"If the whole of Christendom is electrified by the tidings of Jerusalem's deliverance from her bondage, what ought to be the effect of this news on its native-born son? Yes, it has a stronger meaning to me than ever: 'If I ever forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.' Yes, in the very place and places where Christ was born and spent His earthly thirty and three years, the writer spent his first twenty and three years of existence in this world. What adds more delight to me personally is the assurance that the places that were so close and woven into my life over there in the dear old home after being defiled by the unclean Turk, are purified again. * * * I refer first to the Anglican Boarding School on Mount Zion, where I spent seven years of boyhood life. The second is the Anglican 'Christ Church' inside Jaffa Gate, where I was confirmed and received into the fold of the Episcopal Church by the late beloved Bishop Blyth. The third is the most beautiful modern building in Jerusalem, the Bishopric and its St. George's Cathedral, that Bishop Blyth built on the north side of the city about a mile from Damascus Gate. All three of the places mentioned above, since the war started, have been seized and used as barracks by the infidel Turk. But thank God! the unclean have been washed out and off by the salvation of the Holy City. After reading the above you won't be surprised that I was and still am anxious to join in this holiest of crusades. Knowing perfectly well that there isn't any likelihood of an American army being sent to the Holy Land, I made my application to the British government, who sent me the answer through their consul at Portland, Oregon, that they can't see their way clear to accept my services with the Palestine expedition since I am an American citizen now. This surely made me grieved and very disappointed. Yet my offer stands as long as the war lasts, believing that with my perfect knowledge of the country, its people, their languages, habits, thoughts, religions and customs, I can be of more use there than in France or Italy; because on my graduation from Mount Zion, and for four years after that, until I left the country, I was a constant traveler, covering the Holy Land from Beersheba to Damascus, roaming over all the land of Moab and Edom for fifteen months. All this was in company with one or another of the C. M. S. missionaries; but most of that period was spent with a medical missionary by the name Dr. Frederick Johnson, who on his graduation from Oxford came to the Holy Land, and it was my good fortune that I was appointed his assistant and constant companion during his three years' travel, working among the various tribes of the desert, coming in contact with all classes in cities and villages. It is a far cry from being a Jerusalemite to a Montana rancher; but this is the twentieth century, and circling this earth is being done in two months' times."

Survival of a Primitive Trait

Financial problems loom large in parish administration. In a scholarly thesis, the rector of Holy Trinity Church, the Rev. Dr. Melish, shows that the Bishop was originally the responsible financial officer of the local Church. He says:

"St. Paul salutes the Bishops and deacons in his letter to the Philippians because he is writing to acknowledge a gift of money. Justin Martyr describes the Bishop as the man with whom money or goods are deposited at the time of the Eucharist, who succored the orphans and widows and took care of all who were in need. Strangers who bore the Christian name visited the communities as they passed along the great routes of commerce in both East and West, either in pursuit of business or driven by persecution. And they were given hospitality. It was the Bishop upon whom was placed the responsibility of caring for all such. The Bishop was treasurer and secretary of the local Church, and as such became the pivot and center of its administration."

If this contention is true, it helps us to understand why the missionary Bishops are such clever beggars. This is a survival of a primitive trait!

Certainly the work of Church treasurers is one of supreme importance.—The Rev. Dr. Lacey.

PRESIDENT WILSON ENTERTAINS ARCHBISHOP LANG IN WASHINGTON

Noted Visitor Preaches To Large Audiences In Nation's Capital—Visits Corcoran Gallery Of Art—Delivers Prayer In Senate

The Archbishop of York spent five days in Washington, arriving there on Saturday, March 30th, and departing for Baltimore on Wednesday, April 3rd. From Baltimore he went to Pittsburg, Pa., and thence to Canada. He made a profound impression on the national capital. He was the guest of the Bishop of Washington over Sunday and preached on Easter morning in the Bethlehem Chapel of the Cathedral. In the afternoon he spoke at historic St. John's and in the evening at the Church of the Epiphany. At all these services large numbers failed to gain entrance. All his sermons and addresses were upon the war.

The Archbishop gave an address at the annual meeting of the National Cathedral Association on the Cathedral grounds. The POST states that Bishop Harding introduced the Archbishop of York, and on the platform were seated Henry White, former ambassador to France; Charles J. Bell, Rear Admiral Charles H. Stockton and Dr. William C. Rives.

In the audience were distinguished members of the Episcopal clergy and prominent laymen of the Church.

Union of English-Speaking Peoples

The Archbishop said he could foresee a day when the English-speaking peoples on both sides of the ocean would be united by even closer ties than they now contemplated.

"Since I have been in Washington," he said, "I have felt the touching of those mystic chords binding this country with the old world nation, into whose long and ancient history the new world's birth is merged, and to which it still is bound by ties of race and speech.

"More and more this capital city must have a place in molding the mind, speech and tone of the whole republic. Rights of the states are secure and no one would interfere with them. But one cannot look into the future without realizing more and more the circumstances that will bring these states together in a common will and purpose, with this great capital as the center."

For this reason, the Archbishop stated, "if anywhere in the world an outstanding witness is needed for Christ it is in Washington."

Duty of Churchmen

Referring at one point to the duties that devolved upon Churchmen during the war he stated: "You have a great help in this country in the singular elevation and nobility with which your president has put the issues and ideals of the conflict before you."

The Archbishop said he had been deeply moved by the "spirit and faith and hope that is projected in this great building," referring to the Cathedral.

He said the unfinished structure, standing on the heights overlooking a capital which would have a profound part in the future history of the nation and the world, "is a conspicuous witness of things unseen and eternal upon which the foundations of the new world the war will bring must be built to be enduring."

In his reference at the outset to the ties binding England and America, the Archbishop said: "I have felt these ties more deeply within the last few days between these nations fighting together for the breath of liberty, without which we of these nations cannot live, now that sons of America may be laying down their lives side by side with British and French soldiers on the soil of France."

The Archbishop said his benediction was upon the association which is building the cathedral.

Large Audience at Epiphany Church

To an audience that filled every seat in the Epiphany Church and overflowed into the parish hall adjoining, his grace, the Archbishop, delivered a sermon that appealed most powerfully to the religious sentiment suggested by the Easter season and to the patriotism of his hearers.

Assisting the Archbishop in the service were Bishop Harding and the Rev. Dr. R. H. McKim, rector of the Epiphany, and other clergymen present were the Rev. F. A. Iremonger, the primate's chaplain, who is traveling with him; the Rev. P. F. Hall, the Rev. Townsend Russell, the Rev. Dr. Robert Talbot, the Rev. E. H. Ingle, the Rev. Dr. Van Rensselaer, Canon De Vries, the Rev. Angus McD. Crawford, Prof. Wallis and Dean Green, the last three of Alexandria Seminary, and the Rev. W. B. Everett, rector of the Ballston (Va.) Church.

Earl of Reading Present

Included in the audience were Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Daniels, Gen. Wood, Henry D. White, former Ambassador to France, and the Earl of Reading, the British Ambassador. Most of the embassies were represented by attaches.

A conspicuous note of patriotism was contributed to the occasion by the singing by the audience of "God Save the King," the "Marseillaise" and "The Star Spangled Banner" just previous to dismissal. Many were visibly affected at this appropriate conclusion.

Prays in Senate for God's Blessing on Allied Nations

The Archbishop delivered a prayer at the opening of the session of the United States senate, calling down the blessing of God upon the armies of the United States and the allies, upon the president of the United States and congress and the rulers of the allied nations, in the great undertaking before them.

The senators, impressed with the earnestness of the Archbishop and the occasion, listened with reverence to his words and joined with the distinguished Churchman in reciting the Lord's Prayer.

After the work of the senate had begun, Senator Saulsbury, president pro tempore, took his stand beside the Archbishop in the rear of the chamber and introduced the senators to him.

Clad in his knee breeches, the Archbishop was an unusual as well as a distinguished figure in the senate.

ARCHBISHOP ENTERTAINED AT WHITE HOUSE AND CORCORAN GALLERY OF ART

President and Mrs. Wilson entertained British Ambassador and Lady Reading and their house guest, the Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York, at dinner on Tuesday evening, April 2nd, at the White House.

A report in the Evening Star of that city states that from the White House Lord and Lady Reading and the Archbishop went to the Corcoran Gallery of Art, where the trustees were hosts at one of the most interesting receptions of the season in honor of the Archbishop.

The gallery furnished a beautiful background for the gathering, which was a representative one, including many clergyment and foreign officers. Several hundred guests had already assembled when the party, including the guest of honor, arrived from the White House. The Archbishop at once took his place in the receiving line, which had formed near the top of the stone stairway. He was a picturesque figure in his suit of ecclesiastical purple, with long coat, shorts and huge silver buckles on his shoes. General Charles L. McCawley, U. S. M. C., in full dress uniform, made the presentations. Others in the line were the Bishop of Washington, Right Rev. Alfred Harding; Mr. Charles C. Glover and Mr. Henry White.

The British Ambassador and Lady Reading took up their position nearby and were surrounded throughout the reception. Lady Reading wore a lovely gown of black net, brocaded in silver, with a diamond tiara against a bandeau of black net, and carried a

PRAYER OF ARCHBISHOP BEFORE U. S. SENATE

April 2, 1918

"Let us pray.

"O, Almighty and Eternal Lord God, Thou strong power to all of them that put their trust in Thee, to Whom all things in heaven and earth do bow and obey, we beseech Thee to hear the prayers of Thy people which rise to Thee at this time of trial, with reverence and with godly fear. We see Thy hand laid upon this nation at a supreme moment in history and upon the nations who are joined with it, in the defense of the peace and freedom of the world. We devoutly believe that Thou wilt show Thy favor if they will rise to the height of Thy justice and mercy. Uplift them, we beseech Thee, by Thy strong and holy Spirit that they may find in Thee their refuge and their strength.

"With malice toward none and with charity toward all, with confidence in the right as Thou givest us to do the right, let us strive to finish the work we are in. Strengthen our hearts and our hands and confirm our purpose that contending valliantly for truth and freedom we may conquer by Thy might.

"Imbue with wisdom Thy servants, the president of the United States, and the assembly of congress, and with them the rulers and the assemblies of the people allied with them in the cause entrusted to their care.

"Hear the prayers which we offer before Thee for all who bear commands of our forces both by sea and by land. Stretch forth Thy almighty hand to succor and defend the men who are now defending the cause of truth and freedom in the awful battle being waged across the sea. Strengthen them that they may stay the hand and hold their place. To those who this day will be wounded give Thy soothing and healing. To those who fall to die, give Thy peace. And for all who have laid down their lives for their country, we beseech Thy mercy.

"God, accept them; Christ, receive them.

"If it be Thy gracious will, grant success to their arms and overrule, we beseech Thee, the issues of this war so that, through Christ, we may be brought to a lasting and righteous peace, and that the nations of this world may be united in closer fellowship for the promotion of Thy glory and the good of all mankind."

The Archbishop concluded with the Lord's Prayer, in which members of the senate joined.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE DOUBLED BY CANVASS OF CHILDREN IN PARISH

Christ Church, Dayton, Ohio, Has Lenten Congregations Of More Than Twice Usual Size Through Efforts Of Sunday School

A unique and splendid Lenten campaign was conducted by the Sunday School children of Christ Church, Dayton, Ohio, under the direction of the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer, curate in charge of the parish, through which the attendance of the adult congregation at the regular Church services has been more than doubled.

This Children's Church Attendance Campaign was designed to cover the six weeks of Lent. The plan was to have the children canvass the parish and to get every communicant and everyone who was interested to pledge themselves to attend as many of the services on the Sunday mornings of Lent as possible. In getting the plan organized, the teachers were first called together and the whole plan explained to them. The plan was then explained to the children on Sexagesima Sunday. The actual canvassing of the parish was done during the week of Ash Wednesday. Quinquagesima was organization Sunday. The children were grouped under their teachers as captains with a unit working in each ward or section of the community. Cards with the names of every member and their addresses had been prepared and sorted beforehand, and these were distributed to the children along with a corresponding number of pledge cards to be filled out and returned the following Sunday. On Sexagesima Sunday the children were given pledge cards to be filled out by their parents and to be returned. This eliminated a great deal of the subsequent canvassing.

A great factor in the success of the enterprise was a talk given by Herbert Baggott, a boy from the Sunday School, before the congregation at the morning service on Quinquagesima Sunday. Herbert spoke as follows:

"We have heard even in the Sunday School about the fine meetings which the men of the parish have been holding on Saturday nights, for we, too, are interested in the forward movement which they plan to start in the life of the Church.

"The boys and girls in the Sunday School love the Episcopal Church and Christ Church in particular. Nothing would make us happier than to see it the biggest, finest and most influential Church in the city of Dayton.

"We wish that were true now—we don't believe that it is necessary to wait until we grow up to make it come true. We are sure that it can be done now, and we want the men of the parish, many of whom are our fathers, to know that we stand ready to help them.

"To prove it we have undertaken a Church Attendance Campaign covering the six Sundays in Lent. We want your encouragement and help in getting at least five hundred people at church for the morning service on each of these Sundays.

"Between today and next Sunday, committees of children from the Sunday School will visit every home in the congregation to enlist their help.

"In the meantime we want you to talk about it whenever you have an opportunity in order to help us create an atmosphere of enthusiasm and success.

"Our campaign slogan is a speech from the lips of Jesus, 'Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?' We are doing this for our Mother, the Church, and it surely is the business of our Father in Heaven.

"We would be very glad to have you fill out the pledge attached to the Lenten Calendars which have been distributed in the pews this morning and leave it in the pew to be collected after the service.

"Surely this challenges the admiration and merits the support and cooperation of every man, woman and child in the parish."

As a matter of fact this was very much more than a children's campaign because it called out the sympathies and the efforts of every member of the congregation, and an appeal was made to all the parish organizations to reinforce the efforts of the children.

The expense of publicity and postage amounted to nearly one hundred dollars, but several members of the congregation underwrote this before we started the campaign, so that it cost the vestry and parish nothing.

Another kink in the plan was to have representative men from the congregation visit the Sunday School for a "four minute" speech, every Sunday morning, which should bear upon the success of the campaign and serve to maintain the children's enthusiasm. This has been such a happy experience that it has been decided to extend the plan throughout the year, using not only representative men of the parish but also representative women. This will relate the work of the Sunday School to the adult life of the congregation in a way that has never been done before.

How One Church Will Help Make Third Liberty Loan A Success

Resolutions passed by the vestry of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') Csurch, Philadelphia, at their Easter meeting:

"In view of the urgent request of the National Government, that every possible association and agency should join in making the third Liberty Loan a success, the campaign for which is to be started on April 6th, the first anniversary of the entry of the United States into the world war, and in view of the practical feasibility of combining the patriotism of members of the congregation and other friends of the parish with their interest in the general endowment of the Church, so that Old Swedes' may in a special manner render service to the Government by emphasizing and encouraging participation in the Liberty Loan; be it

"Resolved, That the Rector be authorized in behalf of the vestry to call the attention of the congregation on Sunday next, April 7th, and at other times which may prove convenient, to the following suggestions:

"1. That any person wishing to endow a sitting in the church, whether in their own name or in the name of another, at the stated figure of $200 for each sitting, may do so by subscribing to a Liberty Bond for that amount, and making it transferable to the rector, wardens and vestrymen of Old Swedes'.

"2. That, if a sufficient number of the members of the congregation, who may become subscribers to the Liberty Loan, or who hold Thrift Certificates, in smaller or larger amounts, join together by making their bonds or certificates transferable to the Church, to the total amount of $1,000, a pew in the back of the church shall be set aside and named the Liberty pew, and a suitable plate shall be prepared and placed thereon."

A list of those subscribing under the above plan is to be posted in the vestibule during the progress of the campaign.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Tuesday in Easter Week

THE COLLECT

Almighty God, who through thine only-begotten Son Jesus Christ hast overcome death, and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life; We humbly beseech thee that, as by thy special grace preventing us thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect; through Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

Three successive times is this prayer printed in our Book of Worship. Let us turn to it again for another message, and think of the phrase, "hast overcome death". In the life and work of the Church, and of each individual Christian, there should be a note of confidence—not overweening confidence, which is born of self-importance, but of that confidence which cannot be shaken, because it is built on the certain rock of intimate contact with Jesus, a contact so intimate that the Church says concerning it that "we may dwell in Him and He in us".

"Conquering and to conquer!" This is an Easter thought well worth pondering. "Overcome" was a favorite word with Jesus and the writers of the New Testament books. It should be one with us. The more one overcomes, the nearer one attains that for which he undertook to overcome. The resurrection of Jesus from the dead shows us how God wants us to overcome. It must be more by evolution and steady growth than by convulsive effort. We overcome death by manifesting the ability to rise and "go up higher". The ability to follow this law of progress comes from Almighty God Himself. It is the power of an endless life conserved, protected and permitted to assert itself in our thoughts and words and deeds. Just as the life in the seed shoots up through congenial soil towards flower and fruition, so the life of the spirit will likewise work in the lives of those who will let themselves be "led by the Spirit."

"I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." If the Church members only could and would have this principle fixed in their subconscious lives, we would see parishes and missions thrive wherever they were planted. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." One reason for this is that men have tried to overcome and destroy death by prohibition and excommunication. Now we are beginning to see that change of direction and cultivation of the life-giving principles will do more to destroy death than offensive and mutilating methods. The only way to finally overcome an enemy is to change him into a friend; otherwise he continues an enemy, even though he may be subdued. So the enemies of the Cross of Christ must be changed into friends of the Cross—lovers of Jesus. And Zechariah lets us into the secret of doing this when he wrote, "Not by ordinance or by might, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." The missionary work of the Church is a great overcoming work. The Church goes into communities and gathers groups of individuals together, teaching them how to overcome and rule themselves. Then it goes on with these groups of individuals, endeavoring to teach the same overcoming lessons to the communities wherein they dwell, changing darkness into light and death-dealing conditions into life-giving and life-sustaining conditions. This is the plan of God through Jesus Christ. The closer we work as individuals and corporations in conjunction with this plan, the healthier, happier, safer place to live in will this old world become.

THE EPISTLE

Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent. For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre. But God raised him from the dead: and he was seen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people. And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David. Wherefore he saith also in another psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption: but he, whom God raised again, saw no corruption. Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: and by him all that believe are justified by the law of Moses. Beware therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets; Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.—Acts xiii:26.

"Whosoever among you feareth God, to you is this salvation sent." How is it possible to read this sermon and not see its missionary import? The gospel of the resurrection is the one answer to the great desire, which all men have, to live forever. If those who "dwell in Jerusalem", that is, those who are baptized, confirmed and communicating Christians, with their rulers, are not primarily concerned with spreading the message far and wide, think you that they can be said "to know Jesus and the power of His resurrection"? How is it possible to hear the "voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day", and not be moved to translate those voices into life-giving efforts for the cause to which Jesus gave His all?

"They took Him down and laid Him in a sepulchre." Every Church which does not believe in Church extension or missions is a sepulchre full of dead men's bones. Thank God, it is possible for the Spirit to blow on those bones and make them live again. This has been proved in the history of many a parish which has finally wakened to the fact that it is only a superficial and unthinking joy over the glorious resurrection of Jesus to make Him an Easter offering which shall be devoted to paying debts incurred for parochial comforts past and gone.

"Thou shalt not suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption." The deathless Christ is the only one who can free men from the death of sin. If we will let Jesus cross the threshold of our lives, that is, if we will become more than formal Christians, His words and His warnings will help us from becoming corrupt. And yet we need to be patient, as He is patient, with those who do see corruption. While we try by all means to diagnose and touch the sources of individual and corporate corruption, let us do so in humility, and hopefulness, and great tenderness, for it is always possible, after we have preached to others, that we ourselves may become castaways. The despisers were told to "wonder and perish". So when we come into contact with corruption and sin, let us remember that all we can do is to do our best to bring the corrupt, and the blind, and the halt, and the deaf, and the unclean into the presence of the Christ, or, if you please, to help Jesus manifest Himself to them, and to leave the justification with Him. To the fallen, and the sinner, and to those who sit in darkness must go the message from our lips and lives. "Friend, go up higher." This is a hard thing to do sometimes, but it is the Christlike thing to do, and in the power of the resurrection life we can learn to do it, and to do it with joy in our hearts.

THE GOSPEL

Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have. And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet. And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondered, he said unto them, Have ye here any meat? And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb. And he took it, and did eat before them. And he said unto them, These are the things which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me. Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures ,and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things. —St. Luke xxiv:36.

"He did eat before them." The Christian religion is an other-worldly religion, but it should not be an unnatural religion. The risen, or resurrection, life gives due and rightful prominence to spiritual claims; but Jesus wants us to make the physical side of our earthly lives bear the impress of the normal, rather than the abnormal. He does not wish us to despise the use of material things which minister to bodily needs, but he would have us use all such things with Him present, and with Him in mind. The purpose of the Christian religion is to open our understandings to the great and absolute necessity of plain living and high thinking. In our living, we can have the sustaining foods and the pleasure-giving foods—the fish and the honeycomb—but the use of these things, and the thought expended on them, should be proportionate to their necessity in our household economy, and always subordinated to the real purpose of our earthly existence. It is a great day for father, mother and children, as well as the Church, when the whole family decide to live according to their needs, rather than their wants, provided such decision is made with an understanding opened for Christ.

"Written in the law of Moses and in the prophets and in the psalms concerning me." One of the great purposes of the Christian Church is to help men see that all the best writings of ancient times looked forward to a golden age, and not backward. When our golden age is in our past history, we have become moribund, and there is no pulsing Christian life in us. The gleam of hope is gone, the wings of faith are broken, the heart of love is numb. This is true of us as individuals as well as of parishes. Herein lies the stirring thought about our "Jerusalems". Gospels must begin with our home Churches, but they must not nestle and brood there only. We should teach men to know absolutely what and where their home Church, or Jerusalem, is, and then must we teach them to fare forth as witnesses to the fact that "here we have no continuing city, but that we look for one". Always and ever is our golden age ahead of us. Always and ever must we follow after Jesus out of the dead past into the living future —out of the conquest of one continent into the conquest of another continent —out of the Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children, toward the Jerusalem which is above, and is free, and is "the mother of us all". Onward! Forward! This is the Gospel of the resurrection. This is to begin at our home Church. This it is to which we are to witness. For this were we made a witnessing, a missionary Church. Are you not glad that Jesus has called you to this work? Are you trying to do your share in seeing that His resurrection is made known everywhere, and in a simple, natural, every-day sort of way?

The first lesson Sunday morning records the fulfillment of the specific prediction given in last Sunday's lesson that Cyrus, King of Persia, would decree the rebuilding of Jerusalem and the Temple. Much is made by the Biblical writers of this fact. Cyrus was, in their view, the shepherd and anointed of God for this express purpose. The return, predicted and accomplished, was to them an outstanding proof of the providential ordering of the world by Jehovah, that is, by the God who had been continuously revealing Himself to His chosen people, as the God of creation, history and redemption. Indeed, the history of this people became such an evidence of God and of providence, that we today can look back upon it and strengthen our faith. It would seem, then, that the Sunday public reading of the Scriptures should make more of this marvelous history, and that is what the New Lectionary tries to do. There is room for discussion as to whether to put the return (Ezra 1) where we have it, or on Whitsunday, but it was decided to put on the latter the renewal of the covenant of the law, after the joyful completion of the Temple. Certainly the return belongs somewhere after Easter.

The New Testament lesson, St. John's account of the reinstatement of St. Peter in the Apostolic office and the symbolic teaching of the draft of fishes contained in the unbroken net, was selected, not as correlative to Ezra 1, though there is a certain congruousness between the two, but as a continuation of the record of the great forty days, a portion of Scripture teaching ignored in the present Prayer Book Sunday lessons. Even the admirable Epistles and Gospels for this season are inadequate.

The second lesson for the morning supplements the Gospel for the day, the Good Shepherd by the undershepherd. The closing verses, about St. John tarrying until the Lord should come, are of particular interest and value as helping us to understand the so-called second Advent as beginning with Pentecost, and also explaining how St. John could write his Gospel.

In the evening, the leading part is taken by the second lesson, St. Paul's discussion, in continuation of last Sunday evening's lesson, and in line with the Collects for these two Sundays, of the Divinely intended results of justification, viz: a new and risen life, in union with the risen Conqueror of sin and death. (Note—Justification may be fruitfully studied in connection with the morning historical course, to wit: the re-establishment of an erring and forgiven people in Canaan as an act of free grace. See Ritschl in loc.) This carries out the teaching of Gospel and Epistle, urging the following of the Christ, as opposed to the notion of "resting in a completed salvation".

The Old Testament lesson from Jeremiah, continuation of last Sunday evening's lesson on the New Covenant, though recently used, seems justified for a Sunday reading at this time.

The week day lessons are (1) Old Testament, morning, continuation of the prophet's discussion of topics related to exile and return, redemption and life. (2) New Testament selections bearing on resurrection and eternal life. (3) Evening, Old Testament, true Shepherds and the New Covenant. (4) Evening, New Testament, practical conclusions from the death and resurrection of our Lord, as regards the Christian life here and hereafter.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

Absolve, O Lord, we beseech thee, the souls of Thy servants who have laid down their lives for us and our cause, and the souls of all the faithful departed, from the sins which in this life, through frailty, they committed; and whatsoever was wanting to the completeness of their penitence, do thou mercifully supply by Thine infinite merits.

Rest eternal, grant to them, O Lord.
And let light perpetual shine upon them.
May they rest in peace.

O God the Ruler of all governments and peoples, Whose chastisement is our healing, and Whose pity is our salvation; extend to us thy compassion, that peace restored by thy will, may be used for our amendment to the honor of thy name; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

O Lord, we beseech thee, let Thy continual pity cleanse and defend thy Church; and, because it cannot continue in safety without Thy succor, preserve it evermore by Thy help and goodness; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

American Church Building Fund Commission

At its meeting on March 21st, held at the Church Missions House, New York City, loans amounting to $24,000 were voted to the following parishes and missions: St. James' Parish, Fresno, California; St. Peter's Church, Lake Andes, South Dakota; St. Paul's Church, Brookings, South Dakota, and St. Michael's Mission, Wind River, Wyoming. Gifts amounting to $5,700 were voted to the following parishes and missions: St. Mary's Church, Waynesboro, Pennsylvania; St. John's Chapel, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; St. Paul's Church, Kumagai, Japan; Grace Church, Broad Brook, Connecticut; Church of the Atonement, San Diego, Texas; St. Andrew's Church, Port Aransas, Texas; the Church of the Good Shepherd and Holy Comforter, La Grange, Georgia; the Mission Church at Guadalajara, Mexico; Grace Church, The Plains, Virginia, and Christ Church, East Norwalk, Connecticut.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

WITH THE POETS

Under this heading we plan to print from week to week poems of helpful character, old and new, famous or little known, but worthy of preservation. This corner will be in the care of the Rev. Francis L. Palmer, Rector of Ascension Church, Stillwater, Minnesota. Mr. Palmer was for some time at Seabury Divinity School, as teacher of Ethics, Christian Evidences, and other subjects. He is the author of the "Life of Bishop Gilbert." He will try to present each selection in authentic and complete form. Where abridgment is needed, on account of the length, this will be indicated.

Opportunity

This I beheld, or dreamed it in a dream:—
There spread a cloud of dust along a plain;
And underneath the cloud, or in it, raged
A furious battle, and men yelled, and swords
Shocked upon swords and shields. A prince's banner
Wavered, then staggered backward, hemmed by foes.
A craven hung along the battle's edge,
And thought, "Had I a sword of keener steel—
That blue blade that the king's son bears,—but this Blunt thing—!" he snapt and flung it from his hand,
And lowering crept away and left the field.
Then came the king's son, wounded, sore bestead,
And weaponless, and saw the broken sword,
Hilt-buried in the dry and trodden sand,
And ran and snatched it, and with battle shout
Lifted afresh he hewed his enemy down,
And saved a great cause that heroic day.

THE MINISTRY OF THE SICK

Catechism: Office for the Visitation of the Sick. (p. 281.)

Prop. 1.

Christ came into the world to redeem men from sin and to give them the gift of eternal life.

In His office of Redeemer, He not only ministered to men's souls but He also healed the sick of their diseases.

On one occasion (St. Matt. ix:1-8) He explains why He healed men's bodies. "That ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins, then saith He to the sick of the palsy, 'Arise, take up thy bed and go unto thine house.'"

The healing of the sick was a sign to the Jews that He had the power, which He had claimed, of pardoning sin.

The human body is mortal and therefore subject to sickness and death.

Even those whom our Lord healed of disease and raised from the dead, afterward fell sick and died.

Our Lord performed no permanent cures, nor did He give it to mortal man not to die, but rather by example as well as precept, He showed that it was through death we should enter into life.

"Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."

We may therefore expect some time to fall mortally ill and die, for that is what has happened to the whole race, and it is also what happened to our Lord Himself, for "He was crucified, dead and buried."

Any system which attempts to persuade you that it can cause you to escape death is simply appealing to your credulity. For Christ did not evade suffering or death, but endured both as our example.

Prop. 2.

But the Church, like her blessed Lord, has a tender care of your physical health, and for this cause she has built many hospitals and performed many wonderful cures through prayer and sacrament; but as' 'it is appointed unto men once to die," the Church does not guarantee a cure, nor claim that she can ward off death permanently from her children.

Rather the Church teaches that "through the grave and gate of death we enter into our joyful resurrection."

The Church always preserves the proportion of faith, and like our Blessed Lord, she uses the ministry of healing in order to bring men to her greater function, which is the grace of pardoning sinners that they may inherit eternal life.

So we may seek, as did our Blessed Lord, freedom from pain and suffering, but we must do it as He did. "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me, but nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt."

Prop. 3.

The method by which the Church invites her children to seek the ministry of healing is first of all by prayer.

If you fall sick you may call upon your minister to pray for your recovery, either at the altar or at your bedside, and I have seen men brought back from the edge of the grave by the prayers of the faithful.

But even our Lord required that those seeking recovery should ask Him to relieve their need. In no case do we read that He went about healing the sick promiscuously, but in each case either the sick man or his friends applied to our Lord.

So if you want the prayers of the Church you should ask for them, either for yourselves or for your friends, for that very asking is the sign of faith, which is a vital part of the process.

You should either send word to your priest that you would like the prayers of the Church, or else that you wish him to come to your bedside.

Nor has any physician any right to prevent you from this means, which he may not believe in, but which you do believe in, as helpful to your recovery.

Besides this, each Christian has the right to ask his priest for the rite of unction.

The scriptures say, "If any man be sick, let him call for the presbyters of the Church; let them pray over him, annointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." St. James v:14.

And in this annointing we are assured of two things, (1) that our sins will be forgiven us; (2) that the prayers of the faithful may recover our physical strength.

It is a strange thing that so few people use this privilege which the Church puts in our hands, and which is far more efficacious when used than any other system which has arisen outside of the Church, and copied various parts of the Church's practice and then claimed to be superior to the Church.

Surely if we do not use the prayer and sacrament which Christ bestowed upon His Church, we have no right to complain that we have been neglected by the Church.

Surely you must ask if you wish to receive, and if you have not the faith to ask, then the Church has not the power to help you.

We cannot urge too strongly that the children of the Church ask for the presbyter of the Church when they are ill. (The Roman doctrine of extreme unction is a curious perversion of the primitive practice of the Church, for it is used only when there is no hope of recovery.)

TEXT

"The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." St. James v:15.

QUESTIONS

1. What was Christ's chief purpose in coming into the world?
2. What relation did healing the sick have to this purpose?
3. What can you say finally happened to all that Christ healed? What to Christ Himself?
4. Can we expect always to be healed from sickness?
5. In what spirit should we seek to be healed?
6. What method has the Church provided for our healing?
7. What is absolutely essential to our availing ourselves of this privilege?

TEXTS

1. St. Matt. ix:1-8.
2. St. Matt. xvii:14-21.
3. St. Luke xvii:11-19.
4. Acts iii:1-11.
5. St. James v:14-16.

He Was Properly Instructed

A strict Baptist mother visited her son in one of the cantonments on a recent Sunday. She was deeply solicitous that her boy should receive proper religious instruction.

"Is there a Baptist preacher in camp?" asked the mother. The son did not know, but he would inquire. Yes, one was to hold a service that afternoon and give an address in a Y. M. C. A. hut. The two went and heard an inspiring address on how Christ is always the comrade of all men who fight for righteousness, even when they are not conscious of His presence.

The mother was delighted and after the service told the preacher how happy she was that her son could hear such good Baptist doctrine.

"But, madam," said the speaker, "I am not a Baptist, I am an Episcopalian."—Ladies' Home Journal.

PASTOR and PEOPLE

The relationship between pastor and people is a reciprocal one. If the minister has a duty to his congregation, not less does the latter owe one in return.

If the pulpit has its responsibilities, there is on the part of the pew an obligation not less distinct, though often not clearly recognized. Doubtless a major portion of every congregation is just, appreciative and loyal to the Church and to the pastor, both in his official capacity and personality, but there are none of us who may not occasionally ask our own hearts, "Do we do our whole duty"? Certainly there are in every hundred a larger or smaller percentage of those who for no other cause than thoughlessness, and with no worse motive than carelessness, evince a very lively appreciation of the clerical "mote", coupled with an extremely minute perception of the lay "beam."

Laying aside all questions of charity in judgment, let us bear in mind considerations of simple justice in the verdict that is so often hastily rendered, concerning the "doings" or "not-doings" of these men who are, so to speak, "set upon a hill", and frequently judged by a critic whose point of view is from one very restricted side of the same hill's base. One must sometimes wonder, with inward chuckles, how the self-constituted critic would look were the positions reversed, and the clergy to evince as minute and censorious interest in his conduct of professional and personal affairs.

Might it not be well to suppose that our "minister", of whatever rank, knows quite as well as we how to conduct his charge? That he is quite as anxious for the success of his "business" (which is, too, the Lord's business) as we could be, and that he can see it from more sides than we? There is probably no one thing that wounds in so tender a spot as injustice from those who ought to know better, or, at any rate, should be chary in speaking adversely; yet I doubt if there be, from highest to lowest, a member of our clergy (of our world in general, for that matter) who have not at some time so suffered.

There be shallow minds that consider fault-finding ("criticism" they term it) an evidence of superiority on their part; it more often betokens sour temper and mental laziness, or lack of ability to weigh.

As to those instances where corrupt life, inattention to duty, or absolute inability to preach, should debar, there is nothing to be said here. Such cases are few. The average ability among the clergy is, to say the least, quite as high as the average in the pew, and there are many who tower. For the very reason that his office brings him so prominently forward, it is true that the minister is oft a subject of criticism. Because people, almost unconsciously, associate perfection with that office, is every imperfection so glaringly apparent to the onlooker who does not stop to think?

There be those in this world who deem every possible virtue included (on the minister's side) as an equivalent for salary to be paid him. Pray pardon here a short story. Long years ago I heard a dear old gentleman say to a young lady just beginning housekeeping (and somewhat appalled by the servant troubles predicted by her seniors), "My child, don't expect absolute perfection in your servant; you can't buy the cardinal virtues for dollars and cents." Said the young housekeeper, "I'll try to remember I'm not 'absolute perfection' myself."

If we be of those who consider the clergy no better nor worse than other men, subject to like limitations, were it not as well to mete out to them a leniency we'd desire for ourselves; a remembrance of mitigating circumstances when arraigning them before the bar of our opinion for laxness in some parochial service, deficiency in oratory, insufficient intellectual scintillation, or such?

If we have any respect and reverence for those in official position, any love for the pastor personally, and loyalty—what then? Rest assured that a great deal, a very great deal, depends upon us; and upon the use we made of our opportunities, no less than the character of what is offered us, here and hereafter. In years of such attendance my experience as a listener has ranged from some of the great preachers of the earth to some who would be termed very poor ones. No one more heartily enjoys and values fine oratory, eloquence, deep learning; yet it may be truthfully said that no sermon ever spoken in my hearing has failed to carry some message worth having; some thought, if but by suggestion, worth taking home, to remember or dilate upon. Your very attitude of receptivity is a value to you. If the preacher cannot tell you something you never knew, he may recall, either by analogy or contrast, something you did know. If he gives you no new thought of value, he can revive an old one; and just bear in mind that if one office of the Holy Ghost is to "teach," another "is to bring all things to your remembrance."

Do we stand ready to receive from our clergy, or do we wait to be hammered upon like an obdurat metal?

Do we realize (the Holy Apostle did) what it is to have "the care of the church" pressing on heart and shoulders?

Do we give them the opportunity to help us find "the straight and narrow way" through our personal difficulties, by going direct to them for help?

Do we complain "we scarcely know them personally because they visit us so seldom," when we might occasionally visit them?

Do we remember how many griefs their sympathetic hearts help bear for their flocks, when we see them look depressed or worn?

Do we remember the mere writing of a sermon is a small matter compared with the preparation for it? That in a few pages may be condensed days of study of various authors or authorities, and oft amid manifold interruptions?

Do we give them our support, moral and financial, remembering that who, or what we pray for we work for; and what we work and pray for we "stand" for? How loyal are we?

Oh, believe me, nothing worth having can be one-sided; no service, no loyalty, no love! Think of it; try it. Even to the benediction, which may be reciprocal; for when the minister, be he of high or low degree, pronounces, "And may the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be amongst you, and remain with you always," your heart may well, in gratitude and reverence and tenderness, interpolate, "And you."
—Living Church.

A basket supper was given in connection with the annual parish meeting of Trinity Church, Iowa City, Ia., at the Hotel Burkley. The reports showed the parish to be in a flourishing condition. There was a substantial increase in the Easter offering over past years. Bishop Longley officiated and preached at the services on Easter Day. The Rev. Dr. Watson of Holy Trinity Church, Paris, France, was rector for a number of years of the Iowa City parish.

Jesus of Nazareth Passeth By

Lord, can a sad, unworthy one,
Who only cries, "Undone! undone"!
Turn to the holy, just and true,
And ask, "What wilt Thou have me do?"
Oh, it would gladden heart and eye—
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by".

Once we were blind—what joy to see,
Through the blood shed on Calvary.
Once faith was feeble, shadows dark
Quite overcast our little barque;
Our anchorage sure beyond the sky—
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by".

Life is a pilgrimage at best—
Soon do the weary feet find rest,
Rest, calm and peaceful, pure and deep,
Rest that is earnest, blissful sleep.
Oh, Saviour, list my yearning cry—
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by".

Saviour, I come, I come to Thee,
With yearning heart, with bended knee.
No mean lip-service thus I bring,
But simply to Thy Cross would cling.
Though blinding tears may dim the eye—
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by".

What joy to lay the armor down—
Always the cross before the crown—
After the suffering, the bliss—
After the death-throe, blessedness.
Then the full bliss without alloy—
"Jesus of Nazareth passeth by".

Meeting Of Religious Education Board Of Diocese Of Mich. City

At a recent meeting of the Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Michigan City, held at Howe School, Howe, Ind., definite plans for the second annual diocesan summer school were formulated. The school is to be held at Vawter Park, Lake Wawasee, Ind., June 24 to July 2. The purpose of this school is the training of Church school teachers, teachers in mission study classes, and all clergy and laity interested in religious education. The place for the school is ideal, it being on the north shore of the largest lake in Indiana, where is located the summer home of Bishop White, with All Saints' Chapel within the grounds. The lake, with facilities for boating, bathing and other sports, will form an excellent opportunity for recreation outside of study hours. Special arrangements can be made with the Vawter Park Hotel for the accommodation of all who will attend the school. The Diocesan Board of Religious Education has appointed to act with them as a board of directors Mrs. Ferdinand Boedefeld, president of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Miss Alice Goldthwait, educational secretary of the Auxiliary. A prospectus of the school, with the program and other information, will be published soon. Mrs. Boedefeld of Elkhart, Ind., will continue as treasurer of the school, and Miss Goldthwait of Marion, Ind., is the corresponding secretary.

Because the Rev. R. H. White, secretary of the Board of Religious Education has been called to the colors, to serve as a chaplain in the United States army, the Rev. John F. Plummer of Kokomo, Ind., was appointed to serve in his place as secretary of the Board.

Dr. Watson Of Paris To Return To U. S.

The Rev. Dr. S. N. Watson has resigned from the rectorship of the American Church of the Holy Trinity and been made rector-emeritus at Paris, France, where he has rendered notable service not only to the English speaking people to whom he has faithfully ministered during the fifteen years of his rectorship at the French capital, but especially in recent time to war sufferers. His work has been international in its scope of usefulness. Both the Doctor and Mrs. Watson have won a large place for themselves in the hearts of the French and other peoples, and have been decorated with medals and shown many honors by the French government. They will return to America for a needed rest. The Rev. F. W. Beekman, sometime Dean of the Pro-Cathedral of the Nativity, South Bethlehem, Pa., until he resigned last year to engage in war service, has been elected the successor to Dr. Watson. The Dean is residing in Paris at the American Soldiers' and Sailors' Club.

Personal Mention

A cable from Bishop Lloyd dated at Monrovia, Liberia, was received at the Church Missions House on April 4th. Bishop Lloyd says that both he and Archdeacon Schofield are well, and that the date of their sailing from Monrovia is uncertain.

The Rev. Newton Middleton, Rector of Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., recently assumed charge of All Saint's Church in the suburb of Park View, and is doing a very encouraging work there. This work is in addition to his duties as rector of Trinity Church.

The Rev. George C. Dunlop, rector of the Church of the Advent, Cincinnati, O., was one of the noon-day Lenten preachers at Christ Church, Springfield, Ill., of which he was formerly rector. From there he went to St. Louis and accompanied the Archbishop of York to Cincinnati.

The Rev. George D. Child, in charge of St. John's Church, Springfield, Ill., and of the missions at Elkhart and and Mt. Pulaski, has enlisted in the engineering corps of the Canadian forces. Mr. Child is a native of England and came to this country from Canada where he was ordained to the priesthood. He is married and has two children. After enlistment he was given a week's furlough at home prior to transfer either to Toronto or Quebec for training.

Our New York Letter

Reports from all sides indicate a Lent unusually well observed, at least so far as church attendance was concerned. Among the parish Churches not depending on outside help for special services, St. Thomas', Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street stands out most prominently. There was a daily preaching service at 5 o'clock, including Saturday, and the Rector, Dr. Stires, was always the preacher. The average attendance at this rather awkward hour was probably five hundred, one of the largest congregations being on Easter Even, a time when most Church people have a let-up for a day of rest before receiving the Easter Communion. Though preaching twice every Sunday and every week day afternoon, when it is customary elsewhere to have outside preachers, and though obliged to speak frequently at other times, as well as prepare a Confirmation class for Palm Sunday, with all the other anxious cares of administering a great parish, the Three Hours' service of Good Friday, when the church, holding 1,800, was full, found Dr. Stires almost as resonant and clear of voice as ever, and his last Lenten address on Saturday afternoon was a masterpiece of churchly eloquence.

The congregations of other Churches, large and small, were as large as in any past year, and sometimes larger. St. Mary the Virgin was full all through the Three-Hour service, when the Rector, Dr. Barry, preached. The Church of the Ascension held large congregations at the same time, listening to the forceful addresses of Dr. Grant, interspersed with extraordinarily good Passion music by the regular choir. Most other Churches were satisfied to have only congregational singing.

The sermons everywhere echoed the sombre note of world tragedy so fearfully enacted in the person of Christ, and by the sufferers of the present international war.

"Good Friday has attained a degree of observance in this country which would have seemed incredible to Americans of 1850. The change since then does not, however, necessarily indicate the increasing hold of a severe churchly view. It is, rather, that Good Friday has come to be accepted as one of the significant days of Christendom, respect for which is fitting on public and, one might say, international grounds. The growing tendency in the United States to mark the day may be thought of as a part of our new world-sense. From the religious festivals and holy days of other nations we do not hold ourselves aloof in the old way. On the peculiar bitterness to devout souls of the fact that Good Friday this year comes in the midst of a terrible slaughter of Christians by Christians, we need not dwell."

Easter Day

As is the rule everywhere, the larger parish churches were "packed" on Easter Day, the regular congregations, in most instances, having been let in at back doors, and by card. The day was beautiful and mild in sunshine, and the "Easter parade" on Fifth Avenue, which is no more than the outpouring of the congregations on that great thoroughfare at the end of the services, was as gay as at any time in past years. The newspapers essayed to give lists of distinguished people attending such churches as Grace, St. Bartholomew's and St. Thomas', and had picturesque descriptions of the decorations and the crowds, all of which smacked of the extended notices given to an operatic performance. But it would be unfair to make the Churches responsible for this sort of thing, and, on the whole, it is a matter for devout rejoicing that people did "turn out" for the Easter services, in spite of the awkward "daylight saving law" having made, for example, the 6 o'clock celebration virtually come at 5 a. m. The effect of this change was to render the earlier hours not as well attended as in former years, and the later hours better than ever. Perhaps, in future, it would be well always to have the "late celebration" an hour earlier than the standard time, even under daylight saving ordinances. Easter seems to be the one day in the ecclesiastical year when Church people do not object to being routed out of a comfortable bed to greet the Lord.

Dr. Manning at Camp Upton

The 302nd Engineers, to which Dr. Manning was attached as chaplain, sailed the other day, but Dr. Manning remained on in Camp Upton for more permanent and general work. All the chief officers of that Long Island camp agree that his usefulness among them is so great that he can hardly be spared, and his vestry in New York City feel that certain legal matters in the famous old parish would be imperiled if he was so far out of reach as France. Other volunteer workers in Camp Upton are delighted that he is to stay among them. They say that his being free from any official alliance with any regiment, and his appearing in clerical uniform, while still in the official khaki, has vastly increased his opportunities of spiritual helpfulness among the soldiers. He wears, by the way, the clerical cotta and a "rabat" of khaki, with a silver cross on either shoulder, the cap and the rest of the uniform being quite soldierly in color and design. Your correspondent saw him in camp this week. While not so tall, there is something about the rector of Trinity which reminds him of the Bishop of London in uniform. There is the same alert and clever expression of the face, with its mingling of ecclesiastical devotion and scholarly mentality. Like the English Bishop, the American rector is more interested in his work among men than he is in denominational distinctions. He said that his months in Camp Upton had been wonderfully helpful to himself and he was disposed to think that such training would be the making of any clergyman, from the standpoint of manly human interest.

Few people realize, perhaps, the importance of the fact that the rector of what is commonly called the "richest parish in the world" should so gladly and willingly "rank it" among young soldiers, without the assistance of servant or secretary. His duties included even the care of his own room, and he has at the same time been unable to put aside the care of "all the Churches" of a diocesan-sized parish sixty miles away in the great city. It shows his devotion and loyalty to this new work that, in Holy Week, because the regiment he was then attached to was in the throes of final preparation for the journey "over there", he stood by the camp while the honor of being the Archbishop of York's host was his at the rectory of old Trinity. He is intense about the war, and he explains his intensity by exclaiming, "How could one be otherwise? The ten commandments are at stake"!

The Chapels of the Tongues

The seven chapels of the tongues surrounding the ambulatory of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine have now been consecrated, the last two being the chapels of St. Martin of Tours and St. Ansgarius, recently consecrated. The Chapel of St. Martin will be known also as the Huguenot Chapel, and will be used on special occasions for services in the French language. This chapel is in memory of William Ponsonby Furniss. St. Ansgarius is in memory of the late Rector of Grace Church, Dr. Wm. R. Huntington, and will be the special home of Swedish services.

It was the original intention of the diocesan authorities that a chapel be assigned for services in each of the important foreign languages. This has been done, the Chapel of St. Ambrose being designated for services in Italian, the Chapel of St. James for services in Spanish, the Chapel of St. Ansgarius for services in Scandinavian, the British Chapel of St. Colombo for services in English, the Chapel of St. Saviour for services in Oriental languages, the Chapel of St. Martin for services in French, and the Chapel of St. Boniface for services in German.

Thus far, foreign language services have been held only in Italian and Serbian. No objection has been made to the authorities of the Cathedral Diocese against using the Chapel of St. Boniface for services in German, although Dean Howard Chandler Robbins is quoted as saying that there was scarcely any likelihood of German services being held in the chapel during the war.

Work on the nave, following the completion of the crypt walls and floor this summer, is to be suspended until after the war, but there is good reason to hope that this magnificent metropolitan church will be seen finished inside the next decade, although spires and ornaments may have to await another generation of church builders.

cured the services of the Rev. Charton S. Turquand of St. Peter's Church, Sheboygan Falls, Wis., as curate, who entered upon his work on Low Sunday.

Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire introduced a resolution in the United States Senate, which was unanimously adopted without debate on the 1st inst., requesting President Wilson to proclaim a "day of public humiliation, prayer and fasting to be observed by the people of the United States, with religious solemnity and the offering of fervent supplications to Almighty God for the safety and welfare of our cause, and His blessing on our arms and speedy restoration of an honorable and lasting peace."

The Church of the Holy Apostles, the newest Mission in the city of Chicago, established thirteen months ago, is making remarkable progress and promises in the near future to become one of the strong parishes of the Diocese. 107 persons made their communion on Easter Day and the offering amounted to $466.00. The Lenten offering of the Sunday School was $21.44. The Rev. Edwin S. White is the priest in charge. Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, field secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for the Middle West, is clerk of the Mission and deeply interested in its upbuilding.

A large and deeply interested congregation assembled in old Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., Thursday evening, March 28th, to take part in the ceremonies attending the unfurling of the service flag of that parish. The rector, the Rev. Newton Middleton, read the service and the Rt. Rev. Dr. Arthur C. Thomson, Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese, preached the sermon. There are forty-six men in the army and navy represented by stars on the flag. On the previous evening the sacred cantata, "Penitence, Pardon and Peace," was very creditably presented by the choir before a large and appreciative audience [illegible] uniforms and have their regular drills and gun practice. One of his old students is now in France, "only 21, but the oldest of the company". The Easter offering of the Church was $104.78. The children's mites were $32.62, which were taken up at their evening service, at which time each "soldier" present received a carnation, and potted plants were distributed to each child. Easter lilies were sent to the sick; also the grown ones were remembered, as the usual custom. Rev. Johnston built for himself a rock house at Eagle Lake, Wis., where he spends three months' summer vacation, with one or two of his boys for company, enjoying his boat on the lake.

The Church of England still maintains its marvelous record for missionary giving in spite of the heavy drains of war. During 1917 the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel received $70,000 more than during 1916. There was a gratifying increase from every source except legacies. The fact that these fell off $10,000, as compared with 1916 emphasizes all the more the splendid giving of the living donors. The total income for the year was $1,215,000. Only in three other years has the income risen to a higher level, and in each of these some specially munificent bequest raised the total beyond comparison. Never in any previous year have the offerings from parishes and the gifts from individuals been so large as during 1917. The year, with all its difficulties and disappointments, its trials and sorrows, will stand out on the S. P. G. records as a period remarkable for devotion to the great cause which the venerable society has for 217 years so successfully promoted.

"We begin our new year's work," says Bishop Montgomery, "in a spirit of thanksgiving and hope. It is easier now than ever before to plead the cause of the Church beyond the seas. Only those who do not care to have a part in Christ's final victory can venture to refuse to respond to His command, 'Go ye therefore, and teach all nations.'"

Interpreting Christ

The world and worldly folk are always interpreting Christ in the terms of the world.

But Christ cannot be judged by man's judgment, for God seeth not as man seeth.

The standard of excellence set by Christ was not that of numbers but of truth; not that of finances but of mercy; not that of great buildings, but of justice; and unless large numbers, great sums of money and fine buildings are instruments of truth, mercy and justice, they are nothing.

Witness Christ standing on the Hill of Olivet, and looking west toward the magnificent building known as Herod's temple: "See these great stones. The time shall come when one stone will not remain upon another."

The magnificence produced by wealth, station and quantity makes no impression upon God. With Him "the rich and the poor meet together and the Lord is the Maker of them all."

What does appeal to God?

Christ gave His approval to a humble publican, a social outcast confessing his sins in the temple; to a heretical Samaritan going out of his way to do a deed of mercy; to a patient beggar lying helpless at a rich man's gate; to a woman of questionable character who annointed His feet and loved Him much, and therefore was forgiven much; to an unselfish pauper who gave two mites which was all that she had; to a penitent thief who asked Him to make him a better man; to a pagan centurion who had absolute faith in Christ's divine power; to another publican of small stature but a big heart; to a Canaanitish woman who persisted in prayer over obstacles; and in commending these, He condemned the cultured Pharisee who felt superior to other men; the orthodox priest and levite who passed by on the other side; the rich man so intent on his own affairs that he did not see the poor; Simon the patronizing host who neglected the ordinary civilities to Christ; those who gave large sums to the treasury in an ostentatious manner; the ribald thief who remained impenitent; the disciples who were dubious about Christ's power; all these and more Christ condemned.

Let us make this a personal matter of real self-examination—not of the Church's shortcomings, nor of our neighbor's faults, but of the unreality of our own discipleship inasmuch as we live after men's judgments and not after Christ's example.

And that moves me to comment upon the oft repeated accusation that "the Church has failed."

This is really a great compliment to the Church. For nobody says that the lodges have failed; or the universities have failed, or the commercial clubs have failed.

It is like standing beside an automobile and saying, "the engine has given out." And it is no good to say that the magneto is all right, or the tires are sound, or the brakes are working.

That which has failed is the only thing upon which you can depend to make the machine go.

It is really a compliment to the engine that it is the one thing needful.

But how often do we discern that after all it is not the engine that has failed but only the driver? The engine is all there. It just needs to be connected, or a little more oil, or some gasoline, or something of that sort.

The truth is that the Church has never failed. Those who are driving the machine sometimes fail, but never the engine—that has stood the test of nineteen centuries.

But, of course, if it is more important to keep up other activities and let the engine run out of gasoline, you musn't be surprised if the engine does fail, and no fault of the engine either.

If people want to substitute liberty loans and knitting for prayer and service, they can, but they don't have to do it.

The engine will go for a long time on its momentum, but,—when it stops and there is no prayer or sacrament, we will be no better than the Huns; for we will have cast Christ out, because we were busy with many things.

U. S. Will Be Unhealthy for "Hyphenates" After the War

Henceforth this nation will be a mighty unhealthy place for "hyphenates." In the past we have been altogether too lax in this respect, and we shall atone for our indifference by the shedding of blood. The war will intensify Americanism, and in the future there will be but one Nation, one Flag, and one Language. Our welcome will be just as cordial for the alien, but if he comes to stay he must embrace citizenship. The figure is not without a parallel in our Church. Today the Church is appealing to only one percent. of the population in this country—and why? Simply because her membership is altogether too hyphenated. She is regarded by too many as simply another church." If somebody becomes offended they straightway become a Methodist—or some other "ist." The children of some of our prominent members are regular attendants upon other Sunday Schools, simply because "their friends go there." Some of our clergy have become so "broad" that they have all but expelled the Prayer Book from their services. The Catholic doctrine of our Spiritual Mother has become so mutilated that it is hardly recognizable. The writer knows of a prominent member who gave $500 to the Red Cross and refused to increase his monthly subscription to the Church 50 cents, because, he said, "The Red Cross does so much good." He was rather astonished when informed that it was the Church which first made the Red Cross possible. The same thing applies to the Y. M. C. A. and many other altruistic agencies which are now doing such a splendid and noble work for humanity. But shall we permit the very foundations of Christian benevolence to rot and totter, while we are so busy sustaining the superstructure? Shall the home fires be permitted to die out because of our indifference and stinginess? The Church is the bulwark of the nation, and the Kaiser would rather see the altars of Christendom deserted and destroyed than to capture Russia. Never while a shred of loyalty or a drop of blood remains to flow in our veins. The nation places a high value upon the Church. This fact is demonstrated by the exemption of her clergy from military draft; the nation wants these men right where they are, and to hinder their work by opposition or lack of financial support is high treason. If these words sound harsh, it is only because the crisis of the hour demands plain speaking. The war is cutting into our ranks, and perhaps the end is not yet. Our patriotism must not be one-sided. Many have been called to the colors—ALL are called to the Cross. Alike we all must share the scarifice. There must be no "slackers," nor hyphenated Christians. If, as a Church, we are going to arise to the emergencies of the present, we must present a united front. "Party" lines must disappear, and personal whims must be forever subordinated to the great task before us. The full Gospel of the Blessed Christ must be preached without fear nor favor. The laity must be taught to understand and appreciate the value of the seven-fold Sacraments. The people must be inspired to give as they have never given before to sustain the work of the Kingdom. The very principles of our American liberty were nursed from the breast of our Spiritual Mother, and now her sons and daughters grown to maturity must prove themselves her defenders and supporters in the day of adversity. Let us rally to our task with an unquenchable zeal and stand by the Church that stands by the nation.—C. Edwin Brown.

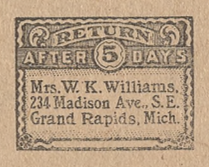
THE ARCHBISHOP'S VISIT AT EVANSTON

The Parish Visitor gives the following account of Archbishop Lang's recent visit to St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Illinois:

The sermon was a heartening appeal to the nation and to the Church to "live at the level of its choice,' to face sacrifice and suffering with courage and patience and determination undismayed. Not once was there the slightest tone of rancor or hatred of the enemy. His cruelty and unfairness in attacking defenseless cities was stated, but there was no hatred, not even a suggestion of retaliating—only the conviction of the utter necessity of saving the world from the domination of ruthless military ambition, the quiet resolve of the nation bound to honor its spoken word.

The Church was crowded to the doors; both transepts were filled; there were people sitting in the choir room and sacristy; a hundred stood at the rear of the Church, and the Chapel was filled; there were even some in the rector's study sitting beside the windows that opened into the Church. It is estimated, from a count of sittings and chairs and an estimate of those standing, that over eleven hundred persons were present. The procession was long and beautiful, with the British and American flags carried side by side in the midst of the choir. Fifteen acolytes assisted. Following the choir were Dean Thomas F. Holgate, acting president of Northwestern University, and several members of the faculties of the University and of Garrett Biblical Institute. The trustees of the university were represented by Mr. James A. Patten and others. In addressing the academic delegation before the service, His Grace expressed his pleasure in meeting the representatives of the learned institutions of this country, who contributed so much to the strengthening and enlightenment of our real ruler, public opinion. Among the clergy present were Dean Bell, our chaplain at Great Lakes, and Dr. Iremonger, the Archbishop's chaplain.



The musical part of the service was rendered beautifully by a full choir.

It was a wonderful service; we were privileged to hear one of the most prominent and most gifted representatives of the Church of England and of the British government; but that it not what remains with us in memory. It is rather the impression of a character; of courage unweakened by the awful sacrifices and the strain of three and a half years of the war, such sacrifice and strain as no generation heretofore has ever been called upon to bear; and of a Christian sweetness and gentility of spirit which outrage and cruelty can never ruffle, but only make more determined the conviction that no victory by compromise must be allowed to ruthlessness, and that war to the end—but war without hatred—is the call of God.

Easter was a perfect day at the National Capital, and all the churches were filled with reverent and earnest people.

Theological Students Becoming Extinct

By Rev. Paul Macou, Secretary Collegiate Department General Board of Religious Education

Seminaries Lost Twenty-three Per Cent of Their Students

THE REMEDY

The searching out of qualified men for the ministry at home and in foreign lands must become the major task of those in authority—Bishops, Priests, Sunday School superintendents, teachers, directors of Brotherhoods of St. Andrew, leaders of boys' work, college professors and lay workers of all organizations. Sermons must be preached showing the central place of the Church in the days of world reconstruction, so that fathers and mothers will be proud to have their sons ordained to be leaders of the Church as they now are to have them commissioned in the service of the nation.

There are four classes to whom the appeal should especially be directed.

1. Older men, who can be pried loose from their professions, and with such training as they need sent into the vocation of the ministry. The war has shown that no man is too wedded to his work to be able to leave it if the cause is sufficient. There are always a few such men as "specials" in the seminaries. They are the only men who can stop the gap in the line of ordinations, and enable the Church to hold her own until reinforcements come from the seminaries two or three years after the end of the war. Let every minister bring such men to the Bishop for advice and counsel at the time of his annual visitation.

2. The soldiers, whose hearts are open to hear the call of the world's spiritual need, just as they have already responded to the call of moral and social need. The Civil War has shown us that we can expect much from this source. Chaplains, Y. M. C. A. secretaries, Red Cross and Brotherhood of St. Andrew workers have a great obligation laid upon them in this matter.

3. College students, who are not of draft age. The Government will not call these underclassmen save in case of great necessity. They have been told they are in college preparing for the days of reconstruction. If the opportunity to serve the world through the Church is laid before them, many will heed the call to the sacred ministry. For this our ministers in college towns and the Y. M. C. A. college secretaries are mainly responsible, but the student's own rector is not thereby excused from writing and speaking to "his boy."

4. High school boys, who make vocational decisions to a degree that is not fully recognized. The pressure will be almost overwhelming to make the boy choose a business or a mechanical training course, and to go to work as soon as school days are over. Every Church worker that touches the boy of right calibre must urge him to take a cultural course and enter college. The needs of the Church must be clearly laid before him. If he is mature enough he can make an intelligent decision, at least along general lines of Christian service.

If this be applicable to the boy in the distractions of public school life, how much more does it apply to the boy in the Church preparatory school, where conditions are simpler? Principals and masters in such schools have their greatest opportunity now to show that their schools exist to discover and develop the leaders of the Church.

A Caution

This is not an appeal for quantity alone. Our ministers had better be too few than of poor quality. The evil in the present situation lies in the fact that Bishops are forced to accept most of those that apply because they have parishes and missions which must be manned. If the Church seriously enters on a movement to find men for her ministry, she can place her standards at the highest notch, and rest assured that she will secure the men who will reach them. What is needed is not a wholesale call and sentimental God-speed to all volunteers, but a careful "hand-picking" of the choicest boys and college students and older men. This is not overlooking the divine element in the call. Human agents are needed to phrase it. The Holy Spirit will concentrate our common sense.

Suppose the War Has an Early Ending

Many optimists will say we are crying "wolf", and that an early ending of the war will remove our sense of fear. But the situation was startling and dangerous even before the war.

Statistics previously published by this Board, and by various missions of the Church, show that we are ordaining each year only enough men to hold our own. Thus our communicants increased in the quarter century ending in 1913 four times as fast as our clergy. The ratio of communicants to clergy in our Church has increased twice as fast as the average for seven other leading communions. We have nearly twice as many parishes and mission stations as we have clergy to man them. Even granting that many of these are not in position yet to need or support their own rector, the fact remains that the Church cannot advance into the unoccupied field at home or abroad. Nor can she multiply as she ought in our industrial centers, or do strategic work in rural communities.

For years we have talked.
Now let us do something.

STATISTICS FOR THE TWELVE EPISCOPAL SEMINARIES

On Which the Above Argument is Based 1916-17

Total enrollment last year.....396

Total enrollment this year, which is a loss of 23 per cent..305
The draft will probably take away this spring three-quarters of the 85 Juniors.... 63

242

At Commencement there will leave all the Seniors..... 99
And one-half of the special students 26

117

1918-19

There will probably enter the seminaries next fall one-quarter of this year's Junior class 21

Thus total enrollment of next year will be 65 per cent of last year's (396) 138
At Commencement there will leave all the Seniors..... 70
And the remaining one-half of the 51 specials..... 25

43

Again we can estimate the Juniors entering the seminaries at one-quarter of this year's Junior class 21

Thus enrollment year after next (1919-20) will be 84 per cent of that of 1916-17..... 64

In other words

1917-18 is 77 per cent of ante-bellum enrollment.
1918-19 will be 35 per cent of ante-bellum enrollment.
1919-20 will be 16 per cent of ante-bellum enrollment.

Patriotic Service Held Somewhere In The West

A TRUE AND BEUTIFULLY TOLD STORY FULL OF HUMAN INTEREST

We are indebted to an officer in the United States Army Medical Corps for the following true story, taken from a medical journal:

'Twas a brilliant winter Sunday, following the late heavy snowfall, in a Western city, where a friend and I were travel-bound over the week's end. The thermometer outside was several degrees below zero, and all the morning we hugged the comfortable hotel lobby. The Church bulletin board, hanging on the office wall, announced a special afternoon service at the Episcopal Cathedral, with a patriotic sermon by the Bishop; and, as we were both keen to see for ourselves to what pitch the patriotism of the West was keyed, we braved the cold and went to church.

We walked through huge embankments of piled up snow, which had not yet had time to become soiled, and was sparkling white in the afternoon sun. When we reached the cathedral the service had already begun; the people were kneeling at the general confession. Inside, there was no dazzling white light, but soft purple twilight that filtered in through the stained glass windows. The building was filled to its capacity; the sort of well-bred, genteel audience that one is accustomed to see in an Episcopal church, with a fair sprinkling of soldiers in uniform, and a full vested choir. A Service Flag hung over the chancel.

The officiating clergyman read the shortened evensong service, and over it all rested the atmosphere of quiet decorum and dignity, that is also characteristic of the Episcopal ritual. In the pause before the hymn preceding the sermon, the Bishop himself—an old man, I should say about seventy-five, with white hair, but a still vigorous body, and a strong, alert face—came to the front of the chancel, and said that he wished to read a letter which had been written fifty-four years ago, by this Church, to the boys who had gone out from its walls to the Civil War. I learned afterwards that the old Bishop himself had been one of the boys.

It was just such a letter as a Church might write all over the country to the boys at Camp Grant, and Camp Wheeler, and the rest of the camps. You know the kind of things that it said. The Church was proud of its soldier boys, and would think of them, and pray for them, and cherish them, and stand loyally behind them; and if any of them should fall in battle for the cause, their names and stories would be emblazoned forever on the tablets of the Church and in the deepest hearts of those for whom they had died; and so forth, and so forth. It was well written, and every line had a thrill and a heart-throb in it, without being in the least mawkish. Before the old Bishop got through, I, for my part, had swallowed hard on my throat more than once; and, while there was no outward sign of effect upon the well-behaved congregation, I can hardly doubt that the letter had stirred something underneath their calm exterior.

According to the service bulletin board, hanging just outside the chancel, the next number should have been the singing of hymn No. 561; but the organist evidently had caught the inspiration of the old Bishop's reading, for he broke immediately into the Battle Hymn of the Republic. And, believe me, he played it! You could hear the trumpets sounding, and you knew that they would never call retreat; you could feel the evening dews and damps on Flanders' field; and when he came to the last verse (for he played every verse, and there was no need for words), you could see the summer wind sweeping across the lilies—don't tell me that you can't see wind, because that's exactly what I did do.

From the Battle Hymn of the Republic he swng, without a pause, into "Illinois", then "Fair Wisconsin", then "Maryland", finishing up the galaxy of state songs with dear, quaint old "Dixie Land"—and, believe me again, a man has to be an artist to play "Dixie" on a pipe organ in an Episcopal Cathedral. Never have I seen such a succession of emotions pass across an audience. First they were stunned; then aghast; then, I think, a little scared. But he got them at last by the most consummate piece of patriotic art that I have yet seen achieved. Throwing his organ wide open, he began to thunder out "America", and brought the congregation to their feet.

My country, 'tis of thee
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing.

Then a sudden and complete stop; and, with his hands on the choir manual, sweet, soft, far away, the antiphon of "America", so that it seemed to be just a continuation of it, he played—

Home! home! sweet, sweet home,
There's no place like home;
There's no place like home.

Right in front of me, I saw a young giant of a soldier put his arm around his mother's waist and shamelessly sqeeze her up to his side; further than that I could not see, for I confess that my eyes were not in condition to see further.

One more coup-de-maitre the wizard had in store; throwing on again the full power of his organ, he repeated the refrain of "Home, Sweet Home", but this time, oh, this time he did not play alone. Every man, woman and child in the great cathedral that could make any sort of a noise with his throat helped to swell the tremendous chorus.

When the last notes had died away, the old Bishop came quickly to the front of the chancel.

"I do not think," he said, simply, that it will be necessary for me, now, to preach a sermon." Up went his apostolic hand, "Now unto Him that is able", and so forth. And we were dismissed.

As the choir filed out of their seats, not even singing a recessional, I caught a glimpse of the organist, on his organ stool, and I saw that he was quite a young fellow, a typical Western American, clean-cut, wholesome, alert. Then my friend and I found ourselves outside again, in the cold sunshine, dazzled by something else besides the white snow.

We talked long about that patriotic service after we got back to the hotel. We agreed that such an inspiring affair undoubtedly would result in many enlistments. At last we asked, both of us together, a question that had troubled us both a little:

"How is it that this man, who can inspire such fire of patriotism in everybody else—he is a young man—how is it he does not enlist himself?"

The question had hardly letf our lips when the organist himself came in at the hotel door. He limped across the lobby with the help of a cane; one of his legs was fully four inches shorter than the other, and horribly twisted.

"War To Bring Reconstruction To The Church"

Bishop Charles P. Anderson of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in a Lenten address, answered the critics who say the Church is a failure, and forecast that the war would bring reconstruction to the Church as well as to the political world.

"I am trying to create in the minds of people in my generation an attitude of mental expectancy for the things that are going to happen," he said. "The whole world cannot be in revolution and the Church escape. It can't remain static. I am not afraid of some revolution in the religious world. I welcome it. I have got such confidence in the ultimate triumph of Christ and the Church that I am not fearful as to what a revolution might do in the Christian world today.

"Anything that will give us confidence, anything that will make us break away from our stereotyped habits and our stale customs, anything that will give us a fresh grip on God's purpose in these pregnant days through which we are passing, we ought to welcome.

"I am speaking as a conservative Bishop of a conservative Church, whose membership are the most conservative people in the world. They are so conservative that sometimes they block progress."

THE PARSON'S MAIL BOX

The few books on Pastoral Care that I have read have much in common. They all deal with the phases of work and worship which would occur to any writer as of first importance. Conspicuously have they in common certain omissions; neglects of subjects which ought to be treated with care. Having loaded up the parson with responsibilities that would require the services of a corporation if all were to be met, the writers have, no doubt, hesitated to add another straw. They do not treat of the Parson's Mail Box.

Here it comes, twice or three times a day, a budget of grist for his mental mill. Magazines, papers, advertisements, notices and letters in a bunch. Every day has its surprise in the mail, its satisfactions and its disappointments. It cannot be claimed that the parson's mail differs substantially from the mail of many another man of affairs, in most particulars, but it has some difficulties and angles all its own.

The parson has his share of get-rich-quick proposals, some of them very alluring until a venture into the uncharted seas of investment has made him so ill that forever after he determines to remain landlocked. Some of the letters are very subtle. I once had a letter addressed to a New York hotel where I had registered. It was as follows:

———Broadway.

Dear Friend:

I am delighted to know that you are in New York and I should have seen you yesterday except that I have been out of town. If you remain long enough I shall endeavor to run in and we can take in the theater. I have been much interested in my new venture out on Long Island. A friend of mine is about to open an allotment and has let me in on the ground floor. It is a beautiful location overlooking the Sound. He sold me a lot at an unheard of price so that he might make a start with general sales. There is a lot adjoining mine on which I have taken an option. Could you not run out and see it? I am willing to release my option if you would like to buy it and in two months you could sell and make a tidy sum. Come out Thursday to the ten o'clock—and get off at—etc., etc.

Your friend,
HARRY BROWN.

I read this letter several times before I realized what it was, a scheme to sell me a lot. I had no friend named Harry Brown. I didn't like to hurt his feelings, however, and following the injunction of a Bishop who declared in his book on pastoral care that a letter ought to be answered the day it is received, I wrote as follows, to my unknown benefactor:

Dear Harry:

It was very good of you to remember me and to write to me. I had returned home before your letter reached me, otherwise I would have been delighted to have you take me to the theater.

Do you remember having a conversation with me in which you promised me ten dollars when we redecorated our church? We are about to begin the work and if you are of the same mind you may send me ten dollars.

Cordially yours,

Harry, not having read that book on pastoral care, did not answer my letter. I often wonder whether any parson bought that lot.

The mail box brings in countless appeals for money. I sometimes think that everyone believes the parson is the executive head of a big collection agency. The appealers ought to get together and work different sides of the street. In one day I received from three different general commissions or officers of my own church, appeals to make a canvass of my people and to get money for three separate purposes. Inasmuch as my appeal from the chancel does not reach all the people, I determined that the only way was to make a house to house canvass. But three appeals? Could I bunch them. At last an idea occurred to me. I would go to the front door, my normal self, and get something for No. 1; then I would put on a false mustache and a pair of green glasses and go to the side door and soon have No. 2 cared for; and then, having the inmates in a spirit of giving, I would put on a set of false whiskers, change my hat, and, looking like a Syrian bishop, would go to the back door. By the time I got this all arranged the next mail came in. It brought two more appeals. No house in my parish had five doors. My scheme crashed to the ground. But one way was left, a mask, a jimmy, an entrance through a window in the dead of night.

You always have the stimulating pleasure of a race with the mail. Sometimes you are ahead and a sermon gets a little chance. Then the mail is ahead, and you must put on more steam. If you go away for a day or two the mail seems to know it and gets out of sight of land.

Many letters cannot be answered off hand. They sometimes require that one give much time to gathering the necessary information for the return letter. Or a letter asks you to look up a certain person, get him a job, introduce him to your friends, see that he has a good place to live, watch out that he doesn't drink coffee at night, and goes to church regularly. That takes time. Such a letter must go a couple of days before the answer is ready.

Your letters fall into two classes:

First—Letters you like to receive—
(a) From your family and friends.
(b) Letters from former parishioners.
(c) Letters from your Bishop.
(d) Letters from those at school.
(e) Letters with checks.
(f) Letters that you may answer next week.

Second—Letters you do not like to receive—
(a) Bills.
(b) Appeals.
(c) Letters with kicks.
(d) Letters with tickets.
(e) Letters you must answer today.

Here comes the mail, and I must stop.

MISSIONARY NEWS

January 5, 1918.

Dear Juniors:

I don't feel a particle like studying Japanese, so I have put down my book and am going to have a good time instead. Our servant, O Aya san, has just announced some foreign visitors I am pretending, and when I go out to call them in I find there are a lot of Bethany Home faces, and my heart nearly stops for joy; this is not an exaggeration, I assure you. When I am through laughing and crying and hugging you all (I can't even count you, you are so many), we all start off to see St. Agnes' School. Your heads are nearly twisted off going down Muromachi. The streets are about as wide as Bethany Home cloister, so you can see both sides at once if you only turn your head fast enough. The houses are so low you can easily touch the eaves of the roof, and the stores have no fronts at all. Inside are glass show cases or jars of tea (like Ali Baba and the forty thieves' jars) or wooden clogs or paper or groceries all spread out in plain sight like a part of the street. Although it is so cold now that there is snow on the ground, the storekeepers are still in their open stores, sitting on their feet to keep them warm, and spreading their hands over a box of ashes and burning charcoal to thaw them out. The carts that pass us are usually pulled by a man or some of them by quite small boys. They are very long low carts on two wheels. Some heavy loads are pulled by big oxen. We have to watch out or a bicycle will run into us. Every one is so busy staring at us that they aren't looking out. Some children playing on the street salute with their hand to their head and say, "Shikkei," but most of them say "Ijinsan" and nudge each other. Ijinsan means barbarian, so it's not very flattering; more polite people say "Seyojin," Western Ocean People." It is New Year's time, so the little girls are all dressed up on their long-sleeved silk kimonos, with a pink face—wash all over their poor little faces and red stuff on their lips, etc.—they think they are beautiful indeed, but they aren't nearly so attractive as usual. They are all playing battledore and shuttle cock because this is New Year's time and that is the proper time to play that game—and the Japanese love to do the proper thing. The boys are flying kites, as this is also a New Year's game. But, of course, they all stop to gaze at us—we are much more interesting. Even the boys and girls who have babies tied on their backs turn so the baby can have a treat and see the "Ijinsan."

Some of the houses aren't stores, but homes. At every entrance there are little pine trees now, one on each side, because this is New Year's time. Over the gate, too, are fringes of straw and strips of paper and an orange in the middle. A very elegant place will have a lobster up, too, or three or four oranges. We can't see into the houses because the front is all barred almost as closely as our shutters. But sometimes we hear a "koto" played by some one inside. A koto lies on the floor like a long piano keyboard detached from the piano, but instead of keys it has strings that you pluck at just about as you please, and provided you look dreamy enough and keep on long enough every one will say how well you play the koto. It sounds rather nicely in little snatches—not unlike tuning up at symphony concert, though.

Bye and bye we pass two queer looking men. They have waste paper baskets turned over their heads with a slit in them for their mouth, and are playing on sweet bamboo flutes. It is really nice music. They are standing in front of some one's door playing, and pretty soon they will come out and give them some money. It isn't that they are poor, though. I think it wins merit for them as a religious act, but I am not very sure. One often sees them. You hear a funny, rattling, thumping noise, now, don't you? That is a loom being worked. It is put so near the ground inside this house that the man who works it has to dig himself a hole to sit in. He is making a gold brocade obi that will cost 100 yen or more (that is about $50). It is about a yard wide and so long that when it is hung in a show case it reaches from the floor to the ceiling and down to the floor again. Yet all this gets wrapped around the Japanese woman's waist, and it is so stiff you can hardly fold it. But this is an obi for dress-up occasions. They are usually just as long, but of less handsome stuff.

We must hurry on, past bean stores and cake stores until we come to "Lower selling street." Almost at the corner of this street and "Crow Street" we come to St. Agnes' gate; the church is on the corner and the school is just back. Over the gate are two Japanese flags crossed, because this is a holiday. The school looks quiet and sleepy as we come in. The Japanese call it the "Peace Girls' School"; and it is only we foreigner teachers who call it "St. Agnes'." We won't go in the front door, it is seldom used. The yard looks pretty bare and grassless, doesn't it; but this is a nice log swing that the girls love to swing on. On the right, as we go around to the side door of the school, we pass the door of the dormitory. It is built around a court, and one gets such an attractive glimpse of the court framed by the entrance that I know you stop to exclaim. Shall we go in and see the dormitory first? You will have to take off your shoes because this is a Japanese house and every one sits on the floor. It is pretty chilly in stocking feet as we go along the shiny boarded hall, but it will be nice in the rooms because they are covered with a thick matting padded inside with straw. The dining room has little tables in it and benches for the girls—this is supposed to be very fine; in most dining rooms one has to sit on the floor just the same as everywhere else. This is the bath-room next to it. It is a huge tub, isn't it, and the water is heated after the tuo is filled. When it is emptied all you have to do is pull out the wooden plug and flood the bathroom floor—it is all cement, and the drains run right out in the garden; but be sure the fire is out before you let out the water or you will set fire to the wooden tub. Of course, every one goes into this bath in turn, and you are lucky if you are first. The kitchen comes next. The Japanese call it the "Great place." We walk into it and we find we have walked on the table, as it were. The cook is standing on the mud floor three feet lower and doing her work on our floor. When she peels potatoes she lets the scraps fall on the floor, or if she wants to empty her pan of water that goes on the floor, too. A floor that has no mat on it is of no account to a Japanese. The stove is made of baked mud and has three holes with great iron pots in them. These are filled with rice and nothing else gets cooked in them. Perhaps you would just as lief go away, as she is cutting up "daikow," and the smell is dreadful. It is a big radish (white, though), as long—well, about a foot long or sometimes as big and round as a muskmellon. The Japanese pickle it in "sake" and eat it with rice; they love it, but it smells like rotting things. I couldn't bear it at first, but I like it now myself.

Let's go upstairs. They are fearful little stairs, aren't they?. Japanese stairs are always like this. We will pass along the hall and look in at the girls' room. The hall is really the balcony all around the edge of the house, and the rooms are in the middle. This is a bedroom. Yes, there are no beds—nothing but mats. At night they pull great quilts, three or four inches thick, out of the cupboards between the rooms and spread them on the floor. Then they sleep between these. No, there aren't any sheets. Sometimes they put a hugh towel over the middle of the futon and stitch a piece of white cloth over the top edge that rubs against your face. That piece of wood is the pillow. It has a little ruffled piece of white stretched over it to make it clean, too. Over by the veranda is the girls' desk—it looks like a doll's table, but as she sits on the floor it is high enough. That's all the furniture she needs. We will go down the front stairs and get our shoes where we left them at the front door. Now we will go to the school proper. The brick-covered court is the girls' entrance. Here is where they leave their parasols in summer—they all have one in place of a hat. Those shelves are where they leave their wooden clogs and put on straw zori or sandals for the house. This little shed is a tiny store. They sell pencils and ink and notebooks and writing paper and even hairpins and ties for their kimono fronts here. If it wasn't holiday time you would see more girls. Let us pretend it is school time. This little gentle-faced man is the school clerk. He looks better in Japanese clothes, but in school men must wear foreign men's clothes, and he feels very queer in them. He is selling the things. This woman is my teacher. She speaks English very well, so you needn't be afraid of her. She is buying a pair of ties for a present for a friend—and, yes, she is taking a bottle of hair-oil for her younger sister, because she is sure she needs it. Here is her sister coming now. She has a round face like the moon, and is always smiling and agreeable. She is in the fourth year, so she is very old and important. In the school house there is a teachers' room on our right. Here the teachers are all gathered together around a fire box warming their hands and gossiping. I always wish the bell would ring for class, because I can't understand what they say, and the room is so cold. The class rooms are just as cold, though. Sometimes they light a stove, but they never put on more coal, so it goes out soon. There are five class rooms—one for each year—and the girls stay in their rooms while the teachers circulate. In the hall is a bulletin board. The girls are always looking at it, but as it is all in Chinese characters I don't get much information from it. All the girls bow as soon as you catch their eye. I try not to catch it, so as to save them the trouble, but somehow they always do it, anyway. When they bow, they go down from the hips and their back is as flat as a table. (They only put their face to the floor in a Japanese house where every one is sitting on the floor.) They never speak when they bow, and it is very solemn and gloomy, so I hate it. I feel like the queen in "Alice in Wonderland" when the cards all fell on their faces, and they couldn't tell who they were, because their backs were all alike. Upstairs are nine class rooms. One of them is a sewing room. It has mats on the floor, and the girls sit on their feet and sew there all day. Some girls take very little but sewing, and all are required to do one hour a day. Across from the sewing room is an assembly hall. It's about as big as your dining room without the school rooms or the platform. The girls pack in, about 180, I guess, as close as they can sit on the floor, and that's pretty solidly packed. Along the walls are chairs for the teachers. They are always having ceremonies here—very long and dull affairs, even when you understand them. When we go downstairs, Mr. Hayakawa ("Swift River"), our principal, comes out of his room and begs us all to have lunch with the teachers. Will you try some Japanese food? The food is Japanese, but we sit at tables and have chairs in foreign fashion. In front of every one is a square tower of blue china dishes fitting into each other. In the top one is some lovely watermelon—red-looking stuff—that is raw fish. In the next is broiled fish and turnips, and in the bottom dish (much deeper than the others) is rice. Beside your box is a pair of wooden chop-sticks and two bananas. Now that every one has refused the honorable seats, we will have the blessing and sit down. The Japanese love raw fish, so we hand ours over, but the rest is very good. They are passing "daikow" in that bowl. I guess you won't like it, because it smells so, but is nice and salty with the rice. You see, the rice has no salt in it. The Japanese eat very fast, and don't talk much while they eat. They are all through, and I've only eaten half my rice. Now they bring around tea, and then we will go. No, there is still more. As a special treat, there is a box of cakes for every one. The cakes are big, lumpy things, filled with bean paste, and in symbolic forms. They think they are beautiful and delicious, but we think they are abominable in every way. Now we can really go. We bow to Mr. Hayakawa and thank him and go out. I know you are tired out, so I will not press you to stay any longer. But I hope you will come again. Please, some of you, come and stay for good.

With love and a happy New Year to you all, from

MARY MATTHEWS.

Bishop Kills Snake That Bit Rev. Soper

Bishop Mann of Southern Florida reports in his journal an exciting experience which he had four miles south of Cocoanut Grove, Fla., where he had driven with the Rev. B. W. Soper and entered the woods for epiphytic orchids.

"We found plenty, and started back to our car laden with good plants. But we met a little party of three young women and some children who were picnicking nearby. They asked us to guide them to the orchids, and we took two of the ladies into the jungle. While I was pointing out a tree with several clusters on it, I heard Mr. Soper, who was about eight feet distant, exclaim, "Look out for the snake!" Glancing down I saw a large diamond-back rattlesnake, coiled, with his tongue darting and his rattles whirring. Luckily, there was an admirable stick close by, which I picked up and killed the snake. Then I discovered that Mr. Soper had been bitten just above the ankle. I made a tourniquet with my handkerchief and a stick, and then slashed the bitten place with my knife so as to cause a great flow of blood. Then one of the girls, who had had training as a nurse, said, "We must suck the poisoned blood out." And those two did it. It was a very brave deed, and I record their names with profound respect and gratitude,—Miss Mary Robertson and Miss Frances Holstein. I believe it was their promptness and courage which saved the life of my dear friend.

We then got him into the car and drove into town at top speed. We found Dr. Cleveland at home. He said what had been done was exactly right,—except that we had no permanganate of potash. He put that in, and then Mr. Soper was taken to the Rectory.

And I must add that through it all Mr. Soper's behavior was perfect. He was absolutely calm and self-possessed, recognizing that we were doing what we could and that the issue was with God. No man could possibly have displayed a braver serenity. The venom did not get above the tourniquet, but Mr. Soper will have a bad foot for awhile."

The Bishop revisited the scene of the event, and found the body of the snake. He measured 5 feet in length and 8 inches in circumference.

The Church Engaged In A World War

Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, in a pastoral letter to the boys and girls of his diocese, bearing upon their mite box Easter offering, reminded them that our nation is in the world war "because we believe we can help win things which will be for the good not only of ourselves, but of the whole world. Did you know that the Church is engaged in a world war, too, which has been going on ever since our Lord began it in Palestine—a war against some of the very evils that brought this other war to pass—against ignorance and selfishness and false pride? Wherever these things are, the Church is bound to fight them to the death; and is doing so, not only at home, but in Alaska, and Mexico, Africa and China, and wherever her missionaries are at work.

"Every one of you, when you were baptized, was enlisted as a fighter in this warfare, and those who had brought you to baptism prayed that you would continue Christ's faithful soldier unto your life's end. Never before has the Church had such a sure prospect of victory as she would have today if all the members of her army would get together and do their full part.

Your own special part just now is, of course, to be trained for service, and to back up those who are at the front all over the world."

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE BIRTH OF THE WATER LILY

(Founded on an Indian legend)

From the skies, just at twilight, a pale star looked longingly down upon the beautiful green earth. All about this star its brothers and sisters were bright and happy, and in bands played together upon the great shining plain in which they lived. But this one star was sad and sorrowful. It turned away from the soft light of the moon when she walked forth across the sky, and hid its face when the sun, the bright heart of the day, flung wide gates open for the beautiful, smiling dawn-maidens. Under the light of the young moon or the bright shining of the sun, the lovely earth seemed fairer than all besides. The still green meadows, the cool waving forests, and the blue rivers, far more attractive than the star-lodges set in the sky.

Every night, at twilight, the star saw its image reflected in the quiet lake, set around with green rushes and great forest trees. And it looked with envy upon the trout and the sly pickerel, leaping and flashing in the moonlight, the frog calling among the reeds and rushes, and the bright lightning bug flitting through the darkness above the murmuring waters. Every night the loon called to the echo hiding upon the shore, and the whippoorwill answered clear and sweet in the distance. The wild geese made their lazy flight across the quiet surface of the lake. The bob-white piped from the thicket, and the owl hooted afar in the lonely forest.

All through the long months the star looked down upon the fair lake, whose waves were softly splashing and telling of all happy things. It saw the sweet blossoms in the bright month of flowers (May); saw the gentle fawns in the month of deer (July) come trooping down to drink of the cool water of the lake. Now, in the gray month of the beaver (November), the star had grown more and more pale, breathing its life away in sighs and longing.

Then the great Master of Life, holder of the heavens, saw with pity, and because of His love, which keeps all things within the circle of His arms, gave the star its wish. Slowly through the twilight, when Gush Kewan, the darkness, and Weeng, the gentle spirit of sleep, hovered in the air, the star came drifting downward, floating, drifting, falling from the far plains of heaven, the fair land of love.

Then a hunter named the Dreamer, the one who saw where there was nothing, looking up to the sky, saw the star falling swiftly through the darkness, with all its paleness gone, flashed red across the sky. He thought it was a meteor. Then he turned to look in wonder as the star fell downward, until it rested at length upon the bosom of the sleeping lake. And then, wonder of all, it straightway blossomed forth a living flower, with slowly unfolding petals and heart of gold, lying rocked in rest and peace upon the softly whispering water. Thus was born the beautiful O-kun-dun-moge, the water lily.

A Recruit In The Peking Language School

A missionary's first year in China is almost invariably spent in constantly studying a baffling language. Its delicate shadings and sounds and complicated inflections put a heavy strain upon the ear and upon one's vocal cords. The written language is really a picture language, since there is no alphabet, and every character stands for an idea. This makes it largely a matter of memory.

One of the recruits in the Hankow Mission, who went to the Hankow District last summer, and is now studying in Peking, writes:

"The methods used in these language schools are wonderful. Even my dull brain can grasp a few Chinese sentences already.

"Our language study begins at 8:45 a. m., and lasts until 3:30 p. m., with an hour for noon recess. We alternate from class to private teacher all day. The first period, we are given the new words for the day, during which time our teachers sit in the back of the room busily taking notes. Then we disperse either into small class groups or into our private studies, where this new work is repeated until we understand it, and are able to construct sentences on it.

"Not a word of English is used, so if we don't understand the meaning of the word in one use, it is tried in another, and sometimes we may spend two days trying to get one word. We are not permitted to take notes nor consult with others in class about the words, and the first three months we are not permitted to use a text book of any kind, nor to know any characters. The object is to get us to speak as early as possible, and it is wonderful how soon we do speak.

"We also have a splendid course in phonetics during the first term, which helps us in learning how to get correct Chinese sounds. I am glad I did not spend any time in studying this subject last year, because this one has given me more help than I could possibly have had in New York. We have the Chinese with us to test the conclusions drawn, which we would not have found in America.

We are supposed to gain a vocabulary of 1,000 words by June, which will be a splendid beginning.

"The Anglicans are doing such splendid work in Peking, under adverse circumstances at present on account of the war.

"We are constantly reminded of descriptions in the Bible here in Peking. Camels and donkeys are the usual beasts of burden, next to man. Then the water carriers, and trades carried on in the streets, are decidedly Eastern. We are not near enough the coast to become foreignized here, so it is a delightful Chinese city. The legations are here, but no concessions, so the majority of the foreigners are missionaries or in the employ of some government."

AN OLD EVENT—MODERNIZED

The Christian Ministry Needs the Warmth Of Live Coals Of Christian Idealism

By Carroll Lund Bates

"The servants made a fire, for it was cold."

It was night, and such a night as Simon Peter had never seen. The sky was probably overcast, because the arresting party, led by Judas, had to carry torches, though it was the time of the full moon. Every calamity seemed to have been let loose at once, and to have settled over the head of Peter, as when Aeolus let all the storm winds loose at the same time to overwhelm Aeneas and his fellow Trojans. It was particularly hard on Peter, for he was a practical man, who had become an idealist when, the utterance of a single sentence, he had pinned his faith on Jesus Christ as a Spirit (Divine force) direct from God.

It looked to Peter, on this dark night, as if it was all over with his idealism. The man whom he had fastened his faith upon was at the mercy of His enemies. That walk from Gethsemane to the house of Caiaphas must have been much as if an American soldier should march with the last batch of prisoners after Germany had wiped idealism from the face of the earth. Pandemonium reigned that night. God and right and Jesus and truth had been overthrown.

So Peter sat and warmed himself. I am glad that he did. I am grateful to the servants of the high priest that they had made a fire. The night was cold. It was enough that Peter's heart was broken, that his soul was shaken and his reason almost dethroned. It is a comfort to think that he could warm his body at least.

Herein Peter had the advantage of the clergy of the present day. It is night again. It is dark enough, God knows! It is also cold. For several generations the frost of materialism has been freezing the air. Influences have been at work to chill the Bible and the Church. Having its headquarters in Germany, rationalism has coolly informed us that there is no place left in Bible or Church for the least degree of spiritism. The modern Simon Peter has endured all this as courageously as best he might.

The clergy of today have not only had their courage assailed by the current tendency toward materialism, but they have been tried in other ways. They have been well-nigh starved. The "crumbs that fell from the rich man's table" would look like a feast to some of them.

Even this is not all. Christianity has been divided and sud-divided. The problem of the clergyman of today is how to keep heart in face of the fact that in a town of five thousand people his own house of prayer is confronted by five or six others, who, by the ruthlessness of the competitive system, are forced to be eager to fill their own sanctuaries and empty his.

And now the climax arrives. Out of dark obscurity materialism emerges into the open, a great piece of heartlessly efficient enginery, and the Master Himself is captured. It is the old story. Again God makes no resistance. Again materialism buffets the ideal. Again they spit upon Him and mock Him.

And, as if all this were not enough, Peter's colleagues of today gather around Peter and mock him and insult him for his discouragement. The limit has been reached. It is about time some one spoke for Peter. I wish some one would make a fire in the kitchen and let Peter warm himself. I wish they would take note that, on the whole, Simon Peter of today is one of the worst tried men of the era, and to some extent the least appreciated.

In any criticisms of the Christian ministry as to their attitude in the present holocaust, it must be borne in mind that this trial is, in a way, more severe upon them than upon any other class. It is a hard thing for almost any one to see the great idealist, Jesus, blindfolded and buffetted by this gross recrudescence of paganism; but it is an especially hard thing for the Christian ministry. They must rise up from under it all with a continuously smiling face. They must confront empty coal bins and depleted larders, and stand before auditors who are themselves discouraged, and preach the great encouragement.

It should be noted that the Christian ministry have measured up to this hardest test that has ever been put upon them. Not only have there been casual instances here and there of voices that have spoken with no uncertain sound for the eternal principles of truth, and right, and justice, but the number of those so speaking has been legion; and the number of those who have endured secret persecution for their fidelity to the ideal through these troublous times has been more than the average man has any idea of.

In making comparisons between the war work of such organizations as the Y. M. C. A. or the Red Cross and the Christian ministry, it must be remembered that the work of these, while analogous, is not the same.

The blacksmith has his fire, and in his fire he beats his iron. Both the fire and the iron are necessary, or the shoe cannot be made. So, if one expects that the Y. M. C. A. and the Christian ministry will do an identical work, the statistics will disappoint him. The statistics of the Christian ministry are the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross themselves. Out of the fire of the Christian faith, which the ministry, with more or less fidelity, have been stoking, both of these wonderfully efficient organizations have sprung. Moreover, if the Christian ministry should stop its work today, in a few years all such organizations would cease to be.

Peter sat and warmed himself. The servants had made a fire, for it was cold. These are almost intolerable times. They are especially so for us Americans, for even the coldest among us has some idealism in his veins. Haven't we got something more important to do than to discourage or to criticise one another? If it was cold on the night when Jesus was betrayed, it is unspeakably colder at this present hour.

It is time that we gathered around the fire together. It is high time for us all to acknowledge that we need and value the fire's warmth. What is the one thing that has heat in it against the need of these chilly days? Is it not the fire of the Christian faith?

Let us remember that it is the heat of that fire that has saved civilization from the frost at many a critical period. In the cold night of the Fifteenth Century, Luther took a brand from this fire, and the Reformation era brought us letters, invention, schools, democracy. In our own chill days of the Civil War, Lincoln found heat for us in Christianity's idealism, and brought us emancipation and union. Today it is the fire of Christianity that is bringing us what little warmth we get. It is neither Mr. H. G. Wells nor Donald Hanley, nor Raemaker, primarily, who have formed the ideals and the righteous determinative purpose of today. Grant that these have helped, but by what and whom have they themselves been helped? By the Christian faith. By the fact that there has been kept burning on the Church's Altars, however feebly, some live coals of a living faith.

Let it be understood at once that, though each idealist in America may need a practicalist at his elbow constantly to show him how to make his dreams come true, yet if each practicalist does not have a fellow idealist at his side, there will soon be no longer any dreams to bring to accomplishment, no far off Divine event toward which to press.

The contention that the Christian ministry has not done all that it should to keep the fire of idealism going may be admitted; but from the fact that the fire is going at all, it must be allowed that they have been doing much, and that in the face of awful odds.

The world leader is, at the present, Woodrow Wilson, himself the son of a Presbyterian clergyman. He is the world leader because he is a Christian idealist, and because the world instinctively realizes that at this time idealism is threatened, and that without idealism the world would become little better than a pig-stye. He is the world leader because we realize that whatsoever vestige of idealism we are going to preserve, we are going to be solely and absolutely dependent upon Christianity for.

Of course, one trouble with Christinaity and with the Christian ministry is that Christianity is divided. Let it be immediately allowed that this does deplete the efficiency of the Christian ministry.

Peter, on that awful night, when he warmed himself at what the text assures us was a "fire of coals", had at least the comfort of a brazier in which a number of lumps of coal were collected together.

The ministry of today has not that meager comfort. The coals are not together in a single fireplace. The case is as if the New Testament Peter had had to go all around the room warming himself at individual glowing coals.

It is this circumstance of the division of the coals that makes it so especially hard for the modern Peter, or Christian minister, to get the little comfort, either physical or spiritual, that he does. And it is also this lamentable circumstance of the scattered coals of Christianity that makes it take so long for the fire, that has really been lighted by God, to warm the world and furnish it with the ideals that humanity requires, if life is to even remain as decent as it has so far become.

It seems to the writer, therefore, that it is high time to cease discouraging the Christian ministry, who, whereinsoever they fail, are yet the chief spokesmen for the world's one hope.

It seems as if it were no time for complaints or the multiplying of discouragements, but a time for mutual encouragement and appreciation.

Let us remember that it is because German rationalism has chilled, in some degree, the world's idealism that these days are as chilly and dark as they are. Let us second all such laudable attempts as that lately made by the open letter of the eighty-two prominent Christian clergy of diverse denominations in behalf of Christian unity. Let us make all honest and unselfish and even sacrificial effort to gather the scattered coals of Christianity into a single brazier.

And then, for God's sake, let us warm ourselves, for these days are cold. These days are cold, with a bleak wind blowing from across the sea from a Teutonic quarter. They are cold with the negations of Bernardhi, Nietzsche and the others. They are cold with indifference and carelessness in our own America. They are cold with the non-appreciation of the very ones, Americans, who should have most appreciated Christianity. They are cold and dark, because the Christ Himself, whom in our secret hearts we all depend on, is again buffetted and scorned.

Let us be thankful to the "servants" (and servants in the Latin form means simply ministers), let us be thankful to Christ's servants that, under threatening and so hard conditions, they have at least kept a fire burning in the kitchen of this great palace of a world, where our Lord is again misused and insulted, and that the fire will, if we will use it, keep us warm.

The Rev. Everett W. Couper closed his ministry in Christ Church, Alameda, Cal., on Easter Day, and left on the following Friday with his family for Duluth, Minn., to take up his new work as Dean of Trinity Cathedral. A series of receptions were tendered Mr. and Mrs. Couper during Easter week by the several parish organizations of Christ Church before their departure.

Scandal

When scandal, the peddler, knocks at your door,
Do you hasten to let him in?
Do you take delight in his sordid store,
Eager to gaze on somebody's sin?
Do you purchase cheaply another's good name,
To show your neighbor tomorrow?
And idly peer at the tears of shame,
Rudely stripped from somebody's sorrow?
Are your fair fingers ready to grasp—
That which will stain them a crimson hue—
Just to hold the wretched past—
Of somebody that you thought was true?
Do you inwardly gloat as your searching eye—
Brings to view some cringing soul—
Is there joy for you in its burdened sigh,
As you mercilessly seek to gain control,
Of that which somebody tried to keep
Away from the public's critical eye,
Somebody fallen with the weak—
The victim of a scoundrel's lie!
Is it at your home the peddler tarries—
Do you know what he takes for his golden fee?
Whilst you busy yourself with the filth he carries.
He is robbing you of your purity.
He leaves you with his tarnished store—
Of somebody's secrets and pain,
And steals away through the open door
To sell your own fair name!

—Peter Livingston.

"Forward With God"

Good Friday was celebrated by the Germans with characteristic fervor and force. From the beginnings of the war mutilators or destroyers of the ecclesiastical monuments of medieval and Renaissance architecture, a happy fortune has given them their savage toy, the long range gun, a useful instrument in their old practices. More satisfactory than mere peppering of battered empty cathedrals, the distant organ of Deutschtum was able not only to smash ancient stained glass windows in a Paris church, but to wound or kill a considerable number of the congregation. Fifty-four women were slain, a "record" that makes beggarly the number of deaths due to individual Zeppelins and airplanes; and since the injured and slaughtered were mostly women and children, the performance naturally recalls, even if it exceeds, the good works of the assassins of the air.

One seems to see those pious, tender souls, seeking help and consolation while the fate of their country is being decided fifty odd miles away, turning heavenward for the peace denied on earth. Poor women, poor children! What were the last words they heard? At what point did the German missionary of terror break up that immemorial service?

Et milites quidem haec fecerunt. Stabant autem juxta crusem Jesu Mater ejus et soror Matris ejus Maria Cleophar, et Maria Magdalene.

Was it amid the murmur of these kind holy names, dear from infancy, that these women and children came to their death, et milites quidem haec fecerunt? Was it when the worshipers listened to the tale of that supreme agony:

Cum ergo accepissit Jesus acetum, dixit: "Consummatum est". Et inclinato capite traditit spiritum?

There they lie, sacrificed in the midst of that Sacrifice of the Mass, to the savage German tribes, "barbaras nationes", "gentes quae in sua veritate confidunt", whose trust is in Schrecklichkeit. A fine, hearty, "echt Deutsch" commeration of Good Friday!

One by one, in the Tenebrae of the nations, light after light goes out. Gloriously shall they be returned, the resurrection of freedom follow its crucifixion!—New York Times.

Attitude Of Christian Science Toward War

A good many Americans will be rather astonished by the utterances in a recent "Christian Science" pamphlet published by Roy Holland Seward, who quotes copiously from Mrs. Eddy to sustain his utterances.

He says: "By acquiescing with the methods of the carnal mind in an endeavor to end the war, one would make a concession to error, deviate from the metaphysical postulates of divine metaphysics, throw the weight of influence on the wrong or material side, and forfeit his spiritual power, thereby inviting defeat at the outset."

Here is his pharisaic estimate of the patriotic and humanitarian work now doing all over the land:

"The motive and purpose which prompt people to engage in Red Cross work, to enlist in the army and navy, to become farmers with a view of feeding and sustaining those who are fighting in the trenches, and to contribute, in other ways, toward the perpetuation of the war on a material basis, may be patriotic and humanitarian, but they are not spiritual, and being unspiritual they must be unscientific, and being unscientific they must be the outgrowth of material concepts, and not the outcome of the divine law and order."

And he warns his fellow Scientists that they should "beware that they are not misled today" and so "fall from their own steadfastness to principle." That is, they must not send wheat to the Belgians or knit comforters for the soldiers and sailors or make bandages for the hospital, or contribute money to the Red Cross.

We venture to think that such a disclosure of what "Christian Science" means—and it DOES mean this—will lessen the number of converts to it. We even venture to hope that such a disclosure will cause some of its present adherents to go back to the Christian Church which gives her benediction to the soldiers who fight for a righteous cause, and which enjoins upon all her children the performance of "the seven corporal works of mercy."—The Palm Branch.

Roanoke

Christ Church was opened for its first service on Easter Day. Rt. Rev. D. B. Tucker, D. D., who, with the rector, Rev. Geo. Otis Mead, conducted the service, was unstinted in his praise of the beautiful, substantial, well appointed Church and Parish House. Both are built of blue sandstone, trimmed with white Indiana cut limestone. The Church is finished throughout in oak, which is stained a soft-toned gray. Pews, choir stalls and chancel furniture in oak to match. The vestibules, choir and sanctuary are laid with Scotch brown tile, with dark blue marble for border and steps. Hardwood floors, windows of Cathedral and Antique glass set in stone mullions. A handsome two-manuel organ of splendid volume and tone. The Parish House is of two stories, finished in clear pine. The first floor is for assembly, with class rooms forming a part of the assembly room. In connection is the library and secretaries' room. Upstairs is the primary department of three rooms, graduate department of three rooms, ladies' parlor, robing rooms for the choir, and a kitchen. Then a large attic over all, which is no necessary for a parish house.

The architect is Mr. Frederick M. Mann, 530 Metropolitan Bank Building, Minneapolis, Minn., who also directed the construction and finishing. The builders are Messrs. E. M. Herringdon & Bro., Roanoke contractors. The ground was broken on February 26, 1917, and by pushing hard, it was completed for the Easter services.

The choir of thirty-six voices, directed and trained by Mr. Gordon H. Baker, a vestryman of Christ Church, rendered the service magnificently. The Bishop preached an inspiring and hopeful sermon from St. John 2:19, "Destroy this Temple and in three days I will raise it up." After the sermon, the Bishop confirmed a class of thirty-two persons.

The total cost of the Church and Parish House is about $55,000. If we add to this the cost of the ground and the rectory, which is next to the parish house, the whole church property cost $70,000. It is to be noted that during the years of planning and building, Christ Church paid every assessment, paid in full or overpaid all apportionments and responded to all the appeals sent out by the Diocese and General Church. The Easter offering was $3,300. The Sunday School mite box offering was $400.

Rev. J. W. Cantey Johnson, who has not been well during the past month, has gone to Charleston and Rock Hill, S. C., to recuperate.

Hollins College

Rev. G. Otis Mead, who is the Church chaplain at Hollins, maintained a weekly service at that institution during Lent. Five of the students were confirmed.

Bishop Tucker had an interesting service and confirmation at Toano in James City County in "Old Hickory Neck Church," Blissland Parish, of which the Rev. E. R. Jones of Williamsburg, rector of Briton Parish, is the minister. This is the first Episcopal visitation this Church has ever hand. Built in colonial times, when we had no resident Bishop, the old Church fell into decay and disuse before Bishop Madison's time and it has been in ruins for over a hundred years. During the past year, Rev. Mr. Jones has effected a complete restoration of this old Church and the Bishop preached and confirmed—the first service of its kind since the foundation of Old Hickory Neck was laid one hundred and fifty years ago.

Reports at Easter came that Bishop Randolph was much improved. He had rallied from the long state of unconsciousness, was very weak and still critically ill.

Lexington Notes

Elected Secretary of Standing Committee

The Venerable F. B. Wentworth, Winchester, Ky., archdeacon for financial and educational work in this diocese and president of St. John's Collegiate and Industrial School, Corbin, Ky., has been unanimously elected by the standing committee of this diocese to membership in that body. The archdeacon was also elected secretary of that body, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Rev. J. M. Maxon, now of the diocese of Kentucky.

All communications intended for the secretary of the standing committee should be addressed to the Venerable F. B. Wentworth, Winchester, Ky., who succeeds the Rev. J. M. Maxon.

THE VALEDICTORY OF ARCHBISHOP LANG AN APPEAL TO PATRIOTISM

The Archbishop Takes Back Word To England That America Is Aroused And Is Entering The War With All Her Strength

(April 12, 1918—From our Special New York Correspondent)

"You will not fail us. We, please God, will not fail you. I know that when I leave this country I am going back to my own, and, meeting it in the hour of its greatest experience, I can tell it 'the spirit of that mighty republic is rising. It is coming; and when it has come, it will stand by you till the last.'" With these words, the Most Reverend Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York, closed his speech for the Liberty Loan at the mass meeting in Carnegie Hall. The Archbishop is returning to England in a few days, and his words last night were in the nature of a valedictory to the American people. He emphasized the fact that in the last few days, when the allied world was breathlessly watching the bulletins from the Flanders front, America had seemed to settle more determinedly and more grimly to the task of winning the war.

Carnegie Hall was packed from the floor to the topmost gallery, and applause, punctuated by the waving of myriads of tiny American flags, greeted every point made by the speakers. In addition to the Archbishop, Mrs. August Belmont and George Wharton Pepper of Philadelphia pleaded the cause of our army and our nation itself as a reason for backing the loan to the last penny. Benjamin Strong, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of this district, and chairman of the Liberty Loan committee of New York, presided. A detachment of soldiers and sailors of the regular fighting forces of the United States were on the platform, together with the members of the Liberty Loan committee.

In opening the meeting, Mr. Strong read the message which Gen. Pershing sent to Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo regarding the Third Liberty Loan, asking every man, woman and child "at home" to "stand by" the army to a victorious end. He laid stress on the obligation America owed to her allies, Belgium, France and England, for holding the world's foe at bay for four bitter years.

The Archishop first expressed his gratitude to America for its overwhelming kindness to him as an Englishman.

"When I think of all that I have seen and felt since I last spoke upon this platform," he said, "I must needs give liberty to my heart and speak out to this last assemblage of American citizens that I shall address until, please God, this great struggle is once for all over and done. I must needs give liberty to my heart and express the depth of its gratitude to the American people. I do not think I realized how strong the friendship was until a few days ago I crossed that splendidly undefended border between you and the British empire in Canada. It was almost impossible to realize that I had crossed a border line.

"When I first landed here, I will confess, I felt a difference of atmosphere. This world of yours in New York seemed very different from the grim, gray world of nearly four years of war which I had left behind. But since then I have felt rising up, almost as if you could see it, this great tide of enthusiasm, determination and conviction in the heart of this great people.

"I know, I have always known, that you have great reserves of patriotic force, and I am certain that once these reserves are stirred and moved, they will have the effect of the waters of Niagara. They will advance with ever growing volume and force, and fall, please God, with decisive effect upon this great and terrible struggle.

"I beg of you not to say any more about the war, the word 'wait', but to put all your strength and determination into the single word, 'now'. I don't think anything has ever so clearly and palpably impressed the imagination and heart of any people as this great and awful battle has proven the heart of the American nation.

"And it is because you realize, as you never could have realized before the solemnity of this war, that you will put that spirit into your response for the appeal for this Liberty Loan. You will not make it, I know, a matter of profit. You will feel that it is a matter of pride—pride that any of you can have the honor of giving any of your substance to a cause so great, and at this moment so desperately in peril.

"England, for all that she has suffered, sees, I think, that she must still stand. You have read the speech of our Prime Minister. It touched my heart. It almost wrung my heart, for I have been absent from her these nearly two months in this hour of stress, but I could read between the lines. I saw there—I ask you to see there—that country stripping itself for the last struggle, showing that it is willing to make any sacrifice.

"But suppose—God forbid that it should be so—that England was unequal to the task, and the spirit of her people; suppose that France would have, with all her pride, to bow her head before the enemy—at least these two countries would fall with a great task behind them, and able in the hour of their shame to think with pride of the memories of the great days that were gone; but America, the land of the future, if she were to fail, there would be no great past to sustain her, there would be nothing but the loss of a great future."

Mrs. August Belmont told of her experiences on the battle front and in hospitals behind the lines, tending to show the indomitable spirit animating the forces standing in Flanders standing against the German legions.

Mr. Pepper, who closed the speaking, urged that in this war, this time of crisis in the affairs of the nation, lessons forced on us by the war should be taken to heart. Chief among these lessons, he declared, was the need for universal and compulsory military training for all the young men of the country. Rudyard Kipling's "Hymn Before Action", which has been set to music and sung on European battlefields, and which has been taken as the rallying song of the Liberty Loan workers, was rendered by the four-minute men.

Our New York correspondent sums up the sojourn of the Archbishop in the United States in the following fitting language. He says:

"The Archbishop of York sailed the end of the week for England. Wednesday night there was an extraordinary and brilliant banquet in the ball room of the Waldorf Astoria, given by the Church Club, the chief layman's organization of New York. All the Bishops, to the number of more than seventy, were also guests of honor, and a noble speech of greeting and farewell to Archbishop Lang was given in their name by Bishop Tuttle.

Next day the Archbishop received the degree of LL. D., honoris causa, from Columbia University, and he afterwards addressed the Institute of Arts and Letters, with many students and members of the faculty present. It was probably the most beautiful and affecting of his various addresses. It is said that he has addressed fully 95,000 people in his brief American tour, and has made at least 85 formal speeches and sermons. As he closes, he seems as fresh and powerful as ever, and he returns to the mother land with the admiration and love of probably millions of new friends who heard or read his words.

SPECIAL MEETING OF HOUSE OF BISHOPS HELD IN NEW YORK CITY

New Bishop For The Philippines—Overtures On Church Unity—Visit Of Archbishop Of York—Sundry Other Matters

Overtures to Unity

At an earlier moment in the session, a letter was read from the Rev. Dr. Newman Smythe and others, suggesting a modus vivendi through which, by means of ordination by a Bishop, as well as by a presbytery, and other recognized bodies giving the mission to officiate, certain chaplains could be sent forth to represent all religious bodies. A very kindly reply was made to this overture, but the opinion was expressed that such a procedure at the present moment would be inadvitable, and prolong the disunity now apparent, and so greatly to be deplored, especially in view of the fact that measures were under consideration which look to the final settlement of this question as affecting the whole Church.

A New Bishop for the Philippines

The Very Rev. Dean James Wilmer Gresham was elected Bishop of the Philippines, in succession to the Rt. Rev. Dr. Brent, translated to the Diocese of Western New York.

The Rev. James Wilmer Gresham, Dean of Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, is a graduate of the University of the South, graduating in 1896, and spending a year in Oxford, England, in special studies. He was ordained to the diaconate by Bishop Gailor in 1895, and to the priesthood the year following by Bishop Sessums of Louisiana. He began his ministry as assistant in Trinity Church, New Orleans, La., and has served as rector in Baton Rouge, La., Charleston, S. C., and San Jose, Cal. He is a member of the standing committee of the diocese, and one of its examining chaplains. He has been the author of several books of considerable merit. He has been Dean of the Cathedral in San Francisco for the past nine years.

The Visit of the Archbishop

A pleasing incident of the meeting of the House of Bishops was the visit of His Grace, Rt. Rev. Dr. Lang, Archbishop of York, who, in a telling speech, brought a message of great spiritual breadth and power. Dr. Lang, in almost his last public words before leaving America, addressed his brethren in the American Church in this meeting of the House of Bishops, and also at a banquet given by the Church Club of New York, tendered the visiting Bishops, and attended by a thousand or more guests. Elsewhere we publish other of his last utterances in this country.

The House passed a resolution offered by the Bishop of Massachusetts, urging upon congress the early passage of a bill for the increase of chaplains, emphasizing, however, that only ordained men, whose ordination is recognized by the denominations they represent should be appointed.

The House adopted a resolution offered by the Bishop of Bethlehem, expressing its cordial appreciation of the proposed plan of the Board of Religious Education for increasing the number of candidates for the ministry, and authorized the Board to take the steps contemplated in that plan.

Resolutions were adopted extending the thanks of the House of Bishops to the Bishop of New York, the Church Club of New York, and Churchmen and Churchwomen for their generous hospitality, and their appreciation of the generosity of a Churchwoman, long interested in the work of the cathedral, in providing the luncheons served to the Bishops during the sessions.

In reply to a telegram from Thomas E. Green, associate director of the Speakers' Guild of the American Red Cross, the House of Bishops instructed its secretary to say that there was no time to arrange for the coming of a representative of the Red Cross to address the House, but that the Bishops believe that in all their dioceses there is a very definite interest in its great work, and that that interest will be strongly maintained.

A Ringing Declaration of Loyalty

The Commission which was appointed to consider the matter of the resignation of the Bishop of Utah having reported, the House of Bishops passed the following resolutions:

"RESOLVED, That the House of Bishops declares its belief that the Government of the United States has obeyed the law of moral necessity in seeking to stop a war of deliberate aggression by the only means which are known to be effective to such an end.

"RESOLVED, That the House of Bishops believes that any member of this House is entitled to the same freedom of opinion and speech as any other citizen of the United States, but in the exercise of this liberty he should be guided by a deep sense of the responsibility which rests upon one who occupies a representative position.

"RESOLVED, That the House of Bishops is unwilling to accept the resignation of any Bishop in deference to an excited state of public opinion and therefore declines to adopt the report of the special commission or to accept the resignation of the Bishop of Utah for the reasons assigned by him in his letter of December 20, 1917."

After the adoption of the foregoing resolutions the Bishop of Utah presented his formal resignation, dated the same day, whereupon the House of Bishops passed the following resolution:

"RESOLVED, That with full recognition of the right of every member of this House of freedom of speech in political matters subject to the law of the land, nevertheless in view of Bishop Jones' impaired usefulness in Utah under present conditions, recognized by himself, the House of Bishops accepts the resignation of the Bishop of Utah as now presented."

The letter of the Bishop of Utah was a simple resignation without qualifications.

RESIGNATION OF BISHOP JONES IS ACCEPTED BY HOUSE OF BISHOPS

A Delicate Matter Handled With Splendid Judgment

Matters of large moment to the Church were under consideration by the House of Bishops at its session in Synod Hall, New York City, April 10 and 11, which had a fairly large attendance of Bishops, representing all sections of the American Church.

Overtopping in interest was the case of Bishop Jones of Utah, whose position regarding the war gave considerable offense to Churchmen and citizens in his District, and has been the cause of much acrimouious discussion in the public press. From the final resolutions adopted, and now published herewith, the Bishops seem to have had no difficulty in defining their own loyal position, nor do they appear to have the slightest desire to abridge the utterance of any conscientious convictions of any of their number, nor in any way to restrict the freedom of speech.

Bishop Touret of Western Colorado in Charge of Utah

On April 12, the Presiding Bishop appointed Bishop Touret, Bishop of Western Colorado, to take charge of the missionary district of Utah, made vacant by the acceptance of the resignation of Bishop Jones.

Former Denver Rector In Charge At Amiens

When the evacuation of the civil population ordered by the allied military authorities in the region of the German advance in France began, the Rev. Floyd Van Keuren, for six years rector of All Saints' Church, Denver, Col., was placed in charge of the work at Amiens, according to a dispatch from Paris. The removal of the civil population from the danger zone, a difficult and dangerous task, was accomplished by the Red Cross, working in connection with the military authorities, by means of establishing a chain of relief stations for refugees in the rear of the allied lines.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

St. Mark's Day, April 25

THE COLLECT

O Almighty God, who hast instructed thy holy Church with the heavenly doctrine of thy Evangelist Saint Mark; Give us grace that, being not like children carried away with every blast of vain doctrine, we may be established in the truth of thy holy Gospel; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Church is to be the educational force in those communities wherein she is placed. "Go teach", said Jesus to His disciples. A missionary Church is a teaching Church. One of the reasons for retaining Confirmation in the Church is that by this means the teaching Church can safeguard the truth, which she teaches by book and rite, so that its due proportions may not be distorted by the undue emphasis which her baptized children might be tempted to lay on some portion of the whole truth, if they were not checked up and rightly established.

An evangelist is a constructive, corrective educator. His business is to see that God's children are rightly instructed. He is to establish a congregation in the same way that a government establishes a lighthouse on the rocky, storm-bound, treacherous coasts, fixing it firmly on the right foundation, so that nothing can dislodge it and prevent it from fulfilling its mission of cheer and warning. The evangelist is a "good news" carrier, but his good news must be true news, not guesses, nor sensations, nor half truths, nor "scare lines", but edifying, upbuilding stuff that strengthens, stablishes, settles one.

And we who are taught! We must not be "like children carried away". We should be childlike, but not childish; faithful, but not credulous; reverent, but not superstitious.

A "heavenly doctrine" is a doctrine or teaching based on fact and experience. St. Peter taught St. Mark, and concerning his teaching, St. Peter himself said, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the coming and power of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of His majesty". A rightly instructed Church is always an illuminating as well as an illuminated Church, for it is a Church which is concerned with translating the truth as it is in Jesus into the practical everyday life of the men and women who have learned to put away childish things, and have taken the Word of God as a lantern for their feet. A missionary Church not only reads the Word of God, but endeavors to make that word a vital thing in the hearts of its hearers, translating its thoughts into action.

St. Mark's Day is a reminder that if we would open the meaning of the Scriptures so that it shall establish right living in all men, we must have the key which will fit the lock and open to our understanding the words of eternal life, which otherwise will be hid from our eyes. And this key is "the heavenly doctrine". "Heavenly doctrine"; "vain doctrine". Heavenly doctrine is teaching whose results are shown in good character; vain doctrine is teaching whose results are exterior, superficial, showy. Heavenly doctrine enables us to resist steadfastly the world, the flesh and the devil. Vain doctrine is largely concerned with appearances, and yields under pressure from the world, the flesh and the devil. It is a teaching which leaves the heart hollow, and empty, and destitute, when the goads of adversity prick open its superficial irridescence, or verbal camouflage, as the phrase goes today. Heavenly doctrine is a bit of the eternal rock; vain doctrine is a shimmering, opalescent bubble, born of time, expediency, self-interest. It promises beauty; it yields, under pressure, nothing at all, while the heavenly doctrine, under many a blow and biting Scripture, stands firm as the rock of ages, and strong as the eternal hills.

THE EPISTLE

Unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Ephes. iv:7.

Grace is given according to the measure of the gift of Christ, which is "good measure, pressed down and running over". Christ is generous, but not wasteful. Many followers of Jesus are still wasteful, in spite of His teaching and example. They waste men and money in duplication of effort, which results from the exercise of a poor judgment and the persistence of ignorant prejudice. What was true in St. Paul's day is sadly true in our day also. "Every man hath a psalm, every man hath a doctrine", and this tendency, unchecked, uncontrolled, unco-ordinated, does not tend to "the edifying of the body of Christ", but wastes and weakens it.

The aim of religion is to develop a perfected man, to bring individuals up to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. To bring about this condition, the Saviour plans to use oversight, which involves episcopacy; inspiration, which involves prophecy; edification, which involves evangelism; nourishment, which requires the pastoral relation; illumination, which calls for the teachers. St. Paul thought that the approach to perfection was brought about through the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God. What makes saints is not knowledge about Jesus, but knowledge of Jesus, which is an experimental knowledge. And the unity of the faith is a banding together of those who believe that God is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. A knowledge of Jesus does not come to those who put their trust in any son of man, no matter how good such a man seems to be. Christ must be the aim, Christ the end, Christ the prize. The best man that ever lived has a tendency to "cunning craftiness", not meaning by this that men deliberately set out to deceive others, but meaning that by inheritance and environment there is a twist in each man's character, which, because he is human, makes him liable to break under some stress. So that congregation only is safe which leans not on its apostle, or its prophet, or its evangelist, or its pastor, or its teacher, but is endeavoring "to speak the truth in love, and to grow up into Him in all things which is the head, even Jesus Christ".

It is a great day for men when they realize that the Church is an organism with joints and parts, rather than an organization with officers and rulers. It is a great day for a parish when it realizes that it is not a corporate entity, but only a bit of Corpus Christi, whose chief object should be not to absorb vitality from above, but to afford that vitality an opportunity for unobstructed transmission.

It is a great day for a diocese when it realizes that it only functions properly as it thinks and acts in terms of the whole, the universal, instead of in terms of isolated or contiguous units.

It will be a great day for the world when the universal Church will realize that it is to be the functioning body for a Ghost, a Holy Ghost, who will, if permitted, make all things new, and so inaugurate the blessings of a new heaven and an new earth.

THE GOSPEL

I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and ever branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.—St. John xv:1.

The Body of Christ is only as efficient as its weakest member. Every unresponsive member makes for the weakness of the body. A branch, if it gives not grace for grace, begins to wither. Even those members who try to function properly as members of the Body of Christ must expect to be measured up, not by the fruit they have produced, but by the fruit they are capable of producing, when the cleansing word of Christ is given unimpeded way. The ideal growth in grace is shown by the poet in those cumulative verses which run, "All of self and none of Thee", "Some of self and more of Thee", "None of self and more of Thee, "None of self and all of Thee". Apart from me, ye can do nothing", says the Saviour. The question which each soul has to settle with himself is this, says Canon Douglas: "Shall I be independent of Christ, or independent with Him"?

The history of unproductive spiritual religions is that they wither. As long as they persist in the world, we can be sure they are being purged, in order to bring forth more fruit. If a Church's prayer life is unproductive and unfruitful, it is due to one of two causes: the members of that Church are not abiding in Christ, or the words of Christ are not given room to abide therein. A vital Church must make provision for the words of Christ to function in its life. Just to hear those words preached by a wonderful prophet, just to learn those words with our lips, but not with our understanding; just to teach those words to our children, as one teaches words to a parrot, may result in a strong organization, but not in a healthy organism. The test of a loving Church is not only the ability to keep Christ's commandments, nor a knowledge of those commandments, nor an admiration of those commandments, but a living of them in our daily lives. And the more every individual in a parish keeps those commandments, the more powerful will that Church become, both in word and deed. So, too, if the Church members do not regularly abide in Christ, by means of His Body and Blood, the more will their fruit tend to words, rather than words and deeds. God is glorified by the fruits of His grace, which are to be shown both on our lips and in our lives.

"Continue ye in my love." Perseverance is a mark of health and growth and progress in the life of saintliness. Perseverence in doing our part in the Body, wherever we shall be placed in that Body, this is the hard test, this is the real test. Perseverance in using our eyes to see, our ears to hear, our minds to understand, our affections to adore and obey, our wills to accomplish. That is a true resurrection life which manifests itself not in a parasitic clinging to altar and book, but in a constant and regular going out to man from altar and book, and a constant return with man to altar and book as "day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth us knowledge".

A Clergyman Cannot "Strike"

A special committee of laymen, appointed to make a survey of salaries and stipends of the clergy in the Diocese of Massachusetts, will present a printed report to the forthcoming Diocesan Convention on the 17th inst., which says: "In comparing the salaries of this diocese with those of other dioceses we are indeed fortunate, but when compared with those of other professions, and even of some artisans, the showing is quite unfavorable. Clergymen cannot strike as can laborers, but they have to pay increasing amounts for the necessities of life just the same. One purpose of this report is to bring forcibly to the attention of all laymen the absolute necessity of adequately compensating our ministers. It is unnecessary to detail all that we expect of them and the various demands made upon their daily lives, as this is well known. Also it should not be necessary to remind the laymen in the diocese that still a great many of our ministers are underpaid. It is our duty to see that all of our ministers are unfettered with the petty cares of life so that they may devote their whole time to spiritual leadership which is needed now more than ever before."

The Prophet Isaiah, or whoever wrote the forty-second and forty-third chapters of the book, with that wide conception of Jehovah in relation to the affairs of the whole world that belongs to the period of the exile and return, boldly declared that the Persian king, Cyrus, was God's shepherd, and even His anointed, His providential agent for bringing about the end of the captivity and the return (I. Easter). The historian Ezra follows this by the record that Cyrus accepted the Divine commission, giving permission to the Jews to return to their native land (II. Easter). In today's lesson we have the story of the rebuilding of the Altar and laying the foundations for the new temple, which was done amid mingled tears and shoutings—April weather, as it were. That always happens when there meet together the worshipers of the past and the believers in a glorious future.

The New Testament was selected for its bearing on the season, rather than as a correlative for the first lesson. It begins St. Paul's discussion of the resurrection. The latter part of the chapter (35-end) goes with the selection from Hosea, which forms the Old Testament alternate, and which, according to the apostle's interpretation, prophecies victory over death. The present writer would respectfully call attention to the value, in this world crisis, of the story of the captivity and return, as interpreted by the prophet. He saw in it an evidence of God's overruling providence on behalf of His Church and the Kingdom of God on earth, "righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Spirit", and involving the duty of witnessing to God's reign. (See Isaiah 43:9-12). The resurrection of our Lord, which is the fulfillment of the return as viewed by Ezekiel (37:1-14), also leads to this duty of bearing witness. It was this idea, brought out also in this Epistle, that determined the selection of the evening lessons: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee," and "Let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven".

The week day morning lessons continue the story of the return, with its difficulties and discouragements, and particularly the inspiring message of Zechariah; and these are paralleled by St. Paul on the resurrection (already referred to) and selections from Revelation. This latter book has usually been confined to Advent, but it is also appropriate to Easter, with its Christ who was dead and is alive forever more, and has the keys of death and of Hades (the unseen world), and its blessed promises to "him that overcometh", even as He overcame and sat down at the right hand of His Father in heaven.

In the evening First Peter is given entire, with its exposition of the risen Lord as Redeemer, and the religio-ethical consequences flowing therefrom; and Esther is begun, paralleling the return and glorifying loyalty to the law which was then established.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

WAR-TIME PRAYERS

Let us pray for our country and for those to whom is committed responsibility, that they may act with wisdom, courage and success.

O Merciful Father, we beseech thee at this time to look down in mercy upon our country. Guide and protect the President of the United States, and all others in authority. Give wisdom and courage to those who bear command in our army and navy. Grant to us, and to our allies, if it be Thy will, victory and success. Preserve our land from bloodshed, and remove the horrors of war from other lands. Stay, we beseech Thee, the pain and the misery, the sorrow and the want, the fierceness and the cruelty which now desolate the earth. Look down in compassion upon those who are our enemies in this war, especially upon their sick and wounded. And speedily, if it be Thy will, send forth upon the nations of the world the blessing of Thy peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Let us pray for our soldiers and our sailors.

O Almighty and Merciful God, we commend to Thy fatherly care those who through the perils of war are serving their country by land and by sea. Thou knowest the places where they are, and the dangers which beset them. Be Thou to each one a shield and a defense. In times of waiting or action, in sickness or in health, in life or in death, grant unto him the comfort of Thy presence. Put into his mind holy thoughts of Thee, his Heavenly Father, and of Jesus Christ, his Saviour. Help him to pray. And if it be Thy will, keep him in safety, and bring him back to his home in peace; through our blessed Saviour and Mediator, Jesus Christ. Amen.

Let us pray for those called to tasks of special peril in air, or beneath the sea:

Look in Thy mercy, we beseech Thee, O Lord, on those who are called to tasks of special peril in the air or beneath the sea. Even there also shall Thy hand lead them. Help them to do their duty with prudence and with fearlessness, confident that in life or in death the Eternal God is their refuge, and that underneath them are the Everlasting Arms. Grant this for Jesus Christ's sake, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

Let us pray for the souls of all who have laid down their lives during this war:

O Lord Jesus Christ, who by Thy death didst take away the sting of death, grant rest, we beseech Thee, in the place of light and refreshment, to those who have died in battle, or through sickness in this war; receive their souls into Thy holy keeping, where pain and sorrow and sighing are done away, and grant unto them Thy never failing mercy; Who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Let us pray that we may all do our duty to God and to our country:

Almighty God, who hast made us citizens of this land, enable us, though we remain in the safety of our homes, to do our country service. Make us calm, unselfish, and ready to give according to our means. Give us grace to bear the burdens of others, those known to us, and those unknown. Keep us from being at any time cast down by anxiety, and enable us to cheer and comfort those about us. Show us at all times what is our duty, and strengthen us to do it, and grant that we may, with a ready will, learn the lessons which Thou art teaching us; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE PSALTER

Catechism: Learn the 51st Psalm.

Prop. 1.

For more than 2,500 years the Psalms of David have formed the basis of the daily worship of the Church.

There are 150 Psalms and they have been divided into thirty parts, a part for each day of the month; each part divided into a morning and evening selection, so that the whole Psalter may be read through each month. These Psalms are read by the minister and congregation in alternate verses, or, better, each verse in the Psalter is divided into two parts by a colon, the minister reading to the colon, the congregation reading the balance.

In order to read the Psalms intelligently, one ought to realize that each Psalm is a Hebrew poem; that it was written by a prophet, and, therefore, has both a Hebrew and a Christian meaning, for they testify of Christ. For example, there is no more accurate description of the Crucifixion than that recorded in the 22nd Psalm.

Prop. 2.

Nearly all the Psalms follow the rule of Hebrew poetry, which describes an incident in poetic language and then pictures the same thought in other words. For example, in the 95th Psalm the minister was directed to sing, "O come, let us sing unto the Lord," and the congregation to reply, "Let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation."

This is what is known as antiphonal singing.

We lose most of the beauty of this by ignoring this structure, and the minister reads this whole verse, while the congregation reads the next one.

In the 51st Psalm, the minister should read, "Have mercy upon me, O God, after Thy great goodness," and the congregation would reply, expressing the same thought in other words, "According to the multitude of Thy mercies do away my offences."

Instead of this the minister ordinarily reads both, and the congregation replies with both parts of the next verse, "Wash me thoroughly from my wickedness, and cleanse me from my sin." Thus we lose the real beauty of the antiphonal character of the Psalter.

Prop. 3.

In order to read the Psalter intelligently, we need to mark in each Psalm who is meant by the personal pronouns "I, me, and thou"—otherwise the Psalms have no meaning.

There are three different uses of the personal pronoun "I" which one should note:

1. Sometimes "I" refers to the penitent sinner, as in the 51st Psalm, "Have mercy upon me," "For I acknowledge my faults." Here it is obvious that we can appropriate the personal pronoun to ourselves.

2. Sometimes the poet is putting himself in the place of Christ, and uses the pronoun as though Christ were speaking, as in the 22nd Psalm, "They pierced my hands and my feet."

3. And sometimes the personal pronoun refers to the Church, as in the 91st Psalm, "He shall defend thee under his wings and thou shalt be safe under his feathers."

Each Psalm should be studied as we read it, and we will find expression for every variety of religious emotion that we may desire to express; and as you become more and more familiar with the Psalms, you will find in them the richest treasury of devotion in which to express your love and gratitude to God.

Prop. 4.

In public worship it is the aim of the Church, in giving us the Psalter, to provide the worshipper with a vehicle in which he can express his devotion to God without advertising his individual piety.

Our Lord seems to have condemned very strongly those who advertised themselves by praying in the Synagogues and on the corners of the streets, and gave to His disciples the Lord's Prayer in which they could address God without self-advertisement.

It is the danger of religious folks that they offend the heathen by talking more religiously than they act.

It is the aim of the Church to encourage you to express your devotion in the language of the Psalms, along with others, so that you may not be tempted to an extravagance of external expression which your private conduct may not justify.

The Psalms, if you study them, will give full expression to your love, but without increasing your own vanity in so doing. It enables you to pray secretly and at the same time join in public worship.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

FROM "ST. PAUL"

By Frederic W. H. Myers

Christ! I am Christ's! and let the name suffice you,
Ay, for me, too, He greatly hath sufficed:
Lo, with no winning words I would entice you;
Paul has no honor and no friend but Christ.

Yes, without cheer of sister or of daughter,
Yes, without stay of father or of son,
Lone on the land and homeless on the water,
Pass I in patience till the work be done.

Yet not in solitude if Christ, anear me,
Waketh Him workers for the great employ;
Oh, not in solitude, if souls that hear me
Catch from my joyance the surprise of joy.

Hearts I have won of sister or of brother,
Quick on the earth or hidden in the sod;
Lo, every heart awaiteth me, another
Friend in the blameless family of God.

Let no man think that sudden, in a minute,
All is accomplished, and the work is done—
Though with thy earliest dawn thou shouldst begin it,
Scarce were it ended in thy setting sun.

* * * * * * *

Whoso hath felt the Spirit of the Highest,
Cannot confound, nor doubt Him, nor deny:
Yea, with one voice, O world, though thou deniest,
Stand thou on that side, for on this am I

* * * * * * *

Yea, through life, death, through sorrow and through sinning,
He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed.
Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning;
Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ.

The Epistle to the Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

XXX

Vs. 16. Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

Meyer: Above all—in addition to all things.

Moule: In all things, i. e., at every turn of the conflict.

Sadler: The shield. Thureos, a large weapon of defense, 4 ft long 2½ ft. wide, name derived from thura, a door, as it shielded the soldier as if he were behind a door.

Monod: Of the faith—that faith whereby we resolutely rely on God and His Word for deliverance from temptation.

Whitby: That faith which is the confident "expectation of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen". (Heb. xi:1.)

Meyer: Only wavering faith is accessible to the devil.

Moule: The fiery darts. Metaphor taken from the fierce arrows of ancient warfare.

Blunt: These darts of the wicked one are the heresies by which he fought against the faith, and by which he endeavored to destroy souls by separating them from Him in whom they believed.

Vs. 17. And receive the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.

Sadler: The helmet of salvation. This helmet, in I Thess., v. 8, is the hope of salvation.

Meyer: As the helmet defends the warrior from deadly wounds on the head, so the salvation of the Messianic Kingdom serves to protect the Christian soldier from the assaults of the devil, aimed at his intellectual life.

Moule: The head needs protection, not only as a vital part, but as the seat of sight. The believer looks up, and lifts up his head as his redemption draweth nigh.

Harless: Salvation in Christ forms the subject of faith; in faith it is apprehended and becomes even, in a certain sense, a present possession.

Ellicott: Receive, as from Him who furnishes the armor, and whose Spirit puts in our hands the sword.

Meyer: The sword which the Spirit furnishes, and this sword is the Word of God, the Gospel.

Wordsworth: Which is the Word of God. The Word of God wherewith the Captain of your salvation defeated the evil one at the temptation.

Sadler: We must have passages of God's Word which reprove our besetting sin ever at hand.

Vs. 18. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints.

Sadler: Praying. Praying always, because the Christian is always in danger. He must be ready to call upon God always, whenever a suggestion of evil rises up within him.

Moule: With all prayer and supplication. All, every variety, deliberate, ejaculatory, public, private, secret; confessing, asking, praying. Prayer is the larger word, supplication the more definite.

Sadler: Prayer is the general word for all intercourse with God, but because we needy creatures are always requiring God's grace and help, it generally takes the form of supplication.

Ellicott: In the Spirit. Certainly not in the human spirit, but in the Holy Spirit, in whose blessed and indwelling influence, and by whose merciful aid we are enabled to pray; yes, and who Himself intercedes for us.

Sadler: Watching usually means to deny oneself in sleep, but here means watching against the attacks of our spiritual adversaries, and if we are idle and given to slumber, we cannot do this.

Moule: Perseverance. Our Lord's parable (St. Luke xviii:1) makes it plain that persistency as well as trust, has a mysterious value in the efficacy of prayer.

Eadie: For all the saints. In praying for themselves they were uniformly to blend petitions for all the saints. The Christian cannot put on the armor of Christ without getting in sympathy with the brotherhood of saints.

Vs. 19. And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel.

Moule: And for me. The apostle wisely covets for his apostolic work the prayers of the obscurest militant believer.

Meyer: That utterance may be given unto me, i. e., that there may not be withheld from me, by God, but may, on the contrary, be conferred, that which I ought to speak when I open my mouth.

Moule: Given. By the inspiring and enabling Spirit. The apostle was still as dependent upon the heavenly gift as when his work began.

Harless: The opening of the mouth is an act of God, denoting "the bestowed capacity of speaking", in contrast to an earlier bound state of the tongue.

Ellicott: Boldly to make known. As the opening of the mouth hinted at the solemn and responsible nature of the act, so the boldness refers qualitatively to the character and spirit of the preaching.

Meyer: The opportunity of preaching was not taken from the apostle in his captivity at Cæsarea (Acts xxiv:23), nor yet afterwards at Rome (Acts xxvii:30).

Ellicott: The mystery of the gospel, i. e., the mystery which the Gospel has or involves.

Vs. 20. For which I am an ambassador in bonds, that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak.

Meyer: I am an ambassador. Whose ambassador he is was at once understood by the reader, viz: Christ's; and equally so to whom his embassy was addressed, viz: to all people, especially the Gentiles.

Welstein: Note the paradox, an ambassador in chains. He says: "In other relations, ambassadors, sacred and inviolable by the laws of nations, could not be held in bonds."

Wordsworth: In bonds. Yet the Gospel which I preach is not bound, nor can be, but it will bind satan and liberate the world.

Moule: Therein, i. e., in the mystery of the Gospel. This was the field or sphere of his speech. This makes it plain that the reference is to this, and not to the bonds.

Ellicott: God was the source and casual sphere of the speaking boldly. The Gospel (here the mystery of the Gospel) was the object in which and about which it was to be manifested.

Moule: As I ought to speak under the holy obligation of my commission (cf. I Cor. ix:16).

The members of the vestry presented him with a complete camp kit and the Parish Guild presented him with a private communion service.

Notes From Wyoming

Reports from St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, show a most enjoyable and inspiring Easter. On Easter Even Bishop Thomas confirmed a class of eleven, presented by Dean Thornberry. According to custom, the Knights Templar attended in a body the Easter Day services, at which the Bishop preached. In the evening, it was the good fortune of the people of Laramie to listen to an uplifting address by Prof. Robert M. McElroy, educational director of the National Security League. It was a great opportunity, and the people rose to the occasion, filling the cathedral to overflowing.

Easter Monday was the occasion for the dedication of the new parish house of St. Thomas' Church, Rawlins, which has been completed at a cost of $3,500. The money for this splendid building was raised locally through the efforts of the rector, the Rev. Franklin C. Smith, who was assisted by an able committee of laymen, headed by Mr. George Bible. Following the service, dinner was served in the parish house. The building was dedicated by Bishop Thomas.

The joy in the realization of the completed task was marred by the fact that this was the last official act of Mr. Smith as rector of St. Thomas' Church. With great regret, the people bade farewell to their rector, his wife and family. They go to their new work in the diocese of Bethlehem, followed by the love and affection which they inspired in Rawlins.

The following letter from Mrs. B. S. Cooper tells the story of the way in which St. Michael's Mission spent Easter:

"Easter Day, St. Michael's Mission,
"Wind River, Wyoming.

"My Dear Bishop:

"Our afternnoon service is just over. The chapel was crowded with Arapahoes. Several men stood outside, and our hospital nurse pro tem., Miss Elliot, from Unit 3, sat on a bench outside with four of her patients, as those children are not allowed to mingle with the rest of the school. Marion Roberts and Mrs. Markley came over from the Shoshone Mission to help us with the singing, so everything was most inspiring. We also had a full chapel at the early service, and five rails of communicants. I am sure Mr. Balcom feels full of joy."

Bishop Thomas conducted the Three Hour Service on Good Friday at St. John's Church, Green River. A class of fifteen was confirmed in the evening, presented by the rector, the Rev. W. Hewton Ward.

the Parish. Again twice as many men and boys were present as were expected, and the Parish House was taxed to the limit. There followed a program of speeches and music by men and boys of the Parish, and outside speakers. Archdeacon Long made the principal speech in which he eloquently appealed to the fathers for a closer bond of fellowship with their sons that they might feel at all times ready to council with them when the perplexing questions of youth arise. It was a strong address and made a profound impression upon all present. As a result of the special services and the gathering of the men and boys, much good is being felt in the Parish, and large congregations are attending at the services of the Church.

Personal Mention

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Robert L. Paddock of Eastern Oregon is planning to leave this month for France.

The Rev. Howard W. Gernand, rector of Christ Church, Newark, has resigned to accept the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, Millburn, N. J.

The Rev. E. J. d'Argent, formerly of St. John's Church, Deadwood, S. D., assumed his new duties as rector of St. Mark's Church, Aberdeen, S. D., on the first Sunday after Easter.

The Rev. Frank E. Wilson, civilian chaplain at Camp Grant, Ill., has received a chaplain's commission of First Lieutenant from the Illinois State Council of Defense.

The Rev. S. S. Ware, much to the regret of his parishioners, has found it necessary to retire from active service as rector of Christ Church, Port Royal, Va., owing to physical disability. His resignation, tendered to the vestry, will take effect on the 30th inst.

Mr. George Wharton Pepper, one of the leading lawyers of Pennsylvania and well-known Churchman, has taken a strong stand, in interviews appearing in Philadelphia papers, in favor of the ratification of the federal prohibition amendment.

New Jersey Notes

Proposed Summer School for the Clergy

The prospectus has recently been issued of a summer school for the clergy, the first of its kind under directly diocesan management, to be held at Ruth Hall, Asbury Park, June 17 to 22. The appointed place is ideal for the purpose, and the plant of this new school for girls, known as Ruth Hall, will afford all essential accommodation.

The general committee of arrangements comprises the Bishop of the diocese, as chairman, and the Revs. Hamilton Schuyler, vice chairman; Francis H. Richey, secretary, and Morgan Ashley, treasurer. There are appointed, also, subcommittees on publicity and enrollment, lecturers and schedules, finance and house arrangement.

The total charge for attendance, including enrollment fee, board and lodging for the five days, is fixed at $10 per person.

The program of instructions has not yet been fully arranged, but there are already promised for the faculty Bishop Kinsman of Delaware, Dr. F. F. Kramer, Warden of Seabury Divinity School, and Dean Fosbrooke of the General Theological Seminary.

It is proposed to map out a course of study along the lines of the subjects dealt with at the school, which may be pursued privately throughout the year, and thus stimulate definite and systematic intellectual effort.

Ordination

On Maundy Thursday, in St. Wilfred's Church, Camden, the Rev. Robert G. W. Williams was advanced to the priesthood, the Bishop of New Jersey officiating. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Chas. M. Perkins of West Collingswood, who also was the preacher, and with the Rev. Thomas L. Josephs joined in the laying on of hands. A large attendance of the clergy was inexpedient in Holy Week.

Mr. Williams has been for some time working at St. Wilfred's, and will continue there as rector.

St. Stephen's College Annandale, N.Y.

On Thursday afternoon, April 11th, in spite of the very inclement weather, the Woman's Guild of St. Stephen's College held a meeting and tea in the Choir School in the Cathedral Close, New York City. A goodly number of ladies were present, and Dean Treador, Archdeacon Pott, Dr. Reazor and Rev. Frank Simmons, were noticed among the audience.

A great number of Bishops had promised to be present, and four had promised to speak, together with Dean Fosbroke of the General Theological Seminary, and President Rodgers. Unfortunately the House of Bishops was closely confined to Synod Hall, with the important business they had to consider, and Bishop Burch was obliged to come over and tell the meeting that it would be impossible for any of the Bishops to be present.

The gathering was fortunate in having Dean Fosbrooke present. He made a splendid address, supporting the principles and work of St. Stephen's. He presented some remarkable figures, as to the average marks of those men in the General Theological Seminary who came from St. Stephen's. The result of his inquiry was that Dean Fosbrooke found the work of all St. Stephen's men who had graduated from the Seminary during the last decade averaged 84%, which he regards as remarkably good.

In the absence of Bishop Burch, President Rodgers took the chair, and in his remarks referred to the prospects of the college being recognized by the Province, and of the co-operation of the Board of Religious Education, and the Bishops.

Speeches were made by Dean Treador, Dr. Reazor and Mrs. Harold Hadden. Encouraging letters from many Bishops were read by Mrs. Goodwin, the Secretary of the Woman's Guild. Announcements were made that at least five New York City parishes had promised to provide scholarships, among them St. Thomas'.

The Daughters of the King of the Diocese of Ohio have announced a special inspirational convention to be held at Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Wednesday, April 24th. The program names among the speakers, Bishop Leonard, Bishop DuMoulin, Rev. Charles C. Bubb of Cleveland, Rev. L. P. McDonald, D. D., of Warren and Rev. Franklyn C. Sherman of Akron.

Alaska Is Doing Its Bit To Win The War

According to a writer in the Alaskan Churchman, the natives—as well as the white men and women there—are showing a remarkable interest in the war and are doing their bit in the way of Red Cross work and contributions to help the allies. At Chena, one of the mission stations, the native children, seeing a picture of Junior Red Cross workers in a Red Cross magazine, demanded to be given the chance to become Red Cross workers, and while no definite organization was undertaken, yet they were given permission to make costumes for themselves, under the supervision of an older Indian girl. While the organization was in part play, yet it also had a most serious side, and a side that took to heart the fact that these children are to be the future of the Indian homes, and so all training that they can receive will be a benefit and help to them for the future.

The Indians, in order to show what they think of their government, have in some of the larger points perfected Red Cross organizations among themselves. Not so long ago an article appeared telling of an eloquent address made by an Eskimo calling on his people to support the United States government in every way that they could. "For," he said, "it is our government, too, and we must do all we can to help out in this great war that is going on." Down on the coast there have been Red Cross organizations perfected that would do credit to any body of people, and in the interior, in almost every list, one can read of where many of the various Indians have contributed to the Red Cross funds. It was interesting to see in one list the names of members of missions, who are deeply interested in the work of the government, and want to know all about the great war.

Names of Old Paul, Selina and many others have appeared, and they give most willingly, and liberally for such a cause. It shows that they are realizing that they are a part of this great government of ours, and are willing to back it up so far as possible, and to the limit of their ability.

So Red Cross work it not confined alone to the States, nor to the white people living in America's territorial lands. While the white people in Alaska are probably giving more per capita than any other state or territory, yet it is helpful and encouraging to find that the native population also is interested, and that they feel that they also have a right and a duty to help out in the work and needs of the government of the United States.

The Board Of Missions

Meeting of the Executive Committee

The Executive Committee of the Board of Missions met in the Church Missions House, New York, on April 9, 1918, with a good representation.

From the domestic field we received and acted upon the resignation of the Rev. J. H. Brown as missionary in the Diocese of Florida. The Rev. K. G. Finlay was requested to attend as representative of the Board the Conference of Southern Mountain Workers to be held in Knoxville, Tenn., April 10-12.

The resignation of Deaconesses Crane and MacDonald were also accepted as missionaries in the District of Porto Rico.

The retirment of Miss A. M. Clark as a regularly appointed missionary in the District of Hankow was accepted but at the Bishop's request she is to continue as a missionary employed in the field for one year.

The Board accepted with great regret the resignation of Dr. John MacWillie as missionary physician in the District of Hankow.

The resignation of Miss C. J. Tracy as missionary in the District of Kyoto was also accepted, as well as the resignation of the Rev. H. H. Kelley of the District of Alaska.

Permission was granted to the Rev. T. R. Ludlow of Hankow to proceed to France to work among the Chinese, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. J. A. MacDonald, at the request of the Bishop, was appointed as missionary in the District of Hankow.

Eleven of the Domestic Missionary Bishops who were here to attend the meeting of the House of Bishops had a conference with the Executive Committee on matters concerning work in the Domestic Field.

The Rev. Mr. Van Keuren left Denver last summer to do reconstruction and other Red Cross work on the French front.—Denver News.

EDITORIAL

ON READING THE PSALTER

On another page of this issue there is a Confirmation Instruction on the use of the Psalter in Divine service.

In writing this instruction the Editor desired to express himself regarding our custom of reading the Psalms in Church in a manner that would not be suitable to the purpose of an instruction.

There is no richer treasury of devotion in the world than the Psalms of David, but we have been profoundly conscious for years that the reading of the Psalms is a purely mechanical process on the part of a large number of eminently practical, but scarcely poetical, members of our congregations.

As one looks at a congregation during the reading of the Psalter one is reminded of the feelings which that monk must have experienced who made it a practice of reading the whole one hundred and fifty Psalms while standing immersed to his neck in cold water. One would feel that he would be in a hurry to get through, and that he would be less concerned with using the Psalms to convey his devotions to God than he would with the necessity of accelerating the pace which would complete the task.

Is reading the Psalter a purely mechanical process and is our method of doing the same conducive to intelligent devotion?

In the first place, what could be more stupid than reading the Psalms through on the basis of their numerical order in the Psalter? Why not use the same intelligence in the hymnal? This Sunday we will sing hymns 345-350, inclusive; next Sunday 351-355, and so on.

Of course you might get variety in that way. It would be possible to sing an Easter hymn, one suitable for Christmas, one for Good Friday and one for the healing of the sick—all at one service. Besides there is no mental effort required in the selection of the next five hymns for the next Sunday.

It is true that we do mark the greater festivals with an intelligent selection of Psalms, but why not apply this principle to every Sunday in the year? What is the spiritual value of reading every Psalm once during the month? As well sing every hymn once a month.

In the next place, why argue the fabric of the Psalms in using them? How would it be to read the versicles and responses in the way which we render the Psalter?

Why not have the minister stand up and say: "The Lord be with you and with thy spirit," while the congregation replied: "O Lord, show Thy mercy upon us and grant us Thy salvation?"

The Psalms were written for antiphonal use; why ignore that fact?

When one catches the rhythm of the 51st Psalm, one can readily see that the minister should say, "Wash me thoroughly from my wickedness," and the congregation should reply, "And cleanse me from my sin," and that it is perfectly inane for the minister to read, "Cast me not away from Thy Presense and take not Thy Holy Spirit from me," for he has said the same thing over twice, whereas he should have said the thing in one phrase and the congregation should have flashed back the same thought in another; just as it would be more or less meaningless for the minister to say, "O God, make clean our hearts within us and take not Thy Holy Spirit from us."

Of course we have done it from time immemorial, but so did we wear black stoles on Easter Day.

There were many foolish customs that originated with the Tudors or the Stuarts and were ossified by the Georges.

Moreover, all of the Psalms, like all of the hymns, are very ill adapted for general use. When a modern congregation reads, "Over Edom will I cast My shoe, upon Philistia will I triumph," I am afraid that the significance of the transaction is not apparent. Yet on a particular Sunday they must commemorate this ancient Jewish custom.

Why not allow the same freedom in the use of the Psalms that we do in the use of the hymns?

We notice during these war times that the language of many preachers toward the Huns is very similar to that used by the Psalmist in the imprecatory Psalms towards those enemies of Israel who anticipated the Prussians in the practice of frightfulness. We wonder if there is not a place for the much abused imprecatory Psalms?

Of course the pacifist would say, indignantly, "No!"

But, then, we are becoming more and more convinced that pacificism is a kind of religious anemia that red-blooded men feel as strongly wrathful against the murderers of children and the violators of pledges as our Lord did toward the hypocritical Pharisees when He consigned them to the place where they belonged.

It is all very nice for pacifists and socialists to theorize, but Russian pacifists and German socialists seem to have demonstrated that fine theories do not make birds of paradise. The human heart demands that those who offered little ones shall have a mill stone tied to their neck and that they shall be drowned in the bottom of the sea.

Is righteous indignation against the enemies of peace to be confused with private animosity against one's personal enemies? We may be very wicked, but we know that we are rather human and not personally vindicative, when we find a new meaning in these days to the imprecatory Psalms. And as we read of the atrocities of the Prussian, we hope to be forgiven if we mildly wonder how they can escape the damnation of hell.

Nor do we particularly envy those who seem to us to confuse private animosity with our war against the enemies of God.

Former Church School Teacher Is Killed By Boche Shell In France

News has come from France of the death of Miss Marion G. Crandell, an associate of the Sisters of St. Mary, and a member of the faculty of St. Katharine's School, Davenport, Iowa.

Miss Crandell was released from her teaching duties soon after the Christmas holidays to take charge of a canteen for the Y. M. C. A. She had offered her services to the French government without cost. She was educated in Paris, and believed that she could accomplish much for the soldiers, because of her intimate knowledge of France and the language.

Miss Crandell was killed by the explosion of a huge German shell, which destroyed the French Soldiers' Fireside, where she was working on the French front for the soldiers who were in action. This was during the bombardment of St. Menhould, near Chalons. She was taken to a near-by hospital, where she died without regaining consciousness. The funeral services were held the next day, Maundy Thursday morning, a French army chaplain presiding. Her coffin was draped with the French tricolor, and stood next to the coffin of a French soldier who was killed in the same bombardment. She was given a military funeral, and interment was made in the military cemetery, where hers was the only woman's grave among 6,000 French soldiers.

"She came to work for soldiers—she died like a soldier"—declared the army chaplain.

Miss Crandell was the first woman to be killed in Y. M. C. A. work at the front.

In a letter received at the school the week of Miss Crandell's death, she said, "Give my love to every one, and tell all that we cannot sacrifice too much, for we must win this war, and it can only be done through sacrifice".

"Great Good Shepherd" Leads Us All

Chaplain Murray Dewart of the 101st (Mass.) Regiment, Field Artillery, the first American regiment to arrive at the front, writing from France, states that "From what I read over here, it seems that all America is awake with a new spirit of idealism. We are just beginning to see what a stupendously ghastly thing this war is, but, with all its cost of horrors we also are beginning to see that out of it may come a purified and ennobled America. It may mean a world with less selfishness, with a finer vision of life's great values, and with an increased sense of responsibility before God. Certainly this is what we ought to be having drubbed into us, and it seems to me that all over the world there are evidences that the race is learning its lesson.

"It is inconceivable that ever again our generation will become almost wholly engrossed with little, petty considerations of our own comfort and prosperity. God is making us think about bigger and finer things now. All over the world men and women are forgetting all about themselves today and are giving their all gladly. Never in the history of the race was there anything like the great spirit of idealism which today is sweeping us all along in its train. It is something tremendous to be alive at a time when mankind has touched its highest. The race never can sink back again to quite the old level. We can all go ahead more bravely and cheerfully as we begin to see what our sacrifices mean.

"With all the bitter cost before us—with all—it isn't just needless waste! Behind it all, we catch a glimpse of the Great Giver of all good things, who always is giving nothing but good, Who even, through the ghastly horrors of war, is once more showing Himself the Great Good Shepherd, leading all humankind into pastures more green. As individuals, or as a race, if we can get that realization deep in our souls, is there any price too big to pay for it?"

Must Be Able To Render Good Account After War

In speaking of the war work of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, before the Massachusetts Episcopalian Club, Dean Rousmaniere said:

"We have to look forward, gentlemen, beyond the war. We must finish it, provided we finish it with victory. (Applause.) It must never again be possible that the freedoms of the people shall be attacked as they were attacked by the Central Powers. But we must look beyond that victory, and all war work must have that vision before it. What we have been able to do at the Cathedral has been done not simply for the present, but we have tried to prepare for the future.

"The line of Matthew Arnold's which I keep repeating to myself sums up what we have been trying to do, and what I think the Church everywhere ought to be doing. It ought to be doing its level best—every Churchman, clergyman or layman ought to be doing everything that is in his power, as a part of the Church, for the country, and for the men and boys of the country at the present time; and then he ought also to be preparing himself so that when the day comes he shall be able to render a good account when the world must be reconstructed. The line of Matthew Arnold is this:

'On, on to the end of the waste:
On to the city of God.'"

Boy Scout Troop Wins A Trophy

A new banner hangs in the parish hall of Christ Church, Chicago, says the Parish Messenger. "It is the championship trophy for the recent efficiency competition between all the Scout troops of the Woodlawn district and was won by our boys of Troop One. Of the 22 troops in the district, our troop secured the highest score in the all-round efficiency tests. Few realize the splendid service the Scouts are rendering the nation in this crisis. For example, Scout Raymond Guy of our troop is averaging over $200 each week in the sale of war saving stamps. Many of the other Scouts are doing nearly as well. The treasury department at Washington has prepared a manual of instructions especially for the use of the Boy Scouts of America, and has requested the assistance of the Scouts. Recently, in an appeal for men to act as Scout Masters, President Wilson said: "Men are needed to build up this efficient unit of the national service to its full strength. Anything that is done to increase the war efficiency of the Boy Scouts of America will be a real contribution to the nation, and will help win the war."

SLACKERS AND DESERTERS THE CURSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH TODAY

The following is an excerpt from a Pastoral Letter issued to the parishioners of Trinity Church, New Orleans by their rector, the Rev. Dr. Robert S. Coupland:

"Do you realize what your membership in the Church means? It is very evident from the behavior of some that it is not realized or cared about. Let us see what it means. God has a great war being waged against the world, the flesh and the devil. To fight a threefold enemy like these, a large and disciplined army is necessary. God's army is the Church. At Baptism you were set aside and destined for this army. There it was promised, among other things, that you would be a "faithful soldier" of Jesus Christ. Confirmation is your own personal enlistment in this army. You voluntarily at that time take up the soldier's life in the army of God.

"There are certain well-defined features of any army. Its soldiers must be loyal to the limit. They must be willing to be sacrificed for the cause. There must be ideals or standards to which the soldiers are called to conform, and there must be a certain system of discipline. Now, the army of God has its ideals and its discipline as set forth in its sacred seasons and services, and works and affairs, and the Church, as the army of God, expects a profound loyalty to these ideals on the part of every soldier in that army.

"Do you support these ideals? Do you conform to this discipline? Can you say that you are loyal to the work and worship and welfare of the Church?

"The curse of the Christian Church today is its multitude of slackers and deserters. Our Lord's prophecy is fulfilled: "A man's enemies shall be they of his own household." The worst and most dangerous enemies of the Church are her slackers and deserters. They are the ones who humiliate, disgrace and weaken her in the eyes of the world.

"The slackers are those who stand back and let others do the work of the Church and fight her warfare. Many of them are among the most regular attendants upon her services, but that costs little. The deserters are those who, having been confirmed and taken their oath of loyalty, have wandered away from the service and work of the Church. If you were a slacker in the army of the United States, you would be disgraced in the eyes of society and severely disciplined by the government. And if you were a deserter in the United States army, you would be tracked to your hiding place, courtmarshaled and put to death. But that is not God's method. Infinite patience and hope are a part of His nature. No matter how faithless or how disloyal one may be, He still hopes and waits for a change of heart. You are still His child, though faithless. And He still says over you, in the words of the prophet: 'O Ephraim, how can I give thee up?'"

Thoughts Of A Christian Soldier In Army Camp

By Corporal Archie Davis

It seems a long call from eating from china dishes to using tin mess kits; from sticking a pen into an inkwell to jabbing a bayonet into a dummy; from traveling in street cars to "hiking" every step one has to travel, but that is the span practically every man in our army camps has to cross before they could be called soldiers.

It is an extraordinary thing the way men have been pulled from civil life and planted in army camps to live a life that, in most cases, has very little in common with the life they are used to. But the United States has, in the development of the draft law, met successfully the immense problem of training in a short time a great army of men, who, basically, apparently had little of the soldier about them, except a certain amount of good health. Mute approval of the government's method of building its great army was found in the Washington's Birthday parade of "New York's Own", when 10,000 of the same men who five months ago paraded on the same avenue, marched along a lane banked sidewalk deep on both sides with smiling relatives and friends and well-wishers. But what a contrast! Five months ago one could pick out the bricklayers, the bookkeepers, the garment makers, the salesmen, the men about town. But now, nothing left to mark the individuality of the men! Each khaki-clothed form is now a trained unit in a great fighting machine—the lawyer swings in step alongside the carpenter, who in turn is rubbing elbows with the author. All have that healthy glow, that fine bearing, that erect carriage that make a soldier's life so attractive to every man.

But there is something deeper than all this in this wonderful draft system, that any one who has gone through the various uncertain stages of being drafted notices when he has reached the point where he begins to feel at home in his new uniform. "How is it possible to take men from so many different walks of life and put them into one place without having any trouble?" Even those who had the greatest faith in the power of America's democracy could not help but ask that. But the newly drafted men were in training only one month when that question was answered. Here at Camp Upton, the most cosmopolitan camp in the whole world, were men from every step in the social ladder, from every corner of the business and industrial world, from every country on the face of the globe—and, inside of a month, this greatest of all "melting pots" had made them all of one mind, with a single purpose. The same forces that have built them physically have trained them mentally—have quickened their hand, have sharpened their eye, have intensified their longing to see the greatest menace of all times squelched and obliterated from the face of a war and sin-sick world. That one desire is what has done more than anything else to "democracize a democratic army" and bring it to such a state of perfection and promising effectiveness in so short a time.

What a lesson for Christians in the world! What possibilities there are for the great army of Christians to get together and fight side by side harmoniously and effectively for the spread of Christianity in the world, if they will only recognize the wonderful power of that religious training camp—the Church! As a means of getting the spiritual strength and guidance, the mental alertness, the brave, hopeful bearing that mark the true Christian in a world of trial and temptation, the Church is unsurpassed.

This war is tearing down many of the barriers of social distinction; let it go farther. Let it influence our minds to a realization of the opportunities for more Christ-like living it presents. "Doing our bit" for God is "doing our bit" for our country. We all have our bit to do. Let's do it properly.

What One Woman Can Accomplish

A little over four years ago Mrs. O. S. Kempton began work in St. Paul's Sunday School, Duluth. She had a dozen young girls of about twelve to start with. She has trained them well in Church ways and knowledge, has brought them to confirmation to the last one, has led them to take special lessons in the public training school for teachers in Sunday Schools and four of them are teachers at the present time. Besides all this the class meets for the early service each first Sunday of the month and afterward has breakfast in the Church, each girl contributing what is easiest for her and so giving variety and novelty to the menu. The rector is entertained and sometimes the members of the Altar Guild who live at some distance from the Church. Occasionally the class has week-day meetings and in summertime they go out to some near-by place for picnics and the class spirit runs high at all seasons. They give money and materials for the various mission boxes that are sent out from this parish, they give to St. Luke's Hospital for the annual donation days, and they have helped to care for poor people who have been brought to their attention. There are no rich girls in the class, but all are either still in school or earning their living as stenographers or clerks.

Their example is contagious, for other classes are following their pattern, and many more come to the early service than otherwise would.

This much one woman has been able to accomplish, and yet she has neither large means nor her entire time to devote to this gracious work. But she is a loyal Churchwoman, ready to do her share, and her willingness and fealty have produced remarkable results, which ought to provoke some one else to good works.

The Church And The Soldiers' Spare Time

The Social Service Commission of the Province of New York and New Jersey a few weeks ago appointed a sub-committee on War Activities in the Province, there being no provincial war agency. This committee has been corresponding with various war service organizations of the Church and with similar organizations of the government working within the field of the Province, with a view to establishing effective co-operation. From Raymond B. Fosdick, chairman of the now well-known Federal Commission on Training Camp Activities, comes the following pertinent suggestion:

"I am confident that your organization can do very effective work in stimulating the representatives of the Protestant Episcopal Church in communities surrounding our army camps to enlarge their social and religious program for enlisted men so that they may have as many avenues as possible for the use of leisure time.

"As you undoubtedly know, ample provision is being made for work of this character on the inside of our army camps, and a great deal has been done in the towns surrounding the camps, under the leadership of the War Camp Community Service. This latter field, however, needs considerable expansion, particularly in relation to the work of the Churches. Experience has shown that the instinctive desire of the soldier with an hour's free time is to go to town, even if the town is only a crossroads, and it has become increasingly apparent that a great deal of time and thought must be expended in the task of organizing these places along healthy recreation and social lines. Secretary Baker put the matter very succinctly when he wrote: 'This, it seems to me, is an opportunity for service which cannot wisely be overlooked. Each lodge, church, fraternity, can look out for the needs of its own soldier membership, and where local groups are unable financially to provide adequately for this task, the larger organization of the church or fraternity, as the case may be, can come to the rescue with more ample means."

"It is unnecessary for me to assure you of the hearty support of the War Department in the task which you are undertaking."

The sub-committee above mentioned would appreciate correspondence with any rector or clergyman in charge of a parish or mission in the Second Province who may be disposed to further the work suggested by the Fosdick Commission. Address the chairman of the committee, Rev. F. M. Crouch, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

A Richly Deserved Acknowledgement

The editor of the Diocese of Chicago states that for nearly three years he has been receiving regularly, like many of the clergy and others, first through the courtesy of Sir Gilbert Parker, and latterly through the kindness of Prof. Macneill Dixon of the University of Glasgow, books and pamphlets concerning the war, many with unusual illustrations, as that of the humane prison camps for Germans in England. The power of the press is manifest in all these publications, and we rejoice that England is so wisely using it. The reading has often been heartrending, though ever calling forth our grateful admiration of the devotion and bravery of those who have offered their lives not only for England, but for all humanity. We would at this time like to quote from one booklet, containing a speech of Earl Curzon in the House of Lords, which speaks of the army chaplains: "May I say one word about the chaplains of every Church and denomination, 2,200 of whom are serving with the armies in the field, giving the consolation of religion to the living, and performing the last rites of the Church over the dead? How gallant perilous their service has been may be shown by the fact that over 70 have been killed, many wounded, and many others have died from disease, two have won the Victoria cross, 130 have been decorated, and many more have been mentioned in dispatches." In the face of such testimony, the wild indictment of the clergy by Dr. Odell in the February Atlantic Monthly is valueless.

PASTORAL CALLING

It would be entirely unorthodox not to begin this paper with the old maxim, "a housegoing parson makes a church going people". To omit this would be to appear to overlook the very best argument for pastoral calling. So, having done this duty, like the foreign custom of making a stiff bow before taking one's place with others at a public table in a restaurant, I shall proceed. I may say, in passing, however, that I like that custom of the bow. It's an improvement on the stare we get and give in America under similar conditions.

So I like the old maxim. Far be it from me to say that it is not a good maxim for the visiting book of the parson. I could never abide the other phrase that has recently been coined to defend the opposite practice, "Why should a parson waste time cooling his heels on people's doorsteps?" That is a feeble plea.

But pastoral calling needs modern treatment. The old practice must be hauled into the dry dock and a few barnacles must be scraped off. I am afraid to look into my books on pastoral theology as I write this, for fear that I may discover that I am controverting the advice of some learned prelate, or even of a Bishop—perhaps one that I may chance to know, in the bargain. Assuring you that I have no recollection of whose advice I am advising you not to take, I shall address this paper chiefly to the clergy. I feel confident that if a layman has read to this point, he will read on just the same, perhaps more keenly, for they have often wanted themselves to preach a little to the clergy.

Stepping down into my own clerical congregation, and addressing all of us, I would say first that the very worst mistake we of the clergy may make is to announce in final terms that we have no time for pastoral calling, and do not intend to pursue that branch of our duties, except in case of illness. We at once produce an unfriendly state of mind toward our ministrations. To be perfectly plain, it is largely a bluff, too. We soon discover that it is merely a subterfuge, in the shadow of which we justify ourselves in going where we like to go, for the sake of companionship, or where we are invited to dinner, or in failing to go where we would go under the pressure of duty. The people discover this, and our "ad" appears soon thereafter in the Church papers.

If a pastor dislikes pastoral calling, he should cultivate a taste for it. It is one of the most fascinating and enjoyable experiences of his ministry when he discovers its charms. Did any right-minded parson ever fail to be amply rewarded by his contact with people in their homes? The friendliness that is displayed, the gratitude that a call never fails to arouse, the welcome that ever awaits one, cannot fail to bring warmth and interest to every call. What we must guard against is vanity, for almost every household acts as if it had an unusual and an especially welcome guest. The parson has stepped into a goodly heritage of fellowship. Seated in the best chair, he is listened to as an oracle. It is a dangerous satisfaction for the vain.

Now for a few principles: We clergy must be very careful how we drop in on busy men at their stores and offices. It is apt to produce the impression that we have nothing to do, of a morning, except to go aimlessly about looking for diversion. This would apply chiefly to those of us who are in fairly large places. Men who are busy may have a moment for us, if we have a real errand, but otherwise it is an interruption. Circumstances alter cases, to be sure, but we cannot afford to be thought of as less diligent than other men.

Again flying in the face of the books, let me enter another plea: Do not make calls in the afternoon, except on the sick, and in cases where the household consists of persons all of whom are at home in the afternoon. Give up afternoon calling, I hear the clergy say? Break up a custom that has been associated with ministerial duties as long as the women can remember? Forego the chance to sip a cup of tea, with perhaps a glimmer of an idea that it is a long distance rebuke to pater familias, who may at that moment be wondering if he might not better take a drop of something just to whet up his appetite? Surely that cup of tea, when pater familias discovers the fact that the parson has been there, will cause remorse in the mind of p. f. that he is not as strong-minded as the parson, who indulges only in tea. It may lead him to church on Sunday to discover the parson's strength of character. No! Do not make calls in the afternoon. When p. f. learns of the call, it will strengthen his impression that the Church is for women only.

Corollary 1. Make pastoral calls when you may reasonably expect to find the men at home. Better give up an organization, and make two or three calls in an evening. They need not be long if they have the right spirit. Even if you should find that the householder and his wife had gone down the street in pursuit of some arithmetical enigma called 500, you will draw forth the statement of the man, when next you see him, that he was sorry to have missed you.

Corollary 2. Make pastoral calls on Sundays, when you can find the whole household at home. Any time on Sunday afternoon is a good time. You could almost prepare an evening sermon from your experiences. By the same token, the national holidays are excellent times for a call. You generally have no evening service then, and can devote a whole day to it. One can concentrate two weeks' calling on a holiday. Again, you might find that the family is shaking the dust of the whole country over all their clothing and possessions in an automobile, but they feel the goodwill, and it will be easier to take the opportunity to bring up serious matters, if you have recently been upon a person's doorstep.

Corollary 3. The proper use of the pastoral call, once you are in your chair, may be discovered by reading the books and consulting your common sense, and the needs of the particular instance. So the length of the call must be determined by conditions. There must be strong extenuating circumstances for prolonging a call above half an hour. But when you threaten to go, carry out the threat with graceful and cordial precipitation. Make it one installment, one continuous motion from the moment you say you are going to your landing on the sidewalk. I do not mean that one must fall off the porch in his haste, but one must avoid that exasperating habit of keeping everybody standing about for five minutes, and of holding the door open until the very furnace begins to complain of being compelled to do thirty hours' work in twenty-four.

Seriously, the basis of good pastoral care is to have a deep affection and concern for the people. You are then drawn to pastoral calling, not driven to it. You go to listen as well as to speak. People like to tell you of themselves. Permit them to have the chance. Develop an honest interest in them, and your pastoral calls will be refreshing, stimulating and filled with pleasure and satisfaction.

Church Work Conference To Be Held In Cambridge, Mass.

The annual conference for Church work, intended for instruction and training in the spirit and method of Church work, and the summer school for Church music, will be held this year at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., from June 21 to July 26. The preliminary program presents a long list of subjects of vital interest, covering every phase of parochial and Church work, and a strong corps of leaders. A registration fee of $5 is required of those who expect to attend. The following are the officers of the conference: The Rt. Rev. Edward M. Parker, D. D., and the Rt. Rev. James De Wolfe Perry, D. D., directors; Miss M. DeC. Ward, 415 Beacon Street, Boston, secretary; Henry R. Brigham, Boston, treasurer; Miss J. F. Bumstead, Cambridge, secretary program committee; Charles M. Ford, Newton, chairman publicity committee; Sturgis H. Thorndike, chairman management committee.

MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF ARIZONA OPENS THIRD TUBERCULAR SANATORIUM

St. Luke's-in-the-Desert at Tucson, Arizona, which was recently formally opened for patients, makes the third tubercular sanatorium operated under the auspices of the Missionary District of Arizona. St. Luke's Home, at Phoenix, was opened about ten years ago by Bishop Atwood, and has become one of the best institutions for the treatment of tuberculosis in the Southwest. Somewhat later, St. Luke's-in-the-Mountains was founded at Prescott.

For many years Bishop Atwood had looked forward," says the Rev. Wm. J. Dixon, "to the founding of such an institution in Tucson, where poor fellows of little or no means, afflicted with tuberculosis, could have, at a minimum cost, such care and treatment as to give them a chance to recover. The splendid winter climate of Arizona drives here, every year, great numbers of people afflicted with this disease. Many come without any money whatever, hoping to get work when they arrive. Others have some little means of support, but not enough to pay their way in the regular sanatoriums of the city or the state. Many build little shacks on the mountain side, or on the outskirts of the city, and try to take care of themselves, but lack of the proper care and food retards progress in recovery, and often ends in death. It is a sad sight to see thes poor, wan, helpless men, who should be in bed, with the best medical attention, trying to get their own meals, and otherwise caring for themselves.

"St. Luke's-in-the-Desert has been built in order to be a house of refuge for those sick and needy men. The sanatorium, when completed, will consist of a central administration building and two wings or wards, extending respectively eastward and westward from the administration building, all facing south. It is situated about half a mile north of the city of Tucson, on an elevation, which gives a magnificent view of the surrounding country and mountains on all sides. The site comprises a whole city block. At present only a part of the administration building has been erected, and part of the east ward. Each ward will consist of ten units, making twenty units in all, which will accommodate twenty patients. The west ward has not been begun for the lack of funds.

"Up to the present, between $8,000 and $9,000 has been contributed. About $9,000 more is needed to complete the administration building and wards, to put in a heating plant and to furnish the new units. To erect a unit costs $350, and to furnish it, $75. Individuals or Church societies can do no more splendid work for their fellow men than to make contributions for the completion of the plant. Already every available bed is full, and three extra beds will be put on the porch.

The cost to the patient is $9 per week, just half the lowest rate for accommodations in the local hospitals, while the regular rate in the best sanatoriums is from $30 to $50 per week. Then, in a limited number of cases, where men cannot pay even $9 per week, the balance may be made up through donations. It takes $6,000 to endow a free bed, as the interest on that sum will support a patient.

"Our present staff is a superintendent, who gives his services free; a matron, an assistant and a nurse. The physicians in charge are Dr. Jeremiah Metzger and Dr. Samuel H. Watson, proprietors of the Tucson, Arizona, sanatorium, one of the best institutions of the kind in the Southwest, who give their services free. The trustees of St. Luke's-in-the-Desert are the Rt. Rev. J. W. Atwood, D. D., Bishop of Arizona, Phoenix, who is president and treasurer; the Rev. W. J. Dixon, Rector of Grace Church. Tucson, who is assistant treasurer, and Mr. E. C. Clark, who is superintendent. There is also a board of lady visitors, which has twenty members, of which Mrs. R. K. Shelton is chairman. Its task has been to raise money to furnish the administration building and the individual units. Their work has been well done."

"Too Late"

A Parable

Once upon a time there was a certain man who had a large family, both sons and daughters. At a great sacrifice to himself he provided that when the children were grown and married all might settle down near the old home. After everything was arranged for the highest welfare of all, both young and old, this father had to go away for a long time to prepare a new and more beautiful home for all the children, and left his wife in charge of the old home. Before going he provided that the children might have free use of the "wireless telegraph" so that they might communicate with him at a moment's notice if necessary. The mother, a very noble appearing woman, arranged that all the children and their families, both old and young, should gather from time to time at the old home for a family reunion and feast of rejoicing. This wise and loving mother also arranged special days during the year which marked important events in the life of the absent parent, so that by the observance of them the children and the children's children might not forget what sacrifices their ancestor had made for them, what blessings he had secured them, with still greater ones awaiting them in the future, and might ever remember him with deep affection.

Strange as it may seem it came to pass in course of time that some of the children denied that their father was the son of a great king, as he claimed, and as the mother knew and told the children very clearly, and in language that could by no means be misunderstood.

In course of time some of the married people said it was useless to take the little ones to the old home for the feasting as they were "too young" to understand what it meant, or that they bothered the older people; and "it was such a task to get them ready." Then some of the fathers stayed at home because, so they said, they had so much business to attend to, or were "too tired to go." Some of the brothers-in-law said that if the wife or one of the older girls went that ought to do, as they could hear from them if there was any special news. Some of the children absented themselves because—so they said—they had no present to carry to mother, and they didn't want to spend on her; forgetting the old saying—"I want not yours, but you."

It so happened that one brother had cheated another and he would not go to the home-gathering, fearing he might have to sit beside the one he had wronged; and the injured one would not go because the wrong-doer might be there. One of the sisters would not go because another one had been talking about her.

The elderly mother was very wise, and did all in her power to reconcile the children and set things straight; but some of them said she was getting old and notional, and would not heed her counsels, nor yield to her requests.

She kept the days of commemoration very regularly as they came around, and invited—yes, strange as it may seem, she had to remind some of the children, and even invite them, to come and join her in keeping the days that marked some of the most important events in the father's life. Instead of going to visit mother on these occasions some of the children would go off to a neighbor's, where something was going on but of slight passing interest. On one occasion one of the sons went away and said that mother dressed up too fine when she wore as was her custom the dress she was married in. Some of the children were so happy they felt like singing, and others found fault with them, and said they ought always to talk. And some would not sing because they were not appreciated. Some wanted to be adopted by other families, rather than acknowledge their own mother and brothers and sisters, and some even renounced all relationship to either father or mother.

Some of the children seemed not only to forget all about the festival days, but were vexed when reminded of them. Some cut the telephone wires, or took out the telephones—at least "left off the receiver"—so as not to have any communication with the old home. And some said it was an utter impossibility to reach the absent father by "wireless," or would not try, although it required but little time, and no expense whatever.

The children could not fail to know how their mother felt to be so slighted, and the memory of their father had any parents, like Topsy—"they just growed". They ignored the fact that their dear, kind, affectionate mother was grieving her heart out because so few of the children ever came to see her. They forgot, or wouldn't believe that if they faithfully observed the anniversary days, and were loving and obedient to their mother, they were to receive a wonderful inheritance in the distant country whither the father had gone to prepare a place for them. Some did believe the promise made the children when he left, and of which the mother often reminded them. She also told them that he would return some time quite unexpectedly, therefore they ought always to be ready to welcome him when he came. Many of the children became very careless, some said he would not come back, at least not very soon; and if he did there would be plenty of time to make the necessary preparation.

At last after a very long time while some of the children were at the old home with mother, keeping one of the anniversary days, the father suddenly returned, and was joyfully welcomed by all who were gathersd together, the word soon reached the others that the long absent parent had returned, and they made a hasty preparation to go and visit the old preparation. When they came near they could see by the light, and hear by the joyful sounds, that a great feast of rejoicing was going on. But when they reached the house they found the outer door shut, so that they had to knock for some time before anyone answered. At last a servant came and opened the door a little, and they caught a glimpse of the beautiful feast that was going on within, but they were astonished, not to say stunned, by the message which the servant, sadly, yet sternly, gave them—

"No, no; too late! Ye cannot enter now."

Our View Of Death Undergoing Change

There can be no doubt that the Great War has done much to change our view of death. When thousands, even millions of men are entering that bourn from which none ever return, and when the attention, not to say affection, of those remaining on this side is centered as never before on the unknown world into which the killed-in-battle have been translated, our view changes somewhat, perforce.

Eight million three hundred thousand soldiers killed! This is a conservative estimate. For each one there are from two to fifteen mourners of immediate connection, possibly. These bereaved ones enter into the unknown realm through process of love, memory, spiritual force or other subtle means—carried in imagination, at least, into the land of the deceased. There comes the feeling, account for it as we may, that those who have gone across are not really, truly dead—that is, extinct, annihilated, unable to "carry on."

Something tells us that the "dead" are possibly more alive than ever, and that death really means simply change of form. Though the intellect alone cannot comprehend this, Love seems to outdistance Mind and thus to find satisfaction and solace. "Where thy treasure is there will thy heart be also." It cannot be that the place where the fond mother's heart is, when she learns that the pride of her life has died in defense of her country, does not exist. It is an instinct that is universal to feel that death is not the end. "The heart has reasons that the reason cannot know," as Paschal puts it.

Now come Sir Oliver Lodge and other men high up in scientific circles with assurance that the bereaved need not doubt for a moment that their loved ones still exist! Of course, we know that the parsons have told us this for centuries, but then we are more ready to accept the word of Science than the word of Faith! As the New York World expresses it, Lodge speaks with forty-parson power! And when he speaks the world listens, especially if his utterance be something the heart longs to accept and believe!

Sir Oliver Lodge asserts that he has just as reliable and conclusive grounds for belief in persistence after death as for the atomic theory. What more final can the layman want than such a pronouncement? It is a consoling thought for those who have been separated from loved ones and should carry consolation to the thousands in this country who will inevitably be called on to sacrifice sons, fathers, husbands, lovers, during the progress of the war.—Thos. The Face Of Women Of Tomorrow

The following editorial from the Girls' Friendly Society Associates' Record indicates the great need especially during the period of war and the period of reconstruction that will follow of the important work of the Society:

Sir H. Rider Haggard, speaking to the English G. F. S. at its Imperial Conference last year, said of the changed conditions that will prevail after the war: "A great Veiled Fate sits before us, and the Veil is going to be torn away. What the Face beneath is none of us know . . . what it is will depend largely upon the wisdom or unwisdom of the women of the country."

Many forces are shaping this Face. Political power is being fast given to women, industrial opportunities, undreamed of a few years ago, are already open before them, and will be so more and more as the war goes on, while on the other hand the continuation of it will make homemaking and motherhood the lot of the few instead of the many; what effect these, and the other conditions prevailing, will have upon the Face of the woman of the future we can picture in a dozen different ways; it may be terrible with the frenzy of social unrest and class hatred; sorrowful and stern from an unduly heavy burden of sorrow and work; wild and dissipated from the mad search for forgetfulness in pleasure and amusement, cold and hard from selfish effort to escape care and responsibility; cruel and relentless from the struggle for money; or, tender, trustful, resolute and strong from faith that God is mighty and will prevail, and the belief that all things work together for good to them that love Him.

We must believe that such a beautiful Face is behind the Veil, and we must teach others to realize such a possibility.

The Archbishop of York, speaking to the G. F. S. in New York, told us that we must give our girls a high sense of honor. "If that sense fails, nothing will succeed. If it succeeds almost nothing else is necessary. The only way to make them rise to the height of the occasion is to link their sense of honor with the memory of the victorious Jesus Christ. . . . The supreme lesson to be taught is that for men and women there is only one sovereign remedy against temptation. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ and make not provision for the flesh to fulfill the lust thereof."

As Bishop Perry said at the same meeting: "The excitement in the hearts of the women of our country is capable of a great danger, it is capable of a great good. Is it not possible for us to give it spiritual direction, to lay down deep the foundations of honor and truth and purity? Let us create a new spiritual sense in our Church, strengthened by forces of friendship and love which will result in a new spiritual awakening among the men and women of our land. St. Paul wrote from the front to the rear as he was carrying the line onward to the West from Jerusalem to Greece, from Greece to Rome, and from Rome onward through Europe, to those who had position in the lines of reserves: 'We live, if ye stand fast in the Lord.' It is the message to the supporting line, to those who are to work for the moral and spiritual power of the country. They will live indeed, whether they have to lay down those lives of theirs or not; they will live, if we stand fast in our faith."

This is the lesson that we, as a religious Society, have to teach; this is the faith by which we must hold, and by which we must live if the work of the G. F. S. is to mould the Face of the Woman of Tomorrow, whom we, as Associates, touch now in the Girl of Today.

A Correction

St. Paul, Minn., April 3, 1918.

Editor of The Witness:

My attention has been called to a slight error which appeared in my "Talks on Favorite Hymns" in THE WITNESS of March 23rd. "O Sion, Haste" was written by Mary A. Thompson, still living in New York City, and not by Mary J. Thomas, as was printed. Kindly see that this is corrected.

Yours very truly,

Our Book Review

"THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH—It's Message for Men of Today," by the Rev. Geo. P. Atwater, published by Parish Publishers, Akron, Ohio. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

The Editor has just reviewed this book and finds that it is an excellent work to put into the hands of anyone who is earnestly trying to understand the position of the Episcopal Church, or it is a splendid thing to give to candidates for confirmation.

Under the form of a conversation in the rector's study, the central truths for which the Church stands are stated tersely and in the language of ordinary conversation. The book is direct in instruction, simple in language, rich with illustration and should form a part of the lending library of every parish.

As ten copies in paper can be secured for $3.50, we would suggest that no better missionary could be sent through the parish than to distribute copies of this timely book where they could do the most good.

In days when Christian Scientists are conducting their propaganda through the dissemination of literature, just such a readable book as this is what is needed to strengthen our own people in the faith and also to show to others the strong position of the Church.

The book is exceedingly churchly without being churchy.

It deals with such subjects as public worship, the Sacraments, creed, history and discipline of the Church, ending with a strong appeal of religion to men.

IRVING P. JOHNSON.

"Cincinnati Day" At Trinity Church, N. Y.

The annual service of the Daughters of the Cincinnati, held at Trinity Church, New York City, on the Sunday after Easter, was attended by representatives from almost every patriotic society in the city, says the Herald. The preacher was the Rev. Dr. Joseph P. McComas, senior assistant.

After the service, wreaths were placed on the graves of Alexander Hamilton and Capt. James Lawrence in the churchyard. Miss Ruth Lawrence, a daughter of the captain, was in charge. Among those present were Rear Admiral Albert Gleaves and Commodore Lionel de L. Wells of the British navy.

A guard of honor of seamen from British and American war ships stood at the grave of Capt. Lawrence, and a guard of soldiers detailed from Company E of the Seventh regiment, and under Capt. Robert S. Pollock, stood about the grave of Hamilton.

Among others present were the Rev. Dr. Howard Duffield, chaplain of the Ninth Coast Artillery; Brigadier General William A. Mann of the United States army, and Brigadier General L. R. Kenyon of the British army.

Dr. McComas stated that the allied countries were linked together by ideals of righteousness.

THE CHURCH MUST ADVERTISE, BUT RELIGION MUST NOT BE CHEAPENED

The Rev. Floyd S. Leach, Ph. D., executive secretary of the Social Service Commission, Diocese of New York, presents the following interesting observations and suggestions on Church advertising through the columns of Temperance:

Unfortunately, the Church has seldom attempted to do real, sane, systematic and effective advertising, though individual instances have forced themselves upon our attention, usually in an unsavory manner in what we have come to know as "sensational evangelism."

The business world employs advertising to inform the public. The places where certain things may be secured is very desirable, their accessibility, the terms on which these things may be had and numerous other details concerning information alone, help to make business effective and economical. The only way that the Church can give information is by the announcement from its pulpit or choir step or by gossip, unless it resorts to some form of publicity. The former methods reach only the adherents of the Church and do not go out into the highways and hedges. As a matter of fact, a large or thriving Church owes it to its own membership and adherents that they should be informed of what the Church is doing, what it has to offer and what opportunities exist for Christian activities.

Business likewise employs publicity to produce a market. By this we must understand the creating of a want. New inventions must be explained to the public before there is a call for them. As far as the Church is concerned, there is great need to create the want for the things that man ought to have. It is not a matter of supplying man with what they want—it is rather a creation of a desire for something which they need. In this there is a very wide field of not only legitimate but mandatory publicity demanded.

The Church must advertise, because it is rightly a public institution and as such owes it to the public to give an account of its stewardship. It doesn't take the public long to criticize its government when that agent of the people fails to give wide and full publicity of its workings. I honestly believe that the great publicity given to the government through advertising for soldiers and sailors, its Liberty Loans and its programs for effectively carrying on the war has been productive of more loyalty and confidence than any other work it has done in a century. No longer can our public libraries continue to meet public approval by merely existing. They must give publicity and as a result they are able to give service. In fact, the Church is practically the only community institution that merely exists. One of the services that it owes the community is to let the public, as such, know what it has to offer for its welfare.

Here in New York we have done very effective advertising for many years. Church after church may be passed with a large sign giving the with a religious sentiment. The music is intended to accompany the words rather than the dance to which it is more applicable. Perhaps in our own Church we believe in singing hymns of deep devotion in worship and then, when we want a little recreation, have a dance, with dance music. We seem to think that is it more honest to frankly do things that way rather than to taboo the dance itself and seek to get as many of its thrills as possible in a so-called "social service." In other words, some religious bodies have forbidden the dance, the vaudeville and the theater, but the inherent demand of humanity for light recreation asserts itself and these same churches try to meet the demand with a kind of religious vaudeville, and it is these services that have employed publicity methods to the extent that in the minds of most people, church publicity is inseparable from the sensational or frivolous in religion.

Another cause of disrepute for church publicity has been that it has not been honest. In other words, it hasn't "delivered the goods." The publicity has been glowing and thrilling, but the actual product has proved not as helpful as one would have reason to expect from the advertisement. Publicity places a heavy responsibility on the shoulders of the church and clergy. It is not enough to get the crowd. When the people come they must have what was advertised or a little better.

One further observation is necessary on the subject of a possible doubt of the desirability of publicity. Most church publicity is not well done. Seldom does it present an attractive form. Numerous devices are used principally on bulletin boards. A tin stencil is not attractive. It may do very well for a shipping box, but a theater manager would never think of purchasing an outfit. A large sheet of manila paper daubed with a notice and nailed up does not make a man want to see what is behind it. Such methods are their own publicity agents and usually produce all they are worth. The methods themselves advertise lack of care, slovenliness and cheapness. They call attention to a service that is not well done, and is not a masterpiece from beginning to end, thus bringing their own condemnation. If publicity is to be done at all, it should be well done with care, thought, finish and artistic appeal.

There is a demand and a responsibility for advertising in order to reach the unchurched and the careless. To do this, attractiveness and force are necessary.

Western Michigan Notes

The Rev. Albert M. Ewert has accepted the rectorship of Trinity Church, Marshall, Mich., and is now in residence there.

Grace Church, Grand Rapids, is very thankful for the children's mite box offering at Eastertide, which was $525, the largest offering of the Sunday school during its life, and $100 more than that of last year.

The Rev. Percy R. Deacon has been appointed priest-in-charge of South Haven Mission by the standing committee of the diocese. He began his work there on Palm Sunday.

The diocese is rejoicing over the fact that the Rev. Dr. James E. Wilkinson, Ph. D., has accepted the rectorship of Holy Trinity Church, Manistee. Dr. Wilkinson is secretary of the diocese, and until a year or so ago was rector of Holy Trinity, Manistee, when he resigned to become one of the masters of Howe School. He has now returned to his former allegiance, and the people of Manistee are glad to be able to welcome him back.

The Rev. Chester Hill has resigned his charge at St. Andrew's, Big Rapids, and accepted the rectorship of St. Lawrence Church, Libertyville, Ill., in the diocese of Chicago.

The Rev. W. F. Bachman has resigned as rector of St. James' Church, Albion, and has gone to assist Bishop White of St. James' Church, South Bend, Ind.

An Easter offering of $1,600 at Christ Church, Waterloo, Ia., more than covered an outstanding debt on the rectory and organ.

"LETTERS THEY WRITE BACK"

The outstanding feature of all work that has been done, and is being done daily, for the men in the army and navy, to help make their burdens less heavy, is found in the ready response and hearty acknowledgment from the men themselves. It is the old story of the "proof of the pudding".

The army and navy department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is sending men to the camps to strengthen and aid the work of the regular volunteer chaplains, to encourage work already being done by parishes adjacent to camps, and to help in that work, to aid where it can other agencies in the camp looking to the spread of Christ's Kingdom. In this work the Brotherhood has found a response which speaks for itself. This response is to the Church and to all agencies of the Church in the field, and through its active methods in the camps throughout the country, the Brotherhood has been able to know the results of these labors from the letters which have come from the men themselves.

These letters are by no means half-hearted thanks, but are from men who are thinking, and thinking seriously of the things before them, and of the need for the Church to be with them in the task ahead. From a man in the Quartermaster's Corps at Norfolk, Va., comes the following:

"Nothing could have pleased me more than to have been so thoughtfully remembered by the Church and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. I am not only interested in the work of our Church in this war, but also deeply concerned as to its future welfare. As an enlisted man, I have had great opportunity to observe many things, even in the comparatively comfortable life in camp in this country. But when we come to face greater difficulties abroad, there is apt to be still more thought on many of the great questions we are facing today. I am of the firm belief that there are great religious principles underlying this world war, principles which concern the life of each and every one of us, no matter of what belief. And that is why I am more than pleased to see our Church taking an active part. It is only by our leaders entering the service that they can realize what men are facing, and know how to teach them when once they return from the horrors of war. I was greatly pleased to find an Episcopal minister enlisted as a Y. M. C. A. secretary in one of the camps—so many of our clergy need to get the broadening influence of war. After the war is over, that part of the world which is left will take life more seriously, and realize that religion consists not in mere form, but in deep thinking on the ultimate end and aim of this world."

Not always is it possible to make a personal contact, either through a commissioned or civilian chaplain or Brotherhood worker, and in these instances a good, cheerful letter goes out from the Brotherhood headquarters. These letters find the same note of response from the men, according to the following, which comes from the great national army camp in Georgia—Camp Gordon:

"Your letter was the first actually individual touch I have felt from the efforts of our great Church in her war work, and, on that account, you can imagine how good it made me feel, because a fellow needs a God and a Church in the army like no other place in the world. And I, being always used to a life closely connected with the Church, surely missed its many great helps."

Another letter goes out to a man in a base hospital at Camp Hancock, finds him, and brings back this response:

"You cannot imagine how it makes a fellow feel, especially one who is more than 1,300 miles from home, to know that some one who is a stranger to him is interested in him through the Church. We at the base hospital have every opportunity to neglect religion, and sometimes it seems as though war and religion did not go together. While the Y. M. C. A. have a great many services, they are far from what we of the Church are accustomed to."

Each mail that comes to the Brotherhood of St. Andrew army and navy department brings virtually batches of such letters from the men in the camps. These men are prepared to make the supreme sacrifice, to give their all, so all the Church can do for them should be done. One of the greatest satisfactions a man in the army

Columbia Makes British Primate Doctor of Laws

Columbia University conferred the honorary degree of doctor of laws upon the Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York, April 15, and later he issued a statement to the American people that the allied armies must win, as their people are standing behind them.

After Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia, had conferred the degree upon the Archbishop in the closed room of the board of trustees, he escorted his guest to St. Paul's Chapel, on the campus, which was dedicated fourteen years ago by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England.

After Dr. Butler had explained that the ranks of Columbia University had been depleted by the war, Archbishop Lang, addressing the small but distinguished gathering, said:

"You are now entering upon that period of sacrifice in which the English universities have been living for four years. Life has been transformed for them. Where once there were students, now there are only soldiers.

"Oxford had 3,200 students at the beginning of the war, and now has 360. These are either foreigners or men physically unfit for service. A total of 11,500 Oxford men have gone into the army and navy, and of that number fifteen have reached the Victoria Cross, 314 the distinguished service order, 983 the military cross, 602 have been mentioned in dispatches, and 2,100 have been killed.

"Your time has come to realize what it means for one man to die for another. After the war there must be, in all our universities, a revival of the study of ideals on which social life is based, and for which men are prepared to die."

Notable Men and Women Present

Among those present in the chapel were Bishop Harding of Washington, Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, J. Pierpont Morgan, Major August Belmont, Justice Davis, Chauncey M. Depew, Brigadier General George R. Dyer, Sir George R. Parkin, Samuel W. Fairchild, Chester S. Lord, Abram I. Elkus, E. H. Outerbridge, James Speyer, Mrs. Helen Hartley Jenkins, Howard Townsend and Mrs. H. Fairchild Osborn.

In what he termed his "farewell interview with newspaper reporters, in the library of the Morgan home, the Archbishop of York told of his tour throughout the eastern half of the United States and Canada, and added:

"I have been immensely impressed with the disinterestedness of America's entry into the war. One naturally would expect, in coming to this country, to find the United States standing out, by reason of the difficulty of giving up adherence to her traditional detachment from European affairs. Therefore the entry of America is a striking indication of the fundamental importance of the war to the whole civilization of the world.

Found West Enthusiastic

"I have been enormously impressed with the unity with which America has come in, considering the different races of which she is composed, and I have found the enthusiasm as great, if not greater, in the cities of the Middle West than in the East.

"I feel that the unity which enabled the President to declare war and the carrying of the draft law constitute one of the great political achievements of our time.

"I have been immensely impressed with America's deepening sense of the responsibility and solemnity of the war. I have felt increasingly everywhere an awakening to the fact that the war is more solemn and exacting than was at first supposed. America realizes, as never before, that her own liberties and destinies are being fought for across the seas.

"It is a most encouraging and cheering sign of the spirit of the administration that the American soldiers, instead of waiting to win fame as a separate army, were brigaded with their French and British comrades. That was quite splendid, and you in America may depend upon it that, whatever happens, Field Marshal Haig is not a man to lose his head!"

The Queen Of The Columbia

"Astoria, Oregon, is one of the most interesting cities in the world, naturally, humanly, historically, commercially and ecclesiastically." The Oregon Churchman presents good and sufficient reasons for this assertion, as follows:

"Right in front of its somewhat unrepresentative business front, but seen to best advantage from its residential heights above, is the great estuary of the Columbia River, eight miles wide, its waters teeming with the silver-scaled beauties which are converted in the numerous canneries along the banks into the royal Chinook salmon, the finest fish in all the world. At the mouth of the estuary, where the loveliest summer sunsets enhalo the ships that cross the famous bar, stretches the greatest ocean on earth.

"From the interesting little city park on the southern side of the heights may be seen what very many widely traveled people declare to be the finest view to be seen anywhere. The curiously shaped Saddle Mountain bounds the distant horizon, with the great forests spread out below, and three gleaming streams, including the historical Lewis and Clark River, running down through green Oregon meadows into the tidal waters of Youngs Bay, at the foot of the hill, and the great Columbia beyond.

"The variety of human interest is as great as the natural. Almost 'every kindred and tongue and people and nation' is represented here. Mongolian, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Teuton, Latin, Hindu and Negro, in their various subdivisions, are found among the twenty thousand or so of the population.

"Historically, Astoria is the oldest American town on the Pacific coast. Washington Irving tells of the trading party of John Jacob Astor building a fort here in 1811. A replica of it, erected for the Centenary Celebration of 1911, guards the entrance to the city park today.

"Astoria grew gradually as a seaport, fishing and sawmill center, and possessed the evil as well as the good of such a place; but during the last ten years the town has been morally and structurally transformed, and is now a progressive and thriving city.

"Commercially, Astoria has at last come into its own. In addition to its famous fish canneries, and its new and splendidly equipped municipal dock, the great sawmills are now pouring timber into three shipyards, in which are being built the vessels that are to help feed the allies and win the war.

"Ecclesiastically, Grace Church parish was founded in 1864 by the much respected late Rev. T. A. Hyland, under Bishop Scott, with strong and sane spiritual ideals, which, cultivated by the Rev. W. S. Short, the beloved Rector for over twenty years, and others, are inherited by the parish today. Holy Innocents' Chapel, in Upper Town, also did useful work for several years. While the great influx of foreign-born population has much reduced the people among whom the Episcopal Church is most respected, the parish, in the last few years, has more than held its own, and is looking forward to a still greater future in this most interesting city."

The Beaten Track

Come you of the weary brain—
And you of the aching heart—
Yea, and bring all your idle dreams—
That belong to art.
And you of the laurel wreath—
Scorn you not the uncrowned slain,
Of dust, is no distinction made,
By the sun or rain.

Come then, in the narrow path
Where the rose and violet grow,
Each fashioned by the hand of God—
Each contented blow.
Yea, look you around and see,
Their beauty sprung from the rut,
Whilst you watched your castles fall, they—
Glorified the hut.
The hut in the Beaten Track,
That gives to the Ninety-nine,
That which o'er the hills you sought, with
Blinded eyes—a sign!
To them is the outstretched path,
Hedged in by the love of God,
And in the dust, the footprints, trace
Where the Saints have trod.
Yea, and dwell there, Fisher-men
With true hearts as of old;
There Martha toils and Mary lists
To the tale e'er told.
O you, of the broken wings—
Your imprisoned souls did lack,
The Faith of the child you left, there
In the Beaten Track!

DEATH OF BISHOP RANDOLPH

In the Ministry of the Church Sixty Years

The Rt. Rev. Alfred Magill Randolph, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, entered into the blessed life of Paradise on Saturday morning April 6, from the Protestant Hospital at Norfolk, after a critical illness of two months' duration, preceded by a period of failing strength, due to his advanced age and long life of active service in the ministry. He was a man of versatile talents, unusual ability and learning, a keen theologian, close reasoner and strong preacher, whose moral excellence and spiritual gifts combined to make him a sweet companion and greatly beloved by all who were privileged to come in personal touch with his richly endowed and highly cultured Christian character.

He was born August 31, 1836, near Winchester, Va., was an alumnus of William and Mary College and of the Virginia Theological Seminary, was ordained a deacon in 1858 and a priest in 1860 by Bishop Johns of Southern Virginia. The delay in his ordination to the priesthood was due to the fact that he had not reached the age required by the canons of the Church before he could be set apart in the higher office of the ministry. His first work was that of assistant in St. George's Church, Fredericksburg, to the Rev. Dr. McGuire, whom he succeeded as Rector of the parish, and which he resigned in 1862 to serve as a chaplain in the Confederate army. After the war he served successively as Rector of Roanoke parish, Christ Church, Alexandria, and Emmanuel Church, Baltimore. His consecration as assistant Bishop in the Diocese of Virginia took place at Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, October 21, 1883, by Bishops Lee, Howe, Dudley, Perry, Burgess and Peterkin. On the subdivision of the Diocese of Virginia, in 1894, he became the Bishop of Southern Virginia. He was the fourth living Bishop of the American Church in order of consecration, and had served in the Episcopate thirty-five years. The Bishop's wife, two sons and three daughters survive him.

The funeral service was held at St. Luke's Church, Norfolk, on Tuesday morning, April 9th, in charge of Bishop Tucker, who was assisted by Bishops Thompson and Cheshire, the Rev. D. W. Howard, Rector of the parish, and the Rev. C. B. Bryan of Petersburg. The interment was at Richmond, Va., Bishop Tucker conducting the service. Bishops Gibson and Brown and a large number of the clergy were at the burial.

Idaho Church Observes Anniversary

The twenty-fifth anniversary of St. Luke's Church, Weiser, Idaho, was appropriately observed by the parish in a series of services and social functions, beginning with the visit of the Bishop of Idaho, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Funsten, on Thursday evening, March 28, and ending on Monday evening, April 1. On Thursday evening the Bishop brought his warmest greetings to the parishioners and friends, emphasizing the fine spirit of co-operation and reverence that had possessed the congregation during the twenty-five years of its existence. The Rector, the Rev. Homer E. Bush, presented a class to the Bishop for confirmation. On Easter the Rector preached an anniversary sermon. Under his leadership, the parish has made a steady and substantial growth in every department of the work. The parish jubilee social on Easter Monday evening at the Washington Hotel was one of the happiest occasions in the history of the parish. A dinner was served and a program of music and several addresses were greatly enjoyed by the 140 persons in attendance. The Rector read greetings from Bishop Talbot of Bethlehem, Pa., who was Missionary Bishop in charge of the District when the parish was founded; from the Rev. John E. Sulger of Terre Haute, Ind., who was at that time an archdeacon of the District, and from the Rev. A. O. Worthing, late of Millersville, Pa., who was the first resident Rector after the erection of the church building.

Presence of the Risen Christ Made Very Real

"Trench and Camp," published under the auspices of the National Y. M. C. A. War Work Council, gives glowing accounts of the services held by the several units at Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C. on Easter Day. The interior of the Association Headquarters was appropriately decorated, with the generous assistance of some kindly disposed Christian women from two of the churches of Columbia—Trinity and the church of the Good Shepherd. Easter lilies, roses, smilax and evergreen in rich profusion banked every vantage point. The whole effect of the floral decorations reflected credit to the ladies in the artistic manner in which it was carried out.

In the center was a large cross draped, around which entwined Southern smilax with Easter lilies. At the foot of the cross were ferns, and overhead in bold, large letters were the immortal words, "Christ is Risen." Back of the cross was the national flag with its stars and stripes of red, white and blue, each color representing an eternal principle. The symbolism of the cross and the lilies with the stars and stripes of our country represented the Easter message of the day. The cross symbolized death, and the lilies resurrection. The stripes of our flag stand for suffering, the stars for victory, while the red symbolizes sacrifice. The white has even been the emblem of purity and the blue for loyalty. Such were the appropriate symbolisms of the day."

Easter day began with a sun rise devotional service. A goodly company of soldiers had gathered. The service consisted chiefly in the reading of the gospel story of Christ's resurrection as compiled from the New Testament, and a few short devotional prayers. This was followed by the holy communion, administered by the Rev. E. A. Penick, camp pastor for the Episcopal Church. The rich and beautiful ritual of that service was rendered in such an impressive way as to make the presence of the risen Christ very real. What service could be more appropriate or more in harmony with the spirit of the season than that which lifts the soul into the realm of the spiritual and unseen? Such was the evident power of that quiet restful service.

"I am not much for ritual, dogmas or theology," continues the writer, "but I confess it is my true, honest conviction that that which lifts the soul to God in reverence and adoration is a thing to be desired, and such were the silent influences that sacred Easter Communion service."

The Value of Human Life

There is a disturbing thought in the minds of many people caused by this great war—there is so much wastage of life, uselessly, it is said. So disturbing is this thought that it is subtlely undermining the faith these people have in God's goodness.

The error lies in judging the value of life by length of days. Somewhere, George Elliot (I think) says that the value of age depends upon the character of the wine kept. This is a truth too often forgotten by people. A life spent in selfishness for a hundred years, lived for self-gratification upon others, is of little value to the world. Compared with the glorious life of a youth who died that others might live, its value is naught. Weighed in the balances of God, its value is indeed slight. It is not length of days, but the quality of the life that makes it worth while. In a few years lived for God and His world may be summed all the glory that a long life may have missed. Our blessed Lord was a young man when He died on the cross, but in that life was crowded all the redemption of mankind.

Every man born into the world has work to do for God and His righteousness. In the Divine economy, that work has to be done, and the value of the life is in proportion to the work done. It may be that the part of the work to be done by one man is but to put one bolt in the framework of the house of God, but the value of his life is to be judged by the way that bolt is put in. So the young man who gives his life or his strength for the advancement of God's will in the world, who dies or is maimed on the field of battle for what he believes to be God's will, has valued his life truly, for what is man's life compared with the salvation of mankind? To man comes ever the temptation, too often yielded to, of thinking that human comfort and human ease are much to be preferred to discomfort and death for a cause or an idea. This temptation came to our Lord in Gethsemane. That human body shrank from the agony that was before Him. Humanly speaking, it was much more to be desired to give up His work than to die on the cross, and yet the cross saved the world. This is the standard by which we must judge the value of life.

Men are dying for the sins of the world—dying that men hereafter may live without the fear of tyranny, that women may be free from defilement, that a free commonwealth may be possible on earth. Who can say that their lives are of no value, simply because their years are few? They who came into the world through the will of God, bearing the precious seed of life, have returned to God with rejoicing, bearing their sheaves with them. In the briefness of their lives they lived fully. They counted not their lives dear unto themselves, so that they might finish the work that was before them to do.

The present age has been dreaming that this human life of ours is the one thing that counts, and so we are disturbed when it is shown that ideas and ideals have more value than a mere animal life—that it is more glorious and infinitely more valuable to die, or, it may be merely to suffer, for a vision of the Kingdom of God, than it is to creep to the grave after a life mere physical living. The heroes, e saints, the great ones of the earth, e not they who have lived long, but ey who have lived fully for God d men. They are they whose memies are as honey in all mouths.

Some Parishes have "WORKING estries." They are model Parishes. eficiencies never accumulate. There e no debts. No salary is ever in rears. If anything gets out of der about the Church building, it at once put in order. Things move ong with the ease and certainty clock-work.

A NEW JERSEY WAVE TOWARD UNITY

Tentative Plan — Resolutions Passed

What the reports call a "tentative plan for Church unity was drawn up recently in New Brunswick, N. J., and is under consideration by the Reformed Classis and the Presbytery of New Brunswick, as well as by the Bishop and Standing Committee of the Diocese of New Jersey. It seems to have sprung from the fact that during the coal famine last winter the Episcopal Church held services Sunday nights with the First and Second Reformed Churches and the First Presbyterian Church in New Brunswick. At the preliminary conference, March 20, these resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The need for the closer union of all the Christian forces has been made manifest by the great war, and by the prospect of a general reconstruction after the war; and,

Whereas, The condition and attitude of our four Churches in New Brunswick afford an unusual opportunity for attempting, in a practical way, at least some steps in the direction of unity; be it, therefore,

Resolved, That the delegates from these Churches, together with the committees appointed by the Classis of New Brunswick, the Presbytery of New Brunswick and the Diocese of New Jersey, take further counsel and action looking to that end, and formulate a detailed program, and that these committees bring the matter formally to the attention of their respective governing bodies at the earliest possible time, with a request for definite action.

Resolved, further, as the sense of the representatives of the four Churches here appearing, That the plan adopted by such action ought to be permissive in character, affording to Churches in local communities, which may desire and seek the privilege, opportunity for affiliated relations; and that, in our judgment, such a plan should embrace in principle inter-communion membership, and the co-ordination of the ministers of the several Churches accepting the plan.

The tentative plan is this:

"The Classis of New Brunswick to choose one of its presbyters to receive consecration as a Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ at the hands of Bishops of the Episcopal Church—his jurisdiction to be such as may be authorized by Classis.

"The Presbytery of New Brunswick to be asked to signify its approval of the presbyter so chosen, in relation to his brethren and the constitution of the Reformed Church in America, to be the same as at present, his functions to be prescribed by Classis—for example, such as the following: To take part in ordinations conducted by Classis, to act as spiritual adviser to his brethren when they seek his counsel, and to take under his spiritual oversight any congregations which may be disposed to accept his leadership. (Opening the way for an approach to Baptists and Congregationalists, possibly.)

"The House of Bishops to be asked to consecrate the presbyter so chosen by Classis and (to some extent) endorsed by Presbytery, provided a sufficient number of Bishops of the Episcopal Church give consent.

"Classis and Presbytery to join with the Bishop of the Diocese of New Jersey in arranging and conducting a joint solemn service of mutual commission and recognition for the ministers of the petitioning congregations, in the spirit of the action of the Church at Antioch, recorded in Acts xiii:13, such service to contain all elements necessary to the full and free interchange and exercise of ministerial functions in the several congregations by all the pastors, such service to be held (if feasible) on the same day, and possibly in connection with the consecration of the presbyter chosen as Bishop.

"Classis to seek the consent of General Synod to any feature of this plan for which consent is necessary, Presbytery, in like manner, of the General Assembly, if any items are deemed ultra vires by Presbytery."

A statement was recorded of the interest which the representatives from the governing bodies felt in the plan, and its hopes that a unity of the body, as of the spirit, of these Churches might be accomplished. Reports have been made to these governing bodies, who are expected to appoint representatives for a further conference soon.

A Roman Priest Fraternizes

At Hastings-on-the-Hudson there was a quiet event on Sunday, April 7, that has few parallels in ecclesiastical history. The Rev. John F. White of St. Agnes' Roman Catholic Church, New York City, preached a sermon in Grace Episcopal Church, Hastings, by invitation of its Rector, the Rev. H. E. Clute. It is said that Father White had the support in this act of his associate clergy of St. Agnes', and the local priest of the Roman Catholic Church in Hastings gave his consent. Father White is about to leave for the front as a navy chaplain, and his sermon was a strong religious appeal inspired by war necessity. Mr. Clute says that those who doubt the priest's sincerity in doing this thing should hear and see the man, and there would be no more doubt. Previous to this service, a meeting had been held in St. Matthew's Roman Catholic Church in the interests of the great "drive" for the Knights of Columbus war fund, and the Episcopal Rector and various Protestants sat in the Roman Catholic chancel. Similar "union" services and meetings are heard of elsewhere lately.

In this connection it is interesting to note that Dr. Manning's recent address in Carnegie Hall, New York City, was published officially by the Knights of Columbus in a pamphlet containing addresses by Cardinal Farley and Rabbi Silverman. It had a large circulation and many interested readers.

On April 17 Bishop Greer and Bishop Burch, Dr. Manning, a Roman Catholic Monsignor and a number of Protestant ministers helped bless a regimental flag at Camp Upton, Long Island

A Traveling Chaplain

REV. DR. FREEMAN OF MINNEAPOLIS, GOING FROM CAMP TO CAMP

The Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman of Minneapolis, Minn., is serving as an auxiliary chaplain in connection with some of the great cantonments and camps as representative of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church. He spent a day each at Fort Crook, near Omaha, and at Fort Omaha, the 15th and 16th insts., and from the 17th to the 21st was at Camp Funston. On the 23rd inst. he was at Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, and on the 24th at Scott Field. H arrived in Louisville, Ky., on the 25th inst. to speak at Camp Taylor, where he will stay until the 28th. From the 30th of April until May 3rd he will be at Camp Dodge, Des Moines, Ia. In May he expects to spend several days at the Great Lakes Training Camp, and also at Ft. Sheridan. He speaks three times a day at different Y. M. C. A. buildings. He hopes later to make a more extended trip, and probably during the summer vacation will give considerable time to camp speaking.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

St. Philip and St. James—May 1

THE COLLECT

O Almighty God, whom truly to know is everlasting life; Grant us so perfectly to know thy Son Jesus Christ to be the way, the truth and the life; that, following the steps of thy holy Apostles, Saint Philip and Saint James, we may steadfastly walk in the way that leadeth to eternal life; through the same thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

How many people are there who think of everlasting life only as an unending life? "Everlasting" includes the thought of the imperishable, the godlike, the superhuman. The Church bids us keep alive in our hearts and hopes the ambition to attain that knowledge for which we here pray. This Collect is a prod to stir up in us ambition to obtain that knowledge which is life, because it is always advancing. It is a practical every-day knowledge of God that we should pray for an appropriation by our moral and intellectual faculties of the truths about Himself which God reveals in nature and grace. Let us fully realize that men should be persuaded to know God, rather than to know about God. "To preach and to teach Jesus" has been in many instances largely a kind of sign post advertising. Too many Christians have been sandwich-men Christians, advertising the truths about Jesus on more or less attractive billboards, which they strap over their shoulders, meanwhile living, between those signs, a life that is not at all vitally connected with the truths they are advertising. To advertise that Jesus is the way, and yet to make no progress in Divine things—to say that Jesus is the truth, and yet to reflect this in tones of uncertain speech—to call Him the life, and yet to be found subsisting on the husks which swine eat, is to discredit the Christian religion in the minds of those who must company with us. Trying to preach and teach Jesus by one's self is not impossible, but it is difficult. That is why Jesus' ideal for us is the company of the faithful, and His sending men out "by twos" is really the best and surest way to propagate His teachings.

"Following in the steps that leadeth to eternal life." It is a good thing to walk in the house of God as friends, provided Jesus is the third unseen partner, always a little way ahead of us, but not so far ahead as to let us grow discouraged by reason of our infantile progress up the steps of holiness. The heavenly stairway has many travelers. In our desire to mount up, we must be careful not to crowd any one off, or cause them to slip and fall backward. To do this is to spell woe and unhappiness for ourselves as well as for our victims. It is to misuse the eternal life which has been given us, and to misspell to others the message which God has entrusted to us for the benefit of our fellow men.

As we company with people up the stairway that leadeth to life, let us be conscious of this desire so beautifully expressed by Bishop Hall: "Grant that I may be found among those on whose foreheads Thy name is written, both knowing Thee and known as Thine, by reason of their likeness to Thee."

Let us resolve that our traveling companions shall find us wholesome folks—wholesome spiritually, sound to the core, not mere shells of Christians, talking about Jesus, but real people, living by and with and on Jesus. Let us beg the Son to reveal the Father to us. Let us ask Him to keep our feet, and at the same time let us reach out for and hold fast to, and at all times use that "lantern for our feet" which He has provided for our progress. By constant meditation on the truths of Holy Scripture there can come to us a shining in our hearts so that we shall be able to "give to others the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ".

THE EPISTLE

James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord. A double minded man is unstable in all his ways. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted: but the rich, in that he is made low: because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.—St. James i:1.

St. James, the practical man, the man who talks in terms of encouragement, yet makes us face our tasks and responsibilities and see them as they really are—a man who throws the light of sanctified common sense on the common tasks of everyday life. "Count it all joy, but know this", he says, giving us the stimulus of a big task, yet showing it to us as a real man's job, only to be done by reliance on the Author of all perfect strength.

To be perfect and entire, wanting nothing, we have to learn the lesson of singleness of aim. How many individuals and parishes have missed the mark because of having a divided mind! Take the question of Church maintenance and of Church extension. See the Jew of old, see the Mormon of today, making use of a system like the tithe, and so finding a blessing. See the Christian, individually and in groups, having no system, and so living a most unstable existence, preaching the joy of voluntary giving, yet depending on sales and suppers, and other teasing methods, to maintain that which is started for the glory of God. St. James is needed on every vestry, in every pulpit, at every altar, in every pew. Take the problem of the mission fields today, at home and abroad. Recall the days, or have some of the elders tell you about the days, before the apportionments for missions came into being, and the days since that plan was adopted, and learn from that story a lesson which will lead you further in the way of progress. A Church which is double-minded about missions is going to be unstable in all her ways. From doubt in missions, she will go on to doubt in prayer, from doubt in prayer she will go on to doubt in faith, and hope, and love. She will become an institution that opens altar rails but locks pew doors; she will become exclusive instead of inclusive; she will put all the burdens on the priest and the sexton, become noted for her suppers and her sales, and unnoticed by the multitude. In the Church as St. James saw it, the poor and the rich had equal duties but divided responsibilities. And his warning was to both classes of people—those who had little and those who had much. Each was to welcome the opportunity given him to receive the crown of life found in resistance to the temptation to plead poverty, or to depend on wealth alone. All were to recognize that progress and life and joy came to those whose Christian experience was begun, continued and would be ended in love for God. The man who is not a whole-hearted lover of God is never a dependable person in the development of God's plans for the world. He is unstable. Prejudice, popularity, pride and kindred evil spirits will pull him away from the standard which means suppression of self in order to exalt the cause for which Jesus died, and now lives again and forever.

THE GOSPEL

And Jesus said unto his disciples, Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me. If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unth him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake. Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.—St. John xiv:1.

What unspeakable comfort those first few lines of today's Gospel have brought to countless thousands of people! To how many hearts have they brought faith, and hope, and courage, and peace, when spoken by a living voice at some great crisis in life! And isn't it strange that people are content that millions of their fellow beings shall remain ignorant of those words? Every man and woman who goes to church and reads the Bible, and has family prayers, and gives to local needs and philanthropies, and yet will do little or nothing to see that living voices proclaim this message to those parts of the earth where men do not yet know and realize that "Christ is risen from the dead", is guilty of the body and blood of Christ. Such folks are parasites. If their parish priests and bishops have let them stay ignorant of the absolute necessity of missions, they are heaping up for themselves hours and days and years of remorse and shame when they shall come to themselves and see the fruit of their neglect and distorted vision of the mission of Jesus.

"Have been with you so long time, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip?" Every congregation has its Philip. He may be in the pulpit, or at the altar, as well as in the pew. Oh, how patient, and loving, and tender was Jesus with Philip. He didn't call him a parasite. Perhaps it was wrong to write that word. Calling names does not win people to your side, does it?. But to neglect to point out the way of escape from parasitism is criminal. Jesus appealed to Philip to begin to know Him, assuring him that if he knew Him, then other inexplicable truths would become facts and food for life, as well as thought.

"The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself." Jesus here bears witness to the fact that a message from God can come through human lips. "The foolishness of preaching" has been used by God to win souls to His cause, but the effectiveness of preaching is greatly intensified when the preacher's works betray the indwelling life of God. God help all his preachers and teachers to publish glad tidings by life first and word afterward! God turn every one of us so that our words and deeds shall together reflect the power of an endless life! Only when this is done can men hope for a fulfillment of the promises with which today's Gospel ends—"to ask in God's name". One must ask with the Christ spirit. To ask with Christ's spirit one must live the Christ life, one must live, sleep, eat, drink in the conscious presence of Christ—commune with Him, do and say everything for His glory. To do this is not the task for a double-minded man. To do this one must stop merely knowing about Jesus—one must walk as He walked, one must obey His precepts and rely on His promises; one must seek His grace and stick by Him at all times and in all places. This is no work for a slacker or an actor. May God help each and every one of us to be and not to play the man!

There is, perhaps, no better illustration to be found of the work of the prophets as the guides and inspiration of their times, than is afforded by Haggai and Zechariah. The exiles had returned (some of them at least) to Palestine, with the brightest possible hopes; but there had come difficulties and discouragements, and a consequent reaction. Adversaries "weakened the hands of the people of Judah and troubled them in building, and hired counsellors against them to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus, King of Persia, until the reign of Darius". Crops, too, had been poor. They had sowed much, and brought in little. The heavens withheld their dew and the earth its fruit, and there was a drought. The people said: "It is not the time to build Jehovah's house." Some of the more fortunate ones, however, had managed to scrape enough together to build themselves fine residences, and so Haggai wanted to know whether it was a time to erect ceiled houses to live in. They should "consider their ways". God would be with them, as He had been with their forefathers, after bringing them out of Egypt, and the glory of the latter house should surpass that of the former. The desire, or the desirable things of all nations should come, amidst the shaking of things in the heavens and on the earth, a passage of which much is made in Hebrews 12, which would not be a bad New Testament correlative, especially in view of the sufferings of God's people. We have selected, however, Revelations 5, with its account of worship in the true temple above, and its ascription of praise to the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, who was also the lamb slain from the foundation of the world, and alone strong enough to break the seven seals of the book of life. There is a further connection between this story of a restored temple and the Easter season. In our Lord's use of the analogy to the temple of His body, saying, "Destroy this body and in three days I will raise it again", in connection with which should be considered the final destruction of the temple in A. D. 70, and the Christian Church, the body of Christ, rising upon its ruins. The whole process by which Judaism passed into Christianity is a working out of Haggai's words about shaking things in heaven and earth. There is also a direct connection with the Collect for this Sunday, in the fixing of the heart where true joys are to be found amid the manifold changes of the world.

The New Testament lesson for the evening, John 16, prophecies the coming and work of the Holy Spirit, and is designed to direct the mind of the Church, after Easter, to the grand climax on Pentecost.

For the Old Testament lesson we have taken Isaiah's prophecy of the true King, and of the troublous times that must be until the Spirit should be poured out from on high.

The week day lessons continue Zechariah's prophecies, in which are to be found thoughts appropriate to the season, such as God's taking up His abode in Zion, and the world conquest, resulting not from kultur, but from the moral power of the indwelling God. The eschatological passages are selected designedly to lead up to Pentecost, the coming of the sirit, as the Christ returned.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

ANOTHER WAR PRAYER

Unto Thee, O Lord, we cry, in the night of the world's darkness, for the coming of the dawn of peace.

We know that the earth is Thine, and that the hearts of all men are in Thy keeping.

Remember, we pray Thee, the desolate homes, the long suspense of waiting, the sorrows of the exiled and the poor, the growth of hate, the hindrance of good, and make an end of war.

By the love we bear to fathers, brothers, lovers and sons, by the long agony of trench and battlefield and hospital, by the woe brought home to the hearts of mothers, and by the orphaned children's cry, hasten Thou the coming of the ages of good will.

Grant that our own entrance as a nation into this world strife, in solemn obligation to duty, may lead to its more speedy conclusion. Raise up in every nation leaders, who, even in the dark day of battle, shall be planning for the work of peace. Show us each our part in the redemption of the world from cruelty and hatred, and make us all faithful and strong and brave.

All of which we ask in the name and through the merits of the Prince of peace, Thy Son, our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

paid us a visit at 2:30 p. m., also aga
at 9:30, but were driven back by o anti-aircraft guns. As the Bishop h been all over the battle front such incidents bother him little. He immediately arranged for a celebration of the Holy Communion at the Enlisted Men's Club for Palm Sunday at 7:30 and it was a beautiful and helpful service even though the guns were booming not very far away. Quite a lengthy schedule has been made out for the Bishop and he truly has a strong message for the boys. After saying "Goodbye" he adjusted his gas mask, picked up his steel helmet and got into the camion that would take him to the next hut where he would speak words of comfort and encouragement to the soldier boys who were waiting for nightfall, when they would go into the trenches.

Boy Scout Troop Wins A Trophy

ment at Washington has prepared a manual of instructions especially for the use of the Boy Scouts of America, and has requested the assistance of the Scouts. Recently, in an appeal for men to act as Scout Masters, President Wilson said: "Men are needed to build up this efficient unit of the national service to its full strength. Anything that is done to increase the war efficiency of the Boy Scouts of America will be a real contribution to the nation, and will help win the war."

We Must Defeat Germany

In response to a request to contribute a fifty word statement for a volume soon to be published under the title, "Why We Must Win This War", Bishop Mann has sent the following:

We Must Defeat Germany

First, because Germany is responsible for this war.

Second, because German victory would be the triumph af an unchristian ideal in Church and State.

Third, because the German methods are those of diabolic arrogance, perfidy and cruelty, and it must be conclusively proved that such methods cannot prevail.

HOLY ORDERS

Catechism: Read "Preface" to the Ordination of Deacons in the Prayer Book.

Prop. 1.

In any society where there are principles which need to be preserved, or authority to be maintained, or property to be held, it is necessary that there should be some method of succession in those who hold office therein.

For example, the President of the U. S. A. does not assume the office when elected, but when he has been solemnly inaugurated by the powers that be. So with the officers of a lodge or the ministers of a Church.

This is true even in those religious bodies which repudiated ordination by Bishops; they had to substitute ordination by presbyteries or similar substitutes for the historic method.

You can't pass on doctrine or property without some method of perpetuating the official body that holds the same in trust.

The historic Church has merely retained the historic method, known as Apostolic succession, instead of some more modern substitute.

Thus, the Charter Members of the Church were the twelve Apostles, to whom Christ committed authority (See St. Mat. xviii, 15-19) and who were endowed with "power from on high."

We have in the Twelve, the original official body of the Church. That the Twelve was such an official body is clearly shown by the fact that a vacancy among the Twelve was filled by the election of St. Matthias to the office which Judas had held.

The society which Christ founded was not a mob, but a regularly constituted body, which was to be witness to the truth and to appoint others to carry on the principles, when they passed away.

Prop. 2.

In Acts vi, we find the Apostles creating officers known as Deacons, to whom were delegated certain definite duties of ministration. Besides these Deacons, the Apostles appointed Elders and Bishops, so that in Apostolic times there seem to have been four orders of the Ministry, all of whom spring out of the power which Christ gave the Apostles.

The term "Apostle," however, was confined to the Twelve (and to St. Paul), thus leaving three orders after the last Apostle died.

It does not appear that the Apostles themselves ever had any Diocesan limitation to their office, but rather exercised authority wherever they were present, but passing on in different localities to those who were called "Bishops" the representative authority. Thus St. Paul seems to have stationed Timothy as the first Bishop of Ephesus, and Titus as the first Bishop of Crete.

At any rate, in a very short time—as we learn from Ignatius and Irenaeus, writers of the second century—Bishops, who looked back to the Apostles as the source of their authority, were everywhere estalished in definite places, and were assisted in their labors by Presbyters and Deacons.

What was everywhere a fact, could scarcely have been a fiction.

Prop. 3.

In the study of Holy Orders one needs to remember that there are two distinct questions. The first is that which is known as the grace of orders, and the second that which is known as jurisdiction.

By grace is meant the gift conferred in ordination.

The Apostles had this gift in its fullness, and they bestowed it on others by the Laying on of Hands.

To the Deacon they publicly gave the gift of the Holy Spirit for the work of ministering to the poor and needy; to the Presbyter was given the same Spirit for the work of preaching the Word and administering the Sacraments; to the Bishop was given the same Spirit for the work of ordaining men to the ministry and of administering the discipline of the Church.

To each, by the same Spirit and in the same manner, was given the distinctive gift of his particular office.

After Apostolic days, it became necessary, as the Church grew, to confine the ministry of these various offices to a certain restricted territory. Naturally this could not be done until the Church grew and took possession of the territory.

(There could scarcely have been a Bishop of Rome until there was a Church in Rome.)

Se we need clearly to distinguish between the office of a Bishop or Priest and his jurisdiction in a Diocese or Parish.

The office, once given, is indelible, and cannot be taken away, but the jurisdiction that a Bishop or Priest holds is a matter of convenience and may be altered from time to time according to the rule of ecclesiastical law.

So a Bishop may be deprived of his jurisdiction, but no one can take from him his grace of orders.

The primitive and universal method of inducting men into office by the Church has been through the Laying on of Hands.

It is apparent, on the face of it, that no one can give to another an authority which he himself does not possess. Thus a Priest could not, by laying hands on another Priest, make him a Bishop, but a Bishop, having passed through the office of Deacon and Priest, can give to another the grace of these orders.

QUESTIONS

1. Explain the necessity of officers in any society?
2. What is the difference between being elected to an office and being inaugurated in it?
3. What can be said of those religious bodies which have repudiated Apostolic succession?
4. Who were the Charter Members of the Church?
5. What authority and what power did their receive?
6. Give an account of the ordination of Deacons.
7. What were the various orders in the Apostolic Church?
8. How did the office of Apostle differ from the others?
9. What is the difference between grace and jurisdiction?
10. What is the method of passing on authority in the Church?

I John iii:13-17

We know that we are the children of God, and have passed out of spiritual death, separation from God, unto life, fellowship with God, because we love. "Active love is the sign of Christian life." We have eternal life abiding in us because we love the brethren. How do we know love? This question naturally rises. St. John answers it. The perfect love is seen in the sacrifice of Christ. "We know love in this, that Jesus Christ laid down His life for us." Love was manifested in His giving Himself for us, in His obedience even to the death of the cross. Since love is of the very nature of God, and we have before us the complete manifestation of it in the sacrifice on the cross, we Christians ought to be moved by the same spirit of sacrifice—"we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren". The essential character of love is the giving of ourselves for others, in self-sacrifice, that others may have. However, it is not always possible to die actually—to lay down our lives in a literal sense. So there may be a feeling that our love may be manifested in intention only. But St. John does not permit this failure on the part of Christians. Academic love, which comes from mere contemplation of the cross, has no place in the Johannive Christianity. The cross sets forth the love of God and the love of Christ in thus dying for us, but if we have fellowship with God in Christ, we share of the nature of God, who is love, and we love. So St. John gives a practical test of this love: "Whoso hath the substance of the world, and beholdeth his brother have need, and shutteth his heart from, how doth the love of God abide in him?"

So the practical test of love is sharing what we have with those who have not, sharing all that we have, for the word translated "good" in the Authorized Version is very comprehensive in its meaning. To most people, their self-sacrifice is limited to the giving of money or of their material prosperity to one who has need thereof. It is often satisfied by the giving of a dime to a beggar, or the signing of a check for the Associated Charities. St. John meant more than this. The word he used is translated sometimes "life", not the vital principle within us, but in the sense of its activities, circumstances and results, such as in the word "biography", the history of a man's life. It is the substance which makes up earthly life—all the endowments of life, wealth, intellect, station, strength, health, ability.

So, also, need means the lack of any one or more of these, much more than material poverty. It means the starvation of the brain, the dullness of intellect, the lack of opportunity, ill health. When love has, love gives whatever is lacking. The follower of Jesus Christ shares what he has with those who have not. There is no limit to loving self-sacrifice. Christ gave His all—Himself. Love means sympathy, fellow feeling, with those who are lacking anything that goes to make life fuller, complete. By the unfortunate rendering of our Bible, we have come to think of love in material ways. Christian love has degenerated into official charity. If we are followers of Christ, and have fellowship with Him, we give ourselves, although we have not this world's goods. We give our strength, our intellect, our time, in loving service to our brethren.

It is the open heart that lets love act. Love leaves the locked-up heart. There may be great wealth, genius or artistic taste in that closed heart, but there can never be the love of God there. God is absent, for we abide in God when we abide in love.

Love may degenerate into sentimentality, into gush. It may be mere feeling. Such love is not that of God, manifested in the death on the cross. We may admire the 13th chapter of First Corinthians, and we may express our admiration for love in splendid sounding words—mere tinkling brass and sounding cymbals—and have not the love of God abiding in us. "Little children, let us not love with word, neither with the tongue, but in deed and truth"—not the theory of love, but the genuine movement of our whole body. The sacrifice of ourselves, even to hardship and suffering, that others may have.

This is no call to a life of ease. It is a call to sacrifice of self, of time, of money, that the poor may have better homes, better food and better education, that the children of our cities and farms may grow up with healthier bodies and purer souls, that the Gospel may be preached everywhere in the world. Love is service. "Whosoever would become great among you shall be your servant." If Christian people would ever realize that love is the fulfillment of the law, and that love of God is manifested in love of men, and that love means self-sacrificing service, the world would be a better place. The opportunities of loving service are great. There is the continual call for missionaries, for workers in the slums, for strivers against child labor and the sweat shop. Today the battle calls for men to "lay down their lives", that the coming generations may live freer and nobler, for workers in the Red Cross. There will be a greater call for self-sacrificing love in the social adjustment that must be when peace comes.

Christians should heed the voice of the aged apostle: "Beloved, let us love one another, because love is of God, and every one who loves has been born of God, and knows God. He that hates, knows not God, because God is love."

The Te Deum

This great chant gets its name from the two Latin words wtih which it begins, Te Deum laudamus, We praise Thee, O God. This gives the keynote to the hymn. It is the expression of praise to God, first, for the revelation of Himself as the Holy Trinity, then because of the incarnation of the Son of God. It is more than a hymn of praise—it is a rhythmical creed, expressive of the Christian faith. Tradition attributes its origin to St. Ambrose, who is said to have intoned it at the baptism of St. Augustine of Hippo in 387 A. D., but this is merely the desire to give to all such noble expressions of the faith authorship worthy of them. It has been given an Eastern Greek origin, but no Greek parallel has been found. The Greek versions we have now are manifestly translations from the Latin. How old the Te Deum is cannot be definitely stated, but of the antiquity of nearly all of it in separate form cannot be denied. Phrases and sentences of it are found in the prefaces of the early Western Liturgies, especially in the Mozarabic, while nearly all of the last part is taken from the Psalms. When and by whom these different parts were combined cannot be positively said. It has been used as a hymn in the Western Church for centuries.

It is composite in character and in composition. The first twenty-one verses are rhythmical prose, while the last nine are prose simply. It is divided into three parts, and the proposed revision of the Book of Common Prayer would indicate these parts. The first part, verses 1-13, is an expression of the nature of God in His Triune personality, and our thanks for the revelation of this. The second part, verses 14-22, is an expression of our devout thanks for the incarnation of the Son of God, and the third part is a prayer for the defense and blessing of the people of God—those who have accepted the faith expressed before. So when the Te Deum is sung we sing a creed and proclaim our faith in chant just as much as when we say the Nicene Creed.

The Te Deum was and is used in the Office of Matins, after the ninth lesson, as a prayer of thanksgiving on all festivals of joyous character; therefore it is said on all Sundays, except from Septuagesima to Palm Sunday, inclusive. It is also to be used on special occasions, "to render thanks to God for the bestowal of great blessings". When the Offices were combined to form our Morning Prayer, the Te Deum was made one of the chants to be used after the first lesson, but no proper provision was made for its non-use during the penitential season. The Benedicite is just as festival in character as the Te Deum, and not nearly as Christian in teaching.

The doctrinal teachings of the Te Deum are worth much more meditation than we usually give them, and are often lost sight of through the way choirs render the hymn. Not only do we praise God, but we confess and acknowledge Him as the Supreme Ruler of the whole universe, and so not only man, but the whole earth, must and does worship Him as the Eternal Father. In this worship, the very heavens themselves, with all the powers therein, join, and we in this great hymn re-echo the song of the angelic host: "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God, the Almighty, who was and who is and who is to come". All the universe shows the glory of God.

Then the whole Church in all its members sing the praise of God. Earth re-echoes heaven, and then heaven calls upon the children of God to chant the praises of God. The glorious chorus of the apostles, the goodly fellowship of the prophets, and the noble army of the martyrs, with the Catholic Church of God—in heaven and on earth—acknowledge and, because they acknowledge, praise God as Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

The adorable, true and only Son of God the Father is the King of Glory, because He humbled Himself to be born of a virgin, and so, through His humiliation, overcame the sharpness of death, thus opening the Kingdom of Heaven to all those who, through faith, accept Him. His work done on earth, He ascended to the Father, expecting all His enemies to be put under Him, when He will come again to be the Judge of all. Because of this we pray, and must ever pray, for the Divine help and grace which comes to us through the blood of Christ. The saints are in glory everlasting, because they share the glory of Christ, their Master.

The prayer which closes the Te Deum is taken almost word for word from the Psalms. These may be looked up in the Prayer Book version as follows: Psalm xxviii:10; Psalm cxlv:2; Psalm cxxiiia; Psalm xxxiii: 21; Psalm xxxi:1a.

Church Paper for Spanish-Speaking People

The first number of El Nuevo Siglo, a publication intended to provide Church literature and the news of the whole Church for Spanish-speaking people in South America, has appeared from the press of the General Board of Missions, New York, edited by the Rev. Dr. Arthur R. Gray, secretary of the Board for Latin America. It is the first step yet undertaken by the Board to provide in popular newspaper form Church literature in the mission field. The form of the paper will be changed if it is found desirable to do so, and subsequent issues will probably be printed on better stock and be illustrated. The special features are: Adapted translations of the Christian Nurture series of the General Board of Religious Education, translations in book form of standard Church literature, printed on the last page, which may be torn off and folded into book pages. News of the whole Church, presented in such a way as to interest Spanish-speaking people. The editor announces that it will be the policy of the paper to present everything from a positive as opposed to a negative point of view. It is a step in the right direction, with the promise of accomplishing much good among the people for whom it is intended, and arousing a deeper interest in the work of the Church.

The Twenty-sixth Annual Meeting the Western New York Diocesan Organization of the Girl's Friendly Society of America will be held Wednesday, May 1, 1918, in Grace Church, Buffalo, N. Y. The Rev. D. L. Morris, Rector of Christ Church, Rochester, N. Y., will make the address.

EUROCLYDON

(A good example of a poem that is incomprehensible without familiarity with the Scriptures. The allusions are explained in Acts xxvii:12ff. St. Matthew xiv:22ff. St. John vi:16ff.)

Scarce loosed from Crete—
Then borne on wings of flame
And sleet,
The Euroclydon came.

Strained yard, bent mast,
With fury of his mouth
The blast
Compels us to the south.

Canst see, for spume
And mist, and writhen air,
A loom
Of Clauda anywhere?

Balked hopes, fooled wit!
Ah, soul, to gain this loss,
Didst quit
The shelter of His cross?

Dear Lord, if Thou
Wouldst walk upon the sea,
My prow
Unblenched should turn to Thee.

Wind roars, wind yelps—
To Thy blest side I'd slip,
Use helps,
And undergird the ship.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

Calvary Church, Philadelphia, Pa., purchased a $1,000 Liberty Bond.

"A singing army and a praying army is an army that can never be conquered", says Trench and Camp.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Frank Du Moulin, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Ohio, was recently presented with an automobile by friends in Cleveland.

Members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in St. Paul's Church, Newark, N. J., have secured over 100 pledges from parishioners promising to attend the Sunday evening services.

The annual meeting of the Guild of All Souls was held at Nashotah, Wisconsin, April 15. A requiem celebration of the Holy Communion was said by Dean Larrabee, who is president of the Guild, assiste by Bishop Webb. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. B. Stoskopf, Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Chicago. The secretary, the Rev. T. E. Smith of Akron, Ohio, reported thirty-three branches of the Guild, with a living membership of 1,428.

St. Paul's Church, Washington, D. C. (The Rev. Robert Talbot, D. D. Rector), on the evening of Low Sunday after Evening Prayer, the rector made the annual distribution of gold medals and crosses to members of the choir and Acolyte Guild. Mr. Ross Hunter who has very faithfully supervised the work of the Acolytes during the past year was made the recipient of a gold medal cross in token thereof. Mr. Ferris, the organist and choirmaster, was also thanked by the rector for his able services and presented with a check from the Sanctuary Guild.

Mr. George Gordon King, Treasurer of the General Board of Missions, states that for the first five months of this fiscal year of fourteen months, that is to April 1st, the total of the receipts on the Apportionment was $315,051.57 while a year ago for a like period they were $353,707.47. Of the total receipts $23,049.56 has come from the "One Day's Income Plan." With the exception of the parish offerings, the sources of income more than hold their own. The momentary decrease in parish offerings is attributed to the change of date for closing the fiscal year to December 31st, dividing the hitherto best part of the year, the winter months, for making contributions, and another reason given for the decrease is the war.

St. Andrew's Mission, Omaha, Neb., after a struggle of almost forty years was organized into a Parish on April 8th. On a later date a "get-together-dinner" was given for the men by some of the ladies of the Porish, followed by vocal numbers and addresses. The rector, the Rev. John E. Flockhart, presided. The themes and the speakers were: "Censorship of War," by W. R. Watson; "War Legislation," by Robert D. Neely; "Liberty Bonds and the boys at Fort Omaha," by flying cadet, W. F. Holliday; and "The Spiritual Side of the Fight," by the Rev. Dr. C. C. Rollit, secretary of the Province of the Norhwest. Dr. Rollit said in part: "It was the silent forces of God which enabled the handful of men who faced the German army at the Marne to turn that terrible tide. It is these same silent forces which the Christian world of today should keep ever in mind throughout this struggle, for it is these forces which must ultimately triumph."

Trinity Church, Poultney, Vt., was filled on Sunday evening, April 7th, when the rector, Rev. H. P. Scratchly, preached a sermon bearing upon the first anniversary of this country's entrance into the war. The front pews were occupied by members of the Grand Army Post, Sons of Veterans, Joyce Relief Corps, Boy Scouts, and Camp Fire Girls, all of them marching to the church in a body. The music by the vested choir consisted mainly of national hymns, the Processional being "Ancient of Days," and the Recessional the Russian Hymn, "Rise, Crowned with Light, Imperial Salem, Rise." The preacher took for his text the building of character upon the best and surest foundation, Jesus Christ. A Collection was taken for the benefit of the Red Cross.

The last Diocesan Conference of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocease of Ohio was held last week at St. Paul's, East Cleveland, at which nearly all the churches were well represented. The visiting ladies were cordially received at the door by the rector and his wife. A most delightful luncheon was served by the ladies of St. Paul's, following which the reports of the visiting speakers of the diocese were given. Mrs. Cook presided. Reports as to the pledges of the various parishes toward the funds for the various objects on which the speakers have been working were also given. Mrs. Knapp announced that the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary would be held this year on May 21st at Trinity, Toledo, urging as many as possible to make arrangements to attend.

In common with the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the Church Missionary Society is receiving offerings for the foreign work of the Church of England larger than the average. For the first ten months of this present fiscal year the income was $111,000. This is not only a larger amount than was received during a similar period for the preceding year, but is also considerably above the average for the last five years. The Church Missionary Society has been asked for $150,000 to cover the loss occasioned by the high price of silver in the Orient. It is probable that our own Board of Missions will need at least $190,000 more than last year to meet this one item of war expenses.

Bishop Howden, in acknowledging the $3400 appropriated by the Board of Missions from the undersigned legacies towards the liquidation of the indebtedness upon the Episcopal Residence of New Mexico ,says that as soon as he is able to secure an additional $500 the church in New Mexico will own a Bishop's residence, free from all debt, which from this time forward the Bishop can occupy rent free and in all probability at no expense to himself for upkeep, insurance, repairs, etc." This fact, he believes will prove an incentive to New Mexico to go forward in achieving diocesan status. "Four years ago," he adds, "endowment assets were considerably less than $100. Today these assets are about $13,000, so it is encouraging to know that we have made a real beginning." Is there anyone who will give the last $500 to remove the last vestige of indebtedness from the Bishop's house? New Mexico has already given about $2500.

Personals

The Rev. St. George Tyner, Rector of St. Augustine's Church, DeWitt, Neb., has accepted a call to St. James' Church, Fremont, in the same diocese.

The Rev. Raymond M. D. Adams has accepted a call to Holy Trinity Church, Tiverton, R. I., and enters on his duties the first Sunday in May.

The Rev. Dr. T. J. Lacey, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been elected an associate member of the Columbia University Association of Doctors of Philosophy.

The Rev. Raymond C. Knox, D. D., for the past ten years chaplain of Columbia University, New York, will engage in war service at an early date in France, under the direction of the Y. M. C. A.

Rev. Alexander M. Rich, Rector of Christ Church, South Pittsburg, Tenn., has resigned and accepted the Rectorship of Holy Trinity Church, Memphis, to take effect April 28. His address is 1447 McLemore Avenue.

Rev. Alexander H. Grant has been called to the rectorship of Trinity Church, Atchinson, Kansas, to succeed the Rev. Otis E. Gray, who has become Chaplain of the 353rd U. S. Infantry at Camp Funston, Kansas. He will enter on his duties May 1st.

Dr. George A. Barton, who holds the chair of Biblical Literature and Semitic Languages at Bryn Mawr College, gave up his membership in the Society of Friends recently, owing to its attitude towards the war, and has been confirmed by the Bishop of Pennsylvania.

The Rev. F. S. deMattos of Dauphin, Manitoba, Canada, has assumed charge of St. Paul's Church, Brainard, Minn.

The Rev. Myron G. Argus, rector of St. Matthias' Church, Waukesha, Wis., left on the 2nd inst. for Chicago to join Base Hospital Unit No. 14, of which he is chaplain and which had been ordered to Camp Custer, Mich., with the expectation of being sent to France at an early date.

The Rev. William H. Allison, Rector of St. James' Church Piqua, Ohio, for the past eleven years, has received an appointment as secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for war work with the troops of the American expeditionary forces in France, and is now in New York, ready to sail at the earliest possible date. Mr. Allison has been granted a leave of absence for one year by the vestry of St. James' Parish.

The Rev. Henry Neal Hyde assumed charge of the Parish of St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, in Chicago, on April 10th, and officiated at the services of the Parish Church on the second Sunday after Easter. His address is now 1606 Estes Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Having removed from the Province of the Southwest, the Rev. Mr. Hyde has resigned as secretary of the Synod. The work of that office will be carried on during the current year by the Rev. Robert H. Mize, 710 State Avenue, Kansas City, Kansas. The Journal of the recent Synod of the Province of the Southwest has been issued and distributed by the retiring secretary.

Harrisburg Notes

The indebtedness on St. Mary's Church, Waynesboro, has been paid off in full. Steps are being taken for its consecration in the near future. It is in charge of the Rev. F. A. Cook, who also has charge of the Church of the Transfiguration, Blue Ridge Summit, and Calvary Church, Beartown.

A tablet in memory of Albert Dorwart, son of the Rev. William Dorwart, Archdeacon of Harrisburg, has recently been placed in St. Albert's Church, Duncanton. It is of handwrought brass. It was given by friends of Albert Dorwart in Virginia, where he spent three months among Indians at Amherst, Virginia, laboring in the interest of the Church. Albert Dorwart died in the service of his country, in which he enlisted many months before his death.

The organ in St. James' Church, Lancaster, has been rebuilt and much enlarged. The work was done by the Hall Organ Company of New Haven, Conn. The organ was used for the first time on Easter, and gave excellent satisfaction. It has seven registers in the pedal organ, twelve in the swell, ten in the great and nine in the choir. It has also a register in the choir room. It is fitted with electric action, and is one of the finest organs in this part of the state.

The real question everywhere is whether the world, distracted and confused as everybody sees that it is, is going to be patched up and restored to what it used to be, or whether it is going forward into a quite new and different kind of life, whose exact nature nobody can pretend to foretell, but which is to be distinctly new, unlike the life of any age which the world has seen already. It is impossible that the old conditions, so shaken and broken, can ever be repaired and stand just as they stood before. The time has come when something more than repair and restoration of the old is necessary. The old must die, and a new must come forth out of its tomb.—Phillips Brooks.

Patient with others, but strict with myself;
Loving to give, and refusing all pelf;
Doing the right, though it brings me no fame;
Honoring Christ, because signed with His name;
Helping the downcast and cheering the sad;
Living our creed till it makes the world glad;
Fond of our work, of our friends, of our land;
Walking by faith, daily led by God's hand;
This is the pathway the saints all have trod,
This is the life hid with Christ's life in God.

—Bishop J. H. Darlington.

Our New York Letter

The wife of the Rev. Nathan A. Seagle, D. D., died at her home April 13. Dr. Seagle has been Rector of St. Stephen's Church, West 69th Street, since 1899, where he has the assistance of the Rev. F. Greaves and the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, D. D., the well-known novelist. It is a Church too much in the neighborhood of several other of our West Side Parish Churches, but has held its own well under the direction of Dr. Seagle.

Religious Plays in New York

Early in the spring a manager boldly adapted the Book of Job to the modern stage, and succeeded in charming at least two large audiences. It was reverently and intelligently done, but most hearers felt that the speeches of Job and his friends were too long for the stage of the Twentieth Century, and it was too costly an experiment to be often repeated, though it does credit to the high ideals of certain managers of theatres.

There are several up-to-date theatres running plays that have moral themes bordering on the religious. "Yes or No" is one well worth seeing for its dual pictures of the unhappy consequences of wrong choices in life. "Polly With a Past" is probably the most popular play in the city, and is a whimsical picture of the well-read daughter of a country minister in Ohio, who proves surprisingly able to put her knowledge of literary characters into public mimicry. It is at least not like certain plays that humiliate the common sense and refinement of the clergy and their families, who are too often represented as merely dull or mildly shallow and hypocritical in their professional religionism.

A new play by Charles Rann Kennedy, entitled "The Army With Banners", is now up for criticism, because, like "His Servant in the House", it brings in the element of Deity and the great doctrines of heaven and hell. The Redeemer was presented in "The Servant in the House" in the guise of a servant, in order that those who object to personifications of Divinity on the stage should not be offended. It is to the credit of playwrights like Mr. Kennedy, without reference to the actual dramatic value of their plays, that at least they are alive to the unending importance of religious belief and practice as the great essentials of a true human life. Lovers of the drama will be interested in knowing that Edith Wynne Matteson, whose stage enunciation of English is spoken of as well nigh perfect, is the wife of Mr Kennedy. She is much admired by high-minded people of culture, and, her photograph, affectionately autographed, stands on the mantel of at least one eminent rector of this city.

A Vigorous Parish Association

The Men's Association of St. Thomas' Parish holds several social gatherings each year, with the purpose of not only encouraging friendship, a quality all too rare in city Churches, but also in order to hear some instructive addresses. April 16 the meeting was held in the Harvard Club, and the speaker was a distinguished member of the parish, Ambassador Gerard. He gave an intimate and confidential talk for about an hour of his experiences in Germany, Belgium and Northern France. He is not an orator, but he is something better for the moment. He is the American who was most behind the scenes when Germany went to war, and he remained loyally and vigorously American three years after the war began. He has a peculiar ability to bring the problem and its unwelcome facts before an American audience without loud bitterness, but with appalling certainty and clearness. No one can hear him without feeling how imperative is the call to take up arms against brutality and for humanity just now.

"A Father in Israel"

If one were looking for the ideal of an Anglican clergyman it would be well not to pass by, if he could, the Rt. Rev. Frederic Courtney, D. D., who is now living in retirement as Rector Emeritus of St. James' Parish, in New York City, and who not long ago celebrated his 81st birthday. But to speak of him as living in retirement is only true of the word living in all its best senses. He is about the most alive clergyman in the metropolis, and if "retirement" means that he does nothing, all one has to do is to attend any Church meeting of general interest and note Bishop Courtney there —always ready and active in helping, always clear, definite and courtly in utterance. It is a blessing to the public life of the Church in New York to have such a man constantly in its front ranks.

What Shall I Believe

Shall the individual decide it? Shall he read his Bible and, with such helps as he may find at hand, conscientiously determine what it teaches? This is guess work. And one man's guess is usually as good as another's —even as one man's opinion is as good as another's, and as a natural result "every man has a doctrine". And somebody is wrong, if the Bible is a book of truth, and is not a mere bundle of opinions—if it is a guide, and not a weather-vane.

Is it not a fact that the individual who studies his Bible to learn the truth approaches the task with a preconceived idea, with a leaning, with a prejudice, biased by his religious training? It must necessarily be so. There are certain theological systems in the world today, who interpret the Bible for their adherents. The individual is brought up under some one system, grounded in its methods, taught from infancy its principles, and that individual, intuitively, unconsciously, is under its influence.

The cry among Protestant Churches today is, "The Bible and the Bible only"—but it is remarkable how all those individuals interpret the Bible according to their training. When the individual, therefore, conscientiously studies his Bible, and asks for the Holy Spirit to direct him to a right conclusion, the influence of religious training enters as a strong element into the consideration of duty, and the reading of standard authors in their system has great power, and the individual really interprets the Bible according to the advice of his religious teachers. This is equally true of all systems.

What shall I believe? Shall we turn in implicit trust to the Church of Rome, and do as her members do—ask the Church to determine the truth, to declare its dogmas, to establish the doctrines, to speak to us with authority on the subject, to be the sole guide and arbiter? Shall we take the responsibility off the shoulders of the individual and put it on the Church? Shall we let the Church do our thinking for us?

History given the answer, No. By that method many errors have crept in as the centuries have gone by. One age has denied what another age affirmed. One generation has believed what a previous generation never knew. Such a course only changes the arbitrary decision of the individual to the arbitrary decision of the Church. Under such a system truth changes. Men believe differently at different times, as does also the Church. Is that satisfactory? Is there no unchangeableness, no certainty, no reality, no enduring substance in truth? Is not truth eternal? Can it change? And if it appears to change, have we not mistaken opinions for the truth? Opinions must change—the truth never.

Who shall tell us what to believe, and take it out of the realm of guess work? Why may we not do as the Church did in the early centuries, in the days of her purity? Questions arose. The Church came together to consider the matter. They did not say, What shall we determine about this matter, but what did Jesus Christ teach? If that was not clear, they said, How did the Apostles interpret it? They were the companions of Christ. He instructed them. He gave them "the faith" entire, for Christian belief. They followed His instruction. If there still was doubt, they considered how it was interpreted by the Church in different countries, established as they were by different Apostles, and when they learned what had been believed everywhere, always, by all, they concluded that that must be the truth that Christ taught. This they announced to the Church—the result of their investigation, not an arbitrary opinion, not as an ultimatum, but as the facts in the case. And the rule of the Christian centuries has been well expressed by a rule laid down by Vincentius of Lerens in the year 434 for his own guidance. He says: "We must be peculiarly careful to hold that which hath been believed IN ALL PLACES, AT ALL TIMES, BY ALL THE FAITHFUL."

Here, then, is the reasonable rule of faith: Scripture as it has always been interpreted by the Church."

If you have a good conviction, and have not the courage to express it, you may as well be without it.

DISCIPLINE

This is a day in which, notwithstanding the frightfulness of war, everybody is exalting the value of discipline.

It is the general report that the discipline of the military camps has toned up the young men of America in a manner that has been graphically illustrated by various companion pictures of young men, taken "before using" and "after using" in a way which would make the fortune of a patent medicine or a psycho-therapeutic cult.

Of course, any one can see that regular hours, and freedom from dissipation, and healthful exercise, and instant obedience, are fine tonics for a young American who too often acquires liberty long before he develops common sense, and runs the riot of self-will long before he gains the saddening experience of the damage done.

It is a great shame that war is the only motive that forces the government to see the value of discipline, and then only, I fear, because if our soldiers aren't disciplined they will be most thoroughly licked.

It is a pity that the chances are that such a large proportion of our rejuvenated youth will be maimed and killed in the battles before them.

Of course one knows that military discipline does not change the heart of a man, and that a furlough of two weeks may upset the value of months of discipline.

Military discipline is not a change of heart, nor is it a dispenser of brains; it operates merely from without.

Where we can secure first a sound head and a good heart, there is no finer result produced than that manifested by thorough military training.

We know of nothing more fascinating than the clear brain and clean heart clothed in a khaki suit, walking upright among men.

One wonders if he belongs to the same race as the dull-eyed, foul-mouthed loafer who frequents the haunts of the very rich and the very poor.

At this time and place I want to make a plea for more discipline in the Church.

Our canons are almost funny. About one-fourth of them is taken up with the trial of a Bishop or a Priest.

I have been in the ministry nearly thirty years, and I have never known of a single Bishop being on trial, and only about four Priests.

But I want to plead for the discipline of the communicant, not by way of punishment, but by way of making him a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

I am tremendously impressed with two things in our spiritual equipment as a Church militant—first we have one of the best systems that was ever conceived, and secondly that it is so little used.

Now if you are given a fine cantonment, splendidly equipped and about a million soldiers to train, the vital thing is not how to discipline an unworthy officer, but rather how to discipline the worthy soldier—how to make a man of him.

And this, I fancy, must be done from the very moment of his enlistment. As soon as he strikes the cantonment he ought to feel the incentive to tighten up and straighten up. The atmosphere of the cantonment should be clean cut and not slovenly.

Now I realize how difficult it is to overcome long continued bad habits, and the Church has allowed discipline to wait on flatterers until we have Christians who whine instead of fight, and who criticize their officers instead of obeying them.

No Bolsheviki ever ran a more riotous muck through Petrograd than some of our constituents in parishes and missions have through ecclesiastical discipline. Many a Priest of the Church, of good character and fair ability, has been stabbed in the back, like the Russian colonels by lawless soldiers, who ought to have supported him.

I know of parishes and missions to which I would hesitate to send a Priest unless I knew that he was perfectly able to take care of himself in a rough-and-tumble fight for his character.

And there is no power that seemingly stops the slaughter of the innocents (of two years old and under) who successively are the victims of the caprice of a lawless mob.

But where should discipline begin? Surely with the raw recruit—not with the superior officer.

What this Church needs is a strong definition of the word "communicant," a definition that shall have behind it the power of the Church, undismayed by timid counsels as to the injury it will do to some spineless, lifeless veteran who might pull up and leave the camp because he has never come under discipline all of his life long.

Any teacher who goes in to restore discipline to a disordered school has first of all to reckon with those who have been most prominent in despising discipline in the past.

It would seem as though we would save much weariness and increase efficiency if we were not afraid to define a communicant in good standing and to rigidly enforce, for the good of their souls, the discipline of the Church—let come what may.

There seem to be three distinct elements in the definition of a communicant of the Church.

1st. He must have been regularly enlisted.

There are clergy who are so anxious to increase their rolls that they will take recruits on any terms. It is a mistake. The Church has set forth its rules for admission to the camp. An officer who disregards those rules is a poor officer, although he may be a good fellow.

A communicant is one who has come into the Church through the door of Baptism and Confirmation, and not in some other way.

There can be no discipline where favored soldiers claim exemption from reasonable rules.

2nd. He must communicate.

One would think such a statement unnecessary. Manifestly, a communicant is one who communicates. And if he is not willing to take this responsibility in what sense is he a communicant? A confirmed person who allows a year to pass without communicating, except under very unusual circumstances, can scarcely be called a communicant.

Well, what are we going to do with him?

What would you do with a soldier who refused to drill?

Put him in the guard-house!

What are you going to do with a communicant who deliberately violates his confirmation vow? Coddle him? If you do, he is lost, and you are none the winner.

It is your bounden duty to notify him that he is no longer within the communion of the Church, but that he has gone out into the night of unbelief. Neither is he entitled to the rites of a baptized person.

Yet it is hard, but you see, so is discipline. That is why they add the adjective "military" in front of it.

This Episcopal Church is simply cluttered up with good-for-nothing soldiers, who do not do the first duty to which they are sworn, and that is to "show forth the Lord's death till He comes."

3rd. He must serve.

Somewhere, somehow, every soldier has a duty assigned that he should perform.

For one soldier habitually to slack that duty is to ruin him and put a heavier burden on the rest.

A communicant who has a regular income, is not a dependant nor a pauper, and who refuses to contribute regularly to the Church's support is not a communicant in good standing.

Who is to do all this?

I take it that it is the duty of the commanding officer.

It is not a pleasant duty, but it seems to me that the disciplinary duties of the Church belong to the Right Reverend Fathers in God, and that it is one of the few inalienable rights that belongs to a Bishop of the Church to enforce the discipline of his particular camp, and that the time has come when Bishops should exercise the rights of administering discipline not merely over the officers but over the privates in the Lord's army as well.

We need a revival of discipline within the Church which will in... its morale, if not its girth.

An Easter Pageant

THE POWER OF THE RESURRECTION.

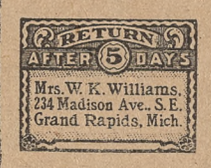
The pageant, "The Power of the Resurrection", written by the Rev. C. L. Bates, Rector of Zion Church, Rome, N. Y., presented in the parish church on the Sunday after Easter, in the afternoon, was by special request repeated on the following Sunday, under the direction of Mrs. Bates. A local paper says: "The Rev. C. L. Bates has done a valuable work with his pen, in giving to the Church a series of pageants, in verse, sacred song and the spectacular, of the several important events in the Christian year. The Easter Mystery Play is the third in this series of pageants to be given in Zion Church. While the Easter story has been one of great joy to Christain people for the past twenty centuries, undoubtedly this novel, but none the less reverent, presentation to a large congregation in pageant form, carried a deepening appreciation of the power of the resurrection."

Compensation

O Lord of this great Easter Day,
The end of all Thy weary way:
O Monarch, now enthroned in state,
Does all this triumph compensate?

By foes abhorred—by friends betrayed—
The heavy cross upon Thee laid:
O Lord, for all the scorn and hate
Do loud hosannas compensate?

Nailed to the cross—Thy hands all torn—
Upon Thy bleeding brow the thorn;
Thy fevered thirst, unquenched—so great—
Do living waters compensate?



The jeering crowd with bated breath
Awaits to mock the cry of death;
O Christ, condemned to such a fate,
Do palms of victory compensate?

When lies our way through dark despair,
When bowed beneath the cross we bear,
Great risen Lord, at Heaven's gate,
Does crown of glory compensate?

I heard a voice from Heaven say,
"God shall wipe all your tears away.
If earthly life ye consecrate
Eternal peace will compensate."

—Marianna Hyde.

For every evil that Satan has been able to introduce into the world, Christ has set up a corresponding good. Over against the confusion of tongues at Babel, through which God visited His punishment upon Satan-inspired pride and presumption, Christ sets up Pentecost, where every man heard "in his own tongue the wonderful works of God." It is gloriously true that where sin abounded, grace did much more abound.

BISHOP OF ONTARIO PREACHES STRONG SERMON AT OGDENSBURG, NEW YORK

A great congregation attended a patriotic and intercessory service held at St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, N. Y., Rev. D. C. White, Rector, on Sunday, April 7th, to commemorate the first anniversary of America's entrance into the war. In the congregation were the mayor and city officials, Company D, New York Guard, Grand Army Post, Daughters of the American Revolution, National League for Women's Service, and families of men and women serving their country. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Edward John Bidwell, Bishop of Ontario, Canada, preached the sermon, which was favorably commented upon editorially by the daily papers. The Bishop said in part:

"There is one thing that stands out beyond all others, and is recognized by all. There stands out in great significance the fact that a year ago this great country of which you are citizens saw in the clearest possible way that all that you held most sacred and precious was at stake. There was on your part no thought of territorial gain, or any of those reasons which from time to time have impelled countries to enter into conflict with one another. America came into the conflict practically as one man, and came into it to the end."

Acknowledging the actual assistance which the participation of the United States gave to the nations at war with the Central Powers, the Bishop continued:

"But there was something far more valuable to us just then. It was the tremendous moral and spiritual significance of it. It was not a question of coming to the rescue of a friendly race; it was not a question only of patriotism. It was something higher, better than either of those things. It was this. We saw from your action that we had been right all the time.

"It gave us a tremendous impetus; it strengthened and it heartened us that this nation which had always held up before it the highest ideals should throw all its power into the conflict. That was the great significance of it. It was another overwhelming blow struck at the damnable policy of those who would banish from the world the doctrine of 'good will toward men' of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"A prominent speaker the other day was asked what were the forces contending in this conflict, and he replied 'God on the one side and Odin on the other.' He spoke a great truth. I think it is truly a war in which God is on the side of justice, righteousness and human brotherhood, on the side of the weak against the strong.

"It is my belief that this is the testing time for the great English speaking race of which we are members. We often used to think somewhat lightly before this great time of trial of the great future there was before this continent. May it not be that in the inscrutable wisdom of the Almighty this is our testing day and your testing day? That we should purge ourselves clean of the dross and make of ourselves the true metal, that we should rid ourselves of those national, social and other shortcomings which were perhaps rendering us unfit for the destiny that God held out for us?

"And if we can hold on to the end, as please God we shall, may it not be a tremendous place in the future of the world?

"We need to teach ourselves to pray to our dear Father in Heaven. We did not want to drink this cup, we who were planning careers for our dear boys. And now it is taken all out of our hands, and we see them going forward (we would not have it otherwise) along the path of duty. I say it was the last thing we wished to have this cup put to our lips, but it has been put to our lips and yours, and the test is the drinking of it. Pray God that we may make good, by all that we do, by all that we are; that we may make good because we know our cause to be God's cause; that we may never forget that the things of the spirit are involved in this conflict, things which make men above the animals, which make men able to stand looking upward toward the light; that those things are at stake now and that we are prepared to go on to the very end even to greater sacrifices, that the cause of God may win.

"Rightly do we sing 'With the Cross of Jesus going on before.' Let it be worth winning. This great thing will demand every sacrifice; but if we are prepared to tread the way of the cross, I can sum it up in no better terms, the victory is certain.

"We are not boasting that God is on our side—not 'Me and God.' We, in our way, are trying simply to be on God's side. Let that be our inspiration, the standard under which we fight; and this, as John said, will be the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Outgrown Viewpoint of Past Gives Way to Larger Outlook

The Rev. Percy Trafford Olton, Rector of Christ Church, Towanda, Penn., makes the following contribution to the Philadelphia Ledger:

That there will be an upheaval in the moral and spiritual life of man in proportion to the magnitude of the present world conflict there can be no room for doubt. No one can prophesy exactly the nature or extent of those changes, but certain results are even now evident, and from these others may be confidently expected. Perhaps the fundamental change, the one which will determine all the rest, will be found in man's attitude toward the past. Life will be looked at from a new viewpoint.

Before this war, the influence of the past was direct and appreciable. It made our laws, molded our opinions, fixed the limits of conduct and gave us our moral standards. To a great degree, we have lived in and by the past. The power of precedent has been undisputed; what has been has shaped what is to be. This reverence for and dependence upon the past has been the solid foundation upon which our social structure has been built; we have ascribed a certain infallibility to its judgments; by deifying the truth wrought out by the living experience of men, we have hoped to gain the stability necessary for civilization. Man has been looking at life from the viewpoint of the past.

But there has been a growing discontent with this attitude toward life, dating from the era of our modern discoveries and inventions.

For the first time the inadequacy of the past to interpret the future was fully understood; the world was emerging into an altogether new and incomparably fuller life. Men were driven to look within themselves for guidance and certainty, and were forced to new conclusions, because there was nothing in the knowledge of the past that covered the experiences of the present.

THE BOOK AGENTS

The Parson is the special prey of book agents. Not only is the Parson easily reached, as a rule, but he generally has a weakness for books. In consequence, if he is not as firm as Gibraltar, he is liable to collect a library of "flivers," or books turned out by weight, not of content but of paper. But the book agent knows his business, or he would starve, and the Parson must be on his guard. The crisis is at the moment when the agent, holding out a fountain pen, and pointing to an order blank already on your desk, asks, as if the matter were settled, "Which style of binding do you prefer?" Watch your step then. Seize not that pen for it will be mightier than a sword to pierce your purse. If you can summon a sneeze at that point, and flee to close a window or a door, the spell is broken. Have a care!

I have not forgotten the first visitation of the book agent who, in my youth, ascended upon me in my upper room. He was suave, gracious, convincing; I was favored and flattered but flabbergasted. The wine of his words went to my head, but my purse went drier than usual in contrast to the artfully concealed sum that was finally revealed as the indemnity for my release. For I had made the fatal mistake of agreeing with him that never, since the canonical books of the Bible were set forth with authority had such a compilation as that of which I saw the remnant in a prospectus, been offered to a long waiting world. I did not have the heart to make him unhappy in his job. He was not a seller of printed matter—Heaven forbid—nor a mere agent (how he spurned the word), but an apostle, a missionary, sent to convert the intelligence of men to the vast truths, the magic satisfactions, of (here insert the name of the set). Money for such books? Perish the thought! No money, but a mere matter of chicken-feed the first month, just to show that I was in earnest, and the glowing delight of expressing my appreciation of the masterly work, by a small check each month for a time. A limit was set to the number of months involved, so it appeared from his eloquence, not to satisfy the publisher but merely that under the spell of the work I might send a check monthly to the end of my days. So I fell. The books came, the money went. Did I read them? Why ask? Do you?

Youth fell from my shoulders and my habits changed. They come, the agents, as of yore. Suave, friendly, confidential and final in their judgments. They have the same formula, "This is not a book selling proposition, but an educational movement." "A few of the very most prominent and influential citizens are to be approached first, and you are among them." "You do not need to be told of the value of this work, because you know it all beforehand." Then to business. I never realized before that I was a cripple without crutches, a mechanic without tools, living a partial life. It made me sad. So many facts and fancies, so many pictures and poems that I needed in my work were eluding me. Should my wife, busy with a pan of biscuits in the kitchen, suddenly call to me for the date of the reign of Tiglath Pileser, king (at one time, not now) of Assyria, what woe would fall upon me! I should have to drop my work and hasten to the public library and become subservient to Carnegie, unless I could proudly reach out my hand and in one moment shout out the desired fact! Or if I was under my car looking for some lesion in its anatomy, how was I to beguile a toilsome hour with reciting proper poetry, unless in less laborious moments I had saturated my mind with selections from the best literature as set forth in this world-beating volume. (One convincing slap upon the volume to conclude the argument.)

But today it avails him nothing. He leaves me, a friend, but he is the one who is flabbergasted.

How do I manage it? I learned the trick in Italy. When importuned by a vendor of cheap jewelry or other trinkets, it was my custom to pull a pencil from my pocket and try to sell it to him at a good round sum. By imitating his selling method, but with a smile, I found that he always retreated in confusion.

So with the agent. Hint to him that you have some volumes on your shelves that you would like to part with, and if he will buy your books you will buy his. He will soon be inquiring where the nearest Methodist minister lives.

A word of advice to the laity. If you are tempted to buy a set of books, try this experiment. Withhold your decision to invest a large sum and go to your bookseller. Buy one book of the nature of the set you are tempted to purchase wholesale. If it is a library of literature that tempts you, invest sixty cents in "The Mill on the Floss" or in "David Copperfield" or in Tennyson's Poems. Note well if you read that one book. If so, you may safely invest more in similar works. But you at the same time will learn how to purchase books. Better a small diversified, well selected library, than ten feet of high sounding titles.

"Great Good Shepherd" Leads Us All

Chaplain Murray Dewart of the 101st (Mass.) Regiment, Field Artillery, the first American regiment to arrive at the front, writing from France, states that "From what I read over here, it seems that all America is awake with a new spirit of idealism. We are just beginning to see what a stupendously ghastly thing this war is, but, with all its cost of horrors we also are beginning to see that out of it may come a purified and ennobled America. It may mean a world with less selfishness, with a finer vision of life's great values, and with an increased sense of responsibility before God. Certainly this is what we ought to be having drubbed into us, and it seems to me that all over the world there are evidences that the race is learning its lesson.

"It is inconceivable that ever again our generation will become almost wholly engrossed with little, petty considerations of our own comfort and prosperity. God is making us think about bigger and finer things now. All over the world men and women are forgetting all about themselves today and are giving their all gladly. Never in the history of the race was there anything like the great spirit of idealism which today is sweeping us all along in its train. It is something tremendous to be alive at a time when mankind has touched its highest. The race never can sink back again to quite the old level. We can all go ahead more bravely and cheerfully as we begin to see what our sacrifices mean.

"With all the bitter cost before us—with all—it isn't just needless waste! Behind it all, we catch a glimpse of the Great Giver of all good things, who always is giving nothing but good, Who even, through the ghastly horrors of war, is once more showing Himself the Great Good Shepherd, leading all humankind into pastures more green. As individuals, or as a race, if we can get that realization deep in our souls, is there any price too big to pay for it?"

Must Be Able To Render Good Account After War

In speaking of the war work of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, before the Massachusetts Episcopalian Club, Dean Rousmaniere said:

"We have to look forward, gentlemen, beyond the war. We must finish it, provided we finish it with victory. (Applause.) It must never again be possible that the freedoms of the people shall be attacked as they were attacked by the Central Powers. But we must look beyond that victory, and all war work must have that vision before it. What we have been [illegible] has bee

[illegible] ould be 50 feet, there would be [illegible] ected under this plan 150 struc- [illegible] res, costing at least $200,000 each, [illegible] $30,000,000 for the whole project, [illegible] cording to the views of real estate [illegible] perts.

[illegible] On most of the lots there are old [illegible] o and three-story brick dwellings. [illegible] Hudson street, however, one block [illegible] st of Varick Street, there are mod- [illegible] h fireproof buildings, occupied by [illegible] mmercial concerns. All these com- [illegible] rcial structures are in the boun- [illegible] ies of the section which the Trin- [illegible] Church Corporation proposes to [illegible] p change into a vast and important [illegible] ce building area of the city.

[illegible] Being under a single ownership of [illegible] nity Corporation, such a plan as [illegible] posed can be effectively carried [illegible]. The corporation offers to con- [illegible] uct the needed buildings and then [illegible] se the structures to tenants. Ow- [illegible] to the present state of the mort- [illegible] e market, individuals and con- [illegible] ns desirous of having buildings [illegible] cted for their own use, or as an [illegible] estment, must depend wholly or in [illegible] e part on their own financial re- [illegible] rces.

[illegible]ldiers in Trenches Welcome Bishop Israel

[illegible] Mr. F. S. Allis of Erie, Pa., recently [illegible] ceived a letter from his son, C. F. [illegible] lis, a graduate of Amherst College, [illegible] ho is now in France, containing the [illegible] llowing account of a visit made to [illegible] e trenches by the Bishop of Erie, [illegible] e Rt. Rev. Dr. Israel:

"Another wonderful thing has hap- [illegible] ened to the camp. Bishop Israel of [illegible] rie, Pa., has been here. You cannot [illegible] magine what a great impression the visit made on the men. Wherever he went, he was soon surrounded by a group of soldiers, eager to shake hands with him and talk to him of their personal experiences and religious beliefs. To me, the sight of this kindly man, who had come to France to be with the soldiers, and even go to the trenches if necessary, gave the effect of the presence of a saint coming to visit the earth. One of the most impressive times was the communion service which he held the Sunday he was here in our barracks."

Passing Souls

A Hymn for War-time, to be sung Kneeling

(This hymn has been adopted for use in his majesty's chapels royal. All profits on the sale of it will be devoted to war charities.)

For the passing souls we pray,
Saviour, meet them on their way;
Let their trust lay hold on Thee,
Ere they touch eternity.

Holy counsels long forgot,
Breathe again 'mid shell and shot;
Through the mist of life's last pain
None shall look to Thee in vain.

To the hearts that know Thee, Lord,
Thou wilt speak through flood or sword:
Just beyond the cannons' roar,
Thou art on that further shore.

For the passing souls we pray,
Saviour, meet them on their way;
Thou wilt hear our yearning call,
Who hast loved and died for all.

Amen.

STATUETTE OF ST. JOSEPH FOUND IN BELGIUM RUINS

Placed in Niche in St. Mark's, Minneapolis, Minn.

There was placed in an appropriately carved niche at St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, Minn., on Easter Sunday, a simple little figure but nine inches in height, done in porcelain, that in itself represents one phase of the great tragedy that took place in Belgium when it was invaded in 1914, says St. Mark's Outlook.

The little figure represents St. Joseph, and is the gift of one of our honored citizens, into whose possession the statuette came early in 1915. We cannot do better than let him tell the story:

"Louveigne was a village in Belgium situated on high ground on the left bank of the Vesdre river, on the road to Dinant, not far from Liege, and it once had a population of some two thousand people.

"On August 7th, 1914, shortly after the beginning of the war, a detachment of German soldiers occupied the place, and on some flimsy pretext set it on fire, killing many of its inhabitants. One hundred and fifty houses were completely destroyed, and hardly any dwellings were left standing. The population took no part whatever in hostilities, and the attack upon them was entirely unprovoked.

"I visited Louveigne in March, 1915, being engaged in relief work in connection with the Commission for Relief in Belgium.

"We arrived in the village one Sunday morning, traveling by automobile. Accompanying us was a Belgian gentleman, a citizen of Liege. As we drove through the ruined village he explained to me the terrible circumstances attending its destruction.

"The place was entirely deserted, and nothing was to be seen but roofless houses and crumbling ruins. We stopped for a few minutes in the center of what had once been a pleasant, prosperous little town, quite solidly built up.

Before me were the ruins of the municipal school, and in a niche over the doorway still stood a little plaster figure of St. Joseph, apparently intact in the midst of all this desolation. I entered the ruins and found a solid mass of melted material, melted together into a sort of cement, composed of bricks and mortar and bits of woodwork and furniture, all welded together by the intense heat to which it had been subjected.

"I picked up a bit of fuse or combustible material lying in the debris. and found that it still smelled of kerosene or petrol, although the place had been destroyed seven months before.

"As I rejoined my friends in the automobile, I remarked on the singular preservation of the little figure in the midst of all the desolation surrounding it. It seemed almost miraculous that such a delicate thing should have survived the terrors of that awful day, and I commented on the faithfulness of the little guardian of the place, still standing at his post of duty over the entrance to the school.

The gentleman from Liege asked me if I would not like to take it away with me as a souvenir of my visit. I told him that, while I would value it greatly, I could not possibly consent to taking away from that desolated and ruined village the one thing that remaiend intact; that when the people of Louveigne returned to their homes they would probably regard their little St. Joseph with veneration, as being almost the evidence of a miracle.

"He replied that he did not think the people would ever rebuild this place; many of them were dead, and the remainder were scattered in other villages, which had not suffered so greatly from the hands of the invaders, where they had been taken in and cared for by their sympathetic friends. Nevertheless, I declined to accept the gift, and we drove on out of the melancholy ruins of this once prosperous and happy town, seeing not a soul, not even a stray cat or dog, within its limits.

"Several days afterward, when I had returned to Brussels, a package came to the headquarters of the Commission for Relief in Belgium addressed to me. Upon opening it, I found a box, inside of which was the little image of St. Joseph, presented, so the inscription said, by the 'Commune of Louveigne'.

"Upon taking the little figure out of its wrappings, it fell into many pieces, as if, having fulfilled its mission, it did not care to exist any longer; but I was not willing that it should thus perish, so I carefully wrapped each piece in cotton and placed them together in the box.

"It was, of course, forbidden by the German authorities to carry any souvenirs out of Belgium, and I did not know how I could manage to take St. Joseph away with me. I therefore consulted Mr. Hugh Gibson, secretary of the American legation, who said he thought he could get it through to me, and asked me to leave the matter to him. I did so, confiding St. Joseph to his care.

"I returned to Holland, after my mission in Belgium was finished. Some time afterward the package containing the little figure reached me. It had been forwarded by Mr. Gibson from Brussels to Dr. Van Dyke, the American minister in Holland, and by him sent to me in Potterdam.

"I brought St. Joseph home with me to America, and when I arrived in Minneapolis had all the pieces glued together. Fortunately, none were missing, but upon close examination you will see that it was broken and cracked in many places. You will also note that it bears the marks of smoke and the stains of the combustible material used in destroying the building in which it stood. These marks testify to the terrible experience through which St. Joseph passed.

"In return for the gift of this souvenir, I sent a special contribution to the former inhabitants of Louveigne, through the Commission for Relief in Belgium, which was gratefully accepted.

"Since my return in 1915, St. Joseph has occupied a place in my library, but I have never felt that he should stand elsewhere than in a church, and I am most gratified that St. Mark's has given him a permanent and appropriate place near the entrance to its own school. Here he may resume the guardianship of children to which he devoted himself in far distant Belgium, and I devoutly hope that his existence henceforth will serve to remind those who see him of the heroic people who have undergone such terrible and unmerited misfortunes, and have borne all their misfortunes with such high courage and splendid fortitude."

Churches in Campaign for Liberty Loan of St. Andrew's, in his annual sermon before the Loyal Legion of New York, at the Church of the Incarnation, said that the time had now arrived when "we shall put our hands in our pockets only to turn them inside out, and give all we have, whether we can afford it or not.

"A wake-up America is better than a washed-out America," he said. "It is time for ministers to stop talking soft things and preaching pussyfoot peace when there is no peace of any kind that ought to be tolerated. The world will not have peace until it prays, and pays, and pushes."

"The Liberty Loan," said Bishop Lawrence, in his appeal to the members of his Church, "makes its demand on every member of Christ's Church. The strength, the lives and the victories of our boys and men depend directly upon their munitions, barracks, hospitals, ships and supplies, and these depend directly upon your economies and sacrifices in subscribing to the Liberty Loan."

Dr. Jowett Bids Farewell to His Congregation Here

"I go back to Great Britain with a knowledge of Americans more intimate than any other public man over there can claim. I feel that I shall be in a certain sense the ambassador of the hearts of the American people."

The still, tense audience that packed the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church to hear the farewell sermon of their pastor, Dr. John Henry Jowett, broke into a storm of applause at this naming of the affection between them and the man who has been their spiritual leader for seven years. It was an emotional demonstration such as rarely occurs at a Church service, and after the divine pronounced the last words of his ministry, a wet-eyed congregation went out to join the overflow of 500 people on the sidewalk, who had waited throughout the entire service for one more glimpse of the preacher.

"I am returning immediately to my homeland," said Dr. Jowett, in his final message to his people, "on the clear call of duty. No soldier has ever heard the bugle call more insistently than I hear the summons that comes to me. I am too old to fight, but my countrymen have done me the signal honor to say that I can help sustain their spirit during this awful conflict —that I can bring them cheer. With great diffidence, therefore, about my own powers, I go to them to do my best. For, unless the spiritual mood is kept at its highest pitch, unless the priceless wells of determination and enthusiasm are kept open, all the munitions in the world will not secure triumph.

"I return to a country that is bleeding—bleeding more than you know. Half of my congregation will be bereaved. The hearts of England are carrying a great and hungry pain, and I have an eager yearning to be with them and share their suffering. But you must not think that England is mourning, for the sorrow of England has been hallowed by the conflict. My countrymen bear their sacrifices with a kind of holy pride.

"My country is just now facing a gloomy and serious state. But she is heartened immeasurably by the alliance of this country. One thing you American people can carry high in your hearts—your moral purpose in this war cannot be questioned. I return rejoicing in the fellowship of our country with you, born of that noble purpose."

A Star for Bishop Brent

On a recent Sunday a Service Flag, the gift of the Junior Guild of St. Michael's Church, Oakfield, N. Y., was dedicated by the Rector. The first star was for the Bishop of the diocese, who has been attached to Gen. Pershing's staff, with the rank of captain general. To him the Rector has addressed the following letter:

"To the Rt. Rev. Charles Henry Brent, D. D., Bishop of Western New York:

My Dear Bishop:—On the second Sunday after Easter a Service Flag was dedicated in St. Michael's Church to the glory of God, and in honor of parishioners who have entered the service of their country.

"I trust you will not think us presumptuous when I say that the first star is for our Bishop. Recognizing you as the chief pastor of all the parishes in the diocese, we feel that you belong to St. Michael's the same as to all the others.

"So we have placed a star for you upon our banner. With the names of our brothers who are fighting our battles, we have enrolled yours, and we have laid the list upon the altar, there to remain until God, if it be His gracious will so to do, shall give us the victory.

"At every service our prayers shall rise for His blessing upon you, upon our brothers, and upon all who in this war are struggling for the right.

"Most sincerely yours in Christ,

"CURTIS CAILOS GOVE."

Christ Church, Eau Claire, Wis., has recently raised $6,000, freeing the Parish from all indebtedness. The estimated value of the church building and parish house is $90,000.

"Never ask that insipid question, 'How did you like the sermon?' says The Outlook. "Such a question injures the one who asks it, and debauches the person who answers. It trains men to measure sermons by false standards, and to seek for entertainment rather than for truth."

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

HOW WE GOT OUR SUMMER

An Indian Legend

It is said that once, long ago, we had no summer. The Indian children had no grain or vegetables to eat, just the flesh of animals. This disturbed the animals very much, so they held a council to see what could be done.

"The Indians always seek to do us harm," they said, "they hunt us and chase us and trap us. We have no place in the forests any more."

So it was agreed that they would go to the Indians and complain. If that did not change things, they would threaten to make war against them.

When the animals talked to them, all the answer they got was: "We have to kill you so that we can have food."

The bear spoke up and said: "I don't think that is a reason at all. Can't you eat other food? Why should you eat us?"

"Well, yes, we could eat other food. We could live on fruit and corn and nuts, but these things can't grow when we have no summer. Bring back the sun, bring down the warmth from the land beyond the sky. Then you need never fear us; we will hunt you no more."

"The only thing we can do is to try," said the big buffalo.

Then the buffalo tried to jump up to the sky. But he made very poor work of it, for he was big and clumsy and could not jump very high.

Then the bird tried, and the lynx. While they did much better than the buffalo, they did not succeed.

The wolf said: "Let me try," and he struck the sky so hard that he made a big hole in it.

"Now," said an Indian chief, "I will climb up to the sky and bring down summer to our land again."

So one night he crept up to the sky and crept into the door the wolf had made. It was night, and the people of the land beyond the sky were fast asleep, and did not hear him for a long time. This land beyond the sky was a lovely land. There were flowers and trees and grass, and the air was soft and warm.

There were three great cages there, and in the cages were three beautiful birds. These birds were named Spring, Summer and Autumn. The Indian chief opened the cages and whispered: "Fly down to the land of the Red children." The birds flew out, but they made so much noise that it woke the people. "The birds, the birds," they cried, and tried to catch them. But too late.

Autumn had already reached the Indian land. Spring was nearly through the door the wolf had made. Only one feather of Spring remained in the hands of the people.

Then summer started to fly away through the open door. When she moved her wings the trees moved to and fro.

The people of the land beyond the sky called out: "Do not let Summer escape; she must not escape." They seized her by her feathers; she was half way through the door. The people held on with all their might. The bird pulled and the people pulled, and at last the body of Summer parted. One half went down to the home of the Indians. The other half the people put back in the cage. "Who has done this daring thing?" the people said. After searching for a long time they found the chief. But the chief ran away as fast as he could go. The people followed him. Out through the open door he went and down through the skies. The people were very angry and shot arrows after him. One arrow pierced him through and pinned him to the sky. And there he is to this day. But the Indians had now spring, summer and autumn. The summer is far too short, and when it goes the Indians say it is because half the summer bird is in the land beyond the sky.

The Indians look up to the sky and say: "Our brave chief is up there somewhere. He was a brave chief, for he climbed the heavens and sent down warmth to his people."

Memorial Parish House Dedicated

The beautiful new parish house known as the Emery Memorial of St. Philip's Church, Circleville, Ohio, was formally opened and dedicated on Thursday afternoon, April 4th, with appropriate services conducted by the Rev. Boyd Vincent, assisted by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Boyd Vincent, assisted by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Theodore Irving Reese, Coadjutor, and the Rector, the Rev. David McDonald, acting for the Church, and Prof. M. C. Warren, county superintendent of schools, representing the laity. The handsome Gothic structure, following closely the architecture of the church, has an auditorium which will seat 300 people comfortably, with a stage and proscenium, rest rooms, guild rooms, dining rooms, pantry and kitchen, boys' and girls' gymnasium, lavatories, etc. Mrs. Mary Muhlenberg Emery presented the building to the parish as a memorial to her parents, who were at one time residents of Circleville. The memorial cost $18,000, and Mrs. Emery not only paid everything and furnished the building, but also gave the trustees $10,000 as an endowment fund to maintain the expenses of the plant. Bishop Vincent, in his address, paid a deserved tribute to Mrs. Emery and complimented womankind in general for her progressive spirit and accomplishment in the face of all difficulties. Prof. Warren also gave an address, setting forth the purposes of the building. The exercises closed with the singing of "America" and the benediction by the Bishop. Among invited guests and out-of-town friends present were Mrs. Theodore Irving Reese, Columbus, and Mr. Chas. J. Livingood, who represented the donor. Bishop Vincent stated that "this is not the first memorial given by Mrs. Emery. She has given to Churches, memorials and gifts in cities from New York to Salt Lake City. Chief among these is the Parish house of Christ Church, Cincinnati, which cost a quarter of a million dollars. It was given in memory of her husband, Thomas Emery, who was a money maker. He amassed millions in the real estate business, and had no time to devote to anything else. He was a God-fearing man and thought a good deal of religion. He left his entire estate to his wife, in whose judgment he had the utmost confidence. Mrs. Emery, in spending his money, is carrying out the wishes of her husband, as in life he often spoke of the good of religion and his Church."

The Real Elements of Parish Strength

The Rev. Dr. Lacey, Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y., witnesses to the fact that parish strength is to be measured by spiritual influence rather than by tables of figures and amount of contributions. He says the real elements of strength are difficult to tabulate. The minister is a missionary representing his people in Christlike ministrations in the neighborhood. This is the justification of a paid ministry. The rector is on the ground ready to answer calls for service. Today I was sitting in my study when an entire stranger entered and said: "Can you come at once? My brother is dying." I closed down my desk and went with him, carrying the Church's ministry of consolation to a stricken home.

Some weeks ago a man sought me who had been a Sunday school boy here in 1879. He had drifted away from Church, but the world situation had roused him to serious questionings. He was about to enter on a position in Washington. He wanted counsel. I gave him a Testament with my blessing, and advised him to identify himself at once with a Church in the capital. Last month I received this letter from him:

March 10, 1918.

Dear Dr. Lacey:

Am very thankful for "Parish Notes". It made me feel good to hear from you. The little Testament has given me more comfort than anything I ever had. Have attended confirmation class, and Bishop Harding is to confirm me. I will always regret the years that have passed without the good things which have now come to me.

With best wishes, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

A series of patriotic services were held on Sunday evening at St. Stephen's Church, Portland, Me., the past few weeks, commemorative of the Allied nations engaged in the war. American night was observed first, followed by British, Belgian, French and Italian. The Rector, the Rev. George Colby DeMott, gave the addresses, and the music of the several nations was sung by the choir.

Confessing Christ

By the Late Bishop Thompson

Among the vast mass whose Christianity is learned from the average common pulpit, we find that it is considered the very purpose and end of "joining the Church", that people may profess themselves different from others; that not, indeed, until they are different—not publicans and sinners at all, but specially gifted Pharisees, and "not as other men are", are they prepared to "join the Church". For the "Church" is a community of holy people; of people who have been "changed" and "converted"; not of poor, struggling sinners, trying to work out their own salvation; and a man has no right to enter it until he is entitled to rank himself among the select circle of the favorites of heaven. Although the whole system on which this notion logically rests is dead and gone, it has left this and other detached fragments of doctrine in the common mind; and a man will find, if he will enquire, that the invitations of the Gospel convey no meaning to scores of people in the pews, because confessing Christ with them means confessing that they "have got religion", and are thus different from other people. They are pressed to come forward and take the vows of the Lord upon them, in baptism, or to renew them in confirmation, and they imagine all the time that they are invited to come and profess themselves to be better than other people—the possessors of a special and peculiar gift. Indeed, one will often be shocked to find that men and women who have heard the Gospel all their lives, still suppose that no man ought to come to baptism or confirmation who is not prepared to stand and make the Pharisee's "profession of religion"—"God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are".

Again, there are others, frequently, who want to do their duty; who wish to rank themselves on the side of Christ; who desire to enter on the labor of their lives, as He has taught it; and they are held back for years, and perhaps for all their lives, because they do not meet with that experience, or visitation, or call, which, as they suppose, is their necessary title to His favor.

Now, clearly, there is nothing of all this in the cases of baptism related in the New Testament. The qualifications there are repentance and faith. Every man who believes, and desires to live a new life, is urged to "arise and be baptized".

In baptism, a man professes nothing about himself. He comes as a poor, helpless sinner, with the same claims upon his Saviour that are possessed by every beggar—the claims of his own weakness and sinfulness. He stands before God, as all men must stand, in forma pauperis, in beggar's guise. The claim of every publican and every magdalen, of every poor, penitent sinner over the whole world, is his claim, the only claim that Christ can receive—"I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance".

He enters the Kingdom of God, then, not because he is a Christian already, and therefore entitled to come into that select circle, but because he wants to become a good Christian, and lead a true Christian life. He enters that kingdom because there are the helps and graces which he needs—because he finds the air and food to sustain his spiritual nature. The Church is, in his view, a school for the moral training of the helpless and ignorant. Still further, it is a hospital where sick souls are gathered to be healed. He finds care there, patient watchfulness and thoughtfulness there. He finds light and comfort and air and medicine there. He seeks admittance because he is ignorant and helpless, because he is deadly sick.

The Church of God is the crown and perfection of the Divine arrangement of this world as a school of probation. It completes and makes one the disciple of nature and the family and social life. It is made for imperfect, weak and struggling natures. It is fitted with counsel and comfort and help, with instruction and warning and ever-present aid, that man may do the work God demands at his hands. It is sad to think how this large, catholic and world-enduring work has been lost from the thought of thousands, and that, instead, they have gone on the narrow conception of the Church, as a small religious club, composed of a set of people who have had a special common experience, and have arrived at some speciar common theory about religion.

We here are speaking of the Catholic Church of the New Testament, that kingdom founded by Christ and His Apostles, which claims the allegiance of every soul in the whole world, and to enter which each man's title is the same, the common human nature; and its universal redemption, the universal fall, and the common salvation.

A man is naturalized into the Kingdom by baptism. He is born into it, and begins his life with infancy. Within it are provided all the helps needed to bring that spiritual life to perfection. The Holy Ghost, who descended and took possession of the Church, as His personal dwelling-place upon the day of Pentecost, remains the source and author of life and power to all sincere souls within it, till the end of time.

So Christianity, we need to tell men, is a life and a steady growth. It has its beginning, its progress, its completion. There are "babes in Christ". There are strong men in Him. There is food for each class—milk for one, strong meat for the other.

There is a steady round of worship, confession, prayer and praise. There is the ever-recurring Sacrament of the body and blood of the Lord. There are fasts and festivals, and all the circle of the year which is ruled by the Son of Righteousness, and which brings in due season to the soul every fact and doctrine of Christianity. There is the Word of God forever preached—in Lesson, in Psalm, in Gospel and Epistle. There is a perpetual setting forth upon the altar of the sacrifice of the death of Christ. There are warnings in danger and consolations in trouble. There is thanksgiving for the hour of joy, and sympathy for the hour of sadness. Human life, in all its varied experience, is provided for, and all are sanctified, and the soul, in all, looks and clings to God.

And these are called "means of grace", means, that is, by which spiritual help comes to a man, means by which the strengthening influences of the Holy Spirit are given to the soul. The graces are various, for life is various, and needs are various. The gifts are manifold, as are the forms of life in the natural world. But all are from the selfsame Spirit, who divides unto every man severally as He will.

So the man is placed in the midst of spiritual influences, brought into living contact with the eternal and changeless world which lies aroun him unseen. He is bound fast by eternal bands to God, and God to him. He grows under the sunlight and dew of heaven. Hls strength increases daily, as he struggles with the evil he must conquer. His heart is open now to God, and stands waiting and spread out for all good giftsf from His hand.

Weak himself, incapable of himself of doing anything, save destroying himself, he looks to be saved, and is saved only by grace through faith, as saith the Apostle. He believes God, and seeks God's help in God's way—grace where God gives it—that grace suffices for him, and, in God's strength, he conquers at last.

Christianity and the War

Recently I met one of those judicial persons who is ready to pronounce the dissolution of the starry firmament if the night happens to be cloudy: He said in terms of finality, as if pronouncing an eulogy, "The war is clear evidence that Christianity has failed."

Not trusting myself to speak, I wrote a reply. These are the words with which, no doubt, I failed to convince him of his mistaken judgment

"The claims of Christianity have been vindicated by the war.

Those who see or think they see the failure of Christianity because of a world wide war are blind. Has the force of gravitation failed because a man falls fom a six story building and is killed? His neighbors may gain some respect for gravitation from the man's fate.

Christianity has staked its all on two principles. Whatever may have been the failure of men or nations to heed those principles, the principles themselves are unshaken. They are:

1. The soul that sinneth, it shall die.

2 Whatsoever a man (or nation) sows, that shall he also reap.

Men have rejected the claims of religion, because religious systems have sometimes tried to set themselves up as the executive officers of these two laws, and to pronounce the death penalty on the soul, for some sins that were legislated into being by church councils. Or religious systems have been tempted to scold rather than to persuade, to condemn rather than to upbuild. But the principles stand.

Men have often resented these principles because their wishes have been contrary to them. They wish to sin and yet to live. They wish to sow in one fashion and to reap in another. They have held the churches responsible for these principles, and have thought that if they made no profession or allegiance to the churches they could escape these laws. Much as if a man would say, "I have never been to college nor do I think the college helps men in practical life. I have never studied those finespun college theories about gravitation. I do not believe in creeds of any sort. No gravitation for me. I am a broad minded man and have no use for such narrowness. I shall live according to my lights, and if I want to fall off a building occasionally it is no one's business but my own. If any college thinks it can impose gravitation on me, let it try. I am a liberal and not a hidebound. I shall fall off a building when I want to. Just to show you that I mean what I say I am going to defy the colleges and their creed about gravitation and fall off a building this afternoon."

The funeral was held on Thursday at 2 o'clock.

The two principles of Christianity are universal law. If a nation sins it dies. If it sows hatred, cupidity, lust for possession, superman idiocy, godlessness, it reaps in kind; it reaps WAR.

War is a grim teacher but an effective one. Religion after the war is to gain by the result of the teaching of war. These two principles will stand out in clearer light, underscored and emphasized.

Religion after the war will not be the spineless, creedless, indefinite force, that many have drifted into. Creeds are not what many suppose them to be, man's surmises put into paragraphs. Creeds are ultimate facts and laws stated in teachable forms. A religion without a creed, or a basis of fact, is unthinkable. Religion after the war will seek and apply first principles. Among them will be those two: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Whatsoever a man (or nation) sows, that shall he also reap."

We can only understand the sacrifices of life on the battlefield when we realize that a boy of twenty-one, dying for humanity, has spent in this world but a moment or two of his eternal experience, and has spent it gloriously. When we realize the dangers to youth in our land we can understand the statement of one father who said, "I would rather have my son go to Heaven in France than go to hell in America."

Religion after the war will carry a large charge of that high explosive which we call "the social conscience." It has been used too mildly. It has prompted us to kind deeds, to charity, to social effort. All very proper. But the religious forces must and will assemble for a battle against every form of social menace. We shall no longer tolerate that individual selfishness, which under the guise of liberty, would wreck the social ship because one person or group wishes to gratify some personal ambition or appetite.

Religion after the war will be the first line trenches of civilization.

An Easter Sermon

By the Rev. George C. Foley, S. T. D.

"Your heart shall live forever."
—Psalm 22:26.

The loss of friends and relatives makes all the bitterness of death; our own call to die has not a fraction of its sting. It is the "vanished hand," the "voice that is still," that makes the anguished spirit cry out. "Not all the preaching since Adam has made death other than death." Consequently, the heart of sorrow asks for some assurance of eternal life, not simply to satisfy its own longings for existence, but because the separation becomes endurable if it is not felt to be final. The "communion in spirit," which the poet values so lightly, is but a poor substitute for the conviction that "death knits as well as parts."

This longing is an instinct of the heart, and it persists despite the confusions of the mind. "Believing where we cannot prove," we hold on to the idea that the dead are alive in God, and "we shall know them when we meet." As Dr. Martineau puts it: "We do not believe immortality because we have proved it, but we forever try to prove it because we believe it." So the resurrection of Christ responds to the necessities of love, and says with an unequalled emphasis and power: "Your heart shall live forever."

For love demands eternity. Says Mr. Browning: "Love's first demand is that love shall endure eternally." The heart can never acquiesce in the few short years allotted to man upon the earth. It protests against the futility and unmeaningness of life to the individual, if "death ends all." It says: "This first life claims a second; else I count its good no gain." But if the heart thus revolts at the prospect of personal extinction, still more strongly does it rebel against the utter loss of those it loves. It aches with the desire to see them again.

"For I shall feel the sting of ceaseless pain
If there I meet thy gentle presence not,
Nor hear the voice I love, nor read again
In Thy serenest eyes the tender thought."

This is the imperious demand of affection. It does not spend itself in the mere pathos of ministry during the brief space of time. It asks for eternity, in which to fulfil itself and satisfy its longings. We may perhaps content ourselves with what this world can give us, but we cannot quietly submit to the annihilation of those wno are dear to us. When Charles Kingsley was asked the secret of his sympathy, he paused a moment and then answered, "I had a friend." And so, it is not any sense of personal value or disgust at one's own sinking into nothingness, but it is the feeling of affection that has constantly interrogated "the shadow that keeps the keys of all the creeds" and insisted that it shall disclose to us the reality that lies "behind the veil." We have most of us wondered at the premature removal of one who seemed well fitted to do good service to mankind. We have perhaps pondered over his picture the face so vital and eager and earnest, telling of intellectual vigor and spiritual force and sympathy with the good and true. And we have felt that all that energy and capacity could not have been swallowed in an utterly meaningless destruction. We have felt that what was worth loving was worth preserving, that the heart which loved us in return ought to live forever. What makes "In Memoriam" so great is the note that throbs through every verse—that love demands eternity, and will take no less from its Maker than the eternal privilege of loving. And this was the gladness of Easter. The love which had created the disciples' desolation was right in its claims, and Jesus recognized it by giving Himself back to them to be loved forever.

But love not only desires immortality; it guarantees it. Love is of God, and cannot die with death. The human love is "only a little part of a great Divine love;" and the lower endures in the higher, which caused it and embraces it and lifts it to its own eternity. God's love is not brief and casual. It is not frustrated by the petty hindrances of time. And the earthly affection will surmount the barrier of a temporary separation, and last on through that eternal life whose beginning and whose ending is love.

And so, "love can never lose its own." Thackeray asked: "If we still love those we lose, can we altogether lose those we love?" The life to come is not another life, but the continuation of this; and what were this life without affection and friendship? It was the love of Arthur Hallam that carried Tennyson through all the darkness of the unbelief of his time to that inextinguishable hope expressed in his great poem. No one can read Robert Browning without perceiving that to him love was the key to unlock all the mysteries. It was the noblest name for the nature of God, and it was God's noblest gift to man. It was more than power, and more than knowledge. We cannot by searching find out God, but "love gains Him at first leap." The mind is perplexed before the enigmas of life; but love interprets the puzzle that intellect fails to unravel. What splendid Christian affirmations were his! "No work begun shall ever pause for earth." "Other heights in other lives, God willing." "The best is yet to be." "This earth's no goal, but starting point of man."

It is the instinctive conviction of every one at those moments when he is most deeply human, and therefore most near the Divine—a conviction undoubtedly inspired by Him who is Love itself. And so Mr. Emerson says, in his beautiful Threnody over his lost son:

"What is excellent,
As God lives, is permanent;
Hearts are dust, hearts' loves remain;
Heart's love will meet thee again."

Madame de Stael sums it up thus:

Bethlehem Notes

Calvary Church, Wilkes-Barre offers its parish house as headquarters for all kinds of war work, undergoes heavy expense in the overhauling of its entire church heating system, and is pushing the campaign for WITNESS subscriptions.

The Church school of St. Peter's, Hazelton, beat their best record by giving $211 this Easter for missions.

The Rector, the Rev. A. E. Clattenburg, preached on the subject, "The Liberty Bonds of Nation and of Christ", on the anniversary of the United States entering the war.

Forty of the soldiers in the ambulance camp at Allentown made their communions at the Church of the Mediator on Easter Day, and were entertained at breakfast following. Since the establishment of the ambulance camp in June of last year five privates and one commissioned officer have been baptized and fifteen soldiers confirmed.

Work has been started on renovating the rectory of St. John's Memorial Church, Ashland. The interior has been re-planned, and is to be done so that the exterior will be as it is at present, but done in stucco and exposed timbers. The work is to be done as prices and labor conditions allow. The Rector, the Rev. R. F. Kline, is superintending the carrying out of the plans.

On Easter Day a Service Flag with eight stars was blessed.

The Rector of St. Mary's, Reading, the Rev. Brayton Byron, has resigned, and leaves for Detroit, Michigan, on the first of May. His address will be 17 E. Montcalm Street, Detroit, Michigan. Mr. Byron has been in the Diocese of Bethlehem four and a half years, and says that the leaving of many friends is difficult work.

Word comes from Trinity Church, Pottsville, of services well attended during Holy Week. On Easter Day between six and seven hundred made their communions, and the offering was nearly $1,500, to be used for current expenses and missions. The Church school gave more than $500 for missions.

Archdeacon Durell knows more about fire engines than most of the clergy. The people of East Mauch Chunk appointed one of a committee of five to raise money and purchase new equipment for the local fire department. In six days the committee raised $5,500. All this accounts for the interest of the archdeacon in fire barns during a recent visit to preach at Christ Church, Reading.

Christ Church, Reading, has ten men in war service, St. Barnabas'

St. James' Church, Pittston, repairs a bursted furnace and improves the heating system, has the largest Easter offering of record, sends ten WITNESS subscriptions, and establishes a WITNESS paper route in charge of a Sunday school boy, with 20 subscribers to start; carries on a plan to have every child in the parish attend the morning church service regularly, with frequent sermons to children. Sunday school follows this service immediately, and the forty-five minute session is spent in instruction.

This then is one Easter message: "Your heart shall live forever." The bereavements of earth make death seem like a black night falling over the brightness of our day; but the resurrection of Christ assures us that it is rather the dawn of an eter-

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN CAMP SHERMAN, OHIO

The New Church Building and Religious Work in Camp Sherman

The Rev. Thomas W. Attrudge, who is in charge of the new Church erected at Camp Sherman, Ohio, for the use of the soldiers, sends to THE WITNESS, the following interesting account of his work:

The new building for the Camp Sherman Church was opened on the 20th of January. With the thermometer outside registering 10 below and the steam issuing from the damp green wood within, rolling down the glasses of those who were so unfortunate as to have to wear glasses, the first service was held with an attendance of 86. From that time on the Church has been mininstering to an average attendance of 150 men. Sometimes we go far over that mark and sometimes we are down to 100.

The church building comprises the following: A church building which seats 375. A choir which seats 35. A choir room adjacent to the church. Opening off the Church much like a transept, is a large social room, 36x45. At one end is a fire place. This room is for the men of the Camp. It is used principally by men who come to church on Sunday as well as by the men who have their drill ground right beside the church.

At the farther end of this room is a doorway leading into a five room flat where I live. So you see a rectory all in one. The tone of the place is that of a private home, not that of an institution.

Now, let me describe the three divisions in detail. The church is most churchly in every respect. The interior is stained a deep brown. The beaver board has not yet been colored, so that it gives at present, the appearance of English stucco. The pews are also stained with creosote to match the rest of the woodwork. Notice they are pews—not stools or chairs. They resemble pews in the finest churches, although they are made of Georgia pine and constructed right here on the ground. The walls of the chancel are hung with green cloth which gives a most furnished appearance to the whole church. Here is a list of the presents which we have received—these will give you an idea of the rich appearance of the place:

Processional cross and five flags (British, French, Belgian, Italian, American) from Trinity Church, Toledo. Altar linen, Altar books and rack, Lectern Bible, silk processional flag, Altar hangings, Christ Church, Cincinnati; rubber matting (35 yards), Altar linen, four collection plates, Church of Our Saviour, Akron; Altar linen and white hanging from St. Hilda's Guild of the Ohio State University, and the Mission of the Holy Spirit, Columbus. Eighteen hymnals with music, from St. John's, Worthington, and from St. James, Columbus.

This, as you see, tells how well we are equipped in the church. But there are many other things which would help. We have been promised a bell. (The boys are very keen about this, so that I hope it comes soon). We have to rent a makeshift piano for the church. And Chillicothe is not too generous, for we have to pay $10 per month. Surely there are plenty of people who would be glad to help the soldiers sing in church by furnishing us with either a good piano or an organ. We use the regular church prayerbook and hymnal in the services. We have a vested choir of soldiers. There are 26 registered in the choir, but we seldom have over 15 in line.

Now for the Service:

On Friday night the Jewish people use the church for their religious service. They will continue this until their building is erected.

On Sunday we have the following services: 8:00 a. m., Holy Communion, varying in attendance from 6 to 26. At ten o'clock we have our morning service. This is for all protestant men. We have preachers of all denominations. Last Sunday we had a Methodist. Next Sunday we have Dean Abbott. The attendance at this service runs regularly about 150. In the afternoon we have a Lutheran service under the direction of a Lutheran minister. About 75 men have been attending this service. Occasionally the United Presbyterians hold a service at 3:15. About 40 men have attended this service. At 7:30 we have our even song. The attendance at this varies from 20 to 65.

One thing we have to learn in camp life, is that you can never count on anything. The organist who assures you that he will be on hand at 9:30 next morning, finds that he has to wash dishes or guard the barracks or clean the horses, or some such thing. But we continue our service just the same, even though the minister has to announce the hymn and then play the piano. Our choir consists of about eight Methodists and ten Episcopalian, and the rest, other denominations. So you see we are trying to live up to the sign outside—Protestant Church for all men.

The social room is very comfortable. We have absolutely no form of music in this room—I greatly regret to state. The piano has to be on the floor of the chancel and it is not possible to carry it around at your discretion. A victrola and a real piano, where men who are able musicians could continue their ability, would be of real value. Men come and read the "up-to-date" magazines. A kind friend realized that men are just as desirous of keeping abreast of the times here as at home, and therefore has subscribed to The Literary Digest, Atlantic Monthly, Life and the Scientific American. I am deeply indebted to this friend of the soldiers. We also receive from the publishers, The National Geographic, another thoughtful gift, and the Churchman, the St. Andrews Cross, the Christian Science Monitor. Besides these we receive many magazines from persons who are interested in the work and who send regularly, such magazines as, Saturday Evening Post, Harpers, Scribners, Judge, and a few religious magazines of past date edition. The American Library Association has established a branch in our building, so that we have at least 100 of the very latest books on war and conditions in Europe. Here is the list of the first ten books before me: Practical Aeronautics, Method of Modern Tactics, Inside the German Empire, Under Fire, Germany and the Germans, Italy, France and Britain at War, The Oxford Book of Verse, The Spell of Flanders, Life of Napoleon, Europe since 1815. We also have writing paper for the men. As soon as a man comes into the church, he exclaims—"Oh, this is a real church." And when he comes into the social room, he says—"Why this is just like home." So you see the Camp Church is ministering in a constructive way to the welfare of the soldiers.

I visit the hospitals regularly. Just now I have to spend a great amount of time with the pneumonia patients. I hope that some day I shall have a small fund to use at my discretion to help the men in the hospital. Here are two cases that arose yesterday. "Has your mother or father been down?" "No, they are very poor people, and I do not want to be any more of a burden to them." "Well, if I gave you two return tickets, would they be able to come to see you?" "Oh, I should be so happy to send them to them. Of course they would come at once." To another lad—"Have you written home regularly to let them know how you are?" "Yes, until all my change ran out—and now I have to wait until I can get back to the barracks and sign up on the pay roll."

I am alone still, but I hope to have a lay worker come here this week.

A Service of Allied Nations

In St. Mark's Church, Seattle, Rev. E. V. Shayler, Rector, there was held a service, Sunday, April 14, of an unusual character. The congregation consisted of the consular staffs of all allied peoples in Seattle, the officers of the British military staff, in uniform, delegations of Armenians, Chinese, Japanese, Serbians, Russians, Greeks, Italians, a company of sailors from a French ship, officers and men of a Russian crew, and parishioners, until the church was crowded, even though chairs were placed in the aisles.

The procession was colorful and inspiring. The vested choir of St. Mark's, then, in order, the flag of every allied country, carried by an acolyte and followed by a priest, generally speaking, of that country.

Father Georgiopolis, of the Greek Orthodox Church; Father Vyacheslovov, of the Russian Serbian Orthodox Church; the Rev. Lin Yun Pate, Chinese Minister; the Rev. Giourji Shoji, Japanese; the Rev. Chaplain Hilton, of the British army; the Rev. George Adams, the Rev. H. H. Gowen, associate Rector of St. Mark's; the Rev. E. V. Shayler, Rector, and Bishop Keator, comprised the clerical members of the procession.

The Litany was sung and addresses made preparatory to the Intercession Service proper.

A cleric, facing the Altar, prayed for each country, while an acolyte stood immediately behind with the flag of that country. The Greek priest prayed in Greek. The Russian priest, with two Russian acolytes, sang part of the Russian Liturgy in Russian and Serbian. The Japanese and Chinese ministers prayed in their own tongues, and the remainder of the prayers were in English.

At the close of the prayers, the Stars and Stripes were lifted high, and ten allied flags grouped in a semicircle, facing the Altar. Standing " in the midst" of the Altar was Bishop Keator, Greek priest on the Epistle side, Russian priest on the Gospel side, and the Rector and associate, with other clergy, completing the circle. Then the choir and congregation, with organ and brass instruments accompanying, sang "The Battle Hymn of the Republic", and after the blessing the recessional was formed, singing, "O God, Our Help in Ages Past".

This was possibly the most catholic service ever held in this country, and its effects will be widespread.

The Bishop Elect of the Philippines

The Very Rev. James Wilmar Gresham, who was elected by the House of Bishops to succeed Bishop Brent in the Philippine Islands, has been Dean of Grace Church Cathedral, San Francisco, Cal., for the past nine years, is a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of California and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop, and is a member of several important Diocesan Boards and Committees. He was formerly Rector of Trinity Church, San Jose, for six years, resigning to take up his work at the Cathedral. He is a native of New Orleans, and is 42 years old. His family has been identified with the Church in the South for several generations. He received his academic education in Southern institutions, and was special student at Oxford, England, in 1906. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1896 by Bishop Sessums. It is expected his consecration will take place at an early date.

ORDINATION AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The ordination of the Rev. Roman Liberato Harding to the priesthood took place in St. Paul's Church, Washington, D. C., on Thursday, April 18, at 10 a. m. Mr. Harding is an old St. Paul's boy, and since his ordination to the diaconate has been an assistant at the Chapel of Our Merciful Saviour, Oaks' Home, Denver, Colo. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Irving Peake Johnson, Bishop Coadjutor of Colorado, officiated as the preacher, Bishop ordaining, and at the celebration of the Holy Communion. The Rev. Dr. Talbot, Rector of St. Paul's Parish, served as Gospeler and Presentor. The Rev. Charles McAllister read the Epistle. The Revs. Dr. Talbot, M. B. McBryde, Enoch M. Thompson and Charlton S. Turquand assisted in the laying on of hands. Bishop Johnson preached from the eleventh verse of the tenth chapter of St. John's Gospel, the alternative Gospel appointed to be read at the ordination of priests, dwelling upon the duty and office (as prescribed in the Rubric) to which the priest is called. The Bishop pointed out the three offices of prophet, priest and king, and how our Lord filled them, first in His parabolic teaching of the street, second, by His vicarious suffering and offering Himself a victim on the cross, and, third, by being at the head of His flock, the Church, not in any sense of an autocratic Kaiser, who expected everything to flow towards his own glorification, but of a chief shepherd, who had the welfare of the sheep at heart. So the priest in the Church must exercise the three-fold ministry. He must know his people in the street and in the home. As Abraham Lincoln was a great lover of mankind, so the priest must have a wonderful love for souls; he must give his life for the sheep. Secondly, he must spend and be spent in tending the congregation. (In this connection the Bishop related how he knew a priest, whom he considered the worst preacher he ever knew, in a small town, but that at his death, after seven years' service, the people of that town subscribed $12,000 to his widow as a mark of their appreciation of that service.) And, thirdly, the priest must seek the other sheep and bring them in. In closing, the Bishop pointed out some of the limitations of the priest's office, how it was apparently easy for some to tire of their people and to grow impatient, whilst others were thinking of the "wool" to be gotten from the sheep's back, i. e., their own personal profit, rather than contributing to the spiritual upbuild and welfare of the congregation committed to their care. The sermon was a most eloquent portrayal of the true priest, which held the congregation in rapt attention.

Bishop Co-Adjutor for Mississippi

Bishop Bratton of Mississippi announces that a majority of the Bishops and Standing Committees of the American Church have consented to the request of the Diocese of Mississippi for the election of a Coadjutor Bishop, and a special Council has been called to be held in Jackson, Miss., on Tuesday, June 25th, for the purpose of electing a Coadjutor Bishop and for such other business as may be incident thereto.

Bishop Anderson Pays Tribute to Eminent Men of Illinois

Bishop Anderson paid a high tribute to Governor Lowden of Illinois at the recent celebration of the 100th anniversary of the signing of the enabling act, under which Illinois was admitted as the twenty-first state into the Union. The meeting, which was attended by many distinguished persons, including the Governor, was held at Orchestra Hall, Chicago. Bishop Anderson gave the principal address, reported in part by the Tribune:

"When men in exalted places were not making their positions quite clear when men should rise and be counted," said Bishop Anderson, "in days like this, when one can't be one-half loyal and one-half disloyal, it has been the pride of the citizens of Illinois to have at the center a man who has faced forward for true blue Americanism, patriotism and victory. Let us march with and after our Governor."

At this the audience tore off an ecstatic shout.

Bishop Anderson said that the preachers and the teachers laid the foundations on which Illinois rests. He described early scenes in the state's history, and the customs of those days, and pointed out that in times of trouble Illinois has always jumped in fast and hard.

"Illinois gave more than its quota in the Mexican war," said the Bishop. "It gave more than its quota in the Spanish war. In the civil war it gave, in proportion to population, more than any other state, except Kansas. And Illinois gave John A. Logan, Ulysses S. Grant and a greater even than Washington, Abraham Lincoln. The world has produced many great men. Now and then it produces more than a great man—a great nature. Lincoln was a great nature.

"And today, by Germany, every one of the ideals for which Lincoln stood is challenged. What is Illinois' answer to be? I doubt not that Illinois again, as in the past, will do more than her share."

Patriotic Rally of B. S. A. Assembly

The Patriotic Rally for men and women held under the auspices of the Minnesota Diocesan Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in St. Paul, at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, on Wednesday evening, April 24th, was attended approximately by four hundred persons, who were inspired and edified by the splendid addresses given by Bishop McElwain, Bishop of Minnesota, and the Rev. Dr. Stewart, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill. Bishop McElwain spoke on "The Diocese and the Nation." His address was brief and to the point and was wholly optimistic and uplifting in its tone. He talked along the lines of the opportunities for Brotherhood work in Minnesota, particularly in the rural communities and in city missions. His presentation of the theme centered about the words, "Follow Me." Dr. Stewart gave the principal address, which was very inspiring. He gripped the hearts of every one present by his stirring messages He devoted a large part of his address to war opportunities and made prominent mention of the war activities of the Brotherhood. M. Clyde B. Helm, a member of the National Council for Minnesota, writes, "I can say without hesitation that I do not believe any such address has been delivered in any of our churches in the Twin cities since our country entered the war." On the previous Tuesday evening the Minnnesota Church Club gave a dinner at the Association of Commerce in St. Paul. At this dinner Dr. Stewart spoke for over an hour, giving a forceful and comprehensive address concerning the work of the Church War Commission and of the Brotherhood secretaries in the training camps of this country.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Rogation Days

THE COLLECT

For Fruitful Seasons

To be used on Rogation Sunday and the three Rogation days following.

Almighty God, who hast blessed the earth that it should be fruitful and bring forth whatsoever is needful for the life of man, and hast commanded us to work with quietness, and eat our own bread; Bless the labours of the husbandman, and grant such seasonable weather that we may gather in the fruits of the earth, and ever rejoice in thy goodness, to the praise of thy holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Do we Church members fully realize all that is involved in the Rogation Day prayers? It may not be possible for us any longer to revive the ancient and lovely custom of "beating the parish bounds" with vested priest and swinging censer, and a procession of praying folk, as they used to do across the seas, where farms were smaller, and life was not the hurried, harried thing that it is today; but do we, who depend so much upon the labors of the husbandman, ever make it a part of our bounden duty to "carry on" his efforts by our own particular intercessions? Who can tell what fine reactions would ensue if men, women and children, united as Mother Church wants them to, for these four days preceding Ascension, and in logical sequence followed out, both together and alone, all that is involved in these petitions? Many more than the farmer should be included in the scope of these prayers. For many people and many different phases of industry are connected with turning the fruits of the earth into "whatsoever is needful for the life of man". Pray for the farmer who plows and plants and tends to the fields of grain, but do not omit to pray for those who carry it to the granaries, and transport it by rail or boat to the mills, and for those who grind it and pack it, and for those who sell it, and for those who bring it to your door, and for those who make it, and for those who dig the coal, or cut the wood, or furnish other fuels to bake it, and for those who make the stoves, and those who build the houses, and those who plan the houses, and those who govern and protect and teach and guide the lives of the house-dwellers. It is an ever widening range of intercession which these prayers open to us. And to miss seeing these opportunities for intercession is to be half blind and totally indifferent to all those social and economic questions which are involved in the petition "give us this day our daily bread". Four days are hardly long enough for the world of Christian folk to stop, once a year at least, and pray to the Almighty Father for all that is wrapped up in a loaf of bread. And bread is only one thing the earth brings for the use of men. Food and fuel and raiment all lie first in the fruitful womb of Mother Earth, and before they are ready for use all kinds of industry are needed, and they should have our special intercessions and our sought-for blessings. And the Christian Church has at Rogation times a special mission to fulfill in bringing her people to pray not only for the bread that perisheth, but also, and more particularly, for that mental and spiritual food which are equally necessary for the life of a man, if he is to be anything more than one of the beasts that perish. Forty hours' devotions in every Christian Church should be the rule for these days preceding the Ascension of Him who is that bread which cometh down from heaven, and which, if a man eat thereof, he shall live forever.

"Work with quietness." The deep forces of nature are the silent ones. Too many of us work only with our mouths, and, alas! the work of the mouth is too often a noisy, thoughtless, unproductive type of work. We pray this prayer so superficially that its far-reaching and pregnant phrases never are sounded and appropriated to our souls' good and our neighbors' welfare, and the glory of God.

"Eat our own bread." "If a man will not work, neither shall he eat." Our common meals should be the results of our common efforts for the maintenance of the common family life. "Our", not "my" bread. Let the children be taught early the lessons of sharing "whatsoever is needful for the life of man", and an antidote for selfishness and self-indulgence will be incorporated in such a way as to produce permanent results in the exercise of a wise stewardship.

"Ever rejoice in Thy goodness." Each meal a thanksgiving day meal. Each meal a Eucharist, so to speak, where God is present and His presence acknowledged. Such a thought long dwelt upon finally becomes the atmosphere where plain living and high thinking flourish. And these two things are characteristic of a high type of Christian civilization, which if we neglect to cultivate we shall surely degenerate.

Or This

O Gracious Father, who openest thine hand and fillest all things living with plenteousness; We beseech thee of thine infinite goodness to hear us, who now make our prayers and supplications unto thee. Remember not our sins, but thy promises of mercy. Vouchsafe to bless the lands and multiply the harvests of the world. Let thy breath go forth that it may renew the face of the earth. Show thy loving-kindness, that our land may give her increase; and so fill us with good things that the poor and needy may give thanks unto thy Name; through Christ our Lord. Amen.

This alternate Collect bids us dwell on the lavishness of Him who also taught us to gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost. When God opens His hand there is always "plenty". Note this, you worriers, you folk of little faith. "I have been young and now am old, yet saw I never the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging their bread." It is true that "His rain falls on the just and on the unjust", but the unjust are those whose bread, while it is yet in their mouths, begins to turn to ashes, by reason of their sins.

Let us realize that sin not only spoils the taste of everything, but makes us loathe that light bread of God which cometh down from above. Right after "give us this day our daily bread" comes "forgive us our trespasses", thus showing us that only where forgiveness shines can the bread-eating be turned into a thanksgiving meal, a Eucharistic feast, whether the bread be from heaven or from the earth.

How can a Church member who does not believe in missions ask God to "bless the lands and multiply the harvests of the world"? And do those of us who do ask God to bless the lands ever stop to enquire how God is going to bless those lands? We are not asking God to bless the lands by multiplying the harvests. Abundant harvests have often caused the condemnation of men and nations, because men then forgot God and began to live primarily for themselves, like the man who had much goods stored up, and who that night had to give up his soul as well as his goods, and was called by God a "fool". It is foolish to think that material prosperity will give us permanent strength and victory in the day of battle, appearances on the eastern front of France to the contrary notwithstanding. God blesses a land by character first—the characters of believing, faithful, industrious, painstaking, honest breadwinners. Character is the product of many forces, but I do not believe one ever found a good and worthy character living apart from some recognition of God. And to help create and maintain this type of character is the duty of the Christian Church in its membership.

"Let thy breath go forth that it may renew the face of the earth." God breathes on men and they become quickening spirits. God's breath makes for inspiration, and without inspiration old things can not be made new. Without inspiration, bad living conditions would never be changed; without inspiration, oppression, lust and crime would continually crouch at our doors; without inspiration, efforts for good and God become spasmodic instead of habitual. God's breath is a holy breath. If His inspiration does not produce good results, the fault is not in the breath, but in those of us who should have become living souls by virtue of that breathing; who are able to remain living souls by reason of contributing to and sustaining in every possible way all efforts for making a new earth. When men catch this inspiration, which God meant them to have, the Church will have begun to function in the way Jesus started her to function. When the Church's leaders and prophets see this vision, of making the Church not only a voice, but also a force in the community, then will God's breath again go forth in a renewing way, and not in a destroying way.

"So fill us with good things that the poor and needy may give thanks." Here we are asking God to give us great responsibilities. We ask to be filled in order that others may be helped. Any other reason for asking to be filled with good things is unthinkable from the standpoint of the Christian, which is the standpoint of the cross. And to limit "good things" to "meats for the belly" is to show ourselves as bound and tied to things seen which are temporal, and not permanent. The "good things" the poor and needy want are not simply food and drink. They are justice and fair play, and friendship and an intelligent sympathy, and consistent, persistent efforts for the general welfare of the race. Note, too, in passing, that the thanks of the poor and needy are not to be given to you, but unto God. Do not yield to the temptation which cost Moses his great reward, and say to people, "Must we fetch you water out of this rock"? forgetting to sanctify God in the eyes of those to whom we minister our good things.

What a rebuke lies here for the Church whose ideal of "good things" does not include first and foremost the setting forth of Jesus Christ as the One to be desired above all things, in the presence of those who as yet have had no opportunity to hear this good news about Him.

A Red Letter Day

IN ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH LIVERPOOL, OHIO

On Sunday morning, April 21st, St. Stephen's Church, East Liverpool, Ohio, (the Rev. Robert Kell, Rector) benefited by a visitation from Bishop DuMoulin, when thirty-one candidates for confirmation were presented by the Rector.

This being the Sunday nearest St. George's Day, as is their custom, the Sons of St. George and the Daughters of St. George attended the service. The interior of the church was decorated with the flags of the Allies and the Parish Service Flag which now contains 47 stars, while the flag of St. George, being a red cross on a white ground, hung over the entrance. The building was filled to its utmost capacity, chairs being placed in the aisles, the vestibules and even in the porch and every available portion of standing room was filled. Some people were unable to obtain entrance.

The Sons of St. George were preceded in their parade by the band, the G. A. R. (one of their members being the official standard bearer of the day), the Sons of Veterans, Spanish-American War veterans, and members of the City Council. An enormous United States Flag was borne by members of the Junior Sons of St. George, while the English and French Flags and Sons of St. George Service Flag mingled with the Stars and Stripes.

Bishop DuMoulin preached the sermon in the course of which he spoke as follows:

"I come with a great privilege to take my part in a service that we keep in commemoration of a great Saint of a mighty empire on which the sun never sets. As an adopted citizen of this country, and having in my veins French and English blood, I am proud and I thank God for the armies that are holding back the despicable Huns and the barbarous Turks in order that America and the rest of the world might have freedom. There has stood that mighty British bulwark protecting us from menace that would destroy our happiness. After about two years America has entered the war and we are in to win and if we don't play politics too long, it looks as if the United States of America is going to get the honor of pushing the Huns back to the very gates of Berlin. Canada, Australia and New Zealand have come by the thousands and thank God, that we have joined the allies, and we will stay in to the finish. Now, I want to say we are linked together in the greatest alliance the world has ever known. There is one sentiment in America which has made my blood boil and that is 'Where is the British navy.' I would like to answer by asking. 'Where is the German navy?' It is in a place where no self-respecting navy wants to be; that is sufficient answer. There is a duty before America which is twofold. For a long time we thought we were most useful in sending munitions across the ocean, that it was our paramount duty. We ought, by the sweat of our brow, to bring our war mechanism to 100 per cent. But now I want to emphasize another contribution: It is the new manhood and new ideals for which we are fighting. Our primary object is a moral one. We are fighting for a new manhood, noble womanhood, and a consecrative childhood, and the day is not far off, the age is near, when we are going to produce a new type of manhood. I think we are looking out on a new earth; it will never be like it was before 1914. Beyond the red and reek of war there is a dawn worth fighting for, as we track the beast to his lair. The new manhood is being produced in blood and tears. We are going to win, not for the nations of Europe, but we are going to win to save the soul of America. We have had a melting pot in our country, and the fire has never before been lit, but now it is burning. We will have to suffer, but isn't it worth it? Every time a luxury is taken from me, I am proud to think that it helps to hurl back the terrible menace. I plead that America will uphold the new manhood which is in the making."

At last the Temple was completed "and the children of Israel, the priests and the Levites and the rest of the children of the Captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy." It is to be noted, also, that they "kept the Passover", thus linking together the two deliverances, that from Egypt and that from Captivity. The N. T. lesson, taken from Revelations (3:8-end), contains that announcement from "the seventh angel" which is the goal of all, and may be said to have begun with Pentecost:

Human history "the kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our God and of His Christ"; and also a description of worship in the true temple, in heaven. This use of Revelation is appropriate as treating of the work in heaven and on earth of the Ascension and reigning of Christ, and also is correlated with the restored Temple. The imagery of measuring the Temple with the reed and of the two olive trees is taken from the Book of Zechariah (Chapter 2 and 4). Furthermore, St. James' exposition (Epistle for day) of "religion", strickly speaking, of "worship", with a direct reference to what goes on in church buildings, viz.., that true "worship" is a visiting of the needy in their affliction and a keeping of oneself unspotted from the world, is a fine background against which to consider the ancient temple of God, while the devotional exercises on that glad day of dedication, with the obedience to the law of sacrifice, are the N. T. background of that prayer in our Lord's Name with which the Gospel for the day is concerned. Equally appropriate is the O. T. Alternate in which the prophet exhorts Judah to "wait upon Jehovah" and "to be glad and rejoice" when their captivity should be at an end, a prophecy now fulfilled.

The N. T. lesson for Sunday evening begins the Epistle to Hebrews, which is read in course during two weeks. This Epistle not only fits the season by its treatment of the Ascension and Heavenly Priesthood of our Lord but fittingly accompanies the morning lessons on the ancient Temple and its spiritual counterpart in heaven. Inasmuch as the Ascension of our Lord ushers in the dispensation of the Spirit and the New Covenant, Ezekiel's prophecy of the latter as following after Judah's "Resurrection" from exile, is taken for the corresponding O. T. lesson.

Week days are mainly Rogation and Ascension. In the use of Daniel 7 for the latter (recognized as appropriate by the English Lectionary), there is no departure from our Historical-topical plan.

John 20:10-17 for Wednesday p. m. would do for Eve of Ascension and also fittingly close Rogation by making prayer itself ascend from earth to heaven.

In accordance with a request made by a correspondent, the attempt will be made in this and subsequent articles to include a brief reference to Sunday lessons one week ahead. Nehemiah's prayer (Sunday after Ascension) that God would help those whom He had redeemed, is a connecting thought linking Easter to Pentecost; while the Marriage supper (Rev. 19:9) leading up to the Son who goeth forth to war, would seem to be a fit prelude to the bringing of the Spirit who wields the sword of truth. In the evening, Joel's prophecy of the Spirit is accompanied by the work of Him "Who is set on the right hand of the majesty in heaven.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

PRAYERS FOR THE PEACE AND UNITY OF THE CHURCH

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who saidst unto Thine Apostles, Peace, I leave with you, My peace I give unto you; Regard not our sins, but the faith of Thy Church, and grant her that peace and unity which is agreeable to Thy will, Who livest and reignest God for ever and ever. Amen.

O God of Peace, Who through Thy Son Jesus Christ didst set forth One Faith for the salvation of mankind; Send Thy grace and heavenly blessing upon all Christian people who are striving to draw nearer to Thee, and to each other, in the unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace. Give us penitence for our divisions, wisdom to know Thy truth, courage to do Thy will, love which shall break down the barriers of pride and prejudice, and an unswerving loyalty to Thy Holy Name. Suffer us not to shrink from any endeavour, which is in accordance with Thy will, for the peace and unity of Thy Church. Give us boldness to seek only Thy glory and and the advancement of Thy Kingdom. Unite us all in Thee as Thou, O Father, with Thy Son and the Holy Spirit, art One God, world without end. Amen.

O Lord Jesus Christ, look with pity, we beseech Thee, upon Thy Church weakened and hindered by differences and divisions; bless the effort to bring together in conference all who confess the faith of Thy Holy Name, Who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, God, for ever and ever. Amen.

"Our Fathers' God, to Thee"

Mr. Charles E. Field has made a study of the authorship of Hymn 196 in the Church Hymnal, says St. Luke's Parish Visitor, Evanston, Ill., and sends us the following interesting communication:

"I wonder if you know that the patriotic hymn we sing every Sunday is a composite production, consisting of a verse from three different poems by three different authors, two of them Unitarian ministers, and the third a Baptist clergyman. The music was composed by an Englishman, presumably a Churchman. Its place in our Church Hymnal indicates that the love of God and the love of country is not limited to any sect or creed, and that our emotions are often stirred by those who are not believers, at least in the Divinity of the Head of the Church.

"There is no special point to this beyond the interesting result of my study of that hymn, though I wish it might have been written by a Churchman—Reginald Heber, for instance."

The Functions of the Christian Ministry.

Prop. 1.

That Christ established and sent forth a ministry is evident, but what functions they were to exercise is not so evident. Perhaps we can best ascertain the proper functions of that ministry by studying the offices which Christ Himself performed, as well as the commissions which He issued to His Apostles. Our Lord summed up in His own person the three offices of prophet, priest and king, and therefore His body, the Church, will share in the functions of these various offices.

(1) As prophets, we will expect that the Apostles will be commissioned to preach, and this office is generally conceded to them.

The commission by which they are so empowered is the familiar one, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

As preachers the Apostles were to be "witnessess unto Him," not each one setting forth his own opinions about the Kingdom of Heaven, for then there would have been twelve gospels, but each one bearing his testimony that Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, was crucified, and rose from the dead, ascended into Heaven, sent the Holy Ghost; these facts not their opinions.

So, as prophets, they were to preach Christ and Him crucified, rather than to be inventors of theories about God and matter.

(2) As priests, they were to offer man's offerings to God and to give God's blessings to men, for this is the function of priests.

The particular time in which Christ exhibited His priestly function was at the time of His passion, when He was in very fact our High-priest after the order of Melchisedek, and also the Lamb of God, who bore the sins of the world.

It was in His capacity as priest that He offered gifts to God and gave blessings to men. What is the gift that we can offer to God? It is "ourselves, our souls and bodies which we offer as a living sacrifice to God." That is all that we have to give.

So Christ gave Himself, and taught us to offer ourselves through Jesus Christ. This commission He gave to the Apostles when He bade them "to do this in remembrance of me." It is in the Holy Eucharist that He permits us to participate in Christ's offering of Himself, and also through Christ to offer ourselves to God. The whole service of the Eucharist is the joining of the sacrifice of ourselves to the offering of Christ.

In this connection He also commissioned the Apostles to be ministers of the reconciliation. "Receive ye the Holy Ghost, whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained.

This is the purpose of His passion, that "our sinful bodies may be made clean by His Body, and our souls may be washed by His most precious blood and that we may evermore dwell in Him and He in us."

So it was given to the Apostles, and by them to those whom they ordained, to be ministers of the reconciliation, and to be administers of the sacraments as priests of the Most High.

(3) Not only were the Apostles, and those who succeeded them in office, to "preach the word and administer the sacraments," but they were also to rule the Church of God; not, indeed, as the Gentiles with a view to their own honor, but as servants of Christ with a view to the welfare of those intrusted to their care.

To the Christian ministry was entrusted the discipline of the Church. "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in Heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in Heaven."

In the language of the Jews, "to bind" was to enact and enforce the law; "to loose" was to repeal and to relax the law. This exercise of the discipline of the Church may be seen by a study of Acts XV., where the Apostles exercised legislative, judicial and executive functions.

Whatever one may think of constituted authority, there can be no question that the Apostles acted as those to whom had been delegated the right to govern the Church, and St. Paul exhorts Timothy to rule the Church of God.

Prop. 2.

The final words of Christ to the Apostles were these, "and ye shall be witnesses unto me."

Now a witness is one who testifies to that which he has seen and heard, not one who tells what his own opinion is.

As St. John puts it (I. St. John I. 1.) "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the the word of life, declare we unto you." Or as St. Paul testifies (1 Cor. XV. 1) "Brethern I declare unto you the gospel which I have preached unto you, which also ye have received and wherein ye stand, by which also ye are saved. * * * * * For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." And as St. Peter affirms (1 St. Peter II. 23)-"For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow His steps, who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree."

All of which shows clearly that the Apostles did not regard the Christian religion, as fundamentally a scheme of philosophy, by which to explain the mysteries of matter and spirit, nor as a psychological experience by which we should undergo certain sensations, but rather as a plan of salvation, based on the facts of Christ's crucifixion and ressurrection, and taught to the individual soul by the ministers of reconciliation who testified to these facts and through the preaching of the word and the administration of the sacraments, became the instruments of Christ in bringing gifts to men and the agents of men in offering gifts unto God.

"For we are saved by grace, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God."

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

By Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

THE LAW OF ADAPTATION

"No man putteth new wine into old bottles."

Jesus was essentially a modernist. Although an unfailing devotee of the customs of His people, He recognized and obeyed the law of adaptation. In the present instance which the text sets forth, He was seeking to make evident to his critics the new principles that were to govern human life in the changed and changing conditions in the days that were to come. What he actually said was: "No man putteth new wine into old wine skins, else the new wine doth burst the wine skins, the wine is spilled and the wine skins will be marred." He was thinking of those powers generated through fermentation, and He was maintaining that the stiffness and the hardness of the old wine skins, unyielding as they were, would cause them to crack and break because of the fermentation of the new wine. It must necessarily be placed in new and elastic skins.

The illustration is one that is readily understood, but it was a hard lesson for the traditionalists of His day and time to comprehend. Jesus ever reckoned with environing conditions and circumstances. He always showed a fine tolerance to those who, by reason of training or mental limitations, were unable to see clearly at once the great principles of life He came to enunciate. Repeatedly He rebuked his disciples because, in their zeal for what they conceived to be the inflexible and arbitrary rules of their religious system, they reckoned not with certain definite fundamental principles that were to regulate and govern His Kingdom. Such principles as the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man were not subject to the shifting changes of time or place.

One of the amazing things about His whole teaching is that it is so flexible in its adaptation that it applies with as much force to the Occident as to the Orient. He was in no sense like other great religious teachers, the leader of a race or the exponent of any insular system of ethics. The world's greatest thinkers and scholars have recognized the universality of His plan and system, and its amazing adaptability to all kinds and conditions of men the world over. Repeatedly, His followers, with a zeal that was "not according to knowledge," have sought to lay hard and fast limitations upon His teachings and to require that those who would become the adherents of His faith should recognize and obey one universal law and one universal practice. Much of the Church's great missionary endeavor has failed because of this fact. With misguided zeal we of this Western world have approached the older races of the East, demanding a punctilious regard for both the expression and practice of the faith. Again, we have sadly erred in seeking to restrict and restrain the exuberance and spontaneity of youth by forcing upon it certain hard and inflexible laws that rendered its reasonable and normal habits stale and unsatisfactory.

For the abundant life which He came to give, alas we have too often presented the circumscribed and restricted life. Hence the new wine has burst the old wine skins and much of that splendid, exhilarating, youthful influence which the Church covets, and without which it loses its freshness, has been lost. There can be no question about it; Jesus recognized unfailingly the law of adaptation. He dealt in a kindly and gracious way with human conditions as He found them, and by a process of winsome love He restrained and reformed the erring. In this present plastic period it were well for those of us who are charged with the great responsibilities of propagating religion, if we gave greater heed to the divine method and practice.—Courtesy Minneapolis Tribune.

A Beautiful Custom Established

WILL YOUR PARISH FOLLOW THIS EXAMPLE?

In Christ Church, Norfolk, Va., St. Mary's Guild was organized in May, 1917, a year ago, to keep in touch with members of the parish who are in the service of their country. The present number on the Service Flag is eighty-six men and five women. The Guild has held, without intermission, every Wednesday at 11 o'clock, a service of intercession and Holy Communion. At the last business meeting of the Guild, held regularly after the service, one of its members told of having read in a California paper of a town in which every day at 12 o'clock the church bells were rung a few strokes that prayers might be said for our soldiers and sailors. The suggestion that we should follow the example thus set received the hearty endorsement of the Rector, the Rev. Dr. Steinmetz, and the Guild approved and carried out the following plan, which is to pause at the ringing of the bell, repeat silently the Lord's Prayer and a special petition for those in the service of their country. Last Sunday the Rector asked his whole congregation to join with St. Mary's Guild in their petitions, and if not within the sound of the bell to remember the prayer at the hour of twelve. Christ Church bell rings daily at twelve, and will continue to be rung at this hour while the war lasts, a reminder for all to pause and say the Lord's Prayer and special petitions for our country and for our soldiers and sailors. Other Churches that have bells are being asked to ring them daily at twelve, with the same intention. The mayor promises to have the city hall bell rung, if it be the wish of the Christian community.

Confirmation Address by the

Confirmation Address by the Archbishop of York

During his visit to St. Luke's parish, Evanston, Ill., Archbishop Lang, at the request of the Rector, the Rev. Dr. Stewart, gave the following address to the confirmation class:

"I am very glad that I have been given this chance of speaking to you men and women, lads and girls, who are waiting for your confirmation. I need not tell you that throughout the whole Church the greatest privilege that is committed to the Bishop, second only to ordaining men to the ministry, is the confirmation of God's people through the laying on of hands. I am also particularly glad of having this chance of giving my blessing.

"I suppose most of you have been in church, and you may remember that there I spoke of the responsibility and the great privilege of making a choice, both in human lives and in pleasures. You are coming near to yours—the very deliberate, solemn and faithful choice of the high honor of the Christian life to which you were dedicated at your baptism. I am sure that at this present time, when certainly England has gone to war to keep her pledged word, that you will always remember what it means for you to do the same through confirmation when you come to give your pledged word: I do promise to serve our Lord Jesus Christ.

"I spoke in church of the need in these times, of the great need of strength; and I could not think of you approaching your great choice unless I knew that at your confirmation it would be given to you, the strong Spirit of the Lord. And I trust that each one of you, even the youngest of you, will look forward to the coming into your life of the strength that is sufficient by the Holy Spirit to sustain and strengthen you and give you power to keep your vow. So while you kneel let me give you my blessing:

"Bless these Thy children, O Lord, that they may be faithful to the vow which Thou leadest them to offer. And may God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Spirit in all things direct and rule your hearts, through Jesus Christ, and may the blessing of God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost be with you and abide with you forever. Amen."

PERSONAL RELIGION — AIDS AND HELPS BY THE WAY

Edited by Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio

To the Christian, religion is altogether a question of personal relationships. Religion is the recognition of your relationship to God and your brother, taking the responsibility for this relationship and receiving motive power with which to fulfill it.

For the sake of religion, the Church, ritual, creeds, sacraments, theology, the Bible and Prayerbooks exist. These are helps to religion, but not religion itself.

For the sake of religion, Christ came into the life of humanity, that He might open our eyes to these relationships and give us the motive power to fulfill them.

The Church, as the body of Christ, is a means, not an end. The body exists to minister to life. By baptism, the Church affirms our relationship to God, and therefore to our brother. By confirmation she gives opportunity for the acceptance of personal responsibility for these relationships, and by the Holy Communion she gives us, through the presence of a living Christ, the motive power for the fulfilment of our accepted responsibilities. The Church is a means for training in personal religion.

Religion is, therefore, not the Golden Rule, or the Sermon on the Mount, but the life power which makes us obey and keep these moral maxims. The interpretation of religion was by Christ confined to family terms, father, child, brother, home. These terms correspond to human experience—they were real, personal and understood by all. In this sense, personal religion is the heart of Christianity. The problems of human life find their interpretation in family terms rather than the official and judicial language of the Roman Empire and law court.

The present world crisis makes a searching demand for a faith resting upon unshaken foundations, and for a first hand grip on things eternal. The vocabulary of religion must, therefore, correspond with real personal experience. We need to go back to fundamentals and build again upon those things which cannot be shaken. This means personal religion.

At the request of THE WITNESS, the undersigned will give each week a brief help toward the appreciation and appropriation of certain fundamental truths in which personal religion stands. This will consist of a subject, a text, topical Bible readings for each day in the week, and one or two prayers related to the subject.

The daily use of these Bible readings should lead into the personal understanding of the great fundamental truths by which we live.

If the members of a congregation use these readings during the week, as a preparation for the Sunday sermon, to be preached on the subject, there would be generated in the lives of the people, by this unity of thought and practice, a great psychic force that could not fail to produce spiritual results.

Trust

Trust is any dependent act of your life as God's child upon your Heavenly Father. It is the first step in personal religion. Except you become as a child you cannot enter the Kingdnm of Heaven.

THOU WILT KEEP HIM IN PERFECT PEACE WHOSE MIND IS STAYED ON THEE.

Daily Bible Readings

A. M.—Ps. 25; Ps. 37:1-10; Ps. 40; Ps. 56; Ps. 57; Ps. 62; Ps. 125.

P. M.—Deut. 33:27-end; Is. 26:1-4; Is. 40:28-end; St. Matt. 11:28-end; St. Matt. 6:30-end; St. Matt. 18:1-7; I Tim. 6:12-end.

Almighty God, who art the only source of health and healing, the spirit of calm and the central peace of the universe: Grant to us, Thy children, such a consciousness of Thy indwelling presence as may give us utter confidence in Thee. In all pain and weariness and anxiety may we throw ourselves upon Thy fatherly care and protection, that, knowing ourselves upheld by Thy might, we may receive from Thee health and strength and peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God the Son, Redeemer of the world, truly Thy name is above every name! In spite of error, misunderstanding, hatred, scorn and blasphemy, in the deadliest hour, when the skies blacken and the earth reels, and it seems that men have once more crucified in this dread eclipse the Son of God afresh, still Thy majesty and Thy power are felt, and through the midnight comes the prayer of a penitent, "Lord, remember me", or perhaps the confession of an executioner, "Truly this was the Son of God": still when they dream that Thou art forever silenced, buried, guarded and sealed down, the stone is rolled away from the door of the sepulchre; and the keepers grow weak as dead men; and angelic forms are there; and still through the gray mists of the morning Thou comest, changed to something august, half-unknown, immortal; but the tones of Thy love are heard again, and at Thy voice we know whom we have believed, and our faith in Thee becomes the victory which overcomes the world.—Chadwick.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

Calvary Cathedral Parish, Sioux Falls, S. D., is raising a fund with which to purchase a new organ in memory of Dr. Samuel A. Brown.

A beautiful marble font has been placed in St. Margaret's Chapel, Belfast, Me., in memory of Alma C. Field, given by her daughter, Mrs. H. B. Pearson.

A new ten thousand dollar church is to be erected by St. Michael and All Angels' Parish, Portland, Oregon, which will be known as the Bishop Scadding Memorial Church.

St. John's Parish, Los Angeles, Cal., has more than 1,200 communicants, being almost double the number when the present Rector, the Rev. Dr. Davidson, assumed charge of the parish five years ago.

In times of peace it takes approximately one billion dollars a year to run the government. But we spend two billions a year on drink—just twice the amount of our bill for the support of the government.—Temperance.

Two hundred ministers at Washington, D. C., pledged their individual support and that of their congregations to the Liberty Loan campaign, at a rally which was addressed by Commissioner Brownlow.

At the children's service in St. John's Church, Bangor, Me., on Easter Day, Mrs. Abbie N. Spear presented for missions an earthen bank containing $33.50, which was filled twenty years ago by her infant son, who died aged five years.

Bishop Ingram of London, England, has made a strong appeal to his diocese to rally to the national cause, without regard to the exemption accorded the clergy, urging the clergy to respond to the call to the colors, leaving only one priest to each parish.

The church building of St. Augustine's Mission (colored, Providence. R. I., has recently been twice badly damaged by fire, the loss amounting to about $6,000, partly covered by insurance. A colored boy who had a grudge against the mission is thought to have been responsible for the fires.

The members of the Sunday schools in the several parishes at Portland, Oregon, met at the Portland Academy on the afternoon of Sunday, April 21, and marched to the Pro-Cathedral, where a special service was held in connection with the presentation of the Easter offerings of the schools.

The parish house of St. John's Church, Lafayette, Ind., will be kept open this summer for the benefit of the troops who are to be stationed there at the Auto Mechanics' School at Purdue University. The men will be welcome at any time to play games in the parish house, to write letters, and entertain their visiting friends.

By an every-member canvass, held on a recent Sunday afternoon, the Men's Club of St. Paul's Church, Martin's Ferry, Ohio, increased the pledges for parish support 80 per cent and

A lady crossing from France to England was asked by the customs officer if she had anything dutiable. She assured him that she had nothing but wearing apparel in her trunks, but at the bottom of the largest one, which to him seemed the most suspicious, were found twelve bottles of brandy.

"Madam," said the officer, sarcastically, "do you call these wearing apparel?"

"Certainly," she replied sweetly, "those are my husband's nightcaps."—Temperance.

The local draft board of Astoria, L. I., has lodged a complaint with the Department of Justice against the Rev. Leigh R. Urban, Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, that city, charged with having taken down a Service Flag which hung in his church. "Mr. Urban has conscientious scruples against war, on Christian grounds," said Mrs. Urban to a reporter. "In the past the Church has had a flag, but Mr. Urban believes it has no place in the church now, because it stands for war."

"It is well to get not only beyond the parish, but beyond the diocese, and therefore a good general Church paper ought to be within the reach of every member of the Church," says the editor of the Rhode Island Diocesan Record, in commenting upon the several Church papers published in this country, and continues: "The cheapest one published is THE WITNESS, issued every week at Hobart, Indiana, for a dollar a year. Printed in daily newspaper form, it is not very attractive in appearance, but the subject matter is enlightening, and it is well edited and well worth the dollar."

The Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead, Rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, Md., gave an address before the Sunday Evening Club, Orchestra Hall, Chicago, on a recent Sunday, taking for his subject "The Challenge of the Present Crisis". It will be remembered that Dr. Birckhead served for some time as an inspector for the Red Cross Society in Europe, and at the request of the Commander-in-chief of the British army, made an inspection at the front in France, in some instances going into the first line trenches. He is reported to have said that one of the great benefits derived from the war is that it has brought the English-speaking people of the world together, after 140 years of misunderstanding. "Together, we can insure the freedom of the world's weaker nations."

"Nobody knows just when the great war will be over; but the time draws nearer each succeeding day," says the Rev. Dr. Budlong, Rector of St. Peter's Church, Chicago. "No Christian man or woman can question the certainty of the ultimate victory of the allies, because this war has revealed itself as a struggle for righteousness, justice and liberty, and God is always on the side of right. The process may be long drawn out, but the issue is not in doubt. Got cannot be worsted. The ideals which emerge during the war; the characters which are developed through self-sacrifice and consecration unto high service; the God-consciousness which discovers itself to those who open their hearts for it, will dominate the "after-the-war" civilization. We must look ahead and strive to be ready, so that each one of us shall be fit to serve God and our fellows better than ever before."

A unique and successful custom of handling the Lenten mite boxes was followed by the Sunday school at St. Luke's Church, Billings, Mont., this year. The children were instructed to return their mite boxes as soon as one dollar was collected, in exchange for another, and the pupil's name was posted on a Roll of Honor displayed in the school, and when others were returned by the same pupil, a gold star was placed after the name, each star indicating a dollar. It is an old custom in St. Luke's Parish, and during one season a pupil of the school got seven exchanges of mite

West Virginia. Delegates from nearly all the parishes identified with the organization were present. The Rev. S. E. Sweet of St. Paul's Church, Columbus, Ohio, spoke during the afternoon session upon the subject, "How to Make Our Sunday School Attractive to Children". A part of the afternoon session was devoted to a discussion on "The Place of Patriotism in the Sunday School". In the evening, a service was held for the delegates, and addresses were made by Dr. S. S. Moore of Trinity Church, Parkersburg, W. Va., and by Archdeacon Dodshon of Zanesville, Ohio. Dr. Moore's theme was "The Teacher", and Archdeacon Dodshon spoke upon "The American Home".

The Rev. Robert P. Krietler, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., who presented a large class of young people and adults for confirmation to the Bishop, says that such a class "raises the rather important question of how to help them to grow into faithful communicants and remain so. It is an important matter that they be educated into an affectionate use of their privileges, so that they become more and more loyal to the Church and her Sacraments. Surely the newly confirmed should call forth the loving sympathy and interest of those who have been communicants for a long time. Why not a 'big sister' and a 'big brother' communicant for every one who has just been confirmed, and by this means come in helpful contact with them?"

The 173rd meeting of the Convocation of Edenton, Diocese of East Carolina, was held in St. John's Church, Grifton, N. C., on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 9 and 10. The Rev. John H. Griffith of Kinston preached the opening sermon. Bishop Darst officiated at the celebration of the Holy Communion on Wednesday morning, and the Rev. George F. Hill of Greenville preached the sermon. Dean Drane of Edenton presided at the business sessions. Mr. John G. Bragaw, a well-known layman of St. Peter's Church, Washington, N. C., read a paper on "Our Church in Relation to the War", followed by a discussion led by the Rev. Thomas N. Lawrence of Hertford. At the closing service, missionary addresses and talks on Church institutions were made by the Rev. J. N. Bynum, the Rev. C. H. Jordan, the Rev. H. S. Osborne, and Mr. G. C. Royall.

The Rev. P. Gavin Duffy, Priest-Superior of the Society of the Divine Compassion, New York, who has traveled several thousand miles the past few months visiting points in a number of states, says that he has been thrown in with many soldiers and sailors. "One splendid young fellow, an officer in the Royal British Flying Corps, full of heroism and daring, and I am sure of clean living, interested me greatly. He is here to instruct American aviators—the learners—after a nasty fall with his machine in France, seriously injuring him. He informed me that this was the one part of the British service which had no chaplains, and which did not desire them—not even a Y. M. C. A. worker. He said that religion was never discussed among these men of daring, and that he himself had never said a prayer in his life! This ought to set us thinking. How is it that we have had no appeal for these men of venture in the Church? The answer is our own complete lack of venture and our timid, compromised attitude to prayer. I spent enough time with this young officer to realize that he had said a good many prayers—by acting them—though he had not been conscious of it, and I saw answering looks and new interest manifested when I began to tell him of the place of venture in religion and our life in the S. D. C. O, these men can be reached, but we want the right men to reach them. Pray God they may be raised up."

The Very Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral Church, Fond du Lac, Wis., has resigned his office, to take effect June 1, and will devote his time to the service of the War Commission, particularly at the constantly growing naval station at Great Lakes, Ill. The Dean has been on a leave of absence for this work during the past six months. The Fond du Lac people insisted that he return to his parish, and he felt himself impelled to resign rather than tie himself down to parochial administration when he felt he was needed more in camp work. The Dean's work has been wonderfully blessed of God. He has baptized thirty-one men in the six months, presented ninety-six for Holy Confirmation, and brought scores of lapsed men back to their communions. He has built up a system of work which has been imitated by Episcopal representatives in a number of the other camps. His work has been so satisfactory to the station chaplains that they have given him sole charge of a section of the camp containing 5,000 men. His Sunday congregations have been running from 1,000 to 2,500 men. There are an average of 45 communions a week. On Easter 218 received the Blessed Sacrament—all our own men. The Dean has also resigned from being examining chaplain of Fond du Lac, secretary of the Board of Trustees of the diocese, chairman of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education and secretary of the Diocesan Commission on Social Service. Dean Bell may be addressed at Building 903, Detention Chaplain's Office, Great Lakes, Ill., until further notice.

Personals

Bishop Brent has been appointed by General Pershing the senior chaplain of the American army in France.

Mr. Frederick H. Sonner has been the treasurer of St. Thomas' Church, Providence, R. I., twenty years, and during that time has not missed a meeting of the vestry.

The Rev. John W. Quinton, who has been for seven years at St. Andrew's-on-the-Mountain, near Charlestown, W. Va., has given up his charge to do Y. M. C. A. army work.

The Rev. B. G. Lee, for the past two and a half years in charge of Roseburg and Umpqua Valley Missions, in the Diocese of Oregon, has accepted missionary work in the Diocese of Sacramento.

Mr. Fred J. Glass, one of the leading members of Grace Memorial Church, Portland, Ore., has been appointed a Y. M. C. A. army secretary, and left for the front in France on April 8th.

Capt. Henry N. Brooks of the United States Engineers' Reserve Corps, who went to France last December, died of pneumonia the first of this month. He had long been a communicant of St. Simon's Church, Chicago.

The Rev. Henry G. Raps, formerly of St. Mary's School, Knoxville, Ill., assumed his duties on the first Sunday after Easter as assistant at the Church of the Messiah, Providence, R. I.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Griswold, Suffragan Bishop of Chicago, and Mrs. Griswold, have removed to Evanston, a beautiful suburb of Chicago, where they will make their home.

The Rev. H. Norwood Bowne, Rector of Holy Cross Church, Tryon, and Dean of the Waynesville Convocation, in the District of Asheville, has accepted a call to All Souls' Church, Biltmore, and expects to take charge about June 1st.

The Rev. Francis H. Smith, assistant Rector of old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, Md., has received a call to St. Mark's Church, Bay City, in the Diocese of Texas. The Rector of St. Paul's Parish, the Rev. Dr. A. B. Kinsolving, is a brother of the Bishop of Texas.

The Rev. L. R. S. Ferguson, Rector of the Church of the Messiah, St. Paul, Minn., who is chaplain of the 135th Infantry Minnesota regiment, has been appointed chairman of a committee in charge of the new Liberty Theatre, just opened at Camp Cody, Deming, N. M.

"The Church of the Epiphany, Los Angeles, Cal.," says the Churchman of Southern California, "surprised and honored the Rev. Henderson Judd on a recent evening, when, at a parish social, a large cake with 91 tapers on it made the occasion in the nature of a birthday party for their distinguished guest, who on that day had attained that great age.

Bishop McCormick hopes to return from France in time to be present at the 44th Annual Convention of his Diocese, which will be held at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, Mich., June 11. The Bishop has been asked by the army and the Red Cross to organize and direct the Red Cross chaplains. This will constitute a bureau in the Department of Military Affairs, and will include the appointment and direction of chaplains for all hospital and field work. As this will require a longer time than the six months' leave of absence granted him by the Standing Committee, the Bishop has asked for such an extension of his leave of absence as will enable him to complete the work assigned him.

The Rev. J. A. Gardner, who resigned the rectorship of Holy Trinity Church, Tiverton, R. I., to accept a call to St. James' Church, Providence, was tendered a farewell reception by his parishioners and friends in Tiverton on the Wednesday after Easter, and presented with a beautiful mahogany desk, completely furnished with book ends, candlesticks, blotter and paper, and a comfortable chair to go with it.

Stirring Patriotic Hymn by New York Rector

A patriotic hymn for Victoria Lodge, Independent Order of the Sons of St. George, was conducted at St. Ann's Church, Amsterdam, N. Y., on the third Sunday after Easter by the Rector, the Rev. Dr. Carroll. The Rev. Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady of Yonkers, N. Y., preached the sermon. The processional hymn, "March Together, Brothers", which we print below, was written by the Rev. B. W. Rogers Taylor, Rector of St. George's Church, Schenectady, N. Y.:

March together, brothers,
Step with purpose high,
In the world's great conflict
Dare to do and die;
Pledge your sacred honor
To avenge the wrong,
Stand beside each other
Brave and true and strong.

(Chorus—Sung after each stanza.)
Forward, therefore, brothers,
Over land and sea;
On to glorious battle;
On to victory.

See the hosts that gather—
Hosts of power and might—
To destroy the nations,
To subvert their right.

Rally, loyal freemen,
Stand at England's side;
Shall our sons of valor
All in vain have died?
Forward, brothers, forward,
We are Britain's kin;
Hands across the ocean!
Hands that help to win!

France, can we forget thee,
In thine hour of need?
Shall we, unresponding,
Hear thee vainly plead?
Forward, brothers, forward,
Calls our ancient friend;
God, her armies strengthen;
God, her cause defend!

Twine the flag of Britain
With our banner true;
France, our ancient friendship
Once again renew.
Rouse, ye loyal kinsmen,
Wake, for duty calls
To preserve our freedom,
Our ancestral halls.

Bar yon alien footsteps
From our sacred strand;
Let no foreign foeman
On our ramparts stand.
Rise, O mighty nation,
Rise in righteous wrath,
Stand against the tyrant
Shadowing our path.

See the nations bleeding
From the tyrant's sword;
Hear the victims pleading
Vengeance from the Lord.
Who shall quake and falter,
Who shall stand afar?
Gather to the war!

Three-fold flags of freedom
Wave in freedom's fight,
This for aye our battle cry,
God defend the right!

Where Italian sunshine
Warms Venetian plain,
Where thy fertile valleys
Wave with golden grain.
God defend thee, Italy,
God maintain thy right,
God uphold thy freedom
With His holy might!

Forward, glorious banners,
Neath your guiding star;
Lead our armies onward,
Marching forth to war.
Brave the foe's defiance
Over land and sea;
Press to glorious battle—
Press to victory!

Pittsburgh Clerical Union

The Pittsburgh Clerical Union held their regular monthly meeting Monday morning, April 22. There was a record attendance for the last twelve months. The place of meeting was Calvary Church. The essayist for the day was the Rev. R. E. Lee Strider, Rector of St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, W. Va, who presented his essay that had already elsewhere aroused most favorable comment, the subject being "The Church, the Ministry and the New Age". Mr. Strider was received by the clergy most enthusiastically, and his treatment of the vital subject was unusually able and created a remarkable discussion. The essay in full certainly ought to be printed.

EDITORIAL

"For Better or for Worse"

As we travel over this country, we are impressed with the capacity of the average American for telling how things ought to be done.

With a very limited knowledge of the assets, and with scarcely any knowledge of the liabilities or difficulties, he is most profound in his criticisms of the administration.

It was so in the days of Washington and Lincoln. It is so today in the days of Wilson.

Nearly every American can tell you wherein the administration, be it in food, fuel, military, publicity, transportation, aeroplanes, shipping or what not, has fallen down and presumably wherein the narrator would have done it differently. All of which goes to prove that to run a thing by way of academic discussion, and to run it by way of daily experience, are two different facts.

The same thing is true of the Church. Whether it be the wisdom of the House of Bishops or of the individual Diocesan, whether it be the policy of a rector or vestry or a Board of Missions, there are plenty of critics who can point out the failures of administration. The difficulty is to find in the army of critics those who would do it better if they were doing it themselves.

Ruskin once defined an art critic as "a person who did not know how to paint," and therefore was an expert on how not to do it. The difficulty is that when we pass from academic discussion to practical service, we encounter difficulties, the nature of which were entirely unknown to us.

In the same way we criticise our neighbor's character without any knowledge of the difficulties, hereditary and otherwise, which he has been obliged to overcome to be as decent as he is.

The truth is that this war will not be won, nor the conquest of faith will never be accomplished, by the critics.

The ability to criticize is a compound of egotism, ignorance and indolence, and produces an atmosphere in which it is doubly difficult to accomplish results.

It is a far cry from the spirit of criticism to those lines of Tennyson

"Their's not to reason why,
Their's but to do and die."

In a regiment of soldiers, there is one fallible mortal, liable to error, who has to assume the responsibility of issuing orders.

It is no wonder that with the large percentage of liability to error that marks all professions from an architect to a doctor, things frequently go wrong in military affairs, but so long as somebody has to be at the head of things, the presumption ought to be that the selected head knows something about his job, much more than we do, and that the best service that we can render is to get behind and boost, until someone over him discovers his untrustworthiness. For us to discover it and publish it, is not to correct it, but rather to increase the confusion.

To me the marvel is, when one considers the magnitude of the business in hand, that one small head can accomplish so much as has been done in the present crisis, nor am I particularly concerned about the mistakes that were made before the war. These ante-bellum post-mortems are singularly unedifying.

The truth of the matter is that a majority of the electors of this country elected Mr. Wilson for better or for worse, and if it is for worse ((as pray God, it is not), then we are indeed, of all men most miserable, but let us not whine about it.

It is the same question as that which disturbs many a household. These twain have joined lives at God's altar and sealed the bargain with a vow, that it is "for better or for worse." Well, if it is for worse, what are you whining about? You were cocksure that you knew best. Your friends may have warned you not to marry her, but you did so and sealed the contract with a vow.

And now having demonstrated the fact that you were a fool, you aren't going to improve matters by proving that you are a liar.

Of course my friend of the minority says, "Well, I didn't vote for the administration, therefore I am not bound by its acts." Not so fast, my friend! you are an American pledged to the Constitution! You went into the election fully committed to the will of a constitutional majority. Unless you are a rebel, you are as much bound to him as any other, that is if you play the game of life fairly.

[illegible]ishop; your rector; your colonel; [illegible] to be loyal, even when it isn't [illegible]ot be pleasant doctrine, but we [illegible]d doctrine.

[illegible]can to be loyal; you do not want [illegible]But he has at least a strong sen[illegible]gs. Why do you claim a privilege

[illegible]has enlisted, promised to fight for [illegible]rs. You ought in your sphere to

But do you not think that criticism is necessary for the improvement of the service? Yes, intelligent criticism from authorized sources or sympathetic criticism from any source, but not whining criticism, nor peevish criticism, nor futile criticism. That helps nobody, and hurts everybody that hears it.

It is a sort of poison gas that catches the weak and enrages the disloyal.

Every windy criticism which you make of things that you know very little about is exactly what the Kaiser would have you to do, and is exactly what he pays his spies to assist you in doing.

This administration is our administration for better or for worse, and we are pledged to back it with our lives, our money and our encouragement, or else to hold our peace.

Public sentiment is a fine thing, but not when you are putting out a fire; then everybody wants to get busy, under the direction of the fire-chief, working intelligently and loyally.

You can't change chiefs while you are putting out the fire, and unless he is absolutely disloyal, trying to spread the fire instead of putting it out, you will do better to follow his lead, blunders and all, than to try getting up a movement to discredit him. This is no time for politics, neither for the administration nor for the other fellow, and even should the administration be narrow enough to play politics, even then, it is not the time for the other fellow to be doing so.

May we say a word here about the attitude of the Irish in this war. It is an unpleasant duty to say anything unkind about the Irish. Individually they are a likeable lot, although in the conduct of American cities they haven't demonstrated any great genius for government.

They love to sing, but so do lots of people love to sing, and it is unpleasant to have to tell them that they can't.

It is an unfortunate fact that England and Ireland are so closely related, politically and geographically, and so widely separated religiously and temperamentally but then nobody living now is responsible for this juxtaposition.

And what Ireland doesn't want from England, Ulster doesn't want from Ireland. We know of no reason why, because a strip of sea-water divides Ireland from England, and an imaginary line divides Ireland from Ulster, that therefore, Ulster should be compelled to swallow an unpleasant dose, because Ireland wants her so to do. any more than Ireland should continue to swallow an unpalatable dose because she seems to have inherited it.

But the Irish have not shown up well in this war. Surely Prussia is as much Ireland's foe as England's. From our experience with the Irish one doesn't imagine that they would find the Kaiser a kindly master. But in this war, Ireland has been a very dubious ally to all the allies, and we can't see how she expects sympathy from American conscripts when she declines herself to put all her resources at the disposal of the Allies in this grave crisis of our affairs. Surely the question of self-government in Ireland can wait until we have licked the Kaiser, unless Ireland wants to sacrifice us all to her private grievances.

Does Ireland appeal from King George and Lloyd-George to the Kaiser and Von Hindenburg, she will get a kind of self-government which is long in promises and harsh in fulfillment.

It is not only England who is calling to Ireland; it is Belgium and France and the United States.

Surely if Ireland fail us, she will get little sympathy from those nations who have given all that all may be free. It will not become her to ask America to endorse her claims for freedom unless she assist us all in this war for the freedom of us all.

A New Department

We are very glad to be able thus to announce that week by week, we are to have a very valuable series of articles from the pen of Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio, under the general theme of Personal Religion. The first paper appears in this issue—one more of the many good things our readers will enjoy.

A Splendid Record

On Sunday evening, April 21, the Bishop visited Trinity Church, Asheville, N. C., the Rev. Willis G. Clark, Rector, and confirmed a class of 44. In the class there were 19 men and 25 women and girls. The Rector has presented within the past two years 153 people for confirmation. The congregations at Trinity Church are large, frequently taxing the capacity of the building. Within the past two years the membership of the Church has increased nearly 50 per cent. The total membership enrolled now numbers 802. These people represent all walks of life. Trinity Church today is one of the most democratic congregations of any Episcopal Church in the South. Mr. and Mrs. Harmon A. Miller recently gave to Trinity Church four large and very handsome alms basins as a thank offering for the recovery from a very serious illness on the part of Mrs. Miller.

The District Convention will meet in Trinity Church, Asheville, on May 15, 16 and 17. The Woman's Auxiliary will meet at the same place and time

The Rev. H. N. Bowne of Tryon, N. C. (Holy Cross Church), has accepted a call to All Souls' Church, Biltmore, to succeed the late Rev. R. R. Swope, D. D., as Rector. Mr. Bowne will enter upon his work in Biltmore on the first of June. He will have in his parish the large government base hospital, No. 16, called Kenilworth Hospital. At this hospital there will be about 500 soldier patients, brought from overseas, and 200 officers and soldier attendants.

On the morning of April 21 the Bishop visited St. James' Church, Hendersonville, the Rev. A. W. Farnum Rector, and confirmed 15 people. Mr. Farnum, in the afternoon, presented nine for confirmation at St. John's Church, Upward. The work at both of these places shows every sign of progress, and Mr. Farnum is proving himself to be the very man for this field.

The possibility of erecting the District into a Diocese seems encouraging. This matter will be definitely considered at the coming Convention. Trinity Church, Asheville, has pledged one-fourth of the amount of money necessary to accomplish this purpose.

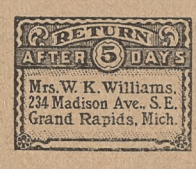
Diocese of New Jersey Sunday School Annual Convention

The annual Sunday School Convention of the Diocese of New Jersey was held in Christ Church, the Pro-Cathedral, Trenton, on Saturday, April 20th. The Bishop of the diocese officiated at noonday prayers and the afternoon service. The Archdeacon presided at business sessions. The Rev. Thomas A. Conover of Bernardsville was secretary.

The atendance was larger than at any previous convention; over three hundred delegates, representing approximately seventy-five schools.

A conference for superintendents was conducted by the Rev. Stewart N. Mitman, secretary of the Third Province and editor of the American Sunday School Magazine. Other conferences were conducted by Mrs. Loman of Philadelphia for primary teachers, and the Rev. Thomas A. Hyde of Jersey City, for Junior and Senior teachers. The address at the presentation service in the afternoon was by the Rev. Phillip E. Osgood of Philadelphia. Mr. William S. F. Pierce, treasurer of the diocesan Sunday school fund, announced the amount of the offering, which was $5,335.28. This is larger than the offering of last year, with further remittances yet expected.

That was a fine epitaph on an earnest Christian's gravestone, "Because I live, ye shall live also."



There are many people who claim to be Christians who do not work at it much through the week.

"Controversy in religious matters pays no spiritual dividends.

"God will not give us any more truth than we are willing to live."

LECTURES ON RELIGION IN WAR-TIME

A Series of Papers by the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania

V.
WAR IN HEAVEN

Definition: War, on any scale, and in any form, is a conflict, not primarily of bodies, but of wills, each will struggling for victory to the limit of its power.

I

Definition: the need of it; in view of much confusion and contradiction in our views of war.

This lecture is to deal quite definitely with war. So far we have not come to close grips with it. It has been pervading all our thought. It has been our main interest. It has been referred to by way of illustration. But we have not really closed with it. Now I think we are prepared.

I might put the purpose of the first two lectures in this way. Our boys are now training in camp, before they take the field. Their training has two main objects: first, to develop their own fighting strength; second, to familiarize them with the enemy and the methods of his warfare. Not till this double training has been done will they be ready for the trenches.

So in these lectures we began, so to say, by mobilizing our spiritual forces. We looked into the supports and resources of faith in God, which must be our strong arm in the battle both in offence and defence. We examined into our aptitude for faith and were reassured by finding that faith is natural for men; that it fits into our nature at least as closely as a rifle-stock fits into our shoulder. We also took council of our Commanding Officer, the Captain of Faith's army. We listened to His expert orders for the day, for all the days. That was really the heart of the first lecture: The Lord of Hosts versus the War-God.

Then, in the second lecture, we made our study of the enemy. We looked into his resources; his man power; his range of guns; his methods of attack; his aims; his strategy and tactics. We made an estimate of Devil's work. We watched the Devil at the work. So we are ready now for war.

What, then, is war: at the very heart of it, what is it? Amid all its various manifestations, methods, causes and results, what is the common elements that make war always war?

Evidently there is need of definition. For there is much confusion and even contradiction in the reports which are brought to us of war. Compare, for instance, General Sherman's famous saying: "war is Hell," with the eager and confident assertion of St. John the Divine that there is war in Heaven. It only adds to our perplexity to find that it is the soldier, whose trade was war, and who gave the best he had to it, who none the less calls war Hell; and that it is the Apostle of love, who lay on Jesus' breast, who sees war in Heaven. Both should be experts in this matter and they seem to contradict each other.

As a matter of fact, what people say of war is a good deal like what people say about the ocean. Many shrink from the ocean and almost hate it, as the symbol and incarnation of cruelty, rage, and inhospitable savage strength. Indeed, St. John, who makes room for war even in Heaven, seems to have no use for the ocean under any circumstances. True to the traditions of his race, who were never much at home in ships, he longs for the time when "there shall be no more sea." On the other hand, think of the sailors, the fishermen, the mariners, the great sea captains; think of the poets and the painters, whose souls have been thriled and lifted up by the glories of the mighty deep. Just so men talk of war in differing keys. No one can ever take it lightly. There is a meaning in it which stirs the very soul. Every one must react strongly in its presence. But the reactions are extraordinarily different. War touches men in every fiber of their being. It releases and stimulates every force and faculty, good and bad, divine and devilish. It plays upon the whole gamut of emotion.

Evidently war has some enormous elemental meaning, like love and fear and joy; like the voices of wild beasts and the sound of winds and waters.

II

Definition. the size or mass of war is not of chief significance.

We must notice carefully and clearly, to begin with, that mere size and mass have nothing particular to do with the intense significance of war. The vastness of this present conflict; the millions of lives involved; the incalculate waste and devastation which have overwhelmed whole States and Kingdoms: these things stagger the imagination, but they are not really to the point. Thought, like love and faith, always measures by quality, never by quantity. Heaps of dried leaves, mountains of burnt ashes, cannot be weighed against one springtime bud or (least of all, in these days) against a single lump of coal. And a pocketful of pearls is a great fortune, not because it is a pocketful but because it is a pocketful of pearls. So the battle of the Somme, lasting three months, with hundreds of thousands killed and wounded and millions of shells fired and tons of powder burnt, is terrible, not simply for its vastness, but because two men fighting for five minutes would be terrible.

Do you follow me so far? I would not carry you along faster than you can see your way. I am very much in earnest, for I believe we are on the only track which will lead us to clear thinking. Let me put my point once more. The question is: just what is war? I answer that, first of all, we must reduce it to its simplest and most elemental form if we are to know its essence. Mere mass rather obscures than clarifies our vision. To define the ocean, one would first have to know what it is made of. That would mean to separate a single drop of its salt water and examine that. Knowing what a single drop is made of, it would be a comparatively simple thing to estimate the total number of drops, the whole of ocean's mass. The essence of the ocean can be put into a teaspoon.

So with war. Huge armies, screeching shells, pillars of smoke, make defination difficult. We need to separate the smallest unit: one complete specimen of warfare. If, by examining that, we can find out its constituent parts, then we shall know what war is, in any age ,under any circumstance, on every scale, with every possible accompaniment.

III

Definition: in essence, War is always a conflict, not of bodies, but of wills; each struggling for victory to the limit of its power.

What, then, is the smallest complete unit or specimen of war? The answer seems quite clear: whenever, wherever, there are opposing wills, struggling each with its whole force to overcome, then there is war. Take that as our definition and look at it more closely. The root idea of war is a determined conflict. And the conflict is always between wills. It is not guns, nor shells, nor battleships, nor submarines, nor aeroplanes that make war. We must get behind and below all instruments and implements of warfare if we are to find the seat of war itself. The colors on the artist's palette, his canvas, his brushes and his oils, do not paint the picture. The painter uses them to paint what he has seen, what he desires, what he wills to paint. Just so do wills make war: wills and not bodies. It is not even the men behind the guns who really do the fighting, if when we speak of men we mean the feet and arms and ears and eyes which march and load and aim and pull the triggers. Men's bodies, like the weapons which men carry, are but instruments of war. They are tools used in war. used by the wills which war.

Now this is quite simple and obviously true. But we are unaccustomed to it. It comes with something of a shock. It is most important that we should take time to let it sink well in, and see where it leads and what it involves. In the first lecture we discovered that it is possible to have bloodshed without war. We saw quite clearly that surgeons with their bloody knives were agents and ministers, not of death and killing, but of peace and life. Now it appears that it is equally possible to have war without bloodshed; for if it is always wills which war, then the warring wills are free to choose any sort of weapon or instrument or agent which is fitted to their purpose. Wills at war may use fire and sword, or they may not. It is a most shallow and stupid view which thinks there is no war till blood is flowing: that reckons the reality of war by the bodies of the dead. It is the same kind of folly and stupidity which thinks it a crime to steal a purse or crack a safe, but regards it as a refined and wholly guiltless occupation to steal a neighbor's reputation whether by idle gossip or malicious slander. What is all the gold in all the world compared with a fair and honored name? How many dead bodies on the ground are worth one holy and immortal spirit?

Let us make out a little catalogue of bloodless wars. It may prove to be instructive. In commerce, for instance, it is not unheard of that one group of men combine together to put another group out of business. It is often successfully accomplished. It is usually bloodless. It keeps within the law. But it is naked warfare.

It has often been said that commercial competition did more than any other single thing to precipitate the present war. Germany's great longing for "a place in the sun" was very largely a strong will to dominate the markets of the world. Her subtle and treacherous propaganda among friendly peoples: her elaborate system of government subsidies by which her merchants were enabled to undersell all other merchants: her building up of a gigantic fleet: her whole war policy, had a commercial basis and a commercial inspiration. Noting all this, an acute observer has given it as his opinion that there was really more war in Europe before this war broke out than there is now. He sums his view up in a striking sentence: "Merchants were making war: the soldiers now are making peace." Which is worth thinking of.

But to go on with our list of bloodless wars, running it over rapidly. Think of the following classes of our so-called peaceful and law-abiding fellow citizens: think of seducers, panderers, painters of lewd pictures, makers of immoral films, writers of impure plays and novels (most modern plays and novels are impure, particularly the "best sellers," as is natural): all these are waging bloodless war against immortal souls. And we must add to these the names of all the educators who are spreading about a Godless education, whether in books or schools, or colleges: all those who by teaching or example weaken faith in God and Christ. These are all at war, engaged in the deadly work of Have you Christian men and women Have you Christian men and Women ever paused to think of this spiritual slaughter going on under our indulgent and unwinking eyes? Of the young women, by the thousand, for whom higher education (God save the mark!) has meant loss of all living faith? Is there any tragedy more bitter in all this evil world than women living without God?

So we have our little list, and it is the devil's own catalogue of wars. There is in it no blood shedding at all. That, in a true sense, is the Hell of it. Death. physical death, would at least remove the victims out of the battle which rages over their deathless spirits. War is a conflict between wills. In the light of that truth, see the moving pathos of it all. These poor weak wills, putting up a feeble fight, in the small strength of their immature instincts for purity, and truth, and God, and goodness, are being beaten down by the onrushing horde of spiritual Huns—by lustful cruel, greedy, selfish wills. Oh think, and think well, before you listen to those blind leaders of the blind who say to you: "Stop this blood shedding in Flanders; stop that dreadful thing which gets on our nerves, which sickens us, which takes all ease and comfort out of our life. Only stop that and all will be well. We shall have peace." Now the Devil must be chuckling to himself over such arguments and pleas. What does his Satanic Majesty care about dead bodies, if he may feed in peace upon men's souls!

But we are a little off our track. We must not anticipate too much. All that we are really concerned to say so far is that war in its very essence is a conflict between wills: that all mere instruments of war are accidental.

But there is one thing more, in order to round out our definition. War between wills must be unrelenting and determined; each will must be using its whole force and never letting up until the fight is won or lost. War is a very vital matter. It concerns life so nearly that one is prepared to risk even death itself to win. Here is what separates war from all kinds of sports or games. A real game, that is, a game where there is little or no luck or chance, is a clear illustration of a conflict between wills. Chess is, I think, the most perfect game of all and for this reason: there is in it not the least element of luck. Nor is physical strength needed; a baby can easily move the men about, as babies often do to the confusion of the players. Besides this in chess the will has a clear field and a very wide freedom for its exercise. The queer-shaped little pieces receive and transmit the will-power of the two players. They are, for the time, really endowed with the energy of wills. As on a battlefield, though in complete and often aggravating silence, the opposing forces are deployed, and moved about, and led out to the attack and grouped together for defence. You really seem to have two wills nakedly at war, one against the other. And you have nothing else but wills in opposition, except little bits of wood or bone. But chess is not war; nothing vital is at stake. The object of each player is not to beat down his adversary, man to man; but only to down him as a chess-player, before each goes back again to the real conflicts of his life. In war wills are not only in conflict, but they are in conflict to the bitter end, with everything, even life itself, thrown into the balance.

THE EPIDEMIC

(A paper read at the Church Congress at Cincinnati, Ohio, in October 1917.)

We have all heard of the seventeen year locusts. But only parsons know of the epidemic that assails communities every seventh day, the epidemic of "not feeling very well" on Sunday mornings. It is a mysterious malady. Robust people, who go through the week's work in high spirits and with every appearance of health, begin, early Sunday morning, to develop "symptoms." It is not their digestion that is at fault, for they enjoy a hearty, though late, breakfast. It is not exactly a headache, for the head-splitting and side-splitting (?) Sunday paper does not affect them adversely. It is not physical fatigue, because they can tinker at an automobile. It has but one general explanation. They are "not feeling very well."

As an epidemic it is universal,but not fearful. No heartless board of health isolates the patient or puts a placard on his door. For this condition of ill health has one hopeful feature. It soon passes. The remedy is an odd one. Twice-rung bells! Would you believe it. Not bells rung once! No, that only aggravates the malady. When a chance first bell of a church rings in the ears of a patient, the disease is rendered more serious. It reaches its climax. It is a time of greatest anxiety. Whole families surround the patient in sympathy. Half an hour passes. Hark! the second bell! the patient brightens, his eyes regain their lustre, his languid limbs lose the languor; with a sigh of relief he arises, shakes himself, and the fever has passed. He is as good as new. Now to church! Too late? Too bad.

The afternoon finds the patient fully recovered. Feeling fine indeed. Ready for anything. In fact the patient grows so robust as a result of this temporary inability that the parson sometimes wishes he might have a slight attack.

What is the remedy? Habit! Let me quote from a recent book on the Church.

"The trouble with most people is that they begin every Saturday night to decide whether or not they will go to church Sunday. It is always an open question. They struggle with it on Sunday morning, until the mind is worn out with perplexity. Any chance occurrence comes in to turn the scale. A visitor, a late morning paper, a failure to consult the clock, a flat tire, a dozen little things, determine the decision adversely. Habit would overcome all this.

"It is never an open question as to whether or not a man will go to his business on Monday morning, even if he might remain away or be late. His decision about that has been made once for all. Habit does the rest. Nothing is so satisfactory and so benefical as to let habit carry you on. People torture themselves by indecision. A course of action, firmly established, would relieve them of countless mental confusions."

The happiest are those who have established good habits. Good habits are like an endowment, yielding handsome returns with the principal unimpaired, aye, even augumented by use. The late Professor James was a wise man. His chapter on Habit is a classic. May I venture to quote his injunctions.

(1) "Launch yourself with as strong and decided an initiative as possible. Accumulate all the possible circumstances which shall reinforce the right motives; put yourself assiduously in conditions that encourage the new way; make engagements incompatible with the old; take a public pledge, if the case allows; in short, envelope your resolution with every aid you know.

(2) "Never suffer an exception to occur until the new habit is securely rooted in your life. Each lapse is like the letting fall of a ball of string which one is carefully winding up; a single slip undoes more than a great many turns will wind again.

(3) "Seize the very first opportunity to act on every resolution you make, and on every emotional prompting you may experience in the direction of the habits you aspire to gain. It is action alone that fixes the habit. Let the expression be the least thing in the world—speaking genially to one's grandmother, or giving up one's seat in a horse-car, if nothing more heroic offers—but let it not fail to take place.

(4) "Keep the faculty of effort alive in you by a little gratuitous exercise every day. That is, be systematically ascetic or heroic in little unnecessary points. Do every day or two, something for no other reason than that you would rather not do it, so that when the hour of dire need draws nigh, it may find you not unnerved and untrained to stand the test."

If you wish to live a strong, well balanced, and purposeful life, study these laws of habit, then apply them to going to church. The epidemic of "not feeling well" will be checked.

A Familiar Conversation

"Who were out to church today?"

"Oh, Mr. and Mrs. S and So," etc.

"That all?"

"Oh, just a few children from the Sunday school. But of course they don't count."

Now, don't you think us rude for interrupting, but please allow us a word. Don't the children count? Where is your Church of the future?Weigh this question well, and you won't discount the importance of the presence of children at the Church worship. Rather you will welcome enthusiastically the fact that they are growing up in the environment of grace to become pillars of the Church in their generation. If you take this view, you will note with joy the presence of children, and mention them first in telling who were present at the services. —The Oregon Churchman.

It He There?

Very often the rector coming into the chancel just before the service begins, scans the pews to see who is there. If the senior warden is not in his place, his disappointment is manifest. If any Auxiliary member is not there, he seems far from pleased. If the man who would "surely be out this Sunday" is conspicuous by his absence, his expression shows waning confidence. If the organist fails to show up, absolute dismay! But suppose they are all there, and every pew is filled. Is there anything more to be desired? Yes, one thing more—most important of all. Is Jesus there?—

"Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them."—St. Matthew xviii:20.—The Oregon Churchman.

THE KINGDOM GROWING— CHURCH EXTENSION IN OUR DAY

Missionary Notes and Items of Interest

The president of the Board of Missions, Bishop Lloyd, who has gone at the request of the Board, to visit Liberia, has sent back a message, in which he says:

"The respect in which I ever held the late Bishop of Liberia has grown into definite admiration since I have seen the results he accomplished with entirely inadequate means, and in the face of obstacles which confront no other Bishop of the Church with whose work I am acquainted. With opportunity for education which we would not dignify with the designation of opportunity, the Church here has a body of clergy who need not be apologized for. I had the privilege of ordaining three young men as deacons. Examination showed that they clearly understood the significance of the work to which they were being set apart—as well as apprehending the Church's standards and doctrine. They were trained at Cullington. To see the poverty of equipment there, is to have new demonstration of our Lord's ability to accomplish His purpose in spite of man's heedlessness. The American Church ought to make Cullington VERY good."

The Church at large does not perhaps realize the good work that is being done by the parochial schools among the negroes. There are many of these scattered through the South. South Carolina alone having fifteen. In some of the rural communities the public school term only lasts for from one to three months and the authorities welcome the parochial school.

The May issue of the Spirit of Missions contains a valuable contribution to the history of our Church in the story of "How Our Church Came to North Carolina." In preparing it Bishop Cheshire has had access to records which are not available for the general public and he has brought to his task a carefulness of research and a judgment in sifting detail for which all those who are interested in the days of our infancy, will be indebted to him.

A cable from Bishop Lloyd from Sierra Leone, dated April ninth, has been received at the Church Mission's House, in which he states that all is well. While no positive word has been received the supposition is that the Bishop and the Rev. Mr. Schofield are even now on the water on their way home.

A decided step forward in the Missionary work of the Church has been taken in the organization on April ninth of a Council of domestic missionary Bishops. The domestic districts have multiplied so rapidly that the Church at large has not kept fully informed at to conditions, and has had little conception of the tremendous task which our domestic Bishops face. On April tenth the Council met with the session of the Executive Committee of the Board of Mission at the Church Mission's House. A committee consisting of Bishop Lines, Dr. Stires and Mr. Blanchard Randall, representing the Board of Missions and Bishop Thomas, Bishop Burleson and Bishop Beecher, representing the Council of Bishops, was appointed to act as a committee of conference.

The recent journey of Mrs. Biller, the IV. Field Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, through the Seventh and Eighth Provinces, as described in the May Spirit of Missions, was a remarkable showing of courage and endurance on the part of the Secretary and very helpful to the places she visited. The "Field Secretary" is answering a vital need and the Church is fortunate indeed in having such a one as Mrs. Biller to go here and there telling first the "why" and then the "how" of missions.

In course of conversation with a lady who was speaking of Sacrifice Week for the benefit of the Armenian Fund, she was asked. "But, if you gave a bountiful amount in cash, why deny yourself so much during that week?" She answered, "To get into the spirit of the thing." If only every individual could get that—"The spirit of the thing"—whether it concerns Home, Church or Nation, what miracles could be performed!

John Masefield, the poet, who is official chronicler of the war for the British Government, gave his personal experiences on three battle fronts, and outlined the course of the war up to the present, in a lecture in Boston recently. He said, "This war brings out the sense of the unity of life, the sense of brotherhood and comradeship Men are far more thoughtful of each other and self-sacrificing than they ever were in time of peace. You will see dying men giving up their last breath in order to help some man who is suffering more than they. As far as diseases are concerned, this war is a healthy war, you will see men at the front in better condition than they ever were in their lives. As regards the wounded, a great work of restoration is going on, and in that work the American surgeons have set a standard for the world. But when you see the sufferers, you realize that war is a criminal infamy, which has no business to exist in our age. I say that not as a dreamer or a pacifist but as one who believes that it will not be easy to abolish war. As long as there are evil men in the world striking for power, the only way to deal with them is by force. I trust that when peace comes, the three countries which have done most in this world—your country, my country and France— may be able to work together to devise some means by which the nations will henceforth live in peace. I hope that my country may do something to atone for the wrongs we did you in the past and for the misunderstandings which have arisen between us since then. We are now together in a great effort to make the future. I am afraid you will never quite forget the past, but I hope that for the sake of the world you will be able to put it by so that your country and my country may after this time of war, work together to make wars cease on this earth."

Dr. Manning Appointed Honorary Chaplain

The Rev. Dr. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York, in a letter to The Parish Record from Camp Upton, where he is serving as a civilian chaplain, writes:

"The 302nd Engineers, with whom I have had such happy association all the winter, have gone on their way to the front. I may say here that it was their kind wish, and my own earnest desire that I should go with them to continue as their chaplain. There were difficulties in the way of this on the side of duty to the parish. These could, I think, have been overcome, but there have proved to be also serious obstacles on the military side. Unless some new factor should develop therefore, it will probably be my part to go on with my work here at the camp.

Each one of us must be willing to work wherever he can, and there is much indeed to be done here. In some ways the training camp has its own great and special opportunities, for it is here that the soldier comes from his normal conditions and surroundings into the new and untried experience of army life. And the new recruits are coming now in greater numbers. The 1st Provisional Battalion, to which I am at present attached has received fifteen hundred drafted men in the past week and the work transforming them into soldiers is going rapidly forward.

The Archbishop of York made his keenly anticipated visit to the camp. We brought His Grace out by motor on Monday, March 9th, immediately after the midday service at Trinity Church. We were received by General Johnson and his staff. The Archbishop was here only until eight-thirty next morning, but during this time he addressed the officers of the camp, some two thousand in number, met many of the officers personally at the club, dined with the Commanding General, where he met all the Generals and some of the other higher officers, addressed another great gathering of the enlisted men at which the General presided, and early on Tuesday morning, with the General, reviewed one of the infantry regiments ordered out in his honor. The visit to this camp was in every way a memorable one. It was the Archbishop's first sight of the American Army in force. The impression made upon him was most profound, as his words testified and the message which he brought to our officers and men was one which will not be forgotten.

On Saturday, March 16th, the Engineers received orders to be ready to move at short notice. Officers and men on leave were summoned back by telegraph and telephone, and from that time every energy was given to preparations for departure.

On Monday the 18th, the Colonel did me the honor to assemble the Regiment in the Knights of Columbus Auditorium so that I might say my final word to officers and men all together. I need not say what this occasion meant to me.

The services on Palm Sunday had a meaning such as they had never had before, and both early and later the attendances were exceptionally large.

On Tuesday in Holy Week Bishop Burgess kindly came and administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to several officers and men—staying afterwards to mess with our officers.

On Maundy Thursday night no one went to bed. At 12 o'clock coffee and sandwiches were served to the men. At 12:30 the Colonel and staff officers went through every building from top to bottom, to see that all was left in perfect order. At 1:45, in the bright moonlight, the regiment marched to the station, and at 2:30 the two long trains pulled out, and the 302nd Engineers were on their way to France.

A few days before leaving, the Colonel appointed me honorary chaplain, so I shall still maintain a relation to the regiment."

Series of Good Stories Told by Brotherhood Secretary

How the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew among the enlisted men of the army and navy is bringing a new tone and a deeper spiritual atmosphere to whole camps is shown clearly in the following resume of things accomplished by H. L. Choate, the Brotherhood Secretary at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, near Chicago, where the enlisted men of the navy get their first vision of the life before them.

It may often happen, as is recorded here, that a "roughneck" element may in the beginnig get the upper hand. But the men who have offered their lives are the best in the land, and once shown the example of the Master and the deeper things of life, they invariably stand for them as a body, and will not tolerate the vicious, uncouth and unclean. The Brotherhood is bringing straight man to man Christianity to the camps—through the Church.

"A detention company contained a cabaret man from Kansas City, who thought it smart to hand out dirty conversation and songs and stories all the time. He took especial pleasure in doing so at mess to bother the men with weak stomachs. He attracted to himself a satellite. These two were sufficiently quick witted and good at repartee to keep the decent members of the company from saying anything. The barracks chief was a former Y. M. C. A. Secretary, but he took no action.

"One of the men in the company registered as a Churchman, so I called on him, and he looked good enough for me to put the group idea up to him. He brought seven men over to the office with him that night and we talked the thing all over. Those seven men realized how absurd it was to allow themselves to be bluffed by the bad-actors and went out of the meeting determined to smash them.

"The very next day their opportunity came, when the cabaret man sneered at the Silent League pledge. The barracks chief "called" him then and there and the other members of the group backed him up. The cabearet man apologized and signed the Silent League pledge.

"In a number of instances, the members of the group, have, after it was suggested at the first meeting, put up to their company with the permission of the barracks chief, the question of whether they were to have a clean barracks or a dirty one. "We must live together here for three weeks. We can have either kind of an atmosphere.. The Navy regulations until he got to France and "found a great many things happening and many more likely to happen to him any minute." He began to want to find out whether God cared, and read his Testament and was comforted and strengthened. The other boy, with no religious training, had been a rounder at Princeton and was still more or less dissipated, when he was sent into the danger zone. He did not know where to turn for spiritual help. He mentioned one occasion when he came near acting the baby, when he realized that he was to be exposed to special danger after a champaign party the night before. He felt he had no where to turn for help. These two stories impressed me mightily with the importance to all our fighting men of getting a rock foundation under them before they go across or get out to sea on our destroyers and battle ships.

"One of the first men I talked to here about confirmation said he did not want to be tied down to one church. He liked to go where he pleased "as there is good in all churches". I tried to show him how little progress religion and righteousness would make in the world if everyone took his position and refused to tie up to any one organization. He did not acknowledge himself convinced. I saw him once or twice more at considerable intervals. Finally he attended Dean Bell's instructions, but still seemed doubtful about confirmation. He came to our confirmation service two weeks ago and was confirmed. After it, he seemed really sure of himself for the first time. He has been at the Holy Communion both Sundays since and has put us in touch with a friend who is to be confirmed in our next class.

"The boys picked by our Key men and brought to group meeting are not always good church boys, but are usually men of some character who can stand alone. Recently at one of our meetings, during a discussion of profanity, one of the men spoke up and said that he had been a bad-actor himself in that respect, and it was a mighty hard thing to get away from especially when one had some men to boss as he did. When asked if he thought profanity was necessary in giving orders he said emphatically no, and said further that he would make a strenuous effort to cut it out. He had run away from home 15 years before as a young boy, after a quarrel with his father over the question of going to church and had not been in-

Planning for Better Equipped Ministers

Representatives from all the theological seminaries will be in New York May 1st and 2nd to attend the fifth meeting of the Theological Council of the General Board, which is formulating a new canon for the training of ministers.

Besides the representatives of seminaries, there will be representatives from the Provinces. Those who have signified their intention of coming are as follows: Representing the seminaries: Rev. James O. Lincoln, D. D., from San Francisco, Cal., Vice Dean of the Pacific Divinity School; Rev. Edward A. Larrabee, Dean of Nashotah House; Rev. James H. Young of Seabury Divinity School; Rev. William C. DeWitt, D. D., of Western Theological Seminary; Rev. D. F. Davies, D. D., of Bexley Hall; Rev. Frank G. Scott, D. D., of Bishop Payne Divinity School; Rev. Cleveland K. Benedict, D. D., of University of the South; Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., of Virginia Theological Seminary; Rev. Lucien M. Robinson, D. D., of Philadelphia Divinity School; Rev. Edward S. Drown, D. D., of Cambridge Theological School; Rev. William P. Ladd of Berkeley Divinity School; Rev. H. E. W. Fosbroke, D. D., of General Theological Seminary.

The Bishops of this Council are: Rt. Rev. Edwin S. Lines, D. D., Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., Rt. Rev. C. S. Burch, D. D., Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Rt. Rev. James Wise, Rt. Rev. C. Fiske, D. D.

The most important business will be the Council's action on a report offered by Dean Bartlett. After a year's work they are ready to propose to the Council changes in the present canons. These changes will correct much of the indefiniteness of the present canons, and bring the requirements of those seeking the ministry more in harmony with the modern needs by allowing elective and alternative subjects of examination, thereby recognizing specialized training and unusual attainments on the part of the candidate. The new proposals allow a large amount of freedom in dealing with candidates of a mature age, with those of foreign birth and with those from other communions.

The report of the coming Council meeting will be published for the consideration and suggestion of all interested. It is hoped that Church-wide discussion will enlighten the Council and enable it to make a final report to the General Convention that will be representative of the wisdom of the Church. The one ambition in the minds of the Council is to have free discussion before the General Convention, so that the action of the Convention will embody the conviction of the Church and become a canon obeyed as well as enacted.

Mr. Blanchard Randall of Baltimore, Md., has been appointed by the Board of Education of the Province of Washington as its representative on the Council for the Education of the Ministry. Mr. Randall has been a delegate to the General Convention for many years. He is a member of the Board of Missions, and will bring to the Council valuable suggestions.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

MY AIN COUNTRIE

It is action alone that fixes the habit. This Scotch poem was written by an American woman, Mary Augusta Lee Demarest, whose home was in New York. She was born in 1838, and died in 1888. Besides this famous song, she wrote other "popular, unpretentious" verses.

I'm far frae my hame, and I'm weary afterwhiles,
For the langed-for hame-bringin' an' my Father's welcome smiles
An' I'll ne'er be fu' content until my een do see.
The gowden gates o' heav'n an' my ain countrie.
The earth is fleck'd wi' flowers, mony-tinted, fresh an' gay,
The birdies warble blithely, for my Father made them sae;
But these sights an' these soun's will as naething be to me,
When I hear the angels singing in my ain countrie.
I've His gude word o' promise that some gladsome day, the King
To His ain royal palace His banished hame will bring;
Wi' een an' wi' herts rinning ower, we shall see
The King in his beauty in oor ain countrie.
My sins hae been mony, an' my sorrows hae been sair,
But there they'll never vex me nor be remembered mair,
For His bluid has made me white, an' His han' shall dry mine e'e,
When he brings me hame at last, to my ain countrie.
Sae little noo I ken, o' yon blessed, bonnie place,
I only ken it's hame, whaur we shall see His face;
It wad surely be eneuch for ever mair to be
In the glory of His presence, in oor ain countrie,
Like a bairn to his mither, a wee birddie to its nest,
I wad fain be gangin' noo unto my Saviour's breast,
For He gathers in His bosom witless, worthless lambs like me,
And carries them Himsel' to His ain countrie.
He is faithfu' that promised, an' He'll surely come again,
He'll keep His tryst wi' me, at what hour I dinna ken;
But He bids me still to wait an' ready aye to be,
To gang at ony moment to my ain countrie.
ae I'm watching aye, an' singin' o' my hame, as I wait ore the soun'ing o' His foot-fa' this side the gowden gate;
od gie His grace to ilke ane wha listens noo to me, hat we a' may gang in gladness to oor ain countrie.

The Origin of the Book of Common Prayer

(Condensed from an article by Rev. Hermann Lilienthal, in The Church Standard.)

The earliest liturgies and forms of Christian service were in Greek. This was natural, as Greek in the first days of Christianity was practically the language of the world, especially the East where the Christian religion originated. The East was the home of the Apostles, great missionaries and doctors of the Church. Upon these Greek liturgies are based all the liturgies of Christendom. It was not until later that Latin displaced Greek, but by the time the Roman Empire became Christian, Latin had come into general and common use. It was the language of the Emperor, of the court, of official documents, and became the vernacular of the West. Naturally, the liturgies which had been in Greek were translated into Latin for use in the West. This was perfectly right when everybody spoke it and understood it. In time the Roman Empire declined, through the invasion of Goths, Vandals, Teutons, and other northern tribes; the Western Empire was split into fragments upon which eventually independent nations were erected, Spain, France, England, Germany. But these nations while winning self-government, were still rude and unlettered. It was a time of war, not culture. Exercise was taken with the sword and spear, not in books. Most of the learning and culture was to be found with the clergy. Hence the retention of the Latin in the Church services. The language of all these new European nations was in a state of flux, they had no literature, they had no settled precedents of learning. Printing was not invented. Books could not be multiplied; further, the very stability of the nations was uncertain. But as the centuries passed on many of these European nations became firmly fixed. Their language settled, a literature was created, a vernacular was established, and Latin became a dead language. The common people failed to understand it. The liturgy in Latin also became dead. Hence arose a demand for a service in a language that could be understood. Anticipations of this demand were foreshadowed in translations of parts of the Bible, e. g., the Psalms and the Gospels, also of the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments. But as time went on these fragments were found to be insufficient. Learning and culture began to be cultivated outside of the monasteries, cathedral closes and cloisters. The Universities of Oxford and Cambridge were training not only priests, but a learned laity. The revival of learning was a movement that reached to the very center of the nation's life. The revived study of Greek, and the study of the New Testament in Greek, broadened men's minds and made many scholars impatient of ecclesiastic control. A demand rose for a religion that was personal, not simply official; for a service in a language understood by the people, and in which they could have a share. The rivalries of European powers, the growing opposition to papal corruptions, assumptions and authority helped the movement.

For years the people had been training for a liturgy in the vernacular For sometime the people had Primers, or what might be called books of devotion in English. These contained among other things the Creed, the Ten Commandments,some of the psalms and canticles of the New Testament. Then, too, from the days of Wycliffe, who gave the nation the first English Bible, translations of the Bible were increasing. By authority of Henry VIII. the Bible was ordered placed in each parish church and chained, that any who desired might come into the church to read the Bible for themselves and others who cared to hear it. The liberty to read the Bible could not be allowed for any length of time without raising the demand that the service of the Church should also be in English. For the service was still in Latin. The Sarum Use was the prevailing use or form in the kingdom. This demand for a liturgy in the language of the people was not granted at once. First came the Litany in English in 1544; then in 1548 was prepared the order of Communion, when the cup was restored to the laity, and the Sacrament restored to its integrity. But the only satisfactory and permanent solution of the matter was to have a complete service book in English, to take the place of all Latin services and offices, in which the simple and unlearned might take part. Order was at last taken for the preparation of such a book, and the work was entrusted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, together with Bishops and scholars.

Two main principles guided the compilers of this English Service Book which they were preparing: First, as to its matter, the compilers did not propose to create a new service book; but they took the old service books, which had been used in all preceding centuries, in which had been gathered prayers and hymns that had come down from almost Apostolic days, and had been used by the Church throughout the world—in the East and in the West; they took these old service books and reformed them, purging them of recent errors, superstitions—errors of doctrine and superstitions of practice—and brought them back as far as possible into harmony with the standards of worship and practice of the Apostles and primitive Church. To purge the service books of corruptions and innovations was one leading principle in the minds of the compilers of our first English Prayer Book. The second principle was, after this purifying of error, to translate the service from Latin into English, and adapt the book to the needs of the people, learned and unlearned, simple and wise. The compilers' purpose was to render the service into the English tongue, and to use the quaint phrase, "understanded of the people." By this means the services of the Church might be made into a book of Common Prayer, i. e., the people might all take their share in the service and do it intelligently. Heretofore, and now, when the service is practically performed by the priest alone, the people can only be spectators, or to usc a term which has come into use, "assist," i. e., be present. But the Scriptural worship of the early Church was not only a worship in a language understood by the worshippers, it was also a worship in which they took part. These then were the principles which guided the compilers of the First English Prayer Book, viz., first, to reform the matter, and second to simplify the manner or forms of Divine worship.

The Archbishop and his colleagues were not iconoclasts. They did not destroy simply for the pleasure of destroying. They took the best the ancient and primitive Church had to offer, and what had been hallowed by centuries of use, and thus with the old liturgies and offices purified and simplified, they gave them an English dress, in the language of the common people. We must always remember this of our Prayer Book, that it was compiled not from a body of new materials, but by the orderly adaptation of the materials which entered into the earlier services.

Thus Archbishop Cranmer and his associates prepared the first English Prayer Book, which was authorized by parliament, on Jan. 15, 1549, and used for the first time on Whitsunday, June 9th, of the same year, thus dedicating the Book and invoking the blessing of God the Holy Ghost upon it on the Festival that commemorates the outpouring of God's Spirit upon his Church.

This Book was not at once acceptable to all, and there were several subsequent revisions and minor changes made until the year 1662. The final revision adopted at that time is the Prayer Book of the Church of England to-day.

When Independence was achieved the Church of England in the colonies naturally ceased, but the Episcopal Church did not die. One of the first things the Episcopal Church did was to revise the English Prayer Book, which it had formerly used, and adapt it to the changed political conditions. At the same time a few other changes were made, notably the Prayer of Consecration in the Communion office, and this revision, completed in 1789, gave us the Book which our Church had used all these years since. until the recent completed revision was made in 1892, when our first American Prayer Book was enriched.

Such is our inheritance in this Book of Common Prayer, so highly prized, so richly descended, of so ancient and honorable lineage. May we prize our rich legacy and use it more for our instruction, our devotions, and our inspiration, and also see to it that what has come down to us through all these centuries, may be handed down by us to future generations yet to come, for their spiritual strengthening, and for the intelligent reasonable and reverent service of our Common God and Father.

Notes from the Missions House

A telegram to the Board of Missions from our mission at Ft. Yukon, Alaska, gives the information that Dr. Grafton Burke, in charge of St. Stephen's Hospital, left Ft. Yukon on April 15, in response to an emergency call from Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the Arctic explorer. When he sent the message asking for help from our missionary physician, Mr. Stefansson was lying at Herschel Island, seriously ill with what was supposed to be typhoid fever.

Dr. Burke will make a 300-mile journey on foot through one of the most desolate sections of Alaska, in order to save Mr. Stefansson's life, if possible. It is probable that Archdeacon Stuck, who has been making a winter journey along the Arctic coast, reached Herschel Island soon after Mr. Steffansson's messengers started for Ft. Yukon. When Archdeacon Stuck was last heard from, he was at Point Hope. This was in January. He expected to start about February 1st for Icy Cape, Pt. Barrow, Flaxman Island and Herschel Island. From the last point he expected to journey overland to Ft. Yukon, arriving probably about May 1st.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has just closed its fiscal year with a surplus of $5,000. Its total expenditures for the year were just under $3,000,000. The gifts of congregations and individuals for regular work were $350,000 more than for 1917.

The United States Deputy Marshal at Hot Springs, Alaska, in his monthly report to the Marshal's office at Fairbanks, says: "While the gasoline lamp was being lighted at the Hot Springs roadhouse on the evening of Feb. 13, some flaming alcohol dropped from the generating torch on to the floor, igniting a can of gasoline standing there, and a serious fire was averted only by the cool-headed bravery of the Rev. Philip Williams, who immediately seized the can of blazing gasoline and carried it into the road."

The Rev. Philip Williams is our missionary at Tanana. He was probably making winter visitations to the small white community at Hot Springs for holding services when the incident reported by the marshal occurred.

Newark Notes

The Sunday school Lenten offerings of the diocese were presented at a service held in Trinity Cathedral on April 20, with an unusually large congregation and representation of the Sunday schools. The address was made by the Rev. C. E. Betticher. The offerings presented for General Missions amounted to about $7,500, a very considerable increase over the offerings last year. It is believed that when all the reports are received they will amount to $10,000, one-fourth more than last year.

The Rev. Robert F. Lau has accepted the call to St. John's Church, Bayonne, as successor to the Rev. A. S. Winslow, removed to Western Massachusetts.

The Rev. John C. Donnell has succeeded the Rev. Charles W. Popham of Belleville in the Y. M. C. A. service at Building No. 4, at Camp Dix, and any letter concerning soldiers in the camp addressed to him there will have consideration. The clergy of the Diocese of Newark are in terms of three or four months each, doing work at the place named.

The fifth and last call for the year ending in May for the Bishop's Church Extension Fund has gone out to help the Church of the Incarnation at Ampere purchase a rectory on land adjoining the Church property. A call from this fund, made five times in the year, is worth $15.00, and it goes far to stimulate the mission Church to provide a church, rectory or parish house.

Patriotic and Educational Addresses

The Rev. Dr. Lyman P. Powell, President of Hobart College, since returning home from Europe the middle of last January, has been engaged in a strenuous patriotic campaign in cooperation with a number of soldiers and civilians from the war zone, giving addresses in the principal cities of Indiana, Maryland, Delaware, Kentucky, Virginia, Wisconsin and Illinois, under the auspices of the League to Enforce Peace, of which William Howard Taft is president and Alton B. Parker vice president. The speakers have been defending the proposition that the world cannot endure half autocratic and half democratic. Dr. Abbott, editor of The Outlook, and Dr. Powell made the campaign together in Kentucky the third week in March, presenting this great subject of patriotism from a religious point of view. The address given by Dr. Powell before the Association of American Colleges at Chicago in January has recently been released for publication. A committee was appointed at the time, and brought in a report in indorsement of his suggestions, and other suggestions, which made the entire association then endorse a general scheme of educational reciprocity. The Commissioner of Education and Dr. Powell spoke before the National Educational Association in Atlantic City on the importance of more governmental oversight of our education, and its relationship to education in Europe. The movement to bring over French women has reached such proportions that nearly a hundred institutions have provided scholarships for them. The movement for a secretary of education, to have a place in the President's cabinet, as recommended in Dr. Powell's Chicago address, has reached the importance of a bill now before the United States Senate, with the backing of a large group of influential educators and publicists, and it looks as if in these few months past more progress has been made in national and international education than in all our history before.

Annual Service of the G. F. S.

This service was held on the afternoon of Sunday, April 14, in Grace Church, New York City. More than one thousand associates and members were in the procession, which was made beautiful by the many banners representing branches. An unusually large number of the clergy were present. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Slattery, Rector of Grace Church. At the close of the service, Bishop Courtney proncunced the benediction.

A Veteran Churchman Passes Away

Resolutions of the Vestry, St. Luke's Parish, Dixon, Ills., April 19th, 1918.

Whereas, Almighty God, in his wise providence, has deemed it best to take from our midst, the beloved Senior Warden of St. Luke's Episcopal Church of Dixon, Mr. Alonzo H. Tillson.

Whereas, Mr. Alonzo H. Tillson has been for over forty years identified as a vestryman or warden of St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

Whereas, Mr. Alonzo H. Tillson has ever been a most faithful attendant and worker as a parishioner, vestryman and warden of St. Luke's Episcopal Parish; therefore, be it Resolved, By the Rector and Vestry of St. Luke's Episcopal Church that in the death of Mr. Alonzo H. Tillson, the Parish has lost a most earnest, consistent and Christian worker.

That the Vestry will greatly miss the genial, gentlemanly presence of him, who has for so many years been our Senior Warden and who was at all times willing and ready to do all in his power to further the work of the Parish and whose life exemplified our Lord and Savior's command:

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

Be it further resolved that these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Vestry and that a copy be sent to the wife, Mrs. A. H. Tillson, the daughter, Mrs. E. N. Howell, and the son, Mr. A. H. Tillson, of our deceased Senior Warden, and to THE WITNESS.

Miss Fanny Raymond, Staten Island, vice president of the New York G. F. S., and a most faithful and untiring associate, has been honored by a call to serve under the Y. M. C. A. in France. Many parties were arranged as farewells for Miss Raymond, and at four gatherings purses were given her as tokens of the affection and esteem in which she was held by her friends. The West New Brighton Branch of the Red Cross, the Vestry, the Girls' Friendly Society and the women of Ascension Parish shared in these gifts.

The reticence of the Bible is sublime, as sublime as that of the starry sky. Enoch speaks not in his translation moment. Elijah speaks not in his chariot of fire. Lazarus speaks not in his hour of resurrection. The child of Jairus speaks not on her bed of revival. The youth of Nain speaks not from his arrested bier. Moses alone does speak from beyond the grave; but it is not of the things beyond; it is of the things "to be accomplished at Jerusalem".—G. Matheson.

GERMAN BEER MAKING AMERICAN BIERS, OR CLEAN OUT THE SALOONS AND SPIES WILL GO

James Henry Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg.

America is in this war to perish or to win;
To hear her call and not to help is now a deadly sin.
A million boys have left our shores to conquer or to die
And everyone must give and save, or tell the reason why.
But while loyal women knit, and all patriots do their bit;
Drinking toasts of "Hoch der Kaiser," secret gangs of plotters sit:
Where the spy, the slacker, and the traitor poltroon
Comspire every day in the German Beer Saloon.

To all who seek her shores we have given welcome warm,
Only asking that to Freedom's laws, like us they should conform.
No room here for red or black flags: only one, red, white and blue:
All poisoners and anarchists should have hanging for their due.
Too many ships have left our docks with time-bombs in their coal,
Too many powder mills blown up, with death for many a soul:
Because the spy, the slacker, and the enemy poltroon
Conspire every day in the German Beer Saloon.

We do not say it is a sin to drink a glass of beer,
But a great and constant peril is threatening us, now here.
Nine million loaves of bread a day is used to make the brew,
While our Allies, and our sons might starve before this battle's through.

Our ships are slow in being built; new airplanes do not come;
For we're short of workmen, iron, coal and lumber here at home;
Because the spy, the slacker and the enemy poltroon
Conspire each day in the German Beer Saloon.

Decline to drink een war's success in whiskey, wine or beer;
When the grain and sweets of which it's made are costing lives so dear,
Of course not all in these saloons are traitors in this war,
But no patriot can lunch or smoke in these nests where vipers are.
Your boys at front, forswearing booze, are facing death for you,
And you cannot chum with plotters, and to our flag be true.
Drop the spy, the slacker and traitor poltroon
Plotting 'gainst our daughters and our sons in some brothel Deutsch Saloon.

When this holy war is over we can do then as we will;
When incendiaries burn our food is no time for sitting still.
Pass the law to hang the spy; pass prohibition too;
Arrest the Prussian plotters and be quick with what you do.
Each day's delay costs scores of lives, perhaps your son or mine
"Clean out foreign traitors," shouts back our firing line;
Till the spy, the traitor, and the enemy paltroons
Conspire no more in our million Deutsch Saloons.

AROUSE THE PEOPLE AND TAKE THE LEAD

Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, Speaks Earnestly to His Diocesan Convention

Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, in his diocesan convention address, said in part:

"At the present moment our eye is on the battle front. Our boys and men are at this moment taking their place on the front line and in the trenches. The people of this country are only partially awake to the tremendous conflict in which we are engaged. Our first duty, therefore, would seem to be to arouse the people, and to show them that this is a war for justice and humanity, hence a war in which the Church should take the lead. * * *

"These are days when no man, woman or child in the country has a right to be sitting still. Many a business man, after he has had his dinner, goes to the Red Cross or to the surgical dressing center and puts in an evening of work. If any one of us finds himself sitting down talking, perhaps smoking in a leisurely way, let him ask himself whether something may not be wrong in his attitude towards life. Of course, for every one of us there must be hours, and perhaps days, of relaxation. We must sustain a true perspective in our attitude of mind and action. These are days, however, when relaxation and pleasure are cut to the shortest limit consistent with real efficiency.

"Every one of is, or should be, like an athlete in training, who concentrates his thought, time and strength upon the purpose that he has in hand. We as patriots and as spiritual leaders have a great and imminent work on hand. We cannot let it drop out of our thoughts, but we must turn to it and work for it with all the strength that we have.

"This means that we shall give ourselves to our parish work with greater devotion, skill and force than ever before. It means that we must do our utmost to build up the morale of our people, to give support to the women who are doing heavy work and bearing heavy burdens. Mothers whose boys are at the front need a stimulating guide and a strong support. We shall see to it that the boys at the front feel our support and the support of the people of the parish. We must help to build up the morale of the whole community. To every one of us opportunities will open, if we all put our brains upon the question as to where and how they shall open, if we use our inventive faculties and, kindled with high ideals, open every crack in the encrustation of social life, habit and conventionality, in order that a new life may spring forth."

A Litany of the Ascension

(Arranged by the Bishop of Vermont)

Lord Jesu, who hast gone to prepare a place for us;

Lift up our hearts, we pray Thee, to high and heavenly desires.

Lord Jesu, who wilt come again to receive Thy people unto Thyself;

Prepare us, we pray Thee, to welcome Thee at Thy return.

Lord Jesu, who art the Way, the Truth and the Life;

Grant us to walk in the way of Thy commandments, to believe Thy Word, and diligently to seek Thy grace, that so we may come to the Father.

Lord Jesu, who hast bidden us pray to the Father in Thy name;

Teach us by Thy Holy Spirit the things Thou wouldest have us ask.

Lord Jesu, who hast promised to manifest Thyself unto Thine own;

Grant us a spiritual perception, that we may behold the things that are hidden from the fleshly mind.

Lord Jesus, who hast bidden us rejoice in Thine exaltation;

Grant us ever to worship Thee, our Leader and Representative, at the right hand of the Father.

Lord Jesus, who hast promised to send us another and an abiding Helper, even the Spirit of Truth;

Grant us ever to abide in the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, that by Him we may be guided into all truth.

DIOCESAN CONVENTIONS

Atlanta, Western Massachusetts, Massachusetts, Louisiana and Georgia

DIOCESE OF ATLANTA

The eleventh Annual Council of the Diocese of Atlanta was held April 17 and 18, at Atlanta, in St. Philip's Cathedral, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which Bishop Mikell officiated as the celebrant, assisted by Dean Johnston and the Rev. Thomas Duck.

The Bishop, in his address, called attention to the failure of diocesan papers to accomplish their purpose, and recommended that THE WITNESS be adopted as the diocesan organ of the work. The children answered all the questions of the catechism in the presence of the congregation without making a mistake.

The usual routine business of the Council was disposed of at the several sessions, including the election of diocesan officers. Few changes were made. The Rev. H. F. Saumenig of St. Peter's Church, Rome, Ga., was elected to take the place of Dean Johnston on the Standing Committee. A reception was tendered the members of the Council and the Woman's Auxiliary, at the close, by the Bishop and Mrs. Mikell.

The ninety-sixth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Georgia was held in St. John's Church, Savannah, beginning April 17 with a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Rt. Rev. Frederick Focke Reese, D. D., being the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. N. B. Groton and the Rev. J. J. Cornish, and the Bishop read his annual address. The afternoon session was devoted to the transaction of routine business, including the receiving of reports from the various diocesan officers, committees and institutions.

The report from the missionary work was especially encouraging, showing that in spite of the many demands made upon the people for war purposes, the contributions for missions had been larger during the past year than usual. For the first time, the diocese met its full apportionment for general missions.

A strong resolution was unanimously adopted pledging the hearty support of the Church to the government in its present crisis.

The meeting places for the Convention for the next ten years were appointed. The Convention in 1919 will be held in St. Paul's Church, Augusta, and the 100th Annual Convention will be held at Christ Church, Savannah.

The tenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Reese, who was consecrated May 20, 1908, will be celebrated at Christ Church, Savannah. A missionary meeting was held in the evening, at which addresses were given by the Rev. William Johnson, Mr. R. G. Tatum and the Rev. N. B. Groton.

The services on the morning of the 18th included a celebration of the Holy Communion by Bishop Reese and Morning Prayer, said by the Rev. C. P. Johnson and the Rev. W. B. Williams.

The following were elected as delegates to the Provincial Synod: Clerical, the Rev. Messrs. F. W. B. Dorset, J. J. French, W. H. Higgens, William Johnson, P. T. Prentiss and J.W. Walker. Lay delegates, Messrs. J. R. Anderson, George T. Cann, M. M. Hopkins, W. K. Miller, A. B. Moore and R. L. Waller.

The following officers were elected: Secretary, S. H. Lynch, Brunswick; assistant secretary, Rev. W. B. Sams, Bainbridge; chancellor, W. K. Miller, Augusta; register, Rev. J. B. Lawrence, Americus; treasurer of the diocese, B. E. Russell, Jr., Augusta; Board of Missions, A. B. Moore, Savannah; Church Pension Fund, R. S. Mercer, Savannah; University of the South, B. B. Russell, Jr., Augusta.

PASTORAL MESSAGE OF THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS

Adopted on Second Day of Special Meeting in New York, April 10-11, A. D. 1918

Brethern of the Clergy and Laity:

The House of Bishops, meeting in the City of New York while the great battle which may determine the course of Christian civilization is in progress, declares the unwavering loyalty of the Church, and urges all the clergy and laity to continue to render their entire and zealous obedience to the requests of the Government.

In this war which has been forced upon us, and in which we are contending for the defense of our liberties and faith, the support of those in authority is distinctly a religious duty. We are all called to fulfil that duty to the full extent of our power, and in so doing to manifest the highest sense of consecration, whether in the army or navy, or in some of the manifold forms of work for the support and comfort of those who are in active service.

The struggle is against the foes of righteousness and truth, of liberty and mercy, in the only way open to us, and we must neither falter nor lose patience. With high courage and faith the Church must set itself to the service of the country and of the world, bringing to the support of our cause the moral and spiritual resources of our people. The present conflict in the world makes a moral issue, and moral strength will determine it.

To our soldiers and sailors, and to all who are engaged in dangerous and difficult tasks in the nation's service, we send the assurance of our remembrance, and of our unceasing intercessio[redacted] in body and soul. We make an earnest plea with all [redacted] their faces against those who, for gain, take advanta[redacted] ties of the Government and of the nation's need of [redacted] mon good, and the support of those in authority u[redacted] under God all depends, must be the great considerat[redacted] minded men and women.

Wherefore, acknowledging the supreme sovereig[redacted] God, praying that His will be done and recognizin[redacted] spiritual issues which are involved in this conflict, [redacted] and laity everywhere to pray without ceasing for t[redacted] armies and those of our Allies; and we further exh[redacted] tance and consecrate all their pow[redacted] ccomplishment of that for which [redacted] nd a righteous and enduring peace [redacted] hout the world, to the glory of [redacted] ankind, through Jesus Christ our [redacted]

Sudden Death of Mrs. Abbott

Mrs. Ada Downman Butler Abbott, wife of Archdeacon Abbott of Cleveland, Ohio, while visiting at the home of her friend, Mrs. A. G. Torian, at Evansville, Ind., was taken suddenly ill with pneumonia on Wednesday, April 24, and died the following Monday night, April 29. Her husband was called to Evansville at once, and was with Mrs. Abbott when she passed away. After a brief service at the home of Mrs. Torian, Tuesday afternoon, April 30, conducted by Archdeacon Plummer of Southern Indiana, and the Rev. Albert Leonard Murray, Rector of St. Paul's, Evansville, the body, attended by Archdeacon Abbott, was taken for interment to Shepherdstown, W. Va., and buried from Trinity Church, the Rector of the parish, Rev. Josiah W. Ware, and Rev. John S. Alfriend, Rector of Zion Church, Charlestown, officiating.

Mrs. Abbott, born and raised at Shepherdstown, was the eldest daughter of Vincent Moore Butler, M. D., captain in the Stonewall Brigade, and Mrs. Matilda Wickham Berry Butler. She and Archdeacon Abbott began their married life in Evansville in 1889, at the same time that the Archdeacon entered upon a six years' rectorship of Holy Innocents' Memorial Church, that city. Mrs. Abbott was a member of the Daughters of the Confederacy of Shepherdstown, and affiliated with the Cleveland branch. She is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Joseph S. Bragonier of Shepherdstown and Mrs. George W. Moore of Charlestown.

Bishop Tuttle's Largest Class

Bishop Tuttle, the Presiding Bishop of the American Church, confirmed a class of ninety-nine persons recently at St. Philip's Church, New York City, the largest class ever presented to him for the laying on of hands since he became a Bishop. He was consecrated fifty-one years ago.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

The Ascension Day

THE COLLECT

Grant, we beseech thee, Almighty God, that like as we do believe thy only-begotten Son our Lord Jesus Christ to have ascended into the heavens; so we may also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with him continually dwell, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

"Into the heavens", "in heart and mind thither ascend", "with Him continually dwell". These three phrases indicate that the Church is other-worldly, and that she expects her children to be other-worldly. "Unworldly" is the phrase generally used; but so many people have made "unworldly" synonymous with "impractical" and "unnatural", that bystanders have "shied" at the term, and generally begin to move about uneasily when asked to become unworldly people.

It is to Jesus' life on earth that we must look for a true interpretation of "other-worldly" or "unworldly". He is our representative, "the first fruits of our race". As He was, so should we be. His religious life was the most natural thing in the world,—nothing artificial, nothing arbitrary, nothing academic. This is what Mother Church wants us to be—natural and at home with God. To dwell in the heavens is but another way of expressing what St. Paul wrote when he urged his congregation to "seek those things which are above". To be natural does not mean to be undignified and slangy in our verbal approach to God—to be slouchy and lounging and noisy in our attitudes and actions in the house of God—but it does mean not to be uncomfortable where the religious side of life is approached in conversation; it does mean the ability to pray without the book, though the words might well be Prayer Book words; it does mean to think of and speak to and speak of our blessed Lord in ways that people will recognize are not hypocritical or canting, but are as natural as breathing, and just as real. Let us, as we pray this prayer, speak to the Almighty from the depths of our hearts, and beg Him to help us realize that the blessed Jesus is a real Jesus. Said a nurse to a clergyman, as they stood by the bedside of a dying man: "Jesus has never been real to me." There are many of us who are in the same plight. This Collect is a prayer to God to help us follow in our faith, hope and love those paths which will lead us to a conscious closer union with Him who is at the right hand of God, and yet is "closer to us than breathing, nearer than hands and feet". To be conscious of the presence of God is to mal other-worldly people of us. To pra tice the presence of God is not onl the duty of the dweller in the mon astery, as was Brother Lawrence, bu also and especially the duty of thos who are commanded to live in th world, and yet not to be of it. Moses when he came down from talking wit God, did not know that his face shon so he was unaffected and natural. Hi beholders were the unnatural people So Moses veiled his face. You and must in mind and heart aspire, if w are to be natural Christians. Is it pos sible that a great many of us lack in spiration, and have no shining eye and faces because we have aspire only in tongue? They say that we for malists in religion lack heartiness i our services. If the charge is true o your congregation, study over the sit uation for evidence that the peopl who gather for worship do not le their thoughts wander and put n heart into their reading, singing, lis tening parts. And let lay readers an priests and preachers take this sam advice to themselves as to their part in the service. If your heart is not i the service, if you are not "recollect ed", as the spiritual writers say, the be sure that even an eloquent sermo will not take the sterility out of th barren land of words and vain repe titions with which you have approach ed the Lord God of Hosts in your hou of worship.

FOR THE EPISTLE

The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach, until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen: to whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God: and, being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence. When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.—Acts 1:1.

How many of us realize that Mother Church is an interesting Church? that her children are to be witnesses unto Christ? If we realize it, how many of us are doing our share in the Church's business of witnessing? The Acts of the Apostles is a constant rebuke to those who say they do not believe in missions. It must be the one book which such people never read and ponder. It is the history of the early Church, and it was written by St. Luke to show how Christ expected His apostles to continue that which He began to do and teach. So today we read that after He started the apostles on their interesting work, He withdrew from this earth, in order that His Church should be an other-world Church. "Where the Head has gone, the body must follow. So the Acts of the Apostles is a Divinely prepared record of the will of Jesus concerning the sphere of His body's activities. The apostles did their witnessing so well that they were accused of turning the world upside down. When that is really done, then will this old world become other-worldly; then, as St. John puts it, "there shall be a new heaven and a new earth".

Ghost is outside, waiting, not inside, working.

In these days, we put "Service Flags" in church and home and public building. Fond parents wear little pins with a star enameled thereon for every member of the family in active service, or in preparation for active service at the front. These flags and pins bear mute witness to the fact that certain souls "loved not their lives even unto death". Why not inaugurate service flags for the greatest service under heaven? Instead of looking with our eyes up into heaven after a disappearing Christ, let us daily go up after Him in heart and mind, and, lo, we will find ourselves possessed of new energy, new vision, new hope, new cheer. We will see the Christ's idea of service, and our parishes will become enlistment centers for the best brains and brawn in our communities. Mothers will again dedicate their children, themselves, their time and money to making this world a highway for God, and that will be "the day of the Lord" in very truth. And then faith will be rewarded by a clearer vision, and hope will have the sweetness of a perfect fruition, and love will have come into her own.

THE GOSPEL

Jesus appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following.—St. Mark xvi:14.

It is a heart-breaking experience to have to face one whose love, trust and sacrifice for you have been outraged by your faithlessness. Upbraiding from such a source is enough not only to take the spirit out of a man, but to leave him with dumb and twisted lips. The remedy with which Jesus healed the broken hearts of those eleven who not only had forsaken Him and fled, but also had "believed not them which had seen Him after He was risen, was the only remedy that has ever been found worth while and full of restorative healing. "Go preach to every creature", said Jesus to those whom He had to upbraid. By word and deed go preach. Persuade others not only with your lips, but by your lives, and do it at once, because he that believeth not is a condemned soul, and his condemnation might be laid at your indifferent, procrastinating, self-indulgent door. Oh, what a terrible indictment people write against themselves when they say they do not believe in missions! It must be that they do not know whom they reject when they utter such a statement, which reveals unbelief and hardness of heart, and for whom there yet remains the upbraiding of the gentle Jesus, the wrath of the outraged Lamb of God.

"These signs shall follow them that believe." One is tempted on first reading this passage to say, as he looks about his little world, "When the Son of Man comes, shall He find faith on the earth"? Has the witnessing Church lost the power with which the Pentecostal age found her possessed? "Devils, new tongues, serpents, deadly draughts", taken literally, have no terror for those who resolutely set their face to cross "no man's land" and take possession of it in the name of the Prince of Peace. The great war bears evidence to this truth, as evidenced in the attitudes and actions of those soldiers of democracy who believe in the gospel for which they are prepared to fight and, if needs be, to die. And that they are to lay hands of healing on the sick, both figuratively and literally, is today a sign that he who runs can, if he desire, both observe and comprehend. If devils and serpents and deadly things still seem to flourish and abound; if the sick of soul and body, dying from preventable diseases, still smell to heaven if there are tongues not yet understood of men, it is because we are faithless both to Him who stands at the door of our day and generation and to the cause and the Gospel which

The completion and dedication of the Temple, amid both tears of sorrow and shouts of joy, was followed by about sixty years of silence—so far as our records go. After this, we have the expedition of Ezra (chapters 7 ff). Then, after another interval of about a decade came Nehemiah, neither a priest nor a prophet, but a hard-headed layman, pious, consecrated, full of courage, zeal and common sense. The sad news was brought to him at the Persian court, where he was cupbearer to the king, that his people in far away Palestine were "in great affliction and reproach". The first lesson Sunday morning is his prayer to God that He would help those whom He had redeemed. Once again is brought before us the great truth that redemption is a glorious fact, but that it is not salvation. "We therefore pray Thee help Thy servants, whom Thou hast redeemed with Thy precious blood". This is an appropriate truth anywhere between Easter and Pentecost, a connecting link between redemption and salvation, perhaps nowhere more appropriate than on this unique Sunday of the year—Christ having gone away, the Holy Spirit not having come.

The use of Revelation in Eastertide has already been explained. Its exclusive use in Advent leads to fanaticism, or at least to a one-sided interpretation of our Lord's Second Advent, ignoring His teaching that the coming of the Spirit was His Advent (John xiv:18 and Matt xxvi:64, Revised Version), which was to be continuous.

The particular selection for this morning, the marriage of the Lamb in heaven, is an Advent or judgment theme, and leads on to the Son of God (verse 11 ff) at war, leading the armies of the Living God. This fits the Epistle: "The end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober (not excited and fanatical) and watch (the signs of the times) unto prayer."

In the evening, a passage from the New Testament, which treats of our great High Priest as set on the right hand of the Majesty on high, and of the Holy Ghost and His teachings, is accompanied by the Prophet Joel's prediction of the Spirit's outpouring upon all flesh.

Of the week day selections, special mention need be made only of those from the Old Testament for the evening, Joel on war and God as dwelling in Zion, lessons in waiting and foreshadowings of the true Priest and true King.

The morning Old Testament lessons lead chronologically to the selection, for Whitsunday, of Nehemiah 8, the reading and expounding of the law of God and the inspiring message that "the joy of the Lord is your strength".

The New Testament lesson admits us to the true source of joy, not law, but love and union with the Divine-human personality of our Lord, together with the work of the Spirit as affecting that union and as testifying along with the Church to the Christ.

In the evening, the present Prayer Book selection (for morning), on the contrast between old and new covenants, is employed. If preferred, it might be used in the morning, together with the Old Testament alternate, the giving of the law, interchanging with John 15.

Ezekiel's river flowing in the restored land from the restored temple (which might very well be given in the morning, following the account of the completed temple) is the Old Testament evening lesson, and as an alternate is given Habakuk's wonderful joy in the God of his salvation.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

"Prayer is not to bend God's will to ours, but to bend our will towards God's."

Petition is only one of the elements of prayer. True prayer includes confession, supplication for pardon, thanksgiving, worship, communion, intercession for ourselves and others. To make prayer only asking is like a selfish child wanting something, never grateful, never showing true love. To leave petition out of prayer is equally unnatural. Where there is friendship there is mutual sympathy, mutual help. It is churlish to refuse the gifts of those who have the right to give. As we need the "proportion of faith", so we need the proportion o prayer.

Let us pray for our country, that it may be guided to loyalty with generosity, to sympathy with true Christian love, to earnestness with hope and faith, that the days after the war may bring with prosperity sincere cooperation and determination that none shall lack or seem to be neglected, that idle wealth and frivolous living may no more contradict our Christian calling, that America and all the world may have a new birth of freedom, larger and happier, more friendly than men have ever known.

Almighty God, give unto us the spirit of teachableness, that we may seek sincerely to know what we should do, and may set ourselves to do it, as those who have set their hands to the plow and who turn not back. Help us to learn the great and noble lessons of self-sacrifice which Thou are trying to teach us in these stirring times, and may Christ crucified be unto us our inspiration, our Saviour and our guide.

Religious Educational Meetings Held in Third Province

A joint meeting of the Boards of Religious Education of the Third Province and Diocese of Washington and the Washington Sunday School Institute was held in the parish house of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., on Tuesday, April 23. "The Program and Projects of the Provincial Board" was the topic of an address given by the Rev. Howard W. Diller, executive officer of the Board of Religious Education, and "Religious Education in War Time" was the topic of an address given by the Rev. E. P. Dandridge, recently elected a member of the Board. The Provincial Sunday School Commission held a conference at St. Alban's Guild Hall preceding the public meeting, and an all-day meeting of the Provincial Board was held at the guild hall on the following Wednesday. The province comprises the dioceses within the states of Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, and the District of Columbia.

Our Differences with Romanists and Protestants.

Prop. 1. .Definition of the Church.

What is the Christian Church?

(a) It is a society founded by Jesus Christ through the twelve Apostles.

(b) It began its existence on the Day of Pentecost, when it was endowed with the gift of the Holy Ghost and began to administer the sacraments and bear witness to the facts in Christ's life.

(c) It included from the first those who had been baptized, and who attested their Christian discipleship by the breaking of bread.

(d) It was governed by the Apostles, who set apart various officers by the laying on of hands. So were the deacons set apart and so were Timothy and Titus designated as bishops in the Church of God.

(e) The function of the Christian Church was to administer the sacrament of life to those who had received the word.

Note, that disciples of John the Baptist, who were of course Jews and not Christians, were baptized by St. Paul with water and the spirit (See Acts XIX) for men could not be baptized by the spirit until the spirit had been bestowed. Christian baptism began on the Day of Pentecost.

Prop. 2. .The Unity of the Primitive Church.

For at least four centuries the Christian Church bore individed testimony as to its essential characteristics and its mission. All the writers of these times, and there are many of them, are unanimous in their testimony that the essential features of the Church are:

1st. A threefold ministry, preserving an unbroken testimony through the means of Episcopal ordination. The bishops passed on their power and also their message through an unbroken line of officers, all of whom were ordained by bishops.

2nd. The two sacraments which Christ ordained were zealously guarded, and universally administered.

3rd. The creed was accepted as a sufficient statement of the faith, either in the primitive form, known as the Apostles' Creed, or in the more elaborate form, known as the Nicene Creed, which latter was not regarded as different, but rather as more definitive.

4th. The Holy Scriptures were reverently kept and interpreted, but that part of the Bible known as the New Testament was written by those who were members of the Church and was approved, and then set forth by the authorized officers of the Church, so that there were not many New Testaments, but one New Testament.

This unity was not broken into until a question arose of tremendous importance, which, after much acrimouious discussion, finally separated the Church into two parts, each of which held with equal tenacity the things that were essential, but each stubbornly refusing to concede to the other, the authority that it claimed.

This bone of contention which arose was the peculiar power claimed by the Bishop of Rome, which it would have been disloyal to have denied, if it had been an apostolic essential, and which it would have been impossible for the Eastern Church to have accepted if it were not a primitive doctrine.

Prop. 3. .The Loss of Unity.

At a very early date the Church adopted the political divisions of the Roman Empire in the first century, as the ecclesiastical divisions of jurisdiction and authority. The provinces, dioceses, parishes, of the primitive Church were (as in our own Church in the U. S. A.) along the lines of Roman Provinces, states and municipalities as far as it was practicable or possible.

Hence, there arose five bishops in the early Church which were of the most conspicuous authority. These bishops were known as patriarchs, although none of them was really more than a bishop. They were, in the order in which they were esteemed in the primitive Church, as follow: Rome, Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem, Ephesus.

But with the rise of Constantinople and the peculiar relation of Constantine to the Christian Church, the five designated by the Council of Nicea as of patriarchal dignity, were Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem.

They were placed in this order by the Council of Nicea.

Thus the patriarchs or popes of Rome and Constantinople became the recognized leaders in the Church, and soon became very jealous of one another, after the manner of the Gentiles.

Each claimed universal jurisdiction, but neither of them was able to exercise it, and the result was, that out of a united trunk there grew two great branches, the Roman and the Greek Church.

The Church had lost its unity, but each branch of the Church was faithful in its witness to the facts; and moreover each branch was united in that it was a part of the same trunk.

Prop. 4. .The Roman Claims.

The Roman Church claims that our Lord made Peter the rock upon which the Church is founded; that Peter became Bishop of Rome, and therefore the successors of Peter in that See are entitled to the same powers as were bestowed upon Peter.

Of course such facts, if true, would be vital to the very existence of the Church. As against these claims it should be sufficient to urge:

1. That there is no evidence in the Acts of the Apostles; or in the various Epistles, including those of St. Peter himself, that he ever exercised or claimed such powers.

On the contrary, St. Paul, who was in no sense an anarchist, resisted St. Peter to the face because he was to be blamed, does not mention him in his Epistle to the Romans, nor fifteen years later does he mention him in his last Epistle (II. Timothy), written from Rome on the eve of his execution, although he mentions several other Romans in each. Nor do the fathers of the first three centuries mention any such powers as possessed by St. Peter, nor have the Greek fathers in any century ever so interpreted this text.

It is what Fuller rightly describes as "a conspiracy of silence" in the early Church about the power of Peter.

3. Moreover, none of the great general councils in the 4th and 5th centuries show that they were aware of any such power as claimed by the Roman See, nor did they so defer to the Pope in their legislation.

They did concede that the Roman See had the primacy of honor, but that is a very different thing from an infallible supremacy over all other bishops.

4. Whenever the Roman Church asserted such an interpretation of its claims, they were invariably resisted, by the protest against the Papal excommunication of the Quarto decimans in the 2nd century; by Cyprian's resistance to Pope Stephen's interference in the 3rd century; by the Apostacy of Pope Liberius in the 4th century; and by the repudiation of Pope Leo's claims to Petrine authority by the Council of Chalcedom in the 5th century.

For, in Canon XXVIII of that Council, Leo's suggestion that Rome had the primacy because it was the See of Peter, was definitely repudiated, and the Council asserted in Canon 28 that Rome had the Primacy because it was the imperial city.

I challenge anyone to show that the acceptance of the Pope's infallibility or universal jurisdiction was ever recognized by Catholic usage in the first five centuries.

But how then did this Papal claim receive the recognition of the whole of Western Europe?

You must note first of all that Western Europe, from after the Council of Ephesus (451) to the XIV. century, was as nearly as uneducated and immoral a barbarism as can be found in history.

There is not a single name from Gregory the Great (600) to Petraich and Dante (1300) who has the slightest claim to high ability as a scholar, according to the standard of these days.

During this period the character of government changed from that of imperial Rome to the system of feudalism, in which each grade of society had the relation of vassals to that above it.

Instead of national character, society took on the nature of graduated caste

It was narrow, petty, barbaric, but in adapting itself to the new conditions the Church in the West took on the same pyramidal form. At the head of the loose and chaotic state was the Emperor; at the head of the Church was the Pope.

The papacy, as we know it today, was a mediaeval creation. It had its origin in the following causes:

1. Rome's own interpretation of its peculiar relation to St. Peter, not confirmed by the Catholic testimony of the first five centuries.

2. Rome's peculiar situation as the imperial city, and as the scene of Apostolic labors. It was one of the five patriarchal sees, and the only one located in the West.

3. Rome's pecuilar obligation to the Emperor Gratian, who issued an imperial rescript, extending the Pope's authority over Gaul and Spain, as well as the whole of Italy.

4. The donation by Pepin and Charlemagne of the states of the Church to the Papacy, states which had been taken from the Lombards.

5. The two great forgeries, viz: The donation of Constantine, which set forth falsely that Constantine had deferred to the Pope's prerogatives, and the Forged Decretals, which claimed to be Papal utterances of Roman Bishops during the first three centuries.

Both of these documents were believed to be genuine during the whole period of the middle ages.

6. The persistence and ability of Roman Bishops in pushing their claim to supremacy as against powers unable to cope with Rome. For example, the suppression of the ancient form of the Archbishops, and the restraint of child emperors.

7. The need in the middle ages of a strong central ecclesiastical power to protect the Church in any given locality from the rapacity of plundering barons or grasping ecclesiastics.

The growth of the Papal power was rather a mediaeval necessity than a primitive practice.

But one needs to bear in mind constantly, the difference between the primacy conceded to Rome in the early Church and the infallible supremacy claimed by her now. They are miles apart.

And one also needs to remember that a need of the barbaric middle ages is not a matter of primitive faith and practice, nor a necessity today.

But if not the Pope, what then is the symbol of the Church's unity and the source of her wisdom? Surely such a symbol and such source are necessary. Exactly; and, if necessary, they would appear as essentials in the Acts and in the Epistles, but instead we find neither St. Peter nor the Roman Church ever referred to as the symbol of unity nor source of wisdom.

In the New Testament, the Body of Christ is the symbol of unity, and the gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost was to guide the Church into all truth.

In celebrating the Holy Eucharist, every priest, be he Greek, Roman, Anglican, says the same words, does the same thing.

As you participate in that Eucharist you share in the unity of Christ's Body, and the hand cannot say to the foot, "I have no need of thee." The parts of the body belong to the body, not by reason of vocal assertion, but by the fact of their vital connection.

The whole of Christendom is one body by virtue of its vital, not vocal, connection with the Body of Christ.

And for centuries the Holy Spirit guided the Church through its various working parts, in synods and in councils. He does still so guide us, not as though He were an oracle, but as an indwelling power guided us into all truth and so into the unity of the Spirit. Not superimposing this unity upon us through any incarnate infallibility, but moving us, through the inspiration that He imparts to us as we struggle toward the perfect unity that shall be hereafter.

Nor has the visible unity which Rome holds out so alluringly ever been a fact in history. The great Eastern Church has never been a part of Roman unity. Nor wherever Rome has succeeded in unifying Western Christendom has the result been edifying.

One may say with historic accuracy, that the more completely Rome has imposed her theory upon the Western World, the more disastrous has been the result.

The Roman Church has fallen down worst, where her opportunity for a successful demonstration of the value of her theory has been most complete. Italy, Spain, Mexico, South America, is where Rome has had the greatest opportunity and the most disastrous failure.

The primacy of the Bishop of Rome among the Bishops of Christendom, was recognized by the early Church; the supremacy of the Bishops of Rome over these Bishops was an usurped power, growing out of conditions and opportunities of the mediaeval world. The doctrine of Papal supremacy and infallibility was not primitive, has never been universally accepted, and has not justified its claim by its efficiency or righteousness where it has had the best opportunity to so demonstrate its truth.

PERSONAL RELIGION—AIDS AND HELPS BY THE WAY

Edited by Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio

PRAYER

Prayer is the expression of your dependent life as God's child upon your Father, in whom you live and move and have your being. Therefore, any act or thought by which consciously you bring your life into God's presence is prayer. Your dependence is expressed in petition, in thanksgiving and in silent listening.

ABIDE IN ME AND I IN YOU, FOR WITHOUT ME YOU CAN DO NOTHING.

O Lord, we beseech Thee mercifully to receive the prayers of Thy people who call upon Thee; and grant that they may both perceive and know what things they ought to do, and also may have grace and power faithfully to fulfill the same; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God, our Father, whose presence is ever about Thy children wheresoever they may be, so fill our hearts with trust in Thee, that at all times we may commit ourselves and those we love unto Thy never-failing keeping; confident that Thy sustaining strength is sufficient for every need, and Thy Fatherly care and protection will shield us from all harm and evil. Keep us steadfast in this faith, we humbly beseech Thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

By Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

WHITHER

"When the Son of Man cometh, will will he find faith on the earth?"

In times of stress and storm, repeatedly in life, we ask the question of the text. It is a curious fact that, whenever a storm breaks or a difficulty arises or a sorrow overclouds our horizon, the first thing we think of is the break-up of our faith. When this war began even men who bore the office of the ministry were asking with grave seriousness, "Has Christianity failed or broken down?" and in many instances the answers of these doubting Thomases were in the affirmative. Even today, with three and a half years with unbroken storm, notwithstanding the great messages that have come from men who have seen "the glory of the trenches," others are saying, "This war means the spread of Atheism and unbelief." It is a curious fact, worthy of wide recognition, that this expression comes from men far, far behind the battle lines. Lieutenant Redier says in his splendid book, "There is no lack of faith on the lines. It is always behind them." The latter period of the war has produced a number of books dealing with the spiritual values the war has provoked, that are unmatched in our literature. It almost seems like a piece of arrogance and impertinence for one of us, safely at home, to contradict men who have been "purified, yet so as by fire." If distress, misfortune and disappointment drive men away from religion, then of what value is religion, "when every prospect pleases?" The mother bending over her dying child feels the stirrings of a new faith within her and from the new made grave she rises triumphant like a Phoenix, and fronts the world with a courage she had never known or experienced before. The soldier, rough or refined, feels the new stirrings of a seemingly forgotten spiritual nature clamoring for utterance and, without a creed with which to formulate his faith, he bows down beside the wayside cross to acknowledge the beauty and supremacy of Him who hung thereon.

We do not believe from our rather extensive contacts with life in its varied forms, that faith is waning or that once this war is over, we shall be the followers of the Ethics of Marcus Aurelius. Too often through the centuries has the experiment been tried and signally failed. Men have endeavored to set up their Republics or their Utopias or their Brook Farm communities, but sooner or later their schemes have failed, because they were founded almost solely upon confidence in humankind. The world does not grow strong by this process, nor do men become confident and courageous because of their faith in the enlarging goodness of humanity. God knows, we need this too, and we need it now as we have never needed it before, but, plus this, we demand the consciousness of a righteousness not of ourselves, that, working in and through us, brings us ultimately a peace that passeth human understanding. If this war, in the judgment of any, has killed the faith of the world, if it has slain forever Him who hung upon the tree, and if it has irrevocably sealed His open tomb, then surely we are plunging headlong on into the blackest night humanity has ever known. Our faith at its best may be poor and mean, and our lives may be miserable examples of what Christian people ought to be but, notwithstanding this, we are persuaded that the mighty war is provoking a deeper, finer, stronger faith, not only in the over-ruling Providence that guides the destinies of nations and ultimately decides the issues of peoples, but also a larger faith in that saving remnant of human goodness and kindness, that divine spark that illuminates the human heart and that can never be destroyed, even though the powers of darkness conspire against it. Stevenson had the right conception when he said: "I believe in an ultimate decency of things, yes, and if I awoke in hell I should still believe it." This is a time that tries men's souls and proves the stuff of which they are made, but it is not the time for whimpering about the failure of religion or the growing atheism because, forsooth, the Germans have destroyed the finest cathedral on the continent of Europe. No, when the Son of Man cometh, we believe He will find faith on the earth.—Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

Trinity Church, Lawrenceburg, Ind.

The attendance and collection at the Easter service this year was the largest known in the history of the parish. A beautiful solid silver chalice and paten was blessed and used for the first time on Easter day. Nine persons were recently confirmed by the Bishop of Southern, Ohio, who has been making Episcopal visitations in the Diocese of Indianapolis, during the absence of Bishop Francis. A Red Cross has been established in the parish hall, and meetings are held three afternoons a week. The attendance at the regular Sunday services is increasing and the affairs of the parish seem to be in a very prosperous condition.

All sound beliefs or convictions are based on truth or reality. Without love, all is selfishness, and selfishness is the essence of sin. Without truth, all is sham, and sham is the curse of the world.—Momilist.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

St. John's Parish, at Bedford City, Va., will begin the erection of a new church building at an early date.

By the will of the late Adele G. Thayer of Boston, St. Paul's Church, Brookline, wil receive funds amounting in the aggregate to $56,000.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Cheshire as the Bishop of North Carolina will be observed October 15 next.

"The growth of the Episcopal Church far exceeds, proportionately, that of the population at large. It looks like the Church of the future."—Public Opinion.

"The gain of the Episcopalians in this country, steady, onward, undeniable, is one of the remarkable characteristics of our time."—The News (Roman Catholic).

Over 700 persons attended the annual banquet of St. Mark's Church, Seattle, Wash. The Rev. Dr. Shayler, Rector of the parish, introduced the speaker of the evening, Major General H. A. Green of Camp Lewis.

The period of May 20-27, inclusive, has been set aside as "Red Cross week". During this time the American people will be asked for a second hundred million dollars, in order that the great work may not falter.

About 200 acolytes were present at the annual service of the Acolyte Guild held at St. Bartholomew's Church, Chicago, of which the Rev. E. L. Roland is the Rector, on St. Mark's Day. The Rev. Charles Herbert Young preached the sermon.

The Rev. James Sheerin, Vicar of St. Thomas' Chapel, New York, and a valued member of the Board of Editors of THE WITNESS, underwent a serious but successful operation for appendicitis at St. Luke's Hospital, that city, on April 26th.

Nine men of St. Anne's Parish, Lincoln, Mass., cut five cords of wood for the Church, and eleven men, including the two wardens and most of the vestry, chopped four cords of wood and delivered it to the rectory.

The Pennsylvania branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions expect to make an offering of $60,000 at the meeting of the General Convention in Detroit in 1919. The total amount presented by the women of the diocese towards the United Offering since November 1st, 1916, is $24,800.

"The war has served to strengthen the practice of Christianity among many peoples," says Lincoln Steffens, in the Chicago Herald. "I see growing over Europe a disposition to put into effect the spirit of the Man of Galilee when the war is ended. War horrors have served to quicken appreciation of true Christianity."

By the will of the late Elizabeth Wyncoop, St. Paul's Church, Kinderhook, N. Y., receives $20,000, the Board of Missions, Diocese of Albany, $500, the Diocese of Albany Bible and Book of Common Prayer Society and the Aged and Infirm Clergy Fund each $100, and the Corning Foundation $200.

A Massachusetts subscriber writes to the editor expressing her appreciation of several articles and poems in our April 20th number, which she found intensely interesting and useful in the preparation of special papers and for readings before a Red Cross unit. "For all of these I am personally grateful, to say nothing of other valuable reading in THE WITNESS."

On the third Sunday after Easter Bishop Olmstead visited St. John's Church, Oneida, N. Y., and confirmed a class of 22, of whom 15 were adults, 8 of these being men, heads of families. Not a very discouraging result for the thirteenth year of the present rectorate of the Rev. W. R. McKim. A $1,000 Liberty Bond was presented to the parish at Easter time for the parish house fund.

The Hankow News Letter of March 4, 1918, states that Drs. Lieo and Tsaom, who have been sent up from Shanghai by the Red Cross, are planning to make the Church General Hospital their headquarters for the wounded as they come in from the front, and that the Wuchang government is already using it for such sick and wounded as cannot be accommodated in camp.

It is a source of gratification to receive many commendatory letters from our subscribers in different parts of the country. Here are two typical commendations: "Your paper is excellent in every respect, and is largely read by every member of the family," writes Laura S. Paddock of Cleveland, Ohio. "I want to commend you upon the very live and newsy paper which you are publishing," writes J. W. Lyder, cashier of the Northern National Bank, Duluth, Minn.

Mr. Stephane Luzanne, the editor of "Le Matin", one of the most prominent newspapers of Paris, France, gave an address on "France Fighting for Liberty and Justice" at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, Sunday, April 28. Mr. Luzanne is an official representative in this country of the French government, a man of the highest culture and distinction, who speaks English with great fluency and charm.

A box placed in the corner-stone of St. Luke's Church, Cedar Falls, Ia., Nov. 29, 1866, was accidentally uncovered the other day by workmen engaged in remodeling the building. Previous search for the box had been unsuccessful, and it was believed to have been lost. It contained a Bible, Prayer Book, the proceedings of the Diocesan Convention for three years prior to 1866, a list of the officers of the mission and a history of the Masonic lodge. The Rev. C. L. Kinney was in charge at the time.

"Our country as well as our God calls us to self-surrender, to faith in and work for the cause of righteousness and truth," says Bishop Babcock of Massachusetts. "In proportion as we make the Church stronger we build up in the world the Kingdom which our Lord has promised is destined to overcome the kingdoms of evil. The only hope of mankind in this hour is the Christian religion. Let us go forward to win the victory and to do our part in reconstructing a shaken and shattered world."

Bishop Hunting, writing to a friend April 24th says: "I start on my annual auto trip to the out-of-the-way places tomorrow—so out of the way some of them that I have never been to them, nor have any of my Episcopal predecessors. If you never hear of me again, you might send a miner to dig me out of the sand, or a diver to find me in some river I will try to cross. I will cover about 2,000 miles, and over Nevada roads that is "going some, believe me."

"Most people are enough advanced in religion to keep the commandment about not bearing false witness (telling the truth), but a great many jump over the little fourth one about remembering the Lord's Day and keeping it holy. You cannot choose which commandment you shall keep. It is as wrong to stay away from church as it is to tell a lie," says the Rev. Frank Victor Hoag, who has charge of three parishes at Batavia, Geneva and St. Charles, Ill., and is attempting the very unusual thing of conducting two morning services every Sunday in two of his fields, which have presented him with a Ford car.

The Daughters of the King held their annual meeting at the Cathedral House, Cleveland, Ohio, the past week, delegates from the various chapters in the diocese attending. At the morning session Bishop Leonard gave a very inspiring address. Luncheon was served at 12:30. Bishop DuMoulin spoke at the afternoon session, and made an earnest plea for workers in the parishes where the rectors had joined the service of the country as chaplains and in other war time activities, asking that men suited for the work should offer themselves for the service of lay readers.

The twenty-second Annual Council of the Daughters of the King, in the Diocese of Washington, was held at St. Stephen's Church, Washington, D. C., on Thursday, April 25th. There was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 10 a. m., the Rev. George F. Dudly, Rector, being the celebrant, and Bishop Harding conducted a quiet hour. Prayer for missions was said at noon, followed by the organization of the Council, luncheon and a social hour. In the afternoon a business session was held. A missionary talk on Japan was made by Deaconess Newbold, and a question box was conducted by Rev. C. E. Buck. Evening Prayer was said at 8 p. m., and the Rev. James H. W. Blake, Rector of Christ Church, Georgetown, gave an address.

The 85th meeting of the Northern Deanery of the Diocese of Chicago was held at Dundee, Ill., on April 29 and 30. The clergy gathered on Monday night for a dinner in the parish house, and later heard the Rev. E. H. Merriman preach at the evening service. At the Tuesday morning session the following topics were taken up: The Rev. William H. Bond spoke on "Developing Lay Readers"; the Rev. Victor Hoag told of "Successful Classes in Psychotherapy", telling of the gratitude expressed by those in the classes, and the request that they be made a permanent thing; the Rev. Garth Sibbald gave some very interesting suggestions on the point, "When the Boys Come Home, What Shall We Do With Them?" He pointed out the great opportunity of writing letters to each one, and how it is well to present the cause for the ministry, since they were having all their best ideals of service and sacrifice brought to their attention. It was one of the best meetings the Deanery has held. Week day religious instruction is being rapidly introduced in the various towns in the Deanery.

The program of the twenty-third Annual Council of the Diocese of Lexington and its associated meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, to be held in Calvary Church, Ashland, Ky., beginning on Tuesday, May 28, has been issued. The Bishop will deliver his annual address on the morning of the first day's session. A special service will be held in the evening, at which the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, Rector of Trinity Church, Covington, will preside, and addresses will be given by the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, Jr., Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, on "The Call of the Times for the Extension of the Kingdom", and by the Rev. G. H. Harris, Dean of Margaret College, Versailles, on "The Call of the Times for the Religious Education of Youth". On the following evening the Rev. H. P. Manning, Rector of Trinity Church, Danville, will act as chairman at a special service, and addresses will be given on the general subject, "Church Unity", by the Rev. T. L. Settle of St. Mary's Church, Middlesboro, and by the Rev. Allan D. Cole, Esq., of Maysville. At the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary an annual letter will be read from Miss Grace Lindley, the general secretary, and communications from the diocesan president, the president of the Junior Auxiliary and the president of the Little Helpers. Reports will be presented by the other diocesan officers and from the branches, and provision is made for conferences and the discussion of vital points of interest to the Auxiliary.

Personal Mention

The Rev. R. F. Lau has accepted a call to the Rectorship of St. John's Church, Bayonne, N. J., and will assume charge of the parish this month.

The Rev. Alexander M. Rich, formerly of Morris Plains, N. J., has entered upon his duties as Rector of Holy Trinity Church, Memphis, Tenn.

Rev. John R. Stalker has resigned the Rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Cleveland, Ohio, and on May 1st entered upon his duties as Rector of St. Timothy's Church, Massillon, Ohio.

The Rev. Charles M. Tubbs, for the past two years Curate of St. Peter's Church, Springfield, Mass., and in charge of All Saints' Church, West Springfield, has accepted a call and entered upon his duties as Rector of St. Philip's Church, Easthampton, Mass.

Miss Kate Cheshire, after fourteen years of faithful and enthusiastic service, has resigned the presidency of the North Carolina Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, and Bishop Cheshire has appointed Mrs. William A. Hoke to fill the vacancy.

The Rev. James J. H. Reedy, Rector of Trinity Church, Tulsa, Oklahoma, observed his sixty-sixth birthday on Sunday, May 5th. The choir volunteered special music for the morning service, which was largely attended by the members of the congregation and friends of the Rector from several of the local fraternal organizations.

The Rev. A. G. Banks has resigned the Rectorship of Christ Church, Eagle Lake, in the Diocese of Texas, and assumed charge the first of this month of Grace Church, Cuero, and the Church of the Holy Communion, Yoakum, in the Diocese of West Texas.

On May 1st the Rev. Stephen D. Palmer, formerly of Immanuel Church, Bay Minette, Ala., took charge of St. St. Stephen's Church, Eutaw, and St. Mark's, Boligee, in the same diocese. St. Stephen's is an old historic parish, dating back to 1845. Within recent years it has built a very commodious rectory and also a most beautiful church to replace one lost by fire.

The Rev. James Craig Morris, Rector of Grace Church, Madison, Wis., has left for Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., where he will serve as a civilian chaplain under the General War Commission of the Church at Camp Greenleaf, in the Medical Officers' Training Corps. He has been granted a three months' leave of absence by the vestry of Grace Church. The Rev. F. B. Jackson of Providence, R. I., will have charge of the parish during the absence of Mr. Morris.

The Rev. E. Leslie Rolls, Deacon, formerly a chorister and a teacher in the Sunday school of the Church of the Holy Communion at Tacoma, Wash., was ordained to the priesthood in the Church of the Holy Communion, that city, on Sunday morning, April 28, the Rt. Rev. Frederic W. Keator, D. D., Bishop of Olympia, officiating. Mr. Rolls is a graduate of the seminary at San Francisco.

Death of a Colorado Clergyman

The Rev. Charles Melvin Pullen, a retired priest of the Diocese of Colorado, died at his home in Denver, April 19, aged 75 years. He was a graduate of the Nashotah Theological Seminary, Nashotah, Wis., and was ordained a deacon by Bishop Welles of Wisconsin in 1875, and advanced to the priesthood by the same Bishop. He held rectorships in the Dioceses of Western New York and Wisconsin before going to Colorado, where he had been in charge of work at Golden, Arvada, Montclair and Denver prior to his retirement from active service. Surviving him are his widow, three sons, Drs. H. A. and L. L. Pullen of Buffalo, N. Y., and Dr. R. M. Pullen of Denver, and one daughter, Katharine, of Denver. The body was taken to Evansville, Wis., for burial.

Indianapolis Notes

A most impressive Ordination to the Deaconate was held at St. Paul's Church, New Albany, upon the festival of SS. Philip and James, May 1st. The son of the Rector, Rev. F. J. Mallett, Ph. D., Mr. Reginald B. Mallett was ordered Deacon by the Bishop of North Carolina, the Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D. The preacher was the Rev. Dr. Lewis Brown of St. Paul's Church, Indianapolis. Rev. Edward McAllister acted as Chaplain to the Bishop. Dean R. L. McCready of Christ Church, Louisville, was the Epistoler. The new Deacon read the Gospel and Canon F. W. Hardy assisted in the service. Morning prayer was said at an early hour by the Rector and Rev. Dr. Brown. The Bishop was especially tender in his examination and ordination. The Church was beautifully decorated and a large congregation was present. Receptions in honor of Bishop Cheshire, Rev. Mr. Mallett and invited guests were held upon Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The Rev. Reginald B. Mallett is an alumnus of the University of North Carolina, and is completing his theological studies at the General Theological Seminary, where he graduates this year. He has had much experience in work among the Cotton Mills of the South and will take up duty under the Bishop of North Carolina, at the close of his seminary carcareer. He is an unusual man and will do consecrated work for the Master.

Rev. Dr. Mallett preached before New Albany Commandry, No. 5, Knights Templar, upon Easter Day, in St. Paul's Church at 3:00 p. m. He is doing very fine work at St. Luke's Church, Connelton, and has quite recovered from his recent very serious illness.

St. James Church, New Castle, has taken a forward step under the direction of its indefatigable vicar, Rev. Geo. E. Young. A Church building has been purchased in the center of the city from a decadent denomination and has been admirably remodeled. The service of dedication took place Ascension night, Rev. James D. Stanley of Christ Church, Indianapolis, preaching the sermon, the vested choir of Grace Church, Muncie, assisting in the service. The clergy of the diocese nearby and from Indianapolis were present in the Chancel. The improvement means a most vigorous future from the congregation.

Bishop Vincent of Southern Ohio gladdened his many friends in the Diocese by visitations upon April 14th, 15th and 16th. He confirmed classes in Christ Church, St. Paul's and the Cathedral in Indianapolis; St. Paul's Church, Columbus, and Trinity, Lawrenceburgh. His admirable sermons and beautiful addresses to the several classes made a profound impression. He was the guest of honor at the Indianapolis Clericus upon Monday, April 15th, where it met with the president, Rev. Geo. W. Burbanck. The latter, who was essayist as well as host, read a paper upon "Clerical Nonsense," which was most enjoyable. The Bishop was elected to honorary membership.

All of the arrangements for the Council have been made by the Standing Committee. Bishop Woodcock will preach before the Woman's Auxiliary upon May 14th and address the Council in the evening. The main business is the final ratification of the new Constitution and Canons.

The annual dinner will be given May 15th, after adjournment and will be held at Knickerbocker Hall.

The Rev. Lewis Brown, Ph. D., preached the annual sermon to St. John's Commandry, Knights Templar, Crawfordsville, upon Ascension night. The Vicar, Rev. N. W. Wood, who is Prelate of the organization had charge of the service. The attendance was large and representative. Crawfordsville is the center of a large Masonic community, and the Vicar is a most helpful member.

Porto Rico Notes

ST. ANDREW'S MISSION MAYAGUES

This mission will soon be rewarded for its years of endurance, of makeshifts and adversities. The leaky old building which has miraculously stood at an angle of much less than 48 degrees over the street is to be torn down June 1 to give place to the first of the new group of buildings to house temporarily the school, chapel and home of the staff of workers.

The industrial work has been given a splendid impetus under Miss Mildred Hayes. Orders enough come from the States to keep the girls busy with lace, embroidery and drawnwork. About 25 girls are working with Miss Hayes, and she, with Mrs. Garwood, wife of the Dean of the Agricultural College, are maintaining a weekly club for the girls, which provides social life and instruction. Eventually, special quarters will be provided in the new buildings for this growing industrial department.

Largely through the efforts of the Junior Auxiliary, there are now 15 subscribers to THE WITNESS in San Juan, and all readers of it welcome and enjoy it.

Not many Sunday school classes having the story of the ten lepers could have the lesson brought home to them as did the children in St. John's Sunday school in San Juan. After the lesson the children were taken up the hill overlooking the bay near El Morro, where they could plainly see the little island where the lepers of Porto Rico are isolated for the rest of their lives. Then, too, it was an easy step to suggest that their offerings of one Sunday a month since September be given to the lepers, through the Rev. Mr. Walter, who visits them twice a month, conducts services, cheers them up, and rarely goes without gifts for them, which his friends in San Juan and the States provide, or the visitors whom he frequently takes with him. Two children have lately been added to the colony, so there are three children among about thirty adults. They have nothing in this world to hope for, but they do not appear unhappy, nor do they suffer pain.

The children of St. John's School, known as the Bishop's School, have been active in Thrift Stamp investments. Mr. Henry Dooley, a prominent Churchman and San Juan citizen, started them on their campaign with a patriotic talk and a gift to each child of a Thrift Card and one stamp in each. On April 19 the total investments were summed up, amounting in all to $306.73, not including the first stamp. Enthusiasm still reigns, and the good work goes on.

EDITORIAL

The Unity of the Spirit

This Church is tremendously interested in the question of church unity because church unity is an integral part of our faith. We believe in the oneness of the Church, just as we believe in the oneness of the family and of the nation.

It is a part of our constitution. But the need of attaining the unity of the Church is exceeded only by the difficulties that confront us in realizing that desire.

And the difficulties between ourselves and the Protestant bodies are not merely the superficial matters of taste and vested interests that keep us apart; but they are fundamental differences as to what the Church is and how far we have a right to go without being disloyal to that which we believe is an essential part of the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

To our minds the Church itself is a reality, the Body of Christ, which He purchased with His blood, which is the communion of the saints and which He will one day present to the Father, a glorious Church, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing.

We can no more be false to the fundamental integrity of the Church as a solidarity than we can be false to the unity of our family or of the nation.

This conception of the Church is basic to the whole fabric of the Christian religion as it has been handed down to us and as we have received it.

We really do believe in the Holy Catholic Church as one of the essential realities of our religion.

In order to explain clearly this fundamental difficulty, let me point out first the real difference between Churchman and Puritan, not in the superficial differences of conduct but in the basic differences of belief.

In order to do this we must define certain things.

What is the difference between law and grace? It is the difference between a reform school and a family. The reform school will show less external disorder than the family, but a very ordinary family is a better home for a child than a most exemplary reform school.

This is true because the relation of parent and child is very different from that between the warden and the inmates of a reform school.

In the first place the child is of the same flesh and blood as the parent. He owes his life to the parents and is in a very real sense of one body with them.

In the second place love is a stronger element in moulding the child than is example, and it operates not in an external uniformity of respectability but rather in an internal encouragement of individuality. In the one case you produce a uniform standard of excellence among the trusties; in the other each child developes in his own way and adds his own note to the family harmony.

It is true that some families seem more like a jass-band than an orchestra, but better a jass-band than the endless repetition of one note on an instrument. That is maddening.

It is the old difference between law and grace. "The law came by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

The Old Testament endeavored to lay down a set of rules and make everybody live up to them.

St. Paul, who had been a zealous disciple of this living under rules, saw this when he became a Christian, and says, "My brethren ye are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to-Him that is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God. For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death. But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."

That is, St. Paul had been held in prison; he had now emerged into the glorious unity of the children of God.

It was just this liberty which Puritanism would not allow. It is just this liberty which the fussy public conscience of a veneered Judaism will not permit today.

In order to attain a dull uniformity of respectability, that has very few marks of red-blooded humanity, we propose to legislate everybody into this dull prison-like heaven.

It was this human element that made the Samaritan (who worshipped he knew not what) a more likely son of God than a Jew who kept all the commandments rigorously

It is this same lack of red corpuscles which so often makes the most exemplary deacon a far poorer companion on a camping trip than some sinful rascal, who is still human. No degree of cold blooded piety can be acceptable to Christ, if it passes by on the other side of human need.

It is just here where the family circle is superior to the reform school. It does not stamp out the human side of life in order to produce a wooden uniformity. It is the development of life, not the suppression of individuality.

Laughter, cheerful sacrifice, companionable endurance of hardships are at home in the family, but not in conventional convents, whether those of society or of religion. You may suppress family life in the interest of uniformity, but if you do, you will produce a replica of humanity as tiresome as a picket fence.

If you want to find winsomeness, the picturesque, human sympathy, forgiveness of faults, don't go to a reform school, a puritan meeting house or a function of society. They are not there. They have been squelched. The Christian religion rejoices in another ideal, "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

Now there are three great festivals in the Christian year. Christmas, Easter and Whitsun-day. The Puritan would have none of them. The world has adopted Christmas. The great bodies of Protestant Christians have found a joy in Eastertide, and are also seeing the sweetness of Holy Week. But the historic churches alone observe Whitsun-tide. Nor is this a mere accident. It is because the message of Pentecost means nothing to any but the 120 faithful ones, who refused to give up our Lord because they were unable to understand Him.

To these waiting ones the day of Pentecost was the greatest festival of them all, for it crowned all their faith and expectation. No one could observe Whitsun-day unless he believed and understood the mission of the Holy Ghost and so rejoiced in the unity of the Spirit.

There are three distinct phases of God's dealing with us.

In the Old Testament, it is God over His people, leading them, providing for them, setting forth the laws of moral action. But the law brought no one to righteousness. There was not one that was righteous. It produced the legal righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, of which our Lord said that "Except your righteousness exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter the Kingdom of Heaven."

Then came the second stage of God's revelation. "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us." The word Emmanuel means, in the Hebrew, God with us.

The companionship of Jesus Christ was far better than the observances of laws, but it failed to strengthen St. Peter. After three years of such companionship, Peter denied our Lord with a curse. So that Christ Himself told the Apostles that it was a "good thing" for them that He was going away, for if He went not away, the Comforter would not come unto them, but if He went away He would send Him unto them."

And so God reveals Himself, not to the world but to His Church on Pentecost, no longer as God over us, as in the Old Testament; nor as God with us, as in the Gospels; but as God in us, so that our bodies are the temples of God's Holy Spirit, and He dwells in us and we in Him.

It is for this culmination of God's revelation that Whitsun-day stands. But no one will observe Whitsun-day excepting those who believe in the Church, not as a society of human convenience nor as a community of common opinions, but those who believe in the Church as that Divine family which Christ founded and which He endowed with His Holy Spirit, and to which we are privileged to join in the Sacraments of the Church. How can we unite the Church with its legacy of sacramental grace to organizations which do not believe in the divine origin of the Church and the life-giving power of her sacraments? It is not that we are unwilling to join, it is that we are unable without destroying one or the other. I may add one apple to one pear and make two things, but they remain one apple and one pear still.

There are two separate things:

1. The Church is divine in its origin and therefore compelling in its authority; or the Church is a human convenience and therefore of no authority.

2. The Sacraments are channels of grace or they are mere memorials.

3. The ministry is endowed with the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands, or it is merely a matter of inward conviction.

4. Church membership is being grafted into the Body of Christ, or it is a temporary adhesion to a code of opinions.

5. The Church has an altar upon which the Eucharistic sacrifice is offered, or an altar is an abomination of the Lord.

It is easy to choose between these two courses. It is difficult to reconcile them under any known form of Christian unity.

Impressive Patriotic Service in Gary, Ind.

An unusual and beautiful service was held in Christ Church, Gary, Ind., on the afternoon of Sunday, April 28, one which made a great impression upon the large congregation present. It was a service of intercession for the nation, the musical portions of the service being rendered by the combined choirs of Christ Church and Emerson School, and the address given by the pastor of the Methodist Church in Gary. Churchmen, Jews, Roman Catholics and members of every denomination made up the congregation, which crowded the church. Over a hundred people stood in the rear of the church and in the vestibule during the entire service, and large numbers were unable to get in at all.

Emerson School chorus recently won the Lake county contest, and its work has been declared remarkable by able musical critics. It is under the direction of Prof. M. E. Snyder of the music department of the school. Christ Church choir has also won praise for its excellent work under the direction of Mr. Thomas Webber. The two choirs combined did splendidly in the service.

The processional was "America the Beautiful", recently written to the tune of "O Mother, Dear Jerusalem", and the offertorium was North's "Song of the Marchers", the words being sung to the tune of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic". Other musical numbers were "The Singers", by Gaul; "Oh, Captain, My Captain", by Kelly, and "Remember Thou Thy Creator", by Adams.

Rev. W. G. Seaman, pastor of the Methodist Church, made the address on "The Way to the Cross". He said in closing: "America has failed as yet to win the war spiritually, as France has done and as England is doing. We have failed to catch the spirit of sacrifice as these nations have done, but I feel, and I know that many others feel, that we shall accept the way of sacrifice, take up the cross and follow on to victory."

A special Litany was read by Rev. Wilbur Dean Elliott, Rector of the Church, and the prayers of the large congregation were offered for the wounded, the sick and dying, for victory, if it be God's will, for the enlightenment of the enemy, and for the strengthening of those who governed the nation.

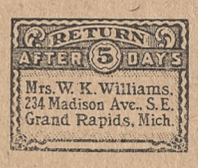
The Cross Will Lead the Allied Flags to Victory

"The opportunity before the Christian Churches in this country is almost startlingly plain," says Dean Rousmaniere in a message to his parishioners of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, Boston. The allies are rapidly subordinating their individual policies to the necessity of defeating the Teutonic powers. There is now a generalissimo on the front, a brilliant French general. All the armies are one army under his direction. We can no longer speak of the front as British, French or Italian. From the Adriatic to the Channel runs the front of the free nations, united as one nation. This is the greatest event of the year in the war. To recognize this and to interpret it is the duty of the Church today. We are called as Christians not simply to exhort our men to fight for their country, or their parents to give their sons willingly in the country's defense. We must make plain the unity of the nations in a spiritual purpose. We must rally our people to toil and give and sacrifice for the end for which all free peoples are struggling. We must let our allies speak from our pulpits of their own interpretation of the common purpose and their own contribution to the victory that must come.

"We must remember in our public prayers the soldiers of the nations with whom we are allied, as well as our own men, the sorrow of those at home in our sister nations as in our own land. If the Church will take this God-given opportunity to make evident the common purpose, to weld the nations into a spiritual unity behind and beneath the unity of military command, they will hasten the coming of a better world, not only after the war, but even now in the midst of war. The order of our ecclesiastical processions will then be a true symbol. The Cross will lead the allied flags to the victory of righteousness."

A little boy saw his father using a spirit-level to see if the board he was planing was "true" and straight. .

"What's the use of being so careful, papa, he asked. "It's pretty good, I guess. Looks so."



"Guessing won't do in carpenter work!" said his father, "sighting" along the edge of the board, and shaving it just the least bit in the world. "You have to be just right. Folks guess at too many things. God doesen't like that way of living."

"Guess there aren't any spirit-levels for living by!" laughed the little boy, watching him.

"Yes, there are!" said his father earnestly. "You find them in the Bible. Try all your actions by that. Make 'em true and straight and no guess work about 'em!"—Selected.

LECTURES ON RELIGION IN WAR-TIME

A Series of Papers by the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania

WAR IN HEAVEN
VI.

Application: While there is evil in the world, three things are true of war:

1. It is the only way to good, for every man and for all men.
2. If the good fought for is common, and not merely a private good, then the opposing evil must be met on its own chosen ground and beaten down.
3. As God's good Will is always at war with evil, so God's good Spirit arms and supports His warriors in welfare, while they are true to their allegiance.

IV.

Application: while there is evil in the world, three things are true of War. First: War, in its strict sense, is the only way to good, for every man and for all men.

So far, so good. We have finished our preliminary work. We have our definition. War is only and always a spiritual thing, however much it may employ material instruments. It is a conflict between wills, each struggling to the very limit of its power to overcome its enemy. Now to our real work, namely, to apply what we have learned to the present situation; to find our way to the meaning of this War. now that we have grasped more clearly the meaning of all war.

We shall find our way rather clearly marked along three lines of thought, which I may put as follows:

First: while there is evil in the world, there must be war. For war is is the only way to good for any man and for all men. The will to good must utterly triumph over the will of evil or there is no hope for it. Good, like evil, which is its opposite, is only in the will. And good finds evil directly in its way: resolute, malignant, stopping at nothing. A good will is one that overcomes the evil, just as an evil will is one that overcomes the good. Conflict is the very essence of the situation. It is the very condition of our spiritual life. Our freedom is not given us to start with. Far from it, Our minds are not given to us at birth furnished with knowledge. Our wills are not given us already victors and at liberty. All we have to start with is a liberty of choice; we have a chance to declare war on evil and to fight it through until we win our freedom; we have a chance to yield supinely, to surrender at discretion. And the conflict is desperate and determined warfare. It is no sport for idle hours. It is a battle to the death, that is, battle until death. It demands the sacrifice, if need be, of all material welfare and prosperity, even of bodily life itself.

Our Lord is very graphic and insistent on this point. He lays down an austere but eminently reasonable rule for wills fighting for the good. "If thy foot cause thee to stumble, cut it off and cast it from thee; it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell. If thine eye cause thee to stumble, pluck it out; it is better for thee to enter into the Kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to cast into hell." You may say this is picture-language, not to be taken literally. But the point is clear enough and absolutely reasonable. If a good will is the great prize, the only prize worth winning , no sacrifice is too great to make the will good. And the whole instinctive conscience of the race welcomes and echoes to this teaching. "'Tis man's perdiction to be safe if for the truth he ought to die." Which famous saying is, after all only a weak and halting version of our Lord's own searching question: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Well. then, there is nothing wrong in our own dear boys giving their lives by hundreds and thousands in a good cause. There is nothing wrong in the torn and bleeding bodies of the martyrs. There is nothing in it to shake our faith in God. How blind we are to think so! What better proof could possibly be given that the spirit is still master of the flesh? that the will to good, created and sustained by God, is strong among us, even in the midst of our softness and materialism? Millions of the fairest and finest of our young men; yes, and caught up among them, many who heretofore had given no sign of spiritual faith or heroism, have the will to give up life itself if only evil may be laid low.

Mark you, I fully admit that this is an ideal picture. I am not forgetting the dreadful "back-wash" of the War. Among the fighting ranks there are doubtless very many who are moved by no high faith, or generous devotion; very many selfish, lustful, brutal and brutalizing spirits. They may be fighting in a good cause, but they are really servants and agents of the devil. There is undoubtedly a real poison at work here and it does grievous harm. It is the deepest tragedy of war. But note this carefully: the horror of it is not in warfare; it is in the fact that these men are not worthy of their warfare. They are really traitors to their cause. Were they, with all the others, true warriors for good, there would be no spiritual tragedy. All would be Knights of God, Crusaders of the Cross, not counting their lives dear if by their deaths they may be proved men of good will. That first then: while there is evil in the world, there must be war; for war is the only way to good for any man and for all men.

V.

Secondly: If the good fought for is a common, and not merely a private good, then the opposing evil must be met on its own chosen ground and beaten down.

Next comes the point at which perhaps there is most confusion in our thought. "Spiritual welfare," men say "is obviously right and martyrdom must not be shunned. But killing people: blowing them to atoms with great guns! Even if they are enemies to good; even if their victory means evil triumphant in the world; even so, how can it be right, how can it be Christian to take their lives deliberately? How can goodness be really secured by the shambles of a battlefield?" Well, let us see. Let us first and quite honestly recall those great words of Christ about loving enemies, and suffering patiently injury and wrong, and blessing them that curse. These commands of His are absolutely binding upon us. There can be no doubt of that. He never spoke in haste. He never ought to speak in vain. But is it not quite clear that whatever else He means, He does not and He cannot mean that we should compromise with evil, or submit our wills to it, or identify ourselves with it? However strange these counsels seem, they are still counsels of warfare; of opposition; of hostility to evil. Evil is to be beaten down and here are the weapons which He recommends. That is the point. But, do you say, is it not absurd to call such things weapons of warfare? Can meekness and forgiveness ever win a fight? Yes indeed, they can on one condition, namely, that I am fighting single-handed against evil in its attacks on me and on my soul. In this case these are the only weapons which I dare use, the only weapons which will surely accomplish my good-will. Railed at, not to answer back; misrepresented, not to complain; spitted on, not to cry out; crucified. not to blaspheme; injured, yet still ready to do good; neglected and forgotten, yet always eager to serve and bless: what is that but to show a perfect mastery, a complete victory? For the attack of evil is on my spiritual integrity: on my ability to hold fast to God and good. Waves beating vainly on a rock: fire trying gold and making it more pure: those will serve as illustrations. No evil can enter into me and harm me unless I myself give way. So we come to understand the true strategy and tactics of a perfectly victorious battle against evil, as it strikes at and threatens our own spiritual life. "By your endurance ye shall win your souls."

But that is not all the story of our warfare against evil. We are not only or merely individuals, each with a soul to save and a holy stronghold of the spirit to defend. We are members; we are social; we are bound each to each by infinitely strong and sacred bonds. Indeed, the social bond is primary. We must be members even before we can be individuals. We are born into a family before we have names. And this fundamental note of social life runs through all God's dealings with us. If His gift of natural birth comes through the natural family, so does His gift of the new spiritual birth come through His own spiritual family on earth: the Church, which is Christ's Body.

And, like the family, the State or Nation is God's ordinance. It is a sacred thing. It is God's Will that we should safeguard and defend it and keep it at all costs and hazards true to His laws and purposes.

Here is quite a different situation which brings with it new and yet necessary obligations. If evil attacks my family, my nation, I am vitally concerned. To be unmoved, to hold aloof, not to give my own life in actual help, would be as grievous sin on my part as to let evil into my own soul by yielding to it. While I have no one but myself to think of, I must bare my breast and let evil do its worst, showing it that it can do nothing. But with society, sacred institutions, Christian civilization depending upon me, I must rush instantly to arms.

And what shall those arms be? Why, that depends upon the enemy. That is in his hands. Whatever he may choose, however he may attack, I must be prepared to meet him. If a thief breaks into my house, I bring the force of the law against him, not to save my gold or silver, but to vindicate the social order: to make society safe against robbers. If a murderer, bent upon killing, comes my way, I may shoot him down, not because there is anger or hatred in my heart; not because I am myself a murderer; but because I am set to save society from murderers, to save the murderers themselves from doing murder.

And so, on the largest scale imaginable: on the scale of this present War. Given a deliberate and unprovoked attack of evil (not that provocation ever condones sin, but it does include the provoker in the guilt of sin) given a definitely evil force set in array against a definitely good one: given the vital interests of society involved; if evil leads on to battle, good must take the field against it, in the name of God and Christ. And good can do it in the name of God and Christ because good in doing it can keep evil wholly from its own good will. It fights, it kills, not for love of killing: it hates them both; it bears no malice; it has room for infinite pity and compassion even for the enemies it slays. But deeper and stronger and more God-like than its shrinking from bloodshed and its hate of killing, is its unalterable, inflexible will to defend to the uttermost what has been intrusted to it of the common good.

One word about reprisals. The situation is confused, I think, by the word generally used. "Reprisal" seems to mean revenge, and revenge is always and absolutely wrong. Revenge means adding sin to sin. It means yielding to and not conquering the enemy. On the other hand, infamous methods of warfare are to be judged not only by their infamy, but also by their effectiveness. If German atrocities are not only wild outbursts of cruelty and lust, but are really dangerous weapons of offence, threatening disaster to our good cause which would otherwise be safe, then they must be met and baffled. And in meeting and baffling them in this spirit and for this end, we may still be keeping ourselves wholly clear from evil: we may still be fighting only for good, our enemies' good as well as our own. This, then, is the common guide for our thought: to war for good in a common, not a private cause, one must meet evil on its chosen ground and beat it down.

VI.

Thirdly: as God's good Will is constantly at War with evil, so God's good Spirit arms and supports His warriors in Warfare if they are true to their allegiance.

It is a very lamentable thing that in these days we talk and talk freely about the Will of God, without having the shadow of an idea of its true meaning. Will, of course, is personal: it is the very essence of personality; it is the very opposite and contradiction of blind force moving mechanically in a fixed orbit, to an incalculable goal. To ascribe will to God means that there is no iron fate at all: that power which moves and rules the world and all things in it is the force of a free will. "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." There is Christ's summary of the process of creation in its beginning and continuance. That is the very alphabet of faith in God. But we have lost our grasp on it. Take that great prayer of our Lord's: the greatest of all the petitions in His Prayer of Prayers: "Thy Will be done." The sound of the words, as we pronounce them, is in our ears a note of fatalism. The prayer seems a prayer simply of resignation, of passive submission to a fixed, arbitrary and mechanical decree. But in reality the petition is a war cry with which the Christian army takes the field. The Will of God is not done. That is the whole trouble. It is God's own children who are not doing it. By His own free Will He gave them will and, with the gift, the freedom to use it freely. And they have used their will for evil and against God and good. Hence all the misery and sin and bitter suffering and sorrow: hence all the wars and crimes: hence the very necessity of conflict. To set this right: to crush out all rebellion: to bring first my own will into complete obedience, and by my own obedience to set forward the doing of God's Will by every one in all the world: that is the great purpose of the Christian, as of Christ Himself: that is the meaning of the prayer which He has taught us: "Thy will be done as in Heaven so on earth."

I tried to make this clear in my last lecture. I tried to show that God, the All-Sovereign, for His own good purposes, allows evil for a season, none the less He never for an instant steps from His Throne or declines a hair's-breadth from His pure righteousness and perfect goodness. While He allows evil, He still circumvents and conquers it, making the very wrath of man to turn to His praise: beating down evil to the ground at the very moment that it nails Him to the Cross.

Verily, then, there is no War-God. We are in no danger of believing it. We have seen the blasphemy and folly of that creed. But God, the Lord of Hosts, is ceaselessly at war. He is, in very truth a Warrior. He fights evil. He pours out the whole volume of His hatred on it. And His hatred of the evil is the precise counterpart and measure of His love for those who are its victims. He loves the sinner while and as He hates the sinner's sin. He will not take from His children the possibility of sinning; for that would be to make them no more children but mere automata. But the whole resistless power of His Godhead is ready for the rescue of His children from the evil if they will freely give Him entrance.

So God is present and actively engaged in every battle for the good and against the evil. He is not a separated, isolated Figure leading on His armies. Nor does He send His fire down from Heaven to consume the enemy. But He is present, really present, in the Person of His Holy Spirit in His soldiers' hearts. By His Spirit He arms, upholds and re-enforces them in their holy warfare for the doing of His Will. That, I think, is the meaning of St. John's vision of the War in Heaven. True, we fight on earth, but Heavenly power reaches down and touches and sustains us: God fights in us as we fight for Him.

As we fight for Him: of course, that is the crucial point. God in His love forgives us; but not anyhow, not just because we ask Him; but as we ourselves forgive. Just so in warfare, whether it be our single combats against evil in our own souls, or the bloody war in France and Flanders for the vindication of social and political righteousness and truth, God fights in us, as we fight for Him. The Germans volubly and confidently call upon their War-God. It is his business to back up and see them through. They claim him as utterly committed to them and their cause. They fill the air with blasphemous assertions treacheries have Divine sanction. But treacheries have divine sanction. But not so we, God helping us. As Lincoln said in our last war, our real anxiety is, not that God shall be on our side, but that we shall be on His.

And that is our chief responsibility. For if we falter in our task , if we give place to base ideals, if we shrink from necessary sacrifice, then He will h to leave us, because we shall have driven Him away. He will work out His own victory in His own time, but we shall not be sharers in it.

On the other hand, if we hold fast and are true to our allegiance; spurning all evil in ourselves, while we are fighting it in others; if we let our high cause purify and mould us to its own ends; then neither fire nor smoke nor battlefields reeking with carnage, nor rivers of pain and woe can separate us from Him. Nay, more than that, thes very horrors, which are indeed the work of Satan, shall be changed and transmuted by God's touch and in His presence; caught up into the majesty of Heaven's own warfare; made part of God's own Personal campaign for the salvation of His children and the building of His Kingdom.

ARE "DIVINES" HUMAN?

The old-fashioned and pompous title of "divine", when applied to a minister or a priest, is but an evidence of a certain estrangement and lack of understanding between the clergy and laity. This misunderstanding has led to conclusions which are as absurd as they are harmful. In a day when politicians, or rather, of course, statesmen, are no longer picturesque dignitaries, uttering sonorous platitudes, but keen and effective men, with the capacity for getting things done; when young physicians are no longer compelled to wear beards to add "the weighty years" to their countenance; when the lawyer is no longer the reserved and mystic counsellor, but the astute and skillful pleader, keeping close to the people—in such a day the world of men has removed the ministry and what the ministry represents one step further from themselves, and have thereby stamped him with ineffectiveness.

The ministers often indulge in a sly laugh at their critics. Ministers are human enough to have their weaknesses, but they have not all the weaknesses attributed to them. They may not be very good business men, in the narrow sense of that word. Few men are, even those engaged in business, for the ordinary business man gets about as little for his effort and his money as any class on earth. Of course, my readers are all extraordinary business men, and they are getting full value for all their efforts. But, even as business men, ministers are not so bad. They often manage to build a church and to provide an income for it from a community that can scarcely provide a living for a grocer with four children.

Ministers may be called "divines", and set apart on that account, but when it comes to getting a pretty good return on their efforts to live, they show some human common sense. They are not, as a rule, addicted to a lot of habits that may cheer life for a moment, but in the end exacts their toll of woe and inefficiency. The insurance companies will tell you that ministers have learned the "knack of living". Not because they are different from other men in the stuff of which life is made, but because of some developed strength against the habits that destroy.

Ministers succeed in tasks in which the world would fail. Take Sunday schools, for example. They are often compared with public schools, to the disadvantage of the Sunday school. But note the difference. Suppose the public schools were equipped with voluntary teachers, and that there was no "truancy law", and children might go or not as they pleased, subject only to parental discipline! Our public schools would be chaos. But in spite of more or less irregular teachers and somewhat indifferent or indulgent parents, there are many Sunday schools in our land that are a credit to those who conduct them.

Our "divines", too, show many human qualities in their epicurean taste for the good things of this world. They want the very best as a rule, not the inferior things. I do not mean in such imitation excellencies as food and raiment. Any one with a little money can have such sasisfactions. Complacency over such things, as if they denoted superior intelligence or station, or taste for life's good things, is rather a cheap way of seeking distinction. Any assumption of superiority because one has the legal right to buy things, as if such a privilege conferred some unusual degree of control over the affairs of other mortals, or must exact some admiration, reminds me of the remark of the only millionaire of a small town to a group of awed friends: "This is certainly beautiful weather, if I do say it myself."

Our "divines" have learned the secret of being more human, not less so. For the exalted human side of our nature is the part of it which is engaged with everything that is pure, everything that is lovely, everything that is of good report.

THE KINGDOM GROWING— CHURCH EXTENSION IN OUR DAY

The Dominican Republic, which occupies the eastern half of the island of Haiti, or Espanola, is at once the oldest settlement on the western hemisphere and the newest mission field of our Church. The Rev. William Wyllie has established his headquarters in Santo Domingo, whose cathedral shelters the tomb of Christopher Columbus, and is holding regular services in Fort Ozama. The republic covers an area of nearly 20,000 square miles, with an estimated population of 700,000. So far as our Church is concerned, the territory is untouched, although there are quite a number of our own people at the capital and in and around the sugar plaintations.

Good magazines are needed in St. Matthew's Mission, Fairbanks, Alaska, for distribution among the miners and trappers in that part of Alaska. The supply has fallen off, and it is desired during the coming summer to secure copies to have in reserve for the winter. Also, if there are any individuals or Church schools having juvenile books—especially books for boys and younger children—which they can spare, they would be put to excellent use by the children of St. Matthew's. Books and magazines should be sent by mail, addressed to the Rev. H. H. Lumpkins.

Have you read the Leaflet W. A. 25 (4), issued by the Woman's Auxiliary at the Church Missions House in New York, on "The United Offering"? It says: "Like many of the greates things, the United Offering had a very small beginning. A missionary offering was taken at the Triennial of 1889, amounting to $2,188.64, and ever since, at each Triennial, such an offering has been made, until now the United Offering has grown to such proportions that it supports nearly two-thirds of the women workers sent by the Church to the mission field. If you could accept the call of Christ and go to spread the Gospel, what would you do? You would prepare yourself for whatever work you were to undertake, and would probably train as a nurse, a teacher or an evangelist. You have not been able to do this, but somewhere some woman is doing that work—doing your work for you—and she is a United Offering worker. Now you see why we should feel the appeal of the little blue boxes as a personal one. It represents our share in the work. When we drop money into it, we are helping to support some woman who is our substitute in the great army at the front that is fighting to win the world for Christ.

All these women are working for their Master. They serve Him in the Far West and in our Eastern mountains, and in the Southern mill districts, in the snows of Alaska, under the burning sun of the Philippines, in China, in Japan, and in Africa. Towards this support will go the voluntary offerings gathered during the three years from one Triennial to the next. If the love that inspires these gifts should wax cold and the thousands of blue boxes—or indeed any number of them—be neglected, what would happen? Work which should go triumphantly forward might have to be curtailed; faithful women might be withdrawn from the work, leaving the sick and poor who look to them for help and guidance; souls would hunger for the spoken word, and the absent teacher or the faithful nurse would be sadly missed.

We are grateful that we can say that as yet this has never happened. The United Offering has steadily grown from year to year, and at each Triennial we have realized with thankfulness that the gift has made possible a very real advance in the Church's work.

But though much has been accomplished, we might do more. There are in the Church about 500,000 women communicants. If each one gave to the United Offering even as little as one penny a day, that would mean a yearly gift of $1,825,000, and for the three years $5,475,000. Think of what that would mean to the mission of the Church! At the Triennial of 1916 the United Offering was $353,619.76. That seems like a large sum, but would it not be wonderful if, by a really united effort, we could make an offering in which every woman in the Church would have a share!

Will you not ask for a box and help toward this great end?

Here is a cheery letter from the front:

"March 18—Still in the line and have been through the first gas attack. It lasted from 6 p. m., March 16, to 6 p. m., March 17, and was a heavy bombardment of gas shells, small caliber. As far as is known here, our regiment suffered no casualties, although one or two minor cases are rumored. It was extremely annoying, because the gas guards were over-zealous and we were up half a dozen times to get our masks on. Early in the morning I got up and took a ration party out to the front line. It was a wonderful morning and a great sunrise, all pink, red and gold. Returning, I could hear birds singing away in the fields, where no two feet of earth remained unturned. During moments such as these, when no firing is heard, it is hard to realize that there is a war."

A few days later:

"Out of the trenches! It's a great feeling to know you are a veteran. The ones higher up have decreed that we should spend several days on a hike. The relief of the regiment was made on a drizzly, wet night. The clay slopes leading down into No Man's Land were slippery as ice. Under the heavy load of full pack, overcoat and an 88-pound tripod or gun, the men slid into shell holes and slipped down steep grades in an exasperating way. We reached our dugouts in the rear about midnight and were well enough ready for a good sleep. The next morning was likewise cloudy and rainy, which kept the boche planes at home, hence he did not see the columns of soldiers going along the roads—good targets for bombs. We hiked to a rail head and became sardines for the night in these toy freight cars for '40 hommes or 8 chevaux'. The chevaux had occupied them previously.

"The night was cold and we stayed awake almost all night. We detrained in good weather about noon the next day and began a hike of 23 kilometers, or about 15 miles. That was some stunt to begin on, with the loads the men had to carry, and all the strenuous times of the last few days and nights. Also, it is some job to move a division of men and all the baggage they carry with the transportation available.

"We pulled into the nicest, cleanest little village I have yet seen in France. Although it was 10 p. m., the men trudged in singing. They have an indomitable spirit in this regiment. It was midnight before I got around to my billet, but when I was shown to a real bed, believe me, I wasted no time in crawling in. We spent the next day in a much-needed clean-up. The men and myself were plastered with mud, uniforms torn and ragged, leggins missing, shoes out. It was a bright, sunny day, and seemed like Sunday.

"We left the next day for the second lap. The country we are now in has seen neither the ravages of war nor the passage of other American troops. It is rolling country, full of brooks, old trees and quaint little villages, which are more prosperous looking than any we have so far been through.

"We reached here about noon, and after billeting, everybody turned out on one of two missions. The first thing which tempted me was a pretty little ice cold brook. There we washed and bathed our feet. Some had the nerve for a plunge. We will have a real feed tonight. It does not take an American battalion long to clean out a town of eggs, milk and meat. This American hegira will be long remembered, I believe.

"Here we stay over Palm Sunday. It hardly seem possible that Good Friday and Easter are so near! I have not been to a service since Christmas except for one Catholic meeting behind the lines the first Sunday at the front. There may be a chance tomorrow. Of course the mail has been tied up awaiting our arrival at a permanent destination.

"We commenced the second six months in France on the day we detrained for this hike. April first marks the beginning of the second six months for this regiment in the zone or advance and means we have won a service strap. I, of course did not reach the zone of advance until two weeks after the Regiment, so mine may come on my birthday. We should also be about due—at that time—for our first permission. This Regiment has surely had a fine record. We pulled off one successful raid out of one attempt and repelled three, also went through a heavy gas attack without a casualty worth mentioning.

"Two officers and several men have received croix de guerre and we have had a long siege of it. Remembrances to everybody. I can spread it around today—being in such high spirits."

Col. Watterson on Christianity

Some men have a policy in what they say and they are bound by the limitation which they place upon themselves. Others have a vision and proecy, and their perspective extends with the ever widening horizon. To the latter class belongs the editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal. In the courage of his convictions Mr. Watterson stands for the truth as he sees it; no narrow policy, no partizanship, no self-interest have power to curb or modify his outspoken convictions. His fame is not based on popularity which caters to party or policy or class or sect. Free and independent he would rather be right, where it hurts or where it helps, than to be popular by catching the passing fancy of the crowd.

As a layman—though not a Churchman—Mr. Watterson has given us a message t ohearten the Christian world and bid us hold fast to the hand of God. This clarion call, not from the pulpit but out of the seething struggle of humanity, is not only timely; it is of inestimable value from one who knows the world of men and their present need of the only Saviour and Helper. This message should brace up the drooping faith of those who languish through fear and misgiving. We cannot keep on if we do not keep up. God, and God only, is our hope and our Defender.

The above is an introduction by Bishop Woodcock of Kentucky, to the following excerpt from an editorial by Col. Watterson in the Louisville Courier-Journal, which has been published in a tract by the American Society of Church Literature, the Rev. John S. Littell, D. D. secretary,, Keene, N. H.

Surely the future looks black enough, yet it holds a hope, a single hope. One, and one power only, can arrest the descent and save us. That is the Christian religion.

Democracy is but a side issue. The paramount issue, underlying the issue of democracy, is the religion of Christ and Him crucified; the bedrock of civilization; the source and resource of all that is worth having in the world that is, that gives promise in the world to com; not as an abstraction; not as a huddle of sects and factions; but as a mighty force and principle of being. The Word of God. delivered by the gentle Nazarene upon the hillsides of Judea, sanctified by the Cross of Calvary, has survived every assult. It is now arrayed upon land and sea to meet the deadliest of all assaults, Satan turned loose for one last, final struggle.

The Kaiser boldly threw down the gage of battle— Infidel Germany against the believing world—Kultur against Christianity—the Gospel of Hate against the Gospel of Love. Thus is he Satan personified—"Myself and God," merely his way of proclaiming it—for his "God" is Beelzebub, the Angel of Destruction, his creed the devil's own, his aim and end a hell on earth. Never did Crusader lift battle-ax in holier war against the Saracen than is waged by our soldiers of the Cross against the German. The issues are indeed identical.

If the world is to be saved from destruction—physical no less than spiritual destruction—it will be saved alone by the Christian religion. That eliminated leaves the earth to eternal war. For fifty years Germany has been organizing and laboring to supplant it with Kultur, the genius of Infidelity. Her college professors have been obsessed with it. Her universities have seethed with it. In acclaiming "Myself and God," the Kaiser has put the Imperial seal upon it. When our armies have run it to its lair—when they have chrusht it—nought will have been gained unless the glorious Banner of the Cross is hoisted—even as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness—and the misled masses of Germany are bade to gather about it and beneath it as sadly they collect the debris of their ruin for the reconstruction of the Fatherland.

Let every American soldier swear today—* * * * —that he will link him and his with the Christ-child—the Light of Love—that suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, that descended into Hell, that the third day rose from the dead and ascended into Heavenn, and sittith on the right hand of God the Father Almighty!

BROTHERHOOD WORK IN THE TRAINING CAMPS

St. Andrew Men Reach Thousands of Soldiers Through Personal Contact of Leaders

Extending its activities so as to place its representatives in every army and navy camp, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, an Episcopal organization, has undertaken for our forces a work in which it has for years stood pre-eminent—personal religious endeavor. The strides that the work has made since the entry of the United States into the war represents the growth of one of the most spiritual organizations in all the vast network of social endeavor carried on in the camps.

The work of the Brotherhood has been recognized as one of great importance. A search for leaders is made by a Brotherhood secretary when he goes to the field. When a suitable man is found, the principle of "prayer and service" is explained to him as the keynote of all Brotherhood work.

When these men are found strong enough to carry on the work, they are made "keymen". It is through these "keymen" that the work of the Brotherhood is able to grow, and the secretary's efforts are multiplied.

Keymen Reach Thousands

Several hundred active "keymen" are now at work. One "keyman", it is said, has reached as many as 40,000 soldiers. The records of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew show that twenty secretaries have developed several hundred "keymen". In a different way from the work of the Brotherhood secretary and the Y. M. C. A. worker, the influence of the "keyman" is felt wherever he goes. It is usually found that a firm foundation has been laid and that the "keyman" is able to hold his group of men together and enlarge it.

The aim of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is primarily to teach a man Christianity. In its work in the camps, denominational lines are not recognized. A large number of its workers are Churchmen, but many other religious bodies are represented. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has received a hearty welcome from the Y. M. C. A. Dr. John R. Mott and various Y. M. C. A. secretaries have praised its work.

Church identification is urged by the Brotherhood. To men who have no Church connection, the Brotherhood suggests baptism. It has brought about many baptisms and confirmations, and helps in communion services wherever the clergy are at work. Various Church bodies have received additions through its work of unostentatious personal evangelism.

The number of Brotherhood secretaries has been doubled in a very short time. By the extension of this work, now being planned at the Philadelphia headquarters, "keymen" pledged to clean speech, clean living and Christian devotion will be placed wherever there are American troaps.—New York Sun.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

THE ASCENSION OF OUR LORD

From The Christ of Cynewulf, an English Epic of the Eighth Century. From the translation by Israel Gollancz.

The Lord of Splendour, Helm of bliss revealed full many a sign to them in mystic words, ere He ascended, only begotten Son, the Child with His own Father co-eternal; then forty numbered days had run their course, since He had risen first from earth, from death. Then had He fulfilled the prophets' words, as they had sung before throughout the world, yea, by His passion. His servants lauded Him, they praised all-lovingly the Source of life, the Father of creation! Wherefore in aftertime He nobly recompensed His comrades dear; and these words spake the angels' mighty Lord, while hastening onward to His Father's realm:—'Rejoice ye in spirit; ne'er will I turn away, but I will show my love toward you still, and grant you might, and will abide with you to all eternity, and through my grace ne'er shall ye know the want of sustenance.

Go now o'er all the spacious tract of earth, o'er the wide ways, announce it unto men, preach and proclaim the glorious belief, and baptize folk between the firmament; turn them to heaven; shatter heathen idols, cast them down and spurn them; extinguish enmity, and sow ye peace within the miuds of men, by virtue of your gifts. I will abide with you in solace, and keep you aye in peace, with sure unfailing strength in every place.'

Then suddenly a sound was heard on high, loud in the air; a band of heavenly angels, a beauteous host, the messengers of glory, in legion came; our King departed thence, e'en through the temple's roof, where they beheld, who were watching still the Dear One's track, His chosen thanes, there in that meeting place; they saw their Lord, the Child divine, ascend from earth onto the heights; sad were their souls; their spirit's grief burned hot within their hearts, for now they might no longer see 'neath heaven One so beloved as He. Then raised a song the messengers celestial; praised they the Prince; they lauded life's Creator; joyed they in the light that gleamed so brightly from the Saviour's head; saw they angels twain, resplendent, fair, shining in splendour 'round that first born Child, the Glory of all Kings; they cried out from on high, in wondrous words, o'er all the hosts of men, with voices resonant:—"Why bide ye here, and stand about, ye Galilean men? Now surely do you see the Sovran true wending triumphant to the empyreal sphere. The chief of princes with these engels-hosts, the Lord of all mankind, ascendeth hence unto His native home, His fatherland. Fain would we o'er the vaulted roof of heaven conduct the Lord with all His company, this joyous throng, unto the shining burgh. He whom ye gaze on here so rapt, the best and noblest of the sons of victory, He whom ye see in solace shine so fair, will surely yet again with ample host revisit all the races of the earth, and then will he adjudge their every deed, that mortals have achieved beneath the skies.'

Then the Glory's Guardian, the archangels' King, the Helm of holy men, bewrapt in clouds, high o'er the roofs. Joy was renewed and bliss in heaven's cities at the Prince's coming; on His own Father's right-hand sat he down triumphant, the eternal Source of good.

Easier to Die Than to Live For One's Country

Fannie R. Green, correspondent for Christ Church, Milbank, S. D., in the South Dakota Churchman, makes the following practical comment on the war:

"The war is on us in dead earnest now, and we are all doing our bit to help along. I wonder how many of us realize what we may be called to sacrifice before the finish. It seems so much easier to us, who have to stay at home, to go to the front, where bravery counts, and there is a thrill in driving the enemy out of the trenches; but when the final count is made, perhaps the pastor who stays and keeps his little flock together, the doctor who, instead of going "over there" and learning surgery never dreamed of before, toils among his home patients steadfastly, the housewife who, instead of being a nurse at the front, plans her wheatless, sweetless meals, keeps the home bright and cheerful, letting her tears of loneliness fall "where only God can see", the farmer plodding in the mud, planting seed to feed the nations, all of these will be found unsung heroes and heroines, but useful all. I think sometimes it is easier to die for one's country than to live for it.

DIOCESE OF WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

The Annual Convention of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts was held April 23 and 24, at Pittsfield, in St. Stephen's Church.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Thomas F. Davies, Bishop of the Diocese, made his annual address at the service on the first evening of the Convention, in which he paid a tribute to a number of the laity who had died since the meeting of the last Convention, and to the memory of the late Archdeacon Sniffen, who was greatly beloved throughout the diocese, and whose work on THE WITNESS endeared him to the members of the editorial staff and its readers.

In referring to the closing of the churches, owing to the shortage of coal, the Bishop expressed the hope that the parishes and missions would never again be asked to close. If the whole civilization should go down to destruction, and every dweling be deserted and abandoned, "let the house of God," said the Bishop, "stand open and in use so long as there are faith and reverence on the earth."

At the business sessions, a War Commission was elected to unite and supervise the various war activities of the diocese in co-operation with the General War Commission of the American Church. The following are the members of the Diocesan Commission: Bishop Davies, the Rev. J. M. McGann, the Rev. L. Griswold, Judge Estey and Mr. John P. Merrill. The Bishop appointed the Rev. E. R. Lane editor of The Pastoral Staff, the official organ of the diocese. The following deputies to the Provincial Synod were elected: The Rev. Messrs. J. M. McGann, R. K. Smith, S. E. Keeler, D. N. Alexander. Lay deputies: Messrs. B. Crocker, C. B. Root, W. E. Hoyt and J. W. Mawbey.

The next Convention will be held at Worcester, in All Saints' Church.

MASSACHUSETTS

The 133rd Annual Convention of the Diocese of Massachusetts was held at Trinity Church, Boston, April 17. The special services were held in the church and the business sessions in the parish house and Huntington Hall. The organization of the Convention took place in the parish house, followed by a celebration of the Holy Communion in the church, at which Bishop Lawrence officiated as celebrant, assisted by Bishop Babcock.

The business of the Convention was speedily disposed of under a new rule, which provided that the printed reports be presented by title only, with the option on the part of the person presenting the report of giving a summary of it, not requiring more than five minutes in delivery. The proposition to assess the parishes and missions for the support of the General Board of Religious Education drew out an interesting debate, in which a large number of the clergy and laity participated for and against, resulting in the loss of the motion by a decisive majority vote.

The matter of giving women representation in the Convention, and with the right of suffrage, was debated over an hour. Among those who opposed it were Mr. George Selfride, the Rev. David B. Matthews of Brocton and the Rev. S. B. Blunt, D. D., of Ashmont. The Rev. Frederick Allen, who introduced the resolution, Dean Rousmaniere, Prof. Joseph H. Beale and Mr. W. H. Lincoln strongly favored the motion. The Rev. Mr. Allen, in his report, suggested that women should be given recognition for their full share in the work of the Church; that such action would secure a more adequate representation in some small parishes; that women would be more willing to spare time for the whole Convention than men; that it is in harmony with the general movement to permit women to share in the responsibilities of public activity; that it had already been practically adopted by the Conventions of a number of dioceses, and that it was desired by a number of the women of the Diocese of Massachusetts. Among those who have [illegible]

S. Marks, Emily Morgan, Vida D. Scudder and Mrs. Francis Peabody Magoun. The amendment was lost by a decisive vote.

In his report for the Archdeaconry of Boston, Rev. Prescott Evarts said that a serious condition faced some parishes because of the change in the character of the population. A word of encouraging approval was given Church people for the way parish work has been kept up, despite the heavy demand made upon them by the war.

Reference was made to the death of Charles G. Saunders, a member of the Standing Committee, and in the course of a minute adopted this was said of him:

"His sound judgment, his clarity of mind, his ripe learning in the canon law of the Church, attained through a life-long devotion to her interests, made him our guide and counsellor; his Christlike simplicity of character won our love."

The Convention re-elected all the officers, including Secretary Francis E. Webster and Treasurer George J. Prescott, and also elected the following:

Standing Committee — The Revs. John McG. Foster, Charles E. Jackson, Frederick W. Fitts and Arthur W. Moulton; Messrs. Joseph H. Beale, Joseph Grafton Minot, Philip S. Parker and William V. Kellen.

Members of the Diocesan Board of Missions—The Rev. Reginald Howe and H. V. Hayes.

Members of the Cathedral Chapter—The Rev. Philo W. Sprague and Huntington Saville.

Deputies to the Synod for the First Province—The Revs. Ernest J. Dennen, Alexander Mann, Edward T. Sullivan and William L. Clark; Messrs. Charles H. Baldwin, Huntington Saville, William H. Bent and Charles E. Mason.

Members of the Church in the Diocese Incorporated—The Rev. Daniel D. Addison and Philip S. Parker.

Finance Committee—The Rev. Ernest J. Dennen; Messrs. Joseph Grafton Minot and C. T. Rogers.

The Diocese of Louisiana met in annual Council at New Orleans in Christ Church Cathedral, beginning on April 17th with a Celebration of the Holy Communion, Bishop Sessums officiating assisted by Dean Barr and the Ven. Herman C. Duncan, D. D. Following the service the Council was organized for business and Dr. Duncan was reelected secretary. He has been in continuous service as secretary for the past forty-eight years. The Bishop in his annual address reviewed diocesan and general events of interest and set forth in strong patriotic language the cause for which our nation is fighting in the war and urged the hearty support of the government.

A technical flaw in a resolution to admit women as delegates to the Council spoiled their chances for at least another year according to the report of the committee on the constitution and canons. The resolution did not provide for an enabling canon. It was reported back without action.

To remedy a deficit in the Widows and Orphans' fund it was decided to merge this fund with that for the aged and infirm clergy, which has a surplus of $1283.09. This reduces the deficit in the monies used to pay dependents of deceased clergy to $799.

The financial system of the diocese was changed by a resolution to separate the functions of the treasurer and give the finance committee power to appoint a custodian of funds who shall handle the trust and endowment monies of the diocese and devote full time to the work. Mr. R. P. Mead was elected treasurer. The finance committee announced it would name Mr. Edwin Belknap, treasurer retiring after twenty-six years of service, custodian.

The Board of Religious Education reported it probable no gulf coast conference of Sunday schools would be held this year on account of failure to find a suitable locality.

The date of Council meeting was changed from the third Wednesday after Easter to the third Wednesday after the Feast of Epiphany.

Announcement was made at the request of the Board of Religious Education the University of the South (Sewanee) will give a course in Christian service next season for undergraduates who do not intend to be ministers, but who wish training for layman's work in churches.

The Board of Missions asked $6600 for work in the state this year, Delegates present pledged $481. A new missionary district will be established including Natchitoches, Mansfield and a new group of North Louisiana towns.

The schedule of appropriations adopted for missions in the state this year follows: For whites in New Orleans $300, for negroes in New Orleans $200, Thibodaux and Morgan City $250, Plaquemines parish $300, Gibson $100, Iberville parish $400, Boyce and Cheneycville $750, Covington and Bogalusa $400, West Feliciana $200, Bastrop $600, Crowley, Eunice and Opelousas $600, Abbeville and Lafayette $200, Lake Providence $300, Natichitoches, Mansfield and a new North Louisana group $800, Amite and Illinois Central railroad $200, Innis and Lakeland $200, work among deaf mutes $200, work in new fields or for general missionary if secured $600.

That war's call has left a "mere handful" of theological students at the University of the South (Sewanee) was put before the afternoon session by the Rev. G. L. Tucker and the Rev. Rowland Hale trustees of the university. Rev. Dr. Hale added increases in other departments, especially the military academy, had made the total enrollment of Sewanee this year higher than ever before.

The Rev. Dr. Tucker said seventy or eighty students were taken from the Episcopal university this year by war. The university service flag has 624 stars, three of which are gold, representing men who died in war service.

The bulk of diocesan officers were elected. A surprise was the refusal of Mr. Edwin Belknap to run for reelection as treasurer. He has been elected consecutively for the last 26 years. The Rev. C. W. Bispham was named registrar.

Other elections resulted as follows:

Board of directors of the Protestant Episcopal Association: The Right Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., president; the Rev. A. G. Bakewell, the Rev. E. W. Hunter, the Rev. Matthew Brewster, the Rev. J. O. Miller, the Rev. R. S. Coupland, the Rev. A.R. Berkeley, A. Le Blanc, G. W. Bancker, H. J. Carter, Walter Guion, William A. Bell, G. G. Westfeldt.

Deputies to the General Convention: The Rev. R. S. Coupland, the Rev. G. L. Tucker, the Rev. A. R. Price, the Rev. J. G. Buskie, Warren Kearny, F. H. G. Fry, J. A. Caillouet.

Deputies of the Provincial Synod: The Rev. G. L. Tucker, the Rev. W. E. Vann, the Rev. A. R. Berkeley, the Rev. W. A. Barr, the Rev. C. W. Bispham, the Rev. Matthew Brewster, Reginald P. Mead, Warren Kearny, George W. Law, F. H. G. Fry, W. S. Cudlipp, S. M. Cate.

To fill four vacancies of members of the Board of Religious Education whose terms expired in 1918: The Rev. Menard Doswell, the Rev. A. R. Berkeley, Henry J. Charter, G. W. Leland.

Board of Missions: The Right Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., president; the Rev. H. C. Duncan, the Rev. W. A. Barr, the Rev. C. B. K. Weed, S. L. McC. Lawrason, Warren Kearny, George W. Law, R. P. Mead, secretary and treasurer.

The last day of the sessions held by the Diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was marked by a meeting in the morning and a general conference in the afternoon. Friday morning Bishop Sessums paid his annual visit and commended the women upon the work they had accomplished. The election of new officers was confirmed by the Bishop. It was decided that plans for organized war work would depend on the system adopted by the Woman's Auxiliary in New York.

The afternoon session was marked by an address of unusual interest by Deaconess Affleck, who is engaged in work in Utah. Noonday prayer was conducted by Rev. James M. Owen. The invitation of Trinity Church for the next Convention was voted to unanimous acceptance.

Sammy and Religion

In more than seven months among United States troops of almost every class, I think I have found but one man who was really afraid he was going to be killed," says an American Y. M. C. A. secretary in England. "They realize, however that they are coming face to face with a possibility that before has been only most remote. They are talking not of a religion that will save them from hell, but one that will fit them to face the biggest job ever put up to men, and make them ready for the great adventure if it comes to them. I think the average American soldier would be perfectly willing to adopt the following reconstruction of his childhood prayer:

"Now I stand me up to fight,
I pray Thee, Lord, I do it right,
If I must die while in the trench,
I pray Thee, Lord, I may not flinch."

South Dakota Notes

The new Church and Rectory at Brookings, South Dakota, are completed and were used for the first time on Easter Day. For a good many years the Church has been keeping a priest in this town, which is the site of the South Dakota State College, with a small wooden building resembling a country schoolhouse, one mile from the college building as its equipment. Naturally the Church has not grown during the past 25 years, and its influence upon the students of the college has been pitifully small. It could not have been anything else. Seldom was the Episcopal Church mentioned among the boys and girls, and many did not even know of its existence. Unfortunately, Brookings is not the only college town that has suffered a similar neglect from the Church.

But now a new day has begun in the work at the State College. In place of the old and unattractive church and Rectory a mile from the college, there is now a beautiful brick church and a splendid brick rectory nearer the college than any other church building. Both of the buildings were planned by Cras and Ferguson, and surely nothing more than that need be said about their architectural beauty. They are constructed of red brick, sand mold, laid up in Flemish Bond which makes a beautiful wall. The nave of the final church has been completed and the chancel has been built of wood so that when the growth demands it the chancel can be easily and cheaply torn down to make way for the rest of the building. As it stands the church is about 60 feet long and 27 feet wide. It will seat comfortably about 125 persons. Besides the chancel is a small chapel with a small stove which will be used for services with but a few present, such as the early morning Communion service, and thus save heating the larger building on winter days. A curtain may be drawn across this sanctuary also leaving the rest of the room for a choir or Guild room. Beneath the church is a full sized basement with a kitchen for the social side of the Church life.

The finest piece of furniture in the building is the lectern, which was a gift from D. R. L. Slagle, president of the University of South Dakota and was given in memory of his late wife, Anna Reimann Slagle. Dr. Slagle was for many years the president of the State College at Brookings, and his wife was a most faithful member of St. Paul's Guild. The lectern is of oak, beautifully carved by Kirchmayer of the firm of Wm. F. Ross and Co. On the upper part are the three figures of Christ, the Virgin Mary, and St. Anna, and on the base are St. Peter and St. Paul. It is undoubtedly the finest piece of wood carving in this part of South Dakota. The lectern, also a gift from Dr. Slagle, is of carved oak from the same firm.

The altar and ridell posts were given by Mrs. Natwick of Sioux Falls, and the dossal and ridell curtains of gold brocaded satin and red velvet were given by Bishop and Mrs. Remington. The candle sticks on the altar are an old Swedish type given a few days before her death by Mrs. M. E. Wimsey, for many years a faithful attendant and supporter of the Church in Brookings. The frontal and super-frontal were gifts from the architects and Mr. A. E. Hoyle, and were made by Miss Barton of Cambridge. They are of brocaded silk and are of an exquisite texture. In fact the eye is at once drawn to the beautiful altar on entering the church and the hangings give that note of rich coloring so many churches lack. A beautiful set of altar linen was given by the Altar Guild of Trinity Church, Lennox, Massachusetts.

The rectory is also a brick building on the same lot with the Church and was built to harmonize with the church. It is a substantial house of eleven rooms besides the basement and attic. It is 40x24 feet with a small porch on the front and a good sized piazza. The two buildings represent an expenditure of about $10,000, and while there will be no debt on the church there will be a mortgage on the rectory of $2,500, held by the American Church Building Fund Commission.

It is hoped to have the church consecrated on Wednesday, June 19th by Bishop Burleson, with Dean Woodruff, of Calvary Cathedral in Sioux Falls, the preacher.

The Convocation of the Missionary District of South Dakota has been called by the Bishop to meet in Sioux Falls on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, June 15th, 16th and 17th.

Convocation Meeting

DIOCESE OF SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

The spring meeting of the Central Convocation was held in St. James' Church, Boydtown, April 23-25. There was a notable increase in attendance, owing to the good work of a committee appointed at the last meeting, charged with the duty of arousing interest. The Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs gave a review of recent books relating to the war. He showed a remarkable familiarity with current publications, and fine discrimination. Many joined in comment and discussion. The Rev. G. W. Ribble read a paper on "War and Missions", which was of such distinct merit that it was ordered printed. Bishop Thompson and others entered into the discussion of the paper, dwelling on the possible ways of securing fit men for the ministry. Dr. Jesse M. Jones of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute gave an address on "The Church, the Clergy and the War", showing the rare opportunity of the clergy as leaders in activities to help win the war.

The last sesion was held at Christ Chapel, Kimono, where Bishop Tucker preached and confirmed a class prepared and presented by his son, Rev. H. N. Tucker, Rector of the parish.

A loving memorial was adopted by the congregation in testimony of their esteem and gratitude for the life and work of the late Bishop Randolph, and assurances of devotion and loyalty to the present Diocesan, who so wisely and ably has been serving as Coadjutor.

Rector Who Ordered Flag Taken From Church Resigns

The Rev. Leigh Roy Urban, who recently refused to allow the Stars and Stripes or a Service Flag to be displayed in the Church of the Redeemer, Astoria, N. Y., has resigned. His resignation came as a climax to an unhappy situation, which had been growing more acute for several days past. It is reported that Mr. Urban had refused to have anything approaching a patriotic flavor introduced into the services, apart from a prayer for the safety of the men in the army and navy. Members of the congregation brought a large flag into the church on a Saturday evening, and after the early service on the following Sunday it was ordered removed by Mr. Urban. In a statement made to the congregation, before placing his resignation in the hands of the vestry, Mr. Urban said:

"I do not like to be called a pacifist, because that includes me in a large class of men with some of whose opinions I do not agree. I love my country, as every citizen should, and I desire to be of whatever service I can for its highest and truest welfare. But in this tremendous world crisis, which involves issues far beyond the comprehension of any man, I have, through careful study of the life and teachings of our Lord, and through earnest prayer have been driven to the conclusion that war is not the way in which our Lord would have us overcome evil.

"Much as I regret to be compelled to differ from the majority of my brethren and fellow countrymen, personal loyalty to Jesus Christ prevents me from participating in any way in the prosecution of the war, and from committing my parish in any way to the war policy, in so far as I am responsible for the parish.

"I am whole-hearted in this faith and not ashamed, although I greatly regret the necessity to which I was forced last Sunday through the lawlessness of others."

A member of the vestry stated that it would be necessary for the vestry to accept the resignation of Mr. Urban, because of the general disapproval of the members with his beliefs. "Although all the members of the parish respect him as a man," said the vestryman, "they are so opposed to his beliefs that his usefulness as our Rector is over."

A little boy declared that he loved his mother "with all his strength." He was asked to explain what he meant by "with all his strength." He said: "Well, I'll tell you; you see, we live on the fourth floor of this tenement and there is no elevator, and the coal is kept down in the basement. Mother is dreadfully busy all the time, and she isn't very strong, so I see that the coal hod is never empty. I lug the coal up four flights of stairs all by myself; and it is a pretty big hod. It takes all my strength to get it up there. Now, isn't that loving my mother with all my strength?"—Sunday School Times.

THE GENERAL BOARD OF MISSIONS

Monthly Meeting of the Executive Committee

The meeting of the Board of Missions on May 8, 1918, was attended by the consideration of many exceedingly important matters. All were highly gratified to welcome Bishop Lloyd on his return from his trip to Liberia. His report was given most careful consideration. The Bishop of New York presented a resolution, which was carried unanimously, expressing the hope that the President would present the call and claim of the Church in Liberia to the Church at large with a view of securing action with reference to the needs as soon as possible.

To the great surprise of all the members of the Board, Mr. E. Walter Roberts, who for forty-two years has been a most valuable member of the official staff, offered his resignation. A special committee, of which the Bishop of New York was chairman, was appointed to draw up a suitable expression of appreciation and regret on the part of the Board. In view of Mr. Roberts' long service and with the many valuable contributions he has made to the missionary work of the Church it seems fitting that this resolution of appreciation should be known to all:

"In accepting the resignation of Mr. E. Walter Roberts as assistant treasurer of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, the Board of Missions desires to express and place on record its grateful appreciation of the long-continued, faithful and intelligent service which he has rendered during the forty-two years of his official connection with the missionary work of the Church. Mr. Roberts came into the service of the Society in December, 1876, as cashier of the Foreign Committee and assistant to the treasurer, and was shortly thereafter elected Assistant Treasurer of the Foreign Committee. When the Domestic and Foreign Committees were merged in 1885, Mr. Roberts was elect- Assistant Treasurer of the Society, which position he has since held covering a period of thirty-three years. During this time Mr. Roberts has been associated with six treasurers. In addition to the fidelity and efficiency with which he has discharged his official duties, he has contributed in many ways to the inauguration of improved methods, in furtherance of the missionary work. The suggestion of an apportionment plan was advocated by him many years before it was adopted by the General Convention in 1901. It was he who devised the popular pyramid and keystone Lenten Offering boxes and also introduced the present Letter of Credit System of the Society, instead of Bankers' Letters of Credit by which "Dollar Exchange" was first established wherever we have mission work, and the credit of the Society thus proved to be good on both sides of the Globe. In thus expressing its keen appreciation of the services of Mr. Roberts, the Board indulges the earnest hope that God will spare him many years in which he may still render useful service in the work of the Church, in the extension of the Master's Kingdom.

The board appointed Mr. Charles A. Thompson as assistant treasurer in place of Mr. Roberts.

[illegible]

the Board in place of Mr. Saunders.

The president asked for the appointment of the Rev. F. S. White, D. D. as domestic secretary, was made unanimously.

Among the important matters recommended by the Executive Committee to the Board, was the distribution of the Undesignated Legacy Fund accumulated during the year 1916-17. This fund amounted to over $268,000, $100,000 of which was set aside as a permanent fund from the principal of which loans may be made to the various mission fields. $50,000 was held for the present to be added to the Undesignated Legacies received during the present fiscal year for disbursement in whole or in part in January, 1919. The balance was distributed in various sums both to the foreign and domestic field—about $65,000 in the domestic field and about $40,000 in the foreign. The appropriations for the fiscal year beginning January 1, 1919, were made at this meeting amounting in all to $1,873,673; a decrease of about $6,000 over the present appropriation. Owing to the large number of students in St. Augustine's school, Raleigh, N. C., and the greatly increased cost of running the school, an appropriation of $5,000 was added to that already made towards its running expenses. An important proposition from the Bishop in charge of Haiti to extend our work there and to secure additional property was presented and cordially approved.

The salaries of missionary Bishops have remained static for a long time. This matter was taken into consideration at the last General Convention, and has been the subject of considerable thought by the Board. A resolution was adopted making an increase of $600 per annum in the salary of each of the Continental Domestic Missionary Bishops, beginning July 1, 1918. The question of making an increase in the salaries of those in Latin-America, the Philippines, Honolulu and Alaska was taken under consideration.

A very important communication from the Woman's Auxiliary concerning their plan for war work was considered and accepted with the following resolution:

"Resolved: That the Board of Missions has heard with profound gratitude the plan of the Woman's Auxiliary for war work. It feels that such an effort is of vital importance at this time. It respectfully urges the Bishops and clergy to co-operate in every way in their power to make it effective in their respective dioceses and parishes."

The plan will appear in full in a later edition.

At the Executive Committee meeting, May 7, the following were appointed to missionary work:

Mrs. Edward H. Rafter to St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce, P. R., the Rev. L. W. Heaton to the Diocese of West Texas, Miss Nina Ledbetter, as a teacher in St. Andrew's Priory, District of Honolulu. In the District of Alaska, Mr. Richard C. Jenkins was employed at Ketchiken and as a physician in St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, Dr. Peer M. Lund.

An appropriation was made for the training in the New York Training School for Deaconesses for Miss Pauline A. Flint.

A Correction

By a printer's oversight, an error has occurred in the last two issues of THE WITNESS, in the Department 'Round About the Parish". These articles were not read at the Church Congress. That reference should have appeared only with the article that appears this week.

A Litany of the Holy Spirit

(Arranged by the Bishop of Vermont)

O Holy Spirit, the Lord and the Life-giver;
Impart to us, we pray Thee, the life of our Father in continually increasing measure.

O Holy Spirit, who proceedest from the Father and the Son;
Enable us to correspond with the purpose of our Creator, and reproduce in us the victory of our Redeemer.

O blessed Spirit, by whose power the Virgin Mary conceived the manhood of our Saviour;
Fashion us according to His likeness.

O blessed Spirit, who didst descend on Jesus at His baptism;
Cleanse us and strengthen us by Thine indwelling presence.

O blessed Spirit, by whom He offered Himself without spot to God;
Direct us in perfect obedience and self-sacrifice.

O blessed Spirit, Finger of the Most High, by whom Jesus cast out evil spirits;
Reprove and guide our consciences, we beseech Thee.

O blessed Spirit, whom Jesus breathed forth on His disciples;
Enable us to accomplish in Christ's name whatever work He entrusts to us.

O blessed Spirit, whom the ascend[ed] Lord sends to us from the Fat[her]
Be our unfailing and indwe[lling] Helper.

O blessed Spirit, whom Jesus p[romi]ised to guide us into all truth;
Unfold to us the meaning o[f His] words and life.

O blessed Spirit, whose coming [at] Pentecost was as a rushing [wind]
Fill us with courage and str[ength] to overcome all foes.

O blessed Spirit, whose coming [was] symbolized by tongues of fire
Kindle Thy love in every hea[rt]

One Spirit with Thy varied gif[ts]
Bind all the members of Ch[rist's] Body in living fellowshi[p] with another.

O blessed Spirit of adoption, int[er]ing within us;
Lift up our hearts to God in e[ver] trustful prayer.

THE CONVENTION SEASON

Pennsylvania and Springfield (Ill.) in Council Assembled

The extreme gravity of the present crisis no less for the "Nation than the Church," was emphasized by Bishop Rhinelander in his annual address at the opening of the 134th Convention of the diocese held in the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany, Philadelphia, beginning on Tuesday, May 7th. The Bishop said "there would be a deadly danger in a premature peace", and urged Churchmen and Americans generally to hold fast to the program to bring about the defeat of Germany, whatever sacrifices may be demanded of the Nation.

"A premature peace would secure to the Germans the chief aims for which they made war at the beginning," the Bishop continued. "It would leave the world wholly without security for the future. It would nullify all our sacrifices. But there would be in a premature peace a more deadly danger still. For it would mean nothing less than our spiritual surrender to our spiritual enemy.

"Suppose the whole burden of the war should fall on us, with the enemy stronger in numbers and position than he is now. It would be wicked to give up the fight; as wicked as for a forgiven soul deliberately to consent to evil. It would be not merely yielding our bodies to the German yoke; it would be selling our souls, our spiritual birthright to the evil one. It has been finely said of the personal conflict of the Christian against evil, that in that war there can be no discharge. It may be as truly said of this great war for righteousness. Defeat upon the battlefield would not mean the defeat of our cause, for it is God's cause. It would mean that we were not yet competent to win God's victory for Him."

"As Americans we must have confi[dence] in our cause. There is no place [for] ded, "for any kind [of] pacifism which be[lieves] s war to end war.

The Rev. Henry Martin Medary. Rector of the South Memorial Church of the Advocate, Philadelphia, was elected a clerical delegate to the Provincial Synod to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the Rev. John T. Cole, and Mr. Charles E. Beury was elected a lay delegate to succeed Dr. Nichola Mitchell, resigned.

The report of the Commission on Candidates for Holy Orders and Theological Education offered resolutions asking the Bishop to consider the advisability of issuing special prayers for the increase of the ministry, for use in private and public worship.

At a missionary service addresses were made by the Rev. Paul Atkins, Morrisville, Pa., who spoke on work in rural districts; the Rev. Mr. Henderson, who told of work among colored laborers employed in railroad camps, and the Rev. Mr. White, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, above 16th, who discussed work among the foreign population.

One of the brightest, happiest and most successful meetings the diocese has ever held came to a close with the adjournment of the 41st Annual Synod, May 1 and 2, in Trinity Church, Lincoln, Illinois, the Ven. John C. White, Rector.

The weather, so bright and cool, seemed to have been made to order for the occasion. There was not a hitch or a dull moment from the arrival of the delegates on Tuesday afternoon and evening to the close of the business session on Thursday, the second day of the meeting, at 1 p. m. The synod made record time in the transaction of its business, and was through so quickly that when the motion was made to adjourn scarcely half the delegates realized that the synod was really over and had adjourned sine die. Trinity Church, just freshly decorated [illegible] meeting.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Monday in Whitsun-week

THE COLLECT

O God, who as at this time didst teach the hearts of thy faithful people, by sending to them the light of thy Holy Spirit; Grant us by the same Spirit to have a right judgment in all things, and evermore to rejoice in his holy comfort; through the merits of Christ Jesus our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with thee, in the unity of the same Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

"I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Giver of life." This wonderful phrase is by the Church's direction put into the mouth of the faithful communicant at least once every week. I put my trust in a Ghost, who is at the same time a Life Giver. The Church on earth is the haunt of the Life Giver. This haunt is not to be a gloomy, stark, drear, forbidding haunt. It is a bright, joyous, serene, comforting center of light, in which a man not only sees himself with all his imperfections, and foulness, and stains, but also the Life Giver, the one who can recreate, refresh, renew the crushed, faint, besmirched and bespotted lives that will to look up, after they have looked within. Let us pray God to make our Churches life-saving lighthouses along the sandy shores of time. Then indeed would the barren places of the earth rejoice and blossom as the rose. Then indeed would men come to Church to measure up by the right judgment which will affect all things. God speed the day when men will come to look upon their Church-going as opportunities for increasing their life-giving powers by contact and communion with the Lord, who is the Giver of Life. Every service place should offer services where the flesh is quickened by the Spirit. Every Church should have more services where the Spirit is given a chance to work in His silent, life-giving way. There is something mystically moving in a hushed and expectant multitude. A Whitsunday celebration of the Holy Communion might be one, where there would be large spaces of silence, where a sermon text might be given out, and the congregation sit in silence waiting for the Holy Ghost to move over the hearts of the people; where men and women would move very softly on their way to and from the Altar; a great service of quiet, where men and women were still, purposely still, in the presence of the Lord. "Be still and know that I am God" was inspired by the same Spirit, who also caused the writer to urge his fellows to come before the Lord and "make a joyful noise". We have plenty of the latter, too little of the former on our high feast days.

As we ask God to "teach the hearts of the faithful", are we of the faithful [illegible] to see that the [illegible] everywhere the baptism which John preached; how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him. And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree; him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly: not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins. While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all of them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues and magnify God. Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.—Acts x:34.

God is no respecter of persons, but He is the final judge of all their thoughts, and words, and deeds. He is not indifferent to our indifference; He is not unmindful of our neglect; He is not impatient with our silly excuses; neither does He excuse us who make lies our refuge. He accepts those who "practice righteousness". It is a Christian's business to practice the word which he publishes. "We are witnesses" is the motto of a Church household which "practices righteousness". A man who practices righteousness becomes by that fact a publisher of the "word which makes for righteousness" But righteousness is not maxims—it is life. Men do not need advice so much as they need direction and leadership. If advice could make men good, we might print and scatter the Bible broadcast, and let the business of witnessing go at that; but God has willed that righteousness is best and most permanently published by example, and example is not a pose nor an attitude, but a life, lived in the household of religion, where it can be seen, observed and imitated.

A witnessing Church is the Church whose members are always mindful of the fact that the Saviour is going to come to judge the quick and the dead, and who testify to that fact by their deeds, showing themselves good stewards of the manifold grace of G[illegible] world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.—St. John iii:16.

"God so loved the world that He gave". The Church of God is a giving Church. "Give" is the pass-key which opens the floodgates of everlasting life. Not that we can purchase life by gifts or bribes. God has told us what He wants us to give. He wants us to give Him our hearts. The man who has given his heart to God will find it easy, nay, will find himself impelled from within, to give time, money, wit, everything he has, or all he hopes to be, to the great cause of saving the world.

"God sent His Son." Jesus is the first fruits of the noble army of mission workers who preach and teach, not condemnation, but salvation. God does not condemn. We are the condemners of ourselves, for God sends us light and life, and if we refuse the life and turn from the light we show that, in spite of all our protestations, we do not really believe in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

He who loves not the light of the Holy Ghost has given his heart to some other kind of a ghost, whose atmosphere is darkness. When Jesus comes to judge the quick and dead, He will come in the clouds, but they will not be the clouds that impede vision. They will be the clouds of those who shine in righteousness; radiant with joy in the Holy Ghost; ministers who are flaming fires. And in the light of that coming, the justice of the judgment caused by our unforgiven actions will become manifest. Let judgment begin this day with the House of God. Let a right judgment be ours, so that we can see what is the evil, and resolutely give our hearts to the substitution of that good thing which will eliminate and crowd out the evil.

"He that doeth truth" means "he that makes it his practice to ring true on all occasions, to speak true, to think true". He is the one whose companion is the Holy Ghost, the comforter—the one whose power, because it is from above, makes a man a strong Christian, a forgiven Christian, a forgiving Christian, a giving Christian.

This kind of Christianity is the true spiritualism, because all its deeds are done in the fire and light of a Ghost whose haunt is not the secrecy of the occult, but the secrecy of a life which is hid with Christ in God—a life dedicated to going about doing good, healing the oppressed, eating and drinking with the Spirit who strengthens, comforts and controls.

The Jews present one of the few instances in history of a whole people who deliberately undertook to understand their past experiences and to profit by them. They determined that they would not, if they could possibly avoid it, again fall into captivity for failing to observe the laws of their God. Hence, after the completion of the temple and of the wall around the city, the leaders gave themselves most sedulously to the re-establishment of the law. "And all the people gathered themselves together as one man and spake unto Ezra to bring the book of the law of Moses, which Jehovah had commanded to Israel. * * * So they read in the book of the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense and caused the people to understand." The effect was at once to change an occasion of great joy into one of mourning and weeping. They were one and all convicted of sin by God's Spirit working in their hearts through the written Word, the sword of the Spirit. But the leaders at once exhorted the people: "Mourn not nor weep; this day is holy unto the Lord. * * * The joy of the Lord is your strength."

There are two reasons why this selection is appropriate for Whitsunday, one because its message of joy, arising from true penitence and conviction of sin, is the joy of the Spirit (Cf. John xvi:8-22); the other because the law is the background of the New Covenant in the Spirit, as is brought out in the present Prayer Book lessons for Whitsunday (morning).

For a corresponding New Testament lesson, we have selected that chapter from St. John in which is given the complete union of the disciple with the Lord through the Holy Spirit and the Word of Truth (John xv:7).

For Old Testament alternate is given the story of the first giving of the law in Exodus, which, better than the Deuteronomy selection (of the present Prayer Book), brings out, in connection with Hebrews 12, the contrast between law and Gospel, the Old Covenant and the New.

The Old Testament evening lesson, from Ezekiel's vision of the restored temple, describes, under the figure of a river, the work of the Holy Spirit in the Church, while the alternate, from Habakuk, points us to the true source of joy, despite all material failure and loss.

The morning Old Testament week day lessons for this and several succeeding weeks call for a word of explanation. They undertake to give the Mosaic law as recorded in Exodus and Leviticus. For Lectionary purposes it is not necessary to take sides on the question whether the so-called "Mosaic" law was all given, and in its completed form, by Moses, or whether it was a development from Mosaic germs and completed by Ezra and others after the return from exile. The fact in either case is, the law was not taken seriously until after the return; and since we are giving the re-establishment of the law in the Old Testament historico-topical course, the New Lectionary gives also the laws which then began to be enforced. Topically, also, this is appropriate, since it furnishes the proper Old Testament background of the dispensation of the Spirit, and also leads up to the coming of the Christ in the Advent season as "the law which was a schoolmaster".

The lessons for next (Trinity) Sunday are: Morning (1) Historical review, exhibiting the Triune God in action, leading up to the Covenant (suiting Trinity as Octave of Pentecost); (2) Trinity in action. Evening, (1) Trinity in creation; (2) Trinity in the new creation.

Lift up my soul, O Lord, above all harrassing thoughts and press of work to Thy eternal Presence, that there I may breathe freely, there repose in Thy love, there be at rest from myself and from all things which dishearten me; thence return arrayed with Thy peace to do and bear what shall please Thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

Teach us, O Father, to serve Thee as Thou deservest; to give and not to count the cost; to fight and not to heed the wounds; to toil and not to seek for rest; to labor and not to ask for any reward, save that of knowing we do Thy Will. All which we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God, Almighty, Everlasting, Merciful, give to us, Thy poor servants, to do for Thy sake all that we know of Thy will, and to will always what pleases Thee, that inwardly purified, enlightened and kindled by Thy Holy Spirit, we may follow in the footsteps of Thy Well-beloved Son, Our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen. S. Francis of Assisi.

O Holy Ghost, Lord and Giver of Life, we humbly place ourselves under Thy blessed guidance and protection. According to the gracious promise of our Lord Jesus Christ guide us into all truth, teach us, bring to our remembrance and understanding His words and will, who came that we might have life. Grant us grace to submit to Thy guidance, for Thou only O most blessed Spirit canst bring us to live in Christ through the fellowship of the Cross, and to Thee with the Father and the Son be glory and worship for ever and ever. Amen. —Church Missionary Calendar 1917.

Our Differences with Romanists and Protestants.

Prop. 5. The Reformation.

If the Roman papacy was the assumption of an unwarranted control of the Church, what was to take its place when the revolution, known as the Reformation, actually took place?

We have seen the same difficulty in Russia today after the overthrow of the Czar. In the Church there had been in the early days a society administered by Bishops, holding the creeds, administering the sacraments, bearing witness to the facts upon which the Church was founded.

This society had passed out of its original constitutional form, by which questions were debated and settled in synods and general councils, into an imperial autocracy in which the Pope was the supreme arbiter and the final authority in all questions.

One has seen in Russia how the very violence of a revolution may destroy all those forms of government by which the organization is held together, and may substitute a chaos in which irresponsible pedagogues assume all the power of the deposed tyrant.

This is what occurred in France and Russia and it marks a transition stage from the rule of the tyrant to the resumption of any form of constitutional authority.

Like the Bolsheviki, every man does that which is right in his own eyes, old landmarks disappear, and the most bold and fanatical demogogues pick up and exercise the power which has been dethroned. This happened very generally in the Reformation. Luther, Calvin, Zwingle, each in his own way, became a rival pope in the little world he had created. Neither would co-operate with the other, and each substituted his own philosophy for the faith of the Church.

As Erasmus justly said, comparing the Church to a dirty vase, that their idea of cleansing the vase was to smash it to pieces in order that it might be reformed.

To reform a society is not to destroy it and create another in its place.

The function of the Church was to hand down the essentials of the faith from generation to generation, as a witness thereof.

This had been done under the papal control, up to that time.

The ministry, the creeds, the sacraments and the Bible were not changed in the Roman Church. Things were added and forced upon its members which were neihter primitive nor catholic, and practices were encouraged which were vicious, but beneath it all neither the structure of the Church nor the content of the faith was altered, except in the suppression of councils by compelling them to register the papal will.

When, however, the reformers succeeded in breaking the papal tyranny, they began to substitute for the primitive order, things made in Germany or Switzerland, which were to take their place.

The old order of the ministry was destroyed, and the passing on of the gift of the Spirit by the laying on of hands was discontinued.

In place of the historic creeds, which dealt solely with the facts in Christ's life and ministry, were substituted wordy confessions of faith which dealt with metaphysical opinions about these facts and other matters not contained in the original creeds.

The Sacraments were tampered with; their form and character changed; and theories of what their power might be, were substituted for the historic teaching regarding them.

In opposing the evils of Roman usurpation, they opposed as well the original deposit to which the whole Church was committed.

They substituted for the unity of the faith the discord of philosophy, and so destroyed the Church as a witness of the faith, and claimed that the Church of the XVI Century could originate a new faith, a new church, a new gospel.

This opened the doors to a chaos of religious systems, and destroyed the idea that the Church was a family or a brotherhood.

Instead of the Apostolic principle that Christians were bound together in the unity of the Spirit by mutual love, Christendom became the abode of sects, which were separated from one another by iron clad confessions of faith, which promoted opinionativeness rather than love. The Church which had been usurped by the papacy was now shattered into fragments by the reformers.

Prop. 6. The Reformation in England.

In England the feeling against Papal usurpation was far more general than elsewhere, but the temperament of the people was far more conservative than those on the continent.

They wanted no papal bills nor legates, nor taxes nor interference. Neither did they want to destroy the landmarks of the Church.

During the reign of Henry VIII, Henry VI, Mary, Elizabeth, the Church was successively under papal control and out from under.

Henry VIII was a staunch papist; then he quarrelled with the Pope. Under Henry the Church remained Roman in its practices, but refused to accept papal supremacy.

(To say that Henry VIII founded the Church of England is as false as it is absurd. A founder is one who lays the foundations. Henry VIII put nothing into the Church. The same priests were conducting the same services at Henry's death that they were when he ascended the throne. The litany is practically the only contribution to the English Church and Prayer Book, which dates from Henry's reign. He died an implacable foe to any change in the worship and discipline of the Church.)

After Henry VIII, came the youth Edward VI, whose protectors permitted the two Prayer Books of Edward VI to be set forth with authority, but at his early death, Mary overthrew all these changes, burned Bishops and Prayer Books and returned to the papal submission.

Later Elizabeth restored the second Prayer Book of Edward VI, which is the present Prayer Book with some slight modifications. Had you lived through the reigns of Henry VII, VIII, Edward VI, Mary, Elizabeth, and attended service at the same parish church from childhood to old age, you would have been conscious of certain variations of service, due to the successive political reigns, but the same priests would have continued administering the same sacraments, at the same altars, and preaching the same fundamental gospel. During Mary's short reign you would have been conscious of a violent reaction from the reforms of Edward, but it would never have occurred to you that you were adhering to a new religion or abandoning the ancient Church.

The changes would not be much more radical than those experienced by a parish today in which an extreme low Churchman might be followed by an extreme ritualist, and he in turn by another low Churchman.

The matter of the Pope's authority would have meant very little one way or another to the ordinary worshipper in an ordinary parish church, for the violent antagonism between papist and protestant had not yet settled into a permanent hostility.

The Church of England was reformed wihout uprooting the ancient ministry or the ancient creeds or the regular sacraments of the Church. Whether the service was in Latin or English; whether the ceremonial was more or less ornate; whether auricular confession was obligatory or voluntary; whether the priest wore a chasuble or a surplice, were very different questions from those which had arisen on the Continent. In these, men questioned whether confirmation should be abolished modified.

The Epistle of the Ephesians

XXXI.

Vs. 21. But that ye also may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus, a beloved brother and faith minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things.

Wordsworth: Ye also, as well as others, perhaps the Colossians.

Blunt: There is a marked reticence respecting names in this Epistle, probably because the Ephesians were in danger of persecution from their Roman rulers.

Ellicott: Tychicus, an Asiatic. Tradition represents him as afterwards Bishop of Chalcedon.

Sadler: He first appears as a companion of the Apostle in Acts xv:4, and was with him in his last imprisonment in Rome, whence the Apostle sent him again to Ephesus (II Tim. iv:12).

Blunt: Tychicus was commissioned to tell the Ephesian Church of the Apostle's affairs, and he was doubtless also entrusted with messages to particular persons, corresponding to the usual salutations. He was also to console them on the Apostle's behalf under the troubles through which they were passing.

Ellicott: In the Lord. Christ was the sphere of his ministration. Christ's Spirit animated and actuated his labors.

Vs. 22. Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts .

Jerome: It was a blessed consolation for them to hear that St. Paul, at Rome, the metropolis of the Roman empire, was triumphing over his prison and his chains. And this was the consolatory intelligence which they would receive by Tychicus.

Vs. 23. Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Ellicott: Peace. This is no mere parting salutation, but is in effect a valedictory prayer for that "peace" which was the blessed result of reconciliation with God and His Spirit's special gift.

Meyer: Twofold wish of blessing at the close, in which, however, St. Paul does not, as in the closing formulae of the other Epistles, directly address the readers.

Moule: To the brethren. As children of God, Christians are brothers of one another, in a sense full of Divine life and love.

Ellicott: Brethren can only mean the whole Christian brotherhood.

Ellicott: Love with faith. Not love and faith. The Apostle does not simply pray for the presence of each of these graces in his converts. What he prays for is their co-existence. As love is the characteristic of a true faith, the medium by which its energy is displayed, so here faith is represented as the perpetual concomitant of a true love.

Meyer: From God the Father of our Lord Jesus. Christ is exalted on the part of God to the government of the world, and particularly to the lordship of the Church (Phil. ii:9), and His dominion has in God, the Head of Christ (I Cor. xi:3), not merely its ground, but also its goal (I Cor. iii:23).

Vs. 24. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen.

Moule: Grace is all the free and loving favor of God in its spiritual efficacy. It is nothing less than God Himself in action, in His Son, by His Spirit, in the salvation of man.

Meyer: The grace, i. e., the grace of God in Christ.

Sadler: With all that love. For such only can receive the grace of the Lord.

Moule: Our Lord Jesus Christ. The full name and style of the object of love is given. In this lies the needful warning that the object must be no creature of the individual's, or of the community's thought, but the Redeemer and King of history and revelation.

Ellicott: With sincerity. Literally in f unity of life at God's altar to urpation, or to the idea of chaos stitutional elements in the Church apostolic standard as expressed

By Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

The above caption represents a word of admonition given by Jesus to His disciple, Simon Peter. The fisherman had evidently had poor luck, and he, with his partners, were washing the nets. Perhaps with some distrust they obeyed the Master's command, even though their night's toil had brought them nothing. The narrative tells us, that when they had let down their nets "they enclosed a great multitude of fishes, and they beckoned unto their partners that they should come and help them."

The word of direction and encouragement that Jesus gave is worthy of our deep consideration. Most of us keep to the shallow waters. Perhaps this is due to the fact that we are either unskilled or else fearful of venturing out beyond our depth. We all have in some degree the spirit of adventure, but very often either our fears or our doubts keep us from obeying our intuitions or what we call our better judgment, with the result that we all too frequently fail of large accomplishment. We remember a story that Dr. Grenfell told, which concerned a schooner wrecked on the Labrador reefs. She had encountered a gale and after reefing down her sails, her skipper had endeavored to make for the big, open sea. He knew full well that an on-shore breeze in a hard blow was dangerous, but he took the chance of clearing the reefs too late, with the result that he was caught on their ragged edges and his ship destroyed. Many a good ship has been lost in like manner, and may we not also say, many a human life has failed of accomplishment or of attaining its largest objective, because the skipper has been too conservative, has sailed too close to the shore, and when the crisis came it was too late and he could not make the open sea.

This has large application to the things of our common, everyday life. We do not think that reckless daring is a thing to be desired. On the other hand, we do not think that extreme conservation or fear are the elements in life that make for the largest success and the most secure results. The deep waters are almost always the safe waters. Better navigate where there is plenty of water than in a seemingly secure harbor whose restricted limitations afford no opportunity for either skill or large adventure. All this has its application to everything with which we have to do, but it has a very definite application to our religious faith. It would sometimes seem that most of us were disposed to seek what one might call a safe faith, a faith that calls for no large exercise of the imagination or of the will. The waters in which we navigate are largely determined by the limitations of own particular cult; in fact, we seem to have little or no desire to know the foreign waters that lie beyond our creed-locked harbor, with the result that we become narrowed and restricted in our point-of view, as well as insular in our fellowships and faith. "Launch out into the deep," is the Master's command to the church today. We also hear Him saying to the troubled disciples when their little boat was threatened, "Why are ye so fearful, O ye of little faith?" The world is calling us today away from shallow things to the deeper things of life. Perhaps we shall be compelled, even against our wills, to launch out into the deep. Perhaps old, hoary systems that we thought were as impregnable and enduring as the rock of Gibraltar are to be shaken to their foundations. Perhaps, who knows, we shall have to revise and recast many of our old judgments and systems, religious, social, industrial and political. If we have been drifting, riding near the threatening reefs, with an on-shore breeze carrying us on, it is high time we heard the clear call of the world's Divine Pilot and its Master Fisherman. Of one thing we are sure, that the deeper waters call for greater skill, finer imagination, clearer vision, and unquestionably and always, a more splendid devotion.—Courtesy Minneapolis Tribune.

with a love that is not corrupted by any evil admixtures and deleterious influences, or impaired by change of circumstances or lapse of time, but is pure and immarcesible.

Wordsworth: This word may well be supposed to signify the incorruptibility of a spiritual and eternal love, a love which flows forth from a pure wellspring of the inner man of the heart, in the incorruptible element of the meek and quiet spirit (I Pet. iii:4), a love which knows no decay, and is not affected by time—a love which is never blighted or withered, but is undying and unfading as the crown of glory which it will one day wear.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

UNMANIFEST DESTINY

By Richard Hovey

This poem, written in 1898, has a striking application to the year 1918. The poet was born in 1864 and died in 1900.

To what new fates, my country, far
And unseen of foe or friend,
Beneath what unexpected star,
Ccmpelled to what unchosen end?

Across the sea that knows no beach
The Admiral of Nations guides
Thy blind, obedient keels to reach
The harbor where thy future lies!

The guns that spoke of Lexington
Knew not that God was planning then
The trumpet word of Jefferson
To bugle forth the rights of men.

To them that wept and cursed Bull Run,
What was it but despair and shame?
Who saw behind the cloud the sun?
Who knew that God was in the flame?

Had not defeat upon defeat,
Disaster on disaster come,
The slave's emancipated feet
Had never marched behind the drum.

There is a Hand that bends our deeds
To mightier issues than we planned.
Each son that triumphs, each that bleeds,
My country, serves Its dark command.

I do not know beneath what sky,
Nor on what seas shall be thy fate;
I only know it shall be high,
I only know it shall be great.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

Christ Church, Norfolk, Va., has been presented with a gift of $25,000 toward a new parish house.

The new St. Stephen's Church, Colored, at Norfolk, Va., will be consecrated the first Sunday in June by Bishop Tucker.

A handsome new church is being erected by St. Simeon's Parish, New York City, at a cost of $100,000. The Rector is the Rev. Ralph Jarvis Walker.

The annual meeting of the Churchman's League was held at Washington, D. C., on Monday, April 29. Trevor Whitaker of London, England, delivered an illustrated talk upon Shakespeare's England.

Five hundred dollars in money collected for various charitable objects and valuables, including ancient coins, a gold chain and a gold cross, were stolen from St. Mary's-on-the-Hill, Buffalo, N. Y.

The congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Sound Beach, at Stamford, Conn., numbering about 50 persons, by almost unanimous vote, asked to be taken into St. John's Church, that city.

A flag was raised on the grounds of St. John's Church, Warehouse Point, Mass., Sunday, May 5. Dr. Flavel S. Luther, president of Trinity College, gave the address.

An American should be an American first, last and all the time, and a Churchman should be a Churchman first, last and all the time. Not less loyalty to country, but more loyalty to the Church is needed.—The Crozier.

The Texas Churchman, commenting upon Dr. Carroll's annual religious statistics, says: "We're a queer lot. We declare that every baptized person is a member of the Church, but when we report our strength we count only active communicants, which are not much more than half our strength."

A Service Flag, bearing thirty stars, was unfurled in St. James' Church, Alexandria, La., Sunday, April 28th, by Mr. Joseph Hynson, the oldest Confederate veteran member of the congregation. The Rev. W. S. Slack, Rector, preached a patriotic sermon.

The Rev. A. M. Hilliker, Rector of Christ Church, Lonsdale, R. I., who spent the winter in Florida, has returned home and officiated at all the services in his parish on Sunday, May 6. His first service as Rector of Christ Church was held May 5, 1901, so that the 6th inst. marked the seventeenth anniversary of his rectorship, as well as his home-coming, restoration to health and return to work.

The fourth annual service for nurses and physicians, under the auspices of St. Barnabas' Guild for Nurses, Cleveland, Ohio, was held in that city on May 5, at Trinity Cathedral. The Rev. Arthur Carlisle, Rector of All Saints' Church, Windsor, Ont., preached the sermon. Mr. Carlisle went over seas in 1914 as chaplain with one of the first Canadian regiments to join the British forces, and spent about two years in the Ypres salient.

Harry Elsworth Rahming was ordained a deacon by Bishop Perry of Rhode Island at the Church of the Epiphany, Providence, on St. Mark's Day. The candidate was presented to the Bishop by the Rector, the Rev. Henry Bassett, who had baptized and presented him for confirmation in the Church of the Epiphany. Mr. Rahming is the second Colored young man to be ordained in that parish. The first one, the Rev. P. G. Moore-Browne, now Priest-in-Charge of St. Augustin's Mission, Providence, took part in the ordination service.

The Rector of St. Andrew's Church, South Orange, reports that the Sunday school Easter offering of $202.20 is $70 larger than that of last year, and $50 larger than that of any previous year. "We have found," he says, that giving to the Church is the best education for giving to the country. Every one of our scholars is the owner of one or more Thrift Stamps." Part of the St. Andrew's offering is designated for the purpose of gasoline for the mission launch "Pelican", in Alaska, and part for the support of St. James' Hospital in Anking, China.

The Rev. Edwin J. Randall of Chicago has consented to serve as director general of the Ember Guild until the next annual meeting, in place of the Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart, who has found it necessary to resign from the directorship, owing to the heavy pressure upon him in connection with the War Commission and the many demands for co-operation with the government in the Red Cross and Liberty Loan campaigns. Mr. Randall was the first director general of the Guild.

St. Paul's Parish, Key West, Rev. C. R. D. Crittenton, Rector, is rejoicing over the Easter offering, which the treasurer reports to be $2,055.90. The magnificent chime of ten bells has been placed in the large tower of the new Spanish-Gothic church, and a new concrete floor laid in the church. The Rector reports having preached one Sunday morning at 8 o'clock to 722 sailors, all dressed in their white suits—the finest audience he ever faced. Key West is the only city in the United States which has never known frost.

The enrollment in the Philadelphia Divinity School last year was forty-three. This year it is thirty-four. Next year the outlook is for twelve or fifteen men. This condition, says a report of the Diocesan Commission on Theological Education, "calls for concerted action, that advantage may be taken of what, after all, is the greatest opportunity of our time. Th men must be deliberately sought out and personally approached with the call to the ministry. In the past we have trusted overmuch to men's offering themselves, unsought and unurged." Referring to men in the national service, the Commission says chaplains and volunteer workers have been asked to follow up all young men in the ranks who are known as postulants or candidates, doing all in their power to keep these young men firm in their purpose ultimately to enter the ministry.

On Monday, May 6, the new and handsome Russian Orthodox Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, on upper Whitehead Avenue, South River, New Jersey, was formally opened and solemnly consecrated in the presence of some three thousand people by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Alexander of the Russian Cathedral of St. Nicholas, New York, assisted by Archdeacon Sevelod. There were present the Rev. Peter Semaelekv, to whose energetic and untiring efforts the new building is due, and who is about to leave for Pueblo, Colorado; the Rev. Ignatius Lachew, who now takes charge of this large and rapidly growing congregation; the Rev. John Semarhko, formerly of Coatesville, Pa.; the Rev. E. Lilikovitch of Perth Amboy; the Rev. Alexander Alekhin of Trenton; the Rev. Sidney H. Dixon of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, South River; the builder, Mr. Marcus Wright, and the architect, Mr. Alexander Merchant of New Brunswick.

Personals

The Rev. L. G. H. Williams, Rector of Grace Church, Woodlawn, Ala., has accepted an appointment as a secretary for war service under the Y. M. C. A.

The Rev. C. H. I. Channer, for the past thirty years, Rector of Christ Church, Adrian, Mich., has resigned, owing to illness. He will take a much needed rest from active parochial work.

The Rev. Dr. William Palmer Ladd, Professor of Church History at Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Conn., and acting Dean since the death of Dr. Hart, has been elected by the trustees to be the Dean of the school.

The Rev. L. W. Snell of Cortland, N. Y., has accepted a call to St. Peter's Church, Helena, Mont., and will enter upon his new work the middle of June. Mr. Snell was born in Minnesota, and is a graduate of Harvard University, of the class of 1895.

The Rev. Milton A. Barber, Rector of Christ Church, Raleigh, N. C., preached the annual convention sermon of the North Carolina Baraca Philathea Union of the Baptist Church at Rocky Mount, N. C., April Three hundred delegates were in tendance.

The Rev. Dr. Robert S. Coup Rector of Trinity Church, New leans, La., has accepted an appointment as a chaplain of the Red for service at the front in France, and will leave some time this month. Dr. Coupland tendered his resignation as Rector to the vestry of Trinity Parish, but the vestry declined to accept the resignation, and granted him a leave of absence for one year, the stipend to be $2,000 per annum during his absence.

The Rev. Fred J. Davis, for the past six years in charge of the Church of the Redeemer, Watertown, N. Y., has been appointed by Bishop Fiske to take charge of the work at Windsor and Harpursville. He will enter upon his new field of labor the first of June. The Rev. M. P. Bowie, who has been Rector of Windsor and Harpursville, has been transferred to Christ Church, Sacket Harbor, N. Y.

The Rev. Dr. C. S. Sargent, Rector of Trinity Church, Shreveport, La., received the sad news on May 4 that his daughter, Miss Constance Sargent, had died in St. Paul, Minn., suddenly. Miss Sargent was visiting friends in St. Paul, having gone there from Chicago, where she had been perfecting herself for Red Cross work, and was to go to France at an early date.

The Rev. Frederick B. Bartlett, Rector of St. John's Church, West Hoboken, N. J., has accepted a call to St. Mark's Church, Aberdeen, South Dakota. His resignation as Rector of St. John's Church is to take effect the first of June. In presenting his resignation to the vestry, he said, among other things: "After seven years of parochial labor in the East, the conviction has grown upon me that my best service can be rendered in the missionary field. Therefore I have decided to return to the West, where I began my ministry ten years ago."

The Rev. Alexander M. Rich, formerly of South Pittsburgh, Pa., began his new duties as Rector of Holy Trinity Church, Memphis, Tenn., on the last Sunday in April. In his first sermon, he made an appeal for personal service by all the members of the parish, and declared that the success of the Church should be the glory and the failure of the Church should be the shame of every member, and that if the congregation would follow the example of the Saviour, the greatest personal worker the world ever saw, there would be no question as to the growth and development of the Kingdom of Christ on earth.

The Rev. George W. Atkinson, Jr., Rector of Grace Church, Georgetown, D. C., is the second man in Washington to volunteer and be accepted for Y. M. C. A. war work abroad. He will sail shortly for France. He is deeply interested in social service work, is chairman of the Georgetown branch of the Associated Charities, is a religious worker for the Y. M. C. A. at the Walter Reed Hospital, and is widely known in Washington, as was his father, who was at one time governor of West Virginia, and later was for fourteen years associate justice of the Court of Claims of Washington.

A Prosperous Southern Parish

The Rev. Albert New, M. A., Rector of Waynesville, North Carolina, has been in charge of the Clearwater Mission for the past two winters, and a remarkable revival of spiritual activity is manifest. Last winter, a vested choir was introduced on Christmas day, and this added much to the beauty and dignity of the service. This winter's work has been a continuation of the good beginning made twelve months ago. Crowded congregations have filled the church every Sunday, and fourteen have been confirmed in the two years. Five handsome gifts to the Church were dedicated by the Rev. New on a recent Sunday, as follows: Oak Processional Cross, given by Miss Elizabeth Bolton; Brass Altar Cross, Mr. Charles Hathaway; Alms Bason and Collecting Plates, from Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Elkins; Lecturn Bible, by Mr. J. H. Staats; and a handsome flag by Capt. and Mrs. Hunt. The Rector preached on "The Blessedness of Giving" (Acts 20:35) and after thanking the five donors, made an earnest appeal for subscriptions towards the erection of a new church, at an estimated cost of ten thousand dollars. Within ten minutes of the close of the service, $1850 had been pledged. This has since been increased to $2450, which is regarded as a very hopeful start for a new church next winter.

bration of the 100th anniversary of the admission of Illinois into the Union, the progress of the diocese during the year, and his plans and expectations for the development of the work in the future.

The report of the treasurer showed the diocese to be in excellent financial condition, all debts paid, about $800 cash in hand. The parishes and missions have responded better than ever to the gentle urging of the treasurer, both in the matter of diocesan assessment and parochial assignment. Almost $1,000 of the apportionment for General Missions have already been sent the General Board. The Sunday school Lenten offerings almost doubled that of last year, and the Woman's Auxiliary offering was increased considerably.

The synod voted the payment of the quota of the diocese requested by the "Joint Committee on Social Service", and also that of the Provincial Synod towards the payment of the salary of the proposed secretary of the province.

A joint missionary meeting of the synod and the Woman's Auxiliary was held in Trinity Church on Wednesday evening, at which addresses were made by the Rev. John T. Lillard on "My First Parish"; the Rev. A. J. Keuhn, on "My Work in a Large Field", and the Ven. John C. White, on "My Work Under the Hundred Club".

This meeting was followed by a reception tendered the synod and the Woman's Auxiliary and others at the delightful home of the Misses Latham.

The synod accepted the invitation of Immanuel, Champaign, to hold its next meeting there in 1919.

It was ordered by the synod that the treasurer of the diocese and the treasurer of the endowment fund be required to be bonded by some reliable bonding company.

The proposed amendment to the constitution, admitting women to be delegates to the synod, and the proposed amendment to the canons allowing women to be elected to the vestry were rejected, and the proposition to do away with the canon providing for a "house of Churchwomen" in the diocese was also vetoed, and the canon remains until the women of the diocese see fit to put the canon into operation.

The Rev. Charles F. Pardee, D. D. of New York, representing the American Church Building Fund Commission, was introduced to the synod by the Bishop, and made an interesting talk on the work of the commission.

A resolution looking towards making "Osborne Hall", at the University of Illinois, a regular diocesan institution was adopted.

The case of Trinity Church, Mattoon, was referred to the Committee on Legislation to confer with the congregation of that parish and report fully upon its condition and status to the next meeting of the synod.

The experiment of holding the meetings of the synod in other places besides Springfield was demonstrated to be practical and successful, and no doubt will be continued.

The Standing Committee, Board of Trustees and other Boards of Finance and Church Extension were re-elected. Delegates to the Provincial Synod, which meets in Gambier, Ohio, next October, were the Rev. Messrs. Wm. Baker, J. M. Page, L. L. Riley and F. D. Butler; Messrs. C. C. Carroll, F. W. Potter, M. F. Gilbert. Bluford Wilson.

The 31st Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at Lincoln at the same time as the synod, May 1 and 2.

The formal opening was on Wednesday afternoon, after the Bishop's address to the synod. Six of the fourteen branches were represented. An unusual and pleasing incident was that of having present a branch of the Juniors.

The secretary reported seven boxes, valued at $237, sent to missionaries; five, valued at $190, sent to the Orphanage of the Holy Child, Springfield, and one, valued at $200 sent to the cyclone sufferers at Mattoon, Ill.

The pilgrimage of prayer was observed by the women of the diocese in June and during the final week in November.

The treasurer's report showed a membership of 215, and a total receipt of $596.34, an increase of $100 over the previous year; $178 had been sent for St. Agnes' School, Kyoto; $16.87 from the Little Helpers had been sent in during the year.

They voted $200 for General Missions, an increase of about $50 over last year, and $122, the amount of the Mary Caroline Hayner Memorial Fund to be given to the Bishop.

They urged an earnest attempt to increase the membership of the Juniors and Little Helpers in the diocese.

The following officers were elected:

Honorary Presidents—Mrs. G. H. Sherwood, Mrs. H. H. Candee.

President—Mrs. H. S. Dorsey of Alton.

First Vice President—Mrs. H. H. Stoek of Urbana.

Second Vice President—Mrs. Lucy O. Gullett of Lincoln.

Third Vice President—Miss Caroline Forbes of Danville.

Secretary—Mrs. Katherine D. White of Springfield.

Educational Secretary—Mrs. A. P. Carman of Champaign.

Secretary of Church Periodical Club—Mrs. Emma Swancutt of East St. Louis.

Treasurer United Offering—Miss Virginia Dresser of Springfield.

Treasurer—Mrs. E. D. Hutchins of Champaign.

They voted to accept the invitation of the ladies of the Chapel of St. John the Divine, at the University of Illinois, to meet with them next year at the same time of the synod.

Lexington Notes

AT THE CATHEDRAL

Arrangements have been made whereby Dr. Richard Wilkinson, Rector of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, during the absence of the Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, will have charge of the Cathedral services, as well as those of the Good Shepherd. The Good Shepherd will have an early celebration of the Holy Communion and the Sunday night service, while the Cathedral will have the eleven o'clock service in the morning. Dr. Wilkinson will visit the Sunday schools at both places each Sunday, and perform all pastoral duties and offices at the Cathedral for which opportunity and occasion may offer, as well as at the Good Shepherd, his own congregation.

AIDS LIBERTY LOAN CAMPAIGN

Dr. Richard Wilkinson, Rector of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, has recently returned from a visit to Ohio, where he delivered a series of addresses in the interest of the third Liberty Loan campaign, under the direction of the Speakers' Bureau of that district. In a letter received from Mr. John S. Pratt, director of the Speakers' Bureau Liberty Loan Committee, Mr. Pratt states that Dr. Wilkinson was of "valuable assistance in making the Liberty Loan the success it was in this area".

INTERCESSION FOR ALLIED CAUSE

At the Cathedral, on the afternoon of April 18th, a service of intercession for the cause of the allies was held, for which Bishop Burton set forth a special form of service. This service was a call to all the people of Lexington at the time when, during the April offensive, the allies, in spite of heavy resistance, were being driven back, to assemble in the Cathedral, that, like Moses, Aaron and Hur, during the battle of Rephidim, they might assist the allies by their prayers. Though this call was made but the evening preceding the service, the Cathedral was well filled. The Cathedral choir rendered efficient aid. Dr. McVey, president of the University of Kentucky, made an address admirably appropriate. The concluding prayer was offered by Dr. Muller of the First Presbyterian Church, followed by the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" and the Bishop's benediction.

REV. CHAS. PARDEE TO BE AT COUNCIL

The Rev. Charles L. Pardee, D. D., corresponding secretary of the American Church Building Fund Commission, will address the coming Diocesan Council, which meets May 28, at Ashland, Ky.

W. A. MEETING POSTPONED

The annual meeting of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, usually held in conjunction with the meeting of the Diocesan Council, has been postponed "for weighty reasons, and after due consultation" to a date in the fall, to be announced later.

THE OTHER MAN

The man who would dare to attend a social dinner clad in overalls would create a sensation, only equalled by the man who might sit down to dinner in a logging camp dressed in a Tuxedo.

Each man would be made to feel most uncomfortable, and the representatives of polite society would be no less unkind in their manifestation of contempt than would the less polished woodsman.

In short, society is divided into different camps by the inexorable law of customs, and those who would pass from the one camp to the other may not do so, for there is a great gulf between them.

So the man brought up in the Roman Church is familiar with customs which are ridiculous to a Baptist, while a devout Churchman resents the introduction of practices which would be most acceptable to a pious Methodist.

Religion is divided into different camps more by the clothes it wears than it is by the doctrines it teaches, and more parishes have been wrecked by the introduction of strange garments than have been by the teaching of strange doctrines, just as a man in a Tuxedo will not shock the elite by the most radical socialistic and revolutionary opinions nearly so much nor so hopelessly as he will by a custom that is taboo.

You live in a world that is topsy turvy to the other fellow, and you are as hopelessly separated from him by the kind of phylacteries that you wear as was the Pharisee from the Samaritan.

Now, it was the glory of the primitive Church that it broke down the barriers which separated races, castes, sects and clans. It made of one race all the nations of the earth because it was tolerant of all.

But the introduction of sectarianism into the unity of the Spirit has substituted prejudice for mutual understanding, and the person who flounces out of church because some priest wears a vestment that is strange to their experience is closely allied to the Hindu who refuses to be contaminated by sitting at meat with one of another caste.

Sectarianism has no spirit for "making of one blood all nations of the earth," because it is animated not by the spirit of unity, which is of God, but rather by the spirit of impatient intolerance of the other man's right which so characterizes the big chief of the Prussian tribe.

It is not that William does not call upon his God; it is rather that the peculiar deity whom he has appropriated is of the same properties as William. He is so constituted that he could not serve a God any bigger than himself. He could not tolerate a deity who required him to acknowledge that other men had rights and customs. He must make the world Prussian or else destroy it.

He has the same reaction from it all, as the naked savage, who looks about him fiercely and exclaims, "Me, big Injun!" and is ready to slay anyone who questions the reality of that bigness.

To wear a Prussian uniform is to excuse one from all moral responsibility to the other man.

Is not this spirit of barbarism, which is destroying the happiness of the world, identical with the savage zeal which has wrecked the unity of the Church?

We say that we believe in the Holy Catholic Church and then we start out to make it Roman or Puritan, not in the spirit of Christ, but rather in the spirit of the Kaiser.

Christ saw the good in Samaritanism, and while He told them that they worshipped they knew not what, He was constantly pointing out their good points, associating with them and encouraging them to see the truth.

It is not that it is wrong to propagate that which you believe to be true. If a doctrine is worth holding, it is worth propagating. It is rather the spirit in which you carry on that propaganda.

Christ did not tell the Samaritans that He agreed with them. Quite the contrary, but He did not approach them with a mailed fist, but with a winsome word.

Germany had many things which she might have taught the world, and won an admiration for her qualities which would have been genuine and profitable. But no! Germany must ram her virtues down your throat until you fairly hate them. She must go bellowing around the world in the person of her arrogant chieftians, not only proclaiming their own superiority like the savages, but pushing the humble and the meek off the sidewalk for fear that these humble

In this connection I want to protest against the Prussianism of the whole sectarian spirit.

As Christians we do differ most widely. It is folly to go around with a departmental store smile assuring everybody that we are all brightening the corner where we are, when we are really acting like a parcel of Huns.

In the first place we are not going to cure this disease by creating a vacuum. The cheerful idiot who goes around assuring everybody that it does not make a particle of difference what one believes, so long as one's heart is right should have the door shut in his face, vacuum as anything in our experience.

Nature abhors a vacuum. So does the Creator. And the head which has no convictions worth propagating comes as near being a vacuum as anything in aur experience.

And in the second place we are not going to create any real unity of the Spirit by acting like the Kaiser. People will not believe that wisdom was born with us. The world is full of those who fancy that they are never mistaken, and is awfully tired of them.

The worst feature of it all is that tiresome people never know they are tiresome; not even when nearly everybody else does. If the Kaiser knew how really tiresome he was he might make an effort to improve. But he is solemnly oblivious of the fact, and when one is solemnly oblivious of things he is hopeless.

Solemn bores are so much heavier to bear than frivolous ones.

But in the third place if you do have convictions and want other people to accept them, why not be pleasant about it? Why hurl anathemas at the man who disputes your judgments? Why push the man off from the ecclesiastical sidewalk in order to persuade him that you are right.

Would it not be a fine thing to send the Bishop of Fond du Lac down to Virginia dressed in his full pontificals, not to force them upon Virginia, but just to show those people what fine men wear them just as fine as they are and that is pretty fine.

And then would it not be a good piece of non-Prussian reciprocity if some of our extreme ritualistic churches would let some Virginia men come into their chancels and put a little evangelical fervor into them. Not that either of them have any idea of giving up their convictions, but that they are really anxious to understand the other man.

I would carry it further, and recommend that, in the interest of mutual understanding, our Church Clergy adopt a frankly friendly attitude toward members of all religious bodies, even if this friendliness is not always reciprocated.

Friendliness is a Christian virtue which our Lord manifested to all sorts and conditions of men, and it does not at all demand any sacrifice of convictions.

Moreover, friendliness to the other man is one of the most irresistible forces in human society, nor is Christian friendliness to be confined to those who are friendly to us.

The nature that cannot sit comfortably in the presence of one who is wearing something that it never wore, or doing something that it never did, needs to be de-prussianized.

Of course one would not sit in an assembly if the flag was being insulted. He would get up and get out. But even though we may be democrats, we frequently sit through a scathing denunciation of the democratic administration without being guilty of assisting in the desecration of the flag. Surely when so many people have been baptized into the same body, they ought to have as much tolerance toward one another as do American citizens during a political campaign.

Prussia ought to teach us to avoid certain mistakes in our constitution, because she has made certain faults so odious.

Let us, then, be Christians, and not Prussians.

The Music at St. Joseph's, West Pullman, Chicago

Small Churches and Missions who despair of having suitable and good music should read the interesting experience of this little Church on the outskirts of Chicago, a Mission which shares its priest with another Mission, neither having over two hundred communicants.

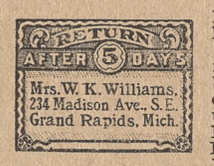
In former days there was a boy choir, which gradually disintegrated as the boys' voices "broke", until some women in the congregation were called to help. Two years ago a new Rector came, and things took on a new life. A choirmaster was drafted, a young man with some experience, but with boundless energy, and, taking advantage of the wave of enthusiasm, went about the task as follows:

The supply of boys being limited, they were temporarily neglected, and and the efforts concentrated on a mixed choir. Every young man and woman connected with the Church was interviewed, and finally a choir was started, crude, of course, but full of "pep." and willing to learn. At first, only simple canticles were used, and occasionally a hymn or anthem. Some could read music, but those who could not were given a coaching, and soon learned to read, at least by "position". Those who had had previous training were given solos, and gradually out of each clef grew a soloist.

Hard work and enthusiasm will produce wonders. Last Christmas, at midnight, the choir sang Godfrey's beautiful service in E flat; on Palm Sunday, Maunder's "Olivet to Calvary", and on Good Friday, Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given, while the Easter music was beautiful indeed. At two different times the Bishop Coadjutor, on his visits, has complimented the choir and used the anthem title as a sermon topic. The choir library now consists of some very good works and at no time is trashy music tolerated.

The social side of the choir is a strong feature. There is an annual week-end party at some summer resort, numerous dances and parties, at which outsiders are always welcome. The "professional" singers of the vicinity are invited to come when they can, if even to keep their voices in trim during the summer. The sentiment is strong for a small pipe organ, but wiser heads advise to go slow during these war times. The choir is entirely self-supporting, deriving their funds from entertainments. They are now beginning work on "Pinafore", and the choristers are in demand in other local organizations, and several have taken part in light operas, etc.

A junior choir has recently been organized, and at present comprises fifteen "kidlets", who are beginning to give a good account of themselves. Not a boy was lost while the seniors were organizing.



St. Joseph's and her sister mission are again without a pastor, but the choir can help greatly to fill the gap. The choristers, under Mr. Robert Carington, are planning to give some interesting services this summer, at a time when other Churches "let down", and when fall comes they will be in good shape to continue the excellent work they have started.

God tabernacles in the flesh.
O wondrous thought! Has God in me,
And in my fellow-men a seat?
If He has not, Oh, woe is me!
For, when temptations sore beset,
And sorrow's tear the cheek has wet,
There is no help where God is not.
And, O my Father, can it be
That some have grieved and some have sinned
Because the Christ was not in me?
Behold, the door is opened wide;
Come in, O Lord, with me abide.

LECTURES ON RELIGION IN WAR-TIME

VII

Democracy Made Safe in Christ's Commonwealth

1. By God's Will, seen in the Law of our Creation, certain social bonds underlie and sustain our lives as individuals.

I

Introduction: If Religion concerns us simply as individuals, and not as members of society, then our warfare for Democracy has no religious sanction.

I pointed out in my last lecture that fighting against evil in our private lives, and fighting against it in company with others, to secure or defend a common good, are two different, or differing, things. No doubt they belong together very closely, like two acts in a drama, or two chapters in a story. But each has its own proper marks and characteristics. I tried to make this distinction clear to you.

Then I went on to give the social conflict at least equal rank with the individual or personal. I fully justified it. I took the ground that if we are fighting for a common, and not merely for a private good, then we have the right (indeed, it is our only righteousness) to meet the attacking evil on its own chosen ground and beat it down, even if that means fighting the enemy on bloody battlefields with fire and sword, in the horrid arbitrament of war.

Now I must go more deeply into this matter, for it is fundamental to this present lecture.

I am to speak about Democracy and the conditions of its safety and security. Democracy, whatever else it is, is social, and not purely individual in meaning: it is an association of some sort. This raises at once the whole question of the nature of all social bonds. Are they really primary? Have they Divine sanction? In fighting for democracy, for instance, may I call on God for help with equal confidence as when I call on Him for the grace of a pure heart and a patient spirit? The pacifist says "no." I think he is utterly mistaken. But let us hear his plea and then see how we are to answer him. It will greatly help in any case to discover just what is the root of the divergence between him and ourselves.

Look over, then, once more the field of our own personal and private conflict against evil as it assails and seeks to control our wills. You will see at once that the arena of this personal conflict, the battlefield where this fight rages, is within and not without. It is purely spiritual and wholly inward. It means holding the inner fortress of the spirit against all corners. The man who is proof against every suggestion of evil which beats upon him; who can "suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" without rebellion or complaint; who is ready to be tried to the utmost, to forfeit everything which the world can give, rather than flinch or waver in his allegiance to purely spiritual ideals: he and he only has conquered and is crowned victor even on the cross.

Clearly all this is inward. The outside world, meaning thereby what we call nature and society, is of no great importance. It does not matter at all whether I am great or small; rich or poor; learned or ignorant; bond or free. It does not matter whether I am living in an autocratic or democratic state, with Wilhelm II or Woodrow Wilson as my chief. "None of these things move me." Indeed, my spiritual life finds its safety in detachment from my circumstances, for the desires of "the natural man" are very apt to stifle the spirit's hunger for the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. You see the point. It is the very point of the sincere pacifist. It is the very heart of his doctrine of "non-resistance" as the supreme and all-inclusive righteousness for men.

I have in mind only the sincere and spiritual minded pacifist. Of course pacifists who want peace merely or chiefly for the material well-being or comfort of the world, themselves included; who would endow peace with money, thinking that the endowment would be an excellent investment, yielding large dividends of unearned increment: with such as these we need have no concern. These people are scarcely more worthy of consideration than the deliberate traitors and pro-Germans in our midst. We can make no terms with them. We need waste no words on them.

But the sincere pacifist is different. The really "conscientious objector," rare as he may be, would go to his own death rather than kill another man under any circumstances; whose honest reading of Christianity is to the effect that force can never be rightly used in the behalf of good: such a man does deserve consideration and sympathy. However misguided he may be, he has at least the courage of his convictions. He is prepared to suffer on their behalf.

Now, if you look into the mater, you will find that all such pacifists are pure individualists in religion. The only religious bond they recognize is the bond between the individual soul and God. They admit that there are groups or societies into which people naturally fall. These groupings add much to the interest and happiness of life. The family, the state, the Church, all have their proper place in normal human lives. But they have no direct or essential connection with religion. They are not spiritual ordinances of the Divine Will, by which our salvation is conditioned. Rather they are like the houses we live in and the clothes we wear. We need both houses and clothes. But God does not provide them for us. They are of the earth earthy. They have no heavenly originals or counterparts. As naked, solitary, unrelated souls we live and move and have our being in God. That is the complete religious formula: God and the individual soul. All else is extra, unessential, of human invention or adjustment.

Now there is tremendous force in this creed of individualism. It opens a view before us which, whether true to life or not, is certainly impressive. It is a bold and radical, almost a remorseless, creed. It sets the naked human soul upon a lofty pinnacle. It makes it master of its fate. I think it inevitably tends either to spiritual pride or to unwelcome introspection. It has been acutely, and not unkindly, called the aristocratic (as distinguished from the democratic) spirit in religion. But it is most impressive.

More than this, it has a great tradition; great, not only in duration but in vital force and practical efficiency. It has been gaining momentum now for some four hundred years. It was let loose in Europe in that storm period which we vaguely call the Reformation. For us in the Protestant west, it has come to have the swing and sweep of an undisputed orthodoxy. There seems no other view. Even to breathe a doubt against its truth, has seemed close to heresy, or worse.

And during these four hundred years this massive and audacious self-assertion of the individual has had quite incalculable results. It has revolutionized art, politics and literature. It has led directly to the scientific discoveries of the last hundred years. From a human view, it has almost literally created the modern world. The mighty spirit of religious individualism has its tokens and monuments everywhere about us.

Among these tokens and monuments is pacifism. For if the creed of individualism is true, then the pacifist is unquestionably right. If the only thing which concerns me in religion is to save my soul alive, by driving evil from my heart and will, no matter what may happen to my neighbor; if no social bond may be exalted to the rank of a Divine decree or ordinance, to defend which is as sacred and absolute an obligation as to keep my hands from stealing and my tongue from lying; then every motive which moves me to use force or to take up arms is an evil motive; an impulse against God's Will and my own salvation. It follows that if the Kaiser and his myrmidons invade my country, burn my house, violate my women, bayonet my children, enslave my townsmen, I must take it all simply as an attack of the evil one against my soul, tempting me from my own good. The fire of my agony; the passion of my heart; the pain of wounds and death, patiently endured are but the sure signs of an accepted and victorious martyrdom.

Let us do it justice, this creed of individualism and pacifism. It may not be really Christian: I do not think it is. It may be doing violence to the deepest and divinest instincts of our human nature: I think it does just that But let us do it justice. Only so can we confidently pass on to something better; something at once more human and more Divine; more worthy and more truly representative of the mind of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. We must bear the individualist in mind as we develop our social creed. We must grant him all he really needs; all he has any right to ask. We must try to show him that his half-truth may be really true, but only on condition that it makes room for the other half of truth which makes up the whole.

We have had a long introduction. But it has not been waste time if we have laid secure foundations. Now we are ready to begin to build.

An Effective Every-Member-Canvass Campaign

A campaign was made in the parish of Christ Church, Chicago, on the Third Sunday after Easter, to arouse the love of the parishioners for Country, Church and God, and to secure their enlistment in some part of the various activities of the parish, to stimulate their attendance upon divine worship, and to enlist their continuous co-operation in a financial way. The rector, the Rev. Charles Herbert Young, preached a series of sermons bearing upon the subject on the three preceding Sundays. A budget in leaflet form setting forth the purpose of the campaign and covering the many activities of the parish, maintained at a cost of $13,100 a year, was sent to the members, in which the question was asked and answered: "Do you realize what Christ Church means to the community? Our services are called for by increasing numbers of people who have no Church Home, because they honor the parish. Our parish house is open day and night, a bee hive of industry for children and grown people. Our school of Religious Education has achieved a reputation which places it in the front rank. Our choir is known widely for its excellence. Our unfailing interest in every movement for the benefit of the community is recognized throughout the city. The spiritual power of our services for worship has drawn many souls closer to our Lord. Hundreds of men and women have been renewed and encouraged through what they have received here. Few parishes surpass ours in the number of baptisms, communions made, and other marks of devout life. Surely God is with us.

A card was sent to the members containing in large display type the following: "Lest You Forget! Please be at home, Sunday between 2 and 4 p. m. to receive our campaigners for our Church, Country and God." On another card, used by the campaigners, was "A form of enlistment in the service of our Country, Church and God," containing a list of twenty-one parish activities, with the request that signers of the card indicate in what work they were especially interested. A card was left at the house of those who were absent: "We were sorry not to find you at home when we called today. We shall call on you again later in the week, when we hope to be more fortunate. It will help us if you will mail your enrollment and pledge to the Rector." The result of the canvass was eminently satisfactory, bringing into the working force of the parish a large number of people who had hitherto taken but little interest in the parish life, and the amount of the weekly pledges was doubled. On the day of the campaign the rain fell in torrents, but the canvassers went forth undaunted and returned full of happy enthusiasm.

Chaplain Thanks Donors of Gifts

Chaplain Haywood L. Winter of the First U. S. Infantry, stationed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, in a communication to the editor of THE WITNESS, writes as follows:

"My letter in behalf of our soldiers here, which you kindly published, has brought many responses from all over the States. I have tried to thank each one personally, but there are many anonymous gifts. I want to thank them through you, and let them know that their gifts are appreciated.

"If the present interest is sustained, I am sure we shall not suffer for reading material in a long time.

"A few responses for games, and donations to my fund for gymnasium and writing material, were greatly appreciated, and helped tremendously, but have fallen far short of the total I had hoped to reach. However, I am sure that there are many who will yet assist me in this important work of providing adequate recreation for our hard drilled men, and funds for writing material."

The chaplain has introduced a "Stick-around-the-post-night", providing a program of movie films, songs, games and other features, which has proved very popular with the soldiers. The Honolulu Star-Bulletin says: "The First Infantry 'padre' has succeeded pretty successfully in corralling just about all the talent in the post, so that Schofield's [illegible]

THE KINGDOM GROWING— CHURCH EXTENSION IN OUR DAY

A twelve-page magazine dealing with Latin America is being published in Spanish, the first publication dating from Easter. The name of the publication is El Nuevo Siglo, and it is published monthly. In this way the missionary districts of Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Dominican Republic and Haiti will be served specially, with the probability that later on the Philippine mission may be included. There are a great many subjects of peculiar interest in Latin American countries which are not treated of in our jorunals as a rule. This new paper, therefore, will try to meet a special need, and in a way that will make it worth while for all to co-operate. The subscription price is to be fifty cents a year. The secretary of the Board of Missions for Latin America, at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, will be glad to give particulars to any who are interested in Spanish and Spanish-speaking peoples.

In an address before a meeting of the Board of Missions recently, Bishop McKim of the District of Tokyo, Japan, brought out the significant fact that more and more the Japanese are feeling cordially towards the United States. The recent visit of Viscount Ishii and his reception in this country has taken us very much nearer to the day when the two nations will really understand each other. The Bishop emphasized the point that while the yellow press on both sides of the Pacific is doing its work to estrange the nations, the fact remains that those of influence in both countries, and on whom national responsibilities fall, are most cordially at one. No one influence has done more to further this result than Christian missions, and in Japan the Church has had a large part in this work. Through the founding and developing of such institutions as St. Paul's College, St. Paul's Hospital, and many others, the Japanese have received a practical demonstration of what Christianity means to the Christian. All that is needed now is a demonstration of the fact that even a world-war does not interrupt our steady progress toward world evangelization.

To one visiting St. Timothy's Mission, Tanana Crossing, in the interior of Alaska, a surprise would be in store. There bursts into view as the last great bend of the Tanana is turned, a nicely ordered village, with a large, well-planned mission building in the course of construction. It is a new village, all laid out according to the lines surveyed by the mission. It is a new center, to which natives from both sides of the Tanana are coming. It is a center that is attracting the young people, for the idea of building up a new community, with the mission as their head, seems to appeal to them. When the mission was first established there were no cabins Now there are about sixteen, and at the last big gathering there were nearly three hundred natives present.

Last week we showed in THE WITNESS what a large sum could be raised if every woman in the Church gave even one penny each day towards the United Offering. Here are some of the needs for women and pennies:

In China—Two teachers for St. Hilda's School, Wuchang; two teachers for primary schools in Changsha and Shasi; three teachers of English subjects and a physical culture teacher for St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai; a kindergartner for Wuhu; ten women for evangelistic and parochial work among women.

Three nurses for St. Luke's and two for St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai; three for the Church General Hospital, Wuchang; three for St. James' Hospital, Anking; two for St. Andrew's Hospital, Wusih; one for St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai.

Two physicians for St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai, and two for the women's department of the Church General Hospital, Wuchang.

Two women stenographers and typists for the Bishops of Shanghai and Hankow.

In Alaska—One nurse for Indian Hospital at Tanana.

In Japan—Three nurses for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, to supervise training of Japanese women; teachers for St. Margaret's School, Tokyo, and St. Agnes', Kyoto, and several women for combined evangelistic and social work.

In Latin America—Ten women for positions of great responsibility, teaching, nursing, domestic science, etc.

In the Philippine Islands—Two nurses for St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, and one teacher for All Saints' Girls' Dormitory, Bontoe.

An editorial in the Boston Herald says: "Most of our colleges and universities, even those without any lingering trace of sectarian control, offer their students an opportunity to study the Bible. In some cases that opportunity comes through the curriculum, in others through classes formed under the auspices of the College Y. M. C. A.. Now Columbia University takes a significant step in announcing that it will accept a knowledge of the Bible as one unit for admission. The ground to be covered will be as follows:

"(a) The epic narrative of the Old Testament, a knowledge of the chief characters and incidents presented in Genesis, Exodus, Numbers, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, First and Second Samuel and Kings and Daniel.

"(b) The memorizing of some of the more notable passages of Biblical prose and poetry.

"(c) Hebrew history, from the Egyptian period to the destruction of the Jewish commonwealth in 70 A. D., development of the life and institutions of the Hebrew people, with some consideration of their contributions to human culture.

"(d) Christian biography, the life of Jesus and His early followers, His parables, and the life of St. Paul.

"(e) Introductions to the English Bible, how the Bible and the separate books came to be, and how they have come down to the present time.

"Of course Columbia is not making a knowledge of the Bible a required unit. That would be quite another matter. It would pre-suppose, for example, making the Bible a subject for study in the public schools. What Columbia does is to offer those whose study in the home, or Sunday school or Church school has given them a comprehensive knowledge of the Book of Books, an opportunity to turn that knowledge to account in seeking admission to the university. It will be a good thing if it leads other institutions to do likewise, and to encourage a wider study of the Bible. Purely as literature and as history—wholly apart from the matters of creed, and religious education, and Church organizations, the Bible stands first among all the books in the world, and as such demands more attention than our modern scheme of education has been disposed to give it."

Kansas, 1918

We pitied Kansas once, for cyclone, drought and hail,
And locusts, wrought of woes a long, sad tale.
Today we look on Kansas with expectant, envious eyes,
For Kansas has two Bishops and one of them is Wise;
And we shall see great deeds adorn her page—
But more—the other—not to be outdone—this one's a Sage!

RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS IN THE MIDDLE WEST

A Paper Read at the Church Congress Held in Cincinnati, Ohio, in October, 1917.

I.

When I began to grope toward the heart of this subject one word came persistently to my mind—chaos. Had I lived my life on the Atlantic Coast, and had my farthest venture westward been to Philadelphia or perhaps to Niagara Falls, it would have been relatively easy to create a mental picture of the Middle West; the land of wheat and corn, of broad undulating prairies and mighty rivers. I should have created a pastoral panorama on a large scale, with one accident of congestion of populaion, the converging point of rail and water, Chicago; with the peaceful villages of Cleveland and Cincinnati, and the prairie towns of Indianapolis and Kansas City; famous Milwaukee, with its paradoxical reputation of being high but not dry; of the quaint and sleepy river town of St. Louis. But living, as I have done, within the picture, it appears somewhat different. I realize other conditions. I know that northeastern Ohio is growing industrially more rapidly than any other section of our land; that Iowa has more automobiles in proportion to its population than any other state in the Union; that Chicago is not all wind, and St. Louis and Milwaukee are not all water. I know that the Middle West is not one great homogeneous area, but in topography, climate, occupations and peoples is as diversified as any similar area upon the face of the globe. It is more than the granary of the nation. It is probably the workshop of the nation.

Nor is it lacking in education facilities. Of all the institutions of higher learning in the United States it has 37 per cent. and enrolls 40 per cent. of all the students of the United States in those institutions.

The Middle West is the section most typical of America today. No one element preponderates to disturb the proportion. It has not the conservatism of the East among people of similar traditions; it has not the negro problem of the South; nor the industrial and vocational incohesion of the Far West. The Middle West is the characteristic American section within whose borders the problems of democracy are presented on the greatest scale, and whose people are developing toward that final composite which will be typical of our land. It is the arena in which the struggle between multifarious ideas, origins and temperaments is taking place. Consequently it is the supreme mission field for religion. For while the surge of Orient may carry to the shores of the far West the esoteric ideas and fashions which are as enchanting as its iridescent climate, and while the East may evolve its Christian scientific camouflage, with its intellectual atmosphere as rare as California's climate, the vigorous battle for religion in the United States will take place in the Middle West.

For the purpose of this article I have assumed that the Middle West is identical with the division adopted by the Government, known as the North Central States, including Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, and Missouri. This area contains about one-fifth of the area of Continental United States, and about one-third of the population.

What conditions do the forces of Christianity here face? I have been reading the United States census report about ourselves here in the Middle West.

The report is a large volume and is very comprehensive. It is both interesting and disconcerting.

The Middle West has a population of about thirty millions. There are 10,600,000 Church members. This is about the average for the land.

Among these Church members we find in the Middle West every sort of religious organization in our land's ecclesiastical [illegible]

Of the 10,600,000 Church members, 4,000,000 adhere to the Roman Catholic Church. The Methodists and Lutherans account for 3,000,000; the Baptists and Disciples for about 1,500,000; the Presbyterians for 600,000, leaving the remainder of us to struggle along with 1,500,000 persons.

In the whole United States the Roman Catholics have grown, from 1890 to 1906, from 30 to 36 per cent. of the whole church membership; while the protestants, if you will permit me to quote the word from the non-controversial census reports, have decreased from 68 to 61 per cent. Probably this condition is about the same in the Middle West.

The Roman Catholics in the Middle West have 132 members for one thousand of population; the Methodists 53. But why go down the ladder? Let us leap. The Episcopal Church has seven in every thousand. Compare this with the District of Columbia in which we have 44 in every thousand, and New York State in which we have 24 in every thousand.

But why continue with statistics? Have you not the picture: an enormous area, a highly complex population, a medley of tongues and traditions; the Roman Church powerful, a few strong denominations; a few numerically weak, but strongly organized; a large number of weak religious efforts, and an unchurched population of about 20,000,000 people. The Middle West, the heart of America, rich, active, progressive, striving for every vital thing in education, in social uplift, in the mechanics of living, but largely adrift from religious effort.

What in this vast conglomerate are the conditions which, aside from sin and crime and pure worldiness of heart, are the factors in our national life which prevent religious development? At the risk of appearing to read titles which should head chapters, and because each one of you will see the bearing of each item in this catalog at once, I shall endeavor to enumerate what I believe to be the conditions for which our manner of civilization is responsible, and against which religion fights a forlorn battle.

(1) The consant shift from center to center of the units and families of our industrial population, The movement is not alone from country to city, but from city to city. The immense difficulty of our government in finding registered men for the draft after a period of only three months well illustrates this. Draft boards in one county alone in Ohio have failed to find 4,000 men at the first summons. This drift destroys every association and tie, and religious attachment ceases except in rare cases.

(2) The movement from country to city and consequent slowness to adjust life to city conditions. Any of you who has come into contact with the forlorn and homesick families who have left their rural communities and villages in which they were well known and have found themselves in a city and in contact with a city congregation, will realize the difficulty.

(3) The movement from section to section in the same city.

(4) The movement of the well-to-do from city to suburbs and country. Trolley cars and the automobile are responsible for this. While our fathers wrote about "Evolution versus Christianity," and sought to combat in evolution a principle subversive of Christianity, our sons may well write treatises on "Electricity versus Christianity." Evolution may have slain its thousands but electricity has slain its tens of thousands. Trolley cars and storage batteries have mowed down the Christian hosts. Add to these the telephone, with its promptness in conveying premonitions of contemplated Sunday visits, and the projecting lantern which takes you in its imaginative fantasy from every emotional and comic and scenic Dan to every thrilling Beersheba, and you have a quadrifarious entanglement against which Christian forces in vain go over the top.

(5) Again the Census Bureau reveals another disconcerting fact. Adopting once more the definition of the Census Report we find that among Protestants and our native born the birth rate is decreasing, while among our foreign born, mostly Roman Catholics, the birth rate is increasing.

(6) In rural communities we have an admixture of people of every tradition which are replacing the more homogeneous communities of a generation ago. It makes difficult if not impossible the effective work of the rural church.

(7) The stress of modern life is preventing attention to the Church. During the social service phase of presenting the gospel of the Church urged men to pay attention to affairs of social uplift and civic righteousness. Men have done so in large numbers and in so doing have found other vital interests and have neglected the Church.

(8) An epidemic of clubs, lodges, societies, leagues, and organizations has spread over our land. Religious forces have failed to recognize this need of men for association of the sort involved in lodges. I know that there is something ludicrous in the spectacle of the village barber dressed in a tunic and calling himself the "Exalted Right Wing of the Order of Seraphim," but there is something in this appeal to the imagination, in the melodramatic phases of such activities, in the unexplored depths of human nature seeking for relief from the gray monotony of existence, in the suggestion of untried realms, remnants of ancestral conditions clinging to the edges of one's soul through long periods of evolution, that gives the lodges their charm and value. The dramatic instinct is strong in man. Next to being a king the best thrill comes by representing one, amidst those who feel the desire to let imagination weave its spell. That, and the spirit of fraternity, create lodges. Religion has failed to use this instinct adequately. The psychology underlying the Stonemen is worth study.

Every Christian Force Must Be Mobilized

The Rev. Edward M. Cross, Rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, Minn., makes the following plea for Church mobilization:

"While Odell's article, 'Peter Sat by the Fire Warming Himself', in the Atlantic Monthly, appeared to be sadly unbalanced in many respects, and to have ignored easily available facts in other respects, it nevertheless made a very just indictment of organized Christianity. And the chief indictment was that organized Christianity is not organized.

"That is true.

"The amount of energy wasted during the past generation on account of the lack of co-ope.ation between Christian bodies is appalling. What might have been done had there been a unification of interest and of forces is incalculable.

"Of course this same indictment may with perfect justice be lodged against every human activity. The criminal waste that has emanated from the competitive system wherever it has obtained is its own condemnation.

"Competition has had its uses. It will continue to have its uses. But there comes a time when it ceases to be a constructive force.

"That time has come now.

"The spirit of the age, as well as the law for the progress of it, is to be found in co-operation—the compensation of all forces and interests with a like purpose, the subordination of all matters of mere expediency to the welfare of underlying and objective principle.

"If the work of the Church of Christ is the establishment and extension of the Kingdom of God, rather than the nursing of petty differences, then every Christian force must be mobilized for the struggle towards the end. In the past the chief weapon of the very elements that are opposed to the Kingdom of God has been the encouragement of strife among the armies of the Lord, just as Germany's effort has been to keep the allied forces in a state of disorganization through the lack of that unified command which has finally reached its consummation in the appointment of General Foch as Commander-in-chief of English. French and American armies.

"This is an illustration of what can be done when necessity requires, and the cause reveals itself as sufficiently compelling.

"Today, parochialism is the mill stone around the neck of Christianity, while indifference is the shackle with which she is kept from pregress.

"As it is true that out of this war is coming a spirit of co-operation in every secular walk and activity of life, it is also true that there must come out of the war that spirit of Christian unity which will make possible the mobilization of every Church that calls itself a Christian Church—Roman Catholic or Protestant—for the extension of the Kingdom of God. An age that will grow in its impatience with narrowness and sectionalism will brook nothing else.

"This does not mean the repudiation of faith. It means the vivification of it. It does not mean the loss of anything that we now have which is worth while. It means the use of what is worth while for that which makes it so."

A Whole Church

Out of the world chaos may come a new order, more in harmony with the will of God Who is Love. It must come, unless the world is to lose all the progress it has slowly made through centuries of struggle. And it must come soon, for the forces which shape the destiny of the world act with accelerating rapidity and strength, and the forces making for good need every reenforcement possible, if they are not to be overwhelmed for generations, if not for centuries, by the forces of evil.

The Church, to which God has entrusted the establishment of His kingdom of peace and righteousness and love, is practically, at any rate directly, powerless to help. It can not speak with the strong, sure voice of leadership, for it is racked by divisions, which obscure, if they do not destroy, the unity of those who have been baptized into the Holy Name. Yet out of the evil of the war, is springing the conviction that Christian Churches which are divided against each other are not Christian, for Christianity is membership in the one Life of the one Lord, and if we were truly His, He would fill us with His one Will that the vision of our unity might bring the world to Him.

But, though the Church is beginning to realize dimly the need of unity, it is still slow to recognize that if it is not to continue maimed and inefficient, it must call to its aid the women who make more than half its membership and do almost all its lay work. The mid-Victorian era has passed forever, and the old arguments for the superiority of men, like those for the superiority of social classes, no longer commend themselves to minds willing to think deeply and clearly and to face facts as they are.

Everywhere throughout the world, women are being conscripted for their full share of all the work that must be done. Is it not time that the Church should give itself the constitutional power to draft them for the full value of responsibility and service? In every department of secular activity, women have shown, not that they can always, everywhere, take the place of men, but that they have a special contribution to make toward progress and increased efficiency. So the Church needs them, not to displace laymen, but to supplement the work of the men, to set them an example of devotion and sacrifice, to give them hope and courage and confidence that, with God's help, the problems of the world can be solved. The great need of the Church is faith, faith as a grain of mustard seed, to enable it to remove what seems to be the mountains in its way, and women have faith. But, so long as they are excluded from the General and Diocesan Councils of the Church, they have no opportunity to make their faith a power. A few dioceses admit them . If more would, a mighty force would be set free to move the Church to vigorous and effective action.

Home for Wayward Girls

A temporary home that will accommodate about twenty delinquent girls whose cases are pending investigation is shortly to be opened at Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the Church, in connection with the work of the Prisoners' Aid Association. Mrs. David R. Covell, wife of the Rector of Christ Church, and director of the Prisoners' Aid Association, in speaking of the need for such a home, said:

"The great increase in the number of cases of delinquency and waywardness coming under official notice is directly due to the war. Many of the girls are enticed to Washington either by the presence of the camps and barracks or by tales of the high salaries paid for government work. Their money is soon gone, and the next step is easy. By means of this house it is hoped to sift those who are up for a first offense from the more hardened cases, and to give the girls a chance to retrieve this one false step."

Mrs. Covell is also anxious to find some means of caring for the cases of a similar kind among colored girls.

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE SUNFLOWER

A lady was planting some Seeds in the ground. They were quite large Seeds. "We know what we are going to be some day," they said. "We belong to the Sun, indeed we are Little Babies of the Sun."

A Sparrow was standing as near to the Lady as seemed safe, and said to his wife, "I don't see why she wants to put all those good seeds into the ground, I could find better use for them I am sure." His wife answered him, "There are some things that even you do not know, I have seen wonderful things come out of that good brown Earth. Here you are wasting time, get some straw and feathers and pieces of string, I shall never get this nest made if you don't go to work. What is the use of talking so much?"

The Seeds were planted and the dark Earth was pulled over them and they were shut out from the light of the shining sun.

Little drops of Rain crept down thru the ground to moisten them and soften them. The Sun came after this and sent his warmth into the ground to where the Seeds lay. Then each little plant burst the seed skin and pushed his head up to the light and the air.

The roots went down deep into the Earth in search for moisture and coolness and the things that feed plants and make them healthy and strong. Then up went shoots that opened into green leaves that were happy in the Sunbeams.

The Sparrow had been interested to see what would happen to the Seeds and at last his curiosity was satisfied as he saw the two leaves appear. "I don't see anything remarkable about them so far," said he. But as the plants grew taller he said to his mate, "It is surprising how these Earth-things grow." "Not half so surprising as our babies," said his wife. "More worms, please, and not so much talk. These babies can't live on talk."

Then the Plants began to sing, "Children of the Sun are coming soon, coming soon, they'll be here some day."

By and by round buds appeared at the top of every branch, and the Sparrow wondered if they contained the Children of the Sun. The buds grew larger each day, and then came a gleam of yellow and finally they opened up wide. Then the Bees came humming to the honey feast, the Sun smiled upon them, and the Flowers turned their faces toward him and all the day they followed him from East to West so that they could always see his face. When he hid himself from them at night they dropped their heads and closed their eyes.

The Summer passed. The Sun's power grew less and less. The glory of the Sunflower faded with the glory of the Sun and gold turned brown. Soon only brown Seeds were left, and at last these began to drop upon the ground.

Then said the Sparraw to his wife, "They are truly Children of the Sun after all. They were so bright and I am really sorry they are gone."

THE WATER LILIES' BIRTH

Heard you the tale of the lilies
That jewel the lake's fair breast,
Like gems on the brow of a maiden
Fresh for her lover dressed?
Heard you the wondrous story
Of the water lilies' birth?
When the fairest of all the blossoms
Was given a loving earth?

List to the tale of the lilies;
Once, in a young world's prime,
The waters were barren of blossom,
Nor recked they of seedling time.
Dimpling there lay in the sunlight
The waters of Galilee,
Rocked in the lap of the mountain
That shadowed Gethsemane.

But the face of the waves grew troubled
And fear wrung the hearts of men,
When a storm swept down from the mainland,
Darkening moor and fen.
"Fear not!" said a voice in the darkness;
And there on the waves' white crest,
Came Jesus, walking softly;—
Peace fell where his footsteps pressed.

And straightway the water blossomed;
A pathway of living white
Marking the steps of Jesus,
Who walked to his own that night.
And ever since then the waters
The message of faith repeat,
In the white and gold of the lilies
That blossomed beneath his feet.

Will Liberia Make Good?

When the free Negroes from America, under the generous aid of philanthropic colonizing societies, first settled in Liberia it was to be a refuge to which members of the race could return to their native homes.

No one could foresee that they would aspire to be a republic and shine like a beacon in all Africa. No one then in this country knew how very ambitious for entire freedom to develop these people would become.

The Church, which, as the body of people in whom the Holy Spirit, dominating every other impulse, makes us wish to see the complete development of all undeveloped races, early sent some of her best representatives to aid in maintaining the religious life of these men and women now returning to Africa, and to attack or at least to study the problem of Christianizing the two million native savage heathen tribesmen in Liberia. These natives do not live afar off, but were and are right in the dooryards of the civilized Liberians.

When the governments on each end of Liberia began to encroach on their territory, which they had purchased from the natives and had ceded to them by the tribesmen, it became necessary to organize a government, and they organized a republic, which has successfully administered its own affairs, and now is able to see law and order quickly and surely make itself felt in the land. These men were without capital, and had no constant stream of colonists coming; no nation stood behind them, and they had that most difficult of all tasks to perform, to try to persuade a mass of heathen to become members of a self-governing state.

The first missionaries tried the evangelistic or conversional plan of work, and great numbers came to be baptized; but to place a newly-instructed person, amidst surroundings totally at variance with the life as shown by Jesus, was asking too much of weak, sinful human natives, for while some few stood fast, many others of the heathen reverted to their former sins.

But comparatively early schools were established, into which very young boys and girls were taken to be constantly taught and shepherded from the time they were two years old until they were grown men and women. The Church paid all expenses, food, clothing, housing and teachers. The result was a splendid generation of Christian men and women, who, living with such men and women as Bishop John Payne and wife, the Rev. Mr. Hoffman, Mrs. Brierley, and many others, saw the advantages of living as Christians. But good as that period was, we had to go further. The time came when we must try out these people, see them living in homes of their own, the boys of Cuthington School, marrying the girls from Brierley Hall, becoming the responsible citizens of the nation. Would they stand the test, or would they only stand upright while under the the influence and in a measure under the dominance of white people? We can now, with gladness, report that the venture of faith has been amply proven to be a great success. We met hundreds of both men and women who know what it is to carry all the responsibilities of full Christian citizenship, and to do it with honor. No white man has a vote, no white man owns property in Liberia. For twenty-five years they had a Bishop of their own race, and they want another.

They need very much that which only can come from a nation older and stronger than they, who have experienced all they are confronting, for there are many tribes totally untouched. The missionaries must be black men, but they need and plead for six white men to direct the work of advance inland. Here we hold the key to Africa, here is our sphere of influence. This nation is founded on religious liberty, and every official everywhere is in hearty sympathy with the Church and her aims. Land will be given right in the native towns. The native chiefs, with no exceptions, pleaded that teachers and schools might be sent to them to train their children. Oh! when you see hundreds of boys and girls running on the streets with no school, except some small Church boarding school, that can only take twenty out of the hundred, and you realize that there are a thousand villages where no school of any kind exists, you realize the responsibility, the opportunity.

The native Christians, as much as they can, send missionaries to the tribes inland. St. Mark's Sunday school of Cape Palmas, pays a native teacher in the interior; the Convocation of Monrovia built the church at Royeville. It was the deacon of this Church that Bishop Floyd advanced to the priesthood the Rev. M. Simpson.

Yes, the Church is making good, but the nation is in need of a lift from the people of these United States and from the government of this land of liberty. They owe two and one-half millions of dollars, and most of their revenues are taken to pay the interest on this debt, so they have little or no money for operating expenses. Our government should refund this loan and advance them sufficient money to properly develop their own industries, that they may have money to put public schools everywhere, and sufficient white men should be sent to aid our splendid representatives in Liberia to show the way, as we have already done in San Domingo, in Cuba, Porto Rico and in the Philippine Islands. The time has fully come when nations must help foster and care for the interests of weaker nations.

Mr. H. F. Worley, the financial advisor and general receiver of customs, is one of the highly trained men of these United States. He has been in San Domingo, Cuba and the Philippines, and he is also an ardent Christian man. He needs help. He works late into the night, at the expense of health and endangering his life, to put across the work before him. Mr. Richard C. Bundy and wife (colored), who aids mightily, of Cleveland, Ohio, in charge of the United States embassy, contribute greatly to the welfare of Liberia. The president, Daniel E. Howard, is a noble and patriotic lover of liberty, and makes gladly many sacrifices because these people all realize that this is the only place in Africa where a Negro can develop fully, under free institutions, his Christian manhood. He is supported by an able set of officials throughout the republic.

As a Church, we have a unique opportunity. We have twenty priests, three deacons, eighty-five catechists, and could get fifty more trained workers tomorrow. Let us go forward cheered by the results, thankful for the blessings bestowed during past years, and, among other things, thankful that the commission has returned without sickness or submarine disaster, because you made four prayers faithfully. Let us send the aid needed, and the few white clergy and teachers, and aid the further development of the Liberians.

Impressions of St. Alban's, Knoxville

(By a Visitor)

It was my recent privilege to spend a Sunday at St. Alban's School, Knoxville, of which the Rev. L. B. Hastings is Rector, and to be greatly impressed with the homelike and spiritual atmosphere of the place. I don't know when I have enjoyed a service more than the late Eucharist, at which the Rector celebrated, and at which the entire school sang the hymns and responses. It all seemed so reverent, earnest and manly, the sixty or more boys and the sprinkling of attendants from outside the school so evidently enjoyed the service. I said to myself, "This is true worship". Dinner followed, and here was evidenced a gratifying spirit of fine comradery and school loyalty. The dinner was bountiful, though strictly along lines of the government food schedule. The courses were interspersed with school and war songs, led by the older boys' Glee Club. At the close, some of the boys, under the direction of Mr. Russell, head master of the school, gave readings or short talks on timely topics. It was truly a delightful hour. Sunday is a sane and joyful day at St. Alban's. From the brief exercises at the table above referred to, I cannot but think that the school work must be very thorough, and made most interesting to the boys. One thing I noticed, that along with the enthusiastic spirit of patriotism that pervades the school—St. Alban's having given sixty-three of its former pupils to army service—there is also a strong spirit of devotion to the school work among the present pupils. The boys feel that right there is now their best and truest opportunity to prepare for life service. I am convinced that the endowment and support of St. Alban's, so rapidly developing into one of the most important Church schools of the country, is now a pressing duty of the hour. Among all the claims upon the purse and interest of the Church, let not the needs of St. Alban's be forgotten.

Before bidding good-bye to the school I stepped into St. Augustine's oratory in Bishop Chase Hall, and there knelt a moment in the sacred presence of Him in whose name and for whose glory all this sacrificial work is carried on, and I felt more than ever that with that invoked Presence with the school by night and by day, St. Alban's must and shall prove to be all that its founder, its benefactors and promoters had planned and are working for it to be.

The Church's Duty to Churchmen in the Service

First and foremost, there is the man in the ranks, and he is in the large majority.

Upwards of 75,000 are in the army and navy, at least five per cent on the firing line.

Many are mere boys, away from home and home influences for the first time in their lives, thrown into close and intimate connection with all sorts and conditions of men.

It is truly pathetic to see the eager way in which they welcome being "found" by one of the Church's representatives.

The first few weeks in camp are the most trying, and the cheery smile, hearty hand-clasp and invitation to a service or meeting from a Brotherhood man or a soldier's parson, as some of our volunteer chaplains style themselves, is a God-send to that man or boy.

He is assured that his Church is with him, sharing his troubles and lack of home comforts, living the same life, eating at the same mess, subject to the same discipline, in the person of her representatives in the camp, and not holding herself aloof in a comfortable church in city or town, where he may only go occasionally, as he can secure a pass..

It is often weeks before he gets to "know the ropes"; then he must have his full uniform, or the M. P.'s (military police) will get him.

The Y. M. C. A. is his only haven of refuge, and there are some who do not even know of it. His duties are new, strange and exacting. When taps are sounded he is glad to crawl into his blankets, as 6 a. m. comes very soon, and the sergeant will not be denied. Some of the old line sergeants have very little sympathy—it is an old story to them. To others, the work is just as new. Then all are undergoing "intensive training", and a homesick man or boy gets very little attention.

And they do get homesick. We had a captain come to us one day with an appeal for us to do something for his company. They all had the "blues", and he could do nothing with them. We organized a "sing-song". After a half hour of popular songs and some hymns they "came to" and stood for a little sensible talk.

So much for a group. One afternoon I found a boy seated on his bunk, ready to do something desperate. His sergeant was one of the old "line", hard boiled "variety", who wanted to know what the devil I wanted with O. anyhow, if I didn't know him, and where in the h——— did I get his name?

I explained that I represented the Episcopal War Commission, that the name was one I had given me to look up, and, furthermore, I was going to do so. He said he "never heard of that War Commission", but as I put up a bold front and had the proper military pass, he let me in the barrack. Through his ignorance of military duties, the boy had been having a pretty rough time. When he was not on fatigue, he was K. P. or Latrine Police, and to a fellow gently reared, it came pretty near to being h———.

I invited him to a movie at the Y. M. C. A. that night, and told his sergeant I expected him. He was there.

Sunday he came to church in town, and when I left that camp several weeks later I had the pleasure of saying good-bye to a corporal.

The Y. M. C. A. is doing a great work ministering to the social and physical well-being of the men, and to a large extent the spiritual.

But to our men and boys, trained to the dignified, serious Church service and ritual, and, most important of all, a frequent celebration of the Holy Communion, the Y. M. C. A. services, necessarily of an evangelistic character, do not fully satisfy his spiritual needs.

It is "up to the Church" to satisfy this need and keep men in the field representing her.

Brotherhood men, trained in personal work amongst men, to search out these men and boys, line up the indifferent as well as the earnest Churchmen, bring them to a realization of their duties to their Church and their fellow men, gather them in groups for personal work amongst their fellow men, help the Y. M. C. A. in organizing Bible classes, find men for baptism, confirmation, and see that they attend the communion services whenever our volunteer chaplains can arrange to hold them.

There are no chaplains of the Episcopal Church in the national army. We have more than our quota now with the regulars and in the national guard. Hence the necessity for our Church maintaining volunteer clergy or chaplains.

The cry from officers and men wherever I go is, "When are we going to have a communion service in camp, and where"?

It is surprising and gratifying to see how many of our Episcopalians rise from the ranks to positions of corporal and sergeant, and, through the officers' training camps and schools, to commissions.

A large proportion of officers are Churchmen.

ABOUT OURSELVES

Our friends tell us we do not talk enough about ourselves. So we venture to take a few extracts from the many letters that come to us every day. These all came within the past few days, as their dates show, and the mails are full of "good words" every day. Do you wonder we are enthusiastic in our work? And the large majority of these persons did not take a weekly Church paper until THE WITNESS met their need.

It does us good to know what our readers think of us. It makes us more determined than ever not to rest until we reach every Church family in every parish and mission in the land. Why not let all enjoy what the present readers so thoroughly appreciate?

Great Fortune Given to New York Parish and Church Institutions

The will of the late Mrs. Margaret E. Zimmerman of New York City bequeaths $2,000,000 to religious, educational and charitable institutions. Mrs. Zimmerman was the widow of John E. Zimmerman and daughter of William Ponsonby Furniss, known as the "West Indian Merchant Prince". He resided here years ago, and accumulated a fortune as a merchant trading with the West Indies. He owned a fleet of ships for his own business.

His fortune, once estimated at $40,000,000, descended finally to his three daughters, Clementina and Sophia Furniss and Mrs. Zimmerman. Mrs. Zimmerman, who died on March 16 last, survived her sisters.

Mrs. Zimmerman named St. Michael's Church as residuary legatee. The residue is estimated at more than $1,000,000. In addition, she left the Church a $50,000 cash gift.

To the Board of Managers of the Church Extension Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church she gave a chapel at Haverstraw, N. Y., 160 acres of land and a $200,000 gift to support a mission there for community improvement.

To the Cathedral of St. John the Divine $140,000 to maintain a school for girls; Sheltering Arms, $100,000; New York Nursery and Child's Hospital, $200,000; Society for the Relief of Sailors, $50,000; General Memorial Hospital, $50,000; Church Temperance Society, $25,000; Society for Promoting the Gospel Among Seamen, $53,000.

To each of the following, $10,000: Seamen's Church Institute, American Church Institute for Negroes, Shelter for Respectable Girls, Church Mission of Help, House of Rest for Consumptives, Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, National Child Labor Committee.

The General Clergy Fund of the Protestant Episcopal Church received $35,000.

To the Metropolitan Museum of Art she gave valuable laces, works of art and statuary.

The Girl's Friendly Society in the Diocese of New York

A large number of associates, members and their friends gathered at Synod Hall on the evening of April 25th to hear Miss Helen Fraser of the National War Savings Committee of London lecture on women's part in winning the war. The terrible need of supplying at home the places of men in the service of their country has developed the efficiency of the women in a most remarkable degree. Almost without exception, women have been fitted for labors hitherto considered beyond their physical strength. There seems to be nothing that they are not both willing and able to do. England, bleeding, almost dying, will fight until the war is won. The women know what this means to them, who have sent their dear ones to the front, and in many, many instances lost them. They suffer, but do not shrink from the sacrifice; they suffer gladly, if only oppression can be made to cease in all the world. Miss Fraser's words inspired all who heard them to resolve to do their utmost in this time of the world's great need.

Captain Lindsay of the 75th Canadian Infantry spoke in the interest of the Liberty Bonds. He told how greatly money was needed to buy the sinews of war. He enumerated needs of the men at the front that money alone could give them, and urged all to consider no sacrifice too great at home, if only such sacrifice resulted in supplying what our men must have.

Miss Hadley presided at the meeting and introduced the speaker. Patriotic songs were sung, after which a blessing was pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Schuelte.

THE PRESIDENT DECLARES MAY 30 A DAY OF PRAYER AND FASTING

President Wilson has issued the following Proclamation, in accordance with a resolution of Congress, setting apart May 30th (Memorial Day) as "a day of public humiliation, prayer and fasting", on which prayers should be offered for victory for our armies and an early peace:

Whereas, The Congress of the United States, on the second day of April last, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it being a duty peculiarly incumbent in a time of war humbly and devoutly to acknowledge our dependence on Almighty God and to implore His aid and protection, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to commend a day of public humiliation, prayer and fasting to be observed by the people of these United States with religious solemnity and the offering of fervent supplication to Almighty God o safety and welfare of our cause, His blessings on our arms, and a speedy restoration of an honorable and lasting peace to the nations of the earth; and,

"Whereas, It has always been the reverent habit of the people of the United States to turn in humble appeal to Almighty God for His guidance in the affairs of their common life."

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Thursday, the thirtieth of May, a day already freighted with sacred and stimulating memories, a day of public humiliation, prayer and fasting, and do exhort my fellow-citizens of all faiths and creeds to assemble on that day in their several places of worship, and there, as well as in their homes, to pray Almighty God that He may forgive our sins and shortcomings as a people and purify our hearts to see and love the truth, to accept and defend all things that are just and right, and to purpose only those righteous acts and judgments which are in conformity with His will, beseeching Him that He will give victory to our armies as they fight for freedom, wisdom to those who take counsel on our behalf in these days of dark struggle and perplexity, and steadfastness to our people to make sacrifice to the utmost in support of what is just and true, bringing us at last the peace in which men's hearts can be at rest, because it is founded upon mercy, justice and good-will.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this eleventh day of May, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighteen, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-second.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President,
Robert Lansing,
Secretary of State.

ance but to stern dealing with undreamed of iniquity. As true Americans, as true men and women and as true Christians, we have no right to be tolerant of the things which Germany has done. We must keep the flame of our moral indignation hot and burning. We owe this to the world, to ourselves and to those who have so deeply suffered for the right. We owe this also to Germany herself. It is the stern condemnation of her acts by the moral judgment of the world, as well as our combined force of arms which will at last bring Germany to realization and repentance."

Ordination

Bishop Sherwood ordained to the priesthood in St. Mathew's Church, Bloomington, Ill., on the Sunday after the Ascension, May 12, the Rev. John Turner Lillard, Jr., Deacon-in-Charge of St. Andrew's Church, Paris, Ill. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Raymond M. Gunn of Chester. The candidate was presented by the Rev. William Baker, rector of the parish, who also said the Litany. The Rev. A. E. Selcer, of Pontiac, Ill., was also present and united with other priests in the laying on of hands.

Mr. Lillard is the third priest for this parish to be recently ordained. He has been called to the rectorship of the parish where he has served as deacon, and will continue his work there.

SERVICE INTERRUPTED BY AN EARTHQUAKE

The Rev. J. D. H. Brown was conducting a service in St. Paul's Church, San Jacinto, Cal., at the time of the recent earthquake which did considerable damage to the business section of the town. The service had reached the end of the hymn before the sermon and the preacher in the pulpit had raised his hand for the invocation when the shock came, one following the other in rapid succession and with a violence which seemed to portend the destruction of the church. "With wonderful equanimity and without any demonstration," Dr. Browne states "the congregation rapidly passed into the street, leaving the building after seasts had been upset, the lectern thrown down, the large Altar cross flung to the floor, indeed almost everything movable except the pulpit and organ being displaced. And in the vestry a large and heavily filled wardrobe and other things were piled up on the floor. Fortunately, and wonderful to relate, the church itself in no way suffered from the shocks, and the minister before he left the building was able to put everything back in its place, so that one could not detect the slightest permanent effect of the unusually severe upheaval. The damage was not virtually, but really nil. On the following Sunday the same clergyman held what was in the nature of a thanksgiving service, and preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion."

The Annual Meeting of the G. F. S. A.

The Annual Meeting of The Girls Friendly Society of America, was held in the City of Washington from May 5th to 7th inclusive and opened with a Corporate Communion at St Thomas' Church on Sunday at 8:00 a. m. In the evening the Annual Festival Service was also held at St. Thomas' Church when The Rev. Dr. McClenthen of Mount Calvary, Baltimore, was the preacher.

The following day the annual business meeting was held in the parish hall of the Church of The Epiphany, with Mrs. John C. Boyd, the president of the organization, in the chair. The meeting decided to co-operate with the Fosdick Commission in a number of ways on training camp activities in meeting the problem of providing recreation for the thousands of girls employed by the government in Washington who will be kept in the city during the summer. The reports received showed that substantial gifts had been made by the organization to the Red Cross and other war relief measures, missions and other local phinanthropic agencies. The lodge maintained by the society is now caring for 45 young women in government service while the society also has charge of the popular Sunday afternoon teas held at Fort Myer for the benefit of the enlisted men stationed there.

On Tuesday, May 7th, a mass patriotic meeting was held by the society in the Epiphany Parish Hall. The Rev. Dr. McKim presided and speeches were made by Mrs. Boyd, Col. Aplin, D. S. O. of the British Army, Lieut. Harry Milson of the Canadian Army and Mrs. Marion B. Taylor, presenting various phases of war work. The girls seem full of enthusiasm and ready to do whatever they can for the Friendly and for the many other causes so closely allied with the society, in which we are all interested.

The Senior Club, with Miss B. Taylor, as the Editor, has recently put out the first issue of "Friendly Doings," which contains Diocesan Notes as to the activities of the various branches with something of interest to all. As recorded throughout its columns, every branch is engaged in some work for the Red Cross and other necessities for our men at the front. There are 11 branches at present with over 800 enrolled as members and associates. The Patriotic League has about 400 members and is a real effort on the part of the Girls to "do their bit" to help win the war and the desire that out of all the pain and suffering of men and the self-sacrifice and nobility of women, our country will emerge a finer and greater nation than it could have become, without the time of test.

The girls had a quiet day at S. Andrew's recently with the Rev. Dr. McComb as conductor, who had as his subject, "Prayer." There were about 100 associates and members present throughout the entire day,

AN APPEAL FROM THE PRESIDING BISHOP

The power plant and laundry of St. Mark's Hospital, Salt Lake City, have been entirely destroyed by fire. The sum of $7,000.00—for rebuilding is available from insurance, but $10,000.00 more is urgently needed.

St. Mark's Hospital for forty years has done a blessed work and it is now filled with patients. It was the pioneer hospital of Utah. The Salt Lake people themselves will help to rebuild. And others outside, in the Church at large, will, I hope, also help. I earnestly appeal to all.

Please send gifts to me at St. Louis or to Bishop Touret at Grand Junction, Colorado, or to The Church Mission House, 1281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

St. Louis, Mo., May 19, 1918.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA OBSERVED

At the memorial service held on Tuesday afternoon, May 7th, in Trinity Church, New York City, the third anniversary of the sinking of the Lusitania was observed. The Rev. Dr William T. Manning, rector, preached the sermon. Other clergy in attendance were the Rev. Dr. Howard Duffield, the Rev. Dr. Charles R. Canedy, acting chaplain of the Daughters of the Revolution; Bishop Frederick Courtney, chaplain of St. George's Society; C. C. Goodell of the Empire State Society, Sons of the American Revolution, and the Rev. Dr. George F. Douglas, chaplain of the Loyal Legion. The American and British colors in procession were accompanied by American soldiers and sailors and British soldiers. Dr. Manning, in the course of his sermon, reviewed briefly the story of the sinking of the Lusitania, the shooting of Edith Cavell and Captain Fryatt, the dastardly spy system and secret propaganda carried on in all lands by the Prussians, the hideous cruelties practised on prisoners of war, the unspeakable treatment of women and the wholesale enslaving of men, those awful scenes in Belgium, and similar things which have revealed to us the Prussian mind and soul.

"There are people," said Dr. Manning, "who tell us that we must not dwell on the wrongs which Germany has done, we must feel neither hatred against these deeds, nor anger against those who are guilty of them. We are told that we must carry on the war without moral passion, that we must forgive the red handed murderer who is still exulting in his crimes, that we must refrain from any harsh judgment of his crimes because we ourselves also are sinners.

The people who say this will bear watching. If loyal to their country, they are not loyal to justice and righteousness. This teaching has a Christian sound and is accepted as such by the unthinking. In reality this vapid sentimentality and spurious charity is as far off from Christianity as light is from darkness. It is essentially unrighteous and thoroughly immoral. It is a cold pacifism which refuses to see the difference between right and wrong. It is Religious Bolshevism. This teaching holds up before us a God whose character is one of unrighteous tolerance of doing and feeble amiability. The God in whom Christians believe is a God who loves righteousness and hates and punishes sin. God does not forgive the criminal while he continues in his sin and the Bible makes this abundantly plain to us. The teaching tells us to be tolerant of crimes which nothing can ever undo and of men for whom, so long as they remain committed to these crimes, God and the Lord Christ have no tolerance.

The man who does not hate evil is no true lover of the good. "O ye that love the Lord see that ye hate the thing that is evil." This is the message that the Bible gives us and that we need to learn.

We are called now not to tolerance but to stern dealing with undreamed of iniquity. As true Americans, as true men and women and as true Christians, we have no right to be tolerant of the things which Germany has done. We must keep the flame of our moral indignation hot and burning. We owe this to the world, to ourselves and to those who have so deeply suffered for the right. We owe this also to Germany herself. It is the stern condemnation of her acts by the moral judgment of the world, as well as our combined force of arms which will at last bring Germany to realization and repentance."

A Unique Statement

The Rev. J. N. Goodrich, rector of Christ Church, of East Tawas, Mich., announces in a letter that he has come to think very highly of THE WITNESS "as a national and world-wide weekly" and that it is his intention to secure a large list of subscribers in his parish. In mentioning conditions in his work he makes the following unique statement and comment:

"God is wonderfully owning His Word in this Parish. In this brief note the personal pronoun appears often, yet, Jesus is presented to this Church and people. He is pretty nearly having his way, and this is a great advance.

Our Church people generally have been taught—from the pulpit—that we are the especial and precious pet of Jehovah—about the only thing we need to do is to bank on our wonderful respectability. We stand square-toed and both feet resting solid upon our marvelous prestige, very sure that God has great cause to be proud of us as a Church. How could He have gotten along without us? Impossible!

Heaven will be a dismal failure if we are not there to adorn it. Is not this all just so? We are painfully aware of the awful truthfulness of the above. And yet, we never cherished so large a hope. Self-revelation is a great and wholesome thing. O, that we may realize that all of our resources are in Jesus!"

Iowa Parish Prospers ; Materially, Spiritually

St. Paul's Parish, Council Bluffs, Iowa, has made remarkable progress spiritually and financially under the able and earnest leadership of the Rev. Wilford E. Mann, who has been Rector but slightly over a year, succeeding the Rev. A. G. A. Buxton, who had renounced the priesthood and conducted a series of meetings, in which he took occasion to speak disparagingly of his former parishioners, and of the Church in general. It was a delicate and difficult situation in which Mr. Mann found himself upon taking charge of the work, and the loyal support accorded him by the people reflects much credit upon them and their leader. A member of the parish recently offered a gift of $5,000, on condition that an additional sum of $15,000 be raised, which was promptly contributed, and has been used to liquidate a debt of $12,000 of 30 years' standing; $1,000 has been set apart for improvements and repairs, and the remaining $7,000 has been placed in a fund to be used towards the erection of a new parish house. The donor of the $5,000 has since presented the Rector with $2,500 to be used at his own discretion on the rectory and church building.

Mr. Mann expressed a desire to spend a few months in service at the front as a volunteer chaplain, and the vestry very generously granted him six months' leave of absence, in the event that he receives such an appointment, and voted to bear all his traveling and other expenses. There are forty-seven men and three women in the war service on the honor roll of the Parish. The Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Morrison confirmed a class of twenty-two persons presented to him by Mr. Mann on Sunday, May 25.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Tuesday in Whitsun-Week

THE COLLECT

O God, who as at this time didst teach the hearts of thy faithful people, by sending to them the light of thy Holy Spirit; Grant us by the same Spirit to have a right judgment in all things, and evermore to rejoice in his holy comfort; through the merits of Jesus Christ our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with thee, in the unity of the same Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

Three successive times is this Collect printed in our Book of Worship Many, many times should its petition creep to our lips as we go about our business. Each day, when new problems come up, we should pray for "right judgment", which will include a comprehensive outlook on all things that the problems may touch. Each day, when worry creeps over our thought life, we should send out the S. O. S. for that "holy comfort", whose advent spells joy—joy in the Holy Ghost, the Comforter.

"At this time." In our seminaries we are told to teach men that they are living in the dispensation of the Holy Ghost. That is easy to say, hard to understand, still harder to translate into action. How many times do you speak to and with God the Holy Ghost? How sorry are you if you think you have grieved Him? How often do you think of Him and speak of Him as It—an influence rather than a person? "I will send you another Comforter", or Paraclete, or Advocate, said Jesus, and so "at this time" we make a place on our Christian calendar for a celebration of His formal coming, and we try to enthuse as at Christmas or Easter, but except in rare instances our enthusiasm for the coming of the Holy Ghost is not ardent. Churches are not filled, people do not send Holy Ghost greetings to one another as they send Christmas and Easter greetings. How much better off are we than were those Ephesians, who said, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost"? Perhaps the answer is because we are carnally minded, rather than spiritually minded—which means that we still talk in terms of the outward and visible sign, rather than of the inward and spiritual grace.

"At this time" should mean something more vivid than the description of an era, or the label of an ecclesiastical event. "At this time" should be equivalent to the ever present "now". "Now is the accepted time" to become Holy Ghost Christians! "Now" is the time to be taught of God. "Now" is the time "to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit".

Every Whitsun week should be a great inspirational week in the Church. On her birthday, her children should offer their thanksgivings for her beginning, and should enlist for her propagation. Church extension should not be propaganda so much as a propagation. The gifts made on Whitsunday should be souls and bodies. At every Altar the priest should, with great spiritual joy, present unto the Lord for the service of propagating the Church, the souls and bodies of her sons and daughters, who come as living sacrifices for the extension of the Kingdom in some part of the world away from home.

"At this time" might be a good challenge to those of us whose besetting sin is procrastination. A procrastinator is one who acts on impulse rather than judgment, one whose life is full of useless shadows and regrets, because "at this time" he had fallen into the habit of saying, "It is inconvenient", or "inexpedient", or "not in accordance with", or some other hypnotic phrase or mouth-filling excuse. The history of missions on its sad side is a history of people who, when the prophets urged them to lengthen cords and strengthen stakes, said by word and deed, "Not at this time". Surely these folks did not lay up for themselves a good reward against their day of necessity; and besides that, surely they did contribute to the weakness and inefficiency of their Mother Church in those places where she needed encouragement to grow and expand.

FOR THE EPISTLE

When the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts viii:14.

This Scripture is very familiar to those who have prepared others for confirmation, or have pondered its message before their own confirmation. These verses paint for us a picture of the Church in action. The historian mentions confirmation, not to establish that rite as a Bible or Apostolic custom, but to show that the Church was making headway according to the program of extension laid down by the Master, and bringing home the truth that in confirming Samaritans, God is no respecter of persons. Confirmation doubtless is one of those "things pertaining to the Kingdom of God" of which our Saviour spoke in the forty days after Easter. It is a custom which was practiced before a word of the New Testament was written; but the historians' mention of it shows its ancient and honorable and spiritual intent. To cling to the practice of confirmation is to witness to the spiritual side of Church membership. Its purpose is largely illuminative. "The light of Thy Holy Spirit" is a gift whose brilliance and illumination is not a dazzling manifestation, but a gradual shining, the effect of which is life and peace, comfort and joy in living the Christian life. Recall how the Bishop prays that those on whom he lays his hands may daily increase in the Holy Spirit more and more, showing that the gift is not full orbed, but capable of expension and contraction.

The Holy Ghost can be appropriated by human lives. He can be given through human instruments, a truth that those who practice the occult would do well to ponder before they complete their plans to fool the public. The Holy Ghost, the Illuminator, is not the gift or the prized possession of a certain exclusive type of mind or purse or social station in life. Those who wished to call down the fire of God in destruction on the Samaritans, when they walked with Jesus in the flesh, saw the fire of God come down on those same Samaritans when they were themselves filled with the Spirit. Wonderful lesson is this, that there are differences of administration, but the same Spirit.

Notice, not for purposes of controversy, but as an historical tribute to the directive power of the whole Episcopate, that St. Peter did not send, but was sent along with St. John to bestow that which they themselves also had received. Notice, too, that when we send the Church to work out the mission of the Master, there should we send the Bishop to lay on hands and confirm that work with signs following. There must we send the priest to baptize and the deacon to serve spiritual tables. It is cruel injustice to send the Church inadequately officered into places which are expected to benefit by her coming. Apostles are not supposed to stay in their Jerusalems all the time. Jerusalem is a center of life and inspiration only as long as men come up to tell their stories to the apostles and the apostles immediately follow up the word which they hear. Jerusalem in the Mother Church, but her breasts will wither and dry up unless she is continually gathering under her protection those inside and outside lambs and sheep that her chief pastors were told to tend and feed.

If you are praying that your spiritual Jerusalem shall have peace, pray that she finds plenty of places to send her apostles, otherwise her peace will be the peace of death. She will have a name that she liveth, but the facts will show that she is dead. And the reason will be that there is no Spirit left in her. In other words, if you pray God to bless your national, diocesan, parochial boundaries, and show no spirit of adventure, no desire to enlarge, raise up no one to has many members like you, she is in the second place, if the Church preach at home or abroad, you are not really praying in the first place, and nothing more or less than a bog, or a valley of dry bones, for whom there is no hope until the Spirit of the Lord shall come and breathe again upon these bones.

THE GOSPEL

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice; and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. And when he putteth out his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers. This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them. Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them. I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture. The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. —St. John x:1.

"Feed my sheep"; "feed my lambs", were two commands given to one of the apostolic band. As a result, the sheepfold came into being. The shepherd of the sheep, and the thief and robber, must have looked about the same to the outsider. But the sheep and lambs would know the difference. How? By the spirit as well as the manner in which they were approached. The language and the clothing of a good shepherd can be imitated, but not his spirit, and it is the spirit which profiteth both the sheepfold and the sheep.

What is the atmosphere of your sheepfold? What is the sign over the door of your sheepfold? What is the atmosphere within? Of what spirit are the sheep and lambs therein? Good questions these for Bishops and Standing Committees, rectors and vestries, organists and guilds. Is it the spirit of the more abundant life? And is the sign of that life an enlarged girth of body and purse, or a lengthening line of eager yet calm life-giving people, following their leaders out of the door into the highways and byways of the world and coming home with others, not of this fold, in their train?

One of the great problems of the Church today is that of properly folding the Master's sheep. To every fold there must be the same door. There is only one door to a sheepfold. That is why there can be only one universal Church. If any one enters the universal Church by Jesus Christ he shall be saved. But Christ is far above all heavens. That is the reason for Whitsunday. When Christ ascended, the Holy Spirit came down out of the invisible and took of the things of Christ and showed them unto men. He came to possess the sheepfold. His house on earth is the Church. He is the one who gives men the Spirit of the Good Shepherd. He makes the waters of baptism life-giving waters. He sets the Lord's table, and feeds the flock with that life-giving food which makes for more life. He takes the lambs into His bosom, and gently leads those that are with young. He makes a sheepfold into a household. He is the Voice of gentle stillness. He is the Spirit that makes men to be of one mind in an house; and that mind is the mind of Christ Jesus, and that house is the house of God. He is God. They that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. Do not let us forget the truth part of that worship. When men begin to worship God in truth, their spiritual lives come to the surface. Things will become subordinate to God. Materialistic philosophy will take its proper place, and the spirit of a man will rule his flesh.

If we do not yet understand the things Jesus speaks to us, is it not more than likely that on the throne of our hearts there sits a dominating figure or ideal, on which we have not permitted the light of the Holy Spirit to shine? And if a parish does not yet hear the voice of one crying in the wilderness, does not yet hear the man across the seas saying, "Come over and help us", does not see the woman from its own coasts kneeling and saying, "Lord, help me", is it not more than likely that that parish has been worshiping something which is not spiritual? And if from no parish, from Whitsunday to Whitsunday, there comes up to the Lord the cry of "Lord, here am I, send me", is it not likely that the leader of those sheep has been listening to some other voice than the voice of the Eternal Spirit calling for laborers in the harvest fields of the world?

In the construction of lessons for Trinity Sunday, or in the criticism of lessons proposed, it is necessary to bear two things in mind. One is that the doctrine of the Trinity may be regarded from two distinct though related points of view. In technical theological language, they are, respectively, the ontological and the economic Trinity. In other words, the one point of view is that of inherent and eternal distinctions within the Deity, while the other point of view is the Trinity of Divine manifestations, or God as Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier. It is the former that is jealously guarded by theologians; it is the latter that is of interest to "the man in the street". Both are presented in the "Proper Prefaces" of the Communion Office. Moreover, when we are dealing with the three-fold manifestations of Deity, as Father, Son and Holy Spirit, or Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier, those manifestations may be simultaneous, as in the story of creation or of the baptism of our Lord; or they may be successive, as in history through which God reveals Himself.

But Trinity has another aspect, which must not be ignored, and which indeed is the practical or pragmatic side of the Trinity of manifestation, and that is human regeneration. (See Gospel for Trinity Sunday.) From this point of view, Trinity Sunday is the Octave, and this is true both logically and historically; that is, in the actual development of the Church year of Whitsunday. Nor must it be forgotten, though it too often is, that the Trinity season is the outcome of Whitsunday, being the application of the fruits of redemption through the Holy Spirit, and (in the opinion of the present writer) ought to be named Sundays "after Whitsunday", instead of "after Trinity".

Now for the lessons: The "acid test" of the Old Testament historical course may be said to come on Trinity Sunday. On that Sunday of the first year we had Joshua viii:30 to end—building (in the Promised Land) of an Altar for the worship of the true God, and the reading of the covenant law that bound the people to their God. Worship belongs to the ontological Trinity (cf. Epistle for Trinity Sunday), adoration of God as He is in Himself, while the law is an appropriate reading for this Sunday, viewed as Octave of Whitsunday, and stands for the idea of the obedience due from the redeemed—fidelity to the law, which our Lord came not to destroy, but to fulfill.

This second year brings us around (in the Old Testament historical course) to a corresponding situation—a renewal of the covenant of the law, but including a summary of history, as the Trinity is a summary of doctrine, history, moreover, which exhibits the God of Creation, Redemption and Sanctification in action (vs. 6, 9 and 20). More than this, in addition to the law, it expounds the idea of obedience in the Spirit, which follows upon, or is designed to follow upon, Redemption, an idea which underlies the true but most inadequate statement that "doctrine occupies the first and duty the second half of the Church year".

Other aspects of Trinity Sunday are provided for in the lessons, which have not been referred to.

The lessons for next Sunday are keyed to the thought of the Collect, viz: Evangelical obedience, a continuation of the line of thought already given us for Whitsunday and after.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

A PRAYER

For our absent friends and loved ones, who at duty's call are serving our nation and upholding the honor of our flag.

Almighty God, most loving and merciful, to Whom alone we may go with the desires and the petitions of our hearts: Hear our prayer which we offer unto Thee in behalf of those who have been called to defend the honour of our nation and to maintain our cause. Let Thy watchful providence guard them in the hour of danger, sustain them in the day of battle and strengthen them in all adversities. Spread over them the covering of Thy protection by day and by night. In the perils of sickness be their support and their stay. If it be Thy will that they must pass through the valley of the shadow of death let Thy rod and Thy staff comfort them that they may open their eyes in the rest and peace of Thy Presence. (Bless with Thy special blessing Thy servant. . . . . Be unto him a strong tower, a refuge and a defense. And in Thy mercy bring him home again in safety and in strength, in happiness and in health.) Comfort with Thy Holy Spirit those whose hearts have been filled with sorrow at the loss of loved ones, and give them grace to bear their burdens with full faith in Thy salvation. Strengthen the arm of our nation that we may vanquish and overcome all our enemies. Grant that a holy and righteous peace may be established in the world; so that Thy way may be known upon all the earth, Thy saving health among nations. These mercies and blessings we ask of Thee in the name of Thy dear Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"The uniform absence of joy in prayer is one of the threatening signs in respect of our religious state. . .

"It does not require what the world pronounces a great sin, to break up the serenity of the soul in its devotional hours.

. . . Even a doubtful principle of life, harbored in the heart, is perilous.

. . . May not many of us find the cause of our joylessness in prayer, in the fact that we are living upon some unsettled principles of conduct? . . I apprehend that there is very much of suspense of conscience among Christians upon subjects of practical life, on which there is no suspense of action. . . .

"We offer many prayers through mental indolence. . . . Prayer can have no intelligent fervor unless the objects of our faith are represented with some degree of vividness in our conceptions of them. As we must have clear thoughts before we can have intelligent feeling, so must we have vivid thought before we can have profound feeling. But this is a process of intellect.

"Yet do we not often come to the hour and place of prayer, burdened by an exhausted body; with intellect stupefied by the absorption of its forces in the plans, the toils, the perplexities, the disappointments, the irritations of the day? . . . But in such a state of body and of mind, to acquire impressive conceptions of God and of eternity, is an intellectual change. I do not affirm that a state of intellect is all that is involved here; but intellectual change is indispensible; and it requires exertion."—Austin Phelps, "The Still Hour."

"I will pray with the spirit and I will pray with the understanding also."—I Cor. 14:15.

Out There

Out there, the flame-swept trenches;
Back here, the smiling field.
Out there, the battle harvest;
Back here, the fruitful yield.
O you, who dwell securely,
With all that life can give,
Remember those forever
Who died that you might live.

Out there, crowded moment;
Back here, the tears and fears;
Out there, the great adventure;
Back here, the empty years.
Oh, you who are immortal,
Remember from on high
The weary ones remaining,
Who lived that you might die.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

(Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colo.)

Q. WHY DONT MEN GO TO CHURCH?

There are three powerful reasons that we have discovered for men's absence from Church.

1. The Moral Reason

The statistics from the cantonments show that a very large proportion of young men in our towns and villages lead immoral lives. One scarcely dares to guess at the percentage. Christ appeals to the pure in heart, or to those who repent them of their sins.

Those who are the victims of lust, or greed, or hate, turn from God, as the criminal avoids the just judge. They want no judgment day.

2. The Intellectual Reason

Many men of excellent morals try to submit God to a laboratory process, as though religion were a philosophy. Religion is an intention first, a matter of definition, second.

"Like as the hart desireth the water brocks, so longeth my soul to Thee, O God!" If music were to depend upon logic for its origin, there would be no harmony. The ballad comes before the anthem, as faith comes before theology.

3. The Motive Reason

Religious duties require an effort. Just as scholars would cut school, and soldiers drill, and workingmen would loaf on the job, if there was not a compelling motive, so man cuts Church because no one forces him to do his duty. There is no compulsion in worshiping God other than the compelling force of one's own conscience. There is no superintendent to enforce attendance, no examinations to compel work, no commander to punish slacking.

Men who believe in God do not go to Church because they are lazy. In their excuses, they claim to be too busy, too tired, too interested in something else. These are the same reasons why lazy men do not work.

The motive of conscience has been so weakened by self-indulgence that it deceives itself. The fact that one has promised to be a faithful soldier of Jesus Christ unto his life's end is outweighed by other motives. Any motive that is stronger than one's plighted word is a poor excuse.

The Church has to do without those who delight in sin, those who substitute speculation for action, those who are self-indulgent.

Necessarily the number of names, out of the thousands who heard and profited, is one hundred and twenty. It is the old question, "Were there not ten cleansed? Where are the nine?" They are forgetting their duty because they are thinking of themselves. Only about five per cent of men succeed in any profession or business. The Church finds the same law of average.

Q. IS GOD A PERSON?

In answering this question, one must realize that words have limitations. The word "person" is associated in our mind with finite beings. A word cannot describe adequately that which transcends human experience, for that is something which passes man's understanding and, therefore, is beyond the power of man's words to describe.

By the word "person" (in reference to God) we mean:

(1) One who is conscious of his own being.

(2) One who thinks, wills, loves, acts freely.

(3) One who is morally responsible.

In this sense, God must be a person, for otherwise one who thinks, loves, acts freely, is morally responsible, would be greater than his Creator, would have developed powers that his God did not possess, and therefore could not bestow. But the Christian answer to this question is found in the words of Christ: "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."

Christ is God, taking our flesh and dwelling among us, that He may be intelligible to us. One is sometimes led astray by the theological phraseology of the Nicene Council, valuable as it is for theological purposes, and is apt to forget that God revealed Himself in Christ as a person who possessed all the attributes that make our loved ones dear to us. We cannot substitute the Trinity, nor the Virgin Mary, nor the Jehovah of the Old Testament, nor the passionless God of the scholars, for the sympathetic, suffering Saviour, "who was tempted in all points like as we are, and yet without sin".

He is the God of little children, for they can love Him, and if we are to be as little children, He is our God, too, so far as we are capable of touching God. It is He who was from the beginning, whom men have heard and seen and touched; it is He who is God manifested to us.

We worship the Trinity because He proclaimed the Trinity to us, but we worship Him because He is God made manifest.

The doctrine of the Trinity is necessary to satisfy our intellectual demands, but to most men it is an abstraction; it is through Jesus that we are to learn who God really is, and what He is, and so we come to God only through the contemplation, adoration and incarnation within us of Jesus Christ.

Human beings can have no adequate idea of God, no working human, sympathetic conception of God, except they get it through Jesus Christ. He is our one interpreter of God's being and nature.

Q. WHY DO WE NOT EXCHANGE PULPITS WITH OTHER MINISTERS?

For a very obvious reason. Why, if some one has intrusted you with a home for the season, do you not exchange it with other men? Or why, if some one has left you a sum of money in trust do you not speculate with it, instead of putting it in the bank? Or why, if you are a householder, do you not invite the general public in to dinner?

What is the Church, and what is the ministry? The Church is the Lord's household, containing the Lord's treasure; having the Lord's table, ministered by the Lord's servants. As servants, our first responsibility is to take care of that entrusted to our care. It is not ours to bestow. Our idea of the ministry is that of men chosen to hold fast that which is entrusted to their care. It is no reflection upon other men that we cannot and do not exchange with them that trust. They may be better men than we are, more faithful servants, but it is not a question of their honesty; that is a question we have no way of determining. It is rather a question of our trust, which we cannot turn over to one who has not been designated to assume the responsibility. It is on the same principle that the Master of a Masonic Lodge will not turn over his responsibility to the Master of some other fraternity. It is not a question of worthiness; it is rather a question of the limitations pertaining to his office. It is not a question of his willingness; it is rather a question of his right to do that thing, and if he did do that thing, if he did invite some one without the lodge to perform that function, it would still be a question of his moral right to do that thing.

The Church instructs, examines, ordains certain men to do certain things, and it has the right to say that only such men shall do these things. The clergyman of the Church has a moral obligation to respect that with which he has been entrusted, and he has no moral right to delegate it to another. Of course, this does not refer to special occasions, but to the regular ministrations of a priest or prophet. Of course, as one minister of this Church is reported to have said, "I would just as soon be a Methodist minister as a priest of the Church." All right! But as a priest of this Church you have no moral right to be a Methodist minister, nor to act as though you were one. It isn't a question of theory; it as a priest of this Church you have tion vow.

Perhaps you would rather be the husband of some other wife, the father of some other family, the sheriff of some other county, the master of some other lodge. The question is still, what is required of you in the station where you are. Surely it is to be loyal to the principles of the institution to which you belong. And if that institution has decreed that ordained ministers shall preach the gospel and administer the sacraments, then you are a law breaker and not faithful to your vows if you set aside the law and assert your own private preference.

Christianity has an uplifting and carrying power to aid suffering humanity. Compare the wailing words heroic tones of a worn, weary and of Ovid in his Tristia, or Cicero's lamentations during his exile, with the jailed Jew, feeble in frame, fame and friends, and a victim of perjury, who made no wail or lamentation, but sings, "Rejoice, and again I say rejoice!"—Rev. Harold Huntington, in Cui Bono.

Babies of the Church in North Carolina Make Fine Showing

The twenty-first anniversary of the Babies' Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of North Carolina, was celebrated at the Convocation of Raleigh recently. There are now 339 baby helpers in the several Diocesan branches, who contributed for various objects the past year, 21,672 pennies. In a message to the mothers, Alice Winston Spruill, President, said:

"More than a third of a century ago a few consecrated women organized in this Diocese that branch of the Mission work of the Church known as the Woman's Auxiliary.

Later, to meet a recognized need, the Junior Branch was organized for the younger women of the Church. Thus were launched two great missionary forces—active, energetic, and devoted, and yet the hunger of the mother heart of the Church was not appeased.

To complete the trinity of co-operative energies, it was soon ascertained that in the life and work of the Church there was a large space to be filled by the babies. Thus it came about that the Little Helpers' Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was organized.

Today we are celebrating the twenty-first birthday of the Babies' Branch in North Carolina.

The babies, who, at the genesis of this movement, stared with wide-eyed wonder at the little red mite boxes, are now men and women. The infant of that time is the adult soldier in the church militant today.

It seems meet and fitting, therefore, that, upon this the day when the babies have attained their majority, we should offer congratulations and felicitations. There is much for which we should be thankful in this record of twenty-one years. During this period there have been given by the babies of this Convocation a grand aggregate of three hundred thousand pennies. These have been disbursed in missions around the whole great earth. China, Japan, Alaska, the isles of the sea have received these blessed messengers of baby love and baby faith.

The theory and teaching of the Little Helpers is that every penny is sent upon its mission winged with a prayer. During these twenty-one years, have three hundred thousand prayers girdled the earth from the babies of North Carolina?

It gives me real pleasure on this birthday occasion to thank the faithful loyal women who have worked with me so untiringly.

In seven parishes the directors remain unchanged for twenty-one years. Battleboro, Middleburg, Pittsboro, Ridgeway, Rocky Mount, Scotland Neck, Stovall form a galaxy of bright particular stars, Loyal, earnest, devoted these directors have been since this organization was first formed.

The Memorial Circle of the Little Helpers especially appeals to many a sorrowing heart. Though God has called your baby to Him, the baby's pennies are working and doing good on earth, as the baby in Heaven is working and singing in the presence of God.

Now insignificant seems the penny that is dropped in the little mite box each Sunday morning, and yet, accompanied by the prayer, how great!

'All service ranks the same with God, whose children, best and worse, are we. There is no last nor first.'"

General Rhodes, a Churchman Urges Soldiers to Lead Clean Lives

Brigadier General Charles Dudley Rhodes, Commander of the 157th Field Artillery Brigade at Camp Gordon, Georgia, is a devoted member of the Church and counts among his many friends, Generals Pershing, Bell, and Leonard Wood. He is a graduate of West Point, saw service in the Pine Ridge Campaign in 1891, the Rustler war in Wyoming, Spanish war, China Relief Expedition or Boxer rebellion, the Philippine insurrection and Moro rebellion. He guarded the Mexican border, was head of the mounted service school at Ft. Riley, Kansas, and is said to be one of the most loved officers in the army, a friend in the very best sense of the rank and file, and the youngest general in the service. He has his brigade ready for oversees service. He shows a constant interest in the moral and spiritual, as well as the physical welfare of the men under him. Unusually unaffected and sincere, he has been noted for his fearless advocacy of the highest ideals. On a recent Sunday evening he was the speaker at a big gospel meeting held at the Y. M. C. A. Camp hut, No. 156, and made a splendid appeal to the manhood of soldiers to withstand temptations. After heartily endorsing the work of the Y. M. C. A., he said, in part:

"For over thirty years I have been in the army, and out of my experience I want to speak to you tonight. We want to be good soldiers for the nation's sake, and we want to be good, clean men, for the sake of the folks back home.

Only Two Roads

"Leave booze alone entirely for the moderate drinker has to do one of two things—either quit entirely or become a drunkard, and no sensible man wants to become that. I thank God that I chose to leave drink alone, and I want to tell you men that it's not only the better choice, but the easier one in the long run.

"Then if you want to be a good soldier cut out gambling. It causes more trouble in the army than most anything else. No real man wants to win money from his friends, and of course no man wants to gamble with those who are not his friends. Better cut it out if you want to be the best kind of a soldier.

"The other danger soldier boys have to meet is the lewd woman. The best influence for any man is a good woman, and in this war good women are helping wonderfully.

"I trust you men will keep yourselves so clean that when you go back home you will not be ashamed to meet your loved ones. We must win this war, and we will win this war, but we want to come home without stain to our character."

A little boy declared that he loved his mother "with all his strength." He was asked to explain what he meant by "with all his strength." He said: "Well, I'll tell you; you see, we live on the fourth floor of this tenement and there is no elevator, and the coal is kept down in the basement. Mother is dreadfully busy all the time, and she isn't very strong, so I see that the coal hod is never empty. I lug the coal up four flights of stairs all by myself; and it is a pretty big hod. It takes all my strength to get it up there. Now, isn't that loving my mother with all my strength?"—Sunday School Times.

THE SERVICE OF CHRIST

"The direct pathway into fellowship with God is in service. Not in misty contemplation or striving after spiritual ecstacies, but in the direct consecration of one's best powers to the meeting of human need, do we come to know the presence and help of God. * * * When a man goes into the thick of the fight and invests his life in heroic service to the point where he loses sight of his own immediate personal interests, he finds his life and keeps it unto life eternal."

FOR THEIR SAKES I SANCTIFY MYSELF

O Christ, Thou Son of God, may the spirit which bore Thee to the cross abide in me. Touch me with the glory of Thy Sonship and with the power of Thy surrendered life. Lift up my soul into fellowship with Thee, that I may go forth dedicated to Thy service, consecrated to the doing Thy will, Thy instrument in bringing Thy light, strength and joy to those about me. Make me, ere I die, a blessing to my generation. Vouchsafe to me a share in the advancement of Thy kingdom here on earth, and to Thee be ascribed the power and the glory forever and ever. Amen.

Lord, take my lips and speak through them, take my mind and think through it, take my heart and set it on fire. Amen.

A most enthusiastic parish meeting was held in Trinity Church, Jacksonville, Ill., on May 6th, and it was unanimously voted to accept plans drawn for a new church by Architect Pridmore of Chicago, to cost $40,000, and to begin work of construction as soon as the money can be raised. Pledges were made at the meeting amounting to a little over $15,000, and there was $9,000 insurance on the building that was burned. The John Bellatti family pledged $3,900; Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Russell, $2,500; the Lloyd Brown family, $1,600; Prof. Ames, $1,200; H. M. Audre, $1,100. An energetic canvass to raise the balance has begun. The plans call for a building of early Victorian Gothic architecture.

There are thirteen resident students at the Western Theological Seminary, Chicago, and eighteen students in the graduate school. It is expected that the Western Seminary will have, the coming year, in proportion to other seminaries, more than its accustomed quota, when Dean De Witt has sent a letter to each of the chaplains in the cantonments throughout the United States, requesting the names and addresses of young men in the service who appear to be fit material for the ministry. He has received a large number of replies, and has issued some 1,500 circulars and letters to men whose addresses he has suggesting that after the war the

A cable received at the Church Missions House on May 16 announces the death in Shanghai on Saturday, May 11, of Mrs. F. L. Hawks Potts, wife of the president of St. John's University, Shanghai. Mrs. Pott was the daughter of the first clergyman of the American Church Mission in China. For many years she has been a leader in the Church's work on behalf of the women of her native land. On her occasional visits to this country, Mrs. Pott was always a welcome guest at meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary and similar gatherings. Her fine enthusiasm and her abundant hope for the Chinese people have inspired thousands of women in this country to earnest service for the women of the Orient. Miss Olive Pott is with her father in Shanghai. Three sons are at present in the military service of the United States. William Sumner Pott is a lieutenant of infantry, James H. Pott is in the Aviation Corps, and Walter Pott is in the Medical Reserve.

The semi-annual meeting of the Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society was held May 10 in the Church Missions House, New York. The treasurer's report showed receipts amounting to $29,897.29 for the last six months, and a balance on hand of $13,899.43. Annuities paid last November amounted to $24,262.40. Measures were taken looking toward establishing as the uniform rate of percentage of annuity, on whatever amount each annuitant has contributed to the treasury, not less than the 25 per cent which has been regularly paid during the last 14 years. It was also determined to amend the fundamental laws by striking out the provisions for antedating and taking multiples of one's original payment. The continuous usefulness of the society will be chiefly to those of the society who are over 68 years of age, and already on the annuitant list, and to those who recognize the value of a life annuity at 60, notwithstanding that in addition a pension may be waiting them at 68.

A meeting of the Archdeaconry of the Diocese of Washington was held Friday, May 10, in the parish hall of St. Paul's Church, the Rev. Robert Talbot, D. D., Rector, Washington, D. C. Archdeacon Richard P. Williams presided in the absence of the Bishop, who was in New York. The proceedings opened with devotions by the chairman. The roll call of the clergy was followed by the reading and approval of the minutes of the last meeting. At the request of the chairman, the Rev. C. S. Abbott of the Church of the Good Shepherd addressed the Archdeaconry upon the activities undertaken by his parish for the welfare of men in the service, and how much the interest in them was appreciated by the men. Canon De Vries and others cited two or three concrete cases where this interest has resulted in the bringing of men into the Church and to confirmation. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: The Rev. D. Wellington Curran, president; the Rev. E. S. Dunlap, secretary; Mr. C. J. Hedrick, treasurer. Reports on Missions, Social Service, Colored work in the diocese, and statistics, were submitted. The treasurer also presented his report.

Personal Mention

The Rev. Leonard W. S. Stryker was installed as Rector of St. John's Church, Youngstown, Ohio, on Sunday, May 5, by Bishop DuMoulin.

The thirty-fifth anniversary of the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. Byron Holly, Biloxi, Miss., was celebrated in the Church of the Redeemer, that city, on Sunday, May 5.

Mr. Edmund S. Ender, organist and choirmaster at Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis, Minn., has resigned, to accept a position on the faculty of Carleton College, Northfield, Minn.

The Rev. Richard W. Baxter of Grace Church and the Rev. John E. Gerstenberg, Vicar of Christ Chapel, Brooklyn, N. Y., are the latest Long Island clergymen to go to the front in war service.

The Rev. Robert B. W. Hutt of St. Mark's Church, Caspar, Wyoming, has enlisted as a private soldier in the army, and is now in training at the Presidio, San Francisco, Cal.

The Rev. Harry S. Ruth, Rector of St. Andrew's Parish, Ashland, Wis., officiated and blessed the stone at the laying of the corner stone for the new Ashland General Hospital on Sunday afternoon, May 12.

Rev. W. K. Boyle, Indian priest at Oniginn, Diocese of Duluth, has been drafted, waived exemption, and is now in training in South Carolina. Mr. Boyle is a graduate of Bishop Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, and was born in Canada.

The Very Rev. William MacCormack of Los Angeles, Cal., was entertained by the Men's Club of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral on May 6, in honor of his tenth anniversary as Rector of St. Paul's.

The Rev. M. J. Brown, Rector of St. Peter's Church, Neligh, N. B., will spend his vacation in Massachusetts. During the month of June he will have charge of the services at St. Matthew's Church, Worcester, in the absence of the Rector, the Rev. Geo. S. Southworth.

The service of institution of the Rev. Walden Myer, M. A., and the Rev. J. Townsend Russell, M. A., as Canons of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Washington, D. C., took place in the Bethlehem chapel on Rogation Tuesday, May 7, at 11 a. m.

The Rev. J. J. Crawford, Priest-in-Charge of Shell Lake and Spooner, in the Diocese of Milwaukee, has successfully organized a field artillery company among the High School pupils in Shell Lake. He is also acting as physical director for the High School.

Announcement is made that the Rt. Rev. Dr. B. D. Tucker, who became the Bishop of Southern Virginia at the death of Bishop Randolph, will probably change his official residence from Lynchburg to Norfolk, the see city of the late Bishop, in the near future. An effort will be made to induce the Rt. Rev. Dr. Thompson, Suffragan Bishop, to change his place of residence from Portsmouth to Lynchburg.

The Rev. Harry S. Ruth, Rector of St. Andrew's Parish, Ashland, Wis., has drilled many of the drafted men in Ashland during the last eight months. Drills are conducted in the guild hall three nights a week, and are open to all men interested in preparing themselves for camp. He is also a member of the local medical examining board, and has rendered much time and service in connection with the examination of drafted men.

Bishop Sherwood of the Diocese of Springfield has received notice from the president of his alma mater, Trinity College, that the trustees have voted him the degree of Doctor of Divinity, to be conferred on him at commencement, in June. The Bishop leaves soon for the East, where, on May 30, Memorial Day, he will preach the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of St. Paul's School, of which he is also a graduate.

The Rev. Chester Coal Hill, who has succeeded the Rev. E. S. White as Priest-in-Charge of St. Lawrence's, was received from the Methodist ministry in 1911 by Bishop McCormick of the Diocese of Western Michigan. He was made deacon on December 22, 1913, and ordained to the priesthood on St. Peter's Day, June 29, 1913. Mr. Hill began his ministry at St. Andrew's, Big Rapids, Michigan, and served there for four years and ten months.

The late Mrs. Potter Palmer, whose burial took place from the family residence in Chicago on May 11, was a communicant of St. James' Church, that city, and well known throughout the world as a leader of society and in civic and charitable affairs, and highly esteemed for her charming personality. The Rev. Dr. James S. Stone, Rector of St. James' Church, officiated at the funeral, and in the course of the prayers referred as follows to Mrs. Palmer: "For the many mercies vouchsafed for the happiness she imparted to her family and to her friends, for the part she so helpfully took in the affairs of the common life—for all these, O God, may Thy infinite blessings rest upon her."

Prof. Horace R. Chase, in charge of Spanish at Gordon Institute, Barnesville, Ga., has accepted an appointment as camp secretary, Department of Army and Navy Work. His particular duties will be with the soldiers, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. He has been assigned to Camp Wheeler. Prof. Chase has had considerable experience in these lines, having been connected with the Y. M. C. A. in Mexico. It is understood he will leave for his new post within a few days. Prof. Chase formerly lived in Macon, Ga., and was for a number of years the chaplain of St. Andrew's Christ Church. During the past two years he has been lay reading at All Saints', Barnesville. The Church services have been splendidly attended, and never a Sunday but the attendance from Gordon Institute has been largely in evidence.

Send Reading Matter to the Soldier Boys

The following quotations are from mail received at the office of the Church Periodical Club, New York City, during the past week:

"I hope that you will be able to render me much-needed aid in the way of reading matter. The men, especially those in the hospital, are starved for reading matter."

"There is so much to be done, and very little to do with here, that at times one becomes dircouraged."

"The soldiers in the hospitals are almost entirely without reading matter, and will be exceedingly grateful for any magazines of interest to them."

"The magazines are appreciated and enjoyed. They have done full service in the wards. The eternal cry is, 'Have you any magazines?'"

"We always need and appreciate any literature we can get. That is one thing which we have not very much of."

"A spare copy of Judge or Life would prepare the way for a little comedy on these rainy days, and would surely be acceptable."

"Any good literature that you may send us will be eagerly sought for by the fellows."

These words are a definite challenge to every man and woman in the Church, and there is exactly one way in which they can meet it—the way of personal service. Do not give your magazines to any general agency. Do not send them unaddressed with a one cent stamp. These methods may serve for those who have no other, but they are not good enough for you, who have an organization that can put you in direct touch with the definite needs of your fellow Churchmen, who are serving their country. Do not hoard your magazines until they are a year or even three months old. Transportation is slow, and they will be none too fresh at best when they reach their destination. Ask your C. P. C. officer, or, failing her, the Church Periodical Club, 2 West 47th Street, New York City, for an address, telling what periodicals you will forward, and remember that our men in camp and at the front have as wide a range of intellectual interests as those at home. They will care for any magazine that you will care for.

Forward magazines as soon as read, wrapped, addressed and with full postage, the same at the front as in this country—four ounces for a cent. Write a friendly note to the one to whom you are sending. You may receive an acknowledgment and you may not. This is unimportant, compared with the fact that as the mails come in the man to whom you are sending has tangible proof that the Church at home is taking thought for him and backing his work.

If your magazines are already going to relatives or friends, or if they are pledged to the regular C. P. C. recipients—and we do not want those given up—try to afford one more subscription. We cannot all enlist for direct service, but every one of us can send a magazine.

Bethlehem Notes

The Schuylkill County Clericus met at Calvary Rectory, Tamaqua, on Monday, May 6. All the clergy of the Church in Schuylkill County were present, together with the Rev. Warren Randolph Yeakel of Mount Carmel and the Rev James B. May of Lansford. The Rev. Guy H. Madara of St. Clair, formerly a missionary in Alaska, gave a detailed description of the work among the Alaskan Indians. The clergy were the guests of the Rev. Wallace Martin at dinner after the meeting.

Both parishes in the see city of Bethlehem will soon be filled, if the Rev. J. Arthur Glasier, Rector of Trinity Church, West Pittston, accepts the call just extended to him by Trinity Church, Bethlehem. As noted recently, the Pro-Cathedral has called the Rev. J. I. B. Larned of Kingston, N. Y.

The spring meeting of the Archdeaconry of Scranton was held at St. Peter's Church, Tunkhannock, the Rev. William L. Witmer, Rector, on Monday and Tuesday, May 6 and 7. At the opening service on Monday evening there were addresses by the Ven. D. Webster Coxe, Archdeacon of Scranton, the Rev. Amos Goddard of Nanchang, China, and the Rev. Frank W. Sterrett of Wilkes-Barre, the last named speaking on "The War and Christian Unity".

The Holy Communion was celebrated on Tuesday, at 8 a. m. At the business session, at 9:30 a. m., the Rev. S. Ezra Neikirk of Pittston presented an exegesis, the Rev. W. B. Beach of Scranton reviewed the book, "A French Soldier to His Mother", and the Rev. E. G. N. Holmes of Montrose discussed "The Problem of the Rural Church". Luncheon was served at the rectory.

The annual reunion of the Alumni of the General Theological Seminary in the Diocese of Bethlehem will be held at 4 p. m. on Monday, May 27, at Pottsville, when the clergy will be the guests of the Rev. Howard W. Diller.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY MEETS

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, Bethlehem branch, occurred in St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Tuesday and Wednesday, May 14 and 15. The attendance was large, and the program, which was published in the last Bethlehem edition of THE WITNESS, was carried out with scarcely any change.

Bishops Talbot and Hulse gave inspiring addresses at the mass meeting Monday evening. Superintendent W. H. Jeffreys, M. D, of the City Mission (Episcopal), Philadelphia, gave three very helpful addresses, on Lay Thoughts about the Church during the War, Women and the Church after the War, and The Fairy Land of Reality. The last talk was given to the Junior Meeting.

The reports of the leaders were very encouraging, the work has gone ahead in the diocese in zeal and money, notwithstanding the many claims upon the women for war work.

This was the first meeting of the Junior Board, which has been at work one year.

The Auxiliary assumes five financial obligations in its budget: 1, The Apportionment; 2, Current Expenses; 3, Freight and Candy Fund; 4, Valley Crucis Scholarship; 5, The United Offering. In addition is the missionary box work, 800 Christmas gifts to the boys and girls of four mission schools, and $25 for Bishop Hulse's work in Cuba. Thousands of dollars have been collected for the boxes and the United offering.

Another Episcopal Boat

Mr. F. M. Kirby, who is a vestryman of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., has bought the yacht "Susana," and presented it to the government. It has been re-christened "S. P. (Scout Patrol) No. 510."

EDITORIAL

THE CHURCH IN THE FURNACE.

This is the title of a book published by McMillan and Co., London, and is a collection of papers from English Chaplains at the front, upon the effect that the war is having upon religion. There are seventeen papers in all and they deal with a variety of subjects, including the religious life in the trenches and the problem which the Church of England will have to face when Tommy comes home again.

Some of the ideas are so Illuminating that we have determined to weave them into an editorial by making extracts from the information thus imparted. It is in fact a clinic upon the subject of religion at the front by men well qualified to observe and well equipped to analyze what they have observed.

The first paper is on "Faith in the Light of War," and the wriier says unhesitatingly that the "alleged religious revival—in the sense in which it is intended—is something nobody has seen. For it cannot be too clearly recognized that war is a spiritual narcotic. At the front men simply dare not think too much. We know too well how closely to us madness lies. It doesn't do to take it seriously." The writer lays stress upon the very poor spiritual preparation which men have in religious training—"not one in ten, I should think, has a clear idea of what our religion is or implies or offers. Clearly something has gone very far wrong—so far as I am able to estimate we are faced very often with this situation, a Christian life combined with a pagan creed."

In short it is clear from the author's experience that the average soldier boy has had very poor training in the various religious cantonments in which he grew up.

This is the testimony of a writer on "Worship and Services,"—"I shall doubtless be reminded of the popularity of the free and easy sacred sing-songs which are so common in the army today, but I am inclined to believe an inquiry among the men would show that there is no great difference in their minds between singing secular songs on week-days, and joining in hymns on Sunday. It is the tune, not the words, which counts, and in any case it is doubtful whether there is much permanent religious value in the singing of a succession of rather emotional hymns, followed by a short talk, and a few words of prayer; the tendency seems rather to deaden in the men a taste for genuine worship."

In short, the training of young people by substituting emotional expression for definite religious teaching unfits them for the higher idealism.

One wonders what a multitude trained to sing "Brighten the Corner Where You Are" would do when ushered into heavenly places and forced to sing "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty."

The training has no relation to the realty.

Not only is bad training condemned at home, but the stilted phrazeology of the English Prayer Book comes in for severe criticism on the ground of its inaptness for the occasion.

Its lack of brevity, intelligibility, adaptability for unusual occasions, is seriously criticized, but severest of all is the criticism that it lacks in human interest.

My own love for the Prayer Book language and devotions makes it hard to admit this, but the bold statement that "our present Prayer Book does not enter into the problems and difficulties of actual existence," is one that may be true. Are the problems of actual existence today as they were in the days of Queen Elizabeth? "Our prayers," says the writer, "arise from our carefully selected and literary thoughts, not out of the picture of God."

"We start it is true with God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost, Holy Blessed and Glorious Trinity, but how cold, unkindly and alas! perfunctory, that, compared to the devotional wealth contained in one chapter of any Gospel. The Infancy, the Life of temptation and love, the Passion, the way of the Cross peer out of every line of Roman devotion. Are we wrong or are they?" One might answer that they at least hold the common folk whom our Lord loved and we do not.

They train their children and we do not. "Hardly a soldier," says the writer, "carries a Prayer Book, because there is so little in it he can use."

It is a hard blow to our theories, but is it a fact?

The writer also points out how we have neglected the appeal to the eye in our worship as a people. He says that Englishmen now love the crucifix and the wayside calvaries have persuaded more prayers than all the chaplains put together." Certainly when all is said that can be said there is a lack of human passion in our traditional Morning Prayer.

There is a striking passage in one of these essays:

"How did the Church of the early days conquer the Roman Empire, and from being an insignificant sect among many win steadily forward till it openly mastered the old gods and drove them from their thrones? 'If I may adapt or invent these words,' says Mr. T. R. Glover, 'the Christian out-lived the pagon, out-died him, and out-thought him. He put Christ first, and everything else afterwards or in comparison with Him nowhere at all. He was a better man because he served a better Lord. So must all. So can we. But if so, we Churchmen must take our religion as seriously as England has taken this war." Certainly this describes what our modern Christianity lacks.

If the Church is to stand the test when the men come home, it must cease dealing with trivialities and demand self sacrifice as the price of its privileges. To make religion easy for people will make no one strong. We must demand that belonging to the Church shall mean submitting to its discipline.

"There is one form of Christianity," says one of the writers, mere pious sentimentality."
"for which the world should have no use again—the religion of

And again in another essay:

"The contrast of the high sounding phrazes of our militant hymns and ecclesiastical discussions and the flabby irresolution of our plans and actions for the Kingdom of God, when compared with the unself-conscious heroism of our fighting men who talk so little about their ideals and so gloriously fulfill them, as if to translate ideals into actions were not only natural but inevitable." One may well ask how can men return to the trivialities of academic preaching after living in the atmosphere of heroic action?

In short, the problem before us after reading these essays looms tremendously large. "We have not yet resisted unto blood striving against sin," but those who fight the Huns surely have.

We are safely at home, too lazy to go to church, too smug to confess our short-comings, too complacent to realize that we are slackers to our baptismal vows and pacifists in the Church militant.

In the name of God, get up and do something for Christ as a soldier of the cross; at least be faithful at reveille; at least be self sacrificing enough to let the pagans around you realize that you are a Christian; at least be a member of the Church militant and help fight the Devil at home while the boys fight the Huns over there; at least demonstrate that you are worth dying for, or else stop the twaddle of your pious hypocrisy and your silly excuses that no one believes and like Judas, go out where it is dark and when you have exhausted the enaninities of a trival existence, like him go out and hang yourself. Would God some power could clear this Church of its slackers and pacifists if we lose half our statistics.

Those boys are dying for us, as Christ died for us, and we must ask ourselves solemnly and truthfully, are we worth either sacrifice?

Just as the Jews who neglected their Sabbaths, spent seventy years of Sabbaths in Babylonish captivity; so we who have withheld our tithes from God, have spent seventy times those tithes in fighting the Devil in Prussia. But the Jews were slow to see the point and so are we.

If we can't fight for those ideals which Christ taught, let us keep the home fires of faith and worship burning on our altars, or else our damnation is just.

What Should Be Done With Traitors to Lord?

The Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart, of Evanston, Ill., says:

"If the U. S. A. fails in this war, it will be the tragedy of the ages, the failure of a boy whose possibilities are all before him.

Our soldiers in France are learning the difference between service and usefulness, between the imponderable and the ponderable, between the creative and the possessive impulse.

Do we face towards God or Mammon? Are our windows open towards Jerusalem?

What would happen if Episcopalians should determine to go out as did the volunteer salesmen of Liberty Bonds and bring men into the Kingdom? There would be a new heaven and a new earth.

There is a vision beyond that of a world democracy, the vision of a world redeemed through personal service.

Don't write to France, and adopt a child there, and think that you have done your bit for youth.

Christian workers in France have to do for mature officers what ought to have been done for the boy of from 12 to 15.

They shoot traitors to their country; what should be done to those who are traitors to their Lord?"

There are many people who claim to be Christians who do not work at it much through the week.

VIII

Democracy Made Safe in Christ's Commonwealth

1. By God's Will, seen in the Law of our Creation, certain social bonds underlie and sustain our lives as individuals.

We begin with the definite assertion that the creed of individualism is not true to facts. There are no such things on earth as isolated or unrelated souls. There never have been. There never can be, unless God create a thoroughly inhuman monster. Men and women are not made that way. As the great Greek philosopher put it many centuries ago, a little brusquely perhaps, with a touch of impatience at the individualists of his day: "Man is by nature a social animal." And when he says "by nature" he means, not that when men grow up they naturally seek a family connection, and a city or state to live in; but that men by every definition are social. Men is part of a whole. He comes from a whole. He gets his life from those who have gone before. He passes it on to those who shall come after. Men are made that way. They do not choose to be social. They are social from birth, They have, every one of them, a social birth.

After all it is the mystery and miracle of human birth which proves our case. The way in which men are born shows that we have the facts on our side, despite the entrenched position of the individualists. Their creed may be impressive, but it is not true. Shoe-buttons and nails are no doubt turned out by machines, one by one, in naked separateness. Each is a little piece cut off from the mass of raw material. But not so are men made. They are born of parents, who are themselves born of other parents. And parents must agree together that there shall be children or there will be no children. Back of his body, his mind, his soul, are the bodies, the minds, the souls from which, or at least through which, he has his own.

That is true not only of human beings, but of all living things. Life comes only from antecedent life: from what already has life and therefore can give life. But in man's case this dependence, this reality of derivation, is wonderfully emphasized. Each soul, each life, is woven into the very texture of the common life. For nine long months before his birth, each new person to be added to the race is, so to say, steeped and saturated with the corporate life of the whole race, spiritual as well as physical.

One word here about heredity. Its laws and tendencies are very commonly misunderstood. There is nothing mechanical about heredity. A child does not necessarily take after his father or his mother or both of them together. In many cases heredity does act in a very startling and immediate way. Very often we see a child who in face and figure, even in character and temperament, is, as we say, "the very image" of his parent. But in many cases this is not so. There is a wide divergence. But this divergence, this "casting back" as it is called, does not disprove the fact or doctrine of heredity. It merely shows that its reach is very long and wide; that some tendencies inherited from the remote past are still vital enough to burst out into full life under favorable circumstances. That is the point. Our individuality is made up out of our inheritance: made up out of materials provided; made into that particular and peculiar shape which our personal wills, acting on the circumstances of our lives, have chosen and produced.

Consider an organist sitting before his instrument, with the stops pushed in and the keys soundless. He chooses his combinations. He pulls out certain stops. He releases certain sounds. He weaves them into his chosen harmonies. He displays quite freely his own peculiar genius. But the wind, the pipes, the keys, are all supplied. Just so with man, the "social animal." The human nature, in which all share, comes to each one furnished and endowed. Within it are unnumbered possibilities, more stops than ever were in any organ. Capacities of body, mind and will; heights of virtue; depths of sin; potential gifts of music, art and literature. Which shall be used, which wasted? What shall give the key note? What shall move the individual on to his destiny, to his own "peculiar difference"? That, of course, depends upon the organist sitting on the bench: the will sitting on its throne.

But all the materials are given, all are derived. The individual creates nothing for himself. He combines, he develops. He brings in nothing new. He draws out from the supply all he has and is . Take the greatest geniuses of our race: a Beethoven, a Raphael, a Shakespeare. Heroic, immense, towering individuals these, you say. No doubt they are, but they, too were born; they, too, derived everything that made them geniuses, including the very spirit of their genius. They, too, no less than the run of quite ordinary mortals, were social animals. You see where this leads; how it puts a social background behind each individual; how it of necessity implies that society underlies and sustains each individual life. In a true sense it takes the entire human race to make one person. The true meaning of our personality is not fully known until we have traced our relationship to every other human being. There is no more brutally inhuman question than Cain's disdainful protest: "Am I my brother's keeper?" There is no virtue more repellent and inadequate than the virtue which is sufficient to itself. There is no doctrine of salvation more unworthy of God and of men, than the teaching of a salvation by which an individual can make his own peace with God, and save his own soul, without regard to others.

It is God's Will, then, that social bonds shall underlie and sustain each individual life.

They Displayed a Spirit Worthy of Emulation

The Very Rev. Dr. Almon Abbott, Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio, preached a very helpful sermon recently on the text, Nehemiah iv:15, "We returned all of us to the wall, every one of us unto his work". After reviewing the discouraging circumstances under which the builders had labored to complete their stupendous task, the Dean said, "There is a spirit displayed here—the mastery of unsettlement—the orderly retreat from excitement to quiet drudgery—that we all need. There is sorrow: There is a strange upheavel about sorrow that makes it very difficult for the sorrowing one to return whole heartedly to the performance of common duties. Over in beautiful France the guns have made terrific havoc. Forests are levelled; towns and villages are laid waste; fruitful fields are upturned with the implements of war; and the landscape is devastated with hollow pits and searing gashes. The peasant comes creeping back to scenes which he has known and loved since childhood, and his heart is sorrowful, very sorrowful, sorrowful even unto death. It is hard for him, passing hard, to return to his wall, to the work to which through long years he has been accustomed! This is always the consequence of the shattering artillery of suffering. It changes things, and alters every aspect, and draws great rents across familiar places. The smitten heart finds it difficult, almost impossible, to come to the daily drudgery again. In such seasons we must remember Nehemiah's workmen. We are not here to brood upon our sorrows. We are here to feel that God is in them all. We are to turn again out of the darkness to the burden-bearing of the ordinary day—as the builders of Jerusalem to their toil.

When the daughter of Jairus was raised to life again Jesus ordered that something should be given her to eat. I thing that the Master did that as much for the mother's sake as for the daughter's sake. In the wild unsettlement of such an hour it was desirable that she should have something to do in the kitchen! It is through the performance of common tasks that we are stedied again. It is through the routine that we come to behold the stars once more. We master our sorrows by our duties.

I have so often noticed that the person bereaved neglects the House of God and the sacraments of the Church for a prolonged period after the shuttered windows and the crape upon the door. It has almost come to be regarded as a conventional thing, apparently, that the last place to go to when one needs the consolations of religion most is the accustomed pew and the familiar altar! This is wrong—even though there is something to be said about the musical portion of the services stirring the floodgates of one's grief—for the wall of God and the work of God is the place for us, preeminently the place, when the heart is empty and the grave is full. The need for everyone of us, amid the shock and change and tragedy of things, is that quiet heroism which returns to the appointed duty of the day.

There is war: The example of Nehemiah and his workmen should mean much to us today. For long and fruitful years we lived in peace. We lived in the vortex of security. The seasons succeeded one another in orderly habit; the birds went south and the birds came north again; and life was even and unruffled in its tenor. But now—since the fateful month of August, 1914, when the news of the war was flashed around the world, and since this time a year ago when our Nation became actively involved in world hostilities, what a different universe we are dwelling in! We are intensely stirred, and tossed out of the usual, and we know not what an hour may bring forth. Everything is at high pitch; Everyone is strained to the uttermost; and we are unsettled to a degree unprecedented in our experience.

I am not thinking at the present moment of the young men who have answerd their Country's Call, and who are serving the cause of humanity in the cantonments of this spreading land, or in the fighting fronts of the Old World.. They have work to do; their designated work; and through the performance of their noble duty they will be better men until their dying hour. I am thinking of the men and women at home; of you and me; who cannot, or who at any rate, have not, taken up arms like that; of the preponderating population who must perforce remain behind. For us there is none of the peril of the battlefield, and for us there is none of the glory of the battlefield. There will be none to crowd the street and cheer us madly when the day is over [redacted]

THE KINGDOM GROWING— CHURCH EXTENSION IN OUR DAY

In giving an explanation for delay of mail sent our soldiers in France, the New York postmaster says:

"There have been several reasons for the slow delivery of mail to the soldiers of the H. E. F. In the first place, there is the enormous amount of it. In addition to twenty-two and a half tons of letters a week, the postoffice is sending over an average of 12,000 sacks of papers and other printed matter. That is a tremendous amount of mail to handle. But as a matter of fact there are no delays now at this end. At one time there was some accumulation of mail, owing to lack of transportation facilities, but that trouble does not exist any longer. Another cause for delay was the suddenness with which the government decided to send the expeditionary force to France. A great many things had to be done quickly. Considerable delay is due to incorrect or insufficient addressing. We send mail to the army units. Everything should be addressed to the soldier by name, regiment and company, and the words 'American Expeditionary Force' should be added. All this is absolutely necessary, for if a letter is not sufficiently addressed it comes way back here for us to make inquiries. Another cause for delay is that the troops in France are not stationary. They are ordered to various places. The postoffice does not undertake to deliver mail to individuals in the army in France, and the postal authorities here never know the specific whereabouts of the unit there. A letter addressed to a soldier there is delivered to the captain of his company. With that the responsibility of the postoffice is at an end. The letter's further fate does not come under the jurisdiction of the postmaster general, but of the secretary of war. In other words, the delivery of a letter to the specific individual to whom it is addressed is the task not of the postoffice, but of the army."

The railway mail service, which handles the mail to the soldiers in France, has taken over three floors of a vacant store building on Sixth Avenue, New York. Until the parcel post to soldiers in France was abolished, 343 clerks were employed. This is called the Chelsea terminal. Here the mail is sorted and arranged by units and sent to the port of embarkation and put aboard ships, addressed not to the headquarters of the units, but to numbered postal agencies in France. The mail bags are now carried on the army transports. In France, the United States Army Postal Service agencies take charge of the army mail. The postoffice authorities here do not know where the various agencies are. They only know that certain mail is sent to certain agencies by number, that the force of U. S. postal clerks in France is very large. They are all under the general direction of the second assistant postmaster general, in Washington, and their chief in Europe is the U. S. postal agent, whose headquarters is in Paris. The local offices in France deliver the mail to the army units.

The soldiers' "letters home" all go through the Pennsylvania terminal, the big P. O. building at Thirty-first Street and Eighth Avenue. From there they are distributed in the shortest time possible throughout the country. During the week of April 12, in addition to 1,346,300 letters and cards 5,292 pieces of printed matter were received from our soldiers in France. The largest mail that has ever left New York—or any other port—was the Christmas mail to the soldiers "over there". There were 21,000 sacks of it. It filled a whole pier, and took the room in a whole ship to carry it over. When it was stacked, the pile of bags was 800 feet long, 40 feet wide and 10 feet high.

Mail to warships of the American navy, which is addressed in care of the New York postmaster, has a special distribution office in a building of its own at West and Morton Streets. The New York postoffice's service flag bears 654 stars. The training of new employes to take the places of these was no small part of the work.

FOR ME TO LIVE IS CHRIST

From "St. Paul"

(Frederic W. H. Myers)

CHRIST! I am Christ's! and let the name suffice you;
Ay, for me, too, He greatly hath sufficed:
Lo, with no winning words I would entice you.
Paul has no honor and no friend but Christ.

Yes, without cheer of sister or of daughter;
Yes, without stay of father or of son,
Lone on the land and homeless on the water
Pass I in patience till the work is done.

Yet not in solitude, if Christ anear me
Waketh Him workers for the near
Waketh Him workers for the great employ;
Oh, not in solitude, if souls that hear me
Catch from my joyance the surprise of joy.

Hearts I have won of sister or of brother,
Quick on the earth, or hidden in the sod;
Lo, every heart awaiteth, me, another
Friend in the blameless family of God.

Let no man think that sudden, in a minute,
All is accomplished and the work is done;—

Though with thine earliest dawn thou should'st begin it,
Scarce were it ended in thy setting sun.

Whoso hath felt the Spirit of the Highest,
Cannot confound, nor doubt Him, nor deny;
Yea, with one voice, O world, though thou deniest,
Stand thou on that side, for on this am I.

Yea, through life, death, through sorrow and through sinning,
He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed:
Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning,
Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ.

Faith does not fail us in the time of crisis. If we do this, then—we shall have fought our way to fidelity of service, and we shall be worthy of the gallant gentlemen who are fighting our battles at the front.

To take up one's rifle may be a hard thing; but, to take up one's cross and to take it up every morning patiently, and in the teeth of excitement and unsettlement, may be a harder thing. This much is expected of us—and to quietly return to the wall, every man to his work, is to meet the expectation!"

The Archdeaconry of Reading

The spring session of the Archdeaconry of Reading, Pa., Diocese of Bethlehem, was held at St. Peter's Church, Hazleton, the Rev. A. E. Clattenburg, Rector, on Monday and Tuesday, April 29 and 30. On Monday evening, after short addresses of greeting by the Rector, the Archdeacon and the Bishop, a sermon on the subject, "Together", was preached by the Rev. G. H. Toop, Rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia. At 7:30 a. m. Tuesday, assisted by the Rector and the Archdeacon, Bishop Talbot celebrated the Holy Communion. At 9:15 a. m. the Ven. H. E. A. Durell, Archdeacon of Reading, read his formal report. The Very Rev. George C. Bartlett, Dean of the Philadelphia Divinity School, delivered an address on "A Ministry for Present Day Needs". The Rev. F. A. MacMillen of Reading read a paper on "The Best Preparation for a Business Man Who Desires to Enter Our Ministry". The Rev. G. H. Toop conducted the quiet hour at noon, discussing "The King and the Kingdom". The Rev. Stewart U. Mitman closed the morning session with a paper on "The Further Preparation of the Men of Business Training After Ordination to the Diaconate". The papers brought forth a very spirited discussion of the problems treated.

Luncheon was served by the ladies of the parish, and in the afternoon the clergy were taken to the Hazleton Country Club in automobiles.

RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS IN THE MIDDLE WEST

A Paper Read at the Church Congress Held in Cincinnati, Ohio, in October, 1917.

II.

This brings me to the more difficult portion of my subject. I have tried to trace the physical conditions. What of the mental conditions in religion in the Middle West? Why this restlessness of the human spirit reaching out into countless channels, hardening into organizations, tending toward expression in sects and groups? Why the twenty millions apparently untouched by religious appeal? I say apparently, because I know that you must recognize that all religious feelings or forces are not contained in churches, nor does church membership always signify religious feeling and force.

How many of these millions have a vital consciousness of God, which prompts them to some higher thought and conduct? Is not that the real question?

If many have it, what are the evidences of it? The ecclesiastical expression of it may not be satisfactory to the statistician, but is the vital expression of it satisfactory? Are mercy, justice, righteousness, charity, sympathy, creeping to a higher level in our land? I am convinced that they are. Christianity has been a leaven and its unknighted champions who have absorbed its spirit have been given a vision of its goal and purpose. Time fails to try to convince you that this is the case. I wish only to cite one instance. I am convinced that those who guide the industrial interests of our land are slowly but surely becoming conscious of their responsibility for the human problem involved in industry. I see other evidences that the things for which religious forces have striven are being championed by the unmeasured forces that have their origin in the hearts of countless who are not numbered in the churches.

You must not accuse me of this disloyalty to a principle to which I have given my life's efforts, the value of organized Christianity, when I affirm that the unchurched are not without some justification for their aloofness when they contemplate the churches. Of course, there are countless thousands sunk into inertia, immovable and anchored in a meagre existence, until they become incapable of action, irresponsive to every appeal, whether of city, nation or church. But others are church-shy. The Church is not always delicate. The unchurched need more sympathetic understanding and less rebuking or condescension. I could never endure a certain type of religious canvass that has so often taken place in towns. A canvasser, with a bearing of being so respectable that he wouldn't even whistle on Sunday, brings a householder to his door with his pipe in his hand, thus confirming the canvasser's suspicions that between them there is a great gulf fixed and begins to question the householder in a matter of fact and statistical way. The householder, feeling that the Day of Judgment is enough without inquisition, with embarrassed and sometimes indignant restraint, detaches from his mental content a few passable statements that conform to the rulings on the canvasser's board. Such a method implies some objectionable superiority on the part of the inquirer and a right to intrude by reason of that superiority. It is such a poor approach to the unchurched.

I have a suspicion that in the Middle West such of the unchurched as are not claimed by worldiness are untouched by organized religion because religious forces as a whole have not that delicacy of touch, that painstaking persuasiveness of approach, by which the unchurched may be attracted. Taken in all, the methods of religious endeavor are too rigid or too exacting. The Middle West is strenuous and vigorous to be sure. But the spiritual or religious element in man is somewhat reserved, or timid, or diffident. Church-shy people are numerous because they sometimes lack faith in the sufficiency of their quantum of religion to justify their adherence to an elaborate doctrine, a strict discipline and a too pronounced profession.

Not only have the ecclesiastical tests been too inflexibly applied, but certain mannerisms have been cultivated, such as a tendency to use the words brother and sister; certain presumptions have been created, as for example the expectation that the converted and religious will surely condemn certain amusements; an aloofness of air has been emphasized, as if the converted tolerated some inferior things which he could not approve. All of which has repelled the normal man. Too much has been expected and the unchurched have a suspicion that life would lose a certain vital "tang" and would assume more or less irksome pretenses if one carried religion too far.

Then again the Middle West has been the happy hunting ground of the revivalist, who, too often, after normal feelings return, has left his hearers filled with a mental residuum which partakes largely of the nature of the trail which they hit.

The temper of the Middle West is pragmatic, practical and human. We have no leisure for speculations or for theories. We have no strictly leisure class such as the rich of the East, the traditionally unhurried of the South, or the comfortably replete of the slopes of the Pacific. We have few who say, "Heaven has a splendid reputation, but when I finish my fight I am off to California." The gold coast of Cambridge and the gold coast of the Pacific are equally remote from our ambitions.

Consequently religion in the Middle West is of a distinct type. It is not an intellectual exercise in the Unitarian sense, nor is it a mirage in the Christian Science sense. It is more practical and savors of the soil. Sometimes, as in Methodism, it is plain, rigid and austere, but it deals with practical things such as dancing. With the Roman Catholics it is a sure way to get somewhere, as sure as the trolley line, and you must not talk to the motorman.

The Middle West wants religion in the living man, not in theological systems. Recently I saw in the Smithsonian Institute in Washington a case filled with jars and tubes and other glass receptacles each containing some gas or liquid or powder. The sum total of these chemical constituents was the equivalent of the physical structure and organs of the average man. It was impressive. Here was a man reduced to lowest terms. Here were oxygen and hydrogen, and all the rest, the basic constituents of a man, all arranged, systematized and labeled. But no passing girl, however susceptible and sensitive to the presence of a man, cast any bewitching glance at that case. No elderly woman shed any tear over the lamentable condition of this dismembered being. No, for he was merely a chemical system.

A New World

"Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, yet once more signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which can not be shaken may remain." The universe seems to have been shaken to its foundations. Dr. Orchard, in his, The Outlook for Religion has made an attempt, for the most part fearless and profound, to distingush between the things which man has made to thwart God's purpose for His world and the fact of God Who is Love Incarnate in the Person of His Son that He might redeem the world to live, unshaken, free, eternal.

Nothing yet has been really shaken. Men who had thought the world could live without God have been stirred to try to construct a God for themselves, but neither they, nor those who have not yet taken God into account, nor we who stand in high places in the Church, have been shaken to our knees before the vision of the Cross, the only way for man to completeness and peace and freedom. We have not seen yet "that on the Cross was revealed not some part of God, but the fulness of His power and wisdom." We have vague hopes that, after the war, things will be somehow different; that force can be used to create and keep peace, though the hearts of men and nations are not filled with any active principle of peace. Peace is not mere passivity, but the manifestation of the active power of mutual Love. Some of us hope that capital and labor will be a little kinder to each other. Capital and labor do not think so. Each is preparing itself for a mighty struggle to subdue the other, as soon as the claims of the patriotism which is, in essence, only an effort to restore conditions as they were before the war, can be disregarded. The privileged are still hoping to retain the law that "the less necessary you are to society the better you are rewarded." The nations and business are planning a fiercer, more thorough commercial competition than ever. Germany plans to master the world, and the allies to preserve its freedom. If it is to be a war to the bitter end, who that knows the nature of men and of nations can doubt that the defeated side will store up all its strength till it is able to enter on another world struggle to reverse the result?

Dr. Orchard says: "Every one will recognize that the easy optimism which characterized a good deal of late nineteenth-century thought was dangerous and has betrayed us." Does every one, do many, recognize that? Has the Church been shaken out of the easy optimism which is only euphemistic for self satisfaction and indifference to the things of God? If the Church has no deeper, more permanent message than the prosecution of the war, wherein is it necessary? The State does that. It is true that "if anything like a great religious revival was to sweep the country," (Dr. Orchard's vision hardly extends beyond the traditional English limitations), "it might most seriously interfere with the national prosecution of the war"? And if it is true, which is right, religion or war? Is it true that "spiritual forces do not really count"? That "It might be admitted that there is a great stirring of concern in all the Churches, plenty of self-criticism and endless conferences; but actual adventure, and the power to get any sort of united action on anything that really affects the needs of the people are noticeably wanting?" Is it true that "there is no popular demand for (Christian) unity; no sign of one of those great movements of will and power which sweep officialdom and prejudice aside and are able to effect great changes at great speed?" That "If this instinct had showed itself strongly, and conferences of Christian leaders had been demanded by the rank and file, we should probably have been led to find a Christian ending for the war, and thus have discovered a way to unity that nothing would have closed?"

Whether one agrees with Dr. Orchard or not, his book is very well worth studying as a clear analysis of the problems which the war is forcing on thoughtful people.

Clergyman Walks Fourteen Miles to Hold a Service

The Rev. P. B. Peabody of Blue Rapids, Kansas, who also has charge of the parish at Marysville, walked a distance of fourteen miles to the latter place on Sunday afternoon, April 28th, to give to his little flock of faithful members an evening service. The roads were almost impassable by automobile and as there are no trains running on Sundays, he made the trip on foot. "Such devotion as this and by as capable a man as Mr. Peabody," writes Dr. F. W. Clark, secretary of the parish at Marysville, "should bring more people out to his most excellent services."

Principles of Religion at Stake

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Frank A. McElwain, Bishop of Minnesota, in a recent address, said:

"The principles of our Holy Religion are at stake in this war.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew stands for the simplest facts of discipleship. It emphasizes that which every disciple is bound to do, to go out as did St. Andrew, who first found his own brother and brought him to Jesus.

They who push the cause of Christ in the diocese make a distinct contribution to the cause of freedom.

Unless there lies the consciousness of spiritual strength back of our national determination to win the war, we shall have the persistence to see it through.

It is unthinkable that we should not win the war, but if the unthinkable should happen, there can be no other reason than that God found the instrument unworthy and cast it aside."

A REMARKABLE MOVEMENT IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION

The Woman's Auxiliary Adopt an Advent Campaign Along the Lines of Developing Spiritual Power in the Women of America

The Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions has undertaken what we believe may be a very large contribution to the life of the Church and through the Church to the nation. We are to make an "Advent call" by means of a "campaign", but different in many ways from those with which we are so familiar. Those campaigns have asked for things, this is to ask for spiritual power, to ask, in St. Paul's expression, "not your, but you."

Christians believe that spiritual power is the greatest force in the world. They follow a Master who said of His miracles "Greater things than these shall ye do." The time has come when this power must be used to help win the war, and to prepare for and largely create the new era which must come when the war is over. Therefore, the Church which has appointed its War Commission and whose members are doing so much in many ways for the war, must find and release (more fully than has been done) the spiritual power latent in her members. But beyond her own borders she can and should lead in developing the spiritual resources of America. Much has been said about the awakening of the consceince of the American people, much about the morale of the nation, much about generosity for the world's appalling sufferings, and the women of America have taken a full share in all this. No one doubts that they have also exerted much spiritual power. Their prayers, their courage, their services are proof of that, but the time has come when there should be a way of gaining and using the united spiritual power of the country's womanhood.

It is the effort to awaken and use this tremendous power that the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions has decided upon as its war work. If the Auxiliary can get the women throughout our nation to put the power of prayer behind the struggle on the battlefield, and to prepare for the new time, making themselves more fit to share in the creation of that new world, they can render no greater service to the nation and to the Kingdom of God.

During the first week of Advent (December 1-8, 1918), women will go from house to house to the women of the Church, reminding them of this greatest gift, spiritual power, and asking them to pledge themselves to do one or more of the following things:

For Today—Pray
- For victory
- For our men
- For our allies
- For our enemies
- For the women at home.

Prayers in preparation,
- For righteous peace
- For just and true democracy at home
- For Christian internationalism
- For Church unity
- That the Will of God may be done in all the world.

First.—Daily prayer.

Second.—Prayer for these same objects at the Holy Communion on certain days.

Third.—To make every effort to become more familiar with the Bible message by means of systematic reading and Bible study when this is possible.

Fourth.—Preparation to take part in an effort to reach the women of America.

At the end of the visits (unless it seems unwise) the messengers will suggest praying for those objects.

Each diocese has been asked to appoint a leader for this work and to see that this leader goes to one of the summer conferences for training. In the fall she will undertake the messengers in her diocese. It will also be wise if she has a committee to help her in this work. Every parish will be asked to furnish its quota of messengers. After their training they should be commissioned at a celebration of the Holy Communion for we are desirous of making these visits not as individuals but as representatives of the Church. During the week whenever possible, we hope for daily celebrations and an open church, where all day long at least one woman shall be praying for the messengers. Between now and Advent, leaflets and suggestions will be sent from the Church Missions House.

Both because the undertaking is so large and because we covet the joy of working with others, it is earnestly hoped that it will not be done by the Auxiliary alone, but by Churchwomen whether they belong to the Woman's Auxiliary or not. If we may have that co-operation and the leadership of the clergy and the willingness of the Auxiliary to do a hard thing, we may carry out in a very beautiful and literal way St. Paul's thought and be among those who are truly "rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer."

Loving a Child

Loving a child is key
To heaven's mystery.
Loving a child, and giving
It knowledge, this is living.
Loving a child brings pain,
And is life's greatest gain.

Loving a child is knowing
The fierce joy of a sowing
That shall cause mighty reaping.
Loving a child is weeping,
And fearing, too, and praying;
Of this there is no gainsaying.

Loving a child is being
A part of God, and seeing
The world beneath one's hand
Enlarge, expand,
Be different, and grow
To one's thought. Even so,

Loving a child is key
To every mystery;
Loving a child is laughter,
And heartache after—
Heartache—and grief and pain;
But always joy again.

—Mary Caroline Davies.

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

FAIRIES OF TULIPLAND

Some people say they do not believe in fairies. That is all very sad, because they miss much, and fairies never come to people who do not believe in them. Fairies do many beautiful things in the world, and I will tell you of one thing they have done in my garden this spring. No one but the fairies could have done it. Last fall I planted a great many tulip bulbs, as we call them. They seemed brown and dry and all looked alike. Now, although you could not see them, I knew there was a fairy in every bulb, and now I have proved it, as many people who have been in the garden will testify.

Last fall the fairies were fast asleep, but when the warm sun came and crept down into the earth the fairy in the tulips said, "Push up!" The white leaves which were in the center of the tulip heard her and began to push up through the soft ground and peeped out at the top. Then they gradually turned green as they came into the light of the sun. "Push up!" said the fairy again, and now a white thin stalk started on its way. Soon, between the green leaves, this stalk pushed out and it, too, turned green. "Now," said the fairy, "is my chance." And soon at the top of the stalk there appeared what most people would say was just a bud. If you had been there with me you would have seen these buds grow larger and larger. I waited day after day and watched how the fairies would be dressed. And very carefully, for I felt sure that this must be the fair home, and wondered. Then I looked out of my window one morning and, lo! the fairies were all there, thousands of them. Such beautiful fairies ,and such wonderful dresses; yellow, and purple, lavender and white; some with dresses striped red and white, others had on glorious red, deep and shining. So now I am glad that when I planted them so many months ago I believed the fairies were there, for had I not so believed the pleasure of this wonderful sight would not have been given me.

THE CONVENTION SEASON

Albany, Alabama, Arkansas, Indianapolis, Newark and Ohio Gatherings

Albany

The fiftieth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Albany assembled in the guild house of the Cathedral of All Saints, Albany, on the evening of Tuesday, May 7th—the first time a spring convention has been held in the diocese. There were two celebrations of the Holy Eucharist on the morning of Wednesday, at 7:30 and 10 o'clock.

As soon as the convention was organized, the Bishop delivered his annual address on Church Unity.

The first action of the convention was the adoption of the following resolution, reported by the Committee on the State of the Church:

Resolved, That the convention of the Diocese of Albany, here duly convened, place itself on record as giving its unqualified support and approval to the national government and the President of the United States in requisitioning such power and talents as God has so richly given to this nation and people, to secure by force of arms a final victory over those evil and sinister forces which threaten democracy and Christianity alike. And furthermore, that this convention, through its representatives and delegates, pledge "in the faith once and for all delivered to the saints", the continued loyalty and support of those whom it represents, to the further prosecution of this war until such time as a lasting and Christian peace may be assured, and that it does this in the conscious realization of the personal sacrifices of life and love which such an ideal involves.

The annual elections resulted as follows:

The Standing Committee—The Rev. James Caird, Troy, president; the Rev. Charles M. Nickerson, D. D., Lansingburgh, secretary; Rev. James Caird, Rev. Charles Nickerson, D. D., Rev. Henry R. Freeman, D. D., Rev. Edward T. Carroll, D. D., Hobart W. Thompson, Elias P. Mann, Robert C. Pruyn, Samuel B. Coffin.

The Board of Missions—Rt. Rev. Richard Henry Nelson, D. D., president; Rev. John N. Marvin, Albany, secretary; DeLancey M. Ellis, Albany, treasurer; Rev. Charles C. Harriman, Rev. Charles M. Nickerson, D. D., Rev. George C. Dickinson, Rev. D. Charles White, Rev. B. W. R. Tayler, D. D., Robert Selden, M. D., Frank E. Norton, Lee D. Van Woert, Levi Hasbrouck, Henry S. Darby.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod—The Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, the Rev. Oliver S. Newell, the Rev. B. W. R. Tayler, D. D., the Rev. William J. Hamilton, Mr. Albert T. E. Cluett, Mr. Levi Hasbrouck, Mr. Russell M. Johnston, Mr. William G. Rice.

The convention's time was largely taken up with many financial reports not of general interest.

Resolutions were adopted commending St. Faith's School, Saratoga Springs, "for recognition by the Province of New York and New Jersey as an approved Church secondary school for girls", also approving the plan adopted by the synod of the Province for providing scholarships at St. Stephen's College, Annandale-on-the-Hudson, for sons of the clergy, and for others, not sons of clergy, seeking entrance on the ministry of the Church; appointing a committee to consult with other dioceses in the State in regard to amendments to the state law, which should provide for more freedom in the matter of meetings of vestries; amending the canons so that the Bishop may appoint clergy or lay members for the Provincial Synod, in the event that elected deputies find it impossible to attend.

The committee appointed at the convention of November, 1916, to consider the question of the erection of a Diocese of Ogdensburg, reported that such action would not be advisable at present, and was continued for further consideration of the subject.

The convention was not quite so large as usual, partly because of the new date of meeting and partly because the nearness of Ascension Day prevented the attendance of some clergy.

Alabama

The Council of the Diocese of Alabama was held in Huntsville, May 8-10.

A conference of the clergy preceded the regular sessions of the Council, with a fair attendance, and an atmosphere of serious thoughtfulness pervaded all discussions. Bishop Beckwith called the attention of the clergy to the changed conditions in the diocese brought about by the war, and asked for more consecrated effort on the part of both clergy and laity.

The council met in the Church of the Nativity, the opening service being the Holy Eucharist, with the Bishop officiating as celebrant. The Rev. Gardner C. Tucker, Rector of St. John's Church, Mobile, preached the sermon from Phillipians iii:13-14. It was a strong argument on the Church's position as the American National Church, and an appeal for unity and patriotism.

The officers and committees of the past year were in the main re-elected.

The Bishop's address, on the afternoon of the first day, was a masterful plea for unity of action and a vision of the Church's mission. He asked that the council arrange for the election of a Coadjutor and for support of the Diocesan News as the organ of the diocese. These requests were met by the appointment of committees, who reported favorably on them.

The high water mark of the council was reached on the evening of the second day, when the lay delegates, who had formed a "Layman's Association for the Increase of Mission Work in the Diocese", guaranteed an increase of 50 per cent in the mission pledges for the coming year. Following this action, the Mission Board met and increased the salaries of the missionaries now in the field 15 per cent, and took into consideration the placing of new missionaries.

A great deal of forward work was entered into. The Red Cross drive for $100,000,000 was endorsed, and the clergy were asked to take an active part in this campaign.

Arkansas

The forty-sixth Annual Council of the Diocese of Arkansas was held in the beautiful new church at Batesville, May 8-10. Owing to the pressure of war work and the abridged train service, the attendance was not as is usually the case.

In his address, the Bishop gave an interesting account of the Church's activities at Camp Pike. The Church is certainly giving a creditable account of herself there. Of the Arkansas clergy at work there, the Rev. Dr. Verne Stover, chaplain of the Y. M. C. A. Base Hospital, is most capable and beloved, and is allowed every priestly privilege he desires. The Rev. Charles F. Collins, volunteer chaplain, supported by the Church War Fund, is much resorted to by soldiers of every creed and of no creed. The Ven. Daniel E. Johnson, Y. M. C. A. worker among the Colored soldiers, is said to be the finest worker among the Negroes.

Over half of the Red Cross nurses are Church women, and most of them are members of St. Barnabas' Guild for Nurses.

The need of two or three "huts" for the effective and uninterrupted work of the Church was stressed.

No change was made in the personnel of the Standing Committee, except to elect the Rev. C. C. Burke to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Rev. M. W. Lockhart, who has become an army chaplain. The Rev. H. A. Stowell is still president of that committee, and Mr. Richard B. Bancroft of Hot Springs was re-elected secretary.

The members of the Diocesan Mission Board are the Revs. R. J. Templeton, Lyman Wheaton and Robert W. Emerson; Messrs. Z. B. Curtis, J. S. Speed and Walter G. Hall.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod are: The Revs. H. A. Stowell, R. J. Templeton, C. C. Burke, R. W. Emerson and John Saunders; Messrs. M. M. Hankins, J. W. Ferrill, Thomas Gregg, R. E. Wait and Carl Shibley.

Mr. E. P. Matches was elected chancellor. All other Diocesan officers are the same as last year.

Thursday morning the Council was addressed by the Rev. Dr. Charles Pardee of the American Church Building Fund. Thursday night a missionary meeting was held, at which three strong addresses were made. The Suffragan Bishop gave an account of his work during the year. The Rev. E. P. Mabley gave his report as warden of the Helen Dunlap School for Mountain Girls at Winslow. This school, which has no endowment, and is dependent upon voluntary gifts, is experiencing the most prosperous year in its history. The Rev. Charles F. Collins gave an inspiring account of his work at Camp Pike.

Socially, the stay of the delegates was made enjoyable by a reception Wednesday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Ferrill. Thursday morning the delegates were given a breakfast at the home of Dr. W. B. Lawrence, and Thursday night all the delegates were guests at a fish fry given on the banks of the beautiful White River.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

The Diocesan Council of the Woman's Auxiliary was held synchronously with the Diocesan Council. The reports of the various branches represented were the best ever made, and the United Offering Fund received larger contributions than during any previous year. Mrs. J. B. Pillow was elected president and Mrs. H. A. Stowell of Pine Bluff, secretary. Miss Alberta Weaver of Batesville was chosen as junior directress, and Mrs. C. A. Linaker of Pine Bluff was made directress of the Little Helpers.

Mrs. Walter G. Hall, who is a sister of Bishop Root, gave an interesting address on China. A very forceful paper, entitled, "Shall We Neglect Church Work for the Red Cross?" of which Bishop Winchester's wife is the author, was read to the Auxiliary by the Rev. R. W. Emerson.

Mrs. C. A. Linaker gave two remarkable illustrations of how to teach the Christian Nurture Course to children of the kindergarten.

Indianapolis

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at All Saint's Cathedral, Indianapolis, Tuesday, May 14. The Diocese was unusually fortunate in having the presence of Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., as preacher, both for the Auxiliary and the Council. Bishop Francis was unable to return from France, where he is Chaplain of Base Hospital No. 32, an Indianapolis organization, and his absence was an occasion of great regret. Bishop Woodcock took as his text the familiar ones, "Seek ye the Kingdom of God and His righteousness," and "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel." From such a rare combination he preached a Missionary sermon of wonderful breadth and power. The Auxiliary was largely attended and convened at the close of the celebration of the Holy Communion with the President, Mrs. E. G. Peck, in the chair and Mrs. S. E. Perkins acting as Corresponding Secretary. Reports were presented from the various organizations in the Diocese. Rev. J. D. Stanley, as President of the Standing Committee, voiced the customary welcome. Bishop Woodcock made a most happy impromptu speech and was followed by the annual report of the President. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the choice of President, Mrs. Frank Lewis; first vice-president, Mrs. O. L. Watkins; second-vice President, Mrs. James F. T. Sargent; Treasurer, Miss Sarah Niblack; Recording Secretary, Mrs. S. E. Perkins; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Lew Wallace. The Executive Board is composed of Mrs. C. B. Phelps, Mrs. C. D. Trowbidge, Mrs. F. Burton, Mrs. Samuel Davis, Mrs. T. A. Stuart, Mrs. L. S. Briggs and Miss Lila Jewett.

THE ANNUAL COUNCIL.

The Eighty-first Annual Council began with evening prayers at the Cathedral. Twenty-one clergymen were in the Chancel. The service was read by Rev. W. C. Otte and Rev. D. E. S. Perry, D. D., and the lessons by Rev. Henry Harris and Rev. M. M. Day. Bishop Woodcock preached a most illuminating sermon for the times from the text, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." With remarkable insight he discussed the phases of the European war and applied its lessons to modern conditions. The Council organized by electing Rev. James D. Stanley of Christ Church as President, Mr. W. W. Hammond as Secretary and Rev. Horace W. Wood as Assistant Secretary. The main business of the Council, Wednesday May 15th, was the final ratification of the New Constitution and Canons, adopted at the session of 1917. Rev. Dr. Lewis Brown presented the report. The main changes provide for the meeting of the Council hereafter in January and the substitution of the word "Congregation" for "Mission," wherever it occurs in the law of the Diocese. Interesting reports followed from the various committees. The election resulted as follows: Standing Committee, Rev. Messrs. Stanley, Brown and Burrows; Messrs. Howland, Sullivan and Hatt; Board of Missions, Rev. Messrs. Stanley, Sulger, White, Mallett, Plummer and Comfort; Messrs. Peck, J. F. Sargent, Morar, Pratt and Rose; Deputies to the Provincial Synod, Rev. Messrs. Wood, Barrows, Plummer and Sulger; Messrs. Sullivan, Rupe, Talbott and Nutchel; Treasurer, Mr. H. W. Buttolph; Registrar, Rev. H. W. Wood; Librarian, Rev. E. Bradley; Trustees, Messrs, Jones , Bigelow, Buttolph, Sullivan and Pratt. Bishop Franeis sent his annual address from France and it impressed the Council so deeply because of its rare comprehensiveness touching the present crisis as home and abroad that it was ordered printed for immediate distribution. The Secretary was directed to send a cablegram of affection and sympathy to the Bishop and Messrs. Howland and Sullivan were appointed to voice the sentiment of the Council to be spread upon the minutes. After putting upon record an appreciation of the work of the Standing Committee and especially that of the President, Rev. James D. Stanley, the Council adjourned.

The annual dinner was held in Knickerbocker Home Wednesday evening. Rev. Lewis Brown, Ph. D., acted as Toastmaster and Dean White made the invocation. Toasts were responded to by Mrs. E. G. Peck, President of the Board of Directors, Mrs. Teegarden, Matron and Rev. G. G. Burbanck. The attendance was repdesentative and enthusiastic. The institution has had a most successful year and is now turning away applicants for room and board. The outlook was never brighter than today. An inspection of the building followed the dinner.

Ohio

The One Hundred and First Annual Convention of the Diocese of Ohio met in Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, on May 14-15.

Bishop Leonard in his Annual Address said, "The war was entered into and is maintained along the lines of the highest and noblest ideals. The domination of cruelty and frightfulness is to be resisted at all costs. This Church utters no uncertain sound. She stands as a patriotic sustainer of our flag. I deprecate and resent any suggestion that the Christian Church is failing in her endeavors. I am impressed and inspired by the fine patriotic utterances and deeds of clergy and laity."

The Convention adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the Senate and Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled have passed a resolution favoring an amendment to the Constitution of the Unitd States, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as beverages,

"And, Whereas large quantities of grain are consumed in the manufacture of intoxicating beverages, which are needed to feed our soldiers and allies, therefore be it

"Resolved; That we the clergy and lay delegates of the Diocese of Ohio in Convention assembled do hereby declare that in our opinion this amendment should be adopted and should receive the support of the Church.

"Further be it

Resolved, That we advocate the revocation of the charter of the German-American Alliance as unanimously recommended by the Judiciary Committee of Congress and now before the Senate of the United States."

The Reverend Gerard F. Patterson, East 105th and Marlowe avenue, Cleveland, was elected secretary of the Convention in the place of the Reverend George P. Atwater, who resigned after fifteen years of continuous service.

The following men were elected as delegates to the Provincial Synod of the Fifth Province which will meet at Gambier, Ohio:

Rev. Robert S. Chalmers,
Rev. L. P. McDonald, D. D.
Rev. E. G. Mapes,
Rev. J. R. Stalker,
Judge U. L. Marvin,
Robert L. West,
Dr. W. C. Cross,
Theodore E. Smith.

The Convention adopted the form of parochial report blank set forth by the General Convention and also changed the fiscal year to correspond with the calendar year. January, 1st to December 31st.

The Committee of the Church Pension Fund reported that less than three-tenths of one per cent of the premiums on the clergy of the diocese were in arrears. This is a most gratifying result, considering that this is the first year of the operation of the Pension Fund system.

Newark

The Newark Diocesan Convention met May 14-15 at Trinity Cathedral, Newark. In his address, Bishop Lines read a long list of names of young men of the Diocese who had lost their lives in the army; as also a list of the Officers of the Diocese and the Parishes who had died within the year. The support of the Government in every possible way was presented as a religious duty; the spiritual side of the conflict and the events of the year were also presented; an earnest appeal was made for the increase of salaries of the clergy, the necessity of accepting changes in the methods of Church Teaching and work under the new conditions, and a new attitude towards other churches was presented and the need of a greater use of laymen was emphasized. The chief events in the Diocese during the year, the establishment of the James Varber Trust, yielding $15,000.00 annually for the Diocese, and the taking of Trinty Church, Newark, as the Cathedral Church, were referred to. Out of regard of the needs of the Government, large building operations had been suspended, while many projects had been set forward. The former officers and delegates to the Provincial Synod were almost without exception re-elected.

A new canon on Religious Education, giving the Board a larger field and better position was adopted. The Board is made up of the two Bishops, the four Archdeacons, eight persons appointed by the Bishop, eight persons elected by the Convention and the Board given authority to add five more. The Annual Budget of the Diocese was adopted with additions for Education and Diocesan Missions at $38,500.00 or about nine percent of the current expenses of the parishes.

A new canon was passed requiring the consent of the Convention or Finance Committee for the collection of money in the Diocese with the expectation that all property acquired by the Commissions or Institutions in the Diocese will be guarded from mortgage of alienation in the same way as parish churches.

Bishop Stearly's address presented the work of the Diocesan War Service Commission, especially in Camps Dix and Merritt, where many of the clergy have been serving terms of three months each with leave of absence from their parishes. The Diocesan Commission has raised about $50,000.00 for such work. His address also gave a summary of the Diocesan Missionary and Church Extension activities.

They Pledge Allegiance to the Flag and Cross

Mr. S. A. Clefton, superintendent of St. Mary's Church School, St. Paul, Minn., has introduced a new and effective piece of ceremonial into the school. At the close of the lesson, the school stands, the national flag is carried to the front of the altar, and everybody salutes and repeats:

I pledge allegiance to my flag, to the Republic for which it stands,

One Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

Then the first verse of "My Country, 'tis of Thee" is sung.

This done, the crucifer places the processional cross to the front of the altar, and the school repeats together:

I pledge allegiance to the Cross, and to the Saviour for Whom it stands, Who lived and died that this might be a better world for me and all mankind.

The first verse of Hymn 359 follows:

In the Cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime.

A Friend of the Lepers

In an extended account of the Cabras Leper Colony, the Porto Rico Progress says the lepers "speak loyally of friends, above all of one friend, the Episcopal Minister of San Juan, Rev. Harvey P. Walters. Mention his name at Cabras and you will hear a sort of litany that runs thus:—Que bueno es! Bendito sea! Kue buen hombre! And whether you know Spanish or not that will tell you that it is heartfelt love and gratitude. Mr. Walters is the one regular visitor the island knows outside of the Sanitation Department. He goes there twice a month and he does not go empty handed to preach. There is a society already formed among the lepers, an organization with a long dignified name—the Benevolent Recreational and Lucrative Society of Cabras. Officers are elected and meetings held. Just what the lucrative ends are it would be hard to say, but if it allows pleasant play to the imagination of hopeless sufferers it can justify any name in the world."

WORK OF THE BROTHERHOOD

A Brotherhood week-end was observed in the Diocese of Central New York recently, under the direction of Mr. Frank H. Pyke of Syracuse, member of the Brotherhood Council for Central New York. Mr. G. H. Randall, the Executive Secretary of the Brotherhood, came for a series of helpful meetings.

A reception and general meeting was held in the Lockwood Memorial Hall of St. Paul's, in Syracuse. Mr. Randall was one of the speakers at the dinner of Trinity Men's Club on Monday. On Tuesday night, in the parish house of Grace Church, Cortland, a dinner was given, followed by one of the best and largest group meetings of the week, some forty men being present from Cortland, Syracuse, Ithaca and other cities. Bishop Fiske came from Syracuse for the occasion, and addresses were also made by Mr Randall and Mr. Pyke.

On Sunday a Brotherhood corporate communion was celebrated at Trinity Church, Syracuse, and Mr. Randall made addresses on the Brotherhood's war work, in Grace Church, Syracuse, in the morning, and All Saints' at night, with Mr. Pyke forming a chapter at the latter church.

On Sunday afternoon addresses on the war work were made by Mr. Randall in the chapel of Auburn prison, and at St. Peter's Church, Auburn.

LONG ISLAND

Some time ago the national organization sent field secretaries here, and new groups were organized and set to work. Many rectors will gladly testify to the efficient work done by these groups, especially in building up the attendance at the afternoon or evening service. One group increased the attendance at an afternoon service, within four weeks, from 65 to 429. Another group, during Advent, held an evening service campaign, and, without a rector, managed to fill the church. There are two divisions of war work that we have endeavored to assist, namely, a parish corporate communion and Correspondence Club. We urge that on the third Sunday of each month, at the early celebration, special intercessions be offered for the enlisted men. To this service all the families of the soldiers and sailors are to be especially invited. In the camps, special efforts are made to have the enlisted men come out on this Sunday.

There are two secretaries at work at two camps: Joseph Calhoun at Camp Wadsworth and George R. Moss at Camp Upton. In the case of Camp Wadsworth, there are so many chaplains, and therefore so many individual camp services, that it has been impossible for the Brotherhood secretary to begin to take part and assist in them. Consequently he has devoted the greater part of his time around the activities of the parish in Spartansburg, which has a large congregation of soldiers each Sunday. He has made himself known to these men, has encouraged their church-going, through them has brought others to the services, and has built them up wonderfully.

Camp Upton, on the other hand, because of rapid changes, has given little show of statistical results. The big work of Mr. Morse has been to show a guiding influence and to lay the foundations for Christian work among the men. How highly Mr. Morse's work is held appears in the repeated offers of the Y. M. C. A. to put him in their transport service.

At the meeting of the Albany Diocesan Assembly, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, held recently in St. George's Parish House, Schenectady, N. Y., Geo. H. Randall, Secretary of the National Brotherhood, was the chief speaker. Delegates were present from a number of cities, including Albany and Troy. President Harvey Rextrow presided. Mr. Randall described the war work being done by the Brotherhood under the oversight of the Church War Commission, and Sydney T. Jones told of the work Brotherhood men are doing in the missionary plan for the every member canvass. The Rev. Dr. Taylor, Rector of St. George's welcomed the assembly. The meeting was one of the largest and best held in recent years.

St. Stephen's College

The 58th commencement of St. Stephen's College will be held June 2nd to 5th. The usual commencement festivities will be curtailed, owing to war conditions, but there will be quiet reunions and gatherings of alumni and former students and friends. On Sunday, June 2, the sermon at the morning service will be preached by the Rev. Lawrence T. Cole, D. D., Rector of Trinity School, New York, a former warden of the college. The baccalaureate service and sermon will be at 5 p. m. on that day. The preacher will be the Rev. Dickinson S. Miller, Ph. D., Professor of Christian Apologetics at the General Theological Seminary.

On Tuesday, at 6:30 p. m., there will be a memorial service for the late Rev. George Sailey Hopson, D. D., Professor of Latin in the college for over fifty years.

On Wednesday, June 5th, the commencement exercises will be held at 11 a. m., in the chapel. The alumni celebration of the Holy Communion will be held at 7:30 a. m. on that day. Luncheon will be served to visitors at 1 p. m.

A Community Testimonial

[redacted]

A country home for convalescents ill be opened this month on a 20- re farm near St. Louis, under the spices of the Diocese of Missouri. first only women will be accommo- ed, but later it is planned to care men and children also. In the nt that the home should be needed convalescent soldiers, it will be en up for that purpose.

The Bible from Different Viewpoints

The Rev. Edward Henry Eckel, Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Dallas, Texas, gave the observance of Whitsuntide in that parish an unusual character by two occasions in honor of the Bible. On Whitsunday itself, after Evensong in the church, a large number of people repaired to the auditorium of the parish house, where Mr. Eckel delivered a lecture on "The Superiority of the Bible to Other Sacred Books", and incidentally the pre-eminence of Christ to the founders of the ethnic religions of the East, after which he exhibited about fifty volumes of Bibles and Bible apparatus from his private library, some of which he explained before giving the people an opportunity to swarm around the exhibition tables and examine the bocks for themselves. A Latin Vulgate of 1489, with hand illuminated capitals in color, was the object of chief interest.

On the following Wednesday evening the exhibition was repeated, after a series of addresses as follows: "The Bible and Judaism", by Rabbi George Fox, liberal Jew, and Rabbi Charles Blumenthal, orthodox Jew; "The Bible and the Roman Catholic Church", by the Rev. Robert M. Nolan, Rector of St. Patrick's Church; "The Bible and Protestantism", by Dr. W. W. Barnes, Professor of Church History in the Fort Worth Baptist Theological Seminary, speaking in place of Dr. L. R. Scarborough, president of the seminary, whose duties at the seminary obliged him to forego the delivery of an address prepared for the occasion; "The Bible and the Anglican Church", by the Rev. E. H. Eckel. Rabbi Fox also contributed some four or five books for exhibition, and Rabbi Blumenthal exhibited and explained the use of phylacteries and a ram's horn. There was a large mixed audience and a most amicable and edifying discussion of the Bible from the several viewpoints represented by the speakers.

Mr. Eckel has arranged for a week's exhibition of some of the chief books of the display in a prominent store window.

Death of Pastor Wagner

Pastor Charles W. Wagner, author of the widely-known book, "The Simple Life", died last week at his home in Paris, France. He was 67 years old. Pastor Wagner was leader of the French Liberal Protestant movement in France—the "new theology" in a French setting, discarding all the historical dogmas, but claiming to retain the essence of Christianity. Pastor Wagner described himself as "a piously heretical spirit". He was born in the department of the Meurthill, annexed by Germany in 1871. After graduating at the Sorbonne and studying at Strassburg and Goettingen, he became assistant to a Lutheran pastor in the Vosges region. In 1885 he opened a Sunday school in Paris, giving lectures evenings. Out of this grew his chapel in the Boulevard Beaumarchais, where for years he preached to large audiences. He visited the United States in 1904, and lectured in the principal cities of this country.

The President Presents a Flag

A large, magnificent silk flag, the gift of President Wilson, has been presented to Boy Scout Troop, No. 76, of Christ Church, St. Paul, Minn., for having sold $1,805,000 worth of the Third Liberty Bonds, the largest amount disposed of by any troop in the country. The Rev. Walter S. Howard, the Rector of the parish, is the scout master. He is greatly beloved by the members of his troop, and is carrying on a remarkable work among the boys connected with the parish and in the down town district in which the church is located.

THE CONVENTION SEASON

New Jersey

The 147th Convention in the 134th year of the Church in the Diocese of Church, Asbury Park, on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 14th and 15th. New Jersey occurred in Trinity It was a notable Convention in large atendance and quick dispatch of business. Bishop Matthews officiated at services and presided at business sessions throughout.

One successful feature was a joint session of the Convention, the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Girl's Friendly Society. Another was a Missionary Pageant enacted by people of Trinity Parish, Princeton. Elections resulted in only mionr changes, and appointments continued chiefly the existing committees and trustees.

The Bishop's Annual Address dealt comprehensively with local interests of the diocese.

All trust funds of which there are many in the diocese were reported in good condition.

In the matter of the recent effort at New Brunswick for religious unity, the Convention did not commit itself officially further than a resolution of approval of the Bishop's attitude in the matter.

An effort was made but was defeated to change the time of Convention from May to January.

The Committee on Constitution and Canons co-operating with others to be appointed with them, is charged with the duty of a general reversion of the Constitution and Canons.

A budget of expenses was adopted for the year, and appropriations were made for the various General Boards and Commissions. It was decided to make the Missionary Apportionment for the Diocese $12,000, instead of $10,500 as last year.

The report of the Committee on the Church Pension Fund was an exhaustive one, revealing some present arrearage, but with promise of the diocese regularly meeting that obligation.

Asheville

The Twenty-fourth annual Convention of the Missionary District of Asheville was held in Trinity Church, Asheville, N. C., on May 15 and 16.

The Rev. Lee Frontis Anthony was ordained to the Priesthood at the opening service of the Convention on Wednesday by the Rt. Rev. Junius Moore Horner, Bishop of the District. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Cyril E. Bentley of Lincolnton. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. T. Crocker, Rector of the Church of the Epiphany, New York, now in war service. The Bishop was assisted in the celebration of the Holy Communion by the Deans of the two Conventions.

The necessary action, preliminary to the organization of the district into a diocese was taken. The Convention felt that the time had now come for the district to become an independent unit in the Church. As the matter now stands the several parishes and missions will be given an opportunity to show their desire in the project by raising the required amount.

The Auxiliary of the district was addressed by Bishop Knight on Religious Education at the opening service. The Rev. Walter J. Smith presented the cause of Thompson Orphanage, and the Rev. Dr. George W. Lay the cause of St. Mary's School. Addresses along Missionary lines were made by the Rev. F. M. Osborne, Rev. Arthur W. Farnum and the Rev. E. N. Joyner.

The Mission at Blowing Rock was admitted by the Convention as an organized Mission

Stress was laid upon the necessity for promptness in the Parochial Clergy in sending in their statistical reports by placing a penalty on those who do not send them in on time.

The Rev. Alfred H. Stubbs was elected Secretary and Treasurer of the District.

The Rev. Walter S. Cain was elected Registrar to fill out the unexpired term of the late Rev. Dr. R. R. Swope.

The Rev. H. Norwood Bowne was elected Dean of the Convocation of Waynesville.

The Rev. Edmund N. Joyner was elected Dean of the Convocation of Morganton.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod: Clerical: J. B. Sill, A. W. Farnum, S. B. Stroup, J. N. Atkins, H. A. Dobbin and W. S. Cain. Lay: F P. Bacon, M. Schenck, W. M. Redwood, H. D. Miles, H. C. Martin and C. E. Waddell.

Long Island

The forty-ninth Convention opened on Tuesday, the 21st inst., with the celebration of the Holy Communion with the Bishop as celebrant assisted by Canon Paul Swett. At the opening of the business session the Rev. Robert Rogers was re-elected secretary, and the Rev. John E. Gerstenberg his assistant. Mr. George Hewlett was re-elected to be treasurer. Mr. William W. Baldwin reported on the pitiable showing the diocese made in its offering to missions which was emphasized by its splendid response to all war appeals. The diocesan secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew followed with a very interesting account of the Brotherhood work at Camps Wadworth and Upton, extracts from which may be found in another part of the WITNESS. The remainder of the first morning was consumed in routine business, and nominations, to be acted upon the second day.

The afternoon session opened with Bishop Burgess' address, the main items of which were: notice of the fiftieth anniversary of the setting apart of the diocese from New York with recommendation that it be commemorated by a great offering from all the churches for the Church Charity Foundation; the urging that every parish have a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary; and advice to communicants regarding their letter of transfer. He closed with strong and prophetic words on the changes that must follow the great war, and appealed especially for the Red Cross.

On the second day vacancies in the delegates to the Provincial Synod were filled by the election of the Ven. William Holden and Mr. W. R. Marsh. The Board of Religious Education consists of Rev. Messrs. Garth and Genns, and Messrs. Fuller and Marsh. Dr. J. G. Bacchus and Mr. Augustus Van Wyck were elected to succeed themselves on the standing committee.

The order of the day was first the question of petitioning the Legislature to ratify the National Prohibition amendment. After animated discussion the motion was tabled.

The question of extending the suffrage to women was acted upon favorably. Dr. Bacchus presented a resolution of support to the government in this war. After hearing from the three archdeaconries, the Convention was stirred by the woes of Armenia as related by Paul Shimmon.

This Convention was unusually well attended, and handled a large amount of business.

Trinity Church, Morgantown, West Va., has received from Mr. and Mrs. George C. Baker $500 in Liberty Bonds as a memorial to their daughter, Grace J. Baker, who died March 26, 1918. The income from the fund is to be used for furnishing flowers for the sick of the parish and to beautify the church.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Annunciation B. V. M.

THE COLLECT

We beseech Thee, O Lord, pour thy grace into our hearts; that, as we have known the incarnation of thy Son Jesus Christ by the message of an Angel, so by his cross and passion we may be brought unto the glory of his resurrection; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

(Note—It was not possible to print the comments on this feast day previous to its celebration, so they have been held over until the cycle ending with the descent of the Holy Spirit was ended. We hope the message, even now, will not be inopportune.)

Three sacred mysteries are brought before us in this prayer—the mystery of taking flesh, the mystery of suffering and death, the mystery of an unending existence. And in all of them we feel in the background the power and touch of the Holy Ghost, who is to pour His grace into the secret places of our hearts, so that, like the blessed Mother Mary, we may have our share in the joyful and sorrowful mysteries of man's redemption. As the blessed Virgin's flesh became the vesture of the Son of God, so our flesh is, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, to be made into a temple for the Holy Ghost, so that by His purifying presence. Christ's body may make clean our bodies, and His blood our souls. How few of us, comparatively speaking, consciously strive to keep our bodies, our flesh, subservient to the overshadowing, hovering, brooding, life-giving power of the Holy Ghost! Then how many of us think of taking our share in the mystery of the Cross and Passion? St. Paul prayed, you remember, "that I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable to His death". Somehow, we, too, must pray this prayer. And only can we pray it when we have been endued with power from on high. "The shadow of the cross must fall on those whom the Crucified draws near to Himself in life or work," writes Bishop Hall; and St. Paul, writing to St. Timothy, said: "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him; if we die with Him, we shall also live with Him." Notice the "with". It is only by the power of the Holy Ghost that we can assimilate the mysteries of the Cross and Passion. Every time we worry, every time we rebel, every time we murmur and repine, we lose the grace which helps us, by the medicine of the Cross, to lift up our hearts.

And then there's the mystery of the unending existence to consider, "the glory of the resurrection". It is only joy in the Holy Ghost that can steady us by the open graves of those we love. It is only the spirit of wisdom and understanding that enables a man to say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth".

Let us enter into the strength of the pleading that is wrapped up in the words, "We beseech Thee, O Lord". Let us run after that grace and implore for its impartation as no insistent beggar ever yet begged for alms. To have this grace is to have the ability to remake our soiled and sullen and despondent hearts into clean, happy and enthusiastic temples of the Holy Ghost. And when we have thus entered into the mysteries of that which made St. Mary blessed among women, we shall be moved to see that the angelic message shall be sounded from coast to coast, from shore to shore, from every spot on earth where a man can find a place to dwell.

FOR THE EPISTLE

Moreover, the Lord spake again unto Ahaz, saying, Ask thee a sign of the Lord thy God; ask it either in the depth or in the height above. But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord. And he said, Hear ye now, O house of David; Is it a small thing for you to weary men, but will ye weary my God also? Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and choose the good.—Isa. vii:10.

"Ask a sign of the Lord." What sign shall He give you? The all-conquering sign of an empty cross! "In hoc signo vinces." At the foundation, as at the summit, of a life there must be placed this sign of triumph. The Christian's burial place should be marked with a cross—eternal answer to the yawning mouth of a hungry grave. The Christian's life should be marked with a cross—spelling each day the victory which the spirit is to win over the flesh. Anywhere, everywhere, in life should that sign be seen and made and recognized.

"I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord," said Ahaz. This is the answer some of us make when God, through the Church, asks us for a sign to set up in the world, where the true God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, is not yet known. It has been the excuse whereby the Occident refuses to give to the Orient that which had its whole beginning and personal fruition in the Orient, namely, the Incarnation, the Death and Passion, the mighty Resurrection, the glorious Ascension of Jesus the Christ. God forgive us for our vain excuses. Dear Mother Church! How like unto the blessed Virgin is she as in her suffering she sees the brethren of her Son refusing to believe on Him and follow Him. How many of us exalt the Cross, but deny its right to rule! How many weary God and man by refusing to make His name known upon earth, His saving health unto all nations?

"Immanuel", God with us. Do not forget that "with". Only as men realize what it means to have God with them can they be said to have wakened to any real life. And to have God with them does not spell luxury and selfish indulgence, and thoughtlessness of others. Nay, the reverse! "Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil and choose the good." Where Immanuel is, there is exhibited the life of the Cross, which is the life of self-restraint. As long as God's cause languishes, men must be careful about eating their butter in "a lordly dish", because in that way lies destruction. And when men again acknowledge that their honey must come out of stony rocks and by their own breaking, then is there hope that God will again be with men. All of which, translated into the talk of the street, is, "If you really wish to be a Christian, you must subordinate the desires of the flesh to the control of the spirit." And as Christ came into the world after the usual period of natural waiting, so we must expect Christ to be born in us and revealed in us after a normal, sane and self-restrained method. Watch for His annunciation, then cherish the life that is given to you, and in due season yours will be the joy which no one take from you.

THE GOSPEL

And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary. And the angel came in unto her and said, Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women. And when she saw him she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favour with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Then said Mary unto the angel. How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. And, behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren. For with God nothing shall be impossible. And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her.—St. Luke i:26.

Mother Mary! Mother Church! Both need not fear, for they have found favor with God. Would that the sons of Mother Church were more willing to be other Christs to those souls not yet born into the Christian life. Will the time ever come when those of us who are members of Christ by virtue of baptism, will be willing to let any one die without that sacrament?

Mother Mary was blessed among women because of her Son. If Mother Church is not blessed by the world, it is because of her sons, too, for she was meant to be blameless, holy, undefiled, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. People faulting the Church today are liable to put the blame on the shoulders of the clergy. Do not let them fall into the mistake of thinking that the clergy are the Church. If Mother Church is impotent today, it is because the laity are as much at fault as the clergy, and perhaps more so, and whenever the Church fails, it is because men have not given the Holy Ghost a real chance to make them holy. It is because the spiritual children of Mother Church have forgotten to live by the family motto: "With God nothing shall be impossible". See how important is that word "with". And the God with whom nothing is impossible is the God who said to Zerubbabel, by the prophet: "Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts." Mother Church's sons are spiritual sons, born of water and the Spirit, strengthened by the Spirit in the inner man, dedicated to spiritual lives.

Think of the nations and the places where religion is still and largely a material and sensuous thing. As long as such nations and places exist there will be darkness, and foulness, and bestiality, and cruelty, and impotence. As long as the sons of Mother Church are content to leave things to the God of things as they are, will we have a comparatively impotent Church, instead of a shining, gleaming, victorious mother of the souls of men.

"Fear not, Mary!" Fear not, Mother Church! The final triumph is inevitable, for the Son of God and Mary has promised never to leave thee nor forsake thee. May the mother of our Lord speak to all the careless sons of our mother, the Church, and bid us remember what is our part and duty in making the Incarnation, the Cross and Passion, and the glorious Resurrection vital, living, throbbing realities in the daily life of man. And out of our present failures to do this may God the Holy Ghost bring us, by repentance and confession, to an acknowledgment of the necessity of daily living our lives hidden with Christ in God, for His glory, our salvation and the edification of our fellow man.

One of Our Greatest Prides

"As an illustration of what is taking place under the surface of army life, the act of Gen. Pershing in becoming a member of the Episcopal Church, of which his late wife was a communicant, may be mentioned," says the Detroit News. "It is the commonplace of experienced observers of the new army that there is more religion to the square inch in the army training camps than in any civilian community, no matter how efficiently churched it may be. And this is not unnatural. The boys are up against the supreme reality all the time, and they know it. Their reaction to the serious fact does not express itself in the effervescence of religious emotion; rather it expresses itself in the quiet recognition of the invisible order as the purpose and explanation of the present visible order, and in a recognition of manly conduct as the most fitting behavior of those whose destiny looms so big and so near.

"It is one of the greatest prides on which America may plume itself that in the making of its citizens into soldiers it does not have to substitute a barbarian code for our commonly accepted morality. It is written in the war books of some of our enemies that, upon being received into the army, the citizen's code of morality, which is fitted for times of peace, must be smashed. Civil notions of morality must be got rid of at any cost, and the method taken is the complete destruction of the recruit's spiritual fabric. In America, we find that to make good soldiers out of our citizens we must heighten and strengthen that code of decency and honor which is most highly esteemed amongst us—to render them nobler, not baser men. And to this end the government has encouraged and assisted Jews, Catholics and Protestants to bring the claims of the moral life to the attention of the men in training.

"It is not a light thing that the general commanding the American armies takes time in the face of a serious business to make public acknowledgment of the faith that is in him, and to ally himself with the forces which make for righteousness in the world."

That Trinity season is not intended to be a sort of a go-as-you-please for Lectionary purposes, or even devoted to "duty", after a course on doctrine", is quite apparent, with the Eucharist for our guide, if we take note of the fact that whereas Whitsunday is a commemoration of the gift of the Holy Spirit, that is followed, on Trinity Sunday, by the necessity of being born anew by the Spirit, and that in turn by the definition of the regenerate life as one of love, on the first Sunday after Trinity (Epistle). Hence it is that the present Prayer Book Lectionary plan of undertaking to give, from Trinity Sunday on, an outline of the Old Testament, rests on no sound basis. Although particular lessons here and there may turn out to be topically suitable, the whole raison d'etre of the use of the Old Testament, viz: the record of a religious experience which is fulfilled in the New, as a rosebud enclosed in its calyx, and which flowers in the full blown rose, is practically lost through the failure to connect the great redemptive facts of the first covenant with the anti-types of the new. Nor should we overlook the fact that even geography, as well as history, has a spiritual meaning in the Old Testament. Egypt, the wilderness, the Promised Land, Babylon—these are types of spiritual experience. It is for that reason that the New Lectionary devotes Trinity season of year 2 (so far as the Old Testament is concerned) to the experiences of God's redeemed people after their return from exile—a people who have sinned, been punished, and then forgiven and restored.

The continuation of our Old Testament historical course brings us on this Sunday to a practical obedience (after the re-covenanting of last Sunday) to the laws of God which had been given through Moses, especially a separating of the people who "had knowledge and understanding from outsiders: no intermarriage with non-Israelites; strict observance of the Sabbath and land and debt laws; provision for the worship of Almighty God, and so on. The student of Old Testament history, nay, of religion, should "stick a pin" here. This was the beginning of Phirisaism, that is, of "separatism"; of that Old Testament Puritanism which preserved all that was good in Judaism and also crucified the Lord. Topically, no selection could be more appropriate in connection with the Collect for the day, viz: "evangelical" obedience.

The Old Testament alternative is one of the many prophecies fulfilled after the return, and the New Testament lesson is St. Paul's appeal for evangelical obedience, the obedience of love, which responds to God's grace, exhibited in redemption. As the word, "therefore" (Rom. i:1) harks back to the redemption expounded in preceding chapters, so did the past experiences of Israel returned urge obedience on the redeemed. Moreover, the separation from the world and the fellowship with each other that characterized the people in Nehemiah's time, are urged by the Apostle as under the head of not being conformed unto this world, and not thinking of ourselves more highly than we ought to, but as being members one of another.

The evening lessons, selected with reference to the same leading thought, give us the blessings of obedience from the standpoint of Old Testament wisdom, and its necessity (second lesson) for eternal life; but that obedience which consists in following Christ. (Perhaps the selection should end with 30.)

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

PRAYER

A Sonnet, by Hartley Coleridge

Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right.
Pray, if thou canst, with hope; but ever pray,
Though hope be weak, or sick with long delay;
Pray in the darkness, if there be no light.
Far is the time, remote from human sight,
When war and discord on the earth shall cease;
Yet every prayer for universal peace
Avails the blessed time to expedite.
Whate'er is good to wish, ask that of heaven,
Though it be what thou canst not hope to see;
Pray to be perfect, though material leaven
Forbid the spirit so on earth to be;
But if for any wish thou darest not pray,
Then pray to God to cast that wish away.

"Prayer was to Christ the means, not only of helping individuals, but of dealing with intricate social problems. When He had been healing and teaching in the cities of Galilee, and was moved with compassion for the distressed multitudes, He saw with deeper insight than His disciples that the real difficulty was not with the multitudes: 'The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few.' For this reason He turned to the fundamental lack, commanding: 'Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth laborers into His harvest.' This diagnosis is correct for the world today; this remedy applies to all social disorders. Christ goes to the heart of present problems when He calls His disciples to pray for laborers who share His spirit and who will employ His methods.

"Shall Christ-like leadership, on which everything else depends come to Church and State, at home and abroad? 'The laborers are few, pray ye therefore.' Shall the leaders of the coming day be delivered from false ideals, from unworthy ambitions, from habits which blind and enslave? 'This kind can come out by nothing, save by prayer.'"

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

THE DIVINE IMAGE

By William Blake

To Mercy, Pity, Peace and Love
All pray in their distress;
And to these virtues of delight
Return their thankfulness.

For Mercy, Pity, Peace and Love
Is God, our Father dear;
And Mercy, Pity, Peace and Love
Is man, His child and care.

For Mercy has a human heart,
Pity, a human face,
And Love, the human form divine,
And Peace, the human dress.

Then every man, of every clime,
That prays in his distress,
Prays to the human form divine,
Love, Mercy, Pity, Peace.

And all must love the human form,
In heathen, Turk or Jew;
Where Mercy, Love and Pity dwell,
There God is dwelling, too.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

(Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colo.)

What do you mean by the Holy Catholic Church?

I mean three things:

(a) That Jesus Christ founded a visible society, which He called His Church, which He purchased with His own Blood, which He loved as His Bride, which He will one day present to the Father, a glorious Church, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, of which He promised that the gates of hell should not prevail against, and of which He said that whosoever refused to hear it was like a heathen man or a publican.

(b) That this Church was entrusted to a historic, Apostolic ministry, endowed with the gift of the Holy Ghost, entrusted with the Sacraments, which He ordained for our salvation, and to which He gave the command that it should be a faithful witness of the great facts of His holy life.

(c) That this Church, thus founded, has been continuously maintained, according to His promise, and that its principle of unity is the Sacrament of the Altar, in which we all partake of one body, and that we owe the same kind of loyalty to the Church that we do to the nation, each in its several sphere. So that just as I believe that the unity of the nation, in accordance with the constitution, is vital to its life and purpose, so do I believe that the Holy Catholic Church is that body of men who have been faithful to the constitution, ministry, Sacraments and life of that Church.

And I believe that this Church has been faithful in its fidelity to these essential elements in the constitution and life of the Church, and I challenge any one to show in what it has been unfaithful.

Do you believe that men who do not belong to the historic Church will be saved?

The question of the salvation of any or all of us is in God's hands, and His only. No man can take it out. But I believe that all baptized men have inherited the promises of Jesus Christ, and are members of the Church which He founded. I do not regard the discipline of the Church as dealing with the question of man's individual salvation, but rather the discipline of the Church exists to preserve the faith, untouched by the hand of any man, and the Sacraments unchanged by man's self-will.

God deals with the individual as He chooses, but we discharge our function as witnesses only by adhering to the facts entrusted to us, and not by subscribing to opinions about those facts. I do not impugn the character of an Englishman when I say that he is not a citizen of the United States. He may be a far better man than I, but still it is my duty to be a witness to the facts that lie at the foundation of this republic, whether he likes it or not.

To me, the historic Church is essential to the preservation of the historic faith. Individuals unquestionably may be saved outside of the historic Church, but the fabrics which they have constructed will be burned by the fire that will destroy the transient and refine the permanent.

I cannot conceive of the right of any man to substitute his own opinions for the facts that Christ entrusted to us, nor can I allow his right to destroy the unity of that Church because others refuse to accept those opinions.

There are certain things which Christ put into the Church that no man can take away without destroying that which Christ did.

Has the vestry or choir master the right to control the music of the services?

They have not. The canons of the Church distinctly say that this is a matter under the control of the Rector, and the canons say so because the music of the service is a part of the worship of the Church. It frequently happens that the choir is the source of harmony within the Church and of discord without. This is due to the fact that certain persons are apt to detach the music from the unity of the service, and try to run the choir as though it were a law unto itself.

Its function is not to sing for the delight of the people, but for the glory of God, and the "sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving" must be a part of the priest's work, which he may relegate to other men, but which he should not permit to be used for the advertisement of the human voice, or as a substitute for popular singing. At the same time a priest will do well not to be too arbitrary in dealing with musicians. Many of them are temperamental, and can be reasoned with better than they can be ordered about.

If we are to sing to the glory of God, there must be harmony, not only in our voices, but also in our hearts.

The whole question of music can easily be a storm center in a parish, from which destructive cyclones may originate. It is a wise priest who can handle the music without producing discord. It is a godly musician who can yield to an unmusical rector because it is his duty so to do. The two should have a distinct understanding at the start as to what is to be done by each.

PERSONAL RELIGION — AIDS AND HELPS BY THE WAY

Edited by Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio

THE SPIRIT OF THANKSGIVING

Near the heart of our religion lies the spirit of thanksgiving. In the recognition of the goodness of God, in the vision and knowledge of the light which the redemptive life of Jesus sheds upon every hard, dark experience, man has girded himself to serve others, and out of a heart filled with gratitude to God for His blessings, has tried to transmit the joy which fills his nature.

Not until we grasp the spirit of thanksgiving, make it dominate in our life, make it a new song on our lips, can we enter into the spirit and power of our religion.

BLESS THE LORD, O MY SOUL, AND FORGET NOT ALL HIS BENEFITS, WHO SAVETH THY LIFE FROM DESTRUCTION AND CROWNETH THEE WITH MERCY AND LOVING KINDNESS.

Week-Day Relgious Instruction at Christ Church, Gary, Ind.

Much is being said, and some little done, in regard to Religious Education in connection with public education. Some of these methods have been tried for the past three years at Christ Church, Gary, under the auspices of the General Board of Religious Education.

The opportunity for week-day work was primarily brought about by the Gary school system, which has reached the paradoxical position of being widely known, and yet unknown. A program of work, study and play is followed, evolving a skillful method of rotation, which keeps half of the pupils in the class rooms, while the other half are engaged upon the playground, in the shops or the auditorium. It is from the play periods that children are taken for religious instruction.

No credit is given in the schools for the work done at the Church schools, nor does any connection exist between the different Churches and schools. The school simply excuses the child from the play period, at the request of the parent. The rest falls entirely upon the Church school teacher, whose problem it is to first of all interest and obtain the co-operation of the parents, without which little can be accomplished, for no matter how attractive the course of study be made, the play-loving child invariably prefers the playground or the gymnasium. The fact that religious instruction vies with play is not so disheartening as it may seem, for it offers an opportunity to train the child in the cultivation of the will.

William Wirt, the man who conceived and is developing the "Gary Plan", has said of Christ Church School: "We believe that the Church School in Christ Church Parish is increasing in value each year, and that it is a most important form of co-operation with the public schools."

The children in the grades are given two forty minute periods each week (circumstances have made it impossible to include the kindergarten and high school classes in the week day work), besides their Sunday session. On Sunday, part of the time is given over to a service in the church. The ante-communion service is used, with a talk by the Rector.

The Christian Nurture Series is followed in all classes, and the Sunday and week day instruction is closely correlated, the same lesson being used at both sessions. The class teacher on Sunday gives the story, and on the first week day session this is elaborated upon and worked out in note books, with pictures, stories, outline and other activities suitable to the age and grade.

The second week day class is given over to Christian service, along the lines of mission or Red Cross work, social service and Church school support. Although the Red Cross work has been especially emphasized, the Lenten offering for missions trebled that of previous years. Certain mission fields have been studied, and boxes sent to them.

Never before has there been such an opportunity to train a coming generation in true patriotism and Christian service. Appropriate stories are told while the children knit or sew for the Red Cross, and the session is closed with the declarations of allegiance to the Church and country and patriotic songs and prayers for our soldiers and sailors.

Along the lines of social service, the members of the school have remembered people less fortunate than themselves, and have aided in the support of the Church school. Since Lent, they have been busily engaged in raising money for Liberty Bonds, which will help in paying the debt on the church.

All this activity is closely related to the teachings in the Church school, and it is the instructor's aim that the children should ever be mindful of the facts that they are members of a Divine human society, for which it is their privilege to work.

The question invariably arises, What is week day instruction doing for the Church? Although the work is still in the experimental stage, three results may be noted: First, it has brought the religious into the everyday life of the child; secondly, it has promoted Church loyalty, and, thirdly, it has made the Church what was once known as "the village center".

VERA L. NOYES.

Wyoming Church Celebrates Anniversary

Fiftieth anniversaries of Church life are not common events in the Western districts, and the Rector and people of St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne, Wyoming, felt a deep thankfulness in the celebration of the semi-centennial of St. Mark's Parish, commemorating the erection of the first church, 1868, the first services in the present church, 1888, and the cancellation of the indebtedness on the parish house, 1918.

The chief event of this occasion was the Fellowship Supper given in St. Mark's Parish House, May 16, 1918, at which over 200 communicants and well wishers of St. Mark's gathered to extend congratulations over fifty years of achievement. Following the supper, a rare literary feast was enjoyed, in which tribute was paid to the memory of the Rev. Joseph W. Cook, who came to Cheyenne in 1868, and through whose vigorous and untiring efforts the first edifice was erected; to the Rev. George C. Rafter, who for twenty-two years was Rector of St. Mark's Church, who furnished the inspiration for the erection of the present beautiful structure, and who, as Rector Emeritus, was the honored guest of the evening; and to the present Rector, the Rev. S. A. Huston, under whose Rectorship the indebtedness on the parish house has been cancelled.

Short and most entertaining addresses were given by Mr. Frank S. Burrage, member of the vestry of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie; Dr. Rafter, Bishop Thomas, under whose guidance the parish house was built; Bishop Johnson of Colorado, a guest of the evening; former Governor J. M. Carey; Dean Thornberry of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, and Mr. Luke Voorhees and Mr. J. H. Walton of St. Mark's vestry.

On Friday afternoon, May 17 the women of the parish were entertained at a "Golden Anniversary Tea", given by St. Mark's Guild, successor to St. Mark's Mite Society of former days.

In the evening Bishop Thomas confirmed a class presented by the Rector, and preached the sermon.

Services on the morning of Whitsunday were in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the consecration of the present St. Mark's Church, under the Rectorship of Dr. Rafter, who upon this latter occasion was the Epistoler. Mr. Huston's sermon was on the text, "Ye are the temple of the Living God". The Collect, Epistle and Gospel for the consecration of a church were used with this anniversary service.

Encourage Work of a Louisiana Rector

A notable revival in every department of parish work has occurred at Grace Church, Lake Providence, in the Diocese of Louisiana, under the Rectorship of the Rev. Nicholas Rightor, who took charge of the parish last February. He was formerly assistant at Christ Church, Savannah, Ga. The attendance upon the services and the open offerings are larger than ever, and the generous Easter offering enabled the treasurer to meet all diocesan and general apportionments. An every member canvass resulted in doubling the income for parochial expenses, and the pledges for missions and benevolences trebled. The increased income brings the parish under a canon of the diocese within the list of self-supporting parishes, which includes all parishes that provide a rectory and pay a stipend of at least $1,200 a year. The vestry has released the Rector for one Sunday in each month for missionary work, with the provision that under such an arrangement he is to receive an increase in his stipend of $400 per year. On Sunday, May 5, Bishop Sessums confirmed the largest class ever presented to him for the laying on of hands in the parish—fifteen adults, two boys and two girls, twelve of whom are prominent men in the community and vicinity. At the suggestion of Mr. Rightor, several handsome memorials have been given to the parish, including a credence table, by W. S. Maguire, in memory of his late wife, Margaret Barker Schneider; the seven-branch Altar lights, by Messrs T. B. and F. B. Davis and Mesdames F. H. Schneider and F. X. Ransdell, in memory of their late parents, Edward H. and Julia Blackburn Davis; a lectern Bible, by Frederick J. Breithaupt, in memory of his late sisters, Fanny, Julia and Louisa Frederica Breithaupt. The parish will shortly receive a memorial pulpit and Altar.

Church of Atonement, Augusta, Ga.

At a recent confirmation eight soldiers were confirmed, and the Sunday following a soldier was baptized and gave in his name for confirmation. Many of the soldiers have been given the little cross of St. Francis, so frequently mentioned in the book, "Over the Top". I have a few of these crosses on hand, as I am the organizing secretary in this country of the Third Order.

A "social hour", 6:30 to 8:30 p. m., is held every Sunday for the soldiers. At 8:30 all attending go from the parish house to the church for Evensong. After Evensong, all the boys flock over to the rectory for music, etc., until it is time for them to return to camp.

Ascension Day, at Atonement, a corporate communion, in which the congregations of St. Paul, Good Shepherd and Christ Churches joined, was well attended. The Bishop preached, the Rector celebrated, and the Rev. William Johnson read the Gospel. The Revs. Whitney and Prentiss, being late, sat in the congregation. The Bishop, as usual, preached a very helpful sermon.

Rev. C. B. Harris is now civilian chaplain, and is doing a splendid work at Camp Hancock.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

By Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

AT THE SIGN OF THE RED CROSS

"Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The sign of the Red Cross is the highest symbol of human service. It interprets to the world today the profound meaning of that cross once uplifted on Calvary's hill, whereon the Saviour of the world was crucified.

Within the past year, all over this country, groups of women, and latterly groups of men, numbering many thousands, have assembled for the purpose of doing service for those upon whose faces they will never look, and yet whose needs are as real to them as though they belonged to their own household. It is verily true, "a touch of pity makes the whole world kin". We used to think that our responsibility was bounded by the neighborhood in which we lived, but today there are no boundaries, and the human heart is responsive to the cry of suffering and need in every land and clime. What this enlargement of our vision must spell out, and what the reflex of it must be in our national and individual life no one would venture to say; but of one thing we are certain, namely, that never again will America be insular or its people immune from responsibilities and obligations, however remote they may be, or however foreign they may seem.

Must we not believe that the Red Cross is the world's latest interpretation of the Cross of Calvary? Jesus said, over those who crucified Him, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do". The Red Cross knows no hate. It is the symbol of love and of sacrifice. To no object have we contributed with so much deep satisfaction or such splendid generosity. Where is there a field of enterprise that is so lofty in its ideals and purposes that it refuses compensation and looks for no rewards? Somehow or other we have come to appraise ourselves at a higher standard of value these days. Our gold has taken on a new lustre, and our service a new form of consecration. Once America had as her symbol, so the foreigner thought, the sign of the dollar mark; today she has as her symbol the sign of the Red Cross.

Who among us can estimate what this service must mean to the thousands of men wounded in the world's great struggle, and who among us will venture to estimate what this loving service will mean in the days that are to come to countless thousands of our people in the homeland? Here, at the sign of the Red Cross, woman fulfills her highest function and discloses her noblest and most Christ-like qualities. Our women have literally become the mothers of men, and men, be it said, whose names they will never know and whose faces they will never see.

The sign of the Red Cross in its very color typifies the warm, red blood of the human heart touched with pity and overflowing with loving kindness. Shall we not believe that to each one of these devoted workers there must come that word of high praise that fell from the lips of Him who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister", "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me"?

Again, at the sign of the Red Cross, we find disclosed the larger fellowship of our community, where there is no room nor place for rivalry or competition; where there is no division between class and class, where the confusions and embarrassments of denominational differences are silenced and forgotten. In the silence of the workroom, where deft and consecrated hands are making bandages to be applied to gaping wounds, there is but one word that constitutes the talisman of fellowship, and that word is —Love.

Shall we not hope and pray that out of these workrooms, where love is regnant, there is to come in the new world, that presently is to be born, a unity and a comradeship the like of which no man has ever dreamed? Yes, verily, the sign of the Red Cross is the new seal and symbol of our higher consecration, our truer fellowship, and our greater devotion to the common things of our common lives. — Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

The first baptism, marriage and funeral to be held in the building of Christ Church, Roanoke, Va., were those of soldiers and their families.

Fourteen children were baptized in Grace Church, Bay City, Mich., on Whitsunday, and it is expected that as many more will be baptized in the near future.

A troop of Boy Scouts has been organized at St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I.. The Rev. Charles J Harriman, Junior Curate, is scout master.

The children of St. Michael's Mission School, Paonia, Col., have adopted a French orphan and are now enrolled as benefactors of the fatherless children of France. There are only 25 communicants in the mission and the Sunday school is small.

A Service Flag with fifty stars was placed in St. Paul's Church, New Orleans, La., with appropriate services, on Sunday, May 12. The stars represent forty-eight young men in the fighting forces of the country and two young women Red Cross nurses, members of the parish.

Members of St. James' Church, Cleveland, Ohio, discovered the other day that men supposed to be pro-Germans, had stripped the war shrine, which was dedicated a few weeks ago, of the American and allied flags. Nothing else but the flags was disturbed.

The Diocese of East Carolina leads the entire Province of Sewanee (12 dioceses and two missionary districts) in the number of postulants and candidates for Holy Orders, and in the per capita gifts for domestic and foreign missions.

The women of the Bishop's Guild of St. Paul's Church, Los Angeles, Calif., gave a somewhat unique exhibition recently in the parish hall, consisting of little garments they had made from old cast-off clothes and scraps of material that had been donated to them. The clothing will be given to needy children.

The chimes of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Des Moines, Iowa, are tolled every day at the noon hour to remind every one to offer a prayer for the boys "over there", and for the cause of our allies. This is in co-operation with the nation-wide plan for universal prayer, inaugurated recently at Bryn Mawr, Penn.

Mr. Samuel H. Abbott has been a vestryman of St. Mary's Church, Kinston, N. C., since November 5, 1875—43 years. He has been senior warden since April 12, 1888—30 years, and superintendent of the Sunday school since January 1, 1891—27 years. He was recently presented a gold cross as a token of affection and esteem by the members of the congregation.

Even the Igorots of the Philippines are taking part in the Liberty Loans. Far up in the mountains of Luzon in the neighborhood of the school where Deaconess Anne Hargreaves represents the American Church Mission, they dug up ancient Spanish pieces and other relics from the ground and brought them out of other hiding places peculiar to these mountain people, in order that they might do their bit for liberty.

Dr. John R. Mott, General Secretary of the National War Council of the Y. M. C. A., has been visiting England, France and Italy, by way of studying the work in these various countries of the organization he represents. In London, Dr. Mott was informed by Sir Arthur Yapp, General Secretary of the British Y. M. C. A., that during the present offensive the British Y. M. C. A. lost considerably at the front, and that the value of huts, equipment and stores destroyed or captured by the Germans was $500,000.

"America and the War" is the subject of six patriotic addresses being conducted at St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill., the Rev. George Craig Stewart, Rector. The series is as follows: "Christ vs. Antichrist", Rev. John Henry Hopkins, D. D.; "American Manhood", Rev. Bernard I. Bell; "Our American Women", Prof. Leicester C. Lewis; "The College and the Colors", Rev. Paul Nicou; "The Troops in Khaki", Rev. George Atwater; "The Church in the War", Bishop Weller.

"Look the country over," says Bishop Sumner of Oregon, "and you will note that the parish or mission which is not giving its quota or more to missions is a decaying and well nigh dead institution, selfish and moribund, and in addition disobedient to the commandments of God, and therefore receiving no blessings for itself. Only when this and other dioceses do their duty in speeding the Word of God and consecrating itself and themselves to service and gifts for missions, may we expect or deserve any signal benediction upon our own parochial efforts."

Two very large and impressive services have recently been held in St. James' Church, Sault Ste. Marie, Rev. Stephen H. Alling, Rector. The first was a memorial service in honor of Victor Holten, who was killed in action, April 10. This is the second member of the parish to lay down his life in the service of his country. The other service had for its purpose the aiding of the Chippewa County War Relief Fund, by which all war objects will be taken care of, every person in the county being expected to contribute one, two or three per cent of his income. Major H. Hamilton of the Canadian forces, Mr. John P. McCallum and the Rector spoke.

Daily papers have recounted fully, says the official organ of the Diocese of Kentucky, the very complimentary invitation that has been extended Bishop Woodcock to take up for a period of six months work for the Y. M. C. A. in France. He was one of six persons who were selected from the clergy in the United States for this important work. He has finally announced his decision that he will not accept this appointment, for the reason he feels there is too large and important work for him to do in his own diocese, and, notwithstanding the call for service in France, he feels that there are more urgent demands for him to remain at home.

At the recent Sociological Congress held at Birmingham, Alabama, Bishop Bratton of Mississippi was elected president for the ensuing year. His address on the race question, given during the Conference, left a profound impression upon the audience. The late Booker T. Washington is reported to have expressed the opinion that Bishop Bratton has the clearest vision of any man in the South with regard to their race, and his race looked to him for leadership.

At a meeting of the Northeastern Deanery of the Diocese of Chicago held at Chicago on May 15, resolutions were adopted endorsing the censorship work of Major Funkhouser in the city police department, and protesting against any weakening of the censor's powers through action by the city council. A high tribute was paid the major by the clergy for the work he had already done, and a committee of three was appointed to represent the Deanery at any council meetings where the subject might come up. The committee includes the Rev. John D. McLauchlan, the Rev. Theodore B. Foster and the Rev. Jas. B. Haslam.

The Rector of St. Luke's, Evanston, Ill., Rev. George Craig Stewart, has been granted six months' leave of absence by his vestry and by the Bishop of the diocese to serve as a Red Cross chaplain in France. He expects to leave about the middle of June, and during his absence the parish will be in charge of the Rev. Frederick C. Grant, assistant. In the recent Red Cross drive Dr. Stewart served as captain in the Third Ward in Evanston.

Personal Mention

The Rev. Frederick G. Harkness, formerly Curate of St. Paul's Church, Akron, Ohio, accepted the call to St. Luke's, Cleveland. Address, 7310 Franklin Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

The Rev. Walter G. Harter has accepted a call to organize a new work in Lundale, W. Va., a new mining town. After June 1st, his address will be Lundale, Logan County, W. Va

The Rev. Harry A. Link of Watertown, Wis., has assumed his new duties as Rector of St. Peter's Church, McKinney, Texas.

The Rev. Edmund T. Jillson, Rector of Christ Church, Xenia, Ohio, has resigned to accept a call to the Rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Newport, Ky.

The Rev. Myron B. Marshall, Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Norfolk, Va., gave the Memorial Day address in his city at the invitation of Pickett-Buchanan Camp, Confederate Veterans.

The Rev. Charles N. Tyndall, Rector of Christ Church, Williamsport, Pa., will engage in war work, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., beginning next week, and expects to divide his time between Camp Hancock and Camp Gordon.

During the absence of the Rev. Dr. Bowie, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., at Camp Lee and in France, as chaplain of the McGuire Hospital Unit, he will send sermons to be read to his congregation.

Mr. George Herbert Randall, Executive Secretary of the B. S. A., with headquarters at Philadelphia, recently visited Syracuse, N. Y., and other points, giving addresses on the war work of the Brotherhood. While in Syracuse he was tendered a reception at Lockwood Memorial Hall by St. Paul's Church.

The Rev. Donald Wonders, M. A., has accepted a curacy upon the staff of Trinity Cathedral, Newark, N. J., and will enter upon his new duties on the 1st of June.

The Rev. R. P. Kneitler, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., is chairman of the Charities Endorsement Committee of his city, and has spent considerable time in recent months working out plans for the coordination and support of local charities during the war. It has formed a Council of Social Agencies, in which the various charities are represented, and is well along in its work on a financing plan. This work was made necessary because of the fear that the many national patriotic and charitable calls might tend to lessen the income of the deserving local charities. The committee has also investigated all charities seeking support, and has endorsed only those that are deserving of support.

Newark Notes

The interest in the war service work of the diocese is strongly maintained. The Rev. Warren L. Rogers of Jersey City is taking the place at St. George's Chapel, Camp Dix, of the Rev. Edgar L. Cook, who returns to his important work at Hamburg and Vernon. The Rev. John C. Donnell of Newark, at Y. M. C. A. Building No. 4, Camp Dix, takes the place of the Rev. Charles W. Popham of Belleville, who returns to the care of his parish.

The construction of the parish house for Camp Merritt is being pushed to completion, and the Rev. Edwin S. Carson of Ridgewood takes the place in camp of the Rev. Barrett P. Tyler of Morristown, who returns to his work with the beautiful new Church of the Redeemer, approaching completion. The ordinary term of leave of absence on service of the clergy is three months.

It is a pleasure to record that some of the restrictions in the administration of the Holy Communion in the camps have been lessened, so that there is a record of many services of the Holy Communion for large or small groups, and many baptisms. The minds of soldiers, especially those who are to go to France, turn to the Sacraments above all other religious observances. Many of the clergy are expecting appointments as chaplains or in service of the Y. M. C. A. or Red Cross Society, or in our military camps.

The Rev. Hugh D. Wilson of St. George's, Passaic, has accepted a call to missionary work in Western Colorado, to the great loss of the diocese and the great gain of the Missionary District. Te Rev. Frederick B. Bartlett of West Hoboken also goes soon to work in South Dakota—also a man who will be greatly missed in the Diocese of Newark.

AN INSPIRING MILITARY SERVICE

Trinity Church, Marshall, Mich., was the scene of an inspiring military service, which was arranged by Mr. C. J. S. Williamson, Brotherhood of St. Andrew secretary in Camp Custer. Mr. Williamson and the Rev. Albert M. Ewert, Rector of Trinity Church, Marshall, worked out the details whereby, in spite of difficult military conditions, arrangements were made by which a soldier choir was organized and trained, and members of the Marshall congregation came to Camp Custer in their automobiles and took the military choir for an 18-mile drive to the imposing old parish church, where the service was held.

It was an impressive and never-to-be-forgotten sight to the people of the Marshall congregation when the choir marched into the nave of the church. The crucifer, the flag-bearer and the fifty singers were all in khaki, and the two clergymen at the rear of the procession alone were vested, the Rev. Albert M. Ewert, the local Rector, and the Rev. William Heilman, Episcopal War Commission camp pastor, formerly Rector of St. Luke's Church, Ypsilanti, Mich.

The processional hymn was "Onward, Christian Soldiers", and the congregation, which packed the church far beyond its seating capacity, were so deeply affected that the singing seemed to be entirely that of the strong, clear voices of the soldiers. The Rev. Mr. Heilman took the service of Morning Prayer, and the lessons were read by Sergt. Arthur L. Shera, Ambulance Co. 339 of the 310th Sanitary Train. Sergt. Shera is a lay reader of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, and director of Military Chapter No. 1 of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Mr. Ewert preached a very impressive sermon on "The Ideal of Mankind", which wove together the theme of Trinity Sunday and the service that men now are rendering on behalf of humanity in the armies of the allies. Mr. Ewert said: "The Church has not failed to raise up in America a long line of patriots, who carried their ideals into action, and who have showed the results of a living faith in the ideal of mankind." As evidence of this assertion, Mr. Ewert recited the names of many sons of the Church who rendered notable service to the United States at great crisis.

A delightful chicken dinner was served to the military choir by the women of the parish at the conclusion of the service. After dinner, the men delighted the Marshall people by singing a number of Camp Custer songs.

It was felt by many of the Marshall people that the soldiers would enjoy a walk around the town, but when it was discovered that the Rev. Mr. Ewert was willing to give an impromptu organ recital in the church, the men gathered in the nave, and the afternoon wore away in the presence of the associations called up by the tones of the organ and the dignity and quiet restfulness of the church edifice. There seemed to be no desire on the part of the men to leave the church, and old associations were brought up in the minds of thoughtful young men sitting quietly listening to familiar music among surroundings which reminded them of sacred things in other places.

In order to arrange the service, it was necessary for Mr. Williamson to make more than 100 calls and arrange for choir rehearsals in different places, both in and out of the camp, but the verdict of the soldiers is that such service pays, and it has made many of the soldiers come back to a realization of what their Church is to them, and to some non-Churchmen in the choir it brought a new regard and friendship for the Church.

Marquette Notes

The Woman's Auxiliary in St. Paul's Parish, Marquette, has held two very successful sessions in April. The first one held at the rectory, was addressed by the Rev. A. J. Wilder and the Rev. R. P. Ernst on the needs of our own diocese—Mr. Ernst's address was replete with first hand information and resulted in the Auxiliary pledging themselves to raise $200. The second meeting took the form of a tea which Bishop Harris addressed and at the conclusion of his speech the former pledge of $200 was redeemed by the women placing in the Bishop's hands a check for $300 instead of for two. The offering at this meeting for the same object was $35.00.

On Sunday, May 12th, a class of twenty-four were confirmed by the Bishop at St. Paul's, Marquette and on the evening of the same day a splendid musical service was given by the choir.

Bishop Harris has just returned from a visitation at Escanaba, where he found things in splendid spiritual condition. The Rector, the Rev. W. J. Datson, presented a class of twenty-nine for confirmation.

The commencement sermon at the State Normal School, Marquette, is to be preached by the Bishop, also that of the High School, Negaunee. The Marquette High School sermon will be preached by the Rev. A. J. Wilder, Rector of St. Paul's.

EDITORIAL

[redacted]

It may be you have a talent for business, for teaching, for singing, for calling, for whatever it is.

I hope you do something for your living in the Church.

Then how do you do it? That ought to be the one thing that you do best, for it is your service of loyalty and gratitude to Almighty God; and the fidelity with which you render that service will be the index of how much fidelity and loyalty you have, the real question you will have to face at the last day.

What do you think the Lord who died for your thinks of a vestry, only half of which can be depended upon to even attend a meeting?

What think you the Lord thinks of the service rendered by intermittent Sunday school teaching?

Is it, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things?" Scarcely, for such service would merit your discharge from any first class business house, or any well conducted home.

Nor is it any better to say: Because I can do nothing without sacrifice to myself, therefore, I will offer to do nothing at all. Do you fancy that your position in the Church is a purely ornamental one? Or are you of that order of ecclestistical tramps who think that the Lord owes them eternal life because they come of a good family?

We are facing the summer time once more. It is a time to let down and to forget. We go off to the summer resort and forget that we have a God.

We so love God with all our heart and soul and mind that we joyfully say, "Goodbye God, I am going away from you on a well-earned vacation."

There are certain definite matters of holy obligation and one is that one day in seven is the Lord's Day. His yoke is easy and His burden is light, but still it is a yoke. You are to recognize that it is His day and not yours, before you have any right to appropriate it entirely to yourself.

It is just as easy, I will grant, for a Christian to steal the day as it is for a crook to pick your pocket, but it is no less stealing because it can be done easily.

You see Christ does not care to have that kind of Christian morality which puts you into the hands of a moral policeman. He wants you to be honest because you love honesty, to be pure because you love purity, to worship God because you love God. Therefore you are your own policeman.

What's the use?

Just this! That the Christian religion is a man's job, requiring a man's energy and demanding the same kind of trustworthiness that you require in your clerk.

In short, the use is that if you are going to be a Christian at all, you want to be the kind of a one that does not have to be watched; that when you say you will do a thing, some one doesn't have to wonder whether you are telling the truth or not.

You want to be a Christian who doesn't shirk his share in the first place, either in work or money, and when he gives anything to the Lord, he doesn't retain a mental reservation that he will give that service providing he can't think of some excuse for not doing it.

Just as many parishes have been wrecked by poor vestrymen as have been wrecked by uninteresting parsons. Christ gave his opinion of those who made excuses for not using their talent; for not coming to the feast, for having no oil in their lamps, and He treated them all the same way as you treat a worthless employee. He shut the door and wouldn't let them in.

A Christian is one bound by an oath made to Almighty God to do his service as a good soldier does his duty. A deserter from the army expects to be shot; a deserter from the Church expects to be buried with full military honors.

It is about time that those enlisted soldiers of Christ who do nothing and give nothing be treated as slackers are treated. Why cumber they the Church? Of what possible use are they in a Church militant?

What's the use of your doing your duty as a Christian at all times, whether anyone is watching you or not? Why the answer is simple. In order that you may be a soldier that needeth not to be ashamed of himself.

What's the use?

Exactly the same use that every boy in the U. S. army has for doing the best he can, even unto death, in the face of the ungodly Hun. Better die and be a man, than live and be a grafter.

Let the boys in the army teach us in the Church militant how to be a good soldier.

"You have not yet resisted unto blood striving against sin." They have and are, God bless them! Shall we do less in our fight against sin, the world and the devil, than do they, our own boys, in their struggle against all these in the fields of France?

The Church School

St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Beyond our present hopes was the Children's Easter Offering this year. In spite of the demands in money which the war makes even upon the little people, the sum of $225 was sent to the Board of Foreign Missions in New York.

By birthday pennies, that is, one for each year of their lives, the children met their pledge of fifteen dollars for the Cribside.

The meetings of the teachers have been discontinued after a year of most encouraging co-operation on the part of all. The last meeting was a supper with places set for thirty-seven. Guests of the evening were some of our friends whose interest in the School has been very welcome. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Green, who lately came to St. Luke's from Detroit. After the supper an informal discussion of our problems proved most interesting. Never has the School closed under more encouraging conditions. We have teachers for twenty classes with an average attendance of 150 or 160 children. Our last session is June 16, the Sunday before the public schools close. We feel sure no vacation can now break into the well established work which has been made possible for the last two years by the faithful work of our teachers and we look forward to the fall with no misgivings.

Democracy Made Safe in Christ's Commonwealth

2. Of these social bonds, the State is one, its ideal being Democracy, rightly understood.

So man is born a member of society and lives in membership. He is intimately related to the whole human family. But he has some relations more intimate than others. First, of course comes his family. His family gives him his entrance on the stage. His parents are his point of contact. His family is a real part of himself. He cannot be himself without it. But his family in its turn is part of a still larger circle, a member of a larger group, which is made up of other families like his. This inclusive group, which stands between the family and the whole human race, we call the State.

Now the State is clearly a natural and quite inevitable group. It is a necessary condition of a man's life. A man is born into it as he is into his family. It is a family of families. It has a direct and immediate bearing upon each individual. Its history becomes his heritage as soon as he is born. Its heroes, its prophets, its leaders and law-givers, its statesmen and its benefactors are as native to him as are "its rocks and rills", its climate, its conditions and resources. Its laws give him security of life and limb and property. Its commerce brings him food and drink and the necessities of life. His love for it and joy in it are not acquired but spontaneous. Patriotism is like the love of children for their mother. It has its roots in the very depths of our self-hood. That is why the call of country fires every man worthy of his manhood, every man who has not lost his soul. That is why there is no lower depth of infamy than treachery, no blacker word in our vocabulary than "traitor".

Now if you contemplate this Divine ordinance of the State, so essential and natural to man, and therefore so clearly part of the plan of man's creation, you will see that its true idea must be what we call "democracy". Otherwise it will not and cannot fulfill its proper function. We must, however, be careful not to identify democracy with any particular form of government. It by no means follows that a democratic form of government ensures a democratic State, or vice versa. Governments do not make States. The State is itself the living and creative thing and its government is its creation. No doubt the state may submit to a hostile and unfriendly power, because it has not will or force enough to overthrow it. It may put up with unworthy and inefficient men in public office; it may be corrupt and contented. But the government of a State can never be, in strict truth, more than the creature of the State, the expression and servant of its will. Democracy, then, means a great deal more than a mere form of government. Democracy, literally translated, is the "people's rule". This means exactly what it says, namely, that no class shall rule, but the whole citizenship. No special group of citizens, whether capitalists or laborers, whether learned or ignorant, whether bourgeoisie or proletariat, shall have control for their own interests. But the good of all shall be the rule of each. The very heart of true democracy is thus the principle of universal service. Each citizen is set to serve the State, which is the whole body of the citizens; and to serve it in its wholeness as of supreme social worth. Life in the State is for all and not for some; that is the rule and inspiration of democracy.

I must pause just long enough to remind you how our current ideas of democracy have been poisoned and distorted by the narrow individualism, especially of the Eighteenth Century. It was then that the individualistic creed carried men into the field of politics and led to many revolutions and found expression in many famous documents and constitutions. But most of these were really anti-social. The State was treated, not as the parent, but as the product of its citizens. As individuals, as units, men were thought of and represented as saying each to the other, "Go to! Let us have a State, which shall protect us and secure us our rights'.'

In this way citizenship was made a sort of contract between individuals for their mutual advantage. This has led to lamentable results in many States which are politically organized under democratic governments, including our own. For this breeds a spirit which is essentially at war with true democracy. This leaves no place for loyalty or chivalry; this has no suggestion of a great social bond, worthy, for its own sake, of the uttermost devotion its citizens can render. So there has come to be rife, especially in our democracies, the spirit of self-seeking; of looking to the State, not as an object of service and devotion, but as a source of private gain and profit. Frankly, I think that famous phrase which tells us that each citizen has a right to demand of his State life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, is utterly unworthy of a truly democratic faith. It is naked individualism. It is a demand that society shall at all costs serve me. It means my rule over the people. I am in the center of the stage. My country is my minister. Now that is the very basic error against which I am contending. That is precisely the wrong order, the wrong relation. The true democrat is the man who willingly, gladly lets the people rule him; whose life is given up to serve the whole; whose most dearly prized right of citizenship is to mean freedom and liberty to serve, to work for the highest interests, the true welfare, of our country, in order that the Divinely given social order may be secured according to God's. The State, then, is a Divinely ordered social bond, natural and necessary to men, and its only possible ideal is found in a true democracy of social life.

O God the Son, Redeemer of the world, truly Thy name is above every name! In spite of error, misunderstanding, hatred, scorn and blasphemy, in the deadliest hour, when the skies blacken and the earth reels, and it seems that men have once more crucified in this dread eclipse the Son of God afresh, still Thy majesty and Thy power are felt, and through the midnight comes the prayer of a penitent, "Lord, remember me", or perhaps the confession of an executioner, "Truly this was the Son of God": still when they dream that Thou art forever silenced, buried, guarded and sealed down, the stone is rolled away from the door of the sepulchre; and the keepers grow weak as dead men; and angelic forms are there; and still through the gray mists of the morning Thou comest, changed to something august, half-unknown, immortal; but the tones of Thy love are heard again, and at Thy voice we know whom we have believed, and our faith in Thee becomes the victory which overcomes the world.—Chadwick.

Though we had all that God hath made,
The joy of earth, the bliss of heaven,
Yet were we still unsatisfied,
Unless the Giver, too, be given.
His gifts are beautiful and dear;
Without Himself, how poor they seem—
The earth a desert, bare and drear,
And heaven the phantom of a dream.

Lexington Notes

NOONDAY INTERCESSIONS

Following the recent service of intercession for the allied cause, held at the Cathedral, Lexington, a novel method has been inaugurated to interest all citizens of Lexington in the success of the cause of the allies. Every day at noon the Cathedral chimes ring out for five minutes, during which time the citizens of Lexington, whoever they are and wherever they be, are requested to pause and offer a prayer for the success of the allied cause.

FRENCH ORPHAN ADOPTED

Calvary Church, Ashland, Ky., the Rev. G. H. Harrison, Rector, has adopted a French orphan living at Rennes, France. The orphan is named Juilette Boisrammi.

LATONIA

The mission at Latonia, recently made vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Peter Langendorff, has been placed by Bishop Burton under the charge of the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, secretary of the diocese and Rector of Trinity, Covington.

PUPILS OF ST. JOHN'S, CORBIN, AT HOSPITAL

Two little girls, pupils of St. John's Collegiate Institute and Industrial School, Corbin, Ky., our mountain missionary school, have been taken to Lexington recently to be operated on at the Good Samaritan Hospital. The operations were serious ones, one for mastoiditis, performed by Dr. McClure, the other for appendicitis, performed by Dr. Barrow.

POLL ELECTION OF VESTRY

The annual election of vestrymen of Trinity Church, Covington, Ky., was held May 6, with polls open from 5 to 8 p. m., for the casting of votes by members of the congregation. Between 6 and 8 p. m. dinner was served by the Ladies' Aid Society at the nominal price of 50 cents. Previous to the election, a list of the members, communicants, was printed in pamphlet form. At the congregational meeting, held at night, a unique plan for paying off the Church indebtedness was put into operation. The plan proposed the selling of 250 "blocks of Church indebtedness", a number of which blocks were sold that night at $10 a block.

INTERESTING PROGRAM

The program, now issued, for the twenty-third Annual Council of the Diocese of Lexington, besides providing for the usual routine of business, gives place for three special services in Calvary Church, Ashland, at which addresses will be made upon the following interesting subjects: "Demands Made Upon the Church by the War, and How the Church Is Meeting Them", by the Rev. Dr. R. Wilkinson, Rector of the Good Shepherd, Lexington; "Effect of the War Upon the Church—The Church of the Future", by the Ven. F. B. Wentworth, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Lexington, Tuesday night, May 28th. "The Call of the Times for the Extension of the Kingdom", by the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, Jr., Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort; "The Call of the Times for the Religious Education of Youth", by the Rev. G. H. Harris, Dean of Margaret College, Versailles, Wednesday night, the 29th. "Church Unity; Unity of the Spirit", by the Rev. T. L. Settle of St. Mary's Church, Middleboro; "Corporate Unity", by Mr. Allan D. Cole of Maysville, Thursday night, the 30th. All speakers are limited to 20 minutes.

THE KINGDOM GROWING— CHURCH EXTENSION IN OUR DAY

The need for Christian literature in the vernacular in the mission fields of the Orient is recognized by the Church. To meet this need in the district of Kyoto, at the request of Bishop Tucker, the Board of Missions has assigned the Rev. Dr. Irving H. Carrell, who has exceptional ability in this line, to the work of translation.

In the Diocese of New York there have been held recently eleven Training Institutes for parish officers of the Woman's Auxiliary, one at least in each district, so that no parish was unrepresented on account of distance, while one was planned at an hour which would be convenient for officers of evening branches. The same program was followed in all, including classes for presidents, secretaries and treasurers of branches, together with a class on the duties common to all officers. Suggestions for these institutes are being prepared. For particulars write to the Secretary, the Woman's Auxiliary, 281 Fourth Ave., New York City.

(It would be of great benefit to the Woman's Auxiliary if more of these institutes could be held in other dio[illegible] and we [illegible]

[illegible] article on the Church, contributed by request to a local paper, asks the question: Do you know that the Episcopal Church gave the world the Bible in English, the Y. M. C. A., with all its wonderful power for good; that it was first to build a college, first to found a public library, first to work for the Negro, first to organize a temperance society which was in any way inclusive, started the White Cross movement for purity, formed the first association to help workingmen, founded the first orphans' home, the first organized charity, established the first public school, and was first to plan Church unity?

[illegible] trend of consequences will be the same—towards a sense of oneness, the goal of the dying Master's prayer. It is obvious that there has already come a marked drawing together of our various communions through the great common cause, which has unified their devotion and life.

The editor-in-chief of Le Matins, the famous paper of Paris, told in the Cathedral of St. Paul, Boston, the other day, of an Episcopal clergyman, a Catholic priest and a Jewish rabbi who, as chaplains, lived together in a dug-out. After the battle they divided the work of giving the last rites to dying soldiers, without stopping to determine the religious affiliations of the fallen man.

There were so many dying, and the time for giving them spiritual aid and comfort was so furiously short! The French editor vouched for the story of a rabbi who held the crucifix to the lips of an expiring Catholic. To stay the passing soul on the supreme goal of all religions becomes the quick, mastering passion of any man with a heart in him. Men who have lived through such experiences can hardly fail to bear the resulting sense of essential oneness with them while [illegible]

[illegible] and the Rev. P. [illegible] earnestly seconded her plan. This is a fine way for a parish to help the government and also increase its own endownment.

War Altar Presented to Brooklyn Church

A resident of Paris, France, has presented a war Altar to St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., in memory of all the fallen heroes of the allied nations who have lost their lives on French soil, and to afford a sacred shrine where families of American soldiers may come to pray for those who are engaged in war service.

The eighth anniversary of the Rectorship of the Rev. Andrew Chalmers Wilson was celebrated on Ascension Day. The parishioners brought roses and placed them at the foot of the Altar in memory of the dead soldiers in France. Addresses were made by the Vicar of Old Trinity Church, Manhattan, the Rev. Dr. McComas, and by Capt. Cornelius of the British army, military instructor at Princeton University.

RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS IN THE MIDDLE WEST

A Paper Read at the Church Congress Held in Cincinnati, Ohio, in October, 1917.

III

May I mention several other characteristics of our Midwestern condition? I believe that I am within the bounds of truth when I say that in the Middle West such masses of the people as are not Roman Catholic are distinctly anti-Roman Catholic. This feeling varies according to the education, environment and nature of those who share it, but it is real. The Roman Church casts no spell beyond its own borders, and will never convert the unchurched unless they have shared in early life the traditions of that Church. In fact, this antipathy seems to be most keen among those who have no religious affiliation worth the name.

Beyond the Roman Catholic communion there is no recognition of authority in religious matters. And as matters stand, there is absolutely no hope of establishing the principle of authority. All the king's horses and all the king's men are ineffective. Authority has vanished as a vital factor in the religion of the Protestants. With authority vanishes uniformity and with uniformity vanishes religious momentum.

Religion among the Protestants of the Middle West has become the avocation of amateurs. Amateurs, committed to individualistic prerogatives, preach the Gospel, teach Sunday school, and proclaim liberty of opinion from every platform. This is the Middle West as I see it.

It is not without some feeling of temerity that I venture to forecast the future of religion in the Middle West. My own best judgment is that there will be no improvement until the primary problem of nationality is on the way toward solution. The Middle West, racially and socially, is a chaotic mixture of diverse elements. When these blend, there will be at the same time an automatic judgment upon the experimental conditions through which we are passing. In education, industrial relations, social conditions, forms of government and religion, there will be a gradual elimination of the relatively ineffectual forms and methods. There will be a constant approach to the enduring and effective forms and methods. In the realm of religion there will be a discrimination between the accidents and the substance. I have enough confidence in the people of our Middle West to believe that underneath their present chaos of method there is a real consciousness of the fundamental religious values and sanctions, and a capacity to discern the truth. They are committed now by training and tradition to some form of loyalty, or of denial, which concerns itself more with the forms rather than with the substance of religion. As time passes, there will emerge from the deeper reaches of the heart an insistence on th primary elements of religion. The efforts of any organization to capture this force as a stimulus to some passing manner of the exercise of religion will be futile. The rising tide of religion will dig its own channels, will recreate its own methods, will form that which will satisfy its own need for expression. Present-day modes will either be modified or pass away. For example, Sunday is now practically gone. If its passing means the passing of godliness, then it is a calamity. If its passing is but a phase in the transition from the recognition of the sacredness of a time to the sacredness of all time, we need not be so much concerned.

We make efforts to stay the disintegrating tendencies. We attempt to arrest the process. Social service and sacramentalism, revivals and educational efforts, are erected as bulwarks against the flood. They are upbuilded by honest and God-fearing men. And it is right that those convinced of their efficacy should try them. For it may be that one of them will prove to be the agent which will precipitate or crystalize the religious substance now held in solution. Each adherent of any of these agents naturally upholds the efficacy of his particular agent. But each is no more than experimental in its nature. We cannot now be sure that any agency has been effective enough to commend itself as the ultimate way.

In the face of millions of unchurched, yet not necessarily irreligious, in the face of social problems, shifting populations and rapidly changing conditions, what is to be the program of our own Church? For though I may arouse a suspicion of failing to take advantage of the privileges of this body, and of trespassing within the limits of orthodoxy, yet I say that in my heart I believe that the Episcopal Church may become the torch-bearer to lead the hosts of the Middle West into the path of a satisfying and enduring religion.

In view of what I have just said, you might properly ask what is to be her relation to this inchoate mass of human diversity. Why the Episcopal Church? Because the Episcopal Church is comprehensive of every principle which I have mentioned. She is both social and sacramental, revivifying and educative. Her faith is sane, reasonable and of right proportions. Her practices are stimulating and satisfying and strengthening. Her methods are calm and healing. She has an atmosphere of joy and peace. The Church is the hope of the Middle West because she is inherently possessed of elements whose abundance would alone be equal to the task.

But the method. Here again I am amazed at my own rashness in daring to propose that the methods now in vogue ought to be subject to some critical scrutiny. Are we quite convinced that a survey of the Church in the Middle West, parish by parish, mission by mission, would encourage us to believe that we are conquering the vast territory? I fear not. We are doing noble, heroic, self-sacrificing work in countless places, but it is being undermined by the conditions mentioned earlier in this paper, over which we have no control. This immediate work cannot be allowed to relax, of course, but I venture to return for a moment to the analysis of the situation as I have just suggested it, and try to relate our possible efforts to that.

The great unchurched masses, assisted by the discontented within religious affiliations, will in time, with the unifying of our varied social elements, express their religious elements in a new manner. The duty of our Church is to help to free these restrained forces in their struggle for expression, and at the same time to saturate the consciousness of the unchurched mind with the spiritual content of whole faith of which that mind has some slight portion.

I am afraid that our Church will never do this by a mere effort to extend geographically, and to occupy feebly an increasing number of towns and villages. These may be contact points, but they have failed in the Middle West to be sufficient to reach the unchurched. They need the reinforcement of a mightier central dynamo.

One of our disadvantages is the multiplication of weak mission stations, which exhaust the resources of the diocese and the strength of the Bishops, and only in rare instances blossom into strong centers of work. This Church must touch humanity at the points of richest contact. If the energy and money now enlisted in carrying out intermittent efforts in small and already overchurched communities, where we at best succeed in glossing a veneer over a few lives whose interior is already saturated with denominational influence of some sort, if that energy and money were put into our great education centers, in places where the current of life runs full and strong, where we can fight battles, and not engage in skirmishes, I believe that we should find the Church growing in power.

They Collected the Rector's Salary

The Church News, Diocese of Mississippi, says: "We heard a good one lately, which is too good to keep to ourselves. In a parish in this diocese the vestry greeted the new incumbent with the news that the old incumbent collected his own salary, to which the new incumbent replied that he would collect just enough money to buy a ticket to get out of town on, and then the vestry said that that was not necessary, that they would collect the salary.

Interesting Work of a Rector On Exemption Board

The Diocese of Chicago presents some very interesting facts in connection with the work of the Rev. A. W. H. Anderson, Rector of All Saints' Church, Ravenswood, chairman of the Exemption Board for the Northern District of Chicago. Speaking of the physical examination of 1,000 men who first came before the Board, Dr. Anderson says the moral tone of these men was remarkably good. The percentage of social evil diseases was very low. There were very few cases of tuberculosis, due no doubt to the healthy conditions of the neighborhood, and to Ravenswood being the home of an upper middle class, and having no congested sections, and few foreign-born residents. The chief rejections made by the Board were for hernias or defects in hearts and eyes. The chief exemptions were of men having wives and children. Dr. Anderson says he was impressed by the splendid physical condition of the married men of 21 to 31 years of age. He did not recall a single case among the first thousand of rejection for alcoholism. Almost none of this number were abnormal physically, only two were imbeciles, and in the whole quota of 1,156 men there was only one bedridden case. No deaths were recorded from June 5 to January 1. The work of the members of the Board was done, of course, at a great sacrifice in time. Dr. Anderson states that during July and August he spent from 12 to 15 hours daily doing clerical work, on one day signing his name 3,000 times.

Speaking of certain characteristics of candidates of different nationalities, Dr. Anderson said that the German-American citizen by adoption or naturalization, in spite of his reputation for thriftiness, has been discovered since June 5, 1916, to be the most improvident and physically the most helpless of our people, and were it not for the fact that the sons of these citizens between the ages of 21 and 31 support them, they would become public charges. Another remarkable fact ascertained by the Board from these German-Americans was that although the sons of selective service age give almost, if not all, of their wages to their fathers and mothers, the married sons and daughters of these same parents, no matter how numerous or prosperous they are, are willing to let their parents starve rather than contribute one dollar a week for their support. It was noticed that the American boy of English and Scotch ancestry came first in willingness to serve; that the Irish came next; that the generation second to the soil of men of foreign parentage responded first; that the boy who came from Sweden, for example, as an infant, and whose father was a naturalized citizen, was not generally keen to fight, although he knows no land but this, and the boy born here of Swedish parents is often just as keen as one whose ancestors have been here for generations. This willingness is sometimes true of boys of German parentage, when the boys have not been taught to read and speak German. Dr. Anderson thinks it a great mistake to permit parochial schools, Catholic or Protestant, to perpetuate foreign traditions in this country through the teaching of foreign languages.

Rector for Twenty-Five Years

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Rev. Percy S. Grant, D. D., as Rector of the Church of the Ascension, New York City, was celebrated on Thursday, May 9. A choir of 70 voices, led by four women trumpeters, sang appropriate music, and the procession included the Rector, his assistants, George Gordon Battle and Major August Belmont, in khaki, with other members of the vestry and officials of the Church.

Bishop Burch confirmed a class of twelve. He acted in the absence of Bishop Greer, who sent his regrets. Addresses were made by Bishop Burch on "The Progress in the Church in the Last Quarter of a Century"; Mr. Battle, a member of the vestry, on "Progress of Religious Thoughts Among Laymen in the Last Quarter of a Century"; Joseph Auerbach, on "For the Neighbors", and the Rector, on "Progress in Ascension Parish in the Last Twenty-five years".

After the service, a reception was held in the parish house, where the congregation and friends gathered around the Rector and congratulated him on his long service.

Soldiers' Service Attracts Crowds

Many were turned away from St. Thomas' Church, Battle Creek, Mich., at an evening service in which soldiers from Camp Custer participated, with C. J. F. Williamson, B. S. A. Secretary, in charge.

Lieut. O. F. Crawford, 329th Machine Gun Battalion, at Camp Custer, former Rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Bellevue, Ohio, conducted the service, while Lieut. G. H. MacNish, 328th Field Artillery, of Camp Custer, preached the sermon, which was a splendid one. His subject was "Fight a Good Fight". Owing to so many of the companies being in quarantine, only 35 of the 95 men asked were able to be in the choir, but regardless of that, the all-men's choir scored a big hit.

During the first half of the service, Private D. Klinger of Grand Rapids, Grace Church, a member of the 329th Ambulance Company, played the organ, while Capt. Algie of the British mission at Camp Custer played the last half. The offertory was sung by Private William Gilboy of the base hospital, former soloist for St. John's Church, Albany, N. Y. Mr. Gilboy has a wonderful tenor vioce, and his solo, "Ninety and Nine", was much enjoyed Frank C. Holderness, formerly of Grace Church, Detroit, now stationed at Camp Custer, in the 329th Field Artillery, was the other soloist. Mr. Holderness sang "My God, My Father, While I Stray", during the first part of the service. He also possesses a voice of rare quality.

The ushers were soldiers, and they also took up the offering. Sergt. Geo. Durham, 310th Ammunition Train, and a former member of St. Paul's Church, Marquette, acted as flag-bearer, while Corporal C. A. Holt, St. Paul's Church, Madison, Wis., stationed with the 340th Infantry at Camp Custer, was crucifer.

U. S. Postoffice System Protested Against

The National Church Periodical Club, at their annual meeting, protested strongly against the law in regard to the United States postoffice zone system, as applied to periodicals, as follows:

"Whereas, During the past thirty years the Church Periodical Club has been instrumental in placing large quantities of periodical literature of all kinds in remote and isolated communities in every part of this country; and

"Whereas, There is documentary proof that this effort has been beneficial in raising the moral tone and the standards of living in these communities, as well as in encouraging self-improvement on the part of individuals; and

"Whereas, The application of the zone system to periodicals, by increasing the price and lessening the number published, will seriously limit the philanthropic and educational work of the Church Periodical Club; and

"Whereas, It is at this time a patriotic duty to give every aid in molding the thought of all communities along the line of intelligent loyalty; therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Church Periodical Club protests most earnestly against the application of the zone system to periodicals, and urges its members to ask the aid of their Senators and Representatives in repealing the present law."

Layman, Aged 92, Dies in Mississippi

The death of Dr. J. A. Lucas on May 8 removes from the activities of the Church of the Nativity, Greenwood, and the Diocese of Mississippi, a devout Churchman, who was greatly beloved by the members of his parish and the whole diocese, which he had served faithfully and well in various responsible positions for a long term of years. He was 92 years of age, and took an active part in Church affairs up until the time of his death. He only missed one Diocesan Council during a period of thirty years, and had been a trustee of the University of the South several terms.

Doing One's Bit

In Church affairs, "doing one's bit" for the war has been a favorite plea with many for escaping the responsibilities to the Church, that more than any other power is keeping law and order at home, asserts the Diocese of Chicago. "Doing one's bit" too often means taking the Church's share and giving it to war funds, and letting the Church do without. Our offerings for missions have been lessened since the war; the Church of England's increased. Presbyterians have a better showing than we, and have given about $400,000 in excess for their foreign work to meet unusual conditions and high prices. But Presbyterians have suffered in their home missions, and will very likely be $150,000 in debt this year. The Easter reports in the Diocese of Chicago show a general falling off from last year in the amount of the offerings, used by most parishes to pay deficits in current debts. This fact means harder times still for the clergy, whose salaries in general are inadequate, and whose services are needed more than ever during the war to lead their people, and to cheer and comfort them with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. To be honorable and intelligent, our people must cease to say "they are doing their bit", and must try "to do their utmost" to support the Church. If they do their utmost by their Church, they will do it, too, by their country. The two are bound together. And the power to do comes from Jesus Christ. Let Him be our one desire, and all else is made possible.

Rest, Recreation and Refreshment Provided For Women and Girls

St. Mark's Cathedral Parish House, Grand Rapids, Mich., is open daily, except Sunday, from 11:30 to 2 p. m., for the use of women and girls at work in the neighborhood who may care to spend a portion of their "noon hour" away from their stores or offices for luncheon, rest or recreation. Papers and magazines and the use of a piano are offered as a means of pastime. A sewing machine can also be utilized. Coffee is furnished for those who care for it at three cents a cup. No fees are asked. There is no question of religious affiliation and no services. Mrs. Emilie Burnett, who is connected with the work at St. Mark's, is in attendance to extend a welcome and provide the hospitality that St. Mark's is glad to offer. The work is carried on under the auspices of the Cathedral League. Mrs. W. K. Williams, 234 Madison Avenue, Grand Rapids, who is deeply interested in the work, has had printed a very neat "Return after five days" label for use on envelopesc and other mail matter, on gummed perforated rolls of five hundred, which she disposes of at 75 cents a roll, and devotes the proceeds to the League. The labels are printed in blue—other colors ten cents extra. It is altogether a splendid work, which was established at the Cathedral during the Deanship of the Rev. Francis S. White, who is now in war service, and out of his otherwise very busy life finds time to continue his contributions to THE WITNESS.

A Brotherly Act

A pleasant illustration of good fellowship and a fine testimonial to the regard in which the Rev. Sidney E. Sweet of St. Stephen's Church, Jersey City, N. J., is held by the people of that community is contained in the resolutions adopted by the First Congregational Church a few Sundays ago.

"Inasmuch as his ministry has possessed the rare quality of prophetic boldness in all matters of social righteousness and still retained the true quality of kindness and respect for the personality of every man, woman and child to whom he has ministered; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the pastor and members of the First Congregational Church, do extend to him our gratitude for his splendid ministry in our midst, and do assure him that our prayers and interest shall follow him as he goes forth to spend and be spent for the people of Columbus. And furthermore, be it

"Resolved, That we assure the members of St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church of our sincere sympathy in their loss of so exceptional a leader as the Rev. Sidney E. Sweet, and that we hope that in the course of time the work accomplished by the united efforts of Rector and people may be resumed under the leadership of a wise and devoted man of God."—Newark Churchman.

THE CONVENTION SEASON

Spokane

A dominant note of patriotism, with an appeal for self-sacrifice within the Church during these times of stress ran through the Convocation address given by Bishop Herman Page at All Saints, Cathedral, Spokane, Wash., on the morning of May 14th. A Public Missionary Service had been held the evening before and addresses from men in various parts of the field were listened to with rapt attention and gave the key note to all the Convocation inasmuch as they evidenced that the clergy were determined to spare no pains to do all in their power for the extension of the Church's usefulness in all parts of the community. One-sixth of the clergy of the district are now away from their work serving their country as chaplains and Y. M. C. A. secretaries and the men who are staying at home are endeavoring to fill up the vacant places thus caused with the Bishop as usual doing the lion's share.

A committee was appointed by Bishop Herman Page to arrange for a series of preaching missions for the ensuing year. A Diocesan Committee was appointed by the Bishop to attend to what is known as the Bishop's Penny Fund which goes towards the work in the district. It was originated in St. John's Church, Spokane, by Mrs. J. R. Neeley and quite a few dollars have found their way to a good work by means of pennies.

The usual boards and committees were elected and appointed. The Sunday School Conference which was held on Tuesday evening led by the Rev. H. I. Oberholtzer emphasized the desirability of having the Christian Nurture Series taught throughout the district.

The Girl's Friendly Society presented a program for the benefit of their Liberty Bond purchased a few week's ago. They report a successful year and are planning for greater things this year.

The secretary and the registrar of the Convocation is the Rev. H. H. Mitchell to whom all Journals should be sent as well as any communications for the district. The Women's Auxiliary held their annual meetings at St. Matthew's Church, Spokane, and had a very interesting and profitable series of sessions. Mrs. W. H. Farnham was duly elected as president for 1918.

Maine

The Ninety-ninth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Maine was held in St. John's Parish, Bangor, on May 15th and 16th, May 15th being the Convention day and May 16th being the day for the annual meeting of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. A pre-Convention event of some importance was the meeting of the Maine Episcopal Missionary Society, which was held in the parish house on the evening of May 14th. The Bishop presided. Splendid reports were received showing the growth of ten churches to be steady and vigorous. The treasurer's report showed something over $22,000.00 in receipts and over $26,000.00 in expenditures. But judging from the spirit of the meeting the deficit wil readily be dealt with. The election of officers for this Society resulted as follows: Rev. Canon Plant, Treasurer; Hon. Chas. B. Claide, Treasurer; Sidney B. Thaxter, Robert H. Gardiner, President Kenneth C. M. Sills and H. B. Van Nash, Trustees.

The opening service of the Convention was a celebration of the Holy Communion in St. John's Church on Wednesday at 7 a. m. The Bishop was celebrant and was assisted by the Rector, the Rev. J. Edward Hand. Morning Prayer was said at 9 a. m. and the Convention opened promptly at 9:30 for business. Interesting reports from the various Standing Committees were received. The Diocesan Committees of last year were selected with very few changes. Among other items of new business was a resolution authorizing the using of all Sunday School Advent offerings for the building of new churches, parish houses, of rectories within the diocese at the discretion of the Bishop and the Board of Missions.

The Bishop's address was excellent. Speaking of the war he said: "The great war continues, it is in the back ground of all our thought and speech. We all feel the present time to be one those critical epochs to which "God hath joined great issues good or bad for mankind." It is right that I should now say to this Convention, very simply, yet from the bottom of my heart, both as a citizen and as your Bishop that the wholehearted loyalty which our nation asks of us in the prosecution of this war, is in very truth loyalty to the cause of Christ. I frankly say to you that up to the time when our government declared the existence of a state of war and summoned to the mighty conflict all the resources of the country I hoped the way might still be open for our great Republic to play the role of mediator. But I have become convinced that this hope was an illusion arising from an imperfect understanding of the fact. I believe that those who would have held our country back longer—I among them—were mistaken. As I tried to follow my conscience then, so I would follow my conscience now. Our national conscience has been enlightened, I believe, by as full an illumination as God has ever vouchsafed to a great trust."

The Convention closed Wednesday evening with a public Missionary Meeting in the Church. The speakers and their subjects were as follows: Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, Lawrence, Mass., "The Church and Social Service." President Sills, of Bowdoin College, "Religious Education." Dr. W. C. Sturgis, New York, Educational Secy. Board of Missions, on "The Church's Missions." The addresses were of a high order. The Woman's Auxiliary Meeting the following day was full of interest. Miss Grace Lindley, General Secretary, made a stirring address.

Iowa

The 66th Annual Convention of the Diocese of Iowa was held at St. James' Church, Oskaloosa, the Rev. A. M. Lewis, Rector. The Convention opened with services on Sunday, May 12, the Rt. Rev. H. S. Longley being the celebrant at 8 a. m., and the Rev. Webster Hakes at 9 a. m.. The Rt. Rev. T. N. Morrison was the celebrant at 10:30. The Rev. W. Pence James read the Epistle and the Rev. Dr. E. H. Rudd read the Gospel. The Convention sermon was delivered by the Rev. Craig Stewart of Evanston, Ill., from the words, "We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us and gave Himself for us". It was an eloquent and masterly discourse, embodying timely moral and patriotic lessons for the nation, the Church and the individual, stimulating to a brighter hope and a better life.

The Daughters of the King met in the afternoon. They were addressed by Bishops Morrison, Longley and Beecher. Mrs. A. J. Busby, Waterloo, was elected president, and Miss Caroline Urban, Des Moines, secretary.

In the evening a patriotic meeting was held. A large congregation listened to excellent and appropriate addresses by the Hon. George F. Henry, the Rev. G. C. Stewart and the Rt. Rev. George A. Beecher.

Monday evening was again the time of national and Church enthusiasm. Bishop Longley presided. The Rev. George Long, chaplain at Camp Dodge, gave an interesting account of the work being done among the youthful recruits, and the Revs. E. N. Owen and W. E. Mann spoke on "Diocesan Missions".

The business session convened at 9 a. m. Monday, with the Bishop of the diocese presiding. The Rev. John S. Cole was re-elected secretary and the Rev. F. H. Pickworth was re-appointed his assistant.

The Bishop and Bishop Coadjutor read their addresses, which the local press described as "able documents, and of vital interest to the needs of the Church". They were interwoven with patriotic references to the present war crisis, and were impregnated with the idea that the existing conditions only emphasized a stronger need for a diligent and active Church, that would meet the issue and solve the life problems of today by a larger work in the cause of Christ in the world. It was resolved to have the addresses of both Bishops printed at once and distributed throughout the parishes and missions of the diocese.

The report of the treasurer of the Board of Diocesan Missions presented a satisfactory showing in meeting apportionments, nearly every parish and mission being on the honor roll. A committee of five laymen was appointed to send a letter to the delinquents, urging full payment of the apportionment to date.

A telegram was received from Mr. C. D. Jones, Independence, regretting that he was prevented from attending the Convention by reason of a serious accident. The Rev. Dr. Rudd was appointed to send a letter of sympathy. Mr. Jones has long been one of the most faithful and reliable laymen of the diocese, and the loss of his valued services at the Convention was distinctly felt.

A report of the splendid work being done at St. Katherine's School was presented by the chaplain, the Rev. T. J. Williams. The Bishop spoke of the success of St. Katherine's graduates in some of the Eastern colleges, such as Bryn Mawr. The memorial to the late Miss Marion Crandall was explained by the chaplain, and the Bishop urged that the memorial be made an accomplished fact. It is proposed to erect a teachers' cottage on the grounds of St. Katherine's, this being an expressed wish of Miss Crandall, as she saw the needs of the school before she left for her post of danger in Europe. Miss Crandall was teacher of French at the school. She was the first woman from Iowa to give her life a martyr for the nation.

Mr. Ira R. Tabor, treasurer of the diocese, felt impelled to decline re-election, and Mr. Charles R. Henderson, Davenport, was elected treasurer. The Convention thanked Mr. Tabor for his efficient and faithful services. The members of the Standing Committee were re-elected. The new rural deans appointed were: The Rev. W. C. Hengen, Ottumwa Des Moines Deanery; the Rev. R. J. Campbell, Cedar Rapids, Cedar Rapids Deanery; the Rev. Felix H. Pickworth, Mt. Pleasant, Muscatine Deanery; the Rev. W. E. Mann, Council Bluffs, Sioux City Deanery. The Rev. Thomas Horton, Waterloo, was appointed delegate to the Provincial Synod in the place of the Rev L. K. Smith.

The first Sunday after Trinity was approved as the day to make special presentation of the "one day's income" plan for missions.

The Rev. Dr. Dysart and the Rev. M. L. Tate were appointed a committee to consider the question of holding parochial missions.

A discussion took place regarding the inability to secure wine for use in the Holy Eucharist. Bishop Longley and the Hon. George F Henry were requested to communicate with other bodies and with the Attorney General, with a view to drafting a bill to be presented to the next State Legislature to remove the present inconvenience.

Bishop Longley was requested to communicate with the Bishops of the dioceses and missionary jurisdictions of the Middle West in regard to the condition and growth of the Church therein.

The Rev. Dr. Dysart and the Rev. W. C. Hengen were authorized to select two laymen, who should co-operate with them as a committee, to consider the re-establishing of the Iowa Churchman, and to devise some workable plan. The committee was given power to act.

A resolution regarding second-class mail matter was adopted, and the same ordered sent to the Iowa State Senators and Representatives.

The secretary of the Convention was authorized to have printed new financial and statistical blank reports, making such additions as he deemed necessary for obtaining more complete returns.

Davenport, Trinity Cathedral, was selected as the place of meeting for the next Convention.

The Woman's Auxiliary had a large representation, and much interest was manifested in the splendid work being done by the Auxiliary in the diocese. Mrs. H. S. Longley, Des Moines, was re-elected president. The other officers are: Secretary, Mrs. George Allingham, Cedar Rapids; treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Cunningham, Cedar Rapide; educational secretary, Miss Caroline M. Dysart, Dubuque; correspondent Church Periodical Club, Miss Florence Johnson, Newton; chairman Junior work, Miss Mabel Henderson, Cedar Rapids. Bishop Morrison and Bishop Longley gave addresses to the members of the Auxiliary.

Harrisburg

On Tuesday, May 14, at 4 p. m., the Annual Convention of the Diocese of Harrisburg met for the opening service at St. Paul's Church, Lock Haven. The Bishop, surrounded by his Archdeacons and preceded by the augmented choir and a long line of clergy, entered the church singing the Battle Hymn of the Republic. In his address the Bishop paid a glowing tribute to the personal bravery and public spirit of the Rev. Lewis Nichols, Rector of the parish, during the recent flood. He dwelt upon the importance of the Sacrament of Baptism and its bearing upon the burning question of Church unity. At the offertory a most striking spectacle was witnessed when the Bishop blessed the standards of our own and our allied countries. Each flag was presented by an eminent citizen of the country to which it belonged. Too much cannot be said of the impressiveness of the music on this occasion.

When the Convention was called to order, 48 clergy and 47 delegates from 20 parishes were found present. Gen. Clement was re-elected secretary and Mr. H. W. Hartman, treasurer. A committee was appointed to draw up a memorial to the next General Convention, asking for a more liberal administration of the Church Pension Fund. Nominations were then made for offices to be filled the next day. Dinner was served at the State Normal School at 4 o'clock.

Wednesday began with a confirmation service at 7:00 a. m., followed by the communion service. At 9:30 the Finance Committee presented its budget and suggestions for reducing the size of the Journal. Dr. G. G. Pond moved the following resolution, which was adopted by a rising vote:

"Resolved, That this Convention extends its warm appreciation and cordial thanks to the Rector, vestry and congregation of St. Paul's Church for the splendid entertainment of the clergy and delegates and the general public. Especial appreciation is due for the soul-stirring service, including the blessing of the flags, the beautiful music and the introduction of distinguished guests representing the allied nations; for the most enjoyable war dinner prepared by the ladies of the Church, and the inspiring program of stirring messages from our efficient toastmaster, our distinguished guests and our beloved Bishop."

Deaconess Newbold told of her work in Japan, representing this diocese.

After discussion of the possibility of making Yeates' School a diocesan institution, a committee of three distinguished members of the legal profession was asked to report to the next Convention how this could best be done.

Resolutions were adopted endorsing prohibition and the discontinuance of the German press and instruction.

A Diocesan War Commission was elected as follows: Rev. Messrs. Tyndell, Appleton, Torkington and Bishop, and Messrs. E. Munson, H. W. Hartman, F. K. Lukenbach and Joseph Eberle.

Marquette

The Convention of the Diocese was preceded by an evening gathering of the lay and clerical delegates at the Houghton Club, the Convention proper assembling at Trinity Church, Houghton, on Wednesday, May 15th.

This informal social meeting was for the discussion by and with Bishop Harris of the missionary problems of the diocese. Subsequently came into the discussion the problem of the Bishop's residence for which the laymen spoke at length. The discussion culminated in the appointment by the chairman, the Rev. Wm. Reed Cross, of five representative laymen to raise immediately $7,000 for the two objects. $4,000 of this is already subscribed.

The Convention opened with a choral celebration of the Holy Communion. The Bishop celebrating and giving his address as part of the service. He pleaded in a masterly manner, not for the Church because it is the Church—but for the Church as the inspiration of those things which democracy must contain if democracy is to be safe for the world. First things first and we will give and fight none the less but the more because this order shall have been maintained. He urged therefore the great necessity of all our churches being open in these times of peril and their being inspirational in all their services.

The Convention proceeded with business with alacrity—an increase of $2,500 a year was voted for Diocesan Missions. The whole standing committee was re-elected. New policies as to future work were discussed pro. and con. Delegates to the synod to be held in Gambier, O., were elected ie., the Rev. Messrs Alling, Ten Brock, Wilder and Ernst.

The Bishop appointed his various committees. The Convention adjourned at 6 p. m. to meet next year at St. Paul's, Marquette.

Very much was done, but it was the unsurpassed spirit of this Convention with which it did things that was most noted. There was a spiritual snap and tenacity vibrating through chair and house.

Too much cannot be said for the hospitality of the Houghton people and the able way in which the Rector of Trinity, the Rev. Wm. Reed Cross, admirably arranged the details of the Convention.

Washington

"One of the serious signs of the times is the growing disregard for the Lord's day in Washington," said Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, Bishop of Washington, in his annual address at the twenty-third Convention of the Diocese of Washington, held at the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, the Rev. C. S. Abbott, Vicar, on May 16-17.

Bishop Harding said the opening of the theatres Sunday nights since midwinter, coupled with the all-day-every-day motion picture theatres, and the increase of work on buildings, railroads, etc., are among the evidences of the necessity of a Sunday law for the District of Columbia.

"We do not want a Puritan Sunday," he continued, "but it is evident that for the sake of labor and for the quiet and order that should mark a day whose chief sanction is religious there should be some reasonable restrictions."

He said, as a member of a committee of the Lord's Day Alliance, the matter was presented to President Wilson, who was sympathetic in his attitude, and asked that a bill embodying the wishes of the committee be submitted to him for his consideration. The Bishop said that as far as he knows no action has as yet been taken.

In opening his address, Bishop Harding spoke of prominent Church workers who have died during the year, among whom were Rev. Dr. Geo. H. McGrew, a former missionary in India; Rev. John William Chesley, James B. Nourse, Harry Vaughn, architect of the Cathedral; Mrs. Archibald Douglas Russell, and Rt. Rev. Dr. Alfred Magill Randolph, Bishop of Southern Virginia.

In speaking of the new conditions in Washington, Bishop Harding said: "Our formerly serene and quiet Washington has become a city overrun with a vast influx of people, some on business with the government, but the large number workers for the government. New conditions confront us, which demand new methods and new agencies to meet them."

The Bishop called upon the rectors to organize in every Church an active representative committee, which would stimulate all activities on behalf of United States soldiers and sailors, but in particular advised means of bringing strangers into social fellowship with the people of the Church.

He told of the work of the Church War Commission, which has its central office in New York, of which the Bishop of Massachusetts is chairman. Speaking of the Church's moral work, he said: "It is of fundamental importance that every phase of it should be fully and generously maintained. Our parishes should be kept in vigorous condition. Never did we need more than today the Church's helps to spiritual growth, to noble living, to the maintenance of high ideals. To do our full duty in this regard, in addition to the other imperious claims on our resources, and the increased cost of everything essential to living, will demand rigid self-denial and unstinting sacrifices, but this is the call of God to us today."

The Rev. Dr. Randolph McKim delivered an address on "Effects of the War on Missions in England and in This Country, and What Ought to Be Its Effect". Paul Shimona of the Armenian Church told of Church conditions in his country.

Resolutions condemning Sunday baseball and all other forms of amusement were adopted at the afternoon session. The resolutions, which were presented by Dr. McKim, set forth "that the clergy be requested, in their sermons on May 30, the day of humiliation and prayer appointed by the President, or on some appropriate Sunday, to call attention to the deplorable fact that professional baseball has now been licensed in the District of Columbia, and that theatres, moving picture halls and other forms of amusement are also legalized, and to exhort the people to make humble confession to Almighty God of this violation of the sanctity of the Lord's day".

The resolutions set forth further "that the clergy and the people of the diocese are hereby urged to do all in their power to bring about appropriate legislation to secure the due observance of the Lord's day in the national capital".

Another resolution adopted was that Congress set aside Good Friday as a legal holiday in the District of Columbia. The Convention adopted another resolution petitioning Congress to pass the pending bill providing for the care of the feeble minded in the District.

Deputies elected to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. D. W. Curran, W. T. Snyder, G. C. F. Bratenhal and E. S. Dunlap; Messrs. H. L. Rust, S. E. Kramer, H. P. Blair and M. T. Endicott.

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 75 | HOBART, INDIANA, JUNE 8, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

REPLY OF THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS TO THE DR. NEWMAN SMYTH MEMORIAL

"The House of Bishops has given consideration to the Memorial presented to it, signed by the Rev. Dr. Newman Smyth and the Rev. Dr. Williston Walker on behalf of many others representing several Christian communities.

"While heartily appreciating the earnest plea for the subordination of any partisan or sectarian interests to the cause of a united witness to Christ and His rule, and humbly lamenting the comparative powerlessness at this great world crisis of the Christian Church by reason of its divisions, we cannot perceive in the course suggested by the petition any real remedy for existing evils.

"As in the civil sphere, so in the ecclesiastical, a patched-up peace, not resting on sure foundations, however immediately alluring, would be provocative of fresh misunderstandings and separations.

"Our differences lie deeper than questions of ordination , important as these are. Though often unperceived, the real difference between religious communions goes down, in many cases, to the recognition or not of a definite revelation of God's mind and will made by our Lord Jesus Christ, His incarnate Son, and of His Church as the minister of His truth and faith.

"We must remind the memoralists that, in the case of many of the religious communions represented by them, there is no central and authoritative body with which we can treat as to question of intercommunion. By the terms of this organization, each congregation is independent as to its doctrine, discipline and worship.

"To join in ordaining of commissions any army or navy chaplain, appointed by the State of accepted as a volunteer, from whatever Church he may come, would be to deny that any truth, including that of the Triune Being of God or of the Incarnation of the Eternal Son, is of real importance and necessity.

"We would urge by all means refraining from all unnecessery controversy and rivalry in caring for our soldiers and sailors, and the exercise of the greatest possible consideration and co-operation that does not violate convictions and principles, and prayerful preparation for the careful and deliberate consideration of questions concerning Faith and Order which now divide us. For such a world conference our commission, appointed several years ago by the General Convention, is earnestly working.

"The hasty adoption of ill-considered expedients in the face of an emergency we believe would endanger and retard, rather than further, the cause of reunion, and the realization of our Lord's intention and prayer that His disciples may in one Body bear witness to Him and to His word.

"The principles underlying the above reply apply to this particular case. No steps should be taken with regard to reunion in particular localities or between particular bodies which would hinder or endanger the wider object of the reunion of the whole body.

"The action suggested by the New Brunswick churches cannot be regarded as a merely local concern; it would imperil unity within our own communion.

"Apart from matters which clearly belong to the jurisdiction of the Bishop of the Diocese, and with regard to the two questions about which advice is asked, we are specially clear:

"(1) That confirmation as the apostolic completion of baptism cannot be surrendered or treated as an optional alternative to any other form of re-

[redacted]

"We feel convinced that however laudable the intentions of the promoters of this scheme, its execution would have the effect, however far from their design, of adding to rather than diminishing the divisions which we deplore.

The Rev. H. M. Chittenden, Archommends, in addition to the adoption of the above statement, the appointment of a commission of three Bishops; to be named by the chair, with whom the Bishop of New Jersey can consult in any action that may be called for."

The recommendation of the committee was adopted.

Death of an Eminent Educator and Priest

The Rev. James Dobbin, D. D., Rector Emeritus of Shattuck School, Faribault, Minn., died at his home in Los Angeles, Cal., on Saturday, May 18, at an advanced age. Dr. Dobbin was born at Salem, N. Y., and after graduating from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., accepted a position on the staff of teachers in the Faribault Episcopal Institute of the Bishop Seabury University, which had been opened the previous year. "He remained one year", says the history of the Diocese of Minnesota, "and subsequently returned to the diocese, entered the Church, became a candidate for Holy Orders and, having completed his studies, was ordered deacon in 1867 and priest in 1868 by Bishop Whipple, and appointed warden of Seabury Hall, including the oversight of the divinity students and the care of the boys in the Grammar School. Seabury Hall was burned in 1872, and the separation of the Divinity School from Shattuck followed. In 1907 Dr. Dobbin completed his fortieth year as Rector and head of Shattuck School. Every building now standing on the grounds (1908) has been erected under his personal supervision. To the oversight of this important work he has given his days and nights of constant thought. The summer vacations have been devoted to the erection of buildings or to plans for extending the usefulness of the school. In the early days he discharged the duties of Rector, headmaster, financial manager and instructor. Few educators in our Church schools, perhaps none, have served so many years, or filled successfully such varied positions."

He retired in 1914 and removed to California, where he made his home until the time of his death.

Farm Blessed at St. Alban's School

Of all the impressive services that take place during the school year at St. Alban's School, Knoxville, Ill., the blessing of the farm is one of the most beautiful.

The boys gather in the chapel on Rogation Monday at six o'clock. Forming in procession they march to the gardens at Tryon, chanting the proper psalms. At this first station a lesson is read and prayers said. From here the procession passes on to the orchards back of Bishop Chase Hall where a short service is said. The litany is now started as the boys cross the large campus. This year a stop was made at the flag staff while the Honor Roll of sixty names was read and proper prayers said. The next station where the celebration of the Holy Communion has been said each year is very beautiful, facing as it does the east and the whole farm. Several beautiful trees which are literally covered with blossoms at this time of the year form the temple canopy. After the service is said the Benedictite is chanted as the return to the chapel is made.

The procession this year was composed as follows: The wardens, the thurifer and boat boy, the eight servers, the celebrant and then the boys with members of the school family.

Aside from the great spiritual blessings that come each year to the school from this service, the farm has been blessed until it has become a great asset way beyond all expectations.

Waterman Hall to Close

War Conditions Compel the Temporary Closing of This Well-known Girls' School, Located in Sycamore, Ill.

A local paper says:

Sycamore has met a loss; a real loss. Even though as promised it may be the loss of a small time only, nevertheless it is a big loss to Sycamore. Waterman Hall is to close. Its close makes one of the great disasters of the war.

This war which has been working such destruction to human life, to cities and countries, has sent a message to Sycamore that will be felt in every Sycamore home; every part of our existence. Our social fabric will receive a shock; our stores will feel their losses; to see the beautiful lawns bereft of the young folks who for so many years have made them gay will put a tinge of sadness all about it.

The communication which made this announcement came Monday. It reads like this:

"On November 1, 1917, The Rev. B. F. Fleetwood, D. D., resigned the position of Rector of Waterman Hall, after twenty-nine years of active work. The Trustees having failed in their efforts to secure a successor, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That owing to war conditions, the operation of Waterman Hall after June 4, 1918, be suspended until further action in relation to the same is taken by the Board of Trustees."

Twenty-nine years is a long time—a lifetime—and during them all Dr. Fleetwood has presided over the destinies of Waterman Hall. He will remain in Sycamore in his own home.

Aged Minnesota Clergyman Dies

The Rev. Thomas George Crump, Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Canon Falls, Minn., familiarly known as "Parson Crump" and "the fighting parson", a veteran of the Civil war and the first drill master at Shattuck Military School, Faribault, died Friday night, May 24th, aged 82 years. He graduated from Seabury Divinity School in 1870 and was ordained deacon and priest by Bishop Whipple, and served as rector at Litchfield for ten years when he resigned and worked for a number of years in California, returning to Minnesota about ten years ago, and from that time until his death was in charge of the work at Canon Falls. He was well-known throughout the state of Minnesota and the funeral service, conducted by Bishop McElwain on Monday the 27th ult., was largely attended by the clergy and friends of the deceased.

Ordinations to the Priesthood

In St. Paul's Church, Cleveland, Ohio, Trinity Sunday, May 26, 1918, the Rt. Rev. William Andrew Leonard, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, advanced to the Holy Order of Priesthood the Rev. Messrs. Walter Freeman Whitman, Charles Thomas Hull and Nathaniel R. High Moor. The candidates were presented by the Ven. A. A. Abbott, Archdeacon of the diocese, the preacher being the Rev. Andrew Chapman, Rector of St. James' Church. These, with the Rev. Walter R. Breed, D. D., Rector of St. Paul's, united in the laying on of hands.

THE CONVENTION SEASON

Minnesota

The Annual Council of the Diocese of Minnesota, held at Christ Church, St. Paul, the Rev. Walter S. Howard, Rector, on Wednesday, May 22, was devoted exclusively to business, except the opening service, when the delegates and members of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary made their corporate communion and listened to Bishop McElwain's address. The Bishop struck a high spiritual note in a brief discussion of the war, and reviewed the activities of the work in the diocese the past year. The work of the Council was completed at an afternoon and evening session. The same officers were re-elected, and few changes were made in the personnel of the principal committees.

The Rev. Dr. Kramer, warden of Seabury Divinity School, called attention to the life and work of Bishop Whipple, and was granted the special privilege of raising on the floor of the Council the balance needed for the fund to place a portrait of the Bishop in the State Historical Society building. More than the needed sum was contributed, and the balance was given to the Red Cross War Fund.

Considerable time was spent in the consideration of a report presented by the Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck on the Church Pension Fund, and owing to possible legal and practical difficulties, it was decided not to merge the Diocesan Clergy and Infirm Clergy Fund with the Church Pension Fund.

A Publicity Commission was appointed, which will undertake to keep the important events occurring in the diocese before the public through the use of the secular press, and to correct misconceptions of the general public regarding the Church. A Diocesan Board of Religious Education was also created.

The Rev. A. H. Wurtele presented a very interesting report as chairman of the Committee on the State of the Church, in which it was shown the large part the clergy and laity of the diocese are making towards the moral and financial support of the government, taking the leadership in activities backing up the war.

The fiscal year was changed to close on December 30 each year, instead of April 30, as heretofore.

One of the most important steps taken by the Council was in the rearrangement of the Deaneries for more effective work along missionary lines outside the Twin Cities, and empowering the Bishop to appoint a general missionary for the Mankato Deanery.

The next Council will be held at Faribault.

The Semi-annual meeting of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at the same time as the Council. The attendance was the smallest in years, but the reports showed that the organization had made the best record in the way of contributions to missionary work in its history, and that branches in the parishes and missions of the diocese had been working faithfully during the year, notwithstanding the many demands made upon the women in Red Cross work.

The women, by a unanimous vote, passed a resolution to purchase and present an automobile to Bishop McElwain. It is expected that the necessary sum of money will be raised for this purpose at an early date, and that every woman in the diocese will be extended the privilege of making a contribution towards the fund.

Rhode Island

The 128th Annual Convention of the Diocese of Rhode Island convened at St. John's Church, Providence, Tuesday, May 21, at 10 o'clock. Holy Communion was celebrated, Bishop Perry officiating, the clerical members of the Standing Committee, the secretary of the Convention and the Rector of St. John's assisting.

At the business session following the communion office, a vote of greetings and sympathy was sent to the senior clergyman of the diocese, Dr. George L. Lock of St. Michael's, Bristol, detained at his home on account of sickness.

Routine business occupied the time of the Convention until the noon hour, when Bishop Perry delivered his annual address. He reviewed the hearty response of the Churches to the appeals of the War Work Commission and other similar agencies. He urged that the Churches continue to be a partner of the nation's enterprise and supply the needed spiritual power for winning the war. The War Commission had asked the Churches of Rhode Island for $15,000, but $22,000 was raised, and a summer resident had given $20,000 in addition—$42,000 in all. Five of the clergy are absent from their parishes, engaged in war work, and others are serving part time as voluntary chaplains in the cantonments.

In spite of war conditions, four new churches had been completed during the year, and another had finished clearing off a debt of seven years' standing. Three hundred and fifty persons were confirmed during the year.

The Bishop urged that the salaries of underpaid clergy be raised and that the undemocratic system of pew rentals be abolished.

The report of the Committee on Diocesan Missions showed valuable constructive work in needy rural communities by the diocesan deaconesses, and a growing work among the Italians, of which there are 60,000 in Rhode Island.

The report on General Missions showed that the diocese had exceeded its allotment by $1,800.

The Committee on Christian Edution urged hearty support of the General Board of Religious Education. Dr. Lester Bradner spoke as a representative of the Board. He emphasized the value of religious education by calling attention to the fact that those who were bearing the stress of the present crisis were educated in th Church schools.

The registrar was able to announce the purchase of a long desired fireproof safe in which valuable historical documents had already been deposited.

The diocesan president of the G. F. S. reported commendable activity, through various agencies, for war relief, and the formation of a Patriotic League of 700 members.

The Convention was addressed by Mr. Alfred Coats, representing the National Food Administration, urging the grave necessity for food conservation, and the hearty support of the government's program.

Two resolutions were passed for the relief of the underpaid clergy. One had reference to those in charge of mission stations, and authorized an increased apportionment to meet the need. The other dealt with the underpaid clergy of independent parishes. For their relief a committee of five was chosen to investigate their need and to be the custodians of a fund to assist such parishes as might desire assistance for this purpose.

A resolution was passed urging the state to ratify the national prohibitory amendment, and calling upon all Churchmen to work for the election of such legislators as would support the measure.

In conformity with the Bishop's address, a committee of five was chosen to investigate the custom of pew rentals, and if possible, to eliminate the same.

The Bishop closed the Convention with prayers and the benediction.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

St. Barnabas The Apostle

THE COLLECT

O Lord God Almighty, who didst endue thy holy Apostle Barnabas with singular gifts of the Holy Ghost; Leave us not, we beseech thee, destitute of thy manifold gifts, nor yet of grace to use them alway to thy honour and glory; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Singular gifts of the Holy Ghost!" The best is none too good for God. He can sanctify the commonplace. He does sanctify the commonplace and make it bear witness to His power and patience; but His work demands and needs the best brains and the best talents that can anywhere be found and consecrated. Once a Bishop of this Church came from his missionary jurisdiction in the foothills of the Rockies to the General Theological Seminary, and in effect he said: "Young men, who are the leaders of your classes, I challenge you by the claims and needs of a Western field; but I know there is not much use in doing this, because you will not like to leave the better paid and more comfortable parishes of the Church, which is well established in the East. Too many of your priests and Bishops have felt that any clerical flotsam and jetsam would do for the West, and the Church in the West is, for that reason, a weak and puny thing." And at a date preceding this utterance by many years, one Bishop was overheard to say to another Bishop concerning the election of a priest of most cultured and exquisitely refined mind to be a Missionary Bishop to the Indians: "You might as well pick out a razor to chop wood."

Not so did the early Church reason out the matter. It was recognized that all gifts which are given to any one are bestowed on him for the good of all. "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work wherewith I have called them." Barnabas had a background of good birth, was possessed of a fortune, had the gift of prophecy, gifts which made him a marked man wherever he went; and these gifts were consecrated to God, and were used by and blessed by Him for the good of the Church.

Fathers and mothers of gifted children should see that those children be taught to listen for the voice which cries in the temple. All the chivalry and idealism of their childish minds should be stirred to the rescuing of the world from the flesh and the devil. The joy and honor and responsibility of being a St. Barnabas should be set before our talented youngsters by parents, god-parents, pastors and teachers. "Nothing too good for God's service" should be in the mind of him who solicits workers for the Lord's vineyard. Singular gifts—not gifts which mark him as peculiar, but gifts which make one stand out above his fellows, which single him out as the "best one in the bunch" to publish glad tidings of redemption and release.

"Grace to use them alway to thine honor and glory." If clergymen of whatever order have but a sense of humility, one can be reasonably sure that their singular gifts have no virtue in them. The man who uses great gifts of mind, body or estate with no humble sense of accountability is not an asset to any community or congregation. The world is filled with the wrecks of lives, made so by the irresponsibility of gifted people, who had no rudder, no guide, no bit nor bridle, no vision of a life filled with efforts for the glary of any other being than themselves.

Missionary work in many cases has suffered from those who forgot to consecrate their talents to the service of the Lord. Missionary work will always suffer when talented men are reserved for the home base, and any old thing can be sent to work in the outfield of missionary endeavor. And might it not be said in passing that the man who does not study the challenge of a godless world, as he fits and prepares himself for his career, is in danger of losing the great chance to put himself among the immortals of the Church militant and expectant.

"Use them alway." That "alway" is a fascinating word. Many of us work hard while the excitement is on—the first flush of enthusiasm holds, but the test-time word is "always". In season and out of season, the faithful, persistent man does more good with his one talent, if he yield it to God's grace, than the careless, easy-going, easily moved, emotional five-talented man.

St. Barnabas is the patron New Testament saint of the nursing profession. The son of consolation was well chosen by these nurses, if for no other reason than this, that he did use his gifts always ao the honor and praise of God. Would there were more who followed in his train.

FOR THE EPISTLE

Tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch. Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord. Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul: and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch. And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa: which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.—Acts xi:22.

"They sent forth Barnabas." Would that every parish had it on its program to send forth at least one man or woman every year into the mission work of the Church. Why not resolve to educate the brightest man or woman in their senior years, provided they will dedicate their talents and gifts to the mission cause at home or abroad? Why not have recruiting stations in every parish, with officers from every department of parish work to pass on such representatives and properly approach them? They should be good, full of the Holy Ghost and of faith. Such there are in every well-established parish—but their feet have never been directed into the paths of missionary service. Once get them in the service of Mother Church, and you will see "much people added unto the Lord".

When Barnabas found Saul, he brought him to Antioch. And for a whole year those two assembled themselves with the Church and taught much people. Think how the great war is calling talented men and women to donate their talents for the period of the war to the service of their country. When this war is over, there will be men and women of gifts and treasure who should be led to associate themselves in like manner for the good of their less fortunate brethren in the less favored spots of creation, as they have been associating themselves in all sorts of benevolent enterprises for all sorts and conditions of men, no matter what their birth and breeding.

Antioch laughed at the followers of Jesus, and smilingly called them "Christians". That name now is attached to the best and highest ideals and ideas of civilized life. "We bear the name of Christian; His name and sign we bear." Let us remember that to bear the name and the sign of a Christian, and yet be indifferent to the true mission of a Christian, is to stigmatize ourselves as impudent, foolish, blaspheming followers of the good Christians at Antioch.

"Every man according to his ability." We never know our ability until we know the extent of the need which appeals to us. Appropriations and budgets are useless, unless the preceding publicity is well and thoroughly done. Those prophets knew the needs of their fellow sufferers, and their simple tales brought the required relief.

Let not the successors of the Apostles complain, unless they know that the needs of the brethren have not been adequately presented; for from the time of Barnabas until today people have always responded to an intelligently presented claim. People do not have to be charmed out of their money. Tell the story, and tell it truthfully, and people will determine to send relief. God is the giver of ability—"The ability that God giveth"—but God is not the author of spasm. He is the author of system. Tell people what is needed, and they will determine; they will plan, and the plan will produce sufficient results.

May it not be true that we have planned too much the work of Church extension in terms of money and buildings, instead of men? Show the Church your Barnabas and Saul; show the Church your Peter and Mark, and the Church members will then catch your vision, and will see that your Barnabas and Saul do not go forth empty handed. Go over your parish lists. Take account of the seniors from your parish in law, medicine, letters, art, science, etc., who are now in the great war, and put before them the challenge of the war which needs recruits, and ask them to hold themselves ready to respond to the call of that war when this war is done. You will be surprised to see how many will take you seriously and talk to you with enthusiasm. Take the promising, talented seniors in high schools and grammar schools, and tell them you will see them through their last year in collegiate or academic life, if they will hear the call as St. Barnabas heard it, and will answer it as wholeheartedly as he did. And again will you feel the thrill of young enthusiasm, as it solemnly dedicates itself to a holy task.

THE GOSPEL

This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.—St. John xv:12.

"That ye love one another." In the genuine Barnabas is shown "the best of the Holy Spirit's gifts, that which is the fruit of His own indwelling Presence: Love, which suffereth long and is kind, which envieth not, which seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh not account of evil, which beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things".

"What a friend we have in Jesus" goes the old song. "Ye are my friends", says Jesus, "if ye do whatsoever I command you". If you love God, you will abhor that which is evil. If you abhor the evil, you will want to do away with the evil. You will want to do it your way, or God's way. If you are wise and humble, you will try to do it God's way, and that involves obedience to God's commands, the last of which shows you love in action. "Go into all the world, teach, preach, baptize." It is for this purpose that Jesus calls you, chooses you. "You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit. The live Christian parish does not, cannot, sit still. It must move, it must progress. How is this done? By sending out each year its sons and daughters to "publish glad tidings", "fling out the life-line", "rescue the perishing", "seek and save the lost". It is a great work. It beats selling goods, making laws, enforcing laws, buying and getting gain—all of which are worth doing, but not necessarily requiring the best talents, the wisest minds, the largest hearts, the keenest zeal. A love for souls! for immortal souls! This is the life! This is adventure worth while. This is the crusade that cannot know defeat. This is the war whose ultimate victory is the only one that can spell perpetual peace! This is the only permanent work that a mortal man can undertake! The saving of souls! God help us by the life and works of St. Barnabas to stir up our talented boys and girls, our wide-eyed youths and maidens, our well-equipped and endowed men and women, who have no children, so to see the need and the challenge and the glory of the poor and helpless of this world in such a way as to dedicate themselves, their souls and bodies to the redemption of those poor and helpless ones. Thus will we prove our titles and our aspirations to be the friends of Jesus.

But if you are tied down by ill health or poor education, or the support of the aged or the infant, or the marital claim—do not feel entitled to claim exemption from the challenge of the Church. "As you are able", determine to do what your Friend wants, and see how easily love will find a way for you to accomplish that which should be the heart's desire of every man born into the Kingdom of God, namely, "the Christianizing of this world in this generation".

The first lesson is the story of the dedication of the completed wall and of the appointment of singers to restore the musical worship as in the days of King David. The point of general and of everlasting import is the offering of sacrifices with great joy, "so that the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off", although the fact that provision for the choir was followed by strict obedience to a law of God (13:1-3) should not be slighted.

The New Testament selection carries us forward and upward into the true temple of God, into the Holy of Holies, of which the High Priest has ascended, and we are urged to take our place in true worship: "Ye also as living stones are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ". Moreover, the narrowness and exclusiveness of Nehemiah's time, necessary, no doubt, under the circumstances, are in striking contrast with the extension of the blessings of Christ to the Gentiles. The royal priesthood (of the laity) is gathered from among all nations, and Christians are urged to win outsiders through their own good works, that they may glorify God.

The point of contact with the Eucharistic services would seem to be mainly found in the Gospel for the day, the parable of the great supper. The "elect race" of the second lesson corresponds with the invited guests of the parable, while the calling out of darkness into His marvelous light of those who in time past had been no people, but were now the people of God, corresponds with the "poor and the maimed and the halt and the blind" who are gathered to the feast.

The evening lessons were selected to bring out the protection of Providence and the "fear and love" of God's holy name, prayed for in the Collect and suggested in both Epistle and Gospel (I John 3:15-20; Luke 14:24). The Prophet Isaiah, dealing with the crisis in Judah's history, in which they faced a conspiracy of the upper kingdom of Israel and Damascus against themselves, and when they were tempted to resort to human contrivances for help, to an alliance with Assyria, for example, and consulted necromancers instead of God for guidance, urges on them the fear not of Syria, but of Jehovah: Fear not the policy of frightfulness inaugurated by Syria, but "Jehovah of Hosts; Him shall ye sanctify, and let Him be your fear and let Him be your dread". Put your trust in God and in the revealed Word of God. It is the same thought that our Lord deals with in the second lesson (which might well include verse 32, or even go on to 34). "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. Fear Him who, after He hath killed hath power to cast into hell. Yea, I say unto you, fear Him; but also love and trust Him". "Be not anxious. * * * Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom". "Not a sparrow is forgotten in the sight of God. Fear not: ye are of more value than many sparrows". (Note also Isaiah 8:14 and I Peter 2:8.) What a message for a world facing German frightfulness and efficiency!

The week day lessons continue the Old Testament law in the morning, paralleled by experiences of the New Testament Church, and in the evening, Proverbs develops the wisdom whose principle is the fear of the Lord, while the teachings of our Lord are full of warning and of comfort.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

"Men will not pray if they can get what they want without praying. Therefore, if men are to be taught to pray, there must be two different orders of experience and capacity—a less satisfying one which is open to men whether they pray or not, and a more satisfying one which is unlocked to them only through prayer. Otherwise they will not be driven to prayer; they will not be educated out of self-sufficiency into childlikeness; they will never know the joy of self surrender nor make proof of the matchless love of God. Here, then, we have found a worthy reason why there should be two orders, a lower order and a higher, a natural and a supernatural. And we see that God longs to act toward men upon the principles of the higher or supernatural order.

"Average human experience is determined by the character of average human activity; it is the response which God provides out of the infinitude of His resources to the demand which the average will and the average faith of man makes upon Him. But what if there were a human will which conceived an object of endeavor far nobler than the average? What if there were a faith which, faced by a difficult situation, was inspired to a demand upon God grander than the ordinary man ever dreams of? Must not God, by virtue of the very uniformity of His nature, respond to such an exceptional will and such an exceptional faith in a correspondingly exceptional manner? Would not this exceptional response constitute a new departure in human experience?"—A. G. Hogg, "Christ's Message of the Kingdom."

"Things which eye has not seen nor ear heard, and which have never entered the heart of man; all that God has in readiness for them that love him."—I Cor. 2:9 (Weymouth Translation.).

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

HYMN FOR HIGH PLACES

In darkened days of strife and fear,
  When far from home and hold,
I do essay my soul to cheer
  As did wise men of old;
When folk do go in doleful guise,
  And are for life afraid,
I to the hills will lift mine eyes,
  Frome whence doth come mine aid.

I shall my soul a temple make
  Where hills stand up on high;
Thither my sadness shall I take,
  And comfort there descry.

For every good and noble mount
  This message doth extend—
That evil men must render count
  And evil days must end.

For, sooth, it is a kingly sight
  To see God's mountain tall
That vanquisheth each lesser height,
  As great hearts vanquish small.
Stand up, stand up, ye holy hills,
  As saints and seraphs do,
That ye may bear these present ills,
  And lead men safely through.

Let high and low repair and go
  To where great hills endure;
Let strong and weak be thine to seek,
  Their comfort and their cure.
And for all hills in fair array,
  Now thanks and blessings give,
And, bearing healthful hearts away,
  Home go and stoutly live.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

(Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colo.)

What should be the attitude of our clergy toward Ministerial Associations?

The first thing to settle is that of your own poise. Are you able to hold the faith without betraying the Church? Are you able to stand snubs and narrow-minded demands without losing your temper? Have you that peculiar type of ecclesiastical mind which brooks no opposition to its authoritative assertion?

If you can't treat your Christian brethren with kindly forbearance, I wouldn't attempt a close association with them. The average sectarian minister, especially in small cities and towns, is utterly lacking in a kindly consideration for other people's views, has a narrow and petty system of ethics, and is a rather intolerable person generally. This is a sad thing to state, but the observation is based on a rather wide experience.

But his faults are those of ignorance and prejudice. Be sure you are not the same kind of a man. If you think much can be accomplished by such association, you will probably emerge from it a sadder but wiser man.

But that one should attempt such association is unquestionably a duty, and sometimes you will meet with pleasant surprises. There is but one thing to do, if you enter such a union, and that is to state your own position clearly and definitely at the out set, and give them clearly to understand that you cannot and will not be bound by any vote of the association, and that you are willing to unite with them on the basis of social intercourse and, so far as you can go, the public good.

The greatest good that you will get out of the intercourse is a great deal of self-discipline, which you need, and an opportunity to put into practice the 13th chapter of I Corinthians.

If you can set forth the law of Christian charity among your fellow ministers, you will be much more able to deal with the difficult members of your own congregation. Of one thing I am certain, and that is that th ir ways are not our ways.

What should be the chief service on Sunday? What constitutes a chief service? Is 11 a. m. sacrosanct? Is the chief service determined by the number of people who attend? Or is the chief service determined by the character of the service?

In the writer's judgment, the chief service of the day is that celebration of the Holy Communion at which the people both worship and receive, irrespective of the number of people who appreciate it. This should manifestly be in the early morning, as was the custom in the primitive Church.

A late celebration, or high mass, whichever it may be called, is a much later development of the Church's service, dating from the time of Constantine, when Sunday was made a legal holiday in the Roman empire, and a late celebration was a possibility. From the first it has been a lazy man's service, as it is called in certain parts of France; for either it is a time when the multitude receives without fasting, or else it is a service at which the person worships without receiving.

Personally, I believe that the 11 c'clock hour should be the time for reaching those who are not communicants, or a missionary service. Neither the communion service nor Morning Prayer are adapted for missionary purposes.

I know that there are some who feel that the Holy Communion is a missionary service, but, if so, why, in the primitive Church, were none but communicants allowed to remain throughout the mysteries?

Morning Prayer was a service formulated for a people who were all Churchmen. For such it is an admirable service of prayer and thanksgiving, but for those without it is a complicated and confusing service, which they make little or no attempt to follow.

If those who are already Christians are unwilling to get up and go to church early to receive the body and blood of Christ, they do not attach much value to their receiving. One wishes that the Church would boldly return to the primitive practice and put the emphasis for communicants upon the early service, and make the later service one of instruction and preaching and singing and praying. We do not know which is the most futile in its results, the parish with the late celebration, or the one with Morning Prayer. But we do know that the parish with a large attendance at the early celebration is the one which is strong and healthy in its life and action.

Do you approve of establishing union Churches in places too small for us to build and maintain a church?

Theoretically it sounds well, but practically it is well nigh impossible. In the first place, you will find that a large number of churches built as union churches are absorbed by the Methodists. They have a peculiar code of ethics in the matter of getting people to give money for a union church, which ends by having a Methodist title deed.

Western Bishops with whom I have conversed experienced this "doing of evil that good may come". But there is no principle of cohesion in a union church, no world-wide program, and nothing to preserve it from local selfishness and local feuds. The truth is that people in small places are fifty years behind their leaders in the matter of Church unity, and they have a maximum of prejudice and a minimum of Christian charity.

You can try it, but the road is a stormy one, and our Methodist friends have, as I say, a curious conscience in such matters.

Church Built in 1693 Consecrated Last Month in Virginia

Old Donation Episcopal Church, in Princess Anne county, Diocese of Southern Virginia—the ruins of the ancient edifice having been restored in the recent past—was consecrated May 15 with very impressive ceremonies by Rt. Rev. Beverly D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, with other clergy participating in the service, and it was an occasion of great interest.

It was the first time the old church had ever been consecrated, this ceremony having been omitted in the early days of the history of the parish.

Holy Communion was celebrated. Rev. William A. Brown of St. John's Church, Portsmouth; Rev. F. C. Steinmetz, S. T. D., of Christ Church, Norfolk, and Rev. D. W. Howard, D. D., of St. Luke's Church, Norfolk, had part in the service, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. C. Braxton Bryan, D. D., a former Rector of the parish of which Old Donation is a part, and now of Petersburg. The Rev. Dr. H. H. Covington of Old St. Peter's Church, Norfolk, was the master of ceremonies.

Old Donation was built in 1693-4, and was the successor of the old mother brick church built before 1640, a record of the court stating that the vestry of Lynnhaven Parish, presided over by Adam Thorowgood, the first senior warden, at a meeting in the Thorowgood house, in the early part of the year 1640, ordered the old church to be repaired, thus clearly showing that it had been erected some time before the year 1640.

Donation was abandoned as a place of worship in 1854, and totally destroyed by a forest fire in 1882, only a small portion of its walls remaining. Since 1882 services were held in the ruins each year by a faithful few, under the leadership of the senior warden, Thurmer Hoggard, who had held the office of senior warden for 60 years.

The present Rector of Old Donation, the Rev. Richard J. Alfriend, who was assigned to the parish in June, 1912, by the late Bishop A. M. Randolph, reorganized the congregation, and with the untiring efforts of Judge B. D. White, the present warden of Donation, succeeded in restoring the old church to its present beauty and usefulness.

The success of the Church is all the more remarkable by reason of the fact that there was only one member and one dollar in the treasury when the Rev. Mr. Alfriend assumed charge of the parish.

God dwells in the light of joy as well as of purity, and instead of becoming more like Him as we become more miserable, and as all the brightness and glory of life are extinguished, we become more like God as our blessedness becomes more complete.

Summer Conferences for Church Workers

From the Board of Missions comes the following detailed information regarding the various Conferences for Church workers this summer:

CHURCH CONFERENCES

Eagles' Mere, Pa., Province 3, June 17-21.
Gambier, Ohio, Province 5, June 19-20.
Cambridge, Mass., Province 1, June 21-July 6.
Geneva, N. Y., Province 2, July 1-12.
Racine, Wis., Province 5, July 17-25.
Sewanee, Tenn., Province 4, August 6-13.

BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

Northfield, Mass., August 14-21.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL CONFERENCES OF THE MISSIONARY EDUCATION MOVEMENT

Blue Ridge, N .C., June 25-July 4.
Silver Bay, N. Y., June 5-14.
Estes Park, Colo., July 12-21.
Asilomar, Cal., July 16-25.
Ocean Park, Maine, July 19-28.
Lake Geneva, Wis., July 26-Aug. 4.
Seabeck, Wash., July 30-Aug. 8.

The Church Conferences are, of course, intended primarily for Church people. They provide the best possible courses of instruction in the various phases of Church work, usually grouping the courses under the three departments of Religious Education, Social Service and the Mission of the Church, respectively. Excellent instructors, both clerical and lay, conduct the courses throughout the morning of each day of the Conferences. The afternoons are given over to recreation and excursions, for which the location of each Conference provides abundant opportunity.

The Interdenominational Conferences have a somewhat more specialized aim, in that the main emphasis is laid on the missionary enterprise. At these Conferences, therefore, one expects to get information and instruction of a more exclusively missionary character, to meet missionaries from foreign lands, and get their experiences at first hand, and to receive the stimulus of a large gathering of men and women representing wide varieties of religious experience. No Churchman need feel other than at home in these gatherings, since there is always a large proportion of Church people present, and the proportion grows year by year. The special attention of men should be called to the Brotherhood Conference at Northfield, in August. This is the Brotherhood's first attempt at holding a simmer Conference. A program of great interest has been prepared, and the occasion promises to be one of the most important of the whole summer for the laymen of the Church. Unless all signs fail, the week of August 14 will become memorable in the Church through this men's Conference. It would be abundantly worth while if vestries would seriously consider paying all the expenses incident to sending at least one member of their parish to the Conference within their own province. The cost, exclusive of railway fares, and the small registration fee ($3-$5), varies from about $10.0 to $17.50 per week. Further information regarding any of the Conferences can be procured from the Educational Department, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Archdeacon of Canterbury Cables of New Patriarch for Syrian Church

On May 17 I had the honor and great satisfaction of receiving the following cable:

"Have received the following telegram from Urmi: Paul, brother of Mar Shimun, consecrated Patriarch at Urumia, April 27. The Patriarch, the Metropolitan and the Bishops request your influence for the preservation of the nation. Relatives of Mar Shimun safe at present.

"ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY"

It has been a very great relief to us all in this country, and especially to the relief workers, to learn from this cable that the conditions must have become somewhat normal to allow such proceedings as the consecration of a Patriarch at Urumia, and we are very happy that one of the brothers of Mar Shimun, the late Patriarch, has been appointed to take his place, and that Surma and David, the sister and brother of Mar Shimun, are safe, of whom we had great anxiety.

The new Patriarch, Paul (Paulus) is one of the three remaining brothers, and has had a very liberal education under the Archbishop's Mission. He was not a Patriarch designate, but due to the fact that the Patriarch designate, the son of David, is a mere boy, Paul has been chosen by the Church and the nation to succeed to the Patriarchate. He is about 25 years old, and this family has had a remarkable record among our people, both as to their personal worth and their official and Church capacity.

FOUL PLAY ON THE LIFE OF THE LATE PATRIARCH

Previous to the above telegram, Mr. Langdon, the secretary of our committee, and myself had also the following communication from the Archbishop's secretary:

"The following letter has been received by the Archbishop of Canterbury from Mr. Secretary Balfour, Minister of Foreign Affairs:

"'Foreign Office,
"'Whitehall, S. W.
"'March 26, 1918.

"'Sir:

"'I am directed by Mr. Secretary Balfour to state for the information of the Archbishop of Canterbury that a telegram has been received from His Majesty's Consul at Tabriz stating that a report has been received to the effect that Mar Shimun, the Syriac Patriarch from Turkey, was proceeding a short time back with a battalion of Syrian troops and two guns from Urumia to Saimas, when he was met by Simku, who invited him to his house, and there shot him dead. Persian horsemen are said to have been sent from Khoi and Marand to attack the Syrians.'

"I am, Sir, your most obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) "MAURICE de BUNSEN,
"The Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury."

The ordinary observer cannot realize the great position of danger into which Mar Shimun's people have been left by the withdrawal of the Russians. When the latter withdrew, they left two guns and some ammunition for the Assyrians to defend themselves. We have also known that the Assyrians were not allowed to go to the Caucasus.

Simku is a notorious Kurdish chief. He was under the employ of the Russians, who tried their best to win him to their side, and he seemed to behave well for a time. When the Russians retreated, he played the game of siding now with the Turks, now with the Russians. In this case, he seemed to have protested friendship for the Christians, while at heart he was still a wolf (and the word Kurd means wolf in their own language).

(Signed) PAUL SHIMMON.

Death Removes the Warden of DeLancey Divinity School

The Rev. Thomas Benjamin Berry, S. T. D., for the past nine years warden of the DeLancey Divinity School, Geneva, N. Y., died at his home in that city on May 12, after six weeks' illness.

Dr. Berry was born Nov. 18, 1846, in Dublin, Ireland, of English parentage. He was educated at King's College, Dublin. He received his theological training at the Cambridge and Virginia Seminaries. Honorary degrees of M. A. and S. T. D. were conferred upon him by Hobart College. He came to this country in 1866, and was engaged for some time as a teacher in the Institution for the Deaf, New York City. He was ordained deacon in 1871 and priest in 1873 by Bishop Doane, beginning his work in the ministry as a curate at St. Paul's Church, Albany, N. Y. In addition to his duties as a parish priest, he held services in the sign language for the deaf throughout the state. He was known as one of the finest sign makers in the country. He was later engaged in missionary work in Wisconsin and South Dakota, and while in Sioux Falls founded what is now the State School for the Deaf. In 1888 he was called to the Church of the Good Shepherd (Ingersoll Memorial), Buffalo, N. Y., as its first Rector, where he faithfully served for nearly twenty-one years.

While in Buffalo, Dr. Berry was for several years chaplain of the 74th Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., by appointment of Governor Roosevelt.

His wife, one son, F. T. Berry of Philadelphia, two daughters, Amelia E. Berry of New York and Mary Richards Berry, survive him.

The funeral was held from the Church of the Good Shepherd, Buffalo, May 14, at 3 o'clock. Interment was made in the family plot at Manilus, N. Y.

Before the removal of the body to Buffalo, opportunity was given all who knew Dr. Berry to pay their last tribute of respect to him at his late residence on Park Place, and the Rev. Charles Morton Sills, D. D., of Trinity Church conducted a private service.

Notes From the "Log" of a Provincial Secretary

Early in the evening of a lovely August day I left the train at Williams Bay, a little Wisconsin village on the shores of Lake Geneva. The station seemed busier than usual. Many visitors had arrived, and trunks and other baggage were being trundled across the platform to the steamer which was to take us to our destination on the other side of the lake.

It was a delightful ride. The surface of the water caught here and there the reflection of the setting sun. Sitting upon the deck, I looked forward to a week of rest and relaxation.

But my musings were not for long. They were interrupted by the conversation that was going on around me. With the camaraderie of a crowd bound for the same port and on much the same errand, we were soon talking generally and interestedly. The one sitting on my right was a Baptist missionary from Africa. On my left was a secretary of the Presbyterian Board. Another one of the group was a Methodist, who had landed two weeks before in San Francisco on furlough from his field in China, and I—well, I was a department secretary—they were departments then—of the Board of Missions.

In a little while the steamer glided up to the dock, and we disembarked and straggled up the bank to where the Y. M. C. A. camp was located, and where the Missionary Conference was to be held, under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

After establishing myself in my quarters, a cool and roomy tent, I started forth to see if I could catch a glimpse of a "familiar collar". The search at first promised to be fruitless. In fact, it was not until I was sitting at the supper table that I discovered that two more of "my kind" were in attendance upon the Conference.

All this happened about eight years ago. Last August I again took the train to Williams Bay and steamed across the lake to the now familiar camping grounds. This time, however, I found myself not nearly as "lonely" as on the occasion of my first visit, for I discovered nearly seventy Church people who had gathered for a week of quiet, earnest and devotional study of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.

The whole atmosphere of the Conference seemed changed. Its outlook was broader, its sympathy deeper and more understanding.

We had a wonderful week. The subjects offered for study in the several classes were varied and interesting. We did not lose ourselves. The devotional spirit of the Prayer Book was often recognized by those who gathered for the open air Vesper Services. Each of the two Sunday mornings of the Conference saw us assembled in an upper room for the Holy Communion. On the second Saturday evening my tent mate, a young Presbyterian missionary just back from India, said to me: "I hear that your people are to have the Lord's Supper tomorrow morning. May I come?" What would you have answered him?

Last year we had to depend for the things needful for these services on the generosity of nearby clergymen, but we have changed all that. On the second Sunday we made an offering for the purchase of our own communion service, and it will be with us for use this coming summer.

Those of us who were present at this Conference did not undertake to form an Episcopal organization, but we did come to a fairly clear understanding of the best way of giving value to our relationship to the Conference and to each other.

Some of us believe that hearty and sympathetic co-operation on our part may make these Conferences a real influence in the life and work of the Church. We want people to know of the opportunities which they offer, in the hope that the number of Church people thus foregathering on the shores of Lake Geneva may increase from year to year.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

"Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears—and I will return them the day after tomorrow (Monday)" is a unique request made by the Rev. George A. Ray, M. A., Rector of St. Mary's Church, St. Paul, Minn., through the medium of his parish paper, under date of Saturday, May 25.

Christ Church, Toms River, N. J., the Rev. Charles H. Holmead, Rector, has received a handsome solid silver chalice and paten, in memory of Mr. Caleb Falkenburg, a former vestryman, and a processional cross, in memory of Mrs. Laura Schureman, both presented by Mrs. Falkenburg.

The program for the sixty-sixth annual commencement of Racine College, Racine, Wis., June 9-12, includes a series of services and addresses, the placing of the class stone, the class play, alumni dinner and a reception. The Rt. Rev. John Hazen White, D. D., Bishop of Michigan City, is to preach the baccalaureate sermon on the 9th inst., and Chief Justice John B. Winslow of Wisconsin will give the commencement address on the 12th inst.

Fifty new subscribers to the envelope system and a $300 increase for current expenses resulted from an every-member canvass in St. Thomas' Parish, Bethel, Conn. The new Vicar, the Rev. J. Wesley Twelves, and the members of the congregation feel very much encouraged over the result, especially as it follows close upon an Easter offering of $600, which enabled the treasurer to pay off several old debts.

In another column will be found a report of the Student Workers' Conference, which met at Howe School, Howe, Ind., May 21-24. The Rev. Paul Roberts of Brookings, S. D., states that it was a meeting of very great significance to the whole Church, as it dealt with one of its largest problems. "Too much credit," says Mr. Roberts, "cannot be given the General Board of Religious Education for making the Conference possible. If the Church realized clearly the work the Board is doing, it would have little difficulty in raising its $45,000 war fund."

The Men's Club of St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill., held their annual meeting at the parish house on May 29, when a war dinner (83c) was served. The speaker of the evening was Capt. Bevington of the Princess Pat Regiment, who has been in charge of the tank on exhibition in Chicago. Special guests of the evening were Bishop Griswold and Dean Bell. One of the features of the evening was the presentation of a new Silk Service Flag for use in the church, made by Mrs. Arthur Bowen, and bearing 112 stars. This flag was presented by St. Margaret's Guild, Mrs. A. P. Bowen director, and was blessed by Bishop Griswold. The Rector presided at the meeting and acted as toastmaster at the dinner.

St. John's Church, Aberdeen, Miss., will attempt to entertain the cadets and soldiers at Payne Field U. S. aviation school, which is situated about twelve miles from that little city, and on good roads leading into town. There are about 1,200 men in camp at present, with more coming. The Church War Commission has given the parish $500 to furnish a soldiers' club room, using their Guild Hall, the Anne Acker memorial, for the purpose. There is a committee of women of the Church who will be behind the movement. There will be reading matter and writing material on hand all the time. The rooms will be neatly furnished and made comfortable for the boys. Every Saturday and Sunday afternoon will be feature days, when the women of the parish will entertain the boys.

A requiem celebration of the Holy Communion was said in the Church of the Intercession, Stevens Point, Wis., by the Rector, the Rev. E. Croft Gear, at 9 a. m. on Memorial Day, which was attended by the First Separate Co. and the local organizations of the G. A. R., the W. R. C. and the D. A. R. A Service Flag was dedicated at this service, containing 24 stars of men in active war service, among them Major General McGlachlin and three lieutenants. The baccalaureate for the city high school was held in the Church of the Intercession on Sunday, June 2—the third time in three years. The Woman's Auxiliary will take no vacation during the summer, and have arranged an interesting program for the ensuing year, including the following topics: "Motive and Aims of Missions", "Evangelizing the World", "Our Obligation", "The Extent of the Task", "The Missionary at Work", "Obstacles to Be Overcome", "Success of the Early Church", "Co-operation of the Home Church".

On the evening of Whitsunday Bishop Johnson visited Trinity Parish, Trinidad, Colo, and confirmed seven persons, ranging in age from 12 to 70 years. This is the second class presented by the Rev. D. R. Ottmann since last August. In the morning the Rector baptized four adults. The parish is in excellent financial shape also, due largely to a most successful every-member canvass and the raising of a special sinking fund, which enables the treasurer to meet all bills promptly on the first of the month. The Bishop commended priest and people on the progress and character of the work being accomplished.

The Newark Diocesan Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held its annual meeting at Trinity Cathedral, Newark, N. J., May 25. Some 50 clergy and laymen were present, including Bishop Lines and Bishop Stearly. Walter Kidde presided, and addresses were made by Secretary Graves of Camp Merritt, Arthur E. Barlow, T. W. Dennison and Mr. Stonham. Mr. Barlow was elected president of the Diocesan Assembly and H. S. Wiltshire secretary. Mr. Wiltshire was also elected by the Assembly as an additional member of the National Council, representing the Diocese of Newark. Large numbers of the members of the chapters were reported as in the war service, both in this country and overseas. In the evening the annual service was held in the Cathedral, with intercessions and patriotic hymns. The address was made by George H. Randall, executive secretary of the Brotherhood. In the afternoon the Juniors of the diocese held their meeting.

The spring Convocation of the First District, Diocese of Central New York, was held in St. John's Church, Cape Vincent, the Rev. J. deLancey Scovil, Rector, May 14-15. Mr. Scovil read a paper on "Some Historical Interpretations of the War". Archdeacon Hegeman preached a sermon on Diocesan Missions, the Rev. C. Lambert reported exceptional awakening at Pierpont Manor, Zion Church, and the Rev. E. Tuthill spoke on Democracy at the Woman's Auxiliary service.

In a recent address before the University Y. M. C. A. at Rochester, N. Y., the Rev. Dr. Wm. A. R. Goodwin, Rector of St. Paul's Church, that city, said in part: "The thing which goes to make up the glory and beauty of womanhood and manhood lies in the background. We are to be trained for responsiveness. God puts us here to be interpreters of the thing which lies behind. Two things are needed to make this revelation—the spirit and presence of God and the power of responsiveness. Know your creeds and Church doctrines as you know your botanies, but give yourselves to the realities of life. The darkness of modern civilization is due not to a lack of culture or intellectual developments, but to a lack of responsiveness. Give yourselves to the power of the invisible. Use your minds, develop them to the full. That is my philosophy of life—responsiveness. Let us so make ourselves that the eternal can use us. We are asked to be co-workers with God, and the personality which makes itself fit to transmit and interpret the Invisible Power comes to be like Him."

Personal Mention

Bishop Weller delivered the Memorial Day address at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin.

The Rev. Merton W. Ross, Rector of St. Alban's Church, Superior, Wisconsin, who has been confined to his bed the past month, as a result of a serious case of blood poisoning, is slowly improving, and it is expected will be able to resume his work at an early date.

The Rev. Robert F. Lau, D. D., should be addressed at 20 East 33rd St., Bayonne, N. J.

Mr. S. S. Ross of Cincinnati, Ohio, who has about reached the century mark in age, has attended, with few exceptions, every Convention of his diocese for the past seventy years.

The Rev. R. S. Stringfellow has resigned as Rector of Emmanuel Church, Kellogg, Idaho, and will become the Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Salmon City, Idaho, this month.

The Rev. George Herbert Thomas, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Chicago, has been selected to serve as a Red Cross chaplain in France. His selection came in response to the call for one hundred ministers to perform this service. Bishop Lawrence, chairman of the War Commission, requested Mr. Thomas to represent the Church. He succeeded Bishop Page of Spokane as Rector of St. Paul's Church.

The Rev. W. L. Kinsolving has accepted an invitation of St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., to take charge of the parish during the absence of the Rector, the Rev. Dr. W. J. L. Clark, who is engaged in war service in France. Mr. Kinsolving has recently returned from France, where he served as a Y. M. C. A. secretary at Paris. He is a son of the late Bishop Kinsolving of Virginia, and is a brother of the Bishops of Texas and Brazil.

The Rev. Dr. H. G. England, formerly of Washington, D. C., has accepted the Rectorship and assumed charge of Calvary Church, Wilmington, Del. Dr. England has had degrees conferred upon him by Columbia and George Washington Universities, was ordained a priest by Bishop Paret in 1898 at the Church of the Ascension, Baltimore, and for three years served as the Bishop's private chaplain. Under his administration a new church was erected at Seaford, Del., and a new church and parish hall at Berlin, Md.. He was elected an alternate delegate to the General Convention from Delaware and Easton, while serving as a presbyter in those dioceses. He was Vicar of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Rock Creek Parish, Washington, D. C., for over ten years prior to his going to Wilmington.

West Texas

The Diocese of West Texas held its 14th Annual Council in Grace Church, Cuero, May 21, 22 and 23. The opening service on Tuesday evening took the form of a special intercession for the nation and allies. The new Rector, the Rev. A. J. Gaynor Banks, in a happy manner extended the hospitality not only of the parish, but of the community at large. Bishop Capers responded with the assurance that the Council looked forward to days of spiritual and social enjoyment. The Rev. Dr. W. Bertrand Stevens, Rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, clearly and forcibly set forth the two-fold responsibility resting upon the Church by reason of the war situation, namely, sending our soldiers forth with the blessing of the Church in its widest application, and welcoming them upon their return with an understanding heart. Because of his experience with soldier work and with the Red Cross work in the base hospital, Dr. Stevens speaks with telling knowledge.

The Council was organized at the Wednesday morning session. Nine new clergymen were introduced to the Council. In all, ten clergymen have been added to the staff during the year, five of the clergy have been given for service with the colors and four have been transferred. The clergy list now numbers thirty-six, a record for the diocese. The reports from the parishes and missions gave cause for encouragement and thanksgiving. Progress was the watchword, and the general feeling was that the time had come for a decided advance all along the line. Most of the places are manned, and the unanimous call is to "go forward".

The diocese faces a peculiar responsibility because of the large soldier population, probably larger than in any other diocese. There are two voluntary chaplains serving in the diocese, the Rev. Dwight Cameron and the Rev. Francis K. Little. These two chaplains look after the work in the aviation camps. The diocesan chaplain, the Rev. Frank A. Rhea, visits the other camps in and near San Antonio.

A happy feature of the Council was the reception given Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Otto Buchel. The members of Grace Church had made splendid arrangements for the entertainment of the delegates, and in this they were aided by the entire community. The officers of the Mohawk Club placed their delightful club rooms at the disposal of the Council.

The meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary were held in the Knights of Pythias' hall. A special meeting of the Council was used for the formation of a diocesan organization of the Girls' Friendly Society.

The Council closed with a mass meeting Thursday evening. The speakers were Mr. Walter Macpherson, field secretary for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew war work, the Ven. Lee W. Heaton, Archdeacon of the diocese, and the Rev. Mr. Richards, Rector of Christ Church, San Antonio, and Bishop Johnston.

The Rev. U. B. Bowden was re-elected secretary. He appointed the Ven. Lee W. Heaton as his assistant.

The Council accepted the invitation of St. Mark's, San Antonio, as the place of the next annual session. The Feast of SS. Philip and James was appointed as the time. This will mark the fifth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Capers, and a special committee was appointed to make provision for a fitting commemoration of the occasion.

By resolution, provision was made for a "Council of Church Women", to be held at the same time as the Annual Council.

The Committee on Constitution and Canons reported adversely on a proposed amendment to the Canons, by which women would be admitted as delegates to the Council. The report of the committee was sustained by one vote. A like report from the committee in regard to the election of women vestry was also sustained.

A resolution expressing the gratefulness of the diocese to the American Church Building Fund, and asking for an annual collection from the parishen on vestry was also sustained.

EDITORIAL

The Program of Reconstruction.

After the war, what? Certainly not a perpetuation of that political, economic and industrial system which Prussia has at once carried to its highest development, and in doing so has demonstrated its vicious results.

It s all right to say that Prussia is the victim of imperialism or militarism. These are instruments merely for making effective an ideal—an ideal, too, which the whole world has envied and copied. Berlin and Vienna have been the Mecca of our students and our socialistic reformers, because these places stood for the principles which higher education and social reform have loved. "Where the heart is, there the treasure is also", and that treasure has been in Mittel Europe.

What is this treasure that all the world has run after? Is it not an efficient materialism, which believes that the world is a chemical laboratory, that man, first of all, is an anatomical specimen, and next a cog in economic machinery, and finally food for cannon?

Is it not the subordination of moral responsibility and spiritual ends to the demand of the privileged lords of opportunity?

To put it more concretely, is it not the rejection of God, the belittling of the moral law, the rejection of the Gospel of Jesus Christ?

And have we not been guilty of the same evils that we now so bitterly assail?

In short, th[redacted]us that which life is ever teaching

[redacted], and not aristocratic, but that may be like the virtue of th[redacted]s man who keeps up the outward garb of Christian piety in or[redacted]at he may more thoroughly enjoy the secret iniquities of his private life. A Christian life that longs for the flesh-pots of Egypt is far more unlovely than the blackest of Egyptians.

I am inclined to think that the rich in this country have exceeded the courts of Europe in their snobbishness and vulgar display of wealth, just as a man's valet puts on more airs than his master, when that master is away, and he reigns supreme in the regions of his envy. The very fact that we are compelled to be democratic makes us long to pose as aristocrats.

Surely there have never been any fools in the royal establishments of kingdoms as ridiculous as the new rich of the U. S. A., who have gone abroad to the amazement of Europe and the despair of their fellow-countrymen.

But unfortunately we see where it all leads. In France it led to the block, and the puerilities of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette were expiated at a dreadful price. God never overlooks, Christ never neglected to scorn, the folly which exalts itself at the price of other men's lives. Europe is blood-soaked today because of the folly of royal blood and military caste and religious hierarchies and academic philosophies which have trusted in themselves that they were right and have despised the common people.

So that it would seem that the first article in our post-bellum program should be that we are no longer to admit nor to permit that the public shall be damned in the interest of a few reckless, silly fools, who look so harmless and, because they sit in the seats of the mighty, really are such an awful calamity. This war ought to teach us for all time that collars and cuffs, caps and gowns, stripes and uniforms, crests and hyphens, copes and mitres, bonds and coupons, do not give any privilege to lord it over God's heritage and to treat contemptuously the man who lacks these ornaments.

Democracy will be safe enough if we can eliminate the tinselled fool who poisons himself by closing the pores which God has given us to exude honest sweat, whose self-esteem seeks the chief seats in the world's synagogue, and whose colossal folly corrupts his flatterers, stirs up the envy of the vicious and ruins the brotherhood of man fully as much as the elder brother in the badly named parable of the prodigal son—a parable spoken to the Pharisees because they venomously assaulted our Lord for consorting with publicans and sinners.

If we can only compel the self-constituted leaders of society to behave themselves, there will be no anarchists worth worrying about.

Let those who love the chief seats in the synagogues of this world learn the lesson of this war, that they may retain them only because such seats are opportunities for service, and not poses for purposes of adulatory and undemocratic deference. Then they will receive the love that Lincoln and Washington earned, because they served in modest desire to do good, and not to be fawned upon. They represented two distinct types of humanity—the rail-splitter, who had too much common sense to allow his elevation to make him dizzy, and the formal gentleman, who was too much of a gentleman to advertise his own importance.

And the second article in our post-bellum program should deal with those envious Trotskys and self-seeking Lenines, who, having done nothing themselves to create institutions, are so embittered by their own incompetencies and misfortunes that they are envious of all success and the destroyers of the public peace.

If the folly of czars ruins the simplicity of life and destroys the moral fibre of the just by advancing puppets and sycophants to high office, so the malicious envy of demagogues appeals to the worst sentiments of the race, despises everybody, trusts nobody, and does nothing except destroy the labors of honest men and the peace of mind of all.

We have had the breed of I. W. W.'s, Marxian socialists, labor agitators, walking delegates, political shysters, anarchial editors, who dip their tongues in hate and make lies their refuge.

If the body politic is to be purged by the fire of this war, let the hands and feet of society be clean, as well as the heads.

If the working classes are going to put through a program that will win favor after the war, they must have something more constructive to offer than the sins of the rich, and something more appealing and heroic than their own wages and hours of labor.

The sight of men holding back ships in this war over questions of wage and time, while their brothers and sons are working overtime in the trenches at thirty dollars a month, indicates a lack of love for others and an exaggerated esteem for themselves that will get them nowhere, but will cause them to be despised of men. Neither will this country further tolerate that hyphenated Americanism which imperils the lives of our boys at the front because of the wrongs of Ireland. There is a fitness in the time in which to redress one's own wrongs, and it is no time to present a bill when the family is conducting funeral rites over the bodies of their beloved.

There is a very large proportion of our nation which has no reverence for God, no sympathy for man, no sense of honor for their own conduct. They may be the victims of society, and they may be the product of their own lusts, but they are a menace to any solidarity of national life, for they yell about the wrongs of man while they plunder and kill for the satisfaction of their own evil natures. They cannot be suppressed except by the slow and patient method of abating a nuisance in your neighbor's yard.

And the third article in a post-bellum program would seem to be the rallying of the great middle class of the nation to a constructive program for carrying out the ambitious program set for us by Thomas Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence.

The terms Republican and Democrat have long since outlived their usefulness, and have become mere shibboleths by which professional politicians strive to corral voters. The Civil War is now ancient history, and the mysteries of the tariff are known only to the elect.

The Labor Party of England have put forth a program for reconstruction of society after the war, which is as interesting to read as it is revolutionary to carry out. It has the misfortune to be the program of the labor party, a serious bar to its fair and non-partisan execution. A labor program is just as one-sided as a capitalistic program, and engenders bad feeling instead of constructive action, because it is in the interest of one extreme wing of the situation. Neither capital nor labor ought to be able to put on a program as such, for neither has shown that consideration for the public good in the past as to beget much confidence as to their disinterestedness in the future. But the program of the labor party in England is much fairer and less self-centered than any labor program which I have seen in this country.

It starts out by showing that the individualistic program of competitive business, "with its profiteering and wage slavery, with its glorification of the unhampered struggle for the means of life, and its hypocritical pretense of the survival of the fittest, with the monstrous inequality of circumstances, moral and spiritual, resulting therefrom, may, we hope, have received its death blow in this war.

With it must go the political system and ideas in which it naturally found expression." This is, of course, a very ambitious program, and strikes at the very foundations not only of politics, but of society.

This program starts from the premise that the political and social world, built up by business men, is just as great a failure as was the imperial world built up by the Caesars, or the feudal world built up by the semi-barbarous lords of the middle ages. Business has had its opportunity to make a world and has made a very bad one; for Prussia is the very epi- tome of good business as it has been conducted and of its result upon society.

What Prussia has been to Ger- many in this regard, the Standard Oil and similar corporations have been to this country in their methods, aims and results, viz: an efficient organization, which gives us cheap oil, extracted by a non-moral method. The oil certainly is cheaper in cash, but one has paid out considerable American principles along with the cash.

And men have justified the brutal methods employed to gain efficiency on the ground that the efficiency to produce oil cheaply has been attained, and we need the oil in large quantities. A very plausible argument, but also a very Prussian one.

In short, business has been conducted on the basis that business is a non-moral occupation, in which the ten commandments have no majestic force, and with which the Sermon on the Mount has no connection whatever.

In fact, I can almost hear one of our successful profiteers in business say that "Christ would have made a poor business man". Well, so would he have made a very poor Prussian.

I can do no more than give the four cardinal principles of the program of the labor party in England, but it embraces four radical and most drastic propositions, which it would be well for us to be studying in anticipation of the coming deluge. We had better be getting some sort of ark in readiness, for the rain is sure to fall after the war.

The four pillars of this temple of human rights are these, translated from English into American.

1. That any member of the Commonwealth who is willing to labor ,shall receive not less than a certain fixed amount by way of wage, which shall maintain said worker in the necessities and decencies of life that no worker may fall below the possibility of living decently if he wants to do so.

And moreover that if the government in releasing millions of soldiers shall see to their immediate and decent employment without disturbing the equilibrium of production and consumption.

2. The second article in the program is made necessary by the first, and that is government control of practically all the essential elements of production, transportation, generating power, light, heat, etc., as well as the control of health insurance, life insurance and the traffic in intoxicants and drugs. In a similar manner it is proposed to give over the municipal control of all the present utilities operating under purchase in our cities, as ewll as the retailing of coal, milk and similar necessities.

3. The third pillar of the temple is a revolution in national taxation, whereby fortunes rather than individuals shall support the government, especially in liquidating the enormous debts brought on by the war. In this connection the program significantly says: "In this matter the labor party claims the support of four-fifths of the whole nation, for the interests of the clerk, the teacher, the doctor, the minister, the small shop-keeper, and the mass of all those living on small incomes are identical with those of the artisan." In short, this call of party can rally numbers to its support because of the large taxes that will otherwise fall upon the individual after the war.

4. The fourth article of this program is that the surplus wealth of England shall be used for the common good, rather than for the luxurious living of a few favored rich.

In short, the labor party of England proposes to take whatever income may be left the capitalist for the scientific, recreative and artistic good of the whole people, instead of allowing him to multiply unnecessary luxuries for himself and family.

There is the program. Think about it, for we are going to face the same kind of a problem when our boys come home from the war, and the lid of war necessity is raised from the pot that is now silently boiling underneath. It may be that the post-bellum problem is greater even than the great war.

It behooves us all to think.

Perhaps those who have been making much money during the war will have the chance to serve in the trenches of home reconstruction, at much sacrifice to themselves.

Democracy Made Safe in Christ's Commonwealth

3. The ideal of Democracy must, however, fail unless God's social grace, specially provided, shall overcome man's individual selfishness.

Democracy, then, in its ideal meaning, turns out to be simply fellowship or brotherhood shared in by all the members of a State. So far we are on solid enough ground. Democracy is in our blood. It is the law of human nature. It is the necessary ideal of every human State, however far some may have wondered from it. And some States, in ancient as in modern times, have deliberately adopted the ideal of democracy, at least as the working model of their policies. All the familiar methods of what we call popular government; universal, or almost universal, suffrage; popular elections; limited terms of office; representative legislatures: all these things are meant to furnish moulds in which our fluid desires and hopes of brotherhood may be stiffened and hardened into permanent habits of democratic life. They all indicate a democratic mind in the citizens. They are signs of a democratic purpose.

But does it work? Has the ideal been realized? Has it ever been in the way of being realized. The answer must be "No." The ideal of democracy has never so far even approached fulfillment, at least on any important or permanent scale. All human political history could most truly be written under the heading: "Experiments in Fellowship." Its tragedies and terrors; its falling dynasties and despotisms; its catalogue of disproved philosophies; its outworn cultures; all its ins and outs and ups and downs, seem but a passing pageant of man's impotent experiments in brotherhood. Yet we never give up the hope of it. The root of the desire lies to deep for us to tear it from our nature. It has an eternal power of revival. It is the magnetic pole of the soul's orbit. The human spirit swings ceaselessly in its direction, pointing to it as to its true goal. Broken and defeated time and time again; betrayed and victimized; fooled by false promises; seduced by evil minds; hasty, blind and dull; still humanity comes back and back again to the main track of its desire and takes once more its search for fellowship. Evidently it is not competent to work it out in its own strength and virtue. But just as evidently it is incapable of quieting its need of it or letting go its hope of it.

Now here we have a situation which, in all ages, has turned the hearts of men to the hope and expectation of a Divine redemption. I need not explain the meaning of redemption to you. You know how all through religious history the conscience of mankind has confessed its spiritual failure. It has seen the good and done the evil. It has been torn between the high and the low. It has been faced by the guilty, hopeless fact that it has thrown away its highest good and now finds itself paralyzed and helpless to work out its own salvation. Plato for the Greeks, and Livy for the Latins, do but echo the tragic cry of Saul, the Jew of Tarsus: "Wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

What I would urge upon you is, not that you should merely renew your sense of the meaning and necessity of Divine redemption, but that you should realize that the redemption men need is social. It is democracy which needs to be redeemed. It is this human nature, all of one piece, in which all of us share, by which we are all bound up in one, and through which we have one breath, one life, one destiny: it is this human nature that needs redemption, and until it is redeemed, I am not redeemed, for I belong to it, I am part of it, I am a member. It is as a member of a family, and of a State; it is as a true democrat, that I must be saved if I am saved at all.

How to Hold the Interest of Children

By Mrs. Frank Hale Touret

I suppose one of the greatest problems to many teachers is this: how to hold the interest of her children. Nearly all of the trouble that any of us may have in the management of our classes hinges on this subject. The troublesome child, the inattentive child, the rude child, the mischief-maker in your class, if you take the trouble to study, you will find in almost every case lacks interest.

Now there are some things that naturally interest growing children. Interests change with growth and development—and just here is the very strongest argument for a graded system—if not of material, certainly of presentation. We should also consider the grading of the material essential. You and I know what interests us. Some things we do not even consider in the light of being worth our attention. Why? Generally because they are utterly unrelated to our lives—to anything we know or have experienced. Exactly this same thing happens with the interest of children. Often and often something is presented to them that is so unrelated to anything they have ever known or dreamed of—so lacking in the qualities that are vital to them, that they simply do not attend to that subject at all.

I shall never forget the little girl with whom I visited a Sunday school one day. The teacher was telling the story of the three children in the fiery furnace. She used, as an explanation of the story, the fact that these children were put into a furnace—"a great big iron kettle, children". She dwelt at length on the heat of this furnace, on the plight of the children; but no vividness of description held my little friend. Wishing to find out the cause of her utter indifference, on the way home I tried to discuss the story. "Well," said my child, "I thought it was going to be a very interesting story; but when that teacher told us about that tea kettle, I knew that never could be true. I don't like that story at all!"

The child who thought that the hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul, let let me to Thy bosom fly", referred to a species of fly (and I knew that child), had a wondrous curiosity about the sort of fly it was—but nothing more than that. The little boy who wanted to go to heaven, perhaps feared hell, but more than all dreaded the Miz, that fearsome place created after God had "created the heavens and the earth, the sea and (oh, awful statement!) all that in the Miz", and then rested— had a sort of curiosity and interest in the horror of it, but no interest that would make him long further to investigate or pursue the subject.

No, if we are really to interest children of any age, we must first know what is in their minds—what there is to which this new subject is to be presented, and then let the new be added to the old and increase it. And a general and safe rule for any one hoping to attract the interest and attention of any child is this: Begin with the native interests of your child and offer him objects that have immediate connection with these. Next, step by step, connect with these first objects and experiences the later objects and ideals you wish to instil. Associate the new with the old. Aud just here is the great difference between a teacher who has prepared the lesson and one who has not: the unprepared one has to teach with one eye firmly fixed on her manual—to depend on those questions in the lesson leaflets—and so gives no atmosphere of life and freshness to the lesson.

Think of your own religious experience—your faith—your religious living. What is it built on? What does it mean to you? Is it rich and growing, or dead and lifeless? Answer these questions to yourself, and if you can answer them satisfactorily to yourself, try to give your children the same background, so far as you can, that has made your Church and your religious life a precious thing to you—a vital part of your daily living. If you have not had this experience, pray that you may begin at once to deepen your spiritual living, and then, with gratitude for your new and better way, give the best in you to your children who come to you for their foundations. If you are teaching the life of Christ, make it glow with life—make the character of the Christ fall amidst the problems of the present day—the daily lives of your children. You can do it, if it is real and alive to you—if you take the trouble to so study that Life yourself, so that you will have to give each year more and more of the wonder and beauty of it. If your subject for the year be the Church Catechism—and what a wonderful subject!—make that, too, alive and vital to the children. From the beginning to the end, every word may be made so alive, so connected with the daily living of the children, that all the rest of their lives they will remember and live by the great principles there laid down. "To do my duty in that state of life into which it hath pleased God to call me"—could there be more vital and more moving and needed words than these just here and now. "To hurt nobody by word or deed; to be true and just in all my dealings"—we might go on and on picking out passages that come to the mind, learned long, long ago, and discussed in a real and living way.

Perhaps the course is the Fatherhood of God, and with the little children and the wealth of material just in the world around—the wonder of so living that the Fatherhood of God is the inspiration of your own life, and so will remain in the minds of the children you touch—what a great and marvelous vision must come to each of us who is privileged to lead the littlest feet!

So we might go on and on; but always with the same conclusion: We are the responsible persons. We must know the children we are teaching, and then, knowing their minds as intimately as ever we can know the mind of a child, we can reverently and prayerfully present a well prepared subject, always trying to take what is already present in the children's minds, and adding to it something real and enduring. For, when we look back over the years we must find that, after all, we are what we are; we know what we know just by this slow accretion, this slow adding the new to the old, at first taking in only what our senses presented to us—what we could see and taste and handle,—and then, little by little, as our minds educated by our senses opened, adding ideas and ideals that have made us what we are.

We are weaving "the magic robe that hangs in the wardrobe of every man, and which shall shield him from all storms and trials". And in our weaving we shall succeed in making a robe that shall endure, only as we are workmen, willing to work faithfully and patiently and intelligently at our tasks.

The Church Must Combat Materialism

The Rector, wardens and vestry of St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, N. Y., a body devoted to the cause of Christianity, and holding in special reverence and affection the branch of Christ's Church to which we belong, passed the following memorial:

We believe that this is a time for organized Christianity, as well as for the individual Christian to practice self-examination and see in what way the Church has failed in the task which Christ gave it to do. That organized Christianity has fully succeeded in this task can hardly be asserted, in view of what is going on in the world today.

This is a time for extraordinary self-sacrifice and brotherly sympathy. If the Protestant Episcopal Church is to prove itself a blessing to those who suffer during this terrible period, and a force in the reconstruction which will follow the war, it must do its utmost on behalf of the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and keep itself unspotted from the world. It must combat materialism in every form. It must also, in our judgment, hold out, to an extent hitherto unknown, the hand of fellowship to other Christian bodies, in the hope that organized Christianity itself may be reconstructed, and a second Pentecost may bring nearer together all the body of Christ's followers on earth.

The members of this vestry believe that as individual Christians are expected to practice a patriotic economy in this emergency, so also the Churches themselves should do, with regard to parish expenditures not essential to the preservation of Church property, and its growth in usefulness and fitness for purposes of worship and the proper maintenance of service and Church activities. Along with this there should be increased generosity in the field of missions and in the relief of suffering. No opportunity should be lost to emphasize the unity of purpose with all other bodies of Christians.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

I earnestly hope that all patrons of the WITNESS will read over the list of Summer Conferences for Church Workers which I am putting in this column, and then try to attend one, or in some way, help some one else to. Both men and women these days seem to be fired with extraordinary zeal for work, (the various needs and activities of the war has brought us all to this state of mind.) The Church needs that zeal as well and must have it. There is much to be done and we must be loyal and do it in as trained and intelligent a way as we do the other work.

These Summer Conferences are scattered over the country in such a way as to give many people a chance to attend at very little expense and without going very far from home. It's a pleasant way to spend a vacation, (and in as far as is possible, every person who works should have one). They afford a stimulus to one's mind and mentality, also a great chance to get together, learn new methods and discuss problems and difficulties.

The list shows that some of our very best leaders are to conduct these meetings and some of our most beautiful places chosen to hold them in.

Information regarding these may be obtained by writing to Educational Secretary, Board of Missions, 281 Fourth Ave., New York City.

SUMMER CONFERENCE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

Northfield, Aug. 14-21. Dr. Sturgis

It is said that a few days before his marriage in 1914, at the age of 7 years, James W. Gordon Bennett owner of the New York Herald, who died in Paris a few days ago, was baptized in the Episcopal Church.

From Bethlehem a youthful British soldier writes to his friend in London:

"I am on guard at present and it is a great honor, I can tell you, that I am guarding the birthplace and manger of our Lord. It is a wonderful place, and I never thought when I used to read about it that one day I should stand and guard it.

"The birthplace is marked by a 14-pointed silver star, presented by the French government. The stable is hung with lamps from all different countries, and they look beautiful, and are always lighted. The manger itself is cut in natural rock, but marble has been put in to keep it in a state of preservation."

An editorial in the May Spirit of Missions says:

"Bishop Tucker calls attention to the fact that the time will soon come for establishing the first independent diocese of the Nippon Sei Ko Kwai. In line with this thought of the growing strength of the Church in the Far East is the recent election of the first native Chinese Bishop. The Ven. T. S. Sing has been elected Assistant Bishop of Chekiang, one of the Chinese dioceses supported by the English Church.

"In 1912 the English, Canadian and American dioceses in China became the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui (the Holy Catholic Church in China), and from that time it has held regular synods. One of the first acts of the new Church was to organize a Chinese Board of Missions, much after the pattern of our own. The universal testimony of those who have had experience in one or another mission field is that the ultimate evangelization of any country must depend upon the ministry of the native people themselves. It will be a long time before the Church in China is self-supporting, but the fact that through their own Board of Missions, and now through one of their own number as Bishop, the Chinese are doing what they can do to reach out still further, is but an indication of the great harvest which one day will be won to our Lord in China by the Chinese. May God hasten the day!"

Aerial mail service in the United States has become an accomplished fact within the past few days, though not yet perfected. With the exception of Sunday, daily trips will be made from each end of the New York-Washington air mail route, each machine only flying one-half the lap of the journey, the mail being transferred to different planes at Philadelphia. It took just three hours and twenty minutes to make the trip. Miss Katherine Stinson, carried government mail from Chicago to New York, a distance of 783 miles in ten hours. A new 24 cent stamp is to be issued for aviation mail. It will carry the picture of an airplane, which will be blue, while the border will be red.

reticence of the Bible is sub-e, as sublime as that of the starry sky. Enoch speaks not in his translation moment. Elijah speaks not in his chariot of fire. Lazarus speaks not in his hour of resurrection. The child of Jairus speaks not on her bed of revival. The youth of Nain speaks not from his arrested bier. Moses alone does speak from beyond the grave; but it is not of the things beyond; it is of the things "to be accomplished at Jerusalem".—G. Matheson.

If we hold on to sin for a day, we may have to hold on to it forever.

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS IN THE MIDDLE WEST

A Paper Read at the Church Congress Held in Cincinnati, Ohio, in October, 1917.

IV

The problem of our Church is likewise to make the whole body of people familiar with all the essentials Christianity, irrespective of any further effort to enrol them in our ecclesiastical household. We must capture their thinking and captivate their imagination.

The unchurched must first be persuaded to think of Christianity and the Church as an essential aid to their living. The unchurched must be taught to know the fundamental idea of God as living and loving, of Christ as saving and healing, of the Church as the place of joy and service.

How are we to do this? To put the matter in a modern form, it is a matter of publicity. The attention of the masses must be gained. Their thinking must be enriched by the simplest of fundamental truths.

The teaching functions of the Church must be strengthened. But that teaching must not be confined to those already within our influence, but must be directed toward the people who now distrust the churches. Magazines of wide circulation, newspapers and other popular mediums must be the means, if it can be done, of bringing to the minds of the unchurched the best thought of the Church, expressed in dignified but simple language. People's difficulties must be met by a courageous admission of the presence of those difficulties and their obstructive influence in preventing people from Church affiliation. A "mission" to the readers of the Nation is as much needed as a "mission" to the hearers of the Nation. Who will arise and write the "best seller" that will be defensive of the faith, and will be as much read as novels that are critical of the faith?

Some say that it is impossible. The world has not found it so. The world has often achieved it. If our aim is really the conversation of the world we must achieve it, too. It will require wisdom, wealth, and work, but it may be done.

I have written to one hundred ministers asking of their work, and from their replies I have gleaned that a shadow of despair has fallen upon them. They feel that present methods are inadequate to meet present conditions. Have we no untried methods? I venture to suggest that we have. Fantastic as it may seem to you, I wish to suggest but one of many which might seem to avoid the usual obstacles confronting us when we try to approach the masses. You may consider me a dreamer or an enthusiast, yet I shall venture to speak. May I say, in extenuation of my boldness, that for twenty years I have served one parish, situated most favorably for growth in the midst of a large population of the best American type, and with every possible advantage of equipment. For, during twenty years, I have tried every method which seemed possible to propel the Church. Yet I feel that the result is not commemsurate with the effort because I have been compelled to strive for one thing, to mould men and women to a system. It has been a case of individual education in almost every instance. The masses, the unchurched, seem not to have been touched at all.

So I do not speak from insufficient experience when I venture to commend to your attention an experiment in attempting to charge the minds of the unchurched with some sound religious content that within the course of time might impregnate the popular consciousness.

Let us face the facts. Countless people do not like to go inside the church buildings. It requires some courage, for they know not what they may face, what unexpected approach, what appeal for money, what wearisome discourse. A crowd will stand for an hour listening to a street speaker while in the same block a comfortable church will be empty. People see farther than the distance at which they can hear. I should like to see erected in the heart of one of our large towns an open chancel, without a nave; a spacious, well-lighted, flag-bedecked and joyous chancel, perhaps like a Greek portico, opening unto a large area on a street corner. I should like to see simple services conducted in that chancel with bright music and familiar hymns. Every passerby could see the picture, could stop. if he wished, could stay as long as he wished, and no longer, could stand as near as he wished and no nearer. To each one who stopped an order of service should be given, and also a manual with the principles of religion clearly and plainly set forth. There should be a short robust sermon. The joy, the helpfulness and the desire and the faith of the Church should be presented. I know the objections. Weather and cost. But the objections should be met and overcome. Such an effort would free the Church from the suspicion of being a small group of highly trained specialists, dressed in their best clothes, gathered in a more or less privately controlled structure, indulging in complex worship.

This suggestion may seem to you the vagary of an enthusiast. My next possible suggestion I dare not even speak of. It would seem madness. But the need is so great that any method deserves a passing appraisal.

The Church in the Middle West has the hardest task that ever confronted a band of Christian men. But by the help of God a way will be found, a method discovered, by which she will become equal to the task.

When we are tempted to despair, when the substitutes for religion of Christ, in whatever form they may present themselves, would tempt us to compromise with them, even as Sanballat and Tobiah, and Geshem of old, tempted Nehemiah to leave the work of building the walls of Jerusalem and to meet them in the plain, so we, each one of us, bishop, priest, layman, must answer as Nehemiah answered, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down".

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

We Must Save Food or They Will Starve

The following composition was written by a little Chippewa girl aged 10 years, who is in the third grade of St. Elizabeth's School, Wakpala, S. D.:

CONSERVING FOOD

The government is sending posters telling us to save food. He is doing all that he can for us to save food. Mr. Hoover is appointed as a president to save food. Mr. Hoover appoints helpers, and the helpers appoint some other people, so is it known all over the world. The posters are put up to show that we must save food for the soldiers. To every school the posters may be sent.

The food is for the children who are starving. Some of the posters teil us that we must eat less wheat, meat, fats and sugar. One of the posters tells us to send more to Europe. Another tells us that there is starvation in Belgium. One of the posters tells us to make our eggs count, and it tells us to give our eggs a chance to reach market in prime condition, and not to let our eggs get sun-struck. Another tells us to feed a fighter, and not to waste anything, but to eat what we need, that the fighter and his family may have enough.

We can save food if we eat less, and not to waste nothing, to eat what we need. Not piling our plates up too much. We can save food by not eating so much candy, or not putting so much sugar in our coffee, tea or cocoa. We can use lard instead of butter, but we must use less lard than we ever had. We can eat apples instead of candy. We can eat corn bread instead of wheat bread. We must save food, or they will starve.

The Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew

Immediately after the fateful Good Friday when this nation decided to enter the great war, the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew made plans for a program of Christian work among the men in the service, which resulted in the formation of the Army and Navy Department, under its own Council, and with full authority to guide and direct the Brotherhood work for the men in the service.

The Brotherhood alone, among all the hundreds that began work for our soldiers and sailors, announced at the beginning that it had no material help to give, but rather was going to demand that our boys should give, not money, but service to God among their comrades.

The movement was not popular at first, but its very merit won. In no better way can the work be typified than by the remark of the young infantryman, who, when asked what the group he belonged to was, replied: "Why, that's the Help the Other Fellow Society!"

Our young men have gone to the front, and are now quartered in camp and hospital, exposed to hardship and temptations. The Church has not deserted them. Her Sacraments are being brought to them, and every effort made to strengthen their spiritual lives.

The Brotherhood has enlisted in this service laymen of the Church. So rapidly has the work spread afield, there is an ever growing demand for more and more consecrated workers. These laymen, Brotherhood secretaries they are called, work in close co-operation with the Bishops, chaplains and clergy, and with the religious workers of the Y. M. C. A. and other organizations.

Secretaries have been placed in most of the large camps throughout the country, and soon the work is to be extended overseas. The Brotherhood secretaries usually live in camp, mess with the men, and in many camps are attached to the Y. M. C. A. camp staff, but are free to occupy all of their time in personal religious work.

The basis of this work is to get earnest Christian men in the ranks to help their fellows to live clean lives. The Brotherhood secretary expends his energies in lining up men capable of carrying on this work. These men are called "keymen", and it is around them little groups of personal workers are formed.

A word about these groups, as expressed in "Trench and Camp", the soldiers' paper, sums up the situation well:

"It's a happy idea to have these groups of men getting together and standing for the clean things in life. The democracy of the group is paramount. They make their own rules, elect their own officers and meet once a week, when possible. One thing they have in common is their motto of 'Prayer and Service' and 'Get your brother'. Fundamentally, they stand pat for things religious in a strictly interdenominational way. In some of the barracks a chapter from the Bible is read by one of the group before they turn in. The sick committee keeps track of the boys sent to the base hospital, and sees that some one visits them."

That briefly gives an idea of the group work. The men touched by the Brotherhood secretaries and the groups are urged to go to Church—to make their communion at least once a month, if possible. Naturally, the Brotherhood secretaries' first and most intimate points of contact are with Churchmen and Brotherhood men particularly, but they zealously serve the chaplain, of whatever faith he may be, and also co-operate heartily in all Y. M. C. A. activities.

The Brotherhood's camp secretary is also the active helper to all our clergy in touch with his camp, and assists in arranging for celebrations of the Holy Communion and bringing men to attend this and other services. In short, he so conducts himself as to be a "faithful servant" of our Lord and Saviour, co-operating with all who are like minded to do His will.

The organization of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood is composed of the central office, of which Frederick S. Titsworth is executive secretary, and the field workers, of which B. F. Finney is chief secretary and G. Frank Shelby personnel secretary. Mr. Shelby will be chief secretary for the work in France.

It is the function of the central office to keep a corrected up-to-date card catalogue of all enlisted Churchmen, giving their parish, home and as much information as may be obtainable concerning their families. On May 15 more than 30,000 names were in this catalogue, and the work of adding names goes on daily. There is urgent need for every parish to send in names for this great Honor Roll of the Church, giving full military address and other information concerning members of the parish in the service. This Honor Roll is used to the fullest extent. The names of these men are sent to the Brotherhood secretaries, chaplains and clergy in their respective camps, and through the medium of this Honor Roll they are brought a personal touch from the Church. The central office fosters correspondence with these men, and ministers to their wants by co-operating with all agencies available for the purpose, such as the distribution of literature, comforts and the like. The central office also endeavors to keep a correct census of all Church chaplains of the army, navy and Red Cross, and all clergy attached and unattached to the ranks.

The central office also acts as a bureau of information to Brotherhood secretaries, to aid them in their work, and to collect and disseminate their experiences and make them available to all concerned, and also promotes and co-ordinates work of neighboring parishes with the work within the camps.

THE CHALLENGE TO LAYMEN

In the imperative and urgent call for men, the individual parish can do much if it will but sound its own laymen and every worthy candidate for service as Brotherhood secretaries in the camps here and overseas. Too much stress cannot be laid on this. Each day that passes sees the growth in the ranks of those serving the colors, and each day that passes must see men stepping forward to help the men who are standing ready to make the supreme sacrifice.

Those who hear the call of this challenge should communicate with THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST ANDREW, DEPARTMENT OF ARMY AND NAVY WORK, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

B. F. FINNEY,
Chief Secretary.

F. S. TITSWORTH,
Executive Secretary.

Southern Ohio

The 44th Annual Convention of the Diocese of Southern Ohio was held in Grace Parish, Avondale, Cincinnati, May 14 to 16. The Convention opened with a patriotic service of inspiration Tuesday evening, at which the Rev. Arthur Carlisle of Windsor, Canada, spoke on the "Challenge to the Church of the War", and the Rev. Dr. Sherman of Akron, Ohio, spoke on the "Relation of the War to Religious Education".

Mr. Carlisle spoke from the standpoint of one who has been in the front line trenches, and the "challenge", as he conceived it, is to be worthy of the men who are dying that we may live. Dr. Sherman spoke from the standpoint of the scholar, and pointed the lesson which the Church has learned from the war, and appealed to the Church to profit by that lesson.

The second day of the Convention opened with the addresses of the Bishops. Bishop Vincent pointed to the steady growth and harmonious spirit of the diocese. He announced that the completed returns now place this diocese fourth on the list of dioceses in the matter of contributions to the Pension Fund reserve, over $343,000 having been given by this diocese. He made a plea for better salaries for the clergy, who are greatly in need of increases of stipends on account of the high cost of living. He also stressed the need of a larger Bishop's Fund Endowment, in order that the assessments upon the parishes and missions might be reduced, and he urged laymen to remember the Bishop's Endowment Fund in their wills.

Bishop Reese spoke of the lead in patriotic work being taken by the diocese. He said that 726 men of this diocese are now in their country's service, and each receives a letter periodically from their Bishops to keep them in touch with their diocesan Church at home. He appealed to the Convention to take some action looking to the final payment on the indebtedness of the $15,000 church building, parish house and rectory which has been built during the past winter by this diocese in the heart of Camp Sherman, for work among the men in that camp, and heartily commended the work which has been done there by the volunteer chaplain who is in charge and his St. Andrew Brotherhood assistant.

Important legislation was effected upon the two remaining days of the Convention, chief of which was the adoption of diocesan canons in harmony with the new General Convention canons on better business methods in the Church. The annual parish meetings were changed to the first Monday in February and the annual diocesan meeting to the last Tuesday in April.

A canon was adopted which creates a House of Churchwomen, the same to have its session at the time of the Annual Convention, and the deliberations and legislation of which shall be of an advisory nature in relation to the Annual Convention.

Among resolutions of importance passed were the following: (1) The pledge to raise $11,000 for diocesan missions. (2) The transfer of the Cathedral House, now free of debt from the Cathedral trustees to the trustees of the diocese. (3) The addition to the budget of an appropriation to enable the Diocesan Board of Religious Education to secure a diocesan Sunday school secretary. (4) The transfer of the property of several missions from the Bishop to the trustees of the diocese.

Bishop Reese presented to the Convention his new service of commemoration and thanksgiving, to be used in any parishes where men have died in the service, as a memorial service to them. The Convention adopted the same for general use in the diocese on Memorial Day. The service is something unique in the liturgy of the Church, and worthy of wide adoption.

Will Send Letters to Miss Garibaldi

The Girls' Friendly Society, which has 940 branches in various parts of the United States, with a membership of 50,000 women and girls, announce that the 50,000 members sent personal messages to the granddaughter of the great Italian patriot, Garibaldi.

Miss Rosa Garibaldi is a member of the Girls' Friendly Society of Rome. Since her country's entry into the war three years ago she has been working as a Red Cross nurse in a military hospital in Rome.

Thousands of postcards from members of the Girls' Friendly Society in this country will be sent to her. The postcards will bear a reproduction of the Girls' Friendly War Poster, done by Roy Williams of the National Child Welfare Association, with verses by Mary Haviland describing the war ideals of the society in terms of their slogan, "Bear Ye One Another's Burdens".

Mrs. George B. Stone-Alcock, the branch secretary in Florence, Italy, will also receive cabled greetings from the girls in America, and will be asked to transmit them to her compatriots.

The society, through its War Emergency Committee, is co-operating with the Italy-America Society in the work of distributing flowers and securing a general observance of Italy-America Day.

A letter has been sent out from headquarters at 281 Fourth Avenue to 50 diocesan presidents, asking them to interest the girls in collecting and distributing flowers.

Bishop Coadjutor-Elect of the Diocese of Texas

The Rev. Clinton S. Quinn, who was elected Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Texas in May, has been Rector of Trinity Church, Houston, the past year. The Diocesan Council met in his parish. Considering the short time he had been in Texas, and his age, 34 years, the honor is doubly great.

Mr. Quinn has only been in the ministry seven years. He was graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary at Alexanddia, Virginia. He went to Paducah, Ky., in 1911 from Pewee Valley, and in the McCracken county seat established a reputation as a leader in civic affairs. He was Rector of Grace Church in Paducah, and in 1913 was chairman of a committee which handled some of the most perplexing problems during the big flood of that year. For several days and nights he risked his life in order to remove families from houses endangered by the flood. He established the first troop of Boy Scouts in that city, and was appointed chairman of the Vice Commission by Mayor Ernest Lackey in February, 1916.

Mr. Quinn is now building a $75,000 church and parish house in Houston. As Bishop Coadjutor, he will take over the work of Bishop Kinsolving, who is advanced in years. The diocese is in the southeastern section of Texas, and includes Houston, Gelveston, Austin, Waco, Beaumont and other smaller towns.

THE CONVENTION SEASON

Southern Virginia

The 26th Annual Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia met in St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, Va., at 10 o'clock a. m. on Tuesday, May 28, 1918. All of the sessions were presided over by Bishop Tucker, assisted by Suffragan Bishop Thompson.

The opening service was a celebration of the Holy Communion, and was in the nature of a memorial service to the late Bishop Randolph. The celebrant was Bishop Tucker, assisted by Bishop Thompson and others of the clergy. Bishop Tucker and the Rev. C. B. Bryan, D. D., each paid very beautiful and eloquent tributes to the memory of the late Diocesan, especially stressing his saintly, Christ-like character, his learning and his wonderful ability in the pulpit.

Upon organizing for business, the Rev. William A. Brown, D. D., was appointed secretary and the Rev. E. P. Miner assistant secretary. At the roll call, 59 clergymen responded to their names, besides others present whose entry into the diocese was too recent to entitle them to vote, and about 41 parishes and missions were found to have lay representation, thus constituting a quorum for the transaction of business.

The business transacted throughout the session was mainly of a routine character, and was expedited as much as possible, so as to permit of an early adjournment.

On Tuesday afternoon the first business entertained was the report of the general trustees of the diocese, which showed the invested funds to be in a very satisfactory condition.

The Rt. Rev. William C. Brown, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Virginia, addressed the Council with reference to the educational needs of the Church in the State of Virginia, with special attention to Stuart Hall, at Staunton, owned jointly by the two dioceses.

Rev. M. P. Porter addressed the Council in the interests of the Virginia Bible Society, stating its opportunities and needs, and mentioned the fact that it is now affiliated with the American Bible Society of New York.

The annual reports and addresses of the two Bishops were then read by them, and consisted mainly in a recital and record of their official acts during the past year. Bishop Thompson's address showed, among other things, that he has confirmed 450 candidates during the eight months since his consecration. From Bishop Tucker's address it was learned that the two Bishops had made a total of 220 visitations, with 1,010 confirmations during the year, and had held seven ordinations. Mention was made of the need of increase of clerical salaries, and that the Colored work of the diocese is in a very satisfactory condition. Bishop Tucker intimated his desire for a Coadjutor Bishop; commended the wise statesmanship of President Wilson, and that Churchmen must do their utmost, as patriots, to help the country.

The Rev. Dr. W. A. Rollins presented a report concerning the Virginia Theological Seminary, and spoke of the lack of candidates for the ministry.

The Convocation of Southwest Virginia presented a memorial asking the Council to consider the advisability of dividing the diocese, and a committee was appointed to investigate the matter and report to the session of the Council next year.

At the session of the Council on Tuesday night, Archdeacon Russell made an eloquent address in regard to the Colored work, but especially concerning St. Paul's School at Lawrenceville.

An interesting report was made concerning the condition and needs of the Boys' School at Covington.

The Board of Religious Education announced that a Sunday School Teachers' Training School would be held in Lynchburg from June 17 to 21, and that the Norfolk School will not be held this year.

The Rev. J. B. Dunn, D. D., made a magnificent address, in the form of a report, on behalf of the Committee on the State of the Church.

Several other speakers made brief addresses in the interest of various phases of Church activity.

At the session on Wednesday morning the time was largely taken up in a discussion of the matter of electing a Coadjutor Bishop, it being the evident desire to improve the condition of the Suffragan Bishop by making him Coadjutor Bishop. A motion was passed instructing the Standing Committee to ask the consent of the Bishops and Standing Committees of the Church to the election of a Coadjutor Bishop, on the ground of extent of territory.

A resolution was passed looking toward amending the Constitntion of the diocese so as to provide for the Annual Meeting of the Council on the third Tuesday in January, instead of in May, as at present.

A few minor changes were made in the Canons.

An interesting discussion was had in regard to the relation of certain local funds with the General Church Pension Fund.

A resolution was passed instructing the secretary to send a telegram to President Wilson expressing the confidence of the Church in Southern Virginia in his wisdom, and assuring him of its loyalty in our struggle for freedom as against autocracy.

A resolution was passed expressing the sentiment of the Council as opposed to any effort toward enlarging the sphere of the Provincial Synods by conferring legislative power upon them.

The election of officers was quiet, most of the present officers being re-elected for the coming year.

On Wednesday night a public missionary service was held, which was addressed in a very interesting and inspiring manner by Bishop Thompson and other speakers.

A general feeling of pleasant harmony pervaded the sessions.

Western New York

The 81st Annual Council of the Diocese of Western New York was held at St. Luke's Church, Jamestown, May 1, 1918.

The Bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. C. H. Brent, D. D., being absent on his duties at the war front in France, as general headquarters chaplain, the secretary of the Council, the Rev. G. S .Burrows, acting under the Canon, called the Council to order.

The Rev. C. A. Jessup, D. D., Rector of St. Paul's Church, Buffalo, was elected presiding officer of the Council.

Resolutions were adopted as follows:

Recommending and urging upon the parishes the increase of clerical salaries to the amount of 20 per cent.

Merge of the Christmas Fund with the Church Pension Fund, upon the completion of an agreement with the trustees of the latter and upon the approval of the Council of the diocese.

Urging the passage of the Barkley bill and the co-operation of the laity of the Church in securing war emergency prohibition and the ratification of the national prohibition amendment by the Legislature of the state.

Recommending to the Synod of the Second Province that St. Stephen's College, Annandale, be an official college of the Province and arranging for aid in its financial support.

Expressing sympathy for the family of the late warden of De Lancey Divinity School in their bereavement; for the Rev. C. J. Davis in his illness, and greetings and best wishes to Lieut. J. C. Ward, chaplain, the Rev. A. F. Lowe and Lieut. H. Lowe, now in France.

Recommending to the missionary boards of the diocese increased financial support for the deaf mute missionary.

A very important business before the Council was the consideration of communications from Bishop Brent, proposing either the arranging for his resignation as Bishop of the Diocese, because of his detention abroad on war duty, or the election of a Bishop Coadjutor. The communication drew from the Council the following memorial and resolution, which were unanimously adopted:

The Bishop of the Diocese of Western New York has been appointed by the Secretary of War as senior chaplain of the U. S. army in France—the most responsible position ever held by any clergyman in connection with the army of the United States of America. His pre-eminent fitness for this very great distinction is everywhere conceded, not only because of his high character, but also on account of his past experience in connection with the army and government of the United States. During the fifteen years of his residence in the Philippines, from 1902 to 1917, he was constantly in touch with the officers and men of the United States army, and with every individual clothed with official responsibility in the administration of the civil affairs of the islands. Moreover, his personal relations with Gen. Pershing, Commander-in-chief of the American expeditionary forces, are known to be exceedingly personal and intimate.

We are most emphatic in our belief that the United States and its allies are waging a righteous war, a war upon which we ask God's blessing, without hesitation, and which we are sure Christ our Lord approves. In this practically world-wide war of nations and peoples, and not merely a war of armies, we are all, every one of us, called upon to give our best. The best that the Diocese of Western New York can give is our Bishop. We are, as we should be, proud beyond words to give him for this service. As he himself has recently said: "We must give until we have nothing left to give, and if one dies in the giving, that is of no account." We must act in the same spirit that actuates him, if we are to be in any sense worthy of having him as our Bishop. If he lives, and we pray God that he may be spared, we shall be unspeakably proud when he returns to us to assume his duties as the head of our diocese. If he dies, and he well knows that this is within the range of possibility, we want him to die as Bishop of Western New York, as well as senior chaplain of the United States army in France. Therefore be it

Resolved, That we record our deep appreciation of the privilege that is ours of giving our great Bishop for this great work; that we heartily endorse the action of the Standing Committee in granting unto him indefinite leave of absence; that in the judgment of this Council the relation existing between Bishop Brent and ourselves is one which only death can sever, and that we extend to him the assurance of our personal affection and complete approval of his acceptance of the high office conferred upon him by our government, and we ask the prayers of the people of the diocese for his overwhelming success in the discharge of his duties as senior chaplain, and his safe return to the diocese at the end of the war.

The Council adopted resolutions approving of the election of a Bishop Coadjutor for the diocese, and requesting the consent of the Bishops and the Standing Committees of the Church, and providing that as soon as the necessary consents are obtained a special Council be called to meet as early after the first of September as possible.

At the evening session of Tuesday a message from Bishop Brent to the Council and the people of the diocese was read by the president of the Standing Committee, the Rev. Dr. Sills; also an address was made by the Rev. Dr. Goodwin, urging upon the Church in the diocese a meeting in full of its missionary opportunities and obligations.

A very happy feature of the Council was the presence of the Rt. Rev. Frederick Courtney, D. D., who, upon the request of the Council, addressed it, expressing his thanks to the Church people of the diocese for the cordial reception accorded him in his work within our borders, and suggesting the thought that the diocese should thank God for its Diocesan and the great work he is doing as headquarters chaplain general, A. E. F., in France.

Bishop Brent's message to the Council was on making democracy safe for the world. Sentences from it are:

"A salutary whirlwind is sweeping through the world, bearing both life and death in its tearing, scorching breath."

"The one thing for us to attempt to do is to translate democracy into terms of the Kingdom of God."

"There is no lesson which the Churches are learning in the war zone of greater importance than the impotence of our divided Christianity. I see no glimmer of hope for permanent and fraternal peace among the nations without at least as permanent and fraternal a peace among the Churches."

"We, a complex and shattered world, stand face to face with the simple and only God. When men and nations and Churches shall have become as simple as His only laws, the two laws of love, require us to be, then the kingdoms of this world will become the Kingdom of God and His Christ."

Bethlehem

The 47th Annual Convention of the Diocese of Bethlehem convened in Trinity Church, Pottsville, Pa., Tuesday evening, May 28, at 7:45 o'clock. Evening Prayer was sung by the Rev. S. U. Mitman, Ph. D., and the lessons were read by the Rev. Franklin C. Smith. The Rector, the Rev. H. W. Diller welcomed the Convention.

Bishop Talbot, in his Convention address, considered sundry matters of importance. He called attention to the four years of successful operation of the Bishop's Church Extension Fund, which is the right arm of the Board of Diocesan Missions, furnishing nearly half as much money each year as the Board itself.

The great need of candidates for the ministry was noted. The answer of our clergy to the call of our country has created a grave situation. Business men possessing qualities of leadership and culture, and who are beyond the draft age, should be sought out and trained, and the number of lay readers ought to be greatly augmented.

The Bishop expressed the gratification of the Church that the apportionment for General Missions was fully paid, and praised the devotion and valuable assistance of the women of the diocese, and the splendid offering of the Sunday school children of over $6,000 in their Lenten offering.

Concerning the war, he said: "We have come into this struggle not because we love war, but because we hate it, and feel that war is contrary to the Divine purpose, and opposed to the counsels of the Prince of Peace. America thinks so much of peace that she is ready to pay the cost of war. Our war today is that we may destroy war. There is but one thing for a Christian man or a Christian nation to do with war, and that is to hunt it to its death and exterminate it from the face of the earth, and please God, in this war, we shall achieve our purpose.

"We have not entered upon this enterprise for peace until we had exhausted every honorable effort to avert war. At an enormous sacrifice of human life and treasure, inspired by the conviction that our motives are pure and our cause a righteous one, we may appeal to the all wise judgment of Almighty God in vindication of the high ideals which animate and inspire us.

"In such a cause and with such a motive, we should regard the present crisis as a challenge to our faith and undying hope. We should interpret it not in terms of possible discouragement or failure, but as giving our country an unprecedented opportunity of world-wide service. Has any nation in all the history of the world ever had a more unique opportunity of rendering such a service?

"Wicked beyond all expression as this war was in its inception, fearful as the guilt of that nation which deliberately planned it and forced it upon a peaceable world, it is bringing us the promise of a new and better day for all mankind.

"It is bringing us a clearer vision of what human life ought to be and can be in America and elsewhere. The deep suffering, the willing sacrifice, the close fellowship, the very course and progress of the war is making us see the folly and the wrong of much that has had place in our American life: our too great care for money and our worship of material things, our glaring economic injustices, our clumsy and inequitable distribution of wealth, our foolish antagonism between capital and labor. Having learned to live together as brothers in war, we shall be content to do no less than this in time of peace.

"When our boys come back home they will have a new vision before them, a new consciousness of their own manhood, a new sense of what is due to themselves and to other men. They are not going to be satisfied with things as they were before. Let us thank God that they will not be. Let us be ready to join with them in making this a new world, by bringing it at last under the rule of the risen Christ.

"But that we may do this, it is all important that we now greatly resolve to put first things first, and to lay emphasis on the spiritual and ethical side of this conflict in behalf of justice and truth."

Bishop Talbot continued by noting the splendid responses of the people to the various appeals for war funds, and concluded with a strong appeal to support the Church in her work at home, in the army and in the mission fields. "Were it not for Christ and His Church, we should have no country worth living for, and certainly no country worth dying for."

The reports of the custodians of various diocesan funds were highly gratifying. There are no deficits and but few parochial arrearages. The Bishop's salary was increased, and a strong recommendation to all vestries for an increase of at least 10 per cent in the salaries of all the clergy.

The Boards of Missions and Religious Education and the Social Service Commission presented excellent reports of the year's work. Miss Laura Ruddle, president of the Bethlehem Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, was presented to the Convention and made a most interesting address on the subject of women and missions. Three women were added to the Diocesan Committee on Social Service, and the Bishop named Mrs. E. J. Lipps of South Bethlehem, Miss M. Karracher of Pottsville and Mrs. R. P. Gleason of Scranton.

The elections resulted as follows: Secretary, Mr. David J. Pearsall, Mauch Chunk; assistant secretary, the Ven. H. E. A. Durell, East Mauch Chunk; treasurer, Mr. Hunter Eckert, Reading; Chancellor, Rodney A. Mercur, Esq., Towanda; registrar, Prof. Preston A. Lambert, M. A., South Bethlehem; standing committee, the Rev. James P. Ware, president; the Rev. John H. Griffith, Plymouth, secretary; the Rev. W. B. Beach, D. D.; the Rev. Walter Coe Roberts, the Rev. S. U. Mitman, Ph. D.; and Messrs. F. M. Kirby, Edward G. Mercur, Albert N. Cleaver, Joseph N. Welch and R. H Patterson.

Deputies to Provincial Synod: The Ven. D. W .Coxe, D. D., the Ven. H. E. A. Durell, the Rev. R. P. Kreitler, the Rev. John T. Ward; Messrs. W. R. Butler, N. H. Hiller, D. J. Pearsall and W. R. Coyle.

An interesting pre-Convention program began on Monday afternoon with the General Theological Seminary Alumni Reunion and address by the Rev. Ralph B. Pomeroy, B. D., instructor in Ecclesiastical History and Polity in the Seminary, followed by the G. T. S. Alumni supper in the parish house. In the evening. the Rev. Karl M. Block, Church chaplain at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., addressed a mass meeting in the church on the subject, "The Church in the Training Camp". Bishop Talbot followed with an account of the Church's work at Camp Crane, Allentown, Pa.

On Tuesday there were conferences and discussions: "The Sermon and Its Preparation", by the Rev. George C. Foley, D. D., of the Divinity School, Philadelphia; "The Sunday School and the Present Crisis", by the Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, Jr., D. D., of Christ Church, Baltimore; "The Conservation of Spiritual Forces", by the Rev. George Lynde Richardson of St. Mary's Church, Philadelphia.

On Wednesday morning the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, with the Ven. D. W. Coxe, D. D., Gospeller; the Ven. H. E. A. Durell, Epistoler, and the Rector of Trinity as Server.

Michigan City

The Diocese of Michigan City held its Annual Council in St. John's Church, Elkhart, Indiana, on Tuesday, May 20. There was a large attendance and great interest in the proceedings.

Besides the usual routine business and elections, two matters received special attention, under the report of the committee calling for changes in the Constitution.

It is suggested that the name of the diocese be changed from Michigan City to Northern Indiana. This action seems necessary, as the Bishop no longer resides in the See City, and all Cathedral relations with the parish of Michigan City have been cancelled by agreement between the Bishop and the vestry of Trinity Church. As the Bishop has named no other city as the See City, it is proposed to return to the custom of geographical boundaries and call the diocese "Northern Indiana". Final action will be taken at the next Annual Council.

The Committe on Constitution also reported the outline of a plan to create as a co-ordinate part of the Convention the "House of Churchwomen", so successfully operated in other dioceses. This was acted upon favorably, but was held over one year for final ratification.

The Bishop's son is the only priest of the diocese who has gone into the war, and the diocese very cordially elected him as the chaplain of the diocese. The Council also recognized with feeling the fact that the Bishop had not only furnished a son for the army, but two daughters as trained nurses in Red Cross work.

Bishop Griswold, Suffragan Bishop of Chicago, was a guest of the Council and occupied a chair at the right hand of the Bishop. He was the preacher at the evening service.

Rev. L. T. Rogers was elected secretary, to take the place of Rev. J. T. Plummer, resigned.

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 76 HOBART, INDIANA, JUNE 15, 1918 3 CENTS PER COPY $1.00 A YEAR

THE GENEVA, N. Y., SUMMER CONFERENCE

Miss Lindley is to teach a course in preparation for "The Advent Call", the war play of the Woman's Auxiliary, at the Summer Conference to be held at Geneva, New York, from July 1 to 12, according to the final bulletin of the Conference, just issued. This course is primarily for diocesan trainers, but it will be open to any others who are interested. Another interesting course, announced for the first time in this bulletin, is the Junior clinic. "His Star in the West", the Junior textbook, by Miss Dorothy Giles, is to be tried out in a class presided over by Dr. Arthur R. Gray. Ten or twelve children will be invited to attend this class, and the first 30 minutes of the session will be devoted to telling them the stories contained in the book. Canon Elmendorf announces a class in "War Time Ministries of the Church", the purpose of which is to acquaint the student with diocesan, parochial and individual opportunities for war service. "Social Justice in the Light of the War" also promises to be of great interest. This course will be taught by the Rev. S. Glover Dunseath of Jersey City, and is described as a "search for the definition and content of essential justice, studying schemes and organized plans for effecting and insuring the fullest and highest measure of justice for the units of society and society as a whole, before and in the light of the war". In the department of Religious Education, the courses that will attract most attention are probably those by Miss Withers on the "New Junior Plan", and by Dr. Bradner, on "The First Unit in Teacher Training—The Pupil".

A mystery play will again be presented out of doors under the trees on William Smith campus. The play chosen is "The Great Trail", and already the parts are assigned, and the younger members of the Conference are learning their parts, and in some cases rehearsing in the various cities where they live. There is only one week for rehearsal in Geneva, but last year this was sufficient to insure a remarkably smooth and reverent production of "Conquering and to Conquer".

Bishop Stearly is Conference Pastor, and the preacher at the Sunset Services and on Sunday. The Rev. Wallace E. Rollins of the Theological Seminary of Virginia will conduct the Conference Bible Class. His subject this year is "Spiritual Studies in the Earlier Epistles of St. Paul".

A large number have already registered. All correspondence in regard to the Conference should be addressed to the secretary, Miss M. J. Hobart, 381 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Rector Declines Call

The Rev. George Craig Stewart announced to his vestry at a dinner at the rectory Monday evening that he had just declined a call to a large Eastern parish. The call was extended to him two weeks ago.

Dr. Stewart is awaiting a telegram from Washington giving the date of his sailing to France as a chaplain of the American Red Cross. The Bishop and vestry have consented to his absence for six months, and his papers are now in the hands of the War Department. The exact date has not yet been given him, but he has received word from the American Red Cross in Washington to be prepared for a telegram summoning him to New York for sailing about the second week in June. During his absence, the Parish will be in charge of his assistant, the Rev. Frederick Grant, and services will continue as usual. He has asked all the communicants of St. Luke's to join him at the early communion next Sunday morning. It is not unlikely that the last service at which he will officiate in St. Luke's for six months will be at Evensong next Sunday, when the preacher is to be Bishop Weller of Fond du Lac, who will give the final address in the course, "America and the War". The Bishop's subject is "Religion in the War and After".

Open Air Services at Pittsburgh

The sixth year of open air services, under the auspices of the Episcopal Churches of Pittsburgh, Pa., Sunday afternoons, on the corner of Smithfield Street and Second Avenue, Pittsburgh, began Sunday, June 2. The attendance proved the best of the six years. The mayor of the city has recognized the movement of such importance as to issue an order closing the street for the hour. The Rev. William Porkess, the chairman, presided. Gospel solos were sung and religious literature was freely distributed. A new feature this year is the appointment of a director of singing. Well known hymns in very large type are fastened on the wall, and all who stop are urged to look and sing. The addresses were given by Archdeacon C. J. DeCoux and the Rev. W. N. Clapp of St. Mary's Memorial Chapel, Pittsburgh. A large proportion of the clergy of the city and diocese have enthusiastically entered into this movement.

The Bishop in Ogdensburg, N.Y.

ORDINATIONS AND CONFIRMATIONS

Bishop Nelson of Albany visited the parishes and missions associated with St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, N. Y., May 24-26. He confirmed and preached in St. Philip's Church, Madrid, and St. Paul's Church, Waddington, where classes were presented by the Rev. C. S. Prout, and in St. Augustine's Church, Hermon, and Christ Church, Morristown, where the confirmees were presented by the Rev. W. J. Gage. At Christ Church, Bishop Bidwell of Ontario and Canon Bedford-Jones of Brockville were present at the service. The choir of Trinity Church, Gouverneur, sang at the service in Hermon, and the choir of St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, assisted the choir of Christ Church, Morristown. On Trinity Sunday Bishop Nelson preached in St. John's Church, Ogdensburg and ordained the Rev. William Johnson Gage and the Rev. Charles G. Prout to the priesthood. The Bishop preached a most impressive and thoughtful sermon on the idea of priesthood and sacrifice, emphasizing, also, the priesthood of the laity. The candidates, habited in alb and amice, were presented by the Rev. John Prout, Rector of Trinity Church, Rensselaerville, N. Y., father of the Rev. C. G. Prout. The Rev. John Prout, the Rev. Charles Temple, D. D., Rector of the Church of Bethesda-by-the-Sea, Palm Beach, Florida; the Rev. Dr. Charles White, Rector of St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, joined with the Bishop in the laying on of hands. After the presentation of the Bible, the newly ordained priests were vested with stole, maniple and chasuble, and the paten and chalice were placed in their hands.

Trinity Sunday afternoon Bishop Nelson confirmed a class of fifty persons presented by the Rector of St. John's Church, and six from St. John's Mission, DeKalb Junction (a new mission of St. John's Church), presented by the Rev. W. J. Gage.

At the Trinity Sunday services, members of all the congregations served by Mr. Gage and Mr. Prout were present, and were entertained between the services in the parish house by the women of St. John's Church. The Rev. W. J. Gage and the Rev. G. C. Prout will continue as assistants at St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, the former having in addition the work at Hermon, Morristown and DeKalb Junction, the latter being in charge of Madrid and Waddington.

St. Stephen's College Commencement

St. Stephen's, at Annandale, nearly 100 miles north of New York City, on the Hudson River, had its commencement the same week with Columbia. At the luncheons not much over a quarter of a century ago it was the custom of that strict little Church college to serve a good, strong alcoholic punch to both students and Alumni on commencement day, but that one time innocent bit of luxury has fallen into "innocuous desuetude", to quote Grover Cleveland's immortal phrase. Graduating exercises seem just as interesting without it.

A commencement sermon was preached by a former president of the college, the Rev. Dr. Lawrence T. Cole, now head of Trinity School, New York, and the baccalaureate sermon was delivered by the Rev. Prof. Dickinson S. Miller of the General Theological Seminary. A special memorial service was held in honor of the Rev. Dr. George Bailey Hopson, for about forty years professor of Latin, and always esteemed co-founder and leader of the college.

Finding it difficult to get adequate support from present endowments, St. Stephen's College is trying to increase its funds in various ways. An appeal was made to the recent Diocesan of New York to establish a number of scholarships, amounting to $425 each. This is the regular charge for board and tuition for each student.. It was not adopted, but referred to a committee for report next year. The college is little, and is far off from the centers of either civil or Church life, but it has since 1860 sent a larger number of men into the ministry of our Church than any other college or university in America. Such a source of supply should be well looked after, wherever it is located.

American Church Building Fund Commission

At its meeting on May 16, held at the Church Missions House, New York City, loans amounting to $21,900 were voted to the following parishes and missions: St. Mark's Church, Troy, Alabama; Christ Church, Tyler, Tex.; Church of the Heavenly Rest, McCall, Idaho; and St. Thomas' Church, Denver, Colorado. Gifts amounting to $4,500 were voted to the following parishes and missions: St. Peter's Church, Seward, Alaska; Church of our Saviour, Akita, Japan; St. Mark's Church, Jackson, Miss.; Indian Mission Church, Fort Hall, Idaho; St. Agnes' Chapel, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Bishop's residence, Topeka, Kan.; St. Augustine's Church, Raleigh, N. C.; and St. Andrew's Church, North Cramer Hill, N. J. Grants amounting to $1,500 were voted to the following parishes and missions: St. Paul's Church, Clinton, Okla.; St. Mark's Church, Mesa, Ariz.; and St. Timothy's Church, Brighton, Colo.

The corresponding secretary of the Commission is as usual at this time of the year visiting Diocesan Conventions, Councils and Convocations, explaining the work of the Commission and expressing its willingness and desire to assist in the work of construction of churches, rectories and parish houses. A tour of the Southwest has been accomplished, and another to the Northwest will shortly be undertaken.

Seven young women were graduated from Bethany School and College, Topeka, Kansas, at the June commencement, when Bishop Sage delivered the commencement address. The baccalaurate sermon was preached by Bishop Wise on Sunday, June 2.

THE CONVENTION SEASON

Colorado

The thirty-second Annual Convention met in St. John's Cathedral, Denver, on Wednesday, June 5. The reports showed matters in a healthy condition throughout the diocese.

The indebtedness which at one time threatened the solvency of the diocese has been reduced to $60,000, with assets of more than four times that sum.

The Constitution was amended, giving a modified proportionate representation, the parishes being classified according to numerical strength into five classes. Class A will have five representatives in Council. At present there are in Class A only St. John's, St. Mark's and Ascension, Denver, and Grace and St. Stephen's, Colorado Springs. Class B. has four, Class C three and Class D two.

This recognizes the importance of the large parishes, without giving them a preponderating influence.

The matter of admitting women into the Council was voted down, not because any one denied their right, but because the delegates were persuaded that a large majority of the women preferred that the men should not evade their responsibility for the business management of the Church, and the men felt that they ought not to be excused therefrom.

A Diocesan Institute was authorized, which should represent the various organizations of the Church, and a commission was appointed to make such organization effective. This Institute is to be composed of representatives of the Woman's Auxiliary, Guilds, Daughters of the King, Girls' Friendly Societies, Sunday Schools, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Church Clubs, etc, and is to plan for educational and missionary work in the diocese.

The mandate of the General Convention regarding business methods was obeyed; the fiscal year was altered to end December 31; the date of the Council changed to the first week in February, and a loose-leaf ledger was ordered to be furnished by the diocese to the treasurer of every parish and mission therein, in order that treasurer's reports might be uniform.

The whole business of the Council was transacted between 9:30 a. m. and 4:30 p. m., because all reports were printed before the Council and in the hands of the delegates, and because each matter brought before the Council had been carefully considered by committees before it was presented to the Council.

The request from the House of Bishops for a better division of the States of Colorado, Kansas and Nebraska was considered by a large committee, who unanimously reported that no new lines could be made at this time, but that the only method of procedure that could be suggested would be to return the missionary district to the diocese, looking forward to the possibility of a different division at some future time, in the meantime administering the State as a diocesan unit, under the supervision of two Diocesan Bishops, whenever such plan might be feasible.

Mr. John M. Kennedy, Jr., 370 Humboldt Avenue, Denver, was elected secretary of the Council in place of the Rev. James McLaughlin, as the latter is moving into the San Luis Valley, too far from Denver to attend to the secretarial duties. Mr. Kennedy is also secretary to the Bishop, having given all his time to the diocese without remuneration. If every layman in the diocese gave of his time as do Mr. Kennedy, the diocesan secretary; Mr. Bradbury, the diocesan treasurer; Mr. Pershing, the chancellor; Mr. Peters, the chairman of Wolfe Hall Committee, and Mr. Hudston, the secretary of the Board of Trustees, what could be accomplished?

All moneys pertaining to diocesan missions should be sent to Mr. J. H. Bradbury, Colo. & So. Ry., Denver, and all moneys for domestic and foreign missions to Mr. Jesse M. Wheelock, Denver, Colo.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held Tuesday, June 4, at St. John's Cathedral, Denver.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Mrs. Ethelbert Ward of Denver.

Vice Presidents—Mrs. H. F. Hoffman, Denver; Mrs. B. M. Marshall, Colorado Springs; Mrs. S. Fosdick, Pueblo; Mrs. B. W. Bonell, Greeley; and Mrs. W. G. Rupp, Trinidad.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. R. B. H. Bell, Denver.

Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. Thos. Waters, 1266 Cook Street, Denver.

Treasurer—Mrs. F. G. Lyle, Eleventh Avenue Hotel, Denver.

The following officers were appointed:

Treasurer United Offering—Mrs. Norman Read, 1112 Pearl Street, Denver.

Secretary of Juniors—Mrs. A. B. Bell, 1360 Birch Street, Denver.

Secretary of Little Helpers—Miss Mills, Boulder.

Educational Secretary—Mrs. Irving P. Johnson, 819 E. Eighth Avenue, Denver.

Educational Secretary of Juniors—Mrs. C. G. Mantz.

Secretary of Altar Guild—Mrs. E. C. Dewey, 1138 E. Bayard Street, Denver.

Church Periodical Club—Mrs. C. H. Blodgett, Colorado Springs.

Spirit of Missions and WITNESS Agent—Miss A. L. Scharff, 1539 Clarkson, Denver.

Program Committee—Mrs. F. L. Bishop, Mrs. M. S. Wolfe, Miss E. C. Brent.

Printing Committee—Mrs. Thomas Waters, Mrs. R. B. H. Bell.

Hospitality Committee—Mrs. J. M. Wheelock, Mrs. G. P. Goodier.

The request of the Bishop that the Woman's Auxiliary assist in some concrete work, rather than merely contributing to the Diocesan Mission treasury, was acceded to, and pledges were taken for Church extension work in the diocese, it being understood that the first work of the Auxiliary should be in aiding the Bishop to acquire a Church property in two cities in the Arkansas Valley—Lamar and Rocky Ford—two of the largest cities in the State where the Episcopal Church has no Church building.

The Rev. D. C. Lees gave an interesting lecture, with lantern slides, on Jerusalem, in which city he was a resident for several years. The meeting was a large and enthusiastic one.

Church Struck by Lightning

During an unusually severe storm on Monday evening, May 27, St. Thomas' Church, Morgantown, Pa., was struck by lightning and burned down. Nearly all the furnishings were saved. Twice it was thought that the fire had been extinguished, but a tin roof laid over the shingles greatly hampered the work of the fire fighters. St. Thomas' is one of the old parishes of the Diocese of Bethlehem, having been admitted into union with the Convention in 1825. The Rev. Wm. DuHamel is in charge, and while he was in telephonic communication from his rectory at Douglassville, the storm made it impossible for him to reach Morgantown until after the destruction of the church.

THE SPIRITUAL MESSAGE OF THE PROPHETS

In every great crisis of national life we instinctively turn to the message of the old Hebrew prophets. They were the men who tried to learn for themselves and interpret to their people the spiritual meaning of the national events through which their people were passing.

The prophets stand out in history with a quite unique grandeur of character. Bravely and boldly they stood before rulers and people and proclaimed God's truth. We sometimes think of them as men whose only function was to foretell the future. But they did something infinitely harder to do than that—they saw what was wrong in the present, and tried to make rulers and people right the wrong.

There was Jonah, for instance. He is sent by God to preach repentance to Nineveh, the capital of the most powerful people of the world of his day; and he goes into the city and his cry rings out, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown unless it repents". And the Assyrian city is brought to its knees.

Then there was Amos. He was a rude peasant, yet, unmindful of his own obscurity, he feels impelled to cry out against Samaria. "The lion hath roared," he says. "Who can but hear. The Lord hath spoken, who can but prophesy?"

Now Samaria, for a brief moment, was enjoying a period of splendid prosperity. Under Jeroboam II it was exercising great influence in the affairs of the East. Yet Amos was not in the least afraid. Behind the show of outward strength he saw the real weakness of the people—cruelty, lust, pleasure rampant, the fear of God nowhere, the duty which strong men owed to weak denied and forgotten. So he proclaims the inevitable doom. "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel".

The Assyrian and the Babylonian, those old scourges of God, have long since passed away.

"The lion and the lizard keep
The courts where Jamshyd gloried and drank deep."

And the voice of the Hebrew prophets has long since passed into silence, but still their messages ring out, and the message of all of them was essentially the same.

Israel in each crisis did not need a new god or a new religion. What she needed was to return with a new heart and will and conscience to the old God of their fathers—the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, the God of Jacob. Israel did not need a new law of morality and truth; she needed to return with a new consecration and determination to the observance of the old law of Moses.

"Return unto me and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." That is the burden of the message of each prophet. That we are living through just such a time of change as produced these prophets and gave occasion to their messages we are all well aware.

And some are looking for new prophets, and some who value the religious experience of past ages are going back to the old treasure house of the Bible. And those who do are filled with a new wonder, as they see how clear a message these interpreters of God's past judgments can give today.

In the introduction to his interesting and timely volume, "Essays in Orthodoxy", Mr. Quick, the chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, emphasizes the message which Jeremiah has for the present time:

"Neither in life or death has Jeremiah ever been a popular prophet. The gloom of his warnings is too profound, the outpouring of his denunciations too monotonous. Yet his career marks the greatest crisis in the history of the Hebrew religion, when the whole circle of beliefs and customs which centered around the Holy City and temple was suddenly dissolved by the destruction of Jerusalem at the hands of a heathen invader. Traditional faith could hardly have sustained a more staggering shock, and for that reason those who can discern the signs of modern times may turn again to Jeremiah in a more sympathetic spirit, more able to receive light from the glory of the inspiration which shines through, while it accentuates, the tragedy of his life."

The burden of the message of Isaiah in the crisis which came in his time and the message of Jeremiah in his time was the same, yet the purpose and motive of their message was entirely different. Isaiah said: "Stand still and trust in God, make no entangling foreign alliances. Jerusalem is safe. God will not allow it to be destroyed.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the King of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it. By the way that he came by the same he shall return, and shall not come into this city, saith the Lord. For I will defend this city to save it, for mine own sake and for my servant David's sake."

Jeremiah perceived that the day of God's mercy was over and the day of punishment for Israel was come. Stand still, he says, it is useless to resist the power of the enemy, the prophets who tell us to rely upon God's old promises to save Jerusalem are false prophets.

"Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon and serve him and his people."

But in spite of this message of passive non-resistance to the will of God, the wonder of Jeremiah's life, as Mr. Quick also points out, was that his faith and hope in the God of Israel endured to the end.

"In the collapse of all that was outward and secondary, Jeremiah had been enabled to grasp more firmly than any of his predecessors the spiritual essence of the Hebrew religion. The more clearly it appeared that the temple and city were doomed, that the national independence of the Jewish state could not endure, the more clearly he perceived that the essence of religion lay in the writing of God's law on man's heart. It was because he grasped the essentials so firmly that he was prepared, with terrible regret and at tremendous cost, to let the non-essentials go." So Jeremiah knew what must be given up—all that stood for the old promises in which the Israelites had relied since the time of David—and yet he knew what could not be given up. "Stand ye in the ways and see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

So the message of the Hebrew prophets was—even the message of Jeremiah, who lived amid the crash and ruin of old things—trust in the old truths, make them new in newness of living them. Do not throw them aside, make them vivid and alert and alive in conscience and daily experience.

We are accustomed to the term "strategical retreat" in our war bulletins. Many religious prophets in our day are advising the same maneuver in spiritual affairs. "Give up the old positions, they say; they are untenable under the onslaught of the enemy of doubt and dismay. Take up new and safe positions in the rear." Their advice varies as to what can safely be abandoned, and what new positions are sane and safe from further attack of the enemy.

Others advise the Church to be valiantly aggressive. "Throw away everything in a magnificent adventure of faith." They want us to stand like the witches in Macbeth, and throw into the burning caldron of our time many things that faith has held precious and thought trustworthy, and see if there will not come out a new brew that will be a panacea for all the ills of a new day.

"Double, double toil and trouble."

There is another Hebrew prophet whose action in a moment of crisis is significant.

Elijah was on Mount Carmel, in his conflict with the priests of Baal. They had all day cried unto their god, and there was no answer.

"Then Elijah said unto the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him, and he repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down."

Elijah did not build a new Altar or inaugurate the worship of a new god. He persuaded the people to return to their old faith, to put a new life into their old religion.

Perhaps the new crisis of faith through which we are living will make us trust anew in the old faith. Perhaps the new test to which the things of our religion are put will but bring out more clearly the trustworthiness of the truths in which we have trusted.

THE PRAYERS

I was in heaven one day when all the prayers
Came in, and angels bore them up the stairs
Unto a place where he
Who was ordained such ministry
Should sort them, so that in that palace bright
The presence-chamber might be duly light;
For they were like to flowers of various bloom,
And a divinest fragrance filled the room.

Then did I see how the great sorter chose
One flower, that seemed to me a hedgeling rose,
And from the tangled press
Of that irregular loveliness
Set it apart, and "This", I heard him say,
"Is for the Master". So upon his way
He would have passed. Then I to him:
"Whence is this rose, O thou of cherubim
The chiefest?" "Know'st thou not?" he said, and smiled;
"This is the first prayer of a little child."

—Thomas Edward Brown (1830-1897).

FLOWER IN THE CRANNIED WALL

Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies,
Hold you here, root and all, in my hand,
Little flower—but if I could understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is.

—Alfred Tennyson.

(This was first printed in 1869. The flower was plucked out of its cranny in a wall at "Waggoners Wells", near Haslemere, in the extreme southwestern part of Surrey.)

Church Unity

A LETTER FROM BISHOP BRENT

The following is a letter from Bishop Brent to a personal friend:

"Just as now is the time to strike for the unity of nations, so is it the time to strike for the unity of the Churches. I wonder how many people realize that our chief difficulty in connection with the morals of the army is due to the divided Church? You meet it at every turn. Many feel it so keenly that they see no enduring or substantial good coming out of our purely physical or human effort without some movement pari passu earnestly aiming for a Kingdom of God among men not divided against itself.

"Last Sunday I was with our fellows just before they went into the great battle, some of them to die before the week closed. In one place the chaplain asked for the use of the church. It was refused. The school house was refused. The little town was so crowded with soldiers that the only place we could find for service where we were welcomed was a barnyard. There, under the wide-spreading eaves of a great barn, we set up an improvised Altar. The French peasants and the cattle that stood by were hospitable to us. The weather was bleak and dull. It was Bethlehem over again, as the massed khaki knelt in the litter of straw before the Christ of Bethlehem. There was no room for Him in the inn. All that exclusiveness can do is to shut out men from itself and drive them nearer to God. Sometimes ecclesiasticism is so cold and cruel with its anathemas and lack of vision that one wonders how God can continue to use it for His Kingdom—if He does. I give this incident as an illustration.

"It seems to me the time has come for us to do something daring and loving for the Kingdom's sake. It is antediluvian to continue thinking in mere terms of continuity or of yesterday. We must both think and act in terms of the new order, in terms of the Kingdom of God. Individual effort, of course, must be continued and has its effect. But the Churches should act. The constitutional assembly of every one should meet for the definite purpose of moving for a conference on the peace of the Churches, with no other aim to distract. Our own General Convention should lead. Not the House of Bishops alone, but the whole Convention. Then the Churches willing to share in such a conference should do so, regardless of those who might choose to sit apart. The world is falling to pieces, the Churches are tagging on behind the armies, and nothing is being done that is worthy the name of witness-bearing for unity as Christ begs of us to interpret it. Happy the Church that takes the lead in such an adventure of faith! I have often thought of our late determination to reach the Russian Church. We were not too early, but too late, much too late, too diplomatic, too calculating.

"In the A. E. F. I can do more in behalf of unity in the work that has been chosen me than in any other task, at the moment at any rate. It may not be much, but it is something."

We have traced the return of the exiles, their setting up of the Altar and rebuilding of the temple and city wall, with their renewed consecration of themselves as a people to God and His law, and we come on this Sunday to the last of the reform measures recorded in Nehemiah: (1) The cleansing of the temple from its defilement through the devotion of a room designed for sacred uses to the personal use of one Tobiah. (2) The restoration of the tithes, failure to provide which had led apparently to the abandonment of the House of God. (3) The reclamation of the Sabbath from its complete secularization, due to the intrusion of business. (4) And finally the re-enforcement of the marriage laws, which forbade interracial alliances. The selection shows how difficult it is to get a people to learn from experience. Here they were beginning all over again to commit the same sins essentially which had led to their captivities. Moreover, these were the sins of a people redeemed, restored and forgiven. It was as if the prodigal should again depart from home. There was also an utter failure to realize the call of the people to bear witness to the Gentile world of the truth of God, as so wondrously revealed in their own history. Even in Nehemiah himself (a most interesting character study) we cannot fail to detect the beginnings of that religious self-consciousness which later became the spiritual ruin of the Pharisees (vs. 14, 22, 31).

The New Testament lesson (Romans) was selected to emphasize some of these points, especially that complacency which can boast of having the law, of occupying a position of privilege before God, and yet despise and criticise the rest of the world, at the same time so living as to bring the very name of our religion and our God into the contempt of the human race.

The true Jew, said St. Paul (and it ought to be said the true Churchman), is he that is one internally and not externally, in the spirit and not in the letter. A decent heathen, and still more a spiritually-minded non-conformist, is better in the sight of God than a dead Churchman.

For connection with the Altar services, it may be noted that this glorying in the possession of religious privileges, combining lip service with a censorious attitude towards others, led historically to the attitude of mind which made it possible for a people to censure the Master for consorting with publicans and sinners (Gospel), and merits St. Peter's "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble" (Epistle).

For the evening lessons we have selected a passage which includes the topics of Sabbath observance, humility, the law of promotion, the disobedience of the called and the conditions of true discipleship—utter loyalty to the truth, along with that humility which recognizes our need of Divine assistance, and which is the basis of prayer (Collect).

The Old Testament lessons illustrate this topic by a specimen prayer taken from the experience of the Jews in captivity (16 to end probably best).

The week day lessons require no special comment, although attention may be called to the story (evening) of our Lord in conflict with Pharisaism and His pointing out the mistaken method of purifying the Church by excluding the bad.

The lessons for next Sunday challenge to service both nation and Church (a. m.); creation and regeneration (p. m.); or, eve of John Baptist.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

SPECIAL PRAYERS USED BY THE BIBLE CLASS OF THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION AT POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

O God, in whom all wisdom dwells, the light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world, who hast by Thy prophets and evangelists, and in the life and teaching of Thy blessed Son revealed Thyself to men; let Thy Holy Spirit, we beseech Thee, shine in our hearts to give us spiritual perception, and to lead us into clearer light and truer knowledge. With reverence and great humility may we study Thy Word, that we may be built up in our faith, and may be strengthened in holy living, to the glory of Thy Name. Through our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

O Merciful Father, we beseech Thee at this time to look down in mercy upon our country; Guide and protect the President of the United States and all others in authority. Give wisdom and courage to those who bear command in our Army and Navy. Grant to us, and to our allies, if it be Thy will, victory and success. Stay, we beseech Thee, the pain and the misery, the sorrow and want, the fierceness and the cruelty, which now desolate the earth. Look down in compassion upon those who are our enemies in this war, especially upon their sick and wounded. And speedily, if it be Thy will, serve forth upon the nations of the world the blessings of Thy peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Almighty and merciful God, we commend to Thy Fatherly care those who through the perils of the war are serving their country by land and by sea. Thou knowest the places where they are, and the dangers which beset them. Be Thou to each one a shield and a defense. In times of waiting or in action, in sickness or in health, in life or in death, grant unto them the comfort of Thy presence. Put into their minds holy thoughts of Thee, their Heavenly Father and of Jesus Christ, their Saviour. Help them to pray. And, if it be Thy will, keep them in safety, and bring them back to their homes in peace; through our blessed Saviour and Mediator, Jesus Christ. Amen.

Look in mercy, we beseech Thee, O Lord, on those who are called to tasks of special peril, in the air or beneath the seas. Even there also Thy hand leads them. Help them to do their duty with prudence and with fearlessness, confident that in life or in death the Eternal God is their refuge and underneath the everlasting arms. Grant this for Jesus Christ's sake, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

O Lord, Jesus Christ, who by Thy death didst take away the sting of death, grant rest, we beseech Thee, in the place of light and refreshment, to those who have died in battle or through sickness in this war. Receive their souls into Thy holy keeping, where pain and sorrow and sighing are done away, and grant unto them a merciful judgment at the last day, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

How did it get its name?

The name Protestant Episcopal came to us in this way: After the Revolution, the Church which had been known as the Church of England manifestly could not continue using that name. It was necessary that a name should be found by which to designate the Church after the Revolution (although two-thirds of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were connected with this Church). Nevertheless, the feeling against it was very bitter. The Puritans of that day insisted that it was merely a disguised Romanism (so our fathers called it Protestant). They also declared it was in sympathy with English royalty (so our fathers called it Episcopal). It wasn't a very brave name, and it isn't a very effective one, but we keep it because we are thus christened—like a man who may have been baptized "Epaphroditus". He couldn't help it; he would not repudiate it, yet he wished it had been otherwise.

The Remnant

I wonder sometimes that people do not seek the joy of service persistently. Nothing in this world that is worth enjoying comes to those who are not willing to pay the price.

The fellow who slacks in his studies never finds any pleasure in studying; the tramp who believes that the world owes him a living hates a day's work as badly as he hates a bath.

But in religion we substitute a silly sentimentality for honest effort.

The temporary thrill that one experiences in singing a mushy hymn bears the same relation to Christian service that a silly flirtation bears to the joy of making a home. It rather unfits one for the task.

The road which leads to victory is never an easy one—It demands something more than a vision or a patriotic song. It means hard work, great sacrifice, many defeats, being tired and wounded.

The Christian life as planned by Christ is a manly, militant effort.

The one who travels "the way," will find it stained with blood and littered with failures.

The real test of your Christian character is not ascertained by sitting in a comfortable pew, listening to highly trained singers, moving in polite society.

The real test comes to the Christian when he is obliged to serve under an unpopular leader, who preaches badly and is lacking in tact.

Then the rats flee Christ's service and there survives only those who are constrained by the love of Christ and who will not swerve from that service because some personality is displeasing.

As one goes among the Churches he finds in every parish some who never fail, who always give, who do their full share of service, who are filled with the spirit of self-sacrifice, and who take their religion without sugar, when the sugar crop has failed.

If it had not been for a very small remnant, Jerusalem would have been like Sodom and Gomorrah said the prophet, Isaiah, and were it not for some very small remnants the average parish would be an offense to the name of Christ.

The Christian life is not as so many people seem to imagine, a matter for the smallest personal effort and the most generous criticism of others, whereas the Christian life is a matter of the most difficult personal effort and the most severe criticism of one's self.

Instead of everlastingly justifying yourself that you are right and despising all who think otherwise, one must always be prepared to find that he is wrong, and that the other fellow has discovered something that he knew nothing about.

Let me point out some of the stumbling blocks on which the self-satisfied Christian wrecks his spiritual life.

I. Introducing into his personal conduct the matter of his own personal likes and dislikes.

The man who allows his service of Christ to be affected by the fact that he doesn't like the minister, or that some fellow Christian has snubbed or cheated him, or that some vestry or guild has failed to appreciate his efforts.

The fault of nearly all such is personal vanity, and the very opportunities that God sends them to overcome this fault, become the stumbling blocks on which they wreck their spiritual progress.

II. Akin to this is the fact that, like the apostle, one who enters the service of Christ must learn to suffer fools gladly.

Why do you suppose that bores were sent into the world unless it be that you who are not a bore may have your charity tested.

III. The greatest nuisance to the parish priest is the sensitive person, the one who finds an offense in nearly every mile of their Christian pilgrimage.

These persons who so sorely need the holy hardness of endurance, are too thin-skinned to stand the slightest scratch.

Why, the Christian religion was founded by one who taught us how to endure, cursing, spitting, crowns of thorns and crucifixion. What part can one have in Christ who cannot endure a sharp word?

IV. The Inveterate slacker who promises unto the Lord and doesn't keep it.

People that cannot be depended upon, to whom any personal inconvenience is sufficient excuse from any religious service, whereas every religious service is a sufficient reason for any personal inconvenience.

V. The disloyal pacificist, who in the face of our Lord's command to go into the world to preach the Gospel to every creature sets up his own wisdom and says "I do not believe in missions" whereas as a loyal Christian he has no business to believe anything else.

VI. The narrow-minded Christian who has settled all questions of doctrine and ritual beyond recall and who heaps anathemas on any body who doesn't see these things as he does.

The Church is big enough for incense or prayer meetings, but this type is of that 2x4 construction which can include only incense or prayer meetings.

VII. The mean man who shirks his share of paying bills and doing the work. You can usually tell this type because it talks much about what ought to be done and does little itself.

All these make the road of a parish priest hard, and yet there is always the remnant which is faithful in season and out of season, the salt of the earth, who more than repay a priest for all the other seven sorts and conditions of sheep.

The truth is, that the Church is suffering from an exaggerated individualism, in which each man becomes his own pope in matters of religion, practically excommunicating all those who differ from him and setting forth to himself the infallibility of his own opinion.

There is as much intolerance in a protestant community of America of any differentiation from the code of doctrine and ethics which that community has accepted as there ever was in the Spanish inquisition, and the only reason that it doesn't burn those who reject its sacred bulls is because such treatment of heretics is not American, but the intolerance is about as bigotted now as then.

Parish Loyalty

St. James' Church, Cheboygan, Mich. (Rev. Robert Phillips, Rector), is enjoying wonderful progress. During the past two years the chruch has been rebuilt and furnished, and a large, convenient parish house has been built and equipped for community purposes. A Social Center has been organized, with over 100 members, which is conducted on a non-sectarian basis, distinct and apart from parish societies.

Large congregations are the rule, instead of the exception, and for two successive years the Knights Templar have worshiped in St. James' on Easter Sunday, and Mother's Day was fittingly observed, many standing throughout the service. The Rector preached on "A Mother's Hope and Work".

The most touching service was on May 26, Memorial Sunday, when the G. A. R. and W. R. C. came in a body for the second year in succession. The church was crowded, and many stood on the entrance steps. After Morning Prayer, Prof. Baker (lay reader) presented for dedication to the Rector, in behalf of the Ladies' Guild, a beautiful silk Service Flag, with 24 stars, a token of the loyalty of our Church boys now in the service. It was received at the entrance to the sanctuary, dedicated and blessed by the Rector in the name of the Trinity (Trinity Sunday). As the last word was spoken and Prof. Barr carried it and spread it over the pulpit, the organ and choir pealed forth "The Star Spangled Banner". Old soldiers and congregation caught the spirit, as did "John on Patmos", and never before in old St. James' had there been such a soul-stirring service. The Rector then preached the sermon on "A Nation's Duty". More stars are added from time to time, as our boys and girls go overseas to do their "bit" for democracy and universal peace.

Deaconess School Commencement

On Friday, May 10, 1918, the annual commencement of the Deaconess Training School of the Pacific was held in Berkeley, Cal. The day began with a service in St. Mark's Church, when the Rt. Rev. W. F. Nichols, D. D., Bishop of California, set apart as a deaconess Mrs. Sarah Margaret Peppers, a candidate from the Diocese of Los Angeles. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. J. W. Gresham, D. D., Dean of Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, who has just declined the Bishopric of the Philippine Islands. He preached from the text, "For their sakes I set myself apart", John 17:19. The sermon is to be printed, and copies may be had by writing to the school. After the sermon, Mrs. Peppers was conducted to the communion rail by four deaconesses, and was presented to the Bishop by the Rev. E. L. Parsons, D. D., warden of the school. The service used was the Form of Setting Apart of Deaconesses, authorized to be used in the Diocese of California.

The following is an excerpt from the beautiful service, comprising the obligations taken by the candidate:

The Bishop—Have you well considered in your own mind your purpose to serve God in this office and ministry?

Answer—I have so considered it.

The Bishop—Will you endeavor, so long as you shall hold this office, faithfully to fulfill the duties of the same without fickleness or waywardness?

Answer—I will.

The Bishop—Will you diligently ask of God the grace to enable you to cling to this endeavor, and to make this purpose good?

Answer—I will.

The Bishop—Will you reverently obey your Bishop and other chief ministers, who, according to the Canons of the Church, may have the charge and government over you; following with a glad mind and will their godly admonitions?

Answer—I will endeavor so to do, the Lord being my helper.

Then the Bishop, laying his hands upon the head of the candidate, kneeling before him, said:

Take thou authority to exercise the office of a deaconess in the Church of God, whereunto thou art now set apart.

Blessed be thou of the Lord, my daughter. The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust. Amen.

After the Bishop had pronounced the benediction, the offertory anthem, Kipling's Recessional, was sung by the Rev. Lloyd B. Thomas, a member of the faculty of the school, and Rector of Trinity Church, Oakland.

Following the communion service, the members of the school and their friends adjourned to St. Margaret's House, where brief commencement exercises were held. Diplomas were given to Deaconess Peppers and Miss Frances Berg. Deaconess Peppers has been accepted by the Board of Missions, and leaves in July for the Philippine Islands. Miss Berg leaves immediately for New York, where she has accepted a position in St. George's Parish.

In Memoriam

The following memorial was printed in the weekly Leaflet of St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn., as a tribute to the Rector's sister, Miss Georgina Sanders, who entered into rest at St. Luke's Hospital, April 29, 1918:

The sympathy of every member of St. Paul's Parish goes out to Dr. Ryan and his family in their bereavement. Miss Georgina Sanders, Dr. Ryan's sister, passed away on Monday, April 29th, after a long and painful illness. While her home was in Mt. Clemens, Mich., she had visited Duluth every fall for many years, and endeared herself to all who knew her. She always took an active interest in the various activities of St. Paul's Parish, and was an honest, conscientious Churchwoman. She took a special interest in the music, and often assisted by playing the organ for special services. Her loss will be deeply felt by the many close friends she had made.

A simple but beautiful funeral service was held on Tuesday afternoon, the officiating clergy being Bishop Morrison, the Rev. F. C. Coolbaugh and the Rev. E. D. Weed. The choir sang "Lead, Kindly Light", "For All the Saints", "Peace, Perfect Peace", and "O Paradise, the latter being one of Miss Sanders' favorite hymns. After the service, the body was taken to Mount Clemens for interment in the family lot. While we mourn the loss of a dear friend and sister, we cannot but feel thankful that she is at rest, free from pain and suffering, in the "Paradise of God", and we may look forward with hope to that greatest of all meetings, where, if we are found worthy, we may be reunited with all our loved ones, in that place

"Where loyal hearts and true
Stand ever in the light,
All rapture, through and through,
In God's most holy sight."

Virginia

The 123rd Council of the Diocese of Virginia was held in St. James' Church, Leesburg, May 15-17. A service was held on the evening preceding the Council, at which Canon DeVries of the Board of Religious Education of the Province of Washington spoke in a simple and strong way of the value and pressing need of religious education in our parishes and missions. The Rev. J. F. Ribble of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education spoke briefly, reviewing the progress of teachers' training and referred to the summer school for Church workers being held this week at the University of Virginia in Charlottsville.

The first evening of the Council was devoted to the discussion of Diocesan Missions, with addresses by Bishop Brown, Archdeacon Neve, who spoke of the mountain work, Archdeacon Brydon, of the Colored work, and the Rev. S. A. Morgan, a Colored priest, who spoke well in behalf of his people and their Church progress.

The second evening, Foreign Missions and the war were given consideration. The Rev. J. J. Chapman of Japan spoke on the part Japan has played in the war, the real friendliness of that country for America, and the call to Christianity to keep Japan from becoming a Prussia of the East. Mr. Knapp, the Brotherhood secretary at Camp Lee, spoke enthusiastically of the opportunities for Church work in the camp.

The Council was opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion and the Bishop's address. The Bishop dealt especially with the war and the spiritual obligations of vestries. A war program was given in the afternoon, when addresses were made by a member of the Assyrian Relief Committee, two members of the State Council of Defense and Dr. Williams. The two matters of greatest moment and largest vision that came before the Council were the appointment of a committee, as the result of a resolution presented by Dr. E. L. Goodwin, which formulated a statement of cooperation with other Christian communions in prayers and determined efforts toward Church unity. It was the expressed conviction of the Council that the reply of the House of Bishops to Dr. Newman Smyth's memorial had not voiced the attitude of the Diocese of Virginia. Another important resolution was that offered by the Rev. C. H. Goodwin, proposing a nation-wide mission of repentance and faith through the War Commission of our Church as a war move of a spiritual organism in conjunction, if possible, with other communions—the general mission to be preceded by a mission for the clergy. The committee's report on the resolution was unanimously adopted, and has been sent to the Church War Commission.

New Jersey

ANNUAL MEETING OF WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

This event occurred at Asbury Park, May 14 and 15, and included one joint session with the Annual Convention of the diocese, occurring at the same time and place. There were 155 delegates present, representing 62 parishes.

Mrs. Arthur S. Phelps of Plainfield presided at the sessions, and was re-elected president of the branch. Other officers chosen at the annual election were: Vice president of the upper division, Mrs. W. Dutton Dale, and of the lower division, Mrs. Charles Stevenson; treasurer, Miss H. B. Driggs; treasurer of the United Offering, Mrs. R. Bowden Shepherd; corresponding secretary, Miss Zella Kelly; recording secretary, Miss Florence M. Roberts. Miss Schwartz of Lakewood still has charge of the Junior work, and Mrs. Paul Matthews is chairman of the Devotional Committee. Other committees on Foreign, Domestic, Indian, Negro and Diocesan Missions are well officered.

Resolutions of regret were adopted for the retirement, after long service, of Mrs. John N. Carpender, Miss Isabel Tweedy, Miss Runk, Mrs. Hoe and Miss Melville.

Offerings reported by the several committees were as follows: Domestic, $5,521.83; Foreign, $2,946.23; Diocesan, $1,986.09; Indian, $2,348.31; Negro, $1,123.64; United Offering, $4,315.68; expense fund for Annual Meeting, $62; Missionary Fund, $214.86. The Junior offering is not yet reported.

Pledges made for the ensuing year were many and of wide scope.

LECTURES ON RELIGION IN WAR-TIME

A Series of Papers by the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania

XI
Democracy Made Safe in Christ's Commonwealth

Christ's Gospel, embodied in His Church or Commonwealth, supplies this social grace; our experience of membership in Christ's One Catholic Society preparing and enabling us to discharge all social obligations; and so making Democracy safe for and in the world.

The question faces us, then, with new intensity of meaning: has God intervened to save us? Has He really visited and redeemed His people? Is there a power of God unto salvation ready and available for us in our need?

Remember this is not simply the question of separate souls face to face with their own guilt. We are asking it, not as separate, isolated units, touching one another only at the outside edges of our lives; but as men who know themselves to be, for good or evil, members of society, sharers in a common life, receivers of God and shared by all. The salvation we are seeking is a social salvation. The redemption which can alone redeem us from our social helplessness is a corporate salvation. Is there any such? The question needs an answer. What answer shall we give?

Shall we say: "Of course there is an answer; Christianity is the answer; why should you doubt it." Well, personally, I do not doubt it for a moment. But we must recollect how common the idea is that the War has shown Christianity to be a failure; quite impotent to prevent the War, to deal with it when it is on, to reconstruct the world when it is over. Sometimes this idea is put bluntly, even brutally, as, for instance, recently by a man reported to be expert in education. I am told that his phrase was to the effect that Christianity was knocked out, or bowled over, in the first round of the War. That strikes me as a good phrase. It just suits my purpose. I feel inclined to follow a Shakespearean precedent and thank the gentleman for teaching me that word. Something certainly was knocked out or bowled over in the first round. There is no other word for it. We were fairly staggering when the blow fell and saw our carefully reared spiritual fabric of alleged good-will and peace collapsing like a house of cards. I gather that the educator referred to above has had something of a shock himself. His vehemence of tone and vividness of metaphor imply it. One wonders a little whether his own Christianity has been knocked out or only the Christianity of other people. He does not make this clear. But his point is clear enough. Something that very many people thought was real religion, and no hesitation in calling Christianity, has gone to pieces before our eyes. It can never be resuscitated. It is done for once and for all in our modern world. What is it that has received its death-blow? Why, our old friend and neighbor, the creed of individualism. That has been knocked out.

But, mark you, what has knocked it out is not the War, but the rebirth of our social loyalties which the War has brought to pass. Not the Germans, but we ourselves have burst the bonds of our old narrow and restricted creed. We were (at least those of us were who found the process interesting), keeping watch over our little souls, noting our pangs and projects, hopes and fears, profits and losses We were fancying that God Himself was more than a gigantic individualist just like us. And then suddenly the cry arose: "The republic is in danger: your family, your country, your whole society is threatened. To arms and save it!" Thank God, deep still had power to answer deep. The social bonds, the sacred loyalty that links us soul to soul, proved still our master. It was recognized, as its call and claim broke in upon us, to be none other than the Voice of God Himself. We threw down our idols, crushing them under foot in our scramble to get free from them and to be real men once more. We went forth to do battle for democracy.

Somehow it strikes me as a sort of "looking-glass" philosophy, which the Red Queen, or even Humpty Dumpty might adopt, that advises us to shake our heads dolefully over our escape from our sloth and selfishness. It seems almost idiotic to tell a liberated prisoner that he should meditate in sorrow upon the broken chains lying useless in his cell.

But where does Christianity come in? Has it not failed? Granted that in this War we have gone forth in obedience to our noblest instincts: granted that we have burst our chains: granted that it was God's Voice which roused us from the sleep of individualism: was it also, and unmistakably, the Voice of Christ ?

Ah! now we see the final point. Now we are at the parting of the ways. And yet we should not be in any great preplexity. It should not prove a difficult dilemma. Either Christ is contradicting God, or we, before the War, had been contradicting Christ. Either Christ is quite wrong now, or else we were quite wrong then in our interpretation of His Gospel, making it up for ourselves, out of materials at hand, and calling it His, when it was not.

Surely we shall not hesitate. Surely we shall be ready to take the whole blame for the mistake upon ourselves. See how the sacred name of Christ has been claimed by every kind of sect, to fortify every kind of notion. See how impossible it has been, in recent years, to give the word Christianity any definite meaning whatsoever. Every decent man or woman has desired to be called a Christian, and was deeply hurt if any one objected. But no one at all was able to say what was meant by being Christian.

The thing is just as clear as sunlight, if with open minds, we will but search the records and read the story of how the Gospel came into the world, and what it was and said and meant to men in the first age. It was the Gospel of a Kingdom, of a new social order set up on earth, in which men might find salvation by the grace of God given to them in social life. The keynote of it all was membership. Becoming a member of Christ's Commonwealth, each soul was born into a new life which, as it was a life of fellowship, would also prove to be the only life of his personal salvation. "The Lord added to the Church daily such as were being saved." That is the simple summary of the historian of the first Gospel days.

There is the whole story. The mediatorial or saving work of Jesus Christ, in order to save men truly, must save them in society. Humanity, the great inclusive bond which wraps us round and underlies us and sustains us, has to be redeemed. And the Church, Christ's Body, His New Society on Earth, was to be His agent of redemption. So, and so only, can His Gospel carry to their full conclusion the implications of human nature. So, and so only, can redeeming grace save real men and women as God made them, as they are and always will be.

Go to the records. Read the Scriptures. It is the simplest story ever written, if we only take it as it stands, and lay aside prejudice and preconception. The Church, the Divine society, the beloved community, is at the very center. It really is itself the Gospel, the wonderful good news sung by the angels, waiting to bring peace to men of good will. Everything leads up to it. The earthly ministry of our Lord, through death and resurrection, prepared the way for it. The Holy Spirit is sent down upon it. The power of eternal life, the light of the new age, flows out from it, ready to catch up into its fellowship and mystery all who will come. It is all one glorious story of a new social age, of a new start in fellowship, of a new and real redemption in which men, social by nature, can learn to build themselves up in brotherhood, and so discharge all social obligations.

Democracy made safe in and for the world; that is our longing prayer, the very motive of our warfare, the great thing we are fighting for. Well, the Church of Christ is God's instrument for doing it. God's social grace, in full supply, is what alone can overcome man's individual selfishness, and make men what they were meant to be when God created them, members one of another.

Just one word in closing, in order to point you to the greatest of all the tasks before us. I believe there is an answer to the perplexing question: What brought on the war? I believe it is an answer to which we should give heed. For if we know how this war happened, we may be able to prevent another war from ever happening. I believe the answer to the question is: "The break-up of Christ's commonwealth, the division of Christ's Church." Back of all other causes, this is the chief and all-sufficient one. For the disunity of Christians is something far more grievous than economic waste. It is much worse than a mere dissipation of energy. These would be bad enough. But a divided Church means the Gospel nullified and disallowed. It means that democracy and socialism and every strong effort after social reconstruction is at work without its proper plan and pattern; without the indwelling Spirit of social love and social order; without the secure presence of the Incarnate Lord. That is why I am bold to say that a divided Church, divided by our sins, prepared the way for a divided world and let war loose. And for the future, for the new wonderful age that is before us, if we are to reap the fruit of our sacrifice, if our bravest and dearest are not to die in vain; if real peace is to be ushered in, abiding peace, peace that will have its seat in a real union of human wills bent on serving God, then the only sure guarantee will be a reunited Church, the restoration of visible and organic unity within the world-wide and world-inclusive body of the Lord, in which He binds us to Himself, and in Himself to one another.

May we have grace to follow the clear leadings of God's will, humbly submitting ourselves to His ways of love and wisdom, so that a true democracy, a real brotherhood of citizens serving their State in truth and righteousness, may be made safe forever, to His own greater glory, from whom every family in heaven and earth is named.

(Conclusion.)

North Carolina

The 102nd Convention of the Diocese of North Carolina assembled in St. Luke's Church, Salisbury, on the morning of May 14. The Rev. Frederick Diehl, Rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Rocky Mount, preached a thoughtful sermon of real force from Acts xvii:22-23. The Rev. Morrison Bethea of Wilson was unanimously re-elected to succeed himself as a most efficient diocesan secretary. Col. Charles E. Johnson, who had faithfully served as treasurer for the past thirty-four years, to the regret of his many friends, presented his resignation, which was reluctantly accepted by a rising vote, carrying with it an expression of the warm appreciation of the members of the Convention of his many years of devoted service. Mr. Graham Andrews of Raleigh was elected Col. Johnson's successor. The Rev. Milton A. Barber, chairman of the committee on a Suffragan Bishop for the Negro work of the diocese, presented a favorable report, which was heartily endorsed, and the Convention proceeded to an election. The Rev. James K. Satterwhite, Rector of St. Ambrose's Church (Colored), Raleigh, presented the name of the Ven. Henry B. Delany, D. D., Archdeacon of the Colored work in the diocese. The nomination was seconded by a Negro presbyter, two Negro laymen and two of the most prominent white laymen of the diocese. Dr. Delany was unanimously elected by a concurrent vote of the clergy and laity. He was presented to the Convention, and thanked the brethren for the honor conferred upon him. In his early years, Dr. Delany was a brick mason. He was successively a student at St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, teacher of both brick laying and the classics and vice president of the school. He has been an Archdeacon for the past eight years. He commands the high respect of both races throughout the whole state.

The admirable address of Bishop Cheshire showed not only his able leadership as the Diocesan, but was expressive of the finest spirit of patriotism. He enjoined the clergy to remember their high calling and, while in their sacred office, rendering every service to their country, not to lightly abandon their great vocation for military service apart from ministerial or priestly functions.

Excellent addresses were made by the "personal representatives of the Patriarch of the Assyrian Church" on conditions in the Far East, by the Rev. N. C. Duncan, on Social Service, and the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, on Religious Education.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

Liberia and Haiti have the signal distinction of being equally unknown as missionary fields of the Church, says a writer in the Spirit of Missions. Bishop Lloyd's visit is awakening interest in the African field, and the new departures of the Board of Missions in the republics of Dominica and Haiti, the two "black republics of the Caribbean", are sure to have happy results. The Rev. William Wyllie and the Rev. A. R. Lloyd began work almost simultaneously, the one in Santo Domingo and the other in Port-au-Prince, early this year. The Missionary Bishop of Porto Rico, Bishop Charles B. Colmore, is also Bishop of Haiti.

(Extracts from Bishop Lloyd's letter from Liberia:)

I had hardly landed in Monrovia before I realized that all my notions about Liberia were essentially wrong, because all my thinking had been colored by the idea that here was a people whom some strong arm must carry. I found a people possessing a quality I had not dreamed of—clearly realizing the obstacles to be overcome, recognizing that any mistake on their part will be immediately seized upon as an excuse to exploit their country, facing problems which demand for their solution the most perfect skill of experts, and natural obstacles which only wealth wisely used can control, yet calmly and courageously proceeding with their splendid enterprise, depending on the Almighty God to bring them to their desired haven.

Liberia is beset without and within by many difficulties. The governments of England and France are both friendly towards Liberia, and yet under due process of law England has pre-empted a large and very valuable territory on the north. I am informed that this territory alone makes the Sierra Leone railway profitable. On the south, France, by the same token, controls an even larger area, perhaps the richest of the territory over which her authority extends. The war has caused desperate loss to a nation already embarrassed financially. The commerce of Liberia is practically suspended, so that receipts from customs have fallen to a very small amount. With fidelity to her allies, Liberia has severed all intercourse with Germany, and has thus eliminated an important factor in her economical development. These conditions have increased the difficulty of establishing for the present an adequate school system, without which free institutions must always be in danger. The immediate result of illiteracy shows in the seduction of tribes to which the ideals of human liberty are unknown, by individuals whose interests are served by Liberia's internal unrest; so that at a time when Liberia needs to conserve all her resources, much of her strength must be expended in protecting the law-abiding and preserving the respect due to law and order. The difficulty is made more serious by the malcontents being well armed and provided with ammunition as if from the clouds. The law of the land forbids the importation of firearms. Let Liberia make good, and she will have made possible the realization of the phrase, "Africa for the Africans", whereas the benevolent occupations which now control the greater part of Africa mean inevitably that Africa also must become the white man's country. That Liberia can do it, would be evident to any one who, coming in contact with her people, has the wish to see and comprehend the miracle that has been wrought in her civilized people by their surrender to the splendid ideals which made men of the first settlers.

The following is from Miss Bull's English column in the Monthly Report. The Widely Loving Society is a Church House for children in Osaka, Japan:

"Lent began on the 13th of February and, following their usual custom, the members of the Widely Loving Society began to rise at 5 o'clock in the morning, a half hour earlier than at other times, and attended the morning service in the chapel at 6. Mr. Sobagaki, the evangelist, gave us a series of short Lenten addresses, taking his texts in reference to the order of the Japanese alphabet (or rather syllabary) i, ro, ha, ni, etc. Thus: "Isaac was offered up to God" (i). "The three children were cast into a fiery furnace" (ro). "Hannah prayed to God to give her a son" (ha). Ni told of the anointing of our Lord with sweet smelling (nioi) ointment. There are 48 of the Japanese syllables, and those chosen for the 40 days of Lent very happily fixed the stories in the children's minds and kept their interest to the end. Also, as usual, by a little more economy, amounting to self-sacrifice, and including an all-day abstinence from food on Good Friday, except for the very little children, a sum was gathered for the Easter offering of the Junior Auxiliary. This amounted to 15 yen.

Very quietly and informally, the new barge canal across the state of New York was opened for business the other day. It cost $154,000,000. The first Erie canal was opened for business in 1825, eight years after De Witt Clinton threw out the first spadeful of earth from what the opponents of the scheme long called Clinton's ditch. The first canal cost $7,000,000. The celebration was very elaborate. The first boat to make the passage, by horse power, from Lake Erie to the Hudson was escorted from Albany down to New York by a fleet of steamers, and with all the bells ringing and all the cannon booming along the route. New York went wild with enthusiasm. A medal was struck to commemorate the event. A keg of water brought from Lake Erie was ceremoniously poured into the Atlantic, along with bottles of water from the Nile, the Ganges, the Thames, the Rhine, the Orinoco, the Columbia and elsewhere, which the committee had procured for the occasion. This enlarged canal is admittedly a remarkable engineering achievement. The exigencies of war have brought it into unexpected prominence, and the government has taken it over. The main line has a capacity of 10,000,000 tons of freight a year, which is measured as the conservation of 500,000 freight cars. The canal has three branches, and its total length is 532 miles. The branches are from Troy northward to Lake Champlain, from Syracuse to Oswego, on Lake Ontario, and from a point west of Syracuse to Lakes Cayuga and Seneca. It has no towpath, like the first one, its barges being propelled by their own power, or hauled by tugs, at a speed of 140 miles a day—compared with the 100 miles a freight car is supposed to cover.—Editorial in Boston Herald.

The reports of the three Archdeacons gave evidence of the intensive service rendered by each, and the growing work. Notwithstanding the many demands made in the nation's service, the Thompson Orphanage at Charlotte; St. Mary's and St. Augustines, Raleigh, maintained their high standard of work. The students in the latter two schools are doing everything possible along patriotic lines. Plans were projected for raising $10,000 for immediate needs in the way of repairs and equipment for the Thompson Orphanage, $4,500 of which was pledged on the floor of the Convention. The Rev. Francis M. Osborne, special representative to raise $250,000 for St. Mary's School, reported slow progress.

This being the fiftieth anniversary of St. Augustine's School, it was desired to raise $100,000 as quickly as possible, in commemoration of the event, and one-fourth of the amount has been pledged.

The Woman's Auxiliary not only reported financial gains over last year, but also a splendid spiritual quickening through Bible Study classes, intercessory prayer, corporate communions and the Pilgrimage of Prayer.

The Convention is to meet next year in Christ Church, Raleigh.

NORTH AND SOUTH

By Leo Rich Lewis

Here's to the blue of the wind-swept North,
When we meet on the fields of France!
May the spirit of Grant be over them all,
When the Sons of the North advance.

Here's to the grey of the sun-swept South,
When we meet on the fields of France!
May the spirit of Lee be over them all,
When the Sons of the South advance.

And here's to the blue and the grey, as one,
When we meet on the fields of France!
May the Spirit of God be over them all,
When the Sons of the Flag advance.

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

CHATS WITH LAYMEN

A well informed layman, devoted to the Church, occupied during the week with the concerns of a modern business, drops into my study occasionally to have a chat. He develops some ideas that are worth presenting in these papers.

"There is one thing to which I think the clergy ought to give particular attention in this modern day," he said recently. "To be quite frank, I think the Church services are often too long."

"Yes, we sometimes hear that," I admitted, "but I have always suspected that the objection came from persons who would find them too long, no matter how short they were. You cannot feel, can you, that the major portion of a couple of hours spent in church is too long a time in which to provide for the good of the soul of man in his worship of God? The layman spends more time than that constantly in affairs of amusement or business."

"That is true," he responded, "and it does seem illogical to complain of the length of Church services, and you might properly say that if real interest is developed they would not seem long, but I still maintain that there is an impression among laymen that the services ought to be shorter. I have tried to analyze the impression and to discover the reason for this feeling, and I have formed a few general conclusions about it. That is why I am speaking about it tonight."

"What are your conclusions?" I asked.

"The trouble seems to be that the services appear to be arranged for the most spiritually alert, or keenly interested, or placidly patient members of the congregation. To such the services must seem about right. But to men and women geared to the modern methods of life and action, there is a tendency to restlessness that must be taken into account. It may be wrong, but it is true. Men ought to be different, but they are not. Consequently the prolonging of the service is wearisome, and makes one nervously restless. I take it that you clergy have the same problem that a school teacher has who presides over a room full of children of various capacities and temperaments. What satisfies the bright children is too fast a pace for the dull, and what is satisfactory to the dull is wearisome sluggishness to the bright. You have in a congregation every possible temperament and spiritual capacity. To retain the attendance of the least adaptable, you must make some allowance for them. Otherwise they will remain at home."

"What would you omit from the service to make it shorter?" I asked bluntly.

"I would omit nothing essential," he replied. "But I would study the whole service with reference to avoiding too great length. You must remember that there are apt to be blank spots for some of the congregation. The lessons, especially the Old Testament lessons, are apt to be cloudy. Very few could give any notion of what it was about ten minutes after hearing it read. Then the musical portions which the choir alone renders depend for their value upon the ability of the choir. If the choir has an off Sunday, the result is disquieting. If we are to attract people to the church, we must avoid everything that will make the service an ordeal.

"I attended recently a church in an Eastern city. It was an attractive church, with a good choir of men and women and boys, very well behaved, and an earnest minister. It was not an especial occasion of any sort, yet the service dragged out for nearly two hours. I tried to figure out how it might have been shortened, with this result: The musical portions of the service were poorly selected and too lengthy. The minister might have condensed his ten-minute notices into two, and the sermon would have been vastly improved by being twenty minutes long instead of thirty. Half an hour might easily have been saved without omitting one essential. That extra half hour developed a noticeable restlessness in some of the congregation, and an equally noticeable stupor in others."

"The remedy lies with you laymen," I insisted. "If the service in your church is too long, go quietly to your Rector and suggest it to him. He probably thinks that he is not doing his duty to you unless he keeps you as long as he dares. But a kindly word, opportunely spoken, may make a change for the better. The laymen should suggest it."

"That's what I'm doing," said my friend, with a quiet smile.

Chaplain Silver Accepts New York Rectorship

The Rev. H. Percy Silver, chaplain of the United States Military Academy at West Point, has accepted a call to the Rectorship of the Church of the Incarnation, New York City, and will assume charge of the parish on October 1st. The chaplain will succeed the Rev. Dr. Howard Chandler Robbins, who resigned about a year ago to accept the Deanship of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Dr. Robbins was the Rector about five years ago, and for eighteen years previous to that the Rector was the late Rev. Dr. William M. Grosvenor, who also left to be Dean of the Cathedral.

Mr. Silver was appointed chaplain of West Point in September, 1913, by President Wilson. He had served as chaplain in the United States army from 1901 to 1910, being stationed part of the time at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

The chaplain is 47 years old. He was born in Philadelphia and educated in its public schools. He was graduated from the General Theological Seminary and ordained in 1894. He was Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Omaha; Holy Trinity Church, Lincoln, Neb.; Church of the Good Shepherd, and Canon of Trinity Cathedral, Omaha.

For three years he was secretary of the Episcopal Missionary Department of the Southwest.

Springfield Notes

The Ven. H. M. Chittenden, Archdeacon of Alton, and Missionary at Salem, Ill., met with a painful and quite serious accident while on a visit to Greenville May 20th. While taking a walk just previous to retiring for the night he stumbled over a rope which he thinks was stretched across the sidewalk and broke his right arm, lacerating it also. He received first aid and then was removed to a hospital in St. Louis.

The date of the Consecration of the new Emmanuel Memorial Church and the blessing of the parish house and rectory at Champaign, Ills., the Rev. Geo. P. Hoster, D. D., Rector, has been appointed for June 26th. The rector will preach the sermon. The fine group of stone buildings, the Church and parish house given as memorials by the Polk family and the rectory erected by the parish are about completed. R. A. Cram of Boston, is the architect.

About $25,000 has so far been subscribed toward the building of the new church, parish house and rectory for Trinity Church, Jacksonville, of which Pidmore, of Chicago, has drawn the plans. The group of buildings yill cost about $45,000. There was $9,600 insurance on the old church, so that there are about $35,000 in hand toward the new improvements.

Thomas Dresser White, son of Archdeacon White, has successfully passed the examinations and qualified for entrance to West Point. He will graduate from St. John's Military Academy June 9th, and will enter West Point with the June class, June 14th. He has received six gold medals for literary and military work during his course of four ytars at St. John's, and is the ranking Cadet officer at the school and editor of the "Cadet Days". He will be 17 years of age August 6th.

Aged Priest and Author Dies at Boston

The Rev. Treadwell Walden, a retired priest of the Diocese of New Hampshire, died on May 21st, in his 89th year, at Boston, Mass., where he spent his winters for many years. He was born in Walden, N. Y, a town founded by his father, Jacob Treadwell. His mother was a descendant of Thomas Willett, first English mayor of New York City. Mr. Walden originally studied for the bar, but eventually turned to the Church, and after a course in the General Theological Seminary, was ordained a deacon in 1854, and priested in 1856. For the subsequent two years he was assistant and in charge of Trinity Church, Newark, N. J.

From 1857 to 1863 he was Rector of Christ Church, Norwich, Conn.; from 1863 to 1868, of St. Clement's, Philadelphia; from 1869 to 1872, of St. Paul's Church, Indianapolis; from 1873 to 1876, of St. Paul's Church (now St. Paul's Cathedral), Boston, and from 1882 to 1885, of St. Paul's, Minneapolis. He went abroad in 1886, and for three years lived in England, where he occasionally preached in Westminster Abbey, the Royal Chapel, Savoy, St. Margaret's and other prominent churches.

In 1864 he was appointed by the United States Sanitary Commission—which was practically the Red Cross of the Civil War—on two commissions to investigate the treatment of prisoners of war, both North and South. He was the author of the exhaustive report on the investigation and of the widely read "Narrative of the Privations and Sufferings of United States Officers and Soldiers in Confederate Prisons". He also wrote several religious books and was a contributor to magazines.

In 1858 he married Elizabeth Leighton Law of Norwich, who died in 1883. In 1885 he married again, Grace Gordon of Boston, who died several weeks ago. Of four children, only two survive him, Lionel, a painter in Honolulu and Arthur Treadwell Walden, who lives at Wonalanset, N. H.

Simple Dress for Ladies Urged by Bishop Lines

Bishop Lines of the Diocese of Newark, N. J., in his annual address before the Annual Convention of his diocese last month, urged the women of the Church to forget their social position and dress more simply in church. He said:

"Our great business folks must cease to think they are so busy or that their own plans are so important that they cannot go to Church social gatherings and behave as good Christian people. Our women must forget their social position, and dress so simply in church as not to make other women uncomfortable. They must find their friends in parish gatherings and receptions among such women as I suppose our blessed Lord and His mother knew and loved when they lived in Nazareth or visited in Bethany.

"Women who are never thinking about their social position are a great blessing in a parish. We have allowed distinctions to be emphasized, and what is artificial and unreal to develop so as to threaten the existence of Christian feeling and conduct in our parishes. It is full time that there was a new spirit in us."

Canadian Lord Bishop at Portland, Oregon

Empire Day was celebrated by the combined British societies of Oregon at Portland on May 27. Owing to the close co-operation of the American and British forces in France and at sea, the program was of a more international character than usual. Addresses were delivered by distinguished Americans, as well as by British and Canadian speakers, and representatives of other allied nations. The principal speaker on behalf of the British Empire was the Rt. Rev. Dr. A. U. de Pencier, Lord Bishop of New Westminster, B. C.. Two years ago he obtained leave of absence to serve as chaplain with the Canadian forces at the front, and was made divisional commander of chaplains, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, returning to Canada on April 27. He is a man of energy, and is a leader in the Canadian Church.

The Law of Liberty

By Rev. Percy Trafford Olton

It is significant of the age that we are beginning to have a more hopeful view of the universe and of man's place in it. The old Calvinistic thought of the fixed nature of all creation, the inevitable workings of law, the irrevocable past and the predestined future, the whole conception of a universe in which law is supreme and man but a piece of Divine mechanism, has been gradually modified and changed, until today we are ready to look into God's face with a smile. He is no longer the embodiment of law, the Ruler who is Himself under the domination of His commands, but a Creator, identified with His creation, and free to exercise his personality through laws which transcend those which govern the known order of things. Today we are thinking of God as a Person—we are crediting Him with the freedom which we ourselves enjoy—the freedom of loving, of forgiving, of giving His child another chance, of exercising His prerogatives as Lord and Master.

We have not dared heretofore to think of God in this way. Our theology has given Him a fixed and unalterable position in His universe. He is the Creator and Ruler, and because of His absolute justice and infinite wisdom, He has made laws and settled the whole course of life in the best and only possible way. Therefore He cannot get free from the machinery which He Himself has built up. He has become bound because He has the power to bind. Having established the universe in accordance with His Divine wisdom, He must necessarily be under compulsion to keep His own laws. Else He must admit that He is not omniscient. So runs the reasoning. Through our application of logic to theology, we have made God a creature of His own creation.

And man has been bound by the same inexorable nature of God's laws. He has been born into a universe which is controlled by laws that leave no loophole of escape. There is no place left for mistake, mischance, neglect. If the law is broken, punishment will not only follow inevitably, but there will be no possibility of retrieving the failure. It is out of the question to take a day off, to idle, to sit by the stream listening to its music, or to watch the lark on wing. Man must be perpetually at work saving his soul, and when he is conscious of having sinned, or missed the mark, he may not hope for another chance. It is this machine-made universe and helpless God that Calvinism has produced, and which modern science, in the first flush of discovery, affirmed. There was nothing greater than law, nothing that could be gained of life and hope and immortality but through law.

We have discarded the iron-bound theology of Carvin's day, and science has begun to admit that there is a freedom within law which extends beyond human knowledge. The universe is still subject to the will of its Creator, and that will is still expressed through law; but we have discovered that the law of human reasoning is somehow inadequate to cover the workings of the Divine mind, and in the governing of His world, God is able to exercise His will without regard to man's conception of law.

And in man's life itself we have begun to apply this truth with cheering results. Man has been released from servitude and breathes the free air of a child in the Father's country. The presence of law is still affirmed. Its necessity in a world essentially moral and potentially spiritual is recognized without question. But the universe is no longer conceived of as existing for the purpose of demonstrating law; the horse is now put before the cart, and law is seen to be the expression of the life of the universe.

When that life assumes higher forms and enters into new experiences new laws must result, but law follows, it does not precede the experience.

Not that our experiences are lawless; there is the one great fact that, being a part of life they are a part of God, and must be within the consciousness of the Divine mind. The difference is in our conception of the place which law occupies in the working out of those experiences. Law is no longer a tyrant, but a servant. And God is free in His universe. Miracles are not exceptions in life, but expressions of life; they are the manifestations of a higher life and, in consequence, of a higher law. Man is also free. He does not expect to escape the penalty of law, but, by entering into a higher life, he may hope to pass under a higher law, through which he becomes free from the lower. It is a gospel of hope. With a universe moving through law to life, with a God free to express His personality, and man given another chance, we shall bequeath to the future the most precious of all treasure, human or Divine, the Law of Liberty.

Days of Decision

GRACE CHURCH AND ITS RECTOR

Dr. Slattery made a decision, as announced in a sermon of April 28th, that may be helpful not only to his parish, but to any clergy who are eager and restless to go abroad and do their "bit" in the big war. His topic was a timely and momentously true one, "Days of Decision". After speaking of the general duty of men, women and children to make decisions of sacrifice and service for the nation and the world, he modestly referred to the fact that he was one of twenty American clergy asked by the overseas headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. to go to France, England and Italy to make a series of addresses to the American soldiers. From the Episcopal Church, the selected men were Bishops Gailor and Woodcock, the Revs. Dr. Mann, Slattery and Stires. Bishop Gailor has declined on the ground of important duties in his state and diocese, and in this sermon Dr. Slattery tells his parishioners why he also must decline to accept what is certainly a great honor for any man, and is what he truly describes as "an alluring adventure".

"My problem," he said, "was to discover whether by staying or going I could best serve my country." He had great respect for any call the Young Men's Christian Association made upon him, and the special work among soldiers was intensely appealing. Against this he put, first, the loss of energy and time learning a new work, and having others try to fit into an important work with which he was already familiar. In the parish Church, he felt he had an urgent call to comfort and strengthen those left behind by the soldiers. This would also react on the absent soldiers. Then, too, Grace Chapel had recently lost its Vicar, and the demands of a growing work among Italians and the numerous descendants of an older German congregation made him "inclined to think that the patriotic need is greater in our East Side homes than in the trenches, where the sons of these homes are fighting. I wondered," he adds, "whether I had the right to go thousands of miles away from these members of my parish, when they were adjusting themselves to new conditions in the parochial life. At best I can do only a fraction of what, as their Rector, I ought to do for them."

It is worth noting here that Dr. Slattery is the successor of two of the ablest Rectors ever known in New York City, Bishop Henry Codman Potter and Dr. Wm. Reed Huntington. Without as yet the national fame of either of those truly great Church leaders, his writings are probably more permanently useful, and he is a preacher and public speaker who is increasingly listened to with respect. As an organizer, there is the unmistakable proof of his success in the fact that in this down-town Church, which by every law of experience ought to be having a reduced income, more money is contributed today than ever before, the recent annual total being about $300,000. The Clergy Pension Fund got nearly half a mil'ion from this parish, and recently about one-tenth of the gifts to the Church's War Fund from all over the United States came from the offerings of Grace Church, New York City. This record bespeaks a true people responding to a trusted pastor.

DR. STIRES SAILS FOR FRANCE

By the time of this publication, the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, Rector of St. Thomas Church, is expected in France to spend probably six months as special preacher to American troops. The vestry have voted him leave of absence, and, though regretting his absence, even for so brief a time, there is a feeling of pride on the part of his parishioners that their Rector should be chosen by international authorities as a sort of spiritual ambassador for the United States to the forces of the allies. It is fitting that the clergyman who made his pulpit so much felt for patriotic propagation in the uncertain days preceding our entrance into the war should be one of those thus honored. The present situation and organization of St. Thomas' justify his absence for a time on this international mission more than might be the case in the less fortunate parishes.

THESE COLUMNS TALK ABOUT OURSELVES

WE ARE INTERESTED IN EVERY ITEM— SOME WILL INTEREST YOU— READ TILL YOU FIND IT

Summer is near—Vacation time—Dull times for business in our office—Little to do except issue the paper and pay the bills. Very few receipts during July and August.

As there are several thousand Renewal Subscriptions past due, now due or soon to be due, we wish you would send your dollar now, if you are on that list. This issue is Number 76. Notice the number on your address, if it is less than 86, your renewal is due or will be due before September. May we have it now?

We appreciate, more than we can tell, your subscription last year. The first year of a publication is a critical time. You made its continuance possible—More still, we appreciate your "good words" sent in with renewals—Read a few of them below. They tell us we have reached the hearts of thousands of Churchmen, and find a welcome every week in many a home where there was no Church Weekly before. The future is bright.

NOW FOR THE FUTURE

We have found it a great problem how to reach and interest the One Million Families in the Church, when less than twenty thousand of them have the habit of reading a Church paper. We have finally found a plan that promises well. It is a splendid plan. It works well if it is adopted wth vigor.

We want to place every Church family in the United States on our subscription list before they subscribe.

In each parish we want some Guild or individual to represent us and operate our plan, and do it with business vigor, and begin a canvass as soon as the first issue reaches every family in the parish. Let each one feel that it is a National Movement, and that each who subscribes helps us to reach the "million mark"—It only means $1 for 52 numbers, full of interest and inspiration. Or they may pay the collector ten cents each month. Everybody can do that. Very few will say No, if it is properly presented. If they do say No, of course we drop the name.

We are testing this plan—A number of parishes have adopted it, and sent the address of every person in the parish. We have just received the first report. Here it is.

Number of families in the parish	53
Number paying $1.00 at once	22
Number paying ten cents a month	18
Total Subscribers	40
Number who said No	13

A very simple plan that produced results with 75 per cent of the entire parish. And some of the 13 will doubtless subscribe later. The rector urged it—the committee put "American Push" into it, and the people responded.

This same result can be produced in every parish in the land under the same conditions, and THE WITNESS would have a subscription list of 750,000 copies a week. Think of what that would mean for interest in what the Church is doing and progress everywhere.

A SECOND TEST

We are testing the plan in another way—We have selected the names of 2,500 prominent persons in Church work—Wardens, Vestrymen, Woman's Auxiliary officers, etc. We have placed them on our subscription list, and in the first issue we enclosed a subscription blank, with the letter printed that appears below. And every mail brings subscriptions and "good words"—One man said: Your enthusiasm will carry you beyond the "million mark."

WHAT CAN YOU DO?

See that this plan is put in operation in your parish. The persons are there who can do it, and who would be glad to do it, not only for the commission, but for the Church's sake.

If every person who enjoys the weekly visit of THE WITNESS will help us in the way suggested, there would be a lot more to enjoy it. So we say to every one who reads this column:

HELP US REACH THE MILLION MARK

A FINAL WORD

THE WITNESS is popular not only as a weekly paper whose price is within the reach of every one; but, because of the editorial ability of its Board of Editors. Look over its columns—Read the editorial each week of the Editor-in-chief. There is not a single issue that is not worth a dollar to you, although its cost is only two cents.

Dear Reader:

Please join in this National Movement to put THE WITNESS in every Church family in every parish and mission in the United States. Let us hear from you today.

Yours to win,
THE PUBLISHER

A PERSONAL WORD TO THE READER

I wish it were possible for me to call on you. I know you would receive me courteously and listen with attention to what I have to tell you. And I am equally sure that you would give your co-operation. This, however, is a physical impossibility, for there are one million Church families in the United States. I must therefore be content to write and put my message in print, and I ask you to give it thesame careful consideration you would grant me in a personal call.

First, let me say that I have put your name on the subscription list of THE WITNESS. I want you to let us keep it there, and have your influence in a National Movement to solve a problem that the Church ought to have solved fifty years ago—to put every member in touch with the great beating heart of the Church we all love.

There is a very strange condition existing in the Episcopal Church—an unnatural condition—a condition that you cannot find in any other Christian body. It exists not because you deliberately want it to exist, but simply from habit. And you will be delighted when the habit is broken.

You cannot find a family in the Methodist Church that does not subscribe for its official weekly denominational paper. This same statement is almost as true of the Baptist and Presbyterian and other Church organizations. In the Episcopal Church you can find entire congregations in which not one member subscribes for one of our weekly papers. We are ashamed to confess it. The great mass of our people, well known for their general intelligence and culture, are entirely out of touch with the Church, and know very little of her life and work. 980,000 of the 1,000,000 Church families do not take a weekly Church paper.

A little more than a year ago a few men in the Church with newspaper experience—Bishops among them—determined to wipe out this disgrace and publish a paper that would break this habit, and appeal to the laity generally. They determined on a popular price, and agreed to edit the paper without any compensation to maintain this price. It has proved a remarkable success. It has won its way into the hearts of thousands of Churchmen, as the mail each day testifies. You will find every page full of interest—full of devotion, instruction, inspiration, that will make you love the Church more, and work all the harder for her prosperity.

It only needs a National Movement—the co-operation of every Churchman—the breaking of a habit—some masterful plan, to which everybody will say "YES"—to reach every Church family in every parish and mission in the United States and arouse an interest in Church matters never before experienced.

And when this movement means only ten cents a month or one dollar a year, we do not believe there are many Church people in the United States who will refuse and tell us to take their names off the subscription list.

Will you be one among one million to say "YES?"

THE WITNESS speaks for itself. It makes friends, as well as meets a need. One gentleman wrote in renewing his subscription: "THE WITNESS has become in my home a household necessity." Another wrote: "I never lay down a copy without a desire to do more for the Church." It will win its way to your heart also. THE CONVENTION SEASON

Lexington

The twenty-third Diocesan Council of the Diocese of Lexington met at Ashland, Ky., in Calvary Church, the Rev. George H. Harrison, Rector, on May 28, 1918. Organization followed on the morning of the 29th, after the celebration of the Holy Communion, with the election of the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, Rector of Trinity Church, Covington, as secretary, and the appointment of the Rev. Henry P. Manning, Rector of Trinity Church, Danville, assistant secretary.

The regular routine business was interspersed with the Bishop's annual address, dealing with matters of both diocesan and general interest, and the special evening services, with addresses upon the "Demands and Effects of the War Upon the Church", "The Call of the Times for Church Extension and Religious Education", and "Church Unity; also the special service of intercession on May 30, in accordance with the proclamation of the President of the United States, for which service the Council adjourned that morning. Bishop Burton conducted the service, having set forth a special form, in which place was given for the reading of the proclamation. The Scripture lesson was taken from II Chronicles, 20: "The battle is not yours, but God's".

Amongst the recommendations of the Bishop of the diocese were those looking toward a larger Episcopal Endowment Fund, the preparation of an abstract of diocesan and general Canons relative to the duties of vestries and Church committees, improved requirements concerning the preparation for and admission to the ministry, the regulating of the pruning of communicant lists, and larger support for the missionaries in the domestic fields.

Bishop Burton announced the work amongst the deaf mutes of the diocese at a standstill, owing to the recent provincial organization; the mission at Somerset revived, and the approaching appointment to the office of general missionary of Mr. W. B. Dorn, soon to graduate from the Virginia Seminary.

Interesting reports were received from the Diocesan Social Service Commission, St. Andrew's Colored Kindergarten, St. John's School at Corbin, and Margaret College, at Versailles, all showing great progress. Due credit was given Miss Margaret Hummons, the faithful principal of St. Andrew's, the only kindergarten in Lexington for Colored children. At St. John's School, Corbin, Wentworth Farm, the recent personal venture of Archdeacon Wentworth, progress has been such that plans have been made whereby the diocese, in the interest of which the farm was started, will assume part of the obligation. The report on Margaret College gave credit to Rev. J. M. Maxon for making it the accredited school that it is.

Resolutions were adopted upon the death of Mr. George S. Bartlett, the diocesan commissioner of insurance, and upon the absence of the Very Rev. R. K. Massie, Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, and the Rev. W. G. McCready, D. D., who was unable to attend Council.

Two visitors were in attendance—the Rev. W. H. Hampton, Ironton, Ohio, at one time Rector of Calvary, Ashland, and the Rev. C. L. Pardee, corresponding secretary of the American Church Building Fund Commission, who addressed the Council on the work of the Commission, and offered its aid in the erection of buildings and in the making of certain kinds of repairs.

A special meeting of the Council will be called in the fall to consider certain important matters that will demand attention at that time, which cannot wait until the next regular Council.

Idaho

The Eleventh Annual Convocation of the District of Idaho convened in St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, May 23, at 8 p. m., the Rev. W. H. Bridge of Moscow preaching the Convocation sermon. All the clergy were present, excepting four, two of which number were engaged in war service.

On Friday morning the celebration of the Holy Communion was held at 10 o'clock, the Bishop of the district being the celebrant, assisted by the Ven. Archdeacon Stoy, the Very Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, Dean of St. Michael's Cathedral, and the Rev. Martin Damer. The Woman's Auxiliary of the district also took part in this service, and presented their annual offering. The Bishop's address, delivered at this time, was both interesting and inspiring. "May we not hope", he said, "that after this awful suffering, when the last gun has been fired and the battle flag has been furled, that then the nations of the world will become in reality the kingdoms of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ? Men will then, as a whole, build their social, religious and industrial systems on the precepts of the Holy One. The only government which is going to be safe for the world is practical Christianity. There is no sacrifice too great for us if we can accomplish this."

Among the noteworthy features of the year's work, the Bishop mentioned the building of a new church at Glenn's Ferry, the paying off of mortgages on St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, and Grace Church, Nampa, and the splendid class of 44 presented by Dean Chamberlaine at St. Michael's Cathedral, the largest ever confirmed there.

Immediately after the service, the Convocation convened in the Bishop Tuttle Church House and elected the following officers: Secretary, the Rev. Thos. Ashworth; treasurer, George H. Hackett. The Bishop appointed the following Council of Advice: The Very Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, the Ven. Howard Stoy, the Rev. Martin Damer, R. M. Davidson and George H. Hackett.

The following clergy were elected delegates to the synod of the Province of the Pacific, which will meet in Seattle: The Very Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, Boise; the Rev. S. W. Creasey, Fort Hall; the Rev. D. J. W. Somerville, Lewiston; the Rev. J. H. Dickinson, Pocatello. Alternates, the Rev. W. H. Bridge, Ven. Howard Stoy, Martin Damer, Rev. Thos. Ashworth. Lay delegates: F. S. Randall, Lewiston; D. W. Church, Pocatello; R. M. Davidson, Boise; C. L. Longley, Twin Falls.

The sessions of the Convocation were full of interest, and several patriotic resolutions were offered and adopted bearing on the Church's work in supporting the government in this crisis.

On Trinity Sunday, May 26, an ordination service was held in St. Michael's Cathedral, in the presence of the clergy of the district and a large congregation. Andrew Luscombe Bramhall was ordained deacon and the Rev. Thomas Ashworth and the Rev. Homer Ellis Bush were advanced to the priesthood, the presentors being the Ven. Howard Stoy, the Rev. Martin Damer and the Rev. D. J. W. Somerville. The Bishop preached the sermon.

A very interesting commencement took place at St. Margaret's Hall from May 24th to 26th, culminating in the delivery of diplomas to the two graduates on Sunday evening. The Rev. Mr. Somerville of Lewiston preached the baccalaureate sermon. The Bishop delivered the diplomas and made a short address. The school has a very good outlook for the coming year.

ADVERTISING THE CHURCH IN KANSAS

Several of the daily papers at Topeka, Kans., were devoted to reports of the recent Convention of the Diocese of Kansas held in that city, during its sessions, as a result of the efficient work done by the Bureau of Advertising and Publicity, appointed by Bishop Wise. The Rev. J. H. Harvey of Pittsburg, Kans., is chairman of the Bureau, which has succeeded in arousing considerable interest among the clergy and laity of the diocese in giving publicity to the work of the Church. The following is the first bulletin issued since the Convention met, by the Advertising Chairman of the Bureau, Mr. Charles Haynes:

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH AS AN ADVERTISER

The Episcopal Church Has The Greatest Commodity in The World—Spiritual Satisfaction.

To advertise this intangible, indescribable feeling that one has when he gets the real benefits of the service is a difficult task. First we must convince our own Church people, and get them into the spirit of the movement—get them to realize that what they have, others have not—that their Church is not for private, selfish worship, then the results will come.

The public is open to, and can easily be swayed by advertising, but the advertising is merely an introduction, it simply creates a desire to know more, or raises curiosity, and that gets people into your Church.

When you get them into your Church, then it is the time to open their eyes and touch their souls. The appeal to the intellect is the thing that gets results.

One of our "customers" (I can call him that, because he came once to "sample our goods" and, though a member of another religious body, became a regular attendant of the Sunday evening service) said, "I enjoy these services, and get a great deal of spiritual, as well as mental satisfaction; one comes here and gets instruction."

Advertising and publicity are used together, but in their real meaning, they are different. Advertising is that written, or printed, word of salesmanship that creates a desire for your product. It instructs, educates and prepares the public for your publicity.

Publicity is that form of advertising that is designed to educate, to keep desires alive and to fan the flame of desires.

As a drop of water, followed by other drops, continually dropping wears away a stone, just so will publicity and advertising wear away the prejudice of the public for the Episcopal Church, and more and more people realize that the Church offers what they are seeking,—Religious Truth, and above all, Spiritual Satisfaction.

Spiritual Satisfaction is our product. Spiritual Satisfaction comes only with a whole-hearted belief; Spiritual Satisfaction comes with a true understanding of what you need, and a real way of getting it. Believe in your Church, believe in advertising, get your parish in the attitude of progress, and open the eyes of the public.

Ordinations

On Sunday, June 9th, in St. Matthew's Church, Kenedy, Texas, the Bishop of West Texas ordained to the diaconate Mr. Paul Delafield Bowden, B. S.

Morning Prayer and Litany was said by Chaplain Frank A. Rhea. The Rt. Rev. James. S. Johnson, D. D., was the celebrant. The candidate was presented by his father, the Rev. Upton B. Bowden, who also preached the sermon.

Mr. Bowden will work during the summer under Dr. Stevens, Rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, in the Red Cross service at the base hospital at Fort Houston, and will complete his course at the Virginial Theological Seminary next year.

Two candidates for the diaconate and one for the priesthood were ordained by Bishop Lawrence on June 5th. In Emmanuel Church, Boston, Dean Rousmaniere of the Cathedral presented the Rev. Michael Paul St. Agnan Huntington to the Bishop for ordination to the priesthood. Mr. Huntington has been assisting at the Cathedral. He is a grandson of the first Bishop of the Diocese of Central New York, the late Rt. Rev. Dr. Frederick Dan Huntington. George Leonard Downe was presented by the Rev. T. R. Kimball, Rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Dorchester; and Worcester Perkins was presented by his uncle, the Rev. Dr. Worcester, Rector of Emmanuel Church, for ordination to the Diaconate. Mr. Drowne has been conducting services at Soughton under the Rev. Mr. Kimball and Mr. Perkins will go to Labrador to take up work under Dr. Grenfell.

BOARD OF MISSIONS—MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

An unusually large attendance marked the June meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions.

The treasurer's report, which is always one of great interest, showed a decrease in offerings of $46,559. This decrease can be traced almost entirely to falling off in parish offerings, which may in turn be traced to the extra months in the fiscal year. Under the old plan, about this time parishes would be making a strenuous effort to pay up their apportionments. Now, however, with December 31st as the date of the closing of the fiscal year, it is to be presumed from the report that they are waiting until the early fall to make this effort. There must be taken into consideration also the many other appeals that have come up, which have undoubtedly lessened the emphasis placed in many parishes upon the raising of the apportionments.

In the domestic field, the resignations of Miss Frances M. Young as United Offering worker in Arizona, and Miss Myrtle Candill, in Asheville, N. C., were accepted.

The appointment of Miss Florence L. Everett as teacher in St. Elizabeth's School for Indians in South Dakota was approved.

An appropriation was made to aid the Bishop of Wyoming to place a clergyman in charge of the mission at Lusk, Wyoming.

The educational secretary brought to the attention of the Executive Committee a proposed conference of students of the Episcopal Church to be held this year. The Board of Missions, in conjunction with the General Board of Religious Education and the Joint Commission on Social Service was asked to share the traveling expenses of the delegates attending this Council. The Board regretted that it felt unable to make such an appropriation. It did, however, appoint William C. Sturgis, Ph. D., educational secretary and Deaconess Henrietta Goodwin the student secretary, as its representatives on the Council.

Arrangement was made for the continuance of the training in the Philadelphia Deaconess School for the year 1919 of Miss Virginia L. Page, Miss Helen N. DeHaven and Miss Elizabeth L. Haun.

In the Latin American field, a loan of $3,000 from the $100,000 fund set aside from the undesignated legacies was granted the Bishop of Porto Rico to enable him to complete the second wing of the new buildings for St. Andrew's School at Mayaguez. It is expected that the Bishop will repay this sum from specials.

In Brazil, arrangements were made to enable the Bishop to pay off all indebtedness on the Southern Cross School at Porto Alegre.

Miss Katharine P. Gass, step-daughter of the Bishop of Mississippi, was appointed as missionary teacher in the Cathedral School at Havana, Cuba.

The retirement of Miss E. H. McCollough, who has been a worker at Mayaguez, Porto Rico, since June, 1908, was accepted, and a suitable pension provided from the United Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary.

In the foreign field, an offer of the China Medical Board of $17,625 for the equipment and improvement of St. James' Hospital, Anking, was accepted with much appreciation. The China Medical Board also assured the Board of its readiness to appropriate $4,200 a year for five years for the salary of a physician, a stenographer and toward the maintenance of the hospital. Dr. Harry B. Taylor was authorized to appeal for $10,000 to add to the amount granted by the China Medical Board to secure the necessary equipment for the hospital.

The Rev. T. M. Tong, one of the ablest of the younger clergy in the District of Shanghai, who has been in this country taking post-graduate work at the Philadelphia Divinity School to better equip himself for teaching in the theological department of St. John's University, expressed his desire, approved by Bishop Graves, and urged by Dean Bartlett, to remain in this country another year. Permission was given and arrangement made to secure the services of Mr. Tong as speaker on behalf of the Board during the present summer.

The Bishop of Shanghai was authorized to sell certain property which is not now needed in Shanghai and to use the funds to establish permanently All Saints' Parish in that city.

Tennessee Rector Goes to France

The Daily Times, Chattanooga, Tenn., in reporting the departure of the Rev. Dr. W. J. Loring Clark, Rector of St. Paul's Church of that city, to serve as chaplain of the Red Cross in France, says:

Dr. Clark has been rector of St. Paul's for more than ten years. He came to Chattanooga from Cavalry Church, Memphis. Prior to that time he had been a pastor in St. Louis. St. Paul's has grown substantially under his rectorship and it is now one of the most influential congregations in Chattanooga. That Dr. Clark is universally beloved by his people is telling but a part of the high esteem in which he is held in this city. He has been active in every phase of the city's life, from religion to sports, and has won the friendship of the masses in unusual degree.

The Rector's home has had its shadows cast by the bloody war across the seas. It now has its anxieties day and night because of another who volunteered with the American forces among the very first. While mourning for the son who gave his life fighting side by side with the gallant Canadians and worrying over the safety and well-being of the other who is liable to be in the thickest of the fight at any time, Dr. Clark has been among the busiest of workers at home in support of the soldiers at the front. He served three training camps as chaplain of Camp Warden McLean and endeared himself to every one of the 6,000 or more men who passed through that training. He is a recognized leader and a most liberal supporter of the Red Cross in Chattanooga.

Patriotic Service

Under the leadership of the rector, the Rev. H. Fields Saumenig, every member of St. Peter's Church, Rome, Ga., is working in some capacity for the government. The Rector is giving a great part of his time to war work. He served as a member of the Executive Committee of the last Liberty Loan drive and as chairman of an important committee for the Red Cross drive and is now working in the War Savings campaign. Special services were held in St. Peter's on National Prayer Day. At 8 p. m. there was a celebration of the Holy Communion which was largely attended. At 11 o'clock a service of intercessions was held with a congregation that taxed the capacity of the church, many being unable to get inside the church. The Masonic bodies attended the service, and the vested choir rendered the music. The Rector preached. Many persons stood in the aisles and doorways during the entire service. The reverence and dignity of the service made a deep impression upon the many citizens of Rome who attended. A short vesper service of prayers and intercessions was held at 6 o'clock, when another large congregation was present. A daily prayer service is being held at St. Peter's week-day mornings at 10 o'clock. Certain members of the vested choir have volunteered their services for certain days each week. This brief service of intercessions with music is attracting members of other congregations.

Open for Service

Trinity Church House, Connellsville, Pa., was opened for first services on June 2, and will soon be opened for all parish work. The parish was organized in 1817, and prospered for many years, but at last abandoned about 1911. Two years ago it was revived as a part of the associate mission under St. Peter's Church, Uniontown, and the Rev. M. S. Kanaga was appointed Vicar. The parish has grown from 4 to 109 communicants and has 214 adherents. The old church building being involved in litigation, a new property was purchased in the heart of the city in December. The work of remodeling and furnishing has been done almost entirely by the men of the parish. It contains a chapel seating 100 persons, a study, kitchen, five class rooms for Sunday school and Guild purposes. At the end of the war, it is planned to build a suitable church and to use the present building for a parish house only.

Our Soldiers Live Clean Lives Morally

The Spokane, Wash., Review says editorially:

Bishop Israel's statement that "the morals of the American forces overseas are of the highest type" will be comforting to millions of relatives in the United States. The Bishop adds that "the soldiers lead clean lives morally and the percentage of indiscretions is insignifcant, compared with the ordinary American city."

This cheering message comes from high authority. Bishop Israel has been working in France for 10 months, entirely with the soldiers, visiting the front line trenches and the training camps, and he confidently says "the reports of immorality among the soldiers here are false and come from those not familiar with the life of the troops in Europe."

Such false reports were palpably improbable. From military considerations alone it stands to reason that the commanding officers have taken every precaution to combat vice, for vice impairs the man power of their armies. It saps the soldier's vitality and puts its victim in the hospital. It fights on the side of the enemy.

No one has a keener realization of that fact than General Pershing and the members of his staff, and they have no false modesty to deal with in making their fight. They talk in plain terms to their men, far plainer than the average American parent has spoken in the past.

Death of a Missionary in China

A message from China to the Board of Missions announces the death in Kiukiang of Rev. James Jackson, D. D. For more than twenty years Dr. Jackson was one of the missionaries of the English Wesleyan Church in China. In 1900 he was confirmed by Bishop Graves, and later in the same year was ordained to the diaconate and priesthood. After a year on the teaching staff of St. John's University, Shanghai, he became, in February, 1900, Rector of what was then Boone School. Dr. Jackson's experience and ability as an educator were at once felt in the school administration. In 1903 a college department was opened. Later, theological and medical schools were organized. In 1909 Boone College was incorporated as a University, and two years later the first class was graduated with the degree B. A.

Dr. Jackson retired from his duties as president of the University about a year ago, and has since been living in Kiukiang as a missionary employed in the District of Anking, under Bishop Huntington.

Visit of Bishop Matthews to Cincinnati

The Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop of New Jersey, paid a visit to his home city, Cincinnati, recently. The Church gave a dinner in his honor at the University Club, at which the visiting Bishop spoke of the war work of the Church, and told what was being done at several of the cantonments, especially praising the good work done by the Diocese of Southern Ohio and the Diocese of Ohio at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe. Bishop Vincent paid loving tribute to Bishop Matthews' faithful work as a presbyter of the diocese for eighteen years, introducing him at the request of the president of the club, Mr. W. R. Sterling, who was in the chair.

During his visit, Bishop Matthews received into the Sisterhood of the Community of the Transfiguration, at Bethany Home, in a beautiful service, and after a deeply spiritual address, Sister Constance Anna, Sister Amy Martha, Sister Olivia Mary and Sister Anna Grace. At the Eucharist, Archdeacon Reade was Gospeler and the Rev. Jos. L. Meade, chaplain at the Home, Epistoler. These sisters add greatly to the strength of the community. The first is a trained nurse, the second an expert in work among younger boys, the third a niece of the Bishop and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Matthews, has had training as a deaconess and teacher, while the fourth has been connected with the Home since childhood, and is trained in many lines of practical work. If the need comes, the whole sisterhood will be available for work for the country in conditions arising from or following the war. It will be remembered the sisterhood did splendid relief work in the great 1913 flood.

St. Peter's Church building, at Kasson, Minn., has been greatly improved inside and out, at a cost of $300, which is a considerable sum for a small church to raise. Bishop McElwain will visit the mission and administer the rite of confirmation to a class in July. The Rev. A. H. Wurtele of Rochester is in charge of the mission.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAY

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Saint John Baptist's Day

THE COLLECT

Almighty God, by whose providence thy servant John Baptist was wonderfully born, and sent to prepare the way of thy Son our Saviour by preaching repentance; Make us so to follow his doctrine and holy life, that we may truly repent according to his preaching; and after his example constantly speak the truth, boldly rebuke vice, and patiently suffer for the truth's sake; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"He shall be filled with the Holy Ghost even from his mother's womb", said the angel to St. John Baptist's father. That is the reason the Church bids us celebrate this saint's wonderful birthday rather than his deathday. It is good to remember that God prepares people to carry on and carry out His plans. When the times seem most out of joint, then is our chance to show that we really do trust God to send men the leader that they need.

The way of the Lord is to be prepared for by repentance. This teaching or doctrine of St. John Baptist is one that we pray we may follow. Let us remember that repentance is a constructive act. The way that the prophet makes for the Christ is not simply a ploughed up, deeply-furrowed way; it is a way made smooth by well-fitted acts of justice and mercy and righteousness. As you can see for yourself, if you will read St. John's sermon recorded in St. Luke 3. The repentance that makes a way for Christ is a state of life rather than a succession of remorseful feelings. The best way to renounce a sin is not simply by denouncing it, but by cultivating its opposite virtue. The best way St. John boldly rebuked vice was by speaking the truth and living a holy life. These are the two things which drove John's hearers to a true repentance. They make the best kind of prophetic preaching today. In the development of the Christian character, true repentance must ever have a prominent part. There are all sorts of penitence or repentance, or no repentance, doctrines being preached today, and the call of St. John Baptist is badly needed in many quarters of the Church. That boldness which is born of a life wholly given to the forgiving touch of the Saviour is perfectly consistent with the humility of the saints which has been called "the livery of heaven". In fact, without that humility which recognizes the necessity of depending on God rather than on self, one's boldness is but the mark of a religious prig, and is probably assumed for advertising purposes.

The Church must lead in all moral reforms. Her people should be among those reliable forces for good in a community who do not spend themselves in sound and fury and spasm, but are always ready "to suffer patiently for the truth's sake", as well as "to boldly rebuke vice". Those members of the Church who, for example, wink at a double standard of morality, or who think that prohibition is a good thing for "the lower classes", or are unwilling to continuously back up political and social reforms, and all preventive agencies for purifying community life, are not going to have much interest in this day's observance. Those parishes who are absorbed by the serious conditions of local problems, to the utter disregard of the problems of localities not so near at hand, are not going to be found flocking to church on this day.

Those priests who feel they have done their duty in helping clean up a place (in any sense of that word "clean"), when they have stirred up some one else to do the work, are going to miss the chance of a human contact which will kindle the Divine spark and produce a permanent effect. And their observance of this day will be perfunctory and be apt to stop with an admiration of the Collect's phrasing, rather than a determination to fulfill its clauses with every atom of their spiritual and mental strength.

God help us, priests and people alike, to know and realize that we bear our witness best when word and deed alike show that we have repented, are repentant, and also have had the baptism of both water and the Holy Ghost. To such people this birthday is a wonderfully helpful anniversary, and this Collect is a wonderfully helpful prayer.

FOR THE EPISTLE

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field: the grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the word of our God shall stand for ever. O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God! Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young. —Isa. xl:1.

God expects His Church to put heart into the people. He also expects His Church to be the conscience of the state. Therefore her business is not to smooth over or patch up, but to probe deep, to find the sources and centers of infection and weakness, and then to apply the remedies that cleanse and soothe and heal. "Speaking comfortably to Jerusalem" does not mean to flatter and coddle and pet a religious community. Neither does it mean to scold and worry that community. It means to speak the truth in love, after making doubly sure that what is spoken is really truth. Comfort does not lie so much in the tone as in the purport of a message. "Unctious tones" somehow have grown to be synonymous with the deceitful prophesying of smooth things. And when men are at warfare, the less deceit there is, the less danger is there of ultimate failure. Every congregation, small or large, should realize that God permitted that congregation to be placed there so it could "fight a good fight". Unfortunately, too many congregations have the combative spirit actively at work shaking the bones of family skeletons in their ecclesiastical closets, rather than uniting them in an ardent warfare against the world, the flesh and devil, who dance around their unhappy cauldron at the Church's very portals, and bear an unholy witness to their satisfaction over the condition which besets the people within the Church. God can not tell a Church to speak comfortably, nor expect that Church to prepare the way of the Lord, when its members are not in love and charity with their neighbors, and do not intend to change their manner of spiritual living. Meanwhile the valley still leads to lower depths, the mountains and hills still are obstacles in the Lord's way, and the crooked places continue to torture the feet of the seeker after God. God wants His Church not only to be a good Samaritan, but to get to work and clean up the road so that it will be safe to go from Jerusalem to Jericho. And then Jericho will want to come up to the level of Jerusalem. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. And setting cities on hills is missionary work, and it never can be done till the citizens of Jerusalem get to work and keep at work on the plan which will let all flesh see the glory of the Lord revealed in a re-made and exalted Jericho, which is not simply an imitation Jerusalem, but a repentant and sanctified Jericho.

"All flesh is grass"! Mere humanity cannot stand God's Spirit, which is a consuming fire, purging out the dross. Every community depending on human "pep" to reform itself and its neighbors will find itself a withering, dried up community, living up to good standards by fits and starts. But the Christian community which will lift up its voice with a message which is the word of God, that community will be both strong and tender. Old and young will rejoice in it and over it, and people will flock to its borders with joy.

What hope there would be in the signs of the times if on June 24th every year the city fathers and the local statesmen and the politicians—men who believed in the future of their polis or city—would assemble in a big cathedral and listen to a message which should put heart into them, stir up their consciences, and see what had been done by them as Christians since last St. John Baptist's Day to prepare in their community a highway for the coming of the glory of the Lord.

THE GOSPEL

Elisabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son. And her neighbors and her cousins heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her, and they rejoiced with her. And it came to pass, that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father. And his mother answered and said, Not so, but he shall be called John. And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name. And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called. And he asked for a writing table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God. And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judæa. And all they that heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be! And the hand of the Lord was with him. And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began: that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life. And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins, through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel.—St. Luke 1:57.

The nativity of St. John Baptist is a clarion cry for people to examine themselves as to their duty to God, country and home—the three foundations of Permanent Christian civilization. And in these fundamental things, what a wonderful part does "Mother" take! The Church's efforts to preach continuously to its women members the message of motherhood—the motherhood of the barren as well as of the fruitful womb. No woman's full time ever comes until in a figurative or, more happily, in a material sense she knows the pangs and subsequent joys of motherhood. And that Church is a tomb full of dead men's bones if its walls do not, from week to week, hear echoes of spiritual births at the waters of the font.

"His name is John". Both parents keenly responsible for placing an ideal before their child which even his name should recall! Both parents, early in the child's life, co-operating with the Church in setting that ideal before their son in connection with his ideals and duties as a son of the Church. A wonderful lesson here for fathers as well as mothers, reminding them that they have a joint responsibility in keeping the child's standard before him, and dare not shift it to the other's shoulders.

"What manner of child shall this be?" People have a habit of sneeringly or slightingly speaking of the children of the parsonage or of some godly parents who do not happen to live under the eaves of the sanctuary; but the sneerers themselves most likely owe every good trait they have to their home training, at the foundation of which was a godly mother at least. And the history of most all of the world's famous leaders for two or three centuries past finds them cradled in a rectory, or a manse, or a parsonage. Young people who discount God in their plans for making a home are bound to come to grief sooner or later, and their children's nativities alas, are entirely of the earth earthy.

"Blessed be the Lord God of Israel." The Benedictus. Why mutilate it in the rendering of praises to God, even if a rubric seems to permit it? To sing the first four verses and stop is like unto cutting the painting of the Madonna della sedia into two parts; it mutilates a Divinely inspired portrait meant to arouse devotion and resolution in the beholder. Either produce the Benedictus in its entirety, or hide it altogether by the curtain of silence.

"The child grew and waxed strong in spirit." The sacred duty of parents is not to break a child's spirit, but to strengthen that spirit. A wonderful gift from God is a high-spirited child. The mother and father, however, need to keep close to the Altar of God, and pray for the spirit of wisdom, in order to rightly guide that spirit, more by actions and example, however, than by precept. A boy of high spirit, that is, right spirit, will just naturally grow up to renounce the devil and all his works, the pomps and vanities of a world which neglects God, and the sinful, because uncontrolled, desires of the flesh. He will just naturally boldly rebuke vice, and patiently suffer for the truth's sake. He will just naturally ally himself with those forces which will help prepare the way for Jesus Christ wherever his lot is cast. And he will just naturally do it because, by precept and example, his spirit was trained by the best people in the world—his God-fearing father and mother. And in conclusion let me say this refers to god-parents as well as to parents.

We have now completed, in the morning Old Testament historico-topical course, the return and establishment of the Jews in their own land, together with many reforms instituted by Ezra and Nehemiah.

For several weeks the morning lessons, both Sundays and week days, will consist of the Old Testament law. What we know as Judaism was a development from the return to the coming of the Christ, a development due to the attempt to enforce the law as given in the Pentateuch. The Sunday morning lessons for some time are from Deuteronomy, a most readable book, differing from all other Old Testament books as combining the legal and prophetic points of view, historically suiting the period we are now studying and topically fitting the appeal for obedience which belongs to the last half of the Church year.

The selection for this morning is an appeal for obedience, and is based first on the spirit of redemption, which had been theirs, a part of their unique position among the nations of the world, and based secondly on the blessings which should come to them and their children. This is addressed to a nation which (though knowing it not) was on its way to becoming a Church, while the second lesson is the corresponding appeal to the Christian Church itself, the "ecclesia", or "called" of God.

There is much in these lessons that goes with the themes of providence and regeneration in Collect and Epistle, and the two together are timely for us now with their double message to nation and Church. Another theme (Epistle) is creation, with which regeneration is closely connected, and these two themes determined the selection of first and second evening lessons—God's appeal to Job in the presence of the mysteries of nature, and the Christ's instruction of Nicodemus on being born anew. The former recalls Bishop Butler on the unwisdom of criticising a system so vast of which we know so little. At the same time St. Paul (in Epistle) brings out, in a very different manner from the once famous Bridgewater treatise, that nature is full of sufferings which may be the means to us of being born anew, while the sons of God on their part may be the redemption of nature. This is a great advance on the negative position of Job. The latter part of the second lesson carries the truth of regeneration into eternal life, here and hereafter, and this shows how alone the prayer of the Collect may be answered, passing through things temporal, so as to fail not of the things eternal.

On week days the Old Testament law of the morning is paralleled by the Spirit at work in the New Covenant, and in the evening the Old Testament wisdom of Proverbs is paralleled by the life of Him who was the Wisdom of God—the only life that ever properly balanced things temporal and things eternal, giving to each its due. Various themes will be found suitable to the Sunday.

Next Sunday, the Deuteronomic theme of obedience is continued, while the second lesson brings out the failure of the ancient Church to attain to a realization of the Covenant position and the power of the New.

The first evening lesson illustrates the Collect, the second lesson being based on Numbers xxiii:10 (b).

THE AIRSHIP FORETOLD

(This striking prophecy was first published in 1842.)

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;

Saw the heavens fill with commerce,
argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens fill with shouting,
and there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm,
With the standard of the peoples
plunging thro' the thunderstorm;

Till the war drum throbbed no longer,
and the battle flags were furl'd
In the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber,
lapt in universal law.

—From "Locksley Hall", by Alfred Tennyson.

New Jersey

Meetings have been held recently of the Convocations of Burlington and New Brunswick, that of the former in Trinity Church, Vineland, and of the latter at All Saints' Church, Navesink. The preacher at Vineland was the Rev. A. Q. Bailey of Wildwood. The leader of discussion on the topic considered at both places was, at Vineland, the Rev. Harold Morse, and at Navesink, the Rev. L. E. Hubard.

The discussion on both occasions was the revision of Canons by the Convention to make the Board of Missions a diocesan rather than a convocational institution, and both Convocations recommended the change.

The Archdeacon's reports showed much progression in most of the missions of the diocese.

Annual elections resulted in the re-election of all the existing officers.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

(Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colo.)

"OBEY", IN THE MARRIAGE SERVICE

"Objection is often made to it, and the difficulty is sometimes evaded by the reply that the woman is required to promise to obey, because it is plain that the man will obey anyhow. It is a belated conventionality, that is what is the matter with it. We have emerged, and are still emerging, from a savage state, leaving that behind. It represents a conception of the marriage relation in which, I hope, we believe no longer. It belongs to a day when a woman was supposed to have no will, and when it was seriously doubted if she had any soul.

The husband is as much bound by the law of marital obedience as is the wife, but he is not to obey her, nor is she to obey him; both are to be obedient to those high laws of reason, and courtesy, and love which are the laws of God. Domination cannot live with courtesy. If a marriage is right, there is no reason for any promise of obedience. Such a vow is as impertinent between wife and husband as between friend and friend. If the marriage is wrong, no subjection can mend it?"

Quoted from Dean Hodges.

So why retain the word "obey", when it makes the marriage ceremony a farce? When girls about to be married are asked what they will do about it, they say they will mutter something that rhymes with "I will" and the clergyman will never know the difference. We ought to have a ceremony that all women will reverence. If men married children fourteen years old, as they did in our grandmothers' day, it would be proper for the girls to obey their husbands until they came to maturity, but today equals marry, so a service for equals should be used.—By Gabrielle Weeks, in Living Church, July 11, 1914.

Men are not good enough to be able to direct their wives. You yourself said recently in "Editor's Question Box": "The statistics from the cantonments show that a very large proportion of young men in our towns and villages lead immoral lives. One scarcely dares to guess at the percentage."—Editor's Question Box, May 25, 1918.

Can such as these men are be fitted to direct the lives of their wives, many of whom are pure, and good, and religious women? Can a wife reverence such a husband?

The use of the word "obey" is not confined to the marriage service. It is used frequently in other connections. The priest agrees to obey his Bishop, although frequently he is a much better man than his Bishop. The soldier obeys his captain, often with the same reservation. We obey the civil authorities, always in the sphere in which the leader has a right to lead. Every institution must have a head. His powers may be limited to the more chairmanship of a meeting, but in that capacity he is to be obeyed.

The word "obey" in the marriage service most certainly is not a servile obedience, but merely the recognition of the fact that the family is an institution, and that in certain matters the man is supposed to be the head of it.

For example, in ordinary cases the man is supposed to make the living, to provide the home, to govern the children. He may or may not do these things well, but he ought to do them, because he is a man.

A two-headed institution is an anomally.

The woman does not yield her rights as an individual; she merely signifies that in certain things the man is to take the lead. As St. Paul intimates, a man with long hair is a poor sort of a man. So a man who is not the head of his family is a poor sort of a man, and the woman who will marry an immoral man ought never to take any vows.

She is a free moral agent, and has no business to ask the Church to bless her marriage to one who will not honor or cherish her. In the normal family the man should retain some sort of leadership. The word should stand as a mark of what the ideal is.

The man promises as much or more than the woman. He promises to endow her with all his worldly goods. Neither may keep this promise, it is true, but a family in which the woman takes the lead is a reversal of the ideal. The Church keeps alive the ideal, even during the period when men may be unworthy of the trust imposed upon them. For example, for the woman to say, "I will not live where my husband makes the living", is for her to take an unfair advantage of the marriage relationship. For a woman to say, "I will not bear children", is for her to deny the function of the family. It requires more grace to obey than it does to command, but it is unfair to put the responsibility of leadership on the man and then to deny the privileges thereof. And a woman who is not willing to trust the man that she marries with such leadership ought not to marry him. She has not found the man whom she trusts enough to enter into the marriage relationship.

It may be a woman's misfortune that she is not constituted by nature to be the leader of the brood but in her subordinate capacity it is true she may have the brains, the conscience and the grit, but even then she owes something to the man she has married, that he may preserve his self- respect. I cannot agree with Dean Hodges, nor with Gabrielle Weeks.

Should the priest face the people or the Altar in reading the Epistle and Gospel at the celebration of the Holy Communion?

We believe that in the primitive Church the Epistle and Gospel were read facing the people. The theory that in the Epistle and Gospel we are engaging in an act of worship rather than in a service of instruction has caused the reverse to be a custom. Personally, we believe that both Epistle and Gospel should be read facing the people, as they are primarily a message for the people to hear.

Dean Bell says, "According to al ancient rites, the ablutions should im mediately follow the communion o priest and people. Liturgically, thi is undoubtedly the right place for th ceremony. Consumption after th blessing involves a second commun ion at the same celebration, an obviou irregularity." What think you?

Technically, I think that he i right, but if it is the intention of thi branch of the Church to direct he priests to do this after the blessing it is going too far to say that she ma not include the act in the one cele bration. Each branch of the Churc can regulate such matters, and the become the law for us, without per alty.

Religious Psychology and the Soldier

By the Rev. Wm. Heilman, War Commission Pastor, Camp Custer, Mich.

Mr. C. J. S. Williamson, Brotherhood of St. Andrew secretary in Camp Custer, is a keen student of soldier psychology, and the results he has been getting in his constructive program are so good that the Church should know the principles on which he has been working.

Mr. Williamson's first principle is that the soldier should be offered some adequate means of religious self-expression. Soldiers who desire to hear sermons and addresses have no end of opportunity in camp to listen to good and often to great speakers. They do not, however, feel keenly the call to "hear sermons". In fact, they are often fed up with hortatory exhortation, and have a desire, conscious or uncon scious, to do something.

Finding something that the soldie can do, and enjoys doing, which i beneficial to the community, is not s easy. After much thought, Mr. Wi liamson organized a soldier choi made up for the most part of men wh had been members of parish choirs a home. An organist and a number o excellent soloists were discovere and the choir began practicing i small groups, because it was impos ble to get the men together as a uni Three splendidly successful servic have been held, the first in St. Thom as' Church, Battle Creek; the secon in Trinity Church, Marshall, Mich and the third in St. Luke's Churc Kalamazoo. At all of the services th attendance has been so great that th crowd far exceeded the capacity of th building.

The first principle on which M Williamson worked is that soldie can sing, and especially like to sin to civilian congregations, and the ben efit of the intense interest and the deep feeling awakened in the civilian auditors is not lost on the soldiers They easily sing their best in such a sympathetic atmosphere.

The second principle was that the civilian congregation and the soldier taking part in the service are both benefited by having everything in the service in the hands of men actually in the army. As far as possible the speakers at the services have been members of the military establish ment. These services have been an ex pression of the soldiers' religious as pirations, and the results of such re ligious self-expression have been tensely gratifying. Men have come t see that they have a place in th Church to do something full of mean ing to themselves, and they hav come to realize there is a real oppor tunity for them to work in the Church The Church as a place where men ca consciously feel themselves useful t the congregation, and engaged i something so satisfying that it meet their need of a definite religious activ ity is far different from the idea o an ecclesiastical organization exterio to their sphere of interest which man of the soldiers had.

In compiling the form of service t be used, the soldiers themselves wer considered, and not the civilian con gregation. Mr. Williamson thought best not to use any of the exceller authorized compilations so widel used throughout the Church as wa time services. His reasoning in thi respect is sound. He felt the men in the choir who had dropped away from regular Church attendance before coming into the army would be brought back to a realization of the hold the Church has on them by hearing the old and familiar words of the services, and for this reason Evening Prayer was used as the norm of the special services. In order to avail himself of as many of the excellent soloists as possible, solos were used in place of the canticles. Only one lesson is read, and special prayers suitable for the war-time emergency are said after the prayer for the President of the United States.

The social possibilities offered by the military service were not lost sight of, and the excellent dinners served to the soldiers by the parishes, and the receptions which followed, gave the Church people and the men from camp an opportunity to become acquainted.

There are doubtless other ways by which the soldiers may be given means of religious self-expression, and all such opportunities should be seized and used. In the experience so far obtained, the work of Mr. Williamson has amply proved his theories, and his principles will be found to be applicable wherever groups of young men are gathered, whether in or out of the army.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

A MOTHER'S PRAYER FOR HER SOLDIER SON

O God of infinite mercy, hear the mothers of this land, as we plead before Thy throne for the loved ones we are sending forth to battle for the right. Though our hearts are bowed with sorrow, we pray not for ourselves; all our prayers, O God of love, are for them, the priceless treasures of our lives. We are willing to suffer and, if need be, to die for our country.

We would gladly give our lives to save these loved ones, dearer to us than life itself, who are going out to fight foes, seen and unseen, to face all the horrors of the battlefield, and some, perchance, to die, that others may live, but by no word or look will we hold them back when duty calls em to save others.

ive them the manhood to meet this me test of life, give them of body, of mind and soul for the right, and to suc- en and children. Arm e power to smite evil; loving arms; yea, ough the valley ay Thy pres- Thy rod en of for

we must face. Our men go forth to help save us from ruin, and the world from barbarism. We suffer, but we glory in their manhood. We dedicate our lives to this great cause, that we may serve behind the lines, while they carry forward the flag of civilization.

The prayers of a world in agony, for whom these men are fighting, are lifted up to Thee for these men. They are offering all that earth holds dear, because they have heard Thy voice calling them to the noblest work to which lives were ever consecrated. Thy love, O God, our Father, excels all human love, so we leave them with Thee. To Thee have we committed them.

They are Thine, created in Thine image.

Into them Thou hast breathed the breath of life in its largest and Divinest sense.

In their sacrifice, offering their lives that others may live, they are following in the footsteps of God Himself, who died to make men free from the power of evil. We trust them, O God, to Thy infinite love, and to Thy ever watchful eye. Hold them as in the hollow of Thy hand, for they are doing Thy work and fulfilling the teachings of Him who spake as never man spake, when He taught that greater love hath no man than that he is willing to lay down his life for others.—From Manufacturers' Record, September 27, 1917.

The parishes co-operating were Trinity, St. Paul's and St. John's, in New Rochelle; Ascension and Trinity, in Mt. Vernon; St. Thomas, Mamaroneck; St. John's, Larchmont; Redeemer, Pelham; Christ, Pelham Manor; St. Paul's, Eastchester. Topics discussed were: "Methods in the Class Room", "Sunday School Discipline", "The Child's Mind and It Training", "Educational Ideals" "Teaching the Prayer Book", "Teaching the Old Testament", "Teaching St. Paul's Life", and "Teaching the Life of Christ". The staff of lecturers consisted of the Rev. Melville K. Bailey Mr. Stephen F. Bayne, Mr. John W. Tietz, Dr. S. W. Patterson, Miss Ethel M. Robinson, and Miss Ruth Sayer. The local committee in charge were Mr. Wm. Drake, New Rochelle; th representations of the Confederate Veterans, Daughters of the Confederacy, G. A. R. and Women's Relief Corps were present by special invitation. A strong sermon was preached by the Rev. F .R. Godolphin, Rector of Grace Church, Oak Park, Chicago, and volunteer chaplain at Camp Bowie and the aviation fields near Fort Worth. The stars on the National Service Flag increase almost weekly. They now number 38. The ministrations of St. Andrew's Church to the 30,000 soldiers at the camp are constant and various, and evidences of appreciation are abundant.

There were 60 soldiers present at a celebration of the Holy Communion held at Camp Dodge, Ia., on a recent Sunday morning at 6:30 o'clock. It was the third celebration conducted on that Sunday morning at the camp by Chaplain Long. Dr. Long is a Rural Dean of the Diocese of Quincy, author and manager of the Church pageant at the last General Convention, and has been serving as a civilian chaplain at Camp Dodge ever since the camp was opened. Governor Lowden of Illinois recently appointed him a chaplain, with the rank of First Lieutenant in the State Militia Reserves. In an address before the Iowa branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, Dr. Long said: "We are trying to train men how to live, and not how to die. If they get the vision of life, they will be ready to die or to live, as God shall will."

The Sunday school of the Chapel of the Intercession, New York City, united with the members of six other Sunday schools on Sunday morning, June 9, in the annual children's parade and out-of-doors service on Washington Heights, which was participated in by thousands of children. The children marched in procession along the city streets for several blocks, led by the Hebrew Orphan asylum brass band, singing processional hymns and patriotic songs, and assembled between the Chapel of the Intercession and the North Presbyterian Church, the towers of which were connected with streamers with flags, where a service was held and short addresses given, and the children pledged their allegiance to the flag and the cross.

The Summer Home of St. Thomas' Parish, New York City, at East Marion, L. I., will be opened the first of next month, where a new party of children will be given an outing every two weeks during the summer. The younger and better behaved and more regular children in the Sunday school will be given the preference. Some five or six hundred children will be accommodated. The Rev. Dr. James Sheerin, Vicar of St. Thomas' Chapel, and member of THE WITNESS editorial staff, will have charge of the Home. We are pleased to learn that Dr. Sheerin has recovered from [illegible] operation out the country by the several branches of the National Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses. The National Guild held its Annual Council in New York City, beginning with a service at St. Stephen's Church on Sunday, June 9, which was attended by a large number of chaplains, priests, associates, visiting clergy, several Bishops and the officers and delegates of the national organization. Bishop Burch is the chaplain general.

Captain Sheldon, who is the head of the Big Brother movement, gave an address on the work of the organization in the Chapel of the Intercession, New York City, on Sunday afternoon, June 9. He was accompanied to the chapel by a number of the members of his company. On the previous Sunday, Corporal Plant, who is one of General Pershing's men, and has been decorated with the Croix de Guerre for bravery at the front in France, was presented at the chapel with a testimonial from his friends.

On Sunday afternoon, June 9, at St. Mark's Church in-the-Bouwerie, New York City, Ali Kuli Khan, formerly charge d'affaires at Washington, gave an interesting and informing address on "A True Interpretation of Omar Khayyam". The Evening Post of that city states that he conveyed what is to the Western mind a new conception of Omar's work—quite different from that of his European critics. The Rev. W. H. Wotton, who resigned as Rector of St. James' Church, South Pasadena, Cal., owing to prolonged illness, was very graciously presented with a gift by the vestry, equivalent to six months' salary.

The Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill., has received his orders to go to France from the American Red Cross, and will sail the first week in July.

The Rev. E. F. Creary, who had charge of the services in the Church of the Holy Communion, St. Peter, Minn., while pursuing his course of studies at Seabury Divinity School, has, since his graduation, also had charge of the work at Le Sueur, Minn.

The Rev. Dr. W. B. Capers and his family were given a farewell reception at Columbia, Tenn., before their departure for Louisiana. Dr. Capers is to have charge of Trinity Church, New Orleans, during the absence of Dr. Coupland in war service.

The Rev. G. P. T. Sargent, Rector of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., has been appointed to serve as chaplain for ten weeks at Camp Logan, near Kenosha, Wis., and entered upon his duties there the first of this week.

When the Rev. Edward F. Hayward arrived at Enid, Okla., on June 1, with his family from Chippewa, Wis., to take charge of St. Matthew's Church, he found a telegram awaiting him announcing the death of his mother, who resided in Philadelphia.

The Rev. Dr. Watson, Rector Emeritus of Holy Trinity American Church, Paris, France, and Mrs. Watson, who are now in this country, have been enjoying visits at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Washington, D. C., Philadelphia and New York. They reside at Akron, Ohio.

The Rev. A. G. Paulsen, Rector of Christ Church, Albert Lea, Minn., at the request of the superintendent of schools of his city, filled a vacancy in the High School faculty for the last six weeks of the spring term, caused by the resignation of a teacher who had been drafted into the army.

The Rev. Rolfe P. Crum, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Syracuse, N. Y., has sailed for France to begin his duties as a Red Cross chaplain. The parish granted Mr. Crum a leave of absence for a year, and presented him with a purse of several hundred dollars to be used among the wounded soldiers that come under his care.

The Flint, Mich., Daily Journal states that the principal address given in that city on Memorial Day was delivered by the Rev. William Heilman, Episcopal War Commission camp pastor at Camp Custer, one of the most eloquent of Camp Custer's chaplains, who has endeared himself to thousands of drafted men during his service with the 85th Division.

The tenth anniversary of the Rev. W. E. Harmann's ordination and Rectorship of St. Peter's Church, Duluth, Minn., was observed the last week in May, under the auspices of the Men's Club and St. Luke's Guild, when he was presented with a handsome gift, as a mark of the high esteem in which he is held, and in appreciation of his long years of service as Rector of the parish.

The Rev. James J. Crawford, who has had charge for some time past of the missions at Rice Lake, Shell Lake and Cumberland, Wis., has resigned to become the Rector of St. Ambrose's Church, Antigo, Wis. Mr. Crawford enlisted in the Officers' Reserve Corps and was at the training camp at Fort Sheridan, but suffered an injury there that resulted in blood poisoning, making it necessary for him to give up military service.

The Rev. J. M. Hunter, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Marietta, Ohio, was a delegate from his state to the Win the War for Peace Convention held at Philadelphia recently. The Marietta Journal says: "To have been singled out by Governor Cox for the honor of being a delegate to this great patriotic Convention, composed of some of the nation's most prominent statesmen, clergy and laymen, was an honor fully appreciated by the Rev. Mr. Hunter and the city of Marietta."

Messrs. Martin Baker Kilpack, Basil Murdin and Chester Alban Taylor, graduates of the Nashotah Seminary, were ordered deacons, and the Rev. Messrs. Michael Roy Barton, Hubert Buckingham, Jackson L. Cole and Arnold G. Fowkles were advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Weller, at the Cathedral in Fond du Lac, Wis., on last Sunday morning. The Rev. Dr. Edward A. Larrabee, Dean of the Seminary, preached the sermon and presented the candidates to the Bishop for ordination. The Rev. Clarence Grayhurst of Fond du Lac and the Rev. D. McLain of Chicago acted as chaplains to the Bishop.

EDITORIAL

Our Position

The fact that Bishop Brent is chaplain general of all the chaplains in Europe; that the chaplains at West Point and Annapolis are usually Churchmen, and that in any civic function the Episcopal Church is very frequently called upon to preside, is not due to the fact we are particularly admired for our piety, eloquence, or ability but because we hold a peculiar position in the religious world.

As I remarked this month in my letter to the Diocese of Colorado, a member of the Episcopal Church has fewer people who agree with him than either Roman Catholic or Protestant, but on the other hand he is in closer sympathy with a far larger number of people than is Roman Catholic priest or Methodist pastor.

He holds a central position, and while numerically small, his is the only religious body that touches the Roman position on the one side or the Methodist on the other.

Neither of them like us very well, for we are sort of half brother to each, but each of them is aware of the fact that we are not as anti-Roman as the Methodist, nor as Anti-Protestant as the Roman.

In example one of our chaplains recently prepared and presented to a Roman Catholic Bishop a class for confirmation which the Bishop said was as well prepared as any class he had ever confirmed. At the same time the same chaplain made ready a certain number and sent their letters to Protestant pastors.

Would it be possible for either a Roman priest or a Methodist minister to do that?

It ought therefore to be the rule of the clergy and people of this Church (and I believe it is) to play the game fair; to scorn any underhand advantage and to recognize the right of any person to be a Roman Catholic if they want to or a Methodist if they so prefer, and to help them to be the best kind of a Roman Catholic or Methodist that we are capable of helping them to be, and not to be deflected from that rule merely because we have been tricked by unscrupulous methods which we may have encountered.

Truth is to be loved for its own sake; fairness, because it is beneath one consciously to be unfair; kindness, because, even though misunderstood, we must preserve our own character.

The real test of our strength lies in the fortitude with which we can bear up under spiteful misrepresentation.

Many a priest, especially in small towns and villages, is the victim of unreasonable prejudice and invincible ignorance.

This is really the Church's opportunity, if the priest is big enough and sympathetic enough to deal with the situation.

Let him go on faithfully doing his duty and the very bitterness of hostility will react in his favor. The disciple is not above his Master. Let him meet misrepresentation by truth, bitterness by kindness. It is only when the accusations are true that one needs to wriggle and to be uncomfortable. We are in a fine strategic position if we have the fortitude to endure.

We are facing a very different attitude toward Church unity than we have known in the past. Feeble attempts toward it are to be seen in the somewhat questionable ethics of a purely Sectarian Church, wearing the commonplace of "Community Church." This means that the drawing card to the public is the claim to be for the community rather than for the platform on which that Church stands.

It is not unfair to say that most sectarian platforms have given way. The public is not interested in their confessions of faith. Of course the fabric remains and the vested interests are the same, but the principles have changed.

We will no doubt have the experiment of Community Churches after the war, but such organizations lack a world-wide program, a definite faith, a catholic fellowship.

You can't build a nation-wide Church on negations. There must be a backbone with its vertebrae, and none of them missing, for a Church to stand upright.

A Community Church will develop a shell in which it lives like an oyster, but it cannot have a backbone.

The Church has the backbone in its primitive faith, the articles of the creed. (The Latin word Articulum from which article is derived means a vertebrae.)

When you have extracted these articles, or one of them, from the backbone of the Church, it ceases to belong to the class of vertebrates.—It incases itself in a shell.

That is what sectarianism has done. It has inclosed its body in a shell.

That is what the Community Church will do as well.

The one is the shell of sectarianism exclusiveness; the other will to that of local self-interest.

The Church is a living, virile body, able to stand upright because it has a backbone; able to do things because it has a backbone.

It is true the skeleton is not an attractive thing unless it is covered with flesh: so the doctrines of the Church become attractive, only when they are clothed upon with the warm living flesh of human sympathy.

True, you may feel more secure in a shell, than you do with a back-bone.

The turtle can protect himself. The turtle's weakness is that he has to live within his shell. He must carry it around wherever he goes.

Man is not protected by a shell, but he has an interest wider than the turtle ever dreamed of.

The Church's position is that Christ and the apostles supplied the backbone, and on that faith we are to stand, and to take a vital interest in all men of every kind throughout all the world.

No less a policy can be the program of Jesus Christ.

He Saw It

A member of Christ Church who is at the head of a big business in La Crosse and that business requiring a large amount of technical knowledge and in which a large number of men are employed, held the following conversation with the Rector a few days ago.

The Man: At your last Mission Service you said that it was a mistaken idea that church members should go to church to learn how to be good, but that they should be good so that they may attend church in a proper manner. I have always been taught that the object of church-going was to learn how to be good.

The Rector: Are you going to business tomorrow morning to learn the business or because you know the business in which you are engaged?

The Man: Of course I hold my position because I am supposed to know the business and can hold it only by applying my knowledge in a practical way.

The Rector: If you employed a green hand tomorrow morning, he would have to go to work to learn the business; would he not?

The Man: Certainly.

The Rector: But do you not learn something in your line every day although you say you do not go to business in order that you may learn it?

The Man: I am learning every day.

The Rector: If you heard that I had said to a friend that Mr. X goes business so he may learn how to run it, you would consider that an unfriendly remark, would you not?

The Man: I certainly should, seeing that I have been in it for a considerable number of years.

The Rector: Were you a member of the Church before you learned your present business?

The Man: Yes, I was confirmed when a boy.

The Rector: Would consider it an unfriendly remark if I said of you, Mr. X goes to church so he can learn how to behave himself.

The Man: I never thought of it in that way, but I guess that you are right.

The Rector: And yet you do learn something about your behavior every time you go to church. The truth of the matter is that one who has been a member of the Church as long as you have ought to go to do something and not to get something out of it. If you go to business with the sole purpose of earning your salary, or what you get out of the company, you will soon lose your position—the company's interest must be yours as well—God's interest in His Church must be yours to make your church-going of use to Him and of your fellowmen.—La Crosse (Wis.) Advent.

Items from Trinity Church, New York City

As one part of its war service, and in response to the call of our government for measures of economy, Trinity Parish, New York City, has carefully revised its budget and reduced expenditures where this was possible without lasting injury to the work. Many things valuable and useful, but not wholly indispensable, have been given up for the period of the war. The clerical staff has been reduced to set free more of the clergy for direct war service. In several of the chapels there will for the present be only one curate, instead of two, as heretofore.

After thirty years of most faithful and effective service, the Rev. Dr. Geer has, at his own request, been retired, and will give up his work as Vicar of St. Paul's Chapel on October first. Dr. Geer has been granted a pension, and will have the title of Vicar Emeritus.

The Rev. Dr. McComas has been elected Vicar of St. Paul's Chapel, and will enter upon his duties when Dr. Geer retires. In addition to his new duties as Vicar of St. Paul's, Dr. McComas will continue to fill the post of Senior Curate at Trinity Church.

The Rev. John Brian McCormick, Curate at the Chapel of the Intercession, has received a commission as chaplain in the army, and has sailed for France.

The Rector of the Parish is continuing his work as chaplain at Camp Upton.

The Service Flag of Trinity Parish now has 571 stars on it.

The Junior Auxiliary

ANNUAL MEETING OF DALLAS DIOCESAN BRANCH

The annual meeting of the Dallas diocesan branch of the Junior Auxiliary to the Board of Missions was held at St. Andrew's Church, Fort Worth, on St. Barnabas' Day, June 11. In the absence of Bishop Moore, who arrived later in the day, the Rev. E. H. Eckel, Rector of the parish, celebrated the initial Eucharist, assisted by the Rev. F. T. Datson, Rector of Trinity Parish, Fort Worth. The clergymen named gave short missionary talks in the course of the day's program. Miss Martha Russ of Dallas carried on the meeting.

Eight branches responded at roll call, two of which have been organized during the year—Trinity, Fort Worth, and Good Shepherd, Mineral Wells. Interesting reports were made by all branches and by the diocesan officers. Financial provision was made for transportation to enable the Bishop to use a stereopticon formerly used by one of his Archdeacons.

Articles valued at about $90 were reported for a box to be sent to a mission hospital in the Tennessee mountains.

Bishop Moore offered a banner, to be known as "The Bishop's Banner", for the Sunday school making the largest per capita Lenten mite box offering, beginning next year. In response to his request, it was voted to send a box of hospital supplies to All Saints' Hospital, Fort Worth, next year, and to make a money pledge for the Bishop's discretionary use for the mission at Denton.

After luncheon, served in the parish house, and the completion of the afternoon program, the visitors were taken by automobile to the military camps and elsewhere.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

In a letter to the editir of the Spirit of Missions, Bishop Israel writes from France:

"Paris is full of Americans of every type of Churchmanship, and hence in the services and in the methods of Church work there must be radical changes made. The old American colony of Paris has dispersed, and with it the demand for the present dignified form of Cathedral service. A new era has come and a new problem has arisen from war conditions, to meet which new methods must be originated. In his present condition of fatigue, Dr. Watson feels it unwise and virtually impossible for him to attempt these changes. Any one realizing the strain, both mental and physical, of the last four years through which Dr. and Mrs. Watson have passed will not be surprised, for there is a limit to human endurance, even among the strongest."

Among the treasures of the old North Church on Salem Street, Boston, Mass., is an ancient English Prayer Book, presented to the parish by King George II in 1733. This was the Prayer Book used in public services up to the time of the Revolution. Then the prayers for the king and the royal family were pasted over and the wording changed to "President and Congress of the United States". Out of this old book, in this old church, were "prayers for our present rulers first read in the Province of New England"—as far as the Episcopal Church is concerned; and a letter written by Bishop Parker in 1781, only recently unearthed, justifies this claim. This old book has not been used for many years; but in obedience to President Wilson's proclamation for a service of prayer on Memorial Day, at the morning service in the old North Church the prayer was read from the same book. After the service, the book was exhibited.—Boston Traveler.

It is a striking evidence of the great changes in the college world in recent years that Bowdoin, with all the Congregational traditions of its establishment and administrations, has chosen an Episcopalian as its president. A few years ago that would have been unthinkable. Now that element did not enter into the considerations of the trustees, nor was it an objection in the minds of a board composed wholly of Republicans, some of them eminent party leaders in Maine and Massachusetts, that Dean Sills has been so active in Democratic councils that he has been his party's candidate for the United States Senate.—Editorial, Boston Herald.

In the sweeping to and fro of the tide of battle, so much damage has been caused to the great architectural possessions of France and Belgium that the mention of further havoc causes little surprise. Recently, however, three towns in the Aisne Department, in Northern France, have suffered more than usual, namely, Laon, Soissons and St. Quentin. All these three towns were the sites of Cathedrals which held a distinguished, if not unique, place in the architectural records of the French during the centuries. The Cathedral of Notre Dame, at Laon, is one of the finest Gothic edifices in France. It belongs to the Thirteenth Century, as do the Cathedrals of the other towns—the greatest century in the history of religious art. The Laon church was built on the site of one still older, which was destroyed during one of the frequent communal uprisings in France. Cruciform in shape, with a square choir (as opposed to the semi-circular apse), in the English fashion, its crowning glory was six great romantic towers, some of them unfinished. In some respects it resembles its great sister church, Notre Dame of Paris, although much smaller and in better proportions. The Soissons Cathedral of Notre Dame was begun during the latter part of the Twelfth Century, but not completed for one hundred years. It contains some excellent samples of Thirteenth Century stained glass and has very high vaulting—one hundred feet from pavement to the roof of the nave. A small church, its chief effect was procured through the effect of painted and stained glass, which at that period was much used in all religious structures. These things are irreplacable. The collegiate Church of St. Quentin, one of the loveliest buildings in Northern France, was two hundred years in building. The walls of the nave were decorated with polychrome paintings, by which is meant the use of flat colors on wood panels, occasionally on canvas, as distinguished from the excessive color modulations of present-day painting.—New York Times Pictorial.

One of the queer results of the war is that 2,443 men at Camp Upton have been taught to speak English. Some of them were well educated in their own languages, but many were illiterate. A teacher was found in a sergeant, who had a proficient knowledge of French, German, Italian, Dutch, Yiddish, Russian and Greek, and among the soldiers he taught in his sixty-eight classes were Chinese, Swedish, Finnish, Hungarian, Turkish, Lithuanian, Bohemian, Japanese, Czech and Arabian.—Boston Globe.

President Henry Churchill King of Oberlin heads a committee on the war and the religious outlook, and has quit his Ohio work for a time and gone to New York to enter upon committee work. That work interests practically every Christian leader in America, and is to find out, if the committee can do so, the effects upon the Churches of the war to date, the probable effect of the war to come, and what the Churches ought to get ready to do, once the war comes to an end. The matter is one constantly before the Churches and before almost every meeting of Christian leaders, but, so far as known, no one has yet begun to answer any part of it. Associated with this Congregationalist leader are three Methodist Bishops, President Faunce of Brown University, and President Mullins of Louisville , both Baptists, Dr. John R. Mott of the Y. M. C. A., the only layman on the committee, Rev. James I. Vance and Rev. William Adams Brown, Presbyterian ministers, and Rev. Wilford L. Robbins, Episcopal, former dean of the Theological Seminary in New York, who retired two years ago because of ill health. It is stated that additions to the committee are to be made. It is purposed that members of the committee secure release from present work, as far as they can, that they may enter upon this steering-course study for Churches after the war.—Boston Record.

It is said that 1,600,000 "Mothers' Day" letters were received in this country from our soldiers. Corporal Edward P. Dawson, Co. C, 4th Regt. Engineers, evidently thinks the father of the family is not having enough recognition, so he has written the following:

TO DAD

They think of us soldiers as heroes,
And praise our names up to the skies;
They've tears for the one who is wounded,
And prayers for the one who dies;
They write songs of our pals and our sweethearts,
And mothers so brave and so sad;
But name a great singer or poet
Who's mentioned a word about dad!

Poor dad, with his check-book and troubles,
He hasn't a look-in at all—
It's mother, and pal, and sweetheart,
And Sammy who answers the call;
But dad must be thinking and working,
In a store, or a mine, or a mill,
To get the old round iron dollars
To pay the big family bill.

He buys the new bonds by the dozen.
Though his shoes are run down at the heel,
And his overcoat's old and looks shabby,
But you never hear old daddy squeal.
He doesn't write much of a letter
To his boy who is going to France,
But sends him a crisp five or ten spot,
Whenever he has a good chance,
And evenings, when reading his paper,
A-smoking his pipe or cigar,
He thinks of his boy clad in khaki—
Says "I hope it is well where you are."

Now I think just a lot of my mother—
She's written each day I've been gone,
And my pals and my friends and my sweetheart
Have all helped to cheer me along;
But my dad is as good and as human,
And sometimes I certainly feel
That as dad has to pay and work every day,
I don't think he gets a square deal.

Army Officer Makes Great Speech

Col. E. A. Dailey of the 55th Engineers made a remarkable address in St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, Mich., at a special military service held on Sunday night, June 9. Col. Dailey is one of the most eloquent speakers among the officers at Camp Custer. He said in part:

"I am here tonight to speak not as a Churchman, but as an army officer, for there is need that the ideals of the army should be understood by all people. My first duty as an officer is so to train the men who are placed under my command that they may be able to apply all of the physical energy we are able to develop in them in such a way that it will count to the utmost in driving the Hun back to Germany. But if I stopped in my work with the men when I was satisfied that they knew the fundamentals of military work, and were in prime physical condition, I would not be doing my full duty.

"It is my desire to make you feel how keenly the army feels the necessity of surrounding your sons and brothers with influences which will bring out in them the best they have received from home.

"It is the homely things of life we are fighting for. It is the freedom of little children to go to school in security; it is the freedom of the farmer to plant and reap his crops unhindered; it is the freedom for the chance of the old life of the home to go on just as you have known that life, that we are fighting for.

"We are especially anxious to have the men feel that the home is following them in their military life. We want them fully conscious every hour of the day that your prayers and your hopes and your love go with them. We feel that such a sense of home influence will keep them true to themselves and true to God. We want the soldier to hold firmly to his religious convictions. If he does hold them tenaciously he will be true to his God, and the soldier who is true to God is always to be depended on. He will be true to his country.

'We know that all of us will be called upon to make sacrifices, and some of us will make the supreme sacrifice; but we shall not pass out of life—we shall still live. If it is our lot to die, we pray that we may not succumb to sickness in the camp; we pray that we may not die at sea; we pray that we may not fall in France. If we are to die, we will be content to fall, and we will be glad for our bodies to remain forever far from the homeland, if only we have the satisfaction to die on German soil. We will be glad to die far away from home, in order that the homely things of our life in this country, the homely things of life as we have known and loved them, may go on unhindered and unstopped because we have fallen.

"And because this is a war for home, as an officer of the army, I want to assure you that there is no greater service you can render the man overseas than that of making him constantly aware by your letters, by your prayers, and by your work, that the home is ever mindful of him, and that the home appreciates all he is doing. We want the men who come back from the war to be fit for American homes, and we want you to help us see to it that they will be men who will make homes which will show the highest ideals of our American traditions and our American life."

Tribute to Bishop-Coadjutor-Elect Quin

The Paducah, Ky., Sun, commenting upon the election of the Rev. Dr. Clinton Service Quin as Bishop says that to those who knew the worth of Dr. Quin when he was rector of Grace Church, Paducah, "his election points merely to the discovery on the part of the ecclesiasical body which elected him, of one who is in every sense a man. No worthier ever wore the cloth, no better friend ever laid his arm around shoulders in trouble. His was the heart of a boy, and the soul of man at his best. The understanding, the compassion, the sympathy,the strength to guide that were his, were heaven descended gifts. His footsteps are blessed here. They will be blessed wherever he goes. Those who live in the white light of the world's fame perish easily. Those who build in the hearts of men live on forever.

Virginia

The 26th Annual Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia met in St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, Va., Tuesday, May 28, at 7:30 a. m., with Morning Prayer. At 10 a. m. was held a memorial service for Bishop Randolph. This was most impressive. Fifty of the diocesan clergy, vested, formed in the parish house and, led by a large choir, proceeded up the central aisle singing "Ten Thousand Times Ten Thousand". After the ante-communion, Bishop Tucker, Rev. C. B. Bryan, D. D., and Judge Leigh R. Watts made addresses on the life, ministry and influence of Bishop Randolph.

Bishop Tucker's words were most touching, as he spoke of his noble life and ministry of 60 years, and said that he was the last of his graduating class, and had served through the Civil War. He was counted, as men look upon a man's life, as a successful man. Not only was he a minister, who, "like a true shepherd, loved and watched over his flocks, but was a hospitable, chivalrous, Virginia gentleman, a true servant of the great things of God—faith, love and charity, which were the embodiment of his whole life."

Rev. C. B. Bryan, D. D., of Petersburg, and Judge Leigh R. Watts of Portsmouth gave an outline of the boyhood days of Bishop Randolph, and spoke of his gift as an orator, which, when Gen. R. E. Lee heard him make an address at college, predicted for him an enviable career.

The Bishop called the Council to order for organization and business at 1 o'clock. A full attendance of the clergy and, for these strenuous days, a fair number of the laity answered to the roll call. The secretary, by direction of the Bishop, read the following:

To the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of Southern Virginia:

The President of the United States having appointed Thursday, May 30, as a day of fasting and prayer, and for the invocation of God's guidance and help in this hour of the country's needs, I earnestly request the congregations of the diocese to meet in their churches and to offer prayers to Almighty God for His blessings upon our country, for the success of the righteous cause for which our allies and ourselves are contending, and for the safeguarding of our soldiers and sailors of the army and navy, and the men and women who are working in camps and hospitals. I pray that we may give reality to this observance, and that it will bring to us and to our people, and even to the world, the Divine blessing.

Arrangements have been made to adjourn the Diocesan Council tonight, Wednesday, May 29, so that the clergy and delegates may return to their homes in time for the observance of this day.

A memorial came up from the Convocation of Southwest Virginia, as follows:

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to secure data and consider the feasibility and advisability of dividing the Southern Diocese along such lines as the Council in its wisdom shall deem it best."

The committee on division will act and report at the next Annual Council.

The committee on the Bishop's suggestion as to a Bishop Coadjutor reported, and the Council voted to petition the Church for permission to have this election at the next Annual Council.

Rt. Rev. William C. Brown, Bishop Coadjutor of Virginia, honored the Council with his presence, and Tuesday afternoon made an earnest, strong appeal for Stuart Hall, the Church School for Girls, Staunton, Va. Bishop Tucker had also given this matter a prominent place in his report.

The Rev. M. P. Porter spoke for the American Bible Society, and this object was ordered placed on the list of those for which offerings would be taken.

The question of the change of time of meeting of the Annual Council of the Diocese, which was referred from the last Council, was taken up and warmly discussed. Many were in favor of the present time in May, but the majority voted to change the time to the third Tuesday in January. This is to be confirmed at the meeting in May, 1919.

Rev. George Floyd Rogers of the Industrial School and Home for Homeless Boys, at Covington, gave a report of the work which was being done there. He said that 1,000 boys for the last year had asked admittance into the Home. He made a strong appeal for finances to furnish the new cottages, which, he said, would accommodate 200 more boys.

The following in regard to the Home was adopted:

"Resolved, That the Board of Trustees of the Industrial School and Farm for Homeless Boys desires to place on record its gratitude to God for the good gift He has bestowed on this institution in putting it into the heart of Dr. E. Reinhold Rogers to lay down his own school work in Charlottesville and to accept the position of superintendent of the Home. In him we have a great manager of this great work, whose stainless character and highly trained ability give a more solid basis for faith in this administration than it has ever had before. Despite the extraordinary obligations which now confront us, we feel that we can now commend this institution and its work to wise and Christian-minded people with a greatly increased confidence."

Much valuable work is being done, especially in relation to army camps and cities connected therewith. A resolution of thanks and appreciation, and hearty endorsement for the men doing work in the camps, was adopted. Also the following was adopted:

"Resolved, That the Council of the diocese request the Bishop to appoint a War Work Commission of five, to hold office for the duration of the war, whose duty it shall be to devise and tees of the Industrial School and recommend to the Bishop and clergy and laity of the diocese ways and means by which this Church can move effectively, do its duty to the men of the army and navy and to communities affected by war conditions."

On motion, J. P. Knapp was given the privilege of the floor, and spoke of the work of St. Andrew's Brotherhood in the camps. Dr. Steinmetz spoke of the splendid work which was being done amongst the sailors at the naval base hospital.

Rev. R. R. Carter read a report from the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, in which he stated that the work of the Churches, Sunday schools and colleges had been greatly affected by the war. The women, he said, had to fill the places of the men and, laboring under such strenuous conditions, are unable to do Sunday school work. Many, he said, had given up their classes in the Sunday school to younger, inexperienced teachers. Great emphasis was laid upon the need of the summer school to be held at Lynchburg; June 17-21; also institutes and other means to aid in preparing teachers and building up the schools.

Another feature in the report of the Committee on Constitution and Canons was that the Diocesan Board of Missions be the Central Missionary Committee to be auxiliary to the General Board of Missions. This was adopted by the Council as follows:

The Diocesan Board of Missions shall constitute a Central Missionary Committee, auxiliary to the General Board of Missions, and it shall be the duty of the Central Missionary Committee in the general parishes and congregations to co-operate with the provincial secretary and the Provincial Standing Committee on Missions; that there shall be in each parish a men's Missionary Committee, appointed annually by the Rector, or, if there is no Rector, by the Church wardens, and there shall be a similar committee in each mission station, appointed by the Minister-in-Charge. It shall be the duty of the Men's Missionary Committee in each parish or congregation to co-operate with the Central Missionary Committee of the diocese, especially towards enlisting the support of every individual of the parish in the missionary work of the Church.

There was a Canon proposed to bring the Convocations in canonical connection with the Council, but this was objected to on the grounds that these Convocations were doing good service already as constituted.

By a standing vote the following was adopted, and the secretary was directed to send it by wire to the President:

"The Diocese of Southern Virginia of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in Council assembled, desire to express to the chief magistrate their continued and sustained confidence in the wisdom and lofty purposes of the nation in its participation in the great struggle, to emphasize the worth of the individual, and to establish the liberty of every man. Believing that patriotism is ever in danger of becoming a ruthless thing unless it cherishes a redemptive purpose for the race in the midst of its desire to be true to its own ideals, all thank God and take courage in the knowledge that America is pledged to share its priceless possessions of liberty with all men of good-will."

FORMS OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT

Some Curious Facts and Figures Concerning Our Divided Christianity

We present below an introduction to a series of papers written for THE WITNESS by the Rev. James Henry Young, D. D., Instructor of Divinity at Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minn., on Church Polity, which has important bearing on the timely and widely discussed subject of Christian unity. This sympathetic rather than controversial study of the various forms of Church government will be followed with profit and interest by our readers:

OUR DIVIDED CHRISTIANITY

The religious census for the United States shows 201 religious bodies in this country; but as this list includes Buddhists, Bahais, Christian Science, Ethical Culture Theosophists, Mormons, etc., it is not a correct statement of "our unhappy divisions". Leaving out those which cannot properly be called Christian, we have 190 bodies which "profess and call themselves Christian". Of these 154 are grouped in families as follows: Roman Catholic, Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Disciples, Episcopal, Congregational, Reformed, United Brethren, which include by far the larger part of the Church members of this country.

But from such a list of family groups we fail to get an adequate picture of our divided condition. The family groups are composed of entirely separate denominations, which are grouped together, less because of any bond of union, than because the individual bodies separated from one another. The family, instead of comprising those who live under one roof, comprises those who refuse to live together. The Methodist family contains fifteen denominations, eight white and seven colored. The Baptist family contains fourteen or sixteen bodies. There are twenty-four bodies grouped as Lutheran, twelve as Presbyterian, etc.

If we take the list of separate bodies, we find nine which contain more than one million members each:

Roman Catholic, 15,742,000 baptized members.

Methodist Episcopal, North, 3,700,000 communicants.

Colored Baptist Convention, 3,000,000.

Southern Baptist Convention, 2,700,000.

Methodist Episcopal, South, 2,108,000.

Northern Baptist Convention, 1,227,000.

Presbyterian Church, North, 1,600,000.

Disciples, 1,231,000.

Protestant Episcopal Church, 1,098,000.

These bodies contain 77 per cent of American Christianity; yet there are other bodies not in this number which contribute most efficiently to the religious influences of the country, notably the Congregational Church, the Lutheran and Reformed bodies.

To attempt to classify the religious forces of the United States according to any doctrinal basis leaves one dazed by the endless difficulties. It is hard even to find a nomenclature which shall distinguish them. The "Brethren" must be distinguished from other "Brethren", and so one group is known as Brethren (Plymouth) and another as River Brethren. The Brethren (Plymouth) are divided into four bodies, for which the Census Bureau can get only Roman numerals as distinctive marks. When "Brethren" refuse to live together as brethren, yet refuse to be called anything but "Brethren", the census man has his troubles. We may know there are distinctions in doctrine, but how shall we remember which is which among the Reformed Presbyterian Church (Covenanted), the Reformed Presbyterian Church in the United States and Canada, the Reformed Presbyterian Church in North America? And our difficulties are increased when we have to distinguish from these the Associate Reformed Synod of the South, and the Reformed Church in America, and the Reformed Church in the United States.

Among all the 190 "Churches" of this country, it is interesting to note that there are only five which are "Protestant", namely, the German Evangelical Protestant Ministers' Association, with 23,000 communicants (census of 1906), the German Evangelical Protestant Ministers' Conference, with 11,000 communicants, the African Union Methodist Protestant Church, with 6,000 members, the Methodist Protestant Church, with 178,000 members, and the Protestant Episcopal Church. Even our brethren of the Reformed Episcopal Church dropped the title Protestant when they went out from us.

The census for 1906 gives some interesting information in the special articles prepared by members of the various bodies. For instance, we are informed that "the Apostolic Church, also called the Friendship Workers, withdrew from the Church of the Living God (Christian Workers for Friendship) partly because of opposition to the head of that body, and partly because of a different conception of Church government. In this body, the presiding officer is styled president, instead of chief or Bishop. In doctrine or polity, with this particular exception, it is in close accord with the parent body". For conscience sake, 752 of these colored brethren separated themselves from the 3,000 other brethren, and were willing to leave "the Church of the Living God" to become members of a mere "Apostolic Church", rather than call their presiding officer "chief" or "Bishop".

Roughly, the various Christian bodies may be grouped, according to polity, into three groups—Congregational, Presbyterian and Episcopal. The fundamental principles of these different polities are well worth study, and some such study would seem essential to the consideration of unity.

Chapel and Home for Camp Meade

On Monday, June 3, Epiphany Chapel and Home at Odenton, Maryland (Camp Meade), was blessed by Bishop Murray at 11 o'clock. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion. The Rev. Dr. Washburn, Rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, who was largely instrumental in starting this effort on behalf of Uncle Sam's new army, delivered an impressive and timely address on "The Victory of Faith". The formal dedication was at 5 p. m. The keys were presented by Mr. George C. Thomas, secretary of the Maryland Church War Commission. On behalf of the donors, Mrs. Margaret Buckingham and Miss Isabel Freeman, two sisters, members of Epiphany Washington, the Rev. Dr. Randolph H. McKim presented the building, making a stirring appeal for practical Christianity in this world crisis, and calling upon the Church to preach a living, personal Christ. Bishop Murray accepted the building, and Brigadier General Nickolson, in temporary command of Camp Meade, responded briefly but forcefully. The general said that such a work would make better men and better soldiers.

The climax of the day was in the evening, when First Lieutenant Renshaw was baptized and afterwards confirmed, with eight other soldiers. The ladies who erected the building also fitted up the chapel. The furnishings for the clergy house were given by various individuals. Miss Meade presented a large picture of her father, General Meade. The whole cost of lot, building and furnishings was about $15,000. The work is being conducted by the joint War Commissions of the Dioceses of Maryland, Pennsylvania and Washington. The Rev. James Alan Montgomery, Professor of the Old Testament at the Philadelphia Divinity School, is chief of the clerical staff. He is assisted by the Rev. Dr. James M. Magruder and the Rev. S. Tagart Steele of Maryland, the Rev. Stanley R. West of Pennsylvania, the Rev William Curtis White of Washington. This is one of the Church's notable efforts to minister to the spiritual needs of our new army.

Finding God

By Rev. Percy Trafford Olton

Many have been asking that despairing question, "What good can come to humanity out of this war"? There is but one answer to that question, and it is contained in but one word—God.

God will be closer to man, more necessary, than in the past. He will have spoken to His children out of the trouble and anguish, and they will have listened in amazement, for it will seem as if the Christ of Galilee dwelt once more in human flesh.

We have known God before the war, but not as we shall know Him after this horror of desolation has passed. Before, He was a necessary explanation for the existence of the universe—we could not very well explain Him away. Yet we had gradually come to feel sufficient unto ourselves. God may exist; man does exist—so ran modern thought. Now we are facing God, not only as the necessary explanation, but as the great necessity.

And we are finding Him through the spirit that is in man. At the beginning of the war, the material seemed to have triumphed at last over the spiritual. Brute strength, linked to the forces generated by man's intellect, had challenged the invisible and spiritual forces in human life. Could the spirit that is in man meet and overcome this onrushing tide of materialism? If there is anything that can be clearly seen in this hour of strife and confusion, it is the invincibility of the spiritual forces. The earth may be deluged with man's blood, but the spirit that is in man cannot be slain; the ideals which are the heritage of the generations of Christianity remain. The outcome is still "not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord". Man, looking into his own heart, finds God.

The discoveries and inventions of the century before the war made man feel at home in the universe; the tragedy of his attempt to live in this universe without God will bring him to a consciousness not only of his need of God, but of God's need of him. Man will awaken to his Divine task of working together with God for the establishment of the Kingdom of Heaven. He will not, as Mr. Wells would have us believe, worship a finite God in infinity. He will worship the Infinite God, who dwells in time as He does in eternity, and has shown His child that there is no line of separation.

This truth declared by the Incarnation, is being re-affirmed today through the pressing need of man for the God who can enter into the overwhelming experiences of this world-catastrophe. God in man, God in Christ, God, the Infinite, compassing man's finiteness with light and understanding, giving to His child the comfort of His presence—these are the truths that will come to man as he finds God anew.

Profiteering

This word, which the war has made familiar, means taking advantage of the government or of the people in a selfish way for personal gain. It may be in making munitions of war or providing supplies of any kind for the government or food for the people. There is a great deal more of it than most of us know, and it is very discreditable.

The Civil War brought such experiences, and some fortunes were made by people who sold to the government soldiers' uniforms made of shoddy, or badly made shoes, and charged exorbitant prices. There was, perhaps, less close inspection then than now, but there is plenty of that kind of work today. People in business will tell you of the way in which men have demanded from the government very great prices for what they had to sell, and we all know that the rise in the price of food has not been necessary. It speaks ill for us when shrewdness and trickery are made a jest and cease to make indignation.

The newspapers do not tell us who these greedy men are, but their names come into common talk in every community. There is a holding back also of supplies of food to sell at a higher rate than is fair. Men who are taking advantage of the time ought to be excluded from the society of honest business men as the enemies of their country.

Public opinion ought to be so sensitive that men would be ashamed to build up fortunes or make great gain out of the country's need at such a time as this. It is not hard to account for the restlessness of the men who receive modest wages in the service of those who may be described as profiteering.

The Church, in its public teaching, and the members of the Church, as they have opportunity, ought to denounce such practices and make a public opinion which no man engaged in them dare face. All honor to the men who are making sacrifices for the country, whether in the army or in business, but shame to those who are, for greed, taking advantage of the government or their fellow citizens.—Newark Churchman.

Mliitary School Commencement

St. John's Military School, Salina, Kansas, held its closing exercises during the week beginning June 3rd. On Sunday the Commencement sermon to the graduating class and cadets was delivered in Christ Cathedral by the Rt. Rev. John C. Sage, D. D., Bishop of Salina. A feature of the afternoon was the band concert at 4 p. m. on the school, lawn followed by Guard Mount, Dress Parade and Retreat. On Monday the entire day was given up to the Annual Field Meet between the two contesting clubs, the Army and the Navy, the former being victorious. On Tuesday there were the competitive and exhibition drills of various kinds and in the evening the Faculty reception and party was held in the gymnasium. Wednesday, Commencement Day, began with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist in the school chapel, at which the cadets made their corporate communion. At 10:00 o'clock came the military drills, Guard Mounts, Dress Parade and various exhibition drills, after which the guests, parents, and school repaired to the gymnasium for luncheon and awarding of academic, athletic, and military medals and trophies. About two hundred guests were served at the luncheon. Commencement closed with the ceremony of Retreat on the school campus.

Because of the conditions brought about by the war, the past year has been one of the most difficult ever experienced by St. John's and yet from the standpoint of attendance it has been one of the most successful in the history of the school. Ninety-three cadets were enrolled from fourteen states. The prospects are promising for the coming year.

School Closed Until War is Ended

The sessions of St. Mary's Hall, the Episcopal school for young women West Texas, will be suspended until the close of the war. The decision was reached at a meeting of the diocesan school board of which Bishop W. T. Capers is president, following the acceptance of the resignation of Miss L. L. Dorsey, principal of the school.

In presenting her resignation, Miss Dorsey said that conditions were such, because of the war, that she found it inadvisable to continue in her office as principal. Her resignation was accepted with regret, and in the discussion which followed it was decided by the board that the sessions of the school would be discontinued until the war is ended. It was announced the property of the school would be intact, however, and the sessions resumed when peace is declared.

The school was founded in 1865, soon after the close of the Civil War, by Rev. J. J. Nicholson, rector of St. Mark's The school suffered many vicissitudes through the reconstruction period and the years that followed, but its work in the training and Christian education of young women continued with success. It was moved to Laurel Heights in 1915, Miss Dorsey becoming principal. At the closing exercises Monday, May 27, eighteen young women were graduated.

The Auxiliary Wins a Debate

An interesting debate was held recently in Trinity Parish, Columbia, S. C., by the women of the parish on the proposition, "A local Guild is more vital to the Parish than is the Woman's Auxiliary," which resulted in a decision favorable to the negative side of the question. The following is a summary of the argument made in the excellent paper for the Auxiliary:

The work of the Woman's Auxiliary is broader than that of the local Guild, producing in its members a far-seeing vision that entitles them to the name of the eyes of the Church.

The work of the Auxiliary is more intelligent, stressing education for its members, producing a body of thinking women who may be called the brain of the Church.

The local Guild is not more vital to the parish than the Auxiliary because the Auxiliary work is essentially spiritual, both in aim and practice, thereby becoming the soul of the Church.

With eyes to see, a brain to think, a soul to feel, the Woman's Auxiliary must be more vital to the parish than any mere organization of women.

Indianapolis Notes

The Indianapolis Clericus was entertained most delightfully in May by the Rev. H. R. Cole, Vicar of St. Paul's Church, Columbus. The June meeting was held with the Rev. Willis D. Engle, who read an admirable paper upon "Early Years in the Diocese". It was replete with historical matter of the highest interest, and elicited much favorable comment.

Late advices from Bishop Francis indicate his return to the diocese, at least for awhile, in the early autumn. He reports the great need of chaplains and the likelihood of the war continuing indefinitely. He is busily engaged in his duties at Base Hospital No. 32.

The Rev. George G. Burbanck, after fourteen years of indefatigable and valuable service at St. George's, Indianapolis, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Richmond, and entered into residence the first of June. He will be greatly missed in the city, where his presence has added greatly to the Church life, but he will be a distinct gain in his new charge. It is a pleasure to know that he is to remain in the diocese.

The Rev. Horace W. Wood of Crawfordsville has become the civilian chaplain at Frtt Harrison. The War Commission furnished him with a large tent and other necessary furnishings. He will occupy this and so be on hand for all calls. Sundays, a full quota of services will be held, and throughout the week at stated hours. The appointment supplies a great need and will prove a boon to the many Churchmen among the soldiers.

The Rev. J. W. Comfort of Vincennes was made Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery of Indiana at its late meeting in Evansville. The office has frequently been held by Churchmen, and he will add another laurel to the chaplet of fitness so signally emphasized. Two of our Bishops have filled the position—Bishops Knickerbocker and White.

The Indianapolis clergy expect to be largely in residence this summer, owing to the likely demands which the war will impose. So many men have left that their homes are in an anxious state. News of disaster or death may come at any time. The comfort of the Church and its regular incumbents will mean a great deal. St. Paul's Church has sixty-two stars on its Service Flag, and all of the congregations are represented proportionately. Both of the sons of the Rector of Christ Church, the Rev. J. D. Stanley, are on the firing line.

Summer Training School for Workers

The Summer Training School for Workers will hold its annual session at Sewanee, Tenn., August 6th to 13th, inclusive. Instruction will be given in Missions, Social Service and in Christian Education, and there will be also a course of instruction in The Church and Country Life. In addition to these periods of instruction, there will be discussions at evening sessions on such subjects as "Call to Preparation", "Leadership", Office and Mission of the Prophet", Men's Work in the Parish", "The Church in War", "The Church and the Reconstruction".

The keynote of the instruction to be given this year will be "Leadership". There never was a time when leadership was more needed than at present, and every effort will be made to give those who attend the opportunity to get such inspiration and to receive such information as to enable them to contribute to leadership in the work of the Church. It is to be hoped that a goodly number will gather together "on the mountain", and there in quietude pray, study to know the mind of Christ, and to receive inspiration and power, and then return to their homes prepared to stand strong for the highest and best—to lead. Every teacher should be a leader. In view of the present requirements of the government, the railroads do not feel it expedient to make the usual special rate to Conferences and Summer Schools, but be sure to ask at the railroad station about the regular summer rate to Monteagle—Sewanee. Special arrangement has been made at the Sawanee Inn for board at the rate of $10 per week.

The study of Hebrew to become one of many electives.

A Bishop may ordinate any man at any time, but he must remain in his diocese until he has passed all examinations of a normal standard.

These and many other important conclusions were determined at the fifth meeting of the Council on the Education of Postulants and Candidates for the Ministry, held at the General Seminary, New York City. Twenty-six of the thirty-four members were present. Rev. Dr. Harry P. Nichols, examining chaplain of the Diocese of New York, was chairman, and eleven seminaries, eight provinces and various interests within the Church were represented. It was a memorable meeting.

For over a year, and in four meetings, the Council has faced the Church's demand to reconstruct the education and training of the minister, that he may be better equipped to meet the needs and organization of present-day society. New ideas and large principles have been before the Council. These have been discussed with no attempt to formulate them in the exact language required by the Canon.

The recent meeting was the end of the first stage of the Council's work. Dean Bartlett, Dean of the Committee on Normal Standards, presented a report received final amendments and Council's discussions to date. This report received final amendments and suggestions, and in the end was adopted as representing the majority opinion of the Council.

This report will now go to the Council's Committee on the Formation of a Canon. This committee will either suggest a new Canon, or propose a revision of the present one. Dr. Robinson is chairman of the Committee on Canon, and Dean Green, Dr. Addison, Dr. DeVries and Mr. George Zabriskie are members.

The following description is prepared from the report. For the sake of brevity, the exact language of the report is not always followed. The report contains five principles, as follows:

1. THE PRINCIPLE OF A NORMAL STANDARD

There shall be a full normal standard, formulated by Canon, mandatory in character, put to the fore as descriptive of the Church's mind, and expressed in simple and general terms intended to indicate subjects only.

The following are the subjects proposed under this principle:

For Admission to the Priesthood.

Before ordination to the priesthood, the candidate must pass examinations in the following subjects:

1. Holy Scripture: The Bible in English; the New Testament in Greek; History of the Canon; Introduction to and contents of the Various Books; Biblical History; Exegesis.

2. Church History: From the beginning to the present time, together with special knowledge of a chosen period.

3. Doctrine: The Contents of the Christian Faith, with evidences therefor.

4. Christian Ethics: Including Practical Psychology and Practical Sociology.

5. Liturgics: The History and Principles of Christian Worship; The Contents and Use of the Book of Common Prayer.

6. Ecclesiastical Polity and Canon Law: With special knowledge of the Constitution and Canons of the General Convention, and of the diocese to which the candidate belongs.

7. Ministration.

(a) Conduct of public worship, with the proper use of the voice therein.

(b) Preaching.

(c) Pastoral care.

(d) Parish organization, administration, including the keeping of accounts.

(e) Religious Education.

(f) The missionary work of the Church—its claim, its extent, and its methods.

Admission to the Diaconate

Before admission to the diaconate, it shall suffice if the candidate shall pass examinations in the following portions of the requirements set forth for admission to the priesthood, and if advanced to the priesthood, he shall not be re-examined in these subjects or portions of subjects:

1. Holy Scripture: The Bible in English; Contents and Interpretation of the Various Books; Biblical History.

2. Church History: A general outline, together with the history of this American Church.

3. Doctrine: The Elements of Christian Doctrine.

4. Liturgics: The Contents and Use of the Book of Common Prayer.

5. Constitution and Canons of the General Convention, and of the diocese to which the candidate belongs.

6. Ministration:

(a) Conduct of Public Worship, with the proper use of the voice therein.

(b) Preaching.

(c) Religious Education.

2. THE PRINCIPLE OF ELECTIVES

To the above normal standard, one more requirement should be made—that the candidate must offer at least one elective and, if dispensed from Greek, two electives. The following subjects were suggested and accepted: Old Testament in Hebrew, Advanced Exegesis of Greek New Testament, Biblical Criticism, Biblical Theology, History of Religion, Sociology, Christian Archaeology, Christian Biography, Church Music—its History, Theory and Practice and, as a concluding elective, "Work of a specialized and advanced character in any recognized field of study".

This provision of electives makes possible some degree of specialization in the preparation for the ministry.

3. THE PRINCIPLE OF A MINIMUM STANDARD

There shall be a minimum standard, which shall be sufficiently low and elastic to meet all proper actual needs and conditions. This standard shall be reached by a process of obvious subtraction and departure from the full normal standard, and shall be strictly limited to well-defined classes of cases. These classes are suggested as follows:

4. THE PRINCIPLE OF CLASSES

(a) Men of thirty years or over may be admitted candidates if they satisfy the Bishop and the examining chaplains that they possess good mental ability and a sufficient mastery of the usual branches of secondary learning. They may be ordained to the diaconate upon satisfactorily passing the examinations prescribed for the diaconate, provided they shall have been candidates for at least one year. They may be advanced to the priesthood without further examination, provided they shall have served two years in the diaconate with reputable success.

(b) Men of other race or speech may be admitted candidates if they satisfy the Bishop and examining chaplains that they possess good mental ability and a sufficient mastery of the usual branches of secondary learning. They may be ordained to the diaconate upon satisfactorily passing the examinations prescribed for the diaconate, provided they shall have been candidates for at least one year; and provided further, that they shall also pass a special examination in the history and government of the United States of America. They may be advanced to the priesthood without further examination, provided they shall have served two years in the diaconate with repute and success.

(c) The Bishop of any diocese or missionary district, subject to the usual consent and approval of the Standing Committee or Council of Advice, may, at his discretion, ordain to the diaconate any candidate who shall have satisfied the examining chaplains that he possesses sufficient knowledge of (1) the contents and interpretation of the Books of Holy Scripture; (2) the doctrines of this Church, and (3) the contents and use of the Book of Common Prayer; and he may also advance a deacon, so ordained, to the priesthood without further examination, if the said deacon shall have served with repute and success at least two years in the diaconate: provided, only, that no deacon or priest so ordained shall be permitted to exercise the ministry outside of the diocese or district in which he was ordained, until and unless he shall have passed in full the examinations required under the normal standard.

5. THE PRINCIPLE OF INTERPRETATION

That the detailed recognition of the range and extent of subjects of examination which will be necessary to make the Canon workable should, as hitherto, be left to the Bishops and examining chaplains, subject to three provisions:

(a) That the office, duties, appointment and tenure of examining chaplains shall be defined and standardized by Canon.

(b) That dioceses or districts composing a province may appoint representatives from Boards of Examining Chaplains to form a Provincial Board of Examining Chaplains, and that it shall be competent for such Provincial Board to prepare a syllabus indicating the range and character of the attainments required in the several subjects, and also prepare question papers for written examinations. This syllabus and these papers may be adopted, subject to the approval of the Bishop, by diocesan examining chaplains.

(c) That the Theological Department of the General Board of Religious Education may be authorized to advise and counsel with the Boards of Examining Chaplains, and assist them in making more effective the required examinations for entrance to the ministry.

One of the outstanding events in the meeting of the Council was the minority report, submitted by Dr. Miller. His main contention was that the subjects of study in the majority report did not represent the full need of the ministry. He admitted that they covered "sacred knowledge which the Christian minister is to possess and in great part bring to the world", and that they also represented to a considerable degree "the practical knowledge of the manner in which he is to perform his duties for the world's benefit". Continuing, Dr. Miller asked: "But what of the world itself? What of the field, what of human life, the human soul, mind, instincts and emotions? Should not the Christian minister know something of the living material in and upon which he is to work? Should he make no attempt to attain a trained understanding of human needs?" Dr. Miller urged that the list of subjects needed two additional items: one to be called "Practical Psychology" and the other "Practical Sociology", both to be studied from the point of view of the work of the Church.

After discussion, the Council voted to include these two topics under Christian Ethics.

The sessions of the Council were enlivened by many amusing situations. Mr. Zabriskie, in his first remarks to the Council, gave a semi-apology for a layman speaking among so many theological experts. He said: "I think we must all allow that when even eminent physicians are in consultation, they are glad to receive suggestions from any source, even from the patient.

At another time, one of the members, speaking of the seminaries vehemently urged that certain ideas were maintained in every standard cemetery of the country.

The hospitality of Dean Fosbroke and the seminary played a large part in making the meeting a success.

The Council attended Evensong in the chapel on Wednesday and a corporate communion on Thursday morning.

Admiral Beatty is said to have declared that "the war will never be won until our people get down on their knees and there learn that God alone is the Giver of victory.

The Rt. Rev. Harry T. Moore, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Dallas, has procured a series of stereopticon slides showing the various churches, missions and institutions of his diocese, which he uses to illustrate addresses given on the work in that important field in the American Church.

Porter Military Academy

The fifty-first annual commencement of the Porter Military Academy was held in St. Timothy's Chapel, Charleston, S. C., on June 4, and was largely attended by the parents of the cadets and friends of the Academy.

The closing exercises began on Friday night, May 31, and consisted of most interesting contests for the declamation medal and the essay cup awarded to the successful literary society.

On Saturday afternoon field sports were engaged in, which manifested excellent training and remarkable athletic feats. So proficient have the cadets become that they won the silver cup in Columbia, S. C., at the interstate athletic contest. That night the class exercises took place, which displayed much preparation and natural talent, affording much pleasure and interest to the large audience assembled.

On Sunday, June 2, in the Church of the Holy Communion, the Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop of Atlanta, delivered the baccalaureate sermon. Bishop Mikell formerly had been Rector of the Church and also of the Academy. His address to the cadets was strong and impressive, and most helpful to the large congregation present.

The competitive drill and magnificent dress parade took place Monday afternoon. The cadets not only did themselves credit, but reflected upon the excellent training under Maj. Geo. C. Martin, who has been assigned to the Academy by the United States Government. Much interest was manifested by the large crowd present when the beautiful flag was presented by the sponsor to Company B, the prize company.

On commencement day, the address to the graduating class was delivered by the Hon. Jos. W. Barnwell, a most distinguished member of the Charleston Bar and public-spirited citizen of South Carolina. Medals were awarded for excelling in drilling, choir work, mathematics and different studies. An incident which was touching and most effective was the awarding of a silver cup "to that classman who has set the best example to the school and who has stood for the highest things". This cup was presented to the Academy by Dr. Wm. H. Frampton, in loving memory of his brother, Joseph Maybank Frampton, who gave his life for his country in the present cruel strife. Bishop Guerry awarded the cup to Lieut. W. A. Clark, and paid a most loving tribute to the beautiful life of Private Frampton, a graduate of the Academy.

He then dedicated a handsome Service Flag. There are about 175 boys from this Academy who are now enlisted in the war. Two gold stars represent Joseph M. Frampton and James Hemphill, who have died for their country.

The Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., who has just completed his tenth year as Rector of the Academy, presented, after an affectionate and striking address, the diplomas and certificates to the graduates. The salutatory was delivered by Capt. John Porter, grandson of the founder of the Academy, and the valedictory by Lieut. W. A. Clark. A number of the clergy were in vestments, and the service was led by a large choir of cadets. The service closed with the National Hymn.

Thus ended one of the most interesting and successful commencements in the history of the Academy. The total enrollment of the school this year was 243. The Academy this year has representation from 25 States, including some of the far Northwestern States, besides four foreign countries. Five cadets represented Cuba, one from Costa Rica, one from Mexico and one from the Canal Zone. This shows the national reputation of the Academy. A new feature this year in the Academy is the wearing of the uniform and compulsory drilling by the day pupils.

On Tuesday night a very enthusiastic Alumni meeting was held, and the members of the association most heartily endorsed and promised their earnest co-operation to the trustees in their efforts this fall to raise an endowment fund of $100,000.

To show the remarkable growth of this Academy, in 1908-09 there were 97 pupils; in 1917-18 the number had increased to 243. Praise is due to the Rector for his indefatigable labors and splendid achievements during his ten years' administration.

Harrisburg Notes

On Friday, June 14, Bishop Darlington ordained to the diaconate, in St. Matthew's Church, Sunbury, Charles Nelson Thomas, Joseph Herbert Bond and Clayton E. B. Robinson. These were presented by the Rev. Lewis Nichols of St. Paul's, Lock Haven. He also ordained to the priesthood the Rev James Hart Lamb, Jr. Mr. Lamb was presented by his father, the Rev. James Hart Lamb, D. D. The Rev. F. Emeritus of St. David's, Radnor, and his two brothers, Rev. Addison A. Lamb of Trinity Church, Coatesville, and Rev. George Warrington Lamb of Radnor, Pa. The sermon was by Rev. James Hart Lamb, D. D.. The Rev. F. W. C. Bedell of Trinity Church, Shamokin, conducted the quiet hour with the ordinands just previous to the ordination.

The Rev. Mr. Thomas will remain in charge of the Church of Our Saviour, Montoursville; the Rev. Mr. Bond will take charge of St. Luke's, Blossburg, and other missions in the vicinity; the Rev. Mr. Robinson will take charge of Christ Church, Lykens, St. Paul's, Williamstown, and St. Bartholomew's, Millerstown.

John Clayton Rutter was to have been ordained with this class, but he was accidentally and fatally shot in the eye a few days previously. His funeral took place from St. Paul's, Bloomsburg, on the 13th inst—the day before the day set for his ordination to the diaconate. His intention was to enter the army after his ordination. Bishop Darlington officiated at the funeral. There were present of the clergy the Rev. F. O. Musser, Rector of St. Paul's, Bloomsburg; the Rev. R. P. Kreitler of St. Luke's, Scranton; the Rev. W. A. Sparks of Far Rockaway, L. I.; the Rev. M. H. Ake of Christ Church, Berwick. Mr. Rutter's certificate of ordination had been made out beforehand and was presented to his parents.

Mr. Gordon Reese of Lancaster, graduate of the Virginia Seminary, was also to have been ordained at this time, but he has accepted work with the Y. M. C. A. abroad, and his ordination has been deferred a year.

Newark Notes

At the United Offering service of the Woman's Auxiliary in Trinity Cathedral, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Luke M. White of Montclair, the offerings presented amounting to $4,566, making, with last year's offering, $8,898 for the two years of the present triennium, indicating good increase from the same period in the last triennial, and a larger United Offering than ever at the next General Convention.

On Sunday, June 2, in St. Peter's Church, Morristown, Edwin S. Ford was ordained deacon by Bishop Stearly, being presented for ordination by the Rector, the Rev. Dr. D. M. Brookman. Mr. Ford is a graduate of Princeton, and a member of the senior class at Cambridge Divinity School.

Rev. Alfred Q. Plank has become Curate at Grace Church, Newark; Rev. Roy J. Riblet of Oberlin, Ohio, has accepted the Rectorship of Christ Church, Harrison, to begin his work September 1st; Rev. Louis W. Pitt of the graduating class at Berkeley Divinity School, takes charge of Christ Church, Newark, July 1st; Rev. James D. Kennedy of Long Island has taken charge of the Church of the Epiphany, Allendale; Rev. Barrett P. Tyler and Rev. Burnham N. Dell have been ordered to the Chaplains' Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville.

The Sunday school of St. Bartholomew's Church, Pittsboro, N. C., held a special service and took up an offering for the second Red Cross War Fund. There are only twenty members of the school, including the officers, teachers and scholars, and it was a source of no little gratification to all that the offering amounted to $53. The children had been saving their pennies for some time past, hoping that the school might make a creditable showing. In the service, two boys presented the Church banner, and the whole school united in the pledge, "I pledge allegiance to my flag, and to the Saviour for whose Kingdom it stands; one brotherhood, uniting all mankind in service and love". Then two other boys raised the National Flag, which was saluted by "I pledge allegiance to my flag, and to the republic for which it stands; one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice towards all". Mr. W. L. Powell is the superintendent of the school.

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 78 | HOBART, INDIANA, JUNE 29, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

A LETTER FROM THE FRONT

By Bishop McCormick

The days are too busy just now for much letter-writing, and the nights are usually more or less engaged by air raids. However, I am glad to send a message to the readers of THE WITNESS from their representative abroad. I am trying to keep up with our men as they arrive, and, wherever possible, to let them have a greeting and a reminder of their own Church and clergy.

About 100 of our Church clergy are now in France, and many thousands of our men. We have card-catalogued them as far as we can, and are endeavoring to keep in touch with at least some of them.

Bishop Brent has assumed his duties as senior headquarters chaplain of the army, and Bishops Israel and Francis are with their base hospitals. I am directing the American Red Cross chaplains, with rank of major, A. R. C., and have between 40 and 50 chaplains at work. Just now we are trying to supply the hospitals near the lines, and I have just returned from a trip to the front, where I went to relieve one of the chaplains who was sick, and where I spent several days immediately behind the American sector, visiting the wounded and burying the dead.

As you know, our men are in the midst of the big battle, and we are following them up the best we can. It is not easy to have services during a great offensive, but all the chaplains, both regimental and hospital, are tremendously on the job, and we are trying to minister to the men as opportunity permits.

On Memorial Day we had a really great service at our Church of the Holy Trinity, in Paris, attended by the American and British ambassadors, and by our entire diplomatic corps. There was a very large congregation, and the service was wonderfully impressive. Representatives of almost all Churches, as well as of almost all allied nations, were present, and the service was official in character and splendidly effective in its results. Dean Beekman, who is now chaplain of the Church (and acting Rector), was in charge, and I was able to be present and to occupy the place of honor in the procession.

So the American Church is trying to fill its place and to do its duty. May God help us, and may He grant us a speedy deliverance and a final victory!

JOHN N. McCORMICK.

Church Work in Texas Camps

Camp Cody is located adjoining the town of Deming, New Mexico, Fort Bliss and the surrounding camps are in the outskirts of the city of El Paso, Texas, and both important points are in the missionary district of New Mexico and Texas west of the Pecos River.

At Deming, the Rev. Lloyd B. Holsapple, Rector of the Church of St. Barnabas, Omaha, Nebraska, is stationed in charge of the mission at Deming and as civilian chaplain of the camp. Since we went there he has enlarged the chapel to twice its original size and has turned the rectory into a club house for the men with living quarters for himself. Bishop Howden is often called upon for confirmation as Rev. Holsapple seems to have a class in instruction going all the time.

At El Paso the situation is different in many ways but the work no less important. The Rector of St. Clement's, the Rev. Fuller Swift, found it quite impossible for him to carry on the work of that large parish and do justice to the work in the camp. The Rev. Coleman E. Byrum, Ph. D., Rector of St. Thomas' Church, Sioux City, Iowa, volunteered his services to the Bishop and the War Commission and is the civilian chaplain at Fort Bliss. A house has been purchased and is being reconstructed as a chapel, club house and living quarters for Dr. Byrum. Mr. C. C. Miller is the Brotherhood of St. Andrew's secretary and works in connection with the Rector and the chaplain. He has his headquarters in St. Clement's. Dr. Byrum holds from one to three celebrations of the Holy Communion in the camps every Sunday morning, arrives at the Church of St. Clement for the eleven o'clock service and to come in touch with the soldiers attending services in the city, and together with the Rev. George Daland, the Curate-Organist, the choir of St. Clement's and Mr. Miller, holds a service in some of the Y. M. C. A. buildings every Sunday evening. The Rector of St. Clement's, with another group of singers, also holds a service practically every Sunday evening in some Y. M. C. A. hut.

The men are located in the camps and through a committee are introduced to the people of St. Clement's who take them to their homes and give them a taste of home life.

him to have large access to the camps and cantonments. Visits to these camps, not only will enable him to speak to the men in large numbers, but, as the Secretary has suggested, it will also enable him to interpret the life of the camps to the country at large. In the judgment of Secretary Baker, and those in authority, this is a matter of the greatest importance.

The Witness—Four Pages for the Summer

We are reducing THE WITNESS to four pages until the first of September in order to give the Board of Editors and our faithful corps of correspondents, during the vacation season, some relief from the usual demands made upon them.

We are also confident that our subscribers will welcome the change at this time, since we shall give them all the news of the Church that is of real interest in a condensed form and a sufficient quantity of special contributions and editorials to afford them ample food for thought and meditation.

It will doubtless be a matter of no little interest and source of gratification to our many friends to know that plans have been worked out and arrangements made which will enable us to greatly improve and increase the usefulness of the paper, a detailed announcement of which will appear in these columns at an early date.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

On March 30 last a young lieutenant in the British Grenadier Guards was killed in action. His name was Harvard, a descendant of the founder of Harvard University, and he was himself a graduate of the college. To us Churchmen his brief career and swift passing are peculiarly significant, for he was preparing to dedicate his life to service as a medical missionary. God, however, had prepared some better thing for him.

Stefansson, the Arctic explorer, who has been dangerously ill with typhoid fever, sends word that he is now being well taken care of as the guest of Archdeacon Stuck at St. Stephen's Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska. He will not be able to travel for some time.—Spirit of Missions.

A bronze tablet containing the Ten Commandments has been placed in front of the court house in Pittsburg, Penn. It was presented by members of all religious faiths, and, so far as is known, is the first action of the kind in the history of the world.—Boston Globe.

An authorized dispatch from a special correspondent of the London Times says: "The Americans are rapidly completing the longest and greatest scheme of communication ever used in warfare. After a fortnight of solid travel, I am convinced that what the Americans have accomplished will rank in history as one of the greatest achievements of the war. For instance, out of the waste lands have been constructed a splendid line of modern docks, where ships are daily discharging men, war materials, cars, machinery. A huge new warehouse system at this point is nearing completion, in addition to motor parks, cold storage plants and railway yards, with tracks aggregating 200 miles in length. In the car assembling shops, steel cars are being put together at the rate of a complete train each day.

Work is proceeding rapidly on a new 20,000-bed hospital, the largest yet constructed. There are also an immense artillery camp and a remount camp, where I saw several thousand horses.

These port schemes are being so well worked out that they are capable of almost unlimited expansion, which will be most important in pooling the allied effort, for the American base ports may easily become the main reserve centers for distributing supplies to rail heads everywhere on the front.

The conditions were the same along the hundreds of miles of American communications I visited.

The other day a mining prospector came in from the wilderness and learned for the first time that one-half of the world is at war with the other half. For four years, so the dispatches say, he had been too busy working his Powder River claim to keep in touch with his fellow men. He knew nothing of the stories of Belgium, Serbia, Russia, or the Lusitania's fate, or the havoc wrought by the submarine. He listened with wonder to the tales of "over the top" and of poison gas. The peril of Paris and the fall of Jerusalem were all new to him. He learned what an aviation ace is, and a modern grenadier. And how did he react to the news? He promptly tried to enlist. Rejected because of his age, he proceeded to invest the $65,000 in gold that he had dug out of the earth in bonds and thrift stamps.

The incident illustrates the almost incomprehensible isolation of one who is cut away from news of the world. When Stanley found Livingstone, he saw that the famous African explorer, who had been lost for years to the world, did not know that the Suez Canal was open, that the Pacific railroad was finished, that a revolution had driven Isabella from the Spanish throne, that Prussia had humbled Denmark, that the proud Empress of France was a fugitive and her husband a prisoner, while German armies encircled Paris, that Grant was President of the United States. Yet all these events had made the mental food of the world within a few years.

Recently, the London Times contained a letter from the port of Pitcairn Island, that lonely spot in the distant ocean. The writer said: "It is just twelve years since we have had a mail, and you should have heard the noise when the welcome news came of a mail from England."

Only when one considers such cases as these does he get some distant notion of the emptiness of a world without news.—Editorial Boston Herald.

Forty Years in Missionary Service

The fortieth anniversary of the ordination of the Rev. D. A. Sanford was observed at Gallup, New Mexico, on Sunday, June 16th. He was ordained at Milwaukee, Wis., on Sunday, June 16th, 1878. He began his ministry in Wisconsin, but has been engaged in missionary work a large part of his time in the Rocky Mountain region and on the Western prairies. There were eleven violent deaths at Las Vegas, N. M., when he was there during the year 1880. For 15 years he served as a missionary among the Indians, for a while amo the Sioux Indians of South Dak but principally among the Cheyen in Oklahoma. Through the inter sion of Mrs. Mary D. Burnham, a coness, several Indian prisoners been turned over to the Church whom he ministered. His work Oklahoma and elsewhere has b among a great variety of people, cluding the white settlers and the dians, and at present among Gre Syrians, Coreans and others. Twe nationalities and races have b ministered to by him during his fo years of service.

Rector Holds Intervie With Secretary of W

The Rev. Dr. Freeman of Mini apolis, recently had an interview w the Secretary of War in Washingt relative to extending his work in a dressing the men in the camps all ov the country, and upon the secretary urgent request he is undertaking plan, during the summer months, speak at as many of the camps as po sible.

In his letter to the Rector, M Baker says, "I am writing this no to urge you to keep at the good wor to the limit of your convenience. want the country to know ho splendid the Army is. My statemen on that subject, of course has a ne essary element of official and pe sonal pride, while yours is the dis passionate judgment of an intereste observer."

The Secretary of War has given th Rector such credentials as will enabl

Commencement

St. Faith's School, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., held its twenty-eighth commencement during the week beginning June 8. There were three graduates. Rev. Eugene S. Pearce, of Rome, was the commencement speaker. The corner stone of Shackelford Hall—a new domitory and recreation hall— was laid, Ex-Senator Brackett, of Saratoga Springs, making a strong address. Application has been made to the Synod of the Provience of New York and New Jersey to recognize the school as a Provincial Institution.

The Missionary Attitude in Time of War

The Rev. C. C. B. Bardsley, D. D., secretary of the Church Missionary Society, writing about the responsibility of the Church Missionary Society to the government in what he calls "these fate laden days" declares:

"We must retain with intensity the conviction that the greatest contribution of the Church to the nation is through helping to strengthen all the spiritual forces in her life. The morale of the nation depends upon her attitude towards God.

"The spirit in which the Church responds to the call" Dr. Bardsley continues, "will largely determine her influence in the nation. Her sacrifices must be neither tardy nor niggardly. Fresh and different sacrifices are required.

"It is seen again that we are fighting for freedom and truth, which are the ideals of the Kingdom of God; in days when the clouds are heavy, the rays of a new hope are breaking through, as all side issues and secondary aims recede into the background and great ideals once more stand out clear-cut and challenging. The war spirit must be cleansed and quickened by the true passion for righteousness and brotherhood. The sacrifice which must be made must be a spiritual sacrifice. It must be made by men and women who are aflame with devotion to God and His cause, and whose action is the answer to their own prayer, "Thy Kingdom Come." The Church that is scattered abroad must be living and witnessing."

One of the significant features of Dr. Bardsley's statement is that it nowhere suggests contraction or postponement in the Church's missionary work in these days of war, but rather calls upon the people of the Church of England to meet extraordinary emergencies and requirements by extraordinary sacrifices made in a spirit of loyal devotion to God and to the nation.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAY

By the Rev. Francis S. White

St. Peter's Day

THE COLLECT

O Almighty God, who by thy Son Jesus Christ didst give to thy Apostle Saint Peter many excellent gifts, and commandedst him earnestly to feed thy flock; Make, we beseech thee, all Bishops and Pastors diligently to preach thy holy Word, and the people obediently to follow the same, that they may receive the crown of everlasting glory; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Many excellent gifts"—gifts which, when rightly used, help a man excel; gifts which, when pulsing with the blessing of Christ, help accelerate the pace which shall hasten the coming of Christ's Kingdom in the earth. The best is none too good to offer unto "the Giver of all good and perfect gifts". Let us pray God to save us all the time from offering to Him that which costs us nothing. The cause of Christ suffers more from cheap ideas and ideals than any other good cause that one could mention. She should have the best of everything, from men to money—not to spend on herself, but to spend for God's children. Pray earnestly that the excellent gifts which God has given you may be used by you, directly or indirectly, for feeding and tending the flock of Christ.

"Earnestly to feed thy flock." That word "earnest" is a good word. It is the alloy, so to speak, which God wants us to put in with the more precious metals which He gives us, so that they can survive the wear and tear of daily use, and still keep bright, though coming constantly in contact with sordid ways and customs. When one prays in earnest, plays in earnest, works with either hands or head in earnest, then he is able to give a good account of his gifts, and those gifts shine with a lustre and ring with a sound that is impossible if "earnest" or "earnestly" is not there. Let us remember that men cannot play with the Gospel commands, for they either kill or make alive.

This day we think and pray for the Petrine gift; we pray that our Bishops, the whole Episcopate, in fact, shall manifest its Divine mission by its diligence in giving food to those who, Christ says, must have life and have it more abundantly. How many of us ever pray for the whole Episcopate? How many of us ever place the names of the American Episcopate before God? How many of us ever kneel down and bring before the Lord the souls of Bishops and pastors in far off lands, and big cities, and wild places, and rough places, and hostile places, and indifferent places, and pray for them that they may preach the good news with diligence, that is, with an earnestness which is kept alive by love?

May it not be that if we prayed more earnestly for our Bishops and pastors, that we would find their messages more fervid, and their bidding easier to follow? We pray God to give us true pastors, and then act as if we had no further responsibility in the matter. If we send or set a Bishop anywhere, then our business is to "follow" him, to back him up, with prayerful interest, intelligent giving, personal endeavor.

When St. Peter followed our Lord a long ways off, he became critical, careless, cussing, self-centered; and he nearly lost his soul. If we elect Bishops, and then leave them to the tender mercies of God, we are following them at a distance, and we are playing false to the plan which Jesus had in mind, when, in the person of St. Peter, He endowed the Episcopate with many excellent gifts.

And when we pray for the Episcopate in other places, let us give more than a passing thought in our prayer to their flocks. "Brethren, pray for us", is an appeal which in answering we are apt to make exclusive rather than inclusive. Mother Church has put the answer to this appeal in her daily morning and evening prayers; but how earnestly and intelligently do we use that prayer? How frequently do we priests, who pray daily, stop with the third Collect? And we people, who listen to them on Sundays, how often do we let the words of the Collect, "for all Bishops and pastors, and the congregations committed to their charge", fall on listless ears and unresponsive hearts? If the clergy do not measure up to their spiritual gifts, may it not be because the laity do not measure up to the spiritual duty of praying more earnestly and frequently for those whom God has called to follow Him without delay?

FOR THE EPISTLE

About that time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the Church. And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.) And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quarternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people. Peter therefore was kept in prison: but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him. And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison. And, behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands. And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me. And he went out and followed him; and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw a vision. When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which opened to them of his own accord: and they went out and passed on through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him. And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.—Acts xii:1.

Politics in the Church! Sometimes it has imprisoned conscientious priests in the Episcopate. More than once men have been known to play politics in Episcopal elections, for themselves or for their friends. And more than one James has been killed with the sword of prejudice; and more than one Peter has been bound with chains and "put to sleep" in some place far distant from his own sphere of influence. Let us always be careful to keep partisanship and political scheming out of our calls and elections to the office of Bishop, priest and deacon. God will often overrule and put to naught the best laid plans of mouselike men; but the warning is that we should keep our elections free from all suspicions of wire-pulling and compromises. Such procedures cannot produce "leaders" with excellent gifts.

"Intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people." This reminds one of the phrase, "A more convenient season". I wonder how much missionary effort has been bound and tied "with the chains of procrastination and timidity or lack of faith". People in Africa, or Asia, or America need a leader. "After such and such a time we will give you your leader," says the party of prejudice or procrastination or self-interest. And if the interested people give up in despair, nothing will happen. Prayer without ceasing was made by the Church for St. Peter, and the cause to which the saint was committed eventually triumphed. Let us avoid the sin of putting off our duties to the less fortunate brethren at home and abroad, and try with all our might to make up for the mistakes which their irresponsibility has caused.

"A light shined in the prison." Wherever the Lord's messengers go, in the name of the Lord, there is light, and where there is light there is always a chance to progress. Let us Christians think of people who know not Christ as "bound in the prison house of sin", and see if we cannot be messengers of the Lord to bring light and throw light on the problems of their prison. Each Christian is a light-bearer. You are a light-bearer. The question for you is, "Am I letting my light shine solely under my own bushel basket of personal interests, or am I willing to let it shine in the prison houses of indifference, neglect, despair, bondage and hate. If you do not add your "little candle beam" to the sum total of shining, there is that much less chance for real progress, and you are hindering the progress of God's plan.

"Thought he saw a vision": thought the truth was unsubstantial—such stuff as dreams are made of. How many Bishops and missionaries from the dark places have come to us with their stories, and we have thought them mere dreamers! God be merciful to us who have kept our eyes shut to the opportunities for the Church to make progress through hostile forces. God be praised for leading our leaders on, in spite of our blindness, our indifference, our ignorance and our bigotry, so that, in spite of persecution from without and scheming from within, the Church's leaders have often been able to look back and see that God has delivered them out of the hand of the one and the expectation of the other.

THE GOSPEL

When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? And they said, Some say that thou are John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.—St. Matt. xvi:13.

"Whom do men say that I * * * am?" Men generally say that the Blessed One is what they have been taught to look for, or have fondly imagined of themselves. Let us pray for ability and wisdom to manifest Him as the only true Christ, the Son of the Living God. It is this witness to Christ present in Book and Rite that has kept the Church alive. This is the fundamental duty of the Episcopate, and of all those who follow the Episcopate, namely, to witness to the Divine-Human Jesus Christ, the son of the Living God. The faith has been kept alive by the heart and life of the common people who have singular gifts of the Holy Ghost. Here was plain Simon Johnson. But he saw into the heart of Jesus—he had the excellent gift of seeing Jesus as the vital thing in Christianity (as the following of Jesus was to be called), and by faithfully using this excellent gift simple Simon Johnson became St. Peter—progressed from fisherman to Bishop. May his spiritual tribe increase!

"Thou art Petros, a basic man, and upon this petra, or your foundation confession of My personality, human and Divine, I will build My Church," said the Christ to the fisherman. And the gates of the place where pride and prejudice are born and live and breed shall not avail to keep this foundation confession from growing as a livi[ng] stone grows.

This St. Peter's Day is a clari[on] call for men to witness to the Dei[ty] of Jesus Christ in no uncertain ton[e]. This St. Peter's day is a reminder [to] all Bishops and pastors that they a[re] to faithfully feed by word and rite t[he] vital life of the Son of the Livi[ng] God into the hearts of the people.

This St. Peter's Day is a call to t[he] faithful people to obediently follo[w] this teaching of the witnessing Apo[s]tolate to the super-human Christ.

This is the day for priest and pe[o]ple to realize that not priests on[ly] nor people only, constitute the Churc[h] but that the Church only is one, ca[th]olic, holy, as priests and people a[re] together tied by the bond of the Lo[rd] and Giver of life, to the Son of th[e] Living God, making thereby an effec[t]ive working body, which will hold an[d] effectually use the keys of the Kin[g]dom of Heaven to open that Kingdo[m] of Heaven to all believers in eve[ry] place where the foot of man can trea[d].

The whole Church! The who[le] Body of Christ! Let us pray for th[e] Petrine vision. Let it absorb our pa[ro]chialism and our provincialism. Let us pray to become Christian citi[-]zens of the world. Let us hold th[e] view that "the world is my parish" [in] such a way that we shall not be su[b]merged by its largeness, but enlarg[ed] in heart and vision, so that we c[an] walk and talk with the saints li[ke] Peter, and neither fear nor boast, [e]cept as we fear to hurt the fame [of] God by evil or weakness, and live [to] make our boast of Him, and not o[ur]selves, all the day long.

Sunday morning we continue the law as given in Deuteronomy, using chapter 5, which contains, besides the Decalogue, the story of the circumstances under which the law was given, and closes with a passionate appeal to the nation for obedience. If the suggestion be permissible, the clergy would do well to call the attention of their congregations to the Deuteronomic form of the Fourth Commandment as distinguished from and supplementing the more familiar Exodus form, the one basing observance of the Sabbath on its relation to creation, as though the necessity of periodical rest was embedded in the very nature of things; the other basing it upon Israel's experience in Egypt and their redemption therefrom: "The seventh day is a Sabbath unto Jehovah thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, that thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou. And thou shalt remember that thou was a servant in the land of Egypt, and Jehovah thy God brought thee out thence by a mighty hand and by an outstretched arm; therefore Jehovah thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." This contains a more humanitarian appeal than the other and, besides, connects itself more directly with the Christian Sunday as itself also a memorial of redemption.

The New Testament lesson takes up the whole subject of government by law, and carries it upward to the Christian stage of revelation, showing that the law had produced neither universal nor even partial complete obedience, but had, on the contrary, revealed the universality of sin and the necessity of some other plan, viz: faith, as the means alike of getting into right relations with God and attaining character that is inwardly pure.

The first evening lesson was selected to illustrate the petition in the Collect that God would so order the course of this world that His Church might joyfully serve Him in godly quietness. It is part of the story of Balaam, when God's ancient Church was opposed by the Moabites, a situation analogous to times that produced this Collect, when "persecution raged against those who were faithful to their Christian profession".

The second lesson is devoted to the idea of service, containing the two parables, one of the stewardship of wealth and the motive so to use our material goods as to make to ourselves friends "on the other side", the other that of Dives and Lazarus, and the solemn warning against selfishness with our wealth. Both are aimed at that worldliness which gnawed the heart of Balaam like a canker.

The week day lessons simply continue the course readings, respectively of the law, Proverbs, Acts of the Apostles and the life of our Lord.

The lessons for next Sunday are (1) Deuteronomy continued—an appeal for obedience to God's laws in the Promised Land (not merely as a condition of getting there). (2) The corresponding New Testament truth—God as One, and all religion summed up for time and eternity in love to God and man. (4) Union of prophetic and priestly conceptions of religion in the vision of Jehovah standing by the Altar. (4) The same in the institution of the Holy Communion.

FORGIVENESS

Forgiveness is the forthgiving of the love of God to the wrongdoer. This does not remove the penalty or the consequences of sin, but gives the assurance that in spite of the wrongdoing repented of, the love of the Father still enfolds the sinner. Sin is the assertion of our self-will against the love of God. Forgiveness is the awakening to the fact that our relationship to God is unbroken. This brings pardon and peace. It is the gospel of another chance.

UNTO HIM THAT LOVED US AND WASHED US FROM OUR SINS IN HIS OWN BLOOD, AND HATH MADE US AS KINGS AND PRIESTS UNTO GOD AND HIS FATHER: TO HIM BE GLORY AND DOMINION FOREVER AND EVER. AMEN.

EDITORIAL

The Lesson of History

It has been interesting in this war to note how the imprecatory psalms have had a meaning to people who had previously fancied that to declare, "Do not I hate them that hate thee," was to be guilty of un-Christian sentiments. People hurl anathemas against pacifists and slackers, who up to this time have maintained a "good God, good devil" attitude toward the universe. We do not hesitate to excommunicate those who are guilty of violating the espionage act.

The truth is that people who love their country are filled with righteous wrath against those who plot against her safety, which seems to indicate that where we love much we are apt to feel pretty indignant against those who betray the allegiance they have taken.

All of this has a bearing upon the attitude which Churchmen have felt in the past toward those who were "scuttling the ship that they were sailing in."

It is a strange thing that patriotism is so keen in times of war and so tame in times of peace.

As soon as war is declared the patriotism of the nation which has been smouldering for years past bursts into a white heat, and the nation which men had made but little effort to live for becomes a thing worth dying for.

It is the same with the Church.

The blood of the martyrs is the seed of its life and energy.

It explains what our Lord means when He says "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake, Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven."

Just as we need a war to develop patriotism, so we need fierce opposition to develop Churchmanship.

It takes the bellows of war to fan into flame the fires of love.

After all what is the Church? Is it not that solidarity of men, knit together in the love of Christ, who are sworn to fight manfully against sin, the world and the devil and to continue Christ's faithful soldiers and servants unto their lives' end?

Is not the Church to the Christian all that the nation is to the patriot?

And has He not a right to be as jealous for its honor and for its safety as the citizen has for the nation?

But the socialist tells us that we are to serve no flag; that the world is our country, and that all flags should be destroyed in consequence. Coupled with this is also the wiping out of the family and the substitution of the herd idea. And associated with it in the religious sphere is the churchless Christianity which has such a popular hold upon the imagination of those who are loyal to country and family, but who have destroyed the identity of the Church.

This theory of the universality of nation, family and Church fails in that it is not a true universality of these entities, for it begins by destroying them. It cannot end by merging that which has been destroyed.

It is the substitution of mere ideals for realities, and then wishing those ideals into new realities.

It is that form of Bolshevikism which ignores the experience of the ages, and substitutes for it the theories of a very short life-time and ends in the destruction of everything that the past has built up—religion, art, wealth and character—It puts men who have never had the brains or ability to run a grocery store into the intoxicating pastime of messing a nation or the Church of God.

It ignores facts and ends in a fool's paradise.

The nation and the Church stand on a similar basis and fall together if the foundations are undermined. The political economy of Russia today is not more chaotic than the social economy of the Protestant world in America, and unless the grace of God intervenes to stop it, both Russia and Protestantism will fall a victim to the imperialism of Germany or Rome, which stands ready to profit by the dissensions of fools.

You cannot build permanently, either state or Church, on the theories of individualists, for the foundation is not that of stones cemented into solidity, but grains of sand, ever crumbling into new and variable formations.

The family, the state, the Church are ordered combinations of individuals, who live each for the other, upon a basis of fact, of human experience, of historic reality.

To substitute the herd for the family is to destroy the sanctuary of family life.

To substitute theories of the individual for constitutions growing out of human experience is to wreck the state and to produce anarchy. It is to do away for ever with patriotism and to replace it with individual selfishness.

The Bolskeviki begins in theories of universal brotherhood but ends in the exercise of the very worst individual tyranny.

So in the Church Luther begins by condemning the Pope and ended by demanding that everybody should submit to his own individual infallible doctrine. So did Calvin. So did John Wesley. So did Mrs. Eddy.

You dethrone the Czar or the Pope in order that you may have a boss who will think for you and excommunicate you if you dare to disagree with him. And then you get tired of your boss and each man, there being no constitution left, becomes his own boss and does that which is right in his own eyes.

In France they had Louis XVI, then Robespierre, then Chaos, then Napoleon, then a degenerate Napoleon, then a constitutional republic. In England they had Charles I, then Chaos, then Cromwell, then a degenerate Cromwell, then Charles II, and then a constitutional monarchy. In Russia they had the Czar, then Lenine and Trotsky, then Chaos, then the Prussian Emperor and then, let us hope, a Russian constitutional government.

In the Church we have had the Pope, then Luther and Calvin, then little Luthers and little Calvins, then Chaos—and God grant that we may have, not the Pope again but a Constitutional Church, that recognizes the continuity of history and the value of the unity of the spirit in the household of faith.

We need a religion, embodied in a definite institution, in which there is no Louis XVI, no Robespierre, no Napoleon, no shifty Napoleons, but in which the body of the faith is upheld and sustained by the body of the faithful in a constitutional order that fadeth not away. And no federation of Churches, nor community Church, will ever realize this essential oneness of the Holy Catholic Church, nor its true universality.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

(Ask any questions that are sinc ere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colo.)

Has any parish priest the right to omit entirely, each first Sunday in the month, the order of Morning Prayer, substituting in its place the Office of Holy Communion?

The English clergy have the obligation to say Morning and Evening Prayer daily. The American Church has never enacted this law. There is no rule that I know of which compels an American priest to say Morning Prayer on Sunday morning more than on Monday morning.

Has any parish priest the authority to habitually omit, each Sunday, the reading of the Litany—relegating its use exclusively to Friday afternoons?

There is no rule which says when the Litany is to be said. The direction for the use of both Morning Prayer and the Litany is found on page 7 of the Standard Prayer Book, in the article "Concerning the Service of the Church"; provided, that no one of these services be habitually disused".

Has any of our priests the right, at funerals or other Church services, to substitute the word "Thy" for "Catholic", in the prayer beginning, "O God, whose days are without end"?

In the adaptation of Collects, considerable latitude is used, perhaps not legally. Certainly a priest would not have the right to leave out the word "Catholic" in the prayer mentioned because he was wiser than the Church, and objected to saying what the Church has said.

Has any priest the right to give warning for the celebration of the Holy Communion in any other way than the one prescribed in the Prayer Book, beginning, "Dearly beloved, on ——— day"?

The reading of this rubric is mandatory, and should be followed more often than it is.

Can the Gospel and Epistle for any Sunday be legally omitted?

On a special occasion of local importance another Epistle and Gospel might be used, with the consent of the Bishop, either obtained or implied.

Should the priest say "Amen" to any other Collect or prayer, except where the "Amen" is printed in plain type?

I know of nothing to prevent his saying Amen when printed in Italics, as he deprives no one of any privilege in so doing. The italicized Amen is to indicate what the congregation is to do, not what the priest is not to do.

Is it not using the "Amen" for a wrong purpose when it is intended as a signal that the prayers are ended?

Involves the doctrine of intention, which I hesitate to go into.

Is it not at least bad taste for a priest to appear in the streets, or in the cemetery, "vested", wearing a straw or other hat?

It may look badly, but it is not an irreverence to wear a hat outdoors. Except where the cemetery adjoins the church, we have never felt vestments in the street were particularly desirable.

The whole matter of local use is left very wisely by the Church (as it was in the early Church) to local custom.

Uniformity of performance is not essential to unity of the faith, but it is most desirable in a country where people move about as they do in the U. S. A. that local customs should give way to general use.

The laity cannot expect absolute uniformity, however, in a Church which has so few mandatory directions about the services as this Church has.

What devotional organization has the Church corresponding to the Y. P. S. C. E. for the development of the spiritual life of her young people?

The Church has never, in any age, so far as we know, deemed it advisable to develop the spiritual life of young people by mixed organizations of both sexes.

I question very much the development of the spiritual life in such organizations for three reasons:

1. In education and religion the mingling of the sexes has never made for education or religion, inasmuch as the distractions incident to such organizations prevent rather than aid either development.

2. The practice of encouraging young people to talk and pray in public before thinking on their knees in private makes for superficial egotism rather than devout worship.

3. The tendency of these organizations, in the words of the prophet, is "to worship their drag and to fall down before their net".

The early service is the best place that I know of in which to develop real spiritual growth in young people; and where it is patiently and intelligently used has, I believe, the best ultimate results.

In case a mission is too poor to pay the Pension Fund assessment, what protection has the clergyman?

The diocese is the unit recognized by the General Convention, and we are inclined to think the responsibility rests with the diocese to see that all of the clergy who so desire shall participate in the benefits of the Pension Fund.

As a rule, missions are not too poor, but too illy informed. Where the matter is presented to them correctly they usually respond gladly, even at some self-sacrifice in the matter.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

The Standing Committe of the Diocese of Central New York has organized by the election of the Rev. Edward H. Coley, D. D., of Utica, as President, and the Rev. James K. Parker of Waterville, as Secretary.

The open air services held on Sunday afternoons at Pittsburgh, Pa., are attracting large audiences. On a recent Sunday short addresses were given by the Rev. Dr. E. H. Ward, Rector of St. Peter's Church, and the Rev. Edwin J. Van Etten, Rector of Calvary Church. The Rev. William Porkess, Rector of Grace Church, presided, and Bishop Whitehead gave the benediction.

The English Church Missionary Society has just closed its fiscal year with receipts of $2,035,000, not including special funds. This is the "largest ordinary income the Society has ever received." The society was able to meet all its obligations for the year with a surplus of $7,500.

The Rev. A. Ray, Rector of St. Mary's Church, St. Paul, Minn., says in his parish paper; "The Rector does not often use stories for purposes of illustration, but the following served to give point to a discussion on a Sunday morning lately.

A small boy was saying his prayers on the evening preceding departure for the summer home, and ended up, "Well, good-bye, God; we're going to the country for the summer, but we'll be back in three months."

"We have been strengthened in our purpose to ask for a referendum on the question of pew renting" says the Rev. A. M. Hilliker, Rector of Christ Church, Lonsdale, R. I., "by the strong pronouncement on the subject made by the Bishop of the diocese in his Convention address of this year. He deems the system of pew selling and renting antiquated, undemocratic and unworthy, and believes that the Church cannot be its best or do its best work for the world while special privileges in the house of God can be purchased with money.

The following supplies are furnished by the Diocese of Massachusetts to its chaplains in military service: Communion set, recreation tent, motion picture machine with screen, two fiber trunks for carrying motion picture outfit, portable altar, cross and candlesticks, stationery with name of regiment, talking machine with attachment to play any record, Underwood typewriter, Corona typewriter and auto truck for motion picture equipment. These articles total a cost of $1,644.52, as stated in a report from the joint commission on social service of the diocese.

A Service Flag was unfurled with impressive service recently at Christ Church, Savannah, Ga., in honor of the members of the parish now in war service. The flag bears forty stars, representing men in the army and navy, two triangles for those in Y. M. C. A. war work, and two crosses for those in American Red Cross work at the front. Mr. C. Lucian Jones, who recently retired as warden of the parish, a veteran of the Confederate army and who has a son now in France, unfurled the flag while the honor roll was called by the Rector, the Rev. John D. Wing, in the presence of a large gathering of friends and relatives of those in whose honor the service was held.

The Tri-City Church Bulletin, published by the Rev. F. V. Hoag in the interest of his work at Batavia, Geneva and St. Charles, Ill., says the charge by Bishop Anderson at the Convention of the Diocese of Chicago was very striking. "He spoke of the efficiency in managing the Church's work, blaming chiefly the vestries for the failure to see how large their job really is. A well ordered vestry meeting, said Bishop Anderson, should not just hear the report of the treasurer, but should have reports, and take action on, such matters as the Sunday School, advertising, missions, charities and social service. Above all, a vestry is the spiritual center of a parish and its members not just financial advisers, but real under-pastors."

The parish paper of St. George's Church, Chicago, announces that the Rector, the Rev. Dr. Oscar Homburger, "has decided to spend his vacation this year doing patriotic work. It has been his custom for several years past to spend a month in the woods of Michigan, and put in a good deal of his time wood chopping. This year he has arranged to spend it in the plant of the Chicago Ship Building Company helping get out the ships which are needed to bring the Kaiser to his senses. After all a vacation consists of a change of scene, and a change of occupation. The scenery in a ship yard is quite different from that of Grand Crossing, and the work is quite different too, so this is considered in the nature of a vacation. It is really a pleasure to get so much exercise.

On Sunday, June 16th, at St. Paul's Cathedral, Oklahoma City, Okla., the Bishop ordered Deacon, Mr. John MacLeod. Dean Bate presented the candidate, the Bishop preaching the sermon. The Rev. Herbert Hawkins of Topeka, Kansas, assisting also, saying the Litany. Mr. MacLeod continues as assistant minister at the Cathedral, with especial charge of St. John's Chapel, where there is in prospect a very successful work. Mr. MacLeod's address is 127 W. 7th St., Oklahoma City.

The Rev. E. B. Doolittle, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Brownville, N. Y., on a recent Sunday blessed the following memorials presented to the Church by Mr. Gordon W. Campbell; a brass processional cross inscribed as follows: To the Glory of God and in loving memory of Bridget Murray Campbell and of her son Frederick Spencer Campbell. Also a brass altar desk and an altar service book inscribed follows: To the Glory of God and in loving memory of Katharine Emma Campbell Hemenway. June 19, 1894-December 10, 1915. by her brother.

Personal Mention

During July and August Bishop Sage should be addresed, Richards Landing, St. Joseph's Island, Ontario, Canada.

The Rev. Edward S. Doan, Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Roswell, N. M., preached the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of the High School of his city.

The Rev. Dr. Rodgers, President of St. Stephen's College, will take charge of Grace Church, Mount Airy, during July and August. His address will be Cheshrim Arms, Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Rev. Edw. S. Doan, missionary at Roswell, N. Y., recently preached the baccalaureate sermon for the graduates of the Roswell High School. Mr. Doan has been appointed County Agent for the U. S. Public Service Reserve.

The Rev. J. J. Crawford of St. Alban's Church, Spooner, Wis., has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Watertown, Wis. He succeeds the Rev. H. A. Link, who is engaged in war service.

Bishop Tuttle, the presiding Bishop of the American Church, was i Chicago on Sunday, June 23, and preached the sermon at the morning service in St. Peter's Church, of which the Rev. Frederick G. Budlong is the Rector.

The Rev. H. W. Wells, Rector of St. Paul's Church at Woodville, Miss., from which point he has also served St. James' Church at Port Gibson, will change his place of residence to Port Gibson on July 1st and assume full charge of the parish there.

The Rev. Philip A. Easley, Rector of St. Matthew's Church, Grand Junction, Col., will spend the summer at Colorado Springs and will have charge of the services during the month of July in Grace Church and during August in St. Stephen's Church.

Three hundred parishioners and friends were present at a reception tendered the Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Simpson at Pontiac, Mich., on June 6th. Mr. Simpson sailed the following week for Y. M. C. A. duty at the front in France. He was presented with a purse of $275 from the parish, $25 in gold from the Ladies' Aid society and several articles useful for camp life from friends.

A Sermonette by an Oregon Layman

The following brief address on "The Church and the War" was delivered in the Young Men's Christian Association hall at Portland, Oregon, by Mr. Clarence D. Porter, a well known layman of that city, who is a lay reader in his parish and an earnest Churchman:

The hour of opportunity is upon America.

The hour of opportunity is upon the Church.

America has become the granary of the nations. The wardrobe of the earth. The head banker of the world. America shall also become the work shop of the King of kings for the salvation of the world.

Never has there been a time when the world desired more earnestly or has had reason more confidently to expect the Church to be true to Christ than today.

Let me say with emphasis—what America will be fifty years hence, yes, what the world will be a hundred years hence, depends in a large measure on what American Christianity does today.

Every patriot in America is thinking, talking, living for the great conflict that is shaking the world to its very foundations, and every American fights in this war singing the Battle Hymn of the Republic as he marches on.

"In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom which
transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy, let us
die to make men free,
While God is marching on."

The Church has transmitted to the civilized world that great philosophy of Christ—Sacrifice. "Greater love has no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Every red blooded American recognizes this ideal of service and it is with this spirit our whole nation has entered the war. As I look at life we have hitherto done what we were compelled to do. In the coming days we shall do what we ought to do.

The Church must "carry on" if we expect our boys to "carry on." Without the Church America cannot win, because we are fighting for the principles laid down by the Master Himself. This terrible conflict, my friends, is bringing men's hearts to God. All the new religions and new theorists have failed to give us any certitude or finality. The words of Christ ring louder today than they ever did. They mean more to us at this trying hour than ever before. "I am the way. I am the truth." "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

In order to bring the proper victory home to America the people of this country must get down on their knees and pray. There ought to be a prayer for our boys and our country at every gathering. Prayer is the means of putting us in tune with the Infinite. In order to receive the message sent over the sea by the wireless telegraph, the receiver must be in perfect accord with the transmitter. So therefore if we want to be in tune with God we must do so by prayer.

When men are obsessed with the passion of murder and rapine, such as the Kaiser and his cohorts are, they are out of tune. They have denied Christ. "Come unto me," saith Christ, "and ye would not." America must heed these words and the Church must not fail in sounding the message to all mankind at this terrible hour.

President Wilson said this is a war of autocracy against democracy. That is true, but it is also a war of Christianity against Prussian Kultur. Ex-President Taft said "that if the Kaiser wins, Bunker Hill and Valley Forge are wiped out of our history," but I say to you if the Kaiser wins the Lord's Prayer is idle rhetoric and Calvary is grim mockery.

In conclusion let me bring to your attention that we are in this war with the sword of Christ. We must fight as if Christ was personally by our side in the trenches. We must stand for the same principles Christ stood for and then when the smoke of the battle has cleared away we will have a peace the whole world yearns for—"Peace on Earth Good Will towards all men." Yes, even in a broader sense—"A peace that passeth all undertanding."

Open air services are being held by St. Matthew's Church at Wheeling, W. Va., during the summer months.

West Texas Auxiliary Meets in Cuero

The twenty-third annual meeting of the West Texas Branch of the Womans' Auxiliary met at Cuero, May 22 and 23. In point of attendance and interest it was unanimously considered one of the best in the history of the organization. The meeting was called together by the president, Mrs. A. W. S. Garden, at 3 p. m. on Wednesday. After the reading of the minutes and roll call a very interesting address on the proposed amendments to be brought before the next Triennial Meeting was given by Mrs. J. Muir, one of the past presidents. A corporate communion was held in Grace Church on Thursday at 8:30 a. m. Bishop Capers officiating as celebrant. The president's report showed a fine record of work accomplished during the year. She had visited every parish in the diocese except one, and had organized sixteen new branches. The treasurer reported over $1,600 raised for missionary purposes during the year. A fund of $250 was in hand for the traning of a woman worker from West Texas, this fund being a memorial to the late Miss Roberta Johnston.

The educational secretary reported that sixteen branches had pursued a regular course of study. Receipts from the blue boxes for the year amounted to $497.55.

The president read Miss Lindley's letter on the Call to Prayer, dealing particularly with the spiritual side of winning the war. The subject was generally discussed and plans made for carrying out the suggestions of Miss Lindley.

The plan for an annual Council of Church Women to meet concurrently with the diocesan Council was presented by Mrs. Garden, and was referred to the Council, through the Bishop, where the plan was officially adopted.

The question of support for a woman field secretary for the diocese was presented by the Bishop and on motion of Mrs. Buchel the Auxiliary decided to raise $600 for this purpose.

The following officers were elected for the next three years: President, Mrs. Albert Massey; First Vice-President, Mrs. George Allensworth; Second Vice-President, Mrs. Otto Buchel.

A resolution expressing thanks and appreciation to Mrs. Garden for her able administration and untiring zeal in the interest of the Auxiliary during the past three years was passed by a rising vote.

A vote of thanks to the Cuero Branch of the Auxiliary, Mrs. Frank Thompson, president, for the gracious hospitality and the efforts which had made this one of the most successful annual meetings was passed.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

By Francis Thompson (1859-1907)

O world invisible, we view thee,
O world intangible, we touch thee,
O world unknowable, we know thee,
Inapprehensible, we clutch thee!

Does the fish soar to find the ocean,
The eagle plunge to find the air—
That we ask of the stars in motion
If they have rumor of thee there?

Not where the wheeling systems darken,
And our benumbed conceiving soars!
The drift of pinions, would we hearken,
Beats at our clay-shuttered doors.

The angels keep their ancient places;
Turn but a stone, and start a wing!
'Tis ye, 'tis your estranged faces,
That miss the many-splendored thing.

But (when so sad thou canst not sadder)
Cry— and upon thy so sore loss
Shall shine the traffic of Jacob's ladder
Pitched between Heaven and Charing Cross.

Yea, in the night, my Soul, my daughter,
Cry—clinging Heaven by the hems;
And lo, Christ walking on the water,
Not of Gennesaret, but Thames!

I

A VISIT TO THE OLD COLLEGE

I have been attending the commencement exercises of Kenyon College. It is one of my yearly vacations, for very few vacations have such an interest to a college man as a few days spent at his Alma Mater. Although it is now twenty years since I left the college, the desire to return remains strong. Kenyon College has such a distinct hold upon the affections of those who have studied in its classic halls that it never fades out. So I go back year after year with the same zest.

But the college reflects somewhat the changes of the world in those twenty years. Although the village of Gambier, in which it is situated, is on the line of the Pennsylvania railroad, yet most people prefer to return in automobiles. So the whirr of the motor is heard through the great college park. From all over Ohio, at commencement time, the graduates come in cars to the beautiful hill, in the very heart of the rolling country of central Ohio. In my day, motors were unknown, and the sole local transportation facilities were ancient busses that had been rejected at the bone yard.

Kenyon College is a curious combination of the old and the new. It has, like Harvard, its ancient buildings, its sheltered park, its traditions of nearly a century, its timeless emphasis upon culture and the classics, upon the cultivation of the whole man into the best phases of our Anglo-Saxon civilization; but with these venerable treasures it has a spirit ever fresh; its buildings remodeled and equipped with every modern convenience; its dormitories refurnished within for the health and comfort of the student; its curriculum adjusted to demands of modern education in science and languages; its faculties men of fine training and experience in modern methods of research and teaching.

As I walked again through the park and viewed the old buildings, with their thousand associations, and the new buildings with their fresh aspect and superb architecture, the thought came to my mind with a great wave of gratitude, "How fortunate I was to have been sent to Kenyon. Here I have enjoyed an atmosphere like unto that of Oxford and Cambridge of old England; a spirit as distinct as that of Harvard or Dartmouth or Williams, in New England; a freedom from the distractions of a modern hubbub called a city; an environment that was fascinating and wholesome, together with the opportunity for a broad and liberal education. Truly Kenyon combines all that people most admire in ancient seats of learning, and most respect in our modern universities."

What does an alumnus do when he returns to his college? He becomes a boy again, indulging in his youthful fervor and resuming his youthful habits. Old nicknames are revived, old stories told, and old associations renewed.

My first dash was to the old dormitory, old Kenyon, as we call it, built on the brow of Gambier Hill nearly a century ago. Its massive walls are so thick that each window has its wide window seat, from which one may look, at least from the front windows, into the spacious college park. In one of the rooms I heard shouts of laughter, and there I went and found other old grads having a talk about Kenyon of their day. After noisy greetings, I was permitted to share the window seat with several old-timers, whose dress and manners would scarcely arouse the suspicion that they were prominent lawyers and physicians and men of affairs.

"Look at all this luxury," exploded '88, waving his hand about the room. In my day Kenyon was a barracks compared to this. We lived then exactly as students had lived since the first college was built. We carried cordwood from the cellar to feed the voracious stoves. We hauled water from the pump. On winter mornings I always broke the ice in the pitcher and had to pound the frozen wash cloth with a potato masher to make it flexible enough to reach the inner sanctums of my ears. Those were days and that was the life. Today," and he waved his hand airily, "you boys have all the conveniences of a Pullman car."

"Stop your noise, old gray beard," shouted '89, "and tell us about the famous stunt you engineered in your junior year."

"When I was in college," said '87, "there was one member of the faculty who lived a quiet, domestic life. He had an admirable wife, and they were much respected in the community. It was noised about the college one day that in the near future Mr. Eaton and his wife would celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. This news caused some activity among the students. They learned that it would occur on Saturday, May 18th. In the noon mail of that day were many large envelopes addressed to various members of the faculty and to many people living in the village. They read simply:

"'Mr. and Mrs. Eaton desire the pleasure of your company for dinner at 6 o'clock, on the evening of Saturday, May 18th, being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage.'

"As the people read their cards, the usual comment was something like this: 'How characteristic of Mr. and Mrs. Eaton. They wanted their friends, but they gave them no opportunity to plan for a gift.'

"So Mr. and Mrs. Faculty and Mr. and Mrs. Townsfolk, dressed in their best clothes, began making their way to the hospitable home of the Eatons. The president of the college arrived first, which he deemed it his duty to do. It was a few minutes before six. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton received them graciously, and were pleased with the congratulations of the courteous president and his kindly wife. Very soon other members of the faculty began to arrive. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton, with quiet friendliness, greeted them all and asked them all to be seated. When the townsfolk arrived the company spread from sitting room and parlor, by sheer force of numbers, into the dining room. A faint odor of fried onions was noticeable in the dining room, which was adjacent to the kitchen.

"Still the door bell rang, and the guests were admitted until the house could hold no more. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton were becoming embarrassed. It was now half-past six, and the guests were growing hungry and uneasy. Had Mr. and Mrs. Eaton overestimated their facilities for entertaining? There was a general flutter of that sparring and padded conversation, all according to the rules, and no one playing off-side. At last the disturbed Mrs. Eaton seized her nearest friend, one whom she trusted, took her to the kitchen, into the very remote corner, and pleadingly said, 'Please tell me what we are to do? What does this all mean?' Her friend gave a gasp, a great light dawning. She blurted out the question, 'Did you not invite us to dinner?'

"Mrs. Eaton turned pale. 'Why, no. I have asked no one for dinner.' The friend said firmly, 'Mrs. Eaton, go right to your husband and stand beside him. I'll fix this.' In a moment Mrs. Eaton took her place. The friend got her own husband and whispered a few words to him. I am sorry to say he gave a short convulsive laugh. She then said to her nearest neighbors, the Professor of Latin and his wife:

"'Please do exactly as I do and ask no questions.'

"She stepped up to Mr. Eaton and, holding out her hand, said so clearly that every one in the room could hear:

"'We have enjoyed this privilege of greeting you in your house on this occasion. I wish you all good things.'

"Her husband did likewise, and they started for the door. The Professor of Latin and his wife, amazed but obedient, did the same. The other guests, stunned, followed like so many sheep. Soon the house was empty, and a group of students, lounging at the nearest corner, as the procession of departing guests drew near, started the gentle college song, which begins:

"'How can I bear to leave thee?'

"The students later took up a collection among themselves to pay for printing and postage."

Ordinations

On Friday, June 7, in Immanuel Chapel, Theological Seminary of Virginia, Bishop Darst of East Carolina, ordained to the diaconate Boston M. Lackey and Theodore Partrick, Jr., and to the priesthood, Rev. George Boate.

On Thursday, June 20, in St. Mark's Church, Wilmington, N. C., Bishop Darst ordained to the priesthood Rev. William N. Harper, M. D.

Mr. Richard Ceredig Jenkins was ordered deacon at St. John's Church, Ketchikan, Alaska, June 21st, by the Rt. Rev. P. T. Rowe, D. D., Bishop of Alaska, assisted by the Very Rev. G. D. Christian of Juneau and the Rev. Harry Corser of Wrangell. The Rev. Mr. Jenkins was formerly a Congregational minister, a native of Wales, educated in England, and worked in England, China and the United States. He and his wife and daughter are in residence at Ketchikan, and he will have charge of the mission work there.

On June 16th, being the third Sunday after Trinity, in the College Church of the Holy Spirit, Gambier, the Rt. Rev. William A. Leonard, Bishop of the Diocese of Ohio, ordained to the Holy Order of Deacons Messrs. Milton G. Nicola, William R. Kinder and Francis B. Shaner of Bexley Hall, Gambier, Rev. Dr. D. F. Davies was the presenter and Rev. Dr. W. H. Dewart of Boston was the preacher. Rev. Mr. Nicola will be placed at Grace Church, Ashtabula Harbor, Rev. Mr. Kinder will be at Findlay, and Rev. Mr. Shaner will serve in St. Martin's Parish, Shaker Heights, Cleveland.

Church Celebrates 213th Aniversary

The 213th anniversary of St. Anne's Church, Middletown, Del., was celebrated on Sunday, June 16th. The Rector, the Rev. Percy L. Donaghay, conducted the morning service, and Bishop Kinsman preached the sermon. The Hon. Edward C. Sikes, former governor of New Jersey, gave an address in the afternoon. The services were attended by hundreds of people from Middletown and the surrounding country. St. Anne's is one of the oldest churches in the United States. The bricks for its erection were brought to this country from England, and the Altar cloth, which is well preserved, is said to have been embroidered by Queen Anne herself. The silver communion service was presented to the parish in 1789.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

Each of the 22 men in war service from All Saints' Church, Mobile, Ala., receive THE WITNESS as a weekly greeting from their parish.

The real reason why the Kaiser never alludes to our Lord in his speeches is said to be the fear of giving offense to the Turks. If he is a Christian, he camouflages superbly.—The Fly-Leaf.

Plans have been completed by St. John's Mission, Rochester, N. Y., for the construction of a temporary church building, to cost 6,700. The Rev. Dr. J. K. Burleson, Curate in St. Paul's Parish, is in charge of the mission.

"I may not be a subscriber very long, being 83 years old, but while I live I may be counted one," writes Miss Helen M. Phillips of Republic, Kan., in a clear, firm hand, remitting a dollar for one year's subscription to THE WITNESS.

The graduating exercises of the class of 1918, nurses of All Saints' Hospital, Fort Worth, Texas, were held at the Nurses' Home on Thursday evening, June 20. The Rev. Fred T. Datson, Rector of Trinity Church and chaplain of the hospital, conducted the exercises, Bishop Moore of Dallas gave the address and Mrs. J. H. Bevan, president of the Board, presented the diplomas to the graduates.

The handsome new edifice of the Church of the Epiphany, Sherwood, Philadelphia, Pa., erected at a cost of $100,000, was dedicated on Sunday morning, June 23, by Bishop Rhinelander, who was assisted in the impressive service by the Rector, Rev. William Newman Parker, and other clergy of the West Philadelphia Convocation. The Bishop also preached the sermon. The corner stone of the new building was laid by Bishop Beecher of Western Nebraska, March 6, 1917.

Trinity Church, Washington, Pa., has a war Service Flag with fourteen stars, representing practically every branch of the service. Five of the "boys" are in France. St. Agnes' Chapter, Daughters of the King, has recently completed a layette for a Belgian babe. The Rev. E. H. Perry, M. D., Rector of the Parish, has received an appointment in the Medical Corps of the United States army, and expects to be called into active service at an early date. The vestry has granted him a leave of absence for one year.

Bishop Moore confirmed a class of ten, eight soldiers and two officers' wives in the Y. M. C. A. Hut 63, Camp Bowie, Friday evening, June 21. The Rector and part of the vested choir of St. Andrew's held a brief service before the confirmation. The class, prepared by the Rev. E. H. Eckel and Chaplain F. R. Godolphin, was presented by the latter. To many of the soldiers in the well filled hall the sight of a confirmation was a novel experience.

A business man in Lawrence, Mass., once had a customer who contracted a debt that ran along unpaid for a year or more, and even several letters failed to bring about a settlement. One day, while glancing over the religious notices in a local paper, the business man saw something that gave him a new idea. He went to his desk and wrote the following note to his debtor: "My Dear Sir—I see in the local press that you are to deliver an address on Friday evening before the Y. M. C. A. on 'The Sinner's Unbalanced Account'. I enclose yours, as yet unbalanced, and trust that I may have the pleasure of attending your lecture."—The Fly-Leaf.

Conference of the Mid-West

Everything points to a most successful summer Conference at Racine College, in July. For many years the East has had a Cambridge Conference, to which yearly between three and four hundred Churchmen and Churchwomen congregate for two weeks of helpful companionship and stimulating instruction under expert leaders. It has been long felt that the Mid-West ought to have a Conference of this same kind at some accessible point. This year marks the inauguration of the Conference of the Mid-West at Racine. The site is the beautiful campus of the historic college, directly on the shore of Lake Michigan. The date is July 17 to 25, and there for ten days many Church people throughout the Mid-West will assemble for their own Conference. Among the many notable leaders and speakers will be Bishops Reese, Weller and Tuttle, Dean Bell, Rev. C. H. Young of Chicago and Rev. G. P. Atwater of Ohio. The registrar is Miss Rosalie Winkler, 131 Eleventh Street, Milwaukee, to whom applications should be made for room, board and information.

The First American Chaplain to Give His Life in War Service

The Rev. Walton Stoutenburgh Danker, Rector of St. John's Church, Worcester, Massachusetts, on leave of absence in war service as chaplain of the 104th Regiment, died from the effect of a shell wound received while on duty at the front in France, Tuesday, June 18th, and his body was laid to rest on the following day near the spot where he fell. Mr. Frederick H. Danker, a brother, who is engaged in Y. M. C. A. war service at the front, was with the chaplain when he died. He was the first American chaplain to give his life in the service on the American front. He was decorated about one month prior to his death with the Croix de Guerre by the French government. His name headed a list of 116 men of the regiment decorated for bravery. He was born at Little Falls, N. Y., in 1874, graduated from Trinity College in 1897 and from the General Seminary in 1900; ordered deacon by Bishop Lawrence in 1900 and advanced to the priesthood the following year by Bishop Starkey. He had been associate missionary at Trenton, N. J., worked at Bayonne, N. J., and was Rector at Milford, Mass., and assistant in the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, before taking up his duties as Rector of St. John's Church, Worcester, in 1907. He was chaplain of the 6th Massachusetts Regiment, 1904-6, and was made chaplain of the 2nd Massachusetts Regiment in 1909. He served with this regiment on the Mexican border in 1916, and became chaplain of the 104th Regiment when his regiment was taken into the federal service in 1917.

A Pasadena clergyman recently visiting a California camp asked a young man whom he had known for years what the women of his Church could do for him and his comrades. "You know," he said, "that they will be glad to do anything, everything, for you boys in uniform." The young man said, "Please tell the ladies that we are loaded up with all sorts of fine, warm, knitted stuff, but there is one thing we would be awfully glad to have them do for us. Please ask them to pray for us."—Association Men.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM A NATIONAL HOLIDAY

By the Rev. Francis S. White

The Unanimous Declaration of The Thirteen United States of America

"When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bonds which have connected them with another, and to assume, among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That, to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, all experience has shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security.

* * * * * * * * * *

"In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms; our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people. * * * * *

"We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name and by the authority of the good people of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, FREE AND INDEPENDENT States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connections between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved; and that, AS FREE AND INDEPENDENT STATES, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which INDEPENDENT STATES may of right do. And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor."

Signed by 56 men, more than two-thirds of whom, in this connection, let it be stated, were members of that Church to which, presumably, you who read this also belong.

When you read this, we will have celebrated another anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence. What I am writing is jotted down and sent to the printer before July has begun. History is making so rapidly these days that in the interval between my writing and your reading this article, big events may come to the birth, whose vital message will dominate your minds and stir your hearts and wills to the complete obliteration of this particular message. Even so, I hope the message may be worth your perusal.

Let us begin with the trite observation that every holiday was meant to be a holy day to some certain and special degree, and being a holy day, it must possess some special religious significance, and having a religious significance, there must be in its observance a missionary message. What missionary message does Independence Day proclaim to you and me at home, and to our loved ones, and our neighbors, fighting for us overseas? The first and foremost missionary message is that men are not independent at all, and any religious message that declares men are independent, in the sense of having no ties or obligations to their fellows, is upsetting and liable to make for error in teaching and viciousness of life. The nation, the church, that tries to stand up in a splendid isolation is going to rival and surpass the deserts of the earth for barrenness. That is only the true nation, the true church which insists on asserting its dependence—independent enough to assert its dependence, not on the few, nor the one, but the many, and also the dependence of the many on the Eternal One. All nations have not yet learned the lesson. That is why America can become, in a very real way, a true missionary among the peoples of the earth. True, she herself has not yet mastered the message of democracy. She has not sounded its depths, nor its wide reaches, nor its height; neither has the American Church come up to the measure of the splendid requirements of her Master. "All the world" is still thought to be a phrase for the poet, and the dreamer, and the student not in arms. "Meum" and "Tuum" still keep "Master" far in the rear when men are in the striving. This is as true in the cottage as in the palace, in the mission as in the cathedral, in the town meeting as in the nation's capital. And so will it ever continue to be until this melting pot of the nations holds in its heart a passion that is as pure as the refined silver button in an assayer's crucible, which passion will be to declare to all men that they must depend on each other to establish that glorious liberty of the children of God, where all shall be one in Christ Jesus, and there shall be neither bond nor free, Jew nor Gentile, Greek nor barbarian; but each, depending on the Almighty, makes his contribution for the good of all, and as good stewards of the manifold grace of God help to hold, in common with the big and little nations of the world, that freedom which only comes to those who are depending on and trusting one another to keep it free from selfishness and self-centered striving.

The next missionary message which Independence Day gives to the world is that all men are not equal, but that every man should be given the chance to make the most of his one, two or five talents. The curse of Christian civilization is the creation of privileged classes, and their perpetuation. The church or the nation which fosters artificial distinctions of clan and caste is tying a rope about its neck which will pull taut when the body comes to a realization of itself, and starts to prove to all men the reason for its existence.

Again, not that our nation and our Church, because of their traditions, have exceptional opportunities to publish these tidings of an equal chance. It is a message which we Church people and citizens should ponder well. Are we using our gifts and our possessions and our inheritances toward the establishment of a condition of affairs where "the equal chance" is not a phrase to conjure with, but a fact on which to edify and build? God has set us here in this peculiar nation of many peoples, and given us a chance to make a Church for the American people to best express their worship, and most efficiently to order well their benevolent and philanthropic ideas and ideals. But if we plan to care for, and only minister to, any one class, no matter what its label, we will not become the American Church for the American people. Independence Day is a call to us to stop artificially labeling people—to stop dividing society into cultured and ignorant, laborers and capitalists, vulgar and refined, bad and good. The Puritan tried to make such divisions in the Church, and his efforts have split it into a thousand fragments. The economist has tried the same thing in the state, and it has become a house divided against itself. The Declaration of Independence keeps a fly in the ointment when it says we are created equal. But the Church can give the Declaration's intention a vivid and vital interpretation if she will set the example of insisting on the state's giving every one of her children an equal chance by reminding them that at every turn in the road that "God is no respecter of persons".

Another missionary message which Church people should get from Independence Day is that we should preach as inalienable rights, not only the right to life, but the right to let live and, above all, the right to help live. And, again, her children should learn well the lesson that liberty is the life blood of every individual, whether he be large or small, to attain and keep which he must ever be prepared to battle, and that that only can be called liberty where the right of one is related to the rights of all. Again, that missionary message must not be forgotten which preaches that happiness is not to be pursued, but can be attained. A happiness which must be pursued is a will-o'-the-wisp, a moon gift, which waxes big to the eyes of desire, but wanes in the hands of possession. Let us show that "beatitude" and "happiness" mean the same thing, and are possible earthly attainments, rather than impossible nose-bags held just beyond men's Americans are going to live by reach.

the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, rather than by the legalism of the Constitution. American Churchmen must carry the spirit of the Mount of the Beatitudes into their daily lives, and when they do this, the natural religion of the Declaration of Independence will then become for them a spiritualized missionary message, which will captivate the heart and the mind of the world, and also stir the wills of men to such a degree that the prophecy of "the new heavens and the new earth" will fade into a reality. God speed that day! He cannot do it unless in your day and generation you yourself do your part to preach these missionary messages of Independence Day by living them in your own daily life.

Personal Mention

Roanoke College, Salem, Va., conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., at the commencement exercises on June 12th.

At its commencement exercises in June Kenyon College conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon the Rev. George P. Atwater, Rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio.

The Rev. Lloyd B. Thomas, formerly Rector of St. Peter's Church, Carson City, Nev., in accepting a call to the Rectorship of Trinity Church, Oakland, Cal., under date of June 11, paid a very gracious and appropriate tribute to his predecessors in Trinity Parish, the Rev. Dr. Bakewell and the Rev. Clifton Macon.

The Rev. Clarence R. Wagner, ordained a deacon June 13th by Bishop Talbot of the Diocese of Bethlehem, at Lebanon, Pa., will leave, Aug. 15th, for Manila, where he will have charge of the Cathedral dormitory for Filipinos and Bontoc-Igorots attending the University of Manila. He will also assist in the work at the Cathedral and St. Luke's Hospital.

H. M. Marks, senior warden and active worker in Trinity Parish, Fort Worth, Texas, has been made the local general secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and is believed to be the only civilian Churchman in the state of Texas in charge of Y. M. C. A. work. Miss Emma Childers, secretary of the local Y. W. C. A., is also a Churchwoman, and connected with St. Andrew's Parish.

The Rev. Frederick L. Gratiot has accepted the position of assistant to the Rev. Dr. Stone, Grace Church, Chicago. During the past two years he has been assisting the Rev. Dr. Wolcott of Trinity Church, Highland Park, Ill., serving the first year as a deacon while a post-graduate student in the Western Theological Seminary, and the last year in the priesthood.

The Rev. Hugh D. Jones, deacon in charge of Grace Church, West Rutland, Vt., was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Hall at Trinity Church, Rutland, on Sunday morning, June 23rd. The Rev. H. P. Scratchley, Rector of St. John's Church, Poultney, and the Rev. Joseph Reynolds, Rector of Trinity Church, Rutland, assisted in the services. The Rev. W. H. Banford, Rector of Zion Church, Manchester Centre, preached the sermon. Mr. Jones is a native of Wales, where he had served as a licensed preacher for twenty years, and ten years in the active ministry. He was ordained deacon last year at St. Paul's Church, Burlington, Vt.

The Book of Deuteronomy consists, on the face of it, of addresses given by the great Law-giver in the wilderness, on the eve of the entrance into the Promised Land. It contains both prospect and retrospect. Looking backward, it reviews the people's past, summing up the Divine purposes in the discipline to which they had been subjected, and seeking to arouse a sense of gratitude toward the Giver of all good for their redemption from Egyptian bondage and their guidance in the wilderness. Looking forward to the time when they should have entered Palestine, it stresses for them and their children the necessity and blessednness of obedience: "These are the statutes which Jehovah thy God commanded that ye might do them in the land whither ye go to possess it." There is nothing that recently emancipated slaves want to hear less about (and the same is true of their children) than obedience. It is associated in their minds with slavery. But how many Christians, it may well be asked, look forward to a heaven in which there is to be a perfect obedience to those laws of God revealed to us in this transition stage of being, this wilderness between our redemption from worse than Egyptian bondage and that kingdom which is righteousness first and then "peace and joy in the Holy Spirit"? The truth is, righteousness is to many a system of restraint rather than an inspiration and a joy, as was the case with those Scribes and Pharisees whom our Lord denounces in the Gospel for the day.

The second lesson is keyed to the same thought, quoting, indeed, this very Deuteronomic chapter (Deut. vi:4-5 and Mark xii:29-30), adding however, that it is only through the Son of God that God is revealed as lovable, or man made loving.

The evening lessons were selected (topical-course) with reference to this same truth of Collect, Epistle and Gospel, the necessity of inward heart religion. It is something attainable only as God "pours it into our hearts", and also through the adoption on our part of the Cross as the law of life: "That like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of God the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life". Hence the story of the institution of the Holy Communion. But note that even the Sacraments themselves may be reduced (and often are) to a system of legalism which leads only to a law of restraint, the righteousness of Scribe and Pharisee, which we must "exceed"—surpass in quality, not necessarily quantity—in order to effect an entrance into the Kingdom. The "blood of Christ must circulate in the veins of our souls (John iv:34, vi:57, I John i:7).

It was with this in mind that Amos 9 was selected for first lesson. The Lord standing by the Altar, in the mouth of the prophet, means something more even that "real presence" as commonly understood. It means the preaching of the word of righteousness, ruling out the often suggested antithesis between "preaching" and communion.

ETERNAL LIFE

"Eternal life is a present possession, not to be waited for but to be entered upon. Is not the common state of Christian disciples one of looking forward to eternal life after death, instead of entering upon its glories now?"

"If we can see that eternal life is here and now, we may be led to that vital conception of life which seeks to lay hold righteously upon the things in this life, and so to use them as to work through them, the spirit of truth ever working with human progress, as it does with seed progress, to the knowledge of God, which is eternal life."

GOD HATH GIVEN TO US ETERNAL LIFE, AND THIS LIFE IS IN HIS SON. HE THAT HATH THE SON HATH LIFE.

PRAYERS

Grant unto us, Almighty God, Thy peace that passeth understanding; that we, amid the storms and troubles of this our life, may rest in Thee, knowing that all things are in Thee, under Thy care, governed by Thy will, guarded by Thy love; so that with a quiet heart we may see the storms of life, the cloud and the thick darkness; ever rejoicing to know that the darkness and the light are both alike to Thee. Guide, guard and govern us that none of us may fail to lay hold upon the Life Eternal. Amen.

O God, who hast inspired us with the deep desire for eternal life and filled our souls with need of Thee, grant that we may so enter into the mind and life of Christ, that we may receive the fulfillment of all our desires, and lay hold on eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE TRUE JERUSALEM

(From "Milton"

By William Blake, 1757-1827

And did those feet in ancient time
  Walk upon England's mountains green?
And was the holy Lamb of God
  On England's pleasant pastures seen?
And did the Countenance Divine
  Shine forth upon our clouded hills?
And was Jerusalem builded here
  Among these dark Satanic Mills?

Bring me my bow of burning gold!
  Bring me my arrows of desire!
Bring me my spear! O clouds unfold!
  Bring me my chariot of fire!

I will not sleep from mental fight,
  Nor shall my sword rest in my hand,
Till we have built Jerusalem
  In England's green and pleasant land.

(William Blake is often called "The Mystic". At first one is puzzled at the allusions in the first two stanzas, but there is no need to interpret the trumpet call of the last two. On his recent visit, they were quoted in part by the Archbishop of York.)

EDITORIAL

Enthusiasm and Courtesy

I can remember that once when I was a small boy I was bubbling over with affectionate enthusiasm for people. I must have been a great nuisance as a boy for I was very niosy and bumptious and not always neat and well groomed, but I had unbounded enthusiasm for people and things. Well it sometimes happened that I ran up against folks that did not appreciate. To them I must have been an irrepressible, that needed squelching; and they were divinely ordained to do the squelching.

Usually these people who did the squelching were ornaments of society and pillars of the Church—It was seldom I was treated with contempt by the plain folk of the neighborhood. They used to give me cake on New Year's Day and an occasional mug of cider during the year and they were never very harsh or vindictive at my innumerable excapades. But not so with the more cultivated members of the community. To them I was a nuisance that should be abated, and my enthusiasm for folks cooled off and my affections became calloused, and when I went to college I was a very skeptical and cynical young man, still very unattractive, but not at all sensitive to the people who were bored by me, and I fancy I was rather boresome.

Pardon this personal reminiscence. I presume it is bad form and not done in the best society, but just recently I have been moving in other circles; I have been taking a hike in old clothes through the rural parts of New England and have tried to get the viewpoint of the man on the street toward society.

Of course I wasn't a tramp because I had money enough in my pocket to pay my fare, and owing to indulgent habits did put up at the best inns, that would take me in for the night, but I did get a view of society from the standpoint of the fellow who was down and out, presumably—And right here I found that the impressions of callow youth were creeping over me, and I noticed things that I had forgotten.

For example, I noticed that people who rode in automobiles, and kicked up an enormous dust that pedestrians had to swallow for quite some time after they had passed, usually looked out on the world with a stoney stare and a very solemn visage; while men going along in an ox-cart, who made no dust, greeted you with a nod and a smile. "Why should folks who enjoy the greater material blessings look so cross about it?" was one thought that came to me time and again.

Then again, the finer the inn, the cooler the reception. I didn't have the courage to try the fine houses, but I had the right to go into an inn. Of course I was dusty and wore a flannel shirt, but then I was the same individual who was accustomed to a chimere.

But leaving the road and youth, and entering the home and the Church, what is lacking in it all that you would like to introduce if you could? I should say it was a little warm coloring. Just before taking this hike I heard Dr. Cram give a lecture on the Middle Ages, in which he drew a beautiful picture of the colors of Gothic architecture and showed how the Gothic Church that we see today was merely the cold grey memory of a warm pulsating reality in many colors. I once had the temerity to put some red into the chancel of the Church, but was told by many that it was bad form. I guess it was—The same kind of bad form that attempts to put any color into society. The cold greys and pale creams of correct buildings were a standing rebuke to that glaring red—but somehow I still feel that society would be more human if it had a little more red and a little less mauve.

In the course of my wanderings I visited a boys' school with a high tuition and all advantages. It was fine, tempting and exclusive.

Is it a good thing for boys to be raised after an exclusive fashion? Up to what age should boys be coddled and why?

These are questions that come from the dusty road and intrude the halls of good society. They are like a noisy, boisterous boy and must be suppressed.

I am no anarchist; not even a socialist. I believe in inequality of everything and am violently opposed to government by the incompetent and the envious. But I can see what makes anarchists and socialists—It is the dehumanized culture which isn't interested in boisterous boys and dusty pedestrians, and which has arrogated to itself the duty of suppressing contact with the same.

The longer I live the more I am inclined to feel that Pullmans and motor cars and exclusive hotels and genteel schools are most comfortable, and like so many things in this world that are comfortable, their value is most questionable.

Not that it can really hurt the prodigal. As a rule he is past hurting, but that it is so bad for the elder brother.

He makes it fashionable to be blase, to show no interest in human nature as such, but rather in clothes and social ritual and self esteem.

He makes it possible for the polite to be most rude. For what is rudeness but showing your superiority, like a Prussian, to someone who must submit to your demand for his salutation.

And this I say, not in the interest of bad manners, but good manners, for good manners can never be the exclusive privilege of a class. They are like the Christian religion, things that need to be sent abroad by those who have them.

But I am growing skeptical as to those who have them.

I have seen more rudeness on the part of people who claim to be polite than I have seen among those who would acknowledge that they are rude.

For a man of wealth and education who snubs a man of poverty and without advantages, is far ruder than if he ignored some conventional rule of society, for he has taken advantage of weakness and arrogated to himself a conscious superiority.

What is enthusiasm? Is it not God's gift to children, and if so, should it not be trained in expression rather than be subject to repression?

And what is courtesy? Is it merely an exchange of certain meaningless formalities between people of the same caste, or is it the condescension of Christ, who being a Prince of Heaven, did not think such princely condition a thing to be hoarded, but stripped Himself of its advantage and took the form of a peasant that He might teach a very stupid world what is the one essential of polite society, enthusiasm tempered by courtesy, and that courtesy to the least not to the greatest?

And there are the offenders against this law of christian courtesy in high places, in bureaus, and boards, and hierarchies.

When one, be he secretary or Bishop, shows a fine enthusiasm when talking to his superior, and is bored and formal with some one whom he is not obliged to consider, is he not a respecter of persons? We have a lot of paganism in high places, which lets its light shine but gives out no heat. It is not the fire of Pentecost, but the phosphorescent glow of a decayed paganism.

For Christ demands not only light, but warmth, the kind of warmth that takes a half starved, ill clad soul and makes it glow with enthusiasm. That is what Christ did. He made the man whom everybody else snubbed feel that he had a place at the fireside in his Father's House.

Do we? Or do we snugly occupy the best chair at the fireplace, and give the outcast a fine talk and tell him to go and get warm outside.

I plead for Christian courtesy to replace the purely Pagan article which society has always loved and the King of kings has always abhorred. And we have driven enthusiasm into other channels because we are so prone to snub anything that offends our aesthetic sense.

Christ is not a stained glass window —He is a sympathetic tender human heart more anxious to find the enthusiasm of faith than the pale glow of platonic knowledge.

We study society without loving the units that compose it, and love means contact, often rough, rude and relentless, but contact, even at the expense of one's serenity.

The courtesy of Christ is just that, being kindly to the least of those; not to swine, but to those fine natures that men had a chance to polish the fine gems that lie embedded in their plain and homely bodies . Would that we smiled more often and more naturally and never officially, for that lost smile is worse than a frown.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

SCRAP-BOOKS

Archdeacon Stuck writes in the Spirit of Missions on Scrap-Books—an article well worth reading:

"Scrap-Books are very common offerings from members of the Woman's Auxiliary; are very common amongst the contents of boxes received at any mission station of the Church. They vary in size from a small note book to large folios, and in contents they exhibit an equally wide diversity. Because I have lately been examining several may I say a few words about scrap-books?

I know of no other gift which so certainly reflects and manifests the personal qualities of the giver (provided the giver be also the maker) as a scrap-book. There can of course, be a mechanical arrangement by which pictures at random and quotations and excerpts haphazard are pasted on pages. There are some such here—mere agglomerations, without plan of form; an unintelligent method which bears out my point by indicating a mechanical and unintelligent mind.

Most of them, however, start with some evident intent even if its early abandonment shows infirmity of purpose or exhaustion of material—and the latter seems to imply the former, for who intending to build a tower or fill a scrap-book, "Sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it"?

Sometimes a scrap-book shows mere idiotic flippancy. Here is one with the text—"Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things," illustrated by a photographer of the "Old Faithful Geyzer in the Yellowstone Park.

But it was to express the pleasure ure which an unusually excellent scrap-book gave me rather than to be critical of others, that I wanted to say a few words, for here is something that excites my admiration and thankfulness. I know not where the book came from or who made it, but I imagine it was made by some devout intelligent gentlewoman confined to a room with some chronic complaint. The raw materials were an old prayer book, an old hymnal, a score or two of Perry pictures and a number of strips of tasteful, illuminated border cut I fancy, from some old calendar. The plan was as simple as the material. It consisted in appending to pictures of great events of our Lord's Life, the gospels for the days when those events are commemorated, and an appropriate selection of hymns. Besides the great events, of the Christian year many incidents were illustrated.

Under Hoffman's pleasing picture of Christ blessing little children was placed the hymn, "I think when I read that sweet story of old. "And underneath Plockhorst's "Good Shepherd," one of the least objectional of that insipid painter—was, "The King of Love my Shepherd is," while underneath Holman Hunt's great picture of Christ the Light of the World, was "O Jesus Thou art standing outside the fast closed door." "O Sacred Head surrounded by crown of piercing thorn," was put beside Guido Reni's wonderful representation of that subject "Abide with me" was prettily placed by Hoffman's "Journey to Emmaus."

At the end of the book pasted on the outside cover with a blank page left to segregate it, was a picture of Washington at Valley Forge, kneeling in prayer, and underneath it the hymn, "Our Father's God to Thee." Below the hymn prayers for the president and for congress.

So here is a book costing about fifty cents which is a treasure, a book that preaches and sings; a book that is choir and pulpit, lectern and prayer, desk, stained window and altar—that is a whole portable Church in itself, and that, please God, shall console and rejoice the heart of the sick and instruct the mind of the simple."

FORMS OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT

By Rev. J. H. Young, D. D.

II
Polity Congregational

According to the Congregational polity, each local congregation is wholly independent and self-governing. There may be conferences, in which delegates from all the local congregations meet for discussion, but action of the conference is, or can be, binding on any congregation. There can, therefore, be no central government, and no creed binding on all, for each congregation has authority to make its own creed. Strict denominational usage among bodies which hold this form of polity refuses to speak of the body as a church. It is not good form to say the Baptist church, or the Congregational church, but the Baptist churches or the Congregational churches.

The official term for the Northern Baptists is the Northern Baptist Convention. A small Baptist body is known as "The Duck River and Kindred Associations of Baptists". The title represents very accurately the independence of each local congregation under this polity.

The bodies holding this polity are the Congregationalists, who in the census of 1906 had 700,000 members. (In their theory of the ministry they seem to belong rather to the Presbyterial polity.)

Baptists, 16 bodies, 5,600,000 members.

Disciples, 1,100,000 members.

Christian Connection, 110,000 members.

Adventists, 7 bodies, 92,000 members.

Unitarians, 70,000 members.

Universalists, 64,000 members.

Mennonites, 14 bodies, 54,000 members.

Christian Union, 14,000 members.

Congregational Methodists, 14,000 members.

(All of the above figures are from the census of 1906.)

And a host of small bodies, running down to a total membership, in one case, of only 78.

THE MINISTRY

There is only one order of ministers, the elder. Deacons are laymen. The minister is simply one of the members, who holds office in the congregation. Any idea of priesthood other than the common priesthood of all is distinctly repudiated.

The source of authority in the ministry is from the congregation, and comes with election as pastor of that particular congregation (or in some cases with installation). When the man ceases to hold that office he ceases to be a minister, and regains his orders only when elected to another charge.

While the above is the normal Congregational doctrine of the ministry, we must recognize that perhaps the majority in the Congregational church hold a doctrine much more like the Presbyterian, while many ministers in other bodies of this polity hold a theory similar to the Quaker theory of a strictly prophetic ministry.

STRENGTH OF THE POLITY

The strength of the polity lies in its recognition of the rights of the laity. We believe that democracy is a good thing in the state, in spite of its loss of efficiency, because it educates the citizens by throwing responsibility upon them; so is it good in the Church. Also the Church needs some measure of democracy to save it from clerical tyranny.

The weakness of the polity appears whenever such bodies attempt to do any work which requires co-operation, as missionary work. Also the very lack of a creed, because each congregation is left free to establish its own doctrinal standards, results in the narrowest and most iron-bound creed. Any deviation in minute detail, particularly in matters which to others seem unimportant, results in the other congregations refusing to "fellowship" with the one differing, and so a new body is created. The great majority of bodies under this polity are bound together chiefly by the method of administering baptism, namely, by immersion only. Such differences of opinion as prevail among the members of our own communion, and also in the Roman church, would split bodies of the Congregational polity into minute fragments, simply from lack of any real bond of unity.

It would seem evident that this polity can offer nothing as a basis of the reunion of Christendom. A united Christendom must recognize the rights of the laity, but must have some bond of union.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

(Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colo.)

Is it in accordance with the ordination vows of a priest in the Protestant Episcopal Church to speak of the principal service of his Church as "a lazy man's service" and to allow the use of the term "high mass", which the Church has not adopted, and to speak of Communion at 11 a. m. as a possible "service at which the person worships without receiving", when he knows that the Church nowhere provides for such a service?

There are three distinct questions here.

(a) As to calling this or that service "a lazy man's service" is a question of fact, which must stand or fall with the facts. Some priests call Morning Prayer a lazy man's service; others style the late celebration of the Holy Communion by the same title. Personally, I think that, after all, the lazy man is probably the one who stays at home and attends no service. But there is nothing in a man's ordination vow which prevents his liberty of speech in this particular.

(b) The term, "high mass", is neither used in the formularies of the Church, nor is it forbidden. It is rather a meaningless designation of the Lord's Supper, which has the merit of being short and the demerit, it seems to me, which usually attaches to a nickname. The word "mass" is a shortening of the words of dismissal in the Latin Eucharist, which were "ita, missa est", corrupted into "mass". It has no particular merit beyond that of irritating a good many people, who think it means something rather Romish. But it would be too strong a stricture to say that a man wasn't loyal to the Church who used such a term; I should say that he was rather over-anxious to show his loyalty.

(c) As to persons "not receiving" at the late celebration, that is a part of the liberty in which the Church rather glories. You certainly would not force people to receive at the late service, if they had already received at the early, or if they had made no preparation, or if their habit was to receive fasting, who had eaten breakfast. The late Eucharist is certainly an act of worship, and while the Church does not say that you may omit to receive, neither does it say you must receive.

Liberty demands that we allow the man who differs from us to have as wide a liberty in that which may be dear to him as we usually demand in those things that are dear to us. I certainly would not want to be told that I must receive, if I found myself at an 11 o'clock service of the Holy Communion. Let us all remember that we need the man who differs from us, if for nothing else, so that we may develop the greatest of all virtues, charity.

Would it not be a great objection to open air chancels, such as were suggested in "Round About the Parish" (June 8), that women would be likely to attend without hats"?

There are some rules that are observed because it is good form, and others because it is good morals. Anything that would be helpful to good morals in a community could well be utilized, even though for a time some rule of form would be violated. A simple request that women wear their hats at such a service would be generally observed.

Do not more women than men receive at late celebrations?

Of course more women go to Church than men. Some one made that objection to me awhile ago, and I told him that if he could go to state's prison he would find the balance on the other side in about the same proportion, and probably for about the same reason. Personally, I am inclined to think that it has to do with the case.

In the early Church was it the rule to receive fasting?

There is some difference of opinion about this among scholars, but my own belief is that in the primitive Church the Church services were nearly all in the early morning, and fasting before communion grew out of the fact that for generations they had this service in the early morning.

There was no Christian Sunday in the eyes of the law before the Fourth Century, consequently a Christian was obliged to work seven days in the week, unless he claimed Saturday because he was a Jewish Christian. The early hour was, therefore, the time when he could meet with less danger of interruption and detection for the Divine Mystery, which was jealously guarded from profanation in the early Church.

How does the Episcopal Church regard Martin Luther, as to character, work, etc.? Is he considered a great man by our Church?

Unfortunately there is nobody who can answer this question, for the Episcopal Church has never issued any formal utterance in the matter. Far be it from me to speak for the Church, but speaking for myself, I can say that after teaching Church History for three years, and putting many hours' study daily on this theme, I myself came to the unanimous conclusion that I had very little regard for reformers in general, and Martin Luther in particular. True, I will concede that he was a great man, for no little man could have done the work that he did. But in character he was violent, coarse, vulgar, and would brook no opposition nor difference of opinion. Having put down one Pope, he became as infallible in his own estimation as the Pope was in the estimation of the Roman Church. He advocated bigamy as permissible, told the nobility to shoot, kill, stab and destroy the peasants who had risen against their Teutonic masters (no easier then than now), and his pernicious doctrine of "faith without works", which he arbitrarily imposed upon the Lutheran following, is probably more responsible for the present condition of morals in Germany than any one other cause. He was brave, courageous, and deserved much credit for what he destroyed and much that he did, but he was arbitrary, and believed that what he declared was God's will. There was a total lack of sympathetic tendencies in his person, and there has never been an overabundance of this quality in his following. Erasmus, who was the greatest scholar and most level-headed reformer of his day, had not Luther's courage, nor his assurance.

The Consecration of St. Paul's Church, Brookings, S. D.

On Wednesday, June 19, the new church at Brookings, S. D., was consecrated by Bishop Burleson. Mr. A. E. Winegar read the "Request for Consecration", the Rev. W. B. Roberts read the "Sentence of Consecration" and the Very Rev. E. B. Woodruff preached a splendid sermon from the text, "This is none other than the house of God; this is the gate of heaven". The emphasis of the sermon was on the need for the consecration of our lives today through worship to the Kingdom of Christ, and our American need for a deeper reverence and a keener sense of the spiritual basis of life in these troubled times.

At this service the beautiful new lectern carved by Kirchmayer, and presented by Dr. R. L. Slagle, president of the University of South Dakota, in memory of his wife was blessed by the Bishop.

After the service, St. Paul's Guild served luncheon in the basement of the church to the congregation, and short talks were given by the Bishop, Dean Woodruff, Rev. Paul Roberts, Rev. W. H. Anthony and Dr. Slagle.

The thirtieth anniversary of St. Barnabas' Church, Tarentum, Pa., was observed on June 11 and 12. At the Holy Communion service on the 11th, the benediction was said for the "Snavely memorial lamp", which had been placed in the Sanctuary in memory of Charles Edwin Snavely, the first Minister-in-Charge. The Rev. J. W. Diggles of Johnstown and Rev. Edwin J. Norris were the visiting clergymen. A number of valuable memorials have been added to St. Barnabas' during the five years' incumbency of the Rev. John Edmondson Diggles.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

By the Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman

VOICES OF THE AGE

"There are so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification."—I Cor. xiv:10.

Voices represent personalities .Personalities represent ideals or theories of life. Luther's voice sounded the note of religious liberty; Lincoln's voice proclaimed the freedom of the slave; President Wilson's voice announces that the world must be made safe for democracy. Where voices witness to high principles or ideals, their influence is the greatest of all the powers with which we have to do.

Our age is witnessing to a variety and in some respects to a confusion of human voices.

Amidst all the discordant and confused sounds, the attentive ear may distinguish three outstanding voices. The first of these we believe to be the voice that proclaims a newer and finer brotherhood of man. For centuries men have been seeking for some agreement that would constitute the basis of a larger federation of human interests. We have sentimentalized over the brotherhood of man, but we have failed to realize the ideal. Even here in this country, while we have talked much of our unity, we have been clearly conscious of the fact that unity was only a theory rather than an actual and realized practice in our life. Our part in the war has suddenly aroused us to a new consciousness of the ideal for which we strove, and within the space of a comparatively few months we have witnessed the integration of our people; and now, as never before in the history of our life, the forty-eight sovereign states, with all their diverse interests, have coalesced, and this great polyglot nation has disclosed a fellowship of service such as it had never known before.

Beyond our own borders, witness the brotherhood of nations in the growing phalanxes of the allied cause. The flags of these nations have literally blended their colors, and the great brotherhood of man, fired by one ideal, and acting under one standard, is effecting a unity of interest unparalleled and incomparable. What must come out of this greater federation of human interests, no living prophet may forecast, but of one thing we are certain, namely, that the future world is to be more firmly compacted, and Robert Burns' dream is to be realized,

"When man to man the world o'er, Shall brithers be for a' that."

The second great voice that is heard today is the voice of a finer tolerance. We have come at length to a period in which bigotry and intolerance are to be banned. In other words, we are approaching the time in which party passwords and shibboleths are to give place to a finer expression of real Christian unity and fellowship. Our new national army, perhaps as no other instrumentality in our history, is effecting this result. In camp and field men are not asked as to their party affiliations, and neither wealth nor rank nor social distinction can buy a place of standing. Here in this vast and growing field of service and sacrifice, the only thing that counts is character. It is well for us at home to realize this, especially in our religious enterprises, that all too frequently witness to competition and indecent rivalries. We have no thought that presently all denominational standards will be abolished, but we do believe that in the future less accent is to be placed upon them, and that we shall witness the "survival of the fittest".

The third distinguished voice is that of a saner interpretation of religion. We are not so far removed from a period in which false interpretations of religion resulted in bitterness, hatred, and the sacrifice of life. All too frequently human conceits have been substituted for the clearly defined expressions of the Divine will. Rigid and arbitrary dogmas, conceived in the minds of theorists, have been substituted for pure religion and undefiled, with the result that thousands of thoughtful people have been excluded from the domain of Christian fellowship.

We cannot but believe that along with the saner spirit of tolerance that is to come we shall have a greater and more definite expression of those deep religious values enunciated by Christ. If, as the Frenchman said, "Man is incurably religious", and we believe he is, then he must have presented to his consciousness those ideals or conceptions of religious truth that find their warrant and authority in Him who gave to the world its greatest system of religion.

We have run through a period characterized by strange and peculiar religious conceits. We have here in America approximately 177 varieties of corporate religious expression, hence our confusion and bewilderment. We have needed an electric storm to clarify our atmosphere, and now we have it. Along with the truer expression of human brotherhood, and a finer tolerance, we believe profoundly that we are to have a clearer interpretation and a more positive declaration of those great, essential and fundamental religious verities upon which the fabric of our temple is builded.—Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

Field Secretary of the Board of Missions the Rev. Louis G. Wood has just concluded a week's visit to Mobile, Ala., and vicinity, the tangible result of which is an enthusiastic and unanimous resolution of the several rectors and vestries to undertake a city-wide campaign for missions, and an every-member canvass in October. He was not a stranger in Mobile, having conducted such a campaign in All Saints' Church, the Rev. James F. Plummer, Rector, two years ago with great ability and success.

A VISIT TO THE OLD COLLEGE

A Series of Articles by
GEORGE P. ATWATER
Rector, Church of Our Savi our, Akron, Ohio

II.

My commencement day at Kenyon will linger long in my memory. It was a rare June day, and the whole college community arose to its exhilarating influence. Across the green grass under the trees comes the procession from the chapel, where a brief service had been held, making its way to Rosse Hall, where the exercises take place. It was a veritable pageant, arousing memories of ancient processions through mediaeval college quadrangles. The color scheme was gorgeous—the college chorus in purple gowns, the graduates in black gowns, the faculty with gown and hood of every color, and representing every possible degree granted to them by their respective alma maters; dignified trustees; Bishops in their robes, and finally the erect figure of the president in cap and gown, the president who has wisely guided the destinies of Kenyon for nearly a quarter of a century.

Into the hall and up to the platform the procession wends its way, and then begins that program which is unlike every other public function in which men engage. College songs are interjected between stately orations. With great solemnity, the candidates for degrees are presented to the president, who replies in sonorous Latin. Each candidate kneels before the president, who invests him with the hood proper to his degree, and the candidate arises a Bachelor, or a Master, or a Doctor, amidst the applause of the audience.

Then to the great luncheon provided by the college for all the men assembled on the hill. Here are wit and wisdom, stories new and stories old, flashes of philosophy and quaint reminiscence, a feast of good things. Here men of national fame mingle with the recent graduates, and in the comradeship of the occasion give to this hour the lively freedom of the usual college commons.

This year we had a thrill. The president of Kenyon had just returned from France. He had lived for weeks, as an officer with the French officers amidst the ruins of Verdun, a name which will take its place with Marathon and Waterloo in the memory of generations yet to come. He had brought back with him a memento from that shell-wrecked place, such as only a college president in contact with the students would have had imagination enough to value—the metal sign from the railroad station, with the name "VERDUN" upon it. He displayed this sign, with its blue enamelled background and white letters, a unique souvenir of a place which will mean to France ever the determination of their nation. It was an inspiring moment when we realized that in the halls of Kenyon College would remain this imperishable relic of a nation's steadfastness.

The president explained that he did not secure this sign by a method well known to college students who wish to ornament their rooms with some unusual emblem from towns or cities in which their team has won a game, but he secured it by the simple method of asking the station agent for it. It was a gift. Such is the value of simplicity in making known one's desires. Every Frenchman who hereafter visits America will wish to make a pilgrimage to Kenyon College to see that remnant of the town where "they did not pass".

Later in the day I went to the banquet of my fraternity. There are five of the great Greek letter fraternities at Kenyon. They are a notable and beneficial influence in the college life. They foster close friendships not only among men of the same generation, but between the older men of the graduates and the students, so that the undergraduates feel concretely the pressure of the graduate body to sustain the traditions for character and scholarship which the old men have learned to appraise at their true worth. The first fraternity lodge in the United States was built at Kenyon in 1852. The fraternity banquet is a love feast, where often father and son sit side by side singing the well known songs and listening to the well known yarns. Here the boy learns what the men of Kenyon expect of him in loyalty and character. The past is brought concretely to bear upon the present. It was a pleasure to sit and listen to the frank avowals of the older men, that they had found in the world that those things were worth while which old Kenyon had endeavored to instill into their lives in their younger days.

Then came the usual informal gathering and the stories. It was '86 who now took up the parable.

"I am glad that I did not go to one of these new fangled colleges, where they make a man turn up his trousers and go bare-headed in order to matriculate," began '86. "The college in my day was one of the original kind that Noah took into the ark with him. We ate when we got through studying, instead of studying when we got through eating and drinking. The fellows then knew more about who scored a touchdown at Thermopylae and less about the Harvard-Yale games. Our tutors made us shake hands across the sea with Latin grammar, until we knew all the exceptions well enough to call them by their first names. Nor could we stay out at night skylarking around with a banjo and a few mandolins, and singing sentimental songs to the college widows. Our president would have had us expelled for scandalous conduct if we had done that. No, we were the plain and unornamented students. The older of us grew wavy side whiskers, to make us resemble the celebrated divines whose portraits adorned the walls of our assembly room. Our clothes were the kind mother used to make.

"We all lived in a great dormitory, with a tutor in every division to keep order, and to help us with our sums. Some of the tutors were decent fellows, but for the most part they were men who looked upon college boys as an evil to be tolerated. For our clothes and whiskers had not subdued in us the taint of original sin, and we had the same high spirits that prompt boys to do all sorts of mischief. But we were most of us what I might call artificial sinners. We didn't indulge in any real wickedness, but we sometimes managed to make good Latin of ourselves by being exceptions to the faculty rules. We were irregular verbs, as it were.

"But these tutors didn't realize that the boys were of more consequence than the rules, so sometimes, when a

Prize Essay Contest for Clergy in Rural Parishes

Through the kindness of a friend who desires to remain anonymous, the Joint Commission on Social Service is enabled to offer a prize of $75 for the best essay on the relation of the rural parish to the country community by any clergyman of the Episcopal Church who has done, or is doing, active work in the field. In order to secure something like uniformity of results, the committee in charge of the competition has decided that the essays should be written on one of the two following general subjects:

1. A program for the rural community (based upon your own local conditions). (1) The field as you know it. (2) Agencies at work (local, state, national—voluntary or official). (3) An ideal program for your community (in view of actual conditions and possibilities). (4) The outstanding need of the community. (5) The function of your parish in co-operation with other agencies now working in the field.

2. A special report on a phase of rural social service in which you have been or are now particularly interested, either in view of the above or independently.

Other conditions of the contest are: Manuscripts shall be from 3,000 to 5,000 words, and must be submitted in typewritten form (double spaced) in triplicate, in order to avoid undue delay in reading by the judges. Each essay must be signed by a non de plume, accompanied by a sealed envelope bearing this pseudonym and containing the real name of the writer. The contest will close on Jan. 1st, 1919, on which date all essays must be in the Commission's office (281 Fourth Avenue, New York City).

The Commission reserves the right to publish the essay to which the prize may be awarded, and any others deemed worthy of honorable mention.

Inquiries may be addressed to the Commission's office, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Nurses in Church Hospital Graduate

At St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn., there was held a most impressive service in connection with the graduating of eight nurses from St. Luke's Hospital. The address of the evening was delivered by Miss Edith Barber, Director of Bureau of Nurses, Northern Division, American Red Cross. The exercises were opened with a special service compiled by the Rev. Dr. Ryan, and the full choir rendered special and beautiful music. A delightful reception to the eight members of the class was tendered them in the Guild room. A supplementary class of 16 nurses was graduated Jan. 22nd. The eight members of the class have enlisted for service overseas. There are 17 nurses from St. Luke's in the service, and a special Service Flag is to be given for them.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST NORTH AND SOUTH

Dr. Washington Gladden, eminent Congregational divine, author and editor, died at his home in Columbus, O., June 2nd, aged 82 years.

A public service was conducted in Christ Church, St. Joseph, Mo., on June 23rd, by the Rev. C. H. Moloney, in memory of Capt. Donald F. Duncan, who was killed June 6th in battle on the Chateau Thierry front.

Miss Alice Cooper of Pittsfield, Mass., writes: "A friend has been giving me the WITNESS when she was through with it, but I must have one of my own. She might forget to give it to me. I love every line in it."

A collection of thirty-one hymns familiar to Christians of every name is being adapted for band music, suitable as accompaniment for community singing and in military camps. The Rev. Dr. G. C. F. Bratenhal, Dean SS. Peter and Paul Cathedral, Washington, D. C., is chairman of the committee having the work in charge.

Bishop Funsten of Idaho, gives notice that on May 13th, 1918, in St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, in the presence of the Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, and the Rev. David H. Jones, he deposed from the ministry of the Church, Freeman A. Daughters, Presbyter, at his own request and for causes not affecting his moral character.

A srvice flag with sixty-one stars, one of which is gold, has recently been presented to St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn., and blessed with appropriate prayers. Flags of the four allied nations, England, France, Belgium and Italy, the gift of Mr. H. R. Spencer, hang from the pillars in the nave of the Church, and the stars and stripes hang over the chancel steps.

The Leader in Religious Education, the organ of the General Board of Religious Education, begins this month a Christian Nurture Supplement designed to assist those schools and teachers using the Christian Nurtune Series. It is estimated that about ten thousand teachers are now using the series and the Supplement aims to give intensive teacher training.

The School Board of the Diocese of West Texas, through a most fortunate combination of circumstances, has been able to acquire the ownership of the beautiful property, in which for the past three years St. Mary's Hall, the Diocesan School for Girls, San Antonio, has been housed, free of all encumbrance, and the school will be opened as usual in September. Announcement was recently made through these columns that the school would be closed during the war.

The Home Service department of the Red Cross is accomplishing a great work among the wives and children of the men who have gone to war, caring for the lonely families, giving them neighborly counsel and where needed financial aid, to keep them in good spirits, health and comfort—seeing to it that no soldier's family suffers for any essential thing that it is within its power to give. The Manual of Home Service relates a number of instances like the following in which splendid service has been rendered: "All she asked," writes a Home Service worker, "was advice and friendship. Her husband's enlistment left her alone. We found her a boarding place with a motherly woman, helped her to dispose of the furniture that she did not need, and found a visitor who welcomed her to her own pew in church. The little woman has become an enthusiastic Church worker.

The first of a series of conferences of the clergy of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, preparatory to the great fall campaign of the Woman's Auxiliary, to be known as the "Advent Call to Prayer", was held at noon on Tuesday, July 2, in St. Paul's Parish House, Columbus, Ohio. Clergy of Columbus and vicinity were present. After luncheon, Miss Elizabeth Matthews, president of the diocesan organization of the Woman's Auxiliary, spoke at some length upon the plans of the campaign which were being formulated for this diocese, and enlisted the hearty co-operation of all the clergy present at the meeting. Miss Matthews will address gatherings of the clergy in each of the other Convocations of the diocese in the near future. and is thus preparing the way for an early start in the autumn campaign.

Miss Mary Cook of Middleboro, Mass., has been secured by the Board of Religious Education of the Diocese of Southern Ohio to act as executive secretary of the Board and work among the Sunday schools of the diocese during the coming year. Beginning in September, she will give six weeks to each of the three Convocations of the diocese in turn, and will then repeat a period of six weeks in each, thus completing a nine months' campaign over the whole diocese. In each Convocation six Sunday schools will be selected, to which she will give her six Sundays. Her week days will be devoted to each of these six Sunday schools in turn for teachers' meetings. Sunday schools will be selected which are in conveniently located centers, so that the teachers' meetings may be easily attended by teachers from surrounding Sunday schools

Owing to the congestion of war measures in Congress the General Board of Religious Education has become incorporated under the laws of the State of New York. The act of incorporation exempts the Board from taxation in common with all charitable institutions. One of the valuable provisions is that the Board is now legally empowered to receive gifts and hold trusts for educational purposes. In the drawing of wills it should be remembered that special trusts may be created for any aspect of the Board's work. The War-Time Education Fund is now fairly launched. Subscriptions have already been received from thirty individuals, the largest being one of a thousand dollars. Four government bonds have also been donated. An appeal is being made to rectors to take up parochial offerings for this fund and an encouraging response has been made. The modest sum of $45,000 is asked for from the entire Church to meet conditions in Christian Education made crucial by the War.

THE CHURCH'S HARDEST LOAD

MISSIONARY MESSAGES

By BISHOP MIKELL

Helping God

We often ask ourselves the question, "How can God help us"? We do not so often think how we can help God.

There are two ways of thinking about God. One is to think of Him sitting serene and unconcerned above the troubles of men, not caring whether they sin or perish. The Bishop of London has a favorite figure, in which he speaks of some men thinking of God as a sun-crowned Apollo, not deigning to dip his finger in the world's sorrow and misery. And he says rightly that it would be impossible to love and serve a God like that. The thought that "God sitteth above the water floods, God remaineth a King forever", sometimes gives us a comforting sense of God's strength, which may call forth a response of fear, but which cannot inspire love and service.

But the revelation of God in Jesus Christ tells us to think of God in another way. It shows us that God is concerned in the suffering of His world. When we suffer, He suffers. "Surely He bears our griefs and carries our sorrows".

That is the thought of God which helps us most in these days, when all the world is swamped in a sea of suffering and sorrow. The thought that the pain of every wounded body, the sorrow of every empty heart, the burden of every sinful soul, is as real an agony in the heart of God as the agony in the garden was to Jesus, when His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling to the ground. We could not really love God unless we believed that He suffers with us. Only that thought gives reality to the petition of the Litany, "By Thine agony and bloody sweat—by Thy Cross and Passion—good Lord deliver us".

Surely if God suffers, He is suffering more today than ever before since Calvary. He is right who says that before the armies, as they march forth, there goes the figure of Christ bearing the age-long burden of His Cross to fresh Calvaries.

As God looks down upon His erring, warring world today, a cross is set up in His heart as really as that cross of wood was set up on that green hill far away outside a city wall.

"There is no place where earth's sorrows
Are more felt than up in heaven."

And so we come to the question—not how can God help us—but how can we help God?

God has always wanted human help and human love and human sympathy. We remember how Jesus yearned for the love and sympathy of His disciples. We remember how He wanted them to watch with Him when He was in that agony of prayer in the garden. We remember His pitiful cry, when He came and found them asleep, "What, could ye not watch with Me one hour"?

Surely we love God best and serve Him most when we think of Him as wanting our love and needing our service.

What event in the life of Christ draws us to Him most? Is it when we think of His ascension—taking up again His power amid the noise of the shouts of the archangels and the trump of God? Is it not rather when on Good Friday we think of Him as hanging on the cross, and hear Him cry out, "I thirst"?

He Himself said, "I when I am lifted up upon the cross will draw all men unto Me".

We draw nearest to Him and He draws nearest to us when He comes to us under the form of His broken body and poured-out blood. That is the nearest drawing together of the human and the Divine.

What help can we offer to God, as He looks down over the flaming ramparts of His world?

We can offer Him our repentance. For without being unreal, we know that it is our sins that have helped to fill the cup of God's suffering. If any worldliness, or selfishness, or sin, or indifference to God of any one of us helped to make up the accumulated worldliness and indifference to God which brought upon the world its present calamity, then each one of us is just so far responsible. For it is the weight of human sin that has brought upon the world this weight of woe.

It is probably true that no one who reads this has ever committed any great sin. But have we not committed the greatest sin—centered our life about ourselves and not about God? Have we not busied ourselves in the service of self and not in the service of God?

One of our modern theologians tells us that we have a wrong idea of repentance. He says that we fall into some particular sin and come to God and offer our penitence for that particular sin. He says that that was not the way that Jesus dealt with human sin; that He paid surprisingly small attention to individual sins, to individual wrong incidents of life. That Jesus goes beneath those to the life itself. What He rebukes is not sins, but sinfulness, not so much what men have done, but what men are. God meant our life to center about Himself, and we have centered it about ourselves. We are living altogether below the level of children of God.

Repentance is a turning from that—a change from indifference to enthusiastic service, a change from self to God.

And surely some small weight of suffering is lifted from the heart of God when one of us—His children—really says, "That it may please Thee to give us true repentance".

"Only human penitence can heal the wounds that human sin has made."

We can help God by giving Him our trust.

In the dark days of the Middle Ages men used to say that God and the saints were asleep.

In the dark days of this modern age we are tempted to say the same. We thought that we trusted in God, and then some new suffering from the war comes to us—some mischance to our arms, some fear of the might of the enemy—and a little lurking devil of doubt peers into our face and whispers mockingly, "Where is the God in whom you trust"? We hear Elijah mocking the priests of Baal, "Surely he is pursuing; or he is on a journey; or he is asleep and must be awakened".

We are losing many things in these days—our easy life, our easy trust, our thoughtless faith.

We are living in fear of many things these days. Anarchy and despotism seem to have joined bloody hands to crush in their cruel grasp all that makes life worth living.

We cannot afford to lose God and our trust in God.

We must make a definite act of trust. The saints used to talk of making an act of the Presence of God. "Thou God seest me. Thou art about my path and about my bed and spiest out all my ways". We must these days make an act of trust in God. "In Thee will I put my trust, I will not fear what man doeth unto me". At the end of all our efforts and all our work, there is nothing to say but that. But that is enough. With this quiet confidence in God, we can "bear all things, believe all things, hope all things, endure all things".

Thr Brotherhood's Work for the Church at Camp Wheeler

By a Brotherhood Man

Sunday, June 15. Service was held in the open, under the pines. This service was well attended, and Chaplain White of the 118th F. A. preached a short and impressive sermon. After this, our entire attention was given to loading the automobiles and trucks with soldiers to attend Macon churches. A fair estimate places the number we sent into the city churches at one thousand. Of course, no charge was made, and following the service, many families took the boys to their houses for dinner.

Monday and Tuesday I kept myself busy going over the camp, from unit to unit, reminding our own Church members and the soldiers in general of the expected visit of Bishop Mikell and Bishop Reese. It is needless to say I saw many, and left notices in those places where persons could not be found. Wednesday, Bishop Mikell arrived, and was taken in charge. He first went to the base hospital, and after seeing members of our own Church, he visited many of the wards and talked to the patients. After leaving the hospital, the Bishop was taken to the infantry part of the camp and presented to many of the officers and men in that vicinity. Supper was taken at the officers' mess of the 121st Regiment. Following this, a short time was spent in general conversation, when we wended our way to the stockade of the 31st Division. Here we had religious service with the prisoners. The Bishop's talk to the men was full of wonderful and taking thoughts, and on its completion the men flocked around him and thanked him for his words of wisdom and truth. We then repaired to Y. M. C .A. Building No. 47, where services were held. The place was well filled and the soldiers most attentive, and followed very closely the Bishop in his talk. We then took our departure and went to another part of the camp, and attended for a short time a social given by some of the officers. Here again the Bishop was able to come in contact with more of our people, and others he had not met previously. We called this the time to stop for the day. The Bishop remained in camp, occupying the tent of Chaplain White, and took breakfast with the officers' mess of the 118th F. A. We then went to the base hospital, and service in the chapel was held for the nurses and officers connected with this department. There were a goodly number at the service. Following this, we had a conference with the three Rectors of Macon and camp chaplains as to what was the very best plan to serve the soldiers, and to bring them into a closer and nearer relation with their Lord and Master. While no definite plan was decided upon, the general idea was most evident that the Brotherhood was doing a most excellent work, and along the most acceptable lines.

This concluded, the Bishop was taken to still another part of the camp, and had dinner with the officers of the 124th Regiment and their invited guests. Here he was able to meet a large number of Churchmen, as there are more of them in this locality than in any other part of the camp. A large part of the afternoon was spent in visiting and watching a special review of the new men. The Bishop had his supper with the Y. M. C. A. men at their mess hall. Here he was fortunate in meeting Mr. Charles Bush, the general secretary of that association. A brief and informal gathering with the "Y" employes, and we left for Y. M. C. A. Building No. 44, where we had our last service with the men. A splendid lot of soldiers greeted the Bishop, and his talk, as usual, received close attention.

We then motored to Macon, where the Bishop took the night train for Atlanta, Chaplain White and myself returning to camp.

Friday I spent in trying to locate more men.

Saturday was devoted entirely to securing soldiers for attendance at the Macon churches on Sunday.

Now that the week is passed, I feel that much lasting good has been accomplished by the work. The Bishop met a very fair number of our own people, and scores of those who belonged to other creeds. This was of great benefit in two ways, as it gave our Churchmen encouragement and comfort, and impressed the others with the determination on our part to be broad, liberal and Christian towards the soldier boy. The Bishop made friends wherever he went. His talks were of the highest order; so earnest were his words and counsel that many must follow our rule of prayer, and not a few our rule of service. Next week will tell of the visit of Bishop Reese, as his stay in the camp was on Sunday, June 23.

P. S.—Should add that the Bishop had another service at the base hospital, where he confirmed one of the patients.

A class of twelve, the largest in the history of the institution, which is now 18 years old, was graduated from the Nurse's School of All Saints' Hospital, Fort Worth, Texas, the evening of June 20. Bishop Moore and members of the medical faculty made addresses. Regret was felt at the absence of the chaplain, the Rev. Edwin Wickens, who is now 80 years of age, and has been for some weeks a patient in the hospital himself. Announcement was made of the erection at an early date of a second home for nurses on the hospital grounds. All Saints' is a diocesan institution, and the outgrowth of the devoted work of 15 women of Trinity Parish, in connection with missionary extension in the city.

Khaki's attitude towards religion is the marvel of the age. In Europe, they tell us, men are losing their sight, their limbs, their strength, "all but their souls, those they are finding". In the great camps of America men are listening to the great vital truths of life and of God as they have never listened before.

The command to destroy the Canaanites, contained in the first lesson for Sunday morning, is one of those Old Testament passages which grate on modern sensibilities. More than that, the effort which a certain powerful nation is now making to "put over" on the world its system of "kultur", at the point of the sword, has caused a revulsion of feeling against the whole idea of any nation's regarding itself as having a mission in the world. All this has its bearing on the Lectionary problem. Even before this war, many persons favored the omission from the public reading of the Scriptures of passages like those in Deut. vii:2-16. Nor is it to be denied that those and similar passages have been the occasion, if not cause, of much harm in the world, as witness Cromwell's slaughter of the Irish, New England's burning of witches and Southern defense of slavery. On the other hand, it may be urged that we ought to face facts and know history—ought to be put in a position to appreciate "the pit whence we have been digged". Not otherwise can we understand either the fact or the method of progress, or know the distinctive and inestimable privilege of living under the Christian dispensation. Science itself comes to our help here. If it be true that the doctrine of evolution has been a great stimulus alike to thought and activity, as applied to history in general, and to all life, why should we deprive ourselves of a similar benefit in the realm of religion and revelation? Moreover, a comparison of Biblical and other history will bring out that in the former are contained elements not in the other, since it attains to a Christ and a Church, the weapons of whose warfare are not carnal. More even than this. There is contained even in the Old Testament a history of the soul, something more than "philosophy teaching by example". If we allow our risen Lord to open our minds to understand the Scriptures, we find in Deut. vii a much-needed exhortation today to overcome all evil, to compromise with no injustice, and at the same time to remember that the elimination of all sin, whether in ourselves, the Church or the world, is something that can be accomplished only gradually, "by little and little". There is no instantaneous salvation, even for the redeemed and converted.

This latter truth is the kernel of the second lesson. St. Paul, writing a quarter of a century after his conversion, did not regard himself as having attained but gave all his efforts to strive toward the mark. These two lessons fit the petition of the Collect for growth and perseverance even to the end.

The evening lessons are founded upon the teaching of the Epistle that redemption is unto liberty, with a view to so using our liberty as to attain unto that freedom which is complete deliverance from sin. The children of Israel had been redeemed from Egyptian bondage (morning lesson), but they were also to carry with them into the Promised Land the ideal of liberty. On the fiftieth year, they were to "proclaim liberty throughout the land" and to "return every man to his possessions"—an act of social justice which might mitigate at least the possibility of tyranny inhering in an imperfect social state.

The second lesson teaches what true freedom is, loving conformity to the truth of man's being (perhaps shorten to verses 12-36).

PERSONAL RELIGION — AIDS AND HELPS BY THE WAY

Edited by Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio

PROVIDENCE

Personal providence is assured by the fact that you are God's child. If God so clothed the grass of the field, which today is and tomorrow is cast into the oven, how much more will He not clothe you? "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your Heavenly Father give to those who ask Him"? God has a plan, purpose and an individual work for you, and through all experience will guide, guard and strengthen you. He cares for you. His hand and presence is never withdrawn.

Does Providence mean immunity from suffering, calamity and trouble? Is it not written, "He shall deliver thee from the snare of the hunter, and from the noisome pestilence. There shall no evil happen unto thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling"? This registers the Old Testament idea of providence. Open the New Testament and behold Christ on His cross. Was His suffering and pain the evidence that God had withdrawn His care? Evil, calamity and suffering come to saint and sinner alike out of the broken order of the world. God's providence is not evidenced by immunity in such experience. "In the world ye shall have tribulation". "In all these things we are more than conquerors". Personal providence, as the name implies, is provision provided for the way prepared for you to walk in. This essential provision is in terms of courage, patience and faith. The equipment with which to meet triumphantly all experience. This is the essential provision for your life, the eternal care of God which never fails.

I AM THE WAY, THE TRUTH AND THE LIFE.

PRAYERS

O God, our Father, whose presence is ever about Thy children, wheresoever they may be, so fill our hearts with trust in Thee, that at all times we may commit ourselves and those we love unto Thy never-failing keeping; confident that Thy sustaining strength is sufficient for every need, and Thy Fatherly care and protection will shield us from all harm and evil. Keep us steadfast in this faith, we humbly beseech Thee—through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O gracious God, who makest all things to work together for the good of them that love Thee, grant me such love to Thee that I may find the good in all the gifts of Thy loving Providence, and use them to Thy glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

Worship

Gratitude and Humility are at the base of Christian civilization.

The man who, having received favors, feels an obligation to show his gratitude for favors received has the instincts of a gentleman. The one who takes what is given to him as a matter of course, and does nothing in return has the nature of a hobo, who feels that the world owes him whatever it has to give and no obligation rests upon him to give any service to the world in return.

A basis of religion is to be found in man's desire to express his gratitude for the many blessings that he constantly receives.

To go on taking, whether from one's parents or God, without expressing one's gratitude in such way as is most acceptable to those who give, is to debase one's nature and to stultify one's manhood.

Worship has many sides from which we may regard its value, but the necessity of thanking God for all the blessings which we receive, including life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, would seem to make worship an imperative necessity to one's self respect.

Giving generously to children does not always result in producing that kind of children who show reverence and gratitude.

The more that is done for them, the more they expect, the more abusive and disrespectful they become, the less they are worthy of the grace bestowed.

What a curious thing is blasphemy! It is the villainous return of an ungrateful son to the source of all blessings for the many blessings received.

It is the same kind of a thing as the abuse an ungrateful child heaps upon a kind and indulgent parent.

God is that good that He sends His blessings, His rain, upon the just and the unjust; the blessings are the same for all, the difference lies in the human nature that receives them.

One man curses and reviles the source of his blessings; the other thanks and worships Him.

A good illustration of our human nature is to be found in the word, Adam. It means "red earth."

Man is only like the ground. Here are two pieces of ground, on opposite sides of the road, same kind of soil originally; but one grows up to weeds and the other to useful grain.

The sunshine bestows its life-giving rays on each; the same rain falls on each, but the crop is very different.

The difference lies in the fact that one garden is neglected and the other is conscientiously worked.

The same kind of seed is sown in each, but the one piece of ground has responded to honest effort, the other to sad neglect.

Our soul is like a garden. About the same blessings and afflictions fall upon each soul. Souls take these things differently.

Some return curses for blessings and more curses for afflictions.

Others find in blessings and afflictions alike that which will bring forth fruit.

It isn't so much what kind of weather happens to the garden, year in and year out. It is the kind of care that the garden gets.

In the same way, do not fool yourself that you are a hard and ungrateful sinner, because you have had a peculiarly hard time in life.

It isn't what happens to us, it is the way we take it.

I was much impressed at being shown the real secret of the book of Job—He had had a particularly hard time of it—lost pretty nearly everything that most men hold dear. Then his wife advised him to curse God and die. Then his fool friends began to show him why he was the peculiar victim of Divine malice. (Some folks are never satisfied until they have made the Almighty as mean as they are themselves.)

And through it all Job was puzzled, but still refused to curse God, until finally Job worked out the problem for himself, and then he discovered the secret of his afflictions. "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

The afflictions of life had puzzled him, but at last he had a true vision of God—Before, he had heard of Him with his ear, but now, he had seen Him with his eye, and with this result, that he became conscious of his own unworthiness in God's sight.

It was exactly the same experience which St. Peter felt when there dawned upon his vision the majesty of Christ's holiness, and he exclaimed, "Depart from me for I am a sinful man, O Lord!"

When a man once sees the holiness of God, he cannot help but realize how far short of that holiness his own standards come.

So we are forced to confess our own unworthiness.

The two are closely allied—Gratitude to God for His blessings and confession of one's own unworthiness to accept them. Humility and gratitude go hand in hand as the basis of true worship, and the Hun has neither the one nor the other.

This war should teach us all not to be Huns.

It was our Lord who placed these two virtues first, the one in the Sermon on the Mount,—"Blessed are the poor in spirit"; the other in the Lord's Prayer,—"Hallowed be thy Name."

Thus do we begin to be the sons of God.

Pagan Prussia has the conceit of the savage, and is incapable of the finer qualities.

Who but a Prussian could shoot such a nurse as Edith Cavell, who had tended his own wounded? Who but a Prussian could break the wrists of the nurse who had cared for him during his need.

Without humility and without gratitude, he trusts in himself that he is righteous and despises everybody but his own kind.

Surely this war shows the terrible result of a world composed of those who worship no one but themselves, who are incapable of gratitude and unacquainted with humility.

It is a concrete illustration of the penalty which we have to pay for godlessness.

Certainly, the example of Prussia ought to make men see righteousness as the basis of true peace.

Prussia should make the sins of conceit and ingratitude so abhorent to us, that we would seek the Kingdom of God and His righteousness in humility and gratitude.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

(Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colo.)

What is meant by the brothers of our Lord, mentioned in the New Testament?

The Greek word, "adelphoi", does not necessarily mean that they were sons of the same mother. The tradition of the Church is that the Virgin Mary was ever a virgin, and that His brethren were either half brothers, sons of Joseph by a former marriage (traditionally, he was much older that the Virgin Mother), or else cousins. This cannot be proven. It is rather a matter of pious belief by the Church in all ages.

Do you not consider the communion service the most important at both services in the morning, instead of substituting Morning Prayer? Why was the change made?

Unquestionably the Holy Communion is the one distinctive Church service. (We have already spoken at length, in a recent issue, on this topic, and prefer not to repeat. But we will restate the matter from a somewhat different angle.)

(a) The Holy Communion is the great service of Christian worship, but in the early Church was a private service for Christians only. It is for "those within", and not for "those without", to use St. Paul's phraseology. (b) There is nothing sacrosanct about 11 a. m., but it is the time when the largest number of non-communicants can, by American custom, be induced to go to Church. (c) If Christians really love our Lord and appreciate the vital importance of the service which He instituted, they will be glad to rise early to worship and to receive. It would seem that such early service was the Christian way to begin the week. (d) This Church owes a great obligation to those who are not communicants, and should arrange its great public service at 11 o'clock for the missionary work of the Church, rather than for the convenience of its own members, and its own members should be missionaries enough to assist in this work.

If Christians must have a later celebration, with music, let it be at 9:30 a. m. Those who will not go at 7 or at 9:30 do not sufficiently appreciate that something beside their own convenience is to be considered. (e) We are afraid that, while Morning Prayer, as now constituted, might have been an excellent missionary service in the days of Queen Elizabeth, when men thought better and talked less than now, that it is not a very good missionary service today, and we would therefore welcome a bolder revision thereof than the minute dissection given it by the General Convention gives much hope of effecting.

This Church, in our opinion, must wake up to the fact that it does not exist merely for the convenience and aesthetic indulgence of its own members, but the time has come for an active missionary crusade, which can be accomplished best, in our judgment, at 11 o'clock on Sunday morning. The change from late celebrations to Morning Prayer was probably made because High Mass had come to be a function, divorced from receiving, and in the Latin tongue, not edifying to those who frequented it.

How just the English Church was in this decision we know not, but we do know that they are on the ground and we are not.

Ordinations

The Rev. William B. Spofford, a master in St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., was ordained priest on Sunday, June 16, in the old chapel of the school, where for the past year he has ministered to the neighborhood congregation known as St. Paul's Mission. The Bishop of the diocese ordained him, and the Rev. Howard F. Hill, D. D., presented him, Dean Ladd of the Berkeley Divinity School preaching the sermon.

On Sunday, June 23, in St. James' Church, Keene, N. H., of which the candidate has long been a communicant, Whitney Hall, recently graduated from the General Theological Seminary, was ordained deacon by the Bishop of the diocese, the Rev. John S. Littell, D. D., Rector of the parish, presenting the candidate and preaching the sermon.

Mr. Vincent Bonnlander, a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, was recently made deacon in the Seminary Chapel, the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop of New Jersey, officiating. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Prof. Ralph B. Pomeroy of the Seminary. Mr. Bonnlander is temporarily officiating in the Church of the Holy Comforter, Rahway, during the absence in war work of the Rector, the Rev. R. W. Elliott.

On June 23, the fourth Sunday after Trinity, Howard Rasmus Brinker and Charles Glenn Baird were ordained to the diaconate, and the Rev. Morton Joslin and the Rev. Rowland Frederick Philbrook advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel Seymour Thomas, S. T. D., Bishop of Wyoming, assisted by the clergy in attendance at the Eleventh Annual Convocation of the Missionary District of Wyoming, held in Christ Church, Douglas.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. S. A. Huston of Cheyenne. Mr. Brinker was presented by Mr. Huston, Mr. Baird, by the Rev. Samuel E. West, the Rev. Mr. Joslin, by the Very Rev. D. W. Thornberry, and the Rev. Mr. Philbrook by the Rev. Paul B. James.

A Visit to The Old College

tutor came along humming to himself the opening of Virgil's epic:

"'Arma virumque cano, Troiae qui primus ab oris.'

"Or when he was indulging in a slight intellectual recreation by rehearsing the corrolaries of geometry in the hallway, and he spied a boy about to awaken fresh enthusiasm in a classmate by emptying a bucket of water on his head from an upper window, the poor tutor reached in his pocket, drew out a six-shooter rule and let the offender have all six shots. It was too bad.

"Such attentions got on our nerves somewhat, and our tutors did not come in for that share of love and esteem that the college chaplain urged us to show toward our governors and teachers.

"One of the stringent rules of our dyspeptic guardians was that nothing to eat should be brought into our rooms in the dormitory. Our faculty thought that eating in the dormitory would not only be a cause of disaster to our constitutions, but would hinder the orderly progress of our minds toward the heights of knowledge. So stringent were they about this that you might have thought that eating in the dormitories had been the cause of every revolution and catastrophe from the plagues of Pharaoh to the panic of '73, and that abstinence from eating between meals had been the cause of every good, from Magna Charta to the Declaration of Independence.

"One particular day several of us took a walk into the country. It was a cold, clear day, and a light fall of snow had mantled the earth with a robe as pure as ermine. A solitary turkey liked our looks, in spite of homespun clothes, and insisted on accompanying us. 'Poor bird, so far away from home,' said we, 'why can we not offer him shelter?' We acted upon the thought, and with care provided a place in the college basement. There were enough farmers in our crowd to know what to do to make a turkey serve his fellow men, and they did it. That same evening, when the shades of night had fallen, we slipped our turkey into a pan and placed him on the stove in my room. Seven or eight boys assembled for the ceremony. All was quiet in the dormitory. Below us a group of boys were studying for examination. They had not been invited to the feast.

"Just as our turkey had turned to a glowing brown, we heard a slow footstep in the corridor. The restless tutor, like a war horse scenting the battle from afar, had forgotten his prejudices so far as to allow the delicate odor of roasting turkey to enter his nostrils. He had been alone on the floor above. He came and knocked on our door.

"Hastily I seized our turkey, and thrusting him into a pillow slip, I tied the mouth of the slip with a bit of rope and hung him out of the window, thrust the pan into my trunk, locked it and admitted the tutor.

"His eyes glowed when he stepped into the room. The air was heavy with the fragrance of the roast turkey.

"'Gentlemen,' he began, in a thin, squeaky voice, 'you are disobeying the rules of the faculty by having eatables in this room.'

"'Mr. Hudson,' I replied boldly, 'so far as I know, there is nothing to eat in this room.'

"He gave me one scornful glance and began to search.

"For half an hour he questioned and searched. Into every corner he peeped. And at last he said icily:

"'I seem to be mistaken. Good night.' He then withdrew.

"In the meantime, honest students, in the room below, poring over the annals of ancient Rome, were aroused from their studies by the gentle flapping of some white object against the window pane. Their studious frame of mind prompted them to investigate the phenomenon.

"I draw the veil over the result of their investigations. Even now that memory saddens my heart.

"We above, when the tutor had departed, built up the fire and got out our pan, ready to warm up our bird after having exposed him to the cruel winter winds. I opened the window, drew up the pillow slip and, opening it wide, I drew forth a picked carcass, a bundle of bones neatly tied, and a placard which had this simple, homely motto:

"'Thanks; that was a good one. Send down another.'"

Personal Mention

The Ven. Wm. R. Plummer, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Indianapolis, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Evansville, Ind.

The Rev. Robert A. Goodwin, Jr., of Aldie, Loudoun Co., Va., who has been in charge of several missions the past year, will sail for France at an early date to engage in war work.

The Rev. A. F. Lowe, assistant at St. Paul's Church, Buffalo, N. Y., has accepted an appointment for war work service at the front in France with the Y. M. C. A.

Rev. Henry E. Kelly, Rector of St. George's Church, Bridgeport, Conn., has entered the school for chaplains at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Ky., in preparation for going "Over Seas." His parish has given him a year's leave of absence.

Bishop Greer of New York, has left town for North East Harbor, Maine, where he will remain until September. Bishop Burch, who will be in charge of the diocese, will remain within working distance of the city.

The Rev. George Heathcote Hills, Rector of Grace Church, Cincinnati, O., is on his way to France, to engage in Religious war work under the Y. M. C. A. His son P. Heathcote Hills, recently enlisted in the United States navy.

The Rev. Cuthbert W. Collorbon of Sewanee, Tenn., has entered upon his work as priest-in-charge of Grace Church, Waycross, Ga., in the absence of the Rev. Robert N. MacCallum, who is civilian chaplain at Camp Wheeler.

The Rev. Herbert Shipman, Rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York City, sailed for France on Sunday, June 30. Mr. Shipman is chaplain of the 106th regiment of Field Artillery. During his absence the parish will be in charge of the Rev. E. Matthews, who has served for some time as curate.

The Rev. William Neely Colton, Rector of St. Barnabas' Church, Irvington, N. Y., has gone to France for twelve months as a Red Cross chaplain. His parish will be under the care of the Rev. Dr. Pardee, secretary of the American Church Building Fund Commission.

On the occasion of his twenty-fifth anniversary as rector of Christ Church, Ironton, O., the Rev. W. H. Hampton, was tendered a noon-day luncheon by the Chamber of Commerce, attended by seventy-three business men of the city. The president of the Chamber of Commerce paid Mr. Hampton a high tribute of appreciation and respect in which, a local paper states, he aroused those who heard him to the fact that Ironton was paying her tribute to a man among men, to the most beloved man in the entire Ohio valley. A purse of $400 and a guest book containing the signatures of those present were presented to Mr. Hampton.

After a long wait, the Rev. Oliver F. Crawford, until recently Rector of St. Paul's Church, Bellevue, Ohio, has been commissioned a chaplain in the army. Chaplain Crawford entered the second officers' training camp at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Ind., and was commissioned a second lieutenant of infantry, reporting at Camp Custer, Mich., last December, where he was attached to the 329th Machine Gun Battalion. Upon the request of his commanding officer, Mr. Crawford received his appointment as chaplain.

The Sunday edition of the New York Herald, July 7th, published on the editorial page a sermon by the Rev. Dr. T. J. Lacey, Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn. In an extended sketch of Dr. Lacey's life, the Herald says: "Dr. Lacey has held his rectorship for the past fifteen years, and he is one of the most prominent clergymen in the Episcopal diocese of Long Island. He has been more than ever before the public of late for his patriotic addresses and his war work in general. The clergyman has been a special friend to the Greek Orthodox Church in this country. Recently at the request of the Episcopal Board of Missions, he has been compiling a directory of the parishes of that faith throughout the United States."

Commencement at Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio

The ninetieth commencement of Kenyon College and Bexley Hall occurred June 14 to 18, 1918. At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees on Friday evening, the 14th, the committee on Bexley Hall announced the election of the Rev. Dr. George Franklin Smythe as Dean of Bexley Hall, to fill the vacancy created by the death, in July, 1917, of the Rev. Dr. H. W. Jones, Dean. Dr. Smythe was for a number of years chaplain and Professor of the Bible at Kenyon College, and for the last three years has served as Colburn Professor of Homiletics and Religious Education at Bexley Hall.

At the ordination service on Sunday morning, June 16, three candidates for the diaconate were presented to the Bishop of Ohio and two to the Bishop of Southern Ohio, as follows: Ohio, William Randall Kinder, Ph. B., Milton George Nicola, Ph. B., Francis Berton Shaner, A. B., Southern Ohio, John Kenneth Putt, A. B., Mr. Boggess. The sermon, preached by the Rev. William H. Dewart, '87, of Boston, was on the text from St. John xiii:26. At the college baccalaureate service in the evening, an impressive and inspiring feature was the benediction by the Bishop of Ohio of the Kenyon Service Flag and the regimental colors of the Kenyon Battalion. The sermon by the President of Kenyon College was preached on the text, "The Lord is King, be the people never so impatient: He sitteth between the Cherubim, be the earth never so unquiet" (Ps. xcix:1).

On Monday morning, at the formal commencement exercises, the class orator was William Vincent Mueller, '18, and the Alumni orator, Josiah Kingsley Ohl, LL. D., '84, editor of New York Herald. Thirteen graduates of Kenyon received Bachelor's degrees in course, five received the degree of Master of Arts in course, and one was awarded ferred as follows: Master of Arts, Albert A. Augustus, Cleveland; Doctor of Divinity, the Rev. James Henry Young, '87, A. B., '89 Bex., Seabury Divinity School; the Rt. Rev. Robert L. Harris, '96, A. B., 99 Bex, '13, A. M., Marquette, Mich.; the Rev. George Parkin Atwater '95, A. B., '98 Bex, '99, A. M., Akron, Ohio; Doctor of Letters, the Rev. William H. Dewart, '87, A. B., Old North Church, Boston; the Rev. George Gunnell, Toledo; Doctor of Laws, Major Guy D. Goff, '88, A. B.; James W. Ellsworth, New York City.

Evanston Bids Dr. Stewart Godspeed

A local paper published at Evanston, Ill., makes the following editorial mention of Dr. Stewart, who is leaving for France for service as a chaplain of the American Red Cross:

There are two things to consider when a man of position in the community leaves his work for service in the war zone. We must think of how the work which he is leaving will fare while he is away from it, and measure the loss by the benefit which will accompany his presence among the men who are waging the war.

Very soon there will go from Evanston one of her representative citizens, a man who has thrown out many lines in which to exercise his influence and spend his activity. The Church which he is leaving will feel the lack of the Rector, even under the charge of the man who will be left in care of the work of the parish. But the men at the front will be heartened and helped by the presence among them of Dr. George Craig Stewart, and for that reason the community will bid him godspeed, wishing for him a safe journey through the perils that beset the sea, and rejoicing in the possibilities of his labor among the fighting forces of the country.

Announcement has been made in the daily press of the appointment of the Rev. C. K. Weller, Rector of St. Peter's Church, Talladega, Ala., as a member of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., for the Southeastern military department. He attended a meeting of his committee at Atlanta on July 2nd, which had under consideration the best methods of bringing the needs of the American expeditionary forces and of the allied armies to the attention of the American people. Mr. George W. Perkins of New York City, is chairman of the Nation Council which is composed of a large number of eminent men in the professional, business and religious walks of life.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

By G. W. J.

One of the best things that the government has done for the natives of the interior and northern part of Alaska is the introduction of reindeer from Lapland. Up to the present time, the mission at Anvik has not been supplied with these useful animals, but Dr. Chapman writes, on Feb. 2, that the district superintendent of the government schools was approaching with a herd which had been ordered moved from Marshall to Anvik.—Spirit of Missions.

The Bishop of Exeter, brother of the Marquis of Salisbury, writes a letter to the London Times, in which he says: "July the fourth should be a day of solemn thanksgiving and humble prayer as an act of courtesy to our allies and an act of thanksgiving to the Almighty for the noble reasons which have inspired America to come to our aid. It is particularly appropriate that the day which for years has commemorated the bitterest hostilities between the two nations should now be observed as a festival of amity." The Bishop says that he has already arranged to observe the day in his diocese.

That the ships sunk by the U-boats in British waters are being salvaged is something that few of us have thought of. Four hundred and seven of the ships sunk have been raised since January, 1915.—Boston Globe.

SUMMER CONFERENCE AT CAMBRIDGE

The Conference for Church Work and Summer School for Church Music began on June 21st and ended July 6th. Headquarters at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass. The printed circular issued says:

The Conference is intended for instruction and training in the spirit and methods of Church work. It aims to bring together, for mutual help, leaders in the thought and action of the Church, and also those who are doing or intend to do Church work, but who feel the need of better preparation. A VISIT TO THE OLD COLLEGE

A Series of Articles by
GEORGE P. ATWATER
Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

III.

Men from all over the land were gathered at Kenyon for the commencement. The managing editor of one of New York's great daily papers, "The Herald", a graduate of Kenyon, delivered the Alumni oration, and a lieutenant-colonel of our forces, also a Kenyon man, made an address.

A group gathered in the shade of the trees, awaiting the tennis match, and our talk turned to the advantage of the small college. The convincing points were set forth with especial emphasis. In the small college there is an atmosphere undisturbed by contact with the affairs of a great community; there is contact and friendship between students and professors; there is much individual attention in the class rooms; there is a greater light upon every student's character, so that a vicious person cannot long escape detection; there is a larger chance for self-expression in college activities. Especially at Kenyon, with its nationally known traditions, with its intercollegiate athletics, and with its fraternities, there is opportunity for the growth of the individual by participation in the activities that have long been associated with college life.

"Some great men have been educated at Kenyon," said '78. "This old college has served its nation well. There was Salmon P. Chase, at one time chief justice of the United States; David Davis, a justice of the Supreme Court; Henry Winter Davis, who achieved distinction as a brilliant orator in Congress; Stanley Matthews, also a justice of the Supreme Court; Edwin M. Stanton, who was Lincoln's great secretary of war; and Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States. Today, Kenyon is true to her traditions, and I have seen it stated in the paper that Kenyon has a greater proportion of its graduates enlisted in the war than any other college in America."

"Yes, and Kenyon has had some men who were not so great," broke in '94. "Do you remember the famous Henry? In his day Henry had the reputation of being the most famous practical joker that had graced the college for many a year."

"Let us drop the celebrities and hear about Henry," suggested '96.

All gave their assent, and '94 began the tale.

"Henry was an innocent looking fellow, but his mind was set upon harmless fun.

"It was he who, opening a package in his room and finding a dozen of his room mate's pictures, just delivered by a photographer, sent one to each of twelve girls at Harcourt School, the young ladies' seminary in the village. Henry it was, likewise, who stole into a room where a senior was taking an afternoon nap, and set his watch and clock three hours ahead. The senior had been invited to dinner with the president at six. Upon waking, he saw his clock and watch both pointing to half-past five. At three o'clock exactly he presented himself in evening clothes at the president's door.

"Henry urged the freshmen to learn their Catechism, and then sent them to the embarrassed president to recite it. He, likewise, with assistance, during the absence of the occupant, moved every scrap of furniture from one room across the hall into another room, and set it exactly as it had been. They took everything but the stove. When the occupant returned, he was dumbfounded to find his room empty, and equally dumbfounded to find his effects in perfect order across the hall. It took that freshman three days to decide whether it was easier to move his furniture to his stove, or move his stove to his furniture. He was not without conflicting advice, all suggested by our joker. It was his same original genius that prompted him, one winter's night, to turn the college bell upside down, fill it with water and allow it to freeze. The imprisoned clapper on that bell awoke no students the following morning.

"Henry invented the practice of telling the freshmen that after Church all freshmen were expected to walk home with the girls from Harcourt School on the very first Sunday, thus prompting that friendliness which ought to exist between the college and the girls' school. He would stand on the side lines after service and watch the embarrassed efforts of a few freshmen to break into that line of girls, a line jealously guarded by the vigilance of a whole corps of sharp-eyed teachers. But, like all jokers, he once ventured too far. He had tried his skill on Big Dave, a true blue Irishman, from County Tyrone. Henry openly, in a small group, planned a midnight supper, at which he assigned to each fellow some eatables. To Dave he assigned, lemons, sugar and crackers. Each fellow was supposed to provide what was assigned. To all but Dave he gave some secret instructions. When the boys appeared about ten, their packages were placed upon a table. All but Dave's. His lemons were soon made into lemonade, sweetened by the sugar. He then told Dave to pass his crackers, and to open the other packages. Dave did so; but the other packages contained nothing but old collars, empty bottles, and such non-eatables. Dave furnished the whole feast.

"Dave planned to get even. He looked Henry the joker squarely in the eyes and promised him a fair return. Henry only laughed. One night, a few weeks later, Dave summoned all the boys, except Henry, to his room .Dave then made them keep silent while he arranged something in the hall. The halls were dark, and every once in a while a boy would stumble over some obstacle. Henry had been particularly annoyed by this, and had sworn that if anything were left where he should stumble over it, he would throw it out of the window.

"Dave soon returned and said: 'There's a trunk across the hall; now for some fun.'

"He then looked out of his door and called:

"'Henry, come quick!'

"Henry, on the floor below, and eager for any excitement, dashed up the stairs and ran along the hall. In a moment he was on the trunk. Headlong he went across it, onto the floor. There was a resounding crash as Henry struck the floor. We all waited breathlessly. Henry, evidently so mad he could not speak, picked up the trunk and hurled it down the stairs. He followed, and hurled it down a second flight, and out on to the stone steps. Then, seizing a stick of firewood, he battered that trunk for five minutes.

"Appeased, somewhat, he came up stairs through the hall, and into Dave's room. Dave was calmly smoking. The other boys were apparently unconcerned.

"'You fellows think you're bright. Well, I carried out my threat, and I don't care which one of you is the loser. There's not enough of that trunk left to start a fire with.'

"Dave said calmly: 'Sit down, Henry. That's all right. We are not offended. It was your own trunk, Henry, that I borrowed for the occasion!'

"Dave was avenged."

Domestic Secretary for the Board of Missions Elected

THE VERY REV. FRANCIS S. WHITE

The Church is very fortunate to secure the services of the Very Rev. Francis S. White as the domestic secretary of the Board of Missions.

The readers of THE WITNESS are well acquainted with him, as they read with profit and interest each week his "Missionary Messages" on the second page of the paper. In making the announcement, the Spirit of Missions says:

"Dean White is a native of New York City, a graduate of Hobart College and the General Theological Seminary, but his entire ministry has been spent in the Middle West. After graduation, he was at first assistant at St. John's Church, Detroit; then, for five years, a member of the Associate Mission at Omaha, and later Rector of Trinity Church, Atchison, Kansas. Since 1911 he has been Dean of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, Michigan, and president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Western Michigan. While in Omaha, he was the editor of the Nebraska Crozier, and he is at present one of the editors of THE WITNESS. He is also known as the author of 'The Story of a Kansas Parish'.

"For the past year, Dean White has been a chaplain at Camp McArthur, Waco, Texas, with the Seventh Division, U. S. A., in which the Michigan National Guard has been incorporated. Since February he has been in the service of the War Commission. Although reluctant to relinquish his services as chaplain, Bishop Perry feels that he ought to take up the important work which the Board has asked him to do, and Dean White will enter on his new field of usefulness in the early fall. The Church is to be congratulated on this addition to the staff of the Church Missions House, and, in the name of its readers, The Spirit of Missions bids him a hearty welcome."

Declines Election as Suffragan Bishop

The Rev. G. G. Bennett regretfully declined the election to the office of Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Montana, which was tendered him at the recent Convention in Missoula. He says:

"There is no work which has been offered me during my ministry which so strongly appeals to me, and which I would rather do than go into Eastern Montana and try to carry out the plan you outlined of building there a diocese. To me it would be as a monument to Bishop Brewer, builded upon the foundation of his far-sighted genius, made possible by your wise and generous division of territory.

"I must decline, however, because of the opinion I hold regarding the office of Suffragan Bishop; to me it is un-American, un-democratic, and by the acceptance of it a man curtails his service to the Church as a whole, and exposes to many uncertainties his services to the part to which he is elected.

"A man's first duty is to the Church as a whole, and when he sees in an office such possibilities as I see in the office of suffragan, to be true to the Church and himself, he cannot work in that office."

Ordination

On the fifth Sunday after Trinity, June 30, at the Cathedral of St. John in Quincy, the Bishop ordained Ira Chestnut Young, M. D., to the diaconate, and the Rev. Robert Hall Atchison was advanced to the priesthood. Dr. Young was presented by the Rev. J. Boyd Coxe, Rector of Trinity Church, St. Louis, Mo., who was also master of ceremonies. The Rev. Mr. Atchison was presented by the Rev. D. E. Johnstone, LL. D., D. C. L., who preached the sermon.

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

A Summer School for Men

The Thirty-third Annual Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States is to be held at Northfield, Mass., from Wednesday, August 14, to Wednesday, August 21, 1918.

The sessions of the Convention will be in the mornings and evenings the afternoons being reserved for rest and recreation.

All the splendid features of past Conventions will be found in this one. The Convention theme is "The Christian Life"

In addition, an opportunity is offered to spend a vacation in connection with the Convention in what is probably the most beautiful part of New England.

Accommodations can be had for those who wish to bring their families.

The expense of the Convention is to be taken care of by a registration fee of $5 for the men and $2.50 for the boys.

The Convention is for all the men and older boys of the Church, regardless of their membership in the Brotherhood—for any man interested in the extension of Christ's Kingdom.

This is the only "Summer School" especially for the men of the Church.

THE STUDY OF THE CHURCH'S MISSION

A new feature of the Convention this year will be a discussion of the Church's Mission, to be conducted by Dr. William C. Sturgis, the educational secretary of the Board of Missions. Dr. Sturgis is one of the best known laymen in the Church, and has always been identified with the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. He is especially successful in interesting men in the subject of missions.

THE BOYS OF THE CHURCH

are not being forgotten in this Convention. Sunday afternoon and Tuesday morning will be largely devoted to the boy work of the Church. Four boys from various parts of the country are to be present and tell how to win other boys to the Church and to the Sunday school.

If you are having difficulty in holding your older boys and of keeping them at work for the Sunday school or the Church, bring them or send them to the Convention, and have them catch a vision of what the Church is doing and how they can have a real part in it. They will never lose that vision. It will mean much to them in the days to come.

When you have attended a Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, then you can say with Bishop Richardson of the Canadian Church: "The Brotherhood today is carrying on the work for which God called it into being, and for which it stands."

"NORTHFIELD"

The Convention will be established in the buildings and on the grounds of the Northfield Seminary. This school, attended by some six hundred girls, was founded many years ago by the late Dwight L. Moody, whose birthplace and boyhood home are in the vicinity.

The Mount Hermon School for Boys, six miles distant, is also a part of the same foundation, Mr. William R. Moody, son of the late evangelist, being the president of the joint Board of Trustees.

Round Top, where the twilight meetings of the Convention will be held, is the little mound near the Auditorium, upon the summit of which are the graves of Mr. Moody and his wife. During the summer vacation period, for a number of years, the school grounds and buildings have been used for the student and missionary conferences and similar gatherings of a religious character. The place, therefore, is especially appropriate as a background for the Brotherhood Convention.

The Auditorium mass meetings—the progress meetings—will be addressed by leaders of the Church on such subjects as The Church and "The Nation", "Social Service", "Missions", "Reconstruction".

The current number of St. Andrew's Cross will have the complete program, and copies may be had by addressing the Brotherhood headquarters in Philadelphia.

Twenty-five Years as Missionary Bishop of Japan

Bishop McKim has completed twenty-five years as Missionary Bishop of Japan. He was consecrated on June 14th, 1893, in St. Thomas' Church, New York, as was also Bishop Graves of Shanghai.

In 1893 there were four churches and two missions in the city of Tokyo. There are at present ten churches and three missions.

In 1893 there were seven places outside of Tokyo where services were held regularly; there are now fifty-six.

In 1893 St. Paul's School for Boys had fifty students; since then it has been expanded into the nucleus of a university, and has, in its various departments, nearly 800 students.

St. Margaret's School for Girls in 1893 had forty-nine pupils; its present number is 275.

These are a few of the interesting statistics which Bishop McKim has to tell.

Miss Lenora Williams niece of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Arthur L. Williams of Nebraska, was united in marriage to Lieut. Irving Benilken at Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, on Saturday, June 1, by the Bishop, in the presence of a large congregation.

The First Dakota Deacon

Fifty years ago, on Whitsunday, 1868, the Rev. Paul Makazute was ordained deacon—the first Dakotan to enter Holy Orders in the Church. On Whitsunday last there was held at his grave, on the Santee Reservation, in South Dakota, a memorial service commemorating the event, and his daughter, Mrs. Rebecca M. Fraciar, placed in the hands of the superintending presbyter a check, asking him to give it to Bishop Burleson, to be used in some appropriate way as a memorial thank offering. The Bishop has sent it to the treasurer of the Board to be sent to the first Chinese Bishop—who has recently been elected—as a thank offering, in memory of the first Dakota deacon. Bishop Burleson felt that the gift should go to something outside the District of South Dakota, thus linking the significant event of fifty years ago with the larger work of the Church.

The Rev. William Heilman, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Ypsilanti, Mich., who has been War Commission camp pastor at Camp Custer since October 1st, has received his commission as chaplain in the National Army, with the rank of first lieutenant. Mr. Heilman is assigned to the 161st Depot Brigade at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Saint James The Apostle
July Twenty-fifth

THE COLLECT

Grant, O merciful God, that, as thine holy Apostle Saint James, leaving his father and all that he had, without delay was obedient unto thy Son Jesus Christ, and followed him; so we, forsaking all worldly and carnal affections, may be evermore ready to follow thy holy commandments; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Leaving his father and all that he had without delay." This Collect lays stress on promptness and wholeheartedness in Christian giving, which is the heart throb of Christian missions. Whether we give of ourselves or our substance, the power of a gift lies in these two qualities—promptness and whole-heartedness. In connection with the slow progress of many a good cause, procrastination has given birth to the phrase, "He gives twice who gives quickly". Let us see to it, then that our gifts, when due, are promptly made. Think of the interest that has to be paid on money borrowed, because those who contribute to the mission cause are slow, or niggardly in the distribution of their gifts or pledges! Think of the many millions of dollars that the Church has lost, because the people who were thinking of contributing to the cause put it off. Think how many Rectors blush for their parishes, because the givers to missions are so apathetic and listless! Think how many Bishops have been humiliated, because their priests have manifested no interest whatever in the extension of the Church's influence within diocesan or national or world-wide bounds, let alone all three of them!

This call of our nation to her young men in the great war, and the response of those men, is an object lesson for us all. It was not a call for self-preservation that made those men respond, although in responding they were fighting for principles that involved self-preservation. See how those men left their dear ones and all that they possessed, and went forth, conquering and to conquer! So does Mother Church call to her sons; so does Christ call, through the Church, for their whole-hearted support. "Now or never" is the call; and the glory of the call lies in the fact that men are not impressed, but are given the chance to volunteer "without delay"; to leave all that holds them back "without delay";to relinquish the holiest ties of the human heart "without delay". If this generation of Christians would only catch that vision of St. James, the world might even now be won back without delay to the stainless soul and blood-stained body of Jesus Christ. Oh, blessed St. James, reveal thyself in visions to parents and their sons and daughters, and show them the joy of whole-hearted sacrifice! Pray for the vestries and congregations of the Church on earth, that they may see the wonderful power and final joy that lies in a continual readiness to obey thy commandments to follow, to go, to teach, to preach, to baptize, to feed and tend the flocks of our common Master, Jesus Christ.

"Forsaking all worldly and carnal affections." We have criticized our exuberant children for saying "I love", instead of "I care for" or "like". "I love candy"; "I just love to go to the theatre"; "how I love to go to parties", etc. The call of the government in the great war to forsake many of the good things of life shows many a critic of the phrase that it is not so exuberant and exaggerated as he claimed, for he is finding that it is hard to give up many things that might be called "worldly" and "carnal", and that he cares for them up to the point of loving them. But in spite of the hardships involved, we are giving up, and will gladly give up more, and, because of the sacrifice, we are enjoying better health. The death rate has not increased where "Hoover rules". This same principle is what Mother Church has always been striving for. If we would only forsake, not for the sake of forsaking, but for the sake of following Jesus Christ, or (may I be permitted to write it?), better still, for the sake of taking Jesus Christ into the dark places of the earth, we should find therein a joy which far exceeds the satisfaction we must have when we know that by forsaking the comforts of our daily life we are helping win the war.

"Follow Thy holy commandments." "Holy" commandments, because in obedience we will find "holiness, without which no man can please God". How many of us yield a whole-hearted obedience to the commands of Jesus? Do not many of us practice the commands we like, and omit the ones we do not like? It seems to me that all we have to do is to make a list of Christ's commands, as the New Testament has recorded them, in order to find out that there are many we do not follow "without delay". And no commandment that Jesus gave is more universally overlooked, or neglected, or trifled with, than the command "to go into all the world, preach, teach and baptize". How, then, can we expect to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus when we neglect so great, and so comforting, and so stimulating and sanctifying a command?

FOR THE EPISTLE

In these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa: which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul. Now about that time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church. And he killed James, the brother of John, with the sword. And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also.—Acts xi:27, and part of chap. xii.

Jerusalem did not permanently keep all the prophets within her bounds. She sent them forth with their messages of warning or comfort. The cities of privilege have many great responsibilities thrust upon them. Among these is the responsibility of not keeping within their walls many "prophets" who should be in the next towns. In the "on-to-the-city" movement which has permanently captivated the minds of all sorts and conditions of men, there is acknowledged danger in letting the sources of religious life in small towns and rural communities become choked and clouded through neglect, or through unwise or indifferent oversight. There are many commissions spending lots of money these days over problems more or less remote from the practical everyday life of men, women and children. Unless a commission, with power to act, begins to work on the problem of our Church in the rural community and the small town, our city Churches will soon begin to develop a dry rot which will threaten final extinction. Nearly every city parish should have a nearby town on its conscience, and a group of its laymen interested in the spiritual welfare of that town. There is wonderfully strong and vital soil in these towns waiting the coming of wise and patient pastors, who can start impulses and will power Godward, as they go townward. Why wouldn't it be a good plan for the men grown gray in big city parishes, as they begin to feel the strain of the city, to seek out these little towns, and, settling there, bring to them the messages that will send their youths back to farm, or on to city, "strong in the Lord of Hosts and in His mighty power"?

"According to his ability." They were an inspiring group of men and women—those early disciples. You notice they not only determined to send relief according to their ability, but they did it: "which also they did", says the chronicler. It is the ideal way of giving. "According to our ability" might well fill us with dismay, for how many of us give according to our ability? There are many of us who determine, make up our minds, to give according to our ability; but of how few of us can the recording angel write, "which also they did".

"Sent it by the hands of Barnabas and Saul." We do things differently these days. We call up our Barnabas and Saul, we ordain and consecrate them to a certain task; then the old hereditary stain of Pharaoh shows itself, and we say, "Go make your tale of bricks without straw". It isn't fair, is it? It isn't in line with our determinations, our resolutions. If we determine to send the relief which lies in a pure Gospel, surely we should see that we put into the hands of God's ambassadors that which will enable them to plant and water in such degree that it is possible for God to bring forth the increase. It is useless to blame God or his Bishop, when we give that Bishop thousands of square miles to plant and water, furnish him with a handful of helpers, a small packet of seeds and a small sprinkling pot, and then tell him to produce fields white to the harvest. It certainly is not fair to God, to the Bishop, to the Church, to ourselves, whose duty it is to help plant and water.

"He killed James, and because it pleased the Jews he proceeded to take Peter also." Many a good soldier of Jesus Christ has been sacrificed to prejudice and misunderstanding. Let us be very careful that we do not fall into Herod's sin. Many a James has been slain by a bit of gossip carelessly repeated. Many a Peter has been held back from his place and work because of politics in the Church. God help us never to vex the Church. Pray that you will never become a Herod to any one who follows the Christ, the King. Do not become a partisan; refuse to belong to anything but the whole Church, the one holy Catholic Apostolic Church, built on the prompt obedience of St. James, as well as on the conversion of St. Peter.

THE GOSPEL

Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him. And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left, in thy kingdom. But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able. And he saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father. And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren. But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—St. Matt. xx:20.

"What wilt thou?" The mother of St. James wanted her sons to be very prominent in the life of the Messianic Kingdom. How many mothers, as they dream of their children's future, ask the impossible of them and for them? Doubtless Peter's wife's mother wanted the same privilege for her son-in-law that Zebedee's wife was seeking for her sons. When we intercede for our dear ones, let us do so with our eyes open to the consequences of our requests. Do not be ambitious for place and position; be ambitious for character and service. God alone is the arbiter of a man's place and position in His Kingdom. Men may mistake the reputation of an apostle for his character; but God knows. He prepares people's places for them. Start your children right. God will see them through in the way that is best for their souls. Let us realize that the Church should develop a sense of mission and vocation in every soul; and let us do nothing to prevent that soul from striving to reach its ideal. But refrain from telling God or His Church just what work that soul shall or shall not do.

The mother of Zebedee's sons came with her children to worship. The Church will regain her influence when Zebedee again joins in the family worship; and not until he does come will the family life become again the cradle of all virtues. People may smile at "family prayers", but there is no denying the fact that prayer will not only bind men to the throne of God, but it will tie family life together and hold it as an integral part of community life better than any other corporate act which might be named. No better work for Christ and His Church could be accomplished, now, than the revival of simple, devout family worship. Zebedee, won't you please take this to heart, and become once more the leader of family devotions?

"We are able." This is the splendid answer of youth, and of the pure in heart. It should mark all responses of the Church to cries for help in time of need. It should be the answer of the Church to the inarticulate demand of people for leaders who are not afraid to serve, and hence are able to lead. It should be your answer and mine to the people who are timid about making big ventures for Christ, in Christ's name. The Red Cross drives, the Y. M. C. A. drives, the W. S. S. and Liberty Loan drives, are splendid examples of this response. It shows what can be done by those who really believe in the cause they have in hand. Shall the Church fall behind these, her benevolent agencies, in relying on and appealing to the faithful to give as they are able; to give according to one's ability? I trow not.

"Minister"; "servant"; "not to be ministered unto, but to minister". Here is the heart of missions laid bare. "To give His life a ransom for many". This thrilling, gripping reality of life is speeding home to us over the wires every day these days, and quickening into vision many a dull-eyed town and sleepy-eyed village, and sleek-eyed city. God hasten the day when our dear Mother, the earthly Jerusalem, shall also waken us up to the necessity of serving men and women for the sake of their larger life. If this American Church will only supply the servants to Americanize the aliens who are straying from services they no longer understand and appreciate, you will see a spiritual awakening that will mark the beginnings of a really new era, and a really great day and generation.

Where do you stand on this "serving" or "being served" question? Where does your parish stand? Where does your diocese stand? What are you doing to make your parish, diocese, Church, a truly great parish, diocese, Church? What are you determined to do for the relief of your spiritually needy brethren? Will you start in now to help, "without delay", and never cease until the "battle's fought, the victory's won"? I trust so.

Book Review

A timely book in this age of chatter and clatter is "The Empire of Silence", by the Rev. Charles Courtenay, M. A., chaplain of Holy Trinity, Rome. It is at once restful, strengthening and stimulating. There is much noise everywhere, but only silence can produce anything worthy of attention. Roots do their work in silence; the mountains and the stars deliver their messages in silence. The author quotes at length on his subject from ancient and modern authors. He calls attention to the fruitful silent times of our Lord, the spiritual power of the quiet Mystics and Quakers, the necessity for silent times that all great men have felt. The print is good and the book light, though an octavo volume of 400 pages. Published by Sturgis & Walton Co., New York.

PERSONAL RELIGION — AIDS AND HELPS BY THE WAY

Edited by Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio

HUMILITY

Translate humility by the word "dependence", and you will understand its Christian meaning. To the pagan, humility was the submissive attitude of a subject kneeling before a king, the groveling of a slave before his master. This act expressed abject submission. "Whoso humbleth himself as this little child, the same shall be great in the Kingdom of Heaven," said Christ. The humility of a child is expressed in his dependence upon the life of his father. There is a wide difference between submission and dependence. The first is official and the second is personal. One is the language of the court, with the picture of God as an all-powerful King seated on the throne, and man, His resigned subject, kneeling before Him; the other is the language of the life of the home, where the dependent child knows the life of his father within him, and works with the father to do his will. This is Christian humility, the door through which we enter and work for the Kingdom.

LEARN OF ME, FOR I AM MEEK AND LOWLY IN HEART, AND YE SHALL FIND REST FOR YOUR SOULS.

PRAYERS

O God, grant us the spirit of humility, that we may thankfully receive all the gifts which Thou hast prepared for us, and use them to Thy glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Lord, I am not mine, but Thine; claim me as Thy servant; keep me as Thy charge; love me as Thy child. Fight for me when I am assaulted; heal me when I am wounded; revive me when I am discouraged. Amen.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

THE HIGHER PANTHEISM

(This famous poem was written for the first conference of the "Metaphysical Society" of England. That society was a remarkable group of noted scientists, authors and clergymen, which was founded in 1869 by the poet's friend, Sir James Knowles, with Tennyson's hearty co-operation. It continued for eleven years. It sought to bring science and religion into closer harmony.)

The sun, the moon, the stars, the seas, the hills and the plains—
Are not these, O Soul, the Vision of Him who reigns?

Is not the Vision He? tho' He be not that which He seems?
Dreams are true while they last, and do we not live in dreams?

Earth, these solid stars, this weight of body and limb,
Are they not sign and symbol of thy division from Him?

Dark is the world to thee: thyself art the reason why;
For is He not all but that which has power to feel "I am I"?

Glory about thee, without thee; and thou fulfillest thy doom,
Making Him broken gleams, and a stifled splendour and gloom.

Speak to Him, thou, for He hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet—
Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.

God is law, say the wise; O Soul, and let us rejoice,
For if He thunder by law, the thunder is yet His voice.

Law is God, say some; no God at all, says the fool;
For all we have power to see is a straight staff bent in a pool;

And the ear of man cannot hear, and the eye of man cannot see;
But if we could see and hear, this Vision—were it not He?

—Alfred Tennyson.

Toleration is the greatest gift of the mind; it requires the same effort of the brain that it takes to balance one's self on a bicycle.

We often ask, What has he done? Seldom we inquire on what principle "he" acts.

EDITORIAL

June Bugs

I was talking the other day with the head of a Red Cross Branch, having nearly a thousand members—She was a bright, energetic sensible woman, very capable and free from all pettiness. I knew that she gave hard and conscientious service in her very responsible position, and I knew the excellent record which that particular branch had made.

"Don't you get very tired," I said. "Yes" she replied, "I do, but the thing that saps most of my strength and uses up most of my vital energy is dealing with sensitive people. Ninety percent of the workers are just fine, but the other ten percent cause me far more worry than the ninety."

"Tell me about it," said I, playing the role of the reporter. "Well, there is the woman who comes here from some other branch. She starts the trouble by saying, 'O! that is not the way to do that. We do it so and so in New York.' Then the person in charge of that particular work gets offended, and I have to placate and soothe her larcerated feelings. Down in Washington, they were so bothered by these self-constituted censors that they put up a large sign, 'This is the Potomae Division.'

When visitors of the peculiar type entered they always enquired, 'Why do you put Potomac in such large letters?' "In order that those who come here from somewhere else, may know that this is the Potomac division, and that we have our own way of doing things and not some other way."

A clergyman sitting at the table remarked, "Now you know some of the difficulties with which a rector has to contend."

But what a shame it is that so much vital energy of capable leaders, both in Church and elsewhere, must be consumed not in the prosecution of the service, but in nursing the other workers through all suffering from fancied troubles. It is this which makes leadership in any praiseworthy enterprise so disagreeable, instead of making it a pleasure. This is one reason why it is so difficult to get capable people to act as leaders in Church and benevolent enterprises.

It is not that they do not enjoy work. Anyone who can do anything well, loves to do it. But it is that no one whose mind is concentrated on efficient service loves to have it distracted by the interruptions of the officious and the poutings of the hyper-sensitive.

For example, what is one to do with this particular type of a feline? In a certain branch, a bolt of cloth had been assigned to cut up into bags for holding certain work. It was a tedious uninteresting job, but an impulsive Irish girl, who wanted to serve said, "I will take it home and do it." She did, and sat up all night to accomplish it. The next day when she proudly brought in her huge pile of work, a smug, self-satisfied, irresponsible imbecile of the privileged class came along and looking at the fruit of much labor and enthusiasm, said in that affected tone peculiar to her tribe, with a patronizing air and a censorious accent, "O! Bags!" Of course the Irish girl left in high dudgeon and the idiot went on her way, absolutely unconscious of the injury that she had done.

Too bad you can't imprison for such offenses. Indeed it is almost impossible to make them realize that they have committed any offense. But there they go, like some big blundering June bug, bumping into people here and there in their insolent fussiness but never doing a tap of efficient service themselves. The very stupidity of the June bug makes the task of disciplining it a hopeless one.

Over at the front, we are being told that trench life is bringing the rich and the poor together in a way that they understand one another as never before. If in the trenches, why not in the Red Cross meetings? Why should there not be a psychological expert in every Red Cross branch, who should send certain specimens to the rear because they are hopelessly impossible?

But the June bug is really a harmless creature, if you refuse to take it seriously. Better, far better to take it humorously than to allow it to keep you away from Church or from Red Cross meetings. As bad as the June bug is the sensitive creature that allows these big bugs, who love the lime light and do no work, to affect them.

If our boys at the front can stand bullets, we ought not to shy at June bugs. Let them come on and do their worst. These are war times, and we must all expect wounds of some sort and those inflicted by June bugs are a very mild form of shell shock from which one quickly recovers if one wills to do so.

There is serious work to be done and the good soldier will take his medicine. Why not be a good soldier, and if in any meeting where you are assembled with others for the public good, and where good leaders are doing their best to utilize the forces that volunteer, why can you not relieve the leader from the unpleasant task of binding up the imaginary wounds which your pride or vanity may have received, because some blundering June bug has made you seem ridiculous, or has disarranged your attire which you thought so becoming?

Think about it before you add to the burdens of leadership those of running a sanitarium for imaginary troubles.

Take your wounded feelings as our soldier boys take their wounds, as part of the game, and in Church or in Red Cross or elsewhere carry on, as a good soldier, not asking your officer's attention, unless the wound be so serious that your own dressing will not suffice. Try to get over the wounds that you receive by your own efforts.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colorado).

Have you seen the article in the Chronicle regarding your being enthronized in an Episcopal chair?

Yes, I have been told that Alexander the Chronicler did me much harm. I have known Alexander for many years. He is more modest in chairs than I am, but not in clothes. The chair in question was forced upon me, and I only did what any Bishop must do, if a chair is placed in a church, and he is told to sit in it. I merely sat in it on this occasion, not knowing how to be enthronized.

No! I do not like to throw poison gas, but, then, even Americans are sometimes forced into it.

There is absolutely no use for Alexander and me to become engaged in theological controversy. It is, as one friend wrote to another, after an epistolary correspondence, which had degenerated into a theological controversy: "It would seem to be time for us to stop this correspondence, for it has become unprofitable. It is degenerating into a mere theological controversy. Let us end it. Let us each go on serving the Lord—you in your way and I in His."

Why does the Church refuse the communion to those who differ from her?

The Church is the body of Christ. As such her pleasure is to do the Master's will. She can have no other desire than to do as He would do.

So the Church is in the world to save sinners and to build men up into the manhood of Christ.

These are two distinct things. The one demands that the church door shall be open to all men—that no man shall be deprived of the right to hear the Gospel. It demands the open pew. The other requires that after the invitation shall have been accepted there shall be a discipline which the hearer shall accept.

It is the same with the nation. We open the door to all who come seeking liberty, but before they become citizens they must accept the responsibility of citizens. No man has a right to vote merely because he lives in the country. He must assume the responsibilities of citizenship before he is entitled to its privileges. It is not enough for him to say that he is just as good as those who vote. That is not the question. Has he been willing to be naturalized. If not, why should he claim the privilege. The principle is that we could not have a nation at all unless we had some test of citizenship.

Neither could we have a Church unless there were some requirements of membership. To ask for the privileges of membership, without being willing to assume the conditions of that membership, is to require the Church to set aside its discipline, in order that you may be a free lance. The Church denies its privileges to no one; it merely requires, as every society requires, that to enjoy those privileges you must assume the responsibilities of baptism and confirmation. And why should you not?

So many want an open Altar and a rented pew. Why? Because it lessens their responsibilities. If you close the pew, you can regulate whom you sit next to. The outcast has no chance to hear the Gospel. If you open the Altar, then you decrease the ties of brotherhood, for you are responsible for your brother with whom you break bread in a home, but not in a restaurant. If anybody can eat at the Lord's table, you have turned the Lord's house into a public restaurant. The closed pew and the open Altar releases the worshipers from their obligations of brotherhood.

Why should the Church be doing work among the heathen abroad, when there are so many heathen at home?

This is the same question that the first Christians in Jerusalem asked. Why go out of Jerusalem when there are so many in Jerusalem, when there are so many at home who have not accepted Christ?

It is a good thing for us that the dispersion of the Christians sent them out into all lands, otherwise the Christians at Jerusalem would still be saying that everybody had not yet been converted in Jerusalem, why go outside?

There are three main reasons why we are committed to the policy of foreign missions:

(1) Because the Lord has commanded it.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

We are under orders, and the question is not whether we agree with our orders, but rather whether we will obey them. It is not so much whether we believe in foreign missions as whether we believe in Christ.

(2) As descendants of heathen, we owe it as a duty of gratitude to pass on to others that which we have received. We are Christians today because somebody, in the ages past, believed in foreign missions. It is a debt of gratitude that we owe to pass over to others that which we have received ourselves.

(3) Because missions are the life of the Church. It is in the mission field that the Church has done its heroic work.

The Church is so constituted that unless we expand, we die. What is more hopeless than a congregation which lives only for itself. We need a program as wide as Christ's love, if we are to be like Him. The more we do for others, the more we grow ourselves.

As for the heathen at home, the most we can give to any one is the opportunity to accept Christ. Those who have the opportunity, and do not embrace it, are like those in the parable—"they would not believe though one rose from the dead."

Do you approve of knitting in church?

When? During the worship? That would be an insult to God.

During the sermon? That would be disrespectful to the preacher. Besides, it is impossible to preach to people who are doing something else.

Surely the reverence for God's sanctuary should be sufficient reason for giving your whole attention thereto. What one needs in church is detachment from the world. Even though you are knitting for a good cause, it is no reason why you should destroy that atmosphere which is essential to worship. There are enough distractions, without manufacturing any new ones.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

By G. W. J.

The American army chaplain must know his manual of tactics as well as his Bible. He must be able to sit a horse, and to undergo the exposure and strain of trench life. He must be a soldier as well as an evangel and spiritual counselor, and so there has been established at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Ky., the only educational institution of its kind in the world, so far as can be learned—a school for chaplains. Its pupils represent 18 denominations, and they are a hefty lot.

Graduates of this school, and all the chaplains of the army, are now to be under one general head—Bishop Charles Henry Brent of the Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Western New York, formerly Bishop of the Philippines, having just been appointed to that office. He has been for some months in France, actively interested in the work of the chaplains of the Y. M. C. A. He has long been a close personal friend of Gen. Pershing. He will work from the general military headquarters. He has under him two assistants, the Rev. Paul Dwight Moody, chaplain of the 103rd Infantry, who is a son of the late evangelist, and the Rev. Father F. B. Doherty, chaplain of the 3rd Cavalry.

The head of the school at Camp Zachary Taylor is Major A. A. Pruden, chaplain of the Coast Artillery Corps, formerly at Fort Monroe, and who has seen service at Hawaii.

There have been 3,000 volunteers for the service of chaplain since the United States went into the war, and now the men are selected by what is called the hand-picking process. They come in through recommendations by their denominations. A man who is apparently fitted for the army work, but may feel that his home duties are too important to leave, has arrangements made to relieve him. The men must be under 45 years of age, and they range from recent graduates of theological seminaries to men of wide and varied experience in the ministry. They will see hard service, and the physical examination which they are obliged to pass is as strict as that of the men. Great Britain has a method of instructing her chaplains, but it is not a regular school, with a schedule of duties, like that in this country. The instruction is given in England by one experienced chaplain, who supervises the new chaplains who are already at work in the cantonments and barracks. It is because America has been so little of a military nation that so much military training is required.

Great Britain allows one chaplain for every 800 men, and does not consider this enough in cavalry regiments. America had one chaplain for each regiment when it formerly consisted of 1,200 men. Since the requirements have been enlarged to 3,600 men, more chaplains are needed. The Federal Council of Churches of America, which represents all denominations, have petitioned for an increase in the number of chaplains.

As with the "rookies", the chaplain in his training camp turns out of bed when the bugle blows reveille at 6:15 o'clock. He takes a half hour setting up drill, and lines up with cup and plate at 6:45 for the regular army mess. Class work, after mess, includes instruction in military law, military customs, international law, French military hygiene, first aid and general lectures on recreational and amusement work. In the afternoon there is drill and instruction in horsemanship. One of the latest graduates of the school said that no previous experience in his life had called forth so much devotional exercise on his part as instruction in horsemanship.

"From the moment I got on that horse's back I prayed fervently, though silently, and when the order came to gallop, I prayed aloud."

The third term of the school is now in session. It opened March 1st, with 75 students. On June 3rd there were 90 men. Men are taken in numerically, according to the size of their respective denominations in this country. Chaplains rank as lieutenants, and wear the regular uniform, the only difference being that where the lieutenant in the ranks wears his insignia on his collar, the chaplain wears a simple cross. Major is the highest rank that can be taken, and there can be only a limited number of that rank among chaplains.

It is not the position of a slacker. The chaplain is the last to see the men when they "go over the top" and the first when they return.

Navy chaplains get their positions more simply, and there is no training. Chaplain John B. Frazier has been detailed by Secretary of the Navy Daniels to see to the navy chaplains. They also have a careful physical examination. The personal equation has much to do in both army and navy in the choice of the religious advisers.—New York Times Magazine.

Church Conference for Women Workers

The second Annual Conference for Church Workers was held at Gambier, Ohio, from June 19 to 21. There was shown, especially this year, the need of just such a conference. It is, primarily, for training Church workers in the spirit and method of Church work, and also for those intending to become workers. This year there were about 40 women present, representing the Diocses of Ohio and Southern Ohio, a marked improvement over last year, as the number has been more than doubled.

Two study class sessions were held daily in Mission Study, Religious Education and Girls' Friendly Society. The Mission Study was under the leadership of Miss C. C. Griswold, educational secretary, Diocese of Chicago; the Religious Education, under Miss Mary Cook of Middleboro, Mass., and the G. F. S. under Mrs. Herron, president of the G. F. S. of Southern Ohio. These classes, together with the discussions which naturally followed, were made so very interesting that they seemed to fill a long-felt want.

On the two afternoons, Bishop Theodore I. Reese gave two most inspiring addresses on "Personal Religion", at the Church of the Holy Spirit. These were held jointly with the Gambier Summer School. On Wednesday evening, the 19th, Bishop Williams of Michigan delivered a wonderful address on "The Church and the War". During one of the conferences, Miss Elizabeth Matthews of Cincinnati, diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary of Southern Ohio, explained the Advent Call of Prayer.

It is earnestly hoped that next year even more women may be able to attend this conference, as now, as never before, surely the Church is in need of more skilled and intelligent workers. The committee in charge this year were Mrs. W. H. Allison of Piqua, Ohio, Miss Susie Tuite of Cincinnati, and Mrs. Barker Newhall of Gambier. For next year there were appointed Mrs. H. P. Knapp of Painesville, diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary of Ohio, Mrs. John G. Anderson of Cleveland, and Mrs. Newhall of Gambier.

Memorial Church Consecrated at Champaign, Ill.

On a beautiful morning, in the presence of a congregation which packed the church to its full capacity, Emmanuel Memorial Church, Champaign, Ill., was consecrated at 10 a. m., June 26, 1918, by the Rt. Rev. Granville H. Sherwood, D. D., S. T. D., Bishop of Springfield. The Bishop was assisted by the Rector of the parish, the Rev. George P. Hoster, D. D., the Rev. J. G. Wright, the Ven. John C. White, the Rev. John M. Page, the Rev. William Baker, the Rev. William H. Tomlins, the Rev. F. J. Compson, the Rev. John T. Lillard, Jr., of the diocesan clergy, and the Rev. A. E. Selcer of the Diocese of Chicago.

Promptly at 10 a. m. the vested choir of men and women, led by the crucifer and flag bearer, entered the church singing hymn 493. The Bishop, preceded by his chaplain, the Rev. John M. Page, bearing the pastoral staff, and attended by the clergy, knocked at the west front door and were admitted by the wardens and vestry of the Church, who escorted the procession up the aisle, repeating, as it slowly moved up, the 24th Psalm. After the procession had reached the sanctuary and the Bishop had taken his seat, the deed of gift and instrument of donation were presented to the Bishop and read by the Rector. The church was consecrated after the form set forth in the Book of Common Prayer, after which the sentence of consecration was read by Mr. Dan G. Swannell. Morning Prayer was said by the Rev. William Baker and the Rev. W. H. Tomlins. The lessons were read by the Rev. F. J. Compson. The introit was hymn No. 196. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by the Ven. John C. White, who read the Epistle, and the Rev. J. G. Wright, the Gospel. The sermon was preached by the Rector, Rev. George P. Hoster, D. D., at the special request of the donors. The Rector and members of the vestry received the Holy Communion in a body. Excellent music was furnished by a vested choir of men and women, Mrs. Hutchins being the organist. The church, chapel and parish hall were built and paid for by Dr. and Mrs. John L. Polk, and given in memory of their three sons. Cram & Ferguson of Boston, Mass., are the architects of the group of buildings, and A. W. Stoolman of Champaign was the builder. The new organ is the gift of the Men's Club and Women's Guild. Almost all the furnishings, except the Altar and the pews, which are from the old church, are new, and are memorials.

After the ceremonies of the consecration, the Bishop, visiting clergy and officials of the parish were entertained at luncheon at the Champaign Club.

The Gambier, O., Summer School

The Gambier Summer School for the clergy of the two Ohio dioceses was held in Bexley Hall, Gambier, Ohio, on June 19, 20 and 21. The session proved to be the best summer session of the school yet held, both in point of excellency of program and in the number attending. Seventy-two clergymen (a considerable number more than in any preceding session of the school) availed themselves of the opportunities presented in the present session, and Harcourt Hall, the girls' dormitory of Kenyon College, which was opened for their entertainment, was taxed to the utmost to accommodate this unusually large attendance.

The program was presented by an unusually strong group of men, each a recognized authority in his particular subject. The lecturers were Bishop C. D. Williams of Michigan, Bishop T. I. Reese of Southern Ohio, Rev. W. H. Van Allen of the Church of the Advent, Boston, and Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, former Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Fond du Lac.

Each of these four participants delivered two lectures during the course of the session on his appointed subject. Bishop Williams' theme was "The Church in the War and After the War". He spoke especially from the standpoint of the great social awakening which was taking place, and stressed the need of the Church taking and holding the leadership in the midst of the mighty changes which were going on.

Bishop Theo. I. Reese conducted two classes in Personal Religion, suited to the needs of the individual in these times of storm and stress. The Christian assurance of immortality was the especially appropriate theme of these classes—as an answer to the question uppermost in the minds of the masses of men through their contact with the war.

Dr. Van Allen delivered two lectures on preaching, notable for their clarity of thought, simplicity and directness of appeal, and for the happy and entertaining way in which they were presented. He succeeded in making an old theme new and entirely interesting.

Dean Bell's lectures on "The Problem of Sex Morality" and "The Problem of International Morality", were not only "up to the minute" in their application of the new social thought to two of the most immediate problems of the day, but were also notable for the advanced position taken by Dean Bell as to the Christian solution of these problems.

The round table sessions of the summer school, always looked forward to with a special relish by those who have ever attended any of the summer sessions at Gambier, were exceedingly interesting and inspiring meetings this year. The sessions were held, as usual, in the evening, after compline, in Baker's Hall. Archdeacon Dodshon of the Southern Diocese and Rev. E. G. Mapes of the Northern Diocese presided jointly over these meetings. Every one was given an opportunity to express themselves without restraint, and did so. A spirit of great good humor, however, pervaded the remarks of all who sat about the "round table".

On the second evening the round table had the pleasure of hearing President Pierce of Kenyon College, who had just returned from France, tell of his experiences as director of a Red Cross canteen near the front line trenches before Verdun. He spoke for two hours in the most entertaining way, while all listened entranced by the pictures he drew of the people and conditions in the country upon which the eyes of the whole world are now centered.

At the closing session of the summer school, officers were elected for the coming year, and certain details arranged looking toward an even larger summer school session next year. Archdeacon Dodshon was elected president of the organization, and Rev. E. G. Mapes of Sandusky, Ohio, was elected the secretary and treasurer.

The Death of the Rev. Edwin Wickens

The Rev. Edwin Wickens, for thirty-two years a priest of the Diocese of Dallas, passed away at All Saints' Hospital, Fort Worth, Texas, of which for nearly five years he had been the titular chaplain, on the evening of July 4th, at the age of 79. After a mortuary Eucharist in St. Andrew's Church, on Saturday morning, the 6th, celebrated by Bishop Moore, assisted by the Fort Worth clergy, the body lay in state, with vested clergy of the diocese standing as guards of honor, until 11 o'clock, when the burial service was said by Bishops Carrett and Moore, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. E. H. Eckel and F. T. Datson. Interment was made in Mount Olivet cemetery, Fort Worth, six of the Dallas clergy acting as pall-bearers.

Mr. Wickens was the second child of Edwin and Jane Wickens of Walworth, Surrey, England, where he was born June 30th. 1839. After serving for a time as a missionary of the Church of England in South Africa, Mr. Wickens came to America and was ordained deacon by Bishop Quintard of Tennessee, in 1870, and priest by Bishop Gregg of Texas in 1875, whose general missionary he was for several years. He was pre-eminently a pioneer missionary and builder of churches, and his name is associated with Denison, Sherman, Cuero, Groesbeck, Rockdale, Fort Worth, Decatur, Weatherford, Round Rock, Taylor, Buffalo, Pennington, Georgetown, and many other Texas towns and villages, in several of which he held the first services of the Episcopal Church, in some of which he built churches, and in a few of which he served for years at a time as Missionary-in-Charge. He was the founder of the Parish of the Incarnation, Dallas, and its minister for eleven years, from 1886 till it became a parish, whereupon he started All Saints' Mission, Dallas, and served it for thirteen years. For some years he was president of the Standing Committee and a deputy to the General Convention.

He had lived in Fort Worth since November, 1912. He is survived by an unmarried sister at Hullborough, England, and an invalid daughter in Austin, Texas.

Personals

The new president of Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., Dean K. C. M. Sills, is a stanch Churchman, and son of the Rev. C. M. Sills, D. D, Rector of Trinity Church, Geneva, N. Y.

Rev. Stephen C. Clark, Jr., has resigned charge of St. Luke's Church, Park City, Utah, and will enter upon the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Pomona, California.

The Rev. E. P. Baindridge, for the past seven years Rector of St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, Va., has been appointed a chaplain, with the rank of first lieutenant in the regular army, and is attending the training school for chaplains at Camp Taylor, Louisville, Ky.

The Rev. William T. Forsythe, a well known and faithful missionary in the Diocese of Maine, died at his home in Southwest Harbor, June 27. He was born in England. He graduated from St. Augustin's College in 1883, was ordered deacon the same year and advanced to the priesthood the following year by Bishop Williams. He held charges in Canada five years, accepting the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, Middleburg, Va, in 1889. Prior to taking up his work as missionary of the Southern Mt. Desert Mission in the Diocese of Maine, he had also been in charge of the work at Enosburg Falls and Richford, Vermont.

A VISIT TO THE OLD COLLEGE

A Series of Articles by
GEORGE P. ATWATER
Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio
IV.

On my last night at Kenyon I realized how much group singing was sustained as a feature of the college life. Groups of students were on the path, in the darkness, singing the old familiar songs, and it was sweet music to those who had grown to love the associations of college days.

We were sitting in the windows listening to the music, when '98 broke in:

"It is hard to realize that many of those boys are preparing, after graduation, to go to the training camps, and then overseas. But they will be ready. Do you realize that Kenyon has introduced military training as one of the requirements for every student in college? It will be a tremendous advantage to the boys, if they must go to war. It means that they will be prepared at once for positions of responsibility. They will be a long way on their training for officers. At the same time they will not be neglecting their general and specific education. If there was ever a time when the nation needed educated men, it is today. Kenyon is offering the two necessities at once—the military training and also the education."

"It is always true that one, at some time, uses every scrap of knowledge or ability developed at college," said '99. "I had a curious experience once."

"A story, maybe old, maybe new; we'll take a chance," broke in '03. "Let us have it."

"You know that I have been in newspaper work since graduation. One morning, early in my career, the editor called me to his office and gave me an assignment. It was one of those freak newspaper assignments that get men into no end of trouble. I had to be the victim. There had been a lot of talk in the papers about bogus colleges that were selling degrees. One so-called college had been discovered, that had as its faculty a keen young man and an office boy. It was situated on the tenth floor of a Chicago office building, and occupied one room. It did all business by mail, and it sold degrees all over the country. You could become a Doctor of Philosophy for twenty-five dollars, and a Doctor of Divinity for fifteen dollars. It was a scandal.

"There was one chap in our office who claimed to be a Master of Arts of a college in Pennsylvania. He did not look the part, so my chief sent me over to investigate the college and to write it up. I sent for a catalogue and studied it. It seemed a real but rather rural institution. While planning my investigation on the train, I made up my mind that I must be very cunning and not reveal my errand. If I hung around the place too long, I might find myself investigated. I determined at all costs to evade any question as to my identity, but to assume whatever character the place seemed likely to tolerate without suspicion.

"As my train pulled into the little village in which the college was located, I took my suitcase and prepared to step to the platform, when my case was taken by a lanky young man, who said:

"'I was sent to meet you, Professor Brown.'

"I was stunned. Instead of walking darkly into that neighborhood, I was in the limelight at the first step. But Professor Brown! Was that a joke?

"'How did you know me?' I asked my lanky guide, who was making toward a dilapidated carriage, with me at his heels.

"'Your name is on your suitcase,' he answered, looking as if he had read my mind. 'The president is expecting you.'

"That settled it. Some one had given the thing away, and the president had sent for me, either to convince me or to give me a piece of his mind. The lanky chap evidently thought that the title professor was a safe compliment. He did not look capable of irony.

"Well, that carriage creaked along a country road for a quarter of a mile, and then turned into a grove, in the midst of which stood a three-story brick building, surrounded by houses, evidently the homes of the faculty. The lanky chap did not say much. He pointed out the objects of interest, mentioning the names of several of the professors.

"When we drove up to the door of the building I was beginning to get shaky, and was about ready to turn back. I could scarcely make a secret investigation of a college when I was hauled up to its front door and directed by a guide, who mentioned my name again to step inside.

"'You are just in time, Professor Brown,' he said, as he pushed open the door.

"Then my troubles came thick and fast. In a little office-like room were three or four men in black coats, looking very formal and educational. One of them rushed up to me, and, without noticing my look of bewilderment, shook hands with me, as if it were a necessary matter for which he scarcely had time, and then said:

"'Please come right this way, Professor Brown. We are glad to see you. Sorry you have been delayed. But we have filled in the time.'

"He hustled me up a flight of stairs, and along a corridor. I scarcely grasped his words—I was completely bewildered. He came to a door and paused. His haste settled down to a calm unrest. Opening that door, he took my arm and conducted me to what was beyond.

"Never can I describe my feelings. The next moment we were on a little platform, and before us was a large hall, every face filled with sober-faced men and women.

"I must have shown my state of collapse, for that unfeeling president pushed me into a chair. There I sat and stared. The audience stared, too.

"Then that president stepped forward and said:

"'Ladies and gentlemen, it is a great pleasure to have with us today such an eminent man as the learned scholar who is to deliver the address.'

"I almost jumped from my chair. An address! I glanced toward the door. The other members of that black-coated bunch were just entering. No escape there.

"'I am sure,' continued the voice that was burning into my brain like a hot iron. But what he was sure of I didn't hear. My brain was in a whirl. But that president had points. One of his virtues was being long-winded in making speeches. As he kept on I grew calmer. I learned some facts about my life that I had never known before. I had taken honors at Oxford, England. I had studied in Paris. I had made two or three discoveries. I was a wonder—a very marvel. My mind was a whole library, and so on. It was so funny that I began to get my nerve and to grasp what was going on. I was to make a speech. That was sure. I had been invited. The president talked on. I began to wonder if I could do it. Could I say ten words? I gleaned that my subject was to be 'education'. Surely that was broad enough.

"Now Graves, here, knows that I used to be the chief mogul of the literary societies and the dramatic club. I was used to audiences. As the president went on recounting my virtues, I cast about in my mind for something to say. Finally he concluded:

"'And now I have the honor to present Professor Brown.'

"There was loud applause, chiefly because the president had finished, I believe. I arose and walked to the front of the platform.

"'It is useless for me to pretend,' I began, 'that I am all these things that the president has so eloquently recounted.'

"That was the truth. The audience took it for modesty.

"Then I launched into a little essay I had once written on the value of a small college. That seemed to go, for this college was pretty small.

"After that, I took up the beauties of the place. I had just written a nature article for our Sunday supplement, describing John D. Rockefeller's place at Forest Hill. That gave me the vocabulary and the high lights.

"From there I branched into the need of moral training. This was from the report of a sermon I had written for the paper the preceding Sunday.

"Then I named the branches of study most conducive to a thorough education. That was from the very catalogue of this college, and the president looked very much pleased.

"Then I shied toward dramatics as a means of self-expression. This tickled the students. They had been trying, I learned later, to give a play, and had hit on 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' as the one they had heard most about. We had given 'The School for Scandal' in college, and I had coached some amateurs only a few weeks before, so it was fresh. I started out with a few lines, then gave the whole first act, taking the various parts. By this time I had warmed to my work.

"I was pretty well at the end of my string then. But my mind was keyed up, and as a finish I recited part of my commencement oration. Then I thanked them and sat down.

"The audience was enthusiastic, but the president looked puzzled. He arose and thanked me. Some one played a piano solo, and during that operation the lanky chap came to the platform with a telegram. It was addressed to the president, who read it, and then handed it to me. It read thus:

"'Missed my train at Pittsburgh. Cannot lecture today.'

'A. F. BROWN.'

"It came across my mind in a flash what had happened. Professor Brown was in wicked Pittsburgh. I did not know what to say to the president, so I only smiled in a most cordial way and handed back his telegram. The piano stopped. The audience began to leave, and I prepared for the worst.

"They took me into an office, and I surrendered. Well, that was the most gracious faculty you ever saw. They forgave me on the spot, for they had gone through all sorts of trouble to get that audience together, and were nearly scared to death when Professor Brown's train was late. They offered me the fee, which I refused.

"I investigated that college, and found it a real institution of learning, with good, steady students. I left on an evening train, escorted by the president. Nobody but the faculty ever knew the truth.

"And today you will find men about that whole country boast of having heard the famous Professor Brown."

The Church's Influence

"What is the third estate?" asked one.

"The third estate is everything," cried Merabeau, the orator of the French revolution.

What is the Church? The Church of the nation is everything. The Church stands watching from dusk till morn at the railroad station as each hour trains of troops pass and some mother for a moment greets some boy and presses into his hands her last gift before he goes overseas. Twelve such trains on Monday, in the night, eight in the day; and eleven such Tuesday. And the Church gathers her children at her Altar and prays for the men going into the night of pitched battle, and for the waiting and watching mothers.

REV. WM. MERCER GREEN ELECTED BISHOP COADJUTOR OF MISSISSIPPI

The Rev. William Mercer Green, Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, Miss, and president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Mississippi, was unanimously elected Bishop Coadjutor of his diocese at a special Council held in the church of which he is the Rector, on June 25. The Church News, commenting upon his election, says:

"In all the Council there was not a heart but what silently pledged itself in loyalty to the choice of the Council. It is quite evident that the man that the Council wanted was elected. Although every man should stand upon his own virtues (and Mr. Green does this in an exceptional manner), it is fitting that the Bishop Coadjutor should be a native Mississipian, closely identified with the diocese himself, and identified in a unique manner for two preceding generations. Not only was his grandfather the first Bishop of Mississippi, but his father, the Rev. Duncan Green, was a Mississippi clergyman, dying in a yellow fever epidemic as Rector of St. James', Greenville. Mr. Green himself has been constantly identified with the diocese, spending only two or three years of his ministry away from Mississippi. As lay reader, before he took orders, as Rector at Canton and Meridian, as first Dean of All Saints' College, as Rector of St. Andrew's, Jackson, for the past seven years, as delegate to many successive General Conventions, and as giving himself to all movement in the diocese, Mr. Green has so woven himself into our diocesan life that his elevation to the Episcopacy will come without the dropping of a stitch in the weaving.

Diocese of Kansas Does It

One hardly knows whether to be pleased or disappointed when he sees a pet project put through by some one else, before he has himself put it in motion. But it is only a momentary question with a Christian if, as such, he is really more concerned about the project than for the self-glorification, says the editor of the Framingham, Mass., Church Messenger.

At the January meeting of the Archdeaconry we made a speech in which we urged that something be done by the diocese in the way of making known in our cities the history, teachings, works and customs of the Episcopal Church, as a branch of the historic Holy Catholic Church. We add the last nine words now to indicate a large part of our argument—that we have something to teach and the right to teach it. But the main fact is that the cities and towns have a right to this knowledge and education. There are thousands of people all around us who are being deprived of God-given spiritual rights, because they are ignorant of their existence—and we have a duty to them which is not being fulfilled, and will not be fulfilled until we use more paper and ink.

But our temerity was met with the silence of timidity—or our timidity with the temerity of silence—put it as you like—and the matter rested for the time being.

And now comes the Diocese of Kansas, and does it! At its recent Convention it established a bureau of Publicity and Advertising—the first in the history of the Episcopal Church in America!

Fifth Anniversary of Rectorship Observed

Sunday morning, June 16, a large gathering of men assembled at the early celebration of the Holy Communion at Grace Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., in connection with the Rector's fifth anniversary, the Rev. William Porkess. At the later morning service the Rector preached a special sermon, dwelling upon the marks of progress covering the five years. During that time the Sunday school had been absolutely transformed. A real awakening to regular church attendance had been manifested. A missionary spirit on the part of many parishioners had been stirred. Considerable increase in systematic giving to current expenses had been brought about. Somewhat elaborate structural improvements to the church property had also been effected during the present rectorship. A formal request, from a number, for the publication of this anniversary sermon was made after the service.

A 2000 Mile Auto Trip by Bishop Hunting

Bishop Hunting has just returned from a two-thousand-mile motor car trip through Nevada. In the course of it he almost completely wore out the Episcopal automobile.

"I had a strenuous trip," he says, "but got through without more than average mishaps. I went into every county in the state. I visited some places where no clergyman of this Church had ever been. I could not rest content until I knew conditions. It is a comfort to be able to write that there is not a place where we have as many as three communicants which is not cared for after a fashion by our nine men. I do not know of a community where we are missing real opportunity. There are places where no religious services of any sort are ever held. Of course, the souls in these towns should be cared for. Some of them are almost as virgin fields as the foreign fields. If I could get three men I could pay them, rearrange my groups of missions, and go into some of these new places. No communicants here are neglected or forgotten. I got around to them, if no one else does. This especially applies to isolated ranches.

The Board of Missions are mighty good to Nevada. All we can do is to keep at work here, planting and watering. There will be a harvest some day. I honestly believe the Board's expenditures will be fully justified. I am sure not a penny of Board money is wasted, and we get the people to do all possible."

Six Months in Prayer

Christians are beginning to realize that only Christianity visibly united can convert the world to Christ, and that such a visible unity can be attained only through prayer which shall put the wills of the members of the Church Militant in harmony with the will of Christ, its Head.

The Octave January 18-25 (January 5-12 in the Eastern calendar) of prayer for the visible reunion of the Church which is the Body of Christ, was observed in 1918 in every part of the world and by Christians of every Communion; but a still more general observance is needed, and a more complete surrender of our hearts and minds and wills to the Will of God.

The Commission of the American Episcopal Church on the World Conference on Faith and Order therefore again requests Christendom to observe the same octave in the year 1919 for the same purpose. This notice is sent out early to reach the distant parts of hte world. But many of us who will receive this request at once may well spend six months in prayer that through united intercession Christians may have no will except the Will of the One Lord.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

"The Churching of Women"

O Almighty God, we give thee humble thanks for that thou hast been graciously pleased to preserve,through the great pain and peril of child-birth, this woman, thy servant, who desireth now to offer her praises and thanksgivings unto thee. Grant, we beseech thee, most merciful Father, that she, through thy help, may both faithfully live and walk according to thy will in this life present, and also may be partaker of everlasting glory in the life to come; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"What is home without a mother?" To ask the question is, in the case of a good mother, to answer it, for where there is a good mother there is the beginning of heaven on earth; where there is a good mother there is the prattle of children's voices, running the gamut from the infant crying in the night to the lilt and laughter of childhood just merging into the sweet seriousness or bluff boisterousness of adolescence. Where there are children there are tears, and smiles, and childish confidences, and the echoes of sterner strifes, as "will" meeting "discipline" learns the laws of self-control, both by precept and example.

And wherever there is a good home, there the service of "The Churching of Women" has a place and a message all its own. That might well be a holiday, or holy day, where the father escorts the mother on her first journey from the home, throught the gates of the house of the Lord into His sanctuary, and the father holds the child of their joint love in his arms while the mother kneels at the chancel steps and renders her thanksgiving for coming safely through that child's advent. Does this seem mystical or too romantic a transaction to be considered by the practical, hard-working parents of today?. For some reason or other the ceremony has drifted toward, if it has not crossed, the threshold of the limbo of neglected rites; but its words and phrases are still retained within the Book of Common Prayer; therefore this service may again some day become a common service in this branch of the Church, where that which is primitive and catholic may be revived, if it can prove its right to live and help live.

Wherever the Prayer Book finds an entrance, some day rises the building which will house those who have learned to love and live by that Prayer Book, and in that building this Collect will have a right to be heard. Whether it be said or no, it certainly has a message, and therefore, and especially if it be neglected or forgotten, will that message have a missionary aspect.

It would seem as if this service was the reconsecration of parents to the task of religious education, based on a thankful appreciation of the responsibilities of parenthood. Why should a father and mother join in an expression of gratitude to the Almighty One, if there was not in their hearts a strong desire to seek grace and favor of that Almighty One, which could be turned to the advantage of their little ones? God has put himself on record that He never did care for lip service, whether the lips professed thankfulness or promised vows. Unless the heart is on the lips, the whole transaction of gratitude becomes artificial and hardening—an empty mockery. And if parents really feel no gratitude to God for the safe arrival of their little one, and, above all, for the preservation of the mother life and the mother love, it is not to be wondered at that this service has lost its hold on folks, and that the churching of women has become a relic of the past.

Can any transaction, though, savor of finer feeling on the part of man and woman who have been blessed by a child than a little journey to the sanctuary of God, following the safe convalescence of the mother? See the mother, with the flush of maternal joy, over a man born into the world, pulsing pink the cheeks which tell of recent pangs and pains; and the father glad and proud, and so grateful for the good gift of the good wife, as well as the nestling youngster, so appealing in its helplessness; the quiet sanctuary; the few close friends for this intimate service; the psalm and prayer of thankfulness; the sacrament of baptism, followed by the sacrament of life and love, with the final blessing of the man of God; the return journey to the home fireside; the taking up of daily tasks with new vigor, and new reasons for ambition, and effort, and continued struggle. Out of scenes like this must emerge beauty and brawn, grace and courage—children that are worth having, and parents that one could love with an abiding and increasing devotion as the years increased their tale. It is a service like this which will take courtship and marriage and talk of eugenics out of the atmosphere of the market place and the stock yard, and flood them with the flecked sunshine of modest and restrained attitudes and conversations toward those processes of human nature whereby God would replenish the earth.

"This woman, thy servant, who desireth now to return her praises and thanksgivings unto thee." Only as a mother keeps on her lips the song of praise and thanksgiving will her children learn these two important lessons of life and manners. Only as she lives them in her daily life will she be able to hold fast in times that try her soul, and to teach her husband how to walk according to God's will in those relations which involve the possible creation of a human being. Only as she desires to offer praises and thanksgivings to God can she become that holiest thing God meant her to be—a natural mother of natural children. Only as she holds herself close to the ideal of a holy family can she have grace and power to refuse to become the unnatural wife of an unnatural husband. If many women of today would change their mental and moral attitudes toward "The Churching of Women", there is a strong possibility, even probability, that home life would become that sweeter and attractive thing which so many modern writers of fact and fiction tell us it is not. If the women of today would ponder well the reasons for marriage, and what God teaches men to expect as the result of marriage, the whole service of Holy Matrimony would be approached in a much finer and better spirit by both men and women than it is by many approached today. If a man approaches his marriage day with coarse and unnatural emotions, one may be very sure that no good mother ever bared her soul to that son of hers; no good father ever talked in quiet, even tones to that son of his on the responsibilities and privileges of the marriage state. "The Churching of Women" has possibilities in its revival that should not be lost sight of by parents who love God and want to keep His commandments. The service circles around motherhood, because motherhood is the shrine, and cradle, and inspiration of every man and woman born into this world, and when motherhood is divorced from its dependence on God, and its adherence to the laws of God, a pagan virtue will rapidly succeed a Christian virtue, and quite as easily degenerate from a religion of nature only, to an unnatural religion, and a debased civilization.

The woman, at the usual time after her delivery, shall come into the Church decently apparelled, and there shall kneel down in some convenient place, as hath been accustomed, or as the Ordinary shall direct; and then the Minister shall say unto her, Forasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God, of his goodness, to give you safe deliverance, and to preserve you in the great danger of childbirth; you shall therefore give hearty thanks unto God, and say,

Then shall be said by both of them the following Hymn, the woman still kneeling.

Dilexi quoniam.

I am well pleased : that the Lord hath heard the voice of my prayer;

That he hath inclined his ear unto me : therefore will I call upon him as long as I live.

I found trouble and heaviness, and I called upon the Name of the Lord : O Lord, I beseech thee, deliver my soul.

Gracious is the Lord, and righteous : yea, our God is merciful.

What reward shall I give unto the Lord : for all the benefits that he hath done unto me?

I will receive the cup of salvation : and call upon the Name of the Lord.

I will pay my vows now in the presence of all his people : in the courts of the Lord's house, even in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem. Praise the Lord.

"I am well pleased that the Lord hath heard the voice of my prayer." Think of the prayers mothers breathe over the life while it yet rests under her heart! How tender, how beautiful the picture! How stirring to him who has been taught to reverence womanhood! To what mighty resolves should it not stir him, as he beholds that appealing picture.

"Therefore will I call upon him as long as I live." Yes, in joy and in sorrow, in anguish and despair will you call; but there will be less anxiety and blackness of despair, and more joy and happiness, if you and "father" keep the atmosphere of this service in your home lives and speech, and do it in such fashion that your children will see at what you are aiming in life, and will be stirred to help create a "holy family" atmosphere.

"What reward shall I give unto the Lord?" What could please our Heavenly Father more than to have His children bring their children to Him for a blessing? What could please Him more than to seek His life and strength and courage from the Holy Grail? What could please Him more than to call on Him for wisdom and patience and love and pity and understanding?

And what greater help and example can parents set their children than by letting them see that in all events of life, from the cradle to the grave, none is complete or fully rounded, or completely blessed, until contact has been made with the courts of the Lord's house, where the Lord has promised to meet and bless his children? Let us resolve to make the teaching oft his psalm and prayer and service so real a thing in the daily life of ourselves and our fellows that what now seems an unreal, and remote and artificial transaction shall again grow into our children's minds as the most natural thing in all the world to do. Let us banish false modesty and substitute a humble and reverent attitude towards those mysteries which God has wrapped up in human flesh, with the hope and plan that when we see what He wants us to do we will have both grace and power to bring it to pass, as far as in us lies.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

FROM "A GRAMMARIAN'S FUNERAL"

Was it not great? Did not he throw on God
(He loves the burthen)
God's task to make the heavenly period
Perfect the earthen?
Did not he magnify the mind, show clear
Just what it all meant?
He would not discount life, as fools do here,
Paid by installment.
He ventured neck or nothing—heaven's success
Found, or earth's failure:
"Wilt thou trust death or not?" He answered, "Yes!
Hence with life's pale lure!"
That low man seeks a little thing to do—
Sees it and does it;
This high man, with a great thing to pursue,
Dies ere he knows it.
That low man goes on adding one to one,
His hundreds soon hit.
This high man, aiming at a million,
Misses an unit.
That has the world here—should he need the next,
Let the world mind him!
This, throws himself on God, and unperplexed,
Seeking shall find Him.
—Robert Browning (1855).

A cablegram has been received from the Rev. Dr. Coupland, Rector of Trinity Church, New Orleans, La., announcing his safe arrival in France. The vessel upon which he was a passenger was attacked by a U-boat.

Nobody ever gets a real blessing from God without immediately wanting somebody else to do the same thing.—Ex.

God wants to hear about whatever occupies our time and thought, not that He may be informed, but that we may keep in communion with Him.

PATIENCE

Patience is not another name for resignation. Not folded, but active, hands, ministering to human needs, are the hands of patience. It is your firm grip on the eternal moral laws of God which makes you work with patience, "without haste and without rest". The result of your effort is sure, and you are willing to wait God's time of fulfillment. The feverish desire to get quick results produces impatience. Character is not grown in a day—you can't force the sunrise. Think of the infinite patience of God with His creation, with your wrong doing. He does not thunder the sinner down, like an angry tyrant. He works and waits until man comes to himself. By His patient restraint God calls forth our best.

IN YOUR PATIENCE YE SHALL WIN YOUR SOULS.

PRAYERS

O God, with whom a thousand years are as one day, Thou hast called us whose lives pass as a watch in the night into Thy service. That we may so do our work that it should not need to be undone, stay, we beseech Thee, the fever in our hearts, and help us to walk in the light of Thine own eternity; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God, builder of the universe, in whose sight a thousand years are as a single day, help us to be patient. In time of sickness, grant us patience to wait the operation of Thy healing power. In time of mental conflict may we patiently wait until Thou shalt show us the pathway by which we may be delivered from our distress. In time of war and upheaval, grant us patience to wait Thy time of peace. In the building of our own lives, may we with patience make each day a polished stone fit for the Builder's use, raising us ever nearer the perfect likeness of Thy dear Son, and as Thou knowest the deepest desires of our hearts, grant us, we humbly beseech Thee, patience to wait Thy time of fulfillment; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

By G. W. J.

The Bishop of British Honduras wants to teach his people to kneel in prayer, and on the afternoon of Ascension Day there was a "bee" of the Churchmen in Belize to make kneelers for the Cathedral. One of the laymen organized the men and boys, and they made wooden benches to fit the pews exactly. They gave the work, the Bishop furnishing the wood. Every one seemed to enjoy it, and the work went on so briskly that about thirty benches were finished between the hours of 4:20 and 6:30 p. m.

"Our friends at home will be glad to know of some of the work done by Archdeacon Mellew's missionary automobile. She is named 'Phoebe the Deaconess', because she is supposed to help the clergy. On Palm Sunday, 'Phoebe', guided by the Archdeacon, took Miss McKnight of the Hooker School, Miss Guerra, from the House of the Holy Name, and the Rev. Mr. Carrion to visit the mission at Xochitence. This is a small Indian village about twenty miles out of the city. As the people were expecting a visit, they had decorated the little chapel with flowers and branches of trees, so that it looked as gay as a Christmas festival. The people took part in the service with great heartiness, and Mr. Mellen, being prohibited by the present Mexican laws from officiating, spoke to the people after the service. Miss Guerra and Miss McKnight told the people of the work of the schools, for we want them to have a knowledge of our Church institutions."

The above is an extract from a letter from Deaconess Whitaker, in Mexico, to which Archdeacon Mellen adds: "The Hooker School is doing a very fine work. The very reason that the school is so small makes the power and influence over each one of the girls all the greater. The garden is fine, also the alfalfa, and now the corn is growing well, for the first of the rains have come."

July Fourth of the present year marks the one hundredth birthday of the American flag. The Continental, Grand Union, flag of the colonies was the first standard to have embodied in its design an attribute which endures in the flag of today. The union in the upper left hand corner still showed the device of England, the combined crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, and thirteen alternate red and white stripes filled in the field. These stripes were substituted for the red field that England was then using. This flag was raised for the first time on Jan. 1, 1716, on Prospect Hill, Cambridge, Mass. Notwithstanding its adoption, other flags, bearing various devices and mottoes, continued in use among the American patriots. On June 14, 1777, the American Congress adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation."

The stars in this flag were arranged in a circle, and the credit for making it is usually given to Miss Betsy Ross of Philadelphia. After the thirteen original states were increased to fifteen, upon the entry into the Union of Vermont, on March 4, 1791, and Kentucky, on June 1, 1792, Congress passed an act increasing the stars and stripes to fifteen each. It was this flag, flying over Fort McHenry, in 1814, that inspired Francis Scott-Key to write "The Star Spangled Banner".

Later, as other states came into the Union, a bill was introduced into the House to make a change in the flag that would adjust it to the increased number of states. The first flag raised after the enactment of the new law was hoisted on the flagstaff of the House of Representatives, on the 13th of April, 1818. This flag was made under the supervision of Capt. Reid by his wife and some other ladies, at her house on Cherry Street, New York City.

Captain Reid, to whom our flag as we know it is so largely due, was a naval officer who won fame in 1814, when he commanded the American privateer, General Armstrong , by beating much superior naval forces at Fayal, in the Azores. Reid was acclaimed with great honor upon his return to the United States, and rendered his country many other services before his death, in 1861.—New York Times Magazine.

Sanctuary of Prayer

PRAYER FOR RECTOR IN WAR SERVICE

"Heavenly Father, we pray Thee to bless and protect our Rector, who, at Thy bidding, has laid down his work and forsaken the quiet path of duty here, to serve his stricken brothers, midst strife and peril, in a distant land. Be with him, Father; strengthen and sustain him; comfort and bless all those who through him will call upon Thy name. Give to him wisdom and sympathy, and grant that in his ministrations he may bear fruitful witness unto Thee. And having finished his appointed task, restore him, we pray Thee, to his accustomed duties, to worthily serve Thee, in his own place and among his own people. All of this we ask in the name of Thy dear Son. Amen."—Trinity Parish Paper, New Orleans.

Bromides and Sulphides

From the standpoint of an ox, quietly chewing his cud under some peaceful shade, the career of a lion, roaring and cavorting, must be wholly inexplicable.

As some psycho-chemist has analyzed the human family, it may be divided into bromides and sulphides. The bromide is bovine in its temperament; the sulphide is leonine. The ox is a harder worker than the lion, and more useful from a strictly commercial standpoint. The lion is more picturesque, and seems to have a more eventful life. He certainly is not popular with the oxen.

And no wonder! We fancy that it was because of lions that oxen grew horns. When the lions are all killed off, we dehorn the oxen.

I fancy that most of the burden and heat of the day is borne by the bromide folk. They resent the sulphides, who disturb the peaceful conventionalities of life. Yet the lions, roaring after their prey, do seek their meat from God—and the oxen seem to be their meat. But the oxen, in their turn, are provided with horns by the same beneficent providence, and they have the right to protect themselves. It is a world in which lions and oxen work out their destiny through much struggle and noisy conflict, and neither one can understand the other.

The oxen are more useful, but no nation has yet chosen the ox as the symbol of its ideals. We have eagles, and lions, and unicorns, but not oxen, as the symbols of national spirit.

The Christian religion, on the other hand, includes the lion of St. Mark and the eagle of St. John, with the ox and the man in the symbolism. It is the tragedy of life on this earth that there is war between lion and oxen; but it is the triumph of grace that "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea".

But we are living now on the earth, and praying that God's will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

And the lion and the ox struggle just because they are made that way. It is the nature of the bovine to run in herds—but the lion is more independent of his kind.

Society has its conventional herds, in which the bromidic congregate. They always do the conventional. Prejudice is stronger than reason, and, like sheep, they go astray in flocks. They resent the presence of the sulphide, and are quick to show their horns when he threatens the peaceful security in which they dwell.

There is the conventional flock known as good society. Who would have the temerity to enter here and upset the fashions and precise ritual of the elite? Certainly he would be made to feel that he was an intruder to be warned off by the coolness of his reception, and, if that is not sufficient, then to be forcibly ejected from the sanctuary of established rites.

There is the herd in which are those who feel the sacred privilege of caste. No sulphide of the outer world must disturb its peaceful security. Here we find herded together the blue-blooded stock of imperial ancestors, and the red-blooded stock of military heroes, and the golden-blooded stock of financial captains. And without are the sulphides, the natural enemies of caste. They must be snubbed and, if necessary, fought, that no privilege may be lost.

Then there is the flock of ecclesiastical sects, each one hedged in by barriers of prejudice, and depending upon the bell-wethers of the sect to scent danger, and to herd their own by the sound of warning. So political parties are held together by that form of patriotism, which Dr. Johnson well says is the final refuge of scoundrels. Why men should vote a party ticket, the principles of which have long since been forgotten, in order to keep a particular stripe of politicians in power, is the same sort of a bromidic problem as why men fight viciously for a sectarian platform which they no longer believe nor understand.

It is similar, however, to the spirit of self-preservation which the scent of the lion arouses in the leaders of the herd, even though they are defending a barren waste.

It is the function of the Church to include within its borders those who live by the set rules and conventions of the past, as well as those who so ruthlessly intrude upon the sacred preserves. There is no place for caste, or sect, or party in the service of Him who yoked together Simon the zealot and Matthew the publican in His common service. It was significant that the Sons of Thunder should be the chosen companions of the Prince of Peace.

The world is narrow, petty, exclusive in its cliques and sects; but in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, but all are one in Christ Jesus. But this is the hard task which is set before us.

It is fully as easy to make the calf and the young lion lie down together as it is to persuade a colonial dame that she should occupy the same pew as the fishmonger's daughter. We are told that this war has caused prince and pauper to respect each other in the trenches; but Christ has always taught that the rich and the poor are to meet together in His sanctuary.

But "the pride of life" must intrude itself, like a Prussian, into Christ's presence, entirely oblivious of the fact that such intrusion is against the Master's will, and an evidence merely of its own conceit.

But that is not the thing that I started out to write. It is a mere digression. What I wanted to protest against is the bromidic character of Church gatherings, such as Guilds, and Institutes, and Councils, and the like, where the obvious is always expected, and where the expression of cold disfavor is manifested toward the sulphide nature that breaks into the placid waters, so apt to become stagnant, unless some sulphide angel came to trouble the same.

"But they are disturbers of the peace!" some one objects. "And there is no time for argument," says another. More often they are disturbers of stagnation, while argument is at least a sign of mental activity and a test of real charity. That is the trouble. We feel that we must herd all bromides together and drive the sulphides into sects and the outside world, where they can be as reckless as they please, so long as our bovine calm is not disturbed.

I am very much afraid that it is this which makes the Church so dull and the world so fascinating. Better the thundering of theological controversy than the low vitality of bromidic stagnation.

In short, Christ expects us to welcome the disagreeable and to harmonize the chaotic elements that come to us from the world. Let us remember that the Church is for sulphides as well as bromides, even if they irritate us into a wakeful activity.

Better anything than the whited sepulchre of dead men's bones! Let us rub cheek and jowl together, and realize that Christ did not suffer on Calvary merely that you and I might have a smug, respectable time, free from irritation and annoyance.

EDITOR'S QUESTION BOX

Ask any questions that are sincere and send them to Bishop Johnson, Wolfe Hall, Denver, Colorado.

What do you consider the greatest bar to Christian unity?

The fact that such a large proportion of Christian people trust in themselves that they are right and despise others.

In order to have Church unity, Christians must want it, and they will never secure it until they are praying for it—earnestly. So long as their vision of Christian fellowship is bounded by the horizon of their own opinions they will never even appreciate the purpose of Christ to bind together in one fellowship all who believe in Him. So long as men lay the emphasis on the sanctity of their own opinions they will never understand Christ's prayer that all may be one.

Parties within the Church are retarding her efficiency. What can be done to remove them?

Nothing.

When those who wish to be married refuse Holy Baptism, what is a priest to do?

This is a matter which the Church itself should be courageous enough to handle, and should not leave the burden upon the conscientious priest. Christians should not be unequally yoked together with unbelievers. Unbaptized people are not in the state to receive the grace of blessing in Holy Matrimony.

I should say a priest would be justified in marrying them as a civil officer by some other ceremony than that which the Church provides, just as he may bury an unbaptized adult by some other service than that in the Prayer Book.

But the General Convention should put a rubric in the Prayer Book to protect the priest.

Should the Burial Service be used in the case of a five-year-old unbaptized child?

Certainly. The Prayer Book service is forbidden only to unbaptized adults, that is, those who by their own refusal to accept the responsibilities of Christian baptism have no right to any claim upon Christian privilege. Why should they expect it?

Should a clergyman permit a denominational minister to assist in funerals or weddings, when requested by the family?

I see no harm, providing the priest takes the essential parts of the service. I know of no contagion by propinquity that would occur.

What right does an undertaker have to open the casket, to parade at the head of the funeral procession, to tell what a clergyman is to do?

In the Roman empire undertakers were forbidden to receive equestrian rank, or to enter the ranks of the nobility.. They are often asked to act as master of ceremonies at a funeral, but their powers are limited. In the church building they may not open caskets, nor assume the chief rank in the synagogue. They should be told what they may and may not do.

I once had an undertaker tell me, in answer to the question, "Why are you so anxious to open the casket?": "When I have done a good job I want people to see it." Manifestly the church is an improper place for exposing his wares.

May I introduce a word of caution to the clergy, especially in large cities? When an undertaker offers you a fee, accept it, and send a letter of thanks to the family, mentioning the amount, or returning it to them. There are undertakers who render a bill to the family for clerical services at one figure and tender the clergyman a much smaller amount.

Do not misunderstand me. There are many honest, courteous, Christian gentlemen in the undertaking business, and from them I have had most courteous treatment; but there are others, and there is no time when a family needs some one to protect them and theirs so much as when they fall into the hands of an unctious and unprincipled undertaker.

Those, also, who are chaplains at hospitals should always see that the casket of the friendless and the poor is accompanied to the grave. I once knew an undertaker who disposed of the body between the hospital and the place of interment to a medical college. In other words, there are undertakers who need careful watching.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

St. John's Church, Camden, Ark., was recently destroyed by fire, supposed to have been caused by lightning.

The National Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be held at Northfield, Mass., beginning on Wednesday, August 14th.

The inquisitive man in the back pew wants to know why we don't make all the pews, back pews, so that they would all be occupied at every service.—Texas Churchman.

"Your paper is a real friend and joy to a busy woman," writes Miss Dorothea Wood of Los Angeles, Cal. "It would be a real deprivation to me to be without it. I wish every Churchman and woman might read it."

A meeting of the West Tennessee Convocation was held at Dyersburg, in St. Mary's Church on Monday and Tuesday, July 8 and 9. The Rev. Dr. Buckner of Memphis gave the opening address.

At an outdoor service, held under the auspices of the deaf mute mission of Christ Church, Hartford, Conn., and conducted by the Rev. G. H. Hefflen, Mr. E. C. Luther, a lay reader and a deaf mute girl "sang" a flag hymn.

A union patriotic service was held at Memphis, Tenn., by the several parishes of the city in St. Mary's Cathedral on July 4th. The Rev. Dr. Beatty, Rector of Grace Church, preached the sermon.

The Journal of the Convention of the Diocese of New York for the year 1918 only contains 56 pages. The Journal for 1917 contained 275 pages. The diocese is to be commended for this reduction which was doubtless made as a war measure.

"I wonder why God made me," says Mrs. Faber in one of George McDonald's books, bitterly. "I'm sure I don't know what was the use of making me." "Perhaps not much yet," replied Dorothy; "but then He hasn't done with you yet. He is making you now, and you don't like it."

A sailor's concert was conducted at the Ship and Tent Club, Philadelphia, Sunday evening, July 7th, under the auspices of the Church of the Holy Apostle. The choir of L'Emmanuello Church and the Symphony Club choir sang the Italian national anthems and familiar airs.

Trinity Church, Swedesboro, N. J., one of the oldest edifices in the country, was struck by lightning Wednesday night, July 3rd. A section of the lofty steeple was shattered and the wood work set on fire. The prompt and efficient work of the local fire company prevented the destruction of the building.

The summer school for Church workers at Sewanee, Tenn., will open on the feast of the Transfiguration, Tuesday, August 6th, and continue until the 13th ult. A strong program, including a long list of well known clergymen and laymen, has been arranged for the conference. The keynote of the program will be "Leadership."

The Rev. H. E. Bush of St. Luke's Mission, Weiser, Idaho, writes, "It seems to me that THE WITNESS this past year has proven itself a wonder in religious journalism—better news, better instruction, better Churchmanship than any other Church paper. My dream includes a WITNESS in every home in this mission and I hope to see the realization of my dream before this year is out."

As a war measure the vestrymen of St. James' Church and the trustees of the Congregational Church at Cheboygan, Mich., have perfected plans for the services of one clergyman until the close of the war. Each Church will maintain its individual organization. The clergyman wall divide his time equally between the two Churches, conforming to the order of service in each Church and his salary will be shared equally.

Humanity has always found it easy to say at high noon, "There is no God"; but it has not found it so easy to say at midnight.

One can laugh at the idea of God, when God is smiling all around him. Godless men do not choose to live in Godless neighborhoods.

If atheists had no churches built by God-fearing people, they would build them themselves for the comfort of having them nearby.—Minneapolis Journal.

Rev. John E.. H. Simpson, Rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, last night tendered to the vestry of the parish his resignation, effective September 1. Rev. Mr. Simpson has been at the head of St. Mark's parish for almost 25 years. Ill health caused his determination to retire. He will take advantage of the Church Pension Fund and will live at his farm at Estacada with his wife and daughter. His son, John E. H. Simpson, Jr., is now in the United States Navy.

The vestry on accepting the resignation, elected Mr. Simpson rector emeritus.

"We all desire to be big men and women," says the Rev. Stanley S. Kilbourne, Rector of Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis, Minn. "No one really wishes to be petty. Christian men should be so big that they will not hold enmity and so strong that they will not desire revenge. These days life is pregnant with big occasions, fine ideals, lofty ambitions. There ought to be no room for malice, harsh criticism, unloving thoughts, personal grievances. Let's forget the unpleasant and harmful thing and remember the gracious and helpful thought, word and deed."

Miss Anna M. Spencer of Great Barrington, Mass., criticises in a friendly way recent references in THE WITNESS to "summer slackness in religious observance" which she says the laity stand rather goodnaturedly, and suggests, without finding fault with the clergy who are fortunate enough to take a vacation, that they should not, however, "turn, departing and scold the people who stay at home." The item in question referred, it would seem very properly, to slackness in religious observances rather than to the very desirable custom on the part of many of the clergy and laity of taking a needed vacation in the summer time.

St. Bartholomew's Mission, Philadelphia, had a flag raising on July 3. The pole was donated by Mr. Charles Norton and the national emblem and service flag was donated by the Ladies' Guild. The Rector, Rev. A. Coates, opened the exercises with prayer, after which the twenty-two names on the Honor Roll were read. The Rev. Nathanial Groton of Whitemarsh, Philadelphia, lately in the service at Camp Hancock, made the address. Then the flags were unfurled by one of our boys from the quartermaster department, Camp Meade. The flag opened out, and out flew a white dove and lots of small flags. Then a salute was fired by a squad from the Boy's Brigade for the one gold star on the Service flag, who was a member of their organization.

The Rev. Dr. Henry Mottet, Rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, New York City, announces: "All people, especially Army and Red Cross Nurses, Aviators, Soldiers, Sailors, Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A. workers, have a right to the use of this Father's house. For Baptism, Confirmation, the Holy Communion, Marriages, Burials, calls of the clergy in sorrow and in sickness, personal interviews with a clergyman—all people, though they are strangers to this Church, are ever and always welcome. Never any charges for the use of this Church in connection with marriages, burials, etc. Call at the Parish House or telephone any hour of the night. No one is ever kept waiting." The church is always open.

Miss Cordelia Veal, of Rome, Ga., writes: "It seems to me that the greatest fault we Episcopalians have is indifference to our Church work from a general point of view. There is a noticable ignorance too. If this could be overcome, it would mean much to our power and growth. This can be done by the wide distribution of a paper like THE WITNESS. In other words I consider THE WITNESS one of the best missionaries we have. Ignorance breeds indifference; it is from indifference that the Church is suffering. Our Bishop, we are told, has a plan by which we are to subscribe for THE WITNESS in clubs, but I can wait no longer for your paper. I must have it."

A notable service in commemoration of the fall of the Bastile and in honor of the French nation was held at St. James' Church, Chicago, on Sunday, July 14th. Monsieur Batholemy gave the principle address and the Rev. Dr. Watson, Rector emeritus of the American Church of the Holy Trinity, Paris, France, gave a short talk. Representatives from all the allied nations were in attendance and officers of the various armies carried their representative flags in the procession with the American flag, the State flag of Illinois, and the emblem of the Red Cross. The music included the singing of "The Marseilaise," "The Star Spangled Banner" and the new patriotic anthem, "America, the Promised Land." The Rev. Dr. Stone is the Rector of St. James' Church.

St. John's Parish, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, the mother parish of several surrounding, proposes to celebrate the Centennial of the first service held in Summit County, some time in September. These services were held in a log cabin in Stow township in this parish a year before the visits of the Rev. Roger Searle. The parish has one of the most beautiful structures in the diocese and several new memorials have lately been placed in the church to members of one of the pioneer families, consisting of a marble credence and a sanctuary lamp, a pair of seven branch evening lights and a festival chasable in silk and gold to be used on the great holy days. The parish has an active men's club of forty members who are fitting up a fine club room in the parish building.

Saturday afternoon and evening, July 13th, the Episcopal Young People's Association of Detroit and vicinity entertained over one hundred sailors and soldiers from the Army and Navy Club at a picnic party at Belle Isle. Supper was served, picnic style, at the lower end of the Island after which games were played and much friendly competition was shown by the boys in blue and khaki. The games were arranged by Messrs. James, of Royal Oak, and Spaulding, of St. Andrew's Church, Detroit. At sundown, just as the flag was being lowered all gathered around the flag Banner, after which a social sing was held, led by the boys from the Naval Training Station, River Rouge. Several of the boys of the motor transport division had just arrived in Detroit that morning from a southern camp and certainly appreciated the hospitality shown them, as did all the boys.

The Fourth of July was observed by St. Andrew's Church, Kokomo, Ind., the Rev. John F. Plummer Rector, with a special service of the Holy Communion at 7 a. m., when the Church was filled with devout factory workers. Special mention had been made that especially those who had friends or relatives in the war should attend. The response was most gratifying. St. Andrew's Church has thirty men represented on her Service Flag, and together with those who are relatives in England of not a few parishioners of this Church, they made the Eucharist of special significance. St. Andrew's Church has been the recipient of a number of handsome memorials within the past few months. At Easter, the following gifts were placed in the church: Brass eagle lectern, pair of large brass vases, white silk super-frontal for the Altar, white silk burse and veil, and Bible and Altar Book markers to match. Since then this year's confirmation class of twenty-one candidates presented as a thank offering a handsome brass receiving basin, and the Sanctuary Chapter has given a silver bread box.

Bishop Sumner, of Oregon, has completed arrangements for preliminary work among the soldiers and drafted men of the spruce sections of the diocese, of whom there are between three and four thousand in number in the various camps controlled by Colonel Disque. The work at Newport and Toledo has been placed in charge of the Rev. John D. Rice, City Missionary, and that at seaside and adjacent points is to be under the Rev. C. H. L. Chandler, Rector of St. Paul's, Oregon City. Mr. Rice is already on the ground to take up his work and Mr. Chandler will begin work on July 1st. These men are engaged in preparing the spruce required for the manufacturing of aeroplanes for the government and come from all parts of the United States. Thus far there has been no religious work of any kind done for the men. On request of the Bishop, the diocese has raised a fund sufficient for him to make a beginning in caring for the men, many of whom come from the best of homes. The Bishop will appreciate it very much if those who know of any man engaged in these camps, will forward the man's name and any other information obtainable, to his address, 548 19th street, Portland, Oregon.

Personals

The Rev. Clarence S. McLellan, Jr., has resigned as assistant to the Rev. Dr. Niver, Christ Church, Baltimore. His resignation will take effect September 1st.

The Rev. Alexander Miller has assumed charge of St. Thomas' Church, Louisville, Ky. His marriage to Miss Agnes Binford was solemnized July 3rd, at Fulton, Ky.

The Rev. A. E. H. Martyr, formerly Rector of Trinity Church, Lisbon, N. D., assumed his new duties as Archdeacon of the Missionary District of North Dakota, July 1st, with headquarters at Fargo.

The Rev. Charles Clingman, for the past five years Rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Dallas, Texas, has resigned to accept the rectorship of Trinity Church, Houston, Texas. His resignation will take effect Oct. 15th.

The Rev. Francis V. Baer has resigned the rectorship of Christ Church, Sag Harbor, Long Island. Sag Harbor is the oldest port in New York State, and has some beautiful colonial houses.

The Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tompkins of Philadelphia, preached a patriotic sermon in Trinity Church, Chambersburg, Pa., on the morning of July 4th, and in the evening gave a stirring address at a flag raising over the Canteen of the Red Cross building.

Bishop Fawcett, who has been ill since the first of June and confined to his bed most of the time, was recently taken to a Chicago hospital for expert treatment. He hopes to resume his work in the Diocese of Quincy early in the fall.

The Rev. John M. Hunter for the past six years Rector of St. Luke's Church, Marietta, O., has tendered his resignation to the vestry to take effect the first of August in order that he may accept the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, East Greenwich, R. I., a suburb of Providence.

The special preacher this year at Trinity Church, New York, at the Sunday morning services during August will be the Reverend Leicester C. Lewis of Chicago. Mr. Lewis is professor in the Western Theological Seminary. His sermons at Trinity Church during the summer season last year were much appreciated and aroused unusual interest.

The Rev. Joseph J. Dixon, Rector of Holy Trinity Church, Calaway, Neb., recently reported for overseas duty in the Y. M. C. A. war service, but owing to the fact that he is of draft age he could not be permitted to go to France, so returned home to wait until he is called to fill a vacancy in some cantonment of this country.

The Rev. Baker P. Lee, Rector of Christ Church, Los Angeles, Cal., has resigned in the hope of receiving a commission in the U. S. Army for which he has applied. He has had fifteen years military experience. He has been in charge of Christ Church for the past thirteen years, one of the largest parishes on the Pacific slope.

Bishop Lines of the Diocese of Newark, underwent a serious but very successful operation at the Post-Graduate Hospital, New York City, July 6th. Owing to the Bishop's illness, Bishop Coadjutor Stearly was called home from Geneva, N. Y., where he was directing the summer conference for Church workers.

The Rev. Charles L. Newbold has resigned as Rector of Christ Church, Manhasset, N. Y., Diocese of Long Island, of which he had been in charge since 1883. He is in his seventy-first year and feels that the work should be taken up by a younger man. His resignation will take effect November 1st, and he will then become rector emeritus.

A VISIT TO THE OLD COLLEGE

A Series of Articles by
GEORGE P. ATWATER
Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

V.

The informal gatherings of the Alumni of old Kenyon during commencement week are as pleasant as the formal occasions. We were gathered in the Bull's Eye, a room in old Kenyon, so called because it has a circular window, and is famous as the room of President Hayes when he was in college. '95 was speaking of the general development of Kenyon students and their place in the world of affairs.

"Do you realize," he said, "that Kenyon has had the distinction of sending two men to Oxford under the provisions of the Rhodes scholarship? Cecil Rhodes certainly had a vision. Not content with being the principal founder of the British South African empire, he made provision for the greatest scholarship foundation ever known. In order to bring to Oxford the most brilliant men of Anglo-Saxon blood, two scholarships were assigned to each State of the American Union and to each colony of the British empire. The income of each scholarship is $1,500 a year for three years, enough to live comfortably at Oxford during the University sessions and to provide for travel or study in vacation. The men are selected not only by reason of scholarship, but because of character and influence in college life. In 1910 the choice fell upon a Kenyon man, who went to Oxford and remained three years, and became president of the Oxford Union, the great University Debating Society, that has trained many an English cabinet minister. As no foreigner had ever in the history of the Union been elected to office in the Union, this honor gave proof of the especial character of the Kenyon scholar.

"In 1914 another Kenyon man was appointed to the Rhodes scholarship. After a short residence in Oxford, he enlisted in the British army, and died in the campaign in Egypt."

"I believe," said '99, "that the honor system at Kenyon has resulted in the development of character unknown when we were under the strict supervision of the faculty. All examinations and all regulations concerning good order and discipline are entrusted to honor committees, so that the students really live in a community which is self-governed. Cheating in examinations is unknown, and student opinion so strongly condemns such dishonesty that a man known to cheat would find it impossible to remain at the college. Certainly this system has developed itself and has developed a new type of college student. Under it, hazing has been absolutely abolished, and the upper classmen, instead of finding in the freshmen a group of men to embarrass and annoy, find in them a group of students to develop and to bring to maturity in college affairs."

"It has certainly been the case," said '95, "that great and good friends have arisen to assist Kenyon to maintain its place as a small college, and to perpetuate the ideals of classical education, as well as exact scientific and modern training. The gifts that have been made to the college in recent years are an evidence of the belief of many men of affairs that colleges that develop culture in its broadest form should be encouraged."

A visitor from a neighboring college, who was the most welcomed guest during the commencement exercises, had been listening with great interest to the discussion. He finally said: "I feel somewhat as a founder of a college must feel, because I was instrumental in securing a gift for my own college."

"Is it a story?" asked '95.

"It is the outline of one," replied the visitor.

"Let us have it, then," said '95.

"If it had not been for my bulldog it would never have happened at all," said the visitor. "We were great comrades, that dog and I. His name was Tobasco, so called because he made things warm for every living creature he came in contact with. He had cultivated a taste for these little toy dogs that sit in automobiles and fine carriages. He had bagged one or two, whose owners stated in no uncertain terms that Tobasco had a depraved taste and it must be cured. So I bought a steel chain with a good lock, and after that, whenever Tobasco and I went out for a walk, he went lock step with me. Fearing he might break away, I had a little tag made, which I fastened on the chain, giving merely the name, 'Tobasco', my address, and then, out of pure imbecility, 'Hilton, '98..

"Hilton was my college. Tobasco had not lived in its classic grove, nor terrified its venerable dormitory; but I had wished for a bulldog in college, so when I dreamed of days of long ago, spent in the joyous halls of Hilton, I dreamed 'Tobasco' into that rapsody. Hence the inscription.

"Our college had not been prospering up to four years ago. The reason was well known to all Hilton men. Two of the richest of Hilton's trustees and benefactors had quarreled. It was a trifling thing in itself, but fraught with serious consequences to Hilton. Old Johnson, '68, had been called upon to speak at an Alumni banquet, and had told a funny story at the expense of Smith, '67. It was something about Smith's having attended, when a freshman, a faculty meeting on a supposed invitation of the president, which was later found to have been written by a junior. Smith didn't like the story, but he told a stinging one on Johnson. The next day they didn't speak, each declaring to the president that it was humiliating to be held up to the laughter of the younger men.

"For a year those two chaps, who before had helped to make Hilton a second Oxford, never spoke a word to each other. Hilton languished. Several efforts were made by mutual friends in Cleveland, where both lived, to get Johnson and Smith together, but they failed. The sting had worn off, but each was too proud or too ashamed to take the first step toward reconciliation.

"This was the state of affairs when, about four years ago, I had occasion to go from Cleveland to Detroit on the night boat. As I stood near the gangplank, watching the incoming passengers, who should strike aboard but Smith. I stepped aside, as I did not care to speak to him in case he should recognize me as a Hilton man. He was carrying a suitcase, which he placed by a chair while he got his ticket. Without taking his case, he went down to the dining room. Hardly had he disappeared when across the gang-plank came Johnson. I was not especially surprised but somewhat amused to see the two old grads on the same boat. Johnson walked in serenely and, after looking around for a few moments, placed his suitcase right beside Smith's. I smiled to myself as I saw them there. Johnson went to the purser's window and began to negotiate for a state room. But everything was sold. As he stood there arguing with the purser, I happened to drop my hand into my overcoat pocket. It came in contact with Tobasco's chain. Like a flash I had a brilliant idea. Sneaking over to those suitcases I dropped into a chair, and with a few swift motions I passed the chain through the handles of the suitcases, snapped the lock and skipped out on deck. My action had not been noticed, so I stood in a secluded corner of the deck, and through the open door kept my eye on the situation.

"Luck was with me that night, boys. I saw Johnson talk with the purser for several minutes. I stepped nearer, and gathered from his gestures and the few words that I could hear that he would leave the boat, being unable to get a stateroom and unwilling to share one. He turned away from the window just as Smith emerged from the dining room. They fairly bumped into each other. I could see Smith's face. It had lighted up, and it seemed as if he was about to speak. But he did not, and neither did Johnson. Both turned toward their cases. That carried them, side by side, across the open space at the foot of the grand stairway. Together they stooped. Smith, with his left hand, seized his case, while Johnson seized his with his right. Together they stood upright, and with a swing started in opposite directions. Tobasco's chain did not yield. Both cases were jerked out of the hands of the men and on to the floor. Both turned with a sudden and surprised motion. I stepped in to see the finish. The men faced each other, the cases lying between them.

"'I beg your pardon,' said Johnson, icily, as if asking explanation.

"'I beg your pardon,' returned Smith.

"For a moment they glared and, perhaps not realizing what else to do, they reached again for those cases, which were lying like old chums at their feet. This time the true cause of the trouble was apparent. Tobasco's chain was discovered.

"The situation was so funny that the few loungers began to laugh. An Irish cabin patrolman stepped up.

"'How did that chain get there,' demanded Smith.

"The patrolman was silent, but grinning.

"'Did some one put that chain on those suitcases?'

"'Possibly, sor,' replied the patrolman. 'I never knew a chain to grow into leather like that.'

"Smith smiled a bit. 'What does that tag say?'

"'Tobasco-Hilton '98.'

"It was too much for them. Both laughed. Johnson broke the ice:

"'We seem to be attached to each other, Smith,' said he, holding out his hand.

"'By better chains than this, John,' replied Smith, taking his hand.

"That was the beginning of the end. Johnson stayed on board and shared Smith's room. The next morning I ventured to introduce myself as an old Hilton man. They didn't refer to the chain, neither did I. But they were so enthusiastic that they revealed that they were to build Hilton a new chemical laboratory and endow it. I got that news into the afternoon papers and had my salary raised. The story was too good to keep, and Hilton College rewarded me for its prosperity by allowing me to sit on the platform at the next commencement. That's all."

Bishop Reese Chairman War Commission Executive Committee

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Theodore Irving Reese, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, has been appointed Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Church War Commission, and a leave of absence for six months has ben granted the Bishop by the Standing Committee of the diocese. The Cincinnati Inquirer says: "Headquarters of Bishop Reese, who has been leader in every patriotic movement since the beginning of the war, and who introduced the custom of giving to the American flag equal prominence with the Cross itself in Churches, are to be in Wall street, New York."

Synod of Southwest Postponed

As President of the Synod of the Southwest, I announce the postponement to 1920 of the meeting of the Synod which was set for the coming October in Waco, Texas.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Bishop of Missouri.

Death of the Rev. David W. Bland

The Rev. David W. Bland died at his home in Camden, N. Y., July 10th, after a short illness. He was born in Georgetown, British Guiana, South America, in April, 1858. He was the son of an English army officer. While he was yet a youth his parents returned to England where he lived in Lancashire. He was educated in King's College, University of London, 1874-1879, and at London in 1884 he took orders in the Church of England. He was appointed chaplain to the French Panama Company in the diocese of the Falkland Islands, South America and remained there about a year. His health failed and he went to Jamaica, British West Indias, where for twelve years he was rector of a large church, Woburn Lawn. In 1902 he was appointed chaplain and inspector of laborers on the American Guayaquil and Quito Railroad. On the completion of that work in 1903 he was appointed by the Missionary Board of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America to do missionary work in Porto Rico among the Spanish. He remained there until 1910 when he removed to Guantanamo and Bolondrone, Cuba. Here he worked for five years and in January, 1915 he came to this state and located at Camden in Oneida county which had since been his home.

For nearly a year before going to Porto Rico he had been a resident of Camden and was rector of Trinity Church there. Since returning and locating in this county permanently, he has been engaged as teacher of the Romance languages in Utica and other places where his services were required. He was still a member of the diocese of Cuba.

A Clergyman's Experience at the Front

The Rev. Dr. Murray Bartlett, of the diocese of Los Angeles, who is engaged in Y. M. C. A. work on the Toul front, was recently cited for distinguished service. "There is no sacrifice of deprivation too great for us to make, when you think of those solemn-faced, cheerful-minded boys who stand guard all day and night over our comfort and liberty," writes Dr. Bartlett to his father-in-law. "It was hell every minute for twenty days. Our first station near Toul was a rest camp in comparison. We were under ground every minute except for a dash across the street twice a day for meals and a brief walk to our little cemetery at night to bury the dead. We were constantly under shell fire. We had to change our location once in one place and three times in the other. I shall never forget the horror of those walks across.

"Twenty days in the dark! The apple blossoms and the lilacs came and went, and I never knew it. When I got back to the sunlight the leaves were out; the trees were bare the last time I had seen them. I never knew the sweetness of the fresh air or the beauty of the flowers before. After this terrible time is over may they never be darkened and withered by the evils of war. Well, we're out now for a brief rest—and then back again until it's over: how many times I wonder, for me?"

Moving Pictures to Teach Temperance

"The Church Temperance Society of the Episcopal Church," says the Boston Transcript "announces a plan that assumes that a prohibition amendment to the Constitution, even if the amendment be ratified, will be of small avail unless backed by public opinion. The society also acts on the theory that the place to attack with an educational propaganda is the poor district, where drinking may be heaviest. Accordingly the society has opened in the Bowery, New York, a theatre with moving pictures, intended to educate men and women on the subject of temperance. Other theatres are projected for other cities, the aim being to make, through the Churches, a public sentiment that will demand the ratification of the amendment and then observance of the temperance law."

Three Military Orders

IN THE ASCENDING SCALE

Nothing can better illustrate and emphasize the difference in the standards and ideals of the armies at war than the words addressed to those armies by their respective leaders.

No great fighting force can be expected to rise above the standard set for it by its commanders.

The three following orders issued by the Kaiser, Lord Kitchener and General Pershing shed a bright light upon the kind of conduct that might be expected by the soldiers to whom they were addressed.

On August 19, 1914, the Kaiser issued the following order from his headquarters at Aix La Chapele:

"It is my royal and imperial command that you concentrate your energies, for the immediate present, upon one single purpose, and that is that you address all the skill and all the valor of my soldiers to exterminate first the treacherous English and walk over General French's contemptible little army."

That foe which he called "treacherous" and "contemptible" is still before him and has vigorously declined to be "walked over".

Lord Kitchener's order, issued about the same time, is too long to quote in full, but the following extracts will show the splendid standard set before the British soldiers, a standard to which they have scrupulously lived, in most cases:

"You are ordered abroad as a soldier of the king to help our French comrades against the invasion of a common enemy. It will be your duty not only to set an example of discipline and perfect steadiness under fire, but also to maintain the most friendly relations with those whom you are helping in this struggle.

"Be invariably courteous, considerate and kind. Never do anything likely to injure or destroy property, and always look upon looting as a disgraceful act.

"Your duty cannot be done unless your health is sound. So keep constantly on your guard against excesses. In this new experience you may find temptation both in wine and women. You must entirely resist both temptations, and while treating all women with perfect courtesy, you should avoid any intimacy.

"Do your duty bravely, fear God, honor the king.

"KITCHENER, "Field Marshal."

Noble and inspiring as are these words from the great leader who has since gone to a watery grave, yet the general order issued by General Pershing transcends it both in loftiness of thought and concise manliness. Indeed, for power of expression, this order of our commanding general in the field seems to us to be a masterpiece of English.

Listen to this leader speaking to his soldiers:

"Hardship will be you lot, but trust in God will be your comfort; temptation will befall you, but the teachings of our Saviour will give you strength.

"Let your valor as a soldier and your conduct as a man be an inspiration to your comrades and an honor to your country.

"J. J. PERSHING."

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

The Transfiguration of Christ August Sixth

THE COLLECT

O God, who on the mount didst reveal to chosen witnesses thine only-begotten Son wonderfully transfigured, in raiment white and glistering; Mercifully grant that we, being delivered from the disquietude of this world, may be permitted to behold the King in his beauty, who with thee, O Father, and thee, O Holy Ghost, liveth and reigneth, one God, world without end. Amen.

One mission of the Church is to arouse in men a noble discontent—to hold ever before men the coming of a golden age, for which they must prepare. The proper celebration of this feast day is a contribution toward this end. "Here we have no continuing city"; "Change and decay in all around I see". "Oppression, lust and crime" find frequent outlet in every part of this old earth, so that the man who can only see the things that are seen becomes in time either a shallow optimist or a cynic and pessimist. "Where there is no vision, the people perish", and the vision must be indestructible to give men courage, hope and patience. It is all very well to begin the atmosphere of heaven on earth, but the gnawing tooth of time teaches the most resolute of us that such a heaven lacks that continuance, perfection and beauty which the reality demands.

Chosen witnesses there must be to keep this Divine discontent aflame. Chosen witnesses there must be who will be understood by those to whom they go with their messages of hope, and cheer, and patience. In fulfilling this part of her mission, the Church through the generations sets her people to climbing. All disciples of Jesus must climb the mount of vision. Every one will not get to the top; but every one must try. God will choose His witnesses for wonderful visions. Man cannot do this—he picks out his seers and calls them by their names; but God may reverse his judgment by making the last first and the first last. Be sure of this, however, that every generation has its chosen witnesses. And be sure of this, too, that our business as Christians is to get up into the high mountains. That is what church-going means—hill climbing! And in church-going Jesus has been merciful to us, too. He has given us the chance to behold Him in His beauty afar off—in the Altar service of His own ordaining. There men are given a chance to open their eyes, and see visions, and dream dreams. How much the Holy Communion will mean to us if we will recognize it as an opportunity for Christ to reveal His mission for us to us!

In this prayer we ask God to deliver us from the disquietude of this world. Church-going should be a means to this end. It is the business of minister, and choir, and sexton, and ushers, and all who serve in the courts of the house of the Lord to make church-going time an opportunity to be delivered from the disquietude of this world.

Here is another reason for the Church's ardent advent into the dark that is non-Christian, or partly Christian, places of the earth, namely, that all men may learn not to be content with answering the question, "What shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed"? which answers constitute most of the disquietude of this world, but that man shall have real opportunities to learn how to transfigure the commonplace and the ordinary acts of life into sources of inspirational living.

We Christians should aim to make living a beautiful thing—not a pretty thing, but a beautiful thing. And that is possible for those whose hope and ambition are being fired by visions of the joy that is set before us. The earthly life of Jesus Christ was beautiful because He tied up the temporal with the eternal. He made people's bodies temples for forgiven souls. He tied ambition to service, and put a child's moral welfare before men as the most sacred thing in all earthly life, because of its potential possibilities. He opened inner as well as outer ears, and made sight subservient to vision. He put spirit above matter: but He did not scorn, condemn, nor neglect or abuse the things of the flesh. He treated life, all of life, reverently, because He knew its ultimate destination.

When we pray to be delivered from the disquietude of this world, let us remember that we cannot be delivered from anything simply by running away from it. Not only must we flee from evil, but we must do the thing that is right. The world is disquieted because it follows not the plan of Jesus Christ. The Christian can never be delivered from that disquietude unless he continually remembers that he is to be in the world, but not of it, and that his contacts are to be for good. Here is another reason why a man goes to church, that he may worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness, for if a man's contacts be holy, his life will be a transfiguring life, and his visions will be very manifest in his words and deeds. Restless Christians are those who are not at peace with God and man. There is still something lacking, so the soul moves hither and yon, and in its goings helps to contribute to the disquietude of the world rather than to the peace of God. If you are disquieted within you, put your trust in God; go to the sanctuary, ask the Christ to show Himself and yourself, and then help you make yourself like His self—and if you are in earnest He will do it, and it will be well with your soul.

THE EPISTLE

I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me. Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were wth him in the holy mount.—II St. Peter i:13.

There are effective and ineffective ways of stirring people up. Evidently the inspired way is "by putting you in remembrance". "Remember" was the fourth word from Sinai. "Son, remember," said Jesus in the story of the soul in torment. St. Peter remembered the word of Jesus and wept. "The Holy Ghost," says Jesus, "will teach you and bring all things to your remembrance." "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus," said St. Paul.

The best way to remember is to "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest".. The sign of the cross, the crucifix itself, are aids to remembrance. The Bible is the God-given treasury of the promises of rewards and warnings, by which, if we remember, we shall be effectually stirred up. The Church exists to sanctify and bless and sustain those wills which memory stirs to action. Surely the mission of the missionaries at the Altar and in the pew is to stir up by way of remembrance a Divine discontent with things below till they become more and more like the patterns of things shown us in the mount.

"Shortly I must put off this my tabernacle." St. Peter wanted to shrine the glorified life of Jesus on the mountain side in a little booth or tabernacle. The Lord showed St. Peter that all these earthly tabernacles had on them every mark of the shortness and uncertainty of human life, thus teaching the saint that no matter how much one wanted to keep heaven on earth, such a condition was impossible until that time shall come when it can be said "all things are become new". To view the body as a tabernacle, or a lodging place, for the life of Jesus, through the Holy Ghost, is one of the great reasons for sending the Church into what are called "the mission fields" of the world. Too many nations and individuals still contemn and mistreat the body, or make the opposite mistake, and cherish the body as though it was the most valuable part of man. When you support the mission work of the Church you are helping spread the idea that man's body is a valuable piece of human furniture, and must be treated with every possible care and respect because of the soul which it enshrines, but that after all we must remember that the body is only a tabernacle, an aggregation of salt, water and phosphates, which many foolish people over-indulge and pet and slave for, only to smother and seal it in steel and concrete and weigh it down under tons of granite when the vital spark has fled.

"Eye witnesses of His majesty." The Feast of the Transfiguration is a great help to those who believe that Jesus is the Son of God and Mary. To have the testimony of men like St. Peter and St. John to this wonderful transaction is to buoy up one's faith and steady one's resolves. As He prayed, the fashion of His countenance was altered." The Divine life of Jesus became manifest as He was engaged in that act which is so necessary for all of Christ's followers. Talking face to face with Jesus, one's face does reflect His glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. Struggling, toiling, sweating up the mountain sides of Christian endeavor, he who keeps close to the teaching and leading of his Guide becomes convinced that Jesus is indeed "God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father, by whom all things were made". And in the strength of that conviction he longs to do his appointed tasks and reach his promised home. He learns the lesson of detachment, and the lesson of "keeping on keeping on", which is just the American way of saying "final perseverance". He who studies the revelations of God made by Jesus, through His Book and His Church, learns to say without affectation, "Lord, it is good for us to be here".

"With Him in the holy mount." There are mountains and mountains. The spirit of evil can help us climb high mountains, and show us "all the kingdoms of the world and all the glory of them". They are sights that dazzle. "Success" is one of those high mountains. In the normal young man the spirit of adventure is a basic thing. To succeed, and to have the glory of succeeding, is one of the dreams of youth. Happy is the man or woman who can look back from his or her career with a clear eye and a happy, whole-hearted laugh! Such people have had the Christ with them, you may be sure of that; otherwise, there would be a cloud in the eye, a forced tone in the laugh, an uneasy attitude in repose. "Keep climbing," says the Christ, "but follow Me, even when you are so tired of climbing that you are heavy with sleep." If a man can and will—and he can if he will—keep the life and teachings of Christ ahead of him in his daily life, he will always be on a holy mount. If he does not, whatever else he has done, he hasn't done this: he has not learned what constitutes happiness and what "success" really means.

THE GOSPEL

And it came to pass about an eight days after these sayings, he took Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray. And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering. And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias: who appeared in glory and spake of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem. But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him. And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing what he said. While he thus spake, there came a cloud, and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud. And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him. And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone. And they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.—St. Luke ix:28.

Above all things else, learn this, that when you want to be with Christ, and desire to feel His presence, you must pray. None of us can hope for the vision that will transform us until we get down on our knees, kneeling not in terror, or remorse, or fear, but in penitence, and thankful love, and hope, and evident sincerity. The Transfiguration Festival is a call to prayer—prayer with Jesus as well as to Jesus. "They took notice of them that they had been with Jesus." Let us go to school again. Let us sit at the Master's feet and learn of Him. "Lord, teach us to pray." That missionary society is most successful which plans as carefully and as thoroughly for the praying part of its winter's program as it does for its study and its boxes and its contributions. Such an organization will transfigure the lives and faces and aspirations of an entire parish. A transfigured parish is a warm, pulsing, praying, human parish, vibrant with the power of the Holy Ghost. Jesus never prayed just to pass away the time. In His prayers the law and the prophets entered to help with a plan.

"Spake of His decease (or exodus) which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." Why are so many missionary meetings such sleepy things? Because the prayers are so perfunctory, so mechanical, so formal, so heartless. Perfect in reverent utterance they may be—beautiful as ice crystals, and just as cold. You know the way of the average missionary meeting, and you know how half-heartedly the prayers are said and the songs are sung. There is no real quickening of interest until some one's tongue is loosed by a "vital topic", so called, or the repast is spread, or the easiest way to get up the apportionment is broached. Few women take the veil for missions as they take the veil for Red Cross. Few vestries plan for mission funds as they plan for Red Cross or Y. M. C. A. drives. Yet it is the message of the missionary that called both these great movements into being, and sustains them in their careers.

"There came a cloud and overshadowed them." Thank God for the clouds and the shadows of life. Many a man never has been inspired to act until he has passed through the cloud and through the sea, and found out the lessons God wanted him to know. The times that try men's souls in the sense of testing them are not the hard times, but the good times. The times that test a congregation's earnestness are not the times of popular Sunday services and sermons, but the times of the Eucharists, and the prayer meetings on the week days—when prayer and prayer only is the business of the hour. Most of us want the transfiguration; many of us long for the vision and the beauty of true holiness. Why are they so far off? Because so many of us have been stamping all our actions with the hall-mark of the temporal, instead of the eternal. Our primary talk is of bullocks, rather than life; of the means, rather than of the end. Many Auxiliary and missionary leaders are discouraged, perplexed, coufounded; many men and women are tempted to cease mission work for war work; many leaders are heavy with sleep, caused by the exhaustion of trying to measure up spiritual activity in terms of physical powers. The call of the Feast of the Transfiguration is a call to the work of prayer, the business of prayer. Tables must be served, but the principal business of a missionary parish—and all Churches are missionary parishes in the sight of God—is to give themselves unto prayer and the ministry of the Word.

"He went up into a mountain to pray." Let us go to the school of prayer with Christ. Let us realize that going to that school involves exertion and weariness; let us learn that our visions are not to result in the erection of the temporal booths of illy considered emotion, but in the ability to witness to the power and Divinity of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. It is a great task, this task of prayer. It is a transfiguring, transforming task. This feast day is a call to us to gird up our loins and climb. Will you heed it this year, my friend?

JOY

Our highest right is the right of joy. Without it we lose our right to ourselves. Without joy there can be no deep knowledge of self, no large self-mastery, no generous and resonant action. But our right to joy is not assured to us until we make the Kingdom of God our law and, sustained by a mighty faith in God and man, become creators of good.—The Atoning Life.

Many men fail to realize that joy is distinctly moral. It is the fruit of the spiritual life. We have no more right to pray for joy, if we are not doing the things that Jesus said would bring it, than we have to ask interest in a savings bank in which we have never deposited money. Joy does not happen. It is a flower that springs from roots. It is the inevitable result of certain lines followed and laws obeyed, and so a matter of character. The Christian life that is joyless is a disgrace to God and a disgrace to itself.—Maltbie Babcock.

THESE THINGS HAVE I SPOKEN UNTO YOU THAT MY JOY MIGHT REMAIN IN YOU AND THAT YOUR JOY MIGHT BE FULL.

PRAYERS

O Lord, inspirer of the world's joy, bearer of the world's pain, make us glad that we are men and that we have inherited the world's burdens. Deliver us from the luxury of cheap melancholy, and at the heart of all our trouble and sorrow, let unconquerable gladness dwell, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Grant me, O Lord, the royalty of inward happiness and the serenity which comes from living close to Thee. Daily renew in me the sense of joy, fill every corner of my heart with light and life, that I may be a diffuser of life and meet all ills and troubles with gallant high-hearted happiness, giving Thee thanks always for all things. Amen.

O Christ, Thou Eternal Well Spring of Life, help us to keep our lives so close to Thee that the spirit of joy may be overflowing in our souls, to refresh and uplift all who are weary and overburdened. Amen.

Sanctuary of Prayer

I'll strive to do my best for Thee, dear Lord,
Although oft' times, I know my thoughts from Thee will stray,
Though by my acts, and words, I often seem to be,
So very, very, far away from Thee.
I know, Thou'll judge me Lord, not as I am,
But, as down in my heart I wish, and try to be
O! gracious Lord, more like unto Thee.
Then give me strength from time to time, to say,
What wil't Thou have me do, dear Lord,
For Thee to-day?

SUNSHINE AFTER STORM

From the close of "Apparent Failure."
By Robert Browning (1863)

Its' wiser being good than bad;
It's safer being meek than fierce:
It's fitter being sane than mad.
My own hope is, a sun will pierce
The thickest cloud earth ever stretched;
That after Last, returns the First,
Though a wide compass round be fetched:
That what began best, can't end worst,
Nor what God blessed once, prove accurst.

The Missionary Conference

I have just put in a week at a Missionary Conference, in Estes Park, similar to those at Silver Bay and Lake Geneva, and have learned many things, while teaching a few.

These Conferences are the successors of the old-fashioned camp meetings, combined with the program of the Chautauqua Assembly, and are in many ways a great improvement on both, for they form a real commission on faith and order, not a commission arbitrarily appointed for the purpose of bringing about a program for Church unity so much as a place where the sacramentarian and the evangelical can get together, and the Lord is the Maker of them all.

It is a place where we can study one another's program and, as Bishop Anderson has so admirably suggested, each one bring that which he has to give to the common fund of religious experience, so that the problem of Church unity can be studied on the basis of a maximum of our faith, rather than a minimum thereof.

The Conference admits of the meeting of denominational groups, as well as the common assembly of these units in general lectures, in which all shades of religious beliefs are blended.

Besides this is the more valuable social feature, that in the recreational and social program there is a mingling of all groups in fraternal intercourse, which tends to break down the barriers of misunderstanding that exist between them.

The common basis of the meeting lies in the recognition that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of mankind, and that all baptized Christians have a common fellowship in Him. There is very little articulation of theological definition, and such was the case in the life of the primitive Church.

It is more a fraternal gathering of those who love Christ, rather than an ecclesiastical assembly for the purpose of analyzing doctrines, and as such forms the basis of an approachment between Christians. It commits one to no policy, and yet gives to each one a chance to study all policies.

I have long since ceased to believe that the Church suffers by comparison with any religious body in the land.

The difficulty lies in getting a sufficient number of Church people to attend to form a representative unit for purposes of comparison. I wish, however, to say that Churchmen are most welcome to these assemblies, and that their convictions are respected and every courtesy is shown to them.

And this brings me to an observation upon the subject of Church unity. I am convinced that Christians today are separated more because of inherited prejudices than because of the deep convictions which caused their forefathers to separate from one another.

We are all earnestly striving to fight the world, the flesh and the devil, but we are confronted with the same problem that the allies are in fighting Austria, Turkey and Prussia—we want to fight under our ancestral banners and under our own leaders. We are not willing to be billeted in the same regiment with the soldiers and officers of another nationality. We love our own leaders, and our own constitution, and our own shibboleths.

Some of us have deep convictions that we cannot abandon, but others, who have no deep convictions, are all the more unable to understand why convictions are not the same as preferences.

It would seem, therefore, as though our quadrilateral needs to be restated in terms that do not savor so much of past controversy. It is all right to put forth the claims of the Creeds, the Sacraments, the historic Ministry and the Holy Scriptures; but these are large words which really contain very simple ideas. The real controversy is, first of all, in the Church, as in the State, one between authority and socialism, or between constitutional authority and no authority. This is bound to divide Christendom into two irreconcilable camps; nor can one who believes in a continuous authority as essential to the existence of the Church find any common ground upon which to plan with the man who believes that religious matters are to be decided by the will of the majority.

The idea that God speaks to His people through the Church is apparently irreconcilable with the idea that God speaks to His Church through the will of the majority.

But there are many Christians who believe in the Church as the vehicle of Divine grace, who yet are unable to define exactly what they mean by the Church.

Any platform of reconciliation must avoid phrases that have antagonized people in the past, and emphasize the need of a common brotherhood, having a common faith, and using the instruments which Christ ordained. The need of such a common basis is going to be realized after the war, if it is not realized now, or the forces of the ecclesiastical Bolshevki will attack the loosely federated organizations whose weakness consists in their distrust of one another.

One is saddened by the fact that a faith in the ministry and sacraments which cannot be abandoned precludes us from offering to lead in the idea of federation, but such is the case.

The peril of the future seems to lie in the substituting for the witnessing function of the faith, once for all delivered to the saints, a popular brotherhood, in which the voice of popular majorities shall determine what Christ taught and commanded.

Such an idea is intolerable. But the Church can state its faith wisely, and show its sympathy kindly, and treat every one courteously, without abandoning the things for which it stands, and the things for which Christendom, or a large part of it, is really hungering, but which it is prevented from accepting because of the inarticulate character of its needs.

Summer Conference at Hobart College Geneva, N. Y.

In spite of increased railroad fares and the conflict of duties rising from war service, the enrollment at the Conference of the Second Province at Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., was two hundred and thirtythree. Although this number was not quite as large as last year, it was very noticeable that more of the delegates arrived on the first night and stayed to the end of the Conference than ever before. In other words, a greater spirit of seriousness animated the students than in other years; there was little visiting from class to class; and those enrolled were more ready than formerly to take the examination at the end of the courses. There was plenty of fun too. An unusually active recreation committee saw to that. There were walks—a bird walk and a star walk—under the guidance of the college professors. There was a field day on the Fourth of July, and a tea at the country club on Saturday afternoon, besides other events that sent "Jack" back to his work better for the play he had taken.

The most picturesque feature of the Conference, and that which drew outsiders by the automobile load, was the mystery play given out of doors under the great trees on Wm. Smith campus. "The Great Trail," an Indian mystery play written by Mrs. Henry L. Hobart five years ago and presented by various groups of young people all over the country since then, was chosen for the year's Conference play. The same spirit of deep reverence and desire to teach the Church's lessons, marked the sixty players who took part in the performance. This particular mystery play is especially well adapted to out of door production. There are many who feel that the mystery play is the outstanding event on the Conference program and that which seems to sum all the other lessons and impressions of the ten days.

The classes were as usual interesting and well attended. Miss Grace Lindley gave a preparation course for The Advent Call.. Dr. Gray and Mrs. Brewster taught Bishop Burleson's new book for seniors and intermediates. For the junior course Dr. Gray had a real clinic, eight or ten little boys and girls to whom the members of his class told the stories in Miss Giles' book. In Social Service there were more students enrolled than ever before. Canon Elmendorf had a course on War Time Ministries of the Church. Mr. Crouch one on After War Problems and Dr. Taylor one on the Spiritual Note in Social Service. Miss Withers, Dr. Boynton and Dr. Bradner taught the course in Religious education.

A special feature was the course for the Daughters of the King and the Girl's Friendly Society taught by Dr. Ferris of Rochester. There was a Daughters of the King day, and a Girl's Friendly Society day with conference led by the Rev. Frank Nelson of Cincinnati.

Bishop Stearly, President of the Conference, was again in charge of Sunset Services and prached daily. The high water mark of the Conference was of course the Corporate Communion on Sunday morning and the preparation for it the evening before.

The same officers were re-elected for 1919 with the exception that the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin was elected treasurer and Mr. Kingman N. Robins chairman of the Finance Committee, which was merely an exchange on their part of the offices they held last year. The report of the Finance Committee showed that three dioceses in the Province had paid or overpaid their share of the Conference expenses, namely Albany, Newark and Western New York.

School for Chaplains and Approved Chaplain Candidates

At the present session of the Chaplains' Training School for Chaplains, at Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., there are 19 clergymen of the Episcopal Church in the student body. The attendance of the school is 220.

The men are enthusiastic about the excellent training they are receiving. When the candidates finish the course they will be familiar enough with military drill to march in formations of troops, and will know what soldiers do on the drill field.

The instruction in military law is so thorough that the graduates of the school will have knowledge which will enable them to give sound military advice to soldiers in difficulty, and in special cases to act as counsel for the defense for soldiers on trial before courts martial.

All members of the training school are required to preach before the faculty and student body. The candidates are preaching earnestly, and show promise of great usefulness as preachers to soldiers.

The candidates feel a gratitude for the thoroughness and comprehensiveness of the course of study. The present session of the school will end about August 15.

MISSIONARY NOTES AND ITEMS OF INTEREST

By G. W. J.

Sunday, July 21st, constituted the third Independence Day of the month: July 4th, our own; July 14th, France, and July 21st, Belgium. The Boston Herald, in an editorial, says: "It was on July 27, 1831, that Prince Leopold acceded to the throne to which the Belgian Congress had elected him a few weeks earlier. Before that time Belgium had been the pawn and plaything of nations from the time when Caesar overran it, not without difficulty, with his legions.

After the Romans, the Franks and then the Spaniards made Belgium a province for centuries. It was not a willing subject nation, and many were the wars and the struggles toward independence. After the peace of Utrecht in 1713 there came an unhappy century, when the Belgians had to own the Austrians as their masters. Toward the end of the century, the spirit of freedom that was blazing in America and France threw its light into Belgium. The people refused to pay taxes, attacked the Austrians, and in 1787 even proclaimed a republic. Then came a period when Belgium was a part of turbulent France, only to be joined a few years later in the unnatural alliance with Holland, from which it persistently rebelled. Finally Belgium made the Dutch glad to dissolve the partnership, and the other nations recognized the independence that it declared in 1830, and maintained when Prince Leopold, who proved a wise ruler, took the helm in 1831. It has been a story of struggling for freedom against odds for all the long centuries since Caesar said, 'Of these, the bravest are the Belgians.' All the world honored the compact of 1831, by which the powers guaranteed Belgian independence—until Germany decided, in 1914, that the compact was a scrap of paper. Its independence day that is surely to come will mean far more than July 21, just past, or any of its other festivals has meant to it."

On January 17th our first missionaries to the Dominican Republic, the Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Wyllie, arrived in the city of Santo Domingo. On the 19th of June Mrs. Wyllie writes of their first five months:

"Our initiation into this 100 or more years behind the time country was an experience not soon to be forgotten. Everywhere was a sea of black faces. The jabbering of Spanish at a terrible rate, to one not comprehending it, was bewildering. The primitive country and manners of the natives seemed so unreal, one felt that by rubbing the eyes one might awaken from a dream. The stern reality of things confronts one everywhere. The nakedness and ignorance of many of the natives, and especially of the country folk, are astonishing. One almost forgets the beauty of land and sea coast, mountains and valleys, through the great crying need of missions and schools. Truly a great opportunity for the Church is near at hand, and a country ready and eager for instruction.

"Looking around, there seemed so much to do that effort seemed impossible. There is no Protestant Church building in the city. However, Mr. Wyllie found a number of Americans and English-speaking whites, and since our first Sunday we have held regular services at 7 and 10 a. m, with an attendance of from 10 to 40 persons.

A Guild, called the Epiphany Guild, has been organized and has about 25 members. Besides sewing and taking orders for home-made things, $175 has been raised by private subscription, and with this a piano for Church services has been ordered from the States. On July 1st a gift shop will be opened, whose proceeds are to be kept for a church building fund. A Junior Auxiliary has been formed. It has eight members, and during Lent they prepared to give "The Children's Crusade."

"There were 24 children taking part in this, and it was given in Easter week as an out-door pageant. It was a great success and netted us $21, the first gift to the Board of Missions from our children. There is a small branch of the Woman's Auxiliary—only five members; but as time goes on interest and membership may increase.

Mr. Wyllie has conducted a study class on missions. Mrs. Colinore has been asked to send 50 United Thank Offering boxes, in the hope that they may soon be in all the homes of the congregation. A missionary quilt is being planned, and perhaps it may be exhibited in Detroit next year, as also some of the native articles. The Juniors are already collecting photographs of the island for an album, which would be interesting, too.

"Besides the Auxiliary, there is also a probationary class of the Daughters of the King.

"The Red Cross drive given here recently kept many of the workers busy in other than Church circles, but now that is over, we are getting back to stady work.

"Miss McCullough was with us three months, teaching, and we realize more than ever the need of two teachers for fall work. There were 21 pupils in the Church, and we have the promise of at least six more for September, if the Board of Missions can supply the teachers. Mr. Wyllie has already purchased 25 desks, and many other things will be needed for equipment. Then there are the colored people. They need a teacher speaking Spanish, who could instruct in English. An industrial school would be a wonderful thing here. But, alas! why go on wishing for, I suppose, more than we can expect in many years to come! Both Mr. Wyllie and I are working very hard, and in many ways we see wonderful results, but we must have financial help from the Board of Missions to do the really great things so much needed.

At San Isidro there is a flourishing little colored mission, at which Mr. Wyllie has regular services twice a month. Later I hope to make a trip there to organize the women for work.

On Sunday, June 23rd, Mr. Wyllie will consecrate the Protestant cemetery there, and he has made arrangements to bury the dead in future in a decent Christian manner. He is constantly searching out new missions and hunting up Church people, many of whom have not received the Holy Communion for from 10 to 15 years. The urgency of this new work is apparent, for no less than four evangelists are touring the country since we came. We are first on the field, and we should try to keep first."

Vicar of Historic Chapel Retires

Historic St. Paul's Chapel, in downtown New York, attended by President Washington and Governor Clinton in their day, is to change its Vicar on Oct. 1, says the New York Times. The long-time Vicar, the Rev. W. Montague Geer, retires, after 24 years of service. He is a Vicar, and not a Rector, and retires on a substantial pension as Vicar Emeritus, because St. Paul's is a chapel of Trinity Parish, whose Rector is the Rev. William T. Manning. When St. Paul's was built it was surrounded by residences of rich folks, and it, rather than Trinity Church, at the head of Wall Street, was the place of worship of the officials of the English city. For that reason came later its standing in an American city, and its pews occupied by a President of the United States.

Far down in lower Broadway, St. Paul's, under Vicar Geer, has come to serve more people each year than ever it did when president and governor sat in its pews, and residences surrounded it. The Vicar who now retires solved the problem of staying rather than of moving away. He inaugurated not one noonday service on week days, but two, 12 and 1 o'clock, the preachers preaching their sermons twice, and accommodating two luncheon hours, instead of one. He introduced great musical festivals at Christmas, Easter and Fourth of July, and some eight other seasons, always religious and patriotic, and the numbers attending were limited only by the capacity of the edifice. He started a lunch club near by, and encouraged men and women to sit in the shade of the tombstones and rest. Without invitations, they went into the chapel to pray when there were no services in progress. By these and similar methods, occupants of these pews surpassed almost every church in the country in numbers.

"There is a practice at old St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Church, Boston, says the Transcript of that city, of ringing the tower bell during the passage of 'selected men' on the way to the camp." The Rev. William Montague Geer, the vicar, more than once has taken occasion to speak a few words to these men, cheering them on their way and informing them the bell was being rung in their honor.

Personals

Rev. George E. Young took charge of the parish of St. Matthew and St. George, Indianapolis, Ind., on July 15.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Cameron Mann, Bishop of Southern Florida, is spending several weeks in the north.

Mr. Marshall De Lancey Haywood, a prominent Churchman of the Diocese of North Carolina, has been appointed Supreme Court Marshal and Librarian of his state.

The Rev. Joseph T. Ware, vicar of the Chapel of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Andrew's Church, Birmingham, Ala.

The Rev. Warren W. Way, Rector of St. Luke's Parish, Salisbury, N. C., has accepted his election as rector of St. Mary's Diocesan School for Girls, Raleigh, N. C. He succeeds the Rev. Dr. George W. Lay.

The Rev. Walter S. Bentley, formerly rector of the Church of the Ascension, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Secretary of the Actors' Church Alliance which he founded, is in charge of Christ Church, Little Rock, Ark., during the summer.

Miss Agnes Hart, daughter of Dean Hart of St. John's Cathedral, Denver, Col., has accepted an appointment for canteen work in France, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. The Denver Times says Miss Hart is a talented woman, was educated abroad, speaks both French and German fluently and is a noted philanthropist and charity worker in her home city.

The Rev. James F. Plummer, Dean of the Convocation of Mobile, Ala., has resigned the rectorship of All Saint's Church Mobile, in order to take active charge in the missionary work at the Convocation. Existing missionary points are without ministers and war conditions make it unusually difficult to supply them. The ship yards that have come to Mobile are bringing thousands of new population that must be cared for. The Rev. Mr. Plummer will serve All Saints' Church as priest-in-charge until his successor is chosen.

Religion and Patriotism—A Cross and Flag Rite

The N. J. Diocesan News publishes a Cross and Flag ceremony formulated by the Rev. Geo. Edw. Faber, of Clarksboro, which has been found useful and effective in the Sunday School and in religious services wherever tried. It is the author's hope that it may be of real service in its suggestiveness to many in increasing reverence for the Cross and love for the Flag. It has been in use at St. Peter's Church Sunday School for the past year.

Rite of the Cross and the Flag

(Appended to Creed—a cross and a flag in view) All say: THE CREED.

All "Reverence" the Cross—then say:

As a Christian, baptised, I vow allegiance to the Kingdom of God and the Cross of Christ, and to be His faithful soldier and servant unto my life's end. Amen.

(Organ strikes first note of Stainer's tune "Cross of Jesus"—then) Sing:

In the Cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
Gathers round its head sublime.
All the light of sacred story
—Amen.

All together give Boy Scout signal to the flag, and say: "I pledge allegiance to my Flag and to Country for which it stands, one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

..Sing: (the stanza) ....

Our fathers' God to Thee, etc..Amen.

[This outline is printed on a card in two colors with Cross and Flag and can be furnished in quantities for One Dollar a hundred. Address THE WITNESS, Hobart, Indiana.]

Does Not Believe in Taking a Vacation

The summer is no time for any rector to take a vacation, according to the Rev. Thomas J. Lacey, Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Brookklyn, N. Y., says the Boston Transcript. "Vacation is not uppermost in our minds," says Mr. Lacey in his parish paper. "War takes no vacation. Submarine attacks do not lessen. Our boys do not leave the trenches, posting notices that services will be resumed in the fall. The devil manages to keep busy in spite of the hot weather. He is used to heat."

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

Dr. Richard C. Perkins, a direct descendant of the Rev. Alexander Whittaker one of the first missionaries of the Church, coming to American from England, died at his home near Lynnhaven, Princess Anne county, Virginia, aged 95 years, on July 13th.

The drawing of the new plans for the new St. Paul's Church, Canton, O., has been postponed and the funds contributed have been used to purchase Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps. The Church will not be erected until after the war.

Mr. J. Reifsnider, a brother of the Rev. Dr. C. S. Reifsnider, President of St. Paul's College, Tokyo, Japan, recently started out to raise $25,000 in Tokyo for the American Red Cross and in one day was pledged $85,000 by Japanese.

Bishop Restarick telegraphs the Board of Missions that Iolani School at Honolulu needs quickly three additional men teachers. They should be unmarried and not subject to the conscriptive service law. They should be college graduates preferably, and at least graduates of high and normal schools of excellent standing.

Dr. Joseph Henry Gilmore, author of the hymn, "He Leadeth Me", died in Rochester, N. Y., on July 23rd. He was professor of English at Rochester University from 1867 until 1908, when he retired. He was the author of several books. His father was Joseph Albree Gilmore, Governor of New Hampshire in 1863.

In Grace Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Sunday morning, July 14th, a large congregation was present to witness the dedication of a silk Church Flag, a memorial gift of the Junior Warden and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Ashford, Jr., for their son. The Rector, the Rev. William Porkess, preached a special sermon on the significance of the two flags, the Church and the National.
