested in uniting these two great branches of the Catholic Church.

Monday at 3:00 P. M. about fifty people assembled in Synod Hall for a conference. Bishop Greer and Dean Robbins made addresses of welcome, and the greetings of the Association were given the visitors by the Bishop of New Hampshire. Bishops Courtney and Lloyd also spoke. Dean Papadoulos, of the Athenian Theological Seminary, made the principal address in reply. At the dinner to the Metropolitan in the Undercroft of Synod Hall, there were only about sixty people, but they were representative and influential, including the Serbian consul, who made a brilliant speech. Bishops Greer and Parker presided, and various delegates spoke. The Metropolitan responded in Greek, interpreted by an English-speaking professor from Athens. His Grace is impressive looking, and there was considerable charm and dignity in the manner of his delivery. With his flowing beard, dark hair, long and just turning gray, added to his bright, deep-set eyes, he gave one the feeling of looking on a Eusebius just stepped out of the Nicean Council.

Small as the gathering was in our Synod Hall, it may mean much in the hoped-for-days of reunion.

Church for Deaf Mutes.

St. Ann's Church for the Deaf at 511 W. 148th St., is the only church of its kind in New York State.

It was founded as a Bible Class with twenty members in 1850, at St. Stephen's Church, W. 69th St., by the Rev. Thomas Gallaudet, D. D., a clergyman of world-wide fame for his interest in the deaf. The Rev. Mr. Gallaudet's father established the first school for the Deaf in the United States in 1817, and married one of his deaf pupils. The Rev. Mr. Gallaudet also married a deaf mute.

About twenty years ago, St. Ann's was consolidated with St. Matthew's Church, W. 84th St. In 1897 the present building was erected, and in 1912 the parish house was added. The Rev. Dr. John Chamberlain, who celebrated his golden jubilee as a priest two years ago, is Vicar of the church, with which he has been connected since 1873.

The Curate is the Rev. John H. Keiser, M. A., the only deaf clergyman in New York City and the first to be ordained in the diocese of New York. He is a graduate of the N. Y. Institute for the Deaf, and also of Gallaudet College, Washington, D. C.

The Rev. Mr. Keiser is married to a deaf girl who grew up with him at "Fanwood," as the school for the deaf is known. Last year the Keisers celebrated their tenth wedding anniversary. They have two children, both girls and perfectly normal.

The Rev. Mr. Keiser conducts missions for the deaf mutes in Brooklyn, Jamaica, Newark, Newburgh and Portchester, as well as in New York, while the work of St. Ann's Parish actually covers New York State as far as Poughkeepsie, Southern New Jersey and Long Island. Within these boundaries there are some 8,000 deaf mutes.

Services follow the prescribed order of the morning and evening prayer as set forth in the Book of Common Prayer. There are also frequent celebrations of the Holy Communion.

Services are in the sign language. The Book of Common Prayer lends itself with peculiar beauty to sign interpretation.

There is a choir at St. Ann's composed of six members. All hymns are rhythmically rendered in the sign language.

WANTED BY TWO MISSIONARIES IN KANSAS.

Any one who has a Stereopticon Lantern to give away or loan for use until Jan. 1, 1919, in the Blue Valley Missions of Kansas is requested to write Mr. Charles Bailey, Box 247, Blue Rapids, Kansas. The Missions will pay freight chages.

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York
Offers a thorough classical course leading to B. A. Also two years' preparatory in Greek, Latin and Mathematics. Fees, including room, board, etc., are moderate. Scholarships awarded to highly recommended and well qualified young men. Address, the Reverend the President Rodgers.

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL
A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
All Saints' School, Sioux Falls, S. D., a Church School for girls College preparation, general course, music, physical training.
RT. REV. H. L. BURLESON, President
MISS HELEN S. PEABODY, Principal

Collegiate School, Military for Boys, Denver, Colo.
All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations. Address REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Revd. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffeila, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE."
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America. Address.
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

INSTRUCTIVE ORDINATION SERMON

A Clear and Practical Message on the Offices of the Ministry and to the Laity

We print below extended excerpts from a sermon preached at Ithaca, N. Y., by the Rev. Frederick W. Dickinson on the occasion of the ordination to the Diaconate of Mr. Ralph Simpson Nanz. Mr. Nanz has been engaged in Mission work near Ithaca as a lay reader, first while an instructor in the University and then while engaged in government service. He became a candidate for Holy Orders through his interest in this work. Until advanced to the priesthood he will continue in government service and in charge of the Missions which he served as a layman.

As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you.

Verily, Verily, I say unto you, he that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth Me; and he that receiveth Me receiveth Him sent Me. St. John XX 21 and XIII 20.

The Church is the body of the baptized, among whom the sacraments are administered, and the word of God preached.

The Church is a living organism—not merely an organization—and like other organisms, is self-perpetuating. To insure the preservation of the divine life with which God endowed it, and which He has enshrined in the holy sacraments, it is necessary that those who administer those sacraments should act with the same authority which was exercised by the first servants of Christ. These, Christ Himself ordained and commissioned, to act for Him and to represent Him effectively to those who should be grafted into His body, the Catholic Church.

Our Church, in common with other Catholic communions accepts and acts on the teachings given from the beginning, that the Ministry is composed of those who have been given the grace of the sacrament of Holy Order received at the hands of a Bishop, who in turn has authority to bestow that gift in the name of God and His Church. As we find the first Bishops of the Church, notably Saint Paul, ordaining and sending men to act as Christ's representatives, so now the Bishops of the Church have and exercise the same power to ordain and send those who have vocation to serve our Blessed Lord by trying to win souls to Him.

We see that those who are ordained thus are bound by the vows required of them, when they receive the Holy Spirit, to try to shape their lives so as to do God's work best.

One Can't Teach What One Doesn't Know.

It is axiomatic to say that one can't teach what one doesn't know. Nowhere is this more evident than in the case of those who are called to teach Christ's people the truths of our holy religion. He who speaks and acts in Christ's Name must be in close communion with Christ. The means to this end is the Life of Devotion. No man is fit to serve as a representative of Christ who does not give a sufficient amount of time and attention to the deepening of his devotional life.

Primarily, a clergyman must be a man of God. This he can become only by giving himself to prayer and the study of God's word, the Holy Scriptures, in order that he may establish in his life an atmosphere of devotion which shall color all that he does. The practice of the presence of God must be first concern. Devotion must be the background against which each act can stand out in clear relief, illuminated, speaking of God.

I recall a story of a clergyman who had just finished preaching a "successful sermon." No one was offended. Everybody was pleased with it. The man's eloquence and pleasant manner of speaking won admiration. The well arranged style pleased all who heard it. All? No, one person stopped to speak with the clergyman after the sermon and said: "Your sermon was well constructed; your reasoning was good; it might have helped me, but what you are spoke so much louder than what you said that I couldn't hear you." The first duty of the clergy is to try to cultivate the beauty of holiness. By prayer, by meditation, by study, they must draw near to our Blessed Lord. Personal holiness, that reflection from the very face of God, should be the aim of those who serve God as His representatives. This is a life-long task. It never grows easier. It is a shadow from Calvary which falls across the path which the servants of God must tread. One can't lead others where one dare not go one's self. One can not preach the cross unless one is willing to bear it!

The Interior Life is that which makes or mars the usefulness of the clergy, and it is not possible to stress the importance of it too strongly.

The Sacrament Not a Bit of Magic.

We thank God that we have a succession from the Apostles which all the changes and chances of history have not impaired. Even the Reformation, so called, did not deprive us of the continuity of the Ministry. We bless God's Holy Name that in the Episcopate is inherent the apostolic grace and authority which nurtured the infant church and made the cross the banner of salvation. When one is made a Deacon, one receives this sacramental grace of Holy Order. What is important to keep ever in mind is that this sacrament, like all other sacraments, is not a bit of magic. The grace of Orders, apart from the grace of good, hard work, will produce nothing but remorse in the life of him who receives it. Without the prayerful resolution to co-operate with the grace so given, it is vain. In this, as in other parts of the Faith, we are reminded again and again that the Christian religion is not a philosophy; it isn't ethics which vary with the ratio of environment; it isn't a series of thrills which can be experienced if the light is right and the setting proper—IT IS A LIFE. The grace of God given and received in ordination must be used, else it withers, being divorced from life. Soon we shall witness a miracle. By the laying on of the Bishop's hand, the candidate for Holy Orders will receive that which by nature he cannot have, the special gift of God to enable him to do a special work for God in His Church. But the life of devotion is requisite to the fulfillment of the life of which ordination is the beginning. Action is ceremonial. It is the outward expression of an inward life. If it be anything less than this, it is hollow—a pretence. Hence it is that the chief thing demanded of the clergy is a life of devotion to God which shall be the moving cause of all that they do.

Men, Women and Children Hungry for The Gospel.

The Interior Life of Devotion finds its normal expression in the second part of the clergyman's life—the exterior life. The outward life of the servant of God takes its direction from the words of our Master: The Son of Man came not be served but to serve. In this connection, let me give a quotation from a Lieutenant who is an instructor in one of the camps, he says: "Seventy-five eager, hungry men are mine to teach; they are hungry for all that I can give, and more. Each day I give ten hours of drill and lectures, the lectures being on affairs military, personal, ethical, and spiritual. To you I have not to take time to explain my need, for you see that a man's possibilities for useful service are limited only by his powers. And, oh, I feel so small and weak!" That, I take it, is the way in which all of us feel to whom has been committed the cure of souls. It is not regret, it is a challenge! Let us paraphrase and say "A clergyman's opportunities for useful service are limited only by his powers. Men, women, yes and little children are eager, hungry for the GOSPEL—the Good-News of Christ. Only as our lives are in touch with our Blessed Lord and His Saints can our outward life find its expression giving food to the souls of Christ's people who are hungry for Him.

Must Visit The People in Their Homes.

The first essential in cultivating the exterior life is to know your people. The congregation whom you will serve is not made up of specimens to be used for mental and spiritual vivi-section, but men and women who want the truth about God, and who want that truth stated in no half-hearted, timid, vapid manner! Reality must be the keynote of all religious service. Get to know your people in their homes. Try to gain a share, if even a small share, of their lives. Let the love of souls in Christ be your beginning and your ending. To you, their religious leader, they will look with trust, and to you is committed the responsibility of feeding their souls with the Gospel. Other subjects, however interesting and alluring to mental curiosity, are not to be substituted for the Gospel. Bear in mind that many of our people have not been instructed in the truths of religion, and meet this need by giving instructions, rather than by preaching sermons which will gain you a reputation for eloquence. To know one's people, to love one's people, to instruct one's people! These are the elements which comprise the exterior life of the clergy.

A Word to the Laity.

To you among whom he who is to be ordained will serve, I would say a word. God's servant comes to direct your attention to spiritual truths. He comes not as an entertainer, he comes to be your leader in God. Do not think of Him as a person who reads the service and preaches to you once a week! Let him share your life. Receive him in the Name of the Master Whom we all serve. Look on him as one to whom authority has been given by God to teach you the way of life eternal. Listen to him, knowing that he has but one object—YOUR GOOD; but one hope—YOUR SPIRITUAL WELFARE. When he comes to you in your homes, let him be for the time being one of the family. Don't feel that when he comes you ought to look unhappy and be unnatural! Let him know your difficulties. Ask him questions about the Church. Work with him, that, by God's grace, he may bring you nearer to our Blessed Lord. Remember that he is a human being like all of us. Don't try to find things which you can criticise, but meet him half-way, and you will be surprised to see how much good hearty friendliness will do for him and for you! Recall our Saviour's words that whoever receives His servants receives Him. Give him your undivided support and encouragement. Let him feel that he can count on your loyalty. Remember that the servant of God gives up gladly many things (which he might otherwise enjoy) for the sake of his people. This he does that he may give his whole attention to your needs. Meet him half-way, therefore, and hold up his hands that he may give himself entirely to your service, under God. Bear in mind always that he is not acting in his own name, he is not teaching what he thinks, he is acting in God's Name, with God's authority, and he is teaching you what the Church KNOWS!

JERUSALEM.

Rescued from the Turk After so Many Centuries.

(Katherine Lee Bates in The Congregationalist).

At last, at last the Crescent
Falls back before the Cross,
Great spirits incandescent
With longing and with loss,
Gleam from the clouds, crusaders
Who knew no requiem
While Saladin's invaders
Possessed Jerusalem.

King David harps for Zion
A glad, celestial psalm;
The face of the young lion
Is toward the sacred palm;
Now Europe's noblest nation
Has won the diadem
Of him who brings salvation
To thee, Jerusalem.

Isaiah, Hosea, Amos,
Who cried against thy sin,
Whose vision saw thy famous,
Bright bulwarks beaten in,
And made a cup of trembling,
God's house a broken gem,
On all the winds assembling Comfort, Jerusalem.

The Christ, Messiah proven,
Whose gentle armies free
Thy walls, not battle-cloven,
But won with jubilee:
As when thy people, pressing,
Would touch His garment's hem,
Enters with love and blessing
Thy gates, Jerusalem.

Arise and shine, O City,
The joy of all the earth!
Show poverty God's pity;
Teach misery God's mirth.
Be thou to all the nations
A light, ay, even to them
Who wrought thy tribulations,
Holy Jerusalem!

"Whoever obeys nature's laws, finds his work crowned with beauty. Obey the law of perfect writing, and you have literature; the law of right and wrong, and you have character."—Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D.

PARISH LEAFLET PUBLICATIONS

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and est equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand, ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service and for giving notices—"Lest he forget." Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM — In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS — New Families Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial, 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT CARDS—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 25 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.50. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms — Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a 100.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches), to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above cards for One Dollar.

Vestiblue Bracket — Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant With God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England — A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church—Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People—A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS.

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Four-page folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies, $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies, 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards.
   Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14). First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA.
Worthy of Universal Adoption.

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching," which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet, or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—

1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Misisonary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES:—

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson—a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:—

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts of Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
The Evening Service.
Henry XIII.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government, to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, IND.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 96. CHICAGO, ILL., AND HOBART, IND., NOVEMBER 2, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

COUNCIL OF MISSIONARY BISHOPS

Important and Far Reaching Changes Recommended in the Domestic Missionary Field

By the Rt. Rev. HUGH L. BURLESON, D.D.

A new thing was launched in the Church when the first Council of Missionary Bishops met under the presidency of Bishop Thomas at Cheyenne, Wyoming, October 9th to 13th. For the first time a group of bishops with common problems met together for the purpose of mutual conference, quite apart from the distractions of the General Convention of the formal meetings of the House of Bishops, and the four days they spent together were so fruitful and stimulating that all who were present went away convinced of the value of this new organization, both to the work of the bishops themselves and of the general Church.

Cheyenne was most hospitable to the eight bishops who gatherd. The meetings were held at the Bishop's residence, and before the quarantine due to influenza put the ban upon public gatherings, Bishop Thomas had managed to slip in a very effective parish dinner and a social evening with the men of the city.

Those present at the Council were Bishops Thomas, Page, Funsten, Sanford, Howden, Touret, Bruleson and Bunting; also the new Domestic Secretary, the Rev. Francis S. White, and the Rev. Dr. Gardner, Secretary of the General Board of Religious Education. The total membership of the Council, which includes all missionary Bishops in the continental domestic field, is eighteen. Of the eleven who were absent, three were detained by illness, two are with the forces in Europe, and two live on the Atlantic Coast; therefore the attendance of those who might reasonably be expected was satisfactorily large.

The first general subject considered was "Church Institutions." Bishop Funsten read an excellent paper which became the basis of discussion, after which the conclusions of the Council were summarized and presented in the following resolutions:

Church Schools a Primary Factor in Development of the Church

1. We accept this definition of a Church School: "An institution duly incorporated, in which the property is legally assured for the Church, and in which the influence of Churchmen is dominant and permanent."

2. We record our conviction that Church Schools have been a primary factor in the development of the Church in the West, and that they have an important place in our missionary policy.

3. If we are to secure the best results, there should be co-ordination of interest and effort among ourselves, and a certain territory should be recognized as a special sphere for each school.

4. We urge the immediate consideration of the whole subject of Church Schools by the General Board of Religious Education.

The Great Value of Church Hospitals.

RESOLVED, That this Council of Missionary Bishops, recognizing the great value of Church Hospitals, Sanitoria, and other charitable institutions, such as Children's Homes, etc., as important opportunities for sacrifice and service in the development of our Missionary Districts, give such benevolent work our hearty approval and support.

RESOLVED, Further, That a Standing Committe of three be appointed to carefully review any plans for the starting of any new institutions or the suspension of any existing Church institutions in our domestic missionary fields.

That, pending the adoption of some plan by the General Church whereby the Church shall enlist and organize the co-operation of physicians who are Churchmen, for the medical and healing work, the committee may, as occasion arises, temporarily add to its number physicians, within or without the territory represented by this Council, to the end that the healing profession may be enlisted and officially recognized in any plans that the Council of Continental Bishops may have for hospital work.

That a copy of this report be sent to the Joint Commission on Social Service, with the request that they consider whether the fostering of hospitals and charitable institutions of the Church be not a proper function of their Commission.

On the evening of the first day the bishops attended as guests a delightful supper at St. Mark's Church. The Rev. S. A. Huston, rector of St. Mark's, presided. He then introduced Bishop Thomas as toastmaster, who in turn introduced in appropriate and delightful fashion Judge J. M. Carey, the seven other bishops present, the Rev. Mr. White and the Rev. Dr. Gardner. It is no slight tribute to the members of this council to state that dinner was eaten, thirteen addresses made, and the meeting adjourned at 9:45.

The second topic taken up for discussion was that of our Indian work, to which an afternoon was devoted. The council was deeply interested in the enterprise of Bishop Thomas among the Arapahoes of which he told most interestingly. A valuable and illuminating discussion followed, but no formal resolutions were passed.

A Common Budget Proposed.

The third day of the conference brought the bishops to the important and difficult question of "A Common Budget" and the whole matter of relating their work with the Board of Missions. The entire day was devoted to the matter. A paper was read on this subject by Bishop Burleson. The Council then went into a committee of the whole for a general discussion, and finally the following resolutions were presented and adopted:

1. This Council of Missionary Bishops believes that a common budget for the work of the Continental Domestic Missionary field is desirable, and asks the Board of Missions to undertake it.

2. This Budget should include all proposed expenditures of the Continental Domestic Missionary Bishops for (a) salaries and travel, (b) institutions, (c) buildings, and (d) miscellaneous needs for the ensuing year.

3. The duties of the Executive Committee of this Council are as follows:

1. To prepare and present to the Board of Missions the annual budget of the Continental Domestic Missionary Bishops.

2. To formulate in conference with the Board of Missions plans whereby the Bishops may co-operate with the Board for the raising of funds for missionary work.

4. The Bishops shall continue to solicit and receive specials to apply on the budget. They may also solicit specials for needs not included in the budget, approved by the Executive Committee of this Council and the Board of Missions.

5. To increase the efficiency of

Continued on Page 7.

ILLINOIS CELEBRATES ITS CENTENNIAL.

Clergy Take Part in Patriotic Service at Springfield

The great state of Illinois in its recent celebration of its centennial as a state placed a significant emphasis upon the solmenity of the festivities by concluding a three days' observance with a great patriotic union service at the State Arsenal in the capital city of Springfield at which over five thousand people were present on Sunday evening, October 6th. The Friday and Saturday before had been given to the presentation of a great Masque of Illinois, in which the history of the state was reviewed with all the splendor and beauty of poetry, music and dramatic picturing.

Saturday was given to the dedication of the State House grounds, of the statue of Lincoln by Andrew O'Connor with a dedicatory speech by Lord Charnwood and a statue of Douglas by Gilbert T. Riswold with a dedicatory speech by Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels.

The Illinois Centennial Commission placed the concluding celebration on Sunday evening before the Springfield Ministerial Association, of which the Rev. Lester Leake Riley, rector of Christ Church, is president, and invitations were sent to all faiths to participate. Accordingly, at the early hour of seven o'clock the great congregation had assembled for a community sing of one hour of patriotic songs and familiar hymns, and it is significant to record, in Lincoln's home town, that the singing was led by the Colored Centennial Chorus of nearly two hundred voices, who also contributed a group of their own negro folk hymns which met the fervent response of every one not only because of their religious fervor but the artistic rendition of those racial melodies in all their wonderful harmony and rhythm. This event alone is worthy of notice, for it brought about a spirit of mutual understanding and appreciation between the races.

Promptly at 8 o'clock before the Governor and the distinguished Centennial guests, the regular order of service was followed with all the quiet dignity and beauty of a Church service. The devotions were led by a Methodist, a Presbyterian and a Lutheran minister. The Scripture lesson was read by the Jewish rabbi. Lord Charnwood gave a short address which revealed the speaker's interpretation of Christian experience as a man of penetrating spiritual insight. His address concluded with the word of the English communion service—"Here we offer and present unto Thee, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and lively sacrifice unto Thee!" The sermon of the occasion was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Z. Barney Phillips, rector of St. Peter's Church, St. Louis, Mo., from the text, "O ye that love the Lord, see that ye hate the thing that is evil." It was a patriotic appeal suited to the moment and struck a responsive chord in that great assembly by its high appeal and noble eloquence.

This patriotic union service deserves record as a fitting climax to the centennial celebration of the great state of Illinois.

The Rev. Francis B. Nash, who has been serving faithfully and well as locum tenens at Trinity Church, Chicago, since last June, will return to Sarasota, Florida, on Monday, November 3rd. In the past, Chicago was familiar to him, as his youth was spent in the shadow of the great middle west city. For five years he was rector of Christ Church, Ottawa, Ill. In June, 1878, standing before the pulpit in Trinity Church, the Rt. Rev. Edward Sullivan expressed the wish that the Rev. Mr. Nash "might one day stand there in his place.' June first of this year that wish was granted.

THE MINNESOTA FOREST FIRE

Toll of Human Life 1,200—Parishes and Rectors Suffer a Total Loss of Property

The great forest fires which swept over a large section of the northeastern part of Minnesota a few weeks ago, rendered thousands homeless and took a toll of human life estimated at over 1,200.

It will be a matter of special interest to Churchmen throughout the country that the property of St. Andrew's Parish at Cloquet and of St. Andrew's Mission at Moose Lake was totally destroyed and only partially covered by insurance.

The church building at Moose Lake had been in use for about one year, erected under the administration of the Missionary, the Rev. T. J. E. Wilson. It was a very inviting church and a credit to the congregation and the community. The members of the Mission are left without a place in which to worship, and the missionary, owing to the heavy losses sustained by the people, will probably receive from them very little or nothing in the way of a salary for several months to come, but he is staying on the ground ministering to his people and giving them such assistance as he is able.

The property of St. Andrew's Parish at Cloquet consisting of a beautiful church and fine rectory, were also totally destroyed. Fifteen cords of wood just cut by the rector, the Rev. H. G. Stacey, and placed in the basement of the rectory, all of his household goods, clothing, books and sermons were burned up. He is also faithfully at work ministering to his people without any prospect of receiving a salary while his parishioners are making a new start in life.

It would seem that ample provision should be made by contributions from Churchmen throughout the country to care for both of these zealous and faithful clergymen, to reimburse them for the loss they have sustained, and to restore the church property.

The Rev. Dr. Ryan, of St. Paul's Church, Duluth, in a communication to The Witness, says, "I feel keenly that these small churches should be taken care of and this will not be done nor the parsons supported, unless help comes from the outside, and I feel the help should go to them, rather than to some other point. They are both noble men, doing unusual service, and now is our opportunity."

The Diocese of Minnesota responded promptly, and the Rev. F. D. Tyner, of Minneapolis was appointed to make a tour of investigation and report the needs of parishes and missions and Church people who had suffered by the fire. The Rev. Dr. Rollit also visited the fire swept section with the purpose of doing what he could to encourage and help the people. Duluth has responded splendidly to its opportunity although the fire destroyed part of its suburbs and took in its toll of life a number of its prominent young people. St. Luke's Hospital at once opened its doors without charge, taking care of about seventy-five badly burned persons and ministered to many more who were less seriously injured.

The fire was one of the greatest disasters that has occurred in the country. Those who sustained losses will for the most part be well cared for, as county and state authorities have taken steps to reinstate farmers and laborers in new homes and to make provision whereby they will be able to continue in their usual occupations. But interest will soon be lost in the work of the Church unless Church people everywhere come to the rescue. Under any circumstance it will be a long time before the work of the Church can be restored to such a basis as it enjoyed before the fire. It would be a wonderful stimulous to the work and a great encouragement to the people if their places of worship could be rebuilt at an early date. Response to this urgent call for help should be generous and immediate.

BISHOP CHESHIRE'S ANNIVERSARY

Joseph Blount Cheshire, fifth Bishop of North Carolina, was consecrated on Oct. 15, 1893. The people of his Diocese had planned for a commemoration of his 25th Anniversary in Tarboro on Oct. 15, 1918.

The influenza was so prevalent in the State of North Carolina that public assemblies had been forbidden. This was not contrary to the gathering of the Bishop's family and a few of his old friends in Christ Church, Raliegh, on the morning of Oct. 15, where he celebrated the Holy Communion with his dear ones about him. The Rev. A. B. Hunter read the Gospel and the Rev. M. A. Barber, Rector of the Church, the Epistle. There are eight clergymen now in the Diocese who were in it when the Bishop was elected. It had been planned to have a celebration of the Holy Communion in Tarboro with a reception in the afternoon and a public service of congratulation at night and there is still hope that such a public commemoration may take place. One of the Bishop's family was in khaki, being at home on a furlough, having been wounded in France by the accidental discharge of hand grenades. Another son is in France, and two daughters are wives of missionaries in China.

The influenza also has caused the postponement of the consecration of the Rev. H. B. Delany as Suffragan Bishop of North Carolina which was to have taken place in St. Augustine's Chapel on St. Luke's Day during the session of the Conference of Church Workers among Colored People. This conference also was necessarily postponed.

GREETING TO CHURCHMEN OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE

The following resolution was adopted at the October meeting of the Church Club of the Diocese of Michigan, when the Club was honored by an address by the Bishop of Oxford:

The Church Club of the Diocese of Michigan assembled in Detroit, Michigan, at their regular monthly meeting, October 16th, 1918, send brotherly greetings to

The Churchmen of the British Empire, and respectfully ask that the Right Reverend Charles Gore, D. D., Bishop of Oxford, carry these greetings home with him to prove our appreciation of all that was done for us by the British and our other Allies before we were ready to enter the World War, and we desire them to know at this present time that we will all work diligently and faithfully to win the war and for the right kind of Peace for the whole world."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by G. W. J.

On St. Luke's Day, twenty-seven years ago, in the city of Omaha, the Editor-in-Chief of this paper, the Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, D. D., together with the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop of New Jersey, and the Rev. John Albert Williams, Rector of St. Phillip's Church, Omaha, Nebr., were advanced to the Priesthood.

COLUMBUS DAY

The papers have been giving us accounts of the celebrating of "Columbus Day" in many of our large cities, principally along the Atlantic Coast. It has always been a wonder to me that all of America does not make more of that day than it does. It should really, it seems to me, be a public holiday in all parts of our vast land. Another thing I often wonder about, is why one sees so few statues of the man to whom we owe the discovery of America. An editorial in the Boston Herald, fitting for the day, is so interesting that I reproduce it in this column:

America pauses midway in the grandest undertaking of her history for another backward look at Columbus, and never did the discovery which she now commemorates annually take on the sublime meanings or furnish the solemn inspiration with which it is freighted today. The sailing of the Santa Maria, the Pinta and the Nina from Spain in the days of Ferdinand and Isabella has been called "the most momentous event in the world's annals since the fall of Rome," but it would take a library to describe its consequences and an epic to celebrate them worthily. Little more than four centuries ago this vast continent had no place on the map and was inhabited by savages; today 103,000,000, mainly the descendants of Europeans, are at home here shouldering the world's burden and furnishing the world's moral leadership in the greatest war ever fought on this planet.

Think of what has been done since the first English colony was formed on these shores in 1607. No uneventful tale of a "pent-up Utica" has been ours, but a record of expansion and achievement which went on until well-nigh the whole of a geographically unified territory had been gathered in under a unified political system. We have turned our prairies into flowing fields of wheat, brought our waste lands under cultivation, developed the country's mineral resources, and put such skill into our manufacturing industries that their products have gone out to the uttermost parts of the earth; today our harvesting machines gather in the grain in far-off Thibet, our watches tick in the Eskimo's igloo and American clothing is worn in Tokio and Pekin.

Some of that progress has been due to the pioneer, some of it to the soldier, much of it to the organizing intelligence of our scientists and captains of industry.

Through it all we have assisted at as well as witnessed the birth of every thing that can be called modern in the way of discovery and invention. Eliminate American efficiency in this field and how much would be left in the list of the nineteenth and twentieth century marvels which have transformed life and added so enormously to its conveniences. Nor have we fallen short in the higher things. Our educational systems cover the land and we have a public school system which is a model for the world.

We Have Abated Nothing of Our Idealism.

The question asked by foreigners today is not "Who reads an American book?" but, "Who neglects one?"

Meanwhile we have advanced in world outlook aud have abated nothing of our idealism. Time was when Europe seemed far from our purposes and we regarded "entangling alliances" with disfavor. We fought our revolutionary war to achieve national independence, our civil war was to keep the Union whole, the Spanish-American war to save a people from intolerable oppression.

Today we have sent an army of 2,000,000 men to France, and they are there not for selfish interests of our own, but to suppress organized wrong, to put right in its place and establish firm foundations for peace. See how the coming of Columbus links itself up with the mighty drama in which we are now playing so splendid and so successful a part! Surely it must have been written in the book of fate from the beginning, that we should shake off the shackles of kings and found here a home for free men, that here we should nurture them into numbers and strength and that in the fullness of time, in the hour of humanity's greatest peril, we should stand forth as its champion, in the front rank of its defenders, perhaps also—with our deciding weight on the fortunes of battle—even as its savior.

And as we ponder over the romance and wonder of it, the thought of a new discovery of America mingles with the thought of the old in the poet's lines:

Then, pale and worn, he kept his deck
And peered through the darkness, Oh, that night
Of all dark nights! A light! A light! A light!
It grew, a starlight flag unfurled.
It grew to be Time's burst of dawn.
He gained a world; he gave that world
Its grandest lesson: "Oh, sail on!"

"LOOK UPON ZION"

I have been watching the papers to see what attitude they would take on the closing of the churches during this epidemic of the influenza. Many of our church papers have written on the subject and a few of the daily newspapers. The Boston Herald has an editorial on this subject under the caption above, as follows:

Seldom in the three centuries of civilized life hereabout have church buildings stood without assemblies as in the weeks now passing. This hiatus in the public ministrations of the churches may well occasion thoughtfulness in minds not usually heedful of what churches are doing.

Just as we may speak slightingly or censoriously, as many do nowadays, yet how few would welcome a churchless city! Who would not hear with genuine regret of a permanent cessation of gatherings where prayer is wont to be made and the words of men essay to reach the often dim but ever dear realities of the human spirit? This temporary hush and emptiness in the churches may, indeed, make their meaning and worth in the community the more apparent to world-drawn minds.

There is a splendid passage in Isaiah describing the disordering of common life in war time, which closes its assurance of deliverance with the words, "And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick"—thus aptly matching our present conditions. It declares: "Thine eyes shall behold a far-stretching land." Then, as if to furnish aid in so doing, and recalling how the temple-crowned hill of Jerusalem looms above the wilderness wherein the hard-pressed have taken refuge in "the munitions of rocks," the prophet enjoins: "Look upon Zion, the city of our Solemnities."

For, in time of trouble, there is no greater aid to seeing the goodness of God and the wide range of our resources than to turn attention to the place where God is worshipped and his mercies made known.

The Churches Strengthen Hope, and Courage Against the Day of Trouble.

This ancient injunction to "Look upon Zion" is timely now. Allowing for all their defects due to human failings and waywardness, the churches yet have much to hearten lovers of good and strengthen their hope and courage against the day of trouble. In them, as surely nowhere else among man-handled institutions, there is a sense of things divine and eternal, a realization of motives and ideals which ever haunt the time beaten spirit of man and lure it to nobler living. In the churches the souls of mortals emerge into definiteness; the things of time are at least silhouetted if not always illumined by the gleam of eternity's light; cares and sorrows, temptations and sins, hopes and fears, blessings and joys, are seen in the radiance of Father love; to crown all, the brotherhood of men, is the consummate ideal there proclaimed and with varying fidelity, put to the test of practice, under a leadership transcendently strong during these nineteen centuries.

Such are these institutions which for the time being—happily not for long—have ceased their perennial assemblies to help serve emergency needs.

Meanwhile, pastors and their people have thrown themselves into all sorts of beneficient personal work.

Amid all, what plans and provisions for the immediate future they have been working out! Soon the churches will open their full ministries again. Does not such a life as theirs summon right-minded men and women to share it and to lend their aid?

A Stack of Pennies 436 Miles High.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger tells us that "The United States is the principal producer of the indispensable war material, copper, and that we need lots of it these days for pennies."

It goes on to say: "Such a demand for these little coins was never before known. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918, the treasury department made and issued 446,628,201 cents. The best way to get a notion of how many cents that means is to lay them out in a row. If this were done in such wise as to make a single line of coppers (edge to edge) it would extend from Philadelphia to San Francisco, then back to Philadelphia, and from the latter point to Boston.

If piled singly, one on top of another, they would form a stack 436 miles high, or 67 times the height of the loftiest mountains in the world.

These cents are 95 per cent copper, 3 per cent tin and 2 per cent zinc. They were stamped out of metal sheets and struck with dies at the mints in Philadelphia, Denver and San Francisco.

What becomes of all the cents? Nobody has been able ever, to explain. The government keeps on turning them out by hundreds of millions yearly, and they disappear just about as fast. Few people nowadays realize that two-cent pieces were in common circulation 40 years ago. There are still 57,000,000 of them outstanding and unredeemed, but almost never one of them is seen. The two-cent piece was of course equal in value to the English penny. But in our grandfather's day there were also copper half-cents, or farthings."

While gazing at a north-end window display of the amount of food required to feed one soldier for one year, I heard a motherly soul say: "They don't allow them any pepper." One of Italy's daughters leaning on a strapping doughboy's arm, lovingly looked him in the face and exclaimed, "They no needa the pep. They from our Unite State!"—A Line 'o Type or Two.

Is It Worth While?

Bishop Junius W. Horner, of Asheville, N. C., sends out an appeal for funds to keep the schools for mountain boys and girls open. It is too bad that this much needed work should face a danger of closing for lack of funds; which is what will happen unless help is forthcoming from the outside. If there be any person who reads this appeal and who can help, please do so:

The conservation and preparation of the future citizenship of our country, on the part of both Church and State, are recognized by all of us as prime duties.

The pathetic appeal for assistance in behalf of the war-torn countries of the world should receive and have received generous responses from our people. There is a danger, however, and we in the mountains are feeling it, of everlooking the immediate needs of our own young people, who are to assume responsibilities of after-the-war conditions, and we know these responsibilities will be very great.

No more thoroughly American citizenship can be found any where than in the Southern Appalachian Mountains. In some of the counties there are less than five persons out of every hundred not born in the mountains.

The draft has called the attention of the Military Department to the fact that the education of these strong mountain boys has been neglected in the past, when necessary comparison has been made as to the advantages received by them and by the soldiers drafter from the cities and low country.

It costs at the rate of a thousand dollars a year to take the time of a soldier in camp to learn to read and write where a hundred dollars would do the same work in his home environment. It should be sufficient to state, without giving specific instances, that the public school facilities are not satisfactory, and, for a time at least, there is urgent need for the Church and private philanthropy to come in and help out in our mountain districts.

We have four Industrial Schools established at strategic points in the mountains of North Carolina. Last year we had to shorten the terms of some of these schools because of financial reasons. This would not be necessary if the people knew the conditions. One of these schools has a service flag with 104 stars in it.

Due in great measure to the influence and help of these schools the Missionary District of Asheville has been able to supply its full proportional share of the increase of the Ministry of the Church. The Bishop of the District has ordained 23 Priests during the 23 years since the District was organized; 17 of these were started as Postulants in the District; nine are still in the District; and others are caring for important parishes in the Dioceses of New York, Pennsylvania, North Carolina and South Carolina.

The help given this District has yielded good returns. The people of the mountains have responded well.

The District shows a very satisfactory growth since its organization.

There are 50,000 boys and girls in the mountains of North Carolina who should have the kind of industrial training our schools can give them. Over four schools should have, and with proper equipment would have, an enrollment of 1,000 pupils.

With the work done by the pupils on farms and in shops, it requires at present about $100 to care for one pupil for one school year.

It has been worth while that you have given in the past. Your help is needed now that our schools may not be forced to close.

Contributions may be sent to the Board of Missions in New York, marked "Special for Asheville," or sent direct to Junius M. Horner, Asheville, North Carolina.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER.

Learning to Pray.

There is in our day a very marked interest in prayer; at least there is a great deal of talk about it, and books on prayer are widely circulated and read. These books have their value, but they can only do two things for us: They can stir in us a longing for prayer, and they can tell us how to prepare our lives for it; but they cannot do more. Prayer itself can only be learned by praying.

The same writers who attract us by their description of the possibilities of union with God in prayer often dscourage us by the elaborate preparation which they seem to require, and by the unnecessary classification into which they enter. The remote preparation for prayer is indeed long and elaborate: for the true preparation for prayer is, in a word, Christian life. But the immediate preparation for prayer cannot be too simple and direct: for God is very near.

After all, when we have read a good many of them, they really all say very much the same things, which can be summed in a few words.

The first step to prayer is penitence and humility: so the prophets taught us long ago.

The second step is self-discipline, recollection: "It is absurd," says one master in the art, "to try and be recollected at the time of prayer, if the mind is distracted at other times and allowed to rove where it will." We need the habit of controlling our thoughts; in other words, "the practice of the Presence of God." We need to bring our thoughts "into subjection to the obedience of Christ"; our wills and lives into harmony with the Will of God. "Union with God consisteth not in the ways of devotion or sweetness," says St. John of the Cross, "but in one necessary thing only; in knowing how to deny ourselves in earnest." He whose life is directed to the fulfilling of God's Will, when he kneels down to prayer will find that he has come home. It is the time when "His greatness flows around our littleness; round our restlessness His rest."

Can we not pray then till we have attained perfect conformity to the Will of God? We can, indeed, thank God! It is enough for our Father that we truly and honestly set our faces to seek His Will. So we close our books, leave off talking about prayer and try to pray.

Let us make an act of penitence—any act we know: let us ask the guidance of the Holy Spirit; let us tell our Lord in our own words that we desire to serve Him and do His Will. Then let us very quietly and simply realize that we are now, as always, in the Presence of God.

The Hour We Always Longed For.

"Whether it is in a consecrated place or not, it is in God Himself we pray. His Immensity is our temple. His Ear lies close upon our lips. It touches them. We do not feel it: if we did we should die. It is always listening. Thoughts speak to it as loudly as words; sufferings even louder than words. His Ear is never taken away. We sigh into it even when we sleep."—Faber. Dwelling awhile on this thought, we must surely be led to love and praise "the infinitely blessed Being of God, than Whom nothing can be conceived more holy, more pure, more august, more adorable, more compassionate." We praise him for the Incarnation and Redemption which have made our union with Him possible. And in the act of praise our will is quickened afresh into harmony with the Will of God; we see our duty clearer, we offer ourselves to Him with desire to do what He shall show us. And if this is indeed a true approach to Him, we find ourselves led on to intercession. His Will is the salvation and the perfection of all men. When we pray for others it is His prayer we pray; we desire what He desires. "The praise of God in our mouths' have put a "two-edged sword in our hands." This is the hour, the blessed hour we always longed for, when we wholly lose ourselves. That "selfhood which is the cause of all our griefs', half of it is lost in God, for we desire now only what He desires; half of it is lost in sympathy, in self-identification with the sufferings, the sorrows, the pathetic ignorance of those for whom we pray.

From such a prayer we shall rise with new courage for our daily task, new sense of the possibilities of friendship with God, and a great joy in the knowledge that He has admitted us to fellowship in the work of salvation. We shall be heartened for greater efforts in the work of conforming our lives in His Will, and this again will be a better preparation for the further work of prayer.

And let it not be forgotten that one of the best preparations, both remote and immediate, for prayer, is the fervent reading of the Holy Scripture. The Holy Scriptures provide the inspiration, the atmosphere and, when we need them, the words, also, for prayer. And further: "He who truly possesses the words of Jesus," said St. Ignatius of Antioch to the Ephesians, "is able also to hearken to His Silence."

"Our Lord God showed me that it is full great pleasure to Him that a helpless soul come to Him simply, plainly and homely. For this is the natural yearning of the soul by the teaching of the Holy Ghost.

"And the vision was a learning to my understanding that the continual seeking of the soul pleaseth God much; for it may do no more than seek, suffer and trust. . . . And the clearness of finding it is of His special grace when He will."—Julian of Norwich.

"HE PAYS $20,000 A YEAR TO PREACH."

In the course of a lecture delivered shortly before his death, Bishop Coxe told the following story: When I was rector of a Church in Baltimore I used to see a dear old lady, in the garb of a Quaker, very often in the congregation of the Church. One of the wardens said to me, "Mrs. ——— is a great friend of yours."

"I am glad to hear it," I said.

"Yes," said the warden, "she said to me, "I love to hear your pastor preach, but I should like him so much better if he did not receive money for it."

"But," said the warden, "he pays $20,000 a year for the privilege of preaching to us."

"Does he, indeed, and how so?" asked the old lady.

"Well, we both were educated at the same time—we are about of an age—and I earn $25.000 a year at my profession, while he only receives $4,000."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

He Rediscovered His Country.

"I have rediscovered my country, after being absent from it one year," said Dr. Newton, pastor of the City Temple, London, to a newspaper reporter just before sailing for England recently. "I was very greatly impressed," he continued, "by the wonderful change that has taken place in one short year. It seems to me that the United States has been completely transformed in that time. I talked with many people during my travels through several states. Everywhere I found them a unit in support of President Wilson and the most vigorous prosecution of the war to the inevitable end, which must be a complete victory over the Potsdam gang and all it represents." Dr. Newton was formerly pastor of a Church at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and succeeded Dr. Jowett at the City Temple, London, probably the largest Protestant church in the world.

A Pleasure to Meet the Leaders of the Canadian Church.

Bishop McCormick of Western Michigan, commenting in his Diocesan paper on his recent attendance upon the sessions of the Synod of the Canadian Church as a representative of the American Church together with the Bishop of Harrisburg and the Rev. Dr. Jessup, of Buffalo, says: "Mrs. McCormick and I were the guests of Sir Henry and Lady Pellatt at their beautiful home overlooking the city of Toronto. Every possible courtesy was shown us by our hosts and by Archbishops and Bishops of the Canadian Church. It was a pleasure to meet the leaders of the Canadian Church and to listen to their most illuminating and interesting discussions concerning their work. Every reference to America, its Church, its Army, or its people was received with understanding and with appreciation and the illusions to our share in the war awakened the utmost enthusiasm. Our joint service and our joint aims have united the peoples of the two countries in ties of closest sympathy. Elihu Root said, 'I take off my hat to the Canadians,' and every American is glad to join him in this tribute."

Jeanne d'Arc and the Goddess of Liberty.

"One of the most inspirational works of art produced by the war," says Ben F. McCutcheon, Director of Publicity of the Seventh Federal District Liberty Loan Organization, "is the lithograph drawn by Lucien Jonas, showing the irresistible spirit of Jeanne d'Arc, floating over the French divisions and leading them forward to victory under her banner of the cross and the lily.

That drawing admittedly represents a deep spiritual truth underlying the glorious heroism of the New France. Whereas the hosts of the Revolution of 1789 rallied about the image of a goddess of Liberty which might easily have been mistaken for the effigy of a strumpet, the Armies of France in this war are led by the glorious vision of the Virgin of Domremy and the deliverer of Orleans and France.

An equally inspiring thing, and one that carries quite as much significance to all Christian men and women, is brought back to us by men who have seen the British soldiers, going over the top into the line of fire singing in unison with the tone of a thousand cathedral choirs that most magnificent of processional hymns. 'Onward, Christian Soldiers,' Early in the conflict they went into the line with the rollicking rhythms of 'It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary; but my heart's all there.'

The significant thing is that the hearts of the soldiers of the Allied forces have marched on, under the guidance of the holiest souls in the history of mankind, toward a city that is eternal in the heavens, whose symbol is the Cross, and whose sovereign is the Savior of mankind."

The Most Critical Battlefield Not Across the Seas.

"The most critical battlefield is not across the seas," says the Rev. Frederick G. Budlong, rector of St. Peter's Church, Chicago. "It is in the social and industrial life at home; it is in the minds and hearts of the individual men and women who constitute this nation.

There is little use in winning the war on the continent of Europe, unless, in the process we become pledged wholeheartedly to the ideals of personal righteousness, unselfish service and devotion to the common good, which have been revealed by the Father of us all through His Son, Jesus Christ.

Unless more men are made by the war than are sacrificed in the war, our victory, however glorious will be mean indeed. However splendid the devotion of those who give up their lives in battle, so far as we are concerned their self-consecration unto death, will be worse than wasted, unless we become worthy of the price they have paid. 'Are we worthy of them?'

When the war is over, its value for the world and for setting forward the kingdom of God will depend in great measure upon how completely during the war we shall have become consecrated, as individual men and women, to high ideals and unselfish aims.

It behooves every earnest soul to look ahead to the tremendous opportunities and responsibilities God is fitting us to assume, and we dare not make our plans apart from Him.

As part of your duty as Christian patriots, seek God more frequently, more humbly and more eagerly in your daily prayers. Come more faithfully to His house of prayer to worship with your fellows. Do your part by striving as never before to live into communion with the God in Whom we trust, so that after the war you may be ready to do whatsoever God will call upon you to do toward making this world truly His, and your life the expression and the instrument of His blessed will."

People of England Are Not Taxed To Support the Church.

"In The Witness of October 12th, you reproduce on page eight, under the heading of Militant Atheism in England and America, an editorial from the American Church Monthly," writes the Rev. Dr. Phillips of Temple, Texas. "According to this, by inference, Atheists, and presumably others, are taxed to support 'A state religion,' I presume the Church of England is referred to. As a matter of fact, there is no more taxation in this regard and connection, than in the case of the State Church of Scotland, (Presbyterian). The late Mr. W. E. Gladstone, I believe, several times confuted the idea, as did Mr. Asquith, the late Premier of England, from their places in the House of Commons. The total income of the Church of England is derived from revenues arising from endowments, freely given, both ancient and modern; and also from the large free-will offerings and benefactions given by her people; even the revenues, arising from the Church's own endowments are administered by a department of State, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The state connection arises from historical connection; the Church was in being while the Heptarchy was a congeries of small states. and the unified England grew up around the Church, which is strictly speaking the Mother of the British Empire. No new bishropic is permitted by law, until the new See has been fully endowed,—by the gifts of her people; the Church does not profit to the extent of one penny from the State, any more than does our own Church. Despite the fact that this old myth has been exploded time and time again in the British House of Commons, it still raises its hoary head."

"The reason why people love dogs," says the National Humane Review, "is because dogs love people. Both love and hate in this world are largely reciprocal. And dogs are worth loving. They will fight to a finish to save a beloved master. They will plunge into swift waters to save a child whom they are guarding. They do not lie or cheat, or use bad language, or smoke or drink alcohol. They have positive traits of character and virtues which most men could imitate to advantage."

A MEDITATION

The Rev. Percy T. Fenn, D. D.

The Pestilence that walketh in the darkness, and the sickness that destroyeth in the noon-day.

For the first time in a ministry of nearly thirty years we have been ordered by the Board of Health to suspend all our public services! It is an unique experience, but the prevailing epidemic has made it necessary.

There is much for us to do during this period when our congregations will not assemble for the worship of God, and most of us will be as busy as in normal times.

Yesterday, for instance, we came into the church, and we sang a hymn without an accompaniment, and we made our War Intercessions. And as we knelt alone in the house of God, it seemed as if God were nearer to us than at ordinary times!

And what comfort it ought to be to our parishioners when they remember that their priest is still standing before God't Altar to offer the Holy Sacrifice, and to intercede with God on their behalf!

And as we muse in our study we recall those three great judgments of God—War, Famine, Pestilence—with which He afflicted His recreant people of Isreal. And we wondered whether this epidemic which is spreading so generally, and which is proving so fatal, is not another instrument in the hands of God for the chastening of His indifferent children.

Four years of war have devastated the world, and the casualty lists are bringing it home to the hearts of our people as never before; but the spiritual element of the war is still unrecognized by the majority of us, and we are still forgetting God!

We had hoped that the war would bring us to our senses, and to our knees. But we seem to be still impregnated with materialism, and still unmindful that the Lord is King!

We meet to pray for the dear boys who have gone to the front, and who may never return to us, and our gathering is saddened by the absence of the very parents of those boys! They are busy with war work, and with all kinds of social activities; but they seldom come to the House of God to commend their boys to His protection.

And their lives are as worldly as heretofore, apparently. The war has not effected any appreciable change in their mode of living, or in their spiritual outlook.

So God is sending them the pestilence that walketh in darkness and the sickness that destroyeth in the noon-day! And on every hand fear grips the heart as we are reminded of our own frail mortality.

Young men, full of promise, are stricken down before our very eyes, and we are forced to acknowledge that God's judgments are abroad in all the earth.

This afternoon we are to bury a soldier from a neighboring Camp—a strong, hardy man—a victim of the "Flu." At the same hour a similar service will be held in another part of our city, over the body of a young man who died of the same disease up at the Great Lakes.

And the telephone is constantly ringing, and we are asked to offer special prayers for those whose condition seems critical, and who are not even of our faith!

But why will not the Christian world recognize the hand of God in these calamities? Why will we attribute them solely to natural causes, rather than to the chastening hand of God?

If we fail to repent under the present chastening God has yet His third instrument of retribution—famine—with which He may easily afflict us. Shall we trifle with His love and challenge His unwilling judgments? Then let us repent and turn unto the Lord our God. For "though we be tied and bound with the chain of our sins," yet "the pitifulness of His great mercy" will loose us if we will thus turn to Him.

The great testing-time is here; how shall we meet the test?

When Mrs. Jay Gould, Jr., was serving in the kitchenette at Bryant Hut, New York, one of those fearfully hot sweltering days New York City has lately gone through, a soldier remarked to her: "This is a pretty tough job you have here. I should think you would get one of them out of door jobs such as being a conductorette on a Sixth Avenue car." What Mrs. Gould said is not reported.—Association Men.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

SIXTH PAPER

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 11. Omit first rubric on page 7. The rubric the Commission proposes to omit is as follows,—At the end of the whole Portion of the Psalms or Selection from the Psalter, the Gloria in Excelsis may be sung or said instead of the Gloria Patri. The proposition is, in brief, to remove the rubrical permission to use the Gloria in Excelsis after the Pslams at Morning or Evening Prayer. The use of Gloria in Excelsis with the choir offices in the Anglican Church is found alone in the American Prayer Book. General usage associates the Gloria in Excelsis with the Communion Office. There is, however, liturgical authority for its use at Morning Prayer, coming through the Eastern Liturgy where it was used daily at Morning service as a memorial of the Incarnation and as such served the same purpose as the Magnificat at Evening service. From the Eastern Church the Gloria in Excelsis found its way into the usage of the Western Church where it first appeared in the services for Christmas Day; provision being made later for its use on Sunday. It was given a place in the Communion Office of the English Church in the Second Book of Edward VI, 1552.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 12. The change proposed here is to print the Te Deum in three portions with large capital letters, as follows,—We praise, etc. THOU art the King, etc., and O LORD save, etc. This change was proposed with the intention of providing a rubrical permission to omit a portion of the Te Deum in the discretion of the Minister. Such a rubric was proposed by the Commission but was defeated by the last General Convention.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 12. To print the Benedictus in four portions with large capitals for introductory. This proposed change needs no comment.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 13. Insert before Benedicite as follows: Or this.

Benedictus es Domine.

Blessed art thou, O Lord God of our Fathers: praised and exalted above all for ever.

Blessed art thou for the Name of Thy Majesty: praised and exalted above all for ever.

Blessed art thou in the temple of Thy holiness: praised and exalted above all for ever.

Blessed art thou that beholdest the depths and dwellest between the Cherubim: praised and exalted above all for ever.

Blessed art thou on the glorious throne of Thy Kingdom: praised and exalted above all for ever.

Blessed art Thou in the firmament of heaven: praised and exalted above all forever.

The purpose of this proposed alteration is to provide a short cantical in place of Benedicite. The same proposal was made by the Commission in 1886 and was defeated by vote of General Convention. It is doubtless wise to provide a short canticle for Benedicite, (and in accordance with proposed rubric for Te Deum as well,) particularly where small and untrained choirs sing the service, but why add the Benedictus es Domine? It would seem that the twenty-third Psalm has the best claim if an alternative canticle is to be provided, because the twenty-third Psalm is used in Scottish Book in the place of Benedicite. If, however, the spirit of the Benedicite is to be maintained and a shorter canticle provided, why not Psalm 148, of which the Benedicite is a pharaphrase?

MEETING OF THE JOINT COMMISSION ON SOCIAL SERVICE

The most important matter discussed at the regular semi-annual meeting of the Joint Commission on Social Service, held in New York on Oct. 11th, was the proposed new relations with the Episcopal War Commission, and which during the summer made an initial appropriation to enable the Joint Commission to secure a field secretary to undertake special work of a social service nature in connection with the war. One or two general "leads" have been indicated: first, co-operation in the surveys of war production centers now being undertaken under the auspices of an interdenominational committee, with a view to the more effective ministration of the Church to the new industrial populations growing up along the Atlantic seaboard; second, an effort to stimulate the more effective participation of parochial and diocesan forces in and about training camp communities in connection with other remedial agencies, with a particular view to making and keeping these communities clean and wholesome. Opportunities for other work are also expected to develop. It was decided to recommend to the War Commission appropriations for one or two additional secretaries, in order that the new field of work might be more adequately covered.

Another matter considered was the participation of the Commission in the Church Student Council recently organized by the Collegiate Department of the General Board of Religious Education, which is planning to establish among Church students in our various colleges and universities a "minimum program" of activities along the lines of personal religion, missions, religious education, social service, and Church extension. In response to the Council's invitation, the Commission elected two representatives to serve on the Council,—the Rev. Samuel Tyler of Rochester, N. Y., and Miss Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley College,—and voted an appropriation of $100 for the Council's 1919 budget.

Among other matters acted upon were the appointment of a splendid sub-committee consisting of the Rev. J. H. Melish, Mr. C. R. Woodruff, and the secretary, to draw up a statement on reconstruction and the Church's duty with reference thereto, while a statement submitted by Miss Scudder with reference to the present crisis was in substance approved and entrusted to a special sub-committee for revision and issuance after a referendum. To another committee was referred the suggestion of the Society of Companions of the Holy Cross that the Commission should collaborate with it in the publication of a Calendar of Social Justice now being compiled, while a request from the same Society that some action be taken in the Mooney case in California was favorably acted upon. Still another committee, consisting of Bishop Fiske (chairman), Dr. Percy Dearmer, now visiting America, Professor Dickinson Miller of the General Theological Seminary, Miss Scudder, and Mr. Woodruff, was authorized to prepare a special order of worship in connection with social service, a lectionary, and such other forms of prayer and intercession as might seem desirable.

The secretary reported that, on the Commission's suggestion, the Social Service Commission of the Diocese of Connecticut was co-operating in a Child Welfare Campaign in that state under the auspices of the National Child Welfare Association. On the secretary's suggestion, further, of an increasing need of trained social workers if the Church is to register effectively in the social field, he was instructed to urge the General Board of Religious Education to help to secure the introduction into the various seminaries of systematic courses of instruction in the social interpretation of the Bible and Church history and in modern social problems and methods of service.

Reports of the year's activities, of the increasing number of college and public libraries and other educational institutions on the Commission's mailing list, of the progress of the financial campaign, especially as regards the one per cent apportionment by the dioceses, etc., were submitted and accepted as records of progress.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., and Hobart, Indiana.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

THE PERVERSION OF THE LAW.

"Some people in the congregation tell me that seven-thirty is too early for a Sunday morning service; yet I notice young men passing my house every morning at six to attend drill, and the Major doesn't trouble to go himself. In the Church the Major and the General both go, but the rank and file excuse themselves.

"Isn't it about time that we stop giving ice cream and candy to the soldiers of Christ and put the Church on a more military basis? I am willing to spend money to lure the heathen to Church, but I am not willing to spend it in order to coax the soldiers of Christ to come to drill."

In some such words as these, one of the clergy recently addressed his congregation. They are good, honest words, and they remind me of some notes by a lovely, healthy young lady, now in Paradise, made at the Northfield conference, speaking of her set: "To us, religious people have meant chiefly old ladies, and they had a monopoly on it. They were on the stage and we were looking on. It was the clergymen's business and old ladies took it up, when they hadn't anything left in their lives, as a last resort."

The truth is that these sentiments express the weakness of American Protestantism. They are not the faults of our Roman brethren, nor is it our business to point out their faults at this time. Let us consider American Protestantism as a religion and measure it by the standards of Christ's life and teaching.

Wherein has it departed from the virile yet winsome gospel of the Master?

First, I should say in that it rests in the law, not as a disciplinary force, but rather as a means of grace. Starting with reform, it tries to put us all into a reformatory. It expands and amplifies the ten commandments Thou shalt not dance, thou shalt not drink, thou shalt not attend the theater, thou shalt not play cards, thou shalt not smoke, and, if one be a minister, thou shalt not overmuch enjoy thyself, nor give evidence thereof in outward ways.

This was Puritanism pure and simple.

Now, I have no particular objection to this program as a monastic rule for those who voluntarily seek asceticism, but as a world program, it alienates red-blooded men. As a program of eternal life it is petty, pedantic, poverty-stricken. However much these things may be vices, as a program for Christian idealism, they cannot lead a man into the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

But this program has been heralded as the essence of Christianity by those who have failed to get rid of the root of bitterness themselves and so have sown the seeds of self-righteousness. There is no one who is so sure of his own personal rectitude as that person whose life is consumed in condemning the sins which he himself never commits.

Surely, one cannot conceive of such a prophet "eating and drinking with publicans and sinners," and he doesn't.

The result of such a program is to over-emphasize the effiminate qualities in men. Now it is a strange thing that the loveliest thing on earth is a woman who is entirely feminine, and almost the unloveliest is a man who tries to emulate her.

The Christian religion as Christ preached it was a masculine gospel, with its due share of sterness, but underneath that severity, the tenderness of a woman.

This has been reversed—and we have a gentleman with a mild, bland exterior, who talks tenderly and sings maudlin, sentimental nonsense, while within he is far from the sympathetic, tender pastor, whose chief duty is to preach the forgiveness of sins.

The program of the puritanic law has made the Church into a caste, instead of an asylum for all sorts and conditions of men. It is over much concerned about its legal respectability.

The member of the Church is one who has cleansed himself of certain external legal blemishes but, as Fanny Adkins says, "Is rather close in his financial dealings." Of course, this is not true of all Protestant Christians—probably not of the majority—but it is true of such Protestants as are fond of advertising—those whose sounds go out into all lands.

And the worst of it is, that it has operated just as the two quotations at the head of this article would indicate.

Instead of soldiers of Christ who are in the world but not of it, we have followers of Christ who are of the world but not in it. Like spoiled children, they look to the Church to condole them, to furnish them with social dimensions of a harmless and respectable character; to help them to greater respectability and social prominence; to provide them with music and oratory that is to their taste; to do as they please, and to quit playing the game when they can't play it in their own way. There is nothing soldierly about the whole proceeding. It savors of the conduct of the Russian soldiers at the close of the empire. We will serve our officers in so far as we like them. We will take leaves of absence for just so long as it is to our notion and our pleasure. The nation is full of perfectly self-satisfied Protestant soldiers who are on indefinite leaves of absence from their regimental duties, said leaves having been given to themselves by themselves.

The whole scheme is most unpleasantly Bolsheviki in its lack of any sense of responsibility to the oaths of baptism and confirmation, and to those who are the officers of Christ. We want to play to an army in which we issue all our own orders and are under no obligations to do anything for anybody, even for the commander-in-chief, unless we choose to do it.

It is the weakness of Protestantism, and it is a weakness that is fatal to efficiency and to the development of manliness.

The Scotch poet told us to ask God to let us see ourselves as others see us. The test of our righteousness is not what we think of ourselves, but what the common people think of us.

I have talked with men, especially in towns of a size that the whole population knows itself intimately, and the lack in the program of Protestant Christianity is just that quality of which St. Paul tells us that without it all our professions are like sounding brass and tinkling cymbals.

The sounding brass of self-confident leaders is much in evidence, and we can hear the tinkling cymbals of an effiminate piety, but the charity—that big something which suffers long and is kind and does not envy and is not puffed up and vaunteth not itself—that big brotherly interest in all men and in their weaknesses and faults,—that is sadly lacking.

The prodigal still finds the elder brother cynically obstinate because of the music and dancing, and full of bitterness that the prodigal is not summarily dealt with.

This whole program of Christian brotherhood is out of joint, and has transformed the plans of Christ for including the sinner in the warm fireside of religious brotherhood, into a nice scheme of making the Church a censorious inquisitor of private morals.

We live in constant fear of the Church's reprobation for piety, and produce a pale, anaemic sort of lady-like sisterhood instead of a manly fraternity.

It is a lack of courage not to use Christ's body as He used it, to make the penitent sinner feel at home without making him a self-righteous prig.

If there is one note we need to emphasize today it is the demand that the soldiers of Christ shall learn obedience and practice charity, using the law, which is good, to enforce loyalty and using grace, which is better, to teach humility. We may be saints in the sense of being consecrated to God's service, but we must not feel that we are saints in the sense of being censorious toward sinners.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place, and suddenly there came a sound as of a rustling mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting.

"And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them.

"And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."—Acts II 1-4.

These words mean everything to the Christian, for they signify the fulfillment of Christ's repeated promise. "Nevertheless I tell you the truth: it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you: but if I depart I will send him unto you."

* * *

"And when He, the Spirit of truth, is come He will guide you into all truth."

"Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endowed with power from on high."

"But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

These two, truth and power, are the two things needful besides love. For without power, truth is a useless thing, the basis of mere argument and speculation. Without truth, power is brutal, senseless, tyrannical.

And these two necessary aids to love, which is the greatest, Christ assured his apostles, would come to them as the results of a gift which He could give, which they were to abide in Jerusalem to receive, and without which they were to attempt no enterprise.

Obediently they waited and the promise of Christ was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost.

To those who resent the supernatural, and who deny to the God who made it all the power to introduce no new element in His creation, the miracle of Pentecost is an irritant.

To those who see in God's creative acts a constant revelation of the new and the unexpected, the Day of Pentecost, by which man received the gift of spiritual truth and power, is the crowning act of the whole revelation of God's goodness and might.

The Story of Creation is a story of repeated miracles; for each new order of thnigs introduced that, which, previous to its existence, was unknown to this world—and that story would have been sadly incomplete were there not given to him who was created in the image of God, the Spirit of Truth and Power.

The besetting sin of man is pride. He fancies that he can find in his own nature, the solution of God's plans. Each new cult is based upon his confidence in his self-sufficiency, only to end in shipwreck, because power without truth is like a powerful engine without steering apparatus. It goes along blindly and is wrecked because it leaves the way.

"I am the way," said Christ, "and My spirit is both power and truth." Unless we follow in the way, the more power we develop, the greater following we have, the larger cult we form, so much greater is the wreck, when the machine goes to destruction in the dark.

Christ is not only the way, but the light of the world, and in that light we see the way, and toilsomely follow the same.

* * *

This little band of one hundred and twenty guided by the twelve apostles would have made very little impression upon the world, except the Spirit of God had inspired them with power and truth.

What could twelve Hebrew peasants do except they be endued with power from on high? It was the gift of Pentecost that gave to this feeble brotherhood the power to go ahead in the light which Christ's foresight had provided.

They possessed the three qualities which together make the Christian Church the greatest power in the world, viz., heat, light and motion. They were aflame with the love of Christ; they were illuminated by the wisdom of Christ; they were energized by the power of Christ.

These three are as necessary to any parish today as they were to this first parish that met at Jerusalem.

How many Churches have power and light without heat?

How many cults have love and power without light?

How many fraternities have love and light without power?

It is the full gift of Pentecost which must possess the organization if it is to go through stone walls and climb over all obstacles.

* * *

The gift of Pentecost was not an invisible, heterogenous influence which permeated Jerusalem. It was a definite, visible, fire that energized a certain solidarity that Christ had prepared for its reception.

It was not an unseen force, but a definite power.

It was not an unseen force, but a visible communication.

It was not given to the world, but to the Church, those whom Christ had called out to follow Him, and who had persevered in such obedience.

It was the obedience of the Body to Christ's commands that gave force and energy to these feeble folk.

Nor was the power a mere transient influence. That which they had received they gave to others by a definite act. "Then laid they their hands upon them and they received the Holy Ghost."

* * *

But the objection is at once urged that if such power were given to men why is not the Church which claims this power more of a force in the world today?

For the obvious reason that God's power is dependent upon man's willingness and obedience in order that it may be demonstrated in the spiritual realm. He declines mechanical force and demands co-operative action. Whenever the historic Church has summoned to its call, men of humility and obedience, there has been no lack in the power that it has manifested.

But like every force, there must be unity of action. The various parts of the engine must co-operate. Friction

Continued on Page 7

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

We shall take it as a great favor if our exchanges and the rectors who have been so generously sending us their parish papers will change the address of The Witness to 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, our new office of publication and to which address all matters intended for publication in the paper should be sent.

Army chaplains hereafter must conform to the regulations of the military establishment instead of acting as independent factors, according to a dispatch appearing in the daily papers. Complaints from various religious bodies following the order of the war department which in substance provided for the retirement of a large number of camp pastors is not considered by the government as of sufficient weight to induce any change in the original order.

A suit has been filed in the Supreme Court of New York asking for the appointment of a receiver of the properties of the Russian Orthodox Greek Church in this country on the ground that money and property have been diverted and misapplied. The suit was filed, says the New York Times, in behalf of about thirty pastors in charge of Greek churches in different parts of the United States who are opposed to the elevation of Archbishop Nemelovsky as head of the Church in this country. In the proceedings the Archbishop brought against the clergy opposed to him, he alleged that they were influenced in their attempt to oust him by the Bolsheviki in Russia.

Because of the influenza epidemic the service of consecration of Bishop Coadjutor-elect Quinn of the Diocese of Texas was postponed from October 24th to October 31st.

Owing to the prevalence of influenza the churches in most places in the Dioceses of Virginia have been closed, as well as all places of public gatherings. The epidemic seems to be getting well in hand and it is anticipated that the order will soon be rescinded.

St. John's Church, Girard, Kansas, the Rev. R. W. Rhames, rector, has been presented with a pipe organ by Mrs. Harriet Nye Towne in memory of Capt. John Dana Barker and his wife, Mrs. Mary Lucina (Anderson) Barker. The organ is pneumatic throughout, and especially designed to correspond with the Gothic architecture of St. John's Church. The organ was dedicated at the Communion service on Sunday, October 6th, and the opening recital was given on the following Monday evening. The placing of the organ required the enlargement of the church. A number of improvements, all paid for, have been made, including the elevation of the altar, a new lighting system, a lecturn and choir stalls.

A high tribute of respect was paid to the late Capt. C. D. Baker, who died in France from wounds suffered in battle, at a memorial service conducted at St. James' Church, New York City, by Bishop Greer and assisted by Bishop Courtney, formerly rector of the church; the Rev. Dr. Crowder, the rector, and the Rev. J. P. Chalmer, vicar. Captain Baker, prior to his enlistment in the service of his country, was an usher at St. James' and had charge of the Christian Nurture classes in the Church school. He was a lieutenant at the time he received the wound which proved fatal and was advanced to the rank of Captain before his death. He had received the Croix de Guerre for gallant service in the trenches.

Subscriptions for the work of the National Lutheran Commission for Soldiers' and Sailors' Welfare reached the sum of $1,375,540 the past year. Eighty-one Lutheran chaplains have been assigned to the army and navy, twenty-five of whom are in France. while civilian chaplains and camp pastors number 136. The Lutheran Brotherhood has eight buildings in army training camps, and in one of these 1,600 Lutheran soldiers received the Holy Communion in a single day.

In the recent attack of influenza which attacked some 2,200 people and cost the life of some 65 or 70, at Pulaski, Va., a town of about 6,000, the Rev. Thos. E. Opie, rector of Christ Church, headed a committee which conducted a community soup kitchen for the relief of the sick for two weeks. From 30 to 40 gallons of chicken and beef broth, prepared by expert colored cooks, were made daily and carried by auto all over town to families too ill to send for it or too weak to prepare food for themselves. Milk, toast and coffee in large quantities were also served free to all the sick. The kitchen constituted a $500 business, the money and supplies being solicited by Mr. Opie, apart from the town's general relief fund of some $3,000. The Pulaski Times gave the following summary of supplies used, 400 loaves of bread, 125 pounds of beef, 200 chickens, 40 dozen eggs, 125 gallons of milk, 50 pounds of flour, 50 pounds of rice, two sheep, one ham, three gallons of potatoes, 12 gallons of oil, besides apples, preserves, meal, celery, etc. Sunday, October 20th, was the first anniversary of Mr. Opie's pastorate at Pulaski. He went to Pulaski from Saltville last fall. During the year there have been 15 baptisms, 10 confirmations, 6 marriages, and 5 burials. A new pipe organ has been installed and a number of improvements made on church and rectory.

The annual convocation of the archdeaconry of Ridgway, Diocese of Erie, Pennsylvania, was held at St. Luke's Church, Smethport, (the Rev. W. E. Van Dyke, rector) September 30th and October 1st and 2nd. The following are the officers of the archdeaconry: Bishop Israel, Archdeacon Radcliffe; the Rev. Wm. R. Agate, Secretary; George W. Mitchell, Esq., Treasurer; the Rev. E. H. Edson, the Hon. Joisah Howard, Mr. W. W. Winslow, Executive Mission Board. The convocation convened at 7:30 p. m., on Monday, September 30th, when Evening Prayer was said and an address given by the Rev. Dr. Martin Aigner, followed by a reception in the Parish House. The program for the next day included: Celebration of the Holy Eucharist, the Rev. Dr. Radcliffe, celebrant. Morning Prayer and address by the Rev. Chas. H. Kitchin; report of Dr. Aigner, the Archdeacon, and Missionary clergy; business session; intercession for Missions; luncheon in the Parish House; Sunday School conference led by the Rev. Dr. W. H. Overs and the Rev. Dr. Aigner; a drive into the country; a fine patriotic mass meeting in the evening with addresses by the Rev. Jenkins Watkins, the Rev. Dr. Overs, the Rev. A. C. Jones and the Rev. James A. Baynton. The convocation was brought to a close with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist on the morning of October 2nd, the Rev. E. H. Edson, Vicar of the parish, officiating.

PERSONALS

The Rev. E. J. Randall, Chicago, who served St. Barnabas' Church as lay reader and since his graduation from the Western Theological Seminary and ordination to the priesthood has been the rector of the parish, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his work there on Sunday, October 19th. The parish has prospered spiritually and materially under his faithful and efficient administration. The beautiful new church in which the congregation now worships was dedicated two years ago. Mr. Randall has taken an active and prominent part in the social service work of his diocese, is a member of the Standing Committee, the Board of Missions and of the Committee in charge of the Cathedral Shetler.

Lieut. Lester Wallace Kern, who was killed in battle, was a postulant for Holy Orders and a student at St. Stephen's School, Annadale, N. Y., prior to his enlistment as a private in Company I., 106th Infantry. He was twenty-four years old and the adopted son of Mrs. Thomas A. Wilson of New York City.

The Rev. Malcolm Taylor has accepted a call to become rector of St. Mary's Church at Madisonville, Ky. He goes there from the Diocese of East Carolina.

The Rev. J. J. Gravatt, Jr., has accepted the rectorship of Old Trinity, Staunton, Va, and has taken charge of the work. This is a magnificent old church and Mr. Gravatt will find a fine body of loyal people to work with. He was from the rectorship of Ascension Church, Frankfort, Ky.

The Rev. Clarence N. Buxter, who for some time has been rector at Madisonville, Ky., has recently taken charge of Immanuel Church, Covington, Va.

The Rev. T. N. Nelson, headmaster of the Virginia Episcopal School, is giving services at the Lee Memorial Church, Lexington, Va., since the rector, the Rev. Churchill Gibson, has entered the army service as chaplain.

Captain W. K. Rainsford, son of the Rev. Dr. Rainsford, former rector of St. George's Church, New York City, has been wounded in action at the front overseas. He is a graduate of the Plattsburg Training Camp of 1917. He was driving an ambulance in France when this country entered the war and returned home to enter the American army.

All mail intended for First Lieutenant D. R. Ottmann, Chaplain, should be addressed to Ft. Sill, Oklahoma.

Private Jean Fournan, of New York, is known as the "Red Cross man" at the American Military Hospital No. 1, where he is convalescing. A cross on his back, the mark of two pieces of shrapnel, will be a life-long scar.

ADMINISTERING THE HOLY COMMUNION BY INTICTION

Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, has issued the following letter to the clergy of his Diocese, under date of October 4th:

My dear Brother—

Acting upon medical advice and my own judgment, I am taking the liberty of suggesting to you the advisability of the administration of the Holy Communion by the method of Intinction, at least for the present. Experience has shown this method to be reverent and acceptable.

The cup should be shallow, and a very small amount of wine is needed: a tablespoonful for twenty-five to one hundred communicants is ample. Waters should be used.

In administration, the cup with the patten and wafers can be held in the left hand and fingers. The Priest dips the corner of a square wafer or the edge of a round one very slightly, not more than a quarter or an eighth of an inch, into the wine. If he does so with reasonable quickness, the wine is immediately absorbed, and the wafer can be placed on the palm of the hand of the communicant. Or the Priest gives a wafer to every person kneeling at the rail, then takes the cup, and as he passes along each communicant dips the wafer in the wine.

As each railful of communicants kneels, the whole of both Sentences is said before beginning to administer. Then as the Priest administers, he says the first half of both Sentences, the second half being omitted.

If there are communicants who object to Intinction and wish the old method, they can come forward after those who receive by Intinction have received. In case your congregation is not familiar with the method of Intinction, it will, of course, be advisable for you to make a short explanation at some convenient time in the service.

Yours faithfully,
William Lawrence,
Bishop of Massachusetts.

Simultaneously the Wilhelmstrasse has taken refuge in Gott and the Golden Horn in Allah. "With the help of Gott," or, "With the help of Allah." The enemy deity is hard working and hard worked. The German and Turkish idea of the Jehovah is that of a service station. They always are demanding service, and speak little of serving.

Pehraps there is more in this than persiflage. Our own allied idea of the Almighty is that he should be served, and not constantly serving. "He helps them that help themselves." Wilhelm's idea of helping himself is hardly the godly construction. When men fall back on the gods they have not served they are truly in an embarrassing situation; for the gods they have served —those of lust and plunder—stead them but poorly in the emergency.

The kaiser and the sultan should get together on some doxoligical compromise and give it lusty emphasis, for the end of the service is nigh. —Chicago Tribune.

Honor Rolls and Tablets

of Bronze and Marble

U. S. AND SERVICE FLAGS MEMORIAL WINDOWS

ALTARS, LECTURNS, PULPITS

Designs and Estimates on Request.

Spaulding & Co.,

Michigan Ave. and Van Buren St. Chicago, Ill.

BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE—A PATRIOTIC PAGEANT SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Democracy Saving the World

A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.

Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.

Address PATRIOTIC PAGEANT, Hobart, Indiana.

Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year

ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.

By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.

A Pagent Has Wonderful Educational Power

If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.

THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.

Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.

Address PATRIOTIC PAGEANT, Hobart, Indiana.

The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

Collegiate School, Military for Boys, Denver, Colo.

All ages, all grades to College entrance. Beautiful location, individual teaching. Unequalled climate for frequent camps and open air recitations. Address REV. GEORGE H. HOLORAN, Down town address, 310 Mercantile Building.

What Do You Know of the Work of Your CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY

Rt. Reve. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelia, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.

Send for free sample copy of "TEMPERANCE."

This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America. Address.

CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

"If God give me work to do I will thank Him that he has bestowed upon me a strong arm; if He gives me danger to brave I will bless Him that He has not made me without courage, but I will go down on my knees and beseech Him to fit me for my task, if He tell me it is only to stand and wait."—Jean Ingelow.

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING

An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.

The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.

Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.

28½ tf

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

TENNESSEE JUNIOR PLAN

Would Make Entire Sunday School a Junior Missionary Society

The Tennessee Diocesan Board of Religious Education, through its Committee on Parochial Education, the Rev. W. A. Founard, Chairman, has evolved and now recommends to the Sunday Schools of the Diocese the following plan of making the entire Sunday School a Junior Missionary Society, this being the official Tennessee Diocesan "Junior Plan."

1. That in each School there be appointed an Assistant Superintendent or Mission Leader or Mission Superintendent, (preferably the Junior Auxiliary Leader, or a member of the local Woman's Auxiliary), whose duty it shall be to further the cause of Missions in the Sunday School and to have supervision of any weekday activity of the young people.

(Where the School is large it would seem wise to have this officer assisted in the Primary, Junior and Senior Departments by other Junior Leaders and a Missions Committee.)

2. That all boxes and pledges be chosen and assumed by the School, rather than by the group, each class doing its share of the work.

(Except in large Schools where several boxes may be assumed by the various Departments or Classes.)

3. That each School have a Mission Treasurer, and on Rally Day, or at the opening of a new term in September, or earlier if desired, each pupil shall be given a Mission Mite Box (similar to the Lenten Mite Box) which shall be kept until Christmas, the amount raised by these special boxes to be called the "Christmas Offering" (Like the "Lenten" or "Easter Offering'). This amount shall determine the pledge assumed by the School, (if pledge be made,) or shall be used for missionary purposes only.

As a substitute for the Mite Box idea the weekly or Duplex envelope for Schools is excellent both for forming the habit of regular systematic giving as well as to one's own Parish.

(If the Mite box is to be used the Junior Auxiliary U. O.-box is available for the present.)

4. That the organization of the present "Junior Auxiliary" be retained as it is until the plan has been successfully tried, carried out and adopted by the Church; thus, for the present, the above offerings (even if used for special missionery purposes) would go through the Junior Diocesan Treasurer.

(Miss Margaret Sadd, 549 Vine St., Chattanooga, Tenn., is the Junior Diocesan Treasurer.)

5. That the Junior organization, as outlined above embracing the entire Sunday School, be known as the Sunday School Auxiliary (or Church School Auxiliary) to the Board of Missions.

(The name "Junior Missionary Society" is likewise suggested.)

6. That in addition to the offerings, pledges, and boxes above stated, regular missionary programs be held according to plans suggested below.

7. That in order to put into effect this plan of making the entire Sunday School a Junior Missionary Society which shall be an auxiliary to the General Board of Missions, each Rector be asked to make a start in the matter at once, appointing the Mission leader and Mission Treasurer, and gradually adopting the suggestions until the whole plan can be carried out; it being understood that the Committee on Parochial Education will make further suggestions from time to time, will furnish plans for missionary meetings and supply any information.

Plan of Mission Program Suggestions

(1) The Large Sunday School: (a) Where Christian Nurture series is used, several weeks of study, at week-day meetings in the autumn, of the District to which the Christmas Box is to be sent; also during Epiphany or Lent, study of the Junior Text-Book which is published annually. (b) Where Christian Nurture Series is not used, a monthly program on a Missionary District should be arranged, and presented before the School either by class or group, with more thorough study of the District at week-day meetings, together with the other week-day study explained in Section "a."

In the large School, frequent missionary plays given by School or group can be presented before the entire parish.

2. The Medium size School can follow a plan of program which will be a modified form of "1."

(3) The Small School: While the small School can similarly work, presenting less pretentious plays, and arranging missionary programs, the work will necessarily fall chiefly on the Mission Leader, who can tell a missionary story once a month, read clippings from the "Spirit of Mis-Missions," or make missionary talks occasionally; but the children, in even the smallest Schools will cut clippings and articles and bring with them, if a special country of District is assigned for a period of time, and if reminded. In the small School the raising of money is limited, and it might be well to encourage this by choosing some attractive special object. (See W. A. Leaflet No. 941.)

It is suggested that the School, or class, or group, be allowed to choose by vote, or otherwise decide, themselves, where all money shall go over and above their pledges or obligations to the Board of Missions.

Exhibits of curios, native costumes, etc., from the mission field; also charts and maps; stimulate interest and impress missionary lessons taught. These are loaned by the Church Missions House free of expense except for transportation. (See catalogue Educational Material Published by Board of Missions.)

A long list of books, plays and material, is included in the report of the committee.

A DRIVE TO RAISE $170,500,000

Dr. John R. Mott states that it will require, the coming year, $170,500,000 to carry on the war work of the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Catholic War Council, (working especially through the Knights of Columbus), the Jewish Welfare Board, the War Camp Community Service, the American Library Association, and the Salvation Army, which have blended their plans in response to the request of President Wilson, and will start a vigorous drive to raise this great sum of money the 11th of November. Dr. Mott, in a strong address, heartily supporting the President and the plan, setting forth the purposes and giving reasons for such a united effort, says, among other things:

"This co-operative plan will make for higher efficiency on the part of every one of the seven societies. It stands to reason that a plan that calls upon us to pool all our experiences will result in finer efficiency in each one of the societies because each one of these organizations has a splendid history, it has traditions of which it is properly proud, it has principles for which it would stand and fight, it has a philosophy and methods which have made possible great achievements. That leads me to remark that this plan of co-operation makes it easily possible for the strongest of these societies to help those who might not call themselves so strong. Some organizations that may not in the popular view be called so large, or so experienced, in the light of the teaching of the history of the world often are among the most useful societies. You take it among the nations, how true it is that some of the smallest and even some of the more obscure nations have lighted the way for the larger nations. A nation is not to be judged primarily by the number of its people, or the extent of its geographical area, or the magnitude of its industrial establishment, or the number of its millionaires, but by the character, the genius, the spirit of the people. By this abiding test any organization which is characterized by reality, by open-mindedness, by serviceableness, will be helpful to any other organization no matter how old or experienced that society may be. The advantage of this co-operative plan is that it makes possible the helping of the weaker organiztions by the stronger. No man or organization was ever made weaker by being called upon to assume added burdens, and the weakest organizations will gather momentum and courage from association with the others.

The bringing together in common action as well as common plan of all these societies is bound to promote better feeling all over the United States of America."

OBITUARY

The Rt. Rev. Francis Key Brooke, D. D.

The Rt. Rev. Francis Key Brooke, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of Oklahoma, entered into Paradise, after an illness of several weeks, from the home of his daughter, Mrs. Edward H. Lee, Chicago, on Monday, October 21st.

The Bishop was in his sixty-sixth year, having been born at Gambier, Ohio, Nov. 2, 1852 the son of John Thompson Brooke and Louisa Rebekah (Hunter) Brooke. His several degrees were conferred upon him by Kenyon College, the Theological School of Kansas, and the Union Theological School. He was ordained Deacon and advanced to the Priesthood by Bishop Jagger, and consecrated a Bishop January 6, 1893, by Bishops Tuttle, Pierce, Thomas, Kendrick, Atwill, Jagger, Spalding and A .R. Graves. Of his consecrators three survive him, Bishops Tuttle, Thomas and Graves. Prior to his consecration he had held rectorships at College Hill, Portsmouth, Pequa, and Sandusky, Ohio; St. Louis, Missouri, and Atchison, Kans. Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner," after whom he was named, was a cousin of his father. The service was held in private, Bishop Anderson officiating, at the residence of Mrs. Lee on Thursday and the remains were taken to Gambier, Ohio, for burial.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Sanford Olmstead, D. D., S. T .D.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Sanford Olmstead, D. D., S. T. D., entered into life eternal on Monday, Oct. 21st, at the Rectory in Saybrook, Conn., where he had ministered since his retirement from active duty as Bishop of Colorado.

He was born at Olmstedville, N. Y., on February 8th, 1853, and was therefore in the 56th year of his age. He was a graduate of the General Theological Seminary in the class of '76, and as a priest held three charges, Morley, N. Y., (1876-84), Cooperstown, N. Y., (1884-96) and Bala, Pa., (1896-1902).

He was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Colorado but was consecrated Bishop, owing to the death of Bishop Spalding, on May 1st, 1902, retaining that office until the date of his death, although having retired from active duty some three years, during which period he was in feeble health.

Bishop Olmstead was a master of Anglican theology, a poet of no mean order and a preacher of the first rank. Few men excelled him in the beauty of his diction, and in the finished style of preaching.

He possessed a genial nature, was generous to a fault and was always the gentleman. His nature was ill adapted to the clash of controversy or to the intricacies of business.

His Episcopate was saddened by the man in whom he trusted and who betrayed his confidence.

He may have lacked the wisdom to have chosen his counsellors wisely, but when once chosen, they could do no wrong. They were his friends.

He was judged harshly, by the business world, for he was not of it, but had his Episcopate been surrounded by wise counsellors, he would have radiated under the stimulating influence. Those who knew him best, loved him most, and he suffered, without malice toward any, the reverses that came to him.

We are sure that the good Lord will be more gentle with his faults, than was man, and we pray that light perpetual may shine upon him.

WILLIE BENTON'S PRAYER.

O Lord bless father and mother and Sister Minnie, and please make my boots go on easy, was the prayer of little Willie, who prayed for what he wanted. He did not use a great deal of circumlocution—praying for things he did not want. His boots were the things he did not want. His boots were the things that troubled him most; and it was very natural that he should tell his Father about them. To be sure, they were only boots—low earthly things, that many good people would not think fit to carry to the throne of grace. Willie thought he had a right to go to his Heavenly Father with anything.

PORTO RICO NOTES

Miss Iva M. Woodruff.

San Juan

Since the resignation and departure to the States of the Rev. Mr. Dickey, the services at St. John's and all the English and Spanish missions have been continued by the Bishop and the Rev. Mr. Walter, both full of zeal and inspiration. Many strangers attend the services every Sunday, among them are several nurses from the Base Hospital, forty of whom were sent here from the States for government service. Also there are officers from the camp. Among the latter there happens to be one who was a postulant for Holy Orders in Pennsylvania, from the Rev. Mr. Walter's home, Lieutenant Rocca, who has assisted at three services. Another officer to arrive very recently is a lifelong friend of the Bishop, Lieutenant Brooks of Tennessee. To find friends unexpectedly in a strange land is joy indeed to the men from home.

The Rev. Mr. Walter has lately undergone an operation which has forced upon him a much needed vacation from arduous work. Through the courtesy of the military authorities in charge, he was admitted to the Base Hospital (once the Barracks of El Morro), among six hundred other patients where he received excellent care. He is now rapidly recovering at his home.

Through the courtesy of the editor of El Tiempo, who is a constant attendant at our services, the latest cables, are read by the Bishop every Sunday—after which all kneel with him and give thanks for the victories vouchsafed us. The editor is a subscriber to The Witness.

St. John's Graded School reopened Sept. 16, with its highest enrollment of 61, the intermediate grades overflowing. Miss Georgia Mathes, one of the teachars of last year, having resigned, has been succeeded by Miss Lena Wormsley of Memphis, Tenn., whose personal charm and ability make her a most welcome member of the teaching staff. There are two boarding pupils, of interest because they were victims of the Carolina disaster, saving only their dolls, and they are also little nieces of Sir Gilbert Parker, the author. This promises to be the banner year of the school.

Ponce

The Rev. L. M. A. Haughwout has lately made a courageous appeal through the Church papers for a woman to assist him in his mission work as owing to certain customs of the country there is much only a woman can do. Thus far his appeal has not brought his helper, so he is turning his attention to the men and has instituted something new under the name of the Young Men's Christian Center, making the parish house a social, intellectual and spiritual center for the young men of Ponce over fifteen years of age who have not the privileges of a Y. M. C. A. He has adopted as a symbol, the Latin cross and a circle and has for his model and inspiration the Y. M. C. A. Soldiers are admitted free and special welcome is given to the Home Guard of which Mr. Haughwout is a member.

Mayaguez

Under the inspiring and energetic management of the Rev. Mr. Saylor, the first of the fine group of buildings for St. Andrew's mission is already enclosed and it is expected that the school may be transferred to it next month. It is a great satisfaction to the Bishop and all who have known the old dilapidated building of past years to see this marvellous change. At the same time the day school and services continue in a rented building and daily grow in importance. Bishop Colmore recently carried into effect his plan of a four-times-a-year call,—called the Bishops Call. The first brought generous response and the funds are to be used principally to equip the new buildings which are to house the workers, the school, industrial classes, and temporarily the church. The furniture is to be made of native wood by the rector and his trained boys who are doing excellent work.

SMALL EVENTS WITH BIG SIGNIFICANCE

What an interesting and thoroughly readable volume could be published if all the work of all the representatives of the Church in all the camps, could be compiled and recorded! Every day in the life of each of the workers there comes up some little incident which adds to the happiness of the work, or lends encouragement to the spirit of the worker. So many of these things seem too trivial to write down, and they are impressed only upon the heart of the worker himself. Now and then we glean definite knowledge of instances where a representative of the Church, either a Chaplain, Brotherhood of St. Andrew secretary, or Y. M. C. A. worker has been able to perform some actual and far-reaching personal service to an enlisted man which could not have been performed through any other channel.

One worker, who follows the general practice of endeavoring to obtain the names and addresses of all Episcopalians in his district, had distributed cards for this purpose among a small group of men. To the parents of the men, where names and addresses were given, he sent a personal note, advising them that he had established personal relations with the man himself and would be glad to do anything within his power. "The sailor did not suspect what would follow when he signed his name," says this representative, "but my letter to his mother is the first clew she has had of her son's whereabouts for a year or more."

In another case, where a man signed himself as a member of the Roman Catholic Church, the priest of his parish was advised in the regular manner. A reply came from the priest, saying that he had lost track of this certain chap for over four years.

Small events in themselves, but who can measure the resultant good? Two men brought back into circles of good influence, one to a mother whose heart was gladdened to learn of her apparently wayward son, one to the ministrations of a priest who was vitally concerned about the welfare of his parishioner. Two lives directed perhaps into channels leading into sunnier fields and broader endeavors, and incidentally two workers of the Church given new incentive to further efforts in His name.

CUSHHIONS WERE REPAIRED.

Many stories are told of the way in which a certain Parson Adams of Lunenburg, well known in the first half of the last century, attended to matters which he decided were in need of summary treatment. On one or two occasions, at least, his action was not limited to his own parish. One amusing instance of this sort occurred one Sunday, when he exchanged pulpits with a friend who presided over a well-to-do but somewhat careless congregation in a neighboring town.

This friend, who was one of the meekest and most long-suffering men imaginable, told Parson Adams, with much mortification, that there were one or two things about the church which sadly needed attention, but that although he knew his parishioners meant well, these matters seemed to slip their minds from week to week.

"The window behind the pulpit is sadly in want of repair," the gentle minister explained, 'and so is the pulpit cushion in which there is a large hole. I mention these matters so that you may be saved annoyance. I have learned to stand at one side to avoid the draft from the broken window, and I refrain from bringing any force to bear upon the pulpit cushion."

Parson Adams looked at his friend indulgently, but made no rash promises, simply saying he had no doubt he should get along all right.

On mounting to the pulpit in his friend's church the next day however, he proceeded to electrify the congregation by taking several handfuls of rags out of a piece-bag which he carried with him and deliberately stuffing them in the broken panes of the unsightly window.

Then he proceeded calmly with the services, but when he began his sermon it soon became evident that the pulpit cushion was by no means to be spared at his hands. In some way or other the largest hole in the cushion was worked around until it was well to the front, and after that, each of three emphatic thumps from Parson Adams' vigorous hands, as he expounded his ideas, sent a shower of feathers floating down over the heads of the deacons and their families in the front pews.

The next Sunday, when the gentle parson resumed his charge—there were no broken panes in the window behind him, and the pulpit cushion had a bran new cover.—Youths' Companion.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

NEW YORK LETTER

The new St. Bartholomew's Church which Bishop Greer, its former Rector, opened for public worship Sunday morning, Oct. 20th, is scarcely more among its wealthy members than the old one was at Forty-fourth Street and Madison Avenue. There it was surrounded by fashionable hotels and encroaching shops, with a block-away glimpse of the Grand Central Station; but in the nearby cross-streets were still the names of people of wealth, and they have not all departed from Fifth or Madison avenues below Fifteenth Street.

The new building is at Fifty-first Street, but it is a block further east, on Park Avenue, back of which there is no wealth, and south and north of which are school buildings, with the increasing Grand Central Station buildings still within a couple of blocks, while immense new apartment houses line the other side of Park Avenue.

But, perhaps, this location is in harmony with the ideas of the Rector, the Rev. Leighton Parks, D. D. He expressed a hope last Sunday that the new St. Bartholomew's should become "a House of God not only for the comparatively little supporting congregation, but for the many strangers who drop in from time to time, even though their names are not known to officials of the Parish." His laudable ambition is for a church property costing nearly five million more. With such a "plant" located midway between rich and poor, its rear doors towards the poorer East Side and its front towards the fashionable Park, Madison and Fifth Avenues, it is well to have a real church for all the people, of such magnificent proportions and beauty of architecture as to draw the interested visits of many coming generations. It would be a monument of better things coming down from a period of shameful war.

Unfinished as yet, with temporary dome and windows, with burlap covering walls yet to be erected and ornamented, the discerning eye can even now see enough of beauty to make it certain that here is another monumental church star, and like St. Thomas' and the Intercession will be visited and treasured centuries to come as finest examples of early Twentieth Century aspirations in eccleiastical architecture. The outside has its critics, chiefly those who are prejudiced in favor of Gothic as "the only fitting church architecture," but judgment may well be suspended here until the building, with its mingling of Romanesque, Italian and Byzantine styles, is entirely complete. There was, of course, the necessity of preserving bits of the old building, as, for example, the costly but dubious "Vanderbilt front," that compelled modification of the whole design, Inside there is some suggestion of such a church as Trinity, Boston, with the advantage in favor of St. Bartholomew's in the elements of joy and light. It is also reminiscent of certain famous churches of the City of Rome, that of the Jesuits, for example, or even of St. Peter's, on a smaller scale—if one allows for important differences in painting and sculpture. It is monumental and vast enough to satisfy reasonable craving for size, and yet it is perfect in acoustics, and there is never an echo to spoil either music or sermon. There is no need of strain in elocution in order to be heard, though some of those reading the service failed to realize that its very size required more volume of voice. It can easily hold 2,000 people, though the actual seats will be short of that number. There is also a beautiful chapel along the south side.

Possibly that portion of the choir floor where the clergy sit is too low. It was only when the people were kneeling that the Rector and Curate could be seen from the rear. The pulpit view is perfect, and yet it leaves the fine altar standing out as the center of the attraction. As at St. Agnes' Chapel, and other recent churches, the middle aisle is extra broad, accommodating perhaps six men walking abreast. While this may be impressively helpful to processions, and gives at all times a splendid vista of chancel and altar, one's first impression of it without a procession, is that of coldness and bareness, with a possible difficulty for the reach of the preacher across so great an empty space.

Nevertheless, when the whole view is taken, as a city newspaper put it, there is a cosiness and a homlikeness about this newest and largest of New York's great parish churches. It is a worthy memorial to the far sighted wisdom of a great rector who, as preacher and administrator, is an inspiration to his generation.

Death of Judge Andrews.

The death of Judge Andrews, of Syracuse, at the great age of ninety-one, was mentioned in New York papers Oct. 22, with such complimentary references to him as "the first citizen of Syracuse," etc. To churchmen every where he was one of the half dozen great leaders of the General Convention for a generation. His personal presence was impressive. An illustration of this was seen at the 1904 Convention in Boston. He arose to second a motion, and, with only a word or two of explanation, sat down. A Unitarian minister visiting the convention said enthusiactically, "I should like to hear that man make a speech more at length. He looks to me a splended type of what you might call an intellectual churchman." There were many who believed that he not only looked but was a great church leader in character as well as brains.

Return of Dr. Stires.

Dr. Stires arrived home from a three months' service in France shortly after the middle of October, and, while his numerous friends and parishioners were ready to welcome him at once, he was advised to go to his country home for a week or so to recuperate. The strain of speaking everywhere to our expeditionary forces was great, and a sign of that is seen in his return, with a loss of nineteen pounds. Many of us would be glad to lose that much at any time, but those who know Dr. Stires know him as a worker of tireless energy, of the "nervous-mental" type with not an ounce of superfluous flesh. His son, Mr. Ernest Stires, who went from Harvard more than a year ago as an ambulance driver, was wounded in the service. He is now enlisted regularly in the United States Army, and is to be sent to camp at an early date. The young man was vigorously opposed to the argument that "he had done his bit" and should be content to remain at home or in college. His patriotic spirit is most commendable, and is fortunately shared by thousands of other college boys.

TWO EMPIRES BY THE SEA

By George Huntington.

This International Hymn for England and America was written in 1896 by the Rev. George Huntington, Professor in Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota. There was at the time foolish talk of war between the two countries and this hymn was written to help bring a better feeling. The first verse has been often printed of late as something entirely new, but is over twenty years old. It has been printed on a slip used at Sunday services on steamers of the Cunard Line for many years. As first written, the fifth line of the third stanza read "Great populace and Queen." After the death of Queen Victoria, the author revised it as here printed. It is sung to the familiar music of "God Save the King," or "America."

Two empires by the sea,
Two nations great and free,
One anthem raise.
One race of ancient fame,
One tongue, one faith, we claim,
One God, whose glorious name
We love and praise.

What deeds our fathers wrought,
What battles we have fought,
Let fame record.
Now, vengeful passion, cease;
Come, victories of peace;
Nor hate nor pride's caprice
Unsheath the sword.

Though deep the sea, and wide,
'Twix realm and realm, its tide
Binds strand to strand.
So be the gulf between
Gray coasts and islands green
With bonds of peace serene,
And friendship spanned.

Now may the God above
Guard the dear lands we love,
Both East and West,
Let love more fervent glow,
As peaceful ages go,
And strength yet stronger grow,
Blessing and blest.

COUNCIL OF MISSIONARY BISHOPS.

Continued from Page 1.

the work in the Domestic field, the Bihsops request full discretion in the expenditure of their appropriations, but they ask for a rigid review of such expenditures by the Board.

6. The Bishops pledge their personal service and all their available resources to assure the success of the plan outlined in these resolutions.

A Definition of the Resolutions.

The above resolutions presupposed certain principles as their background, and later in the sessions of the Council these statements of principle were made for the better definition of the resolutions:

Our Task is to Make Dioceses.

1. The Continental Missionary Bishops would suggest to the Board of Missions that the theory which makes the administrative needs of the domestic field parallel with those of the foreign, is largely fallacious. Our problem is far more nearly coincident with that of the Dioceses. Our task is to make Dioceses. Our enterprise is not, and cannot be, segregated from that of the dioceses. Questions of remoteness, foreign habitat, alien language, permanence of tenure of workers, etc., are not factors in our domestic work. We should hope that in considering problems of the domestic field the Board would think from the diocese to the missionary district, and not from the foreign field back to the domestic.

2. The Council of Missionary Bishops makes the declaration contained in resolution 5 not by reason of any unwillingness to acknowledge and accept the propriety of oversight by the Board. Our statement does not concern Episcopal prerogative, but administrative efficiency. We are more than willing to be held accountable for results, but we cannot feel that the best interests of the Church are served by any plan which might diminish or paralyze the initiative of the Bishop. In the matter of launching new enterprises we have voluntarily established a check in the form of an advisory executive committee of our own body; and in the case of normal regular work, we feel that if we are to do the most and best with the money entrusted to us we should be left unhampered as to our processes, but we invite careful review at the close of each year.

3. This Council would welcome any means which would secure an adequate supply of efficient clergy and tend to prevent mistakes in the making of missionary appointments. Application papers, testimonials and formal appointment by the Board after the manner of the plan followed in the foreign fields might be largely useful to this end; but our experience leads us to believe that the inevitable delays involved in this somewhat complicated process, were it to become obligatory, would cause the work to take more damage than an occasional error of judgment on the part of the missionary bishops. We would call attention to the fact that the result of such possible error in the domestic field is not comparable with that in the foreign.

Closer Relation Sought Between Seminaries and Missionary Bishops.

The fourth topic discussed was that of "Clerical Education", on which Bishop Touret read a paper. He was followed by Dr. Gardner, who made many illuminating statements, and here, as elsewhere during the sessions, helped us materially with his large experience. The following resolutions were adopted:

1. That at a Council of Missionary Bishops assembled in Cheyenne, Wyoming, October 8th to 13th, it was recommended that a closer relation be sought between the Church Theological school and the missionary bishops, and

2. That a committee of three bishops be appointed by the President of the Council (he himself being a member) to canvass the situation, and with some constructive plan to report at our next meeting.

3. This committee is to determine, if possible, (a) the practicability of [illegible] of a seminary in a given locality, and because of the certain increase of population in the west and the future development of State Universities, the committee is requested to consider the advisability of establishing a theological school for the West, near a western State University, that the faculty of the same may be used as supplementary aid.

A committee appointed under the second resolution consisted of Bishops Touret, Thurston aod Thomas.

The Baptized Recommended as Basis For Church Membership.

In addition to the main topics above considered, the council adopted a resolution recommending that a change be made from "communicants" to "the baptized" as a basis for reporting membership in this Church. The committee on this resolution were Bishops Funsten, Sanford and Page. The executive committee was constituted by including the president and secretary—Bishops Thomas and Page—and Bishop Burleson, who was elected. The new Domestic Secretary, the Rev. F. S. White, is to be a member without vote of the Council, and also of all its committees. At all future meetings, except those held in connection with the General Convention or meetings of the House of Bishops, all traveling expenses are to be pooled and pro-rated among those present.

The council also adopted some general resolutions as follows:

1. The Council of the Domestic Missionary Bishops commends the work of the National Student Council, and recommends the formation of Units in the educational institutions connected with the missionary districts.

2. That this Council of Domestic Missionary Bishops gives its hearty approval to the Advent Call, and expresses the hope that all clergymen and officers of the Woman's Auxiliary in the domestic field will work earnestly to make as effective as possible this call to prayer.

3. The Council of Continental Missionary Bishops respectfully requests the Board of Missions to consider whether under the rules of the Pension Fund it should not pay pension assessments on rectories in proportion to the amount of salary and from the appropriation.

4. That this Council of Domestic Missionary Bishops expresses its affactionate and hearty appreciation of the hospitality and many kindnesses enjoyed at the hands of Bishop and Mrs. Thomas.

5. That the chair be requested to appoint a committee of three bishops, of whom he shall be one, to consider the business of the redistribution of the Provinces west of the Mississippi. The chair appointed Bishops Burleson and Page to serve on this committee.

At 10 o'clock on Saturday night the council adjourned to meet in Detroit on the Monday preceding the General Convention.

It is worthy of note that every resolution passed by this Council of Missionary Bishops received a unanimous vote.

It had been intended to have a great service in St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne, on Sunday morning, but all public meetings were forbidden, and, after a quiet celebration of the Holy Communion in the Bishop's chapel, he loaded four bishops and two secretaries into his hospitable car and started for Laramie, where, at 11 o'clock, on the campus of the university, an open air service was held, at which Dr. Gardner spoke, three or four hundred people from the university, the soldiers and citizens being in attendance. At the close of this service we viewed the attractive and impressive cathedral and, after a dinner at the hotel, were to have started immediately for Denver, where most of the party were planning to take trains in various directions. Before we got out of Laramie, however, three tires in close succession proclaimed their unwillingness to proceed, and it was 3:30 before we started on the 140 mile drive to Denver. It was a wonderful experience for us all to drive through the mountains along the top of the Continental Divide; and when, as we neared Fort Collins, Bishop Thomas suggested that we take a side-trip up the wonderful Big Thompson Canyon, a[illegible] spend the night at Estes Park, [illegible] yielded to the temptation with al[illegible] rity. The drive up by moonlight, [illegible] sunrise in the park, and the d[illegible] down again in the forenoon, wil[illegible] indelibly imprinted in the memo[illegible] of all. It is the sort of a trip o[illegible] does not describe, but only wonde[illegible] at so much lovliness. Early in th[illegible] afternoon Bishop Thomas delivered us safe and sound in Denver and we went our different ways thankful for the experience which had been ours in these days of fruitful intercourse.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS.

Continued from Page 4.

action. The Christian Church will never again be a force in human society, commensurate with its dynamic power, until egotistical men realize that the unity of God's spirit is not a figure of speech, but a sure reality.

* * *

I have talked with many men on the subject of the Christian Church and they confuse its fussy activities with its deep abiding purpose.

This little body of Pentecost was the most powerful little engine the world has ever seen, because it was a united force obedient to the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, confident in Christ's promise and willing to sink self in the common power.

And it did things in the Roman Empire for three hundred years, until factions, revolts, misdirections, would have wrecked the same completely, except that Christ had promised to be with His Church until the end of time. Our present cumbersome, burdensome, inefficient jumble of ecclestiastical machinery accomplishes little because it fails to understand the simple fundamental principles of all machinery, viz., unity of action, oneness of control, obedience of every part.

In the Christian religion today we assert ourselves and our opinions most successfully but one hundred and twenty Hebrews put it all over us in doing Christ's work and will.

OUR FATHER'S APPRECIATION

B. F. Finney, Chief Secretary of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, returns from each trip to the various camps, filled with interesting stories concerning the enlisted men and their religious life under new camp conditions. So enthusiastic is he over his work and so earnest in his desire to constantly "spread the Kingdom," that his hoard of stories bubble forth under all circumstances.

Riding north from Gulfport, Miss., recently, he fell into conversation with his seat-mate, and just as the conductor came along to collect fares Mr. Finney was telling something of the work the Brotherhood is doing among the enlisted men. The conductor caught the words "Brotherhood of St. Andrew," and his punch remained suspended in the air, the tickets were for the moment forgotten. These words had a deep significance for him, too, and his eyes lighted as he leaned down to Mr. Finney and asked:

"Are you connected with the Brotherhood of St. Andrew?"

Mr. Finney explained his asociation and his present mission through the south.

"Say," said the conductor, reaching Mr. Finney's hand. "I wouldn't take a thousand dollars for what the Brotherhood did for me and my wife not long ago. Our son was sick in the camp hospital. Through some confusion, or delay, or some cause, we could not get word from him or about him. We were terribly anxious to hear something about him, and were going to go to the camp ourselves, when we got a letter from the Brotherhood secretary there, telling us that in his visits through the hospital he had found our boy. Think of it! It was like an answer to our prayer! Our boy was better, and was receiving good attention, and this secretary was looking after his personal needs. and wrote us a letter for the boy hemself. Say, I'm glad to meet you!"

The tickets were punched, and the conductor went on about his business. He is but one of scores of appreciative parents all through the country who are deeply grateful to the Church agencies which are going into the camps under government permission and performing the little intimate duties which the parents themselves are denied.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

GROWTH IN FACE OF PECULIAR CONDITIONS

The Rev. George I. Browne

To understand the condition and position of our Church, we must take note of a few things; we must remember that there were Dutch, Swedish, German, Scotch, as well as English colonists that settled our land.

That there were colonies begun by the Quakers, Puritans, Baptists and Roman Catholics, and none settled by the Episcopalians as such.

That the Church of England, which is our Mother, was hated by all the earlier colonies; that after the Revolutionary War both because of her name and relations she was under a cloud; that Episcopalians, what few were loyal to the Prayer Book for which they suffered, were 200 years in this country without bishops or confirmation; that we have harmful traditions of laxity; that the vast bodies of emigrants who come later, came from the Roman Catholic countries, from Ireland, from Italy, and from Roman Catholic Germany and Austria; that the Protestants who came from these latter countries had their own national Churches, the Lutherans, Reformed, Moravian, Mennonite, Dunkard, and the rest.

Let us remember that we have gained nothing from emigration through all these years; that the old American stock has not been prolific, least of all the kind represented by the Episcopal Church. That our rapid and wonderful growth has been by those who came to her from all these sources, attracted by her incomparable Liturgy, her pure doctrines, her original and reformed Catholicity, that it takes time to assimilate all these elements, and weld them into one loyal body of American churchmanship. We have done marvels, but our task has only begun. We must expect larger things of the future! The spirit of America can be and some day will be, best expressed through our aid—the spirit of loyalty, both to past and the future, of a wise sanity, a big Freedom.

Our Church in America has had to carry on Missions in foreign lands, and she has had to be a "Missionary Church" at home. to go among those who had nothing by history, tradition or racial stock, or previous training in common with her, and to plant seed in a hostile soil of loyalty to ancient and forgotten things which are forever true—the spirit and practice of a Sacramental simplicity, sincerity and loyalty. And yet she has given more presidents to the nation than any other. That two-thirds of the signers of the Declaration of Independence belonged to her, her record, is written large, though often silently, on all the pages of our national life, and in the centers of thought and influence she, as a spiritual dynamo, exerts an influence far beyond her numerical strength.

THE RECTOR'S DREAM OF COLD FEET.

By Peter Euclid.

The Rector of St. Rufus Parish had returned from making calls, one afternoon, and was sitting in his study running over in his mind the excuses made by his flock for not attending the services on Sunday.

One person thought that the church was "so far away," another said that she "didn't feel well," one of the business men found that "'Sunday is the only day that I have for picnics or getting out into the country air;" several of the women did so much Red Cross work that they were "worn out by the time Sunday came around."

As he sat musing, he fell asleep and had a wonderful dream.

It seemed that he had gone to the printer and purchased a few hundred envelopes, about the size of a Duplex and in each of them he had placed little folded papers, filled with talcum powder.

On the front side of the envelopes was printed:

I'm Glad Foot Powder.
For "Cold Feet," that "Tired Feeling" on Sundays, Indifferenee, Disloyalty to the Church.
Directions—Shake one of these with talcum powder; the war was still going on—sons, sweethearts, brothers, husbands, offering their lives for their country and the freedom of the world, and many of his parishioners trying to "Keep the Home Fires Burning" by going on picnics, golf grounds and auto rides on Sundays, with never a prayer of thanksgiving to Him Who holds all in the hollow of His hand, with never a moment spent in His courts on His Day!

NEWSY AND EDUCATIONAL

Niagara Falls Rector Congratulates The Witness and Telegraphs for 1,000 Copies.

We appriciate very highly the following communication received from the Rev. David Henry Weeks, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Niagara Falls, N. Y., which was followed by a telegram requesting us to increase his order for five hundred copies of the Witness to one thousand:

"I have just finished perusing the October 19th issue of your paper and I wish to congratulate you and your staff. Personally I consider it your best effort. It is extremely newsy and educational. The news and up-lift material is so put together that it will appeal to the ordinary layman, and after all most of the laymen as well as most of the clergy are just ordinary. This copy has so appealed to me that I wish to make an extra effort to have your paper in every home. Have you 500 extra copies? If not how many copies can you send me at once? I will have a personal letter printed and sent by messenger to every one of our church homes together with a copy of your paper, urging them to read it from cover to cover and then to at least, give it a one year trial, which I believe many will do. With very best wishes for your future and thanks on behalf of our church people for the untiring services of the members of your staff."

Faithfully yours,
David Henry Weeks.

A number of parishes, large and small, in different parts of the country, accepted our generous special six weeks' subscription offer at ten cents for each subscription and are making successful drives to put The Witness in the homes of the people for the coming year. The offer still holds good to every parish and mission in the land.

Several dioceses have made The Witness their diocesan paper. Our plan is very simple, feasible and comparatively inexpensive, and can be adopted without any cost whatsoever to a Diocese.

These are trying days for Parish papers, owing to government regulations and the expense they incur. Why not fall in line with other parishes of the country which have adopted our plan, and use one or more columns of page eight of The Witness once a month, or oftener, for parish interests? The cost of printing will be only $2.00 a column, or fraction thereof, each issue. A few business advertising cards would pay the whole cost, if you see fit to defray the expense in that way We send the paper to all subscribers in your parish every week, and forward to you ten extra copies of the issue containing parish notes for each column used. This plan gives parishioners a General Church paper every week, a parish paper once a month or oftener as desired and, in some cases, a Diocesan paper once a month —a very strong and influential combination.

WHERE DO YOU LIVE?

The following is the third message in the series of cards distributed by the open air service committee at Pittsburgh, Pa.:

Where do I live? On a certain street, in Pittsburgh, or in some other City. You have not answered the question fully. As far as you have gone you are correct. I want, however, a more complete reply. Behind the Street and the City, in which your Room or House is, is the real answer. It matters very little to you and to the City whether your material abode is a small dwelling or a palace. But it is everything to yourself and to those surrounding you, where you live, when replying to the question fully—when answering far more than giving the name of the Street. In the most real sense then, we all live somewhere. Is it not a fact that we make our own world? Each life is a World in a City. Every new day that comes t ous an opportunity by which we can improve on genuine living. We can go through life with our eyes shut, and if we do we shall have lived in the poorest kind of a world. Poor, because we have, through our neglect, said NO to every voice of noble influence that has made its appeal. Are we, day by day, choosing the best things for making up our world? If so, it means that God will be no stranger, that Jesus Christ will be no myth, and that the Spirit will be the conscious guiding hand.

GENERAL FOCH FINDS TIME TO PRAY

American Soldier Witnessed the Commander at Devotions

A California boy—Evans by name —with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, has recently written a letter to his parents in San Bernardino in which he tells of meeting General Foch at close range in France.

Evans had gone into an old church to have a look at it, and as he stood there with bared head satisfying his respectful curiosity, a gray man with the eagles of a general on the collar of his shabby uniform, also entered the church.

Only one orderly accompanied the quiet, gray man. No glittering staff of officers, no entourage of gold laced aids were with him; nobody but just the orderly.

Evans paid small attention, at first, to the gray man, but was curious to see him kneel in the church, praying. The minutes passed until full three-quarters of an hour had gone by before the gray man arose from his knees.

Then Evans followed him down the street and was surprised to see soldiers salute this man in great excitement, and women and children stopping in their tracks with awestruck faces as he passed.

It was Foch. And now Evans of San Bernardino counts the experience as the greatest in his life.

During that three-quarters of an hour that the generalissimo of all the Allied armies was on his knees in humble supplication in that quiet church, ten thousands guns were roaring at his word on a hundred hills that rocked with death.

Millions of armed men crouched in trenches or rushed across blood-drenched earth at his command, generals and field marshals, artillery, cavalry, engineers, tanks, fought and wrought across the map of Europe absolutely as he commanded them to do, and in no other manner, as he went into that little church to pray.

Nor was it an unusual thing for General Foch to do. There is no day that he does not do the same thing if there be a church that he can reach. He never fails to spend an hour on his knees every morning that he awakes from sleep, and every night it is the same.

Moreover, it is not a new thing with him. He has done it his whole life.

—The Los Angeles Times.

Mr. Charles L. Huston, the head of the Great Lukens Steel and Iron Company, of Coatesville, Pennsylvania, says that when Coatesville went dry a Polak workman came to him and said: "No beer, no whiskey, me no kin work." He was told that he would have to get along without beer and whisyey some way. In a few weeks he came back with shining face and said: "No beer, no whiskey, me buy a house."—The Expositor.

A good story is told of the late well known and highly esteemed founder of St. Luke's Hospital, New York. On one occasion the organist of the chapel attached to the school the doctor also founded, inquired what hymns he desired to have used at the afternoon service. Having found out who was to be preacher for the day he summed up the good man's gifts as a preacher to boys by selecting a hymn that would be appropriate to his style, and said: "The best selection for him will be, 'Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep.'"

PARISH LEAFLET PUBLICATIONS

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand, ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service and for giving notices—"Lest he forget." Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM — In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS — New Families Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial, 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT CARDS—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—

A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 25 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.50. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms — Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a 100.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches), to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above cards for One Dollar.

Vestiblue Bracket — Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant With God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England — A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church—Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People—A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS.

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Four-page folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies, $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies, 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards.
   Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14). First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA.
Worthy of Universal Adoption.

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching," which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet, or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—

1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Misisonary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES:—

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson —a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:—

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts of Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
The Evening Service.
Henry XIII.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government, to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, IND.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 97. CHICAGO, ILL., AND HOBART, IND., NOVEMBER 9, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

America and France Will Influence Each Other's Life Deeply.

"It is obvious that France will rise out of this war a powerful nation with tremendous moral influence in the world of nations. Therefore the religious life and institutions of France are of great significance to Europe, to the Christian world at large and in many fields of missions," says the Rev. Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, Commissioner to France representing the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

"If I am not mistaken," continues Dr. Macfarland, "and I feel sure I am not, there is going to be a significant change of attitude towards religion and religious institutions on the part of the national leaders, publicists and of the Government itself. These agencies, instead of taking a neutral attitude, in place of a restraint which forbids expression of sympathy or encouragement for any form of religion, will take the very different course of expressing sympathy towards all forms of religion. They will not adopt or recognize a religion, but will recognize and encourage religion.

In the new, vital and warmly sympathetic relationship arising out of the war, America and France are going to influence each other's life deeply and this cannot fail and must not fail to include their religious life.

The Protestant Churches are relatively few in number but have an influence tremendously disproportionate to their numbers. This is due to the personal strength of their leaders. In official and commercial circles they are always strong and often dominant. They are a power in community life.

God has set before America an open door in France and Belgium. Other agencies, including interests social, educational and philanthropic, are seizing the opportunity for service to these nations and are already on the field. They are preparing the way for the Churches.

We have, on the part of the Churches, an opportunity for consecrated Christian statesmanship and service, calling for our earnest prayer, our deepest thought, our wisest and most effective action. Such are my most profound convictions."

The Reformation Was Not Started in Germany.

"Let us not forget that the one event which has perhaps done most to emancipate mankind from tyranny, the Reformation, started in Germany. While we remember that Frederick the Great and Bismarck were Germans, let us not forget that Martin Luther was a German also."

The Rev. Dr. Percy Dearmer of Berkley Divinity School, Middletown, Conn., quotes in a letter to the New York Times, the above statment, made in a speech by Mr. Morgenthau, and comments thereon as follows:

"But this is just an example of the way the world has been misled by German teaching. The Reformation did not start in Germany, nor was it started by Luther. He died in 1546. It was as early as 1415 that John Hus was martyred at Constance, and Hus was a Bohemian—he is, in fact, the chief glory of the Czech nation. John Wycliff was an Englishman, and he died earlier still—in 1384.

The Albigenses flourished in the thirteenth century, and they were French. The Waldensians arose in the twelfth century, and they were French too. The great thinker who laid the foundations of the Reformation on its ecclesiastical side was Marsiglio of Padua, 1275-1342, who was an Italian. Curiously enough, the earliest beginnings of theological Protestantism came, like the Hussites, from Slavdom—from Bulgaria and Serbia, where Bogomil and his disciples taught a doctrine rather like that of Tolstoy, which became dominant also in Bosnia and Herzogovina, till the Ottoman invasion overthrew this primitive Jugoslav Protestantism."

Tribute Paid American Church by Eminent Presbyterian Divine.

"If it is a sign of 'religion' to abstain from adultery, lying, cheating, stealing, fornication, drunkeness, and profanity, then the Episcopal Church has no fear of comparison with any denomination on earth," says the Rev. T. T. Walsh, Chaplain of the Church Home Orphanage, York, S. C., in an address on "Reglion in the Episcopal Church," and continues, "Like others, we have our full share of worldly minded and irreligious members, but the Church itself is full of religion and provides all of the aids to the religious life of its members. Billy Sunday admits this and says it is the best organized Church in America. At a meeting in the interest of Church Unity held in Edinburgh, Scotland, on January 14th, 1914, the Rev. MacAdam Muir, a former Moderator of the established Church of Scotland, (Presbyterian) said in his address: 'It may be known by some of those present that the late Principal Campbell, of Aberdeen, in an admirable work upon the Eldership of the Church of Scotland, calls attention to the Protestant Episcopal Church of America as one of the most apostolic, the most evangelical and the most to be imitated communions that we have in existence.'"

Futile to Commend Church Attendance as a Duty.

The Rev. Lester Leake Riley, Rector of Christ Church, Springfield, Ill., in a pastoral letter to his parishoners, referring to the necessary regulations of the influenza epidemic which "deprive us of the consolations of public worship" closes with the following paragraph: "When the ban is lifted we will assemble once again and I hope in great numbers, as an expression and evidence of this great need of the spiritual aspiration of our corporate life. I feel the utter futility of commending church attendance as a duty, although that is not a consideration to be despised. Rather, I urge it upon you for the very good reason that it should be the awakening of your inner self to the world's quickening response to God, that 'for this world the Word of God is Christ!,' and with the ambition that should animate everyone of us who loves life and our common humanity, we must be prepared to face the new problems of social and economic importance to Democracy which can only be brought to pass by an atmosphere that is created by religious enthusiasm and earnestness."

American People Occupy a Position of Great Promise and of Great Peril.

The following quotation from a pastoral letter, issued to the laity of the Diocese of Chicago by Bishops Anderson and Griswold, contains a message which Church people generally would do well to lay to heart:

While this letter is being written the air is full of peace prospects. But the excitement of peace will be quite as absorbing as the excitement of war: and the reconstruction days of peace will require even higher standards of consecrated devotion to lofty principles than the prosecution

Continued on Page 7.

BISHOP LAWRENCE CELEBRATES HIS 25th ANNIVERSARY

(From the Boston Post.)

The "banker-bishop" of Boston has just completed 25 years of his episcopacy.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. William Lawrence, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Massachusetts, has the unique distinction of having been extraordinarily successful in two widely different lines of endeavor—religion and finance.

Under his direction the Protestant Episcopal Church in Masachusetts has grown and grown until today it is a gigantic organization for good.

Bishop Lawrence invaded Wall street—in fact, opened an office at 14 Wall street, and wrested from the seasoned financiers three millions of dollars to be used for Church work. This earned him the title, "The Bishop of Wall Street."

Bishop Lawrence is one of the wealthiest prelates of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He comes from sturdy old New England stock. His forefathers were early settlers here. The city of Lawrence was named in honor of one of his forefathers.

From his father, Amos Lawrence, he inherited a fortune, and a keen business instinct.

Reminiscence of His Predecessor.

Bishop Lawrence has told a good story on himself, a story having to do with the election of the late Bishop Brooks.

It was during the time that Dr. Brooks was a candidate for the Bishopric. Dr. Lawrence was then dean of the Harvard Theological School. He was taking a walk with President Elliot and discussing the coming election.

"Don't you hope Brooks will be elected?" said he to President Elliot.

"No," said Mr. Elliot, "a second or third rate man would do just as well, and we need Brooks in Boston and Cambridge."

Dr. Brooks became Bishop Brooks, however, and a little time later the same two gentlemen again discussed the situation.

"Well," said Dean Lawrence, "aren't you glad that Brooks was elected?"

'Yes, I suppose so," said the president-elect, "if he wanted it. But to tell the truth, Lawrence, you were my man from the beginning."

The Bishop told the joke on himself with much glee. He is a charming talker, hearty and sincere. He is a manly man who looks you squarely in the face when he talks to you. His manner is quiet but distinctly forceful.

Established Pension Fund.

Bishop Lawrence went into Wall street to make possible the establishment of a pension fund for clergymen of his Church.

"Railroads, factories, banks, colleges, governments have decided that their aged servants have a right to a pension," said Bishop Lawrence. "Of course the Church cannot lag behind. If she preaches justice, she must practice it."

George Burleigh, who was vice-chairman of the New York committee of the pension fund, told of those days in Wall street.

"Correspondence answered, engagements made, and we are off for a day 'in the street,'" he said.

"As we go along among friends and acquaintances touch their hats to the Bishop or stop and express their interest in what he wishes to do for the Church and for the clergy.

"We are swallowed in the entrance of some large building, eventually reaching the sanctum sanctorum of the Wall Street Man.

"His greeting is really one of pleasure and interest, his manner perhaps softened by the errand of the Church upon which the Bishop comes. We settle down to an explanation of the

(Continued on page 7)

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by GRACE WOODRUFF JOHNSON.

How the Church Came to Oklahoma.

Extracts from the annual address of the late Bishop Francis Key Brooke (Missionary District of Oklahoma):

"For this first convocation after the close of my twenty-five years of service, I make a brief historical statement.

The Indian Territory stood for a long time in its early days, and even after the migration hither of the Five Civilized Tribes, almost untouched as a mission field of this Church. Nominally, it was a part of the great southwest field, assigned to the care of Bishops Polk and Freeman, as missionary bishops, and later Bishops Lay and Pierce of Arkansas. But those days up to and just following the Civil War, were days, when, especially in the Southwest our Church could undertake only little in the domestic field, west of the Mississippi, and what she did was done almost wholly in the Northwest, the Rocky Mountain Districts, and on the Pacific Coast.

For nearly fifty years of the known life of Indian Territory while the Indian nations and tribes were being settled here, and while white settlers were coming in large numbers to the states and territories surrounding us, this territory, while accumulating a fairly settled population of nearly 90,000, almost wholly Indian, had to be entirely neglected. So far as the people were of white blood, among the civilized Indians, and so far as they were Christians, they were of the great religious denominations of the Middle South, Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians, and these bodies did all the missionary work that was done. They founded and fostered many schools and churches among the Five Tribes, and planted some few, not very successful, missions among the wandering Indians of the west part.

Work Started in 1884, But Feebly Sustained.

By our Church only one effort was made, about 1884, to do mission work among them, that of the mission at Anadarko and Darlington to the Kiowas and Cheyennes. But it was feebly sustained, for some time no white missionary could be found to carry it on. The two Indian deacons, Paul Zotom, Kiowa, and our own faithful David Oakerhater, Cheyenne, the fruits of the work of a devoted woman, Mrs. Burnham, long since dead, in Florida, and in her own home in Central New York, left alone and sadly neglected, because discouraged, the mission was scattered, and the ground largely occupied by other Christian people.

When Oklahoma was opened in 1889 and later up to 1892, as other reservations were opened in the west part of the Territory Bishop Pierce, the aged Bishop of Arkansas, in charge of Indian Territory, planted missions in Guthrie and Oklahoma City, aided by the Rev. C. W. Tyler, and the Rev. G. F. Patterson from Nashotah, who did true and worthy pioneer service there, and to some extent in Norman, Stillwater and Chandler.

Chosen Bishop of the District in 1892.

In October, 1892, the District was set off and on the 21st, in the General Convention at Baltimore, I was chosen by the convention, its first Missionary Bishop. At the time I was rector of Trinity Church, Atchison, Kansas, and was sitting in that convention as a deputy from the Diocese of Kansas. I can scarcely describe the surprise, almost the painful shock, that the call was. I had been a parish priest and pastor for seventeen years, in Ohio, Missouri and Kansas, and had had no thought or expectation of such a call. But I believe then, as I do now, that it was the call of the Master, and unworthy and ill-fitted as I felt myself to be I could but obey it.

Only Two Priests and One Deacon in the District.

By that time the two Territories had gathered over 250,000 white people, besides the Indians and Negroes. There were the two white clergy, and our Cheyenne deacon, an unfinished church at Guthrie, some vacant lots and the old building of the mission, were the only equipment. No services had ever been held continuously in the Five Nations, and so far as I could learn no Bishop had ever visited them save once, at Tahlequah, seven years before. There were a score of towns of over 1,000 inhabitants in which no service of this Church had been held, and no communicants were known of outside of the five places I have named. This Territory was poor in wealth and struggling with the social and educational problems of a new country. The whole country was in the midst of the most serious financial and business depression for twenty years past.

The Church was slow to realize the marvelous growth and development already made and soon to be made in both Okalhoma and Indian Territory.

Not one in 2,000 of the immigrants were people of our Church. Here and there in the larger towns little bands of Church people were found or made themselves known, almost alone, for some months, while population was pouring in. I was the first missionary to these dear and devoted people.

With the half-dozen exceptions I held the first services, celebrated the first communions, baptized the first children in all the places where the work was planted up to the division of the District in 1910. As soon as possible the Board of Misions granted more money, but for every foot of ground that was bought and for every little church and rectory that was built, the needed help was gathered by personal asking from the Church in older parts of the country. Indeed, for the first ten years, at least a third of the meagre stipends of my fellow-missionaries, as one after another they came to our help, had to be gathered in the same way.

So rapid was the growth and multiplication of towns, so strained was the Church to keep up her work already undertaken elsewhere, so crippled was she in her power of giving to domestic missions, that it was some years before the Board of Missions even approximately gave adequate help to this field.

Church People Few and Poor.

Our own people were few and uniformly poor. If it is a reproach to the Episcopal Church, as sometimes is alleged, that it is the Church of the rich, there was no example of it in Oklahoma and Indian Territory in the years from 1893-1900. And it is a deep satisfaction to remember the self-denials and sacrifices, the really worthy and note-worthy giving and laboring of the little bands of Church people of that period. I gladly and gratefully remember it. In proportion to our means and expenditures for other things, I am compelled to say that later on, and now, that self-denial and sacrifice were and are less conspicuous. There are worthy exceptions but I am constrained to say that later generations of our Church people have been less generous, nor all so self-sacrificing. Slowly, we added to the number of our missionaries. Some faithful ones came and

Continued on Page 7.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THANKSGIVING DAY

NOVEMBER 28th

By the Rev. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

O Most merciful Father, who hast blest the labors of the husbandmen in the returns of the fruits of the earth; We give thee humble and hearty thanks for this thy bounty; beseeching Thee to continue thy loving kindness to us, that our land may still yield her increase, to thy glory and our comfort; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"An Army must travel on its belly" one famous General said forcibly, if not elegantly; but an Army must not stay on its belly; nor rely on its belly. We are led to this statement because we know there still exist those, concerning whom St. Paul's quotation "Whose God is their belly," can be voiced. Thanksgiving Day is a civil holiday which the Church has marked with an altar service, combining with its observance the idea of the English harvest home. The language of the collect strongly emphasizes thanks for the return of "the fruits of the earth." Undisciplined life, or uncultured life, is largely graceless; and a thankless child is apt to be a graceless one. "How sharper," said Lear, "than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child." The subtle poison of taking things for granted, including the giving of thanks, is apt to creep into the blood of many who should know better, and to that extent spoils their lives. Pray that thanklessness enters not into your speech or life.

A Call to a Genuine Expression of Gratitude.

One should be glad that the Church has committed herself to the truth that labor can be blessed by God, nay, is blessed by Our Heavenly Father; and if human toil seems not to be blessed, it is largely because people have forgotten to beseech a blessing from the Father and Maker of all good things. Thanksgiving Day is a call to men to think back of the might and skill of their own arms, to the Being who nerves their arms. It is a call to men to talk of something more than bullocks. It is a call to a genuine expression of gratitude for those gifts of nature which, when rightly used, will strengthen a man in his resolution to be something more than one of the brutes that perish.

"We give Thee humble and hearty thanks." Here are two adjectives that most Christians need to translate into their own daily lives. A humble man is "a man who knows." There are too many "smart" people in pulpit and pew today. There is a strong temptation for prosperous people to be arrogant. The genuinely thankful spirit, is the spirit which has come to that state of life through the school of experience. Its humility is not the humility of a modern "Uriah Heap," the pose which marked the Pharisee, who thanked God he was not as other men are. It is the humility of the man who has lived close enough to the heart of things, to be convinced that he cannot put his trust in any son of man, no matter how skillful he has been in making two blades of grass grow in the place where only one grew before. That kind of a man, when he gives thanks, is humble because he knows the real Source of his supplies, and he is hearty because everything he does is sincere and honest. Therefore, the Church puts into his humble and hearty mind the words of the Church's highest form of Thanksgiving, namely, the service of the Holy Communion in which as instruments or means of conveying a heavenly life the blood of the ripened grape and the life of the harvested grain are solemnly used.

Easy to be Thankful When Barns Are Full.

"Beseeching Thee to continue Thy loving-kindness, that our land may still yield her increase to Thy Glory." Here our wise Mother phrases the petition in such a way that if we are using our mind as we pray, we can not help but realize that we are expected to think of ourselves as using the fruits of the earth for something superior to one more important than our own physical comfort, though that is not omitted. The increase of our land is to be used in such a way that men will see our good works, and glorify our Father Who is in Heaven. We are to use this inrease for those who are in need, anywhere, everywhere. We are to see that "food will win the war" if those who grow it, and use it, will keep in mind "that whether we eat or whether we drink, we do all for the glory of God," "that God in all things may be glorified. This is the kind of prayer that a man who loves God can use with an honest heart, even when the earth is parched, and drought has made a fruitful land seem barren. It is easy to be thankful when barns are full, and prices make fat purses; but that kind of thankfulness may really be only a form of smug self-gratulation. The message this prayer has for most men is, that only that thankfulness is real which strikes the keynote of genuine humility, and realizes that the fruits of the earth are of very little permanent value if their result is only seen in an "Army marching on its belly."

The Epistle. St. James i. 16.

Do not err, my beloved brethren. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from a Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath; for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save our souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass; for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

The next great level of mission teaching to which Thanksgiving Day exalts us is found in this practical advice from St. James. Our Land, our Country, must be noteworthy for something more than the fruits of the earth. They must be of the earth, earthy: they are meant to sing the praises of God, but after all, there are other fruits Thanksgiving Day is meant to bring into prominence. "Make no mistake about it," says St. James, God makes it very evident as the Father of all the lights, that He is the Author of all good, and that there must be no evading of this in our own consciousness. Therefore, at Thanksgiving Time the nation must be able to say that her sons are as first-class a harvest, as are her fruits and grains. In fact, man is the crown of creation provided he follows the laws which are meant for his development.

The Day Should Witness the Gathering Together of the Doers of the Word.

There are certain laws which make it possible for a man to be something more than the beasts that perish. Both man and beast can eat of the fruits of the earth for the glory of God; but man will be like the beasts, and never be the first fruits of God's creation, unless he follows a law which requires that combination of sensitiveness to good and evil in such proportions, that he becomes a doer and not a hearer only. Thanksgiving Day should witness a gathering together of the doers of the Word—the men who practice what they preach; and are not content to become auricular gospel sieves.

Notice that St. James calls attention to the difference between the man who "beholds" and the man who "looks into." The difference is that the man who "beholds," is the fellow who is all for show; the person who is great for dress parade: the ornamental side of the ordinary parish who "fades away" when real work is to be done, as easily and noiselessly as a reflection fades from the mirror—such "first fruits" of a parish are the bandwagon boosters, the gay deceiver in a parish life; but the man who "looks into," this man is generally "out of sight" in the parish life, he is to be found where a real he-man counts. Everything he does is a benediction, because it counts for something. No mater where he is working, in the office, or the street, at home, in the Church, his influence is the kind that makes people thankful.

To Seem to be Religious is an Empty Thing.

Thanksgiving Day is that national holy day when men are reminded by the Church that to seem to be religious is an empty thing, because it puts a mask on the man who is behind the seeming. Thanksgiving Day men are reminded by this altar service that they must seem to be religious, and really be religious. That is an empty religion which does not send a man into life to lend a hand to the little and the helpless ones on earth: and also that is a fruitless sort of religion, a kind of sham, whose practice of religion has not helped him to wear the white flower of a spotless life: Or, if he has been spotted, has never let his religion work the spots out of his inner life which is his character. But in this epistle, Thanksgiving Day has not reached its highest message. Do not stop with the teaching of the epistle if your are ambitious to make the most of your life from the point of view of "first fruits of His creatures."

The Gospel. St. Matt. v. 43.

Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you; that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. For if ye love them that love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

A Call to An Apprecation of the Highest Standards of Moral Life.

The business of the Church is to make missionaries. Only be sure that in your understanding of the word "missionary" you mean what Jesus meant, when He said "As My Father hath sent me, even so send I you." The missionary's work starts with the earth, but its aims are ever forward and upward. Thanksgiving Day is a call to an appreciation of the highest standards of moral life. In this day's collect, the Church finds lessons for us in the harvest fields of the world. In the epistle she finds lessons for us in the social relations of men, gathered from the looking-glasses of their homes and from their social customs and manners. In the Gospel, she shows us that there are still higher exhibits whence men can draw inspiration for this earthly life. In this Gospel there is outlined a plan for those of us who are inclined to be clanish, and self-satisfied and rather hypercritical: a plan which takes the breath of one who likes to say that he has red blood in his veins. To love, bless, do good to, and pray for those people who have consciously or unconsciously set themselves in hostility to the ideals for which you are willing to die, or at least to which you have pledged fealty and been confirmed in that fealty, is a challenge that brings us way up from the level of the "fruits of the earth," or the level of "the first fruits of His creatures."

These are tasks for which a man needs something more than food and ethics. These are rare heights to attain, and the Church is wise in putting them before men as ideals to be attained rather than qualifications for entrance into the Army of the Lord. Let us make no mistake, however. Not to do the things this Gospel bids us do, is to prove that we are not really striving to be the children of the Father which is in heaven.

God's Commendation Not a Percentage Affair.

This Gospel is a challenge, a very direct challenge, to those Church people who draw a circle which keeps the other man on the outside. We are warned that to make the Church a mutual admiration society is to produce a misshapen thing which will always bear the marks of sterility and barrenness. The Church which salutes its brethren only, finally loses the power to be understood, save by the few. When this state of affairs comes about it ceases to be a Church, and becomes a sect. The Father calls us to perfection. Perfetction is not one hundred per cent. To set up that numerical or percentage standard of perfection is to set up a human limitation as the ultimate standard. God's commendation, or His blessing, if you please, is not a percentage affair. Perfection in God's sight is to fulfil the law of your being by using your talent or talents for the good of your fellowmen, which will ultimately be for His glory. Our business is to change enemies into friends: to change prejudice into appreciation: to give your best thought to those who are hostile and hateful: to talk long and frequently with your Father about those who will not try to put themselves in your place, and so are led to say and do things which torture and hurt you.

Our business is to use Our Father as the centre of our inner life, and then in our thinking and working to draw circles large enough to include the other man. Not to do this, is to play the publican—the man whose interests in life circle only about himself; a person who is all profession and no practice.

Let us use this Altar Service next Thanksgiving Day. It will be well worth while to examine ourselves by the standards set for us in the Collect, Epistle and Gospel, and to judge ourselves by these standards, that we be not judged of the Lord. To thank God in the great congregation is His due. The service will be uplifting and wonderful in proportion as the individuals who participate in it are in the habit of thanking God daily for food, for friends, for ideals, for a life blessed by the teachings and presence of Jesus Christ.

SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

Diocesan Prayer for the Advent Call.

Oh God, Our Father, who, through this present crisis, art revealing Thyself to us and calling us to a renewed consecration of Thy service, open our ears to Thy call, our eyes to behold Thy presence, our hearts to the need of others.

Bless, we beseech Thee, the efforts which the women of this Diocese and Church are making in a special mission to lead souls to Thee. Give spiritual power to Thy servants, the messengers, who shall speak in Thy name. Strengthen them with Thy might. Sustain them with Thy abiding presence. By the influence of Thy Holy Spirit purge our lives from sin and selfishness. Lift us up into fellowship with Thee, that partaking of Thy power, these days may find us prepared and quickened for a more devoted service to Thy Kingdom. We ask this in the name of Him, who calls us and awaits our response. Thy Son our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

(Written by Bishop-Coadjutor Reese for use in the Diocese of Southern Ohio at every service until the end of the Advent Call, December 8th.)

An Intercession.

O God, almighty and merciful, let thy fatherly kindness be upon all whom Thou hast made. Hear the prayers of all that call upon Thee; open the eyes of them that never pray for themselves; pity the sighs of such as are in misery; deal mercifully with them that are in darkness; and increase the number of the graces of such as fear and serve Thee daily. Preserve this land from the misfortunes of war;— this Church from all dangerous errors;—this people from forgetting Thee, their Lord and benefactor. Be gracious to all those countries that are made desolate by the sword, famine, pestilence or persecution. Bless all persons and places to which Thy providence has made me a debtor; all who have been instrumental to my good by their assistance, advice or example; and make me in my turn useful to others. Let none of those that desire my prayers want (lack) Thy mercy; but defend and comfort and conduct them through to their lives' end.—Bishop Wilson Sacra Privata.

WHITHER ARE YOU GOING?

Human life is a journey. All the machinery that keeps the activities of the individual going is ever causing a man to move. In what direction? Is he driven forward or backward, without in any way being consulted? We only have to look into our own hearts for the great answer. We know, beyond a doubt, that the direction of our life is in our own hands, just as much as the automobile which a man drives. He determines the way, through the wheel that he turns. God, because He is our Father, aims to be the main Instructor of life. He seeks to give us the real idea of guidance, that we may make the best use of His instructions in piloting our journey. We are moving, whether we realize it or not. We can travel, always, in the upward direction. It depends on two things, First, the place in life that we give to God. This must be settled. Second, the realization of our own power. We shall never see it unless we realize the same. He seeks us, and we must seek Him. This two-fold seeking will assure every man of his moving forward. Leaving behind the things that are worthless, and ever turning his back upon the forces of evil.—Card message distributed by the Open Air Service Committee at Pittsburgh, Pa.

WAR MOURNING.

Bishop Coadjutor Reese, of Southern Ohio, says The Church News of Pittsburgh, has prepared a special ritual to be used at memorial services for members of congregations who have been promoted by death from service in this world to service in the spiritual world.

The ceremony includes the changing of the blue star in the congregational service flag to one of gold as better representing the one who has passed on, and is entirely of a triumphant nature, having no trace of grief in it, but emphasizing throughout the great teaching of our Saviour on this subject that He was the conqueror of death and had changed it so that instead of an ending of life we should look upon it as but life's beginning.

This form was used at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., recently in commemoration of a splendid young man who went from that congregation and met with an accident while flying over Pensacola Bay.

The family attended the service without mourning, and with a courageous bearing that is an example of Christian faith and patriotic inspiration to the whole country, and will do much to bring about a new attitude toward the separation from those who go before.

As Whittier so beautifully expresses it:

"Who hath not learned in hours of faith
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That life is ever Lord of Death,
And Love can never lose its own."

"Peace on earth, good will to men," may not be so far distant as the roar of cannon would lead us to believe.

"A STUDY SONG."

By Mary Artemisia Lathbury

(This was written for the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle in 1880. It is well fitted for devotional use by any Study Class.)

Break Thou the bread of life,
Dear Lord, to me,
As Thou didst break the loaves
Beside the sea;
Beyond the sacred page
I seek Thee, Lord;
My spirit pants for Thee,
O Living Word!

Bless Thou the truth, dear Lord,
To me—to me—
As Thou didst bless the bread
By Galilee;
Then shall all bondage cease,
All fetters fall;
And I shall find my peace,
My All—in—All!

"Humility is the foundation of the spiritual edifice, and charity the perfection and consummation of the whole."—Savonarola.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS IN THE WEST AND SOUTHWEST

An Attempt to Answer in Part Why the Church Does Not Grow More Rapidly

By the Rt. Rev. THEODORE N. MORRISON, D. D., Bishop of Iowa.

It is always well to look facts squarely in the face. It is neither loyalty to the Church nor is it an evidence of an unshaken faith in what the Church teaches, to cry, peace, peace, and to refuse to acknowledge the actual condition of affairs.

Is it a fact that the Church has not grown in the West and Southwest as we might have expected? Is it a fact that the larger part of our candidates for confirmation and an alarming per cent of our clergy come from other religious bodies? Is it a fact that the Church offers Christians an opportunity to live a worldly life in an atmosphere where they will not be subject to adverse criticism?

If there is any degree of truth in these statements how has it come about?

It will not do to say that in an early day the Church in the East did not furnish money enough for the work of effective Church extension. That is true, but by itself it will not explain the present situation. Bishop Chase came into Illinois in 1835. He worked hard and successfully. The Bishops who followed him did not neglect the field. There is possibly not a town numbering 1,000 or 1,500 in population in Central and Northern Illinois, in Iowa or Minnesota, where at some time a mission has not been planted. In many places, where we now have a few people or where we have no service, a parish once existed.

It is true that foreigners took the place of the distinctively American population. It is true that the old people died and their children went to the cities. But the Methodists and Baptists and Christians survived and often flourished. Allowing for the exceptions, the Presbyterians held their own and made some growth. Why did not the Church root itself in these towns, draw to itself at least a part of the permanent population? Were the people more open to the influence of these other churches? or did these churches do their work better? or did they make a more religious appeal?

Explanation of a Perplexing Problem.

It is a perplexing problem, but one or two things may be said by way of explanation.

In the Mid-West town in which I spent my early life the Episcopal Church had, all things considered, a good regular congregation. A number of the leading men of the town were at church every Sunday, most of them at both morning and evening service. They were upright men, well thought of in the community. They were, as I remember them, rather reserved in religious matters, saying little about their religious experience, but reverent, very markedly so, and apparently holding to the principle that a man's religion was evidenced by his conduct.

There was not, perhaps, any distinct type of Churchmanship, but they were Episcopalians and proud to be such. They called themselves low-churchmen, but they believed in an Apostolic ministry and would not have endured to have a clergyman not ordained by a Bishop minister at the Holy Table. They thought that the church building was God's House and all levity, even conversation, was rebuked. The children grew up to look on the chancel as a sacred place, into which they were not to set foot. The clergyman dwelt often upon the sacred nature of the Holy Communion and urged that no one come until he had made careful spiritual praparation.

The various Protestant Churches tabood dancing and card playing and attendance at the theater. In the fifties most of our own clergy allowed these amusements under protest. At a Church social, after the clergyman and his wife had gone home, the young people sometimes danced, and afterwards apologized. Yet, even then, our people if they wanted to do so danced more or less at parties and in special gatherings.

Except for the yearly revival which every Protestant expected to hold, with the help of some neighboring brother, in his own church, and the fact that every person seeking admission to a Protestant Church had to profess conversion, there was not so very much apparent difference between the spirit of a church congregation and, that of, say, the Presbyterian.

The Laity Did Not Feel Personally Responsible.

But as a matter of fact there was a difference, a radical difference in mental if not spiritual attitude, and that difference accounts for the fact that the laity of the Church did not feel a personal responsibility for doing spiritual work or converting other men to Christ.

There was in the Episcopal Church in the town of which I have been speaking, a Sunday School of almost sixty scholars. One man and usually only one man was teaching in the school. There were one or two mature women teaching, but most of the teaching was done by very young women, who of course had not very much personal religious experience.

But opposite was the Methodist Church with a big Sunday School. Down the street was the Presbyterian Church, with, for the size of the town, a remarkable school. The leading people in these churches, some of the men prominent in the town, were in the Sunday School work, teaching, organizing, giving life and enthusiasm, studying how to enlarge and improve the school.

And what has been the result? The congregation of the Episcopal Church has not grown as the town has grown. The Protestant Churches got hold of the children and have kept a certain proportion of them in active Church membership.

Accounts For Failure of the Laity to Work With Enthusiasm

But, again, why? Is it not easy to see why? There seems something in the very nature of the Church which creates a feeling on the part of the laity the responsibility for an all aggressive spiritual effort as the duty of the ordained man. As social activities have increased and social service has been emphasized, more laymen co-operate, but to bring men to a knowledge of Christ Jesus, their conversion, does not weigh as a burden on the conscience of our laymen. Our vestries have been trained to think of themselves as securlar trustees. They are not to interfere with the priest in his spiritual work. They are to have no voice as to the ordering or ritual of services. The priest has the jurisdiction over the responsibiilty for all spiritual matters and the vestry are to look after finances. Has this anything to do with the fact that our laity are not working with enthusiasm in organizations which demand spiritual interest and growth?

The Laity in Protestant Churches Get a Living Institution

The Protestant Churches are in spirit democracies. The minister is only a layman set aside for a special work that the whole body may have leadership and inspiration. What he is doing is the duty of every Christian man. There may be sometimes a trying subordination of the minister to the people, there may be often self-assertion, crudeness and ignorance, but there is, by virtue of the spiirt in the body, greater activity. The laity, for instance, in a Protestant Church consider that the Sunday School is their school; they run it in their own way not saying by your leave if they want to do anything, but they certainly get a living institution, and, possibly, spiritual development and efficiency.

A layman of the Church is apt to complain that the rector is no Sunday School man and bewail the fact that "we have a poorly attended Sunday School," but his remedy is to change the rector. It never occurs to him that only laymen can change the situation.

The Clergy Are Doing the Talking and the Laity Are Good Listeners

We cannot alter the order of the Church. Altar and priest must remain. Is there any possibility of changing the spirit, the mental attitude of the laity? Frankly, I don't know. I see that in our various efforts the clergy are doing the talking and the laity are good listeners. In our various efforts at Educational Work, Social Service, Reforms of Various Sorts, the clergy are doing the organizing, taking the position of responsibility and doing the talking. The laity serve on boards, commissions, committees, and often have individually a real interest, but the clergy furnish the steam. In the parishes a priest lies awake nights thinking up ways and means for keeping the Men's Club going, or galvanizing into activity the parochial chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Why not? It's his business.

Solve this problem, and you have solved most of the problems of church growth. An earnest laity, a laity devoted to making Christians, a laity that are themselves preaching the Gospel, if not hampered and tied down by authority and tradition, if allowed to do things in their own way, to make mistakes, to learn by failure, may give a life and energy to aggressive work which we have lacked in the past.

If we could in some way get it into the minds of the people that a personal conscious religious experience was normal to every real Christian and to be looked for, and that public worship and the reception of the Holy Communion presupposed, in adults at least, a spiritual hunger and a conscious discipleship, it would be easier to arouse effort and have our laymen bring their trained business intelligence and modern methods into service in the work of evangelization.

The Priest by Himself Cannot Make a Parish Grow

But of one thing we may be sure: The priest by himself cannot make a parish grow, the whole body of the Church's membership must pray and work if we are going to better conditions.

Possibly we must begin with the clergy, get rid of the word rector, call our priests pastor or father, teach our young men that the laymen have some rights touching services and ritual, that vestrymen are not merely elected to look after finances, but that a Vestry is the priest's council of advice, his fellow workers in prayer and effort to make men spiritually minded, and that by accepting an election as a Vestryman a man stands self confessed as a Christian and a lay evangelist.

Churches Reap What They Sow

God is not mocked and our churches reap what they sow. Our present condition is largely due to the fact that being a hierarchial Church we have educated our people to believe that the duty of training souls and of evangelizing careless and unconverted men rests only on the clergy. Things are much better than they were, but the arrogance of many of our clergy a generation or two ago and the determination to resent authority and vindicate the canonical rights of the rector, are still bearing fruit, and to the great loss of the Church—at least in the Middle West.

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF MISS MARY E. HART.

The October number of "The Sword and Shield," published in the interest of St. Michael's Church, Geneseo, N. Y., contains a series of beautiful tributes paid to the memory of Miss Mary E. Hart, the founder of "The Babies Branch" of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions. The following is a quotation from an appreciation by Mrs. Julius H. Potter, long associated with Miss Hart in the financial work of the Junior Auxiliary, and the Little Helpers:

Miss Hart brought nothing but joy and sunshine to all her friends, and to the end, maintained this beautiful, wonderful and helpful influence, the deep loss of which is felt so keenly by the Diocese of W. N. Y., in which her work was such an important and vital part, extending even to the remote bounds of China and Japan.

The great theme of her life was the music of abiding cheer and joy.

By her own direction she desired that "Music and flowers in abudance" should surround her at the very last —that though parting from this world, when she "awoke in His Presence" her friends should show "neither grief nor sorrow, nor shed any tear," but all should rejoice and be glad in that, though parted for a time, she had finally entered into the shining Presence of her Maker.

"It is a wonderful thing to think about twenty-five years of work: to lift the curtain and look into the past and see the faces of the many Helpers in the Lord who have worked, to mark the zeal of the Diocese of W. N. Y. for Missions; giving time, talent, money, and better still, prayers for the extension of Christ's Kingdom in the world. Some have planted, others have watered, but God has given the increase." This is what Miss Hart wrote at the close of twenty-five years of work. Six years more have been added since then to her untiring efforts.

In 1887 at the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of W. N. Y. held in Batavia, Dr. Langford, then Secretary of the Board of Missions, preached from the text, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do." Miss Hart was so impressed with his words, that she went home that night, and on her knees asked what her part in the work was, and from that hour she saw her duty clearly, and the result was the Junior Auxiliary in Western New York,—the pioneer society.

In 1891, through the inspiration of the little child in her home, her little nephew, Gaylord Hart Mitchell, the idea came to her "What can be done for God-children to help them to love His work." And so the first company of Little Helpers was framed and welcomed into the ranks of the older Helpers in the Kingdom, and was given the name of "Babies Branch."

How that work has spread into every diocese and Missionary jurisdiction we all know—and how thousands and thousands of Little Helpers know the story, and are taught to believe more in Christ, in Heaven, in Missions.

"Some have planted, others have watered, but God has given the increase."

We thank Him for the life which has been such an inspiration to us all.

The following poem, written by Miss Hart in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of her work for children, was presented on a card to those in attendance upon a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary held at Batavia, N. Y., in 1912:

"Workers Together."

Dear Friends, we are "Workers Together.
In all that is sacred and true;
Let's begin with new faith and new courage,
And see what this year we can do.
"Work today" Christ said, "in my Vineyard;
I am with you; be steadfast, be strong."
He is watching His Vineyard, His workers,
And our days for His Work are not long,
He knows each one of is Workers,
He knows best what each one can give;
He gave us our strength, time and money,
Let us give Him our best while we live.
When He calls us to work in His Vineyard,
Let each quickly respond to His call;
Offer mind, strength and time for His service;
Our hearts, deep affection—our all.
These children, whom we are now teaching
Are the Church of the future, you know.
It depends upon us who are workers,
That we sow in their hearts seeds which grow;
This seed in the hearts of the children,
May bring forth ripe fruit, rich and sweet;
When our work is laid down for the Master,
As an offering of love at His feet.
—Mary E. Hart.

"Workers together with Him for twenty-five years."

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

SEVENTH PAPER.

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 14. The next change proposed is a very simple one and needs no comment. In the third rubric on page 6, before the word "Benedicite" insert "Benedictus es.' In other words to provide for the ue of Gloria Patri after the new canticle.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 15. This proposed change is two-fold and should be so considered. In order that it may be understood it will be necessary to print it in full, as adopted by the last General Convention.

Make the second rubric on page 7 read as follows:

Then shall be read the FIRST LESSON, according to the Table or Calendar. And Note, that before every lesson, the Minister shall say, Here beginneth such a chapter (or verse of such a Chapter) of such a Book; and after every lesson, Here endeth the First (or the Second) Lesson.

Make the third rubric on page 7 read as follows:

Here shall be said or sung the following Hymn. But Note, that on any day when the Holy Communion is immediately to follow, the Minister at his discretion, after any one of the following Canticles of Morning Prayer has been said or sung, may pass at once to the Communion Service.

It will be observed, by reading the rubrics on page 7 of the Prayer Book that the new rubrics as adopted by General Convention combines the present second and third rubric on page 7 and makes instead of two separate rubrics governing the announcing of the lesson one rubric.

The second provision is to add a new rubric. The rubric as adopted is somewhat fuller than the one proposed by the Commission. Its purpose is to permit the passing at once to the Holy Communion after the singing of one of the Canticles following the reading of the First Lesson at Morning Prayer. This is, perhaps, the most radical change proposed in the office of Morning Prayer.

DEMOBILIZATION PERILS.

Some people wonder whether the $170,500,000 will all be needed if peace should come shortly. Dr. Mott's answer is that much more will be needed in any event, and that if the war were to end in a week it would take from one to two or more years to bring our boys back to this country. And this period of demobilization, he points out, would be the most perilous of all to the morals of the men. Relieved from the tension of the trenches, with less rigid drill and more leisure, the temptations would be far stronger than now, and the need proportionately greater to provide the athletic, educational, entertaining and social means that would keep the men busy with wholesome and good things and out of the alluring evils. Never would demands upon the Y. M. C. A. and other agencies be so great, or the need of social and religious and restraining influences be so urgent as in this period of relaxation.

The social welfare work means not only work to keep the American soldiers fit for the fight and at the top of health and effiicency, but also to bring them back home without shame or stain, ready for the highest type of service of American citizenship.

The millions will all be needed, never fear for that. And no matter how many more may be needed, no amount is too great for this ministry to our army and navy and the soldiers of the allies—a ministry of helpfulness and unselfishness and ready self-sacrifice such as the world has never seen before. And the glory of it is that the support on the part of the American people has been voluntary —such an outpouring of money from altruistic and patriotic motives as has no parallel in history.

"Yet, if you are wise, you will add a third, a zeal for prayer. These three abide: the Word, the example, prayer; but the greatest of these is prayer. * * * To occupy oneself with God is not to be idle—it is the occupation of all occupations"—St. Bernard of Clairvaux.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., and Hobart, Indiana.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

THE VIRUS OF HATE.

An automobile has not a personality. You do not blame the automobile, because in the hands of an intoxicated driver, it goes over the cliff to destruction.

And you will travel much more comfortably and safely in a Ford, driven by a capable and careful driver, than you will in a Packard which is directed by one incompetent and careless.

Yet people have a way of blaming things for their own incompetency.

This is nowhere more evident than in the life of the Church.

People speak of the Episcopal Church or the Methodist Church as though it had a personality, whereas it is essentially an institution that is dependent upon the skill and sincerity of those who direct the same for its efficiency.

True, the Church is guided by God's Holy Spirit, but this is not a mechanical guidance taking the place of those in power, but rather a co-operative assistance, which acts in response to human asking and human endeavor.

Truly the Holy Spirit guides the Church, so that it may not be utterly wrecked, but not to such an extent that the lamp in some particular locality may not go out.

In so far as the Church is an institution for the purpose of bringing God into the lives of such and such persons, the Church is dependent upon those who wait upon her for its efficiency.

Just as you cannot put a republic into Russia because the people of Russia cannot use the gift of liberty, so you may not successfully put the Church of Jesus Christ into a narrow, hide-bound, pharisaic neighborhood and have it shed forth sweetness and light.

These qualities must shine through human lives and cannot be reflected from stone walls or artistic windows. Christ Himself made the Pharisee who lacked humility a worse Pharisee than he was before he met Him. Judas was far worse after three years with Christ than he was before.

This is what St. Paul meant, when to the Corinthians he said: "We are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life."

In other words the gospel of Christ is like a two-edged sword, in that it operates to make a sincere man better and an insincere man worse than he was before, and anyone who has followed the operation of the Christian Gospel closely knows this to be true.

Men object to attending Church because of the hypocrisies of Church members, failing to realize that just as public schools make a worse dunce out of a fool, so the Gospel of Christ makes a worse knave out of a rascal. The Church is no more to blame because of this fact than is an auto because an idiot uses its power to its own destruction.

This republic makes thousands of hypocrites out of dishonest politicians, and so men stay out of politics.

The Church makes thousands of hypocrites out of those who attend Church for ulterior motives, and so men stay out of Church.

The army makes thousands of hypocrites out of those who advertise their heroism, and so men grow bitter toward military men.

But,—why not retire into a glass case, in order that you may keep your untainted soul from all impurities?

Are you afraid to serve Church and Country for fear you may soil your clothes, and appear less immaculate to your fellow men?

Now the virtue that St. Paul places behind our destiny is sincerity. For he follows up the verses that I have quoted with this verse, "For we are not as many, which corrupt the Word of God, but as of sincerity, but as of God in the sight of God; speak we in Christ." No man who is sincere in his motives need to fear the stain of hypocrisy.

But that is just the rub, for unfortunately insincerity is essentially the deception of one's self.

The Pharisee fooled neither God nor man; he fooled himself. Just as the Hun fools nobody but himself, but he himself is badly fooled regarding himself.

We must have some sort of a motive in our life, and these motives may be sharply divided into two classes:

The motive which seeks the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, which puts God first and self second.

And the motive which seeks to use God in the interests of self. "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, you cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven."

Godliness and self-righteousness are different plumb centers from which to justify your lives.

There is still another class of self-constituted critics, who refuse to play the game at all, because it is not to their liking.

They really belong to the self-righteous, for they, too, "trust in themselves that they are righteous and despise others."

It is not an easy thing to "carry on" in the Kingdom of God. It is much easier to play the slacker, but the slacker is worse than the poor soldier. He is on no pedestal himself that he should despise others, for he makes no effort at all to do his duty; hence he finds no mistakes in his life; but, like the Pharisee, he deceives himself. He makes the fatal mistake of the man with one talent. He buries it in the ground and abuse his Maker.

Now the Church of the living God is a glorious institution only when it has sincere men, who are seriously and earnestly trying to do their best.

The heights of human character are reached only by those who serve, and then only at the price of wounds and suffering.

To evade suffering is to be selfish. To seek suffering is foolish; for self-martyrdom is a species of morbid disease. But to endure suffering when it cannot be avoided, this and this only is Christ-like.

The Church needs sincere men, who believe that the spiritual issue is the great issue of human life.

It is the issue that we are fighting for in this war, and before this war, and it will be the issue that we have to face after this war, and some of our worst enemies are those of our own household.

I cannot speak too strongly against that form of self-righteous egotism which demands that our boys shall be their instrument in wreaking vengeance on the Hun.

We pride ourselves on the high morals of our army, but what sort of boys will come back to us after they have engaged in a war of extermination upon German cities? Shall they descend to the level of the Hun to get even with the Hun? All I have to say is to go and do it yourself.

It was said of the Huns that many of them shrank from atrocities at the beginning, and when forced by military authorities to do their dirty work, they grew into the fiends they became. No man can go into that hideous business without lowering his own morale.

I am willing to concede that the Hun must be suppressed, and effectively suppressed by the world's police, but I object to my boy and your boy being asked to club the victim into insensibility when he is at their mercy; not because the Hun doesn't deserve it, but because our brave boys have not earned such a reward for their courage.

If they are ministers of God, as we believe they are, then let their hands be clean when they finish this violence. They have done their work well as soldiers; do not ask them to become butchers, and then expect them to come home and be men of God.

Sincerity is a great virtue, but it must keep itself clean from the false motive of malicious revenge, or the root of bitterness will be sown in our hearts, and this last form of Prussian propaganda will be the worst of them all.

We cannot afford to become infected with this virus of hate, under the spurious pretext that our morality is flabby unless it seeks revenge. Let us tell you that our morality will be gone if we do descend into this diabolical pit, and I would that we could send only those wise men who advocate it to do this dirty job. They at least would not be injured thereby, as the virus of hate has already taken possession of their calmer judgment.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS

The Election of S. Matthias.

Acts I. 15-26.

In nearly all the schemes of church unity that are being put forth today, the effort is to get Church people together by reducing the essentials of Christianity to a vanishing point.

We, Americans, are obsessed with three fallacies:

(1) That religion is the same as politics, and, since we are a democracy, the Will of God is to be determined by the vote of the majority.

We must have numbers before all else, otherwise we are lacking in the grace of God.

(2) That religion must have a minimum of convictions in order to have a maximum of charity. To hold anything so tenaciously as to be unwilling to concede that the opposite position is also true is to be uncharitable toward the person with whom you disagree.

(3) That the matter of Church unity is unimportant and non-essential. That we must keep up the divisions of Christendom although we have long since ceased to care for the principles which caused those divisions.

This rather chaotic program, or lack of program, results in wasteful activity and an utter lack of fraternal spirit in the religious atmosphere of American communities.

Religion fails to attract men because in the aggregate it has ceased to be attractive. As a contrast to the religion of the average small town with its numerous buildings and small congregations, let us study the principles of the first corporate gathering of the Christian Church just before Pentecost.

(1) The number of names was one hundred and twenty. Not a large congregation to begin a world-wide program in the mighty Roman Empire, but that was all. Christ's ministry of three years resulted in this small body of Christians gathered in an upper room.

(2) The convictions upon which all were cemented together formed a very different basis of solidarity than that which binds together sectarianism.

They did not minimize the importance of convictions, but they confined themselves to such convictions as were impressed upon them by the Master.

"Wherefore of those men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that He was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of His resurrection."

Let us note the essentials of Christian fellowship as implied in these words.

(a) They were electing an Apostle. The fellowship of Christ was not to be a coterie of individualists, separated from one another by speculative differences; but rather an orderly corporate body, bound to an outward unity by their respect for and adherence to a definite body of officers, known as apostles. This is a fundamental essential of solidarity. It has nothing to do with any theory of apostolic succession, but is an element that the Church has with all other societies.

If you are going to have a society you must have officers, elected in an orderly way and succeeding one another after some constitutional fashion.

(b) They had a definite program of the faith. This body of Christians was to unite solidly in bearing witness to the main facts in the life of Christ. This was their faith,—Christ's Birth, Death, Resurrection and Ascension together with His promises and gifts.

The Christian Church was founded as Christ's.

(c) These Christians were bound together in a holy fellowship by the sacramental ties which came from Christ.

They were baptized into one body and they were united with Christ and one another in the sacramental meal which He had instituted.

Whatever principles of church unity may be put forth there can be none that will be successful which ignores these elemental principles of witnessing to the faith and of uniting Christians in one holy fellowship. These are of the very essence of the faith once for all delivered to the Saints. In the midst of the opportunist efforts to patch up a unity without body and without soul there must remain the calm tenacity which clings like the first hundred thousand Englishmen to their line of defenses. We must not be dismayed by the attacks or propaganda of eccesiastical imperialism, nor thrown off from our defenses by Bolsheviki theorists.

"Upon this rock (the confession of Christ's divinity) will I build my Church and the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it."

The election of Matthias to succeed Judas is one of the most significant acts in the New Testament.

Its significance lies in the fact that the Christian Church was to be a corporate body. One does not elect successors to a mere assembly, one does

Continued on Page 7

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

The Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, Pa., has received $10,000, bequeathed by the late Mr. S. S. Pinkerton.

Because of the death of Bishop Brooke on October 22nd, the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Tuttle, has appointed the Rt. Rev. Theodore Payne Thurston, D. D., the Bishop of Eastern Oklahoma, to be his substitute in charge of the Missionary District of Oklahoma..

Several churches in Chicago, for the sake of economy, good fellowship, or patriotism, are being brought together either in federation or in organic union. Included in this number are St. Mark's, St. Alban's and Transfiguration parishes, which have joined to erect a new church on another site.—Diocese of Chicago.

In 1893 a memorial fund, to be contributed each year in loving memory of members and associates who "rest from their labors," was established by the Western New York Diocesan organization of the Girls' Friendly Society in America. At the annual meeting this fund is appropriated for missionary work being done by women who are or have been with the G. F. S., or in a missionary district or diocese, where it has place. The offering this year is to be sent for the "House of Hope Hospital," Nopala, Mexico, and the "House of the Holy Name," Mexico City, Mexico.

The House of Bishops of the Church of England in Canada passed some time ago the following Minute:

> "That the House recommend the Bishops of the Church in the Dominion of Canada to recognize and observe with due solemnity as a period of prayer upon the subject of the Unity of Christians the days January 18th to 25th, inclusive, being the days recommended by the General Commission on Faith and Order."

A sub-committee of the General Conference of the Methodist Church in Canada has reported to that Conference, recommending its endorsement of the proposed Octave of Prayer.

St. Stephen's College, Annandale-on-Hudson, New York, is in process of installing the Students' Army Training Corps. It is by no means an easy undertaking to change a quiet College of Arts into a small military encampment; but we hope that when success is assured, the results will be beneficial for the country, to the Church and to the College eventually. It is certainly a great opportunity for bringing young men of various religious training under the quiet influence of the Church.

A meeting of the trustees was held on October 15 in the office of Mr. Haley Fiske in the Metropolitan Life Building. The Rev. Dr. William E. Gardner and the Hon. William J. Tully were elected members of the Board of Trustees. The officers and committees of last year were re-elected. The Very Rev. Hughell E. W. Fosbroke was nominated as trustee of the College, and steps were taken for the financing of introduction of the S. A. T. C.

On Sunday, October 13, the Rt. Rev. Charles S. Burch, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of New York, paid a visit to the College and made a splendid address to the students at Evensong. The members of the S. A. T. C. were present.

Representative religious leaders from fourteen states, comprising the central division of the united war work campaign, met in Chicago the latter part of October to arrange the details for the great drive to raise $170,500,000 for war work of the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Roman Catholic War Council, the Jewish Welfare Board, the War Camp Community Service, the American Library Association, and the Salvation Army. The meeting was held under the leadership of Dr. John R. Mott. The Rev. J. B. Pengelly, rector of St. Paul's Church, Flint, Mich., was one of the representatives present from his state.

The Parish House of St. Simeon's Church, Philadelphia, (the Rev. G. J. Walenta, rector) has been fitted up as a relief hospital for babies left orphans by the influenza epidemic. Twenty-five babies are already being housed and cared for until conditions right themselves and some permanent arrangements are made for their care. The Sisters of St. Margaret are in charge and doing a noble work. The students of the Church Training and Deaconess House hurried to the call for help during the epidemic which has so stricken the city, facing danger and doing a splendid work, and proving their calling to relieve the sick and the afflicted, and the sorrowing. They are stationed in several hospitals throughout the city, and will continue nursing until the city is eased of its plague.

PERSONALS.

The Rev. H. E. Bush has accepted the vicarship of St. Stephen's Church, Newport, Oregon, and is now on the field. He was formerly in charge of St. Luke's Church, at Weiser, Idaho.

The Rev. A. J. R. Goldsmith, formerly rector of St. Thomas' Church, Baenesboro, Pa., has become the rector of All Saints' Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Rev. C. Canterbury Corbin has been called to the rectorship of St. Augustine's, Asbury Park, N. J. He took charge on All Saints' Day. Mail should be sent to 114 Sylvan Avenue, Asbury, Park, N. J.

The Bishop of the Diocese of Pittsburgh has appointed the Rev. William Porkess, Rector of Grace Church, the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown, Rector of the Church of the Ascension; and R. R. Calvin, Ph. D., Lay Assistant of the Church of the Ascension, to formulate plans, to be laid before the Clergy at the November Clerical Union, for a campaign that shall rouse the interest of children in attending Church services. Mr. Porkess is the Chairman of the Bishop's committee.

The Rev. Edward H. Rudd, D. D., has been appointed vicar of Christ Cathedral, Salina, Kansas, by Bishop Sage. Prior to going to Salina, Dr. Rudd was made rector emeritus of St. Luke's Church, Ft. Madison, Iowa. He had been the rector of St. Luke's for over fifteen years, was president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Iowa and examing chaplain to the Bishop. He was deputy to the General Convention from the Diocese of Quincy in 1883, 1886, 1892, and has been shown many other honors in the dioceses in which he has labored.

The Rev. John C. Black of Dallas, Texas, has received an appointment for overseas war work under the Young Men's Christian Association. He will probably spend two months in training at Chicago and New York before going to the front.

Mr. Paul R. Ito, a graduate of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, who has had charge of a Japanese Mission in San Francisco, has been ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Nichols, and will contiue to serve the same mission.

College Classes Larger Than the Academy at Racine

Racine College opened October 1st. Nearly four hundred young men applied for admission to the Students Army Training Corps. More than two hundred were only eligible to the Vocational Section, and Racine was not authorized to receive them.

Physical examinations and literary requirements eliminated others. One hundred and eleven have been inducted into the service as college registrants.

There are six others pursuing college courses in deferred classifications, and thirty in the academy.

This is the first time in the history of the school that the college classes have been larger than the academy.

The movement for an endowment received a serious check when prominent business men of Racine demanded as the price of their support that the trustees should amend their charter so that members "without religious qualifications" should be elected on the board of trustees

This was such a reversal of the original purpose and history of Racine College that the trustees by a decided vote declined a prospective one hundred thuusand dollars at such a price

But one hundred thousand dollars must be raised in the next six months or the college property will be obliged to go into liquidation. Ten thousand dollars is needed at once.

A TRIPLE CELEBRATION.

Bishop and Mrs. Whitehead of Pittsburgh Observe Three Anniversaries.

On Bishop Whitehead's seventy-sixth birthday, October 30th, the clergy and Church people of the Diocese of Pittsburgh celebrated with the Bishop and Mrs. Whitehead their golden wedding anniversary and the jubilee of the Bishop's ordination to the priesthood. In accordance with the Bishop's wishes the celebration was a quiet and inexpensive affair. There was a service on the evening of October 30th at the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, with a sermon by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Garland, Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, followed by an informal reception in the parish house. Formal invitations were sent only to a few elderly people, to a number of friends outside the Diocese, and to a number also who were not members of the Church. The celebration was largely attended and a very happy occasion throughout. The official organ of the Diocese, The Church News, in the October number, says:

"We welcome the opportunity of keeping with the Bishop and Mrs. Whitehead their Memory Days. To that day fifty years ago when amid the myriad homes of earth their new home sprung to birth—we say, hail!

"It is not for us to speak of the joys and sorrows that have come in the course of these years to that home. The joys have been borne humbly and the sorrows bravely, with always an open door and ready hand for the sorrows of others. God grant the setting sun may flood their hearts and hearth with heaven's light.

"Then to that other day that has so largely shaped the destiny of their home life, when as a young man fifty years ago our Bishop was made a Priest in the Church of God, we say well done and thrice well done. We cast no reflection on the high office of a Bishop, when we say that our Bishop's interest in his people is still that of a parish Priest. He refuses to look upon his visitations as a Confirmation function. If candidates are to be confirmed, well and good. If not, there is still his pastoral interest which will not let him spare himself. Thus from week to week, through all kinds of weather, and to all kinds of places, he journeys. God grant him strength to continue these journeys through years to come, to gladden and hearten his people.

"The thirtieth of this month marks the seventy-sixth milestone for the Bishop. If we were making a real kindly wish for ourselves today, what better than that we should have the splendid optimism and cheerful courage at seventy-six that he has. In this month of memory, these Red Letter Days of our Bishop and Mrs. Whitehead, we say, God be with you."

ASHES OF DR. DOBBIN PLACED IN VAULT

A vault has been constructed in the basement of Shumway Chapel, Shattuck School Faribault, Minn., in which the ashes of Dr. Dobbin, for many years rector of the school, have been placed. The vault is in the form of a mausoleum of solid concrete, built in a fireproof room constructed beneath the chapel altar.

In the floor of the chancel, in front of the altar and directly over the mausoleum, there will be placed a marble slab, suitably inscribed, at the very spot where Dr. Dobbin read the chapel service nearly every day of forty-eight years of his rectorate. Dr. Dobbin withdrew from active supervision of the school some five years ago. From that time until his death he bore the title of Rector Emeritus, and lived in California. His death occurred there on the 25th of May last. A memorial service was held in the Shattuck chapel on commencement Day, with an address by Dean Pond, of Chicago, one of the Doctor's old boys.

His ashes will now lie for all time in the place of honor in the school, for which he did more than any other one man has ever done or ever will do.

The burial service was held at 11 o'clock on the morning of All Saints' Day, Friday, November 1.—The Shattuck Spectator.

FAREWELL SERVICE FOR THE METROPOLITAN OF ATHENS

The congregation completely filled the Church of The Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Oct. 27, at evensong when the Most Rev. Meletios, Metraopolitan of Athens, was present and spoke. The Metropolitan was attended by Bishop Alexander of Rhodostolos and the Rev. Demetrios Kallimachus, priest of the Church of St. Constantine, Brooklyn. The Syrian Church was represented by the Most Rev. Archbishop Germanos and Archimandrite Agapios Golam. The Rev. Henry C. Swentzel, D.D., president of the standing committee, represented the Diocese of Long Island. After choral evensong the Rt. Rev. D. Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg, made an address on the relation of the Greek and Anglican Churches and presented to the Metropolitan an illuminated engrossed testimonial of greeting as chairman of the committees of the General Convention to confer with the Eastern Orthodox Churches. The Metropolitan made a touching address in reply. The Church was beautifully decorated with Greek and American flags and the musical program included the Greek National hymn.

A PATRIOTIC PAGENT

BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE— SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Democracy Saving the World

A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.

Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.

Address THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, Hobart, Indiana.

Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year

ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.

By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.

A Pagent Has Wonderful Educational Power

If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.

THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.

Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.

Address THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, Hobart, Indiana.

The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING
An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.
The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.
Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.
28½tf

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Reve. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelia, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of
"TEMPERANCE."
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America. Address.
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

"More and more it has become my faith that the personal Providence is in all the ordering of our lives, even the very least, and that when we missed what we greatly desired, we may safely conclude that God has some better thing to give us when He and we are ready.—Bishop F. D. Huntington.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A REMARKABLE GROUP OF MEN

War Work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew—Central Office Taken For A Sisterhood

By BENJAMIN F. FINNEY, Chief Secretary Army and Navy Dept., U. S. A.

It has been the writer's good fortune to be thrown during the past year in close contact with a very remarkable group of men and to have had the privilege of seeing much of a very notable work that they are doing among the soldiers and sailors, gathered in the various camps throughout the country.

It is a work that means much,—more than can be told,—to make our boys fit to live. It means much to our nation in helping our boys, to help make the world fit for Christ's Kingdom and it means more to the Church than the Church dreams of, in holding our boys close to her and her teachings.

During the year that has passed since our boys in khaki and blue commenced to gather by the hundreds of thousands into the various camps and training stations, a man who is a wizard in his knowledge of men's character, has been quietly drawing out from their business some eighty men, who have been sent out, one to each camp, to help our boys to live right amid the new surroundlings in which they find themselves. Some of these men are young and some are old in years, most of them are middle-aged, and all are young in spirit. They have been drawn from all walks in life, from all professions; there are lawyers and clerks and students, active and retired business men among them. No two of them are alike save in this one thing, in which they are all alike, that they are loyal Churchmen with an overwhelming love for men and a desire to serve God and men. In Camps from coast to coast and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, these men, without mechanical equipment of any sort and without any blare of trumpets or noise of publicity, are quietly, from day to day, doing a work which has no parallel in all the good work that is being done among the men with the colors.

From the beginning of the mobilization of our forces, the great heart of America has throbbed to give everything that our fighting boys would need, to see that they were guarded from unnecessary temptations and well has the work been done.

One organization alone, that the writer knows, among all the hundreds that began to work for our soldiers and sailors, announced at the beginning that it had no material help to give, but rather was going to demand that our boys should give, not money—but service to God, among their comrades. It was not at first a popular movement and many there were that doubted its practicability and its need. But as the weeks and months have passed and the life of the camp has become more and more the normal life of our boys, the need of just this work has become more apparent and more and more does it appeal. It is this work that these men of whom I write are doing and the story of the way it is being done is as full of heart thrills as is that of the Student in Arms.

It is of the life and work of these men that the head of one of the bureaus of the great international laymen's work writes: "They have not only been an inspiration to our secretaries in their lives and service but their emphasis upon personal evangelism has proved contagious to the Christian men in the camp."

The position of these men is absolutely unique. They have no official standing. They are not even official representatives in any sense of the word. They are there simply to do a layman's work in a laymans way. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew through the help of the Church's War Commission has arranged it so these men will not have to worry about the support of their families while they are giving their entire time to this work, and through its organization the Brotherhood acts as a clearing house that each may know the best ways of getting results that others have found. And the results are coming, hundreds of men are being brought to baptism and confirmation by their comrades under the leadership of these men. Thousands are being brought closer in touch with their Church and countless thousands are being helped, by the work of the little groups these men are organizing, to live cleaner, better lives and to fight as valiant Christian soldiers to make the world fit as well as safe for the true democracy of Christ's Kingdom.

Is This the Sisterhood of St. Andrew?

It was his first visit to the Central Office of the Army and Navy Department, Brotherhood of St. Andrew. He reached the third floor of the Church House, followed the sign, and entered the door leading into the proper department. But here he stopped perplexed. He was looking for a certain department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, but what he found was twenty young women, all busily engaged at their various desks and filing cabinets. One of them rose with a smile and awaited his errand.

"Is this—is this—the Sisterhood of St. Andrew?" he asked, and of course his amused twinkle was contagious enough to spread over the faces of the twenty girls, who could not help hearing his query.

"I was looking for the Brotherhood—this looks more like a Sisterhood!"

This is the impression strangers get almost invariably upon their first visits to the beehive where a force of twenty-two and often more is busy every day, with the various phases involved in the work of following our enlisted Churchmen from their homes into the service.

Between three and four hundred names come in every day, from every conceivable source. These are checked against the names already in the files, now approximating 60,000, in order to avoid duplication and to complete or change addresses of men already registered. Five girls spend their entire time in checking names and filing cards bearing new names in alphabetical order. Two and often three typists then take the lists and write cards for all new names, in triplicate, one for the alphabetical file, one to be filed by camps, and one to be sent to the representative of the Church where the enlisted man is located, in order to assure his being followed as far as possible.

When the names are recorded, another clerk addresses to each man an envelope and a wrapper. In the former is sent a circular letter, signed by Mr. F. S. Titsworth, assuring the man of the Church's interest in him and asking him to keep in touch with the Church through this department. In the wrapper is sent the current issue of St. Andrew's Cross.

The original cards are then filed properly by camps or stations or battleships, according to the man's location. The third copy is forwarded as soon as possible to the proper representative of the Church, who will call upon the man and do whatever he can for him. One typist is kept busy filling in the circular letters, the office boy folds and seals them—over a thousand each week. Two girls care for the camp cards which go out daily to correspondents. About fifteen hundred names are distributed each week to the Church's representatives and Brotherhood Secretaries in the Camps.

An Assistant Secretary opens the mail, which comes in on an average of nearly two thousand pieces per month. Much of this is answered without dictation by girls capable of writing answers and attending to routine matters without supervision. Others are turned over for dictated replies by the various executives of the office, who require the entire time of two and three stenographers. Still another girl files the correspondence, and keeps all the financial records, not only office accounts but accounts with the 38 men working in the field.

These men send in weekly reports, which are digested and recorded in a complete camp file, in which also is recorded all available and useful information concerning every camp in the country. This file contains the names of over 500 places where enlisted men are stationed in some form of military service. It is under the supervision of a girl who devotes her entire time to obtaining and recording information used not only by the central office but often by individuals throughout the country, who write in, asking questions and wanting assistance.

The file containing names of clergymen of the Church who are now in some phase of war work, is kept by stlil another girl, who also keeps a record of all the work done daily in the office, showing the status of the files at the close of each day. This file of clergy in the service has grown to include 536 names.

Another most important feature of the work, and one of the most interesting, is the answering of personal letters which come back from enlisted men. All requests for reading matter, or for any kind of personal service, are promptly taken care of. Every letter is answered.

Still another phase of the work is sending advice to families and rectors when a Brotherhood secretary in the field has established personal relationship with an enlisted man. Inquiries are also sent out by the same clerk who attends to this work, asking for better addresses when mail is returned from men in the service. With the constant movement of troops, this develops into a perplexing matter.

The entire "Sisterhood" of the Brotherhood works like a well regulated machine. Each operation fits into the next operation, each one is important, and each girl has her own responsibility to bear. The little circle which has gathered for prayers at noon each day has grown from a tiny one of six a year ago to thirty and sometimes nearly fifty now, including the Army and Navy Department and the National Headquarters office employes. If one doubts the big task that has been undertaken, it requires but a visit to the central office to grasp the volume of the work and the importance of it. It is small wonder that the stranger stops, surprised, and says with a little gasp:

"I had no idea, no idea whatever, that you maintained such an organization here."

A Plea For Promptness

Mr. F. S. Titsworth, Executive Secretaary of the Army and Navy Department, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, makes another earnest plea to all clergymen and secretaries of chapters who are entrusted with the duty of notifying his department when Churchmen have been called to colors, urging them to send names in to the central office of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood, Church House, Philadelphia, as soon as the man leaves for camp.

"Under present conditions," says Mr. Titsworth, "we can count on a man remaining in the camp to which he is originally assigned, not more than one month. If, in this short space of time, his name is to be reported to us, recorded here, and sent to our secretary or correspondent for personal relationship, the names must be put into the mail promptly. No matter how promptly we may handle registration and distribution from this office, if addresses are out of date when they reach us they are absolutely useless when they reach our men in the field.

"If our first letter is lost, asking the men to keep closely in touch with us, our future contact is lost, unless by chance a secretary locates the man, or unless the man himself is sufficiently interested in the Church to seek out its ministers.

"Our secretaries, at embarkation points find their hands absolutely tied because of their inability to locate men whose names are sent them, because regiments have been sent overseas before the lists could reach the secretary.

"If our work is to count for all it can count for, we must hope that the clergy throughout the country will cooperate with us to this extent, sending complete addresses for all men going out from their parishes and sending them the same day the addresses are secured, remembering that every day's delay lessens the opportunity of the Church to reach and hold the man going into the struggle."

The files at Central Office now contain the names of approximately 60,000 men, unfortunately a large number with incomplete addresses, but fortunately as well a large per cent who have been reached and who have responded to letters. It is hoped that Clergy and Churchmen everywhere will hear and heed this plea for prompt co-operation

THE RT. REV. FRANCIS KEY BROOKE, D. D.

An Appreciation.

By The Rev. Charles T. Stout.

When the General Convention, meeting in Baltimore, Oct. 1892, elected Francis Key Brooke, Missionary Bishop of Oklahoma, it was my priviege to be one of the first members of the House of Deputies to offer him my hearty congratulations. A friendship dating back to the early seventies, in College ties, made the elevation of my dear friend of peculiar interest and gladness to me.

Bishop Brooke was not a great man as the world counts greatness, but he was great in those virtues and qualities of character that make men and women of superior excellence in the Kingdom of God. I remember so well the look in his face as he met the congratulations of friends. It was of painful surprise, of shrinking humility. Yet his customary noble bearing always void of annoyance and assumption of superiority carried him through those trying hours in such manner as to win other friends. The call to Oklahoma was one that some men, judging from more recent elections, would have declined. It was the call to self-sacrifice, to heart breaking work in a field that gave little promise of responsive fertility, with no money accompanying the call, only two clergy and one Indian deacon, one unfinished church building, a few vacant lots in three or four towns, an old building in a mission.

Such was the equipment. Outside of four or five towns no service of the Church had ever been held. The Bishop was the first missionary. With a half dozen exceptions he held the first services, celebrated the first Communion, baptized the first children, ministered to sick and dying, in all the towns where the Church was planted up to the division of the District in 1910. It was work such as the Bishops of the early Church were called upon to do. And in Francis Key Brooke was found a true and devoted Overseer of the Church.

Probably few people now-a-days know the romatic and unique history of Oklahoma, once the old Indian territory, since 1837 the home of the five tribes of Indians, now partially civilized, and the richest settlement of people in the United States. It was only eighteen years after the first white settlers came that in 1907 Oklahoma territory and the Indian territory were made into one great State with a population of 1,450,000, ranking as the twenty-third state in the Union and now having two millions of people. In April, 1889, when six counties were opened to homestead settlement 70,000 people were added to the population in a week.

To meet this situation of appalling possibilities the Bishop had but little. The Board of Missions had little to give this devoted pioneer Bishop.

This wealthy Church of ours had no vision in the days of the settlement of the great middle and further west. "Where there is no vision the people perish." As with other noble men whom the Church has commissioned and sent forth without money or equipment into the Missionary fields Bishop Brooke must exhaust energy and heart in personal appeals in the East. It is a sad commentary on the intelligence of Churchmen and their idea of a "reasonably holy and living sacrifice" that this has been the customary method of Church extension.

But visible results of twenty-five years of earnest labor are not wanting. There are fifty-three (53) Churches and Chapel Houses, about 3800 communicants, fifteen rectories, and some 1700 Sunday School children. A Church Hospital has done excellent work in McAllister and a Church House for women at the State University in Norman. Spiritual results cannot be tabulated. All honor to the faithful clergy and laymen who have stood by and worked with the Bishop.

As the first call came to him to take up this difficult work, the call came now to lay it down. God had tested and tried His servant. The work entrusted to him he had done as best he could. No man can do more. Gladly he gave it back into God's hands, realizing more than anyone his limitations, exacting of himself the utmost.

The Divine Master could find no truer way of revealing His loving human fellowship than in washing His disciple's feet. It was a startling reversal of human experience and human pride. In like manner Bishop Brooke formed the reality of friendship and fellowship in ministering to the famishing souls of men in truest apostolic service, and so he bound men to himself, laboring in the Kingdom of God.

West Texas Notes.

The meeting of the Church Congress which was to have been held in San Antonio in 1919 has been postponed. This was deemed advisable by the officers of the Congress on account of the unsettled conditions of the present. It is planned to hold the Congress in San Antonio some time in the future.

The churches in San Antonio and throughout the diocese have all complied with the regulations of the city authorities and have held no public service since October thirteenth. Several churches, however, have been open for private prayer and meditation, and many members have availed themselves of this fact. In Saint Mark's, San Antonio, intercessions are said in the presence of small groups of people, and in other parishes, as well as St. Mark's, the Holy Communion has been celebrated with several invited individuals present.

Saint Mary's Hall, the diocesan school for girls, opened on September eighteenth with an unusually large enrollment. The West Texas Military Academy, the school for boys, has an organized unit of the Student Army Training Corps with a considerable enrollment of men.

The State Assembly of the Daughters of the King was to have held a meeting in San Antonio beginning October twenty-fifth. This has been postponed for a month on account of the epidemic of influenza.

SPOKANE.

The Reverend H. I. Oberholtzer, rector of Ellensburg, Wash., has gone to France to serve under the direction of the Y. M. C. A.

The Rev. George H. Severance of Oroville is expecting to leave shortly for training as Chaplain at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky. The Reverend gentleman has done yeoman service in the Okanogan country, a work for which he is unusually well fitted. His going will be quite a serious loss to the churches in that county, but every effort will be made to keep the work going as satisfactorily as the circumstances permit.

The Spanish Influenza epidemic has closed the churches in this State as it has done more or less throughout the country. The Rev. Gilbert W. Laidlaw, rector at Pullman has both his Church, and Parish Hall turned into Hospitals, for there are a large number of men in training at the University, and every available building is needed. The rector of North Yakima, the Rev. F. J. Mynard reports that his Parish Hall is being used as a Hospital, and the probability is, that such is the case in many other parts of this district. Bishop Page recently attended the special meeting of the Missionary Bishops held at Cheyenne, Wyoming to consider ways and means of keeping the work together considering the scarcity of the clergy, and to further improve the outlook by the judicious use of trained lay-readers.

Three Deanery meetings have been held this month, all of which were attended by Bishop and Mrs. Herman Page, the former speaking largely in reference to Sunday School Work, and the later to the Advent Call. The meetings were held respectively at Granger, Pullman, and North Yakima. A visit was also made to St. Paul's School, Walla Walla, which is full of pupils, and the outlook for the year's work most encouraging. The Rev. Bertram E. Warren, rector of St. Paul's is fast winning his way into the affections of the people.

Confirmations were held at All Saints' Cathedral, Spokane, Oroville, and Republic during October.

And then, too, I should like a far wider variety of discourses. There is nothing which so holds the attention of old and young alike as a biographical lecture; why are sermons not more biographical? Why should not one listen to a simple narrative of the life of some hero or saint? Why is it justifiable to attempt to spin a sermon out of the meagre and attenuated records of the life of St. Matthias or St. Jude, and not to preach about Gordon or Father Damien?—Arthur Christopher Benson.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Continued from Page 1

stayed faithfully by the work, through discouragements and losses and poverty. Conspicuously, Rev. A. B. Nicholas, a willing and useful helper for twenty-three years, the Rev. Dr. Brookes, the Rev. George Biller, the Rev. Frank R. Jones on the east side, the Rev. A. U. Francis and the Rev. J. M. Davidson. But the changes were too frequent. Courage and wisdom to persevere in the work were oftentimes lacking. One hundred and four men, in priests orders, have been connected with this field during my espicopate. Some of the change was unavoidable, but much of it, I am compelled to say, has been the result of the failure in patience and courage and steadfastness on the part of some of our younger clergy, especially those trained here in the field. Too readily they have yielded to the desire for an easier field and more comfortable surroundings. Yet I gladly bear record to much good, patient, earnest labor from the most of my fellow workers.

It would be a serious fault in this slight review of the years that are past, if I seem to intimate that this has been mostly my work. Not so. All honor and gratitude are in my heart for the men and women who worked here with me."

The Bishop Speaks Humbly of Himself.

Then dear, faithful, Bishop Brooke goes on speaking with affection and gratitude of those associated with him in his work. He gives statistics of buildings, and increase of communicants and Sunday school children, etc. He speaks humbly of himself and says "That the past two or three years have been to me the most anxious of my twenty-five in the field. How many more years I shall feel it right to keep on in this present field and with just my present responsibilities and cares is not sure. It depends on a careful testing, in the next few months, of the health and strength which God will give me, and my ability to adjust that strength by some new and changed ways of working perhaps, to the present needs of the field. This only I will promise dear friends, that so soon as it is made plain to me that this work, in its present condition and interests, needs a Missionary Bishop younger, physically stronger, and that it is essentially suffering because it has not such a chief pastor and missionary. I will open the way for him to take the work."

And then he speaks of the war, his interest in doing all that can be done to help carry the burden. He believed that it is a righteous war and he calls them all to self denial. He says too, "Of the clergy now at work in this and Eastern Oklahoma or canonically attached to the District I have ordained 13. Of the clergy ordained by me, one, Bishop Biller, after serving as a Missionary Bishop, has gone to his reward."

And then, in closing he says:

"Let us loyally sustain the nation. By prayers for a righteous victory. By prayers for our armies, and for our misguided enemies, always, also at the same time, by striving to keep all malice, prejudice and hatred out of our hearts, by pledging ourselves to every asked-for denial, gift and sacrifice, by the gift of our sons, brothers, friends, money and labor—let us each one ask God to show us how to do our part in winning the war, which if we win it rightly at all, must be won as God's war against injustice, aggression, wrong and robbery. And so with a pure conscience let us pray, 'God save the State.'"

"This Is Told In Confidence."

By Harry Kemp.

I have a table, cot and chair
And nothing more, the walls are bare.
Yet I confess that in my room
Lie Syrian rugs rich from the loom,
Stand statues poised on flying toe,
Hang tapestries with folk a-flow
As the wind takes them to and fro.
And workman Fancy has inlaid
My walls, with ivory and jade.

Tho opening on a New York street
Full of cries and hurrying feet,
My window is a fairy space!
That gives on each imagined place:
Old ruins lost in desert peace;
The broken fanes and shrines of Greece;
Ægean islands fringed with foam;
The ever lasting hills of Rome;
Troy flowing red with skyward flame,
And every spot of hallowed fame.

Outside my window I can see
The sweet blue lake of Galilee,
And Carmel's purple—regioned height
And Sinai clothed with stars and night.
But this is told in confidence,
So not a word when you go hence,
For if my landlord once but knew
My attic fetched so large a view
The churl would never rest content
Till he had raised my monthly rent!

A Valuable Aid to Every Rector.

A local assembly of the Daugghters of the King has published a little pamphlet composed by the Rev. Herbert W. Prince, rector of the Church of the Epiphany (Chicago, Ill.), under the caption of "A Valuable Aid to Every Rector, Without Cost." The order of the Daughters of the King is defined as an order of women in the Episcopal Church who are pledged to personal service, loyally given, and without pay.

Is it not a matter of wisdom, is the question asked the clergy, to use this order of women for the development of the work of the parish and neighborhood? There follows for the information of mid-city parishes a list of the activities of the local chapter at the Epiphany.

Members:

Conduct Bible classes for women.

Have workers at railway trations to meet women and girls travelling alone.

Visit children in orphan asylums.

Visit jails and read to prisoners.

Visit hospitals with altar flowers.

Visit homes of poorer people with flowers.

Conduct a boarding house for women attending university.

Conduct milk depot for infant welfare work.

Have charge of mission Sunday school.

Conduct study class in missions.

Support girl in school in China.

Support missionary in China.

Attend noon-day meetings during Lent.

Endow a room in hospital.

Have representation in each local institution.

Endow pew in church and use same as a welcome for strangers.

Work in settlement house.

Collect clothing for homes and hospitals.

Entertain each new confirmation class.

Have a hospitality committee who welcome strangers at church services.

—Taken from the Living Church.

I would add to the above list of various activities, that of messenger in the coming work for "The Advent Call." The members of The Girl's Friendly might also give their services for the great work we are soon to devote one week to the mobilizing the women of the Church for prayer and service and worship.

The following is taken from the Parish Leaflet of The Church of The Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Florida. The Rev. Milton R. Worsham, Rector.

Junior Prayer Song.

(Sung to tune of Hymn 342.)

Heavenly Father, bless the sailors
Far across the sea;
Make them brave and keep them always
Near to Thee.

Take the Soldiers in Thy keeping,
As they march along;
And in camp and field and battle
Make them strong.

May the lonely, sick and wounded
Ever near Thee feel;
Give the doctors and the nurses
Skill to heal.

Bless the mothers and the children
In the home they keep;
Give them daily bread and shelter,
Guard their sleep.

Grant to him who rules our nation
Gifts and power of sight,
Strength to strive for truth and honor
And for right.

God, our Father, hear our prayer!
Make the war to cease;
Holy Spirit, teach us love—
Give us peace. Amen.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

Continued from Page 1

of the war. This has been a war for world betterment—for higher manifestations of humanity and justice. If it is not this, we are a nation of hyprocrites. We are sure, however, of the righteousness of our cause, and a "religious faith in a righteous cause is the greatest fighting power." One of our greatest generals in France said recently: "It is the moral earnestness of the officers and men of the Allied Armies that is our fighting power." This same moral earnestness, these same spiritual convictions will be needed in the truly terrifying responsibilities which victory and peace will bring us. Let us set our face steadfastly toward the future as men who have faith in a living God. Let our motto as churchmen and citizens, both in war and peace, be—"For God and Country." Keep God in the foreground and there will be no danger of our country falling into the background. Remember that we are pledged soldiers of Christ first and foremost, both in war and peace. Remember that the cross is still carried in our Church processions, even though it be sometimes obscured in the folds of our glorious flag.

Special and unusual efforts must be made in these absorbing days to arouse and maintain our zeal in worship and prayer, in the upkeep of our Church charities, and in the furtherance of our missionary enterprises. While we must gladly support these agencies which are sanctioned or employed by the government for the successful prosecution of its great world task, we must at the same time indelibly imprint the fact upon our minds and consciences, that a military victory purchased at the expense of the cultural and civilizing agencies of religion would be a disastrous victory indeed. We American people occupy a position of great promise for the world and a great peril to ourselves. Fighting against a cruel militarism we are, nevertheless, under the necessity of creating an invincible army. Let us beware of becoming solely militaristic ourselves. Fighting against the exaltation of might over right, we are nevertheless under the necessity of dedicating all our might to a great cause. Let us beware lest we forget the power and might of the things of the Spirit. Fighting against the domination of the State over the consciences of men, we are nevertheless under the necessity of surrendering many of our affairs to control of the State. Let us not forget our citizenship in the Kingdom of God. Our Christian duties must be done, and our patriotic duties must not be left undone. Happy for us these duties do no conflict in the realm of conscience. But we cannot do our full duty to Church and Country in these days of great moral issues, without deep spiritual convictions, personal sacrifices, readjustment in our methods of living and spending, and resolute determination to win out in Christ's Cause as well as in our Country's Cause. For God and Country! Let us take our stand here.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS.

Continued from page 4.

not appoint officers to an invisible organization.

There are several things to note in this election.

(1) Its democratic character. There was no Papal appointment by St. Peer. There was no hierarchial demand made by the eleven that they should choose the twelfth. There was no mob demand for the most popular candidate.

There were two nominees made in an orderly fashion and a choice by lot from those two. It is difficult to see how, without divine guidance, this little body could have hit upon the principles of constitutional democracy in the autocratic days of the Roman Empire.

(2) Its guarantee of the perpetuation of organized Christianity. If there had been no such corporate action, there would have been eleven denominations from the start. "I am of Peter" and "I am of John' would have been the very essence of Christian trend.

But no! "I am of the Holy Catholic Church," wiped out an offensive individualism without destroying individual initiative. The Church became and remained for nearly five hundred years a constitutional democracy governed by general councils whenever circumstances would permit them to assemble.

The Papacy was an afterthought. Denominationalism a reaction from that afterthought.

(3) It emphasizes the fact, too often forgotten, that God has a part in the work of the Church. That prayer puts into God's hands the ultimate destinies of the Christian Church.

Without prayer in which God is allowed to act freely there can be no ultimate assurance that His will will be done on earth as it is in Heaven.

The world since the days of Christ has been full of cocksure demagogues who have usually been wrong and of narrow sectarians who have never even visualized the breadth and scope of God's plan in making of one blood all the nations of the earth in the fellowship of Jesus Christ.

BISHOP LAWRENCE'S ANNIVERSARY.

(Continued from page 1)

value to the Church of the pension system.

"From stiff formality we all relax under the spell of the Bishop's voice, as fact after fact rolls out in emphatic support of the principles presented. A scientific analyssis of the merits follows, and from The Wall Street Man. 'I had no idea of it. Are the average salaries of our clergy so small? You surprise me! The pension system—what a great thing it is, just and deserved. I want to hear more."

"The conversation now takes a turn to the proposed system of accounting; the investment of the trust funds—and the Bishop proceeds to demonstrate to the satisfaction of this exacting man of business how it will all be done.

"Time to go, and we leave to repeat somewhat the same story at another place.

"Is it any wonder that the business men of New York city, not only those who are members of the Episcopal Church, but others who were aroused over the great undertaking, so scientifically founded and so attractively presented by the Bishop of the Church in Wall street?"

One of His Own Stories.

Bishop Lawrence once genially remarked:

"When I first started to get money for the Church Pension Fund I shrank from the job, but now it has become a real pleasure. I meet all sorts of interesting people, who are most courteous as well as most interesting. So far only three people have failed to contribute, and they have left the door open so that I can try them agian in the fall."

So eloquent was Bishop Lawrence's appeal for the fund that maney poured in from the most unexpected sources. A prisoner about to be released from Charlestown jail had saved $50. He sent it to the fund. A woman read the appeal for the fund to her blind brother in New York. He asked to be led down to Wall street, where he entered the Bishop's office and laid on the desk a big roll of bills. Some boys had a system of paying fines if they spotted the tablecloth at their homes. They gave $5.

Members of his flock wished to celebrate his 25th anniversary in a befitting manner, but Bishop Lawrence vetoed it all because it was war time. He wanted no money spent nor speeches made. He reduced it all to a simple service in Trinity Church, and a simple luncheon afterwards. But even this had to be abandoned because of the epidemic of influenza.

Speaking to a Sunday Post reporter upon the occasion of the completion of Bishop Lawrence's 25 years' episcopacy, the Rt. Rev. Samuel G. Babcock, Suffragan Bishop of Massachusetts said:

Began His Episcopate in 1893.

"Bishop Lawrence began his episcopacy in 1893. At that time he was elected Bishop of the entire State of Massachusetts. Then there were in the entire State 199 congregations of the Protestant Episcopal Church, 230 clergymen and 32,120 communicants.

"The increase and development of work compelled in later years the division of the diocese into two parts. Bishop Lawrence retaining eastern Massachusetts, comprising the counties of Essex, Middlesex, Norfolk, Bristol, Barnstable, Duke's, and Nantucket. At the time of the division a new endowment fund of $100,000 was raised and paid to the new diocese.

"In 1918, on the occasion of his 25th anniversary there are in eastern Massachusetts, Bishop Lawrence's diocese, 209 cognregations, with 251 clergymen and 55,202 communicants. With the western Massachusetts diocese there are today, in the State, 284 congregations of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and 313 clergymen with over 70,000 communicants.

"There you have the comparisons. Not only has the number of congregations increased through new missions to various fields, but the work of the diocese has been strengthened and developed in many ways."

"What changes in the people has Bishop Lawrence noted, and what effect has the war had upon them?" asked the reporter.

"The experience of the Bishop in the work of the diocese has been that today there is more vital piety and deeper interest in religion than ever before.

"All over Massachusetts men and women are making real sacrifices, not only for the war, but also to maintain the Church and to further its missionary work.

"Notwithstanding the increased cost of living and the many demands upon givers, Church people are contributing more generously for religious work than ever before, partaking in the general spirit of self-denial and generosity which prevades the community at this time."

RED CROSS RELIEF WORK

Relief work by the Amercian Red Cross in Belgium necessitated an expenditure of $1,432,374 for the ten months ending June 30. This amount went to provide comforts and medical assistance for Belgian soldiers, 90,000 residents of that part of the little country outside the German lines and the 600,000 Belgian refugees scattered through France, England, Holland and Switzerland.

The sum of $1,947,325 has been appropriated to continue this work during the last six months of this year. Thus by the end of this year the Red Cross will—since the war began—have appropriated for use among the Belgians the sum of $3,376,699. These are the outstanding facts in the current section of the War Council's report relative to the use being made of the Red Cross war fund.

The establishment of eighty-two canteens, which provide daily refreshments for 25,000 soldiers, the financial assistance given to nine hospitals that are combatting disease among the civilian population and refugee colonies, the construction and support of a barracks which shelters 400 children and the maintenance of a home for disabled Belgian soldiers are a few of the things the Red Cross has done for the courageous little kingdom and its people.

About 15,000 Belgian children in the countries mentioned are healthier and happier as a result of day nurseries established by the organization.

Co-operation between the Red Cross and the Belgian government has been so effective that this aid has been distributed largely through the medium of Belgian agencies. A donation of one million francs to the Queen for the support of the hospital service and another of half a million francs to insure the completion of a large hospital were among the first expenditures of the Red Cross in Belgium.

The organization has established what is known as the Queen's purse, a fund of five thousand francs, which is distributed among the country's war victims. As free Belgium is within easy range of German guns and bombs, hospitals in that territory have been destroyed from time to time increasing the cost of relief work.

THE HOME GUARD.

Do you know anyone who belongs to a Home Guard? Is he a young man, of fine physique, without anyone dependent on him, and free from many responsibilities or engagements? What nonsense! Men of this sort, thank God, are far away. They are the Front Guard, not the Home Guard. But you know the men who have come forward for the Home Guard, and perhaps you know what it costs them.

What about the Home Guard in our Church Schools? The teachers in the prime of life who could teach well, so far as experience goes, and easily, so far as other responsibilities go, where are they? Not available for the Church School now. If men, they are at the front; if women, many of them have been called to war service of other sorts in the community.

The Church School is begging for teachers. Men and women of older age, this is your great opportunity! This is a part of the Church's war work. You are called to join the Home Guard, and to bear a hand every week for the protection of the childhood and youth of the Church, to help maintain or to upbuild the morale which is needed at home to balance the sacrifice upon the field. You can do this service. You MUST do it!—The Leader.

Lawyer—The judge says you'll get your hearing tomorrow.

Pat—Phwat, The saints be praised An' me deaf fer fifteen years!—The Reminder.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CHRISTIAN UNITY IN IRELAND

An Admirable Example of What Christians Can Do to Overcome Divisions Among Them

We are indebted to Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, Secretary of the World Conference on Faith and Order, for a leaflet by Prof. Trench of Dublin, Ireland, entitled "Christian Unity in Ireland," containing information which will be received with joy by Christians everywhere. It brings to light, as Mr. Gardiner well says, "An admirable example of what Christians can do to overcome the divisions among them, which are so serious a hindrance to the progress of the Kingdom. That in a country like Ireland, harrassed by strife for centuries between Irish and English, Protestants and Catholics, the value of prayer as an approach to unity and to a deeper Christian spirit has been so clearly recognized, seems to set a most inspiring example to us in this country."

The following extract from the leaflet will be read with deep interest:

The Most Critical Hour of Ireland's History.

It is at this most critical hour of Ireland's history, our sky beclouded, our atmosphere heavy with gloom, that we, still longing to compass an Irish unity, but burdened with a sense of impotence, have had recourse to the thought of God. In Him we find perhaps scarcely a road to union in the body politic, but if not, yet there is something more real, though it be less tangible; for we re-discover the ever existing but usually obscured true unity of all Christian men and women in Him. When I say we re-discover this, by "we" I mean the little groups who in Dublin and elsewhere are meeting for united silent prayer. Those thus meeting represent various sections of the Church universal, and hold most varied opinions upon Irish politics. For it would be a great mistake to suppose that they have in common any political views, whether those which in my prefatory remarks I may for my own part have expressed, or any others. All that has drawn them together is some common sense of spiritual values.

A Silent Prayer Meeting.

It began in February, 1918, when a circular signed by Florence Williams, Rachel Dix, and the present writer, was issued announcing that it had been decided to hold a silent prayer meeting every Wednesday at 2:30 in the Lady Chapel, St. Patrick's Cathedral. It may here be remarked that it does add to the sense of fellowship to know that we are praying at the same time, though not at the same place, as others like-minded; and groups meeting elsewhere to pray in unison with us therefore endeavor to make their time correspond with ours. But all that is really essential is conscious unity of intention; and some meet at a different time. In Dublin, for example, there is a corresponding meeting in St. Andrew's Church at 5:30 Thursday, for those who find this more convenient than the Wednesday hour.

In the circular we explained what we were about in the following words: "We have before us in particular our position and the Church's position with regard to the life of Ireland in this critical time, and in the future, into which none of us can see far, but in which there must be great changes coming, and in preparation for which we and the Church of God at large must be in need of Divine illumination, if spiritual issues are not to be obscured by party feeling. Our meeting in fellowship will help to create an atmosphere favorable to meditation, and we may learn together the practice of the Presence of God. The barriers that separate us may there be broken down; for though words divide us, we may find ourselves united in the silence. Our hope is that some who are not of the Church of Ireland will join us in these meetings. They will not there hear anything to hurt them, for they will hear nothing at all. And we shall discover the unity underlying our diversity. It is hoped also that many unable to be with us in body may be with us in spirit on Wednesday afternoons."

A Response Which Caused Rejoicing.

Early in March a letter appeared in the Dublin daily papers, which, although only the present writer was responsible for it, probably expresses sentiments animating the group who had thus commenced to hold these weekly meetings. As this letter elicited from brothers and sisters with whom we were unacquainted a response which caused us greatly to rejoice, it may be well to reproduce it here:

"Sir:—Diligent search will reveal, amid much diversity of opinion, one or two points of agreement between all serious-minded people in Ireland today: one at least; for they are all agreed that this is a grave and critical time for Ireland, as well as for the rest of the world. And very many feel that the grave and critical time demands of them some helpful action, in what direction they can scarcely tell. Among those who feel most uncertain respecting our country's future are the most intelligent. Among those who feel most impotent are some of those who are most anxious to help. The worst of it is that in this time of universal upheaval things may happen suddenly, and we may possibly find ourselves faced by conditions for which we have not prepared, whereby we may be thrown into confusion.

"In such conditions, and with such uncetrtain prospects, what are we to do? For discussion of politics will not help; and even complaints about the Government, which are, for us all, the normal way of relieving our feelings, do not really set things right. Some, then, have been answering this question for themselves by saying that the best thing they can do at the moment is to ask serious people of varied views to meet together, not to wrangle, but to lift up their hearts unitedly to God for Ireland in silent prayer. In the Lady Chapel at St. Patrick's Cathedral extremes meet on Wednesday afternoons, Conservatives and peoples of Sinn Fein sympathies joining to seek together in perfect silence for Divine illumination; the majority of them belonging to the Church of Ireland, but the minority not. We may be well aware that much more will be required of us than prayer and mediation, but these things first, we say, in order that we may be prepared aright for we know not exactly what.

To Get All Ireland Bound by Chains of Gold About the Feet of God.

"We should be very happy if those who, feeling with us the seriousness of the time, yet cannot join us at St. Patrick's, were disposed to form groups elsewhere in unity of purpose with us. Thus that very feeling of importance which many Christian people throughout the country share will lead us into united action with no less than this as its aim, to get all Ireland bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

"There are some of us who would especially desire to be found acting in this matter in conscious unison with our Roman Catholic brethren. Many among them, we know, have cultivated the spirit of prayer and meditation more than we. The thought is that in attempting to give ourselves up to silent prayer for Ireland and for guidance for all Christian folk in Ireland, it would be a help to feel that such prayer was rising from different centres in some sort of unison. Hills of lesser altitude sever Protestant Churches from each other; but the highest of the Dublin range is the mountain between St. Patrick's and the Pro-Cathedral. Now if, at this hazardous moment, men and women of faith will stand on either side of the mountain and will say to it: Be thou for practical purposes removed, and be thou cast into the sea; then what will happen is this, that the mountain range will stand to all appearances unchanged, but the men and women of faith will know that for them it has been removed, and will realize, for Ireland's good, their fundametntal unity in God.—Yours, etc."

A Sense of Christian Unity Never Experienced Before.

This letter led to what has given some of those concerned such a sense of Christian unity as they never experienced before. That Church people of strongly opposed political views should be praying together with the thought of Ireland's present state and future prospects especially before them, seems in itself, in the present state of political temper, no small matter. That with them should be united some of the Society of Friends, Presbyterians, Methodists, is all to the good. But that Roman Catholics, sundered from us as they are by barriers of history and tradition, by some real differences of doctrine, and by exclusive claims advanced on our side and on theirs, should be in conscious fellowship with us in our prayer-meetings—this means for us a new sense of the oneness of all the children of God that are scattered, a new realization that (our unhappy divisions notwithstanding) Our Saviour's prayer does not remain really unanswered: "that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us."

THE CLERGY AND THE ADVENT CALL

Every crash on the battle front is a cracking of the New World's shell. Between newspaper headlines the prophets are reading hidden news more critical than victory by arms, for after the victory by arms over him who would destroy the body comes an allied front against him who would destroy both body and soul together in hell.

What the soldier does at the front makes work at the rear for the man of God. Our armies are really spiritual pioneers turning out vast workstuff for the clergy at home.

If that is true—if the New World is really groaning into birth to the thunder of guns and the tramp of nations on crusade—then how ought the heart of the Church to be straightened for its coming task?

Already demobilization plans are on paper. Already governments are organizing to rehabilitate the armies of returning cripples. Already statesmen are conferring on new policies to meet a brand-new time.

Is the Church getting ready? Is it clear for action?

As ever, the women are leading. They are not satisfied with their knitting and conserving, and fetching and carrying for Red Cross, Liberty Loans, and other war activities. Our land-wide Woman's Auxiliary has set itself a war work. Let us not smile at it in condescension. These are the mothers, the wives, the lovers, the sisters and the friends of crusaders. God never had such women to hear His voice and do His will as these. Theirs are the deepest pangs in all this woe, and theirs is the deepest realization.

They plan to enlist all their sisters. Their object is—every woman alert, every woman shaken free from illusion, every woman ready for training, ready for spiritual attack upon a spiritual task.

The women's plan is God's plan—the plan that worked at Pentecost. They are going to know each other by courageous house-to-house visitation. They are going to knit themselves together again into a sisterhood of common triumph, even as they are a sisterhood of common suffering. They are going to sweep the house clean for the One who stands at the door and knocks. They are going to pledge the womanhood of the Church to exchange vanities for realities. They are going to pray and answer questions and search the Word. They are going to come hungry and with open hands to the keepers of the Table for the food of God for guiding, for work to do, for teaching.

If we are worth our salt, we clergy are going to read this thing as a flaring headline. It is meat for us; it is our line. We ought to be down on our knees thanking God for it, and imploring Him to keep it from miscarrying. We ought to be up on our toes ready to help it along. We ought to have plans to meet it when it comes and to follow it up where it goes.

Life, today, is a chemical solution in a great war, almost ready for pouring. One more stir, one more ingredient and the fluid will begin to harden and crystallize. Well for us if we are keen about it. Well for us if we have the molds ready to receive it.

It may all fail. It may turn out a farce. It may all work out into one more sad blunder in history; but if it does, it will be one more class sin against the Holy Ghost; another unreadiness of appointed leaders.

Brothers in the Priesthood, let us give ourselves with a whole heart to this opportunity. Let us demonstrate to the nation that it is for such great reason as this that in the draft we are deferred to Class 5, to stay at home.—G. P. S., in The Southern Ohio Church Messenger.

PARISH LEAFLET PUBLICATIONS

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand, ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service and for giving notices—"Lest he forget." Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM — In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS — New Families Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial, 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT CARDS—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—

A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 25 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.50. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms — Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a 100.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches), to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above cards for One Dollar.

Vestiblue Bracket — Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant With God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England — A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church—Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People—A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS.

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Four-page folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies, $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies, 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards.
   Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14). First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA.
Worthy of Universal Adoption.

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching," which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet, or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—

1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Misisonary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES:—

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson—a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:—

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts of Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
The Evening Service.
Henry XIII.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government, to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, IND.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

CHICAGO, ILL., AND HOBART, IND., NOVEMBER 16, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

AY OF ALL DAYS!

h, and on Earth Peace, owards Men

")"

f men, flashed over the wires encir- morning, awakening most of us in ful slumber.

our Lord, 1918—the greatest day ve one: The first Christmas Day, ys have sprung.

clear,
old,
the earth
of gold;
will to men,
From heaven's all-gracious King;
The world in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing.

2 Still through the cloven skies they come,
With peaceful wings unfurled;
And still their heavenly music floats
O'er all the weary world:
Above its sad and lonely plains
They bend on hovering wing,
And ever o'er its Babel sounds
The blessed angels sing.

3 O ye, beneath life's crushing load,
Whose forms are bending low,
Who toil along the climbing way
With painful steps and slow!
Look now, for glad and golden hours
Come swiftly on the wing:
Oh, rest beside the weary road,
And hear the angels sing.

4 For lo, the days are hastening on,
By prophets seen of old,
When with the ever-circling years,
Shall come the time foretold,
When the new heaven and earth shall own
The Prince of Peace their King,
And the whole world send back the song
Which now the angels sing.

O Almighty God, who art a strong tower of defence unto thy servants against the face of their enemies; We yield thee praise and thanksgiving for our deliverance from those great and apparent dangers wherewith we were compassed. We acknowledge it thy goodness that we were not delivered over as a prey unto them; beseching thee still to con[illegible] towards us, that all the world may know that tho[illegible] Deliverer; through Jesus Christ our L[illegible] on earth peace, good will towards e, we worship thee, we glorify thee, glory, O Lord God, heavenly King,

---

, Jesus Christ; O Lord God, Lamb
est away the sins of the world, have away the sins of the world, have away the sins of the world, receive right hand of God the Father, have only art the Lord; thou only, O most high in the glory of God the

DID IT

ord, was asked by Charles M. Schwab how he did it, he answered in two words, "No booze." That tells the story of industrial efficiency briefly and definitely.—Diocese of Quincy Light.

A MESSAGE FROM BISHOP TUTTLE.

Written for The Witness

Americans have been in a wonderful way and to an unprecedented degree plunged into the thick of world activities.

Washington gave wise counsel for our formative period, that we should be keepers at home in careful avoidance of entangling alliances. But now steam and electricity have annihilated space and have gathered the nations into neighborliness; and a people cannot live by itself and work for itself alone any more than an individual can. Americans are loudly summoned to meet international responsibilities and to discharge international duties. But, coincident with their taking outside views and thinking outside thoughts and doing outside acts they should not be heedless of Washington's warning to build the home fortress solid and make the home basis strong.

Representatives from all nations of the earth are constantly coming to us, and they stay in settlement among us. These must be Americanized. A tenderly welcome, a cordial good will, an introduction to our helpful public schools, an explanation of our laws and customs with their proffer of comforting protection, and the very atmosphere of wholesome personal freedom, will best work the Americanization desired.

If the comers be Christians we should take pride and pleasure in showing them how our flag respects freedom of conscience and insures religious liberty. If they be not Christians a warm missionary spirit in heart and life should urge us to the work of making them and their children to be Christians. The Church which will take hold with heart and mind and strength of this duty to the foreigners settled among us will be doing blessed missionary work for the Master and for the country second in importance to none other that can be named.

Daniel S. Tuttle.

MOTOR CARS FOR OVERSEAS CHAPLAINS

The Rev. Dr. Washburn, Secretary of the Church War Commission, announces that "At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee, a message from Bishop Perry was read in which Chaplain Brent and he asked the War Commission to underwrite $50,000 for the purchase of motor cars overseas to be used by chaplains. Chaplain Brent and Bishop Perry suggested that the full financial responsibility should be at once undertaken by the War Commission of the Episcopal Church, with the hope that the General War-Time Commission of the Churches would apportion to each of the larger Communions its share of this total amount, inasmuch as the money would be used to supply chaplains without interdenominational distinction. The Executive Committee immediately informed the General War-Time Commission that it was ready to underwrite $50,000 for this purchase. The General War-Time Commission of the Churches accepted with deep gratitude the proposition, and in consequence Bishop Perry was cabled that the War Commission of the Episcopal Church was willing to underwrite $50,000. A committee has been appointed by the General War-Time Commission of the Churches to apportion the proper share of this expense to each one of the larger Communions. It is needless to say that the War Commission of the Episcopal Church was glad to be able to make this immediate response to Chaplain Brent and Bishop Perry, and also to assist in the work of the chaplains of the Christian Church without denominational distinction."

CHRISTIAN AMERICANIZATION

Week of Prayer and Conference for the Stranger Within Our Gates, November 17-24

The Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions calls the attention of the Bishops and Clergy of the Church to the fact that "from Nov. 17-24 inclusive the religious bodies of Christian America have been asked to observe what some people call 'Home Mission Week' when we shall in prayer and conference think of the foreigner in our midst, and plan to kown him better. In its aim and essence this movement should appeal to the Church as no other movement possibly could; and it would seem strange, with our heritage and our ability of interpreting American ideals to the man who has hitherto been the 'stranger within our gates' if our pulpits were silent at a time when all the people in the neighborhood should be thinking and talking over ways and means of presenting to our non-English speaking friends our national ideals and mission.

I have been informed that the United States Government approves of this movement to such an extent, that it is about to issue a pamphlet to be sent to every clergyman in the U. S. urging him to take part in it.

The Educational Department of the Board of Missions under the leadership of Dr. Sturgis is expecting to present to the Church for its study courses next year this question in a most attractive way."

The Home Missions Council, which includes in its membership thirty-five different home mission bodies, representing twenty-three denominations and the Council of Women for Home Missions, sends out literature including a bulletin for the Clergy, a Sunday School program, a poster and a program for Women's Missionary Societies. Rev. Mr. White says he will gladly act as agent in securing any of this material, should any reader desire.

In one of the pamphlets plans are suggested for the use of societies:

"Neighborhood group meetings to discuss neighborhood conditions.

A war luncheon with speakers on Americanization.

Meeting of parent-teachers associations as guests of the Church women.

Mass meeting of children with patriotic program.

A moving picture theater used for Americanization and patriotic films.

Church women speaking five minutes at all meetings of clubs and Red Cross, during week using Amerization theme.

Exhibit in public-library of books on Americanization.

Concerts in Parish Houses by musicians from foreign speaking communities.

Pageant using groups from all sections of the community.

Exhibition and demonstration in some public way, of manuals and methods of teaching English to foreigners."

Practical service for the individual consists in: "Visiting a foreign settlement, section or home. Visiting a Church for foreign speaking people. Attending some special meeting fof foreigners. See that some form of recreation is offered to foreigners. Become acquainted personally with a foreign family. Co-operate with your clergyman in plans for community visitation.

Read at least one autobiography of an immigrant. Inspect an industry using foreign labor."

In the bulletin issued for the clergy we are given information on the work done by the various denominations among the foreign peoples in this country.

What the Episcopal Church Is Doing.

"The Episcopal Church carries on work among the Japanese in Sacramento, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Ogden, Utah. In Honolulu, a large educational and evangelical work is being done under Bishop Restarick. This work is of far-reaching importance owing to the constant emigration of the Japanese and Chinese converts.

In San Francisco and Oakland the Church ministers to the Chinese.

Very successful missions for the Italians are conducted in New York, Chicago, Gary, Ind., and Philadelphia.

Strong centers of work for the Swedes are in Providence, R. I., New York City, Boston, Chicago, Minneapolis, Duluth. Some work is done among the Greeks and Syrians. Before the war there were a number of German Episcopal Churches in the United States. There are now French Episcopal Churches in Philadelphia and New York. Hungarians are organized into Episcopal congregations in New Jersey and Indiana. Some work is done among the Armenians chiefly along the line of ecclesiastical hospitality. There is active work among the Poles in Pennsylvania, and possibly elsewhere. Along the New England coast sporadic attempts have been made to reach the unchurched Portuguese.

In the case of all races of immigrants the Episcopal Church relies largely upon the distribution of Bibles in the language of the immigrant, and upon the Book of Common Prayer which is now procurable in the languages of most of the immigrant races."

The pamphlet containing nine Sunday School stories about a Norwegian boy, an Indian girl, a Russian-Bohemian girl, an Italian girl, a Greek boy, a Slovak, a Cuban, a New Mexican and a Chinese are all very interesting. In another column will be found the first story, "The Boy Behind the Aeroplane," which we print for the benefit of our younger readers. The other stories will follow in their order in future issues.

Challenges The Church's Best Effort.

The Woman's Board of Domestic Missions of the Reformed Church of America sound this warning:

"We face another momentous issue as yet shadowy, keeping itself from the clear light of open statement of intention, growing in the darkness in hidden places like a fungus, in mines and lumber camps, passed along to farm laborers and wherever great industries mass together those who labor with their hands; it has possibilities of affecting the whole structure of the world and thus must rightly be taken account of in any outlook on America's needs.

"We refer to the insidious well-defined undercurrent of class consciousnes among large bodies of laborers who claim a pernicious type of internationalism and whose religion is a pseudo socialistic formula of brotherhood,—but a brotherhood which fails to include in equal and proportionate consideration members of the so-called higher classes. That a new and fairer basis for all human living must be found quickly we all gladly concede and desire to work for. But in view of the awful power for destruction and disintegration of established order and institutions, including the Christian Church, inherent in this movement, and in view of the great masses of ignorant Negroes and foreigners in this country, inflammable and open to propaganda-approach, the Home Mission enterprise becomes of tremendous nation-

Continued on Page 7.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

SAINT ANDREW'S DAY
November 30

The Collect.

Almighty God, who didst give such grace unto thy holy Apostle Saint Andrew, that he readily obeyed the calling of thy Son Jesus Christ, and followed him without delay; Grant unto us all, that we, being called by thy Holy Word, may forthwith give up ourselves obediently to fulfil thy holy commandments through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Amen.

Requirements For Companionship With Jesus.

"The gift of God is eternal life," says St. Paul. It was this life which God gave to St. Andrew, that made him willing to follow Jesus Christ. It was a case of like calling like, or life calling life, if you please. Jesus does not make mental gifts the basic requirements for His companionship, although He did say "what think ye of Christ?" Nor did Jesus tell men that they must have only so much money before He will be their friend, although He bade the rich young man sell all that he had, and give it to the poor and then seek His companionship. A certain disposition does not seem to be required before one can follow Jesus, although He said: "Whoso loveth father or mother more than Me, is not worthy of Me." No: all that Jesus seemed to require of men to be His followers was that they were alive, "live wires" as the modern slang puts it. The Christian religion is not a third sex proposition, it is a normal life; so whoever has in him the desire to live, he is the kind of person that Jesus Christ can make into a saint and an apostle. That person's definition of "life" may have to be altered, but if he has in him any spark of life which Almighty God started him out with, the Lord of Life can manage the rest. All Jesus Christ had to do to Andrew was to call, and deep answered to deep, readily and without delay.

How Does Jesus Christ Call People?

The calling of Thy Son." How does Jesus Christ call people? Does not the call of the Annointed One normally and usually come to human hearts through certain sense media, chiefly the eye and the ear? The spoken and the written word are the goads that pinch a man's conscience and provoke his will to action. The calling is insistent; it precedes a man all his days until he yields and follows. The call of Jesus comes ordinarily through Christian parents, or through parents who unconsciously voice His ideals; the good influences of school and church add their power to this insistent note. If his sense of life be rightly directed, the child will gradually listen and look for the messages and signals of the Blessed One. And the call involves the willingness to follow its promptings and pleadings. Do not imagine that the "calling" of Jesus Christ can be likened to "teasing" or "nagging." The companionship which He offers you is one which if it were expressed in terms of modern social life, and you were the ordinary social climber, would fill you with a delirium of joy, and no sacrifice which would enable you to accept the invitation would be too great for you to make. To walk with Jesus, and to be acknowledged as one whom He sought out, makes life really worth living. Just look yourself over very thoroughly and you will see very clearly why Jesus would not "nag" or "tease" you for your company—but on the other hand, see Who He is, and be happy and proud that He wants you to walk with Him in the way.

The Acid Test Of Our Earnestness.

"Grant that we may give up ourselves;" here is the heart of the prayer; here is where the sword thrust comes; this is the acid test of our earnestness. And because it is hard for all of us to give up ourselves, we ask the Almighty God to help us all. Do not figure out that giving up is easy or natural. If it were easy, we wouldn't be of much account; if it were natural for any real live person to yield to another, then the Church would not bid us pray that everyone should be granted help in this direction. To give up ourselves is to acknowledge that our own plans, our own desires, our own hopes and ambitions are made to give way to other plans, desires, hopes, ambitions which we recognize are superior to ours from every point of view. No one of us is big enough to do this until he has had a vision of the work that Jesus came to do. The moment we catch that vision that moment we begin to give up ourselves to the fulfilling of the commandment whose aim is the betterment of the whole world.

"Obediently to fulfill Thy Holy Commandments" is the logical sequence of giving up ourselves. God does not wish us to lie supine under His commands as the old-time devotees threw themselves under the crushing weight of the juggernaut car. He expects us to "get to work" because we are the ones on whom He relies to fulfill the word of His mouth. We are to do on earth the work which He has for us to do, and it is only by giving up ourselves that we can hope to fulfill our task obediently. We are to serve Him as the Angles do Him service in heaven. Let us examine ourselves in this regard and then lay our Advent plans according to the results of our examination.

The Epistle.. Rom. x. 9.

If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord, who hath believed our report? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world. But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you. But Esaias is very bold, and saith, I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me. But to Israel he saith, All day long I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people.

"Rich Unto All That Call Upon Him."

"Confess with thy mouth." This is the easiest thing in the world to do. It is called "lip service," and is beset with all the dangers that attend all spoken words. Lip Service is necessary, but it is only helpful to the speaker and the auditor when back of it is "belief in thine heart." It is this heart conviction in the immortality of Jesus Christ that makes it reasonable for one to give up himself to the commands of that same Jesus. The absolute conviction that Jesus is what He says He is, is the only thing that shall save a man from being "ashamed." People are ashamed when they are caught doing something wicked or foolish. In this case it would be both wicked and foolish to confess that Jesus Christ is God incarnate, and not be convinced of it in our hearts. And this confession is within the ability of any type of human being to make. One does not have to be a "Jew or Greek" to gain God's blessings. It is a very encouraging thing to read that "the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon Him." Somehow or other, people have heard or learned or experienced the fact that the rich are "hard to get at." It is true that some "rich people" are hard to know; but the people who call on God will find no such difficulty. He is the kind of rich Being who will make a man of you. But do not expect God to make a man of you in spite of yourself. You have your part to do in "making good." If your idea of a rich man is that he is someone from whom you can and should get something by just asking for it, then it is good for you, if the rich have been "hard to get at." But if your idea of a rich man is that he is one who can help you help yourself, then you are in the way of finding out that you and your rich man are very much alike. So, thinking of God as "rich to all who call on Him," remember He is such to those who look to Him for that sort of help which stiffens will power, drives away bitterness, stirs up energy, promotes patience. Anyone who wants this sort of help can have it by calling on God; and if you call on Him, you will find He is always "at home," and will never "say you nay."

A Logical Reason For The Ministry.

There is a logical reason for the ministry. St. Andrew was called because he had the ability to go out and find his brother and bring him to Jesus. He was called and sent. Of many of us, it can be said we were called, but we did not wait to be sent, we just went. We went our way because we had not learned that the call involved giving up ourselves. The man who is called and never waits to be sent, is the man who "spills the beans." He is on the Lord's side because Jesus said: "He who is not against us is on our side;" but he does not know how to present a rounded message. Not rounded in polished phrases, but rounded so that the average mind can mentally and spiritually grasp it, and hold on to it, because he finds it is to his physical and spiritual advantage.

The Gospel Is Not Properly Presented To Many People.

The Gospel is not properly presented to many people, because the Gospel messengers were so eager to get the news published that they mis-spelled the good news, and so failed to get that obedience which was to have been the result of their preaching. Then, too, "they have not all obeyed the Gospel" because though they were preached to, they heard but did not listen; they saw but did not perceive; even they themselves preached, but they were in their hearts a disobedient and gainsaying people, so that the Lord's embrace found them outside His reach and influence; at least on these occasions when to have them close would have meant peace and happiness.

Do you wait after Jesus calls you, to make sure you are ready to be sent? If He has called you and now waits to send you, are you ready to go? I speak in general terms, but in your heart, you know just exactly whether or not you are obedient to Christ's call, don't you?

The Gospel.. St. Matt. iv. 18.

Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him. And going on from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and he called them. And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him.

What Fishing For Men Involves.

"Jesus walking by the sea saw two brethren casting a net into the sea." It will be a great day for all mankind when we learn the lesson that Jesus can use our trade or profession to extend His Gospel. Every man born into the Church is called by Jesus to company with Him, in order that he may learn "how good and joyful a thing it is" to be a Chritsian. When he has learned that lesson, he will have learned enough life values to qualify as a missionary, making the word "missionary" mean "one sent." And whatever trade or business or profession one has been learning, should have had in it certain methods or arts which could contribute to the more effective preaching of the Gospel. Thinking of your trade or profession as a "net," if you are practicing it to the best of your ability, then Jesus will call you to use that "net" for God's glory and man's good, just as surely as He called Andrew and Peter. And He may call you to leave your net, or He may not call you to leave your net. The point for you to remember is that if you are a poor hand at your chosen business, such a fact shows that you have not yet learned life's values; therefore you are not apt to be a success in any other line of effort that requires patience, perseverance, hope, trust. And this is what fishing for men involves.

A Very Stimulating Experience.

Another heartening thing in today's Gospel is the implication that in our daily tasks the Blessed One loves to come and watch us, as well as watch over us. To have a good friend standing by and watching us develope can be a very stimulating experience. It all depends on the friend. But surely if we have read the Gospel story straight it cannot dishearten or discourage us to realize that close beside us in our working hours stands One Who is not there as a policeman, or a tutor, or a mentor, but as a true and honest and ever-faithful Friend. "A Friend," says some one, "is one who knows all about you, and loves you just the same." There may be something a little flabby about this definition to earnest, resolute people, but there is also a lot of comfort for the person who sometime or other has "fallen down" in his work, or his life. And so it does not make Our Saviour a sentimentalist to think of Him according to this definition. He will watch you, and when He sees you really working, whether it is the work of casting a net, or the work of mending a net, or the work of washing a net, be sure He sees with understanding eyes; and because of that, be glad that He dignifies your work with His company.

If you are employed in a work where the thought of Jesus Christ cannot possibly fit in, it is good advice which tells you to get out of that work without delay.

If, while you are working at your trade, and you have the call to preach; go to work as a lay preacher, letting your handicraft preach; your day's work preach; your home life preach; your whole business preach. And then some others will voice the call of Jesus and say, "give up this way of supporting yourself, and we will support your temporal needs so that you can give all your time to preaching with your lips, what we see you have long believed in your heart."

Remember that Jesus expects His followers to make their daily tasks stepping stones from which they can preach the good news every day of their lives. When the business man and business women gain this conception of their vocations, then the pulpit will have a message that God has always wanted it to proclaim: for into the pulpit will find their way those whom God has proven faithful in the days of their preaching by craft of hand and craft of daily life, and out of the abundance of their heart they will speak to ears that are gladly opened to their words.

AMERICA, THE BEAUTIFUL.

By Katherine Lee Bates

(This fine national hymn was written in 1893 by Miss Bates, professor of English literature in Wellesley College. Several composers have set it to music, the composition of Charles S. Brown being perhaps the best setting. It goes well to "Auld Lang Syne.")

O beautiful for spacious skies,
For amber waves of grain,
For purple mountain majesties
Above the fruited plain!
America! America!
God shed His grace on thee
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

O beautiful for pilgrim feet,
Whose stern, impassioned stress
A thoroughfare for freedom beat
Across the wilderness!
America! America!
God mend thine every flaw,
Confirm thy soul in self-control,
Thy liberty in law!

O beautiful for heroes proved
In liberating strife,
Who more than self their country loved,
And mercy more than life!
America! America!
May God thy gold refine,
Till all success be nobleness,
And every gain divine!

O beautiful for patriot dream
That sees beyond the years
Thine alabaster cities gleam
Undimmed by human tears!
America! America!
God shed His grace on thee
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

* * * * * * * * * *
* * * * * * * * * *

AUTUMN'S MESSAGE

The calm repose of an Autumn day, below—the trees with their leaves falling gently down; and above—the changing foliage, with its mysterious depths of artistic splendor. What a hush of calming inactivity, typical of the completed time of old age waiting for the spirit's call to a higher sphere, when the outer husk will be left behind.

Before the beauty fades from the trees, leaving them bare and desolate, the hushed stillness holds a mystery of expectation, perchance a message from the invisible. He that hath ears to hear, let him receive some solution of life's problem, some stirring of weak impulses, a call to self-sacrifice, or a wakening of memory to lessons learnt long ago in early childhood, but forgotten in careless manhood.

Oh, the lost opportunities of the years, as they pass swiftly by, leaving but the fallen leaves, soon to be scattered in the wind. The snow will bury them. The frost of winter, with its chilling blast, will harden the softness of our better nature.

Listen to the voice that speaks again in its compelling sweetness to surrender self to the mellow tints and the softening calmness which should follow work well accomplished, an earnest response of the spirit to the higher call of duty, resulting in a peace that passeth understanding.—E. G. H., Aurora, Ill.

* * * * * * * * * *
* * * * * * * * * *

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

The Sunday School Is Not a Side Issue.

"Unfortunately, the Sunday School, in the minds of a great many of our Church people, is relegated to some nebulous realm over whose destinies the Rector and a few kindly, but not efficient, men and women preside," writes Bishop Johnson of Southern California in a letter published in pamphlet form by the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. "This conception is wholly a false one. The Sunday School is an integral part of the Church's life and work. It is a training school for the boys and girls who are subsequently to be the men and women in the Church. The school is not a place in which platitudes are to be taught or where silly sentimentalism is to be evoked. It is a place into which the very best influences should be thrown to teach children the moral truths taught by our Lord; to inculate the principles upon which they are based, and to outline the duties of a Christian man in the Church of God, and I am reminding you that it is the duty of the Vestrymen of the Church, as representing the Laity, to see that the Sunday School is properly equipped for its work. The Sunday School should not be permitted to regard itself as a side issue apart from the Parish, living its own life and supporting itself as best it may to accomplish any ends that it may choose to adopt, but it should be taught that it is really a miniature Parish, and under its influence, everything that the father and mother do for the advancement of the cause of Christ in a proper measure, but in as effective a way, the School should be taught that it ought to do, day by day and week by week. It is worth the while for the vestry and for the congregation to support an organization that has such an end as this in view. A few years of such training will bring into existence a body of young men and women who will contribute to the Church, moral, spiritual and material support. To ignore these great facts is to court ruin."

The Greeks Will Soon Complete Their Long Unfinished Prayer.

"I have been convinced that the free peoples of this country demanded that the territories of Hellenism shall be given back in order that a great national unity may be the future ideal for Greece," said Archbishop Melitios shortly before he set sail from New York for his native land. "I have been asked by Americans if Greece is able to govern and care for Constantinople, if it were returned to her, and I say that she is more able to take charge of that city at this time than the original thirteen Colonies were under George Washington to undertake the government of their new republic when it was first thought of. I am waiting eagerly for the time when the children of Greece will be able to enter their historic temple of St. Sofia and complete their long unfinished prayer."

Dr. Manning Favors Universal Military Training.

"The results of the training here are an unanswerable argument for a wise system of universal military service as a permanent feature of the life of our country," asserted the Rev. Dr. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York, when quitting Camp Upton, L. I., recently, where he had served as a civilian chaplain since last November. "No one could be here and see the results as shown in the men who are here without desiring the same thing for the young manhood of our country as a whole. only in its military points of view, because it will be our best insurance against war, but I believe in it as strongly from the moral and spiritual point of view because it will make better men and better Americans."

All Dressed Up And Nowhere To Go.

"I certainly will be glad when the ban is lifted off the churches," says Mr. C. L. M. Harris, in the Grace Church, Port Huron, Mich., Record. "I have been continuously organist of some church since I was eighteen years old, and to be all dressed up on Sunday and have nowhere to go, seems very strange. I hope the choir missed the services and choir practices so much that after this, nothing short of an earthquake will prevent them getting out to church. I really expect they did feel queer on the two Sundays just past, for they have acquired the habit of going to church, and a habit formed is hard to break."

Germany's Course in Penance.

"It is worth noting what a hard lesson in moral theology Germany is getting, and what a good Catholic spiritual director our Presbyterian President makes," says the Rev. Wm. M. Gamble in a contribution to the Diocese of Quincy Light. "The moral sense of the allies will not be satisfied with less than (1) Contrition, which Germany tries to evade by professing conversion to Wilson's democratic ideals, and by intimating that she is not responsible for her crimes, because of former lack of national autonomy; in short, pleading ignorance, irresistible delusion and distress. (2) Confession, which Germany evades by denying atrocities, and seeking to retain moral and physical means of self-defense, laying claim to an honor she has fortified by her own acts, and demanding consideration for herself she has denied to others. (3) Satisfaction, which requires, first of all that by surrendering all means of defense, she acknowledges her past unworthiness to use the power she has been given, and that her enemies are more worthy in that respect than she. This comes very hard, indeed, even for a criminal, whose invariable instinct is to paint his accusers, and even his judges, as black as himself; but the cause of truth requires the bitter penance even of surrender of sinner to sinner. Satisfaction also requires restitution. Complete restitution is, of course, impossible; but the moral sense of mankind requires sufficient penance to prove the sincerity of the penitent, and to make clear the fact and consciousness of sin to those scandalized by the evil wrought. Only some fundamental fact of potential forgiveness makes this satisfaction possible, and places merciful limits on the penance; the alternative would be extermination or hopeless slavery, as would be the case if Germany were judged by her own pagan standards. (4) Firm purpose of amendment, of which all the foregoing is the necessary initial test, and which is carried further under conditions of restoration to fraternal fellowship—a restoration normally impossible unless the primary conditions of penitence are met.

"One of the hardest tasks of a penitent is to yield to superior force and at the same time acknowledge its justice. It is the pride that would deprive God of power, on the ground that no force can be justly exerted; but really because of the proud impulse to reject the aid to moral and spiritual ends that force sometimes applies. And this is peculiarly the temptation of those who have idolized and misused force. Foch's relentless drive is the best help Germany's penitence could have; yet she may, after all, elect to perish in despair and rage.

A True Method Of Gauging Gifts.

"Everybody now as a patriot gets down to actual sworn figures of his income by Government direction," says Bishop Nichols, of California. "There is no losing ourself in that old vagueness of excuse, 'I don't really know what my income is.' We have to know approximately, 'put in down in black and white.' That certainly gives a basis of calculation for our religion as well as for our patriotism. Then under 'N' in the Income Tax Return for 1917, the Government prescribes deductions for contributions and gifts for religious as well as for charitable, scientific and educational corporations and associations, etc. The striking and pertinent fact is that such gifts are scaled as a percentage of the income 'not in excess of 15 per cent'! Even a war measure of the Government recalls the Church itself to a true method of gauging its gifts. Press this home and show how it is the antidote for the poison of slackerism in the old excuse, 'I have so many appeals,' etc., etc. Nothing will more quickly clarify the matter of meeting the multiplied appeals than to have some sort of clear knowledge of what by a percentage we have available for all appeals. Then it will be a simple matter of that entire percentage for all, to make our religion a preferred claim with its own percentage of the whole percentage for gifts. Then the Church will not come in the 'hindmost' with little or nothing left for it. Then the 'poor mouth' of any Treasurer of Church Funds can fairly wreath itself in smiles as incidental."

The older I grow, the more convinced I am that there is no education which one can get from books and costly apparatus equal to that which can be gotten from contact with great men and women.—Booker Washington.

AN "INASMUCH" INCIDENT AT A MILITARY CAMP

Find the Christian worker in a hospital, and you will find the man whose stories thrill your heart and touch your soul. His are the most intimate touches with human lives, his the privileges to enter the quiet hours when Death itself draws near, and be given confessions and confidences; his the harder task too of gripping a friendly hand and feeling that hand grow cold within his clasp, realizing with a heart pang his inability to save.

Now and then there comes a splendid opportunity for real service, and such an opportunity came recently to a secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in an eastern training camp. In the wards of the convalescent hospital, he found a young aviator marked by every sign and signal of tuberculosis. His face was a picture of the most abject despair, there was no hope for him in the hospital, and he knew it. He didnt want to die. Hadn't he volunteered his services, dedicating his life to the country he loved, and wasn't it just a bit unkind of fate to take him off in this silly fashion?

"Doctor," said the secretary, "what are the chances for that chap?"

"None at all, here."

"What do you mean, here? Are there chances for him elsewhere?"

"Well," replied the doctor, dubiously, "the seaside would probably bring him around all right."

"If I can get him to the seaside, will you grant him a furlough?" asked the secretary, immediately.

"That is not within my power," replied the doctor. "I'll verify my statement, however, if you take the matter up with the colonel."

Without losing time, the secretary hastened off to headquarters, where his request was stated, and his desire for a furlough for the afflicted man laid before the colonel.

"Wouldn't do any good," said the colonel, "that man can't travel alone."

"I'm not asking that he travel alone," replied the good Samaritan. "I'm going to take him. I'll stay with him until he is strong enough to care for himself."

"Can he afford this expense?" asked the colonel.

"Pardon me, sir," replied the secretary, "I haven't thought of asking. A life is more precious to me than any money I may possess. I intend taking him as my guest."

Convinced of the man's earnestness and sincerity, the furlough was granted, and the afflicted aviator and the kindly secretary boarded the next train for the seacoast. The secretary remained with his charge for a few days, when he noticed a marked improvement and was encouraged in believing the man was on the road to recovery. The glow of appreciation on his rosy face, was sufficient reward to the secretary for anything he had done.

The incident did not close there. Approaching the colonel again upon his return to camp, the secretary asked that work of some light, easy nature be granted the aviator upon his return, in order to insure good results from the vacation. The colonel, who had by this time taken a personal interest in the case, promised to do everything possible to save the brave young life for future real and active service to his country.

A simple tale, but one of the many incidents which are taking place all over the country, where secretaries in the camps are finding opportunities to serve "even the least of these, His brethren."

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

EIGHTH PAPER

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 16. Substitute for the Prayer for the President, etc., the following:

"O Lord our Governor, whose glory is in all the world; we commend this Nation to thy mericful care, that being guided by thy Providence we may dwell secure in thy peace. Grant to the President of the United States, and to all in authority, wisdom and strength to know and to do thy will. Fill them with the love of truth and righteousness; and make them ever mindful of their calling to serve this people in thy fear; through, etc."

The Commission reported a revised form of the present prayer for the President by adding the words "Governor of this State" and by omitting the words "in health and prosperity long to live." The General Convention refused to adopt the revised Prayer and instead voted to substitute the above form. If the present prayer is not entirely satisfactory it would seem the part of wisdom to revise the wording of the prayer where necessary rather than to omit the prayer and substitute a new form. No new prayers, however beautiful, are equal in their phraseology to the collects and prayers taken from ancient sources.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 17. Substitute for the first rubric on page 12 the following:

"Or the Creed commonly called the Nicene."

On page 12 the Nicene Creed is printed in full, following the Apostles Creed with the rubrical provision "Or this." The Commission reported a proposition to omit the Nicene Creed from Morning and Evening Prayer. The General Convention defeated the resolution and instead proposed to omit the printing of the Nicene Creed in Morning and Evening Prayer but to provide by rubrical direction for its use as an alternate form of Creed. This is an attempt to finally remove the rubrical provision for the use of the Nicene Creed in the Choir Offices and is a wise move. The use of the Nicene Creed in the Choir Offices is peculiar to the usage of the American Church.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 18. After the General Thanksgiving (in both Morning and Evening Prayer) insert a rubric in these words:

"Note, That the General Thanksgiving may be said by the Congregation with the Minister."

In some few places the custom of saying the General Thanksgiving together by the Minister and people prevails, but without rubrical authority, for the present form of printing the amen in italics at the end of the prayer of General Thanksgiving plainly show that the Church intends the Prayer to be said by the Minister alone. To make the proposed rubrical change will destroy the whole idea of the latter portion of the Choir Offices, i. e.—prayer; at which time the Minister in the prayers is representing the people This is a General Thanksgiving only as to its scope, as contrasted with the special Thanksgiving as later provided for in the Prayer Book. In the present English Book it does not form a part of Morning or Evening Prayer but is the first of the Thanksgivings. If, however, it is the wisdom of the Church that the General Thanskigving should be said by the Congregation and the Minister the rubric ought to be positive. In other words it should read "shall be said and not "may be said" so that the uniformity of worship may be ordered throughout the Church.

COMMEMORATION OF BISHOP GORE'S VISIS TO AMERICA

Portrait Will Be Presented To The General Seminary.

It has been proposed to present a portrait of the Lord Bishop of Oxford, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Charles Gore, to the General Theological Seminary, New York, in commemoration of his visit to America. Mrs. Winifred Rieber, the artist, has very generously offered her fee of $2,000 for her work to the Assyrian and Armenian Relief Committee.

The two-fold object of the appeal that is now being made, to raise the amount required contemplating as it does a very fitting and highly to be commended commemoration with the primary purpose of saving Assyrian and Armenian Christians from starving in the hour of victory and during the reconstruction period following the war, is manifestly deserving of a very liberal and immediate response from the Church people of America.

The Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires and the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, under date of October 30th, issued the following letter:

The Committee's Letter.

The Lord Bishop of Oxford, the Right Reverend Charles Gore, D. D., is now finishing a series of profoundly impressive addresses in America on the Church and the League of Nations. He is here by invitation of the Committee on Moral Aims of the War, and with the consent of the British Foreign Office. The occasion, the personality, and the message of this foremost representative of the Anglican episcopate deserves commemoration.

It is proposed to present to the General Theological Seminary in the City of New York, a portrait of this distinguished theologian and ecclesiastical statesman. Dean Fosbroke enthusiastically welcomes the idea. A well-known artist, now painting by order of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan the portrait of the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, now here with the British Educational Commission, has consented to paint the Lord Bishop of Oxford also, and to donate the entire fee of two thousand dollars to our Assyrian and Armenian Relief Fund. Any oversubscription will be devoted to the identical relief work.

We the undersigned, a Committee appointed by the Diocese of New York, give our hearty endorsement to this plan, and respectfully request that subscriptions for the "Bishop of Oxford's Portrait Fund" be designated as such and sent to Mr. Woodbury G. Langdon, Treasurer, 131 East 40th Street, New York City.

As the Lord Bishop returns to England shortly we request your immediate co-operation.

Respectfully yours,
Ernest M. Stires.
Chairman.
William T. Manning,
Vice-Chairman.

Dean Fosbroke's Letter.

The Rev. Dr. Hughell Fosbroke, Dean of the General Theological Seminary, under date of October 31st, wrote the following letter to Mr. Paul Shimmon, Field Secretary of the Assyrian and Armenian Relief Fund:

My Dear Mr. Shimmon:

It gives me great pleasure to send you the enclosed pledge for $500 for the Bishop of Oxford's Portrait Fund. The Seminary rejoices in the possibility of having in its possession the portrait of one of the most distinguished theologians of the Anglican Church, though in these difficult days it could not afford to make any contribution simply for the sake of so desirable an acquisition. However, in view of the fact that the artist is so generously contributing the money to the Assyrian and Armenian Relief Fund, we are only too glad to make a special effort to do our part.

With best wishes, I am,
Faithfully yours,
Hughell Fosbroke, Dean.

"Do you suppose," said Johnny, as his little cousin laid away her largest roisest apple for a sick girl, "that God cares about such little things as we do? He is too busy taking care of the big folks to notice us much." Winnie shook her head and pointed to mama, who had just lifted the baby from the crib. "Do you think," said Winnie, "that mama is so busy with the big folks that she forgets the baby? She thinks of the baby first, 'cause he's the littlest. Surely God knows how to love as well as mother."—Epworth Herald.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., and Hobart, Indiana.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months;
20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

THE FUNCTION OF THE CHURCH.

There is no finer forage in the world than the buffalo grass with which the western plains were covered when the white man first crossed them.

When this sod is once turned by the plough, the buffalo grass goes and in its place comes one of two things, either golden fields of grain or else a rank growth of noxious weeds. A garden is a beautiful thing, but once it is allowed to deteriorate it is an ugly, repulsive thing.

So, if any one has ever read "My Life as an Indian" by Schultze, he will be carried away by the happiness of primitive life. Schultze tried to go back to the New England village where he had inherited an estate, but after the free and untrammelled life among the Blackfeet on the plains, he found New England village life tiresome and petty. He went back in disgust at civilization to join the tribe which had adopted him and to live with the Indian wife that he had taken. And there are few finer women in story than was this same Indian squaw.

Someone asked me the other day if I thought civilization worth while.

Natty Bumpo in the Leather-stocking tales thought decidedly not and he travelled from the settlements of New York to the prairies of the west to get rid of the civilized whites. He preferred to bunk with the piorneer and take his chances with the red man. When one looks at the civilization of Europe, of which we are the lineal descendants, one is almost justified in asking whether it is worth while.

When one is stranded in a community where the civilized white has come to wrestle with elemental problems, in lumber camp, in mining camp, or in the settlements that follow a pioneer railroad, one sees a worse brutality, a more savage struggle than ever disgraced an Indian village. Nor is one inspired when he goes into the East side of New York with its huddling squalor, or into a mid-western village with its narrow pharisaism, nor in a colony of the four hundred with its splendid isolation.

Do the slums exist that Newport may be gay? Is there only enough to go around and when a few, who have the power, appropriate more than enough in order that they may enjoy superfluous luxuries, must a whole community suffer because they have been deprived of bread and games? Is the Prussian junker any more selfish than our captains of finance, or was Von Bissing any more cruel in the homes of Belgium than Von Einstein in the sweat shops of New York?

Is it any worse to lop off children's hands than it is to dwarf their souls in mines and factories?

Is the price that we must pay for the prosperity of the few, that the many shall be debased?

And shall the nemesis of our civilization consist in the revolt of the vulgar and the debased who in turn make a shambles of the palaces of the cultured?

Are culture and comfort and Christ the privilege of the fortunate few?

Anybody who has read "The Cotter's Saturday Night" knows that it need not be so, but anybody who has tried to get house servants knows that those who were once "the humble and the meek" now occupy the "seats of the mighty" in their own estimation.

We are confronted with the startling fact today that humanity is rapidly becoming a lost art.

It is not only Emperors and the four hundred that are proud and arrogant, but the peasant and the housemaid are pert and insolent. And from whom have they learned the lesson? The most dangerous element today in any community is the arrogant rich for he is the breeder of anarchy, the teacher of the envious, the violator of peace.

Every man is born with the same faculties and the Lord intended no one to be either arrogant or insolent, and no man has the special privilege of violating humanity. Because God has given a man ten talents, he has so much the less right to be ungrateful, and to forget the Lord "in whose hand his breath is and whose are all his ways." The only excuse for much brains or wealth, or power is service, and the only worthy expression of these qualities is sympathy. It is the lack of sympathy that characterizes alike the savage, the Chinaman, the Prussian and the smug American.

It is the haughty unwillingness to recognize human brotherhood in the interests of selfish indulgence that breed malice, envy and all uncharitableness, and no pinnacle of material prosperity can justify snobbery and cruelty of caste.

Many voices have said that when the war is over this will be a workingman's world. But is the workingman, per se, any less selfish, any more sympathetic than the capitalist? If he is, I have failed to see the evidence.

The opposite of humanity is conceit, and the opposite of sympathy is cruelty, and where shall we find humanity and sympathy?

Neither in acts of great corporations nor in those of labor federations.

I have found it nowhere else than in the individual, rich or poor, who takes Christ as his model, and in his feeble way tries to live as Christ would have him live.

But when we turn from corporations and federations to the Christian Church, what do we find?

Have we no pomposity of caste in ecclesiastical circles? Is there no patronizing of the poor and no fondling of the rich??

Are there no churches as exclusive as Newport society, and no congregations as cold as the Arctic circle?

No aggregation of selfish people whether it calls itself corporation, federation or congregation can be other than the units which compose its caste.

No program of democracy, socialism or ethical culture can make celestial harmony out of a keyboard of false notes. The unit of an organization is the individual, and no possible combination of individuals, under whatever banner they advertize their virtue, can produce the Kingdom of Heaven, until and unless the individuals are personally humble, sympathetic, righteous.

The Church has a divine task and that is to make men righteous. It is a hard and difficult one.

It is not the business of the Church, any more than it is the business of the university, to lead in this war, or to procure legislation, or to hygienize a community. When you deflect the Church from its business of making individuals righteous, you turn it from a hard and difficult task to one more congenial and less beneficial, for the Church is the only organization whose sole business it is to make men righteous, and that is job enough in itself.

A friend of mine was talking the other day to a prominent leader of the Y. M. C. A. and he asked this leader if the Y. M. C. A. was going to content itself when it came back from the war with being an auxiliary to the churches, or whether it was going to be a religion in itself.

In the course of the conversation it developed that this prominent Y. M. C. A. worker had no conception of the value of worship, no idea of the necessity of sacraments, no appreciation of the household of faith, but religion in his mind was merely a machine whose function was to provide certain benefits, largely material, for the environment of young men.

That is all right as an auxiliary factor, but perfectly futile as a substitute for the gift of the Spirit, by which we are to become new creatures in our own personal regeneration. Our greatest danger is to make young men selfish. There is no selfishness, less winsome, than religious selfishness, which is concerned merely with surrounding itself with a comfortable atmosphere.

Christ chose the way of the Cross and bade us to follow and unless we deliberately choose the hard task of conquering self, then our Jerusalem will be Sodom and Gomorrha, or as Berlin and Petrograd. Then will the buffalo grass of our primitive manhood become rank weeds and hideous desolation.

This is God's teaching in this war. You as an individual have chiefly to concern yourself with your own acceptance of God's will before you can take your place in any scheme of human brotherhood.

Seek you, yourself the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and then you will help, as far as you can, in adding all things needful to the human race.

Keep your own garden free from weeds and your neighbor will rise up and call you blessed.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS

"And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this? Others, mocking said, These men are full of new wine." (Acts II 12-13.)

Here we have in two verses the effect of Pentecost upon the general public, and it produced then as now, doubt and scorn.

It is a curious feature that although religion is a universal experience of the race, and, therefore entitled to the same consideration as other phenomena, that whenever the acts of religion, which same acts belong to the realm of religion, run counter to the preconceptions of the irreligious that they produce these two effects,—doubt from the serious and scorn from the frivolous.

As Christ once said, speaking of this same attitude, "If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead," nor were they.

The Christian faith consisted of certain facts attested by the witness of "over five hundred brethren; and also certified by a jury of twelve men, who staked their lives upon the truth of these facts; and also by the unwilling testimony of Saul of Tarsus, the ablest Hebrew of them all.

The truth of these facts is further attested by the greatest of all tests, that of time; for we, who live nineteen centuries after these facts, could testify if we would, that the more sincerely the world accepts these facts, the more capable the world is of receiving the decencies of civilization, and the further men depart from the life and teaching of Jesus Christ, the more inhuman and impossible the world becomes.

No one yet has risen who can give to the world, a way of religious life that can either take the place of, or show the untruthfulness of Christ's life.

It is not only based on good legal testimony, it is confirmed by the experience of the race.

But the Christian religion is a matter of doubt and scorn, not because those who practice it faithfully are dissatisfied with the fulfillment of its promises, but because those who start out with the premise that it is fiction and not truth, are not capable of ascertaining its worth.

"He that believeth in the Son of God," or in any one else for that matter, "hath the witness for himself." There was no question in the minds of those who testified to the facts of Pentecost, as to the reality of those facts, for they became throughout their lives, martyrs to those things which they had seen and heard. (The word "martyr" in Greek means simply "a witness.")

Nor need we be disappointed in the effect of their testimony upon the human race.

The Christian Religion can always approve itself to human faith because of that which it has accomplished by those who have accepted it in sincerity and truth; not a large company, perhaps, but one which has leavened the earth and made vice less respectable and virtue more possible to those who seek.

This is all that its Master ever claimed that it would do.

As for the group that doubted and scorned the testimony of the Evangel, it still exists and its name is legion.

St. Paul found that to the Jews, the Cross of Christ was a stumbling block, and to the Greeks it was foolishness. It is the same reaction that faith has upon the prejudice and vanity of the human race.

There is a wall of prejudice in human society. There is no form of exercise which people so dread and which is so rare as that of unprejudiced thought. Out of every hundred people, one could separate them into groups, Roman Catholics, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Adventists, Christian Scientists, Mormons, and what not, each group holding tenaciously to its mildewed conceptions of truth, incapable of seeing the others' viewpoints, unwilling to allow the thin edge of that viewpoint to penetrate the interior, incapable of seeing any fact except that which they follow with goose-step swing.

These doubt everything that does not conform to the cock-sure revelation of truth which they have received. These would doubt if Christ was to come again, for each would find something in His teaching which contravened their inveterate prejudices.

Then besides these, a large company of the four-hundred are too indolent, or too viscious, or too frivolous, even to think Life for them is merely a rund of tempora sensations. and anything else than an agreeable sensation is so repellant that they will not entertain it. These sit in the seat of the scornful, and are more vociferous about their rights than they are thoughtful about their duties.

To them the Cross of Christ is foolishness for it entails upon them an effort to overcome the lethargy or the viciousness to which they are wedded, and to them those who preach a gospel of eternal life are intoxicated with the new wine of fanciful idealism.

And yet in each hundred there will be those who hunger and thirst after righteousness and who find in the gospel of Christ the bread of life.

Those who prate about converting the whole world to Christ are unmindful of the fact that Christ Himself alienated more than He attracted, and that truth has never been acceptable to any great portion of the human race.

In order to accomplish a statistical success, the Gospel of Christ is diluted to a mere emotional appeal, and thousands are added to the faith who could not give a reason for the faith that is in them.

Continued on Page 7.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

Every parish in the Diocese of Arkansas, which has a Woman's Auxiliary is planning to observe the "Advent Call."

The Young Men's Christian Associations of North America will observe a week of prayer beginning on Sunday next, November 17th.

The Rev. Robert Y. Barber of Grace Church, Chanute, Kans., held a daily celebration of the Holy Communion during the influenza epidemic quarantine, with two persons at each service. Mr. Barber got permission for himself and the local Roman Catholic priest to have three services on All Saints' Day with six persons at each service. Mr. Barber reports that "It was one of the most effective All Saints' Days I have ever observed."

Trinity parishoners, Pine Bluff, Ark., are giving War Savings Stamps toward the upbuilding of a fund for a parish house. Every woman in the parish has pledged herself to give at least one and some of the men are following suit. One of the guilds has invested five hundred dollars in them, registering them in its own name, and the Sunday School pupils are doing the same. The Sunday School has already passed its quota. This giving of War Stamps takes the place of holding bazaars and sales.

On Sunday evening, November 3rd, a "service of remembrance" was held at Grace Church, New York City, by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Slattery, at which time a large number of names were read in addition to those regularly commemorated in Grace Church itself. Dr. Slattery was prompted to plan for such a service, "knowing that there must be many men who have given their lives in the war for whom there could be no funeral, and for whom there has been no funeral service."

Representative divines of several religious bodies in Philadelphia issued a pre-election letter to voters urging them to take advantage of their opportunity to elect State officers and "a legislature pledged to the ratification of the amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for future nation-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic." Among the signatures to the letter was that of the Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins, Rector of Holy Trinity Church.

The Rev. Albert Gale, of Plattsburgh, N. Y., writes to The Witness: "In your issue of November 2nd, Dr. Phillips says of the Church of England, 'There is no more taxation than in the Church of Scotland, (Presbyterian).' The Church of Scotland was really established by law, its Lord High Commissioner is appointed by the State, and taxes are paid by the people for its support—at all events for the repair and erection of churches and parsonages, if not for the support of ministers. The Church of England, on the other hand, receives nothing from State or taxpayer."

The Rev. Samuel Eli Wells, Deacon, was advanced to the Priesthood in Christ Church, Little Rock, Ark., on All Saints' Day, by Bishop Winchester. Morning Prayer was read by the Rev. A. E. Lyman-Wheaton. Suffragan Bishop Sapphore preached the sermon and the Rev. Charles F. Collins presented the candidate for ordination. The Litany was read by the Very Rev. Dr. R. B. Templeton. Bishop Winchester officiated at the celebration of the Holy Communion, assisted by Bishop Sapphore. The Rev. Walter E. Bentley, of New York, who was present, joined in the laying-on-of-hands. Mr. Wells is in charge of Christ Church.

The late Jack Klinaus, for many years Senior Warden of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Michigan, has shown his devotion to the Church by two benefactions, one of $10,000.00, as an endowment fund for Grace Parish; the other of $5,000.00, to the Episcopal Fund of the Diocese of Western Michigan. The whole estate is left in trust with the Michigan Trust Co., which is directed to pay the income to Mrs. Klinaus during her life time and after her death to pay the income of these two bequests quarterly, forever, respectively to the Vestry, for the maintenance of the Church and its work, and to the Diocese for the support of the Episcopate.

The epidemic of influenza which has swept over the land has been a veritable scourge in New England. Death's toll has been heavy and few families have escaped some measure of sickness, anixety and sorrow. The physical causes of the disease have not been clearly traced, and we are not disposed to see in such a visitation the immediate hand of God raised in wrath and for punishment; yet the occasion may well furnish occasion for penitence and reawaken us to the unchanging realities of the spiritual life and prompt us to a closer walking with God. "He that dweleth in the secret place of the Most High shall not be afraid for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the sickness that destroyeth in the noon-day;" but divine strength and comfort and abiding peace shall be his.—The Lonsdale, R. I., Parish Chronicle.

The program for the forthcoming international temperance workers' conference to be held at Columbus, Ohio, November 19-20 inclusive, is perfected. A cablegram has been received from England to the effect that Robert A. Moore, County Counsellor, Glasgow, Scotland, and Walter Doris and William Bingham, J. P., both of London, are seeking passports with a view of coming to America as delegates to the conference. Jean Letrot, assistant secretary of a prominent French temperance organization will also probably attend as a delegate. Dr. Chapman, ex-moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, and Hon. William Jennings Bryan have accepted invitations to appear on the program. Prominent Anti-Saloon League workers from different sections of the country will take an active part on the program.

Plans are being made now for the Christmas Campaign of 1918 in the Sunday Schools of America for relief work among the starving peoples of Armenia and Syria. The results of last year's Campaign lead to the hope that larger things may be accomplished this year. A much later start was made last year, but at least 927 Schools of the Church were effectively reached, though this total would be much increased if complete records were possible. The total amount of money recorded was $24,263.65. The total sum received from the Schools of the whole continent was $803,844.21, from 27,957 Schools. This again would be largely increased if it were possible to secure accurate records of all Sunday School gifts. The goal of the 1918 Christmas Campaign in the Sunday Schools of America is $2,000,000.—The Leader.

The Rev. Benj. E. Chapman, rector of St. Andrew's Shurch, Chicago, has made 1473 calls in a house to house canvass of the neighborhood of the church and finds that there are but eleven families in the community that claim to be Church people and are not attending the services of the Church, in the local parish. Of these most of them are communicants of the Cathedral, two of the Epiphany and one of St. Luke's Church. Of these families numbering something over 1400 only about 178 have children in the home. Those attend six different denominational congregations besides St. Andrew's Church. Here is a marked change for the childless home of the community that three years ago was filled with children. Fully 75 percent of the homes are rooming houses. Since a year ago the influx of negroes into the community has been rapid. The Park Avenue Methodist Church building has been sold to a colored Methodist congregation, nearby St. Andrew's. The Eighth Presbyterian Church closed last spring and may sell soon to a colored congregation.

Mustn't Over (h) eat.

"When feeding the furnace
It's proper," said Teal,
"To give it at present
A rather light meal."
—Boston Transcript.

PERSONALS

The Rev. James N. Mackenzie, formerly of All Saints' Church, Minot, Neb., entered upon his new field of labor at Spencer, Iowa, as rector of St. Stephen's Church, the first of the month.

The Rev. Edwin Creary, who did a very creditable work during his Seninary course at Seabury in several missions in the Diocese of Minnesota, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. John's Church, Mankato, Minn., and entered upon his new duties the first of this month.

The Rev. J. M. Page, Chaplain of St. John the Divine's Chapel, University of Illinois, at Chapaign, has been commissioned a first lieutenant in the United States Army for Chaplain's duty and ordered to report at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, O. He will probably be assigned to port duty in France.

The Rev. Lester Leake Riley, rector of Christ Church, Sprinfield, Ill., entered the session of the Chaplain's Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Kentucky, beginning November 15th. His parish will be in charge of the Rev. Phil Porter of Cleveland, O., during his absence.

The Rev. Robert Kell, resigned the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, East Liverpool, O., and accepted a call to the Church of the Epiphany, Baltimore, Md., beginning November 1st.

The Rev. Walter E. Bently of Brooklyn, New York, at the request of the Vestry of Christ Church, Little Rock, Ark., has taken charge of the parish until July 1919. Mr. Bently is known throughout the English speaking world as the founder and the head of the Actors' Church Alliance.

The Reverend Verne Stover has accepted a call to the flourishing parish of St. Paul's Batesville, Ark., the parish that abhors a debt as Nature does a vacuum. Batesville is adjacent to the largest manganese deposits in the United States and the mining of this material has become very profitable since we entered the war. Investors from all sections of the country are going thither, and a roll call of the various mine directorates sounds like a roll call of the states. From these investors the parish gains some transient and perhaps some permanent members. The Rev. Verne Stover was a medical missionary to China before he entered the ministry and has done a notable work at Camp Pike under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

The Rev. Charles F. Collins, Volunteer Church Chaplain at Camp Pike, has accepted a call to St. Luke's parish, Hot Springs, Ark. Mr. Collins at the urgent request of the Camp Officers, will continue his services among the soldiers until Jan. 1st.

The Rev. Ira C. Swanman has taken charge of several mission centers in the Southeastern corner of the Diocese of Arkansas and will reside at Monticello.

The address of the Rev. Ernest H. Price has been changed from Elko to Fallon, Nevada. All communications for the Secretary of the Convocation of the Missionary District of Nevada should be sent hereafter to the latter address.

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN.

It was said that the "Keynote" of the Sewanee Summer School was to be "Wise and Strong Leadership." The message then that I would give is this: "Wise" leadership can only come through Prayer and Service, if one earnestly prays one must serve; and if one serves one must pray, the two are inseparable; and to lead one must first learn to serve.

To be a "Strong" leader, one must have knowledge and training; but knowledge of what?

First to know what we are called upon to do, and then when we stand ready to answer the call, we must be fully trained and equipped. Therefore, my earnest plea is for more Institutes and Study Classes to gain the technical knowledge and for more corporate Communions among our Auxilary Women, so that when we have the knowledge and training the proper may be given to us so that we

NEW YORK LETTER

Various Notes.

Dr. Manning conducted a quite day for the clergy of Montreal, Can., beginning October 30th. By the action of the government refusing to admit voluntary chaplains, his work at Camp Upton is terminated, as far as its official character is concerned. But all, from the commanding general down, express disappointment, and testify that his fine influence will be felt for many a day.

Trinity Church is organizing service clubs in three of its buildings. One is at the parish house at 90 Trinity Place. Two others are at the rectory and school house connected with Trinity Chapel, West 25th Street.

St. Thomas' Church, which now has about 300 stars in its flag, eight of which are golden, has opened a service club opposite the parish church on 53rd Street. The credit for this is largely due to Mrs. Ruby Elliot, social service secretary to Dr. Stires, who was on duty all Summer.

Dr. Reiland, rector of St. George's Stuyvesant Square, who was with Evacuation Hospital, No. 4, from Chateau Thierry to Soissons and Rheims, is in considerable demand as a public speaker connected with the larger war movements. He drew great congregations recently at his own church, to hear him describe the war conditions and hopes at the front. Gifted with a fine voice, he is broadly sympathetic with many encouraging things in social and religious amelioration. It was no small undertaking to keep up a great parish, dependent for so many years on the striking personality of Dr. Ranisford, but there are many who think that Dr. Karl Reiland is by no means behind even his distinguished predecessor.

One of the great churches in New York is Zion and St. Timothy, between 8th and 9th Avenues, on 58th and 57th Streets. For years the rector has been the Rev. Henry Lubeck, D. D., one of the least aggressive and yet most energetic of the city clergy. He has resigned recently, presumably because of ill health, and it is announced that he is to be in California for a time. Who is to succeed him is not yet revealed. Whoever may take up the work will find a hard problem in view of the constant tendency of the neighborhood to become the home of mere lodgers and roomers. Nevertheless no work is more important if it can be supported.

A Lutheran Celebration.

The war has undoubtedly cast a damper over all celebrations of the Reformation, but the Lutherans faithful to their origin, gathered at Carnegie Hall recently in great numbers to mark the 401st anniversary of Martin Luther's initial movement. It would be a pity to let prejudices against modern Germans make the world ignore the great man whom John Lord so well described as "The Monk who shook the world." Differ as we may, as to the final outcome of the shaking, there is not much doubt of the fact that the religious world needed considerable shaking just then. We of the Anglican Church can admire the shakers and rejoice in the measure of the shaking we got ourselves, while remaining thankful that we were not shaken out of the historic Church.

New Chancel Window.

In St. George's Episcopal Church, Bronx, of which the Rev. W. J. Clarke Agnew is rector, a very beautiful chancel window has been unveiled. Archdeacon Thomas Pott acted for Bishop Greer at the service. He also dedicated the church service flag, with thirty-one stars, and presented a medal to the class of Mrs. Arthur Bell for the largest attendance at Sunday school. There was special music by the combined choirs of the Sunday school and church. The window which rises in three Gothic lancets, contains heroic figures of three saints, St. George in the center panel and St. Patrick and St. Andrew on either side. St. George is clad in shining armor and carries a banner; St. Patrick is holding the emblem of the Trinity, a trefoil or shamrock, and St. Andrew, whose robes are of rich blue, has a cross. In the lower parts of the window are scenes from the lives of these saints. The window is the work of Frederick S. Lamb of the Lamb Studios, and is artistic in design and coloring.

Plays And Players.

When the Actors Church Alliance was founded by the Rev. W. E. Bently, under the auspices of Bishop Henry Codman Potter, there were many liberal churchmen, both high and broad, who felt dubious about its necessity, so far as the Episcopal Church is concerned. For whatever its faults, or its supposed one time tendency to be too fond of the three condemned "D's," Drink, Drama and Dancing, it was the Episcopal Church that had for centuries the fairest and most hospitable attitude toward the stage. It was inclined thus because its very Prayer Book made it favorably disposed toward every literary and dramatic effort in the direction of dignified public expression. Therefore, a Churchman was disposed to ask, "Why do we Episcopalians need conversion to do our duty in this department of life ? Let its bitter and unfair opponents among the Protestant sects learn to be more Christian and charitable towards the theatre, and then there will be no need of an alliance of Church and Stage." It is interesting to note now that the work of the Actors Church Alliance did spread remarkably among the hitherto hostile Protestants, and that Romanists also founded an alliance to do the same sort of work amongst its members. The general result is that one hears of many a Protestant minister going to the theatre now, and the criticisms are less violent and unreasonable. So far as Mr. Bentley's organization contributed toward the now friendly cooperative spirit, he builded better than many of us suspected he would, even if the immediate society he founded is hard to keep alive.

The clergy get occassional complimentary tickets to new productions which seem to their managers worthy of support by religious men and women. One of these recently is Freedom, a really magnificient spectacular pageant given in the beautiful Century Theatre, on Central Park West. Anyone who saw, before the war, the prevailing outdoor pageants in England, some of them representing great secular events in history, others displaying the progress of Church history will be able to appreciate the effort of "Freedom" to picture, through a series of some twenty scenes, how the struggle for freedom came to victory in England and America, and how it needs ever watchful protection and encouragment by its lovers in all lands. Beginning with the earliest Christian centuries, when our Germanic ancestors to the time of Alfred the Great had to resist the encroachments of oppressive tyranny, there were some most impressive living pictures of the contest between Henry II and Thomas a Becket, barons and bishops with King John, Puritans against Charles the First, etc., ending with a beautiful representation of the great altars in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, where now hang the flags of England and America, dedicated to what many hope is the last necessary war for the liberties of afflicted races.

Some of our Church enthusiasts might have recoiled from "Freedom's" description of Charles the First, who was so perfectly personfied as "every inch a king." 'Yes," said Freedom, "Every inch a king, but not one inch a man." Then off he walked to the scaffold, with a gracious regret that he could not condescend to parley longer with beckoning Freedom. Of course the compliers of the play admit no argument on behalf of Charles that he had a duty to stand by the freedom of the Church, and therefore is, in some sense, a martyr to the cause of historic Christianity. It is rather curious to put in contrast with this the way St. Thomas a Becket is boldly presented as a Champion of freedom. When the probable truth of history is that he was really championing ecclasiastical control of the State, and that King Henry, no matter how blundering in method, was just as nobly defending the State against scheming Pope and priest.

But aside from possible mistakes in the interpretation of history, which are, after all, open questions, those who see "Freedom" will come away with a new enthusiasm of freedom as a priceless possession bought by human sacrifice, and they will be the better equipped to keep it pure and unadulterated by statesman and Churchman.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

DIOCESAN NEWS

WESTERN MICHIGAN.

The influenza has closed the churches of Michigan for the last three weeks, but it is expected that the embargo will shortly be lifted. At Grace Church, Grand Rapids, the Church School has kept up with its lessons in the Christian Nurture Series by having the classes meet at the home of the teachers.

This parish has made a notable achievement by raising in a ten days drive, the sum of $4000 to pay off debts due up to Oct. 1, and $2,500 additional to place the Church on a safe financial basis for another year. One thousand dollars of the total was in new and increased subscriptions. The result was accomplished by calling upon the people to sacrifice some of their Liberty Bonds or War Savings Stamps. The response to this appeal was cheerful and generous. Four years ago the parish pledged $20,000.00 in five year annual payments to clear the long standing debt on the church and parish house. The church has been consecrated and the remaining debt on the property is fully provided for.

The Rev. Wm. M. Wyckoff, Rector of Grace Church, Holland, has recovered from an operation for appendicitis. He was taken from the Butterworth Hospital, Grand Rapids to Holland, 25 miles, by the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent in his automobile on the third Sunday of the influenza quarantine.

At St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, was held last month the fifth annual Church School Conference of the Southern Group of the Diocese of Western Michigan. The conference was preceeded on the night before by a meeting of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education to which exerybody interested was invited. Both meetings were of unusual usefulness. The features of chief value on the institute program were the exposition of the Christian Nurture Series by Miss Noyes of Gary, Indiana, the model class in Course III conducted by Miss Alice Hann of Grand Rapids, and the suggestions for correspondence classes by Mrs. Sargent. Arrangements are on foot by which Miss Hann will conduct classes for parents and teachers in five parishes in the southern group. The objective of the D. B. R. E. is Teacher Training, after a drive to secure candidates for the training which is the problem in this Diocese. The other participants in the program were the Rev. L. A. Peatross of Niles, the Rev. F. O. Granniss of St. Joseph, and the Rev. James Bishop, acting rector of St Luke's. That the conference is pronounced the best of the five thus far held is largely due to the admirable arrangements of the Rector pro tem and two teachers of the parish, Miss Margaret Cobb, and Miss Carolyn F. Edwards. There were representatives of eight parishes present all enthusiastic.

MARQUETTE

The fall work in the diocese has opened very promisingly with six new men filling places sometime vacant and the older clergy on the job with a new enthusiasm under the able leadership of Bishop Harris, plans are maturing looking to a practical unity in a diocese conciousness. The parishes are thinking more and more in the terms of the diocese. This was evidenced at the diocesan convention of the Woman's Auxiliary which met in St. John's Church, Negaunee (The Rev. James E. Crosbie, Rector) on Oct. 15th. The Evening before the Convention an informal reception was given Bishop and Mrs. Harris in the Guild Hall. An address of welcome was made by the rector. This was followed by music, good things to eat and speeches. The witty speech of the President, Mrs. Putman, was very much remarked upon.

The Convention opened with a celebration of Holy Communion and sermon by the Bishop. Nearly all the clergy of the diocese were in the church. The sermon was a beautiful and powerful tribute to the directing and operating power of woman's influence.

Mrs. Stevens of Detroit, the expected speaker of note ,was prevented from being present by sickness in her family. This was a matter of special regret.

The remainder of the morning session was filled by an able presentation of the Racine Summer Conference by the Rev. Wm. Reid Cross of Houghton and with the prayers for Missions.

After a feast of good things served by St. John's Guild the afternoon session opened at 1:20 when Miss Hill of Marquette discussed in fine style the aims, methods, and work of the Advent Call. From 2 to 3 p. m. was used for short addresses. The Rev. Mr. Ten Broeck of Calumet reported the missionary aspects of the Synod at Gambier. The Rev. Mr. Wilder spoke on the Junior plan; the Rev. Mr. Ernst was full of his usual humor in giving his findings to his Missionary possibilities within the diocese. The General Missionary the Rev. William Poyssor closed the case for the clergy with an eulogy on women workers in the Missions immediately under his charge.

The Auxiliary continued in session until 5 o'clock during which time fine work was done for the furtherance of the Church's Mission. The officers were elected for the coming year. President, Mrs. A. F. Putman of Manistique; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. T. E. Bissell of Munising; Mrs. Wm. R. Cross of Houghton; Mrs. Thos. Bailey, of Ontonagon; Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. W. J. Datson of Escanaba.

The convention adjourned with grateful appreciation of the gracious and delightful hospitality of the earnest people of St. John's Negaune, so ably directed by their rector, the Rev. Mr. Crosbie. The next convention wil' be held next Fall in St. Paul's Cathedral, Marquette.

The clergy present at the convention were called together by the Bishop in the rectory at 3 p. m. when a diocesian clericus was organized for the purpose of fellowship among the clergy themselves. The initial meeting bespeaks for the furture great things. The officers elected were: Hon. President, Bishop Harris; President, the Rev. Wm. Reid Cross; Vice Presidents. Revs. Carl Ziegler, J. A. Ten Broeck and Stephen Alling. Secretary, the Rev. J. E. Crosbie, Treasurer, the Rev. R. Paul Ernst.

The General Missionary the Rev. Wm. Poyssor presented to the diocese at this time a beautiful island on Fortuna Lake for a clergy Summer camp, where the clergy will erect a community house for summer sessions of the clericus and where the clergy and their families may spend their vacations.

SPRINGFIELD

The epidemic of Spanish Influenza raged all through the diocese and carried off a number of prominent communicants in various places, notable among these are Miss Dorothy Cole of Chester, Miss Warden of Cairo, and Mr. Murphy of Mound City. All the churches of the diocese have been closed for three weeks and the Bishop had to cancel a number of his appointments.

Osborne Hall for girl students at the University of Illinois has been leased to the University for use in the Student Army Training School work. A smaller house was rented and Miss Whiteley continues the work with a number of girls.

The Diocese is not yet on the Honor Roll of the dioceses paying in full the apportionment but is struggling to that end. Bishop Sherwood has just received from the Board of Missions in New York a very appreciative letter of the progress the diocese has made this year. The letter states that up to October 1st Springfield has more than doubled its offerings as compared with the same time last year and more than that it has gone beyond the highest mark the diocese ever attained in any one fiscal year. The diocese has paid on its apportionment up to November 1st, $2,785.77 and has two months to go before the books close. The Sunday School Lenten offering this year was the largest in the history of the diocese, being $643.87. The Sunday School at Granite City won the Diocesan banner this year.

Not many, if any, of the dioceses of the size of Springfield have surpassed it in giving of its clergy to the War Service of the country in this time of need. One-fifth of the working force of the clergy have either already gone or are about to go into active service of war work. The first to go was the Rev. Thomas Dyke of St. Peters, Mound City, who enlisted as a private in the Canadian Army. He served his time abroad doing active service in the ranks. He has been honorably discharged and returned to this country. The Rev. George D. Child, of St. John's, Elkhart, was the second to go. He enlisted also as a private in the Canadian Army and is over seas. The last heard from him he was in England in training and was about to go to France. He was followed by the Rev. Arthur G. Wilson, of St. Barnabas, Havana, who enlisted in the American Army last April and was sent to Peoria, Ill., thence to Columbia, S. C., finally entered the Officers' Training School at Camp Taylor, Ky., and graduated 5th in his class. He has been commissioned a second lieutenant in the 49th Field Artillery, and is now at Ft. Sill, Oklahoma, awaiting to be sent over early in December. The Rev. D. C. Beatty, of St. John's, Decatur, entered the Y. M. C. A. service and was last heard from on his way to Siberia. The. Rev. John Mitchell Page, Chaplain of the University of Illinois, has received notice of his acceptance as a Chaplain, and has reecived orders to report for duty at Chillicothe, Ohio, November 11th. The Rev. Lester Leake Riley, of Christ Church, Springfield, has been ordered to report at the Chaplain's Training School, Camp Taylor, November 15th. The Rev. Clyde E. Blakeslee has also reecived notice of his appointment as a Chaplain. The Rev. E. J. Houghton, of St. Paul's, Springfield, and the Rev. John T. Lillard, of Grace Church, Paris, are also expecting to be called.

The Diocese went "Over the Top" in the War Commission Fund drive and has given largely of her young men and women to the Army, Navy, Red Cross and other activities, many of whom have made the "supreme sacrifice."

The Bishop has appointed the Rev. J. G. Wright of Greenville, Priest in Charge of St. John's, Centralia.

The Rev. J. F. Laughton has been appointed by the Bishop Priest in Charge of Christ Church, Waverly. He will give them week day services.

The Rev. Charles A. Hayden has been appointed Priest in Charge, of St. John's, Springfield.

The Rev. Custis Fletcher of Paducah, Ky., will take St. Alban's, Metropolis, under his care.

The Rev. Clyde B. Blakeslee has been appointed Priest in Charge of St. Paul's, Pekin and St. Barnabas, Havana.

The Rev. E. J. Batty has resigned the charge of the Church of the Redeemer, Cairo and accepted the Chaplaincy of Howe School at Howe, Ind., and entered upon his duties.

On October 26th, the Bishop paid the longstanding and burdensome debt on St. John's Church, Springfield. The debt amounted to $1914.33 and the interest $55.51, in all $1969.84. This happy culmination was made possible by the generosity of Miss Elizabeth L. Bloomfield, for ten years a worker in the north end of Springfield who recently gave up her work and went east. Miss Bloomfield came to the diocese in response to an appeal of Bishop Osborne ten years ago and with her own money built a house in the suburb of Ridgley where she carried on work among women and children. This property was known as St. John's House and was deeded by her to the Bishop of Springfield with the understanding that it was to be her home for life and if she ever moved away and the Bishop decided to abandon the work of which St. John's House was the center the property should revert to her. This summer Miss Bloomfield decided to give up the work. The Bishop decided not to put a worker in her place and the Standing Committee granted consent to the sale of St. John's House. Miss Bloomfield then offered $1000.00 toward the debt of St. John's Church. The Bishop offered $100.00 if she would raise the balance of the debt among the people of Springfield. Some of the generous people of the Church in Springfield responed at once, but as it seemed impossible to raise the entire sum, Miss Bloomfield then offered to pay the balance. St. John's Church after many years of debt and struggle is now free to lift up its head and do its work. The Rev. Charles A. Hayden has been ap ointed Priest in Charge of the Mission at the request of the people and before the churches were closed by the health authorities here was a steadily growing congregation there on Sunday morning

A STRONG PLEA FOR PERSONAL SERVICE

Eyes Opened to See Something of the New Vision That is Coming to the Church.

Bishop James Wise, of Kansas, in an address given in St. Clement's Church, St. Paul, Minn., preparatory to an every member campaign, said in part:

"Minnesota, as you know, makes contributions of great value to the life of the United States. One of the things which has given your state nation-wide reputation is a contribution that has been made by a group of men under the leadership of two doctors—the Mayos. I read last night in the papers that out of that sanitarium and out of the scientific study that these men have made, a serum has been developed that makes influenza patients immune from pneumonia. I do not know of anything right now that is more valuable.

"Demands are coming in from practically every state of the Union seeking for this serum. What would you think of the Doctors Mayo if, in response to these applications that come in, they would say, 'Well, this is our discovery—this is for our particular use. We are not very interested in seeing that people who need it have it.' You know and I know what we would think of this. A spirit like that in medicine would be the cause of having the man who had that spirit dumped out of the medical society. He would forfeit the confidence and trust of every human being.

"You, in a few moments, will stand up on your feet and repeat the most beautiful words that ever fell from human lips.—'I belive in God.'

"Do you realize that you have within the scope of Christianity the only answer to the whole scope of human needs? That if this world is to go forward, if the nation is to develop its destiny, do you realize that it is only going to do this through the definite service of the men and women of the Church? I do not care who you are; I do not care what your worth is in terms of money; I do not care what your position in society may be. I say without fear of contradiction that the man who professes to be a member of the Church of the Living God and then turns around and says he does not believe in missions, does not know the meaning of Christianity at all. That is the challenge—to take these words that we claim to believe and help others to realize them. If it is important that our boys and men should be restored to strength and vigor by remedial agents such as the serum discovered in the Mayo Sanitarium, it is surely of more tremendous importance that remedies should be applied to our national and individual life.

"Before we can go forward in a Movement like this, every man and woman must be honest enough and frank enough to look himself in the face and find out where his work lies. We repeatedly take unto ourselves the wonderful benefits God gives us through His Son, Jesus Christ, and it is a matter of indifference to us whether anyone else enjoys these privileges or not.

"Missions do not mean simply Africa, Japan or China. Missions ought to mean to you and to me the individual sense of responsibility that we have for bringing all mankind into contact with the truth that alone will make life worth while for all.

"You are following with a great deal of interest the story of the tremendous undertaking that is going on across the sea, and you are thanking God today that our men are making the contribution that they are making to that great cause.

"What would you think of the regimen of men in the trenches over there in France who, when a command was given by their Colonel to go forward along a certain line of attack,—if the Captain, the Lieutenant and Sergeant and the privates should get together in conference and decide that that was not their particular job; that they were going to fight, but not in obedience to the command of their Colonel, but that they were going to carry out the problem in their own individual way. You know how far they should get—the defeat they would get instead of a victory.

"As in the nation, so in the world, often the non-commissioned officers, and even the commissioned officers, do not obey the orders that are given to them by the great Leader of the forces of righteousness—'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.'

"This is the challenge that has come down from the Lord of Hosts, and from the great Leader of the army of righteousness. Thank God, men and women and children of the kingdom are having their eyes opened to see something of the new vision that is coming to the Church. As we contemplate the great body of American medical men, we are shown a new conception and a new vision of their value and of their responsibility, and I want to tell you that they are going to challenge you and me to make good on our jobs. Our job is to reshape and rebuild for the great democracy. The only kind of democracy that is going to be worth while is the democracy that has the idea of God, and of men as the children of God. This is the purpose of organized Christianity. That is the only reason the Church of God exists. We must make good on the job.

"What is the contribution that you and I are going to make to the value of human life? What is the real reason why we have come together under the roof of this holy place of worship today? Is it that God, whose Son died for you and me that you and I might live, might teach us and enable us not only to understand the value of the meaning of life, but to take it to all men, wherever they are, in St. Paul, in Minnesota, in the United States, in Africa, in China, in Japan, and to show unto them the thing that has redeemed our life.

"Do not run away with the idea that this Every Member Canvass is simply an appeal to the men and women of the Church for money. God knows we make altogether too much of money. What the Church is asking you and me to do is to get into our lives the understanding and meaning of life and then to realize that life is something we may share—the biggest opportunity and the biggest challenge that comes to us is to contemplate the life which redeemed us upon the cross and to make our life a beautiful and glorious thing.

"All through the ages has been going on a tremendous struggle. It began on Calvary and is going on today. The forces are antagonistic one to another in the struggle for democracy.

"Where do you stand? Not theoretically—not conventionally,—but in the fighting line of God?

"Where do you mean to stand when the story of this great fight is being told to the children that are yet unborn? Where are we going to stand? Is there going to be something of a thrill, a response to your heart and mind? Are you going to be able to say, 'Oh, Lord, my God, I was there, too. I know I have fallen down many times, I know I have done the things that I should not have done. I have proved myself a slacker many times. But oh, God, I was there. I can look around and see where I came into contact with life and sweetened it and purified it by my contact, because Thou wast with me. Thou gave Thyself to me in a new understanding of the meaning of life. I fought of Thy side.

"God grant to you and me, to every woman of the Church and to every man of the Kingdom that we may have our eyes opened to realize the tremendous power that has gathered us together in this house of God, and let us set that power loose into the world in order that the world may be redeemed."

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL
OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS

(Continued from page 4)

St. Paul correctly interpreted the practice of Christ when he refused to sacrifice the faith to hysterical and emotional substitutes and insisted on the "form of sound words," and the "ministry of reconciliation," and "the pressing toward the mark' for the character of Christ.

It is this picture of Pentecost that I would have you recall, the simple earnest testimony of the faithful to the facts in Christ's life, to the grace of His sacraments and to the power of the holy Spirit, as distinguished from the doubt of the skeptical and the scorn of the frivolous.

This picture will sustain you in a skeptical and frivolous world to be unconcerned at the scorn of those without or the faithlessness of some of those within.

For here was a remnant, only, 120 whose faith and earnest service carried the gospel of Christ through the furnace of its enemies, and into the uttermost parts of the earth. This is the true valor and here is the real courage, to be faithful when others are falling away and scorning the simplicity of the faith.

CHRISTIAN AMERICANIZATION

(Continued from page 1)

al and world significance and enlists the most earnest, enthusiastic, devoted adherence and service of every follower of Christ in this country,—it challenges the Church's best EFFORTS."

Love Of God And Country Terribly Needed In America.

"Too much cannot be said of the urgency and the strategic value of quickly permeating groups of foreign-tongued people with the leavening of Christian mission. Oneness in ideals, conception of duty and love of God and country is terribly needed in America today. Certain national government agencies are urging all organizations doing any type of civic or philanthropic work among foreigners to take up Americanization efforts among them,—Americanization not meaning merely a selfish attempt to force all people into a national mold, but Americanization which means releasing certain spiritual forces and uplifting ideals of human relationships,—doing away with segregation and race consciousness,—adopting the use of the common language of the country, thus making a medium for free intercourse and exchange of thought and opinions both spoken and written. Of great significance along this line is the fact that 1,500,000 persons in the United States of draft age cannot read or write in English, 3,000,000 aliens of military age are unnaturalized and that at one army camp alone 1,600 men cannot read or write English."

WAR WORK OF THE CHURCH

Bishop Lawrence, Chairman of the Church War Commission, issued a letter under date of October 31st, calling attention, in the first place, to the united campaign for the welfare of Soldiers and Sailors which began November 11th, and urging Church people as Christian citizens and patriots to give this campaign hearty and generous support, and "such support should be unequivocal and strong." Then the Bishop calls attention, as follows, a very important matter:

"At the same time it is due to the people of our Church to be made aware of the fact that their own Church is doing a large and strong work for the spiritual as well as the physical and social welfare of the Soldiers and Sailors. This work is supplementary to that of the Y. M. C. A. and other organizations and cannot be done by them.

For instance during the past year we have, with the approval of the Commandants, put into the camps seventy picked clergymen who have done most helpful work for our men. We equip our chaplains when they are commissioned, and we supply them continually with the means to do their best work; through the St. Andrew's Brotherhood we are in friendly touch with tens of thousands of the men and boys; we are strengthening the forces of the parishes near the great camps, and in many other lines of work we are doing service which has won the grateful recognition of commandants, officers and men. Last February the War Commission asked the Church for $500,000 and the Church gave $600,000. A detailed report of its expenditure will be given to the Church in January.

The increase of the Army and Navy, the development of many new forms of work, such as the creation of great munition centers and the million dollars next year. About the first of February the great contribution for one million dollars will be taken.

The people have gladly supported the war work of their own Church this year—we want to give them every chance to do so next year."

The Rev. Dr. Washburn, executive secretary of the commission, writes: "The campaign for funds with which to finance the War Commission for another year, will take place about February first. Within a very few weeks the clergy and the people of the Church at large will receive ample information in regard to what the War Commission has been doing, and also in regard to its future needs. It is needless to say that whether peace is declared in the near future or not, the work among enlisted men will continue for a long time to come, and will be of the greatest moral and religious importance. It is with a deep consciousness of the even larger opportunity to serve the country that the War Commission will appeal again to the Church for funds."

ENDURING WORK OF A SMALL MISSION.

Invitations have been issued to former members and clergymen associated with Grace Church, New Lenox, Ill., to attend services commemorative of the fiftieth anniversary of the mission. Inspection of the Living Church Annual shows that this mission will celebrate its semi-centennial with but 19 communicants on its membership list. At the height of its prosperity it had less than forty communicants and it never reached the status of a self-supporting parish. When it was founded by a few devout Church people, among whom was Mrs. Dwight Haven, of blessed memeory, it must have been a vertiable church at the cross roads. New Lenox, although beautifully situated, having the advantage of four railroads and an electric line, has never developed into a town. Chicago on one side, and Joliet on the other, have been constantly draining the community of its ambitious young people. Yet from this center have gone forth several individuals who have done a more or less telling work for the Church at large. The Rev. Dr. Clinton Locke officiated here during his early ministry, and so did the Rt. Rev. John McKim, Bishop of Tokyo. A sister of its long time Senior Warden, the late Caleb Jones, is the wife of the Rev. L. W. Applegate, publisher of "The Witness." Miss Edith Haven, another one time communicant became the wife of the Rev. A. B. Whitcombe, and there are few ministers' wives who, passing on into Paradise, have left behind them a more beautiful record. When they were school children, sent away from their Florida home for educational advantages which could not be locally secured, Mr. Hanson A. Stowell, now Rector of Trinity Church, Pine Bluff, Ark., and his sister, Jennie, lived for a year at the Haven home, and while in New Lenox, heard for the first time the services of the Church. There they were baptized and confirmed. Mr. Stowell entered the ministry, and his sister, on her return to Florida, became a most energetic and loyal worker in the Church. She is the wife of the Rev. William C. Richardson, M. D., one of the most beloved missionaries in the jurisdiction of Southern Florida. One can go to more than one flourishing Chicago parish today, or to Joliet, and pick out among the most faithful members individuals who had their spiritual birth and their training in that little New Lenox Church. It has given to the world more than it has kept for itself; it has impoverished itself that other places might be enriched. And there must not be forgotten those noble stalwarts who have remained at home and have kept, during the manifold difficulties and discouragements of the half century, the institution alive. To them we are all indebted. By them, as well as by those who have removed, the existence of this little mission has been most abundantly justified and its struggles are being rewarded in the largest, most enduring sense.

American Churchmen have been very proud of the fact, which has in general terms been well known, that the Commander of our Expeditionary Forces in France was a member of the Church, and had been confirmed by Bishop Brent. The time of his Confirmation was never mentioned, although the impression given was that it had been since the beginning of the campaign in France.

Publication of this rather indefinite story in the Parish Leaflet of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Fla., in August, brought an enlightening letter from the Rev. Myron B. Marshall, a classmate of the Rector and a former Missionary in the Philippines, but now resident in Norfolk, Va. This is the informing paragraph:

"In looking over your paper one item of news struck me particularly—the fact that General Pershing is said to have been Confirmed by Bishop Brent in France since the American Expeditionary Forces arrived overseas. Where did you get this? If it is accurate, this is the second time he has been Confirmed. I presented General Pershing and his wife to Bishop Brent for Confirmation in Zamboanga, P. I., about 1910 or 1911. At the same service I baptized his wife and Bishop Brent baptized their baby. I haven't the record with me, but the Parish register at Zamboanga will show these facts."—Living Church.

If religious workers in our military camps were asked what one thing (aside from prayer) helped them most effectively in their work among the enlisted men, without a doubt the majority of them would answer with alacrity: "The Bishop White Prayer Book."

Too much cannot be said about the merits of this little volume. Men are feeling the need of prayer, and are appreciating the kernels which have been compiled into this handy, serviceable form of book. So many times it is a hard thing for a man to put his petitions into words Prayer surges into his heart, either a prayer of thanksgiving or a prayer of petition, but he has not learned to talk to God through the medium of prayer. In this book he finds an answer to his every need.

The secretaries of the Brotherhood of St Andrew Army and Navy Department have assisted in distributing over 17,000. Many letters of appreciation have come back from the men in the service who have been benefitted thereby One letter has just come in from an enlisted man who chanced to pick up a prayer book from the desk where the secretary kept a supply continually, a man whom the secretary had not had a chance to meet personally before his transfer. Imagine the elation in that secretary's heart when he read this:

"When I was stationed at Camp ——— this summer, I took a small prayer book from the desk in the hall, and I can never tell you how much good it has done me. I think it one of the best things that has been done for the boys. I certainly would hate to be without mine and I carry it with me at all times, and that isn't all, I often read when otherwise I would

A PATRIOTIC PAGEANT

BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE— SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Democracy Saving the World

A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.

Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.

Address THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, Hobart, Indiana.

Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year

ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.

By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.

A Pageant Has Wonderful Educational Power

If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.

THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.

Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.

Address THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, Hobart, Indiana.

The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

Confirmation Instruction

By Bishop Johnson of Colorado.

A very valuable Manual to place in the hands of candidates for Confirmation.

Send 25 cents for a sample copy.

Price, $2.00 a dozen.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, INDIANA

Private Prayers for the Faithful

By Bishop Sage of Salina.

A Manual which thousands of Church people have found helpful in their private devotions at home and in church.

Price, 10 cents. Postage 4c.

"My people find the book of prayers very helpful and I think it is in every home in my parish."—Carl W. Nau, Emporia, Kan.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, INDIANA

Parochial Mission Supplies

Use our Printed Matter.

Send for Samples.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, INDIANA

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

STATUS OF CIVILIAN CHAPLAINS

The orders of the War Department and Navy Department, which will be found below, relative to civilian chaplains, will be read with interest. Each order explains itself. The Rev. Dr. Washburn, Executive Secretary of the Church War Commission, commenting upon the orders, says: "It will be noticed in the case of the order of the War Department, that it now seems possible for certain civilian chaplains to be appointed as assistants of commissioned chaplains and to be retained in the camps in this capacity. The interpretation of both orders will undoubtedly depend in great measure upon the local commandant, and the local senior chaplain. These orders have only recently come to the attention of the Executive Committee. The War Department order takes precedence of the order of July 24th by which the privilege of civilian chaplains were withdrawn."

War Department Order.

Following the receipt of many letters, some commending but many protesting, the War Department's instructions dated July 24th 1918, refering to the services of Camp Pastors and Voluntary Chaplains, a committee representing the General War-Time Commission of the Churches met representatives of the War Department at the office of F. P. Keppel, Third Assistant Secretary, on October 3rd.

The following is a statement of conclusions resulting from that conference, which have been approved by eight of the nine gentlemen present:

Attention is called to Sections No. 4 and No. 5, War Department's general memorandum A. G. 68044, Subject "Services of Clergymen as Camp Pastors and Voluntary Chaplains" which permits the following plan for directing, hereafter, the religious work among our soldiers.

A. The importance of training our Chaplains for training overseas must be emphasized.

B. The help of clergymen to whom the churches of America have looked for inspiration and leadership, is appreciated and an arrangement is desired by which such men, barred perhaps by advanced age or personal responsibilities from entering the Army as Chaplains, may continue to help at the Training Camps.

C. The War Department desires the best efforts of all the churches Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, to influence experienced and capable men, who are eligible, to apply at once for commissions as Chaplains.

D. The names of such men as those classified by paragraph "B" may be submitted by the Churches to the Executive Committee of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, of similar committees a certified list may be furnished for the use of the War Department.

E. When each of these men have been approved by the War Department the attention of all Chaplains will be called to these certified lists and they will be permitted to invite, with the approval of the Commanding Officer such representative men to visit the Camp for the purpose of helping the Chaplains with their work among enlisted men and officers.

F. All clergymen invited to camp as guests of the Chaplain under this order shall report to the Chaplain in charge of such services and shall work in co-operation with, and under the direction of, said Chaplain.

G. The terms of service of any clergyman under this order in any camp or post shall be determined by the Chaplain in charge with the approval of the War Department.

H. The War Department looks with favor upon efforts of the various Churches, located in cities or communities adjacent to camps, to shape their services with special reference to the needs of the soldiers on leave and urge all Chaplains to call the attention of their men to such services when provided.

I. An important result, very much desired and expected under the plan proposed, will be the assurance that the visiting clergmen will keep the "folks back home" informed of conditions in the camps.

Navy Department Order.

1. The Bureau desires that all civilian clergymen who may be permitted to minister to the enlisted men of the service at various navy yards and stations be under the supervision of the regularly commissioned officer of the Chaplain Corps on duty at the Yard or Station in question. This supervision will, of course, be under the direction of the Commandant or Commanding Officer, as the case may be.

2. None such civilians are "Chaplains" and they are not authorized to employ the term. They are merely outside workers admitted to a Naval Station to assist in carrying on the greatly increased religious and social work incident to the rapid expansion of the personnel of the Navy.

CHRISTIANITY IS FREE.

By The Rev. A. E. Clattenburg.

"Christianity is Free." This, with the accompanying thought—"religion is free," is heard frequently on every side. There is no doubt about the truth of both statements if the individual concerned thinks only of self, and does not come into fellowship with the organized forces of Christianity or religion. It is absolutely false if the individual does connect himself or herself with the organized body that is publishing the Good News or the facts of the religion. Nothing is free that brings with it an obligation. The freedom of our great Country is acknowledged on every side, but citizenship in this Country brings with it an obligation, therefore all citizens are not free to do as they like, or to enjoy all the benefits of citizenship without contributing their share towards the maintenance of the Government that grants and assures such freedom. Obedience of the laws of the land, prompt payment of taxes, consideration for the rights of others, these things are obligations resting upon all citizens of this land. So we enjoy freedom most when we quickly respond to all obligations that such freedom imposes upon us.

So in Christianity or religion. The religious soul enjoys something that has cost some one a great deal. It has been only through sacrifice of self and possessions that any religion worth while has lived for a century. Those embracing that religion whole heartedly must do their part, not merely to make self happy in the enjoyment of that particular religion, but also in order that others may be reached and brought to the same happy state. The particular body with which they are associated locally needs money to pay its local expenses. The person who can contribute toward such expenses and does not sets himself or herself off as entirely uninterested in the welfare of the local organization. Some semi-religious bodies have dues, all paying alike. Failing to pay promptly means a dropping from the rolls. But most religious bodies, and all Christian Churches, depend upon voluntary contributions, each one giving "according to his or her ability." The ones who give little, if little is all they can give, have equal honor with those who give much. But those who give nothing, after associating themselves with the organization, have failed to come up to the ideals of the religious body. They belong to the great mass of unaffiliated ones who are not obligated to help the religious bodies. The sooner they make the decision to do their part, or withdraw their name from the organization, the sooner will the religious body be able to do its full part in its community.

Today an American citizen is known by his works, not by his inner secret intentions. We are finding out things about people now that will govern our attitude toward those people for many years. Unless they change, and their works agree with the change, we will be apt to keep them in the same picture they have framed for themselves. The boys who have gone to fight for the ideals of American Christianity will always hold the topmost place in our minds. They represent the crusaders who were willing to risk all for the cause in which they were engaged. Those who never return from that mission will ever be kept in loving memory by those who knew them. Those who return will be given all the honors that we can bestow upon them. And they will become our solid citizenry for the coming generation. But many could not go for reasons plain to themselves. These are being sifted by their works. Just as the religious body has always had its slackers, both men and women not zealous and eager to live up to the obligations of their membership in the different societies, so now we are realizing what such people are in the Country at large. They are found in every community as they are found in every religious organization. They are selfish beyond measure, only anxious for things of self, not willing to meet their share of the work to be done or the cost of the work when done by others.

Religion is free; Christianity is free, nothwithstanding all that has been done to make the money end of it, and the work end of it, prominent. But it is free only if you are content to keep it for yourself, to shut it up in your own bosom. The minute you begin to use it, to allow it to be a force in your own life then it ceases to be free, and will cost you all you can possibly put into it the remainder of your life. So the test is—has my religion cost me anything? If it has not then you are not doing your part in the organization of which you have become a member. If it has cost you something, consider if the cost has been equal to the things received. Freedom from the Hun is worth more than buying a few bonds, or giving a mite to help the boys. So all the benfits of pure religion, and of Christianity, are worth more than a little bit after all of self is catered to and satisfied.

THE BOY BEHIND THE AEROPLANE

Just outside of New York City is a little island so small it cannot be put on any map of any size, and be seen. An island where all peoples who come to us from foreign countries are halted by the U. S. Government and examined physically and normally before they are allowed to come into the United States.

Since the war this work has all stopped and the buildings on the island are now used for hospital purposes.

A short time before the war there was one day when three boys came from England, Norway and Sweden, stayed just long enough to be found physically perfect, and then they went straight up into the lumber camps of Washington and Minnesota for their first experience in America.

When we saw them come here we wondered what effect America was going to have on them, but we little dreamed the great contribution they were going to make, not only to us, but to the world, for they are a part now of the large army of men who are manning our great lumber camps and are known as our expert woodsmen. They are the ones who are chopping down the great trees—trees that have stood over three hundred years in order to reach their prime. Part of these will be made into aeroplanes and the rest into the great ships that will transport troops and supplies that will make it possible for America to have her share in winning the war.

God has given the trees. The sons of the old world are giving their strength and their muscle. We are asking you to share the comforts that America has given you in order that the big mill towns and the life in the camps will be what these boys need. For every thousand men in a mill town there are one hundred working in the woods. They leave at five in the morning, no matter what the weather is, as they work in sunshine and rain, and plan to cut down a tree every thirty minutes, returning at night, weary and hungry. If they come back to reading rooms, church life and social centers it is because you and I have made it possible.

Some of our ministers are living with them and their children are sharing this life. What are you doing?—Home Missions Council.

PARISH LEAFLET PUBLICATIONS

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand, ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service and for giving notices—"Lest he forget." Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM — In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS — New Families Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial, 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT CARDS—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—

A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 25 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.50. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms — Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a 100.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches), to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above cards for One Dollar.

Vestiblue Bracket — Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant With God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England — A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church—Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People—A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS.

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Four-page folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies, $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies, 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards.
   Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14). First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA.
Worthy of Universal Adoption.

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching," which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet, or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—

1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Misisonary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES:—

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson—a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:—

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts of Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
The Evening Service.
Henry XIII.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government, to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, IND.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 99. CHICAGO, ILL., AND HOBART, IND., NOVEMBER 23, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by GRACE WOODRUFF JOHNSON.

The American Red Cross warehouse in Paris, at 90 Rue de Cremin Vert, is located on the scene of a good part of the action in Victor Hugo's Novel, "Les Miserables." The author gives the street its full name, now discarded, of "Rue du Chemin Vert St. Antoine." It was up "this long and narrow street" that Jean Valjean and the child Fantine turned when pursued by the police. At the end of this street is Bicpus, where Jean Valjean took refuge in a convent. At the other end is the Place des Vosges, where Victor Hugo lived while writing "Les Miserables."

Negro Women In War Relief Work.

We read in the New York Times that negro women in New York City are active in War Relief Work. More than 500 belong to Auxiliary 319 of the Red Cross, which has its headquarters in the Armory of the old 15th Regiment, now the 369th Infantry, at Seventh Ave. and 132nd Street. Since the branch was organized last December its workers have turned out a great quantity of useful garments for soldiers.

The Woman's Aid, an auxiliary of the negro regiment, has nearly 500 members also. They are helping the members of the command by looking out for their families. They are extremely proud of a big silk American flag, presented to them recently by Colonel Roosevelt.

The Red Cross opened recently the first canteen here for negro soldiers. It occupies a building at 2388 Seventh Ave. In addition to the restaurant there are fourteen sleeping rooms, a pool and billiard room, rest-rooms, library and reception rooms. The furniture and appointments of the place are new. The negro Red Cross supplies cooks, waitresses and helpers in general. Soldiers are provided with Southern home-cooked dinner for 25 cents.

Other negro organizations helping in War Relief Work are: The Y. M. C. A. (colored), The Colored Welfare League, The Knitting Class of St. Phillip's, The Woman's Police Auxiliary of the West 135th St., Police Station is training negro women in first aid.

Several negro women are already in France helping out in War Relief Work, and many are being prepared to go.

The Commandments In Verse.

(From Isaac Watts' Divine and Moral Songs for Children).

"Thou shalt have no other gods but Me,
Before no idol bow the knee;
Take not the name of God in vain,
Nor dare the Sabbath Day profane.
Give both thy parents honor due;
Take heed that thou no murder do;
Abstain from words and deeds unclean;
Nor steal, though thou art poor and mean;
Nor make a wilful lie, nor love it;
What is thy neighbor's dare not covet."

—R. V. Elliot, in The Living Church.

To the above, George M. Brewin adds for the benefit of his kindergarten the following:

"Serve God, says the Saviour, and come first to Me,
Then love one another as I love thee.
And love Mother Church, for she
To [illegible]

Responsibility For The Plague.—God's Or Ours?

Preaching the day of the resumption of regular services after the epidemic, Dr. Van Allen, rector of the Church of the Advent, took as his text. Genesis 4:7. Acknowledging the fearful reality of the disease (as against some Christian Science utterances, attributing it wholly to fear), he urged that God was no more to be blamed for allowing the pestilence than for allowing a conflagration, started by an incendiary, to rage through modern tenements surrounded by inflammable rubbish.

That God permits the consequences of men's follies and crimes is not to say that he ordains them. And those who demand of God's goodness a constant series of miracles to avert those consequences, and lose faith because the demand is not granted, misjudge Him as truly as those who conceive Him deliberately devising pestilence and famine as disciplinary measures apart from such consequences.

All pain and sorrow and disease are associated ultimately with sin, part of the groaning and travailing of a disordered creation. But polluted water- supply, not God's will, causes a typhoid epidemic. And our great cities where thousands are slum-dwellers offer fuel for influenza to spread and rage like a flame.

Boston's greatest proportion of deaths was in the poorest quarters—where double-decked tenements, garbage filled courts, blind alleys, dark bedrooms and over crowding still are found.

And since no man liveth unto himself alone, the pestilence, nourished there, reached out every where till there were neither coffins nor graves enough for the victims. Over two hundred a day were killed.

The guilt is ours who have tolerated such foul conditions, have left greedy landlords to oppress the poor, have too long allowed corruption in city government to waste our treasure.

There is no room in a free land for slums and slum dwellers. We fight for justice. Let us do justice at home. So when sin couches at our door, covetous, careless, selfish, indifferent, we shall rule over it, as the belligerents of a just and loving God should do.—The Living Church News Bureau, Boston.

Review Of The Life of Joel Chandler Harris.

Sidney Williams gives a review of "The Life of Joel Chandler Harris," written by his daughter-in-law, Julia Collier Harris:

He was a quiet man who never realized his popularity. He regarded it just "as an accident." This biography shatters a cherished illusion. The darkey stories that made Harris famous were not first told by his own fireside. He wrote them for the Atlanta Constitution, drawing on memories of his friends in the slave quarters. A printer's devil in ante bellum days he delighted in the yarns of sable raconteurs.

Uncle Remus he once described as "a human syndicate." I might say, of three or four darkies whom I had known, I just walloped them together in one person. Old Herbert and Uncle George Terrell were Joel's favorite companions, and from a nook in their chimney corner he listened to the legends handed down from their African ancestors, the lore of animals and birds so dear to every plantation negro.

The mellow quality in Harris' writ- [illegible]s a reflection of character. [illegible]was no bitterness or cynicism

(Continued on page 7.)

THE ADVENT CALL AND PEACE

By Miss Grace Lindley.

What shall happen to the Advent Call? How does the signing of the armistice affect the effort of the women of the Church to mobilize spiritual power? The answer is not difficult. First as to the war. We were to make a pledge that we would gain spiritual power for the winning of the war, one of the first objects of prayer being for victory. When God, who always gives more than we either desire or deserve, has already given us the victory what more appropriate than to turn our Advent Call week into a week of thanksgiving? It has been said that the women of America would respond to the Advent Call because as our casualty lists grew we should find a turning to God for comfort. It would be a cause for shame if when we ceased to have these lists we did not turn to Him in gratitude and adoration. Let us make the first week in Advent a time of glorious gratitude!

Second, the purpose of the Advent Call was only partly for the war. The second and the biggest need for such a call is the preparation for the new era. If the war was really worth winning, the age to come must be different from the time before. We need to pray and work with all our power for a righteous peace, true democracy, Christian internationalism and Church unity. It has been pointed out that we are unprepared for peace and now that the time for reconstruction is upon us, should there not go to every woman in the Church a call to prepare herself for these great days in which we must take our place? If when the Advent Call was decided upon last spring, there seemed need to prepare for a new earth, the need seems far greater now that we stand at the beginning of that age. An officer at the front writes: "I have read with great interest 'An Advent Call to the Women of the Church.' I am certain it is just what ought to be done, may the idea be very successful for the problem ahead of all of us is the biggest the world has ever faced, not so much during the war as after.

One practical suggestion. There is not time to prepare new pledge cards. The simplest way is for each messenger to make the necessary changes on the cards she uses, crossing out the words "first for winning the war," and the words "until the end of the war," and writing "thanksgiving" before the words "for victory." The other subjects for prayer may stand. Probably we shall still need to pray for prisoners. We shall certainly want to pray for the women at home, for how shall we be worthy to meet those who have offered their lives for freedom or worthy the blessed memory of those who have laid down their lives? Until peace is signed we must pray for guidance for those at the peace conferences and we need to ask most earnestly for true democracy here, for a Christian world and that now at last God's will may be done on earth as it is in Heaven.

We say to each other "Peace has come." The Advent Call summons us to make possible the Advent of the Prince of Peace, when the kingdoms of this world shall have become the Kingdom of God and of His Christ.

Our elegant churches, closed a large part of the time, should be more continuously utilized. It is sinful folly to house mission work in barrack-like halls. A closed church is the easy victim of stagnation and dry-not. If our church edifices have been erected simply for our luxurious comfort, then they are not tools for the Kingdom.—The Home Missions Council.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

Methodist Women Placed on an Equality With Men.

"The newspapers report that the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada has placed women on an equality with men in all that affects their relations as lay members of the Church," says Mr. Robert H. Gardiner of Gardiner, Maine. "There was an attempt to admit them also as probationers and ordained ministers, over which there seems to have been a heated debate, with a decision finally in the negative.

"A new book of the Bishop of Oxford, which will be published by the Morehouse Publishing Company of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, entitled 'Dominant Ideas' gives the Bishop's views as to the greater amount of service in the Church which should be required of women. As I recollect it, he is even willing that they should make addresses in Church, provided it is only occasionally and that they do not speak from the chancel or the pulpit."

Work of the Red Cross is not Finished.

"Although the war is ended, let no one suppose that the work of the Red Cross is finished," says General Manager George E. Scott of the Red Cross. "Millions of American boys still are under arms; thousands of them are sick and wounded. Owing to a shortage of shipping it may take us a year or more to bring our boys home from France. But whatever the time, our protecting arms must be about them and their families over the whole period that must elapse before normal peace life can be resumed.

"Our soldiers and sailors are enlisted until the commander-in-chief tells them there is no more work for them to do. Let every Red Cross member and worker both man and woman, show our soldiers and sailors that to care for their health, wealth and happiness we are enlisted for no less period than they.

"The cessation of hostilities reveals a picture of misery such as the world has never seen before, especially in many countries which cannot help themselves. The American people will expect the Red Cross to continue to act as their agent in repairing broken spirits and broken bodies. Peace terms and peace conditions will determine how we can best minister to the vast broken areas which have been harrowed by war and for this great act of mercy the heart and spirit of the American people must continue to be mobilized through the American Red Cross.

"On behalf of the War Council, we accordingly ask each member of our splendid body of workers throughout the land, to bear in mind the solemn obligation which rests upon each one of us to carry on. We cannot abate for an instance in our efforts or our spirits. There is an abundance of work to do. Let no Red Cross worker falter.

"Our spirit must now call us to show that not the roar of cannon, nor the blood of our people alone directs our activities, but that a great people will continue to respond greatly and freely to its obligation and opportunity to serve."

It Would Be a National And World Calamity.

"President Wilson goes to Church every Sunday; General Pershing is a praying Christian Churchman; General Foch spends an hour every day praying in the nearest church. These and other leading men of national and international standing," says the Rev. F. O. Grannis of St. Paul's Church, S. Joseph, Mich., "are telling us that to close the Churches, to stop preaching the Gospel and, as Churchmen add ,to take away the blessed Sacrament of fellowship in the mystical body of Christ, would be a national and world calamity. You would not bring up your children in a Churchless community.

"Every Churchman knows that he is sworn into Christ's army by the sacramentum, or soldier's oath, to fight under Christ's banner against sin, the world and the devil, unashamed, fearless, and undiscouraged, a faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end. Respecting yourself as such a soldier, you will not, beloved, deceive your own heart by refusing to appear at review except when you 'feel like it.' A precious lesson the war is that one cannot hold up his head in self-respect and honor and be a slacker."

Church Unity Will Come With League of Nations.

The Rev. Wythe L. Kinsolving, sometime Y. M. C. A. expeditionary secretary overseas, in a recent sermon preached at St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., elaborated his views on Church unity presented in a letter to the Southern Churchman, in which he said:

The recent interchange of letters of Christian love and esteem that have passed between some of our American bishops and the Russian church (which we often term the "Greek church" because it represents a development of the Greek branch of the original Church and not a development of Western or Roman Christianity with its center at Rome), signifies a longing on the part of the bodies or parts of the body, to effect a closer relationship.

There seems to be a tendency in American Protestantism to draw its separate parts and divisions into a closer organization. Men are saying that the war is breaking down denominational barriers and welding these forces into a unity of spirit in the bond of peace.

This is a consummation devoutly to be wished, but it is not all that God's Word seems to require.

If the Church is a kingdom it is nowhere said to be a monarchy. The King, the Head, the only King and the only Head named in the Gospel or the other Scriptures of the New Testament, is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. Yet this King and Head sent at Pentecost and declared as His vicegerent upon earth the Holy Spirit whom He sent from the Father.

Now the Holy Spirit of God must be able to speak or He could not guide the affairs of the Kingdom at all. A voiceless vicegerent could not perform his function of leadership and direction of the Church.

It was generally thought that the councils of bishops, the ecumenical councils of the early centuries expressed the voice of the Holy Spirit, the will of Jesus Christ, the King and Head of His body, the Church.

A new factor is arising in the world to point the way toward the solution of our problem of getting the voice of the Holy Spirit heard and accepted by every part and every individual who are comprehended in the Kingdom of God on earth. For the moment we may consider the Kingdom and the Church to be coterminous. This is a concession to such as believe the Church to be a kingdom. The downfall of monarchies and the uprearing of republics is at hand. The overthrow of autocrats and the rule of democracy is at hand. The repre-

(Continued on page 7.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

SAINT THOMAS THE APOSTLE. December 21st.

By the Rev. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

The Collect.

Almighty and everlasting God, who, for the greater confirmation of the faith, didst suffer thy holy Apostle Thomas to be doubtful in thy Son's resurrection; Grant us so perfectly, and without all doubt, to believe in thy Son Jesus Christ, that our faith in thy sight may never be reproved. Hear us, O Lord, through the same Jesus Christ, to whom, with thee and the Holy Ghost, be all honour and glory, now and for evermore. Amen.

The Creed Is the Plain Man's Standby as Well as Standard.

"For the greater confirmation of the Faith." The man who gets into the habit of saying the creed with his mind as well as his lips, grows into a realization of the power in that creed which the recitation of no other form of words can possibly give him. "Faith" has several meanings subjective and objective: evidently "the faith" here used refers to those facts about God which we have grown to call the creed. The creed is the plain man's standby as well as standard. When plain men cease saying the creed, or, to use a better figure, cease living the creed, then democracies may well tremble, and begin to set their houses in order. Back of all our service of man must lie a clear-cut idea of God, or the services will degenerate rather than uplift. So when the clouds gather, and things "get thick", stop a moment or two, and thoughtfully say your creed; for back of every helpful deed there lies the power of a living creed. If the creed is inarticulate, you will find that the service being rendered has little real and permanent refreshment in itself. The cup of cold water gains a sacramental power only when it is given "in My name." If our faith is weak, it generally is weak because we have stopped living the faith in our every-day life. God "suffers" such folk to continue, because when a real man wakes up to the importance of the faith, you will find him the most intelligent, persevering, true-hearted, whole hearted, human being imaginable. And, with God, as long as there is life, there is hope for the man who walks in mental or spiritual darkness.

This collect is put by the Church four days before the collect for Christmas, because, for the thoughful man, the radiance of the resurrection fact must illuminate an earthly life which has the kind of beginning that God's Son had, if that beginning is to have any real vitalizing power in the believer's mind and heart. It would be stimulating for every man and woman engaged in Social Service to re-read Wilberforce on the Incarnation at the beginning of every Advent: though written in a style unlike the nervous style of our day, it has a message that still throbs, and produces a form of devotion which touches human service with divine power.

Men May Grow to Think of God Only in Terms of a Schoolmaster.

"Grant that our faith in Thy sight may never be reproved." It is quite possible that men grow to think of God only in terms of a schoolmaster: such an idea will produce a school-boy attitude toward all the problems of life, and we will be looking for a pass-mark brand of divine approval. The faith that will not need reproof is a faith which ties up service to theology, or if you prefer, evidences a service which has been produced and sustained by religious thinking. A thoughtful life is always sure to be a religious life, a life of faith. The only faith which God could disapprove is a faith which has never produced a crease in the grey matter of a human being. Let us bear in mind that there is always a great gulf fixed between credulity and faith. Credulity is the term we apply to the processes which show there is no thinking behind their performance. A credulous person repeats a creed in much the same manner that a parrot might repeat the form of sound words. To both the credulous person and the parrot, these words are sound and only sound—they are not springs of action or supports of trust. God reproves the credulity of man, not his faith.

Herein is a strange thing: that many people will say the creed in a thoughtless manner, as a matter of form, rather than as an opportunity for expressing confidence and hope. Let us not fall into that error, but let us say our creed thoughtfully, and dwell on its phrases long enough to feel the tingle of life as each article in its repetition challenges our conduct for a response that shall be not only in word, but also in deed.

If you are tempted to doubt, search your motives, and then search the Scriptures, and as you read and think, the force of the simple creed will soon come home to you and you will say "Whoever said that the creed is the key to Scriptures told the truth, for it fits the lock."

The Epistle. Ephes. ii. 19.

Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

"No more strangers and foreigners but fellowcitizens." The man who lacks faith in God is apt to lack faith in man. The man who is credulous in matters heavenly, is apt to be credulous in matters mundane. People are strange and foreign to one another only when they will stray apart from each other; when they are suspicious of each other's motives, ignorant of each other's history, willing to believe rumors about the other fellow, rather than to believe in him, distrustful instead of trustful. You can company with people, and yet not believe in them. That happened to St. Thomas. Misunderstanding the motives of our Lord, and with less vision than some of his fellows, he was more of an alien than a fellow citizen—he never did grasp the Christ's vision, while he was with Him, or if he did, he was easily discouraged, and men of vision do not grow easily discouraged. "Let us die with Him" said Thomas when he was in one of his discouraged moods, and did not see anything in the future after his Leader was gone. Discouragement is not worthy of one who is a believer in the Immortal Son of God.

The Church is Not Built on Doubters.

"Built upon the foundation of the Apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone." St. Thomas was an honest doubter we are told. But the Church is not built on doubters, but on Apostles whose doubts were dispersed. The comfort of St. Thomas' Day lies in the fact that the Church welcomes all who will come to dedicate their thought life to the service of God as well as man, and to God first. To dedicate through life to man only, carries with the dedication the danger of hell fire through the gates of efficient earthly service. Witness the Hun. To dedicate the thought life primarily to God carries with the dedication the joy of saintly service in time and eternity. Witness Jesus Christ and the household of God built on Him into a Holy temple.

"Fitly framed together." Fitted together, we shall be as parts of a body rather than as parts of a machine. St. Paul thinks of Christians as forming a temple growing from generation to generation. Church going, service and services, home worship, character building have one end—to help us fit into the temple God is building. Not to do our part, not to let the Spirit work in us and through us—to stay on the outside because we cannot see eye to eye with the next man is to hinder the work; to throw things out of plumb, to help make our times out of joint.

This feast day is a call to loyalty to Jesus Christ as the central fact in history, the central figure in our thought life, the central motive for our actions, standing first, center and last in our daily life of prayer and service.

Let us see whether we be credulous Christians or Christians whose faith can stand the shocks of doubt and anxiety and despair and come out victorious over these states of mind which keep men aliens, strangers, foreigners in the household of faith.

The Gospel. St. John xx. 24.

Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came. The other disciples therefore said unto him: We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them: Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them; then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you. Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing. And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God. Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.

"Was not with them when Jesus came." The Gospel of Jesus Christ expects us "to hang together" when the times of Christ's visitation draw near; and faith is the best of all cements when it comes to the holding of people together. When a man congregates by himself he shows he has lost his balance—it is difficult for him to see eye to eye with other men called to the same task as was he. Let us remembr that our help lies in the congregation of the saints and sinners who are waiting for the Christ to come closer; and let us see to it that we keep fellowship with the people who say the creed not as a shibboleth, or password into a club, but as a declaration of dependence whereby men achieve independence.

How Many of Us Look for the Lord?

"We have seen the Lord." How many of us look for the Lord? He reveals Himself to different people in different ways. A modern poet saw Him in a flower and a star. St. Thomas saw Him and recognized Him in a scarred but glorified humanity. The saint demanded proof, and got it, but with the satisfaction came reproof. After all, is there not a lesson here for you and me? Keep with those who are in the mind to see Jesus, but do not lay down conditions for belief in Him as did Thomas. Do not lay down conditions for belief, but go on with the daily round and the trivial task, in company with the great body of believers, and you will have your reward without reproof.

"My Lord and my God." A social Gospel, a community Church, a splendid program of reform and help will not avail much, if it avails anything, unless it results in drawing out from those who attend the community church a manifestation of personal religion. Personal relationship with Jesus Christ is an evidence of being fitly framed together into a holy temple. Have you the sense that Jesus Christ possesses you body and soul? Are you trying to create such an atmosphere in your parish that people will want to be with you when Jesus comes to say, "Peace be unto you?" Do people find you faithless or unbelieving? Are you blessed in thought and deed? Even when you can't "see," do you still "carry on?" Is it possible for someone who has very materialistic ideas about religion to see any signs of spiritual life in you which could lead him to ask you for help in finding himself by finding the Christ? Answer these questions now as you read them, and have some sort of intelligent petition for needs to ma[illegible] aroun[illegible] life s[illegible] searc[illegible] hold [illegible] that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.

Why couldn't you aim to be a sign to all men of what Jesus Christ can do with an ordinary human life? You might be a sign not written in a Bible, but you could be sure of being a sign of how Jesus made it possible for your name to be written in His Book of Life.

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH.

"After his death, we found tucked under his pillow, the Soldiers' Prayer Book which I had given him while he was at Camp Wheeler."

This is the concluding sentence to a tale of tragedy and pathos reported by Horace R. Chase, secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, working in Camp Wheeler, Ga.

Lieut. Lewis Killian, of Barnesville, Ga., had been enrolled as one of Mr. Chase's keymen while at Camp Wheeler. Later he was transferred to Camp Sherman, O., where he contracted pneumonia and died. His mother, who has given her all—three sons—to the service, turned to Mr. Chase in her time of distress, and found him not only ready to come to Barnesville and arrange for the funeral, but ready to conduct the ceremony itself, inasmuch as there was no clergyman available. One of her sons is with the American forces in Siberia, the other with the troops on the Mexican border. And they said of the third, as they placed his body to rest in the quiet mother earth:

"After his death, we found tucked under his pillow, the Soldier's Prayer Book."

Is it not a beautiful tribute to bring to the mother who had made the sacrifice of her son, and a beautiful thing to say of the son who had given the supreme sacrifice of his life? Not only had he lived closely with Christ and actively for Him, but he had set an example which will remain as a testimonial in the memories of all who knew him. None who learned of his life or of his death but will know also something of the source from which Lieut. Killian drew his spiritual comfort and sustenance. And such a death is as eloquent as any life, in proclaiming the beauty and blessing of a constant companionship with the Big Brother from Nazareth, who has promised, and promised truly:

"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

HOW THE CLERGY MAY HELP THE HARD OF HEARING.

Miss Coralie N. Kenfield is the author of a book entitled, "A Plea for Hard of Hearing in Church," recently issued from the press of the Volta Bureau, Washington, D. C., which presents many helpful suggestions to the clergy in meeting the requirements of the hard of hearing. We are indebted to Miss V. Sinclair, A. B., of the Whittaker School of Speech-Reading, Denver, Colo., for a reprint from the Volta Review of an article on the subject by Miss Bessie Lewis Whitaker, A. M. Miss Sinclair writes: "To those of us that are in large measure 'hearing with the eyes,' it is a great satisfaction and blessing to find conditions at church services favorable to our understanding the speaker. On the other hand, I need not stress what a disappointment it is to find our efforts to follow the thought of the speaker defeated by some condition that might, with a little thought given to our needs, have been obviated."

The following is taken from Miss Whitaker's article:

The minister, in order to help the hard of hearing, need not feel called upon to have the special separate service for speech-reading if he will consider in the regular service a few important features for their benefit.

The light should fall on the speaker's face, which does not mean that it should shine in his eyes, and especially it should be on his mouth. This is as necessary for the lip-reader as is the light on the book or the manuscript for the "page-reader." Just as the minister might read his notes with difficulty in half-light, so may the lip-reader in discomfort read the lips in part poor light. But why increase the difficulty and produce the uncomfortable consciousness of labor[illegible] of the subconscious following [illegible] vements through the pleasur[illegible] ollowing of the thought of dis[illegible] ?

[illegible] exaggeration of lip or tongu[illegible] movements will help the speech-reader; on the contrary, they would interfere with and, in some cases actually prohibit, any speech reading. We ask only that you speak naturally.

Undue use of gesture is a bar rather than an aid to speech-reading. The gesture that you would use in speaking to persons of normal hearing will not disturb us. Beyond this, gesture and signs are a decided hindrance in interrupting the proper focusing of mind and eye.

The position of the speaker should not be with head bent down so as to hide or obscure the mouth any more than it should be with head thrown back too far.

Clear speaking that gives the fully-hearing members of the congregation the feeling that no straining of the ear is necessary for hearing will enhance in every way the opportunity of the speech-readers to follow the thought without strain of eyes and nerves. In other words, as a rule, the clearer the sound of the words for the one who hears, the clearer also the appearance of the words to the one who must depend on seeing them. The speech-reader does not object to a very low voice. In some cases it may safely be too low for a sound to reach his ear, but if dropping the voice involves defective articulation the words will seem as confused to the speech-observer as they are to the listener. If, for instance, the last few words of sentences are indistinct, these "weak endings" will appear as obscure to the speech-reader as they sound mumbled to the listener. Indistinct utterance often means imperfect forming of the movements necessary for good speech.

The deaf person with the ear-phone will be aided by the same conditions that help the speech-reader and his batteries will last longer if his needs are considered from a speech-reading standpoint. Often he is developing, either consciously or unconsciously, that most helpful habit of using ears and eyes in co-operation.

The rented-pew plan is a great barrier to the deaf person's participation in the service unless, perchance, he is one of the pew-owners. Obviously he is at a well-nigh overwhelming disadvantage unless he may choose his own seat. There must be regard for light and for distance from the speaker. Moreover, while the speech-reader does not object to profile view, he is dependent on seeing at least a part of the mouth; naturally, there is no lip-reading when the speaker's mouth is out of sight.

Finally, persons of normal hearing will be made more comfortable through the minister's attention to the needs of the deaf. This is true not only because the sound is clearer on account of good speech, but because, if the investigators are right in their conclusions, persons of normal hearing hear more of what is said when they are in a position to see the mouth of the speaker. And this value in watching the mouth is in addition to the often-referred-to help from eyes and general expression.

Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, the president of the International Sunshine Society, who devotes much of her time to securing benevolent assistance for blind babies, spoke recently in Lewiston, Maine. The people of her audience responded that it was all very fine and beautiful, but that there were no blind babies in Lewiston; whereupon Mrs. Alden began a tour of exploration. When she came back she had in her memorandum book the names and addresses of five blind babies in the town. The Lewiston folk decided that there was something for them to do after all. The entire incident is a graphic parable of the ignorance which so often makes good people content in the midst of abounding sorrow and astounding sin. —The Continent.

Only that is speech which is better than silence.—Ivan Panin.

Four-year-old Barbara went to church with her two sisters and came home crying.

"What's is the matter, dear?" inquired the mother.

"He preached a whole s-sermon—about M-Mary and Martha," sobbed Barbara, "and—never said—a—word about me."—Lippincott's.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

OUR PRACTICAL FAMILY WAYS

An Instructive Semi-Autobiographical Story of a Child's Religious Experience

The following was written by the Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, D.D., when Rector of Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis, Minn., for the children of his Church School:

My life in the Church began before I can remember, but I am told that when I was a very little baby my parents took me to the Church and gave me into the arms of the Rector, who then baptized me with water "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," and said, "we receive this child into the congregation of Christ's Church.' Since then I have learned in the Church's Catechism that in baptism I was made a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the Kingdom of Heaven.

As I now understand it, Jesus Christ sent His ministers into the world to baptize men, women and children, in order that He might gather them into His Father's family and fit them to live in His Father's House, where He has prepared for them that love Him such good things as pass their understanding.

There are those who think that no one can be admitted into Christ's family, and so inherit His promises, unless they are old enough to understand what they are doing; that is, they think that babies should not be baptized. But Christ showed pretty plainly His mind on this matter, for on one occasion the apostles tried to keep little children from Christ because they thought these children were too young to receive any benefit from Him, but He rebuked them and told them to suffer little children to come unto Him, and to forbid them not, for of such was the Kingdom of Heaven.

If Christ's Church Is a Family it Must Have Its Share of Little Children.

Now the way He taught the disciples to bring people unto Him was by baptism, so the Church is merely doing as the Master said when her minister receives little children in His Name. Besides, if Christ's Church is a family, then it must have its share of little children, for that is the very idea of a family. When we were born into our earthly families we were not old enough to understand anything about it. Yet we were very welcome into the family, and as we grew older we were able to appreciate how much our parents loved us even before we knew enough to love them back again. So Christ said that unless we were born of water and of the spirit we could not enter into His Kingdom, which, after all, is the same thing as His family, for surely His family is large enough to be called a Kingdom.

In explaining this Christ told Nicodemus that the birth into His Kingdom was very similar to birth into a family, for He said, "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit," and St. Paul, who was His great minister, further tells us that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of Heaven. That is, to be born of flesh gives us a right to live on this earth in our flesh, but it does not give us the right to live in the Kingdom of Heaven; for in order to enter into the Kingdom of heaven we must be born again.

"To as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the Sons of God; who were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Evidently then this birth of which Christ speaks is not something which comes by our understanding, for we are saved by grace; and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God.

So I am told that at my baptism I became a child of grace,—God's grace; and that at this spiritual birth God began to give me a new life. I say began to give, because that is what birth is. When I was born of the flesh not even intelligence was given to me at first, but merely the power some day to get intelligence. As a baby I could not even walk. It was many months before I showed much of any intelligence or self-reliance. So after my baptism it was a long time before I realized what that baptism meant, and even then only as the Church helped me to realize it for the Church is like our mother, and helps us to walk in the spirit and to know the things of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Now the spark of life which a baby has is a very delicate thing, and it doesn't take very much to snuff it out; a little careless neglect or some contagious disease is often enough to destroy the life given at birth. So the babe in Christ has to be nursed very carefully by his spiritual mother in order that the life given in baptism may not be extinguished by neglect or spiritual disease, which is sin, deadly sin it is very correctly called.

For this reason my spiritual mother began very early to take good care of me and to train me in the way of life. In fact, when I was baptized, the clergyman took pains to tell my parents that I was to learn the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments, and to be trained in the things that were good for my soul's health, just as soon as I should be able to learn them.

Just as a father and mother are obliged to train their children in mind and manners, so that they may be fit for the kind of a home that their parents have made for them, so the Church told my parents that they were to fit me in those things which my soul ought to know,—the mind and manners of my father's house if you please to call it so, and I very soon discovered that I had a great deal to learn, which I will try to unfold to you as I learned them.

All Education Is in the Beginning a Matter of Imitation.

The first sign of self-consciousness that a child gives is when he begins to recognize his father and mother and to imitate the words which they use.

For all education is in the beginning a matter of imitation. It is only after much painful practice in imitation that we learn to be proficient in any art. So the conversation of a child begins in the imitation of certain sounds which come to have a meaning as the child grows into their full significance.

So before the child understands their meaning he is taught the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments, and later on he grows up into their real meaning.

Some people have a theory that children should not be taught in religious matters until they grow up and are capable of understanding them, and our American system of education is necessarily based on this theory, but it would hardly do in any science or art to expect understanding to come before practice.

The Church follows the natural method in training her children in the elements of religion in order that later on they may have a right understanding of the same. And so at a very early age I was set to learn and to repeat the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and certain parts of the service, and when my parents took me to Church I could take my part in the service because I had been taught these things.

At first there were just a few words which meant very much to me. I learned that I had a Father in Heaven and that he had a Son whose name was Jesus Christ and that His Mother was called the Virgin Mary. I soon learned that He died on the Cross and was buried in the earth, but on the third day He rose from His grave and then went up into Heaven, where He now is, and that some day He is coming again on the earth to judge us all.

I learned also that there was a Holy Ghost, although I did not really know much what this meant; I learned that there was a Holy Catholic Church, but did not yet know much about this, but I learned that Christ came to forgive our sins so that when He came to judge us He could raise us from the dead and give us life everlasting.

The thought that God was my Father and Christ was my Savior and that there is a life beyond the grave made a very strong impression upon me, for never since I was a child has God been so real to me, for I was pure in heart then and it seemed to me that God saw everything I did.

And when I had committed a sin it troubled me very much and I used to tell God about it and resolve never again to offend Him.

It was a great help to me as a child to know the Creed and although I did not then begin to see all that it meant, still it meant a great deal to me and as I grew older it came to be more and more full of meaning, but never did the thought that God was my Father and Christ my friend and that sin was very wicked ever become more real than it did to me as a little child.

A Terrible Thing to be Lost in the Wilderness.

Again, the fact that I knew the Creed so well kept me as I grew older from getting wrong ideas of God and of His way of helping us. The Creed was like a road along which my life ran smoothly and without which I would have had many trials and probably been entirely lost in the wilderness of ideas which I found later on lay on either side of the road.

As a little child it was very fortunate for me that I had this road, as it is a terrible thing to be lost in the wilderness.

At a very early age I was taught to pray to my Father in Heaven. Each night I said the Lord's Prayer, and that well known verse,

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

I also was taught to remember my father and mother and my brothers in my prayers, and to ask God's blessing upon them. And to this day there is nothing quite so beautiful as to see a little child kneeling by his bedside in prayer to God.

(We are very thankful that no one ever teaches a little child to sit in a chair and put his head into his hands and pray to God.)

This saying of my evening prayer became such a habit with me that I never would have thought of going to bed without addressing my Heavenly Father. This habit of prayer made the fatherhood of God very real to me, and I have since thought that without prayer God can never be real to His children. In the Lord's Prayer I not only learned this fatherhood but I learned to reverence God (for nothing teaches us the reverence of God like the habit of prayer), and I learned to depend upon God for my daily needs and to look to Him to keep me from sin.

Men may hold these ideas as a theory, but prayer is the putting them into practice and to my mind the best example of the power of the Christ and the value of it is to be found in the boy of fourteen or fifteen who has been brought up in the atmosphere of prayer, as contrasted with the boy of the same age who has never known God well enough to speak to Him.

Here we find the influence of Christ before the boy is stained by the world, and before his Christian life is made self-conscious by his theories of this or his prejudice against that. As the boy enters the period of youth he becomes self-conscious; he exaggerates the influence of his own particular view of God and the universe, and his vision becomes blurred by the sins of his youth, but never does he forget the prayers of his childhood that he learned at his mother's knee, and many a man has been brought back from a far country to his Father's House because something has occurred which has recalled to him the faith of his childhood,—the faith that was made real by these early prayers, the influence of which has never been wholly effaced. God help the young man who drifts out to sea without this anchor, which he can let down to prevent his total destruction.

The parents who neglect the prayers of their children have something to answer for in the day of reckoning.

"Don't Do This," And "Don't Do That."

Very early in life I learned the Ten Commandments. It seems to me too bad that the Church stopped here. Why not the Sermon on the Mount as well?

For the Ten Commandments teach us what we must not do, but Christ tells us in this sermon that which we must do.

But I suppose that anyone who trains children learns that first of all we must say Don't! "Don't do this," and "don't do that," are frequent words in training children.

So we are taught at first what we must not do; as we grow older we learn what we ought to do.

The growth from infancy to manhood is the growth from the duty of mere dependence into the joy of independent service.

So the Ten Commandments are as though he told the child not to touch the fire; but the Sermon on the Mount teaches us how out of the fire we can forge the tools of service.

And this training was very necessary.

We cannot begin too early to teach our children not to lie and not to steal and not to take in vain God's name.

But this would be poor meat on which to live for long.

What must I do to be a child of God?

I must love my Father with all my heart and mind and soul.

I must love my neighbor as a brother who has the same right as I have myself to the good things of our Father's House.

And right here I learn is the difference between the Kingdom of this world and the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. In the one I must struggle and push and climb to get as much as I can for myself, no matter how much others may need my abundance.

In the other, there is no need that my wealth shall deprive another of his share. It is like a home, where the wealth of one is the wealth of all, but love, and love only, can make this possible.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

NINTH PAPER

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 17.

On page 16 omit the words "on days other than the Lord's Day."

The change proposed here is to allow by rubrical provision for the shortening of Evening Prayer on Sunday as now provided for week-days only. In other words, to pass at once from the opening Sentences to the Lord's Prayer. If this rubric is to be changed it might be simplified by omitting also the words "at his discretion" which are superflous. It was doubtless wise in the revision of 1892 to provide for the omission of the Exhortation at Evening Prayer on Sunday, as there seemed then, as now, the necessity for provision for the shortening of the Sunday evening service to meet the wants of the people. But the question arises, How far can we go in the shortening process and not destroy the liturgical purity of our Choir Offices? Ought we to go a step beyond the liberty permitted of present rubric? Shall we not very badly mutilate our office of Evening Prayer if we provide for the ommission of the Confession and Absolution at Sunday Evening Prayer, which is the complement of the Morning service. Our office of Evening Prayer is based on the ancient office of Compline, an important part of which was the Confession and the Absolution.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 18.

Substitute for the second Absolution (Evening Prayer) page 20 after or this the following:

The Almighty and merciful God grant you Absolution and Remission of all your sins, true repentance, amendment of life and the grace and consolation of the Holy Spirit; through, etc.

The alteration proposed here is to provide an alternate form of Absolution for Evening Prayer as a substitute for the present shortened form, which, as has been shown, belongs to the Communion Office. The same proposition was made in 1883. The form, now again proposed, and adopted by the last General Convention, is taken from the Sarum use.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 19.

To substitute in the rubric on page 21 for the words "as they are appointed, or one of the Selections, as they are set forth by this Church" the following:—"according to the use of this Church."

The change proposed is an attempt to simplify the rubric.

PROPOSED CHANGE NOS. 20, 21.

The changes here proposed are not of any great importance. Simply in the rubrics before Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur to omit the words to the effect "except when they occur in the psalms for the day of the month." While these rubrics are under consideration it might be well to note that in the interest of uniformity the rubrics might be changed to either omit the word "psalm" where used or to substitute it when not used, instead of as at present in one place "or this" and in another "or this psalm."

This ends the consideration of the proposals of changes and alterations in Morning and Evening Prayer. Next week we shall begin a brief study of the Fourth Resolution of the Commission under the title—Prayers and Thanksgivings.

WHAT IS THE OBJECT OF A SUNDAY SCHOOL?

The Rev. Arthur L. Bumpus, rector of Trinity Church, Hewlett, L. I., relates his experiences in Sunday School work, expresses his opinion and offers some suggestions, in the following communication to The Witness:

"Like all my brethren, I have tried all kinds of lessons and systems, only to discover they would not work, as their composers promised, from one fundamental weakness, viz., teachers. The student of new methods can plan out a very complete syllabus of instruction and social service. But the parish clergyman and superintendent can't carry it out, because they have to depend on volunteer workers, who are too busy to take teaching seriously. If that is the case, and I speak from nearly twenty-five years of experimenting, isn't it time that we should ask ourselves: What am I doing with my school? What's the object of having one?

"I have come to this conclusion following the lead of practical workers. The Sunday School is to develop loyal Churchmen and women. These children may some day be leaders in this local Church. Why not then drill them in their future duties by something akin to a children's Church? Let us by all means have a table with a cross and a flower committee to keep it decorated and care for it. There should be a choir, although it can hardly be vested. And every child should have a duplex envelope that will teach him early how to give. That is a side of our worship hardly developed, and the Church everywhere is crippled. I feel, too, that a large part of the instruction should come from the Rector, who is the best trained teacher in the School. Let the boys and girls of High School age have duties assigned them, and they will learn to take a pride in their School. This is only a suggestion of what any Ch[illegible]

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., and Hobart, Indiana.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor

6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months;
20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

CHRISTIAN COMITY.

This great war has brought about a new thing under the sun, and that is the spectacle of the great nations of the earth, France, England, Belgium, Italy and the United States, speaking different languages, imbued with different prejudices, possessing different traditions, sinking them all into a unified solidarity under one military leader.

For three years they fought a losing battle against the compact forces of evil,—Prussian, Turk and Bulgar, to learn at last the bitter lesson, that only in unity of command could there be efficiency in action.

But this unity was a most difficult thing to attain. There were centuries of antagonism between French and English, and more recent family quarrels between England and the United States.

But faced by a common enemy who took advantage of their divided forces, these nations at last awoke to the realization that real unity must take the place of allied federation.

It was the same lesson that the thirteen colonies had to learn after the Revolution.

That poor apology for a government, the Continental Congress, was fast frittering itself away into an impotent and worthless thing, when under the leadership of Washington, the Constitutional Convention met secretly, and after months of deliberation produced the Constitution of the U. S. A.

This document was met by bitter opposition from no less patriotic men than Patrick Henry, and Thomas Jefferson, who saw in it the reconstruction of monarchial abuses and the surrender of their personal liberties.

Each state, after the revolution, was a petty sovereign power, and the more forceful of these states, Virginia, New York and Massachusetts could see no reason why they should surrender the advantages they had secured by virtue of their wealth, location and special privileges to any federal power located outside their respective commonwealths.

The ratification of the Constitution of the U. S. A. was passed in Massachusetts, Virginia and New York by margins so narrow and with qualifications so grave that the greatness of Washington alone saved the infant constitution from shipwreck before it was well on its way.

After its adoption, it was constantly threatened by repudiation, indifference and secession.

Bitter differences as to slavery, the location of the federal capital, the excise laws and on relations with England and France separated these patriots by seemingly impassable gulfs, and the infant Republic was rocked to its foundations on such questions when they came to their final issue.

Geo. Washington himself was assailed by the Jeffersonian forces as a renegade and a traitor to the principles of liberty, and his own state of Virginia refused to testify at the end of his second term to his wisdom in guiding the country's destiny.

[illegible] because God was with us, those who overemphasized the [illegible]rity [illegible]ugh [illegible] of [illegible] and those who believed in individual liberty, which created that nation in which the seemingly irreconcilable principles of each part, federalist and anti-federalist, were successfully demonstrated.

In union there is strength, but not necessarily that form of brute force which makes personal liberty impossible, rather it created a nation whose service was perfect freedom.

To read the newspapers and debates of that day and to judge from the bitter language used therein, one would fancy the nation in the hands of unprincipled bandits instead of being guided by sterling patriots.

Feeling ran high because love was strong and out of the furnace of these debates came fine gold and strong steel. How else could they be smelted?

For men thought deeply and spoke frankly and fought tenaciously for what they regarded as right, and to the timid it seemed chaos, but out of this elemental struggle came a mighty nation.

Had the federalists had it all their own way with their formalities and dependence on centralized power, the republic would have gone back to European ideals.

Had the states-rights men prevailed, we would have had a number of petty jealous states with no federal policy and no national unity.

But since both struggled we had first friction, and then heat, light and energy.

It was no lady-like game in which Adams and Jefferson and Hamilton and Marshall and Patrick Henry fought. They struck out like men, and, in the end, because they had the courage of their convictions and backed them with honest argument they formed a strong and mighty nation.

Four hundred years ago, Christian leaders so fought and struggled —Luther and Calvin and Ignatius Loyola and Erasmus and the rest fought and talked in the same way and produced the chaos of great [illegible] and to act. Until then the whole business degenerated into a matter of statecraft.

There were Roman States and Protestant States, and men, unwilling to counsel began to fight.

Bad blood was stirred and animosities were aroused that four centuries have not quieted.

Men have argued, not for the purpose of convincing or being convinced, but to hold their partisans in the various camps.

There can be no conciliation when the root of bitterness has enmeshed human hearts.

The tentacles of partisan hate have been adorned with the suckers of vested interests until the world for Christ had become the world for Roman Pontiff or Protestant Preacher, and men have grown sick of wordy argument, and religioin has degenerated into the deadly feline-purring and spitting alternately as the case may be.

These four centuries have produced broods of lady-like men who speak softly in prayer-meeting and talk spitefully in argument.

It is a petty denoument of a great movement. Better the vulgar anathemas of a Luther than the inspired platitudes of a John Smith.

It is true that there is more milk of human kindness in the air than there was then, but it is due rather to the principles of Christian democracy which has leavened the State.

But the blood of Christian leaders is anemic, the result perhaps of too much milk diet.

It is a day in which each man's God is on his side and in which few men ask or care whether they are on God's side.

The Kaiser is a product of this God-manufacturing era—Only his God is a little more horrid than the others, but no less real to the Kaiser for all that.

It is an age of petty mediocrity in religious circles, and men live in a monotonous round of gracious civility to other men's gods and languid interest in their own.

We are like the liberal government of England before the war, bowing and scraping to Irish, Welsh and proletariat; discrediting Lord Roberts, who was an apostle of truth and refusing to believe what it was not convenient to believe, although they knew that the wild beast was ravening at the door.

And England has paid the price of their servile opportunism.

What is the cure for it all?

To stop our feline purring and spitting.

To stop our self-complacency and ineffectual prejudices.

To stop our bowing and scraping to gods many and various.

To get down on our knees and consecrate ourselves to God's service rather than to our ancestors' prejudices.

To get off our knees and go out to proclaim the truth as God reveals it to us.

To lock horns like men who have not been dehorned by the expediency of dull mediocrity.

To love our enemies in spite of their obstinacies.

Not to expect them to agree with us but to demand that they treat with us in the face of our common peril.

To meet together in conference as did our Revolutionary fathers and state, boldly and without apology, what we have in our store-room that is worth while, and to demand what they have in theirs.

To oust from the control of religious institutions, the petty and the selfish.

Or if not, then what?

Why, the same penalty that God always exacts from cowardly inaction, the price of our own souls.

(Continued on page 5.)

COMINGLING OF MANY RACES.

In the following quotation from "The Churches at Work," Dr. Charles L. White, the author, describes the mixed relations into which an American enters in ordinary every day contact with people:

"On Monday morning a Roumanian ash-man cleaned his cellar and a Pole whitewashed its walls. A Hollander pruned his vines; a German plumber came to stop a leak in his bathroom and this man's helper was a Dane. He remembered that his cook was a Swede and the waitress was a Norwegian. As he left his home for his office a seamstress entered to help his wife. She was a Belgian, and the man who was painting his front fence was from Switzerland. He left his laundry with a Chinaman. Later he visited his Russian tailor, ordered groceries of a Welshman, meat of a Scotchman, and purchased his fish dinner the next day at a Frenchman's store. As he waited for an electric car an Italian vegetable man passed, while he was talking with an Irish policeman. The next day he bought some hardware from an Armenian and learned that his milkman was a Lapp, and his cobbler was a Hungarian. That evening a Phillipine bell-boy showed him to a room in a hotel and he learned that among its waiters were Slovaks, Greeks and Servi[illegible]

The next day he lunched in a Turkish restaurant, engaged a Syrian to mend his rugs and purchased two more of an Armenian. In the afternoon he met by accident a college classmate, a Bulgarian, who introduced him to a Montenegrin. That evening he learned that the Austrian consul of the city had rented the house opposite. The following Sunday he met a Cuban Protestant at church and found a Mexican, a Brazilian, a Lithuanian, a Peruvian, and a Haitian in a popular Sunday School class of one hundred men. That evening a Japanese merchant and his family attended service and the next day, as chairman of the committee that looked after the repairs of the church, he learned that the Portuguese sexton had died, and he selected a Canadian in his place. The following day the man who washed his office windows proved to be a Spaniard, and a Jew wished him a merry Christmas. Soon after this, in an early train, he counted twenty-eight passengers in the car. Four were reading German papers, twelve Jewish, six Italian, and he concluded that the only American-born man in the car besides himself was a Negro!"

I DON'T DRINK, SWEAR, NOR STEAL.

What a fine record, when a man's life proves not guilty of the use of intoxicating drink; not one who has a dirty tongue; and not a robber on a small or large scale. Many a man is free from the black moral marks of drinking, swearing and stealing as such a record is, Why stop here? The question needs to be asked, because there is a great temptation to simply dwell altogether on what we are not guilty of. A business man, however successful last year, reaches out for an even greater success. This is what we might call the increasing loud voice of ambition. No one thinks of turning a deaf ear to the call. But somehow, in the moral and religious life, men allow their ambition to go to sleep. As long as they don't drink, and swear, and steal, they rest on this record. It is good, so far as it goes. Why not reach out for a higher standard? In fact we must if we really listen to the voice of Christian teaching. Christ, in the days of His flesh, sought to make a man better and better. His Spirit has been working in the world ever since with the same aim in view. The Master's idea is not merely to keep one free from the black marks of evil. It is far more, far grander. He would enlist every man, and cause him to see that the main object in life is to go on adding and adding the qualities of righteousness. Have you enlisted as a soldier, under the leadership of character's greatest General—Jesus Christ? Don't be a character slacker. Don't be disloyal to Him who seeks to lead you into the realization of the finest and most complete record.—The Open Air Service Committee, Pittsburgh.

We shall be made truly wise if we be made content, content, too, not only with what we can understand, but content with what we do not understand, the habit of mind which theologians call, and rightly, faith in God. —Kingsley.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

Bishop Leonard, of Ohio, announces that he has deposed from the ministry of the Church, the Rev. Samuel A. Chapman, prebyter, who declared in writing his renunciation of the ministry of the Church.

During the influenza epidemic at Middletown, O., the Rev. Ewald Haun of the Church of the Ascension, served as an orderly at the City Hospital. The Middletown Journal says: "Several of the doctors told of instances of his untiring services to those stricken with pneumonia, being in constant danger himself of contracting the disease. His only thought seemed to be to render to the patie[illegible] felt the range, the Camp working seven days every week, Sunday practically the same as any other day. The only service which had been held during the past year was a service conducted by one of the Y. M. C. A. men. "Above me, guiding and directing me," says Mr. Sargent, "was one of the sweetest souls you will find, and it was a joy to work under such a man as Chaplain Frank Thompson, a priest of the Church, the Senior Chaplain in this District, sympathetic, tactful, conscientious, and you feel the reality and the sincerity of his faith, as soon as you meet him."

[redacted]

PERSONALS

On November 6, 1918, acting under the provisions of Canon 21, the Bishop of Ohio, the Rt. Rev. William Andrew Leonard, D. D., released from her vows, Deaconess Emma Klemm, she having sent her formal resignation.

The Rev. Valentine H. Kaltenbach, who has been in charge of the work at Iowa Falls, What Cheer, and Winterset, in the Diocese of Iowa, has resigned, and is taking a special course at the University of Chicago Divinity School. He may be addressed at 5548 Drexel Avenue, Chicago.

Monday, November 11, was, as everywhere in the world, a day of rejoicing in St. Joseph, Mich. At the exercises at the band-stand in Lake Front Park, the Rector of St. Paul's Church was invited by the Mayor to offer the prayer of Thanksgiving for victory.

St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, Mich., which has been without a Dean since the departure of the Very Rev. S. F. White into war service more than a year ago, has elected the Rev. Leslie F.Potter of St. Simmon's Church, Chicago, to this important post. The Rev. L. R. Vescoe curate under Dean White, has been conducting the worship and work of the large parish with great efficiency. He has been chosen by the Board of Missions as Archdeacon of the Diocese and will enter upon his new duties January 1, 1919, at the same time the new Dean takes up work at St. Mark's. Both the Diocese and the Pro-Cathedral are to be congratulated on securing these two priests for these important positions.

In view of the good turn of events overseas, the Rev. Lester Leake Riley will not enter the Chaplain's Training School, but will continue as rector of Christ Church, Springfield, Ill.

The Rev. Frederick Gunnell, who was priest in charge of Esther Memorial Church, Washington, D. C., for several months has been elected rector of the parish.

The Rev. Dr. W. T. Manning, who served for about one year as voluntary chaplain at Camp Upton, has returned to his work in Trinity parish, New York City.

OLD SWEDES' CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

On the second Sunday in December the Congregation and Sunday School of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') Church Philadelphia, purpose making obser vance of the fiftieth anniversary o the coming of their late Rector an his wife, the Rev. and Mrs. Snyde B. Simes, to take charge of the par ish. On December 12th, 1868, Mr Simes conducted his first service i the Church which he served for forty seven years of faithful and successfu ministry. As bride and groom M and Mrs. Simes came to the Rector of Old Swedes' at the same time tha he began his rectorship; and the work of the Church and Sunday Schoo was theirs jointly, until the forme was laid to rest in the yard of th Old Church, in July 1915. There Mrs Simes followed him, in February o the present year. During the long period of their mutual service they won the affection and allegiance o a multitude of friends, both in the Church and in the Community a large; and throughout the Mission field, where their personal generosity and the liberal gifts of Gloria De Sunday School, under their inspiring leadership, gave many a struggling station encouragement and support.

As a fitting observance of this anniversary year of memory, it is proposed to place a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. Simes on the Mission field, in the form of endowing a bed in the Wuchang General Hospital, China, in their name. It is hoped to raise a fund of $1250 for this purpose to be presented on December 8th, the anniversary Sunday. Already the Sunday School has raised about five hundred dolalrs towards this amount; and the congregation in general, and all friends of Mr. and Mrs. Simes throughout the Church at large, are being appealled to for the balance.

A biography of Mr. and Mrs. Simes, in relation to Gloria Dei, is being prepared and will be sent to all those who may apply for it. This, and the arrangements for the Anniversary Services are in charge of the present rector, the Rev. Percy R. Stockman, 916 Swanson St., Philadelphia, Pa., to whom contributions toward the Memorial Fund may be sent by those wishing to make them.

DIED

Wilson—In Minneapolis, Minnesota, on Wednesday, Nov. 23rd. Albert Leete (Wilson) at the age of twelve years, only child of Rev. T. J. E. and Mrs. Wilson of Hinckley, Minnesota. Funeral services were conducted on Friday, Nov. 25th by the Rev. Jas. E. Freeman of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis.

IN MEMORIAM

Clinton Harold Schantz.

The burial of Clinton Harold Schantz, a candidate for Holy Orders and student at the General Seminary at the time of his death, took place from Grace Church, Crathage, N. Y., November 4th. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Fiske, Bishop Coadjutor of Central New York, officiated at the requiem celebration of the Holy Eucharist, assisted by the Rev. F. W. Eason of Watertown, N. Y., and the Rev. J. De Lancey Scovil of Cape Vincent. Mr. Jack Frampton, a Seminary student and associate of the deceased, read the lesson in the burial office and the rector of Grace Church, the Rev. F. S. Eastman, read the committal. Bishop Fiske referred to the great loss sustained by the Church in the death of Mr. Schantz who had proved himself to be peculiarly fitted for the ministry in his year's work as Lay Reader at Copenhagen, Champion, Evans Mills and Antwerp, and since he entered the Seminary. The Bishop comforted everyone with the thought that this young man was called by his Master to a larger sphere of usefulness in Paradise. The service was attended by a number of the clergy, delegations of Church people from the fields served by Mr. Schantz, and Odd Fellows.

Three weeks prior to his death Mr. Schantz had nursed a fellow student who was also a victim of the influenza and from whom he contracted the disease. At St. Luke's Hospital he had so far recovered that he was planning to return home in a few days, but on Wednesday, October 30th, after receiving the Blessed Sacrament while in bed, he suddenly collapsed and died in a few minutes.

The remains were accompanied from the Seminary, where a requiem celebration of the Holy Eucharist had been said by Dean Fosbrooke, attended by all the faculty and students, by Mr. Frampton, to the home of the deceased parents at Naumburg, to which place they had recently moved, and from there to Carthage.

EDITORIAL

(Continued from page 4.)

We seem not to realize that religion is no longer virile but effeminate.

That red-blooded men find no sustenance in our milky ways.

A religion has spread over America that makes card playing worse than sharp practice in business; dancing worse than the remarriage of the divorced; taking a glass of whiskey worse than pharisaic egotism; going to the theatre worse than slandering your neighbor; smoking worse than backbiting; playing golf on Sunday afternoon worse than going to your office on Sunday morning (The latter violates the commandment, the former doesn't, if you will take the trouble to read it through), and all this accumulated mass of inquisitorial and petty frivolity passes for the life of Jesus Christ among men. What a miserable travesty of a manly life.

But into these hands we have committed the leadership of our religion.

Who, but petty men could ever take leadership in such a ladies' sewing society as this.

On this our youth are fed, and when they grow into young men they chuck it all, because they think that this is Christianity.

Such men as this do not want Church unity. They want pedestals and glass cases and labels.

Better to be led by those lacking piety, than those lacking in manly virility.

For the manliness and virile speech of Christ has been exchanged for the insipid platitudes and nice manners of respectability.

The Church instead of being the melting pot of all sorts and conditions of men has become a snug society, in which the well-to-do expect much and give little.

Our churches scintilate with light but lack warmth for the ill clad and energy toward "the least of these."

This is really the thing that matters most in the Brotherhood of Christ, whether we are willing to make sacrifices for the unity that He commanded and whether we are willing to reflect the red blooded sympathy for all men that he poured forth.

Neglect it if you will, but do not look for His approval when your work is done.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS

Acts II.

"And there were dwelling at Jerusalem, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. (verse 5).

Behold, are not all of these which speak, Galileans?

And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? (verse 8).

Let us study first the setting of the miracle of tongues.

Jerusalem was a city dedicated to the worship of Jehovah. To this same city came devout Jews from every nation under Heaven, from Asia, Africa, and Europe, united by a common faith and drawn to a common temple.

It was a symbol of a world united in a common family.

They had come to participate in the feast of Pentecost and to bind together in one family the chosen people.

At this time and place occurred the absorbing events of the previous ten days.

Christ had ascended, the body of Christians had become organized, the tongues of fire had descended on the little group, and here was a cosmopolitan audience, ready to hear and to see and spread the good news of these evangelists.

Nor were they slow to profit by this divinely appointed opportunity.

But the marvel was that these simple Galilean peasants had suddenly become great public speakers, not only filled with the fires of inspiration but also graced with the gift of languages.

"They all heard in their own tongues the wonderful words of God."

How artistically the contrast between Babel and Jerusalem was set!

Surely no Galilaean was capable of creating such a contrast!

At Babel the peoples of the earth were scattered by the confusion of tongues, at Pentecost they were united not only by the unity of the Spirit, but by that more subtle unity of mutual comprehension.

As man's sin had broken up the unity of the race, in the barriers of strange language, so God's grace had restored that unity in the sympathetic understanding of all races of men.

It was not only a contrast with the past, it was also a promise for the future, henceforth men should not be divided by the jealousy of national barriers but that they should be brought together in the unity of a common brotherhood.

Now the difference between the brotherhood of Pentecost and the brotherhood of mere academic persiflage lies in its reality.

We talk glibly about brotherhood as though talk were synonymous with action.

We have a great way of satisfying ourselves with talk. But here was a real point of common understanding, which swept away all prejudices and opened up a vista of possibilities.

Parthians and Medes, Libyans and Egyptians, Romans and Greeks, had a common denominator from which they could resolve the grievous fractures of human misunderstandings.

Each had heard in his own tongue the wonderful works of God.

From this common denominator the Church began its life in that there was neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female.

At one stroke this community at Jerusalem struck at the barriers which separated the human race with its hopeless divisions.

The prejudices of race, of caste, of sex were not to prevent the one true solvent of them all, the one factor today which makes one of all nations of the earth, viz.:—the Catholicity of the Christian Church. What other common possession have we than this, over all the earth today.

Apart from this unity which the sin of man has injured but not destroyed, we have fraternities of one sex, combination of this or that commercial enterprise, international diplomacy, but the great common factor that is gradually drawing the world together is the fact that it worships one God, and have as one common ideal the gospel of one Christ, and are united in one family by the agency of one Spirit.

That is the real significance of Pentecost.

Of course we have sects and they jar upon the consistency of the scheme.

But in the first place sects have begun to apologize for their existence. The term non-denomination, which which frequently is a synonym of vacuity, is a protest against the destruction of the Church's unity, although unfortunately not the remedy.

Christianity is a thing of convincing assertions, not one of vague negatives.

But sects are the human discord in the divine plan because they are a discord they cannot survive. They

(Continued on page 7.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CHICAGO LETTER

The Rev. Albert E. Selcer.

Chicago Priest Elected Dean.

The Rev. Leslie Fenton Potter, the Rector of St. Simon's Church, and one of Chicago's most popular clergymen, has been elected Dean of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Mr. Potter has accepted his election, and will take up his new work on January first, 1919

The Rev. Mr. Potter was formerly the Rector of Grace Church, Kirkwood, St. Louis, Missouri, where he carried on a successful work especially among the many students in that interesting suburb of St. Louis. While at Kirkwood he was Dean of the Southern Convocation of his Diocese, a member of the Standing Committee, and of the Missionary Board. He did much to organize and maintain the missionary work of the Diocese. He also served as Deputy to the General Convention.

Since his coming to St. Simon's Church, Sheridan Park, Mr. Potter has done quite as effective work in the city and Diocese of Chicago. He has handled the work at Sheridan Park, where the difficulties caused by the "migratory" habit of the population seem almost insurmountable. The congregations undergo a change every few months. During his Rectorship 190 persons have been baptised, 170 confirmed; 130 marriages have been solemnized; and 125 burial services conducted. The communicant list has increased from 500 to 700. In Diocesan affairs Mr. Potter has served as President of the North Shore Sunday School Institute, as a member and Vice President of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, and as Delegate to the Provincial Synod.

Mr. Potter is a graduate of the General Theological Seminary. He received the Degree of Bachelor of Arts from Washington University, St. Louis. It seems hardly necessary to state that his departure from the Diocese will be viewed with great regret by his fellow clergy and his very faithful parishioners.

Thanksgiving for Victory.

The Rt. Rev. Charles P. Anderson, D.D., requested all the clergy of the Diocese of Chicago to Observe Sunday, November 17th, as a Day of Thanksgiving for Victory. "It seems too long to wait for Thanksgiving Day before we return special thanks for the victory achieved. Let us observe next Sunday and then again Thanksgiving Day. We ought to learn the lessons the war has taught us and profit by them. The first is that things morally wrong cannot be socially and politically right. Germany has been beaten because she was in the wrong. For every wrong done there is some one responsible. There are individuals who have done wrong and so individual restitution must be made. As in the case of Belgium it is not enough that the government be restored, but individual Belgians who have been robbed must have their wrongs righted," said the Bishop in his request for the observance of Sunday as the Day of Thanksgiving.

An Interesting Incident.

The Rev. Charles Larrabee Street, M.A., who has been serving since his ordination at St. Paul's Church, Kenwood, has accepted an appointment as a Junior member of the Cathedral and City Mission Clergy Staff. He has gone into residence at the Clergy House. Mr. Street preached his first sermon as a member of the staff on Sunday morning, November 9th. It is interesting to note, that Mr. Thomas Wilde, who has served continuously for nearly a half century as a member of the Cathedral Choir, in greeting Mr. Street after the morning service said that he had been present when Canon Street, Mr. Street's grandfather, had preached his first sermon as a member of the Cathedral Staff.

DIRE NEED IN HOLY LAND

Relief work on a far greater scale than is now being administered by the American Red Cross among the civilian population of the Holy Land is immediately necessary if thousands of men, women and children are to be saved, says a cablegram, published in The New York Times, received at the Red Cross headquarters from Dr. John B. Finley, Red Cross Commissioner for Palestine.

One-third of the population of the Lebanon has died of starvation and disease due to lack of nourishment; many villages are depopulated and in ruins, and thousands of persons are in the direst need as the result of epidemics, prohibitive prices of food and inability to get work, Dr. Finley says.

Conditions in many of the hospitals are deplorable because of the shortage of physicians. More than 10,000 sick civilians have been cared for by the Red Cross in a single month.

There are 10,000 American refugees in and about Damascus, and 3,000 more in the Hauran district.

Dr. Finley says the Red Cross workers have been doing everything possible to relieve the distress, but adds that greatly increased help must come at once. His recommendations that the Red Cross send two additional hospital units to the Holy Land as soon as possible has been approved by the General Assembly, at whose request the British War Office has taken the matter up with the Red Cross.

Dr. Finley at the time of sending his message had just completed a tour of Palestine and lower Syria, passing through Nazareth, Tiberias, Tyre, Sidon, Haifa and Beirut.

"America should be the first to help in the rehabilitation of the Holy Land, which Great Britain and her allies have redeemed," he says. "The first medium of help should be the American Red Cross, which makes no distinction of race or faith. Under the trusteeship of those who recovered this sacred land, which is the cradle of three great religions, the civilized world is now given an opportunity for illustrating the development of the highest ideals for humanity."

ORDINATIONS.

St. James' chapel, Howe school, Howe, Ind., was the scene of a service of unusual solemnity and beauty when, on Thursday, Nov. 7th, the Right Rev. John Hazen White, D.D., ordained three men to the sacred order of Priests and one to the Diaconate. Priest's orders were conferred upon the Rev. Lucien Frank Sennett, the Rev. George Harrie Richardson and the Rev. Edwin E. Smith. Mr. Earl Thomas Jennings was the candidate for Deacon's orders.

The Bishop was the preacher as well as the Celebrant, and delivered an eloquent address to the ordinandi. Preaching from the text, "He was a bright and shining light," he declared the principles of sacrifice and submission to be the essentials in a happy ministry. All thought of self, the Bishop declared, must be abandoned in seeking to do the will of God. At the ordination Eucharist, the Rev. Forrest B. B. Johnston, of Marion, was deacon, and the Rev. Edgar T. Pancoast, of Hartford City, subdeacon. The Rev. R. Everett Carr, of South Bend, acted as Bishop's chaplain. The Litany was read by the Rev. Irving Todd, of Howe school.

The Rev. John Heyward McKenzie, D.D., rector of Howe school, presented Mr. Sennett and Mr. Jennings; Mr. Richardson was presented by the Rev. Edward W. Averill, of Fort Wayne; and Mr. Smith was presented by the Rev. R. Everett Carr, of South Bend.

Moir's Mass in D was splen rendered by the choir, the organ ing augmented by the Howe s orchestra. Luncheon was serve the refectory at the conclusion o service.

Assignments of the newly-ord
clergymen are as follows: Mr.
net and Mr. Jennings, instructo
Howe school; Mr. Richardson, r of Trinity church, Peru; Mr. S priest-in-charge of Trinity ch
South Bend.

BESSIE STANDING BEA

Did you ever meet a real littl
dian girl in a real Indian reservat
It is quite an experience. One
I visited an Indian school. The day the children did not speak t at all. The second day a little In girl said, "I have six big brothers three little sisters," and I rep
"What a big family." She looke me and said, "You talk too soon.
a big family; all dead." Afterw
I learned that there had been a l family. The children had all died of the smallpox, and in her slow Indian way she was going to tell me that she was afraid her mother would not want her to go to school another year.

Later, the teacher told me that the Indians think we are a very impatient impolite people. That we are always interrupting when somebody else is talking, and do not wait to get the real message.

The teacher then said, "You will have to win her back or she will never speak to you again. She has decided you are rude." The next day I met her again, and said, "Bessie, do you not want to give me your picture?" She said, "Do you want me going to school or coming to school?" I did not see any difference, but answered, "Going to school." In a few moments she brought me a picture of a big umbrella with some little feet under it, because if she was "going to school we could not see her face."

The next day, in the class room, the lesson was in arithmetic. The teacher had drawn on the board a quarter section of land. The example was like this: Put one-third of this into a house and garden, give one-third for the raising of cattle, and plant all that is left in oats, corn and wheat. It was a hard example, and they all worked a long time. Bessie's drawing was by far the best She put her house next the road because, she said, "I like to see things." She put her garden back of the house because, she said, "Don't like to walk." Her cattle were on one side of the house and garden, and the oats, corn and wheat on the other, "So," she said, "they cannot eat them." Every other child in the room put the cattle next the corn.

But Bessie made one mistake. She wrote "Oats," "Corns," "Wheats," and the teacher said, "Oh, Bessie, we do not put an 's' on corn and wheat; only on oats," and Bessie answered, "Don't you plant them just the same? Don't they come up just the same? Don't you gather them all in the fall, and if you put an 's' on one, why don't you on the other two?"

I was glad I was not an Indian teacher, and decided it was easier to help the Indian understand us by sending money to keep the teacher on the field. I do not think many of us are smart enough to teach Indians.—Home Mission Council.

A messenger boy was told to deliver a telegram to a certain Chicago minister on a Sunday morning at the hour when the preacher was in the pulpit.

The boy gained entrance to the vestry door, and he was at a loss to know how to reach the minister, who was then in the midst of his discourse. He finally succeeded in attracting the attention of one of the ushers, to whom he whispered:

"How long has dat guy been preachin?"

"About thirty years," said the usher.

"Well, I guess I'll wait. He must be nearly done," said the boy.—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

WHERE WAR ROLL CARDS PRODUCED RESULTS

No one in all the vast army of religious workers in our military camps and cantonments, has found better evidence of the value of War--Roll Cards than one of the secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the organization of laymen in the Episcopal Church which is working among the enlisted men. This man is stationed at an embarkation point, the type on a
ed
a h.
be sm
ed
ot
eder-
he nd on as.
n-
to ng in a-
an ew
by,
he,

the simplified service of confirmation was performed. As the Bishop spoke the benediction, a whistle was heard; the order to fall in was given, and our man, with a handshake and a 'God bless you' from each of us, ran to his company, and a few minutes later was on his way to that place so indefinitely known as 'Somewhere in France.'"

CLERGYMEN'S RETIRING FUND SOCIETY

The annual meeting of the Directors was held November 8th at the Church Missions House, the Bishop of Long Island in the chair. The Treasurer's report showed receipts of $33,581.06, of which $7,000 had been added to the permanent fund, and $24,262.60 divided among 293 annuitants. The Financial Secretary's report inclued a brief sketch of the relations of the Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society to the past efforts of the Church to provide for her old Clergy, and particularly on the probable effects of the establishment of the Church Pension Fund upon the future of the Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society. Its outlook for continued usefulness was shown to lie in three directions: (1) In providing as liberally as we may for all our prospective and present annuitants, so many of which latter class have been bitterly disappointed in finding that no provision has been made for them in the scheme of the Church Pension Fund under its present rules. (2) In accepting as many new members as may care to avail themselves of the privilege of an annuity beginning at sixty years of age. (3) In emphasizing that even though a clergyman be looking forward to a pension at 68 from the Church Pension Fund, it is well worth his while to secure an annunity at 60 from this Society for the eight years before that pension can become due and payable, to which annuity he will be entitled as a matter of right, with no restrictions of any kind, and will amount to not less than twice as much as the whole sum he has contributed as dues, and which for the remainder of his life will come to him over and above whatever he may be receiving from the Church Pension Fund. The report of the Financial Secretary was ordered to be printed in full in the Annual Report of the Society, shortly to be published. The capital fund now amounts to $429,214.38, its annuitants number 305, and $26,170.75 is awaiting distribution among them in amounts varying from $15.00 to $472.50, which is 25 per cent of each man's contributions to the treasury.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

For Our Parish.

Almighty and Everlasting God, by Whose Spirit the whole body of the Church is governed and Sanctified, receive our supplications for men of all circumstances in Thy Church, and, especially, for this Parish. Grant that every member, young and old, may hear Thy call to service and may not be offended at it, but may with consecrated heart offer himself and his for the gathering of Thy harvest.

Dispose each one to give as Thou hast give him that he may bear Thy Name in honor and sincerity and zeal. Fill us with gratitude for all the directions, assistance and comforts of Thy Holy Spirit and make us to hunger and thirst after righteousness that so we may seek Thine Altar and listen to Thy Word. Bless the word and ministration of Thy Priest, our Rector, and permit us not to fail in upholding his hands in all things, that Thy Holy Name may be magnified and this Parish named for an Apostle may without hindrance fulfill the commission of our Redeemer. AMEN.

For the Church School.

O Lord Jesus, who commanded Thine Apostle Saint Peter, earnestly to feed Thy lambs; guide the affairs of our Church School that the young of Thy flock may know Thee as their Shepherd. Grant that the officers and teachers may with sound wisdom and fervent zeal attend their work and parents fully abet their plans; that so the pupils may be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Faith and be lively agents for the salvation of the world as well as their own eternal happiness. Grant that in no thing that we do, or in that we leave undone, we may offend one of these little ones which believe in Thee, our Saviour and our judge. AMEN.

PAR-

Artistic and

Metal and Woodwork for ALTARS, PULP
ROOD BEAMS
BISHOP AND HYMN
MEMORIA
Designs and Est

Spauldi

Michigan Ave. and Va

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE.

(Continued from page 1.)

in him. His nature retained the buoyancy of youth while developing the tolerance of middle age. In his correspondence are many whimsically tender letters of his sons, with whom he was always on terms of true intimacy. When he had to preach, it was done with disarming tact.

"We have had so much house cleaning lately," he wrote in mild protest, "that it is too nice to live in, but we cannot help ourselves. Chloe carries out seven balesful of dust and dirt every Friday and mamma sweeps out seven balesful every Saturday. I suppose this is the way to enjoy life. But as for me, I'd prefer to live in a house that didn't have to be swept but once in fifteen years."

Famous through his dialect stories, Harris took more pride in his merit as a newspaper man. During most of his productive period he was on editorial paragraphs of the Altanta Constitution and in daily harness. His tales and sketches were ground out at night, and sometimes came hard, as he half sadly confesses in letters to Mr. Burlingame of Scribner's Magazine, Mr. Gilder of The Century and other friends of the publishing world.

He had been with the Constitution 24 years when a very generous contract offered by the McClure-Phillips Company, bidding exclusively for his services, led to his retirement from editorial work. "Just say in a kindly way," he observed to a reporter seeking an interview, "that an old family horse growing tired of stopping before the same door every day, has kicked out from the harness and proposes to keep the flies off in his own fashion."

Many letters signed "Jamsey" testify to the affection of James Whitcomb Riley, who occasionally burst into verse expressive of his love for Uncle Remus.

This biography produces a cumulative impression of Harris' humor and tenderness. The reader receives with possessive feeling lines chiselled on the boulder of Georgia granite that marks his grave. Drawn from the dedication of the Frost edition of "Uncle Remus" tales, they well from the heart of the artist who pictured "Brer Rabbit" and "Brer Fox:"—"I seem to see before me the smiling faces of thousands of children, some young and fresh and some wearing the friendly marks of age, but all children at heart—and not an unfriendly face among them. And while I am trying hard to say the right word, I seem to hear a voice lifted above the rest saying: "You have made some of us happy." And so I feel my heart fluttering and my lips trembling, and I have to bow silently and turn away."

Some Information About Coffee.

Selected from an article in the editorial columns of the Boston Herald.

"The first coffees were sent out from northern Africa, Arabia and Turkey, with the Mohammedan aroma clinging to them, and out of those exports came the first coffee-shops, founded in the seventeenth century in Constantinople and in London. Then the Dutch undertook coffee growing in Java, with the French as competitors in the West Indies.

That marked the limits of the experiment until 1760, when the Portu gese branch planted in Rio the bush which laid the foundations of a veritable coffee empire.

Favored by soil and air, by sun and sky, Brazil leads the world today in coffee production; before the war she was exporting more than three-fourths of the world's total product, shipping annually from Santos about 10,000,000 bags, each weighing 130 pounds.

The total yield of all the coffee-producing countries now amounts to between two and three billion pounds, and nearly one-half of that comes to the United States.

For Brazilian coffee we have more than once paid at the rate of $60,000,000 a year.

Along with the romance goes an element of mystery. As a dispeller of gloom, as a rightener of intellect, as a chaser of "that heavy feeling," especially fitted for what Byron called "the dreariest hour of all the twenty-four," which "turns up just after dinner has oppressed one," coffee should be in universal use the planet over. Yet along with countries which seem to drink nothing else, there are others which indulge sparingly or eschew coffee altogether.

Why should the Dutch require fifteen pounds per head per year when the British, the Canadians and the Australians can get along on a one pound allowance.

In this country we need from ten to twelve pounds per head. France is content with five. Russia, with a population of more than 100,000,000 scarcely touches coffee, yet her Scandinavian neighbors would die on an allowance that fell below thirteen pounds.

In addition, established custom, deeply rooted perseverences all count, but none of these things really explain, and they will not when the call to curtail comes to us. In coffee, as in everything else, we can effect large economies without any approach to actual deprivation. "Medium ground" or "fine ground," we spend the berry wastefully. It is not utilized to the uttermost even when the percolator comes into play. An ordinary teaspoonful will suffice for a full cup, and a half-pound package should supply the needs of the most exacting coffee-lover for a week. A few essays in this direction may save us from being taken unawares.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS.

(Continued from page 5.)

are doomed to give way to that common language which binds together the family of God. How? One cannot tell, but one can certainly believe.

The Day of Pentecost is an unanswerable objection to the principle of Sectarianism and the objection is eternal while sectarianism is temporal.

Imagine talking to Parthians and Elamites the philosophies of Calvin, or the negatives of Luther, or the experiences of Wesley!

They cannot even bind in one body their own followers, and having nothing capable of a universal acceptance.

They are fractional, disputatious, protestant.

The gospel of Christ is universal, fraternal, Catholic.

Man may not have apprehended, but because of that God has not withdrawn the pattern. There it is at Pentecost.

The religion of Christ is to bind men together into a common family, not to rend them asunder into disintegrated cults.

Sectarianism is unchristian because it adds barriers to mutual understandings and because it makes opinion and not brotherhood the basis of unity.

What would this republic become if we refused citizenship to those who differed with us in policies of administration?

Yet in every solidarity there must be a constitution, certain principles of unity, certain connections for which as Christians or Americans we live and fight.

These fundamental principles are that the unity of government lies in the perpetuity of recognized authority; not in the theory of its rights; in the common sacraments of citizenship therein by which we assume the responsibilities of that citizenship; by the common ideals for which as a Church and as a nation we exist; and for the common faith in the life of Christ to which it is our business as a Church to witness.

The unity of Pentecost is the earnest of the unity which shall come when human willfullness yields itself to the gentle influence of God's Holy Spirit.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS.

(Continued from page 1.)

sentative government of the people, for the people and by the people is winning its way upon the earth.

Can the Roman monarchy remain an autocracy, a kingdom amid the general change that is near?

Shall not the representative principle prevail in the Roman organization, and shall not the remodeled organization of the Roman branch of the Church then be accepted as a valid and integral part of the Holy Catholic Church, with which branch the rest of Christendom can confer and determine upon closer affiliation and a real organic unification?

There can be no Christian unity with Roman Christianity left out. Nor with the Russo-Greek Christianity left out. Nor with the Anglican branch of Christianity left out, including the Episcopal Church in these United States. We can certainly pray, and it is our duty to pray on scriptural grounds for the growth of the principle of consiliar expression in the Roman Communion. We can and ought to pray for the loosening of the tight bonds of monarchical control in the Roman organization.

Kaiserism, Caesarism, monarchical rule, are growing rapidly unfashionable upon God's earth. This is the center of heirarchy. "Ye shall sit upon thrones judging the twelve tribes," Christ's promise to the twelve, is fully balanced by His statement, "Let him that is chief among you become as he that doth serve." "If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet," cannot mean a formal ceremonial act. It must mean and does mean, the bishop be the true servant. Let the priest or the minister be a minister indeed, lowly, humble and self-sacrificing, like the Saviour Himself.

It is not the idea of a priest offering the sacrifice of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ as the agent and servant of the people present that is repugnant to and unpopular with our national democratic mind. It is the insidious power of the priest, the arrogance and haughtiness of medieval papal rulers that men and women detest and abominate, just as they do the same things in Kaiser Wilhelm. And for the same reason. Both are ungodly and unscriptural and contrary to the teaching of Jesus Christ. Could the whole Church on earth be organized with ministers duly ordained according to Apostolic practice, organized into Dioceses, guided each day by a true shepherd or bishop, with national conventions and an international ecumenical representative council at intervals of five years or so. I can see no reason why the Church could not be so reorganized and reunited according to the mode of organization that seems to have prevailed in the first two or three centuries.

The Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian bodies would not require much readjustment, the Baptist bodies might be allowed with full authority the practicing of immersion, even adult immersion in any case where infant baptism was not acceptable to the believer as entirely adequate. Lutheran bodies and the Christian disciples would not find such an organization distasteful, especially if lay representation in the original group conventions became an accepted principle.

As to liturgical modes of worship, the great liturgical forms of the past should be utilized, but great liberty in the use of ejaculatory, impromptu and extemporaneous prayer should be granted.

We have no more right to gag individual members of the Church today than St. Paul did in his day. But to lose the liturgical glories of the past would be as silly as to give up the Old Testament itself because we have the New. When the Holy Spirit in the whole body of the Church had free expression, the pneumatic gifts would be multiplied and the voice of the Christianized people would become more and more the voice of God. An enlightened and reunited Church would become the stabilizer of society, the bulwark against selfish nationalism and the agency by which the former kingdom of this world should become the Kingdom of our God and His Christ.

Others' blunders we measure by their fruits; our own, by our intentions.—Ivan Panin.

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL
OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING
An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.
The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.
Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.
28½tf

A PATRIOTIC PAGEANT
BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE— SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Democracy Saving the World

A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.

Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year

ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.

By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.

A Pageant Has Wonderful Educational Power

If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.

THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.

Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

Confirmation Instruction

By Bishop Johnson of Colorado.

A very valuable Manual to place in the hands of candidates for Confirmation.

Send 25 cents for a sample copy.

Price, $2.00 a dozen.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Private Prayers for the Faithful

By Bishop Sage of Salina.

A Manual which thousands of Church people have found helpful in their private devotions at home and in church.

Price, 10 cents. Postage 4c.

"My people find the book of prayers very helpful and I think it is in every home in my parish."—Carl W. Nau, Emporia, Kan.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Parochial Mission Supplies

Use our Printed Matter.

Send for Samples.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"OVER THE TOP."

By the Rev. Carroll Lund Bates.

The war has added various words and phrases to our vocabulary. The above is a phrase which will doubtless be retained in the English of the future, for it expresses succinctly the fine intensity of action essential to the carrying out of purpose and the overcoming of foes.

I happened in at a gathering the other evening in the Chapel of Hobart College, of the sons of Clergy and those intending to study for Holy Orders. I listened to a stirring talk by the Chaplain, and afterwards, at his invitation, I said a few words to the men.

I told them that, if any one of them was looking for a sufficient reason for preparing for the Holy Ministry, the reason that today seemed to me paramount to all others was that it was at once the most worthwhile and the most difficult task in the world. It is. And the happenings of today are combining to make it for the present at least not easier, but more than ever difficult.

If any young man feels in his blood the thrill of the incentive to undertake the hardest, yet at the same time the most superbly enjoyable of tasks, let him enlist now in the force of the Christian Ministry, which is, in the immediate future, to face foes as grim as Germans, enemies carnal and spiritual; and, when the "zero hour" comes, let him summon his bravery and go "over the top."

The young man now about to study for Holy Orders is to be congratulated, for never was the opportunity so glorious, never were the foes so many and so threatening as today.

The young man will "put on the whole armour of God." He will steep himself in the great, the unsurpassable ideals of Churchmanship. He will grow strong himself in the conviction that God with us once, is with us now, as from that moment when He "was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary." The young man will seek the Church's altar, and will find how 'deep calleth unto deep." He will find that the want in his soul is met and satisfied by that "true Bread which cometh down from Heaven." He will come to love the "still waters" of the Prayer Book's collects and the "green pastures" of the Prayer Book's praise.

Then he will go out, and his business will be to carry to those to whom he ministers the Church's Faith and the Church's ideals, and to win men to that same love that he has felt for the Church's worship, the Church's Sacraments and the Church's work. But then will come to his knowledge the reality of the foe.

The foe is expressed in a single phrase, the peculiar but very real inability of the souls of men to function as they ought.

Out of the eyes of commercially-minded men and of the worldly-minded women, the foe will look upon this Knight of Jesus Christ and will bid him change the strain of this message to what they can "better understand."

Therefore, the good Knight of the Church, the young man now to be ordained to the Holy Ministry, may see in this his task.

His task is, in brief, to go "over the top" with a cry of defiance and with a song!

The world needs what this Church stands for. The world was never so bent on knowing what Christianity means, and whether it means anything that has in it meat and sinew. The world was never so starved for the vitality of those ideals that are now non-existent without the incarnation. The world was never so spiritually underfed, and therefore so eagerly hungry for what does not exist if there be no sacrament.

Over the top! then, be the slogan of the Ministry of this crucial hour. Over the top, in spite of defiance. Over the top, in spite of financial handicaps, and of baffling spiritual inaptitudes.

Over the top! for men need what determined and Churchly Faith alone will bring!

He hath riches sufficient who hath enough to be charitable.—Sir Thomas Browne.

He who fails bravely has not truly failed, but is himself also a conqueror. —R. W. Gilder.

"THE HILLS; FROM WHENCE COMETH MY HELP."

On Sunday, November 10th, the rector of St. Mark's Church, Blue Rapids, Kansas, made the rounds of his parish, holding cottage services, withal the influenza ban. While he was waiting for one family to finish their (late) dinner a mutual neighbor,— big-hearted travelling man,— told him the following story; (which has never before been put into print):

Eight travelling men were smoking after-dinner cigars at a hotel, in Northeastern Kansas, some months ago. The topic, quite of course, was the War. One young salesman, keen, enthusiastic, discoursed on the splendid personality of the idolized Joffre: "Fine generalship" he cried, "the splendid soldierhood of the winner of the Battle of the Marne!" The conversation, waxed warmer, more enthusiastic.

The salesmen agreed with the speaker, all but one. He, at last, a man whose hair was touched with gray, with a quiet, serious look up his face arose. He slowly said, "Gentlemen, it was no general, no human being that won the Battle of the Marne, it was," with the gesture of an unpraised arm, "it was the Arm of the Almighty that did it all." Then his eyes flashed like the glitter of steel; "I know what I am saying, gentlemen, for I was in France just after the Battle of the Marne. What were the two opposing forces, there? On the side of France, a thin wavering line, trench-diggers, munition-carriers, half-trained soldiers, some of them armed with revolvers, and some with pick-axes and spades. And on the other side? A solid phalanx, ten-men-deep, hardened, skilled soldiers, trained for the fiercest combat during forty years. These, gentlemen, were the two opposing forces, in that decisive battle. You know how it all came out. And so do you want to tell me that it was human generalship that won the Battle of the Marne? I tell you NO; it was the Almighty that won that battle! And so, gentlemen, from that day to this, I have never for a single moment, doubted the ultimate triumph of the Allied Cause!" At my request the story-teller stayed for the family prayers. We began with that glorious tranquil Psalm, 121, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the Hills," Ever since the time when first I saw, in the home of a sainted sister of my own, a newly installed series of alegorical windows in the staircase of her home in West St. Paul, Infancy, Youth, Manhood, Age, all margined with that exquistely meaningful saying, "The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in," and ever since the heavenly June day when as I neared the station near my Wisconsin home, on the Duluth St. Paul Express, a keen business man told me of how his family began each busy day repeating that Psalm together, ever since these two unforgetible experiences, that Psalm has been to me a touch of Heaven.

After the prayers I spoke of my desire for an increased faithfulness on the part of all my people, regarding the Communion Alms; telling them of one special case that emphasized, for me the importance of such a Fund, the case of the loss by fire, at Cloquet, Minnesota, of all his possessions by our faithful Priest in that fated city. With a quick impulse the big travelling man laid in my hands a silver dollar. My next visit was at the home of a widow. The widow's mother is an aged Bohemian, a Roman Catholic who knows but a dozen words of English; but whose eyes are eloquent of spiritual joy when occasionally I break for her the Bread of Life. For her the Psalm and the Collects were translated by the daughter, the aged eyes brimming as the explanations went on. The service over, the daughter was sent from the little room where the home treasurers so plain yet so precious, were assembled to bring me money. Instantly I bade the widow tell her mother of the burned home and Church in far northern Minnesota; and I told her that the precious, hard-earned half-dollar should go to the homeless Priest; and then, like a little child, the aged woman gave full vent to her sympathetic tears. The house-to-house visitations went on to late afternoon; and were renewed in the evening. Seldom a day so rich in blessed experience. In one place two families gathered, informally by telephone, and we had a most hearty service together. My soul was light indeed that night as I went back home, by the light of the stars. But my pocket was heavy! Just think of it, seven dollars, and not a penny asked for, after all the War-Drives and the imperative demands for Diocesan Missions, in a Parish that has lost its paying-power of late, by twenty percent through death and removal! Then I said to myself, as I entered the home door, "Now why not let the readers of The Witness in on this expression of fraternal sympathy for a Priest that has given the strength, not of his spirit alone; but veritably of his body, for his people? Why not out of the abundance that God has given to so very, very many, let many go to their rectors with at least a small gift; and say, "Send this please to the Reverend Dr. Ryan, St. Paul's Church, Duluth, for the Priest at Cloquet?" (All this let me say, quite unsuggested by anybody. I never met the Rector at Cloquet. I do not even know his name. But I have sent our Sunday's free-will offering to Dr. Ryan, well assured that out of the deep sympathy of his warm Irish heart, he will see to it that this, and any other possible gifts may reach their destination. Surely a Priest who could, with his own hands cut and stow away in the basemen of his Church, (numerically impoverished, I am very sure since the days I visited there), surely, a Priest who has the fineness of spirit that will lead him to cut a Winter's supply of wood for the people he has been sent to shepherd deserves richly much in his misfortune from the people of God! P. B. Peabody

HE LOVETH BEST WHO SERVETH MOST

These recent distressing days, when the epidemic of influenza raged in our military camps, were days when the real blessing of having representatives of the Church present among the men was proven anew and with added emphasis. Hundreds died in the hospitals, and in many cases the secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was the only representative of the Church present, to hold the hand of a dying man or to receive his last message to the folks at home. These men worked untiringly, dropping every other duty and confining themselves in the majority of cases, to the base hospitals.

"I wrote forty letters this week to parents and friends of afflicted men."

"I performed sixty errands for men in the hospital, making twelve special trips to the city in doing so."

"I found distracted parents at the gates of the camps, and secured permission to carry packages to their boys in camp. For hours I did nothing but act as errand boy, getting to bed at 11 or 12 at night, frankly all in."

"Did not have my clothes off for two nights—too busy with the sick men. We were short of nurses here."

"Spent three hours getting a man a pass to go home to his brother's funeral, a flu victim."

"Personally I had contact with 210 men this week, and accomplished much effective religious work."

Cashing checks and money orders, writing and mailing letters, sending telegrams and parcels, purchasing necessaries, supplying reading and writing material, officiating at religious services, and doing everything as it came to hand to do for men confined to their beds, men sick and too often dying, those were the little duties with which the secretaries busied themselves.

Four of the St. Andrew secretaries were themselves victims of the epidemic, but all have recovered.

Out of it all, through the darkness and the despair, has come the shining blessing, as one of the men writes:

"The soldier seemed amazed because of the attitude of servant taken by the religious workers in ministering to their various wants, and the situation is creating a deep impression; the men express themselves deeply grateful and wonder how they can repay and say they do not knnow what they would have done without us in their emergency. Officers have personally thanked us for the attention we have shown their men, stating that the service is profoundly appreciated. Perhaps this has been the experience of others under like conditions. To get at the heart of the man, do some real personal service for him, not necessarily religious or spiritual. As of old, it is the kind deed that counts, the other essentials will follow in due course. It is our example that has counted most. We have stood for the Church when men needed the Church most."

PARISH LEAFLET PUBLICATIONS

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand, ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service and for giving notices—"Lest he forget." Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM — In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS — New Families Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial, 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT CARDS—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 25 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.50. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms — Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a 100.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches), to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above cards for One Dollar.

Vestiblue Bracket — Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant With God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England — A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church—Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People—A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS.

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Four-page folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies, $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies, 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards.
   Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14). First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA.
Worthy of Universal Adoption.

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching," which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet, or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—
1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Misisonary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES:—

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson —a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:—

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts of Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
The Evening Service.
Henry XIII.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government, to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, IND.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 100. CHICAGO, ILL., AND HOBART, IND., NOVEMBER 30, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

THE "FLU" EPIDEMIC AND CHURCHLESS SUNDAYS

Christians Must Take Such Action as Will Put the Church More Definitely on the Map.

In common with other cities, Bay City, Michigan, experienced a month of churchless Sundays during the epidemic of influenza. But Bay City probably handled the situation better than any other city in the country. In order to meet the religious situation so far as possible, practically all of the non-Roman communions united in paying for a half-page advertisement in the Saturday afternoon papers. The Rev. J. A. Schaad, Rector of Trinity Church, took the initiative in the matter and wrote a large part of the "ads." One of the half page "ads" written by Mr. Schaad was sent by the Secretary of the State Board of Health to the leading papers of Michigan for publication.

Coterminus with this action was another bearing directly upon the epidemic situation. The local application of the state ban affected only churches and theatres. Assuming that the "flu" germ is deadly, Mr. Schaad took the position that it was just as deadly on a dollar as on a prayer, and in order to force the issue, drafted a petition and secured the signatures of the eight pastors of Roman congregations, together with almost all of the Protestant ministers in the city. This was sent to the Governor, as well as to the local Health Board. He did not expect to secure the opening of the churches, but he felt that the preventative measures contemplated by the State Board of Health should receive a level application to all supposed-to-be danger spots in the city. After a rather spirited session with the Mayor and Board of Health, the Presbyterian minister and Mr. Schaad succeeded in securing the desired official action. The Mayor appointed a committee of fifteen citizens, including besides laymen, three Protestant ministers, two Roman priests and Mr. Schaad, and gave them full control of the Board of Health office, with full power to make such regulations as seemed necessary for preventative and relief purposes. A Churchman was the chairman of this group, which was then divided into three sections, namely: Residential investigation and Relief, Business Investigation and Control, and Public Information. As chairman of the latter, Mr. Schaad wrote daily articles of an educational nature and also the half page "ad" referred to.

"Our purpose in bringing the 'flu' situation into the church advertisement," writes Mr. Schaad, "is one which I think needs state and nation-wide consideration and action. Gradually the Church has come to be looked upon as a 'non-essential industry.' Consequently, the State felt quite at liberty, in Michigan, to allow all the churches only six hours a week last Winter during the fuel famine, while the saloons were given nine hours a day! In the present epidemic the State also felt quite free to close the churches first. I believe the time has come when Christians must take such action as will put the church more definitely on the map."

One of the advertisements for a churchless Sunday presented suggestions for a devotional hour, including hymns, Scripture readings, and an appropriate prayer, and a statement as follows:

The Position of the Churches in the Present Epidemic.

The orthodox Christian Churches of all ages, following the plain teachings and acts of Christ, have accepted disease and death as physical facts.

These Churches also accept the discovery of Science that certain diseases are communicable from one person to others, either by contagion or infection.

The local Churches therefore did not object to the recent closing order, in itself, as a means of preventing the spread of the influenza, but because it did not go far enough to furnish real protection.

The Christian Church also believes in the use of material agents to effect a cure of disease. We affirm that the use of these is entirely consistent with faith in the power of God, and prayer for His divine blessing upon all human curative measures.

Believing this, the Christian Church has always encouraged the practice of medicine, from the days of St. Luke, the physician; and has maintained hospitals almost from the time of Christ; while all the time reinforcing its scientific efforts by powerful recourse to the healing power of the Creator. Thus faith and works go hand in hand, according to the teachings of Christ.

The co-operation of divine forces with human agencies is recognized even by our greatest military leaders. For example: Lord Roberts, speaking of the perfection of England's preparation for war, said: "We have the men and the money and the munitions. What we need now is a nation upon its knees before God." When the news came of the unexpected success in the first battle of the Marne, he said to the late Lord Kitchener, "Only God Almighty could have done this," to which Kitchener replied, "Somebody must have been praying."

Surely if God may be supposed to be able to bless human effort in defeating the Hun, it is also reasonable to assume that He will add His divine power to human skill and effort to overcome the present plague.

The local Churches, therefore, appealed from the action of civil authority, because it cut off all organized spiritual forces from co-operation with human effort in staying the ravages of this epidemic, and deprived them of the opportunity to serve our community in its present distress.

There was also another reason for our appeal.

No scientist will deny that a microbe is as deadly in a commercial or social group of people as it is in a religious gathering.

And yet, the churches, with their unselfish and curative agencies, were closed for the avowed purpose of preventing the spread of the "flu," while business, which operates largely for personal profit, and which has no curative powers, was left undisturbed!

Since the Church is a corporation, doing business under the same laws of the State of Michigan as are commercial houses, this Church-closing order was a flagrant (even if unintentional) case of unfair discrimination which could have no standing in a Court of Equity.

Also, since the danger of infection

(Continued on page 7)

JUNIOR CLERGY MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The second meeting of the J. C. M. A. for the present year was held on Tuesday, November 12th, at the Church of the Holy Communion, 19th St. and 6th Ave., N. Y. C. Dr. Tinker said the Missionary Litany at 12:45. Luncheon then followed. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. William T. Manning, D.D., Rector of Trinity Parish, and for some months past a volunteer chaplain at Camp Upton. Dr. Manning's subject was "The Church and the Army Over Here." He spoke in a very hopeful way of the almost universally splendid results that had come to the youth of our country, through their life at the camps. Dr. Rainsford was present at the meeting and made some stirring remarks during the discussion period.

There was a large number of clergy present, and if this and the preceding meeting are a criterion, the J. C. M. A. will enjoy a very profitable and successful season, indeed.

The next meeting will be held (D. V.) on Tuesday, December 19th, at the Church of the Ascension. The speaker will be the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D.D., Rector of St. Thomas's Church, and his subject will be "The Church and the Army Over There."

AN APPEAL FROM ALASKA.

No Books or Newspapers, No Church, Y. M. C. A. or Place of Amusement at Ft. Siscum.

The Managing Editor of The Witness received the following letter the other day, written under date of October 19, from Corporal H. A. Forsyth, Quartermaster's Corps, United States Army, Fort Siscum, Alaska:

"I want to ask you if you would not kindly send me some religious books and tracts to read up here in this lonesome place. There is no Church, Y. M. C. A., any kind of club, or place of amusement. There is no place to go. I expected to be transferred to Siberia but the order has been changed for the present. I was baptized when a small child in the Episcopal Church, and I love that Church. My parents are both dead now. So I am really alone in the world. I hope you will please try and send me some newspapers if you can. Anything that you send me will be highly appreciated, as there are about 150 men here and we surely need reading matter up in this place. Thanking you in advance, and trusting to hear from you very soon, I am, etc."

A number of papers and books were promptly sent to the Corporal. Possibly there are others who may wish to respond to this appeal.

The Associate Diocesan Missionary continues to have interesting experiences in his visits to the Rhode Island Hospital, says The Diocesan Record. He has the highest admiration for the doctors and nurses who served so faithfully there during the epidemic, a number of them giving up their lives in the performance of their duty, as bravely as if they had been serving at the front amidst the roar of cannon. Their names should be put on a roll of honor. He himself felt protected in the brief time he spent there by the mask he wore, and he understood the sense of security soldiers have in gas masks. It was a great pleasure to him to walk through the crowded infected wards and put a chrysanthemum into the hands of the women and receive their hearty welcome. To the boys he gave a yellow dog that wagged its tail, and to the little girls a black cat that did likewise, and then the boys and girls together had a dog and cat concert, with the visitor as leader. "Bow-wow-wow" and "Meow-Meow-Meow" it would have been hard to tell which was the dominant theme.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

The Cause of the Lord Has Triumphed.

At the victory service of thanksgiving, held in Trinity Church, New York, the Rev. Dr. Wm. T. Manning, rector, took for his text, "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends." "We are here today," said Dr. Manning, "to give thanks and praise to Almighty God from the very depths of our hearts for the victory that He has given us and for the promise of a just and righteous peace in the world. It is the cause of the Lord that has triumphed.

"It is the nations that upheld His laws and that fought for freedom and right to whom the victory has come. We give thanks today for the steadfastness of all the allied nations, and especially Great Britain for the glorious part she has taken in this happy consummation.

"In this hour of supreme thanksgiving we think of the vast number in all the allied countries who made the supreme sacrifice, that liberty might live. We here and now pay our grateful tribute to those who on land and sea and in the air defended us, and we give thanksgiving to God for the victroy that their sacrifices made possible. We commend them to the goodness of God in the land where they now are and may we, for whom they gave themselves, show ourselves not unworthy of the sacrifices they made."

God Has Indeed Been Gracious.

"God has indeed been gracious" is an acknowledgement made in President Wilson's Thanksgiving Day proclamation, which his fellow countrymen, with one accord, have been giving expression to in some form or other ever since the never to be forgotten eleventh of November, and the concluding paragraphs of the proclamation express the thoughts uppermost at this time in the hearts and minds of Christian men and women: "We have cause for such rejoicing as revives and strengthens in us all the best traditions of our national history. A new day shines about us, in which our hearts take new courage and look forward with new hope to new and greater duties.

"While we render thanks for these things let us not forget to seek the divine guidance in the performance of those duties, and divine mercy and forgiveness for all errors of act or purpose, and pray that in all that we do we shall strengthen the ties of friendship and mutual respect upon which we must assist to build the new structure of peace and good will among the nations."

Why not begin now to ask God's blessing when you gather around your table at meal-time?

If an audible blessing would prove an embarrassment at first, why not at least bow your heads together before the meal begins, or teach the youngest member of your family a blessing, which will be a double blessing, because it comes from the lips of a child.

But do not let this hour go by, without the resumption in your home of that precious endowment of prayer, and the family recognition of God's Fatherhood, which makes a sweet and savory thing of the relationships of family life."

Austria's Record.

"Of all the sovereign nations in the world will anyone receive a more ignominous classification. when the final verdict is pronounced, than Austria?" asks Bishop Mann of Southern Florida, and says: "Never the producer of aught to aid the progress of the world, always the opposer of aught that would enlighten the world, backing the worst autocracies against any democracies,—that is Austria's record.

And what has come of it all? What is the appearance of Austria today? Why, that of the cat with its paws burned by the monkey's use of them to snatch the chestnuts from the fire —those chestnuts which the cat could not eat even if it got them.

Mr. Gladstone, from out his comprehensive acquaintance with history, once asked when and where Austria had ever done any good. And his question still remains unanswered."

The Influenza Epidemic a Warning to Men and Women.

"It has pleased God to permit a period of universal distress and bereavement to come upon us," says Bishop Moreland of Sacramento in a Pastoral letter to the people of his Diocese. "Without attributing to our Heavenly Father the origin of this fatal epidemic, for which our own ignorance or neglect is doubtless responsible, yet we may be sure He is working out by means of it a solemn and beneficent purpose.

Day by day as the death roll is printed we pass our eye in apprehension down the long columns, not knowing what familiar names may meet us there. Some of you have been taken to the brink of the grave, and been drawn slowly back again.

In the suffering and death which are everywhere you should read the summons of the Most High. Immersed in the affairs of life, unmindful of spiritual and eternal things the awful hand of God has been laid upon us. Men go about their daily work as if they had no master but themselves. Men cling to the frail thing called life, not realizing that its preciousness is due solely to the fact that it comes from God and returns to God. These bitter weeks, dripping with the tears of the bereaved, black with the storm clouds of pain, and torn with the upheaval of earthly plans, are meant to remind us of the transitory nature of this life, and to bring us in penitence to the feet of God. The funerals passing through our streets are to remind us of our end. The fevers and maladies which have ravaged us are to bid us prepare for the eternal future.

Take the warning home to yourselves. If you have been spared it is that you may become better men and women. Alas for you if some years hence, when death approaches again, it finds you no more fit than before; if having gone once midway into the

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

THE NATIVITY OF OUR LORD
December 25th

By the Rev. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

If in any church the Holy Communion is twice celebrated on Christ-Day, the following Collect, Epistle and Gospel may be used at the first Communion.

The Collect.

O God, who maketh us glad with the yearly remembrance of the birth of thine only Son Jesus Christ; Grant that as we joyfully receive Him for our Redeemer, so we may with sure confidence behold Him when he shall come to be our Judge, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

"Maketh us glad with the yearly remembrance of the birth of . . . . . Jesus." What do we mean by "glad"? Does "glad" include a backward or a forward look; or is only the present involved? As the individual parishioners and parishes define their ideas of "glad" so will it be possible for you to get a rather clear idea of their missionary activities. The Church should certainly make people "glad": and it would seem that the gladness might be both material and spiritual in its expression. The Gospel message is for the whole man: the whole man includes body, soul and spirit. So the yearly remembrance should make its threefold appeal. To what part of you does the Christmas message make its chief appeal and why? And do you say that Christmas makes you glad because of what it brings you, or are you glad because of what it stirs you to do or be?

Is There Anyone Who Can Tire of the Old, Old Story?

"The yearly remembrance" is an appeal to our souls through the eye and the ear. Of course, the chief remembrance is "the remembrance He hath commanded us to make" wherein we plead before the Father the Innocence of the Holy One so that because of Him, our lives may be made white by the Blood of the Lamb, as that Blood touches our souls and bodies. Then again another remembrance is the "Christmas Crib," where the manger scene is reproduced in miniature, to speak its message to all who have eyes to see, and minds to ponder and reflect. Again and in a very lovely way, the yearly remembrance comes from the artist's palette, and from the poet's carols, and from the quaint customs of an earlier time in lands across the sea: And is there anyone who can tire of the old, old story as the evangelists have preserved it for us in the Book that never grows old? Think what it would mean to have to live in a place where the yearly remembrance of the birth of Jesus was unnoticed, uncared for, unheeded! Such a place would nearly deserve the title, God-forsaken, only we know God never leaves nor forsakes us—we do the forsaking. It should be the custom of every church to make its Christmas offering a thank offering for the Christ Child to be spent in taking the Christmas Gospel into desolate places.

"Redeemer and Judge." Here does Mother Church continue to press on our minds the necessity of holding truth and counter truth in balance. All of Advent is given over to this double celebration of the coming of Jesus. And our attitude is one where "joyfulness" has the steadying force of "sure confidence" to keep the emotions within bounds.

Are You Preparing to Celebrate the First Advent of Jesus?

Redeemer! How much time do we give to a consideration of Jesus as our Redeemer, as the blessed Redeemer of our family, as the Redeemer of our parish, our clergy, our city, our state, our country, our world? What ideas have we wrapped up in that word? Is our Redeemer a legal figure paying off some debt, or a militant figure striking off harsh shackles, or a friend assuming our obligations? Think of the Babe of Bethlehem sitting enthroned in His Mother's arms, sanctifying human life, family life, neighborhood life, Redeeming humanity by the inspiration of a spirit working changes through natural channels. If we are to receive that Babe of Bethlehem joyfully, it means that the place must be made ready for His advent. Are you preparing to celebrate the first Advent of Jesus by a proper remembrance?

"Judge." How can any of us think of Jesus as Judge with "sure confidence"? Only by keeping His precepts, warnings, decisions in our memories, and living up to them in the knowledge that we have to give a final account of our daily thoughts, words and deeds, to One Who really knows, really appreciates, really understands.

Let us see that we do what we can to nourish and sustain the Church whose Christmas Gospel holds us on the stable platform of a belief in the twofold advent of Jesus, and keeps our heads tied to our hearts in that belief and resultant practice.

The Epistle. Titus ii. 11.

The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; Who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise Thee.

The Grace That Is of the Earth Earthy and the Peace That Bringeth Salvation.

"The grace that bringeth salvation." There is a grace that is of the earth earthy; it has no touch of healing in its manifestation. It is a very lovely thing, but its appeal is only a surface appeal. One sees it in the rhythm of a little child at play, in a band of unsophisticated maids as they wander with springing steps across a grassy sward: of flowers on their stems. It is the grace of physical beauty and perfection, and it is the exhalation or fragrance of the life and religion of nature. But the grace that bringeth wholesomeness, holiness, salvation, that grace may be found only in the hidden life of a character formed under their revelation. That grace which marks the life and influence of Jesus Christ is an educative power. It draws out the best that is in us, in our natural selves, and gives it the Christmas touch of a new birth. As we absorb that grace, godliness,—godlikeness,—becomes a possibility for us to attain; desires are turned from the merely temporal to the eternal; so that what we think and do and say naturally and gracefully, and not at all laboredly, flower out into ways which St. Paul calls "soberly, righteously and godly."

The Marks of an Interesting Congregation.

The parish whose members live so-be[illegible] "zealous" in the sense of being bigoted and fanatical. But "peculiar" in the sense of being "different" in an attractive and fascinating way: and "zealous" in the sense of always being ready to do just a little bit more for the good of the Cause. Once you get into touch with that congregation, you will find that religion is a very real thing to its members, and that every day finds some of that congregation in the courts of the Lord's House, waiting and watching for a chance to "speak" and "exhort," and, by unconscious example, to "rebuke" as occasion offers.

Profession and Practice Go Hand in Hand.

"Let no man despise thee." No man can despise thee, if thy profession and practice go hand in hand. Profession and practice will go hand in hand in both individuals and congregations, when people not only "live" but "look for" Jesus Christ. Put the Christ Child out of your preaching of the Gospel and you will have a petrified, mechanical congregation: Put the Infant Christ out of every-day life, and place Christ crucified only at the end of the days, and you will have a speculative, theoretical body of adherents, thoroughly and absolutely "queer," but not "peculiar" in St. Paul's sense of the word: And in both these cases the man who looks on will be as if he "despised thee," for he will let you severely alone.

The Christmas story comes to us year by year with an ever-growing freshness and beauty if we are in the habit of living over that story in our daily lives. Official Judaism despised Jesus; commercial Judaism had no place for Him at the time He chose to visit the earth: but He let no man despise Him; and because of this, men everywhere are respectful if not adoring when they are brought into His presence. What kind of a reception are you and your parish planning to give the Prince of Peace this coming Christmas Eve?

The Gospel. St. Luke ii. 1.

And it came to pass in those days that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus that all the world should be taxed. (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria). And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judaea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:) to be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child. And so it was that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock at night. And lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

The World Is Always Crazy Over Statistics.

"All the world should be taxed." The world is always "crazy" over statistics; herein lies both danger and profit. Anyone who keeps his eye on "totals" is going to be tempted to do his work in any kind of way, so long as he gets results: his services will be "eye service," done to please men, rather than God, Who alone can grant the increase. On the other side, let us remember that "totals" show us whether or not we are tending to our end of the business; whether we are able to give a good account of our stewardship. But never let the passion for numbers warp your view of life and work, or cause you to lower your standards: if you do, you can never really enjoy Christmas.

"Because he was of the house and lineage of David," Joseph went to Bethlehem to be enrolled in the Jewish census. David was a great man, Joseph was an unknown man, but Jesus Christ is the greatest figure of history: Christmas teaches us that God plants His gifts in the soil which is best prepared for those gifts, no matter where He finds the soil: this truth is what gives cheer to the heart of a man who is determined to do his best, be his ancestors who they may: Hence, because of this determination, both Joseph the carpenter, and Jesus the Saviour, were well favored of God. Christmas tells a stirring Gospel to those repressed peoples of the earth who are looking for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. In proportion as they catch and hold onto the heart of the Christmas message, so will their efforts to attain these desirable states be effective and fruitful.

The Holy Child Found Where Hunger Was Meant to Be Satisfied.

"Laid Him in a Manger": The Holy Child was found where hunger was meant to be satisfied: true, it was the hunger of beasts, but the message of the Christ Child in the manger for us Church folk, is pretty plain. The food of man and beast is a gift from God, but it is a gift which is temporal and passing, and ministers only to that part of our life which is of the earth earthy: But into the normal feeding places of humanity which hold the husks of the earth's sustenance, God places eternal life, God puts the answer to all the hidden, unexpressed longings of humanity. He did not put the answers to human longings into the far heavens among the shining stars: He did not place the salvation of the world into a glorious shining throng of angels: He did not shrine His gift in the seats of the mighty, nor in the Halls of the Sanhedrim, but in a manger—in the feeding place of beasts God hid His best—His best beloved: And the message of that placing of the Only Begotten Son of God should not be lost on us, who are apt to despise the obvious, and feel that God would not expect us to find the world's best in the beasts' feeding place.

"Good tidings which shall be to all people." The Star led the Wise Men to Jesus: the angels told the shepherds where to find Jesus; and the angels told the shepherds that the news of the answer to men's longings was meant for all people. Are we sure, you and I, that we have grasped the import of the angelic advertisement—"Good tidings meant for all people"? Church altars are meant to be mangers of today: The pulpits are the angelic news-stands. The schools are the homes of wise men: But are we yet inclusive in our enterprise? Does the Christmas Celebration find us at a spiritual manger or at an earthly trough? Are we feeding soul as well as body? Do the pulpits send men to the altar? Do the schools teach us where to look for Christ? And are we making provisions that all people shall have a chance to satisfy in the ordinary walk of life their immortal cravings with an immortal food? What light as to how far and how deep these tidings are to go do the ledgers at the Missions House throw on our professions and practices?

"Glory to God in the Highest and on earth peace, good will to men." Men have no business to sing this angelic song unless they mean to publish the good tidings in the same spirit of obedience that the angels proclaimed it. To sing "Glory to God," and peace to men of good will, and then live so that God is not glorified, and there is no chance for peace of heart or mind or body to come to any soul anywhere, comes mighty near singing an insult rather than singing a carol. And the only thing which saves us from the guilt of insulting God, is the fact that we have been foolishy talking with our lips instead of joining our hearts and heads and wills in an effort to make the angelic message ring true in all the earth.

An exchange claims to have heard of a young lady who exclaimed: "Oh, we have just the nicest way of joining our church, now. You see, we join by telephone, and send our photographs to be baptized." There seem to be a good many telephone members who have lost their numbers.—Zion's Advocate.

SYNOD OF THE SECOND PROVINCE.

The Synod of the Second Province, comprising the dioceses within the states of New York and New Jersey and the Missionary District of Porto Rico, was held in St. Paul's Parish, Syracuse, N. Y., beginning on Tuesday evening November 12th. Bishop Fiske conducted a conference for the clergy and Bishop Olmstead gave the address of welcome at the opening service and emphasized the importance of the missionary work of the Church, social service and religious education. Bishop Lines spoke of the important part the Church had played in the war. The Rev. Dr. Henry B. Washburn of the General War Commission, pointed out the great need and necessity of continuing religious war work until our soldiers and sailors are mustered out of the service. Among those who gave addresses, took part in conference discussions, and presented reports, were Bishop Courtney, the Rev. Charles H. Boynton, the Rev. Paul Micou, Bishop Burgess, the Rev. Dr. E. A. White, Bishop Matthews, Mr. G. Frank Selby, the Rev. Augustine Elmendorf, the Rev. Dr. Wm. E. Gardner, the Rev. F. M. Crouch, the Rev. Dr. R. W. Patton, Dean Bartlett, Mr. George Zabriskie, the Rev. James W. Van Ingen and Bishop Lloyd.

Social service, religious education, missions, the future place of provinces in the Church, with a view of relieving the work of the General Convention, the war work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, of the Y. M. C. A. and other organizations, the work of the Church in cantonments, the American Church Institute for negroes, temperance, the training for the ministry and requirements for ordination, the effect of the war upon the supply and support of the ministry, the state of the Church, and kindred subjects were considered.

The following memorial presented from the Diocese of Long Island Social Service Commission was adopted:

"The Synod hereby endorses the purpose of a league of nations for the promotion of international righteousness and justice, with a view to the maintenance of peace among the nations of the world, and appeals to patriotic Christans everywhere to pray and work for this end as the supreme duty of the hour after military victory has been won."

Bishop Lines was the presiding officer at the opening of the sessions of the synod. The Ven Roy F. Duffield was chosen secretary, the Rev. John Keller, assistant secretary, and Mr. A. B. Houghton, treasurer.

The Rev. Robert Williams, of Princeton, N. J., Prof. Blanche E. Hazard of Cornell University, and Miss B. S. L. Watson of Syracuse University were elected as representatives of the province to the National Student Council.

The Rev. Charles Tyner, formerly rector of St. Luke's Church, Lincoln, Nebraska, has accepted a call to become Dean of the Cathedral at Hastings, Nebraska. Dean Tyner recently returned from foreign service with the Y. M. C. A. and won many honors for gallantry and bravery on the battle fields of France. The Dean is yet a young man but possessed of rare talents as a pulpit orator and genial gentleman. His rectorship at St. Luke's Church was epoch making and resulted in that parish rising in prominence above the other parishes of that university city. The Lincoln Church had reserved his place during the year of his foreign service and are keenly disappointed that he has transferred his labors to the field of another Diocese.

The death of the Rev. Dr. W.F. Bachman, in charge of St. Alban's Church, Indiana Harbor, Ind., occurred at Mercy Hospital, Gary, Ind., November 10th. The burial took place from his parish church on the 12th inst. Bishop White, the Rev. C. B. Cromwell and the Rev. W. D. Elliott officiated. Dr. Bachman was ordered deacon by Bishop Anderson in 1908 and advanced to the priesthood the following year by Bishop Webb. He had worked in the dioceses of Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey prior to taking charge of the church at Indiana Harbor. He received his theological training at the Western Theological Seminary, Chicago. A memorial service for Dr. Bachman was held in the church by Bishop White on Sunday, Nov. 24th. Archdeacon Long preached the sermon.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

UNIVERSAL CHURCH TRAINING

A Disussion of Problems of Religious Education in the Home and Schools.

By Margaret K. Bigler.

Let us define our title. Universal Training is in the mind of the nation in connection with its God-given obligation to defend and perpetuate the principles of Democracy. Universal training is in the mind of the Church in connection with God-given mission to perpetuate and develop that spiritual life which has given birth to the principles of Democracy. When we say "Training," we naturally picture training camps fitted with trained officers whose business it is to develop great bodies of men into a most efficient fighting force. We have in the Church, Training Camps, our Church Schools, filled with the youth of the Church, eager to be trained by efficient teachers, in the art of the great spiritual warfare under Christ our Captain. But we have other departments or training camps, the Home, wherein the youth spends more than one-half of his time; the Public Schools where he is trained in many subjects. The Church Training Camp and the Home Training Camp have for their prime interest the spiritual training of the Church recruits, while the Public School Training Camp is of necessity given over to the training of the mind and body.

We call this training in reigion, "Universal" for two reasons, first, because it is for God's children everywhere; and secondly, because it takes into consideration every phase of an individual life, the body, the temple of the Holy Spirit; the mind, the director of the body in obedience to the Will of God, and the soul, as expressing the indwelling life of God.

We call it Church Training because the purpose of Training is for service in the Body of Christ, the Church.

Briefly, the policy of this column is to assist priests, teachers and parents as far as possible in meeting their responsibilities in the training of the boys and girls of the Church, by endeavoring to answer the perplexing questions which frequently confront those thus engaged. We shall not attempt to answer questions pertaining to the training of adults.

The method used is to be that of the Question Box. Questions will be answered as promptly as possible and we ask that they be brief and to the point. Parents are especially urged to make use of this column.

Prefacing the answers to questions, there will appear a short article each week dealing with some subject of general itnerest to all engaged in Universal Church Training.

Address all questions directly to: Mrs. Margaret K. Bigler, DeKalb, Illinois.

A PSLAM OF THANKSGIVING

O Thou whose boundless love bestows
The joy of life, the hope of heaven;
Thou whose unchartered mercy flows
O'er all the blessings Thou hast given;
Thou by whose light alone we see;
Thou by whose truth our souls set free
Are made imperishably strong;
Hear thou the solemn music of our song.

Grant us the knowledge that we need
To solve the questions of the mind;
Light Thou our candle while we read,
And keep our hearts from going blind;
Enlarge our vision to behold
The wonders Thou hast wrought of old;
Reveal Thyself in every law,
And guild the towers of truth with holy awe.

Be Thou our strength when war's wild gust
Rages around us loud and fierce;
Confirm our souls and let our trust
Be like a wall that none can pierce;
Give us the courage that prevails,
The steady faith that never fails,
Help us to stand in every fight
Firm as a fortress to defend the right.

O God, make us what Thou wilt;
Guide Thou the labor of our hand;
Let all our work be surely built
As Thou, the architect, hast planned;
But whatsoe'er Thy power shalt make
Of these frail lives, do not forsake
Thy dwelling. Let Thy presence rest
Forever in the temple of our breast.

—Henry Van Dyke.

DR. JOHN McCLURKIN.

The Rev. John McClurkin, M.D., perpetual deacon and much beloved curate for many years in Christ Church, Chicago, entered into the blessed rest and peace of Paradise from St. Luke's Hospital early Sunday morning, November 24th. Dr. McClurkin built up a large practice in his chosen profession at Mt. Carmel, Ill., and was a devoted member and lay reader in St. John Baptist's Church. His services were so acceptable that he was prevailed upon to seek ordination to the diaconate and in 1890 was ordained by Bishop Seymour. He was an unassuming, self-sacrificing saintly-minded, man whose life and good works do follow him in the lives of those whose privilege it was to come into close touch with his loveable, Christian character. He lov-spend and be spent in His service. The funeral service was held at Christ Church, Chicago, on Monday, Nov. 25th, the Rev. Charles H. Young, rector, officiating, and the remains were taken to Albion, Ill., for burial.

There is a story of an old lady in Scotland who had a serious difference with her worthy minister, but who, to the surprise of the latter, continued her attendance regularly at church. When the minister expressed his gratification as well as his surprise at her conduct, she said, "Oh, sir, my quarrel was with you, and not with the Lord."—A. H. Moncur Sime.

I find the great thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving. To reach the port of Heaven we must sail sometimes with the wind and sometimes against it; but we must sail, and not drift, nor lie at anchor. —Phillips Brooks.

Pride and weakness are Siamese twins.—Lowell.

BISHOP GORE TAKES MESSAGE TO ENGLAND.

Federal Council of Churches in America Pledges Co-operation With England.

The New York Times, under date of November 14th, states that at a luncheon to the Right Reverend Charles Gore, Bishop of Oxford, held at the Cosmopolitan Club, the Federal Council of Churches in America presented to its guest a message of gratitude and affection for the Church of England and the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England. Bishop Gore, on the eve of his return to England after a speaking tour of several months in this country expressed his appreciatioin and gratitude for the cordial manner in which he had been received here. The Reverend Dr. Arthur T. Guttery, President-elect of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales, who accompanied the Bishop to this country, was also present, and emphasized the unity of the English speaking peoples of the world.

Bishop Gore expressed his anxiety as to conditions that will follow the war in the former German Empire, saying he feared that under the revolutionists, the party in control of a new government would repudiate all blame for the war, all guilt for the methods of conducting it, all national debts contracted, and liability for indemnities and reconstruction in the invaded territories.

Dr. Guttery stated that England, in his opinion, was not interested in political party control in this country, that it did not pin its faith to any individual but to the American people. He spoke of the war aims of the allies as "peace without stagnation, obedience without servility, liberty without license."

The message that was sent to the churches of England opens with a tribute to the two men who had been sent to this country to "set before our people in vital power the moral aims of the war and to bring us your sympathetic judgment as to our hope and faith in such an association of nations as shall create, develop, and perpetuate justice and righteousness in the world of nations by means of the good will and mutual consideration persuaded and demanded by our Christian faith." The letter accords to England the credit for having borne sorrows "incomparably greater" than those of this country, but says America has had enough to give us some realization of what England has passed through.

"Our ideas," continues the letter, "political and social, and above all, religious, are common and have been mutual for a century or more. Our future task of rebuilding wasted Europe is a common task. Our own nations will call for unity in the reconstruction of their mutual life and institutions.

"Our national organization and societies, political, economic, commercial, and industrial, are proceeding to common conference and mutual endeavor. We invite through this message the closest relationship between the churches of our two nations in sentiment and faith and in every practical action.

"We suggest that we continue to interchange messengers, our pastors and laymen, our teachers of theology, our missionaries, our students. God grant that our brave soldiers have fought together in conflict for ideals of truth and freedom, as our two peoples have been united in solemn league and covenant, our churches may keep close together in our future task of building up the foundations now at last established, of a world which has forever secured to itself the force of right and has forever repudiated and condemned the right of force.

"As we are handing this message to your messengers, the glad news comes to us that the eternal principle to which you committed yourselves for these four momentous years and which drew us to you and to the democratic nations which have stood together, has become the heritage now of all the nations. Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Spirit. Amen."

The writers conclude by saying: "We are assured that this message conveys the spirit of all our churches, without reference to formal or organic relationship." The document is signed on behalf of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, by Frank Mason North, President; Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary, and Alfred G. Lawson, Chairman of the Administration Committee.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

TENTH PAPER.

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

Prayers and Thanksgivings.

No division of the Book of Common Prayer offers greater opportunity for suggested changes than does the special prayers and thanksgivings. There are two chief reasons for this: First, because every clergyman recognizes the necessity, from time to time, of some suitable prayer or thanksgiving to meet the needs of some extraordinary occasion. The truthfulness of this statement has been fully demonstrated by the multitude of special prayers as printed in the Church papers for use during the period of the world war. One can not be charged with disloyalty to the Prayer Book because one feels that the present prayer for use "In times of war and tumult" does not fully supply one's needs in an attempt for deeper and more specific intercessions. Second, when a move is being made to "enrich" the Prayer Book, there will be offered many forms of prayer that have stood the test and commended themselves to the many individuals, who, in turn, will desire to give to the Church the benefit of their experiences and possessions.

An examination of the Proposed Papers and Thanksgivings, as suggested by the Commission of 1883-1886, as well as by the present Commission, and the rejection by General Convention of a number of very beautiful Prayers and Thanksgivings, for more or less important occasions, suggests the question: Would it not be wise, after all, to confine the Special Prayers and Thanksgivings to such subjects of more usual need—as sickness, rain, missions, etc.,—and to put out by authority an appendix or book of special additional Prayers and Thanksgivings covering every possible need, so that the clergy might have such a book at hand for use when occasion demanded and the Book of Common Prayer be not over-weighted with occasional and seldom used prayers, etc.?

The changes in the Prayers and Thanksgivings, as finally adopted by General Convention, are, to say the least, unsatisfactory, because they fail to fully provide for the needs for which they are intended.

Let us proceed now to an examination of the alterations and additions as adopted by the last General Convention:

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 22.—Omit from the title on page 37 the words, "Upon Several Occasions." The words the Commission proposes to omit found their way into the American Book from the English Prayer Book. It is simply a proposal to drop certain superfluous words and needs no comment.

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 23.—Insert the following Prayers under the general title Prayers and Thanksgivings, pages 37 ff., and in the following order:

(Here follows nine new Prayers and a number of alterations).

Unfortunately the adopted resolutions fail to specify just where the first new proposed Prayer is to be inserted in its relation to the Prayer for Congress. The Report of the Commission ordered the first new Prayer to follow the Prayer for Congress, but the adopted resolution reads, "Insert under the general title in the following order." If the wording of the adopted resolution is strictly followed we shall have to omit from our collection three very useful special Prayers, i. e.,—for Congress, for Convention, and for Unity.

The first new Prayer proposed by the Commission—for a State Legislature—was adopted by the House of Deputies, but was not concurred in by the House of Bishops and was lost by non-concurrence.

The second new Praver, proposed and adopted for Courts of Justice, is followed in the report of the Commission by Prayers for our Country; the Church; an amendment to the Prayer for Missions and an additional Prayer for Missions. The House of Deputies adopted all the report of the Commission, but they failed of final adoption through the non-concurrence of the House of Bishops. So, out of the five new Prayers proposed by the Commission in the first section of additional Prayers, only one, i. e., for Courts of Justice, was finally adopted. The Prayer is as follows:

"Almighty God, who sittest in the throne judging right, we humbly beseech Thee to bless the courts of justice and the magistrates in all this land; and give unto them the spirit of wisdom and understanding that they may discern the truth, and impartially administer the law in the fear of Thee alone; through Him Who shall come to be our Judge, Thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen."

We shall continue this subject next week.

KALENDAR.

The Collect for the First Sunday in Advent.

Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last day, when he shall come again in his glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise to the life immortal, through him who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. Amen.

The lessons in the following kalendar for the week ending December 7th are those appointed to be read at Morning and Evening Prayer in the new Lectionary set forth by the General Convention of 1916.

First Sunday in Advent: (December 1st.)	Zeph. 1:1-2:3.	Genesis 1:1-2:3.
	Luke 1:1-25.	Revelation 21.
2.—Monday:	Isaiah 1:1-27.	Isaiah 40:3-end.
	Revelation 1.	Hebrews 1.
3.—Tuesday:	Isaiah 2.	Isaiah 45:8-12, 15-end.
	Revelation 2:1-17.	Col. 1:1-18.
4.—Wednesday:	Isaiah 3:1-15.	II Esdras 6:38-55.
	Revelation 2:18, 3:6.	Acts 17:15-31.
5.—Thursday	Isaiah 3:16, 4-end.	Job 28.
	Revelation 3:7-end.	John 1:1-18.
6.—Friday:	Isaiah 5.	Ecclus, 42:15, 43-end.
	Revelation 4.	Romans 1:1-25.
7.—Saturday:	Isaiah 9:8, 10-4.	Genesis 2:4-end.
	Revelation 5.	1 Cor. 15:35-end.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., and Hobart, Indiana.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Wise, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months;
20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

THE ADVENT CALL.

No one has yet invented an automobile that will run without gasoline. It must have some form of motive power.

Neither can officers make an effective army. You must have men.

Neither did the Lord found a Church which was to be operated without spirit or merely by its officers.

It has been the fashion to sit down and criticize the Church for its lack of energy and force.

As a matter of fact the Church has plenty of force and energy.

If one were to study the various drives during the war and the diverse activities that accompanied them, one would be surprised at the number of our Church people that took a leading part therein. When Christians will work as fervently for Christ and the approval of their own conscience, as they have worked during the past year for their country and the approval of their fellowmen, then we will be able to demonstrate what this Church is capable of accomplishing.

This effort has been inaugurated by certain members of the Woman's Auxiliary who have been impressed by the splendid work done by the women of the Church in the service of their country and who have been anxious that the same energy should be manifested in the service of their Lord.

And in this spirit of service they have called for volunteers whose vision should be like that of our Lord; not narrow nor provincial but wide and truly liberal.

We have made liberality merely an attitude of mind. We have called that person liberal who has an attitude of indifference on the subject of doctrine. Surely such indifference is not a moral effort.

True liberality is that which gives generously of itself to the service of one's fellowmen. A person may be utterly selfish and yet not care what other people believe.

But a person cannot be utterly selfish who will help to bring others to the service of the Master.

In this sense the liberal devise liberal things.

The Advent Call is an effort to enlist the women of the Church in the welfare of the Church.

If we are to live in a better world, men and women must furnish the morale of that better world.

Our young men must come home to a world that is spiritually alert.

The idea that they are to come home to be coddled is an insult to the spirit which they have acquired over there.

If they come home to make the world better they too must come home to serve. The best way to inspire them with this desire is to find the Church alive when they return. Then the spirit of service which they have learned abroad should find an instrument of service when they come home.

The Church is not only the medium which should supply this spirit of service; it is the only medium which has for its object the making of a better world out of a rather selfish one.

If we love our boys, we should be willing to set them an example of such service. This is what the Advent Call aims to do.

It begins at the foundation, and that foundation is the mobilizing of our Church's forces.

The Woman's Auxiliary calls upon the women of the Church to devote one week in Advent, in an effort to visit every woman in any way related to the life of the parish, and to encourage her to share in this work of prayer and service.

It will help the messengers who carry the message to visit women on an errand which is purely spiritual. It will encourage the one called upon to rally to the support of the Cross of Christ, in answer to the call.

The effort this Advent is not so much to go out into the world to make disciples, as it is to go out among our own people and rally them to a life of prayer and service. Prayer for a distinct and definite purpose. Service of a specific and Churchly character.

If the people have a mind to work, this is their opportunity.

The trouble with the Church lies not in your neighbor's faults, so much as it lies in your own lack of faith.

It is by faith, rather than by criticism that Christ overcame the world. So you! The test of your discipleship lies in the measure of your service.

We all have faults and while we criticize others, our own faults are flourishing.

To overcome selfishness, one must be at grips with one's own love of ease, and of one's own fund of excuses.

We are unwilling to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ and then wonder why our faith is so dull.

The Church is dead to you because you are dead to the call of Christ.

"Now it is high time to awake out of sleep."

There are two kinds of helpers in this Advent Call. Those who are selected as messengers because they are apt for that work, who are to make the calls; and those who are asked to be intercessors, and to pray daily in the churches for those who are making the calls.

It is your officer in Christ's army who selects you for the task.

It is a sorry army in which the privates refuse the duty which the officer calls them to perform.

We, then, as officers, beseech you to help us in this service of rallying to the Cross all those who have enlisted in the service.

If Christ is your Master in fact, then His call is your marching order and you obey because you are a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

But we are so rusty in this kind of service, that it is only by a great effort that we arouse ourselves to the value of this concerted effort for Christ and His Church.

I am fully persuaded that this Episcopal Church has a great destiny. But I am also convinced that it cannot accomplish this destiny, if everybody thinks that somebody else ought to do the hard work. It is all right to dress up and go to church on Sunday, but that is a mere dress parade unless you get out and do something on Monday.

This is an opportunity for the women of the Church to help in the actual fighting. Peace is a fine thing, but it may easily become stagnation, unless in times of peace we are industrious in those duties which make peace an aggressive force, not merely a vacuum.

And is any service, however humble, beneath any soldier of the Cross?

Then is Christ beneath you and not above, for He, though a Prince of the Royal Blood, was content to be among you as one that served.

THE ADVENT MESSAGE.

The Gospel is not merely for women of the Church, but for us all.

And the Advent Call is the reminder that Christ is coming to be our Judge.

That judgment will not be based upon the standards of human society.

Like this war, the day of judgment will level the fictions of social caste.

The rich and the poor will meet together and the Lord will not exempt any dodger of His draft, because he pleads the exemption of caste or culture.

There can be no higher distinction in human life than that we have served Christ as His soldier in the place where we are.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS

THE SERMON OF ST. PETER.
Acts II 14-40.

The first sermon in the Christian Church was preached to an oriental multitude, gathered together from various motives, to hear this new thing, viz.,—Galilean peasants talking in various languages about the remarkable things.

And it was a strange thing for fishermen in that day to harangue a multitude. It was a stranger thing that the strong brogue of Galilee should be intelligible to all nations.

It was the strangest thing of all at which they marvelled that these unlearned and ignorant men should be capable of such wonderful ability—"and they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus."

This was the secret of their message and their power, as they themselves would most modestly have asserted.

In the trial sermon of St. Peter we find certain principles embedded which are fundamental to the Christian Gospel. And first he uses the Old Testament as the introduction to his theme.

He goes back to Joel and to David as the forerunners of the Messiah.

The day of Pentecost was the fulfillment of Joel's assertion: "On my servants I will pour out my spirit and they shall prophesy."

(Continued on page 5)

THE BAN ON CHURCHES.

The following letter from Congressman Bowdle of Cincinnati is the best thing that we have seen on the closing of the Churches. We therefore reproduce it here:

Cars, Churches and Others.
To the Editor of the Times-Star:

With all due respect to my scientific brethren, I can not bring myself to assent to some things they are doing in modern life. It seems to me at times that they are assuming too much power, vexing our lives, and making a situation well-nigh intolerable.

The order closing the churches and depriving us of the most elevating and ennobling ministrations of public worship, is one of the things I have in mind. Everyone knows that those who go to church are the most well of the community; for men universally seize upon an indisposition as an excuse to remain away. Those attending church are certainly (on that day) the cleanest of the community. They have on their best clothes, and certainly (and sorrowfully) there is no crowding.

In spite of the order suppressing public meetings, I attend two each day, on the Clifton-Ludlow cars, where there is scarcely standing room—no church meeting was ever so crowded. A church is surgically clean as compared with these cars (and I am not complaining about the cars.)

But there is another consideration: A short time ago we were called on by the President to make great use of our churches for public worship and prayer for victory and peace. This would seem to recognize an exalted function in these churches and our prayers, a function transcending the deliverances of science and of the utmost value to the race. But now we are told to keep out of these same churches as dangerous to health and life; that while prayer may be efficacious in saving us from German propaganda, it is powerless before Spanish influenza.

These contrary deliverances inflict upon the soul a grievous and intolerable perplexity. There is much in modern civilization that throw men into a kind of baffling despair, quite aside from anything that has happened in the World War with its atrocities; but nothing of late has happened quite as troubling to the soul as the State's contrary orders to use the churches and not to use the churches.

We neglect the fact that there is a profoundly mystical element in life, something subtle, undefinable, unappraisable, yet most potent, which sustains man in his dangers, trials and sorrows, and which element is sublimely ministered unto by the offices of public worship and religion. These ministrations are the most strengthening in the world, and without them life would lose its savour, and mankind would be doomed to a bleak and chilling pessimism. With that realm science should not interfere. Life is something more than sterilized clothing. A soul free from bitterness and hate, and a mind occupied with spiritual things, are powerful aids, if not guarantees, to health. And one may say these things without committing himself to any modern sect.

For years I have attended Calvary church in Clifton, and I know the effect of the noble service of that church; and I confess to a certain deprivation in not hearing the Saturday evening bells of old St. Patrick's church, Northside, which solemnly invite men tired of this world to reflect on the Life Everlasting. In a world of all-too-engrossing materialism we should be careful lest we injure spiritual efforts and agencies. While I acknowledge my debt to science I shall not let my sense of obligation to suffocate my common sense.

What I have said is quite as applicable to our Symphony orchestra, whose ministrations are most helpful to a tired, monotonous world. We need the churches and all music as sanifying measures. What I have written is with all respect to our physicians, etc.

STANLEY E. BOWDLE.

Pride's chickens have bonny feathers, but they are an expensive brood to rear. They eat up everything, and are always lean when brought to market.—Alexander Smith.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

A Wintlock, Oregon, minister had printed and mailed to his flock his Sunday sermon, delivery from the pulpit of which was prevented by the influenza epidemic.

Thirty-five thousand clergymen have been requested to present to their congregations the work of the Y. M. C. A. in war service and to make an appeal for additional workers at their services tomorrow, Sunday, December 1st.

Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., has offered its parish house as a convalescent hospital to the military camps at the University of Pittsburgh and Carnegie Technical School, where everything will be provided by the parish for the comfort of the men.

Notwithstanding the fact that the election of a Bishop Coadjutor for the Diocese of Tennessee will not occur until next May, St. Paul's Church at Chattanooga has for the third time made a pledge of a sixth part of the salary of the Bishop Coadjutor to be elected.

Victory services of thanksgiving were held in all the churches throughout England, and it took London a whole week to exhaust itself in celebrating the signing of the armistice. The churches generally were lavishly decorated with flowers and crowded with thankful worshippers.

Bishop Mann, of Southern Florida, recently revised the catalogue of his library of about 4,000 volumes. "I think," says the Bishop in his diary, "if I were starting life over again, I should limit myself to 100 volumes, —outside of the dictionaries and other purely reference books."

Bishop Francis, of the Diocese of Indianapolis, issued a pastoral letter in which he requested that "in every congregation in the diocese Thanksgiving Day be made and observed as a day of special thanksgiving to God for the ending of the war and for the victory of right and justice."

By the will of the late Gerard Beekman, of Oyster Bay and New York, who died November 9th, the Seaman's Church Institute will receive $5,000; Christ Church, Oyster Bay, $1,000 for Italian mission work; Columbia University, $10,000, and New York Hospital, $25,000. The value of the estate is estimated at more than $2,000,000.

nians, Syrians and Greeks, have fled in large numbers.

The Hon. Elihu Root, who will probably be one of the representatives of the United States at the peace table, gave the address at the religious celebration of victory and peace held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York on Sunday, November 17th. Bishop Greer was also to have made an address but was prevented from being present by illness. The Bishop's address, which he had written for the occasion, was read by Dean Robbins.

Bishop Harding reopened Trinity Church, Washington, D. C., on the Twenty-third Sunday after Trinity, officiated at a celebration of the Holy Communion and preached the sermon, with the purpose of renewing the life of this important parish and ministering to the religious needs of the community and the many men and women engaged in war service who reside in the locality of the church. Canon Walden Meyer will serve as vicar for a time and Canon Russell of the Cathedral will be the special preacher, under appointment by the Bishop.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Russell Wakefield, D.D., Bishop of Birmingham, Eng., is visiting the principal cities in the United States and Canada, speaking before rotary clubs, chambers of commerce, Church clubs and other organizations, giving his reflections on the world war. He is an eminent author, lecturer, and chaplain in the British army as well as Bishop of the important Diocese of Birmingham. He is a stanch friend of the laboring man. He says, "This new construction period that is near at hand means a greater sense of responsibility to self and to the one next to you, to the country and to the world."

The Presbyterian Synod of New Jersey adopted a resolution urging the deportation of every alien in the State who is not willing to subscribe to "thorough Americanization" as a post war construction policy. "The war has taught us many things," asserts the resolution, "but none of more importance than the absolute necessity of thoroughly Americanizing all foreigners within our gates, of whom there are more than 1,500,000 adults of forty nationalities. The Bolshevists in Europe produce sympathizing Bolshevists in America. To thwart the danger which threat-

The reunion of three of the oldest and most influential Lutheran bodies in the United States was consummated, under the title of the United Lutheran Church of America, at a convention held in New York City the second week in November, including the General Synod, organized in 1820; the General Council, organized in 1867, and the United Synod South, dating back to civil war days. The combined bodies represent a communicant membership of 800,000, and a baptized membership of 1,600,000. The property is valued at more than $53,000,000. The educational institutions, with an enrollment of more than 5,000 students, are valued at $5,250,000, and the charitable institutions are valued at $12,600,000.

Further light on the facts of Lieut. Charles Patrick Anderson, aviator, reported missing since September 16th, is furnished in a cablegram received from Bern, Switzerland, by the aviator's father, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Charles P. Anderson, Bishop of the Diocese of Chicago, says the Chicago Tribune. According to a rumor current in the Swiss city, Lieut. Anderson and his bomber, Lieut. Hugh Thompson, were observed to fall in flames behind the German lines. The story same to Angus Hibbard of Chicago, Red Cross worker in France, through a letter from a German prisoner at Camp Rastatt.

Bishop Anderson, on account of the roundabout source of the story, is hoping that better news may come.

Lieut. Anderson made three raids in one day a short time before he was reported missing. He was attached to the 96th squadron, where his record is said to have been an excellent one.

PERSONALS.

The Rev. John H. Feringa, Ph.D., formerly Rector of St. John's Parish at Grand Haven (Western Michigan), has accepted a position on the Faculty of Racine College. His address now is: Racine College, Racine, Wis.

The Rev. A. L. Washburn, rector of St. Martin's Church, Providence, R. I., on leave of absence serving as a chaplain of the Red Cross in France, has been assigned to the Church of the Holy Trinity, Paris, for special work among soldiers.

The Rev. Dr. George Franklin Smythe, Colburn professor of Homiletics and Religious Education, Bexley Hall Divinity School, Kenyon College, was recently inaugurated Dean of the School, succeeding the late Dean H. V. Jones, D.D.

The Rev. Geo. Dudley Barr, who was compelled to resign as Priest-in-Charge Chicago Heights, Ill., in May, because of ill health, has entirely recovered and has acceptetd a call to be Priest-in-charge at Steamboat Springs, Colo., and associated Missions, with residence at Steamboat Springs.

The death of Mr. Peter Corning Edwards, organist and choirmaster of St. Stephen's Church Province, R. I., 1897 - 1894, is regretted by the friends he still has in the diocese. Mr. Edwards left St. Stephen's to go to Christ Church, New York City, and when he died he was organist and choirmaster of St. Luke's, Brooklyn. He was one of the two living former organists of St. Stephen's who attened two years ago the 50th anniversary of the organization of its boy choir. He is known to the Church at large as composer of tunes set to Hymns 407, 506 and 510 in Hutchins Hymnal.—The Rhode Island Diocesan Record.

In St. Luke's Church, Hot Springs, Ark., November 10, the 24th Sunday after Trinity, Jans William Jensen was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Hugh L. Burleson, S.T.D., Bishop of South Dakota. The Rev. A. B. Clark, rector of St. Luke's Church, presented the candidate.

The Rev. Wesley W. Barnes, rector of St. Mary's, Nebraska City, has been granted one year's leave of absence for Y. M. C. A. work in France. During his absence the parish will be served by the Rev. Roy Fairchild, formally rector at Wymore. Mr. Fairchild is one of the prominent leaders of the Church in the Diocese of Nebraska.

At the last meeting of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the State of Kansas, Robert M. Botting, Priest in Charge of the missions at Dodge City and Kinsley, was appointed Grand Prelate for the ensuing year. Mr. Botting, who is a member of the Rotary Club of Dodge City had also the honor of being sent as its representative to the annual meeting of the Rotary Clubs at Kansas City.

The Very Rev. J. Scott Budlong, dean of St. Mark's pro-cathedral, Hastings, Nebraska, has accepted the superintendency of the San Francisco Protestant Orphanage and will enter upon his duties December 1. This institution has been in care of the late Rev. Mr. Burton, rector of the Church of the Advent, San Francisco, and it was upon Mr. Burton's recommendation before his death that the position of superintendent was offered Dean Budlong. Dean Budlong may be addressed after December 1 in care of the San Francisco Protestant Orphanage, San Francisco, California.

The Rev. E. M. Frear expected to begin his rectorship at Grace Church, Honesdale, Pa., October 12, but owing to the influenza epidemic the churches were closed until November 9th, when the ban was lifted and he held his first service. He spent his time, during the epidemic, visiting the people in their homes and comforting the sick and afflicted, and made a most favorable impression. The church building and the Sunday school rooms have undergone a number of needed improvements. A new service flag with twenty-seven stars was placed in the church at the opening of the morning service, November 9th.

STUDIES OF THE ACTS

(Continued from page 4)

The resurrection was foretold by David: "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption."

David spoke not of himself for his sepulchre is with us, but "being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn an oath to him that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on the throne;

He, seeing this before spoke of the resurrection of Christ, that His soul was not left in hell, neither His flesh did see corruption."

It was a Messianic message to a devout people, who believed the Bible to be the Word of God.

It was moreover an assertion that the religion which St. Peter preached was one which grew out of the religion which these Jews believed.

Thus St. Peter begins by asserting the continuity of the new revelation with the facts of the old. They were not innovators, proclaiming a new gospel, merely witnesses attesting the fulfillment of something which his audience already accepted.

So that the first characteristic of St. Peter's sermon was its vital continuation of the ever unfolding revelation of Jehovah.

Next St. Peter dwelt on the main facts in the life of Christ.

The Crucifixion,—"Him ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain."

The Resurrection,—"This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses." That is what we are here for, to be witnesses of these facts.

The Ascension,—"Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted,"

The Gift of the Holy Ghost,—"and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear."

And the conclusion follows most directly in this sermon—

"Therefore let all the house of Israel, know assuredly, that God hath made the same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ."

This sermon of St. Peter is specially valuable to us because it takes in the elements of our religion and developes them along the line of essential truth.

To these great facts all else is incidental,—the crucified and risen Christ is the fulfillment of Jewish expectation and the hope of Jewish faith.

It brought forth the obvious question from such devout persons as were affected by St. Peter's preaching, for these said to Peter and the rest, "Men and brethren what shall we do?"

And the answer of St. Peter is no less clear about the practice of the Church than it was about the doctrine.

If those who heard wished to take advantage of the gospel that he had preached, they were "to repent and be baptized everyone of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Repentance, Baptism, the laying on of hands follow both in their teaching and practice as the essential things in beginning the Christian life; and they are to do these things because by means of them they would obtain the remission of sins and eternal life.

This same fundamental faith and practice is well grouped by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

"Therefore leaving the principles (that is the a b c's) of the doctrine of Christ; let us go on to perfection." And then the writer states what are these a b c's "not laying again the foundation of

(a) "repentance from dead works and faith toward God."—the internal attitude of the man's soul,

(b) "of the doctrine of baptisms and the laying on of hands,"—the external sacramental rites by which that repentance and faith is sealed,

(c) "and of resurrection of the dead and of eternal judgment,"—the final objectives for which both faith and practice exist.

The power of St. Peter's preaching was such that three thousand devout Jews responded thereto and these were baptized as St. Peter had directed.

One wonders, after reading this account, how anybody can disagree as to the fundamentals of the Christian religion. Whatever the subsequent development of any religious cult may be, it has departed from the faith when it ignores or minimizes that which St. Peter put first.

These things are elemental and without them we have no right to speak of our religion as Christian. It is otherwise but a substitute for the faith once for all delivered to the Saints.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BOARD OF MISSIONS ACTIVITIES

Will Help Rebuild Church Property Destroyed by the Minnesota Forest Fire and Porto Rico Earthquake.

The November meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions was held in the Church Missions House, New York.

The Domestic Secretary called attention to the death of the Right Rev. Francis K. Brooke, D.D., Missionary Bishop of Oklahoma. The Executive Committee adopted the following minutes by a rising vote:

"Whereas, The Right Reverend Francis Key Brooke, Doctor of Divinity and for the last twenty-five years a Bishop of the Church in the Missionary District of Oklahoma, has rendered his final earthly accounting, and on October 22, 1918, passed from the Church Militant into the Church Expectant;

Resolved, That the Board of Missions hereby notes this fact upon its minutes, and in addition places on record its gratitude to Almighty God for the good example and faithful service of His servant, and our fellow worker in the extension of the Kingdom of God within the borders of these United States.

"Called to the unique position of Primary Bishop of a State born in a day, Dr. Brooke went to his task in Oklahoma endowed with a disposition of singular sweetness, and a rare charm of mind and manner, which won friends for the Church wherever he ministered as a Shepherd and Pastor of the flock. A material record of his work can be found in the hospital, the Hostel for Churchwomen in the town of Normal, Oklahoma, the Cathedral, the Bishop's House, and in churches, parish houses and rectories for the erection of which he spent himself unreservedly; and wisely administered such funds as came to him through the years of his Episcopate.

"The Board also learns with gratitude that his spiritual ministry has left an ecclesiastical household determined to maintain and carry forward all those missionary ideals which Bishop Brooke ever strove to inculcate in his priests and congregations.

"To the Church at large, the Board commends for emulation the good example of a faithful soldier of Jesus Christ, who bore his pain of body, and the disappointments of his ministry with uncomplaining devotion, and a steadfast faith. The Board prays God to rest the soul of His servant and to grant to him and his household that peace which He has promised to those who unfeignedly love him.

"Resolved, That a copy of this minute be sent to the family of Bishop Brooke, with an added expression of the Board's sympathy for Mrs. Brooke and her children in their sense of personal loss and bereavement."

The Bishop of New York spoke in a most appreciative way of the life and work of the late Bishop.

Consideration of Appeal from Diocese of Duluth.

The condition of the work in the Diocese of Duluth was a matter which received careful consideration by the Committee. Several letters have been received from Bishop Morrison, giving in part the devastation done by the forest fire in October. Special attention was called to the destruction of the beautiful St. Andrew's Church and its fine parsonage in the City of Cloquet, The Cloquet people, the Bishop said, owe their lives to the Great Northern Railway which crammed the yards with engines and freight cars, and carried thousands out of the flames to the only refuge, the City of Superior, forty miles away. The beautiful little city of Moose Lake was utterly destroyed and our new church has only the concrete steps and chimney left. This is only part of the destruction to our church property. The Bishop was very anxious to rebuild the church and rectory at Cloquet and the church at Moose Lake. The people have lost everything, but even so are doing everything in their power to help toward the rebuilding.

The Executive Committee turned to the fund established as a result of the receipt of undesignated legacies, and assured the Bishop that they would stand back of him in the rebuilding of these structures, and if necessary make an appropriation from this fund.

The Porto Rico Earthquake.

The Secretary for Latin America also reported the devastation due to the earthquake in Porto Rico. Our splendid St. Luke's Hospital in Ponce has been badly damaged; the repairs necessary will cost in the neighborhood of $6,000. A paper received from Porto Rico giving an account of the valuable work done by St. Luke's Hospital mentioned, among other things, that it had organized Red Cross work and carried on a most valuable relief work in Mayaguez through the services of Miss Hicks. the nurse in charge of the Hospital. The Bishop was authorized to proceed with the necessary repairs. It is hoped that members of the Church will realize the importance of this medical work in Porto Rico, and come forward with sufficient funds to make up the loss.

Personals and Other Notes.

The Bishop of Cuba expects to ordain Mr. R. H. Asheton-Martin, and was given permission to employ him in the field.

Our new mission in Santo Domingo is growing to such an extent that a teacher is necessary, and Mrs. Aldeo was employed for that purpose.

In the Foreign Field. In order to take advantage of the low price of rice in Liberia, an advance up to $1,800 was made to lay by a sufficient store for our six schools. This rice s to be held subject to monthly requisition by each school.

Mr. J. J. Neal, who for many years had served as Business Agent at Cape Palmas, as well as Superintendent of the Cape Palmas Orphan Asylum and Girls' School, was obliged to retire on account of age and infirmity. A suitable retiring allowance was provided.

In Alaska, the resignations of Mr. and Mrs. David L. McConnell and Miss Frances Wells were accepted.

Miss Wells had married Mr. Walter Harper, who had for some time been Archdeacon Stuck's travelling companion and was with him in the asension of Mt. Denali and was the first to reach the summit. They were coming out on the Steamer "Sophia" which was wrecked in October and all lives lost.

Miss Kathleen LaMothe Rigby of Baltimore, Md., was appointed to the District of Anking, and Miss Helen A. Little to the District of Hankow.

The salaries of our missionaries in Alaska have, for some time, been felt to be inadequate. Prices are excessively high, especially in the interior. It was felt necessary to make some small increase and to regulate the salaries in accordance with the plan in force in all of the foreign missionary districts. A pay table was therefore adopted providing standard salaries, adjusted according to character of service rendered and term of years served.

The Treasurer's Report to November 1st was such that the members of the Committee gave long consideration to it. With two months more of the year remaining we shall require an additional amount of $311,762, even should the total amount of the apportionment be raised. Our appropriations to November 1st, including the deficit of last year amount to $143,309; total $2,408,118. There is still $625,904 due on the apportionment. With other large mission boards reporting not only increased offerings, but large plans for advance work, it makes the Board feel that the requests they have made upon the Church have been altogether too modest and that it is only fair to expect that at least the obligations already contracted for should be taken care of.

A splendid report has come in as a result of the One Day's Income Plan, over $125,000.00, having been received from that source. Every mission board in the country today faces perhaps the greatest opportunity since its organization. Many are seeing this and preparing for it.

The Board at its December meeting will take time to consider this whole question as it is to be called in extraordinary session for this purpose. It is hoped, however, that the regular offerings of the people will be adequate to meet the present emergencies.

'In Dante's Inferno the man who wouldn't take sides, the straddler, was sentenced to be stung with bees, hornets, wasps and all manner of stinging creatures."

THE VOLUNTEER SYSTEM A FAILURE.

Church Must Resort to the Draft If Its Work is to be Done

The Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, rector of St. Paul's Church, New Orleans, La., early in the fall, sent a letter to all persons twelve years of age and over connected in any way with the parish. "The purpose of the letter was to convey a message to each individual concerning the call to greater Christian service, and to put the question of personal religion up to each one." In the introductory paragraphs of his letter, the rector briefly referred to "these times which try men's souls," to the need on the part of individuals of "the guidance, help and strength that come only from close personal fellowship with God," and to the need likewise on the part of the Nation and the World of "the vital spiritual power which the Christian religion supplies." As the Nation marshalls and trains its forces for the armed conflict, "so must the Church organize and train its membership to more thoroughly combat and cope with the forces of moral and spiritual evil and to accomplish God's purposes in individual lives and in the corporate life of the community and the world. At the beginning of another season's work I urge that you avail yourselves of the privileges that are yours and the blessings that may come to you through the worship and services of the Church, and that each one take a larger part in the Church's work. The call is not merely that we seek greater benefits for ourselves but that we consecrate ourselves for a larger measure of service to others. Let us make St. Paul's Church a living, vital force in the life of the community. Slackers, deserters or cowards are as out of place in the Church as they are in the Nation."

A questionnaire was enclosed in the letter with the request that it be filled out and returned to the rector. "The information is personal and will be considered confidential. It may help you if you answer the questions seriously and conscientiously, even though you do not return it. It will help us if you return it." The purpose "is very much that of the government in seeking to enroll and classify its citizens. With the knowledge pertaining to the facts mentioned we can tell just where our constituency stand and to what extent they can be expected to render service during the ensuing year." The volunteer system has proved a failure and the country had to resort to the draft with selective service. "It looks as if the Church must adopt the same tactics if its work is to be done efficiently and satisfactorily."

The Questionnaire.

1. Have you been enrolled in the Lord's Army? (a) By Baptism? (b) By Confirmation?
2. To what branch of the Christian Army do you belong?
   '(a) Denomination.....
   Episcopal, Methodist, Roman Catholic, etc, etc.
   'Congregation .....
   (St. Paul's, St. George's First Methodist, Etc.)
3. Will you endeavor to fulfill your obligation as a member of Christ's Kingdom during the ensuing year in every way possible? .....
4. If not, upon what ground do you claim exemption? .....
5. If not an active member of any congregation will you consider becoming an active member of St. Paul's Church?.....
6. Will you try to gain at least one new member for St. Paul's 'Church during the year?.....
7. Signify by check (v) the forms of spiritual endeavor you will undertake during the ensuing year.
   (a) To pray earnestly each day for the spread of Christ's Kingdom.
   (b) To read and study systematically the Holy Bible. (a) Private. (b) In a Bible Class.
   (c) To have Family Prayer in the home.
   (d) To have Grace at meals.
   (e) To make an honest effort to worship God in His church at least once every Lord's Day.
   (f) To partake of the Holy Communion at least once each month.

CHICAGO LETTER

The Rev. Albert E. Selcer.

Victory Services in Chicago.

The Bishop of Chicago, Dr. Anderson, early last week issued a letter to the clergy of the Diocese urging that preliminary "peace Thanksgiving Services" be held in all the Churches on Sunday, November 17th. At the Cathedral the service consisted of a Solemn Procession, the "Peace Eucharist," and a Solemn Te Deum, followed by prayers of thanksgiving. The Cathedral clergy officiated. The most elaborate service was held at St. James' Church. The music of the service was directed by Mr. John Norton, who for nine years was organist of the Parish. Mr. Norton is now the bandmaster of the First Regiment, Great Lakes Naval Band. This band, with the organist and choir of the Parish, furnished the music for the service. The Procession formed in the Parish House on Rush Street, proceeded north on Rush Street, to Huron, west on Huron to Cass Street, and into the church. The flags of nine of the Allied nations were carried, and the diplomatic representatives of the countries followed the colors in the procession. There were present officially, Mr. Horace Nugent, C. M. G., the British Consul-General, Mr. C. D. Xanthopoules, Consul-General of Greece, Dr. C. Vermeren, Consul of Belgium; Andres Abela, Consulate Chancellor of Cuba; M. Marcel de Verneuil, Acting French Consul; Mr. S. Kurusu, Consul of Japan; Mr. d'Allagno, Vice Consul of Italy; Mr. Stewart A. Alexander, Consul of Brazil. The United States Army was represented by Col. H. O. S. Heistand, Adjutant General U. S. A., and the United States Navy by Capt. E. A. Evers, U. S. N. R. F., Commanding Officer, Municipal Pier. The sermon was a forceful one, the Rector of the Parish, Dr. James S. Stone, being the preacher. The Rev. Frederick L. Gratiot, S. T. B., assisted in the service. At St. John's Italian Church on the North Side, the exterior of the church was illuminated on Saturday and Sunday night with strings of electric lights of the colors of the United States and Italy. The Rev. Joseph Anastasi, the Priest in Charge, offiiated at Solemn Vespers, on Saturday night, the Rev. Albert E. Selcer, of the Cathedral assisting. On Sunday a Solemn Eucharist of Thanksgiving was sung.

Anniversary Gifts for Chicago Rector.

The Rev. Edwin Jarvis Randall, the Rector of St. Barnabas' Church, Chicago, recently celebrated his silver jubilee. Mr. Randall has been in continuous service in the Parish for twenty-five years, beginning as a lay reader in a little wooden chapel building, continuing during his diaconate, and for many years as Priest-in-Charge. During this period a Parish House was erected, services being held in the auditorium. Finally the Mission became a Parish, and Mr. Randall was elected its first Rector. Within the past few years a beautiful Parish church has been erected. A banquet, which was postponed from the latter part of October to this month (on account of the influenza epidemic) was held in the Parish House. Both Bishops, Drs. Anderson and Griswold, were present and responded to toasts. The ladies of the Parish presented Mr. and Mrs. Randall with two beautiful silver candlesticks, while the Vestry sent twenty-five American beauty roses, marking the completion of twenty-five years of service.

Scouts Sell Liberty Bonds.

The Boy Scouts of St. Barnabas' Troop sold fifty-four bonds of the Fourth Liberty Loan, amounting in all to $2,700.00. This work was accomplished during the last three or four days of the drive.

The North-Eastern Deanery Meeting.

The annual meeting of the North-Eastern Deanery was held at Grace Church, Chicago, on Monday, November 18th. The Rev. John H. Edwards, Rural Dean, was the celebrant at the Communion service, and presided at the sessions of the Deanery. The Rev. John Henry Hopkins, D.D., the Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, South Side, in an interesting account of the "Colored Work in the Diocese of Chicago," told of the problems confronting St. Thomas's Mission Parish, of which the Rev. John H. Simons, is Priest-in-Charge, because of the coming of large numbers of Negroes from the South into Chicago. He described the work minutely, acquainting the clergy with the efficiency of the service rendered this important field of activity. The Rev. Edward Sidney White, S. T. B., followed with a paper on "The Rural Work in the Diocese." Both papers were followed by interesting discussions. The ladies of Grace Church served a "cafeteria luncheon." The Dean at luncheon gave some very interesting reminiscences of the "old days" of the Deanery, when the Rev. Clinton Locke, D.D., who for many years was Rector of Grace Church, was Dean of the North-Eastern Deanery. The speaker at the afternoon session was the Rev. Edwin J. Randall, the Rector of St. Barnabas' Church, whose subject was "The Call of the Church." This paper was followed by a spirited discussion. The next quarterly Chapter meeting will be held at the Church of the Atonement, Edgewater.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

DIOCESE OF NEVADA FAVORS PROHIBITION

In the address of the Bishop of Nevada to Convocation in 1916 was the following paragraph:

From careful observation and many inquiries I have come to the conclusion that the time is at hand for the inauguration of a movement looking to putting on the statute book a prohibition law. I believe this end will be best and most quickly attained through the initiative. In the matter of prohibition there is no question—only the need of drafting a law without a hole for the escape of a drop. This is a matter for lawyers and the most competent in the state to secure. The initiative petition requires the signatures of voters in number equal to 10 per cent of those registered at the last general election. I am sure there will be little difficulty in getting the 3,000 signatures necessary. I ask for the full discussion of this matter by the Convocation, for the co-operation of every Churchman in the state and for a committee willing to give time and effort during the next six months to the accomplishment of this much desired enactment. There is no doubt where the Church stands on this important matter. The only question is how hard will the individual Churchman work to better conditions in the state of Nevada. The passing of this law would do more for the best interests of every resident than anything else. Your efforts can be expended to no better purpose surely. I am sure you will put this convocation on record as standing unqualifiedly for improvement in the liquor situation."

Convocation considered the matter and passed the following resolution: "Resolved, That we favor the submission to the voters of Nevada of an initiative petition providing for state-wide prohibition, to be sent by them to the Legislature for enactment."

The petition and bill were drawn up by a Committee of Convocation, Hon. George S. Brown. Rev. Lloyd B. Thomas, and Robert G. Wothers, Esq. The petition was duly circulated and over 8,000 signatures put on it, instead of the 3,000 needed. It was presented to the Legislature of 1917, which refused to pass the law. A campaign of education was begun in which many took part. The bill was placed on the ballot this month, according to law, and was carried by a majority of 5,000. The law goes into effect Dec. 16, 1918, and is bone-dry in the dryest measure.

GIRL'S FRIENDY SOCIETY.

Miss May Case Marsh, Field Secretary of the War Emergency Committee of the G. F. S. A., recently spent a few days in Atlanta, Ga., studying local conditions and visiting the Incarnation Branch of the G. F. S.

The G. F. S. A. is an organization for all girls irrespective of class and is an international society founded in England in 1875 with a membership of over 500,000, one-tenth of which is in this country. The society wishes in the present national emergency to put its experience at the service of the whole country. It is with this idea of serving the girlhood of the whole United States that the War Emergency Committee has been appointed to do the work which the local branches could not accomplish. It is working directly under the Church's War Commission and has its advisors.

The Presiding Bishop, The Rt. Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle, D. D.

The Chairman of the War Commission, The Rt. Rev. Wm. Lawrence, D. D.

The Executive Officer of the War Commission, The Rt. Rev. Theodore Irving Reese, D. D.

Mrs. Harold Brown, of Newport, R. I., is its Chairman and Mrs. Alfred Aiken of Worcester, Mass., its treasurer.

Organized a year ago this month, this committee has already accomplished a great deal, among other things the following:

It has established two Traveler's Aid Agents in Southern Ohio at Chillicothe, near Camp Sherman.

It has taken charge in New Rochelle of the Girls' Division of War Camp Community Service under the Fosdick Commission.

At Elizabeth, N. J., community interest has been aroused which has resulted in the gift of a house, to be used as a Lodge, and the formation of a Community Committee which has raised enough money to equip and establish this house which will also serve as a recreation center, bureau for housing and for employment with special regard to the needs of workers in the large aeroplane factories.

At San Francisco the Lodge has been enlarged to accommodate the vast numbers of girls going to that city for employment.

Posters and pamphlets have been sent throughout the country calling upon girls and women to give themselves for work and service.

The G. F. S. is acting as hostess at the Y. M. C. A. hut at Fort Myer on Sunday afternoons for families and friends of soldiers.

Help has been given in the new Liberty Loan campaign and War Savings societies are being formed.

Last February at the request of Bishop Perry, who was then Executive of the War Commissioin, Miss Marsh made a tour through the Middle West and as far south as Texas to arouse interest, to organize work for girls, to form Patriotic Leagues, and to train volunteer leaders. While in Texas she organized eighteen new branches of the G. F. S., one diocesan and one city federation. A G. F. S. lodge, accommodating fifty girls is soon to be opened in San Antonio. Upon leaving Atlanta, Miss Marsh will return to Texas to assist in opening the lodge and to tabilize the splendid work she began last spring.

JOE.

In one of the big tenement houses in the most congested section of a large Pennsylvania city, a Slovak missionary took me up some dark, winding stairs, opened a little, creaky door, and we saw Joe. Joe's father is in the insane asylum, having been seriously injured in the blast mills. His mother goes out washing every day, from seven until six, and Joe, because he is reliable, stays in the house all day and takes care of Helen, aged two.

His mother leaves five cents on the mantel-piece up high, and when the whistle blows Joe climbs on a chair, then on a table, and buys something to eat. Sometimes it is coffee, sometimes cake, sometimes bread, and sometimes candy.

At first Joe talked to the missionary in a language they both knew, but which I could not understand. He wanted her to see how beautifully he had made the bed, and tried to clean up the floor, and how hard he worked to keep Helen from getting too near the stove, where she might get burned, and also he had to keep her from hanging out the window, or the sparks from the great blast furnace might burn her hands or hair.

Suddenly he looked at me and asked the missionary in an excited way, if I did not come from the land of Santa Claus, and to tell me that he wanted "a cowboy hat, a red handkerchief that could live under his chin and did not have to stay in his pocket, some trousers with fringe, and a gun that went off with a bang, and lots and lots of rope." "Why, Joe," we said, 'if you had a gun you might shoot somebody." He answered with great scorn, "A twenty-five cent gun doesn't hurt when it hits," and so I left the money for the outfit.

After Christmas I received a letter from the missionary saying, "I forgot to tell you that there are six children in the family, and when there are six little brothers and sisters, one cannot have a cowboy suit; there must be six or none. So I bought stockings for the entire group, but I did give Joe a red handkerchief, some rope and a twenty-five cent gun. He is perfectly satisfied, and his eyes actually sparkled when he said, "Of course anybody with a big family like mine (he was six years old, remember, and had already learned to be reliable) can't have everything."

Can't have everything? No, nobody can, but Joe can have a Sunday School, pictures, Christmas boxes and gifts if somebody that you know will save and share what that same somebody has.—From the Missionary Council.

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL
OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

THE "FLU" EPIDEMIC

(Continued from page 1)

was greater in the daily operation of the many business places than from the weekly services of the few Churches, the Church-closing order was largely a farce as far as really safeguarding the health and lives of our people is concerned. It looked, moreover, as if a higher value was being placed upon the dollar than upon human life.

The Churches, therefore, had the right to protest this unfair discrimination against their helpful work, and they owed a duty to their constituents to use all proper means to secure more effective safety measures. We asked no special privileges. but we did want, and were entitled to, a "square deal."

An appeal was therefore courteously made to the civil authorities, on the ground that if they were as afraid of the "flu" germ as they professed to be, they would curtail its freedom as drastically in the market place as in the churches. And our confidence was well founded, as recent developments have shown.

Believing that the proper official action is now in process of being taken to safeguard the vital interests of the community, we cheerfully bend every effort to the fullest cooperation with the civil authorities in their difficult task.

The Churches, therefore, as law-abiding institutions, will remain closed so long as such restrictions are necessary in all other places of our community life. And we appreciate the whole-hearted way in which commercial interests have responded since the public danger has been laid before them.

Moreover, the several Churches, Catholic and Protestant, desire to be advised of any ways in which they can be of direct service to families who are affected by the epidemic A telephone call to the clergy is all that is needed.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

(Continued from page 1)

cold waters next time finds you trembling on the brink, to begin all over again with the same dread and mortal fears.

Look well at your present life and judge to what extent it is built upon the sands. View the home, the soft luxuries, the material comforts about you, then ask, "what shall I do when I pass into a world where beauty is spiritual and all adornments the charms and virtues of the soul?" Stand in the office, shop, busy center of trade, looking above you at revolving wheels and ledgers crammed with figures, then reflect, how can I live without this business which so fills my soul? Can I be happy in a world where there are no markets, no newspapers, where the industry is the heavenly activity of the soul and the only occupation to carry out the will of God? As you contemplate your savings and bank balances, think how soon must all this gold fall from your unconscious fingers, and you shall enter upon a life where the only wealth is spiritual treasure laid up by a life of holiness and love.

Sit loosely to all earthy things. Hide your life with Christ in God. Open your eyes to the reality of the spiritual world which encompasses you. You enter into it by holy baptism. You live in it by the heavenly food of the Eucharist. Angelic beings surround you. Supernatural helps uplift you. Go often into the church and in the shadow of its walls think on these things. At altar, font, chancel rail and pulpit stand the white-robed priests of God calling you to the celestial banquet while yet there is time. Turn to God, who is speaking to you in deep tones of love. He would unite you more perfectly to His beloved Son, that you may thereby be drawn closer to the Father's heart, beyond the dissolving present into the life that abides."

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

A PATRIOTIC PAGEANT

BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE— SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Democracy Saving the World

A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.

Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year

ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.

By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.

A Pageant Has Wonderful Educational Power

If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.

THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.

Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

Confirmation Instruction

By Bishop Johnson of Colorado.

A very valuable Manual to place in the hands of candidates for Confirmation.

Send 25 cents for a sample copy.

Price, $2.00 a dozen.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Private Prayers for the Faithful

By Bishop Sage of Salina.

A Manual which thousands of Church people have found helpful in their private devotions at home and in church.

Price, 10 cents. Postage 4c.

"My people find the book of prayers very helpful and I think it is in every home in my parish."—Carl W. Nau, Emporia, Kan.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Parochial Mission Supplies

Use our Printed Matter.

Send for Samples.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The District of Salina

The Bishop called a conference of the clergy for Thursday, Nov. 7, at the Cathedral. All of the clergy were present except the Rev. Mr. Kain. After the daily morning offices in the Chapel, the Bishop celebrated the Holy Eucharist and addressed the clergy. At noon intercessions were offered and the clergy were the guests of the Bishop in the new Bishop's House. A general conference took place during the afternoon in the Bishop's study, when methods of work and opportunities for advance were discussed. Altogether the Bishop and clergy feel greatly strengthened by this day of mutual conference and fellowship.

A great community patriotic peace service was held in Salina Sunday evening, Nov. 17, arranged for by Bishop Sage, who first announced the service at the Cathedral, but later, upon the request of the County Council of Defense, the Bishop transferred the service to the large convention hall, that more citizens might attend. The speakers included Bishop Sage., the mayor of the city, representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, the County Council of Defense, the Pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and the Vicar of the Cathedral, the Rev. Dr. E. H. Rudd. The Cathedral Choir was assisted by all the choirs of the city and the community band.. The lesson was read by the President of the Ministerial Association, and all the ministers of the city sat in a body on the platform. The Bishop, Cathedral clergy and choir were vested, and the service was one specially authorized by Bishop Sage.

St. Barnabas Hospital was in charge of the nursing of the boys at the Student Army Training Camp, Salina, during the recent epidemic and the Sisters and Nurses did a valuable and effective work in this connection. While it was regretted that the nursing staff could not respond to all the calls for help in the town, still about a hundred cases were cared for. Some few colored patients living near the Hospital were cared for, and served with food from the Hospital.

Misses Neva Anderson and Edna Brown having been released by the Hospital for military duty, the three Sisters who are graduate nurses and the pupil nurse compose the nursing staff. The Sisters are enrolled in the Red Cross as Home Defense Nurses. Mother Mary Helena, the Superintendent of the Hospital is Chairman of the Nursing Service in the Salina County Red Cross Chapter, and has served on the Kansas State Committee for Red Cross Nursing Service which is appointed from Washington, since the beginning of the war. She has recently received the Chevron which has been given by the American Red Cross to a few nurses throughout the United States who are eligible and are doing work closely in touch with the Red Cross, but are not available for military duty.

During Advent the Sunday Schools of the district are asked to make an offering in mite-boxes for Mission-work in the district. The Bishop will send tht mite-boxes and letter to the children before Advent Sunday.

One of the matters presented during the Conference of the clergy was the Pension Fund assessments and how best to meet them. A plan outlined by the Bishop was unanimously approved and immediate steps taken to put the same into execution.

Have you sent your dollar to the Bishop for your subscription to THE WITNESS?

The closing order affecting all Church services throughout the district has greatly handicapped our Church work and worship for several weeks past. In only a few of our stations have services been allowed thus far to be resumed. It is hoped, however, that by next Sunday, our services may again be resumed.

Bishop Sage has inaugurated an associate mission which will care for the missions of the entire district. It will be under his personal direction with headquarters at the Cathedral. Five priests are at present connected with the mission and it is expected that the numbers will be increased.

Grace Church, Hutchinson, has during the past summer undergone extensive reconstruction. A large choir and guild room has been built, the building has been re-roofed, a new narthex added, and the whole structure stuccoed. It now presents a remarkably fine appearance, and its present improved appearance has greatly encouraged the congregation, which has increased the salary of the rector, the Rev. M. L. Kain, fifty per cent.

Bishop Sage has appointed the Rev. Alfred G. Miller to serve as Secretary of the Convocation and Registrar of the District in place of the Rev. L. W. McMillin resigned. Mr. Miller's appointment is until the meeting of the Convocation, Jan. 12-13.

TEXAS.

Victory Service at Fort Worth.

"Regardless of creed or Church," was the phraseology of invitations to "soldiers and civilians" of Forth Worth, with the aim of making the Victory Service in St. Andrew's Church, November 17th, a community Thanksgiving. Consequently the church was packed to overflowing even with all available seats from the adjacent parish-house in use. The proportion of civilian men was especially remarkable. The rector (the Rev. Fred T. Datson), choir, and congregation of Trinity parish united with their sister church for this occasion. A modified form of matins,arranged by the rector of St. Andrew's the Rev. Henry Eckel, with the approval of the bishop, provided the medium by which, with wonderfully impressive accord and hearty participation, the great mixed congregation expressed religiously their thankfulness for victory and peace. Bishop Moore officiated in the specific "Thanksgiving after Victory" of the Prayer Book, of which the "Solemn Te Deum," with ceremonial accompaniments, was the principal feature, in accordance with Anglican tradition. With altar vested in white and adorned with masses of chrysanthemums and ablaze with lights, the bishop, three priests, and seven acolytes (including two crucifers and a flag-bearer) were grouped before the altar while Buck's Te Deum was movingly sung by the combined choir of 42 voices, including several of the best known soloists of the city.

The Rev. Lyman P. Powell, D. D., LL. D., president of Hobart College, who has been campaigning in Texas for the United War Work during the past month, after a year in France, preached most impressively on the moral issues of the war. The offerings were devoted to the War Work fund.

Another large congregation, completely filling the nave and north aisle, was present in the evening, when Maunder's "Song of Thanksgiving" was sung after EvenSong for the first time in Forth Worth.

Mr. Eckel has been much in demand recently as a speaker and worker in local charity and war work campaigns, including the Texas State Conference of Social Welfare. Upwards of 100 women in this parish have been actively busy as Red Cross, canteen, and W. S. S. bank workers for many months. Some of the men of the parish also are in the fore front of the public movements of the day.

OHIO.

The Installation of Rev. G. F. Smythe, D. D. as Dean of Bexley Hall, Gambier.

The Seminary Year of Bexley Hall, The Divinity School of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, is well under way. The Seminary opened Tuesday, September 24, with Evening Prayer in St. Mary's Chapel, conducter by President Pierce of the College. Immediately after Evening Prayer, there took place the inauguration of the new Dean, the Reverend George Franklin Smythe, M. A. D. D., Colburn Professor of Homiletics and Religious Education. It was a simple but impressive ceremony of induction. The President administered the oath of installation, and the Bishop of Ohio, who was present, gave the benediction.

Dr. Smythe was elected to his office last June by the Board of Trustees, the announcement being made at commencenment. For thirteen years Dean Smythe has been connected with Kenyon College, serving as Rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, the college chapel, as college chaplain, and as a member of the faculty. He was elected to the chair of Homiletics and Religious Education in Bexley Hall in 1916. In 1911 he was appointed to deliver the Bedell Lectures on the evidences of Natural and Revealed Religion, his subject being "The God of Israel." Doctor Smythe is now engaged in writing the Centennial History of the Diocese of Ohio, a work undertaken by his predecessor, the late Dean H. W. Jones, D. D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Church Polity and Canon Law, which was cut short by his death. Dean Smythe's well known patience, skill and untiring devotion to historical investigation, give promise of the production of a work which will be of great historical interest to the Church in Ohio. All those who know the author are awaiting with interest the forth-coming work.

Dean Smythe assumed his official duties under very unusual and extraordinary circumstances, as was suggested by President Pierce in his address. For the first time in the history of Kenyon College every able-bodied student is under military discipline and training, and as the enrollment is unusually large the facilities of the college are being utilized to their utmost in an attempt to contribute to the common cause in the present crisis.

It is Dean Smythe's desire that Bexley Hall, which has already contributed a generous number of its students and alumni to the nation's services, shall not be behind the college in the faithful performance of the particular duties which have been alloted to it, viz, the preparation of young men for the serious work which will confront the Christian ministry of this generation. He is therefore doing everything possible to foster the same spirit of loyalty, self-sacrifice and devotion to duty that is displayed by the soldier in the training camp, and to this end he is receiving the hearty co-operation of the student body.

ATLANTA.

On Sunday the third of November, Mr. George Vernon Harris was ordained Deacon by Bishop Mikell in St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta. Mr. Harris was transferred to Atlanta from the Diocese of Mississippi. He is a graduate of Sewanee and is assistant to the Rev. Robert T. Philips in settlement work at La Grange.

The Diocesan Conference, held in Emmanuel Church, Athens, beginning November 5th, was a distinct success, not so much from point of attendance as from the amount of interest manifested, the breadth of vision gained, and the clearer knowledge of Prayer Book Revision obtained. The Rev. Dr. R. W. Patton, Field Secretary of the Province of Sewanee, gave the opening address, speaking on the value of education for negroes. A Quiet Hour was conducted by Bishop Mikell. Miss L. L. Snook made a splendid talk on the Advent Call and Miss May Case Marsh presented the work of the Girls' Friendly Society, Mr. A. H. Hunt, Principal of the Fort Valley School, gave a very instructive and appealing address on the work of that school for negroes, which is now under control of the Church. At a business session a change in the canons to allow women on vestries was proposed. After much discussion it was decided by vote not to recommend this change to the Diocesan Council. The climax of the conference was an inspiring missionary service. Addresses were made by the Rev. W. L. Loflin, in charge of the missionary work around Atlanta, and by Archdeacon Braithwaite, in charge of the colored work of the Diocese.

The Fall meeting of the local assembly, Daughters of the King, of the Diocese, was held at Holy Trinity Church, Decatur, Ga., on Wednesday, Nov. 13th. Bishop Mikell celebrated the Holy Communion assisted by the Rev. V. C. Lacey, and gave an inspiring address on "Immortality." The question, "What Do You Want and Expect of Your Chapter?" was answered by the Rev. Messrs. C. H. Lee of Macon, W. W. Memmiger of All Saints', Atlanta; Israel H. Noe of the Incarnation, Atlanta, and V. C. Lacey of Trinity, Decatur.

Altanta has never witnessed a more beautiful and impressive service than the victory service held at All Saints' Church on Wednesday, November 13th. Bishop Mikell gave the address.

PARISH LEAFLET PUBLICATIONS

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand, ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service and for giving notices—"Lest he forget." Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM — In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS — New Families Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial, 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT CARDS—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 25 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.50. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses.
Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms — Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.

The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a 100.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches), to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above cards for One Dollar.

Vestiblue Bracket — Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant With God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England — A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church—Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People—A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS.

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Four-page folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies, $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies, 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards.
   Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14). First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA.
Worthy of Universal Adoption.

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching," which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet, or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—

1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Misisonary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES:—

The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.

2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson—a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:—

Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:

Looking for a Church.
Facts of Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
The Evening Service.
Henry XIII.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government, to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, IND.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 101. HOBART, IND., AND CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 7, 1918. $1.00 A YEAR

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by GRACE WOODRUFF JOHNSON.

The Retort Deadly.

"It would be worth something to know who it was that uttered the pertinent answer of an American soldier to the German prisoner who said: 'What we can't understand is where you got ships enough to bring you all over.' Said the American: 'It took but one. The Lusitania brought us over.'"

"The Stars and Stripes, the organ of the American expeditionary forces, arranged for Nov. 4 as the day upon which all the American troops should write home to father.

"Special delivery arrangements are under way in order that 'Father's Day' shall be as successful as 'Mother's Day' May 12 last. It is hoped that the fathers wrote to their sons on the same day."

You Who Have Given.

You, whose brave faces mask your deadly pain,
Who know too well the void of days to come,
Think not that 'mid our joy you are forgot:
You who have given.
Apart from waving flag and shouting throng,
Deep in our hearts we guard a silent shrine.
There shall we hold you close with those dear boys:
Not lost, but given."

—R. M. B., Nov. 11, 1918.

The Federal Census Bureau shows us that Boston has passed St. Louis in the race for population supremacy and Cleveland has passed Boston so that the order now for cities, largest in the United States, as to population is: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Boston, St. Louis. Cleveland has advanced by leaps and bounds, also Toledo.

This estimate was made in July, 1918. Chicago, Philadelphia and Washington made great gains in population this last year, while New York, Buffalo and Denver have decreased, due probably to the shifting around of war-workers. There will undoubtedly be a re-adjustment when normal times return.

Seeing And Thinking.

Helen Keller contributed $500 to the Blind Relief War Fund for soldiers and sailors with some characteristic comments on the condition with which she of all others is supremely qualified to sympathize. The blind author hopes that our boys who come back sightless from the war will at least enjoy that "perpetual consolation in work" which the war department and its educational agencies are trying to incur.

But she would remind the stricken home-comers of another consolation, which is within their reach and is even more precious still to be resorted to when "the outside world with its blaze of beauty and myriad of "thinking quietly all by oneself?" Are we not as a rule, so much engaged with the "obvious things" that the treasures of the mind become almost as foreign to us as are the objects we see to those who are blind?

Education, study, reading, are all means of providing us with the inner resources we need even in hours of well-being, but most of all in times of stress. How much do we draw on them either for private contemplation or for intercourse with our kind?

Herbert Spencer noted years ago that conversation is mainly made up of obvious things—of the weather, the price of eggs and butter, of what Dick said, where Tom went, and what Harry is doing; and it is still true that any adequate report of talk heard in public cars, in social gatherings and on the street, would be full of these bits of flotsam and jetsam caught from the surface of life as it seethes and bubbles around us.

It has been said that as we do not care to be reminded of what we do nor possess, so we look askance at people who undertake to tell us the things we do not know. There is even a fear abroad lest in a company of well-assorted individuals some iconaclast should suddenly dip down for a topic into "the treasures of the mind."

But exceptions go with rules, and one notable exception has been made possible by the war. It has given us plenty of occasion for "thinking quietly by oneself;" it has furnished conversational opportunities on which there is no sort of taboo.

Never before in history has the human mind been so crowded with impressions and so stirred to decisions as in these last four years.

Not only have we developed an intense interest in our own country, in its history and its ideals never felt in times of peace; lands to which we scarcely gave a thought have become our daily preoccupation, and we follow the doings of people thousands of miles away as if their destinies were intimately bound up with our own.

For we also with them are spelling out anew in lines of fire the meanings of freedom, that the eternal bounds between right and wrong shall be fixed against all comers and for all time.

And in that sacred cause, engulfing every thing petty, trivial and personal we are contributing to the higher living and deeper thinking which are to be theirs and ours long after the victory is won.—Editorial Boston Herald.

One cannot help but wonder as one looks back to that Great Day, Nov. 11, why every church in every city or village all over this vast land of ours, was not opened for Thanksgiving to God. All the people might not have left their Victory celebration and gone in, but if the churches were opened and the chance given to them the responsibility for not doing so, rested on them alone. There were some places to be sure, where the influenza ban had not been lifted, but in those same places, the theatres were opened and the crowds could be seen going through the doors. One good sincere woman, whose heart was filled with joy and thanksgiving on that day, writes:

"It made me blue to see men and women intoxicated on a day like that. I could not stay and watch such things

(Continued on page 7)

THE CHURCH WAR COMMISSION.

No More Chaplains Will Be Commissioned—Appropriations for Work.

The Rev. Dr. Washburn, Executive Secretary of the Church War Commission, received from Adj. General Brown, Washington, D. C., the following communication: "The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 18th instant, in regard to the appointment and assignment of chaplains, and in response you are informed that, under War Department orders, due to the cessation of hostilities, no more chaplains will be commissioned nor assigned to duty overseas."

In other words, says Dr. Washburn, the War Department has issued an order that no more chaplains of any denomination will be commissioned. At the time of writing it is impossible to say what action the War Department will take in regard to the demobilization of chaplains who are already overseas or of our commissioned chaplains who are on duty in camps in this country. The War Commission will keep the public in touch with matters like this through the Church papers. The War Department has sent an approved list of civilian chaplains to a representative in Washington of the General War-time Commission of the Churches, who in turn has forwarded this list to the War Department. The War Department is holding this list inasmuch as it is not willing to publish any list until all the Churches have furnished the names of their approved chaplains. It now looks as if the plan of the War Department were to approve of a comparatively short list of approved chaplains, to send the names of these men to the Camp Commandant, and to allow the commissioned chaplains under such Commandant to summon these men for occasional services, as the commissioned chaplain may deem wise. In other words, a renewal of the former status of the civilian chaplains does not seem likely.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee, held on Nov. 20, among the appropriations made was one of $5,000 to Bishop Tucker for a church building about to be erected at Hilton, Va., in the midst of the shipbuilding community. The appropriation was made in consequence of the recent visits of Bishop Reese and the Rev. Mr. Elmendorf to that vicinity.

Five thousand dollars was appropriated to Bishop Perry for the salary of the Rev. Arthur L. Washburn, War-time Assistant at Holy Trinity, Paris, and for expenses incidental to the work of that position, such work being principally among soldiers and sailors.

Seven thousand dollars to the General War-time Commission of the Churches, to be used for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of inter-church work, including the cost of campaign of publicity, pending the time when funds will be available from the joint campaign, and with the understanding that the amounts thus advanced will be credited to the respective denominations in apportioning the total budget.

Six thousand eight hundred and fifty-five dollars to the Girls' Friendly Society to finance their war work between the present amount and the time when further funds will be forthcoming after the appeal to the Churches about the first of February.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

Everyone Should Get Into the Temperance Fight.

"It would appear from reports of the Fall elections that John Barleycorn is about to be overthrown," writes Mr. E. F. Bliss of Schenectady, N. Y., in a letter to The Witness. "Many of the temperance people are very positive of it. It is just as well not to be too sure. A few weeks ago it looked as though the Devil would surely dine in Paris Now he is chained. The American saloon is preparing for a last grand stand this winter. If the Federal Prohibition Amendment is not ratified in 1919 it may not be for some time to come. The coming of peace will be apt to make many people less religious, less patriotic and less apt to stand for the right along all avenues of life, for you know, 'When the Devil was sick the Devil a Saint would be, when the Devil got well, the Devil a Saint was he.' I believe every man from Bishop to altar boy and every organization that stands for the betterment of humanity should get right into this fight with all their power so as to insure ratification before March 1st."

The War Work Drive to Victory.

"The United War Work Campaign is over and the result is the largest sum ever provided through voluntary offerings in the history of mankind," says Dr. John R. Mott. "When the unfavorable circumstances which attended this great effort are borne in mind, the result becomes all the more remarkable. No great campaign was ever preceded by such a brief preparation. Even the scant two months left for this purpose were cut into for three weeks by the Fourth Liberty Loan, and near the threshold of the campaign itself, by a general congressional election.

"More serious still was the nation-wide spread of the deadly influenza epidemic, which had a death-toll of twice as many lives as America has laid down in the War. The speaking program had virtually to be abandoned.

The signing of the armistice, which thrilled and absolutely absorbed the minds and hearts of the people, claimed the initial day of the campaign with its spontaneous celebrations. In addition, certain states devoted the following day to a peace holiday. The confused or conflicting statements regarding the policy of demoblization as given out near the close of the campaign undoubtedly constituted another handicap, notwithstanding the clear and satisfying deliverances on the subject which were made by the War Department.

"In the face of all these and other very real difficulties and handicaps, the fact that the leaders and friends of the co-operating agencies have been able to carry the campaign through with such signal success and favor is nothing less than marvelous and constitutes an event truly worthy of the great days in which we are living and of the great cause for which men have been dying."

Nothing To Do Except To Preach On Sundays?

"The thought that a clergyman has little to do except to preach on Sundays," says the Rev. J. A. Schaad, rector of Trinity Church, Bay City, Mich., "is still imbedded in the minds of many, otherwise well-informed people. These Churchless Sundays have occasioned continuous expressions of it On every hand we are greeted on this wise: 'Well, you are having an easy time of it these days.' Or, 'I see you are having a vacation now.' Or, 'Nothing to do these days, eh!' In view of the facts in the case this is funny without being humorous.

"Speaking personally, I was a busy layman until past the age of 30, but I never really knew what it meant to be busy until I entered the mmistry. Any man who does his duty in that office is called upon for longer hours, and to meet more exacting demands, than is required of laymen. As a matter of fact, I have for years spent as many hours a day as a layman, in administrative work or my pastoral work, and then prepared my sermons and other public addresses while he either played or slept.

"It is a singular thing that the people who are most pronounced in expressing, as a grievance, the fact that 'the rector has not called,' or that someone else has been delinquent, are usually the least attentive to their own duty as to Church worship and work. In the aggregate, I have listened for hours to the grievances, usually imaginary, and other excuses, given by self-confessed non-attendants, non-contributors and non-workers.

"Whether God will accept these excuses for the non-obedience to His clearly expressed will, is something of a hazard; for He sees through the camouflage. "God cannot be mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.' Who, for example, will dare say to God some of the things they try to palm off on the parson as reasons for non-Church attendance: 'I had to go to Church so much, as a boy, that I have had enough.' Probably, however, this same person would not blame his parents for making him come to meals so often. Probably, too, he needs the spiritual help and work of the Church even more than he needed to eat so often. And perhaps, if he had so thoroughly cut out eating as he has cut off going to Church, his body would be as small and weak as his soul has become.

Or this: 'Sunday is the only time I have to play golf, fish, hunt, drive, sleep, etc.' Well, what if it is? Since when are these things 'necessary to salvation?' And since when is refusal to obey God a passport to heaven? Besides, there is plenty of time for all necessary recreation of the body after one's duty to God has been performed, and the soul has been refreshed at one of the Sunday morning services. God said 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' and Christ added, 'Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God.' These commandments have never been annulled."

Is There Danger of Contagion From the Cup in the Holy Communion?

"This is an age of change. Nothing is safe from the hands of the iconoclasts," says the Rev. Dr. R. Marshall Harrison, rector of St. Paul's Church, Bellingham, Wash., who is strongly opposed to the method of administering the Blessed Sacrament by intinction, which has been authorized by a number of Bishops, and practiced in a large number of parish churches during the influenza epidemic. "One would suppose" continues Dr. Harrison, "that a venerable and sacred institution such as that of the Lord's Supper ought to be safe, even in such

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

SAINT STEPHEN'S DAY.

December 26th.

By the Rev. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

The Collect.

Grant, O Lord, that, in all our sufferings here upon earth for the testimony of thy truth, we may stedfastly look up to heaven, and by faith behold the glory that shall be revealed; and, being filled with the Holy Ghost, may learn to love and bless our persecutors by the example of thy first Martyr Saint Stephen, who prayed for his murderers to thee, O blessed Jesus, who standest at the right hand of God to succour all those who suffer for thee, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

For seven days after December 25, the Church says the collect for Christmas Day, thereby keeping us thinking of our physical connection with Jesus Christ, which is accomplished in baptism whereby our bodies are mystically made more fit for Him to touch, and own, and use. Today's collect brings us in contact with suffering, an experience which hardens a soul, or keeps it tender, and very sympathetic, depending on whether or not the soul is influenced by the Incarnate Word of God.

Physical Suffering for the Truth's Sake.

"All our sufferings for the testimony of thy truth." Do you suppose the composer of this prayer tacked on the phrase "for the testimony of thy truth" because he had found out that it involved the keenest kinds of suffering for which there are no anodynes save the steadfast look and faith? To endure suffering has always been one ambition of mankind. In the traditions of people everywhere one reads the story of endurance to which men finally gave the name "stoic." It is a different kind of endurance of suffering from the endurance called "Christian" in this respect, that the Christian's endurance is his witness to the real values of life, whereas the stoic's endurance is his own witness to self-control as a matter of pride. In the matter of physical and mental endurance of sufferings for a Cause, our generation has had wonderful illustration. The story of heroic endurance as witnessed at sea and on the field, and on transports and in the base hospitals is a story that thrills the race with honest pride, and like a strong fresh wind drives into mist the complaint and self-pity of those who suffer in their beds at home. And when the record of splendid endurance is made up, there will run through the recital, I am sure, the shimmer of the steel threads of a steadfast upward look, and a real, if often, inarticulate faith. The days of physical suffering for the truth's sake, it has been said and preached, were over. But the Boxer Rebellion in China, and the Great War just about to end show this statement to be premature. In this connection of the Christian endurance of physical suffering for the truth's sake, this collect must often have been on the lips of our Chaplains at the Front.

The Mental and Spiritual Suffering Endured by Christians.

There is a subtler suffering, however, which Christians are called upon to endure, and it is caused by a poison which, it seems, continually defies the transmitting touch of the love of God, and is hard to conquer and eliminate. It is the mental and spiritual suffering which a follower of the Christ must endure, as the coarseness, brutality, bestiality and devilish attacks of ignorant and prejudiced people stab deep a spirit which is sensitive to the good, the pure, the beautiful, the true. It is hard to have the spirit of Stephen when one's character, which is his life, is being murdered; but it is easier to endure such sufferings in a Christian spirit, than it is to hold hard on to Christ when someone else is being murdered. Yet, as I write these lines, verbal murders are being committed by religious prejudice; and verbal murderous attempts are being made by political prejudice which must involve keen sufferings that are so exquisite that words cannot portray them, and we are not moved enough, even to turn away. If we are indifferent to the sufferings of others caused by political, social, religious prejudice and passion, does it not indicate that our upward look is dim, and our faith is mere lip profession? And has it ever occurred to you to look well into your own ways lest by word or deed or even thought you are in danger of becoming a soul murderer? Pray that the Holy Ghost may fill you; that you may become an incarnation of the Christ's spirit—one who beholds Him steadfastly and clings to Him with the faith "that He doeth all things well." It is only by this vision that one can keep the bloody figure of St. Stephen in memory, as the White Christ's birthday comes to rouse us to our responsibility of bringing "peace to men of Good Will."

For the Epistle. Acts vii. 55.

Stephen, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God. Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord, and cast him out of the city, and stoned him; and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul. And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep.

"Being full of the Holy Ghost." Two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time; if the natural law works in the spiritual world, two ghosts cannot occupy the same space at the same time. St. Stephen was full of, or filled with, the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost possessed him, owned him because Stephen did not keep back any part of his life from God. The Church which gives all of itself to God cannot help but be possessed by God. So with the individual. If we insist on keeping no part of life away from the light of God, we cannot help but be full of the Holy Ghost, and every other ghost will have to depart.

"Stephen looked up." Looking up is the act of a man who knows where real help comes from. Generally when a man is down, he can look for help from his surroundings, and his look will not go unrewarded; the under dog can generally muster a few friends and advocates. But when misunderstanding, the mother of prejudice, and sister of hate, confronts a man, then his only help lies in the upward look. Hence the wisdom in that phrase "When the outlook is dark, try the up-look;" and if you have the Holy Ghost inside you, and if you remember "its dogged that does it," your faith and look will have their reward.

Heaven, and God, and Man Seen in Close Contact!

"I see heaven opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God." Heaven and God and man seen in close contact! That was an impossible vision for a Greek proselyte to have, so prejudice nerved the arm to pick up the rock and smash the blasphemer, after he was excommunicated. When men begin to argue in a loud voice, you may be sure that prejudice has sifted her poisons on the group: when men stop listening and shut their ears to speech just because it is not known to them, prejudice begins to distill her black and bitter poison: when men unite with one accord and cast an upright white life out of their community, Prejudice and her mother are busy holding the crowd together by their unreasoning and unreasonable speech; when to expedite matters they resort to violence, Hatred has captained their forces. When intelligence can be brought to witness persecution, be sure misunderstanding is using a smoke cloud to befog the vision and distort for the beholder the true meaning of their action. The Church's mission is to break down, clear away, transform, misunderstanding, prejudice, and hatred. If she fails in this, she is breeding vipers and scorpions in her own bosom, whose venom shall poison all her words and deeds. Pray not to prejudice, pray to hold in balance both truth and counter-truth. Then will the sting be drawn from hatred, and a great natural passion and power be freed for the touch of God to change it into love.

Let the Body Bend With the Will and Intellect Before the Author of Life.

"He kneeled down:" That action must have made a great effect on the one who told the story to the chronicler. One can pray in any position, just as one can pray without articulating a word; but the body has its part to play in witnessing to the divinity of Jesus Christ, and no better posture than kneeling has been found. In our prayer-life especially let our bodies help our spirits, let the body bend with the will and intellect before the Author of Life, and its effect will be noted where we least expect it, and its influence be perpetuated where we had not dreamed. The Great War is filled with examples where "He kneeled down" has had a most inspiring influence and result.

The Gospel. St. Matt. xxiii. 34.

Behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city: that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathered her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Why Should Men Want to Kill the Prophets?

Why should men want to kill the prophets who tell forth a message from God: why should men want to crucify and scourge people whose wisdom is not earthly, sensual, devilish? Why should persecution follow from city to city those who write down and publish great matters from the Books of Nature and God? Why should the blood of righteous men come on us? In order that we may see how fearful and dreadful and wicked a thing is prejudice and her breed, and above all and worse than all, is religious prejudice. The Church of Jesus Christ, when she fosters prejudice, has turned herself where she has neither eyes, nor voice, nor hands for the Light and Wisdom and Love of the world to use.

"All these things shall come upon this generation." Every generation must realize that the Incarnate Christ has for it a distinct message, a distinct promise, a distinct warning: and unless such messages, promises and warnings are heeded, there must also be forthcoming a lament. Read the words of Jesus with historical perspective for color and atmosphere, and right points of view; but remember that if His words are only historical words to you that the power to live your life as God meant you to live it has been taken from you. St. Stephen's day comes once every year to make us realize how prejudice, misunderstanding and hatred have made the celebrations of the birth of the Prince of Peace, occasions that have wrung laments from the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and grieved the Holy Spirit beyond words.

The Reason For the Classic Lament of the Ages.

"Ye would not." Here is the reason for the classic lament of the ages, which also fits every generation of people and places, who have had great privileges given them for the use of others and the welfare of all, and used them not. "Ye would not." Man can fill his heart with a spirit which can drive out the Holy Spirit. It is the Spirit of Self Will. No one can keep you prejudiced, if you will to know all sides of a case. No one can make you misunderstand if you insist on putting yourself in the other man's place; no one can keep you hating and hatful if you determine to say "Blessed is He that cometh in name of the Lord." Until we say this with all our hearts, we shall not see Him. Unless we give all of ourselves as did St. Stephen to God, we cannot suffer for the truth's sake; we cannot look steadfastly up—there will be no sustaining vision. There is a custom in many places to sing this lovely welcome before the prayer of consecration in the service of the Holy Communion. Let us as we sing it publicly or pray it privately, remember that there is a chance not to see the Christ even then, unless we will to give ourselves, our souls, our bodies unreservedly to the influence of the Holy Spirit. St. Stephen did this, so in connection with the yearly commemoration of the coming of the Word of God in the flesh, the Saint's feast is juxtapositioned, in order that we may realize the price we must pay, and which is well worth paying, if we would see Jesus.

A THANKSGIVING AND ADVENT PASTORAL.

Bishop Funsten, of Idaho, issued the following Thanksgiving day pastoral to the clergy of his district:

It seems proper at this time that I should address to you a few words. Our Churches have been closed by the State Board of Health, so that it has been difficult to push forward our work, except through the general influence for good; in addition, I believe you have all recognized the value and power of prayer. Convey to your congregations at the first opportunity you have, my warm sympathy with all that comes into their lives. Especially, I would emphasize Thanksgiving Day, as it comes to us this year. The shadow of war, with all its pain, sacrifices and death, has, by the mercy of God, been taken away from the world. The bright beams of peace are shining on us. Once more we may come back to the thoughts of the Brotherhood of mankind and the Fatherhood of God. Our valiant soldiers have helped to win a great victory. We must not for a moment forget the great sacrifices and years of hard struggle which our Allies gave to the cause. We must never forget the splendid heroism of old England and what her armies accomplished and the protection of her mighty fleet in the struggle for freedom. France has come to us in a new light. It has showed a love of liberty and a splendid devotion which demands our admiration Italy ,too, seems almost too have been born again and has justified her claim to the splendid traditions of her long and glorious past I need not mention the courage and heroism of Belgium and Servia, nor need I speak of the love of freedom which has been showed by many other nations and colonies Today we can thankfully rejoice that, by the goodness of God, freedom has been preserved, that brutal military despotism has been overthrown, that honesty, right and faithfulness to obligations have been established as practical principles in political and commercial life, as against the assertion that "might makes right." We can rejoice that by the sacrifices that have been made, by this country and its Allies, we have established those glorious ideals the Church emphasizes in human life. A new chapter is open in the history of the world. It will be a chapter of freedom and happiness. If we obey the commandments of God and accept the blessed teachings of the Gospel of Christ. The Government which will incorporate His teachings and have for its ideal the life of Jesus Christ, will come nearest to fulfilling all that we could desire in a true Democracy.

Let us seek more earnestly than ever to develop in ourselves and in others the spirit of faith and prayer. Let us try to be loyal to our Church by attending her services and by seeing that others, especially our own family and children, are encouraged to come to her worship. I would remind you again that Thanksgiving Day should be a day above all others for us to thank God for His many mercies. Christ has been called the Prince of Peace. Surely we should be thankful for this evidence of His goodness to all who turn to Him. Let us remember with thanks the splendid service and patriotism of our leaders especially our President. Let us thank God for the unity that has been manifested and the beautiful devotion which has been exhibited by our people, both men and women. Let us praise God for those of our soldiers who have made the supreme sacrifice in giving their lives to preserve freedom and self-government on the earth. They, with those who have been spared, fought bravely to defend the homes and lives of our women and children, and therefore are to be held in everlasting honor.

Finally, let me say, my prayer is that you will begin Advent, which this year practically represents all of December, up to Christmas Day, with an earnest desire that you may be ready for the coming of the Lord and for the new and blessed day, which is now dawning on the world. Begin that new day with sincere repentance for past sins and a living faith in your Savior, Jesus Christ.

RELIEF EXPEDITION TO TURKEY

For more than a year the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief has been planning to send a commission for rehabilitation in Western Asia, immediately at the close of the war. A special committee has been making a survey of the needs, and the commission was practically organized before the armistice was signed. With the full cooperation of all the governments concerned the commission is now preparing to sail as soon as transportation conditions permit. The Chairman of the commission will be Dr. James L. Barton, Chairman of the Committee, formerly President of Euphrates College, for many years a resident of Turkey, and familiar with the language and people; Professor Edward C. Moore, of Harvard University; Dr. John Hanson Thomas Main, President of Grinnell, Iowa; Mr. Harold A. Hatch, Treasurer of Deering Milliken and Company, New York City, and Dr. W. W. Peet, for thirty-five years resident, and Treasurer of American Educational and philanthropic enterprises, in Contantinople.

In addition to the above members of the commission, the Committee is expecting to secure one or more government transports or colliers, as soon as shipping conditions permit, on which they will send from 100 to 300 experienced American workers, doctors, nurses, agricultural experts, sanitary engineers, orphanage workers, teachers, mechanics and other technically trained men and women to assist in the work of rehabilitation. Many of these workers have already been chosen from among the teachers, doctors, nurses and others formerly resident in Turkey and familiar with the language and conditions.

Dr. George Washburn, son of the founder of Robert College, Constantinople, himself born in Constantinople, but now a leader in the medical profession of America, will take the leadership of a medical unit to accompany the commission or follow with medical supplies as soon as practicable.

Some have already volunteered to go without compensation and it is hoped that a considerable number will thus give their services. Where necessary, however, moderate compensation will be provided.

The work of reconstruction in Turkey is a work of the most vital importance; it is beset with tremendous difficulties but the problems to be solved are of a nature to call out the utmost powers and the most intense enthusiasm in those who will be set to solve them.

The country occupies a strategic position from the military point of view and the economic; it is the "Key to the Old World," can menace three continents and control the sea route to India, China, Australia and Japan, and the best land route to the Far East. Its very great natural resources are almost untouched.

These resources must be developed and the survivors of the massacres must be taught how to do it and efficiently helped. The women must be enabled to support themselves and to become important factors in the industrial development of the country; the orphans must be taught trades and agricultural methods: first of all half starved, abused bodies must be restored by food, and medical care, minds and souls, seared by horrible memories aroused to new hope and ambition.

It will be an inspiring task.

—Committee News Bulletin.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

IF I HAD DIED---WHAT?

Dean Hart Considers the Life After Death and Reviews the Grounds on Which He Bases His Hopes.

During the prevalence of the "Flu" I caught the infection. The symptoms of pneumonia appeared; that disease which in England is called "The Old Man's Friend" for it assures a comparatively painless exit from this life for old people and my eighty years of wear and tear promised little hope in withstanding such an attack.

Well might I therefore "Consider my latter end" and review the grounds on which I founded my hopes that I should find myself in the other world in something more than contentment.—H. Martyn Hart.

I considered the place of man in the Universe. I remembered that our sun and his attendent planets are members of "a star cluster," that our sun is a point of light, as are the myriads of such points of light which form our Milky Way, that it is looking along the diameter of our star cluster which masses the thick of the cluster into a blush of white cloud.

There are more than 100 of these star clusters now mapped. An astronomer shewed me a telescopic photograph of one of them which was a patch of thousands of points of light so immense that a ray of light speeding at a rate of 12 million miles a minute would take 40,000 years to traverse its breadth.

We Know There is an Unseen Spiritual Universe.

It is useless to attempt in any language to describe the immensity of such a Universe and we cannot but believe that these innumerable sums are encircled by innumerable worlds freighted with infinite varieties of living things. This is what we call the Material Universe. But we also know there is a Spiritual Universe unseen and unrecognisable by us into which one of our race passes every second. That in this vast world of spiritual life there are "differences of administrations," orders of Beings not limited by material bodies of varying capacities and powers, some good and some actuated by evil and rebellious purposes. The Angels of God and the "spiritual wicked ones in high places."

I find myself an item in this stupendous Universe, a member of a race of human beings who as they now exist on the planet can be all congregated in a field 10 miles square and that the whole family of Adam if recalled from the dead and rehabilitated in bodies, might even live within the watershed of the Mississippi.

But apparently insignificant as this race of beings appears to be, nevertheless they are destined to inherit astounding powers and prerogatives. That, in fact, according to the Word of God, a revelation made to us men from the spiritual world, we were created a higher order of life than even Angels. That we, in the purposes of our Creator, were to take a leading part in the conduct of the affairs of the Universe for the unending times of coming Eternity.

Like all higher Intelligences we were endowed with Free-Will. We had the capability of choice. If this had not been so we could in no sense have been made in the image of God, responsible beings, but we should have been irresponsible machines.

Our progenitor, to whom the Creator had bestowed the capability of propogating his species, within a few months of his entrance into life, chose to disobey his Maker and by that act of setting up his own Will in defiance of the Will of God, he thereby altered the vitality which animated him. How such a change in the nature of his vitality could be effected by a single act of disobedience, we are not able to understand, for we are altogether ignorant of the nature of vitality, but the fact is patent. The first inheritor of his vitality, Cain, is no doubt described to us to illustrate how wholly corrupt human nature had become. In Cain there was no glimmer of good. He lived and died defiant of God.

There was nothing to check the descent and continued extension of this human vitality which was "alienated from the life of God," wholly poisonous and a fountain of infection. Was then the design of God to be frustrated and the being He had intended for great purposes to be hopelessly ruined? Of course not.

A Foul Spring Cannot Purify Itself.

From all biological analogy the only possible solution of the problem, how to ensure to our race a pure vitality "for corruption cannot inherit incorruption" "a foul spring cannot purify itself" was, to inject into the descending current of human vitality, a vitality of a higher order which could neutralise the poison of sin and finally so control the human being that the man would be animated no longer by his natural, vicious "lusts of the flesh" but "he would live unto God" and because of the indwelling of this spiritual vitality he could not do the things that he naturally would. The Redemption of mankind by the Death and Sacrifice of Jesus Christ "the Son of God" is the solution of the problem!

It is necessary to bear in mind that the phrase "Son of God" is the Hebrew way of expressing, not the ordinary relationship of Father to Son, but that Jesus Christ was the Deity, just as Sons of Thunder or Sons of Belial intimated an extraordinary violence of temper or a fulness of Deviltry.

Jesus Christ was God. "In Him was life" God only is the foundation of life. All life comes from Him. He alone through the Third Person of the Blessed Trinity is "The Life Giver." No doubt we shall find that all force originates from Him. St. Paul gives us the key, when he says, "By Him all things consist." All things are banded or bound together by Him; that the forces of Crystallisation, of Gravitation, of Cohesion are in reality emanations of the one reservoir of Life.

Now if a pure vitality fitted to operate through a human body was to be injected into the current of the Adamic Vitality, it could only be accomplished by the Deity Himself entering the race by the way He Himself had prescribed. That the author of all pure life should take a body of our flesh, that He should die a death in which all the blood which was the agent in building up his body left his body and so cut off the entail of the vitiated Adamic vitality is ensconced in the blood, "The blood which is the life thereof" is a frequent Biblical expression. But by virtue of his Deity He lived through the shock of human death and rose again from the dead and Ever-liveth.

Is it not wonderful that the entrance into our race of the Second Person of the Trinity should have affected the whole race "while we were yet sinners Christ died in the place of us. . . . . When we were enemies we were reconciled to God, by the death of his Son." That is the whole race is placed in an altered position towards God, "As by the disobedience of one man all were constituted sinners, so by obedience of One all were constituted righteous." As the race was affected by the First Adam, so the race is affected by the Second Adam.

Many things here lie beyond our experience and therefore beyond our understanding or even comprehension. We are children of time. Our unbroken experience of life is, that one thing follows another; we cannot conceive a condition where all is stagnant and there is no movement. St. John saw the waters of life gathered into a sea "clear as crystal." It is incomprehensible to us how Christ could have been sacrificed "before the foundation of the world." That before the Fall, Redemption was ready. St. John in the preface to his Gospel says, "already the true light existed which lighteth everyman as he cometh into the world."

All Men Benefit by the Atonement.

So that although two-thirds of men have never heard the Gospel, yet all men benefit by the Atonement wrought by Jesus Christ. The twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew describes the conditions by which the people who have never heard the Gospel are to be judged. If they have shown unselfishness and generosity they receive the commendation of the Judge and are saved. They followed and cherished the light "which lightened them when they came into the world," which I take it to mean, that we as we come into this world, are spiritually dark. The natural man is "enmity against God" and if in such a heart there occurs a sentiment of goodness and unselfishness it comes from the true light and is a proof that the Christ Life has found entrance into that heart. And if a man holds that fast which he has unto the end, he will be saved.

Where Will He Go to When He Dies?

And now where will he go to when he dies? If it be true that in God's intention we men are destined to occupy great positions of responsibility in the management of certain parts of the Universe, it is evident we must be trained for the exercise of our powers. People leave this life very differently equipped spiritually. Even that prime Christian St. Paul as he was on the brink of the other world, said from his point of view he was "the chief of sinners" and if that was the estimate of his spiritual condition what must be the unpreparadness of all others? If he confessed himself unfit for any authoritative position in the other world, how helpless must the great majority be who are only "babes in Christ." Just as with us the best of our men who have the making of officers in them, are sent to officers' training camps. Some of these men are West Pointers, others have neither notion nor practice of military matters. The Lord told his disciples that they should in the other life "Judge Angels" that is regulate and direct Angelic life. Reason would that more than a Judge or the Governor of a city we must submit to a long course of training to fulfil so distinguished a position.

And this is exactly what our Lord revealed in his last conversation with his disciples "In my Father's establishment" in God's ordering of the Universe there are many "remaining places" for that is the meaning of "Mansion." "I go" the Lord said, "to prepare a place for you" in those gathering places where you will be prepared for the special service you are destined to discharge. Even Judas Iscariot went, as St. Peter put it, "to his own place." Then said the Lord, "I will come again" for you, when your preparation shall have been completed and "receive you unto myself that where I am there ye may be also," and He is at the governing center of the Universe "the right hand of God."

This is exactly what men taught and inspired by the Spirit of the Unseen life declared, "Dear Brethren," St. John said, "we are now the sons of God, but what we shall be in the future is not yet revealed but this we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him for we shall see Him as He is."

Whoever could describe from the infant in arms the full grown man in all his strength and dignity, whoever could imagine that young carpenter making the crude sticks plows for the Nazarene county-folk should become that magnificient personage from whose brilliant body issued such overpowering rays of light as to fell Saul's horsemen to the earth and leave the great apostle's eyes impaired for his life by one momentary glance? "It doth not yet appear, dear friends, what we shall be."

So I rest content as I think of those many "I have loved long since and lost awhile" in the safe and happy places God has provided for their preparation for the special service they are destined to undertake in the governing of some parts of this illimitable Universe, for we are "Kings and Priests" in the order of God's governance.

For those who are "without God in the world," who allow pride and selfishness to thwart and finally to obliterate every generous impulse, with such I have nothing here to do. I am not their judge. And I turn from what appears a dark and foreboding outlook with the thankful remembrance "That the love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind, and the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind."

Memorial Windows

Made After the Antique Method.

BRONZE, BRASS or MARBLE TABLETS

MOSAIC PANELS
for Reredos, Altar or Baptistry.

ALTARS, PULPITS, FONTS

EAGLE or ANGEL LECTURNS

ALMS and RECEIVING BASINS

Spaulding & Co.

Michigan Ave. and Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

Plain Notes on Prayer Book Revision

An Examination of the Proposed Alterations and Additions in the Book of Common Prayer

ELEVENTH PAPER.

By the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig.

Prayers and Thanksgivings.

(Continued from last week).

PROPOSED CHANGE NO. 24.—Transfer the prayers: For those who are to be admitted into Holy Orders, from their present position, pages 40, 41, to a position immediately following the Prayers for Missions.

(Note: This should be prayer and not prayers as the proposed additional prayer for Missions was not adopted.)

PROPOSED CHANGE. NO. 25.—Transfer the Prayers for Fruitful Seasons, from their present position, page 41, to a position immediately preceeding the Prayer, For Rain.

Changes Nos. 24, 25 are intended by a rearrangement of the special prayers to place them in a more logical sequence according to subjects. Inasmuch as Prayers for those to be admitted into Holy Orders are specified for use at Ember seasons and the Prayers for Fruitful Seasons are designated for use at Rogation season and are not Special Prayers in the sense of the occasional Prayers, might it not be well to place the four prayers specified in proposed changes 24, 25, in a place to themselves at the end of the collection of Prayers instead of shifting them to a place in the middle of the collection as proposed? It is a matter, however, of little importance and needs no additional comment.

PROPOSED CHANGE, NO. 26.—In the Prayer for Fair Weather, page 39, omit in line 4 the words "for our sins," and strike out all that follows "benefit" line 7, to and including "thanks and praise." At the General Convention in 1883 the proposition was made to substitute the word "chastisement" for the word "punishments" in line 8 of the Prayer for Fair Weather, but the proposed changed was not adopted. The proposition now, as adopted by the last General Convention, is to omit all the latter portion of the prayer in addition to a clause in the first portion, so that the Prayer as revised shall read:

Almighty and most merciful Father, we humbly beseech thee, of thy great goodness, to restrain these immoderate rains, where with thou hast afflicted us. And we pray thee to send us such seasonable weather, that the earth may, in due time, yield her increase for our use and benefit. Through etc.

PROPOSED CHANGE, NO. 27.—Six new Prayers are added, as follows: In time of Calamity; For the Army; For the Navy Memorial Days; For Religious Education; and for Children. Space does not permit the printing of these Prayers in full. Their purpose is clearly shown by the titles. The Commission of 1883 proposed the addition of twenty-one new Prayers; a number of which were much to be desired, for example: A Prayer for a Person going on a Journey; For Persons preparing for Confirmation; For the Increase of the Ministry; For the Renewal of the Holy Spirit, and others. In the final Revision only one of the propesed Prayers was adopted, i. e., the Prayer for Missions together with the Prayer for Unity, (later proposed). The present Commission proposes fifteen new Prayers, of which number nine have been adopted. Of the six above mentioned new Prayers (by titles) the House of Bishops concurred with the House of Deputies in their adoption with the exception of several minor changes either in the body of the Prayer or in the title, as for example: the Commission proposed a Prayer "For the Children of the Church." The House of Bishops adopted the Prayer but changed the title to read "For Children." The Prayers proposed by the Commission and failing of adoption because of non-concurrence are as follows: For Colleges and Schools; For Social Service: and For All Who Labor. The three Prayers last mentioned were recommitted to the Commission.

In the Revision of this portion of the Book of Common Prayer the Commission omitted the present Prayer "In Times of Great Sickness and Mortality," but the recommendation of the Commission failed because of nonconcurrence and the Prayer was recommitted to the Commission. Ae resolution to revise the present Prayer for a Sick Person was also recommitted.

PROPOSED CHANGE, NO. 28.—The next change proposed was to substitute for the Prayer for a Sick Child, page 42, 43, the following:—

O Almighty and merciful Father, look down from heaven, we humbly beseech thee, upon the sick child for whom our prayers are desired. Visit him, O Lord, with they salvation, deliver him from his bodily pain and restore him to his former health that he may live to thee and to thy glory; through etc.

The resolution of the Commission was finally amended by retaining the present Prayer for a Sick Child and adding the proposed substitute as an alternative Prayer.

Next week we shall continue the discussion of the alterations and changes in the Prayers and Thanksgivings.

RUSSIAN CHRISTIANS PRAY FOR REUNION.

"It may be interesting to see that some of our friends in Russia are still remembering us," writes Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, commenting upon the letter printed below.

"The letter was brought to me by a friend who has just returned from Russia and who brought me another much longer letter from Sergius Solovioff, and many kind messages from Russians, including the Patriarch Tikhon."

To Robert H. Gardiner,
Secretary of the World Conference on Faith and Order:

Beloved Brother in Christ:

I thank you with all my heart for your kind letter. I shall always fervently pray, at the time fixed by you, for the reunion of Christians, the more so as, from my early youth, I have always prayed for it. At present, in these troubled times when the enemies of Christ are attacking Him with special zeal, it is more necessary than ever for us faithful brethren to unite as much as possible to defend the Christian faith.

Invoking upon you the Benediction of Our Saviour, I beg you to accept my sincerest regards.

Your brother in Christ,
Bishop Triphon.

Moscow, March, 1918.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Hobart, Indiana, and Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Wise, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months;
20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

LIBERTY AND AUTHORITY.

What purpose can war have but to teach us the blessings of peace and when war is over what other task confronts us but the reconstruction of self to take our place in the new era of the world's life?

To emerge into a new era with the inveterate prejudices of the old is to insulate oneself from the forces of the new.

Fundamental truths do not change with the changing years, but the deductions from those truths, which have divided the forces of Christ into the unhappy divisions of the past, do change. Old things pass away. New things arise.

Among old things which have passed away is the theory of Divine Right which has been the obsession of rulers, civil and ecclesiastic, for many centuries.

The theory that God, having appointed men to office, will sustain them in the tenacious possession of that office, whatever they may do, has been a fallacy that has maintained itself in Church and State for many generations.

Wilhelm has harped upon this theme, and called upon his God to justify him in it, until one has been nauseated by the infatuation thereof.

Let us learn this lesson in the Church. And first let us apply it to the Ecclesiastical sphere. There has been no functionary who has had a fairer opportunity to exercise his power than the Pope of Rome has had in the Great War. The present Pope failed utterly to interpret the justice of God to the needs of men, as did his predecessor, Piux IX, fail to rise to his opportunity in the nationalizing of Italy during the fifties.

There is no less edifying chapter in history, than the Papal administration of the States of the Church, and the attitude of the Papacy to ordinary justice, during those critical years, when Italy threw off the brutalities of Austria and put on the freedom of constitutional government, unless it be the regime of our own Bishops during the reign of the Georges in England.

The Pope was with Austria in her unjustifiable claims and in her brutal enforcement of those claims, and he employed foreign mercenaries to misrule the Papal States. The reason for this is to be found in the fact that Rome, both in her temporal and spiritual claims, is committed to the Divine Right idea. No less were Luther and Calvin obsessed with the idea that their theses and institutes had the force of a Papal Bull, and they brooked no opposition.

Were they not directly selected to reform a wicked Church and did not the mantle of the unfrocked high priest fall upon the holy prophet?

The rule of Geneva was fully as despotic and dictatorial as that of Rome, and the petty tyranny of narrow intolerance is exhibited just as bitterly by the followers of Wesley in one American village as by the emissaries of Rome in another.

There is a unity of the spirit in Christ's plan as there has been among the allied forces, but there are diversities of gifts and manifestations of spiritual power.

The Grace of God is a wonderful operation, but it is not confined to a single channel, for it is constantly overflowing its banks and making green fields on every side; and sometimes the regular channel gets so choked up that God's grace seeks new channels in which to operate. God's promises are dependent upon man's co-operation. If some one promises to irrigate your land by a ditch and you fill up that ditch with rubbish, the promise has no[t] must get its moisture from other Better use the ditch and kee[p] certain methods of irrigation.

So Christ designated certain channels of His grace. It was for this the ministry and sacraments were appointed, but do not think that these agencies will operate effectively if we do not keep these channels clean.

On the other hand, do not think that less regular methods are going to increase your corn and wine and oil.

If human selfishness obstructs the free flow of God's grace in the channels which He has designated; then those channels should be cleaned out.

There is no Divine Right that will justify emperor or prelate in turning the channel of living water into a private pool of selfish interest.

Unless God's minister, in Church or State, realizes that he exists to serve men and not to exalt his own prerogatives and to enrich himself he becomes an obstacle to grace, an enemy of God, and his end is destruction.

Now as individuals we seem to be unable to change the order of things. The German accepted the imperial bombast because he found it and because he was taught to believe in it and because it seemed to make him prosperous, and because he did not wish to substitute anarchy for order, chaos for prosperity.

He could look with complacency on other nations in the throes of revolution, and congratulate himself upon the efficient machine in which he was a well-oiled part.

But man is not a piece of machinery and however much he may love order and efficiency, he has an individuality that must not be suppressed.

In the long run the chaos of the French Revolution will produce a higher order of man and a more useful civilization than the well ordered machinery of Prussian Junkerism. The last is hopeless in its moral and spiritual reactions.

So we look with envy upon well ordered ecclesiastical machines, in which all thinking is done for us; in which we are merely a cog, not at all worried over the ultimate product of our spiritual endeavor.

We gladly destroy our personal initiative in the realm of the spiritual in order that we may not have to worry over results. Spiritual initiative is hard work. A large portion of the human race longs for an oracle which will solve such problems.

It has the same ultimate result in our spiritual training as it has upon the scholar who rides a pony to get up his Latin.

He substitutes temporary immunity from worry, for ultimate success as a linguist.

It makes little difference who does our thinking for us, whether it be Pope or Prophet; we arrive at the same end of spiritual paralysis.

The best governments are those in which there is a patriotic love of order, a loyal respect for constituted authority coupled with a continuous struggle between two parties, fairly balanced. In the U. S. A., from the days when Federalist and Republican struck fire on one another's shields, to the day when Republican and Democrat fought out the principles of protection and free-trade, private and government ownership of railroads, and the like, this government owes its strength to this ceaseless mental agitation, well curbed by a respect for ultimate authority.

In our nation all sorts and conditions of political theories struggle for supremacy, but there is no talk of revolt when the matter is once definitely decided.

So great questions have been settled in the face of seemingly hopeless opposition.

To any one living in America in 1820, the prophecy, that in a hundred years all slaves would have been freed, all liquors banned, and all States federated, so that the doctrine of States' Rights was reduced to a purely academic question, would have been regarded as the wildest of impossible dreams.

Yet the free play of individual opinion under the protection of recognized authority has brought these things to pass.

The weakness of our religious system and why it has degenerated into a purely academic force lies in the lack of any constituted authority under which anything ever comes to a decision.

Any Congress of religions that might be devised is merely a debating society.

Under the regime of Divine Right the Church settled all questions without allowing the matter to be further discussed.

Under our present scheme, we discuss everything without ever coming to a decision. Our political government is held together by no stronger force than public opinion.

Is there no such consensus of public opinion which can so organize the religious forces of the nation as to settle anything?

In fact each man wants nothing settled unless his own private opinion can be confirmed.

He is so mildly interested in the subject as to be irritated at the suggestion that a decision is necessary.

Religiously we are in the same condition as the Republic, after the Revolution and before the adoption of the Constitution.

The majority of our Colonial fathers did not want a federal government.

Each State (except of course the weakest ones), wanted the privilege of thinking and doing just as it pleased without interference from any federal power. If these had had their way, the U. S. A. would have been about as effective a power as the Balkan States, quarreling among themselves and sacrificing one another to the common enemy.

Such is the price of an exaggerated egoism. It is a different price from that of a mechanical imperialism.

(Continued on page 5)

STUDIES IN THE ACTS.

"Then they that gladly received His Word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the Apostles doctrine and fellowship and in the breaking of bread and the prayers."—Acts II: 41-42.

There are no verses in the Bible which equal these in setting forth the essentials of the Christian religion. Let me enumerate the cardinal points of our religion as thus recorded.

First: That the basis of it is "the gladly receiving of the Word of God." Not intellectual assent nor mechanical assent, but the joyous assent of one who finds in Jesus Christ the pearl of great price.

Second. The result of that joyous assent is an act of obedience to the Word of Jesus. "They were baptized." There was none of that callow superiority to that word which said, "Of what use is it to be baptized?" As they had gladly received the Word of God, so they gladly obeyed that Word in the initial act of obedience which identified them with the Master's fellowship.

Third. They continued steadfastly, not in their own opinions, nor in the opinion of their favorite Apostle, but they accepted that scheme of doctrine and fellowship which had upon it the approval of the whole apostolic company.

Fourth. They manifested their unity by participating in the Breaking of Bread, which was the sacrament which our Lord had solemnly charged them to continue, and in connection with this act of fellowship, they also took their part in the prayers, which at that early period were a recognized part of the Church; not merely "in prayer," says the Greek, but "in the prayers," the definite form of worship that Hebrews would naturally use, having been trained in liturgical worship from their earliest childhood.

In these remarkable verses we have a quadrilateral which must be the basis of any Church unity which shall be acceptable to that large number of Christians who regard some kind of constitutional authority as the basis of any religious solidarity.

We wish that this quadrilateral might have been stated by the authorities of the Church in a language better understood by the people, and less formal than the ecclesiastical terminology in which it was phrased.

How might we state these principles in language that is broad enough to cover the ground:

(1) That the basis of all Church membership shall be a joyous acceptance of the Word of God.
(2) That all Christians shall accept Baptism and the Lord's supper as obligations of all Church members and the Apostle's Creed as the universal doctrine essential to membership in the historic Church.
(3) That the Church is an ancient society having a constitutional method of designating its officers in an unbroken line, and that there is no reason for departing from the laying on of hands as the method of perpetuating the ministry.
(4) That the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, lawfully administered, is the test of Christian fellowship.

In short, this Apostolic outline of things essential to the Church as a living society, is no different from that which all other human societies require for their unity and continuity.

It does away with the private substitution of one's own system for the constitutional method which has come down from the primitive Church.

The great difficulty with any plan of Church unity other than that of historic continuity is that there is a lack of compelling authority in that which some individuals may have devised, or some collection of individuals may have agreed upon.

It is not that the plan thus devised may not be an excellent one; it is that it has no force to recommend it but the wisdom of the individual.

Nor will it do merely to copy it. A copy of the Constitution of the United States in Liberia does not satisfy that citizen who desires to be a citizen of the United States.

Undoubtedly there is much that could be improved in our federal ma-

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

An effort is being made by Christ Church, Columbus, Ohio, to liquidate a mortgage of $5,000 on the parish property by the first of January. One thousand dollars have been raised, most of which was contributed in Liberty Bonds.

The ladies of St. Thomas Guild, Battle Creek, Mich., served a breakfast and dinner, to the members of Sousa's band which came to the city for the Fourth Liberty Loan Drive. Three hundred and ten Jackies sat down to each meal and were enthusiastic over the hospitality shown them.

Mrs. G. L. Larned of Bristole, Rhode Island, in remitting two dollars for subscriptions to The Witness, writes: "While my husband is at the front attached to the Marines he is getting your paper. We have both enjoyed it so much ever since it was first published that I have been trying to advertise it as much as I can."

The following Church clergymen were commissioned chaplains with the rank of first lieutenants at Camp Zachary Taylor, November 7th, the Rev. Messrs. Edward C. MacAllister, Alfred S. Lawrence, Edwin A. Penick, Jr., Frederic O. Musser, D. Charles White, Gabriel Farrell, Jr., Christopher Keller. The Rev. Messrs. John J. Gravatt, Jr., and W. Weir Gillis, were commissioned chaplains November 1st, at Camp Zachary Taylor.

By the will of Mrs. Frederic Remington, widow of the celebrated artist, St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, New York, is to receive $2,000 for the endowment Fund of the Hoard-Howard Memorial Parish House. The residue of her estate after several life interests have terminated, goes toward the up-keep of an art museum to be built in Ogdensburgh, after the war. To the museum she leaves all unsold paintings of Frederic Remington and one cast from each bronze by him. Her will directs that after these casts are made the molds are to be broken. Ogdensburgh already had received from Mrs. Remington the collection of Indian and frontier articles made by him and used in his studio. Mrs. Remington was a communicant of St. John's Church, Ogdensburg.

The Ven. Henry Beard Delany, D.D., Archdeacon for Colored Work in the Diocese of North Carolina, was consecrated Suffragan Bishop of that Diocese for Negro Work on Thursday, November 21st, in the chapel of St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, with which he had been connected for many years. The Rt. Rev. Joseph B. Cheshire, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese, officiated as consecrator, assisted by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Beverly D. Tucker, D.D., of Southern Virginia, and the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D.D., of East Carolina Bishop Lloyd, president of the General Board of Missions, preached the sermon. Bishop Weed of Florida and Bishop Horner of Asheville presented the Dean for consecration. The Rev. Morrison Bethea, secretary of the diocese, read the certificate of election. The Rev. M. A. Barber read the consent of the bishops, and Dr. R. H. Lewis read the consent of the standing committees. Bishop Demby, who was recently consecrated Suffragan Bishop of Arkansas for colored work, read the Litany. The Ven. Erasmus L. Baskerville and the Rev. James K. Satterwhite were the attending presbyters. The Rev. Dr. Bragg was master of ceremonies.

On St. Bartholomew's Day, in Christ Church, Puyallup, Washington, Edward Munson Traber of Tacoma, Washington, was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Frederic W. Keator, D. D., Bishop of Olympia. Mr Traber was presented by the Rev. Frederick T. Webb, D. D., of Tacoma, Mr. Traber's former pastor. Bishop Keator preached a strong sermon from Luke 22:27. The Rev. Charles Y. Grimes, rector of Trinity Church, Tacoma, read the Litany; Bishop Wells of Tacoma read the Epistle, and the Rev. Mr. Traber read the Gospel. Mr. Traber received his degree from Heidelberg University, and will pursue his theological studies under the direction of Bishop Keator and the Rev. Doctor H. H. Gowen of Seattle. He has been lay reader in charge of Christ Church (Mission), Puyallup, for the past three years, having previously served at St. Luke's Church, Tacoma, at different times as organist, choirmaster, lay reader, and Sunday school superintendent. He remains at Bishop Keator's request, as minister-in-charge at Puyallup. The date chosen for the ordination was the eighty-sixth birthday of Mr. Traber's mother, a most devoted and faithful Episcopalian and church worker for over seventy years.

Long before the hour set for the beginning of its peace celebration on Sunday morning, November 24th, Christ Church, Norfolk, Va., was crowded to capacity, says a Norfolk daily. Worshippers, many of them army and navy officials and their wives, continued to arrive some time after 11 o'clock. Nearly 100 marines and soldiers, veterans of the western battle front, occupied seats in the center directly in front, Armed guards of the American navy bore the banners of the allied nations, with the exception of the British flag, which was carried by an English sailor.

The form of service was the traditional peace celebration customary in the Church of England, the music being inspiring martial. Strains of the Marseillaise furnished the beginning of the program, all the audience standing. Following this, came the procession of vested choir, color bearers and clergy.

Instrumental music was that of organ and naval stringed orchestra. Young boys rendered solos, and the choruses were especially appealing. The solemn "Te Deum" was particularly beautiful. Other stirring numbers were "Messe Solnelle" and the famous Hallelujah chorus, from Handel's Messiah. An attractive feature of the program was the fanfare of trumpets sounded between the playing of the Marsellaise and the processional hymn.

It had been expected that Bishop Gailor, of Tennessee, would be preent to preach, but through some misunderstanding, he could not come, and Dr. Steinmetz spoke most ably. Tears came to the eyes of many of his hearers as he told of the sacrifices and heroism of men on the firing line and of the sincerity of honors accorded them by civilians over here.

The Anglican Theological Review, edited by the Rev. Samuel A. B. Mercer, D. D., and the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis, Professors in the Western Theological Seminary, Chicago, in collaboration with representative scholars throughout the Church, the first number of which made its appearance in May of this year, is a new venture in the field of theological publications in this country. It is not intended to be a popular publication, presenting as it does the very best work of the profoundest scholars in the Anglican Communion on subjects of vital interest to students who wish to keep abreast of the trend of thought in the realm of Christian theology and comparative religion, from the view point of men who are, for the most part, devoting their lives to such studies, and interpreting theology and kindred subjects in the light of the very best modern scholarship. No clergyman or educated layman can afford to miss reading the papers appearing quarterly in this Review, which is filling, in the best sense, "a long felt want." The December number, which will be off the press at an early date, will contain the following contributions: "Pre-Mongolian Church Life in Russia," by L. C. Lewis. "Editorial Style in the Synoptic Gospels," by Frederick C. Grant. "Morals of Israel," by Samuel A B. Mercer. "Elizabethan Prayer Book of 1559," by William Muss-Arnolt. "St. Thomas and the Immaculate Conception," Francis J. Hall. "Old Testament Bibliography," by Howard C. Ackerman. "Critical Notes on Job," by Samuel A. B. Mercer. Book Reviews. Notes and Comments. Subscription, $4.00 annually. Single numbers $1.00. The Columbia University Press, Columbia University, New York.

The death of the Rev. Arthur Brittain, rector of St. John's Church, St. Louis, Mo., occurred suddenly on November 20th, resulting from an attack of bronchial pneumonia and heart failure. He had officiated at a funeral that afternoon and on his return to the rectory was taken ill and at about ten p. m. entered into eternal rest from St. Luke's Hospital. Mr. Brittain came to this country in 1903, drawn here out of his high regard for Bishop Tuttle, under whom he sought work, and was placed by the Bishop in charge of Trinity Church, De Sota, Mo. Afterwards he was appointed city missionary of St. Louis. The funeral service was at St. John's Church, which he had served as rector for the past six years.

The Rev. William Versey Whitten, a highly esteemed priest of the Diocese of Iowa, entered into the life of Paradise, on All Saints' Day, from his earthly home at Nashua, Ia., where he had been, since last spring, in charge of St. Mark's Mission, a mission he had served for several years in connection with his former work as rector at Charles City. Mr. Whitten was born in Quebec, Canada, in 1844, and was the son of a presbyter of the Canadian Church. He came to the United States in 1869, and was ordained a deacon by Bishop Clarkson, the first Bishop of Nebraska, in 1885, and advanced to the priesthood in 1888. Twenty years of his ministry were spent in Nebraska, and for many years prior to his death he was a presbyter in the diocese of Iowa, serving faithfully and well the fields at Chariton, Fairfield, Charles City and Nashua. The burial was at Crete, Nebraska. His wife and three daughters survive him.

PERSONALS.

The Reverend A. W. Sidders of Wabasha, Minn., is, besides his parochial and Sunday work, teaching six hours a day at the high school, one of the teachers being ill with pneumonia.

The Rev. Virgil Boyer, for ten years rector of Christ Church, Cleveland, Ohio, has been called to St. Paul's Church, Lansing, Michigan, and has been at work in his new field since November 1st.

The Rev. Dr. John Hazen White, Bishop of Michigan City, announces that on the 15th day of November, in St. James Church, South Bend, Ind., and in the presence of the Rev. L. C. Rogers and the Rev. R. E. Carr, he deposed from the ministry the Rev. Victor von Kubinyi, presbyter, he having declared in writing his renunciation of the ministry of the Church

Rev. Charles R. Tyner who has been rector of St. Luke's Church, Lincoln, Neb., since 1914 and who recently returned from France after a year's work, 9 months of which were spent at the front with American combat troops, has accepted the call to become Dean of St. Mark's pro-Cathedral at Hastings in the diocese of Western Nebraska. Dean Tyner will take up his new work early this month.

The Rev. William Porkess, rector of Grace Church, Pittsburgh, recently read an essay, entitled, "The Ideal Preacher's Makeup" before the weekly Monday meeting of the Pittsburgh District Methodist Protestant Ministers. The treatment of the subject resulted in a unanimous resolution, requesting the essayist to allow the printing of the essay in full, in the weekly Methodist Protestant Magazine, that has eight thousand subscribers.

MEMORIAL FLAG PRESENTED TO WISCONSIN CHURCH

A beautiful regulation banner silk U. S. flag has been presented to the Church of the Intercession, Stevens Point, by Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Cook and son Ralph as a memorial to Lieut. C. C. Macnish, a Church boy, who died in France last August. This flag was to have been dedicated some weeks ago but owing to the epidemic of influenza the Church was closed for several Sundays and the dedication and memorial service took place on the Sunday next before Advent which was the thirteenth anniversary of the Rector's ordination to the Priesthood. The flag is made of imported banner silk, is of regulation size and is surmounted by a brass cross instead of the customary eagle; it is complete with water proof carrying case and leather carrying belt.

Lieut. Macnish, for whom this flag is a memorial, was among the first from this city to enlist in his country's cause and he saw active service in France and died there of cerebral hemorrhage in August of this year. He was one of 52 from this parish to enter the service and the only one to date from this list who has lost his life. The whole service was a memorial to him and a detachment of the State Militia was present to honor the occasion.

In the afternoon of the same day a County Memorial Service was held at the State Normal School, Auditorium when a county service flag was dedicated with fitting ceremonies. This programme was in charge of a Churchman—Mr. T. H. Hanna, Chairman; two other Churchmen made addresses, Mr. D. E. Frost and Prof. F. S. Hyer; Father Elbert of the Roman Church made an address; Mr. McLandress the Presbyterian Pastor said the invocation and the Rector of the parish dedicated the flag. It contains 1525 stars, among them many representing women. Of these some 36 are of gold. This flag was given by a Churchman—Mr. Harold J. Week.

The epidemic has seriously interfered with the Advent Call in this part of the country. The plans for this parish are rather unique in that the men have undertaken the movement among the men of the parish in addition to the part taken by the women. During this week of the calling every man and woman in the parish is to be called upon and urged to help observe the week and a daily celebration is to be held with special prayers for the messengers and success for the Advent Call. During the week of the call the rector has planned services for every day which it is hoped will stir up the parish to greater endeavor and renewed consecration. There will be a daily celebration and in the afternoon a service,—primarily for women,— at 4:45 and in the evening (except Saturday) a service for all in the Church when the following subjects will be discussed:

Monday—The Credentials of Christianity.

Tuesday—Some practical Reasons why everyone ought to be associated with the Church.

Wednesday—Some spiritual reasons why everyone ought to be associated with the Church.

Thursday—Some of the common objections to organized Christianity and the Church.

EDITORIAL.—Continued.

If the religious forces in this country are not going to invite the contempt which they will deserve, they will seek two things—1st, a common basis of federal authority which will combine the best traditions of the past with the most enlightened ideas of the present, neither of which can be substituted for the other; for the one is experience and the other is genius, and they are not interchangeable. 2nd, a free and unlimited opportunity for God's grace to act in such constituted authority, after men have exhausted themselves in the defense of their individual opinions; but a rigid frowning upon that kind of revolution which refuses to abide by any constitutional action.

Europe after the war will be a seething chaos. Socialism, which is essentially a protest, will try once again to become a system, only to demonstrate that the inexperienced and the incompetent cannot construct a government which will govern, and cannot live without a government that can control.

So post-reformation religion was a protest. As a system it is chaos.

The Historic Church exists to perpetuate the best traditions of the past, so that they can be adapted to the exigencies of the future. The chaotic elements will not return to ancient constitutions until they have exhausted themselves in exploiting future systems.

The weakness of Romanism consists in its immobile truth in the mechanics of Divine Right.

The weaknesses of Protestantism consists in its jejune credulity in crass egotism. The weakness of the Anglican Church consists in the difficulty of securing a constituency who feel the importance of holding the form of sound words and preserving the idea of the household of faith.

To the observer on the outside, we are too much like the Bourbons, intent only on clinging to the forms of the dead past and the ideas of special privilege.

What is our true attitude?

Is it one of vain regret for lost prerogatives? A vain attachment to mediaeval ornaments? Or is it a calm faith in our mission? A patient waiting until the experiments of discontent look once again for the best traditions of the past in order to restore such authority to religion that constitutional order may be restored.

It is not theories of the Episcopate but the fact of constitutional order; not theories of the sacraments, but the fact of their preservation; not theories of the faith but the facts in Christ's life, which this Church has tenaciously held in the face of innumerable panaceas for the salvation of the world.

While we maintain the traditions of constitutional authority, we enjoy a liberty far wider than that insured by any of the reformed substitutes for that liberty.

If you do not believe this, go and live in any community which is controlled by one of these systems conceived in the name of liberty, but possessed with the spirit of intolerance.

THE CHURCH KALENDAR.

The lessons in the following kalendar for the week ending December 14th, are those appointed to be read at Morning and Evening Prayer in the new Lectionary set forth by the General Convention of 1916.

2nd Sunday in Advent, (December the 8th):

Daniel vii. 1-27
St. Luke i. 26-38
Genesis iii.
Revelation xxii.

Monday:

Isaiah vi.
Revelation vi. 1-11.
Ecclus. xiv. 20 xv.
James i.

Tuesday:

Isaiah vii.
Revelation vi.-12 vii.
Genesis iv.
I John iii.

Wednesday:

Isaiah viii. 5-ix. 7
Revelation viii.
Proverbs x. 16-end
Jude

Thursday:

Isaiah x. 5-27
Revelation ix. 1-12
Jermiah x. 1-16
I John v. 13-end

Friday:

Isaiah xi. 1-9
Revelation ix. 13-x. 7
Isaiah lix.
Romans ii. 1-16

Saturday

Isaiah xi. 10-xii.
Revelation x. 8-xi. 18
Proverbs i. 20-end
Romans iii. 1-26

So inveterate has the habit of procrastination become among men that the phrase "by and by," which, in the time of the early English translators of the Bible, meant "immediately," now means the very opposite.—Trench.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

AN APPRECIATION

The Honorable Jacob Kleinhans.

Much to our regret, an article announcing the death of the Hon. Jacob Kleinhans of Grand Rapids, Mich., contributed by a correspondent, inadvertently found its way into the columns of The Witness, which referred to the deceased as "Jack" Kleinhans. The November number of the Grace Church, (Grand Rapids, Mich.) Bulletin was devoted for the most part to appreciations of the life and work of Mr. Kleinhans, by the rector of the parish, the Rev. George P. T. Sargent, Bishop McCormick, the Vestry, and the Standing Committee of the Diocese. Excerpts follow:

By the Rector.

No one will ever know the many lives touched and inspired by the life of Jacob Kleinhans. All respected and admired him, and those who knew him loved him. He was a man of few words, but his life spoke volumes.

When I was called to be Rector of this parish I said, "Who could refuse a call to a parish where Jacob Kleinhans is the Senior Warden?" From the time I became Rector, I planned and counseled with him about everything which related to Church and parish. I also brought to him matters of a personal nature, and I grew to love him as I do my father.

He once said to me in speaking of Mr. Leavenworth: "There is one fundamental characteristic essential to a good Churchman—'Faithfulness'; for it includes in itself love, promptness, regularity, and many other virtues." In every department of his life he was faithful.

His home life was beautiful. His integrity, sound judgment, and worth as a lawyer and business man soon won for him the respect and the position of prominence due one of the recognised leaders of the legal profession. He loved and reverenced the Church. To him it was the Body of Christ. Through its sacraments and life he was in constant union with Christ. Nowhere was his faithfulness in all the depth of the word's meaning so clearly exemplified as in his relation to his Church. Unless prevented by illness or absence from the city I never knew him to fail to come to the Holy Communion on such days as the Vestry were expected to make their Corporate Communion, or to be in attendance at the other Church services, the Evening as well as the Morning services. There he could be found in his place ready to greet all who entered and give them welcome. He felt that God's Church was wiser than he was wise. He needed all the help the Church could bring to him; and he felt the Church's ways were best. He was an orthodox Churchman—he thought the Church's way was the normal way.

The genuineness of his worship and Church life was apparent. He despised cant and insincerity. His Christianity was real, virile and attractive. He came to Grace Parish at its beginning, when it meant faith, courage and work. He was on its first Vestry, and continued as a Vestryman ever since. In looking over the records of the Vestry, only noted one meeting where he was absent, and in that case he was away on Church matters.

He consecrated to the service of the Church his native ability, his trained legal habits and his experience.

By Bishop McCormick.

Jacob Kleinhans, Senior Warden of Grace Church, Chancellor of the Diocese and member of the Standing Committee, died at his residence in Grand Rapids. He had been in failing health for some time and one could only feel a certain measure of relief that his life should not be prolonged into a period of inaction and possibly of painful weakness. Easily one of the recognized leaders of the Bar of Michigan and one of the distinguished lawyers of the country, he was also one of the recognized leaders of the Church in his own Diocese and throughout the land. Many times a member of the General Convention and of the Provincial Synod, he was frequently consulted by those in authority and was accepted as an expert in Canon law. In the recent history of our own diocese his name could only be placed with that of the late William J. Stuart. In his parish he had been for many years its acknowledged leader and its unfailing supporter. He would have been the last man to desire or even to permit eulogy, yet not to praise him would be to withhold tribute to the grace of God in His Church. For he was a typical Christian character, molded and developed in sacramental union with Christ. To him the Church was the visible body of Christ, and everything that had to be done with the Church was therefore inexpressibly sacred and precious. As we pray, in full assurance of faith, that the rest and light of Paradise may be his joy and portion, so we pray that his example may inspire other Christians men and Churchmen towards an equally serious sense of responsibility and an equally clear interpretation of their high calling to God in Christ Jesus Our Lord.

By the Standing Committee.

It is not possible to adequately record the love and esteem which was felt by the many who have sat with Mr. Kleinhans in the deliberations of the Standing Committee, for never has Christian character been blended with mundane judgment in such high degree of excellence and balance as that exhibited by our lamented friend and co-worker. Profound in learning, possessed of quick perception, direct of speech and, withal, imbued with a deep sense of justice, Mr. Kleinhans brought to all the meetings incalculable assistance, the loss of which his fellow members can never cease to miss. As Chancellor of the Diocese, his deep spiritual nature enabled him to rule by higher standards and principles than those of the world, his decisions being as faithfully laid down according to the precepts of his Lord and Master as by the laws of the State. No member of the Standing Committee was ever more faithful in his attendance than was Mr. Kleinhans. His life was never so busy as to lead him to neglect the duties of his Church. He was in short, and in the fullest sense, a loyal Churchman, and the refining of his own spiritual nature, and, by word and example, the spiritual nature of many others, was more to Jacob Kleinhans, than was the gaining of fame and wealth. The life he led was one of unfaltering rectitude, and, leaving behind, for all who knew him, a wonderful heritage, he has passed worthily to his great reward. These remarkable traits of character earned for Mr. Kleinhans high and well deserved preferment in the councils of the Church, preferment which he received and administered wisely, humbly and modestly.

By St. Paul's Vestry.

In this day of momentous happenings,when the world is fairly writhing with the conflicting passions of man, we do well to step aside a bit and contemplate a life, on every department of which God seems to have put the divine stamp of approval.

The life of Jacob Kleinhans was woven and interwoven into the fabric of this parish, and his Church was his great love. Words fail utterly to express the affection he had for her, the devotion with which he served her, and the reverence in which he held her. We who have had the benefit of his counsel, his encouragement and guidance through all the vicissitudes of the parish now feel most poignantly his departure.

Jacob Kleinhans was a man of childlike simplicity of character. He was the uncompromising foe of all cant and dissimulation. He had a rich measure of the abiding consciousness that he was fundamentally right with God. The consciousness of having done well the task allotted to him constituted his whole reward, and he was content to go down to the grave unpraised by men.

STATISTICS OF THE WAR WORK DRIVE.

Our readers will be interested in the totals of the great campaign for the seven welfare organizations at work for soldiers and sailors. The figures follow, as given out on Monday, November 23rd. The departments adopted by the committee are those in the Army: Northwestern, quota $14,833,500, pledged $19,081,613; Eastern quota, $75,020,000, pledged $78,129,017; Central, quota $57,970,00, pledged $68,739,434; Southeastern, quota $6,820.000, pledged $9,459,056; Southern, quota $5,115,000, pledged $10,346,300; Army and Navy, pledged $618,346; Foreign, pledged $1,842,000. otal $194,044,038. Expected from Philadelphia War Chest District, $7,500.000; from other War Chest Campaigns in Pennsylvania, $500,000; from War Chest Campaign in Minneapolis, $1,135,000. Grand total, $203,135,000.

While the War Chest contributions were not definitely in hand and therefore not counted as cash, the amounts were regarded as pledged and certain, so that the total of over $203,000,000 is counted as sure. But the gifts are not all in by any means. The Victory Boys, for example, number over half a million, and the Victory Girls as many more, and thousands of these are still earning their five dollars and sending in returns as fast as they can earn the money, so that will mean no small addition to the total. The officials expect that the number of enlistments will be doubled.

The generous subscriptions from the half million college students place them in the van. They averaged $4 per student, or far above the population generally. Then the Army and Navy total of $618,346 was a noble contribution from the men themselves, showing their appreciation of the efforts made in their behalf. he foreign gifts were very significant. Thus China, with a quota of $250,000, gave $1,000,000 Mexican, or $500,000 American Money. Russia was not assessed but gave $11,000; Cuba's quota was $100,000, offering $275,000; Japan's quota $75,000, offering $360,000; Mexico's quota $110,000, offering $114,000; Porto Rico's quota $125,000, offering $82,000.

THE DIOCESE OF COLORADO NOTES.

Notice.

It has become necessary because of the restrictions caused by the epidemic of influenza to postpone the "Advent Call" from the 2nd Sunday in Advent to the 1st Sunday in Lent.

The restrictions at present do not admit of any scheme of general visitation throughout the state, and the only course left is to make it a Lenten campaign instead of an Advent one.

Bequests.

By the generosity of the late Ernst A. Peters, St. John's Cathedral, Denver, was left the sum of $5,000.00 and St. Luke's Hospital $1,000; and by a similar generosity on the part of the late Joseph A. Thatcher, the Cathedral will receive $10,000, St. Luke's $2,000.

The Diocesan Council will be held on Wednesday, February 5th, owing to the adoption of the new fiscal year. Parishes and Missions are requested to meet two-thirds of all apportionments before that time.

NEW METHOD OF ADMINISTERING THE BLESSED SACRAMENT BY INTINCTION.

The influenza epidemic caused a cessation of all public services in the Diocese of Marquette (Michigan) and in most of the cities including Marquette they are still prohibited. The Health Department acquiesed and the Bishop sanctioned the following plan whereby the people of St. Paul's Church receive Holy Communion.

The celebration takes place at 7:30 a. m., the rector and three parishioners being present. Then from 8 a. m. until eleven groups of three are communicated every ten minutes. To insure this the communicants apply for a card at the rectory on Saturday which states the time of his or her receiving. For each group after the first three the service consists of the invitation, confession, absolution, administration, the Lord's Prayer and the benediction.

For these services a combined chalice and paten were constructed. By removing the base of the regular chalice a paten was placed between the base and the stem of the cup as a permanent fixture. This arrangement makes it possible for the celebrant by placing his left hand incidentally under the bowl to carry both elements conveniently and with utmost safety. A specially scored wafer was made by St. Mary's Convent, Kenosha. When broken from the sheet it is triangular in form. One corner is held by the priest, one is dipped and the other is taken hold of by the recipient holding the open palm of the left beneath the receiving hand. The triangular wafer has not more but possibly less material in it than the square or round wafer and is much better to use when administered by intinction as the wine-wet corner is untouched by the hand. An extra loose paten is used for the consecration service.

CHICAGO LETTER

The Rev. Albert E. Selcer.

Bishop Anderson Gives Reasons for Thanksgiving.

The Rt. Rev. Charles P. Anderson, D.D., in speaking of the particular reason for celebrating Thanksgiving Day this year said: "Well may the American people, on this forthcoming Day of Thanksgiving, in response to the proclamation of their president, assemble in their accustomed places of worship to give humble and hearty thanks to God for the victory that has come to our country and to our allies for the cessation of war and for the promise of peace.

Gratitude, humility, and courage seem to be the key words for this Thanksgiving Day. Gratitude for victory; humility in the recollection of the awful carnage of war and in the presence of threatening revolutions following the war; and courage in facing the staggering problems of the coming reconstruction days of peace. The war is over, but our troubles are not.

Out of this war must come some kind of a League of Nations, some kind of an industrial partnership within nations, some near approach to the Brotherhood of Man. The task is mighty, but where there's a will there's a way."

Special Thanksgiving Day Eucharists were celebrated at the Cathedral. The Bishop was the celebrant at the early service in the Cathedral, while the Rt. Rev. Sheldon M. Griswold, D.D., the Suffragan Bishop, preached the sermon at the later service. In the afternoon Bishop Anderson went to Milwaukee, where in the evening he addressed a monster audience of nine thousand persons at the Coliseum, who had gathered for a Community Thanksgiving for Victory under the auspices of the Council of National Defense.

Bishop Wakefield at St. Chrysostom's Church.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Russell Wakefield, D. D., the Bishop of Birmingham, England, who, as metnioned in the columns of "The Witness" last week, is visiting the principal cities of this country and Canada, giving his reflections on the world war, was the special preacher at St. Chrysostom's Church, on the North Side, on Sunday, November 24th, where he was greeted by a large congregation.

Movement to Unify Protestant Churches.

On Monday morning, November 25th, a meeting was held at the Chicago City Club, which was called at the suggestion of the Chicago Association of Congregational Churches, actuated by certain resolutions passed by the Illinois State Association of Congregational Churches. The purpose of the meeting, which was attended by representatives of the cooperative Board of City Missions, the Chicago Church Federation Council, and of the Ministerial Association of various denominations, had as its purpose a discussion concerning the unification of the Protestant Churches. The Vice President of the Chicago Church Federation, the Rev. Dr. Thomas E. D. Bradley, said in part: "The war drives have led men to believe in Unity, but they are in danger of attempting to form Young Men's Christian Associations with the 'Christian' left out. The Churches must meet the issue."

Personal Prayer and Service Committee.

A group of Chicago Laymen have instituted a vigorous campaign destined to increase the efficiency of the laymen of the Diocese in Church Work. It is known as "The Personal Prayer and Service Extension Committee." Mr. Edwin Clark is chairman. The particular work of the committee is the conducting in the various parishes, on the invitation of the Rectors, parochial campaigns for the purpose of interesting laymen in Church work. The work is conducted along three lines: First, the organization of Bible Classes; second, the increase of Church Membership and attendance; and third, the emphasis on the Men's Corporate Communion as an aid to parishes, and the third was begun on Advent Sunday at the Church of St. Paul by the Lake, Rogers Park. A local Prayer and Service Committee is organized in each Parish, to carry on the "follow-up work."

Anglican Theological Review

Edited by SAMUEL A. B. MERCER and LEICESTER C. LEWIS, in Collaboration with Representative Scholars throughout the Church. The only Quarterly representing the Theology of the Episcopal Church. This Sound and Scientific Periodical is devoted to a discussion of all Theological Problems from an Anglican point of view. Five Features are emphasized: Long scientific Articles; full classified Bibliographies; scholarly. Book-Reviews; short Critical Notes; and general Notes and Comments.

DECEMBER NUMBER.

Pre-Mongolian Church Life in Russia—Leicester C. Lewis.
Editorial Style in the Synoptic Gospels—Frederick C. Grant.
Morals of Israel—Samuel A. B. Mercer.
Elizabethan Prayer Book of 1559—William Muss-Arnolt.
St. Thomas and the Immaculate Conception—Francis J. Hall.
Old Testament Bibliography—Howard C. Ackerman.
Critical Notes on Job—Samuel A. B. Mercer.
Book Reviews.
Notes and Comments.

LAST NUMBER (OCTOBER).

The Educational Aspect of Confirmation—Lester Bradner.
The Development of Apostolic Christianity—Burton S. Easton.
Credal Formulation in the New Testament—Theodore B. Foster.
Christian Theology and Hindu Religious Thinking—John A. Maynard.
Another Problem of Evil—Dickinson S. Miller.
Old Testament Bibliography—Howard C. Ackerman.
A Maronite Missal (Critical Note)—Robert F. Lau.
Reviews, Notes and Comments.

Subscription, $4.00 annually. Single numbers, $1.00.

Columbia University Press

Columbia University, New York.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

(Continued from page 1)

dissatisfaction; but nothing is safe.

"In the Mother Church, the question as to danger of contagion from the Cup in the Holy Communion, has already been met. A number of adding medical men of the Church investigated and discussed thoroughly the matter, and decided that the risk was practically nile. This should satisfy everybody, but does not.

"Some years ago, one of the prominent Life Insurance men of our country asked me whether I knew that ministers of the Gospel lived longer, on the average, than any other class of men. I answered that I had for a very long time understood so. He then said, 'I will now tell you something that you do not know. The Clergy of the Episcopal Church live longer, on the average than the ministers of any other denomination.' And yet the priests of the Church are the only men in Christendom who, after few or very many have communicated, drain the dregs of the dregs from the chalice. Could there be any more indisputable proof than this that there is absolutely no danger from contagion in the cup?

"Of course, if our priests were self-respecting, they would immediately curl up at the foot of the altar, after their first administration of the Second Sacrament, if the victims of germonhobia were anywhere near the truth in any of their statments: but they do not. They persist in living, and in living longer, on the average than any other ministers, who are excused from such contaminating exposure."

The Dawn of a New Day.

"It is a tremednous event that has just occurred" said the Hon. Elihu Root in his address at the great peace service of thanksgiving in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York. " It is the greatest event of modern history. It was a world struggle for human freedom, and from it we learned the lesson of sacrifice. From it will flow consequences to all the nations and to all the peoples in them, which we cannot yet begin to understand or with any certainty to prophesy in their entirety.

"Today we commemorate the ushering of the dawn of a new day—a new era. The dark night of storm is over, and now that the clouds which for four years darkened the earth have rolled away we see plainly the landmarks to guide our future course. From all the free nations of the earth men sprang to resist the evil that threatened the earth. Many of the noblest men laid down their lives, but their sacrifices brought victory and modern civilization has not failed.

"God himself was on our side. And so today, thanks to the Lord, Christian civilization triumphs. The old barbariain principal has been laid in the dust. More than anythng else the result of the war, as we behold it now, is proof of the supremacy of moral force which in the end downed the evil forces let loose upon the world. Even Bismark knew this lesson of the world—knew that cynical evil could not forever override the power o f Christian civilization, but William, the Kaiser, absorbed in his vast dream, of military glory, overlooked what Bismark in his great wisdom understood. Today, with the war ended and the forces of all those nations whose cause was one of right and justice and protection for the weak and equal opportunity for all dominant over all the battlefronts where autocracy tried to crush its way, William and his kind know better—they have learned the law of moral force now.

"Germany's misreading of America was similar to her false estimate of other nations. To her we were a nation of money getters. We were immersed in our own enrichment, and were indifferent to the struggle that occupied all of Europe. Her cynicism taught her that we were not to be reckoned with, but today Germany knows that we are far from being such a nation of money getters, and that the moral stamina of this nation manifested itself to her final undoing.

"Heedless and indifferent to the real nature of other peoples, blinded by its own conception of human and national motives, the German military caste ruthlessly defied and sought to set at naught the laws of Christian morality. In its insane lust for power, she ignored this great Christian force, soon to be arrayed solidly against her. Germany blundered when, depsite all the dictates of humanity and all the conventions of civilized warfare, she heartlessly sank the Lusitania. It was the wanton cruelty of that deed which eventually brought the United States into the war against her, and so it was the deed which eventually was destined to bring about her downfall.

"The German Government," he concluded. "deceived its own people, kept from them the real cause of the war and boasted to them of victories that never happened. Thus the German people, sacrificing and submissive, were kept satisfied. But in the end every violation of the moral law brought its own punishment to them. That punishment came swiftly when once the base purposes that actuated the Kaiser and his military advisers were revealed.

"Self-government changes the nature of a people, and not only increases their power and strength for war, but teaches them restraint. So the American people, after living for decades, immersed in commercial affairs, with wealth, freedom and ease, had grown strong and had preserved the heroic ideals upon which the nation was founded. When awakened, they again girded themselves to fight for freedom and independence, and in the end with moral force conquered and liberty was vindicated."

Isaiah's Prophecy Applicable to the Present Time.

"If the test of a great prophet' says the Rev. Eliot White, rector of St. Paul's Church, Ossington, N. Y., in the New York Times, "is his ability to include events and destinies of far-distant ages in the scope of his inspired vision, surely Isaiah does not fail in these days to maintain his exalted rank.

"To quote only one of his amazingly applicable predictions for this time of the armistice that concludes the greatest of all war, (Isaiah xxxiii., 7-11, 13):

'Behold, their valiant ones shall cry without: the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly. The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth. He hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man. The earth mourneth and languisheth; Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down: Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits. Now will I rise saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself. Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble: your breath, as fire, shall devour you. * * * Hear, ye that are far off, what I have done; and ye that are near, acknowledge my might.'"

STUDIES IN THE ACTS.

(Continued from page 4)

chinery, but that's entirely beside the mark. No one but an egotist would forsake the Constitution that we have as Americans, because some group of men had invented a better one. It is not the one which as Americans we are bound to support. And this is the very essence of loyalty. But loyalty is what is sadly lacking in our Christian fellowship, because we have lost the Church idea and we were bound to lose it as soon as anybody could substitute his own ideas for those constitutional principles which made the Church the most powerful society in Christendom.

As a Church we have much to contribute to the chaos of individualism, without authority, that is chiefly conscious of the rectitude of its own opinion.

We stand for facts detached from individualism. We represent respect for constitutional authority as differentiated from attachment to factional parties. Of course this involves antagonism. It is not that sectaries resent our claim to be right. It's that they resent the whole idea of the Church as a brotherhood, demanding of them certain obligations of fellowship. It is because to them the word "Church" has ceased to have any meaning, that they resent anybody that claims to be in constitutional unity with the Church that Christ founded.

This principle we cannot abandon, no matter how cheerfully we may testify to the individual excellence of this or that separated body.

We stand for obedience to constituted authority as distinguished from the principle of sectionalism running into schism, whenever opinions become so obstinate that they will not tolerate any accomodation.

It is not that the Church and the sects represent the same thing. It is that they represent a radically different thing.

It is the same difference which separates the Constitutionalists in Russia from those who would substitute Soivet organizations for the State.

The difference is fundamental and it cannot be reconciled until all the various parts unite in the Kingdom of God and His Christ. And that union can be made only on such a constitutional platform as is outlined in these two verses of the Acts.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

(Continued from page 1)

happen. I do pity those who can see nothing in an occasion of God's mercy to the world but a chance to carouse."

But there are many kinds of people that make up a world and while one reads and wonders about some kinds, one reads and rejoices over others as for instance an account of St. Paul's Cathedral in Boston, in the men's bureau of the Living Church:

"Before the doors of the Cathedral were opened last Monday morning, a hundred people had gathered waiting for the opportunity of private devotion. Beginning at 8 a. m., we held ten services during the day, at each of which we joined in thanksgiving for victory, prayers for our men who must remain abroad in the service, for those who have bought us our freedom by the sacrifice of their lives, for all those who are sorrowing and for a sincere dedication of ourselves to the unfinished task that has been bequeathed to us.

"At 11:30 and at 4:30 national hymns were sung on the porch of the church, led by the trumpeters. The sidewalk and street were full, and a large number sang the hymns with us. As far as the eye could reach across the street and over the common, stretched an unbroken mass of human faces. At the close of the first verse of the National Anthem, the people cheered and shouted and flags were waved in every direction, so we sang the second verse in glad obedience to the command, and when the cries and cheering were revived, we sang the third. Had there been a dozen verses, the crowd would have called for them all."

The world must not see us staggering under our crosses. It must not see us broken hearted, weak and weary. It must see that we are in the "fellowship of His sufferings," and that we are supported in that fellowship by a supernatural power.—W. Robertson Nicoll.

What Do You Know of the Work, of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Revs. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffeila, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of
"TEMPERANCE."
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America. Address.
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING
An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.
The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.
Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.
28½tf

The OFFICIAL DIOCESAN SCHOOL
OF FLORIDA FOR GIRLS
Gainesville, Florida
Miss Tabeau, Principal
Re-opens September 18, 1918 8-10-18

A SAFE AND ATTRACTIVE PLAN
For Womens Church Organizations and War Relief Societies
TO RAISE MONEY
Mrs. Gutgesell's Christmas Novelty Gift Book
Consisting of over one hundred EXCLUSIVE Christmas Cards and Novelties for Christmas Gifts.
No Investment Splendid Profits
For Information and Testimonials from Churches who have used the plan, address:
MRS. A. A. GUTGESELL,
Minneapolis, Minn.
400-402 Sixth Avenue South

A PATRIOTIC PAGEANT
BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE— SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.
Democracy Saving the World
A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.
Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.
Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.
Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year
ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.
A Pageant Has Wonderful Educational Power
If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.
THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.
Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.
Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave.,
By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.
CHICAGO, ILL.
The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

Confirmation Instruction
By Bishop Johnson of Colorado.
A very valuable Manual to place in the hands of candidates for Confirmation.
Send 25 cents for a sample copy.
Price, $2.00 a dozen.
Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Private Prayers for the Faithful
By Bishop Sage of Salina.
A Manual which thousands of Church people have found helpful in their private devotions at home and in church.
Price, 10 cents. Postage 4c.
"My people find the book of prayers very helpful and I think it is in every home in my parish."—Carl W. Nau, Emporia, Kan.
Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Parochial Mis... Supplie...
Use our Pri...
Send for...
Address "THE WITNESS...
CHICA...

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

PALESTINE TO NAME ITS OWN GOVERNMENT.

Dr. Finley Would Not Turn Country Over To Any One Nation, Race, or Creed.

Self-determination by Palestine as to the form of Government to be cast for the Holy Land was suggested by Mr. John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education, says the New York Times, in discussing his four months in Palestine as Red Cross Commissioner. He had high praise for General Sir Edmund Allenby's army of occupation, and declared that the war had left few scars on the country—the only visible evidences, in fact, being the passage of German institutions to allied control.

Commissioner Finley was accompanied on his trip by Colonel E. St. John Ward, Major Theodore Waters, and Major Solomon Weinstein, all of the Red Cross, and the latter the head of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, Amsterdam Avenue and 138th Street. Speaking of the future of Palestine, Commissioner Finley voiced his convictions thus:

"I do not think that Palestine should be given over to any one nation, race, or creed. I think that it should be held in trusteeship by the nations jointly, as in international agreement, until such time as the country, through agriculture or other means, becomes self-supporting in a sense and population grows. As the country develops, the people themselves will gradually come to agree upon the form of government they wish, and then the nations should withdraw and permit the evolution of this government."

In this view of the matter, Mr. Finley added, he was in agreement with Dr. Weitzmann of London, the noted Jewish leader of the Zionist movement, who expressed himself to the Red Cross party in London. Dr. Weitzmann is now in London, administering relief among his co-religionists. On the topic of how the British were handling administration, he declared they were maintaining a splendid attitude and one that indicated support of the principle of self-determination. Continuing, he said:

Fine Attitude of the British.

"This fine attitude of the British is apparent in their unofficial acts, as well as their official ones. They do not refer, especially or unofficially, to Palestine as a conquered land. Officially it is known as "occupied enemy territory." The British are in command, but the British flag does not float over Palestine. In fact, no flags of any nation appear there When we Americans held a Fourth of July celebration we were told courteously that we could not run up the Stars and Stripes and, while this may seem extraordinary, I am convinced that the action of the British in preventing the natives from getting too accustomed to any one flag is the proper thing."

Dr. Finley entered the Holy Land on June 21, having been joined by an African Red Cross unit of fifty persons at Port Said. He found the country's population 600.000, of whom 100.000 are Jews and the remainder Syrians and Arabs, in good trim. The British victors had established relief measures which apparently had put the situation in good order. The Finley party, however, promptly established a hospital and a dispensary, and 10 000 were treated in one month, many of them being soldiers from the army of occupation.

"The British held only Judea when we arrived in Palestine," he said, "and from the heights near Jerusalem we could see the Turkish lines about fifteen miles away. By that time the British had brought order out of chaos in the territory which they had won. Jerusalem had water piped all the way from the Suez, and it was easy to see from the type of men in charge of the military, as well as the civil, administration that the British were fully alive to their responsibilities."

A WORD IN SEASON

From the Trinity Cathedral, (Cleveland, O.) Advocate.

Joshua: III:4.—"Ye have not passed this way heretofore."

The tribes of Israel have come to the banks of the Jordan River. The crossing of the river is the only difficulty between them and Canaan, the Land flowing with milk and honey. Minute instructions have been issued to the host. They are to cross the river in this order, and after that manner. And now, so as to insure careful attention to his injunctions, Joshua, the Leader, adds, "Ye have not passed this way heretofore."

The words have a message of warning and encouragement for us today, in view of Peace, and the whole incident may be treated as a parable of our own lives.

(1) Facing the Unknown in Daily Experience: "Ye have not passed this way heretofore." Every day is a fresh beginning. We never know what twenty-four hours may bring forth. No two days are exactly alike We cavil at the monotony of life, and we persuade ourselves that what has been will be, and must forever be. The fact is, however, that there is only one thing about tomorrow about which we may be assured—that it will not be as today.

In one of our recent novels the heroine declares, "You never know what is round the corner." This is altogether true. We never know what is round the corner. We have never passed this way heretofore. It is this that makes life worth living. In all things there is ever the zest of the unexpected. It is this, too, that fills us with the dread of the unknown. The other day a man was shown through one of our big engineering works. In the course of his tour he came to a department where many sets of machines were being carried away. "These," explained the Manager, "cost us fifty thousand dollars to set up just after the War began. Today they are scrapped. There are new machines in the market. We are putting them in. The cost will be one hundred thousand dollars; but they will do three times as much work as the old machines, and with the same amount of labour." So it is in Industry. So it is in Life. Changes and surprises happen round the corner. New things, unlooked for occurrences, are forever "on the wing." Men sometimes fail in business. Why? Because the merchant refuses to get into the new way of doing things. We must march "with the times." We must see to it that we do not get out of step when we come to the way which we have not passed heretofore.

The Unfamiliar Way Has Been Passed Triumphantly.

We have a significant illustration of this in the national experience of Great Britain in the World War. August, 1914, found the British Empire unprepared for hostilities. To meet the Teutonic hordes England had an insignificant army of some ninety thousand men ready for active service. How these "Contemptibles" fought, and how, together with the Belgians, they saved Civilization, the world knows full well. The fact is, nevertheless, that in munitions and men this "Lilliputian Army" was sadly unsupported. For more than four years our British Allies have been treading unknown paths. They have blundered sometimes; it could not well have been otherwise; but, thank God, Germany has blundered, too, and now, in November, 1918, the British Empire, together with France, Italy, and the United States, seems to be coming out of the darksome cloud of imminent disaster into the sun-wooed reaches of a most glorious dawn. The unexpected emergency has been met; the uncharted experience has been successfully traversed; and the unfamiliar way has been passed triumphantly at last.

The Church Must Adapt Herself to New Conditions.

What is true of Individuals and Nations, is, also, true of the Church. "Ye have not passed this way heretofore." The Church must adapt herself to changed conditions, conditions consequent upon an unprecedented upheaval of society, if she would hope to minister to the necessities of "a new Heaven and a new Earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." It is, seemingly, somewhat difficult for the Church to appreciate this fact. "What has been, must be," appears to be the motto of many of the Churches. If we would live, however, and not die; if we would grip the manhood of the present and reconstruction period; if we would pass on a real heritage to our successors; we must move with the times, and, more than that, we must move ahead of the times. Even the Episcopal Church, One, Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic, must cease to lean upon her heritage, and create a heritage for the future. She must "speed up" if she would be in the forefront of the hosts of humanity. What was good enough before 1914, what is seemingly good enough for us who have remained at home during the past four years, is not good enough for the men returning from the trenches, is not good enough for our sons, and is not good enough for our children's children. Prosy sermons, theoloical rather than philosophical; lengthy services; censorious Christianity; will never hold the awakened consciences of the men who have faced death, and faced it unafraid. There are forces which are attracting the flower of our manhood and womanhood from the Gospel of Christ. We shall never overcome these forces by merely cursing in ecclesiatical language what these forces stand for. We must see to it that in the Church there is an effectual counter-attraction to the allurements of the world. These are strange days, there are stranger days and years to follow, and we shall have to adapt ourselves to the intricacies of an unprecedented situation. "We have not passed this way heretofore."

(2) How Are We, Individually, Nationally, and Ecclesiastically, to Face the Unknown? The war is over, and we are living in a new world. Many of the things that we deemed essential have vanished. We shall not be permitted, even if we would, to return to the old ways. There are wrongs that must be righted; there are evils that are crying to highest heaven for suppression; and in justice to the fallen, in fairness to those who are returning we must see to it that our homes are fit homes for heroes, and that our Churchly Life and our National Life is not sordid, narrow, and debased.

What does this mean? It means that through many tangled forests we shall have to blaze a trail. "Ye have not passed this way heretofore." Changes and reform shall be our lot for many years to come. There are problems, gigantic problems, awaiting us just around the corner of the road; there are difficulties, seemingly insuperable difficulties, to be overcome; there are obstacles, obstacles of girth and height, to be flattened down for the passage of the Future's feet. On every count, how are we to face the unknown?

God Will See Us Through.

There is One Who is ready to be our Guide, even God himself. Humanly speaking, we are "all at sea;" Divinely speaking, the harbor is in sight. God will see us through. One of our Chaplains tells of his asking a lad whom he was preparing for Communion, "What is the greatest thing in Christianity?" After a little consideration the lad replied, "That He's always there!" No Theologian could more fittingly express the greatest thing in Christianity. "He's always there," ready to help, willing to act as Guide throughout the reaches of the Unknown Way.

To accept God as Guide, two things are necessary: We must have implicit confidence in His directions. Robert Louis Stevenson wrote to George Meredith shortly before his death, "For fourteen years I have not had a day's real health. I have written in bed, and written out of it, written in hemorrhages, written in sickness, written torn by coughing, written when my head swam for weakness. I was made for a contest, and the Powers have so willed that my battlefield should be this dingy, inglorious one of the bed, and the physic bottle. At last I have not failed." Stevenson believed that "the Powers" "do all things well," though often in strange and mysterious ways. This same unquestioning faith, this same unhesitating confidence, is necessary in the life of the individual, in the life of the Church, in the life of the Nation, if we are to travel the unknown way not only as conquerors, but as more than conquerors.

The other demand is for unfaltering following. We must follow wherever God leads. The Israelites went zig-zagging towards Canaan; but God led them in the right way; not the shortest nor the easiest way, but the best way. So shall it be with us. Success will be a question of following. If we follow closely in the footsteps of Him Who sees the end from the beginning, all will be well. "Ye have not passed this way heretofore." True; but the same God Who was with us before, Who led us along the old way, is with us still. In His company lies salvation, and experienced comradeship.

PARISH LEAFLET PUBLICATIONS

The Parish Leaflet Company operates one of the largest and best equipped Church publishing houses in the country.

Here are a few supplies, always on hand, ready to send to the purchaser, which every clergyman or parish ought to have, and without which they cannot do the most efficient work:

GOOD IDEAS ALREADY IN USE

CHOIR LISTS—The best and most complete ever issued. Only 25 cents a 100. Postage 3c.

RECTOR'S MEMORANDUM—For use in the service and for giving notices—"Lest he forget." Pad of 60 sheets—enough for one year—50 cents. Postage 5c.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM — In durable Folder form. Price 75c a 100. Postage 6c.

INFORMATION BLANKS — New Families Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Burial, 50c a 100. Postage 3c.

CARDS WELCOMING STRANGERS—To distribute in pews. 50c a 100.

COMMUNICANT CARDS—To report Christmas and Easter Communions. 25c a 100. Postage 2c.

Letters Commendatory.
Certificates of Baptism.
Certificates of Confirmation.
Certificates of Marriage.
Sponsors' Certificates of Baptism and Duties.

The above series are printed in two colors. They teach as well as certify. 25 cents a dozen; $1.50 a 100. With name of parish printed, $2.00 a 100.

GO TO CHURCH CLUB CARDS—A system of coupons to encourage Church attendance among young people. Each 25 cards, Oct., Nov., Dec., with name of Church printed, $1.00. Beginning with 1919, coupons will be sent at one time for the entire year. Each 25 cards, with name of Church printed, only $1.50. Postage 10c. Every parish should use these cards.

SERVICE LEAFLETS.

An Evening Service for Mission Use.
A War Litany.
A Memorial Service for those who have died in War Service.
A Three-Hours' Service for Good Friday.
A Service for Graduation of Nurses. Any number of these Services, post paid, for $1.50 a hundred.
Easter Morning Service, with Hymns.
Two Forms — Holy Communion only; Shortened Morning Prayer and Holy Communion.
Attractively printed, $2.00 a 100.
Hymns for Mission Use—$2.00 a 100.
The Cross and Flag. Outline of a service for pledge of allegiance—card—two colors. $1.00 a 100.

Card Bidding to Prayer, for President, Army, etc., to put on Church door, 14x22 inches. This Card ought to be on every Church door in the land. Price 25 cents.

Honor Roll. A handsome scroll (14x22 inches), to be framed and hung in the Vestibule, to record the list of boys gone to war. Both Christian and patriotic. 50 cents.

Large Card (14x22 inches), to be hung in the Vestibule, bidding to Silence in God's House, and to Prayer. 25 cents.

The three above cards for One Dollar.

Vestiblue Bracket — Notice Board, Alms Box, Offertory Envelope Boxes, Literature Holder—all in one. The most convenient and useful article of Church Furniture ever made. Finished in oak, with brass trimmings. Price only $10.00.

BOOKLETS.

The Boy Covenant With God—A Folder for use in Boys' Clubs. $2.00 a 100. Postage 10c.

A Manual for Servers—Price 10 cents.

The Reformation in England — A well-told review of Reformation Days. Price 10 cents. Postage 3c.

Misconceptions of the Episcopal Church—Price 25 cents. Postage 5c.

Searchlight on Christian Science—Price 50 cents. Postage 10c.

Prayers for My People—A manual of preparation for the Holy Communion. Price 25 cents. Postage 4c. We will print a special edition of this manual for any clergyman wanting to adopt it as his own to put in the hands of all his people. Changes made at moderate cost.

Private Prayers for the Faithful, by Bishop Sage. Price 10 cents. Postage 4c.

Outline of Confirmation Instructions, by Bishop Johnson of Colorado. A text book for Confirmation classes. Price 25 cents, $2.00 a dozen.

SUPPLIES FOR PAROCHIAL MISSIONS.

1. Special Mission Number of the Parish Leaflet. Page 1 contains the local announcements—seven pages of special matter. To be distributed in every house. First 100 copies $3.00; each added 100 copies, $1.50.
2. Invitation to Mission: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Four-page folder. Local announcements on page 4. First 100 copies, $2.00; each added 100 copies, $1.00.
3. Call to Personal Service. The Rector's Letter and the People's Reply. First 100 copies, $1.00; each added 100 copies, 50 cents.
4. Request for Prayers.
5. Prayers for the Mission.
6. Request for Conference.
7. Resolution Cards. Each of the above (4 to 7) 50 cents a 100.
8. Envelopes for Mission Expenses. 150 envelopes, with name of Church printed, $1.00. Each added 100 envelopes, 30 cents.
9. Store Window Cards (11x14). First 100 cards, $3.00. Each added 100 cards, $1.50.
10. Four-page Leaflets, to distribute among the congregation. An assortment of 1,000 Leaflets, $5.00. See elsewhere Mission Service Leaflet and Hymns.

A VERY VALUABLE IDEA.
Worthy of Universal Adoption.

When you desire to send some printed notice to your people, or make announcements, or write a Pastoral Letter, it will be just as cheap to combine it with "Church Teaching," which you want your people to read, as it is to let the local printer issue it in circular form.

We prepare for this special purpose a number of

FOLDERS, LEAFLETS AND TRACTATES

In each case one page is used for your local announcement. You can order them with this page blank, and your local printer can print your local page, or you may send us the copy and we will print that page for only One Dollar, plus the cost of the Folder, Leaflet, or Tractate.

This is the way to reach and to teach the entire congregation.

FOLDERS:—
1. A Parish Folder.
2. A Misisonary Folder.
3. Church History Folder.
4. Lent Folders.

These Folders cost 75 cents a 100. Postage 6c a 100.

TRACTATES:—
The Missionary Motive in the Missionary Prayer. A devotional study of the Lord's Prayer, by Rev. Francis S. White, Domestic Secretary of the Board of Missions.
2. Personal Service, the Church's Great Need. By Bishop Anderson—a Brotherhood Address.
3. Twenty Answers to Twenty Questions, by Archdeacon Windiate.
4. What I Would Do if I Were a Layman.

These Tractates cost $1.50 a 100. Postage 15c a 100.

LEAFLETS:—
Four pages each. Seventy different topics. 50 cents a 100. Postage 12c. Some of the most popular are:
Looking for a Church.
Facts of Theories.
Baptized, but Not Confirmed.
The Evening Service.
Henry XIII.
Wardens and Vestrymen.
A Vision of Empty Seats.
The Church of a Christian Year.
Baptism.
Confirmation.

Sample copies of these supplies may be had by remitting to this office one-half of the purchase price. Under the requirements of the United States Government, to conserve paper, no samples are furnished free.

THE PARISH LEAFLET COMPANY, HOBART, IND.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 102. HOBART, IND., AND CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 14, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by GRACE WOODRUFF JOHNSON.

In a recent issue of The Witness the words of "America the Beautiful," written by Miss Katherine Lee Bates, was given. Sylvester Baxter gave an account in one of the newspapers recently of the occasion that prompted the writing of the song. First, he tells us that "Miss Bates is a native of Falmouth on Cape Cod, and has a most sympathetic personality.

"She is a professor of English at Wellesley College, Mass. To hear one of her lectures on poetry is a delightful experience. As an author, she has a goodly number of good books to her credit.

"In 1893 Miss Bates had been called to join the faculty of a summer school at Colorado Springs. On the way she visited the Columbian World's Fair at Chicago. The architectural vision embodied in the marvellous "White City" gave the inspiration for the last stanza as a forecast of what America might do in the achievement of real beauty.

The end of the three weeks' session of the school in Colorado Springs, was celebrated by the stranger members of the faculty (including Dr. Rolfe, the Shakespearean scholar; Prof. Tood, the Amherst astronomist, and Miss Bate's colleague at Wellesley, Prof. Katherine Conan) with an excursion to the summit of Pike's Peak. Miss Bates was so affected by the rarefied atmosphere that she could remain for hardly more than 'one ecstatic gaze!' But it was a historic moment. It was 'then and there,' says the author, 'as I was looking out over the sea like expanse of fertile country spreading away so far under those ample skies that the opening lines of the hymn floated into my mind.' No song can have had a more directly continental American inspiration. Fresh in memory was the panorama of American landscape unrolled in the long journey from the sea and across the praries and plains, to its culmination on the mountain heights.

"The four stanzas of the poem were pencilled in the author's notebook at Colorado Springs. For nearly two years they lay there unheeded, then they were sent to the Congregationalist, appearing July 4th, 1895.

"The hymn attracted unexpected attention. Silas G. Pratt, the composer, at once set it to music, and in that year it was republished in the volume, 'Famous Songs.' Requests for its use came with great frequency, so it was rewritten to make the phraseology more simple and direct.

"The new version appeared in the Boston Transcript in Nov. 1904. A few years later the wording of the opening quatrain of the third stanza was changed for the final version—for which Miss Bates retains the copyright, that it might be protected from misprints and alterations.

"Thousands of permissions have been given for its free use. It has been reproduced, by permission, in church hymnals of many denominations, numerous popular song books, books of schools and colleges, patriotic selections for soldiers and sailors, Boy Scouts, the Red Cross; also in countless periodicals, community programs, peace foundation and many other organizations.

"In Australia the Christian Endeavors have adopted it as a national hymn, with 'Australia' substituted for 'America.'

"For the benefit of our immigrants it has been translated into Italian and German. It has been illuminated for Christmas cards and filmed for the movies, in the author's manuscript. Over 50 different settings have been composed for it, including many by distinguished musicians. It is often sung to old tunes—one being 'Materna' (O, Mother Dear, Jerusalem). Miss Bates would prefer that it not be sung to this tune, however, for the music, not being written for it, does not impart to the words the expression they demand."

How Peking, China, Celebrated Victory Day.

The celebrations of the victory over Germany began in Peking with a review of the Chinese and Allied troops by President Hsu Shih Chang.

The huge square fronting the throne room was filled with two regiments of Chinese soldiers and picked troops from the Allied contingents, presenting a magnificent spectacle.

The center of the square was occupied by an American Marine band, flanked with three British soldiers and three Cossacks carrying their respective flags. Behind were French and Anamite troops, facing Japanese and Italian detachments. The president passed through the square under an arch of Allied flags and ascended the marble steps to the throne room, followed by the diplomatic corps. Then to the accompaniment of a popular American war song the Allied commanders and flags approached the president, the Italians and Japanese leading. Three Americans carried Brazilian flags, three carried British and Portuguese banners, while the Belgian ensign was borne by three Frenchmen. Sir John Newell Jordan, the British Minister, and Dr. Paul Samuel Reiasch, the American Minister, headed the diplomats greeting the president, who delivered a congratulatory speech from the terrace.

A reception followed in the historic robing room. The foreign guests enjoyed the experience of ascending the ancient throne and admiring the magnificient furnishings of the beautifully lacquered room.

The brilliant scene has never been equaled in the history of Peking. For the first time the Forbidden City was thrown completely open and was crowded with students and citizens.

Among the many interesting and teaching pamphlets that may be obtained from the Church Periodical Club, 2 West Forty-Second Street, New York City, is one on Christianity which I shall divide into two parts for this column, giving this week What a Christian is expected to believe, next week the continuation, "What a Chritsian is to do."

Christianity is meant for all men, rich and poor, educated and uneducated. Our Lord died for all men. Christian teaching must, therefore, be simple, easily understood even by a child, and its life that which can be led by any man with the help of God. Many men, however, are of the opinion that there is something very deep about Christianity and its practice very hard.

A Christian is expected to believe in God. There is One God who has revealed Himself in three Persons in One God. That is in the One Godhead there are three: God the Father, who has made all the universe and all things therein; God the Son, who has redeemed all mankind; God the

(Continued on page 7)

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND.

After the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Church Pension Fund, the grants in force by the Fund to the clergy and their families are exhibited by the following table:

Age Pensions	$ 60,573.06
Disability Pensions	24,500.00
Widows' Pensions	23,450.00
Orphans' Pensions	3,700.00
Total	$112,877.00
General Clergy Relief Fund Grants Assumed	111,877.00
Diocesan Fund Grants Assumed	52,015.00
Grant Total	$276,115.06

It may be interesting to point out that the amount of the grants of the Church Pension Fund, after twenty-one months of operation, to clergymen retiring during that period, or to the widows of active clergymen dying during that period, already exceeds the amount of the grants still in force from the General Clergy Relief Fund, with its long period of history. The total amount of the grants of the General Clergy Relief Fund when it was consolidated with the Church Pension Fund on April 13th, 1917, was, of course, somewhat larger than the amount of the remaining grants, but not materially so. It will only be a few months, probably, before the end of the second calendar year of the Church Pension Fund's operation, when its annual outlay for its own pensions will equal that of the General Clergy Relief Fund after more than half a century.

No direct comparison can be made between the two organizations, because they proceed on different principles, the importance of the Church Pension Fund being the pension protection it extends to over four thousand clergymen and their families, rather than the amount of its pension grants. But the comparison of figures is not without value.

Priest Served With a Warrant For Holding a Service.

The Rev. Thos. Worrall of Longmont, Colorado, was served a warrant for holding service on Thanksgiving Day, contrary to municipal regulation.

Mr. Worrall felt that a test case was desirable in communities where crowds are allowed to assemble in various places, but any service in the church was forbidden.

The town marshal interrupted the service and demanded that the congregation of seven people disperse which they did not do.

It is understood that a warrant for his arrest has been issued.

It is well to see whether the hypocrisy of half measures will be sustained by the courts and whether town authorities can prohibit a priest from his functions in the Church.

BISHOP FUNSTEN DIES SUDDENLY.

Word was received as The Witness was being put to press that the Rt. Rev. James Bowen Funsten, Bishop of Idaho, died suddenly in Boise, Idaho, on Monday, December 2nd.

A Three Fold Appreciation.

If you send The Witness to some friend for a year as a Christmas gift, you will show your appreciation of our efforts, your friend will appreciate your thoughtful selection, and of course we will appreciate your co-operation.

Pride that dines on vanity sups on contempt..—Franklin.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

More Awful Than Judgment.

"A celebrated preacher of the seventeenth century, in a sermon to a crowded audience," says the Diocese of Quincy Light, "described the terrors of the last judgment with such eloquence, that some of his audience burst into tears, and uttered piercing cries, as if the Judge Himself had been present and was about to pass upon their final sentence. In the height of this excitement, the preacher called upon them to be silent, as he was about to tell them something more awful and astonishing than anything he had yet said. In the midst of a tense stillness, he solemnly addressed them thus: 'In one quarter of an hour from now the emotions you have just exhibited will be stifled: the remembrance of the fearful truths which excited them will vanish; you will return to your carnal occupations or sinful pleasures with your usual avidity, you will treat all that you have just heard as an idle tale that is told.'"

God Is a Sure Paymaster.

"On this Thanksgiving Day, how natural and how right it is from every point of view that, as representatives of the different national groups, we should meet and gather here in this Christian temple to render our devout and humble thanks to God for what He has done," said Bishop Greer at the Thanksgiving Day service held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York. There were over three thousand in the congregation, including representatives of the twenty-six allied nations and members of patriotic societies of the United States. Dean Robbins, of the Cathedral, gave the address of welcome, and Bishop Lloyd, of the General Board of Missions, delivered a sermon. "It is meet that we should do this," said Bishop Greer, "lest in the noise and tumult of the common joy, so natural, so human, we forget the things which our eyes have seen.

"What we have seen is that God is not a distant and absentee God, as we are wont to think Him, but that He is a factor in human affairs with Whom we must reckon, not only in some other world, but here and now in this, and that no weapon forged against Him—however great and strong or howsoever reinforced with human wit and 'kultur' or scientific skill, cunning, and device—that no such weapon forged against Him can prosper. It may seem to do so, and for a time may do so in fact, but only for a time, for God is a sure paymaster. He may not pay at the end of the month or a year or four years, but He surely will pay. Our eyes have seen it. Let us not forget it.

"In a little while, we hope, those who went from us to engage in the sacred cause of righteousness and freedom will be coming back. They will on their return receive a great ovation for what they have done, and they will deserve it. For in the face of dangers and difficulties unprecedented, they have shown unprecedented heroism and courage, worthy of the name they bear and of the cause for which they suffered and endured. But some who went out with them will never come back. Brave, gallant, faithful souls, faithful unto death. With bowed heads and reverent heart ,albeit with saddened heart, we thank God today for their noble life and sacrificial death, and pray for the stricken families and homes where empty places are."

The Call to Prayer More Urgent Than Ever.

"The thought of mobilizing the women of the Church 'for the liberating of spiritual power' by means of 'United, Earnest, Prevailing Prayer,' came as an inspiration to the leaders of the Woman's Auxiliary in the dark days through which we were passing some months ago, when the issues of the great war for liberty and righteousness were trembling in the balance," says Bishop Harding, of Washington, D. C., in a pastoral letter which was read in the churches of his Diocese the First Sunday in Advent.

"It was felt, and rightly, that over and above all the war-work our women were doing at so much sacrifice of time and strength and means, there was something greater that they could and should do They could and should unite in besieging the throne of God in prayer, that it might please him, at this crisis of the world's history, 'to make bare His holy arm in the eyes of all Nations,' so that 'all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.' Therefore, at the time the Advent Call was conceived, the subjects suggested for our petition had mainly to do with the winning of the war.

"The epoch-making events of the past four or five months, culminating in the signing of the Armistice on November the eleventh, a date which will ever be memorable in the history of the world, have necessarily changed the whole situation and our point of view. We are forcibly reminded of the words of the prophet Isaiah, 'It shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.'

"Nevertheless, the Advent Call for united, earnest and prevailing prayer becomes not less but more urgent—more imperative—in view of the conditions that now confront us. The disorder in those countries that precipitated this cruel war, the problems of the new-born nations, the enormous difficulties of reconstruction in all lands are matters of concern much deeper than the successful conduct of the war.

"Never did our statesmen need more urgently than now the wisdom and guidance of Almighty God. Never did the men at the front and those at home who were eagerly expecting to do their part in the battle line need our prayers and ministrations more than now. Those abroad will have arduous and exacting duties to perform until peace is declared. For all, the time of waiting until they shall be set free to return to their homes and normal occupations, will be full of trials and temptations. Until the terms of lasting and righteous peace are settled, we have need to pray that, at the Council table, 'Mercy and truth may meet together, righteousness and peace kiss each other.'

"We have need to pray that through the travail of soul the world has endured these long, sad years, our nation and all nations may be reborn. We must work and pray for, as the real fruits of victory, the making of a better world. We have need to pray that the Church, 'the Body of Christ,' through which He is pleased to minister to the world, may have a revival of spiritual life in all its members, put new energy into the work of preaching the Gospel among all nations to the end that, as much as in us lies, and while we have time, we may do our part in bringing about the glorious consummation, when the kingdom of the world shall become the kingdom of our God and of His Christ."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

SAINT JOHN THE EVANGELIST'S DAY. December 27.

By the Rev. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

THE COLLECT.

Merciful Lord, we beseech thee to cast thy bright beams of light upon thy Church, that it, being instructed by the doctrine of thy blessed Apostle and Evangelist Saint John, may so walk in the light of thy truth, that it may at length attain to everlasting life; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Light through instruction! So many of us need to meditate more than we do on this thought. The Church is here spoken of as walking in a way that is dark, dark because the understanding of her children is darkened by the darkness of ignorance God is addressed as merciful: His mercy is shown in His patience with us who stand in our own light, and so stumble instead of walk, thus hindering the progress of ourselves and our companions. St. Stephen's Day is a call to abolish prejudice: St. John's Day is a call to abolish ignorance. Both prejudice and ignorance hurt mankind and cripple the Church. They especially hurt the Church because they hinder her progress. When men really see Jesus in the way God meant them to see Him, they can no longer look on their fellow men through the glass of inherited or acquired prejudice. When we get the information Jesus came to give, it is no longer possible for us to be ignorant of what God wants us to know and to do. The Church should be the best teaching force in the community. Its words and deeds should throw light on human life as Jesus Christ wants it to be lived: Church services should be illuminating: sermons should be illuminating: the actions of the Church members should reflect the light, and not raise a fog. Darkness comes through a withdrawal of light. The withdrawal may be accomplished by the failure of the light-giving power from within, or by covering the light from without. The failure of light-giving power comes through sloth, or neglect: the blotting out of light is accomplished by indifference. In either case, progress is impeded, and disaster for both innocent and guilty lies ahead.

The Means of Appropriating the Light.

"Cast Thy bright beams of light upon Thy Church." Notice we are making a definite request for illumination. By putting this petition so close to the celebration of the Christ Child's Birth, is it not permissible to say that our Mother Church takes this way of making us realize that the light has been cast for us in the advent of Jesus. "The light shineth in the darkness and the darkness does not take hold of it," was St. John's own testimony to the result of the ignorance that is in us. And as we absorb this thought, we find that the Church as it were, is putting our fingers on the means of appropriating the light. She puts our hands on the button, so to speak, and says 'switch on the teaching or doctrine of St. John, and you'll see how to make your way out of darkness into light.'

"Being instructed": That parish which does not stress instruction will be removed by God: that is to say, God will allow men to forsake it: the candlestick will be removed from its place because it does not fill a need. Can any fate be more awful to contemplate? The parishioners of any local church must also remember that the Church on this day bids a part of the Body of Christ pray for the Whole Body of Christ. The Whole Body of Christ is today rent and weakened and seemingly futile because of inherited prejudices on the one hand, and abysmal ignorance on the other hand; willful ignorance, too, not "invincible but just nursed along from generation to generation by leaders of one part of the Body who will not see the other part's point of view. We must pray that these leaders listen to the teaching of St. John, who leaned on the Saviour's breast, and who while he never said or wrote that he had the mind of Christ, nevertheless holds up in his writings Jesus as the Light of the World. Let us ask ourselves whether we are letting ourselves be led by St. John's teaching into the Christ's Presence; and if so, whether we are standing face forward toward the Christ, or are in controversy facing our fellow men, and squinting one of our eyes, so to speak, on the Centre of life and unity and union.

"At length attain." The education that leads to the light of a perfect day is not something that can be attained in some school of correspondence, in a series of twenty lessons, prepaid. The intelligence that gives the light for which this prayer begs, is acquired by intimate association with the thoughts and words of Jesus as preserved by the Church, and by the mystical association with Him through the channels of both nature and grace.

The Epistle. 1 St. John i. 1.

That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; (for the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested upto us;) that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

Contact of life with Life, the life of man with the Life of God, creates a fellowship which explains the Church with its human and divine elements. That such contact and such fellowship is possible makes up the teaching of St. John the Evangelist: and he is very confident that publishing such a message can have only one result, namely, a complete joy on the part of the one who hears the message. The divine human life of The Blessed One is both a witness and an appeal: a witness that God cares, an appeal to us to care as well.

A Light That Is Inside Our Hearts.

"God is light." "In Him," that is in Jesus, "was life and the life was the light of men." This is the way St. John put it in his foreword to his biography of Our Blessed Lord. Today Mother Church takes this message of the Evangelist and Apostle and presses it home. "God is light," "if we walk in the light as He is in the Light," in what wonderful company do we find ourselves. "No Shadows yonder," said the poet—Shadows have their value on earth, so does the darkness that takes hold of the light of moon and stars: but the blackness of darkness!—there is no place for that in the Gospel-preaching-and-teaching Church. The light that this day calls us to, is an interior illumination, a light that is inside our hearts, and hence irradiates the meditations of our hearts, as well as the words of our mouths, and the deeds we do for God and man. When we have this interior light born of contact with the Life of God, then we walk in the Light as He is in the Light; and in that way we become lights of the world in our generation; and when shadows come across our paths, we are able still to shine, and so reflect a silver lining to those clouds. Does all this seem rather fancy kind of talking?: try to live truthfully in company with Jesus Christ for one whole week, and you will find that the blood of Jesus has made you light-hearted, and being light-hearted, you will reflect the joy that comes to one who has nothing he feels he must hide for his own sake, or for the sake of others who are dear to him. No light-hearted person ever felt the necessity of deceiving himself, only light-hearted people yield to that temptation. Self-deception cannot company with truth. If we company with truth, we shall be moved to tell out, confess, the sins that blacken our lives: and if we confess our sins, God will forgive us; and with a sense of forgiveness comes a lightness of heart that no one can take from us. "God's in His Heaven, all's well with the World," we speak that we do know.

He Came That All Men Might Have Abundant Life.

Ignorance of this message of St. John should not be possible in our day and generation. That there still are places in the earth where men cannot hear it, is a terrible indictment on the honesty of those of us who profess to company with Him, Who said He came that all men might have the more abundant life. It is making a liar out of God, and when we make God a liar, we prove very emphatically that His word is not in us, that we are after all only playing with Christianity, which is another way of saying we are playing with fire, for our God is a consuming fire, in Whose light, which is life, all sham, dross, conventions are singed and scorched, and must eventually be consumed.

St. John's Day is a call to us to be wise in this Day of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Gospel. St. John xxi. 19.

Jesus saith unto Peter, Follow me. Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved following; which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee? Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me. Then went this saying broad among the brethren, that that liciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things: and we know that his testimony is true. And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.

"Follow me." "A liittle child shall lead them" is the way Isaiah labeled his prophetic picture. So in this Christmas Octave we see the Child leading men in memory back to the pioneer of anti-prejudice, and the advocate of anti-ignorance. Following the Son of God and Mary one comes into a wonderful fellowship whose atmosphere is intelligent joy.

Not Much Use Trying to Speculate on the Future.

"Lord, what shall this man do"? There are some interrogations in the pursuit of light and intelligence which St. John records as being beside the mark. There is not much use to sit around trying to unveil the picture or to speculate on the future. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof" is the Christian attitude, and answer to all efforts which would throw light on the upward path toward perfection. "A step at a time: here a little and there a little; line upon line, precept upon precept." One does not win the confidence of Omniscient Love in a leap and a bound. The crown of martyrdom is not set before us in these three days after Christmas, as the reward of an easy road to progress, or a royal road to learning. The light which shines on the way to the attainment of everlasting life is not given into our hands to control but to utilize. The effort of the Church should be to bring more and more people within the shining, and to see that all things which tend to hinder or obscure the light shall be done away.

"If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee"? The Church and the parishioner must never forget in their corporate and individual efforts to know the way of God more perfectly, that God's ways are past finding out. He is always working His purpose out, and it is "ours not to reason why," when it comes to the other man's part in the whole plan and purposes of the Almighty. For one the life of witness may be stretched out for a term of years; for another, the witness of his life may be summed up in a brief span of years. The only duty common to both will be that the witness shall be true: that the walking shall not be in darkness: that their speech and daily life shall be illuminating.

"This saying went abroad." It was an unfounded human interpretation which persisted so long and produced such a wrong tradition in the early Church concerning the Best Beloved of Jesus Christ's earthly companions and followers. We must be careful that our contributions to the illuminating life of the Church is made honestly as in the day. Let us be sure we have all the light possible on any information we intend to promulgate as true in the Kingdom of God. Some of us are tempted to publish as true what we wish, rather than what we have heard, and the result is always disastrous to the Cause we are upholding.

Think of this phase in another way. Wherever there is chance for the human traditions to go, there also must go the divine tradition. To hug a bit of wonderful news, good news, gospel, to one's own heart is to hug fire to our hearts; to help spread it abroad is to lighten the corner where we are. The true witness to Jesus Christ is the missionary witness, and its bright beams must be for all people who on earth do dwell, or the light will fail, and we shall be the cause of the failure—which God forbid.

It Was Not Necessary to Put Into Books What Could Better Be Put Into Lives.

"There are many other things which Jesus did," but the important ones for men to know have been preserved. In His earthly life, He focussed all the bright light of the Life of God, and let it shine through His humanity as men were able to hear the glory of it. As men followed Him, they saw very plainly the real values in earthly existence: the closer they followed Him, the braver and better was their witness to these values. The nearer they came into contact with the white light of His Incarnate life, the more imperfections they saw in themselves and the more readily they confessed those lacks and failures, and in their confessions were cleansed by contact with His life-giving blood. What the first century Church and Christians did, the twentieth century Church and Christians must also do. As we bear our witness to what Jesus did for us, we will be the evident reason why it was not necessary to put into books what could better be put into lives. When the world becomes filled with men bearing Christian witness, the time of witnessing books will have come to an end, and Jesus Christ will have come into His own.

A joint meeting of the Junior Auxiliaries of all the parishes in St. Paul, Minn., was held the last week in November at St. Clement's Church. On account of the prevailing epidemic, there was of necessity a small number present, but those who came were enthusiastic, and the gifts offered were numerous and quite up to the mark. The Rector read the shortened form of Evening Prayer and chose for the lesson the story of the Wise Men offering their gifts. Later he welcomed the Juniors to St. Clement's and gave them an interesting talk on the work of Miss Bowden, to whom the gifts were going, and spoke to them of the joy of serving. Miss Yardley, diocesan president of the Juniors, read some grateful letters from other missionaries and presented some new appeals. Miss Sawyer read a financial report showing the successful condition of the Junior work. Then Miss Sleppy, who had made the arrangements for the reception of the gifts, explained the beautiful meaning of the symbols used in the decorations. A table had been spread in front of the Chancel steps. On it was placed a Cross at the base of which lay Christmas greens. On the frontal was pinned a picture of the Christ-Child, bordered on either side with poinsettas, to call attention to the fact that the gifts offered were to form the Christmas treat for the little colored children of San Antonio, Texas, and were being offered to the Christ-Child first of all. After all gifts had been placed on the table and a Christmas hymn had been sung, all knelt to offer the work of their hands, and the love of their hearts to the Christ-Child-King. — St. Clement's Chimes.

THE REV. JOHN McCLURKIN, M. D.

An Appreciation by the Rev. Charles H. Young.

Rarely have we enjoyed the privilege of friendship and association with a man of such genuine piety and sterling character as the Rev. Dr. McClurkin, who has been so closely associated with us in our parish life for the past eighteen years. During these years he has never been absent from his place in church when it was possible for him to be present. His genial nature and kindly sympathetic character made him a welcome visitor in our homes and at our public gatherings. His life was spent in the service of his fellowmen, as a boy at home, as a soldier fighting for liberty, as a physician ministering to the needs of others, as a clergyman bringing the comforts of the Church to those who looked for God.

Dr. McClurkin was born in Morning Sun, Ohio, August 28, 1840. When the Civil War broke out he was among the first to offer himself to the government, enlisting in an Indiana regiment. He was severely wounded in the campaign in Eastern Tennessee, captured and taken to Libby Prison. After his discharge from the army he studied medicine, opening a practice at Albion, Ill., later moving to Mount Carmel.

He was a staunch churchman, giving freely of his time and money for the support of Church work. Upon the earnest solicitation of Bishop Seymour he was made a deacon in 1890 in order that he might be of greater help to the little parish at Mt. Carmel which found great difficulty in procuring a permanent pastor.

He came to Chicago in 1900 and for several years practiced his profession in Woodlawn. On Easter Day of that year he assisted the rector of Christ Church (the Rev. S. B. Pond) at the Holy Communion and has been most faithful in his services, never missing a Sunday when he was able to attend. His work was done so quietly and modestly that it was almost unobserved, but it endeared him to everyone who knew him who felt the spirit of his sweet, strong character.

He was greatly interested in work among the poor and lonesome, to whom he devoted many hours of his time. For several years he represented Christ Church on the Woodlawn Advisory Committee of the United Charities. During part of this time he was chairman of the committee, where his wisdom and good judgment were of the greatest help.

His patience and courage in recent years when he began to realize the possibility of losing his sight were characteristic of his whole life. While he expressed strong hopes that the necessary operations might be successful, there was no word of despondency or complaint. He placed himself under the care of one of the most successful oculists in the city in one of our best known hospitals. Everything was being done that human skill could advise and the progress seemed to be satisfactory. On the Saturday before his death he arranged with the chaplain of the hospital to go to the Chapel on Sunday morning to receive Holy Communion. Later on this same evening he spoke with pleasure to his son about this plan. The medicine and condition of his nerves made him restless and at times delirious. The person who had him in charge was requested to maintain careful watch over him. In some way he got out of bed in his delerium, unable to see where he was going and fell, receiving injuries which resulted in his death. His body was brought to the Chapel of Christ Church, where the funeral services were held on Monday, Nov. 25. Bishop Griswold officiated, assisted by the Rector. Ten priests were present. The vestry of the parish were the pall-bearers; the full choir was present and sang at the service. On Tuesday a Requiem was celebrated for him, after which the body was taken to his old home at Albion for burial.

Dr. McClurkin is survived by his wife, who was Miss Helen Churchill, his two sons, John and James, and his daughter, Edith. To them we express the warm and sincere sympathy of the congregation.

May God grant our dear friend rest and peace in Paradise and may light perpetual shine upon him.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

UNIVERSAL CHURCH TRAINING

A Discussion of Problems of Religious Education in the Home and Schools.

By Margaret K. Bigler.

Christmas Thoughts About Santa Claus

Christmas thoughts are uppermost in the minds of all, especially those deeply interested in children. From now on until Christmas, let us discuss some of the questions relative to the keeping of the Christmas Festival.

Many clear-minded Christians doubt the wisdom of introducing Santa Claus into the life of the Child. their contention is that it overshadows the religious element of Christmas. At the same time, these same people are fond of Santa Claus; they know from their own experiences how happy He has made Christmases for them. The question is then: Where shall He be placed? How shall we arrange our Christmas festivities so that the Christ Child, Whose birth we are celebrating, may have His rightful place in the heart of the child? Bear with me through these next three issues and possibly we shall be helped.

First of all: Is there a Santa Claus?

Of course there is a Santa Claus, just as there are fairies, for He is the great Christmas fairy, just as surely as there is love and friendship. Have you ever seen love? No, of course not. But you have seen His expressions of love for children in the world in his generous giving at Christmas time.

Why does He come at Christmas time? He comes then because he wants every little boy and girl to know that He and all the world are happy and joyous because of the greatest expression of love the world has ever known, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son."

Children cannot think of just a great big spirit of love. They must attach their idea to something concrete; therefore, the big, good-natured, loving Santa Claus, who has a heart big enough for all, and

"His cheeks are rosy as red cherries ripe,
His ears are as pink as can be;
Perhaps you may hear his bells in the night,
But his face you never can see."

What about all these Santas in the stores, on the street corners and at Christmas parties, are they the real Santa Claus? No, they are just playing Santa Claus to someone else by expressing his love of giving.

The more the spirit of this great idea is fostered and emphasized, the more easily the child goes from the concrete to the abstract and the more beautiful will be his belief in spiritual things as he grows from childhood to adult life. A child naturally personifies spiritual things. Spiritual things are very real to him. Oh, let us hold fast to this natural instinct of the child. Let us not distort his clear conceptions with our sordid misgivings of how he might be led astray by them. It is only when adults make Santa Claus too material and take away from him his fairy-like qualities, that he becomes dangerous. Let us use our imaginations a little with the children and believe in Santa Claus ourselves. Our fears will then turn into joys and Santa Claus will only be the good Christmas fairy, who helps to make Christmas day the happiest of all the year.

Questions.

M. J.—At what age should a child enter the Church School? Is there any great disadvantage in starting him too soon?

The courses outlined by the General Board of Religious Education in the Christian Nurture Series, provide for children of four years of age. This is the correct age for them to enter the Church School. There are disadvantages if they enter too young. They acquire bad habits of conduct because they are too young to meet regular requirements. They are not far enough developed to gain much from the lessons taught. It is quite profitable often to have them take part in the worship period.

A. B.—Can you suggest what members of my Senior Class in the Church School might do in the way of Christmas festivities?

Usually the members of the Senior Classes are deeply interested in dramatics and the presentation of a mystery play, dealing with the events connected with our Lord's Nativity is often a valuable activity for them. R. H. Benson's "A Mystery Play" is very good, as is also the Christmas Pagent by the Rev. Carroll M. Bates. The latter is published by The Witness

WAR COMMISSION NOTES

By The Rev. Dr. Henry B. Washburn.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the War Commission held on November 26 it was voted that the date set for the appeals for funds for the ensuing year would be Sunday, February 9.

I have recently received the following information from Bishop Perry, overseas representative of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church:

"With regard to the office of the Red Cross Chaplains Bureau and of the War Commission in Paris. The order from the War Department by which the Hospital Chaplains Service is taken over by the Army has been so modified that the Red Cross Chaplains, who do not accept commissions, will be allowed to continue their service regardless of the actual termination of their term of enlistment. This provision allows the Red Cross Chaplains Bureau to retain the services of between 25 and 30 of our personnel.

It is understood that the War Commission has its office at 14 Wall Street, New York; that the Overseas Representative has his residence in Paris with permission from the Commander-in-Chief to visit all troops of the A. E. F., whenever his services may be needed for Confirmations, etc. The appointment of the Rev. Arthur Washburn as special member of the Clergy staff of Holy Trinity Parish, Paris, for war-time work will be made on behalf of the War Commission and upon the nomination of the Overseas Representative of the Commission."

"The following Red Cross chaplains, who are Episcopalians, received commissions as chaplains in the regular army:

Rev. R. B. T. Anderson, Rev. J. H. Chapman, Rev. L. C. Kelley, Rev. M. E. Peabody, Rev. H. W. Smith, Rev. F. M. Wotherill, Rev. W. L. Wood, Rev. A. W. P. Wylie.

Word has been received that Chaplain Barrett P. Tyler, recently rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, New Jersey, at present chaplain of the 325th infantry, has been seriously wounded in action. The Secretary of the War Commission has received the following information from Mrs. Tyler:

"My brother-in-law, who is Senior Chaplain of the 82nd Division, wrote me, that on October 28 my husband was struck just above the knees by a piece of an exploding shell. He was moved from the first hospital to one futher back from the line. ('The trip was very long, and he was nearly exhausted before they arrived. The shock and loss of blood had been so severe that he was very near the brink.') They had to resort to transfusion of blood to save his life, Paul, (his brother) searched for him for four days before he found him in the Evacuation Hospital. The doctor assured him that the danger of infection was now over and that he would recover slowly but entierly. He saw him again November 1 and November 4 and was assured he was out of danger."

Between the Marne and the Vesle rivers, from July 31 to August 6, 1918, during the heavy fighting near the Ourcq river, Chaplain Thomas E. Swan, 125th Infantry, A. E. F., was in the front lines at all times, under heavy machine-gun and artillery fire, throughout the day and night, comforting and aiding the wounded. On one occasion he crossed a field 200 yards wide, under violent shell fire, to administer to two soldiers who had been mortally wounded. In the operations near Mont Saint Martin he continually went back and forth over the crest of the hill during heavy artillery fire to care for the wounded. Home address: Mrs. Thomas E. Swan, wife, Saginaw, Mich.

List of Members of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church.

Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, D. D., Chairman, 122 Commonwealth, Avenue, Boston, Mass.

*Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., Cathedral Close, Washington, D. C.

Rt. Rev. Albion W. Knight, D. D., Sewanee, Tenn.

*Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D., 43 Lafayette Avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich.

*Rt. Rev. James DeWolf ePrry, D. D., care of Morgan, Harjes & Co., 31 Boulevard Haussman, Paris, France.

*Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., Chairman of the Executive Committte, 14 Wall Street, New York City.

Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, D. D., Louisville, Ky.

Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., Richmond, Va.

Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., 337 Oak Street, Minneapolis, Minn.

Rev. William H Milton, D. D., Wilmington, N. C.

*Rev. John Mockridge, D. D., 2210 Sansome Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

*Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D. D., 806 Broadway, New York City.

*Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Evanston, Ill.

*Rev. eHnry B. Washburn, D. D., Secretary of the Executive Committee and of the War Commission, 14 Wall Street, New York City.

Rev. George E. Weld, Santa Barbara, Calif.

William D. Cleveland, Houston, Texas.

Whitefoord R. Cole, Nashville, Tenn.

Norman H. Davis, 14 Wall Street, New York City.

Charles D. Dickey, 37 E. 51st Street, New York City.

John H. Glenn, 105 E. 22nd Street, New York City.

Louis F. Monteagle, Royal Insurance Bldg., Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco, Calif.

*Arthur E. Newbold, care of Drexel & Co., Philadelphia, Pa. (Treasurer.)

*Mr. Charles Steele, 23 Wall Street, New York City.

Henry Thompson, care of U. S. Finishing Co., 320 Broadway, New York City.

Rt. Rev. Wilson R. Stearley, D. D., 60 Berkeley Avenue, Newark, N. J.

*Monell Sayre, 14 Wall Street, New York City.

*Edward H. Bonsall, Land Title & Trust Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

*Denotes members of Executive Committee.

Dont forget to include among your Christmas gifts a subscription to The Witness.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE G. F. S. A.

The Central Council of the Girls' Friendly Society in America held its Thirty-Second Annual meeting in New York City on the 20th and 21st of November. Although, owing to the epidemic in October, there was a postponed meeting, the attendance was larger than the average. Officers and representatives of the Society were present from Los Angeles, California, Michigan, as well as from other nearby Dioceses. The Corporate Communion of the Society was held in the Church of the Epiphany one Wednesday morning with Bishop Courtney as celebrant. Bishop Burch opened the Council with prayers and an address of welcome.

The Society in general has lost by death many valued associates during the year and letters of sympathy were sent to the families of Mrs. Townsend, the Foundress of the Society in England, Mrs. Martin, President of the Canadian G. F. S., Miss Mary Benson, a Life Member of the American Council, Miss Niebuhr, Miss Houston, and Mrs. George Lindsley Burr.

Subjects of importance were freely discussed at the meetings and in some instances decisive action taken. In adopting a New Constitution, members may now be given a vote in Diocesan Councils, and if the diocese so orders, the vote is not limited to communicants of the Church. A change in Central Rule III was proposed. This subject is so vital to the work of the organization that no vote was cast upon it at this time. The Society will consider it in all its bearings for one year when the matter will again be presented and voted upon. Biennial instead of annual meetings will now be held and Provincial Conferences are ordered. Great interest was shown in the work accomplished through the War Emergency Committee with Mrs. Harold Browne of Newport, Chairman. The officers were, with two exceptions re-elected. Mrs. F. W. Sibley of Detroit is again President. It is a matter of regret that the Vice-Presidents of the Second and Fifth Provinces, Miss Marshall and Mrs. Gregory, were unable to continue in office.

The meetings were held in the Parish rooms of the Church of the Epiphany. Luncheons and teas were served in the New York Diocesan office and the Epiphany Church rooms. Mrs. George A. Helme gave a reception in her own home to the Central Council and all visiting and Diocesan associates. Miss Hadley, President of the New York organization, gave a dinner to the Executive Committee, G. F. S. A., at the City Club.

Your own subscription and five other subscriptions for The Witness as Christmas gifts—all for five dollars.

PERSONALS.

An unofficial announcement was recently made of the death of Major Hill, a faithful communicant of St. John's Cathedral, Quincy, Ill. He entered the war as Colonel of the Fifth Illinois Regiment, and was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General. When the army was reorganized in France, he was given honorable discharge, but immediately enlisted as a major. He had a month of active fighting before his death.

Former Attorney General of the United States, Hon. George W. Wickersham, gave an address in the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, on Thanksgiving Day.

Among the prominent speakers for Armenian and Syrian relief who will take part in the December and January speaking tours are John H. Finley, Ambassador Elkus, Henry Morgenthau, Stephen S. Wise, Charles Aked, Oswald Garrison Villard, S. Parkes Cadman, Governor W. L. Harding of Iowa, Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas, Gov. Cox of Ohio, and Gov. Edge of New Jersey.

Mr William H. Jones, Junior Warden for some years past of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., has been advanced to the office of Senior Warden, succeeding the late Hon. Jacob Kleinhans. M. Edgar W. Hunting ,a member of the Vestry and also Secretary, was unanimously chosen by the Vestry to take Mr Jones' place as Junior Warden.

The Rev. George Paull Torrence Sargent completed the fifth year of his rectorship of the parish on Advent Sunday.

The whole of Kansas is inflicted with the epidemic of influenza. "We in Western Kansas are suffering with the rest of the state," writes Bishop Sage of the Missionary District of Salina. "Indeed, if anything, the epidemic seems more prevalent in our towns and villages. For two months many of our churches have been closed by order of the health authorities. Our guilds and organizations have been unable to meet. Much sickness prevails in every station. It looks as though there might be another month or two before the disease is stamped out. In consequence of this state of affairs, after consultation with the clergy and others, the Bishop has reached the conclusion, though very reluctantly, that it would be unwise to attempt to convene the Convocation in January, as planned."

If you subscribe for The Witness as a Christmas gift to some friend, we send a notice which will be received by your friend about Christmas Day.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS
for Church, Clergy and Laity
Framed and Unframed Pictures
Church Furnishings
of Gold, Silver, Brass, Bronze, Marble, Wood
HONOR ROLLS and TABLETS
STAINED GLASS
made after the Antique Method
SPAULDING & CO.
Michigan Ave. and Van Buren St.
CHICAGO

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Hobart, Indiana, and Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Business Manager.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Wise, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

A COMMON DENOMINATOR.

The war drives have taught us the value of psychology in accomplishing the most astonishing results.

By arousing public sentiment, by visualizing the great need, by stimulating affection for the boys over there, by appealing to public spirit, the administration succeeded in unifying the nation, in securing a practically unanimous support, in accomplishing the impossible.

Not only did the public loan and give money, but they fasted at the government's request, they gave personal service when needed, they even to a certain extent broke through the rigid lines of caste which form impassable barriers in social action.

It was an illustration of effective work by the power of suggestion and example.

Back of these elements there was not an academic theory but an imperative need.

The imperative need produced this solidarity of action, and it was the business of the administration to visualize this need, and make the people see its force. Public opinion was the police force that carried out the program.

It is here that the Church may learn its lesson.

If you could array all the forces which accept Christ as their Master, in a common effort we would have behind us the most powerful influence in the nation to combat not merely the world, the flesh and the Devil, but also to oppose those irresponsible theorists who are trying to undermine the principle of constitutional government.

The government used the religious forces of the nation in its various drives and it succeeded in unifying them for the common purpose.

It did this because it had an appeal strong enough to make them forget their differences so that Roman Catholic and Protestant, Jew and Gentile worked cheek by jowl for the common cause.

The government used the churches because it realized that religion was a dynamic power and that if it could be harnessed into effective team work its moral force was irresistible. And so it proved.

But in the moral and spiritual ends for which Christ lived and the Church exists, we are unable to so mobilize the forces of righteousness because of mutual jealousies and traditional differences.

In short the government could do for the Church that which the Church could not do for itself, because in patriotism it found a common denominator into which all the mixed and improper fractions could be resolved.

Is it not well for the Church to consider whether there is not a similar common denominator of a similar character that we could use for fighting the Devil as we found it for fighting the Hun?

What then is this common denominator?

If the U. S. Government had started from the basis of a political party and said, we are going to fight this war as a democratic party measure, it would have aroused the partisan prejudice and divided the nation into irreconcilable factions.

But is not this just where the Christian religion in this nation is making a mistake in its crusade against the evil one.

We start all our plans of unification on the fulcrum of doctrinal opinion, and not on the basis of the common need.

We begin at the wrong end, as even Mr. Wilson found when he tried to get the people to back the Democratic party in the recent Congressional elections. He forgot the broad principles on which the war had been fought, and unconsciously, perhaps, implied that only democrats could give the nation a patriotic support. It was a grave psychological mistake. If he had said, "Return only loyal, patriotic Congressmen, irrespective of party lines," he would have had, I imagine, his own party in power in Congress. Even democrats objected to being told how they must vote.

We have begun our plans for Church unity by trying to get the people together on the basis of doctrinal unity. It cannot be done, and all the highbrows in the country could not get themselves together on any academic principle of unity.

Why not begin our plans of Church unity on the basis of a common need, and in working for that common need, let the common people come gradually to realize the need of a common unity.

Nor should this involve the sacrifice of a single principle which any of us hold to be precious.

There are common foes which we should all attack, and which in attacking should cause all the religious forces of this nation to present a united front.

There are certain evils that are destroying the spiritual life of the nation, and these evils by attacking us separately are in an increasing degree demanding that all the servants of Christ should unite in opposing them, irrespective of the doctrinal differences that separate us, for they are sapping the spiritual forces of the young in this nation.

Let us retain if need be our ecclesiastical states, and find in some federal unity, such a force as will effectively meet our common enemy.

What are these hostile forces? It is not the liquor problem. That seems to be in the process of solution, but it is the social problem rather which now confronts us, and against which we should confront all the forces that make for righteousness.

The first need of public sentiment that confronts us is that of a general public recognition of our dependence upon God.

Public worship is something more than a matter of individual taste. It is rather a matter of national righteousness.

This was recognized by our Puritan forefathers, but they made the psychological mistake of trying to achieve it by force.

It should have been left to public opinion.

Instead of passing laws to make the worship of God compulsory, we should quietly set to work by united action to make it the decent thing to go to church, and a part of the program for national safety.

When you consider that 80 per cent. of the people of Oklahoma are not church goers, you may perceive that there is some job before you, yet the percentage is no larger than that of those who did not give to the Red Cross before the War.

The greatest danger to our national existence today is that of the godless triumph of the proletariat. The larger the number of the unchurched, the larger is the constituency that is the prey of political demagogues.

The ultra-radicals are equally hostile to the intellectual, the industrious, the artistic, as they are to religion.

There is no truth, no beauty, no goodness in the world which they respect.

In place of these fundamentals they would erect an altar to reason; —not reason in the abstract, but reason as reflected by distorted mirrors.

The public recognition of God in any form is the one enemy to their cause that the Bolsheviki have not dared to throttle, not from any sense of reverence, but from fear for the result.

If we would rally to the cause of true democracy, let us produce a public opinion that will demand that men recognize that there is a God above who is the source of order.

Let us not attempt to control their theology but let us rather attempt to arouse their devotion to God as they see Him.

Any God is better than chaos, and any man who persistently neglects to serve the God whom he accepts is a practical atheist and potential anarchist.

Akin to this crusade for a public recognition of God, there should be a movement to make blasphemy indecent.

No one who associates with promiscuous assemblies of young men in colleges and workshops but must realize the prevalence of profanity.

These young men, who sit in the seat of the scornful, are not merely irreligious, they are lacking in patriotism for they are helping to swell the mob, who reverence nothing but the fine exhibition of their own passions.

Whatever may have been their private convictions, and they are various, the founders of this republic and the great men who have perpetuated it were God-fearing men.

It is not our Presidents, and our Judges, and our honorable men that indulge in profanity, but rather our sewer-rats, our criminals and the supporters of the I. W. W.

These form the various nuclei around which are assembling the groups who control the destinies of the nation.

When you make the worship of God an act of patriotism and cursing an act of treachery in the public mind, you will have done more for the future welfare of this nation, than you already have done in whipping the Hun.

For like all great republics our most dangerous foes are those of our own household who have substituted license for liberty.

There is one more plank in this platform of a common denominator for all religious forces.

(Continued on page 5)

STUDIES IN THE ACTS.

"And fear came upon every soul: and many signs and wonders were done by the Apostles. And all that believed were together and had all things common and sold their possessions and goods and parted them to every man as every man had need."—Acts II. 43-45.

That period immediately following the Day of Pentecost was an unusual period in the life of the Christian Church. That fullness of grace which took possession of Christians by reason of the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit gave to them all such a real faith that all things seemed possible to them.

And according to their faith, so it was unto them. There can be no question but that faith is a mighty power when it is not hampered by doubt, and these men could not doubt because of the things that they had seen and heard, as well as the gift that they had received.

This exuberance of spiritual power manifested itself during the freshness of the Church's youth in unusual and marvelous ways.

First. By endowing them with the power to work miracles.

Second. By inspiring them in an extraordinary degree to share with one another their material wealth.

That this was not a permanent characteristic of the Christian Church may be gathered from the subsequent story of the Church in the Book of Acts.

As time went on miracles were less and less a part of the Church's power, and those who had possessions used them by way of making gifts.

As St. Peter said to Ananias, "Whilst it remained was it not thine own? And after it was sold was it not in thine own power?"

And St. Paul nowhere lays upon Christians the obligation of sharing goods in a common stock, but rather "Charge them who are rich in this world, that they be ready to distribute."

These charismata, as they are called, were attestations of an unusual spiritual exaltation rather than a permanent condition of Christian life.

In speaking of miracles, there are three words used in the New Testament which give us three aspects of their significance:

First. They are called wonders (Greek, Terata), that is something which arouses attention in the act.

Second. Powers (Greek, dunameis), that is something which requires ability and force to produce.

Third. Signs. (Greek, semeia), that is something which teaches a spiritual truth.

And no miracle of our Lord or of the Apostles can be separated from any one of these aspects.

They were not merely wonders to astonish, nor powers to show strength, but they were always signs as well to convey spiritual meaning.

This separates them from the puerile miracles of the apocryphal gospels or of the meaningless wonders of the middle ages, or the mercenary healing of modern charlatans.

There was a dignity and meaning in all of these miracles.

"In order that you may know that the Son of Man on earth hath power to forgive sins, therefore I say unto you, arise and walk."

The miracle of the gospel was performed to aid our Lord in His spiritual mission. He did not heal the sick nor raise the dead merely for the purpose of adding a few more years to comparatively unimportant lives, but in order that He might demonstrate His power to forgive sins and to raise the dead unto eternal life.

Miracles in the New Testament were a means to an end, not an end in themselves. And that end was the purpose for which Christ came, that those who believe, might have eternal life.

And as such they had a place in the beginning of the Gospel when the Master needed to be accredited among men. Greater things than these have been achieved by the Christian Church, since she has demonstrated her power to regenerate the lives of men. Today many people who fear sickness and death are trying to find in some cult a means of escaping pain and prolonging material comfort. This use of the miraculous is merely a temporary anaesthetic, and has no

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

Do you enjoy The Witness? So would some friend if you send it as a Christmas present.

Bishop Murray, of Maryland, President of the Provvince of Washington, has appointed Tuesday, February 2nd to 7th, both inclusive, for the postponed Synod of the Province, to meet in the city of Baltimore.

The Chapel of St. Francis of Assisi for the use of Italians and Americans at Brookline, Mass., the erection of which was made possible by the gift of $15,000 by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Lincoln, was dedicated on Thanksgiving Day by Bishop Lawrence.

During the past year 625 children were received as patients in the Diocesan Children's Hospital at Cincinnati, Ohio. An average of forty-seven children were under the care of the hospital each day in the year, at a cost for each child of $1.57 per day. It is the only institution of its kind in the city.

Bishop Rhinelander, of Pennsylvania, has asked the Church people of his diocese to erect "a great cathedral church, a temple of God's peace, a house of prayer for all God's people" on the cathedral site in Philadelphia; and states that "some are already thinking and speaking of it as a fitting memorial of what God has done in giving us victory."

A series of historical tableaux were beautifully given by St. Martha's School at Knoxvivlle, Ill., in celebrating the Illinois Centennial. In honor of the Rev. Dr. Leffingwell, who claims descent from Pocahontas, a play, "The Romance of Pocahontas and Captain John Smith," was artistically given by the English classes.

According to the latest available figures, the religions of the world are divided as follows: Christians, 564,510,000; Confucianists and Taoists, 300,830,000; Mohammedans, 222,825,000; Hindus, 210,540,000; Animists, 158,270,000; Buddhists, 138,031,000; Shintoists, 25,000,000; Jews, 12,205,000; unclassified, 15,280,000.—People's Home Journal.

By invitation of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, representatives of nine religious bodies met in Philadelphia last week and considered the proposal of the Presbyterian General Assembly for "organic union of the evangelical churches in America." Resolutions were approved recommending the appointment of an inter-denominational committee, to be composed of one member for every 500,000 communicants from every evangelical church in the country, who will serve as delegates at large at a council to be held in 1920. The Rev. Dr. Wilbur Chapman said: "This is the most significant step the Church has taken since the reformation. The action of the congress will be a landmark toward world democracy. Although the resolutions approved today will have to be ratified, the churches are practically united. The federation was born the moment we adopted the resolutions."

A quiet day for women was conducted at St. Paul's Church, Washington, D. C. (the Rev. Robert Talbot, D. D., rector), by the Rev. McVeigh Harrison, O. H. C., Friday, December 6th. The printed announcement reminds the women of the parish that, "During the strain and stress of war, when our hearts are full of anxiety, our souls feel more than ever the need of inward peace and strength which may be found in quietness and in union with Christ. 'Come ye apart into a desert place and rest awhile.'" The rule of silence was kept during the day, and the following was the order of the program: Holy Communion, 7:30 a. m.; Matins, 10:00 a. m.; first address, 10:30 a. m.; intercessions, 12 m.; second address, 12:30 p. m.; luncheon for the Bishop, clergy and invited guests, 1:30 p. m.; third address, 3:00 p. m.; Even Song, 4::00 p. m. On the previous evening the Rev. Fr. Harrison gave a talk, illustrated by lantern slides, upon the work carried on amongst the whites in the Tennessee mountains.

By the will of the late Hon. Jacob Kleinhans, Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., will receive $10,000 for its Endowment fund after the death of Mrs. Kleinhans.

The first edition of five thousand copies of Romaha Booklets, No. 1, on "Churchgoing," by the Very Rev. R. Marshall Harrison, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Belingham, Wash., and Dean of Whatcom, was completely exhausted within one month of publication.

The Ven. Wm. H. Hardin, Archdeacon of the Convocation of Charlotte, Diocese of North Carolina, writes: "The Witness has become with us a household necessity; indeed, I consider it one of the very best weekly Church papers published, and I trust it may receive the endorsement and support of our people everywhere, which it so richly deserves."

The Zionist Organization of America will send at an early date representatives to Europe to deal with questions concerning the movement there. Dr. Stephen S. Wise has been appointed Chairman of the first group to go, which will include Mrs. Joseph Fels, of New York; Louis Robinson, of New York; Dr. Lewis and Bernard Flexner, of Chicago.

The American Church Building Fund Commission, at its meeting on November 21, 1918, held at the Chuch Missions House, New York City granted a loan of $3,000 to St. Sigfrid's Parish, St. Paul, Minnesota, and gifts amounting to $1750 were granted for St. Michael's Parish House, Wuchang, China; St. Philip's Mission Church, Fayetteville, North Carolina; St. Michael's Parish House, Auburn, Maine, and King Hall Parish House, Norman, Oklahoma.

The American Thanksgiving Day was celebrated in England as never before, according to reports in the daily press. In London, at the Church for the Army and Navy, Bishop James De Wolfe Perry, of Rhode Island, preached the sermon and took part in the service. Foreign Secretary Balfour, the Earl of Reading, British Ambassador to the United States, Earl Curzon, and American, French, Italian, Japanese and Chinese diplomats were present. Four hundred British sailors were the hosts of 400 American tars at dinner, followed in the afternoon by a football game.

The Order of the Gold Star, an Order intended to perpetuate the memory of the men and women who have given their lives for their country in the service of the United States or the Alled Armies, has been organized in Omaha, Nebraska, by the Rector of All Saints' Church, Rev. T. J. Mackay. This Order has been incorporated and is now ready to grant charters to anyone desiring to form such an organization in any part of the country. It is hoped that by this order those who have suffered from the war will be brought into closer companionship and sympathy. Information desired will be furnished on application to Rev. T. J. Mackey, All Saints' Rectory, Omaha, Nebraska.

With appropriate services throughout the week, Trinity Church, Takoma Parish, Washington, D. C., celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary, beginning on the Sunday next before Advent, November 24th. At the morning service the rector, the Rev. Christian Martin Young, preached the sermon, taking for his theme, "The Record and the Opportunity of the Parish." Mr. William C. Beck read a historical paper at the evening service, which was followed by a social hour with refreshments in the Parish Hall. On Tuesday, the 2th ult., the church building was consecrated at 11 a. m. by the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., Bishop of Washington. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. Henry Allen Griffith, the first rector of the Parish. Many of the clergy of the diocese were present and congratulations were heartily offered for the accomplishment of freeing the parish from debt.

Eighty thousand Sunday Schools, with a total enrollment of fifteen million have been reached by the appeal of the Sunday School War Council for enlistments in the two million dollar Christmas campaign for relief of children in the Near East. Many schools will give up their own Christmas treat for the sake of the suffering children in the land of Bible story, now happily released from bondage to the Turk. Other schools will take their offering on some appropriate Sunday in January, such as the Armenian Christmas, January 19th.

A very interesting meeting of the Dubuque Deanery, Diocese of Iowa, of which the Rev. Dr. Campbell, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is the dean, was held at Cedar Falls, the seat of the Iowa State Normal School, the latter part of November. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Theodore N. Morrison, Bishop of the Diocese; the Rt. Rev. Dr. Harry S. Longley, Bishop Coadjutor; the Rt. Rev. Dr. Sheldon M. Griswold, Suffragan Bishop of Chicago; the Dean; Mr. C. D. Jones, of Independence, a prominent layman of the Diocese of Iowa, and others, took part in the program arranged for the several sessions. The new church, rebuilt under the administration of the Rev. John C. Cole, who also has charge of the work at Waverly, where he resides, was consecrated in connection with the Deanery meeting. Bishop Griswold conducted a quiet day for the clergy.

The Rev. Herbert Percy Hames, of New York City, expresses the hope that after the period of reconstruction his proposed new Perpetual Calendar, which provides that all vacation days, except Christmas and New Year's, shall, for the most part, be on Mondays, and anniversaries always on the same day of the week, may be generally adopted. He takes one day off the 365, making it a general holiday, calling it New Year's Day. He divides the year into thirteen months of four weeks each. Sunday always falls on the 1st, 8th, 15th and 22nd days of each month, and the numbers of the other days of the week are also fixed, so that the calendar for one month is not changed for the other months of the year, and the calendar for one year is good for all the years that follow. Christmas remains on the 25th day of December, but always falls on a Wednesday, and Easter Day always falls on the third Sunday in April. The calendar makes no provision for movable feasts. An article in the magazine section of Sunday papers states that Mr. Hames has received a great deal of encouragement from the Government, from Universities, societies and prominent individuls everywhere, and that a well-known group of educators are pushing the adoption of the calendar. Mr. Hames is a clergyman of the Church, doing supply and literary work.

In connection with the appointment of Hon. Henry White on the Peace Commission, the New York Times recalls several incidents of interest which occurred during Mr. White's residence in Paris, when Ambassador to France from this country, and quotes a Paris newspaper as follows:

Another event in Mr. White's official residence in Paris was the marriage on April 29, 1909, of his daughter, Miss Muriel White, to Count Herman Roger Hans Christow Seheer-Thoss, eldest son and heir of the Count Seheer-Thoss of Dobran, Prussian Silesia, one of the hereditary peers of Prussia, and owner of vast estates, two castles, and a famous house in Berlin. The bridegroom was at that time a member of the Royal Prussian Cuirassiers, and press dispatches telling of the wedding in St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church described the count as wearing the white uniform of the Imperial Cuirassiers at the ceremony.

Ambassador White did not attend the wedding of his daughter to the count. It was explained that Mr. White absented himself from the service as a protest against the attitude of the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical authorities in refusing to permit the service of the Anglican Church in addition to that of the Roman Church.

EDITORIAL.—Continued.

And that plank is that a man to be a decent citizen must render some form of service.

We are confronted with the problem of workingmen who think more of the amount of their wages than they do of the character of their work; and also of capitalists who think more of the amount of their dividends than they do of the use to which they put them.

The two are birds of the same feather.

The Irresponsible Worker of the World and the Irresponsible Waster of Wealth, form a combination of Turk and Prussian who seek to dominate the world for their own selfish aggrandizement.

Let both be reprobated by decent public opinion and be made to feel the approbium of general contempt, for they are breeders of anarchy in America as they have been in Russia.

Why can we not have a combined force of all religious convictions to enter upon a crusade against these sources of national weakness.

Gratitude, Reverence and Service are qualities that make the Christian gentleman as well as the patriotic American.

They are also the most effective antidote for Bolshevikism.

Let us form a society in which patriotism and religion combine for the preservation of constitutional liberty.

Russia is in the hands of the Bolsheviki today, not because Russia wants them, nor because they are in the majority, but because having a definite program they were ready to step in and get possession of the instruments of force which they misuse so cruelly.

It is the disorganization of forces of righteousness that make them a prey to the lusts of the undisciplined proletariat.

Today in America we have an organized socialism, ready to step in at any emergency with a ready-made program for handling the situation.

Should there not be an organized force created to form a public sentiment which would nullify these machinations, by teaching people a reverence for law, order and constituted authority?

And shall we not organize public opinion to accomplish this result?

THANK YOU.

As the Government requests publishers to send their newspapers to those only whose subscriptions are paid in advance, we have taken pains to send a subscription statement to all our readers whose subscriptions are over due or will become due before January 1, 1919. We are very much gratified at the prompt response and the "good words" that come with remittances. Many have thanked us for continuing The Witness and have expressed regret at their oversight. A very few have for one reason or another requested us to discontinue, and ask for bill to date. We hope within the next few days to hear from those who have not replied, and if any of them must discontinue their subscription, it will save an extra letter if they will enclose a remittance at the rate of three cents a week from the time the subscription expired until the present date.

We are more convinced than ever of the wisdom of our effort to furnish Church people with a weekly paper full of instructive and inspirational reading matter for only One Dollar a year. This could not be done in these times except for the fact that all connected with its management do so without personal compensation. It is to them a labor of love to supply a need in the Church, and it is pleasant to know that so many Church families give us their cordial support. If you have not as yet responded to the statement will you not kindly send the amount to the publisher, Hobart, Indiana, by an early mail.

On Sunday, November 24th, 1918, Grace Church, Jamaica, New York City, held a service which has attracted much notice. Wishing to give expression of the high esteem in which the members of the parish hold their conquering heroes and to render thanks to the Almighty for having raised them up in the hour of need, a Praise Service was set for the morning of November 24th. The members of the Men's Club undertook a canvass for information and invitation preliminary to the day itself. Effort was made to secure a complete list of every person engaged in National service, together with branch of service, rating, honors won, and other details pertaining to an accurate account of those wearing uniforms. Parents and near relatives were invited and urged to attend in a body and occupy a reserved section at the front of the Church. Friends and parishioners were apprised of the undertaking and requested to show their appreciation by attendance. Special music was prepared, and a special preacher was secured. We were fortunate in securing the Rev. Howland S. Nichols, a chaplain who had seen duty at Camp Upton The parish Service Flag, displaying ninety-five blue stars, two silver stars and one gold star, was hung in the front portion of the Church, near the pulpit. While telling a fairly accurate tale, it is felt that the flag is not as yet complete, since some of the parents failed to send information relative to their sons. We are confident that the completed quota will be one hundred. During the service the rector read the list as compiled, and divided the total into several interesting groups, telling how many families had four in service, how many three, how many of the boys are officers, and an interesting note about the lone gold star,—which belongs to a boy who died in his fourth year of service in the Navy,—first to go and first to be rewarded. Nothing spectacular was attempted. Simplicity and dignity were observed throughout. Dr. Nichols' theme, doing honor to the dead and the absent ones, was at the same time a clarion call for the future of our heroes and for ourselves that we must all go forward "sans peur et sans reproche," bearing Liberty's ideals under the protection and in the name of the Cross of Christ. These are on the Honor Roll: Three majors, two captains, nine lieutenants, four sergeants and four corporals.

A tiny four-year-old was spending a night away from home.

At night she knelt at her hostess' knee to say her prayers expecting the usual prompting.

Finding Mrs. B. unable to help her out, she concluded thus:

"Please God, 'scuse me. I can't remember my prayers(and I'm staying with a lady that don't know any."

A Chinese Christian asked Archdeacon Moule how many clergymen there were in England. Archdeacon Moule asked how many he thought there were. "It is a little island," he replied; "perhaps there are a thousand." He was told, "More than twenty thousand." "Then," said he, "you can easily spare a thousand for China."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CHICAGO LETTER

The Rev. Albert E. Selcer.

Epiphany Parish Celebrates Golden Jubilee.

The festivities connected with the Fiftieth Anniversary of the founding of the Church of the Epiphany in Ashland Avenue, West Side, were begun on the morning of the First Sunday in Advent. A celebration of the Holy Communion, with special preparation of messengers for the Advent Call, was held in the Chapel early in the morning. A special service of Baptism of children was held during the morning. The Rt. Rev. Charles P. Anderson, D.D., the Bishop of the Diocese was the preacher at the Anniversary Service at midday. A large class was confirmed at this service. The Bishop's subject was "Epiphany's Fiftieth Anniversary." On Monday, the Clergy of the Diocese of Chicago were the guests of the Parish at a luncheon held in the Parish House. The Rev. James S. Stone, D.D., the Rector of St. James' Church, acted as toastmaster, and introduced as the first speaker of the day the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, D.D., of the Church of the Redeemer, who was Rector of the Parish for a decade, from April, 1899, to January, 1909, when he resigned to take up the work of the Secretary of the Fifth Department. Dr. Hopkins urged that all the clergy present, request the older members of the Parish who are now scattered among the parishes of the Diocese be requested to make it a rule to send at least one dollar as a birthday offering each year to be added to the Endowment Fund. This rule is now being observed by present day members. Dr. Houkins was followed by the Rev. George B. Pratt, who served the Parish many years ago as Assistant. Mr. Pratt's address was delightful, giving the younger men among the clergy a picture of life among the churches in the "old days" when Epiphany was young. The Rev. Herbert W. Prince, the present Rector, spoke of the Endowment Fund, and of the present day work of the Parish, and its specific call to intensive work on the populous "West Side." This Parish belongs to a small circle of churches of various religious bodies, which minister to what is said to be the largest group of professional students congregated in any city of the world. These students are in attendance for the most part at the various medical and dental colleges clustering about the enormous Cook County Hospital. The Rev. James Malcolm VanZandt, who during his student days at the Western Theological Seminary, was Lay Assistant of the Parish, spoke of Epiphany's influence upon his own life and work.

On Tuesday evening the anual Parish bazaar and supper was held. This was the means of bringing together many of the old parishioners, who are now scattered throughout the city and suburbs, for a home-coming. On Wednesday evening, the choir, under the able leadership of Francis Hemington, Mus. Doc., the organist and choirmaster for many years, held a delightful entertainment.

Thursday evening was known as "Endowment night." A reception was given to former and present members of the Parish, and to the Reverend Clergy. The Rector, Mr. Prince, told of the remarkable progress which had been made in the matter of raising the endowment. The Rector and Vestry trust that with the impetus given by the Golden Jubilee, they may find the task of raising an Endowment Fund of $100,000 a not impossible task. The Rt. Rev. Theodore Nevin Morrison, D.D., Bishop of Iowa, who was Rector for more than twenty years, was an honored guest at the reception. The Rt. Rev. Samuel Fallows, D.D., L.L.D., the Bishop of the Synod of Chicago of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and the Rev. Martin T. Hardin, D.D., were also honored guests of the evening.

Friday was observed as "Consecration Day for Workers." There was an early celebration at seven o'clock in the morning, and a special service with an address by the Rector in the afternoon. A special "Consecration Service" was held at eight in the evening, at which time the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, D.D., was the speaker. The festivities concluded with the closing festival service, and sermon by Bishop Morrison on the Second Sunday in Advent.

The present Rector of the Parish, the Rev. Herbert W. Prince, has been in charge of the work for the five years last past. During this period all the debts have been paid, and the equipment of the Parish improved considerably. The Rector is assisted in his work by Deaconess Grace E. Wilson, the daughter of the late William White Wilson, L.H.D., one of Chicago's most loved clergymen. Quite recently a plot of ground, formerly occupied by the Chicago Homes for Boys, was enclosed and is being used as a playground. While the opportunities for service in this venerable Parish are greater than at any time in its glorious history, its activities cannot be sustained without the endowment of one hundred thousand dollars, or other outside assistance. Mr. Prince and his faithful coworkers can rest well assured that the welfare of "Old Epiphany" is close to the hearts of all of Chicago's Church workers.

The Rev. Richard F. Sweet, December, 1868, to November, 1871.

The Rev. Charles Maxwell Fox, LL.D., April, 1871, to September,

The list of Rectors who have served the Parish is as follows:

1871. The Rectorship of the Rev. Dr. Fox was cut short by his death.

The Rev. Charles H. W. Stocking, D.D., February, 1872, to August, 1875.

The Rev. Benjamin A. Rogers, D.D., September, 1875, to March, 1876.

The Rev. Theodore N. Morrison, D.D., December, 1876, to January, 1899.

The Rev. John Henry Hopkins, D.D., April, 1899, to January, 1909.

The Rev. Lyman Powell McDonald, D.D., February, 1909, to October, 1910.

The Rev. Franklin Cole Sherman, January, 1911, to April, 1913.

The Rev. Herbert William Prince, October, 1913.

Dr. Stewart Returns.

The Rev. George Craig Stewart, D.D., the Rector of St. Luke's Church, Evanston, who has been serving as Red Cross Chaplain at Army Evacuation Hospital No. 6, which was located variously at Meaux, Chateau Thierry, and Squilly (between St. Mihiel and Verdun), France, between July 26th and October 30th, has returned to his parish. Dr. Stewart landed in France immediately before the beginning of the Allies' great drive, and finished his work just a few days before the signing of the armistice, thus taking part in the most intense of all the fighting. On Advent Sunday Dr. Stewart began a series of sermons on "The American Soldier at the Front." The subjects are as follows: 1. "The American Soldier and Religion"; 2. "The American Soldier and Women"; 3. "The American Soldier and the Enemy"; and 4. "The American Soldier and Death." On Advent Sunday evening, at which time the first of the series of the sermons was delivered, the Church was thronged with people at 7:30, though the service was not scheduled to begin until half an hour later. Dr. Stewart has delivered addresses during the week past to the Evanston Council of the Knights of Columbus, the Evanston Commercial Club, and the Evanston Women's Club.

Gold Star at Oak Park Parish.

Gold stars have been affixed to the service flag of Grace Church, Oak Park, recently in honor of Lieutenant Frank O. Sturtevant, who was serving with the 128th Infantry when he was killed in action on October 9th somewhere in the Verdun region. this year to Miss Ruth Ketchem of Grace Church Parish.

The second star is in honor of Major James Douglas Rivet of the 61st Infantry. Major Rivet was an officer of the Regular Army, and had been an instructor at both officers' training schools at Fort Sheridan. His wife, who survives him, is the daughter of the Rev. C. T. Stout, a retired clergyman of the Diocese of Western Michigan, who resides in Grace Church Parish. Major Rivet was killed October 16th.

A beautiful bronze crucifix has been installed upon the rood beam of Grace Church Chapel, bearing the inscription following: "To the Glory of God and in Loving Memory of Lewis Upson Rich, 1876-1916. Given by his wife." The crucifix was blessed on the morning of All Saints' Day.

Dr. John Timothy Stone Declines New York Call.

The various religious interests of Chicago have learned with a great deal of satisfaction, that the Rev. John Timothy Stone, D.D., the pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church has declined a call to become the pastor of the new First Church of New York City, which was formed by the merger of the Old First, the Madison, and the University Place Presbyterian Churches of that City. The great task Dr. Stone has before him in Chicago is two-fold: first, the raising of an endowment fund of one million dollars for the work of his parish, the second, the building of a new church to care for what is said to be the largest Persian congregation in America. A large influx of Persians into the United States is expected upon the conclusion of peace.

VICTORY CELEBRATION IN OSKALOOSA, IA.

At 3:45 a. m. Monday, Nov. 11th, the President and Secretary of the Commercial Club, called up the Rev. Arthur Machen Lewis, Rector of St. James' Church, on the phone, and assured him that the armistice had been signed, and asked that the chimes of the church be played, as a prelude to the celebration that was soon to follow. The chimer, Frank Donald Gilbert, was hastily summoned, and in a few minutes the beautiful chimes were playing "America" then "Stand up for Jesus," "Rally Round the Flag" and "Maryland My Maryland." Then all the bells and whistles were turned loose and the celebration was on. At 9 a. m. there was a meeting of all the business men, arranging for the details of the day's celebration. Mr. Lewis appeared before them, and asked that he might have their backing for a great union Thanksgiving service to Almighty God, for the great victory that He has vouchsafed to us. Immediately there was a hearty response and a pledge of co-operation. Arrangements were made for the service, to be held in the park, Tuesday noon, from 12 to 1 o'clock, all business houses to be closed down from 12 to 1:30. A choir of 100 voices rendered the National Anthem and patriotic hymns. Addresses were made by the President of the Commercial Club, Warren Kalcach, the pastors of the Christian Church, the Congregational Church, and St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church. The pastor of the Reformed Church, read the lesson, the xiv. Chapter of Isaiah. The Rector of St. James Church acted as chairman, and read the prayers and the benediction was pronounced by the Free Methodist minister. There were at least three thousand people gathered in the park, to take part in the service, and there was deep interest and devout attention throughout. So there was a fitting beginning and ending of our peace celebration, and our people were deeply impressed by the service.

The women of St. James' Church are observing the Advent Call this week, December 1st to 7th. There is a celebration every morning, at 10 o'clock and at 5 o'clock p. m. the women gather for prayer and study of the Holy Scriptures, and for meditation. The attendance has been very good, and we hope for splendid results.

he Witness as A Christmas Present.
What more appreciative gift can ou present than a subscription to he Witness—a weekly visitor for n entire year? If you will send us ve dollars, we will advance your wn subscription another year.

The "Allied Churches" at Cleveland, Ohia.

Old St. John's stone Church, corner Wall and Church Sts., Cleveland, Ohio, on the West Side was erected in 1836 and still stands in the down town district similar to St. Paul's, Philadelphia, on Second Street, or old St. John's New York. It was once an aristocratic church with many wealthy members, most of whom have died and their families moved away, and is now surrounded by factories, saloons and people living in tenements. The Sunday school is made up largely of children of foreign parentage, only one or two of whom have parents who are communcants of the Church. The Thanksgiving Day services were held in this church as usual on Thanksgiving Day, but on the eve of Thanksgiving, Wednesday, November 28th, the Rector, the Rev. Dr. Avery, invited all the churches, with their pastors in the section West of the river, north of Lorain, extending to the lake, about two miles square, including thirteen congregations to unite in a patriotic praise and Thanksgiving service in St. John's Church, he having been lately elected the President of the Allied Churches of this section of the city. The clergymen and these parishes, including not only the Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Disciples, also the Reformed Germans, now called U. S. Scandanavian and Danish and Roumanian churches gladly accepted the invitation, and the pastors preceded by the vested choir led by the trumpeter the cross and allied flags, and followed by the Rector marched in the procession singing "Onward Christian Soldiers" going down one aisle of the church and crossing over and coming up the other aisle, as it is an old fashioned church, to the chancel where they all with a large congregation of over 600, representing the Allied Churches then sang, "The Star Spangled Banner," the rector led in the services, all uniting in the Lord's Prayer. The visiting clergymen occupying the stalls on the east side of the chancel, the Congregational minister read with the congregation the Psalter, The Olivet Baptist Pastor read the 1st Lesson, the Reformed Methodist minister the 2nd Lesson, the Reformed Church U. S. minister read the Thanksgiving Prayer from the prayer book and special appropriate prayers written by Bishop Lawrence. The rector then gave a word of greeting to the congregations of the Allied Churches, stating that they were like the allied nations under different flags, in different uniforms, but for the one cause of Righteousness and Justice and Christian Democracy of the world. The Presbyterian clergyman responded very happily thanking the rector and congregation of old St. John's, stating that it had been a pioneer and a leader in civic righteouness for the upbuilding and betterment of the community. He then announced the Marcellaise Hymn and the speaker of the evening, the Rev. Carl Gage, Pastor of Franklin Avenue M. E. Church who delivered an able and eloquent address speaking of the influences of the war in unifying all christian denominations, the extension of Christ's Kingdom and the new unified effort under the reconstruction period to meet the social and moral questions as well as the labor question, including the temperance problems which were the vital issues of the day. The offering was made for the Armenian and Syrian war sufferers, the Offertory Hymn was the unfurling flag, followed by "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," at the presentation of the alms. Final prayer was said by the Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Dr. Mickey; the Recessional Hymn was "God of our Fathers," as the choir marched down the east aisle, and returning by the west aisle followed by the clergymen and rector, closing a most beautiful and inspiring service demonstrating the real unity of the Allied Churches, who have come to realize that we must "all hang together, or we will hang separately." In the name of the Great Captain of our Salvation, who "Marches in front of His banner unfurled, Which He raised that His own might find Him and His Holy Church throughout all the world falls into rank behind Him."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

STUDIES IN ACTS.

Continued from page 4.

such ulterior purpose in the scheme of life.

It is trading one's eternal life for a little temporary material comfort. And like all drug habits it makes the user temporarily comfortable and mighty unreasonable.

The same argument which some enthusiasts use to demand that the miraculous shall attend their daily lives, is used by others (seldom by the same ones, such is human inconsistency), to demand that the "having all things in common" is the normal status of human life.

It is seldom that such folk are capable of absorbing more than one or two texts of the Bible which they exalt into a whole symposium of theology. There are few of them that are big enough to include both parts of this one text.

Either they make a whole gospel out of the miraculous healing of the sick, or else they make a whole gospel out of "having all things in common."

It is seldom that one is both a Christian Scientist and a Socialist, yet each come to the same fountain for their authority,—a few selected texts which confirm them in their persistent and narrow prejudices.

Yes, unquestionably the early Christians did for a time cure the sick by faith and divide their property by common agreement. But the fact that neither of these practices became the settled policy of the apostles in their subsequent ministry is just as well.

If they had become mere wonder-workers, Christianity would have degenerated into mere science and health, whereas it was the gift of eternal life to them that believe; or it would have degenerated into a mere political commission, whereas it took the ground that political systems were subordinate to the great principles of the Kingdom of God.

"Art thou a slave?" So far as the great things of life are concerned, do not let it worry you. You can become a child of God, even though a slave.

But a shallow world is always putting the wrong thing first.

It is not your social position, nor your financial status, nor your physical health, nor your scientific attainment, but rather your joyful acceptance of the word of God, that lies at the basis of your acceptance with God.

It was a beautiful expression of the new faith that they had so gladly received, that this exuberance of faith and generosity should mark the inauguration of this new gospel.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE.

Continued from page 1.

Holy Ghost, who sanctifies all the people of God.

God made all things good; He made man to be His child and friend, but He gave man the power of free will, making him able to do good or evil. We know that here is something wrong in the world. We do not act as God's children; we forget God. In some way man has gone wrong. This going wrong is called sin. Sin is going against God. Sin is disobedience to God. Sin is selfishness. Sin arises from man's having strayed from God.

To restore mankind in the right way is a big thing, too big for any man to do. So God sent into the world His Son to put us back on the right track. God the Son became man. He lived on earth as Jesus Christ, our brother, showing us how to live; died for us on the Cross, rose from the dead, and ascended into Heaven, where "He ever liveth to make intercession for us." With Him we are united in Baptism; He comes close to us in the Holy Communion. This union with Christ is the work of God, the Holy Ghost, who brings to us Christ's gift of Grace, mainly in the Sacraments which are the means of Grace. Grace is the spiritual gift of God which He gives us, that we may live and grow into the life of holiness.

It was not Christ's plan that His children should be lonely, solitary individuals. He meant them to be in a society, a brotherhood, a kingdom, united with Him and with each other. Into this we are admitted by Baptism, as are all Christians of all ages and of every race and tongue. The Church has its officers and rules.

The Bible Lesson.

As a rule, we begin on the first day of the new year to make resolutions and plans for doing the things, which in the hurry, turmoil and pleasures of every day life, we have left undone. So now in this Advent season, which is the call to preparation for the second coming of our Lord, let those of us readers of The Witness who have not been keeping up with the Church's plan for daily reading and understanding of the Bible, begin this week and resolve to do so. There are many thousands of us in the Witness family. It will be a strong "tie that binds," to have the thought that each day, each member will be reading and studying the same Bible lesson. The course for this week is as follows:

The season of Advent consists of the four weeks before Christmas.

The season teaches us that Christ's birth was an event that was carefully prepared for in God's providence.

For two thousand years the children of Abraham were preparing for the Messiah. In order to see how thoroughly the Old Testament prepares us for the day that the Messiah is to be a king, that He is to be a ruler of the nations, let us read as follows:

First Day—The first promise of the Messiah, Gen. I: 15, to be noted with content, "The Seed of the Woman," is to bruise the head of the serpent.

In Gen. XIV. 18-20. The Messiah is called Melchi (king) Jedek (righteousness) and King of Salem (peace.) Commented upon in Heb. VII. 1-10.

Second Day—In Psalm 110, David prophecies of the King, which Christ refers to in St. Matt. XXII, 41-46.

Third Day—In Dan II, 44-45 we have a prophecy of the Kingdom, commented upon in St. Luke, I, 31-33.

Fourth Day—In Zachariah IX, 9-11 is the famous prophecy of the King, quoted of Christ in St. Matt. XXI, 4-11, which forms the Gospel for the first Sunday in Advent. The genealogy in St. Matt. I is to establish the Kingly line to the Messiah.

Not only did God prepare for the Messiah through the Royal line of David, thus declaring the Kingship of Christ, but at the same time through the worship and the ritual of the altar. God was teaching the Jews the meaning of sacrifice and that the Messiah was to exercise a priestly office in which He was to be both the priest and the sacrificial lamb. Thus we shall trace through the Old Testament this sacrificial story.

Fifth Day—In Gen. IX, 1-15 we find the beginning of sacrifice. The difference between obedience and disobedience in sacrifice as illustrated in Heb. XI, 4. We find other acceptable offerings in Gen. VIII, 20 (Noah). Gen. XIV (Abraham); Gen. XXVIII, 16, (Jacob).

Sixth Day—Psalm XXII is a very vivid description of Christ's sacrifice on Calvary, also Psalm XL.

Seventh Day—Isaiah LIII contains a prophecy of Christ's priestly sacrifice. Read also 1st St. Peter, II, 20-25.

A New Star in the Heavens.

Last Summer a new star blazed out in the heavens which attracted the attention of the astronomists and raised many questions as to who first discovered it, if it was a "new one," to us and whether or not it was a sign or omen. The Boston Herald had an editorial on the subject as follows:

"British experts were asked whether the new sun was moving this way and if there was any likelihood of it getting into a head-on collision with the earth. These moments of alarm have now passed and the star though diminished in brilliance from first to fourth magnitude, is still shining at a safe distance. In the interim, and without any unriddling of the puzzle, we have come to realize that the celestial visitor is 'new' only in a Pickwickian sense. It had been seen before; at least thirty years ago Harvard photographs of the constellation showed this particular star in exactly the same place which it occupies today. It was then a very faint object even for the camera and remained such in successive pictures until early in June last year, when it took a turn for the brighter and qualified as a sensation. Whether the star 'exploded,' got a tremenduous jolt from a 'dark sun,' or simply ploughed its way through a nebular, nobody knows.

Light travels at inconceivable speed—at the rate of 186,000 miles a second and we get news of the events of the Sun in about eight minutes. But many of the stars are so bewilderingly remote that this particular out burst must have taken place not a week nor yet a month before it was seen, but hundreds, perhaps thousands of years ago. In studying the constellations that have become so familiar and dear to us we are studying not what is, but the things that once were—the vast antiquity which makes up so much of the bulk of our universe.

Tremendous changes of which only our far-off successors can know anything, may even now be in progress in the skies. And if there be sentient beings far-afield who scan our habitation with instruments immeasurably superior to ours, they also are antiquarians in regard to us.

In one world according to distance, the observer might be witnessing the battle of Waterloo, in another the founding of Rome, in a third the fall of Troy. It is an impressive thought that there are star systems so remote that even the swift messenger of light could not reach them with the story of our war until long after this planet had ceased from its nurture of life and had been leased out into the cosmic dust from which new worlds incessantly come forth."

NOVEMBER IN HONOLULU

(With Apologies to Thomas Hood.)

No threatening clouds, no stormy skies,
No frosty air that stings the eyes,
No fog that hides the sun for days,
No snow to block the travellers' ways;
No need of fires upon the hearth;
No blues of mirthful hearts, no dearth;
No winds that howl and pierce one through,
No squeak of ghosts adorn the field!
No smoking chimneys causing wrath,
No bursting pipes—no freezing bath!
No falling leaves all brown and dead,
No cold, damp sheets, no icy bed!
No lack of flowers, of fruits and trees,
No lack of sunshine, birds and bees!
No-vember!

May L. Restarick,

Taken from The Living Church.

DIOCESE OF NEW JERSEY

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY MEETING.

The Lower Division, New Jersey Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, recently held its Autumn meeting in St. Andrew's Church, Mt. Holly, the Rev. Henry Teller Cocke, Rector. The Bishop and the Archdeacon of the diocese were present. The theme of the day was the "Advent Call" upon which addresses were made by the Bishop, Mrs. Matthews, the chairman of the Devotional Committee, and Mrs. Biller. Archdeacon Shepherd told of mission work in the diocese, emphasizing the importance of the Archdeacon's Extension Fund for meeting the expense of insurance and repairs on different missions.

The Rev. C. W. Twing told of his work in the pines, and reports were made by the heads of the several Departments.

Services at the Woodbury Bag Loading Plant.

The Rev. H. E. Thompson of Woodbury, Secretary of the Diocese, has continued since the beginning of September to hold semi-monthly services at the above named plant. The services held in the large cafeteria, have been attended by officials of the plant, and many others. The choir of St. Luke's Parish, Westville, have assisted in the services. The Soldiers and Sailors Prayer Book is used, copies of which were provided by the Bishop White Prayer Book Society.

Beside the services the "Voluntary Chaplain" has participated in different social events at the plant, and has done systematic visiting at the twelve dormitories of the Women's Welfare Department, in which have been domiciled over seven hundred women.

The offering at the first service was given to diocesan missions.

Since the ending of the war the operations and personnel of the plant have been much reduced, but some more permanent occupancy is expected; and it is well that the Church has a foothold there. No other religious services have been regularly maintained.

Notes from Parishes and Missions.

St. James' Church, Bradley Beach, has been enabled to pay $1000 of its indebtedness, which now amounts to $3500.

Grace Church, Elizabeth, has paid all its indebtedness, increased the Rector's salary, and begun the accumulation of a Reserve Emergency Fund. The following memorials have been received: an altar in memory of the sixty Grace Church boys who are in Army or Navy service; a Bishop's chair in memory of Mrs. Eva Clynch; a Priest's chair, given by Mrs. Sarah Hunter in memory of her parents; a Processional Cross, the gift of Mrs. Kilesby, as a memorial of the Confirmation of her three sons. St. Thomas Church, Glassboro, has received from members of the Whitney family a gift of $500, which suffices to pay the old indebtedness.

St. Barnabas Church, Sand Hills, is bequested $700 under the will of Miss Caroline Nevins.

St. George's Church and Club at Camp Dix, under the Rev. Karl M. Block, assisted by other resident and some neighboring clergy, met heroically and effectively the especially severe visitation of the epidemic.

INFLUENZA BAN LIFTED IN INDIANA CITY

Rector at Laporte Protests Against the Acts of Civil Authorities.

A spirited and successful campaign was recently made at Laporte, Indiana, against the closing of the churches, schools and places of amusement and in favor of a strict quarantine of influenza patients. The Rev. F. J. Barwell-Walker, Rector of St. Paul's Church, without imputing unworthy motives to the civil authorities, made a strong protest against their acts in closing the churches, in an open letter to the Daily Herald. The letter in part follows:

"From whatever standpoint one considers the matter, the closing of the churches is wrong. There is, to say the least, a reasonable doubt whether such order is legal. In various states the order has been disregarded, and in Maine the Roman Catholics are prepared to carry the matter to the highest courts. If one looks at it from a mere medical standpoint the whole thing borders on the ludicrous. We are told that it is necessary to prohibit crowding to prevent the spread of the disease, and that it is necessary to close the churches on that account, BUT NOT THE FACTORIES OR STORES! Why? Because they are essential to the general welfare (at least from a financial standpoint) while the churches are not! They are non-essentials, and are thus classed with theaters, etc. It is necessary to enter an icecream parlor for light refreshments, but it is not necessary to enter church to worship God! It is necessary to tolerate crowded street cars and trains, but it is unnecessary for the faithful few to meet together and join with the priest in the offering of the holy sacrifice for the removal of the epidemic from our midst.

"I repeat that from every standpoint the closing of the churches is wrong; it is a sin in the sight of Almighty God, a sin impossible of commission if the people of our city and country had retained the old belief in the love and power of their Creator. It is lack of faith which has brought about this insult to the Deity. Our Master would say today: 'Fear not germs that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul.' But we are so bound up in physical conditions that we are far more careful about the things which concern the body than we are about the things which concern the soul. We are putting 'safety first'—physical safety—before principle, in spite of all that has been said about the changes wrought by the war, and are curtailing the spiritual power of the nation in this great emergency. When the outcome of the war was in doubt, the President called upon the churches to observe a special day of intercession for the triumph of our righteous cause. The power of God was recognized, and His response to our petitions rapid and sure. Now we are told, in effect if not in word, that whatever power God may have had in relation to the war, He has none when it comes to disease.

"Supposing that the authorities are right in restricting crowds, how does that affect the churches? How many are so crowded in this day of carelessness and unbelief as to constitute a public menace? If any are, it would be easy to limit the attendance in proportion to the seating capacity (in line with a notice I saw in the city limiting the number in a certain room to eight.) How many sick people go to church? Certainly far less than go to factory or store. But, as one member of the city board said, 'it is difficult to know where to draw the line,' and so the line is drawn where the least harm results materially and the most morally and spiritually. Chicago decided that it would be morally and psychologically harmful to close the churches—and the same truth applies here. Anybody who knows anything at all about psychology knows that such action is far more likely to increase disease than it is to lessen it. The basis of all modern civilization is Christianity and anything which lessens its influence must be bad for the people morally.

"To those who believe in the power of intercessory prayer it may be some consolation to know that the holy sacrifice is offered daily, but that does not make up for the loss of united intercession. If our city board is actuated by a genuine desire for the moral, spiritual and physical welfare of our people, they will lift the ban from our churches at once, and ask for an increase in the services of intercession rather than a decrease. We may do what we can by prayer, by the anointing of the sick, by the pleading of the great sacrifice in the blessed Sacrament of the altar; but we cannot do what would be possible—as during the war—without the united intercession of our people.

"In the name of God, and for the sake of the people, I ask for the authority to exercise the right guaranteed under the constitution, publicly now as I have privately before, with a willingness to accept a limitation in numbers if such be deemed really necessary. I am ready to cooperate in every way possible for the stamping out of the epidemic short of a virtual denial of God's power and that I must protest against with all the forces of my faith in Him.

"The only logical alternative to the removal of the ban on the churches is to close every factory, office and store, and to prohibit the use of pool room, club, or Y. M. C. A.—everything in fact where there may be at least as much danger as there is in a half-empty church. Think of the foolishness of 40 or 50 women crowded into a small space for Red Cross work, while the same number is prohibited in a church seating ten times that number!"

WOMEN IN THE CHURCH

Shall the women who have been doing war work so effectively have the chance to know of the opportunities for similar work in the Church? This was the question discussed by a self-appointed committee which met at the Bryn Mawr Club in New York on Tuesday evening, November 26th. Bishop Lloyd, President of the Board of Missions, Dr. Gardner of the General Board of Religious Education, Deaconess Goodwin, candidate secretary of the Board of Missions, Miss Grace Lindley of the Woman's Auxiliary, Miss Edith Hadley of the Girls' Friendly Society, Miss Margaret Hobart of the Churchman Editorial Staff, and Miss Adelaide Case and Miss Grace Hutchins of St. Faith's House, constituted the committee.

They recognized the fact that women who have run canteens, organized branches of the Red Cross, supervised civilian relief, and reconstructed villages in France, will not be content to do small things in a small way. Many of these workers are Church women. If we believe that the Church is infinitely greater than any man-made organization and has received the greatest commission ever given, then we believe that she has work to offer the most capable and the most gifted of her members. It is only a question of making known to the right women the positions which they may fill. If the Church is not there to make known the challenge of important work to be done, then the women will turn to organizations that seem to them more effective.

In order to help Rectors and other leaders who wish to answer definitely questions about work for women in the Church, this self-appointed committee, with Bishop Lloyd as chairman, is preparing a leaflet on Women's Opportunities for Service in the Church. The leaflet will soon be ready, and may be ordered from the Board of Missions.

Why should we not expect that hundreds of women who have done big things will consecrate their ability in the service of God and His Church?

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SOUTHERN DIOCESE OF VIRGINIA

The twenty-sixth Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in Christ Church, Roanoke, Va., November 22nd-23rd.

The evening of November 20th the delegates and visitors were welcome to an informal "Get together" in the beautiful new Parish House by the officers of the Auxiliaries of St. John's and Christ Church, assisted by the Rectors of both churches and their wives.

The meeting on Thursday was opened with the Holy Communion, administered by the Revs. J. Cantley Johnson and G. Otis Mead.

The business meeting which followed, was presided over by the President, Mrs. John Fletcher, who explained the changing of the Auxiliary Convention from Spring to Fall.

She made an appeal for the "Center Fund" to meet running expenses. Mrs. Fletcher also urged that each branch of the Auxiliary should subscribe for at least, one copy of the "Diocesan Record." Mrs. Loving then read a very interesting article on the origin and work of the Little Helper. Mrs. Castle, Custodian of the United Offering, being incapacitated from attending the convention by sickness sent a message from her sick room to be read by Mr. John D. Letcher. The Educational Secretary, Mrs. Hobart, next spoke in regard to the importance of every branch having a Study Class during the year. She said she could give no report of the number of study classes conducted the last year as she had received no answers from the various letters of inquiry which she had sent out.

In the absence of Miss Jane Neely, Box Secretary, Mrs. Murr, of Trinity Church, Portsmouth, gave a report on the boxes sent out. Miss Aurelia Davis, Vice New Box Secretary, asked that the branches of the Auxiliary communicate with her, in regard to whom boxes should be sent. Her address is—Miss Aurelia H. Davis, 215 Harrison St., Lynchburg, Va. She also asked that no boxes be sent by freight or express, but by parcel post, also to place a card inside telling contents of boxes. The card should bear the name of the church and Auxiliary sending the box. Miss Davis requested that clothing and toys, candy, etc., be sent in separate boxes.

Rev. Geo. Floyd Rogers, of Lynchburg, head of Covington Home for Boys, gave an interesting talk on the Boys' Home and the progress being made to divert the activities of the boys in the Home into proper channels.

Deaconess Williams, of Dante, spoke in behalf of her own Mission, also that of Mrs. Binns, at Nora, Dickerson County, who was detained at home, nursing sick patients. The Deaconess asked that candy for children, clothing, shoes, men's clothes, books and rolls of wall paper, quilt pieces be sent to both the missions at Nora and Sandy Ridge. Mrs. Binns made a special appeal for twenty dolls and one good size doll bed. Miss Williams was unable to attend the convention on account of having the influenza. For her own mission at Dante the Deaconess asked for Christmas gifts for 200, records for Victrola and games for boys' club.

The mission at Wilder is closed on account of Miss Sutton's absence in Canada, there being sickness in her family.

Workers are needed at Fremont and Morse. Deaconess Williams asked that the women of the Auxiliary would try and induce some of the returning war workers to take up some of the mission work in Southwest Virginia. She especially appealed for volunteer workers through the summer. Her present assistant, Miss Mabel Hix, was sent from St. Faith School, New York, as part of her training and becoming interested in the work remained to help her.

Deaconess Adams, of Keokee, showed a picture of her church that was part of her own home. She told how her people at Keokee had packed two large boxes for the Belgians and how the farmers had loaned their wagons that they might be hauled to the railroad station.

The Deaconess asked that useful things be sent in her Xmas box, such as shoes, ties, aprons, dresses, hair ribbons, quilt pieces, soap and towels. Money to be used for the sick.

Thursday afternoon Rev. Joseph Dunn, D.D., of Lynchburg, conducted the "Quiet Hour" at which time he held the closest attention of the convention during his talk on Power of Prayer.

Our own Missionary, Dr. Harry Taylor, spoke Thursday evening of his medical work in China. Dr. Taylor also spoke during the session Friday morning. He told of the wonderful progress that had been made in the hospital at Anking, China, but still there are great needs in the way of improvement to the buildings. He said there were infinite possibilities for spiritual work among the natives, the Chinese being a receptive people. There should be a woman to talk to the patients, the doctors having so little time. A prayer meeting of one-half hour is held every day in the chapel for the nurses, as well as one in the wards for the patients. Dr. Taylor asked the prayers of all the branches of the Auxiliary for his work. He told of patients coming four and five hundred miles to be treated. The hospital needs about $2300.00 to equip it more fully for its work. The Rockefeller Foundation offers to give three-fourths of this amount if the other one-fourth can be raised outside. The Southern Virginia Branch of the Woman's auxiliary promised, through its president, to raise one thousand dollars for two isolation wards for infectious diseases in Dr. Taylor's hospital within the next year.

Dr. Taylor was followed by his mother, Mrs. John Taylor, in a most unique address. Her appeal was for something definite to be done towards getting men and women to go out to China to cultivate the spiritual seed sown in the hospitals and which had taken root and sprouted in out stations with no one to carry the work forward. She begged that the women would acquaint themselves with the contents of the Spirit of Missions, which contains the present, vital needs of missionaries, rather than content themselves with the origin of missions in different countries.

Mrs. Darling gave a short talk on the work of the Juniors.

Mrs. John Loyd next gave a very interesting little talk on missions. She was followed by Mrs. Linsey Patton, of Lexington, who said this was the first convention it had been her privilege to attend for twenty years. She spoke of using the modified prayer cards. She asked that these cards be carried to every woman in the congregation, and also the week of prayer be observed in Advent.

Mrs. Moore, of 703 Boissevan Avenue, Norfolk, Va., next spoke in the interest of the Church Periodical Club, asking that magazines not more than six months old be sent to Chaplains at the front to help fill the vacant moments of the boys. The idea of this club is personal service from one Christian to another. She asked that magazines, The Spirit of Missions and Southern Churchman be sent to Alaska to Archdeacon Stuck that his people might have some reading matter for the long six months of night. Everything must be sent there between the months of March and June.

Miss Davis told of the wonderful progress that had been made in the last three years at St. Peter's in the Mountain, Franklin County. They now have a stone school building, three teachers and eighty pupils. The school is provided with a domestic science room where they have a machine on which the children are taught to sew. The Juniors of New York expect to send her a Christmas box. She needs baby things, clothing, bandages, antiseptics, hot water bags, ice bags.

The Missionary to the Amherst Indians, Miss Wagner, gave a very interesting talk on her work among these people, who seem to be a mixture of the white mountain people, free negroes and some Indians, who were dropped at this place when a part of their tribe made a journey from Florida to Washington on business about seventy-five years ago. So far the Episcopal Church is the only one which has taken up this work. They came to Sunday service from a radius of twenty-five miles. This mission draws $25.00 from Diocesan Fund, $35.00 for five months from the Government and $400.00 from Sweet Brier College per year. Miss Wagner said her people bring her all the provisions they can spare. Her log house is very cold in the winter. It is built upon a rock with no under pinning. She would like one or two rugs for her bed room, and some hymn records with which to entertain the people before the church begins. For Christmas she asked for seventy-five useful gifts and some candy. Miss Wagner said the church and mission house were both badly in need of painting.

The Convention was adjourned at noon to partake of a most inviting lunch in the Parish House, tendered to the delegates and visitors by the Auxiliaries of St. John's and Christ Church, Roanoke.

In the afternoon an enjoyable automobile ride was given to the visitors

In a talk given by Bishop Tucker to the women he urged that an effort be made to return to the old life instituted by our fathers and mothers that every household should have family prayers and the reading of the Bible to the children. That the people should come to a realization that the Church is the home of the soul and a person is dependent on regular services of the Church to feel the nearness of God. He asked that we make the Church a large part of family and individual life. The Bishop said as soon as the Spirit of God moves in our hearts there will be no need of appealing to people to spread the Gospel. In speaking of the ending of the war he said: "The end came not as a military victory, but to roll away clouds from the sky and draw the children of God nearer to Him. Peace has problems as well as war. The great power of the Kingdom of Christ must readjust conditions. The Auxiliary must labor as never before to show the need of bringing the heathen and all to God so there will never again be such a war as the present. The time has now come when every woman should bring back by prayer and service every one to the Church. We must now endeavor to rebuild that which has been destroyed. God is going to call many of the men who served their country to the ministry and the women must pray that these young men may accept the call. From the women of the Red Cross may there be many who will enter the service of Christ to spread His Kingdom.

The Convention closed with a mass meeting at 8 o'clock in the church with an address from Bishop Tucker.

Bishop Thomson visited Christ Church, Roanoke, on Sunday, November 24th, and confirmed a class of fifteen. That afternoon he drove over to Montvale and confirmed three. Both classes were presented by Rev. G. Otis Mead.

Rev. J. Alfred Figg, who during his diaconate has been in charge of St. Iukes, Clover, Christ Church, Mt. Laurel, in Halifax County, Grace Church, Drakes Branch and Ascension, Keysville, Charlotte County, with residence at Clover, was ordained to the priesthood in St. Lukes' Church, Clover, by Bishop Tucker on Tuesday, November 26th.

THE CHURCH KALENDAR.

The lessons in the following kalendar for the week ending December 21st, are those appointed to be read at morning and evening Prayer in the new Lectionary set forth by the General Convention of 1916.

3rd Sunday in Advent.
(December 15th.)

I Samuel ii. 1-11
Luke i. 39-56
Genesis vi. 5-end
Luke xvii. 20-end

Monday

Isaiah xiii.
Rev. xi.-11 xii. to end
Jeremiah xxx.
Rev. vii. 1-4, 9-end

.. Tuesday.

Isaiah xiv. 1-23
Rev. xiii.
II Esdras ix. 1-22
Mark xiii. 1-23

Wednesday.
(Ember Day)

Jeremiah xxiii. 1-15
John i. 29-end
Jeremiah xxiii. 16-end
Ephesians iv. 1-16

Thursday.

Isaiah xvii. and xviii.
Rev. xiv.-14, xv-4
Job xxxvi. 26, xxxvii.-13
Matthew xxiv. 29-end.

Friday.
(Ember Day)

Jeremiah xxvi. 1-19.
John v. 33-end
II Kings vi. 8-23
John xi. 1-16

Saturday.
(S. Thomas Apostle—Ember Day.)

II Kings vii.
John xiv. 1-14
Job lxii. 1-9
I Peter i. 3-12

A PATRIOTIC PAGEANT

BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE— SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Democracy Saving the World

A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.

Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year

ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.

A Pageant Has Wonderful Educational Power

If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.

THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.

Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave.,

By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.

CHICAGO, ILL.

The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

Confirmation Instruction

By Bishop Johnson of Colorado.

A very valuable Manual to place in the hands of candidates for Confirmation.

Send 25 cents for a sample copy.

Price, $2.00 a dozen.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Private Prayers for the Faithful

By Bishop Sage of Salina.

A Manual which thousands of Church people have found helpful in their private devotions at home and in church.

Price, 10 cents. Postage 4c.

"My people find the book of prayers very helpful and I think it is in every home in my parish."—Carl W. Nau, Emporia, Kan.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Parochial Mission Supplies

Use our Printed Matter.
Send for Samples.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 103. HOBART, IND., AND CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 21, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

Dont forget to include among your Christmas gifts a subscription to The Witness.

"I want to congratulate you upon the interesting issues of The Witness, which you are publishing," writes Bishop Brewster of Maine.

Four hundred thousand children are starving in Bible lands, crying out to the Christian children of America, "Help keep us alive!" Every boy and girl in the country should be given the opportunity to share in the proposed gift of $2,000,000 for the Children of Bible lands at Christmas time.

Mrs. Stephen Wheeler reports that the Church Home for Convalescents, 51 West Fourth St., Denver, Col., is greatly in need of women's clothing and of single or three-quarter size beds. Gifts of clothing and beds, or contributions in money to purchase the same will be greatly appreciated.

The rector of Grace Church, Port Huron, Mich., was speaking to the mother of a boy in France on the afternoon of the great day when the news was received of the signing of the armistice, and she said, with eyes filled with tears, "I just keep on saying, thank You, thank You, thank You, thank You." I went into the church and cried; I was so glad: I wanted to stand right out on Military street and scream out, thank You, so that everyone might hear."

The Anglican clergy of Ottawa, Canada, arranged three Victory services in which all three churches of the city united. The first was held at St. Matthew's Church, November 21st, the preacher being Dean Starr of St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, Ont.; the second at St. John's Church, with a sermon by the Rev. D. Charles White, rector of St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, New York; the third service was at Christ Church Cathedral, December 5th, the sermon being preached by the Bishop of Ottawa.

One hurried glance at coat lapels or blouses from now on will tell a lot about the ideals of men and women. If the 1919 membership button of the Red Cross is being worn, the glance will register a flattering impression. This button is being given to every adult who pays one dollar membership dues, but the dollar is the least significant thing about the transaction. What the American Red Cross wants this Christmas is to have the world see that the American people are behind the Red Cross spirit. Universal membership will prove this.

"May I briefly enroach on your valuable space," writes Mr. George Gordon King, treasurer of the General Board of Missions, "in order to say to all contributors to the Missionary Work of the Church, through the Board of Missions, that the books of the treasurer will be closed for the year on the evening of December 31st, 1918. We will be glad, however, and will take pleasure in doing so, to give credit, on this year's business, for all remittances received after December 31st, provided their envelopes bear the post-office mark of December 31st or of an earlier date."

Captain A. S. B. Carpenter of the British Cruiser Vindictive, which took the lead in sinking old ships across the submarine channel in Zeebrugge harbor, is in America and recently gave an address at Trinity Church, New York. He says that the success of the British Navy has been largely due to the splendid influence which cultivated in officers and men the qualities of self-sacrifice, reliability, steadfastness, and sincerity. The captain stated that Morning and Evening Prayer was said daily on every ship and that the prayer asking for the security of ships as they pass "on their lawful occasions" is peculiarly appropriate for use at the present time, as it has bearing on the question of freedom of the seas.

President of Trinity College Resigns.

The Rev. Flavel S. Luther, LL. D., President of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., has sent his resignation to the Board of Trustees, to take effect July 1, 1919. He gave his advanced age as the reason. Dr. Luther, who is 70 years old, has been a member of the Trinity Faculty since 1883, and President since 1904.

Dr. Tompkins Visits Pittsburgh.

Monday morning, December 2nd, the Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, visited Pittsburgh and spoke to a body of 300 ministers, making up the Pittsburgh Ministerial Union, on the subject of "Evangelism." This Union is reputed to be one of the largest in the country, and meets the first Monday of every two months. Dr. Tompkins' address, which treated the subject in a most practical and able manner, created a profound impression.

The Twenty-Weeks' Campaign in Maine.

A twenty weeks' campaign, from Advent to Palm Sunday, a development from the germ thought of the Advent Call is being conducted in the Diocese of Maine, which "aims," says the Northeast "to enlist the work of the men in the parishes, as well as women, to foster family life and devotion, and to encourage congregational singing. Topics for sermons are to be given to all the clergy in the diocese for certain Sundays, and the congregations are to be given Bible readings to prepare for these sermons." The Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann of Trinity Church, Boston, was in Portland recently and preached in the Cathedral in the interest of the Advent Call and addressed the Men's Club on the "Twenty Weeks' Campaign."

Good Results From Advent Call.

The Advent Call to the women of the Church has been in part observed in St. Peter's Church, Cass Lake and St. Bartholomew's, Bemidji, Minn. At the former place Mrs. Parshall invited the women of the town to participate in a united service at which the Rev. Geo. Backhurst gave an address. About fifty women of all denominations gathered and the devotional character of the service and the intense spiritual tone of the address made a great impression for good. At Bemidji, on Sunday afternoon, December 8th about one hundred women took part in a beautiful service of Thanksgiving and Intercession. A special choir of ladies led the praises, and the Rev. Geo. Backhurst gave the address, dealing with the building up of spiritual power ahead of us. Over 75 per cent of the women present were not members of the Church.

New York Cathedral Events.

The Rev. George William Douglas, D. D., a favorite evening preacher at Grace Church during Dr. Huntington's rectorship, is giving a series of sermons at the Cathedral Sunday afternoons during December. On Monday evenings Prof. Stuart L. Tyson is giving a course of seven lectures in the choir common room on the subject of "How We Got the New Testament." Sunday night, December 1st, the choir rendered Gounod's "Mors et Vita," and the congregation filled every seat of the Cathedral. It has also been full to overflowing practically every Sunday lately with its special memorial services. One is given the feeling that here is a Cathedral fulfilling the ideal in many respects, and so justifying its existence.

Speaks Out Loud For Temperance.

We are in receipt of a communication from the Rev. Dr. Empringham, General Superintendent of the Church Temperance Society, in which he calls attention to the failure of Uncle Sam to deliver a letter from Bishop Johnson of Missouri endorsing the call of the society, and expresses his appreciation of the Bishop's "endorsement of the greatest moral reform of the Twentieth Century." We very gladly publish the following letter sent to us at the suggestion of Bishop Courtney by Dr. Empringham:

My Dear Bishop Courtney:

I have been disappointed that my name does not appear among the list of bishops approving the call of the Church Temperance Society and the request that Sunday, November 24th, be especially used throughout the Church to call attention to the urgency of the liquor traffic reform. I signed the letter promptly when it was received by me, and forwarded it to your office. I should not like to be classed among those who feel that it isn't worth while for the Church to speak "out loud" in this matter.

Yours faithfully,
FREDERICK F. JOHNSON,
Bishop Coadjutor of Missouri.

Mystery Play at St. Faith's School, New York.

"Adeste Fidelis," a mystery play that wonderfully tells the Christmas story, has been written for Saint Faith's Sunday School, St. Faith's House, Cathedral Close, New York City, by Marie E. J. Hobart, the author of Saint Agnes Mystery Plays. The children are busily rehearsing the play which is to be given at Synod House on Saturday, December 21, at four o'clock. The mystery makes the beauty and wonder of the coming of the Christ Child very real to the girls and boys taking part in it, as well as to the audience. On December 21st, the audience will consist mostly of children, for St. Faith's Sunday School has invited its neighbors and members of St. Michael's, All Souls', The Sheltering Arms' and St. Mary's Sunday School are expected to fill Synod House.

St. Thomas' Chapel, New York.

Three services were held in St. Thomas' Chapel on the morning of Thanksgiving Day, including two celebrations of Holy Communion and Morning Prayer with music and sermon. In observing the Advent Call to Prayer, special services were held daily during the first week of this month. The choir will sing Christmas music on the 24th inst., and there will be a midnight celebration of Holy Communion, beginning at 11 p. m. on Christmas Eve.

The executive committee of the Chapel reports that "the general subscriptions for the East Side work and Summer Home amounted to $23,614.29, a somewhat larger total than the previous year and reasonably close to the twenty-five thousand dollars asked for. For so trying a period, the showing is very gratifying. The Rev. Mr. Sheerin has succeeded in lowering expenditures through economical methods and efficient work."

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

"The stars in their courses are revolving to make a league of nations inevitable," says ex-President Taft.

"Without the British Navy, Germany would have easily won the war," said the Rev. Dr. Manning at Trinity Church, New York, recently.

"The only hope of securing the ideal that this war will be the last will be the establishment of a league of nations," says Sir Donald MacLean of England.

"A league of nations is an ideal. Perhaps it is attainable. Upon the close fellowship of the great English speaking nations and dominions depends the hope of fulfilling that ideal," says the Archbishop of York, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Lang.

"A man who talks about forgiving until justice has wrought her sobering work is just a Bolsheviki—or a fool," says The Texas Churchman, in commenting upon the statement of a minister, "Now that we have won the fight we can show mercy and forgive."

"It is a curious fact," says G. Monroe Royace in a letter to the New York Times, "that the $170,000,000 which the people of the United States were asked to give to the United War Work Fund is the exact sum that Hildreth states to be the entire cost of the war for American independence."

"If a large, world-wide view of all that has happened in the last year is taken into consideration" says the Rev. James Sheerin, vicar of St. Thomas Chapel, New York, "we certainly as a people have much for which to be thankful. In spite of all doubts and dark spots, I believe that we can gratefully say, 'The Kingdom of God is nearer than ever before!'"

"Despite the Lusitania, notwithstanding the assassination of Miss Cavell, the ignominious treatment of the women of Lille and our millions of dead, we must feed Germany. Noblesse oblige. It is Clemenceau himself who reminded us, 'midst the wild joy of the nation, that France remains always a soldier of God; in the words of our fathers, or, in those of today, a soldier of the ideals of humanity.'" —M. Gustave Herve, editor of La Victorie, Paris, France.

Let Us Be Modest About It.

"From the standpoint of man power, food conservation, money and material for the support of our allies the United States made an astonishing and splendid record," says Mr. Fred B. Smith, for many years international secretary of the Y. M. C. A., "but by all means let us be modest about it."

Should Put Their Trust First of All in God.

In commenting upon the influenza epidemic at Pottsville, Pa., the Rev. Howard W. Diller, rector of Trinity Church, says, "Better housing conditions, cleaner streets, better developed and cared for bodies will all have their influence in safeguarding the health of the community. The Board of Health and some of our physicians might not agree, but we are convinced that a higher and better moral and spiritual tone would serve the same end. We would not for a moment belittle or minimize the value of sanitation, social hygiene and materia medica, but we could wish that some of those who trust in these things, would put their trust first of all in God. For it is no small matter by faith to cast out fear, to serve God with a quiet mind and to rely upon him for help and assistance."

The Perpetrators Must Be Punished.

"For a league of nations to be effective," says the Rt. Rev. Dr. Winnington-Ingram, Bishop of London, "the way must be paved by world-wide demonstrations that those guilty of waging this war made a colossal blunder from a material viewpoint. There was absolutely no necessity for the central powers to outrage the peace of the world. I consider this war the most unnecessary war ever waged, and I am absolutely convinced that unless the whole world sees and knows that this kind of thing does not pay, the whole idea of the league of nations is a baseless dream.

"Therefore, the perpetrators must be punished. I claim that to punish the wrongdoers is an essential part of upholding the righteous judgement of God as well as the essential foundation for a successful realization of the league of nations ideal."

The Christmas Spirit Lifted Above Itself This Year.

"The Christmas spirit, always beautiful—because one of giving—is this year lifted above itself," says Helene Kouse in the Goodhouse Housekeeping Magazine. "We want to give to our friends a joyous greeting, of course, but in a finer, better way—to give to little children tops that bring their happy laugh—but even more this great, strong, joyous, young nation wants, this year, to give of its strength, first to its own fighters and sufferers, and then to all those others who need our gifts of comfort and of cheer. We want to give, not the gift of an hour or a day, but the enduring gift. We want to give, not for the gift itself, but for what the gift means to those who receive it. It is the unselfish gift, the gift that passes something on to others, that matters now. It should be the gift of service, of love—of sacrifice, perhaps.

"For God is in This, Men!"

"We are proud that our American soldiers and sailors have brought to the Stars and Stripes new glory of their courage, skill and dash," wrote Bishop Brewster of Maine in a letter, on the day after the signing of the armistice, to the men in the service from his diocese. "And we are thankful for you, 'over there,' that battles, and 'no man's land,' night-marches, mud, dirt, and dug-outs are either now things of the past, or will soon all be behind you!

"And then for you of the Navy, whose work has been so invaluable and yet so little talked of, we are thankful. Yours will be a glorious story!

"Those of you who have been kept on this side, in cantonments, or on patrol duty near shore, you too have our gratitude. Just as faithful, even though less exciting, has been your labor. Your country called you and you gave her your obedience."

The Bishop then gives a vivid description of the way in which Portland celebrated the victory, and continues, "In the Cathedral, just at six, we had a solemn Te Deum, with prayer and thanksgiving, and simple, hearty hymns. The hundreds of people there thanked God from the heart, for you, for the world, and for the approach of peace.

"For God is in this, men! As surely as judgment belongs to Him. He has brought about, through your brav-

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

THE INNOCENTS' DAY.

December 28.

By the Rev. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

The Collect.

O Almighty God, who out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast ordained strength, and madest infants to glorify thee by their deaths; Mortify and kill all vices in us, and so strengthen us by thy grace, that by the innocency of our lives, and constancy of our faith even unto death, we may glorify thy holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Call of Christmas.

"Strength out of weakness." The call of Christmas is the call of dependence on love, of weakness on chivalry, of the divine on the human. The Church bids us think today of the contribution that childhood makes to Christian civilization. Because of the outreaching of baby hands, men have been stirred to their finest achievements. The big forces of the world are made use of by man for the little children who are bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh; yes, and not for his children only; because the battles of the Great War were fought to make life worth living for many generations that were born, and for those yet to be born, who are the babes and sucklings of all the free peoples of the earth.

The Christ Child had at his feet the wondering shepherds as well as the adoring wise men. Since His Birthday, Childhood, little by little, is coming into the niche He wanted it to occupy in the home, in the school and in the community; and where the Spirit of the Christ Child rules, there will you find a parish which is strong in the Lord and in the Spirit of His might, because high and low, rich and poor, one with another, all related, worship at His feet.

Heaven Big Enough to Take in the Little Weaklings.

"Madest infants to glorify Thee by their deaths." Now-a-days, when little Christian children are chilled by death, that part of the Christian world which is really Christian takes the separation in such a way that the non-Christian and the nominal Christian part give God the glory. Since Jesus came, men have realized that Heaven was big enough to take in the little weaklings of the world, as well as the great heroes, and that any scheme of things which forced out children could not be called the Kingdom of Heaven.

"Mortify and kill all vices in us." Every vice was once a virtue. Extravagance is unmortified liberality: the miser is the undeveloped man of thrift.

"Mortify" here means to discipline the tendencies, bringing them under self-control. "Kill" means to make it impossible for vice to flourish. The vices of a man are the things which age him. The uncontrolled life is the life that recognizes no dependence. The controlled life is the life that strengthens. What parents and god-parents have to do is to teach their children to learn self-control through reliance on Jesus, and obedience to Jesus, and then will God be glorified because innocence which is the result of ignorance will have been transmuted into virtue: and virtue is innocence which has resisted the temptation to relax in self-control and obedience.

"The innocency of our lives" then, is that controlled and disciplined character which by reason of its singleness of aim is correspondingly simple, and therefore childlike, which as you recognize is quite a different thing from childish. It is the life in which there is no guile.

A Faith Which All Hell Cannot Shake.

"The constancy of our faith" can be likened to the trustful attitude of one who has confidence in the strength and ability of the one on whom he has been led to depend. A faith which keeps strong hold on God as our Father, Jesus as our Saviour, and the Holy Spirit, as our Inspirer to worthy aims and ideas, is a faith which "all hell" cannot shake, endeavor as it may.

"Even unto death." Vices age the childlike quality of youth. The battle which can keep making it impossible for vices to live and thrive is a battle unto death. It is a battle which reaches out for the affections and struggles to keep those affections from becoming evil affections; or to put it better, it is a battle which is constantly being waged to make the affections run naturally in the paths of good and holy desires. In order to wage this battle, we have to be ready for anything even unto death. Only as we care for little children in this spirit can we hope to make the Birth of Jesus mean all it should to the little children whom Jesus loves.

For the Epistle. Rev. xiv. 1.

I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps: and they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb withersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.

The Poet Heard a New Song.

The dreams of virtuous childhood are the stuff that make for a substantial manhood. The Apostle had the vision of the white lives, which lives he placed in plain sight of all the world, "on the Mount Sion"; and high above the crowd of the white-lived ones, he set the proper playmate for children—the Lamb of God. Out of the noises contributed by nature and by human skill to the glory of God, the poet heard a new song. Everyone could not master that song of glory to the Lamb. Only those whose spirits were free from the hold of uncontrolled affections could become masters of that song. Writing for an age where people were just learning the virtue of detachment from creatures, and where much of the mystery of birth had been defiled by a pagan and undelicate handling of the question, the poet used phrases which those who have learned to treat all life reverently would no longer use. But the poet's thought still holds good. Those who are dedicated to follow the Lamb withersoever He goeth, are those who must be unsoiled by that which is defiling and degrading—those who are redeemed from the earth. The touch of earth is common to us all. "Of the earth, earthy," calls to mind the fact that earthy contacts mean earthy stains—the Lamb redeems the stained ones: The Lamb's blood makes virtue possible to those whose innocence has been tried: the Lamb's blood can put a new song into the mouth of the stained ones. First fruits unto God are they.

Tying Up Young Life to the Life of the Babe of Bethlehem.

On Holy Innocents' Day, Mother Church holds up for her children's careful and prayerful thought the problem of tying up young life to the manager life of the Babe of Bethlehem; warning us against indulgence which makes it difficult to gain self-control: showing us the Holy Child in the barest sort of surroundings, so that we may realize that physical environment is not the sole, nor the chiefest factor in character development, but rather, the atmosphere created by holy and consecrated parenthood; which also shows us the value of "no guile." There is a guilelessness which is the result of over-protection of little children, and which is better called "simpleness," wherein is no knowledge of self-protection. The opposite of this is sophistication which is equally harmful in virtuous living. But the guilelessness which is educated by contact with the wisdom of God and step by step helps innocence grow into virtue—that condition of "no guile" makes for sweetness of character, than which there is nothing more attractive in God's world.

Holy Innocents' Day is the call to parents to consider well how closely they are keeping their children in contact with the Lamb of God; and whether the contact is one which is making their children of such character, that when they come before that strong light which beats on them from the Throne of God, they will not be afraid, because they see the Lamb, and realize that they have never wandered far from the companionship of that Lamb of whom it was written "I find no fault in Him."

The Gospel. St. Matt. ii, 13.

The angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt: and was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my Son. Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wise men. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

Going Into the Land of Egypt.

"Flee into Egypt." There may be times for every soul when it has to go into the land of Egypt, symbol of separation and affliction, and sorrow. If the Christ Child be with us, the sojourn will be for our spiritual good. It was very dark when St. Joseph started for Egypt; so we are reminded that when our dark nights come, what we must do is to be sure we have the Babe of Bethlehem in the family life. How many of us fail to see God's providence in the journeys we have to take in the dark? How many Chuch folk having to give up their Church privileges, and live apart from sacrament and churchly edifice, have been blessed because they took the Christ Child, and did not yield to despair and fear and become indifferent, to the place and teaching in their lives of Holy Church?

"Herod slew all the children that were in Bethlehem." Ever stop to think that your unreasoning and unreasonable anger may cost the life of some of God's innocents? Ever realize how half information, illy digested, as was Herod's which he got from the wise men, has had far-reaching results of sadness and even death in the household of God?

"Out of Egypt have I called my Son." Here is another witness to the fact that physical environment is not the chief factor in the development of character. Egypt and the Son of God in those days seemed most unlike. But when God needs a man, He takes him wherever he finds him. This old prophecy has had many a fulfillment in history. It is not quoted with the idea that we should be content to let Egypt prosper, but simply to be careful in our cleaning up of a place, and the regenerating of a community that we do not destroy the young life that we may find there. Similarly let us realize that it is possible for God's children to have to be in most uncongenial surroundings, but that is no reason why they have to stay there.

"There's a Home for Little Children."

"Lamentation, weeping and great mourning." These must be the portion of every mother when her innocents are taken from her: but it is not her best portion. Where the Christian Church has really been given a chance, and people have taken hold of the teaching, the Mothers, the Rachaels, realize that their children still "are": and that "are not," does not apply to them. They are in the Holy Mount in the presence of the Lamb, and they follow Him withersoever He goeth. Excessive grief of Rachael cannot be the part of a Mother who has taught her child to sing "There's a home for little children, above the bright, blue sky." Here, then, is another reason for having these little mutilated bodies brought into the Christmas week: The Babe of Bethlehem came to comfort Mother hearts and tell them the glad news that "it is well with the child." And that is a great reason why we should be sending teachers all over the world to tell out the message that "there is no more weeping, no more sighing, no more pain," for those who have taken into their lives the Babe of Bethlehem, the friend and Saviour of Holy Innocents.

WHAT WE MUST DO FOR BIBLE LANDS.

Rectors and superintendents of Church schools throughout the country have received from the Executive Committee of the Sunday School War Council, New York, pamphlets, programs, and other printed matter containing the necessary information which will enable them to present to the children a forceful plea to make the largest possible contributions towards the two million dollars in Christmas gifts to the children of Bible lands.

"Armenian and Syrian Relief" has become a well-known phrase all over America, but do you appreciate what it means? asks one of the pamphlets and gives the answer:

We speak of a territory larger than Armenia and Syria when we face this task. We include all that country that we study about in our Sunday schools. It takes in Palestine, that whole reach of country including Bethlehem, Jerusalem, Nazareth and Damascus.

It reaches out to the west and takes in the land of Paul's greatest work; the territory where many Christian Churches grew up and became strong, even in the face of great persecution; Antioch, Iconium, Tarsus, Smyrna and many other cities of the old Galatia country. It takes in the vast country to the east, the land of Israel's captivity, the early home of Abraham, the land where Noah lived, and away out east of Bagdad into Persia. Armenians, Syrians, Greeks, Assyrians, and other subject races are the people whom we serve.

This land was under the control of the Turk. In this War it has been the evident purpose of the Turks to destroy the smaller peoples, especially those that were Christians. This work was undertaken systematically and has been marked by fiendish atrocities.

The able-bodied men were tortured and massacred.

The women and girls were given into the hands of the soldiers for a life that was worse than slavery, and that soon reached its end in death.

The old people and the children, by the millions, were driven into the wilderness, often they were killed, and more often left to die from exposure and hunger. Some of these escaped with their lives and these constitute the need that calls to us.

From among the Greeks, the Persians, the Assyrians, the Armenians and the Syrians of these lands, there are four millions of refugees who are dependent upon us for the bread to keep them alive. One million of these are now within our reach and as the Allies advance the number increases daily.

Five dollars will keep life in one of these people for a month. Sixty dollars will do it for a year. It is a simple matter of arithmetic to see what it costs to provide for the million that now face us with the challenge of their up-turned faces and outstretched hands.

Our special Sunday school responsibility is to help care for the 400,000 children who will die unless we rush to their aid. We are giving the boys and girls of America the opportunity to contribute $2,000,000 in a Christmas offering. A general national drive, January 12, 1919, must raise many millions more. To succeed with this first installment will require great giving. Your school must do a heroic share, and that is where we need your help. How can it be done?

CHRISTMAS GIVING.

With what grateful hearts do we approach the Christmas season this year! God has manifested His love so bountifully, and thousands of hearts rejoice that enduring peace on earth is nearer than ever before in the history of men and nations.

This Christmas is a test of our sincerity. Times and seasons and places are significant to human beings; our attitude toward them is irrefutable evidence of our estimate of what they represent.

Christmas is the festival we keep as the anniversary of the birth of Jesus Christ. In His name we have prayed with fervor for the victory of our armies, and the prayers are answered. Shall we now forget Him in selfish exultant joy, or shall we bring Him our selves more eagerly and more completely than ever before and pledge ourselves anew unto His service? Shall we think first of Him or of ourselves on His birthday? To those who adore Him, He seems nearest on Christmas Day. Those who ignore Him then, can hardly hope to draw as close to Him as at other times.

We need a re-consecration of our lives for the mighty tasks God has entrusted to us during the reconstruction days after the war. Christmas Day this year should find every believer in the Christ at His altar, worshipping Him and thanking Him and rededicating themselves to the fulfillment of His will.

During the interval between now and Christmas no one should omit to examine his life and purge it of selfishness and uncleanness that the Christ may through His Holy Spirit enter and dwell in his heart anew.

If we are so busy preparing for Christmas revels that we find no opportunity to prepare our hearts and souls for His indwelling Presence, Christmas can mean for us only another wasted opoprtunity for spiritual uplift and strengthening. If we think first of Him, everything we do during the Christmas season will take on a blessed radiance and joy, and we shall become better and braver and happier because of all that the day means.

First we must give our selves to Him. That is the Christmas present to be prepared before all others. Then we must dedicate as much as we can of the money He has given into our keeping to carry on His work.

The approaching end of the war releases us from some of the anxiety we have felt regarding the funds we rightly considerd it our patriotic duty to give toward carrying on the war. Until we have expressed by our gifts to Him our thankfulness for the impending peace, we have no right to indulge in expenditures for our own comfort and satisfaction.

As the Christmas congregations ought to be greater this year than ever before, so likewise should the Christmas offerings. We have been learning during the war to give more freely than in the past for all sorts of good purposes; we must now practice our lesson, in giving for the work of the Christ through His Church. —St. Peter's (Chicago) Chronicle.

A WONDERFUL SCHOOL.

The Advent offerings of the Church schools in the Diocese of Nebraska, by request of Bishop Williams; will be devoted to the support of All Saint's Indian School, on the Winnebago Reservation. In his letter to the children of the Church schools the Bishop gives the following interesting information:

"How I wish you could see for yourselves that wonderful school, as I have seen it; for the sight of it would open your eyes, and make little sweet smiles of love and interest chase themselves all over your faces. Twenty-five dear little Indian children, members of Christ, as you are, all being lovingly taught and cared for by the Rev. M. Wilson, and his devoted assistant, Mrs. Fowler.

"Who pays the money to buy these children nourishing food, and to help clothe them? Do their Indian fathers and mothers pay the money? Yes, they pay all they can, but that is not enough. Who, then? Why, the Woman's Auxiliary helps, and the Junior Auxiliary helps, and the Board of Missions helps, and then several generous church people have sent in enough money for the care of three children; then the Bishop squeezes a little out of the lean Bishop's purse.

"But all these helps are not enough to pay out on that wonderful school for the current year, for unless you, my children, come to my rescue, and give me your Advent Offerings, I shall be in sore straights. You see, I have promised these dear Indian children they shall be cared for, and that the faithful priest and his helpers shall go right on with their blessed work of teaching these dear little ones those things which pertain to the Kingdom of Heaven, and which will prepare them in their youth to grow up good, Christian citizens."

Your own subscription and five other subscriptions for The Witness as Christmas gifts—all for five dollars.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

UNIVERSAL CHURCH TRAINING

A Discussion of Problems of Religious Education in the Home and Schools.

By Margaret K. Bigler.

Christmas in the Parish.

In order to plan the Christmas festivities in the parish, whether it be in city, town or country, we must first recognize the ideal relationships in parish life. The Church is our home and we are all children of one family. In this parochial family when the great festivals of the year come, we must see to it that every one is provided for in the arrangement of the program.

In large parishes it may be necessary to divide the family into groups for the festivities. Primary and Junior school for the afternoon party and the Senior school in the evening. In small parishes and missions, we must make our program so varied that it will interest all. We must be mindful of the fact that our boys and girls want a happy time and also that Mother Church, like all true mothers, never forgets to place the right emphasis and value on spiritual experiences. One of the greatest opportunities for such spiritual experiences comes at our Christmas parties. The difficulty usually lies in keeping our balance in combining the festivities of a party with the experience of the first glad Christmas morn.

In the first place let me suggest that these parties of the Christmas season need just as expert leadership as our teacher training classes, and that they should be just as carefully planned as any lesson. Too often we depend upon eleventh hour inspirations for our programs. No one in particular is responsible for the various parts of the program, some one, at any time he thinks proper, stops the children to tell them a Christmas story, with the result that in most cases the Christmas celebration is a bedlam and the children leave with no spiritual experience.

Let me outline for you two simple programs for Christmas parties. These are only types. First, the children of the Primary and Junior schools. Be very careful from the first that the right impression is given. Send invitations to each one, that they may know it is a worthwhile party. We want them to think of it as an occasion, a time to dress up a bit, to have clean hands and faces. We also want every one to know what time to come and what time to go home, (from 3 to 5 p. m. or from 5 to 5:30 p. m). Be careful not to have too long a party. During the time the children are coming, have some quiet game in session; one that can be easily joined at any time. An adult should be directing the game, another with some of the children should act as a receiving committee, while others should be in the cloak room to assist the arrivals. The games may continue for about forty-five minutes and should be arranged to meet the conditions in the case. The boys and girls may be divided into groups in different rooms, or in one room according to the accommodations.

If refreshments are served, this should be done now in an orderly manner. A march easily arranges things. See that each child has a suitable chair and before they are served ask a blessing.

"Little children saying Grace
In every Christian kind of place."

After the refreshments let them move around freely for a few moments. If there is a Christmas tree, let it now be lighted and give time for the children to enjoy it. If small gifts are to be distributed from the tree, it may come at this time. No package should be opened until they are taken home.

In some parishes the children bring gifts to the tree, which are sent to those less fortunate children.

Last of all comes the story hour. Two well chosen stories are enough. The last story should strike the spiritual note and allow the children to leave the party with the feeling that all this good time is because of the birth of the Christ Child. (Stories—"Christmas Cobwebs;" "The Legend of the Christ Child" by Elizabeth Harrison; "Why the Chimes Rang," by Alden; and the Christmas story taken from the Christian Nurture Series.)

The guests should leave as they came, saying "Good night" to the hosts.

The Senior school has two main interests. Dramatics and Dancing. A most enjoyable Christmas celebration for them is a Christmas mystery play (see last week's question box) presented to the parish, followed by a dance. Some would say that this seems irreverent to combine the two. Possibly to adults it may so appear, but not to the youth and maiden. In fact the Senior school has been having its spiritual experience during the weeks of preparation for the play. On the evening of the performance, it is good to relax and connect this beautiful experience with a happy time.

In small missions with only a handful of children, have a family tree. Play some games, tell some Christmas stories and sing some Christmas hymns. Do not be fearful and try to separate the frivolities from the Christ Child. Make the boys and girls feel that all are happy because of Him and that even as He came to the marriage of Cana, so He is ever present at the most joyful times in our lives.

As a climax of our holiday program, we must have a celebration on Christmas morning of our Christ's Mass, at which time we make our thank-offerings and join all our voices in prayer and praise.

(Note—Because of an unavoidable delay the article on "Christmas in the Home." will be omitted. Suffice it is to say that where there are children in the home, time must be taken amid the many jolifications to stop and realize what Christmas means, to sing some hymns and tell some story.

Question Box.

R. T.—At what age does a child's prayer-life begin?

A child's prayer-life begins when his parents pray over his crib at birth. As soon as a child is able to kneel, he listens to the prayers his parents say for him. When he is able to talk to any one, he is able to talk to God and to be taught some simple prayer. The child is about the age of two.

W. H. M.—Is a boy of eight capable of any real spiritual experience?

A boy of eight is physical not spiritual, he may however have some real spiritual experiences that we know little about. This is not recognized as a spiritual age. In fact he is just between two spiritual ages, early childhood and adolescense.

Address Questions to Mrs. C. E. Bigler, DeKalb, Ill.

A PROPHECY FULFILLED.

The following is an editorial which appeared in the first issue of The Parish Message of Christ Church, Beatrice, Neb., the Rev. Wm. A. Mulligan, rector, after the beginning of the world war in August, 1914:

"After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong, exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth; it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it." This is Daniel's description of a great military power. The present war in Europe demonstrates the accuracy of the description.

A peaceful people, whose neutrality was guaranteed by an international agreement is overrun, its people slaughtered, and its cities destroyed and burned, because it happens to be in the pathway of this terrible beast.

Kings, emperors and peoples have poured out the wealth of an empire to feed and nourish, and make it grow big and strong and irresistible.

But after all this beast is only terrible and destructive for a time. Daniel in his visions sees the end of it.

"I beheld even until the beast was slain; and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame."

"The nation that nourishes this beast will be devoured by it."

Now after four years of struggle the beast has been mortally wounded, and is prostrated before the people it tried to devour; but see the nation that nourished and raised it up—ruined.

IN MEMORIAM.

The Rt. Rev. James Bowen Funsten, D. D.

The announcement of the sudden death of the Bishop of Idaho, the Rt. Rev. James Bowen Funsten, D. D., at his home in Boise on December 1st, a brief mention of which was made in last week's issue of The Witness, came as a great shock to all who knew him either intimately or by reputation. Those of us who were not privileged to come into close touch with the Bishop feel nevertheless that we do know something of the height, and depth, and breadth, and beauty, of his rare Christian character as it manifested itself in the love that is warmed by an intimate relationship with the Savior of men, and glowed through his pastoral letters, sermons and addresses, which have been published from time to time in the Church papers and magazines. As it is soul combined with technique that enables the great musician to interpret his favorite composers and hold spellbound his audiences, so the Bishop of Idaho has given us in his writings an insight into his own beautiful soul, illuminated by the Holy Spirit, and many, outside the privileged circle of his personal friends and those within the closer circle of the home who knew and loved him most dearly, have been "lifted up and strengthened." The Bishop will ever occupy a large place in the hearts and minds of those especially to whom he ministered so faithfully, energetically and efficiently as Deacon, Priest and Bishop. He was ordained to the diaconate in 1882 by Bishop Whittel of Virginia and advanced to the priesthood the following year by Bishop Peterkin of West Virginia. Prior to his consecration as Bishop of the Missionary District of Idaho and Wyoming in 1899, he had been in charge of missions at Bristol and Manon, Virginia, was rector of Christ Church, Richmond; General Missionary of the Diocese; and rector of Trinity Church, Portsmouth. From 1898 until 1907 Idaho was divided among the Missionary districts of Wyoming, Laramie, and Salt Lake. The Bishop was in charge of the Missionary District of Idaho from the latter date.

The funeral services were held in St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, on Wednesday, the 4th inst., and the body was taken to Virginia for burial in the cemetery at Richmond.

WHY WENT HE NOT FORTH WITH YOUR KING?

The pestilence was in the air;
The churches closed, we aid invoke
And, in our homes we kneel in prayer;
A voice, to me, this message spoke,
From out the skies it seemed to ring:
"Why went ye not forth with your King?"

Our King well knew the heart of man;
"Go forth and conquer in My Name."
Our slothful feet delayed his plan;
For deeds undone, we bear the blame;
Of just reproof, the bitter sting;
"Why went ye not forth with your King?"

Our sons went forth in khaki clad,
Went gladly forth to meet the foe;
On foreign fields, fell many a lad;
Sad heart-aches, many mothers know;
Young lips, to us, the query bring:
"Why went ye not forth with your King?"

And now when peace has been proclaimed;
When, with His Strong Arm, He has won,
Shall we still hide afraid, ashamed,
To heed the words of God's own Son
And hear while bells for victory ring:
"Why went ye not forth with your King?"

—Ida Sexton Searls.

What more appreciative gift can you present than a subscription to The Witness—a weekly visitor for an entire year? If you will send us five dollars, we will advance your own subscription another year.

CHICAGO LETTER

ne Rev. Albert E. Selcer.

Great Lakes Clergy Available for Services.

The three Priests who represent the Episcopal Church at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, S.T.B., the Rev. Harry S. Ruth and the Rev. John Wilkins, are now available for occasional services and addresses on Sunday evenings and on week day evenings in the parishes in the City of Chicago, and municipalities surrounding that city. While the work at the Station is still of such importance as to justify the War Commission in retaining the services of these three men for the work, they now have occasional free evenings. These evenings they are glad to devote to giving addresses and holding conferences in any parish, the members of which are interested to know, not only what has been done at Great Lakes for our Churchmen, but also what has been learned about the Church from these Churchmen, and what suggestions might be made for reconstruction in Church methods on the basis of this knowledge. Of course, there will be no charge for this service to any parish which may desire it, except for actual travelling expenses. Correspondence in this matter should be addressed to the Rev. Bernard I. Bell, Building 914, Great Lakes, Illinois.

Mother General Visits Chicago.

The Reverend Mother Mary Veronica, Superior General of the Community of St. Mary, is spending several weeks in Chicago, inspecting the work of the houses of the Community in this city, St. Mary's Home, and St. Mary's Mission House. During the past week, the Right Reverend the Suffragan Bishop, held a Retreat in the Chapel of the Mission House. The Rev. Mother Mary Maude, Provincial Superior, of the Western Province, with several Sisters from Kenosha, and the Sisters from St. Mary's Home, were in attendance. The Rev. Mother General has made it a point to study carefully the work of a purely missionary character done by the Sisters of the Mission House in the Institutions which are cared for by the City Missions Staff, and has expressed much gratification at the fact of the Community's participation in the work. The Rev. Mother leaves this week for Kenosha, where she will remain until after the visit of the Chaplain General, the Very Rev. Dean Vernon, of Portland, Maine, to the Western Province. The Dean will be in Chicago in January.

Epiphany's Endowment Fund.

The Rev. Herbert W. Prince, the Rector of the Church of the Epiphany on the West Side, announces that as a result of the "Drive" for additional funds for the Endowment of the Parish, conducted during the "Week of Jubilee," donations in cash, bonds, pledges, and bequests amounting to Twelve Thousand Dollars were added to the existing fund of Fourteen Thousand Dollars, giving the splendid beginning of Twenty-six Thousand Dollars toward the One Hundred Thousand Dollars required.

Memorial Service at Trinity Church.

"Old Trinity" on the South Side was the scene of an impressive memorial service on Sunday, December 8th, in honor of Captain Franklin Wood, 132nd Infantry, Co. 4; Sergeant Warren Helleck Brust, 131st Infantry; and Private John Wilson, the Eleventh Infantry, U. S. A., and a detail from the Quartermaster Corps, U. S. A., were present, with the Eighth and Tenth Companies, Illinois Reserve Militia; the Logan Cadets, and the First and Second Regiments Veteran Corps. It is interesting to note that Col. John J. Garrity, commanding the Second Regiment Veteran Corps, has just been appointed Chief of Chicago's great police force. There were also present in an official capacity, a unit from the Quaker Oats Company, with which Capt. Wood was connected, the Lincoln and Thomas Posts of the Grand Army of the Republic; the Army of Santiago de Cuba; and the Martha Washington Club. Col. Kline delivered an address at the end of Evening Prayer which was read by the Rev. Albert E. Selcer, S.T.B., of the Cathedral and City Mission Staff, who was in charge of Trinity Church during part of the time when Sergeant Brust was a choir member. The Rev. Sidney R. S. Gray, the present incumbent at Trinity Church, delivered the memorial sermon. At the opening of the service "Reveille" was sounded by the bugler, and at the close "Taps" was sounded. After "Taps" there was sung, by a chorus of men, "Till the trumpet call again, sleep, ye chosen of the Lord. While is kept due watch and ward, sleep right calmly." The musical program was in charge of Mr. Irving C. Hancock, Mus. Bac., the organist and choirmaster of Trinity Church, who trained and directed Sergeant Brust during his career as a boy soloist. Many of the old choir members who served with the sergeant in the choir, but who have now scattered to all portions of the city marched in procession with the choir to do honor to his memory. Sergeant Brust was gassed twice and wounded twice, and died in a hospital "Somewhere in France." "As a boy he served his Church—as a man he died for his country—what more can be said of any man,' were the words with which those who were closely associated with him during his brief life of twenty-one years, said "farewell." Captain Wood was commissioned Captain on September 22nd, 1918, for gallantry in battle, and fell leading his company at Bois du Chaune near Verdun October 9th. Details concerning Private Wilson are unfortunately unobtainable.

QUICK RESULTS FROM ADVENT CALL.

The Kind of Thing That Happens When Everybody Prays.

The Advent Call material was on hand in Okanogan, Wash., in November, and when the direction came to put "Thanksgiving" in place of prayers for Victory, it so perfectly fitted Thanksgiving Day itself that the Vicar, the Rev. A. C. Peabody, decided to start the Call a few days early. This was the more necessary because of having several missions in which it was to be introduced. First, everyone received an appeal by mail. Then the Thanksgiving Day service initiated the idea. The next day, after an afternoon service with Litany, eight messengers were pledged to secure new pledges, of which some twenty have come in to date, with more expected. Of course that was only the beginning, for one pleasant surprise followed another. First two school teachers offered their services as teachers in the Sunday School; and it must be added that the Vicar had pleaded with these young ladies for this service for a year, in vain. This offer came unsoliciated except through prayer. Next the one Sunday School teacher who had been reliable before that time, Mrs. Hayes, reported that her class of four older girls wanted to do Altar Guild and choir work; now they are doing it with zeal and devotion. Then two girls who had formerly refused to come near the church called on Mrs. Hayes, unasked, and wished to be admitted to the class. The Vicar's amazement was supposed to be complete when he found all the teachers new and old, making the rounds of the Church School scholars' homes to make sure of their attendance the next Sunday. But it reached the climax at the Communion service on December 1st, for beside the fact that every Communicant but one—a doctor who had been called to a patient—was in the church, there were three who had been in church only once in the last two years and who said they were certainly coming again. Also, our former organist, a real musician whom we have sadly missed of late, offered to return to his old place and to train the choir. . . This is the kind of thing that happens when everybody prays. To some these things may seem small, but not to the missionary who has spent years yearning and working for them. We were pledged to pray mainly for a spirit of Thankfulness and for Righteousness. God's first answer was to strengthen the Church.

Your own subscription and five other subscriptions for The Witness as Christmas gifts—all for five dollar.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Hobart, Indiana, and Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Publisher.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Wise, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

THIS CHRISTMAS.

John Baptist: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world."

Virgin Mary: "He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts." "He hath put down the mighty from their thrones, and exalted them of low degree."

Holy Angels: "Glory to God in the highest and peace on earth to men of good-will."

The mighty were pretty securely entrenched on their thrones. There had been the arrogant monarchs of Babylon and Ninevah and Egypt.

There were Caligula and Nero and Domitian and the brood of Herods.

There were to follow Attila and Alaric and Genseric, Clovis and Barbarosa and Philip of Spain and Henry of England and Louis XI. of France and Boniface VIII. and Alexander Borgia and the Romanoffs and the Hapsburgs and Hohenzollerns, and the innumerable number of those who were proud in the imagination of their hearts.

And against them there has been one solitary figure, crucified by this haughty world power, His disciples tortured and burned, His Church betrayed and oppressed, His gospel mutilated and caricatured, but He Himself never overcome and always having those who were faithful to His spirit to work and die for Him.

Germany had developed a great material civilization; but, as a French officer has well said, was absolutely lacking in moral civilization. Her powers trusted in themselves that they were right and despised others.

She was the last word in that tremendous combination of business efficiency, scientific progress and military preparedness.

In these she put her trust and ruthlessly threw down the gauntlet to everything that was compassionate and charitable and Christ-like.

Berlin and Vienna were the mecca of the savants of the world, and the Body of Christ had been dissected and buried by their learned doctors who presided at the autopsy.

And against this chemical laboratory of materialistic knowledge there was finally arrayed three captains, who used war as their instrument, but each of whom acknowledged Jesus Christ as his great commander.

Haig, Foch and Pershing,—three worthy representatives of the three great divisions of Christ's legions,—a Protestant, a Roman Catholic and an Anglican, each possessed of simple faith and gallant courage, went forth to do battle with the Philistines.

Surely, the unity of command into which these three were forced by the stubborn power of the enemy is a great parable of what Christians must yet accomplish if they, too, would overcome the Prince of all tyrants whose dominion over men is still powerful.

But Christmas comes to the world with its message of peace and good-will with a force and a power that it never possessed before. For never has a war-weary world so longed for peace, and never has it been compelled to pay the price for its sins of lying diplomacy and political greed as it has paid in the past four years.

But once more, as at the birth of Christ, the dogs of war are chained, and Christmas morning will bring its message of peace to a weary world. War, famine and pestilence have touched all that we have; God grant that our conscience also has been touched, so that the song of David, after his delivery from all his foes, may be our song. David said (II. Samuel—xxii):

"The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; the God of my rock; in Him will I trust: he is my shield and the horn of my salvation, my high tower, and my refuge, my Savior; Thou savest me from violence."

* * * * * * * * *

"The sorrows of Hell compassed me about; the snares of death came upon me. In my distress I called upon the Lord, and cried to my God; and He did hear my voice out of His temple, and my cry did enter into His ears.

"Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations of Heaven moved and shook because He was wroth. There went up a smoke out of His nostrils, and fire out of His mouth devoured; coals were kindled by it.

* * * * * * * * *

"The Lord thundered from Heaven, and the Most High uttered His voice.

"And He sent out arrows and scattered them; lightning, and discomfited them.

"And the channels of the sea appeared, the foundations of the world were discovered, at the rebuke of the Lord, at the blast of the breath of His nostrils He sent from above; He took me; He drew me out of many waters. He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them that hated me, for they were too strong for me.

"He brought me forth into a large place; He delivered be because He delighted in me.

"The Lord rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands hath He recompensed me. For I have kept the ways of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

* * * * * * * * *

With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful, and with the upright man thou wilt show thyself upright; with the pure thou wilt show thyself pure, and with the perverse thou wilt show thyself froward. And the afflicted people thou wilt save; but thine eyes are upon the haughty that thou wilt bring them down."

This Christmas finds our prayers answered and our work begun; for prayer is but the effort to ascertain His will. "What wilt Thou have me to do?" is the prayer for the man of God.

So this Christmas should make us very grateful for His mercies and very careful that our peace as a people is not one of stagnation, but of good-will.

The world will be merry only when the world is trying to be righteous.

The old pagan world was a gloomy world. The Prussian and the Turk lack any sense of humor. There is nothing blithsome about sin nor winsome about selfishness.

There is no merriment in business or in science or in militarism. They are all grim pursuits unless they be leavened with the Christmas spirit.

The deaf cannot hear the angels sing, nor the dumb sing their songs.

Let us then accept Christ as our Master and all things will become new, and the new year will be joyous, for true joy comes from the consciousness that we are attuned to the spirit of Christ, which is the Christmas spirit.

But to make the spirit of Christmas to be the spirit of your life is something more than a mere passing sentiment.

It is to discipline your life to meet blithely all its cares and vexations and discomforts. It is to put self one side, and not to measure life by that which contributes to your vanity and self-esteem, but to measure life by your ability to fit into the particular niche which you occupy, and to be as useful as you can wherever the line of duty runs.

If you seek joy in satisfying the cravings of your appetite, it will elude you.

That which you think will satisfy you tomorrow will but create new hunger for that which is still unattainable.

Whereas, if you accept life, and forget self in service, joys will come from unexpected sources.

The best way to be happy, even when you cannot have what you desire, is to set to work curbing your desires. You will find a better joy in that which you give to others than you will ever find in that which others offer you.

Remember the Hun! He had prosperity, but wanted the earth. He lost everything.

Remember the Christ! He had nothing but the capacity for loving service. He wanted nothing but the love and confidence of men, and gained the love of loyal hearts.

Make it the resolution of this blessed Christmastide that you will follow the example of the Christ and not that of the Hun; that only in losing your life in gladsome service will you find that joy cometh in the morning.

It is such a feasible program:

To love Christ because He is the most lovable of all beings.

To serve Christ with fidelity, for His cause is the most worthy of all causes.

(Continued on page 5.)

STUDIES IN ACTS.
Final Summary.

By Bishop Johnson.

The Christian Church is the product of certain forces that preceded it and fashioned it.

These forces are:

(1) The Jewish Church, from the promise made to Abraham down to the preaching of John the Baptist, the last of the great Hebrew Prophets.

(2) The life and teaching of Jesus Christ, the founder of the Christian Church.

(3) The Apostles, left by Christ to fashion the enterprise that He had begun, and endowed by Him with the gift of the Holy Spirit which was "to guide them into all truth."

(4) The primitive Christians who took the institution as it had been fashioned and shaped it to the needs of the times in which they lived.

* * *

The founding of the Christian Church and its subsequent development into a powerful instrument of God's grace followed the same principles as that which shaped this republic and made it what it is today.

First—There was the common law and constitutional order of England out of which it grew.

Second—There was the dominating spirit of Washington who imparted the principles which—Third—were fashioned by the great apostles of liberty into constitutional form, and Fourth—Shaped by custom and tradition into a great republic.

It is therefore a matter of great human interest to face each of these four elements which played their several parts in founding that great spiritual organization which is older than any nation in Europe, and more comprehensive in its rule than any other organization that the world has ever known.

It has existed for twenty centuries, has included representatives of every known race of men and is larger and more influential today than it has ever been in its history.

I, The First Element—The Jewish Church.

Judaism, as a system has never accepted the institution which Christ founded, and so the sacred writings of the Jews form a witness not prejudiced in favor of that institution, and yet it establishes the antecedent probability. If the Old Testament is an inspired work of the Divine mind, that God had planned, out of the Hebrew religion, there should come a universal institution, founded by a Jewish Messiah, to which the Gentiles should flock and in which they should find redemption.

In Abraham's seed all nations of the earth should be blessed.

To Moses, God promises a prophet to whom all should hearken.

The Psalms of David speak of David's Lord who should judge among the heathen.

The prophecies of Isaiah tell that the Gentiles shall come to His light and kings to the brightness of His rising while Daniel speaks of the kingdom which shall consume the world powers and which shall never be destroyed.

There is no fact in history better attested than that the Hebrew people for centuries looked for a Messiah who should make the Kingdom of Israel a world power, and if the Hebrews be regarded as a chosen people to inaugurate a great spiritual dispensation, one can readily understand why the founder of the Christian Church looked to two thousand years of spiritual training as the proper preparation for His Mission.

The Gospel of Christ had a Hebrew origin for the Hebrew revelation made it possible. You may disbelieve either the one or the other, but you cannot deny that the one flows out of the other with as much historical certainty as that our American republic grew out of English foundations.

As St. Augustine well puts it "The Old Testament conceals the New, and the New Testament reveals the Old." Whatever the Jews may think of Christ as fulfilling the conditions of their Messiah, there can be no question that Christ thought of the Hebrew religion as the foundation of the religious institution that He was about to create, and therefore that we shall find Hebrew traditions fulfilled and not abolished in the New Gospel.

This is as important a factor in studying the Christian Church as the

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS

Victory Service at Brooklyn.

Never in half a century has the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y., witnessed such a gathering as filled the church at the Victory service on November 24th. In the long procession led by the Greek-American Boy Scouts there were representatives of England, France, Italy, Belgium, Servia, Armenia, Syria and Czecho Slovakia. The Greek Society of Marmora was present with its banner. The French Navy was represented by sailors from the Marseillaise. A body of Czecho-Slovaks were present in their picturesque national costume bearing both the new national flag and the old Hussite flag. The families of the Honor Roll boys marched in with their service flags and the Redeemer Red Cross Auxiliary were present. Prof. Reynolds of City College was a guest of honor along with Lieut. Poyer of the French Navy. The American flag was carried by Master Rossiter McNaughton, whose father is on the battle front in France. Mr. Albert Ernest Wier, the violinist, assisted in the musical service with his violin.

Wants The Witness as Long as She Lives.

Among the many letters that have come to us the past few weeks, commending The Witness, none is more highly appreciated than a communication received from an aged Church woman in Vermont, an excerpt from which follows: "I am a widow woman. I have a public hall which does not net me what it should, and I own a store-room not rented which has been occupied at different times by a shoe merchant, a harness, and a barber shop, but these did not pay in this small town. I am taking the liberty to address you because I am a sister in the Church, and want to write an item for your paper for which I am trying to secure subscriptions. I am trying to get all the people I can to take The Witness, and if I succeed in renting my store room then I will be able to take the paper as long as I live. I have had hard times as long as I can remember and I am now seventy-four years of age but I do not feel very old or childish. If I can do well in the future with my hall then I shall be able to take The Witness all right. Please excuse these lines and remember that I am a sister in the Church."

The Call to Prayer in New York.

The Advent Call to Prayer resulted in increased services in many churches of the city during the first week in December. Some parishes made no effort to use messengers or intercessors. This was particularly true of large East Side chapels, where the plan did not seem feasible. But all had a corporate celebration of the Holy Communion, and there were other extra services night and day. A few clergymen had special devotions with various parochial organizations for women, and everywhere at the Sunday services there were urgent reminders of the duty of prayer and thanksgiving. The chief Diocesan observation was at the Cathedral Monday morning, with an address by Bishop Greer, who seems in better health this year than he was last year. By special request, "a fellowship of silence" was conducted by Dr. Slattery in Grace Church Chantry, Thursday afternoon.

The Call to Prayer did good if it did no more than emphasize what Bishop Greer said in the Cathedral, "In human nature at least there is no other law so prevalent, so permanent, so dominant, as the instinct of prayer, and we can no more get rid of it than human nature can get rid of human nature."

New York Parish 125 Years Old.

The parish of Christ Church, Broadway and 71st St., New York, passed its 125th birthday on April 3rd of this year. The church has occupied various sites since the incorporation of the parish April 3, 1793, when it was located in Ann St., where it remained for about thirty years and a new site was purchased on what is now known as Worth St., west of Broadway and a handsome edifice erected which was destroyed by fire in 1847. The church was rebuilt and occupied five years when the property was sold, and a new church erected on Eighteenth St., west of Fifth Avenue. At the end of six years the property of the parish was again sold and property purchased at Fifth Avenue and 35th St., where the services were kept up and the work of the parish carried on for thirty years, when the present site was secured and the handsome church building and rectory erected, which have now been in use for nearly thirty years. Christ Church has back of it a notable history and has been served in the rectorship by a long line of clergymen who have wielded a strong influence on the religious life of New York and the American Church. The first rector, the Rev. Dr. Joseph Pilmore, was lay preacher under John Wesley in England, before coming to America and seeking Holy Orders. He had charge of the parish from its inception until 1804. The following are the names of his successors: the Rev. Dr. Thomas Lyen, 1804 to 1848; the Rev. Charles H. Halsey, 1848 to 1854; the Rev. F. S. Wiley, 1855 to 1862; the Rev. Ferdinand C. Ewer, 1862 to 1871; the Rev. Dr. Hugh Miller Thompson, 1871 to 1875; the Rev. Dr. William McVicar, 1876 to 1877; the Rev. Dr. Jacob Shaw Shipman, 1877 to 1903; the Rev. George Alexander Strong, 1904 to 1914; the Rev. Edwin J. Van Etten, 1914 to 1917, and the present rector, the Rev. Dr. John R. Atkinson.

The New York Globe, under date of December 7th, commenting upon the work of Dr. Atkinson, says: Dr. Atkinson came to the church last year with the problem of reconstruction on his hands. He is making good. The congregations are increasing steadily and churchmen are being gathered in whose existence was not hitherto known to the parish. One of Dr. Atkinson's first quiet moves was to establish a "friendly half hour" at the close of the evening service. He began it in the chilly time last winter and used the little chapel in the basement. At first it consisted of singing, a little address, and an opportunity for friendly greeting. Gradually it was expanded by including an address by some well-known layman, and last Sunday night it was necessary to use the church proper when Melville Stone of the Associated Press addressed the "friendly half hour."

The Campaign For Missions at Mobile, Alabama.

A city-wide campaign for Missions, which had been in preparation since the summer and was postponed in October because of the influenza epidemic, has just been completed in Mobile, Ala., with exceedingly gratifying and encouraging results.

The Rev. Louis G. Wood came on November 21st for final preparation and remained over Sunday to assist the Rev. R. W. Patton, D. D., in presenting the campaign in the several pulpits on Sunday. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, there were conferences and instructions afternoon and evening and Thursday night a largely attended supper to prepare for the every-member canvass on Sunday. Friday evening was given to the instruction of the canvassers.

The canvass was made on the first Sunday in Advent. The churches taking part were Christ Church, Trinity, St. John's, and All Saints', and the Church of the Good Shepherd (colored); and in the suburbs, St. Paul's, Whistler; St. Mark's, Toulminville; St. Paul's, Spring Hill, and Grace Chapel, Oakdale. Other churches in the two neighboring counties, at Citronville, Oak Grove, Bay Minette, Loxley, Robertsdale and Bon Secour participated in the campaign as far as was practicable and made the canvass, but it was found impossible to include their figures in the report.

Immediately following the campaign and canvass, the Woman's Auxiliary carried out the Advent Call with great enthusiasm and success. There were corporate communions daily in the four parishes in succession, followed by visits to the homes of all the women of the Church with prayer and the signing of pledges of spiritual activity.

On the evening of the Second Sunday in Advent, a final meeting was held at St. John's Church for reports of results of the canvass.

In the chancel were the Rev. Gardiner C. Tucker, rector of St. John's; the Rev. Louis Tucker, rector of Christ Church; the Rev. V. C. McMaster, rector of Trinity Church; the Rev. R. A. Pearce, deacon in charge of St. Paul's Spring Hill and the Rev. James F. Plummer, Dean of the Convocation and Priest-in-charge of All Saints' Church. The Rev. J. T. McCaa, who is associated with the Dean in the care of the churches at Whistler, Toulminville and Oakdale, was in the congregation and read one of the reports.

Conspicuous features of the report are 120 subscribers among the colored people, all of whom made pledges on both sides of the envelope. Three hundred per cent increase in amount pledged at St. Paul's, Whistler. Christ Church, the mother parish of the city, showed large increases both for the parish and for missions.

As a result of this long-planned-for joint enterprise, the Church in Mobile enters upon its new year with renewed enthusiasm and hopefulness and with deep gratitude to God for the blessings it has brought. The two Secretaries of the Board of Missions did their work admirably and resolutions of appreciation were adopted at the final weekday meeting.

Five subscriptions to The Witness to five friends as Christmas gifts will advance your own subscription one year. Can you do better than this with a five dollar bill?

PERSONALS

The Rev. Elmore E. Hutchinson has accepted a call to the rectorship of Zion Church, Morris, N. Y.

The Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Tuttle, has appointed Bishop Page of Spokane to the charge of the Missionary District of Idaho.

The Rev. Thomas Dyke of Mobile, Ala., has accepted an appointment as priest-in-charge of St. Andrew's Church, Edwardsville, Ill., and began his work there on the 15th inst.

The Rev. F. P. O. Reed has entered upon his duties as rector of Christ Church, Chippewa Falls, Wis., and should be addressed at Christ Church rectory, 620 Bay St., that city.

The Rev. Ernest B. Mounsey, rector of St. Mark's Church, Lake City, Minn., has been appointed Captain of the local High School Cadets. Besides the cadets Mr. Mounsey has a community troop of Boy Scouts.

The Rev. Frederick M. Brasier of All Saints' Church, Ashland, Me., has been drafted in to the service of the High School in Ashland on account of the scarcity of teachers and is teaching English and American literature, history and Latin.

The Rev. Frederick Irving Collins, rector of the Church of the Messiah, Providence, R. I., has gone to do three months' work in the District of Honolulu, H. I. The Rev. Henry G. Raps, the assistant rector, is in charge of the Parish during the rector's absence. Mr. Collins expects to return by Easter day.

St. Paul's Church, Waddington, New York, has called the Rev. Charles Gregory Prout to be its rector. Mr. Prout will also be priest-in-charge of St. Phillip's Church, Madrid. Mr. Prout was educated at St. Stephen's College and the General Theological Seminary, ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Nelson in All Saints' Cathedral, Albany, in 1917, and priest in St. John's Church, Ogdenburg, New York, in 1918. Since September 1st, 1917, he has been assistant at St. John's Church, Ogdensburg. Here his marked devotion to duty and his kindly manner have won the respect and affection of all the congregation. The Boy Scout work has been largely in his hands and he is most popular with the boys. His untiring service during the epidemic will long be remembered by the people. All will wish him Godspeed and every success in his new work.

"There are smaller victories for democracy still hanging in the balance," asserted the Rev. Edward S. Doan, of St. Andrew's Church, Roswell, N. M., in a recent comment upon the great victory of the United States and our Allies in Europe. "They are right in our own country where big interests are still impenitent, and still go on in an autocratic manner, deceiving the people and the producer. They subsidize the press and camouflage their iniquities by half told truths, and patriotic sentimenality. Interests that care more for big dividends than for the welfare of the people are a constant menace to the peace of the nation. Men of courage and men of honesty will have to correct these things. Men who will not sell their souls for the special interests will correct them, and these are the kind of men the nation needs in this great reconstruction era, and they are the type of men we should choose to fight our battles for democracy. The Christian ballot should be on the side of democracy every time. In the larger fields of democracy, won for the peoples of the earth, the need for Christian ideals and Christian standards looms up large. If the world is going to be saved from something worse than the tragedy of this late war, the world must be Christianized. Christianity is always on the side of law and order, and if the world is going to be free from anarchy, and needless bloodshed, the Christian forces must do more than they have ever yet attempted to bring the world in Christ."

"I want to ask you to please continue urging in your columns the great necessity of attending the early celebration of the Holy Communion," writes the Rev. C. C. Burke of St. Andrew's Church, Mariana, Ark. "It was one of the many good points that made me take up The Witness as my Parish Paper. I do feel that our Church people as a whole take their religious life as a sort of go-as-you-please affair, but the Christian life is one of real work. The early celebration well attended indicates that the people are in earnest about their religion, and not lazy." Mr. Burke took advantage of our offer and sent in fifty-six names from his parish for six weeks' subscription, and has secured to date fifty-four annual subscriptions for The Witness.

EDITORIAL.—Continued from p. 4.

To discipline self with great strictness, for our slovenly service is the cause of most of our unrest.

It is the soldier, who accepts gladly the hard discipline of army life, that becomes the good soldier. The man who drills slovenly will be a poor fighter.

The Christian ife is to submit ourselves to the rule of Christ and to carry on without bitterness or complaint.

Then we may sing the Song of David as against the enemies of our own soul.

HOW STRONG ARE YOU?

Strength counts every time. It is of more value than money. A strong body means everything to the man who works with his hands. A well developed mind is just as much to him whose occupation calls for the constant use of brains. Bodily and mentally, we all know, strength is a necessity. Now, just a step higher. In taking this step it is quite as practical. How well or how sick is your spirit? If it be healthy, strong, then you are going to experience the achievements of the spirit. Strength of body, and of mind, is never kept accidentally. It is only as we take care, and avoid the things that physically injure. The same law holds good with regard to the health of the spirit. Here is where God should specially appeal to us, and also where Jesus Christ should bring wonderfully near to our lives the Father's Great Spirit. By being on the alert spiritually it means that we shall be increasingly strong in our spirit. Just as when the morale of an army is at its best there is military victory, so in the strength of one's spirit there is sure triumph over the greatest enemy—that of sin.—The Open Air Service Committee, Pittsburgh, Pa.

THANK YOU.

As the Government requests publishers to send their newspapers to those only whose subscriptions are paid in advance, we have taken pains to send a subscription statement to all our readers whose subscriptions are over due or will become due before January 1, 1919. We are very much gratified at the prompt response and the "good words" that come with remittances. Many have thanked us for continuing The Witness and have expressed regret at their oversight. A very few have for one reason or another requested us to discontinue, and ask for bill to date. We hope within the next few days to hear from those who have not replied, and if any of them must discontinue their subscription, it will save an extra letter if they will enclose a remittance at the rate of three cents a week from the time the subscription expired until the present date.

We are more convinced than ever of the wisdom of our effort to furnish Church people with a weekly paper full of instructive and inspirational reading matter for only One Dollar a year. This could not be done in these times except for the fact that all connected with its management do so without personal compensation. It is to them a labor of love to supply a need in the Church, and it is pleasant to know that so many Church families give us their cordial support. If you have not as yet responded to the statement will you not kindly send the amount to the publisher, Hobart, Indiana, by an early mail.

JERUSALEM AND THE EAST MISSION.

"Beginning at Jerusalem."— St. Luke, XXIV, 47.

The Bishop of Jerusalem is the only Bishop of the Anglican Communion especially appointed to represent it in the Mother City of the Faith and the Bishopric included within its borders three of the four Ancient Patriarchates of the East.—Jerusalem, Antioch and Alexandria.

The Jerusalem and the East Mission administers alike to Jews, Moslems and Christians. It maintains schools and hospitals at Jerusalem, Haifa and Beirut, and is now engaged in aggressive relief work to all in need.

Millions are dependent upon your offerings at this critical time. Will you not, in your Christmas giving, remember the Lord's own people according to the flesh, especially in this time of great need when their lives depend upon what you send now. Consecrate your Christmas giving by generous offerings to the Jerusalem and the East Mission depending upon you for its aggressive work.

All offerings should be sent to the Rev. John H. McKenzie, D. D., Treasurer for the United States, Howe, Indiana.

If you subscribe for The Witness as a Christmas gift to some friend, we send a notice which will be received by your friend about Christmas Day.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EPIDEMIC NON-ESSENTIALS

Bishops and Clergy Protest Against Classification of the Church With Non-Essential Industries

The bishops and clergy generally throughout the country have been speaking out boldly and effectively against the classification of the Church with "non-essential industries" by civil authorities where a ban has been placed on holding services because of the influenza epidemic. A most energetic and interesting campaign has been made at Bay City, Mich., under the leadership of the Rev. J. H. Schaad, rector of Trinity Church, recently referred to in these columns. In view of the return of the epidemic and "in anticipation of the possibility of a second state-wide ban," a strong letter has been addressed to the Governor of the State, signed by representatives of all the congregations in the city with an adult membership of 25,000. If Christians can get a better classification," writes Mr. Schaad, "much good will result."

We publish below a comprehensive consideration of the subject of "Churchless Sundays" from a display advertisement written by Mr. Schaad, which appeared in recent issues of the Bay City dailies:

The war has brought many old questions into the foreground, and created other new ones. Among them are several concerning the Christian Church, using that term in its broadest sense. Today we present three of them, because the need of the times is for more careful thinking and for a sweeping revaluation of things spiritual.

The Church and the Community.

If we were to judge the value of the Church by the seeming indifference of a large portion of our population towards it, as related to their daily life, it would seem to be a decidedly "non-essential industry."

And yet, and yet! In the hours of greatest, most sacred joy, all normal people want the Church and its ministers to solemnize the marriage of their sons and daughters.

Then, the Church becomes essential.

If we were to judge the value of the Church by the readiness of the public to criticize it,—heckling it because it is said to be out of touch with human affairs, or fussing at it when it does get into civic or sociological matters, the Church would seem to be not only "non-essential" but actually an impediment to progress.

And yet, and yet! In the shadow hours, when all that we hold dear seems to have vanished, all normal people want the Church and her ministers to attend their loved ones at the sick bed and the grave, and to bring to themselves a consolation which only religion can give.

Then, the Church suddenly becomes essential.

If we were to judge the Church by the ease with which such large numbers of people relegate it to the rear, that State officials dare to lay violent hands upon it,—as for example last winter, when the Churches were allowed to be open only six hours a week, while the saloons were given nine hours per day (!), the Church would seem to be not only "non-essential" and an impediment, but an institution to be suppressed.

And yet, and yet! There is not one percent of the population of America who would choose to engage in business, build homes, and rear a family of children in a community in which the ideals, uplifting influences and personal benefits created by the Church were forbidden. That has been tried, disastrously.

As a practical necessity then, in joy and sorrow, and in the normal domestic and commercial life of a community, the Church is thus seen to be essential. It is as Christ said, "The salt of the earth," to season and preserve human life at its best.

But who or what constitutes the Church, on its human side?

People speak of the Church as "they." Who? Why, the 50 per cent of the people in every community who have these ideals, and also practical interest enough in public welfare to erect and support the Churches both financially and by active co-operation.

Are you one of the "they"? Are you one of the Church? Do you believe in the Church as the best thing in human life? Do you believe in it as the best thing in the things in human life?

How much have you done to help maintain the Church in your community? Have you given it even the moral support of your regular presence on Sundays? Are you giving your children the example of God-loving citizenship which alone makes a strong State?

Unless you have done your share in these respects, you are in the class with a certain rich, but non-Church-going man in a large western city, of whom a minister once said that he would like to write this epitaph: "Here lies John Jones, who during his lifetime never went to Church, but now wishes that he had."

If you are not already an active producer of Church benefits, come on. When the Churches reopen, after the epidemic, go to Church. Take your family with you, if you have one. If you have never gotten much out of religion, and hence have undervalued it, it is perhaps because you have never put much of yourself into it.

Don't make the mistake of some people of whom Billy Sunday so aptly said, "They never think about religion until God backs up the hearse to their front door."

The Church and Spiritual Forces in (the Late) War and Victory.

Napoleon is credited with the statement, "An army advances on its stomach."

Our own government distributed posters expresing the same sentiment, "FOOD will win the war."

But everybody who thinks knows better today. We know of course that a soldier's stomach, filled with plenty of good food, is an important contributing factor in war; but it is not the determining factor.

The supreme winning factor in this war was Morale.

America had been sending as much food to the allied armies before the battle of Chateau-Thierry as afterwards. Yet they had not won.

Then America sent the determining factor—morale, a morale carefully built up in the hearts of our boys, both in cantonments at home and overseas, under General Pershing's directions. And the war was won.

Marshall Foch is reported to have written to some Americans, "The best preparation you can give your men is to put a Bible into their hand." And the French asked the American Churches to send them the Y. M. C. A.

Many British officers of high rank have publicly stressed and privately practiced prayer, as essential,—one of them frankly stating, "Every morning I stand at attention before God."

General Pershing sent home for a four-fold increase in Chaplains for the army abroad. And he said also, "We look to the Churches to keep the spirit of patriotism at home at white heat."

And so, the Churches furnished the army with Chaplains, Bibles, Prayer Books, Hymnals. They sent thousands of men and women to work in their secondary organization, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, and the Salvation Army. They organized units of the Red Cross, which is itself a product of the Christian Church. They conducted special prayer agencies. They made large contributions of money for other distinctively religious war work. What for? To create and maintain a high morale in our Army. And they succeeded so gloriously, that today the whole non-Teutonic world rejoices in a new security and peace.

Military morale, created by organized religion, did it.

Question: How much did you help the Church in this work?

The Church and Reconstruction.

And now as we face the future, long-hoped-for era of permanent peace, what is to be the place of the Church? And what is to be her program? These are vital questions. Some lightly dismiss the Church here, as in the past, as non-essential. But perhaps that is not a true valuation.

The place of the Church in the reconstruction era is vital and secure, for two reasons:

Her divine founder, Christ, said of the Church that even "the gates of hell shall not prevail against her." In witness of this the Church stands today after nineteen hundred years of satanic assaults.

Again on its human side, the Church has proven herself so essential to the welfare of mankind, whether in the war or peace times of the past, that the civilized world will hardly venture upon the future without her support and guidance, despite the cavils of the Church-hecklers.

The mission of the Church in the future will be the same as during the 1900 years of the past life. It is the same as the mission of her divine founder, who said, "I am come to destroy the works of the devil."

So long as temptation and sin devastate human souls more fatally than the Hun hurt Belgium, mankind will need a divine Saviour to reconstruct its life. The Church is His chief ambassador and instrument for this purpose; and until the millennium comes, Christ and His Church will be here to apply the curative remedies of the first Red Cross of Calvary to the sin-wounded souls of men.

Therefore, we may remain calm amid the new noise now being made by sensationalists, about the decadence of the Church, the changes which must take place in organized religion, the revisions and discards to be made, the new foundations to be built.

Christ is "the same yesterday, today and forever." And upon the foundation for Religion which He built, the Church will stand, secure in the performance of her age-long mission.

There is only one real change which the Church will be called upon to make, and that is in her method of applying the fundamental principles committed to her by Christ.

Many among the thousands of our boys who have faced the eternal issues of life "over there," will return home with a new and personal religious viewpoint and experience.

They may have what someone has called an "inarticulate religion," but their religious experiences have been vital and real, even if their present ideas about religion may be either chaotic or as yet limited.

They may at first be impatient with the more orderly expression which they will find in the Church, of the very realities of the spirit in which they so strongly believe; but that becomes a matter of mutual adjustment after they return home.

Here, then, is the problem of the Church for the immediate future, and it involves all Christian people. The Church must so adapt her methods to this newly awakened or greatly deepened spiritual interest in men, that she may provide them with natural vehicles of expression of the inarticulate religion which they already possess.

As yet there is no man among us who has sufficient prophetic insight to predict just what the soldiers' collective religious views will be, or how the Church can best meet the reconstruction problem when it arises.

But in this the Church is at least as well off as the State, which is now overwhelmed with new and crushing problems in our commercial, industrial and sociological life.

The solution of problems is to be found for Church and State alike, not in criticism, but in constructive study and effort. And the Church has already addressed herself to her new problems with large initiative and foresight.

As citizens we are trying to make the world safe for Democracy. But a still greater task lies before us, namely, to make Democracy safe for the world. But a Democracy without Christ in it becomes simply Bolshevikism or Autocracy; and we do not want either.

Come, then. Unite your efforts to help preserve the era of peace which our boys have so heroically, self-sacrificingly and honorably won.

The Church is the agent through which the morale of peace, as well as of war, is to be created and maintained.

Do your share. Go to church. Study and accept the religion of Christ. Engage in the work of redemption, which is reconstruction. So shall the future be glorious and worthy of the blood of the millions who, in all ages, have died to make man free.

The Witness as A Christmas Present.

What more appreciative gift can you present than a subscription to The Witness—a weekly visitor for an entire year? If you will send us five dollars, we will advance your own subscription another year.

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by GRACE WOODRUFF JOHNSON.

What a Christian Is to Do.

In last week's Witness we copied for this column part of a little pamphlet, entitled "Christianity"—"What a Christian is expected to believe." It does not seem complete without the remaining half—"What a Christian is to do," as follows: A Christian is to keep in touch with God first as a child keeps in touch with his father. This takes the form of Prayers, Worship, and Bible Reading.

In Prayer we talk with God, adoring Him, thanking Him, asking Him for what we desire for ourselves and for others. Then we must worship God, that is, we join with others in a corporate act of praise and adoration towards God. This means that we must go to Church to a public service of worship. The greatest act of worship is the Holy Communion, because in it we have the Memorial of the great love of God.

Then we must read the Bible to learn, first of all, of the Life and Death of Jesus Christ, and to know what God wishes us to do and what God has done.

We must live for God, so we must adjust our lives to His ways. We must have the Christian attitude towards every thing. If a thing is right, we must be for it; if a thing is wrong we must be against it. Our lives must square with our belief. We must lead a straight life. This most often means that we have to change our way of living. This change is conversion. With a right belief in Jesus Christ and a life lived as He wishes there come to the Christian happiness, peace, strength and hope. Then we must work for God. Not only must our lives be God's but we must fight everything in the world that prevents men and women from living clean, honest, Christian lives; we must work against everything that keeps this world from being Christ's. Then we must do things for others, kindnesses and acts of generosity; we must be thoughtful of others, going out of our way to help each other.

The Sacraments are to be used in the Christian life, especially the Holy Communion, because they are the means by which God helps us. He gives to us in the Holy Communion strength to live and work for Christ and for our fellowmen. It is to be received devoutly and regularly by every Christian."—From the Church Periodical Club, N. Y.

Have You Joined The Witness Bible Class?

I wonder how many of the Witness' readers have joined The Witness Bible Class and began with the course mapped out in last week's issue of this paper. Following is the course for the coming week:

First day—The Messiah was to be a King, and as such was to found a Kingdom in which we were to learn by obedience the duties of sonship and brotherhood.

The Messiah was to be a priest, and as such both as Priest and Sacrifice was to make atonement for our sins.

The Messiah was to be a prophet and as such was not only a preacher of righteousness but in His own life was the embodiment of righteousness. He was the perfect man. Let us see how in the Old Testament this part of Messiah's ministry was foreshadowed.

In Deut. xviii, 15-22, we have a prophecy of the Messiah.

In Isaiah lxi is the prophecy which Christ makes use of as referring to Himself. Compare St. Luke iv, 16-20.

Second day—Psalm xix is a prophecy of the extent of the Gospel message.

In Jeremiah xxxii, 36-44 is a statement of God's covenant with his people in the days of the Messiah.

Jonah, the preacher of righteousness is made a type of the Messiah by Christ Himself. Jonah 1, 17, compared with St. Matt. xii, 38-40. Also Jonah the preacher of righteousness. Jonah iii and St. Matt. xii, 41.

Third day—In Malachi iii and iv is the final word of the Old Testament on the coming of the Prophet.

Fourth day—In St. John i, 19-34, is the testimony of the last Hebrew prophet, John the Baptist to the Messiah.

The Messiah therefore according to the word of prophecy is to be the great preacher of righteousness and of eternal life.

We are studying the various signs of the Messiah in the Old Testament. It was through these signs that the Hebrews were prepared for the coming of the Messiah: These signs consisted of types, prophecies and acts of ritual which pointed the Jews forward to the Messiah.

By types are meant those characters in the Old Testament who foreshadowed some trait or characteristic of the Messiah, as Joseph who forgave the brethren who betrayed him.

By prophecies are meant a direct statement of some future event or some characteristic of the Messiah.

By ritual acts is meant that which went on in the Hebrew temple, as the slaying of the Lamb for the sins of the people; all of this ritual pointed forward to the Messiah.

Thus we find in the Old Testament that Christ was to be a King and have a Kingdom, to be a Priest and offer Himself as a sacrifice, to be a Prophet and evangelize all nations.

There is one more characteristic of Old Testament prophecy. The Messiah is to be supernatural—that is, more than natural man.

Fifth day—In Isaiah vii, 10-16, we find a sign of His supernatural birth (note that Immanuel means in the Hebrew "God with us").

In Psalm xxii, of his crucifixion which shall result (verses 26 and 27) in the redemption of mankind.

Sixth day—In Job xix, 23-27, is the strongest presentation of the resurrection, the one used in our burial office.

In Isaiah vi, 1-11, is a clear prophecy of the Divine character of the Messiah as quoted of Christ by St. John xii, 39-41, "These things said Isaiah when he saw His glory and spake of Him."

There is no stronger proof of the divine character of Christ than this reference by St. John to Isaiah xi.

The Palace at Versailles.

As peace conference is being held at Versailles, the following description of the palace in one of the daily newspapers may be as interesting to some of our readers as it was to me.

Versailles. A dozen miles from Paris, Louis XIV built this great palace and its appendages, a modern Babylon, and to do it he bled France of her financial resources and started the train of events that led to the French revolution and the French democracy.

As if by an irony of fate, the revolution was initiated here by the meeting of the States-General in 1789. And that other autocracy, the Prussian, began its 40 years of ascending with the proclamation of King Wilhelm as German Emperor at Versailles in 1871. And again, democracy chose this spot to initiate a new day, for at Versailles the allies drew up the terms of the armistice for Germany and will there dictate the terms of peace.

Versailles had its beginning in a hunting chateau built by J. Lemercier for Louis XIII, about the year 1625, a square structure of brick and stone that is still preserved in the marble court of the present palace. The palace later attracted Louis XIV, for purposes of the chase, and as early as 1662 he began to give his famous summer entertainments, to which Moliere and his players added interest. He built additions from time to time, and in 1668 began his huge program of construction. His court was established there permanently in 1682. The palace is composed of a central square, two wings at the right and left of it, and a third wing backing on the square and extending into the park.

Most of the great French painters are represented there, and all the history of France, with its great battles and ceremonies, is spread on canvas before the visitor.

The royal chapel is sumptuously adorned, and the theatre built by Louis XV was used by the National Assembly after the Franco-Prussian war and later by the Senate.

The Galerie des Glaces, or Gallery of Mirrors, is a remarkable corridor

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

STUDIES IN ACTS.

Continued from page 4.

English common law is important in studying the American republic.

II. The Second Element—the Life and Teachings of Christ.

From any angle at which you may view His life and teaching it is absolutely unique.

He is the one founder of a universal religion and the one founder of a religion who bases that religion on His own life rather than on His opinions merely.

Christ is the Christian religion. Subtract the life of Christ from that religion and its motive power would be gone. It is the love of Christ that has christianized millions.

If the first element in the Christian Church is a system of theocracy, the second element is the life of the man who founded it. "I am the life" was the startling statement of the founder of Christianity.

This was the testimony of the last great Hebrew prophet: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world."

So, if the Hebrew Messiah was to redeem the world. Christ claimed to be that Messiah.

We do not advance this statement by way of apologies, but as one of the elements that went to fashion the Christian Church, and the element upon which its creed is chiefly moulded.

Accept its truth or reject it, the fact remains that an institution known as the Christian Church has existed for twenty centuries based upon the birth and death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Upon this rock He built His Church, and upon this rock it has existed for 2000 years.

III. The Third Element—The Holy Spirit and the Apostles.

Christ gave to this Church the barest outline of an organization.

He selected and trained twelve men whom He called Apostles, and to whom He gave repeated assurances during His ministry, that He would send the Holy Ghost, and this jury of twelve men left their testimony, and sealed that testimony by life service and martyrdom; and on a certain day and in a certain place they received the gift of the Holy Ghost.

It was to this gift of Pentecost that they attributed their power, their ability and their success.

Before Pentecost they testify that they could do nothing but remain inactive in Jerusalem. After the receipt of that gift they began the conversion of men, whom they baptized, to whom they gave this gift through the laying on of hands, with whom they broke bread as the Lord had commanded and with whom they enjoyed the privilege of perpetual fellowship.

You may attach such importance as you please to these facts, they formed the program which the Apostles carried out.

The Apostolic Church had such organization as the need demanded.

When they needed an order whose business it should be to distribute alms, they created the order of deacons. Once created, the order has remained as a witness to the fact, even when it has failed to execute the duties for which it was created.

When the Church became localized in a given community, certain men were selected to preside over the organization. These local officers, called elders and overseers (or bishops), and given specific duties such as Timothy and Titus exercised in their respective fields of operation.

In connection with the administration of the early Church certain controversies arose such as the necessity of circumcizing Gentiles before admitting them to baptism.

These controversies were settled in an orderly way by a council or synod at which James, the local overseer of Jerusalem, presided, and at which a judicial decision was reached and a regularly constituted commission was appointed to carry out the decision of the council.

We are not to think of the Apostolic Church as following a cut and dried program but we are rather to think of it as having a definite organization which met each need in a constitutional manner, and adopted certain principles for the maintenance of the brotherhood.

Disciples were admitted by baptism: they afterward received the laying on of hands: then they were admitted into the fellowship of the Eucharist.

Officers were appointed or elected: they received their authority from the approval of the Apostles and were designated by the laying on of hands as the ones whom the Apostles had so accepted. These officers exercised their ministry as the Apostles directed. Some of the deacons and probably the Apostles themselves, exercised a roving commission: others as the elders of Ephesus, and such men as Timothy and Titus held a local authority.

These matters are settled as need might arise. In the early stages of Church life, the local or parochial idea would scarcely arise; as the Church grew locally the necessity would become imperative.

It was all done decently and in order. No one questioned the authority of the Apostles to settle these questions as they arose, and the questions arose as large numbers of Christians became assembled in one city or community.

IV. The Fourth Element—Long Usage.

It is inevitable in the organization of any society that some rules will remain, some will be modified, some will be abrogated altogether.

It was so in the Apostolic Church. As time went on the primitive church found that certain apostolic arrangements became permanent and established rules; others had to be modified to meet new emergencies; others were abrogated entirely.

If we study the first apostolic synod in Acts XV, we shall find that the Apostles established with equal authority, certain distinct and definite rules, viz.: that Gentile converts to Christianity need not be circumcized, that they should abstain from idols and from fornication from things slaughtered and from blood. The first three of these laws were confirmed by long usage, the last two were forgotten and passed out of ecclesiastical concern.

So the apostolic offices took on certain established principles. All ministers were ordained by laying on of hands. The supervisors of local churches became differentiated into overseers (or bishops), to whom were given the right of ordaining ministers, and elders (or presbyters), to whom were given the charge of local parishes.

The office of deacon was modified in different ways in different sections of the Church. At Rome the number remained fixed at seven; in other communities the office became preparatory: in others the original functions were carried out.

The Church grew out of existing powers, rather than copied from an established plan. The one principle of cohesion was the power possessed by the Apostles and those who succeeded them. This held the Church together.

The other principle of continuity was that all ministers were selected by some democratic method which probably varied in different localities but all were ordained by the regular form of laying on of hands by those who had been set apart for this purpose.

We need to discriminate between the facts of this organization, and the theories which subsequent partizans have read into these facts.

It will be difficult to formulate a theory of the Apostolic Church; Episcopal, presbyterial or Congregational powers that could be proven: It is not difficult to establish the cardinal principles, which preserve the continuity of any society, as existing in the primitive church.

Whatever the primitive Church was, it was a composite product of Hebrew tradition, Christ's person, Apostolic inspiration and established usage.

"And they continued daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the Church daily, such as were being saved."

The Church as we find it in the second century was the product of all these causes.

"My sister made me a present of the first year of The Witness, which I have appreciated and valued most highly," writes Mrs. Eliza Bella Starkey of Quincy, Ill. "After learning that she did not intend repeating this generosity, I am now sending my subscription for two years. Its teachnigs are so precious and so clear, that I value it more highly than any other paper I read."

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS.

(Continued from page 1)

ery, and the sacrifices of our Allies, this victory over cruelty and falsehood, and boastful tyranny, and national greed."

Demands a Closer Affiliation of All Christian Bodies.

"The United War Work Campaign" says the Rev. Lloyd B. Thomas of Trinity Church, Oakland, Cal., "is an example of that union of forces which alone can accomplish the task of reconstruction which is before us. This task, which is not only material but moral and spiritual, demands a union of Christian forces. It demands that there be a closer affiliation of all Christian bodies. This is the first great opportunity which confronts us—the opportunity to progress towards Christian unity more vital than has ever before been achieved. If we do not meet this opportunity advantageously, the task before us of reconstructing the world upon a basis of Peace and Liberty CANNOT be achieved. Note that. And note further, that every single person must do his part toward achieving that Christian unity."

A Judge Who Opens Court With Prayer.

"He whosoever prayeth maketh a merciful judge," is to be found in an opinion handed down by the Supreme Court of Louisiana, which has recently been quoted against a defendant who objected to a judge opening his court with prayer. In rendering his decision Justice Summerville disposes of the matter as follows:

"The judge says that it is his custom to open court each day with a prayer, general in its terms, and that the jury, and no particular officer of the court, was mentioned in the prayer on the occasion referred to. Since such was the custom of the court, and no one was mentioned in the prayer, we fail to see how the prayer could have prejudiced the jury for or against the accused.

"A prayer for the divine guidance in discharging the duties of the high office which the Judge administers would suggest to the mind that he who offered the prayer was a virtuous and a merciful man, and that those qualities, combined with a knowledge of law, would make of him a good Judge. It does not suggest injury being done to any one. The opening of court with prayer by the Judge is not usual, but it is not forbidden. The crier of the court usually performs that duty when he opens court and cries, 'God save the State and this honorable court.' No one has ever suggested that that officer had acted prejudicially or injuriously to an accused person, or to anyone else who was before the court."

The Cry Is To Make The Church Attractive.

"Your modern revivalist lays stress on artificial, mechanical contrivances. He is theatrical dramatic, strikes a pose," says the Rev. Dr. Lacey of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y. "Proestant church life is weak in dependence on the sensational. The cry is to make the church attractive. The minister is placed in competition with the promoter of a show. Can he teach young fellows to swim? Can he run a minstrel entertainment? You have only to cast your eye over the 'religious' advertisements to see to what extent the church is coming down to the level of the vaudeville appeal. One advertises itself as 'cheerful' church. One alert pastor has his picture reproduced with his ad., after the manner of the patent medicine proprietor! Another announces his sermon topic, 'why women remain unmarried'. Another church advertises an auction of pews—very like a real estate transaction. The vaudeville idea is supreme. In a popular hymn book I find this direction after one of the hymns (?): 'A good effect can be obtained if the male voices will imitate escaping steam and whistle.' The idea of worship does not seem to enter into the calculation. Even the old-fashioned gospel sermon that formerly played a big role has given place to a lecture on topics of the day or descriptive travel talk on the nations at war. Churches compete weak religious life is to get back to the first principles. The test of a real church is effective service. We must purge our church life of undue concern about the petty things and give ourselves in deeper consecration to the great things of God and humanity."

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE.

(Continued from page 6)

extending along the garden side of the central portion of the palace. It is 236 feet long, 33 feet wide and 43 feet high, and was completed in 1684. The decorations are in the most lavish style, by Le Brun and others of his day. Seventeen large arched windows command a beautiful view of the gardens, and opposite these are 17 bevelled mirrors. The appointments of this hall, including tables and other articles of furniture, were in solid silver. It was in this room that King Wilhelm of Prussia was proclaimed German Emperor on Jan. 18, 1871, after that defeat of France which cost her Alsace-Loraine.

The garden facade of the palace is pierced by nearly 400 windows. The great building had space for a household of more than 10,000. persons Nearly 100 sculptors were employed on the gardens.

Recent calculations are to the effect that the cost of preparing the site, laying out the park and the gardens, and building and decorating the palace reached the enormous sum of $100,000,000—for which expense the suffering people of France were made to groan under burdensome taxation, as well as the maintenancet of the vast establishment.

Two buildings in the palace gardens are of interest. One of these is the Grand Trianon, a handsome villa of one story, erected by Louis XIV for Mme. de Maintenon in 1687-1688, and occupying the site of the hamlet of Trianon. The other is the Petit Trianon, built by Louis XV for Mme. Du Barry in 1766 and later a favorite resort of Marie Antoinette and the Duchess Helen of Orleans and an occasional resort of the Empress Marie Louise.

The main salon of the Grand Trianon was the sanctum of the recent supreme war council which formulated the terms of surrender for Germany.

Louis XIV had transformed a desert into an earthly paradise. On Oct. 6th, 1783, the palace was ravaged by the market women and fish wives, in the presence of Louis XVI. The king and queen were forced to go to Paris. After the meeting of the states-general the opening act of the French revolution, since then the palace has never been used as a residence, although during the siege of Paris in 1870 King Wilhelm I of Prussia made it his headquarters.

This vivid description from Martin's history of France suggests the past glory of Versailles and the reason for the discontent which incited Frenchmen to rebellion.

The King Who Would Be a God.

At Versailles everything was to be created, not only the monuments of art, but nature itself. This solitary elevation—although pleasing enough through the woods and hills that surrounded it, was without great views, without sites, without waters, without inhabitants. The sites would be created by creating an immense landscape by the hand of man; the waters would be brought from the whole country by works which appalled the imagination; the inhabitants would be caused, if we may say so, to spring from the earth, by erecting a whole city for the service of the chateau. Louis would then make a city of his own of which he alone would be its life.

Versailles and the court would be the body and soul of one and the same thing, both created for the same end, the glorification of the terrestrial god to whom they owed their existence.

Painting deified Louis under every form, in war and in peace—it celebrated his amours, as his victories, his passions as his labors, he was all the gods in himself alone—the whole horizon was his work for his garden was the whole horizon.

Whole thickets were brought full-grown from the depths of the finest forests of France. An innumerable ation of statues peopled the thicks and lawns.

Louis did as he wished. He created little universe about him in which e was the only real being."

BISHOP QUIN'S FIRST GREETING TO TEXAS CHURCH PEOPLE

Church people generally will read with interest and gain inspiration from the following letter addressed to the Church people who will be under his care, by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Quinn, recently consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Texas:

GREETING:

By your election, and by the Church's Consecration, you have vested me as Bishop Coadjutor with certain authority, but authority without co-operation is an empty, worthless thing, and a leader in whatever walk of life can do no more than those he is engaged to lead, will do with him. So I come, in this, my first greeting, to that part of this diocese committed to my care, pledging you my best and my all for the advancement of the Kingdom of God. This pledge is a challenge to your best and your all, that we together may accomplish.

I have a vision for the Church's work in this diocese, and indeed I could not dare to set hand to my task without vision. "Where there is no vision, the people perish," is as true of individuals as it is of Churches or nations. Will you not look beyond the sad spectacle of closed churches and disinterested church people, to see what your individual responsibility is for the church in your community, and then with a vision of what ought to be, and with faith in God, who wills us all that is good and worth while, set about to convert vision into reality? Two other things are necessary:

To resolve that it can be done, and to realize that it is going to cost us something.

I like the "Philosophy of Service" when he wrote about the Christian optimist:

Somebody said it couldn't be done
But he with a chuckle replied
That, maybe, it couldn't but he would be ONE
Who wouldn't say so, till he tried.
So he buckled right in, with a trace of a grin
On his face. (If he worried he hid it)
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That COULDN'T be done, and he DID IT.

Let us put that spirit into our work—set our goal, and reach it. It doesn't matter that we have had disappointments (we probably will have some more)—it doesn't matter that men are scarce—they ought to be while this war is on—"wherever two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst." "Be it done unto thee even as thou wilt"—God is ready, the opportunity is always present, both are but waiting on our WILL to do.

Then, it is going to cost us something. Every mission station wants a three or a five thousand dollar man in charge—that is right, too, but it is not reasonable to expect that kind of a man for a thousand dollars a year, payable every sixteen months. Religion is the cheapest thing we get. It costs less than food, than clothing, than comforts, and the reason so many people get so little out of religion is because they put so little into it. But I do not refer particularly to money, to the cost in dollars and cents; I mean the cost in self. I mean loyalty, allegiance, conviction, brotherhood, service. When we resolve to spend these things in our church and for our church, no matter how small or how large our flock, we are going to get results. If a man isn't a live churchman today, he is a dead one. With a vision of our responsibility, and with the WILL to do and to be, with faith in God and prayer to God, we, you and I together can accomplish much for the glory of our Master's mission.

CLINTON S. QUIN.

Some Sunday School laws were those back in 1670 in Boston! A Boston captain came back in 1670 from a three years' sea cruise. His wife met him on the doorstep of his house and naturally he kissed her. But it happened to be Sunday and for his "lewd and unseemly behavior," the captain's neighbors reported him to the constable, and before the day was over he was put into the public stocks for two hours. On the same day two lovers were arrested in Boston because they "sat together under an apple tree in an orchard," which was "lewd" and unseemly behavior."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

DIOCESE OF LEXINGTON

The Twenty-Fourth Annual Council of the Diocese of Lexington will be held (D. V.) in Trinity Church, Covington, Ky., the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, rector, on Tuesday, February 11, 1918. This Council meeting will combine the postponed Special Fall Council and the Spring Council and the Spring Council usually held in May or June. It is hoped, that meeting at this time will prove more satisfactory than the meetings heretofore held in warm weather. An item of interest to come up is Woman Representation.

Because of the prevalence of influenza in Lexington, all churches, etc., being closed, the special service of Thanksgiving for Victory prepared for Christ Church Cathedral, was unable to be held. This service will be held, however, as soon as the present "ban" is lifted, and opportunity for it given.

The Diocese of Lexington has two of its clergy in active service as chaplains. The Rev. Arthur H. Marshall, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Fort Thomas, and formerly chaplain at that post, is now chaplain at the Base Hospital, Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Ky., and awaits his early return to parish duties, now that the camp is to be demobilized. The Rev. J. J. Gravatt, Jr., formerly rector of the Ascension, Frankfort, Ky., and who had resigned that charge to accept a call to Staunton, Va., just before receiving orders, in answer to his previous application, to report to the Chaplain Training School at Camp Taylor, Ky., has graduated from that school, and has been rushed "overseas" with a company of seventy-five chaplains. Dr. John Rice Cowan and Dr. John D. Jackson, both members of Trinity Church vestry, Danville, Ky., received commissions as captain in the U. S. Medical Corps. Capt. Cowan is now at Camp Crane awaiting further orders; and Dr. Jackson has resigned his commission, and continues his practice in Danville, as a result of urgent appeals from the citizens of Danville that he remain here. Dr. Henry Tevis, member of Trinity Church, Danville, is in the aviation camp at Great Lakes Station. Raymond Guy Flaig, who has been serving in the Ordnance Department in France, has recently been promoted to the office of Major, in recognition of services rendered.

At the beginning of Advent the rector of Trinity, Danville, the Rev. Henry P. Manning, received a most useful box from the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Paul's Church, Springfield, Ill.

The Sunday School of Trinity Church, Danville, is earning funds by selling Church Calendars this Advent with which to supplement its Gift Fund earned this past Summer for the purchase of an Altar Book as a Christmas gift to the Church. A portion of its earnings will be devoted to the Sunday School Advent Offering.

The Advent Call in the Diocese of Lexington has been greatly interrupted because of the influenza epidemic. Though the Call has been responded to in some parishes, Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, and Trinity, Danville, have postponed the plan until the Pre-Lenten period, 1919.

The Sunday Schools of this Diocese are now engaged in securing their Advent Offering, to be devoted this year to St. John's, Corbin, our Diocesan Missionary School.

Burton Cottage, one of the new buildings of St. John's Collegiate Institute and Industrial School, and Wentworth Agricultural School Farm, Corbin, is now being furnished in preparation for its increased enrollment. The Guild of Christ Church Cathedral is fitting up one room; Dean R. L. McCreedy of the Cathedral, Louisville, Ky., is furnishing another in memory of his mother; and Mrs. Wilkins "has contributed a large part of the funds necessary to help completely furnish the building." Mr. Fred Burman, Barbourville, Ky., has been appointed Lay-Reader in charge of the Mission here; the former Lay-reader, Mr. Ira D. Lang, having recently been placed in charge of Bellevue-Dayton.

"Some exceedingly interesting reading will be found in the new booklet just issued by Bishop Lewis W. Burton, D. D., and Archdeacon F. B. Wentworth, president of St. John's School and School Farm, Corbin, Ky. Free copies may be had by addressing the Bishop at Lexington, Ky., or the Archdeacon at Winchester, Ky.

The Very Rev. R. K. Massie, Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, is expected to return to his duties December 15th.

NOTES FROM WYOMING

The wave of Spanish Influenza which has swept the United States has not passed by Wyoming. The churches in Wyoming have suffered severely, but have rendered noble service in this time of affliction. The quarantine still exists in many portions of the State. The clergy are working valiantly to relieve the conditions in their communities. Several of our missionaries have suffered from this pestilence, but we are thankful to God that they have been spared to us.

Word has come of the death of the Rev. Hiram Reese Bullis in Santa Monica, California, on Wednesday morning, November 20th. With his death, there passes from our midst one of the few clergy to whom it may be said that he passed his entire life in the missionary field. Mr. Bullis served as missionary and Archdeacon of Western Colorado until ten years ago, when he came to Wyoming as missionary in charge of St. Paul's Church, Evanston, where he rendered most faithful and earnest service until his failing health necessitated his removal to California. Mr. Bullis, however, retained his canonical connection with the Missionary District of Wyoming. He served as Secretary of Convocation for several years, and was most active in the work of the district.

A host of friends mourn the loss of this devoted and saintly servant of the Church, but all rejoice in the glories which are now his.

On November 1st, a great step toward self support was taken in the creation of The Rural Parish of Park County, composed of Christ Church, Cody; St. Andrew's, Meeteetse; and St. John's, Powell, under the rectorship of the Reverend Alan R. Chalmers. In his Convocational Address in June, the Bishop outlined the plan he had in mind for the formation of rural parishes throughout the district. The idea was taken up and vigoriously prosecuted in Park County, with the result that three mission stations have been combined in such a way as to take upon themselves the whole burden of their maintenance, including the rector's stipend, traveling expenses, apportionment, and all other charges. The relief to central funds has been very great, and the stimulus given to local endeavor is beyond measure. It is hoped that another such parish may be developed in the near future, in close proximity to that of Park County.

St. John's Hospital, Jackson, is the fortunate recipient of a gift of ten thousand dollars, through the good offices of Dr. C. W. Huff. The giver of this fine contribution desires to remain unknown, but he has been tendered the sincere thanks of the community which he has so greatly benefitted. The sum is to be used in the enlargement of the building, the installation of steam heat, and general additions to the equipment.

The sympathy of the district goes out to Mr. John Hay and his family, of Rock Springs, in the loss of his son, Archie Hay, who was killed in action early in October. Mr. Hay is the district treasurer and is very prominent in all works of the Church. Archie Hay was a communicant of the Church of the Holy Communion, Rock Springs, a young man of sterling character, and an inspiration to all who knew him. His death was indeed untimely, but all must glory in the distinction of yielding up one's life in connection with the great victory which we have won, through God's Grace.

The Rev. R. Emmet Abraham, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., has taken up work in the Missionary District of Wyoming, having under his care the mission stations of Saratoga, Encampment, and Hanna. Mr. Abraham began his work in Wyoming on November 15th.

The Rev. Paul B. James, Dean of the Platte Deanery, and missionary at Torrington, has resigned his work in Wyoming to accept the rectorship of Trinity Church, Iowa City, Iowa. Mr. James took up his new duties on Advent Sunday.

The Rev. George McKay, for several years missionary at Newcastle and contiguous missions stations, has been called to the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Buffalo, Wyoming, and took up his work there on December 1st.

The Very Reverend D. W. Thornberry, Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, Wyoming, who was granted a year's leave of absence, is now doing work under the Y. M. C. A. in France. Dean Thornberry writes that it was his inestimable privilege to be in Paris, on November 11th, the never-to-be-forgotten date of the signing of the armistice.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

The first Sunday School Institute to be held for many years in the city of Columbus for Sunday School teachers of the Episcopal Church was held in the club rooms belonging to the Chapel of the Holy Spirit, opposite the University Campus, on Friday evening, Nov. 29th, and was attended by over a hundred Sunday School teachers from Columbus and surroundings. The Institute opened with a social half hour and supper was served by the women of the Holy Spirit Mission. Five-minute talks by Bishop Coadjutor Reese, Prof. Magruder of the Board of Religious Education of the Diocese, Miss Cook, who is Diocesan Sunday School Secretary, and others upon the five-fold plan of the Christian Nurture System, followed a brief opening service. Discussions followed each talk, and the Institute was concluded by an interesting address by Miss Cook upon the theme, "What can the Sunday School Do in Connection with the Reconstruction Work Which Will Follow the War?" The Institute was planned for and bsought into being thsough the efforts of the Junior Clergy of Columbus. It is expected to repeat the Institute several times a year.

A patriotic memorial service was held recently in St. Peter's Church, Delaware, in honor of Wm. F. Welch of the U. S. Marines, who lost his life in the service of his country. The memorial service prepared by Bishop Reese was used for the occasion. The Ven. J. H. Dodshon, Archdeacon of Columbus, preached the sermon. The gold star was placed upon the flag by Rev. B. S. Levering, former rector of the parish, and now chaplain in the U. S. army.

The Sunday Schools of Southern Ohio are again closed for a period of at least one month, due to the reoccurrence of the influenza epidemic. The churches have been permitted to continue their services, however, if children are not admitted to them.

Upon the morning that the news came of the signing of the armistice, the Rev. Sidney Sweet, of St. Paul's Church, Columbus, called together as many of his congregation as he could reach by telephone for a service of Thanksgiving in the church. Over a hundred responded to the call, and the service was held at ten o'clock in the church building. In the evening an interdenominational service was held in Memorial Hall, Columbus, which was attended by church members of nearly every church in Columbus. Among others, the Rev. F. C. Chauncey, rector of Trinity Church, addressed the great audience.

The following is the program of the Community Welfare Services for 1918-19, at St. John's Church, Columbus, on the evenings of the first Sunday in each month:

Nov. 3—"What You Ought to Know About Your tCity," by Mr. Stocton Raymond, Secretary of Central Philanthropic Council.

Dec. 1—"Juvenile Offender," by Mr. C. V. Williams, Secretary of Child Welfare Dept., Board of State Charities.

Jan. 5—"Social Results of Intemperance,' by Mr. J. Sanford, Ass't State Supt. of Anti-Saloon League.

Feb. 2—"Health Insurance," by Mr. John Lapp, Health and Old Age Insurance Commission.

March 2—"Recreation and Citizenship,' by Clifford K. Brown, Sec'y of Central Y. M. C. A.

Social service is the thought uppermost in the prayers, hymns, lessons, etc., selected for these special services.

A PATRIOTIC PAGEANT

BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE— SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Democracy Saving the World

A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.

Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year

ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.

A Pageant Has Wonderful Educational Power

If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.

THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.

Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave.,

By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.

CHICAGO, ILL.

The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

Confirmation Instruction

By Bishop Johnson of Colorado.

A very valuable Manual to place in the hands of candidates for Confirmation.

Send 25 cents for a sample copy.

Price, $2.00 a dozen.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Private Prayers for the Faithful

By Bishop Sage of Salina.

A Manual which thousands of Church people have found helpful in their private devotions at home and in church.

Price, 10 cents. Postage 4c.

"My people find the book of prayers very helpful and I think it is in every home in my parish."—Carl W. Nau, Emporia, Kan.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Parochial Mission Supplies

Use our Printed Matter.
Send for Samples.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Witness

Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

RIST AND THE CHURCH

D., AND CHICAGO, ILL., DECEMBER 28, 1918 $1.00 A YEAR

distant points as Seattle, Wash., and Faribault, Minn., being sent, respectively, by Mrs. Florence Snyder and Mrs. Flora Stone both former residents of Dallas. Among those most close at hand was the following greeting from St. Matthew's Home for Children:

"The Venerable Father—Mrs. Berry and the little children, his friends at St. Matthew's Home, send greetings to their good, kind and right reverend father and dear Bishop of the Diocese of Dallas on his eighty-sixth birthday, assuring him that he will always have their very sincere love and affection and good wishes and prayers that God, in His goodness, may spare him many more years in his work for the glory of His good name and the good of the Church through Jesus Christ, our blessed Lord and Savior."

Among the first to call yesterday morning and pay their respects was a delegation of Scottish Rite Masons, of which fraternity Bishop Garrett also is a member.

Bishop Garrett received his friends in the drawing room of St. Mary's Hall. He was assisted by Bishop Moore, Dean Carrington, Mrs. Carrington, Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Pierce of the faculty; Miss Lawrence, secretary to the Bishop, and some of the senior students of the college. All joined in singing the national anthem, led by Mrs. Allie Pierce, head of the music department. Miss Claude Williams, by request of Bishop Garrett, then played a selection.

Tribute to Bishop Garrett.

Judge John L. Terrell, who officiated as chief spokesman for the visitors, first presented Miss Lawrence with a large box of sweets, explaining that the Masons wished to express their gratitude to her who for so long has been the eyes of their distinguished host. He then presented Bishop Garrett with a beautiful bouquet of flowers, saying that "they represent white, the purity of heart that actuates the men who come to you today to present them to you. Flowers are the great work of the grand geometrician of the universe, who made man, who at best is a sinner, but who also made flowers, which, in their perfection, are a pleasure to man and give fragrance and beauty to the environments amidst which he lives and breathes."

Judge Terrell told of the love, esteem and affection in which Bishop Garrett is held by his brother Masons, how they rejoice in the great educational institution he has been instrumental in building and the far-reaching influence it has exercised, the beneficience of his ecclesiastical work for so many years in Texas and particularly of their pleasure in participating with him in celebrating his eighty-sixth birthday and the hope that he will be spared for many more.

Bishop Garrett Responds.

"It is very difficult, indeed," Bishop Garrett responded, "for me at this fraternity, who take the young [illegible] by the hands and instruct them mentally, morally and spiritually and raise them to higher levels of mankind than otherwise they might be able to attain.

"Where I have been able to do so, within the last few years it has been my object to embrace such opportunities as come within my reach to benefit the whole race of men in the State of Texas and elsewhere as far as my influence may extend. After careful scientific study I have come to the conclusion that the Divine Providence of God has intended that woman shall have a larger share in purifying humanity than has been assigned to man. They have been intrusted with the education and care of humanity from birth to maturity. The prayers of children must be learned from their mothers' knees, and so it is that God has designed

CHURCH CONSECRATED AT RICHMOND, VA.

Sunday, December the 15th, was indeed a red letter day for the congregation of St. James Church when they reached the climax of their hopes and prayers in seeing the new church, completed about five and a half years ago, paid for and consecrated to the service of Almighty God.

Founded in 1835, the first building at Fifth and Marshall Streets, completed and occupied in 1837, and consecrated the following year, it being the third Episcopal Church in Richmond; the inspiration for its building being what was believed to be the need for an Episcopal Church in the Extreme West End of the City.

Here the congregation worshipped and was ministered unto by saintly men—Empie, Cummings, Peterkin, Mason and Clark—until the encroachment upon it of stores and market made its environment so bad that it was evident that the very existence of the Church demanded its removal. On the last Sunday of September, 1912, the final service was held in the old Church, and on the first Sunday in October the congregation worshipped for the first time in the Parish House of the new Church. On the 22nd of June, 1913, the first service was held in the new Church building, the sermon being preached by the Rt. Rev. George W. Peterkin of West Virginia, the son of the honored and beloved Rector for thirty-seven years. Nor during the years that have intervened between then and this joyous completion of this work has the missionary spirit of the Church in any degree abated; but to Missions at Home and Abroad the contributions have steadily increased. And the joy of giving has blessed this [illegible]regation, while liberally contrib[illegible] the money to pay for their new [illegible]al home.

[illegible]ames Church has during its [illegible]more than eighty years had [illegible]n Rectors—Empie, Cum[illegible]terkin, Mason, Clark, Darst [illegible]sent Rector, G. Freeland [illegible]uring its career there [illegible]ny notable men among [illegible]—Rev. T. G. Dashiell, [illegible]V. Peterkin, Rev. Mr. [illegible] Robert Atkinson [illegible]B. Lee, Rt. Rev. [illegible]er, Rev. Henry A. [illegible]prigg, Rev. Geo. [illegible]ston Nash, Rev. [illegible] Wm. J. Mor[illegible]y spirit has [illegible]stablishment [illegible]s—St. Phil[illegible]Holy Trin[illegible]e has aid[illegible]the Less [illegible]Meade [illegible]serv[illegible]dur[illegible]try [illegible]00 [illegible]y

THE CHURCH WAR COMMISSION

Bishops Lawrence and Reese Present Information of Unusual Interest—Budget Cut to $250,000

The following interesting information is from the last quarterly report of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Theodore Irving Reese, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Church War Commission:

"The present program of the War Department contemplates 16 permanent barrack camps, 2 embarkation camps and 4 tent camps for the next year. Through these camps a million men will pass. We have to day about 30 civilian Chaplains in our camps and naval stations, and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has about 35 secretaries.

"After the signing of the armistice one of the first orders related itself to the Commissioned Chaplains. No more Chaplains were to be commissioned or to be sent overseas. The present candidates of the Chaplain's Training School have the privilege of resigning and returning to civilan life; or, receiving a commission, be assigned to the National Reserve Army. The last Chaplain to receive a commission is Chaplain J. M. Page of our Church.

At present there seems to be no method in transferring our Commissioned Chaplains. They are transferred from camp to camp without assignment or reason. There are 14 today at Camp Sherman who have nothing to do but twirl their thumbs, and last Sunday at Camp Upton, where our own Church has been able to exert an influence, we did not have either a Commissioned or a Civilian Chaplain.

A personal letter of Christmas greeting was sent last week to all our Commissioned Chaplains overseas, and the book—With God In the War—will be sent as a Christmas gift to all our Commissioned and Civilian Chaplains in this country.

United Campaign of the Churches.

As the Young Men's Christian Association could not include in its budget the religious work of the Churches, for it is recognized by the Government essentially as a welfare organization, and as the Knights of Columbus in their budget made provision for the equipment of their Chaplains, the non-Roman Catholic Churches of the country are compelled to make an appeal to the American people for the support of their war work. Naturally such an appeal should be made together and simultaneously. For this reason our own War Commission, in co-operation with the War Commissions of 14 other Churches, agreed to make a campaign to include a common publicity, a simultaneous time for the appeal, and each commission was to have its own budget and Treasurer. There is also to be a common budget composed of things that we can do together in various phases of reconstruction work, and this budget is to be apportioned to the various Christian commissions participating in the campaign.

Accordingly, a Committee was formed with Bishop Henderson of the Methodist Church as Chairman, Mr. John Mott and the Executive Chairman of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church as the two Vice-Chairmen, and six others. This Committee is not related to the Federation of the Churches or the War-Time Commission, though it grew out of the latter. It is not a merger of the Churches participating, or a scheme for Church unity. It is simply facing a common task in the spirit of fellowship and goodwill. From the beginning I have thrown myself heartily and without reserve into this work. I have attended every meeting of the Committee, shared in conducting a whole morning of devotion and prayer, and from every point of view have appreciated the true Christian fellowship of this relation.

Our own Church without hesitation underwrote $50,000, to be used for transportation of the Chaplains overseas. We did this in the name of the War-Time Commission. Although this money has not been called for, it was a visible witness to the reality of our fellowship.

The Budget Cut to $250,000.

Shortly before the signing of the armistice Bishop Lawrence in writing a letter to the Bishops and Clergy notified them that the War Commission would make an appeal for $1,000,000, the first week in February. After the armistice was signed, the following possibilities were considered: (1) For the War Commission to finish up its immediate work, spend its money and go out of business. (2) The plan of a large reconstruction programme, and the appealing to the Church for a large amount of money. (3) A programme of work which included transmitting the spiritual and moral values of the war to the normal parochial life, and carrying on this work to the time of the next general convention. After many conferences this last plan was agreed upon, and our budget cut to $500,000; later still to $250,000. Bishop Lawrence has written letters to all our Bishops and Clergy of this change and purpose. The task, therefore, before us is to take the great moral and spiritual values which have come to us during the war, and which we have seen and heard in this office, and transmit this to the normal and parochial life, launch it with momentum through the existing organizations with which we are affiliated. We must carry over the values at a time in our American life when they are most supremely needed.

Therefore, our present task is to come before the Church, and through publicity render an account of our stewardship, and then with confidence appeal to the Church to support the work of this Commission in its next forward step."

For the Year of Demobilization.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. William Lawrence, Chairman of the Church War Commission, in a letter to the clergy, written under date of December 14th, gives a resume of the chief items of expenditure during the past years and says:

"Now for the year of demobilization. Peace has come so suddenly, and the future of our Army and Navy is so uncertain, that we can only roughly estimate the needs. Of two things we are clear:

First, that the period of demobilization will call upon the moral and spiritual forces of the Churches and communities with even greater insistence than the activities of war.

Second, that the Commission ought not to ask the Church for any more money than it can plan to spend wisely. We have no right to take advantage of a generous people.

With war still active we had expected to call for $1,000,000. With demobilization, we estimate the real need to be $250,000. With this sum we expect to be able to discharge the responsibility which the Church has laid upon us, carrying our work up to the meeting of the General Convention in October. Sharp adjustments have been made in the figures. With the demobilization of the men there will come a quick fall in the amounts

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

THE CIRCUMCISION OF CHRIST.
January 1st.

By the Rev. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

The Collect.

Almighty God, who madest thy blessed Son to be circumcised, and obedient to the law for man; Grant us true circumcision of the Spirit; that our hearts, and all our members, being mortified from all worldly and carnal lusts, we may in all things obey thy blessed will; through the same thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Who madest thy blessed Son to be circumcised, and obedient." The compelling power of God! When we think of God as "Almighty" what idea do we hold in our minds? Is His power to us the attractive power of goodness, or the magnetic power of love, or the impelling power of justice, or the irresistible power of fate? The Blessed Babe of Bethlehem in His Mission to the world brought into radiance the virtue of obedience, even when it involved tears, and pain, and blood. Is not this feast day a reminder to all parents that obedience must be brought home to their children very early in their lives, in order that they may grow into it as naturally as they grow in stature; and so that obedience may early become a life habit? And shall we not consider well with ourselves how best to make our children obedient to the law for man? It is very important, is it not, that children should learn from us wherein obedience is a virtue. And they will learn that, by the way in which we make children obey; and by the standards which we set up for obedience, in which there shall be nothing which will cause them to feel in their hearts that we are unjustly exacting that which is not our due.

Circumcision brings home to us the thought that in the development of life it is necessary often times for future good to inflict present pain. What we must beware of in the infliction of pain is a numbing of the spirit, so that obedience becomes a dull acquiescence, rather than a loving co-operation. Let us remember to preach and teach people that God's compulsion is not the compulsion of an arbitrary Being, but that driving of the spirit which causes a man to lift up his head, and hold himself steady when the trials of the untamed spirits buffet and torment him, and tease him into days of disobedience.

The circumcision of the Spirit is that piercing asunder spoken of by St. Paul. 'The Sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God.' The true missionary is one on whose tongue are these words of God which will stir up his hearers' wills, and cause them to inflict on themselves the mortal blows which will cause the dead and proud flesh of disobedience to slough off, and give the new clean and humble flesh a chance to grow "whole," which is another way of saying "holy."

"Worldly and carnal lusts." Lust stands here for uncontrolled desires. Worldly lusts evidently are those desires which have their origin over stimulated by material agencies: carnal lusts are those desires which have their origin nursed by the flesh, which is supposed to afford a throne room for the spirit, but which instead nourishes and cherishes itself, and seeks to provide for its own welfare, ease and comfort.

"May in all things.' This is a very genuine prayer which the Church puts into our mouths, and wants us to mean in our hearts. "All things" is a very sweeping statement. The weakness of our Christian religion lies in the fact that we Christians do not obey in all things." There is one little reservation we consciously or unconsciously make as we utter this prayer; and because of this mental reservation our prayers, and all our religious efforts are half-hearted.

"In all things obey Thy blessed will." Unfettered obedience; a whole-hearted following of the Blessed One! Isn't that a good New Year's program? And is it not wise for us to realize that whole-hearted obedience is going to involve cutting across a lot of petted ways of self-indulgence in material ease and sensuous living? The Church which does not teach her children to endure hardness as true soldiers of Jesus Christ cannot be true to her mission. She cannot be a missionary church: she cannot say this prayer with any other result than to make a hollow mockery of prayer and of religious life.

The Epistle. Rom. iv. 8.

Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin. Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision. And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also: and the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised. For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect.

The whole purpose of this day's Epistle is to teach us to distinguish between the necessary and the unnecessary, the essentials and the non-essentials in the practice of the Christian religion, so that men who are trying to follow God shall not become confused, and mistake means for ends. This is a very human and natural tendency, and today's Epistle comes at this time of the Christian year to put us on our guard. Emphasis is to be laid on the Babe and the Holy Family, rather than on the Inn and the Manger and the Shepherds. The visit of the Wise Men and their symbolic gifts must not confuse the mind and lead it from a consideration of the little scarred Boy in His Mother's arms, as the most important factor in that wayside drama.

Righteousness is the Keyword in this Epistle. The rites and ceremonies of the religious community in Old or New Testament history are valuable only in so far as they point to the righteousness of which they are to be made the sign and symbol. Those of us who hope to help the Church fulfill her mission, must bend every energy then to clarify the mind of man in this particular regard, and to show to all mankind that Jesus Christ was circumcised, because in Him Righteousness and Peace had kissed each other.

The heir of the world is the heir of all the ages. That heir is you, is me, is the other man—provided we each and everyone of us show that righteousness is not a lip sign but a life fact. And the Church will make headway with her mission when she can persuade men to let themselves be swayed by the scepter of righteousness, which is the scepter of the Son of God. So we bend the knee, so we worship, so we utilize all that art and beauty and skill can contribute, because we have learned, that they are means which will help us bring home to the soul of a man, that what God blesses, is the soul of a righteous man, a man who tries to bring all his thoughts and words and deeds under the scepter of righteousness or right.

The Church's mission is to take religion out of a code and put it into a life. Laws do not make right worth while: only life makes right worth while. Laws are not ends in themselves; the ten commandments are not ends in themselves; the rites and ceremonies are not ends in themselves—they are only means to help a man touch the Life which imparts righteousness. Therefore are they valuable, necessary, helpful, but we must ever remember that they, of and in themselves, cannot make "the promise" of any permanent effect.

The Gospel. St. Luke ii. 15.

And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the Shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us. And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger. And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds. But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them. And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child, his name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

"Let us go even unto the House of Bread." This is the Christians' invitation as they talk one with another. Every Christian should recall the recorded experience of our great spiritual forbear when he wrote for our admonition and learning that wonderful confession "Then thought I to understand these things, but it was too hard for me, until I went into the House of God." The House of Bread and the House of God should be identical in meaning. No House of God is really a House of God unless it is a House of Bread. After the true Bread came down from heaven Bethel the house of God, became Beth-lehem, the house of Bread. It may be a very humble house, but if in that house are gathered "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in Heaven" there also must be the Christ Child, and the rest of the Holy Family for "the same is my brother and my sister and my mother."

"They came with haste." Eagerness to know about Jesus has never gone unrewarded. Congregations should always hold themselves ready to make the Christ Life evident to the earnest seeker after God. No one coming to the House of Bread should find its doors locked. Locked Churches do two things—they discourage seekers after God, and they turn the House of Bread into a House of Stones.

"They returned glorifying and praising God.' Every Church service has failed if those who come, do not go away rejoicing over what they saw and heard within the House of Bread. Every one in the Church should feel the necessity laid upon him or her of making the Chris Child so evident in the family li that even the visitor should feel home. This homelike feeling is produced by a few pumphandl ple with artificial greetings, b natural atmosphere produced al earnestness. And moral ness only comes when p unconsciously that "in all are obeying the blessed Blessed One." Is that church you are trying church become?

"His Name was ca naming of a child i soul; it is a very rightly done, and arily, if ever, The name of a Mother Chu when for th quickly the teaching h ence, we we inte Christi such. ing o of J con te

---

THE SUPREMACY OF CHRISTMAS.

The Rev. William Porkess,

What a Christmas we witness this year! If we do not hear the Heavenly Host, announcing Good Tidings, we certainly catch, with eagerness, the voices of victory and peace. Triumph looms up before the world's gaze as never in the yesterdays. Not a circumscribed contest is it that now fires our souls, but rather a victory, deep and far-reaching. We see, conspicuously, the enthronement of freedom's lofty ideal, and in the scrap-heap of things that destroy we behold the corpse of the monstrous philosophy, "Might is Right." Clear then, as a bell, does the voice of triumph speak. And no less clearly do the sweet strains of peace captivate our spirits. Indeed, there is every promise of a well established calm supplanting the world's storm of hate and strife.

HE WINDOW OF THE FOUR MARYS.

(The large window with the four arys in Grace Church in New York ty is thus interpreted in a recent oem in the New York Times)

from Broadway's roar and din to peace of the sanctuary from the flaunting race of sin to the saintly face of Mary,
ary of the mothering heart, Mary,
sorrow-riven,
ary of the better part, and Mary,
much forgiven.

igh in their embrasure shrined, aur-
eoled with splendor, et at one with womankind, of loving mien and tender,
ary of the brooding eyes, Mary,
spent with weeping,
Mary, more than others wise, and
Mary, vigil-keeping.

Virgin, mother, wanton, wife, kin to every woman,
All that's known of mortal life, and of nature human,
Mary, mother sacrificed, Mary, grave-
clothes laying,
Mary, keeping holy tryst, and Mary,
shamed and praying.

Where the tides of life beat hard at the church's portal,
Pitying, they stand on guard, saint-
ed and immortal,
Mary of the mothering heart, Mary,
sorrow-riven,
Mary of the better part, and, Mary,
much forgiven.

No country is safe with its city in the hands of the enemy.

If Christianity fails in the city, it fails everywhere.

The world has no use for a religion which fails at the point of supremest importance.

The city must be cleansed, or like a mighty heart it will keep on pumping poison through every artery and vein of the body of our national life."
—C. E. Jefferson, D. D.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

NEW YORK LETTER

THE REVEREND JAMES SHEERIN.

We May Expect Startling and Rapid Ecclesiastical Changes.

As is happily so in other parts of the world, New York is hearing much that is new and encouraging by way of approaches to Church unity in a more permanent sense than federation. Men who hitherto opposed entangling ecclesiastical alliances, like Dr. Manning, rector of Trinity, or the well known author, Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, who describes himself as "a reactionary of the reactionaries," are now sharing a surprising willingness to write Protestant overtures, or to meet their advances more than half way.

Broad churchmen and low churchmen are at present showing less progressive eagerness in methods of mien than formerly in compromising high churchmen, especially those who have been enthusiastic war workers.

In such an atmosphere any forward movement is possible, and we may expect startling and rapid ecclesiastical changes in the near future. If Germany and Russia could change so suddenly in politics, why, men ask, may we not expect wonders of ecclesiastical change, even in the Roman Catholic policy?

Reflections on the War Work.

That unity of co-operation cannot be forced from without but must spring spontaneously from within was demonstrated in the recent war work campaign for the seven organizations doing social service in the Army and Navy.

Most people look upon the National administration's co-ordination of this great "drive" as a wise move, but enough people did not so consider it to make it rather difficult in certain quarters to make the plan succeed. The enthusiasts over the "united" method are easily aroused to indignation when any doubts are cast upon it, and they make charges of narrowness, bigotry, etc., but men and women who never were accused of sectarian bias found it hard to contribute or work for a fund that was to give millions of dollars to religious organizations of three favored denominations, while others were entirely ignored. If the principle was right, then the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, for example, or the Christian Science organizations, etc., etc., had as much right to a proportionate share of the fund as had the Knights of Columbus, the Jewish Welfare Workers, or the Salvation Army. Then, too, the people who hesitated to give freely claim that the Red Cross or the Y. M. C. A. already at work in such public service, in addition to a reasonable number of official chaplains, were enough recognized organizations without complicating the situation by adding others. Even the Y. M. C. A., if it was to be looked upon as only the expression of Protestantism, should never have been officially authorized to go into the field. Once begun, the method of official recognition was sure to lead to an endless series of demands of such quasi-communications, or licenses, and, as a matter of fact, the doubters say, the Knights of Columbus were primarily led into the work for the fear of Protestant influences through the Y. M. C. A. Why, then, they ask, should we as Protestants contribute to its support? There is also added to this query, sometimes, a feeling that the $50,000,000 or so that is to be the share of the Roman Catholics will easily be converted, in large part, into a permanent material endowment of Knights of Columbus lodges throughout the land, and thus equip an organization anything but friendly to Protestant workingmen. These are not pleasant reflections, but it may be best to face them and note the outcome.

An Enormous Armory Filled With Episcopalians.

There is probably no city in the country which could take an enormous armory and fill it with Episcopalians of a Sunday afternoon, even when all the parishes of the city cooperate. This is what New York did December 15th, and it did it from only about one twenty-fifth of its parishes, and, so far as one can hear, unaided by much preliminary advertising. The parishes concerned were St. George's, Ascension, Calvary, Grace, St. Mark's, and Holy Communion. All the rectors took part in the services, and the secretary of the treasury, Mr. G. McAdoo, and Lieut. Col. Chas. W. Whittlesay spoke, Bishop Greer pronouncing the blessing. The service was called "a great peace jubilee," and is the first public effort of a new Church movement in New York City, to be known as "The Associate Episcopal Parishes of Central Manhattan." Each parish has three members at the council, of which Mr. George Zabriskie of Calvary, is chairman, and Mr. Theodore H. Price, of St. George's, is secretary. The Churches of the Association are justly famous for institutional work and social service. If another parish were added it would be hard to find seven churches outside the Book of Revelations as worthy of praise for good works.

A Wonderful Meeting at the Metropolitan Opera House.

A wonderful meeting was held in the Metropolitan Opera House the night of December 17th. Bishop Burch opened it with prayer. Lessons were read by a Jewish Rabbi and a Greek priest. A Methodist, a Jew and a Roman Catholic Monsignor made long prayers; Presbyterians offered resolutions and made long speeches, and a Jewish choir, Roman Catholic choristers and a secular musical club sang sacred music composed by Jews, Episcopalians, and Roman Catholics. The service was in celebration of the capture of Jerusalem by an army composed of English, Australians, Jews, Irish, etc. It was a fitting honor for an event of historic glory.

INDIANAPOLIS ITEMS.

Thanksgiving Day was observed with more than usual honor this year as connected with the victory over Germany. The Bishop sent a request for such observance throughout the diocese. In Indianapolis, after early celebrations in all of the parishes, a joint service was held in Christ Church at midday. Bishop Francis voiced the message of the day with marked emphasis. Assisting in the Chancel were Rev. Messrs. Brown, Hanley, White and Loring. The congregation completely filled the building. The choir was composed of singers from the several churches.

The Rev. H. R. Hole of Columbus was ordained to the priesthood in All Saints' Cathedral upon the Second Sunday in Advent, by the Bishop. Rev. H. W. Wood of New Castle presented a fitting sermon and Dean White presented the Candidate.

The Indianapolis Clericus met in November as the guest of the Rev. James D. Stanley and in December with Dean White. Upon the latter occasion Rev. Mr. Stanley gave an admirable paper upon "Some After Effects of the War."

Rev. Willis D. Engle has completely recovered from the severe operation which he underwent in July and is able to take up work again. No clergyman in the diocese has served longer or more faithfully. He is our chief historian of the past in Indiana.

The Board of Trustees have purchased property at the corner of Meridan and Thirty-third Streets, formerly occupied by the Baptists. There is a building upon it which will make a useful mission chapel. It is expected that services will be conducted there in the near future under the auspices of the Bishop.

The Rev. Henry Scott Miller has taken charge of St. John's Church, Crawfordsville, where Rev. Horace W. Wood has been so successful. At present Rev. Mr. Wood is acting as Vicar at St. James' Church, Newcastle.

PERSONALS.

The address of the Rev. John R. Matthews, formerly of Barnesville, Ohio, has been changed St. Paul's Rectory, Saltville, Va.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Quin, Bishop Coadjutor of Texas, suffered an attack of the influenza and was compelled to cancel all his engagements for a period of two weeks.

The Very Rev. Dr. Hicks, dean of the Cathedral at Spokane, Wash., who spent several months in France serving as a Chaplain of the Red Cross, expected to reach home in time to take the Christmas services at the Cathedral.

The Rev. F. C. Sherman of St. Paul's Church, Akron, Ohio, was recently reelected chairman of the Akron Chapter of the Red Cross Society, which has a membership of 85,000 adults.

The Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D. D., will complete on next Monday, the 30th inst., the thirtieth anniversary of his rectorship of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C. Dr. McKim is one of the best known clergymen in the American Church.

The Rev. Charles D. Lafferty has accepted a unanimous call from the vestry of Silver Spring Parish, Washington, succeeding the late Rev. Dr. George H. McGrew. He will begin his work in this parish on January 1st.

The Rev. Willis B. Hawk entered upon his new duties December 1st as Rector of St. George's Church, Central Falls, R. I. On St. Andrew's Day he ended his work as Rector of Trinity Church, Wilford, and of St. Paul's, Hopkinton, Mass., Diocese of Eastern Massachusetts.

The Rev. W. H. Mayers has been appointed civilian Chaplain at Naval Proving Grounds, Lower Station, Virginia. The following civilian chaplains have resigned: The Rev. W. H. Willard-Jones from Camp Perry, the Rev. F. W. Pratt from Ft. Bliss, the Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney from Camp Hancock, the Rev. John G. Currier from Camp Colt, the Rev. Narwood Sturtevant from Camp Logan.

The Rev. George McClellan Fiske, D. D., tendered his resignation as rector of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I., to take effect December 1st. The Rev. Carlos E. Jones, the senior curate, has been requested by the vestry to take full charge of the parish for the present.

MEMORIAL SERVICE AT DULUTH.

A special Memorial service was held at St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn., Dr. A. W. Ryan, rector, on December 8th, primarily for the six members of the parish who had made the supreme sacrifice, but was broadened in scope to include those who lost their lives in the awful fire of October 12th, and for the members who had passed away during the epidemic when no public funerals could be held.

The service was one of great beauty and the muscial setting was wonderful and included the following memorial hymn, written by the organist and choirmaster, A. F. M. Custace, and sung to 292 (1st tune.)

Lord, we thank Thee for fond memories ....
Of our loved ones passed away;
Loved Ones, who have gone before us
To the Land of Endless Day.
Through the fires of pain and anguish,
Like pure gold, refined and tried,
Purged from every earthborn passion
They in Paradise abide.

Lord, we thank Thee for our Warriors,
Who, on many a bloodstained field,
In the air, or on the ocean,
Were content their lives to yield.
They their all have freely given
In sublimest sacrifice.
Now, Thy perfect peace enjoying,
They repose in Paradise.

Lord, for all our Saints we praise Thee,—
(Though our prayers with tears we blend,)—
Father, Mother, Sister, Brother,
Wife or Husband, Child or Friend,
We would fain recall our dear ones,
Restive 'neath the chastening rod,
They for us are calmly waiting
In the Paradise of God.

Lord, accept our prayers and praises:
Bid us cease from selfish plaints;
Help us to be brave like soldiers;
Make us patient as Thy Saints.
So may we, when life is ended,
From all pain and sorrow free,
With our Loved Ones reunited,
Rest in Paradise with Thee.

The following are the names of the members of St. Paul's for whom this service was held:

Mrs. Elizabeth Birney Williams, August J. Frey, Mrs. Gladys Reynolds Frey, Mrs. Clara Hector Walsh, and two children, Maj. Clyde E. Prudden, M. D., Lieut. E. Porter Alexander, Sngt. Charles A. Campbell, Private Earle S. Haire, Private David G. Wisted, Private Lloyd E. Le Duc.

The service flag with its 63 stars, six of them gold, was carried by four soldiers to the altar during the playing of Chopin's Funeral March. After the prayer for these men who had given their lives that we might be forever free, the exquisite arrangement of Taps by Mr. Custace was sung by the quartet accompanied by the organ and a bugle in the rear of the nave.

As the Duluth Herald said: "This was the climax of the service. The spirit of lofty thanksgiving in which sorrow was forgotten in the glory of service was the keynote of the remainder of the service, culminating in the singing of 'The Star Spangled Banner' and followed by the Recessional 'The Son of God Goes Forth to War.'" Dr. Ryan's text was from Hebrews XIII, 1-3.

THE ADVANCE PROGRAM OF THE B. S. A.

Great eagerness is shown by the Bishops and other clergy of the Church in the new Advance Program of the Brotherhood. Rectors in all parts of the country are making inquiries at the national headquarters regarding the revival and establishment of Chapters, and a large correspondence is being carried on between the central office and all parts of the Church. Already a number of field secretaries have been engaged and are at work. Mr. Percy J. Knapp and Mr. Frank C. DuMoulin, two of the newly appointed field secretaries, have now been on the Brotherhood staff several weeks. Their first work has been in the Diocese of Pennsylvania and Harrisburg. They have been received with great cordiality by Bishops and Rectors. These two men are now opening up the opportunities to be found in the Diocese of Connecticut with New Haven as a center, and a number of Chapters are in process of formation. Mr. Gordon M. Reese has been engaged for special duty among the boys of the Church. At the present time, he is located in Michigan with Detroit as a center for the investigation and establishment of the boys' work in that Diocese. To augment the efforts of the field secretaries, Mr. Shelby, general secretary, and his associates in the national office, are being used in many meetings and conferences and as speakers in the churches, in promotion of the new Brotherhood plan. Mr. Shelby was recently present at the Second Synod held at Syracuse, where he addressed the meeting of the Synod as a whole and also a luncheon attended by many of its delegates. He has addressed luncheon meetings in Boston and Wilkes-Barre and a number of Assembly meetings have also had a visit. Mr. Spencer and Mr. Randal have also made visits in the Dioceses of Delaware, Connecticut, New York Central New York and Western Massachusetts.

The outlook for the Brotherhood financially is bright. A large budget is needed and is being successfully raised. In each Province wardens have been appointed selected from among the best available representative men, irrespective of membership in the Brotherhood. Through a personal canvass on the part of the wardens and by the impact of strong presentations made at carefully organized luncheon meetings, the Advance Program has been given wide and thoughtful publicity among the leading men of the Church.

When the Advance Program was announced, striking commendations relative to its various points were received from forty-five of the Bishops of the Church, indicating a keen interest in and an appreciation of the extensive plans of the Brotherhood. The letters all show that the Bishops regard the Program of the Brotherhood as one in which the entire Church should be vitally interested. As an aid to those not familiar with the seven objectives of this Program they are re-stated here: First, to create in every parish a service group of men and boys who will be of genuine value to the rector. Second, to make personal prayer and service a living factor in every parish. Third, to make practical the Threefold Endeavor in every parish: increasing Church attendance, men's Bible classes, men's corporate Communions. Fourth, to promote the devotional life of the family through the practice of family prayer. Fifth, to bring fathers, older brothers and kinsmen of enlisted men into practical and inspiring relationship to Christian service. Sixth, to show young men with increasing clearness the vision of the sacred ministry, serving as officers in Christ's army. Seventh, to strengthen the Brotherhood's Junior Department by training and actively enlisting boys of every parish in Christ's army.

As an example of the inspiring letters received from the Bishops, we are glad to print herewith that of Bishop Moreland, of the Diocese of Sacramento. This letter sums up in a very interesting way the various phases of the Advance Program and the writer's view-point regarding them. It says: "Godspeed to the Brotherhood as it organizes for an advance all along the line. The plan proposed goes down to the vital, fundamental things of the Christian life. Picture in every parish a group of valiant men, going over the top in every enterprise for Christ. See them bringing in prisoners with hearts surrendered at every service. Among those are young men who have seen God in the trenches, their fathers and kinsfolk, all alive with the new spirit of love and sacrifice. See the early Communions thronged, the Bible classes full of adults, the House of God crowded with eager listeners hanging upon the preaching of the Eternal Christ. Look into the homes and see parents and children kneeling about the family altar, all heads bowed in gratitude to God at meals and family prayer. Following the inspiring example of the men is an army of boys. From this consecrated host, as from those who have come out of the furnace of war, will be selected men who have seen God with the eye of the soul, who henceforth will be happy only as they preach and glorify Him. What a glorious Program! God help the Brotherhood to make it a reality!"

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Witness

OFFICES OF PUBLICATION:
Hobart, Indiana, and Chicago, Illinois, 6219 Cottage Grove Ave.

A National Weekly Church Newspaper for the people. Intended to be instructive and devotional rather than controversial. A plain paper, aiming to reach the plain person with plain facts, unbiased by partisan and sectional views.

BOARD OF EDITORS:
IRVING P. JOHNSON ..... Editor-in-Chief
JOHN C. SAGE ..... Associate Editor
CHARLES J. SHUTT ..... Managing Editor
6219 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago.
Telephone Midway 3935
To whom all exchanges and articles for publication should be sent.

L. W. APPLEGATE, Hobart, Indiana, Publisher.

Contributing Editors:
George P. Atwater, Grace W. Johnson, Francis S. White, Henry J. Mikell, James Wise, James Sheerin

ADVERTISING RATES:
Three dollars an inch, each insertion.
All advertisements next to reading matter.
Rates raised each three months, according to actual circulation.

DISCOUNTS:
10 per cent for three months; 15 per cent for six months; 20 per cent for twelve months.

Entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Hobart, Indiana, and application made for transmission through the mails as second-class matter in the post-office at Chicago, Illinois.

EDITORIAL

MICROBES AND CHRISTIAN COURAGE.

May I be pardoned if I say a few words on the subject of the timidity of modern Christians?

The Christian Church was founded in the midst of many dangers. It required courage both moral and physical to enroll oneself in the company of the faithful.

One had to fear not only the reproach of one's worldly friends, but also the assaults of the wild beasts in the arena.

Primitive Christians bore witness to faith, in the face of lions; modern Christians are often afraid of microbes.

Not that one should deliberately seek danger in either case. Self-martyrdom is not a virtue; but that one should be calm in the face of danger incurred in the line of duty.

And this courage is not confined to those brave boys who faced shells and shrapnel. We have our line to maintain; our trenches to hold; our attacks to repulse.

* * * *

One of the most frequent attacks that one meets today is directed against the chalice.

I have no complaint against the use of intinction in time of epidemic, nor in places where contagious disease is prevalent. There is a psychological reason for this that may justify it, which the Church has recognized to a certain extent.

But to imply that our Lord instituted a sacrament which modern [illegible] to public health is to reflect upon [illegible]y facts.

[illegible]non law to drain the cup after each [illegible] find a better insurance risk than [illegible]lace the clergy as among the extra- [illegible]uld certainly do so, if draining the [illegible]r calculations upon mortality tables. [illegible]y find it expedient at some future [illegible]n of denying the cup to the laity, [illegible] have it so.

[illegible]ty because we believe that there is [illegible]reflection upon the wisdom of the [illegible]up, and blessed it, and gave it them [illegible] one have implicit confidence. [illegible], but, then, I prefer that kind of a [illegible] who are fortunate enough to pos-

* *

[illegible]ic.

[illegible]my which is to bear its witness

[illegible]ality in bearing such witness. [illegible]tment will carry us into places of

[illegible] of some one dying of the plague,

[illegible]in which officers alone shall run

[illegible]urches during the plague any more [illegible] such a time.

[illegible] customers to go to the bank in [illegible] do all the bank's business through the mails, but the officials of the bank should be there in person.

It would be a dreary plague in which every business house was closed.

It is a dreary world, spiritually, in which all churches are closed.

It may be necessary to regulate the number of people who at any one time may attend Church for the public safety, but the officials should be there at any rate.

The place should be kept open. Its influence should penetrate the community by the consciousness that God's altar is not desolate.

* * * *

I presented this view to a body of Protestant ministers recently, and was amazed to find that they attached little or no importance to the fact that "where two or three are gathered together, there Christ is."

They attributed my views to sacradotalism and I am afraid that I attributed theirs to a leaven of pagan philosophy.

It is the function of the Church to bear witness, and when you close the Church, you muzzle this witnessing function.

It is bad for the people to feel that they can go to the store and the bank and can under no circumstances go to the House of God.

I question very much the constitutional right of the State to close the Church door; I do not question their right to regulate the persons who may attend at one time.

The two questions should not be confused.

The one strikes at the right of the Church to function; the other at the method in which it may function.

I presume that I may be classed as a conscientious objector (not a popular phrase), but then I would rather go to jail than to close the door of the Church at the command of the State.

For if in the division of the Church and State, the Church may not dictate to the State, so by our very constitution, the State may not suppress the Church in its power of function.

There is a point where the State has no right to operate.

It may reduce my congregation to two people; it cannot deprive me of my right to exercise my functions as a priest.

* * * *

But I started out to speak of the excessive caution of a good many Christian people.

Not only in the timidity which they display in times of physical danger but also the timidity with which they put forth the claims of the Church in the face of public opinion.

The Church does not need your apology, for in these days of ecclesiastical confusion she stands for the primitive faith, constitutional order and reverence for sacred things. She does not advertize her piety nor boast of her superiority.

She stands quietly in the midst of shifting public opinion for those things which Christ ordained and which she hands on to those who seek.

She lacks in numbers but not in influence, in emotional expression but not in real sympathy; in noise but not in power.

And she ought to command from her children more defense and less criticism; more service and less patronage; more devotion and less apathy.

She is more worthy of us than we are of her, and she sheds a greater luster in our lives than we can possibly add to hers.

Let us then be courageous in her defense and more than generous in her support.

She wins her way by the quiet adhesion to her mission and, if her children will rise to her defense and labor for her mission, she will win her way because of her own fitness.

Wherever I have seen the Church with a constituency that believed in her ways and served her courageously and faithfully, there have I seen a Church all of whose ways were pleasantness, and all of whose paths were peace.

The element that determines the success or failure of the Church in any particular locality is this very element of those who, having the courage of her convictions, devote their talents, money and energy to the service of Christ's Church.

REFLECTIONS ON THE ACTS

(Conclusion.)

We have been studying the first two chapters of the Acts of the Apostles in order that we might see the essential character of Christianity as the Apostles received it from their Master.

We have done this because we feel that all the essential elements that go to make up the tree will be found in the acorn.

What is in the acorn will develop into the branches and leaves and fruit of the tree. An acorn cannot produce a pine tree nor can a pine-cone produce an oak.

That which Christ sowed in the soil of those primitive Christians will spring up and bear leaves and fruit in accordance with the character of the seed.

In our summary we discussed the four elements which formed the background of our Christian heritage.

They were (a) Its Hebrew preparation (b) The Life and Teaching of Christ (c) The Apostolic contribution under the influence of the Pentecostal Spirit (d) That which became the practice and usage of the primitive Christians.

Turning from these beginnings to modern claims we find that certain principles thus fundamentally established have been entirely ignored, until the Kingdom of Christ has been broken up into innumerable small principalities, some of the absolute monarchy type and others Bolsheviki in their attitude toward corporate solidarity.

It may be instructive to consider these violations of the laws of continuity and unity which characterizes these Balkan states of the Christian Church.

* * *

The first error consists in thinking that by making a copy of a thing, you possess the thing itself—this isn't true of paintings, nor poems nor governments nor societies nor the Church of Christ.

If certain African colonies like Liberia, should succeed in studying the constitution of the U. S. A. in exactly duplicating all of its essential features the result would not be the U. S. A., but a copy thereof.

To imagine that by studying the violate the laws of common sense.

At its best it is but a copy, and bears the same relation to the original that Liberia bears to the U. S. A.

* * *

Another prevalent idea is that the Reformation was a reconstruction of the Church.

It was an assertion of personal liberty and the overthrow of many crying abuses and in its destructive work was most valuable, but it was also a destruction of the institution that had been founded by Christ and perpetuated by disciples.

It was the keen mind of Erasmus, who was no friend of Papal abuses, which exposed the danger. "One cannot clean a dirty vase" said Erasmus, "by first smashing it into bits."

The law of certainty required that a reformation shall at least preserve the essential elements of the institution that it undertakes to preserve. It was the violation of this principle that precipitated the great Civil war. "The Union must be preserved," was not an empty sentiment, but it meant that certain principles, forms and emblems must be preserved inviolate, and although the Confederate States of America was the same kind of an institution identically as the United States of America, yet those who fought to preserve the Union prevented our great nation from becoming another Central America with its petty warring states.

* * *

A third error which has sprung from these that I have mentioned, which has further disrupted the continuity and unity of the Church is the recrudescence of Gnosticism, that early heresy which denied the reality of matter.

Christian Science had its rise and received its impetus from the fundamental ideas of Protestantism.

Protestants have been forced, by their lack of organization, to minimize the value of organization.

They have refused to attach any reverence to church buildings, have attached small value to sacraments, have negatived the value of ordination and a ministry bound together by organization; Protestants having despised the Body of Christ, which is the Church, have prepared the public for regarding all material things as nonessential.

That the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, seems to have lost significance among them.

So long, however, as we are human the body is as essential part of the man as is the soul and the resurrection of the body is the only possible restoration of human nature after death.

Like the Bolsheviki, in their effort to spiritualize the body politic, they have destroyed it, and paved the way for all sorts of wild cults based on the idea that spiritual things are the only real things, forgetting that all life with which man is conversant exists in an organic form, whether the life of a man, a nation or the Church.

In the face of these three errors, viz.:

(1) That we perpetuate an institution by copying it.

(2) That the Church was destroyed and reconstructed at the Reformation.

(3) That the external organization of the Church is not essential to its preservation;

the Christian Church has lost its force because it has destroyed its cohesion.

* * *

The primitive Church had few influential members, very little money, no great membership; yet it accomplished things because it acted as a unit and preserved its essential features.

It presented a solid front against its enemies. No plan of reunion of Christendom can ever avail which does not restore to universal use the element of continuous and unbroken authority as contained in a ministry ordained in accordance with the universal custom of the primitive Church, for without such Apostolic ordination, there is no other principle but that of individualism which can ever present a united front to any enemy either in the state or nation.

With that element individualism becomes a dynamic force, but without it the Christian Evangel is nothing but a guerilla warfare.

It is to refresh the minds of our readers upon this fundamental truth that we have made a study of these two chapters in The Acts of the Apostles.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CURRENT EVENTS IN THE AMERICAN CHURCH

A debt of $250 on current expenses has been cancelled and the rector's salary increased by the Church of the Holy Faith, Santa Fe, N. M.

Bishop Adams of the Diocese of Easton, although eighty-six years of age, has kept his many appointments the past year and frequently preached three times on a Sunday.

A rousing patriotic service was held at St. Andrew's Church, Ft. Lupton, Col., on Thanksgiving Day. The President's proclamation was read, the national hymn sung, and a good sermon preached by the rector, the Rev. C. H. Brady.

The eithty-third anniversary of the birth of Phillips Brooks was observed at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, on December 13th. The Rev. Dr. Drown of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge, gave the address and the service was conducted by Dean Rousmaniere and the Rev. Dr. Mann.

The Church Home for Convalescents, 51 West 4th Ave., Denver, Col., is most anxious to have all who are interested visit the Home and see how attractive it is during the holiday season. Through the kindness of the Lectern League the living room has been beautifully refurnished in a most artistic and cheerful way. The annual Christmas party was held in this lovely room. The Sisters are asked each year to come and bring the children to see the tree and a gift is provided for all in the Home.

Monday, December 16th, the Pittsburgh Clerical Union met at Grace Church, Pittsburgh, as the guests of the rector, the Rev. William Porkess. The gathering proved to be one of the largest known, twenty-seven of the clergy being present. An excellent "Victory" luncheon was served in the rectory, where all were conveniently accommodated. In the afternoon a most able and practical essay was read by the Rev. C. C. Durkee, rector of St. Thomas' Memorial Church, Oakmont, on, "The Use of Laymen in the Church." A good discussion of the subject followed. The Clerical Union began its session with the celebration of the Holy Communion at 11:30 a. m.

During the influenza epidemic, that wrought such havoc in camp and home alike, the secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew were assigned to very important work, in virtually every camp in the country, by the camp authorities. The personal service program of the Brotherhood was never called upon to better advantage. Every Brotherhood secretary, trained for personal, individual work, found his hands full, and also opportunity to show other workers the way. The quarantine regulations forbid gatherings of any sort, and the worker who knew how to swing the crowd, was in many instances lost, when he was called upon to handle individual cases. Not so the Brotherhood secretary, this personal work was his forte. In some of the camps, the Y. M. C. A. authorities asked the Brotherhood to direct the hospital work of their secretaries.

Institution of Rector and Consecration of New Chapel

The institution of the Rev Richard Wilkinson, D. D., as rector of St. John's Church, Montgonmery, Alabama, and the consecration of the beautiful new chapel, by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Charles M. Beckwith, Bishop of Alibama, took place on Sunday, November 24th. The Rev. Dr. Richard Lightbourne McCready preached the sermon and was also the preacher at the evening service when the rector presented a class to the Bishop for Confirmation. A series of meetings and services were held during the week in connection with the two important events in the life of the parish, including a smoker to the men of the parish and their friends to meet the rector, an open meeting over which the Senior Warden, Dr. B. J. Baldwin, presided, with a program of fifteen minute addresses and music. The general subject for the evening was ,"St. John's and Her New Responsibilities—Will She be Able to Meet Them?" On another evening "The Church at Her Task—Who is Doing What is Being Done?" was discussed under the special topics, "The Women," "The Men," "The Sunday School," "The Goodfellowship Club," "The Purpose of It All." Mr. Nash Read presided. Thanksgiving Day coming in the same week, services were held in the morning and in the evening. Governor Henderson presided in the evening, when addresses were given by Major-General Holbrook and Judge Henry D. Clayton. Among the special guests were soldiers of Camp Sheridan and surrounding military posts, and men's organizations of the city. St. John's Parish gave an "At Home" to her friends from 8 to 11 o'clock on the evening of the 29th ult. The beautiful chapel consecrated is the generous gift of Miss Alice H. Farely, one of St. John's devoted members, in memory of her husband, Mr. John J. Farely. St. John's is one of the old historic churches and is making a splendid showing under its new rector, although the work has been somewhat retarded by the influenza epidemic.

Parochial Mission at Fulton, N. Y.

A Parochial Mission was held in All Saints' Church, Fulton, N. Y., December 8-15. Sister Julia of the Order of St. Margaret gave Mission talks to women every afternoon to large audiences in the Parish House. Later in the afternoons the rector, the Rev. George T. Gruman and Sister Julia, conducted a Mission for children, which was largely attended by the children of the town as well as by the children of the parish. There were two celebrations of the Holy Communion daily. The first celebration held at 6 a. m., was for the convenience and benefit of the mill workers and other working people. There was mission preaching every evening and hearty and well attended services. The rector preached the sermon at the beginning of the Mission and on the folfowing evenings the preachers were the Very Rev. H. C. Staunton, of Binghampton, the Rev. Dr. Gesner of Oswego, the Rev. Christian A. Roth of Syracuse, the Rev. George M. Brewin of Oswego, and the Rev. Dr. H. H. Hadley of Syracuse. The subjects considered were, "God," "Sin," "Business and Religion," "Home and Religion," "Racial Heritics," "Personal Service." A simple choral Eucharist was held on Saturday for the children. Crosses and cards were given to the children at the close of the service.

Ordination of the Er-Prince of New Zealand.

On St. Andrew's Day a very unusual event took place in Little Rock, Arkansas, in the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. Dr. William Edward de Claybrook, the Ex-Prince of New Zealand, who is a full blooded Maori. He is the eldest son of the late King Guillermo Eldabo DeBarroarryo (William Edward de Claybrook) and was born in New Zeland on August 5th, 1870. At the age of 14 his father rebelled against the English government, and being overpowered, was taken prisoner and banished to St. Helena, where later he died in the house in which Napoleon passed away.

The entire royal family, consisting of the mother, three brothers and a sister were exiled and allowed to settle in France. Later the subject of this sketch was sent to the United States by the London Missionary Society and educated at the University of California. From there he went to the Roger Williams College at Nashville, Tenn., where he took his degree of B. A. He returned to England where he was made superintendent of Missions by the London Missionary Society and spent four years in its service in Africa and other fields. Returning to this country he entered the regular minsitry of the Baptist denomination and was for four years the pastor of Zion Baptist Church, Denver, Col., the largest colored congregation in the West. In 1900 he accepted a commission as interpreter of five languages in the Philippines which position he filled for eight years. He then went to Pekin, China, where he acted as Chinese interpreter for two years and returning again to this country he was called as pastor of the Metropolitan Baptist Church at Kansas City, Kans., where he served two years, but on acount of poor health he resigned and took charge of the Zion Mission at Vancouver, B. C.

In January, 1917, he came to Arkansas, where Bishop Winchester discovered him and brought him into the Church. He was placed in care of Archdeacon Johnson of Little Rock, to prepare for the Ministry and was ordered deacon May 29th, 1917, and placed in charge of St. Mary's Church, Hot Springs, Ark., where he worked and studied under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Lloyd.

He was ordained priest at St. Philip's Church, Little Rock, on November 30th, 1918, by Bishop Winchester, assisted by Bishop Demby, Archdeacon Johnson, Rev. Samuel E. Wells and the Rev. Walter E. Bentley, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Brooklyn, and temporarily in charge of Christ Church, Little Rock.

The Rev. Mr. de Claybrook received the degree of D. D. from the University of China on May 19th, 1908.

Cleveland Parish Favors Prohibition.

St. John's Parish, Cleveland, O., took a decided stand in favor of prohibition prior to the November election. "Our vestry are unanimous in their advocacy of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution of the United States," says St. John's Parish Leaflet, "and for the Ohio legislative enactment endorsing the same—not only during the war, but, like the International League of Peace, for all time. Let this be our Christmas gift to our boys when they come home. Some of our dioceses have been a little timid in endorsing the prohibition movement, but we succeeded in securing a favorable vote for bone dry at our last Ohio Diocesan Convention, and we again remind our readers that at the Annual Diocesan Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Diocese of Ohio, held in Cleveland May 14, a strong resolution favoring national prohibition was presented by the Rev. F. B. Avery, D. D., Rector of St. John's Church, and adopted by a large majority.

The Hon. U. L. Marvin, ex-Judge of the Appellate Court, ably advocated the adoption of the resolution, in order that the Church might no longer suffer from the stigma that she is not interested in public moral issues. He believed that this was a real moral issue, and desired to place the Church on record. And we made the record by a big majority."

Brotherhood Call to War Service.

The Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is advised from the office of the Chief of Staff, in Washington, that there will be a million men in the home camps for at least a year. These men will come in large numbers from overseas, and during the slow process of demobilization will be in greater need of service than ever before.

Benjamin F. Finney, chief secretary of the Brotherhood's Army and Navy work, states that the Brotherhood's plan is to remain in the field for the coming year at the fullest possible strength. Not only are all the old secretaries to be retained, but now secretaries are being recruited for this work which has called already, more than seventy consecrated laymen from secular fields.

The call to laymen to enter this field is imperative. They will be assured of no curtailment of plans for at least a year and what is to transpire after that year is a matter yet to be worked out.

The Deparment sent to every Churchman in the service, on its lists, a Christmas letter and an attractive Christmas card. The card is of celluloid and shows a picture of the Nativity of Our Blessed Savior and has the following verse:

On Earth Peace, Good Will to Men.

Only through Me! . . . The clear high call comes pealing
Above the thunders of the battle plain:
Only through Me, shall earth have peace again.

On the reverse side of the card is a calendar for the coming year.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS

What the Leaders are Saying on Subjects of Present Day Interest.

A Glorious Page in the History of Our Church.

"The record of the quiet heroism which our Civilian Chaplains and Secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew ministered during the influenza epidemic," says Bishop Reese, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Church War Commission, "is one of the glorious pages in the history of our Church, and if our Chaplains had not been in the camps this work would not have been done."

A Peace Flag Suggested.

"Because men yearn for the ideal rather than the real they seek symbols which refer from the known to the unknown," says Miss Gertrude Darlow in the Churchman and Church Messenger of Southern California. "Of these emblems which interpret the spiritual to the intellectual there is none more noble (save only the Red Cross) than the flag of the nation, which is identified with all its hopes and aspirations. From the free peoples of the world arises, today, an ardent aspiration toward true and lasting peace. This desires and deserves expression, and should find it in a flag—in a Peace Flag—to stream side by side with the banner of each race.

It should be earned as a precious privilege, invested with solemnity, and permitted as permanent possession only to those nations who 'do justly and love mercy.'

For the design a circle of stars is suggested, that in the evolution of our new earth, the majestic words of Joy may be fulfilled anew. 'The morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy.'"

Hope of the Future Bound Up With the Gospel.

The Rev. Dr. Wolcott, rector of Trinity Church, Highland Park, Ill., in a forceful editorial on "Victory and After," published in the December number Trinity Church Bulletin, says, in part:

No other great teacher ever said as our Lord did, "I am among you as one that serveth," and "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many." That is the keynote of the Gospel.

And so the hope of the future so far as public peace and domestic tranquillity and happiness is concerned is bound up with the teaching of the Christian Gospel of good will. There will be wars until the idea of the brotherhood of men under the fatherhood of God prevails through all the world. It is after all a missionary enterprise.

People do not often think of this when they are asked to help the cause of Missions. We have cheerfully given billions of money and millions of men to win this war for democracy. Now that the military victory is won are we going to stop giving and working and run the serious risk of losing the fruits of victory?

A mere fraction of what has been spent in this war would go far to make the whole war Christian. A corresponding enthusiasm among our people to advance the cause of Christ would insure the success of that effort in a single generation.

Think what it would mean if these thousands of our best young men instead of exhausting themselves in the effort to become rich, devoted themselves enthusiastically to the cause of the public welfare here in our own country and wherever else such effort is needed, teaching the ignorant, reforming the vicious, uplifting the unfortunate and promoting the welfare of all. What it would mean if they took the money and built schools and colleges and hospitals in the backward, non-christian countries, if they taught the millions in China and Africa and India by example as well as by precept.

God's kingdom will never come nor His will be done on earth until we go to work and get it done, and we will catch the vision and begin to realize that the work is worth doing and that it is about the only work that is really worth doing.

Think of this when you are asked to help the Church's great cause of Missions. Think of it when you are tempted to give to God for the evangelization of the world only so much as you would give to the sleeping car porter or to the waiter who serves you at dinner.

Dr. Mann of Boston on The Peace Conference.

"We are looking forward to the Peace Conference with high hope," said the Rev. Dr. Mann of Trinity Church, Boston, at Britain's thanksgiving service. "We feel that at that Peace Conference there must be a determined effort to organize this world politically so that it shall never again go back to the old days of mutual suspicions and jealously, and of increased armaments on every side. And so we all pray God, as we have today in a sense, that those who shall gather around the council table may be given the vision, and the wisdom, and the moral courage, and the mutual respect and forbearance which shall make possible at last that great League of Nations. And to that council table it seems to me that the English and American representatives go with a priceless contribution. Other nations have their characteristics, but somehow there has been left to the English-speaking peoples the theory of government—not as a theory but a thing tested by practice and by experience—a theory which shall combine the largest possible liberty for the individual with the common good and freedom—that has slowly come down from precedent to precedent—no theory that is useless because it has not been sufficiently tried, but a practical government, which every race that has come under it has found to meet its ideals and its desires.

"And so long as this new-found recognition of our common unity—our common aim—our common destiny persist, so long it seems to me the mightiest safeguard for the future peace of the world has been erected. More than all else, as I look forward through the years, I look to this new sympathy—this new affection—this new mutual good-will—between the British Empire and the United States—the strongest sefeguard for the peace, the welfare, and the happiness of the world."

General Allenby An Extraordinary Man.

Commissioner Finley gives high praise to "General Sir Edward Allenby, the man who later captured the whole Turkish Palestine Army, is an extraordinary man—not only a military man, but a student deeply interested in the historic background of the country. Imagine a commander of a great army spending a whole night with an American visitor pouring over the Bible and a standard historical work on the Holy Land, refreshing his mind as to the spots of greatest interest in the region. This is what General Allenby did. We spent a memorable night in discussion of the landmarks of the Bible, and I mapped out many pilgrimages which I later took.

"General Allenby's assistants, the men who are now administering the various districts, are picked from England's best. Many of them are men without military training, but they are just the kind of men I imagine Christendom would like it to be represented by. The Jerusalem district was then under the Governorship of Colonel Storrs, son of Dean Storrs, of Rochester Cathedral, and formerly Secretary to Earl Kitchener. He speaks Arabic and Hebrew fluently, understands the peculiarity of the natives, and dressing as they do, seems almost one of them. The Moslems, high and low, appear to completely trust in him, and the most cordial relations exist between him and the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, the head of the Arab Moslems."

Commissioner Finley said that although Palestine now holds only 600,000, the land was sufficient to support a population of from 3,000,-

(Continued on page 7)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BOARD OF MISSIONS ACTIVITIES

Called in Extraordinary Session to Consider the Serious Financial Situation.

The regular meeting of the Board of Missions was held in the Church Missions House, New York, on December 11th, 1918. As noted last month this was called in Extraordinary Session to consider the very serious financial situation facing the missionary work of the Church. An unusually large attendance was present as notice of this matter had been sent to all members in a personal letter from the President. It was noted that the Second, Third, Fifth and Seventh Provinces were represented in their full membership. The Fourth Province had two of its members present; Bishop Cheshire was unable to be at the meeting on account of illness. Of the 23 elected by the General Convention, 17 were present, including the President and Treasurer. Three of the Board's members are now in France: the Bishops of Mississippi and Rhode Island, and the Rev. Dr. Miel of Hartford.

The order of the day was the consideration of the Treasurer's report. This showed that $556,898.54 is still needed this month to complete the apportionment. In addition to this we will need $281,858.05 to cover the obligations of the Board to January 1st, already incurred. This makes a total of $838,756.59 needed by the Board to close the year, free from debt.

This report engaged the most earnest consideration of the Board. The discussion was finally summed up in a resolution offered by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mann of Boston in which he suggested that a telegram be sent to each Bishop of this Church stating the condition of the treasury and urging every possible effort to raise the amount necessary to cover the deficit: this telegram to be signed by a committee of the Board. Dr. Mann's suggestion was carried unanimously and the Chair appointed the Bishop of Newark, the Rev. Dr. Mann and Mr. Mortimer Matthews as that committee. In accordance with this action a night letter was sent to every Bishop as follows:

"Treasurer's report shows eight hundred thirty-eight thousand dollars required to meet appropriations for the year. Of this deficit five hundred fifty-six thousand dollars due to failure of dioceses to meet apportionment and one hundred ninety-three thousand dollars due to increased rate of Chinese exchange. This wire goes to every Bishop. Will you inform by night letter at Board's expense all your Parishes, requesting special offerings be made before January 1st, perhaps on Christmas Day, and transmitted this month to the Treasurer of the Board. Missionary work of the Church faces serious condition and the Board appeals to Bishops to arouse the Church to prompt and generous action.

For the Board:
Right Rev. Edwin S. Lines,
Rev. Alexander Mann,
Mr. Mortimer Matthews."

The suggestion to use Christmas Day as the time for special offerings for this purpose was made by the Bishop of Albany in view of the fact that the offerings on that day were no longer used especially for aged and infirmed clergy, as heretofore, and no other special offerings were generally scheduled.

The President proposed a plan for the better organization of the work of the Board. This was referred to a special committee.

Having considered these two very important subjects the Board took up the regular order of business. The Executive Committee presented a cablegram from Bishop McKim of Tokyo, endorsed by the Foreign Secretary who is now in Tokyo, asking the authority of the Board to complete an additional wing to the academic building in order to provide enlarged class-room facilities for the students applying for admission to our St. Paul's Chapel in Tokyo. A letter was also received stating that the chapel, dining hall and two dormitories had already been built and that the academic building had been completed to the extent that had been planned at the present time. When the present buildings were being planned it was thought that if we had 250 students in the course of five years we would be doing well. We have that number already and 70 applicants were turned away when the school opened. The students are all paying for their living and in addition pay six yen for tuition. In a letter from Dr. Wood he speaks of the beauty, convenience and substantial construction of all the buildings so far erected. While the construction is not reinforced concrete, they have all, within the past two months, passed through the test of a rather severe typhoon and one of the most severe earthquakes that Tokyo has experienced in a long time, without a single crack in the walls, so far as could be discovered, either inside or out.

The Executive Committee referred this request to the Board with the statement that it did not see its way at this time to grant permission to build the additional academic wing, in view of the large deficit. The Board was compelled to accept the view of the Executive Committee, and with great regret informed the Bishop of Tokyo that permission could not be given at this time to provide these additional class-rooms for the Japanese students.

Mrs. Frances H. Withers presented to the Board her plan for unifying the parochial system of teaching and training the young life of the Church by a week day extension of the Church School. The Board adopted a resolution commending the plan and urging its adoption in parish life.

The death of the Bishop of Idaho on December 1st was reported to the Board, and the following Minute adopted by a rising vote:

"Whereas: The Board of Missions has been informed of the death of the Rt. Rev. James Bowen Funsten, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of Idaho, in his See City on the night of Sunday, December 1st, 1918:

"RESOLVED: That this Board, in regular meeting assembled, receives this news with those mingled emotions which come to believers in the Life of the World to Come, when they learn that a trusted and valiant leader in the battle for righteousness has been suddenly taken from the field of earthly endeavor, while his hold on the standard of advance was still apparently unshaken, and every action betrayed the vigor of good health.

"While we lament what seems to us an interrupted career of good works, at the same time, we thank God for the good example of His faithful Soldier, and servant who, from the days of his youth in Virginia, until the night when he 'fell in action,' in that spiritual combat which under his direction was being carried on in the commonwealth of Idaho, never faltered, but always went forward in the line where duty clearly showed the way.

"Born in 1856, as school-boy, collegian and priest, James Funsten lived amid the highest traditions of missionary achievement, so when in 1898 the Church called on him to take the spiritual oversight of the District called 'Boise' (which then included Western Wyoming and Southern Idaho) before he could accept his election, he had to overcome the natural modesty which he felt when he measured up himself with the task that was set before him. In the light of subsequent events, the Board rejoices over the record which the Bishop of Idaho leaves behind him: for it is good testimony to the fact that his election and consecration were of God, the Holy Ghost. Made Bishop in July, 1899, August of that year found him at work with nine clergymen to help him in a field seven hundred by three hundred miles in extent; 44 Church edifices, 57 organized parishes and missions, and 1825 communicants made up his ecclesiastical heritage. On the verge of the twentieth year of his Episcopate, he was summoned from the spiritual oversight of 26 clergy, 60 parishes and missions, nearly 3000 communicants, and a school and hospital where 'the truth as it is in Jesus' is constantly exemplified and taught.

"Patient, persistent, with a clear vision of evangelical truth, and a firm hold on Apostolic Order, he managed his household well; and all who knew him are sure that though sudden death came to him, it did not find him unprepared in any department of his personal or official life.

"The Board prays God to reward the soul of Bishop Funsten according to his deservings; we invoke the Divine Redeemer to bless the memories of the Bishop's relatives and friends, so that they shall be moved to carry on and carry out to a happy fulfillment all the plans that he had made for the extension of the Church in the State of Idaho.

"We are certain that the comfort and joy which comes from the consideration of a life well spent, must be the blessed heritage of his immediate household, for those whose individual and collective consolation we do now pray.

"RESOLVED: That the Secretary be directed to send a copy of this minute to the family of Bishop Funsten, as an expression of our desire to bear witness to the fellowship we would have with them in their hour of trial."

A letter was read from the Presiding Bishop stating that he had called upon the Bishop of Spokane to take the ecclesiastical oversight of the District of Idaho, and a telegram from the Bishop of Spokane accepting his commission.

Mr. Mortimer Matthews of Cincinnati, offered a resolution asking the Executive Committee to investigate and report what, if any, rural mission stations there may be in the domestic field, so located and circumstanced, as to afford suitable opportunity to try the experiment of providing for such and other rural stations, a partial support, by means of glebe-land, to be worked in whole or in part by the incumbent, and upon which he may reside.

The following committees were elected to serve during the ensuing year:

The Executive Committee,
Trust Funds Committee,
Audit and Finance Committee.

There was a vacancy in the lay representative from the Seventh Province due to the death of Mr. Rufus Cage. On motion of the President of the Synod of the Province. Mr. A. J. Dossett of Waco, Texas, was appointed to fill the vacancy and to serve until such time as the Synod should fill the same by election.

The Rev. Edgar H. Goold, principal of St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C., was present and made a short address.

January 1st, 1919, marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the occupancy of the building of 281 Fourth Avenue, by the Board. It will also mark the retirement from active service of Mr. E. Walter Roberts, who for thirty-five years has served as Assistant Treasurer. The Board assured Mr. Roberts that after his retirement from active service he would still be a welcome guest at the meetings.

The Board adjourned at 5:43 p. m. with the singing of the Doxology and the Benediction pronounced by the President.

Meeting of the Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Missions held its regular meeting on December 10th, 1918, with a large attendance.

The Treasurer gave some indication of the matters which he expected to bring before the Board the next day, and of the seriousness of the financial situation.

Among the items of business transacted was the appointment of Miss Lucy N. Carter as United offering worker among the Indians on the Pyramid Lake Reservation in Nevada, and the appointment of Mrs. Katherine Webster as United Offering worker in East St. Louis, in the Diocese of Springfield. The cancellation of the appointment of Mrs. Lula H. Kelly was requested, owing to her inability to accept the appointment, as missionary in the Diocese of South Carolina.

The allowance made to the retired Bishop of Spokane, in accordance with the Canon, was decreased by $300 per annum, at the Bishop's own request. The Executive Committee expressed its great appreciation of this act.

In the Latin-American field, the Secretary reported the resignation of Deaconess Claudine Whitaker and Miss Elena Guerra, and Miss L. M. Ramsay of Mexico. Archdeacon Mellen, whose resignation had been accepted as Archdeacon and Missionary to date from December 31st, 1918, expressed his willingness to continue

(Continued on page 7)

GLEANINGS FROM EVERYWHERE

Notes, Clippings and Comments on Various Subjects of Interest

Edited by GRACE WOODRUFF JOHNSON.

"Dr. Cyrus Adler, writing of the Shofar, calls it the only solitary musical instrument actually preserved in the Mosaic ritual. It is also, he says, the oldest form of wind instrument known to be retained in use by the world.

Prof. Steinthal pointed out that this was an instrument no doubt used in pre-historic times.

Wetzstein is of the opinion that the use of the ram's horn may have been borrowed by the Israelites and goes back to a people who were engaged solely in the care of sheep; by them it was used as a signal of alarm. There can be little doubt that it has been continuously used in the Mosaic service from the time it was established until now.

The shofar was not the only horn used by the Israelites as a musical instrument, but no copies or representations of other musical instruments have come down to us.

From the Talmud we learn that the use of the shofar as a note of alarm, of war, was transferred to other seasons of danger and distress. Famine, a plague of locusts and drought occasioned the blowing of this instrument.

The shofar was employed at the public ceremony of excommunication. A very curious use of the shofar in later times was in funeral ceremonies. I quite agree with Watzstein that this use of the instrument is quite apart from the Semetic custom and that it was probably borrowed.

As a signal and an instrument of war it has its various uses; it was a signal for going out to battle, for the announcing of a victory and for the recall of troops."

American Pride Is Hurt.

American pride is always a little hurt when reminded of the fact that the tune of "America' is a plagiarism of the English "God Save the King." Under the spur of a war—awakened patriotism, many Americans have written new music to take the place of that originally provided by our British cousins, but most of their versions have failed to obtain public favor. One, however, by James J. McCabe, a district superintendent of schools in New York, has rapidly forged to the front in popularity, and is now being sung in some parts of every state in the Union as well as in Hawaii, the Philippines and Alaska.

The words of "America" were written in 1832 by the Rev. Samuel F. Smith, then a student of divinity at Andover, Mass. Musical composers were at that time almost unknown in this country and it was the custom to set new words to old familiar tunes. "The Star Spangled Banner," for instance, written in 1814, was set to the tune of an old English drinking song. Fortunately this tune long ago became obsolete in England, and the melody of "The Star Spangled Banner" was never identified as anything but American. We were less lucky in our selection when we set "America" to the tune of the British national anthem, for this music outside of our own country is never recognized as American.

Mr. McCabe, who is well known as a musician and has broad experience as an organist, composer, choral director and community songleader, wrote his music for "America" three years ago. It won recognition immediately and was soon in use in the schools, Sunday Schools and churches in and about New York and was sent to other parts of the country. Among those now using it are prominent members of the Daughters of the American Revolution. It has also been played by the United States Marine Band at concerts in Washington and by bands in New York City parks and in other cities."—Musical page, Boston Herald.

William Copley Winslow writes in reference to the above article:

"The tune for 'America' is not a 'plagiarism' from that used for 'God Save the Queen.' Both Lowell Mason and the English composer derived it from a German source without any knowledge of each other's act.

"Allow me to add that Dr. Smith stated to me that he wrote the hymn on an overcast day near the close of winter. Looking out of his window on Andover Hill he felt depressed, when suddenly the thought flashed over him: 'This is America, my country, and how much I have to be thankful for.'

"He took up his pen and composed 'America.' A little later on when Lowell Mason hailed him on a Boston street, 'Well Smith, have you any lines for me to put to music?' he handed the hymn to Mason. A few weeks later when passing the Bowdoin Street Church (now used by the Cowley Fathers) he heard the roll of the organ, and going in there, he listened to his hymn sung by the large choir and many of the Sunday Shcool scholars. Subsequently, the hymn was sung in public on the Fourth of July at a celebration in Park Street Church."

Bible Class for Third Week.

The Advent series of Bible readings were concerned with the foretelling of Messiah's coming and were taken mostly from the Old Ttestament. Many people find the Old Testament very difficult to understand, largely because they do not realize its function of testifying to the Christ.

The series of lessons which we shall now consider deal with the facts in Christ's life and the deductions from these facts which are made by the New Testament writers. And first we must consider during the Christmas feast the birth of the Messiah.

First day:

In St. Luke II, 1-15, we have the angelic chorus at His birth.

In St. Matt. II, 1-14, the star guiding the wise men to His cradle.

Second day:

St. Matt. I, 18-25, is the account in which the prophecy of Isa. VII, 14, is directly quoted.

St. Luke II, 1-20, is a more extended account of the circumstances of His birth.

Third day:

The account of the Feast of the Circumcision is found in St. Luke II, 21-40. The "Nunc Dimittis" used in evening prayer is found in this lesson.

Fourth day:

In St. John I, 1-19, we have the explanation of the Messiah's birth (verse 14), St. John using the Greek "Logos" (Word) to describe the Christ. Compare Colossians 1, 15, where He is called the Image of God.

Fifth day:

In Philippians II, 5-8, we find a passage referring to Christ's birth which is difficult to understand in the authorized version because of faulty translation. In reading these verses instead of "robbery" in verse 6, substitute, "a thing to be selfishly clutched at," that is, Christ did not think equality with His Father was a thing to be selfishly kept to Himself, but made Himself of no reputation, and changed the privileges of His Sonship for the ministry of a servant, etc.

Read in connection with this Galatians IV, 1-7, in which Christ's voluntarily becoming as a servant raised us to the privileges of sonship.

"Rags and bottles! Rags and bottles!" called the ragman.

"Why do you put those two words together?" asked a passerby.

"Because, sir," was the ragman's courteous reply, "wherever you find many bottles, you find the rags."—Sunday at Home.

The average age of the criminal has fallen during the last 30 years from 36 to 18 1-2 years. At the same rate for 30 years more the average age of the criminal will be 9 years. A few years later wardens of penitentaries will be women, and the guards, wet nurses; ambulances and baby carriages will meet the sheriffs and their prisoners, and every well equipped prison will have its incubators for delicate inmates.—New Justice Magazine.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE CHURCH WAR COMMISSION.

(Continued from page 1)

required for chaplains, and for the St. Andrew's Brotherhood, also for construction and reinforcement of the churches near the camps, as well as for all other work directly related to enlisted men.

On the other hand, one of the most critical problems of this country during the coming year is that of the girls of our towns, cities and villages. The officers of the national military and medical lines of service are alert to it, and we must give them strong support. The War Camp Community and the Young Women's Christian Association appeal to us for the sort of service which our Girls' Friendly Society and other Church organizations can give in a most efficient way. Personal touch and leadership are the keys to the situation. The best use of the money is in the support of personal service. It is this support which we give. We supply not so much rent and buildings as skilled and devoted women.

The development of a great Merchant Marine is a national enterprise. The ships are building. How about the moral and spiritual welfare of the scores of thousands of men who are to be on the water front of the Atlantic and of the Pacific? Our Church has shown an adaptability for that kind of work. We must at least make an immediate study of the conditions and opportunities.

The quick change of population from munition plants to industrial organizations for peace raises problems of moral and of social as well as of religious life. If our Church is to do her part in this coming year, we must study and attack these problems now while conditions are in flux.

We are confident that, even though the stress of war is over, the Church will appreciate her duty during these months of demobilization. The Commission has set Sunday, February 9th, as the date for the great contribution.

THE GRAND OLD MAN OF TEXAS.

(Continued from page 1)

been able to accomplish but upon you and those who have assisted me in carrying on the great things that have been accomplished, I ask divine blessing. You and they have given generously of your means to build these houses here for the use of the young women of this and surrounding states, and for the betterment of generations in the future yet to come. I feel, myself, that but little has been accomplished in proportion to what I desire but I am thankful for what has been done and hope that in the future many greater things will be accomplished for the glory of God."

Has Enriched the World.

Judge Terrell called upon others present for a brief expression. John M. Simpson paid a tribute to Bishop Garrett as one who, with his great love and sympathy, has enriched the world and "as growing old gracefully, with the respect and love of his friends, which is a thing indeed to be sought by all men."

G. B. Dealey declared that he regarded Bishop Garrett the "Grand Old Man of Texas," as Gladstone was esteemed the "Grand Old Man of England." He spoke of the influence that has been exercised through his name and by his works, in addition to that which has been effected through his personality.

Some Reminiscinces.

In a reminiscent mood, Alex Sanger recalled Bishop Garrett's first church was on Elm and Lamar, just across the street from his store, both in those days being regarded by residents and visitors as fine institutions well worth a pilgrimage to see, although each was only a one-story frame affair, bereft of modern furniture, investitures and adornments which mark the present day church or commercial establishment. He said that he remembered the first marriage ceremony performed by Bishop Garrett in Dallas, which united the late Charles Fred Tucker with Miss Jones. He spoke of Bishop Garrett's wisdom in establishing a girls' school in Dallas to educate young women of Texas, which has resulted in immeasurable value to the entire Southwest.

Influence Upon Country.

E. M. Kahn spoke of the broad spirit and generous liberality that characterized the deeds and precepts of Bishop Garrett, which have helped to make this a country where men meet on an equality, as man to man. He said that the present generation is grateful that it has had such a noble man as one of its leaders, whose privilege it has been to make splendid use of his talents for the benefit of all mankind. "I would not have minded," he continued, "to have had him for a rabbi of my church."

Louis Blaylock paid a tribute to Bishop Garrett and to the institution he has founded and said that his example has been instrumental in drawing all churches closer together with perhaps, eventually, one common creed.

F. H. Sparrow of Fort Worth told of his first meeting with Bishop Garrett in a religious service at Weatherford.

During the morning refreshments were served of cake and punch. The former was decorated with the colors of the United States and her allies. Small flags were given to the visitors as souvenirs.

BOARD OF MISSIONS ACTIVITIES.

(Continued from page 6)

as Treasurer of Mexico after his resignation had been accepted. The Executive Committee expressed its great appreciation of this act.

The Bishop of Porto Rico was given permission to employ in the field Miss Minnie Palmer as his secretary.

In the foreign field, the resignation of Miss J. E. Prichard as United Offering worker in the District of Hankow was accepted.

In Liberia, the Rev. F. A. K. Russel was employed in the field at Tobacconne Station, and Mr. Gibson Montgomery as teacher at the same station. Mr. Samuel P. North was employed as teacher at Royeville; and the Rev. William H. Ramsaur was appointed to Cape Mount.

Owing to the absence in Siberia of Mr. John Riefsnider, the Rev. Charles Reifsnider, LD. D., was appointed Acting Treasurer of the District of Tokyo.

At the request of the Bishop of Honolulu, Miss Laura L. Baugh was appointed to that district. Miss Baugh had been employed in the field.

On account of ill health, the Rev. E. J. Lee and Miss M. A. Hewitt of the District of Anking, were compelled to come to this country in anticipation of their regular furlough.

Sister Constance Anna of the Community of the Transfiguration, was appointed missionary in the District of Anking, at the request of the Bishop.

The Rev. John C. Ambler, who for twenty-nine years has been one of our faithful missionaries in the District of Kyoto, Japan, was retired, and a suitable allowance provided for his support.

The Executive Committee approved the request of Dr. Harry B. Taylor of St. James Hospital in Anking, to ask for an appropriation of $6,275, from the China Medical Board of the Rockefeller Foundation for the purchase of an X-Ray equipment, a small electric light plant, for additional surgical instruments for the hospital, and also for a residence for an additional physician and toward the salary of a woman technician.

WESTERN NEBRASKA NOTES.

The "flu" situation has been very severe in the diocese. Many churches have been closed for weeks and some will not open until the new year. Many of the ordinary clergy have had to act in the capacity of nurses. The diocesan school at Kearney has been very fortunate, only a few cases being reported there but owing to the scarcity of nurses Bishop Beecher had to take his turn at the bedside of the sick.

Rev. J. J. Dixon, rector of Callaway, has received his honorable discharge from the army and the people are anxiously awaiting his return to his parish where a hearty welcome is awaiting him.

The institution of Rev. Charles Rowland Tyner as Dean of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Hastings, has been postponed on account of the ban being placed on the city.

The splendid response to the Advent Call by the ladies of St. Mark's Cathedral, Hastings, was a revelation to the parish. It certainly demonstrated the power of prayer. Women who have never attempted such an undertaking before bravely went forward and met with such a hearty response that they are now ready to undertake anything that will benefit the church.

The order of the Gold Cross will be organized in the Cathedral parish.

The Rev. W. H. Mills who has been severely ill is much improved in health.

DIOCESE OF WESTERN MICHIGAN.

The Rev. J. N. Feringa, Ph. D., a distinguished scholar and author, formerly of the Reformed Church of Holland, lately Rector of St. John's Church, Grand Haven, has become professor of history in Racine College. The Diocese loses one of its most learned and saintly priests, but the cause of religious education gains.

The Rev. F. A. Patterson of this Diocese has been in active service with the Canadian forces as a soldier. He has however, been privileged to celebrate the Holy Communion, to hold other services, and to preach on numerous occasions in hospitals and on the field.

The funeral of the Rev. F. W Bachman, lately of St. Alban's, Indiana Harbor, was held in St. Paul's Church, Grand Rapids, Nov. 12. It was in this Church that the deceased Priest celebrated the Holy Communion for the first time, and it is the spiritual home of his mother. Several of the clergy acted as pall bearers. The Rev. Mr. Bachman wasat one time Rector of St. James, Albion, and was greatly beloved.

At St. Paul's, Muskegon, Thanksgiving Day, was marked by a splendid response to the call for gratitude for Victory. In the timely spirit of sacrifice the people of St. Paul's made an offering to pay a standing debt of $1800.00. When the offerings were counted the amount was found to be $4500.00

At a meeting of the Vestry of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, on the day of the signing of the armistice, the following minute was spread upon the record of the Church:—

"On the eleventh day of November, nineteen hundred and eighteen, as the people of the world rejoice in the signing of the Armistice, ending the dreadful war, which has continued for better than four years, the Vestry of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral desires to spread upon its records of this day's meeting an expression of gratitude to Almighty God for the peace which has come. The Vestry is grateful that through all these trying years the Cathedral Church has not only been able most successfully to continue her work, but, as well, that the Bishop and many of her flock, have gone forth to do their country's bidding. The Vestry is no less grateful for the valiant work done by all those who have remained at home, in their individual and collective capacities, for the welfare of the Church and Nation. And the Vestry remembers with deep gratitude those who have fallen—the brave ones who have given their lives, whose souls have mounted to the Paradise of God, there to find well earned peace and refreshment. For all these gifts and for the Peace now falling upon the world, the Vestry records its thanks."

DIOCESE OF OLYMPIA.

The Rev. Herman R. Page (rank of First Lieutenant), Chaplain of the 38th Infantry, Camp Lewis, has been put in charge of all religious work at Camp Lewis. Lieutenant Page is the son of Bishop Page, of Spokane. Before his being commissioned, he was voluntary chaplain of the Episcopal Church at Camp Lewis, representing the Eighth District.

The Rev. Rodney J. Arney, Secretary of the Diocese, has been forced through illness to give up temporarily his work as secretary as well as his charge at Kent, Washington. He is suffering a partial paralysis of the vocal chords.

Bishop Keator was in charge of the Union Thanksgiving services at the Rialto Theater, Tacoma. It was a magnificent and thrilling service, over fifteen hundred being in attendance, several hundred being turned away. The services included: The President's Proclamation; the Hymn "O God, our help in ages past"; Lord's Prayer and Collect; addresses by representatives of the Jewish religion, the Swedes, and the Presbyterians. Father Hylebos, the veteran Roman Catholic priest of the Northwest, who was to have spoken at this service, died on Thanksgiving morning. The services included an offertory, the Battle Hymn of the Republic, and "America." All the exercises together required just one hour.

The Standing Committee of the Diocese has approved the plans presented by the rector and vestry of St. Mark's Church, Seattle, to erect a new church building to become the Cathedral of the Diocese, recommending the same to the action of the annual convention in February, 1919. In the meantime Bishop Keator appoints St. Luke's Memorial Church, Tacoma, as Pro-Cathedral.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Dean S. B. Purves, of St. Paul's Cathedral, Cincinnati, conducted a very successful eight day mission the past week in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbus, (Rev. Hayward Ablewhite, Rector). Dean Purves will conduct a similar mission in Toledo during Lent.

At a recent confirmation service conducted by Bishop Reese in the new building acquired for use of University students by the Mission of the Holy Spirit opposite the university campus in Columbus, five students were confirmed, presented by the rector, Rev. F. C. Randolph. A very complete chapel, accommodating 160 worshipers, has been fitted up in the new building. The altar and reredos is one loaned by St. Paul's Church, Columbus, and may be used by the Mission as long as it has need of it. The new building also contains a large assembly room which may be used also as a dining room, a large well equipped kitchen, a basement which is to be fitted up for use as a gymnasium, and several suites of rooms on the top floor to be rented out to students. An office for the clergyman in charge of the student work, and a choir room for the junior and senior choirs of the mission complete the equipment. When the new plant has been entirely furnished, and is in good working order, it will be able to minister very adequately to the needs of the church boys at the State University.

Bishop Reese ordained Geo. C. Plummer, a candidate for Holy Orders, on Monday last in Trinity Church, Columbus. A number of the clergy of Columbus and surrounding parts were present at the service. The Venerable Joseph H. Dodshon, Archdeacon of the Columbus and Dayton Convocations, presented the candidate and preached a very practical ordination sermon which went "straight home" to his hearers. The Very Rev. Dean S. B. Purves of St. Paul's Cathedral read the Litany. Rev. Egisto Chauncey, Rector of Trinity Parish, acted as Master of Ceremonies. Mr. Plummer, who is a student at Bexley Divinity School, Gambier, Ohio, will continue his studies at that institution. He will graduate next spring.

Trinity Parish, Columbus, has adopted the Massachusetts plan to deepen and intensify the religious experience of its members. A selection of daily Bible readings and prayers have been printed and transmitted to every one, and the communicants and Church School students have been asked by the Rector, the Rev. E. F. Chauncey, to pledge devotion to the plan.

Bishops Vincent and Reese have issued a pastoral letter authorizing the administration of the Holy Communion by intinction. The letter states that "The last Lambeth Conference 300 Bishops) in 1908 declared: 'The Conference is convinced that it is not desirable to make, on the ground of alarm as to possible infection, any change in the manner of administering the Holy Communion. Special cases, involving exceptional risk should be referred to the Bishop and dealt with according to his direction.'

We, your Bishops, have no intention, therefore, to authorize any permanent change from our accustomed manner of administering the Holy Communion. But the 'special case' of the 'exceptional risk' in the prevailing epidemic does seem to justify a special provision, with the distinct understanding that the provision is a temporary one and ceases with the prevalence of the epidemic itself."

SOUTH DAKOTA NOTES.

The epidemic of the influenza has crippled the work of the Church in South Dakota as it has everywhere else. The Churches were closed for several weeks early in the Fall and when they reopened it looked as if the danger was past. Another outbreak has come again in many places, however, and now the Churches are to be reclosed in many places for the second time. It will make the work of the Advent Call still more difficult of accomplishment. Among the many institutions which have been closed is All Saints' School in Sioux Falls.

At the last Convocation the District was divided up into several deaneries under rural deans living in central places. Under this system it has been felt that the Church could begin to touch a bit of the rural work that has been so sadly neglected all over the country. There are many communicants of the Church scattered in small communities where no regular services of the Church have ever been held. It is hoped that by means of the system of deaneries these may be reached and cared for. The Deanery of the Rosebud has been crippled since the rural dean, the Rev. W. B. Roberts, has been in France as a chaplain. Some of the deaneries have started by making a study of the field and making lists of scattered communicants.

A mission is to be held in St. George's Church, Redfield, during the coming week. The missionary in charge of the Church is the Rev. W. H. Talmadge, and the missioners are to be the rural deans of the Northern Deanery, the Rev. P. B. Bartlett of Aberdeen, and the Rev. Paul Roberts of Brookings.

With the demobilization of the units of the Students' Army Training Corps the work in the college centers has been disorganized and it is impossible to say yet what the condition of the college work will be for the remainder of the year. In Brookings there has been a regular social hour on Sunday evenings at 5:30. The boys from the college have supper together, which they get themselves, with the help of the young girls of the Mission and a general good time is had until the hour for evening service to which many of the fellows remain. It has been proving very successful and will undoubtedly be continued as a regular feature of the work among the students at the college.

The Sunday Schools of South Dakota are working this year on the Advent Offering for the Armenian and Syrian Relief. The children are allowed to sell subscriptions for the District paper, the South Dakota Churchman for one dollar, putting 25c into their Advent Offering.

VIEWS AND INTERVIEWS.

(Continued from page 5)

000 to 5,000,000. He added, however, that a complete system of irrigation such as was necessary in some Western States would have to be installed before the country would count for much in an agricultural way.. He said that the Jewish colonies in the country were doing extremely well, and that the Jews seemed to be the only peoples who could win a living from the soil. Dr. Finley emphasized the barrenness of the land, saying that for miles only an occasional tree would be seen. Although there was now very little real want in the country, the British commander had requested the American Red Cross, through the British War Office, to send out an additional force of physicians and nurses, about 200 in all, for reconstruction work along lines of sanitation, after the peace formalities have been gone through.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

DIOCESE OF SPOKANE.

ORDINATIONS—At all Saints' Cathedral, Thursday, November 21st, Bishop Herman Page advanced to the priesthood, Carl Montgomery Budlong, who was presented by the Very Rev. Floyd J. Mynard, rector of North Yakima, and William Alfred Sharp, who was presented by the Rev. J. A. Palmer. Morning prayer was read by the Rev. R. T. T. Hicks, acting dean of All Saints' Cathedral, assisted by the Rev. M. J. Stevens, and the Litany was read by the Rev. Irving E. Baxter. Bishop Page preached the ordination sermon and was assisted at the Celebration of Holy Communion by the Very Rev. Gilbert W. Laidlaw. The Rev. C. M. Budlong has done singularly effective work as rector of Colville and adjacent mission stations, and the Rev. W. A. Sharp has served the Church at Roslyn and Cle Elum for many years as lay-reader, and was ordained deacon last year and now returns to his work with hopes of many years' faithful and efficient service. The Bishop entertained the newly ordained priests and the clergy to lunch at the University Club.

Thanksgiving Services.—At All Saints' Cathedral the service was the most largely attended of any of recent years, it being after all, one of the greatest Thanksgiving Days in history. Addresses were given by Bishop Page as representing the Church, and by visiting friends, the Rev. Thomas Harper, D. D., of Westminster Congregational Church, who has just returned from France, and whose account of the work of the Y. M. C. A. will long be remembered, and Mr. Lester Edge, Roman Catholic, gave a helpful suggestive address.

Advent Call.—In connection with dvent Call, Bishop Page held a Day at All Saints' Cathedral, ber 7th, taking as his theme, Lord's Prayer."

Returning Clergy.—The Very Rev. W. C. Hicks, dean of All Saints' Cathedral, is to resume his work at Spokane after Christmas, he having spent nearly a year in France as chaplain. The Rev. George H. Severance returns from Louisville, Ky., where he attended the Chaplains' School.

Spanish Influenza.—The ban has made the work somewhat difficult, but the clergy are planning for the future and it is hoped that the Church activities will be taken up with renewed enthusiasm. St. Matthew's Church, Spokane, has suffered a severe loss in the passing hence of its beloved Sunday School superintendent and choir member, Miss Louise A. Deute. Other churches in the district, too, have also suffered loss owing to the ravages of the disease.

Church Home for Children.—The Home at Lidgerwood, Spokane, having grown too small to satisfactorily accommodate the needs of the work, the old Houston School building is now to be taken over, and Mrs. F. W. Krause, who before her marriage was matron, is again taking up the work and the outlook therefore is more hopeful than has been the case for many years. She will have the most capable assistants that can be secured at this time. The new home ne Secretary of the Army and Navy epartment, Brotherhood of St. Anew, it is the concensus of opinion all of them. From the following tter it would appear to be the conction of officers of high rank, as ol. H. ——— of the ———F. A., . E. F. writes:

[redacted]

"It has been my experience that the en who are most closely identified ith their several churches are the en who give no trouble and can alays be relied upon to conduct themlves correctly in any emergency. he men who have no moral or regious anchorages, are the ones who t on the rocks and came up again d again for discipline."

Lest week, two field secretaries me into Central Office, Brotherhood Andrew, and in a general discuson one of them said, concerning men a large hospital where he had been rking:

"It is pitiful to see those 2,000 men, know that so many of them possess bsolutely nothing in the way of iritual food which they can use in eir time of physical disability. heir faces express discontent and stress, they have nothing substanal to hold fast to."

growing, and the Church outlook in this field is at the present time most promising.

MRS. ITALY'S CLAIM TO RESPECT.

She lived in a little house across the street from an American home. Her man was a common "wop," who worked on the railroad in the daytime and at night sat on a bench by the back stoop and played weird melodies of the homeland on his old accordion. The woman was not old, but her face was seamed and drawn with suffering. For weeks she had been battling with almost unendurable pain.

One day she appeared humbly at the back door of Mrs. America's home to seek permission to go through the yard each evening as she went for the milk. It was a difference of four blocks and the request was readily granted. Mrs. Italy was overwhelmed with gratitude. Motioning vividly with her brown, bony hands, she said in broken English, "You goot-a to me; me goot-a to you."

Her program of "goot-a"-will began with an express wagon load of split railroad ties, delivered by one of the little Italies. This small beginning was reinforced almost daily by baskets of garden truck, presented by the same brown-eyed cherub.

But the real opportunity to be "goot-a" arrived one evening when Mrs. America was suddenly taken quite ill. She had gone to the porch when she felt the illness coming on, and there she remained, too sick to be moved for several hours. Mrs. Italy saw the disturbance and came shuffling over, her tongue refusing to say the hard American words, but her plain old face lighted up with sympathetic concern. The whole world over, human need requires no interpreter.

Without waiting for instructions, which Mrs. America's daughter had no time to give, and trained by her own long experience with suffering, the Italian woman went quietly to work. No trained nurse could have been more gentle and deft.

When the crisis was over, the other neighbors disappeared one by one. Not so Mrs. Italy. She had no intention of leaving Mrs. America while there was a chance of being needed. On into the night she sat, patiently watching, until at last the sick woman awoke, decidedly better.

Satisfied that her services were no longer necessary, she smoothed back the patient's hair and with a tenderly whispered "Goot night, and God and the Virgin Mary bless you," she slipped quietly away in the dark.

"You goot-a to me; me goot-a to you" truly was but rendering into her language of certain old familiar words, "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you."

—Laura D Sopher, in World Outlook.

RELIGION, LIKE CHARITY, BEGINS AT HOME.

"You can tell them every time! The boys who have been brought up under the influence of the Church are the boys who are seeking and finding opportunities to attend Church services in camp."

This is the statement of not only

The other, who has been working in a smaller camp, but doing much intimate personal work among men of all ranks, said:

"You've got to trace a man's religious influence farther back than to camp. If he hasn't had something before he entered the service, you're going to be careful how you feed him. It isn't hard to tell that the men who constantly use profanity of the worst brand have not attended Sunday School regularly while they were at home."

It would seem that the responsibility of the home and of the home parish has now met a splendid testing time. It is well for parents and for priests to stop now and ask themselves whether they are using their endeavors to teach the young men in their care the far-reaching benefit and invaluable worth of a Christian character, a character which will stand inviolate when cast upon its own resources as when under the protection and shelter of home and of church.

CHURCH CONSECRATED AT RICHMOND, VA.

(Continued from page 1)

Bishop and attending Bishops and clergy proceeded to the front door of the Church, where on knocking for admittance, the doors were opened by the Senior and Junior Wardens. The Bishop entered, followed by attending Bishops (Brown, Coadjutor of Virginia, and Lloyd, President of the Board of Missions) and attending clergy, followed up the aisle by the Vestry of the Church; the Bishop reading the sentences provided by the Rubric, there being the appropriate responses by the attendants and congregation.

After entering the chancel, the instrument of Donation was read by Dr. J. N. Upshur, Registrar of the Vestry. The Bishop then proceeded with the prayers and sentences, followed by the reading of the Sentence of Consecration by the Rector, Rev. G. Freeland Peter, as appointed by the Bishop. Morning Prayer then followed, with the Ante Communion, then the Hymn, "The Church's one Foundation."

Rt. Rev. Wm. Cabell Brown was the Preacher, the sermon (eloquent and appropriate to the occasion) being from the text, "Be ye doers of the Word and not hearers only," it being the inscription around the walls of the school. The Service closed with the celebration of the Holy Communion. Thus ended a service, joyous and inspiring. How appropriate at this time, the War ended, and on the eve of Christmas when all Christian lands will sing with deepest feeling and emotion the joyous anthem, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

At the Night Service for Missions the same joyous spirit of the morning was still to be felt, the Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd being the Preacher. A full and appreciative congregation greeted him and listened with the most intense interest as he spoke of the "Reconstruction Work of the Church at Home and Abroad following the War."

And so ended this blessed Sunday: No doubt all who were there, and participated, especially of St. James congregation, felt deeply grateful for participation in its rich and blessed influences.

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING

An organidation for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes), for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.

The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.

Handbooks at the office of the Order, Room 84, Bible House, New York.

28½tf

What Do You Know of the Work of Your
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
Rt. Reve. Frederick Courtney, D. D., President.
William Jay Schieffelin, Esq., Ph. D., Treasurer
Rev. James Empringham, D. D., General Superintendent.
Send for free sample copy of
"TEMPERANCE."
This magazine has the largest circulation of any magzine of its kind in America.
Address.
CHURCH TEMPERANCE SOCIETY
1611 Flatiron Building New York City

A PATRIOTIC PAGEANT

BREATHING THE SPIRIT OF THE AGE— SHOWING THE SPIRIT OF DEMOCRACY AMONG THE NATIONS FROM MAY 1ST, 1770, TO THE PRESENT TIME.

Democracy Saving the World

A Pageant of immense educational value in the present crisis of history.

Let every community in the entire United States present this Pageant as the great community event of the year. Send twenty-five cents for a sample copy in pamphlet form, then ORGANIZE YOUR FORCES.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Let some Club, High School or Church undertake the work and interest your local talent in its production.

Seven Pageants Illustrating the Seasons of the Christian Year

ADVENT, CHRISTMAS, EPIPHANY, EASTER, ASCENSION, WHITSUNDAY, TRINITY.

A Pageant Has Wonderful Educational Power

If you want your own parishioners and the entire community your parish serves to realize the teachings and the beauty of a Christian Year, present these seven Pageants on the stage.

THE ADVENT PAGEANT NOW READY.

Let some Guild undertake to present these Pageants as their particular work this year, for the benefit of their treasury.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave.,

By Rev. Carroll M. Bates.

CHICAGO, ILL.

The seven Pageants in pamphlet form, 25 cents. We furnish printed matter needed—copies used in practice and for the audience, store window cards, dodgers, tickets, etc.—at very low prices.

Confirmation Instruction

By Bishop Johnson of Colorado.

A very valuable Manual to place in the hands of candidates for Confirmation.

Send 25 cents for a sample copy.

Price, $2.00 a dozen.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Private Prayers for the Faithful

By Bishop Sage of Salina.

A Manual which thousands of Church people have found helpful in their private devotions at home and in church.

Price, 10 cents. Postage 4c.

"My people find the book of prayers very helpful and I think it is in every home in my parish."—Carl W. Nau, Emporia, Kan.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Parochial Mission Supplies

Use our Printed Matter.
Send for Samples.

Address "THE WITNESS," 6219 Cottage Grove Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.