ANNIVERSARY NUMBER

The Witness

"Ye Shall be Witnesses Unto Me." Acts 1:8

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 53 | HOBART, INDIANA, JANUARY 5, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

WE ARE ADVERTISED BY OUR LOVING FRIENDS

Kind Words Said in Praise of The Witness

My dear Mr. Sage:

Congratulations upon the first year of useful service to the Church. May your circulation and influence steadily increase.

Yours sincerely,
WILLIAM LAWRENCE.
Bishop of Massachusetts.

My dear Dr. Sage:

I want to congratulate you and your co-laborers on the success achieved by "The Witness" during the first year of its existence. Your paper has proved its loyalty to the best interests of the Church without developing any least taint of partisanship, which fact alone is most commendable.

"The Witness" has also represented in its news columns the whole Church in the United States, and through its able contributors has furnished its readers a large amount of most interesting articles weekly on a wide variety of subjects of vital interest to Churchmen.

Wishing "The Witness" all success for the future, believe me,

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES S. BURCH.
Suffragan Bishop of New York.

"The Witness" is a Church paper full of news and thoroughly wide awake in its discussion of principles and current topics. It has an able editorial staff, five of whom, (half of the whole number) have been elected to the Episcopate within a year. Its subscription price brings it within the reach of our Church people generally. They ought to be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity.

CHAUNCEY B. BREWSTER.
Bishop of Connecticut.

The Rev. John C. Sage,
Managing Editor of The Witness,
Keokuk, Iowa.

My dear Mr. Sage:

I want to send my hearty congratulations to you and your brother editors upon the completion of the first year of The Witness.

You have given us a Church paper, which contains all the news, with abundance of clear, definite and interesting instruction, without depressing and destroying controversy.

I have seen copies of The Witness in many homes, which heretofore have had no Church paper, and I wish you continued success, and I am

Very sincerely yours,
THOS. F. GAILOR,
Bishop of Tennessee.

My dear Dr. Sage:

It gives me pleasure to comply with your request and to say a word with regard to The Witness. I believe now that it would be a calamity to have The Witness suspend publication, of which, of course, I hope there is no thought. I believe that it fills a real hole in the Church's life and that it is just about the right shaped peg to fill that hole.

I hope this will reach you in time. The delay has been due to the Christmas rush.

Faithfully yours,
PAUL MATTHEWS.
Bishop of New Jersey.

To the Editors of The Witness:

Will you permit me to express to you my personal congratulations upon this first anniversary of the publication of The Witness. The paper was a response to a real need in the Church, made as a venture of faith, which the past year has fully justified. The Witness is a paper for the people, at a price the people can pay, and with a purpose which embodies the educational mission of the Church.

The prejudice, misunderstanding and dislike with which the Church is regarded in the central west is largely the product of ignorance. This mist of ignorance can be dispellel by light rather than by ecclesiastical controversy, by the steady education of the people in the facts and faith of the Church and her place in American Christianity. The Church will grow in numerical strength and intelligent loyalty when she thus reaches the people. I believe that during the past year one of the factors which has contributed to make the Church in the central west lead the whole Church in its communicant growth, is the influence of The Witness.

Please count upon my continual cooperation in your noble work.

Faithfully yours,
THEODORE IRVING REESE,
Bishop Coadjuter of Southern Ohio.

My dear Mr. Sage:

I wish to congratulate you and the other editors of "The Witness" upon having achieved success in establishing a Church paper which is ably conducted and is interesting to readers. It also strikes the spiritual note.

Believe me, with all good wishes,
Yours sincerely,
SAMUEL BABCOCK.
Suffragan Bishop of Massachusetts.

Dear Sirs:

I am glad to take advantage of the anniversary of The Witness to express my appreciation of the paper, and my hope that it will continue its career of useful service to the Church. The Witness has filled an important place in the religious journalism of the country and already has earned the confidence and gratitude of the whole Church.

Faithfully yours,
JAMES DeWOLF PERRY.
Bishop of Rhode Island.

Managing Editor of The Witness,
Reverend John C. Sage.

My dear Sir:

At the completion of the first year of The Witness I wish to write a few words of appreciation and encouragement for the work which you are doing. It seems to me that The Witness is filling that place in Church journalism which a paper with a small subscription can occupy.

I have no means of knowing how generally the paper is taken in New Hampshire. I wish that we could afford to put it in the hands of each one of our isolated communicants, and I can assure you after my careful perusal of the weekly copies as they came in, of my desire to earnestly back those who have undertaken the difficult task of giving the Church a good paper at a very moderate price.

Very sincerely yours,
EDWARD M. PARKER,
Bishop of New Hampshire.

Dear Dr. Sage:

I do want to express to you my deep personal appreciation of the labor of love of the editors of The Witness and my gratification in the results they have obtained.

I find that our people not only like The Witness as a newspaper but are especially glad to have that solid instruction about the Church and her teachings which are a constant feature of the paper.

Long life to The Witness.

Ever faithfully,
F. A. McELWAIN,
Bishop of Minnesota.

My dear Witness:

I desire to send to you my hearty congratulations on your first anniversary.

I have enjoyed your paper, have found it interesting and helpful, and have been glad to help in increasing your circulation in this Diocese.

I wish for you growth in power and influence in the new year, and am

Very faithfully yours,
THOS. F. DAVIES,
Bishop of Western Massachussetts.

"The Witness" seems to me to fill splendidly an important place in the Church. We needed greatly a low-priced, popular, yet instructive magazine; and this the editors of "The Witness" have given us. I send congratulations on its success, this first year, and wish for it a wider circulation and increasing usefulness in the future.

BENJAMIN BREWSTER,
Bishop of Maine.

My dear Mr. Sage:

Hearty greetings to "The Witness" and its editors upon the completion of your first year. Any publication that can successfully weather the storms of one year in these troublous times must, one feels sure, have a useful

BISHOP JONES OF UTAH TENDERS HIS RESIGNATION

Notification by the Presiding Bishop

BISHOP'S HOUSE
444 East First South Street
Salt Lake City, Utah

Dec. 20, 1917.

The Rt. Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle, D. D.
74 Vandeventer Pl., St. Louis, Mo.

Rt. Rev. and Dear Sir:

Having received the report of the Commission authorized by the House of Bishops to inquire into the whole subject of my loyalty and my usefulness as Bishop of Utah, in which report the Commission unanimously advises me to resign, I therefore, acting on that advice, hereby tender you my resignation as Missionary Bishop of Utah to take effect whenever it is accepted. This action is taken with the distinct understanding that there are no charges standing against me touching my good character or integrity, for if there be any such, I insist upon a trial of them.

My reason for submitting this resignation is not merely to comply with the advice of the Commission to which I had previously pledged myself.

The Commission, speaking, I take it, for the House of Bishops, maintains (1st) that war is not an unchristian thing and that no Bishop may preach that this war is unchristian, and (2nd) that a Bishop should uot express the opinion that peace can be secured otherwise than by the prosecution of the war when the Government and the preponderance of the membership of the Church believe otherwise.

These conclusions I cannot accept; for I believe that the methods of modern international war are quite incompatible with the christian principles of reconciliation and brotherhood, and that it is the duty of a Bishop of the Church, from his study of the word of God, to express himself on questions of righteousness, no matter what opinion may stand in the way.

I had hoped that, notwithstanding the "excited condition of public opinion" referred to by the Commission, there might be room in the Church for a difference of opinion on the Christianity of warfare and ways of obtaining peace, and that, if so, it was preeminently the duty of one supposed to be a leader of the Church to voice his convictions on those subjects. But the Commission makes it perfectly clear in its report that a Bishop should resign before venturing to differ from others on such a Christian problem, or to express opinions at variance with the Government. To me, that seems evidently to mean that the Bishops of the Church should be followers and not leaders, and I have no desire to remain in such an anomalous position.

I have, therefore, authorized the Council of Advice of the District to act as Ecclesiastical Authority of the same with full responsibility for the maintenance and conduct of the work from the first day of January, 1918, until my resignation shall be acted upon, and I have for the same period offered myself to the General Board of Missions for any work they may wish to delegate to me.

Faithfully yours.
PAUL JONES,
Bishop of Utah

The Presiding Bishop Says Kind Things About THE WITNESS

I beg leave to send to
The Witness a cordial Happy New Year.
Wisely & well for one year it has done us good by its instructive columns.
We thank God for it & take courage.
We hope The Witness will take courage too, and go forward.

THE EDITORS EXPRESS THEMSELVES REGARDING THE WITNESS

WHAT ONE EDITOR ATTEMPTS TO DO

Camp MacArthur, Texas.

The request that I write a few lines for the anniversary number of THE WITNESS finds me working with the Young Men's Christian Association, as a Religious Secretary in the Brigade Building for the Michigan Troops, and also as a volunteer co-laborer with an old college friend, Rev. Postell Witsell, the Rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco.

It is a far cry from this work to the General Convention in St. Louis where we met and consulted over the publication of a paper which might ultimately be sent into every Church home in the United States where the Episcopal Church could have a hearing. The year has seen us enter the purple shadows of that dread war cloud which has darkened the face of the earth, and whose sable shades threaten soon to enfold us. Through these months our paper has gone, bearing its weekly message, and its witness to the faith, and I have reason to believe that that witness has been to many people a true and lasting help.

In my own department I have not touched much on the war problems. I wanted my thoughts and messages to come to you once a week, on a day when, if possible, we might forget the grim shadows of war, and gain courage and strength from the light and life of the Gospel message, as our Mother Church gave it to us.

As a plain-spoken person, I have tried to write in simple language for the columns of THE WITNESS. Such comments as have come to me week by week this past year, reading the Church's Collects, Epistles and Gospels with the man on the street in mind, and yet, metaphorically speaking, with a mirror in front of me, I realize that messages are sometimes given to men which are meant more for the speaker than the hearer. I feel that in the writing of these comments this has been true in my own case, and hope the message was not given in vain. I have tried honestly and sincerely to give such impressions and reflections as would help a man live the right interpretation of the Church's weekly lessons and prayers, whether he was a minister in the pew or a priest at the Altar. It has helped my own spiritual life to put down on paper some of the thoughts which have come to me in answer to prayer, or to pass on some wise and helpful words which others have written on the subjects under discussion. If these things have helped others, to God be the glory.

THE REV. THOMAS S. WHITE

With the same readers in mind, I am now planning, under God, to write a series of weekly comments this coming year on "Some Missionary Messages from the Church's Holy Days". Whether or not the comments will prove helpful to my readers is beyond my power to discern or prophecy. I am content to leave that for Time to decide.

I believe with all my heart in the principles for which THE WITNESS stands, and I thank God for letting me share in establishing a paper which exists to bring home to men's hearts and consciences such simple constructive messages as will, if absorbed and followed, make simpler, better, more intelligent, and more truly religious Church people of us than we might otherwise have been if our little venture of faith had not been made.

May God bless to His own greater glory and the good of His Church all that we Editors plan to do for Him and His Church through this coming year in the columns of our paper!

FRANCIS S. WHITE.

A BLESSED NEW YEAR TO OUR READERS

The Editors of the Devotional Department of THE WITNESS rejoice with their fellow-Editors over this our first anniversary, and wish all our readers and well-wishers a "Blessed New Year". We have all had to express our good wishes in a somewhat unaccustomed way at this holiday time. The old phrases we found inappropriate this year. It was mockery to say "Merry Christmas", when all the world is fast bound in misery and iron. England must have found it hard to be merry this year before her Yule log fires. France must have found it hard to keep back her tears as she sang of "The First Noel the Angels did say." It is almost as hard to say "Happy New Year"—for who can tell what this year, of all years, will bring? But we can pray for ourselves and our friends a "Blessed New Year." A year filled with the blessings of a new consecration to God's service and a new helpfulness to our brother men.

And THE WITNESS prays for itself that sort of a New Year. It is only one year old but already it is lusty and strong. Not long ago a distinguished Clergyman of the Church of England published a book which he called "Everyman's History of the Church of England." Shortly afterwards this was followed by another which he called "Everyman's History of the Book of Common Prayer." Soon afterwards some one else compiled a book which was called "Everyman's Book of Saints." It is the object of the Editors of THE WITNESS to publish an "EVERYMAN'S Church Newspaper." Every Churchman ought to want to know something about his Church and what is happening in his Church. We often hear men say that what we need is a working laity. Perhaps what is needed more is a reading laity, men and women who will inform themselves of the history of their Church, what it stands for, what part it can play in our American life. Our laymen are apt to say at once that they are too busy. But not one would not scorn to know nothing of the political history of his country or what part his country is playing in this great war. Why then should he not have time to know something of Church life and happenings? That these things may be presented to the average layman in reasonable and readable form is the object of THE WITNESS. An object which as it grows older it hopes more fully to attain.

If the national experience through which we are passing has taught us anything it is the need of prayer. Surely it has put a new vitality into our devotions. So the devotional department of THE WITNESS is one of the most important. To bring prayer into relationship with everyday, ordinary life, to put the devotional life of the Church into touch with the everyday life of the Churchman is the aim of this Department. The Editors of this Department are very grateful to many who have helped them with contributions. They themselves have worked under somewhat of a handicap. To each of them has come in the year great change in the accustomed circumstances of their life. One has left a Parish to take up work in a great Army Camp, one has left a Parish to take up the tasks of a Diocesan. Neither has forgotten the friends which the Devotional Department of THE WITNESS has made for them. Both of them pray for THE WITNESS and its readers a "Blessed New Year."

H. J. MIKELL.

Poems Worth Preserving for the New Year

LIVE

By Horatius Bonar

Make haste, O man, to live,
For thou so soon must die;
Time hurries past thee like the breeze;
How swift its moments fly.
Make haste, O man, to live.

To breathe, and wake, and sleep,
To smile, to sigh, to grieve;
To move in idleness through earth,
This, this is not to live!

Make haste, O man, to do
Whatever must be done;
Thou hast no time to lose in sloth—
The day will soon be gone.

Up, then, with speed and work;
Fling ease and self away;
This is no time for thee to sleep—
Up, watch, and work, and pray!

The useful, not the great,
The thing that never dies;
The silent toil that is not lost—
Set these before thine eyes.

The seed, whose leaf and flower,
Though poor in human sight,
Brings forth at last the eternal fruit,
Sow thou by day and night.

Make haste, O man, to live;
The time is almost o'er;
O sleep not, dream not, but arise—
The Judge is at the door.
Make haste, O man, to live!

FOR PASSING SOULS

The following hymn was written by an unknown English writer. It has been set to music, and has been adopted for use in the Chapels Royal, and is widely used in England. It has been used extensively in this country since our entry into the war:

For the passing souls we pray;
Saviour, meet them on their way;
Let their trust lay hold on Thee
Ere they touch eternity.

Holy counsels long forgot
Breathe again mid shell and shot;
Through the mists of life's last pain
None shall look to Thee in vain.

To the hearts that know Thee, Lord,
Thou wilt speak through flood or sword;
Just beyond the cannons' roar,
Thou art on that further shore.

For the passing souls we pray;
Saviour, meet them on their way.
Thou wilt hear our yearning call,
Who hast loved and died for all.

A Scriptural Litany on the Incarnation

Lord Jesu, Word of God made flesh, speak to us through Thy human nature and Thy human life.
Lord Jesu, Word of God made flesh,
Hallow our nature in its every part.
Lord Jesu, Who didst share our flesh and blood, in order to be one with us,
May we ever trust Thy sympathy.
Lord Jesu, Who didst empty Thyself of Divine glory and take upon Thee the form of a servant,
Teach us real humility and self-sacrifice.
Lord Jesu, Who wast conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of a virgin mother,
Free our nature from its degradation, that it may be renewed according to God's design.
Lord Jesu, in whom was manifested the love of God,
Draw out our response of love to God and man.
Lord Jesu, Who wast given to be a propitiation for our sins,
Grant us forgiveness, cleansing, and acceptance.
Lord Jesu, Who wast manifested the Son of God in human form, that in Thee Thy people might have life,
Grant us by faith to be made one with Thee,
Lord Jesu, to Whom this name was appointed by the Angel,
Shew its power by delivering Thy people from their sins.
Lord Jesu, Who wast worshipped by the shepherds,
Receive our homage as the promised Christ, the Saviour of the world.
Lord Jesu, to Whom the Eastern sages offered gifts,
Draw men of every rank and nation to acknowledge Thee.
Lord Jesu, Who wast circumcised and presented in the Temple according to the Law.
May we diligently seek Thy grace in all appointed ways.
Lord Jesu, Who wast obedient to Thy parents,
May we reverence all who are placed in authority over us.
Lord Jesu, Who didst advance in wisdom as in stature, and in favor both with God and man, Grant us continual growth according to God's will.

Note. When this Litany is said by several persons in company, the Reader may repeat both address and the petition, the others responding after each petition, We beseech Thee.

Christmas at Trinity Church, New York

An example of the spirit animating many religious bodies was given in the Christmas Eve service at Trinity Church, says the New York Times, when a telegram was read expressing the loyalty and love of the people of the Parish for the Rector, the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, now a Chaplain with the 302nd Engineers at Camp Upton.

The beginning of the Trinity Parish celebrations was the Annual Christmas Eve Carol Service at St. Paul's Chapel, where a choir, clergy and trumpeters in vestments assembled at noon and sang carols, which halted thousands of passersby for a moment of worship. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon a manger service was held for the children, and at 4 o'clock the children of the Chapel of the Intercession held the service of the Feast of Lights. Hundreds of them, with lanterns, marched singing in procession to the graves of Clement C. Moore, author of "'Twas the Night Before Christmas", and of Alfred Tennyson Dickens, both in Trinity cemetery, and placed wreaths on both.

It is seldom that Jan. 6th falls on a Sunday, and this year congregations have the great privilege of listening to the magnificent Isaiah 66: "Arise, shine! for thy light has come"! It is a stirring Missionary appeal to God's ancient people, and still helpful, still needed. Responsibility rests upon those who have light to let it shine; and if this held for Israel of old, how much more strongly now for Christians, for those who have seen the light of the glory of God as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ! The New Testament lesson is the manifestation, the "Bethphany" of the glory of the Christ at the wedding in Cana of Galilee, as a result of which "His disciples believed on Him". The two lessons bring together the two main ideas connected with the Epiphany Season —one manifestation to the Gentiles, and the other, that which is manifested, viz., God as revealed in our Lord Jesus Christ. (The latter aspect includes "theophany", or manifestation of God.)

The evening lessons are Isaiah's prophecy of the Messiah and His work, which would be world-wide and cause the righteousness of the Church to "go forth as brightness, and (2) St. Paul's discussion of the relative positions of Jew and Gentile in the providential ordering of the world, concluding with a paean of praise to God for the universality of His mercy and the depth of His riches of wisdom and knowledge, in startling contrast to Calvin's "horrible decretum".

The use of Isaiah 60 for the morning lesson is, of course, an interruption of the Old Testament Historical topical course, which is resumed on Monday with a brief account of the reign in the upper kingdom of Jeroboam, son of Joash, who, in the providence of Jehovah, persisted in the sins of the original Jeroboam, but who "wrested out of the hands of the Syrians" some territory they had filched from Israel. This is mentioned as having taken place in accordance with the word of God as spoken by the Prophet Jonah. Without intending to imply that the Book of Jonah was necessarily produced at this time, we have introduced it here as bearing specially on the Epiphany Season. It is the great Foreign Missionary book of the Old Testament. We are on sure and certain historical ground in the use here of Amos, to be followed by Hosea, Micah and Isaiah, interwoven with historical material. While Amos is not distinctly Missionary, it is implicitly so. The prophet is concerned with Jehovah not as the God of Israel merely, but as Creator of the universe and of mankind (Amos v:8). and as the God who not merely brought up Israel out of Egypt, but also "the Philistines from Caphtor and the Syrians from Kir (ix:7).

The Old Testament daily lessons in the evening are topically selected to set forth the larger idea of God which was revealed to His people from the Eighth Century B. C. on their growing knowledge and contact with foreign nations, made such larger conception necessary, laying the foundation for all future missionary work, and the only possible basis of rational hope for humanity in this world or the next.

The New Testament daily lessons are missionary in character.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

FROM "HYMNS AND PRAYERS FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY"

O Lord, our Governor, whose glory is in all the world; We commend this nation to Thy merciful care, that being guided by Thy Providence we may dwell secure in Thy peace. Grant to the President and to all in authority wisdom and strength to know and to do Thy will. Fill them with the love of truth and righteousness; and make them ever mindful of their calling to serve this people in Thy fear; through Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

O Almighty Lord, who fashionest the hearts of men, and considerest all their works; Grant, we beseech Thee, to us, and to all the people of this land, the spirit of obedience to Thy commandments, that, walking humbly in Thy fear, we may, under Thy mighty protection, possess our liberties in righteousness and peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Lord God of Hosts, stretch forth, we pray Thee, Thine almighty arm to strengthen and protect the soldiers of our country; support them in the day of battle, and in the time of peace keep them safe from all evil; endue them with courage and loyalty; and grant that in all things they may serve without reproach; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Eternal Lord God, who alone spreadest out the heavens, and rulest the raging of the sea; Vouchsafe to take into Thy almighty and most gracious protection our country's Navy and all who serve therein. Preserve them from the dangers of the sea, and from the violence of the enemy; that they may be a safeguard unto the United States of America, and as security for such as pass on the seas upon their errands of business or mercy; that the inhabitants of our land may in peace and quietness serve Thee our God; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Teach us, good Lord, to serve Thee as Thou deservest; to give and not to count the cost; to fight and not to heed the wounds; to toil and not to seek for rest; to labor and not to ask for any reward, save that of knowing that we do Thy will. Amen.

O Saviour of the world, who by Thy cross and precious Blood hast redeemed us, save us and help us, we humbly beseech Thee, O Lord.

INTRODUCTORY

My late friend and classmate, Bishop Frank Spaulding of Utah, had a quotation of which he was very fond:

"Life is conscious effort transforming itself into unconscious habit.'"

A little reflection will show how this applies to everything in life. Walking, playing the piano, your vices, your virtues come under this head. It applies also to the training of soldiers. An untrained soldier is not an asset, but a nuisance, on the field of battle.

What is needed at the time of Confirmation is not so much academic teaching as painstaking drill in the Prayer Book which is the Manual of Training.

The whole Christian body is sick because it is an untrained body and Confirmation is the opportunity for such training.

If you drill your candidates properly, you will have later on a congregation which can be inspired by preaching.

Never mind if the classes are small. See to it that they are well trained, and require of them certain things, without which they cannot be presented.

1st. A regular attendance at Church services during the period of prepperation.

2nd. A regular habit of daily prayer in private.

3rd. Conscious study of the instruction and faithful attendance at the classes.

Unless candidates are willing to do this they should not be confirmed.

The probability is that you will begin your classes soon after the holidays, so this series of instructions is arranged in pamphlet form, and will be issued each week beginning with the new year, and covering a period of twenty lessons. They are so arranged that the first half of the lesson leaf is for the candidate to study, the second half to assist the Rector in the instruction.

CONFIRMATION INSTRUCTIONS

I.

WHAT IS IN A NAME?

Catechism (To be learned).

What is your name? Prayer Book p. 226.

Who gave you this name?

What did your sponsers then for you?

Prop. 1.

Truth is the only sure foundation. To be "a man of your word" is your first duty. Your baptismal vow is a promise made to God and should be kept. In order to keep a vow you should know what it is.

Read your vow which was made at your baptism. Prayer Book. Baptismal office.

Prop. 2.

By reason of your birth you are a member of a family.

By reason of your parentage (or by the vow of naturalization) you are a citizen of the United States.

By reason of your baptism you are a member of Christ's Church.

In all of these three institutions you inherited your membership—and a name.

As a man you should do honor to the name you bear, whether the name of your family, your country or your Church.

Prop. 3.

Back of all these three institutions there is a vow or covenant, and the honor of your family, your country and your Church is either kept or betrayed by your conduct.

(a) Back of the family is the marriage vow, by which husband and wife agree to serve one another and to be faithful unto death.

When a couple is divorced some one has broken his or her vow.

The family can be preserved by keeping the marriage vow.

(b) Back of the state lies the vow of each citizen that he will renounce all other rulers; that he will believe the Constitution, that he will obey the laws and reverence the flag.

Whoever breakes this vow is a traitor. In keeping this vow we do our best to make our country honorable.

(c) Back of the Church lies the vow of each Christian made at Baptism that he will renounce the Devil, believe in God and obey His Commandments.

It is by keeping one's word that he honors his name, the name of his country and the name of Jesus Christ.

QUESTIONS

Q. What is the nature of a vow?

Q. What three things do your promise?

Q. What three things does God promise? (Note last three clauses in creed).

Q. What have you to say about those who do not keep their promises?

Q. Have parents the right to pledge children to a vow? (Note that God gives parents the right to determine the family to which a child shall belong: also the nation; also the religion. These are responsibilities that God places on parents.)

Q. How can you honor your family name? Your American citizenship? Your membership in Christ's Church?

Selections to be read by the candidates, and commented upon by the Instructor.

Text: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

1. The change of Jacob's name to Israel as the result of a vow. Genesis xxxii:24-32.
2. The pledging of Samuel to the Lord. I Sam. I:19-28.
3. The naming of John the Baptist. St. Luke i:59-65.
4. The naming of our Lord. St. Luke ii:21.

The Epistle to The Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

XX.

Vs. 25. Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor: for we are members one of another.

Sadler: Wherefore. The Apostle descends to particularize the vices of "the old man" which are to be put off, and the virtues of the new man which are to be put on.

Whitby: Putting away lying. The heathen philosophers thought lying lawful when it was good and profitable to them. Menander said: "A lie is better than a hurtful truth." Plato: "He may lie who knows how to do it in a fit season."

Ellicott: Lying, or falsehood in an abstract sense. (St. John viii:44.) Falsehood in every form is the chief characteristic of "the old man", and comes naturally from that selfishness which is the essence of all sin.

Sadler: Lying destroys all confidence in human society. We in Christ are members one of another, and if we are to work together in the common cause of Christ, we must be true to one another.

Meyer: In the body of Christ, even as in the physical body, no member exists for himself, but each belongs to each, in mutual union with other members. (Cor. xii:15.).

Jerome: Speak the truth. This positive exhortation seems to be a reminiscence of Zech. viii:16.

Moule: Observe the sober and humbling practicality of the Apostle's precepts, as necessary now as ever, and the condemnation by the Gospel of all kinds and phases of dishonesty.

Ellicott: Because we are members one of another. The force of the exhortation does not rest on any mere ethical considerations of our obligations to society, or any analogy that may be drawn from the body, but on the deeper truth that in being members one of another we are members of the Body of Christ, of Him who was the Truth and the Life.

Gore: The life is the life of a body, and the general well-being is therefore the common interest of all the members, for the weakening or decay of one is the weakening or decay of a more or less valuable part of a connected life. This is the general principle upon which the Church is based. This is the moral meaning of Churchmanship—"ye are members one of another".

Vs. 26. Be ye angry and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath.

Be ye angry and sin not, a quotation from the Septuagint. Ps. iv:4.

Matthies: In the being angry, let it not come to sin.

Harless: Be angry in the right way, without your sinning.

Wordsworth: St. Paul does not forbid anger, but even commands it on fit occasions, and when it is directed to right ends and regulated and moderated by proper restraints, but he forbids all abuses of it and all excess in it.

Butler: There is evidently a distinction made between anger and sin, between the natural passion and sinful anger.

Ellicott: There is undoubtedly an anger against sin—for instance, against deliberate falsehood, as the context suggests—which a good man not only may, but ought to feel.

Let not the sun go down upon your wrath. Compare the custom of the Pythagoreans. If they were led by wrath to abuse they took each others' hands and, embracing, were reconciled before the sun set.

Vs. 27. Neither give place to the devil.

Sadler: If you allow angry or unforgiving thoughts to nestle in your mind, you will find that you cannot pray, and this will give satan a ready entrance, for by prayer alone do we lay hold on God's strength against our enemy.

Meyer: In an irritated frame of mind passion easily gains the ascendency over sobriety and watchfulness, and that physical condition is favorable to the devil for his work of seducing into everything contrary to God.

Ellicott: The devil (diabolos), the slanderer, calumniator. Satan is the more personal appelation. Devil, a name derived from the fearful nature and, so to say, office of the evil one. Both words are used in the New Testament.

Monod: Wherever the devil finds a heart shut, he finds a door open.

Augustine: Shut the door against satan, and you will obey the Apostle's precept, "Give no place to the devil", by which precept the Apostle shows that if the devil enters and takes possession in us, it is because we have admitted him.

Vs. 28. Let him who stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth.

Ellicott: Him who stole. The participle is used—he who steals. This points to a thievish character, whether displayed in more coarse and open or in more refined and hidden practices of sin.

Sadler: The Apostle's words seem to imply that stealing was no uncommon crime. This is quite probable, since the Church was largely recruited from the slave class, among whom the habit of pilfering had become second nature.

Moule: The duty of restitution is not explicitly mentioned here, but in the Epistle to Philemon it is both iasisted upon and acted upon.

Ellicott: With his hands. The thievish man lives by the hands and labors of others. He is now himself to labor, and with his own hands—those very hands that robbed others.

Olshausen: In order that he may have—not merely what is enough for his own wants, but to give to him that needeth—the true specific object of all Christian iabor.

Gore: Under the old Covenant, God had contented Himself with forbidding stealing. Under the new Covenant the prohibition of what is wrong passes into the injunction of what is right. Labor of whatever kind—labor directed to produce something good—is required of all. "If any man will not work, neither let him eat" (II. Thess. iii:10. The idle man violates the conditions of the Christian Covenant as truly as if he were denying the rudiments of the Christian faith.

The Sacramental Life

FAITH

By Rev. Harry Ransome

When our Lord said man doth not live by bread alone, He asserted that man was not wholly the creature of a world of natural substance and material forces which we know through our senses. And this assertion holds good in spite of the fact that everyday scientists, by observation and processes of deduction, are unfolding more of its secrets and harnessing them to the service of men.

Yet, wonderful as this natural world is, there is another world which claims us, less substantial, but in a sense more real, because its experiences are more vivid and lasting. We speak of it as the unseen or invisible world, which we cannot know wholly through our bodily senses, neither can we grasp its reality through books, or the experiences of other men. To know it, we must live in it ourselves. And it is a world which is independent of environment—a world which abides with us and in us wherever we may be.

Who can teach another the reality of love, joy, peace, sorrow, penitence or remorse? We can only know joy by rejoicing, we can only taste love by loving and being loved. Only through each individual's own living experience can each phase of this spiritual life be known—a life which reveals depths that none can plumb, for they deepen into eternity.

While the law of inanimate beings and creatures without reason must necessarily control them, the law of man, he being a reasonable creature, is left to his free will. And every experience in our spiritual life is fed on acts, it grows in intensity as the acts recur again and again, so deepening our experience. Out of this experience knowledge is acquired and expresses itself through the will. The will is needful that reason may act. But what is it that causes the will to act? what sets in motion and directs its influence on the reason and lets reason influence it?--the mysterious and marvelous power of the heart.

It is this inner life which constitutes our real solves. We project it into the visible world in outward acts, and betray in so doing our personality. Humanly speaking, a man's personality is known by his acts. To what or towards whom are our acts directed? If we experience joy in rejoicing, or love in loving, what is the quality of our joy or love? At once we seek a standard by which to test life's experience.

If we find love or happiness in the exclusive pleasures of the senses, then the spirit of love or joy, which has infinite capacity, is arrested in its development and chained to the things of sense; and the spiritual life is limited to, and controlled by, the senses. And the fleshly capacity is not infinite, because it knows the meaning of satiety. This situation is well described as of the earth, earthy. The whole of such a life centers around the individual, and creates in him the spirit of selfishness, which has been described as sin.

But the experiences of the inner life cannot rest in the senses; there is that which teaches us, through our individual experience, that the spiritual factors of this life are infinite. And directly we reach out toward the infinite—the unseen—we enter the domain of Faith.

Between the human soul, which is made in the likeness of God, and God, who is Truth, Goodness and Beauty in essence, there are besides marvelous resemblances, profound affinities and natural attractions. Moral truth is not mathematical truth, cold and abstract, yet how often we seek it in our quest for faith, forgetful that apart from physical certainties, which affect only external phenomena, not the essence of things unseen, and beyond the deductions of mathematics or algebra, mathematical certainty carries nowhere. We must choose between Faith or dreary Agnosticism.

Moreover, Truth is not subjective, although our knowledge of truth depends upon our inner disposition, yet our faith does not cause Truth to be. Truth lives outside ourselves, but the factors of our spiritual life, infinite in capacity, by affiliation and attraction, are drawn upwards until they rest in eternal Truth, Goodness and Beauty, which is Almighty God.

But at times the despairing cry goes forth: How can I believe? And the answer must come by an act of faith. Faith is more than intellectual assent; it gathers in the whole man, and we can only know faith by living in faith. Just as a man can only know what love is by the act of loving, so faith can only be grasped by an act of faith. We cannot know faith by standing apart with the will and the heart held in subjection until reason is satisfied.

Like the first venture of a child, we must take a step, which is a distinct act, in which mind and heart, as well as will, are involved. It is, perhaps, a timid step, because it involves a new experience, and one hesitates at the brink; but the venture is made, and the new experience passes into one's life and becomes part of oneself. The next time the act is repeated with greater confidence, aided by knowledge.

So, in the matter of faith, the first step is perhaps feeble, but each act of faith makes us stronger in faith; our spiritual nature responds to our acts of faith, and we find our life moving forward, guided and tested by the eternal standard of Truth and Righteousness. And this standard is not merely an ethical one, cold and academic; through our own likeness to the Divine counterpart we recognize in our guiding principles a manifestation of a Divine Person—Almighty God. In this recognition, each act of faith made by us is the movement of our personality closer to the source and influence of Divine Life. Our life is lived on an ascending scale, growing closer and closer to our Divine Source; and in this ascension we enter into that mysticism which is the love of God—that love which is the love of intuition, so full of marvelous penetration and power, like those luminous rays which can penetrate all obstacles.

As this love, begun in an act of faith, fed by faith, living in faith, becomes the ruling principle of our inward spiritual life, the mind of God, through His Son, Jesus Christ, is projected into this physical world in our actions, and the prayer of our Saviour is finding falfillment, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

In the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, Chicago, of which he was for a number of years Dean, and in which he was consecrated Bishop of Oregon, Bishop Sumner, on New Year's Day, married Miss Myrtle Mitchell of Negaunee, Mich. The ceremony was performed by the Bishop of Chicago, assisted by Dean Pond of the Cathedral. Following the service, a reception was held and a dinner served in the Parish House.

The truth always irritates if it is not accepted. The very sight of a Church or preacher makes some people mad.

THE EDITORS EXPRESS THEMSELVES REGARDING THE WITNESS

THE GENESIS AND IDEALS OF THE WITNESS

A movement in society or the Church is never the result of one man's thinking or dreaming. It comes because men and women (perhaps widely separated) are convinced of the need, dream of the possibility of meeting the need and finally are inspired to action.

The genesis of THE WITNESS, which represents we believe a movement in the Church, followed the course above referred to.

For years interested Church people, leaders of Church thought and activity have felt the lack of means of informing our own Church people of the work, the thought and the ideals which animate the Episcopal Church. Church journals have been published for years, all of them excellent and some especially well edited. Yet for some reason the man in the pew, the ordinary Churchman failed to read them or subscribe for them. At the General Convention in St. Louis, Bishop Reese stated that the total circulation of Church periodicals of all sorts was only some fifty thousand and that in a religious body that has some four million adherents!

Something was wrong! What was it? The need for a Church paper which would appeal to the run of Church people was apparent; how should it be met?

For years a few of the clergy had especially felt this need and had some idea as to how it was to be met. Some of these men were practical newspaper men by previous actual experience. They realized that certain fundamental facts were apparent. The Church paper as published possessed the defects of its virtues. It was too good. To the clergy, to lay people having a knowledge of the Church and interested in its work, their appeal was immediate and insistent. They wanted to know the events transpiring in the Church's life, they read with interest the able editorials on the policy of the Church, they even (some of them) had a keen appetite for the controversies stirred up by these same editorials or other articles appearing in the papers, or by the actions of Bishops or the "inferior clergy" who said or did things subject to criticism.

But—here was the defect—the ordinary layman or laywoman, knew little about the Church's controversies and (excuse us, O learned brother editors) cared less. They were plain church-going or non-churchgoing folk, belonging or not belonging to local guild or society, very parochial in their thought, yet in their hearts desiring to be fed with food for their spiritual nature, willing, though often not knowing it to become interested in the great body the American Episcopal Church to which they belonged.

So, said these widely separated would-be editors with an ideal, to themselves and occasionally when they met, to others, let us be fool-hardy enough to attempt to solve this problem, and publish a paper which the laity will read, by which they may be informed, and from which they may draw inspiration for Christian living.

It must be a plain paper for plain people.

It must use direct and forceful English, avoiding so far as possible ecclesiastical verbiage with which the ordinary layman is unacquainted.

It must attract his attention. How? By following the style and make-up of the newspaper which he daily reads.

It must be condensed, few long articles, news items short and to the point, and above all it must not be dull!

It must be published at a price that every Church family could afford to pay.

It should stand loyally for all the Church teaches, yet be the organ of no school of thought nor section of the Church. And it must keep its columns free from annoying, useless, needless, and, often, un-Christ-like controversy. Fine principles these but new, revolutionary. "It can't be done," said the wiseacre.

At St. Louis, the then Rev. Dr., now Bishop Irving Peake Johnson, whose keen mind had long been dwelling upon the subject called together a few men whom he knew had also been considering the problem and who were desirous of lending a hand when the opportune time came, and formed the Board of Editors of THE WITNESS. At this meeting because of his interest, fitness and leadership, Dr. Johnson was without question named as Editor-in-Chief. The name was selected and a publisher chosen.

THE REV. JOHN C. SAGE, D. D., Managing Editor

It will be well to make a plain statement of fact at this time for the information of our readers and well-wishers. For convenience of administration the ownership of THE WITNESS is vested in Irving P. Johnson. He is the sole owner and proprietor. Later it is proposed to form a corporation in which the Board of Editors will be stockholders and directors. This course is to be persued for the protection of THE WITNESS and the principles for which it stands.

A contract was later entered into between Irving P. Johnson as Editor-in-Chief and L. W. Applegate by which the latter became the Publisher. This contract provides that the Editor shall provide all matter for publication, shall have control over the contents of the advertising columns and in general exercise all power which belongs to the owner of a publication. When THE WITNESS corporation is formed this contract will be transferred from Dr. Johnson to the corporation.

Through correspondence and personal conference, the Rev. L. W. Applegate was selected as Publisher. From a long experience with Church publications, and having a zealous and untiring zeal to accomplish what the Editors have in mind, it was felt that Mr. Applegate would prove a splendid co-worker. With great disinterestedness, Mr. Applegate undertook the risk. He assumed the financial burden, entering upon untried paths with enthusiasm and enterprise. The Board of Editors take this opportunity of tendering their thanks and making due acknowledgment of the work done by their Publisher. He has made no money, rather has he unstintedly furnished the equipment of his fine printing plant and his capital to make possible the publication of THE WITNESS. He believes in it and will we trust meet with a ready response to his efforts to place THE WITNESS in every Church home.

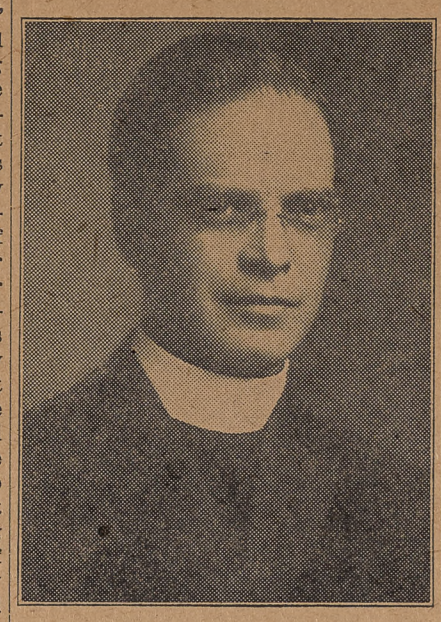
May it be noted here that the Editors receive no remuneration and that all of them, out of very busy lives, are giving their time and best effort to this venture of faith?

A word of thanks is due the many bishops, priests and laymen who have so generously supported our enterprise. For the confidence reposed in us by men of all sections of the Church and for their loyal and devoted co-operation we are grateful.

While the past year has witnessed an experiment with all the difficulties and hindrances seemingly a part of all beginnings, and while we realize how far short of our ideals we have come, we take courage, only asking the continued good will of our fellow Churchmen and their help in making THE WITNESS the useful movement in the Church it promises to be.

JOHN C. SAGE,
Managing Editor.

GREETINGS FROM THE NEWS EDITOR



Takes the Readers of The Witness Into His Confidence and Reveals the Secrets of His Sanctum

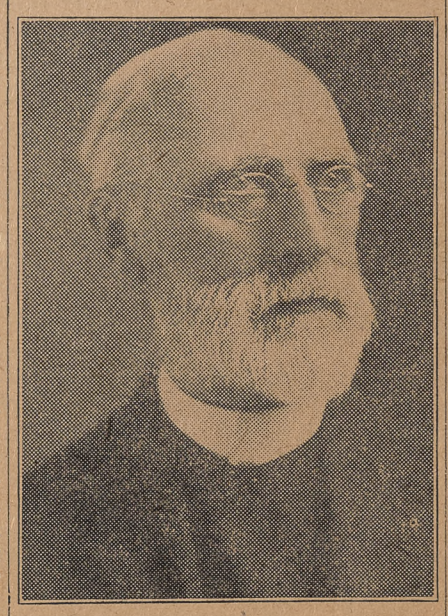
A little "shop talk" concerning the news department of THE WITNESS may not be considered out of place at this time when we are celebrating our first anniversary. It is the usual age when precocious infants begin to talk. We have cast off our swaddling clothes, passed with "flying colors" through the creeping of experimental stage of our existence and, standing firmly on our feet, facing the future with great expectations, it is not surprising that we should wish to greet our thousands of new-made friends and give expression to our most hearty appreciation of the splendid contribution they have made to the success of our venture. We want to take our correspondents and our readers, our friends and our patrons, into our confidence, to reveal to them the secrets of our sanctum, in order that we may establish an intimate personal point of contact with everyone who may be interested in our efforts to secure and print all the real live news of the Church. We want them, everyone, to realize that they are an important member of our large and ever-growing family, with the right, by reason of this intimate relationship, to know something of our news policy and plans, our difficulties and our dreams. Our large corps of special correspondents, representing the several Dioceses and Missionary jurisdictions of the Church under the flag of the United States, contributing their services without remuneration; the publishers who have graciously entered THE WITNESS on their exchange lists; the Clergy who have generously forwarded to our table their excellent Parish papers; the friends among the Clergy and laity who have sent to us clippings from their local papers and reports of parochial happenings of general interest, all come in for a large share of whatever praise THE WITNESS may be entitled to for its news service. We may say, without presumption, that the field has been covered remarkably well considering the fact that the news service has been wholly maintained as an act of love on the part of those who believe that THE WITNESS is destined to accomplish a great work for Christ and His Church. We do not boast, but confess to many shortcomings. We are yet in our infancy—far from the ideal set for ourselves. We dream of the day when our sanctum will be flooded every week in the year with reports of current events fresh from the Parishes and Missions and the various organizations and institutions of the Church—when our friends among the Bishops, the Clergy and the laity will freely forward to our table the stories of human interest which come to their knowledge, new methods and undertakings, personal experiences inclined to encourage others to better living, or to increase activities along any line of parochial endeavor. We want every man and woman, every boy and girl, in the Church to feel that THE WITNESS is their paper—that news from the smallest, struggling, isolated Mission is just as welcome as the news from the strongest Parish in the greatest center of population. We are anxious to show the laity more attention than the religious press is accustomed to doing. The news department knows no school of thought, caters to no group of men. It is our desire to reflect the whole life of the Church at work through the columns of THE WITNESS, and we welcome news from any reliable source.

It would not be at all surprising if there were those, and not a few, who do not fancy our way of presenting the news. With them we have no fault to find, but hope eventually to win them to our way of thinking. We recognize the fact that we have ventured upon a radical innovation, which may seem to many somewhat incongruous with our accustomed conservative "family ways." The present editor of the news department, circumstanced as he is, the busy Rector of a Parish, responding constantly to large demands made upon his time and energy by his community, compelled to dictate to a stenographer the news for THE WITNESS, and residing over four hundred miles from the office of publication, could not, however much he might wish, present the news in better form than he does. But he would not if he could, since he is in perfect sympathy with the policy of the Board of Editors requiring contributions for publication in THE WITNESS to be presented in the popular form and diction of the secular press with which the American people are most familiar. This policy has been fairly tested, with the now very promising prospect that eventually we shall be able to command the attention and hold the interest of many thousands of Church people who have not heretofore subscribed for or read religious newspapers. We invite all who will to come in with us and lend us their aid by hearty co-operation and friendly criticism to make THE WITNESS a greater power for good. Spread the good news among your friends and acquaintances that there is a Church paper published which may be had for the small sum of $1 a year, that caters not only to those who, by reason of their training and official positions, keep in close touch with Parish, Diocesan, Provincial and General Church affairs, but also to those who for any reason fail at times to realize that they are also a part and have an important part to play in the great world-wide Kingdom of the Master of the souls of men, the Church Militant. A Happy New Year to All!

CHARLES J. SHUTT.

Mankato, Minn., Jan. 1, 1918.

THE REV. CHARLES J. SHUTT, News Editor



A WORD FROM THE PUBLISHER

THE WITNESS was started a year ago to meet a need in the Church for a weekly paper at a moderate price that would find a welcome in every Church family in every Parish and Mission in the United States. Everybody's paper at one dollar a year—just a practical newspaper that would appeal to every one, to tell the news, and to inspire a richer, fuller Church life, and greater zeal in her work.

Every other Christian body has met this need and the membership has responded generously, and there are very few families among them without "our weekly Church paper." Why this Church should lag behind no one can tell, for no Church family would begrudge a dollar a year for such a paper, and the fact that there are men in the Church who have been willing to meet this need and start the paper should at once elicit the interest and co-operation of every clergyman and layman to make the movement a great success and let the whole Church realize the benefit of the larger vision of the Church and her activities which would naturally result.

So THE WITNESS intends to be a welcome guest every week in every Church family everywhere. That is its aim, and its aim must be accomplished. If it cannot be done in one way, it must be done in some other way, for it must be done. The Church must not lag behind, and as the weeks go by and our friends multiply we are encouraged to believe that our aim will be accomplished.

So we want every one who has subscribed for the paper during the past year to stand by us and renew for the second year and give us his influence among his friends. We thank them one and all for coming to our support during the most critical period—the first year—of the paper's life.

THE REV. L. W. APPLEGATE, Publisher

To aid our purpose we have adopted a unique method of publication. In every phase of activity this is an age of "unified interests" So THE WITNESS asks that it may be the official organ of any organization in the Church that desires to avoid the worry and expense of a separate publication; that it may take the place of the Diocesan paper and the Parish paper; that it may unify all interests and centralize the influences and save expense, and what is worth more than all else—reach all the people. So we issue special editions with all the local space desired.

Therefore THE WITNESS stands for service, not profit—perhaps loss—but by all means efficient service in all the activities of the Church. And she is bound to win.

Among the many plans used during the past year to increase circulation two stand out prominently as the most practical and successful. We commend them for use during 1918:

1. Have a WITNESS table near the door of the Church for a period of three months, on which copies are placed each week, and a card hung over the table inviting the people to become acquainted with THE WITNESS; to leave three cents and take a copy. In some places a couple of girls from the Junior Auxiliary stand at the table as the people pass out and sell the papers. The selling price is about twice the cost to the Parish and increases the funds of some Guild.

2. The Rector sends a list of every family in the Parish, and we mail a copy to each address and enclose a small envelope asking that a dollar be placed in it and be placed on the alms basin the next Sunday morning. The Rector pays for these papers at the rate of $2.00 a hundred and retains 20 cents from each dollar paid. So if only one in ten responds the advance is returned, and all in excess of this proportion goes to some object of Parish work.

But both plans require that some organization make a vigorous canvass for subscriptions to secure the best results.

Every Parish and Mission in the land can adopt one of these methods. Both methods pay their way and bring THE WITNESS with influence to the attention of Church people.

As the Publisher, I am glad to add my word to what our Board of Editors are saying in this Anniversary number, asking all who read this issue to remember our aim—to reach every Church family every week—and to help us accomplish it just as soon as possible.

L. W. APPLEGATE,
Publisher.

Anniversary of Rector Celebrated

The tenth anniversary of the Rectorship of the Rev. G. F. G. Hoyt as Rector of St. Paul's Church, Columbia, was celebrated on Wednesday evening, Dec. 19. About 300 parishioners and friends of the Parish gathered to do honor to the occasion. Bishop Darlington was present and made an address of congratulation. He was followed by a Russian artist, Dimitri Romanoffsky, who spoke on conditions in Russia. Congratulatory addresses were also made by neighboring clergy and various ministers of the town. Mr. H. M. North, a Vestryman, introduced Mrs. Harsh, who presented Mrs. Hoyt a gold pin set with jewels on behalf of the women of the Parish. Mr. North presented Mr. Hoyt with a purse well filled with gold on behalf of the members of the congregation. The Bishop, in his address, read a letter from the Board of Missions of the Diocese, which referred to the spirit shown by this congregation toward its work. The Sunday School has held the Banner which the Board awards annually to the School that contributes most per capita to Diocesan Missions, for three years in succession.

New Way of Keeping a Congregation Awake

Bishop Burleson of South Dakota announces, in his diary of visitations, that he has "discovered a new way of keeping a congregation awake during the sermon." "While preaching on a recent Monday evening in St. Philip's Church, Armour, S. D.," he says, "my alarm clock, which had failed to go off for Dean Woodruff the previous Friday, got busy and rang, intermittently, in my suitcase, until it ran down. The congregation showed splendid self-control. There were a large number out, about a dozen of them children, and they didn't let out even a titter. One young lady confessed, afterwards, that if it had rung "just once more" she would have had hysterics.

OUR GOAL

There is a sentence in St. Paul's Epistles which seems to be an excellent slogan for the new year.

It runs thus: "Forgetting those things that are behind, let us press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus our Lord."

There was something wonderfully brave about St. Paul. And these words seem to me to describe the secret of his courage. Nothing daunted him for his was a work of love.

He was not working for popular appreciation, nor for emoluments of office, nor even for successful results.

It was the love of Christ which constrained him. He toiled not for any prize but for the goal.

His was the slogan of a good runner.

He did not look back at either success or failure; he did not look around for either approval or disapproval; he did not look forward to anything which he was to gain; he just kept his eye on the mark, and there is no question as to what the mark was. It was the glorious person of his Master.

He was perfectly willing to lose the prize of life, if he could serve faithfully the object of his devotion.

A single hearted purpose that does not look back; which is not puffed up by any success it may have secured; which is not depressed by any failure or disappointment; which serves joyfully, faithfully, because of a great consuming love.

How little other lives become when seen in the same perspective!

The mercenary merchant, the pompous priest, the autocratic aristocrat,—they all thought him a fool, but St. Paul cared for their opinion not at all, for he was moved by a consuming love for the Master who died for him, and so he counted all but dross compared with this absorbing love. For nothing could be let come between that love and himself. It is the only true motive for the Christian life. If we could utter that one simple sentence but three times a day, "O Christ I love thee," how it would illumine our despair; how it would humble our pride; how it would mitigate our trials; how it would sustain our faith!

RT. REV. IRVING P. JOHNSON, D. D.,
Editor-in-Chief

Surely we could do all things through the strength which His grace supplies in response to that love. For if we try and fail, He knows that we did it for love of Him; and if we try and succeed, He knows that it has succeeded through the grace that His love has supplied.

And so may we all live this year that Christ may dwell in us and we in Him.

OUR EFFORT

I am sure that I speak for all the Editors of THE WITNESS when I extend a New Year's greeting to our readers. As Editors we seldom see one another, but we have been animated by a common desire and united in a common hope.

We have tried to give to those who love Christ and the Church a paper which should aim to do one thing, and that is to instruct, to cheer, to stir up the household of faith.

We have been limited in capital, we have been limited in ability, we have been hampered by the difficulty of suiting all classes of our readers. But we have been animated by a single motive and that is to exist for Christ and His Church, and by His grace we have survived the first year. We enter upon the second year, forgetting all that is behind and seeking one thing, and that is to be faithful witnesses to Him.

As Editor-in-Chief I have received many notes of approval, many notes of critical disapproval. I hoped for the one, and expected the other.

The success has been no greater, the failure no worse than I expected, for like the Irishman who went fishing, "I have not caught as many as I expected, and I never thought that I would."

The Board of Editors will have their first annual meeting in person or by proxy at the Consecration of the Rev. John C. Sage on January 17th.

Positions will be reassigned at that meeting, and according to the agreement with which we began, any position is subject to change, for each Editor is working for a dollar a year, and each one is liable to have his salary cut off at any time.

Personally any of us would be glad to lay down our responsibility and for aught that I know any of us would be willing to continue.

Again the real test will come with the renewal of your subscriptions and with the interest shown in new subscriptions.

As an organization the Episcopal Church is extremely polite even in its martyrdoms, and extremely local in its enthusiasms.

We love the Parish Church in which we were baptized, confirmed or married, and we are rather particular about being buried by a Church Clergyman.

Between these limits of interest we are not imprudent in our enthusiasms. It is really difficult to say just how much interest our venture may have awakened. At any rate we are your servants to do your bidding during the coming year, and whether you read or whether you forbear, may this New Year bring to each and all of the members of our household, whether in home or camp, the love of Christ and undying devotion to His Bride, the Church, for which He died and in which He rose to a new and more radiant life.

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God."

Everyday Religion

By Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

JESUS CHRIST THE LIBERATOR

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Victor Hugo, France's incomparable author, once wrote:

"The first tree of liberty was planted eighteen centuries ago by God Himself on Golgotha. The first tree of liberty was that cross on which Jesus Christ was offered, a sacrifice for the liberty, equality and fraternity of the human race."

That Jesus Christ should be accorded a place among the world's emancipators may, on first consideration, seem strange, but we believe that in no aspect of His life, other than that of the world's Saviour, does He come so close to the heart of humanity as in the role of the world's liberator. One of the great purposes of His life, as He repeatedly asserted, was the liberation of men from the thralldoms that had restrained and shackled them through the ages. He touched with His Divine hand the chain that bound man to a past full of crude and arbitrary conceptions of God and life's obligations. We believe that in three conspicuous ways Christ witnesses to the high place of leadership as the liberator of men.

First, He is the liberator of men from the thralldoms of human philosophies. Second, He is the liberator of men from the thralldom of sin. That the world at the coming of Christ was rich in philosophy, and that it had many noble and inspiring religious systems, no one would venture for an instant to deny. Notwithstanding this, the world had largely lost the inspiration of a true and deep religious faith. It had substituted the teachings of men for the commandments of God. It was vainly seeking to satisfy the human heart with traditions and customs. A shackled mind, a restrained aspiration, and a forsaken hope—these the root causes of the world's bitterness. The world had lost its great vision. Jesus came declaring this eternal word, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." He brought the only thing that could make men free, truth—the great emancipating power in human life. What it has done for the betterment of human institutions, what it has done for the amelioration of the sufferings of men, what it has done for the elevation of womanhood and the conservation of childhood, what it has done for the world's genius in its every form and expression, let the certain voice of history declare.

Again, Christ is the liberator of men from the slavery of fear. The influence of fear-thought upon life is so evident as to need no demonstration. Free men from the burdening anxiety of a doubtful present and unknown future, give to every day an objective, and to time a destiny possible of attainment, and you have plucked the thorn from life's pathway, and for foreboding fear substituted triumphant hope. A life full of fear is a life full of weakness. For what Carlyle called an "absentee God", Jesus gave us the conception of an ever-present Father. He took away the fear of death, and of "that bourne from whence no traveler returns". He gave us new conceptions and larger visions. "He brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel."

Finally, Jesus freed man from the thralldom of sin. "He knew what was in man." He penetrated beneath his rough and rude exterior and to man's vision disclosed the latent capacities within. He lifted a fallen creature from her degradation. He plucked her from her shame, and on her brow He placed the diadem of hope. The emancipating power of Jesus is the mightiest miracle of the New Testament, and it is a miracle that is as operative today as when He walked here on earth. We are the witnesses daily of "twice-born men". Jesus, the Liberator, is exercising His emancipating power more widely and effectively today than ever before, and the dark shadows of slavery are fleeing before His face and giving promise of that new morning when the world shall be free.—Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

Will You Help Your Friend?

We have something to offer to your friend. We know that every sincere man and woman who is trying to face the problems and temptations of life squarely becomes painfully aware of the weaknesses of human nature, and the difficulty of keeping on the track. God knows this, too. He wants to help all of His children. He has promised His aid to all who will ask it. Every one may have it if he will come for it. But God does not force it upon those who are unwilling.

Have you a friend who feels the need of spiritual help? Have you ever spoken to him, as you have observed the need of it in his life? Have you ever told him what God has done for you, and assured him that He will help him- too, if only he will come to Him for help?

Just as surely as the Sacraments have strengthened you; just as truly as the Holy Communion has brought Divine power into your life, it will bring it to your friend. But he may never know about it unless you tell him. God depends upon us, whom He has helped, to tell other people, and to bring them to Him.

Will you tell your friend about the Confirmation Instructions in your Parish? Ask him to come with you and learn what God offers, how the Church can help him meet his temptations and develop his spiritual powers, and also learn some of the great truths, told in a simple way, of our religion. Tell your God-children about it, too, and bring or send them to the children's classes after school. —Charles Herbert Young.

The Rev. Louis G. Wood of Charleston, S. C., who gave a number of addresses recently at Duluth, Minn., preparatory to the every-member canvass made by the several Parishes of that city, said: "I have found in a most gratifying measure that Duluthians' hearts are warmer than their climate." There is a big difference in the weather in South Carolina and Minnesota, but the hearts of the people are as warm in the one State as in the other.

future ahead. In common with many others I have followed with interest and satisfaction the good work that "The Witness" is doing. That you have fallen short of your ideals is another way of saying that you have something worth living for. Year by year you will come nearer to realizing those ideals. Meanwhile, you will all have the immense satisfaction of knowing that you are putting into the hands of the people of the Church an alive, readable, informing journal, and that you are doing it 52 times a year. That is no small achievement, as anybody who has had anything to do with Church journalism especially, will know.

Long life to The Witness and its editors. Better still, many years of effective service for the King and the Kingdom.

Sincerely yours,
JOHN W. WOOD.

My dear Dr. Sage:

I am glad to congratulate you on the completion of the first year of The Witness. The paper is excellent and for the first year especially it reflects great credit upon the editors. I hope that it will continue, for I think it fills a need, particularly in many of our rural and small Parishes.

Wishing you every joy of the season, I am,

Sincerely yours,
FLOYD W. TOMPKINS.

A beautiful Christmas folder was forwarded to the "boys" in war service from St. Luke's Parish, Scranton, Pa., containing a photograph of the Sanctuary of the side Altar, with the Service Flag above, and the names of those on the Honor Roll, which hangs in the vestibule of the Church. There are sixty-two names on the Honor Roll, including the Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, D. D., Bishop of Erie, the Rev. Sidney K. Evans, the Rev. Roy I. Murry and the Rev. Frederick P. Houghton. On one page of the folder it is stated that "the prayers of the old Parish Church are constantly offered for those who are absent serving their country, on land, on sea, and in the air". The Rev. Robert P. Kreitler is the Rector of St. Luke's Church.

THE KINGDOM GROWING; CHURCH EXTENSION IN OUR DAY

The Witness Stresses Church Extension

THE PAPER

The purpose which lies back of this column is the very same, with departmental restrictions in its expression, as that which lies back of the establishment of THE WITNESS itself. For THE WITNESS is but an essay in Church Extension. The whole hope and idea which lies back of and beneath it are missionary and nothing else. It was never intended to be in any sense a rival to existing Church papers. No one who reads it can, for a moment, sanely suppose that it is an organ of any party within the Church. No one acquainted with the subscription price can think that there is any money in it for anybody. Suspicion itself upon the basis of any evidence ever appearing in any issue of THE WITNESS can present no case in which any inferior motive appears in the conception or conduct of this enterprise. The one fundamental, ever-continuing and unadulterated thought back of THE WITNESS was and is to provide a Church paper that is cheap enough, interesting enough, temperate enough and instructive enough to obtain a welcome and retain a regard, first, in that vast number of Church families that never see a general Church paper from one year's end to another's, and, second, in another great number of homes that are being affected Churchwise by personal missionary labor—to obtain a welcome and retain a regard not for itself as an end in itself but for the Church that it exists only to serve. If this be not an honest effort to serve the cause of Church extension, then to what class of endeavor does it belong?

THE COLUMN

Bearing in mind, therefore, the purpose of the paper it would seem to follow that the ordinary limits implied by the term "Church Extension" may be at times sufficiently moved outward so as to include not only its ordinary content of Church achievement but also plans, hopes, discussions and even dreams looking in the same general direction. As a matter of fact this column has largely kept to the setting forth of things actually done in the different dioceses and to this end the diocesan papers so considerately and generously provided by their publishers have been ransacked for news of this character. There is a comforting sense of security accompanying the chronicling of facts which diminishes when one enters the sphere of plans untried, of dreams unrealized, of opinions unverified and of suggestions incapable of general application. But obviously no progress can ever be made if it be required that the execution of an idea must precede its entertainment.

PLANS

It ought not to be overlooked that the source of Extension of any sort, humanly speaking, lies in the idea. Never a nail has been driven but that the fabric which it secures previously resided in the idea. Therefore to limit the treatment of Church Extension to records of accomplished fact is to dwarf the subject and to ignore a valuable body of suggestion, inspiration and even information itself. Many a man has thought out more or less a plan well worth while and yet never found himself in a position such that he could carry it into effect. This column would gladly set such forth. Some of its readers might find themselves more advantageously placed.

DREAMS

Again many a man dreams dreams the realization of which he seems constitutionally inhibited from attempting. Joseph is a very exceptional character. And it is quite possible that if he had had to build his own ware-houses, as so many of us have to do, we should never have heard of him. But the case is still more to the point than that. While Joseph was not inferior in dreaming ability himself he achieved eminence and saved a nation not at all by or through his own dreams but by action appropriate to the dreams of another. Most of the things worth while in any department of human activity were not originally thought of and performed by one man. The General Convention is hardly likely to establish as a department in the Church a dreaming bureau for some years to come. It might not be so absurd after all if the dreams were given currency. There is an institution over in Italy called the Vatican where something akin to this has for a long time been in operation, not without advantage from the Roman point of view. But that which the Convention might shrink from this column of THE WITNESS is willing to undertake. Let the man who dreams dreams along the line of Church Extension take confidence, write out and send us his dream.

LOCAL ACCOMPLISHMENTS

But aside from all the above there is a great amount of constructive work that is being done here and there of which the general Church never hears but which would profit Her greatly were it more than locally known. It is often very difficult to induce the man who is doing something to stop long enough to talk about what he is doing. More than that such men are frequently temperamentally opposed to writing and talking about their work because it is so intimately identified with themselves that to speak of the former seems like commending the latter. If a man feel this way it is hopeless to attempt to persuade him for he is subject to a power that is virtually beyond himself. Appeal has already been made in this column to men engaged in encouraging experiments and activities to give us an opportunity to a little more widely reveal their methods and results. But the appeal drew little response. Such an appeal, however, is made only for the sake of the Church and because it is for the sake of the Church we are emboldened to make it again. Please tell us what you are doing that more of us may adopt or adapt your work if we can.

DIOCESAN PAPERS

As indicated above, the Diocesan Papers have been our great foraging ground for news for this column. By no means all that is going on of interest and value in a Diocese is recorded in its paper. Nevertheless much that is of both interest and value is there recorded and such news we have freely used, taking for granted, and so far without protest, liberty to use what we might. This source, together with occasional foreign items from the Board of Missions, and a still more occasional Missionary letter, has provided the bulk of what this column so far has had to give.

THE FUTURE

It takes some time, however, to establish consciousness of anything. Not all of us are yet quite conscious that we are at war, or, indeed, that there is any war at all. It is not, therefore, surprising that the hope, purpose or even the existence itself of THE WITNESS are unknown to many and not potently operative in the minds of many others who would sympathetically and effectively help if they realized even approximately what the paper stands for and what it is trying to do. When this time comes, as it will come, for we have faith to continue, the column given to Church Extension should be and will be of constructive value. Of all the departments of the paper it is the one, outside of the straight news columns, where co-operation is most imperatively needed. No man out of his own resources can long supply and conduct a column worthy of this name. There are hundreds of men and women in the Church today whose contribution to this column would make it of surpassing interest and of great value. Nothing is too little and nothing is too big. The potency of the Church today exactly equals the sum of all things, both great and small. More than that, the scale of God shows some things to have a magnitude not indicated by current estimation.

And so as THE WITNESS closes its first year of life and with the New Year begins another, we find ourselves in good hope that the year that is past has extended a knowledge of its purpose and established a confidence in its aims that will bring to it more freely communications regarding the tillage of the Great Field to the end that no part of that Field may lie fallow for the lack of knowledge on the part of some that others may have to give. Such is our hope for the by and by use of the column for Church Extension.

Personal Mention

The Rev. T. W. C. Cheesman has resigned as Rector of St. Paul's Church, Pekin, Ill., and accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Palmyra, Mo.

The Rev. Herbert C. Dana, Rector of St. Mary's Church, East Providence, R. I., slipped on an icy sidewalk Dec. 12, sustaining a compound fracture of the right leg.

The Rev. G. M. Brewin of Holy Trinity, Manistee, Mich., has resigned to accept a call to the Church of the Evangelist, Oswego, N. Y.

The Rev. W. H. Jordan, the Rector of Grand Ledge Parish, Michigan, has resigned and accepted a call from another Diocese.

The Rev. John McKinney, formerly of Janesville, Wis., has assumed charge of Christ Church, Burlington, Ia., as its Rector.

The Rev. R. Y. Barber has resigned St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, Texas, and has taken charge of Grace Church, Chanute, Kansas.

The Rev. James Stuart Neill, formerly Rector of St. Matthew's Church, Brooklyn Manor, L. I., assumed charge of St. Mary's Church, South Manchester, Conn., the first of this month.

The funeral services for the late United States Senator Francis G. Newlands of Nevada were held at St. Alban's Church, Washington, D. C., on Dec. 26, the Rev. C. T. Warner, Rector of the Parish, officiating.

The Hon. Josephus Daniels may not be an A. B. seaman, but he knows that the officers and sailors and marines of the U. S. N. sail better, shoot straighter and fight with more vim and vigor on water both internally and externally.—Temperance.

The Rev. Elmer N. Owen, Rector of St. George's Church, Maplewood, N. J., has accepted a call to St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Des Moines, Iowa, and will enter upon his new work the first of February.

Mr. Anthony P. Parsely, a candidate for Holy Orders in the Diocese of East Carolina, and student at the Virginia Theological Seminary, has been granted a leave of absence and will serve during the war as Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. He expects to be at the front in France at an early date.

The Rev. John Carroll Poland, Jr., Assistant to the Rev. Charles E. Jackson, Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Fall River, Mass., has resigned and enlisted in the radio service of the Naval Reserves, and has reported for duty at the Charlestown Navy yard.

Miss Henrietta Mueller of Jackson, Mo., and the Rev. Horatio N Tragitt, Rector of Grace Church, Capital City, Mo., were united in the bonds of Holy Matrimony Wednesday, Dec. 12, at the home of the bride's parents, the Rev. H. Nelson Tragitt, father of the groom, officiating.

Flag Dedicated and Raised at Sheboygan, Michigan

A Service Flag was dedicated and raised at Grace Church, Sheboygan, Mich., recently, with appropriate services. A local paper states that the flag was given by the children of the Parish, and was presented on behalf of the children by Eusebius Garton, Edward Ewer, Nancy Garton and Harriet Weeden.

Holding the flag by the four corners, they marched up the aisle and presented it to the Rector, the Rev. B. P. T. Jenkins, at the sanctuary steps, saying in unison, "We, the children of Grace Church Parish, present this Service Flag in honor of our brothers who are in the Military and Naval service of our beloved country." The Rector made a short speech of acceptance.

The flag was then carried to the Altar and blessed, as follows: "O God, whose blessed Son, Jesus Christ, came down from heaven to minister to the children of men, not to be ministered unto, and who, for us men and for our salvation was obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross; Bless, we beseech Thee, this flag, which we bless in Thy name, and grant that our brothers here represented, each by a star, may serve Thee, our God, and their country, obediently and faithfully, and fight a good fight for the holy ideals for which the nation is contending. We ask this in the name of the same Jesus Christ our Lord, who with Thee and the Holy Ghost livest and reignest ever, one God, world without end. Amen."

After the service the flag was raised on the pole on the Church tower.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

A Religious Workers' Conference has been organized at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Mich. The Rev. William Heilman, Civilian Chaplain of the Church War Commission, was elected Secretary.

"We have one of the most active and successful Wardens in South Dakota here, and she is a woman," says the Rev. R. P. Eubanks, Priest-in-Charge of Christ Church, Gettysburg, S. D.

Recently a community song service was held in Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., and from the hearty response of the congregation and many others it is felt that the song service fills a need of these war times. Another one will be held some time in January.

The Church of the Epiphany, Chicago, will celebrate its golden jubilee at an early date. Bishop Morrison of Iowa was Rector of the Church of the Epiphany for many years before he was elected a Bishop. The Rev. Herbert W. Prince is the present Rector.

Four hundred and thirty-four Communions were made at the midnight service on Christmas Eve in St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill, and the open offering amounted to $3,800. A special offering of $5,000 toward the new Parish House was made by an anonymous donor.

According to a dispatch from the capital of Russia to the Londan Daily Mail, a new law has been drafted and published in Petrograd abolishing Church marriages, recognizing only civil ceremonies; illegitimate children are given the same rights as legitimate; divorce is made easy, and burials in consecrated ground without a religious ceremony is allowed.

Ex-President Roosevelt attended the Christmas Festival of the Sunday School in Christ Church, Oyster Bay, N. Y. and urged every one to take an active part in the war. He complimented the children for giving up presents in order to send money to Belgium.

The corner stone of the handsome new Church edifice of Trinity Parish, Houston, Texas, which will cost, when completed, $80,000, was laid on Sunday, Dec. 16. Bishop Kinsolving officiated and gave the address. He was assisted by the Rector, the Rev. Clinton S. Quinn.

The Rev. D. A. Cassetta, in charge of Christ Church, Lynbrook, L. I., and members of the Mission are rejoicing over the cancellation of the mortgage on the Church. The mortgage, which originally amounted to $4,000, was reduced one-half some time ago, and has now been paid in full.

The Rev. R. H. Fairchild, Rector of Emmanuel Church, Fairbury, Neb., says: "When the nation calls, they who respond are patriots, they who shirk are slackers, they who enlist and leave the ranks are deserters, they who fail through fear are cowards, they who oppose the fight are traitors. Jesus Christ the Captain of our Salvation calls you to do your share to win the world for Him. Have you answered the call? If not, why not? To what class do you belong?"

An option has been secured upon a lot splendidly located near Ohio State University, Columbus, for the purpose of erecting thereon a Chapel for work among Church students at the University. This work is at present being carried on as a Diocesan Mission, under the charge of the Rev. Frederick C. Randolph. The Church people of that vicinity are giving Mr. Randolph their enthusiastic support in this work, and prospects are bright for the development of a strong University Parish Church in the near future.

On January 13th the Union Epiphany rally of the Sunday Schools of the Church in Grand Rapids, Mich., will be held. All the Sunday Schools in the Diocese are invited to take part in this Missionary rally, which begins the Lenten Mite Box drive. It is expected that a large number of delegates will be present. This will culminate in the rally on the Sunday after Easter, when all the Sunday Schools of the Diocese will present their offerings at St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral in Grand Rapids. It is hoped that the Bishop will be home from his war work in France, and thus make it possible to unite the rally with a home-coming celebration for the Bishop.

Trinity Church, London, Ohio, has lately completed extensive improvements, costing about $500. The basement of the Church was so altered and rebuilt as to fit it for use as a social center for the Parish. A kitchen was installed, and an assembly room, which will seat over a hundred people was finished and equipped for dining room purposes. A new Choir room has been provided for and toilet facilities have been added. During the past Summer the whole Church building was repainted. Trinity is one of the fast growing Missions of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, under the charge of the Rev. Frederick Fisher.

A most successful eight-day Preaching Mission was conducted at St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling W. Va., the first week in December by the Rev. William Porkess, Rector of Grace Church, Pittsburgh, Pa. The Parish Record states that the Mission brought together many who probably would not have gone to Church at all, and was the means of arousing a deep interest in spiritual affairs. "Mr. Porkess has the happy faculty of using illustrations that communicate knowledge and instruction, all showing a mind deeply imbued with the spirit of piety, ardently desirous to instruct and bring his applications home to his hearers. His earnestness carried conviction with all he said."

The members of Trinity Church, Lawrenceburg, Ind., are rejoicing over the remarkable results obtained from an every-member canvass which has just been completed. The number of pledges for the support of the local work was increased over 60 per cent, and the amount pledged by over 70 per cent. The number of persons making pledges for Missions was increased 128 per cent, and an increase of 360 per cent was made in the amount pledged. The canvass was made under the direction of the Parish Finance Committee, and they strongly recommend the every-member canvass as a means of increasing interest in all branches of Church activities. The spiritual as well as the financial work of the Parish has been revived. The Rector, the Rev. H. M. Kellam, has reorganized a Troop of Boy Scouts, which is increasing steadily in membership and effectiveness. The Woman's Guild is in a flourishing condition, and will be able at an early date to make the final payment on the new Parish Hall. The attendance at the services is increasing, and the Parish has taken on new life. Due to the shortage of coal, the week-day celebration of the Holy Communion is held at the home of the Rector.

Children Are Just Children, Not Little Grown-ups

Mrs. Irene F. Touret, wife of the Bishop of Western Colorado, and Associate Editor of the Western Evangel, in a letter to all the teachers of the little children in the Church Schools of the District, says: "One of the first things we must recognize is that we are not dealing in our Church School classes with little grown-ups, but that the children we are dealing with are just children, and that they take in things according to their capacity. We would not expect a bushel to go into a pint measure. We cannot expect children of the primary age to get much more than impressions. We may teach them texts, prayers, tell them stories, show them pictures; but what they get is a residue of impressions that go to make up the mind-stuff they carry through their lives. Apperception is a deep name for this—a great law, that we add every new impression to the impressions we have already in our minds, and interpret life by what we have of mind content at any given moment. This puts a great responsibility upon us teachers, does it not? We are to do what we can to make God our Father known to each little child, not so much by what we say as by what we are. We may say things—we may teach lessons; but, after all, what sticks in the child's mind—what makes up his mind content—is what we are, what we feel, the atmosphere we create. Church School should be to him a place where he loves to go—a place which he regards with the same respect and feeling he has for his day school or kindergarten."

The Morning Glory

When the soldiers are in camp or on the field of battle there is always one soldier whose duty it is to sound a trumpet each morning to proclaim the dawn and call his comrades from their sleep, and this is what his trumpet says:

"I can't get 'em up, I can't get 'em up, I can't get 'em up in the morning—I can't get 'em up at all."

Out on my garden wall is a dear blue flower called Morning Glory. The first of all the flowers to awake, the flower that sounds a trumpet sweet to call his comrade blossoms from their sleep, and bids them greet the day with sunny smile and perfume rare. And it is thus the Morning Glory calls:

"Awake! Awake! the dawn begins to peep, Awake, dear flowers, awaken out of sleep."

Then blossom after blossom at his call awakes, and unfolding its petals shows a fresh and smiling face. Each little head shakes off the dew of night and nods "Good Morning" to the flowers, the bees and the butterflies and birds. And when the flowers are all awake and started on their daily work, the Morning Glory puts his trumpet in a sheath and off he goes to slumber sweet, nor ever makes a sound till day and night are passed, and dawn appears again.

Jerusalem

THE HOLY CITY'S CHECKERED HISTORY

The romance of the Christian religion has been brought before the world in a most striking and thrilling way, by the conquest of the Holy City, and its deliverance from Mahometan captivity. When on December 10th, Major General Francis Allenby of the British army, quietly entered the ancient walls of Jerusalem, supported by officers of the allied armies, his name became enrolled with a long list of valiant and distinguished men, Wellington, Gordon, Kitchener, French, and Haig.

The deliverance of Jerusalem from subjection to the flag of the crescent, and the political flinging to the air of the flag of the Cross is an impressive manifestation of the strange and varied interpretation of prophecy. "The Lord  shall suddenly come to His temple." The modes of Christ's presence are many and while, sacramentally, His unseen Presence has haunted Salem this Christmas, in a different way, Christ is again within the City Beautiful which He loved so well. Doubtless, countless Eucharists will be offered from the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same, in glad and joyous thanksgiving.

Jerusalem is the most important city in biblical history, the most sacred city in the world, and also the most desecrated. It is situated near the summit of the mountains which form the watershed of the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea. The Valley of Kedron is on the east; on the west and south the valley of Hinnom. Across the valley of Hinnom and south of Mount Zion is the Hill of Evil Counsel where Judas is reputed to have bargained for the betrayal of the Redeemer. Upon the slope of this hill is Aceldama, the Field of Blood. East of Jerusalem rises the Mount of Olives and the Mount of the Ascension. Farther to the south is the Mount of Offence, so called from being the seat of Solomon's idol of worship.

The Salem of Melchizedek, Jerusalem means the inheritance or the possession of peace. It is the city of David and of Zion, the city of Judah, the city of God, the city of the great King, the Holy City. It has also been called Jebus and Jebusi. As Jerusalem it first appears in Joshua 10:1. In the Latin Version it is Hierosolyma. Hadrian named it Aelia Capitolina. The Turks, Arabs, and Mohomedans call it El-Khuds, meaning "the holy" or Beit-el-Makhudis, "the holy house."

David, when King of Israel, made Jerusalem his capital. As the seat of one of the most noted of eastern empires, the beautiful city took rank with Babylon, Nineveh, and Tyre. Here Solomon built the Temple aided by Hiram, King of Tyre. Here too Solomon built himself a magnificant palace, and held his court, with a splendor unrivalled for magnifiicence and brilliancy by any of the noted capitals of the East.

Jerusalem was besieged and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, B. C. 586, the city was made a heap of rubbish, and for fifty years lay in ruins.

The Temple was rebuilt under Cyrus the Persian, and again made habitable. B. C. 332 Alexander the Great visited the City and the prophecies of Daniel, predicting the overthrow of Persia by the Greeks, was read to him by the high priest. In B. C. 203, Jerusalem was taken by Antiochus the Great. A few years later Antiochus Epiphanies made every effort to destroy the Hebrew religion; the holy place of the temple was polluted, the sanctuary desecrated. Under Judas Maccabeus a large army was raised and the Jews reentered Jerusalem B. C. 165.

Tribute to Dean Kinkead of Salina

The Daily Union, published at Salina, Kansas, comments as follows editorially upon Dean Kinkead's departure from that city to engage in war service:

"Every one who has enjoyed personal acquaintance with Dean Kinkead regrets that his conception of duty takes him away from Salina to serve the cause of humanity in France. It was not necessary for this man to cross the Atlantic ocean to enlist in the service of his fellow men; he has been in that service every hour of his active life, and certainly every hour of his residence in Salina. But the regret that we all feel is purely personal and private. We all rejoice that the Dean is able to follow his inclinations and serve our country and mankind in France. It is his heart's desire and ambition to do the work that he has chosen on the battle front, and we who are his friends must submerge our personal feelings and rejoice that another brave heart has followed its impulses and aspirations for a field of larger service.

"The quiet, kindly, helpful ministry of George B. Kinkead has made better men and better women of all who have had the privilege of knowing him. His work with the young people, especially with the boys of this city, has made him the best loved and appreciated friend of many households in Salina. Endowed with all the things that most men crave in this life, health, strength, high social position, a liberal education and independent means, he early banished or buried every personal ambition and devoted himself to the service of the Church and of humanity. His great spiritual strength, the unbreakable rock of his convictions, the purity of his character, have been a help and inspiration to us all.

"Every one who knows Dean Kinkead bids him God-speed on his mission of helpfulness and service, and all will pray daily that he be spared in health and strength to return and resume the work in which he has been so helpful and useful in this city.'

The Rev. Dr. Frederick Gardiner Dies Suddenly

An attack of heart trouble caused the death on Friday evening, Dec. 7, of the Rev. Frederick Gardiner, L. H. D., a retired priest of the Church, residing at Philadelphia. He was cranking his automobile, when h collapsed, and died shortly afterwards, aged 60 years. Dr. Gardiner was a graduate of Harvard University, received his theological training at Berkeley and the Episcopal Theological Seminary, and was ordained Deacon in 1885 by Bishop Williams, and Priested in the following year by Bishop Hare. He held Rectorships for some time in South Dakota and Connecticut, was Rector for a time of Pomfret School, Connecticut, and for fifteen years served as instructor and Headmaster of Yeats School, Lancaster, Pa, resigning to become Educational Secretary of the Episcopal Schools and Colleges of the Province of Washington. His widow, two sons and a daughter survive him. The funeral took place from St. Timothy's Church, Philadelphia, on Monday, Dec. 9.

The Southern Churchman Greatly Improved

It is a pleasure to note the great improvement recently made in the Southern Churchman. It is printed on a much better quality of paper than heretofore, and more attention is being given to its mechanical make-up. It will be strengthened at an early date in every department, and its usefulness enhanced by a larger corps of editors. In order to meet the increase in the cost of publishing the paper, the rate of subscription will be advanced on Jan. 1 to $3 per year for the laity and $2 per year for the clergy. To branch out so extensively in the face of war prices shows a strong faith on the part of the publishers in their subscribers and advertisers, and in the field from which they must draw their support. The Rev. Dr. Goodwin, who is the Editor, is making the Southern Churchman a first class family Church paper, and we are glad to speak a good word for it. We congratulate the publishers and wish them every success in their new undertaking.

Bible Reading Gives Way to the Phonograph and the Movies

Not so long ago, says the Rev. W. M. Ford, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Montrose, Col., children grew up accustomed to hear the Bible read aloud by the head of the family. Now they hear the phonograph. The Bible, once reverenced by the whole household, is now ignored. The children that used to be thrilled by the adventures of Gideon and the daring exploits of David, are now excited by the movies. Those who used to gain a lasting impression of heroic words and deeds, now get a comic impression of Mutt and Jeff. And we Church people are not without blame. Why not read the Bible aloud at home again? Children need the Bible every day to stir their imagination and admiration,—we grown-ups were told to be like children. We need to absorb the worshipful spirit of this supreme book. No life is kept sane and true without worship.

Deanery Meeting in South Carolina

The Annual Convocation of the Second District of the Diocese of South Carolina was held in St. Bartholomew's Church, Hartsville, on Dec. 10-12. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. R. L. Merryman of Marion, who took for his theme, "Teach Us How to Pray". The Rev. G. K. Finlay, Dean of the Convocation and Rector of Trinity Church, presided at the several conferences. At the conference of "The Church in Time of War—Its opportunities and Responsibilities at Home", the Rev. E. A. Penick, Rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, led in the discussion, followed by the Rev. A. G. B. Bennett, Rector of St. John's Church, Columbia. At the second conference, on "The Church in Time of War—Its Opportunities and Responsibilities Abroad", the Rev. J. B. Walker, Rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Sumter, led in the discussion. "Social Service" was the subject of a sermon preached by the Rev. G. C. Williams, Rector of St. John's Church, Charleston. A meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions of the District was held in connection with the Convocation. "The Problems of Small Branches", "Food Conservation" and "Religious Education" were among the subjects discussed. The following clergy of the District and members of the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary were in attendance:

Dean of the Convocation, the Rev. K. G. Finlay of Columbia, the Rev. E. A. Penick of Columbia, the Rev. Bramwell Bennett of Columbia, the Rev. T. Croft Williams of Charleston, the Rev. J. B. Walker of Sumter, the Rev. R. L. Merryman of Marion, the Rev. A. E. Evison of Columbia, and the Rev. A. S. Thomas of Cheraw. The members of the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary present were: President, Miss Kate Lee of Charleston; Mrs. D. D. Taber of Columbia, Miss M. P. Ford of Aiken and Miss Virginia Singleton of Columbia.

No Time for Counting

An authentic incident of recent occurrence suggests itself as apropos of the spiritual crisis of the moment. A Church lad, well brought up in the Faith, while away from his parents, was under the necessity of an immediate and critical operation. No time could be allowed for friends or relations to come, and the surgeons proceeded with their preparations for operating. The anasthetic was about to be administered, and the doctors directed, according to their habit, that the boy should count as he inhaled the ether. But the boy, clearly understanding the seriousness of the situation, and that he might never recover consciousness in this world, replied: "This is no time for counting. I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth," and so on with the Apostles' Creed, until the anesthetic took effect. What mattered to him was that whether he lived or died, he should live or die in the Faith of Christ, as authoritatively declared by the Catholic Church.

The present is no time for counting, for marking time, for waiting to see how things are going in the world. The duty of the Church and of every individual member is to uphold and exemplify the Faith once for all delivered to the saints.—Maryland Churchman.

Dedication of Church in Vermont

The new St. Barnabas' Church, Norwich, Vermont, was solemnly dedicated on the fourth Sunday in Advent by the Rt. Rev. George Y. Bliss, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Vermont, assisted by the Rev. Frederick J. Buttery, Priest-in-Charge. Much heartfelt gratitude was expressed by the congregation in having a new building erected so soon after the loss by fire of the old one on February 20, 1917. The new building is in the form of a cross, 85 feet long by 44 feet in width. The nave is 31 feet wide: The chancel is 20 by 40 feet, leaving ample room for the organ on the north side and a Vestry on the south side, thus completing a very practical and well-proportioned edifice. The architect was Mr. Hobart B. Upjohn of New York City, who very generously gave the plans, and the contractor was Mr. Walter H. Trumbull of Etna, N. H.. The hearty thanks of the Bishop, priest and people are extended to all who assisted in this work to the honor and glory of God.

An Episcopal Church Feed for Soldiers at Camp Custer

The following appreciative write-up of a dinner given at the Church Club House, Battle Creek, Mich., for soldiers at Camp Custer, appears in a recent number of the Camp Custer Bulletin, under the above caption and a large photogravure of the men seated at the tables in the dining hall:

"The Churches of Battle Creek are 'doing their bit' in the manner shown above, believing with Mr. Bonaparte, who claimed that soldiers did their fighting best when they were well fed. The photo shown was taken Saturday evening, Nov. 10, at the weekly feed put up by the Episcopal Church, and they are sure some feeds, if the expressions of the boys are to be taken as sincere.

"The affairs are not limited to the boys of the Episcopal faith, but are open to any man in a khaki uniform, irrespective of creed or faith. In fact, he doesn't necessarily have to have a creed.

"In addition to the work done by the local Church people, the War Commission of the Mother Church has installed a dandy club house for use by the boys when in the city. It is located immediately in the rear of the Church, and is open all day and during the evening. There the boys can drop in and rest after hiking around the city—shine their shoes, brush their hair, and doll up before going up to see 'her', or to write a letter to the 'her' they left behind.

"It is interesting to note that this is the only club house of its sort in the country. There are club rooms for soldiers in all the cantonments, just as there are here, and in one camp there is a building that has been built for the purpose, but that is of the same sort of construction as is used in the camp, rough and unfinished, and it is no change for the boys to go there. But this house is what was originally a private home, and it is fixed up with curtains at the windows, and easy chairs, and a piano, so that it is very homelike and inviting.

"Any soldier is welcome, as has been stated before, and will find those in charge to be anxious to help him in any way. Mr. Walenta comes here with a wide experience in various lines. He can play the piano for you (and it was real fun the other night to hear him and Mr. Archer, who has charge of the community singing, playing some duets), or he can help you with that French verb that has been bothering you. He can tell a story to perfection, and, what is more, he will do so on occasion.

"Mr. Heilman, the Soldiers' Pastor, is a man you will like to talk to, and you will find him ready to help you with your little perplexities."

The Church in Ohio Celebrates Its One Hundredth Anniversary

The centennial of the organization of the Church in Ohio is being celebrated today, January 5th, by appropriate services and exercises held in Trinity Church, Columbus, and St. John's Church, Worthington, Ohio. Trinity Church was selected as the place for the principal part of the celebration, because it was in the near vicinity of this Church, at the old Capitol House Hotel, where the delegates from the various Parishes met together to effect the Diocesan organization just one hundred years ago. The program included a celebration of the Holy Communion at 10:30 a. m., followed by a historical address by Dr. Smythe of Gambier. Luncheon will be served in Trinity Parish House, after which those who attend will be taken in chartered cars to Worthington, ten miles north of Columbus, where St. John's Church, the oldest Church west of the Allegheny Mountains, is located. Here concluding exercises will be held Bishop Vincent in charge, and an historical address will be made by Mr. Joseph Doyle. Representatives from all the Parishes which took part in the organization of the Ohio Diocese will bep resent.

Notes from Wyoming

St. Thomas' Church, Rawlins, has just cleared off the indebtedness on its new Parish House, thus putting the building in shape for dedication. This debt was wiped off just before Christmas, giving the people cause for much rejoicing and encouragement for the new year.

A handsome Altar desk has been presented to St. Andrew's Church, Basin, the gift of Mrs. Guy Craig.

The Rev. Rowland F. Philbrook, Christ Church, Glenrock, has been elected Secretary of the Glenrock Commercial Club.

The Rev. S. A. Huston, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne, attended a Conference of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, held in Washington, D. C. Dec. 19, 1917. Owing to the inability of State Commissioner Creager to attend this meeting, Mr. Huston went as President of the Wyoming State Board of Education The Conference was called as the result of a request from the Adjutant General for the co-operation of the Board in the development of a plan whereby the great number of young men called by draft might receive special training along definite lines, looking toward greater service to the country.

The work of teaching and the care of the Arapahoe children now at St. Michael's Mission, Wind River, Wyoming, is progressing splendidly under the supervision of Mrs. B. S. Cooper, who has always been the most untiring friend of the Mission, and who has now come to take charge of the teaching force. A number of new workers have been added to those already there, with the result that the children are receiving the best of instruction and care. Mrs. Cooper has charge of the teaching staff, and her home in the Glebe House is at all times open to the workers and scholars of the Mission. Miss Margery Downing, who is now grading the scholars, is Principal of the School, and is in charge of the older boys. Associated with her in this work is Miss Margaret Elliot, House Mother of Unit No. 2. The Kindergarten work in this unit is cared for by Miss Cora Edwards. Unit No. 1 is under the charge of the Misses Yarnell, as house mothers and teachers. Miss Bertha Adams is house mother of Unit No. 3, and teaches the " A B C" boys. Miss Ethel George is another of the teaching force of the Mission.

THE AIMS OF THE EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF THE WITNESS

A year has gone by since the first edition of THE WITNESS saw the light and the Editorial Department is taking stock and asking itself whether the experiment has been worth while.

Speaking of this particular department of Religious Education we are very frank to acknowledge that we have fallen far short of the ideals we started with. The pressure of a tremendous new task thrust upon one's shoulders has often proved too much for our page. We have failed in many respects in setting before the Church some of the things that ought to have been presented. The writing of the articles that have appeared has lacked polish and careful expression. Written on railroad trains and in hurried moments snatched out of a very busy life, they have been often rough and unpolished in their diction. With all of this criticism, however, which the writer very gladly and willingly makes upon himself, we still believe the paper has been worth while and that it has filled a real need in the life of the Church. The letters that have poured in from all sides have demonstrated the value of what we are trying to do, and more than repaid the labor of love in which the Editors are engaged.

We believe that the Church today is undergoing a slow sure process of revolution in thought and administration. The Faith once delivered to the Saints has not changed nor will it change through the ages. The living Church like Her living Master must in essence be the same yesterday, today and for ever. Yet the presentation and application of that truth of which she is the custodian must be shaped to fit the needs of the times.

First things must come First. Nothing is more encouraging than the new viewpoints that are being grasped and put into operation along the line of Religious Education of children. If the Church of tomorrow is to occupy the place of leadership that rightly belongs to her, the Church of today must realize that Her task of training child life is of supreme importance. The emphasis must be rightly placed here and we are happy in knowing that the rank and file of Clergy and Laity alike are beginning to see more and more clearly this truth.

The second great lesson the present days are teaching us slowly but surely is the value of organized co-operation for the accomplishment of a common task. When we can arouse the consciousness of the average man and woman alike to see the power of the Church lies in its ability to give them an opportunity to express the latent power that lies within each individual for service to God and to their fellowman then the life of the Church will grow by leaps and bounds. The Church is not simply a receiving station from which the individual Christian is to receive for himself as he comes into contact with God the help and strength that he needs for his own personal life, but rather it is a Power House from which there is to radiate through the individual Christian the life that will redeem humanity. The value of a human life is not to be measured by the things that go into it but from the things that come out of it. Our Lord Himself not only preached that eternal truth but demonstrated it by His own personal life. When we can catch the vision and make it a workable reality in the life of the man or woman who calls himself or herself a Christian then will the Kingdom we represent come into its own. If the Religious Education Department of THE WITNESS can here and there help some of its readers to see the way and help them in any degree to walk in it we will feel that our efforts have not been in vain.

RT. REV. JAMES WISE, D. D.,
Bishop of Kansas

We know how painfully inadequate we are for the task that is before us. We know that there are many men in the Church far more capable than we to accomplish it, but we look into the future with courage, determined to give our readers the best we have, looking to them for help and suggestion as to how we can better serve the Church and win men to her allegiance. May God, Whose servants we are, guide and direct our energies to the accomplishment of His will and enlighten our undertakings that we may do the things that are pleasing in His sight.

If there ever was a time in human history when men needed to look to the source of all life for guidance and direction and help in human affairs surely that time is now. If there ever was a time when men needed to have presented to them a Witness to the truth surely it is today. May we not hope and pray that this little Church weekly may become a living voice speaking to men of the real values of human life and leading them through its witnessing to a knowledge of the truth that will make them free. God grant it may be so.

JAMES WISE.

THE WITNESS KNOWS NO EAST OR WEST

In Boston, New York or Philadelphia, when a man was asked to take an interest in THE WITNESS, the ordinary answer was apt to be, "The paper is too Western. Its news is too much from the middle states or from beyond the Mississippi." There are two faults with such a critical attitude: first, it is not true; second, it is too curiously like a criticism that is often made in the West with reference to Eastern Church papers. They have been called "too Eastern," or too provincially allied to the Atlantic coast. The importance and needs of the great West were supposed to be of little interest to the great Eastern Church Editor, surrounded as he is by Parishes and ecclesiastical organizations apparently active with things done and said in the name of the Church.

All Church press work must be done with reference to the whole Church and not to a part thereof. It must partake of the catholic and the permanent. I should, therefore, conceive of anw journalistic duty I had in the Church, however modest, as an opportunity to contribute to the growth of a larger loyalty and understanding of the whole field of Christianity, with especial interest in the household of faith of the Episcopal Church. However feeble the effort might be, it becomes the duty of every man on the staff of THE WITNESS, or any other general Church newspaper to do all he can to make it national and catholic, rather than parochial, diocesan, or provincial. When one has to do this in "a dollar weekly" with the price of labor and paper so high, he has to sacrifice some provincial notions of dignity, beauty, and space! But he may take pride in having even a small part in the world work of creating a new and better standard of simplicity and service.

THE REV. JAMES SHEERIN

My connection with the Board of Editors is too recent and too interfered with by new and pressing duties of a busy East side New York "institutional Church plant" to allow me to do much in the way of adding to the columns of THE WITNESS. Assuming that daily newspapers and interested friends will supply the usual news items, the Atlantic side of getting East and West together in a general Church paper, within the reach of people who can afford only a dollar or so a year, may be expressed somewhat as follows: that it has thus far been fulfilled only by "a lick and a promise," as it were:

1. An endeavor to keep the Eastern end of the Church "teeter" fairly well-balanced, so that Eastern people will not always be up in the air, and Western people can occasionally get off the ground—of which some envious people say they have too much!

2. An effort to provide for all readers little friendly and personal notices of Churchmen and things ecclesiastical in the East, where the American Church had its New World birth, and where it continues to be decidedly most powerful in numbers and wealth.

3. An attempt to encourage and enlarge among Eastern people a sympathetic habit of more hospitable appreciation of Western views as to what a really national and catholic American Church should be—neither English nor Roman, positively American, Catholic and Christian, with heartiest emphasis on Christian.

This is a big enough platform to get in on, and I am in hopes there will be big enough assistants to keep it working.

JAMES SHEERIN.

Michigan Parish Doing Its "Bit"

Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent, Rector, now has 73 men on her Roll of Honor. As the entire roll of the Church membership amounts to 1,000 communicants, the members of Grace Church feel that they are doing their "bit" when it comes to sending out men to fight for their country. The Parish is not a rich one, but the women of Grace contributed over $1,000 toward the recent appeal for money to carry on the woman's war work of the Y. M. C. A. Between three and four hundred dollars was also given to the cause of the Armenians, who are suffering so greatly at the hands of the Turks and Germans. Fifty dollars of this was a free will offering from the Church School. About $800 was raised by the members of the Church to buy the Winter's coal supply, and besides these various contributions, other appeals, such as the Y. M. C. A., etc., have been met. The last record of the Red Cross Auxiliary in Grace Church shows a total of 16,380 articles made, which shows that the women are showing enthusiasm in this much needed form of patriotic endeavor.

At the time of the midnight service, the Church was well filled on Christmas Eve, and almost every soldier and sailor who was able to be back for Christmas was in his place of worship. Many of the boys will not be back again before they leave for France and the front.

Political, Social and Business Conditions in China

A Chinese Christian educated in this country, and now practicing law in Shanghai, sends some interesting information to a friend in the United States with regard to the present situation in China:

"China's policies are still complicated. The dissolution of Parliament and the extrusion of the de jure President showed on the part of Chinese Militarists now in power in Peking that they have neither idea of nor respect for constitutional government, and have ridden roughshod over the liberties of the people. Consequently the country is again on the verge of splitting into halves, and each making grimaces against the other and fighting mountain pass battles in the interior, while famine, flood and pestilence run riot in the land. The country has entered into the war, and the entry was made an excuse to plunge the country into civil commotion, first, by the attempt to restore the monarchy, and then by restoring the Republic, with the Militarists entrenched in arbitrary power. The Government of China today is nothing but an oligarchy, very much like the military clique in Berlin or Potsdam, and until it is dissolved or driven out and exterminated there will be no peace in this fair land, just as there is none in Europe. The problem of China is the same as that of the West—Militarism versus Democracy. Both sides or regions of the world problem must be met and faced and fought out, and one faction must win. I am hopeful that the cause of Democracy will prevail in the West, so that the moral victory and the moral forces that that victory will release and, strengthened, will help defeat the forces of evil in this land.

"Some of our best public men have been proscribed by the Militarists by the methods of Czarism, Sultanism and manchuism, and Kaiserism. All these isms are blood brothers, in spite of racial and climatic differences. The worst is the revived Manchuism in China, for in its path is nothing but destruction, with no redeeming feature; it is degrading to China and morally bankrupt, and is but hastening the country to absolute ruin. I can liken the system and condition of this country to nothing in history. It is even worse than the gradual decay, the vices, the utter rottenness of Rome in its lowest depths of degradation. Such is China in politics, and in big business, and in society, both of which latter is sucked dry and demoralized by the relentless vampires masquerading under the cloak of officialdom. The country will need your prayers and American assistance if it is going to survive."

LET THE WITNESS CHRONICLE PARISH DOINGS

Mark Twain, on seeing the dry and rocky bed of a river from which the water had receded, remarked, "I never realized before how much water improved the appearance of a river."

Two things improve the appearance of a newspaper: writers, directly; and readers, indirectly.

Every member of the Church may be one or the other, perhaps both, for THE WITNESS.

Be a reader of THE WITNESS. It is like having a talk with a real friend who brings you a budget of chatty news and then settles down to some serious discussion of some important matters in which you are both interested.

If you think you are too busy to be a reader, provide a substitute. Select the person in your congregation who seems most unlikely to get THE WITNESS for himself, and possibly unable to do so, and send THE WITNESS to that person for a year.

Be a writer. A hundred things happen each week in the Church worth recording. Send in your human interest stories, the novel interesting methods, the unusual though perhaps trifling incidents, such as you tell around the fireside. For example: "In a certain Church last summer, as the choir and clergy left the chancel after the service, in the recessional, and proceeded down the center aisle of the Church, the Rector's little daughter, age five, left the front pew, and taking the Rector's hand, solemnly accompanied him through the Church to the choir room." She wanted to be a part of it all. Why not?

You may have some very useful method in your Parish. Let the Church have it. Help the Editors to reflect the life of the Church as it is.

Help to fill up the river.

GEORGE P. ATWATER.

Joyous Christmas Service at Goshen, Indiana

St. James' Church, Goshen, Indiana, was filled Christmas Eve with communicants and friends of the Parish, who assembled to participate in the first midnight commemoration of the Nativity of our Lord ever given in the history of the Parish; and it was an event not soon to be forgotten by those privileged to be present.

Under the direction of the Rev. Duncan Weeks, the vested Choir of 30 voices rendered an elaborate musical service, including Moir's Mass, and the rendition throughout was marked with much zeal and a devotional spirit that was most impressive.

Preceding the celebration of the Holy Eucharist at midnight, the Choir rendered joyous Christmas carols with splendid spirit, and violins assisting at the organ added to the effectiveness of the music.

The service was announced to begin promptly at 11:30 p. m., and by that hour the Church was filled with devoted worshipers, whose hearts were deeply moved by the religious environments and significance of the occasion.

In carrying out the scheme of decorations all electric lights were turned off, and hundreds of candles provided the only illumination. These burning tapers were set in banks of Christmas green about the sanctuary, chancel and organ, as well along the ledges of all the windows, and the Altar was particularly brilliant with many lights and ornaments.

It was a service long to be remembered for its beauty and spiritual helpfulness, and those present will look forward with an earnest desire for a similar privilege next Christmas.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer Gives Two Bishops to the Church

W. R. Rose, a contributor of spuecial articles to the Cleveland (O.) Plain Dealer, divulges a bit of personal history bearing upon the early life of the late Bishop McLaren of the Diocese of Chicago, and the Rev. Dr. Sage, Bishop-elect of Salina. In connection with what Mr. Rose has to say, the News Editor of THE WITNESS may state, with some interest to our readers, that Grace Church, Cleveland, will have given three Bishops to the Church in the United States when Dr. Sage is consecrated. The other two were the late Bishop of Mississippi, the Rt. Rev. Hugh Miller Thompson, and the late Bishop of Quincy, the Rt. Rev. Frederick William Taylor. "Clevelanders," says Mr. Rose, "can take pride in the fact that another Cleveland man, born and bred in our city, has been elected a Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church. At the recent session of the House of Bishops, held in Chicago, the Rev. John C. Sage was elected Bishop of Salina by a vote that was almost unanimous. John C. Sage was a Cleveland boy until his clerical duties drew him from the city. He was a boy of many activities and many friends, a Central High School boy, Editor of the school paper, famed as a debater. In his earlier years he was a newspaper boy, like many other Clevelanders who have climbed the ladder. His father was Jacob C. Sage, for many years on the news staff of the Cleveland Herald. His brother was the late William Evans Sage, the well known and fondly remembered dramatic critic, who died in 1913.

"When John Sage was a boy he owned a Cleveland Plain Dealer route and was his own distributor. It is interesting to recall that he is the second Plain Dealer attache to become an Episcopal Bishop. The other was William E. McLaren, who was a reporter on the Plain Dealer in the 50's, when Judge J. D. Cleveland was associated with J. W. Gray on the editorial staff.

"McLaren was the paper's only reporter for a time, and because he instituted a department called 'Spice', was often alluded to as the 'P. D. Spice Man'.

"It was to McLaren that Editor Gray gave his famous advice:

"'William,' he said, 'I want you always to tell the exact truth in your columns. If there is any lying to be done in this paper, I will attend to it on the editorial page.'

"Rev. John C. Sage has occupied pulpits in Illinois and Iowa, and his field of service has steadily widened. His promotion is a distinct recognition of his usefulness. It will give pleasure to the many friends who knew and loved him in his earlier years."

"Are we going to join that unfortunately large number of muddle-headed people who regard religion as a luxury, not as a necessity, and therefore we ought to eliminate the Church in these days when Hoover has urged the abolishment of all luxuries?" is a pertinent question asked by the Rev. D. B. Matthews, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Brockton, Mass.

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 54 HOBART, INDIANA, JANUARY 12, 1918 3 CENTS PER COPY $1.00 A YEAR

A CALL FROM THE WAR COMMISSION

Pertinent Facts Concerning the Church's Work for the Soldiers

The Church War Commission calls upon the Church for $500,000 for the work of the Church in 1918. The War Commission is going to trust to the patriotism and loyalty of Church people without creating an elaborate campaign organization. Until January 27th there will be a quick process of education of the Church, reaching the climax on January 27th when there will be a great contribution in all the Churches. In order that that contribution may be adequate, work must be done throughout the Dioceses and Parishes. The Bishops and Clergy have already received a foreword on the subject. Literature will go out. It is hoped that the Clergy will, on each and every Sunday in January, speak a strong word so as to keep the subject before the minds of the people. Envelopes and pledge cards will have been received some ten days before the twenty-seventh; and it is hoped that, either through the personal work of the laity, or through the mail, these envelopes and cards will be in the hands of the people, in order that they may make up their minds as to their gifts before the twenty-seventh.

The question is often asked,—is the money that we are spending for campaign work in our Diocese to count towards that $500,000? The answer is, No. The analogy of the methods of our Board of Missions is a good one. Each Diocese does a certain amount of missionary work in its Diocese for the general work of the Church, that money to be distributed by the Board where it is most needed.

A number of the Dioceses have heavy Camp expenses. Others have none. Those that have heavy Camp expenses will support them and also give towards this general fund. If, however, there comes a request from any one of those Dioceses for an appropriation from the general fund to help them in their Diocesan Camp responsibility, the War Commission can draw from the one-half million dollars for that help. For illustration: The Diocese of Pennsylvania has a budget of perhaps $50,000 for expenditure in its Diocese. It is planning to raise $100,000 towards the War Commission. Its total campaign therefore will be $150,000. The $100,000 will be used by the War Commission for distribution where most needed.

On the other hand, some Southern Dioceses may be very heavily loaded with Camp expenditure. Its resources are strained to the utmost. It will do everything in its power to support the work in its borders. It will, as a matter of Church loyalty, make some contribution to the General Fund; and then the War Commission may send back to that Diocese an appropriation from the General Fund to reinforce the Diocese in its heavy campaign responsibilities, hence every Diocese should give towards this campaign as they give towards general Missions. Those with heavier responsibilities will receive aid from the General Fund. Those Dioceses which have light campaign responsibilities must be depended upon for large gifts, hence the difficulty of the War Commission making any exact apportionment, although they may, from their central point of view, suggest a rough figure.

This, however, is the one war call of the Church. Men and women of the Church have given in large figures for the excellent work of the Y. M. C. A. and loyalty to the Church will prompt them also to give in large figures to their own Church work.

Bulletin No. 1, which you have received, gives fuller information. Another Bulletin will come out in a week, giving the budget and objects of the work in more definite terms.

Bishop McCormick is in France and hard at work. He has seen several of our Chaplains and we can appreciate with what satisfaction the Chaplains must have met him and have realized that an officially credited representative of the whole Church is there to support them in their work.

The War Commission is in receipt of letters and telegrams from him calling for different items of equipment. The great difficulty is in the matter of transportation. Shipping space is so cramped that it is very difficult to get permission to send anything of bulk across. For instance: A given regiment in France is billeted in several villages along ten to fifteen miles. A Chaplain must keep in touch with them all. A Ford car or a motor cycle is indispensable. A second-hand Ford in France is $150, a motor cycle $600, and yet it is extremely difficult to get a Ford shipped, hence the Chaplain must walk, which means that he is greatly hampered in his work.

One Massachussetts Chaplain who was equipped by his Diocese when the war broke out, writes that his car is the only vehicle for errands and passenger traffic in the regiment; and (as he writes) when the Colonel asks the Chaplain for a ride it puts the Chaplain to the front. This Chaplain has no need to be put to the front in such a way for he is known and respected by the whole regiment.

The War Commission realizes that the Y. M. C. A. is most cordial. The Church Chaplains depend upon the Y. M. C. A. huts, in many instances living in them and working with the Secretaries. As Dr. Mott has well said, the Y. M. C. A., composed of laymen, and the commissioned voluntary Chaplains, being the Clergy, are indispensable to each other in the work of the Church for the men of the Army and Navy.

Bishop Murray's Message to Soldiers and the People of His Diocese

The Rt. Rev. Dr. J. G. Murray, Bishop of Maryland, sent the following Christmas message to the men who are engaged in war service from his Diocese:

"To the Maryland Troops, wheresoever They May Be, in Camp and Field:

"I love every one of you dearly. I pray for you daily. And I trust you fully to hold sacred the memory of home, maintain the prestige of your State, defend the cause of your country, establish the rights of man, and accomplish the purpose of God in this war for human liberty under Divine authority—not only as loyal Marylanders and Americans, but also as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. God bless you every one."

To the people at home the Bishop's message reads:

"To All at Home:

"On this Christmas of universal sadness and concern, may God make you glad with the remembrance of the birth of His Son, Jesus Christ. And may He give us all the comforting assurance that as His Son then came that the world might have life, and have it more abundantly, so have our sons now gone that this same life shall not be allowed to perish from the earth, but shall eventually give universal light to theme that sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, and guide our feet into the way of peace permanent here and perpetual hereafter."

Special Meeting of the House of Bishops

CALLED BY THE PRESIDING BISHOP

A special session of the House of Bishops is hereby called, to convent in the Church House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, at 10 a. m., Wednesday, April 10th, 1918.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CALL IS:

I. To act upon the proffered resignation of the Rt. Rev. Paul Jones, Bishop of Utah.

II. To consider, and, if deemed best, to proceed to fill the vacancy likely to exist in the Missionary District of the Phillippines.

III. To act upon any other business that may lawfully be presented at a special session.

The Bishops are invited to send to the Secretary of the House any names of persons suggested for the expected vacancy in the Phillippine Islands.

Each Bishop is requested to return as early as convenient, on the slip enclosed herein, to the Presiding Bishop, the statement whether he will be able to attend or no.

DANIEL F. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

Bishop Brooke's Twenty-fifth Anniversary

The Rt. Rev. Francis Key Brooke, D. D., quietly celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration as a Bishop on the Feast of the Epiphany and received the congratulations of his friends. His quarter of a century of service in the Episcopate will be formally commemorated at the forthcoming Provincial Synod of the Southwest, which will meet in Oklahoma City, Okla., on the 22nd inst. The Oklan, which will meet in Oklahoma City, Okla., on the 22nd inst. The Oklan, published at Oklahoma City, states that plans for the celebration are now being formed and Bishops and Prelates of the Episcopal Church of the Southwest will participate in the honors to be paid Bishop Brooke.

Bishop Brooke was consecrated January 6, 1893, in Grace Cathedral, Topeka, Kansas, and designated as the first Missionary Bishop of Oklahoma. Fifteen years of his life had been spent prior to that time in the service of the Ministry of the Episcopal Church, during which he had served as Rector at College Hill, Ohio, Portsmouth, Ohio, Piqua and Sandusky, Ohio, St. Louis, Mo., and Atchison, Kansas.

Many Churches Established

In a few years after Bishop Brooke assumed his duties as Missionary Bishop of the State, Churches began to spring up all over the Diocese. Churches were built in order at Lehigh, Coalgate, Wagoner, Muskogee, Tahlequah, McAlester, Vinita, Purcell, Ardmore and El Reno, and when the Cherokee strip was opened, Churches were built at Perry, Enid, Woodward and Alva. But during the early days, Bishop Brooke often did not have a Church for his services. Homes, lodge halls, tents and frequently the open air had to be used in the absence of a Church building.

Oklahoma was divided into two Missionary Dioceses in 1910, Bishop Theodore Thurston taking charge of the Eastern part of the State and the Western and central parts remaining under Bishop Brooke's jurisdiction.

Bishop Brooke is now past 65 years old, having been born in Gambier, Ohio, the site of Kenyon College, which is the alma mater of President Hayes and other figures in the history of the country. He attended Kenyon College and was graduated in 1874 from the academic course. Four years later he received a master's degree and in 1912 the College honored him with the degree of doctor of divinity.

Eight Bishops at Consecration

Eight Bishops were present at the consecration of Bishop Brooke, and all but two of these have died since, Bishop Tuttle of Missouri and Bishop Graves of Nebraska, alone surviving.

Twenty-five years ago there was not an Episcopal Church in Oklahoma or old Indian Territory. Now there are more than fifty Churches and a slightly smaller number of Rectories, and the number of the Episcopalian faith has grown from a few hundred to more than 4,000.

Bishop Brooke reached Oklahoma in the early part of 1893, stopping at Guthrie, where he resided until 1898. His first visit to Oklahoma City was made on January 25, 1893. The Commercial Club gave a reception in the new Bishop's honor at a building on the site of the present Colcord building.

Interesting Letter to a Kansas Parish

One of the Clergy of the Diocese, who prefers that his name be not used, sent the following letter to every member of his congregation early this Winter; it contains highly interesting material:

"Winter work faces us. The whole Nation is at work; young men in training camps; people at home supporting the men at the front. The Church is at work also, all the time.

"The force that sustains all effort is a spiritual force. 'Without Me, ye can do nothing.' Exery man and woman should make the most of spiritual opportunities. The Church is in a community to minister to human souls—to help every person lead the best life. Every Parish must be made to go, and that calls for team work. What does the Parish need?

"It needs every member in Church every Sunday—all soldiers at roll-call. Every person missing is that much loss of force and inspiration.

"It needs every good singer in the Choir to help lead the praises in God's house. The congregation should take its part in the singing.

"It needs every womna to realize that she is a member of the Woman's Guild and should work therein if possible.

"It needs every parent to assist the children to learn lessons, and attend the Church School on time, regularly.

"It needs men and women who seek the Lord's Table, every Sunday or at least once a month and then go forth to be a force for the betterment of the community. Special celebrations of Holy Communion any hour you wish.

"It needs every member of every Church organization at work.

"It is a good thing to see all that is good in each religious denomination; it is better to have all the good that is in each and all of the denominations. The Episcopal Church stands for all this. If any one will investigate, it will be found that the Episcopal Church molds and teaches the truth that is found in each one of the various denominations about us: Lutheran, Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, Disciples, 'Spiritualist,' 'Science', and holds all the Catholic doctrine that is taught by the Roman Catholic Church. Every one of these organizations, and bodies, has one or more truths of Christian doctrine; the Episcopal Church holds and teaches the truth for which each one of these stands—and only the Episcopal Church holds each truth in perfect balance with all other truth. And this is because it has not departed from the old 'Faith once for all delivered to the Saints'. It has not added to nor taken from that Faith.

"The world is going through a crisis, and it needs spiritual-minded men—men who love God, work for God, know God.

"The Episcopal Church furnishes the means of Grace, and helps toward a spiritual life. Come to Church; keep coming."

Rev. Dr. Harris to be Consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Marquette Feb. 7

Deputy Registrar; Rev. E. G. Mapes.

DANIEL F. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

A Missionary With Zeal

"United we stand." So we stood in '65, after the cleaving of States asunder. The Kingdom of God was revealed in power when the Churches of the separation were still further divided. So the sign to all lands and ages was revealed. But just a practical problem of unity is before me—and a hard nut to crack.

I have to rebuild a ruined Chapel, and united we build, divided, we bolt. So I appeal, and am surprised to find how generously and how slowly responses come—slowly for the beginning, a few dollars here and there, slowly indeed and how generously, for the ending; for one promises the roof, but that leaves the roof in the future—in the air—there it is suspended, like a cloud to pass, if nothing is under it. One promises labor. One promises $500, if I raise $1,500. One promises $800 if I reach the last payment, to extinguish the last $800 of debt. So I am bound by futures and conditions—tied to the present—unable to reach the golden rainbows. What must I do? I consult a neighbor, once a business man, now a minister. He has a ready solution, and says promptly: "Guarantee it yourself, and then raise it!" This is startling and illuminating. It is bold leadership. Go forward on your own guarantee—sieze the futures, connect them to present values, and so begin.

Just opposite lives a prosperous Churchman—a business man from Florida, summering in the mountains. I submit the matter to him. He seems at first surprised, but finally he concludes: "If the guarantee is good, it is all right." So I return home to meditate, and the memory emerges out of the past. I recall a humble minister, once a drayman. Eight times he mortgaged his home and built eight Chapels, and lost nothing by it. His constituency followed him in a body, and paid the mortgage every time.

If a drayman minister does this, why cannot I? I can, if there is the faith to go forward; if there is a home to mortgage; if the united body of constituency follows all together the bold head that plans the leadership!

But "the Church is the worst governed body in the world"—full of compromises and inconsistencies and dead letters and live hindrances—not bound together by the golden rule into strong mutual help. But now, as reformation compromises fade into the remote past, why not unity—practical unity for practical problems—the unity of the firm steel nut cracker in cracking hard business problems? Why not? Let our leaders respond.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

This will be the caption for a series of devotional papers which, with the help of God, I hope to write during this year. When the intervals between the Saints' Days occur, I will take up the subjects presented by the Ember Days, Rogation Days and other special seasons. I pray God to make my thoughts worthy of your consideration and meditation. I also take this occasion to thank those many unseen friends who, by letter and card have, from time to time during 1917, expressed their appreciation of my comments on the Collects, Epistles and Gospels for the Christian Year.

May this New Year bring us all closer to the feet of Him who alone can make life bearable, and hopeful, and happy. FRANCIS S. WHITE.

Publisher's Note.—The mails delayed the receipt of this article. As the Epiphany is a Festival that has no particular connection with Sunday, although it came on Sunday this year, and as it ushers in one of the Seasons of a Christian Year, we give it place a few days late.

THE COLLECT

O God, who by the leading of a star didst manifest thy only-begotten Son to the Gentiles; Mercifully grant that we, who know thee now by faith, may after this life have the fruition of thy glorious Godhead; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

One of the important facts for us Christians to keep ever in mind is that the Gospel message is meant for all men. The Epiphany message is a cry to us to stop putting labels on people, and to remember that God has never been without witness to Himself in the world. One of the missions of the Church is to show men that the so-called religion of nature is only a "heading in" for the right port, but that it can not be a port of final refuge and comfort. The tendency in many directions has been for many of us who accept a revealed religion to lean heavily on our inheritance and privileges, and to look with contempt, more or less outwardly expressed, on those who are "led by a star". Never forget that it is possible for "the magi" to come closer to some real manifestation of God in Christ, and to recognize that manifestation, than it is for some of those who have inherited the promises to see, and to interpret them.

Our prayer is the acknowledgment of two facts (1) God will use all means to speak His message to all mankind, not simply to a certain few. (2) That we ourselves are as yet seeing God in Christ only as through a mirror, only knowing Him in part.

It is a prayer that should develop in us patience with the lack of vision in others. The mission message of Jesus, to "go to all the world", has been nearly throttled by those who would keep the promises and privileges among the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and who pray this prayer with the word "Gentiles" in their minds (feeding their prejudices), rather than the word "leading of a star". And then there are those who emphasize the leading of a star rather than the "knowing by faith". Let both sides beware of being tripped by prejudice and ignorance. The whole Collect is a prayer for a wider vision—a world-wide vision, which is to be the reward of those who earnestly follow what light is given them, and who accept in faith the guidance from God which comes from a star, a book, an angel, and which, if we faithfully follow, will inevitably lead us to the Christ of humility. The fruition of the glorious Godhead is not of earth; it is that wonderful vision of the saints, for which vision we are to purify our hearts, which purifying involves disciplines, the opening of minds, hearts, eyes, ears, hands to every revelation of God by Himself, no matter from what quarter such revelation may come.

THE EPISTLE

For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles, if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward: how by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellowheirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel: whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord: in whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him. Ephesians iii:1.

Do not try to take the mystery out of the Gospel, nor the mystery out of Christ, nor the mystery out of the Church. The effort to do this does not bring you any nearer to God; in fact, it is more than likely to change you from following a star to following a will-o'-the-wisp. Revelation alone makes a mystery intelligible. That is the reason the Church clings to the Bible, because without that revelation she could only show you a book of nature, which involves only the stern judgments of life. But, using the Book of Inspiration, one comes to see God as Saul grew to see Him, and in that vision and that revelation begin to shake off prejudices, inherited and acquired, and to become not a Jew nor a Gentile, nor a bond or free man, but a Christian.

It would be amusing, if it were not pathetically tragic, to see how in our natural life we let our blindness and ignorance hinder our vision of God's life in other people and other races, and look and act as if we were born superior to them all. No one ever saw a vision of God from the hill of pride and self-gratulation. The "Polack", the "Bohemian", the "Dago", have a national and historic background that many of their ignorant employers might well envy and emulate. Not to see this background and appreciate it will prevent us from being good ministers to them in national and social life. So we who have the revelation of the Catholic Faith must be sure we are using that revelation to rightly interpret to others the mystery of Christ, and not rationalize or humanize Him in such ways as to spoil or hinder the vision of God which Jesus came to reveal. And we must also beware that our actions toward non-Catholic professing Christians will not show us as prejudiced because of our privileges.

You who are the least of God's ministers, what are you doing to help others see the vision of Jesus? How much do you care whether others outside of your little Jerusalem enter into the fellowship of the mystery which God has ever been anxious to give to men? "An eternal purpose"! Do you realize that you are in that purpose of God? Have you sought to find out why you were included in it? And is there any reason why you should be included in it to the exclusion of some spiritual brothers of "lesser breed without the law", as you might be led to describe some one who is ignorant of the mystery of Christ and the Church? Not only must you try not to take the mystery out of the Christian religion, but you must realize that you are to glory in that mystery, and are also called to be a minister of that mystery, and are to endeavor to bring others into the fellowship of that mystery, the doing of which involves the only joy in life that no man can take from you.

THE GOSPEL

When Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judæa, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judæa: for thus it is written by the prophet, And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also. When they had heard the king, they departed; and, lo, the star, which they saw in the east went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way. St. Matt. ii:1

Why are the "Gentiles" less prejudiced than the "Jews"? Why should privilege so often breed contempt and a false superiority? The magi, once they saw the possibility of finding out the solution of a mystery, put aside all prejudice and fear, and in the simple dignity of those who are genuine seekers after truth, came to the big city, not at all ashamed to face kings and to ask for help. There is a genuine democracy which is born in the hearts of those who have seen in Jesus a vision of God, which no trappings of royalty can awe or subdue; because, having caught a glimpse of the glorious Godhead, they see the tinsel which is in the self-appointed leaders of the thoughtless and unthinking and unseeing peoples of the world.

Do you ever stop to think that in many countries of the world today there are men and women who have a half vision of God, and who need your help to see Him more clearly in Christ Jesus? Are you prepared to place yourself in Herod's class, and by hook or by crook seek to frustrate their ambitions to know God? Are you unwilling that those "outlandish" people should be content with an "outlandish" conception of God's revelation? If you are, then by that attitude you mark yourself as purblind and self-centered people who are not even "Gentiles", who have not even a national religion, but are of the parasite class, always willing to fatten and batten your own souls at the expense of some one who will tell you what he has seen, because he expects you in turn will help him in his search for the solution of the great mystery in which he has found by earnest search some certain light. Notice that the end of all search for God ends in worship. Sometimes the privileged people who have always had Christian privileges and Church opportunities are less worshipful than those less privileged ones who in the starlight have learned to look up, to bend the knee and to give. As a Christian you cannot, dare not, afford to be less earnest seekers after truth than the people who so far are living only in the light of natural religion. Recognize them in all earnest people as seekers after light, and do your part in initiating them into the fellowship of that mystery of God which is hid in Christ Jesus. F. S. W.

The Son of God, Christ Jesus

The Son of God, Christ Jesus,
He is my Lord and King;
To Him my ev'ry talent
Most willingly I bring.
The life which most shall please Him,
That life I long to live.
The strength I need to serve Him,
That strength He'll freely give.

The Son of Man, Christ Jesus,
Was ever true and bold;
The body's every weakness
He constantly controlled.
And by His help unfailing,
In His most holy might,
Against my lower nature
Unceasingly I'll fight.

The Carpenter, Christ Jesus,
He earned His daily bread.
Of faithful, earnest workers,
He is the royal Head.
All sloth and lawless action
He'll help me to despise.
The gain of honest labor
Shall be my only prize.

Saviour of men, Christ Jesus,
Oh, Champion of the weak,
Put down the strong and mighty,
And give earth to the meek.
Grant me Thy strength and courage
To speed the glad day when True love and perfect justice
Shall rule the lives of men. Amen.

—Bishop Spalding.

One of the greatest results of the modern study of the Bible, and one not at all connected with any rationalism, is the recovery of the prophets, or perhaps discovery. We have come to see that the prophet was the inspired conscience of his time, and this without at all ceasing to point his finger at the future, but rather the more. The rose bud growing on its bush does not the less tell of the full-blown rose, because of having a life of its own related to its existing environment. Moreover, the prophets thus understood not only blazed the way for the Christ, but bring us today a social message addressed to nations, supplementing the New Testament, which speaks to individuals and to the Church. The new Lectionary, therefore, has undertaken to weave the prophetic teachings into the Old Testament narrative, so that the two mutually explain and illumine each other.

Our first lesson this morning is Amos' appeal for justice and righteousness against ritualism, and a prediction of the Assyrian captivity. For a New Testament correlative we have selected from Hebrews a passage which shows that the priestly conception of religion (attacked by Amos), when interpreted through our Lord Jesus Christ, who actualized the true idea of sacrifice, comes out at the same point: "Forget not to do good and to share with others; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased".

Both selections follow the line of Collect, Epistle and Gospel for the day. St. Paul appeals for the true idea of sacrifice shown in a renewed mind and consecrated body. The Boy Christ gives a concrete illustration of this ("Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"); and the Collect prays for the actualization of the same in our own experience. (Cf. Gen. 22 and Heb. 10, same Sunday, Table I).

The New Testament evening lesson gives the evening congregation an opportunity to hear the connected story of the visit of the Magi, the martyrdom of the Innocents, and the flight into Egypt and return, summing up Christmas and Epiphany teachings. The first lesson is one of Balaam's prophecies of the future victory of God's Church in its triumph over opposing forces—a prophecy coming just after Balaam's experiencing the futility of offering to God rams and bullocks. (Cf. Mich. 6:1-8 in Saturday morning's lesson.)

For week days, we give in the morning further selections of both Amos and Hosea, prophetic of the coming captivity, paralleled by a course reading of St. John's Gospel begun, the Gospel which is peculiarly appropriate throughout to the season of manifestation.

In the evening, the Old Testament selections bear on Amos' theme of the misuse of religious aids, while the Epistle to the Galatians deals with the theme of sonship to God, suggested by the story of the Boy Christ in the Temple.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

Prayers selected from "Hymns and Prayers for the Army and Navy," prepared at the request of Bishop Lawrence by Dean Rousmaniere, Dean Hodges, and the Rev. John W. Suter. (Houghton Mifflin Co.)

Almighty God, teach us to hate that which is bad in thought, word, and deed, and to love that which is good; make us to stand up for the right and the true, as brave soldiers of Christ, and faithful members of His Kingdom the Church; through the same thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FOR LOYALTY

Almighty God, grant me Thy gift of loyalty. For my Home give me love and obedience; for my Country, sacrifice and service; for my Church, reverence and devotion; and in everything make me true to Thee; through thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

FOR A CLEAN HEART

Almighty God, drive from me all unclean thoughts, keep my lips from all wicked words, and in every temptation save me by the remembrance of Thy Son Jesus Christ, glorious in purity and strength, my Master and my King. Amen.

FOR A STRONG BODY

O God, who hast made me; grant me Thy gift of health, that with a strong body I may fight for the right and the true, and be Thy faithful soldier and servant unto my life's end; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FOR THOSE WE LOVE

O thou who hast ordered this wondrous world, who knowest all things in earth and heaven, so fill our hearts with trust in Thee, that by night and by day, at all times and in all seasons, we may without fear commit those who are dear to us to Thy never-failing love for this life and the life to come. Amen.

FOR ONE IN PAIN

O God, whose blessed Son endured the bitterness of the cross; Grant that Thy sick servant remembering Him, may receive strength from His strength and partake of his victory; through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

FOR ALL WHO ARE SERVING OUR COUNTRY IN THE WAR

O Almighty Lord God, who neither slumberest nor sleepest, protect and assist, we beseech thee, all those who at home or abroad, by land, by sea, or in the air, are serving this country, that they, being armed with Thy defence, may be preserved evermore in all perils; and being filled with wisdom and girded with strength, may do their duty to Thy honor and glory; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

One Atom Back

I owe God a little of my GOODS. He demands back scarcely an atom of the good things He has given me, as an acknowledgment that all blessings come from Him. To the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well Jesus said: "Give me to drink". And the creature gave back to the Creator of all water a tithe of His own gift. My Lord did not make His society purely spiritual. He suffered it to require material support. Though He had the power to "command these stones to be made bread", He appointed Judas to be His treasurer, to accept the offerings of the faithful, and "to buy those things that were needed". He made money instead of miracles the ordinary support of religion. Spirituality alone never paid a bill for lands, Churches, heat, light, repairs and furnishings. Can you mention any society that has all benefits and no dues? Christ performed stupendous miracles; but a society of that kind is not one of them. Our Lord obliged every member of His society to "deny himself" certain pleasures of sense purely for His sake. My dues in this Parish may be only ten cents a week. I simply deny myself one ten cent pleasure a week to pay them. For that trifle I have a permanent seat in Church. If I ever become so stingy as to deny my Lord the above pittance of my LOVE, or TIME, or GOODS, I will be consistent and disclaim all membership in a society whose meetings I will not attend, and whose dues I will not pay. If really poor, all my Lord's blessings are free to me, and my Church will aid me.—Rev. E. W. Averill.

INTRODUCTORY

My late friend and classmate, Bishop Frank Spaulding of Utah, had a quotation of which he was very fond:

"Life is conscious effort transforming itself into unconscious habit.'"

A little reflection will show how this applies to everything in life. Walking, playing the piano, your vices, your virtues come under this head. It applies also to the training of soldiers. An untrained soldier is not an asset, but a nuisance, on the field of battle.

What is needed at the time of Confirmation is not so much academic teaching as painstaking drill in the Prayer Book which is the Manual of Training.

The whole Christian body is sick because it is an untrained body and Confirmation is the opportunity for such training.

If you drill your candidates properly, you will have later on a congregation which can be inspired by preaching.

Never mind if the classes are small. See to it that they are well trained, and require of them certain things, without which they cannot be presented.

1st. A regular attendance at Church services during the period of preperation.

2nd. A regular habit of daily prayer in private.

3rd. Conscious study of the instruction and faithful attendance at the classes.

Unless candidates are willing to do this they should not be confirmed.

The probability is that you will begin your classes soon after the holidays, so this series of instructions is arranged in pamphlet form, and will be issued each week beginning with the new year, and covering a period of twenty lessons. They are so arranged that the first half of the lesson leaf is for the candidate to study, the second half to assist the Rector in the instruction.

II.

WHAT DO YOU PROMISE?

Catechism (to be learned).
Dost thou not think, etc.? P. B. p. 266.

Prop. 1.

When we make a promise, or a vow, it is to do a certain definite thing; as if I promise to pay a certain sum of money on a certain date for which I have received a certain value.

So in our baptismal vow we promised certain definite things for which in turn certain definite things are promised to us. This we call a covenant.

It is most important that we should know just what we promise in order that we may keep our vow.

We promise three things. (1) To renounce evil. (2) To believe the Christian Faith. (3) To obey Christ's laws.

Prop. 2.

The first promise: "To renounce the Devil and all his works, the pomps and vanities of this wicked world, and all the sinful lusts of the flesh" is a promise to put up the best fight that we can against the sin that is in us.

I know many mean people, but I know no such meanness in anyone as I do in myself, for I only know a part of the meanness in others, but I know all that there is in myself.

"O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Prop. 3.

I know that "the wages of sin is death" and that the "soul that sinneth it shall die"; and I also know that "the blood of Christ can cleanse me from all sin."

I want to obey God, but I find within me a law, that when I would do good evil is present with me.

What is this evil?

(a) "The Devil and all his works."

(1) PRIDE is the sin of the Devil, and pride is the setting up of my will against God's will, so that like Satan I am a rebel against God.

Instead of pride I must have HUMILITY, which is the property of a good soldier, the desire to be taught and the willingness to obey.

(2) ANGER is the result of defying God. When a man knows he has done wrong, he gets angry at the one whom he has wronged.

Anger is, as boys say, "getting mad." It is the losing of our reason for the time being. Instead of anger I must learn MEEKNESS, which is the faculty of acknowledging when I am wrong, and being ready to forgive when someone else is wrong.

(3) "Anger is cruel but ENVY is outrageous." What is this third sin of the Devil that we call envy?

It is that sin by which we are made miserable by somebody else's good fortune, and so think ill of that person and talk slanderously about him because he has something that we lack.

It is the sin which poor people are apt to have toward the rich, just as pride is the sin that the rich are apt to have against the poor. Instead of envy we should learn CONTENTMENT.

(b) "The pomps and vanities of this wicked world."

This includes the sins that we have already considered, especially the vanity which is puffed up because of success. But "the love of money is the root of all evil' with men, and this inordinate desire for wealth, we call COVETOUSNESS, which is the passion to get, so that we are unwilling to give.

The opposite of Covetousness is Generosity.

(c) "And all the sinful lusts of the flesh."

This refers to the pampering of our flesh in its appetites.

The inordinate desire for ease which we call SLOTH; the unregulated indulgence in food and drink, which we call GLUTTONY; and the illicit passion for the other sex which we call "LUST."

If we are fighting our own meanness we must learn to regulate our own body and this we do as good soldiers by training ourselves in Industry, Temperance and Purity which are the opposite virtues to those vices.

Now you will have a real soldier's task to fight these enemies within us which ruin our lives, make us unhappy and separate us from God.

We have promised to "fight a good fight" and to lay hold on eternal life.

QUESTIONS

Q. In what way have we committed ourselves to a definite covenant with God?
Q. About whom do you know more meanness than any one else?
Q. What are the sins which we are to fight against?
Q. Name the virtues we are to cultivate.
Q. What is the result of a deadly disease? of a deadly sin?
Q. Can diseases be cured?
Q. Can sin be forgiven? How?

The Epistle to The Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

XXI

Vs. 29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers.

Sadler: Corrupt communication, filthy speech, foul and filthy language acts in the spiritual building like the leprosy on the wall of the house (Lev. xiv:34) rotting and polluting it. As members in the Mystical Body we are not only to speak no filthy or corrupt language, but we are bound to edify one another, to build up one another on our most holy faith. (Jude 20.)

Elliott: That it may minister grace. Impart a blessing to those who hear it.

Sadler: Not only is the sermon of the Christian preacher a means of grace, but so is the private conversation of the true Christian.

Gore: The Christian talk is to be, not indeed edifying in the narrowest sense, but such as builds up what is lacking in life, or supplies a need, whether by counseling, or informing, or refreshing, or cheering; so that it may give grace, that is, afford pleasure and in the widest sense bring a blessing to the hearers.

Vs. 30. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.

Meyer: Do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God. Evil discourses are so often opposed to the nature and aim of the Divine Spirit who dwells in the Christian that he cannot fail to be grieved thereat.

Hermas: Distress not the Holy Spirit that dwelleth in you lest He entreat God and He depart from you.

Wordsworth: A plain evidence of His personality.

Sadler: This teaches us the fearful truth that we may receive the Holy Spirit and not retain Him, but provoke God to take Him from us; and so with great wisdom the Church puts into our lips the words of the Psalmist, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from us."

Wordsworth: By whom ye were sealed at a particular time, i. e., at your baptism which is called the seal by the ancient Church.

Chrysostom: The Seal of the Holy Ghost is upon thee. Let that seal be upon thy mouth. Break it not. The mouth of him who is sealed by the Spirit will never utter what is unworthy of the grace he has received from the Holy Ghost.

Wordsworth: The day of redemption, the great day, the day of the general resurrection, the great day of redemption for which the whole creation now groans (Rom. viii:23. The Seal of the Holy Ghost is here connected with the future glory of the Resurrection.

Gore: Christians are to think of the divine purpose of the Holy Ghost who has entered into the Church to seal or mark it as an elect body destined for full redemption from all evil in body and soul, at the climax of God's dealings, the last day.

Vs. 31. Let all bitterness, and all wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice.

Moule: All bitterness—all malice. Observe the uncompromising scope of the precept. Revolution in principle was to result in nothing short of revolution in temper and practice.

Ellicott: All bitterness, i. e., every form of it, and that not only as shown in ontward expression, but as the contents suggests, in feeling and disposition.

Wordsworth: Wrath and anger, i. e., not only passionate rage but the inner feeling of anger.

Meyer: Loveless and hostile anger, as distinguished from that mentioned in Vs. 26.

Ellicott: Wrath and anger. Emanations from and products of the bitterness. Wrath is properly the agitation and commotion to which bitterness gives rise, anger is the more settled habit of the mind.

Moule: Clamour. The violent assertions of rights and wrongs, real or suffered.

Ellicott: Clamour and evil speaking. Outward manifestations of the foregoing vices. Clamor is the cry of strife, evil speaking a more enduring manifestation of inward anger that shows itself in reviling not in the present case, God, but our brethren.

Moule: Malice. Mentioned last as the deepest and more subtle sin, unkindness in its inmost secret.

Ellicot: Malice is the genus to which all the other mentioned vices belong, or rather, the active principle to which they are all due, uncharitableness in all its forms.

Vs. 32 And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

Ellicot: Kind. Sweet in disposition.

Moule: Useful, helpful and so kindly.

Meyer: Tenderhearted. Compassionate.

Ellicot: Tenderhearted designates the exhibition of that merciful feeling of which the "bowels of mercy" were the imaginary seat.

Sadler: These good things are to be practiced amongst Christians, but they must first be sought. They are the fruits of the Spirit.

Meyer: In Christ, in whom self surrenders to the death of atonement the act of the divine forgivness was accomplished.

Wordsworth: Forgave you—i. e., bestowed upon you forviveness as an act of grace, a gift in Christ dying for you; and applied that gift to you actually and personally in your profession of repentance and faith in Him at Baptism (Act. ii:38.)

THE SACRAMENTAL LIFE

By the Rev. Harry Ransome

II.

The Incarnation

The books of both the Old and New Testament are full of mystery, and to interpret it writers have used simple illustrations in picture language. The early generations of the world's ages have almost invariably spoken in this language. We have the picture in Genesis of God walking in the Garden of Eden, also smelling the savor of men's sacrifices. Our Lord used this language quite freely; St. Paul also to a less degree in his Epistles, while the vivid language of St. John in the Apocalypse cannot be overlooked.

A later age, closer to our own day, for themselves and others, insisted upon an absolute literal interpretation of this language, with disastrous results, for in the revolt against this school of thought men have thrown over not only the language of picture, but they have endeavored to restate revelation by the aid of pure thought or philosophy, and their rationalism has resulted, in some instances, in the blank denial of all mystery. Or, failing this, they have endeavored to hold to the old symbolic language, but to evacuate the pictures and substitute fundamentally different ideas. Again, there are others who sincerely hope, by restating Biblical mysteries in present thought or expression, to gain for the Bible a greater belief and hold over the modern educated person; yet it is doubtful whether in substituting modern philosophical terms for Biblical words and pictures, they are only substituting one set of symbols for another. The ultimate truth behind the symbol remains just as impenetrable, and the act of faith, necessary for belief, just as strong.

But let us turn aside from consideration of the Old Testament, and ask curselves how we should approach the Christian mysteries—the truths of our Faith. How can each one of us relate them to our own individual life? Certainly we must treat them historically and symbolically. Can we accept this proposition put forward by Dr. Inge, "A symbol implies a mystery, and a mystery implies a revelation"? In theology, the limit of pure philosophical thought is soon reached, but faith leaps the boundary, and then the physical world from which the symbol is drawn is the visible manifestation of the reality of the mystery, and expresses the unity between the seen and the unseen, the finite and the infinite. If we accept this statement, man himself is a great mystery. The unseen life, which is the truest part of him, is revealed through his body and outward acts. His body is the visible symbol of the inward life. But we must go one step farther; this life must be related to Almighty God, the Source of Life. And what is the media by which God communicates His Life to us and unites our life to His? By another mystery, the Mystery of the Incarnation, the revelation of the Word, made Flesh through the Virgin Birth, and dwelling among us. To deny the Virgin Birth, to deny the Paternity of the Holy Ghost as the Father of our Lord's Humanity, is to empty the Mystery of its meaning and rob it of its truth.

A Sacrament, then, is an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual reality; and the greatest Sacrament of all—the primary Sacrament—is the Sacrament of the Incarnation. There we have the symbol in our Lord's Human nature, the Mystery in the two distinct natures, Human and Divine, in the One Person, and out of the heart of the Mystery comes the revelation, namely, the gift of Divine Life. The other Sacraments of Christ's Body are but extensions of this great primary Sacrament, and they in turn minister to the Life which this great Mystery reveals. "Except a man be born of water and the spirit"; water and words, the Mystery and the revelation—Eternal Life. So, again, in the Holy Communion; bread and wine, the words of Consecration, the Mystery and the revelation—"He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life". "He * * * abideth in me and I in him."

That Christ not only shares His manhood with us, but His Godhead, means that in the deepening process of His Life, He unites us to His own Self. And this Life, our life gathers up into Christ's, is Sacramental in all its phases. Our outward life becomes the symbol which expresses the inward and spiritual reality of the Divine Life of Christ abiding in us. The sum of a Christian's life can never be trivial or evanescent, neither can it ever be commonplace, because it is a life hid with Christ in God.

The Very Rev. R. K. Massie, D. D., Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, Ky., who has been absent for some time owing to broken health, is now much improved and expected to return to his charge soon. Though it will be necessary for him to be careful and go somewhat slowly for some time, yet he is assured that in time he will be well and strong.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, S. D., was the first Church in that city to raise a Service Flag in honor of the men who have enlisted in war service.

A new four-manual Moeller organ, recently erected in St. Mary's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., was consecrated at the morning service on the Feast of the Epiphany, Sunday, Jan. 6.

For the first time in many years the Christmas tree at Trinity Church, Ft. Wayne, Ind., bore no gifts for the children. The Sunday School had voted in favor of doing without the presents this year, in order to respond to the appeal for aid from the Colored Schools of the South.

The Alumni and students of St. John's University, Shanghai, have raised and placed in the hands of President Pott $11,000 as their share of the $15,000 needed for the new University Gymnasium, to be erected in memory of the late Professor F. C. Cooper. Dr. Pott has personally secured from friends in this country $2,500 and needs $1,500 more to make good his part of the pledge to the Building Fund.

Special New Year's Day services were held at Baltimore, Md., for the clergy and laity of the Diocese, in response to a request of the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, for the purpose of making "special intercessions and a deeper consecration of 'ourselves, our souls and bodies' to the Lord and the work of His Church and the service of humanity". The first service was held at 8 a. m., in Grace and St. Peter's Church. The second service was conducted especially for the women of the Diocese.

St. Mary's Church, Middlesboro, Ky., the Rev. Thomas L. Settle, Minister-in-charge, has received through several of its communicants, the gift of a $1,200 pipe organ, equipped with electric blower. Mr. Pilcher, Louisville, Ky., maker and installer of the organ, worked night and day to have the organ ready for the Christmas service, when it would be used for the first time. It was in place and played the Sunday before Christmas. Mr. Pilcher's son was engaged as organist for that special Christmas service. His handling of the organ was that of an expert, and elicited high praise at the recital given Christmas afternoon.

Two flags have been blessed and raised in the Church of the Advent, Brooklyn, N. Y. One is a United States Regimental flag, which was the gift of Mr. John Reynolds, a Civil War Veteran, and the other is a large Service Flag, with twenty stars, representing the young men who have gone out of the Parish into war service, presented by Mrs. Henry J. Rode, a communicant of the Parish. Company A, Home Defense League, of which the Rector, the Rev. R. R. Upjohn, is the Chaplain, attended the service of dedication in a body.

The Sunday School of St. John's Church, Columbus, Ohio, at their Annual Christmas Festival, instead of following their usual custom of presenting gifts to the members of the School, requested the children to bring gifts for the poor of the city. The Columbus Dispatch states that "the presentation of the gifts was the final act of a brief play presented by some of the members of the Sunday School. It consisted of three scenes from the Bible story of the first Christmas, the last scene of which was the appearance of the three wise men at the manger in Bethlehem, bearing their gifts for the infant Christ child. The children followed the wise men, putting their gifts likewise at the foot of the manger. The gifts were presented through the Associated Charities."

The Rector of Trinity Church, Louisville, Ky., the Rev. Henry P. Manning and his family, were the happy recipients of a most generous and comprehensive Christmas box, sent them by the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn. The box, containing more than 150 articles of varying description, both for the house and each of the three members of the family, reached Danville the Thursday before Christmas in plenty of time to add great joy on Christmas Day, especially for the two-year-old member of the household. In the letter announcing the shipping of the box was a $30 check for the Rector. The value of the box was certainly nothing less than $100 Too high praise cannot be given the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Paul's, Duluth, for its generosity, interest and Christian love. Arrangements for this box were made when the Rev. Mr. Manning was General Missionary of the Diocese of Lexington.

At Grace Church Sunday School, Pittsburgh, the Rev. William Porkess, Rector, there has been established what is uniquely called "The Children's Superstructure of Unselfishness". Each Christmas time the boys and girls of the Parish sacrifice their candy, and use the money for the sake of others. The School entertainment was held on Holy Innocents' night. The scholars are proud of their record, covering five Christmases. It is indeed a superstructure. In 1913, sixty presents for selected destitute children of Pittsburgh were given; 1914, several pairs of blankets for the Pittsburgh Children's Hospital; 1915, decorations for St. Barnabas' Home for Incurable Men and Boys; 1916, a wheel chair for the crippled children of St. Margaret's Memorial Hospital; and in 1917, a sum of money sent for the relief of the starving children of Armenia.

A Communion service, which was given to Christ Church, Waterloo, Ia., shortly after the organization of the Parish in 1881 by Mr. John Miller and family, has been presented by the Parish to St. John's Church, recently organized at Cedar Rapids, Ia. The gift was made by the Vestry of Christ Church at the suggestion of Miss Abbie Miller, the only surviving member of the family, who is a resident of Cedar Rapids. The Rev. M. L. Tate, Rector of Christ Church, presented the Communion set to St. John's Church in person, and used it in a celebration of the Holy Communion on the fourth Sunday in Advent.

At Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, Neb., on the Sunday after Christmas, Dec. 30, 1917, the Bishop of the Diocese ordained as Deacons Mr. Henry F. Selcer and Mr. William D. Foley. The Dean of the Cathedral and the Rev. A. H. Marsden presented the candidates, and the sermon was preached by the Dean. Messrs. Selcer and Foley are Seniors at Seabury, and after their graduation in May next will be assigned to work in the Diocese of Nebraska.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Frank Du Moulin, Bishop Coadjutor of Ohio, recently confirmed a class of nineteen at St. Paul's Church, Freemont, Ohio, making a total of thirty-nine persons confirmed by him in this Parish during the past thirteen months. The Bishop also blessed a beautiful United States Flag and a Service Flag with nine stars, presented by Miss Minnie Failing, a devoted communicant of the Parish. The Rector, the Rev. A. I. Ernest Boss, conducted the service, and the Bishop preached a patriotic sermon on "The Nation's Vacation". At the Church School Christmas Festival, after the opening service and the offering for Diocesan Missions, the lights were turned down, and three men, representing the three wise men, clad in kingly robes and bearing lighted torches, led the children down the main aisle and up the north aisle of the Church, past a living picture of the Holy Family, near which had been placed a Christmas box, into which the offerings of the members of the School were placed for the poorer children of the city. The offerings consisted of food and toys. The closing exercises were held in the Parish House, where gifts of candy, popcorn and oranges were distributed to the children of the School.

Personal Mention

Rev. Arthur J. Watson has accepted the Rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Pawtucket, R. I., and entered on his duties on the Feast of the Epiphany.

The Rev. John Grainger entered upon his duties as Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Okmulgee, Oklahoma, on the 10th inst. He was formerly Missionary of Southeastern Oklahoma.

The Ven. George M. Babcock, Archdeacon of Fond du Lac, accepted a call the first of the month to the Rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Marinette, Wis., and has assumed charge of the Parish.

The Rev. R. E. Abraham, Rector of Holy Cross Church, Brookly, N. Y., has accepted Bishop Lewis W. Burton and the Parishes involved, of his acceptance of Paris, Cynthiana and Nicholasville, Kentucky. It is understood that January 1st was the date of effectiveness of his acceptance. Mr. Abraham left St. Mary's, Middlesboro, Diocese of Lexington, to go to Brooklyn, in October, 1913, after faithfully serving that congregation for some seven years. A hearty welcome awaits Mr. Abraham upon his return.

Captain Sanborn Arouses Great Interest in War Service and Religion

Capt. H. R. Sanborn of the Second Minnesota Field Artillery, who has recently addressed large audiences in several Minnesota cities, is arousing a profound interest in war service and religion by the relation of his thrilling experiences at the front in France, and his own conversion from Agnosticism to a firm belief in the Christian religion. Commenting upon an address given by the Captain in St. John the Evengelist's Church, Minneapolis, the Rev. E. M. Cross says: "Certainly none of the congregation who heard Captain Sanborn could doubt the reality of the wide-spread spiritual renaissance among the men at the front, of which we have been hearing and reading so much. Here was one, American born and bred, who from conviction of the justice of the allied cause enlisted in the Canadian army, and saw many months of service as a Captain of Engineers on the Ypres salient, until he was wounded. With impassioned directness, Captain Sanborn spoke from first-hand knowledge of the great sacrifices being made by the peoples of England and France. His account of the effect of the war in converting men under arms from Agnosticism to positive Christian faith was no less soul-stirring than it was convincing, coming as it did from the depth of his own experience. In the presence of death men's doubts as to the reality of eternal life cannot long hold their ground. It is literally true that Christ is thrusting Himself upon the men at the front. They cannot avoid Him. They feel and know Him to be present, and in that Presence they find their comfort and strength.

"Captain Sanborn spoke of how the transformed characters of the men are revealed in their letters home, which it is the Captain's duty to censor. Through the subtle alchemy of trench life, their chief concern is no longer for themselves, but for others.

"We do not see how any who heard him could fail to be moved by Captain Sanborn's appeal for the exhibition of a deeper and more intense Christianity by all those at home 'who profess and call themselves Christians'."

Opportunities for the Church in Haiti

"If the Monroe doctrine is to be made really effective it must acknowledge the spiritual needs of our South American neighbors just as much as it recognizes the contributions of natural resources that those neighbors are pouring into this country," says the Rev. Louis G. Wood of Charleston, S. C. "Hati is a nation in which there are wonderful opportunities for aggressive work. These opportunities have been increased greatly since the United States has taken over the protectorate of that nation, and has assumed the administration of the revenues and the constabulary. The move has left a wide opening for this country to bring Christianity to the Haitians and to influence the people to receive the larger truths, the teachings of the Church.

"Considering the productive side of Missionary work, it is evident that there is something wrong with the support of the Christian Church to these Missions. The trouble is found in the fact that while one-third of the contributions are for the support of parochial work, only one-fifth of the same amount is contributed for the maintenance of Foreign Missions."

Pope Tired of Peace Pleas

The Rev. Walter Lowrie, Rector of St. Paul's American Church, Rome, Italy, arrived in New York on the last day of the old year. According to the New York Times: "He said that the Pope had no intention of sending out any more pleas for peace. He praised the work of the Y. M. C. A. among the men of the Italian Army, and said it had taught the officers the value of providing recreation for the war-worn troops back of the firing lines."

Annual Meeting of Eastern Church Association

The Eastern Church Association will hold its Annual Meeting in the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y., on Monday, Jan. 21. The Rev. T. J. Lacey, Ph. D., Rector of the Parish, states that this will be the first gathering of the kind in Brooklyn. Previous sessions have convened in Philadelphia, Cincinnati and New York. The Association seeks the promotion of close relations between our Church and the great Eastern communion, made up of the Churches of Greece, Russia, Serbia, Montenegro, Syria, etc.. The importance of these nations in the present world struggle gives timely interest to the conference. Representatives will present definite reports on the situation in Russia, Serbia, Jerusalem, etc. Several Bishops of our Church will attend, and clergy of the Orthodox Churches and the Armenians have accepted invitations.

A service in the interest of the Association will be held in Trinity Church, New York, on Jan. 20, at 3:30 p. m. A similar service and mass meeting will take place in the Church of the Redeemer that night, at which members of the Russian Cathedral Choir have been invited to sing.

Ordained and Will Go to the Front in France

Mr. Arthur E. Whittle, a graduate of the Philadelphia Divinity School, was ordained a Deacon in St. James' Church, Atlantic City, N. J., on Thursday, Dec. 27, St. John the Evangelist's Day, by the Rt. Rev. Thomas James Garland, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of Pennsylvania. The Rev. R. K. Yerkes, D. D., presented the candidate and preached the sermon. The Rev. Geo. Rogers of Philadelphia and the Rev. W. W. Blatchford, Rector of St. James' Church, were the attending Presbyters and assisted in the service. Mr. Whittle has been engaged in Missionary work in Porto Rico the past two years, and since returning home has been doing work for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. He was born in London. A local paper states that Mr. Whittle expects an appointment immediately as Chaplain with the British forces in France, and expects to sail for the other side in a few days. Mr. Whittle recently received word that his sister, Mrs. Ada Osborne of London, was killed in an air raid by the Germans over London. This intelligence, combined with the fact that Mr. Whittle's two brothers were killed in France about a year ago, led him to hasten his ordination and seek service at the front.

A Church Flag

To the Editor of THE WITNESS:

Wishing to teach in these very parlous times the co-relation and interdependence of Church and State, I have displayed on the sanctuary wall, opposite to the "Stars and Stripes", a Church flag of the following design:

It is made of white silk (white, as particularly appropriate for the emblem of the All Holy One), embroidered in the center with a plain red Latin cross (the cross of Christ, our only hope and glory), and having emblazoned in gold in its upper corners the sacred monogram (the Saviour of the World) and the Chi Ro (the Mighty Captain), and in the lower corners the Alpha and the Omega (symbols of the Divine attributes and the eternal headship of the God-Man). Thus the flag forms a most thorough compendium of Church doctrine, and also by its juxtaposition to the national emblem, an incentive to true Christian citizenship.

At the last meeting of the Knoxville Convocation the above design was officially approved and adopted as the one to be followed in this District, and I was instructed to furnish a description thereof to the Church papers.

I might add, as a hint to the local Guilds, that our flag was made and embroidered entirely by the parson's wife.

There are two freedoms—the false, where a man is free to do what he likes, the true where a man is free to do what he ought.—Charles Kingsley.

This is the hour for Christian men and women to hold fast to their faith. It is the hour for prayer for grace that the love of God may abide in the heart and continue to work as the one supreme motive, holding men steadfastly to the one consistent Christian purpose—to save and to serve the souls of men.—Ex.

"A Member of the Episcopal Church"

"O, yes, I am a member of the Episcopal Church," replied a bright woman upon whom the curate had called to see why she was not taking an active part in the work of the Parish. "Yes, I was confirmed in St. ——'s Church, New York. My family were old Episcopalians."

"Well, are you not willing to help us in the work of the Parish?"

"Yes, I should like to, but the truth of the matter is, I did so much Church work in the last Parish that I was in, that I simply can't force myself to get into the harness again."

"But I thought you said you are a member of the Episcopal Church?"

"Well, so I am," replied the lady, with a controversial air. "I told you I was brought up an Episcopalian."

"Yes," replied the curate, who had a number of similar visits during the week upon "members" (?) of the Episcopal Church, "will you please tell me what you mean by the word 'member'?"

"Why, of course, the word 'member' means any particular part of the body."

"Exactly," replied the curate, "now my arm is a member of my body, but if my arm were paralyzed, what would you say of its membership?"

"I would say it was a 'dead member,'" laughingly replied the woman, for she was clever.

"And the fact that it had been a good, strong working arm in years gone by would not prevent it from being a dead member now," continued the curate, pressing the point home. "And its membership now, instead of being helpful to the body would be a positive hindrance."

"I guess that's right," replied the woman.

"The truth is," said the curate, "the Episcopal Church is so full of members that either can't or won't work, that the body is pretty nearly paralyzed sometimes."

"Well," said the woman, "I guess I am a dead member. You may call on me for anything I can do to assist you."—Parish Messenger.

Wake Up, America!

The Daily News of Burlington, N. C., gives an interesting account of a patriotic service. It says in part:

"The Church was packed long before the hour of the evening service, and several hundred remained on the outside. Major Scott's Graham Company, Captain Freeman's Burlington Company, the Third North Carolina Regiment Band, now in Graham, under the leadership of Sergeant Huff, the Confederate Veterans, Red Cross Societies, Fire Companies, Mayor and Aldermen from from both places attended in a body.

"The Rector, Rev. John B. Gibble, preached a strong sermon on 'Wake Up, America". He referred to the abuse of 'Kaiser militarism' and said that 'If the allies lose, we will also lose with them, and democracy will be doomed forever'. He covered all important points most conclusively, in so few words, and especially from the moral standpoint, how 'we are now being chastened, our indifference to religion, too much love of ease, luxury and pleasure, and our appalling waste and extravagance. How necessary for all to make sacrifices and do our part in some way, and we do not know how much longer we can eat the bread we now eat; that we should not pray for God to be on our side', and in conclusion he explained the symbol of the red, white and blue.

"The band added to the service, and on the Church lawn played 'Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean', and a long overture of sacred familiar airs, and during service played 'America' and 'Star Spangled Banner'. The 'Marseillaise' was rendered on the organ.

"The Church was beautifully decorated with flags and red, white and blue emblems.

"The special prayers were touching and appropriate, and on leaving, many remarked that they never witnessed a more impressive service nor heard a better sermon.

"The big Vested Choir marched in with a new flag, just presented, singing 'Onward, Christian Soldiers', and marching out sang 'Through the Night of Dark and Sorrow'."

The more a Parish does for the work of Christ at large, the abler it will feel to respond to the demands for its own needs. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet and it tendeth to poverty."

OUR WORST ENEMY

There is an aspect of this war that seems to demand an analysis: What are we fighting for? Truth, justice and liberty.

What are we fighting against? Material efficiency without conscience.

We believe that God is on our side. And believing in God, we certainly desire that He shall be on our side; not because we are favorites with the Most High, but because the principles that animate us are the principles that meet with divine approval.

Back of the Nation's struggle there must be a dynamo, that not only turns out munitions, money and merchandise, (Germany has that) but a dynamo that also keeps alive the high motive with which we entered this war.

There is a tendency now that the war is on, to put the whole emphasis on the material output, and to substitute machinery that is turning out things for the dynamo that is energizing character.

There are those who would close our Churches that they may knit more sweaters; who would deprive our Chaplains of support that the huts may be more comfortable; who would neglect our Sunday Schools that our soldiers may be the better cared for.

In short, it is the same old story on a larger scale. Can we save the Nation by banking our spiritual fires? It can't be done.

There never was a time when men needed more to pray, unless Christ's whole gospel is wrong; never a time when Chaplains needed more heartening; never a time when children needed more spiritual care.

We are told that athletics must go on; that the movies are doing a good work; that men must play and have recreation, and so they must; but in the same breath we are told that the Churches must retrench; that benevolences like hospitals, orphanages, etc., must be denied their ordinary support; that everything of a spiritual character must be sacrificed to the material needs of the war. And with what result, do you think? What else but to let down the spiritual fibre of the Nation?

When will men learn that the meager results of spiritual endeavor are not due to the inefficiency of the workers, but to the sterility of the soul?

In times of peace you can get ten men to go to a smoker to one who will make his communion; ten women to participate in the social activities of the Woman's Guild to three who will attend the worship of Almighty God.

Of course a stirring evangelist like Billy Sunday comes along and dynamites them for a time into their spiritual senses and they love the sensation of being so dynamited; but as for braving the burden and heat of the day in spiritual affairs, were it not for a very small remnant America would be like Sodom and Gomorrha.

This Nation may also dynamite John Barleycorn and the brewers fying law and debauching men ther the Turks nor the Pharisees

Sports cannot take the place of Sacraments, neither can Red Cross work, however desirable, take the place of your personal relations to God.

Rather your care for your spiritual needs ought to make you more rational, more faithful, more persistent in the needs of the Nation.

Let us not think that we can make a religion out of either Y. M. C. A. huts or Red Cross Headquarters. They are both splendid auxiliaries, but the soul needs the presence of God in prayer and sacrament today as it never has needed it before, unless we are willing to wake up and discover that the Devil has captured the Americans, while we were whipping the Huns.

"And when the servant of the man of God was risen early and gone forth, behold an host compassed the city both with horses and chariots. And his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! How shall we do?

"And he answered fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed and said, Lord I pray thee, open his eyes that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw; and behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

Truly Elisha won the victory over the Syrians, but Israel refused to believe in the power of the invisible. So while Elisha's message survived in the work of Messiah, Israel failed to accept her prophets, and was scattered to the four winds. Do we believe in the power of prayer or is it the mailed fist that shall triumph over God's heritage?

Our readers will be glad to welcome back this week the series of papers, "Around the Parish", by Rev. George P. Atwater of Akron, Ohio. They are brim full of human interest. Mr. Atwater is a clear thinker and writer and of practical experience in Parish life, as these articles attest. He has lately written a book about the Church, which is explained in our advertising columns this week. We are very sure a great many of our readers will want to read it.

THE KINGDOM GROWING; CHURCH EXTENSION IN OUR DAY

THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE

The Lenten Offering Number of The Spirit of Missions should be ordered not later than January 15. Last year the children of the Church sold more than 100,000 copies, and this year it is confidently hoped they will do even better.

The conditions under which the copies are ordered are these: they are sent on the understanding that [redacted] than May 1st. [redacted] son may place an order for any number of copies. The 1918 issue is well illustrated and will contain interesting [redacted] from many parts of the [redacted] particulars will [redacted] by the Spirit of [redacted] questions will be included, suitable for the use of the Church schools where these lessons are used.

A RUSSIAN RELIC

The Spirit of Missions for January contains the following editorial note: "It is seldom that one of the secretaries of the Board of Missions pays an extended visit to the Mission field. When he does, the matter is one of importance and interest to the whole Church. Dr. Wood's journey through Alaska last summer with Archdeacon Stuck was followed with keen interest by many who have been eagerly waiting for the Archdeacon's account of it. As the distance is great and mail is necessarily slow, it is only now that we have the privilege of publishing the long looked for account, written by the Archdeacon of the Yukon. Of necessity much detail has has to be omitted and only the general and out-

Work of Church War Commission in Training Camps

Voluntary Chaplains have been appointed in nearly all of the cantonments, and many of the National Guard and other camps. Voluntary Chaplains whose salaries are paid in whole or in part by the War Commission are appointed upon the nomination of the Bishop in whose Diocese the several camps are located. In certain of the camps Diocesan or Provincial committees make final appointment of Chaplains and pay their salaries from their own treasury. The General Fund of the Commission is used to supplement these resources where needed.

The camps in the southeast are being rapidly supplied with well selected Chaplains.

At Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., Rev. Edwin A. Penick, Rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, has left his Parish to give his whole time to his duties as Chaplain.

Rev. Robert E. Gribben, of St. John's in working with a man of his strength, breadth and vision."

The Board of Missions, acting upon the suggestion of the War Commission, has requested Bishop Thurston of Eastern Oklahoma to move to Fort Sill as voluntary Chaplain at Camp Doniphan for three months or more.

Rev. Herman Page, Jr., has been appointed by the Commission as voluntary Chaplain at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Washington, on the nomination of the Bishop of Olympia.

Rev. Charles F. Collins enters upon his duties as voluntary Chaplain at Camp Pike, Little Rock, Arkansas.

The salaries of voluntary Chaplains which have been provided by the Commission up to the present time amounts to $21,500.

Wise Counsels

Bishop Hall has recently been giving wise counsel to his clergy and laity regarding certain questions much to the front just now. He says:

"We are beginning to feel in many ways the pressure of the war. There are probably trying experiences before us. There never was a time when the steadying influence of religion was more needed—to uphold and comfort in suffering and anxiety and bereavement, and not less to save us from excitement and from ill-considered schemes, which would defeat the very purpose sought. On the clergy rests a very great responsibility. By teaching and by example they should at this crisis show themselves real spiritual guides. Prayer and worship, the preaching of righteousness and justice and sacrifice were never more needed.

"For this reason we earnestly deprecate the leaving of ordinary posts of ministerial duty for work more immediately connected with the war, save where there is a direct call, and the opportunity for spiritual ministrations among our soldiers and sailors. Other work for the physical and moral well-being of our representatives in the country's service is to be highly valued and generously supported; but this can be done as well, or better, by good laymen, who are not trained or set apart or commissioned to be ministers of God's Word and Sacraments. We priests must not fail in a true sense to take ourselves—our office—seriously. If we can be well spared from our proper work, is it because we have not really risen to a worthy execution of our office? Those who may be called to active service, and those who return, and those who have to stay at home, will all need the best ministrations, public and private, which we can give. Let them not be disappointed through failure on our part to render the service, 'do the bit', which is allotted to us.

"The shortage of coal has led to the suggestion of closed Churches. This again would be a great mistake. There will be difficulties, and the need of economy. In many places wood can be substituted for coal. In some it may be necessary to restrict the use of the Church to Sunday mornings; where this is necessary, let gatherings at other times for informal devotions be provided in houses. But do not let us begin economies at the Church. Where it is possible, let there be more services rather than fewer, with an opportunity for persons to find a quiet sanctuary for private prayer and intercession. Do not let any Sunday pass without the showing of the Lord's death, and the pleading of His sacrifice in the Sacrament of His Body and Blood. 'Union Services' are admissible, the [redacted] should not be restricted to war time [redacted] so far as principles forbid our tampering with what we believe to be [redacted] parts of our Lord's design for His Church, those principles cannot be lightly set aside at a time when we are called to utmost reality and sincerity."

Service for the Deaf

An interesting service was conducted recently by the Rev. B. R. Allabough, Genueral Missionary of the Mid-Western Deaf Mute Mission, in the Chapel of the State School for the Deaf at Danville, Ky. The service was to have been held in Trinity Church but owing to poor light caused by damaged pipes, it had to be held in the School Chapel. Good light is a very necessary element in a service for the deaf, where the eyes are used instead of the ears. This was Mr. Allabough's last service there, the reorganization of work among the deaf along provincial lines having removed the Diocese of Lexington from his jurisdiction. The Rev. H. L. Tracy of Baton Rouge, La., is expected to succeed him in this Diocese.

Poems We Love to Read

THE ORGANIST IN HEAVEN

(The Wesley of the poem is Samuel S. Wesley (1810-1876), a famous organist at Hereford, Exeter, Winchester and Gloucester Cathedrals. He was a son of Samuel Wesley, also a famous musician, and grandson of Charles Wesley.)

When Wesley died, the angelic orders,
To see him at the state,
Pressed so incontinent that the warders
Forgot to shut the gate.
So I, that hitherto had followed
As one with grief o'ercast,
Where for the doors a space was hollowed,
Crept in and heard what passed.
And God said: "Seeing thou hast given
Thy life to My great sounds,
Choose thou through all the cirque of heaven
What sort of bliss redounds."
Then Wesley said: "I hear the thunder
Low growling from Thy seat—
Grant me that I may bind it under
The trampling of my feet."
And Wesley said: "See, lightning quivers
Upon the presence walls—
Lord, give me of it four great rivers,
To be my manuals."
And then I saw the thunder chidden
As slave to his desire;
And then I saw the space bestridden
With four great bands of fire;
And stage by stage, stop stop subtending,
Each lever strong and true,
One shape inextricable blending,
The awful organ grew.
Then certain angels clad the master
In very marvelous wise,
Till clouds of rose and alabaster
Concealed him from mine eyes.
And likest to a dove soft brooding,
The innocent figure ran;
So breathed the breath of his preluding,
And then the fugue began—
Began; but to his office turning,
The porter swung his key;
Wherefore, although my heart was yearning,
I had to go; but he Played on; and as I downward clomb,
I heard the mighty bars
Of thunder-gusts, that shook heaven's dome,
And moved the balanced stars.

—Thomas Edward Brown (1878).

GOD'S WILL

I asked the New Year for some motto sweet,
Some rule of life with which to guide my feet,
I asked and paused; He answered soft and low:
"God's will to know."

"Will knowledge then suffice, New Year," I cried,
And ere the question into silence died
The answer came, "Nay, but remember, too, God's will to do."

Once more I asked, "Is there no more to tell?"
And once again the answer softly fell,
"Yes, this one thing, all other things above, God's will to love."

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

The Parson's Sanctum

"Come right in, please. Just a moment until I can remove these books from a chair. There, sit down.

"Yes, this is my sanctum. It has rather the appearance of a workshop, office, library and museum, all commingled. Quite different from the traditional study of the parson of which we read in old fashioned novels. They had shelves to the ceiling, and those shelves were filled with volumes of theology, while today we have—but look around you and see for yourself.

"You find it interesting? A good study nowadays does arrest the attention. Yes, I use a typewriter. Trollope's parsons no doubt wrote the bromidic neat but small hand that gave manuscripts an apperance of high finish and splendid workmanship. Judging from the contents of the many volumes of the sermons of the period that have now returned to their dust, I should conclude that the publishers must have been hypnotized into accepting those manuscripts by the copper-plate handwriting. We today must resort to the typewriter if we wish to have our letters read carefully.

"Tennis racket? Yes indeed. Used it in college. Once in a while we take a little outing together. Golf sticks, too. What would Jonathan Edwards say? Haven't the least idea. I rather prefer Oliver Wendell Holmes myself. You remember his words in the 'Autocrat'? 'I have found that some of those active exercises which are commonly thought to belong to young folks only may be enjoyed at a much later period.' Rather a sober remark from the good Doctor, yet full of wisdom. It may have been suggested by the sight of children playing on the 'Common.' By the way, I noticed that Holmes made one poor prophecy. He says in sober earnest that rowing, in a narrow boat equipped with outriggers, 'is the nearest approach to flying that a man has ever [illegible] per[illegible] ture' and a 'Chess Manuel' side by side. Any natural family of books is scattered to the four walls.

"That is not all. Every book has a complexion. It is black, red, blue or green. Colors stumble over one another on the shelves. Here we need a dress reform.

"How do I classify mine? According to service. The ones I consult frequently I keep near me; the others find their level.

"Have I read them all? Bless you, no. One must be very careful about reading a book nawadays. To read some books all at once is about as beneficial as going to the grocery and eating a barrel of crackers. The library furnishes raw material for reading. Your own purpose and your own interest do the rest. To go back to Holmes again, we must remember what he says of each mind having a different 'Saturation point.' You cannot, with profit, read beyond that.

"Do I get my sermons out of those books? No, indeed. Those books get my sermons out of me. Professor James or Dr. Newman Smyth pump away and draw up one sermon at every page. Others pump too, but sometimes the handle seems disconnected from the shaft. It does not make much difference what kind of book it is, if it is a good book it gives a stimulus and inspiration to the mind. Here's Thoreau's dear old 'Walden Pond'! It is not a record of physical adventure, but of mental and spiritual adventure that impels one to face his slavery in his possessions. A little reading of that will clear the turbulent waters of your restless thoughts. Or if you are a little pessimistic, because your last chicken supper failed to pay a dividend, get out your Royce—'The Spitit of Modern Philosophy'—and it may begin to dawn on you that perhaps chicken suppers are not a very large element in the problem of your existence.

"Here are some of the tools of the work, commentaries and concordances and dictionaries. Commentaries are good unless they try to project upon the mountain range of sacred literature the formal, Italian garden decoions of some outworn, scholastic tem of theology. That is comrable to explaining the oracles of lphi by the phonograph.

"Here are the inspirational books. hey oil the machinery. This shelf ll of old college text books may be kened to the dismantled scaffolding ing about a building whose walls are mpleted. The remaining work is he interior finish and the decorating. ere is poetry. We need that. Science nd history are like wall maps in the mple of the mind. They attempt o reproduce for us what goes on in he great realm of nature and humanty. Poetry opens the windows beween the maps and allows us a limpse of the reality. Poetry is the a parson has to be ready, like an alarm clock, to go off at eleven o'clock each Sunday morning. Many of my sermons are at flood tide on Friday night or Saturday morning. A sermon comes like an oil well and has to be pumped into the reservoir of a manuscript. It sometimes comes without warning though not without preparation. The drilling tool has been driven through the rock and sand of the mind by a hard blow, before it strikes oil.

"O yes, indeed, the machinery of the Parish is centered here too. Here are the rolls and letters and records. But the most splendid thing about a sanctum is its associations. Here I meet the sorrowing and penitent, and needy and overburdened. Here I try to create that atmosphere of trust and faith without which a sanctum is all machinery, but with which it is a spot made sacred by real service for men in the name of the Master.

A Joint Ohio Church Commission

TO FOSTER AND PROMOTE THE CHURCH'S WORK AT CAMP SHERMAN

BY REV. F. L. FLINCHBAUGH'

Secretary of the Commission

The Church in Ohio is now well organized to look after the interests of Churchmen in training camps, and especially for the effective continuation of the Church's work at Camp Sherman, Ohio, where perhaps an unparallelled opportunity for service is offered ths Church by reason of a strategic location practically "within the camp," a fine Church building with social hall and living apartment, and a strong inauguration and prosecution of the work from the very opening of the camp. At the call and appointment of Bishop Vincent of Southern Ohio and Bishop Leonard of Ohio, the following organization has recently been effected of the Joint Ohio Church War Commission: Bishop Leonard, President; Bishop Coadjuter Reese of Southern Ohio, Chairman; Rev. R. S. Woodroofe, of Cleveland, Recording Secretary; Mr. Mortimer Matthews, of Cincinnatti, Treasurer; Rev. F. L. Flinchbaugh, of Cincinnatti, Executive Secretary; Rev. F. H. Nelson, of Cinsinnatti, Rev. George P. Atwater, of Akron, Mr. W. O. Froheck, of Columbus, Mr. A. S. Mather and Mr. F. E. Brown of Cleveland. This Commission has undertaken to raise a budget of $25,000 for the war work in Ohio, in addition to what is to be raised for the General War Commission of the Church. The purpose of this budget is to pay for the cost of the erection and the maintenance of a beautiful Church building with an attractive social room and living apartment which is now about completed and in which the opening services will be held on Epiphany Sunday.

Before the workmen had left the camp or the new draft army had arrived in camp we had a steel portable Church on a piece of private property adjoining the camp. As a voluntary Chaplain it was my privilege and pleasure to go in and out of barracks and hospital representing the Church and ministering to all sorts and conditions of men and Churchmen. Every Sunday morning there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at eight o'clock and a preaching service at ten o'clock. On Sunday and Thursday evenings I addressed the men in the Y. M. C. A. huts. Within three months, without much assistance from the Clergy of the State, who have lent very little assistance in the way of sending the names of the men from their Parishes, a communicant list of almost 300 men has been built up. The inadequacy of the portable Church was soon felt, and plans were started for a new Church building. Meanwhile the private property on which the Church was located was taken over by the Government as a military reservation, and on it has been erected a Red Cross Community House and Guest Houses for visitors to the camp. Our Church is in the heart of this community life and in the heart of the camp life.

Friends in Southern Ohio came to the support of the plan for a new Church building who guaranteed $10,000 toward its cost on condition that an equal amount be raised in Ohio, and after a presentation of the work and its splendid possibilities before the Bishops and the Clergy of Cleveland the guarantee was received for the additional $10,000. The new Church was even then in course of construction, built in the shape of the letter L, with the long arm an auditorium, to be used as a social hall accommodating 150. There is also a living apartment containing a kitchen, living room, dining room, two bed rooms and a bath room.

Our work in no way duplicates that of the Y. M. C. A., but supplements it. There are fully as many men in camp who do not find congenial and helpful expression of their religious and social life in a Y. M. C. A. hut as there are those who do. And this is not to disparage the splendid and essential service the Y. M. C. A. is rendering. It is only saying that we have a work to do not only in looking after our own, but in offering the only real Church centre and Church services in the camp, other than the Sunday morning masses in the Knights of Columbus hall.

To such an extent has our work commended itself to the camp authorities that we were invited to proceed with the erection of the new Church and promised every encouragement by the authorized committee in charge of the development of the new community centre within the camp, and the building has been erected under the supervision of the Acting Construction Quartermaster of the camp. The Church has been named "The Church of the Centurion" as a witness to the broad and inclusive character of the work that has been done and is being planned.

At this new stage in the progress of the work at Camp Sherman, Rev. T. W. Attridge will assume charge, who has resigned as assistant at Christ Church, Cincinnatti, in order to do so. He and Mrs. Attridge will reside in the apartment attached to the Church building, and their residence there in connection with the social hall will create a real home-like environment for the men who avail themselves of its privileges. Mr. John T. Price, of Norristown, Pa., representing the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, will assist Mr. Attridge in the work of the Church.

The Joint Commission, in addition to fostering and promoting the Church at Camp Sheridan, is ready to lend every possible assistance to St. Paul's Church, Chillicothe, three miles from the camp, where the men come in great numbers on Saturday evenings to a social provided by the women of the Parish. It is desirous of seeing the local Parish work strengthened, and hopes to be able to co-operate with the Rector and Vestry, and those who have been doing such splendid work ever since the construction work of the camp began.

Madame Dandelion

I know a nice old lady called Madame Dandelion, who always lives outdoors among the Daisies, and the Green Grasses, and the Sweet Red Clover. Her cap is the daintiest cap you ever saw, woven of the finest lace, and white as the driven snow "fresh fallen out of the night", though once it was threads of living gold.

She is a very quiet old lady, but she always nods and smiles to me in the friendliest way as I pass by. She is very patient, too, for when the Summer Wind, who is a mischievous little elf, unties her pretty white cap, she simply says, with a little smile: "Just let him enjoy himself and have as good a frolic as he wishes." Once I said to her: "But he may spoil your beautiful cap." "Never mind that," she answered, "I can get a new one next year, and perhaps he may not feel so frolicsome then." So she keeps her quiet, stately manner though he tears it into shreds, and the pieces sail away like white ships upon the ocean of the air.

Spiritual Value in the War

Major Charles W. Gordon, who in time of peace is a Presbyterian parson in Winnipeg, but better known, perhaps, as the author of "The Sky Pilot", and other interesting volumes of fiction, recently spoke of some spiritual aspects of the war. He said: "America did not enter the war [redacted] the spiritual side of the national life. Americans are doubtless recognizing as never before that materialism is not the best in life. Yes, they are recognizing that 'man does not live by bread alone', but by spiritual ideals. At the outbreak of the war the cry went up that Christianity had collapsed. What put Great Britain and Canada and the United States in the war? It was, at bottom, the ideals that religion had nourished in their hearts, for it is the spiritual that most deeply stirs the pulse and quickens the blood. Far from being a collapse of religion, the war has revealed more strongly than ever the true place and value of religion in the community.

"Religion has accomplished three great things in the war. First, it has emphasized anew the ideals of freedom, righteousness and good faith, the three fundamental ideals of faith; second, it has given us a new type of soldier. In the Canadian and American armies especially, the old soldier type of the Crimean and Peninsular war times has passed away, and credit for this new type of warrior must be given to the Y. M. C. A., which is recognized by every high command. And, third, religion has steadied and encouraged thousands of people, and has given them a new and higher view of what sacrifice and service mean.

"The Kaiser has taken God on his staff and made him his Adjutant General. Well, he has his theory of God and we have ours. The true test of God is how He affects man, what the Godlike influence is upon the people. Our claim is that every person making up the sum total of humanity has his individual rights.

"The Kaiser's god is a State. He has no regard for individual man. He will sacrifice hundreds of thousands of men to gain his ends, as he did at Landrecies, in the retreat from Mons, when the attacking Germans became mixed up with the opposing forces of English and Irish regiments, and the guns of the German artillery were turned upon the whole mass, friend and foe alike. To the German State men mean nothing. There is a verse in the Psalms which may exemplify my point. It is, 'Precious shall their blood be in His sight'. The right Government is the one that is distinguished by that as the final test. The religion that is not merciful and pitiful to men is the one that the world will reject. Humanity is the big thing, and when the war is over, all Governments must stand or fall by their attitude toward the welfare of humanity."

A Religious Bable

Among the advertisements in the New York Times of Sunday meetings, services, etc., appear announcements of all sorts of religious cults, including Christian Science, Divine Science, Ethical Culture, New Thought, Advance Science, League of the Larger Life, A New Order of Meditation, Theosophy, Spiritualists and free lance preachers. Madam Edith Rarick conducts classes in "Metaphysical Healing and the Science of Being". Mrs. Annie Rix Militz is the minister of "The Home of Truth". James Porter Mills meditates on "A Way of Illumination and Abounding Health". Prof. Everson informs the public that he will deliver an unusual lecture on "A Question God Can't Answer". Mrs. Behrend, of the School of the Builders, makes the strongest appeal of all to the public. She is "the only personal pupil of the late Judge Troward of England and India, the acknowledged master-thinker in New Thought and Mental Science", and "will explain the Bible meaning of 'Visualizing'. An understanding of this faculty will attract to you contentment, power, peace and plenty, as the rose attracts from the elements only that which is necessary to make a perfect rose".

The Rev. Rolfe P. Crum, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Syracuse, N. Y., will engage in war service at the front in France immediately after Easter. He has been granted by his Parish a leave of absence for one year.

BISHOP McCORMICK WRITES FROM PARIS

Letter Received by Bishop Lawrence of Mass.

My dear Bishop Lawrence:

It is good to get your Christmas and New Year's greetings.

I have been in and about Paris most of the time so far on account of three things:

1st. The necessary organization of the office and the popularization of our work among Church people and others in the city.

2nd. The three weeks of anti-typhoid innoculation.

3rd. The arrangements as to military passes. I have had an interview with General Pershing, and the matter of the passes is in process of adjustment.

I have had several conferences with Mr. Carter, the head of the Y. M. C. A., and with members of his staff, and am co-operating with him in every possible way. He is a high-grade man, very sympathetic with us and thoroughly to be trusted.

Bishop Brent has been here for some days and is now on a Y. M. C. A. tour which is, perhaps, the beginning of his work with them. He is in a Y. M. C. A. uniform and seems quite fit. I understand that his headquarters will be in Paris and I shall, therefore, see him frequently. Bishop Lloyd came over from London, on his way to Liberia, accompanied by Archdeacon Schofield, and spent eight days, returning to London yesterday. He preached at the American Church on December 9th, and then went on a flying tour arranged by Mr. Carter for the purpose of giving him at least a glimpse of conditions. Bishop Israel is still waiting for his Base Hospital. Meanwhile he has been making very acceptable addresses to the men on the Y. M. C. A. circuit. Just now he is within the British lines visiting the Deputy Chaplain General. He seems much improved in health and spirits. He is exercising the jurisdiction over the American Churches in Europe, and has sent Murray to Rome to relieve Lowrie, for three months.

As to the registration, we are attempting to catalogue all the men in the service and all war workers attached to our Church, wherever we can find them. We have already something like 300 names on our list, which is growing rapidly. I am sending each one a Christmas card and am having printed some thousands of cards, announcing the services of the American Church in Paris and the fact of my having my office there. These cards we will take out to the men whenever we go.

I have formed a Chaplains' Auxiliary of about twenty of the most prominent Churchwomen in the city and am putting them into touch with the individual Chaplains and their men. Through these ladies we are accumulating and distributing large numbers of books and periodicals and we are having 3000 pairs of woolen socks made and sent to the Chaplains for distribution, 1400 of which have been forwarded.

As I wrote Bishop Perry, Dr. Watson has been very considerate and has given us the use of the large room on the second floor of the Parish House, with light and heat. As soon as Bishop Israel returns, he and I together, will make a substantial donation to the expenses, as both light and heat are very dear. I am looking for an extra helper in the office, who can be here when either Mr. Ross or I, or both, should be out of the city, and who can assist with the correspondence, which is becoming increasingly large.

I have made several visits outside the city to camps and hospitals and cantons, and hope next Sunday to be in one of the large troop centers, where arrangements are being made for giving the men their Christmas Communion. Last Sunday I was to have been within the lines, but the engagement was cancelled by wire for military reasons, which could not be explained. Such is war!

I have seen and conferred with the following Chaplains: Messrs. Sherrill, Taylor, Bayard, Peabody, Talbot, Rollins, and Danker, and have corresponded with all the rest. Among our Clergy in the Y. M. C. A., I have seen and conferred with Messrs. Parrick, Cate, Kinsolving, Rathbun, Cleveland, Cooke, Ferguson and Lusk, and have written the rest of them. I have also seen Mr. Van Keuren, who is with the Red Cross. I have co-operated with Dean Beekman in his Soldiers' and Sailors' Club, which is a most useful piece of work, and I have had an interview with Chaplain Pierce, who is now acting as a Major, in charge of all burial arrangements for American soldiers.

In regard to the additional Clergy coming over, I have already written at length that unless they secure commissions as Chaplains, they would have to come under the Y. M. C. A. or the Red Cross, as there is almost no chance to use men independently.

As to the American University Union, I should say that in addition to its general value as a University Club, it has the advantage of giving to the men a decent and enjoyable social centre and also of putting them into touch with really wise advisors, such as Professors Nettleton, Van Dyke, Lansing and Vibbert, who may be of unusual help to a man in time of perplexity or emergency.

As to moral conditions, there is no doubt that difficulties arose at first, and to some extent continue, both on the drink and woman question, but matters are being straightened out and regulations are becoming stringent. Men will not be allowed in Paris on leave and the Y. M. C. A. has been asked to prepare large recreation centres, in places like Aix-les-Baines, where the men can have a good time without unnecessary temptations. I think it might fairly be said that matters are improving and that the military authorities are quite awake to the necessity for control, and wherever necessary, for punishment.

As to the requirements of Chaplains, it is manifest that the first thing needed is a small car or other means of transportation. I think that Edwards is the only man who has a car of his own. A car is better than a motor-cycle as it gives a man a chance to carry supplies and to take helpers with him. In some cases Battalions are 150 miles from each other, and in many cases, if not in most, portions of the Regiments are widely separated. The car question would have to be settled in America, as it is practically impossible to obtain cars here. I do not think it necessary for the Chaplains to have moving picture machines or anything of that sort as they can best be looked after by the Y. M. C. A. We need additional Prayer Books and some more of your Service Books. I am trying to get Bibles from England, as many of the men have asked for Bibles rather than Testaments. There is always a need for readable books and periodicals.

In conclusion, the men seem glad that we are here and that the Church is officially represented. They talk freely about their home Parishes and about the services. Last Sunday afternoon, in a driving snow storm, three young aviators walked a long distance to attend the service here. Two of them were from Brooklyn and one from Philadelphia, and they were good types of hundreds like themselves. Three men have come long distances to me, in Paris, for Confirmation. When I was at the base of the ambulance service, a few Sundays ago, a fine, tall Sergeant said to me, "Bishop, are you going to give us the Holy Communion?" and when I replied, "Yes", said, "I'm so very glad, as it may be my last." He was going, the next day, to an exposed position. The Communion service seems to be that which the men really prefer.

I heard from Dr. Maxon that in his Base Hospital there were 400 men, mostly suffering from such diseases as measles and mumps. We shall have to do what we can to keep the men in good spirits this Winter and to try to brace them up and cheer them.

With regards and best wishes, believe me,

Sincerely yours,
JNO. N. McCORMICK.

A dour old Scot upon his deathbed was informed by his wife that the minister was coming to pray with him. "I dinna want anybody tae pray wi' me," said he. "Well, then, he'll speak words of comfort tae ye." "I don't want tae hear words of comfort," said the intractable Northcountryman. "What do you want, then?" asked his wife. "I want," was the characteristic reply, "I want tae argue."—Arch. Alexander.

Michigan City Notes

We have the following from the Ft. Wayne Trinity Parish News: Our Christmas services began with a midnight mass on Christmas Eve. The Church was decorated with hemlock trees and wreathes, and the Altar with poinsettias and narcissus and many candles. The congregation filled the Church, and a number of old Choir men back from school, took their place in the procession, which was led by four Acolytes in cottas and red cassocks carrying torches. The music was exceptionally well sung, and many remarked that it was the best midnight service in years. The Kyrie was by Mr. Church, and the rest of the service the familiar St. Cecelia Mass of Gounod. The offertory was by Simper. One hundred and twenty-five Communions were made at this service. At 7:30 Christmas morning there was a low celebration, with forty Communions, and at 10 a. m. there was a high celebration, with sermon on 'Peace on Earth'. The whole number of Communions was 190. The Christmas offering was $170, with more to come in."

Over $200 from Trinity Church School and St. Andrew's Chapel, united, in their Christmas entertainment. A service was held in the Church by the Rector. The latter also led the children in prayers for our soldiers and sailors who defend the nation, and invoked the Divine blessing upon our arms in the stress of battle. The hymn, "Holy Night", was sung on bended knee in conclusion. Then the congregation filed into the Parish House, where a blazing tree, with vari-colored lights gleaming from the fragrant pine branches, beckoned in welcome to the social festivities of the hour. The true Christmas spirit of self-denial was evidenced. For the first time in many years the tree bore no gifts for the children. The Sunday School had voted in favor of doing without the presents this year, in order the better to respond to the appeal from the Colored Schools of the South, and a large box was prepared, containing not only joyful but useful gifts of clothing, shoes and the like. It was sent to St. Thomas' Colored School, in Virginia, under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Freeman, who was Chairman of the Trinity Committee of Arrangements, and last night a letter of gratitude and thanks was read from the Rev. John E. T. Harrison, Rector of the Southern School, who stated that the box had safely reached its destination in time for the joyful exercises on Christmas Eve.

From the reports that have come to us from the various Parishes and Missions throughout the Diocese, there was a midnight celebration of the Holy Communion on Christmas Eve in almost every Parish and Mission. St. James' Church, South Bend, had three celebrations of the Holy Communion—at midnight, 7 a. m. and 10 a. m. We have the following from St. James', South Bend: "At the midnight service, the Rev. H. R. White was celebrant, assisted by the Rev. R. E. Carr. The Bishop pontificated. There was a solemn procession before the service, and the Choir sang Farmer's Mass and the Hallelujah Chorus as an anthem. One hundred and fifty Communions were made. A slight excitement was caused by one of the strings of evergreens catching on fire from a candle. The small blaze was extinguished by the Acolytes, without any damage being done. The Church School held their service on Christmas Eve. An offering of $10 was given to the Armenian Fund by a vote of the School. This represented the amount that is usually used for candies."

Dr. Richardson, who is in charge of the Church at Peru, sends the following: "The Christmas services began on Sunday, with the largest congregations seen in the Church for a long time. A series of addresses on 'Ourselves, the Church and the War' was begun, and bids fair to attract a large number of people. On Monday evening the Christmas entertainment was held, and Santa Claus appeared with gifts for the scholars and with a check for $160 for Dr. Richardson from the friends in the Parish. On Tuesday morning a splendid congregation gathered for service, and a collection of $180.40 was taken. * * * This week we expect to receive a fine ebonized bulletin board for the Church, given by Mrs. Beiler, who has recently come to the Parish. * * * Dr. Richardson has been appointed a member of the National Council of Defense and on the National Speakers' Bureau, and has been very actively engaged giving a number of addresses for Red Cruss and Public Information before large mass meetings about the State."

Christ Church, Gary, had a midnight mass on Christmas Eve, followed by a second service at 7 a. m., and a mass at 10 o'clock, with sermon. At the midnight service a large Choir sang Moir's Mass, and the service was accompanied with full ceremonial. The Church was filled at this service, and programs were provided announcing the pages in the Prayer Book where the various parts of the service could be found for the strangers and visitors.

On the Sunday after Christmas, the Bishop of the Diocese ordained the Rev. R. E. Carr to the Priesthood. The music of the Midnight Mass on Christmas Eve was repeated. The Bishop preached the sermon, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. J. H. McKenzie, D. D., Rector of Howe School. Father Carr will continue his post-graduate studies at the General Theological Seminary, New York.

The Christmas services at St. Andrew's, Kokomo, consisted of a celebration of the Holy Communion at 6, 7, and 10 a. m. Christmas morning. The 6 o'clock service was intended mainly for the men who had worked in the factories all night or had to start to work at 7 a. m. The services at 7 and 10 a. m. were both choral, with special music and sermons. In all, there were 105 Communions made. The Church School Christmas entertainment was held Wednesday evening, and consisted of the Mystery play, "The Nativity", and a short address and services by the Priest-in-Charge. This was followed by the distribution to all the children of oranges and a bag of nuts. During the Mystery Play an offering was taken for the suffering Armenians.

CHURCH SCHOOL CHRISTMAS

We have the following from the "Messenger" of St. John's, Elkhart:

About 150 attended the entertainment given by the School on the evening of Dec. 23. Miss Catherine Bower and Miss Beatrice Boedefeld are deserving of the thanks of the entire congregation for their untiring efforts in preparing the high class program. All members of the cast were at their best, and some acted just like professionals. Nine dozen oranges were distributed at the conclusion. The offering, amounting to $19.22, to be sent to the Jerusalem Mission.

SERVICE FLAG DEDICATED

One of the special features of the midnight service Christmas Eve was the dedication of a Service Flag, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Boneman. The dedication service was preceded by the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner", and followed by the singing of "God Save Our Men". The flag is of silk, and is hung in the east Choir arch. Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Foster gave to the Church a silk American flag of similar size, to be hung in the west Choir arch as a memorial to their mothers.

New York Convention and Dr. Leighton Parks

We have all heard of the school boy who, when asked to describe a lobster, replied, "A lobster is a red fish that walks backwards." A capital definition were it not for the fact that a lobster is no fish, s nitot red and does not walk backwards. But that school boy's definition was accuracy itself compared with the Associated Press report of the Annual Diocesan Convention of New York. In the first place, Bishop Courtney and the Church Temperance Society were blamed for introducing the temperance resolution that kept the Convention in turmoil for a part of two days. But that resolution was not offered by Bishop Courtney, nor by the Church Temperance Society, but merely by Dr. Empringham in his individual capacity as a member of the Convention.

Again, Dr. Leighton Parks was misrepresented by the Associated Press, and in consequence by papers all over the nation, as being an hydrophobically insane champion of the liquor traffic.

But, if we understood the eloquent Rector of St. Bartholomew's, he entirely concurred with the object of the resolution, but not with the method proposed to obtain that object. He is not in favor of the proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution. In this Dr. Parks is supported by many who are even ardent prohibitionests, yet who nevertheless object to what they call the Federal interference with "State rights".

Dr. Leighton Parks was the first Rector in New York to invite the Superintendent of the Church Temperance Society to present the cause of temperance in his Church. Dr. Parks gave the Church Temperance Society a hearing the morning of the first Sunday in Lent—the Sunday when one of the largest congregations of the year would be expected. Later, Dr. Parks again invited the Church Temperance Society to present its cause at St. Bartholomew's Chapel.

Dr. Parks' information with respect to the psychological effects of the drug alcohol stands in need of revision in the light of modern science, but he is big and broad enough to want his people to hear specialists on the subject, and he is not deterred by the fear that some of his parishioners will rob St. Bartholomew's by subscribing to their Church Temperance Society.—Temperance.

BISHOP-SUFFRAGAN OF SOUTH DAKOTA CONSECRATED

The consecration of the Rev. William Proctor Remington as Bishop Suffragan of the Missionary District of South Dakota took place at St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, Minn., on Thursday morning, Jan. 10, in the presence of a large number of the clergy and laity of the Diocese, and of a congregation which crowded the Church to the limit of its seating capacity. The Very Rev. Edwin B. Woodruff, Dean of Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, S. D., and formerly Rector of St. Clement's Church, St. Paul, celebrated the Holy Communion at 8 o'clock. Morning Prayer was said at 9:30 o'clock by the Rev. Stanley S. Kilbourne, Rector of Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis. The service of consecration began at 10:30 o'clock with the processional hymn, "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken". The Presiding Bishop of the American Church, the Rt. Rev. Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, D. D., was the celebrant at the service of the Holy Communion, and presided at the office of consecration. The Rt. Rev. John Poyntz Tyler, D. D., Missionary Bishop of North Dakota, read the Epistle, and the Rt. Rev. Frank Arthur McElwain, Bishop of Minnesota, read the Gospel. The Rt. Rev. Charles David Williams, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, was the preacher, taking for his text St. Mark x:42-45: "Jesus called them to him, and said unto them, Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But so shall it not be among you: but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister, and whosoever will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all. For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." The preacher's treatment of his subject, "The Supremacy of Service", will long be remembered by those whose privilege it was to hear him.

The Rt. Rev. Hugh Latimer Burleson, Missionary Bishop of South Dakota, and the Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Colorado, presented the Bishop Suffragan-elect for consecration. The Rt. Rev. Theodore Payne Thurston, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Eastern Oklahoma, and a former Rector of St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, read the certificate of election. The Rev. Geo. S. Keller, a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Minnesota, read the Evidence of Ordination. The Rev. Alfred G. Pinkham, Secretary of the Standing Committee, read the Testimonial of Bishops, and Mr. Charles B. Lyon, a member of the Standing Committee, read the consent of the Standing Committees. After the Promise of Conformity, the Litany was said by Bishop Burleson.

The Consecrators were Bishops Tuttle, McElwain and Tyler. Bishops Williams, Thurston, Johnson and Burleson took part in the laying on of hands. The attending Presbyters were the Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Rector of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, and the Rev. Edward M. Cross, Rector of St. John the Evangelist's Church, St. Paul. The Rev. Frederick D. Tyner was the Master of Ceremonies.

Besides Bishop Burleson and Dean Woodruff, there were present at the service from South Dakota, the Rev. Dr. Edward Ashley, General Missionary; the Rev. S. S. Mitchell, Rector of Trinity Church, Watertown, and Editor of the official paper of the District, and the Rev. William Holmes of the Santee Agency. The Very Rev. H. F. Kloman, Dean of Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, N. D., was among other visiting clergymen outside the Diocese of Minnesota.

A bountiful luncheon was served to the guests in the Parish House at the close of the service, followed by a number of after dinner talks. Mr. Lyon introduced the speakers, including Bishops Tuttle, Burleson, Johnson, Williams, McElwain and Thurston, the Rev. Dr. Dewey, pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church, Minneapolis, and Mrs. Remington. The new Bishop was called upon by the toastmaster, and gave the final touch to a very happy event by his earnest and appropriate response to all that had been said.

A number of letters of congratulation were read from friends of the Bishop. It was a great joy to him and an inspiration to others to have present throughout the service and the luncheon his aged mother, Mrs. Joseph Price Remington of Philadelphia, and his sister, Mrs. Charles Carver, Jr., of Ardmore, Pa.. The Bible used in the Office of Consecration was one presented to Mr. and Mrs. Remington on the day of their marriage by Bishop Hall of Vermont. The Bishop's robes and ring were the gift of the Vestry of St. Paul's Church. He was the recipient of a beautifully embroidered chimere from the Altar Guild; of a pectoral cross from Mrs. C. Howard Clark, Jr., of Philadelphia, and a Chaplain's cross from Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Waite of St. Paul's Parish. The Bishop left on the night following his consecration for Camp McPherson, Atlanta, Ga., to resume his duties in war service as Chaplain of Base Hospital No. 26, the University of Minnesota unit. He expects to see service in France at an early date. On his return, he will take up his work in South Dakota, devoting his time and energies largely to the section of the District known as the Black Hills, when he might very appropriately be named, as he himself expressed the wish that he might be found worthy to be called "The Little Shepherd of the Hills".

Centennial Celebration of the Organization of the Church in Ohio

January 5th, 1918, marks the century of the organization of the Church in Ohio. It registers also the organization of the first Diocese west of the Alleghaney Mountains. It brings to mind the life of the heroic pioneer, Philander Chase, whose faith and missionary enthusiasm organized the Church in Ohio and who later became the first Bishop of this Diocese.

To commemorate this event the two Dioceses in Ohio united in a Centennial service in Trinity Church, Columbus, on Saturday, January 5th, 1918, as the Church in Ohio was organized in this city a hundred years ago in the house of Dr. Lincoln Goodale.

The Bishop of Ohio, the Bishop and Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Ohio, Clergy and laymen from both Dioceses, and a large congregation united in the service of the Holy Communion of which the Bishop of Ohio was the celebrant. Dr. George F. Smythe, Professor of Homiletics in Bexley Hall, Gambier, delivered a graphic historical address picturing the events which prepared the way for the organization of the Church in the State, and paying high tribute to Connecticut and Pennsylvania for their contributions of men and money to help the missionary work of the Church in these pioneer days.

After the service, luncheon was served in Trinity Parish House, at which the Bishop of Southern Ohio was the presiding officer. Letters and messages of congratulation were read from the presiding Bishop and many other Bishops throughout the Church. Five minute addresses were made by lay representatives of those Parishes in Ohio which were represented a hundred years ago at the preliminary meeting for organization of the Church. The representative from Trinity Church, Columbus, was the grandson of the representative of this Parish a hundred years ago, and the representative from St. John's, Worthington, was a lineal descendant of the representative of that Parish at the preliminary meeting a century ago. All the addresses were most interesting. The final address was made by Dr. Pierce of Kenyon College.

At the conclusion of the luncheon the Clergy and delegates went to St. John's Church, Worthington, six miles north of Columbus. This Parish was the first Parish of the Church organized west of the Alleghaney Mountains in 1804. Philander Chase was the first Rector. He was elected Bishop by the Convention held in this Parish and for many years Worthington was the home of the Bishop of Ohio.

The Centennial service in Worthington was in charge of the Bishop of Southern Ohio, and an historical address was delivered by Mr. Joseph Doyle of Steubenville, who gave a very interesting description of the pioneer days of the Church in this State and the work of the early Missionaries.

With the singing oif the Star Spangled Banner and benediction the Centennial celebration came to a fitting conclusion. It will be a day long remembered in this State.

Archdeacon Sniffen at Rest

The Ven. Charles J. Sniffen, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Western Massachussetts, and Associate Editor of THE WITNESS, dropped dead at Greenfield, Massachussetts, on Saturday, January 5. He resided at South Lee, Massachussetts, and was making a visitation in connection with his duties as Archdeacon at the time of his death.

He graduated from Yale University and received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1894, and from Berkeley Divinity School in 1897. He was ordained a Deacon the year he graduated from the Divinity School by Bishop Niles for Bishop John Williams, and was advanced to the Priesthood the following year by Bishop Brewster. His first work in the Ministry was at Holy Trinity Church, Middletown, Connecticut, where he served as Curate for three years, resigning to accept the Rectorship of Grace Church, Carthage, Missouri. From there he removed to Stockbridge, Massachussetts, serving as Curate in St. Paul's Parish for three years. He filled the important office of Archdeacon of Western Massachussetts from 1906 until his death, had been a Deputy to the General Convention since 1910, was a delegate to the Provincial Synod, Province of New England, and Deputy from Western Massachussetts to the Missionary Council.

Some characters are such that they make an immediate impression upon those with whom they come in contact. Such a personality belonged to our fellow Editor and brother Priest, Charles Sniffen, whose sudden death came as a shock to all his friends. Though I had never met him until the time of the St. Louis Convention, when he was present at the initial conference of the Board of Editors of THE WITNESS, I felt immediately drawn to him, and my regard for him soon deepened into deep affection, as we were brought into closer relationship through our duties on this journal. Possessing a remarkable ability for clear and cogent writing, he gained immediately a strong hold upon our readers, who read with enjoyment and profit his weekly columns. As Managing Editor, I pay this simple tribute of affectionate regard to his memory. He will be missed by his more intimate friends, assuredly, but also he leaves a large space vacant in the affections of many readers whom he never saw. May the gentle, enthusiastic, devout soul of Charles Sniffen find congenial employment in the spacious field of eternity.

JOHN C. SAGE, Managing Editor.

GENERAL BOARD OF MISSIONS

Meeting of the Executive Committee

The Executive Committee of the Board of Missions met in the Church Missions House, New York, on January 8, 1918. There was a small representation present, owing, no doubt, to the interrputed transportation facilities.

The Treasurer's report for November and December showed a net decrease over the same months last year of $24,155. This may be accounted for by the fact that these were the first two months of the year, whereas in 1916 the year closed October 1st.

From the domestic field we received and acted upon the resignations of Mrs. S. W. Small of North Dakota, Miss Elizabeth Roscoe of Oklahoma, Miss E. D. Whitmore of Tennesse, and Deaconess F. B. Affleck of Utah. Miss Nellie Freeman was appointed in place of Mrs. Small, and Miss Katrina E. Patterson in place of Miss Roscoe.

Deaconess Emma J. Smith was appointed, at the request of the Bishop-elect of Salina, for work in that district.

Gratifying news was received from the Bishop of West Virginia that the Diocese would try to get along without the extra $200 appropriation made for negro work in May of last year. The Board expressed its great appreciation of this act.

Under the authority given it by the Board, the Executive Committee granted an appropriation of $5,000 from the Undesignated Legacies for St. Mark's Colored School, Birmingham, Alabama; $1,000 for a new Mission building at Fresno, California, in the district of San Joaquin; and $3,000 for a Church at Lake Andes, District of South Dakota. A further distribution of the Undesignated Legacies will be taken up at the February meeting of the Board.

A resolution had been received from the Synod of the Province of New England asking the Board to consider basing its apportionment for the Dioceses on their current expenses rather than on gross receipts. The Board has considered many times the desirability of basing the apportionment on current expenses. This has also been considered by the Committees on Apportionment each year ever since the adoption of the apportionment plan. They have always agreed that the apportionment for General Missions should bear a direct relation and proportion to the gross receipts for all purposes in each Diocese. Even should the Board consider it desirable to base the apportionment on current expenses, a serious difficulty would be found in the fact that the Parishes and Missions, and therefore the Dioceses and Districts, make such varying annual reports to their Conventions and include under "current expenses" such different classes of items that it would be unjust and impracticable to attempt, at the present time at least, to base the apportionment to the Dioceses and Districts for General Missions upon "current expenses."

After any standard form of reporting has been recommended by the Commission on Business Methods, and adopted and acted upon by all the Dioceses, it might be possible to make such a change, if then thought best.

The Board continued the arrangement with the Diocese of Washington for the employment of the Rev. David W. Curran as special representative in the Diocese and Province of Washington for another year.

From the foreign field, the resignations of Miss Margaret C. Graves from the Philippines, and the Rev. Edward K. Thurlow from Anking, were received and accepted.

A new pay table and pension scheme for native bible women in the District of Shanghai was adopted.

Bishop Suffragan A. C. Thomson and the Rev. G. F. Rogers of the Diocese of Southern Virginia were present and spoke in behalf of the industrial school and farm for mountain children and homeless boys, desiring an appropriation of $10,000 to build a power house and heating plant in order to make available new buildings which would increase the accommodations of the school by providing for 120 additional boys. This matter was referred to the next meeting of the Executive Committee for careful consideration.

"The Christian people," says Dean Rousmaniere of the Cathedral of St. Paul, Boston, "who have given towards remedial and preventive agencies for the care of the wounded and suffering in the war, the moral welfare of our own soldiers and sailors, and the support of the Government, must now look still further into the future and plan to maintain and establish schools and Churches which will be centers of spiritual power in the days of reconstruction as in the days of the war."

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

THE CONVERSION OF ST. PAUL JANUARY 25

THE COLLECT

O God, who, through the preaching of the blessed Apostle Saint Paul, hast caused the light of the Gospel to shine throughout the world; Grant, we beseech thee, that we, having his wonderful conversion in remembrance, may show forth our thankfulness unto thee for the same, by following the holy doctrine which he taught; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you." Every worker for Jesus Christ should keep this text in mind. Otherwise the thought of being God's messenger would be so overpowering as to make one feel helpless and discouraged in his Christian work. Whenever you are so tempted, remember that St. Paul recovered his balance when he was thus tempted, and wrote, "Who is sufficient for these things?" by finding his answer in "I thank God, through Jesus Christ".

God never turns from any soul born into this world, but He plans that His messages to souls shall come through human agencies, and when a man finally hears those messages he turns around, and that turning around is what we call "conversion", either of the heathen or the sinner. The more complete the turning to God, the more wonderful the conversion; the more complete the conversion, the more wonderful the Missionary. For after all every worker for Jesus is a Missionary. If Jesus first recorded word to a disciple is "Come," His last recorded word is "Go". He only is a Missionary who realizes that he is "sent" by God to work for God. Hence the importance of knowing all that; one can learn from God by experience, directly or indirectly. The Missionary's task is twofold. First, he must himself come to God, and learn from God, what He wants men to know. Then he must go to people and preach what he has been t;aught, saying in his turn "Come", and then "Go". To be effective Missionaries, we must ourselves first be converted to God. Then you can understand and follow His "teaching" or His "doctrine", and embody that teaching in our daily lives, which is the best kind of Missionary work we can do, but not the only kind. God chose St. Paul to light the Gospel torch and carry it into the world of his day. Men ever since have lighted their torches from his, and so, little by little has God caused His light to shine throughout the world from generation to generation. If the corner where you are is dark, it is because you have failed to brighten it by the testimony of your life and lips. If some other corner is dark, part of the blame lies on those of whom, pray God, you are not one, who have refused to hear a voice—the glorious voice of the Lord—saying "Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die"?

"Grant that we may show forth our thankfulness". What method do you take of showing the thankfulness for which in this Collect you are taught to pray? Are you content with merely learning the "doctrine" or "teaching" of the Apostles? The prayer says we should follow the teaching; and that teaching, including "come and receive", emphasizes as equally necessary "go and give". What good is the "teaching" doing you if you do not preach it through others, as well as by yourself? And of what possible use is it to preach the "teaching" if you do not follow the "teaching"?

"Having his wonderful conversion in remembrance." Do we meditate often on Paul's conversion? Has there never yet been a day in your life to which you can look back as the day you decided "to run straight"? an expression taken from Carey's book, "Have You Understood Christianity"? "Turn ye! Turn ye! Why will ye die?" This is God's call to you. Humanly speaking, when a man turns in response to this cry he has taken the first step toward becoming a true Missionary, to which business God is calling every one of us every day of our lives.

THE EPISTLE

And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem. And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven: and he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. And the men which journeyed stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man. And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink. And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord. And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth, and hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight. Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem: and here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name. But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: for I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake. And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized. And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus. And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God. But all that heard him were amazed, and said; Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring bound unto the chief priests? But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ. Acts ix:1.

"Having his wonderful conversion in remembrance." Mother Church thinks it worth while for her children to meditate on and remember this conversion, because, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, she has thrice recorded it in Scripture—Acts, chapters ix, xxii and xxvi. And the Apostle refers to it in his letters to Timothy and the Galatians, and the Philippians.

This must be a wonderful story to put into the hands of converts anywhere; because when a person in any part of the world is converted he meets up with three big considerations which are hard to withstand: "Prejudice, Companionship and Social Loss." These things are just as hard for the Hottentot to endure as they are for the prominent social leader in a big town or a small city.

Notice that when one is converted he does two things. First, he recognizes Jesus as "Lord", that is, as The One who has the right to dominate his personal life down to the smallest and least important detail, such, for example, as his idle hour conversations. And secondly, he realizes that as a follower of Jesus he must be "up and on".

It is impossible to cover this story in a single article. Meditate on every verse, and you can find precious lessons for your soul. Notice this, however, that Saul's conversion did not do away with the necessity of his being taught the way and the plan of salvation. Just to turn one's back on the old life is not enough. There must be the following of the teaching. "Arise and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do". Notice, too, that conversion implies acknowledging Jesus as the Son of God. "No one can say that Jesus is the Christ except God be with him." Notice that immediately Saul knew his lesson, that moment he began to preach it, and the more he preached it the stronger he grew. Conversion does not complete a man's life—it just begins it. Pray often and still more earnestly that you may keep this fact in your remembrance, that after your conversion you have a bounden "duty and responsibility to use the Scriptures provided for you through the Apostles."

THE GOSPEL

Peter answered and said unto Jesus, Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life. But many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first. St. Matt. xix:27.

"Forsaken all". All what? First, all the old habits, old haunts, old associations that kept your face turned away from God. The converted man begins his life by keeping Jesus ever and always in front of him. When you follow Jesus, however, you must not think that your religious life consists in giving up things. That is hardly worth considering; because in following Jesus, who went about doing good, you will be so occupied in learning from Him, and about Him, and doing things for Him, that just naturally the old habits will slough off, and when you go to the old haunts you will go there with a new light in your eye, and a new light in your face, and most likely some one sitting there in great darkness will in your light see a new light, and through you be himself converted.

The converted man is always a true Missionary, and the true Missionary is perpetually forsaking things for God and for God's cause. The law of the sacrifice shadowed in the daily oblation of the innocent lamb on the Altar shines out gloriously in the sacrificial life of the true Missionary at home and abroad. "Forsook all and followed Him" is the epitaph on the converted man's old life. But it is also the family motto of the New Creation in Christ Jesus. One reason why the Gospel message permeates and penetrates so slowly into the heart life of people and of nations is because "things" bulk big with us, and "spirit" seems vague and unreal. Until we are converted to Jesus Christ's view of life, "houses, brethren, sisters, father, mother, wife, children, lands", seem very real, and "My name's sake" in the last analysis is the only thing that makes all the other things worth while and worth fighting for. The spirit of Jesus is the spirit that sanctifies democracy, and makes democracy safe for the world. To carry this spirit into all the world is the Missionary's aim—the Christian's aim—the Christ's aim—God's aim—the aim He has when He chooses us, and calls us to follow Him. In the regeneration the Gospel message of love will triumph over the legal message of fear. The Missionary appeal is to follow an attractive, helpful, loving revelation of God through Jesus Christ, whereby houses are turned into homes, family life into bits of heaven, lands something more than breeding places for man and beast. And when the need to forsake them arises because "My name's sake" is imperiled or unknown, God's law of recompense will inevitably bring its own reward. Paul's experience convinces the converted man of the truth of this statement.

"The first shall be last and the last shall be first." Many a converted man will tell you that what God looks for in a man is not reputation, but character. Saul had a great reputation before his conversion. When he was converted, his character came to light. "Threatening and slaughter" were gone, and "grace, mercy and peace" were breathed out by him in their stead.

The Houston, Tex., Post says: "Although disturbed by war conditions, progress of unusual character has been made in the religious realm of Houston during 1917, giving some color to the saying that 'Man's extremity is God's opportunity', and that adversity has a tendency to increase spirituality." Trinity Church, that city, recently began the erection of a new Church and Parish House to cost $80,000.

The first lesson in the morning records the fulfillment of the prophecy of captivity contained in last Sunday's lesson, together with the prophetic historian's analysis of the reasons why it came to pass. The King of Assyria was the instrument of the Divine discipline, due to the fact that the children of Israel, though redeemed from Egypt, and enabled to occupy the Promised Land for the purpose of weeding out false religions and planting therein the worship of the true God and the practice of His righteousness, had themselves yielded to their heathen environment. The material fact that the Assyrian was stronger than Israel did not, in the mind of the prophets, explain what happened. The Commission on the Revision of the Lectionary call attention to the value of thus bringing prophecy and fulfillment into juxtaposition: prophecy of captivity last Sunday; captivity this Sunday; and we modestly invite comparison with the way in which prophecy and fulfillment are separated and confused in other Lectionaries.

For the New Testament lesson we have used St. Peter's warning not to treat heedlessly or with mocking contempt the teaching of God's prophets with reference to the final judgment upon this world. St. Peter harks back to the judgment inflicted by the flood, thus endorsing the principle that historical instances of judgment are to be taken as guarantees that God will continue to do what He says through His prophets that He will do. Connection with the Epiphany Season in general is to be found (a) in the fact that judgment is part and parcel of Divine manifestation, though in the Prayer Book assigned to the fifth and sixth Sundays after the Epiphany, and (b) in the relation of the Church to the Gentile world. The Church today must be true to its mission and serve that world, or itself go into captivity to that world and its sins. Moreover, the very Collect for peace on this Sunday is based upon faith in God's providential ordering of this world in matters both temporal and spiritual, and owes its origin to the "stormy times of Gregory the Great", when "Barbarian invaders were harrying the empire". (Sanders: Message of the Church). Again, the "Bethphany" of the Christ to and through a home life (Gospel for today) receives comment in the analysis of social conditions by Amos and Hosea, used to lead up on week days to this particular Sunday.

In the evening, our Lord's manifestation as Son in Baptism and temptation (following on the boyhood of last Sunday's Gospel) is preceded by Isaiah's prophecy of the Messiah as endowed by and working through the Spirit.

In the week days, the history of the upper Kingdom is concluded by the origin of the Samaritans (Monday), and on Tuesday we go back and pick up the thread of the lower kingdom, which will be carried forward to the Babylonian captivity and beyond.

St. John's Gospel is continued in the morning, and Ephesians read in the evening for the teaching on Missions.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

PRAYER BY BISHOP LAWRENCE

(This Prayer was offered by Bishop Lawrence at the opening of the Constitutional Convention.)

O Almighty God, in whom dwelleth righteousness and truth, who art the only source of Light and Life, pour down upon us, who are met in this solemn assembly to consider the foundations of the government of this Commonwealth, the rich gifts of Thy good spirit.

We praise Thee for the work of our fathers who gave to us a Constitution under which the Commonwealth has increased in strength and virtue. We treasure with gratitude the names of those who in times of peace and of war have given their lives for the State. We name the institutions of justice, learning, mercy, and piety that have risen under the protection of the law and in the atmosphere of civil and religious liberty. We rejoice in the increasing recognition of the rights and privileges of all citizens and of the responsibility of all to uphold the government and to defend the nation.

As we enter upon our work, may we be conscious of the solemn responsibility laid upon us by the people. Save us from all error, ignorance, pride, and prejudice. And of Thy great mercy direct and prosper all our consultations and actions to the advancement of Thy glory and the safety, honor, and welfare of the people, so that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety, may be established among us all for generations.

We pray also for the President of the United States, the Governor of this State and all others in authority. Grant to them at this time special gifts of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and strength, that, upholding what is right and following what is true, they may obey Thy Holy Will. Give skill and strength to our Army and Navy.

Bless our land with honorable industry, sound learning and pure manners. Defend our liberties, preserve our unity; save us from lawlessness and violence, from pride and arrogance. Fashion into one happy people the multitudes brought hither out of many kindreds and tongues. In time of prosperity fill our hearts with thankfulness, and in the day of trouble suffer not our trust in Thee to fail.

We now commend ourselves, O Heavenly Father, to Thee, to the establishment of justice and to the service of the people. Send out Thy light. Let Thy truth lead us. Amen.

Rector of Pennsylvania Parish Dies

The Rev. Arthur Russell Taylor, D. D., Rector of St. John's Church, York, Pa., for the past twelve years, died at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Md., on Monday, the 7th inst. He was born at St. Albans, Vt., Sept. 22, 1862. He graduated from Lafayette University with the class of 1883, and from Seabury Divinity School in 1890; was ordained a Deacon by Bishop Gilbert in 1889, and advanced to the Priesthood by Bishop Whipple the following year. From 1890 to 1895 he served as Rector of St. John's Church, Mankato, Minn., where he did a notable work, going from there to Trinity Memorial Church, Warren, Pa., where, after a short Rectorship, he resigned to accept a call to his last Parish. He had been a member of the Standing Committee and of the Board of Missions, and a Deputy to the General Convention from the Diocese of Harrisburg.

His Eye is Not Dim Nor His Natural Force Abated

The Rev. Nowell Logan, D. D., of Trinity Church, Pass Christian, Miss., will celebrate his eighty-first birthday on Sunday, Jan. 27. The Church News states that "Dr. Logan has been identified with the Diocese of Mississippi from early beginnings up to the present date. In spite of his age, he is still active. A few weeks ago we received the Canons revised by him, and re-written where they needed rewriting. Such was the clearness of his writing that the printer told us that there was no trouble in reading it. He is the one man among us who has been engaged exclusively in the upbuilding of the Church in Mississippi since his ordination. And so we stand in reverence before his life, feeling that we have received a benediction just in knowing him, and loving him for the great, good, gentle man that he is."

INTRODUCTORY

My late friend and classmate, Bishop Frank Spaulding of Utah, had a quotation of which he was very fond:

"Life is conscious effort transforming itself into unconscious habit.'"

A little reflection will show how this applies to everything in life. Walking, playing the piano, your vices, your virtues come under this head. It applies also to the training of soldiers. An untrained soldier is not an asset, but a nuisance, on the field of battle.

What is needed at the time of Confirmation is not so much academic teaching as painstaking drill in the Prayer Book which is the Manual of Training.

The whole Christian body is sick because it is an untrained body and Confirmation is the opportunity for such training.

If you drill your candidates properly, you will have later on a congregation which can be inspired by preaching.

Never mind if the classes are small. See to it that they are well trained, and require of them certain things, without which they cannot be presented.

1st. A regular attendance at Church services during the period of preperation.

2nd. A regular habit of daily prayer in private.

3rd. Conscious study of the instruction and faithful attendance at the classes.

Unless candidates are willing to do this they should not be confirmed.

The probability is that you will begin your classes soon after the holidays, so this series of instructions is arranged in pamphlet form, and will be issued each week beginning with the new year, and covering a period of twenty lessons. They are so arranged that the first half of the lesson leaf is for the candidate to study, the second half to assist the Rector in the instruction.

WHAT DO WE BELIEVE?

To be learned—The Apostles' Creed.

Prop. 1.

It is frequently said that a Christian does not need any creed, but surely the Lord abhors a vacuum. A creed is what we believe, and, if we had no creed, we would believe nothing.

But there are two kinds of creeds;—those which deal with opinions and those which deal with facts.

An opinion is of very little value and will not take you anywhere, not even into the next room. It certainly will not take you to Heaven. Besides, mere opinions make people opinionated.

The Christian Religion is not founded upon opinion but upon facts, and these facts are recited for us in the Creed which you have learned.

Prop. 2.

What are these facts? Chiefly facts in the life of Christ.

That He was born of the Virgin Mary; that He was crucified and rose from the dead; that He ascended into Heaven where He reigns in power; that He sent the Holy Spirit and founded the Holy Catholic Church; that by this means He gives to us the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body and life everlasting,—gifts that come to us from Christ's life, through His Church, by the action of the Holy Ghost.

Prop. 3.

We cannot forgive our own sins; we cannot raise our own bodies; we cannot bestow eternal life upon ourselves, for "we are saved by grace and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God."

Christ helped men by the word of His mouth and the touch of His hand.

So He founded the Holy Catholic Church, which is the means by which, from the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, I hope to obtain the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body and life everlasting.

Just as I believe in the laws of this country as interpreted by Congress and by the Courts of this country, so I believe in the Church as an historic body which teaches us what is necessary for our salvation.

So I believe in the Church as the Body of Christ by which He teaches us with His word and touches us with His Grace.

In the Bible we read about Christ, but in the Church "He dwells in us and we dwell in Him."

So we believe in Christ, and we read His word and we live in His Body.

QUESTIONS

1. Divide the Creed into three parts:
(a) That which deals with Christ's life.
(b) That which deals with the means that He uses.
(c) That which deals with the purpose for which He lived.
2. What is the difference between believing in opinions and facts?
3. Name the chief facts in Christ's life as recited in the Creed.
4. What is the Church? Who founded it?
5. How do we determine what the Bible means when there is a difference of opinion about its meaning?
6. Illustrate the idea of the "teaching Church" from the laws of our own land and its courts?
7. By what agency does Christ touch us in the Church?

The Epistle to The Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

XXII.

Chapter V., Vs. 1. Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children.

This verse is connected with the foregoing and the following verses. Since God forgave you in Christ, therefore do you, as children of God and members of Christ, become followers of God as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ loved us.

Sadler: Imitators. Thus our Lord would have us imitate God when He says, "Love your enemies, pray for them that despitefully use you—that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.

Moule: The imitation of God is the true sequel and index of peace with God and life in God.

Gore: God has manifested Himself in Christ under human conditions. He has translated the imaginable Godhead into terms of our own well known human nature by the Incarnation of Jesus Christ. For the Christian henceforth in a quite new sense God is imitable. He can become a pattern for actual human life.

Ellicott: Beloved children, referring to the fact of God having loved them. Love must be returned by love, and in love alone can man imitate God.

Sadler: Children almost always endeavor to imitate their parents. Much more ought we to imitate God in this matter of forgiveness, seeing that the only Son of God has loved us to the extent of giving Himself for us.

Vs. 2. And walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour.

Ellicott: Walk in love, a continuation of the foregoing precept, and serving to append closely a specification of that in which the imitation of God must consist.

Moule: Hath given Himself for us—as an atoning, pacificatory, satisfactory sacrifice.

Myer: For our behalf, i. e., in order to reconcile us to God.

Sadler: An offering and a sacrifice for us. The former means offerings of any sort; the latter, the offerings of a slain creature, but the two words are often used interchangeably.

Ellicott: St. Paul probably intended a distinction here, viz: that offerings as the more general term relates not only to the death, but to the life of obedience of our Blessed Lord, whereas sacrifice, as the more special, relates more particularly to His atoning death.

Sadler: A sweet smelling savour. This expression first occurs in Gen. viii:21, in connection with the sacrifice of Noah, and it is constantly repeated with reference to the sacrifices of the Law ordained in Exodus and Leviticus. (Ex. xxix:18; Lev. ii:12.

Meyer: So that it became for Him an odor of fragrance, figurative designation of its acceptableness to God, which was the real anthropopathic basis of the idea of the acceptableness of a sacrifice to God.

Moule: Christ thus sent up, as the result of His work for us, the sacred odor of rest, becoming our peace with God.

Gore: The love of Christ is a love which shows itself in self-sacrifice. In the self-sacrifice of Christ, therefore, we have a clear disclosure both of what God is and of what God will accept from man.

Vs. 3. But fornication and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints.

The Apostle passes from holy love, in which, after the example of Christ, to walk, to unholy love, by which we dishonor Christ and destroy the life of God within us.

Moule: Fornication, a sin lightly regarded by the heathen, but condemned by our Lord. Regarding it, total abstinence is the one precept of the Gospel, and the Divine precept will always be found sooner or later to coincide with the highest spiritual law.

Sadler: Uncleanness, all secret impurity or open indecency.

Moule: Impurity in thought, word or deed.

Sadler: Covetousness, avarice The reference here is not avarice as much as to impure and incontinent desires.

Theodoret: St. Paul sufficiently indicated that which was impure in the subjects mentioned, enjoining that their very names be banished from memory.

Vs. 4. Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks.

Ellicott: Filthiness, whether actively exhibited or passively approved in word, gesture or deed.

Moule: Vice in its aspect as morally hideous.

Wordsworth: Foolish talking comprises the idea of wickedness and profanity blurted out in loose and random talking.

Moule: Talk about sin in the spirit of the fool who gloats of jests over his own or his neighbor's undoing.

Ellicott: Jesting. The word probably means versatility, whether in action, manners, or talking, from which a more unfavorable signification, "foolish jesting", is easily and naturally derived.

Zadie: That ribaldry, studied artifice, polite equivoque, which are worse in many cases than foulness of tongue.

Barry: Foolish talking that finds occasion for wit or levity in anything, however sacred, mistaking all seriousness and reserve for dullness.

Zadie: Pleasantry of every sort is not condemned by the Apostle. He seems to refer to wit in connection with lewdness—double entendre

Blunt: Jesting—making a mock at sin.

Ellicott: Convenient—not fitting for a Christian to utter.

Vs. 5. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

Ellicott: For this ye know—confirmation of the preceding prohibitions by an appeal to their own knowledge of the judgment against those who practice them.

Sadler: Who is an idolater. This seems to allude to any one who is the slave of some overpowering desire, whether in the matter of the seventh commandment or in the matter of what is ordinarily called covetousness.

Ellicott: Hath no inheritance, a weighty present involving an indirect reference to the eternal and enduring principles by which God governs the world, not so much, "has no inheritance and shall have none", as "has no inheritance and can have none".

Wordsworth: In the kingdom of Christ and of God. The catena of authorities is summed up in these words. All the Greek authorities which do speak at all testify that He who is here called Christ is also God.

Ellicott: Christ and God are united together in the closest way, and presented under a single conception—a valuable indirect evidence of Christ's Divinity.

Beza: Of Him who is Christ and God, so that Christ is here spoken of as God.

Sadler: Christ must have all the attributes of God if He is to rule the Kingdom as being His as well as God's

Excellent Work by Deaconess Hargreaves

General Leonard Wood, writing to a friend concerning the work done by Deaconess Hargreaves among the Igorots at Basao, in the Bontoc District of the Philippine Islands, says:

"I have personal knowledge of Deaconess Hargreaves' excellent work in the Philippines. She rendered a long, brave and unselfish service, and one which has been of very real value to all who have come under her kindly and intelligent supervision, and her example of courage, self-sacrifice and devction to duty is something which we can all copy with profit."

An Apostle to the Poor Dies at Philadelphia

The Rev. Herman Duhring, D. D., well known throughout the Church in this country, died at his home in Philadelphia, Pa., after a prolonged illness, on Dec. 30. Dr. Duhring was born in Philadelphia May 2, 1841, where he spent his boyhood days and received his early education. He was a student at the Virginia Theological School from 1860 to 1861, when that institution was closed until the end of the Civil War. He completed his course at Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, received his degree in 1863 and was ordained a Deacon and appointed assistant at Holy Trinity Chapel, Philadelphia. He was advanced to the Priesthood in 1868, and became the Rector of All Saints' Church, where he continued in charge until 1888, when he was elected Rector Emeritus. In 1889 he was elected Superintendent of the Episcopal City Mission, which position he held until the time of his death. He was a member of the General Board of Religious Education, Dean of the Convocation of South Philadelphia, Corresponding Secretary of the Sunday School Association, and had been the Editor of the American Church Sunday School Magazine from 1905 to 1915. The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, commenting editorially upon his death, under the caption, "An Apostle of the Poor", says:

"For more than fift years the face of Dr. Herman L. Duhring had been familiar to almost every one in the city. Perhaps no single man was as well known—at least by sight—while his personal ministrations to the poor have exceeded those of possibly any dozen pastors. How far back his career began is recognized by the fact that he was a curate at Holy Trinity when Phillips Brooks was Rector—and there be few who can remember that time.

"Dr. Duhring was a man of God, but also a man among men. He had one of the most difficult of tasks, but he never shrank from it. No man knew better than he the depths of misery among the poor, and none worked harder for their relief. There was no denominationalism nor sectarianism in his work. He sought out those who needed help, and provided for them as best he could with the resources at his command.

"Dr. Duhring was possessed of a gift of humor which saved him from many hours of depression. Among laymen he was esteemed for his vigorous Christianity and plain speaking. He did not hesitate to tell unpleasant truths to religious slackers; he never objected to letting people know that sympathy for the poor should be backed up by money, and many were thus shamed into giving who otherwise were able to keep their generous instincts under perfect control.

"Dr. Duhring retired a few years ago, but his remarkable face—which no one could forget—was familiar until within a few weeks. He loved the city and its people, especially its poorest—and his works do follow him."

Little Rock Catherdal is Full of Life

The splendid old Cathedral Parish at Little Rock, Ark., has taken on new life under the Deanship of the Very Rev. Rufus B. Templeton, D. D., who came into the Church from the Methodist ministry, was ordained a Deacon and Priested in 1916 by Bishop Winchester, and became the Dean of the Cathedral in December of that year. Attendance at the various services has greatly increased, and old debts have been canceled. The Cathedral roof has been rebuilt of slate. It is the largest Church roof in the State. The building has been greatly improved in appearance by the extension of the cornice and eaves and the painting of all the woodwork a deep moss green. Several memorials have been placed in the Cathedral, including a silver receiving alms basin, the gift of Mrs. H. K. Cockran, in memory of her late husband, who was for many years a Vestryman and a member of the Cathedral Chapter; two silver alms basins were presented by the Young Churchman's Union; a very handsome eagle lectern, the gift of Mrs. Edmond Urquhart, in memory of her late husband, Mr. Edmond Urquhart. Contracts for the rebuilding of the organ have been let, and work will begin this month. This is to be a memorial to Mrs. Pierce, wife of Bishop Pierce, the first Diocesan Bishop of Arkansas, presented by their daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Lyman, who has been the organist for over thirty years.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

St. Paul's Church, Mishawaka, Ind., received a Christmas present of $500 from an anonymous donor.

Bishop Faber dedicated a handsome new pulpit in St. John's Church, Anaconda, Mont., the last Sunday in the old year.

The Church of the Epiphany, Niagara Falls, N. Y., observed the sixtieth anniversary of its organization in the Feast of the Epiphany, Jan. 6.

By the will of the late Mrs. Emma H. West, Trinity Church, Lowville, N. Y., receives $2,500, to be used for the support of Church services and to keep the property in repair.

Septuagesima Sunday, Jan. 27, is the day set apart to make a drive in every Parish and Mission of the country to raise $500,000 for the work of the Church War Commission.

Calvary Church, Chicago, was fifty years old Jan. 6. The Rector, the Rev. Henry R. Neely, referred to the event in his morning sermon on that day, and will preach an historical sermon at a later date.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of Phillips Brooks will be observed at Trinity Church, Boston, at 4:30 p. m. on Monday, Jan. 23. The address will be given by the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks of New York City.

St. Chrysostom's Church, Chicago raised by an every-member canvass $6,700 for Parish support and $3,000 for Missions, an increase of over 100 per cent for both Funds. The number of pledges for Missions was doubled. The Rev. Dr. Hutton is the Rector.

The Rev. E. W. Averill, Rector of Trinity Church, Ft. Wayne, Ind., makes the following announcement in his Parish paper: "THE WITNESS is a wide-awake Church paper. Copies are sold in Church after service on Sunday mornings at 3 cents each. Buy one and take it home for your Sunday reading. It is much more worth while than Katzenjamers."

The congregation of Christ Church, Williamsport, Pa., got a new organ in its Christmas stocking. The gift was made possible through the generosity of Mrs. Max L. Mitchell, who offered to complete a Fund necessary for the installation of a new organ in memory of her mother, the late Mrs. N. Whitaker of Philadelphia.

One of the examining Chaplains in the Diocese of Western New York writes that within the past year six former Methodist ministers have been accepted in that Diocese as candidates for Holy Orders. They are now all serving as Lay Readers or as Deacons in Parishes or Missions of the Diocese. The Rector writing this note adds that he has been consulted in his present Parish by a Methodist pastor, a Presbyterian pastor and a Roman priest in the same town, all of whom expressed a desire to enter the ministry of the Church.

The midnight service on Christmas Eve in St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, N. Y., was preceded by the singing of the old Christmas carols. The largest number of Communions were made since the midnight service was instituted in the Parish. The offering of the Sunday School was for the relief of Armenian and Syrian children, and for the Diocesan Orphanage at Cooperstown. At the request of the Rector, the Rev. Charles D. White, Bishop Nelson wrote a special Christmas greeting to the men and women of this Parish who are on war service, and a copy was mailed to each one. The Honor Roll has on it the names of sixty men and of two nurses now in France.

At the Church of the Ascension, East Cambridge, Mass., the Rev. Francis L. Beal Rector, a strong and dignified note is added to each service. Immediately after the blessing, the organist plays the National Anthem, with Choir and congregation standing. The recessional hymn in the morning is "America the Beautiful", and in the evening, "Our Father's God, to Thee".—The Church Militant.

The first Christmas service since A. D. 1913 at St. John's Church-on-the-Hill, Lake Benton, Minn., was held there on the last Festival of the Nativity of our Lord. The Church service was held in the morning, and the children's service in the afternoon at 5:30 o'clock. The Church was beautifully decorated with evergreens and candles. The offering for the Aged and Infirm Clergy Fund was $6, and the Sunday School Advent offering of $15 was the largest in the history of the Mission. Seven children were baptized during the Christmas Season. The Annual Meeting of the Mission occurred on the evening of Dec. 31, concluding with a social and watch service. The Rev. Charles W. Baxter, who was recently ordained a Deacon, and is a Senior at Seabury Divinity School, is in charge of the Mission.

The Young Women's Guild of St. Peter's Church. Delaware, Ohio, gave an Annual Church Party at the Parish House the Friday evening following Christmas. Unfortunately, the cold and illness prevented a number from attending, including the Rector and his wife, but enough came to make it a success. It was a war party, simple and old-fashioned, a refreshing change from the many modern social functions—the hours from 7 to 9:30. There was a great lighted Christmas tree in the center of the room. After the President had greeted the guests, the latter marched around the tree twice, singing a Christmas hymn. As they passed a large clothes-basket, each one dropped in one or more packages for our Children's Hospital in Cincinnati. Then followed old-time impromptu charades, very clever and amusing, with Mr. Robert Hills (since then gone into the service) a most efficient manager. Fresh popcorn, in bags, and red apples were on tables, to be enjoyed at any time. Old and young entered into the spirit of the hour. Before leaving, some one played stirring tunes on the piano while the girls danced. St. Peter's is one of the oldest Parishes in the State. It is now under the efficient care of Mr. Berton S. Levering. The Aid and Auxiliary Societies are flourishing, also the Young Woman's Guild and Junior Auxiliary. Patriotism is shown by the number of recruits enlisted from its ranks and the faithful work of the women members for the Red Cross.

West Texas Notes

Two Camp Chaplains are now at work in San Antonio, the Rev. Lee W. Heaton and the Rev. Dwight Cameron. Chaplain is working at Kelly Field, the aviation camp. His salary is being paid by the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City, where he served as Curate. With the clergy of the city co-operating, a distinct advance is being made in caring for approximately the 125,000 soldiers in and near San Antonio.

A Service Flag has recently been dedicated in St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, with eighty stars on it, two of which are in gold, for men who have given their lives for their country.

On Wednesday, Jan. 2, a luncheon was tendered to Gen. J. W. Ruckman by all of the clergy of the various religious bodies in the city, as a testimonial to his vigorous and high-minded stand on vice conditions in San Antonio. Bishop Capers presided, and addresses of appreciation were made by clergy representing the different religious bodies.

Announcement has been made of the San Antonio Training School for Teachers, which will be held in the Parish House of St. Mark's Church. The courses will extend over a period of fifteen weeks, and will include "Child Study and Pedagogy", with Miss Edna McNeil as instructor; "The Christian Year", with the Rev. Leonard B. Richards as instructor, and "Christian Missions" with the Rev. W. B. Stevens, Ph. D., as instructor.

San Antonio Church people deeply regret the departure of the Rev. R. Y. Barber, City Missionary, who has left to take charge of Grace Church, Chanute, Kansas. Mr. Barber has done most effective work as City Missionary, and has also had charge of St. John's Church, St. Philip's Colored congregation, and has been Chaplain of the Southwestern Asylum for the Insane.

Personal Mention

Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania has appointed the Rev. H. C. Stone of Philadelphia, founder of the Stonemen's Fellowship, a Chaplain to the Pennsylvania troops in France.

Bishop Brent's election as Bishop of Western New York has been confirmed by a majority of the Bishops and Standing Committees of the American Church.

Mrs. Harold Peabody, daughter of Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts,, is Chairman of the New England Committee of the War Work Council of the Young Women's Christian Association.

The Rev. Henry M. Saville resigned as Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Waltham, Mass., the first of this month, and is now Curate at Trinity Church, Waterbury, Conn.

The Rev. W. H. Frost, formerly Rector of St. James' Church, Fremont, Neb., for eleven years, assumed charge of St. Andrew's Church, Milwaukee, Wis., on the Feast of the Epiphany.

The Rev. Herman R. Page, son of Bishop Page of Spokane, has been appointed a Chaplain by the War Commission of that District, and probably will be located at Camp Lewis, Wash.

The Rev. Edward L. Roland, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, has resigned and accepted a call to St. Bartholomew's Church, Chicago. He expects to assume charge of his new work the 1st of February. The Rev. Edward H. Eckel, assistant to the Rev. Edward M. Cross of St. John the Evengelist's Church, St. Paul, will succeed the Rev. Mr. Roland as Rector of St. Paul's Church.

From a Missionary Priest of the Paulist Order of the Roman Catholic Church to Rector of one of the largest Episcopal Churches in the city is the record of the Rev. William Thomas Walsh, says the New York Herald. He came to the Church some time since, and was Rector of St. Mary's Church until his recent resignation to become Rector of St. Luke's Church. He will have the privilege of living in the residence of Alexander Hamilton. This is now the Rectory, and the Colonial structure adjoins the Church.

The Anglican and Eastern Association Meeting

Darlington, Bishop of Harrisburg, Vice Presidents of the Association. The offering at this service will be for the War Relief of the countries represented in the Union.

BISHOP LAWRENCE SPEAKS PLAIN WORDS

Protection for Our Protectors Demanded

At the recent dinner given by the Episcopalian Club in Boston the Bishop of Massachussetts made a notable address, one too, which deserves the widest publicity. In these days when every effort should be made to conserve every ounce of manhood for the winning of the war Bishop Lawrence's words become, as the "Church Militant" puts it, "a stirring challenge." Added weight is given this utterance coming from one whose sanity and judgment the whole Church has ample testimony of. Bishop Lawrence said:

This is an Army and Navy dinner: the subject of the evening is "Making an American Soldier."

Impelled by the warnings of history, by the disastrous conditions in some of the armies of Europe and by the dangers that our boys and men are already meeting in France, I shall speak of one cause which unless the whole force of military discipline, medical science and practice and of public opinion be brought into action, will be the unmaking of scores of thousands of American soldiers.

Two years ago a friend of mine in Canada was told by a man in high authority that if the people of Canada knew the disastrous conditions of certain bodies of Canadian troops caused by venereal diseases, enlistments would be sharply checked; and official reports have proved that he had good reason tosay so. The same conditions, however, have struck every army with ominous results.

First let me say with the strongest emphasis that I believe that the soldiers and sailors of this country are on the whole superior to the average of the men of the country in soundness of physique and character. I know also that the President, the Secretaries of War and the Navy and the Surgical and Medical Departments of the Army and Navy are alive to the dangers and ready to meet them effectively at least in this country, if they have the support of the whole military organization and of public opinion. Eternal vigilance, however, must be the watchword.

Moral questions are involved, of course: questions of purity, of family integrity, of the sacredness of womanhood and of childhood, chivalry and honor. These, however, are not my concern tonight; nor are they at this time the first concern of the masses of our people who are building up the army; the vital question is that of keeping our men fit to fight and so win the war.

Before tackling the problem we are met by certain silent or outspoken objections. Men tell us that "War has always brought these conditions: camp followers have always been with the army and prostitutes have always stood at the dock. It is the way with soldiers and sailors: you cannot stop it and indeed a certain amount of drink and women make the best fighters." Without question recklessness in morals and in battle do go together in some men. But when any man assumes as a general proposition that drink and loose women make an army better fighters, more capable of endurance, less liable to disease and more subject to discipline, he knows that he is standing for a notion that military experience, medical science and common sense have demolished. The loose living swashbuckler as an effective soldier has gone by the board. The old militarists who stand for loose women and drink in military service are going fast under the hammering of facts, of medical science, of the best modern military experience, and the alert, clear-headed, self-disciplined. clean-lived young officers of their generation.

Again, we are told that loose conditions exist in our cities and towns and we can not expect better things in the Army and Navy. Of course they exist, and, I believe, to a worse extent than our people think. An artificial prudishness keeps the facts from publicity. I believe that the time has come when the people should know the facts, not in sensational headlines, but as plain facts; facts are more searching, persistent and effective in the long run than scare headlines.

Granted that conditions are bad in towns and cities; we can stand a good deal of wastage in times of peace. But we are at war, and worse than wastage of food and money is wastage of life, of men and women, and of men and boys upon whose equipment and support we are spending billions of dollars. Must we now begin to lay out millions of dollars for hospitals in which to lay their diseased and rotting bodies because we have neglected to safeguard them?

Is it a question of morals? Yes. Of pity? Yes; it is just now a question of wastage of money, of men, of the winning or the loss of a battle through the enfeebled condition of the soldiers. "But our boys and men are of good stuff; they are not of the kind to weaken," says the optimistic patriot. So are the Canadians and Australians of good stuff but they have fallen by the tens of thousands. The conditions of war in France are hard and dangerour; the men are away from home, conventionalities are forgotten, discipline is severe, demanding relaxation; morale drops through physical and nervous exhaustion. Who of us dare to say that he might not fall?

May I give you certain figures from the Surgeon-General's office of the conditions of the Army from 1911-1913?

The percentage of syphillis among white enlisted men (negroes are worse) is estimated at 16.08 per cent; that is, one recruit out of every six was syphilitic; and the average is rather better than that of the young male population from which the Army is recruited.

From 2 to 5 per cent of the commissioned personnel of the Army are infected with syphilis when they enter the service; and the tendency is towards an increase of percentage in the years of service.

What an enormous wastage in money and men; for a sick man not only leaves his place in the ranks empty and requires hospitals; he also requires the services of a valuable man as nurse.

Conditions have, I believe, improved in our regular army in the last two years; and the alertness of the Medical Departments must bring greater improvement, if supported by military authority and public opinion.

I have the official reports of 32 camps including 750,000 men, and while the figures vary greatly according to the camps, they are on the whole reasonably hopeful, showing that the authorities are handling the situation probably more effectively than ever before. The conditions of two years ago on the Mexican border are a nightmare as compared with the present. In certain parts of the country the prohibition of liquor gives great support to good administration. There are, however, scores of small camps, of bodies of sailor boys, hundreds, sometimes thousands o them in cities and towns where discipline and protection are more difficult; and I know from official reports that because of these conditions and sometimes of loose discipline due to old Naval and Army traditions, the conditions are not what the people of our cities would allow if they knew the facts. For you must remember that in dealing with hundreds and thousands of men we are dealing even as available records go with diseased men not by hundreds but by thousands and tens of thousands.

The great body of our soldiers and sailors of our new Army and Navy are straight and clean; a small fraction are low in their standards and bad in their morals. A larger fraction are easily led into trouble through loneliness or foolishness.

On the other hand there are in our communities a certain number of professionally loose women, and an appallingly large number of girls from fourteen to twenty years of age, who, attracted by the uniform and the romance, emotionally stirred by the unwonted excitement, either yield to or throw themselves at the young men.

This is war, and it is one of the dangers and sometimes one of the horrors of war that emotions, both bad and good, are pitched to a high power. We all feel it. The greatest danger is with this last great class, the girls of our villages, towns and cities; for when these four groups, loose men and loose women, a large proportion of whom are diseased, nice boys and foolish, innocent girls, associate in questionable or dangerous ways, it is only a question of a short time when they have so mingled that disease passes from one to another; and then follows the horror of the most terrifying and wasting diseases going through the innocent houses of the country.

This is no fiction; every doctor can tell you a story. I can give you official reports of this thing going on right here in Boston and its vicinity and in certain cities around Camp Devens.

EDITORIAL

There is one aspect of this war that very little has been said about, and that is about the limitations of military training, which aforesaid limitations may be seen most graphically in a Prussian officer.

As Chesterton well said, "No use asking who started the war, that is, if you ever encountered a Prussian military officer."

Well, on the other hand, a Prussian military officer is a very capable fighter. He is the embodiment of military ideals, if war is the chief duty of man.

In truth, military training, like studying for the Ministry, has two very different results. It is capable of producing both the greatest heroes and also the most consummate asses that the world has ever known.

In other words, there is no ass as egregious (whatever that may mean, but we believe it is the usual adjective that goes with this noun) as a military ass.

We are all familiar with the curious freaks that the Divinity School Nursery can turn out. We have seen the perfectly ladylike and hopelessly incompetent captains of human souls, to whom sin is a purely academic abstraction, and salvation a rigidly official sanctity, and heaven the abode of the anaemically orthodox.

But a Divinity student has no such temptations to be the darling of a castle as has a military officer.

Suppose a Divinity student was trained that he must not carry his laundry through the streets, but should hail the first layman that he met and order him to do it.

Supposing no layman could approach him without standing in rapt attention as though he were gazing upon one of the elect.

Supposing every time he issued an order it would mean thirty days in jail to disobey it, what kind of Ministers would our Divinity students become?

Manifestly the man who could disassociate all this from his person and attach it all to his office would become a saint, and the man who took a personal satisfaction in it would become a fool, and that is not the worst of it—the congregation that would have to suffer the fool would not be apt to do it gladly.

So there is a similarity, only the military officer can do more immediate harm, and we feel that there should be an official fool killer in every division, who should be assigned to deliver boys from the stupid follies and criminal blindness of the military ass, who has been ordained to high office.

It is true that men cannot and ought not to discriminate between these kinds during war. The private must obey, respect and follow his officer, but the government should do its bit for the boys at the front by weeding out pompous two-by-fours from the official caste, thus making the office of a military officer more honorable and the life of an ordinary private more endurable, during the war.

You are all familiar with the withering scorn which a stiff and mechanical priest can manifest if you fail to render some official respect. You will find the same thing exactly in a military officer, and yet there are thousands of both priests and officers that are entirely human and command respect not merely because it is their right, but because it is our privilege to bestow it. If the human worth is there, neither ordination nor a commission can destroy it. If it is not there, if the man be a cad at heart, the distinction merely advertises the meanness.

It takes grace to receive distinction; for three thousand years ago it was true that "man being in honor hath no understanding, but may be compared to the beasts that perish." And it is still ture.

One of the objections to religion is the creation of the priestly caste. It is no worse than the tendencies of war to create a military caste.

The fault after all is our poor, silly human nature that plays the fool more often in prosperity than it does in adversity.

And there are modest priests as there are humble officers, and no soldier of Christ nor of the republic should falter in his service, because he happens to serve under one who lacks common sense.

There are two great tests of life, the one to receive honor without making a fool of yourself; and the other to serve under a fool without losing your loyalty and your sense.

The Church Will Respond to Any Call

In a recent address before the Episcopalian Club of Massachussetts, Bishop Lawrence stated that at a meeting of the Church War Commission, "doubt was expressed as to whether we could get the strongest and most influential men in the Church to go into the camps. I said: "I believe that the Church will respond to any call that we choose to make. Will you give me a chance? They said, 'Yes.' The next day I spoke to the Diocesan Convention of New York. I told them what we had in mind and what we were trying to do at Camp Devans, and I said: 'If there is any Parish in the Diocese of Massachussetts, or any Rector, I don't care how big or how important, if the War Commission calls upon that Rector to go into any camp and to take his place, —if that Rector is not willing to go, and if that Parish will not send him with the utmost cordiality, I would scorch that Rector and that Parish so they would never forget it! ' Having said that, we went to lunch. (Laughter.) I put my eye on three of the strongest men in the city of New York, and I thought I would test it out. In five minutes I was able to notify our Commission that three men—Dr. Manning, the Rector of Trinity Church, Theodore Sedgwick of Calvary Church, Milo Gates of the Church of the Transfiguration—three men strong in themselves and strong in their position, were at their command and they would go to Camp Yaphank right away. (Applause.) In three days I received a telegram from Dr. Manning saying that his Vestry had given him leave of absence for three months, and on the first of December he went to Camp Yaphank. (Applause.) The point is, he is the Rector of the greatest Parish in the United States, of this Church, and that a man with that position and responsibility should go into the camp, with no sense of condescension, but with a sense of pride that he has been called upon to do it, will have its influence not only in Camp Yaphank, but throughout the camps of the country.

War's Effects Not All Bad

That the war's effects on social and religious conditions are not all bad is strongly brought out in the following illuminating editorial, which appeared in the Boston Transcript:

A statement by Commissioner Woods of New York City indicates, so far as it goes, that the effect of the war upon crime is very much as one would expect it to be. There has been in New York a steady diminution in the number of homicides and of felonious and simple assaults, but at the same time an increase in the number of thefts committed. The war removes from our communities many men who in times of peace are inspired by the effects of alcohol to commit crimes of violence. These men, as soldiers, are subjected to a rigid discipline, and the peace of the community is thus enhanced in a considerable degree. This is one cause of the diminution of homicides and assaults. Another is the emotional effect upon all classes of the service and sacrifice of the war. From one cause or the other, or from both, the number of homicides of all grades in New York City, in the last six months, fell to eighty-two, from ninety-two in the preceding half year. But under the pressure of scarcity, larceny increased in the same period, rising to 78 per cent of all the offences committed.

Statistics furnished by a number of Canadian cities show that all crime has steadily decreased in that country since the beginning of the war, and the British record is the same. But the emotional effect of the war, already strong in both of those countries, has hardly begun to tell upon the American people. We see the larger crimes diminishing, but it is Commissioner Wood's opinion that the greatly increased value of various commodities, such as silks, copper, brass and foodstuffs, has, at least in New York, by increasing the temptation to steal, proved too much for whatever emotional effect the war may as yet have have had in the opposite direction.

At the same time that war has lessened the unsocial impulse toward homicide and assault, it has greatly stimulated the social impulse by leading many thousands of men to marry. The Episcopal Church report for 1917 shows an increase of 1500 marriages over 1916, and it is estimated that in this country war marriages have exceeded 50,000 in number. These war marriages, which in virtually every case are marriages of love, marriages of the ideal, are a distinct contribution to public morality. But while this tendency is noted, it may be questioned what the effect upon public morality and order will be of the war scarcity of shepherds of the religious flocks. The Clergy have been drawn off by thousands, not only into army Chaplainships, and thus sent away from their charges, but into other forms of effort in connection with the war. Many pulpits have been left vacant, and in the case of many thousands more which have not been vacated the ordinary parochial activities of the Clergy have been diverted to the performance of special war tasks. But has the moral guardianship of the community been relaxed as a consequence of this tendency? We do not think so. The general zeal has been stimulated, making every good man and woman in some sense a shepherd. If there are fewer professional shepherds, there is less shepherding to be done. The moral tone of the entire community, including that of the men of God themselves, has been improved by the spiritual exaltation due to the war. This influence will last long—will indeed last forever.

The universal effect of the drawing off of clergy, doctors, engineers, teachers, nurses and workers of every sort into the war has been to stimulate endeavor, and the sense of responsibility, on the part of those who remain. Has anyone heard the canting observation, "Let George do it," since our war with Germany began? It is no longer a case of putting off upon somebody else the thing to be done. Rather, the prevailing disposition is to go out of one's way to take up the relinquished task of another. Out of this disposition, this quickened conscience of service, a great harvest of future accomplishment will be reaped.

Attendance of Men Increased 700 Per Cent

An unusually successful every-member canvass has just been completed in St. Paul's Parish, Maumee, Diocese of Ohio, the Rev. William S. Banks, Rector. It was inaugurated by a splendidly attended men's dinner, at which the Rev. George Gunnell, Jr., of Trinity Church, Toledo, Ohio, made the address of the evening. The financial results show an increase in Parish support of 294 per cent and for benevolences 237 per cent. This, however, is the least of the gain. The attendance of men at the services has grown over 700 per cent; a large class of men are receiving instruction for Confirmation; a men's Bible Class has been formed; a Fellowship Club of fifty charter members has been organized; a Parish House is about to be erected; and the entire congregation has awakened to new vision and enthusiasm. Since this Church, with its 131 communicants, in a town of three thousand inhabitants, is a fair specimen of the average Parish, such results are surely possible in the numerous similar congregations which comprise so large a portion of the Church in this country.

General Haig Writes to a Mississippi Rector

The Rev. Dr. W. S. Simpson-Atmore, Rector of Trinity Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., and Civilian Chaplain at Camp Shelby, received an autograph letter from Field Marshal Haig, written under date of Dec. 14, at the General Headquarters of the British armies in France, in which the famous General says: "The ties that bind our two nations together are becoming closer every day, and now that American divisions are beginning to arrive in Europe, we look forward with even greater confidence than ever to the realization of our common hopes."

CONSECRATION SERMON

Preached at the Consecration of Rt. Rev. John C. Sage, D. D., by the Bishop Coadjutor of Colorado

Acts xx:21

I.

You are receiving today an office which in our eyes has tremendous potential power, and in the eyes of most of our contemporaries is a piece of solemn foolishness. The average Christian today, like the Bolsheviki of Russia, deems all external authority as foolishness and his own internal opinions as infallible.

You are going forth into a district where not one in a hundred of a presumably Christian population has either belief or interest in your office, and where even those who pay an outward respect thereto are not much moved by any expression of authority that you may utter. We are like a small body of constitutionalists, who are clinging to the remains of constitutional ecclesiastical authority, where the bulk of the people are either imperialists endeavoring to restore a discredited absolute power, or else are factionalists intent on setting up their own cabal—which, when it has gained a momentary control, has been as absolute and more unreasonable than the power which it helped to dethrone.

As usual, the small body which calls for the restoration of constitutional authority is acceptable to neither partisan, and is viewed with contempt by both. Yet in secular history it has been the winning party. It won out in England after the rule of the tyrants had been superceded by the awful misrule of the saints, who, having beheaded tyranny, so befuddled democracy that it, too, lost its head.

It won out in France, after the guillotine had disposed of tyrants and their own follies had extinguished patriots.

It will win out in the Kingdom of Heaven when the stupid follies of a religious proletariat have finally exceeded the selfish blunders of a selfish hierarchy. It took the world 18 centuries to replace the tyranny of the Caesars with a real constitutional government—only to find that the Caesars were still fighting for their privileges, and the uneducated peasant was playing into his hands. The Kaiser and the Bolsheviki are still the enemies of constitutional government in the State, as are the Pope and the sects in the Church.

So "bonds and afflictions" await you—"the bonds" of having your hands tied by the parsimony of your own flock, and the "affliction" of seeing imperialists and anarchists well financed and heavily armed by the zealots that support them.

"But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself."

For like these overseers in Ephesus whom St. Paul was sending forth, you are confronted with the results of the conditions of which he warns them. "For I know that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock", and any one who has read the history of Bishops from their earliest days until now realize that a large percentage of the shepherds have been greedy wolves. "Also of yourselves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw disciples after them", which is exactly what the reaction against greedy wolves has been.

The Church has indeed suffered, first from the shepherds who have been wolves, and secondly from sheep who have been made bitter and perverse by the fleecing. To keep one's head and one's heart requires a head that is not easily turned and a heart that is not easily soured.

II.

Now, to meet the situation demands the wisdom of the serpent, or, in modern phrase, "common sense". How are you going to meet the situation? Do you think that you are going to bind up the Church's wounds by affecting the regalia of a discredited royalty, on the one hand, or trying to satisfy the insatiable demands of the never satisfied anarchists, on the other?

We have only two traditions of the Episcopate to guide us, and I believe they are both bad, the English and the Italian, and with this further limitation on our part, that while we have the same spiritual offices as the Lord Bishop of London or the Cardinal Bishop of Rome, we have behind us neither the secular power of the one nor the ecclesiastical authority of the other. Manifestly habits which might be tolerated by my Lord Bishop of the Court of St. James or St. Peter (that is, habits that belong to that world in which the Gentiles seek the pre-eminence) have no place in our modest entourage as Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church. When a man who really rules some one puts on the livery of his authority, he may inspire some sentiments of awe; when a man who rules no one puts them on, he arouses sentiments of ridicule.

It is a part of diplomacy that we make not the office which we hold ridiculous. Men may hold us in contempt for our lofty aims; let us see to it that they do not laugh at us for our foolish pretensions. It would seem that unusual symbols of authority, whether those of the street or of the sanctuary, had better be omitted in the interests of diplomacy, for we are living among republicans who have dethroned their tyrant. We shall win neither their respect nor their co-operation by restoring unnecessarily the signs of all authority that is indissolubly associated with cruelty and greed. We can afford to discard the trappings of royalty if we ever wish to win the suffrages of a reunited people. Of course I do not presume to draw the line of demarcation, but common sense must determine the fitness of our garb and manner. I am very sure that the mere fact that a thing is Roman or Anglican does not mean that it will be in good taste in an American environment.

If this Church is ever to win its way into the heads and hearts of Christian people it will be because it will have demonstrated that which the constitutionalists must ever demonstrate, that the greatest freedom and the most effective liberty are attained by a system which, while clinging to traditional authority, is responsive to changing needs. The weakness of such a constitutional party always lies in the fact that part of the constituency is half imperialists and another is nearly all Bolsheviki—while a very small number are loyal to the principle for which we stand, and the only principle which could ever win out in the effective unifying of Christendom. In this way the full joy of one's ministry is not that one has been popular, nor that one has had a transient numerical success, but rather that one has done some building that is not hay and stubble.

But to build a Church of granite is a very different thing from throwing up a straw stack, and requires patience and industry—especially if most of the stones of which your temple is to be constructed crumble in bad weather, and will cleave only along the lines of invincible prejudice.

In this building there are some things that you cannot forget (1st) that you are to "testify the Gospel of the grace of Christ", not to manufacture a panacea for all human ills. Your foundations are laid. It is the nature of the problem that you cannot relay them. You are pledged to bear witness to the doctrines of this Church, which are embodied in Holy Scriptures and in the ancient formularies of the Church.

As to the facts of the Christian Faith, you are bound to be a witness, which means that you will testify to those facts. For one to deny these facts while clad in the livery of the Church, and receiving emoluments therefrom, is to lack a perception of what is honest—is to regard the Bible and your own signed statements as scraps of paper—is to undermine the very constitution of the organization in which you have been entrusted to hold high office. It was the last warning of Christ to His Apostles that they should be witnesses of the faith, not manufacturers of a cult.

(2nd) It is required of stewards that a man be found faithful. You are to be an example of Apostolic simplicity in your life, in your teaching, your contracts, your appointments. There is just one thing to do, and that is to do as you say, even if it is to your hindrance. To prate about the rights of your office when you are evading its responsibilities is to commit the error of those who wear the purple. There are no rights with which Christ ever invested men that did not carry with them the responsibilities—and the only charter of your rights is your sense of your responsibility. Now this responsibility is to be found in Christ's life, simplicity rather than pomposity; truthfulness rather than evasion; courage rather than timidity; kindness rather than officiousness; sympathy rather than conventional authority. To avoid ostentation in manner, not to be known as belonging to a class, whether it be capital or labor, because the rich will fail you because of their meanness, and the laborer because of his envy. We are to proclaim the Gospel of common blood, of common prayer, of common interest—and we cannot be common if we belong to a class.

(3rd) Your business is not to divide men's earthly inheritance, but to inspire men's lives to be just and merciful, to be fair and unprejudiced, to be true and pure—just as a University is founded not to deal with politics, nor municipalities. nor with classes, but with truth. So the Church, if it attempts many tasks, will fail in all, but if this one thing it does, to preach Christ and Him crucified to men—then those who have done this thing will not be ashamed of the results.

There are those who would persuade you to undertake many things; but one thing is needful and that one thing is to go into your work determined not to let men minister unto you, but to minister unto them in the things that Christ proclaims to a world that hates Him and His Gospel, and is at enmity with you—and it makes no difference how the world takes it. "None of these things move me, neither count I my reputation dear to myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus Christ, to testify to the Gospel of the grace of God."

A Bishop is a Missionary rather than a potentate; his responsibility is to go to men with the word and touch of Christ—the word of His mouth, the touch of His hand—rather than to impress men with the dignity of his office. It is a stupid interpretation of the life of Christ—whether it be English or Italian—that would persuade a man that he reaches the highest expression of his Episcopate by being impressive in manner or in dress. A Bishop, like any other man, reaches the pinnacle of his glory when he suffers little children to come unto him, and when he does his full duty to the least of his brethren. There is no better task than to know your sheep, to feed them, to bind up their wounds, and to keep them in the green pastures, beside the waters of life, where the wolf will not devour them and the hireling will not fleece.

It is a monotonous task, for the sheep are silly and the shepherds are notably eccentric, and you, like the rest of us, are a sinful man, entrusted with a Divine task. In trying to be a Bishop, never forget that you are just a man—so prone to be a fool, and so entirely dependent upon the grace of God.

Christmas and New Year's Services at Council Bluffs, Iowa

In St. Paul's Church, Council Bluffs, Iowa, the Rev. Wilford Ernest Mann, Rector, on the Sunday evening preceding Christmas Day, a Mystery Play was given depicting scenes connected with the birth of Christ, prominent men and women of the Parish taking the various parts. Correct and beautiful costumes, rented for the occasion, added greatly to the impressiveness of the play. Many were turned away from the Church, unable to find even standing room. The reverent attitude and silence observed by the great congregation throughout the evening was especially notable, as many in attendance were not familiar with Church customs. At the midnight Christmas Eve service a larger number of Communions were made than at any other service in the history of the Parish.

New Year's Day was also observed in a special manner. At 9 a. m. there was Divine Service in the Church, with an appropriate sermon by the Rector. From 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. the Rector and his wife called upon the aged and sick in the Parish, leaving flowers and speaking words of cheer. A generous parishioner loaned them his car, which enabled them to make twenty-three calls. From 2:30 to 6 p. m. the Rector and his family kept open house to their parishioners and friends. During the entire time there was a constant stream of callers to and from the Rectory. The day proved so thoroughly enjoyable that it will be made an annual custom.

WHAT SEEMS TO BE THE MATTER WITH THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN AMERICA?

DEAN WALTER S. POND, CHICAGO

My reasons for selecting this topic are the following:

Although we call America a Christian nation, yet out of our hundred million of inhabitants about 45,000,000, only, are enrolled in the various Christian Churches. Of that 45,000,000 probably 60 per cent would not pass for real helpful Christians in any sense whatsoever. In other words, although we have had the best of Christian influences in the United States we are today face to face with the issue that about 10 per cent of our population are really consecrated men and women working for the extension of the Kingdom.

Another reason why I feel constrained to take this subject, is because in the past two years, as Episcopal City Missionary in Chicago, I have gone into a dozen or so different kinds of Eleemosynary and penal institutions, month by month, and in those places I have been able to see the results of our feeble efforts to make Christians. The Churches that I have been in and out of in the past five years have been half empty, or if they have been filled at all they have been overwhelmingly filled with women. All the jails that I have been in and out of, in the past five years, have been overwhelmingly filled with men and boys. And while I speak mostly from the point of view of our institutions here in Chicago, still I have visited institutions not only in the East but in the West, too. In other words, American Christianity by a fair test is a failure. And yet Christ himself, when he empowered his disciples, said that "not even the gates of hell should prevail against their good work." Therefore, I believe a fair man will have to conceive that if the Christian forces in America are bent on making this land a Christian land, we have not succeeded so far, and that we will have to change our methods if we are going to be successful even in the future.

I take the liberty of making a diagnosis of the ailments of American Christianity after handling literally thousands of down-and-out Episcopalians as well as Baptists and Methodists and Roman Catholics, whom we have not only seen growing out of our work at our Cathedral Church, but also those cases that have come under our attention at our Home of Incurables, at our Insane Asylum, at our Poor House, at our Homes for Aged, at our Orphanages, and at our Jails and Reform Schools. And I say with a great deal of shame that most of the human wrecks that I have handled have been men who were once started the Christian way and who would still want to be catalogued as Christians. In the past five years, I remember of only two or three cases of men who were sincere unbelievers. Therefore, it is not so much anti-Christian people as it is unconverted followers of Christ that are the public burdens and those who withstand Christ in this day. And I say that from my point of view, there are these following difficulties (amongst other pronounced tendencies) or ailments that are complicating the Church's fight for righteousness in America today:

The Christian Church in the United States seems to have taken on an attitude that gives her a reputation for a cold heart, whether she has that kind of a heart or no. In those days when Christ walked the earth both society and state affairs and religion were so cold that men took Christ, with persecution, because He was sympathetic towards them as they bore their terrible burdens. In this day and generation, with few exceptions, Church authorities will not speak out against the rottenness in politics and in the business world, and in the Church itself, because some of those on whom the Church has to depend for its existence are those very ones who are part and parcel of this system of rottenness. The masses suffer as a result of the condition. They know that the conditions can be remedied. They take their Gospel literally and they know that Christ ought to be what He said He was if their conditions are ever going to be remedied. Inasmuch as Christ left His Church to continue His work, suffering men expect the Church, even if she cannot remedy the existing evils immediately, to at least be active in showing evidences that she, the Church, is willing to make the effort to do the best she can to remedy matters. I do not care if it is not the business of the Church to do the work of a charitable organization, or a settlement, or a clothing store, or a grocery store, or of an employment agency, or of the public hospitals, etc. If Church members, especially the suffering Church members, cannot get what they have to have at once from these public organizations that are founded to help them out in their hour of need, then I say, in such an emergency, it is the business of the Church of God to be a good Samaritan, at least to give immediate care to the fallen-by-the-wayside. Take the Church's attitude regarding the labor question. One-half of the laboring world is being demoralized because of short hours, and at the same time a percentage about equal to another half is being worked to death with long hours. The laboring man is not only suffering but the wives and children of these men are being worried to death or starved by the system. Impartial decisions have been rendered that it is more profitable to run our business with consideration of the laboring man. Unrestricted child labor is far more expensive to society than restricted child labor, yet some Churchmen (who are employers) will not be informed on the relationship of unrestricted child labor to our Health Bills and our Crime Bills and our undertaker's accounts.

The problem of intemperance may be considered not as a question of men's habits but rather as a more serious question that the best authorities have rated as a national disease. Diseases cannot be stamped out by pleading state's or citizen's rights in the matter of personal liberty, but rather by stringent legislation. Victims of this terrible disease turn to the followers of the Master. They find that in certain cases the Clergy, as well as the laity—and please remember in certain cases that these indifferent Church members are often prominent in affairs—not only are indifferent regarding the real issue but are actually "blind leaders of the blind," inasmuch as these prominent Churchmen are spreading this contagious disease.

POEMS Worth Preserving

SPINNING

(Helen Hunt Jackson, best known as the author of "Ramona," was born in Amherst, Massachussetts, 1831, and died in San Francisco, 1885.)

Like a blind spinner in the sun,
I tread my days;
I know that all the threads will run
Appointed ways;
I know each day will bring its task.
And being blind, no more I ask.

I do not know the use or name
Of that I spin;
I only know that some one came,
And laid within
My hand the thread, and said, "Since you
Are blind, but one thing you can do."

Sometimes the threads so rough and fast
And tangled fly,
I know wild storms are sweeping past,
And fear that I
Shall fall; but dare not try to find
A safer place, since I am blind.

I know not why, but I am sure
That tint and place,
In some great fabric to endure
Past time and race,
My threads will have; so from the first,
Though blind, I never felt accurst.

I think perhaps this trust has sprung
From one short word
Said over me when I was young,—
So young, I heard
It, knowing not that God's name signed
My brow, and sealed me His, though blind.

But whether this be seal or sign Within, without,
It matters not. The bond Divine
I never doubt.
I know He set me here, and still
And glad, and blind, I wait His will.

But listen, listen, day by day,
To hear their tread
Who bear the finished web away,
And cut the thread,
And bring God's message in the sun,
"Thou poor blind spinner, work is done."

Helen Hunt Jackson.

THE DAY'S WORK

(What does the parson do during the week? He must write his sermon, of course. Perhaps you would like to follow him through one day. Let it be understood that he has many pleasant experiences, many happy points of contact with his people, many messages that encourage and inspire. These you may infer from the other parts of this record.

But with a vast number of difficulties that confront him, you are perhaps not aware. May he write of them with a good nature and with a keen sense of the humor of it all. It is all part of the day's work

Should this report prompt you to hesitate to bring any real trouble or need or inquiry to the parson, even over the telephone, you do injustice to his devotion to his work and his desire to help you.)

Part I

The Minister came early to his study one Tuesday morning after a Monday spent on a little fishing trip. He had a good week before him and a mind refreshed from his Sunday labors. By the way, it is not Sunday's labors that make the Minister feel on Monday like a dismantled battleship, but it is the preparation for Sunday's labors during the preceding week, under conditions that would torment the ordinary business man into the conviction that he was suffering from an attack of psychasthenia.

The week's work for the Minister was as follows:

A sermon to prepare.

A lecture on Jerusalem for a study class.

A paper for the Ministers' meeting.

Thirty or forty letters to write.

Ten organizations to meet and direct.

One wedding to attend.

Church leaflet to write, guide through the printing office and send out.

Sunday School lessons to arrange for the following quarter.

Forty calls to make.

Let it go at that. It was to be only a moderately busy week of ten hours a day.

Bright and early on Tuesday morning he steps into his study and thinks of the good day he will have for his sermon and lecture. Hardly had he concentrated his mind upon his sermon when his faithful telephone began its tuneful lay.

7:10 a. m.—Brrrrrrr.

("Oh, that telephone!" thought the Minister, "it has awakened early.")

Minister.—"Yes?"

Telephone.—"Is this Mr. Blank?,'

Minister.—"Yes."

Telephone.—"This is Charlie Wiggins. Is there a meeting to-night?"

(There has been a meeting of the boys on Tuesday nights for seven months. One Tuesday the Minister failed to be there, and for the next three months Charlie Wiggins began his Tuesdays by calling up the Minister to make sure that he need not come two blocks in the evening only to be disappointed.)

Minister.—"Yes, Charlie, meeting as usual."

Telephone.—"I didn't know. Goodbye."

—7:20 a. m.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Hello, is this Mr. Blank? This is Mr. Jones. I tried to get you all day yesterday." (Resentfully.)

Minister.—"I was out of town yesterday, Mr. Jones."

Telephone.—"I want to tell you that you have been elected on the board of trustees of the Municipal Lodging House Society. There will be a meeting of the Trustees this afternoon at two o'clock, at———Hall. Can you be present?

Minister.—"This is an unexpected honor, Mr. Jones, and I am not sure that my duties will permit me either to accept the appointment or be present at the meeting. I know nothing of your work."

Telephone.—"We are about to raise funds to build a lodging house and it is the duty of the Clergy to support every social work. I am sure that you will not feel like declining to aid in this project. Moreover, you have been elected on the Finance Committee."

(This began to be serious. Why do people expect the Clergy who already have more than their share of financial difficulties to become financial agents for organizations?)

Telephone.—(Taking the Minister's moment of silent reflection for consent), "We wish to have a good report this afternoon and we wish you would see the following persons during the morning and ask their help. You can get it if any one can."

(Mr. Jones then reads a list of ten of the richest and most besought men in town. They were men whose friendship or friendly acquaintance the Minister would not dare betray by an appeal for funds for any promiscuous venture, and only with great reluctance for any well established and useful charity.)

Minister.—"No, I cannot do that but I will go to your meeting."

(It seems the only possible way to head off any premature announcement of his interest in the undertaking. At the same time it will permit some investigation of the real worth of the project.)

Telephone.—"Thank you, at two o'clock."

7:25 a. m.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Is this the Reverend?"

(There it goes again—the everlasting misuse of the word reverend.)

Telephone.—"This is the Niagara Coal Co. Will the church be open today?"

Minister.—"I believe not."

Telephone.—"We are going to send up a load of coal at 10 o'clock. Will you be there?

Minister.—"Do you expect me to put it in?"

(This retort cost the Church five dollars, as the hearer lived near and usually sent this amount to the Church Treasurer at Christmas, He omitted this attention the following Christmas.)

Telephone (gruffly).—"We can't get the coal in unless the church is open."

Minister.—"O yes, you can."

(Long explanation follows as to driveway and coal chute.)

7:30 a. m.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Hello, this is the 'Evening Advertiser.' Did you see in last night's paper a despatch saying that some Ministers in New York will have moving picture shows in their Churches?"

Minister.—"Yes, I noticed the item."

Telephone.—"We wish to get an expression from our Clergy on the subjest. What do you think of it?"

Minister (not being desirous of ignoring the paper that had been obliging on many an occasion).—"Why, I think it is all right, if they want to substitute entertainment for religion, otherwise not."

Telephone.—"That's just what we believe. Thank you."

(When the interview appears it is something like this: "Rev. Mr. Blank approves of the idea. He says that we ought to have more entertainment in our churches. People who work hard during the week should have something to amuse them on Sundays. Religion has its place in the churches, of course, but in the failure of religion to attract the masses entertainment makes a good substitute.")

The War's Spiritual Interpretation

By Bishop Charles D. Williams

Let us give our people, if possible, the spiritual interpretation of this great tragedy. Let us discern in it the hand of God and trace the lines of His Providence therein. They are there, that hand and Providence of God, becoming more and more visible as the tragedy deepens.

When the war began, I, for one, despaired of civilization, social progress and religion itself. It seemed to me as if the clock had been set back for years, if not for centuries; as if all the promising movements of reform and progress with with the world was then teeming were checked indefinitely.

But as I see it now, God is working His purposes out faster and more surely than they could have been attained in our poor human ways. Every goal of which the servants of the ideal have dreamed seems nearer and more certain by reason of this awful tragedy. Russia has become a democracy, though yet fumbling and blundering at her new task of self-government. Democracy in all other nations has received a definite and mighty impulse to expansion and progress. And there can be no end to this struggle until democracy in some form is established in Germany and the last vestige of irresponsible government is swept from the earth. The peoples of the world will no longer suffer autocrats by divine right to determine their destinies and send their sons to the shambles for the attainment of dynastic ambitions. Every movement towards social progress and reform has been stimulated. The age of greedy and selfish individualism is closing. The new era of co-operation for the common good is dawning in every nation and among all the nations. A new and better world is being born out of these universal travail pangs.

This awful baptism of blood is regenerating the nations. England has shaken off her sorbid commercialism and her internal strife and is inspired by a new passion for international righteousness, a new consecration to justice, humanity and world-wide peace. France, once esteemed the garrulous, frivolous, if not morally corrupt people, has risen to a sublime height of silent endurance and heroism. She says less, does more and stands higher than any people on earth today. And America, threatened if not dying with an apoplexy of wealth and luxury, may be saved by this awful bloodletting. America, divided by the greeds of her individualism, may be welded into unity in the fires of this terrible experience and learn the new world spirit of co-operation for the common weal.

The War Deepens the Religious Spirit

SO SAYS A FRENCH CHAPLAIN

A French Army Chaplain who was called to the colors as a soldier for clerical duty at the outbreak of the war but who asked to be sent to the front as Chaplain because, as he says, "I wanted to get into the real war and give some personal help to my compatriots," has just finished a six months' tour of the United States and is preparing to rejoin his division "somewhere in France" next month. He is the Abbe Patrice Flynn, "an Irish name," he remarked jocularly, "but I am a true Frenchman, as I was born in Paris, and for several years before the war was Pastor of a parish at Suresnes, a few miles from Paris."

Chaplain Flynn in the course of a very interesting interview in the N. Y. Times speaks of religious conditions at the front as follows:

"Another thing that the war is doing for France," the Abbe Flynn continued, "is a vital deepening of the religious spirit among all classes of people and a broadening of the truth that, although our religious beliefs may be different, we are all the children of the same God. Most of the French soldiers are Catholics and the majority of Chaplains are of that faith, but there are many Protestant Chaplains, and every army corps has one Jewish rabbi. And I am glad to say that there is a delightful fellow-feeling among these three faiths. Regardless of personal belief, the Chaplains all help one another in emergencies.

"Let me tell you an interesting story occurred on one of the battlefields. A Catholic Priest was giving the last rites to a dying soldier when a shell burst overhead and killed the Priest. A Jewish Rabbi saw it. Running up, he took the cross from the dead Chaplain and pressed it tenderly to the lips of the soldier. Instead of wearing a cross as their insignia, the Jewish Chaplains wear a representation of the Books of the Law. We are all trying to do our bit as we know it for the cause of humanity. Let me give you one more story. At Verdun a Catholic and a Protestant Chaplain were forced to seek shelter one night in an abandoned hut. A shell came through, made a great hole in the floor, and exploded in the cellar. Neither man was hurt, but the yawning hole was between them. The Protestant Chaplain reached out his hand across the hole to the Catholic Priest and said with a smile:

"'Well, brother, isn't it a good thing that we were separated by some little differences at this time!'

"France and America will know each other better after the war, and the deep cementing of a friendly spirit that has existed between the two countries for so many years will be one more of the national blessings which we will realize more truly when peace and the recognition of personal rights come to the fighting countries."

THE LITTLE MAIDS FROM CROCUS TOWN

Crocus Town must be a delightful place indeed, if the pretty maids who make their home there are any indication. That reminds me of a story I heard about them, and which I wish to tell to you.

One day all the little maids who live in Crocus Town made up their minds to go on a little journey to another town not far distant. As they wished to look attractive, they dressed themselves up in their prettiest gowns. There were purple gowns striped with white, blue gowns, white gowns, and gowns of orange hue. Never did maids look sweeter and fresher than they as they started on their journey.

They tripped along gaily and blithely, and soon reached the city where they intended to visit, but found that they could not pass beyond the walls. The gates of this city are frozen up all Winter, and the people who live there never open them until the Spring comes and melts away the ice and snow.

The little maids were quite impatient, so they began to knock upon the gates with little sharp raps. I think they must have hurt their tiny knuckles, they knock so hard. But no answer came. The gate papa did not seem to hear them, or he heard them and did not wish to open his gates so early. Then all these little maids from Crocus Town began to call out in their sweet voices, and implore the watchman to let them in out of the cold.

They said: "We are cold, Warder, and we are in our bare feet. For little maids we have come quite a long journey, and we are tired and faint and hungry. Please, please, dear Warder, let us in." He must have had a very hard heart indeed to resist such an appeal, so the gates began to swing back, with many a creak and crack. Just as they were a little way open, one little Crocus maid slipped through, crying, "Where is Spring, dear watchman, where, oh, where is Spring"? And the watchman put on his sweetest smile, and bowed and said: "The Spring? Why, the Spring, dear maid, is you."

Training Camps for Christians

By Rev. William B. Kinkaid, Los Angeles

I suppose that there is no longer any question in the minds of true men about the principles which are at stake in the world war. When the war was a vague and distant and unreal thing, which we thought of perhaps as an unpleasant incident happening six or seven thousand miles away, and of which we read as we might read the history of wars long past, with a quickening of our pulse at the bravery of the warriors and with an outgoing of our sympathy for those who died and those who suffered, but with little feeling of actual personal concern in it—when this was so, there may have been some confusion in our minds. But since it has come knocking at our own doors, summoning our own young men to take their places in the ranks and summoning us to do our part at home, the imminence of the peril has clarified our vision, and we are able to see what it is all about. We ought to have seen it long ago. It should have been evident that the magnificent spirit shown on the one side sould have arisen only from the knowledge that the war was for something far greater than even home and country, noble and inspiring as those ideals are—that it was God's war, and that the men were inspired by that assurance to superhuman effort and endurance. And it should have been evident from the bestiality and frightfulness on the other side that the forces there, through mad rulers or through national insanity, were fighting on the side of the devil. But thank God, however slow we were in comprehending it, we are at last coming to a realization of the truth. We are at last learning where we stand, and are beginning to see the vision.

THE WORLD WAR A SPIRITUAL CONFLICT

The war in which we are engaged I believe is in its essence a spiritual war. Let slackers and cowards and socialists unworthy of the name rant as they will about its being a struggle for a mercantile supremacy or a battle of puppets with the strings pulled by Wall Shreet and the other money markets of the world. It is not now, if it ever was, a war for material things; it is a war for an ideal, an ideal which is part of our Christian heritage and the defense of which is our Christian duty. I am firmly convinced that the war could never have happened if all Christians had been true to their profession and had walked consistently with their high calling. If we had done that, long before this enduring peace would have flowed like a river through the world and war would have been impossible. And because we have failed, the war is upon us as the inevitable result of our sins. But it is more than a punishment; it is a cleansing and a healing penance by means of which we may if we will correct the results of our sins of the past and escape the frightful thing into which those sins were about to plunge us and to which we had almost condemned the generations of our children—a world without God, worshipping the false gods of material prosperity and pleasure and selfishness. Salvation through sacrifice and suffering—that is what it is—the salvation of the world from our sins and the penalty of our sins, a wresting from the devil and from his domination of a warld upon which he was fast tightening his grip. A holy war, a spiritual combat, God's fight.

ARMY TRAINING CAMPS

My mind had been working along toward these conclusions for some time when it was my privilege to pay a visit to the Reserve Officer's Training Camp at the Presidio, in San Francisco.

It was that visit, I think, which served to crystalize the ideas which had been somewhat fluid and unformed on the subject of the relation of the Church to the war. No one could, I think, fail to be affected by what was to be found there. There were fifteen hundred young men from all the walks of life almost; business men, lawyers, college professors, and students, men who had lucrative positions in the world and had been to a large extent their own masters. They had given it all up and had presented themselves for training in the art of war. They had given up a great deal of money, almost all of their personal luxuries and a great many of the ordinary comforts and conveniences of life, all their former interests and amusements, all their time, and above all their own wills. From 5:30 in the morning when the bugle sounded to awaken them until 9:30 at night when they must all be in bed, every hour of their day was arranged for them. And the tasks to which they were assigned were not always pleasant. Men who had never had to do a thing for themselves had to make their own beds and pick up their own clothes; they were assigned to "kitchen police" duty, and for three days at a time had to scrub kitchen floors and peel potatoes and empty garbage. You are all more or less familiar with the routine of life at one of these camps, so that it is unnecessary for me to enlarge on the details. The point is that these men, accustomed to lives of comparative ease and to regulating their own time and doing what seemed good to themselves, to having opinions of their own and the privilege of expressing them and living in accordance with them, had given up every bit of freedom which was theirs and submitted to the rule and direction of the will of another. And for what? It was in order that they might be trained to take their part in a conflict which their consciences told them was right, and failure to engage in which they would consider a disgrace.

Isaiah's Message to Our Own Age

By Rev. Carroll Lund Bates

A quality that has been many times noted in the Bible is its perpetual modernity. It speaks to each age in its own language, and to every individual in his own tongue. More than this, it takes its place as a monitor beside the age or beside the individual, and speaks in the tones and words of one possessed of an intimate knowledge of circumstances.

In no case is this more observable than in the utterances of Isaiah. One feels, as he reads this prophet, that he is not listening to a voice of long ago, but that he reads the words of one well informed upon present day issues. Instead of in Jerusalem, this man might well be in New York. Instead of dealing with Judah, Israel, Egypt. Assyria, he seems to be dealing with England, America, France, Germany, Turkey.

Of course this perpetual modernity of the Bible, though passing strange upon its face, finds partial explanation in the fact that moral principles, like God, remain the same, and that the moral obliquities of humanity repeat themselves.

Let us, by a process of not at all difficult thought, then, translate the message of Isaiah into the terms in which it speaks to the present hour.

This prophet comes upon the scene of action at the close of a period of national and material prosperity. The end of the reign of Uzziah marked a high water line in Judah's history. The young prophet himself seems to have first been an optimistic and somewhat narrow Jewish patriot, fired with the feeling that Judah only was God's chosen nation, and that Judah alone was fit to rule (Chap. ii:15).

Judah's material prosperity, however, bore fruit in moral laxity, in soft self-indulgence, and in pride. People and monarch alike mocked God by worship without righteousness. Finally Uzziah exhibited, in his own person, the spirit of the age, in that he arrogantly usurped the office of the Priesthood, and attempted to offer incense in the Temple, whereupon he is smitten with leprosy. When, subsequently, Ahaz came to the throne, the weakness that the self-indulgence of a prosperous age engendered became apparent, while the first faint mutterings of the invasion of Assyria were heard. Assyria meant savagery. It was a nation that knew no such word as right or mercy. It was a nation that looked at treaties as "scraps of paper". Isaiah xxxiii:8 needs no translation into modern terms. It sounds startlingly modern as it stands: "He hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man."

It was "in the year that Uzziah died" that Isaiah had his call (Chap. vi). He saw "the Lord high and lifted up". He saw what symboled to him the majesty of offended righteousness. He heard angelic voices proclaiming God as holy, and there came to him the consciousness of the unrighteousness, and therefore the weakness, of those he represented. "Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips."

Thus Isaiah becomes an example of a soul that by persistency in faith through dark times, sees God finally through the fog, and he rises from his prayer and revery prepared to declare the moral issue in the terms of his own hour.

He first becomes the uncompromising censor of his age. His first chapters are inked with indignation at his times, because that, while his nation has had particular opportunity to know God, it has ignored God, and even defied God.

Scathingly he rebukes his age, its licentious indulgence and vanity (Chap. iii:16, etc.), its social indulgences (vs. 15). From being an optimistic patriot, he bids fair to become a pessimist (ii:22). "Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?"

But this mood of pessimism passes. Isaiah mounts the next step of his staircase as a seer by the new discovery that the Jews do not monopolize God's love, but that God's love finds its objective in a world made to be the Kingdom of God. It is under the spell of this discovery that Isaiah's optimism returns. His optimism is now no narrow optimism. It is an optimistic vision not of Israel reigning for itself, but of Israel the servant—of Israel willing to suffer for the gathering of the Gentiles into the Kingdom of God. Whether the first part of the second part of the prophecy are by separate authors is apart from the purpose of our present study. The whole book is, at any rate, a unit, and it sweeps on to the splendid outlining of Israel charged with a new conception of national mission. The Israel of Isaiah's new conception is not a nation seeking, under the special protection of God, a selfish national prestige. Isaiah's own spiritual rebirth is marked by a rebirth of his idea of patriotism. His new idea is that Israel shall be willing to suffer. Let the Assyrian come. Let him afflict. By his afflictions Israel shall be redeemed. A redeemed remnant shall be saved. Around this remnant, as a nucleus, the Kingdom of God of all nations shall form.

Out of this revery of the prophet chapters 52 and 53 take form. These are the picture of the Suffering Servant, but also, perhaps even consciously in the prophet's own mind, the long expected Messiah, who shall follow also the true and new discovered principle, who shall serve by a sacrificial service, and should "see out of the travail of his soul and be satisfied".

The message of Isaiah to the present age is easy to discern. America has passed through an era of great material prosperity, and its optimism has been narrow. Our prosperity has given us abundant means for self-indulgence. We have repeated in American life every sin that Isaiah rebukes. The sin which Isaiah's first chapter rebukes, and which in his mind seems to comprehend the rest, namely the offering of "vain oblations", the trust in worship without righteousness" has been an American sin. Our Church-going has been conventional, much of it has been in the spirit of smug sectarian self- satisfaction.

Isaiah's Assyria is, of course, for us Pan Germanism's lust for world empire. Had Isaiah been here to paint Germany for us today, he could have done no better than he has done in his word picture of this cruel, lustful empire, knowing no mercy, and yet, in his estimation, a hammer to be used for the purposes of God.

One has but to read the ringing message of President Wilson to the lately assembled Congress to realize that the American citizen is speaking here, not as the old but the new Isaiah—as the Isaiah who has been reborn himself, and whose patriotism has been reborn.

America is filled with these new Isaiahs now. With the consciousness of the sins—the sins of selfishness that rich and poor have been guilty of alike—with the threat of this Twentieth Century Assyria sounding in our ears, with this mocker challenging us that she will force the materialism with which we ourselves have trifled upon us, and fetter us with it—out of all has come a great rebirth. Truly President Wilson's message is a rescript of Isaiah's splendid pledge of faith. "Let Assyria come on," said Isaiah. "Let her do her worst. At the most she can only be the hammer of God to bring the accomplishment of the purpose of God more near. And that purpose is that by Israel's suffering service a Kingdom of God shall be moulded out of all the nations." And President Wilson, merely voicing the thought of millions of Americans, says similarly, Let Germany strut and boast and kill and do her uttermost. America offers her back to the stripes as the suffering servant of God. America now discerns that her smug and narrow patriotism was wrong. We will go through suffering service to the accomplishment of what God is designing to do thereby. And this is what He is designing to do, and will do—He will build up by America's travail the great worth while Kingdom of God, the federation in a covenant of perpetual peace of the free nations of the world.

and it would be going on many times multiplied if it were not for the vigilance of those in authority in Nation, State and Municipality. Public opinion is so sensitive on these questions, sometimes so hysterical, that it is difficult to arouse and yet not alarm. Secrecy always breeds suspicion and exaggeration. I believe that the best corrective of hysteria is reliable publicity and that it is the duty of the medical profession to give the facts. Until they do, others must speak.

These few plain statements I want to make. In meeting present conditions a strong public opinion is needed to stimulate and support the strong arm of the law. The people have a right to demand of the authorities of the Army and Navy such discipline in and about the camps as will give reasonable protection to the men and boys.

The State, City and surrounding communities are in duty bound to join together in support of the military discipline and the protection of men and women. If any citizen has criticism, complaint or suggestion, let him send it to the Committee on Public Safety at the State House, which is on the job and can be trusted.

The people of the communities in all their relations, civic, religious, educational, social, moral, and charitable, are in duty bound to get together, to sink differences, social prejudices, personal ambitions, and to plan and work for the welfare of the whole community, military, naval, and domestic.

Only one class do I single out for special notice. The motherof every girl in this country should ask herself, "Am I doing everything by my example, my housekeeping and my sympathy with the best interests of my girl to give her the strongest safeguards of character and honor? Am I watching her days and evenings with cordial sympathy and leading her towards interests that will fill her thoughts and life? Let the father of every boy see to it that he is the advisor and leader of his son. In this country the camps may be reasonably protected; and the men may by military discipline, self-discipline and public sentiment be held up to American standards. To use Secretary Baker's words, let us "gird them with an invisible and spiritual armor."

When, however, they reach the shores of France and England, they must leave behind great protective forces; they have cut loose from home and public opinion, they are each only one of a great mass; a mass of material forces. They are in countries of other standards; in the trenches, where the physical and nervous powers weaken, and in the reaction of rest, where the outworks of character are endangered. The awful experiences of some of the Colonial troops give us solemn warning. How to meet the vice conditions in Europe is one of the most baffling problems with which our military and sanitary authorities have to deal.: They need the strong and intelligent support of the whole people. The Nation which has drafted her boys and men to give their lives for her is in all honor bound to use every possible means for their protection. As one of the noblest women in this State said at a public hearing to Governor McCall, "I have gladly sent my only boy to the front and am ready to have him give limb or life for the country, but I can never forgive the country if through its neglect he be cent home disabled by preventable disease."

God protect our boys and men across the seas. May the memories and traditions of home and mother and wife defend them! Herein is the glory of our faith. Behind discipline, and public opinion and all outward defences stands character; character, self-disclplined, purer, truer, stronger because founded deep in the character of Him who had such confidence in men that He could trust them with freedom. Even in the most saturated atmosphere war zone, the soldier whose life is really hidden in Christ, really so, may be free from discipline and at the same time stand pure and true.

January 1st, 1918 marks the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C. The Rev. J. Brinton Smith, D. D. (who has been Secretary of the Freedman's Bureau of the Board of Missions), in co-operation with Bishop Atkinson of North Carolina, inaugurated the work in 1863.

In 1865, 97 per cent of the Negro race was illiterate. In 50 years the illiteracy has been reduced to 30 per cent, a marvelous growth, perhaps unexampled in the history of the education of the world.

The work of the Church among the Colored people of the South waits on the rowing spirit of co-operation among the people of the whole country. The people of the South are gradually awakening to their great responsibility. Mission studies of this problem are being made by young men in the Southern Colleges. Studies in Social Service and in Missionary Extension are showing the people of the Fourth Province the tremendous problems that lie at their door. When they awake to the necessity of action, their work will be supported by the Church people of the whole country, and the Bishops of the South, the leaders of the work, will have the whole Church back of them. "A Record of Fifty Years", an interesting pamphlet showing the work of the School's graduates, has recently been published, and will be sent by the School to any one interested.

"Fall in! March!" Into Church They Went

BEING THE EXPERIENCE OF A BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW CAMP SECRETARY AT CAMP MORRISON, VIRGINIA

On the Sunday afternoon before Christmas two men were approaching the Immanuel Mission at Morrison, Virginia, adjacent to Camp Morrison. The first was a clergyman, the Rev. Henry G. Lane, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Newport News. Beside him walked William J. McConnell, Camp Secretary for the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Rev. Mr. Lane is a busy man. He has his own Parish to care for, and in addition spends many hours at the camp. Early every Sunday morning he goes to Camp Hill to conduct a service for the soldiers. Returning to the city, he officiates at the morning service in St. Paul's. Then, at 3:30 o'clock, he is again at Camp Morrison. The camp is a good eight miles north of Newport News.

McConnell, the Brotherhood Secretary, is of St. John's Parish, Cynwyd, Pa. He is a candidate for Holy Orders. In October he began his work at the Ambulance Corps camp in Allentown. Later he was transferred to Camp Devins, Ayer, Mass. He is giving six months to army work.

As the Rector and the Camp Secretary neared the Mission, they beheld a squad of soldiers approaching from the opposite direction. They were about to conduct a service in the Mission, and the Camp Secretary was to deliver the address. Naturally, he was interested in having a good congregation.

"Are they coming to the service?" he asked his companion.

"I believe so," the clergyman replied. "Some will attend. Perhaps all; I cannot say."

Whereupon Mr. McConnell decided to help things along a little. As the troopers came within hearing distance, he raised his voice and hailed them. "Just a moment, boys," he shouted. "We are about to commence our service. We would like to have you come in and join us."

The enlisted men hesitated. Some grinned. All looked toward their leader, a young lieutenant, who sized up the situation and acted with military precision.

And as the Clergyman and the Camp Secretary gazed on in astonistment, the column of men, marching by twos. filed into the little Chapel.

It was a strange and impressive sight on that cold December afternoon—the small country Church and the khaki-clad men filing in through the entrance, led by their lieutenant. The Sabbath quiet lay over the rural district, a vast expanse of fields and trees were in view, with here and there a country homestead. Beyond, lay the great camp.

Hurrying into the Chapel, the Rev. Mr. Lane and Mr. McConnell vested, and the service began.

But McConnell took the liberty of changing the text. Photographed indelibly upon his brain was the vision of that khaki file passing up the path into the Church; and as he opened the Bible to the 122nd Psalm, he read a verse which shall ever after have a new meaning to him.

Thirty privates and two lieutenants sat in the pews, with several civilians, men and women, in the rear of the Chapel. It was an appreciative congregation, and Mr. McConnell preached as he never preached before; for his text was: "I was glad when they said, We will go into the House of the Lord."

Just as the last fiscal year was closing and the final records were being made, a gentleman walked into the Treasurer's office and asked for a short extension of time for his particular Diocese which was still far short of meeting its apportionment for General Missions. The extension was granted. A few days later he returned with twenty thousand dollars in various bonds as security and asked that his Diocese be credited with having come that much nearer its apportionment.

Then he started out to collect his twenty thousand dollars. He believed in Missions seriously enough to give both time and effort to the work of helping others to recognize their responsibility. If unable to make others see their opportunity, he was willing to forfeit that portion of the securities equivalent to that part of twenty thousand dollars he was unable to collect.

Persistent Rector Wins Chance to Fight for His Country

After having been three times rejected for military service because of physical disability, the Rev. Louis A. Parker, Rector of St. Ambrose's Church, Chicago Heights, Ill., has resigned, says the Chicago Heights Signal, to join the forces of Uncle Sam in the war against autocracy. His resignation took effect on the Feast of the Epiphany.

"The Rev. Mr. Parker first sought to join the Officers' Training Camp last June. He was rejected. He appealed from the decision of the examining officers, was re-examined and again rejected. This Fall he made a third unsuccessful attempt. Determined to fight for his country, he for the fourth time made application for a post, either as a member of the Signal Corps or as a Chaplain, this time with a promise of success. The Rev. Mr. Parker came to Chicago Heights about four months ago. His painstaking application to duty and zealous endeavors soon made their force felt, and St. Ambrose's has steadily grown in numbers and strength under his guidance. His many friends in Chicago Heights regret his departure, but wish him Godspeed in his patriotic enterprise. He will be succeeded at St. Ambrose's by the Rev. George Dudley Barr, formerly Senior Curate at St. Peter's Church, Chicago."

How Chaplain Bartow Wins Men

The Rev. Arthur J. Gammack, who served for two months as a voluntary Chaplain at Camp Devans, in the course of an address given before the Episcopalian Club of Massachusetts, said: "Since I left that camp another man has taken my place—a man whose name I repeat with respect and affection. I refer to the Rev. Howard K. Bartow. He should have been here this evening. I said to him: 'Bartow, aren't you coming?' He said: 'No; I can't spare the time.' That man, fine in feeling, aristocratic even in his face, is living the life of the common soldiers. He stands in line with his aluminum plate and cup and receives his food in the common way. He is loyal in trying to help out the work of the Regimental Chaplains. He told me that he had spoken with at least a thousand men, and not one of those men had rebuffed him when speaking on the subject of religion." The Rev. Mr. Bartow is a Chaplain of the Y. M. C. A.

A New Rector for St. Luke's, Pawtucket, R. I.

A congregation that taxed the capacity of St. Luke's Church, on Weeden Street, Pawtucket, heard the new Rector, the Rev. Arthur J. Watson, deliver his first sermon. After declaring that "The best thing you can say about a man is that he is awake, awake to the best possibilities of life", he said in part:

"It was once believed that there were races of people without the instinct of worship, but as knowledge advanced that theory is abandoned. The Kaffirs of Africa, the Bushmen of Australia, the head-hunting Dyaks of Borneo, types of wildest men, all have been found to be the worshipers of something. Man will worship God, or gold, or a totem pole.

"It is just as natural for a man to worship his Creator as for a plant to grow towards the light. The spiritual organization of man contemplates worship, just as certainly as his physical organism contemplates exercise and his mental organism thought. There is also an instinctive sense of the beautiful, as of worship. Here, then, are two primitive impulses, that to represent the beautiful, which leads to art, and that to worship, which leads to God."

In conclusion, he said: "How many there are in every community without the gifts and graces which make men great, whose names are radiant with a glory that cannot die, because they learned the secret of soul-power, whose lives of self-denial prompted them to social service for the good of the race, to a love of the beautiful more than life."

The man who makes God and religion supreme finds that a spirit of harmony has descended on his life. Culture and conscience, home and business, joy and pain, love and sorrow, life and death, swing into line, find their place, and move forward to the life that is life indeed.—Alexander Connell.

A Large Gathering of Bishops and Clergy at Keokuk, Iowa, January 17

The Rev. Dr. John Charles Sage, Rector of St. John's Episcopal Church of Keokuk, Iowa, was consecrated Bishop of Salina, Kansas, in an impressive and beautiful ceremony held in historic St. John's on January 17, attended by Bishops and Clergy from many states in the west, and presided over by the Presiding Bishop of the Amerrican Episcopal Church, the Rev. Daniel Steele Tuttle of St. Louis. The Church was filled with members of St. John's Parish and friends of the Rector.

The service was solemn and impressive, and withal there was a beautiful touch of simplicity, the lack of any ostentation, or outward parade. The robes worn by the attending Bishops were simple, and yet in their colors furnished a gorgeous setting to the whole scene. The decorations on the Altar were simple, and above all was spread the American flag.

The service had a bit of sentimental history attached to it in the fact that in the presenting Bishops were two of the college mates, and old friends of Bishop Sage, and in fact all of the Bishops taking part were in some manner connected with the new Bishop and his work, in the years he has been in the Church. At the organ sat one of the new Bishop's choir boys in a former Parish, and in fact a member of his family, at Dubuque. Presiding over the service was a man who preached at the dedication of St. John's Church and one who has presided at more consecrations than any former Bishop.

THE PROCESSION

John W. Norton, assisting organist, played the processional and the procession entered the Church led by the Wardens, H. W. Upham and G. Collingwood Tucker. Following them came Jack Marsh, crucifer, and William Blondet, flag bearer. The choir followed and next in line was the crucifer. The visiting Clergymen were next and then followed the four readers of testimonials. Another crucifer followed them. The Rev. George Long, Rector of St. Paul's Church at Warsaw, and master of ceremonies, followed. Behind him walked Bishop Longley, Suffragan Bishop of Iowa. The Bishop elect, the Rev. Dr. John Charles Sage, followed, and the attending presbyters, the Rev. Dr. E. H. Rudd and the Rev. Charles J. Shutt. The presenting Bishops, Bishop Wise and Bishop Williams, came next, and following them were Bishop Sheldon M. Griswold of Chicago and Bishop Theodode Nevin Morrison of Iowa. The Presiding Bishop was preceded by his Chaplain.

The procession moved promptly at 10:30 o'clock and entered the Church from the Vestry, coming down the side aisles and up the center aisle to the Altar. The scene was one which made an indellible impression on the minds of those who were privileged to witness the ceremony.

Reaching the chancel, the choir seated themselves to the left, the visiting Clergy took seats to the right and the Bishops took their places within the Altar rail. Bishop Tuttle was the celebrant, Bishop Williams read the Epistle, and Bishop Morrison the Gospel. The sermon by Bishop Johnson appeared in last week's issue of THE WITNESS, except the brief personal charge to the Bishop elect.

The preacher spoke very feelingly of the preparation that had been made in past experiences. First, faithful in the family relationship, then faithful in the larger family of the Parish, now called to be faithful to the larger flock over which he was now to be the shepherd.

THE PRESENTATION

Attended by his presbyters, the Rev. Dr. E. H. Rudd and the Rev. Charles J. Shutt, Dr. Sage, Bishop elect, was presented to the Presiding Bishop and co-consecrators. The testimonials were presented by Bishop Longley, Rev. Arthur M. Lewis of Oskaloosa, Dr. Morrow of Oelwein, for the Clergy, and H. W. Upham for the laymen.

The constitutional declaration and the promise of conformity was then made:

"In the name of God, Amen. I, John Charles Sage, chosen Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Salina, Kansas, do promise conformity and obedience to the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America. So help me God, through Jesus Christ."

The litany was said by Bishop Williams of Nebraska, intoning the words and the congregation making the responses.

Only the Bishops, the members of Dr. Sage's family, the representatives of St. John's Church, Keokuk, and of the Cathedral in Salina communicated.

The offertory anthem was, "Send Out Thy Light and Thy Truth." The offering will be devoted to the work in the District of Salina.

The communion service closed by the singing of the hymn, "Breathe on me, Breath of God," the music of which was composed by Mr. Norton. There was a vested choir of fifty voices. The crucifer was a colored boy, York Anderson, from St. Mary's Mission.

The following are some of the gifts presented to the Bishop: Pectoral Cross, by Mr. and Mrs. Chas, Bradley of Dubuque; Bishop's ring, by Clergy of Iowa; handsome travell bag, by former parishoners of John's Church, Dubuque; Episco vestments, by St. John's Chu Keokuk; Rochet, by Bishop and M Williams of Nebraska; library ta by Mr. Francis P. Ellicott; Pers rug, by Mr. Wm. N. Sage.

THE LUNCHEON

The visiting Bishops, Clergy a Laity were entertained at lunch at the Tiffany Room in the Hotel Io as guests of the Parish. The aft dinner speeches were above the dinary and many gracious memo were revived.

THE RED CROSS WORK

Interminable folds of gauze
For those whom we shall never see,
Remember when your fingers pause,
That every drop of blood to stain
This whiteness falls for you and me.
Part of the price that keeps us free
To serve our own, that keeps us clean
From shame that other women know.
O saviors we have never seen,
Forgive us that we are so slow!
God—if that blood should cry in vain,
And we have let our moment go!
—Amelia Josephine Burr.

he has been called to a much larger field. We rejoice and congratulate him for having been chosen for this high honor, to become Bishop of Salina, Kansas, an honor that was beyond our power to bestow. Our sincere and earnest prayers are that he will meet with unbounded success in this larger field of labor, and the best wishes of St. John's Church and Parish will go with him, and that the Good Master will guard, guide and protect him and his family, and may Heaven's choicest blessings be showered upon him.

H. W. UPHAM,
Senior Warden.
G. COLLINGWOOD TUCKER,
Junior Warden.
JOSEPH J. AYRES,
JOHN W. MARSH.

Bishop Sage left in the evening for Salina, where he held his first service in the Cathedral on Sunday, Jan. 20. Bishop Griswold, formerly Bishop of this District, was present and introduced the new Bishop.

Deaconess Emma J. Smith, who has done such splendid work as Parish Visitor in St. John's Church and the Missions under the care of Dr. Sage during the past few years, will take work under the Bishop of Salina.

Bishop Jones on the Sick List

Bishop Jones, who lately tendered his resignation as Missionary Bishop of Utah, has been in a hospital for a few days, where examination showed symptoms of uremic poisoning. He has gone to Southern California where he hopes to convalesce. He is under the care of a specialist.

A Busy Layman

One of the busiest men in Church work in Rhode Island, says the Diocesan Record, is Mr. Charles A. Tompkins. Besides being actively engaged in his own business, he is Treasurer of the Diocese, Treasurer of the Providence Convocation, Treasurer of several Mission Parishes, a member of important Diocesan Committees, Vice-President of the Churchman's Club, Junior Warden of the Church of the Epiphany, Providence; and added to all this has lately become Superintendent of the Sunday School of the Church of the Epiphany, and in this latter capacity has brought new life into the School, and not only increased its membership, but has increased its efficiency. Somehow it is the busy man who always finds time and opportunity to do something else.

Men Pledged to Pray and Attend Church

Large numbers of men are reported to have signed the consecration cards sent out from the Central Office of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Philadelphia. The following is the pledge, printed on neat cards, under the caption: The United States of America—"In God We Trust";

Together with other men of the Church, in loyalty to the Nation, and in recognition of dependence upon Almighty God, I declare my intention to be:

While the War lasts to say the Lord's Prayer daily for the welfare of the country; and unless prevented by some unavoidable cause to attend Church every Sunday.

Signed .....

[OF YORK, ENGLAND, THE UNITED STATES]

was formerly Bishop of Spetney, and preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral in London. He became Archbishop of York in 1908.

While in this country, the Archbishop will visit Boston, Cleveland, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Baltimore and Washington, where he will preach on Easter Sunday.

The present plan is that the Archbishop will speak at the noonday services at Trinity Church in New York during all the week of his arrival.

Men Are Ignorant of the Bible

The Denver, Colorado, Times says that the Rt. Rev. Dr. Irving P. Johnson, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Colorado, fired the first gun in the campaign to increase the membership of the men's Bible Classes of Denver to 10,000 at a fellowship supper recently held at El Jebel Temple, that city, attended by over 1,000 workers. The Bishop flayed Church members for their ignorance of the Bible, stating that if a questionaire containing ten simple questions on the Bible were placed on the plate of each man attending the supper it was his opinion that a majority could not attain a grade of 25 per cent.

Must Not Slight Ordinary Duties

One of the necessities war lays upon us, says the Rev. Dr. D. C. White, of Ogdensburg, N. Y., is to do the extraordinary things without slighting the ordinary duties. Every form of charitable work, every phase of Church work must be supported as always and made as effective as possible. The orphan and the aged must not fear want, the Missionary must not see his work in danger of failing, because of the great, new obligations that we acknowledge and try to meet. The Church must be kept strong and efficient to do her part in this time of the Nation's need and to take the lead in the readjustments in our social and ethical life that peace will bring. To win the war and save freedom, we must stand ready to make every sacrifice. To make this world capable of appreciating the truest liberty and assimilating its blessings we must strengthen our philanthropic and religious forces. In the Parish this means continued work in Guilds and Societies, service in Choir and Sunday School, and faithfulness in attendance at the services, in prayer and in receiving the Holy Communion.

Statue of Edith Cavell Placed in Philadelphia Church

A statue of Edith Cavell, nurse of the English Red Cross, executed by Germany, has been placed in St. Mark's Church, Frankfort Avenue, Philadelphia. The statue was presented to the Church by Mr. Tomas Creighton as a memorial to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Creighton. Prototypes of Saints Hilda, Agnes, Mary Magdalene and Margaret, make up the group in the statue. The Rev. J. B. Harding is Rector of St. Mark's Church.

The Church Record and Minnesota Missionary, published in the interest of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Minnesota, began its 42nd volume with the January number. It is a splendid "record" both in point of age and usefulness.

Every-Day Religion

By Dr. James E. Freeman

THE FUTURE

"Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before."

It seems to us as we grow older that life is being "speeded up". When we were young we lived in the future. We were ever anticipating each new day. It was always—tomorrow. But as we grow older we think much of our yesterdays, and we open with some hesitancy and trepidation the door that leads into new futures and new experiences. And yet, in spite of all this, life would become prosaic and uninteresting if we lived only reminiscently in the things of the past, without ever so much as a forward look to the things of the future. It is only those who have been soured and embittered in their pilgrimage who thus regard coming days. They are ever turning over the dry leaves of other days. Of one thing we are certain, namely, that it is well to forget the misfortunes and disappointments and failures of the past, and to renew our hope and inspire our enthusiasm by looking forward to new adventures in the days that are before us.

Perhaps with less reluctance than usual we closed the chapter of 1917. For three consecutive years the world has been writing its history with a crimsoned pen, and while the record is full of splendid heroisms, fine consecrations and all that makes for a brave and chivalrous manhood, yet at the same time we are yearning for the day when men shall again resume their normal habits and when there shall be once more a united fellowship of nations.

In the face of all this, shall we stand timidly and haltingly at the threshold of the new year? Shall we carry over into the new period the liabilities and encumbrances of the past? In a word, has the world grown pessimistic and despondent? We cannot think so. It has grown grave and serious, and it is well that it is so, for it had become flippant and unconcerned about the deep things of life. But what of our own America? How bravely are we fronting the future? From every camp in this broad land the multitudinous voices of the thousands of our best boys send back the confident and splendid answer:

"We have never been so proud of our nation as we are today. We count it no sacrifice to serve her and humanity. Ours is all privilege, and we go forth as soldiers of freedom, consecrated to those high ideals our fathers gave us, and to extend their beneficent influence throughout the world, that life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness may be the precious boon and privilege of all men."

With Mr. Britling we can say, even now: "Our sons have shown us God."

But what of our future—those of us who must needs stay here and keep the home fires burning? Have we no high ideals to serve, no great objects to which to consecrate ourselves, no consciousness of the need of repentance for the sins of the past, no fine determination to do better in the things of the future? Shall we not here and now highly resolve, and with God's help keep it, that the year 1918, come what may, shall be one year of dedication? If we have been self-centered and self-interested hitherto, we are going to be world-interested and selfless in our service in the future. If we have been developing a kind of class consciousness, a sense of social superiority and insularity, God forgiving us, we shall do so no more. If we have never known what it was to live for others and to do for others because we have been so selfishly occupied in doing for ourselves, we are determined that henceforth we shall know the meaning of that Divine word, "He that loseth his life shall find it". If we have been intolerant in either our political or religious convictions, or if we have shown the stern face of the bigot to the world, we shall hereafter seek to soften these hard lines and to hold in affectionate esteem and honor those who differ from us. We believe profoundly that we are moving into the age not only of a larger liberty, but of a larger corporate consciousness and self-sacrificing service; yes, into an age in which the ideals of human brotherhood are to be realized as they have never been before. Can we not believe, in this great transition period, that it was for these ends that America was born? Surely God has some great purpose in directing the course of empire to this Western world, and it is now our privilege and distinction, with a whole-hearted, dispassionate and utterly unselfish service, to give to the

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew at Work

This is a stormy life—soldier's life—at Camp Cody, Deming, New Mexico. It illustrates what a God-fearing Camp Secretary of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew can accomplish.

The idea is not to boost the Camp Secretary. God forbid. But it will show other Camp Secretaries how a man can effectively preach the Gospel of Christian love by ministering to his fellow men.

The story, bye the bye, does not come from the Camp Secretary, but from the soldier who benefitted by his ministrations. That is what gives it value.

The soldier lay in the "Old Base Hospital," suffering from several broken ribs caused by the kick of a horse. He was a private in the 127th Field Artillery. It would not be fair, perhaps, to give the soldier's name, so we will call him Wayland.

When a man lies on a bed of pain in a hospital, he finds time to think. And he thinks seriously. He takes stock of things that he has ignored for years, perhaps for a life-time. He realizes, if he never realized it before, that he has an immortal soul, and the question naturally presents itself: "Suppose I should die; what of the hereafter?"

Moreover, he hungers for friendship, sympathy, and letters from home.

Wayland was in this state of mind when he met Hinton, the Camp Secretary,—Doyle E. Hinton, of St. Mary's Parish, Jacksonville, Fla., one of the best men in the camps.

When Hinton enters a hospital, he seems to bring sunshine with him. He warms right up to the poor fellows lying on the cots and is so willing and anxious to do little favors for them that they love him like a brother.

Perhaps Hinton's best asset is his cheerful disposition. He smiles when he talks to a man. O, the religion that lies in a smile. It penetrates all sorts of armor,—selfishness, suspicion, dissatisfaction, envy, malice; a smile melts them as sunlight melts snow.

Wayland watched Hinton as he passed from cot to cot. He noted the little attentions of the Camp Secretary and his eagerness to do something for the sufferers. Wayland had been a traveling salesman for 20 years, and he knew something about the right and wrong method of approaching men. Which led him to exclaim, as he watched Hinton: "That fellow is sure in the job."

Hinton stopped at Wayland's cot, and their friendship began. Gradually, the Camp Secretary learned the soldier's story. Wayland had been reared in a Christian home, but—well, it was the old story. He had drifted. Hinton asked him if he ever read the Bible, and Wayland looked into the smiling face. He admitted that he had not looked into a Bible for fifteen years.

"But you will now," suggeested the Camp Secretary. "Here, I will leave you one."

And he did.

Hinton passed on to another cot, and Wayland began to read the Old Book. It acted upon him like a tonic. Listen to his own testimony:

"I read three chapters in the New Testament and felt so strong that I got up for the first time in thirty-six days," he writes. And I walked around the room.

"I have been in the hospital 44 days now, and have read all the New Testament. It has a new meaning to me. "I am not ashamed to admit that I shed tears for Jesus when I read, in the latter part of John, of His farewell to his apostles. Those tears were from the depth of my heart."

This from a worldly traveling salesman, who, by his own testimony, had not looked into the Bible in fifteen years.

Wayland will leave the hospital within a few weeks. He will leave Camp Cody, cross the continent, and go "over there."

Perhaps he will return; perhaps not. But whatever happens, he is a changed man, and better equipped for that great journey into the Unknown, "that bourne from which no traveler returns," as Shakespeare says.

And that is something worth while.

Patriotism vs. Religion

If the Editor were not so sure of his own paeriotism, he might hesitate to emphasize the necessity of thinking clearly during these strenuous times, and of distinguishing between the eternal and the temporal. This war must be won. We must give, work, and be helpful and constructive. But it is after all an episode in the history of the world, and in God's great plan of redemptive civilization. When it is over, we will go back to our accustomed pursuits. Will we have found God in the midst of travail? Will the message of the Church have helped us to bear and forbear, to suffer and give things, dear to us, to others? Will sacred things be more precious to us? Will we have learned to pray and to seek guidance of God and companionship of Christ?

Will we have become patriotic in the deepest, truest sense? Will our country, its ideals and history of unselfishness be engraven on our hearts? Will we have learned to stand for and fight for the right, the noble and the unselfish in our political life?? Will we have realized the duty of being a part of the government—a working, co-operating part—in times of peace as well as war? That we can live for as well as die for our country?

If we will have gained these ideas and put them in their proper proportion, then we will have grown and conquered with our country's victory.

As an example of mixing the ideas of patriotism and religion, we quote from a speech of Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, M. D. D. Sc., President of the National Association of Florence Crittenden Homes: "Patriotism is the strongest incentive to right living there is. It is stronger than religion, stronger than advice of parents; it is the one power which is stronger than the sex appeal itself." Good oratory, but bad patriotism, and worse religion.

Co-operation of Church Organizations

By D. H. Moitoret

"New occasions teach new duties"; but they go farther than that. The new occasions which have grown out of the world-wide war have brought new opportunities of service, and new blessings of service. They have proven the value of co-operation and the wisdom of harmonious interlacing of all agencies organized to serve the men in the field, and to provide an efficient avenue of service for those whe remain at home.

The Department of Army and Navy Work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the United States has the most intimate association with enlisted men of any Church agency today. Every day scores of letters are mailed to soldiers and sailors, and each day brings back more replies. They are glad to be remembered, those boys in the far-off camps and training stations, and are delighted when a letter has found its way even across the seas to the other side. The Church is following them, and it gives them courage to know it.

Many of these letters from the field contain requests, ranging all the way from Bibles to cook books, French magazines and Sunday supplements. While the Brotherhood solicits these requests, it does not attempt to fill them directly; another agency is provided for that purpose, and almost every day requests of this nature are forwarded to the Church Periodical Club headquarters at New York City, where they are given prompt attention.

At the suggestion of this department, the Church Periodical Club has sent supplies of reading matter to various camp hospitals; it has entered subscriptions for magazines especially asked for by the boys, and it has supplied doctrinal pamphlets to men ready for Confirmation or Baptism. It has given such splendid co-operation all through the work that the Brotherhood is looking eagerly forward to a like relationship with all Church organizations doing war work under the steadying hands of the War Commission, whose members are doing yeoman service in supplementing and co-ordinating all branches of service.

With Septuagesima Sunday, we start another season in the Church year. We have been looking back to Christmas; we now look forward to Easter and to Lent, as preparation for ourselves knowing the power of His Resurrection. There is an intensity about the Church's message in Collect, Epistle and Gospel. "Many are called, but few chosen." Mere work does not count; only the spirit of the workman. We may "bear the burden and heat of the day", and even then lose out. Hence the necessity of definiteness of aim and complete self-mastery. The more that is realized, the greater our humility and the realization that after all we must throw ourselves on the mercy and goodness of God. The Old Testament lesson in the Prayer Book Lectionary are: Afternoon, Jer. ii:13 to end, rather too historical for general use, and placed by the New Lectionary in proper historical connection (first week in Lent), and morning, Jer. v:10-end Year I. as alternate for this Sunday, and also given Year II. in historical connection (Sexagesima week). The English and Canadian Lectionaries begin Genesis on this Sunday. The New Lectionary gives the story of Joseph as introduction to Lent in Year I., and for today Hezekiah's reformation. This is psychologically sound, since example is at least as inspiring as precept. It needs shortening, however. Perhaps xxix:1-11, xv:29. The second lesson is in keeping with the day: "What shall I do to gain eternal life?" and also leads up to the Gospel. Moreover, the idea of following Christ and of regeneration deepens the reformation thought of the first lesson.

The second lesson for the evening is keyed to the same earnestness of the other Scriptures. The question, more or less of a speculative character, "Lord, are there few that be saved"? is rebuked with the terrible exhortation, "Agonize to enter in the narrow door". After all is over, many will "seek" to enter, but no power is equal to prying open the door that yields only to faith and penitence.

The Old Testament selection is one of the most striking to be found in the Apochrypha, and is not included in the Prayer Book selections. The idea of passing through a straight entrance into true freedom, the very idea our Lord stresses, is illustrated by a narrow river emptying into the fullness of the sea, and by a narrow pathway leading into a city "full of all good things. "The conclusion (verse 28-29) is a prophecy of the death of the Messiah.

For week days the historical course is continued in the morning, and the Gospel according to St. Mark is begun. In the evening, selected passages from I. Corinthians are given, touching on true wisdom, necessity of the right use of the means of grace and of personal liberty, right relations to our fellow members of the Church, and the meaning of love, which is what the all-day laborers in the vineyard lacked.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

PRAYERS FOR THE PEACE AND UNITY OF THE CHURCH

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who saidst unto Thine Apostles, Peace, I leave with you, My Peace, I give unto you; Regard not our sins, but the faith of Thy Church, and grant her that peace and unity which is agreeable to Thy will, Who livest and reignest God for ever and ever. Amen.

O God of Peace, Who through Thy Son Jesus Christ didst set forth One Faith for the salvation of mankind; Send Thy grace and heavenly blessing upon all Christian people who are striving to draw nearer to Thee, and to each other, in the Unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace. Give us penitence for our divisions, wisdom to know Thy truth, courage to do Thy will, love which shall break down the barriers of pride and prejudice, and an unswerving loyalty to Thy Holy Name. Suffer us not to shrink from any endeavor, which is in accordance with Thy will, for the peace and unity of Thy Church. Give us boldness to seek only Thy glory and the advancement of Thy Kingdom. Unite us all in Thee as Thou, O Father, with Thy Son and the Holy Spirit, art One God, world without end. Amen.

O Lord Jesus Christ, look with pity, we beseech Thee, upon Thy Church weakened and hindered by differences and divisions; bless the effort to bring together in conference all who confess the faith of Thy Holy Name, Who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, God, for ever and ever. Amen.

POEMS Worth Preserving

LATIN PRAYER OF MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS

O Domine Deus!
Speravi in te;
O care mi Iesu!
Nunc libera me!
In dura catena,
In misera poena,
Desidero te;
Languendo, gemendo,
Et genuflectendo,
Adoro, imploro,
Ut liberes me!

My Lord and my God!
I have trusted in Thee;
Dear Jesu, my Saviour,
Now liberate me!
In prison walls dreary,
In punishment weary,
My soul longs for thee;
With groaning I languish,
And kneeling in anguish,
I adore, I implore,
That Thou liberate me.

INTRODUCTORY

My late friend and classmate, Bishop Frank Spaulding of Utah, had a quotation of which he was very fond:

"Life is conscious effort transforming itself into unconscious habit.'"

A little reflection will show how this applies to everything in life. Walking, playing the piano, your vices, your virtues come under this head. It applies also to the training of soldiers. An untrained soldier is not an asset, but a nuisance, on the field of battle.

What is needed at the time of Confirmation is not so much academic teaching as painstaking drill in the Prayer Book which is the Manual of Training.

The whole Christian body is sick because it is an untrained body and Confirmation is the opportunity for such training.

If you drill your candidates properly, you will have later on a congregation which can be inspired by preaching.

Never mind if the classes are small. See to it that they are well trained, and require of them certain things, without which they cannot be presented.

1st. A regular attendance at Church services during the period of preperation.

2nd. A regular habit of daily prayer in private.

3rd. Conscious study of the instruction and faithful attendance at the classes.

Unless candidates are willing to do this they should not be confirmed.

The probability is that you will begin your classes soon after the holidays, so this series of instructions is arranged in pamphlet form, and will be issued each week beginning with the new year, and covering a period of twenty lessons. They are so arranged that the first half of the lesson leaf is for the candidate to study, the second half to assist the Rector in the instruction.

IV

WHAT DO YOU OBEY?

Catechism—The Ten Commandments.

Prop. 1.

When we are asked to obey any one we want to know at once what right that person has to command us.

If it is a parent, or a teacher, or a policeman, who asks us to obey him, we are apt to do the thing that we are told, without any question, for usually the command is a reasonable one and the right to demand it an unquestioned one.

If it was not for this obedience children could not be trained, nor soldiers disciplined, nor cities governed, nor schools maintained.

So in any assembly of people if order is to be maintained there has to be a presiding officer whose rulings are observed.

More than this, we have, as American citizens, a constitution and laws to govern us. But we do not interpret these laws ourselves, but we have Courts in which judges tell us what the laws mean; and officers, such as sheriffs, to see that the laws are carried out; and other officers, such as Congressmen, who make such new laws as are needed.

We may not always like these laws, and sometimes their inforcement may mean a personal loss to us, but we obey courts, and sheriffs and legislators, because it is better that an individual should occasionally suffer loss than that the whole nation should be lawless.

Obedience, then, is something that we render to those who have the right to command.

Prop. 2.

In every institution there is a method by which authority is handed down from one age to another.

In a kingdom, it is by birth; the power succeeding to the king's eldest son.

In our republic, a President, after he is elected, receives his authority by the action of the Chief Justice of the United States, and he cannot act as President even if he has been elected, until he has been inaugurated.

In a lodge, each year new officers are elected, but, before they take their seats, they are inducted by the outgoing officers.

Now the Church which Christ founded is called both a kingdom and a brotherhood.

There is no question but that the Apostles governed the Church at first, and that they gave authority to others to carry on this government and that Christians obeyed them.

And there is no question but that they inducted such persons into office by a regular ceremony known as the laying on of hands.

And there is no question but that the Apostles intended that they in turn should pass on such authority by laying hands on others also. (For these facts read selections at the end of this lesson.)

Prop. 3.

Now then, what do we obey as Christians?

Well, there are some who will obey nobody but themselves. Of course you can have no kingdom or brotherhood if everyone insists on doing that which is right in his own eyes.

If we are to be everyone members one to another, we must defer to one another.

Even in playing baseball each one must do as the captain says, not as he prefers.

(a) But there are those who refuse to obey the government and want no laws, nor anyone over them. In the State we call these people anarchists. They will not have anyone rule over them.

So in the Church, there are those who claim to believe in Christ, but will not obey the Church that He founded.

(b) Then there are those who are willing to obey somebody, but differ as to whom they should obey.

Some of these obey a person known as the Pope, who is the Bishop of Rome, and whom they say is the infallible vicar of Christ. These are known as Roman Catholics.

Then there are others who obey some leader, such as John Wesley, Martin Luther, John Calvin, or rather, they are obedient to the organizations which these men founded. These are called by various names, such as Methodists, Lutherans, Presbyterians. (We will deal with both of these people in a subsequent lecture.)

Then there are those who used to be known as Churchmen, who believe in an historic Church, which through the laying on of hands has continued from the days of the Apostles, and who, therefore, represent the authority which the Apostles once had and which they passed on to others by the laying on of hands. The principle is the same as that if certain States should secede from the Union, you would follow the flag and that person whom you believed was the lawful President of the United States, even though you might like the other one who claimed to be President better than the one who seemed to you to be the one who had the lawful authority.

It is only in this way that the Union could be preserved against aggression.

QUESTIONS

1. What is obedience?
2. What is lawful authority?
3. Name some persons who have lawful authority over you and tell why?
4. What is the principle by which lawful authority is continued in various organizations?
5. How do different citizens regard the matter of obeying authority? What are they called?
6. What different authorities do Christian people recognize?
7. State the fundamental principle underlying the Church's position by comparison with that of the United States.

The Epistle to The Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

XXIII

Vs. 6. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.

Ellicott: Let no man deceive you. An emphatic warning against all who sought to deceive them as to the real nature of the sin condemned.

Grotius: No man. Reference to heathen philosophers and Jesus.

Olshausen: Reference to frivolous Christians.

Meier: Reference to teachers of Gentile tendencies.

Meyer: Their discourses were vain, empty, inasmuch as the corresponding contents, i. e., the truth was wanting in them.

Moule: Vain words. Human sin began with exactly such deceits, and they are the subtlest ingredients still in the secret of temptation.

Ellicott: The Apostle generally condemns all apologists for vice, whoever they may be. They would, of course, be most naturally found among the heathen, and to them the passage most naturally points. The palliation or tacit toleration of vice, especially sensuality, was one of the most fearful and repulsive features of heathenism.

Moule: Cometh. Is coming, is on the way, till in the Day of Wrath it falls.

Ellicott: The wrath of God. Certainly not to be restricted to this life, but, to be extended also and perhaps more especially to the judgments in the kingdom of Christ and God.

Meyer: Sons of disobedience; i. e., those refusing faith to the Gospel and therefore disobedient to God.

Vs. 7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them. The Apostle does not warn them only against being, but against becoming partakers with them, against allowing themselves to lapse into any of their prevailing sins and depravities.

Wordsworth: Partakers with. St. Paul had spoken of the practical duties consequent upon their communion with the Mystical Body of Christ, and he argues from the nature of that mystical union in the Body of Christ that they cannot have fellowship with works of darkness.

Vs. 8. For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; Walk as children of light.

Ellicott: Darkness. Not merely living or abiding in it, but themselves actual and veritable darkness.

Sadler: Light. This light is the light of God and of Christ. This darkness is the deprivation of such light in the soul. This light is never mere intellectual light, nor even mere knowldege of the higher things, such as the Trinity and the Incarnation. It is always moral light, which is essentially love. (St. Jno. ii:8-10-11.)

Wordsworth: Children of light. Made such by your batism which is a sacrament of invitation whereby we put on Christ.

Vs. 9. For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth.

Meyer: Fruit of the Spirit. The Spirit through whom God and Christ dwell in the heart, produces the light in the heart, so that the fruit of the Spirit is always the fruit of the light, and vice versa.

Moule: Goodness. All that is anti-vicious.

Sadler: Goodness; i. e., kindness, gentleness, benevolence, charity.

Righteousness. All holy and becoming outward demeanor, all honesty and integrity.

Sadler: Truth. All sincerity, all conformity to the truth of God as revealed in the Gospel.

Meyer: The whole Christian morality is presented under its three great aspects; the good, the right, the true.

Vs. 10. Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.

Wordsworth: Proving; i. e., making God's will your rule and His pleasure your touchstone, and enquiring in everything not what is pleasing to men, nor what is pleasing to yourselves, but what is well pleasing to God and act accordingly.

Eadie: The one point of the Christian's ethical investigation is "is it well pleasing to God?"

Vs. 11. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

Meyer: Unfruitful works. Unfruitfulinasmuch as they draw no blessing after them.

St. Jerome: Vices are terminated and perish in themselves, virtues continue and increase in their fruits.

Blunt: Reprove. This reproof includes detection, conviction and putting to shame.

Ellicott: Not by the passive, virtual reproof of your holy lives and conversation but by actual and oral reprobation.

Olshausen: Do not connive at them or pass them over unnoticed, but take aggressive measures against them, try to raise them to your own Christian standard.

Gore: In the light of your lives the secret shame of the heathen life will be unmasked.

Vs. 12. For it is a shame even to

Vs. 13. But all things that are reof them in secret.

Ellicott: These deeds done in secret were all those "peccata occulta" which presented the worst features of the genus and which from their nature and infamy shunned the light of day and of judgment.

Moule: Even to speak. Perhaps the suggestion here is, that the reproof of Vs. 11 was to come more through a holy life and less through condemnatory words.

Vs. 13. But all things that are reproved are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.

Ellicott: All things. Is not all things taken generally, but all things done in secret.

Wordsworth: Made manifest by the light. The sense of this passage seems to be; Your lot in this world is cast with evil men, but you are not to partake of the evil which they do. You are often associated with sinners but you are not to associate with them as sinners, nor in their sins. You are wheat with the tares in the field, but you are not to be as tares.

Chrysostom. While sin is hidden it works with boldness as in the dark, but when the sinner is brought forth from his hiding place and is reproached, and repents, and receives remission of sins he becomes light.

Barry: Here the whole process of illumination is described with almost scientific accuracy, as three-fold; First, the things or persons are dragged out of darkness into light; then they are illuminated; lastly, they become light in themselves and to others.

Southern Virginia Notes

The Virginia Episcopal School, located near Lynchburg, opened up for work after the Christmas vacation with 79 scholars present. Twenty-five applicants had to be declined on account of lack of room. Every nook and corner of the School is full, and the health and general condition of the scholars are excellent, all starting in with vigor and enthusiasm.. The new Chapel is well under way and will fill a great need for this School. It is of Colonial architecture, matching the present large building and fitting in with the general scheme of the plan. The Chapel will seat about 200.

The temporary gymnasium has been completed, and fills a great need at the School, especially during this prolonged bad weather. The boys spend much time in this building.

The new bridge spanning the ravine has been completed. This makes the approach to the School so much more delightful. Also the new athletic field is under construction.

Things are moving along splendidly at this institution, and all interested are greatly encouraged at its progress.

The Convocational Board of Religious Education met in Lynchburg on Friday, Jan. 11. The Rev. T. D. Lewis of Sweetbriar is Chairman and the Rev. T. Q. Opie of Pulaski is Secretary.

While the various branches of work were considered, the Board devoted most of the time to discussing arrangements for the next Summer School, to be held in Lynchburg in the month of June. The Lynchburg local committee are making preparations for this School, and together with this Board are making timely provision as to faculty and place of meeting, with the determination to make this the best of Summer Schools of Southwest Virginia.

Harrisburg Notes

The mid-Winter session of the Archdeaconry of Williamsport was held in Christ Church, Williamsport, Wednesday, Jan. 16. With few exceptions, all the clergy of the Archdeaconry were present, including the Bishop. The regular session was preceded by a layman's meeting, which was held in Trinity House. For years past this occasion has been attended by from 300 to 500 men. Owing to storm conditions and uncertainty of trains, the number this year was reduced to about 100. Splendid addresses were made by Mr. George E. Wendle, on "The Nation's Relations to Its Industries", and by Mr. Henry S. Knight, on "The Individual's Opportunity in the Economic Readjustment". "America, 1917", a hymn recommended by the Committee of Public Safety of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, was sung with a will, as was the "Battle Hymn of the Republic". The Bishop made the closing address, on "How to Win the Cross of Honor". St. Agnes Guild of Trinity Parish served refreshments.

The session of the Archdeaconry was chiefly characterized by an address made by the Chancellor of the Diocese, C. LaRue Munson, Esq., on "The Need of Men", and an address by Rev. F. M. C. Bedell of Shamokin, on "Securing Men for the Ministry".

The next session of the Archdeaconry will be held in Bellefonte, St. John's Church.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Archdeaconry met in Christ Church synchronously with the Archdeaconry. At the special election, Mrs. Stephen T. Hayt, Jr., was elected Vice President of the Arch-deaconal Branch. Deaconess Newbold, Missionary in Japan from this Diocese, made an address.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

The Ladies' Guild of St. John's Church, Broken Bow, Nebraska, have purchased $500.00 worth of Liberty Bonds.

A branch of the Girls' Friendly Society has been organized in St. Mark's Church, Warren, R. I., with a large membership, including a number of Baptist, Methodist and Roman Catholic girls.

The Clerical Club of the Diocese of Rhode Island unanimously passed a series of resolutions petitioning the Legislature of that State to ratify as soon as possible the National Prohibition amendment to the Constitution.

After muzzling the house dog, thieves broke in the garage of the Rev. J. E. Curzon, Rector of St. John's Church, Fort Smith, Ark., and stole his automobile, but abandoned the car two blocks from the Rectory.

An oil portrait of Bishop Whipple is to be placed in the art gallery of the Historical Society of Minnesota at St. Paul. A fund for the purpose is being completed by proceeds from the sale of the Rev. Dr. Tanner's "History of the Church in Minnesota."

Pew rents have been abolished by St. Stephen's Church, Colorado Springs, Col. It was estimated that the sum of $8,720 would be needed to support the Parish under the free pew system and this amount has been oversubscribed by the parishioners, $9,000 having been subscribed for the 1918 budget.

The following is a quotation from a letter received by the Rev. Charles H. Young, M. A., Rector of Christ Church, Chicago, from a young man on the honor roll of Christ Church in war service: "As you probably know, camp life isn't all gravy, and I believe that every young man is made to realize that there is good in him and is awakened to the fact that life now is a serious matter. It has been so with me, and I intend living my best and to do all the good I can."

It is our intention, says the Rev. David B. Matthew's, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Brockton, Mass., to publish in our Parish paper the names of the Vestrymen present and absent at our Vestry meetings each month, because we believe the whole Parish should know, inasmuch as these officers are elected by the parishioners to represent them and transact the business of the Parish. We have always taught the open-book policy and this is but an extension of that plan.

"No one can dream that we will come out of this war where we went in," asserts the Rev. Dr. Ryan, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn. "There are already social and economic changes that portend much. The aim is that righteousness may be done. The war opens the door for vast evils, like an epidemic of the social plague. But it also drives us along a higher way than we have ever taken in our whole past. Pagan religions have had their day in the past centuries, Judaism and Christianity have their greatest day to come. The golden age of our religion is yet to be, and it is full of promise."

"The Diocese of Newark, New Jersey," says the News of that city, "holds fourth place among Episcopal Dioceses of the country for baptisms and confirmations recorded during the year just ended, fifth place in number of Sunday School pupils and amount of offerings, and sixth place in the number of communicants, according to the Church statistics just compiled. Totals for the year were as follows: Baptisms, 2,742; confirmations, 2,388; communicants, 41,437; Sunday School pupils, 21,135, and offerings, $937,382."

A second Festival of Light, a modernization of an old English custom, was celebrated on the evening of the Feast of the Epiphany at Calvary Church, Pittsburg, Pa. The members of the congregation took part in the procession around the Church, carrying lighted candles and singing "Light of Light that Shineth," and "Joy to the World, the Lord has Come." The Rector, the Rev. Dr. E. J. Van Etten, told in his sermon the story of the symbolism of the candle.

The Executive Committee of the Girls' Friendly Society, in the Diocese of Western New York, announced that they would be glad to see the members and friends of the Society at 3 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 23, 1918, at Mrs. Matthews' home, Rochester, to mark the twenty- fifth anniversary of the Diocesan organization. Gifts were requested for the support of the Diocesan Holiday House.

The Church of the Holy Apostles, Chicago's youngest Parish, is to have as its first Rector the Rev. Edward S. White, beginning Feb. 1. His first service will be the Holy Communion at 7:30 a. m. on Feb. 3. He hopes to have every communicant present at that service. A reception will be tendered to the Rev. and Mrs. White and the Rev. and Mrs. Potter at Kimball Hall on Feb. 7, at 8 p. m. Bishop Griswold will be present and quite likely Bishop Anderson. The Men's Club will give a dinner at the Church rooms on Feb. 12 in honor of Mr. White and Mr. Potter.

A Junior Clergymen's Association was organized last Monday by the younger clergy of Columbus, Ohio and vicinity for the purpose of social intercourse and the discussion of problems of work and study. It was determined that all meetings of the Association should be as informal as possible, formal papers on any subject being barred. The meetings will be held once a month at the homes of the members in town, and a special theme will be announced for discussion at each meeting. The informality of the organization was further emphasized by the fact that but one office was thought to be needful—that of Secretary. The Rev. P. W. Hull was unanimously elected to fill that office.

Mrs. Frank W. Darling, leader of St. John's Church Bible Class, Hampton, Va., says: "I was much interested in your Anniversary Number, and it is very nice to get acquainted with the personnel of THE WITNESS. I will see what I can do about getting some subscribers, although we are living in strenuous times, and war soldiers are are overwhelming thought. We made 1,550 novel candy bags and a khaki handkerchief for the soldiers at Old Point and Longley Fields. About fifty people visited the camps with the Chaplain, Major Pruden. We had a short service, consisting of Christmas carols, followed by a Christmas talk by one of our local clergymen, and then presented the bags of candy to the soldiers, with a sprig of holly. We have been visiting these camps every week and giving an entertainment for the men. Chaplain Pruden has been doing a wonderful work at Old Point, and has equipped six recreation rooms with writing rooms, library, pianos and victrolas. We also visited the officers and prisoners at Christmas time. At the suggestion of the Rector, the Rev. Dr. Edwin R. Carter, the men at Langley Field, the large aviation experimental station, were invited to be the guests of the Parish. Carols were sung around the Community Christmas tree, a beautiful magnolia tree, in the Churchyard, then all repaired to the Parish House, where a short program was rendered, the Rector giving a very happily worded address, and each soldier received a toy and candy bag from the tree. The officers and men entered into the spirit of the occasion, and a pleasant evening was spent. Coffee, chocolate, nut bread and as much cake as the scarcity of sugar would allow was served, and in this way a little Christmas cheer was brought to about 150 men who were away from home and friends."

The Rev. Julian D. Hamlin, Rector of Trinity Church, Bethlehem, Pa., has resigned his charge, and has been appointed by the Bishop of Pennsylvania to Army work at Camp Meade, Md.

Christ Church, Raleigh, N. C., the Rev. Milton A. Barber Rector, is considered one of the finest specimens of pure Gothic architecture in the South, and one of the most beautiful Church buildings of our communion in this country. It has just received the gift of a magnificent new organ. It is a memorial to the late Major Rufus Tucker and his wife, and was given by their children. It was specially designed to conform with the architecture of the Church. There is an echo organ in the gallery, connected with the main organ. It has three manuals, and was built by the Hall Organ Co., New Haven, Conn. It was dedicated by the Bishop of the Diocese on the second Sunday after the Epiphany. The use of the Duplex Envelopes in the Parish has greatly increased the contributions for local support and for the Missionary work of the Church. In 1917 the Missionary Treasurer had, we think, an unique experience. He received for Church extension more than was subscribed. Evidently some who did not pledge anything for Missions contributed to Missions through the Missionary end of the envelope. Many must have done so, for the Treasurer received $200 from those who had made no definite pledge for Missions. The use of the Duplex Envelope for parochial support was a constant reminder to them of their obligation to the Missionary work of the Church. They were not willing to put in their envelope Sunday after Sunday with the Missionary end of it empty. There was a silent appeal to their conscience through the Duplex Envelope to stand by the Church's Missionary obligation. This experience in one Parish is worthy of mention, and is a good argument for the adoption of the Duplex Envelope.

Personal Mention

Bishop Tucker has designated two of the Diocesan clergymen to serve as voluntary Chaplains, one at Camp Lee and the other at Hampton and Newport News.

The Rev. T. Carter Page of Bedford volunteered for work in the Army Y. M. C. A., but it is not certain that proper arrangements can be made for this move.

Rev. D. LeB. Goodwin has resigned St. Paul's Church, La Porte, Ind., and becomes Rector of St. Peter's Church, Lakewood, Ohio.

The Rev. Levi B. Edwards, Rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, Edgewood, R. I., is the Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Royal Arch Masons of the State of Rhode Island.

The Rev. Robert Emmet Abraham has entered upon his new duties as Rector of St. Peter's Church, Paris, Kentucky. He was formerly Rector of Holy Cross Church, Brookly, N. Y.

The new Rector of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Des Moines, Iowa, was tendered a dinner at Younker's Tea Room, that city, on Friday, January 11th, by the Parish.

Dean S. B. Purves of St. Paul's Cathedral, Cincinnati, Ohio, is devoting his Tuesday evenings to the soldier boys at Ft. Thomas, Ky., where every week he addresses upwards of 2,000 of them in the Y. M. C. A. hut.

The Rev. B. R. Allabough, the General Missionary in the Mid-West to deaf mutes, is very happy in the use of a new typewriter given him as a Christmas present by the deaf mutes of the various Missions in his vast field.

The Rev. Dr. John D. Kennedy, for seventeen years Rector of St. Mark's Church, for some years on the Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has resigned, his resignation taking effect early in this month. It is understood that he has made no plans for the future.

The Rev. Richard Cox will be glad if any clergyman or others who know of any student attending the State Agricultural College, Manhattan, Kan., will kindly notify him. For the present his address will be Care of Mrs. Porter, 822 Houston Street, Manhattan, Kansas."

The Very. Rev. J. H. Randolph Ray was installed as Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Texas, on January 6th, by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Harry T. Moore, Bishop Coadjutor, who also preached the sermon. The venerable and beloved Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Garrett, was present and participated in the service.

The Choirmaster and Choir of Trinity Church, Columbus, Ohio, sent a Christmas Greeting to Dr. Washington Gladden, the well known Congregationalist, whose Church is near Trinity. From his sick room Dr. Gladden sent the following reply: "Dr. Gladden wishes to express, through Mr. Hoenig, his very keen appreciation of the good wishes sent him by Choir and Choirmaster of Trinity Church. He sends to every one of them his heartiest holiday greetings, and wishes that he were able to hear for himself some of the lovely music they are giving to others this year. To each of them a very Happy New Year."

Should Priests Enlist?

By William B. Kinkaid, Los Angeles.

As I walked about the camp and saw the men at their various activities, naturally my thoughts turned again to the thing which I had been trying to get straightened out in my mind. If it was true, as I had become convinced that it was, If it was true that the struggle for which these men were preparing themselves was not merely against human and material foes but also, and much more, against supernatural and spiritual foes, against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places, against the combined forces of evil, the devil and all his hosts—if it was true that the fight was a fight for God and against His enemies, then was it not the duty of every man to be in it? And ought not the Priest be there, standing at the side of the layman, sending shot for shot into the enemies of God? At first the answer seemed, "Yes;" but afterwards I found it was not so.

I reminded myself that we are not the only ones who think (or at least say) that we are fighting on the Lord's side. "Gott mit uns" was not made in America. Our enemies pretend to be firmly convinced that God is on their side. And what is the proof that we have that this is not so? What is it but the weapons they have used? If their cause were just, how could it be that the unspeakable atrocities which have been charged and proved against them could have been perpetrated? An isolated instance here and there might have been explained as a misunderstanding of orders or the act of an unruly mob of drink-maddened and blood-lustful soldiers; but there is no such explanation of what is so evidently a settled course of action and well-defined policy; and we are forced to conclude that the pretense of thinking God on their side is the sheerest hypocrisy. Then if we are sure that our enemies are wrong and we are right, we must be careful to see to it that we do not make the same mistake that they have made. The nation which fights on God's side must fight with spiritual weapons as well as with gun and bayonet. Our soldiers must be Christian soldiers, filled with the conviction that the cause for which they are fighting is the cause of God and humanity, and they must learn to depend as much—and more—on prayer and the help of God as they do on the weapons He puts into their hands and the strength He gives to wield them. If they depend entirely on their own arm and the might of their power to get them the victory, they will lower themselves to the level of their enemies, and unless they are saved by the inhibitions imposed on them by their better civilization will descend eventually to the same horrible practices as theirs. But if they will use spiritual weapons as well as material and will keep themselves in such condition that God can use them, then there will be no doubt that they will have victory and triumph as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

But if the war is God's war against the forces of evil, how does it differ from the struggle which is constantly going on and to fight in which all Christians are sworn at their baptism? It is simply an episode in that war—perhaps it is the last desperate effort of the devil to win the victory in his hopeless fight. It is a part of the struggle in which we have all promised manfully to fight against sin, the world, and the devil.

And so I came to the reason why it would be unlawful for me to take a place in the ranks of those who will fight in the trenches. It is because I am already engaged in the same warfare as that in which they are going to take their part, and I have been given a special work to do, and to desert my post, or at least to resign my commission in order to engage in another branch of the service would be an act of disloyalty to my order and an evidence of lack of appreciation of the relative value of things. Despite my own unworthiness (which is overpowering) and my lack of training (which is colossal) it has been permitted me to be admitted to the rank of officer in the army of God, and I must be faithful to the work which has been committed to me and not be misled into forsaking the higher to engage in the lower. For my work as a Priest in the Church of God is the great and high work of assisting in the training of officers and men to serve in the army of the living God, in whatsoever capacity they may be called to give their aid. I have been granted the privilege of taking the charge of a training camp—a training camp for Christian soldiers.

I said a little while ago that I believe the present world war would have been impossible if all Christians had been true to their profession. If every man and woman and child enlisted under the banner of the Captain of our salvation had consistently and faithfully done their duty and remembered that they were really soldiers, the world long ago would have been won for Christ, and His ideals and purposes would have been realized, and the Prince of Peace would be reigning in this world which is now suffering the agonies of universal war.

And is it not true that we Priests are largely to blame for the failure of Christianity and the Christian Church to accomplish in these nineteen centuries the work for which it was intended by its Founder? Is it not because we have forgotten that it is a real war in which we are engaged, or because we have neglected our duty to train the soldiers, or because we have not realized that we had at our hand all the armour and all the weapons necessary for the successful prosecution of the campaign? I want to ask you to bear with me while I try to work out some of the analogies between earthly warfare and the spiritual warfare of which it is a part and for which we have been appointed officers.

First, as to our enemy; we must, if we are to fight with knowledge as well as zeal, know something about him and his methods. And we do, from revelation, from our own experience, and from the experience of others who have come into contact with him. There are many ways in which he resembles our arch-enemy in the present war. His purpose, like that of the bloody William, is to win the world for himself, and in spite of discouragements and defeats, he seems incapable of being taught that ultimate victory is impossible and ultimate defeat certain, however long it may be delayed. He has his emissaries and his spies in the places where we would least expect to find them; sometimes those in high places in the opposing army seem, temporarily at least, to be misled into thinking they are serving their Captain when in reality they are playing into the hands of the enemy. And the frightfulness which is the characteristic of the Prussian is also a characteristic of his master; who that has had any experience with the souls of those who have been captured and taken prisoner by him does not recognize the truth of this? The maimed bodies, the disordered minds, the wrecked souls, have each their counterpart; and in the way where he has gone there is nothing but suffering, disease and death. And he is marvellously efficient; he has had ages of experience in the prosecution of his work, he has trained his assistants and has imparted to them a zeal which is seldom equaled by those of the other side—would God it were! And he seems indefatigable, always alert, not waiting for his opponents to attack him, but always himself leading the offensive, as a roaring lion walking about, seeking whom he may devour.

If this enemy of God and man should be successful, the result for the souls of men would be of the same character as that which would ensue for the world in the event of the success of his representative in Europe. All that is worth while in life would be lost; all the ideals which we have come to cherish would be shattered; there would be no freedom and no safety for anyone on earth, and no chance for salvation hereafter.

IN MEMORIAM

VENERABLE CHARLES J. SNIFFEN
Archdeacon of Western Massachussetts

The Venerable Charles J. Sniffen, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Western Massachussetts, died in the Rectory of St. James' Church, Greenfield, Massachussetts, Saturday morning, January 5th. He left his home in South Lee late Friday afternoon, planning to spend the night with the Rev. John B. Whiteman, Rector of St. James', Greenfield, so as to be on time for a funeral of one of the men of his Mission work. Due to the fearful night he did not arrive in Greenfield until midnight, when he put up at an hotel. Early the next morning he called at the Rectory and had but entered the house when he dropped dead.

In the death of Archdeacon Sniffen, the Diocese of Western Massachussetts has received a fearful blow. For fifteen years he has conducted a Missionary work throughout the Diocese that was unique. By personal labor he won the hearts and confidence of thousands of homes throughout the Berkshires and the isolated parts of the Diocese. He was loved by the Clergy and laity throughout the whole Diocese. The splendid Parish of South Barre is but one monument of his work. The beautifully appointed Church with valuable land and an excellent living for the Clergyman is but the result of his genius. Through the hard labors of the Archdeacon from very little beginnings, this work grew into the splendid Parish it is at present, and never has it cost the Diocese a cent.

The morning of the funeral the Celebration of the Holy Communion was held in South Lee, the home of the Archdeacon, the Rev. Willis B. Hawk, Rector of Trinity Church, Milford, celebrant. The body was then taken to St. Paul's Church, Stockbridge, and laid in state from ten o'clock until two o'clock. The burial service was read by the Bishop Coadjutor of Missouri, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Frederick F. Johnson, assisted by the Rev. Arthur J. Gammack, Rector of Christ Church, Fitchburg, and the Rev. George Grenville Merrill, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Stockbridge. Bishop Johnson, a life long friend, worked his way from St. Louis through and around the blizzard and arrived in time for the service. About thirty of the Clergy of the Diocese were present at the service.

The order of procession was, Crucifer, Boys of Ascension Farm School (which was founded by Archdeacon Sniffen), the honorary pall bearers, members of the Standing Committee, the Vestry of St. Paul's, Clergy, Crucifer, officiating Clergy, and the Bishop. After the service the procession formed back of the hearse and went to the station. Burial was at Stratford, Connecticut, Wednesday, the Bishop Suffragan of Connecticut and the Bishop Coadjutor of Missouri officiating.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Resolutions of the Wardens and Vestry of the Parish of St. Paul (St. Paul's Church, Stockbridge, and Chapel of the Good Shepherd, South Lee):

We desire to express our deep sense of the personal loss sustained by the death, on January 5, 1918, of the Venerable Charles J. Sniffen, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Western Massachussetts, the following expression of esteem and affection to be spread upon the minutes of the Vestry and a copy thereof to be forwarded to the bereaved family and to the Church papers.

"Whereas, Our Heavenly Father has willed to take unto Himself the Rev. Charles J. Sniffen, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Western Massachussetts, and some time Curate of the Parish of St. Paul;

"Therefore be it Resolved, That in his death we have sustained the loss of a fearless Churchman, a devout Christian, the defender and protector of his scattered flock, an indefatigible worker, instant in season, out of season, in journeyings often, in perils of the wilderness, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in fastings often, beside those things that are without that came upon him daily, the care of all the Churches. Of splendid courage, of absolute consecration, of childlike faith, our beloved Archdeacon indeared himself not alone to our own community, but throughout this Diocese. He was the Good Shepherd of the Hills, Faithful unto death he was ready to be offered; He did the work of an evangelist and made full proof of his ministry; he fought a good fight; he finished his course; he kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for him a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give him at that day."

TRIBUTE BY THE CLERGY OF THE DIOCESE

We, the Clergymen of the Diocese of Western Massachussetts, assembled on the occasion of the funeral services of the Venerable Charles J. Sniffen, take this opportunity to place on record our high appreciation of our brother as a friend and a man of God.

St. Faith's House at Heath and the Ascension Farm School at South Lee owe their origin to him and memorials of his work are to be found throughout the Diocese in Churches built and in Missions begun and organized. We feel that within the Diocese no work in recent years has equalled his in evangelical effectiveness. His Ministry was chiefly among those in remote and desolate regions, to whom he brought the messages and services of the Church, and who, except for his consecrated efforts, would have been untouched by our Church or any other. Wanderers were reclaimed, homes were made happy and communities were blessed by his words, his example, his presence and his helpful ministrations. The Missionary methods which he devised and followed, with conspicuous success, gave distinction to the Diocese and were adopted by Missionary leaders elsewhere.

Our brother had a peculiar genius for friendship, always a welcome visitor in our Rectories, he formed a bond between our scattered homes, to which he brought courage and sympathetic understanding. Gifted with a keen sense of humor, and an understanding of human nature, he was always loyal to his associates, by whom he was greatly beloved. It was due to personal devotion to him as much as to confidence in his judgment that he was repeatedly elected as clerical deputy to the General Convention and led the clerical delegation from this Diocese.

With the Heavenly Father Whom he served with a pure heart and utter devotion, we leave our friend and fellow-priest. To his widow we extend a sympathy made keen by the sense of our bereavement. His memory we will cherish, and his life and example will continue to stimulate and encourage us throughout our Ministry.

MR. SOLOMON COLDREN

Entered into Eternal Rest, at Pasadena, Cal., December 9th, 1917, Mr. Solomon Coldren, of Iowa City, Iowa, aged 86 years.

He was a communicant of Trinity Episcopal Church, Iowa City, Iowa, from early manhood, and an honored, active member of the Vestry more than two score years. He was many years the Senior Warden, until length of days and uncertain health impelled him to entreat the people to relieve him. They reluctantly yielded to his wishes, for he had discharged the obligations of the office with unwearied devotion and continued efficiency.

He was a native of Pennslyvania, of an old and honored family, but, in early life, he went West, and located in Iowa City. He entered at once, and earnestly, into the civil and religious life of the community, and became a successful merchant. He won his justly honorable position by untiring faithfulness, unfailing courtesy, and by fair dealing and integrity.

Sincerely esteemed and honored by his friends and fellow citizens, in Iowa and elsewhere, and after serving his generation, according to the will of God, and in the confidence of a sure faith; in the comfort of a reasonable, religious, and holy hope; in favor with God, and in perfect charity with the world, he has entered into the larger life of the eternal world. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

W. D. W.

Miss Nancy A. Green, who was one of the oldest communicants of Grace Church, Providence, R. I., died December 29th, in the eighty-sixth year of her age. She had been Treasurer of St. Elizabeth's Home for almost the entire thirty-six years of its existence, and it is doubtful, says the Diocesan Record, if there is another case in the American Church of a woman of her advanced years who administered such extensive corporation funds.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING OF THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

A Full Report of Action Taken

The whole Church is watching with keen expectancy the work of the Church Pension Fund, knowing how much its care and distribution of the funds so generously contributed will affect the future of the Episcopal Church. THE WITNESS, with a desire to give as much publicity as possible to the action of the Trustees at a very important meeting recently held in New York, gives a report of that meeting in full. We publish it with the urgent request that our readers carefully consider it, as this initial action will determine in a large measure the future usefulness of this Fund.

The first Annual Meeting of the Trustees of the Church Pension Fund took place, in accordance with the rules, and in accordance with notices sent to the Trustees by the President of the Fund, at the offices of the Fund, 14 Wall Street, New York City, on Tuesday, December 18, 1917, there being present the Rt. Rev. the Bishop of Massachusetts, the Rt. Rev. the Bishop of New York, the Rt. Rev. the Bishop of Pennsylvania, the Rev. Dr. McIlvaine, the Rev. Dr. Stires, Mr. Mather, Mr. J. P. Morgan, Mr. William Fellowes Morgan, Mr. Peabody, Mr. Sayre, Mr. Truesdale and Mr. Yarnall.

The Chair laid before the Trustees a report from the Executive Committee, as follows:

Resolved, That the assets of the Church Pension Fund shall, until otherwise ordered by the Board of Trustees or the Executive Committee, be distributed among the following eight accounts, namely: (1) Accrued Pension Liabilities Account; (2) Permanent Pension Account; (3) General Clergy Relief Fund Account; (4) General Clergy Relief Fund in Liquidation; (5) Merged Diocesan Funds Account; (6) General Convention of 1907 Account; (7) General Account; (8) Hymnal Account.

These accounts shall, until otherwise ordered by the Board of Trustees or the Executive Committee, be constituted as follows:

1. The Accrued Pension Liabilities Account shall consist of all assessments received, in accordance with the rules, on behalf of clergymen whose names stood on the canonical roll of this Church on March 1, 1917, and of payments and subscriptions to the Initial Reserve to the amount of $5,064,000, as of March 1, 1917. From this account shall be paid the pensions voted by the Executive Committee to those clergymen whose names stood upon the eligible list on March 1, 1917, and to their families.

2. The Permanent Pension Account shall consist of all assessments received, in accordance with the rules, on behalf of clergymen whose names shall have been added to the canonical roll of this Church subsequent to February 28, 1917. From this account shall be paid the pensions voted by the Executive Committee to these clergymen and to their families. The Treasurer is authorized to borrow, if necessary, on behalf of this account from the Accrued Pension Liabilities Account (1), or the General Account (7).

3. The General Clergy Relief Fund Account shall consist of the moneys and securities transferred from the General Clergy Relief Fund to the Church Pension Fund, under the agreement of merger approved April 13, 1917, the income of which is unencumbered, and as to which the Church Pension Fund is not limited or prescribed as to the expenditure thereof beyond the general purposes of the General Clergy Relief Fund; and of legacies made in the name of the General Clergy Relief Fund under will executed prior to April 13, 1917. The income of this account shall be used in making payments to beneficiaries who stood upon the roll of the General Clergy Relief Fund at the date of the merger, and when, by the death of these beneficiaries, the income is released, it shall be paid to the General Account (7) until the expenditures made out of the General Clergy Relief Fund in liquidation (4) shall have been reimbursed. Thereafter the income of the General Clergy Relief Fund Account shall be held subject to the directions of the Board of Trustees or the Executive Committee in furtherance of the objects for which the Church Pension Fund was created by the General Convention, and according to the intent of the donors of the moneys in the said General Clergy Relief Fund Account (3).

4. The General Church Pension Fund on account of the General Clergy Relief Fund in liquidation shall consist, for the time being, of payments and subscriptions to the Initial Reserve to the amount of two million dollars ($2,000,000). In so far as may be necessary by the inadequacy of the income of the General Clergy Relief Fund Account (3), payments shall be made from this account to the beneficiaries of the General Clergy Relief Fund who stood upon the roll of that Fund at the date of its merger with the Church Pension Fund and to their families, in accordance with the Board of Trustees or the Executive Committee. The Treasurer is authorized from time to time to make such transfers from the General Clergy Relief Fund in liquidation (4) to the General Account (7) as may be possible through the progress of the liquidation of the liabilities of the former General Clergy Relief Fund.

5. The Church Pension Fund on account of merged Diocesan Funds shall consist, for the time being, of payments and subscriptions to the Initial Reserve to the amount of one million dollars ($1,000,000). In so far as may be necessary by the inadequacy of a merged Diocesan Fund, payments shall be made from this account to the beneficiaries of merged Diocesan Funds, in accordance with the directions of the Board of Trustees or the Executive Committee. The Treasurer is authorized from time to time to make such transfers from the Merged Diocesan Funds Account (5) to the General Account (7) as may be possible through the progress of the liquidation of the liabilities of the Merged Diocesan Funds.

6. The General Convention of 1907 account shall consist of the moneys and securities collected by the Commission appointed by the General Convention of 1907 and transferred to the Church Pension Fund under the resolution of the General Convention of 1913 and the Canon of the General Convention of 1916.

7. The General Account shall consist of the following: Legacies to the Church Pension Fund; the income of the General Clergy Relief Fund Account (3), after disbursements to the beneficiaries of the General Clergy Relief Fund are no longer necessary, until the payments made out of the General Clergy Relief Fund in liquidation (4) shall have been reimbursed; the income of the Diocesan Funds merged with the Church Pension Fund until in the case of each Diocesan Fund the expenditures made on its behalf out of the Merged Diocesan Funds Account (5) shall have been reimbursed; all moneys and subscriptions to the Initial Reserve not distributed in other accounts; moneys held by the Church Pension Fund, pending the determination of their proper use. The income of this account shall be disbursed in accordance with the rules formulated by the Board of Trustees or the Executive Committee in furtherance of the objects for which the Church Pension Fund was created by the General Convention. From the income of this account shall be paid the grants to beneficiaries of Diocesan Funds with which the Church Pension Fund is under contract in pursuance of agreements entered into before March 1, 1917. The Treasurer is authorized to make from time to time such transfers from the income of this account to the income of the Accrued Pension Liabilities Account (1) as may be necessary to provide for additions to the Eligible List authorized after March 1, 1917. The Treasurer is authorized to make such transfers from the General Account (7) to the Merged Diocesan Funds Account (5) as may be necessary to carry into operation mergers with Diocesan Funds entered into by specific resolutions of the Board of Trustees or the Executive Committee, for which the present appropriation to the Merged Diocesan Funds Account (5) is insufficient.

8. The Hymnal Account shall consist of moneys specifically received by the Church Pension Fund for the purpose of the Hymnal. The Treasurer is authorized to transfer moneys and securieies in this account to the Church Hymnal Corporation, when the said Corporation shall have been organized and be ready to begin operations.

The Treasurer shall also be authorized, from time to time, to create separate accounts on behalf of the Diocesan Funds merged with the Church Pension Fund.

All of the moneys and securities of the Church Pension Fund, with the exceptions hereinafter specified, shall be deposited with the Assistant Treasurer in one account, entitled "The Church Pension Fund", but the records of the Church Pension Fund shall show the distribution of money and securities in this account to the counts in accordance with this resolution. All records shall show from which account the payments are made, and all resolutions appropriating money shall specify from which account said appropriation shall be paid.

The securities held in the General Clergy Relief Fund Account (3), and any investments made from the money of the said account, or any reinvestments made, shall be kept by the Assistant Treasurer separately for the benefit of the said account.

The securities received in accordance with any merger with a Diocesan Fund, or any investments made from money received in accordance with such merger, or reinvestments made, shall be kept by the Assistant Treasurer separately for the benefit of said Diocesan account, in accordance with the terms of each merger.

These resolutions shall become effective on the first day of January, 1918. The Treasurer is authorized to credit the Church Pension Fund on account of the General Clergy Relief Fund in liquidation (4) with such payments made between April 13, 1917, and December 31, 1917, inclusive, as shall have been in excess of the income of the former General Clergy Relief Fund for the same period.

The report of the Executive Committee was adopted.

The Trustees then adjourned.

Attest:

MONELL SAYRE, Secretary.

This action of the Trustees of the Church Pension Fund may be summarized as follows:

1. The sum of $5,064,000, the amount originally asked of the Church, is segregated for the express purposes for which it was asked and given, accrued liabilities.

2. Two million dollars ($2,000,000) is set apart as a guarantee, to enable the Church Pension Fund to pay the grants of the General Clergy Relief Fund.

3. One Million dollars ($1,000,000) is set apart as a guarantee to enable Dioceses to merge their Diocesan Funds with the Church Pension Fund.

4. The assets of the General Clergy Relief Fund are segregated perpetually, and after reimbursing the Church Pension Fund for its expenditures on account of the merger, will be used according to the intent of the donors.

5. The money collected by the Commission appointed at the General Convention of 1907, of which the Rev. J. J. Wilkins was Financial Agent, is segregated to be used according to the intent of the donors.

6. The guarantee accounts of $2,000,000 and $1,000,000, respectively, will eventually be freed, owing to the termination of the present grants of the General Clergy Relief Fund and of merged Diocesan Funds, and to the repayment to the Church Pension Fund of its payments made to such beneficiaries. The $3,000,000 will then constitute a reserve in the hands of the Trustees, the income of which will enable it to extend the benefits of the Pension System to the clergy and their families.

The Church Pension Fund Trustees have thus devoted three million dollars ($3,000,000) to make sure that the beneficiaries of the General Clergy Relief Fund and of the merged Diocesan Funds receive throughout their lives the grants that have been pledged to them.

Western Michigan Notes

The Diocesan Board of Religious Education met and elected the following officers: Chairman, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent; Secretary, the Rev. D. C. Huntington. They acceded to the request of the southwestern part of the Diocese to be set apart as a Special Division, and that they be allowed to develop the rural work in thir District.

The Syrian Orthodox Church held their Christmas midnight service according to Eastern times (Jan. 6th). Grace Church, Grand Rapids, was loaned to them for this service.

The terrible blizzard and shortage of coal, and the order by Mr. Garfield closing the Churches and Parishes to but six hours a week, has hindered the work of the Church greatly.

A Chaplain's Work

As patriotic Americans and Christian people, we are especially interested in the work being done by our Chaplains. The Rev. Arthur J. Gammack, at a recent gathering of Massachusetts Church people, gave the following intimate and interesting account of his experiences in this necessary branch of war service:

"I have not had a very wide experience in the matter of ministering to men in a camp; as a matter of fact, not until last March did I ever minister in any capacity to soldiers. But since the middle of March until this time I have had an experience that has been varied, and not shallow, and for me, at any rate, illuminating. Perhaps you will pardon me if I tell you my impressions of the work of an Army Chaplain in the concrete terms of my own personal experience.

"Last March, in anticipation of the break with Germany, the National Guard of Massachusetts was mobilized, and the Third Battalion of the Sixth Regiment, Massachusetts was mobilized in the city of Fitchburg. Into that city came some four or five hundred soldiers, and you can imagine it made a stir in the city, and was of very great interest to every one. Days moved on, and it came to Saturday, and I said: 'What is going to be the Sunday of the soldiers in the city?' The Commandant had not thought of it at all, but he said, 'I realize what [illegible] back and ask m[illegible] then eighty-four, and ninety-seven when I was there last.

"Since I left that camp another man has taken my place—a man whose name I repeat with great respect and affection. I refer to the Rev. Howard K. Bartow. He should have been here this evening. I said to him, 'Bartow, aren't you coming'? He said, 'No, I can't spare the time'. That man, fine in feeling, aristocratic, even in his face, is living the life of the common soldiers. He stands in line with his aluminum plate and cup and receives his food in the common way. He is loyal in trying to help out the work of the regimental Chaplains. He told me that he had spoken with at least a thousand men, and not one of those men had rebuffed him when speaking on the subject of religion.

"I would like to make one or two generalizations. One of them is this: I feel that the call upon the Church to minister in this capacity is very urgent; the way is all open. In the days of the Spanish War, the Government and the military authorities were generally indifferent, and sometimes antagonistic. It is not so today. Mr. Wilson is sympathetic and helpful, Mr. Baker, Mr. Daniels, and every Commander I come across, is helping us in our work to bring the Gospel and religious consolation to men in their needs. Gentlemen, let me say that the boys today in Camp Devens are safer than they are in civilian life."

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

XIV
The Day's Work

(What does the parson do during the week? He must write his sermon, of course. Perhaps you would like to follow him through one day. Let it be understood that he has many pleasant experiences, many happy points of contact with his people, many messages that encourage and inspire. These you may infer from the other parts of this record.

But with a vast number of difficulties that confront him, you are perhaps not aware. May he write of them with a good nature and with a keen sense of the humor of it all. It is all part of the day's work.

Should this report prompt you to hesitate to bring any real trouble or need or inquiry to the parson, even over the telephone, you do injustice to his devotion to his work and his desire to help you.)

PART II

7:40 A. M.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Is this Reverend Blank."

(Why will people insist on calling an inoffensive citizen by his last name in this unceremonious fashion? To prefix the adjective "reverend" before the name only adds an ungrammatical sting to the injury.)

Minister.—"This is Mister Blank."

Telephone (unabashed and missing the point).—"Have you an engagement for Friday night, Reverend?"

(Quick weighing of possibilities on the part of the Minister. He has a meeting, and it is an important one, but it could be crowded into Saturday.)

Minister (temporizing).—"What do you want of me?"

Telephone (embarrassed).—"I want your services for that night."

Minister (an old hand, now he has a clue).—"I suppose you want to be married."

Telephone (relieved).—"Yes. Could you do it?"

(Then follow details and ten minutes of telephoning to postpone meeting of Friday. You may ask when the Minister has his breakfast. It is between calls. Fruit—call; cereal—call; eggs—call; toast—call; coffee—call. The Minister gave a seven-call dinner once to a few friends.)

Telephone (sweet voice).—"Is this Mr. Blank? This is Susan Williams. I left my umbrella in the Church on Sunday. Are you coming over our way today? (Susan lives half a mile off.) Well, I'll come over after school. Will you let me into the Church?"

(Minister, having a weakness for children, agrees to get the umbrella and leave it at his house for Susan. "Do it now," say conscience and experience. He yields and searches ten minutes for the umbrella. He finds it. Susan calls at 3:30 P. M. (Minister not at home), only to find that it is not her umbrella. Minister's good wife promises to find a boy to take the right umbrella to Susan that very evening. All forgot it after dinner. Minister then makes hurried trip with umbrella.)

8:15 A. M.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Good morning, Mr. Blank. This is Mary."

(Now the Minister knows seven Marys. They range from a middle-aged friend whom he has the privilege of addressing as Mary, down to a small girl not yet in her 'teens. No clue.)

Telephone.—"I want an extra copy of the Church paper. Could you mail one to me? You remember you spoke to me about a list in it and I shall need it to do what you suggested."

(Heavens! Which Mary? What list? What suggestion? This calls for diplomacy.)

Minister.—"Certainly, Mary. I shall be glad to send it. I hope it will not be too much trouble for you."

Telephone.—"No, indeed. I shall be glad to do it."

Minister (desperately resorting to last expedient).—"What is your house number, Mary?"

Telephone.—"253."

(No street mentioned. Missed fire.)

Minister (absolutely last resort).—"That is your telephone number, too, is it not?"

Telephone.—"No, our telephone number is 997."

Minister.—"Well, I'll send the paper right along. Good-bye."

(The Minister hunts through the telephone book until he finds 997, only to find that Mary is the organist. The whole transaction becomes clear to him and he groans over his stupidity.)

8:20 A. M.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Good morning, Mr. Blank. This is Mr. A. I have had great reason to be thankful for the recovery of my son from his illness, and I am sending you a check today to be used for the Church in any way you see fit."

(The Minister's words of gratitude are sincere and fervent. When the generous check comes the next day, the Minister holds a short prayer meeting and goes to his work renewed in spirit.)

8:55 A. M.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"This is undertaker I———. The ——— funeral will be at 2 o'clock on Thursday. We shall send a carriage."

Minister.—"But I have an important engagement at two on Thursday with some men from out of town, to take up the matter of new furniture for our Church."

Telephone.—"We are sorry, but the family wants the funeral at that hour and we have two other funerals for Thursday and we can't have this one at any other time."

(Minister calls up telephone office and heads off furniture men by wire, and settles back to distracted work.)

9:20 A. M.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Is this the Reverend Mr. Blank? Have you any engagement for Wednesday evening?"

(Grateful for the "Mr.," the Minister is soothed. Memories of the wedding for Friday night linger in his mind because of the similar question. Wednesday night is his free night and he and his wife had planned a little outing. But a wedding is important, and it might be the means of attaching a new family to the Church.)

Minister.—"No. Wednesday night is free."

Telephone.—"This is Mrs. Brown, Secretary of the W. C. T. U. We are going to have a great temperance rally on Wednesday evening. We shall begin at 7 o'clock and shall have six speakers. We want you to have a brief opening prayer and the benediction. I am so glad that you are free on that evening. You will surely come, will you not?"

(The Minister is paralyzed. He believes in temperance—up to a certain point—in all things; but when it comes to six-barrelled temperance meetings, he believes in total abstinence. There are twenty ways to use that evening, any one of which would be more profitable. He believes that a Minister wastes real energy in formally opening and closing a meeting with a long interval of stagnation.)

Minister (mentally pacing up and down like a caged lion).—"Where do you meet, Mrs. Brown?"

Telephone.—"In our hall. Will you come? We shall have a grand time."

Minister.—"May I let you know in an hour? I must consult my wife. She does not like to miss good speeches and maybe she can go too. If she can I shall be glad to do it. If she cannot, then I do not know what to say. I shall call you up in an hour."

(The Minister persuades his wife that she cannot be induced to go, so he declines also. Can you blame him?)

9:35 A. M.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Good morning, Mr. Blank. This is Margaret Alvord. Our class in the high school is to have a debate on Friday afternoon and we want you for one of the judges. I hope you can do it. We have tried to get eemany men but they are all busy."

(Margaret is one of the best of the younger workers of the Church. The Minister would do anything for her, so he consents and gives up one never-to-be-recalled afternoon. He then strolls into the yard to look at the flowers and to get a breath of fresh air.)

9:40 A. M.—Brrrrrrr.

(Minister hastens back to his study.)

Telephone (emphatically).—"Is this the Crown Manufacturing Co?"

Minister (wearily).—"No, you have the wrong number."

Telephone (snappishly).—"Well, ring off."

9:50 A. M.—Brrrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Who is this?"

(This form of address is the extreme bad manners of telephoning.)

Minister (facetiously).—"I do not know who you are. I do not recognize the voice."

Telephone (sharply).—"Who is this speaking?"

Minister.—"Search me" (or words to that effect).

Telephone.—"Is this the Reverend Mr. Blank?"

Minister (decidedly).—"Yes."

Telephone.—"This is Mr. C———."

(Names a dignified and important member of the flock, who is quite touchy.)

Minister.—"Ah, good morning, Mr. C———. I thought it was some one else. (Very lame excuse.) How are you?"

Telephone.—"I called you up to see if you and your wife could come to dinner on Thursday?"

(The Minister had long desired to have a good talk with Mr. C———, who was often away from home. Many of the Minister's plans would hinge on Mr. C———'s approval. Mr. C——— was about to sail for Europe, and this was the last chance. So the Minister called up ten members of the Church Guild and postponed a special meeting that had been arranged for Thursday night. This took half an hour.)

Ohio Bone Dry? Why Not?

Many answers are given to the question "why are the people so little interested in the Church?" After thirty years' experience in Church work the writer is constrained to ask, is it not because the Church is so little interested in the people? This may not be the case in the 'effete and conservative East," nor in the "wild and wooly West.,' Is it true in Ohio of the middle West? Shall we reap where we have not strawed? Do we offer only creed, Church piety and an unfamiliar though beautiful liturgy, and "give not these things necessary" to the people "hungering and thirsting after righteousness?"

Is it often true when they ask for bread they give a stone or a "religious hard nut to crack" ecclesiastically? Are the masses who swarm into our Civic "melting pot" reached by the extended hand, or by the foot of criticism—or a heady ecclesiastical dogma. Are these the "sharks teeth" referred to by Mr. Wells in his "God the Invisible King"? Will the people fall into our lap like "windfalls" or must they be "hand picked?" Can we expect "land slides" as in politics—unless like politicians—and as taught by the First Citizens of the World, we go out into the byways and hedges, leaving the so-called ninety and nine just who need no repentance? "Sic"—in order to seek and save the lost? so called.

In brief, do we show our self-sacrificing interest in the dear people who seem as foreign and alien to the Church, our Church, as the Patagonians? Can we feed them only on "oft repeated, thumb worn creeds, big professions and little deeds?"

So much for preface and whereas. Ohio has gone wet by 1,100—they now tell us, with suspicion and claims of fraud. The big mill towns—Canton, Akron and Youngstown, voted dry, as did most of the state, overcoming nearly 100,000 wet majority in Cleveland and Cincinnati.

I. The Patriotic and Economic Issue. Who doubts that the liquor question is a patriotic as well as an economic one? Conservation of grain for food rather than for intoxicating liquor. U. S. statistics show, and Harvard, Cornell and Yale professors tell us, that over six billion bushels of grain are so wasted every year—enough to feed seven million soldiers! If this is true, the careful savings of little lumps of sugar, and little pieces of bread, and little pats of butter, as dictated by Mr. Hoover, and we approve that, one as the crumbs which fall from the saloon keepers' and rich brewers' tables.

Old Joffre, Viviani, Balfour and Lord Northcliffe came over, braving the perils of submarines to tell us that the allies, our allies, needed our food more than they need our soldiers or munitions of war. Should not the patriotic slogan of all interested in the people be, corn bread rather than corn whiskey, rye bread rather than rye whiskey, white bread rather than lager beer — Bread — Bread — rather than Booze—Booze.

II. The Moral Issue. Considering the inmates of insane hospitals (and Judge Foran in an address at St. John's lately called them and drunkards twins), orphans, other elymosynary and penal institutions, and of course the saloons, incubators—hatcheries of crime, is the issue, not a moral one worthy of Churchmen's consideration? Unless we are Pharisees—unmindful of our duty, asking, are we our neighbor's keeper, like Cain, some years ago! but he was a murderer. Can we shift the responsibility by saying that it is a political question, and yet it was not a political issue in the last campaign—no official made the issue. Both the republican and democratic papers advocated "Bone Dry," as did one plank in the socialistic platform. The writer does not assume to judge the conscientious men who say they believe in temperance but voted wet. They are always ready to give a fortifying reason for the faith that is in them and they say so openly in the office and in the street or at the clubs.

But we now call on all dry voters to show their colors in the next skirmish close at hand with Congress, and to lend their influence by word and deed, and prove the courage of their convictions—and so help to win this patriotic and moral battle. It was the most interesting issue to all Ohio people, this wonderful campaign. In over a million votes we only lost Ohio, if lost we did, by 1,100 votes. One thousand might have been voted the other way if coached at the polls and by other personal work. Any one of many large Parishes could have won the election with 600 more votes and Ohio would now be in the majority list of states voting dry for patriotism and morality. Many conscience smitten souls are now upbraiding themselves and say, "I did not think it would be so close."

An earnest layman said to the writer today, "We Episcopalians ought to have taken off our ecclesiastical coats," "Fling out our banners (as we sing) Skywards," and "Sure I must fight if I would increase my courage, Lord." Had we gone into the fight heart and soul we would have won hands down." One hundred fifty thousand voters did not cast their ballots in the last Ohio election. Many farmers would not give up a half day to vote. Many saying, "We can't win—what's the use?"

A staunch Churchwoman last week said to the writer, "I came down the avenue six miles by street car and observed "Vote Ohio Dry" on nearly all Churches but the Roman Catholic and Protestant Episcopalian. Are they all wet? Do they own brewery bonds? The writer apologized as best he could saying that he knew of a Roman Catholic Priest who said "I am with you heart and soul, but the powers higher up limit our open advocacy," etc., and that he knew of several Church people who owned brewery bonds who said they would sacrifice their monetary interest and vote dry. He knows one Episcopal Church which voted dry last April Palm Sunday morning. God bless all who have not yet been converted to the new democracy of heaven on earth, and my answer to questionnaire is: The cheering news comes to us through a letter that 97 per cent of our Bishops and clergy have agreed to endorse prohibition. Sans Deo!

Are we fanatics or heretics? We are now trying to sow good seed in good ground to bring forth fruit in the next battle, and united we must and we will win. We love the brethren of all names—and would not Elijah—like at Hore, cry that we only have not bowed the knee to Baal? God told him that he had seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal, but God only knew as per the record, who they were and Elijah felt lonely. Perhaps many Clergy of all denominations will now tie up together with something stronger than a rope of sand.

Let all the M. E. S., P. E. S., U. P's, R. C., et al. present a solid front now to besiege Congress on the national issue so vital to win the war.

We do not believe that in the next battle so many Churchmen will be as quiet and as harmless as Church mice. A letter from an honored and most influential Churchman just received, says, "Your letter received. I voted dry and am sorry that it did not win." A rainbow of promise! Thus united we will save our boys, our homes, Church property now menaced by saloons, save children sent every week to orphanages, also abused wives and daughters, and much other salvage, flotsam and jetsam of shipwrecked homes. "Safety First." If not, then, "Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these, it might have been."

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

NATURE'S HYMN

One day I wandered out into a great forest, and the Wind was blowing and running through the trees. I said to the Wind: "Why do you blow so hard? Is it because you are angry?" And the Wind answered and said: "No, I am not angry, I am happy. I am singing. Know you not what I sing?" I answered, "No; what is it that you sing?" And the Wind said, "Listen."

At first I could hear nothing but the rushing of the Wind through the trees and the rustling of the leaves and the creaking of the branches, but after a time I could distinguish different voices, and at length all Nature seemed to be singing one glad song, "Praise the Lord". Now the Wood Violets took up the strain in sweetest tone, "Praise the Lord, Praise the Lord". Then it was caught by the elves on the trees, "Praise the Lord for His goodness", swelling out as Grass and Fern and Shrub and Tree into one great hymn of joy, "Praise, Praise the Lord".

At times it almost died away, just the faintest whisper could be heard, then one by one all joined in and swelled it out again to mighty tones. Of a sudden the Wind began a rumbling like the pipes from some vast organ, then it seemed as if some Mighty Power laid hands upon the keys, for the forest shook with the harmonies. Wind, Leaves, Trees, Branches, Flowers, Birds, Insects and Brooks joined in one glorious outburst, "Praise the Lord, Praise Him Forever and Ever, Praise the Lord".

MEETING OF THE SYNOD

The Synod of the Province of New York and New Jersey was held in Synod House, New York City, from Jan. 8th to Jan. 10th, 1918. Members of the Synod and many guests, including representatives of the Church organizations for women, were entertained at dinner by Bishop Greer of New York on the evening of Jan. 8th. At this time addresses were made by Bishop Greer, Bishop Lines and the Rev. Dr. Patton.

On the days following, the great subjects of "The Duty of the Church in the Military Camps in the Province", "Missions and the Missionary Campaign", "The Future of the Synod and How It Can Relieve the General Convention", "Religious Education and Preparations for the Ministry", were ably presented by distinguished speakers.

Opportunity was given for reports from the Woman's Auxiliary, the G. F. S., the Daughters of the King, St. Barnabas' Guild, the Church Periodical Club and the Church Mission of Help. Miss C. E. Marshall, G. F. S. Vice President of the Province, made a strong plea for recognition and cooperation for the work the Society is striving to do.

The work accomplished by the Synod cannot be appreciated by those not present at the sessions, but two decisions made are of interest to us all. It was the mind of the Synod that in order to relieve the General Convention of much routine business it must have the power to legislate on such matters as far as they relate to the Province. Hereafter the reports from the Church organizations for women will be placed on the program as part of the regular business.

Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Darwin on Missions

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, in his book, "Through a Brazilian Wilderness", says: "A very short experience of communities where there is no Church ought to convince the most heterodox of the absolute need of a Church."

Darwin once had a very bad opinion of the inhabitants of Terra del Fuego, South America, deeming them absolutely incorrigible. Yet Darwin afterwards admitted and admired the wonderful success of the South American Missionary Society among these savages. He wrote:

"It is wonderful, and it shames me, as I always prophesied failure. It is a grand success. The Missionary's teaching is like an enchanted wand. The march of improvement consequent upthe introduction of Christianity throughout the South Sea probably stands by itself in the records of history. Within twenty years human sacrifices, the power of an idolatrous priesthood, profligacy unparalleled in any other part of the world, infanticide, bloody wars, not sparing women and children, all these have been abolished, and dishonesty, intemperance, licentiousness greatly reduced by the introduction of Christianity."

WHAT IS THE CHURCH DOING FOR THE CHILDREN?

By Dean Walter S. Pond, Chicago

A marked tendency today is carelessness regarding the asset that we have because of the children. Christ said that "the little child could be the greatest member of the Kingdom". Yet in many of our Parishes our Sunday School is the poorest excuse of all the poor excuses in our Parish activities. It is not so much because of the teachers, because they are generally faithful. All things being considered, hopeful progress is being made in the important matter of curriculum. The great difficulty is either with the clergy or with the parents. The parents cannot to any great extent remedy the attitude of the clergy, but the clergy may change the attitude of the parents if the clergy will only make the effort to da that important work.

The little child not only needs to have his soul taken care of, but also to have provision for his mind and his body, if he becomes the right kind of a citizen, not only of the Heavenly Kingdom, but of the earthly State as well. As leaders in Church work, we need to sit down long enough to think out the situation about as follows: If a great corporation, like the National Biscuit Company, wants to sell biscuits, it first sends out an efficient salesman, who will sell his biscuits either on the basis of his personal appearance, or, failing in that, because he is able actually to take enough interest in his patrons so that he makes them want his biscuits, whether his biscuits are the best biscuits or the poorest biscuits in the market. In the Church, if we are ever going to reach the children, we have got to take ways to reach them. No average clergyman would go into a cultured group of Altar Guild women and employ a vocabulary understood only amongst the children. That sort of unwise way of doing things would kill the Guild. Well, there are a great many clergymen who cannot seem to understand that they are killing their children's activities because they are persisting in using vocabularies with the children that are proper only in Altar Guilds, etc. Boys have nicknames when they are out in the fields, in the alleys, gymnasiums, etc. They know and love that sort of thing. They do not love Church. But they are going to begin to love Church when they can have more of nicknames and that side of life that appeals to a boy.

Secular Social Settlements can make their children's activities so interesting that they not only get the children week day afternoons and evenings, but these same Settlements can draw a crowd (made up of the children's parents) for an Ethical Culture Society, even if they be so unwise as to set the hour at the same time as the hour for Divine services at the neighboring Parish Church. It may cost $3.98 to have a successful children's Sunday School party quarterly, but if the children are sufficiently won to the Church to make pledges for a year that bring into the Church $87.50—is not the idea good religion as well as good business?

There are Rectors who would write a letter thanking a prominent Church member for paying his generous pledge in full for the fiscal year just ended, but there are not many clergy who will take the trouble to write just as good a letter to the little Church member who has paid a generous pledge, considering his limited funds.

Take the play interests as we get to the cases of the young people. Here in Chicago, now, our saloons are closed on Sundays, but are open by day as well as by night the other six days. The saloons are crowded with men, young and old. There are a good many women and girls in the Churches, but the men folks and the boys are not so numerous. Now I maintain that although the Parish cannot afford to have a Young Men's Club, if it will cost $66 a year to do that thing, yet nevertheless the Parish will have to make a venture of faith and spend that $66 if it can once be proven that the Club will actually bring annually $325 into the Church treasury because of those young men who first begin coming on Tuesday nights, and then, secondly, after a year or so, naturally find themselves coming not to the Club rooms, but to the pews of the Church itself on Sunday mornings.

Neither High Church nor Low Church need complicate the issue. We have Children's Ministering Leagues and Boys' King Arthur Societies, Junior Brotherhoods and Girls' Guilds for the juvenile. We can have Choir responsibilities or Senior Brotherhoods, or Laymen's Study Classes, or Men's Clubs, Acolytes' Guilds and Young Men's Athletic Clubs for the men.

It is not necessary to have a big room for gymnasium purposes, if the only available place be a 14x20 Sacristy room. It can be tidied up once a week and the chairs put back for a group of young men or boys who will come in, if the doors are open and the lights are lighted, and some hospitable person is within to make them feel at home. In some places an unused Church cellar could be dug out and cleaned up for athletic purposes. I know a Diocese where the men and boys have made no $30,000 contributions for Missionary activities in a fiscal year, because there were no numerous activities to tie the men and boys to the Church. In that same Diocese the women and the girls did give that amount. The men and boys were taken care of fairly well on Sundays, and quite generally neglected from Monday until Saturday. On those days, if they wanted interests they must find them in secular buildings, in irreligious entertainments, and all other helpful, and especially unhelpful, places. The women and girls in this particular Diocese had helpful secular influences that affected their daily lives. They also had comfortable Guild rooms for their meetings on Wednesday afternoons and Thursday mornings.

I tell you, if our Churchwomen did not have their attractive organizations, meeting in comfortable quarters, they would not have come. The members of the women's organizations would not do very much for any Church if they were obliged to meet in places that might be likened to a filthy saloon or a smoky pool room. Many of our men and boys that might be made valuable assets to the Church are being wasted. First, because no one will take the trouble to organize them, and, secondly, because there must be some real attraction after they are once organized, and, thirdly, because the activities had best include not only serious pursuits, but some recreational ones as well. All this takes a little money. It takes dependable volunteer workers or consecrated paid ones. And it takes, most of all, attractive meeting places and delightful programs. The girls and women are not in the majority in our penal institutions, because they have leavening Church influences. The men and boys largely predominate in our reformatories, because they have leavening influences of the worldly things, that are supposedly put off in their Baptismal obligations.

Women speak the truth when they say that "the quickest way to a man's soul is through his stomach". I believe I say the truth when I say that musical programs and cups of tea do influence the women folks. St. Agnes' Guild scrap-books or pretty thimbles will draw the girls to the Saturday morning class, and we have yet to learn that camp, basketball and red cassocks, etc. (and even nicknames), are magic words that move the boys. I went into the Corporate Communion of one of our parochial Guilds a short time ago. There were fourteen women present. One woman brought her five-year-old girl with her. Our Chapel pews and kneeling cushions are so uncomfortable that the little child could not even kneel. I do not believe she could say the Lord's Prayer. But I will vouch for this, that when I pronounced the Absolution she blessed herself with all the piety of a devout saint of four score years and ten. And mind you, she did not know that I was looking at her at the time she was making the sign of the cross. After the service; that little member of the Kingdom was the only person of the congregation with whom I had time to shake hands. And I congratulated the little girl on her big part in the service. The mother put simply the information that the five-year-old miss could do absolutely nothing whatsoever at Church except the sign of the Cross. That much had been taught her by her ten-year-old sister.

I emphasize the matter to my brother clergy that if it is children we are trying to bring into the Kingdom, we will get them quicker when we are willing to make the sign of the Cross ourselves, if that is going to bring them in. And if there be any place, of Low Church tendencies, even a High Churchman could best be wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove with regard to his ritualistic practices.

In the Episcopal Church we have an advantage, inasmuch as we shall be able to win the children by Low Church methods where High Church methods won't work, and vice versa.

A Junior Brotherhood Talk

By Russell H. Thorkelson of St. Luke's Church, Cleveland, Ohio

I have been asked to say a few words tonight about the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and I think that the best place to begin is with the organization of a Chapter.

A Junior Brotherhood Chapter is usually started with boys ranging in age from twelve to fifteen years. There is some variation, but in most cases you will find that the Chapter is composed of from 12 to 15 year old fellows.

At first the boys have only a vague idea of what the Brotherhood really is. They think that its main object is to do each week some bit of work on which to report at the next meeting. The real object does not usually become clear to them until they have been organized for some months' time. But it is then, if they are real Brotherhood workers, that they begin to see their opportunities for the spread of Christ's Kingdom among their fellow companions, and to realize the responsibility which rests upon each one of them as a member of the Brotherhood. This realization opens their eyes to the wonderful amount of good which they, themselves, have unconsciously been receiving, and paves the way for continuous Christian service among their fellows.

Now, the Junior Brotherhood members here tonight must surely have reached this stage, where they can see the value of Brotherhood work, so let us consider, briefly, some of the things which make a successful Chapter.

First of all, we must realize that the Brotherhood has a definite purpose, and that we, as members, have a definite object to fulfill. No boy who will not keep this in mind constantly, and strive to do his best, can become a successful Brotherhood man. We are brought into contact with all kinds of men and boys, good and bad, old and young, rich and poor, and we must be prepared to receive and help them all.

Next we must keep in mind the two rules of the Brotherhood—of daily prayer and of weekly service.

Every person needs guidance through troubles and from temptations, and surely a Brotherhood boy, if he is to be an example for other boys, needs spiritual help. So one of the most important things for a Brotherhood boy is his prayers.

Pray to God to give you strength to win boys to His Kingdom, and pick out some particular boy on which to work, and ask God to help you to win him.

Another most essential part of Brotherhood work is that of weekly service. That is, to bring someone else to God's House with you, that he may also be helped; or to take some active part in the work of the Church.

But by far the most important part of your work is the Holy Communion, whereby we receive the Blessed Sacrament which will strengthen and prepare us to do God's work. To be a living Brotherhood member, we must receive the Bread of Life and the Blood of Strength.

Now, the Junior of today is the Senior of tomorrow, and if he is to be a successful Senior he must get experience as a Junior, or else he will be embarassed and very crude when he tries to work among men.

Most all Junior Chapters follow the example of the Seniors. If the Seniors hold regular meetings, do good work, come to Church regularly, and, in general, do the things which real Brotherhood men are expected to do, you will undoubtedly find the Juniors doing the same. Therefore, the Seniors of today should be urged to set as good an example as they can, that the Juniors may have a mark to pattern after, which will fit them for service in later years.

Fellows, we have the greatest opportunity today which has ever been given to any body of Christian workers. This great and terrible war offers chances which have never before been equalled. We must work! We must strive to uplift the moral standard among boys! One of the most crying needs of the army and navy today, is that of moral betterment! We have been as if asleep! The conditions, coming to us from the most reliable sources, tell of the terrible results of low morals,—of the crimes, the seemingly irrestible temptations, and of the lowering of the efficiency of the soldier.

Fellows, from the looks of things at the present time, it seems as if we will all get a chance to fight for our country. But are we going to carry all of the good which we have received with us, or wait until we get over there to wish that we had helped the other fellow to improve his morals, when we see these terrible conditions?

No! Remember that the other fellow will have to go over there too, and it's up to you to help him now, so that when he reaches that stage, he will have become a member of Christ's Kingdom, and will be able to do his part in the uplifting of the morals of the world by resisting those temptations which appear to draw him down to evil and corruption.

We are all soldiers right now. Christ is our Leader—our Captain. We are fighting an even more formidable and dangerous foe than the Kaiser—for we will beat him before very long,—but the devil,—with his evil, is a foe which takes every bit of power and strength to defeat, for he cannot be physically destroyed, but must be spiritually crushed.

We are marching uder Christ's banner—the banner of purity and goodness, and we must remain loyal to the finish if we are to accomplish our purpose.

Your Chapter is your Company, your Christ is your Captain! Let us march forth under His glorious banner and fight the battle for the spread of His Kingdom among men and boys!

Book Reviews

Inter-American Acquaintances. By Charles Lyon Chandler. Second edition extended. Sewaneez University Press. Price $1.25, post paid.

Mr. Chandler has two purposes in this book: First; to show that the example of the United States had great influence in bringing about the establishment of the South American Republics. Second; to set forth the claim that the idea of the Monroe Doctrine originated in South America. To prove this point our author has ransacked a vast number of newspaper files and similar documents and thereby easily established his first point. On the second, he is not quite so conclusive. Mr. Chandler is well known as a curator of the Harvard Library and as an authority on Latin American History. He deserves additional credit for his laborious and painstaking treatise. We should think that those interested in early American family trees might find here missing names in ancestral history.

Come Unto Me. Considerations on Saint Mark's Gospel. By Frank Inigo Harrison. New York. Longmans, Green and Co. Price, $1.25.

This is an admirable series of short studies in the Gospel of Saint Mark. Decidedly spiritual in purpose, it emphasizes again and again, and very effectively, Christ's continued call to the sinner. The studies have been arranged with the hope that they may be found useful as Lenten helps. They strike one as being admirably suited for such use. Many a Clergyman looking for something interesting and useful to read to his people, at extra services in the penitential season will find here the book desired.

The Religion of the Church as Presented in the Church of England. A Manual of Membership. By Charles Gore, Bishop of Oxford. Milwaukee: The Young Churchman Co. Price, $0.75.

It was a wise act on the part of the Young Churchman Co. to publish this book instead of trying to import it. The subhead gives excellently the Bishop's purpose, namely, to publish a clear cut and easily-understood Manual of Membership in the Church. It is not at all local. We know of at least one Rector, and there ought to be hundreds, who will use this Manual as a valuable help in the preparation of Confirmation Classes. It will also prove to be a useful book to lend to those who are uninstructed in the teaching of the Church.

If I Were Twenty-one. Tips from a Business Veteran. By William Maxwell. With eight illustrations. Philadelphia and London: J. B. Lippincott Co. Price, $1.25 net.

Mr. Maxwell calls himself a business veteran. He has already made a hit with another book on "Salesmanship." Out of his experience he now writes a series of chapters upon a variety of topics all relating to "getting on" in business. His style is racy, full of personal anecdote, and very human. The book is full of good advice, intensely given to the discussion of how to succeed, and, we suppose, decidedly practical. We should think that the maxims here so clearly set down would be of much interest and value not only to those just starting out in life, but to all others who are not yet ready to retire from active work. Our author's one fault, and some, perhaps, would think it to be a virtue, that he seems to forget that getting on in business is not the most important thing in life.

A Film Story

CHRIST CHURCH, SPRINGFIELD, ILL., PRESENTS PICTURE AT SOCIAL WORSHIP SERVICE

"From Slidertown to South Park", the story of the redemption of a community, was the film picture given at the evening service of Social Worship at Christ Church, Springfield, Ill.. It is an illustration of various community activities in the suburb of South Park, Dayton, Ohio, of the efforts to create a community spirit, and the results achieved by the enthusiasm of social activity. This work was fostered and encouraged by the National Cash Register Company of Dayton. The picture concludes with an allegorical animated cartoon showing as if by magic the transformation wrought by the social forces of the community in converting the forsaken and neglected Slidertown into the beautiful and busy South Park.

Rev. Lester Leake Riley, the Rector of Christ Church, was challenged on the use of such religious terms as redemption, conversion and salvation, as applied to communities, and in reply said that "The more closely we observe the co-ordination and concentration of social activities, especially through the present pressure of war demands, the more do we begin to realize the truth that our poets and prophets of all ages have been telling us that we have another life here on earth that is a community, even a national life, that is lived in common and that determines many of our activities and tendencies, because it has a conscious directing life of its own, and to speak of such a life you must use these terms of spiritual experience, because this community can only be understood as a spiritual organism and with a spiritual experience akin to the individuals that we can only express intelligently by speaking of the soul of a community, as we now use so frequently the expression, the soul of America."

Who Will Answer These Queries?

Perhaps this is a good time to inquire in public print as to what texts of Christmas and Easter mystery plays have been found valuable by my brethren in the Priesthood. I am a Missionary, in charge of three small Mission stations. We gave on Dec. 30th our second annual play in a small theatre. I am told that the play was enjoyed even more than our first effort. We charged no admission, but we took up a collection, which we are devoting to charity. Such a little Oberammergau devotion means a good deal in a part of the world that is not marked by reverence or catholicity.

Last year we used Father Field's text. This year we adopted Dean Bell's version, which, unfortunately, is out of print. I found it best, however, to sing some of the carols contained in the Stainer-Bramley book. The "Coventry Lullaby" is one of the most touching carols to which I have ever listened. We are fortunate to have a little girl of eleven for the part of Mary. The child has an extraordinary voice.

I wish to collect Christmas and Easter texts. I already have Father Dodd's. Is this form of devotion prevalent in the Roman Church?

On the part of any children, such a presentation is tolerable, but I would not care to see it done by grown-ups on this side of the water. That there should have been so few guffawing young men to witness our mystery is a matter of thankfulness—for we are living in a golden age that is not of the classic sort.

Very sincerely,
MISSIONARY.

The New Year

New Year's resolutions have a value in that they show a recognition of failure in the past and a determination to do better in the future. Both of these states of mind make for improvement. That "through the weakness of our mortal nature" (as the Prayer Book puts it) we should sometimes fail to keep the letter of these good resolutions, is not a good argument for not making them. Better plan well even though we come short of our desire, than not to plan at all.

A resolution to attend Divine Worship at least once on every Holy Day will count for gain along the lines of mental, moral and spiritual uplift. If the intention is kept with fixed purpose there will be no question as to its value when the end of the year shall bring an accounting of the progress made. Let me commend such a resolution to your thoughtful and prayerful consideration.

BISHOP SAGE IS WARMLY WELCOMED TO SALINA BY THE PEOPLE AND PRESS

His First Utterances Strike the Keynote of His Episcopate

Bishop John Charles Sage, of Salina, is being welcomed to his new Diocese by the Salina people. Sunday he held his first service there, and the Salina newspapers are very complimentary in their reception of the new Bishop's words. The Evening Journal welcomes the Rector of St. John's of this city in the following editorial:

Salina is glad to welcome a new Churchman.

This time it is particularly interested in Bishop Sage, who was consecrated Bishop at Keokuk, Ia., last week and Sunday installed as Bishop of the Salina district, for several reasons. One of them is that Bishop Sage is a successor to Bishop Sheldon M. Griswold. Bishop Griswold has been identified with the department of the Episcopalian field in this part of the country for many years. To the virgin field several years ago he brought his vision and capacity for hard work. Its development, its hundreds of Churches, its excellent progress are parts of the result of the first Bishop's efforts. He was called to more responsible duties when the fruitage began to come in.

The new Bishop will not be disappointed in Kansas and Salina. He will find encouragement for his efforts in his new field. His field for labor is rapidly developing. His headquarters will be in one of the best towns in Kansas. He will find Salina ready to co-operate in his endeavors to make the town better and the field broader.

The Bishop appears to be the type of man to carry on the work well. The right religious faith requires a continual offensive. In Bishop Sage it has a leader who brings years of study and experience to a big task and a heart for the work. This combination is assured to win.

THE FIRST SERMON

In reporting his enthronement, the Journal says Bishop Sage gave a vital message in his sermon, "Be True to God." The Journal in its write-up said:

Chanting and soft intoning of anthems, lighted tapers, priests and dignitaries of the Church in their official robes, and choir in surplice formed the setting at Christ Cathedral Sunday morning, when Rev. John Charles Sage was installed as Bishop of Salina. Rev. S. M. Griswold, first Bishop of Salina, conducted the service, which was attended by students of St. John's and members of the Diocese.

"I shall speak but briefly to you this morning," Bishop Griswold said in introducing the new Bishop, "because this is not a time for that. This is a time for looking forward and planning for greater things which I am sure are to come to this Church. For the past few days one verse of Scripture has kept ringing in my mind: 'Now He must increase and I must decrease.' And I hope and feel sure that it will be that way with this Church in Salina; that Christ and His teachings will, under the direction and rule of Bishop Sage, find ever increased power. He has come to you, I know, ready to love and serve you as I learned to do, and with only the purpose in his heart to exploit the teachings of the Master."

In his first sermon in the new field Bishop Sage said it is not his purpose to start a revolution in methods of Church rule. "I am come not to tear down," he said, "but to proclaim the gospel of our Lord and Saviour, which I believe will be good for Kansas; when asked what my policy is to be, then, I would say, whatever is good for Kansas. And surely this gospel of our Lord is good for this state.

COUNTS HIMSELF FORTUNATE

"I count myself fortunate to have been called to work in a state whose truly American spirit is so manifest, and it shall be my endeavor to present and aid in preserving to the united American people of this vast state an American religion, linked with the past but with its message for men of today.

"For the Church, whose representative I am, has embodied in its innermost being this American spirit; its American founders were the early patriots—its constitution was drawn up by the same minds which composed the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of these United States. Its early sons, Washington and Jefferson and others, fought and worked, toiled and struggled for American democracy.

"I rejoice further that I am come to a district whose foundations, materially and spiritually, have been so well laid. This magnificent cathedral, the school and hospital testify to the material foundation; spiritually I know the emphasis has been laid upon the great spiritual truths which our Lord came to proclaim; upon the Church's catholicity linking us with the past and bringing to us the great sacramental life; upon truths which are truths not because the Episcopal Church proclaims them but because they are the expression of unchangeable facts. I am especially gratified that in this Church which sets the standard of worship for the District, the Lord's own service is the great service on the Lord's own day.

BUILD ON STRONG FOUNDATIONS

"And so upon these strong and firm foundations I can but build further, and if success comes to us—as I hope it may—it will be because of the foundations laid, the self sacrificing devotion of the first Bishop of Salina."

Bishop Sage laid stress upon the individuality in the work of each, saying that no man can work unless he does his work in his own way. He concluded his sermon with the statement of three things which he asks of his people as they walk together in service: "I ask you to trust one another; to be frank with one another; to be true to God and to the Brotherhood. In this way only can we give our united energies to His service. So God will bless us and keep us in peace and love and joy in His service."

A Missionary Bishop's Thrilling Experience

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Frank Hale Touret, Bishop of the Missionary District of Western Colorado, gives the following vivid description, in his Diocesan paper, of a recent trip on the Moffat Road in an attempt to reach the Mission at Steamboat Springs, Col.:

"Until 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon all went well. We climbed and climbed up the mountain sides in much the same way the Cripple Creek Short Line lifts itself above the plains on its ribbony way. Then the snow began to fall, and inside an hour we were in an awful blizzard, the snow being whirled about by the wind blowing 50 miles an hour. At 6 o'clock in the evening we went into a snowshed, not to come out again until 12 o'clock this noon! And eighteen hours is much too long to spend in such an atmosphere. The smoke and gas have been awful! We could not have any doors or windows open, but the smoke came in through the cracks just the same. We all look like coal heavers and feel like lignite lumps! Out of my lunch box I ate a sandwich now and then, but the smoke and gas made eating almost out of the question. At 9 o'clock we curled up in our chairs to try to sleep. But sleep was well nigh impossible. The fumes were most disagreeable. The heat was on full force, and we almost suffocated. At 2 a. m. we all talked, just for diversion. We 'got up' at 5:30, hoping that we would soon be out of this 'Black Hole of Calcutta'; but as I have already written, we did not get out until after 12. The reason for our long imprisonment was that our snow plow ran off the track inside the snowshed. We therefore could not go forward, and we were afraid to go back through the drifting snow on a four per cent grade. As it was, our engine was chained to the track all night long! At 9 p. m., the conductor tapping the wires, telephoned to Denver for help, but help did not come until noon today. Then the big rotary plow pushed its way through the snow right up to the rear entrance of the snowshed. Having made a path for us, we backed down here to Dixie Lake, where we are waiting while the snow plow and two engines have returned to help get our snow plow on the track again. You see there are too few sidings in these mountains. The wind is blowing a hurricane and the snow is drifting badly. What will happen next I do not know. We all hope that before dark the two big engines will return for us and, headed by the plow, will pull us over the top, and we then may reach Steamboat Springs by midnight."

"We are enjoying the time we are spending down here out of the gas and smoke. Although we are not very far down, we are at this moment 10,860 feet above sea level."

* * * * * * *

The same trainload of people that went up the hill on Saturday morning came down again today. And, although I am disappointed not to have gone through to my destination, I am glad to be again at a level of 5,000 feet in a comfortable home, instead of being up 11,000 feet in a railroad coach rocked by the wind. We all who were on the train are thankful that our lives were spared. I shall perhaps never come nearer losing mine. The snow slide that struck our train last night at 6 o'clock buried both engines, knocked loose from the train a box car just ahead of our coach, sending it flying down the mountain side, and then completed its work by making impossible any motion for our train. The only thing to do was to be patient and wait for the wrecker. So, all night long in the open, exposed to the raging blizzard, we waited. The car got pretty cold, but we all had ulsters and sweaters, and so kept very comfortable. Although the wind was howling furiously—nearly a 70-mile-an-hour gale—and the snow was beating in through the cracks, the experience was preferable to spending the night in a snowshed, enveloped in gas and smoke. Early in the evening we got a little sleep, then, at 1 o'clock, we sat up and had a smoke and talked till 2:30, when we all were ready for sleep again. There were six men in our car. Many women and children ahead. We were in the rear coach. At 5 a. m. I was suddenly aroused by the snorting of a powerful engine, and I jumped up and rushed out on the rear platform to see the headlight of the wrecker engine coming straight for our coach. The snow was too blinding for the engineer to have seen our little rear-end light, and had it not been for the quick ear of our locomotive fireman, who tore through the train and waved his red torch, our car might have been in kindling wood! But not the Missionary Bishop of Western Colorado! for he had slept in his ulster and overshoes and was on the rear platform in time to have jumped into the snow bank if a collission had been the next thing on the program! There had been hardly any water for use among the passengers—every available bit went to the engine—the train crew even melted snow for engine use—and so I arrived in Denver unshaven and dirtier than I can remember ever to have been before. I have had a fine tub, a good shave, a shampoo, and feel like a new man."

EIGHTY-FOURTH BIRTHDAY OF THE REVEREND DR. TANNER

One of the joyful customs of family life is to celebrate the birthdays of its members. Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minn., being noted for its family life, observed the birthday of its oldest member, the Reverend Dr. Tanner, who on January 21st reached the ripe old age of eighty-four. He was presented with a goodly quantity of flowers by the other members of the family, together with a titanic birthday cake lighted with twenty-one candles. Dr. Kramer, as head of the family, then read the following poem which he had written in Dr. Tanner's honor:

Some men at three score feel their work is done,
And some at three score ten their race have run.
The Bible adage doth at four score place
In senile weakness all the human race.
But now and then, to mock a weakling age,
Comes there a man, whose vigorous life will page
Even more than four score years, not weak but strong
Amid the bustling, rushing modern throng.
Such are the giants of our day and age,
Who calmly stand and watch the nations rage.
Long have they toiled and many treasures won
Of mind and soul that will outlast the sun.
For drinking from our Saviour's saving fount,
And standing with Him on the radiant mount,
They oft like eagles have renewed their strength
Of soul, which truly marks the journey's length.
Thus by your presence are we honored here,
Ourselves we honor when we wish you cheer
On this your natal day, though eighty-four,
We pray the Lord to add a dozen more.

Dr. Tanner responded with a speech expressing his appreciation of the family's remembrance. Among other things he said: "It has been my privilege to live among countless changes and witness many movements in the Church's and nation's life. The history of American literature takes its rise in my time. Washington Irving, who is considered the 'Father of American Literature,' died after I was born. I remember the comments on Lowell's poetry when it first appeared, and the prophecy that 'he might amount to something.' I remember the criticisms first passed on Longfellow's 'Hiawatha.'

"The making of the American Church, with the beginning of its Missionary work on a national scale, as well as the making of the nation through the Civil War and after, really comes within the compass of my life. In the development of Minnesota and in the growth of the Church in this great state, I have been privileged to have some small part.

"To the young men I would say that your ministry should be a happy work. As you minister to your people so shall your life be. God has blessed me with the quality of sympathy—not to weakness, I hope—but to strength. Cultivate that quality. Verily, it has its own reward. Appreciation of your service will come to you in no unfailing measure. My best wishes and blessing go with you for whatever the future may have in store for you."

According to the custom instituted by Miss Eells, Principal Emeritus of St. Mary's School, Dr. Tanner was the guest of the School at luncheon in honor of his eighty-fourth birthday.

The Reverend George Clinton Tanner, D. D., was born in West Greenwich, Rhode Island, January 21, 1834. He prepared for college at Plainfield Academy, Connecticut, and graduated from Brown University in 1857. Two famous Secretaries of State—Mr. Olney and Mr. Hay—were his college mates.

Dr. Tanner came to Minnesota in 1857, organizing the first system of graded schools in Winona. After teaching there a year he joined the Reverend Dr. Breck's Mission in Faribault, September 1858, as headmaster of the Mission School which then included both academic and divinity departments. It was this School which developed into the Seabury Divinity School and Shattuck School of today. In that same year he became a candidate for the Ministry under Bishop Kemper, pursuing his studies under the Reverend Messrs. Breck, Sanford and Manney. Ordained Deacon September 16, 1860 by Bishop Whipple, he was Priested July 16, 1862. During this time Dr. Tanner had been in charge of St. Andrew's Parish, Waterville, and remained its shepherd until 1864.

He left Faribault in 1867 to take charge of St. Paul's Church, Owatonna, and to become Superintendent of Schools in Steele County. After a fruitful ministry of twenty years there, he left Minnesota in 1887 for a few months in Kansas as Chaplain of Bethany College. Returning to Minnesota in that same year, he became director of the study hall at Shattuck, from 1887 to 1909. Since that time until 1917 he has been Professor of Liturgics and of the Classical Languages at Seabury Divinity School, and now is Professor Emeritus.

Dr. Tanner has been Dean of the Middle Convocation and Examining Chaplain in the Diocese. Since 1878, he has continuously served as Registrar, and is the author of the "History of the Diocese of Minnesota." In 1886, he was delegate to the General Convention.

The writer has been privileged to travel over the state somewhat and has marvelled many times at the influence of Minnesota's scholar-saint. From Owatonna to Sauk Centre, and from Minneapolis to Granite Falls, people inquire concerning him. By their own lives eloquent testimony is borne concerning his influence over them. Nor is it confined to the state of Minnesota, but many graduates of Seabury and Shattuck throughout the country can witness to the sanctifying influence of his life on their lives. Whether salvation be by faith or by works, or by both, there is no doubt in the minds of the men and women who have known Dr. Tanner as to his title to salvation.

They Imitate the Carpenter at Nazareth

According to a writer in the Alaskan Churchman Clergymen in Alaska do not seem to lack ability as carpenters. Bishop Rowe heads the list, for many is the stroke of work that he has put in on Mission buildings. If all were known of Dr. Chapman's work in this direction, it would take many a page of The Alaskan Churchman to properly unfold the story. The Archdeacon is also to be included, for he tells of much of such work that he has done. Then along come the workers at Ketchikan and Valdez, Reverend Messrs. Kelley and Zinn, and tell of being really first class carpenters. The writer knows that Mr. Drane, of Chena, has recently helped to erect the Chapel at Chena Native Village, and also cherishes the belief that he himself can saw along a line, and drive a nail without mashing both hands. Won't somebody organize a branch of the Carpenter's Union for the Clergy of the Church in Alaska?

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

The Presentation of Christ in the Temple, Commonly Called the Purification of St. Mary the Virgin

FEBRUARY 2

THE COLLECT

Almighty and everliving God, we humbly beseech thy Majesty, that, as thy only-begotten Son was this day presented in the temple in substance of our flesh, so we may be presented unto thee with pure and clean hearts, by the same thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Mother and Son! This is the picture that makes its own appeal to every nation and every tribe under the shining skies. It affords a good background for all kinds of Missionary effort. Go where you will on this earth, and you will find one universal language understanded by all—the mother love and the mother sacrifice. Take these two wonderful facts and put them in a temple, and you establish a connection between the religion of the Altar and the religion of the hearth. Make the temple, where mother love and mother sacrifice are shrined, a Christian temple, and you have formed the basis of modern Christian civilization. If the Missionary preceded only or chiefly the advent of the commercial traveler, the progress of any nation in the civilized arts would be worse than slow and backward. The Missionary's claim to enduring fame and praise is that he has the secret of a happy home in his keeping; and where happy homes shrine an awakened intelligence and a high ambition, there will find the firm basis of a true national life. To make a community worth living in, there must be in it a Christian temple, and the Christian home must precede the Christian temple. This is another reason why in Missionary work it is not good for man to live alone. He must show in his home life the virtues he nourishes in the temple. Sanctified homes through sanctified parentage is the burden of this holy day's message.

In this picture and prayer is embodied the design God had in His purpose for the sons of men, namely, every faculty of body, mind, heart and will brought in perfect harmony with His law. "Lo! I am come to do Thy will, O God."

All parents who thoughtfully present their children in the Christian temple for Baptism must see in this day's action the scope of the Missionary's purpose, which is to baptize all nations. All children properly educated in the meaning and purpose of their Baptism will grow to see the necessity of turning the universal instincts of mother love and sacrifice into Christian channels.

"Unless ye become as little children ye cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven", says Jesus. In the Christian temple, Christ's oblation is continually being enacted. If men are to be presented to God with pure and clean hearts, it is necessary that they be presented along with Him as members of His mystical body. The mission of the Church is a sacramental mission. First, we present, then we receive. "As we shew forth Christ's death, and continually present His oblation to the Father, we must likewise offer and present ourselves, our souls and bodies to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice to God." It is only through and by the presence of Jesus in the Temple of His Body that we can have confidence for the present and hope for the future; and it is only by coming to Him in penitence and prayer that our sinful bodies can be made clean by His Body, and our souls washed through His most precious Blood.

"This day presented in the temple." The Church appoints a certain time for us to present our children to God. Do we heed it? If you are not yet yourself presented, or if you have children not yet presented in the Temple,, will you not take that step this day? And wlil you not realize that what you find is good to ask for yourself in this day's Collect is equally necessary for all men everywhere to ask for themselves?

THE EPISTLE

Behold I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' sope: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. Mal. iii:1.

"The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to His temple." Is that where you are seeking to find Christ? In His Temple? "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found", says the old prophet. It is the pure in heart who shall see God, says Jesus. Here again is the incentive for Missionary effort—to prepare a way for the Lord to enter in, and to help people be pure in heart, so that they can see the Lord when He does come; to make Christian temples where little children can come and bring the brute and the beast in men, and let the Christ tame them and change them. And, in parentheses, can you imagine the feeling of the child and of the Lord when they come to a temple and find it locked and barred, except for a few hours once or twice a week?

"He shall purge and refine the sons of Levi, that they may offer an offering in righteousness." All of us must approach God by the purgative way of penitence. Even the sons of Levi must do this, for otherwise they can not honestly withstand in their congregations the sorcerers and adulterers, and false swearers, and the men who make money unjustly, and who oppress, in one way and another, the women and children. If we have no penitent thoughts in our lives we can not know much joy in our religion. What makes for true penitence? The Christ. The clearer we see Him, the better we see ourselves. The more fully He comes into our lives, the more are we refined.

Ah, who may abide the day of His coming? Can you and I hope to stand before Him when He appears? Yes, we can, if we will closely and perfectly follow Him in the mysteries of His earthly life—keep cleansed by penitence and trained by His disciplines. And unless we do keep Jesus in front of us, and unless we do seek Him in His Temple, is it not quite likely that we shall lose the ability to recognize Him whenever He does come? Why do so few of us get any joy out of Church services? Because Christ is not seen by us, touched by us. Church-going is a formal, empty ceremony, or the fascination or admiration of a human life that draws us within the courts of the Lord's house, and if these things are true, is it not quite certain that we shall not be able to bear any kind of witness by refined and purified lives? It seems so to me. Church-going must include a two-fold oblation to bring any real help—the oblation of Jesus and the oblation of ourselves; and to make it impossible for false witnesses and sorcerers, and adulterers, and all the oppressors of the earth to flourish, men must see to it that the temples in their lands, and in all lands, are Christian temples. And to make temples Christian, we must carry Christ there in our hearts, on our lips, and we must also expect to find Him waiting for us there to bless and help us. Into such assemblies, if the sorcerers and evil doers come, will they find help, health, and final salvation, provided they heed the witness offered them in us and through us by the blessed Jesus Himself.

THE GOSPEL

And when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord; (as it is written in the law of the Lord, Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord;) and to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, A pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons. And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ. And he came by the Spirit into the temple: And when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. And Joseph and his mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of him. And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against; (yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also,) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. And there was one Anna, a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser: she was of a great age, and had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity; and she was a widow of about four score and four years, which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day. And she coming in that instant gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem. And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth. And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him. St. Luke ii:22.

Notice in all this picture how reticent the whole story is concerning the blessed mother of Jesus. "He must increase, I must decrease." The Baptist said this, the blessed Virgin lived it. She fades out of the Gospel with a sweet and gentle dignity, and in the sorrows of her love she becomes blessed among women. Her purification came very early into her life. Think of this very often when the purgings of life take hold of your soul and pierce your heart. God grant that when the startling messages of God come to your soul you may be in the presence of Christ, and in His Temple. Wonderful revelations were made to the little congregation that morning. Look for the coming of the Lord in your services, and you will find the results of that coming will not depend on the size of the congregation, nor the number of women present God appears to souls, not sexes. God uses both men and women to voice His messages, provided that both men and women are looking for the coming of the Lord, and serve their God with fastings and prayers. Our religious services will never become much to us unless we give our very best to their observances. Church-going can not be a by-product—it must be the natural fruition of a deep and sincere desire to look for the Lord, and to present to the Father

"That only offering perfect in Thine eyes,
The one true, pure, immortal, sacrifice."

Here again we catch the necessity for Missionary effort—to place everywhere on God's earth meeting places where the sons of Levi may present for the sons of men offerings of righteousness, and also give them messages from God which are for their souls' good.

Think of Church-going as presentation occasions, rather than receiving occasions.

Think of Missionary work as opportunities for making it easy for all men everywhere to seek after God. Think of the blessed Virgin Mary as a glorious evidence to the world of what modest humility can do in bringing about, under God, the salvation of the world.

Think how necessary it is for us to be purified before we can see visions that mean health, and hope, and salvation.

Think how, in fulfilling the requirements of religion, we will be sure to find a true and lasting relationship to Almighty God.

And, thinking on these things, strive to put them into immediate practice.

not always come this way. Oftener, faith means being co-workers together with God; and this is brought out in the second lesson. That the Church itself must go through the experiences

The report of the Canterbury Commission on Revision of the English Lectionary contains a suggestion that has been for some time in the minds of the American Commission, viz: to introduce each lesson by a few explanatory words. How would it do, for instance, to start the first lesson this Sunday morning in some such way as this: "Here beginneth the 20th verse of the 19th chapter of the Second Book of Kings, being God's answer, through His Prophet Isaiah, to the prayer of Hezekiah the king for deliverance from the army of the king of Assyria"? And perhaps the second lesson might be prefaced with the words: "Here beginneth the 12th chapter of the Book of Revelation, being the prophecy of final deliverance from evil"?

The Old Testament selection comes in the regular sequence of the historic-topical course, and the New Testament lesson was taken according to the principle of correlating the two lessons with each other, and at the same time carrying forward and upward to the Christian stage the principal point of the Divine Revelation on a lower plane. The deliverance of Jerusalem from the army of Sennacherib is not only an historical instance of God's Church defended by the power of God against adversity (Collect), but even fits the basis of the petition, "Who seest that we put not our trust in anything that we do". It is in the same class with the capture of Jericho. But deliverance does of the Christ would seem to be plain amidst much that is mysterious in Rev. xii.

The same topic of deliverance is carried over into the evening by the Isaiahan selection, being part of a discourse by the prophet against reliance upon Egypt (flesh). If in our efforts at self-deliverance we refuse the strength that comes from "quietness and confidence", then must God "wait that He may be gracious" unto us.

The second lesson (rather long, it must be confessed) not only tells of the One who alone fully exemplified Isaiah's plea for the use of spiritual weapons, but supplements the prophet's one-sided argument against reliance upon the flesh. Isaiah xxxi:3, for instance (continuation of chapter 30), if it stood alone, might justify that pseudo spirituality which denies the existence or rightful use of matter and secondary causes; but the life of the "Word made flesh" shows that the spirituality consists in the consecration and use of matter and material things, not in their denial.

The week day selections in the morning continue the Old Testament course, and begin Jeremiah, paralleling that with the continuation of St. Mark's Gospel, and in the evening there are selections from Micah (who prophesied deliverance—see close of last chapter), accompanied by selections from I. and II. Corinthians, which have as their theme spiritual power leading up to final victory over both sin and death, and the transformation of Christians at last into the glory of their Lord.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

WAR TIME PRAYERS

"We have the guns now, and the men, and ammunition, what we need now is a nation on its knees."

—Lord Roberts.

O Saviour of the world, who by Thy Cross and precious Blood has redeemed us; Save us, and help us, we humbly beseech Thee, O Lord.

Remember not, Lord, our offences, nor the offences of our forefathers; etc.

Lord have mercy upon us. Christ have mercy upon us. Lord have mercy upon us. Our Father, etc. And lead us not into temptation. But deliver us from evil.—Amen.

O Lord, we beseech thee favorably to hear the prayers of thy people; that we, who are justly punished for our offences, may be mercifully delivered by thy goodness, for the glory of thy Name; through Jesus Christ our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost ever, one God, world without end.

Archbishop of York to Visit the United States

The Church in the United States will have the great privilege and pleasure of having as an honored guest during the month of March the Rt. Hon. and Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, D. D., Archbishop of York, Primate of England and Metropolitan. He is to be the preacher every day for a week in Lent in Trinity Church, New York City, by invitation of the Rev. Dr. Manning, and by invitation of Bishop Tuttle and other Bishops and Rectors, will visit a number of strong Church centres in the country. He will preach in St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill., on Sunday morning, March 17. The Rector of St. Luke's, the Rev. Dr. Stewart, has been appointed the official guide to the Archbishop from Cleveland, Ohio, to Chicago, then from Chicago to St. Louis. The Archbishop of Canterbury visited this country at the time of the General Convention in 1904, but an Archbishop of York has never been here. The Archbishop received his education at the Universities of Glasgow and Oxford, and was a student for a number of years at the Inner Temple, London. He is the author of several widely read publications, a man of deep piety, profound learning, and gifted as an orator. A warm welcome awaits him in America. He will spend some time in Canada before returning to England.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD WITH THE KID

Matthew Arnold

He saves the sheep, the goats he doth not save.

So rang Tertullian's sentence, on the side
Of that unpitying Phrygian sect which cried:
"Him can no fount of fresh forgiveness lave,
"Who sins, once wash'd by the baptismal wave."
So spake the fierce Tertullian. But she sigh'd,
The infant Church! of love she felt the tide
Stream on her from her Lord's yet recent grave.
And then she smiled; and in the Catacombs,
With eyes suffused but heart inspired true;
On those walls subterranean, where she hid
Her head 'mid ignominy, death, and tombs,
She her Good Shepherd's hasty image drew—
And on his shoulders, not a lamb, a kid.

INTRODUCTORY

My late friend and classmate, Bishop Frank Spaulding of Utah, had a quotation of which he was very fond:

"Life is conscious effort transforming itself into unconscious habit.'"

A little reflection will show how this applies to everything in life. Walking, playing the piano, your vices, your virtues come under this head. It applies also to the training of soldiers. An untrained soldier is not an asset, but a nuisance, on the field of battle.

What is needed at the time of Confirmation is not so much academic teaching as painstaking drill in the Prayer Book which is the Manual of Training.

The whole Christian body is sick because it is an untrained body and Confirmation is the opportunity for such training.

If you drill your candidates properly, you will have later on a congregation which can be inspired by preaching.

Never mind if the classes are small. See to it that they are well trained, and require of them certain things, without which they cannot be presented.

1st. A regular attendance at Church services during the period of preperation.

2nd. A regular habit of daily prayer in private.

3rd. Conscious study of the instruction and faithful attendance at the classes.

Unless candidates are willing to do this they should not be confirmed.

The probability is that you will begin your classes soon after the holidays, so this series of instructions is arranged in pamphlet form, and will be issued each week beginning with the new year, and covering a period of twenty lessons. They are so arranged that the first half of the lesson leaf is for the candidate to study, the second half to assist the Rector in the instruction.

V

YOUR RULE OF WORSHIP

Catechism: The Lord's Prayer.

Prop. 1.

What is worship? The word comes from the Anglo-Saxon, "worth-ship," and it means to give one his worth or due.

To worship God is therefore to give that which is due to Him.

In the Lord's Prayer Christ tells us that God is "Our Father." Therefore we are God's children. What can a child give to his father?

(a) A child can give to his father respect and frequent expressions of his love.

So we can "hallow God's name" by giving Him thanks and praise.

(b) A child can help his father by doing those things which that father asks him to do.

Our Father in Heaven has asked us to preach the Gospel to every creature, and also as Christians "to do this in memory of Him." So we may give God His due by doing the things that He has commanded us to do. In this way we help "God's Kingdom to come."

(c) A child can best help his father by giving himself to his father, for that is really the only thing that belongs to him to give.

So we are to present ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a living sacrifice unto Him. In this way we cause "His will to be done" in us.

So we worship God in prayer, in service and in self-surrender.

Prop. 2.

But God has provided certain means by which we may worship Him, the chief of which is the Sacrament of the Altar.

(a) In the first place, the Holy Eucharist, as it is called, is a service that Christ instituted and commanded us to observe. The fact that He told us "to do this" should make it imperative that we do it.

(b) In the second place, as we will show in a later lecture, the Holy Eucharist contains in itself all the chief elements of worship, and,

(c) In the third place, it is the one distinctive act as a Christian by which you bear witness to Him, that is, as St. Paul says, "Ye do show forth His death till He come."

Prop. 3

Your worship does not consist in having certain opinions about God, nor in having certain feelings concerning God, nor in doing certain things for God. These are all very well, but worship consists in offering yourself to God in the way that He has provided, and then receiving from God the blessing that He gives to you in return for your sacrifice.

It is the identifying of yourself with Christ, and offering yourself through Christ, and then receiving from Christ the blessings that He has promised.

Christian worship is the sacrifice of yourself joined to the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. How this is done will appear in subsequent lectures.

QUESTIONS

1. Define worship.
2. What does Christ teach us is our relation to God?
3. What three things can we give to God, as children?
4. What three reasons have we for observing Christ's command "to do this" in the service of the Holy Eucharist?
5. What have you that you can give to God?
6. In what way can you give yourself to God?
7. What is the result of you giving yourself to God?

Every-Day Religion

By Dr. James E. Freeman

BROAD OR SUPERFICIAL?

"Be not wise in your own conceits."

There is a term much abused in our common speech today; everyone who holds so-called "liberal views" or who treats with inconsideration the old and well recognized conventions of life, is called "broad." If a man is unorthodox, according to the old standards, he is essentially a "broad" man. If he winks at social practices that hitherto were regarded as dubious or questionable, he is "broad minded." If he looks upon the stage as the purveyor of all sorts and kinds of plays, legitimate and illegitimate, pure and impure, with a sort of naive indifference, regarding these things as in some sense necessary, he is a "broad" man. Again, if he holds no particular religious faith to be necessary to a man's salvation, but hews to the dictum of the poet—why, of course, he is a generously and consistently "broad-minded thinker." If the old, sacred usages and practices that have stood the test of generations; practices and habits of life upon which the fathers builded this nation more wisely than they knew; if these things interfere with the larger liberty of the individual or contravene in any wise the fullest and freest exercise of what he regards as his "personal rights," why, of course, they must be abandoned and relegated to the attic of forgetfulness.

"For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight;
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right,"

We are disposed to believe the term, "broad," is being overworked, and another word synonymous with it, its true yoke fellow in strenuous service, is "liberal." Everyone who is strongly self-assertive, self-conceited or self-satisfied, is held to be "liberal." It would be a fair question to ask, especially with reference to the younger generation: "Whither are we drifting?"

Miss Reppelier, in a magazine article, writes brilliantly and sanely on "The Repeal of Reticence," presenting another phase of the "broad-minded" endeavor to break down all connections and restrictions and to make the property of common speech in school room, drawing room and Church, those subjects that hitherto were regarded as of such a character as to find their best and truest expression within the narrower circle of the home. If we are all bent on being "broad" and "liberal" in politics, social habits, religion and the rearing of children, let us take heed lest our so-called breadth and liberality become not in due time the evidences of utter superficiality. We are coming to the conviction that, according to the modern use of the terms, "broad," "liberal" and "superficiality," they are practically synonymous.

All organized society, or to put it another way, all civilized society must, of necessity, be controlled by well conceived and well recognized conventions. A religious, social or political system that is unregulated is chaotic, and unworthy of the respect of thinking men and women. Another aspect of this question is suggested by our duty to our reighbor; that is, if the second great Commandment still has binding force; possibly it, too, has ceased to be operative because it is too narrow. Whether I will or not, I am compelled to recognize certain definite and fixed rules or conventions of life that relate me to all those whose lives I touch.

A pretty safe rule to observe is, "None of us liveth to himself." If in our effort for a "liberal" or "broad" interpretation of life we infringe the rights of other people or disturb those well conceived conventions that make for wholesome habits and peace, we are simply violators of law and order, trespassers on the preserves of other folk.

All this that we have said has its application to so many things that it would be difficult to enumerate them. It is refreshing to meet now and again one who has fixed convictions, who has avoided the weather-vane method of judging the standards of life. It is almost a thrilling experience to meet one who is reasonably inflexible upon great fundamental principles. We believe that we are to come presently to a time that is to witness a recrudescence of old gallantries and habits of refinement, the old and decent recognition of what we call the "sanctities of life," the sane and wholesome observance of man's relation to God and his obligations to his fellows. THE STAR IN THE EAST DID NOT MOVE!

A POPULAR SCIENTIFIC CONSIDERATION OF ASTRONOMICAL REFERENCES IN THE BIBLE

The Rev. James Henry Young, D. D.

There are many references in the Bible to astronomical phenomena. It is evident that meteors, meteoric showers, and eclipses of the sun and moon had been observed in Bible times, and the terror which they produced in the popular mind is very evident in the passages which refer to them.

The "star" which the Wise Men saw "in the east" will no doubt occur to the mind of the average reader. Sometimes when Venus is the evening star, one is asked whether it is not the star of Bethlehem. Since the Magi were perfectly familiar with Venus and its motions, there would be nothing in it to portend any great event. Tennyson's reference to "the flying star, which led the grey haired wisdom of the east," implies that the star was a meteor, but in this the poet is undoubtedly wrong, since a meteor, if it meant anything to an astrologer, would mean the death, or dethronement of a king, rather than the birth. If we knew more about ancient astrology, we could say definitely what the phenomenon must have been to be interpreted as it was; but we can only surmise. Edersheim thinks it may have been a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn in the constellation Pisces, which constellation was set apart to the Jewish people. Such a conjunction occurs only once in 800 years, and would naturally be considered prophetic of some great event. This conjunction actually did occur in the year 7 B. C. We know that our Lord was born at least 3 B. C., since Herod died in March of that year.

Another theory is that the star was an evanescent star, such as occacionally blazes out in the sky. Tycho Brahe left us the record of such a star which appeared in the constellation Cassiopeia in 1572. It became as bright as Venus at her brightest, being visible even in full daylight, and then faded away until it was wholly lost to sight. Many such have been observed in recent years, although the most of them never become bright enough to attract attention, except of those who have telescopes. But in 1901, in the constellation Auriga, a star appeared which rivals Tycho's. It was first observed on Feb. 21, at which time it was as bright as the Pole star, although a photograph of the same region, taken at Cambridge two days before, does not show the star. It increased rapidly in brightness until it fairly rivaled Sirius, the brightest star in the sky, then faded away until it became visible only in the largest telescopes. Such a star would attract the Magi, and such a temporary star may have blazed out at this time. Edersheim says that Chinese records note such an appearance in Feb. 4 B. C. It may be that the Wise Men saw the conjunction, and then on the way to Bethlehem saw this second phenomenon. In that case it would not be "the star which they saw in the East," but if it bore the same message, the description would fit. The star was not "in the East," the Greek means "in its rising." In any case the star would not move, yet as they went from Bethlehem, it would seem to mark, first one hill-top, then the next, until it hung over Bethlehem.

If it be asked, Why seek for some natural interpretation, why not admit that it was a miracle? the answer is that a miracle would have conveyed no meaning to the Magi. They were looking for messages through the motions of the planets. Even a comet had less meaning than the position of the familiar planets. If it be asked why God should use superstition, like astrology, to reveal his Son's Birth, is it not just what He always does. He used astrology to bring men to the fuller knowledge in astronomy, He uses incomplete faith as the means of bringing men to the perfect light. He even uses the sins of the prodigal to turn his thoughts back to the Father's house.

A Well Organized Girls' Choir

Miss Ellen M. Fulton, who is a Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music, London, and an Associate of the American Guild of Organists, gives a very suggestive and interesting account in The Musician of a successful experiment she has made in organizing a Girls' Choir in St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., as follows:

"The St. Cecelia Choir of St. Luke's (Episcopal) Church, Scranton, Pa., is a volunteer organization composed of about thirty-five girls, from 12 to 22 years of age, who are members of the Church or the Sunday School; of a Director, an Assistant Director, a Chaplain, who confers with the Director about the Choir's work, and of a "Choir Mother", who acts as a chaperon and looks after the upkeep of the vestments and other property of the Choir. The Choir has a special vesting room.

"The Choir originally was intended to lead the singing at Sunday-School services—which office it still fills, but has developed sufficient efficiency to be also considered an assistant Choir of the regular Church Choir of boys and men. During the absence or vacation of the latter, the St. Cecelia Choir sings at the usual Church services in their stead, and frequently during the year the two Choirs sing together, making an augmented Choir of large tonal dimensions.

"Regularly once a month, as well as on Christmas and Easter Days, the St. Cecelia Choir sings at an early Communion service. When the Sunday School holds its 'opening exercises', in the form of an abbreviated Evening Prayer, in the Church itself, the Choir sings the versicles and canticles and leads in the singing of the hymns—occasionally, for special days, such as certain saints' days, singing suitable anthems. During the Lenten Season the music for a certain number of Evensong services each week is assigned to the Choir, the other days being taken care of by special groups of singers.

"Rehearsals are held regularly once a week in the Choir training room, other extra rehearsals being called when occasion demands, and before each service a short rehearsal of ten or fifteen minutes is held in the Choir training room to get a better ensemble and to regulate the tone and pitch of voices. This is especially necessary for the early morning service. Very frequently part of the rehearsal is conducted in the chancel of the Church.

"For purely vocal work, Dr. Madeley Richardson's practical book on Choir training is used. Next comes a thorough drilling on the music to be sung at the next service, attack, enunciation, tone and phrasing. Then new work is taken up, an anthem to be used at a later date, or new chants or hymn tunes. The solo work is carefully rehearsed after the regular work. Some of the anthems used are the following: 'Sweet Is Thy Mercy, Lord', Barnby; 'Lovely Appear', Gounod; 'By Babylon's Waters', Gounod; 'King Arthur's Hymn', Macdougall; 'O Lord, Most Holy', Harker; and services by Simper, J. F. Richardson and others, besides many of the old and new Christmas and Easter carols.

"Careful account is kept of the attendance. There are strict rules about punctuality, cuts from rehearsals, attention during rehearsals and services, all necessary for the discipline of the Choir.

"As an organization, the Choir affords these particular girls a thorough training in their Church music and the Liturgy of the service, and it also, as an organization, is proving of invaluable service to the Rector, the Rev. R. P. Kreitler, being capable and dependable in times of emergency, and assisting the male Choir."

Chicago Mission Makes An Unusual Record

The Church of the Holy Apostles, Chicago, was organized in February, 1917, and is probably the strongest and most vigorous Mission for its age in the American Church. The Rector of St. Simon's Church, Chicago, the Rev. Leslie F. Potter, who has been Priest-in-Charge of the Mission the past year, has resigned, in order that the Mission may have a resident priest. The Finance Committee, with the help of some friends interested in the work, are able to provide a salary of $1,800 for a priest, and the Rev. Edward S. White of Libertyville, Ill., will assume charge of the Mission at an early date. The Diocesan Board of Missions has presented the Mission with a lot, at a cost of $5,500, on which to erect a new building, toward which a Fund of $2,000 has been raised. The list of communicants numbers over 100.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

St. John's Parochial School, San Juan, Porto Rico, of which Miss Iva M. Woodruff is the Principal, now has fifty- seven pupils and seven more are expected. Ten new pupils have entered the School since Christmas.

A Preaching Mission, which resulted in a general awakening of the Parish, was conducted in St. George's Church, New Orleans, La., by the Rev. P. G. Duffy of New York, beginning on the second Sunday after the Epiphany, Jan. 20.

Young Lady: "How is it you don't come to Sunday School, Minnie?"

Minnie: "Oh, please, Miss, I'm learning French and music now, and my mother doesn't want me to take up religion till later."

"When destruction is rife is the time for the forces of construction to gather and press forward. While we are concentrating our thought and strength in support of our nation in the war, we must also uphold the spiritual forces upon which the nation and the world depend."—Bishop Lawrence.

General Pershing, Commander-in-chief of our forces in France, who is also a Churchman, wrote to an American soldier: "Hardships will be your lot, but trust in God will give you comfort. Temptations will befall you, but faith in our Saviour will give you strength."

Something of the willingness of Alaskans to contribute to any cause which may be deemed worthy, says the Alaskan Churchman, may be realized from the fact that in the early days of the war, when the Literary Digest was endeavoring to raise a fund for flour for the Belgians, Fairbanks, Alaska, contributed more barrels than any other town or city in the United States for that supply.

A religious mass meeting was conducted by the Parishes of San Antonio, Texas, at the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium on a recent Sunday evening for the benefit of the officers and men stationed at Camp Travis. The vested Choirs of the several Churches and the Regimental Band of the 360th Infantry furnished the music. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Capers, Bishop of West Texas, gave the address.

In another column we are beginning a new series of articles, written especially for THE WITNESS, on astronomical references in the Bible, by the Rev. J. H. Young, D. D., Instructor in Divinity at Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minn. Dr. Young treats his subject in a way which will attract the attention and hold the interest of the average man in the street as well as the student of science and Biblical lore.

"To few orators, perhaps, is granted equal eloquence of voice and pen, but such proud distinction," says a special contributor to the Chicago Herald, "may be justly be accorded the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, from 1895 to 1901 Rector of Grace Church, Chicago, now Rector of St. Thomas' Church, New York. The fourteen inspiring, patriotic, humanity-loving sermons included in his new book, under the generic title of 'The High Call', present sufficient proof of this truth."

The year of 1917 was one of splendid accomplishment within St. Peter's Parish, Chicago. Attendance upon the Holy Communion and at the Sunday services has steadily increased, the equipment of the Parish for efficient work has been very largely renewed, and more pledges and pew rents are on the Treasurer's books than at any previous time in the entire histo of the Parish. The income of the Parish the past year amounted to $21,753, and the Rector, the Rev. F. G. Budlong, reports 1,508 communicants on the Parish list.

For the first time in the history of the Virginia Theological Seminary a native of Palestine is studying for Orders. Mr. Tewlik David Hararari is the son of a native Missionary and the grandson of the first Christian convert in Damascus. When the war broke out Mr. Hararari, who was a teacher, was thrown into prison by the Turks. With the help of a friend he escaped and hid himself in the forest, where he was found by some traveling Americans. Through their influence and guidance he came to this country and entered the Seminary. He expects to be ordained next June, a candidate from the Diocese of Virginia.—The Mission Herald.

When the war broke out in Europe, the Rev. Daniel LeBaron Goodwin, who recently became the Rector of St. Peter's Church, Cleveland, Ohio, and Mrs. Goodwin were traveling in Switzerland. Seeking to find the American Consulate in Zurich, Mr. Goodwin made inquiries of a resident, who drew a rough sketch of streets in the vicinity of the Consulate. "With this sketch as a guide," he says, "I set out and was arrested while taking a snap shot and was imprisoned. The police took me for a German spy, and the sketch seemed conclusive evidence, but I was soon released."

An earnest layman in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, N. C., speaking in behalf of an every-member canvass of the Parish, forcefully said: "It is of essential importance that at this time we do not neglect the work of the Church, even the work of the local parochial organization, in order to engage in special war activities. The teachings of Christ are the source of our best national and world ideals. If we neglect the Church we cut off inspiration at its source, and before long the world will find itself trying to move and live on secondary forces."

Over forty prominent laymen of the Church have been enrolled in war service as Secretaries under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Some have enrolled for the duration of the war, others for periods of from three to six months. They will work for the moral and religious uplift of the camps, striving for the elimination of drunkenness, gambling, profanity and immorality. The work is under the direction of Mr. G. Frank Selby. Mr. Franklin S. Edmonds, a prominent Philadelphia lawyer, has gone to France to arrange for the work of the Brotherhood Secretaries among the men there. Among the business and professional men who have enlisted in the work are Mr. Courtney Barber of Chicago, General Agent of the Equitable Life Insurance Co.; Mr. Herbert W. Raymond of Chicago, Assistant Manager of the Marshall Field & Co. clothing department, and Mr. Wm. F. Poole of New York, Transportation Agent of a Hudson boat line.

Personal Mention

The Very Rev. Robert K. Massie. D. D., having fully recovered his health, has resumed his work as Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, Ky.

The Rev. Leonard H. Burn, for a short time after his ordination in charge of work at Duluth, Minn., and Topeka, Kansas, has been appointed and has entered upon his duties as Curate at the Church of the Holy Communion, St. Louis, Mo.

The Rev. William J. Willson, formerly in charge of Christ Church, Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., has assumed charge of St. Mark's Church, Clark Mills, and the Mission at Sherrill, N. Y.

The Rev. Sidney E. Sweet, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Columbus, Ohio, has been appointed Chaplain of the Columbus Barracks, without salary, by the War Commission of the Diocese of Southern Ohio.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Llewellyn Jones, a retired Bishop of Newfoundland and Bermuda, and said to have been the oldest Bishop, in point of service, of the Anglican communion in the British Empire, died at St. John's, N. F., on Jan. 8th, aged 77 years. He resigned last September, after 40 years' service in the Episcopate.

The Rev. Milon Church, Ph. D., Rector of All Saints' Church, Riverside, Cal., for the past twenty-five years, has announced his retirement from the active ministry, to take effect March 1. Dr. Dotten is 68 years old, and has been in the active ministry of the Church over forty years. He will reside with his son, Mr. Jack Dotten, at Passadena, Cal.

The Rev. G. D. Barr, sometime Senior Curate in St. Peter's Parish, Chicago, is now Priest-in-Charge of St. Ambrose's Church, that city. He assumed charge of his new work on Jan. 13th. The Rev. M. J. Van Zandt has succeeded Mr. Barr in St. Peter's Parish.

Mr. Francis A. Lewis, who has been a member of the House of Deputies of the General Convention from Pennsylvania for many years, and is one of the most important personages in that body, is the Fuel Administrator for Philadelphia. Under his direction, over 120 carloads of coal were recently seized and diverted, in part, to the use of local hospitals.

The Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., observed the 25th anniversary of his consecration as Bishop of the Diocese of Southern Ohio on St. Paul's Day, Jan. 25th. There was a celebration of the Holy Communion at the Cathedral House at 11 a. m. The Bishop was the preacher, taking for his topic, "The World's Peace and the Church's Peace". Luncheon was served in the Cathedral House, and in the afternoon a two-hours' service was conducted of prayers, with addresses to the clergy, especially preparatory to Lent.

Silent Sermon Preached by an Army Officer

"A good story comes to us from Camp Lee," says the North Dakota Sheaf. "A 'rookie,' at the end of his first day in the cantonment, knelt down at his bunk to say his prayers before turning in. The act was greeted with laughter and jeers from his thoughtless comrades in the long barracks. At that moment a young officer in the course of his duties stepped in at the door. Taking in the scene at a glance he advanced to the proper position near the kneeling boy and stood rigidly and reverently "at salute" until the prayer was ended. Then (in the quiet that had fallen) he delivered his orders and walked out without a further word.

It was a fine, soldierly act. The moral courage of a subordinate was recognized and likewise that unseen Presence was acknowledged, before Whom the cub recruit and the trained officer alike owed worship and reverence. We doubt that the Chaplain had that day preached a more timely or telling sermon."

No Wonder the Soldier Boys are Interested

A most successful 5 o'clock service is being conducted every Sunday afternoon at Christ Church, Baltimore, Md., for soldiers, sailors and marines, says the Maryland Churchman. At 4 the men of the Parish, with their automobiles, visit the railroad depots, the Y. M. C. A. and the Service Club, and bring men to the Church. The service consists for the most part of national hymns, anthems and prayers and intercessions for our country and our allies. The Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, Jr., gives a ten-minute heart-to-heart talk to soldiers upon such themes as, "Why Worry"? "Carry On", "Reveille", and "Forget It". After the service, the men in uniform meet in the Parish House, where the women of Christ Church serve a supper to them. Then there is a smoker and "sing", and sweaters, helmets and other knitted articles are given the men by the women of the Parish. Students from the Peabody Institute, under the direction of Miss Strickler, Mr. Chas. McCann and Mr. Strickland Gillilan are amongst the entertainers each Sunday. About 175 men attended, and the Church and the gallery of the Parish House are crowded each Sunday with an interested and enthusiastic congregation and audience.

Boys in the Trenches Are Optomistic

We recently read a letter addressed to one of our young women of St. Mark's from her brother (a mere lad hardly out of his teens), who is doing service at the front in France, says the Rev. Dr. Freeman of Minneapolis. The letter is so finely optomistic and so expressive of confidence that we venture to quote a few excerpts from it. He says:

"I do hope this New Year will see us together once more. Of course one never can tell, and least of all out here. Oone can only hang on and wait and hope for the best. One hears all kinds of opinions on the subject, both optomistic and otherwise. However, you have heard about 'every dark cloud having a silver lining'—well, this cloud is no exception, and when it does show its lining I think it will be more golden than silver."

This is but a straw to indicate the fine spirit that dominates the lads who serve. If we at home are pessimistic, the boys in the trenches are not.

Death of a Well Known California Priest

The Rev. Douglas Ottinger Kelley, one of the best known clergymen of the Church in the Diocese of California, died at St. Luke's Hospital, San Francisco, of which institution he was the Chaplain, on Thursday, Jan. 10, in the 74th year of his age. His home was in Berkeley. He was born at Kelley's Island, Ohio, Jan. 27, 1841, was a graduate of Hobart College and was admitted to the bar in his native State, going from there to California in 1867, where he practiced law three or four years, and then entered on a course of training for the ministry. He was ordained Deacon March 17th, 1872, and Priest May 31, 1874, by Bishop Kip. He was Rector of St. James' Church, Fresno, Cal., from 1879 to 1910, and besides labors in Missions in different parts of California, he served long and faithfully at the City and County Hospital and the Relief Home, San Francisco, and as Chaplain at St. Luke's Hospital. He represented his Diocese as a Clerical Deputy to the General Convention in 1880, and was the author of a "History of the Diocese of California". In 1874 he was married to Miss Annie A. Fletcher of San Francisco, and was the father of seven sons, six of whom are living. The burial services took place from Grace Church Cathedral, San Francisco, on Saturday, January 12.

Boys at the Front Ask for Communion

Chaplain Lyman Rollins, with the 101st Infantry, at the front in France, in a letter to Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, give the following account of a service he conducted:

"I know you would have enjoyed the service. How they sang! It was in a leaky Y. M. C. A. hut, floor covered with slpipery mud; benches from the two mess shacks, so they were seated; could therefore prolong the services over the customary time. There was a pelting rain without, so the men could not drill or work, and they were glad to remain. Had the service prescribed, with an address on 'Our Duty to Caesar, or Playing the Game'. Then some asked for Communion, so I delayed going on to the next station for half an hour. About thirty received. It was mighty impressive to see them come forward, three or four at a time, kneel on the muddy floor, bow their heads and reach out their hands, and all the time the wind howling outside and the rain dripping in. I am certain this is the biggest ministry I'll ever perform."

Bishop Parker Among the Orientals in New York

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Parker, Bishop of New Hampshire, is keenly alive to the importance of establishing sympathetic relations with the growing representatives of the Eastern Communions in our midst. Arriving in New York on January 19th, the Armenian Christmas, he accepted an invitation to be present at the liturgy in the Armenian Church. Robed in his purple cassock he was received by the Armenian prelate, Archbishop Papken Gulesserian, and given a seat of honor in the sanctuary. Bishop Parker spoke a few words of greeting to the congregation, which was translated to them in their own tongue.

In the Orthodox Eastern Churches, January 19th is observed as the Epiphany. Bishop Parker was received by the Greek Church of St. Constantine, Brooklyn, where Archbishop Germanos was officiating, and delivered a message of greeting to the Greeks appropriate to their Epiphany season.

Bishop McCormick Confers With General Pershing

The Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D., of Western Michigan, Bishop in Charge of American Chaplaincies and Army Work in France, writes that he recently "had the honor of an interview with General Pershing (who is a member of our own Church), and was received by him most graciously and kindly. He thinks it extremely wise in us to have a Bishop to direct our work abroad, and he will do what he can to help me carry out the work along in the way of such permissions as he may feel able to give. No one can talk with or even see the Commanding General without being proud of him, of the Army which he represents, and of the country which he so admirably serves."

Probably the Oldest Communicant in the American Church

Sister Vera Margaret of St. Monica's Home for Sick Colored People, Boston, Mass., contributes the following interesting item to the January number of The Church Militant:

"Our oldest communicant is Aunt Fanny Banks, who is 111 years old, and has been a member of St. Monica's household for the past eight years. She was born in Green County, Virginia, on Gen. Early's plantation, and came North immediately after the Emancipation Proclamation, and is probably the oldest communicant in the Diocese, if not in the whole Church. She was confirmed by Bishop Babcock in the Summer of 1916, at her own special request, because she desired the gift of the Holy Ghost, and that she might receive the Holy Communion, because she had seen the comfort and help it gave to so many when their time of suffering and death came. She, too, desired like help and comfort.

"Her birthday was observed this year on Nov. 22, as she says that she was five weeks old at Christmas time the year she was born. She still retains her faculties of sight, hearing and speech, and on her birthday was able to cut her birthday cake. There were many friends to greet her with flowers, birthday cards, sweets, tea, etc. She told a friend quite confidentially that she had never had a birthday party before, but her usual self-possession and self-forgetfulness carried her through and made her an attraction to every one."

Orphan Children Have Happy Home

The Mobile, Ala., Register states that one of the prettiest and most modern institutions in that city is the Church Home, which was organized and first opened at Tuscaloosa, Ala., during the latter part of the war between the States to care for the orphans of the soldiers of the lost cause, and it was Alabama's noted "War Bishop", Richard H. Wilmer, to whom so many other humanitarian movements in the State trace their origin, who was the father of the institution. The Home, which is owned and controlled by the Episcopal Diocese of Alabama, was moved to Mobile from Tuscaloosa in 1867, three years after its founding, and the Home occupied a building in the city on South Warren Street until March, 1916, when the handsome Home, consisting of three cottages and outbuildings in the half-timber English style of the Middle Ages, was completed and moved into at Spring Hill.

Besides being architecturally perfect, the Home is also one of the best arranged and outfitted institutions for the care of orphaned and destitute children that one may see in many a day's travel, and this, together with the homelike atmosphere, go to make it what it unquestionably is—a model Orphans' Home. The Bishop of the Alabama Diocese, as head of the Churches of the State, is also head of the institution, and it is in the belief that the child must, above all things, have a loving , homelike influence thrown around it, that he has given instructions that all institutional features be sacrificed for home methods of management, as far as possible, in the administration of the Home. Miss Katie L. Campbell is chief director, and associated with her are four Deaconesses of the Church and one helper. These, with the assistance of a cook and an all-around handy man, are the caretakers of 46 children. The children are from all parts of the State, and the doors of the Home are open to those of parents of every creed.

An interesting feature of the Home is the presence there of Sister Belle Saxon, Deaconess, who was one of the first orphans to be cared for at the Home when it was founded at Tuscaloosa during the war. Sister Belle was called back into the service at the institution as Deaconess after it was moved to Mobile only a short while after she left its walls as one of the orphans it had sheltered until she had reached the age where she could earn her own livelihood. Sister Belle said she considered the calling of her into the service as a deaconess a great compliment, and she has remained at the home here ever since, helping those unfortunate children who came to it, just as she herself was assisted when left an orphan, with many thousand others in the South, during the Civil War.

EDITORIAL

WORSHIP AND HOSPITALITY

Yes, we give millions of money for relief. We build great institutions for the aged and the sick and the poor, but we do not give ourselves to God and we do not open our homes to the poor.

We have acquired the pagan virtue of respect for God but not worship of God; of Alms for the poor but not contact with the poor.

We go to Church that our preachers may pray for us while we sit upright or squat most ungracefully. We do not bend the knee, because we do not want to do so.

We give alms of that which we possess, and organize charitable societies that they may efficiently bestow them, but we do not come in touch with the poor that they may find friendship in our touch.

We are cold toward God and formal in our dealings with the poor.

Our Ministers do not associate with publicans and sinners and we do not want them to do so.

In short, our religion is a cold, calculating Kultur rather than a warm human touch.

Our homes are snug but our enjoyment of them is smug. How many strangers ever find hospitality there? How often do they open to him that comes in the name of the Lord? Yet the Master tells us that it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha than for him who refuses hospitality to him that comes in the name of the Lord.

As a Bishop I have little to complain of in the matter of hospitality, but then I am becoming profoundly conscious of the fact that I am a Bishop, for I find that Missionaries who go just as much in the name of the Lord, frequently cannot find where to lay their head, and are forced to seek shelter in the inn.

An inn, as Whitwell Wilson points out in that most fascinating book, "The Christ We Forget," which I most sincerely advise you to get and read,—an inn is a place that neither Jesus nor St. Paul, so far as we know, ever visited. "Where the perfect city is built, there will be no tavern, but many mansions, where every traveler may freely find a place that he can call his own." "The very existence of the modern hotel is a symptom that the home has failed."

It used to be in this Western country that there were no inns, and then every home was open to the traveller.

From this circumstance rose the legend of Western hospitality. Now we have more hotels, finer homes, less hospitality, and we have all grown less human. Today the West is hospitable in a wholesale way, but the retail business of hospitality has fallen off.

It is such a trouble; no longer a pleasure to serve a guest. The guest himself is uncomfortable unless he is a close friend, because he is conscious that somebody is being put out. And so the guest is put out and the host more self-contained.

I sometimes wonder if this war hasn't come to make us more human, so that we will be forced to worship God with all our faculties, and to serve our neighbor by other than absent treatment. It certainly has worked out that way in the entertainment of soldiers and sailors.

In short, I am inclined to think the more we have been prospered that the meaner we have grown. For example: I would rather take my chances of being cared for, if I were a babe, suddenly bereft of both parents and without relatives or money, if I were so bereft in a tenement than if I were so bereft in the best circles of society. My lady and her friends would see to it that a fund was raised to take care of me somewhere, but Bridget would be more apt to take me to her heart.

One wonders sometimes whether poodles are more interesting than babies, or whether the heart that loves a poodle is less human than the one who cares for babes. But poodles are so cunning! Yes, and so inexpressibly stupid! And worse than that, they grow more stupid instead of less, just in proportion as one wastes affection on them. One wonders if there isn't a reflection of our own selfishness in their glassy eyes.

What is worship? It certainly isn't patronizing God with a blaze interest that can be set aside for every kind of business or amusement. It is abandoning yourself to God, that is, offering your souls and bodies as a willing sacrifice. It is all that you have that is yours to give.

What is hospitality? It isn't entertaining one's intimate friends. That is social intercourse. Hospitality is spending one's heart and home to the one who needs it. It may be to the Lazarus at our gate. it may be to the prophet in our midst. For sometimes you may entertain angels unawares, or some time you may compel Christ to go to an inn where there may not be room.

Worship and hospitality are the acceptance of Christ, not as a work of art, nor a product of higher thought, but as a human force, making the world better at much cost and sacrifice to oneself. It is forgetting to be smug in an endeavor to be human. Christ doesn't ask us to serve Him, without any trouble to ourselves, does He? Well, Dives woke up in a place of torment because he had no human interest in a certain beggar.

Yes, it is perfectly absurd, impractical and Christian. And there are lots of Samaritans that are doing it.

The Great Opportunity

A BROTHERHOOD EXPERIENCE

Is it worth while?

Do the workers in the camps get results?

What is the verdict of the men themselves?

Percy J. Knapp, Camp Secretary of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at Petersburg, Va., gives an interesting reply to the above questions.

"Ir our Brotherhood men throughout the country could only know what a glorious opportunity awaited them, it would not be necessary to do much talking to get the right kind of men," he writes. "I would sacrifice everything rather than give up the work now and I cannot express to you how grateful, how sincerely thankful, I am that I have been given this glorious opportunity."

A Clergyman, in an outburst of enthusiasm, informed a brother Minister, a few days ago, that he never expected to return to parochial work.

"I have found my sphere," he said. "The war has given me a lesson. Henceforth, I shall give all my attention to personal work among men. The Army is the greatest field for a Clergyman that the country affords."

Now a word as to the kind of men that are being selected for Camp Secretaries. Young men,—men in their twenties,—are not being taken. This would create a suspicion that "slackers" were using the Brotherhood of St. Andrew to escape military duty, and it would create an unfavorable impression among the men.

The Camp Secretaries are, for the most part, men in the late thirties or early forties. This places them beyond all suspicion of being in the slacker class.

Moreover, it has a salutary effect upon the enlisted men.

The boys are rough and ready; they call the Camp Secretary "Pop," "Dad," "Cap" or "Colonel," according to their fancy; but if the Brotherhood man adopted, adopts the proper method of approach, these titles soon acquire a spirit of good fellowship which makes the recipient rather proud of them.

Those fellows in the ranks are so approachable. They are so lonesome, so eager to obtain real fellowship. Away from home, with an unknown future before them, they do a great deal of thinking as they lay awake in their bunks at night. Home, parents, friends, sweethearts are far away. They are part of a great military machine, and at times they are apt to become bitter.

When a man is in this condition of mind, he is apt to grasp at true friendship as a drowning man grasps at straws.

Here is the Camp Secretary's opportunity. He approaches the enlisted man in the spirit of Christ, not with any mawkish sentiment or piety, but with a wholesome Christian fellowship that warms the soul.

Only a few words are needed to establish an acquaintance, and the rest is easy. The enlisted man readily talks of the section of the country he comes from, of home, and, after a little tactful approach, of his religious life.

What experiences the Camp Secretaries have!

Think of the soldier, lying in the hospital with several ribs fractured from the kick of a horse, who confessed to a Camp Secretary that he had not opened a Bible for 15 years.

How gladly he accepted one, and, during the days which followed, how eagerly he scanned the pages.

And he shed tears,—by his own confession,—when he read of Jesus' farewell to His disciples.

A little man went up to the camp at ——— to distribute Bibles. They sought to turn him away, believing he was a salesman.

"Bless you, I'm not selling them; I'm giving them away," he told the Adjutant.

Whereupon he gave the officer a handsomely-bound copy.

"Do you mean to say this is a gift?" asked the officer, rubbing his fingers across the handsome leather cover.

The "Bible salesman" explained that the copy the officer was holding was given only to officers. He had copies bound in plainer style for the privates.

"My friend," said the Adjutant, "you can distribute your Bibles in any and every part of this camp. And if anyone tries to prevent, just say that I gave you permission."

And that man distributed 1156 Testaments in that camp.

Southern Ohio Notes

The Clergy of the Diocese were invited by Bishop Vincent to spend a "Quiet Day" with him at the Cathedral on Jan. 25th. The occasion was the 29th anniversary of the Bishop's consecration. The program consisted of Holy Communion at 11 a. m., luncheon at noon in the Cathedral House, and a two hour's service of prayer in the afternoon. The Bishop's theme at the morning service was, "The World's Peace and the Church's Peace."

The Lenten noon-day speakers at the Lyric Theatre in Cincinnati will this year be entertained at luncheon each Monday by the Cincinnati clericus. This will give an opportunity to the speakers and local Clergy to meet in a social way. These luncheons will be given at the Cathedral House.

The Lenten speakers are as follows:

Feb. 13-15—Bishop Reese.
Feb. 18-22—Rev. J. A. Schaad.
Feb. 25-Mch. 1—Bishop Tuttle.
Mch. 4-8—Rev. Frederick Edwards.
Mch. 11-15—Rev. F. R. Godolphin.
Mch. 18-22—Rev. Karl Reiland.
Mch. 25-29—Rev. Harvey Officer, O. H. C.

The Rev. Dr. W. A. McClenthen of Mt. Calvary Church, Baltimore, has been secured by the Executive Committee of the Diocesan Women's Auxiliary to conduct a series of Quiet Days,—one in each convocation,—for the Auxiliary women. In Dayton the Quiet Day will be held at Christ Church on Wednesday, January 30th; in Cincinnati at the Cathedral on January 31st; and in Columbus at St. Paul's Church on February 1st. Luncheon will be served at the Church in each case in order that those attending way avail themselves of the opportunity to remain to the afternoon as well as the morning session.

An Honor Roll of war service has been made up for insertion in the next catalog of Kenyon College. The record shows that 201 Kenyon men have enlisted, which is 170 per cent of the average annual student attendance for the past 20 years. Few American Colleges, if any, have reported a proportionate enlistment which approaches this record. A Kenyon Service Flag will shortly be hung in the College Chapel.

B. S. A. Secretary at Camp Cody Expresses Thanks

The following is an excerpt from a letter written to the News Editor of THE WITNESS by Mr. Doyle E. Hinton, Brotherhood of St. Andrew Secretary in war service at Camp Cody, N. M.: "In your Christmas number you made an appeal for me in behalf of sick and homeless boys at Camp Cody. I wish to thank you for this. The response was prompt and generous from all over the country, and nothing brought so much joy to these sick boys as did the packages which came to me as a result of your article. Please run a card or note of thanks for me in your next issue. I have written to thank all the senders who gave me their names and addresses, but in some cases they did not do this, and I am very anxious that all should be thanked."

What can we do about it? And some of the ladies want strawberry ice cream and some want vanilla, and Mrs. Evans says that if we have vanilla she won't come nor help because vanilla disagrees with her husband. Mrs. Evans is the only one who can tell fortunes. What can we do about it? The Printing Co. has refused to furnish both posters and handbills. It is real mean of them. They printed my sister's wedding invitations five years ago, too. Would you be willing to put the notices in the papers? They will do it for you free, I think, if you go directly to the manager. Could you see to it this afternoon? And, by the way, Mr. X——— promised us a dollar if someone would call for it. I am sure he would be flattered to have you call. I forgot to ask if your wife would bake two cakes and sell a few tickets? I shall send over twenty-five and if she needs more I have them here and you could drop in. I want to talk over a few things with you, anyway. Would your wife attend to the candy booth? Please tell her that we start to decorate at 10 in the morning. If you could drop around at that time it would please the people and you could help the hired man put up the tents. And would you mind asking Jimmy Ranney to make candy? He would do it for you. He has no telephone but he works in the ——— factory and he can be seen at 11:30 as he comes out to lunch. Well, I must stop. If the weather is fine it will be a big success. Don't worry about it at all, and don't think you must take any responsibility for it. Our Aid Society is anxious to do all the work and relieve you of the details of these things. Good-bye."

(The Minister heaves three sighs and thinks of having a sudden call to leave town. He recalls, however, the things of real moment and readjusts his week's work in his mind.)

11:15 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Is this the minister? This is Sam Hibbard. I have lost my job and my rent is due and I can't pay it, and I want you to help me get another job. Could you come down town this afternoon and meet me?"

(Minister recalls his promise to the afflicted family, and replies that he is sorry, but he cannot meet Sam until later.)

Telephone.—"Well, tomorrow will have to do, then, but in the meantime the grocer will not give me credit. I wish you could come this afternoon. It is only Tuesday and you have all the rest of the week to write your sermon."

Minister.—"Then I'll meet you at 4 o'clock at the hotel. How did you come to lose your job?"

Telephone.—"Another fellow called me a quitter because I was not working as fast as he was, so I hit him. No man as is a man will stand being called a quitter. The boss fired me. A fellow has got to live and I must find a job. My wife and children must eat."

Minister.—"Why didn't you think of that before you hit your man?"

Telephone.—"Stand being guyed by that fellow? I guess not. Well, I'll expect you at 4 o'clock."

11:25 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"At what hour are your Sunday services?"

(This question comes at stated intervals during the week.)

11:35 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Is this Mr. Blank? Do you know that Mrs. Watson's mother-in-law is ill?"

(Mrs. Watson is an irregular attendant, and her mother-in-law an out-and-out member of another Church.)

Minister.—"No, I did not know it."

Telephone.—"Well, she is. She took cold coming home from a card party and is quite sick. I know that she is not a member of your Church, but she is very lonely, as she has so few neighbors. I am sure that she would like you to call. She lives at 993 Vine Street. Look out for the dog. It bit two strangers yesterday."

11:40 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"This is Attorney Cadman. I sent you a document yesterday asking you to read it and call me up by telephone at 10 o'clock. I waited ten minutes and you did not call up. Now, sir, what do you propose to do with that document?"

Minister.—"I am sorry, Mr. Cadman, but I have not yet opened my mail. I shall do so at once and call you up."

Telephone (sotto voce).—"Hang a man who works one day a week and does not open his mail until noon. That is the trouble with the ministry. Too many men in it who know nothing of business and have not enough to do to keep their minds active."

11:43 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Mr. Blank, I have wished to tell you how much I appreciate the words of encouragement you spoke to me on Sunday. They have helped me very much indeed."

(These are the rewards of the work and the Minister receives them humbly and gratefully.)

Should this report prompt you to hesitate to bring any real trouble or need or inquiry to the parson, even over the telephone, you do injustice to his devotion to his work and his desire to help you.)

10:15 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Is this the Reverend Mr. Blank?"

It was. This fact seemed not unexpected to the speaker, who immediately began.)

"Ah, Doctor (base flattery), I had occasion to pass through your delightful town on my way to New York and I gave myself the pleasure of stopping off in hopes of having a short interview with you, if I may take the liberty of intruding upon your valuable time. I am a member of your denomination and if you could spare me a minute I shall be very glad to see you at your residence."

Minister (with intuition).—"I have but a few minutes to spare, but if you will come right up I shall see you."

Telephone.—"Thank you, my dear sir. I appreciate the cordiality of your invitation and I shall repair at once to your home."

Minister (briefly).—"All right. Come along."

10:30 a. m.—Brrrrrr (this interrupts the book agent and helps to that extent).

Telephone.—"Is this Dr. Blank? (More flattery.) This is Miss Strong, secretary of the New Thought Society. Will you please announce from your pulpit next Sunday that Dr. S—— will give a lecture on Monday evening on the 'Passing of the Churches.' We want your congregation to attend. I shall send some circulars which your ushers can pass around during a hymn. How many will you need?"

Minister (who is able to see a joke). —"You might send me two hundred." (Handy for shaving papers.)

Telephone.—"You will announce the meeting, will you not?"

Minister (who hates to tell a lie even to a total stranger).—"Perhaps you might better send me three hundred. It may be a pleasant Sunday and a large congregation. Good-bye."

10:40 a. m.—Brrrrrr (Agent gets restless and misses his best paragraph).

Telephone.—"Can you tell me the address of John Jones?"

(Information given. Minister expects soon to be asked to call and deliver postage stamps.)

10:50 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Mr. Blank, would you mind stepping over to your neighbor, Mrs. M———, and asking her if she said she used one or two cups of milk in the candy she wants me to make for the lawn fete?"

(This puts the agent to rout, as the Minister says he must leave the house.)

11:00 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Mr. Blank, this is Mrs. R———."

(Mrs. R——— is the president of the Ladies' Aid Society. The Minister lights a pipe with one hand, and settles back for a session.)

Telephone.—"Preparations for our lawn fete are going nicely, but there are several things undone. I do not believe Mrs. D——— will send a cake.

Advertising the Church

The Rev. John Boden, Rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, St. Louis, Mo., gave a notable address before the Convention of Advertising Men of the State of Minnesota, held in St. Paul, Jan. 22-23, on "Advertising the Church". He said in part:

"Is there any reason why the Church should not advertise? I know of none, unless it be found in the words of Jesus, 'The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light'. The business world has much to teach the Church along the lines of doing business in a businesslike way.

"There are various reasons why the Church should advertise. The first is found in its relation to 'big business'. It is the oldest business corporation doing business in the world today. It alone is entitled to the distinction of being an 'old line company'. The Missionaries of the Church, to whom many business men refuse support, have opened up more markets for marketable goods than the 'drummers' of any other business concern.

"As the Missionary taught men and women the gospel of right living, he created a demand, among other things, for proper clothing. He taught them to build houses and furnish them, hence the demand for furniture of various kinds. He taught them to till the soil, and in due time agricultural implements of all kinds were in demand.

"Presbyterinas tell us, and with more truth than the business world appreciates, that the graduates of McCormick Theological Seminary precede the McCormick reaper. Trades were taught and markets for machinery and tools of various descriptions were opened.

"Another reason for advertising the Church is to be found in the business interests of the Church. It has property interests greater than those of any other business corporation. To place a valuation on all Church properties, such as Church buildings, Hospitals, Schools, Orphanages, Asylums and Homes of various kinds, and multiplied other buildings and grounds, will convince one of the fact that he is dealing with a really big business enterprise.

"Also, the funds handled by the Church are larger than those handled by any other business concern. This may sound like a misstatement of the facts, but you will appreciate the force of it when you realize that the Church handles no funds for personal profit."

As an example of this, the speaker called attention to funds handled by the Board of Missions, and the $8,000,000 Pension Fund for the clergy, and stated that when we consider the great investment of public funds in the work of the Church, we begin to realize the importance of this matter of advertising. The public has a right to expect returns from its investment.

"Advertisement not only means publicity, but it also means dollars and cents. The public furnishing the working capital should be assured that we are doing everything in our power legitimately to increase the capital. Legitimate advertising will furnish a further guarantee.

"The chief reason why the Church should advertise is found in the fact that the Church is in the world for business. If it is not, then it has no business in the world.

"The Church has a definite mission and message affecting the whole of life, collectively and individually. We have certain goods to deliver, and, like the business men, we must believe in their merits. The preacher who does not believe in his business had better give place to one who does. The Church has no reason to be ashamed of giving publicity to either its mission or work. Both should be extensively advertised."

Under the leadership of Mrs. Thos. Riggs, Jr., and Mrs. Ryus, niece of Bishop Rowe, over $2,000 were secured at Nenana, Alaska, for one particular item of Red Cross work.

Bishop McCormick Writes Dean White

Paris, Jan. 3rd, 1918.

Very Rev. Francis S. White,
Waco, Texas.

My dear Dean:

As I wrote you, I spent part of the Christmas Season with our troops in a certain historic French city, near which several of our camps are stationed. In case the letter may have miscarried, I may repeat that I held three services for them, made an address at the Christmas entertainment provided for the troops by the French residents of the city and visited our men who were sick in the French Military Hospitals. It was a joy to see the men make their Christmas Communion, and to hear them sing the familiar Christmas hymns.

Bishop Israel spent his Christmas with the troops in another section, and both of us are expecting to be out again next Sunday. Bishop Brent, who is on a special tour for the Y. M. C. A., will be in Paris next Saturday and Sunday, and will take part in a meeting arranged by the French, English and Americans in connection with a Sunday of Intercession for the allied cause. My journey next Sunday is to be to an aviation camp of many thousands of men who have no Chaplain, and in which it is very desirable for us to hold services.

Our Church people will be interested in knowing that my office here, as representing the War Commission and thus representing the Church itself, has already given material aid to our soldiers and sailors in the shape of 3,000 pairs of socks, many sweaters, helmets, gloves, shirts, etc., several hundred first rate books, magazines and papers, and has also supplied the Chaplains with portable Altars, Communion linen, wafers, etc. We could use thousands of Prayer Books and Hymnals, (especially those with tunes), and Bibles. We are hoping to receive a large consignment at an early date. There are now about fifty of our Clergy overseas, as Army Chaplains, Base Hospital Chaplains, Y. M. C. A. or Red Cross workers, etc. I have either seen or conferred with all of them.

Today I was able to send to a mother and father, through the Rector of their Parish, the details as to the death and burial of their son, who died from an accident on one of the aviation fields, and was buried in the neighboring city.

You may be interested in the report, just rendered to me, by Dr. Maxon of Christ Church, Detroit, Chaplain of Base Hospital No. 36, as to a recent funeral service held by him.

"I had my first burial service yesterday, a private from Alabama. His body was laid in the local cemetery in a plot the Government has received from the French. The Mayor of the town, several French officers, four Roman Catholic Sisters, with some more civilians, were in the procession with our officers and enlisted men. The American flag was about the plain wooden coffin and a French flag, at the suggestion of the Mayor, was also draped about it. At the head of the grave was placed a wooden cross with the name and company of the dead soldier. I made a brief address at the grave and read the Committal Service of the Church, and the bugler sounded "Taps." I have another burial tomorrow of a private from Louisiana. These sad things will increase as our Hospital will be equipped for 3,000 patients. There are not enough hours in the day for me to fulfill my work, but it is a most impressive and an endlessly interesting work."

Thus the Church is doing at least something to meet the needs of the men, both as to temporal and spiritual requirements, and the enterprise of the War Commission in sending representatives abroad seems to be justified a thousand-fold. I am now organizing for the Red Cross a Corps of Auxiliary Chaplains for emergency and relief work, which will co-operate with the Base Hospital Chaplains, and also supply services in hospitals and camps where there are no Commission Chaplains, and be available for general duty as circumstances may require. The Reverend Sherrard Billings is already on the way to act as Chaplain at one of the hospitals in Paris and other men have been cabled for.

On Christmas Day I preached in the American Church in Paris, and on the Sunday following Christmas in the British Embassy Church. New Year's Day, after the morning service, I had luncheon with ten sailors and soldiers at a luncheon arranged by two of our Churchwomen, and on Christmas Day we were able to place sixty men for dinner with American hostesses. In the afternoon of New Year's Day I visited American Red Cross Military Hospital No. 3, which has been established and is to be maintained by Mrs. Whitelaw Rei[illegible] for American officers, and yesterday I visited American Red Cross Hospital No. 2, in both of which we shall arrange for services.

So the work goes on. There will of necessity be a great deal of sickness this Winter, and every one is trying to keep the men in good spirits, and to help them to be fine and fit for their great task. May God help us!

Yours sincerely,

JNO. W. McCORMICK.

With Bishop Lloyd to Liberia

Since Bishop Lloyd sailed for Africa many Church folk must have been studying their Atlases and Gazetteers, and so feel better acquainted with Liberia than ever before. Some may have read the book on the little Republic, "Liberia," by Francis Starr, Professor in the University of Chicago, published in that city in 1915; some have sent to the Library at the Church Missions House and borrowed from its shelves one of the quaint old volumes, "History of the African Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church," by Mrs. E. F. Hening, (1849), "Day Dawn in Africa," by Mrs. Anna M. Scott, (1858); others have looked through files of Missionary Reports and The Spirit of Missions; and all with the same intent, that when Bishop Lloyd comes home with his story they shall be the better able to appreciate what he will have to tell. And we cannot doubt that as their knowledge of Liberia, of its past, its present, its future, has increased, their prayers have been more constant for Bishop Lloyd, for Archdeacon Schofield, his companion, and for the Mission to which they have gone.

The latest review of the field appeared in an article by Miss M. S. Ridgely of Cape Mount, which was printed in two sections in The Spirit of Missions for July, 1917, pp. 501-503, and October, pp. 716, 717, and which sketched the Mission from her twelve years' acquaintance.

Before Bishop Lloyd sailed another woman conversant with the West Coast was consulted, and Miss Woodruff's calm, matter of fact statements were reassuring to friends to whom the words "West Coast" represent certain illness and much risk. A woman who has ten times crossed the Atlantic and spent five terms in Liberia should know something of what she speaks. "Africa is not at all terrible as Africa," was Miss Woodruff's verdict. "Under present conditions Bishop Lloyd may not be able to do all he would like and could do at other times, but there is no reason why he should not be comfortable." "Everyone does not have the fever; after five years Miss Conway has just had her first at all serious attack." "People imagine a great deal." "Provide for both warm and cool weather." "Be careful, and use common sense." What good advice for visitors to new places, even Africa!

A warm welcome, kind care, friendly suggestions for health and comfort, all these might be expected; but rides by canoe, oxcart or hammock must be depended on for the interior, the uncertain, infrequent steamer for the coast, unless—and the chance seemed most uncertain—the Mission launch, "John Payne" were not out of commission.

Our latest letter from Mrs. Moort at Bromley, twelve miles up the St. Paul's River, gives a cheering glimpse of what our Commission to Liberia may find.

"The eighth year of our School life opens with a large enrolment of girls. The farm clearing has been extended, and there is prospect of a good yield of breadstuffs. The kitchen garden, too, promises good results, for the girls, with the matron, have spent much time in planting and caring for cucumbers, tomatoes, string beans, egg plants, collards and okra. The store rooms, cooking, bread making, laundry, dormitories, in fact the entire building are under the care of the matron and her young assistant, who are indefatigible in training the girls in useful ways. We have a Guild and Chancel Society, and the girls are being taught to care for the Chapel at Bromley. The Bible and Prayer Book lessons are carefully kept up. The girls are improving in singing and are learning to give more expression to the beautiful words they sing. I am hoping that a class will be ready for Confirmation when we are again privileged to have a Bishop with us."

When Mrs. Moort thus wrote she did not dream that Bishop might be Bishop Lloyd, and among the happiest experiences of his visit must be a Confirmation such as this.

A CAMP SECRETARY'S LETTER

A Brotherhood of St. Andrew Man Describes Conditions in One of the Western Cantonments

Dear Friend F———:

During the last ten days we have had dreadful weather—sand storms and rain. In the midst of it, one of my boys was critically ill in the hospital, and this took me out a great deal at night in the bad weather. I caught a severe cold, and the hospital corps insisted that I come "over there" and go to bed. They treated me splendidly—it seemed as if they could not do enough for me. I am better now, and hope to be hard at work in the near future.

Chaplain F———, with my assistance, is about to get authority from Divisional Headquarters to establish a Chapel at X———. This will be a splendid thing, if we can manage it. We will convert a mess hall into a Chapel, build chancel and Altar, rent chairs and buy stoves and fuel. The Division will use it as a school on week days, and we are to have it for services in the evenings and on Sundays. The Churchmen are enthusiastic over the plan, but none more so than the Chaplain and I. Heretofore, the celebration and the Church service have been very indefinite. The men will not go to the little Church in M——— in any great numbers, nor with any regularity. Several of the boys have told me that they will not go again to the service in town.. We have some of the finest Churchmen in X——— that I have ever known, but the situation is peculiar, and I have difficulty in getting the men banded together for Church work. I feel that if we can get the Chapel through it will fill a long-felt need.

Bishop Q——— was in M——— last Saturday, and came to camp to see me. He has authorized the Rector of the local Church to spend $300 fitting up two vacant rooms at the Rectory as recreation rooms for the Churchmen.

It is a difficult task to find Churchmen, as the Chaplains will not give out the names of the men belonging to the various denominations. There is no denominational census, and the rules are very strict about such things. The Chaplain and I, with the assistance of two or three devoted Churchmen, have come into touch with more than 300 men, and we are constantly discovering others.

One of our boys—by the way, he is a Brotherhood boy—was in town with me a few days ago, and I told him we hoped to have a regular Communion celebration in camp. He was so happy that he gave three yells at the top of his voice, right there in the street. People must have thought he was crazy. He is a very High Churchman, and misses his service very much.

It is almost impossible to get the men together, even by pre-arranged plans, for there are a thousand things they have to do—drills, lectures, detail and school nearly every evening, and when they have an evening off they like to get away from camp. I seem to obtain my best results by getting them to Church occasionally and getting them to read and think holy things. I urge them to adhere to the teachings of the Church, and never forget to pray.

Most of the men I have encountered are living the right kind of life, and and are willing to build up the Prayer, Personal Work and Communion service. I made a canvass of 100 men last week, and found only two non-confessing Christians among them.

My hospital work is a pleasure to me. Some of my best personal work has been done there.

With best wishes and warmest personal regards, I am ever,

Faithfully yours,

X. Y. Z.

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE ADVENT OF SPRING

When sweet Lady Spring was all ready to make her appearance upon the earth once more, she wondered who she could find to go out and announce her approach, for Spring is Queen of all this wide world and must have her heralds and her train.

She called together all who loved her and asked of them who would go and tell the boys and girls, and men and women, that the cold and the snow, and the ice and cutting winds, had gone far, far away and that they would see them no more, for this year at least. And when she called, the Robin came, and the Bluebird, the Butterfly and the Bee. There came also the Green Grass and the Leaves on the Trees, the Crocus and the Spring Beauties, the Violet and the Dandelion, and out of the deep woods came the Arbutus and the Anemone. The warm, bright Sun came also and the gently falling Raindrop and a soft murmuring Wind. And each one said in a most pleading voice, "Dear Lady Spring, I want to go. Please let me go and be your herald."

The gracious and lovely Queen smiled sweetly upon them and her heart throbbed warmly as she thus learned of their generous loyalty. But how could she choose? How could she say to one, stay, and to another, go, when all were so earnest and desirous? So it all ended by her saying to them, "Dear children, I cannot choose between you. You shall all be my heralds. Let the Birds sing their merriest songs, the Butterflies flash their brilliant colors and the Bees hum. Let the Grass send forth its green shoots to gladden the eyes of men. And you, Dandelion and Violet and Crocus, blossom out and dot the green with many a bright color, and fill ye all the air with odors sweet. and as for you, Arbutus and Anemone, send forth your fragrance through forests. Raindrop and Wind and Sunbeam shall help you, and all this great world shall know that Lady Spring is here."

Thus the Heralds went forth upon their ways and then comes Spring, and in her train come Rose and Sweet Pea and Marigold and Mignonette. The trees blossomed, the crickets chirped, the air hummed with joy, and life touched everything around.

Spokane Notes

An increasing interest is being shown all over the District in the work of the Sunday Schools, and in some cases the Christian Nurture Series adopted. Two successful meetings of the Spokane clergy and their Sunday School Teachers have been held this year already at All Saints' Chapter House, the first being addressed by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Page, Bishop of the District, and the second by the Rev. Gilbert W. Laidlaw, Rector at Pullman, and in each case much interesting discussion resulted.

The District is now divided into five Deaneries, the latest of which is the Spokane Deanery, which has taken the place of the former Clericus, and of which the Very Rev. W. C. Hicks, D. D., is Dean.

Holy Trinity Church, Spokane, of which the Rev. J. A. Palmer is Rector, has undergone some extensive improvements and it is now one of the most Churchly edifices in the District of Spokane. Considering the limited space, it would be very hard to conceive a better arrangement than has been made, and much credit is due to all who had a share in the work of reconstruction.

St. Thomas' Church, for the Colored people of Spokane, has as its new Vicar the Rev. M. J. Stevens of Epiphany, Hillyard. The congregations are steadily increasing and the outlook is brighter now than for many years past.

St. Matthew's Church, Spokane, has a Service Flag with nineteen stars, and at every service the lads are remembered by name in the closing prayers and the Ladies' Guild is doing what it can to make the parents of the boys interested in the work of the Church.

A Parish That Knows How to Advertise

On Septuagesima Sunday at St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill., the afternoon service was one of thanksgiving at the close of a week's campaign for weekly pledges to Parish, Missions and the Building Fund. This drive, from Jan. 20 to 27 was preceded by a rally of men at the Parish House on the evening of January 19th. The canvass was made in zones, with a Vestryman in charge of each and assisted by Vestry associates. A unique feature of the campaign was the issueance of a daily paper which went to all parishioners. The first issue was just in the press when the coal order shut the printers down and it was necessary to secure a page in the local newspaper instead. This page was rented for six days, and each day brought to each parishioner seven colunms of live messages on the Church and its work.

Meeting of the Anglican Eastern Association

The Anglican Eastern Association met in New York and held its annual service in old Trinity Church, Sunday afternoon, Jan. 20th. Both Anglican and Orthodox Clergy were in the procession and the sermon was delivered by the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Parker, D. D., Bishop of New Hampshire, who is Anglican President of the Association. At midnight a service of thanksgiving for the deliverance of Jerusalem was held, under the auspices of the Association, in the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn. Greek, Syrian, Serbian and Armenian ecclesiastics were in the procession in their robes. Bishop Parker delivered an appropriate sermon, taking for the text, Gal. 4:26, "Jerusalem which is above is free." After the sermon the Armenian Archbishop delivered a message of greeting in his own tongue, which was interpreted to the congregation. The benediction was pronounced by the Syrian Orthodox Archbishop Germanos. The order of service was especially authorized for the occasion by the Bishop of Long Island, and the music embraced Gregorian and Russian selections.

The Conference opened on Monday morning in the Church of the Redeemer with a choral celebration of the Holy Communion, at which Bishop Courtney officiated. The music was rendered by a choir of students from the General Theological Seminary, with Dr. Clement R. Gale at the organ.

At the close of this service Bishop Parker called the Association to order for a consideration of the "Mutual Relations of the Anglican and Orthodox Churches." The discussion was introduced by Bishop Courtney. Its various phases were presented in apt addresses by Rev. G. W. Hodge, D. D., Rev. Arcady Piotrowsky and Miss Isabel Hapgood. Luncheon was served to the delegates and guests in the Redeemer Parish Hall. The Annual Meeting followed, at which reports were presented and routine business transacted. The same officers were elected for another year, as follows:

Presidents: The Rt. Rev. Edward M. Parker, D. D., Bishop of New Hampshire; the Very Rev. Leonid J. Turkevich. Vice-Presidents: The Rt. Rev. James H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop of Harrisburg; the Rev. Nicholas Lazaris. Secretary: The Rev. William Chauncey Emhardt. Treasurer: Charles G. Saunders, Esq.

At 3 p. m. a public mass meeting was held. Long before the hour the body of the Church was well filled with an interested congregation. Bishop Parker presided and the Rev. Prof. Jenks of the General Theological Seminary was the first speaker. Other speakers were Dr. V. R. Savics, author of "South Eastern Europe"; Archimandrite Sebastian of the Serbian Church in America; the Very Rev. Michael Tlinsky, Dean of the Russian Theological Seminary; the Very Rev. Dean Fosbrooke of the G. T. S., and the Rev. Michael Dziama. At 5 o'clock the recently appointed Syrian Orthodox Bishop of Brooklyn, his Grace, Aftimius, arrived, attended by his Chaplain, and was escorted to the chancel by a committee consisting of Bishop Courtney, Dean Fosbrooke and Dr. Lacey. Bishop Parker received him and presented him to the conference. Aftimius delivered a message of greeting in Arabic, which was translated by his Chaplain, the Very Rev. Basil Kerbawy, Dean of St. Nicholis Syrian Cathedral.

The session was prolonged far beyond the scheduled hour and adjourned to the Greek Church of the Annunciation in New York, where the closing service was held. The Greek Church Choir and the Vested Choir of the Church of the Redeemer rendered the music. An address was delivered in Greek by the Pastor, Rev. Nicholas Lazaris, Vice-President of the Association. The Greek exarch, Dr. Solon Vlastos, spoke in English for the Greek community, after which Bishop Parker made the closing address, summing up in a masterly way the whole situation as regards the relation of the Churches. There was a congregation of some 700 or 800 people, both Greek and American, and the service made a profound impression. The next Annual Meeting will probably be held in Detroit.

Notes from the Missions House

Japanese young women are beginning to make the acquaintance of the typewriter. Not a machine that writes the weird Chinese characters that constitute Japan's written language, but a real American machine that writes perfectly good English. This is one of the recent developments of St. Agnes' School, Kyoto.

Miss Etta McGrath, who went from St. Luke's Church, Montclair, N. J., last Summer to be Bishop Tucker's Secretary and to help in a number of other ways, writes that on April 1st she is to become instructor of typewriting at St. Agnes'. The trouble is she has not a single machine other than the one she uses for Bishop Tucker's work. She needs three machines of standard make. Rebuilt machines, costing approximately $50 each, will serve the need.

Would any young woman who is familiar with writing machines like to form a Typewriter Guild to supply at least one machine?

Would any business man, who knows the necessity and mechanical assistance of a typewriter in modern business, like to give another?

If the first two are given, there will be no difficulty in getting the third.

Mr. John W. Wood, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, will be glad to supply further particulars.

The many friends of Bishop Roots of Hankow, who were not a little concerned about his health last Summer, will be glad to know that in a recent letter the Bishop says:

"I never felt better in my life and I am sure that the visit to Shihan, has been not only a good thing from the point of view of our Mission work in general, but also of my personal health in particular. I have travelled a distance of about 300 miles over the hills and walked about two-thirds of the distance, possibly more than that, and the whole trip has been a delightful one in almost every way. I am quite sure, however, that there is no place in the Diocese where conditions are more primitive or the darkness and ignorance of heathenism more oppressive than they are in this Shihnan region, all of which, of course, makes this work all the more important."

COUNTRY MISSIONS IN HAITI

On Saturday, January 19th, the Rev. A. R. Lloyd, late Rector of St. Luke's Church, Hot Springs, Arkansas, and now appointed, as Bishop Colmore's commissary, Archbishop for Haiti, sailed from New York for Port au Prince. Archdeacon Lloyd goes to a field which to many of our Church people is practically unknown. The following letter, received three days after the Archdeacon sailed, presents an interesting account of the conditions that may welcome him, outside the city.. It is written by Mrs. Battiste, who as a girl was with the Sisters in Baltimore. She is now Secretary of the Haiti Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, and wife of the Rev. A. Battiste, in charge of the District of Leogane. The date is January 11.

"Just now everything seems to have come to a standstill in the life of the Church. The war has paralyzed nearly every branch of operation. Being entirely out of the way of contact, the people feel the effects of the war but not the stimulating motive making it necessary to act.

"We began our round of Christmas visits on Christmas Eve, arriving in Leogone in time for the midnight celebration; and really we had such a cold wave, we could have believed ourselves up North! The Church was so packed that there was no kneeling room.

Christmas morning we were at Bigonie; St. Stephen's at Dufort; St. John's at Deslandes; on Sunday it was Milton Citronnier; Monday the farthest point, Aelie Citronnier, where it began to rain, making the roads slippery and nearly impassible, and some places so dangerous that we had to get down and be dragged up the mountains by our guides, putting our feet in the footsteps of the horses that had preceded us, and all that in the bitterest of cold weather. We were so cold we had no heart to admire the beautiful scenery laid out before us and to give more than a passing glance at the orange and shadduck trees laden with their golden fruit, wasted for means of transportation on the crest of those mountains. New Year's Day we were at the real Oranger, still wet and cold. But weather makes no difference to those sturdy mountaineers; they simply drink a cup of coffee and go on their way rejoicing. This being the coffee season, every house is well provided with this wholesome beverage, and the Chapels were full to over-flowing with grown people and children. The day after New Year's we were at Petit Moucan, and still it rained; but the next day saw us, still in the rain, on our way to the city of Leogane, and on the Epiphany our little congregation at Thor kept their Christmas, for which they had been preparing for weeks and weeks. The place was crowded, and we will soon have to build a Chapel for them, but there is no help—everybody has their hands full as it is."

Death of the Rev. J. E. Curzon

A meager report comes to our desk announcing the sudden death of the Rev. John Edward Curzon, Rector for the past year of St. John's Church, Ft. Smith, Ark., on Saturday, January 19th, while travelling on a troop train into Ft. Smith. Mr. Smith was born at Darien, Conn., December 26th, 1863, was a graduate of St. Stephen's College and of the Nashotah Theological Seminary. Bishop J. H. H. Brown, ordained him to the Diaconate in 1888, and the following year he was advanced to the Priesthood by Bishop Pierce. He spent his Ministry in Arkansas, Pennsylvania and Michigan, serving faithfully and well in a number of Parishes and Missions. He was Secretary of the Fifth Missionary Department from 1911 to 1914, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Marquette from 1914 to 1917, alternate Deputy to the General Convention from Arkansas in 1889, a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, and Deputy to the General Convention from Marquettee from 1898 to 1913.

Dr. Birckhead of Baltimore Addresses Audiences in Illinois

The Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead, Rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, Md., spoke at St. Mary's Hall, Evanston, Ill., on Saturday evening, January 26th, under the auspices of the Evanston War Council. On the following Sunday morning he preached in St. Luke's Church, and in the evening gave an address before the Sunday Evening Club of the First Methodist Church, Evanston.

Dr. Birckhead has just returned from the Front, where he went last June as an inspector of the American Red Cross. In this position he had unexampled opportunity for visiting the various battle lines, hospitals, munition plants, etc. He was present during the violent attack and counter-attack on the line in Belgium; under the guidance of a Rear Admiral of the British fleet he visited the North Sea fleet; he went up 5,000 feet in a hydroplane; took a trip in a submarine; visited Switzerland and interviewed distinguished German officers there; preached in York Cathedral, Manchester Cathedral, St. Margaret's, Westminster, St. Martin's, London, and other important places, and always to huge congregations. At his Church in Baltimore where he has been giving a series of Sunday evening addresses on the war, hundreds have been turned away every night.

Dr. Birckhead is a remarkable man,—a young man still in the forties who is recognized in Baltimore as one of the leaders in every religious and civic movement. At the age of 26 he succeeded Dr. Rainsford as Rector at St. George's Church, New York City, a Church of more than 5,000 communicants, the largest single congregation in the American Episcopal Church. His Senior Warden was Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. After a very successful ministry there of six or seven years he resigned in order to exercise his ministry as a Priest and Pastor in a smaller congregation where he could know his people more intimately. He is a man of magnetic personality, of powerful physical, intellectual, and spiritual affairs.

An Altar rail of Convent Sienna marble has been placed in the Cathedral at Garden City, being given by Mrs. J. H. Aldrich. It is hand carved and designed to conform to the Gothic architecture of the Church. The gate is of perforated cast bronze, finished in dull gold. The whole is said to be exquisitely beautiful. Other recent gifts to the Cathedral have been morocco-bound books for the Bishop's, Dean's and Clergy stalls; two cruets, especially designed. The Cathedral congregation, on the appeal of the Dean, provide six hundred New Testaments for soldiers in the Rainbow Division, then at Camp Mills, now in France. These bocks bore the arms of the Diocese on their front cover. They were highly appreciated by the men who received them.

POVERTY AND THE CHURCH

With a Few Words About Mr. Sunday

By Dean Walter S. Pond, Chicago

I am absolutely convinced that Christ said, "The poor ye have with you always", because the curse of poverty is providentially ordained for our good. I know no better way to keep people from poverty than first to permit them to suffer poverty. Those who have had comfortable circumstances, or much more than comfortable circumstances, who fall down into poverty, are seldom able to recover their senses again. That is my belief, after seven years' experience in one of the most poverty-stricken districts in Chicago. But the poor who begin with poverty suffer so terribly under that system that if they can once see a ray of hope (that they may follow to get out of their sufferings), they will never take any chances again at being poor.

And in the Episcopal Church, when we are wiser, we will pay more attention towards remedying the awful conditions of poverty-stricken humanity. Amongst my personal friends, of valuable Church members, with two exceptions, the very generously minded rich Senior Wardens that I know (and I know them by the dozens) are men who won their riches after having first tasted poverty. Therefore, we will get more money when we educate our wealthy Church members in the matter of Church support, even as far back as the days when they had most direful want. And if we are going to train up these rich Church members in that way we may have to use our poor boxes for the poor, and some of our Missionary barrels of old clothes, not only for the heathen districts in Western fields and foreign countries, but also for the heathen and foreign precincts in wards of some of our more fortunate American cities. It may be necessary to have Church Employment Bureaus, too, and Church offices may have to connect up with legal Aid Societies and Hospital Superintendents also. In other words, the poor suffer too much to be able to think at times. And the clergy need to remember that the poor woman who has had no breakfast that morning, and who has no car fare in her pocket, is physically unable to walk the two miles to the nearest organization that can remedy her difficulty, even if we do fill her with advice. All these are ways of fighting poverty that may cost much or little, but they should not be unwelcome ways, if we really want our buildings filled.

According to the 31st verse of the 21st chapter of the Gospel of St. Matthew, Christ said that "Harlots went into the Kingdom of Heaven before some of the Church members of His day". As some of us are aware of the dreadful price for the apathy of many of our Church members of today, we could speak almost as frankly, if we dared to. Only in those Churches where men's sins are being frankly mentioned is there any fear that the seats won't be sufficient. We need to speak in the common language understanded of the common people. If we cannot call a spade a spade, we had better not call it anything at all. Today the sins of the poor are well advertised, whether in Church or out of Church. Well, when the rich go to Church, they don't hear very much about their sins. And we ministers of today are not as wise as was our Lord. We need to learn that the best way to serve God is to fight the devil in an open fashion. When the rich know where we stand they are going to want to come to us, because they know in their own conscience (whether they show their guilty state or not) that they are guilty in so far as the rich man is a thief, or a drunkard, or licentious, or untruthful, etc. The drunkard needs to hear something on the subject of temperance; the immoral, on the subject of purity; and the dishonest, on the subject of honesty. When men, conscious of their sins, are hungering for ways out of these troubles, they do not want to hear too often about the authorship of the Gospels or the technicalities of the founding of the Church. The scholarly sides of our religion are important for the clergy to know and advertise once in a while. Food prices is an important issue—but our experts must not stay so long on that question that the public is actually starved!

It is shameful that 100 of our leading Chicago ministers should have to get together and decide that a deputation must be sent East to wait on Billy Sunday and beg him, some day in the next few years, to find time to come to Chicago and preach the Gospel with power. Think how ridiculous it would seem if 100 of our leading Chicago dentists would have to go South and borrow a noted pianist and ask her how to take care of teeth? What would you think of 100 tailors who are obliged to send East for a blacksmith and beg him to give his expert advice as to how clothes had best be made? Please do not misunderstand me on the Billy Sunday issue. Although Mr. Sunday is not an ordained minister, he has evidences of more power of God's Holy Spirit than does almost any noted clergyman. When Mr. Sunday was in an Eastern city for one of his latest campaigns, something like 20,000 people heard him every night. Literally dozens of policemen were necessary to stand about the Tabernacle and beat back the thousands who made the effort to get in, but were unable to get in. The people who came, came most of all to hear an ordinary man who was formerly a sinner, but who is now empowered with God's Holy Ghost, preach Christ to the multitudes. Mr. Sunday has been very successful so far, largely because he has refused to be a one-eyed Christian. He has fought wickedness in high places just as sincerely as he has fought wickedness in low places. He is making it financially profitable to work the Christian religion on the Christian basis. He is paying his expenses wherever he is going, and the purse that he carries away for himself is no small sum. In the last place of which I have any memory of the results of his work, 54,000 converts were made for God. Whether Billy Sunday's converts do come up to the average convert (made in the denominational Christian Churches) I cannot say.

I have already mentioned earlier in these articles that two-thirds of the membership in the Christian Churches of America is practically a worthless asset. If Mr. Sunday's results are no worse than that, we had better stop talking, after a Pharisaical fashion, regarding the "lasting work" that he is doing.

Mr. Sunday is leading men to read their Bibles. He is turning the gamblers against gambling, the drunkards against drink, and the immoral against immorality. He is turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and of the wives to their husbands, and of children to their parents. He is doing all this sort of thing by the thousands. He is bringing men into the Kingdom with all the fervor that was known to the Church in Apostolic days. I have already said that he is making it financially profitable to save men for the Kingdom. All over the United States there are Churches in abundance. Where Churches have large endowments they are doing more work than where they have not. But in many places, even with free suppers and soliciting committees, and multitudinous invitations sent through the mails, and the most attractive doctrine beautifully preached, and wonderful music and pretentious Churches—even with all these helps, most of our Churches, except for the Romanists, are only partially filled from Sunday to Sunday.

Mr. Sunday is reported to have used words to the effect that whenever the Episcopal Church sincerely sets herself to Christian evangelism, she can sweep the American continent. Well, we are not doing it as yet. If Mr. Sunday can make that statement regarding the superior merits of our system, possibly we shall do our work with greater effect when we use that system with something of his power of God's Holy Spirit as we meet in the daily fight with the devil. I believe that we have got to preach the Christian religion with a little more of Apostolic frankness if we are ever going to win out in the fight in this day.

The Rev. George Hefflon, a Missionary of the Church to the deaf and dumb, describes an interesting wedding which took place recently in Grace Church, Mt. Airy, Philadelphia: "Miss Dorothy Sanders, a bright and intelligent deaf girl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Sanders, and a niece of Mrs. Persis, founder and first President of the Ladies' Auxiliary that works so successfully for the Everett Home, was married to a young army officer. It was a military wedding, and the young couple passed under an arch of swords held by the four ushers, themselves army officers."

Annual Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary of South Carolina

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of South Carolina held its 33rd Annual Convention at Union, S. C., Jan. 15-18, and throughout the proceedings sustained a record of high purpose and achievement.

The opening service was conducted in the Church of the Nativity, with the Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry and Dr. Wm. S. Sturgis of the Board of Missions, New York, speakers of the evening. The Bishop commended in glowing terms the work of the Auxiliary, and stressed with forceful words the supreme necessity of putting first and foremost the Church and its activities, as representing that power to which alone we may look for permanent and righteous peace, and held as a mistaken sense of proportion the neglect and sacrifice of spiritual things to the advancement of other interests, however vital and compelling.

The Convention heard with pleasure the Bishop's announcement of the creation of a War Commission by the Church and the campaign to be inaugurated for its support.

Dr. Sturgis spoke, by request, on the subject of "Prayer", and in an eloquent, earnest appeal brought home to the large congregation present a realization of the power of prayer and the futility of the prayerless life.

At the celebration of the Holy Communion Wednesday morning the United Offering was presented—the voluntary thank offering, over and above all pledges, amounting to $916 for the six months since the change of the fiscal year from May to January.

The business session of the Convention was called to order by the President, Miss Katie Lee, and the invocation was pronounced by Bishop Guerry. Addresses of welcome were delivered by the Rev. L. W. Blackwelder, Rector of the Parish, and by Mrs. J. W. Mixson, President of the local Branch. Letters of greeting were read from Miss Lindley, General Secretary, from Miss Alice Gregg, China, and Miss Uta Saito, Japan, Missionaries who have recently gone from South Carolina. The Convention sent messages of cordial appreciation and love to them, and to Miss Emery, former General Secretary.

Reports from all officers received close attention, a marked feature of the Convention being the sustained interest of the delegates throughout the sessions. Especial interest was manifested in the noonday prayer for our country, our soldiers and sailors recommended for observance throughout the Diocese.

The Mission Study Classes conducted by Miss Ford were attended with much interest.

Mrs. C. T. Lundgren presided over the Junior sessions. She emphasized the new "Junior Plan", and expressed the determination of the Junior officers to make this a banner year. A Junior demonstration given by the local Branch was enjoyed by the Convention.

Thursday evening the Convention heard talks on "The Catawba Indians", by Mrs. Alexander Long; "The Mill Operatives", Graniteville, Miss Ford; "Columbia", Miss Singleton; "The Rural Districts", Archdeacon Mitchell; "Work Among the Negroes", Mrs. W. P. Cornell; "The Red Cross", Mrs. Mixson. The cordial hospitality of the people of Union was manifested in every way compatible with the crowded programs, the reception at the home of Mrs. F. H. Garner proving a delightful occasion.

The month of January having been found undesirable for a Convention experiment, it was determined to revert to May as the Convention month, closing the fiscal year, however, in January, as recommended by the Board of Missions.

Resolutions of warm appreciation of the faithful administration of the retiring President, Miss Lee, and other officers, were voted. The officers elected for 1918 are as follows:

President, Mrs. W. P. Cornell.

Vice Presidents—Mrs. A. P. Gaillard, Mrs. D. D. Taber, Mrs. J. J. Miles.

Secretary—Mrs. T. B. McCarroll.

Treasurer—Miss I. B. Heyward.

Educational Secretary—Miss M. P. Ford.

United Offering Custodian—Miss Virginia T. Singleton.

Box Secretary—Mrs. F. P. Henderson.

Secretary of Junior Department—Mrs. C. T. Lundgren.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

If in these war times we are to furnish a weekly Church Paper for only One Dollar a Year, we must avoid every possible expense.

As an illustration, there are now due several thousand subscriptions. Those who rallied about us when we began this paper a year ago have had their 52 numbers and their Renewals are now due.

To avoid the cost of labor and postage to send out notices, please consult your address on the paper, and if that number is less than 58 please send us your dollar without further notice, or hand it to the person who first took your subscription.

And thank you many times for supporting the paper during its most critical period—the first year.

NOTICE TO CLUB RAISERS

Without further word from this office will you please call and get the renewals of all whose subscriptions you secured early in 1917, and report them to this office?

Retain the same commission as before—and get us a lot of new subscribers.

A GREAT TASK

THE WITNESS has undertaken a tremendous task. We aim to reach every Church family in every Parish and Mission in the United States, and be a welcome guest every week. This aim must be accomplished. If it cannot be done in one way, some other way must be devised. But accomplish it we must.

We claim a million Church families in the land—less than 10,000 of them subscribe for a weekly Church paper. Among other Christian bodies nearly every family subscribes for one. Why do we lag behind?

You subscribe for your home town paper, of course. You would be ashamed not to show your interest in local affairs. You keep in touch with national affairs by taking some great daily paper. You could not live without it. You meet your literary tastes by subscribing for one or more of the popular magazines. Your housekeeping and your dressmaking are aided by family journals. A trade journal is in the hands of every ambitious workman. You would not hire a man who was content to be ignorant of "the best" in his craft.

In Church matters, you subscribe for your Parish paper (or the Rector gives it to you) to keep in touch with Parish work. The same is true of your Bishop's paper, and the life of the Church near at home.

Your intelligence is marked by the periodicals you read.

Why should you be ignorant of the Church's great life and work and thought? Why should you be out of touch with the great throbbing heart of the Church at large?

It is not the cost. You will cheerfully give $1.00 a year for such a paper.

It is not a desire to be ignorant of Church affairs.

There is only one reason. You never have subscribed. You lack the habit.

THE WITNESS comes to break that habit. Send us your dollar—become interested—and we will be long-time friends.

Help us accomplish our aim NOW, and influence your friends and fellow workers.

"Long Time We No See" John W. Wood

The Alaskan Churchman comments editorially as follows upon Mr. John W. Wood's visit to the Missionary District under the supervision of Bishop Rowe:

"The Jurisdiction of Alaska often has the pleasure of welcoming distinguished visitors other than those of our own Bishop and Mission Staff. But it is safe to say that no other was more welcome or meant more to the Jurisdiction of Alaska and the work here, than did the coming of Mr. John W. Wood, Foreign Secretary of the Board of Missions. Mr. Wood left New York in June last, and after the usual incidents and accidents common to an Alaskan journey, met Archdeacon Stuck and the Pelican at Eagle. Bishop Rowe on his annual visitation of the Missions went up with the party and together they journeyed down the great Yukon. That was the beginning of a trip which led Mr. Wood into some of the furthest cracks and crannies of Interior Alaska, and which ended with taking a boat in St. Michael for all the towns and Missions on the coast. What it meant to Mr. Wood, he will have to tell; what it meant to each one of us, we find it hard to tell. Certain it is, that however little we may have known Mr. Wood when he came, whether we had ever seen him or not, at his departure it was as the going of a personal friend. We hated to give him up. If his memories of the trip in any way approximate our consciousness of his friendliness, his real interest in all our problems, great or small, his unending patience in all that we had to tell him, then it will indeed be a trip that will be remembered. Already with our Indian brethren we feel "Long time we no see," and we shall hope that not too many years will elapse before we see him again treading the soil of the great Northland."

False Notion of Patriotism

It is a false and superficial notion that patriotism requires the sacrifice of work and institutions of the Church. The many calls of patriotism demand sacrifice of us all, but it must be self-sacrifice, and not the "robbing of Peter to Pay Paul". There is no patriotism in cutting off the labor or gifts you have been giving to the Church and giving them to the Red Cross. This is not a sacrifice of self, but of the Church and her institutions. "These things ought ye to have done, and not leave the other undone." One is the State, which we must support. The other is the Kingdom of God. Our Lord says, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's".—Carolina Churchman.

On Visitation of the Sick

"When any person is sick, notice shall be given thereof to the Minister of the Parish." (Rubric in Book of Common Prayer.)

St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., is planning to send THE WITNESS to the young men in war service on the Honor Roll of the Parish.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS— MISSISSIPPI AND NEW HAMPSHIRE

Ninety First Annual Council of the Diocese of Mississippi

The 91st Annual Council of the Diocese of Mississippi met in St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, on Tuesday night at 7 o'clock.

Hitherto the Council has always met in May. This year it was just at the end of the longest continued cold spell the South has known for forty years. In every town in the state the plumbing succumbed and the whole state was on short rations of coal. The Rector of St. Andrew's could secure only a ton to keep the Council warm and he was compelled to pay $2.00 for the hauling of that ton. In spite of all the difficulties the attendance at the Council was good, though many a familiar face was missed because of enlistments in the army and navy.

Although the present year was only eight months in length a great many of the Parishes and Missions paid assessments and apportionments on a twelve month basis, and the reports of the various financial committees showed substantial balances on hand. It may be of interest to other editors to know that the official organ of the Diocese, THE CHURCH NEWS, paid every obligation and started the new year with a cash balance of considerably over $100.00. The Council gave a rising vote of thanks to the editor, Rev. Albert Martin, for the way in which he was conducting the paper.

The principle elections were as follows:

Standing Committee—Clerical, Rev. William Mercer Green, Jackson, President; Rev. J. Lundy Sykes, Laurel, Secretary; Rev. Albert Martin; Rev. L. W. Rose. Lay, Judge L. Brame; Marcellus Green, Dr. Dubar Rowland, Mr. P. S. Gardiner.

Secretary of the Diocese—Rev. Albert Martin, Yazoo City, Miss.

Treasurer of the Diocese—Mr. I. W. Richardson, Meridian.

Registrar of the Diocese—Rev. Nowell Logan, D. D., Pass Christian.

Chancellor—A. M. Pepper, Lexington.

Trustees of the Episcopal Fund and Church Property—Rt. Rev. T. D. Bratton, Jackson; Judge L. Brame, Jackson; Wiley P. Harris, Jackson.

Deans—Of Jackson, Rev. Robt. E. Grubb; of Natchez, Rev. Joseph Keuhnle; of Oxford, Rev. F. N. Atkin; of Pass Christian, Rev. Nowell Logan, D. D.; of Columbus, Rev. J. H. Boosey; of the Delta, P. G. Davidson.

The Council found Mississippi in the midst of an experiment which is being watched with great interest. A Diocesan-Wide Campaign for an Every-Member Canvass in the interest of Missions was being started when the Council convened. Three Secretaries of the Board of Missions of New York, Rev. Robt. W. Patton, D. D., Rev. Louis Wood and Rev. R. L. Clarke were, at the request of Bishop Bratton, in the Diocese for one week before the Council, visiting every point that they could reach in the interest of Education for Missions. These Secretaries were present at the Council, where they conducted, each day and night, a meeting of inspiration and information for both the Council and the members of St. Andrew's Parish, which Parish will at once begin its every member canvass. It was the Bishop's idea to have each delegate to the Council take the knowledge and inspiration back to his Parish and to prepare it for what is at once to follow—a Diocesan Wide Every Member Canvass for Missions. At a conference after the Council a committee of Clergymen was appointed to prosecute this work. This committee is known as the Diocesan Missioners for Missions and is composed of Rev. Messrs. H .H. Sneed, Byron Holly, E. A. De Miller, J. Lundy Sykes, William Mercer Green, Holly W. Wells, Joseph Keuhnle, J W. Fulford, J. H. Boosey, P. G. Davidson, Albert Martin, and G. Gordon Smeade. This committee will cover the entire Diocese in the interest of Missions before Mid-Lent.

This movement brought forth the definite action of the Council concerning a Coadjutor. Purposing to let nothing interfere with the canvass, the Bishop wished to withdraw his request for a Coadjutor, which was definitely made at the last Council. When this became known, the clergy, in a conference, appointed the Rev. Albert Martin to go before the Council with the resolutions, as follows:

That a Bishop Coadjutor should be elected as soon as possible, and to this end the assessments of every Parish and Mission be increased 75 per cent until such time as an Endowment of $50,000 could be raised, and to place a man in the Diocese to raise the said Endowment, the increased assessment to take care of the salary of the proposed Coadjutor until the Endowment should be raised.

The Council passed these resolutions unanimously, and added another —that the Secretary of the Standing Committee should write the various Bishops and Standing Committees of the Church, asking consent, and stating reasons. This brings the long-delayed matter of the Coadjutor to a definite head. It is hoped that he will be chosen by the end of the year, as Bishop Bratton, although recovered from his recent operation, is far from well, and the Diocese is a widely scattered one, with large territory, and railroad facilities not of the best.

New Hampshire Diocesan Convention

The Convention of the Diocese of New Hampshire met Jan. 15 and 16 in the Parish House of Grace Church, Manchester, the Rev. George R. Hazard, Rector. After a conference on the Church and Prohibition and the Church and Socialism, which was held under the auspices of the Social Service Commission, Rev. Samuel S. Drury, D. D., presiding, the Convention opened its session, the Bishop in the chair, and proceeded with routine business. In the evening a public service was held in the Church to present the Church's responsibilities created by the war, the speakers being the Rev. Arthur W. Stone, U. S. N. Chaplain at the Navy Yard, Charlestown, Mass., and the Rev. Howard K. Bartow, Chaplain at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass. Chaplain Stone told of the many and varied demands made on a Chaplain's time, and Mr. Bartow's story amply justified the War Commission's system of Voluntary Chaplains.

The second day's session began with a Corporate Celebration of the Holy Communion, Bishop Parker being the celebrant.

The morning session proceeded with elections, the only changes being in the Board of Managers of Diocesan Missions and the list of deputies to the Provincial Synod, the Board of Managers elected being the Rev. Messrs. W. P. Niles, A. M. Dunstan and J. C. Flanders, and Hon. R. J. Peaslee, Messrs. J. A. Williams and H. H. Dudley. The deputies to the Synod are Rev. Messrs. Geo. R. Hazard, C. leV. Brine, J. S. Littel, D. D., and W. P. Niles, and Hon. R. J. Peaslee, Messrs. E. K. Woodworth, Geo. Cook, M. Doud and W. A. Whitney.

An amendment to the Constitution, limiting membership in the Convention to men, was defeated, and an amendment admitting women, limited in number, was given its first passage, and will come up for ratification next year.

A committee was appointed to devise an equitable system of making apportionments.

The date of the next Convention was put in May, 1919, the weather in January not being conducive to a large attendance.

The question of prohibition having been brought up, after a spirited debate, the following resolutions were adopted:

That the Convention endorses the prohibitory law enacted by the last Legislature, and expresses belief that, in view of our present state of war, all individual opinions should be subordinated to the policy of prohibition, whereby we may strengthen the physical, moral and spiritual power of the State and Nation, and conserve their resources; and that the Convention memorialize the President of the United States to use his discretionary powers to this end.

Will They Hold Out?

In one of the magazines I noticed a picture of two soldiers in a trench in France. They were talking and the following is their conversation: "I wonder if they will hold out," said the first. "Who hold out?" questioned the second. "Why, the folks at home, of course," was the immediate reply. That picture and that conversation has come to my mind many times as I have watched the folks at home and their attitude toward the war and toward their soldier boys away in France or training in America.

Will they hold out? Is there any question about their holding out and being brave and strong through any sorrow and any sacrifice? As I look at American men and women, especially those in my own Parish, I confess that I wonder with the boy in the trench, sometimes. For I see that the courage of so many is based on material things, on cheery letters and false hopes and selfish desires. Those cheery letters may become downcast and discouraging, those false hopes may be dashed to pieces, those selfish desires may fade away. Then what will be left to support the anxious one? Only that which should have been the stay and support from the very beginning—a firm faith and trust in God.

"A tower of strength our God doth stand, a shield and sure defender" is as true today as it was centuries ago when the words were written by the sturdy old Christian, Martin Luther. God is our tower of strength, our shield and our defender, for we are fighting a war of righteousness, a war of God against advocates and supporters of selfishness and sin and lust and crime. Then why not turn to God and put our whole trust in Him in this time of worry and anxiety?

Parents and friends often express to me their anxiety about their boys, and I comfort them and help them as much as I can. But the best help I can give them is to try to turn them toward God who is anxious to help and is but waiting to be asked. Are you anxious about one of your dear ones who will go or has gone? Then turn to the Lord, your God, in constant intercession for the ones far away, and He will help far more than any earthly power.

There is one service in our Church at which comfort and help and strength can be gained more than at any other. I have told my people about it many times and yet they will not realize the truth of what I tell them. It is the Early Celebration of the Holy Communion, when in the quiet of the morning hour one may come closest to God through the Blessed Sacrament ordained and instituted by the Saviour himself.

American men and women, you must be strong in this year that is to come. You must hold out as the fathers and mothers of Canada and England and France and Italy have held out, with strength and courage and self-sacrifice. Then come constantly to the source of strength and courage: to God in His House, the Church, where you may join with other Christians in worship and prayer and intercession.

THE PROVINCIAL SYNOD OF THE SOUTHWEST

The Provincial Synod of the Southwest held its fifth Annual Meeting at St. Paul's Cathedral, Oklahoma City, Jan. 22-24. In connection with this was also held the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Rt. Rev. Francis Keye Brooke's consecration to the Episcopate. The Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions also held three days of meetings and study classes, at which were present Miss Grace Lindley, General Secretary; Miss Withers, in charge of the Junior work, and Miss Biller, Traveling Representative.

The business sessions of the Synod were presided over by the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle, D. D., who, in his usual delightfully unique and interesting way, added much zest to the proceedings. The attendance was very good, especially so in view of the unpleasant weather, making travel unpleasant and in some cases impossible. After the first day, however, the weather moderated considerably.

The first day's conference was on the subject of Religious Education. Leader, the Rev. B. T. Kemmerer of St. Louis, whose topic was "A Diocesan Board of Religious Education in Action". Mr. Kemmerer was very interesting. As his topic brought out, the entire program of the Synod was designed, to-wit: Religious Education, and growing out from this, Social Service and Missions. The Rev. John S. Bunting of St. Louis led on the subject: "Religious Education, the Foundation of Parish Organization". He was followed by the Rt. Rev. James Wise, D. D., Bishop of Kansas, who presented a very illuminative account and report of the General Board of Religious Education to the Province.

The following Provincial Board of Religious Education was later elected: Rt. Rev. James Wise, Chairman; Rev. W. P. Witzell, Rev. John D. Bunting, Rev. Charles Hely-Maloney, Prof. A. E. Crawford, C. B. Howard and J. B. Campbell.

The special service in the evening was the commemoration of Bishop Brooke's twentyfifth anniversary as Bishop of the Missionary District of Oklahoma, and the Rev. Edward H. Eckel, former Provincial Secretary, now resident at Fort Worth, Texas.

At luncheon the following day the commemoration event was continued, at which the following addressed the gathering on the long and faithful years of service of Bishop Brooke: The Presiding Bishop, Mayor Overholser of Oklahoma City, Judge C. B. Ames, representing the city Chamber of Commerce; Rev. Phil C. Baird, Ph. D., representing the ministers of the city; Hon. W. H. M. B. Trudgeon, Junior Warden of the Cathedral. Many and earnest were the tributes paid to Bishop Brooke. Dean Bate of the Cathedral presided in his usual easy and pleasing manner. He presented to the Bishop, on behalf of the ladies of the Cathedral, a beautiful silver centre basket and two silver candlesticks. On one of the latter was inscribed "1893" and on the other "1918". On the centre basket was inscribed: "Bishop and Mrs. F. K. Brooke, twenty-five years of work together, 1893-1918". The Dean also presented, on behalf of the Cathedral Men's Club, a handsome study standard lamp. Bishop Brooke, in a very few words, responded feelingly to these many tributes of affection.

In addition to the above tributes and gifts, it was announced that several of the Parishes and Missions within Bishop Brooke's jurisdiction had made contributions to what will be known as the "Bishop Brooke Room" at All Saints' Hospital, McAlester, Okla. It was also announced that Enid, Guthrie and Shawnee had removed all existing Parish debts in commemoration of the Bishop's anniversary. The Presiding Bishop, as in other instances, added the climax to this occasion. After a few words of tribute to the Bishop of Oklahoma, he announced that the sum of $5 had been given by friends in Missouri to help equip the Bishop Brooke Room at the Hospital. Then, in his inimitable and quaint way, "telescoped" with his hands and exclaimed: "Wait! Wait! I overlooked another five in front of that first five. It should read '$55'." Yet this was not right—he found another five; then he found another five, till finally he announced that friends in Missouri had given $5,555 towards the Bishop Brooke's Room at the Hospital.

The second day's program was Social Service. In view of the absence of Miss Maude Miner of New York, who was selected to speak on "Protective Work for Girls in Camp Cities", the program was considerably changed from that scheduled. The Rev. J. H. Lever of St. Louis spoke on the vice problem in St. Louis, and told of local efforts to meet the problem. The Rev. R. D. Putney of St. Louis spoke of probation work among boys.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick B. Howden, Bishop of New Mexico, reported on the training camp situation in this Province. He pointed out that within the Southwest Province there were 500,000 men being trained for army work. This, he said, was 50 per cent of the total men under training throughout the country. For these men there are only ninety-seven regular Army Chaplains, and of these only sixteen are of the Episcopal Church, adding that we also had seven voluntary Chaplains and three Brotherhood workers. He said the need for quick action was imperative, and in this argument he was well and ably supported by the Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, Bishop of West Texas, who spoke eloquently of the need for immediate relief of the situation. Bearing on this subject, the following resolution was adopted: "That a committee be appointed to take under advisement the steps necessary to provide immediate and efficient equipment for the Army work in this Province, in connection with the War Commission." The substance of the resolution and report were sent to the War Commission by wire, carrying the signatures of Bishops Kinsolving, Howden and Capers.

The following is the newly elected Social Service Commission: Rt. Rev. S. C. Partridge, D. D., Bishop of West Missouri; Rt. Rev. J. C. Sage, D. D., Bishop of Salina; Rev. J. H. Lever, Rev. R. N. Spencer, Dr. J. C. Johnson, H. C. Williams, Mrs. H. T. Nicholls, Mrs. Joseph January.

On the third day the order of the day was the subject of Missions. Among the speakers were Miss Lindley, the Rt. Rev. E. W. Sapphore, Suffragan Bishop of Arkansas, the Rev. E. H. Eckel, Archdeacon Denby, Suffragan Bishop-elect of Arkansas. Miss Lindley suggested a house plan for a national house to house canvass in order to co-operate with the plans for the reconstruction of the country following the world crisis. Her plan was adopted by unanimous vote. The following are the newly elected officers of the Provincial Synod: Rt. Rev. D. S. Tuttle, D. D., President; Rt. Rev. G. H. Kinsolving, D. D., Vice President; the Rev. Henry N. Hyde of Joplin, Mo., Secretary; Charles L. Johnson of Waco, Texas, Treasurer; Rev. A. W. S. Garden, Archdeacon of West Texas, was nominated for the office of Provincial Secretary. Waco, Texas, was selected as the next place of meeting, and the time set for October 22-24 of this year.

Resolutions were adopted thanking the Cathedral Parish for their generous and splendid entertainment of the guests, and for the daily luncheon given in the Cathedral Parish House.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

The First Day of Lent, Commonly Called Ash Wednesday

(To My Readers: During Lent, it is my purpose to write a series of comments, as follows: Today, a comment on the Collect, Epistle and Gospel for Ash Wednesday. Then, on the following weeks will appear in order, God willing, comments on the Epistle and Gospel for Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday before Easter, Good Friday and Easter Even. If these comments in any way help at least one soul to a better appreciation of the Passion of our Blessed Lord, they will not have been written in vain. And to Him will be the glory forever. Amen.—F. S. W.)

THE COLLECT

Almighty and everlasting God, who hatest nothing that thou hast made, and dost forgive the sins of all those who are penitent; Create and make in us new and contrite hearts, that we, worthily lamenting our sins and acknowledging our wretchedness, may obtain of thee, the God of all mercy, perfect remission and forgiveness; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

This Collect is to be read every day in Lent, after the Collect appointed for the day.

"Hatest nothing that Thou hast made." The great object of the Gospel message is this: To make men realize that "God is love". When the whole world begins to absorb the contents of that message, the dawn of a new order will appear. Most of us Christians have better hearing than we have vision. The god of this world has power to dazzle us and blind us. It is necessary for men to enter into the experience of Job if we are to have what the Prayer Book bids us pray for, namely, "true repentance". You remember Job says, "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefor I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes". How many of us have heard again and again that God is love—that He hateth nothing that He has made—and yet year after year have we not continued to live on without any real self-loathing? The reason for this is that we have heard with our ears, but we have not seen with our eyes that God is love. The Missionary's business is to prove to men anywhere and everywhere that nothing human is hated by God. Your work and mine is to get people to look for God's goodness and mercy—to see His worthiness in Jesus—to look into our past history and see His forbearance and patience with us. The more a man can see God, the greater penitent he becomes. Try this Lent to gain a consciousness of sin—not for the purpose of making yourself miserable, but for the opportunity such consciousness will give you of realizing how very patient God has been with you, and how miserably you have treated Him, your best friend. It is in such a way God can best create a new heart in us. Let us resolve to make a clean breast of everything to God. Let us get under the skin of ourselves—not by the thought of the anger of God, but by the sense of humiliation and shame, which must come home to us when we realize the nature of the friend we have betrayed, insulted, neglected, turned away from—that one Friend who knows us through and through, and yet is so willing to make us over, if we will only give Him the chance.

How can we "worthily lament our sins"? First, let us be very careful and honest in our self-examinations, desiring to know what there is in our past and present lives that must be displeasing to God. Then let us deliberately put away the sins of which conscience and the Bible convicts. Cultivate a hatred of the sins and the sinful practices of which memories will remind us. And then have a fear lest we fall into them again. Also cultivate a sense of that shame which you would have if your admirers knew what sins you had actually committed, and multiply that sense of shame by the knowledge that you have done in your Best Friend's sight what you would not have your earthly friends know for all the world. Then detail your wretchedness to God, and you have His and the Church's word for it that the whole guilt is absolutely done away. A sense of that forgiveness should keep us grateful, and humble, and earnest Christians all the rest of our lives. And what the Church bids us thus pray for ourselves, surely she wants us to help all men everywhere to learn to pray for, too.

THE EPISTLE

Turn ye even to me, saith the Lord, with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning: and rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil. Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; even a meat offering and a drink offering unto the Lord your God? Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly: gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, and those that suck the breasts: let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet. Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, "Where is their God? Joel ii:12.

"Turn to Me with all your heart." Make a clean breast of all that keeps you from looking every one straight in the face without a sense that you are bluffing. "Rend your heart." This true repentance is evidently something that cuts deep. If people live superficial lives, then repentance is going to be so superficial that fasting and weeping are for them merely forms, and have no inner meaning. One can fast to order; but the reaction is not real. Some can weep to order; but the results are merely crocodile tears. The heathen, and pagan, and natural religions have their fastings. Revealed religion has its fastings and weepings, too; but they do not come from a heart that is really and truly rent or torn—the sense of relief which they bring is only skin deep, and after twenty-four hours is forgotten, except by those who count it a virtue to tell of their good works. The Missionary's purpose is to get a man to bare his heart to a God who loves him and wants to help and heal him of his past. When you get some one to grieve because he has offended and insulted his God, you have made a real Christian penitent.

A good way to make Ash Wednesday a real fast day is to think of that sin or those sins in your life which you would rather die than have the world know about, and then think of your impudence and shamelessness in having committed them before the Being who gave you the very strength of mind or body which you used in committing them. If such memories, even of forgiven sins, does not make food turn to ashes in your mouth, then as yet Ash Wednesday has no message for you.

"Who knoweth if he will return and leave a blessing behind him?" Certainly you cannot tell whether you will have another such chance to come back as you are having while you are reading these words. Prepare to meet with your household in God's house and, remembering that it is your true self which God is looking at, you will help make the Ash Wednesday assembly a solemn one in very deed.

And does it not occur to you that if such a course of action means resultant health, and peace, and spiritual power for you, that you are a miserably selfish and cruel soul if you do not do your utmost to put the opportunity for such health, and peace, and power within the reach of every poor, weak child of man and God who lives on this earth? If the heathen conceptions of religion triumph over God's revelation, remember it will be because some one in a Christian community was sorry only for his own sins, and wept only for his own sins, and repented only for his own sins; and at the last it will be seen that such people are really and truly guilty of the soul-murder and the soul-starvation, and the soul-mutilation of God's less fortunate children—from which charges may God preserve us!

"Where is their God?" Look on this question as the cry of those who would like to know the Christian's true God, and yet have been given no real opportunity. Think of this cry as a challenge from the unchurched in our land, and the no Church in alien lands, to us, who say, "The Lord He is God", "The Lord He is God", and yet make or take no pains to send an answer to this question of their less fortunate brethren. Again, think of this cry as rising to the lips of those who have learned to scoff at religion because of our sinful actions, our negligences, our ignorances, our unchristian-like behavior and attitude. And may such thoughts drive us not to despair and remorse, but to true penitence, and sincere weeping, and real fasting, and earnest praying, which will prove to ourselves and others that we have really turned to God with all our heart.

THE GOSPEL

When ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest,, anoint thy head and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly. Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. St. Matt. vi:16.

The Christian religion is a product of the Holy Ghost, and the Holy Ghost is not only the Life Giver of life, but the author of joy—"joy in the Holy Ghost"! The Christian religion is a joyous religion, and joy is no superficial emotion. A man who has not been forgiven of his sins can not help but be of a sad countenance whenever he remembers the past. And a religion which stresses confession rather than absolution is not going to make joyous converts. The man who formally fasts because he has never known the joy of the Father's kiss of peace, is going to play the part of the elder brother in the story of the forgiving father—he is going to solemnly and sourly fast. Every man who plays a part is consciously or unconsciously a hypocrite. And it is not to be denied that such peopl have their reward. They get a reputation, which is what they desire. The Christian Church has a great duty to perform in getting people to desire and strive for character rather than for reputation. This duty is implied in our Lord's command to "anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father". Reputation has man in mind; character keeps the Father in mind. The joyous Christian will have his deep, true source of penitence locked within himself. And as he shows that true penitent heart to the Father in secret, the Father will give him the outward joy which comes to one from interior peace which comes when one whom no one nor anything can take that interior peace which comes when one hears the words, "Go in peace, thy sins are forgiven thee".

"Treasures on earth!" Is not this the object, and aim, and end of all natural religions, where the treasure sought may run the gamut from good health, through good fortune to good reputation? The reason Jesus wanted the Church to go into all the earth lies in the fact that unless people see the value of treasures in heaven, they very naturally lay chief emphasis on treasures on earth, for man is an acquisitive animal, and unless he sees the reason for preferring things spiritual, he will naturally set his heart on acquiring all of the good things of earth on which he can lay his hands. And what a man sets his heart on getting he is going to work for with a zeal which belongs to religion.

The Ash Wednesday message of mother Church is a call to reality in our relations with God and man. As the call sounds out and we measure our past performance with God's requirements, we will be driven to a natural depression, which only a supernatural power can turn into joy. If we care more for reputation than character, we will conform to the outward penitential requirements, only at some turn in the game to be shown up as one who has been playing a part. If we value our sense life more than our spirit life, we will know it by the "pull" our possessions have on us, and also by an analysis of the things on the performance of which or the gaining of which we have "set our hearts".

If we have no Missionary zeal or knowledge, we will not be much moved by the cry, "Where is now their God"? But if the love of God constrains us, we will bring our tears, our lives, our self-denials as individuals and as families to the House of the Lord, and we will ask God to spare us for a while longer, in order that we may do His work, His great work, and do our utmost to show to all men everywhere that our God hates nothing that He has made, and forgives the sins of all those who are truly penitent. QUINQUAGESIMA SUNDAY, FEB-10, 1918

The great reformation under Hezekiah, brought about through the influence of the Prophets Micah and Isaiah (see Septuagesima Sunday), led up to the great deliverance of Jerusalem from Sennacherib (Sexagesima), but this was followed, as reformations are wont to be followed, by a reaction under Manasseh, who "did that which displeased Jehovah, according to the abominable practices of the nations whom Jehovah cast out before the Israelites, and shed innocent blood until he had filled Jerusalem". He even put to death many of the prophets (Jer. ii:30). After a short reign of two years of Amon, son of Manasseh, Josiah came to the throne, under whom took place another reformation, begun by repairing the Temple, an account of which forms the Old Testament historico-topical lesson for Sunday morning. Josiah's reign makes an important epoch in Judah's history, and it is interesting to note the several elements that were jointly effective therein—the priests, represented by Hilkiah; the prophets, including Zephaniah, apparently great-grandson of the other reforming king (Hezekiah), Jeremiah and Huldah, the latter a woman. We may note in passing that this "Book of the Law" is one of the storm centres of modern critical study of the Bible. It evidently coincides with the middle portion of the Book of Deuteronomy, which book represents, according to a conservative critical judgment, "the germinal truths enunciated by Moses as they unfolded in the light of the later experiences of his race and under the inspired teaching of his successors in the prophetic office".

In the New Testament correlative lesson (John v) our Lord traces belief or unbelief in Himself back to one's mental attitude toward the older revelation from Moses to John the Herald, and carries into the eternal world the great principle acted on by Josiah of judgment according to the Word of God.

In this there lies an important connection with the Epistle for the day, with its teaching that love is no mere emotion, but sympathy, together with the Truth of God, while Josiah's great reformation, brought about by the union of priest and prophet, is a grim comment upon the Great Tragedy at Jerusalem, towards which our Lord marches (in the Gospel), the cause of which was the antagonism of priest to prophet (cf. Malachi iv:4-5; Matt. xi:7-19). Altogether, Josiah's reformation seems to furnish a more inspiring Quinquagesima lesson than the present Prayer Book one of lamentation over the destruction of Jerusalem, which finds place in the New Lectionary just after the event (third week in Lent).

The Sunday evening lessons—Isaiah's prophecy of our Lord's sacrifice and St. Peter's comments thereon—are obviously connected with the story told in the Gospel of our Lord's journey to the fated city to act out the drama of sacrificial love.

The morning Ash Wednesday lesson, taken from the prophet whose writings come next, is Jeremiah's appeal for true repentance against false use of Church and ritual, along with which is given the story of the true penitent, the prodigal son.

In the evening, Isaiah's description of the true fast, never more apposite than in these days of food conservation, is accompanied by our Lord's exposition of what true fasting is in its inner essence—an expression of genuine sorrow.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

The following prayer was written for the Christmas editor of the Minneapolis Daily News by Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman.

Almighty God, the Father of all men, we rejoice that Thou hast made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the whole earth. Even amid the sorrows and distresses of wars we acknowledge the ties that bind us in a universal fellowship. We believe that even the wrath of men shall one day turn to Thy praise, and that out of all the earth's chaos there shall come the larger, finer, truer brotherhood. At this season, which again reminds us of the coming of the Prince of Peace, we pray for the hastening of the day when men shall beat their swords into plough-shares and their spears into pruning-hooks. Teach us more fully the meaning of Thy Fatherhood, and imbue us more completely with the spirit of brotherly kindness. If we have grown proud or arrogant, humble us; if we have looked upon life too narrowly, do Thou enlarge our vision. If any act of ours has injured or burdened another in life's pilgrimage, forgive us and show us the better way. Teach us, even when we bear the sword, to love our enemies. Bind together in our land the peoples of many names and kindreds and make them one in a high and holy purpose, that shall issue in the universal reign of justice, mercy and truth. Silence, O God, the lips of calumny, chasten the tongue of disloyalty, rebuke those who regard not with devotion the high heritage our fathers gave us. Give to our soldiers and sailors the protection of Thy love and favor and make them the sure messengers of a righteous peace. In the days that are as yet unborn, give us all the strength to bear the burdens and disciplines that shall be ours. O God, if we have never trusted Thee before, make us to trust Thee now. If our pride or selfishness has caused us to forget Thee, forgive us our sin and fill us with a holy and humble fear of Thy name. Blessed Saviour of men, come to this sad and war-weary world and touch it with Thy healing love. Comfort all who mourn, relieve those who suffer, sustain and uplift those who are burdened with sin and shame, and hasten we pray Thee the day of peace for all mankind and prepare us for the larger and better day when man to man the world o'er shall brothers be. We ask this, and we seek the forgiveness of all our sins in the name of Him, who for our sakes, became poor and came to earth on this blessed Christmas day, our Saviour and Redeemer, Jesus Christ. Amen.

Washington, D. C., is literally filled with men in uniform and all the Parishes and Missions of the Church are doing everything in their power to give a welcome to these brave lads who are soon to "go over the top." Those Parishes that are fortunate enough to have suitable Parish houses are having weekly, and sometimes daily, entertainments for the men. It is gratifying to note that many of the men are devout communicants of the Church, especially among the officers. The Commandant at Ft. Myer is a Churchman and the nephew of the Bishop of Bethlehem and the Rector of St. Paul's Church, Washington.

YOUR MEANS OF GRACE

Catechism: "How many Sacraments hath Christ ordained in His Church" —to the question "Why was the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper ordained."

Prop. 1. Life.

We say in the Nicene Creed, "I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and the Giver of Life."

Christ said, "I am come that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly."

Now life is the great mystery. Science can tell us about life but it cannot tell us what life is.

The Christian believes that all life is the gift of God, through the agency of the Holy Ghost.

In all life there are three principles or laws:

(a) The law of birth, by which life originates.

(b) The law of nourishment, by which life is fed or sustained.

(c) The law of adaptation, by which life is developed.

This is true in the vegetable kingdom, in the animal kingdom, and in the kingdom of Heaven.

(a) All life must have a beginning, which we call birth. No creature can give life to himself. Birth is God's act.

(b) All life, when begun, must be fed. At first, in the case of the babe, food is supplied without much effort on the part of the one receiving it, but as the babe grows into manhood, procuring food is partly God's act and partly man's effort.

(c) All life either grows into something higher, stronger, better, or else sinks into something lower, weaker, worse. No life stands still.

(If you will think of an elevator in a tall building one might say that bad men going up are constantly passing good men going down.)

Prop. 2. Grace.

If we were asked to tell what Grace means, we might well say that Grace is God's gift of imparting eternal life to the human soul.

"For by grace are ye saved and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God."

In short, the process by which we receive the gift of eternal life in the kingdom of Heaven is not essentially different from the process by which we receive life in this world.

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I say unto you ye must be born again."

And also we are told that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of Heaven.

In fact, whereas a great many religious people think that Grace is something which they must produce themselves, it is quite otherwise. Grace is God's gift with which we are to co-operate but which we can no more create than we can create life itself.

Grace may be divided, like life, into three principles.

(a) The Principle of Birth. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of Heaven. This is the same as saying, "Except a baby be born, he cannot live in this world."

Holy Baptism is Christ's gift to men, and as the Holy Ghost is the giver of life, so in Baptism, the Word of God, who is Christ, sends the Holy Spirit upon the waters of life and we receive the birth unto righteousness. We become "a member of Christ, the child of God and an inheritor of the kingdom of Heaven." We are born again and admitted into the privileges of Christ's kingdom.

(b) But birth does not give us perfected life, merely the beginning of life. A babe has nothing but possibilities. In order to become a man, he must partake of food. So Christ tells us that He is the Bread of life, and that "Except you eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood, you have no life in you."

The Lord's Supper is another gift that Christ gave to men in order that by partaking thereof, men might "so eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood, that He may dwell in

QUESTIONS

1. Can we tell what life is? Do we know whence life comes?
2. What are the three principles of all life?
3. How much does God do and how much does the child do in these three operations, (a) Birth, (b) Nourishment, (c) Education?
4. Give our Lord's words which tell us that we must be born again: that we must be fed?
5. Define Grace.
6. Can we save ourselves? What part do our efforts or "works" have in our salvation?

Every-Day Religion

By Rev. J. E. Freeman, D. D.

ABDICATED PARENTHOOD

"Take heed that ye offend not one of these little ones."

Some time ago we heard a distinguished Jewish rabbi speak on the subject, "How shall we care for our boys and girls?" Among other things that he said, with which we enthusiastically agreed, was that the teaching of sex hygiene in public places, notably in our schools, was not only undesirable, but to him reprehensible. The large point that he made was that all these modern practices, to relegate to teachers and disinterested parties those clearly defined obligations that are peculiarly parental, were the evidences of the Twentieth Century tendency to parental abdication. He maintained with irresistible power the transcendent place of fatherhood and motherhood in the upbringing and character-making of the child.

There can be little doubt but that one of the cardinal weaknesses of our time is the lowering of the standards of home life through parental neglect and indifference. Probably nothing is disclosing this more completely than the critical war period through which we are now passing. Army life and the exigencies of the war test and tax character as nothing else has done. It is widely accepted that there is nothing more sacred than the obligation laid upon parenthood, nor is there an institution more sacred in its character and purpose than the home itself. Where there is no fine home influence and no sense of parental responsibility, verily, the people perish. Nothing is writ larger upon the page of history than this fact, that only those nations and peoples endure who first, last and always conserve and protect the interests of the home. When we attempt to trace the greatness or strength of the world's leaders back to its source, it ininevitably leads us to the fireside and to the sterling qualities of some consecrated father or mother. In this connection, it is of more than passing interest to note that many, if not most of the world's benefactors have sprung out of a home condition that was utterly simple, homely and in many instances impoverished, so far as worldly goods are concerned. On the other hand, lacking these externals and barren of luxuries, such homes with magnificent qualities of character in the home leaders, have proved training-grounds for men and women of surpassing richness of genius, and the world affectionately turns to them as the very sources of its inspiration and highest development.

The great question that challenges us today is, are we conserving and guarding these sacred influences that underlie and guarantee our national life and secure to us its best and finest gifts. Again and again we have been reminded of late that modern home conditions are not what they once were. The world is too much with us early and late, and the modern business man, struggling to keep pace with the swift movements of his time, has become but a lodger, where once he was the strong head and defender of that which the Englishman calls his "castle."

With fine deference may we also say that all too many women of our day are carried afield by modern conceptions of living and of feminine usefulness, and many, too many homes, witness to a kind of parental abdication that discloses itself in the weakened and frequently wrecked lives of children who, like Topsy, just grow up uncared for and untended. How many boys, like little David Copperfield, have had their early life embittered and overcast with shadow because the functions of character-making were given over to those who, without affection or responsibility, sought to rule and govern with the hard hand and still harder heart of formal discipline. It is our unfailing conviction, born out of many years of close and intimate study of life, that a majority of the boys and girls who go wrong or who make shipwreck of character, do so as the result of an inferior and wholly defective home environment and an irresponsible parenthood, whose selfish pursuits and pleasures deny to childhood its proper meed of devotion and service.

Of course it is unnecessary to say here that the abdication of parental authority to maids and governesses is nothing less than a crime, and the forfeiture of those sacred and inestimable gifts that God confers upon fatherhood and motherhood. If the war does nothing more than to restore the tone and character of American homes, to make us more responsible as well as more responsive to life's most sacred obligations, it will not have been waged in vain. We believe America is thinking more solemnly and seriously upon this great question now than it has ever done before. —Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

On Marriage

Marriage is called in the Book of Common Prayer, Holy Matrimony, an honorable estate, instituted of God,

Since the State has laws in regard marriage, the Church instructs that ese be fulfilled before the Church

mony . . . being different in the seval States, every Minister is left to e direction of those laws, in every ing that regards the civil contract. ."

The Church by the above rubric and its address to the parties to be maried: "For be well assured that if y persons are joined otherwise than od's Word doth allow . . ." clearly akes a distinction between a legal ivil marriage and a valid religious arriage. All religious marriages ust be legal marriages, but all legal arriages are not valid religious mariages. A legal marriage has to do ith the secular relations of life, hile a religious marriage has to do ith the Church relations and with hristianity. A valid Christian mariage is one which is not forbidden y the Word of God as revealed in oly Scripture. It must be between Christian marriage is indissoluble

s long as both persons live. "I, N, ake thee M. to be ..... till death s do part." (Vow in the Solemniza-ion of Matrimony.) This same vow mplies a willingness of both to be arried, hence mutual consent. There-ore coercion or fraud before mar-

ual consent and therefore invalidate arriage and so render the marriage hall be within the discretion of any minister to decline to solemnize any arriage." (Canon 40 § III of the anons of the General Convention).

On the Burial of the Dead

The Rubrics of the Order for the Burial of the Dead in the Book of Common Prayer require that the funeral shall as a rule be in the Church not in private houses. Note these words from the rubrics in the service: "The Minister, meeting the Corpse at the entrance of the Churchyard. . . "After they are come into the Church shall be said . ."

"Here it is to be noted, that the Office ensuing is not to be used for any unbaptized adult, any who die excommunicated, or who have laid violent hands upon themselves." (Rubric in the Order for the Burial of the Dead.) But there is no rubric or canon which forbids any Minister from burying the unbaptised with some other service.

"The Redemption of a Community" was the topic of a recent Sunday evening-sermon preached at Christ Church, Springfield, Ill., by the Rector, the Rev. L .L. Riley. Stereopticon slides were used to illustrate the sermon showing how welfare work can improve the financial and the moral status of any community.

A Chaplain in the army writes: Th young manhood is taking its religi in dead earnest. After this war a these men coming home to find th fathers sitting on the same old ba fence of religion; or shall they fi that we have marched beside them spirit, and found God the sure strength and refuge that human sou can claim?

Twenty societies joined in a patr otic service on Sunday afternoon, Ja uary 27th, under the auspices of th Colonial Dames of New York in Gra Church that city. The Church w beautifully decorated with evergree and the American flag, and the fla of the Colonial Dames draped th sides of the pulpit, from which th Rector, the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Sla tery, spoke of loyalty to country an the need of a return to simplicity public life such as was practiced b General Washington. The offerings the morning and afternoon servic for the Church War Commission Fun amounted to $41,973.

The Secretary of War was high praised, says the New York Time for his interest in religious work the army, by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Willia Lawrence, Bishop of Massachuset and head of the Church War Commi sion, in his sermon at St. Thoma Church on Sunday, January 27th. Th Bishop declared that there was ne for more Chaplains; that the Wa Department was co-operating to th fullest possible capacity, and that th Churches themselves were at fault they did not provide the religiou workers who were needed.

Under the heading "The Church fo Prayer and Worship," the Rev. W. MacCartney, Rector, in announcin the services at St. John's Church Mauston, Wis., says: "We have n fancy attractions, no magnificen preaching, nor do we make our musi a drawing card. We aim to teac plain people, and our only attractio is the Gospel of Jesus Christ and Hi crucified."

St. Paul's Day was duly observed by St. Paul's Church, Washington, D. C., when the Rt. Rev. Dr. Harding, Bishop of the Diocese, preached the sermon in the Parish where he had been the Rector for over twenty years. After Evensong there was a reception in the Parish House of former and present members. On the following Sunday, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Talbot, Bishop of Bethlehem, was the special preacher of the day. The Rector, the Rev. Dr. Robert Talbot, announced that a

A Supremely Happy Soldier

According to the Rev. George Long, Volunteer Chaplain, there is a soldier at Camp Dodge, Iowa, who is supremely happy over the entrance of the United States into the war, but for reasons not mentioned in President Wilson's state papers. A colored recruit from the South, dressed in his new uniform, strolled into General Headquarters at the Camp recently with a broad grin on his face, saluted an officer whom he mistook for a General, pointed to his new shoes and earnestly inquired: "Gineral, do de soldier boys git shoes like these all thru de wah?" "I am reasonably sure they will," replied the officer. "An, Gineral, do we's git togs like dese all thru de wah?" "No doubt of it," said the officer. "An' Gineral, am you sho' Uncle Sam's gwine to give us de same kind o' eats all thru de wah?" The officer assured him that the government would provide plenty of wholesome food for the men in the service. "You's not foolin' dis po'h niggah, Gineral?" "Of course not," again the officer assured him. "Praise de gud Lo'd, Gineral, w'y didn't He start de wah a long time afore!" exclaimed the soldier.

An Archdeacon Provides Cakes for Auxiliary Teas

In the Diocese of Michigan City, Indiana, it is the custom of Parish branches of the Woman's Auxiliary to hold annual Epiphany teas. A ring is hidden in the cake served by the ladies and the one drawing the ring is expected to provide the cake for the following year. The Ven. R. J. Long, Archdeacon of the Diocese, was required, according to the custom, to provide the cake this year at the Epiphany Tea given by the Woman's Auxiliary of St. John's Church, Elkhart, and he drew the ring hidden in the cake served at the last Epiphany Tea given by the Woman's Auxiliary of Gethsemane Church, Marion.

My Piano, Our Children, Your Bills!

At the luncheon given in St. Paul's Parish House, Minneapolis, following the consecration of Dr. Remmington as Suffragan Bishop of South Dakota, Bishop Burleson, in the course of a response to a toast, placed his arm affectionately around his newly consecrated co-worker, and said: "After this I shall no longer say, 'My District,' but 'Our District'." The Bishop, however, from force of habit, referred two or three times to "My District" before he completed his remarks. He was followed by Bishop Johnson of Colorado, who stated that he had been strongly opposed to the adoption of the Suffragan Bishoprick in the American Church and expressed the hope that the Bishops of South Dakota might prove that he had been wrong in his opposition, "But," he jokingly asserted, "I am not at all encouraged in view of Bishop Burleson's continued reference to 'My District', notwithstanding his fine resolution. This reminds me of the peculiar uses to which the personal pronoun may be put. Mrs. Johnson says, 'My piano our children, your bills'."

Fiftieth Anniversary Philadelphia Parish

The fiftieth anniversary of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, was observed with an elaborate program, says the Ledger of that city, beginning on Monday evening January 21st. "Historical Evening" was celebrated and the music sung was the same as that at the opening of the Church and Sunday School on January 26, 1868. Mr. George W. Jacobs, Accounting Warden, and Professor William A. Casner, a member of the Vestry, delivered brief addresses on the history of the Parish. A souvenir book, containing 200 pages and thirty illustrations depicting the history of the Parish was published for the anniversary services. Services were held in the three Chapels of the Parish on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. These include the Chapel of the Holy Communion, the Chapel of St. Simon the Cyrenian, and the Chapel of the Mediator. On Friday night a reception was given by the Clergy and Vestrymen of the Parish and their wives to the members of the congregation. The crowning service of the anniversary was conducted on Sunday, January 27th, when the Rt. Rev. Wilson Reiff Stearly, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Newark, a former Rector of the Parish, preached the anniversary sermon. The Rev. George H. Toop, D. D., is the Rector.

The Rev. Robert Nelson Spencer was installed as Rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Kansas City, Mo., on Sunday, January 20th, by Bishop Partridge. Mr. Spencer was the Rector of Trinity Church previous to its merger with Grace Church last October and assumed the Rectorship of the merged Churches at that time. The Rev. Robert H. Mize of St. Paul's Church said the Morning Prayer and the Rev. Fuller Swift of El Paso, Texas, who was Mr. Spencer's predecessor as Rector of Trinity Church, preached the sermon.

The New Secretary of the Province of the Southwest

The San Antonio Express gives the following sketch of the work of the Ven. Alfred W. S. Garden, Archdeacon of the Diocese of West Texas, who was elected Secretary of the Province of the Southwest at the recent Synod held at Oklahoma City, Okla.:

"Archdeacon Garden came to the Diocese of West Texas from Canada, December, 1896. His first duties were as Missionary in charge of Goliad and Rockport. He subsequently became Rector of Grace Church, Cuero. The position he held for five years. Upon the urgent request of Bishop Johnson he resigned the Rectorship in order to become Chairman of the Commission of the Episcopate Endowment Fund. In this office he was emminently successful, raising $28,000 in a comparatively short time. In order to relieve this endowment, and all other endowments that had for their purpose the support of education and religious work of the State, he went before the Legislature and secured the submission of a constitutional amendment exempting such endowments from taxation.

In support of the action of the Legislature, Archdeacon Garden carried on a campaign of information throughout the State, both by means of letters and various publications. The result was that the amendment carried by a majority of more than twenty-seven thousand. This was the only amendment of the constitution that was successfully carried, three others having failed in the same election. In 1904 the Rev. Mr. Garden was appointed Archdeacon of the Diocese and in 1905 Bishop Johnson assigned him to the West Texas Military Academy as Rector and Business Manager. It was at this time that the school gained its largest enrollment.

In 1908, after discussing with Bishop Johnson the question of organizing a military school under his own leadership, and receiving the Bishop's permission to do so, he organized the Garden Academy, which continued until 1914. At this time Bishop Capers took over the administration of the Diocese and again installed Mr. Garden as General Missionary and Archdeacon. Archdeacon Garden has been a very strong agency in the building up of the Missionary work of the Diocese of West Texas. He has, through Preaching Missions, aroused great interest in the wider work of the Church, and has been most successful in raising Mission points to organized Parishes."

Early Communions

Its value is thus beautifully expressed by the late Canon Liddon: "A Christian of the first or second century would not have understood a Sunday in which, whatever else might be done, the Holy Communion was omitted; and this duty is best complied with as early in the day as possible, when the natural powers of mind have been lately refreshed by sleep, when as yet the world has not taken off the bloom of the soul's first self-dedication to God, when thought and feeling and purpose are still bright and fresh and unembarrassed; then is the time for those who would reap the full harvest of grace to approach the Altar. It is quite a different thing in the middle of the day, even when serious efforts are made to communicate reverently. Those who begin their Sunday with the Holy Communion know one of the deepest meanings of that promise, "They that seek Me early shall find Me."

An Appeal from a Chaplain

For a soldier to mark time in Hawaii, a small group of islands in mid-Pacific, while his fellows are in France or are preparing to go to France, is the most irksome and exacting duty performed by any partisan of our Army. This condition creates a problem that must be solved.

There is a great movement throughout the Nation to assist the work of the Chaplains. The garrison of Oahu, Hawaii, numbering thousands of men is little benefited by these activities. It remains for the Chaplains to do the best they can, handicapped as they are by a lack of funds.

There is a tremendous percentage of men in the army stationed near Honolulu who are from the middle west, from Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan. They need the generous interest of those inclined to assist in the Chaplain's work, more than anyone else.

Our most urgent need is ten thousand dollars to complete a Post Gymnasium at Schofield Barracks. There are easily ten men in the middle west who could cover this need. How vital it is to have such a place for athletic recreation needs no emphasis.

A smaller but very vital need is that of writing material. I urge that you help me place in the hands of our men easy facilities for writing home. Just twenty-five dollars a month would meet this need. Are there not twelve persons who will pledge the necessary funds for this cause for the next year?

We need Victrola records and popular songs; we need games, chess, checkers, dominoes, parchesi, and even jig-saw puzzles. When you have finished your newspaper or your magazine, mail them to the undersigned and he will see that they are placed in the eager hands of the men in our hospitals, recruit camps, and guard houses.

Chaplain H. L. Winter, First U. S. Infantry, Schofield Barracks, Oahu, Hawaii.

Coal Conservation Embargo on Marriage

Probably the recent drastic order emanating from Mr. Garfield has worked widespread hardships and curtailed many industries and restricted the freedom of many people, but we have an incident to relate that we believe is unique in this connection, writes the Rev. Dr. Freeman, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, in his Parish paper. A young man came to our office with his prospective bride, presented the usual marriage license, and asked us to perform the ceremony. Everything was in order and perfectly proper but there was one embarrassing question which he blushed to relate. He said, "I am a cook in a hotel and can rarely get off and I have been waiting since last Friday (it was Monday when he saw us) to get married, but I can't get to a jewelry store to buy a wedding ring, so what am I to do?" It was a really serious situation to him but its solution was found when, glancing up he saw a seal ring on our finger, and said, "Can I borrow that?" Of course he could, so we proceeded with the service, and at the proper time he took our ring and with the usual words committed himself for life to the lady of his choice. It seemed curious at the close of the ceremony to have the new bride take off her wedding ring and hand it back to the parson. We wonder how many other couples over the country have found like embarrassment. Perhaps Mr. Garfield and the administration did not design to put an embargo on marriage, but they evidently did.

Did He Laugh? He Did

"A few Sundays ago," relates Tom Thompson of Howard, "our Sunday School Superintendent, while reading the announcement for the day, felt the sudden approach of a sneeze. He quickly reached for his handkerchief, and as he shook out its folds he discovered that he had brought about the raggedest rag of a rag he ever saw and it scared his sneeze away entirely. He hastily crowded it back into his pocket, but not until a few had seen it, and one dignified lady teacher almost snickered out loud.

"A few minutes later this same lady had occasion to use her handkerchief, and when she drew it from her handbag and shook it out—lo, it almost fell in two, split from one hem to the other with a frazzled rent. And as a judgment on her for laughing at him, the Superintendent just chanced to be looking her way—and did he laugh? He did."—Kansas City Star.

THE BISHOP OF UTAH

A good deal has been written about the Bishop of Utah, and his present relation to the House of Bishops.

In order to get a clear understanding of the situation a few facts need to be noted.

1st. The incident is not yet closed, as the House of Bishops must act upon the resignation of Bishop Jones before it becomes effective. This will be done at the meeting in New York, April 10th, if a quorum can be gathered.

2nd. The Bishop of Utah has in no sense been on trial. The House of Bishops is not a judicial body for the trial of a Bishop. The canons provide another court for this purpose.

3rd. Bishop Jones cannot be deprived of his office as a Bishop in the Church of God, by the acceptance of his resignation. He is merely deprived of his jurisdiction in Utah.

4th. The House of Bishops did not initiate any action, by requesting the resignation of the Bishop of Utah, although it might have done so in so far as removing him as a Missionary Bishop from that jurisdiction and assigning him to other work.

5th. The initiative in the matter of his resignation sprang from the Bishop of Utah himself, for, declining to accept advice as to his conduct from his Council of Advice, he came to the House of Bishops to ask the advice of his brethren.

6th. In response to the request of the Bishop of Utah, the House of Bishops spent a day in conference with the Bishop of Utah, and then requested that a committee, consisting of Bishops Tuttle, Kinsolving and Langley, should advise him what to do.

7th. Acting upon this authority the committee asked him to resign, because, in their judgment his usefulness in that particular field was over; not because he had committed any ecclesiastical offense or civil crime.

Thus the Bishop of Utah asked the Bishops' advice as to whether he should continue his jurisdiction in Utah, and the committee advised that he should not.

It was still perfectly competent for the Bishop of Utah to decline to act upon their advice, by reconsidering his intention to ask that advice. There was no compulsion, except his own determination, that he should ask their advice or take it when given (except only that he himself had said that he would be governed by it).

The question therefore before the House of Bishops at its next meeting has no other bearing on the Bishop of Utah than whether it shall sustain his good judgment in asking the advice of that body, or in taking that advice when given.

For axample, a Missionary Bishop might lose his influence in a jurisdiction by eating with his knife, or wearing unusual vestments in Church.

The matter might be referred to his brethren by himself, and they might tell him that it would be expedient for him to resign—inasmuch as presumably the office of a Bishop is to exert an influence for good in his jurisdiction.

There is no stricture of the liberty of speech of any Bishop in this action of the committee, other than when one has offended the canon of good taste in his official utterances, his usefulness is over and it will help the work of the Church if he takes the advice of his brethren and resigns.

There has been no restraint of free speech beyond such restraint as is always in force, namely, the restraint of good taste and common sense, which will deprive a man of his usefulness, though not of his sanctity.

Our Captain and His Army

But thanks be to God, we do not fight alone, and we do not, if we are wise, trust to our own skill in warring against him. If we did that, we could not hope to be victorious against so adroit and skillful an antagonist. There is One who is stronger than he, and He it is who has organized His army and revealed to us the way by which we may so fight that we may attain the victory. He made great sacrifices for this army of His. He suffered great hardships and finally death that He might make it possible for victory to result from faithful service. The fight is waged in His sight and it is His hand which bestows on faithful soldiers the crown of life at the end.

And the army which He organized is the Catholic Church. It is that in which we are all enlisted soldiers; it is by means of that alone that we are certain to gain the victory, for it is to that only that His promise is made that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

ORDERS

Now the army of God, the Catholic Church, is not a mob, but an army, organized, intended to be trained, intended to fight not only in hand-to-hand conflict but also as a unit. And so it has its officers of different grades, whose duty it is to oversee the training of the soldiers and to direct the progress of the battles. And these officers must be first trained and then commissioned. It will not do for a man to take the honor to himself and constitute himself the leader of a seperate band of guerilla warriors, for sooner or later such a band must inevitably find itself either surrounded by and at the mercy of the enemy or else fighting for some selfish and perhaps trifling reason against the main branch of the army, and thus weakening the strength of all. The officers must be commissioned. They must receive their powers and their authority from above—from their superior officers, duly constituted for conferring such authority, who in their turn look to those in higher grades, until we come to the source of all authority in the great Commander-in-Chief. And the officers so commissioned are entitled to the respect and obedience of the soldiers, unless indeed it should be shown in some cases that they are unworthy and incompetent. For to gain and keep respect and obedience which is necessary, the officer must do his part. He will himself respect his office; he will strive to do nothing that will disgrace his uniform; he will try to fulfill his duty to the soldiers committed to his charge. He will use to the best of his ability all the helps that have been entrusted to him by his Captain. And they are many.

BAPTISM

Baptism is of course our enlistment. By it we are signed up for service when we shall have come to age; we are accepted for training in the Christian Camp, and are sealed with the sign of our Commander, in token that we shall not be ashamed to fight under His banner against sin, the world, and the devil, and to continue His faithful soldiers and servants unto our life's end. And from that moment, there is not a time when we cannot be sure that all the resources of the army are at our command. To each one of us are assigned older soldiers to act, if they are faithful to their trust, as our instructors, and a heavenly messenger to act as our guide and protector.

CONFIRMATION

And then, when we have attained a sufficient age, we are fitted out with the whole armour of God in holy Confirmation, and given an opportunity of renewing the vows of our enlistment and taking our place in the ranks of actual warfare.

HOLY COMMUNION

Now one of the prime requisites for the well being of soldiers is that they shall be regularly and sufficiently fed, and the good officer will see that the men under his charge are looked after in this regard. There is food provided in our army, food sufficient and satisfying, even the very Body and Blood of Him for whom and with whom we fight. In the strength of the food we are able to go on from strength to strength until we come to the mount of God. Is it not a reproach to us that so many of our young soldiers, soon after they are admitted to the table of the Lord, are by our failure to impress on them their privilege and to keep them up to their duty, allowed to be deprived of the means by which alone they can retain their spiritual strength, and even their bodily health and to fill their belly with the husks that the swine do eat? If we are to fight, we must be fed. There is only one Food for souls.

Not Peace, But a Sword

Christ's statement that He had come to bring strife and a sword on earth did not mean that He wished any such results to accompany His coming and His work, but that results were inevitable. Christ sets up a standard that arouses the antagnoism of evil-minded men. He tells people to be unselfish, helpful, self-sacrificing, and because people are naturally greedy and selfish and self-seeking, they not only refuse to accept His standards, but oppose and attack those who do. Every moral reform is opposed by those who do not wish to be just and right, and whose self-interests will be injured by the triumph of righteousness. Christ has come to bring peace, but before peace can reign wrong must be overthrown, and wrong cannot be overthrown without a struggle.—Christian Herald

The Peculiar Psychology of the Camp

How it Has Affected Christian Workers, and Measures by Which the Camp Secretaries of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew are Overcoming it.

There is a peculiar psychology in camp life which, until the Clergymen and Camp Secretaries realize it, is apt to be puzzling.

Young fellows who were steady in their Church attendance at home, are not inclined to attend religious services.

Christian men,—aye, Brotherhood members, in some cases,—men who were accustomed in their home towns and cities to help the other fellow, and whisper the word which might bring another into the Fellowship of Christ, have become mute.

They hold back; they refrain from engaging in Christian work; they do not even attend religious services.

All of which applies only to some men, mind you.

Clergymen and Camp Secretaries, who have beheld this phenomena, were astonished. They did not know what to make of it.

Could it be possible, they asked, that men underwent a transformation by donning a uniform?

What was the secret of it?

Officials of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew began an investigation, and this is what they found:

They discovered that men in khaki are serious-minded; that they are impressed by the fact that they are about to embark upon the Great Adventure; that this does bring to their minds serious contemplation of the Things Eternal; moreover, that they were never more anxious in their lives to attend the holy services of the Church and receive its Divine inspiration.

Then why do they refuse to attend? Why do they hold back? Why have Brotherhood men ceased to pass the word of Christian fellowship to their brothers in khaki?

Simply because the whole thing is so new to them. They have been dumped into the Army like a class of freshmen in a University, but, unlike a University, there are no senior classes to show them the way. They comprise the most heterogeneous lot of men, rich and poor, educated and uneducated, mechanic and laborer.

And no fellow among them wishes to take the initiative, for fear of being criticised. This is natural; it prevails among men in all walks of life.

Moreover, in the Army, the spirit of "waiting for orders" is inculcated. Army men are trained to wait for a command. They do not go ahead, like men in civil life, doing things and saying things as the spirit moves them.

And just at this point, the leadership of the Camp Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and his "key-men" becomes effective.

The Camp Secretary, or his key man, goes about among the men in uniform and gives them the word of encouragement that is needed. They invite the men to the religious services in the "Y" building, and to the celebrations of the Holy Communion, and how quickly that invitation is accepted!

The fellows were waiting for that invitation.

They were anxious, eager to go, but,—how strange is human nature,—they were waiting for someone to request them to do what their hearts desired.

The Camp Secretary goes to the Brotherhood man who has been an active worker in his Parish back in the home town, and says, "Mr. Blank, you must realize what a wonderful opportunity we have in this camp. We are expecting you to help. The possibilities for personal work are unlimited, and, as you know, the workers are few. Every man is expected to do his duty."

Whereupon, the Brotherhood man replies that he is heart and soul in the cause, and promises to begin work.

And he does.

The work begins quietly and unostentatiously, but gathers in force from week to week. There are continual interruptions. No sooner is a group formed than a shift of troops takes place, and the group is sent away from the cantonment to parts unknown.

The Camp Secretary loses touch with them, temporarily, but who shall say that his work goes for nothing?

Those key-men, those groups, have seen the vision of service. They will continue their efforts wherever they go, in another cantonment, or in a camp in France, across the seas.

But the important thing is to enlist the men in Christian service; to get them to shake off that silly fear that their comrades will misunderstand.

And in this work the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is playing a leading part.

Evil and Sin

The problem of the origin of Evil and Sin is older than Christianity. There is no form of religion in which this problem does not enter in one shape or another. Man has ever been conscious that, in some way or another, evil is a reality, that there are things in the world which act against man's good, which are harmful to man's nature, and that there are acts which militate against man's best and noblest life. The earliest and crudest form of religion, the fetich worship, has as its basal principle the propitiation of the workers of evil so that this evil might be avoided, and the highest form recognizes that the "flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; so that we cannot do the things we would." "There have been attempts in the history of man to deny the existence of evil and the reality of pain and sin, but these attempts have failed, and their adherents have ended their lives in despair by suicide. The philosophy of "let us eat and be merry for tomorrow we die" is but the attempt to blind men to the existence of evil and sin.

Men are talking today as if Christianity was responsible for the teaching of evil and sin, but a casual glance backward over the history of mankind will convince any one of the falsehood of this statement. Sin, evil, and pain are older than Christianity, but Christianity has a complete answer to the scoffer of God because of them. The Cross of Christ is the sclution of the problem of sin and evil, and it is only as we study that Sacrifice on Calvary that we can understand to non-existent save as we yield to our mortal nature or as we are subject to "malignant animal magnetism."

The Christian starts from two fundamental propositions; first, that all things were made by God; and, second, that all things were made by God for some good purpose. In addition to this, Christianity predicates in man freedom of will, and therefore freedom of choice. Consequently evil arises from a perverted will, from a wrong choice, or from an abuse of those things which God made for good. Sin, which is the mother of evil, is discord in the relation of man to the things of God, a lack of harmony on the part of man with the things of the universe as God intended them to be. Consequently there is no evil in the substance itself,—the evil arises when it is used otherwise than its right use. The sin, or evil, is in the will of the person using the substance. We are in danger of losing track of this truth, and we are tempted to attack evils as if they existed apart from man's use of matter. For evil is not positive; it is negative. It is absence of good, the taking away from something the good that is in it; it is the abuse of matter by which the good use is destroyed or perverted. There is no substance in evil, no nature of evil, no positive cause of evil. Evil is always failure and the cause of evil is always failure, failure to do good or to use matter for the good purpose for which God made it. God made His universe a universe of order and law; evil is disorder, the failure of somethings being used according to God's order and law; it is an action contrary to the established law of its being.

When looked at in this way, the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount becomes clear; murder is not the act, but the perverted will which may or may not produce the act; adultery is not the act, but the depraved will which desires the act; drunkenness is not the liquor but the weakened will which abuses the liquor. We are losing sight of this in all our attempts at the prevention of evil. Yet the Scriptures are full of this teaching; it is what our Lord meant by saying: "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man. . . For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blashemies."

A perverted will arises from sin. God created man a moral, free being, giving him the choice of good or evil; He created him and endowed him with free will. As a moral being man has the power to do according to God's will or not, to use the things of the world for good or for evil, to use or abuse the fruits of the earth. Man on one side is animal, on the other he is in the image of God. God took an animal and breathed into him the breath of life and man became a living soul. The animal was created for physical purposes but was to be subordinated to the higher spiritual nature, which was destined to be godlike. So man in his life is under the laws of two spheres, one lower, the other higher. By his freedom of will he can govern his life entirely by one or the other of these laws. By God's plan the laws of man's higher nature were to predominate, and the laws of the physical were to be subordinated to the higher. Man's body was to be the instrument of man's soul. But in order that man's moral nature could develop spiritually, it was necessary for him to be able to choose. Sin is the wrong choosing. It is the placing, contrary to God's economy, the lower nature above the higher. It is the yielding of man to the laws and demands of the animal in contradiction to those of the spiritual. So comes evil and sin. Sin in the choice; evil is a result of that choice. Where God intended harmony of all the order, man produces discord. Nature is out of joint; nothing works in agreement; hence evil and its attending companions.

Evil, therefore, can only be overcome by man's doing the will of God, subordinating his will to the will of God. Until that is done, evil will be in the world. So it was that Jesus Christ came into the world to do the perfect will of God, and by so doing redeem the world. It is only by sacramental union with Him, our wills being conformed to His will, that we can ever hope to overcome evil. No law or institution can ever do away with evil as long as man yields his "members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin," as "servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity." It is only by the seeking first the kingdom of God and His righteousness that man can be saved from evil. The will of each and every man must be transformed and conformed to the will of God. We are so impatient of discipline and self-control; we follow after all kinds of panaceas which promise so much and are so destitute of result.

Pain and disease belong to man's physical nature; they may result from the overindulgence of that nature, that is, from sin, or they may not. Pain is the body's method of indicating disarrangement of the harmonious working of its parts; it is nature's signal of distress, to be heeded in order to escape greater pain. Disease is the breaking down of the body through some agency acting upon it. Both pain and disease belong to man's animal nature, and are not necessarily evil. They may result from evil and from sin, and in many cases they do. Much pain and many diseases come from man's selfishness and man's defiance of the laws of God's universe, and so may be removed by the conformity to these laws and to the will of God.

So here is the conclusion of the whole matter. Sin, evil, and pain arise from the failure of man to make his life by his will agree with the will of God as shown in His universe. It is all in man's will. However, since man sinned ages ago as well as he sins today, evil is not overcome in a moment. By the grace of God we can by the Blood of Jesus Christ overcome the sin that is in us, and by so doing help to conquer the evil in the world, and only so. When Christian people really live their religion, then much evil will disappear, but not before they do. No law or institution, no federal enactments, will do this for us. Only by personal repentence, and this is the changed man, can this be done.

Full Measure

Neither should I give my Lord short measure at this service, by entering late or leaving early. In one of His warnings He orders me to give "good measure, and pressed down, and shaken together, and running over. For, with the same measure that you shall mete withal, it shall be measured to you again." Luke 6:38. Can I expect a full bushel of reward in the next life if I cut off a peck at the beginning and a peck at the end of a divine service? No. The measure I used toward God was a half-bushel; and thus my deserts should be. Therefore I will offer my Lord a complete service, an undivided heart. If I refuse to do this I am mortally stingy with my worship.

The Mystery of Pain

By the Rev. Harry Ransome

How can we account for the mystery of pain and suffering? It cannot be guessed; and to dismiss it as an illusion of the mind is impossible. But it is a grave question whether increased material comforts have not encouraged timidity of pain and suffering and deepened the tendency to look upon them as foes to human happiness. Much of our humanitarianism is based on this idea; and many gladly donate time and money to establish institutions which aim to reduce suffering in order to increase the sum total of human happiness. By yielding to these kindly impulses, stirred without doubt, by a genuine spirit of altruism, the belief is fostered that every form of suffering is abhorrent. Were suffering really the ultimate evil, and were physical comfort and enjoyment really the ultimate good, such an attitude would be the perfection of charity. Much of our philanthropy is simply the "positivist" doctrine of August Comte in modern garb. This "religion of humanity" is frankly agnostic, although it raises the Cross upon its brow in preaching that the self-sacrifice of the few is necessary to secure the greatest amount of enjoyment and comfort for the many, hence love to our neighbor is the fulfilling of the law. The average man freely accepts this religion; he does not concern himself about any theory of life or hereafter, but busies himself "going about and doing good." Let no one fault those who are helping to relieve human suffering in any form, but we venture to raise the question whether they have really grappled with the problem of pain and suffering or truly helped to raise the sum of real joy and real happiness in the world.

One thing we cannot overlook. However undesirable pain may be in itself, it is a necessary condition of life. Pain is the inevitable condition of growth and expansion; no life but at the cost of suffering, seems to be the universal law of evolution. To survive is struggle, and to struggle is to suffer. A world without trouble or suffering is a world without progress; even the fatal mistakes of one generation are the ascending steps by which the next may rise to greater perfection and safety. One man's boat strikes the rock in the harbor, afterwards a buoy is lifted up, and the fleets go forth in safety.

But does this adequately explain why the innocent suffer so much pain and sorrow? Why is it? From how many hearts has this cry gone forth? How often events come into our lives touching them vitally and then pass out again without unveiling their true import; their spiritual effect on ourselves and others we cannot always fathom, but we know and feel they bear some unseen relation to our spiritual selves. Pain and sorrow touch all of us, and the full reason why they have come into our lives is unknown, but the result is felt for good or evil. Perhaps a little light will glimmer through the darkness if we approach the mystery from a Christian standpoint.

The source of our spiritual life is Almighty God; for all activity flows from Him, through Christ, to us. This was made possible through the Mystery of the Incarnation when the Word became Flesh and gathered us into His Incarnate Life and His eternal Priesthood. The sacerdotal character of Christ is stamped upon each of us. As members of His Body we share in His priestly office, and as individuals we must each make our priestly offering, and the sum of the priestly offering of mankind is united to His offering on the Cross. Hence our offering partakes of the nature of sacrifice. Sacrifice becomes the supreme act of our life, and suffering, pain and sorrow are part of its reality.

And the power of sacrifice is love. Truly, God must have loved man, for He reveals himself as a sufferer; as One who bore, what we call, pain and loss. These were His portions. He emptied Himself, and at once His sorrow became visible to the naked eye. How can we explain the mystery of His suffering? How can we account for this exhibition of toil and self-abnegation? In no other way than to believe it was an exhibition of the power of love. Pain is latent in our highest state because we cannot escape from it in this life, but it lies hidden and almost unfelt under the form of devoted sacrifice. Our Lord sacrificed Himself willingly for others' good, and in this sacrifice, despite pain and sorrow, He found His joy. "Who for the joy set before Him, endured the Cross, despising shame."

All sacrifice is the instrument of joy, for devotedness and self-giving are the conditions of that joy which spring from love. Only when the love in the sacrifice grows cold, does pain begin to be felt as pain, intolerable and bitter.

At times we seek deliverance from pain, sorrow and suffering. We seek deliverence by taking away; God gives deliverance by adding, that we may realize that the noblest form of life is found in sacrifice and often for ends unseen. One is stricken down and withdrawn from active service to live a life of pain; another is taken away and the family is deprived of a bread-winner, these or some other form of pain or sorrow come to us all and our faith is tried. But is it possible that Almighty God is teaching us that of all which could be spared from life, our sacrifice in which pain and sorrow are gathered up, can be spared the least? Is it possible that through suffering and sorrow, He is separating us from much which we hold dear, that He may draw us more closely to Himself? Drawing us into the Atoning activity of Christ's Passion and eternal Priesthood? We suffer? Yes! for the way of the Cross is the suffering way; and yet for us, even as it was for our Lord, it is the way of lasting joy and happiness. The reason we are made or seem to be made for pain and sorrow is, because we are made for love; and the privilege of sacrifice is a sign and proof on how good a plan the world is formed. A human life in this world, free from everything that has in it the element of pain and sorrow, is a life not worth living—intolerable and wearisome, for the spring of real joy is taken from it.

What then shall we do with the pain and sorrow which come to us? Let us make it the material of our priestly sacrifice, and share in the fellowship of Christ's sufferings. We cannot, always, see the end of this suffering of ours; we cannot penetrate into the full mystery of the sacrifice, but we know that no true sacrifice was ever made to Almighty God in vain. Moreover, too, even in this world, we can, out of our painful experience bring joy to others. Financial worry, family troubles, a cruel malady, moral loneliness, unrealized love was the record of one man's life. A weak man would have given away in despair, but Beethoven out of the depths of his sorrow and distress undertook to create joy, and he did so in his Ninth Synphony.

The Parson on "Slackers"

There are some very good words which have come into their meanings in the process of gathering the men for the camps. One of these which keeps coming into the Parson's mind is the word "slacker." He thinks it is a good word for the thing it is meant to express. It has a snap to it, like the crack of a whip. Evidently there was a need for such a word, though the Parson thinks it does not belong altogether to the boys. Mr. Hoover has taught us its meaning as applied to our food. War bread is the thing to eat. Water is good enough to drink. Mr. McAdoo has taught us its meaning as applied to our money. There are money slackers. There are, in fact, all sorts of slackers, and it is a difficult thing for any of us not to get caught somewhere—the word fits so many things. The Prayer Book describes the "slacker" well. He is the man who has left undone those things he ought to have done and done those things he ought not to have done, and there is no health in him.

Somehow the Parson's mind will not let him stop with the men in the camps, or in use of food or money, or any other of the ordinary things or people at which the word is flung so freely. His thought keeps running off into broader and somewhat different fields. He wonders, for example, if it would not have been a good thing if we had discovered this thing a long time ago, and applied it to our religion with something of the snap we give to it now.

Does any one, for example, think that if the great multitude of those who profess to call themselves Christians had lived anywhere near to the true spirit of their professions, that there would have been any war? The Parson does not. Does any one suppose that if men had listened to and heeded the clear teaching of the Christian Church for a century there would have been this war? And does any one think for a moment it is going to do us or the world any good to eat war bread, to save sugar, or buy liberty bonds, or subscribe to Red Cross funds and send 2,000,000 of our boys to the frout in France and Italy, if our loyalty to the expressed spirit and mind of the Christian Church is to be thrown into the discard here at home?

The Parson has very positive views about that. Indeed, he suggests perhaps the most urgent need today may be to get ourselves into line with the spirit and teachings of the Church; to wear the khaki of the Church; to get into training to apply this spirit among ourselves:—then and then only will our efforts in France or anywhere else get the push behind them which will carry us over the top of our customary neglect of and indifference to these things,—into "no man's land" where we have yet to make the struggle.

In other words, our loyalty today, if it is to be of any permanent value, must be a loyalty to the spirit and purposes of Jesus Christ, not as we as individuals think this spirit and purpose to be, but as they are organically represented in the Church. Without this loyalty to the Christian Church, our talk about our fighting to preserve our free institutions, and country, and flag, reminds the Parson of the man in the good book who undertook to build houses upon the sand.

HENRY HERBERT SMYTHE

Are They Praying for Us at Home?

The following poetry was written by one of the Tommies in France.

TO MY MOTHER

Are they praying for us at home?
Are they meeting together in prayer
Or going on still in the same old way
As they did when I was there?
We thank them for their money,
We thank them for their care,
But, oh, just tell them, Mother dear,
We are needing so much prayer.

Will you ask them to gather together
To meet at our Father's throne
That we may be kept from faltering
When we feel we are standing alone.
There are moments when courage fails us,
When dangers around us stare,
Oh, tell them again, dear Mother,
We are needing so much more prayer

Surely their voices must touch us
As they echo from over the seas,
And call us away from our pleasures
To help them on bended knees.
We are sending them money and comforts
And seeking their burden to share,
But oh, let our meeting be crowned
When kneeling for them in prayer.

Victory

I said, "Let me walk in the fields;"
He said, "Nay, walk in the town;"
I said, "There are no flowers there;"
He said, "No flowers but a crown."

I said, "But the sky is black,
There is nothing but noise and din;"
But He wept as He sent me back—
"There is more," He said, "there is sin."

I said, "But the air is black
And fogs are veiling the sun,"
He answered, "Yet souls are sick,
And souls in the dark undone."

I said, "I shall miss the light,
And friends will miss me, they say;"
He answered me, "Choose tonight
If I am to miss you, or they."

I pleaded for time to be given;
He said, "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide."

I cast one look at the fields,
Then set my face to the town;
He said, "My child do you yield?
Will you leave the flowers for the crown?"

Then into His hand went mine,
And into my heart came He,
And I walk in a light divine,
The path I had feared to see.

GEORGE MACDONALD.

The members of the faculty of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, states the Rhode Island Record, are in turn serving St. George's Church, Central Falls, during the vacancy in the Rectorship caused by the resignation of the Rev. S. M. Dorrance, who is now a volunteer Chaplain at Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo. He put the Parish in such a well organized condition and filled it with such loyalty to the Church, that it will run itself for some time.

The Churchwomen of the Diocese of New York are providing the funds for the erection of a Chapel at the cantonment near San Antonio, Texas. The movement is under the leadership of Miss Emily Warren.

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

11:45 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Mr. Blank, this is Ethel. Would you be willing to write me a letter of recommendation? I wish to enter a training school for nurses and I must get such a letter."

(Letter promised.)

11:50 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Good morning, Mr. Blank. This is Mrs. M———. Of course I do not want to make any fuss about it and I am speaking merely to let you know that your treasurer is not very accurate. I subscribed fifty cents a week to the Church: but this Spring I was eight weeks in Europe and when the treasurer sent my bill he included those eight weeks. I always understood that Sundays spent out of town were to be deducted from the subscription. My repair bills on my automobile have been so great this year," etc.

(The Minister thanks heaven for his uncomplaining poor, and says he will see the treasurer about it.)

12 noon.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Hello, this is Jack. (Jack is an intimate friend.) What have you been doing? Dozing over an old stupid sermon? You ought to get out among the people, my boy, learn human nature, and not go prosing away in your study. Come over to dinner . . . No time for it? Nonsense. Let up once in a while. No use taking things so seriously. Can't come? Well, I'll try you later. So long."

12:30 p. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Hello, is this Reverend Blank? This is Mrs. H———. We are organizing a great musical festival for the benefit of the hospital. We want you and your wife to be among the patrons. This will entitle you to a reserved seat. The two tickets will be five dollars. We may count on you, may we not?"

(The Minister sighs and thinks of a new book he had intended to buy and of his wife's suggestion about a pair of new shoes. But he yields. When the night for the concert finally comes he sends his tickets to some one who had nerve enough to refuse, and later, when Mrs. H——— sees the Minister's wife buying a pair of inexpensive shoes, she remarks to a friend that the Minister must be very close with his wife's allowance.)

12:50 p. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"This is Mrs. K———: We have a guest who is a fine singer and I have asked her to sing a solo Sunday morning."

(The music for the following Sunday has been already carefully arranged and the choir is fairly bursting with a new anthem.)

Minister (gaining time).—"I shall be glad to call upon your friend. When did she come? How long will she stay?"

Telephone.—"I hope you will call. She will sing of course, but she would like to be asked by you. She will want to practise once in the Church. Could you get the janitor to open it on Thursday, and could you get the organist? And would you be willing to stand in the back of the Church to see if her voice carries?"

(The Minister is in a tight box. He reserves to himself the privilege of inviting outsiders to sing. The choir is touchy about unknown and unannounced soloists. So is the Minister.)

Minister.—"It is very kind of you, but I had better call before we make final arrangements."

Telephone.—"Oh, it will be all right. Will you put a special notice in the paper? The solo is entitled 'Thy Tender Mercies Ever Near.' It would be very nice and complimentary if you could have a sermon on 'Mercy.'"

(Here the Minister resolves to preach on "Patience.")

Minister.—"We will see. I shall call. Good-bye."

(The Minister sighs as he thinks of there a meeting tonight? This is Charlie Wiggins. I forgot what you said this morning."

1:20 p. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"This is Mrs. R———. When are you coming over our way? Ma wants to see you about a brother of hers in the West. You went past our house on Saturday and did not stop in."

(Minister recalls a hurried trip to that neighborhood.)

Minister.—"I did not have time to stop; I was making a sick call."

Telephone.—"It would have taken only five minutes to drop in, and ma had so much to say to you."

(The Minister had passed twenty houses of his people on that trip and he wondered if all the people were at the windows watching him go by. "Drop-ins" are never counted as calls anyway.)

Minister.—"Please tell your mother that I will call soon."

1:40 p. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"This is Mrs. A———. My aunt has been ill for two weeks and we thought perhaps you did not know it."

(Neither the aunt or the niece was a member of the Minister's congregation, but both were wanderers from fold to fold, and attended every funeral in the town.)

Minister.—"I am very sorry. I hope she will soon be better."

Telephone.—"She wondered why you had not called. The Methodist Minister and the Disciple Minister and the Presbyterian Minister have all called and we are expecting you."

(The Minister promises, and thinks of the scores of people who really need him and upon whom it would be a satisfaction to call. His errands now keep him two hours in the open air.)

4:15 p. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"I have been trying to get you for two hours. I have heard that Mrs. K———'s guest is to sing a solo in Church Sunday. Is that so?"

Minister (trying to decide whether the speaker is "pro" or "con").—"Mrs. K——— spoke to me about it."

Telephone.—"Well, I think it is too bad when we have so many in the choir who could sing solos, that we must ask some one from outside."

Minister (truth being wiser than fiction)—"She only volunteered. I did not ask her."

Telephone.—"I thought so. I said to several that it was very strange if you wanted her to sing. I will just make it plain that Mrs. K——— is trying to force her guest upon us."

(Here was sufficient cause for an absolutely new denomination of Christian people in that community, so the Minister had to apply sedatives. They were effective.)

Telephone.—"Well, I will say nothing about it. But others think as I do."

(No doubt; and others do not.)

4:25 p. m.—Brrrrrr.

Telephone.—"Good afternoon, Mr. Blank. This is Mrs. C———. Has this not been a quiet, peaceful day? Such a restful day. How you must enjoy these calm summer days when your hard winter's work is over. I have been lying in the hammock all day, reading. We want you and your wife to go with us on an all-day picnic on Thursday. We shall get an early start in our automobile, find a cool spot, have lunch, and return to our house for dinner at night. You can go, can you not?"

Minister.—"I am very sorry, but I have a funeral on Thursday."

Telephone.—"Oh, what bad luck. To think that we have selected the one day of the week when you could not go. So sorry. Good-bye."

(The Minister's dinner is interrupted four times by the telephone and he hurries off to meet his boys. That night he dreams that he is conducting a funeral, the music being furnished by the book agent, Charlie Wiggins, and the soloist. Each carriage is equipped with a telephone, and Sam Hibbard is passing "New Thought" circulars to the mourners. Toward morning he seems to be aroused by the telephone.)

Brrrrrr.—He starts up.

Telephone.—"Good morning, Mr. Blank This is Mr. F———. My automobile will be at your door at 8 o'clock for your use all day. I shall be glad to send it every Wednesday for you. Don't thank me. I know how much you need it and I can send it just as well as not. Good-bye."

The Minister drops asleep again and awakes at 8:15. Hastily he goes to the window to take a glad look at the automobile. It is not there. Then he realizes that it was all a dream.

8:20 a. m.—Brrrrrr.

So he begins the day again.

The War Camp and Social Customs

Ella C. Hartshorn

In our work as travelers' aid in Battle Creek we have come in touch with certain conditions which have led us to think seriously along some lines we wish to bring to your attention.

It will be no new thought to you that the stationing of an army camp brings perplexing problems to every town and village contiguous to the war zone in which the cantonment is located. We are doing the best we can to solve these problems locally; but there are certain of them which belong to you and which you only can solve, and it is in their solution that we invite your thoughtful co-operation.

The army is made up of men from the farms, the factories, the mines and the offices; such men as you meet in society, in business, on the street, wherever you go, for the selective draft falls on all classes alike. Men of affairs, and men whose names would not be known in the city block in which they live; men of fine intellectual and cultural attainments, and men totally unlettered and unlearned; men of the highest moral and religious standards, and those whose lives have never felt this higher touch, are associated together on a military basis—just men.

When these men are mobilized in an army, their distinctive dress is discarded and they are all subjected to the same regulation routine of life, including requirements of personal cleanliness and rigid discipline. In a few weeks differences in personal appearance are reduced to a minimum; but character is not so mobile a thing, and they are, for the most part, essentially the same men as before they entered the army. They have the same hopes and desires, the same ideals and standards of life, the same social and business possibilities as they had six months ago; nothing more, nothin less.

The great difference lies in the fact that they are now going out to fight the battles of our common country—their battles and ours; and this has brought them into a new relation to society and has made us think of them as many of us had never thought of them before—as our brothers.

We would give all honor to these men who are going out to sacrifice a portion of their life's best years, and life itself, if need be, that our national integrity, our national institutions, and our national standards may be preserved. We would show them every courtesy and kindness, and we would do all in our power to give to those who still need such service a vision and incentives to a higher life and a nobler manhood; to help them to such furnishing of heart and mind that they may live a noble life, even when there is no one near to see or care—fit representatives of the country we so dearly love.

But I fear that, through mistaken notions of our relation to these boys of yesterday, these khaki clad men today, we are not only endangering those who are dearest to us personally, but we are actually lowering the standards of our own social life at the home base, where it ought to be kept pure and sweet and high in order that a wholesome sentiment shall be maintained which shall be a continual challenge and a perpetual incentive to our men in field and camp to maintain high personal and army standards. And by lowering our standards at the home base, we are making it easier for our soldier boys to go wrong, and hence harder for them to keep right and maintain the clean, high standards of living which we covet for them, and which a vast majority of them seek to establish in their own lives, such standards as will make them worthy exponents of a Christian democracy in a world reaching out for democratic standards.

There is just one of these questions which I want to speak about in particular; and I beg all who read this message to give the matter their thoughtful consideration. Some of the soldiers have recognized its importance, and have warned young women against the practice; others have remained silent, and still others, I regret to say, have welcomed the social opportunity it gave them which they could not command in any other way. It is the custom which our young women have inaugurated of placing their names and addresses in the magazines they send to camp, or in packages they send for the soldiers, of which I speak. I can understand that this is not done with any wrong motives; it is just the thoughtless act of girlhood which responds to the heroic in war and yields to this expression of patriotism while it fails to follow out the act to its logical results. While some of the men in khaki have seen this and have spoken against it, others have met the challenge and have written the girls, and out of this correspondence are coming relations which well determine the future of many of our girle for weal or woe.

It is to the mothers that we must look to warn their daughters of the serious danger of this unwholesome practice and secure its correction, and where the mistake has alrady been made, shall we not urge them to take such measures as are possible to prevent further harm coming from it?

Should a stranger from any other where come to your home unrecommended to seek your daughter's acquaintance, you would ask for references and investigate his character and past life before you would accord him the right to your daughter's society. You would want to know whether he was a man of character and integrity, worthy to be your daughter's friend, or whether he was a faithless husband who had deserted his wife and family, a man of criminal tendency, or a social parasite seeking your daughter's society only to lead her astray, and it would be only when you found that he measured up to proper standards that you would admit him to your home.

Why not maintain the same social standards with these men in khaki? If a soldier seeks an introduction to your daughter, why not write the pastor of your church, or some other responsible person in the town from which he has come, and ask him to look up the young man's record and inform you if he is a proper person to be received into your home?

If he is a true man, and seeks your daughter's society for legitimate reasons, he ought to be glad to give you responsible references and welcome such investigation, for it would put him upon an acceptable footing and rid him of embarrassment. If he is not a true man, this would be brought to light, he would be kept in his proper place, and your daughter would be saved from the humiliation and sorrow that attends such unwarranted association.

Would not our worthy young men welcome such investigation which would place them on the accredited list, socially, so to speak; and would it not save much of the sadness and sorrow of heart attendant upon war if our daughters were thus protected in their intercourse with our soldiers?

We do not wish to deprive our young women of any legitimate privileges, nor do we wish to deprive our soldiers of the fullest social enjoyment that can properly be accorded them; but would it not be a real boon to all persons concerned if these suggestions could be carried out and all placed on a safe and secure social basis?

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE DISSATISFIED LILY

In the Northland, there is a lovely little River between two beautiful lakes. Trees and shrubs and tall Grasses grow along both sides of the River. In the water, all the way down this River are many pretty Flowers, dainty little pink blossoms, the blue Water Hyacinths, Yellow Water Lilies, and White Water Lilies. I think flowers are much like people, for they like some things, and other things they do not like. Many like plenty of water, some do not like it at all. Some love the Sunshine and others love the Shade. Sometimes they who are in the Shade sigh for the Sunshine, and they who are in the Sunshine long for the Shade. Once in a while it happens that some Flower, made for the Shade finds itself out in the open Sun, then it discovers that the Sun it sighed for is not good at all, and it begins to droop and finally fades away. In this River was a charming group of the whitest Lilies you ever saw, with delicate yellow hearts. All the day long the Breezes played over them, and the Sun shone, and there came from them a sweet, eweet odor. The Bees and the Butterflies, and the Insects hovered over them and gathered sugar from their yellow hearts. Everyone who passed by in Canoe or Boat said "How beautiful" and beautiful they were. They seemed so satisfied to be and do what God had planned for them. But here is a sad story. One Lily, and she was the largest and most beautiful of them all, was not a bit satisfied to be where she was, nor to live as she was living. She cried out, "Why am I here in this lonely place? What good is it to be sweet and beautiful when so few pass by to see me and admire me?" It did not satisfy her that a poet came by one day and wrote a sweet song about her, or that an artist painted a picture and she was the center of the picture. No, she was dissatisfied still. Then one day someone came by and saw her, and bent down and plucked her from her roots. The pain was very great and she almost fainted away. The lady who plucked her smiled on her and smelled of her perfume and then dropped her into the bottom of the canoe, and presently forgot all about her. Then she wished she were back on the bosom of the River where the Bees hummed and the Butterflies hovered and the Breezes played all the day.

THE REV. FRANCIS L. PALMER

IO VISTIS!

(The author, William Wetmore Story, was a famous sculptor, but well known also, as poet, essayist, and novelist. He was born in Salem, Massachusetts, in 1819, and died at Vallombroso, Italy, in 1895. While living in Rome he was an intimate friend of Landor and the Brownings.

The Latin title may be rendered "Hail to the Vanquished!").

I sing the hymn of the conquered, who fell in the battle of life—
The hymn of the wounded, the beaten, who died overwhelmed in the strife;
Not the jubilant song of the victors, for whom the resounding acclaim
Of nations was lifted in chorus, whose brows wore the chaplet of fame,
But the hymn of the low and the humble, the weary, the broken in heart,
Who strove and who failed, acting
the sun
Whose youth bore no flower of its branches, whose hopes burned in ashes away,
From whose hands slipped the prixe they had grasped at, who stood at the dying of day
With the wreck of their life all around them, unpitied, unheeded, alone,
With Death swooping down o'er their failure, and all but their faith overthrown.

While the voice of the world shouts its chorus—its paean for those who have won;
While the trumpet is sounding triumphant, and high to the breeze and bravely a silent and desperate part;
Gay banners are waving, hands clapping, and hurrying feet
Thronging after the laurel-crowned victors, I stand on the field of defeat.
In the shadow, with those who are fallen, and wounded, and dying, and there
Chant a requiem low, place my hand on their pain-knotted brows, breathe a prayer,
Hold the hand that is helpless, and whisper, "They only the victory win
Who have fought the good fight, and have vanquished the demon that tempts us within;
Who have held to their faith, unseduced by the prize that the world holds on high,
Who have dared for a high cause to suffer, resist, fight,—if need be, to die!"

Speak, History! Who are Life's victors? Unroll thy long annals and say,
Are they those whom the world called the victors—who won the success of day
The martyrs, or Nero? The Spartans, who fell at Thermopolae's tryst?
Or the Persians and Xerxes? His judges or Socrates? Pilate or Christ?

RICH MAN, POOR MAN— WHO SUPPORTS THE CHURCH?

By Dean Walter S. Pond, Chicago

The reason why we cannot preach it better, and the reason why we can not have all the play interests and the Parish House activities that we ought to have, and the reason why our Church cannot afford to do all she would like to do on the subject of Social Service, is because it takes money to run a local Episcopal Church. If we do not have the money we cannot do all that we would like to do. No average Episcopal Clergyman would prefer to fail rather than to succeed. Whether it be East or West, or North or South, there are rich Episcopalians who are supporting the Church generously. There are also rich Episcopalians who are doing but very little to enable the work to go on. There are also poor Episcopalians who are making great sacrifices to enable themselves to have their religious privileges. And there are some poor Episcopalians who could do something for the Church annually and monthly and weekly who are doing nothing whatsoever. In a Church that is not many hundreds of miles from Chicago, there is a splendid Clergyman (just beyond the prime of life) who has been rated, for years, as one of the best preachers in his Diocese. He has splendid Parish buildings but no money to keep them open. There are hundreds of unfortunate men (needing the benefits of that Parish House) lying right at the very doors of the Church, so to speak. The people in that Parish are beginning to feel that they need a new Rector. They do not need a new Rector, but they need a new feeling of consecration amongst the parishioners of that old Rector. I happen to know that one of that Rector's parishioners gave less than $1,000 in one year for the maintenance of the parochial activities. I happen to know that that same rich parishioner in that same year gave $250,000 to one of his pet hobbies, a secular institution. That rich parishioner does not believe in Church social activities. He does believe in secular activities of Social service. He has already written a book in which he extols these secular works and shows up the failure of the Church in this generation. Some day, when I am in a Social Service conference with that parishioner, when that parishioner insults the Church as that Churchman has been known to do, I am going to get up and announce that if that Churchman will give $250,000 to his Church organization, and $1,000 to the secular organization, that, in one year, he will have facts that will give him the material for Volume No. 2 that will be better than the book already finished. We do not need to lose our balance and simply content ourselves by faulting the rich. In a number of our Parishes they are bearing the burden and the heat of the day—financially speaking. In my particular Parish I have hundreds of so-called poor people who have spent more in one year on their newspapers than they have on their religion.

In the Episcopal Church, if we are ever going to do our work efficiently we must have the money to get in on Social Service interests and the questions of the day. It will cost us something if the Parish Houses are made to save the children from hell. I do not mean to blame the Clergy very much because I am absolutely persuaded that an average Clergyman cannot worry all Saturday night about financial matters, and preach optimistically on a Sunday morning. It is going to take a great deal of money if the local Episcopal Church, whether it be in the city or in the country, does something to relieve the human misery that can be found as the work which that Church is obligated to do. When we have enough money the Clergy themselves will have that independent attitude, as ambassadors of an Omnipotent Deity, so that, whether they speak on questions of Church or State, they will speak with that clearness that no one will have to think of them as if they were Delphian Oracles — functioning for ecclesiastical purposes. The Church of God in that day will give no uncertain sounds on the subjects of temperance, or purity, or health, or the labor interests, or the Public Park System, or the tenements that unfortunate people have to live in. That day will be a better day than the present day. It will be so not only for God but for man as well.

What seems to be the matter with the Episcopal Church—is the same ailment from which the other churches of America are suffering. Not only the Episcopal Church, but all the churches of America, are to blame for the 55,000,000 of our citizens who are unchurched. The churches of the United States, all of them are censurable because out of a total membership of 45,000,000—fully 30,000,000 are practically unconverted. Our churches are to blame if they are filled with women and girls while the jails and reformatories are populated mostly by men and boys. If God is able to use a layman, like Mr. Sunday, we (as clergy and laity) may not plead excuses until we will obey God in our methods of working His Salvation. So far we seem to have refused to take the right attitude. And we have failed. Sunday had trusted only in God. Is he succeeding?

Religious Survey Reveals Surprising Facts and Figures

The Rev. Robert Renison, General Missionary, Diocese of Los Angeles, recently made a survey of religious conditions in a section of Orange County, Cal., not under clerical supervision, which reveals some rather surprising facts and figures. He made altogether 1,369 calls and found 119 Episcopalians. 165 persons declared they were of no Church. He made the largest number of calls at Fullerton, 445 in all, where he found 21 denominations, and 28 Episcopalians, including men, women and children, and about 19 communicants of the Church. He found 57 who said they were of no Church. "I called at a house," writes the Missionary, "and when a little girl opened the door to find out what I wanted, a horrible painting presented itself to me on the wall just opposite the door as you look in. It was intended to represent his Satanic Majesty, and underneath was written these words: 'Go to hell, I have troubles of my own.' I said what Church does your family belong to, little girl? And a voice like thunder from within answered, 'We belong to the Big Church'." In his visitations he found, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Christian Church, Congregationalists, Holiness Church, Eddyism, Roman Catholics, Friends' Church, Spiritualists, Lutherans, Latter Day Saints, the Big Church, Church of God, Church of Christ, Campbellites, German Evangelical, Quakers, Jewish, Seventh Day Adventists, Mennonites, Holy Rollers, The Church of Divine Influence, Pentecostal Nazarines, Pentecostal Pilgrims and Russelites. In order to present his report to a Convocation at Whittier, the Missionary had to travel 530 miles on the Pacific Electric, eighty miles by jitney and 150 miles on foot through the streets and through vineyards, through orange groves, tomato patches and oil fields.

Two-thirds of the Churches Closed in Washington, D. C.

Fuel Administrator, Mr. John L. Weaver, issued an order that on Sunday, January 27th, two-thirds of all Churches of every denomination should be closed at the Nation's Capitol for three weeks in order to conserve coal. A committee of the Church consisting of Dean Bratenahl and Canon DeVries of the Cathedral was appointed to select the sixteen out of the forty-eight Churches and Chapels in the city to be kept open. While all the Parishes obeyed the order there was nevertheless a strong protest made against so many Churches being closed while the theatres and movies were permitted to go on as usual. It is thought at this writing that some modifications of this order will have to be made. The closing order came at a very inopportune time as the 27th was the day set apart for taking the offering towards the $500,000 War Fund. Great interest is being manifested in this fund and it is believed that the full amount will be raised. We are glad to state that the entire cost of a suitable Church building has already been given by a devoted communicant of Washington to be erected for the soldiers at Camp Meade.

Women's War Work for Girls

By Marion Lawrence Peabody

(Mrs. Peabody is a member of the War Work Council of the National Board of the Young Wemen's Christian Association; and is New England Chairman for the campaign for $4,000,000.)

The War Work of the Young Woman's Christian Association may be roughly divided into four parts.

1. Protective work for young girls around cantonments or mobilization centers.

2. Emergency housing for the employed girl.

3. Hostess Houses in cantonments.

4. Work in other countries affected by the war.

1. Girls' Work.

Sixty-five experienced and carefully selected leaders have been sent to forty-six centers, where the girl question had become acute, and by forming clubs of these young girls—most of them from fourteen to sixteen years of age—have rallied them to patriotic service through ways suited to their youth and enthuiasm. Red Cross work, care for orphans of Belgium and France, physical exercise, social activities carefully supervised, and a higher standard of dignity and honors are proving safeguards to the dangers caused by the abnormal conditions due to war time.

The idea of the Patriotic League has appealed strongly to our American girls, and today over 100,000 from ocean to ocean are wearing the button of the blue square, which is the symbol of the Young Woman's Christian Association Patriotic League, and have signed this pledge:

"I pledge to express my patriotism by doing better than ever before whatever work I have to do; by rendering whatever special service I can to my community and country; by living up to the highest standards of character or honour, or helping others to do the same."

2. Emergency Housing.

Every army center employs numbers of girls and women in Telephone or Telegraph offices, in shops and restaurants, and as laundresses. In very few instances has any adequate provision been made for housing these employees. A navy uniform factory in Charleston, S. C., advertised for girls, and 2,000 answered the call. They would have had no place to sleep had not the citizens of Charleston opened their houses to them, and the girls had to sleep four or five in a room. Help was asked of the Young Woman's Christian Association and a hotel to hold 800 girls is well under way there now. We have undertaken to take charge of that but this, however, is only one of many. Practically every industry connected with the furnishing of war supplies employs large numbers of girls, and thousands of girls are filling in the ranks left vacant by the men. The War Council of the Young Woman's Christian Association puts up these hotels as an emergency measure only, and as a demonstration to the employer, and to the otherwise unprepared community that these girls may be cared for simply and efficiently, to the welfare of the employer and the community, as well as to the girls themselves.

3. Hostess Houses.

Forty-five Hostess Houses have been ordered of the Young Woman's Christian Association by generals in command of our large cantonments. These houses are usually the most finished and comfortable looking buildings in the camp. In each one is a hostess, a director, a cafeteria director and an emergency worker; and volunteers, usually some of the younger officers' wives assist also on busy days. The uses of the Hostess House are varied. It stands first for Hospitality center, serving as the meeting place for the families or friends of the soldiers who are getting ready to take their place on the battlefields of France. Already these houses have histories of joy and sorrow, as refugees from distress, and as bureau of information when women come, as some do, with no knowledge of their soldier man except his name. In many Hostess Houses there are interpreters, a boon to the poor foreign woman who has been left with little children to care for, and only the vagrant idea as to the reason why her husband has left her. We have had weddings in the Hostess Houses and we have had one funeral. Imagine what a blessing it must have been for that poor mother, whose son had died in camp, to have a place to stay in, with sympathetic women-friends to look after everything.

Primarily these houses are for women or children, but, even unaccompanied by women relatives the men are welcomed whenever they want to drop in, as the do, to have buttons or chevrons sewed on, or simply for a chat with the Hostess. The recognition seems to have come abont at last that soldiers are still men, and have the same tastes and sensibilities which they have had in civilian life. Therefore women still have a place in their men's lives, bringing with them, as they do, a suggestion of home with the little pleasures and courtesies of home life.

We assume, therefore, since the camps are made to make men fit to fight, and since the Generals have ordered these houses for their camps, that the Hostess House is considered a help in making our boys better soldiers.

4. European Work.

An urgent call for help from Russia was answered last April by sending two of our most experienced secretaries there. In three months they had learned the language and got a footing. Since then we have sent five more. Their work consists in making life a little more possible for the women workers—principally in starting cafeterias and rest rooms.

Twenty-one of our secretaries are doing the same sort of work in France, and there, also, a new work has been taken up by them of late—that of building and taking care of social "tents" for the splendid American nurses now "somewhere in France." These tents are being constructed at the hospital base units and will do for the nurses, when off duty, as for as possible under war conditions, what the Nurses' Clubs do in this country.

New calls for war work of different sorts come in continually to the National Headquarters of the Young Woman's Christian Association in New York. To carry on the work until next July we are asking the people of the United States for $4,000,000. Mr. Sherwood Eddy estimates that this sum is spent every twenty minutes in the world as it now is—on destruction—so it seems a small sum to ask as part of the price necessary to make this world safe for women as well as for democracy.

MARION L. PEABODY.

How to Live Well

The one thing men carry in to the next world is character. For the most part men die as they have lived, so that to have a bona mors one must have had a bona vita. We must, therefore, learn to live well daily in order to die well. Living well is the art of arts, and it can only be learned by diligent practice day by day. It is well, therefore, that we make rules for living well. Here are a few simple ones to begin with.

1. The first thing in the morning, lift up your heart to God in prayer.

2. When you are praying, remember that you are speaking to God.

Prayer is the desire of the soul for God. It is speaking to God through Christ, and telling Him what we wish. We must, therefore, think before we pray and remember to Whom we are speaking.

Rules for prayer:

1. Kneel down and close the eyes.

2. Put out of the mind all earthly things.

3. Forms of prayer are a great help, especially when learned by heart, but do not tie yourself down to these forms entirely; pour out your soul and desires to God. It makes little difference in the sight of God if your prayer is at first halting so long as you greatly desire to pray rightly.

3. Whenever you pray, use the Lord's Prayer as part of your devotion.

4. Say grace before each and every meal.

5. Try to spend the day as if it were to be your last, for any day may be your last.

6. Never be idle.

7. Be moderate and careful as to eating, drinking and amusements.

8. Do not speak evil of any one, nor listen to evil spoken of any one.

9. Try to help some one by word or deed to live better.

10. Add one good deed to the world each day.

11. When tempted to sin, cry out at once to God for help, in the name of Christ.

12. Always try to speak, think and act as if in the presence of God.

13. Go over your day carefully before going to bed to see what you have made of it.

14. Spend a portion of each day studying and meditating on the Word of God.

15. Kneel down the last thing at night and confess your failings of the day, and pray for protection during the night. In this remember all those with whom you are connected.

Work Among Lepers in Porto Rico

We print below a letter written by the Rev. Harvey P. Walter, who has charge of a number of Missions in Porto Rico, is a member of Bishop Colmore's Council of Advice, and has endeared himself to the lepers at Lepers' Island, whom he visits twice a month. Our San Juan correspondent states that a group of Christian people had made a gift of a handkerchief and a bag of candy to each of the lepers, and in making the gift intimated, through the San Juan papers, that the lepers were being neglected. Because so many generous people had made contributions from time to time through the Rev. Mr. Harvey, he was urged to write up the work he has been doing, with others, for the lepers. "We rejoice," says our correspondent, "that our work has been carried on so long and so well, without display, until now. Our Church, in fact, was the first to minister to the lepers, through Miss Jackson, a trained nurse and Churchwoman, who winters in San Juan." The letter, which appeared in the San Juan Times, follows:

"To the Editor of The Times:

"The article, both in Spanish and English, in The Times of Friday, Jan. 5, about a visit to the Leper Colony by certain persons, does a great wrong to many charitable persons and societies, which have remembered our afflicted brethren out on the reef during the entire year. In justice to them, please say that a representative of the Episcopal Church goes to the Leper Colony twice a month. The Church has not failed once during the entire year 1917. It has supplied them with Bibles and Hymn Books and organized them into a Sunday School and supplied the necessary literature.

"Only twice, so far as I can remember, did I go empty handed. During the year I received four boxes, valued at considerably over $100, from different Parishes in the State for the lepers. At Christmas, every patient and every helper (fifty names and fifty packages) were supplied. Each package contained at least four articles. In addition to these individual gifts, there were games, 'rupe de las cabezas', pictures, checker boards, etc. Miss Jackson supplied each one with a 'stocking' of candy. Mr. Linn Bartholomew sent over 500 oranges. With one consent, they said it was the best Christmas they ever had. And it would have been better yet but for the unfortunate drowning of the Jefe. He was coming to San Juan to get the milk and Christmas tree. And while I was to hold the Christmas service, he was to put their parcels on and around it, light it up and then sing a carol or two and call out the names. Everybody was to be there—cook, washerwoman, cleaners, helpers. All were there and their names were called, but we did not have the tree, and we were all distressed on account of the accident, but otherwise we had a 'Merry Christmas' indeed.

"During the year, Mr. T. P. Lippitt furnished several bags of pineapples, Dr. Smoyer gave them five gallons of honey, Gilles & Woodward furnished pipes, the American Tobacco Co. and Temple Lodge of Masons kept them supplied with tobacco the entire year, Hermanos Real and the Boletin Mercantil gave books and magazines forming the nucleus of a library, Swiggett Bros. an umbrella to a man who wanted one badly, Plaza Provision Co. candy. Others have given me candy, cakes, chewing gum, tobacco. In fact, every time I take a visitor with me, I tell them the passage will cost them a treat for the patients; and how cheerfully it is given!

"You will see, Mr. Editor, from this partial list, for I cannot remember all the donations, that our wards on the little island have not been forgotten nor neglected during the past years by the kindly disposed people of San Juan and vicinity, and it is cruel to make the charge, in view of what has been done and given for them.

"However, if some charitable society or societies wish to take up this work and supply them regularly with services, I am ready to hand back my commission to the Sanitary Department. There is nothing in it but the joy of service.

"Sincerely yours,
"HARVEY P. WALTER."

THE UTAH CONVOCATION

Bishop Jones Bids Farewell to the District

The Eleventh Convocation of the Missionary District of Utah met in St. Mark's Cathedral, Salt Lake City, January 30-31. At the opening service the Rt. Rev. G. C. Hunting ordained the Rev. Stephen Cutter Clark, Jr. to the Priesthood. Mr. Clark has been in charge of St. Luke's Mission, Park City, and will continue in charge. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. H. Dennis, and Archdeacon Reese presented Mr. Clark.

The senior Presbyter, the Rev. M. J. Hersey, called the Convocation to order and was elected permanent Chairman of the Sessions. The Rev. H. E. Henriques was elected Secretary. The Bishop's address was read by the secretary. It showed the work of the past year in detail, and the growth and changes in the District during the three years Bishop Jones was head of the work. Several new fields have been opened, notably the coal towns of Eastern Utah and a Japanese work in the industrial centers. He alluded to his resignation only when he said it would be beside the point to lay plans for the future only hoping that progress seen in the past might be continued in the future. There was no criticism of the action of the Council of Advice in asking his resignation. "I regret the necessity of taking leave of many friends throughout the District whose loyal service has made the work successful; but after all, where I serve the Church is of small importance, so long as I can make my life count in the cause of Christ. I am more concerned at the remarkable conclusions expressed by the Commission of the House of Bishops which I think must call forth vigorous protests from the people who love the Church. no matter what their attitude on the war question may be. Expediency may make necessary the resignation of a Bishop at this time, but no expediency can ever justify the degradation of the ideals of the Episcopate which these conclusions seem to involve. In the earnest hope that the future of the District may be rich in service and achievement, I bid you God-speed."

The business of the Convocation was expedited by the advance printing of all reports by the Secretary, which allowed them to go into the hands of the various committees without being read on the floor, as each delegate had copies.

St. Mark's Hospital had a banner year, treating nearly 3,600 patients, and giving free and charity work valued at $8,900.00. There are fifty pupil nurses and a staff of graduate nurses to oversee the work. The need of a new hospital in better location was clearly shown, and it is hoped that this dream may be realized soon. The equipment is old and inadequate for the number of patients treated. The capacity is less than the actual number of patients in residence.

Under the efficient direction of Miss Eloise Tremain, Rowland Hall has had a splendid term with encouraging prospects for the future.

The Emery House, the Church house at the University, has been filled to its capacity with a large waiting list of men students. For the first time in its history it has been self-supporting. Mr. Richard Budelier is responsible for this and does much to back up the Chaplain in the spiritual side of the house.

The Episcopal Church News is to be revived under a board composed of the Rev. Messers Henriques and Lewis and Mr. Budelier. The paper was stopped during the troublous time preceding the Bishop's resignation, in order to keep printed controversy at a minimum.

Archdeacon Reese and J. B. Scholefield were elected to the Corporation for a three year term. All other other elective boards were re-elected, and all appointments hold over during the interim.

Representatives at the Synod of 1918 for the Eighth Providence;

Rev. W. W. Fleetwood, Dean of Cathedral.
Rev. J. H. Dennis.
Rev. E. T. Lewis.
Rev. W. W. Reese, Archdeacon.
Mr. J. W. Thompson.
Hon. M. L. Ritchie, Chancellor.
Mr. J. A. Reeves.
M. F. A. Shiells.

The Secretary is to compile a District Roll of Honor and print the same in the Journal, delaying the Journal for two weeks to make the list complete.

The great feature of Convocation was the effort made by Parishes and Missions which meet the apportionment every year to get the "slackers" to do their "bit" for missions.

The Woman's Auxiliary met the afternoon of Wednesday and listened to reports and elected officers; Mrs. W. W. Reese, President; Mrs. J. W. Horne of Garfield, Secy; Mrs. Geo. Morrow, Treasurer; Mrs. H. E. Henriques Secretary for the Babies Branch, Mrs. George Rose Secretary for Junior Work; Miss Gertrude McGrath United Offering Treasurer.

Deaconess Phelps, on furlough from Hankow gave a most interesting description of woman's work in the interior of China.

A Bishop's Lenten Pastoral

My Dear Brethren:

The near approach of Ash Wednesday, which falls on February 13th, and which ushers in the most solemn Season of the Christian Year, finds us as a nation facing the most serious and critical period in our history. We are beginning in real earnest to feel the presure of a world-wide war, and to realize in some measure at least its tremendous demands upon our resources, and the part each of us as a loyal citizen must play in contributions of time, strength, and substance, in cheerful sacrifices in behalf of great world needs, and in the unselfish support we must give to those ministering organizations which are doing such a noble work for war and world objects. The civil powers, ordained of GOD, representing the united voice of a free and loyal people, have pledged the honor and credit of the nation for the upholding of those great principles of human freedom, for which our fathers gave their lives, and which are the basis of free governments "for the people, by the people, and of the people," and which, for the world's safety, must be fought out in blood and tears. We are giving some of our boys with chastened cheerfulness to the service of our country. We shall be called upon to give more of them, before the dread issue is finally settled. We are in this war to stay until victory settles upon our banners; until an enduring and world-wide peace shall be obtained by the arbitrament of arms, and until the LORD GOD of Hosts shall usher in the beginning of the universal reign of His Son, the Prince of Peace.

I am thankful indeed that my people, both Clergy and laity, are responding nobly to the call of their country. Approximately five hundred of our Church boys are now in war service; two of our Clergy are in war work, with others of their brethren expecting to be called. Both in giving to the point of sacrifice, and in personal service, my people are in no case behind those belonging to other religious communions in the Diocese. Indeed, it is most fitting that the Church of which over sixty per cent of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were communicants, should maintain the same spirit of loyalty today. I am proud of my people, and thank GOD for such signal proofs of their devotion to the cause of this their country.

In the trying experiences still before us I am confident that you, my beloved brethren, will "continue faithful unto the end," having with you the Divine assurance that "Heaviness may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Let us then "hold fast our profession" without wavering, for we shall "find grace to help in time of need."

But having said these things, it is my solemn duty by exhortation and warning, to bid you to increased zeal, faithfulness and devotion to the practice of the precepts and sacramental ordinances of our Holy religion; not only during the blessed season of Lent, but all through the days and years that lie before you.

GOD is sounding a warning to nations in these days of "battle, murder and sudden death," because He has been largely forgotten. "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?" Is not this the time of all times, facing as we are the certain readjustment of the world after the war is over; facing as we shall a new order in the social, economic, and industrial spheres of the world's future work; facing as we shall great moral and religious problems, which only historic Christianity can solve—is not this the time of all times when the steadying influence of the Church is needed to "uphold, to comfort in suffering, anxiety and bereavement." to give a new and fresher vision of the suffering Saviour of the world, the meaning of His Sacrifice and Death for the sins of the world, and the power and the glory of a converted life, lived through Him? "When we catch the vision, and make it a workable reality in our lives;" when our lives are multiplied by ten thousand times ten thousand other lives, as they might and must be multiplied before this war is over—then will the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our LORD, and His CHRIST."

It has been said that "on the Clergy rests a tremendous responsibility. By teaching and by example they should at this crisis show themselves real guides. Prayer and worship, sacraments and the preaching of righteousness, justice and sacrifice, were never more needed." My beloved people, think on these things, and may GOD help you to enter in and fulfill them.

And I beg of you not to let the economies of the household, or the abnormal sacrifices you are making in order to give solely of your time, labor and gifts to war relief, be made at the expense of the Church, which is your first duty and obligation. Some of you I fear are doing this and it may be seen at this moment in lessened offerings and pledges for Parish support, in an empty Diocesan mission treasury, in a larger number than usual of "stay at homes" on Sunday, and in "stay aways" from Auxiliary and Guild meetings. Excess of zeal has in many cases run to an extreme. As a consequence, some of us are carrying a double load for the Church, and at the same time "are doing our bit" for our country. The double load for the Church happens because some one else has unloaded on us—thoughtlessly, perhaps, but none-the-less it has been done, and there you are. Moreover, if we should all of us do the same thing, what, may I ask, would become of the Church of GOD in this crisis through which we are passing? "The fires must be kept burning." The Church must be sustained by each communicant according to his or her ability. No excess of zeal in other directions can or will acquit us if we are derelict in this first of all duties. The Church, by her living voice, witnessing to the "Faith once for all delivered," and by the effective force for righteousness of her influence and example, will, when this war is over, be in a commanding position to do her part in helping to determine its results, by making "Democracy safe for the world." "First things first." "Safety first."

And so the Great Forty Days should witness to a more entire self-consecration, and to a right division of time, gifts and service. Repentance and amendment; works of faith and labors of love; self-sacrifice and discipline, should characterize the daily life of Bishop, Clergy, and Laity. Let us labor and pray while it is called today—the day of our testing and probation, and the blessing of the Great Head of the Church will follow and surround us here on earth, even as it will follow and surround us in the world to come.

Faithfully your Bishop,
ARTHUR L. WILLIAMS.

What is Lent?

Lent—a familiar word, a much abused word, often-times a slightingly or jestingly spoken word, and yet a word of marvellous power to every earnest, honest man, woman and child. Its lessons are lessons of devotion; its truths are truths of manhood; its plea is for reality triumphing over the shams of life. Its many-sided truths commend themselves to different people in very different ways; but there is a spirit underlying all its ways that makes men better, nobler, holier in their daily lives—and that is what we want.

Helpful Lenten Suggestions for Shut-Ins

The Rev. J. M. D. Davison, General Missionary of the Diocese of Quincy, has issued a leaflet for the use of Church people who are unable to attend the Lenten services, which contains the following helpful suggestions:

There are many who by the circumstances of life are unable to keep Lent in a normal Church way. Lent is for them, as well as for those who can go to Church and take part in Parish activities. With your Bible and Prayer Book and other good reading, and by following out the directions of the Church, it will be possible to keep a Lent that will bring a great blessing to you and to others. You can have your hours of devotion, you can deny yourself with religious motive as you are now doing from a patriotic motive; you can be enabled through such self-denial to make a worthy Easter offering for the upbuilding of God's Kingdom. And of course you will not fail to avail yourself of any opportunity to come to Holy Communion and other Church services that may be presented. May God's blessing be with you, and help you thus to keep a good Lent.

Annual Meeting of the American Church Building Fund Commission

The Commission held its Annual Meeting on January 17, at the Church Missions House, New York City. The following officers were elected:—President, Rt. Rev. Charles Sumner Burch, D. D.; Vice-President, Rev. Henry Anstice, D. D.; Secretary, Rev. William W. Bellinger, D. D.; Treasures, George Gordon King; Assistant Treasurer, E. Walter Roberts; Corresponding Secretary, Rev. Charles L. Pardee, D. D.

The reports for the year showed seventeen Loans granted, amounting to $56,000; sixty-four Gifts, amounting to $27,320; and twelve Grants, amounting to $8,150. In addition to these payments, that ten Loans, amounting to $33,050; twelve Gifts, amounting to $4,550; and thirteen Grants, amounting to $10,150, had been approved for payment when the necessary papers were ready. Fifty-seven Dioceses and Districts have been aided during the year, and the list of Jurisdictions to which the Commission has been of help at some time in its history now numbers ninety-six.

The Report of the Treasurer showed that the Permanent Fund had been increased during the year by offerings in the sum of $2,210.93 and by Legacies in the sum of $110,587.15, and that the Permanent Fund had reached the sum of $658,908.46.

During the year legislation looking toward the enlargement of the scope of the Commission's work and a wider liberalization in methods, has been enacted and further enlargement is pending final action by the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

As a matter of regular business, Loans amounting to $9,050 were voted to the following Parishes and Missions: Epiphany Church, Atlanta, Ga., St. Luke's Church, San Antonio, Tex.; St. Andrew's Church, Omaha, Neb.; Church of the Heavenly Rest, Abilene, Tex., and St. Matthew's Church, Chester, W. Va. Gifts amounting to $8,450 were voted to the following Parishes and Missions: St. John's Church, Crawfordsville, Ind.; St. Stephen's Church, Petersburg, Va.; St. Paul's Church, Kenbridge, Va.; Church of the Holy Communion, Liberty, N. Y.; St. John's Church, Warrington, Fla.; Chapel of the Holy Cross, Porto Alegre, Brazil; Mission Church, Park Rapids, Minn.; Mission Church, Northome, Minn.; Grace Church, Falfurrias, Tex.; St. Andrew's Church, Aberdeen, Wash.; St. Luke's Church, La Union, New Mex.; St. James' Church, Sanshan, China, and Old Donation Church, Bayside, Va.

When I go down to the grave, I can say, "I have finished my day's work"; but I cannot say, "I have finished my life." My day's work will begin the next morning. My tomb is not a blind alley, it is a thoroughfare; it closes with the twilight to open with the dawn.—Victor Hugo.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

Saint Matthias' Day, February 24

THE COLLECT.

O Almighty God, who into the place of the traitor Judas didst choose thy faithful servant Matthias to be of the number of the twelve Apostles; Grant that thy Church, being always preserved from false Apostles, may be ordered and guided by faithful and true pastors; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Three thoughts come out with startling distinctness as we meditate on this Saints' Day Collect. Thoughts which every Priest and Deacon would do well to frequently entertain, and meditate upon. God's choice; man's faithfulness; true pastors.

Our ministers, before they are ordained are required to profess their belief that they are both inwardly moved and outwardly called by God to the Sacred Ministry: "Thou Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two Thou hast chosen." God chose to save the world through the Church which is the Body of Christ. As therefore the Twelve went out into the world to save the world, so we of the Church must in our day send out the three-fold mintry into all the world in order that those parts of the world which do not yet know God through Jesus Christ, shall learn how to work in connection with God's plan of salvation

Let us never forget that the Apostolic Order is a chosen missionary order, in which no one should hold back from God's call, nor on the other hand presume to outstep the indications of His will. And let us accept that order as speaking to us for God in Christ's stead.

"Man's faithfulness." The Church rests secure in the belief and expressed hope that God's ministers will be trustworthy. The trust that the Church gives them to preserve is the Faith of the Church which concerns itself with the Person and teachings of Jesus. What the Church prays for is that her foes may be outward, and not inward foes. That the family or household life and honor may be preserved intact. For humanly speaking, the Church wherever she is represented is only as strong as her weakest member; therefore, if the Church is to make progress in alien and foreign places anywhere in God's world, she must send out Pastors who are trustworthy, worthy of being trusted, both by God and man. They may not be eloquent, nor write their messages in imperishable words, but if they are trustworthy, God's Church will prosper. And the more faithful a Church is to the trust committed to it, the stronger and healthier does the surrounding community become.

True Pastors. "Feed my sheep;" "Feed my lambs." The whole work of the pastorate is bound up in these words expressive of love, tenderness, faithfulness, watchfulness, patience, unquenchable hope. As you look back in your life to the influence of a good Pastor how your heart glows with good resolves. And as you have been blessed with good Pastors, do you realize what it would mean to send just such good Pastors into places where men and women and children, the lonesome sheep and the lost lambs of the world have as yet no one to care for them with Christ's own love in their hearts and with Christ's own words on their lips? To say this Collect with memory at work is to stir up your most thankful spirit, and should make you a very earnest and generous supporter of some faithful and true Pastor working out his life in a community that does not yet know God through Jesus Christ.

"False Apostles." Men who do not "ring true": men who by word or deed have secretly or publicly betrayed their trust. God pity them. If you ever have known such, pray God to save them from their worse selves; pray God to give them true repentance; pray God that they may be able to hear His voice calling them back from the gates of Hell and dishonor. And from them learn and always remember that you are not to be followers of any man however good he may seem to be, but to be followers with such a man of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

THE EPISTLE

In those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of names together were about an hundred and twenty) Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus. For he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of our ministry. Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; inasmuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood. For it is written in the Book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and his bishoprick let another take. Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection. And they appointed two, Joseph, called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles. Acts 1:15.

A Missionary's life is the working out of the vision of Christ which has been vouchsafed him in his early life. It is a great thing when one can feel that he is doing what the Holy Ghost has spoken before concerning him, provided he sees and hears evidences of increasing life ahead of him in his daily path. But it is torture and hell to realize that there is only death and destruction ahead of one in the path he is walking. Thank God while there is life there is hope even for one who has played the traitor's part. Judas is left in the scripture story to warn us before it is too late, that through our besetting sin, we who have been numbered with the saints may forfeit our place unless we are perpetually true to the vision which was once vouchsafed us.

Temporal possessions never can take the place of spiritual privileges. Judas made the mistake of using his privileges to benefit himself. "He purchased a field." From the moment he set his eye upon that field Judas became untrustworthy. Jesus tells us to go out into all the world and preach the Gospel. Every baptized person has that vision of world conquest for Jesus set before him. If he is captured by the vision, but uses his position and privilege to benefit himself in a material way he is in danger of playing the traitor's part, and of harming the cause to which he was publicly committed: and sooner or later the public will recognize the traitor's act, from which acts may the good Lord and the Holy Ghost ever keep us.

A Missionary's business is to be a witness. Every baptized person is a Missionary. Never forget that fact. Also remember that every one who companies with the baptized is liable to be called on to bear his witness. To be a witness is to be a martyr; that is, to be a witness of the ability of Jesus to raise one from the death of sin: and the call to be a martyr is going to be a call to complete sacrifice. As the phrase goes in these war days, "Heretofore we have done our bit, now we must do our utmost." And who of us has yet done our witnessing for Jesus to the very utmost? Who of us has yet given up all thoughts of "purchasing a field" by reason of our pecular position and privileges, and turning our backs on the sins which will make traitors of us, unless we stamp them out of our witnessing lives? Ask yourselves this question: To what or to whom does my spiritual and material life bear their daily witness?

How many parents and godparents who will read this far, have tried diligently to show their children and god-children the vision of world conquest for Jesus, and helped them sacrifice for the advancement of that Kingdom? How many of us "company with" the great apostolic adventurers for the Lord and His cause? How many of us use our Christian position to advance causes in which we are selfishly interested to the detriment of the Lord's cause? Are any of us training our children to such ways that there is danger of their becoming "guides to them who would take Jesus," or are we so praying and working that they will follow rather the example and life of the witness Matthias?

THE GOSPEL

At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight. All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

The receptive heart of the young child! Let us see to it that as our illusions fade, the ideals which gave them light and beauty do not also pass out of our lives. The danger for many professing Christians lies in losing sight of the ideals which Jesus and his apostles set before men while they were yet bearing their witness in the flesh. The Missionary life is the witnessing life. If the mission story and ideals no longer thrill us it is because we have become worldly wise and worldly prudent, and we are in danger of losing sight of God the Father and of His Son, and of the world in bondage to that God, through the agency of the Holy Ghost who takes its inarticulate longings and makes them understandable to the simplest minded person on earth, provided that person is as receptive and open minded as is the normal child. Only as we are receptive, can we hope to be witnesses, only as we are witnesses can we be said to have found our vocation in life.

And what saves the witnessing life from drudgery and monotony? How can the Missionary in the city settlements; or in the isolated, foreign thinking, foreign speaking land keep bravely to the witnessing life? What will save him to the standard of Jesus, and keep him in the footsteps of the apostolic lowly Matthias? Is it not the Gospel invitation as it is preserved for us in this day's Gospel? "Come to me," "Take my yoke," "Learn of me." This proffered Companionship, this Yokefellow, this Teacher is all that makes the witnessing life endurable and helpful. When one has attained to that Blessed Companionship and intimacy then the witnessing life which is the missionary life for all baptized people becomes the happiest and the most joyful sort of life that one can live on earth—when one is a daily yokefellow with Jesus. Everything else in this world takes its place in the economy of life. Lands, houses, people; one covets them only for the Master's use, and then danger of coveting them for one's own self passes, and with it passes the danger of becoming untrustworthy, traitorous, false, eternally lost.

"Faithful and true!" After all are there any better words for Christians to embody in their lives than these? Of what use is love if he who loves is untrustworthy? Of what use is sacrifice if the sacrificer be not true? Of what use to give to this cause, and that cause even in Christ's name, if we refuse to give to the furtherance of the Great Cause for which Christ died? Nothing done in Christ's name is done in vain, but to do all sorts of humanitarian things in Christ's name, and to refuse to be a helper in sending that Name to the ends of the earth in dangerously near betraying the Name, and the Cause for which the Name stands. "Thou shalt call His Name Jesus for He shall save His people from their sins."

Go to Church on St. Matthias' Day; thank God for His faithful and true Pastors: pray that their numbers may increase: remember not to exalt them to the obliteration of the Lord Jesus: help them up to the requirements of their office. Do all you can to increase their number in every land, and in your own station and place in God's Kingdom. Strive ever to be as faithful and true a worker as was St. Matthias.

When the American Revisers of the English Lectionary in 1790 (I believe), discarded the ancient plan of leading up to the redemption from Egyptian bondage on Easter by the preceding history and substituted prophetic passages for use on the Sundays and week days of Lent, they were guided by a true instinct in giving large place to the prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel. What the New Lectionary aims to accomplish is to combine the two methods of treating Lent, the historical and the prophetic. Thus, in Lent of year I, we have given the experience of Israel in Egypt, leading up naturally to their deliverance on Easter, accompanied by prophetic passages in the evening; and this second year, we give the prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel in their true historical connection, viz., the experience of Judah in getting first into and then out of exile.

The Sunday morning lesson is the prophet's prediction of the Seventy Year's captivity of God's people for their sins, together with the prediction also that Babylon itself, their conqueror, should be punished for its sins (cf. Isaiah 10). Thus the captivity means discipline and God's righteous wrath is but the punitive aspect of His love. For the second lesson, we have ventured to seize on the spiritual meaning of Babylon as worked out in a chapter of Revelation, viz., a worldly and corrupt Church, in combination with worldly power itself, to be followed by the victory of the Lamb.

(Note: This chapter may be objected to on the grounds of delicacy, but it is extremely important in its teachings and the spiritual meaning of Babylon ought to be brought out.)

Amongst the writings that belong in the historical course for Lent is the book of Daniel; but for lack of space we have allowed it to overflow into the evening topical course, where the first chapter, the story of the three young men who stuck to the "simple life" in diet admirably illustrates the thought of the collect and the experience of the Master fasting in the wilderness (Gospel). The second lesson is keyed to the Gospel story rather than to the first lesson. Having Himself suffered being tempted, our Lord is able to succour them that are tempted. It is, however, not a bad correlative for the Daniel story; and as giving in condensed form the whole story of the Christ from His Birth up to and inclusive of His final triumph, "crowned with glory and honour," it gives the key note of Lent. It is only as we have fellowship with the suffering Christ (cf. Phil. 3:10-11) and look forward to sharing His triumph that we can "keep Lent" to the fullest advantage.

For the week days, we have given in the evening the Epistle of St. James for its practical teachings, especially on temptation; and in the morning we begin St. Luke's life of our Lord, starting just after the Temptation and going straight on, through Lent, to the Resurrection on Easter.

The Wilderness Lessons of Life

Christ in the wilderness, withdrawn from all ordinary surroundings, shut away from life's cares and turmoil and distractions, met the forces of the invisible world, the powers that rule in man's deeper life, the thoughts that concern man's truer interests, the trials that test man's nobler self.

A special request was made of each member of the congregation of St. Andrew's Church, Thompsonville, Conn., recently to bring a hod of coal to the Sunday morning service. Those who felt that they could not contribute that quantity were asked to bring with them to the service at least one lump of coal.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

FOR LENT

Almighty and everlasting God, who hatest nothing that thou hast made, and dost forgive the sins of all those who are penitent; Create and make in us new and contrite hearts, that we, worthily lamenting our sins and acknowledging our wretchedness, may obtain of Thee, the God of all mercy, perfect remission and forgiveness; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

O Lord, who for our sake didst fast forty days and forty nights; Give us grace to use such abstinence, that our flesh being subdued to the Spirit, we may ever obey Thy godly motions in righteousness, and true holiness, to Thy honour and glory, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end.

O Lord, we beseech thee favourably to hear the prayers of Thy people; that we, who are justly punished for our offences, may be mercifully delivered by Thy goodness, for the glory of Thy Name; through Jesus Christ our Saviour, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost ever, one God, world without end.

COLLECT

O God, whose most dear Son went not up to glory but first he suffered pain, and entered not into joy before he was crucified; Mercifully grant that we, walking in the way of the Cross, may find it none other than the way of life and peace. Through the same, thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

DAILY COLLECT

Almighty and everlasting God, who doth govern all things in heaven and earth; Mercifully hear our prayers, and grant to the Parish with which we are connected all things that are needful for its spiritual welfare; strengthen and confirm the faithful; visit and relieve the sick; turn and soften the wicked; arouse the careless; recover the fallen; restore the penitent; remove all hindrances to the advancement of Thy truth; and make all to be of one mind and heart within Thy holy Church; to the honor and glory of Thy Name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

YOUR OFFERING

Catechism: Remaining questions on the Sacraments in Church Catechism.

Prop. 1

What is the Christian Religion?

It is not having certain feelings about God. That is emotion.

It is not having certain opinions about God. That is philosophy.

It is not keeping certain rules that God has laid down. That is ethics.

It is not giving your money to feed the poor. That is benevolence.

All these things have a place in religion but they are not religion.

What, then, is the Christian Religion? It is the giving of an offering (or a sacrifice) to God, and it is the receiving that blessing which God gives in exchange for an offering.

It is the uniting of our self-sacrifice with the sacrifice of Jesus Christ.

Your religion as a Christian consists then in giving to God.

(1) The offering that He has commanded us to make, which is obedience.

(2) In the spirit in which He receives all our offering, which is cheerfulness.

(3) With the purpose with which such offering should be made, which is worship.

Prop. 2

What is the offering which He has commanded us to make?

There is just one perfect and complete offering that God ever received, and that is the offering of Jesus Christ, the spotless Lamb.

He offered Himself to God as a full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice, oblation and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world.

To take part in this offering which He made is your duty and your privilege.

For Christ, in the night in which He offered Himself, allowed His apostles to partake of His Body and of His Blood, and commanded them "to do this in memory of Him."

To do what? Manifestly to do what He was doing, to make an offering of themselves to God, but not apart from Christ, but with "Christ dwelling in them and they in Him."

The whole service of the Last Supper was the corporate offering of Christ's Body, (or the Church as it was then constituted), to God in the service which He instituted. We do not need to separate the act of offering from the service, nor do we need to attach to any one part of the service, this idea of offering; it was the consecration of those whom Christ identified with Himself in the great offering that He was about to make.

It is true that theologians have separated the idea of communion from that of offering in this service, but truly if there ever was a consecration service that was one, independent of any theological definition, it was Christ's Church identifying itself with Christ in His great offering.

(We will consider this matter further in XI and XII lessons on the Communion office.)

Wherein, therefore, we participate in this service, which He commands us to do, we are participating in the same act that the Apostles did—we are identifying with His one perfect sacrifice. In addition to this, we are looking forward with joy to the privilege of being joined to Him in our sacrifices, for we know that unless we are, any offering we could make would be incomplete.

And so we will make the service which He commanded the center of our worship, because He commanded it and because by it He identified in some mysterious way those who so participated with Himself.

Thus the Christian Religion essentially is the joining of the sacrifice of ourselves to the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, and to do this as he commanded. In appreciation of this we say at the end of every prayer, "through Jesus Christ our Lord."

It is only through Him that our offerings are acceptable to God.

Prop. 3

A good illustration of this cardinal principle of religion is to be found in the feeding of the five thousand.

Note St. John vi:11:

"And Jesus took the loaves, and when He had given thanks, He distributed to the disciples."

Compare this with St. Matt. xxvi:26 (in the description of the Last Supper):

"And as they were eating Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my body."

In each of these cases there is a religious act.

1st. He took bread, which is a symbol of God's gift and man's effort, and therefore a fitting symbol for man himself.

2nd. He blessed it and gave thanks; that is, He offered this symbol of man to God.

3rd. God received it and in turn sent His blessing. In the first instance He gave to the bread the power to feed the multitude. In the second instance He made the bread offered to be the body and blood of Christ.

Thus in the Eucharist (the word means, to give thanks) we perform this act of worship. We offer ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be an offering to God. We identify ourselves with the bread which Christ has chosen. God receives our offering and returns that bread to us, no longer common bread, but the Bread of Life upon which we feed.

QUESTIONS

1. Define emotion, philosophy, ethics, benevolence, religion.
2. In what does the Christian religion consist?
3. What is the offering which He has commanded us to make?
4. What was the manifest purpose of the Last Supper in connection with Christ's offering of Himself?
5. When we participate in the Lord's Supper what are we doing?
6. Show the relation between St. John vi:11 and St. Matt. xxvi:26.
7. How does bread form a symbol of man's own self? What does he receive in return for the offering of himself?

TEXT

"I am the living bread which came down from Heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh that I will give for the life of the world." St. John vi:51.

READINGS

WASTE

Text: "Gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost."

The Master of men believed in conservation. He not only believed in the conservation of material things but in the conservation of those things in our human nature that are worthy of our greatest concern. With his penetrating eye he saw the saving good in human life. What men sometimes call "the remnant of good," to Him constituted the vital spark that, once fanned into a flame, meant a life illuminated and saved. We as a people are having forced home upon our consciousness today the need of stopping the leakage, or in other words, the need of stopping the waste. Probably we are as prodigal as most people. It is perhaps our generosity in part that prompts us to be so. Again, it may arise from the fact that we have had a superabundant supply of men and things, especially things. Suddenly we were arrested by the statement that manpower on the one hand and food resources on the other constituted the very sinews of war itself. We are being told today that that nation must endure that has the greatest supply of these essentials. The best authorities, notably Mr. Hoover, have been compelled to call a halt upon the prodigality of American extravagance, especially in the use of food stuffs. The Red Cross is now calling a halt upon another form of waste that touches everything with which we have to do.

If these lessons that are so important can be brought home to the consciousness, especially of our growing youth, they will constitute one of the most valuable things that will come out of this war. We have often remarked, in traveling abroad, that the peoples of small countries, especially those who literally have to extract from the rather sterile and rocky soil of mountainous regions their limited products, disclose the greatest economy. Our acres are so broad, our land is so productive, our resources are so unmeasured, that we have fallen into the habit of careless and wasteful living. Let us here remark that almost inevitably, wasteful living leads to intemperate living, and intemperate living leads to moral and physical enervation and ultimately to destruction. Abundant citations from history might be submitted in demonstration of this.

We have never thought perhaps, that religion and conservation of the world's resources and supplies were intimately related, but they are. Indeed, we are learning at last that the great Teacher of men was intensely practical and that His life and its ministry were designed to deal with the most vital and immediate problems of human living, and that His supreme endeavor was to make this world a fit place in which to live, and so to make it, in a very real sense, the vestibule to a larger and more abundant world beyond. It has become now a matter of paramount importance that His point of view concerning waste should be learned by every individual in the land, and indeed in the world. An overfull and overfed nation is doomed, because it witnesses to carelessness, prodigality and an un-Christian theory of living. The Christian Church itself has not always been immune to the charge of wastefulness, but today, throughout the land, it must stand for conservation of men and resources as it has never done before. We have been reminded repeatedly of late, that they who waste anything at this critical time are enemies of the state and of society. Ought there not to be disclosed a practical demonstration of conservation in all the practices of our daily life, and ought there not to result therefrom, not only a more abundant supply of food for those who must sorely need it in the devastated countries overseas, but, a far better manhood and womanhood here in our own land? "Gather up the fragments that remain"—might well be one of the slogans of the hour, and in our gathering up of the fragments of material things, let us take heed that we gather up also those finer fragments that remain, even in lives that have hitherto witnessed to failure and defeat. There is a vast reserve remaining beneath the surface of the soil that only waits the hand of the toiler to uncover it. There are vast resources of good in human nature, covered up by rough and rude exteriors, that only await the sympathetic word of confidence and expectancy of the true conserver of mankind to reveal them in all their splendor and potentiality. ASTRONOMICAL PHENOMENA OF THE BIBLE

Eclipses of the Sun Aroused Terror in the Popular Mind

By the Rev. J. H. Young, D. D.

There are a number of references in the Bible which show that eclipses of the sun and moon had been noticed by the Jewish people. These references, however, are solely to the popular terror caused by the phenomena.

The darkness at the Crucifixion was not caused by an eclipse of the sun. This is absolutely certain, since the Jewish Passover came at full moon, and an eclipse of the sun can come only at the new moon, when the moon is between the earth and the sun. Also the darkness is recorded as having lasted three hours, while during an eclipse it is only from two to seven minutes. Whatever it was, we know that it was not an eclipse. Nor can the going back of the shadow on the sun dial of king Hezekiah 10 degrees be due to an eclipse. (2 Kings 20:10-11, Is. 38:7-8)

An eclipse, even if partial would have no effect upon the shadow, since that part of the sun's surface which would cast the shadow would be moving westward toward the setting just the same as usual. Science can offer no explanation here, nor is it clear that it is to be explained. The Greeks did not have the sun dials until a much later date. At this time they were using the length of the shadow to measure time, a very rough method. The shadow is said to have moved back "10 steps on the step-clock" which seems to refer to some such arrangement. But until we can know definitely what occured it is impossible to attempt an explanation. An eclipse seems out of the question, in any case.

But we have unmistakable references to eclipses in the Old Testament. The Prophet Amos says "I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear sky." This seems to imply that he had seen a total eclipse. We know that one did occur in June 763 B. C. which was visible in Babylon, and this same one the Prophet no doubt saw in Palestine, and it furnished him his imagery.

In Joel we have two possible references to eclipses of the sun and moon (2:10 and 3:15) "the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining." But here the description is less exact In a total eclipse of the moon the stars are not affected, while in one of the sun they appear, instead of being darkened. It looks as if the Prophet were using stereotyped language, and had not himself seen an eclipse. Total eclipses of the sun occur in any one place only about once in 360 years. But if the Prophet himself had not seen an eclipse, the terror which they aroused in the popular mind had become a stereotyped symbol of the terror of any great "Day of the Lord." It is in this way that Our Lord uses the same symbol. Luke 21:25, "there shall be signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars." Matt. 24:29, "in those days the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven." This is vague and general language. It is not necessary to suppose that Our Lord meant that there should really be eclipses, etc., but that men would be filled with as great dismay as they caused.

But in Acts 2:20 we have again a vivid description, which seems to imply that a total eclipse had given definiteness to the language of prophecy.

The sun shall be turned into darkness brings out the jet black disc which hangs in the sky during an eclipse of the sun. The moon into blood is descriptive of the coppery red of the moon during a total eclipse. Total eclipses of the moon are more frequent in any one place than of the sun, since the shadow in an eclipse of the sun is only 60 to 120 miles in width, while a total eclipse of the moon is visible to half the world at a time.

In Rev. 8:12, is a reference to a partial eclipse of the sun, "the third part of the sun shall be smitten," while in 6:12 is a very vivid description, which seems to show that the writer had seen a total eclipse of the sun, "the sun became black as sackcloth of hair." Perhaps Astronomy may cast some light on the question of authorship of this book.

POEMS Worth Preserving

Selected by

THE REV. FRANCIS L. PALMER

THE GOOD SHEPHERD WITH THE KID

GRADATIM

(The author was born in Belchertown Massachusetts, 1819, and died in New York City, 1881. He was the first editor of Scribner's Monthly, afterwards the Century Magazine. The title is a Latin word, meaning "step by step.")

Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

I count this thing to be grandly true:
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common clod
To a purer air and a broader view.

We rise by the things that are under our feet;
By what we have mastered of good and gain;
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet.

We hope, we aspire, we resolve, we trust,
When the morning calls us to life and light,
But our hearts grow weary, and ere the night,
Our lives are trailing the sordid dust.

We hope, we resolve, we aspire, we pray,
And we think that we mount the air on wings
Beyond the recall of sensual things,
WITNESS—GAL. EIGHT—
While our feet still cling to the heavy clay.

Wings for the angels, but feet for men!
We may borrow the wings to find the way—
We may hope, and resolve, and aspire, and pray;
But our feet must rise, or we fall again.

Only in dreams is a ladder thrown
From the weary earth to the sapphire walls;
But the dreams depart, and the vision falls,
And the sleeper wakes on his pillow of stone.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit, round by round.

—Josiah Gilbert Holland.

Lent presses close upon the Christmas season this year. We have hardly forgotten the spirit of one until we find ourselves plunged into the atmosphere of the other. Yet this is not foreign to the revolutionary changes and conflicting emotions of these days.

But the fact that Lent is the most outstanding opportunity for spiritual rejuvenation that the year offers, makes it imperative that we turn immediately and struggle to harmonize our thoughts and lives with its purpose.

The spirit of penitence should come this year more easily than ever before.

With a consciousness of self-guilt we must come to God's footstool. With a humility hitherto unknown must we seek to learn His will for us.

Lent—an opportunity!
May it not be a regret!

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

Bishop Tyler of North Dakota has requested all the Clergy of his Missionary District to hold loyalty services and to secure, if possible, laymen to make the addresses.

The will of the late Caleb Cresson provides that $1,000 is to be given at once to St. James' Church, Evansburg, Pa., and $6,000 eventually, in trust.

As the fruit of a house to house canvass conducted by thirty young men of the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, the collection for the Church's War Commission was brought up to $1018.80.

Under the leadership of Mr. Camille Estornelle of Philadelphia Divinity School, the congregation of Good Shepherd Episcopal Mission in Berlin, New Jersey, have secured a lot for the erection of their new building, and expect to have the new building completed by next Spring.

Trinity Church, Albany, N. Y., conducts a coal exchange for the benefit of the poor of the city. The exchange was besieged with throngs of poor people who sought relief from the cold during the recent cold spell. The coal is sold at cost and at a price within the reach of all.

"The Religious Secretary is brought into close personal touch with the soldier," says the Rev. John H. Nolan, Chaplain at Camp Devans, Mass. "He eats with them in their barracks and enjoys all the hardships they enjoy, even to the innoculations for typhoid and paratyphoid and vaccination."

Mr. John W. Shannon, Treasurer of the Philippine Mission, says:

"The Philippines has the largest leper colony in the world at Culion Island. It houses over 4,500 people and is said to be the most modern settlement in the world, which speaks well for this government. A small Protestant Church graces the island and there are about 200 in the congregation."

The twenty-seventh mid-winter conference of the Hartford Branch of the Connecticut Church Sunday School Union was held in Christ Church Parish House, Hartford, on Friday, January 25th. Addresses were given by the Rev. L. N. Caley of Philadelphia, the Rev. G. H. Heyn of New Haven and the Ven. H. S. Harte, Archdeacon of Hartford, who is also Chairman of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education.

The Bishop Coadjutor of Colorado would be glad to hear from a couple of young Priests who want to do pioneer Missionary work in all out doors.

He has two large fields where there is an opportunity to do many small things which in the aggregate would equal one good sized Parish.

It is hard work, out of doors, in a virgin field. Only the patient and persevering need apply.

The Social Service Committee of the Girl's Friendly Society of the Diocese of New York is making an earnest appeal to all men and women interested in the welfare and working conditions of girls and children to protest against three bills presented to the Legislature in Albany. These bills wish to abolish all safe-guards now protecting working women and children. One bill was vetoed by Governor Whitman last Spring and is now introduced and called the Brown War Bill. Two more bills to break down child labor and compulsory education by providing that these laws so far as they apply to children in street trades and mercantile establishments shall be suspended during the summer months.

It is urged that letters of protest be sent to both Senators and Assemblymen in Albany urging them to oppose the passing of these bills which are designated Senate Bill Int. No. 15, Assembly Bill Int. No. 170, and Assembly Bill Int. No. 171.

Personals

The Rev. J. D. Hamlin, Rector of Trinity Church, Bethlehem, Pa., has resigned to enter the army as a Chaplain.

The Rev. Sidney E. Sweet has assumed charge of St. Paul's Church, Columbus, Ohio. He was formerly Rector of St. Stephen's Church, Jersey City, N. J.

The Rev. Charles P. Bispham, Rector of Grace Church, Waverly, N. Y., has accepted a call as Assistant Rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, and will go to his new field of labor March 1st.

The Rev. Arthur A. Burton, formerly Rector of St. Alban's Church, Marshfield, Wis., has entered upon his work as Rector of the Church of the Advent, San Francisco, Cal.

The Rev. J. B. Whaling, who was reecntly appointed Archdeacon of the Diocese of Texas has selected Temple as his headquarters. He has been given charge of a district composed of ten counties in the central part of the state.

THE WITNESS was in error when it stated in a late issue that Rev. Mr. Barber had resigned St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, Texas. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens is the Rector of St. Mark's and has not resigned.

Among the many activities of the ministry of the Rev. William Porkess, Rector of Grace Episcopal Church, Pittsburgh, will be the writing, for the fifth year, of the course of seven sermonettes, to be published in the Pittsburgh Gazette Times on the Sundays of Lent and Easter Day. The title of the course will be, "Modern Studies in Camouflage."

The Philadelphia Divinity School recently notified the Board of Missions that it had taken pleasure in conferring the degree of S. T. D. on the Rev. A. A. Gilman, President of Boone University, Wuchang, China, and the Rev. L. B. Ridgely, Dean of All Saints' Divinity School, Hankow, China.

The Rev. Francis B. Boyer, state secretary of the North Carolina Red Cross Society and secretary of the local chapter at Asheville, and until recently the Rector of All Souls' Church Biltmore, has been commissioned a Captain in the Red Cross Society and was ordered to sail for France the first week in this month. Previous to his Rectorship of All Souls' Church, he had served for eighteen months as an ambulance driver in France. His new commission will cary him right up to the first line trenches and his work will be done virtually under fire.

Leonard Wolcott, a candidate for Holy Orders and son of the Rev. Dr. P. C. Wolcott, Rector of Trinity Church, Highland Park, Ill., is with his College Ambulance Unit at Allentown, and is one of the advanced French instructors in the camp. He also was secretary to the Rev. Harvey Officer while he was acting as Chaplain to Churchmen in the camp, and had charge of his rented house and the entertaining. He is now secretary to the Rev. E. H. Schlueter, of Trinity Parish, New York, who has succeeded Mr. Officer as voluntary Chaplain.

The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., Rector of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Va., who was appointed Chaplain of Dr. Stuart McGuire's Hospital Unit, is now with the rest of the members of the Unit ready for a call to active service, says the Leader of that city. The call at any time would not come as a surprise. During Dr. Bowie's absence the work of the Parish will be in charge of the Rev. Valentine Lee, who recently took his Priest's orders. St. Paul's congregation has granted Dr. Bowie a leave of absence, during his service with the colors. He recently declined a flattering call to New York. St. Paul's is the Church which President Davis attended during the lifetime of the Southern Confederacy. General Robert E. Lee also attended worship there, with his family. Their pews are still preserved, and memorial tablets have been erected in the Church to their memory.

Three more of the Clergy of the Diocese of Newark have during the past month taken up religious work in connection with the army. The Rev. Edgar L. Cook, Rector of the old Parishes at Hamburg and Vernon, has been given six months' leave of absence and has gone to Wrightstown as assistant to the Rev. Mr. Block in our great work centered at St. George's Chapel. The Rev. Carl A. H. Stridsberg of Hasbrouck Heights has been granted leave of absence for a year and has received appointment to work in France with the Y. M. C. A. The Rev. Barrett P. Tyler, of the Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, has gone to Camp Merritt to work there as volunteer Chaplain for three months. He will be intimately associated with the Y. M. C. A. but will work as a Christian Pastor and as a representative of our Church. It is no small sacrifice for these congregations to thus release their Rectors for this service, and the War Service Commission is pledged to do all in its power to help in maintaining the services and in looking after the work in the several places during their Clergy's absence.—The Newark Churchman.

New York Notes

"Charity's burden increased by war" is the newspaper heading over an abstract of the annual report of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor in New York City. This very useful society co-operates with the Churches and all other benevolent organizations, a number of its directors and officials being loyal members of our own Church. It insists that the war must not be won at the expense of the children of today, and it therefore urges that its local work be continued unabated. The total expense last year was $873,000. It assisted in various material ways 6,423 families, with nearly 30,000 members, and 4,800 other families were under care of its trained nurses. Nearly 7,000 mothers and children were given Summer outings, and 585 widows received monthly allowances the year through. About 100,000 meals of hot food were given to needy work people, and 825,000 children in 34 public schools received hot lunches. Considering the extreme cold of the last two winters, and the extraordinary increase in prices of living necessaries, the appeal of the Association for increased contributions is understandable. If it were not for this and other general organizations the charitable undertakings of the city Churches would be almost beyond ability to carry on. There are Church people who think it would be better for the Church to turn over more of its work of temporary assistance to such associations, with the assurance that deception and extravagance would be greatly reduced thus, while the Church would be freer to do its spiritual work.

The newspapers give some attention to the topics of discussion of our recent Provincial Synod, calling attention to the fact that the positions taken by the leading speakers were well in advance of what used to be the views of conservative Episcopalians. That "the Episcopal Synod may admit women to its councils" was given most prominent notice in the headings. The press does not pretend to have a long memory, and therefore this mention of feminine possibilities was oblivious to occurrences in recent Diocesan Conventions, where women were not only openly held in honor but officially invited to address the Convention in session. Nothing is more impressive in the American Church than to see this dignified body of New York Churchmen in its annual legislative meetings at the handsome Synod Hall rise as one man and stand in manifest respect as each woman went to or departed from the rostrum. The only question would be how long this custom would be kept up if women were admitted to every intimate function of such a legal gathering. The women might find it as embarrassing as the men would possibly find it wearying when in course of time equal delegations of both sexes took part in the deliberations..

Other radical positions maintained in the conferences of the Synod included the contention that "equal pay be granted to women who take men's places," that "women protective officers or policemen" in all towns near training camps were desirable, that the full favor of the Church be exercised in favor of prohibition of the liquor traffic, at least during the war, and that the intrusion of secular affairs on the Sacred Sunday hours be more and more opposed, with special reference to moving pictures, baseball, etc.

Dr. Manning came out in the papers this past week as favoring Sunday parades of our new soldiers, for, he remarked, there was not enough attention being given to the progress of enlisted men, and that Sunday was an excellent time to show our appreciation. This attitude is undoubtedly in line with former feelings of Churchmen not in sympathy with Sabbatarianism and Puritanism, but the distinguished Rector of Trinity shows a strong inclination the other way with respect to the drink question. In the Diocesan Convention and elsewhere he has proved himself a vigorous champion of the present demand for immediate prohibition of liquor wherever the national flag flies. It was curiously interesting to see the quondam "low and broad Church" Rector of St . Bartholomew's so strenuously defend the right of the soldier to drink, or, at least, to hear his eloquent urgency that the Church should not depart from its time honored liberal platform, while against him stood some of the so-called "high and dry" element, once known as kindly affectioned toward "the social glass." The ecclesiastical world certainly is a bit topsy turvy in these war time "questions of the day," though it is to be noted that Cardinal Gibbons stands firmly by the guns of the respectable fathers of nineteenth century Catholicity.

Kenyon, of Gambier, Ohio, is a little College, but, as Daniel Webster said in his defence of Dartmouth, "there are those who love it." Twenty-five of its lovers and friends got together for a banquet in the Delta Kappa Epsilon Club on 44th str et the night of January 31, and the guests of honor were President Peirce and former Secretary of War, the Hon. Lindley M. Garrison. Among the sons of Kenyon present, who have gained metropolitan and even international fame were Earl Babst, who is now head of the more than ever important sugar trust; and John Brooks Leavitt, a leading New York lawyer, as well as Warden of St. Mark's in the Bowery. Mr. Babst, who received his legal training in Michigan University, revealed the fact in an impromptu speech that he is not only something of a graceful orator but that he has also done a thing not very common among great captains of industry, viz. he has thought out the principles of capitalism, and has a reasonable hope of a favorable social outcome of its various anxious movements. Another interesting speech, more personal and reminiscent of college life, was a rollicking one by the Rev. E. M. McGuffey, who has been Rector in Elmhurst, Long Island, for nearly 30 years. He described himself as a product of the McGuffey spellers, his father's famous school work, and wittily defended the right of a graduate to tell tales out of school, especially when far from the time and the place.

Dr. Peirce made a serious and eloquent etatement of college conditions in war times, and claimed that Kenyon had, in proportion to its size, the largest number of enlisted men of any American college. There is no doubt of the fact that Kenyon, which is one of the smallest colleges in America, has had an extraordinary part in the development of American public life. The writer of these notes heard the late President Hayes assert that Kenyon, of which he himself was a graduate, had done more for the nation than any other college during the Civil War, and he cited as proof of his claim that Edwin M. Stanton, Lincoln's great Secretary of War, was a Kenyon boy; that the best debater in the Congress of that time. Henry Winter Davis, was a graduate; that Solon M. Chase, the great Secretary of the Treasury, afterwards Chief Justice, and Justice David Davis, with others almost as eminent, owed their initial college training to "the little Episcopalian College on the hill."

Since that speech was made the names of Mark Hanna, Andrew Carnegie and J. Pierpont Morgan have been enshrined amongst its friends and helpers. There are those who refer to it, as a New Yorker did recently, as "the only college in the Middle West where a gentleman may freely send his son as he would to an Amherst or a Williams "without danger of losing social cast."

This is of course dubious praise, and chimes in a bit with a criticism that the college has run too much after men of wealth and boys of family, but the meaning is probably better than that. It is, at all events, a remarkable thing that a college so small, and so far from any city or town of large size, should have exercised an influence so metropolitan and national—the exact opposite of its rural and quiet environment. It is, in some respects, an almost miraculous record.

A Lenten Occupation—Fasting

In obedience to the universal practice of the Church of God in every age: —"To keep the body under," lest the spirit suffer harm;—To increase spiritual power, remembering the words of Jesus:. "This kind cometh not forth but by prayer and fasting:"—As the natural companion of sorrow for sin—the sad, the afflicted, the anxious, fast from inclination; so let the penitent.

Western Michigan Notes

The United Lenten Services for the Church in the city of Grand Rapids are to be held in Grace Church this year. They are held on Wednesday evenings, and the several Episcopal Churches unite with the Congregation in joining in the services.

The speakers for these Wednesday night meetings will be as follows:

Ash Wednesday, the Rev. Howard R White, of South Bend, Ind.

Feb. 20th, the Rev. Francis R. Godolphin, Oak Park, Ill.

Feb. 27th, the Very Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, Fond du Lac, Wis.

March 6th, the Rev. R. H. Chalmers, Tiffin, Ohio.

March 13th, the Rev. Dr. George Gunnell, D. D., Toledo, Ohio.

March 20th, the Rev. W. H. Poole, Jackson, Mich.

March 27th, the Rev. Walter F. Tunks, Muskegon, Mich.

The Way to Make Your Parish Prosper

Some Parishes and Missions express the feeling that the various assessments and apportionments laid upon them are very heavy and hard to meet. This feeling is based upon a wrong estimate of the proportion that extra-parochial claims may properly bear to the parochial budget. If it represents one-third the amount raised for all purposes, it is not excessive. There is no reason why a Mission or dependent Parish that pays say $300 toward the maintenance of its own services should not pay $100 to $150 toward the various extra-parochial claims. The ideal should be "fifty-fifty"—we should "love our neighbors as ourselves." To do our share toward the advancement of God's kingdom is a privilege to thank God for, not to be regarded as a burden. No Parish or Mission that repudiates its extra-parochial claims can prosper; and no one ever heard of a Parish that paid these claims promptly that did not prosper. "Seek ye grst the Kingdom of God," and all other things in the way of parochial welfare, both material and spiritual, "Will be added unto you."—Light.

To live in the Spirit is the right condition of man, his normal condition; and to live in the Spirit is to live with God—hearing Him, and knowing Him, and loving Him, and delighting to do His will.—Thomas Erskine.

That was a sensible father, alert to his moral responsibilities as a parent, who declared to his son, in the course of a discussion as to going to church: "As long as my son sits

A woman doesn't have to be a nun to lead a dedicated life.

Our Lord working in the carpenter shop of Nazareth was doing His Heavenly Father's business as well as following St. Joseph's trade. St. Peter went a-fishing even after Christ's resurrection because that was the immediate duty as he saw it.

But the Church is in a unique and lofty sense the Father's business because it has only one reason for existence, and that is to bring the Father and His children close together. When it fails to do that it is out of business.

Now there never was an enterprise in this world that didn't involve money.

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

Rejoicing With Those That Rejoice

Among the blessings of the parson's life is that he is so often taken into the family circle. It becomes his privilege not only to weep with those who weep but to rejoice with those who rejoice. He can look back with pleasure upon many a scene the memory of which has clung to him for many years.

Among these occasions are the weddings in whose solemn and sacramental rites he has had his part, and in whose festal brightness he afterward shares. He is treated with rare friendliness and consideration by those who recognize that through his office a blessing has been brought to two happy young people. The wedding and the gathering at the home afterward never become to him a routine duty but one of the bright hours of a burdened life. The joy of it is contagious and he were callous indeed who cannot feel a glow of affectionate regard for those who have sought his services in this most solemn yet joyous moment of their lives.

He may bring his share, too, to the feast. He may put into practice that sermon of fellowship which he preached a short time ago. Here are the people, here the opportunity. It takes but genuine goodwill to mould that group, often reticent because it has gathered from various remote habitations, into a real assembly of those who, united in spirit, desire to do honor to the bride and groom.

And then when the first little baby comes to bless that union the parson as an honored guest may tip-toe in and allow the wee bundle of humanity to be placed in his arms. The anxious mother awaits the verdict. There is but one verdict. The parson understands how to announce it skillfully and with variations. He is wondrously sincere about it, too, for he cannot fail to respond with deep feeling to the atmosphere of love that a mother has cast about that little infant. The air is electric, charged with the radiance of mother love.

Then comes the crucial question, "Whom does it resemble?" You stumbled over that at first as you looked at the little mite of humanity, whose eyes were closed and whose unformed features as yet gave no slightest trace of likeness to either parent. At last the parson learned wisdom and the reply comes easily and honestly. "It seems to me very probable that it will resemble its mother when it grows up." Perfectly true and perfectly satisfactory to the mother.

Then there are the birthday parties and the family reunions and other occasions when friends gather for the pleasure of being together. You are made welcome. No wonder that the parson feels that his Parish is a great family.

At times, too, it is his good fortune to sit at some comfortable fireside and to listen to the hopes and ambitions of those in whom the current of the run of life is running strong and deep. There is nothing so valuable to his relationship to his people as to be a good listener. He becomes the interested listener, too, because here is the reality of which novels are the reflections. Here is life. The boy who must bring the pictures he has taken, the girl who wants him to see her new party cloak, the mother who brings forth the children's school record, and the father who takes him to see some useful and ingenious household contrivance he has fashioned, and the older folks who bring some album or relic of by-gone days, all, all are his children. There is a touching intimacy in the address of "father" which many clergymen are privileged to hear, that expresses the deepest attitude of the parson toward his flock.

It becomes a source of distress to the parson as his work becomes larger and his duties more burdensome, that the opportunity for these fireside renewals of his pastoral watchfulness and concern becomes more infrequent. The organizations demand his time and his energy, outside interests claim his strength, his correspondence grows heavier, a score of anxieties exact their toll. To the material fabric he must give some oversight, and a building project of any sort turns his attention to business affairs. There comes a time when from one end of the week to the other almost every minute is claimed. An unexpected and unplanned-for call which must be heeded is forced into that line of duties and a score of engagements are telescoped in the process.

The parson regrets it more than the people do. They do not realize how his mind wanders over the flock, and with what eagerness he would welcome the chance to go to this home for an evening, or give an hour's cheer to some shut-in, or have a good talk with a friend, or hunt up some neglectful sheep and give him a fresh stimulus to come again within the fold. Try as he may he cannot make more hours in a day, and these are being claimed from day to day by the exingencies of the day's toil.

The people must be lenient in these harrassing days. Perhaps you, who read these words, were mentioned in your parson's prayers last night. He would have God surround you with the care and watchfulness, of which his own ministry is but a pale and feeble reflection.

Jesus and Finality

By Thos. F. Opie

Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life—John 6:68.

Never was the world more in need of certitude as regards the fundamentals than today. Never did the world need finality, assurance or certainty more than now. Where is it to be found? St. Peter and the early disciples might have gone to various sources popular in their day for light bearing on the fundamental problems of life. They might have gone to the Pharisees, the learned class of the day. But they spoke without authority and without conviction, substituting their own traditions for the Word of God. St. Peter might have gone to the Sadducees, but this sect even denied the resurrection and the existence of spirits— they spoke without certitude and without assurance. The inquirers might have gone to Gamaliel, the great teacher at whose feet sat Saul of Tarsus—but he made no claim as to solving the riddles of the unknown, or the problems that haunt the soul and will not down. It was to Christ alone, then, that the disciples could go for words of eternal life—words bearing on the eternal verities and words themselves carrying life and light.

We too may go to sources numerous and varied in our quest for truth. We too may go here and there for solace and comfort—for pronouncement on the fundamentals of life and death. But they do not furnish satisfactory solution nor do they quench this divine curiosity that arises in the soul of every man at one time or another in his sojourn here. We may go, as thousands are today going, to the great scholars and teachers of ages past and present to scientists and philosophers and potentates. We may go to Kant, or Hegel, to Huxley or Tom Paine, to Pastor Russell or Ralph Waldo Trine, to Elbert Hubbard or to Mary Baker Eddy. The bare element of truth about the eternal realities that each of these sets forth, while the whole teaching of each lacks both finality and certitude, as well as satisfaction and assurance, has led thousands into a mystic maze from which they hardly escape, and in which they find that the curiosity of the soul is not gratified. It is to Christ alone that we may go, for it is He alone who has words of eternal life.

The body cries out for rest and surcease from the perplexing problems and the irritating routine of the day. Christ answers—"Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." The mind cries out for truth and for freedom from the shackles of ignorance, doubt and superstition. Christ answers, "I am the truth;" "If the Son make you free ye shall be free indeed." The soul cries out for eternal life. Christ answers, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent;" "I give unto them eternal life."

Suppose we go to (1) THE GREAT RELIGIONS. If we ask Confucianism, for example, what are the higher powers, we get the answer—"You cannot know the higher powers." This is agnosticism. If we ask the same question of Buddhism or Brahmanism, we get the answer, "The universe is the highest power." This is pantheism. If we ask Mohammedanism, the answer comes, "Law is the highest power." That is fatalism. If we ask Christianity what is the higher power, we get the answer, "The highest power is revealed to man through man—since God made man in His own image and since Jesus appeared in the form of the God-head bodily." This is revelation. So the closer we get to the mind of Christ and His divine teaching the closer we get to eternal truth and to the words of eternal life.

Suppose we go to (2) THE NEW THEOLOGY, or the NEW RELIGION. We find such men as Oliver Lodge, Winston Churchill, W. G. Wells and Dr. Eliot espousing the cause of a so-called new religion. But what the world needs today is not a new religion or a new theology. The world needs new life, a new mode of living and of being and of doing. The new religionists, generally speaking, represent the attempt of the purely intellectual to compass the great facts of the infinite. They would find God with a telescope and weigh the soul with a pair of scales. They would apply chemistry to sin and endeavor to fathom the unknown with a plummet. They would banish from faith and credence all except those things that man thinks he can comprehend and find out by mental process. Sin they say, is a figment of the imagination, a shadow in the picture—simply a mistake. Inspiration and miracles they doubt and even the resurrection is considered by them to be doubtful, as is also the divinity of Christ. Truly it is not to the new religion or the new theology we are to go for words of eternal life. While all the men named do not hold views entirely at variance with the teachings of Christ, nor do they all hold to the above conception of the unknowables—it would be folly to displace the pronouncements of Christ by the emanations of any modern scientist, preacher or novelist. It is to Christ only that we may go for authoritative information on the verities of life.

Suppose we go to (3) SCIENCE. Here, again, many have been led into bypaths and have found themselves lost. Science deals in the very nature of the case with material things—not with the things of the spirit. Science has to do with God's acts, not with His being or with His person, nor yet with the fundamental truths He has seen fit to reveal in Christ. Science leads only to the threshold of the eternfties and the everlasting verities. It seems to take the attitude that mind-evidence or none goes here; whereas, the heart has reasons which the reason cannot know, as Paschal has it. So it is to Christ alone that we may go—indeed it is to Him we must go if we would know the truth as regards the eternal fundamentals.

"Lord Thou hast the words of eternal life." And what are some of these words? What does Christ say for instance about heaven? "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Heaven then ((laying aside all vain speculation) is a place prepared by God for His people—where Christ is; where God is and doubtless those who have died in Christ are to be. What does Christ say as to the method of getting there? Here again we must lay aside all conflicting pronouncements and go to Christ's words. "I am the way:" "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." We get to heaven then by following Christ—by sacrificing for Him, by serving Him, by seeking Him. What does He say as to TRUTH? "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free;" "I am the Truth." The trouble is, we want to know too much. Christ vouchsafes enough to every humble, inquiring soul to insure satisfaction and assurance, granting he be a faithful follower of the lowly Nazarine.

In order to receive the message sent out over the sea by wireless telegraphy, the receiver must be in perfect accord with the transmitter, they tell us. So it is with the soul. Christ's divine words like a sort of spiritual wireless telegraphy, comes sounding down the ages, carrying all over the world. In order to catch them and to appreciate them, man must be in attune with God Himself—in tune with the infinite. If man is engrossed in the things of this world he cannot catch the words of Christ, and cannot comprehend them either! When man is obsessed with the passion of murder and rapine and war; when he is bent on destruction of his brothers and in conquest and devastation, how can he hear and properly interpret the sweet and gracious words of the Savior of the world! "Come unto me," saith the Christ—" and ye would not."

"And that sweet voice still soundeth on—
Through the centuries that are gone
To the centuries that shall be;
Over the cornfield's waving gold,
By the shores of the beautiful sea."

Lent is an Opportunity

I have read somewhere the legend of one who, day-dreaming in his chair, beheld a vision, which stood before him and beckoned him to follow her to fortune. He waited sluggishly; heeded not her call nor her beckoning, until at last she grew dim and disappeared. Just as the vision faded, he sprang to his feet and cried out, "Tell me who thou art!" and received the answer, "I am Opportunity; once neglected, I never return."—Selected.

ARBUTUS

In the heart of a great forest in the far northwest, a dainty, timid Arbutus grew. All through the long Winter she slept peacefully under the leaves and the deep, deep snow. Sometimes she would half wake up and wish for the Spring, with its sunshine and its sweetness, its singing birds and its glad, joyous sounds. Then he would fall off to sleep again and dream of the butterflies and bees that wooed her in the days that were past.

As the snow melted away and the warm breeze began to blow,she awoke once more, and as she rubbed her tiny eyes she wondered if she might not venture forth now. She did not wish to appear too soon for she might be thought a forward maid.

While she was pondering and her little heart was beating with anxiety, she heard a bird sound forth his first joyous note of Spring. Surely she must go now, it would never do to be too late. So she pushed aside the moss that made a cover for her winter bed and poked her little head a wee bit out. And there was the great round Sun looking down on her from the sky. She was so startled that she blushed a dainty pink and hid her head beneath the leaves.

One of the Oldest Church Buildings in America

The Rev. James Empringham, D. D., describes in Temperance a visit which he made to one of the oldest and most interesting Parishes in the American Church—the Gloria Dei Church, Philadelphia—the Rev. Percy R. Stockman, Rector.

This most remarkable Church has had a continuous spiritual history since the days of Swedish Colony on the banks of the Delaware River, first established in 1638, and the present substantial edifice has stood for two hundred and seventeen years, a faithful witness to the enduring elements of a Christian civilization.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has written to say how greatly he enjoyed his visit to this ancient sanctuary. The floor and walls are replete with monuments more than two hundred years old—one of the most touching being the quaint tribute of an early pastor to his wife.

The Font bowl is of marble and was brought over in the days of the Swedish Colony.

The walls contain memorial tablets to the Rev. Nicholas Collin and his wife, the Rev. Jehu Curtis Clay and the Rev. Snyder B. Sims. These three Rectors served the Parish for 45 years, 32 years and 47 years, respectively, or for the periods 1786-1831, 1831-1863 and 1868-1915.

In the middle aisle, grave-stones formerly placed with the graves beneath the chancel, commemorate the Rev. Andrew Rudman, Rector, 1700-1702; the Rev. John Dylander, 1737-1741, and the Rev. Olof Parlin, 1750-1757.

The present bell bears the following notes and inscription: "Partly from the old bell dated 1643; cast for the Swedish Church, Philadelphia, stiled Gloria Dei, 1806,

"I to the Church the living call,
And to the grave do summon all."

Great changes have occurred again and again in the surroundings of the Church. Founded in the midst of a wilderness, it soon became the center of a thriving settlement, which in time, was incorporated in the City of Philadelphia, and on its waterfront was built the first navy yard of that city, and a thrifty population inhabited the district, making it one of the most desirable sections of the city. But times have changed, the former inhabitants and their descendants have moved away, and three or four waves of foreign immigration have overrun the neighborhood. Nearly every corner has its saloon, and "speak-easies openly operate on Sunday, bearing all too obvious witness to a loose and regardless city administration. But the Church remains, a silent reminder of better conditions, and an active agency of protest against the corrupting influence at its doors.

On the present site, as a forerunner to the quiet dignified structure built in 1700, stood a block house, built at command of the Swedish King, as a defence against the Indians, and later used as a house of worship in times of peace. In the modern warfare against the more subtle and more dangerous foes of such a locality today, the Church has just opened a new "Block House," the name given to a small Parish House, which it is hoped in time to expand as a center of a strong and steady influence seeking to reclaim the neighborhood.

In 1845, the Swedish Crown and Church having long since failed to send Missionaries to the Church, and the last Swedish Rector having been in charge for forty-five years, during most of which time he was assisted by Clergymen of the Episcopal Church, one of these latter, the Rev. John Curtis-Clay, then Rector, brought the congregation into union with the Diocese of Philadelphia.

An interesting and earnest man who is not long out of sight in Church movements, is Eugene M. Camp, author of "Christ's Economy." The Seabury Society owes its birth and useful work to him, and now he has a new organization launched. It is called the Institute of Applied Christianity. At a recent meeting he described it as a hopeful undertaking to train laymen of every denomination to be Bible Class teachers, Sunday School Superintendents, lay readers, elders, Vestrymen, Wardens, etc. His method he claims is Christ-like in that it begins with making the converted man himself get next to one other man, and so on, without limit—a sort of expansion of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew method of personal work. Towards this good end there are to be classes and courses of educational training, if such work can be taught.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS— CALIFORNIA AND VERMONT

California

The sixty-eighth annual Convention of the Diocese of California was held in Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, beginning on Tuesday, January 22nd, with a celebration of the Holy Communion. A patriotic atmosphere morked the convention throughout and found expression in the addresses of the speakers. Indicative of the patriotic note of the Convention the Stars and Stripes were borne with the cross in the procession of the Clergy, theological students and the choir. In the course of his annual address, Bishop Nichols said:

The war has jolted us out of that kind of patriotism which entails no sacrifice. It must also inevitably move us out of the direction of easiest resistance in religious matters. There is to be hereafter a notably united strength in the performance of the work of the Church. The work of religion is growing with each successive day. The world is one mass of dishevelment, and it is to be the work of the Church to readjust it. The Church must be prepared for the leadership in a fiercer test than war. Keeping a Christian era Christian is to be the real issue of this conflict.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Hunting, of Nevada, and the Rt. Rev. Dr. Sanford, of San Joaquin, were honored guests of the Convention. The sessions were taken up largely in the transaction of routine business. The following delegates were elected to represent the Diocese in the provincial Synod: Clerical—The Rev. Alexander Allen, the Ven. John A. Emery, the Very Rev. Dr. William Gresham. Lay delegates —Messrs. W. B. Bakewell, H. R. Fairclough and Vincent Neal. A reception was given by Bishop and Mrs. Nichols in the library of the Divinity School. Professor H. M. Stephens of the University of California addressed the opening session of the House of Church Women on "Christianity and Nationality." The meeting was presided over by the Diocesan President, Mrs. Gaillard Stoney. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Sanford delivered the principal address. He told particularly of the Missionary work of the Church.

Vermont

The 128th annual Convention of the Diocese of Vermont met in Rutland on February 6th under climatic difficulties; the weather was cold and the train service very poor. Many of the Clergy and Lay delegates were hours late, and some from the northern part of the state were not able to attend.

The business done was mainly of a routine nature, although there were many interesting and helpful discussions on the support of the Clergy, the Missionary work of the Diocese, and the work in Social Service. All the old officers were re-elected or appointed, with two or three exceptions. It was decided to have the next Convention in Burlington on February 5th, at which time (D.V.) will be celebrated the 25th anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Hall.

In his address the Bishop gave some interesting figures in regard to Vermont Churchmen in the service of the country. Cards had been sent to every Rector and Missionary in the Diocese asking for full particulars as to the men from their cures in the service. Two hundred and twenty-three cards were received. From these it was learned that 7 men were unbaptized though loosely attached to the Parish; 52 were baptized but unconfirmed; 153 were communicants in good standing; and 11 were confirmed but were not in good standing. It is well to note here that in this Diocese only communicants who have made their communions within three years are classed as communicants in good standing.

Of the 223, 137 are in the army, 40 in the navy, 3 in the marines, 9 in aviation corps, 8 in the quartermaster's department, 22 in the medical and the ambulance corps, and 2 in the Judge Advocate's department. 65 are commissioned officers and 48 are non-commissioned officers. One of the Bishops and some of the Clergy have sons among those serving their country.

It was reported by the Treasurer that every Parish and Mission in the Diocese had paid its premium on the Clergy's pension, and had paid promptly.

Southern Virginia Notes

BEDFORD CITY, ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

This Parish has only 154 communicants, but has sent twenty-seven (27) men for service in the Army and Navy. There is hardly a Parish with a larger percentage of its young men in the service. The Rector, the Rev. T. Carter Page, dedicated a handsome silk flag on Sunday, Jan. 27th, a gift of Mrs. John M. Smith. It has gold fringed cord, mahogany pole, surmounted by a brass eagle. This beautiful design of the National Colors will stand in St. John's Chancel.

CHRIST CHURCH, PULASKI

The Rev. Thomas F. Opie has made most remarkable progress in the work in the pretty and growing town of Pulaski, during the few months he has been in charge. The Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese visited this Parish on the 27th, Septuagesima Sunday, confirmed a class of ten (10). The Bishop preached a timely sermon for these days of anxiety and unrest from the text "I will lift up mine eyes to the Hills from whence cometh my help."

The Sunday School has taken on new life, grown to such an extent that three new classes had to be formed. Also a Junior Brotherhood if sixteen (16) members has been organized which gives promise for good and valuable service.

A new organ has been bought for this Church to fill a long felt need and is to be installed this month. Mr. Opie is a man of energy and leadership and is so recognized by the people of Pulaski, who have made him chairman of a relief Committee for the town and also elected him member of the Red Cross Home Service Committee, which is to look after the dependents of the men in the service.

This great southwest part of the state is manifesting the need of men in the ministry. There is no resident clergyman between Bristol and Witheville, Rev. Mr. Davidson vacating Bristol, Rev. Mr. Hobson, Abingdon, and Rev. Mr. Opie, Saltville and Marion. The Rev. E. A. Rich ministers alone to forty mission stations along the Clinch valley and out in Tazewall and Ciles Counties. Indeed there are TWENTY COUNTIES with only four resident clergymen, the Rev. F. H. Craighill, Wytheville; the Rev. I. F. Opie, Pulaski; the Rev. C. E. A. Marshall, Radford, and the Rev. E. A. Rich, Archdeacon, and this field is white unto the harvest. May we hope that these great training camps will produce, after the close of this war, many recruits for Holy Orders.

Bishop Tucker stated that he has appointed the Rev. R. B. Nelson, of Blacksburg, as one of the Civilian Chaplains to serve from this Diocese Mr. Nelson left for Hampton and Newport News on Monday the 28th. While he is not certain where he will be definitely located, he will take a survey of that field and confer with the Bishop.

Mr. Nelson leaves one of the most important fields in the Diocese, since he ministers to a large number of students at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, and has five or six Missions scattered around through the mountains, in which Mission work he has drawn a large number of the young men from the Institute. Also, he ministers to the towns of Blacksburg and Christiansburg, but, he hsa gone to do even a better work to carry the message of the Church and salvation to the men training for the army and navy service. Mr. Nelson is pre-eminently fitted to this service. During his absence the Rev. T. G. Faulkner, of Salem, will give one Sunday a month and the Rev. C. F. Smith of Lynchburg, and the Rev. G. O. Mead, of Roanoke, will give occasional services to help along in this great enterprise.

The Rev. Arthur P. Gray, Jr., who for several years was Rector of the Churches in Brunswick and Lynchburg Counties is the Civilian Chaplain at Camp Les. Mr. Gray is a man of great energy and devotion, and will do fine work in this camp. He leaves a very large field, which no doubt the neighboring Churches will look after.

The war work fund which has been before the Church for the last two or three weeks was responded to liberally in the southwest part of the Diocese, especially in Roanoke, where the full amount asked of the Churches has been paid.

Notes from the Diocese of Lexington

CHANGE IN DIOCESAN SECRETARY

The Rev. J. H. Gibbons, The Burton, Covington, Ky., Rector, Trinity Church, and formerly Assistant Secretary of the Diocese, succeeds the Rev. George H. Harris as Secretary. Rev. Mr. Harris, owing to pressure of duties as Dean of Margaret College, and Rector of St. John's, Versailles, resigned the secretaryship recently, which position he held some years while Rector of St. Peter's, Paris.

GOOD SHEPHERD, LEXINGTON, BURNED

Sunday, Jan. 20, the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, was totally destroyed by fire a little before evening service. The fire started in the basement, from woodwork exposed to the heat of the furnace. It is doubtful if the sexton had an unusual fire. Flames had gained such headway when the fire department succeeded in thawing the water plug, that none of the contents of the building were saved. Over the smoldering ashes the stuccoed walls stood, scarcely stained on the outside, while the electric cross, over the front entrance, remained erect, arms outstretched as usual, pointing east and west. The building was valued at $35,000, remodeling and improvements to the extent of $10,000 having just been made last year. Most of the Church appointments were memorials, including altar clothes valued at $500. The handsome memorial window, Good Shepherd design, only recently installed, carrying $300 insurance, was destroyed with other memorial windows. Building and contents, exclusive of the Good Shepherd window, were insured for $7,000.

After the evening service, which was held in the home of a parishioner near the burned Church, the congregation met to lay plans for rebuilding immediately. Bishop Burton, Dean Massie and representatives from the Cathedral were present and pledged the aid of that congregation in replacing the burned Church with a modern and more complete building. $50,000 is to be raised for this purpose and as a step toward organizing forces to accomplish this, a mass meeting of all Church people in Lexington was held Friday night, Jan. 25, in the Cathedral Parish House. Plans are now being drawn for the proposed new building.

NOBLE WORK DONE FOR NEEDY OF LEXINGTON

Through the untiring labors of the Rev. Dr. Richard Wilkinson, Rector of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, and the wise counsel of Dean R. K. Massie, of Christ Church Cathedral, the needy and suffering of Lexington were given seasonable relief during the recent cold spell, when coal was scarce and work stopped. Groceries and provisions were supplied, and "200 tons of coal were distributed in suitable portions to fireless people without one cent of cost to them, and without asking any question whatever, because workers knew these homes 'had need of it' ". In this work Dr. Wilkinson and Dean Massie were ably assisted by members of their respective congregations, leading citizens of Lexington, and members of other communions.

The work sprung out of the opening of the Court House "which Judge Bullock had ordered on leaving his office Saturday afternoon, to afford a lodging place for any who desired to avail themselves of such shelter through the promised cold of that night—for hundreds had no coal in their homes." Dr. Wilkinson realizing that this was not going far enough to meet the situation, since no coal for heat meant no fire for cooking, and learning that no provision had been made for food, set to work to provide food for the needy and those gathered in the Court House. Simultaneously, but without the knowledge of what Dr. Wilkinson was doing, Dean Massie was organizing members of the Cathedral congregation for similar relief work at the Parish House. When this became known Dr. Wilkinson and Dean Massie united forces, with the Court House as center. Food was provided for over Sunday, and by Monday the body of workers had greatly increased and the work grown to proportions beyond expectations. Groceries were bought by the wholesale and distributed by the "wholesale", but "as expeditiously and as carefully as possible"; and distributed to those who came for them and to those who remained at home who were known to be needy. The city aided by giving to the workers right of way to fill orders for coal to shivering people. Limited coal supply caused delay of nearly thirty-six hours, which was relieved only by the timely location and placing of cars of coal that had been "lost in transit." Lincoln and Booker Washington schools, closed for school purposes, were opened as a sort of permanent restaurant where the hungry were fed, as was being done at the Court House, the schools being supplied with hot soup, coffee and sandwiches from Headquarters. It is conservatively estimated that 3,000 people were helped between Saturday night and the following Thursday. One feature of the work was the direction given workers, that "no applicant must be turned down", and, that "until the worker could more closely investigate they must trust the people to make honorable appeals."

Evidence of the great need and the willingness to help meet the need is seen in the case of Major E. B. Ellis, who entered the Court House merely to see what was "doing." Upon seeing what was "doing" he gave order to "go ahead and I'll stand by you," at the same time handing Dr. Wilkinson checks with which to draw on him for "whatever he needed" and instructing the bank to honor the Doctor's signature.

So greatly did this movement meet the emergency, that in order to meet similar future emergencies, permanency has been given it through the formation of the "Emergency Committee of the Associated Charities of Lexington," with Major E. B. Ellis, President, Mr. John G. Stoll, Treasurer, and Rev. Richard Wilkinson, General Director. Sub-Committees will be set to work districting the city and gathering necessary information, whereby distribution may be made with the least possible loss of time. The Committee will co-operatively relate itself to the work of the Associated Charities of the city.

CHURCH MISSIONS HOUSE

Meeting of the Board of Missions

Twenty-five members were present at the regular meeting of the Board of Missions held in New York on Wednesday, February 6, 1918. The President is still absent in Liberia and the Bishop of Washington presided in his place.

The Bishop of Kansas appeared before the Board with a carefully prepared plan for the better development of the work in his Diocese. It involved an additional appropriation of $1,540 per annum. It seemed to the Board that this was so important that the appropriation was granted.

A communication was received from the Synod of the Province of Sewanee in reference to the better development of the mountain work within the Province. The Board adopted a resolution assuring the Province that it will do everything possible to strengthen the Church's work among the mountain people of the South. It arranged for a deputation of not more than three persons to visit the Dioceses and Districts in the Province of Sewanee, having such work.

In the absence of a Provincial Secretary in the Province of the Pacific, the Bishop of Idaho very generously offered his services in any way in which he could be used. The Board accepted his offer with great appreciation, hoping that he would be able to accept any invitations to speak within the Province in this connection.

The Board was gratified to receive a communication from the District of Eastern Oklahoma, asking for an increase in their apportionment from $1,543 to $1,750. The Board expressed great appreciation of this generous act.

Mr. Henry Lewis Morris, for seventeen years a most valuable member of the Board, died on January 9, 1918.

Mr. George Wharton Pepper, because of the great pressure of other matters, felt obliged to present his resignation both from the Board and Executive Committee. The Board recognized the many calls upon his valuable time, and felt it necessary to relieve him from his duties on the Executive Committee, but unanimously requested him, if possible, to reconsider his resignation from the Board.

Mr. William Fellowes Morgan was elected a member of the Board to succeed Mr. Morris, and was also elected to the Executive Committee to succeed Mr. Pepper.

In the absence of the President the Board felt that there should be some one to act in an executive capacity representing the Board. Mr. John W. Wood, Foreign Secretary, was unanimously requested by the Board to act in this capacity.

The Secretary for Latin America announced that a magazine in Spanish was being published in New York to supply the needs of the Latin American countries. The Board expressed its appreciation of the new venture.

Word was received through the Presiding Bishop of the illness of the Bishop of Honolulu and the need for an extended leave of absence. The Board assured the Presiding Bishop that whatever arrangements he might make would, so far as the Board is concerned, be satisfactory.

There is great need for Christian literature in the vernacular in the mission fields in the Orient. At the last meeting of the Board the Rev. C. H. Patton, D. D., of the Congregational Board, and on the American Section of the Committee on Christian Literature of the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference, presented this matter most fully to the members. We have in the District of Kyoto, a Missionary of exceptional ability in this line, and at the request of Bishop Tucker the Rev. Dr. Irving H. Correll was assigned to the work of translation.

The meeting adjourned at eight o'clock to meet again in May when two days have been assigned for the transaction of the large amount of business which demands the attention of the Board.

MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

The Executive Committee met at the Church Missions House on the day preceding the Board meeting.

A request was presented from the Bishop of Atlanta and the head of the La Grange Settlement, La Grange, Ga., for an appropriation of $21,500 to further develop the work of the Settlement. The mill owners are deeply interested in this work and have volunteered the land and three-fourths of the cost of the construction of the desired improvements. The Executive Committee, while appreciating the value of the work done by the Settlement, regretted exceedingly that owing to the lack of funds it could not make the desired appropriation.

Mrs. Sarah M. Peppers was appointed Missionary in the District of the Philippines, under the United Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Consecration of St. Paul's, Duluth

On Sexagesima Sunday, Rt. Rev. J. D. Morrison, D. D. consecrated old St. Paul's Church, Duluth, with elaborate ceremony. The entire indebtedness of $58,000 had been paid and the vestry made request to the Bishop to set apart the magnificent building for sacred purposes. The Bishop was assisted by the Rev. C. A. Cummings, a former Rector, as Chaplain, by the Rev. W. E. Harmann as bearer of the crozier, by the Revs. E. D. Weed and T. J. E. Wilson, who read Morning Prayer. The article of donation was read by Mr. Thos. S. Wood for the Vestry and the Chaplain read the article of consecration at the request of the Bishop.

The Rev. George Craig Stewart, L. H. D., of Evanston, Ills., was the preacher, and he set forth in eloquent terms the high place of the Church in these trying days and suggested that it was a superb example just now that a noble building like St. Paul's was to be consecrated, when the attention of the most of the world was centered on the war and its appended financial outlays. It was a brilliant piece of oratory and brought tears to many eyes as he pictured our young men going, like crusaders, to the relief of a burdened world.

A great choir, under the direction of Mr. A. F. M. Custance, with an orchestral accompaniment of seven pieces, rendered a service that is not often excelled.

For one purpose or another this congregation has raised over $80,000 this past year and has just taken on a curate in the foreign field for whom they pay the salary.

On Jan. 22, last, the Rector of St. Paul's, Rev. A. W. Ryan, preached at the graduation of six nurses, as supplemental class, who were sent forth early that they might offer themselves for war work. As President of the Board of Control of St. Luke's Hospital, he also gave the diplomas to this very interesting class.

A WAR LENT

The Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, Rector of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., says:

"Lent is at hand and surely there could not well be a Lent more needed or one which should be more gladly welcomed and conscientiously used than the first Lent of the war. God grant that it may also be the last! Whether that is to be or no may depend on the manner in which we Christians make use of this Holy Season.

"God sitteth above the waterflood; God remaineth a King forever." Despite all secondary and proximate causes and conditions we Christians must believe that the duration of this terrible holocaust is in His hands. It will cease when He determines and not one moment sooner. Possibly its cessation is dependant on us more than we realize. "God loves to look down from Heaven," says St. Augustine, "and see His children on their knees." Possibly that is what He is waiting for now. As a wise economist, He cannot be satisfied until the moral and spiritual gains are in some degree commensurate with the tremendous cost in life and treasure. Such gains have not yet appeared, nor will they until each individual disciple of Christ wherever situated, realizes the part he has to play. "Turn ye unto me" is God's call at this Season, and as it has been uttered year by year it has fallen on deaf ears. Now, when through the trumpet blast of this terrible war He again utters it, shall it still go unheeded?

Let us ask this, not of the Church in general, which is only a sort of abstraction; not of the other people we know; but of our selves. Let each one say to himself—"This war is being prolonged, my brethren are suffering and dying because God is waiting for me to get down upon my knees. Through my brother's blood today, as through the blood shed upon Calvary, He is calling me to forsake all worldly and selfish standards and return in penitence and humility to my Father's house.

Spiritual forces, in the last analysis, are to determine the duration and results of this war. Lent is the Church's armory. It is well stocked with arms and munitions, tried and tested. Let every Christian repair to the armory and learn again the use and value of his neglected weapons. Let him take up in earnest the spiritual combat within his own soul with faith enough to believe that there the great issue of the Universe must be settled and that just in so far as they are settled right will hasten the coming of the immortal reign of justice and peace, the Kingdom of God."

No More Sunday Funerals in Chicago

Very few funerals are now held in Chicago on Sundays owing to the refusal of the Chicago Motor Liverymen's Association to provide motor cars and hearses for this purpose. Christ Church Messenger says: "The Church has stood against using the Lord's day for funerals (except in great emergency) and is naturally glad that the motormen have taken this stand. The drivers, sextons of cemeteries, undertakers and their helpers need this day of rest. But the chief reason is that Sunday, the day for joyous worship of our risen Saviour, is not an appropriate day for funerals."

Bishop Bratton Speaks at Asheville, N. C.

In connection with the campaign now going on in the Carolina Diocese to raise $250,000 for St. Mary's School in Raleigh and is an ardent February 10th, the Rt. Rev. Theodore D. Bratton, Bishop of Mississippi, preached on "The Responsibility of the Church to Education" at Trinity Church, Asheville. Bishop Bratton was formerly Rector of St. Mary's School in Raleigh and is an adrent advocate of Church Schools and Colleges and of this movement that has been inaugurated by the Trustees of St. Mary's School. A large congregation filled the Church and the speaker preached a powerful and convincing sermon, setting forth the fundamental and permanent place that education ocupies in the Christian system. The Bishop of Asheville was present; and, in introducing the speaker, urged the necessity of pressing this matter at once, notwithstanding the many calls of the day, that the School may be prepared when the war is over to carry on its constructive work. At the evening service, Bishop Bratton spoke more particularly of the School and its wonderful contribution to society, Christian culture and the Church during its long life of seventy-five years.

In the afternoon, the Rev. Francis M. Osborne, who is the Special Representative of the Trustees, in the movement to raise the $250,000 Fund, held a conference with the committee of representative men and women of the District to lay plans for a canvass throughout the District of Asheville.

A Message for Lent

System, or "Rule", is just as necessary in the deep development of the religious life as it is in the affairs of business and of housekeeping. This is not always recognized, however, and the failure to realize it accounts for much of the slackness and inefficiency which mar the inner life of many. Of course, love to Christ, which is the basis of religion, is the deepest of emotions. Yet it is superficial to hold that it should not be guided and developed by rule, just because it is a great emotion. For instance, music is always very emotional, yet the musician who does not develop his technique, that is, his rules of playing, will be but blurred and slovenly in his emotional expressions. He will never succeed as a musician. So with the far deeper ability to express one's love for Christ. There must be rules concerning prayer, self-examination, Bible-reading, Holy Communion, giving, study, and effort towards social betterment, systematic attention to the majestic cause of Missions, and the like. To let all this higher life go by the board unless the "mood suggests," is to insure a large degree of failure. That is certainly part of what our Lord meant when He spoke of "the strait and narrow way which leadeth to destruction."—John Henry Hopkins, D. D.

PROGRESS MADE IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The Rev. Dr. Gardner, General Secretary, in his report presented at the recent meeting of the General Board of Religious Education said certain comparisons between conditions in the Church five years ago and now reveal the results achieved.

In October, 1912, few Dioceses had organized Diocesan Boards of Religious Education, and the Provincial Boards existed only in name. Today, nearly every Diocese has passed a canon providing for a Board of Religious Education, and the eight Provincial Boards are recognizing opportunities for service, discovering leaders and organizing for the work in the future Provincial life that is bound to develop as the Church grows and meets enlarged needs.

In 1912 there were only three persons employed by the Church in Religious Education, outside of educational institutions. Today, twenty-two persons give full time under the direction of General, Provincial or Diocesan Boards.

In 1912, there was a variety of Sunday School text books and an indecision regarding what should be taught in the schools. Today there is a growing unity of devotion to the Christian Nurture idea with its demand for

WHAT IS LENT?

Lent appeals to men with great force because of its power for self-discipline, its self-denials in meats and drinks "to keep the body under," to conquer its appetites and its passions. To determine who is master and who is slave—the man or the animal. It is delightful to see men refuse to satisfy the body even in things innocent as a test of self-control, to prove themselves masters of their habits. How much more delightful is it to see men break the chains of their sinful habits that disgrace, debase and shame them. Discipline is a good thing. The season that gives it particular exercise is a blessing to any man who would be the master over his animal nature.

Effect of War Upon Men at the Front

The Rev. Wm. B. Kinkaid, Rector of St. Matthew's Church, Los Angeles, says: "Things are going on, on the other side of the sea, in the souls of the young men who are fighting. Men who have been at the front, tell us that they are impressed with the different view which experience there gives the men on all the questions of the world and of life. No one can face the nearness of death for himself or see it cut down the man who but a few moments before has been shouting courageously as they went together over the top, without as soon as the tumult dies, and there is time for thought, forming some conclusions about the purpose and the outcome of life in this world. Some of the men are coming back to us one of these days—pray God it may be soon. Some of them are coming back with their spiritual natures deepened and quickened because of their experiences, and some are coming back with that nature killed. And will it not be that those who have suffered the loss of their faith will reproach us because we failed to equip and train them before we sent them away, and those who have grown in grace will reproach us because it was necessary for them to go through the fire of war in order to obtain what should have been given to them at home?

"Jesus knew man and men," asserted the Rev. A. L. Murray, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Evansville, Ind., in a recent sermon. "His compassion was the result of His vision. He saw man and knew him and knowing him was moved to action on behalf of men. The man who does not see deeply into life is not much moved by the little he sees in his fellows and is a slacker both in religion and in all humanitarian work.

Ten Points of a First Class Parish

At a meeting of the Parishioners of Christ Church, Mobile, Ala., a new plan for organizing the Parish along lines suggested by the Rector, the Rev. Louis Tucker, was unanimously adopted. A special committee of laymen assisted the Rector in formulating the plans, composed of Messrs. John E. Mitchell, Chairman; J. Blocker Thornton and W. H. Monk, Jr. The congregation pledged its full support and co-operation in working out the suggestions. The ten points of a first-class Parish, as embraced in the new organization, are briefly outlined as follows: A Vestry that attends Vestry meetings. Public monthly reports from Rector and Treasurer. This means a Parish paper, or Leaflet, or Year Book to print them in. Yearly every-member canvass, with duplex envelopes and a separate missionary treasurer. Proper pastoral bookkeeping, with inspection. Proper parochial bookkeeping, with all accounts audited. Efficient Sunday School. Extra special music. Congregational singing greatly emphasized. Efficient Guilds. Guilds are efficient when there is a special committee for each piece of work, and the name of the chairman or chairwoman is known to the whole Parish. Efficient Bible classes and study classes. A Parish paper or year-book or leaflet. The blessing of God, the Holy Spirit. This is obtained by constant personal private prayer for the Parish by its individual members, especially at Celebrations of the Holy Communion.

In the moral world there is nothing impossible, if we bring a thorough will to it. Man can do everything with himself; but he must not attempt to do too much with others.—William von Humboldt.

training in Memory, Devotional Life, Christian Service, and instruction in Doctrine, Scriptre and History, and a co-operative effort to win by tested material, the right text books and properly equipped teachers.

In 1912 there were only two Summer Schools offering training for Sunday School teachers. Last summer there were twenty, with a total enrollment of over twenty-five hundred teachers.

In 1912 there was no co-operation between the Public Schools and the agencies for religious education. Today, in New York, Indiana, Colorado, North Dakota and many other places there is a recognition by the Public School of the educational work done by the Church.

In 1912 there was little co-operation between the various communions in educational inquiry and promotion. Today, there are

The Council of Church Boards.

The Commission on Christian Education of the Federal Council.

The Sunday School Council.

The Association of American Colleges.

In 1912 no Church-wide effort had been made to win and hold the college student. Today by conference and correspondence over 100 Church workers in as many institutions are organized in their quest for an answer to the question—How can the Church keep and nourish college students living for four years under the peculiar conditions in our modern institutions for higher education?

In 1912 Bishops, examining Chaplains, seminary faculties and candidates for Holy Orders were groping in a maze, in which interference, waste of effort and distrust of guidance, yearly meant the loss of good men for the ministry and the diminished confidence of the laity. Today, the Council on the Education of Postulants and Candidates for the Ministry, and various Provincial and Diocesan committees on Theological Education, have at least pursued some of the problems to their sources. As a result of earnest thought and conference they will request legislation at the next General Convention.

In October 1912, there was no assured income for the work of Education in the General Church. Today, two-thirds of the Diocesan Conventions are voting over $15,000 annually, and each year sees progress toward the payment of the total apportionment of $32,000 for the budget of the General Board.

These are some of the conspicuous educational movements that have taken place in the five years.

Death of Two Priests

The Rev. Henry Willam Winkley, Rector of Calvary Church, Danvers, Mass., since 1918, died at his home in that city on Monday, February 4th, having been indisposed for some time. He was born in Boston, March 22, 1858, and was a graduate of Harvard University and Cambridge Theological School. He was ordained a Deacon in 1884 and a Priest in 1885, by Bishop Paddock, and had been Rector of Parishes in Massachusetts, Canada, Maine and Connecticut. He owned one of the most valuable collections of shells in the country, and his donation some time ago of 2,000 shells to Harvard University attracted wide attention. The funeral burial service was held in Calvary Church on Wednesday the 6th inst.

The death of the Rev. Robert Murray, eighty-one years of age, a retired clergyman of the Church, occurred at his home in Waltham, Mass., on Tuesday, February 5th. He was born at Watertown, Mass., and immediately after his early education he entered Williams College, from which he graduated in 1857, and three years later from the General Theological Seminary, was ordained a Deacon by Bishop Eastburn in 1861 and advanced to the Priesthood in 1863 by Bishop Clark. The largest part of his ministry was spent in the Diocese of Rhode Island. He was an active member of the Masonic Order and of the Watertown Historical Society. A brother and sister survive him. Mr. Murray was never married.

Memorial Minute

The Venerable Charles James Sniffen

The Bishop and Board of Missions of Western Massachusetts desire to record their grattitude to Almighty God for the life and work of the Venerable Charles James Sniffen, Archdeacon of the Diocese.

Loyal and tender in friendship; rugged and original in character and thought; firm in conviction, and fearless in maintaining it; entirely devoted to the Church of Christ, Archdeacon Sniffen performed a great and unique work in this Diocese. The congregations that he gathered and organized remain as his monument; and a rarer memorial exists in the heart of many a lonely and isolated member of the Church whom he found and brought into the fold of Christ. Never sparing himself in cold or heat, he was truly a shepherd in the hills. He died, as he lived, engaged in his Master's work. Stricken and bereaved by his sudden death, we share in the mingled grief and gratitude that prevail throughout the Diocesan Church.

Thos. F. Davies,
Bishop of Western Massachusetts.
Arthur Chase, Sec'y.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

Monday in Holy Week

THE EPISTLE

Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozah? this that is glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and they garments like him that treadeth in the winefat? I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury, it upheld me. And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth. I will mention the loving kindness of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his lovingkindnesses. For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour. In all of their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old. But they rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit; therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them. Then he remembered the days of old, Moses, and his people, saying, Where is he that brought them up out of the sea with the shepherd of his flock? where is he that put his holy Spirit within him? that led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name? that led them through the deep, as an horse in the wilderness that they should not stumble? As a beast goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest: so didst thou lead thy people, to make thyself a glorious name. Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory: where is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels, and of thy mercies toward me? are they restrained? Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou O Lord, art our father, our redeemer; thy name is from everlasting. O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardened our heart from thy fear? Return for thy servant's sake, the tribes of thine inheritance. The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary. We are thine: thou never barest rule over them; they were not called by thy name.—Isa. lxiii. 1.

Esau is Edom." He sold his birthright for a mess of pottage; but Israel was commanded not to abhor him ,for he was his brother. Into all the strange lands of the world God has gone, and God comes out with glorious apparel: "speaking in righteousness, mighty to save," He comes and goes. But woe to those of Israel who do not help Him make a royal progress through the outlandish peoples and places. All this Lent keep thinking "Jesus came that all men might be saved." "If I do not help Him in His work that He died to do, what can I expect from Him?" "I looked and there was none to help; I wondered that there was none to uphold." If we are not absorbed by the Mission work of the Church, then it is more than likely that we have not yet taken Christ into our hearts. We may be dwelling in Edom, the land of the man who goes back on his birthright to gratify his senses! If you are that type of person repent, because He died to be your Saviour, and you really are one of His people, if you are baptized, and unless you really are "drunk" with pride, you will not "lie", you will no longer deceive yourself as to your true mission in life which is to spread His Kingdom in the hearts of men.

What a true picture this Epistle is of the spiritual pilgrimages, and wanderings and experiences of a Christian soul who is a Christian only in name. And again what a true picture it is of the soul who though not yet in covenant relations with God, for one reason or another has come to know that God is his Father, though Abraham be ignorant of him, and Israel acknowledge Him not.

With what a heart rending, homesick cry does the Epistle end! Mother Church, by stopping with this cry would waken us to our deep spiritual privileges as Christians in this day and generation. Just because God puts His name on you, just because He put you under His rule of holiness is no reason that the adversary will not possess you. You have your share, your part, your utmost to accomplish. If Christ, all red with the blood of sacrifice for your sins and ignorances and neglect, looks for you to help, and to work and tread with Him in the winepresses, and finds you not, what can you expect from Him but wrath, unless you repent and do that which will show that you recognize that your privileges involve great responsibilities and that you will from henceforth try and measure up to those responsibilities?

THE GOSPEL

After two days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death. But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people. And being in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head.. And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made? for it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her. And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me. For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always. She hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her. And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray him unto them. And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray him. And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto Him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the passover? And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him. And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the goodman of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us. And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. And in the evening he cometh with the twelve. And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the dish. The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born. And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God. And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives. And Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered. But after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee. But Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I. And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, that this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all.. And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray. And he taketh with him Peter and James and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy; and saith unto them. My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch, And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him. And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt. And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldst not thou watch one hour? Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak. And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words. And when he returned, he found them asleep again, (for their eyes were heavy,) neither wist they what to answer him. And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand. And immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and the scribes and the elders. And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he; take him and lead him away safely.. And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master, master; and kissed him. And they laid their hands on him, and took him. And one of them that stood by drew a sword and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear. And Jesus answered and said unto them, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and with staves, to take me? I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not: but the scriptures must be fulfilled. And they all forsook him, and fled. And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him: and he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked. And they led Jesus away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes. And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire. And the chief priests and all the council sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death; and found none. For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together. And there arose certain, and bare false witness against him, saying, We heard him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands. But neither so did their witness agree together. And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee? But he held his peace, and answered nothing. Agin the high priest asked him, and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am,: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witness? ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death. And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, Prophesy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands. And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest: and when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazereth. But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew. And a maid say him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them. for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto. But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak. And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept. St. Mark xiv:1.

"By Thine Agony and Bloody Sweat, by Thy Cross and Passion, good Lord deliver us!" "O Saviour of the world, who by Thy Cross and Precious Blood hath redeemed us, save us and help us, we humbly beseech Thee, O Lord." How often do you read the Passion story? How often do you read it slowly and deliberately, and follow the writer of the sacred narrative as he portrays it for you? How many of you read it all through this time before you began to read there poor human fragments of thought written by the penitent hand of a sinful man? My dear reader, "there is no book on the Bible like the Bible itself", dear Dr. Pusey said, and he was right. Whatever is written here may not touch your case at all; but somewhere in the story told above is the very message which will renew our vision and serve as the strong link in that chain which is to keep you near the Cross for the rest of your days.

Notice in this story, which doubtless St. Peter told St. Mark some time when they were talking about Jesus, what different results followed the use of money, spent in connection with our Blessed Lord. The woman who loved much because she was forgiven much thought no sacrifice was too great for her Saviour, and she had the satisfaction of knowing, even before she died, that she "had wrought a good work" on her Master.

The man who loved Jesus, but who loved place and power more, bargained for and sold his soul and his future for the price of a few paupers' graves. What lessons of both inspiration and warning to those who have an opportunity to do good works for Jesus, anywhere and everywhere, and hesitate to do those works because of home needs or self-centered ambitions.

"Tarry ye here and watch." Sometimes do you feel you could do so much for our Lord, and would do so much for Him if only you were differently circumstanced? Perhaps, through your circumstances, Jesus is saying, "Tarry here and watch" "Keep the home fires burning", but "watch and pray," and be ready to "throw out the life line, for some one is sinking today.

"Watch and pray." What a wonderful missionary sermon is that! Keep your eyes open; know what you want to pray for; do not give blindly; look over all the field, and give your bit, or your all, intelligently, and with the spirit of Him who ever prayed with submission, but also with the desire always to co-operate with His Father's plans.

"They forsook Him and fled." Can't you picture St. Mark saying to St. Peter, when he was feeling so deeply his own falling away from his professions of loyalty, Don't you remember, Petros, how I, too, behaved that night? How I turned coward when they laid hands on me"? Dear reader, "let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall"! Read the Passion story over every Friday of your life, and you will find therein enough stimulus to help you keep the weekly anniversary of your Saviour's death in a fitting and abstemious manner. The cost of the denials which you and your household could make in your Friday's bill of fare might well be dedicated to a holy cross offering which should be use to keep this Goswhich should be used to keep this Gospel fresh in some other part of the world. "I loked and there was none to help." Dear Saviour, say this not of me. Jesus, keep me near the cross! Keep me there as long as I am in the flesh!

"Follow me," says Jesus. In this story see Peter following Jesus afar off. That was the beginning of a following which ended in cursing and swearing and denial. But wasn't it wonderful that God let Peter keep his mind and memory? for when "he thought thereon, he wept". And, unlike Esau, who wept in vain for forgiveness, Peter's tears brought Peter to that mind where he began to be an Apostle not only to the Jew, but also to the Gentile. Let your sorrow for your sin drive you to do something to bring home to some other sinner the good news of God's forgiveness.

Who Should Keep Lent?

The Church of God is burdened with the responsibility of lifting the world out of its sins and its follies and its failings to serve Christ. She is trying during this season to lead as many as will heed her voice into the wilderness with Jesus Christ, where they may follow His example and learn lessons that will make them better men and women. It is a loving invitation she extends, full of earnest longing for the good of souls.

The Church ought to have the help of every noble man and woman. She has the right to claim the strong support of every one on whose brow has been impressed the sign of the cross, and who calmly and earnestly has knelt before the altar to ask the blessing of God's chief pastor upon Confirmation vows.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

AN EVENING PRAYER FOR WAR TIME

O GOD, who never sleepest and art never weary,
Have mercy upon those who watch tonight;
On the sentry that he may be alert,
On those who command that they may be strengthened with counsel,
On the sick that they may obtain sleep,
On the wounded that they may obtain ease,
On the faint-hearted, that they may find hope again,
On the light-hearted, lest they forget Thee,
On the dying that they may find peace,
On the dead that they may have rest,
On the sinful that they may turn again,
And save them and us, O good Lord,
In Jesus name. Amen.

Prayer may not be the whole of Religion, but it is the touchstone of it. All religion must come by the test of prayer, for in prayer the soul maps out the course it has taken and the journey it has yet to take, reviews the past and the future in the light of the presence of God.

A BBIDDING PRAYER FOR LENT

(Suggested by the Bishop of Vermont.)

Let us pray for a devout observance of the Lenten season; for the acceptance of all prayers and spiritual exercises, of fasting and self-discipline;

of alms and works of mercy;

for a blessing on all Lenten ministrations, to the awakening of the careless,

the recovery of the fallen,
the restoration of the penitent,
the succor of the tempted,
the reclaiming of those who are in error,
the guidance of the doubtful and perplexed,
the reconcilation of any who are variance, the strengthening of the faithful,
the consolation of those in sorrow or suffering;

for due preparation for the Sacraments;

that dying with Christ to sin we may with Him rise to newness of life.

MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER

Catechism: To be able to find the places in Morning and Evening Prayer (Candidates should be required to tell the instructor how to go through the service.)

Prop. 1. Public Worship.

The religious world is divided into two camps on the subject of worship.

Some think that public prayer should be extemporaneous because they say such worship comes from the heart; the other camp has a prayer book out of which the services are read by the minister and followed by the people. Let us note several things about this.

(a) From the days of Abraham to the present time fully 95 per cent of those who have worshipped God, using the Bible for their authority, have used forms of prayer, or a liturgy.

The Jews, Christ and the Apostles, and the Christian Church for 15 centuries all worshipped God in this way.

Since the Reformation, all Greek, Roman and Anglican Catholics, as well as most lodges and fraternities that are based on the Bible, have used a liturgy.

The Protestant bodies who since the Reformation have used extempore worship form a small proportion of Christians in their own time and a very small proportion if we consider all the centuries in which Jehovah has been worshipped.

(b) Moreover, Christ, when He attended the synagogue worship, where extemporaneous prayers were sometimes used, although the worship of the synagogue was properly liturgical, makes this comment on the practice of the Pharisees:

"And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily, I say unto you, they have their reward. * * * * * After this manner, therefore, pray ye, 'Our Father which art in Heaven, etc.'" St. Matt. vi:5 and 9.

That is, our Lord gave to the disciples a set form of prayer to be used by them, known as the Lord's Prayer.

If it is wrong to use set forms of prayer, then our Lord was mistaken in giving us a set form of prayer which the Church has habitually used.

(c) Moreover, the use of private prayer in public has proven unsatisfactory, for the great majority of Protestant bodies are gradually introducing a liturgical service in their public worship. But they originally separated from the Church because they objected to set forms of prayer.

Prop. 2. Public Worship.

What is public worship?

"He that giveth me thanks and praise, he honoreth me."

Public prayer is honornig God, and has a different purpose from private prayer.

To illustrate this:

Supposing you were on familiar terms with a king and in private conversation you conversed with him in a familiar manner; would that justify you in going into the throne-room and addressing him familiarly in public?

No, you would not presume upon your intimacy in a public audience.

The purpose of private prayer is to enter into real personal relations with God as your Father The purpose of public worship, which is open to all men, is to honor the King.

This you do not do by talking to the King as though he were your next friend around the corner.

Keep in mind the real purpose of public worship, which is not to emphasize your own piety, but God's honor.

Prop. 3. Morning and Evening Prayer.

These services have each the same order. Note:

I. Page 1-3. Sentences from Holy Scripture, often suitable for a special Season, as noted in the margin. These form the keynote of the service that follows (Evening Prayer, pp. 16-19.)

II. Page 3-5. Service of preparation, consisting:

(a) (page3) of an Exhortation setting forth the purposes of Morning Prayer (E. P. pp. 19-20). In Evening Prayer a short introduction may be used instead (top of pp. 19).

(b) (P. 4) of a General Confession and a Declaration of Absolution, signifying that before entering God's presence, we acknowledge our sin and receive His promise of pardon (E. P. pp. 19-20). There is a short form of absolution that is sometimes used, but this shorter form is generally used only in the Communion office.

(c) The Lord's Prayer, which is the liturgical introduction of all worship.

III. Psalms (pp. 6 and pp. 329-508), or the worship of the Old Testament into which we read the Christian meaning and at the end of which we append the Gloria Patri in order to give it a distinctively Christian meaning.

In Morning Prayer the first psalm is called the Venite, which is always said or sung before the other Psalms are read. In Evening Prayer there is no psalm or canticle that precedes the regular psalms.

The Psalms or Psalter is divided into 30 parts, one for each day of the month, and each daily part is subdivided into morning and evening psalms.

The psalms are read either in alternate verses, or else by the minister reading to the (:) and the congregation reading the other half of the verse. The latter method seems preferable, but the former method is easier and therefore usually followed.

IV. The Lessons and Canticles, (pp. 7-11). Having read the psalms of David, we continue in the Old Covenant by reading first a lesson from the Old Testament (followed by the Te Deum or Benedicite); and then pass on in historical order to a New Testament lesson (followed by the Benedictus or a hymn). (In E. P. pp. 22-24.)

V. The Creed (pp. 11-12). Thus the worshipper passes from the Old to the New, and then to his own confession of faith, which is made by reciting one of the Creeds (usually the Apostle's Creed). (In E. P. pp. 25-26).

VI. After the Creed, which is the climax of Morning and Evening Prayer, we say the Versicles (p. 13) (In E. P. p. 26) followed by the Collect for the day (pp. 52-220), which follows the days of the Christian year. After the Collect for the day, come the regular prayers, for Morning Prayer (p. 13-16); for Evening Prayer (pp. 27-29).

QUESTIONS

1. Into what two camps are Christians divided?
2. What proportion of those who have worshipped Jehovah have used a liturgy?
3. What arguments from Holy Scripture for using a set form of prayer?
4. What is the difference between public and private prayer?
5. Give the different parts of Morning and Evening Prayer.
6. What is the climax of these services and how are they lead up to?

The Epistle to The Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

NO. XXIV.

Vs. 14. Wherefore, he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead and Christ shall give thee light.

Aquinas: Awake. These words are not found anywhere else in these exact words, but express the essence of Isa. lx:1, where the Latin reads, Rise, be enlightened, O Jerusalem, for thy light is come. From the dead means from the sleep of sin, which is spiritual death.

Jerome: Christ shall give thee light. Christ shall shine upon thee and impart to thee the Divine light, of which He is the possessor or bearer.

Moule: The thought of being light in the Lord runs through the passage. It is a light consequent upon awaking and arising.

Theophylact: When one has been raised up from sin, then Christ will shine upon him just as the sun will shine upon those who have roused up from sleep.

Sadler: If we wake out of sleep and arise from our deathlike slumbers, it is no dim light that will shine upon us, no other than Christ Himself shall dispel our darkness.

Vs. 15. See that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise.

Observe how the Christian is always to keep his eyes open. No guidance is promised which shall dispense with patient care and watchfulness.

Wordsworth: See to it, therefore, how ye fulfill the precept of walking accurately in the straight line of Christian duty.

Ellicott: Not as unwise. Both the strictness of their walk and the way in which that strictness was to be shown, were to reflect the spirit of wise men, and not of fools.

Moule: Spiritually unwise—blind to spiritual facts and consequences.

Vs. 16. Redeeming the time, because the days are evil.

Ellicott: Redeeming the time. The expression seems simply to denote that we are to make a wise use of our circumstances for our own good and that of others, and, as it were, like prudent merchants, to buy up the fitting season for so doing.

Since time is a talent given us by God, it must be given us for some good purpose, and days are misspent when not used for good—days are evil in which no good has been accomplished.

Vs. 17. Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is.

Moule: Be ye not unwise. Let not unwatchfulness pull you down.

Meyer: Unwise, i. e., those who do not use the mind aright, viz: for the moral understanding of the mind of Christ.

Blunt: A strong word. It may refer to the condition of those taking part in heathen mysteries, a condition in which they were like men who had gone out of their senses.

Sadler: The most senseless people are those who have no anxiety respecting the will of Him who created them and for whose pleasure they are and were created.

Vs. 18. And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit.

Bengal: Be not drunk with wine. He fitly follows up with a warning against impurity, with a warning against drunkenness.

Whitby: Drunk with wine, as the heathen used to be in their religious rites, especially in their Bacchanalia.

Meyer: Excess, wherein is contained debauchery, i. e., dissolute behavior.

Moule: The miserable exaltation of strong drink annuls the holy bonds of conscience with fatal ease and certainty.

Eadie: Be ye filled with the Spirit, that is, the Holy Spirit. If Christians are so filled with the Spirit they feel no appetite for debasing and material stimulants.

Vs. 19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord.

Olshausen: Psalms. The Psalms of the Old Testament only.

Ellicott: A sacred song of the character similar to that of the Psalms

Theocritus: A vocal melody.

Gore: A reference to the antiphonal chanting of Christians as reported by Pliny the younger in his letter to Trajan.

Ellicott: Songs, more especially of praise, whether to Christ or God (c. f. Acts xvi:25; Heb. ii:12).

Moule: The earliest known Christian hymn is a noble Greek hymn in anapaestic metre, to the Son of God, by St. Clement of Alexandria in the middle of the Third century.

Meyer: Spiritual songs defines the songs as proceeding from the Holy Spirit.

Theodoret: Melody. Not only does he make melody in his heart who moves his tongue, but he who excites his mind to the understanding of the things said.

THOUGHT THE SKY WAS FALLING DOWN!

A POPULAR SCIENTIFIC CONSIDERATION OF ASTRONIMICAL REFERENCES IN THE BIBLE

The Rev. James Henry Young, D. D.

The phenomenon of "shooting stars" is familiar to every one, who is out much at night; and the larger fire balls, or meteors, are of sufficiently frequent occurrence that each one has either seen one, or heard someone describe one. The best description in literature is that given by the poet Virgil "there was a sudden peal as of thunder on the left, and a brilliant star slid from the sky, through the darkness, leaving a glowing trail. We watched it glide over the roofs of the houses, and bury itself in the forests of Mt. Ida. The trail glowed like a long furrow and all the air smelled of sulphur."

Meteors are frequently mentioned in the Bible. In Rev. 8:10, "I saw a great star fall from heaven." The author's imagery is drawn from some occurrence as that which Virgil described. Rev. 9:1, he speaks of a star which falls from heaven to earth. These great meteors seem always to strike the earth just a little beyond the observer, whereas in reality they are either consumed in the air, or burst, and their fragments only reach the earth. They seem to fall a few miles away, because they pass below the horizon; just as the sun in setting seems to plunge into the sea. In Acts 19:35, we read of the "image of the great Goddess Diana which fell down from Jupiter" and was treasured in the temple of Diana at Ephesus. This was no doubt a genuine piece of meteoric iron which had been seen to fall, and was picked up while its identity was certain. A good imagination could make out a resemblance to the female form. Meteors are of course not stars, the stars are suns like our own, or larger. But that meteors do come to the earth from outside space has been abundantly proven. Seven cases are known where the stone fell close enough to an observer to be located while still hot. Fragments from the interior of large meteors, which had burst, have been picked up while still having the temperature of outside space, over two hundred degrees below zero. This image of Diana would be today a scientific specimen of considerable value.

But there is another class of meteors of much more common occurrence, the so-called shooting stars which are much fainter and disappear after a short path through the sky. These are small meteors, from the size of a grain of sand to a cherry stone; and are totally consumed miles above the earth by the friction of the atmosphere. On rare occasions these shooting stars occur in such numbers as to constitute a shower. In November, 1833, and again in 1866 the sky seemed as full of them as of snow flakes in a storm. The terror caused by the shower was extreme; people thought that the sky was falling down, and that the world was coming to an end. Now we know that these showers are connected with certain comets which have disappeared. As the shower occurs when the earth crosses the orbit of the comet, it is supposed that the comet has disintegrated into the shower of meteors.

That such showers were observed in Bible times seems evident from references to the stars of heaven falling. In Daniel 8:10, and in Joel 2:10 and 3:15 the reference is probable, yet not sure. In the New Testament the references are clear "the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Our Lord does not mean that there shall be showers of meteors but He is using the terror which such showers incite, to symbolize the terror which men shall feel as His great day approaches. In the circumstances of the present war men's hearts have failed them from fear, and for looking after the things that are coming on the earth." The powers of heaven have seemed to be shaken and men's faith in God has been weakened. Because our feelings are so exactly described by His language we may be sure that the war will result in His coming to earth to reign in greater power and glory.

Every-Day Religion

By the Rev. Jas. E. Freeman, D. D.

THE CROSS

Writing to an early Church, the Apostle Paul declared that, "The preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are saved it is the power of God".

Originally an instrument of torture and a badge of infamy and shame, the Cross has been lifted into a place of pre-eminence and distinction as a symbol of our salvation. Today, 30 nations, provinces and cities use the Cross as a symbol upon their State and National standards, and in our own navy there is but one flag that ever flies above the national colors upon our men-of-war—it is the little flag with the white cross upon it that breaks from the maintop when Divine service is held for Uncle Sam's sailors.

To those who have no apprehension of the significance of the Cross and its relation to their lives, it must seem as foolishness, but to those who recognize that it is the conspicuous symbol of the world's faith in Him who was crucified thereon, it stands for salvation and the triumphs of character. After all, it is not some remote and far-away symbol, but an intimate and ever-present one. Said a German poet:

"The Cross on Golgotha can never save thy soul—
The Cross in thine own heart alone can make thee whole."

To the man or woman who has accepted this Divine standard that witnesses at once to sacrifice and service, it means power, the imparted power of the world's Redeemer. Wherever we may go, in any part of the civilized, or, for that matter, the uncivilized world, there this holy symbol has its place. It is wrought into jeweled forms, and, again, it is cast in iron as the badge of imperial honor. Round the world for the days of this week, in every language, there will be sung and said the mighty messages that the Cross teaches. Again, mankind will bow in lowly reverence before the uplifted Christ, in fulfillment of his own spoken word: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me".

Has there ever been a time when the Cross has meant more to humanity than it does today? Before it, selfishness and self-interest give place to sacrifice and service. No man or woman who recognizes this Divine symbol but must assume the obligations it implies. It is in the spirit of this masterful symbol of the faith, yes, it is in the presence of Him who is the highest approximation to mankind of all that is Divine and holy, that we prostrate ourselves again, and with hearts rendered sensitive to its high claims, we rededicate ourselves to the service of the lowly Nazarene, and reconsecrate ourselves to an unselfish service to our fellows.—Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

We are bound to believe that there is a significance in Lent this year that it has not had in our generation. There is something in it analogous to the experience our youth are now having in the great training camps of the country. They have passed out of civil life into the exacting discipline and severe training of military life. For what purpose? To equip and prepare them for the harder service of the coming days. Lent may very properly be called the disciplinary and training period in each year, wherein the Church invites its children to give larger heed to those things that make for high moral and spiritual development. It is the Church's call to a consideration of life's great essentials, its fundamentals. It is, furthermore, a call for the clarifying of our vision and the enriching of our minds with those things that have to do with the great issues of life itself. Sometimes Lent is honored in the breach rather than the observance. It is made the subject of flippant jest and cartoon, but we can hardly think that it will be so treated this year.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

The handsome new Rectory of St. Paul's Church, Brookings, S. D., is completed and is now occupied by the Rector, the Rev. Paul Roberts, and his family.

A united campaign of instruction and every-member canvas for Missions will be made by the several Parishes in St. Louis, Mo., during the week ending on Sunday, March 3rd.

"The Chimes of Normandy" was recently given under the direction of the Men's Club of St. Luke's Church, Mechanicsville, N. Y., for the benefit of the local Chapter of the Red Cross society.

The congregation of St. Peter's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., has accepted an invitation to worship at St. Ann's Church, that city. It is expected that an amalgamation of the two Parishes will take place at an early date.

"The Men's Service League" is the name of a new organization in St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, Tenn. The object of the league is the improvement of the spiritual, mental and social conditions of men, emphasizing co-operation with other existing organizations of the Church.

A small boy in St. Mary's Parish, St. Paul, Minn., as yet small enough to wear a bib at the table, surveyed the dimensions of one supplied to him lately somewhat carefully and then remarked, "I thee we are Hoovering on napkins too." The same boy awoke in the middle of the night to tell his mother that he was "Hoovering" by hanging coat and knickers on the same peg.

At a meeting of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, Diocese of Michigan City, held at Howe School, Howe, Ind., plans were formulated for a Summer School for Church School teachers, and others interested in Church work, to be held at Vawter Park, Lake Wawasee for one week, from June 25th to July 2ud.

Mr. E. Harrison Yelverton, Vice Consul of the United States at London, Eng., has presented his Parish, St. Stephen's Church, Goldsboro, N. C., two beautiful hand-wrought antique Church lanterns made of brass, which are supposed to be several hundred years old. One of the lanterns has been hung at the stairway in the tower vestibule and the other in the gallery at the entrance of the Church.

An earnest Churchwoman recently brought nine children to the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Chicago, for baptism. One man was present, says the Diocese of Chicago, to see his little boy baptized and was so affected by the service that he wrote the good woman a long letter, in which he told her that his attendance at that baptismal service was the first time he had been inside of a Church in eighteenyears.

The Church of the Epiphany, Chicago, has been carrying on a continuous campaign for "slacker Episcopalians" which is proving very successful. The Rector, the Rev. H. W. Prince, publishes an attractive weekly booklet of twelve pages which is mailed and distributed to a large number of Episcopalians in the section of the city in which the Church is located, whose names are secured by a group of young men and women distributors. The booklet contains a perforated blank to be signed by people who have practically ceased to be regular Church-goers.

The men of Christ Church, Oil City, Penn., are actively engaged in Red Cross work. One committee is making the large bandages and their work has proved very satisfactory to the local Red Cross chapter. The second committee has had charge of the moving of boxes and other heavy work of the chapter. The third committee has taken over the work of cutting the thick paper pads that are used in the manufacture of the cot quilts of the Red Cross, and the fourth committee is composed of those who have volunteered to write to soldiers who are on the honor roll of the Parish.

The annual mid-winter dinner for the alumni of the Cambridge Theological School was held on Tuesday evening, February 5th. The principal address was given by Dr. A. H. McGiffert, President of Union Theological Seminary, on the topic, "The Church and the War." Other speakers were the Rev. Philemon F. Sturgis of the class of 1900, Rector of Grace Church, Providence, and the Rev. Wm F. Packer of the class of 1901, Rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Winchester. The students of the School were the guests of the alumni. On the following Wednesday a quiet day was conducted for the alumni by the Rev. Edward T. Sullivan, of the class of 1892.

Lent comes now as an opportunity for doing these things (Red Cross work) and not leaving so much of the other things undone (Church work, attendance at prayers, meditations), says the Rev. Stanley S. Kilbourne, Rector of Gethsemane Church, Minneapolis, Minn. Lent is always a time of extraordinary devotion and never in our lives have we had to make such an effort as will be necessary this year to keep the season properly. Shall we try to use a right judgment in all things—to sew but not to the point of peevishness, to knit, but not to the point of irritability, to make bandages, but not to the point of breaking down. More socks will be made and compresses folded if care is taken to avoid the danger point of nervous exhaustion. And much more of permanent value will be accomplished if we keep faithful in doing the usual things of our religious life.

"There are golden sentences in the sermon preached by the Right Reverend Irving P. Johnson on the occasion of the consecration of the Missionary Bishop of Salina, says The New York Churchman, in an extended editorial comment upon the sermon, a liberal quotation from which appeared in another column, and which was published in full in a recent number of THE WITNESS. "We know of no pro nouncement by those with authority to speak," continues the editorial, "that seems to us more prophetic of the new time that is upon the American Church and upon Christianity everywhere. Bishop Johnson's sermon gives wings to the imagination. He has drawn with power the portrait of a Bishop, which recalls neither the Anglican nor the Italian tradition, but one which we are sure would command the reverence and esteem of the new and better democracy that is to come out of the War, and for which the whole Church is solemnly praying today. Is there anything novel in such a definition of the episcopal office? It has a winning likeness to the New Testament and the Prayer Book.....We are grateful to Bishop Johnson for the most significant utterance which we have read in many a day. The ideal he sets forth of the episcopal office is so commanding, so apostolic, that, were it our pattern, an election to the episcopate would be a holy call to sacrifice which no one would dare to refuse.

"A Parish of the Household of God is a wonderful, and most interesting thing," writes the Rev. Dr. Haupt of St. Paul. "It is filled with the most delightful associations. Here good fellowship abounds. It is a community banded together to attain the highest ideals, to uplift society, and make the world a better place to live in. It is sometimes like a sleeping lion, monarch of the forest, but limp and slumbering, with great latent powers, but unused. Oh, for the ability to awaken the lion, and call forth the full strength of the Parish. We have our problems, and our difficulties, we would be lifeless if we did not. As the Nation calls upon us all to do our part, so the Master calls us to work in His vineyard. The personal loyalty of all the members of a Parish would double its power in the community as a spiritual and uplifting force. No man can measure the power or extent of personal influence."

Personal Mention

The Rev. J. A. TenBroeck, Rector of Christ Church, Calumet, Mich., has been appointed Chaplain of a Michigan State Cavalry Regiment.

Mr. H. B. Newman, lay reader of St. Matthew's Church, Tulsa, Okla., was recently presented a gold cross by the congregation as a token of their appreciation of the valuable services he has rendered the Parish.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick F. Reese, D. D., Bishop of Georgia, officiated and preached the sermon at the institution of the Rev. John Moore Walker as Rector of St. Paul's Church, Albany, Ga., on Sexagesima Sunday, February 3rd.

The Rev. W. S. Poynor, Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Birmingham, Ala., has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Columbia, S. C., and will assume charge of his new field about the middle of March.

The Rev. Frank Roundenbush, curate in St. John's Parish, Los Angeles, Cal., has received an appointment as Chaplain, by the Church War Commission, and is now serving as such at Camp Carney.

The Rev. Dr. C. B. Wilmar, Rector of St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, Ga., was recently elected President of the Evangelical Ministers' Association of that city.

The Rev. Dr. Frederick W. Clampett, Rector of Trinity Church, San Francisco, Cal., has been tendered the Chaplaincy of "The Grizzlies," California's crack regiment of field artillery now training at Camp Carney, near San Diego. It is understood that Dr. Clampett will accept and that his Parish will grant him leave of absence during the period of the war. Dr. Clampett recently celebrated the close of his eighteenth year as Rector of Trinity Church. In 1916 he spent three months on the Western battle fronts in France and Belgium.

Sister Frances, who had charge of St. Mary's Home for Children, Chicago, about twenty years, has retired from active service. Bishop Anderson in commenting upon her retirement writes: "The many friends of Sister Frances, thankful for her long and faithful service in St. Mary's Home, and full of regret that her increasing age and responsibilities make her retirement necessary, will follow her with affection and sympathy and wish her rest and quiet after her long and arduous labors."

The Rev. Dr. James S. Holland, Rector of Christ Church, Yonkers, N. Y., has accepted a call to become the Rector of St. Paul's Church, Glen Cove, L. I., and will assume his new duties at an early date. Dr. Holland spent the early part of his life in Missouri and for a time practiced medicine there. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war in 1898 he was commissioned a Lieutenant in the Medical Corps and served in the camp at Chickamauga.

Sexagesima Sunday marked the completion of three years in the rectorship of St. Mark's Church, Coldwater, Mich., by the Rev. John Hewitt. A local paper states that in the three years Mr. Hewitt has endeared himself to his parishioners and has won and held the respect of many people outside of the Church by his uniform kindness and fair minded position on many issues, and his broad minded appreciation of every man's right to his own opinion while maintaining an unequivocal standard and position personally.

The President and Mrs. Wilson attended the ball given in Washington, D. C., at the Willard, on Saturday evening, February 9th, for the benefit of the Episcopal Home for Children, and occupied a box. Mrs. Wilson's name headed a list of distinguished patronesses.

"If after Kirk ye bide a wee
There's some wad like to speak to ye.
If after Kirk ye rise and flee
We'll all seem cold and stiff to ye.
The one that's in the seat wi' ye
Is stranger here than ye may be.
All here has got their fears and cares
Add your soul unto their prayers,
Be ye an angel unawares."

Startling Shortage in the Quality and Quantity of Clergymen

The appeal of the Church Club of the Diocese of Chicago on behalf of the Western Theological Seminary for students and for funds, it is said by those having the matter in charge, has raised the question at once in the minds of many whether the appeal is opportune at the present time, and the following answer is given: We quote in part the answer given:

The question implies a doubt whether every virile young man having the qualities necessary for a Candidate for Holy Orders should not be enlisted in the Army or Navy, or in some departmental work in connection with the war; and whether the funds which are asked for towards the education of such men as are already engaged in Theological studies, and such as are solicited to begin their preparation for Holy Orders, should not be devoted to the maintenance of the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., or Church activities in camp and field.

The answer to these difficulties is the answer to the question whether the maintenance and propagation of the Christian religion and Christian morals in the world at large can under any conditions be made secondary in the minds of Christians to any other interests whatever.

We do not expect the war to last for more than two or three years. What shall be the condition of the Church at its conclusion? Shall it be prepared or unprepared to meet the tremendous crisis which will be experienced in the beginning of the reconstruction period? A Church weak at the roots, short of Clergymen, devoid of resources, not only for a ministry, but for the education of men to become ministers, would witness to a culpable lack of statesmanlike foresightedness and preparedness on the part of her agents.

For many years Christian people have been increasingly alarmed at the evident relaxation of the hold of organized religion upon the community. In this decadence of power of the Church it has been feared that one great source of weakness is the failure of Churchmen to provide a supply of Clergymen in sufficient number and adequately educated to meet the demands of the times.

During the past five years from the Atlantic to the Pacific some who have been in a position to investigate the matter locally or more broadly, have assured us that the Church has drifted into a crisis in the matter of the supply of "fit men to serve" in the Sacred Ministry. Entirely ignoring the quality, even the quantity of Clergymen and of Candidates for Holy Orders is startlingly inadequate. This appears from the following data:

Parishes and Missions in the United States and Foreign Fields 8,611

Clergymen of the Church in the United States and Foreign Fields, 5,895

Apparent shortage of Clergymen 2,716

This shortage has increased steadily for many years.

(There are 115 Bishops, and 650 Priests over 64 years of age included in this computation, besides other "non-parochial clergy;" and also an unknown number of missions that cannot now support a Clergyman. Scores of small missions would rapidly develop into self-supporting Parishes if they could secure a Priest.)

Probable immediate imperative demand for Clergymen, ... 1,000

Annual supply through Theological Seminaries 1.00

Annual supply hrough irregular sources 60

160

Annual loss by Death and Deposition (1916) 139

Net annual increase of Clergymen 21

Number of our Clergy in army and navy ..... over 300

The communicants of the Church have increased 63 per cent faster than the Clergy during the past 30 years.

Most searching, upon your knees and with open Bible in hand;—That you may find out your secret and besetting sins, your failings, temptations, dangers; That you may judge yourself by the rule of God's law to ascertain your real spiritual condition, and learn how poorly or how well you preserve your relations to God and obey His voice;—To understand where Satan dwells in your nature, that you may drive him forth from his hiding place and expel him from your heart.

Our Book Table

About Christmas time there came from the press of E. P. Dutton Company a volume of recent sermons by the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., Rector of St. Thomas' Parish, New York City. It bears the simple title of "The High Call," and is a series of discourses concerning such subjects as "Armenian Ideals and the Great War," "The Sword of Justice," "A Charge to Soldiers Enlisted in the King's Army," "Practical Patriotism," "Make Democracy Safe for the World," etc. It is dedicated "To my son, Ernest Van Rensselaer Stires, in France with the American Ambulance Field Service from May to October, 1917, and to the one hundred and fifty-one men of St. Thomas' Parish now in the national service on land, on the sea, and in the air." It is worthy of note that this son, a Harvard college boy not yet nineteen years old, was distinguished at the front for his valor last summer, and was invalided home with a severe wound on the hand. He is now back at college.

The sermons were delivered in St. Thomas', Fifth Avenue and 53rd St. between February 18th and November 11th of last year, and appearing in newspapers or pamphlet form, were of national influence in bringing the United States into what the speaker felt was a patriotically necessary war, and had much to do with shaping its policies of preparation and making clear its statement of international purpose. They reveal the mind of a lover of international righteousness, with statesman-like grasp of its war situation and more than one Ambassador and Senator have recorded their appreciation of this larger quality as they heard or read the words of the preacher.

The reader of the sermons will miss their greatest charm, the graciously facsinating personality of the man himself, and the unusually fine and effective manner of pulpit delivery. A New York voice trainer of the first importance, after hearing Dr. Stires, said, "There is no one in New York who can use his voice so perfectly as he can." The anecdotes and the quoted poems may look almost intrusive in its printed page, but to hear them from the preacher himself was to have the really strong points they illustrated made all the stronger and, some times, planting the ideas deeply in the heart because of the thrill of the moment. In other words, Dr. Stires belongs to the style of preacher represented by a George Whitfield rather than that of a Mozley or a Liddon, and there are reasons enough to believe that, for the time and the occasion, the less permanent style is the more efficient and praiseworthy. Immediate action was certainly needed in America last winter, and Dr. Stires was one of a half dozen or so voices most powerfully effective in bringing a halting nation to a realization of the stern duty of the hour. No work could be greater. The sermons should have been heard by all, and it is well that they are preserved as a record of how one gracious Christian heard "The High Call" and repeated it aloud and helpfully to multitudes of others able to put it into service.

There are some men in orders who are sometimes "men in Mufti" in more senses than one. They are Priests now, and laymen then. They are ministers part of the time, but Stires is always a minister. There are doubtless people who do not like this, but the devout believer rejoices that at least once in awhile there are men of God who never even momentarily forget that they are to be first, last and all the time, men of God.

The Rt. Rev. Paul Jones, having offered to do any work at the Church Missions House or in the field that the Board of Missions might desire, the Board at its meeting on February 6th authorized the officers to make such arrangements as might be practicable to secure Bishop Jones' assistance for work at the Church Missions House until April 10th, when it is expected that the House of Bishops will meet to consider his resignation as Bishop of Utah.

CHAPLAINS AND THE WAR COMMISSION

We have heard quite a little comment from folks in response to the request of the War Commission of this Church for a Chaplain's fund, to the effect that it is an impertinence for the Church to raise a fund when the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross are the official agents of the government for the ministrations to our young men.

Of course a U. S. Chaplain is also an official of the government, in fact more closely connected with the government than either of the others, but for various reasons his importance has been minimized and his incompetency exaggerated. He was once in politics and by wire pulling and general indifference a good many lame and halt and blind were appointed Chaplains, to the great detriment of the service.

Let me quote two men who certainly ought to know the value of Chaplains and Christian character in this present war.

The first is the testimony of General Pershing in the press dispatches of Feb. 14th, to this effect:

"While the conduct of the Expeditionary Forces has been excellent, fortitude, born of great courage and lofty spiritual ideals, are required to overcome entirely conditions in France."

And General Pershing sends an urgent request that there may be three Chaplains in each regiment for the fostering of this spirit.

The other is the reply of General Byng, the hero of Cambrai, when asked whether the Christians fought better than the others at the Front. "Yes, I depend upon the young men who have been reared in Church going homes to do the best work."

When further asked if there was any difference between different kinds of Christians, said, "No, the Irish Catholic as well as the Anglican and Protestant fight like h—l."

But there is a curious idea abroad that when you have knitted and made him warm, and when you have given a Y. M. C. A. hut and made him comfortable, and when you have sent him smokes and made him happy, that you have done your duty.

Even a criminal sentenced to be hung is entitled to a Chaplain, and it would be a barbarous government like the Prussians, which would refuse this boon. We are sending our young men out to fight our wars; to be shot for our sake; and there are men brutal enough to be indifferent as to whether the young man has a Chaplain to say a prayer or to whisper a word of comfort as his soul takes flight.

Yes, the government appoints Chaplains, but it gives them no purse, and so all honor to our War Commission, which is seeing that each Chaplain has the wherewithal to work.

When one considers that the average cantonment is a city of 40,000 souls and ten miles square, it is certainly important that the man who has to give spiritual ideals should be able to get from place to place. Frequently this auto is the only one in camp that can be used on various works of mercy. Moreover, in such a place as Fort Dodge, we will find fully a thousand boys, belonging to the Church, exposed to many temptations and without the services of the Church, except as the Commission sends a civilian Chaplain, who must be paid by the Commission, to minister to these boys.

The Church that would forsake its own under these circumstances is unworthy of its charter, and should shut its doors to the selfish ones who fancy they are gaining eternal life.

We must keep in touch with our boys at the Front or lose their respect.

The Roman Catholics are at the front in this particular, all honor to them; and in many a camp and cantonment, where we have no Chaplain of our own, he is the only one at the bedside of your boy or mine.

Let us then make up cheerfully whatever is lacking in the equipment of the War Commission for surrounding our boys with spiritual ideals before the battle and with spiritual comfort after the fight is over.

This is a war of ideals, and the Christian Church is the one dynamo that can furnish and sustain our boys at the Front in these ideals. There are those who have given generously to every other movement and niggardly to this. Let them study the words of General Pershing.

Nor does the Y. M. C. A. attempt to do the work of Chaplains, nor do its Secretaries act as Chaplains.

The Chaplain is the one man at the Front with a spiritual message to your boy and mine; there are a score at the Front and at the rear with another message to tear down the spiritual fabric, that your home has reared.

It is the devil's own doctrine, to deprive the boy at the Front of such spiritual leadership as he will follow, because it will be tended to somehow.

He is entitled by virtue of his supreme sacrifice to the ministrations which you enjoy and which you may aid him to secure by the payment of a few dollars.

Death of a Priest Once Active in Reform Movements

The Rev. Henry Lewis Foote, at one time well known throughout the West as an active worker in reform movements, and in later years Rector of several Parishes in the East, died on Thursday, Jan. 31, at his home in Marblehead, Mass. He graduated from the General Theological Seminary in 1868 and was ordained a Deacon that year by Bishop Potter and advanced to the Priesthood the following year by Bishop Tuttle. He was a deputy to the General Convention from the Diocese of West Missouri in 1892. The Boston Transcript gives the following account of his eventful life:

"The Rev. Mr. Foote was born at Roxbury, Conn., on May 2, 1845, son of the Rev. George L. and Merinna (Tuttle) Foote. His first Parish was at Salt Lake City, Utah, where his vigorous opposition to the Mormon teachings and his untiring activities as a foe of vice, brought him a reputation which spread throughout the West and led to calls from many other of the crude settlements of that region. He accepted a call to Boise City, Idaho, remaining there for two years, and leaving the community well cleaned up of vice, when he went to a San Francisco Church.

"He was Rector of a Stockton, Cal., Parish for four and a half years before going to the scene of his most spectacular reform efforts at Carson City, Nev., where from 1876 to 1878 he was Rector of St. Peter's Church. His chief activities there were against the gamblers, and he succeeded in effecting a marked improvement in the morals of the community.

"The Rev. Mr. Foote came East to Clinton in 1878, going from there to Holyoke for eight years before going to St. Michael's, in Marblehead, in 1895. In 1906 he went to South Groveland, and then to Pinehurst, which Rectorship he resigned to take up his home in retirement at Devereux. His wife, who is the daughter of Rt. Rev. Dr. Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, survives him."

Can You Answer These Questions?

The Standing Committee on Missions of the Province of Washington addressed a strong letter to the men of the Parish suggesting that during Lent one hour each week be spent by men in groups, large or small, in every Parish and Mission in the Province to acquaint themselves with world conditions and their bearing on Christian Missions. The letter states that "We are paying the bills for a small army of workers, 2,800 and more", and asks the questions: "What are they doing in the various so-called Mission fields? How do present world conditions affect them? Has their work any influence on the great movements of today, especially in the Far East? You, as an intelligent Christian and Churchman ought to be able to answer these questions. Can you?" Some of our busiest laymen, finding how interesting the subject of modern Missions is, are extending their luncheon hour once a week to discuss this subject. Others meet down town after office hours. Others, at the home of one of the group on a week day evening. Others, again, at the Rectory, Church or Parish House, as is locally most convenient, on a week day evening, or before or after service on Sunday. The leader of such a group needs no special training. His duty is rather to start and direct the general discussion of the subject. The "When and How of Missions" and "Then and Now" are recommended by the committee for use in such classes. A copy of these can be obtained free of cost from Wm. C. Sturgis, Ph. D., Educational Secretary of the Board of Missions, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York; also other interesting material, giving facts and figures, will be sent on request.

Clergyman's Son Tells of His Joy in Last Letter

Hundreds of friends mourn the death of Elmer H. Van Fleet, son of the Rev. J. B. Van Fleet, Rector of St. Stephen's Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, says the Post of that city. He was a victim of scarlet fever while in service in France. He enlisted last July in the Signal Service Corps, and took special training in telegraphy from the time of his enlistment until he went in training at Camp Sherman last October. He was made a Corporal in Company C, 308th Field Signal Battalion, December 1st. Fifty clerks were needed for service in France. Van Fleet was among those chosen, and he sailed for France Jan. 3rd. "Our time for active service has come," he wrote his father, "and I am glad. This is the last letter you will receive from me in America." It was the last letter. A telegram from Washington announced to the family that he died on January 17th. He was twenty-one years of age, and graduated with highest honors from the University of Cincinnati, and received the Rhodes scholarship of Oxford, England, the first given to a University of Cincinnati student, after a competitive examination in the State. It was given for scholarship, manliness and athletic proficiency. The dead soldier was a long distance runner, and won his "C" at a cross country run at Columbus in October, 1916.

Fifty Below Zero Weather Doesn't Stop This Missionary

The Rev. George Backhurst, General Missionary in the Diocese of Duluth, recently visited the White Earth Indian Reservation, making a long trip by railroad and twelve miles with a mail coach from Bemidji to Beaulieu. The story of his itinerary, as told by himself for THE WITNESS, reminds one of the days when Kemper and Whipple were laying the foundations for the winning of the West for Christ and His Church:

"The mail coach was a box-sled covered with said cloth over bent hoops like a miniature prairie schooner, and to enter it one had to crawl through a small door about three feet high. At Beaulieu I found the Church extremely cold, so we transferred the altar furnishing and a few pews to the large vestry room, where I was able to celebrate the Holy Communion without the water freezing in the cruets, not an unusual experience. The Mission there is vacant at present, the Rev. W. K. Boyle having been transferred to Onigum. Deacon Wilkin D. Smith of Nah-ta-waush is now in charge of the whole field in the Northern part of the Reservation, consisting of the Missions at Beaulieu, Wild Rice Rapide, Ebro and Nah-ta-waush. From the latter place I was driven by Mr. Smith, in his big box-sled, to the Government Old Folks' Home to administer the Holy Communion to the old Chief, Me-zhik-ke-ge-shik, and his aged daughter. The Chief is blind and cannot speak a word of English. He has a noble figure and face and long hair. He was baptized and confirmed by Bishop Whipple. After the service he presented me with an Indian pipestone. We ate dinner at a small hotel kept by an Indian family and then started for Wild Rice Rapids, about fifteen miles away. There is only one house within two miles of the Church, and as we approached the house the Indians came out and informed us that a little baby had died and requested us to hold the funeral that afternoon at the Church, which was tastefully decorated for Christmas. The interior resembled the outside forest, only the green was generously besprinkled with colored flowers and bells of paper. The little child, in his home-made tiny casket, was placed on a chair in front of the altar step. One was able to bring home to theminds of these simple folk the old story of the Christ Child. After the combined service we all marched out to the brow of the hill and layed the little child in his wee grave "in sure and certain hope." After many handshakes we got off on the rough road to Nah-ta-waush. It was a cold and long journey and the ponies were weary, but their noses were now turned towards home and they brought us to our destination soon after dark, in time for supper before holding a service in the Samuel Memorial Church, which was to be the "Feast of Lights." I had come provided with the candles, and the lessons of the Epiphany were brought home clearly to the Indians who thoroughly enjoyed the service. I retired at 10 p. m. in the spare room at the Mission House, a room about eight feet square. On the walls were hung enlarged photographs of relations living and departed, all covered with dark muslin. Shelves in one corner and a stand in another were filled to overflowing with old periodicals, books and cartridges. The next morning I celebrated the Holy Communion, with quite a large number present, considering the extremely cold, stormy weather and high wind. I was the guest of the Indian Deacon at dinner. There was a bountiful spread of beans, potatoes, turnips, and fat pork swimming in grease. I politely refused the latter, saying I much preferred the beans, etc. The Deacon remarked, "You must be a Jew." The inner man satisfied, we started out with one fresh pony and the toughest of the two used the day before, for Beaulieu. Most of the way was over bare prairie land where the wind had a clean sweep. I thanked God for the first time that I was a "prophet in sheep's clothing." At Beaulieu I connected again with the mail driver and had a little relief from the bitter cold wind in his covered sled, but at Erskine, where I changed trains, my pride suffered a fall—from the icy steps of a bus—and I had to nurse a sprained ankle for six hours and a half while waiting for my train. I had considerable difficulty in getting on and off the train, but I arrived home hopping at 3 a. m., much to the consternation of my wife.

The following week I visited Onigum, crossing Leech Lake from Walker by train. There being four passengers and only one seat, I chose the hay at the back of the sled, and lay down full length with the mail bag for a pillow. The Mercer Memorial Church here has recently been moved about a hundred yards away from the bank of the Lake where the ground had fallen away to the very door of the Church. Placed on a solid foundation, the Church is now one of our best buildings in the Indian field. I inquired if the windows were new and was told that the improved appearance was caused by thorough scrubbing on the part of Miss Colby, our veteran worker there. The Rev. W. K. Boyle is now in charge of this important Mission, and he is the youngest among our Indian ministers. He received his education for the ministry at the Bishop Seabury College. There were very few adults at the service, but a number of children attended from the Government School. The Rev. Mr. Boyle, Mr. Kulander of the Chippawa trading store and I, were entertained at lunch by Miss Colby, in the little cottage provided for her by the Government, in recognition of her twenty-five years' toil among the Indians of Leech Lake. Miss Colby is now somewhat crippled with rheumatism and is clearly entitled to a pension, if such can be obtained for the women workers of our Mission field. On leaving I was gratified to hear the young Indian priest say, "Thank you for your visit, you have done me good."

My next trip was to Bena on the Great Northern. At Cass Lake I picked up the Rev. Chas. Wright, an Indian priest of forty years standing, who has charge of the Mission at both places. The Indians have been scattered from Bena to their allotments at Round Lake, about twenty miles away, consequently but few can come to church in very cold weather. We had a congregation of six adults. The Rev. Mr. Wright interpreted my sermon. We took up a collection for the War Commission, amounting to $5.55. In the evening we got the freight train to Cass Lake, having to walk a mile from the depot to get on the caboose. Also at Cass Lake we had to disembark at the round house and walk into town. This I found rather trying, my ankle still bothering me. The following morning a livery team took us to the Mission of the Prince of Peace, six miles up the Lake. The thermometer registered fifty below zero, and it was rather cold for a joy ride. On the lake we passed a sad looking fox who hadn't sense enough to get in out of the cold. At the service we had the children from the Government School. I spoke to the young Indians on the Christian life compared to a race, and, judging by the way their eyes snapped, they took the simple lesson home. Again we had a collection for the War Commission and realized $5.00. The Indians are generous and quick to respond.

Great indeed is the opportunity in this large field. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few."

THE DAUGHTERS OF THE KING

An organization for the women of the Church throughout the world (communicants of good standing in their Parishes) for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, especially among women, and for the strengthening of the Church's spiritual life by means of constant prayer and personal service.

The Order calls for a Corporate Communion by every Chapter on the third Sunday of each month at the early celebration, and a Bible Class is desired in every Parish.

THE GIFT OF PATIENCE

By Rev. Harry Ransome

The life of man on earth is a warfare, says Holy Job, truly the life of the Christian at times is a cross, and to endure whatever comes demands patience.

Do we realize that it was patience which gave to Christ's Humanity peace and self-possession in spite of all that man could say or do? Do we realize that He calls upon us to catch this rest for strength on Him? He calls us to refrain our selfish egoism and permit patience to take possession of our hearts.

Severe to Himself, our Lord was gentle, mild and forbearing to others. His doctrine was doubted and disputed, He was charged with being an imposter, He was called a blasphemer, His wonderful works were ascribed to the devil, His adversaries burned with rage and would stone Him; yet the calmness of peace underwent no change; at every point His patience was invincible. If we venture to enter into the interior life of the Son of Man, we find the crucifixion of His Spirit was sustained by a love most patient and divine. Nothing is so helpful to us in our interior struggles as to try and enter, in spirit, into the interior crucifixions of our Blessed Lord. He thirsts for the salvation of all whom, by His Incarnation, He has made His brethren, and the resistance He meets from the pride of self-seeking wills causes Him the greatest anguish of spirit, but He is never impatient. The patience of Christ is the principle of His glory. By patience He perfected His sufferings, by patience He perfected His work of love, by patience He perfected His merits, infinite because He suffered in the Person of God.

It is a maxim of the world that knowledge is power. But knowledge is not power, only a condition of power. Knowledge is of the mind, power of the will; it is one thing to know and another thing to do. A goodly number of devout people do not seem to realize in what devoutness consists. Devoutness means devotedness, and devotedness means giving oneself to something which is not one's self. There are few of us who have not to fight interior temptations and the trouble which arises out of them, and the more devout we are the more keenly the pressure of temptation is felt. At times, perhaps, we are almost constrained to say "They are too great for me to bear, O God, give me patience" and then expect the gift of patience will come to us without a strong and continuous effort of our own wills.

It may help to strengthen our wills and aid our patience, if we strive to remember that patience with our own interior trials is a divine means given us to attain that perfection of love which enables us to give ourselves to the service of others, and perhaps overcome their waywardness by the gentleness of our patience, and so fulfill our mission as Christ's soldiers in the world.

The man whose patience breaks down will have many virtues, but he will never have strength or solidity. Patience bears directly upon character and duty; where patience fails the act is weak and the duty imperfect. If we examine the eight beatitudes we shall find patience is an essential part of each.

Let us in a practical way consider some of the means by which we can gain the divine gift of patience which our Lord so wonderfully exhibits.

It is a primary truth that human nature is weak and irritable, but patience is the virtue which strengthens this weakness. How does it strengthen it What is weak is made strong by being united to what is strong. Without a foundation of repose our souls are restless, unquiet and changeable; but God is our repose, our patience and our fortitude. He is the firm, immovable and unchanging patience on whom resting we shall not be moved. A great help to realize where our strength lies, is to quietly observe how often we fail in our best intentions because of our want of patience and lack of repose in Almighty God.

The action of all other powers, even that of the mind, depend upon the action of the will, which is the prime mover of all, therefore at times the whole soul depends on the patience of the will. If the will is patient the whole man is patient. We must catch what St. Ambrose calls the temperance of the heart, because the heart is the seat of the affections and the organ of the will. Almighty God says to each one of us, "my child, give me thy heart," and when it is given He speaks to the heart, He enlightens the heart, He searches the heart, He heals the contrite of heart and proves the humble of heart. A sure test of the custody of the heart is the government of the tongue; here is an admirable discipline of patience. That small member, the tongue, is rooted close to the brain, and is as inflammable as a powder magazine. St. James speaks of the tongue as an unquiet evil, and the remedy of unquietness is patience. The man, who can bridle his tongue with patient charity can govern his whole person. Silence very often is strength—the proverb calls it golden, for to lose patience is the beginning of disorder—as each of us knows too well, when we lose our temper.

Here are some words of St. Paul over which we might ponder: "Now we that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." Sometimes one must bear with those whose tempers are infirm; such are very often, victims of interior gloom and sadness. To make retort would do no good and increase their infirmity; to avoid them is pleasanter for us, but this may mean a breach of charity towards them. To minister to them, to bear with them and their complaints and tempers with all patience, is to catch the spirit of Jesus in the way of His ministry.

We need, also, to bear with our own faults and failures. Faults call for regret and sins for repentance. And we must guard that they do not awaken the impatience of pride. It is extraordinary how many spiritual sins one may commit through one outward act of sin. If the regret for the outward act of sin is only humiliated pride and vexed self-love, it will make us impatient, disturb our peace and lead us into a number of spiritual faults. To be patient with ourselves after a fault is not to condone it, but the first step towards correction. To lose patience with ourselves after a spiritual failure, is to part with the remedy which will help to repair it.

Let us say the Litany of Patience:
Lord, have pity on me,
Jesus, have pity on me.
Jesus, hear me; Jesus, help me.
Heavenly Father, who art patient, because Thou art Eternal,
Give me patience.
My Saviour and my God, who soughtest me when I fled from Thee,
Spirit of grace, who hast been with me to this day,
Holy Trinity, my support in all my miseries,
Give me patience.
Lord, when Thou triest me,
Lord, when I am in need,
Lord, when I am low-spirited and sad,
Give me patience.
Lord, when I suffer from illness,
Lord, when my members are racked with pain,
Lord, when I suffer and cannot sleep,
Give me patience.
Lord, in all my afflictions,
Lord, when I am on the point of failing through sore temptation,
When through tribulation I am weary of life,
Give me patience.
When I feel myself a burden to myself and others,
When all seems dark around me,
When, in spite of my efforts, I fall again into the same faults,
Give me patience, Lord.
When all fervor is dried up,
When distractions assail me in time of prayer,
When sin contends against grace within me,
Give me patience, Lord.
If Thou permittest me to be contradicted and thwarted,
If Thou permittest me to be misunderstood and wrongly judged,
If Thou permittest others to be set against me,
Give me patience, Lord.
If Thou permittest that I am forsaken by my friends,
If Thou permittest that I receive evil for good,
If Thou permittest me to suffer injustice,
If Thou permittest that I be ridiculed and mocked,
Give me patience, Lord.
O Lamb of God, who takest away the sins of the world, spare me, and give me patience evermore.
Amen.

The Jews Will Again Possess Their Own Land

We are in receipt of a very interesting sermon, No. 37 in a series of Denver Cathedral sermons, preached by the Very Rev. Dr. H. Martyn Hart, in the course of which he says:

"There is nothing more positively asserted in the Word of God and I may say, unlikely as it is from the point of view of man's experience there is nothing which offers a more satisfactory solution of the appalling problems of our existence, than the return to this earth, of the Saviour Jesus Christ. What our world needs is a Master, some intelligent, merciful, Righteous Power who will loose the captives and let the prisoners go free, Who will undo the heavy burdens, which the selfishness of the capable few has bound upon the stooping shoulders of the incapable weak.

Men have tried Law but it is the exploiters who make the laws and whenever the toilers so combine in Unions that they make themselves felt and whenever they have momentarily seized a coigne of vantage and have been able to dictate terms to their masters, they have shown themselves no less tyrants, than the money-barons against whose tyranny they were rebelling.

The decay and ruin of every civilization which a combination of hnman interests has produced, civilizations which have been constructed upon every conceivable plan; the refined cleverness of the Egyptian; the brutal force of the Assyrian; the intellectual dominance of the Greek; the luxuriousness of the Persian; the common law of the Roman; it matters not what may have been the cement of the civilization, one and all have ended in decadence and ruin and today bleeding humanity stands confessedly impotent to secure to all a fair and comfortable life. Three-quarters of the people of this broad and prosperous country have nothing, and are always upon the ragged edge of actual want.

People think 'we are delivered over to these things; that in some unknown way, the human race was started and left to its own devices; that there is no higher law and order than what emanates from our own societies. But this is not the case. God is working out some great design, we are moving towards some destiny. The favored people to whom 'were delivered the oracles of God' treasured this. Their Talmud, the compendium of their best knowledge says: "the world is to stand 6000 years, viz.: 2000 confusion, 2000 with the law and 2000 is in the time of the Messiah." We are now nearing the end of the third 2000. Then will come "The Day of God." "The Day of the restitution of all things." The regeneration" as the Lord Himself termed it. We wait for "the Day of the Lord." It is the day of the return of the beneficent Saviour, the Second Advent of Jesus Christ. Who "will reign a King in Righteousness and who will break the yoke off the neck of all peoples!" "When the heavens shall hear the earth and the earth shall hear the corn and the wine and the oil and they shall hear the sons of God" and everybody shall have a living wage and live easily and in plenty, "I will return." This undoubted event is alluded to 318 times in the New Testament. Perhaps the fall of the Turk we are witnessing with wonder is the beginning of the end, the preparation for this return of Israel to Palestine.

The first thing the Lord will do upon His return will be 'the restoration of the Jews' to their pre-eminence and their dignity. They will again possess their own land. Their Messiah will reign "in Jerusalem gloriously." "I will build again the Tabernacle of David which is fallen down and I will build upon the ruins thereof and I will set it up." This declaration permeates the Word of God.

If He came today, how would you have Him find you?

Without thought concerning Him? Making no effort to be ready for Him? Careless of His word? Indifferent to His claims; with no place for Him in your heart and no room for Him in your daily life?

Or shall He find you,

"Shewing forth the Lord's death, till He come?" "Looking for and hastening the Day of God," till He come? "Loving His appearance," till He come?

"O Blessed hope, with this elate
Let not our hearts be desolate,
But strong in faith, in patience wait,
Until He come!"

A Glorious Age Near at Hand

"What is the line of conduct to which Christianity obligates its followers?" asks the Rev. C. L. Bates of Rome, N. Y., and answers: "In brief it is the line or law of conduct which the Gospel clearly shows controlled the great Founder of the Faith. Christianity obligates its followers to a spiritual rather than a materialistic interpretation of life, it demands that selfishness be replaced by disposition to serve, that money be looked upon as a means and not an end. Christianity requires that each Christianized unit in society should dismiss the flesh-born tendency to exploit itself at the expense of other men, and that he should behave himself as his Father's child and a brother of his human fellows, using his talents in a sublimely self-forgetful service of God and of mankind. Who will seriously say that we have as a world so much as faintly essayed to put such laws of conduct to the test of practice? Rather have we not sung these rules over as so many soothing and pretty nursery songs! In our personal lives we have been selfish, in our commercial life villainously competitive, in our social life bitterly divisive, in our international life grasping and defiant. Modern Science has supplied us with means for luxury, at the same time giving our generation a bent toward egotism and inclining it to go still further down the dangerous slope of materialism. The worst of the matter is that we have done this while with our lips professing to believe the Gospel that forbids each item of our misbehavior, and have gone to Church (when indeed we have gone to Church) to weakly excuse ourselves with the periodical restatement to God, in our confessions, that we have found ourselves too humanly weak to undertake a program the wisdom of which we have admitted, but only in words and never in deeds.

I am optimistic. I believe that the world now will really try the two-fold command of Christ. If men will do this, If they will begin the practice of Christ's unselfish ethics, if they will, with good heart, go to work upon His plans for world federation, these sad times will be succeeded by a glorious age."

Wanted a Prayer Book

Mr. Thomas H. Forbes, Camp Secretary of the Army and Navy Department of the B. S. A, who is working at Camp McClellan, Anniston, Ala., received a request for a Prayer Book from a soldier, and not having an extra copy in his possession, walked five miles to and from the headquarters of Chaplain Dubell from whom he obtained a copy and presented it to the soldier. Such a splendid spirit, which is being generally emulated by Brotherhood Secretaries, is making a profound impression on the men in Uncle Sam's Army.

The first Old Testament lesson Sunday morning records the beginning of the fulfillment of Jeremiah's prophecy of the Seventy Years' captivity, which was the first lesson for last Sunday morning. Jehoiakin came to the throne in 597 during or just before the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. He was a fatuous youth of eighteen who played at being a king for three months and then was dragged to Babylon at the head of prominent Jews of all classes, who thus constituted the first group of captives, referred to later by Jeremiah as "good figs" and among whom apparently were Daniel and Ezekiel.

Once again God did what He said He was going to do. (See first morning lessons for first and second Sundays after the Epiphany). Jeremiah's appeal to the example of loyal Rechabites; his pleas for social justice; his holding out the offer of God's pardon; all were rejected with scorn. Truly "the sin of Judah was etched with a pen of iron and the point of a diamond, graven upon the tablet of their hearts and upon the horns of their altars." But the cool insolence of a Jehoiakim, throwing the leaves of the prophet's writings into the fire, was not going to stop God's truth from "marching on."

For the second lesson we have given our Lord's denunciation of Scribes and Pharisees, ending with the lament over Jerusalem, not without the note of hope which also belongs to Jeremiah, "ye shall not see me again until ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh . . . . in the name of the Lord." (Note: Compare Matt. 23: 37-39 with II Esdras 1:30-33).

For the evening lesson, the Book of Daniel is continued and the deliverance of Daniel from the lions' den is given, accompanied by our Lord's denunciation of lip service and of man-made traditions and doctrines, setting forth the necessity of purity of heart and deliverance from evil thoughts, rather than ceremonialism.

These lessons, one and all, seem to fit in not only with Lent in general, but with the specific Eucharistic teachings of this particular Sunday. They set forth the inevitableness of the penalty of sin; the value and right use of Divinely ordained discipline; the hope and promise of deliverance; and the absolute necessity of a pure heart. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification" (Epistle). To this supreme end all providence is directed. Whether "adversities which may happen to the body (Collect)," are averted, as in the case of Daniel, and the woman of Canaan (Gospel), or permitted, as in the case of Judah and Jerusalem, the Divine purpose is one and the same.

Again, the Gentiles who are the instruments of God's discipline in one lesson are themselves the recipients of God's mercy both in the Gospel and the Daniel story. The week-day selections from Jeremiah belong between the events of this and those of the next Sunday.

What Good Can I Get from Lent?

YOU CAN LEARN THE AWFUL CHARACTER OF SIN

Sin is deceitful; we know this by experience. The thoughts of Lent take off the disguise and show us actually what sin is, and its terrible influence upon the character. We see it rise like a great barrier between the soul and God; we see it hide God's countenance, and shut away from our life every desire that is pure, and noble, and lovely, and heavenly, and leave us amid the pollutions of evil—a slave to habits that speak of shame, of corruption, of moral disease, and ultimately of a moral death.

The very moment your eyes are really opened to the awful character of sin, and its guilty end, you will gladly flee from its habits as from a serpent's sting, or from a drink of deadly poison. At that moment you will turn to God with all your heart, and strive to serve Him in true righteousness and holiness all the days of your life.

Blessed Are They That Mourn

There is no minister, be he priest or not, who does not hear confessions. They may not be the formal admissions of the confessional but they are the outpourings of the burdened human heart. I think that no man can be a real minister to his people until they have enough confidence in him to tell him their troubles. But is it not too much to expect the parson to take an interest in the troubles of all his people? Bless you, No. In his heart he feels that his work is not worth while unless he shares their burdens. This is often the test of his ministry. It is very pleasant for him to believe that he has a congregation of prosperous, healthy, care-free, unburdened and relatively sinless people, but it is never true. Under the surface of apparently placid living, his men, women and children are disturbed and full of pain.

It is more than the occasional duty of the parson to assist his people; it is the very heart of his work. He yearns to share your burden if you will let him. The natural reticence that prevents one man from revealing his troubles, is an obstacle in the way of the parson. If the man of God is indifferent to the real and deep needs of his people his ministry is as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. His choir may be the best in the Diocese, his congregations may flourish like a green bay tree; he may be sent to countless conventions and his sermons may have the charm of St. Chrysostom's or the fire of Savonarola's, but if he does not bring the healing power of the Gospel into the lives of man by his personal participation in their troubles, his ministry is ineffective, partial and superficial. It is a splendidly ornamented design upon a casket from which the jewels are lost.

If you hesitate to take your real troubles to your minister you are practicing a disloyalty which probably you do not feel. Not that he can solve every problem, relieve every pain, soften every hardship and release every burden. He cannot. He counts himself fortunate when he can of men by his personal participation able to tell you how to cast off the trouble or to endure it. He may be able by sympathetic understanding to relieve the tension on your mind and heart. He may be able to sensitize your life so that you, weighted down and oppressed by the loneliness of your struggle, may feel beneath you the strength of the everlasting arms. He may be able to give you such an insight into the greater plans of God for you that your difficulty sinks into relative insignificance. He may be able to banish your love of the baubles which you fear to lose. And he may only say to you "Together, on our knees, let the storms beat over us and bruise us, but together let us cling to the Rock of our salvation."

It seems a small matter to the parson as he grows older whether or not he is able to replace an old piece of furniture in the Church, when his whole thought is occupied in saving a man from the temptation which is bringing ruin to himself and his family. And the disappointment about some apathy toward his pet project of adding bells to the tower, becomes a matter of indifference as he listens to and carries to his work the pathetic lament of the heart-broken mother bereft of her only child.

That heart is indeed callous which remains unaffected under the appeals made to its every resource in the confessional. The wisdom of Solomon, the insight of David, the riches of Croesus and the tenfold strength of Galahad, the love of St. John, the faith of St. Paul and the works of St. James would be an insufficient equipment for the man who would adequately counsel, help and strengthen his afflicted people. Simple and trite as many of the troubles are, they are the crisis of some human life; they mark the breaking point of some human heart. Wise indeed is he who can minister to those in affliction.

What a variety of troubles they are. How the parson prays God that he may be worthy of the trust of his people. Here comes a girl deserted by her lover. She must be told that if he was worthy he would not have left her, and if not worthy then she is lucky to have discovered it. It is almost cruel to add another blow to the crushed heart, but a year later when the parson is asked to unite the same girl in marriage to a fine young fellow he congratulates himself that he gave that blow. And here is the woman anxious about what is to become of her money after she is dead, and concerned that it shall carry on her small prejudices and dislikes after her, snapping the lash of her displeasure over many generations. Now comes the lad halting between two positions; now the man snared in the intricacies of honorable but unavoidable debt. Again it is the professional man, making a fight to maintain himself in his work and failing just as he is about to reach the goal. Here comes the stranger, one of a vast host, upon whom misfortune has fallen by the wayside. The door that opens for his departure admits the sorrowful woman struggling to maintain a family and overwhelmed in the struggle. So it will be with the priest to the end of his days.

Are we ever deceived? Yes. Nine-tenths of the people who come from other parts of the world and arrive at the parson's door fail to prove themselves worthy; nine-tenths of those at home are worthy and allow the parson to feel that his ministry is worth while.

If the people realized that their priest was not ministering in his own strength alone but was pouring out of the abundant store of the mercies and help of God, they would not fail to bring their troubles, and, so far as human hands and heart are able to convey divine aid they would not fail to be helped and comforted.

Lent is Your Opportunity

What! Mine? Yes, beloved, YOURS, no matter who you are, or what your opinions. God takes no account of these circumstances when He speaks to human souls. Like the Gospel itself, which delivers its message to every man, so Lent comes with its message to you, because you need it. Like the Church itself, which carries forward the Kingdom of Christ among all sorts and conditions of men, so too Lent, in its every thought, speaks to every heart, and bids it honestly examine itself in the sight of God, not for its theological opinions, but the facts of its life—not for its prejudices, but its needs—not for its likes or dislikes, its fancies or its whims, but its duties—not for its manifold excuses, but for the relation it bears to its Saviour, Who demands your heart, in which to place His Kingly throne. Lent comes to you as you are, and would make you what you ought to be.

Despise not, then, this Opportunity

Our Captain and His Army

PART II.

You and I, my brethren, are engaged in the greatest war thinkable, a war in which are engaged not only all the nations of the world, but even the veterans who have been retired from active service and are now awaiting re-union with their Master in the world to come, and those who have already overcome and have received from His hand the victor's crown; for doubtless they all in some way know what is going forward on the battlefields where they themselves engaged, and are able still to have their part in the conflict, helping on the combatants with spiritual helps none the less real because they cannot be measured by our material standards. The army militant, expectant, and triumphant, all is to some extent active in the service, and we are a part of it all. Our pulses are quickened as we think of the glorious fight which is being waged across the sea; should we not thrill too, as we realize that we are waging even a more glorious fight here? I think we have made the mistake of living ourselves and encouraging our soldiers to live as if peace had been concluded or at least a truce effected. It is not true. There is no peace possible, no truce can be arranged. Our war will not be won and our fighting will not be over until the war lord who sits on the throne of hell is thrown down and both he and his lieutenants destroyed forever. We have got to wake up to the fact, I am convinced, that war is our normal condition while here in this world, and we must train our people more thoroughly in order that they may wage it successfully.

THE SOLDIERS

We must, first of all, let them know what are the resources we have at our disposal; there is no use of having the means of feeding, of strengthening, of healing, if we fail to present them for the use of those who need them. We must try to train them to know what constitutes loyalty and what treachery to our King, we must teach them to pierce beneath the camouflage with which the devil conceals his hideous deadly weapons so that they seem desirable or at least harmless; we must strive in our preaching and in every possible way to stir up that heavenly patriotism, the love for our true native land and our King, which will encourage enlistment in the army and keep up the morale of the troops after they have enlisted.

And we must do more than that. I think that one of the weaknesses of the past has been that our training has been so largely book-training—theory and rules, without any practice in actual fighting. We need to take our young soldiers out for something else. They ought to have practice in throwing the grenades of prayer to make the way safe for themselves and their fellows as they advance, and to dislodge the enemy from the dugouts which he inhabits. They need practice in sustained spiritual exercise, in order that they may run and not be weary, and walk and not faint. They should be taught what kind of enemies they are to meet and how to recognize them—the devils of Anger, Pride, Gluttony, Lust, Covetousness, Envy and Sloth—and what kind of warfare they must use in the case of each one—whether it is best to stand and fight or whether safety, as it sometimes does, lies in flight. They need to be trained in the use of their weapons and in how to put on their armour; it must not be through our fault that when they do go out to fight the Giant they are not able to go with the armour which has been provided, because they have not proved it. Perhaps the smooth stones of natural piety will not be sufficient to do the work—even David needed a sword before his giant was finally despatched. And they need to know something about trench warfare too—how in the face of attack from the enemy to shield themselves from immediate harm and dig themselves into trenches where they may be safe. And with it all, we must be careful to encourage them with the knowledge that they are going to be taken care of; that they must not think all is over because they have been struck by a piece of shrapnel or for a moment been overtaken by a funk which led them perhaps to an act of disloyalty, but that hospitals are provided for the very purpose of taking care of soldiers in their condition, and that they may, if they will take advantage of the provision, soon return to the fray more than ever determined to give no quarter to the enemy, because they have suffered at his hand.

And this above all; we must correct the wrong impression which seems to be prevalent and for which we are ourselves largely to blame—the impression that the Christian course is a sort of pleasant little summer holiday. We must let it be known that it is a real war, a war for things that are worth while, and that it is a man's job to be engaged in it. We must let it be known that to engage in it worthily, even to train for it properly, a man may be called upon to make great sacrifices; sacrifices of time, of money, of worldly interests, of personal luxuries and perhaps even of comforts and conveniences. To practice self-denial and self-restraint is not hard when it is recognized as being for an object worth while; men do it for the sake of hardening themselves for earthly warfare, they will do it too for the heavenly if it can be made real to them. And we as their officers ought to know our soldiers each one personally and intimately. We ought to know what are their special needs and what particular battles they are fighting, so that we may when need is give them help, and at least speak the word of warning to the one who is heedless, or the word of encouragement to the one who is fighting a hard fight. It will not do for us to give them the minimum of training which is prescribed and then let them go their own way to meet the enemy single-handed. How often in the past we have done that! We have seen our young men setting out alone into "No Man's Land" and deserting the camp just at the time when we knew that they needed our help most, and we have let them go, hoping that some time they would return to us, praying perhaps that it might be before too much harm was suffered. Sometimes they do return, too often as damaged goods. And sometimes they never come back. They have fallen into the hands of the enemy and are fast bound in the prison house of sin.

Things are going on, on the other side of the sea, in the souls of the young men who are fighting. Men who have been at the front tell us that they are impressed with the different view which experience there gives the men on all the questions of the world and of life. No one can face the nearness of death for himself or see it cut down the man who but a few moments before has been shouting courageously as they went together over the top, without as soon as the tumult dies and there is time for thought, forming some conclusions about the purpose of the outcome of life in this world. Some of the men are coming back to us one of these days—pray God it may be soon. Some of them are coming back with their spiritual natures deepened and quickened because of their experiences, and some are coming back with that nature killed. And will it not be that those who have suffered the loss of their faith will reproach us because we failed to equip them and train them before we sent them away, and those who have grown in grace will reproach us because it was necessary for them to go through the fire of war in order to obtain what should have been given to them at home?

The world is going to be a different place after the war. Reconstruction must be begun now in every department of life. And it seems to me that we who are charged with responsibility in the Church of God must see to it that we are doing our duty in that part of the army to which we have been called, are correcting the mistakes of the past and are preparing for precluding the possibility of the same mistakes in the future. We can do it if we will take a leaf out of the book of earthly armies. God is still at war and we are permitted to be leaders in His army Our part is to teach and to train Christian soldiers, and our Parishes are our training camps. Let us appreciate the honor and the responsibility, and let us get to work as we have never done before. This is our part, and it is a worthy part, in the present war of the world. Only if we do it can we hope at the end to be able to say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

Women of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio, Hold an Interesting Meeting

The Monthly Luncheon for the women of the congregation was held on Wednesday, Feb. 6th, at which all the women's organizations were well represented. Promptly at half past twelve the women formed in small groups about the Parish Hall, where a very substantial war-time luncheon was served, after which a very interesting program was listened to. Mrs. C. H. Gross of Norwalk, Ohio, one of the Diocesan Vice-Presidents of the Woman's Auxiliary, spoke on the work of St. Luke's Hospital of Tokyo, Japan, and Mrs. Hauck of Lakewood, Ohio, told of the Spirit of Missions. These Monthly Meetings are very stimulating in their interest in Missions, and aid in bringing together many of the women of the congregation for organization work—women who are so joyously glad to do their part in the spread of His kingdom. The value of these meetings cannot be too highly esteemed.

The state, its flag—and preservation of them, come in the nature of being divine duty given for a divine institution."

All Philantropies of the Church Federated

There was a recent meeting, at supper, in Trinity Cathedral Parish House, of representative Church people of all the Episcopal Churches and Missions in Cleveland. Bishop Leonard called the meeting, as members of the "Household of Faith," to consider the federating of the institutions of the Church in the city.

Some 200 persons were present, representing every Parish and Mission Station and Church Institution in the city.

The meeting was opened by Bishop Leonard, giving a very cordial welcome to Churchmen and women in their support and co-operation. He then introduced Rev. R. W. Woodroofe of Emmanuel Church, who presented the purpose and plan. The plan includes the raising of $30,000 a year for five years, over and above present incomes, to be used to help these institutions and Missions.

The meeting endorsed the idea of federation, the appointing of a Commission, and the raising of a Sustentation Fund of $30,000, this fund to be distributed by a Committee to the institutions and Missions of the Church in Cleveland.

POEMS Worth Preserving

Selected by the Rev. F. L. Palmer

Ode to Duty

By William Wordsworth

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!
O Duty! if that name thou love
Who art a light to guide, a rod
To check the erring, and reprove;
Thou, who art victory and law
When empty terrors overawe;
From vain temptations dost set free;
And calm'st the weary strife of frail humanity!

There are who ask not if thine eye
Be on them; who, in love and truth,
Where no misgiving is, rely
Upon the genial sense of youth:
Glad hearts! without reproach or blot;
Who do thy work and know it not:
Oh, if through confidence misplaced
They fail, thy saving arms, dread
Power! around them cast.

Serene will be our days and bright,
And happy will our nature be,
When love is an unerring light,
And joy its own security.
And they a blissful course may hold
Even now, who, not unwisely bold,
Live in the spirit of this creed;
Yet find thy firm support, according to their need

I, loving freedom, and untried,
No sport of every random gust,
Yet being to myself a guide,
Too blindly have reposed my trust;
And oft, when in my heart was heard
Thy timely mandate, I deferred
The task, in smoother walks to stray;
But thee I now would serve more strictly, if I may.

Through no disturbance of my soul,
Or strong compunction in me wrought,
I supplicate for thy control;
But in the quietness of thought:
Me this unchartered freedom tires;
I feel the weight of chance desires:
My hopes no more must change their name,
I long for a repose that ever is the same.

Stern Lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
The Godhead's most benignant grace;
Nor know we anything so fair
As is the smile upon thy face:
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds;
And fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong;
And the most ancient heavens, through
Thee, are fresh and strong.

To humbler functions, awful Power!
I call thee: I myself commend
Unto thy Guidance from this hour;
Oh, let my weakness have an end!
Give unto me, made lowly wise,
The spirit of self-sacrifice;
The confidence of reason give;
And in the light of truth thy Bondman let me live.

Fifth Annual Meeting of the Board of Education

"The Message of the Church to a World at War" was the chief topic at the annual meeting of the General Board of Religious Education held in New York, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, January 29th, 30th, and 31st.

The following members attended, the large attendance being due to the celebration of the five years of work of the Board, and also to the important topics to be discussed concerning the war:

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop of Newark; Rt. Rev. Edward M. Parker, D. D., Bishop of New Hampshire; Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop of Bethlehem; Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Ohio; Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., Bishop of Minnesota; Rt. Rev. James Wise, Bishop of Kansas; Rev. C. P. Mills of Boston; Rev. Charles H. Young of Chicago; Rev. H. P. Nichols, D. D., of New York City; Rev. George G. Bartlett, D. D., of Philadelphia; Rev. Charles H. Boynton, Ph. D., Englewood, N. J.; Rev. Mercer P. Logan, D. D., of Charleston, S. C.; Rev. John H. McKenzie, D. D., of Howe, Ind.; Rev. L. N. Caley of Philadelphia; Rev. William E. Gardner, D. D., of New York; Rev. Lester Bradner, Ph. D., of New York; Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, Gardiner, Maine; Mr. H. C. Theopold, of Faribault, Minn., and Rev. Paul Micou, of New York, Secretary of the Department of Collegiate Education.

The following guests attended the Board Meeting:

Rt. Rev. Hugh L. Burleson, D. D., Bishop of South Dakota; Rt. Rev. George A. Beecher, D. D., Bishop of Western Nebraska; Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Spokane, Rev. George P. Mayo of Blue Ridge Industrial School, Virginia; Dean Carrington of St. Mary's College, Dallas, and Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, Provincial Secretary of the Province of Sewanee.

NEEDS OF PREPARATORY SCHOOLS

Bishops Burleson and Beecher came to present the needs of the Preparatory Schools of the West. They reminded the Board of the enviable reputation for Secondary Schools which the Church had secured. They reported that many schools felt the need of some Church-wide plan for Secondary Education. At present there was no plan and Church Schools were constantly succumbing to the pressure of the difficulty of financial maintenance. The names of fifteen schools were listed which had given up work during the past year.

The Bishops claimed that it was necessary that there should be a Secretary of the Board who would devote his entire time to Church Preparatory Schools. He would make inquiries of schools and spread information among Church people.

After consideration of this subject, the Board voted to provide a Secretary as soon as the income of the Board would permit. Another vote was passed, making provision for the traveling expenses of voluntary agents who in the meantime would make preliminary inquiries and assist in forming some plan for strengthening the work of the Preparatory Schools of the Church.

The discussion of the disorganized condition of our Church Preparatory Schools brought up the whole subject of the financial needs in the various departments of the Church's educational work. Dean Bartlett made a plea that the whole subject be dealt with comprehensively and that if financial aid was to be given, it should be given in relation to the total needs of the Church. As a result, a Committee consisting of Rev. Dr. Wm. E. Gardner, Bishop Lines, Bishop Reese, Dean Bartlett and Mr. Theopold was appointed to report at the next meeting of the Board a plan by which the financial needs of the Church's educational work may be dealt with comprehensively as a responsibility of the whole Church.

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT

Rev. Paul Micou, the Secretary of the Department of Collegiate Education, made his first report to the Board. His clear grasp of the situation in our colleges and universities won the confidence of the Board. The Board approved a plan by which the Department would make an effort to place the right man, properly equipped, in one college town each year; that a system of scholarships be established by the Collegiate Department by which students in a given university who are definitely training for service in the Church, might be awarded scholarships for their Junior and Senior years; that the Department raise a fund to make inquiries into the best methods of promoting religion in colleges and state universities; this inquiry should cover the kind of courses needed in religion, either within the curriculum or without, and the best methods for student worship and organization, and the peculiar kind of pastoral care which the unique college situation demands.

PAROCHIAL DEPARTMENT

The attention of the Parochial Department was centered especially upon the best way of equipping teachers for their work in our Church Schools. The present Standard Course in Teacher Training, having been in use practically 10 years, needed revision. This revision has now been undertaken by the Department, so that by next summer the first of a new set of training courses will be available for work in the field. Most of these new courses will be constructed especially for our own Church use. They will, however, be so articulated and arranged as to make co-operation possible in the spreading movement for Community Teacher Training. Reports from many sources show that the attention of teachers has been drawn away from training courses, probably by the War interests. It is desirable that every effort should be made to maintain the highest standard of equipment.

Report of progress was also rendered on a plan for a universal schedule of Daily Devotional Bible Readings, which the Board wishes to make available for the whole Church.

The figures showing the progress in the use of the Christian Nurture Series, prepared under the direction of the Board, for Church School work, are most encouraging. Roughly speaking, there are about 100,000 children in the Church working every Sunday on this material.

Both the Primary Council and the Senior Council, which have in charge the production of further courses under the Series, were continued, and it is hoped that by next September all the courses, from the Kindergarten through the High School years, will be in print.

The Primary Council has also under preparation a Manual on Primary Worship, which promises to be of great assistance in all the lower grades of the Church School.

The Demonstration School which the Board maintains at Gary, Indiana, for experiments in weekday religious instruction, is proving most effective. The Church School established there, under the guidance of Miss Vera L. Noyes, has doubled its numbers, and is giving every child of the Parish, with the exception of the Kindergarten and High School grades, two periods each week of religious instruction in addition to the Church School session on Sunday.

STUDY OF RELIGION IN WAR TIMES.

In response to many requests from Rectors for topics and study outlines on the religious questions raised by the war, the Board voted to issue a pamphlet entitled "Studies in Religion for War Times." This will be mailed to the Clergy immediately; it will contain topics and guiding questions for meditation and class study. It will also suggest Bible reading and books to aid discussion.

The most enjoyable session was the dinner at the General Seminary, Wednesday evening. The members of the Commission on the Revision of the Prayer Book which was in session, were the guests of the General Board at the dinner. After dinner a circle formed around the big fireplace at the end of the refectory. Addresses were made by Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, Rev. Hugh L. Birckhead, Bishop Reese and Mr. John W. Wood. The topic was "Religious Education in War Times." Bishop Reese said in part:

"A question put to me in one of our military camps was this: What has religion to do with the war? Don't you know that science and military strategy are the forces which will win the war? Such a man sees the grim necessity for the use of physical force in this present crisis, but he also realizes that this is but preparatory for the constructive conquering forces to follow. When you knock a man down who has mistreated a woman, he is not thereby conquered. You have conquered his body, not the man. Not until the quality of good-will enters the heart of a man, creating right relationship with you and the person he has injured, is he conquered. Goodwill is the produce of religious influences.

Our young men are not laying down their lives upon the altar of science or physical force, but that through their sacrifice the great moral and spiritual forces, may become permanent.

An Infidel's Opinion

During a period of nearly four years the writer has been in rather intimate correspondence with a physician in Idaho who, at the beginning of the correspondence, claimed to be a full-fledged infidel and proud of it. Recently I asked him to express through the columns of an agnostic paper his present opinions of the Christian Church and Religion and the response was a classic. It follows: "Leaving out the claim of the Divine origin of Christianity, it cannot be denied that Christianity has been and is now a great moral force in the world; that the great aim of Christianity is the moral uplift of humanity; that no Christian Church has in its creed any dogma or doctrine which teaches men to sin, but all teach men to avoid sin. The Churches are a great social force in the world, and as society is now constituted there is nothing else that will supply the place of the Christian Church. To the Church the poor, the sick, the downcast and forsaken ones can come for help and consolation and a refuge from the storms of adversity. Jesus Christ, whether he is God or man, a real person or myth, occupies today a place filled by no other earthly person from Socrates down. To no other person can a sin-lost and sin-sick soul go to find the peace and forgiveness that can be found in Christ. Such a soul would not go to Socrates nor any earthly philosopher for salvation from sin. There is the testimony of millions who have had their lives and characters transformed by the power of the Gospel of Christ. Millions have sealed their faith in Christ by the martyr's death. The beginning, the rise and the conquests of the Christian Church is a miracle. The Christian Clergy fill a place filled by no other profession, and while there are many people who are not worthy, yet the great majority are honest, sincere, self-denying men who give their time to the service of humanity—who do the work that cannot be done by another class of men. What the effect upon the world and society would be if every Church was closed, if every Christian minister forsook the Altar of Christ, we cannot tell. So after all perhaps the world is not ready to cast the Christian religion upon the scrapheap, just now. Not until something better is presented to take its place."

In this sense religious education is a war measure, the essential training of those who in the next generation must be leaders in the reconstruction of our civilization upon a sure foundation, the guarantee that the democracy for which we fight may be a democracy interpreted and kept true to Christian standards.

Back of the training camp is our American youth in our colleges, Church Schools and homes. It is a short sighted patriotism which sees only the training camp and neglects the training of the reserve force at the home base. The man in the camp summons the Church to help him do his duty as he prepares for his service 'over there'. Then, as he goes forth to take his place on the firing line he asks the Church to see to it that those fellows who follow after him be so trained in Christian truth that they will 'carry on' that for which he is fighting and giving his life. We cannot be a true patriot and neglect Christian education."

Bishop Tuttle, the President of the Board, expressed the enthusiasm and the vigorous purpose behind the Board's meeting, in the following message:

"The alarms of war are all abroad, and all around at home the busy training of our brave young soldiers goes on. Later that training will tell in their standing fast and making good.

With them all, collectively and individually, spiritual strength and religious duty and loyalty to Christ are the forces most potent and permanent to win by.

Let no such Society as one for Religious Education, then, lose heart or think itself out of place or out of time or out of tune for these burdened days.

I wish you good luck in the name of the Lord."

The corporate communion of the meeting was at Calvary Church, Wednesday morning. The Board attended Evening Prayer at the Seminary Wednesday morning.

(The report of Dr. Gardner at the Department of Theological Education will appear in next week's issue.)

South Carolina

The delegates heard with great interest the statement that 600 splendid young men, former students at Christ School, Arden, N. C., are now in their country's service. Truly a striking testimonial of the value of our mountain Mission schools.

A letter from China heard at the Convention speaks in highest terms of Miss Alice Gregg, South Carolina's Missionary in Anking, and commends her ability, zeal and success in her work.

A letter of loving greeting was sent from the Convention to Miss Uta Saite the young Japanese student now in Tokio, who was educated at Winthrop College by the S. C. Junior Auxiliary and later received a year's training at St. Faith's, New York.

Miss Virginia Singleton, U. O. Custodian, presented to the Junior Auxiliary a most interesting tablet inscribed with the names of Missionaries who have gone from South Carolina—an eloquent appeal for the coming years.

The following resolutions presented by Miss Singleton were unanimously adopted:

"That a memorial go from this Convention to the Diocesan Board of Religious Education requesting that a woman perfectly familiar with, and capable of teaching the Christian Nurture Course be placed upon the Board of Religious Education in the Diocese; also requesting that she shall be assistant editor of the page devoted to Religious Education which appears every month in the Diocese."

"That a request go from this Auxiliary in convention assembled to our Bishop and the Secretary of the Diocese that the Auxiliary president be given a place on the Council programme, preferably at the session devoted to Religious Education, when she shall explain and urge the use of the Christian Nurture Course in our Church Schools in connection with the adoption of the "New Junior Plan."

The importance of the Spirit of Missions and Diocese was stressed as absolutely essential to Auxiliary growth and understanding, and every branch was asked to appoint a reporter for the Diocese.

Archdeacon Baskerville of Charleston sent a letter to the Auxiliary which set forth in comprehensive words the desire of his people for industrial education, emphasized the especial benefit derived from Church schools and expressed his gratitude for what had been done by S. C. Churches. Those present felt keenly their recognition of how much has been left undone and how lightly our responsibility has been held.

The Church's opportunity in caring for the Catawba Indians was dwelt upon. This tribe of splendid aborigines in York county, S. C., numbering more than 3,000 warriors as late as 1768, have been the consistent friend of the white man since colonial times; have fought by his side in every war and though poor and degenerate in many ways, retain their native honesty and courage. The reservation is wholly Mormon, because as they will tell you, the Mormon missionaries have lived among them and have been the friends when other faiths, with few exceptions, did not seem to think they were worth saving.

Rev. A. R. Mitchell, Archdeacon, in speaking of the work in rural districts in his Convocation, stressed the need of trained workers and made an eloquent appeal for consecrated women to embrace this opportunity for service almost at our doors.

Miss Singleton and Miss Ford emphasized the opportunity of the Church in mill communities and the fact that the Church is eminently adapted to the needs of these people.

That the work of the Church is rightly very closely allied with the Red Cross and other patriotic organizations was clearly brought out on the floor of the Convention, but the Bishop's warning was most timely when he said the "Kingdom of God", as represented by the Church and its special work, must come first.

Miss Ford, in response to a unanimous request, reconsidered her decision to retire from the office of Educational Secretary and accepted reelection with the proviso that a successor for the next year be chosen and sent to the summer school at Cambridge.

In the closing hour of the convention resolutions of loving appreciation were voted to the retiring president, Miss Katie Lee, for her untiring devotion to the duties of her office, and cordial, whole hearted support was pledged to her successor, Mrs. W. P. Cornell, who brings to the work great energy, enthusiasm and ability.

Plain Duty of Christian Young Men and Women

What is the plain duty of the Christian young man and woman when their country is at war? The Rt. Rev. Bishop of the American Church, Dr. Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, Presiding answered this question the other day in a war message to the young men and women of the Southwest when asked his opinion, states the Oklahoma Times. Here is the message:

"The state, as I have for years interpreted its bibical meaning, is a sacred institution and so acknowledged by our blessed Lord and His faithful disciple, St. Paul. We will remember that the Saviour said:

"'Render unto Caesar, the things that are Caesar's.'

"We will remember that St. Paul, alluding to 'the powers that be,' meaning the government, said it was an institution ordained of God.

"At this time in particular our young men will do well to remember that life is divided into three great elements to which his faith and loyalty should be unrestrainedly devoted. They are, the family, the state and the Church. All these three are divinely instituted and of divine foundation.

MUST FIGHT IF NECESSARY

"The plain duty of the Christian young man at this grave and critical time in the world's history and in the history in particular of America, is to obey and have careful regard for the laws of the state, and the more so in that our country is at war.

"He must consecrate himself to standing by the regulations of the country, standing by its laws, of giving unswerving loyalty to its flag and if it is ordered and there is necessity of fighting for that flag and yielding his life if that too shall be called for.

"Very nearly the same thing obtains also for the Christian young woman. Of her there is hardly less responsibility than for the young man. They should be side by side in war's problems and aiding their country.

YOUNG WOMEN'S DUTY

"I may even go far enough to assert that of the young woman there is even more responsibility inasmuch as, of the three divine institutions I mention, the family, the state and the Church, for the family, first of the three, no one shall have greater responsibility or concern than she and the more so as she has within her potentially the divinity of motherhood, greatest asset, greatest of things that sustain the family except God Himself.

"This is the time when she must be loyal to her country and to its traditions. There is every evidence in this country of ours that the Christian young woman with the good she can do in her community, by the example of her tireless needles and her hard and earnest work for the Red Cross, has greater opportunity for useful and patriotic service than others.

"Thus the duty of the Christian young man and the duty of the Christian young woman closely parallel.

It Can Talk in Any Language

When Dr. Paton was printing his first New Testament in the Aniwan language, Chief Namakei, an old man, eagerly watched the Missionary, and one day he said: "Does it speak?" "Yes," said Paton, "It can talk now in your own language." "Oh, let it speak to me—let me hear it speak." Paton then read a few lines, when the old man cried, "It does speak! Oh, give it to me." Grasping the book, he turned it round and round. Then pressing it to his heart, he shouted: "Oh, make it speak to me again!" Is not this the greatest work of the Missionary, making the Bible speak to men?

It is said that more than five hundred thousand sermons are preached every Sunday from texts taken from the Holy Scriptures. Any but a divine book would have been worn out ages ago, but the more the Bible is used, the better it is liked. The cry everywhere today is: "Come over and help us!" All gates are open to the Christian soldier sent of God, carrying with him the Word of Power and preaching Christ to every creature.—The Christian Herald.

A Baptist minister in Fairfield, Conn., prayed for the absent members "who were prostrated on beds of sickness and chairs of wellness."

A CRISIS IN MISSION WORK

An Important Conference

Upon the invitation of the officers of the Board of Missions, a number of Church men and women from the sections of the country included in Provinces I, II, III and V met at the Church Mission's House in New York recently to confer upon the possibility of taking steps to meet the present urgent needs in the Church's general work. It was recognized that 1918 is certain to be a critical year. Church people are giving much time and energy on behalf of war needs. 75,000 Churchmen are already in the ranks of the new army. Many of the Clergy, some of them from the leading Parishes of the country are serving in connection with the War Commission or the Y. M. C. A. in the army and navy.

The Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and numerous war funds are making appeals to meet compelling war needs. Under these circumstances, it is possible that the absolute requirements for the Church's Mission may be overlooked to some extent, unless they are placed fairly before the people of the Church. On the other hand, the wonderful response of the nation to the call of the Government through the Red Cross, and the more than generous gifts that have been made through other agencies, show clearly that the people of the country are not only ready to give for a cause that they consider vital, but are ready to make real sacrifices for it.

In view of this situation, the Conference considered the question:

Would it be right to allow this spirit of sacrificial giving to be expressed chiefly through agencies outside of the Church, while the Church makes no concerted effort to call forth a similar spirit of giving on behalf of the fundamental matters entrusted to her?

The Conference took note of such facts as these:

1. That the Board of Missions and the General Board of Religious Education closed their last fiscal year with deficits:

2 That the Social Service Commission has plans which it is unable to carry out for lack of funds:

3. That several of the schools, federated under the American Church Institute for Negroes, are hampered in their work because their incomes are insufficient to meet the increased cost of operation.

The question was asked:

Would it be practicable for these various agencies for once to make common cause and present to the Church in one statement the needs of the various activities for which they are responsible, instead of allowing each to carry its load alone? Would it be possible to go a step further and to ask the domestic Missionary Bishops, all of whom have to carry a heavy load of anxiety in providing for that portion of the salaries of their Clergy not provided for by the appropriations of the Board of Missions, to pool their needs and so present to the Church a unified statement and make a united appeal on behalf of these needs?

After hearing the statement of conditions in the field at home and abroad from the Rev. T. R. Ludlow, of China, Bishop Touret of Western Colorado, Dr. Teusler of Japan, Dr. Gardiner of the General Board of Religious Education, and the Rev. F. M. Crouch, of the Commission on Social Service, the Conference appointed a Committee to formulate the judgment of the Conference for presentation to the agencies whose work had been under discussion. Upon the recommendation of the Committee the Conference adopted the following statement:

That this Conference recommends to the Board of Missions, General Board of Religious Education, and the Joint Commission on Social Service, that plans be adopted at once to make provision for an additional sum for at least one and one-half millions of dollars to provide for the immediate needs of the Board of Missions, General Board of Religious Education, and the Joint Commission on Social Service, and the American Church Institute for Negroes.

That the Conference further recommends that a complete expert study of the Church's work in all fields as well as the ability to give be undertaken immediately, and that a commission of the ablest men whose services can be secured be appointed or employed by the three Boards, to put before the Church a plan which will adequately support the work already undertaken as well as furnish necessary funds for increased activities throughout this country and the whole world.

That a Committee be appointed from this Conference to present these recommendations to the Board of Missions at its next meeting, and to the other Boards and Commissions at the earliest possible moment.

On February 6th, the Committee, through its Chairman, Mr. Oliver J. Sands, of Richmond, presented the matter to the Board of Missions. The Board immediately appointed a committee of five, consisting of the Very Rev. Carroll M. Davis, Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown, Messrs. Oliver J. Sands, Charles E. Mason, and J. H. Dillard, to study the report and make recommendations to the Board.

This committee, through its Chairman, Dean Davis, submitted the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

RESOLVED: That the Board of Missions has heard with interest of the general plans proposed by a committee appointed at a conference of Church men and women on January 30th for securing the means necessary to meet the needs of this Board during 1918, and learn from it the needs for the next five years and to determine the method to be adopted to meet these needs. The Board gives its cordial assent to the general purpose of the committee and authorizes it to proceed with a committee of five from the Board, in a plan to create a national committee composed of representatives from Dioceses and Missionary districts in the country in such a way that each Province shall be represented. From this general committee, an executive committee may be appointed to supervise the carrying out of the purpose of this resolution.

RESOLVED: Further that the Board of Missions requests the committee hereby authorized to consult with the General Board of Religious Education, the Joint Commission on Social Service and the American Church Institute for Negroes, or other like agencies of the Church, for the purpose of unifying and co-ordinating the needs of the branches of the work of the Church.

Vigorous steps are now being taken to secure the organization of the National and Executive Committee provided for by the resolution. While no date for the concerted effort has yet been decided upon, it has been proposed that the week of April 28th to May 5th, both inclusive, should be selected for this purpose.

The needs which it is proposed to meet by this special effort would include, among other things, the deficit of the Board of Missions, the heavy extra expense to which it has been put through its entrance into the Pension System on behalf of Missionaries at home and abroad and the great rise in the cost of silver in the Orient, certain building operations to which it is already obligated, such as St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, the Church Hospital at Wuchang and St. Paul's College, Tokyo, the requirements of the Domestic Missionary Bishops in addition to the appropriations of the Board, the plans of the General Board of Religious Education to meet the opportunities resulting from the war in reaching the students of the country, and numerous other items.

Notes From the Missions House

The Diocese of Chekiang is the first of the eleven Dioceses of the Church in China to select a Chinese to the Episcopate.

Bishop Graves writes that on December 11th the Rev. T. S. Sing, Archdeacon of Chekiang was elected Assistant Bishop. This, Bishop Graves points out is another step in advance and means much for the future of the Chinese Church.

The confirmation of the election will be one of the most important duties in the next General Synod when it meets in Shanghai in April of this year.

The Igorot children of Easter Schiil, Baguio, Philippine Islands, have sent to Bishop Brent, who is now in France $24, for the relief of Belgian orphans.

At a special service held for the Baguio people, $50 were given and sent to Bishop Brent for any purpose that commended itself to him.

A cable received at the Church Missions House on Thursday, February 21st, from Bishop Lloyd, announces an interesting series of visitations in the Cape Palmas district of Liberia. Both the Bishop and Archdeacon Schofield, who accompanied him, are well.

Our Chinese congregations at St. Stephen's Mission, Manila, are cooperating loyally with their fellow American citizens in all matters connected with the war.

Of course they observed the Day of Prayer, set apart by Proclamation of President Wilson last Autumn, and at the same time made an offering to be sent to Bishop Brent, to be used by him in his ministrations to American soldiers in France.

On All Saints' Day the congregation made an offering for the relief of the destitute widows and orphans of French soldiers. Altogether their gifts amounted to over $80, and would be easily the equivalent of $800 for a similar congregation in this country.

What is Lent?

Lent commemorates our Lord's forty wilderness days; the days of prayer and meditation, of communion with God, of retirement, of victory over temptation. Christ in the wilderness is an illustration of real life. He went thither as man's Representative. The wilderness lessons are lessons of daily living. If we would understand life's common interests, if we would study what most concerns humanity; if we would know the nature of the forces that we are to resist; if we would really conquer sin like true men and women, we must let the Spirit lead us, as he led the Saviour, up into the wilderness. There, withdrawn as much as possible from absorbing material interests, and the mere pleasures of the world, we can commune with our own spirits, conscious of the fact that above us are the angels of God to encourage us, and around us are the forces of Satan, seeking to deceive or beguile or flatter us into defeat.

S. O. S. CALL TO WOMEN OF THE CHURCH

Bazaars, Rummage Sales, Grab Bags, Fairs and Theatrical Entertainments Condemned

"The women of the Church are confronted with a serious problem," writes Mrs. George Waller of Burlington, Wis., to THE WITNESS. "We want to do war work to keep up the greatly needed Red Cross work, but how can we do that and keep up sewing for bazaars to raise the minister's stipend. If only we could go back to God's system of finance, how easy it would all be? The tithe system, once established, no one would want to go back to the present unsatisfactory methods. Will you not help by a few words in THE WITNESS showing the benefits of the tithe system?"

The following excerpt from a searching consideration of "The Tithe System" in a paper read before a meeting of the Milwaukee Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary at Delafield, Wis., by Mrs. Waller, goes to the very heart of the subject in a gripping, practical way, which should arouse the whole Church to action:

The tithing laws of Church finance are concisely and strongly, yet comprehensively, set forth from the Old and New Testaments, and upon this basis Mrs. Waller makes her plea for reform. "Now I am going to ask the Auxiliary—Cannot we bring about this much needed reform? I read an article a few days ago on 'Woman's Unrest' which instanced the good that had been accomplished, and the still greater good which may yet be accomplished, by a wise direction of the activities of this unrest. And it seemed to me not too much to hope that our Auxiliary, which is such a vast body, spread all over the United States, and which has already done such great things, may yet accomplish thas still greater one. It falls very largely to the women of the Church to raise the necessary funds for its support, even to the salary of the Priests. So it is eminently proper that we should take the initiative. Too long we have raised the Lord's offering by Church fairs and socials, by rummage sales and lotteries and grab bags, by dances and card parties, and theatrical entertainments—in fact almost anything that will coax money out of people's pockets by making them feel that they have some sort of an equivalent for it. Most of us deplore the system, and many who do the work of it groan under the burden, and have not even the satisfaction of feeling that they are honoring God by it. Certainly our treasuries are not over-burdened by the plan. The meager salaries of our Priests are proverbial. Too many of our Churches are poverty-stricken—not as well furnished as our homes, and certainly not as well cared for. The houses of God, designed for His dwelling among men, were gloriously grand and beautiful, and every atom in them was a willing offering. We have followed our own ways and have not prospered. Let us get back to God's way and we shall prosper; for He has pledged Himself to pour out a blessing for us, "till there shall not be room enough to receive it." Let us give of our best, give willingly, and give as God has prospered us. That is God's way. Again, let me ask, cannot our Auxiliary bring about this reform? Don't say it is impossible. "With God all things are possible," and when we work along the lines He marks out we can expect His help and blessing. Greater things than this have been accomplished by women—and with fewer numbers. Perhaps you will say, 'How do you propose we shall do it?' Chiefly by our woman's influence. Let us bring that to bear upon our fathers, our brothers, our husbands. Let us train our sons—in them lies our strongest hope. The mothers of today can make the next generation what they will. Let us use our influence to have God's laws taught in our Sunday Schools and our children trained to systematic giving. Let us ask for this teaching from the pulpit also. Then let us drop our present ways of raising money for the Church and spend the time making garments for the poor. There will be a little confusion and trouble in bringing about the change of course. Every great reform the world has known has been produced by a period of agitation and confusion and unrest. But think of the joy of the accomplishment—think of what it would be to have our own treasuries filled with willing offerings that honored God and were acceptable to Him. Ladies of the Auxiliary, we can bring about this change. Let us say by God's help we will. Let us with a prayer on our lips and zeal in our hearts, work for a Church finance that shall be for the honor of God and the prosperity of the Church." Mrs. Waller writes that she has had a few copies of her paper printed and will gladly send a copy to any president of any Auxiliary who requests it.

Shall Women be Admitted as Delegates to Diocesan Conventions?

Mr. Robert H. Gardiner of Gardiner, Maine, an earnest and influential Churchman well known throughout the American Church, is deeply interested in securing for Churchwomen their full share of responsibility in the work of the Church, and is carrying on a campaign to arouse the friends of the new movement to use their influence in creating a sentiment in the several Dioceses in favor of admitting to the Diocesan conventions women delegates from Parishes and Missions. The Diocesan Convention of New Hampshire has lately adopted an amendment, which will come up for final action next year, under which, should it be adopted, two women delegates from each Parish and one from each Mission in the Diocese will be admitted as delegates to the convention. Mr. Gardiner is of the opinion that "the granting of secular suffrage in New York and the limited extension of secular suffrage in England will be of great weight in the political field. It seems very probable that women will be given Church suffrage in England and Wales. It is difficult to keep track of the various Diocesan Conventions in this country, gut I understand that Rhode Island and Missouri found no objections in their constitutions and admitted women delegates without question and that Pittsburgh has changed its canon to admit them. The vote in Massachusetts Convention was so close that there is good ground to hope that the amendment will be successful next spring."

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

Tuesday Before Easter

THE EPISTLE

The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting. For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed. He is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me? let us stand together: who is mine adversary? let him come near to me. Behold, the Lord God will help me; who is he that shall condemn me? lo, they all shall wax old as a garment; the moth shall eat them up. Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the vioce of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God. Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. This shall ye have of mine hand; ye shall lie down in sorrow. Isa. 1:5.

"By Thy Cross and Passion; Good Lord deliver us!" "Make perfect through suffering." This is the Gospel message; and all the philosophies and religions of men that refuse to accept and preach that message are doomed to "lie down in sorrow," and come to no permanent fruition. Any religion which makes salvation so easy and comfortable a thing that men will be glad to have it without any self-crucifixion, is going contrary to one of God's primal laws, which even the heathen nations read out of life, and which found expression in the Latin proverb: "Per aspera ad astra." Into the universal law of suffering walks Jesus with His Cross, and His key fits the lock; and peace and power come with the tears, and the pain, and the shedding of blood.

Read the religious history of the world and see for yourself that men have been connected up with this thought, "that without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." But until Jesus Christ's crucifixion no one people or nation realized that this blood shedding could and should be for the sins of the whole world—for no one ever knew till Jesus came, that God so loved the whole world that He gave that world His Son. And many still fail to recognize that that Son calls each generation to take up its cross and follow Him. Here lies and will lie the torments of conscience for a man, when he finally wakes up to the fact that Jesus died to take away the sins of the whole world, and that He had so ordained it that every person in each generation who knew that message should help speed it to those servants of His who yet "walk in darkness and have no light." God forgive us if we do not do our share in publishing this Gospel in our day and generation; and in this connection may each of us be able to enter into the first sentence in this day's Epistle and say with all our heart "The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back."

As we read this experience of Isaiah and see in it a word picture of our Lord in His passion, are we not reminded of His willingness to enter into all phases of human suffering in order that all men may learn from Him how to issue therefrom not simply as stoics, but as Christlike people? And shall we not pray for such a vision of God's help in our sufferings as will show us the real object of life and enable us to appreciate the Apostle's statement "who for the joy that was set before Him, endured the Cross, despising the shame"? And when the black shadows sweep in and almost overwhelm us, what comfort and strength there are in those words "who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." Think what joy it must be to bring these messages and others like them to those earnest souls everywhere in God's world who are puzzled, downcast, dispairing because no one has shown them the solution of the problem of suffering.

"Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourself about with sparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. This shall ye have of mine hand; ye shall lie down in sorrow." There is no joy and peace at the end of life for those whose religion or philosophy takes no notice of the law of suffering.

The Gospel of comfort is very different from "the comfortable gospel." The first is only good as long as the sun shines; but it stops at the threshhold of pain, and goes crazy at the brink of the grave, unless drugged into unconsciousness. The second has proven its value from the first Good Friday until now, and there are countless numbers of souls who having washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb, and who not having loved their lives unto the death, have become the crowned and uncrowned heroes of the Kingdom of God on earth and in heaven.

THE GOSPEL

And straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate. And Pilate asked him, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answering said unto him, Thou sayest it. And the chief priests accused him of many things: but he answered nothing. And Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against thee. But Jesus yet answered nothing; so that Pilate marvelled. Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired. And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection. And the multitude crying aloud began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them. But Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews? For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for envy. But the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them. And Pilate answered and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto him whom ye call the King of the Jews? And they cried out again, Crucify him. Then Pilate said unto them, Why, what evil hath he done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him. And so Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified. And the soldiers led him away into the hall, called Praetorium; and they call together the whole band And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns and put it about his head, and began to salute him, Hail, King of the Jews! And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and bowing their knees worshipped him. And when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to crucify him. And they compel one Simon, a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear his cross. And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull. And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh: but he received it not. And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take. And it was the third hour, and they crucified him. And the superscription of his accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS. And with him they crucify two thieves; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left. And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors. And they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself, and come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; himself he cannot save. Let Christ the King of Israel decend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they that were crucified with him reviled him. And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour. And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elias. And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down. And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost. And the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. And when the centurion, which stood over against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God. —St. Mark xv. 1.

"But Jesus yet answered nothing so that Pilate marvelled." What counts with thinking people are deeds and not words. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Our Blessed Lord when challenged asserted His Kingship. Then if men did not see His claims personified in His life, He did not continue an argument. It was not worth while. Men when confronted with Christ and His claims must come to a decision about Him; and then to a choice between Him and whoever or whatever else there is that would compel their allegiance.

"The chief priests moved the people." What a heart stirring thought lies here for the priesthood! People recognize that the priesthood should live so close to God that when they speak it should be with that authority which comes from a conviction that "we have the mind of Christ." What a terrible indictment then if the priesthood be found using their authority to move people in directions that will ultimately hurt the Body of people that they be not blind followers of blind guides. What wonderful power does God give His ministers. What a challange to one who loves men to hear the call of God to go th His people and say "Thus saith the Lord." What a challange do those fields of endeavor open where Christ is not yet proclaimed as King! What, more wonderful field of usefulness than to "persuade men in Christ's stead!" And how very wonderful to recognize the truth that by every baptized person this same persuasive power should be used, each according to his gifts and place in the household of God. Let us each beware lest we be found moving people to demand some action which will ultimately mean "crucify the Son of God afresh, and putting Him anew to an open shame."

"Pilate willing to content the people." Herein lies the peril of letting a gospel of comfort get abroad instead of a comforting gospel. The gospel of comfort will clothe the historic figure of Christ with purple, and crown Him, put a semblance of authority in His hand. But inasmuch and just as far as men put the law of perfection through suffering and the Cross of Christ ont of their sight and their teaching, just that much, and just so far do they play with the real Christ, and grieve the Holy Spirit to their own loss of vision, and power for permanent good. All good followers of Jesus should combine to see that the results of the Gospel of comfort are met and challenged by the fruits and results of the comforting Gospel.

"They gave Him to drink wine mingled with myrrh—a drug—but He received it not." The gospel of comfort insists on drugs. The comfortable Gospel teaches us to say: "I will endure until I can say what I have started out to do, is finished." This is another reason for sending the right kind of Gospel everywhere in the earth. Because if the first gospel ever succeeds in any part of the earth, that part will be drugged into a useless and profitless existence, which is the case wherever the Cross of the Christ is not firmly established.

"He was numbered with the transgressors." The Gospel of comfort puts the transgressors behind the bars, with a crucified and dead Christ on the Cross. The comuortable gospel also puts the Cross before the transgressors, because "the way of the transgressors is hard;" but it is now learning to show the transgressors the living Christ behind His Cross saying "come, follow Me;" and giving them the Star of Hope, even in the place where their sins have brought them.

"There was darkness over the whole land." Into every land and into every life there comes at least once a great darkness. The comfortable gospel shows you the immortal Son of God going through that same darkness. There is no experience in the problem of pain where our Savior has not preceded us. That is why His Gospel is a comforting—a soul strengthening Gospel. "He will hold you fast" even in the darkness, because once He felt all things slipping away from Him, but He hung on and came through, to our great and endless comfort.

Jesus refused the drug, but He accepted the refreshment, a lesson for us to take to heart; In our experience with suffering we must have meat to eat that outsiders have not thought of, or our spirits will faint. Remember our Lord said when they marvelled at Him, "I have meat to eat that ye wot not of."

"Truly this was the Son of God" said the Centurion. We who preach and teach and publish this passion Gospel of Jesus say, "Truly this is the Son of God." And in proportion as we believe what we say, will we be anxious to have all sorts and conditions of men everywhere come to the same conclusion and decision.

"So Judah was carried away captive out of his land." Thus ends the first lesson for Sunday morning. The king of Babylon, after carrying off Jehoiachin (last Sunday's lesson), made Mattanchiah, Jeroiachin's uncle, king in his stead, changing his name, or perhaps sanctioning the change, to "Zedekiah," "Jehovah's Righteousness." See Ezekiel 17:12-14). Such a name however, borne by such a man, must have seemed to Jeremiah the very tragedy of historic irony and may have suggested to him the wonderful prophecy of the time to come when a true king should really reign and execute judgment and justice in the earth and whose name should deservedly be, Jehovah, our Righteousness. (Jer. 23:6). The actual destruction of Jerusalem and of the temple took place in the eleventh year of Zedekiah's reign, and was brought about by his rebellion against the advice of Jeremiah. The purpose of giving these two lessons on successive Sundays was to introduce on intervening week days the teachings of Jeremiah during Zedekiah's reign: the "two baskets of figs;" the letter written to those already in Babylon; rebuke of Zedekiah for re-enslaving the emancipated bondmen; captivity inevitable; Pharaoh's army marching to their assistance would return into their native land; putting Jeremiah into a dungeon was not going to do any good, and the only chance of escape for the shallow and vacillating monarch was surrender. (Lessons for last week.)

For a corresponding New Testament lesson we have given our Lord's prophecy of another destruction of Jerusalem, fulfilled under the Roman General Titus, A. D. 70. The Old Testament alternate is a confession of national sin and a prayer for deliverance, "that all the earth may know that thou art the Lord our God."

For the first Sunday evening lessons, we have taken Dan. 9, a bit out of its regular order, for its appositeness. Whatever interpretation be put upon a confessedly difficult chapter, it is a noble example of confession and answer to prayer and a wonderful prophecy of the time when God should "finish transgression, make an end of sins, make reconciliation for iniquity, bring in everlasting righteousness, seal up vision and prophecy and anoint 'the most Holy.'" The second lesson records the fulfillment of the covenant made with God which caused the Old Testament sacrifices to cease. (Vide Evidential Value Holy Eucharist).

It is hardly necessary to point out the general appropriateness of these selections to the season of Lent, or to the Collect, in which we beseech Almighty God "to be our defense against all our enemies." Jeremiah and Ezekiel are generally recognized as fit reading in Lent, but these selections are much more numerous and certainly more intelligible for being brought into connection with the historical situation. Note also that Lamentations falls into its rightful place just after Jerusalem's capture, followed by a message from Ezekial written after he had heard the sad news.

A Lenten Occupation—Retirement

That in the quiet seclusion of your own room, or 'mid the sacred surroundings of God's house, you may find time, yea MAKE time—to meditate upon the Cross and its momentous lessons of sin and holiness, of guilt and forgiveness, of love and its willing sacrifice; That you may think of life and its duties, of YOUR life and its actual condition in the sight of God;—That you may dwell on heaven and its hopes and promises;—Retirement, as far as possible, from excessive cares, from business projects, from all amusements; and even 'mid necessary duties, retirement in mind and the oft ascending, ejaculatory, wayside, prayer.

A Memorial Prayer

The following Memorial Prayer was offered at the consecration of St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn., a memorial of past members:

With gratitude to Thee, O Lord, we here commemorate "the great crowd of witnesses' who have lived and served Thee in this Church.

We thank Thee:

For the Bishops and Clergy who have ministered at Thy altar and shepherded Thy people, through all these years;

For the laymen and laywomen, who with patient generosity have given for the support of Thy kingdom and the relief of Thy poor;

For all those who, through the restless and unsettling years, have stood steadfast and faithful to the end;

For all the prayerful and vision-stayed souls whose memory is to us like an odor of sweet incense;

We pray Thee that the mantle of Thy Saints may fall on us and by Thy grace, we may prove ourselves worthy of the examples and accomplishments of the past.

And Thine, O Lord, be the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Confirmation Instructions

Catechism: Read the Baptismal office and recite the vows that are made. (Prayer Book, p. 257.)

Prop. 1.

The Sacrament of Holy Baptism was: (a) instituted by the Lord Himself, who bade His Apostles to preach and to baptize (St. Matt. xxviii:19); (b) was used by the Apostles as the means by which those who wished to be Christ's disciples were admitted to the fellowship of the Church (Acts ii:38 and 41: viii:12: xix:4 and 5); (c) and was described by Christ as being a birth into the Kingdom of Heaven (St. John iii:5).

There are those who talk about a purely spiritual baptism (whatever that may mean), but remember that Christ spoke of "water and the spirit" and that the Apostles baptized with water.

The things that are essential, therefore, to a proper baptism are:

(1) That the proper element, water, shall be used, either by being poured on the head, or else by immersion in the element.

(2) That the words which our Lord told us to use, viz: "in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost" shall be used.

(3) The Church has declared that baptism by a layman is valid, and while the Roman Catholic Church today baptizes converts, it is acting against the decision of one of its own Bishops, who in the third century spoke very vehemently against those who baptized schismatics.

Prop. 2.

The purpose of baptism is: (a) that the person may be received into the Church. It is at Baptism rather than at Confirmation that we become members of the Church; (b) that we may be regenerate, or born again, by the action of the Holy Spirit, who is the Lord and the Giver of Life. As that which is born of the flesh is flesh, so that which is born of the spirit is spirit; and so at Baptism we receive a spiritual birth, for flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of Heaven; (c) and in this baptism we receive also the "releasing from our sins" for we believe in the baptism for the remission of sin. Thus in baptism the Lord doth put away the sins of which we are truly repentant. Therefore, "Repent and be baptized" is the Church's admonition to adults. Infants, who are baptized have not sinned, but are innocent, and because of such is the Kingdom of Heaven, they need no repentance.

There are those who would make it necessary for a person to sin in order to be baptized, but not so the Church.

There are two kinds of people who may be baptized:

(1) Those who have not sinned and (2) those who are repentant.

Prop. 3.

At the time of baptism we make a solemn vow to Almighty God that we will do three things:

(1) Renounce the Devil and all forms of sin. This means that as a good soldier we will fight sin within us and without, following Christ as our Leader.

(2) Believe the Articles of the Christian Faith as contained in the Creed. The Creed recites the chief facts in Christ's life. These form the foundation of our faith.

(3) That we will obey God's Holy Will and Commandments. Or course this means the Ten Commandments which you have learned, but much more than these it means the two great Commandments, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and soul and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself" for "love is the fulfilling of the law."

Until you love a person you are not sure that you will not injure him, but if you really love God and your neighbor you will do that which you would have them do to you. In truth baptism is our enlistment "as good soldiers of Jesus Christ who are to fight manfully under His banner, the Cross, against sin, the world and the devil, and to continue His faithful soldier and servant unto our life's end."

A very sacred promise, which ought to prevent us ever from being a slacker or a deserter.

Remember the Lord is our Captain, and any hardship that we may suffer, He also has endured willingly for our sakes.

QUESTIONS

1. Who instituted the Sacrament and what obligation did He attach?
2. How were people made members of the Apostolic Church?
3. What does our Lord say takes place at Baptism?
4. Has anybody ever been commissioned by God to set aside Christ's commands?
5. Name the things that are essential to a valid Baptism.
6. What are the various purposes of Baptism?
7. State the promise that is made at Baptism and the obligation that it imposes.

TEXT

"Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven."

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

PRAYERS FOR MISSIONS

Most Gracious God, Who hath gathered into Thy Church a great company out of all nations; fulfill, we pray Thee, what Thou hast foretold by Thy Holy Prophets, that all the ends of the world should remember themselves and be turned unto Thee, and make all the kindreds of the nations worship before Thee; through the only Saviour of the world, Thy Son Jesus Christ, Our Lord. Amen.

Spirit of God, who from the beginning didst order and guide the labors of those sent forth to preach Thy Word, fail not us who aspire to evangelize the world before the night falls, in which no man can work. Fill us with eager expectancy, that Thou mayest find ample room for Thy great operations in the lives of Thy waiting disciples, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Saviour Christ, Lord of the Harvest, give gtrength and comfort, we pray Thee, to all who in distant or lonely places, are working for Thee. Make them to feel Thy constant presence with them, to guide and to bless, and grant that we at home, in our abundance and comfort, may never fail them nor forget them. May the knowledge that we are interested in them encourage them in their difficult work, and may they find unfailing joy and courage from Thee, and do their part faithfully in bringing Thy Kingdom. And unto God, the Father, Son, and Spirit shall be given endless praise. Amen and Amen.

Every-Day Religion

By Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

"THE MAN WHO WAS"

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be."

Rudyard Kipling has a very fascinating and ingenious story under the above caption. It was near the Khyber Pass, and evening mess was served, when a shot rang out, and presently the sentry brought into the room a man, whom Kipling describes as resembling a "heap of rags." He was unkempt, disheveled, and utterly dazed. In answer to the questions put to him by the officers, he could give no coherent response. There was nothing about his person, and no word upon his lips that indicated his identity. When all inquiries seemed futile, suddenly his gaze rested upon a silver centerpiece that had for many years belonged to the officers' mess of the White Hussars, and reaching his trembling hand towards it, he touched a hidden and secret spring and disclosed the fact that in some distant day he had been related to the distinguished company. A further evidence of his lost identity was disclosed when the regimental rolls were examined, and it was found that one Lieutenant Limmason had been lost to his command some 30 years before. With the return to the familiar things of the past, memory reasserted itself, and he was able to recognize himself and to recall the story of his early connections. In a word, the man who was, came back, and for a brief space he saw himself as one of the White Hussars, whose true life had long since ceased to be. He had literally been buried alive.

The story is suggestive, and is within the range of the possible. Fortunately, it does not fall to the lot of many men to pass through such a calamitous experience, but there is many a one of us who has come to boy or the youth who was, in the days of aspiration and large expectations. Unfortunately, to many a man the world proves a hard, severe and exacting task-master. The ideals of early life are all too frequently blighted and seemingly destroyed by experiences that harden the sensibilities and dissipate the early dreams. Some natures are so sensitive that they cannot withstand or overcome those world forces that seek to break down and destroy the finer conceptions of life, its obligations, privileges and opportunities. Now and again we speak of a life as embittered, and all too frequently we treat such a life with too little consideration and respect. Experience has taught us that neither criticism nor condemnation is effective to restore such a one. On the other hand, we have repeatedly observed, that the only reasonable process that sweetens and rstores is one of gentleness, intelligent kindness and deep human sympathy.

One of the saddest phases of this lost self, all too common with us, is that one that is disclosed in a life that has forgotten and renounced the early thing of its religious faith. We sometimes wonder how many men there are in the world who, so far as their religious conviction and devotional habit are concerned, are but living witnesses to a lost and buried ideal. Every now and again in the course of our contacts, we meet such an individual, and it has been our experience that the revival of these early ideals is almost invariably effected through the return to certain early associations, environments or personalities, long since out of sight and almost lost to memory, once related to the things of childhood and youth. Even a familiar tune or a hymn sung under the old roof-tree, or a longlost photograph, or the return to familiar scenes may suddenly destroy the later illusions and conceptions, break down the hardened and rebellious will, and bring the mind back again to a fresh expression and a new realization of forgotten hopes. Unfortunately the world at large, as it judges us, knows nothing of our antecedents, and we are rated good or bad, true or false, Christian or pagan, by what we seem to be today. The method of Jesus was far different. He appraised men for what they hoped to be, and repeatedly He revealed to their vision their forgotten selves. Recalling them to the high ideals of their better natures, He opened up before them new vistas of opportunities and hope.

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be," and it is this latent possibility that even in man's latest hour may restore him to the place which in the dreams and expectations of his youth he aspired unto.—Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

COMETS AND CONSTELLATIONS

A POPULAR SCIENTIFIC CONSIDERATION OF ASTRONOMICAL REFERENCES IN THE BIBLE

The Rev. James Henry Young, D. D.

Comets are among the most impressive and interesting of all the celestial phenomena. In early times they were usually supposed to predict war and calamity. Many Comets must have been seen in the skies of Palestine during the centuries that the Books of the Old Testament were in writing and collection. During the average lifetime a number of ordinary Comets, and at least one great Comet, like that of 1882, or 1858, or 1811 is visible. Halley's Comet appears every 76 years. It seems strange, therefore, that there is not a single reference in the Bible to Comets, unless it be Jude 13 "wandering stars, for whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." The reference here is probably not to Comets, but to meteors, which the writer supposed to be stars which left their fixed place, and wandered off into outer darkness.

The only reasonable explanation for such silence on so interesting celestial phenomena is that they were used by astrologers as means of divination, and the prophets were always most strongly opposed to divination. Jeremiah voices this opposition (10:2) "Thus saith the Lord, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of the heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them." In verse 11 he states that God is the Creator of the heavens. We might infer that some terrifying celestial phenomenon had occurred, which the astrologers were attempting to interpret. Isaiah (47:13) refers contemptuously to the astrologers as "star-gazers."

THE CONSTELLATIONS

From very early times names have been given to various groups of stars. The names of some of our constellations are comparatively recent, and some are very ancient. Orion is mentioned by Virgil "Nimbosus Orion," and there is no doubt that the same constellation is mentioned by Job (9:9, and 38:31. "Canst thou bind the sweet influence of the Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion.") The Pleiades rise earlier in the fall than Orion, and mark the season of full fruits harvest. So perhaps their "influences" are called good—while Orion ushers in the autumn storms, and men might wish to undo his influence. The next verse "Canst thou bring forth the Mazzaroth in his season" is a reference to all the "signs" or Constellations of the Zodiac, which mark the changing seasons. "Canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons" probably refers to the Constellation Ursa Major, the "Great Dipper." "Ayish with his sons," the name which Job uses, is the same as that which the Arabians give to the "Dipper." According to their story the four stars in the bowl of the Dipper are the four sons of Ayish, carrying his bier. The two farther stars in the handle are the daughters, while before them walks the nurse carrying the baby. The tiny star almost touching this star in the curve of the Dipper's handle is a test of good eyesight today. One with good eyes can see it on any clear moonless night. It is of the 6th magnitude-the lowest visible to the eye, while the other stars in the Dipper are 2nd magnitude.

In Acts 28:11 the two stars Castor and Pollax are mentioned, but here it is a Roman ship named for the two stars in the Constellation of "The Twins."

THE SUN IN GIDEON

The sun standing still at Joshua's command (Joshua 10:9-14) is not to be included among the celestial phenomena mentioned in the Bible, yet perhaps it needs a word of explanation in this connection.

The popular idea is that the Bible teaches that the Sun and moon actually stood still in the sky for a period of some hours, in order that Joshua's victory might be complete. This would mean that the earth stopped rotating on its axis, and then began again at the same rate as before, without disturbing anything, and without being noticed anywhere outside of Palestine, although astronomy was well developed in Babylonia. We find it impossible to believe this. It is not a question of what the omnipotence of God can or cannot do, but rather a question of God's wisdom. It does not seem possible that He had to or would interrupt a cosmic process in order to gain a tribal victory, nor are we left to the dilemma of either accepting the popular belief or else rejecting the authority of Scripture. The fact is, as the Bible itself states, that the passage is a quotation from the poetical "Book of Jashar." This book is not in the Bible, nor does the fact that it is there quoted give it the authority of Scripture. "The Books of the Kings of Judah and Israel" are also quoted, but we pass no judgment as to their value as history. Satan is several times quoted without giving to all or any of his utterances Divine authority.

Joshua's command to the Sun is in poetic form, as shown by paralellism of Sun and Moon, and therefore is to be included in the quotation.

The facts as made clear are that Joshua delivered a surprise attack and routed a superior force—as he reached the top of the hill he expressed, perhaps in the poetic form left to us, the wish that the day might could be complete. The victory was made complete by the violent hailstorm, and all Israel had to recognize that it was by Divine assistance that they won the victory. The poets in the Book of Jahsar represent Joshua's wish as fulfilled, and it was fulfilled, although not in the exact form in which it was expressed. If in a later victory the poet could say, "the stars in their courses fought against Sisera" because his army was drowned while fleeing across a swollen river, the present poet can say, "the Sun stood still" when he wants to emphasize the fact that through Divine assistance a victory was gained for which, without that assistance, the day would have been too short.

To make a real stumbling block of this is to be like the man who could not believe the Bible—He had no difficulty with the miracles, but he could not believe that the Children of Israel carried Noah's ark around with them all through their 40 years wandering in the desert.

A Problem That Must be Solved

For a soldier to mark time in Hawaii, a small group of islands in mid-Pacific, while his fellows are in France or are preparing to go to France, is the most irksome and exacting duty performed by any partisan of our army. This condition creates a problem that must be solved.

There is a great movement throughout the nation to assist the work of the Chaplains The garrison of Oahu, Hawaii, numbering thousands of men is little benefited by these activities. It remains for the Chaplains to do the best they can, handicapped as they are by lack of funds.

There is a tremendous percentage of men in the army stationed near Honolulu who are from the Middle West, from Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Colorado, Ohio, Indiana Illinois, Michigan. They need the generous interest of those inclined to assist in the Chaplain's work, more than anyone else.

Our most urgent need is ten thousand dollars to complete a Post Gymnasium at Schofield Barracks. There are easily ten men in the Middle West who could cover this need. How vital it is to have such a place for athletic recreation needs no emphasis.

A smaller, but very vital need is that of writing material. I urge that you help me place in the hands of our men easy facilities for writing home. Just twenty-five dollars a month would meet this need. Are there not twelve persons who will pledge the necessary funds for this cause for the next year?

We need Victrola records and popular songs; we need games, chess checkers, dominoes, parchesi, and even jig-saw puzzles. When you have finished your newspaper or your magazine mail them to the undersigned and we will see that they are placed in the eager hands of men in our hospitals, recruit camps, and guard houses.

Any contributions mailed to the undersigned will be put to the immediate use of our men of the Oahu Garrison.

Chaplain H. L. Winter, First U. S. Infantry, Schofield Bks., Oahu, Hawaii.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

St. Mary's Church, Daytona, Florida, has been enlarged at a cost of $4,600. The Rev. Dr. McKay is the Rector.

The Church School of St. Simon's Parish, Chicago, has assumed the support, for two years, of one of the fatherless children of France.

The new building of Christ Church, recently completed at Coventry, R. I., was dedicated by Bishop Perry, on February 3rd.

The beautiful new house of worship of Christ Church, Roanoke, Va., will be completed in time for the Easter services, when Bishop Tucker will be present and officiate at its dedication.

Mr. Joseph G. Johnson, Senior Warden of Holy Trinity Church, Monessen, Pa., writes: "Please send me a few sample copies of THE WITNESS and I will try what I can do in the way of securing subscriptions. I like the paper very much and think it is just what the rank and file of our Church people want. Its price is within the reach of all."

Bishop McCormick, writing from Paris, France, says: "If anyone thinks that the men do not want the clergy and the Church and the Prayer Book and the Sacraments, that person would only have to be here about twenty-four hours to be convinced of his error. I have already given out more than a thousand Prayer Books, and am cabling for as many thousands as can be sent."

The Rector of one of the South Country Parishes, as he entered an old-time Rhode Island house recently for a funeral service, was met at the door by the deacon-like undertaker with an imperturbable countenance, full of the importance of his business, who said in a subdued voice, "Go right up stairs, sir, and in the room at the top you may put on your shroud."—The Record.

The handsome new edifice of St. John's Church, Bangor, Maine, was formally opened on Quinquagesima Sunday, by Bishop Brewster, who officiated and gave the address, assisted by the Rector, the Rev. J. E. Hand, who presented to the Bishop at the evening service a class of fifty persons for Confirmation.

The Rev. A. A. McCallum, Overseas Chaplain of the 149th Field Artillery, suggests that "Inasmuch as troops are moving across the sea regularly, would it not be advisable to sing in Church, 'For those in peril on the sea,' more or less regularly? As a balance, thanksgiving should also be used for safe voyage. The Rector of Trinity Church, New York, used to say that most people must have perished at sea, so many asked for prayers but never gave thanks."

The Rev. Dr. Manning, Rector of Trinity Church, New York, writing from Camp Upton, L. I., where he is serving as a Volunteer Chaplain, says, "I have met two Priests here serving in the ranks—one as an officer, the other as a private, in an infantry regiment. The one who is a private was called out by the draft. I said to him: "You could, of course, have been exempted from military service, under the law." He replied: "Yes, but I did not wish to be exempted from service in this war."

The Rev. Dr. Weeks, Rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Niagara Falls, N. Y., in a letter to the boys on the Honor Roll of the Parish in war service, gave them some good advice, which men at home would do well to follow: "More is wrought by prayer, men, than we realize; and to me our hopes, our desires, our aspirations, are our prayers. Don't forget to pray, men, even if it is after you are gathered up in the blankets. Good Christians are better fighters as well as better neighbors, better brothers, lovers and husbands.

Hundreds of people crowded into St. Luke's Church, Pawtucket, R. I., and many others were unable to gain admission to a recent service incident to the dedication of a Service Flag. The service was conducted my the Rev. Arthur J. Watson, the new Rector of the Church, who read the names of twenty-five young men of the Parish serving in either the military, aviation or naval branches of the Government.

Regularity runs in families. It runs in the Goodier family of St. Philip's Parish, Crompton, Rhode Island, says The Record. There are three children in that family who have made a reputation for themselves and the family by regular attendance at Sunday School. Grace has not missed a session for nine years; William has not missed any for six years and little Alice has not missed in two years. They live, too, a long distance from the Church. It often happens that those far away appreciate highly what those nearby regard with indifference.

The Church people of Oregon presented to Bishop Sumner a wedding gift of $2,000 for Missions in the Diocese. The formal presentation of the gift was made at a meeting of the Diocesan Board of Church Extension, by the Chairman, Mr. W. J. Burns, who included in his remarks, says the Oregon Churchman, a quiet bit of humor, to the effect that inasmuch as the Bishop was assuming new responsibilities, the Committee was glad to have a part in relieving him of some of his older ones. The Bishop said that nothing that had occurred in the Diosese during the past year had given him such great pleasure or taken such a weight from his mind.

The Rev. E. H. Ganster, Rector of Christ Church, Waukegan, Ill., aroused by rumors questioning his Americanism, stated at a mid-week service that his father had lost a leg at Antietam, and declared that he himself was loyal to the core. "A rumor has reached me that I am pro-German," he said. "There is a little space of ground between the Rectory and the Church. It is walled in. I hereby issue a London prize ring, bare knuckle, tooth and claw challenge to any one in Waukegan, Chicago, and the world, who will come forward and just intimate by as much as an eye flicker that I am not an American."

The Girls' Friendly Society in America of the Second Province recently sent an ambulance to the French front. Contributions were received from the Diocese of New York, Newark, Long Island, Western New York, Albany, Central New York, and New Jersey, totalling $1,750—$150 more than was asked for. The offering was presented on the altar at St. Mary's Church, Brooklyn, and forwarded to Mr. Eliot Norton, who presented the ambulance through the Red Cross Society for service in France.

"It has been pointed out that the world has had three historic scourges —famine, pestilence and war, says the Rev. J. M. Hunter of Marietta, O. "Each one numbers its victims by the millions. Commerce killed famine, by railroads and steamships. Science killed pestilence. Who will kill war? Not Commerce and not Science, nor both of them together. Only Religion can kill war, for religion alone creates the new heart. Without religion we are without hope in the world. With God, and the Holy Trinity, in disasters we are safe and in wars we are at peace."

Week-day services are being conducted every day during Lent at Christ Church, Norfolk, Va., including a celebration of the Holy Communion, Morning and Evening Prayer, and on Tuesdays an organ recital at 8 p. m. The Rev. Floyd W. Tompkins, D. D., of Philadelphia, will conduct a Quiet Day for the women of the Parish on Tuesday, March 12th. In addition to the regular services held in the Church, the Rector, the Rev. Francis C. Steinmetz, S. T. D., the Rev. Albert G. Head, Curate, and the Rev. John E. Wales, Assistant Minister, are giving frequent addresses at the Military Camps near the city, and mid-day Lenten services for business people are being conducted at the American Theatre under the direction of Christ Church Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Rev. Franklyn Cole Sherman, Rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Akron, Ohio, is Chairman of the Akron Chapter of the American Red Cross, a Chapter of over eighty thousand members, the largest in proportion to population of any city in the country of over one hundred thousand people. He is also a member of the Executive Committee of the Summit County War Work Council of the Knights of Columbus Campaign. During the last Liberty Loan Campaign he addressed [illegible] and also spoke to ten thousand soldiers at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio. St. Paul's Church has postponed the building of its new $100,000 Parish House until the conclusion of the war. Twenty thousand dollars of the Parish House Fund have been invested in Liberty Bonds.

Through the generosity of Bishop Williams of Marquette, St. James' Parish, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., has been able to reduce the debt on the Church by $1,900, the Bishop having offered to take up a note for $900 if the Parish would raise at once $1,000 to meet another note of that amount. The $1,000 and more was raised the last week in January, the Bishop's generous offer was accepted, and the debt has been brought down to about $13,000. The Parish has recently received a set of black eucharistic vestments from the Guild of All Souls, and both a United States and a Service Flag to hang in the chancel. The Service Flag has on it thirty-four blue stars and one gold one, the latter in memory of Richard Endress, Jr., who lost his life in the battle of Vimy Ridge. Four Scout troops of the B. S. A. attended St. James' Church on Quinquagesima Sunday for their annual service. The Rector, the Rev. Stephen H. Alling, spoke to the boys on "Loyalty," the second Scout law.

The General Board of Religious Education has issued a pamphlet on "Studies in Religion for War Times," for use in discussion groups, which will be found intensely interesting and helpful, under efficient leadership. The pamphlet contains suggestive outlines for meditation and discussion, the general subject of which is, "The Temporal and the Eternal in the Light of the World War." The outlines cover six topics: Life and Disaster, Firm Foundations of Eternal Hope, From Temporal to Eternal in the Church's Life, Responsibility Unending, and God's Plan. An intelligent discussion of the topics along the lines suggested would doubtless solve the spiritual problems raised in the minds of many by the great world war. The outlines are so arranged as to be peculiarly adaptable to weekly discussion groups during the Lenten season, but might be used at any time as long as the war is on and people need spiritual guidance. The pamphlet may be had of the Board, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Personal Mention

Rev. J. F. Langton, Rector of Trinity Church, Jacksonville, Illinois, has received and declined a call to St. Paul's Church, Newport, Ky.

The Rev. Jonathan Watson, Rector of St. Paul's Parish, Grand Forks, N. D., has been appointed Field Secretary for the Junior Red Cross Society in the Northeastern part of his state.

The Rev. Arthur A. Burton of St. Alban's, Marshfield, has accepted the Rectorship of the Church of the Advent, San Francisco, Cal., and enters upon his new duties early in February. He should be addressed, 162 Hickory St., San Francisco.

The Rev. Edward F. Patterson, Rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Cleveland, Ohio, has been elected Secretary of the Diocese of Ohio to succeed the Rev. George P. Atwater, D. D., resigned.

The Rev. Addison E. Knickerbocker, Rector of Christ Church, Red Wing, Minn., has received a call to become the Rector of St. Peter's Church at Helena, Mont., and is giving the matter his consideration.

The Rev. James S. Holland, Rector of Christ Church, Yonkers, N. Y., has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Glen Cove, Long Island. He is the twin brother of Rev. Thomas B. Holland, Rector of St. John's Church, Brooklyn.

The Rev. John Howard Deming, Curate at St. Paul's Church, New Haven, Conn., who is a graduate of Brown University and was formerly a Baptist minister, has accepted a call to the Rectorship of St. George's Church, Newport, R. I.

Miss Mary C. Smith, Educational Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, Diocese of Minnesota, is conducting a series of Bible and Mission Study Classes, at Valley City, Jamestown, Bismark, Mandan, Dickinson and Beach, North Dakota.

Bishop Thurston of East Oklahoma, expects to spend two or three months at Lawton, Okla., whither he has gone at the request of the Church War Commission and with the consent of Bishop Brooke, to assist the Chaplains in Camp Doniphan, and to strengthen the work of the Church in that city, [illegible]

The Rev. G. G. Pitblado, of Fernandina, has accepted an appointment as Missionary Canon in Southern Florida. He will have his residence in Orlando. but his work will be mostly at the various Missions lying within a radius of some twenty miles around Orlando.

The Rev. G. H. Harris, having resigned as Secretary of the Diocese of Lexington, the Bishop has appointed in his place the Asst. Sec'y, the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons. Kindly send all communications for the Secretary of the Diocese to the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, "the Burton," Covington, Ky.

The Rev. Douglas Matthews, representing the Church Temperance Society, preached a strong sermon on "Christian Patriotism, Prohibition and the War," in St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, N. Y., February 10th. The Boy Scout Troops of the city observed their anniversary by attending a special service in the Church that afternoon and listened to an address by Mr. Matthews.

Mrs. Anna H. Tulley, aged 95, and probably the oldest communicant of the Church in the Missionary District of New Mexico, died at Glenco, N. M., on February 8th. The funeral occurred from the home of her son, Senator Tully, the Rev. E. S. Doan, officiating. Her son, Kivas, who died about two years ago in St. Louis, Mo., was a well-known ecclesiastical architect, and designed the altar and reredos of Christ Church Cathedral, that city.

All the Anglican Churches of Ottawa, Canada, united in a special Lenten service of intercession, in St. Matthew's Church in the Glebe, on Thursday evening, February 14th. The preacher was the Rev. D. Charles White, Rector of St. John's Church, Ogdensburg, N. Y. Eleven of the clergy of the city were in the procesion and the Bishop of Ottawa gave the benediction. The Litany from the new Canadian Prayer Book was used, also the intercessions for war times, authorized by the Bishop of Ottawa.

The Rev. Henry Neal Hyde, Rector of St. Philip's Church, Joplin, Missouri, has been elected Rector of the Parish of St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, Chicago. Mr. Hyde is a graduate of Yale College, class of 1895, and studied law at the New York Law School and theology at the General Seminary, class of 1903. He is Secretary of the Provincial Synod and a Judge of the Court of Review in the Province of the Southwest. His former Parishes were Trinity Church, Syracuse, N. Y., and Christ Church, Little Rock, Ark. He was a deputy to the General Conventions of 1910 and 1913. Mr. Hyde is a native of Syracuse, N. Y. During a two years' Rectorship in Joplin a large mortgaged indebtedness on St. Philip's Church has been discharged and the Church consecrated. Mr. Hyde expects to enter upon the work in Chicago immediately after Easter.

Western Michigan Notes

The Secretary of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church, the Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, came to Battle Creek to inspect the cantonment at Camp Custer, and see how the boys were getting on. He reported that he was much pleased by conditions there.

The United Lenten Services of the Churches of the City of Grand Rapids are being held at Grace Episcopal Church this year. They started off with a great deal of enthusiasm, and the Church was crowded on the night of the first United Service. Captain, the Rev. C. A. Mackintosh, an old Oxford man, now the Rector of St. James' Church, Guelph, Ontario, and for ten months in the front-line trenches doing Red Cross duty with the rank of Captain, was the speaker of the evening. He had much to say that was of deep interest. He has had a great deal of experience as a Chaplain in the army, having served in that capacity during the Boer War. He would still be at the front had he not been invalided home as a result of wounds suffered in ministering to wounded soldiers out in the open.

Capt. Mackintosh stated that—from a moral point of view—conditions in the army were superior to those in ordinary homes. This has been proven by the recent investigation conducted by the Canadian Government which showed but two per cent of the soldiers afflicted with disease, while of those arriving from farm and city over thirteen per cent were afflicted with various forms of disease.

Notes From Wyoming

Mr. John W. Hay of Rock Springs, one of the fairy godfathers of the Church in Wyoming, has recently promised to raise by April 1st the money necessary for the completion and equipment of the new building in which the Cathedral Home for Children, Laramie, will be located. This splendid property was purchased last year by Bishop Thomas from the ecclesiastical authority of the Roman Catholic Church, and is to be fitted for occupancy by the dependent children of the State, whose numbers have outgrown the Bishop's House in Laramie. All thanks to Mr. Hay for his splendid offer.

Christ Church, Cody, the Rev. Alan R. Chalmers, now stands free of the debt of over $700 which has been upon it for thirteen months. The debt was raised upon New Year's, and the people of Cody had reason for renewed energy as they faced the new year. The payment was made possible by many friends, but chief credit is due the Guild, which raised almost half of this indebtedness.

In the death of Mrs. R. E. Fitch of Laramie, which occurred Feb. 7th, the Board of Managers of the Cathedral Home for Children lost a most devoted and loyal member. Mrs. Fitch was formerly President of the Board, and was always one of its most ardent members. The burial service was read on Feb. 9th by Dean Thornberry of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie.

The Rev. Oliver Kingman, formerly of Colorado, has arrived in the District of Wyoming, and is Priest-in-Charge of All Saints' Church, Wheatland, with duty at the Missions in Chugwater, Glendo and adjacent points. Mr. Kingman began his work here on Sexagesima.

Mr. Howard R. Brinker, who graduated from the Philadelphia Divinity School at Midyear's, has begun his work at Christ Church, Douglas, with further duty at St. George's, Lusk. Mr. Brinker is a candidate for Holy Orders in the District of Wyoming, and has done Summer work in the State, having served at Meeteetse for three months in 1916, and at Glenrock during the Summer of 1917.

A daughter, Theresa, was born to the Rev. and Mrs. Alan Chalmers of Cody on the Feast of the Epiphany.

Southern Ohio News Notes

St. James' Church, Zanesville, Rev. Harry Hadley, Rector, has recently completed extensive improvements to the Parish House. Dining room and kitchen have been remodeled and redecorated, and the basement of the Church has been so reconstructed as to add a considerable amount of room for the expansion of the social activities of the Parish. St. James' Parish has also been the recipient recently of some valuable gifts, chief of which is the new Stier organ, valued at $5,000, and played for the first time Christmas Eve, the gift of Mrs. W. D. Schultz, a communicant. A silk processional flag and a Service Flag were also presented recently to St. James' by the Venerable Archdeacon and Mrs. Joseph H. Dodshon, whose home is in Zanesville.

Deaconess Leach, whose work has hitherto been confined to the Missions in the Hocking Valley mining district, will now devote half of her time to city Parish work in Columbus, the Church of the Good Shepherd having secured her services for a part of each week. She will devote her time while in Good Shepherd Parish chiefly to the Sunday School work and the girls' organizations which meet in the Parish House.

Announcement has just been made of the gift of a new $20,000 organ to Christ Church, Springfield, the donor being the widow of the late Governor Bushnell of Ohio. The new organ will be installed in June.

A pre-Lenten Quiet Day for the clergy was conducted by the Bishop Coadjutor in each of his Convocations, one in St. Andrew's Church, Dayton, the other in Trinity Church, Columbus. The morning sessions consisted of a celebration of the Holy Communion and address by the Bishop on the bearing of the Lenten Season upon the present-day world problems. The afternoon sessions were devoted to conferences on the relation of religion and the Church to the war.

EDITORIAL

"Peter Warming Himself"

The Atlantic Monthly has featured an article by Dr. Jas. H. Odell in which, to quote the Outlook, "he scores none too severely the Peters in the modern Church."

We have read the article in question and the first thing that struck us was the studied omission of any reference to the successor of Peter in the Vatican, who sat and warmed himself while his own people in Belgium were suffering the tortures of the damned, while their spiritual father at Rome uttered no protest against the outrage.

Why attack the Archbishop of Canterbury and leave unattacked the chief offender?

Why? unless it is because it is poor business to attack the Pope. Roman Catholics resent any reflections on this modern Peter.

This glaring omission at the very outset of the article gave it a very Petrine look, not so much in "warming himself" as in "omitting to tell the whole truth."

Dr. Odell and the Atlantic Monthly did not warm themselves by the fire, (they were warming other people), but we should think they would both have heard the cock crow when they omitted the Papal silence from their lay list of indictments. He would seem to have been the chief offender.

No, Mr. Atlantic Monthly, like those whom you were warming, you did not jeopardize good business by including the real Peter in your indictment. It has often been the case in this commercial age, that the chief offended escapes, for business reasons.

Then, too, just as it is not profitable to attack the Roman hierarchy, so it is most edifying to attack the Clergy. From the days of the Roman Arena to those of the American market place, the clergy have been a fair mark for attack. Of course the Church is responsible for every breakdown in our modern civilization and of course the Clergy are the Church. Did not Pope Boniface so declare in the Bull, "Clericis laicos"?

Was it not against this idea that the Reformation was supposed to have fought? Yet, today, whenever anything happens wrong in the body politic, from the breaking out of this war to the breaking down of Church leadership, the Clergy are to blame, for the Clergy are the Church.

Who are the Clergy? Who, but young men who have volunteered to fight against the vilest enemies, greed, vanity, egotism, lust and intemperance.

Of course the young man is discouraged from entering the ministry, that is, if he have any particular talents. His parents won't hear of it, his friends oppose it. There is no money in it. There is no future in it. So the leaders of university life go into more lucrative callings, and send their weaker brethren as substitutes into this most difficult warfare.

Now it would seem hardly fair, if I had employed a substitute to go into the war, to abuse him for cowardice. He may be a poor soldier, but I'm not the one to advertise it.

But it is even worse than that! When my substitute goes into the line, I shut down on his commissary department. The average Clergyman receives from the opulent men who have dodged the possibilities of being drafted into the Lord's work, the munificent average of $800.00 a year—about what a good roustabout can make in a freight depot. And then worse than that, my potential leader goes off to the golf [illegible] reads the Sunday paper instead of [illegible] his son seeking religious knowl-

[illegible] day's journey?" "Twice around

[illegible]ould stand up and lead the women [illegible]n violent oratorical charges (such [illegible]inst the Germans, but he has read

[illegible] to sing patriotic hymns and to be loyal to the flag, and he encourages his women to knit, and his men folk to subscribe to the Red Cross.

He doesn't lead because he cannot summon the self-centered and self-satisfied man of affairs, even so much as to say his prayers.

The Clergy are much like the Russian officers of Bolshevika regiments, who were shot by the regiments that they tried to lead into battle. It is easier to shoot your officers than to accept discipline.

I wish that, after the Dr. had abused these Peters for warming themselves, (and coal is dreadfully high for Peters to warm themselves on their $800 per), that he had gone on and suggested just how the Clergy should have done that leading.

As one of the accused prelates, we declared ourselves on the war, not timidly, but we lacked an audience; and the press wasn't publishing sermons; and the laymen weren't attending Church in large numbers; and so we question whether our voice got very far beyond the four walls of the Church in which we fulminated.

But then we did our best. Moreover, we failed to catch the Doctor's point, as to our Lord's interest in mundane affairs. We are inclined to think there were many atrocities committed by the Caesars of our Lord's day, and yet the only pertinent reference our Lord made to Caesar was the duty of "rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's."

No, Dr. Odell, St. John, like St. Cyprian, whom you quoted, was not an ecclesiastical statesman; they were of those who found their joy in the inner life, but neither St. John nor St. Cyprian were quitters in the hour of need.

We have known ecclesiastical statesmen in history. Some of them were fine, but the most of them were meddlesome bunglers, and we are of those who are inclined to believe that the Clergy have a wider and more useful field in training Christian men, women and children to be patriotic citizens, and to do their duty to the State, rather than to be usurping the place of Christian statesmen whose business it is to lead in the things that pertain to governments and armies. If the testimony of General Byng and General Pershing are worth anything, the best work that the Clergy have done, has been found in the Christian young men who offered themselves without waiting for a draft (the percentage of Christians in those first camps was very high) and in the Christian women who have worked like Trojans for those young men at the front, and in the Christian men who have lead the various drives. The weakness lies in our prosperous male citizenship of forty years old and upward, (whether Clergy or laity), whose only idea of patriotism is in purchasing Liberty Bonds with a 4 per cent bait attached.

The women and boys who were trained in the Churches are doing their stunts without interest.

We are sick of that particular kind of patriotism which cannot do anything because it has been investing in Liberty Bonds.

Why not give the Liberty Bonds? The real difficulty lies in the fact that while some are giving all that they have, there are others who are loaning at four per cent interest (that of course is all right in itself) but then thinking of themselves as patriots.

You don't have to pay an income tax on Liberty Bonds, and it is an excellent reason for not supporting charities, that you have invested in four per cents; but you are not a patriot until you give without a return.

Lent

The season of Lent is here. With what spirit have we entered this season? Is it in the spirit of self-righteousness, of self-martyrdom, of criticism, of excuse or of love?

Is your first thought one of vanity or self-righteousness?

"I am going to give up so and so. I thank God I don't keep Lent as some other Church members do. I fast twice in the week, etc." This spirit our Lord has explicitly condemned.

Or have you entered it in the spirit of self-martyrdom, glorying in the fact that the Church is compelling you to do some thing hard and difficult and you "put on a sad countenance and appear unto men to fast", making everyone around you a witness of your martyrdom.

Or have you entered it in a critical spirit, criticizing the wisdom of the Church in setting apart the Lenten season, looking for something at which you may carp and say, "Ah yes, if that is Lent, you don't catch me keeping it. If I keep Lent I wouldn't be a hypocrite, etc,"

There would be no great gain either if such a spirit did keep Lent. He (or she) might not be guilty of hypocracy but they are utterly lacking in the spirit of Jesus Christ. These mote-casters and beam-holders who are always criticizing the Church and justifying themselves have as little of the spirit of Christ as the hypocrite. They are merely another kind of nuisance.

Or have you the spirit of rebellion? It is all very well for the Church to tell us to keep Lent, but I for one will not allow myself to be dictated to. I obey no Priest rule. No, nor any one else except your own self will. Listen to Jesus Christ instructing his disciples who rebelled against obeying the Scribes and Pharisees. "The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat, whatsoever they bid you therefore, observe and do, but do not ye after their works."

Or have you entered it in the spirit of excuses. "I am buying a yoke of oxen," "I have married a wife," etc. If spiritual things are worth anything, they are worth everything and they come first not second in the arrangement of your time.

There is only one way in which to take up the duties of Lent, and that is in the spirit of a lover; that is, a lover of God and a lover of men. Lent is the tristing time of the human soul and God, when uninterrupted by social engagements and worldly enticements, you can creep close to Jesus Christ and tell Him of your love.

Lent in the Church should be like the home, which for many months has been entertaining company and enjoying a round of pleasure. But now the last guest has gone and the wife says to the husband, "For forty days we shall see much of each other."

"I am married unto you," saith the Lord.

Lent is the time to realize the wonderful beauty of this union by drawing near to God at the altar and in the closet and by keeping away every interruption that will interfere with your practicing the presence of God.

Correspondence

My dear Witness:—

Will you allow me to ask Dr. Young who to my thinking bore in a late issue, a false witness of the character of the "Star of Bethlehem"—how the conjunction of two—or even three—planets some millions of miles away could indicate to the strangers a particular house in a small country town?

The narrative, and the circumstances of the case require, that the guiding star should "stand over where the young child was."—It must have been a meteor a few feet above the earth.

Surely if the learned doctor has swallowed the miracle of the Incarnation—that the Royal infant the Orientals worshipped was no other personage than the Lord God of Hosts—the gullet of his spiritual body must have been so distended, that such a triviality as a miraculously suspended meteor—the guiding lamp of their guardian angel—need not even give him a tickle!

O tempora, O mores!—Why swallow a camel and then be at such trouble to strain out a gnat?

Yours for common sense,
H. MARTYN HART.

The Deanery, Denver.

THE REPLY

To the Witness:—

Dr. Hart's letter is an interesting instance of a very common tendency to read into the Bible narrative things which are not in it, and then to make orthodoxy consist of conformity to the additions rather than to the text: This is the method of German criticism.

He assumes that the "Star" indicated "a particular house" in Bethlehem. The Gospel does not say so, nor imply so. The "where the young child was" may mean town, or house, or cradle. If we are going to minutely specify, why not say it passed through the door, and into the room, and hung "a few feet over" the cradle.

The wise men came to Jerusalem asking in what town to look, not in what house. They were told in Bethlehem, and as they left Jerusalem "the star went before them and hung over where the young child was." It confirmed the directions that Bethlehem was the place. The context demands this, rather than the house or the cradle.

The "few feet above the ground" is wholly his own imagination. Such an appearance could by no possibility be called a "star," but would be an earthly phenomenon.

When they first saw the Star "in its rising," it was manifestly in the sky: it rose and set with the other stars. It must therefore have been in the sky when they saw it on the way to Bethlehem.

None of the Early Fathers, as far as I can ascertain, holds Dr. Hart's view. Origen says the "star" was a Comet. (Contra Clsum T. 58). The Protevangelium of James says it was an Evanescent star (as I suggested). Either of these views is more probable than Dr. Hart's fanciful addition to Scripture.

One may believe the miracle of the Incarnation, and the other miracles of Scripture without being forced thereby to believe every absurdity which any individual interpreter may read into the Sacred text.

The Epistle to The Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

No. 25

Vs. 20. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Blunt. Giving thanks always, i. e. offering the Holy Eucharist for which the word giving thanks has now become the formal name.

Wordsworth. For all things. Even for afflictions.

Theophylact. Not only for the good things but also for the hard things, both those which we know and those we do not know, for we are benefited by them all even if we do not know it. St. Chrysostom's habitual doxology was "Glory be to God for all things." These were his last words.

Ellicott. In the name.. The name of Christ is that general and holy element, as it were, in which everything is to be received, to be enjoined, to be done, and to be suffered.

Sadler. As He is the one Mediator, through whom all blessings come to us, so all our thanks for these blessings ascend to the Father through Him.

Vs. 21. Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God.

Submitting. The primary fact in the spiritual ethics of the Gospel is humiliation. Self is dethroned as against God, and consequently as against men.

Ellicott. The precept seems to have been suggested by the humble and loving spirit which is the moving principle of thanksgiving.

Wordsworth. Two elements of moral harmony are: Thankfulness to God and moral submission.

Sadler. Submitting ourselves to one another in the fear of God means that we are not to submit through fear of men or for the sake of advantage, or through natural shrinking or timidity, but because God desires to see the working of His grace within us in our yielding to one another.

Vs. 22. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord.

Wordsworth. Your own husbands. suggested by the prevalence of adultery.

Moule. These are words of special emphasis suggesting the holy specialty of the marriage relation.

Ellicott. Those specially yours, whom feeling as well as duty must prompt you to obey.

Gore. Wives are to be subordinate to their husbands as to the Lord. The husband's headship over his wife is the shadow of Christ's headship over the Church and that explains of what sort the husband's authority should be. For Christ's rule is for the advantage of the ruled. He rules the Church as Himself the Savior or deliverer from bondage, and the word Savior is full of associations of self-sacrificing love. So must it be with a Christian husband.

Moule. The submission of the wife is not a submission as to a Lord and master, but as a protector given by Christ.

Gore. Over against the subjection of woman St. Paul sets, and indeed gives more space to emphasize, the self-sacrifice and service which is due to her from the man.

Vs. 23. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the Church: and He is the Savior of the body.

Moule. The head.. The husband and the wife are one flesh and the husband in that sacred union is the leader, so Christ and the Church are one and Christ is the leader.

Chrysostom. Herein the Apostle grounds the duty of submission on the part of the wife. Christ is the head of the Church, and Savior of His Body. Such is the relation of a husband to his own wife. He is her head, and therefore has the pre-eminence; his office is also one of protection and conservation, and he has therefore a double claim to submission and affection on her side.

Blunt. The Savior.. The husband is here called a savior in the sense of a protector and sustainer.

Moule. The body.. The body is the Church viewed as a complete living organism.

Vs. 24. Therefore as the Church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything.

Monod. Their own.. There is an an emphasis in "own", a suggestion at once of a holy limit, as against wandering loves, and of the fact that not only does the wife belong to the husband, but the husband to the wife.

Sadler. In everything, i. e. in all lawful things, in everything that does not contravene the expressed will of God and the faith of Christ.

Moule. In all relations and interests. This great rule will of course be overruled by supreme allegiance to Christ, but its spirit will never be violated in the Christian home.

Vs. 25. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave Himself for it.

Gore. Love * * * even as Christ loved.. Christ's love for the Church is full of associations of self-sacrifice, so must it be with the Christian husband.

Blunt. Even as Christ loved the Church to the utmost, making it part of Himself by baptism and cherishing and nourishing it as part of Himself, so ought men to love their own wives to the utmost of their power, nourishing and cherishing them as a part of themselves.

Moule. Even as Christ.. What a standard for the man's conjugal love, in point of elevation, holiness, and self-sacrifice.

Monod. We may even say that demestic life is the triumph of the Christian faith.

Meyer. He gave Himself up. The giving up that is meant (viz. unto death) is a practical proof of the love

Vs. 26. That he might sanctify and clense it with the washing of waters by the word.

Ellicott. In order that.. Sanctification of the Church attendant on the remission of sins in baptism.

Ellicott. Sanctify and cleanse. Both sanctification and purification are dependent on the atoning death of Christ, the former as an act contemplated by it, the latter as an act included in it.

Sadler. St. Paul makes no difference between sanctification and purification. He puts sanctification first as implying the dedication to God by the person being engrafted in the body of Christ, the eternal or progressive sanctification being intended to follow.

Wordsworth. By the washing of the water. It is not the water alone which works this wonderful change, but it is the Holy Spirit working in the water and in the word of God preached and received with faith in the heart.

Chrysostom. By the word. By the words used in the form of Baptism, to wit, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Chost.

Ellicott. The word specifies the necessary accompaniment, that in which the baptismal purification is vouchsafed and without which it is not granted.

Moule. Attended by or conditioned by an utterance, i. e. not a mere laver of water but one which is what it is only as joined to declared truth.

Volunteer Service for Women

For a year we have seen recruiting cards for men, "Your country needs you—this means you!" But have we seen the appeal, "Your Church needs you?" And if we did would it arouse any thrill of loyalty—or love—or action in us?

Men are answering the call to the colors. Call it patriotism or loyalty—or what you will, it is beyond and above all Christianity. They are giving their lives for the principles of Christianity, and are laying their lives surely and truly at the foot of the Cross.

Four big words are built on Love. L is loyalty, O is obedience, V is volunteer, E is effort, and this Love is for Him who first loved us.

Now is the time that God is calling His people to an unexampled service, time when people are answering that of prayer and devotion; and now is the call, whether they be men in the trenches or women in the Churches.

Bishop Burleson of South Dakota told a very graphic story: The Captain of a ship, when fired upon, called all his men to arms; the stokers left their furnaces, the wheelmen, their wheel, and all manned the guns. When the ammunition ran out and they attempted to turn the boat for escape, the furnaces were out, the wheel was swerving from its course, they were at a standstill. No one had kept the fires!

What of the Church? The story is applicable.

It is because inquiries have come to us from girls anxious to do some phase of the Church's work, but who do not know where nor how, that we are prompted to tell of some of the volunteer work for girls and women. Write to the Bishop of any Missionary District and offer your services for a month or two months. He will be most happy for your help, and in that way you can see and do the practical social welfare work in the Mission field.

The Archdeanery of South Western Virginia, under the direction of Deaconess Williams at Dante, Va., has had such a plan for a number of years; Volunteer service in mining camps and mountain districts has been opened, where visiting among the people, club work among the boys and girls, teaching and work among children is made most interesting for splendid, fine, energetic girls. This volunteer work done by girls who felt they wanted something of the sort but who weren't real sure, has often led to permanent Church work by those who have "found themselves" in this way.

This "keeping the fires burning" is preparation and formation of plans for that great time which is coming after this horrible war shall cease—the Reconstruction Period. Our young people must be organized and taught the highest ideals of life, and our finest types of young American manhood and womanhood is often found in the isolated districts of our country. They are the young people who are calling and pleading for your love and sympathy—and they are the young people whom we must seek and train for the future generations and growth of this great nation of ours.

In Christ

The keynote of the Christian can be found in two words—in Christ. "If a man be in Christ, he is become a new creature. The old things have passed away. All things have become new."

In other words, another year is dead, and we are permitted to give it a decent burial. Let us bury into the old year all the remorse that has weighed upon our hearts, all the fears that have stalked forth from our weakness and unfaith, all the recollections of neglected opportunities, all the sins that have widened the chasm that holds us back from the love of our Divine Father, all the hate and indifference and formalism and stupidity and frivolousness of our ineffective lives; and we shall go forth into the new year just as the souls of the risen will go forth on the morning of the general resurrection, alive with the thrill and the ecstacy of a new life. We shall be able to do this. if we rouse ourselves to the meaning

Truth Speaking

In the 15th Psalm, wherein the inspired writer sets before us the character, or moral disposition, of the servant of God, we have truth speaking as one of the main qualities. In answer to the question: Lord, who shall dwell in Thy tabernacle; who shall rest upon thy holy hill, comes the answer: He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. In these days of rumors and lies which have wings, it is well to think of truth telling. This is one of the qualities of a Christian, but the full meaning of the term is not grasped

What Good Can I Get from Lent?

YOU CAN LEARN SINCERITY

The world is full of false representations, of "make-believes," of shams, of shadowy visions. The world calls darkness light, and light darkness; it calls bitter sweet, and sweet bitter, and tries to cover up all her guilty tracks with excuses, to make evil appear good.

On the other hand, every thought the Church presents to you during this Lenten season is real—the clearer revelation of great facts in human life. We view each fact as God views it, not as the world views it. We learn what life really is, what sin really is, what holiness really is, who man really is, and who God really is.

The moment you realize this real contrast that exists, that moment you will be inclined to faithfully use the means offered you in the Church to produce a real Christian life and real Christian growth.

Remember, 'tis the worldly mind alone that makes Lent a sham—an empty devotion.

You can get THIS good from Lent nation of liars in Scripture is against those who knowingly lie, not against those who consciously or unconsciously repeat what they do not know to be the truth, who pass along rumors, half-truths, and gossip without any thought as to the truth of what is said. To the true Christian, truth telling involves truth seeking and as a consequence reticence in speech. Reticence is a Christian virtue often forgotten by Christian people, and most often in the pulpits. If Christians, and for that matter non-Christians, would remember that in God's sight reticence is a part and an essential part of truth telling, and that a lie may be uttered in all sincerity simply because no pains have been taken to be sure that it is not true, there would be less scandal, less anger, and less misunderstanding in the world.

But truth telling involves a passion for truth. This necessitates an open mind and a frankness in discussion. Reticence does not mean that all conversation should cease, that there should not be discussion of vital matters, even rumors about these. It simply means that no speech shall be uttered as true or positively certain, until it is known to be such, and a fortiori no rumor which will harm or damage a man or the nation's welfare should be repeated as true. The way to ascertain truth is through discussion, reading, and conversation. And yet this is rare, especially in religious matters. "I believe so-and-so" is taken to be Q. E. D and the case is closed. To be truth-telling requires that one love the truth and seek for it in all places with openness of mind and frankness of speech, but with all reticence.

So the Psalmist asks the question of God: Lord, who shall abide in Thy tabernacle? And the answer comes: He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in (from) his heart. Hasty speech, narrowness of mind, pride which prevents frankness—all militate against union with God.

POEMS Worth Preserving

Selected by the Rev. F. L. Palmer

"THE PRAYER"

(One of the best things about the following verses is that the incident recorded in them is true.)

That bullets drive out Christ? If you
You say there's only evil in this war—had been
In Furnes with me that night . . .
what would you say,
I wonder?
It was ruin past all words—
Horror where joyous comfort used to be,
And not clean quiet death, for all day long
The great shells tore the little that remained
Like vultures on a body that still breathes.
They stopped as it grew dark. I looked about
The ghastly wilderness that once had been
The village street, and saw no other life
Except a Belgian soldier, shadowy
Among the shadows, and a little group
Of children creeping from a cellar school
And hurrying home. One older than the rest—
So little older!—mothered them along
Till all at once a stray belated shell
Whined suddenly out of the gloom, and burst
Near by. The babies wailed and clung together,
Helpless with fear. In vain the little mother Encouraged them—"But no! you
musn't cry,
That isn't brave, that isn't French!"
At last
She led her frightened brood across the way
To where there stood a roadside
Calvary
Bearing its sad, indomitable Christ—
Strange how the shells will spare just that!
I saw
So many . . . There they knelt, poor innocents,
Hand folded and eyes closed. I stole across
And stood behind them. "We must say our prayer—
Our Father which art in heaven," she began,
And all the little sobbing voices piped,
"Hallowed be Thy Name." From down the road
The Belgian soldier had come near.
I felt
Him standing there beside me in the dusk.
"Thy kingdom come—"
"Thy will be done on earth
As it is in heaven." The irony of it
In the same breath with heaven—what is hell?
Only a little child could pray like this.
"Give us this day our daily bread—"
A pause.
There was no answer. She repeated it Urgently. Still the hush. She opened wide Reproachful eyes at them. Their eyes were open
Also, and staring at the shadowy shapes
Of ruin all around them. Now that prayer
Had grown too hard even for little children.
"I know—I know—but we must say
the prayer."
She faltered. "Give us this day our daily bread,
And—and forgive—" she stopped.
"Our trespasses
As we forgive them who have trespassed against us."
The children turned amazed, to see who spoke
The words they could not. I, too, turned to him,
The soldier there beside me—and I looked Into King Albert's face . . . . I have no words
To tell you what I saw . . . . only I thought
That while a man's breast held a heart like that,
Christ was not—even here—so far away.

The Sermon

XIX.

"You are quite right," said the Parson as he sat in his easy chair, addressing his solitary listener, "the preparation and writing of the sermon is only part of the art of preaching. The next task is to deliver that sermon to the congregation. There is a vast difference between preparing and delivering a sermon. It is the difference between composing and playing a musical work. The sermon written or prepared is the score, the sermon delivered is the execution of the musical composition upon an instrument.

"But there is a difference too. A musician may render the work composed by another, with honesty, and with very great satisfaction to his auditors. A preacher cannot deliver the sermons of others without some loss. For a sermon is more than a composition. It is a cross section of truth, written in order to insure accuracy, substance, logical arrangement and brevity, but then absorbed by the preacher so that it becomes part of his personality and his personal message.

"This personal element in the sermon is that which vitalizes it. We are, today, hearing and reading much concerning the war. A man who has remained at home may give a very creditable lecture on the campaigns and battles, and he may find hearers. But let one come from the trenches, and deliver a first hand message, and the people throng to hear him. His method may be bad, the substance meagre, his information faulty, but the man has been there, and his personality puts vigor and conviction and interest into his words.

"So the preacher whose work and life are saturated with experience and contact with his fellows, brings a new force to the sermon. It becomes a mixture of what he has thought and what he has experienced. Phillips Brooks calls a sermon "Truth plus Personality.". It is the message of a man, not the conclusion of a scholar.

"This personal element in a sermon puts an added responsibility on the preacher. He must warm and light the manuscript, must put personal force into the message. Many a sermon, good as delivered, makes poor reading. The reason is that it lacks interpretation. Many a person can listen to Shakespeare's plays as interpreted by a fine actor. The same person cannot endure to read the same play in cold type. The interpreter is lacking.

"Perhaps the chief task of the preacher is to interpret, enforce, and vitalize the truth with living spoken words, enforced by a personility, which has been inspired by the truth of that which he is to deliver.

"Now we mortal men are limited in our gifts of expression. We either do not know how to give the message animation, or we are incapable of it. We try the tricks of oratory, or the machinery of rhetoric, but these are but meagre aids. The people may admire, but are not convinced.

"Our task is deeper than that. It is to convince ourselves first that the message we are delivering is of supreme importance to the hearer, that the cause we are advocating is of vital consequence, and that the practices and duties we are enforcing are of the greatest moment. We must forget ourselves in the weight of that which we are doing.

"There are two customary methods of delivering the message: reading, and speaking without manuscript. Of the merits of the two methods people have varying opinions. It is true that different preachers find one or the other of the two methods most congenial to his temperament. Many of the greatest preachers have read from the manuscript. Many great ones have not done so. This is a matter of technique which each preacher must master for himself. If he fails to master the best way of using the method which he chooses he naturally puts a non-conductor between himself and his hearers. But neither method is to be judged as inadequate because a preacher has not learned to use it. Either is effective properly used.

"For the fundamental excellence and effectiveness of a sermon, while it may be marred by a wrong method, lies far deeper than the method. It depends upon study and preparation, upon experience and insight, upon sympathy and wisdom, upon conviction and faith, upon a heart filled with the power of God and a life conformed to the will of God. When a sermon has this foundation it is like a living spring of water rising from the boundless stores in the bosom of the earth. When it lacks this foundation it is like a display of fireworks which burn themselves out. The living spring may not have a picturesque background but it flows constantly and refreshes the wayfarer. The fireworks may arouse our admiration and applause but they pass without affecting our lives.

"So the delivery of the sermon is the effort to make the truth of God prevail in the hearts of men. Look well to your preacher then. If you are seeking brilliance, interest and method you may find it, and all the rest too, but you may overlook the less conspicuous one, who in the power of God will really bring a sense of that power to the lives of men.

"There are countless preachers who have a richer message, a more vital message for their hearers; who really achieve more by their less conspicuous gifts, than their highly gifted brethren. When your vestry looks for a rector do not judge him by his ability to make the uninteresed sit up and take notice, but judge him by the substance of that which he brings weekly to sustain you in the pilgrimage of life."

elation of God so full of precious promise to those who study it; our "Orders" which date back through the centuries; our Prayer Book, with its treasure store of liturgy; our Christian Year. "Oh! with all we have, how much better we ought to be!"

The privilege entails responsibility, the duty of sharing. We are continually sharing secular things with our friends, then why not our spiritual things;—texts, religious books, any thing that has been a comfort to us, may help others. We are responsible ot God for our fellows: "Ye shall not see my face unless your brother be with you!" The Church should conquer the world— the fault is in her members.

CYNTHIA H. LAMB,
Diocesan Secretary of the "Daughters of the King" in Colorado.

The Primary Basis for Christian Unity

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Joseph Horsfall, Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Los Angeles, devoted the major part of his annual address at the recent Convention of his Diocese to the discussion of Christian Unity. It is a logical, intensely sympathetic and in some respects an unusual consideration of the subject, which must be read in full to get a clear understanding of the Bishop's position. Our limited space does not permit of more than a brief quotation:

"During the last few years we have heard a great deal about Christian Unity, and I believe that much that has been done in the interests of that cause has brought its blessings to organized Christianity. In making this statement, however, I think we must recognize that the influence has been shown in its indirect, rather than its direct, results. Let me explain. Long ago it did seem to me that we were

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE FORGET-ME-NOT

Why do they call that little blue flower "Forget-me-not"? Listen and I will tell you. A little fairy wandered from his home one day and was lost in the mountains far away. When he found that he was lost, he tried to go back upon the path by which he came, but try as he might, he could not find the way. He wandered around by day and by night, living on berries and sweet herbs that grew upon the sides of the lofty mountains. All the day long the hot sun beat upon him so that he grew faint and weary, but when night came he laid himself down to sleep and the moonbeams fell upon his little fact and kissed his weariness away. After many days, when he had grown so footsore that he could no longer go on, he found a little cave among the rocks, and there he thought he would make his home. It was not a large cave, as you may think, into which you might walk and find a room large enough for boys or girls to stretch out in and go to sleep, but a wee bit of a place, just large enough for a fairy. A doorway six inches high and a room inside not large enough for a boy's head, but still big enough for our little lost fairy. He carried leaves and moss, so that he might have a comfortable bed to sleep in, for it might be that he would have to live there many, many days, perhaps always. He made friends with all the birds and butterflies that lived upon the mountains and when there were days that he could not go out they brought him berries and other fruits to eat, and water to drink. In this way he lived for a long time, but he was lonely and longed for the company of other fairies, and the fairy banquet and the fairy dance. He had but one constant companion, a small blue flower that grew beside the entrance to his cave. These two talked together every day and told each other all they had learned in their different lives. The friendship of this sweet flower made him as happy as he could well be away from all his own people. So he grew to love her very much, and she loved him. He had been away so long that he thought the fairies must have forgotten him. But this was not so, for when the fairy queen found that he was missing, she sent out searchers in all directions. After a long time, by questioning the birds and butterflies, and the bees, they found him. Such a joyous meeting they had when they found him in his little cave far up in the mountains. He was glad to see them, glad to think of going home again. And yet he did not wish to leave the little blue flower he loved so well. He did not wish to stay there, nor could he take her away with him for she would fade away before he could reach his home. They had a long talk and both agreed that he must go away. When he was about to start he kissed the sweet blue flower. She sighed and kissed him in return and said "Forget-me-not." And so forever afterward that was her name.

Ringing Call for Enlistment in the Greatest of All Armies

Dean Bartlett's report to the General Board of Religious Education on the recruiting and support of candidates for Holy Orders showed that the supply of future Clergymen was endangered. While the Church gained communicants at the rate of two per cent per annum, the Clergy increased by less than one per cent. During the quarter century, ending in 1913, the communicants had increased 103 per cent while the Clergy had increased but 23 per cent, in other words, communicants increased four times as rapidly as the Clergy who minister to them. The report showed also the disturbing fact that a large proportion of our Clergy came from Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Roman Catholics. One Diocese reported "that fully half of the men entering our ministry today are importations." The Church is not self-maintaining and self-reproducing in the ministry.

While the war has partly created and partly revealed our needs, it has also given us the greatest chance in a half century for securing candidates. When the Civil War ended a remarkable number of remarkable men entered the ministry. The sober and quickening influence of war should be supplemented by a clear and ringing call for enlistment in the Greatest of All Armies. The necessary agents to spread the call are at hand: Chaplains, lay workers of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross—all might become recruiting sergeants for the Church.

At the conclusion of the report the Board voted to request the aid of the Chaplains and Church workers among the soldiers, in presenting the need of recruits for the ministry. It also voted to press the example of England who is raising 500,000 pounds for the education of soldiers who offer for the ministry, and confer with the War Commission concerning the raising of a fund for similar support in this country.

An Unusual Editor

Mr. W. T. Bost, who recently became the Editor of the North Carolina State Journal, published at Raleigh, is an earnest Churchman. In the course of his introductory editorial he said: "You will see, perhaps often, such expressions as the Kingdom of God, the Kingdom of Heaven and the Church of Christ. If they so frequently obtrude themselves into my thinking that I must make a concession to traditional prejudice, I shall step over 11 point type to 8 point and swipe or write a sermon. Above all the things that I could do, I'd like best to advance the cause of religion, wholly undetached from the life that we live. The Kingdom of God has no territory, time or character of its own to distinguish it from the common life. It is made out of human materials, the kingdom of present society transformed. It means more than some splendid Cathedral, some noble alley, into which men may take refuge from the bustle and stir of life. It is Zechariah's vision of a holiness that shall sound in the tinkling of the bells on the dray horses, in the rattle of the cabs, the horn of the motor bus, in the pots and kettles of the kitchen."

The Chief Opportunity of Lent

Among the many opportunities of this Lenten season, none compares with the opportunity to know Christ better, and to love Him more. If thou wouldst truly know thy friend, thou must be with him in times of trouble and affliction, and learn the deeper sorrows of his heart. If thou wouldst know thy Redeemer, thou must go with Him into the wilderness of temptation, into the upper chamber where "with desire have I desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer," into the garden of agony, into the judgment hall of rebuke and injustice and scorn, and to the bitter cross. Amid such scenes the appeal of Christ to your heart is persuasive, the sympathies of your soul are unlocked, the deeper devotion of your love is freely offered Him.

'Tis this knowledge the Church desires that you should secure, when she bids you dwell upon the sufferings of your Redeemer during these forty secluded, quiet days.

"Daughters of the King" in Colorado

The 17th Local Assembly of the "Daughters of the King" in the Diocese of Colorado met in the Guild Room of St. Peter's Parish on Thursday evening, February 7th at six o'clock.

Each "Daughter" had been asked to bring her lunch, coffee was furnished by St. Peter's Chapter, and a friendly, merry little supper resulted.

At seven-thirty o'clock the business meeting was called to order; the president, Mrs. W. W. Colvin, in the chair. Twenty-seven Daughters responded to roll-call. The minutes of the last meeting, officers and chapter reports were read; extension work reported; an announcement was made that the offertories taken would be used for defraying the travelling expenses of an extension worker.

The Rev. Harry Watts lead the devotional service. The Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the prayers of the Order were said; hymn 586 was sung; and then the speaker of the evening was introduced. Miss Juliet C. Smith comes to us from Topeka, Kansas, and is a most welcome addition to the Order in Colorado. She spoke of "Privilege and Responsibility."

Privilege first:—"A member of Christ, the child of God, an inheritor of the Kingdom of Heaven," and when we believe all this, believe that God loves us, we must be good, must obey His commands, must try to follow Christ and do His will.

There are heathen who have never heard of Christ, and heathen who have heard but never grasped the truth. Our God seeks men, our Saviour redeems men, our Holy Ghost comforts and guides in all perplexities.

It may not much matter what Church we die in; but our Church is so beautiful to live in! Our belief in Immortality; our Holy Communion, its comforts and blessings; our Revlearning, in the efforts we as a Church were making to foster this cause, where not to put the emphasis. For instance, I could see but little reason to hope for the unity of Christendom if we were to wait for that event until Christians first should have come to an agreement upon questions of philosophy, theology and ecclesiology. Such an agreement, therefore, so far as I could see, was not to be regarded as a primary, but rather as an intermediary or final means to the end. Indeed, I believe that many Christians who desire the unity of Christendom have been learning not to place very great emphasis, at the outset, upon plans for unity based upon definitions of the faith or methods of organization or administration. That ultimately there must be an agreement between Christian Churches upon principles which are really fundamental is to be assumed. Such an agreement must precede any practical reunion of Christendom. That, therefore, is an essential thing for us to plan for, but such an agreement as that, I believe, will never be reached except as it is approached through devotional channels, and that is my thesis today. It is my conviction that, if Christendom is ever to be reunited, the great stress must be laid upon the fact that the union of its parts will be dependent primarily and ultimately upon their spiritual rather than their intellectual attitude toward God and toward each other."

There is no Limit to What We Can Give

"The war of the United States against the German government is to destroy the thing that is destroying the peace of the world, and victory is worth any sacrifice we can make," declared the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., in a sermon preached at Christ Church Cathedral, New Orleans. "No matter if we give all our treasure, no matter how many of our sons are consumed by the horrible Moloch of the Kaiser, the struggle will be worth the price if the children of God are, through the sacrifice, enabled to live the life of God as revealed by God. Money has no value in itself. Money is merely what we make it—it is merely the reflection of our own souls. Some time ago a man said to me, 'You know, doctor, there is a limit to what we can give.' I asked him, 'What is the limit?' He couldn't answer. There is no limit. In the century and a half almost that has passed since the founding of our government to 1917, the United States spent only twenty-seven billion dollars on all its wars, internal development and improvements. Since April 1, 1917, the United States has already appropriated for this war nearly twenty-one billion dollars; and our financiers are now planning the distribution of another twenty-five billion dollar appropriation this year. Thus in two years we will have given nineteen billion dollars more than in all our previous history, and that is by no means the limit. There can be no limit to the sacrifice we can make for our cause and our heroes; and the financial sacrifice we are called on to make today constitutes the highest sacrifice of all, in that it sends the comfort of the Word to our boys at the front, dying for their great ideals, and fighting for our liberty and to preserve the great things of life which Germany showed she intended to destroy when she crossed the Belgian frontier and when she sank the Lusitania."

FOUR LECTURES ON RELIGION IN WAR-TIME

A Series of Papers by the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania

THE LORD OF HOSTS VS. THE WAR-GOD

There is one only God Who, since He is really God, works out unfailingly His Will for men in history, which Will, as revealed in Jesus Christ, is set unswervingly on righteousness, and wholly moved by love.

The Lord of Hosts Versus the War-God

I.

The problem is set: who is in control of our affairs: the War-God or the Lord of Hosts?

By the title which I have chosen for this lecture, I have tried to suggest a vivid contrast and antagonism which I believe is fundamental. We must face it and decide it if we are to reach the true spiritual meaning of the War.

Jewish faith, which is, and always must be, the fixed foundation of Christian faith, was centered in a veritable Lord of Hosts. Pagan mythology, revived in these latter days in Germany, not only by the military and political leaders for obvious ends, but equally by the philosophers and theologians, delights in honoring and worshipping the War-God.

The fight is on, and we are in it. It is a fight, as we well know, not merely between armies, nor even between nations, but between ideals, and, ultimately, between religions.

The War-God leads upon the one side. Even though he be nothing but an idol, without life or breath, still multitudes have made him the symbol of a living faith. The Lord of Hosts leads upon the other side: at least we are saying, with His ancient people, "The Lord of Hosts is with us." So I would have you picture it, this world convulsion: the Lord of Hosts versus the War-God. It may strike you as a rash, audacious fancy. But I believe it takes us straight to the heart of our subject. That is why I have introduced this course of lectures on Religion in War-Time in this way.

The Lord of Hosts versus the War-God: just what is the difference or distinction? If I may illustrate great things by small, I would ask you to consider and contrast a knife, keen, pointed, glittering, in a surgeon's hands and in a murderer's. Think, not of two different knives, but of the same knife, grasped and used first by the surgeon, then by the murderer.

You will notice a striking similarity up to a certain point. Indeed, all that your outward eyes can see will, in both cases, very closely correspond. There will perhaps be more haste, violence, passion, in the one case: more calmness and deliberation in the other. But the operation as a whole, the instrument employed, the muscles used, the flesh-cutting, the blood-shedding, will be the same.

And yet, however similar the outward look, you know quite well that you are witnessing two things as violently dissimilar as light and dark, as Heaven and Hell. Every ounce of manhood in you struggles to circumvent the murderer. Every gift and grace in you is given to support and help the surgeon. For the murderer strikes to kill—the surgeon operates to save. The surgeon is the lord and master of the knife. He has sure control of it. He guides it by his strength and skill. In his hands its sinister power of destruction is converted to the blessed ends of health and restoration. The murderer, on the other hand, is the knife's man.

The knife actually is his master, and he its slave. For it is the knife, as knife, that draws and fascinates him. "See,"the knife whispers in his ear, "I can cut and kill. I am made for that. That is my business." And the murderer yields to it, grasps it, and uses it, because he has cutting and killing in his heart.

You see the point so far. The surgeon versus the murderer: the master of the knife versus the knife-man: the Lord of Hosts versus the War-God.

II.

The first part of our answer: there is no War-God, though there is much to lead men to believe in him.

So far, perhaps, you see the point, —the meaning of the title I have chosen. But does the illustration really illustrate? Can we trust it as a guide? Does it fit the facts? We see the knife, the horrid knife of war, draining the life-blood of the nations. The tremendous question is: who is wielding it, the surgeon or the murderer? Who is in control, the War-God or the Lord of Hosts?

Well, take the War-God first. Is he the king and governor of the world, with other powers, if there be any, impotently looking on? Do not be too ready to deny it. Do not be too sure to begin with. Rather let us try to understand why men have believed in him and still believe in him.

It is a simple story and a plain argument. For one thing is very clear, namely, that, whether or no there be a War-God in the Heavens, there is certainly a great company on earth with murder in their hearts. Cain would not be given so early and so prominent a place in our sacred story unless the doing of murder were very typical of us. Think of the long catalogue of murderers, famous and infamous, in our history. Think how the list is added to each day, quite apart from the carnage of the battlefields. Here in Philadelphia we have had recent experience of "gunmen." It seems to be a well-recognized profession. One can hire murderers on a fixed and rather reasonable scale of prices. Then there are all the would-be murderers, with murder in their hearts, held back only by fear of consequences. They swell the ranks. Then there are those who, day by day and night by night, kill the souls of men and women and little children. These must be counted in. They are much worse than those who merely kill the bodies. Even so, we have not finished. There are plenty more. Strangely enough, it is Christianity itself which has opened our eyes to the prevalence of murder in the world. If it were not for Christ, we should never have known there was so much of it. For He taught us that "whoso hateth his brother is a murderer." If that be really true, it sets us thinking. It begins to look as if the world were fairly peopled with Cain's direct descendants.

It is often idly said that wholesale murder is going on in Europe on the battlefields. I think that is just what is not true. There is wholesale bloodshed going on. But bloodshedding is by no means identical with murder, the surgeon being witness. I think there is probably much more real murder going on behind the lines, at home, than on the battlefields.

Well, with all this in view, it is not hard to see where the War-God gets his credentials. Men have found the war-spirit so strong in their own hearts that they have set it up on high in Heaven and called it God. It needs an explanation. It is no rare, sporadic thing with man. It cannot be called abnormal, a species of insanity. It includes the race, or very nearly. It seems wrought into the fabric of the world. It seems part of the warp and woof of human nature. So men have argued that because there are so many killers on a small scale down below, there must be a killer on a grand scale up above. There must be a glorified gunman in the Heavens. There is a War-God.

Do you see now why I warned you a little while ago not to deny the Pagan creed too readily? why I was anxious that you should first understand it, and know the reason of it? It is, for us, impossible, unthinkable, blasphemous, leading to worse than atheism. It is a soul-destroying lie. Yes, but the truth which contradicts it cannot ignore all that the War-God stands for. For the notion of a War-God is built up on real facts. It comes out of real experience. There is a fearful mark of murder on our race. There is an unreckoned mass of murderers. If there were nothing else: even if murders and murderers were, among other facts, the most important or the most significant, then there would be no escape from the dreadful creed of Paganism. So it follows that if we are to cast away the War-God, and cling to our faith in the One God, Almighty, Holy, Righteous, Loving, we must have for Him credentials stronger and more convincing than the credentials of His rival. In and through all the facts: in spite of war and murder, in the very midst of it, He must be found and proved sufficient for our faith.

Now that means a high adventure, and it is very necessary that we should understand how bold and venturesome our faith must be, if, facing all the facts quite frankly, we are calmly, unfalteringly to repeat the creed: "I believe in One God, the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and earth, and of all things visible and invisible," With Cain and all his followers and fellows clearly in mind: with Belgium, Serbia and Armenia full in view: yes, with malice and hatred knocking at our hearts and seeking entrance, it means a real heroism and hardihood of faith, which perhaps we have not known heretofore, to say: "The Lord, He is the God; the Lord, He is the God."

New York Notes

THE PRESIDENT OF HOBART COLLEGE RESIGNS

New Yorkers are interested in the announced resignation of the President of Hobart College, Geneva, New York, to take effect July 1. Dr Powell recently returned from a tour of the European battle front, and his descriptive articles have been read by thousands of people. It is understood that he is now at work in the interests of the exchange of professorships and scholarships between English, French and American Universities. He has an unusual combination of practical and mystical abilities. In Northampton, Massachusetts, besides having a fine influence with the thinking students of Smith College, the noted institution of learning for women, he was a pioneer in the Emmanuel movement, and his book on that subject, as well as his illuminating analysis and criticisms of Christian Science, had a large circulation. He is one of that type of Churchmen who bring credit to the whole Church because they are scholars as well as men and Priests, and have for the movements and thinking of the day a fund of sympathy not too far removed from a sane and affectionate understanding of the Church itself. We can hardly spare such men in these perilous times when ancient and reliable principles of Church and Nation are at stake.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE AGITATION

Agitation for a stricter "Sabbath observance" is increased by two bills now before the state legislature. One, presented by Mr. Kierman, permits "base ball games to be played after half-past two o'clock Sunday afternoon, to witness which an admission may or may not be charged, and all noise unreasonably disturbing the peace of the day is prohibited." The other, introduced by Mr. Goldberg, would permit "fishing and other public sports and exercises and athletic games, between the hours of 3:30 and 6:30 p.m., on Sunday, if the owner or lessor of the grounds, where such athletic games are to be played consents thereto. All noises unnecessarily disturbing the peace of the day are prohibited."

The New York Sabbath Committee sends out a hurry call for Clergymen to make "brief, strong protests against these bills." At least one of our Clergy, Mr. Oldham, the new Rector of St. Ann's, Brooklyn, comes out boldly in favor of Sunday games, "provided they are quiet and at other than during morning hours of worship." This is in harmony with the traditional position of practical workers in the Anglican Church on both sides of the Atlantic, and there are many who hope that such a liberal policy will not be too readily reversed. If the Church is always found antagonistic to human amusements it will always find itself antagonized by the men and women who insist on pleasure, and the pleasures of life will become too dominant and too evil. This is a dilemma that must be faced in the light of two facts, first that the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath, and, second, that it is a mistake to associate Jewish Sabbatarian ideas with the Christian Sunday.

The Rev. John Robert Atkinson has been called to succeed the Rev E. H. Van Etten as Rector of Christ Church, Broadway and 71st street, New York City. Mr. Atkinson graduated from St. Stephen's College in 1890 and from the General Seminary in 1893. He served as assistant in St. George's and Calvary Churches, New York, and was Rector of Trinity Church, Elizabeth, N. J., from 1896 to 1911, where he did a notable work. As a youth he displayed unusual powers as an amateur actor and elocutionist, and his manner now in the pulpit is probably the most expressive in look and voice of any metropolitan preacher. Christ Church has a great history, in which the name of the Elder Dr. Shipman stands out as one of New York's most distinguished Rectors of a past generation. Since it moved up town it has not got hold of new people, and its progress has not always been forward, but the opportunity is a large one and there are hopes that Dr. Atkinson can meet it unusually well.

Diocese of Lexington Notes

SERVICES AT CATHEDRAL

Two special services of interest have been held recently at the Cathedral in Lexington. The Feast of Lights, for the members of the Junior Auxiliary, held in the Parish House by the Cathedral Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, with appropriate exercises followed by games. The service was made deeply impressive by the interpretation of the Feast by Mrs. John Scott, with the aid of candles. One tall candle, representing Christ, was used to light twelve smaller candles, which represented the Apostles, illustrating the receiving of their "light from Christ. Small candles, one to a child, numbering one hundred, were lighted from the twelve (Apostles) candles, impressing upon the children the thought of their "light" coming from the teachings of the Apostles.

The second service, held in the Church, commemorated the capture of Jerusalem, Rev. Dr. Richard Wilkinson preaching the sermon. At his request Bishop Burton set forth a special service for the occasion "appropriate to the thankfulness that should fill our hearts because the City of the Great King is at last in Christian hands."

CHURCH SERVICES AFFECTED

Cold weather, scarce coal and low pressure of gas have greatly affected Church services in this Diocese. Several of the Bishop's appointments for Episcopal Visitation have been postponed by request of the congregations, on account of travelling conditions and the difficulty of making Church buildings comfortable. In several places, for like reasons, services have been cancelled or held in private houses, Sunday School being held in Church Rectories where this was possible. Scarcity of coal and the low pressure of gas have also prevented services other than those of Sunday. With the moderation of the weather these conditions have been relieved somewhat.

The Daughters of the King celebrated their Twenty-First Anniversary at the home of Mrs. C. Ramager, Lexington, Ky. Reports from the President and the Treasurer showed their work to be in a flourishing condition, both as to growth and finance. The organization presented the Church with a set of handsome chancel rail cushions. Mrs. Ramager and her assistant, Mrs. Holmes, served refreshments.

At St. Andrew's Colored Church, Lexington, Bishop Burton dedicated an American flag, the gift of Captain Fred Herschler. Judge Lyman Chalkley, of the Law Department, University of Kentucky, Acting Lay Reader at St. Andrew's, presented the flag. Miss Curry Breckenridge spoke on the work of the Red Cross, telling of her thrilling experiences at the French front.

The wedding of Miss Nora Brooks to Mr. Harold Wentworth took place recently at Emmanuel Church, Winchester, Ky. Miss Brooks is one of the charming ladies of Winchester. Mr. Wentworth is the son of the Venerable F. B. Wentworth, Archdeacon for Mountain Educational and Financial work in this Diocese. He has taken charge of the Wentworth School Farm, recently instituted in connection with St. John's Collegiate Institute at Corbin, Ky., where with his bride he will live.

Death has entered the ranks of our Diocesan Communicants in recent weeks, removing from active work Miss R. Ford Heath, once a Missionary to Japan, who died at Massie Hospital, Paris, Ky. Miss Annie Douglas Gray, a real saint, instrumental in founding the House of Mercy, Lexington; a strong, active believer in the Second Coming of Christ, whose correspondence on the subject brought her in touch with leading Clergymen of the English Church and the late Bishop George Howard Wilkinson of the Scottish Church, in whose memoirs reference is made to her letters. Mrs. Ella Adair Ardroy, who died at Paris, Ky., and Mrs. John T. Shelby, wife of the Chancellor of the Diocese, who died at Lexington. The wife of Rev. J. H. Gibbons, Rector of Trinity Church, Covington, and Mrs. R. K. Massie, wife of Dean Massie of the Cathedral, have lost their mother recently.

Religion Has Done This For Me, It can do the Same for You

Mr. Ted Mercer and Mr. Tom Farmer, well-known laymen workers of New York, spent the week beginning Feb. 3rd in St. Paul's Parish, Akron, Ohio, the Rev. Franklin Cole Sherman, Rector. They addressed the men in the factories and spoke in all the High Schools. Three largely attended meetings were held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights in the Parish House. Splendid work was done among the men and boys of the Parish. From Akron they went to Emmanuel Church, Cleveland, and from there to Chicago, where they are spending a month holding Missions for men. The Akron Times says: "It is interesting to note that the two men are diametrically different in character, education, parentage and training. Mr. Mercer, a member of a well-known Southern family, is a university man. Mr. Farmer, the son of a saloon keeper, trained in childhood for a life of crime, and an ex-convict, has not had the advantages of an education. The two men met in an East Side Mission in New York City. Both men speak from their personal experience in addressing men. Their messages are plain spoken, frank and gripping. Their whole teaching is this: 'Religion has done this for me—it can do the same for you.'"

In Memoriam

FOR GOD AND COUNTRY

Hundreds of friends mourn the death of Corporal Elmer H. Van Fleet, son of the Rev. John B. Van Fleet, Rector of St. Stephen's Church, Winton Place, Ohio, who died of scarlet fever on Jan. 17th, while on his way to France.

Mr. Van Fleet was a young man of exceptional high moral character and splendid Christian manhood, and universally beloved by all who knew him.

He was graduated with highest honors from the University of Cincinnati last June, and had been awarded the Rhodes Scholarship of Oxford University, England. Had it not been for the war he would have entered Oxford, but with characteristic unselfishness he deemed his duty to his country and to humanity of greater moment than his own advancement, and so offered himself to the service of his country. He was the first of the 396 University of Cincinnati men to give his life for the cause of freedom. He had been elected to the Phi Beta Kappa Fraternity, a national organization, in which only students receiving highest marks are admitted.

Corporal Van Fleet has just as truly poured out his life on the altar of freedom as any who have fallen in battle, and he has not died in vain. His enthusiasm was so great that he would have desired to go even if he could have foreseen his sudden death.

In the hearts of all who knew him his death has left a void which cannot be filled, yet the wholesome influence for good which he radiated over all with whom he came in contact can never die. He is one "Of those immortal dead who live again

In minds made better by their presence."

We beseech thee, O Lord, pour Thy grace into our hearts; that, as we have known the incarnation of thy Son Jesus Christ by the message of an angel, so by His cross and passion we may be brought unto the glory of His resurrection; through the same Jesus Christ our Lord.

O God, who hast prepared for those who love Thee such good things as pass man's understanding; Pour into our hearts such love toward Thee, that we, loving Thee above all things, may obtain Thy promises, which exceed all that we can desire; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH

VOL. II. NO. 62 | HOBART, INDIANA, MARCH 9, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00A YEAR

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK A VISITOR TO AMERICA ON IMPORTANT MISSION

The idea suggested to many of our people by an English Archbishop probably is chiefly that of a high ecclesiastical dignitary, with a seat in the House of Lords, moving in select social circles, and a good deal removed from knowledge of, or sympathy with, the mass of ordinary people. Such a conception would be very far from a true picture of the present Archbishop of York, who is spending some weeks in this country, primarily with a view to strengthen the bonds between England and America at this critical time, when they are allies in the war to make the world safe for democracy. Dr. Lang is still a young man, not much over 50. He was brought up a Presbyterian, his father being the Moderator of the Scottish Presbyterian Kirk, but he came into the Church of England while at the University of Oxford, where he had a distinguished career. After his first Curacy, in the great Parish of Leeds, under Dr. Talbot, the present Bishop of Winchester, he went back to Oxford for three years, and exercised a wide influence over the students as a teacher of divinity at Magdalen College, and as Vicar of the University Church. Then he spent five years as Vicar of Portsea, an enormous Parish, with a large staff of clergy, part of the great naval depot at Portsmouth. After that, he was made Suffragan Bishop of East London, succeeding Bishop Ingram when he became Diocesan, and after eight years' work there, became Archbishop of York, a remarkable career of quickly advancing responsibility, justified by devoted and successful discharge of the duties of each post.

Our special point of interest may be in Dr. Lang's contact with the realities of life and of ministerial work. Leeds, Portsmouth and East London gave an experience of anything but cloistered shelter. This familiarity with ordinary life stands out in a little book which it would be helpful for our clergy generally to read. The Opportunity of the Church of England (published by Longmans) is the title of a course of lectures given in 1904 to men at Cambridge University, looking forward to Holy Orders. A few extracts will show the kind of man who is visiting us, and his ability to understand our problems, however different in some particulars our circumstances may be from those of English Churchmen. He insists on the necessity of adapting ourselves to actual conditions: "We have our unchanging creed, our definite ministry of Word and Sacraments; but these must be adapted to the conditions and calls of our day and generation. Language and methods which were suitable to the Middle Ages, or to England in the 16th, or 18th, or even 19th Century, may be no longer suitable to the England of today."

He points to two great characteristic evils of our time, and then shows how they are to be met. "(1) the dissolution of definite faith and custom in religion; (2) the indifference towards religion of the great masses of the people". "After all, it is said, "the breach with custom is often a vague impulse of sincerity. So far, it has a soul of goodness in it. Honest revolt is better than dishonest conformity."

With reference to Biblical criticism, the lecturer remarks: "Our ambition should be to restore their Bible to Englishmen, and to restore it enriched [redacted] the docility of the docile; let us give some of it to winning the freedom of the free." "Too often Church doctrine is repeated by the clergy as if it were a lesson learned by rote, as if it were a system in the air, without any context or background in actual human experience and need."

Sound and wholesome words, these, as suitable for America as for England. Let us hope that the Archbishop may give us many such counsels, and that they may be welcomed and taken to heart.

It should be mentioned that Archbishop Lang is the President and the chief inspirer and guide of the Church of England Men's Society, a great Guild, with a very simple rule, like our Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Death of Rev. Dr. Hewitt

The Rev. John Hewitt, Rector of St. Mark's, Coldwater, Mich., died suddenly on Tuesday, Feb. 19, at the Rectory.

Dr. Hewitt's life reads like a romance. He was the tenth father and son to take up the work of the ministry. He built ten churches. He placed ten men in the ministry, and had he lived to attend the next Convention, it would have been the tenth General Convention to which he had been a delegate.

During his Rectorate in Coldwater, Dr. Hewitt saw built one of the most commodious and convenient Parish Houses ever erected in a town the size of Coldwater. Dr. Hewitt had passed his three score and ten, yet he did the work of a young man while in Coldwater, leaving the Parish in better shape, after three years' labor, than it had been for years previous to his coming. Mr. Hewitt was beloved by all who knew him.

He was a Mason of high degree, and at one time he was Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery in Pennsylvania. He had taken the thirty-third degree in Masonry. The services were impressive, as the Masons, Elks and Knights Templar took part and went to the cemetery as well. All the ministers in town were there. Rich and poor, Jew and Gentile, black and white, religious and irreligious, paid their respects to the much-loved Rector of St. Mark's. One man, who had never been inside of a Church, broke his custom to attend the burial services. In the morning there was a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, and at 2:30 p. m. the services took place in the Church. The Rev. Lewis P. Franklin of Newark, Ohio, a friend of long standing to the Hewitts, read the Sentences, the Lesson, and made the address. In the absence of the Bishop, now in war work in France, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent of Grand Rapids read the Creed and gave the Blessing. Out-of-town clergy attending were the Rev. W. F. Bachman of Albion, Mich., the Rev. C. E. Bishop of Sturgis, and the Rev. D. C. Huntington of Grand Rapids.

The work of Dr. Hewitt, at his advanced age, was a constant rebuke and rebuttal of the current idea that a clergyman has passed his time of fruitfulness because he is beyond the meridian of life.

Church Hyphenates Who Excite Derision

The Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of Southern Florida, in his annual address before the recent Convocation of his District, said:

"Our Church has many members who are hyphenates—'semi-Episcopalians' is their proper title. For one or another flimsy consideration they were confirmed. They like the services when attractively rendered, and their pastor when he is an eloquent sermonizer and an attentive listener to their comments and complaints about the course of this world. But of the real value of creed and worship and Sacrament they have scarcely a glimmering.

"So they do not recognize that in supplying them, say, one Eucharist a month, albeit in a humble building and with a simple sermon, their Church is really doing a great thing for them. They mutter, 'If we can't have more than this, we don't want anything.' They make no allowances for the impossibility of giving them more; and they refuse support of personal attendance and of money contributions.

"Another class of our hyphenates dwell where there are regular services in well-appointed Churches. But they dislike the priest; or they dislike somebody in the Parish; or they dislike some bit of ritual; and so they stay away, not helping the Church, and not helped by the Church.

"All these hyphenates are worse than 'dead wood'; they are rotting wood which spreads contagion. It is my deliberate conviction that the Church in Southern Florida, probably in the whole of the United States, would be much better off if a considerable percentage of her nominal members would openly withdraw, and so release her clergy from the vain task of trying to minister to them."

The following is an excerpt from the Bishop's trenchant appeal for the support of the Church:

"The Church has no power of taxation. She depends absolutely on volunteer men and volunteer money.

"And the Church—using the term for all organized Christianity—must be saved, or the nation will not be worth saving. We might as well give in to Imperialism at once, and stop fighting.

"You and I believe our Church to be the best Christian society in the land—otherwise we would not remain in it. It is, as Westcott says, 'a Church which possesses in a unique combination a heritage of catholic doctrine, unbroken historical continuity, and intellectual freedom'. It is, as the author of 'John Inglesant' defines it, 'an agency by which the devotional instincts of human nature are enabled to exist side by side with the rational'.

"This Church must be preserved with full equipment and undiminished activity. And that means we must contribute time, and labor, and money to a greater degree than ever before. We are not to recoup our war expenditure by cutting down our religious expenditure; we are not to feed our soldiers by starving our Missionaries.

"Let none of our women say she can't work for the Guild because she is working for the Red Cross; let none of our men say he cannot pay for Missions because he is paying for aeroplanes.

THE NEW DESTROYER—THE TALBOT; THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN U. S. NAVY

An event of unusual interest to Church people was the launching of one of the newest and most powerful destroyers at Cramp's shipbuilding yards, near Philadelphia, on Wednesday, Feb. 20.

The name of the boat is "The Talbot", in memory of Commodore Silas Talbot, who rendered the colonies brilliant service in the Revolutionary War, capturing many British vessels. The Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, Bishop of Bethlehem, blessed the boat, and was assisted by his brother, the Rev. Robert Talbot of Washington, D. C. The beautiful ritual of christening was performed by Miss Elizabeth Talbot, a most winsome Missouri girl, niece of the Bishop. The launching was most auspicious, and we will follow the cruise with a new meaning in Longfellow's line, "Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee".

It would be most interesting to know of other "Church" boats in the U. S. Navy. Please report them to THE WITNESS.

"The nation has gone ahead. The Church now has the right of way.

"Nobody, I trust, will be so dense as to suppose I am advocating cessation of toil and expenditure for the Red Cross and similar objects. I am simply advocating attention to the just demands of the Church first. And then, if there seems no room for the Red Cross, cut out something else—some amusement, some luxury. The people who cannot attend a meeting of Vestry or Guild, but can play golf or cards every day—these people would excite a cackle of derision, were it not that they must rather arouse a profound sadness."

Dr. Stires Pays Tribute to Chaplain Who Saved His Son

The Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, Rector of St. Thomas' Church, New York City, in a recent sermon on "Sacrifice" referred to the wounding of his son, Earnest M. Stires, Jr., while driving an ambulance which was paid for and sent to France by the Parish. Young Mr. Stires has recovered and is now at Harvard University. In referring to the wounding of his son Dr. Stires said:

"An American lad of eighteen, driving an ambulance day after day, prepared in the early morning of August 1, 1917, to take a load of wounded to the base hospital. Within a few seconds four shells exploded close to him. The first stunned him, the second slightly wounded him. and the stretcher bearers in the dugout were afraid to venture out to bring in the body. A French Protestant Chaplain was at that advanced post, four hundred yards from the German line. Climbing out of a back window he worked his way to the front, drew the lad's body from beneath the ambulance and with the help which finally came carried him to the surgeons.

"He was the Rev. Ernest La Roche. You will permit this modest record of his name, for the lad he rescued was my son. A few days later this faithful minister answered his Master's call."

The Wilderness Lesson of Life

We live in two worlds—the physical and the spiritual. We are living two lives—the one putting us in contact with the material world and its daily duties and pleasures, the other charging us with duties and pleasures that are spiritual, which bind us to the world invisible. In the wilderness it was determined to which world man belongs, which is his true life. Character, virtue, integrity—moral elements—are definitions of manhood; these separate us from the beasts and make us lords of creation. And the more one lives in and among the invisible powers, so much the greater will be his lordship.

These are some of the explanations of Lent. These are some of its occupations, some of its benefits.

Bishop Hall Views General Boards and Commission With Suspicion

The Rt. Rev. A. C. A. Hall, D. D., in his annual address to the recent Convention of the Diocese of Vermont, said, "I have always favored Provincial action, and I believe that the development of the Provincial Synods may be of great service. I hope it may tend to free us from the multiplication, which I view with considerable suspicion, of General Boards and Commissions, to which a Church nominally Episcopal is in danger of being given over for government. Committees and commissions to prepare plans for action by a legislative body are of course necessary. But I distrust commissions for executive purposes. The General Board of Missions may be necessary—for the present. But the General Board of Religious Education and the General Commission on Social Service are to my mind of doubtful value. They can exercise no real authority, and I don't think they should have any. I am ready to co-operate with neighboring Dioceses, and I believe Diocesan peculiarities may be helpfully checked, as well as work stimulated, by such joint deliberation and action. But direction from a Board or Commission supposed to represent in its membership the whole Church, but owing to vast distances practically coming to be confined in its action to a small group round headquarters, is an entirely different thing. Apart from questions of ecclesiastical order, the circumstances, needs and possibilities of small and rural Dioceses are likely to be overlooked. We are in constant receipt of prescriptions dictated from the point of view of large cities."

Washington Gave the Boy a Silver Dollar

A certain Jeremiah Much (Mouch) lived in a house on Swanson St., Philadelphia, south of the Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') Church grounds, writes the Rev. P. R. Stockman in his Parish paper. "He was a contempory of the Rev. Nicholas Collin and was a soldier of Washington's Army in the Revolution. Sometime early in the year 1709, his son, Adam Much, was playing near the Church when a gentleman rode up on horseback and dismounted at the parsonage. He beckoned to the boy and asked him to hold the horse. After a visit with Dr. Collin, the gentleman called for his horse and asked some questions of the boy. Upon learning that the boy's father was an ex-soldier, he entered the Much house and insisted upon seeing Jeremiah Much. Adam still held the horse, and when the gentleman came out again he placed a dollar in the boy's hand and bade him good-bye. It was a large silver dollar, dated 1709, with the bust of Washington stamped upon it, and the gentleman himself was Washington. The mother of Jeremiah Much was the sister of Evan Evans, a famous preacher sent to the Colonies by the Bishop of London in pre-Revolutionary days. The "Washington Dollar" is still a prized possession of the Much heirs.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Wednesday Before Easter

THE EPISTLE

Where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you. Moreover, he sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us: nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. Heb. ix:16.

"The blood of the testament." As we read this there comes to mind the phrase, "The blood thereof, which is the life thereof." A man reveals his life in his testament as much as he does himself in his covenant. Many of the hopes and fears, many of the ambitions and plans which he has long lived in his heart, come to light in a man's last will and testament. His desire to speak, even though dead, is an imperishable desire. Moses found this desire inherent in the heart of man, and he consecrated it to a higher purpose. Our Blessed Lord does the same thing, only He shows us that healing and health lie not in the blood itself, but of the life of which the blood is a common carrier.

Notice that it was after "Moses had spoken every precept" that he used the blood, thus sealing the life of the precept to the life of the hearer by an outward and visible sign, which had its origin in the aspiring life of all peoples, and therefore could by them be easily understood and appreciated..

In the upward progress of the race, man learns to seek more and more earnestly for spiritual meanings; and in proportion as his vision is clear will those meanings be powerful and effective in his daily life. Christ's great mission was to show man that life was a sacramental thing, the outward and visible, made by hands, being mere carriers for the inward and spiritual, which are the heavenly things. He says He came that man might have "the more abundant life". And He warns us that more abundant life does not consist in the abundance of things which a man has. In fact, the more "things" a man possesses, the more difficult it is for him to see spirit and life in the words of Jesus, and hence the more difficult it is for such a one to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. Remember how St. Paul tells his congregation in Rome that "the Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost". So when the true Jesus is preached, or, rather, when Jesus is truly preached, we see that He expects to be preached as One who by His blood cements the life of His love to the life of our love, in order to purify those loves which are human figures of the true and eternal love, and make them happy and shining bright. God so loved the world that He gave Jesus to the world. Jesus so loved the world that of His covenant, His testament, is still being used in the Church by the Holy Ghost, the Life Giver, to tie our loves and our lives to His commandments, which are not grievous, and which mean life, wonderful life, to every one of us who will yield ourselves to His cleansing touch.

How much we Christians miss who are content only with the formal touch of the Sacramental cup, and know not what power issues therefrom to those who have washed their robes, that is, the "habits" of their daily lives, in His blood, and thereby have made them bright with His life, which is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

And how very important it is that we Christians, members of God's Kingdom, do our level best to bring this idea of Sacramental life into the haunts and habits of all men who dwell on the face of the earth, and thus to hasten Christ's "second coming without sin unto salvation".

THE GOSPEL

Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover. And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people. Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve. And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them. And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money. And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray him unto them in the absence of the multitude. Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed. And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat. And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare? And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in. And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house, The Master sayeth unto thee, Where is the guest chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he shall shew you a large upper room furnished: there make ready. And they went, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him. And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer: for I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves: for I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come. And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you. But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table. And truly the Son of man goeth, as it was determined: but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed! And they began to enquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing. And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth. Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren. And he said unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death. And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me. And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing. Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one. For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in me, And he was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning me have an end. And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough. And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples followed him. And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation. And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done. And there appeared an angel from heaven, strengthening him. And being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow, and said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. And while he yet spake, behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss him. But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss? When they which were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword? And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear. And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear, and healed him. Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves? When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness. Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off. And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them. But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him. And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not. And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not. And about the space of one hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him: for he is a Galilaean. And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew. And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter went out, and wept bitterly. And the men that held Jesus mocked him, and smote him. And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, Prophesy, who is it that smote thee? And many other things blasphemously spake they against him. And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the chief priests and the scribes came together, and led him into their council, saying, Art thou the Christ? tell us. And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe: and if I also ask you, ye will not answer me, nor let me go. Hereafter shall the Son of man sit on the right hand of the power of God. Then said they all, Art thou then the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am. And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth.—St. Luke xxii:1.

Today we begin St. Luke's version of our Saviour's most holy and wonderful passion. Surely he who companied with the Missionary St. Paul will have some unusual messages for us in his version of The Good Tidings. May the Holy Spirit help us to search them out, and take them home to ourselves.

Judas knew about testaments and covenants. And the covenant he and the high priests made clearly revealed the minds of those two parties to that covenant. They thought and talked about the Messianic Kingdom in terms of money, and Judas, in his disillusionment over the Kingdom that Jesus proposed, as compared with the one he thought Jesus was going to propose, made him speak cheaply of his Master, whom the chief priests and captains already held at a low price. Never let us present the dear Lord of mankind to those who know Him not as we know Him in any way that will cheapen or lower Him in their sight. I think this applies even to the buildings where we gather to worship Him, and present His claims to the passer-by, whether at home or abroad. Let us beware of so presenting our Lord, or His claims, anywhere or to anybody in such a way as to cheapen Him who is the Pearl of Great Price.

"Follow the man into the house", etc. If we would only be braver about "following" people, we would find that God had led those same people to expect us to talk to them about the Master, and that they already had a room waiting for us to "make ready" for Him. Timidity has lost many a soul to the Master's use. Let us not be afraid to speak to others about the Lord Jesus and His cause. Nine times out of every ten you will find them grateful and happy over your action.

"The New Testament in my blood." Let us remember that the old covenant was sprinkled with the blood of animals, but the new covenant is in the blood of Christ, and that our business is to see that every one has a chance to know and accept the terms of that new covenant, which is the great Sacramental message for material loving and material thinking people.

"When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Each of us is a "petros", a stone in God's building. It is a sign of the truly converted Christian when we see him strengthening his brethren. He who is interested only in his own self, his own Parish, his own Diocese, his own country, is a loose stone, and is out of place in the stronghold of faith—a dangerous stumbling stone, instead of a helpful stepping stone, hindering instead of serving his weaker brethren in the way of righteousness.

When Jesus is "reckoned among the transgressors", then His cause needs the defense of the sword. Let the sword be a literal sword if you please, but bear this in mind, that no material sword is going to make peace half as effectively as will the other "Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God". That is a two-edged sword, but its destructive and constructive work are absolutely necessary to change transgressors into followers, and no battles for our Blessed Lord are or can be turned into victories where the swords are only of steel.

"Lest ye enter into temptation." One of the reasons that we should pray, "Lead us not into temptation", lies in the fact that many of us do not know how to pray when we have "entered into temptation". Praying in temptation is an agonizing concentration to find the door of escape, and then to make a strong effort to use that door when we find it.

The great Mission cause fails of fulfillment because , of many a Christian who is essentially a Missionary born, it can never be said, as St. Luke said of Jesus, "He went as He was wont to the Mount of Olives". We do not get away into a place of retreat in order to gain that conversion or turning back again to those first and recreative things which will enable us to strengthen our brethren. Not only must we watch and pray, but we must also rise and pray. We must aim to be foresighted and forehanded Missionaries of the Cross.

"Peter followed afar off." Too many Christians are apt to follow afar off when the test time comes. Peter thought he was ready to go "into prison and to death" with Jesus, but when the test came he just "petered out". Too much of our religious life can be summed up in those two words, "peter out", which doubtless owed their origin to St. Peter's action. The solitary places might have blossomed like the roses of Sharon, only the few Church folk "petered out". They called themselves "followers" of Jesus, but they "followed afar off". Pray that ye enter not into that sad and disappointing procession. After "petering out", denial is apt to come. And then will come the eyes of the Lord, with their look of sorrow, regret and pathos. Oh, then for the tears of a true repentance! And then for the resolve to do your bit to help "feed those lambs and feed those sheep", for whom He gave up His life—for whom He shed His blood.

"What need we any further witness? We have heard of His own mouth." Listen to Him: "Other sheep I have which are not of this pasture: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." Tell me, how will the Good Shepherd bring home those other sheep, if we keep within our own fences, and never let Him use us to show how green are the pastures, and how still are the waters, where the Good Shepherd giveth His life for the sheep? By Thy Cross and Passion, dear Lord, deliver us from hardness of heart and contempt of this Thy Word and commandment!

An Occupation of Lent—Self-Denial

The germ principle of the Christian life;—Its practice the universal evidence of love, which is willing to spend and to be spent—to become a living sacrifice—for others. The test of our love for the Redeemer, whether we are willing to count all things else but loss to win Christ and to be found in Him;—Self-denial in food, in dress, in luxuries, in amusements, to produce also a "saving fund" for an acceptable Easter offering. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself."

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

WAR-TIME PRAYERS

"We have the guns now, and the men, and ammunition; what we need now is a nation on its knees."—Lord Roberts.

O Lord of Hosts, bless our soldiers and sailors; keep them pure and loyal amid their temptations; and grant that all their operations may tend to peace on earth; that they may fight nobly in their earthly warfare and maintain steadfastly the Christian conflict against sin, the world, and the devil, and triumph therein by thy victorious might, O Lord, thou God of Hosts.

O Almighty God, King of kings, our Father and our God, we commend to thy fatherly goodness the men of our army and navy and our allies, who are enduring the pains and perils of war for us on land and sea, under the sea and in the air. Be thou their tower of strength in the midst of so many and great dangers and help them, in life and death, to put their trust in thee, who art the only giver of all victory; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Defend, protect and sanctify, O Lord, we beseech thee, all those who wear thy cross and minister to thy suffering brethren. Keep them pure and true amid all their temptations; give them patience and tenderness, and the wisdom and guidance of the Holy Spirit in their work that in thee and for thee they may labour and be rewarded by thee.

As if no other sin were there,
That was to Him who bears the world
A load that He could scarcely bear."

Confirmation Instructions

by

Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, D. D.
Bishop Coadjutor of Colorado.

X

CONFIRMATION

Catechism (To read carefully the Confirmation Office) (p. 273).

Prop. 1.

In the Acts of the Apostles, we find that, closely connected with the Sacrament of Holy Baptism was the Rite of the Laying on of Hands, commonly known as Confirmation.

So close is the connection that many theologians have regarded this Rite as the completion of Holy Baptism, and a part of it. Certainly in the Eastern Church the two are performed at the same time, and as infants are baptized in the Eastern Church, they are also confirmed at that age.

But in the Western Church the two have been separated by a lapse of time, but not necessarily by any different view of the nature of the Rite.

Th essential parts of the Rite of Confirmation are:

1. The Candidate must have been baptized.
2. The outward and visible sign is the laying on of hands.
3. The Bishop must participate in this Rite. (In the Eastern Church by consecrating the oil which the priest uses in performing the Rite; in the Roman Church by a blow on the cheek from the Bishop; in the Anglican and Episcopal Churches by the more primitive method of laying on of hands by the Bishop in person.)

The grace conferred in the Rite is the gift of the Holy Spirit.

The grace of Confirmation differs from that of Baptism in that in the latter we receive by the Holy Spirit the gift of eternal life; in the former we receive the personal indwelling of God's Holy Spirit for our guidance and inspiration, and for the development of that special vocation within us to which we are called by the same Spirit. (See I Corinthians xii.)

Prop. 2.

In the separation of Baptism and Confirmation by a lapse of years, and in the requiring that a child come to the years of discretion (that is, moral responsibility) before being confirmed, the Church has given a double significance to the Rite.

1st, and chiefly of course, the gift which Christ promised would guide us into all truth and convince us of sin.

2nd, the marking of the age of moral responsibility,—a time when we should voluntarily assume the vows made by our sponsors in Baptism, ratifying and confirming the same; and also publicly bear witness to our acceptance of this responsibility and of Christ. It is much as if the United States should require a child born as a citizen of the U. S. A. to publicly confirm his responsibilities of such citizenship before assuming its full privileges. (It might be a good thing to do this.)

3rd. It is further directed in the Prayer Book that none be admitted to communion except such as have been confirmed or are ready and desirous of being confirmed.

This Rubric has caused us to be much critized by other religious bodies, (who have abandoned this Apostolic Rite) as being narrow and exclusive.

As a matter of fact, the Rubric was framed before those bodies existed, to prevent our own people from being careless in neglecting Confirmation and had no reference to the exclusion of these sects.

When the sects arose the Rubric was retained, because it was thought undesirable to allow a privilege to those outside of the Church's communion which we denied to our own children (viz, to come to the Sacrament unconfirmed).

Prop. 3.

The person who is confirmed takes or renews certain vows which are to be found in the Baptismal Office.

A vow is a solemn promise made to God, and pledges us to be faithful soldiers of Jesus Christ until our life's end. (I take it that means soldiers and not slackers.)

Of course, one who is born in the U. S. A. has the full responsibility to be a patriot without renewing that vow; even though he had no choice of his own in becoming an American.

So a baptized person, even though baptized in infancy by the piety of Christian parents, has the full responsibility of being loyal to his Church as he is to his country, but in Confirmation he voluntarily renews that vow, and assumes full responsibilities for that to which God already holds him responsible.

QUESTIONS

1. Where is the first Confirmation recorded? (Acts vi..)
2. What was the gift said to be imparted by the Rite?
3. What presumption is there that our Lord instituted the Rite? Ans.: The fact that the Apostles were trained by Him during the great forty days in the things pertaining to the Kingdom of Heaven and that the Apostles performed the Rite as soon as the necessity arose.
4. What relation does Confirmation have to Baptism?
5. What gift is conferred in each?
6. What are the essential elements in a valid Confirmation?
7. What difference between the Eastern and Western Church in its administration? What between Roman and Anglican?
8. What two aspects of the Rite do we get from the Western use?
9. What can you say about the Rubric excluding the non-confirmed from the Altar?

The Epistle to the Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

XXVI.

Vs. 27. That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.

Blunt: Present it to Himself. The salvation of the Church is represented as being wholly the work of Christ.

Ellicott: Christ permits neither attendants nor paranymphs to present the Bride. He alone presents, He receives.

Sadler: The presentation of the Church in glory is described in Rev. xxi:27.

Gore: The spiritual union of Christ and His Church is freed from the imperfection of sin, and has become the stainless counterpart of Christ Himself.

Estius: Spot, i. e., deformity of work. Wrinkle, duplicity of intention.

Grotius: Any such thing, i. e., anything that disfigures, like spots or wrinkles.

Sadler: That it should be holy and without blemish. This statement is founded on the sacrificial rule that the victim should be without spot or blemish.

Vs. 28. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself.

Moule: To love their wives. The Greek emphasizes the "selfness," so to speak, of the relation. His own wife—his own self.

Ellicott: As their own body. The context clearly implies that Christ loved the Church, not merely just as He loved His own body, but as being His own body, the body of which He is the head. They twain are one flesh. St. Matt. xiv:5.

Wordsworth: Here is the measure and end of conjugal love. It ought to be a love of self-sacrifice, and it ought not to be sullied with carnal impurity, but ought to have for its aim the spiritual holiness and everlasting glory of the wife.

Sadler: As Christ loved the Church which He made His own body, so ought the husband love his wife, as being his body.

Blunt: The unity of husband and wife is a parable of the unity of Christ and His Bride, the Church.

Ellicott: He that loveth his wife loveth himself. A man's wife is a part of his very self. His love for her is, therefore, in fact, self-love. "Amor proprius universal est."

Sadler: Christ considers the Church a part of Himself, and after His example the husband should consider his wife a part of himself.

Vs. 29. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourished and cherished it, even as the Lord the Church.

Wordsworth: For no man. He would not merely not be a Christian, but would not even be worthy of the name of a man, for no man ever yet hated his own flesh, and a man's wife is his own flesh.

Sadler: It is the destruction of the husband's happiness if he illtreat his wife. On the contrary, kindness and forbearance to the wife, after the example of Christ's conduct, is loving himself, and so conduces to his happiness and that of his household.

Ellicott: Nourisheth, i. e., ministers to its outward growth and happiness and development. Cherisheth; literally warmeth, the fostering warmth of the breast being the connecting idea.

Moule: No man ever yet hated his own flesh under normal conditions. Self-love, whether in the direction of the flesh or spirit, acts sinfully only when it acts outside God as the supreme and all-embracing Reason and Good.

Vs. 30. For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones.

Ellicott: Because we are members. The position seems emphatic. Members, not accidental, but integral parts of His body.

Wordsworth: Of his flesh. We derive our life from Christ, as a river flows from and out of its source, or as a tree springs up and receives its growth out of and from its roots. We are formed out of the flesh and bones of Christ by means of His Incarnation and by incorporation into His body.

Whitby: These are the very words that Adam used concerning Eve. Gen. ii:23.

Hooker: The words of Adam may be fitly the words of Christ concerning His Church. Flesh of my flesh and bone of my bones, a true native extract of mine own body.

Waterland: It is a self-communication of His Divine nature, by which Christ makes us to be His flesh and bone.

Ellicott: Our union with the Deity rests entirely in our mystical union with our Lord's humanity, which is personally united with His Divine nature, which is essentially united with God, the Father, the Head and Fountain of all.

Moule: Limbs of His body, and of His flesh, and out of His bones. Our true spiritual life and being is the derivative of His as he is our second Adam in a sense, so strong and real as to be figured by the physical derivation of Eve from Adam.

Vs. 31. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh.

Jerome: For this cause shall a man leave. Even as Christ left His Heavenly Father's house and married our nature, espoused Himself a Church on earth, and made her to be one flesh with Himself.

Taylor: Christ descended from the Father's bosom and contracted His Divinity with flesh and blood, and married our nature, and we became a Church.

Sadler: These are the words of Adam (Gen. ii), speaking prophetically about what would take place amongst his descendants. They set forth that the marriage union is closer than any other, so that, on account of it, a man severs that parental union which has been hitherto most binding upon him. Hitherto his first duty has been to his parents; now it is to his wife.

Hoffman: The words of Adam are the first prophecy in Scripture.

Wordsworth: They two. Literally the two. Marriage is only "inter duos", a protest against polygamy.

A Tradition of St. John

By the Rev. C. C. Gove

There is a beautiful tradition related of the beloved St. John, that when great age rendered him incapable of preaching long discourses, it was his habit to be carried into the Church, and as he sat in a chair among the brethren, he often repeated this tender exhortation: "Little children, love one another." This aged saint, it is said, when questioned why he so often repeated the same words, thus reducing his instructions to a single precept, was wont to reply, in substance: "Because this is the great command of Christ, our Lord, and if in spirit and act, you always observe this, you will be perfect Christians."

Whether it was the privilege of the Christians of Ephesus to hear these words fall from the saintly lips of their venerated Bishop, the beloved Apostle, St. John, cannot now be determined. But the tradition has taken such hold upon the minds and hearts of Christians, it is so in harmony with the character of the last of the Apostles, who by the grace of God was permitted to tarry upon earth after his holy associates had each, probably, earned a martyr's crown, that he might add to the Gospel that part of the Glad Tidings which bears his name, and that, as a lonely exile upon the Isle of Patmos, he might receive the Revelation which closes the canon of Holy Scripture—this tradition, I say, accords so completely with the spiritual tone of him who, in the upper room, at the Last Supper, leaned upon his Master's breast, that all Christians may well desire to accept it as true. Its tenor and teaching embody the spirit of Christ, and inculcate the chief doctrine and practice of our Saviour, and of His divinely inspired Apostles—notably of St. Paul, who in his address to the Corinthian Christians, summarizes the varied attributes of love, and declares that of the trinity of Christian virtues, "The greatest of these is charity."

Christian Religion the Paramount Issue, Says Henry Watterson

Mr. Henry Watterson, the eminent Editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, says: "Surely the future looks black enough; yet it holds a hope, a single hope. One, and one power only, can arrest the descent and save us. That is the Christian religion.

"Democracy is but a side issue. The paramount issue, underlying the issue of democracy, is the religion of Christ and Him crucified; the bedrock of civilization; the source and resource of all that is worth having in the world that is, that gives promise in the world to come, not as an abstraction; not as a huddle of sects and factions; but as a mighty force and principle of being."

The Observance of Lent

Every once in a while some one breaks out in a tirade against the observance of Lent. We have become rather hardened to the various names which have been applied to us for presuming to observe Lent as a piece of hypocrisy; that it is a man-made institution; that it is a time for those who serve the world, the flesh and the devil, at other times of the year, to give some time to religious observance, in order that they may prepare themselves for another year of dissipation.

Now we may be peculiar, but in the first place we never could understand what business any one has in my own observance of Lent. It has always seemed to me a very private matter.

It certainly is a very harmless custom, and need not interfere with any one else's liberty. Again, if it is proper to take one day in seven and devote it to religious observance, what possible impropriety is there in taking forty days from the year and devoting them to religious observation? The principle is exactly the same.

Again, if our Lord saw fit to retire into the wilderness (where they neither married nor were given in marriage) for forty days, certainly the retirement from social engagements for the same period is no more culpable in His disciples than it was in the Master.

In short, Lent should be a time in which every one pays strict attention to his own business. Those who observe Lent should make this their first rule, and those who do not observe Lent will find it an excellent tonic for the season of their non-observance.

If it be true that those who dissipate the rest of the year use Lent for religious purposes, let us be thankful that there is a season that they do respect. At any rate, let us be charitable toward their virtues, if we cannot be toward their vices.

Personally, we never noticed people who dissipate the rest of the year being very strenuous in the observance of Lent, but we are always willing to defer in those matters to those who are wiser than ourselves on such subjects.

Lent has its origin in the imitation of Christ (Acts xxvii:9). It is a time of abstinence. The Jewish Church had its fasts and feasts, and they are the basis of our fasts and feasts.

Easter is the preservation of the Passover; Whitsunday, of the Day of Pentecost, while Good Friday perpetuates the Day of Atonement.

When our Lord was on earth, He told His disciples that "the days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast" (St. Matt. ix:15). In another place (St. Matt. xi:6), he tells Christians that they are to be careful not to fast in order to be seen of men, but that they are to fast to be seen of God.

If, then, fasting is a Christian duty, when is it to be done? The Church gives us a regular season when this may be done with the least possible inconvenience to one another, and when the custom of the season conceals from public view our absence from gaiety and social pleasure.

We fast because Christ taught His disciples to fast. We fast in Lent because it is more convenient to have a season for fasting, and because our Lord set us an example of such a season.

Now, marrying and giving in marriage are enjoyable and festival occasions. Hence the season that the Church sets apart for fasting is not an appropriate one for a wedding feast.

We, therefore, decline to marry in Lent, because, as an official of the Church, we feel it to be our duty to safeguard the Church's season.

We do not take this stand because it is more profitable, but because Lent is no season for a Churchman to be married in, and for those who are not Churchmen, if they wish the Church to marry them, they must conform to her rules.

An every-member canvas was made of St. Paul's Parish, Brockton, Mass., one of the purposes of which was to secure a special pledge from seventy-two parishioners to each pay ten cents a Sunday until the end of the war for one of the absent soldiers represented on the service flag of the Parish. Each parishioner making such a pledge was given a little star to be attached to the envelopes for their offerings. The large number of young men enlisting in the service of the country necessitated this "drive" for others to assume the parochial obligations they had to relinquish.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

The Church War Commission have under consideration the placing of a Chaplain at an early date in charge of the religious welfare of the men at Camp McArthur, Waco, Texas.

At the request of the officers at Camp Upton, and of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church, and with the full approval of the Vestry of Trinity Church, the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning will continue his work as Chaplain at Camp Upton for an indefinite period. According to the first arrangement, Dr. Manning's term of service was to end March 1.

Miss Mary H. Stewardson, a devoted communicant of St. James' Church, Philadelphia, and well known as an active Church worker and deeply interested in Missions, died on Feb. 19. She is survived by two sisters and a brother, the Rev. Dr. Langdon C. Stewardson, Chaplain of Rosemary Hall, Greenwich, Conn., who was formerly Chaplain and Professor of Philosophy in Lehigh University, and President of Hobart College from 1903 to 1913.

Major E. P. Freemont, who is with the DuPont Powder Works, Carney's Point, Del., and a son of John C. Freemont, first candidate for President on the Republican ticket in 1856, gave an address before the Men's Club of Emmanuel Church, Wilmington, Del., Feb. 19, on the topic, "Japan as a World Power, and Her Relation to International Affairs". The Major served with the American forces in the Spanish-American War, and was stationed in the Philippines during the insurrection. During his stay there, he had occasion to visit Japan five times. He says the Japanese have envious eyes on the Philippines, and cannot imagine why the United States needs the islands, that they need the islands to raise rice for their people, and that the United States could well do without them. He stated that among the sources of Japan's strength was their intense patriotism and loyalty to their country and devotion to their families, and the unity of Japan in language, custom and purpose.

Thirty-three men have been led into the ministry through the Galilee Mission, Philadelphia, and last year there were over 1,200 men converted. The object of the Mission is to bring men to Christ. Gospel services are held every night and Sunday afternoon. It is one of the lagest and best equipped rescue Missions in America. A good bed, bath, bread and coffee, are furnished for ten cents, and meals for five and ten cents. Employment is secured for needy men. The Rev. J. J. D. Hall, is the Superintendent, and Mr. Geo. W. Wilkins, Assistant Superintendent. The following are the Board of Directors: The Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Ex-Officio; the Rev. Llewellyn N. Caley, President; J. Clifton Buck, Vice President; Edmund B. McCarthy, Secretary; Edward H. Bonsall, Treasurer. The Rt. Rev. Thos. J. Garland, D. D., the Rev. Floyd W. Tompkins, S. T. D., the Rev. Chas. C. Pierce, D. D., the Rev. Louis C. Washburn, D. D., John E. Baird, Franklin W. D'Olier, and William Waterall.

St. John's Church, Elkhart, Ind., is enjoying and making good use of the new Parish rooms which have been formed by renovating and attractively decorating the Church basement, at a cost of $1,000. A choir room, a spacious auditorium, a large kitchen, and a well constructed stage, add greatly to the equipment of this busy Parish. Three hand-sewed memorial flags were recently presented to the Parish and dedicated, including a processional flag given by Mrs. C. D. Roys; a service flag, containing sixteen stars, given by Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Borneman, and an American flag, given by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Foster. The latter gave a new Rectory to the Parish a year ago, as a memorial to their mothers.

Even the particular methods of the Church now receive national sanction. "Meatless days" are no new thing. "Apportionments" for Liberty Bonds and Red Cross are not strange to us who have this way of meeting onr missionary obligations and the government's bulletins on self-sacrifice and thrift remind us strongly of the Lenten addresses we have been hearing since childhood.—Carolina Church man.

"I have no sympathy" says the Rev. Dr. Lacey of Brooklyn, N. Y., "with the long-faced, straight-laced old fashioned orthodox hard-shell Puritan conception of religion. It belongs where the tombstones are. Mr. H. G. Wells dates his hostility to the Church from boyhood when he was a lad of 13 he was repelled by the severe Puritan discipline of his home. We must enter into sympathy with the young life and present religion as bright, happy, cheerful. Why should Church workers be queer, disagreeable, irritable, cersorious, harsh. Bishop Williams remarks that "social-reformers are hard to live with." This ought not to be if we catch the spirit of our great Master."

Personal Mention

The Rev. Henry B. Lee, Jr., has resigned the Rectorship of St. Paul's Parish, at Weston, West Virginia, and will become the Rector of Trinity Church, Towson, Md., April 1st.

The Rev. Robert D. Roller, D. D., Rector of St. John's Church, Charleston, W. Va., for the past thirty years, has resigned and has been elected Rector Emeritus of the Parish.

Mr. William Edmund Watson, Senior Warden of Christ Church, Fairmont, W. Va., for thirty-five years, died at his home at Smithtown, in his ninetieth year, on January 28th.

The Rev. Marshall M. Day, Rector of St. Alban's Church, Indiana Harbor, Ind., has resigned to accept the Rectorship of Grace Church, Muncie, Ind.

The Rev. Nicholas Rightor, formerly assistant Rector at Christ Church, Savannah, Ga., has entered upon his new work as Rector of Grace Church, Lake Providence, La.

The Rev. Glenn W. White, Rector of Christ Church, Albion, N. Y., has resigned to accept the Rectorship of Christ Church, Riverdale Ave., New York City. He will take up his new work shortly after Easter.

The Rev. T. W. C. Cheesman, who recently resigned from the Rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Pekin, Ill., has become the Rector of the Church of the Covenant, Junction City, Kans.

The Archbishop Germanos of the Syrian Orthodox Church held services in Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., for the Christian Syrians in the city. He is the head of the Syrian Orthodox Church in the United States.

The Rev. John R. Atkinson of New York, who has been in charge of Christ Church, Broadway and 71st St., that city, for the past three months, has accepted the Rectorship of the Parish. He succeeds the Rev. Edward H. Van Etten, who resigned last fall to become the Rector of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. J. R. Tolar, Jr., Vice President of the Tolar, Hart & Hart Mills at Fayettville, N. C., who has had long experience in the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, is engaged in religious work at Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C., with headquarters at the Y. M. C. A.

The Rev. Robert E. Gribbin, Chaplain at Camp Sevier, Green ville, S. C., on returning to Wilmington, N. C., for a visit, found that his home had been ransacked by burglars during his absence at Camp Sevier, and that practically every movable article of any value had been taken away.

The Rev. J. A. Schaad, formerly Rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, Minn., who for the past year has been conducting Missions and financial campaigns in the Diocese of Quincy, and for the Church in Detroit, Mich., has accepted a call to the Rectorship of Trinity Church, Bay City, Mich.

The Re. Norman B. Nash, who left Cambridge, Mass., some time ago, and has been doing Y. M. C. A. work in France, has been appointed Chaplain of an Indiana artillery regiment stationed at one of the large cantonments in France. Mr. Nash is a Harvard University man of the class of 1909, and while attending the Cambridge Divinity School was an instructor in the Department of Literature and the Interpretation of the New Testament.

The Rev. Byron Holly, Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Biloxi, Miss., by appointment of Bishop Bratton has been made one of the Diocesan Missioners for the Gulf Coast. Dr. G. N. Richardson, a former Congregational minister was ordained to the Deaconate on Wednesday, February 20th, at Trinity Church, Peru, Ind. He was presented for ordination to Bishop White by the Rev. Edward W. Averill, Rector of Trinity Church, Fort Wayne, Ind., who also preached the sermon. Mr. Averill states that Dr. Richardson is a man of scholarly attainments and forceful personality, and is doing a splendid work at Peru, where he has aroused the enthusiastic co-operation of the whole Parish.

The Rev. T. J. Lacey, Ph. D., was given a delightful supper by the members of the congregation in the Parish Hall of the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, N. Y., on the occasion of his fifteenth anniversary as Rector of the Parish in February. The speakers were the Rev. Geo. H. Hoover, Assistant Minister; Mr. L. K. Mangum on behalf of the Vestry, and Mrs. DeForrest, President of the Daughters of the King, who in a graceful address presented the Rector a desk and chair. Dr. Lacey was completely taken by surprise and made a brief reply. An informal social followed in which greetings were called for from those present and the assembly broke up at a late hour.

Who Should Observe Lent?

Therefore, Christians should be very careful to observe the season of Lent, to keep it thoroughly, earnestly, seriously, that they may lead the world to its Redeemer. Ought not the strong to help the weak? Ought not the thoughtful to help the frivolous? Ought not the wise to counsel the foolish and lead them away from their follies? Most certainly. It is for this purpose the Christian lives, and it is to this work of leadership he consecrates his influence. We are sons of God, and we must do for this world what the Son of God Himself did.

A Greek Funeral

The funeral of a Greek who was accidently killed in a coal mine, was held in the Church of the Holy Spirit, Gallup, New Mexico, on February 4th. About sixty countrymen of the deceased were in attendance. The burial service of the Prayer Book was used, supplemented by the Lord's Prayer, and the Nicene Creed which were said in modern Greek. As one of their number read the lesson in Greek, the congregation arose and remained standing reverently during the reading. At the close of the service in the Church the casket was removed to the vestibule, and as each Greek passed out he made the sign of the Cross and then impressed a kiss on the forehead of the deceased. At the grave portions of the burial service were also said in Greek. At the words of committal about a dozen persons cast a handful of earth upon the casket. The Rev. D. A. Sanford, who was in charge of the service, has shown a deep interest in the Greeks scattered among the numerous coal mining camps near Gallup and ministers to them religiously. Most of them are single men, but the deceased leaves a family in Greece.

Martyrdom a Christian Asset

Armenian martyrdom may yet work a miracle of everlasting good to the Turk and to the Christian world. In the providence of God, it is quite possible that the victims of Moslem hate and political diabolism, though dead, will exert an evangelizing missionary influence as potent as that which living ambassadors of the Christ have exerted.

Missionaries who know Turkey well say the slaying of Armenian Christians, the villainies inflicted upon women and children, and the deportation of thousands of helpless people from their homes to desert wastes, are crimes to be laid at the door of a clique of human brutes in power in Constantinople, and that probably 80 per cent of the Turkish population disapproved of these terrible deeds.

The superb courage of the buffeted Armenians, their Christ-like spirit, their refusal, in the very face of death, to renounce their faith, have made a profound impression on the minds of hundreds of thousands of Moslem Turks. The more intelligent subjects of the Sultan, who came to understand what Christian martyrdom means by observing it, realize better than ever before in their lives that there is something peculiarly vital and appealing in a faith that fortifies men to dare what these persecuted Armenians dared.

The Tukish masses have been impressed further by the unselfish work of Christian missionaries and Christian philanthropists in their behalf. It was not lost upon them that, in an atmosphere of wartime hate and political persecution, the missionaries went on with their ministries in a spirit of true charity and love, helping Moslem and Christian alike where help was needed. Every dollar contributed in this country to Armenian and Syrian relief is a silent missionary, helping to break down the religious barrier that stands in the way of Moslem evangelization. Every dollar also is a humanizing force, doing something to soften the asperities of war.

To make the most of the Christian martyrdom in that part of the world, it is the duty of Christians everywhere to keep on reaching out the hand of mercy and aid to the living. Particularly is this true of American Christians, upon whose beneficence almost entirely depends the saving of the survivors of Turkish outrages.

Christian ministers, teachers and college instructors have given their lives in the Turkish field as the price of loyalty to their great trusts. Christian schools, churches and hospitals are serving as barracks for Turkish troops. Few missionaries are left on the ground today, most of the survivors having been compelled to leave the country, but the wonderful influence of their stewardship abides through all the shocks of opposition. It is teaching the Moslem—possibly as nothing else could—that the true essence and spirit of the Christian religion have come not out of the Central Empires but out of the other lands where the teachings of the Nazarene are put above all others as pointing to the ideals and standards, ethical and spiritual, that men should strive for. —Minneapolis Tribune.

Shortage of Bibles Due to the War

A rather surprising shortage in our land of vast capabilities—for shortages as well as for other things—is a shortage of Bibles. Since the days of Gutenburg's first issue from movable metallic type, some 450 years ago, printing presses have been turning out Bibles, the clank of the presses at work on them following the morning salute to the flag around the world. Editions have ranged from thumb-nail sizes to great volumes, the cheaper copies running into the millions. Rightly held in reverence, the book is not one carelessly tossed aside or destroyed. It seems as if there must be Bibles extant for everybody's pocket, everybody's desk and everybody's parlor table. Such is not the case. Efforts to fill an order for five hundred thousand pocket Testaments for the Y. M. C. A. failed, though the search extended to Europe. The American Bible Society's presses have been running sixteen hours a day since May 1

Talks of Favorite Hymns

By Alice S. Millard

"A verse may win him who a sermon flies", wrote the Country Parson, almost three hundred years ago; and instances are not wanting in modern times of the power of an old familiar hymn to rouse the sleeping consciences of men and women who have sat unmoved and unconvinced throughout eloquent and earnest sermons.

We all love hymns. Most of us have our favorites, endeared, and one may say, without irreverence, sanctified to us by memories of bygone days.

It will be the purpose of this article, and of some succeeding, to trace the authorship and history of our best known hymns, both ancient and modern, and we believe that the study will emphasize still more their value and beauty.

Most ancient of the Christian hymns, apart from those taken directly from the Holy Scriptures, is the Gloria in Excelsis, or the Angelic Hymn, as it was called in the early Church, and which has been used in its present form since the middle of the fourth century, although fragments of it are found in still earlier writings. This hymn of praise did not always form part of the Communion Service, but for many centuries was sung at the opening of Morning Prayer. In 1552 it was placed in its present position in the Prayer Book.

Next in order of time came the Te Deum, the authorship of which is ascribed to St. Ambrose and St. Augustine. On Easter Day, in the year 387, Augustine was baptized in Milan by Ambrose, the Bishop, and there is a beautiful tradition that this glorious hymn of praise was first chanted antiphonally by the great Bishop and the young convert at that service. This may be only tradition, but it is an historical fact that the Te Deum was used as part of the morning service at Arles, in France, in the year 500. So, for almost fifteen centuries the Te Deum has voiced the praise, the faith and the supplications of all sorts and conditions of men in the Church. At the coronations of kings and emperors, at the services of national thanksgiving for perils averted and blessings bestowed, it has ever been heard. Great musicians have delighted in setting its words to exquisite melodies and harmonies, and great artists have pictured the glorious company of the Apostles, the good fellowship of the Prophets and the noble army of martyrs. At the concluding service of the Pan-Anglican Congress, held in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, on June 24th, 1908, it was in the Te Deum that the highest note of thanksgiving was reached: "We praise Thee, O God! We acknowledge Thee to be the Lord, Thine adorable, true, and only Son; also the Holy Ghost, the Comforter". So sang St. Augustine in the dim and distant days of the Fourth Century, and the same ancient words and the same ancient truths expressed the thankfulness and belief of that great congregation gathered from every quarter of the world fifteen hundred years later.

"So be it, Lord, Thy throne shall never,
Like earth's proud empires, pass away.
Thy Kingdom stands and grows forever,
Till all Thy creatures own Thy sway."

The Way, the Truth and the Life

If we had the power of exorcism, we would use it in casting out the statistical devil with which American religion is obsessed.

If there was one thing which our Lord failed to feature as a vital part of His Gospel, it was recording the number of souls which He converted, the size of the audience which He addressed, or whether His teaching attracted the multitude or dispersed them.

Our Lord was "the way, the truth and the life." "Narrow is the way and few there be that find it."

"Because I tell you the truth, therefore ye will not believe me."

"I am the living bread which came down from Heaven . . . . The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us His flesh to eat. . . . . From that time forth many of His disciples went back and walked no more with Him."

I do not mean that our Lord was not sensitive to popular approval. He was as sensitive to it as every tender hearted man always is to the good opinion of his fellow-men, but I mean that our Lord preferred to suffer loneliness and misunderstanding than to sacrifice the narrow way to latitudinarian vagueness; or revealed truth to sectarian prejudice; or eternal life to pragmatic opportunism.

We have a word to say under these three heads.

"The way" is a phrase frequently used in the New Testament.

"I am the way."

"After the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers."

"Narrow is the way that leadeth to eternal life."

Now the frequent interpretation of this last passage would seem to indicate that some people believe that the broadest minded of all men was advocating a narrow, pharisaical temperament as the Christian ideal.

It is a perfectly absurd interpretation. A study of the "Didache" (or Teaching of the Twelve), one of the earliest Christian writings, written in the second century, shows that the expression, the way, referred to the faith and practice of the Church.

Manifestly the analogy is to a path, which certainly does not lie inside of the man that is travelling, but outside of him; which is not something that he creates as he walks, but finds already prepared in order to save him stumbling through the wilderness.

If every traveller had to manufacture his own way as he walked, he would make mighty slow progress.

The path is prepared for us to save us unnecessary hindrance on our journey.

There are two paths, the one narrow, trod by our Saviour, first of all, and then by a small proportion of mankind.

The gate to this way is Holy Baptism, and the way is the faith and practice of the Christian Church which has been trod by her saints and confessors.

It is a simple path and therefore narrow.

The other road is broad, for it is made up of many paths, and when the traveller gets tired of one, he can step over into another. He is not committed to any particular path and it makes little difference which one he takes.

There are just two forms of religion—Christianity and Idolatry.

The latter sometimes worships gods of wood and stone, and sometimes those made of the gray matter of their own brains. Like the pagans of ancient Rome these household gods may be spanked or exchanged when they fail to suit.

A pagan can change his gods most readily, for none of them are real.

A Christian has only one way, and that narrow and unchangeable, because it is based on fixed facts and not on shifting opinions. A Christian could no more change his religion, because, for example, he didn't like the ritual, than he could change his mother because he didn't like the dress she wore.

Since it is based on facts, we cannot change those facts to suit our preference.

Truth is another aspect of the same principle.
It cannot be varied to suit the imagination.
But truth is a curious thing. You can, by getting hold of a fragment of it and refusing to accept the balance, so damage and distort it that it becomes a nuisance.

Take the vocations of men. Here is a Prussian General to whom the whole world is a military camp, and men are merely cannon fodder. To be sure military discipline is a fine thing in itself and in its place, but he makes it a monstrous thing which men despise and would rather die than submit to.

Or here is a Viennese doctor, to whom the whole world is a chemical laboratory, and the poor sick are merely automatic specimens for dissecting purposes. He may change a hospital from a house of mercy into a sort of experimental morgue.

Or here is an Italian priest to whom the world is a school of ecclesiastical politics in which the word of justice and truth is sacrificed to temporal expediency, and the Church a mere tool for political ends.

Or here is an American evangelist to whom the world is a place for him to utter war cries and count his scalps and call everybody a rascal but himself.

It is all one with the pharisaic spirit, "Those who trust in themselves that they are right and despise others."

To these belong many of the reformers, as well as many of the orthodox.

It is a state of mind, that, if the world is to be saved, it must be by that fraction of truth which they may have absorbed.

They take one feature of truth, like the human nose, and spread it over the face, until it is all nose and hideous.

Christ taught the whole truth and lost the sectaries who resented His unwillingness to subordinate the whole truth to their particular panacea.

But the American business man has introduced a new danger into the Christian faith. Like the rich man in the parable, he loves this world and wants it to grow. If he lives in a city of 50,000, he wants it to have 100,000; not that homes will be more comfortable nor society more delectable, but that the statistical devil within him may be satisfied as to population, bank receipts, and his own personal fortune, although the only really important rich man is the village squire.

The Church also feels this touch. It must show pew rents, souls saved, and confessions made.

No matter how sacred a soul's relations to God may be, it must be standardized and fitted into a statistical table.

The congregations are counted, not measured.

Moreover, the Church is a tremendous motive power. It must attach itself to all avenues of progress, civic, national, educational, social, political. Truly the Church is the greatest motive power in all history, but its function is to prepare men for eternal life; not primarily to convert them, but rather to introduce that leaven which, working secretly, leavens the whole lump.

There are just two things in the world that you can't advertize without ruining them both—a man's home relationships and his personal relations with Almighty God.

The business hand can so ruin religion that the more enormous it is, the more unsoluable it becomes.

A "Mission of the Incarnate Life"

ATTRACTED WIDE ATTENTION AND DEEP INTEREST IN WYOMING

A new method for Parochial Missions, devised by the Rev. Paul B. James of Torrington, Wyo., has been tried out with marked success in a mission in St. Luke's Church, Buffalo, Wyo., conducted by the Rev. Mr. James, assisted by the Rev. Rowland F. Philbrook of Glenrock and by the Vicar of St. Luke's, the Rev. Samuel E. West. Twelve scenes from the life of Christ formed the basis of both instructions and sermons, each of these scenes supplying the topic of one complete service of the mission. The description of the scene and of its function in our Lord's life and teaching, with brief comment suggesting the thoughts the event might have produced in His own human consciousness or in that of one or more participants or witnesses, formed a separate "exercise" each evening, the Missioner who was to read the lesson having this portion of the work assigned to him.

The following list of the scenes described, together with topics of instructions and sermons developed therefrom, will help to explain the method:

The first part is the scene, the second part the instruction and the last the sermon.

The Birth at Bethlehem—The New Birth (Baptism)—"The Infant Child in our Hearts."

The Baptism in Jordan—Confirmation—"Vocation."

The Wilderness Temptation—The Three Notable Duties—"Temptation."

Peter's Confession and the Transfiguration—The Incarnation—"What Manner of Men are We?"

The Cleansing of the Temple—Repentance—"Cleansing the Body of Christ and the Temple of the Holy Ghost."

The Last Supper—Holy Communion—"The Bread of Life."

The Betrayal of Our Lord—Sin—"Judas and Ourselves."

The Trial of our Lord—the Christian and the World—"Christianity and the World."

The Crucifixion—The Atonement—"The Captain of Our Salvation."

The Great Sabbath—After Death, What?—"The Communion of Saints."

The Resurrection—(Sermon only). Ascension and Pentecost—Priesthood and Sacrifice—"The Holy Catholic Church."

From the foregoing it will be seen that, in its descriptive portions, the "Mission of the Incarnate Life" employs a principle known to everyone who has learned how to make a Meditation, i. e., the objective delineation of a scene; that its general method is but an extension of that of the "Three Hours" service for Good Friday to other events in Our Lord's life; and that, in effect, it is a condensed presentation of the Christian Year. The events chosen for treatment, of course, admit a great deal of variation.

The advantages of the method appear to be: (a) Definite instruction in the life of Christ; (b) The linking of Christian doctrine and practice to their source in His life and teaching; (c) Emphasis on the motives which produce conversion more than on conversion itself as a subjective experience; (d) Dependence upon the silent preaching of Jesus Christ Himself in the hearts of the hearers, rather than upon the personal gifts of the Missioner; (e) General harmony of the method with the Church's system of teaching, eliminating the usual hiatus between a parochial mission and the "follow-up" work of the Parish Priest when the mission is over. It is too early for more than a general summary of results from the mission at Buffalo. These, however, may be noted: (1) Increasing interest and attendance, especially of men; (2) An unusual number of resolution cards signed and returned, most of them indicating serious thought, self-examination and prayer; (3) The clearing away of much misunderstanding about the Church and the Christian religion; (4) The awakening of several "lapsed" communicants; (5) The breaking down, especially among business men, of cynical indifference to the claims of Christ and the Church; (6) The discovery of several candidates for confirmation; (7) 20 per cent increase in regular subscriptions for the support of the Parish; (8) Promises secured from fourteen business men to make an "Every-Member Canvass."

Carry an Altar Three Miles Facing a Blizzard at Camp Grant

The work of the Chaplains and Secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in war service at the camps in this country is less spectacular than that of the man who "goes over the top" at the front, but is none the less a trial of manhood. That the Chaplains and Secretaries stand the trial without flinching, and display no little heroism, is evidenced by the story which has come to our table of a trying experience undergone by Chaplain F. E. Wilson and Secretary Herbert W. Raymond, at Camp Grant, located near Rockford, Ill., who carried a portable Altar three miles through snow drifts, and in face of a raging blizzard, in order that a few men might receive the Holy Communion.

There are 25,000 men stationed at the camp, which covers 5,000 acres, and is a city of "magnificent distances". It was on a Sunday morning, at 6 o'clock, that the Chaplain and Secretary hastily dressed, in a room where the fires had been extinguished for hours, and the thermometer registered 14 below zero, and prepared to start on their memorable journey. The whistling of the wind and the swish of the snow and hail against the window panes, thickly covered with frost, indicated the severity of the storm raging without. In their heavy ulsters, they started for the mess hall, one mile away. The driving hail cut their faces as they floundered through great snow drifts, with bodies bent against the gale. A tin of oatmeal and a bowl of coffee gave the strength needed for the work ahead. Returning to headquarters, they paused to get warm and "screw up their courage" before venturing forth to the Chapel at the Base Hospital. They carried with them to the Chapel a dozen Prayer Books and a portable Altar, about the size of a large suitcase, made of thin wood, and within it all the necessary fittings. They took turns in carrying the Altar across the mile of windswept prairie, were almost blown off their feet, and at times buried waist high in the snow drifts. Reaching the Chapel, they found it empty. No one cared to brave the storm to receive the Holy Communion that morning. But these soldiers of the Cross were not disheartened. They had the joy that comes from duty faithfully performed. Warmed and somewhat rested, they started on their final two-mile struggle to the Y. M. C. A. Hut No. 2. The storm seemed to have increased in violence. The wind penetrated their overcoats, and the frozen snow struck their faces with a sharper sting, compelling them to walk backwards at times, and requiring them to dig their heels in the snow to keep them from losing their equilibrium. The comfortable headquarters beckoned them to turn back, and the 344th Regimental Exchange, which they passed, offered them a haven of warmth and rest; but they resolutely set their faces forward until they reached Hut No. 2, where a cheery welcome awaited them at the hands of the genial, warm-hearted Y. M. C. A. men, and, what was best of all, they found two "boys" in khaki waiting to make their Communion.

PREPARING THE SERMON

"Yes, indeed, I have often been aesked how I prepare my sermons. Pull up by the fire in this comfortable chair, and I shall try to tell you.

"Other people think, too, that writing so many sheets of paper full of words is the backbone of preparing a sermon. They have a dim idea that there are books filled with the necessary information, and that probably the hardest part is the mechanical effort in transferring the information to paper.

"Hard as that may seem, it is not the hardest part of the sermon. Ten pages of manuscript do not constitute a sermon any more than the possession of a music book constitutes a concert. The physical effort of writing is but the smallest element of the whole affair.

"The mental effort is harder, or it should be. To think about fifty different themes a year, with some degree of intelligence, is not a matter that one confronts lightly. For no real sermon is merely the conveyance of certain knowledge or information from one mind to another. If that were the case, the preacher would be merely a flat car, capable of transporting any kind of a load laid upon it. No, each sermon is a creation. It is like a fresh painting. The easiest thing in the world for an artist to do would be to hand you a canvas, a few tubes of color and some brushes, and say, 'Here is a painting, in the rough, as it were, but essentially every part of it'. You could gather a whole gallery of such paintings at any artist's shop. The painting is something different. It is not until the skilled hand, under the direction of the skilled mind, distributes the colors upon the canvas that you recognize the painting.

"So with the intellectual part of the sermon. It is not a disconnected and undistributed mass of information, handed out piecemeal. It is a coherent creation, in which the information, or knowledge, or wisdom, is spread upon the canvas of the mind, forming a picture, in which composition, drawing, lights and shades, color and brushwork, all have some relation to the central message or portrayal. One may read a dozen books before he feels sufficiently informed to prepare a sermon upon an important subject. Was it not said of George Eliot that she read a thousand books before she wrote 'Romola'?

"The intellectual preparation for a sermon may not always require such extensive study, and indeed most sermons cannot have such an extensive background, but it is quite clear that study, in the real sense, must precede the presentation of truth. Much of this work has been done by master minds, whom we can trust, but the sermon is not merely a section taken bodily from such a work, but is the result of our own mental saturation with the portion of truth which we try to present.

"But even this is not the hardest part of the sermon. That which perplexes and sometimes confounds every sermon writer or preacher is the relation of his sermon to human lives, human souls. You may write a brilliant sermon on the geography and physical aspects of Jerusalem, or on the essential doctrines of the Pharisees and Sadducees, or on the Trinity; it may be a sermon that has taken weeks of study, but when it is finished, you may wonder to what extent it will affect the lives of those who hear it. O yes, I know that it may be informing and interesting, and all that, and it will give you a reputation for scholarship, but it isn't really preachable in any vital sense.

"It is this limitation in sermon material that keeps the preacher in a quandary of thought throughout the week. It is hard, spiritually, to prepare to preach as it is hard to prepare to be happy. You try various expedients. You may take down your Bible and a commentary. You find a hard text and a lucid explanation of it. Granted that the people are interested in the text, you may find intellectual enjoyment, and so may they in hearing the explanation, just as the statement of a conundrum arouses our interest in the answer. But is not the effect of such a process merely the maintenance of an intellectual interest in a problem?

"Or you may read a big book—I mean big in the sense of dealing with a big theme. It may grip you, and suggest on page after page things which need our attention. Imagine it to be a book on social conditions. Here is a sermon on wealth, here one on poverty, here one on the social phases of our industrial systems. Your mind glows with great thoughts, and your soul is indignant with the failures of our civilization to meet its primary problems. Suddenly your mind goes to your congregation. They are to hear that sermon. You begin to feel that they are going to be oppressed with their helplessness in the face of such enormous problems, and that they will get the impression that they can do nothing alone.

"So you begin to study what one man can do, even though he does not understand the final outcome of such collective action, but must be like the weaver of rugs on the reverse side of the fabric, weaving according to a fixed rule, and not seeing the pattern in all its beauty and color until the rug is finished. So you reach out for some specific action or attitude for the individual, with just enough disclosure of the pattern to stimulate his interest in the result.

"Perhaps you discover such a concrete line of duty. Then you must find the power which will propel the individual to act. This brings you directly to those motives under which people act—self-interest, charity, patriotism and religion. But here is a danger. You are apt to develop a kind of unreality in the presentation, and to fall back upon abstractions which have but little weight with those who do act daily from motives that are immediate, and under the stress of conditions which are quite apparent.

"But just as you are sure that you have tightened every connection, so that the current flows from the more remote central power plant of high motive to the little motives of action, you begin to wonder whether, after all, you are overlooking the purely human side of your problem. You visualize your congregation again, and you realize their needs, the needs of their own souls, their need for comfort, for encouragement, for forgiveness, for charity, for sincerity, for unworldliness. Are you asking the wounded and unfit to arise and fight a battle? First, you will heal them. So you tear up your scorching pages about general needs that seem so remote, in the face of the immediate personal problem, and begin again.

"You determine to reach the unit first, and to prepare the man for the vision of service, to heal him, to change the centre of his spiritual balance from self to others, to Christ, and His plans for man.

"This seems a definite program, and you grasp your pen afresh. But as your words come, your mind weighs them, and the matter seems to be so speculative, or subtle, or unsubstantial, the ideas so abstract and etherial, that you wonder whether a man who daily deals with immediate problems, with cares of this world, with materials and figures, can grasp the spiritual relationships. So you will try to make the whole matter concrete. You will make the spiritual relation more real by giving it a significance whose bearing he can grasp. So you turn to the Church as the body of Christ, and by emphasizing the Church, duty to it, understanding of its functions, service in it, you transfer the whole problem from the world, as it were, to a laboratory, where the relation of forces and elements may be observed, controlled and made effective in a more convenient manner.

"Then your conscience begins to prick you. Can the Church so completely shelter a life that it is relatively free from world dangers? Or can it so absorb a life that it absolves it from world duties? No. You must find the relation between the two. So you begin to face the original problem again, not of the salvation of a soul in the Church, but the salvation of a soul in the world. All the things that are out of joint in the world become an issue affecting your sermon.

"So you see the problem. To write a sermon may seem easy. To solve the problem of setting the deepest relationships of human experience on paper, and then trying to write words, or a message that will bring real substantial power to a congregation is quite the hardest task that men ever undertook. You may inform their minds, you may interest them, you may entertain them, you may even hypnotize them, but when you try to convert, to recreate, to vitalize and to spiritualize them, you are dealing with such enormous issues, and such varied human spirits, that you are never really certain that what you write contains a single living, vital truth for them.

"This is the problem of writing sermons. Do you wonder that many a man finds it difficult to prepare one each week. His failure is often merely the expression of his insight into the magnitude of his task. Let him write a poem, an essay, a lecture, and he will know when he has finished it; but a sermon is a part of his very being poured into living words, and he does not know when he has achieved it."

Church Where Washington Worshiped Observes His Birthday

A patriotic service was held in St. Paul's Church, New York City on Washington's birthday, which was attended by over one hundred army nurses in uniform and a number of eminent persons. The New York Times states that the historic Washington pew was decorated with American flags, and was occupied during the services by Lord Aberdeen, William Lanier Washington, representing the Order of the Cincinnati, and Colonel Robertson Durham of the Gordon Highlanders. The Stars and Stripes with a color guard from Governors Island occupied a position at the side of the lectern, and the British Union Jack, with a color guard made up of Sergeants from the British and Canadian Recruiting Missions, was placed at the side of the pulpit. At the head of the middle aisle were the colors of the nurses. The service included prayer for the President of the United States, prayers for King George and the British royal family, for peace, for the army and navy, the sick and wounded, and for those who minister to them, and prayers "for the dead in Christ, victims of the war." Vicar Geer made a patriotic address, in which he told of the scenes in and around St. Paul's during the revolution, of Washington's habitual attendance at service.

"Washington as a soldier," he said, "won America from the most powerful kingdom of the world. Then, as a statesman, he turned a mob into a nation. Should we make an unworthy peace now, how could we in the hereafter meet Washington, Lincoln, and the women and children who went down on the Lusitania? But thank God, the possibility of an unworthy peace is past. The equal of the soldier in the trenches is the widowed mother in the tenement laboring over her washtub in order that she could give her son to fight for those worse off widowed mothers of France and Belgium."

Doubt is not something to be proud of. It is an enemy to be fought.—Selected.

Judah is now in captivity. There could be no doubt about it. Moreover, the foolish optimism that even after the first captives had been carried away, persisted in hopes of an early return, must have given way to an appreciation of the stern realities of the situation, and of the wisdom of the advice of Jeremiah to settle down and make the best of the situation, looking only for deliverance after a couple of generations. The leaders of the people must have been ready to listen, at any rate, to what Jehovah would have to reveal to them through His prophet.

We have selected for the first lesson on Sunday morning that chapter in which Ezekiel points out the causes of the collapse of the Hebrew state, and the reasons therefor—God's gracious purposes to be accomplished thereby. Ezekiel's object is, first of all, to bring about a conviction of sin, and so he divides their history from Egypt on into five periods, each marked by flagrant disobedience to the laws of God. He would have them "loathe themselves in their own sight". But this is the dark background against which shines all the brighter the story of God's grace. For His Name's sake, He had brought them out of Egypt, and refused to destroy them in the wilderness, and would now restore them to their native land, after they had been through a period of judgment and discipline, as a result of which they would "know Jehovah" in His righteousness and His gracious forgiveness (cf. Ex. xxxiv:6-7). This chapter seems to carry out the thought of the Collect, that we who deserve to be punished may by God's grace be mercifully relieved, or "refreshed", and attention is called to the fact that by this selection the experience of Israel in Egypt, used for Lent one year ago, and the experience of Judah in exile, for Lent this year, are both brought before us in one view, just as the two redemptions are on Easter Day. As regards the New Testament lesson, the present scribe would make the confession that Matt. xx:17-end is an error, being parallel with the evening lesson for next Sunday, and, any way, inappropriate as a correlative for Ezekiel xx, some such chapter as John viii, Rom. iii:7, or viii, or Ephesians ii, being more suitable.

In the evening, the New Testament selection was made to give our Lord's discourse, based on the feeding of the five thousand, which is Gospel for the day, bringing out that He is Himself the true Bread of Life, while the first lesson is the chapter of Isaiah from which the Epistle quotes: "More are the children of the desolate than of the married wife, saith the Lord", and "their righteousness is of Me". In other words, more and better goodness results from the covenant of grace than from legalism.

For week day lessons, there are given in the morning the experiences of Jeremiah and of the remnant, after the destructoin of Jerusalem, continuation of course reading of St. Luke, working out of the Christian covenant in Romans, and Ezekiel's messages to the captives, bringing home to them their sins, and at the same time bringing the comfort of God's promised mercy in the restoration.

What Good Can I Get From Lent?

YOU CAN LEARN SYMPATHY FOR CHRIST

On every hand "your Lord is crucified." Men take His blessed name in oaths upon their polluted lips.

His Gospel of peace is despised in war-like hearts.

His example of purity is set aside for deeds of shame.

His commands are trampled beneath unholy feet; His promises are treated as idle tales; His sacraments are ignored as empty signs; His love is consumed in hearts aflame with carnal loves; His work is neglected for every other conceivable occupation of labor and pleasure. Behold the picture! Your Redeemer, crucified in our streets by these powers of evil.

Realize this to be a fact—a disgraceful fact—and it will cause you to set your face against evil, and cast your influence everywhere for Christ.

You Can Gather Good From THIS Lenten Revelation.

An Eminent Layman Dies at Boston

Mr. Charles G. Saunders, eminent lawyer and Churchman died at Boston on Tuesday, February 19th. He was well known throughout the American Church, having for many years been a Deputy to the General Convention from the Diocese of Massachusetts, taking an active part in its proceedings and on important Committees. He was Deputy to the Synod of the First Province, Chancellor of the Chapter of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, Boston; a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese and of the Diocesan Board of Missions, and served on several Committees, Commissions, and Boards of Diocesan Institutions. His death, says the Rev. Dr. Jackson of Fall River, Mass., removes from the activities of the Church Militant one of her most conspicuous leaders. Along the line of his profession, the law, he became so expert that throughout the country his counsel was sought, especially upon questions touching ecclesiastical law. A most genuine interest in the Church as an institution was accompanied by a vital sympathy and active co-operation. His learning made him notable by his quiet use of it. In the meetings of the Standing Committee of the Diocese I have been impressed with the quick insight, mastery of detail, serene open-heartedness, and a marked evidence of spiritual contact. One can well believe that in his wide acquaintance many received from him not alone the solution of mental problems but also, and frequently, the radiance and affection of a nature wonderfully blessed in inheritance and ability. Characters like his make one rejoice in the lives that build up the Church Triumphant.

POEMS Worth Preserving

THE RHODORA. ON BEING ASKED, WHENCE IS THE FLOWER?

Ralph Waldo Emerson

In May, when sea-winds pierced our solitudes,
I found the fresh Rhodora in the woods,
Spreading its leafless blooms in a damp nook,
To please the desert and the sluggish brook.
The purple petals, fallen in the pool,
Made the black water with their beauty gay.
Here might the red-bird come his plumes to cool,
And court the flower that cheapens his array.
Rhodora! if the sages ask thee why
This charm is wasted on the earth and sky,
Tell them, dear, that if eyes were made for seeing,
Then Beauty is its own excuse for being.
Why thou wert there; O rival of the rose!
I never thought to ask, I never knew:
But, in my simple ignorance, suppose
The self-same Power that brought me there brought you.

Written 1834.

(The Rhodora is a shrub of the Heath family, formerly regardeld as belonging to the Rhododendrons, but now placed in a genus by itself. It blossoms in May before the leaves appear, and has a charm that has won many hearts.)

It is expected that Sir John Willison, of Toronto, Canada, editor of the Toronto Globe, and M. Stephane Lauzanne, editor of the Paris, France, Matin, will speak at the annual Convention of the Diocese of Harrisburg, next May.

FOUR LECTURES ON RELIGION IN WAR-TIME

A Series of Papers by the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania

THE LORD OF HOSTS VS. THE WAR-GOD

There is one only God Who, since He is really God, works out unfailingly His Will for men in history, which Will, as revealed in Jesus Christ, is set unswervingly on righteousness, and wholly moved by love.

The Lord of Hosts Versus the War-God

III.

The second part of our answer: there is one only God and in Christ we know that His all-ruling Will is inexorably set on righteousness and wholly moved by love.

If we have come so far together on the way we have really made some progress. We may not have got clear of our difficulty. But at least we know better than we did what the difficulty is. Even though the path of faith is steeper and narrower than we had imagined, we see more clearly where it leads. That is the great point after all. Doubtfuless rather than doubt is the chief enemy to faith and hope. Darkness stealing down upon a wayfarer is what chiefly saps his courage. It brings with it nameless terrors and possibilities of danger. If there were only light so that he could see: then he might find a track, a trail, the mark of footsteps. Then he could hope again to make his way. It might mean hard and toilsome work. But if he could see what was about him, he could pluck up heart again.

There are multitudes of men and women in these days who mean to be more or less religious, who call themselves Christians, and go to Church, and, perhaps, say their prayers, and yet have no real idea of God at all and have never come in sight of the majestic Christian creed. They have no notion what it is based on and what it really teaches. It is patheticallly common to hear such people say that the War has quite destroyed their faith. What has really happened is that the War has shown them that they had no faith to start with. When the first shock and challenge came to test their faith, there was nothing there.

So we have made some progress, in that we have looked the horrid creed of Paganism squarely in the face, and in spite of its plausibility and weight of evidence, have seen it to be impossible and diabolical. It means something that we now know that we must have a faith more worthy of divinity and of us: more adequate to solve our questions and to heal our wounds. Faith, true faith, asks of us more than we expected, but not more than we are now prepared to give. What, then, of the Lord of Hosts? What is to be said for Him? What are the grounds of faith in Him?

Well, there are two chief grounds of faith in Him: two which include all others. First, there is the witness of the human heart and mind: an ideal of God which must be satisfied if we are to believe in Him. Secondly, there is the revelation made in Jesus Christ.

As to the first, let me say briefly what I mean in a figure or parable. Every lock must have a key to fit it, or the door which the lock closes cannot be opened. The human mind, in its widest sense of intelligence or apprehension, is locked in behind a door. Any truth that knocks for entrance must come provided with the proper key. Else it cannot be understood. This is why we call some things rational or reasonable, while we say other things are nonsense. The idea that two and two make five: that there is a fourth dimension: that we are not free; that there is no such thing as right or wrong: these ideas are without meaning for us. We are so made that it is not really possible for us to think them true. They are the wrong shape. They do not fit the lock.

So with the idea of God. What it it that has destroyed Paganism? What is it that has made Olympus, with its crowd of varied gods and demigods, a fairy tale, a mad delusion? Why, simply the fact that we have learned more clearly what we men and women must mean, if we mean anything, when we speak of God at all. These Pagan myths are empty dreamings. These Pagan deities are not gods, but only projections or shadows cast upon the clouds by men's pride and self-sufficiency. The throne of true Deity was empty, or at least completely veiled. Having no real God to worship, men were vainly offering their worship to their own swollen images: they were worshiping, not God at all, but supermen, just as men are doing now. For the word of God on our lips must mean absolute, uncompromising Lordship, One all alone in Majesty; the Cause, and Maker, and Truth, and Goal of all that is: One Who holds Heaven and earth in the hollow of His hand; One Whose will is perfectly effective, and upon Whose will each separate creature, animate or inanimate, is hourly dependent.

Now there is nothing so far to prove, or even to make it probable, that God exists. But there is the certain truth that, if there be God, He must be One and only One, and Lord of all. For such a God alone brings with Him the key that can unlock the shrine of faith.

I have said that there is no proof here that God exists. Obviously not. Multitudes have disbelieved in Him, and disbelieve in Him today, just because He must mean so much if He mean anything, that they despair of ever finding Him. They have brushed away the crew of pigmies strutting about on the great stage, and calling themselves divine. They know these to be lies. But there is a veil over the Heavens where God's throne is. They are in doubt.

And yet the instinct, and the longing will not down and will not die. "Like as the heart desireth the waterbrooks, so longeth my soul after thee, O God. My soul is athirst for God: yea, even for the living God: when shall I come to appear before the presence of God?" "O that I knew where I might find him, that I might even come into his presence." So speak not the psalmists and prophets of the elder Church, but all the best and noblest of our race, as, like children, they turn towards home, seeking their Maker and their Father.

And this restless longing is no superficial thing. It lies at the roots of our nature. Nothing can kill it save its own deliberate suicide. Chaos, disorder, was and tumults, death and sorrow, the very signs which make against it, do but stimulate and strengthen it. All other instincts and intuitions are small and shallow in comparison. Men will not let it go. They cling to faith in faith, even against evidence. They cry to God to show Himself—to justify their great idea of Him: to prove it true. They will not believe it only a delusion. They would not and could not have arrived at it unless God had wrought it into the stuff that they are made of: unless it were the hallmark of His workmanship. In a striking modern phrase, they are "willing to bet their life there is a God." There, then, is the first foundation of belief in the Lord God of Hosts: there is the testimony of our first witness.

Secondly, there is the revelation made in Jesus Christ. I must be brief and deal only with what is immediately important. The following lectures, God willing, will supplement what is said here.

Notice, to begin with, that our Lord came in due course of history. His coming marks a point in a well-defined development. He founded no new or singular religion. For Christianity is not at all one religion among many. So to regard it is to miss the very point of its real claim. "God is in Christ reconciling the world, His World, unto Himself." That is the real Christian faith. Christ came to make known the one and only God, the true and liying God, to the whole race of men. He came to confirm and complete human faith in God. That is the substance of His teaching. "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." That is the claim. And Christ built upon foundations already laid: first, upon the inner witness of the human heart, in its search for, and need of, God, of which I spoke: and then upon the historic foundation of the Jewish faith, of which we have the record in the Old Testament. He takes it all for granted. He implies in all His teaching just what His Church has always held and taught, that the Jewish faith is for all time the primary and necessary school of the spiritual knowledge of the one true God. He insists that all which the law and the prophets, and the psalms say of God is to be believed. He brings it all to its completion, "I came not to destroy but to fulfill." Those are His words.

Least of all does He destroy or tamper with the great idea of God as the one Lord, Creator and Governor of all that is. The Lord God of Hosts of the patriarchs and psalmists: the High and Holy One Who inhabiteth eternity, of Whom the prophets tell, "Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of His hand and meted out heaven with a span and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure and weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance; with Whom the nations are as a drop in a bucket; Who bringeth the princes to nothing and maketh the judges of the earth as vanity;" He, and none other, is the God Whom Christ proclaims, Whom He reveals, Whose Kingdom He sets up on earth. That is precisely the wonder of His message, the secret of His magic power over the hearts and minds of men. Christ says that God is love, and He means God, and nothing else or less than God, when He says God. He says that God is Father, and He means the Lord of Hosts when He says Father.

Brethren, bear with me if I speak plainly here. Those teachers (and there are many of them: their teaching is, in fact, the very pith and marrow of much that we call "pacifism") who tell us that the God of Christ, the Christian God, is not the supreme Lord of Hosts, not the Almighty, not the Governor of men, not the unquestioned and unrivalled Will of the whole universe; but is rather a mild, benevolent and indulgent Being, with excellent intentions but pathetic incapacity; unable to prevent war, and doing nothing about it while it lasts; feeling no great anger against sin, no hate of evil; caring not over much for righteousness; willing to compromise with cruelty, falsehood, lust, treachery and pride, if only so there may be peace. Men who so teach and so believe are mocking religion, for they are denying God, and they are false witnesses to Christ. For these teachers leave God's throne empty. They leave righteousness without a champion, and sin without a judge. Christ begins with, comes from, Him Who sits upon the throne. His very message is that God is God, though the earth quake and the rocks are rent and men's hearts are failing them for fear.

Calmly guiding all things towards His own freely chosen goal: meeting each headlong rush of evil; reaching down into the very heart of sin and sorrow, and finding there instruments of His own blessed Will; making all things serve His purpose; perfectly at home upon the battlefield; disposing all the isues; never baffled; never wavering; but ever set on righteousness and always moved by love; that is the meaning of the Christian's God; that is the background and the setting of the Christian Gospel.

That is the background. And in the foreground, here on this earth, in veritable human flesh, Christ comes to win us for, to bring us to, this One Almighty Father. Not because God is so weak, but because He is so infinitely strong, does He speak to us through baby lips and call to us from a cross. Not because God's hold is so precarious, and His Will so dependent upon ours, but because He made us all, and owns us all, and loves us all, does He plead with us, and leave us free to love Him or to spurn Him as we will. None but the Lord of Hosts would dare to do it, could afford to do it. But He, the Lord of Hosts, in doing it, is seen to be more than ever God.

This, then, is the Christian faith in God. Christians are they who have known and believed all this. They have taken Christ at His word. They have found in Him the great "Amen" to the witness of their nature. They believe, indeed, that He first put the inner witness there and now has come Himself to confirm and seal it. And so, in calm assurance, no matter how the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing, the great words of old are on their lips, as the one thing they are sure of: "The Lord of Hosts is with us: the God of Jacob is our refuge."

A Unique Commendation

Every mail brings a goodly number of renewal subscriptions; but, better still, splendid commendations for THE WITNESS, that show how our weekly visits stimulate, help and please.

Among them all, here is one that speaks volumes and is unique:

"HERE IS ANOTHER DOLLAR FOR YOUR CORKING GOOD PAPER."

Thank you all.

"Aye, Aye, Sir! Till Christ Comes"

The Porish Record of TrinityChurch, New York, states hhat week day services have, very generally throughout the Parish, been held as usual at the regular hours. At such time as this, devotion and supplication should be intensified and increased; by maintaining the regular public services, for the worship of God, under physical difficulty and the privation of certain creature comforts. This is not a time for men to neglect the assembling of themselves together for public worship, upon the Lord's Day or week days. Trinity Church enjoys a world-wide reputation for the maintenance of daily services. In the volume of the"Christian Ballads," of Bishop Coxe, published in 1840, a poem, "Old Trinity," is included; attached to which is the following note: "Easter even, 1840. At this time, the old edifice having been completely pulled down, the Church yard of Trinity was indeed a strange and desolate sight for New Yorkers, by whom old Trinity was usually regarded as a sort of Tutelar, The intended Church will be the most magnificant Christian temple in America; and the daily service will, probably, arise there, till Christ comes; a perpetual witness to Wall Street, and the whole metropolis, that they cannot serve God and Mammon." To Arthur Cleveland Coxe, the saintly poet-Bishop of the American Church, called to the Greater Life, we are ready to make reply: "Aye, aye, sir, till Christ comes."

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

AWAKENING OF LADY VIOLET

If you are quiet and attentive when you go out into the garden next Spring, you may hear many things you have never heard before. And even though you should hear nothing, you can understand, of this you may be sure. The trees, and the breezes, and the flowers, the butterflies and the bees have a language of their own, and talk to each other all the day.

This is what happened in my garden on a Spring day, once upon a time:

A violet peeped out from under a brown elm leaf and looked about the garden. The day was soft and sweet and warm, and the sunshine beamed brightly into the face of the little flower-child as she peeped out from under one corner of the brown leaf. "Tell me," said Lady Violet, in a tiny baby voice, "Tell me what was it wakened me up when I was sleeping so soundly?" "It was I," whispered the south breeze, "I woke you up. The morning of the year has come once again, and all your friends and neighbors and playmates have been awake these many days." "Am I the last to open my eyes this year? I have always been first." "Yes," said the south breeze, "you are the last of all." "But I cannot hear any one talking, nor can I see any one," replied Lady Violet. "If you would come out from under that old leaf, you could hear them, and see them, too." "But I can't get out. I have been pushing and pushing and pushing, and I simply cannot move it. Why don't you help me?" "I will help you," said the south breeze, and gave a puff, then another puff, and away went old Mr. Brown Leaf, and Lady Violet felt the warmth of the Spring sun. It felt so good to her, and she looked up with tears in her eyes. They were not real tears, though, just drops of sparkling dew.

"I am so glad that another day has come," said Lady Violet, "and that I can see the sun, and the grass, and the trees, and the butterflies, and all the other things that make a violet's life so full of joy."

The sky was very blue that morning, and through the trees and shrubs and vines came little streams of sunlight. To Lady Violet's eyes, filled with the dew, the whole garden became one great rainbow. Then she dried her eyes and smiled, and nodded her head to the south breeze and said: "I am so, so glad that the morning has come at last. I have slept so soundly and for so long a time." And it was morning truly, the great, glad morning of all the year. Winter, with all his cold, had gone, and it was God's sweet morning for all the flowers. It was Spring.

The First Indian Soldier to Die in the Great War

The Rev. Philip Delora, Indian Priest, of St. Elizabeth's Mission, Wakpala, S. D., gives the following beautiful account in the South Dakota Churchman, of the death and burial of the first Indian soldier to die in the present service of his country:

A young man, twenty-two years of age, whom I baptized on a Christmas day, 1896, joined the army, was called to Camp Riley, Kansas. He died there on the second day of January, 1918. His body was shipped here to Wakpala on Sunday, the sixth of January. The body was taken to his own home at Flying-by's Camp, Standing Rock Reservation, South Dakota. I was called to conduct the funeral service so I went there on the morning of the seventh; found many people gothered who went to show their respect to this young man's body. His old father, and mother and sisters, had a very deep sorrow. During the service the few words of comfort seem to have had effect upon their hearts, they gaining strength from them. Flying-by's people were so kind,—providing a lunch to the outsiders who came to attend the funeral. Some of these people came from about fifteen or twenty miles, though it was snowing and cold; but the people did not get discouraged. That they attended this funeral, showed that these people loved the boy most for two reasons. First, the boy was a very good boy up to his death; secondly, because he obeyed the call of our government. These two reasons people had respected and honored very highly, which they proved by their conduct and the willingness of their attention.

The body was taken out. A farmer in charge of Wakpala carrying the United States flag walked ahead, then came the clergyman. The body was carried by twelve young men, who are all drafted men, six at a time. Then the parents, and a long procession after that—there must have been about two hundred and fifty people. When they opened the coffin so that the people might see the boy wearing his United States uniform, he was wearing also an Episcopal Confirmation cross. Then of course service—that part of it—is through, so beautiful.

This teaches me the Father in Heaven working upon the Indian hearts through His Church institutions with the Holy Spirit, will tame any man. When a man is tame he has the same love toward God it seems to me as the Son of God had for the Father. Because he is a tame man, he is brave, he is true, and he is pure, —same meaning as red, white and blue, of the United States flag. So there is no power on earth that can make a man tame. If a lion is to be tamed, it can be done by man, but man cannot tame man. Man can be tamed by the love of God, the action of the Saviour, with the Holy Spirit.

So what the Indian most needs is the Church teaching—better means than any other. I think this young man pointed his finger to a road to good Christian people in general—also to heathen people—showing the Way more effectively than any other young man up to this date. This is the first Indian young man , being a soldier, who has died in his country's service. Faithfully he did his duty and his body came home. Everybody who knows it seems to have accepted it in a reverent way. His name is Isaac Patesni.

St. Augustine's Normal School and Collegiate Institute, for colored students, conducted by the Diocese of North Carolina at Raliegh, will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary next May.

Chaplains I Have Met

In broad daylight, out on No Man's Land, there lay a body of wounded Tommies. They had fallen in a counter-attack meant to punish the Boche for a surprise visit paid that morning. In an occasional lull in the roar of guns you could hear a voice calling for water or the scream of a man maddened by pain. But the enemy were on the alert. To go out after them would be little short of suicide. There is always a bullet for a man who appears in the light of day.

But bullets had no terror for the Padre.

This particular priest belonged to the Church of England. Unless my memory tricks me, his name was Dalton. But he can be found in the list of the honored: he was the first V. C. of his cloth.

Disregarding all warnings, he crawled over the parapet, seized one wounded man, and dragged him to safety. When he appeared the second time, the Boches were ready. His audacity probably had kept them quiet at first; but now the bullets began to fly. He got his second man back, and his third and fourth, before he came to a case so badly wounded that it was impossible to handle it as roughly as the others. This Tommy was lying on the edge of a shell crater, and as the Padre bent to tend him, he himself was hit by a bullet, and for a moment he collapsed beside his charge. But he recovered quickly. Then, still clinging to his burden, he managed to crawl down into the hole.

All day they lay there, until the sun went down, when help was sent out to him and his companion.

It comes easy to picture the Padre going his rounds of the hospital, cheering one man, consoling another, administering the last services to a soldier in his last agony. Extremely tiresome and trying work this can be, too, when a convoy of five or six hundred cases arrive and there is only one Padre of each persuasion to attend to all. And yet, this is the least onerous and certainly the least dangerous of all his duties.

To any man who has been in France it comes more easy, because it is more familiar, to picture the Padre walking up and down the trench, giving a cigarette or a slap on the back to some one who needs sympathy, reassuring one man as to the validity of that hastily made will, telling another not to worry—he'll see that his mother gets the news. He is well named the Padre, for he is the father of all, whether he be Protestant or Catholic. And his children turn to him most of all just before an attack.

Suppose the order to "go over" has been given for 4:30 a.m. The previous night the men begin their preparations. They tell a story of one Catholic priest, who for seven consecutive hours sat in a wood close to the firing line, hearing the confessions of his men. And all the time the shells were crashing overhead.

It was the small hours of the morning when he was through with his duty, but his work was not yet done. Before five he was in the first-line trench, ready to say mass and administer communion. I have seen nothing more impressive than these ceremonies at the front.

Try to picture, if you can, the little altar on the firing step, or on some piece of wood hastily slung across the traverse. At this is the priest, and round him are his people, some grim, some smiling, some nervous, some calm, praying to the God whom they expect any moment to face. Truly war brings men close to the realization of life and death.

The attack begins. Where is the Padre? Gone behind to a place of safety to await the result? By no means! He still sticks to the front line. If his men are beaten, all the more need for his presence. If they win, there are still the wounded to attend to.

Of course, some people will tell you that the clergyman's very calling should teach him to hold aloof from the business of war. One parson, to whom I was speaking recently about the fighting, declared:

"I don't think of it. I simply pray for peace."

But, unfortunately, the war is a fact, and one that cannot be ignored. Likewise, it is a fact that thousands of men are going through agonies both mental and physical, and that through no fault of their own. Are they to be left unaided in their suffering?

But to come back to the fighting "men of peace."

It is true they get a Captain's or a Lieutenant's rating when they join the forces and the not too generous pay that goes with that honor. But what do most of them give up for it?

There was Canon Hannay, whom I met when I was stationed near St. Omer. Americans will probably remember him best as George Birmingham. He had given up the Deanship of St. Patrick's Cathedral, a rich and important benefice in Dublin, to live in the mud and smoke of Flanders. And there was the Bishop of London, that slim, strong figure whom we now remember best in his trim khaki uniform. And there are the hundreds of others, Catholic and Protestant, who have given up livings equally lucrative to join not merely as Chaplains but oftentimes as privates in the ranks. It has been estimated that between 20,000 and 30,000 priests, once expatriated because of their religion by an atheist French government, are now fighting as poilus for France.

I am afraid my picture of the Padre has been dark, painted on a gloomy canvas. Like every other, though, it has its lighter side too. All fighting life is not grim.

They tell this story of an encounter between a Padre and a sentry:

"Who goes there?" demanded the stern one.

"Chaplain," sang out the other.

"Pass, Charley," came the quick reply.—Every Week.

A Suggestion for the Bishop White Prayer Book

A Brotherhood of St. Andrew Secretary Calls Attention to the Importance of Having the Burial Service Included in the Volume.

Many suggestions come from the men engaged in religious work in the camps. Some are good, some bad, some indifferent.

But all are interesting.

Walter F. Poole, Camp Secretary of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at Ft. Oglethorpe, Chickamauga, Ga., suggests that the Bishop White Prayer Book would have an additional value to the men in the field if it included the burial service.

"One Chaplain told me that he could use the Bishop White Prayer Book if the burial service was added," Mr. Poole writes. His command is about to leave for France. Once the regiment is at the front, the burial service will be read frequently, and many of the enlisted men will need the Prayer Book to follow the service at the grave.

"Perhaps this will be the first time in years that many of these soldiers have opened a Prayer Book. When the men return to camp, impressed by the solemnity of the service at the grave of their fallen comrade, it is likely that they will turn to the other pages and seek the comfort which the little Book holds."

The suggestion is a good one; so good that it was acted upon before Mr. Poole made it.

The service for the burial of the dead is included in the new edition of the "Prayer Book for the Public and Private Use of our Soldiers and Sailors."

Thousands of Uncle Sam's fighting men will carry these little volumes when they go "over there" to make the world safe for democracy.

The Turk Leans Toward Christianity

This war has so vitally shaken the very foundations of the Mohammedan faith that even the Turk leans ever so gently toward Christianity. This was the keynote of a sermon by the Rev. Charles T. Riggs of Constantinople, says the Springfield Republican.

"Mohammedanism found its origin in a corrupt Christianity when Mohammed first began his career in Arabia," said Rev. Mr. Riggs. "The crusades were no credit to Christianity," he continued, "and were utterly unsuccesful in accomplishing the object for which they were intended, the rescue of the Holy City." He defined present-day Mohammedanism, as a combination of good and bad, with the character of Mohammed as its worst feature. He spoke of the present war in the Orient and the attempt of the Sultan to call a Holy War, inciting 200,000,000 Mohammedans of the world against the enemies of the faith. This attempt proved a sorry fizzle.

"The Turkish army," he said, "which should have been the vanguard of this Holy War, is composed of all kinds and conditions of people. The soldier looks to his right and finds himself fighting side by side with an Armenian, behind him a Jew. He is told that he is not to fight the Austrians, for they are his friends. The Germans are his friends too. And he finds himself face to face with the Mohammedans of England; and he wonders. For he knows that England has protected him for centuries against the Russians. And he says to himself, what kind of a Holy War is this anyhow?"

Although Mohammedanism is making great progress in Africa it is decadent in Turkey," said Mr. Riggs. Other nations besides Turkey will not acknowledge the supremacy of the Sultan. "The so-called pan-Islam menace is a myth. There are unmistakable signs that the Turks are turning away from their religion." He told of the visits of two young Turks to the American mission in Constantinople just before he left, at a time when the mere mention of Christianity seemed to court a death warrant. They told him secretly that they believed the teachings of Christ led to truth and spiritual salvation. Yet they dared not declare it openly, as did a teacher at the International College."

Urging the Bishop of Quincy for Congressman

Bishop Edward Fawcett!

It is a mighty good sound to the ears of thousands of persons in Western Illinois.

How would Congressman Edward Fawcett sound?

The above is an introduction to an article which appeared in the Quincy Daily Herald, under date of February 11th, commenting upon a growing movement to make Bishop Fawcett the nominee on the Democratic ticket in the Fifteenth Congressional District of Illinois. The Herald asserts that "Congressman Edward Fawcett" would sound mighty well to a good many people in the Western part of Illinois, so well, in fact, that they believe he could sweep the old Fifteenth Illinois district, despite the fact that it has a Republican majority of from 5,000 to 7,000.

Is Bishop Fawcett a candidate for Congress? He is not. Will he make a hard fight for the congressional nomination? He will not. Will he make the campaign, if nominated by the Democrats on a straight-out Woodrow Wilson fight-the-war-to-the-finish and stand-by-the-administration platform? He probably will. He will, if convinced that he can thereby become of the greatest service in putting into definite form the principles for which he stands. Naturally, he is rather backward about committing himself on such an important step in his career. Scholar that he is, he wants to consider every side of the question before making any decision. He is, by no means, an office-seeker and the movement to nominate him for Congress came as the greatest surprise to him. But once in the race, watch out for him! The fighting Bishop will become the fighting champion of Americanism on the stump, and where's the man who can stand up against him?

It is known to be a fact that many of the most prominent and influential Democrats of this county and district have urged Bishop Fawcett to accept the nomination and oppose Edward J. King. The Bishop has been most outspoken in criticism of Mr. King for his anti-war and anti-conscription votes and his decision at the time when the nation should have been united on the greatest problem that ever faced it. The Bishop has been the most outspoken champion of out-and-out Americanism in this section of Illinois, and gradually the sentiment has grown that he would be the logical man to oppose Mr. King. He is probably the best known man in the district and would make a candidate around whom all those forces who believe in fighting the war to the finish could rally with confidence that the Fifteenth Illinois would be represented by one of the biggest men in Congress. The Fifteenth Illinois needs a man of Bishop Fawcett's courage, vision, intellect and standing.

At any rate, many of the biggest men in Quincy today are talking Fawcett-for-Congress. If Edward J. King is renominated they think that Bishop Fawcett is the logical man to make the race on the Democratic ticket. In addition to Democratic support he would appeal to every voter in the district who believes in his sturdy and outspoken type of Americanism.

O God, who hast prepared for those who love Thee such good things as pass man's understanding; Pour into our hearts such love toward Thee, that we, loving Thee above all things, may obtain Thy promises, which exceed all that we can desire; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Would Excommunicate Those Who Introduce Enormities in Warfare

The Rev. Edmund Walters of Los Angeles, offered the following resolution at the annual Convention of the Diocese of Los Angeles, which was referred to the Bishop.

"That it would be in strict accordance with Holy Scripture as interpreted by the Holy Catholic Church always, and in all branches of the same, for the hierarchies of the Church independently or, were it now practicable, collectively, by decree of General Council.

To condemn publicly: the pseudo-philosophy of brutal force and fiendish cruelty advocated, even in Germany alone, by over one hundred noted authors or pastors.

To excommunicate the ministers of Government of such nominally Christian nations as have introduced such enormities into warfare, solemnly delivering them over to the penalties of Divine judgment in the world, so that possibly they may learn not to blaspheme and be led to repentance and restitution, and may thus escape condemnation to the otherwise certain and awful penalties of an aeonian hell.

To urge upon all Christians the duty of praying for all such malefactors, persecutors, and murderers, whether the wicked philosophers who have inculcated such hellish doctrines, the emperors, statesmen and commanders who have ordered such infamous acts of the brutalized soldiers and sailors who in many cases willingly, and in all cases, wrongfully and cowardly have committed them."

The Cook or the Book—Which?

The Rev. J. J. D. Hall, Superintendent of the Galillee Mission, a Church institution, at 823 Vine St., Philadelphia, has published a unique tract full of "pep" and sound reasoning, under the above caption, which has attracted wide attention, and brought to his desk hundreds of commendatory letters from all over the world. "Cook-Stove Apostacy and The Cooking Squad vs. Praying Band," is a sub-head to the tract which we print in full:

The early Churchprayed in the Upper Room the Twentieth Century Church cooks in the Supper Room!

Today the Supper Room has taken the place of theUpper Room!. Play has taken the place of Prayer, and Feasting the place of Fasting.. There are more Full Stomachs in the Church than there are Bended Knees and Broken Hearts. There is more fire in the Kitchen Range than there is in the Church Pulpit. When you build a fire in the Church kitchen, it often, if not altogether, puts out the fire in the Church Pulpit. Ice Cream chills the fervor of Spiritual Life.

The early Christians were not Cooking in the Supper Room the day theHoly Ghost came but they were Praying in the Upper Room! They were not Waiting on Tables, they were Waiting on God. They were not Waiting for the fire from the Stove, but from the Fire from Above.

They were Detained by the Command of God, and not Entertained by theCunning of Men. They were all Filled with theHoly Ghost, not Stuffed withStew or Roast.

O, I would like to see theCooking Squad put out, and the Praying Band put in. LessHam and Sham and more Heaven. Less Pie and more Piety. Less use for the Cook and more use for the Old Book. Put out the fire in the Church kitchen and build it on the Church Altar.

More Love and more Life. Fewer Dinners and get after Sinners. Let us have a Church full of Waiters, Waiting on God, a Church full of Servors, serving God and waiting for His dear Son from Heaven.

Novel Religious Ideas Permeate Camp Pike

The Church is in Camp Pike and it is the desire of its representatives that anyone having relatives or friends there should send the names of the soldiers, with their Company and regimental address, at once to Mr. G. A. Kenderdine, Secretary of the B. S. A., 509 Scott St., Little Rock, Ark., who states that personal of men in the camp changes rapidly and "The Master's business requires haste." We have received from Mr. Kenderdine the following newsy communication covering the religious work at the Camp:

The Camp is situated eight miles north of Little Rock and there are approximately 33,000 men quartered there. For the most part they are from Western or Southern Dioceses where the Church is not strong and we have no means of knowing how many Churchmen there are here, but we estimate from three to five hundred. With no religious data and a constantly changing personnel one labors at a disadvantage, but we are endeavoring to plant the banner of Christ in the thickest of the fray.

Mr. B. F. Finney, General Secretary fo the Brotherhood of St. Andrew met Mr. G. A. Kenderdine of Trinity Parish, Iowa City, Iowa, who had been selected as Secretary for Camp Pike, in Little Rock, January 10th. We came in with a blizzard and for nearly three weeks, snow, slush and ice made the roads almost impassable but we waded through. Already some work had been done and with the splendid sympathy and aid of Bishop Jas. R. Winchester of Arkansas, Suffragan Bishop Saphoie and the local Clergy we felt from the beginning we were among friends. The only places available for religious services in Camp are the Y. M. C. A. Buildings, and these are open to all denominations for general religious exercises, but not for distinctively sectarian gatherings.

We have, however, secured permission to celebrate the Holy Communion according to the Rubric and, since January 10th, there has not been a Sunday without a celebration in camp.

The attendance, while necessarily small at first is growing and as the time and place become generally known we anticipate a large number of communicants. Besides this distinctively Episcopal service we participate in Bible classes, address religious meetings informally and do personal religious work.

The Rev. Chas. F. Collins of Jonesboro, Ark., is the Voluntary Chaplain under the War Commission and a splendid man for the place. He has had four years experience as Chaplain in the Arkansas National Guard, was with the boys on the border and is a splendid mixer, and indefatigable worker, a good Churchman and withal a Missionary, distinctively a man's man.

There is no means provided for either Chaplain or Brotherhood Secretary to get about camp save by walking and when you realize that the camp covers 4,000 acres you may have some idea of the magnitude of the task. A car is badly needed, not only to carry us but to help men here and there and to bring them for Communion, Confirmation or Baptism. The Secretary's work is manifold and varies from writing a will for a soldier to organizing Bible classes, teaching classes in History, arranging literary entertainments and especially organizing Christian groups of men in the Barracks under the rule of daily prayer and service.

Sometimes when one looks for concrete results the work is discouraging but we are sowing the seed and abo above all letting the men know the Church has not forgotten.

A very dangerous heresy is permeating the army, viz. that if a man dies fighting for the Allied cause he is saved irrespective of aught else and another pernicious error is that attendance at Y. M. C. A. meetings and entertainments is "a good enough" religion for any man.

The "Y" does not teach that. It is doing a wonderful and splendid work but many men are saying just that. So there is a field for the Church after all.

Many good Churchmen are here as Y. M. C. A. Secretaries; Rev. B. E. Brown of Tarboro, N. C., M. Lockhardt of Batesville, Ark., Verne Stover of Little Rock, Paul Kercher of New York City and Ven. D. E. Johnson, colored Archdeacon of Ark., are all engaged as Y. M. C. A. men, besides one or two Laymen.

Wyoming Notes

A new Branch of the Junior Auxiliary has recently been organized at Jackson. It is composed of fifteen girls, under the leadership of Mrs. M. Belknap Nash, wife of the clergyman in charge of St. John's, Jackson. This new Auxiliary is already working energetically for the Cathedral Home for Children.

Church people of Wyoming felt a special interest in the consecration of the Rev. LeRoy Harris, D. D., as Bishop Coadjutor of Marquette on Feb. 7th. Bishop Harris has many friends in this District, as he was at one time Rector of St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne. The best wishes of his former parishioners go with him for a long and useful life in the Episcopate.

NOTES FROM THE MISSIONS HOUSE

A RESIDENT PHYSICIAN FOR ANVIK.

The Rev. John W. Chapman, D. D., writes from Anvik, Alaska, that the Bureau of Education is considering the possibility of assigning a resident physician to Anvik. He feels that this is likely to be done if the Mission can provide a residence for the doctor. Dr. Chapman believes that this should be done as quickly as possible, "in order to consolidate our gains." He is about to call upon the people of Anvik and the vicinity, both white and Indian, for help in building the house, and believes that they will respond to the call. "It is evident," he says, "that with a little help from home, we can make it a credit to the Mission. We shall have to buy paint, hardware, building paper, etc., and if the work is done gratis we may find it best to feed the workmen. Something like $500 will be necessary to enable me to do all satisfactorily."

It is not clear just why the Bureau of Education should be willing to assign a doctor to Anvik, and apparently unwilling or unable to provide him with a residence. The advantage of having a resident physician, both from the point of view of safeguarding the health of the Mission staff and enlarging the work of the Mission among the Indians would be great. At present ,the nearest physician to Anvik is over 100 miles away, and the nearest approach to a hospital is more than 200 miles away. During the past summer, Dr. Chapman built a small infirmary especially for the use of Christ Church School. This could be made to do duty for the time being at all events as a hospital.

If the doctor whom the Bureau of Education proposes to station at Anvik should be sent there, his reputation is such, Dr. Chapman says, that "we should have patients from all quarters. I do not know how we are going to accomplish all that lies before us, but we shall tackle it, and I hope that our friends will do all that they can to see us through."

Any who desire to help may send their gifts marked, "Special for Doctor's House at Anvik," to Mr. George Gordon King, Treasurer, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

A PLEASANT WORD FROM ALLAKAKET, ALASKA.

Miss Eleanor J. Ridgway, missionary in charge of St. John's-in-the-Wilderness, Allakaket, Alaska, writing shortly after the new year, says:

"We have had such a very happy Christmas here. Our village was full to overflowing—165 natives in all. Everyone was here from South Fork except two old native women for whom trail work is too hard. Then we had about 20 up from Hughes. Our festivities lasted for just two weeks, and now all our Konucks end many of our Koyukaks are off to their traps.

"You have seen the cabins here so I think that you may be interested to know just how many "stopped" in a cabin. Chief Moses' cabin, which has two rooms, had 25 people staying in it—that was the largest number in one cabin. Then the next largest was 17 in a one-room cabin. How they find room to eat and sleep I cannot see. Everyone appeared happy and contented while they were here."

A LETTER FROM SECRETARY WOOD.

To the Editor:

The Church's educational work in China and Japan is facing a serious situation resulting from the enactment by the United States of the Selective Conscription Law. This made it impossible last summer to send to St. John's University, Shanghai, and St. Paul's College, Tokyo, three young men who had volunteered for service as lay teachers. They were eminently qualified for the work, but were within the draft age, and consequently could not leave the country without giving the impression that they were desirous of escaping the draft, or running the risk of being called back to this country at any moment.

The difficulties caused these great institutions are further emphasized by the fact that some of the younger men now in the field are asking whether they ought not to come back to this country to enlist in the Naval or Military service. Lay members of the faculty of these institutions returning to this country for furlough might find it difficult to go back to the field.

Under these circumstances, Dr. Pott, of St. John's University, has asked us to find, if possible, at least three men who are not subject to the draft, either by reason of age, or for some minor physical disability, such as slightly impaired vision. In any case, men beyond the draft age should not be older than 35. They should be unmarried, college graduates, and with some teaching experience.

If any of your readers know of men who might be available for such service as this, will they send us the names and addresses, in order that further particulars may be supplied?

Very truly yours,
JOHN W. WOOD.

Another—a good Christian and a very busy physician—came and read three chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel aloud to me, just for the love of it. I interrupted just now and then when I could clear the meaning a bit for him.'

"The nurses are very attractive and affectionate, although they must of necessity be irregular. They love the eight cent size Perry pictures. The other evening I had a group with me of those who speak very little English, and we discussed two or three of the pictures. I sent them home with a copy of Hoffman's Good Shepherd for each, to pin up over their mats. When they left, I said, "I shall bring over many more pictures," and they said "Please" very eagerly.

"Miss Tauda's girls also have learned to come to see me. They sit before my nice grate fire and tell me their doubts and perplexities. One was baptized a week ago, another is waiting for the consent of her non-Christian parents, tells me she wants to believe but cannot—but I am sure she can soon.

"The Red Cross is great. The head, a Jewess, and I are becoming fast friends. It seems to me the Tokyo Branch has done remarkable work this winter.

"In March Miss Saito is to go to St. Agnes', Kyoto. I have had to give her up because of the need there."

NOTABLE SERVICES IN CHRIST CHURCH, HYDE PARK

The month of February, 1918, proved an unusual one in the history of the Parish of Christ Church, Hyde Park. It was auspiciously ushered in by the offering for the War Commission Fund, which was taken up on the last Sunday in January. The Parish had been asked to contribute $775, and when the offering was counted on Jan. 27, it was found that they had given $1,216.30.

On Sunday, Feb. 3, at 11 o'clock in the morning, the Rt. Rev. Samuel G. Babcock, Suffragan Bishop of Massachusetts, assisted by the Reverend John W. Suter of Boston, instituted the new rector, the Reverend John W. Suter, Jr. Bishop Babcock was formerly rector of the parish during a period of twelve years, previous to his appointment as Archdeacon. His rectorship was one of unusual success, the present church building, designed by Mr. Ralph Adams Cram, having been built at that time. At the close of his sermon, in his address to the new rector, Bishop Babcock described the character of the parish in the following words:

"My dear brother, the Rubric at the close of the service reads—'After the Benediction the Wardens, Vestry and others shall salute and welcome the newly insitituted Rector, bidding him Godspeed.'

"May I for a moment take the place of the congregation?

"I know whereof I speak when I state that they all wish you a hearty 'God-speed.' They have already called and welcomed you to their midst and have promised you loyal co-operation and support.

"I am speaking out of my own experience when I say that the atmosphere of this Parish is that of kindness. These are warm-hearted people, hospitable, genuine, responsive, generous to a fault. They love their Church and their minister, and are glad to remember him in their prayers. * * *

"In the name of this people, who in days past have given their ministers in Christ more proofs of their affection and loyalty than I can number, I wish for them, as well as for myself, a long and happy ministry as Rector of Christ Church."

On Sunday, Feb. 10, at 7:15 p. m., there was held in the Parish House the first of a series of union services, the congregations of two other Hyde Park Churches being present, together with that of Christ Church. The coal crisis has made such an arrangement necessary, and the services that night, as well as those which have followed it on other Sunday evenings, was marked by a spirit of enthusiasm and friendliness. The plan agreed upon by the three Churches is that each Church uses its Parish House instead of its Church building for all services, and that on Sunday evening the three congregations unite in one of the Parish Houses, allowing the fires of the other two houses to be put out at noon.

On Sunday, Feb. 17, at 11 a. m., a special patriotic service was held, at which Washington and Lincoln were commemorated, the Service Flag dedicated, and a Processional Flag, recently given to the Parish, dedicated. The form of service was "An Office to be Used in Time of War" (published by St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston), with a few appropriate additions to mark the day. After the processional, the congregation remained standing while the Sunday morning prayer, written by George Washington, was read. The Collect for the day was announced as a prayer for national abstinence. The lesson was followed by a sentence from Washington's Farewell Address, and a part of Lincoln's Address at Gettysburg. At the dedication of the Service Flag, the Honor Roll was read, consisting of fifty-two names—a proud record for a Parish of only 500 communicants. The prayer of dedication of the Service Flag follows:

"Almighty God, who telleth the number of the stars, and calleth them all by their names; Accept at our hands, we pray Thee, this flag, as the pledge of our devotion to the cause of liberty, and as a sign of the constancy and valor of our sons, that it may ever remind us of the sacrifice by which alone the world can be redeemed, and which was manifested in Thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen."

Lent is Full of Christ

It brings men to Christ and Christ to men. We seek the Saviour in the wilderness, and we find Him by our side, in our hearts; and in the glow of feeling, under the guidance of Love that "seeketh not her own," we go out to find and help our brother for whom Christ died. By faithfulness in Lenten duties we gather strength and grace to go on to better things, when the light of Easter morning breaks through the mists, and the Sunshine of Eternal Hope falls upon an empty Tomb.—Bishop McLaren.

BISHOP DUN VISITS GUATEMALA AND SPANISH HONDURAS

In February Bishop Dun of British Honduras visited the Republics of Guatemala and Spanish Honduras. At his very first stopping place (Barrios) he found a district containing 2,300 Anglicans and only a deacon to take charge of them, as well as of a country school.

During his absence two men from the country came to Belize, one with a signed petition, begging for a school teacher or a lay reader in a district where the Church people could muster quite a good sized congregation but have no one to take services or teach their children; the other a lay reader, who gave notice that he would open a Sunday School in a hut on a Bante (plantation) and at once had thirty children all eager to learn.

The news has travelled up and down the rivers that the Bishop is interested in the children, and these men came to town at their own expense to represent the needs of their neighborhood.

The S. P. G. is taking a very sympathetic interest in the District and instead of shortening the grants is going to try to increase them.

NEWS FROM TOKYO

Deaconess Knapp writes from Tokyo, January 21, 1918:

"We are having the coldest winter for twenty years, and coal 33 ven a ton.'

'The work comes on slowly and steadily. With the educated Japanese many different Christian influences contribute toward the work of conversion. Others have labored, and we are entering into their labors.'

"One doctor has asked me to prepare him for Baptism; another came to make an appointment when he might ask the questions which especially perplex him from becoming a Christian.

THERE IS RECONSTRUCTION WORK IN CHINA TOO

Mrs. Bliss, wife of a Missionary Physician at St. James' Hospital, Anking, writes on January 11:

I am making a new social service venture. So many patients leave the hospital unable to resume their former occupations, that I have been spending many days and nights, planning how to help them. Finally I have rented an old Chinese house, put a wooden floor and four glass windows in the workroom and fitted up a second room as domitory.

At present four live in the dormitory. No. 1 has a defective heart. He was a beggar by profession and is now a neat, conscientious, cheerful, self-supporting man. No. 2 came to the hospital in a dying condition—seventeen percent of something that should have been at least ninety-eight per cent in his blood, I believe. After weeks in the hospital he has over seventy percent. He was a water carrier by trade, but will probably never again be able to do any heavy work. He has no education, of course, and is the size of a twelve year old child, although he is twenty-six. No. 3 is an obstinate leg ulcer case. No. 4 is a soldier with a diseased bone in his leg. He has spent seven months in the hospital and now goes on crutches, still needs daily treatment at the dispensary. These all are working under ideal conditions, and are entirely self-supporting.

We make place cards, Christmas cards, Christmas toys, blotters, etc. I am sending to America for a jig saw, lathe and printing press, so that we may be able to take on all the needy cripples as they come out of the hospital and need work, money and good cheer. Already three canvalescent have been able to pay their board and leave with a little money in their pockets, to make a fresh start.

It sometimes frightens me to think of these people dependent upon me for their livelihood, but so far we have been successful beyond all my dreams. We hope our friends will remember us in their prayers.

Orders for the work of this Reconstruction School may be sent through the Educational Department of the Board of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

The Cross of Christ Was Here First

Mrs. Ed. Melcher, Secretary of the Michigan City Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, asserts that, "What we all need is more education along missionary lines. And then we need to pray more for missions. Every Auxiliary woman is pledged to pray daily for missions. If we lived up to this, what a mighty spiritual force we might become. I think this year will be a testing of our faith—will show how much our religion really means to us. It seems to me that we must be faithful—praying and doing, and giving more for missions. We must be of good courage, and hold the line, prove the Auxilary to be truly a means of grace to us, and to others. I did not mean to preach a sermon, but I cannot understand women who let war work crowd out their Church work. The cross of Christ was here first—and we must uphold that, and we can do both if we have the will."

Dean White Accepts Chaplaincy

The War Commission has asked Rev. Francis S. White, who has been on temporary duty at Camp McArthur, Waco, Texas, to become Volunteer Chaplain at that camp, and he has accepted.

He asks THE WITNESS to request its readers that if they know of any Church boys who are now or who will be at Camp McArthur or Richfield to send him their names and addresses, and he will be to them as much a pastor as they are willing to allow.

A cable from Monrovia, received at the Church Missions House on Tuesday, March 5th, indicated that both Bishop Lloyd and Archdeacon Schofield were well, and that all their plans were progressing satisfactorily.

How hopeless we would be just now, amid the strife and turmoil of the world, were it not for the assurance that Jesus lives and reigns. His immutability is the solid foundation on which all can build. "I am the Lord; I change not."—Exchange.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Thursday Before Easter

THE EPISTLE

In this that I declare unto you I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse. For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions among you; and I partly believe it. For there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you. When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper. For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and another is drunken. What? have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not. For I have received of the Lord that which I also delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread: and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come. Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come.—I. Cor. xi:17.

Church-going has an objective: it is to "shew the Lord's death till He come". If we do this worthily, we come together for the better; if we do it unworthily, we do it for the worse. If, when we come together, we put our own needs, wishes, desires, hopes, first, even to the point of obtrusion, as did those Church folk in Corinth, then we bring about divisions, and this "is not to eat the Lord's supper", for that is a common meal. Neither is it "to eat the Lord's supper", if we satisfy our own physical needs first, choose for ourselves what we will for ourselves, which is heresy, and then give ourselves to satisfying our spiritual needs with tag ends. All of this is unworthy of us as "the redeemed of Israel". Let us remember that the House of God is meant to be the house of bread, the house of that Bread which cometh down from heaven. To remember this will keep us from "despising the House of God", and will save the feelings of those good souls whose only home life in this world is the home life made by those who keep faith with God. The Church should be the House of Bread. That is her chief reason for existence. And if one should ask you what reason the Church has for going into places where the Gospel was already being preached, it seems to me the answer could very properly be made, because that only is a full Gospel message which includes the "shewing forth the Lord's death at least once on the first day of every week, and we are the Church that does that these days, in a way understood by the people, and according to the ancient rite.

But besides the corporate, there is also the individual "worthiness" and "unworthiness" on which we should meditate. Not to examine ourselves, not to judge ourselves, is to omit the use of conscience and self-judgment in matters spiritual, and so to condemn ourselves in our communions with God. If the Parish or the Church members are "weak and sickly", it may be premised that they are just attending services, or just conducting services, and are not really participating in them. And, as a result, they are "guilty of the body and blood of Christ".

"Setting things in order." This is a great task. A greater and a harder task is "to keep things in order". How much setting in order is required of our clergy and people because their predecessors did not "keep things in order"? It took almost as much pain and blood to restore the Church in England as it did to reform the Church on the continent; and after nearly five centuries, we Christians still need to be setting our house in order. Can it be that the Church, in her unreformed, restored or reformed branches has not been discerning the Lord's body? And is it for that reason that it is possible for men to publicly rebuke her for being "weak, and sickly, and asleep?"

Let us remember that unless our coming together as a Parish, or as parts of the Church, is "to shew forth the Lord's death", we may as well go out of business. It is because parts of the Church militant throughout the ages have persisted in maintaining the Sacramental life that no human agency has supplanted her. Be sure that you do your part loyally and generously to see that the Church, in her corporate and individual membership, remembers, week by week, yea, even day by day, where possible, to shew forth the Lord's death so worthily that nothing will have to be set in order when the Lord comes to judge the quick and the dead of our generation.

THE GOSPEL

The whole multitude arose, and led him unto Pilate. And they began to accuse him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, saying that he himself is Christ a King. And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answered him and said, Thou sayest it. Then said Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, I find no fault in fierce, saying, He stirreth up the peofierce,saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place. When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilean. And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time. And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him. Then he questioned him in many words; but he answered him nothing. And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused him. And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate. And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves. And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests and the rulers and the people, said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I have examined him before you, and have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him: no, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and, lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him. I will therefore chastise him and release him. (For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast.) And they cried out all together, Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas: (who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.) Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them. But they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. And he said unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and let him go. And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed. And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required. And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered Jesus to their will. And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus. And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him. But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children. For, behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck. Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us. For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry? And there were also two other, malefactors, led with him to be put to death. And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left. Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots. And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God. And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar, and saying, If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself. And a superscription also was written over him, in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS. And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us. But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss. And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise. And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour. And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst. And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost. Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man. And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts, and returned. And all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things.—St. Luke xxiii:1.

"He stirreth up the people." The story of the Cross is not opium—it is dynamite. It is not such "stuff as dreams are made of", giving artificial and unreal repose and quiet; but it is the power of God unto salvation, breaking up hard hearts, breaking down bad habits, stirring up the productive forces of a man's life, converting sinners, like the thief, out of their own torments, shaking men steeled by the fires of discipline, as was the centurion, into open confessions of conviction concerning the Christ; moving the people with conscious guilt opprest to smite upon their breasts and return to a real sense and conviction of sin. Such a story cannot be preached too often, nor in too many places. The more the wills of the people are stirred by the come out of the country how to bear the cross after Jesus.

"If he be Christ", said the rulers. "If thou be king", said the soldiers. "If thou be Christ", echoed one of the malefactors. That word "if" is the devil's hypodermic needle. More work for Jesus and His Church suffers and languishes because the rulers, the soldiers and the good men gone wrong roll on their tongues at the great crises in their lives that little word "if". It spells doubt, despair, antagonism, scorn, and a lot of other attitudes which the enemies of God want men to take. Originally, it means to convey a challenge, but, like many another good word, it has been so often used by the forces and followers of evil, that it has acquired a sinister meaning, and has become the password of inaction, cowardice and sloth. Let us be careful how we use "if". In many ways it often becomes a synonym for "hell".

"Stood afar off beholding these things." It was a very human thing to do. There are times in the lives of families and individuals when it would seem as if all we could do was to stand by and look on in sorrow and awe. Yet we must be careful not to get into this habit. If we be true followers of Jesus, we must be "close up" when His cause is in danger, whether it be in a friend's personal life, or in his home, or in his business, or his community, or in the life of the state, or the nation, or the world. Too many people and peoples have fallen, and never risen again, because their friends stood beholding, instead of coming to the rescue. There are, of course, certain "passions" in life that we must respect in silent sympathy; but before we take such an attitude, let us make sure it has the approval of God, and is not adopted by us to quiet conscience, and excuse us from a constructively disagreeable task.

An Occupation of Lent—Prayer

More frequent, more earnest, more intense in the closet and in the Church;—Giving utterance to the deep yearnings of your soul for God and for a better life; expressing your sincere desire that God may visit with pardon for past offenses, with compassion for your infirmities, and with Divine help in your dangers and necessities;—Drawing your life in its every thought and occupation closer to your Saviour's side, and nearer to "Our Father, who art in heaven."

The morning Old Testament lessons during Lent of the second year (both Sundays and week days) constitute a study of the experience of God's people in exile—how and why they were carried into Babylon, what they learned while there, and their coming out in accordance with God's promises—this on Easter. This parallels the similar use of the experience of the children of Israel in Egypt during Lent of the first year. The first lesson for Sunday morning takes up again the sin of Judah, that made necessary the discipline of the exile, and incidentally sheds a flood of light on what is meant by the anger or wrath of God. "I poured forth my fury upon them," says Ezekiel, "for the blood they had shed, and for their idols." But right alongside of this is the same promise of restoration that we read in last Sunday's lesson, though carried out much more fully: "A new heart will I give you and a new spirit will I put within you and cause you to walk in my statutes." Restoration was to mean not merely change of place, but of nature—regeneration.

The New Testament lesson, from Hebrews, shows how this promise was fulfilled as to its depth of spiritual meaning, only through our Lord Jesus Christ, who is there declared to have inaugurated the New Covenant. Both these lessons are in line with the teaching of the Epistle, in which, on this Passion Sunday, the sacrifice of our Lord is described as an offering of Himself, through the Eternal Spirit, without spot to God; and in both lesson and Epistle, the sacrifice of the Christ is designed to be followed by a similar consecration of ourselves. Christ, as our Redeemer, is something more than, and other than, our substitute. The "blood of Christ" is to "purge our conscience from dead works to serve the living God", and, in the second lesson, sin, under the new covenant of grace, is worse than under the law. This, too, corresponds with the regeneration associated in Ezekiel's mind with restoration, and with the teaching of Micah in the Old Testament alternative, where "doing justly, loving mercy and walking humbly with our God" is given as the true idea of sacrifice. Never was such teaching more needed than now, when so often the suffering Christ is impaled between an ecclesiastical legalism and an unethical, selfidian, so-called evangelism, in which connection the proposed Collect of 1688 (given in Sanders' "Message of the Church in Collect, Epistle and Gospel) for this Sunday is worth thinking about, though, as a minor point, the present Collect is admirably illustrated by the Old Testament lesson ("governed and preserved in body and soul").

The evening lessons were selected with a view to Passion Sunday. In the second lesson, our Lord foretells His Passion, and follows that, in line with other Scriptures for this day, with the insistence upon the adoption by His disciples of the law of the Cross for themselves, and the prophecy of the Passion (present Prayer Book lesson for morning) is given for Old Testament backing: "There would be a cleansing from sin (not escape from punishment), but not unaccompanied by suffering:" What are these wounds in Thine hands?"

The week day selections keep to the general tenor of the Sunday lessons. The course reading of St. Luke's Gospel is concluded; Romans is concluded, and the pith of the teaching has relation to true sacrifice xi:1), while the prophetic readings have regard to the New Covenant and the Messiah to come.

Passion of the blessed Jesus, the better place will this old world become.

"Set Him at nought, and arrayed Him in a gorgeous robe." We, too, do this, if we build beautiful Church buildings, erect costly Altars, buy wonderful chalices, flash back to the shining sun exquisite stained glass portraits of the Saviour and the saints, preach thrilling and colorful word pictures of the wonderful Christ, and yet set him at naught by neglecting His Altar, irregularly frequenting His meeting houses, refusing to obey His commands to preach Him and teach His message to the ends of the world, shirking the responsibility of extending by word and by example, directly or through a substitute, His kingdom in ever widening circles from our Jerusalem to Judaea, through Samaria, unto the uttermost parts of the earth. Think of "the gorgeous robe", think of the "setting at naught". If, perchance, you have a robe, and at the same time have given little or nothing to send the Saviour into places where they know Him not, are you not in danger of making friends with Pilate and Herod?

"That he might bear is after Jesus," What a message this whole verse is to the Christian Church, which has seemed so indifferent to "the rural problem", as we call it now-a-days. Simon was "coming out of the country" on his way to the city. The mob leaders used him because he was looked upon as a mere burden-bearer. But God placed him among the saints, because he bore the cross of suffering love after Jesus. It is a dreadful thing to neglect the man coming out of the country. The city Church should not neglect the sources which are filling up the cities. It should see that when men come up to the city they should be bearing the crosses after Jesus. The country parson should be, and often he used to be, and occasionally he still is, the wisest master of the human heart that the Church can find. God help us to see our duty in making life tolerable for the man who stays away from the sanctuaries of the city, and shows the people who

THE COMMUNION OFFICE

Catechism: A careful reading of the Communion Office to the words, "Lift up your hearts." (Prayer Book, pp. 220.)

Prop. 1.

(a) The service which our Lord instituted comes to us with the same authority as the Lord's Prayer or the Sermon on the Mount. It is His creation, therefore we reverently accept it, knowing that it is only when we do His will that we will come to know His doctrine.

So it is more important that we obey Christ by observing the Sacrament, than it is that we understand it. We first of all accept in faith.

(b) Moreover, this service is the one thing which you do as a Christian that no one but a baptized person can do. A non-Christian can say prayers, sing hymns, be kind and pure, but to participate in the Lord's Supper is the sole right of those who have been admitted by baptism and confirmation. It is the one exculsively Christian act that you perform.

(c) This service of the Eucharist is the greatest miracle of history.

Other leaders of men have left memorials after them;—temples, arches, monuments, but time has crumbled the monument, as interest in the great man has gradually ceased. Even the great empires that they have formed have disintegrated. But here a plain man, in an obscure room, with twelve men of the peasant class, instituted a service and said, "Do this in memory of me," and in all probably a day has never passed since Pentecost, in which somewhere that memorial has been observed, and, today, nearly twenty centuries after, you can not find a country in the world where men do not congregate to "show forth the Lord's death until He come."

There is nothing to compare with this in all history, and each time you attend this service you are braving your arteries as a Christian to the fact which this service embodies.

Prop. 2.

This service is known commonly by three names, each of which illustrates a different aspect of the service. It is called, (1) the Lord's Supper, (2) the Holy Communion, (3) the Holy Eucharist. (The term Mass, used exculsively in the Roman Church, has no particular significance as a name, being more of a handy term than a fitting designation of the Sacrament. It is derived probably from the Latin phraze with which the congregation was dismissed, a shortening of the words "Missa est." Its use is convenient rather than reverent.)

1. The Lord's Supper. The word, "Supper," carries with it the idea of nourishment. It is the Christian's spiritual meal in which "our bodies are strengthened by His body." "Except ye eat my flesh," said the Lord, "you have no life in you."

"Take, eat, this is my Body," was the Lord's own comment on the meaning of this word.

2. The Holy Communion. These words carry with them the idea of reconciliation with God and our Christian fellowship with one another. To the Hebrew mind (and the Apostles were Jews) man's reconciliation with God was not complete until he had partaken of the sacrifice at God's Board.

"Grant that we may so eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood, that our sinful bodies may be made clean by His Body, and our souls washed through His most precious blood, and that we may evermore dwell in Him, and He in us."

It is also the communion of Christian's with one another in His mystical Body.

"Ye who are in love and charity with one another" are invited to cement your fellowship at the Lord's table.

3. The Holy Eucharist. The word Eucharist is a Greek word and means "to offer thanks." It is the word that our Lord Himself used when He brake the bread. It carries with it the idea of offering. In this sense the priest takes the bread and wine (products of God's grace and man's industry), and offers them to God. This is called the oblation, and signifies that you "offer yourselves, your souls and bodies to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto God."

God accepts this offering of yourselves, and in His turn makes the bread and wine to be the Body and Blood of Christ. So that you offer yourselves to God in this Sacrament, and receive Christ Himself in return.

Thus your religion finds its hightest expression in this commerce of love between yourselves and God. You give Him yourself, and He gives you Himself.

QUESTIONS

1. Why is the Holy Communion the most important service in the Christian Church?
2. Who alone may participate in this service?
3. How effective a memorial did Christ establish in this service?
4. By what three names is this service known in the Church?
5. What can you say about the word "Mass?"
6. Why is it called the Lord's Supper?
7. Why the Holy Communion?
8. Why the Holy Eucharist?

Religious Meditation

By Rev. H. P. Scratchley

"Meditation," in a religious sense, is devout thought on the truths of our Holy Religion. Its object is to gain deeper spiritual knowledge and insight of the things of God. It is not enough to know simply facts; the really true nature of these becomes apparent only when we have meditated upon them. Our grasp of what we have learned is to a very great extent superficial unless we give thought to it; turn it over and over, as it were, in our minds until the full meaning is more and more apparent. The same principle applies in religion; our intellects are just as much a part of our religious natures as our emotions are. So with our faith and knowledge of the things of God; to grasp these completely we must think and meditate upon them. It is because of our failure to do this that we are so easily misled in spiritual matters. St. Paul prayed that the Ephesian Christians might be strengthened with power in the inner man through the Spirit of God, that Christ might dwell in their hearts through faith, to the end that they, being rooted and grounded in love, might be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passes knowledge, that they might be filled with all the fulness of God. (Ephes. iii:16-19.) This gives us the method of the acquisition of spiritual knowledge, faith, the power of the Spirit of God, apprehension of the faith. So it is a part of our religion to think deeply, that is, meditate, on the "unsearchable riches" of Christ.

A system of meditation is very often of great help, but it is not necessary to be a slave to this system. It is better to make a few simple rules for ourselves and keep them, but, when they become irksome, they should be changed.

The main purpose of meditation is by thinking in order to know. If a system becomes a hindrance to thought, the whole purpose of the system is lost. Then we must be on our guard against simple mechanical reading of the Scriptures. The determination to read one chapter of the Bible every day is of little spiritual value if thought does not go with the reading; a short passage read intelligently and thought over is of great value, the value being proportional to the thought given it.

Here are a few simple rules for a beginner:

1. Begin meditation with prayer for the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

2. Have a well thought out scheme of reading, such as the Life of Christ, or the Parables of the Kingdom, or the Sermon on the Mount.

3. Choose the time of day for the meditation when you are at your best and have the most time to give yourself fully to the meditation.

4. Read over carefully the passage of Scripture chosen; learn it by heart, if possible. Think over each part after reading the whole.

5. Use such helps as will aid to an understanding of the passage, but be careful to avoid all technicalities or polemical commentaries.

Short passages for meditation are better than long ones, but the length is to be determined by the unity of the paragraph. For this reason a Bible which divides the books into paragraphs instead of verses is decidedly the best to be used.

Every-Day Religion

By Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

JESUS CHRIST THE SAVIOUR

Text: There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4:12.

These words express the conviction of a little group of men and women at the day-dawn of the Christian era. They indicate a change of attitude that, in the face of the then existing conditions, was as remarkable as it was heroic. To profess faith in the crucified Nazarene meant to incur the sternest disciplines, and in many cases to forfeit one's life. It was this conviction, however, that literally made the Christian Church so mighty and irresistable that within three centuries it had substituted its standards for those of the Roman legions, and had established itself in the great centers of learning and power.

Jesus of Nazareth has many names and distinctions, but He takes His supremest place in human thought as the world's Saviour and Redeemer. When we measure His life by human standards there are some aspects of it that we can comprehend and understand, but when we are confronted with His Saviourhood He rises to such sublime heights and gives evidence of such supreme power and authority, that, with Thomas of old, we can only cry out: "My Lord and my God."

In the loneliness of his exile, Napoleon repeatedly turned to the consideration of Jesus Christ's life and ministry, and in his latest hours he recognized, not only the transcendent beauty of His life and teachings, but he betrayed a deep reverence for His sovereign place as the world's Saviour. When the Frenchman, Renan, attempted to write the life of Jesus, which is one of the most beautiful expressions of that life the world unbeliever though he was, he was appalled by the colossal assertion of Jesus as the world's Redeemer. After years of deep sorrow, in which the mystery of death was uppermost in his mind, Tennyson thus addresses Christ:

"Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood Thou,
Our wills are ours, we know not why,
Our wills are ours to make them Thine."

There can be no question about it that the outstanding appeal that Jesus makes to the human consciousness is that of man's Saviour and Redeemer. He declared Himself to be the giver of "the more abundant life." He says, with strange authority: "Whosoeyer believeth on me hath everlasting life." And again, "I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." Even on the cross, with hands and body pierced, He asserts His sovereignty to the dying thief: "Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise."

Confronted with these mighty assertions, human speculation and doubt are arrested and the hand of faith is outstretched for that which the human heart craves and which Jesus Christ alone satisfies. If the poet's word is true,

" 'Tis life whereof our souls are scant,
More life and fuller that we want,"

then here by the side of the world's Saviour we discover those wells of power and inspiration that spring up unto everlasting life. It is our deep conviction that His saving power is not a consummation effective only when life is spent. Say what we may, there is something which the consciousness of His Saviourhood lends to life here and now that is utterly beyond our powers to analyze or express. We are a world of men and women with the first glow of the eternal life upon us; upon whose faces there can be no shadow of departing day. What this old world is sighing for today, what it has ever sighed for, is the conscious presence of its Saviour, for the Saviourhood of Jesus has to do with life's renewals. With even a partial conception of this transmitted power of Jesus, the tasks and burdens of life are lightened and its most awful problems solved.—Courtesy of Minneapolis Tribune.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

WAR TIME PRAYERS

The first is a prayer by the Bishop of Montana. The second one is selected from the special prayers used in Trinity Church, New York, as is also the third.

O God, our refuge and Strength, who art long-suffering and of great mercy, and by no means clearing the guilty; Hide not thy face from our land in the fiery trial of war; Grant us true repentance of our sins, and take away the offences of our people, that with clean hands and a pure heart we may go forward in thy name. From the idolatry of Mammon; from levity and dissolute living; from the strife of classes, from injustice and contempt of law; from vainglory and confidence in our own might, and from forgetfulness of thee, Good Lord, deliver us. Save us, we beseech thee, from treason and from panic fears; and make us of one mind in steadfast fealty and cheerful sacrifice. Those in authority over us endue with courage and wisdom and thy holy fear. Strengthen and defend our protectors by sea and land; and suffer no dishonor or crime to stain our arms. Safeguard and multiply the ministries of merch; succor the wounded, comfort the dying; restrain the spread of cruelty and hate. Make a speedy end of tyrannies in the earth, and deliver the desolate and oppressed of all nations; hasten the advent of righteous peace, and with great might establish thy kingdom, through him who died to redeem mankind, thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

Almight God, who hast made us citizens of this land, enable us to do our country service. Make us calm, unselfish and ready to give according to our means. Give us grace to bear the burdens of others, those known to us, and those unknown. Keep us from being at any time cast down by anxiety, and enable us to cheer and comfort those about us. Show us at all times what is our duty, and strengthen us to do it, and grant that we may with a ready will learn the lessons which thou art teaching us; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

O Lord Jesus Christ, who by thy death dist take away the sting of death, grant rest, we beseech thee, in the place of light and refreshment, to those who have died in battle, or through sickness, in this war; receive their souls into thy holy keeping, where pain and sorrow and sighing are done away, and grant unto them a merciful judgment at the last day; Who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Making Soldiers Better Men

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew at Work in the Camps—Difficulties Encountered by the Secretaries Results Beginning to be Apparent.

In many ways the Secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew are making their presence felt at the cantonments and naval stations. The organization of the groups among the enlisted men for personal work among their fellows proceeds quietly. The camp Secretary selects a "key man," who forms a group of three, five or a dozen men, and the work is on.

Naturally, the groups make progress clowly. Soldiers are busy men. From early morn till late in the day, they are occupied with routine duties. Comparatively little time is left for Christian work.

But the man who is looking for an opportunity to help his fellows always finds one. Perhaps it is a word, now and then; perhaps an act.

The results of the work accomplished by the groups,—which are not limited to Churchmen, by any means,—are becoming apparent. Bible reading is common among the enlisted men. A blessing is offered at mess. Men are not ashamed to pray before their comrades.

"One of the Chaplains visited us for dinner, and for once we had grace before a meal," writes a young Churchman who is wearing Uncle Sam's uniform.

The camp Secretaries are giving attention to this matter; the groups are interested. The asking for a blessing upon one's food is a little thing, but little things of this kind make for righteousness.

An enthusiastic Brotherhood man at Camp Logan, Texas, is endeavoring to organize a Chapter. There are many Churchmen in the cantonment, and he should succeed. The difficulty seems to be to bring them together. A religious ceusus, which is under way, will materially aid him in his work.

"They are drilling us rather hard nos as they do not intend to give us any training in France, so you can readily see that our time is well taken up," writes this soldier.

True; but over in France, there will be plenty of time for Christian work. And it will be needed. The groups should be formed here, before the men embark on their Great Adventure.

Doyle E. Hinton, Camp Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at Camp Cody, New Mexico, has a Bible class of 200 men. From this class he has recruited more than a dozen men for personal work. The dozen represent a dozen different companies. Each will form a group. The groups will extend their influence. Who can tell where that influence will stop?

Hinton wins over many of the soldiers by his work in the hospitals. When men are sick they are susceptible to kindly influence. They will receive advice. They will talk religion. A hospital is an excellent "beginning place" for a personal worker.

At one of Mr. Hinton's services, more than 200 men promised to pray for their religious welfare.

Other Camp Secretaries are engaged in similar work. The seed is being sown; the foundations laid. While the new American army is being trained to meet the foe, the Christian forces are quietly preparing for the attack of the more insidiuos enemy which strikes an army from within.

The Y. M. C. A., the Churches, the Chaplains and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew are engaged in this work.

And God will bless it.

Thinks Every Priest Should be Called "Dr."

In congratulating all who are connected with THE WITNESS, who he says have produced a splendid Church paper, calculated to educate the people in the principles of the Church, the Rev. H. G. England of St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek Parish, Washington, D. C., expresses the earnest wish that the title "Mr.", as applied to the Clergy, be dropped from our columns. In his opinion it is neither Churchly nor American. He asserts that the physicians of the United States showed good, hard common sense in ignoring the English custom of addressing physicians as "Mr.", and we would do well to follow their example. We honor the diplomas of small schools giving professional training more than we do the Priesthood of the Church, says Dr. England, who thinks every Priest should be called "Doctor." "He is as much a Doctor of Theology as a physician is a Doctor of Medicine, and as much entitled to be so addressed as a dentist, veterinarian or chiropodist. Doctor is free from 'doceo' to teach, ('doctus', teacher,) and has no reference to medicine. In the Prayer Book ordination service for Priests, every Priest is called 'doctor', which is pretty good authority."

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

There are three large Greek Orthodox congregations in Chicago, with an aggregate membership of 24,000.

Marion H. Casier, a Christian Science practitioner, despondent over business, committed suicide at Detroit, Mich., on March 5th.

"Coal will not make good the lack of zeal in the maintenance of the Church services", says the Newark Churchman, "but zeal will help to make up for the lack of coal."

A beautiful new Altar of finely carved oak, nine feet long, and weighing about 1,500 pounds, has been installed in St. George's Church, Chicago, in memory of Mr. Christopher Clake. r

A beautiful pair of Eucharistic Candle Sticks was presented to Grace Memorial Church as a gift from the Daughters of the King of that Parish. The candle sticks were blessed by the Rector, Rev. A. W. Sidders, the first Sunday in Lent, Feb. 17, 1918.

The Woman's Guild of the Church of the Epiphany, Chicago, collected, under the direction of Miss Mary T. Granger, the handsome sum of $410 during the year 1917 by means of a penny-a-day scheme. A Liberty Bond for the Parish Endowment Fund was purchased, and the balance of the money was turned over to the Church treasury.

A patriotic service was held in St. Paul's Church, Pawtucket, R. I., which was participated in by the four Parishes of the city, in connection with the unfurling of Service Flags in honor of the men in war service from each Parish, the total stars numbering 185. The several Rectors took part in the service, and Col. H. A. Dyer gave the address.

St. Mary's Mission was opened and the first service held on Feb. 4th, at Los Angeles, Cal., by the Rev. Neal Dodd, who has charge of the new work. The Mission has developed from St. Stephen's Parish, and is intended to assist the mother Parish in caring for the spiritual needs of the rapidly increasing population in the district known as Hollywood.

The daily population of the hospitals, homes, sanitariums and prisons which the Rev. Dr. C. L. Cooder visits in Newark and Essex County, New Jersey, is about 3,000, with the change of about 500 persons each week. He has visited twenty-five institutions the past year, the visits numbering nearly 1,000 and the number of persons visited in them over 11,000. He baptized 185 persons and administered the Holy Communion in private to 341 persons, and officiated at 597 burials.

"The question may be asked," says Bishop Woodcock of the Diocese of Kentucky, "does it pay to minister year after year to small places, where there is but a handful of people, and little prospect of more? No, it does not pay, if by pay we mean returns, and progress, and contributions. But to cut off our work because it does not pay would be to become unworthy of our trust. Wherever the Church may minister to the scattered family, give comfort and shepherd her flock, it is not given to us to ask or to hesitate regarding whether it pays. To raise such a question would be to reduce our work from a spiritual to a commercial basis. It is not a question of pay, it is a matter of conscience and fidelity."

The Girls' Friendly Society in Missouri has had a busy Winter. All of the Branches have been knitting for the soldiers, making surgical dressings, and giving money for patriotic purposes. The Diocesan Council has offered the services of the G. F. S. to the Y. M. C. A. in its work at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis. A Quiet Hour was held for the members of the Society at the beginning, with a special service at 4:30 p. m., on March 10th, followed by a supper, at the Church of the Holy Communion. The Passion Play is to be given in motion pictures, to be followed by evening service in the Church. A Quiet Day will be conducted by the Rev. H. W. Mizner at St. Stephen's House, St. Louis, for the Associates of the So-the demands of the educational and health authorities of the State of New York, and to avoid the possibility of being required to reduce the number of pupils by at least one-third. The present enrollment is fifty-five. The School is overcrowded, and fourteen applications have been refused the past year for lack of room. St. Faith's is one of the few secondary schools for girls in the North which provides College preparatory and general training at a rate of $300 per year. Thus, in the midst of its greatest prosperity, St. Faith's finds itself confronted with conditions which, unless removed, will defeat the purpose for which Miss Shackleford founded it to provide a place where girls of moderate means could secure a thorough secondary education plus the advantages of a Christian home. With the new dormitory, it is believed that the School can continue to operate at the usual low rates, and friends of the School are urged to respond liberally to the appeal made by the Board of Trustees.

"He's won! He's won!" exclaimed Mr. E. W. Spencer of Highland Park, Ill., when he received word that his son, Demaresque Spencer, had been killed while on air patrol duty in France, and when Mrs. Spencer heard the news of her boy's death, she said she would gladly give another son to die. Impressive memorial services for the dead soldier were held at Trinity Church, Highland Park. The Rev. Dr. Arthur Rogers and the Rev. William Holmes of St. Mark's Church, Evanston, assisted in the service, and the Rector, the Rev. Dr. Wolcott, preached the sermon.

op Israel of the Diocese of Erie, who went to France last Summer for war service, and working in conjunction with the Chaplains of the English and French armies, is now in Rome. Base Hospital Unit No. 1 of the University of Pennsylvania, to which Bishop Israel is attached, is still in America. It is expected that it will be ordered abroad at an early date, and that the Bishop will join it on arrival in France.

The Rev. Everett Wilson Couper, Rector of Christ Church, Alameda, Cal., for the past eight years, has accepted a call from Trinity Cathedral, Duluth, Minn., as Vicar, and will take up his new work shortly after Easter. Mr. Couper is a native of Minnesota, a graduate of its University and of Seabury Divinity School. It is with with much regret that the Parish at Alameda releases him, where he has endeared himself to its members and made a large place for himself in the community and in the Diocese of California.

The Rev. Robert E. Browning, Rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Silver City, N. M., has left for France, having been notified the first of this month that he had been commissioned as an Army Chaplain, with the rank of First Lieutenant. He has been assigned to service with the American expeditionary forces under General Pershing. Mr. Browning has a brother who is a Chaplain in the Army, and Mrs. Browning has four brothers in military service. His predecessor, the Rev. Z. T. Vincent, is a Chaplain of the U. S. Army, stationed at Laredo, Texas.

Notes From Syracuse, N. Y.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Episcopalian Club of Syracuse University on March 4th, Professor Lewis W. Crawford was elected to the Presidency. Miss Barbara Watson, of the class of 1919, was elected Secretary.

A Lenten letter was issued to the members of the Club, announcing services in the neighboring Churches and also Confirmation Classes.

There will be a corporate Communion of the members at St. Paul's Church on Palm Sunday, at 8 o'clock, and there will be a reception in St. Paul's Parish House, the Rev. Henry Harrison Hadley, Rector, on Tuesday, April 9th.

The Club has ushers and hospitality committees in some of the city Churches where pews are set aside for the students, and also assists in having clergymen of the Church speak in College Chapel and students' religious organizations.

Steady Growth of the Church in West Virginia

Some very encouraging facts and figures were presented to the Kanawah Convocation of the Diocese of West Virginia by its Survey Committee. The report opens with an extended excerpt from Bishop Peterkin's address to the Diocesan Council in 1905, wherein the Bishop urged the relinquishment of all aid from the General Board of Missions. At the time of the formation of the Diocese, two prominent laymen wrote to the Bishop-elect, Dr. Peterkin, one to warn him (although the warning never reached him) not to heed the call to the new Diocese, as the people had pledged themselves far beyond their ability to give, and the Diocese was doomed to disastrous failure. The other layman wrote encouragingly, and pledged himself to make up such deficiency in the financial resources of the Diocese as seemed to some inevitable. He was never called upon to make good his pledge. The Diocese promptly and fully met all its obligations, and has continued to do so ever since. The report states that the Council, in 1905, adopted Bishop Peterkin's suggestion, and in doing so, as in all other matters involving his sound judgment, the Diocese has had abundant cause to be thankful. From its formation, the Diocese had received help from the Board of Missions, and in September, 1905, gave up the last appropriation of $1,450. In giving up the appropriation of $1,450, the Diocese did not ask for a reduction of the apportionment placed upon it by the Board of Missions, and has never asked for it since. In addition to this, it has never failed to overpay its apportionment. The Diocese, by assuming the responsibility for its own Church extension, and by continuing to bear its full share in the work of the General Church, has developed the true Missionary spirit, and the Church in the Diocese has grown very rapidly. In a recent survey of the Diocese, two country Churches, in a distinctly Missionary field, not to mention others with a wonderfully fine record for giving to Missions, contributed for Diocesan Missions, $4.71 and $2.20 per capita, and not a single wealthy person in the Missions.

In the Eastern Convocation, where the Church has been long established, the growth has been much more rapid than in the General Church, for while the ratio of the Church in the United States is 1.99, the ratio for the Eastern Convocation is 1.69. In this same Convocation, the ratio of Sunday School scholars to children from 6 to 14 years of age within its bounds is 1.22. This shows the rapid development where the Church has had the chance of standing the test of dwelling long in the land.

The only help the Diocese has received, and is receiving at the present time, is $400 for the Colored work.

The Diocese, during the last eleven years, gained 4 clergy, 23 Churches, 5 Parish Houses, 13 Sunday Schools, 777 scholars, 1,819 communicants, and $26,267.80 in contributions.

In six years, the Diocese has gained eleven points in ratio of communicants to population, for in 1910 the ratio was 1.214 and in 1916 it was 1.203.

The Sheltering Arms Hospital was founded in January, 1886, by Bishop Peterkin. It was opened in July, 1888, with six beds. Thirty-three patients were treated during the first year. Today it is one of the best equipped hospitals in the State, and treated, during the past year, 3,055 patients. Although the hospital has just completed a drive to increase its Permanent Fund from $40,000 to $100,000, it did not in any way fail to do its part in the Pension Fund, as was shown in the amount given.

Not to go into a more detailed report of the varied Diocesan activities, we feel that sufficient has been given to show the remarkable growth of the Diocese, and with the sustained cooperation of all our forces, the Diocese will be prepared to take advantage of the great opportunities which are being presented.

Parish Opportunities

The opportunities for good in every Parish are splendid. If every communicant in the Parish were an earnest Church worker, who can calculate the result? If every communicant were a helper, a sympathizer, in every means employed to build up the Kingdom of Christ in our midst, and to pull down the kingdom of Satan, who could hinder or impede the Christian influence of the Parish, placed here to represent the truth and the work of God? If every communicant were a fellow-worker with the Rector in the service of Christ, who can estimate the "fruits of their labor?"

'Tis the neglected opportunities by the many in the Parish, that produce weakness, worldliness, dissatisfaction and failure in its life.

This Lenten season comes to arouse every dormant member of the Church to a realization of the splendid work the Parish can do, if only it can secure the consecrated energies of all God's people.

WHO WOULD HINDER THIS USEFULNESS?

Personal Mention

The Rev. H. G. Stacey, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Brainerd, Minn., has resigned and accepted a call to St. Andrew's Church, Cloquet, Minn.

The Rev. Charles Harris, Jr., of Port Allegany, Pa., has accepted a call as Curate at Christ Church, Williamsport, Pa. He will be assistant to the Rev. Charles N. Tyndell, and have charge of St. Mary's and St. John's Parishes.

The Vestry of Christ Church, Riverdale Avenue, New York City, has called to the Rectorship of the Parish the Rev. Glenn W. White, Rector of Christ Church, Albion, N. Y. Mr White has accepted the call, and will take up his work after Easter.

The Rev. Arthur E. Woodward, Rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, Poplar Bluff, Mo., has accepted a call to Trinity Church, Van Buren, Ark.

The Rev. E. S. Barlow, for the past three years Rector of St. Luke's Church, Mechanicsburg, and in charge of St. Andrew's Church Shippensburg, Pa., has resigned to accept a call to Christ Church, Milton, Pa.

Dudley S. Stark of the Junior Class at Cambridge Theological School has enlisted in the Navy as Chief Yeoman, to do religious work. He will be stationed temporarily at the office of Chaplain Stone, at the Boston Navy Yard.

The Rev. Frederick S. Sill, D. D., Rector of St. John's Church, Cohoes, N. Y., has been appointed Chaplain of the Cadet Battalion in his city, which is composed of 500 boys under 19 years of age. Dr. Sill was honorary Chaplain of Co. B, 3rd Inf., New York National Guards, for twenty-five years. He resigned last June.

The Rev. Wilmer S. Poyner has tendered his resignation as Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Birmingham, Ala., and accepted a call to St. John's Church, Florence, S. C. He has been enjoying a two weeks' vacation before beginning his new work on the fifth Sunday in Lent.

Would Like Tonneau Seatc in Heaven-Bound Limousines

The congregation of the Church of the Epiphany, Louisville, Ky., are now worshipping in a hall on the third floor of a building at Chestnut and Twenty-sixth Streets. The Rev. Arthur Gorter, Priest-in-charge, says that "Each Sunday we have the pleasure of welcoming back to the fold some old member who has just learned our new location and climbs the 'golden stair' to our exalted station. Some of the Sunday School children are lost to us because their parents think the social advantages will be better elsewhere. I am convinced that many 'stylish' people will meet a large number of their best friends in hell. The Kingdom of Heaven has more than its share of 'slackers' who don't want to work in mission trenches, but would like tonneau seats in heaven-bound limousines well behind the range of vulgar shells."

The Witness Comes to Break That Habit

You subscribe for your own town paper, of course. You would be ashamed not to show your interest in local affairs. You keep in touch with national affairs by taking some great daily paper. You could not live without it. You meet your literary tastes by subscribing for one or more popular magazines. Your housekeeping and your dressmaking are aided by family journals. A trade journal is in the hands of every ambitious workman. In Church matters, you subscribe for your Parish paper (or your Rector gives it to you) to keep in touch with Parish work. Your intelligence is marked by the periodicals you read. Why should you be ignorant of the Church's great life and work and thought? Why should you be out of touch with the great throbbing heart of the Church at large?

It is not the cost. You will cheerfully give $1.00 a year for such a paper. It is not the desire to be ignorant of Church affairs. There is only one reason. You have never subscribed. You lack the habit. THE WITNESS comes to break that habit. A National Weekly Church Newspaper.—St. Augustin's (Wilmette, Ill.) Messenger.

Roosevelt's Message to the Troops

The teachings of the New Testament are foreshadowed in Micah's verse: "What more doth the Lord require of thee than to do justice, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

Do justice, and therefore fight valiantly against the armies of Germany and Turkey, for these nations in this crisis stand for the reign of Moloch and Beelzebub on this earth.

Love mercy. Treat prisoners well, succor the wounded, treat every woman as if she were your sister, care for the little children and be tender with the old and helpless.

Walk humbly. You will do so if you study the life and teachings of the Saviour.

May the God of Justice and Mercy have you in His keeping.

LABELS AND LIBELS

From the days of Abraham to the present day men have sought to camouflage selfishness by a pious label.

The Pharisees and the Puritans alike sought to make themselves pure by attaching a purity label to their narrow and self-centered religion.

One thing is certain, and that is, whatever may be the truth about the religion of Jesus Christ, there is one ingredient which it must have, without which any label is a libel, and that ingredient is unselfish love manifesting itself in joyous service.

Now love is a quality that is not found in a label. It exists or does not exist in the person. It makes no difference whether a man be a priest or a levite, if he passes by the duty of kindly service, the unorthodox Samaritan, who "worships he knows not what" is his superior.

So the fact that you are a Catholic priest, or a practical laymen, or a Presbyterian elder, does not tell us whether you have been converted from a life of selfish egotism to that of Christian service. In short, the mathematical accuracy of your theological views do not insure the Christ-like tenderness of the human heart.

There are certain phrazes that one hears mouthed by zealous partisans, that so often represent a nature incapable of unselfish service, that one is inclined to gag at their frequent repetition.

The one phraze is "Bible truth" and the other is "Catholic principles." Either phaze was perfectly proper as used by its discoverer, for it meant and could mean nothing more than the intellectual convictions which they described; but when they come to be used as a label to designate a man, and not a title to indicate a body of truth, they become somewhat nauseous.

When you run across a selfish sybarite who plumes himself on his entire acceptability to God and man because he has mastered a scheme of ritual and casuistry which he calls "catholic principles," and which goes no deeper into his life than the conventionalities of society and dress a la mode implants kindliness and true courtesy into a frivolous woman; you are disposed, even though you may approve of his whole program so far as it goes, to shriek out your disapproval of this libellous label.

No intelligent person can dispute the value of convention in society. It is not a sign of superiority to eat like a savage because you prefer simplicity in manners, and yet it is a painful fact that I have been treated discourteously more often by that class which prides itself on courteous conventionalities than I have suffered from social savages. Yet I still eat with my fork and do not refuse a finger bowl.

Presto change! I go to Church and am shocked by the irreverance of ritualists when they are out of their particular temple of the Lord.

I have seen the shocking irreverance of bad temper entirely destroy the value of faultless ritual.

It affects me just as the sight of one of the four hundred treating an occupant of her pew with most unchristian insolence makes me want to be an anarchist long enough to speak my sentiments.

Still I continue to be fond of very elaborate ritual, and continue to be polite to the offensive dame. Yet I am not fooled by the label, for it becomes like "Made in Germany"—an offensive one.

I found myself a victim of the same sensation recently in a Y. M. C. A. service at a cantonment of soldiers, who were looking forward to the grim realities of the front.

They were being fed, with what to my mind was a most unpalatable dose of saccharine mush that was labeled "Bible truth," although I defy any of the tribe of professional evangelists, with their perfunctory phrazes, (taken from the terminology of good fellowship, but which libel goodfellowship because of their insincerity and professional persiflage), to show me where in the Bible there is any warrant for either their methods or their vulgarity. I cannot find it.

To my mind they represent primitive Christianity in about the same way as a silly man represents the innocence of childhood. He may put on the language of such innocence, but he plays the fool and not the child in doing it.

And just this is the kind of stuff our all-wise business man falls for;—not for himself, Oh no! He doesn't wish to be silly, but he feels that his money is well spent if some other man can get a lot of other fellows to sing silly stuff to God.

I am not condemning all Y. M. C. A. work as I am not condemning all ritualists. They both suffer from the pious frauds who attach these labels to a purely professional insincerity, which camouflages its hideous poverty of true spirituality by its duly authorized label of conventional piety.

Ritualists who do not make their Early Communions in order that they may indulge their aesthetic fancies in a gorgeous high celebration are no better than gushing Y. M. C. A. secretaries who talk pious but do not go to Church except when they themselves are performing.

Whatever we have in the way of religious manifestation, whether it is our kind or the other fellows kind, let us as Americans demand that it have underneath the soul of sincerity, and the earnest desire to do Christ's work.

The Epistle to the Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

XXVII.

Vs. 32. This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the Church.

Blunt: Mystery. The mystery being that natural oneness of man and wife declared in the previous words.

Chrysostum: The mystery which Adam, the father and representative of the whole family, was empowered of God to reveal concerning the oneness of man with his wife.

Wordsworth: Many are unwilling to receive this Divine mystery (the indissolubility of matrimony), and many who once received it have now rejected it by creating new facilities for divorce.

Sadler: The institution of marriage brought before the Apostle's mind its mystery, but he turned from it to that infinitely greater mystery, the spiritual union betwixt Christ and His Church.

Wordsworth: Christ and the Church. The union of Christ and His Church, represented by holy matrimony.

Moule: Paraphrase of verse. This revealed mystery, the union of bridegroom and bride, is great; but I say so in reference to the Bride of Redemption, to which our thought has been drawn.

Monod: The relation which he indicates between the two unions is based in the depths of the Divine thought and on the harmony established between things visible and invisible. The marriage instituted in Eden was really, in the plan of God, a type of the union of Christ and His Church.

Vs. 33. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband.

Ellicott: Nevertheless, i. e., not to press the mystical bearings of the subject any further.

Sadler: If you cannot realize this exalted idea of marriage as shadowing forth the unity betwixt Christ and His Church, still attend to the plain duty that each one is to love his wife even as himself.

Blunt: Reverence. Literally fear, used in the same sense as honor, in honor thy father and mother.

Moule: The word fear is continually used in Scripture of the holy and happy reverence of man for God, and so has lost all necessary connection with painful ideas.

CHAPTER VI.

Vs. 1. Children obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right.

Whitby: Obey. Obey in compliance with the commandment of the Lord.

Theophylact: Obey parents as far as their commands are consistent with the will of God.

Wordsworth: In the Lord, as always being in the Lord's sight, obeying parents, whether the parents are present or absent.

Blunt: For this is right. Obedience to parents is a Christian duty, as well as a natural duty enforced by the fifth commandment.

Vs. 2. Honor thy father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise.

Blunt: This commandment is quoted partly from Ex. xx:12 and partly from Deut. v:16, the promise being given from the latter.

Moule: Honor. The honor is that not of mere sentiment, but of obedience.

Ellicott: Specifications of the commandment as an additional confirmation of the foregoing precept, and as supplying the reason on which it was based. The solemn recitation of the commandment blends the voice of God with that of nature.

Whitby: With promise, i. e., a special promise; for that which is annexed to the second commandment is rather a general assertion than a special promise.

Vs. 3. That is may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.

Blunt: Mayest live long on the earth. St. Paul, writing under inspiration, has generalized the original words, "in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee", into "on the earth", so as to make them plainly applicable to all people and lands, and not to the Jews and the promised land only.

Wordsworth: This promise is not to be limited to temporal life in this world; but the Apostle here gives an exposition of the true meaning and application of the fifth commandment.

Blunt: The promise can hardly be interpreted in any other than a spiritual sense as referring to the spiritual life in the Church of God.

Eadie: This is a clear implication of the presence of children at public worship, when the Epistle was to be read.

Chrysostom: A temporal promise is mentioned by the Apostle, because this injunction is addressed particularly to children who could not understand so well the promise of eternal happiness.

Vs. 4. And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Sadler: Provoke not by unkind words, by partiality, by injustice, by inconsistency of treatment.

Whitby: Provoke them not by disinheriting them, by laying heavy burdens upon them, by using them rather as slaves than as sons.

Aristides: It is not a thing of small consideration what principles are put into them in their youth, but it is the foundation of all they do hereafter.

Wordsworth: Nurture and admonition. First of all, exacting strict obedience and then with admonition, the former applicable specially to the body, the latter to the mind.

Ellicott: These two words are not related to each other as the general to the special, but specify the two methods in the Christian education of children; training by act and discipline and training by word.

Chrysostom: Is it not absurd to send children out to trades and to school, and yet not bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?

Ellicott: Of the Lord. Possessive genitive specifying the Lord Jesus Christ as Him by the discipline and admonition were prescribed, and by whose spirit they must be regulated.

Sadler: This shows that the children, as a rule, were brought into the Church by Baptism, and that in this Baptism they were made universally members of Christ.

Archbishop of York Arrives in This Country

Desires to Cement Ties of Friendship Among English Speaking Nations

The Rt. Hon. and Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, D. D., Archbishop of York, Primate of England and Metropolitan, arrived in New York City on a transatlantic steamship, March 1st, for a seven weeks' visit in this country, in response to an invitation extended to him by the Church War Commission, seconded by Ambassador Page, and others. A reception committee met the Archbishop, consisting of the Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, Jr., D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island; the Rev. Dr. Slattery, Rector of Grace Church, and Mr. Monell Sayer, members of the War Commission; Dean Robbins of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine; the Rev. J. P. McComas, Senior Curate of Trinity Church, and Mr. Stuyvesant Fish, who is the host of our distinguished guest while in New York. The Archbishop preached at the Cathedral on Sunday, March 3rd, in the morning and at Trinity Church that afternoon. He was the guest of the Pilgrims of the United States at a dinner given in his honor at the Waldorf-Astoria on Tuesday evening, March 5th, at which the Earl of Reading and Ambassador Jusserand were also guests. A meeting in honor of the Archbishop was held at Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, March 7th, under the auspices of a Committee of one hundred and fifty representative citizens of the city, including Bishop Greer, Honorary President; Governor Whitman, and Mayor Hylan, Honorary Vice-Presidents, and Mr. Eugenius H. Outerbridge, Chairman. Bishop Greer gave the invocation. Mr. Outerbridge and Gov. Whitman made addresses, which were responded to by the Archbishop. The Archbishop is fourth in rank in precedence in the English House of Lords. The King is first, the Archbishop of Canterbury second, the Lord High Chancellor third, and the Archbishop next. He will visit the older universities and larger cities in the East and in the Middle West. The New York Times states that he will also pay his respects to President Wilson, whose great grand-father took for a second wife the great-grand-aunt of the Archbishop. President Wilson is descended from the first wife. "I don't think anything has stirred us more in England," said the Archbishop to a Times representative, "than the way in which President Wilson has embodied the ideals for which we are struggling. It is especally gratifying that these great historic documents have been put forth in the English language. They constitute another bond of union between the two great English-speaking races. We are feeling the strain of three and a half years of unparralled sacrifice, and I want to gain and bring back to my countrymen the sense of exhiliration that must come from seeing this great republic girding up its loins to take its place—please God, a decisive place—in a struggle for the things which are the very breath of life, and so to strengthen our own fortitude, faith and hope.

"In our common struggle for the freedom and peace of the world we have to strive on to finish the work we are in, so that when it is done we will have made as sure as we can that no other generation will have to do it over again. For this nothing is more important than the cordial fellowship of these two nations."

St. Peter's Church, Talladega, Ala., Destroyed by Fire

St. Peter's Church was destroyed by fire at noon Tuesday, February 26th. The fire was caused by defective electric wires. The building was erected in 1871 as a Parish School building, but has always been used for Church services. At a meeting of the vestry held last Sunday, a committee was appointed to receive plans and specifications for a new stone building to cost about $10,000.

By heroic effort of the city firemen the Rectory and contents adjoining the Church was saved.

The Congregation

XXI

The sermon presupposes a congregation. At least most sermons give evidence of the idea in the preacher's mind that people are listening. A few sermons, indeed, have the impersonal atmosphere of a text book. It would be easier to write sermons if it were not for that stubborn fact of a group of people waiting to hear. Those people present a problem of greatest difficulty to us less gifted parsons, who cannot hold the eye by our "pulpit presence" or the itching ear by our nuexpected "freshness of presentation", (alas, often too fresh), nor by our volubility in coruscating nouns and adjectives.

We have before us the less young, to whom some sentimental reference to a past is more effective in bringing tears, than a warning reference to the future is in bringing repentance. We have the middle aged, too well established in mental and physical habits to be moved by a fresh principle or motive to new courses of thought and action; we have those just arrived at maturity, who are somewhat absorbed in life as it is, and we have the young absorbed in the novelty of fresh experiences.

But that by no means is the only classification. We have the mentally alert, who catch our message, and the mentally sluggish who catch the illustrations. We have the morally alert who respond to the quickening power of a vital message, and the morally phlegmatic, who accept human nature as it is, saying "one is what one is and what is the use of trying to be different?"

Then we have the educated persons who understand some of our longer words and elaborate phrases and the persons, who, keen enough because of their native ability, are tripped by our college-bred vocabulary.

So the preacher must beware! He must possess the art of simplicity, lucidity, warmth, earnestness, picturesqueness and poignancy, in public speaking, to say nothing of brevity.

But you of the congregation must help. You must give your preacher a chance. Of course the first thing you must do is to come within the sound of his voice. As a congregation you have deprived the preacher of the interest that comes from constructive teaching, by your habit of coming once in a while. A preacher can never assume that he has laid any foundation in one sermon, for the presentation of further aspects of a subject is another sermon. He has [redacted] from Sunday noon to the following Sunday morning, he can have but a casual interest in a sermon. The seed falls on rocky soil.

If the preacher seems uninteresting let it be the first concern of the congregation to scrutinize its own habits. A good, alert, refreshed congregation is the first esential to a good sermon.

minutes, from its beginning to its end, it is not sermon material today. A lawyer may spend several hours putting in a foundation for his conclusions; a teacher may spend days in preparing a class by the study of definitions to begin to grasp the essentials of geometry; but the preacher must imperil a subject by trusting it to the casual attention, in whose mind no foundation has been laid.

So the congregation may help by coming regularly to Church!

The congregation may help by giving itself a chance. A Saturday night party with abundant refreshments and late hours is a poor preparation for a normal and edifying Sunday. Even though one drags himself to Church there is a physical and mental fatigue that robs the service of its vitality. The old Puritans had some grain of sense in their conviction that the Sabbath began at sundown on Saturday. Oliver Cromwell himself could never have sat through the two hour sermon on Sunday if he had spent Saturday evening at the club with a late supper of chicken a la Parliament! and other delicacies. No! The Puritans prepared for their service by a good night's sleep. It is asking too much of the preacher to arouse a physically and mentally exhausted congregation. There is quite as much "breaking of the Sabbath" on Saturday nights now-a-days as there is on Sunday.

The congregation may help by giving the truth a chance. If one never prays, never thinks on things eternal, never lets the fundamental things of life and religion enter his thoughts

[redacted]

How small the little republic looks, as seen on one of the up-to-date maps of wonderful Africa! In reality, Liberia is the size of the State of Ohio, with a population of less than half—that is, it has an area of 41,000 square miles, with some 2,000,000 inhabitants.

It is the child of the American Colonization Society, founded in Washington in 1816, to give to slaves freed in the United States a place in the land whence they or their fathers had come, and the opportunity to work out for themselves the rights and duties of free men.

In 1818 the Society sent out its first agents to secure the desired territory; in 1819 the Government of the United States gave its official co-operation; in 1821 agents again were sent to renew the first unsuccessful search; in 1822 a permanent settlement was made, at Cape Montserrado, and in 1824 the name of the colony, till then called Christopolis, was officially changed to Liberia, and the settlement on the Cape was named Monrovia. In this year new land was acquired, as far north as Cape Mount. In 1831, another Society, called the Maryland Colonization Society, was formed, and sent out its members, who, going south from Monrovia, as far as Cape Palmas, established Maryland, in Africa. Mississippi colonists established what became known as Mississippi, in Africa. New York and Pennsylvania Societies took charge of settlements at Bassa Cove, and in 1838 the three settlements outside of Maryland united under the name of the Commonwealth of Liberia, and adopted a Constitution drawn up for them by Prof. Greenleaf of Harvard University. Nine years later, the American Colonization Society gave self-government to this commonwealth, and in June, 1847, the Liberians called for a Constitutional Convention, and on July 26, made their declaration of independence and adopted the Constitution of the Liberian Republic.

To the student of history, these papers are interesting reading; to us all, living in a time in which history makes itself more quickly than pen has skill to write, they make a strong appeal, for in support of such principles as the fathers of the Republic of Liberia set forth, are not we and our allies in arms today? Has not the following a natural and most stimulating sound?

"We recognize in all men certain and inalienable rights. Among these are life, liberty, and the right to acquire, possess, enjoy and defend property. By the practice and consent of men in all ages, some system or form of government is proven to be necessary to exercise, enjoy and secure these rights: and every people has a right to institute a government and to choose and adopt that system, or form of it, which, in their opinion, will most effectively accomplish these objects, and secure their happiness, which does not interfere with the just rights of others. The right, therefore, to institute government, and all the powers necessary to conduct it, is an inalienable right, and cannot be resisted without the grossest injustice."

In Article V. of the Constitution are these words: "The great object in forming these colonies being to provide a home for the dispersed and oppressed children of Africa, and to regenerate and enlighten this benighted continent, none but persons of color shall be admitted to citizenship in this Republic."

In 1907 this article was amended to read: "None but Negroes or persons of Negro descent shall be eligible to citizenship in this Republic."

None but citizens might hold real estate, except that "colonization, Missionary, educational and other philanthropic institutions" might do so, "so long as the property or estate is applied to its legitimate purpose."

We have, therefore, a Republic for Africans, governed by Africans alone, whose flag Prof. Starr thus describes: "The flag consisted of eleven stripes, alternately red and white; the field, blue, bore a single star. It is suggested that the meaning of the flag is this: The three colors indicate the three countries into which the Republic is divided; the eleven stripes represent the eleven signers of the Declaration and Constitution; the lone star indicates the uniqueness of the African Republic."

Two years after this, Maryland was annexed, and Liberia became the Liberia of today.

Is it very difficult to picture the story of this little Republic, the outcome of colonies founded partly from political, partly from philanthropic motives; purchasing from native tribes the land on which to establish themselves; subject to the questionings and encroachments of those and other tribes, and of grasping and stronger neighbors; left more and more to themselves, without a constant, steady flow of encouragement, understanding, sympathy and ever ready and sufficient help from the Society that had planted them, and the Government that had endorsed the Society; left far too much to grope their way along? With those standards of living, for the most part, which memory and tradition set in the ways of "white folks" in the Southern States "before the war", perhaps it is not strange that the trades have never flourished greatly among these people, that politics and public office have held so high a place. Nor is it strange that, with the passing years, as schools like Hampton and Tuskegee, St. Augustine's, St. Paul's, have sent out well-equipped workmen to work in States where all are free, few of the Negroes in this country should feel an appeal to Liberia, where the ordinary conditions of life are of a quiet, unadvancing past, and those in the lead of government hesitate to introduce new elements that would be likely so soon to change familiar ways and things.

As time has passed, this Republic of ours has known less and less of its foster child of sixty years ago. When Bishop Lloyd would visit it, he must go to England first, or by way of Porto Rico and the Canaries. Before this war broke out, it was Germany that supplied largely commodities for food and other use; the English market is now the source of uncertain and inadequate supply. West Indian immigration, English loans, French and English boundary negotiations, the German cable and offer of a German protectorate, native wars, disputes and difficulties constant between Liberians and natives, a long, long period of recognition of independence on our part, which seemed to mean a severe letting alone of the country our own mixed desires had founded—these things combined to make Liberian conditions desperate. In 1908 the authorities turned to us for help. In 1909 the Government sent out a Commission. (In view of the Church's present Commission of two, it is interesting to note that Commission was of three, with a fourth as Secretary.) The Commission spent thirty days in Liberia and Sierra Leone, and returned with six suggestions:

1. That the United States extend aid to Liberia in the prompt settlement of boundary disputes.
2. That it enable it to refund its debt.
3. That it lend its aid in the reform of internal finances.
4. That it aid in organizing and drilling an adequate frontier police.
5. That it establish and maintain a research station in Liberia.
6. That it reopen the question of a naval coaling station there.

When Bishop Lloyd returns, he may be able to tell us in what ways during the years since then our Government has shown that it has made the findings of the Commission good. This attitude of the Government towards Liberia, in these nine years, as in the sixty-one years before—shall it determine the attitude of the Church toward the Church's Mission, when our Commission comes back with its report?

For alongside with the story of this Republic, which we have sketched so briefly by the help of Prof. Starr, in his book on Liberia, runs the story of the Church's Mission, and more than usual the stories are commingled, since from first to last the Missionaries and the members of the Mission have had a guiding and developing part in the nation's life.

(To be continued.)

Vision's Dimensions

By the Rev. Wm. Porkess, Editor

The way in which we do things, particularly Christian work, is a reliable regulator as to the size of our vision. No one more correctly and more quickly realizes the small or large world we move in than the children. This very fact emphasizes the importance of giving them a wide-sweeping vision by what they see in us—by the way in which we take hold of our work. In a small town of Cornwall, England, there was held once a year a large fair. Everybody went to it from far and near. One of the inhabitants of this small town, who had never been away from home, when seeing the crowds of people, was heard to say, "I never knew there were so many people living in the world." Her vision was shaped by the size of the place in which she had lived. There never was such an opportunity, as in this day, for the forces of Religious Education succeeding in causing the children to look at everything through the largest possible circle. The activities of the American Red Cross organization have brought a wider vision into this world of suffering and need, and all who serve in connection with this are looking at their service through world-wide spectacles. They are missionaries indeed after the pattern of our Lord's universal commission. Now, with regard to the children, shall we not make hay while the sun shines? Shall we not put to right and full use the golden opportunity that is ours? The dimensions of vision are a fundamental of Religious Education. There is an ideal time for it. That time is when first impressions are made. The Sunday School should be, and can be, the conservatory of first and lasting impressions. One of the best object lessons, emphasizing and that also accomplished by the children. This chart gives far-reaching dimensions to vision. Here is the assurance of parochialism's death, and also a tremendous awakening to the great cause of Missions, as well as the claims of Community, Diocese and Nation.

The Value of Lent

The Lenten season is prized chiefly for its many opportunities to strengthen Christian purpose, and develop the devout Christian character.

Wherever you turn, amid its holy occupations, you feel one influential power towards the better, truer, holier life.

Multiplied services, frequent communions, fasting, acts of self-denial, withdrawal from amusements, more abundant labors, larger offerings, the renewed study of the Bible, the deeply-searching utterances of the pulpit, the acts and prayers of penitence—all combine to secure a thoughtful frame of mind, a conscience ready to hear, a heart full of sympathy with Christ in His sufferings; and these conditions, carefully preserved, produce the devout, earnest Christian in heart and life.

POEMS Worth Preserving

THE SPIRES OF OXFORD

By Winifred M. Letts

I saw the spires of Oxford,
As I was passing by;
The gray spires of Oxford,
Against the pearl-gray sky.
My heart was with the Oxford men
Who went abroad to die.

The years go fast in Oxford,
The golden years and gay;
The hoary colleges look down
On careless boys at play.
But when the bugles sounded war
They put their games away.

They left the peaceful river,
The cricket field, the quad,
The shaven lawns of Oxford,
To seek a bloody sod.
They gave their merry youth away
For country and for God.

God rest you, happy gentlemen,
Who laid your good lives down,
Who took the khaki and the gun,
Instead of cap and gown.
God bring you to a fairer place
Than even Oxford town.

A Hymn for Departing of Absent Friends

(To the tune sung to "Art Thou Weary, Art Thou languid".)

Holy Father, in Thy mercy,
Hear our earnest prayer;
Keep our loved ones in their absence
'Neath Thy care.

Jesus, Saviour, let Thy presence
Be their light and guide;
Keep, O keep them in their weakness
At Thy side.

When in sorrow, when in danger,
When in loneliness,
In Thy love look down and comfort
Their distress.

May the joy of Thy salvation
Be their strength and stay;
May they love and may they praise Thee
Day by day.

Holy Spirit, let Thy teaching
Sanctify their life;
Send Thy grace, that they may conquer
In the strife.

Father, Son and Holy Spirit,
God the One in Three,
Bless them, guide them, save them, keep them
Near to Thee. Amen.

Give Us Men

Give us men!
Men from every rank.
Fresh and free and frank.
Men of thought and reading.
Men of light and leading.
Men of royal breeding.
The nation's welfare speeding:
Men of faith and not of raction.
Men of faith and not of faction.
Give us men—I say again.
Give us men!

Give us men!
Strong and stalwart ones:
Men whom highest hope inspires.
Men whom purest honor fires
Men who trample self beneath them.
Men who make their country wreathe them
As her noblest sons,
Worthy of their sires.
Men who never shame their mothers.
Men who never fail their brothers.
True, however false are others.
Give us men—I say again.
Give us men!

Give us men!
Men who when the tempest gathers,
Grasp the standard of their fathers
In the thickest of the fight.
Men who strike for home and altar.
(Let the coward cringe and falter.)
God defend the right!
True as truth though lorn and lonely;
Tender as the brave are only:
Men who tread where Saints have trod.
Men for country, home and God.
Give us men—I say again— again—
Give us such men!

FOUR LECTURES ON RELIGION IN WAR-TIME

A Series of Papers by the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania

THE LORD OF HOSTS VS. THE WAR-GOD

There is one only God Who, since He is really God, works out unfailingly His Will for men in history, which Will, as revealed in Jesus Christ, is set unswervingly on righteousness, and wholly moved by love.

Devil's Work

III.

God has in His world a malignant enemy in evil, which evil for a season He allows, for a high and holy purpose; but which, even while allowing it, He wonderfully circumvents, and which finally He will utterly destroy.

Introduction: The Battle of Faith: our need of Predaredness for it.

In my first lecture I tried to bring two things to light: First, that because the ugly fact of murder is here on earth and among men so wide-spread and deep-rooted, therefore men have been prone to shift the responsibility for it on Heaven, and have actually gone so far as to fashion for themselves a War-God, in order to quiet their minds and ease their consciences. Secondly, that the notion of a War-God is utterly intolerable, because there can be but one only God, Who must account not alone for war and murder, but for everything else that happens in the Universe, which final truth is witnessed to by the very necessities of our thought and is confirmed by every word and deed of Jesus Christ.

Meanwhile I was at some pains to warn you that this faith in the One and only God is an exacting faith, a real adventure, a high enterprise. It is indeed an essential part of any reasonable faith, and it is certainly fundamental to Christianity. But it is by no means self-evident. One cannot pick it up and be at home with it as easily as one can learn, for instance, about the stars, or about the anatomy of the human body, or the laws of high explosives. A little talk or reading will give one a speaking acquaintance with any of these things. The facts fit close together. They lead to one result. They make a sort of photograph upon the mind, quite clear and definite.

But it is not so with God. All the facts do not seem to fit in with Him. Quite the reverse. There is an immense amount of evidence which seems to contradict Him. True, one often is able to say "because of this or that I find it easy to believe in God."

[redacted]

there was some good reason for this seeming aberration.

Or suppose I found some refined and cultivated friends of mine entertaining at their home some low, uncouth and doubtful characters; I should think I had been mistaken in my friends unless my faith was strong enough to trust against appearances.

That is just the point with faith in God. We must be ready to trust in Him against appearances. He must be the supreme Governor and Lord; and yet there is such awful disorder in His world. He must be wholly good, and yet there are so many bad. He is all love and kindness, and yet there is such a weight of misery. He is absolutely just, and yet there is such terrible injustice.

Now, of course, it would be easy enough to solve our difficulty by choosing certain facts, and leaving out the others. But for true faith that is just what is impossible. That leads us straight back again to Paganism.

You remember that is the way in which men come to set up the devilish image of the War-God. They fasten on the fact of murder, and, forgetting all the rest, make a god of it. And it is just as blind and foolish to do the opposite. It is just as Pagan to make a silly idol of a good-natured peace-god, shutting our eyes to the momentous facts of war and murder. To be quite frank, and it is time for frankness, the "peace-god" of Christian Science and of many other moder cults is every bit as much a pagan idc as is the war-god of the Germans.

No, faith, to be faith, that is to b true to itself, must believe in God with its eyes wide open and not shut. For faith is not like a simple problem in addition; one does not add up items of proof or evidence here and there, and so arrive at faith. No, faith starts with a splendid guess, a noble intuition. "Lo! I believe in God." That is its war-cry, and then it goes on and out to wrestle its way along; in the midst of every kind of happening, holding on to the fair vision till it finds the Great Original, as a lover seeks the loved one he has lost—"O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till the night is gone." Wise men of old had a rather striking way of putting it: "God cannot be present in the conclusion of your argument," they used to say, "unless He is already present in your premise," which is indisputably true and worth remembering; as is also a great saying of Pascal, who hears God speaking to the troubled soul: "Thou wouldst not be seeking Me, hadst not thou already found Me."

So the battle which faith has to fight to keep its ground and make its way comes clearly into view, and it is this good fight of faith which is our theme tonight.

I spoke last time about the grounds of faith, about the foundation that it rests on. The next thing obviously is to do a little testing to find out whether these foundations will stand the strain that surely comes on them. You will recall that our Lord Himself encourages us to do this very thing. He warns us not to go to war, not to enter the battle, till we have estimated clearly and carefully the foes drawn up against us. What, then, are the enemies to faith? What is the evidence against the Lord of Hosts?

IV.

The Enemy of faith and God, and to Faith in God, is Evil; which Evil is found only in the Will, but is actually there, and seemingly is without bound or limit.

Well, there is really only one enemy, though it takes myriad forms and uses countless agents. Evil is the enemy. When that is said all has been said, provided, of course, that we take full account of it, and open our eyes quite wide to see the whole extent of it. In order that our thought may move in a straight line, that we may easily keep hold of it, let me put before you three simple statements about evil.

First, evil is always and only in what we know as will. Things in themselves are never evil. Would that we could remember it! It would mean much for social progress, as well as for personal salvation. There is and can be nothing evil in the whole wide world except an evil will. For instance, drunkenness is surely evil, but not drink; for wine marks the marriage feast of Earth and Heaven: God uses it and chooses it in the sacrament of His most intimate communion with us. Murder is evil, but not knives: for as we saw, a surgeon saves life with a knife. Stealing is wicked: but not the use of force, for to wrest a dangerous weapon from a madman, or a criminal, may prevent suicide or killing. Rebellion against pain, the will to curse the Lord and die, is sin; but pain itself may be a timely danger signal: it may even be the very messenger of love and means of blessing. Some one has said, "More even than knowledge, pain is power," and it is true. Death itself is not an evil. It is much like moving from a smaller house into a larger one: if you leave

[redacted]

No, these ancient words are just as true as ever: "God saw everything that He had made, and, behold, it was very good." There is no evil in the world save in so far as evil wills are in the world, for evil lives only in an evil will.

Secondly, an evil will is a real thing, an awfully real thing, and God alone knows how many evil wills there are. An evil will means a will deliberately set on evil; a will that chooses and does evil knowing that it is evil while it chooses it and does it. That too must be remembered. It is no question of mere ignorance. If one does something which seems good, but which later turns out to be bad, there is no real evil done, though mischief may be done. One has not chosen evil, one has not had an evil will. A mother might possibly give her child poison by mistake, and without any guilty negligence. That would be a dreadful, shocking, tragedy. She would have willingly given her life for the child's life. Now she has killed it. But there would be no evil in the mother.

This must be clearly recognized, else we shall not see the horror and awfulness of evil. There is no ignorance, no accident about it. It must be deliberate, intended, voluntary. Evil enters our wills only at our personal invitation; but the invitation is actually given, and there is no one who has not actually given it. There are evil wills.

Brethren, before the war began, it would have seemed to very many people almost a wicked thing to speak so plainly and so nakedly as this. Very generally we had lost the sense of the malignant reality of evil. We used to listen gladly and even gleefully to those windy prophets, who in those far-off days were teaching us the comfortable doctrine of universal progress, of the humanizing and elevating effects of education; who were telling us that crime and wickedness were the results of mental ignorance, or of bodily infirmity—that murder, like measles, comes from microbes. I think the War has opened our eyes and brought us back to sanity and reason. It may be that the War was needed for this very purpose,—to show us in time the fearful precipice in front of us before we toppled over.

But the single proof of the reality of evil which I shall give is not taken from the War, but from the nursery. Children are the best witnesses in all spiritual matters. They are so transparent and spontaneous. They have not learned to act a part. And we see children willing evil and doing evil. Of course, it is nothing very bad; just little acts of disobedience and rebellion, small deceptions and purloinings. Is it harsh and cruel in me to charge children with letting evil fasten on their wills? Why, I am not charging them with it,—they openly admit it. That is the touching and convincing part of it. They come and throw their arms about us, and between sobs give us to understand that they are sorry that they have done it. There you have it all. There it is in all its mystery; for why, in Heaven's name, should evil have anything to do with little children? There it is in all its certainty, for the children themselves know it and recognize it. They welcome it first and spurn it afterwards, God bless them!

What better commentary could there be on the whole situation? There is the whole story in a nutshell, in the nursery, of the presence and meaning of evil in the world.

I have dwelt upon this at some length. It is a crucial point. We must at all costs do it full justice. Evil is only in the will, but it is really actually there.

Next: Evil, once it has made its way, seems to have no limit. We cannot set bounds to it. There is nothing it will not try to do. There is nothing it will not actually do. You cannot imagine anything too dreadful, too wicked, for men to think of, to plan for, to carry out. It was Goethe, of all men, who had the fearless honesty to say that he never heard of any crime which he could not imagine himself to have committed. I have heard from eye-witnesses, as you no doubt have heard; indeed, I have heard it from every eye-witness whom I have met, that the recent story of almost every single captured town or village in Belgium or in France exhausts the whole catalogue of imaginable evil deeds. Nothing more infamous or diabolical can be conceived than what has actually taken place.

No doubt you may restrain the evil-doer; that is one of the great offices of law. But you cannot by any strength or skill restrain either the capacity for evil in one single will, or the number of wills that may be evil. Men cannot do it: God, if there be a God, does not see fit to do it.

In Christ's teaching on this tremendous subject, there is a dreadful note of anxiety, or warning, almost of pessimism. He reminds us that the narrow way has always so few pilgrims in it, while the broad way is overcrowded. And you recall His wellnigh heart-breaking inquiry which you and I must answer: "When the Son of Man cometh shall He find faith on the earth?" No, at least, we will keep our eyes open, and look facts in the face. We will not live in a Fools' Paradise. From what we know of evil, from what evil actually is and does, there is and can be no assurance that it may not some day have us in its grip; that it may not overflow the world.

Lent Emphasizes the Spiritual

Races perish, not from physical but moral failure. Nations disappear, unfit to survive, with all physical resources in their favor, from purely moral unfitness: Families, stalwart, healthy, courageous in all that belongs to physical power of survival, have perished from moral weakness, unfit to be. So it must be in the individual. There must be moral force—character—power; there must be principles—convictions—a living faith; or a man's life must surely sink into defeat.

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE LITTLE DREAM FLOWERS

Mother Nature, as we call her—and you will know much more about her when you grow up—goes to sleep, and rests, and dreams, just like other people. Only she sleeps a long time, but then, you see, she is awake a long time. While she is awake, she works so hard, and does many things to make the world beautiful for us. It is Mother Nature who makes the trees send out their leaves, and makes the grass green, and sends the birds and the butterflies. It is Mother Nature who makes the beautiful flowers grow in the garden and in the woods, and in the fields, and by the wayside. Indeed, we often say that the flowers are Mother Nature's pretty children. They are pretty children, too, don't you think so? Do you know of anything lovelier than the snowdrops and the tulips and the lilies and the roses?

Now, when Mother Nature goes to sleep in the Fall, I wonder if you know what she does? Why, she just dreams all the Winter through. Now comes a real secret, so I am just whispering it to you. She dreams of flowers. What sweet dreams they must be! And then, after a while,, her dreams come true—come true in the Spring. She wakes up with a smile, and there is the lily and there is the rose and the violet and the daisy. And one of the most beautiful of her dreams is a little delicate thing, a flower so shy and so smiling that it wins you all at once. Its petals are as airy as a fairy's wings, as sweetly pink as a little maiden's cheek. I love all the flowers, and all of them are beautiful, but I do not know of a flower that enters into the heart as much as these little dream flowers—found in the Spring, and I call them dream flowers, but some people call them Spring beauties.

Church at Work Among Italians

Lillian Marchant Skinner gives the following interesting account, in the Diocesan Record of Rhode Island, of the work being done by the Church in that Diocese among the Italians:

For thirty years, or since the early eighties, Italians have been coming among us in great numbers. Excepting that they have done much of our hard work, we have known little about them. They have been thrifty and have gotten on, but we don't know them, and they don't know us. It is plain there is a big gulf between them and ourselves. Their language, their habits, even their customs are different; and their outlook on life, what they want of life, their attitude toward it, may be different. They are eager to learn our ways, to know how we do things. For this reason the Diocese of Rhode Island resolves, if it can, simply to get acquainted. We want to know them and give them a chance to know us. Our object is to find out whether we may serve them and how. We are asking what are their needs, especially their religious needs. We are finding out where they are in relation to our Parishes, who of them and how many of them have already begun to be served by our Communion, and whether others need us. Primitive in many ways, they have not been accustomed to assume responsibility or to train their children religiously, and many of them are unable to do so.

They do not grasp religious arguments and it is better that they should not. God is over all. We all belong to Him, and must worship Him. This the simplest mind can understand. "Your children must be instructed." The Italian will listen to this and nod and say, "Yes, yes, I want my children learn." Sometimes they show a curious separation in their minds regarding things we are accustomed to think of as belonging together. A woman says, "No, I don't go to Church; I don't have no time. My husband, he never go, no never. He don't believe in religion. He's a good man, but he don't believe in religion."

An intelligent young fellow, living near me, who has been in this country since a little boy, said, "I don't go to Church. There ain't no need to pray to God. I treat everybody right; I don't hurt nobody. There ain't no need to pray."

A family, asked what they did on Sunday, replied, turn about:—The mother laughing, "Do the work. Too many, six, seven, eight children. Have to have lots to eat. Never can go to Church."

The father, "Sleep." Pressed for something more active, he added, "Read the paper."

Little boy, "Go outside." His brother, too, said, "Go outside."

The father: "I sent them once, but they never go; they play outside. Sure they ought to go."

Turning to the young man boarder, I asked, "Where do you go to Church?"

He was silent, and the whole family in chorus, exclaimed, "He don't believe in God."

How that sentence strikes upon the hearts of us who believe and love!

One young girl, the eldest daughter in an intelligent family, said to me yesterday, "Have you been in Italy, oh, have you? Is it nice there? My mother said it was, but I wouldn't believe it."

"Why not?" I asked.

Oh, Americans don't like Italians, and so I thought it must be that the country wasn't nice."

"Would you mind to drink a little cup of coffee? I made it. I don't think it's like American coffee My mother says, do you know where I could learn to sew; she wants me to sew good and she can't teach me, there's so many to take care of. My mother says she likes to have you come; she wants you to come here every day. My mother says she wants to learn English."

The father, smiling, says he went to school but "non assai, not enough." Because he was the oldest son, he could only go two years. He wants to learn more.

The two little boys burst out laughing as their mother tries speaking the hard speech. "Shut up," cries the elder sister, hitting them. "Would you mind,, she says, "to take a little of this bread with you; my grandmother has just made it. They make it like this in Italy."

What a tremendous leap for a people to take in one generation, out of the middle ages in the life of a little interior town of Southern Italy into our complex civilization. How we ought to stand by them as they quiver from the tremendous impact with all that our modern life signifies! How eagerly they turn toward us to receive what they feel that we possess! How they open their door to us, the stranger!

In the very act of discovering whether we may help, we find that we are helping. Their needs, there they are, spread out before us. We can meet them and we will. The greatest one, their need of ourselves, our care, our interest, our fellowship, that at once they begin to receive as our thoughts and questionings, turn toward them.

The Modern Prodigal

By the Rev. Carroll Lund Bates.

The Parable of the Prodigal Son contains three clear-cut portraits. The first portrait is of the father, a father wonderfully good. Generosity of every sort marks his character. He is generous in the provision of his house, generous in his forgiveness of the younger son, generous in his forbearance with the elder. Not an unkind word escapes his lips.

The second portrait is of the younger son—impetuous, emphatic in his demand for independence, drifting into luxurious courses of living, but withal, open-handed and warm-hearted, and lovable notwithstanding all his faults.

The third portrait is of the elder son, the one very gloomy portrait of the three—self-contained, self-satisfied and self-willed, his self-satisfaction having, forsooth, no moral justification in view of what he is, for he is without love for father or for brother, and is, himself, unlovable. He is stern, he is a censorious judge of others, he sees no fault in himself, he remains in his father's house for what he can get out of it, and he claims all in the house as his just right, denying his brother a part in it.

Consider these three portraits in the light of today's events.

God is our Father. This world is our Father's House. He has planned all well. It is a world splendidly furnished, a world equipped to supply all His children with plenty of food and clothing and abundance of wholesome enjoyments. The one condition of their having all this plenty is that God's children will live in the house, recognizing the Father by Faith, in fellowship with Him, and upon amicable terms with one another.

As "a certain man who had two sons," even so there have appeared in the world two opposing spirits. The younger son may be termed "Democracy." In a wider sense he may be said to be a certain spirit of extreme individualism that has appeared in the realm of both Church and State. Its cry has been for Independence. In the Church it has said, "Give me my way. Let me loose from my notion of a Divinely constituted Church. Release me from Sacramental conceptions. Let me make creeds and constitute ministries." This same younger son in the State has been inclined to go to such lengths and to put in practice such wild dreams of personal liberty, that the result, if carried to these lengths, would mean a whole world delivered over to a leaderless chaos of Socialism.

The younger son is that spirit in the social body which has gone to such lengths of waste and extravagance that the Church pews of America have been emptied while worldliness has run riot. The younger son has rushed past our Church doors on a Sunday in his five thousand dollar Packard, with scorn in his heart for his Father's House.

Yet the younger son, with all his faults, is better than the elder of God's two children.

The elder son belongs, indeed, to an ancient regime. He stands for the opposite of Individualism and of Liberty and Independence. He stands for Pharaseeism, Kingcraft and Priestcraft. In these new days he stands looking with a heart of stone upon God first and then upon his brothers. To him the Father is not Father, and his brother is not brother but "your son." The world is a place where all is to be got by himself that is due him and that can be made to come to him. It appears to him clearly that he is his brother's and even his Father's superior. He is magnificent in his self-sufficiency "never transgressed I at any time thy commandment." He feels that he should have all and that his brother is entitled to nothing.

Thus the Parable of the Prodigal Son brought up to date reveals today's conditions.

The younger son has erred. Democracy has gone to foolish and well nigh disastrous lengths in the pursuit of the principle of the freedom of the individual. We have tried out the doctrine to the farther limits of it, and we have found that to practice it at these extreme lengths is intolerable. We have suffered in the "far country." We find that to declare that Christ is not God, the Church a society but not Divine, the Sacraments symbols unendowed with Power is a form of individual independence that well nigh starves us. And, further, the younger son has found that waste, expenditure and the multiplication of costly pleasures really possess a curious inability to satisfy.

And so the younger son is coming home. Democracy perceived that to go too far with individualism means a danger of the loss of the great ideals.

Democracy remembers the fine religious Spirit of its Washington, thinks of the New England Puritans, and realizes that, as Samson had to let his shorn locks grow before he could pull down the walls of the palace of Gaza upon the heads of the Philistines, so America must recur to principles of thrift and moral self-control and Faith in God that have made Democracy a power in the past, if she is now to succeed.

As the younger son comes back from the far country today, the cold eye of the elder brother is bent upon him. Between Imperialism and Democracy exists no sympathy. The mistakes that we, the younger brother, have made, seem a proof to Imperialism that there is no good in us. Haughty, self-righteous and made more proudly self-sufficient by the faults of which Democracy has been guilty and of which it duly repents, the elder brother has only hate and scorn for us, coupled with a most despicable admiration of himself.

It is an hour of judgment and of the supremest test. Can we face this elder brother, Imperialism, without hate, but with a well guarded realization of his many and awful sins? Can we preserve a right attitude of humble realization that we, the younger brother, have made mistakes of which we repent while this elder brother too has sinned but is not yet repentant?

Can Democracy dismiss the weaknesses that is has fostered and, at the same time, refuse to be brow-beaten into trying again those things in Imperialism which history has discredited?

It this can be ,then shall the younger brother, Democracy, reconciled to the Father against whom it has grossly sinned, sit down to a feast of acceptance from which both King-craft and Priest-craft will be excluded.

Democracy has been lovable all along, as the Prodigal of Christ's parable is somehow lovable all through his career. Democracy has been lovable even with all its faults, but it never was so completely lovable as now when it comes back home, saying, "My God, I have discovered my sins and I repent of them. Bless both my Sword and my Flag as I go to offer my life in behalf of Divine ideals. Empower my arm to fight, and I and my children shall not lose true Freedom nor Humanity nor Thee, my God, out of the world."

Missions Are a Part of War Work

Miss Grace Lindly, General Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the General Board of Missions, gave the address before the recent meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Second District of the Diocese of Central New York, held at Grace Church, Utica. She said in part:

"The question which we must face is elemental—winning the war—we can't think of anything else until that is done. Missions are an indispensible part of our war work. Esssentially, this war is a conflict of ideas. Democracy, liberty, peace—all of these are founded on Christianity. It isn't war work and Missions. Missions are a part of war work. If you truly believe that we are to build our new civilization around the cross, you can't let Missions go until after the war. The Church must not wait until after the war to care for the Missionary work. America is not spiritual and not Christian as it ought to be. Let us hope and pray that we will stand before the world as a Christian nation. It will be worthless if we win the war and don't build on the rock, which is a strong foundation—Jesus Christ. We must do this by the aid of Missions. We must send messengers—and that is what the United Offering means. This offering has grown steadily ever since it was started. It is to send our representatives."

Miss Lindly asked the women of the Diocese of Central New York to make an offering of $25,000 the coming year, and closed with an eloquent appeal to the women to do their part in such a way that the organization may have a great increase in spiritual power.

Talks of Favorite Hymns

By Miss Alice S. Millard

In our last paper we considered the two most ancient hymns of the Christian Church—the Gloria in Excelsis and the Te Deum. In this paper we will glance at some scarcely less ancient, but which, translated, and in most cases greatly abridged, are to be found in the Church Hymnal.

"The Day is Past and Over" (No. 16) was written by a Saint of the Eastern Church about A. D. 458, and is still the favorite evening hymn of the Greek peasantry. We are indebted to the same branch of the Church for "Christian, Dost Thou See Them" (No. 81), and "Art Thou Weary, Art Thou Languid" (No. 542), so well known and so dear to us all.

Among the hymns for Holy Week is "The Royal Banners Forward Go" (No. 94), which was written and sung for a processional in Portiers, in France, in the Sixth Century, and another well known hymn from the Gallican Church, "All Glory, Laud and Honor", was written by Theodulph of Orleans during his imprisonment on a false accusation. There is a story recorded that the Emperor Louis was so impressed by this hymn, sung by choristers in the Cathedral on a certain Palm Sunday, that he ordered the author to be immediately released from confinement. The Book of Common Prayer contains one hymn only, the "Veni Creator Spiritus"—"Come, Holy Ghost, Our Souls Inspire", which is to be found in the Order for the Consecration of Bishops and the Ordination of Priests. The authorship of this ancient hymn is ascribed to the great Charlemagne, Emperor of the West, and another medieval monarch, Robert II., one of the earliest kings of France, was the author of No. 378 in our Hymnal: "Come, Thou Holy Spirit, Come!" This king greatly enriched Church music. It is said "he placed himself, robed and crowned, among the choristers of St. Denis, and led in the singing of psalms and hymns of his own composition. From these royal personages we will turn to Bernard of Clairvaux, who has been called the holiest monk that ever lived, and surely the man who wrote "Jesu, the Very Thought of Thee" must have been worthy of the title.

To another Bernard, also a monk, we owe those three hymns that never grow old: "Jerusalem the Golden", "To Thee, O Dear, Dear Country", and "Brief Life is Here Our Portion".

All of the hymns mentioned in this paper were written before the end of the Twelfth Century, and most of them in the Latin language. For many centuries they remained buried in the office books of the ancient and medieval Churches, their beauties unknown and undreamed of, save by a very few students. It remained for Dr. Neale and other leading spirits of the Oxford Movement to unearth these treasures and recast and reset them in a form suited to the hymnals of the Nineteenth Century.

Appeal for the People in Bible Lands

An urgent appeal has been issued for an immediate and generous response for the people living in Bible lands, by the Assyrian and Armenian Relief Committee, signed by a large number of the Bishops, clergy and laymen of the Church. The appeal states that these people in Bible lands have shed their blood as martyrs, and the remnant is experiencing a need more than we of the West can possibly conceive. The President of the United States appeals for these people, the Red Cross assists them generously; but all is not sufficient to stay hunger. Our own Government cannot undertake official relief. The appeal comes to us as Americans, as Christians, and it should be given generous consideration at this time. Checks should be made payable to the order of Mr. Woodbury G. Langdon, Treasurer, 131 East 40th Street, New York.

Our own Church Committee for Assyrian and Armenian Relief, of which Mr. Langdon is Treasurer, had, up to Feb. 25th, received over $105,000. There are, of course, many other cooperating committees all over America and Canada, working in harmony to alleviate suffering, through whom Churchmen contribute. The distribution reaches the 350,000 or so refugees in Caucasus, Armenians and others who have fled from Turkish Armenia. This number is likely to increase if the Russians recede from Armenia.

In Persia, the funds are administered to the Assyrian (Nestorian) Christians, and just now even the Kurds seem to be in the most abject condition, to whom assistance is given. Further, all of Persia seems to be threatened with famine, as even in the Moslem holy cities of Meshed, etc., Americans are reaching starving people whom the callous Moslems cannot reach.

In Constantinople, the funds are sent through Switzerland to the Swedish Ambassador in Constantinople, and from there Missionaries in the interior, including those in Beirut, Syria, are informed of sums held at their disposal to purchase necessities of life.

Then, wherever the English armies proceed in Palestine or in Mesopotamia, the relief work follows in close touch to alleviate suffering. The Jewish Committee sent, some time ago, $100,000 to Jerusalem. Bishop McGinnes is in close co-operation with the funds sent to Palestine through Egypt.

In spite of high prices, 17 cents a day, $5 a month, is the sum asked for to save a human life, and all of Asia Minor, east of the Mediterranean, and Marmora look up to America for its humanizing and civilizing influence, even though we are at war with the allies of Turkey.

Dead Letters

Twice a year, in Washington, they hold a curious auction. It is called the Dead Letter Sale, but in reality it is the sale of packages that have been sent to the Dead Letter Office because of deficient postage or wrong directions.

After these packages have been held for a certain length of time, in order to give senders or owners an opportunity to claim them, they are sold at public auction.

It is often a strange and pathetic collection. Most of the articles are cheap enough, although valuable things are not lacking; but who can estimate the intrinsic value of some of those lost gifts—the time, and sacrifice, and love they represent? How many disappointed hearts must have watched in vain for them! How many lives were robbed of a happiness that rightfully belonged to them, because of the sender's carelessness or ignorance!

Is there not a parable lurking somewhere about this strange auction? How many lives are there today that hold the possibility of gifts for other lives, yet through carelessness or ignorance or indifference are robbing both themselves and others? The woman whose love is spent upon some valuable pet when there are little children all about her starving for that love; the girl whose taste and skill are spent in a score of useless ways when they might be putting so much beauty into beauty-starved lives; the men whose business ability is all spent on making money, and none of it on making men and women; the young people of quick minds and brilliant possibilities, who are unwilling to undergo the discipline necessary to develop their talents—these and scores of others every day are carelessly making "dead letter" of gifts for which eager eyes and hearts are longing.

There is no sale of these dead gifts; no one has any chance at them. They are doubly lost—lost to the one who would have used them, and to the world that needs them. What a pitiful waste of power and joy!—The Youth's Companion.

An Interesting Conference

There will be an interesting conference held in Synod Hall, New York City, about the middle of April by the Teacher Training Committee of the Board of Religious Education and the Junior Auxiliary of the Board of Missions. The following program has been aranged:

Topic: "Win the War—Win the World." "The Kingdoms of the World, the Kingdom of Our Lord."

4:30—Change of Viewpoint in Teaching, necessitated by the War.

5:15—New Emphasis on Missions necessitated by the War: The Junior Plan.

5:45—Intercession.

6:00—7:00—Supper in Undercroft.

6:00—7:45 — Simultaneous conferences.

1. Mission Teaching in the Primary Grades.
2. Mission Work in Clubs for Boys and Girls.
3. War Service in Church Schools.
4. Recruiting Teachers from the Older Boys and Girls: The Normal Class.
5. How to Organize a Church School for Teacher-Training.
6. Diocesan Organizations a Church School Teacher Should Know.

8:00—Address: Preparing Our Children to Think in Terms of the World for Christ.

Church Club House at Camp Dix Dedicated

St. George's Soldiers' Club, erected by the Diocese of New Jersey, Newark, Pennsylvania and Western New York, at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., was formally opened and dedicated on Wednesday afternoon, February 20th, the Rt. Rev. Paul Mathews, D. D., Bishop of New Jersey, officiating. Addresses were made by Bishop Matthews, Bishop Stearley of Newark, Col. H. N. Cootes, Chief of Staff, Dr. John F. Corson, Chairman of the Presbyterian War Work Commission, and Chaplain Walsh of the Roman Catholic Church. The Rev. Karl M. Black, the Church Civilian Chaplain at Camp Dix, will have charge of the Club House and Chapel. He will be assisted in conducting the Club by the Rev. E. L. Cook, Rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Hamburg, N. J., Mr. Edmund L. Coyt, army Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and Mr. Charles T. Wright. Mrs. T. C. Craven of Philadelphia, who organized and for years has directed welfare work of the Gimble stores, will be the housemother. The new Club House cost about $35,000 and is said to be one of the finest recreational centers built at any American training camp.

Lent is the Testing Time

Man is a strange combination. He can rise or fall. He can drift, or resist the current. He can yield to temptation or resist and overcome it. He can be an animal or a saintly man. He can be a devil or a son of God. He stands at the parting of the ways. And Lent is the testing time to determine whither he tends and to turn his steps to the right.

Besetting Sin

Dear Saviour, I have looked within,
To find some spark of love for Thee,
And struggled with besetting sin,
And striven to gain the mastery.
I take Thee, Saviour, at Thy word,
Believing Thou wilt grace afford.

Besetting sin! What child of Thine,
Who cries to Thee by night or day,
Owning that he is sin-defiled,
Was ever rudely cast away?
O Saviour, search my heart and see
If Thou canst find humility.

How sweet to lay our cares on one
Who bled and died upon the tree,
And gently lay our burdens down
And humbly look towards Calvary.
But ah! How sad when unforgiven
To turn our longing eyes toward Heaven.

If God was only just and wise
And never merciful and true.
My agony would rend the skies.
What could my poor petitions do?
Thou, loving Saviour, Thou alone
Canst bear these heart prayers to God's throne.

Oh, let us lay aside the sins
That do so easily beset,
And daily strive the goal to win
And never God's commands forget.
Soon will be run this earthly race
The sinner saved by God's free grace.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK WINS THE HEARTS OF NEW YORK CHURCHMEN

Thousands Hear Archbishop Lang Bring a Message from England to America—Pen Picture of Our Distinguished Guest

The visit of the Archbishop of York to New York was the chief subject of interest to all classes of people throughout the city during his eight-days' sojourn.

Thousands of citizens had the privilege and pleasure of seeing and hearing him speak, at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and at Trinity Church, at receptions and functions given in his honor. He won the hearts of all by his kindly look and friendly manner. He preached in the Cathedral on Sunday morning, March 3rd, to all who could be crowded into that spacious dome, and again at four o'clock in Trinity Church, with every foot of standing room taken and thousands turned away at both churches. Every day at noon, from Sunday to the following Saturday, he preached at Trinity, with the same experience of vast and eager crowds. The Church was usually overflowing an hour before service was to begin, and the nearby sidewalks on Broadway and Wall Street were full of curious rows of people waiting for a glimpse of the distinguished man as he entered or left. Your correspondent was not fortunate enough to get into Trinity beyond the outer doors even on the rainy Wednesday. Ahead of him at every service was a restless mass of humanity, just as anxious as himself to gain admittance. Nothing like it has been seen since Phillips Brooks was the noon-day preacher at Trinity for a week many years ago. Not a sound was heard as a rule except the rustling of people now and then trying to get out, but, once in a while, when the great glass doors leading into Broadway would close as the crowd had parted for a moment, and the street sounds had died out, one could catch the sound of a richly musical bass voice proclaiming words of faith and hope from the far-off pulpit. Then, again, in a moment the preacher would be lost to sight and hearing. It is a good allegory of what is always going on in the world, the occasional voice of the preacher with its message of glad tidings, and a world outside too busy and noisy to hear. It is a pity everybody in America cannot see and hear a man who is worthy of all the best traditions of a great race and great Church.

Many who had seen the Archbishop at the Pan-Anglican Congress in London, June, 1908, were not prepared for the marked change so brief a period had wrought in his personal appearance. His coal black hair, which he has since lost for the most part, is now white as snow, and his face indicates the soul of a man who has seen much of death and sorrow. Yet one is conscious of the fact that he has lost none of his great intellectual and deep spiritual force or physical virility. He is in the prime of life, but there is the strangely sad impression of beholding in his person the marked contrast of the England before the war and the England three years after it has begun—prematurely aged, not less vigorous in spirit and determined in mind, but physically scarred and changed to a startling degree. The comfort of it all is that in him the same sane note of Christian Churchmanship is heard as resonant and as courageous as ever. Like the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Lang is a Scotchman by birth. His father was a distinguished Presbyterian minister, having been moderator of the Established Church, an "Archbishop" of another kind, not less important in Scotland. His ministry, however, has all been spent in England. As Bishop Stepney in London he was the most popular leader of the Church of England Men's Society, and, in spite of the superficial appearance referred to, he is remarkably young for an Archbishop, being but fifty-three years old, and we may well hope that he goes back stronger than he came, for the Christian world needs him greatly.

The New York Post reporter interviewed the Archbishop on his arrival in New York in the sumptuous study adjoining the hallway of the Hamilton Fish residence where the Archbishop is being entertained. The Archbishop stood on the hearth, leaning lightly against the carved stone mantle as though he were in his English mansion adjoining the York Minster, and not a traveller who had had an arduous journey across the Atlantic, which his chaplain described as "roughish." In spite of his white hair he is only fifty-three years old. His complexion is ruddy, and if his features have not that shade of refinement found in many English types, they possess a solidity equally fine, and his mouth, firmly marked, seems fitted to the preciseness of enunciation with which he proclaims his thought. His eyes are the Anglo-Saxon blue. Erect in his black attire, clothed in the gaiter and the apron, wearing the pectoral cross on his breast, he presented a figure capable of striking deep wherever he chose.

The New York Times in describing the service at the Cathedral, cites that occasionally the rapturous throb of the organ swept out to the throngs that stood about the doors, carrying to them a suggestion of the splendid ceremony that was taking place within—but only a suggestion. The gorgeous movement of color created in the mingling of the white and scarlet robes of the clergy, the gleam of the golden altar as it was swept by the morning sun in the Cathedral, the mighty chant of the organ, and above all the magnetic voice and personality of the distinguished prelate—made the service at the Cathedral by far the most impressive that has ever been held there.

Seated in the nave at the Cathedral were hundreds of the most prominent men in the city—scores of English officers and representatives of all the leading societies that devote their energies to the promotion of better and more sympathetic understanding between the United States and England. Some of these organizations were the Pilgrim Society, St. George's, St. Andrew's, and St. David's Society, the Canadian Club, the Alumni of British Schools and Universities, and the Daughters of the British Empire.

A Scriptural Litany of the Passion

Arranged by the Bishop of Vermont

Jesu, Who didst come to seek and to save that which was lost;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who dost invite all who are weary and heavy laden to come unto Thee for rest;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who in infinite compassion didst take our infirmities and bear our sicknesses;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, the Lamb of God, Who takest away the sins of the world;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, by Whose stripes we are healed;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, the Good Shepherd, Who didst lay down Thy life for the sheep;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who lifted up from the earth dost draw all men to Thyself;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who didst offer Thyself without spot to God;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, perfected through suffering;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who didst pray for Thy murderers;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who didst promise Paradise to the penitent robber;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who in dying didst commend Thy spirit to the Father;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who dost bid us take up our cross and follow Thee;
Have mercy upon us.

Jesu, Who dost promise that where Thou art, there shall Thy servant be;
Have mercy upon us.

GENERAL BOARD OF MISSIONS

Meeting of the Executive Committee

The Executive Committee of the Board of Missions met in the Church Missions House, New York, on March 12, 1918, with a good representation.

From the Domestic Field we received and acted upon the resignation of the Rev. Guthrie Pitblado of Florida. In Montana the Rev. R. F. Blanning was appointed in place of the Rev. J. W. Hard. Miss Edith S. Scamman was appointed at the request of the Bishop of Oklahoma for work in that District.

At the request of Bishop Tucker an appropriation was made for the training, at the New York Training School for Deaconesses, for Miss Ernestine Gardiner, preparatory to her appointment as a missionary in the District of Kyoto.

One-half of the bequest of the late Rev. Wm. Thompson, D. D. (approximately $15,000) was set aside to be held by the Board as a trust fund for the endowment of the "Thompson Memorial Chair of Philosophy" in St. Paul's College, Tokyo, Japan.

The legacy received from the estate of the late Rev. A. R. Morris was turned over to the Standing Committee on Trust Funds to be held until required for payments upon the contract for the erection of the Academic Building for St. Paul's College, Tokyo, Japan, to be known as the "Arthur Rutherford Morris Memorial Hall."

The following appointments were made for the Foreign Field: Mr. Clarence R. Wagner for the Missionary District of the Philippines, Mrs. A. C. St. John and Miss Marion S. Doane as nurses in St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, Japan.

Under the authority given it by the Board, the Executive Committee granted an appropriation of $3,400 from the Undesignated Legacies for the District of New Mexico; $1,000 for North Dakota; $2,000 for St. John's School, Corbin, District of Lexington; $6,000 for St. Andrew's School, Mayaguez, District of Porto Rico; $15,000 for Christ Church, Osaka, District of Kyoto.

The Executive Committee also expressed its sense of loss on account of the death of Messrs. Henry Lewis Morris, Charles G. Saunders and William R. Stirling.

Bring Back a Lost Truth SYMPATHY FOR CHRIST

Why is it that there is so much indifference and luke-warmness, and so many "to make excuse?" Why does Christ's work languish anywhere? Shall we answer the question? Is it not because men and women are not in close touch with the thought of the sufferings of Christ, and His right to our sympathy with Him while He suffers? Let any one who loves us here suffer for us as Jesus Christ suffered for us, and would we treat him as we do Christ? Let some one write us a letter telling of the sufferings and tragic death of a dear relative, and we would weep as we read. Open your Bible and read the letters of the four evangelists as they tell of the sufferings and death of Christ—the Brother that loves each soul—and who sheds tears? The age has lost the power of that great truth of human sympathy expressed toward Christ while He died for the sins of the world.

"That I may have fellowship in His sufferings"

Divinity Students in Greeley, Colo.

The building purchased by the Rev. B. W. Bonell at Greeley, Colo., for a school for resident candidates for Holy Orders was opened March 1st, with two students. The Rev. B. W. Bonell and the Rev. C. H. Brady are the instructors. Arrangements have been made with Colorado Teachers' College at Greely, for the students to take all secular studies at the college. In this way the theological and literary courses are combined to the great advantage of the students.

A daily bread fund has been started to assist worthy students. The students will assist in Misionary wark in the numerous small towns in northern Colorado. A second class will be started in September.

To train up a child in the way he should go is not the easiest thing in the world to be done, but has the promise of a reward that is worth all it costs. The best and worst things in human life are wrought in this connection.

Who Will Respond to this Missionary's Appeal

In a recent letter from the Rev. A. R. Llwyd, our Misionary who arrived in Port au Prince, Haiti, the last of January, he writes to the Board of Missions:

"Is there any possibility of getting us a good second hand Reed organ, and half decent second hand Church furniture with Communion vessels? The cheapest lumber here is $100 a thousand feet, while buying furniture is impossible; it is costly beyond imagination."

The Rev. Dr. Arthur R. Gray, Secretary of the Board of Latin America, states that the work is now re-beginning in such a splendid way and Mr. Llwyd's enthusiasm is so contagious that it is hoped he will secure this and be able to put the services on a satisfactory basis. The Civil Administrator of Port au Prince, Major Marston, is a devoted Churchman and is keenly interested in helping Mr. Llwyd in every way, and our opportunities there are unlimited.

War Commission Contributions Have Reached Half a Million Dollars

Bishop Perry telegraphs us as we are going to press that contributions are still being received by the War Commission, at least half a million dollars being now assured.

Church Work at Ohio State University

The Rev. F. C. F. Randolph, Student Pastor, at the Ohio State University, writes that there are at present eighty-one men and sixty-six women attending the University who are members of or interested in the Episcopal Church, and thirty to forty Church people in the faculty and administration offices. This Church population is constantly changing as almost every week some young man drops out to go into war service. A majority of the Church students are from the South. The Dioceses represented are West Virginia, Erie, Washington, Asheville, Chicago, Massachusetts, and Shanghi. The present equipment, except Hilda's Hall, is very inadequate to reach these students. Services are held every Sunday in a small, unattractive hall for the students and for Church people residing in the neighborhood. The Sunday School has doubled in the last four months and the hall is uncomfortably crowded. Both the morning and evening services are well attended and the congregations are growing. St. Hilda's Hall accommodates about twenty girls. At a recent Confirmation four members of the class were connected with the University. Co-operating with the University Y. M. C. A., an effort is being made to meet the needs and conveniences of the Church students through five student classes. One for men and women is held on Sunday mornings at the University Chapel and the topic of study is "The Holy Spirit in the Church." Two classes, one for men and the other for women, are conducted at St. Paul's Church, Columbus, to discuss the General Board of Religious Education syllabus on "Immortality." Another class, considering the same subject, is held for women on Thursday afternoons. The students are urged to attend Bishop Resse's class on Friday's at St. Paul's Church. The course of instructions is on "Personal Religion." There is a demand for a chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and many of the students are engaged in Church and social work. The members of St. Hilda's Guild are helping in various ways at the Chapel, caring for the altar and teaching in the Sunday School. In spite of the many and varied demands on the time and energies of the students the response has generally been, "I am willing to help the Church if the Church will tell me what to do."

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Good Friday

THE COLLECTS

Almighty God, we beseech thee graciously to behold this thy family, for which our Lord Jesus Christ was contented to be betrayed, and given up into the hands of wicked men, and to suffer death upon the cross; who now liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

Almighty and everlasting God, by whose Spirit the whole body of the Church is governed and sanctified; Receive our supplications and prayers, which we offer before thee for all estates of men in thy holy Church, that every member of the same, in his vocation and ministry, may truly and godly serve thee; through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

O merciful God, who hast made all men, and hatest nothing that thou hast made, nor desirest the death of a sinner; Have mercy upon all Jews, Turks, infidels, and heretics; and take from them all ignorance, hardness of heart, and contempt of thy Word; and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, to thy flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one shepherd, Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

In these prayers we Church folk are given some necessary lessons, especially in inclusiveness. Most of us are like the ordinary child—we are self-centered and selfish. All of God's best work is hindered by this tendency. That is why today is humanity's good day; for on this day God shows men how to regard the ego, the letter I, the self-letter. In the first prayer, the Church is considered as a family—as the household of faith—for which family Jesus was contented to be betrayed. Evidently we are to find contentment in being crucified for the good of the household. What a long distance from the ideal do most of us take our stand!

In the second prayer, Mother Church teaches us to use our intercessions with particular parts of the household in mind. It is a noteworthy day when we begin in our prayer life to remember "each member in his vocation and ministry", and to supplicate God that each one "may truly and godly serve Him." An interceding Church or family or individual is one on whom God smiles.

The third prayer, best of all, makes us lift up our eyes and behold the harvests of the world. In these days there are many who regret that the unfortunate and ofttimes foolish attempts to classify and "tag" those who are not "of" us should have embalmed in this third Collect the name of "the children of circumcision" with that of the "unspeakable Turk". But, while we regret this, let us not forget that it is possible for our ignorance, or hardnesas of heart, or contempt, to make of us "enemies of the Cross of Christ"; and with this in mind, let us see to it that this phrase may not be much longer retained in an otherwise lovely supplication, through our own contempt, or hardness of heart, or invincible ignorance.

How grateful we should be that our dear Church has insisted on the observance of a weekly memorial of this priceless and acceptable sacrifice, and with what diligence we should use "this full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice, oblation and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world", to plead and pray for the reunion of Christendom! How these prayers should drive us to our knees, resolved to be world-wide in our vision, individual in our intercessions, ever mindful of our own personal responsibility to sacrifice self for the good of the whole family. Never go to a celebration of the Holy Communion that you do not pray for the unity of God's people. And never narrow "family" so that it includes only your "very, very own". Remember "the other sheep", and show yourself so full of the attractive power of the Holy Cross that you may be an uplifting and unifying power in your own particular spot in this world, by joining in all those forces which work together to exalt the name of Jesus above every name that this world venerates or idolizes.

And, lastly, never forget that it i your individual participation in th sins of the whole world that made i necessary for the dear Lord Jesus Christ to be crucified under Pontius Pilate. Never forget that He died tha you might, through Him, be saved, and not you only, but every one else who can be taught to name the name of Christ, and be induced to bear His sign.

THE EPISTLE

The law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in these sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me: in burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me), to do thy will, O God. Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law; then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. And every priest standeth ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins: but this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin. Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised;) and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching.—Heb. x:1.

The law is necessary, but it has only shadows of good things in it. The goodness of the law is a hard goodness. Its chief value lies in its ability to break and crush that which is hard, dense, unpenetrable. The law says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die". Absolutely just, reasonable, righteous and hard. The Gospel, which goodness which Jesus meant he should get out of His Cross. The legalist finds it impossible to believe that when God writes His law in a man's heart He will no longer remember that man's sins and iniquities. And so his idea of the crucifixion is a hard and repellant theory of the atonement, which makes God a more or less monstrous Being. But when we appropriate to ourselves the family idea, the household idea, we see how the crucifixion of the Brother of the family made it possible for God not only to forgive, but to forget. The Cross stands today not to make God forget, but to help us not to forget how it is that God can and does forget our sins and iniquities.

The writer of this Epistle wants us to keep the sacrament close to the sacrifice, so that we shall not forget that the virtue of the one sacrifice is to permeate the sprinkling of an evil conscience, as well as the washing or baptizing of the outward man. The writer also wants us to show how the Cross is the magnet of souls, by leading men to assemble themselves together and forming a household of faith, in which all the family shall stick together, for the welfare of the whole family, as well as for love of Him who died to hold us together, and in the dying made the family life indestructible.

In the family life, the problem of happy and harmonious existence is largely solved if the members "consider one another". "Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love", says St. Paul. The union of all sorts and conditions of men into one family of faith is only possible when men look at one another through the Cross of Christ, set in the center of their lives, and revealing to them the purposes and intents of God's love for them, and the possibilities of their love for one another. It is at the foot of the Cross that men can become reconciled to God and to each other. The only key which will open the locked doors now separating the peoples and climes is the Cross of Jesus. That is why the Missionary who teaches and preaches the Cross of Jesus is the most necessary factor in the development of a permanent civilization.

THE GOSPEL

Pilate therefore took Jesus and scourged him. And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe, and said, Hail, King of the Jews! and they smote him with their hands. Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him.

Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man! When the chief priests therefore and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him. The Jews answered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid; and went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? But Jesus gave him no answer. Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee? Jesus answered, Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin. And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king, speaketh against Cæsar. When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment seat in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha. And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King! But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Cæsar. Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus and led him away. And he bearing his cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha: where they crucified him, and two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst. And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS. This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city; and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin. Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews. Pilate answered, What I have written I have written. Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also his coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout. They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did. Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene. When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home. After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost. The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath day, (for that sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away. Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him. But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs: but one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out blood and water. And he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe. For these things were done, that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken. And again another scripture saith, They shall look on him whom they pierced.—St. John xix:1.

Today the Church has St. John tell part of the story of the Cross at Morning Prayer, and the rest in the Holy Communion service. Let us plan to stay "home" all day on Good Friday. It will be time well spent to be still with St. John and the Holy Ghost, and the rest of the household, and to learn "that the Lord He is God."

"Behold the man!" It is wonderful to see what humanity can stand when sustained by God. On Good Friday Jesus shows men their capabilities in the way of being perfected through suffering. Pilate only saw a man. The chief priests saw an enemy. Pilate, as he saw, feared; the priests hated. Many today, as they read this story, pity Jesus. None of these emotions lift the veil. Each or all of them will show us only a man. It is only an adoring and obedient love that can see in that desolate figure the magnet of all spiritual desire. Too many of us today, when we behold man, see only the human side of him. Every man born into the world has within himself the possibility of becoming a son of God. Therefore it is our business not to be Pilate, or chief priest, or idle multitude, or cursing soldier, to that man. It is our business to help him find, through suffering, his kinship with Jesus.

"Jesus the King of the Jews." That phrase was written by Pilate in contempt. It came up unto the palace, by way of the guard house. It was true, but it has not yet become truth. The Jew is a type of the earnest, privileged religious class. What does the "man on the outside" think of Jesus, as we privileged ones treat Him? What title have our actions led our observers to place over His head? What do the Jew, Turk, infidel and heretic think of Jesus as we Christians present Him before their different vantage points of observation?

"It is finished," said Jesus. God made Jesus His Missionary, and the work that was given Him to do on earth He did. Is there not a great lesson here for us? Jesus gives each generation the task of making His ways known upon earth, His saving truth unto all people. When we come to lie down on our dying beds, do you suppose, in this one particular alone, that we can look back, and then look up, and say, as Jesus did, It is finished? Think what this death day means to you, what it has meant to your ancestors, what it has meant to your contemporaries, what it meant to all them of old time. As you review your Missionary gifts and work for the past year only, do you feel that you have done what gratitude and obedience and love demanded? Have you esteemed it a privilege to help men know the old, old story of Jesus and His love? Answer truly now. Sit still on Good Friday and realize that He died for the sins of the whole world, and ask yourself how much have you tried to do to help men get that message and that life-saving fact into their lives, and into the lives of people who are dear to them. God help us, but we are a guilty people! God pity and spare us, as we again join with the others and "look on Him whom they pierced". God help us to repent, confess and, in the strength of our absolution, become better Missionaries of His Holy Cross.

God is never more pleased with those who trust Him than when, conscious of their need, and appreciating His past goodness, they call on Him again. David's answer in part to his own inquiry, "What shall I render"? was, "I will take the cup of salvation", and a thrice reiterated statement, "I will call upon the name of the Lord".—Exchange.

Bring Back a Lost Truth
SYMPATHY FOR CHRIST

This is the one great truth this interesting age needs to learn. We know enough of the Gospel story; we have our theology; now we want the life, the zeal, the energy, the power to do something, to suffer something, to accomplish something for Christ. This is the lesson of the cross. We must not let Him bear it alone—we must be His sympathizers.

"That I may have fellowship in His sufferings"

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

FOR OUR BOYS WHO HAVE GONE TO WAR

O God, who art ever mindful of all thy children, we commend to thy Almighty care and protection all thy servants who are gone to training camp or battle front in this struggle for the upholding of Right and Truth, and in the defense of the land we love. We pray for thy special oversight of those near and dear to us who serve their country in any capacity. Watch over them in all their ways, save them in all perils by land or sea, or air—from sickness and the violence of enemies. In thy own good time, and if it be thy will, bring them back once more to home and fireside, with a grateful sense of thy mercies. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—E. H. Rudd.

O God, we pray for Thy Church, which is set today amid the perplexities of a changing order, and face to face with a great new task. Help her to proclaim boldly the coming of the Kingdom of God. Fill her with a Christ-like tenderness for the heavy-laden and downtrodden. Make her valiant to give up her life to humanity. Baptize her afresh with Thy Life-giving Spirit. Grant her a new birth, though it be with the travail of repentance and humiliation. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—Taken from "For God and the People".

THE COMMUNION OFFICE

Catechism: The Communion service following "Lift up your hearts."

Prop. 1.

The Holy Communion was instituted by our Lord as the chief service of the Christian. It was a daily service among the early Christians, and afterward was always obsrerved on the first day of the week. (See Acts ii:46 and Acts xx:7.)

The Christian observance of Sunday is that the disciples should come together to break bread.

It is the Lord's command as faithfully observed by Christians from the days of the Apostles until now.

The service is the offering of ourselves to God in the oblation, or the offering of the Bread and Wine to God, as symbols of ourselves, and the receiving by us of the Bread and Wine thus offered and made for us, by the word of God, to be the Body and Blood of Christ.

The service, therefore, contains these two principal ideals—the offering to God and the receiving of Christ.

The ideas were not separated in the Early Church, but together they formed the great act of Christian worship.

To refuse to participate in this service is to reject Christ's command, and to refuse the gift that He so graciously bestows in this Sacrament of His love.

To say that we can receive the grace of Christ in any other way than that in which He offers it, is to be guilty of presumption.

Prop. 2.

The service of the Holy Communion is divided into two parts, known as the Pro-Anaphora, and the Anaphora. (The word, Anaphora, means "to lift up" and the words "Lift up your hearts" is the dividing of these two parts.)

The Pro-Anaphora service may be divided into these parts:

1. The service of Self-Examination (p. 222-224), consisting of the Ten Commandments and the two great Commandments which Christ said summed up the ten.

After each of these Commandments is a form of the Kyrie Eleison, which words are the Greek for "Lord have mercy."

This service of Self-Examination presupposes that one has examined himself at home as to his sins, so that as the Commandments are recited, he may recall the sins for which he asks forgiveness.

2. The service of Witness (p. 224-225), consisting of the Epistle and Gospel for the day (preceded by the special Collect), the Creed, and the Sermon.

For purposes of symbolism, the Altar is divided into three parts, the Altar itself representing Christ as the Saviour of the world.

The center of the Altar represents Christ interceding for us in Heaven; the right side as you face it represents man as testifying to Christ; the left side, Christ as speaking to us.

So the Epistle is said at the right; the Gospel at the left, and the Creed in the center of the Altar.

3. The service of Oblation (pp. 228-229). Here in the Rubrics we find is the place at which we make our offerings to God. These consist (see Rubrics, page 228):

(a) Of our Alms, the money which represents our work.

(b) Of the Oblation, the Bread and Wine which represents "ourselves, our souls and bodies."

(c) Of the Anthem which represents our praise.

(d) Of the prayer for Christ's Church militant, which represents our prayers.

(In the Early Church the people brought the Bread and Wine which was to be used in the service.)

4. The service of Absolution (p. 230-232). When the Church of England rejected compulsory confession to a priest as a necessary pre-requisite to receiving the Sacrament (because such custom was mediaeval and not primitive), it did not reject the thoroughly primitive idea that the Church retains the power of Absolution.

So this part of the Pro-Anaphora service contains:

(a) The Invitation. ("Ye who do, etc.")

(b) The General Confession.

(c) The Absolution.

(d) The Comfortable Words.

All of which are an essential spiritual preparation to the receiving of the Sacrament; so that one who enters the Church after this part of the service should not receive the Eucharist.

Of course, the placing of the Confession and Absolution in the service presupposes that the person has "diligently tried and examined himself" in the privacy of his own closet, so that the General Confession in the service means something to the penitent.

Moreover, the Church has not neglected the use of private confession as a salutary help, for it directs such as cannot "quiet their own conscience" to go to "some minister of God's word and open his grief."

The Church exists for the forgivnness of sins, and therefore uses every method by which in word and sacrament the work of reconciliation may be accomplished.

QUESTIONS

1. Quote the passages which show that the Holy Communion was used daily, and especially on Sunday by the Early Christians?
2. What obligation have we to receive the Sacrament?
3. Into what two main divisions is the service divided? At what point is it so divided? What is the meaning of Anaphora?
4. Into what four principal parts may the Pro-Anaphora service be divided?
5. State the significance of each of these parts.
6. Give the symbolic divisions of the Altar.
7. State the Church's practice as to confession?

Prayer

A STUDY OF I. JOHN v:14-16

The keynote of the First Epistle of St. John is fellowship with God. He states at the beginning that his purpose in writing is that the Christians may have fellowship—fellowship with the Church and with God: "that ye also may have fellowship with us: yea, and our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son, Jesus Christ". Through this fellowship with God, through union with Jesus Christ in the Church, the Christian partakes of the Divine nature, is a child of God, and therefore must show that he is a child by "walking in the Light", because God is Light, by doing righteousness, even as God is righteous, and by "loving one another", because God is Love. The three-fold qualities of God's nature produce in the true child of God three Christian virtues—faith, obedience and love. So we must confess Christ, keep His commandments, and love the brethren. By these we know that we have fellowship with God, and our fellowship with God through Christ gives us boldness and assurance to come to Him. Also, this confidence, which is the free, outspoken, fearless confidence of a freeman, the open, childlike speech of a son to a loving father, gives us assurance that we can come to Him with our prayers. This is the essence of prayer, the confidence and trust of children of God towards their Father, arising out of our knowledge of fellowship with God in Christ. This is truly faith. Our faith makes us know that we have eternal life, because we believe on the name of the Son of God. Our knowledge of the possession of eternal life makes us assured "that if we ask anything of Him, according to His will, He heareth us". Faith produces both knowledge and boldness, and the knowledge that we are children of God is based upon our faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, on all that is implied, and taught by St. John, in the term Name. St. John makes no definite separation of these three, faith, knowledge, assurance; they are vitally connected and cannot be separated even in thought. In one way they are but the three aspects of the same spiritual state. Faith makes us children of God: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God." Faith is based on some knowledge, for, before we can come to Him, we must have some knowledge that He is, but faith produces greater knowledge, and both together makes us confident with bold assurance that we are in God through our faith in Christ. Thus the first aspects of Christian prayer must be this confidence in God the Father, which we have because we are the children of God.

However, we must ask "according to His will" in order to have the complete assurance that "He heareth us". So all prayer is contingent on that. Fellowship with God involves the union of our wills with the will of God, for union with Christ in God is manifested in our willingness to do the perfect will of God. If we have fellowship with Him, we have no desire for sin. As our fellowship with Him grows, so our will grows into His will, and there is harmony between us and God through Christ. Wilfulness causes sin, and sin is separation from God. So the perfect prayer is a prayer in which our wills submit to the will of God. Such prayer will be heard of God, and, if heard of Him, answered by Him. The defect of most prayers is that we are mainly thinking of our will, not God's, of our desires. But our boldness makes us ready to ask everything of Him. There is no limit to the matter of prayer; there may be to God's answer. It may be that our prayer, if answered, may be to the harm of another. We may pray with all sincerity, but with limited knowledge, for something which, if gotten, may be hurtful to us or to others in the body of Christ. So prayer must be according to God's will.

Our fellowship is first fellowship with the Church, the body of Christ: "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us." So St. John never separates fellowship with God from fellowship with the Church. In fact, he almost makes fellowship with God and Christ depend upon fellowship "with us", the Apostles. Men are linked with one another in the body of Christ and with God because of this union with each other in Christ. Man and man are, because of their childship with God, brothers one of another.

The common faith unites in mutual love. So the end of prayer is the perfection of the whole body of Christ. The individual Christian prays for himself only as he is a member of this body, because all Christians are of this Body, and apart from the body his full spiritual nature can not have its perfection. Sin in one is disease in all. The health of one is for the health of the body. But prayer for oneself, apart from the brethren, is selfish; so the Christian prayer must be intercessory prayer, first for the brethren, then for the world, and then for oneself. This especially for others when they sin. "If any man see his brother sinning a sin not unto death, he shall ask, and God will give him life, for them that sin not unto death." But can man always receive the gift of God? Not if he sins a sin unto death, that is, not if his sin is of such a nature as to cut him off from God; not when his attitude towards God is that of habitual and continual rejection of God's will. St. John, however, does not forbid the praying for a sinner "unto death". He merely does not enjoin it: "Not concerning this do I say that he should make request." It is left to the individaul conscience. One who has sinned a sin unto death has by so doing separated himself from the fellowship with God, and for such a one we can not pray as for a brother, however much we can pray for him otherwise. The word used in verse 16 is the word of asking, which comes from union with God. It is the word used of our Lord's prayer to the Father in St. John's Gospel, xiv:16. So our asking for a fellow Christian is based upon the relation he bears to us through our and his fellowship with God through Christ. The prayer for others is the prayer of love for all the creatures of God. Christian prayer is the expression of our fellowship with God, manifested in love for one another.

Easter Day	Isa. 51:1-16 I Chron. 16:7-36	Luke 24:1-12	Isa. 52:1-10	John 20:1-23

The Sunday before Easter is associated in our minds with our Lord's so-called triumphal entry into Jerusalem on the Sunday before His crucifixion. The New Lectionary has, therefore, left undisturbed the lessons from Zechariah and from St. John in the present Prayer Book arrangement, except to throw prophecy and fulfillment together, instead of prophecy in the morning and fulfillment in the evening. We have, indeed, rather strengthened this aspect of the day, by giving also St. Luke's story of the entry in the morning, for use if desired. But the day has other aspects besides a kingly procession amidst the huzzahs of a shallow multitude. The way to His throne lay for our Lord through rejection, Gethsemane and Calvary. It is this, indeed, that is stressed in Collect, Epistle and Gospel, and also in Matthew 26 and Daniel 9, the other lessons in the present Prayer Book Lectionary. We have returned and shortened Matt. 26, by beginning at verse 17, and having already used Daniel 9 on the evening of the third Sunday in Lent, we have substituted a prophecy of the Passion from Isaiah (perhaps to verse 9 of chapter 63 would be better), and have given in the morning, in the Old Testament Historico-topical course, Ezekiel's prophecy of the return from exile, under a figure of a resurrection from the dead, which is needed to bring out the full teaching of the day, as given in both Collect and Epistle.

(Comparison with the lessons on Palm Sunday, Table 1, will show how rich are the selections. The Passover is introduced in the first year's Historico-topical course, referred to in Matt. 26. Note also the correlation between Zechariah 9:13 and John 12:20 ff., and the fact that, taking the two years together, there is opportunity to read all four accounts of the entry.)

The week day selections lead up to Easter, that is, to redemption, both topically and historically. In the morning we have given Jeremiah's concluding messages—prophecies of the judgment upon Babylon and the redemption of Israel. It is these prophecies, taken in connection with those of the new covenant, which should have saved Jeremiah from being handed down the ages as a pessimist, and which should teach us the needed lesson of a Christian and not a worldly optimism—redemption and salvation through suffering and discipline. Salvation of the soul and progress in the world are neither of them automatic.

For New Testament lessons, we have continued St. Luke's life of our Lord, which, it will be noticed, throws into this week the events thereof, beginning with the entry on Sunday, and including the events of Thursday night and Good Friday.

In the evening there are given topical selections from both Old and New Testaments, and a double selection on each day, for choice. The selections at present given in the Prayer Book are all of them used, but many other selections are added. For instance, the story of the crucifixion itself is given each year, besides Apostolic comments thereupon, instead of being relegated entirely to the Gospel for the Day, which in many instances will not be read, and, finally, the redeeming death of our Lord is brought out as not only the fulfillment of prophecy, but also of the history of the past, in the redemption, first from Egypt and second from Babylon.

POEMS Worth Preserving

Selected by the Rev. F. L. Palmer

THE OTHER WORLD

It lies around us like a cloud,
A world we do not see;
Yet the sweet closing of an eye
May bring us there to be.

Its gentle breezes fan our cheek
Amid our worldly cares;
Its gentle voices whisper love,
And mingle with our prayers.

Sweet hearts around us throb and beat,
Sweet helping hands are stirred;
And palpitates the veil between
With breathings almost heard.

The silence, awful, sweet, and calm,
They have no power to break;
For mortal words are not for them
To utter or partake.

So thin, so soft, so sweet they glide,
So near to press they seem,
They lull us gently to our rest,
They melt into our dream.

And in the hush of rest they bring,
'Tis easy now to see
How lovely and how sweet a pass
The hour of death may be.

To close the eye and close the ear,
Wrapped in a trance of bliss,
And gently laid in loving arms,
To swoon to that—from this.

Scarce knowing if we wake or sleep,
Scarce asking where we are,
To find all evil sink away,
All sorrow and all care.

Sweet souls around us! watch us still,
Press nearer to our side,
Into our thoughts, into our prayers,
With gentle helping glide.

Let death between us be as naught—
A dried and vanished stream;
Your joy be the reality,
Our suffering life the dream.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

The agitation favoring professional baseball on Sunday in the State of New York was given a quietus at a conference of representative senators, at Albany, who took a decided stand against all non-essential sporting legislation during the war.

The Good Friday offerings of the Parishes and Missions of the American Church are asked for the work of the Church in Jerusalem and the East Missions. The needs of the Bishop of Jerusalem are great and the response should be more generous than ever.

A magnificent service flag was hung in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Springfield, Ill., on March 2nd. The flag is of silk, with a heavy band of gold braid around the bottom, and contains thirty-eight stars representing the members of the Parish who are in military service, including Miss Geneva Carstensen, who is a Red Cross nurse.

We hear from St. Elizabeth's School, Wakpala, S. D.:

The Indians come to us from far and near with all sorts of requests, and we help them as much as we can whenever we can in simple little ways. They are taking a touching interest in the Red Cross this year, and bring their subscriptions and dues to us to send in.

A pure white dove, or pigeon, lit on the electric cross of St. Andrew's Church, Texarkana, Ark., early one evening recently, and remained roosting there throughout the night, flying away between daybreak and sunrise, says the Little Rock Gazette. Numbers of persons saw the bird there at different hours of the night and wondered at the singular phenomenon. The Church erected the cross soon after the United States entered the war. It is brilliantly lighted with bulbs and burns all night.

Mrs. James A. King, an American Church woman, who has been engaged in war service the past six months at one of the Y. M. C. A. huts in France, at a port where United States troops are landed, states, in a letter to her cousin, Miss Florence Woods of Washington, D. C., in commenting upon the recent arrival of our ships, that "It was a thrilling sight to watch the big boats come in with the khaki clad boys all over the boats looking like swarms of bees. Our boys do not appear as polished as the French, but they are so wholesome and strong and noble, imbued with the high American ideals. They will do Europe a lot of good and I hope they will take only the best of what is here back home with them."

The congregation of St. Peter's, Washington, N. C., have presented to the Second Regiment, North Carolina National Guard, now the 119th U. S. Infantry, at Camp Jackson, S. C., a sterling silver communion set in memory of the late Rev. Nathaniel Harding. Mr. Harding was Chaplain of the Regiment from 1884 to 1916, and at the time of his resignation was the oldest commissioned officer, in point of service, in the state.

The communion set is especially designed for army use, and, as Chaplain Robeson has said, will fill a great need. Those who knew Mr. Harding's devotion to the reginment will appreciate the appropriateness of the memorial.—The Mission Herald.

A minister was praying at the bedside of a dying woman. "Wait a moment," said she, as he started to rise from his knees. "I want to pray for you." And very tenderly she prayed, with her hand upon his head. "For ten years, ever since you became my pastor, I have offered up that prayer for you every morning and every night," she told him.

The minister went away with tears in his eyes and a strange warmth in his heart. He had known that this woman was sweet-spirited and true, but he had never guessed that he had a place in her prayers. "I wonder how many of my six hundred Church members pray for me?" he asked himself. Not all of them, certainly; yet, doubtless, more of them prayed for him than he had dreamed. The thought was sweet and helpful to him.—Youth's Companion.

An "Every Name Campaign" was recently conducted by the Chapel of the Intercession, Trinity Parish, New York, with most gratifying and encouraging results. The Vicar, the Rev. Dr. Milo H. Gates, at the beginning of the campaign had asked for an increase of $7,000 for the needs of the war work, missionary apportionment and parochial charities. The following are some of the surprising results of the campaign:

For the work of the Intercession at home, which includes charities, education and industrial work and war work. $13,950.75 was pledged. For the work of the Intercession abroad, which includes missions, religious education, social service, etc., $4,573.42 was pledged. This makes a total pledged through the envelope system of $18,524.17. Last year the pledges for these purposes under the weekly envelope system amounted to $6,527.85, the percentage of increase being 184 per cent.

A Missionary from Anking, travelling last summer, thus describes Peking:

"Along the railway all seemed thoroughly Japanese. When we reached Peking it was like stepping into another world—the temples, palaces, great wall, gates and people were so gorgeous. The yellow tiled, upturned roofs of the Imperial and Forbidden Cities, moats and pagadas were a wonderful, never to be forgotten, sight. The part of China about Anking is so very poor, it was a great comfort to see what the Chinese, not merely engaged in a daily struggle for a few bits of rice, could do."

And Miss Peavey writes from Changsha: "I loved Peking more than any place I was ever in, though I was studying from eight to five. Saturdays I tried to spend in sightseeing. The temples are so wonderful, and so is the great wall. Twice I was received by the President, but just missed the Emperor's appearance."

Eight months in the North Union Language School, which is situated in this most interesting city, are a great help to the new missionary. Miss Peavey continues after three months in Changsha:

"The Chinese are so nice and cordial, and overlook one's mistakes in the language. I study mornings and work afternoons. One afternoon I call on our people with the Bible woman; one I call by myself; one I go to a sort of mother's meeting, when the women have a short service and Bible instruction and sew for Missions or relief work in China. One afternoon I teach a Bible class of two Bible women; one I am at home to the women. The other afternoon I gather up all the loose threads."

Among these, accounts perhaps! A paper dollar is about 2,900 cash, a silver dollar at present 4,100—it varies from 3,000 to 4,000. When it comes to paying 70/2,900 for the day's vegetables and 480/4,500 for a tumbler, bookkeeping is just lost in the shuffle!"

Personals

The Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Sidders of Grace Church Parish, Wabasha, Minn., are rejoicing over the arrival in their home on March 9th, of a baby girl.

Archdeacon Percy C. Webber, who recently returned from a year of study in India, conducted a ten days' mission at Little Rock, Ark., beginning on Tuesday, March 12.

Prof. Lewis W. Crawford has been elected president of the Episcopal Club of Syracuse (N. Y.) University, and Miss Barbara Watson, of the class of 1919, the secretary of that organization.

The Rev. Arthur R. Gray, Secretary for Latin America of the General Board of Missions, gave the alumni course of lectures for 1918 on "Religion and Missions" at the Cambridge (Mass.) Theological School, the first and second weeks of this month.

The Rev. Emory S. Townsen, formerly Rector of St. James' Church, Spokane, Wash., and his two sons, Ira and Charles, are now in military service. Charles was in Y. M. C. A. work for sometime at the American Lake cantonment but has joined the Depot Brigade, 166th infantry. Ira is a lieutenant at the same cantonment, and the father is engaged in Y. M. C. A. work there.

The Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, on the non-parochial list of the Diocese of New York, and until recently editor of a religious journal with advanced Socialistic views, published at Chicago, was indicted by the grand jury in that city on March 9th on the charge of interfering with the recruiting of men in war service. He is at present in Houma, La., where his father, the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, Field Secretary of the Board of Religious Education, Province of Sewanee, resides.

The Reverend Arthur E. Woodward, formerly Curate of Christ Church, Little Rock, Arkansas, and later Priest-in-charge of Holy Cross Mission, Poplar Bluff; Holy Trinity, Thayer; and St. Peter's, Bonne Terre, in the field of the Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Missouri, has accepted a call as Rector of Trinity Parish, Van Buren, Diocese of Arkansas. Mr. Woodward was ordained Deacon by the Rt. Rev. Wm. M. Brown, D. D., late Bishop of Arkansas, May 5, 1910, and Priest by the Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester, D. D., present Bishop of Arkansas, May 14, 1913. He enters upon his new work April 1st, and after that date should be addressed at Trinity Rectory, Van Buren, Arkansas.

Bring Back a Lost Truth
SYMPATHY FOR CHRIST

We have become so accustomed to connect our Redeemer with some great system of truth which we have espoused, that His personality and His personal love and His personal association with individual souls, has been lost in that system. Let us stand by the cross of Christ and realize "the heart lesson" that it teaches, the personal lesson for you and me, and see the result.

"That I may have fellowship in His sufferings"

News Notes from the Diocese of Lexington

Council to Meet

The twenty-third Diocesan Council of the Diocese of Lexington will meet this year in Calvary Church, Ashland, Kentucky, Rev. G. H. Harrison, Rector. May 28th is the date set. The Cathedral Chapter will meet that afternoon, the Council convening that evening.

Withdraws Acceptance

Rev. R. E. Abraham, of the Holy Cross Church, Brooklyn, New York, who had accepted the charge of Paris and Cynthiana, this Diocese, has found it necessary to withdraw this acceptance because of continued ill health. Rev. Mr. Abraham was at one time in charge of St. Mary's Church, Middlesboro, and his return to the Diocese was looked forward to with much pleasure. We regret the loss of his valued services and wish him a speedy recovery.

Epidemic at St. John's, Corbin

As an aftermath of the recent floods along the Cumberland River, which accompanied the heavy rains melting our deep snows, our mission school at Corbin, St. John's Collegiate Institute, has been visited with an epidemic of lagrippe and tonsilitis. Mr. Ira D. Lang, our Chaplain and Missioner, half of the faculty, and many of the students have been quite sick, greatly retarding the work of the school, though substitutes have been provided.

Services Renewed

The Church at Somerset, this Diocese, which has been closed for some time, is soon to be opened again. This was once an active mission, but met with heavy reverses when the division point of the Southern Railroad was moved from that point to Danville, removing most of our communicants who were numbered amongst the railroad men. Renewed activities at the shops there, with the incoming of new Church families, has opened up possibilities for work at the mission, which has been placed in charge of the Rev. Henry P. Manning, Rector at Danville, thirty-five miles distant. Repairs are now being made to the building in anticipation of the monthly services soon to begin.

Addresses Y. M. C. A.

The Venerable F. B. Wentworth, Winchester, Ky., Archdeacon of the Diocese, has been delivering addresses upon the subject of "Individualism and Socialism." His recent address before the Faculty and Student body of the Kentucky State University at the Y. M. C. A. in Lexington, was commented upon by the public press in the highest terms, pronouncing it "a modern 'voice in the wilderness' ringing with a mesage of warning and counsel to a people sadly confused and distraught."

Preaches at Lenten Services

The Rev. Dr. Richard Wilkinson, Rector of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, was the preacher during one of the weeks of the noon-day Lenten services in Louisville, Kentucky, Diocese of Kentucky. Dr. Wilkinson's visit was of unusual interest, he having been pastor of one of the largest Methodist Churches in Louisville when in the Methodist Communion. Dr. Wilkinson has only recently taken orders in the ministry of the Episcopal Church.

Declines Call

Almost immediately after the burning of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, the Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, its Rector, was approached by representatives of the vestry of a prominent Church in another Diocese, with a view of extending to him a call to that cure. D. Wilkinson, with great loyalty to his congregation, declined to consider the call. Though it may have been manifestly his duty to remain with the congregation under the circumstances, still it was a great personal sacrifice to decide to remain at his post. The Good Shepherd is blessed in having so loyal a leader.

Notes from Southern Virginia

Roanoke.

The Right Rev. B. D. Tucker, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese, visited St. John's Church Sunday night, March 10th, and confirmed twenty-five persons. Four of them were students at Hollins College and were confirmed for the Rev. Mr. Mead of Christ Church. The Bishop preached a most helpful sermon from the text "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." The Church was filled and in all it was an inspiring service.

Salem

Bishop Tucker visited St. Paul's Church, Salem, Monday, March 11th, and at evening service preached and confirmed a large class.

Saltville

The Rev. W. R. Noe, who last November came from Wilmington, N. C., to take charge of the work in Smyth County, with residence at Saltville, has been doing most excellent work and filling most important fields.

Farmville

The Rev. Chas. P. Holbrook has taken up the work at Farmville and since last December has been doing a telling service in that Parish. The Church there is right across from the State Normal School, which affords an important field for the Rector of that Church.

Emporia

The Rev. Norman F. Marshall has taken charge of the work at Emporia. He went from Bramwell, W. Va., to Texas, some years ago, then accepted work in Florida, and now has returned to his home Diocese. He is heartily welcomed back.

Evington

The Rev. J. F. Burks has taken the work in lower Campbell County, Churches at Evington, Altavista and Rustburg. These Parishes were made vacant by the resignation of the Rev. C. C. Randall, who from advanced age had to give up active service.

The Archdeaconry

The Churches in this great territory are now being ministered to in part by the Rev. J. W. Hobson of Bluefield, the Rev. C. E. A. Marshall of Radford, with Rev. Percy R. Dix locum tenens at Bib Stone Gap. The Archdeacon, Rv. E. A. Rich, has taken work at Newport News, chiefly at Camp Stuart, and Langley Field. This is the point of embarkation for this section and great numbers of soldiers are quartered in that section between Morrisons and Old Point, which makes it imperative to have a volunteer Chaplain look after the Church boys before they leave for "Somewhere in France."

Camp Lee

The Rev. R. B. Nelson is getting his work well in hand at Camp Lee and in the meantime his Parish duties are being looked after in part by ministers of the Southwest Convocation.

Wytheville

A Service Flag has been hung up in St. John's Church, Rev. F. H. Craighill, Rector, with 36 stars on it. Of these men 34 are volunteers, 16 of whom are officers, five others are non-coms. Of these, eight are now "somewhere in France." For a small town congregation this is an unusual number of men in the service. This flag is a very handsome one of silk given by the congregation at large. They have had a big United States flag over the chancel since the beginning of the war.

All of the six Protestant Churches of Wytheville have been having union services on Sunday nights in the various Churches in rotation, which have proved both a great success and blessing with congregations limited only by the capacity of the churches. No minister has preached in his own Church, the Rector of St. John's has officiated in two of the other Churches and at his turn he has had two of the other ministers officiate at St. John's.

This Parish has secured a splendid stereopticon which fills a long-felt need, and the Rector intends to make ample use of it in his Sunday Schools, Chapels and for illustrated Sunday night sermons.

Salt Lake Church will Change Location

After thirty years of service, St. Paul's Church building, Salt Lake, Utah, will be abandoned with the night service on Easter Day. Official announcement of this plan has been made, says the Tribune of that city, by G. W. Marshall, Clerk of the Vestry.

"For the immediate future, services of St. Paul's Church will be conducted in the new Parish House, now nearing completion on the Church's property at Third, South and Ninth streets. This building will be used for Church purposes until a modern edifice is erected on the same lot. The Rectory, too, will occupy the same property, and is now nearing its ultimate construction stage.

St. Paul's Church was built under the direction of Bishop Daniel S. Tuttle in 1888, the building fund being provided by donations made by Maria, Charlotte, Susan and Jane Mount of New York. It stands at South Main and Fourth South streets and was purchased a year ago by W. H. Swanson of the American theater. The original cost of the property was $25,000. Mr. Swanson paid $192,500.

Elaborate plans are being made for a fitting farewell to the Church at the evening service on Easter Day, when the form for the removal of the Consecration of a Church will be said by some Bishop of a neighboring state.

Every man must have to do with death; and in the presence of it, every man feels his helplessness. * * * Surely we also may say, with Himself, we are glad that He was not with Lazarus in his sickness, that we might have this proof that not even death carries the friends of Christ beyond His reach and power.—Dr. Dod.

Appearances and Results

About the year 1500, one, Machiavelli, wrote a book called "The Prince" in which he outlined the proper conduct of princes in order to successfully administer their kingdoms.

The book displays a wonderful insight into human nature and an absolute lack of principle.

The royal houses of Spain and Austria adopted the philosophy of the book, and although they were the leading monarchies of their day, the philosophy of Machiavelli was their undoing and these two great royal houses sank into the obscurity that they deserved, for in following the policy of "The Prince" they violated the laws of God. They did evil that good might come, and they lost the confidence of God and man.

The principles that Machiavelli laid down for princes might be summarized as follows:

1. A prince need not keep faith, not even his plighted word, if his own interests demanded the repudiation of his promise.

2. A prince should be very gentle except when circumstances require other policies, when his conduct should be as harsh and cruel as possible, so that if men would not love him, they must then be taught to fear him.

3. A prince should assume the language of benevolence and religion, for very few are in close enough touch with him to know what he really is, while the language of benevolence and religion, coupled with successful exercise of authority, will establish his reputation by what they hear from his lips, while those who know otherwise will be restrained by fear and self-interest from exposing his true character, for, says Machiavelli, "the vulgar are always taken by appearances and results." It is most evident that the Kaiser has been a close student of Machiavelli, and having successfully imposed upon the credulity of his own people is now attempting to impose upon the credulity of the world.

So he alternates between the language of benevolence and religion, and the practice of frightfulness and disregard of his royal word.

It is all very Machiavellian, and, God willing, it will be buried in the same tomb.

But it is the profound sagacity of Machiavelli's observation that "the vulgar are always taken by appearances and results," that has been the basis, not only of royal conduct, but is at the bottom of the readiness with which the sheep are fooled in other lines.

It is this which prompts the swindler to get up imposing certificates of stock and the payment of large and quick dividends (taken out of receipts) to secure thousands of dollars from people who are greedy for wealth and pauperized as to thought.

The get-rich-quick Wallingford's find that the vulgar are taken by appearances and results.

When the country has been overrun by such wild-cat speculation, or by glittering booms, legitimate business has had to pay the penalty of greedy foolishness.

Business men understand this in business, and you need only to consult a hard headed business man on a mining scheme or a fraternal insurance scheme to unbottle his scornful wrath upon the dupes of such exploiters.

But when the hard headed business man gets into the realm of religion, he forgets the cautious instincts in which he has been reared, and becomes in turn the dupe in the unfamiliar atmosphere of religion.

What happens is that he is taken with appearances and what he is pleased to call results, independently of well laid foundations and permanent dividends.

The whole thing would be funny, if it wasn't so tragic.

When you see one of these get-salvation-quick evangelists come into a community where a number of hard working and faithful pastors have been plodding along legitimate lines at starvation wages, unobserved and unaided, and then see your local business men swell up and say, "At last we have results," and then invest more in two weeks in order to pay a spiritual charlatan, than he has given for two years to support the faithful pastor that has married him, trained his children, been instant in season and out of season; you are then reminded the way people will ignore the old family doctor and listen to the quack peddler.

"But see how much good your evangelistic exploiter does?" he replies.

Just as much and no more than your get-rich-quick swindler does. He undermines legitimate business and raises false hopes as to subsequent dividends.

What think you? That making money in business requires less fundamental principles and honest industry to insure returns than growing into the manhood of Christ; and that spiritual character may be attained by juggling methods?

Think you that spiritual ills can be cured by patent medicines?

Truly the vulgar are taken in by appearances and results.

The spiritually inapt are buncoed just as effectually in this country by the swindling evangelists as the financially inapt are fooled by gold brick specialists.

If there is one thing that I pray to be delivered from it is from a spiritual campaign completely dominated by efficient business men with a maximum of conceit and a minimum of spirituality. I would just as soon invest in a railroad run by parsons.

I say this in the full consciousness that it is to be guilty of lese majeste, and also with the knowledge that it is a most unpopular doctrine.

But I am also persuaded that it is common sense to maintain that the Lord does not thus reward highly paid exploiters of spiritual mines.

I acknowledge that appearances and results seem to be different, but living in a country which has been devastated by evangelistic waves during my life time, I have seen two things, and those are the undervaluing of legitimate pastors so that they have been forced by public pressure to leave off from pastoral oversight and to take to sensational advertising; and also I have seen the absolute spiritual poverty and pagan morality of the towns and villages that have been most arduously worked by these wonderful Wallingford's with their emotional elixirs of saving sanctity.

And so I say, every man to his own last, the business man among the rest, and I challenge the spiritual value of the whole quick saving schemes of spiritual welfare.

It is significant that in the recent report of spiritual conditions in the state of Ohio, the committee making the report has stated that the lowest standards of morality and the greatest indifference to public worship, existed in those countries which had been most extensively exploited by those churches which lay greatest stress upon the emotional instincts.

If we are to have legitimate business to insure the financial integrity of the nation, let us have legitimate religion to establish a high, and not a low, spiritual standard of the people.

And let us cease talking about efficiency in religion until we at least know what the true elements of such efficiency are.

Thousands Hear Archbishop Lang

The British military representatives were header by Brig. Gen. W. A. White, who is the director of the British Recruiting Mission in this country.

"God of Our Fathers."

The choir, followed by Deacons, Priests, Archdeacons, Suffragan Bishop Burch, the Right Rev. David H. Greer, Bishop of the Diocese of New York, and last of all the Archbishop of York, marched in singing "God of Our Fathers." Then followed the service, with the music of Palestrina unaccompanied. The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, and the Rev. Dr. E. Clowes Chorley, both Trustees of the Cathedral, led the service, after which Bishop Greer ascended the pulpit and announced that the Lord Archbishop of York would deliver the sermon.

"I welcome him," said Bishop Greer, "in the confident hope that it will result in uniting more closely the peoples of the old and new countries by strengthening the ties of fellowship that already exist, not only as two great communions, but two great nations standing together hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder in the great crusade against tyranny and aggression."

In simple, unemotional language but with great depth of feeling, Dr. Lang described the suffering of England, of France, and of Russia, and told how for two and one-half years his country had beckoned to the United States to join hands with the Allies and fight for the vindication of the ideals of truth, justice, and liberty, which were at stake. And now that the United States has come, Archbishop Lang said, her support will be vital to the success of the cause, not only through the material resources that she will offer for the winning of the struggle but even more for the great moral strength that she will bring to the reinforcement of her wearied allies.

The Archbishop, from the moment he took his place in the pulpit, held the congregation under the spell of his voice and presence. With his deep-set eyes gazing over the heads of his listeners into the distance, he spoke slowly and simply of the anguish of Europe and of the hopes that the Allies had placed in America. There was no denunciation—no attempt at oratory—it was just a natural and dignified presentation of a message that came from the "heart of England to the heart of America." He began by enunciating his text from St. Luke: "They beckoned to their partners which were in the other ship that they should come and help them, and they came," and then he said:

"From York, the center of memories reaching back to the days of the Roman legions and the Emperors, [illegible]

Archbishops to land on the shores of America, I come to New York, the center of the hope and energies of a great nation, still rejoicing in the strength of its youth, and I desire in the name of my Church and country to thank you for your good will and fellowship and the practical evidences of your idealism.

"Today, however, I shall appeal not so much to your imaginations as to your hearts. For I hope that you will hear in my voice the heart of England, beating hard in the heaviest struggle of her existence, talking to the heart of America in her high resolve to cross the seas and make that struggle what it must necessarily be—her own. For three and one-half years the allied nations have been enduring the allied burden of this awful war. Think of Belgium, her honor safe, but her people, her land, ravished and torn and broken on the wheel of tribulation in a manner that baffles the powers of description. Think of Serbia and what she has had to endure at the hands of the invader. Think of Italy standing at bay, suffering, bleeding, yet struggling with all the lion-heartedness that is in her to wrench herself free of the oppressor. Think of Russia, staggering, dazed, and bewildered in the throes of revolution, and yet struggling to free her people from him who would ravish the poor whom he gets into the net. Think of the people of France, brave, unfaltering France, well nigh exhausted in body but invincible in spirit.

Craves Hand of Fellowship.

"And when it comes to my own country, you must forgive me if I seem to give way to my feelings when I speak of that land, 3,000 miles away. It is perhaps a habit due to reticence and reserve that caused the English people to do their work, and to bear their suffering and speak little about it. There is even now something in me that makes it difficult to speak of, and when I do speak I can only say that it is not so much the gentle hand of sympathy as the strong hand of fellowship that we ask of the United States.

"The iron has entered into our very souls. The valor amid tragedy of our troops in the field, the privation which we suffer at home as to food have made the war a vivid matter to us, the tremendous expenditure of more than $32,000,000 a day for war purposes, the ceaseless toil in munitions plant, factory and shipyard, have made it the predominating industrial matter with us. And, above all, there have been drawn from us and our daughters across the sea 7,500,000 men for the service of the Allies, of whom 5,000,000 came forward of their own free will.

"Then there is the aching of heart that comes when we think of the hundreds of thousands who have died, and the hundreds of thousands who have been maimed and disabled. It now not a home in England where no member of the family or kindred has died in the service. Yes—the sunshine has gone out of our sky, and we wonder whether it will ever shine again. For two and a half years the ship which carries the fortunes of free civilization in Europe has looked wistfully across the seas to the great ship of America, anchored in its strength and security.

"We knew we had your sympathy—still we beckoned for help, and on that great and fateful day, April 6, 1917, you came over and helped us. Now we who were always partners in spirit are partners in arms."

Ceremonies at Trinity.

The ceremonies at Trinity Church in the afternoon were equally elaborate. The chair and prayer desk used by the Archbishop of Canterbury upon his visit to this country in 1904 were placed in position for the Archbishop of York. Owing to the dense crowds in the back of the Church and the side aisles and the vestry the entrance procession around the Church was abandoned and the clergy and dignitaries entered from the side, going directly to the Chancel. The British and American flags were carried at the head of the procession. Dr. Manning welcomed the Archbishop of York, after which the Archbishop delivered a sermon which covered in substance the same general ideas presented by him at the Cathedral. His text was from Genesis, "Behold this dreamer cometh." He pointed out that the ideals for which the Allies were fighting were the ideals of "dreamers," and he cited as such dreamers George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson.

"Speaking to you as I do," he said, "from the heart of a nation which is almost dying because of the suffering and sacrifices it endures, because it is a dreamer, I tell you the nation needs at this moment every pound of material and moral strength and help that you can send. I say to you the need is very great for strength, courage, power and an elevation of the moral and spiritual ideals with which to face the enemy. This great war represents the things you have been standing for, and because ideals are master powers the war-worn nations in Europe, when a new force entered the struggle on April 6, 1917, could say, 'Behold—this mighty dreamer cometh!' Cynics may say, 'Behold these dreamers come,' but history will recall once again that the dreamers were the builders."

May every soul that touches mine,
Be it the slightest contact, get therefrom some good,
Some little grace, one kindly thought,
One aspiration yet unfelt, one bit of courage
For the darkening sky, one gleam of faith
To brave the thickening ills of life,
One glimpse of brighter skies beyond the gathering mists,
To make this life worth while,
And heaven a surer heritage.

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

A Series of Articles by

GEORGE P. ATWATER

Rector, Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio

The Preparation for Easter

Lent, of course, as a whole is the preparation for Easter. We must face the fact, however, that many of our people do not observe Lent in any constructive way. Some intensive preparation becomes necessary if the Easter festival is to be kept as a personal victory of life over some deadly condition of heart or mind.

For years, our parish has had a special service of preparation on the evening of Maundy-Thursday. For two weeks previous to the service it is announced, and special emphasis is laid upon the fact that every communicant of the parish is expected to be present. This notice is emphasized in the meetings of organizations and the special Easter letter drives home to the people the importance of the preparation for the Holy Communion on Easter Day.

As a result we have had congregations that filled the Church. The service is announced for 7:30 but for ten minutes previous to that hour, as the congregation is assembling, we sing familiar hymns, with possibly one collect between them. Hymns 359, 357 and 345 are suitable. We have the choir in the congregation.

The service itself has been authorized by the Bishop of the Diocese. It is a rehearsal of the great and fundamental obligations of the Christian life. It is a review of the covenants and requirements, presenting the basic responsibilities. It brings to mind the primary Christian exercises. It refreshes the memory, and drives home the structural strengths of our religious life. Beginning with the statement of the Faith, in the Apostles Creed, it presents, after the Lord's Prayer, the Covenant of Baptism, in which the questions are again asked, and the answers reaffirmed. Then follows the Confirmation Covenant. The entire service is given below and you may follow its progressive presentation of the spiritual upbuilding of the life.

After each of the Ten Commandments, I have been accustomed to have a self examination on the commandment, presented in three of four short questions. For example, "Have I placed material things above God?" "Do I value the pleasures of life more than its duties?"

The address is very short and is intended to emphasize and make clear man's absolute dependence upon God. "The love of God" and "The patience of God" are often the themes of these addresses, followed by some advice as to further preparation.

I venture to give here the service in its entirety. It occupies less than an hour if the address is short.. This service is printed and in the hands of the people.

THE CHURCH'S MISSION

There were many Churchmen among the founders of the American Colonization Society and prominent in government at the time of its formation, and so it is not surprising to find both clergymen and laymen of the Church among the Society's and Government's agents sent out with the first and second parties of colonists.. But however missionary-hearted these may have been, it was as agents and not as missionaries that they went; for it was not till 1820 that our infant missionary society was born, and not till 1822 that Ephraim Bacon, one of the Government's agents, returned from Africa and begged that he might be sent back by the Church as her first missionary. Some difficulty with the Colonization Society prevented this. Jacob Osson, of New Haven, the next to offer, died just as he was prepared to sail; for years the Missionary Society called earnestly for men to enter this waiting field.

Meantime Churchmen, reared themselves by Church families in the South or trained by the Mother Church in her West Indian colonies, began to make their appeal. At Monrovia they established what they called "St. James' Church, to be governed by the laws of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America"; they elected wardens and Vestry; their lay reader, Mr. James M. Thompson, acted as their clerk, and sent their call for help to the Church in America.

Mr. Thompson was a native of Demerara, at that time a young man of twenty-seven, and secretary to the colonial agent at Cape Palmas. He became the first missionary worker in our mission, supported by the funds of the Society, and for years he and his wife taught in our first mission school.

Thus we have, when 1836 opened, a parish at Monrovia, with Church, wardens and vestry and no Rector; a school at Cape Palmas, with school master and lay reader combined. And the Liberian Colony fifteen years old. What has been the story of our mission in these eighty years?

In 1836 went out the first of that honorable company, never many more than two or three, sometimes only the one, whom not the lure of the mystic, unknown depths of interior Africa, but the sore helplessness and need of a new, untried community, set round with strong and unsympathetic neighbors and daily thrown with debased and heathen tribes called to their task. It was love prompted their going, love that made them gather all Liberia—colonists and natives both—within their hearts, love that founded a Mission of which Professor Starr wrote in 1913: "If the tiny black Republic is to hold its own, if it is to remain a nation among nations, if it is to lead the way to Africa's redemption, there must be a mutual realization by Liberians and natives of their common interest, and a hearty co-operation. The burden is too heavy for the Liberian alone. In Bishop Ferguson's work there is the nearest approach to tolerance, union, brotherhood and mutual helpfulness seen during my expedition."

Bishop Ferguson was born in South Carolina, but sixty-eight of his seventy-five years were lived in Africa, so that he grew to manhood in schools where the influence of our first missionaries lingered strong.

Savage from Connecticut led the way, arriving at Cape Palmas on Christmas Day of 1836. His Virginia classmates—Payne and Minor—followed in 1837—July fourth being the day of their arrival. And so, as at many another time, was the old Seminary of Alexandria honored by this triumvirate.

These men settled among the colonists, but to them, and to men and women who came after, the bush would call; and in their homes in town, on journeys by tangled paths and through many a swamp, on visits in native settlements, they were the students of geographical and physical conditions of the country, well acquainted with its resources for food and material supplies, learned in the tongues, the customs, the superstitions of the natives, the skill and astuteness of their wisest leaders, the chicanery and cheap deceits of their devil doctors and necromancers, their attitude towards justice, their slavery to fear. And, together with this, they neighbored with colonists and Liberians, whose children were trained with natives, in their schools. Together they advanced—Liberian and native—till now two-thirds of our communicants are native Africans, the other third Americo-Liberians. Places of honor and responsibility in the Republic have fallen again and again to men our Mission has trained, and if among these have been upright and honorable leaders and helpers of all the people of Liberia, surely those must rejoice to whose royal hearts it would never have seemed too much to die so that one African be brought to Christ.

The record of early days is the story of comings and goings—new recruits dying within a month of landing; others invalided home after a brief year or two of service; some stricken down again and again; to return with undaunted ardor to their task, leaving the comparative comforts of colonial life for a new station in the bush; thinking no difficulty, no danger too great, if the Mission might go on.

Their names are few—not so many in eighty years as many a Diocese may number in its clergy roll today. They have come and gone and served under four Bishops—Payne who set their traditions and was given twenty years to lead them; Auer, trained so wonderfully at Basle, and granted only six brief weeks as Bishop; Penick who opened up Cape Mount, and Ferguson, the product of the Mission, who went in and out, beloved and honored among his people, for thirty years.

And now for eighteen months these people have been waiting to see what their Mother Church here in these United States will do with them. There are eleven Liberian and nine native priests, there were 2400 communicants when Bishop Ferguson made his last report—a larger number than in Shanghai, or Hankow, or Anking, in Kyoto, or Brazil. We wait for Bishop Lloyd to tell us of what sort they are. Are we to leave them to themselves? Are we to help them better than in the past? Our visiting Bishop will have heard many tales, and will have observed many scenes, he will have listened to many an appeal, he will come back to many advisers who may still think, though they never visited Liberia, that they ought to know. But there is one little company I pray we all may heed—how could we bear to dissappoint their hope?—again a triumvirate—Margaretta Ridgely from Maryland, Emily Seaman from New York, Sarah Conway from Pennsylvania—who at Cape Mount today still choose to offer the service of their daily lives, and, if need be, life itself, for Africa.

What it is to find God or to be found of God every devout man knows, but the secret cannot be told. We feel His touch, and we know that the unseen hand can be only His. There is a power upon us, and we need no visible sign or symbol to assure us that it is the power of the eternal. A light shines—we know that it is Divine.—R. W. Dale.

Evidence of a Deepening Spiritual Life

The Rev. Dr. James E. Freeman, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, Minn., during a recent week had an opportunity to see, over a somewhat extended field, evidences of the quickening and deepening of the spiritual life of the people, and he gives, through the columns of his Parish paper, some of his impressions.

His words are full of significence and give food for thought and meditation for Churchmen as we draw near the close of another Lenten Season that has given so many evidences of a richer spiritual life in so many of our Parishes throughout the land.

Dr. Freeman says:

"In Chicago, at the great noonday meetings held in the Majestic Theatre, in the face of inclement weather, there were great throngs, the men constituting a considerable majority. The spiritual fervor and deep religious enthusiasm disclosed were greater than anything we have hitherto known in meetings of this character. It was our privilege to come into personal touch with many of the men and women attending these meetings, and the demonstration of a deepening spiritual life, coupled with a greater determination to make the Kingdom of God more manifestly real, were more markedly evident than anything we have ever known or experienced.

"In Kansas City, we addressed the great Laymen's Missionary meeting that had registered six thousand delegates. Here were gathered the active workers of the various Churches for the consideration of the large theme, 'The Extension of the Kingdom of God Throughout the World'. It was a convention characterized by splendid sanity and a spirit of real Christian fellowship. At the morning session on Friday, as early as 10:30, there had gathered approximately five thousand men and women, the men predominating. Our contact with the leaders of the movement, as well as with many of the delegates, led us to the conviction that here again was a manifestation of the new awakening that is characterizing the present hour, and an awakening, be it said, that must necessarily spell out the larger mobilization of the religious forces of America.

"On Washington's Birthday afternoon we addressed the men at Fort Leavenworth, and, notwithstanding the fact that it was a holiday for the entire camp,, there was a very considerable attendance of several hundred. We took for our theme, 'The New Americanism', seeking to interpret those qualities or characteristics that are today conspicuous in our corporate life, and that in a very real way distinguish this period from others that have gone before. The thing that most profoundly impressed us about the character and outlook of the men was the response given to the statement that the present period marked the 'rebirth of the nation's soul'. No appeal, however lofty or exalted, was too high for their new vision. Nothing that we said concerning the material development of the nation or its remarkable mobilization of resources and men, made so large an appeal or met with so generous and enthusiastic response as our reference to the spiritual idealism of the conflict in which this country is now engaged. It is our judgment that nothing is more needed in the camps over the length and breadth of the land than a just and adequate interpretation of this spiritual idealism. The men are not only ready for it, they are almost in advance of it, they have anticipated it, and while it may not articulate itself in any definite expression, the men themselves are seeking to give it utterance through their unfailing devotion and loyalty to the cause that has enlisted their all.

"The military training camps of this country already are manifesting, as perhaps nothing hitherto has done in the history of this nation, that they are the centers of the highest idealism and the purest patriotism we as a people have ever known. It is because we believe this that we regard these 'soldiers of freedom' as utterly invincible. We do not wish to convey the impression that any extraordinary forms of piety characterize these men, but we do affirm that even a superficial study of the camp life discloses the enlarged and enlarging vision of the men, and their unfailing response to the higher ideals for which this war is being fought.

"On Saturday morning we were privileged to address the clergy and laity in Kansas City, and here again we found a generosity of response that was both hopeful and stimulating. Our observation in speaking to groups of the clergy over the country, leads us to the conviction that many of the differences that have hitherto divided them are rapidly giving place to the larger fellowship and sense of common obligation to the vital concerns of the Kingdom of God.

"Large as was the extent of our week's visitations, we returned to our tasks with fresh enthusiasm and the deepened conviction that already the war is manifesting its influence in the awakening of the spiritual consciousness and in the enriched idealism of the people generally."

Talks on Favorite Hymns

By Miss Alice S. Millard

For many centuries the Anglican Church was too much occupied in its struggles with princes and prelates to take heed of its Lord's command to make disciples of all nations. The reformation in the Sixteenth Century, followed by the Civil War, brought more and more internal troubles, and it was not until the beginning of the Eighteenth Century that English Churchmen began to realize their responsibilities to their brethren in the Colonies, and later still to those in distinctly heathen lands. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, familiarly known as the S. P. G., was established by royal charter in 1701, and gave invaluable aid to the struggling Church in our own country until the Revolution. During this period, Dr. Watts, the father of English hymnody, wrote "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun", which, like "Hail to the Lord's Anointed", is a paraphrase of the 72nd Psalm. It is interesting to read the Psalm and compare it with these hymns, the second of which was written by James Montgomery, who was the author of many others, including "Forever With the Lord".

The Missionary hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains", was written, as we all know, by Reginald Heber, Bishop of Calcutta, who, by the way, is the author of the fine Epiphany hymn, "Brightest and Best of the Sons of the Morning". Both of these possess the charm of that vivid word-painting, which has been alluded to before in these talks.

The story of the composition of the great Missionary hymn is interesting. Heber was visiting at the home of his father-in-law, the Dean of St. Asaph, on the eve of Whitsunday, 1819. It so happened that a royal letter had been issued calling for offerings for the S. P. G. in all Churches in the land on that particular day. On Saturday evening he was asked by the Dean to prepare some verses to be sung at the Missionary service to be held next morning. The poet sat down at the window of the old Vicarage and in a short time produced the hymn, excepting the last verse. The Dean was delighted, but Heber said, "No, it is not complete", and in a short time added the lines, "Waft, waft, ye winds, His story", when the Dean hurried the manuscript off to the printer, feeling that the climax had been reached, and more would spoil the effect. This original manuscript was shown at the Great Exhibition held in London in 1851. The hymn quickly crossed the Atlantic, and its words are still literally ringing from "pole to pole".

"Fling Out the Banner" and "O Sion Haste", which are now almost as widely used as the older hymns, and strike a deeper note of personal responsibility, were written, respectively, by Bishop Doane and Mary J. Thomas.

"The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are His." This is the seal, the guaranty of their safety and security. Knowing them and having, as the accompaniment of that knowledge, all power in heaven and on earth, He will take care of them.—Exchange.

SYMPATHY FOR CHRIST

That I may know Him and have fellowship in His sufferings, was the prayer of the great Apostle. He knew what he asked. He knew that companionship in suffering is the true way to a perfect knowledge and understanding of the sufferer. So he sought to know Christ.

FOUR LECTURES ON RELIGION IN WAR-TIME

A Series of Papers by the Rt. Rev. P. M. Rhinelander, D. D., Bishop of Pennsylvania

THE LORD OF HOSTS VS. THE WAR-GOD

There is one only God Who, since He is really God, works out unfailingly His Will for men in history, which Will, as revealed in Jesus Christ, is set unswervingly on righteousness, and wholly moved by love.

Devil's Work

IV.

The Weapons of Faith, in which it trusts for victory.

Relying above all, and all in all, on Christ, Faith holds fast to God, as allowing evil for a high and holy purpose; as wonderfully circumventing it even while He allows it; as finally willing to destroy it utterly, and to be Himself all and in all.

The case then stands thus:

(1) There is no evil save in evil wills; (2) some wills certainly are evil and all may be; (3) There is no apparent limit which we can set to evil.

What is there then to say in answer? Are faith's foundations holding out against this strain, or have they begun to crack and crumble? Our idea and ideal of God, our need for Him, is it so deep, so strong, so much part of our being, that we still dare to cling to it and challenge the whole world and Hell itself to prove it false? And Christ's own witness, it is very clear and unmistakable; it is very beautiful and lovely, but will it really hold? After all, that is the main point. Our faith in God will stand or fall as we are prepared or not prepared to take Christ as the all-sufficient witness. No faith in God in these days can be certainly secure unless it is prepared to trust Christ against all comers.

It should at least encourage us to find how fully and fearlessly Christ faced the fact of evil. Some people have the extraordinary notion that Christ was an easy-going and indulgent Person, that He dealt gently with sin, and did not take evil very seriously; that He assumed a mild and non-resisting attitude towards wickedness, driving it off with a kind word, healing its deadly wounds with a few easy sympathetic phrases. But this surely is idle talk. No one ever probed so deep into the heart of evil as did He. No one has ever laid so pitilessly bare the malignant malady of sin. No one has ever felt its curse so keenly, or wept over its tragedy so bitterly. Why, the whole Gospel is just the story of God's Champion riding to His death in battle against His and His children's enemy. Of course, love was the motive, and great love was needed. The point is that God's love was great enough, that He so loved the world that He went forth to attack evil in its stronghold and died in doing it, being able to win the perfect victory only through death. If the Bible is the record on one side of the holiness and love of God, it is equally the record on the other side of the sin and wickedness of men. It is utterly unique in human literature as an exposition of the reality and malignity of evil. Nothing is covered up; nothing explained away. David commits adultery; Peter perjures himself in cowardly fear; Judas, the chosen of the Lord, betrays Him; Paul is a persecutor All the facts are there. It is not upon a painted stage, and in the midst of flowers, that Christ walked. No, He walks and lives in our world just as it is; He dwells with us as we are. Every obstacle and objection which blocks our faith, He fully recognized. He did more than recognize them, He actually felt and faced them. In His own human nature as perfectly and perfect man, He fought out the good fight of faith. The injustice and disorder and cruelty and lust and hate which mark the world, the untrammeled liberty of evil, seemingly turned loose to work its will:—He not only saw and noted it, He felt it all. He stood up alone against it all, and the supreme crisis of His struggle came at the very end, at the very moment of His death: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" In view of that cry on the lips of the Redeemer, let no one dare to say that evil was not real to Him; more real to Him, though He kept Himself utterly untouched by it, than to anyone who has ever drawn breath upon the earth.

Now this gives a tremendous meaning to all Christ has to say. Here is no dainty-fingered, rose-crowned figure, smiling and care-free, blinking all inconvenient facts, giving out a shallow optimism from a safe distance behind the lines of real experience. Here, rather, is One Who has trodden the winepress alone and has not failed; a Victor, yes, a lonely Victor, in the tremendous conflict. He speaks of what He knows, He calls us to follow where He leads; every syllable He utters has been tried in the furnace of His own experience, and therefore Christian faith in God can lean on Christ as on a rock. The way of faith may be immensely hard and toilsome, but we are not alone in it. He is there with us.

Bracing ourselves then with a new confidence in Christ, and fairly fronting the old Enemy—His enemy and ours—can we find any light upon the way? Any reassuring hints? Yes, here again there are three important things to say, often said, yet never said too often:

First: even with evil in His world, God is still God if He allows it for some high purpose, to give up which would be a greater tragedy than even evil. That would reassure us if it were true, but is it true? Is it even thinkable? Well, let us consider. It certainly is possible to pay too dearly for a benefit. We may secure it, but in securing it we may be losing everything that makes it precious,—even our ability to use it and rejoice in it.

A carpenter, for instance, using his tools, might cut his finger. He can avoid doing it again by the simple method of putting up his tools and giving up his carpentering; only he might be giving up at the same time his livelihood. Food, wrongly eaten, will make us very ill. We can avoid that special form of sickness in the future by not eating; but that would be dodging indigestion by committing suicide.

Does that help us at all with our spiritual problem? Remember evil is in the will. Evil enters our lives when, and only when, we bid it enter. If we bid it come, it waits for no second invitation. A whispered word of friendly greeting; the door once opened for it just a little crack, and at once it comes in as our guest. At once it is at home with us. To destroy evil, then, would mean to destroy will: to take from us the power of inviting it. Block up the door that lets it in, silence the voice that calls it, and you will indeed be quit of evil. But the price you have paid will be your very selfhood, your very soul. Stars are free from evil; so are flowers and trees and tides. Nothing without a will can possibly do wrong. But nothing without a will can possibly be human. If evil were made in this world impossible for us, we should not be men and women: we should no longer bear God's image; we should no longer be His children. For will is the soul and center of personality,—both divine and human.

Look at it also from the point of view of love. Love means much more than giving good things to the loved one. Love wants love returned. Love is communion. You cannot have love in your life if you have no one loving you. I suppose that is the deepest meaning of the doctrine of the Trinity. If God is really Love, if that is His Name forever, He must always be both loving and beloved. Within the very Godhead there must be love and the return of love. So with God's love for us, His children: it is really centered on, and directed to, our capacity for loving Him, not onr mere readiness to receive His gift. The reason why He loves us so wonderfully and unsparingly is because He has given us the gift of loving Him. This is His special gift to us, His greatest gift of all, the greatest gift God has. We say rightly that one human soul is worth more to God than the whole universe. God made us so that we might love Him for His love. That makes us infinitely precious in His sight. Shall He now take back His gift—deprive us of the possibility of loving Him? That is precisely what would be involved if God were to make evil impossible for us. We could no longer love Him. We should have no will to love Him with. And therefore God endures in His fair universe the shame and horror of evil wills among His children, lest He be bereaved of all His children, lest He be made childless!

Of course, all I have said is quite unworthy of this mighty mystery. But there is a great light here shining on the path, and Christ Himself is holding it to guide us. For this is His Gospel. God, for a season, allows evil for a high and holy purpose; for a purpose worthy of His perfect love.

But there is something more. God even now is not passively allowing evil to have its way. He is not even now holding His power in abeyance. No, He allows evil for a season, and yet He conquers it and circumvents it, even while He allows it. God with evil to have its way. He is not even has His way; nay, more than that, God makes evil itself serve His blessed purposes. Does that not make Him more than ever God?

Some of the early fathers of the Church were very bold and daring when dealing with this subject. They loved to dwell on it. They exulted in it. They almost made merry over the way in which God could mock, and baffle, and outwit the devil. The devil, they pointed out, thought he was bringing God's only Son to uttermost defeat, when through his agents he had nailed Him to the cross, while as a matter of fact, it was no defeat at all. It was God's victory—His chosen way of rescuing His children out of Satan's clutches.

This also gives us a real clue, which we can follow to our great encouragement and comfort. For the very miracle of the Gospel is its power to bring light out of darkness, joy out of sorrow, strength out of weakness, power out of pain, riches out of poverty, victory out of defeat.

Look at this War. Quite clearly it is "devil's work." Those wonderful cartoons of the famous Dutch artist, which represent the devil as chuckling over the battlefields, and the awful heaps of dead are perfectly convincing. And yet the devil is surely being beaten. He is losing his grip; his slaves are breaking away from him. He brought on this War, and yet the War, however it may go, is surely going against him. Faith, chivarly, generosity, heroism, brotherhood, sacrifice, these are all flowers of God's garden, and they are growing out of the soil of war.

You would say, would you not, that if there is any place on earth where evil is more rampant, and the devil most busily and triumphantly at work, that place is Northern France. But it is not really so. The devil doubtless thinks it is; but we Christians know much better. God is there to circumvent him, and defeat him, and God is doing it.

God then allows evil for His own high and lofty purpose. Yet even in allowing it He circumvents and conquers it, while, at the end, in His good time, He will make an end of it forever. Now, of course, that is pure faith. It is a vision in the future, a goal, as yet, perhaps, far off. It is all absolutely in God's hands and out of ours. We must take it quite on trust. It is pure faith, and yet pure faith is not faith become pure fancy, but faith become purely itself, faith at its best and strongest.

For faith lives in the future. It is always going on from strength to strength. It is always seeing more clearly and more accurately. Each step taken faithfully when days are dark, and the enemy comes on so fast, each true blow dealt, each victory achieved, gives faith more confidence, lessens the risk of error, turns belief into sure knowledge. "I know Whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him against that day." There is the accurate account of the sure progress of true faith, which beginning as an experiment, ends in an experience. So trust in the final victory becomes not a trembling hope, but the greatest certainty of all. Its certainty is built up as we go on. Our eyes begin to see the King in His Beauty; to behold the land that is very far off. Here is the patience of the saints, here is the key of life, the crown of hope, the home of love. His servants shall indeed serve Him and He shall be all in all.

SYMPATHY FOR CHRIST

Man has a sympathetic nature. There is tenderness in the human heart. There is that greatest thing on earth—love. Jesus Christ asks us to open these tender, sympathetic, loving hearts to Him—This is religion of the best kind.

"That I may have fellowship in His sufferings"

Reality in Religion

The primary call of Lent is a call to reality in religion. The defect of much of the religion of the present day is its lack of vital reality. The ever-present danger is that it should become conventional. In the very nature of things, prayer and worship, which are essential elements of religion, tend to become merely formal acts. It is the easiest thing in the world to have the form of godliness without its power—to make religion a theory and not a life. So with many men prayer has degenerated into saying prayers; worship, into going to Church; and both alike are mechanical. It needs no particular insight to see that the paramount cry of today is for reality. Our patriotism must be real; our sacrifice must be real; our service must be real. Men will no longer tolerate unreality. Mistakes may be freely forgiven, but not conventional service and sacrifice.

Religion may lack many things, but it must be real. It must be a power touching and ennobling life in all its manifold aspects. The unpardonable sin in religion is unreality. This is one of the large lessons of the world war. Conventional religion may have sufficed for conventional times, but the war has taught us that conventional religion is worse than useless in times like these. Face to face with the supreme test of strength, it has broken down under the strain. Men have tried it and found it wanting. It does not ring true.

The literature of the war bears abundant witness to the hunger of the man at the front for real religion. He is face to face with naked life. The trenches will not tolerate pretense. He knows little of nice theological definition; he is suspicious about dogma; he has no patience with ecclesiastical controversy, but he clings passionately and tenaciously to religious realities. Sin is not a theory, but a stern fact. He has no theory about prayer, but he prays as he never did before. In the death of every comrade he sees an atonement and a redemption. He has rediscovered God as the Alpha and Omega. And the God he has found is not an abstraction throned above the stars, but a living reality in the lives of hard-pressed men—a God who is closer than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet. Religion is intensely real to the fighting man.

There now remains the hard task of the long advance to victory. The supreme need is strength to maintain the steady gait. And Lent points to the source of that strength. For centuries men have found in its discipline the renewal they craved; its multiplied services have made worship more vital; prayer has become real. The more diligently men walk in this old and tried path, the more will the power outside themselves make for strength and righteousness.

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE SPRING BEAUTY

(From an Indian Legend)

An old, old Indian was sitting in his Lodge by the side of a frozen Stream. It was the end of Winter, and his fire was almost out. This Indian, I say, was very old. His hair was as white as the snow outside his Lodge. Day after day he sat there alone and heard nothing but the rushing of the Wind as it blew up and down upon the Earth.

One day, as his fire was about to go out entirely, a handsome young man came into his Wigwam. His cheeks were red and his eyes were bright, and a smile was upon his lips. He walked with a light, quick step. On his head was a wreath of sweet Grass, and he carried a bunch of Flowers in his hand.

"Ah, my son," said the old Indian, "I am happy to see you. Come in. Tell me what you have done, and of the strange lands you have seen. Let us pass the night together. I will tell you of the great deeds I have done, and also of what I can do."

Then he drew from his sack a strange looking pipe, and having filled it with tobacco leaves, gave it to his guest. Then they began to speak. "I blow my breath, and the Streams stand still," said the Old Man. "The Waters become stiff and hard as Stone."

"I breathe," said the Young Man, "and flowers spring up all over the Plains."

"I shake my locks," replied the Old Man, "and the Snow covers the Land, the Leaves fall from the Trees and my breath blows them away; the Birds fly away to a distant Land; the Animals hide themselves from my breath, and the very Ground becomes hard as Flint."

"I shake my curls," said the Young Man, "and warm showers of soft Rain fall upon the Earth, like the eyes of Children shining with delight. My Voice calls back the Birds; my warm breath unlocks the Streams; Music fills the Groves where I walk, and all Nature smiles."

At length the Sun began to rise, and a gentle warmtb came over the place. The Old Man became silent. The Robin and the Bluebird began to sing on the top of the Lodge. The Stream began to murmur by the door, and the sweet odor of growing Plants and Flowers came softly on the Breeze. It was Dawn, and the Old Man could be plainly seen. He looked as though he were made of Ice. Streams began to flow from his Eyes. Before long he melted away. Nothing was left on the place of his Lodge but a small white Flower with a pink border. This is always seen in the Northland when Winter and Snow go away, and Spring governs the Land. It is this Flower we call our Spring Beauty.

THE LITTLE SNOW-STARS

Anna H. Moore Funnell

All thick, and white, and clean it lies,
And still keeps falling from the skies.

The apple tree branches are covered with white,
The evergreens are a wonderful sight.

Each fence post wears a worsted toque,
Like the elves in my Christmas story book.

I can see a million stars in the sky,
When in my snowy bed I lie.

And a million wonderful stars I see
In the feathery snow that falls on me.

God made the yellow stars of the night,
And the little snow-stars, so pure and white.

All the wonderful things in the world, I know,
He made because He loves us so.

Churches of Christ Called to Prayer

The national officers of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America have issued an appeal to the churches of the Council to observe an "Easter Week of Prayer," beginning on Palm Sunday and ending Easter Day. "In a day when the world is tossed as a boat in the sea, it becomes us to seek God, Who measures the waters in the hollow of His hand. Called to serve our own generation, our highest service should begin in lowliest bowing before Almighty God our Father. Since no Easter, like that we now approach, ever dawned upon the world, it is manifestly wise that in a new purpose we give the week preceeding to a fellowship of Prayer and Intercession. Seeking Him Whose unabated love keeps us from being consumed, let us prepare our hearts as guest chambers made ready for the Lord. In united prayer we shall know each other better. In drawing near to Christ we shall draw nearer to each other the whole world around. In praying for one another the hurt of our own heart may be healed."

Send Only the Best Men in the Church

Captain Sanborn, who has been thrilling the hearts of thousands of his Christian countrymen, as he has faced them from pulpit and platform in the Middle West, relating his religious experience as a result of service at the front in France, has issued the following stirring appeal, in an open letter to the American Church, which should arouse the Bishops, clergy and laity, to a favorable and immediate response to his suggestions:

Third Officers' Training Camp,
Leon, Texas.

An Open Letter to the Church:

During the past two months I have had in observation men who have been sent here to be made into officers. The principal quality that we are able to impart is leadership. I desire to make a statement about the function of the Church in enabling us to impart this quality.

America is mobilizing her whole self for this war. Briefly, her reason for fighting is to make the world safe for Democracy. Democracy means the will of the people. The Church's ideal is that the will of the people should be the Will of God. Therefore this war is not only a war for the freedom of humanity but also for a condition that permits of the freedom of Christ's purpose on this earth.

In France I found men worshipping a God that was new to me. That is, a God who was shorn of much of the human adornment that we endeavor to dress Him in in America. I was conscious of the fact that at last I was face to face with the actual Deity making Himself known to mankind in the midst of their travail.

In America we are feeling the throb of the hearts of those men who have found God "out there." God is making Himself manifest and we as a Church are unconsciously understanding the small voice of His Holy Spirit. He is using His Church to proclaim Himself.

As we read of the great sacrifices taking place in the "Old Country;" as we see the body being given up that the Spirit may live, we must recognize these indices of Him and profit by them in the same sense that our Government is profiting by the material mistakes of the Allies.

Throughout America today we are producing officers. These men come from all walks of life. Their lives have been as diversified as the rivers that flow through our land. Yet that new national consciousness is knocking at the door of their souls. They, too, are experiencing that subtle presentation.

The Church can come to these men; show them Christ as He really is and crystallize that consciousness into a zealous purpose.

These men will go out to man our new regiments. In my training camp alone we have four thousand men. Assuming that sixty per cent. will graduate and become leaders of platoons of sixty men you can see their effectiveness. Their influence will extend to one hundred and forty-four thousand men.

Two months are nearly gone. In another month the men will go out. They will have military science, tactics, discipline and varying personality but they will lack the great essential to leadership. Even if you discount the saving of their souls, I am convinced that spiritual leadership is an essential to military effectiveness—In THIS war.

Oh—Church of America—I beg you to send big, BIG men as spiritual advisors to our training camps for officers. Pay out more money than you have for Missions—your gain for God is greater! The men of the Camps are receptive, they want Him, if some one will only show a MANLY way to Him.

I pray that a great band of officers can go to France from these camps, consecrated to His cause. The Spirit of our Army would then be the New spirit. The God of Battles would become the God of reality. Leadership would partake of a new courage. Courage would be endued with Power. And in that leadership, courage and power, the privates of our Army would recognize the Holy Spirit.

I have SEEN it— and I know.

Our War Department is recognizing these facts; the way is easier than ever before. Two months ago I said that reconstruction could only take place in France. Today I am certain that it can take place here.

Do it now—next month. Open a campaign to recruit these embryo officers as a great Fraternity working in His name. Send only the best men in the Church. If you wait you will be late.

These are only suggestions for:

I am certain that Christ is proving Himself before the world. He is preparing the way in the hearts of the world. Out of this war will come the inevitable readjustment according to His plan and there is nothing that can stand in His way. Our men will be forced to feel His Presence.

Keep the Sabbath Day Holy

Mrs. George Waller

"A Sabbath well spent brings a week of content
And health for the toils of the morrow,
But a Sabbath profaned, whatsoe'er may be gained,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow."

When God placed man upon the earth He gave him two laws—the law of the Sabbath and the law of the Tithe. There is no record in Holy Writ of these primal laws ever having been repealed.

Later, when the Jewish nation was formed, and laws were given them, these two laws were proven to antedate their time by Moses' words, "Remember—the seventh day IS the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." The tithe IS the Lord's."

Thus from the beginning God sanctified to Himself one-seventh of man's time, and one-tenth of his income.

When our Lord Jesus Christ finished the work of creation He sanctified the seventh day. When He took upon Him our nature He declared Himself "Lord of the Sabbath day," and when He finished the work of redemption and on the first day of the week rose triumphant from the grave, bringing with Him "the keys of death and hell," He sanctified the first day.

The seventh day commemorates the completion of the work of creation. The first day commemorates the completion of the work of redemption. It was still the one-seventh of man's time which belongs to God. It was still " The LORD'S day." No change was made in its sanctity. Some have thought that our Lord did make such a change, but the New Testament gives no record of it. His miracles of healing performed on the Sabbath, and which the Pharisees condemned, He proved, from their own Scriptures, to be in strict accord with the spirit of the law, and, reproving them for their blind enforcement of the letter only, said: "Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days."

There are few passages of Scripture that meet more flagrant misconstruction than our Lod'sr words: "The Sabbath was made for man."

When a man invents an intricate machine he knows what that machine needs to keep it in good running order. When God made man He knew what man needed to keep him physically and spiritually fit; and that need was met by the institution of the Sabbath. Man's physical nature needs periodical rest, so he was commanded on every seventh day to abstain from all toil, all temporal pursuits of every kind, and rest. Man's spiritual nature needs building up and strengthening, so he was told to keep the seventh day holy, to spend it in the worship of God, in quiet communion with Him and in the study of His law.

St. John was "in the spirit on the Lord's day" when our Lord gave him His last message to His Church, and the wondrous vision recorded in the Book of Revelation.

In reading Old Testament history we find one of the strongest proofs of allegiance to God was the faithful observance of the Sabbath. And one of the charges most frequently brought against Israel was "Ye have profaned My Sabbaths."

Many wars and distresses, including the seventy years' captivity, came upon them in direct punishment for Sabbath-breaking. St. Paul says these things happened to them "for our example and admonition."

Sixty or seventy years ago the English Church was stirred to vigorous protest against the desecration of the Sabbath on the continent of Europe by the license given to all kinds of public amusements. The protest was unheeded; and today the fire of God's wrath is burning in Europe. America has been seeking more and more to turn the Lord's day into a day of worldly pleasure. Already we feel the heat from the fire that is burning in Europe, as the flower of American young manhood goes over into the trenches.

Let us remember that our God is an unchanging God, and His laws are unchangeable; and that He does not allow worldly pleasure on His holy day. He says, "If ye will not hearken unto Me to hallow the Sabbath day, then will I kindle a fire." (Jer. 17-27.) But on the other hand He promises, "If thou turn away from doing thy pleasure on My holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, and shalt honor Him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words, then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord, and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." (Isa. 58, 13-14.)

"Blessed is the man that keepeth the Sabbath." (Isa. 56, 2.)

Write, Smile! and Keep on Smiling!

Men who have spent several months in the various cantonments will be very frank in telling you that among the greatest work being done in the camps today is that accomplished through the writing of letters, asserts Mr. Roger Daniels, of the Army and Navy Department, B. S. A.

Of course, the letter can not be compared to the personal touch of a Christian worker, but where an earnest worker may be able to see and give a kindly word of cheer to several men in his daily journey through the camp the letters come and go by thousands.

In many instances the letter the man writes home from camp will divulge but litle of his real life. He says he has a clean bill of health, is drilling hard, it is muddy or not muddy, warm or cold, how is everybody home—a few terse phrases and the so-called soldier letter comes to its end.

But despite its brevity that letter has brought with it a touch of home and the man is thinking of home as he sits on the side of his bunk or in one of the "Y" shacks writing it. And very soon after he has dropped his letter into the mail box he will begin wondering when he will receive a reply.

So don't delay your letters to your men in the camps. And when you write, smile.

There is a great deal of psychology about those letters to those men in the camps.

Your boy might have been bluer than he had been for days when your letter was handed to him. Immediately his face brightened. Here was news from home!

Now when he broke the seal and opened the letter and began to read, did the joy and the smile continue? Did he forget all about that blue spell which had been troubling him? If he didn't it was because you didn't smile when you wrote your letter. Just think of it that way and the next time you write, SMILE! and keep on SMILING! Your lot isn't one-half so hard as his. Remember that.

Saint Matthias

Ascended unto God's right hand,
Jesus had left the Apostles' band;
And, watching thus their Lord depart,
Both joy and sorrow touched each heart.

Victor, indeed, He was that day,
Yet Victory took their Lord away;
So, and 'tis often so again,
Their cup of joy was two-thirds pain.
"Brethren, attend!" 'tis Peter's word,
"It is God's hand hath written the scroll.

'Twas ordered a man should sell man's
Lord.
Passed is the past from our control."

"Then, let us choose another now,
And Judas' office let him take;
His zeal shall reparation make
For traitor Judas' broken vow."

They gave forth lots, and lo! the choice
Upon one named Matthias fell;
Approvingly spake every voice,
For each one knew and loved him well.

And that which Simon Peter said,
In him was all in all proved true.
His brave zeal reparation made
For him who was to his Lord untrue.

* * * *

Time's tide rolls on; dear Jesus, now
Not all who pledge Thee keep the vow.
Still, for the purse of praise or gain,
Men sell the Truth bought with Thy pain.

Falsehood and sin go hand in hand,
Enfeebling Faith throughout our land.
Thy ministers escape not free,
Their vision fails, they fall from Thee.

Speak, ye brave Peters! even so,
On from her past, Christ's Church must go!

Yea, even when apostates sell their
Lord,
God shall o'errule this ill for good.

Shall one fall out? A hundred come
Quickly, to fill each Judas' room.
Our new Matthiases we see
Nn pastors faithful unto Thee!

Bring Back a Lost Truth
SYMPATHY FOR CHRIST

Out from Gethsemane's shades there comes a voice to each human soul speaking in tender, pathetic tones: "This cup, this bitter cup, I drank for thee. What wilt thou do for me?"

Amid the insults and mockery of the judgment hall that voice is heard again: "This have I borne for thee; what wilt thou bear for me?"

From the cross itself there comes that voice still once more—a voice audible in every conscience, a voice neither you nor I can ever stifle, a voice we all do well to listen to and cherish as the voice of an infinite love: "This have I suffered for thee; what wilt thou suffer for me?"

What shall we answer? It is all a question of sympathy.

"That I may have fellowship in His sufferings"

Dr. Geer's Thirtieth Anniversary

The chief matter of Church interest in New York, next to the visit of the Archbishop of York, was the celebration on March 3rd of the thirtieth anniversary of the Rev. Dr. William Montague Geer's vicarship of St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Parish. He is an M. A. of Columbia University, 1872, and a graduate of the General Seminary, 1878. Except for a year at North Adams, Mass., his whole ministry has been in New York State, the last thirty years as Vicar of the most interesting historical monument of old New York, the Church where President Washington and Governor Clinton worshipped. All through he has been dignified, churchly and helpful, and has shown a due appreciation of his great responsibility as custodian of a national ecclestiastical edifice, with the ability to keep the public properly aware of its importance. Besides this, he inaugurated much reasonable institutional work, including among other things, lunches for girls and more recently for soldiers, and free French classes. He was the first American clergyman to establish an early celebration of the Holy Communion for newspaper men at 2:30 a. m., a custom since adopted by the Roman Catholic Church. The doctor announced his intention of retiring from active ministry at an early date.

The Pentateuch shows the need of a priest; the historical books, the need of a king; and the poetical and prophetical books, the need of a prophet.—W. H. G. Thomas.

The Vitality of Lent

The vitality of Lent is amazing. Centuries old, it has survived. Other excellent religious observances have passed into oblivion. Lent endures. Not only so, but its observance widens year by year. This is notably true in New York. Not only are the Sunday congregations in the various Churches appreciably larger, but the Churches are crowded for noonday services. The financial district goes to Church in Lent. Day by day old Trinity is crowded to the doors; the same is true of St. Paul's Chapel. The vast and eager crowd of worshipers at St. Peter's, Barclay Street, recalls the days when the Florentines flocked to the Cathedral to hear Savonarola's stern denunciations.

The congregations are mainly composed of men. For some impelling reason, they snatch half an hour from crowded days and devote it to worship. Further up town, the shoppers find the lure of the Lent service stronger than the attraction of the store. The so-called fashionable Churches on the avenues are thronged with worshipers. Thoughtless observers are fond of saying that New York is so devoted to pleasure that it cares little for religion. It is a hasty judgment, and, like all hasty judgments, erroneous. New York keeps Lent. Nor is it confined to New York. There is not a large city from the Atlantic to the Pacific without its noonday Lenten service. Great centres like Philadelphia, Cleveland and St. Louis have no Churches large enough to accommodate the crowds, and they boldly hire the largest theatres, and find them none too large. These services are primarily for business and professional men, and they reach their constituency.

Nor is the observance of Lent sectarian. These forty days are not the exclusive heritage of any one Church or group of Churches. That the Roman Catholic and Episcopal Churches should keep Lent is not strange. They have done so for centuries. The old Puritans regarded the observance of ecclesiastical seasons with scant favor, but the modern Puritan has been quick to see the psychological value of Lent. It has a large cumulative force. The Marble Collegiate Church—the mother of the city Churches—announced this year a service at the noon hour for the forty days, and many Methodist and Presbyterian Churches are following the example. And so Lent has not only survived the passage of the years, but it has today a wider and stronger influence than ever.

The fact is significant. This age is intensely practical. It has no time to waste with useless institutions, however venerable they may be. It subjects each one to the pragmatic test of utility and service. If it has any contribution to make to the common weal, a place is found for it. If it makes no such contribution, it is swept aside. Lent has stood the test. It has something worth while to give. In this time of trial, it gives spiritual strength, it sustains the soul. The hard-pressed man finds in its message and discipline something he needs to meet the sacrifices of war. The flippant assertion that the man in the street cares nothing for religion, that he has cast it aside as an outworn garment, is false. The average man is at heart religious. Lent appeals to his religious instinct. It reminds him that there are other worlds than this. Lent survives because it serves.—New York Times.

A Vision

By Archdeacon Wicks

Down by the bank of the great dark stream,
Of life, that flows to the 'morrow,
I come to worship, to pray, to dream,
The vision of God to borrow.

First to borrow the vision to see,
The duty today of the men,
Who grapple in death, it seems to me,
But to stop and grapple again.

Then would I borrow the art to teach,
To a world that is slow to learn,
Of this ruling law that men may reach,
The goal in peace, for which they yearn.

Last I'd borrow the courage to do,
As for me the vision would plan,
That I might be, to another to,
Just a helping hand to a man.

If we cannot find God in your house and mine, upon the roadside or the margin of the sea; in the bursting seed or opening flower; in the day duty or the night musing—I do not think we should discern Him any more on the grass of Eden, or beneath the moonlight of Gethsemane.—J. Martineau.

VOL. II. NO. 65 | HOBART, INDIANA, MARCH 30, 1918 | 3 CENTS PER COPY | $1.00 A YEAR

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK IN CLEVELAND AND PHILADELPHIA

The Archbishop of York, Dr. Lang, visited Cleveland Friday, March 15, and was accorded a welcome amounting to a great demonstration. Prior to his coming, the local papers made frequent allusions to his visit, always in cordial and sympathetic terms, dwelling particularly upon the Archbishop's ministry to the poor and plain people of East London prior to his elevation to York. At noon, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce, for many years the leading commercial and civic organization of Cleveland, he addressed more than 4,000 people in the Hippodrome, the largest playhouse in the city, every seat and all available standing room being taken. He was introduced by Mr. Charles E. Otis, President of the Chamber, and for an hour held with increasing attention and interest his great audience. In magnetic presence, dignity of person, poise, speech and manner, the Archbishop reminded many of his late fellow countryman, Sir Henry Irving, who during his lifetime was a great favorite in America. In the evening, the Archbishop was the guest of the Cleveland Church Club, Mr. Francis R. Morison President, at supper at the Hotel Statler, where he addressed some six hundred men, the entire gallery being occupied with women guests. He was introduced by Bishop Leonard, and spoke as to a great convention of Churchmen, to whom he made a noble and exalted appeal for maintenance of the highest Christian ideals in the present world's great conflict. The Archbishop, with his Chaplain, arrived in Cleveland Friday morning, and was the guest of Bishop Leonard at his home until he left for Chicago in the evening. Following the noonday address, upon invitation of Bishop Leonard, the Archbishop received for an hour, at the Episcopal residence, the clergy and their wives of the city.

THE ARCHBISHOP IN PHILADELPHIA

As we go to press, the Archbishop of York is in Philadelphia. The most careful preparation has been made for the few days he will spend in that city. He reached the city on March 23, and was met by city and state officials.

On Palm Sunday morning the Archbishop will conduct a service in Christ Church, the oldest Episcopal Church in the Diocese, which has been chosen for a great denominational demonstration. It has a seating capacity of only 900, but invitations have been issued for the service. The guests will represent the largest and most prominent patriotic, educational and Church organizations. Delegates from the labor unions will be there, and the services will be made democratic as well as distinguished.

Invitations have been sent to the following, each of which will be given two tickets of admission: Divinity School faculty and students, Deaconesses of the Church, Vestrymen of several of the oldest Episcopal Churches, British Consul and representatives of the allied nations, Gen. Waller and Staff of the United States Marine Corps, Commandant Ray of the Fourth Division, Col. Steele and suite, Governor Brumbaugh, Mayor Smith and the Presidents of Councils, the members of Standing Committees of the Diocese, Church deputies, Church Club, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Episcopal War Commission, Prayer Book Society, Colonial Wars Society, Sons of the Revolution, Society of the Cincinnati, Transatlantic Society, Runnymede Society, Colonial Society, Society of Foreign Wars, Sons of the Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution, Loyal Legion, Sons of St. George, St. Andrew's Society, the Scotch Irish Society, Daughters of 1812, Colonial Dames of America, Daughters of the American Revolution, Daughters of the Empire, Daughters of the Revolution, Emergency Aid, Queen Mary Guild, Navy Auxiliary, Navy League, Society of Fatherless Children of France, Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, Girls' Friendly Society, Episcopal City Mission, University of Pennsylvania, Episcopal educational institutions, local labor unions, and the Judges of the Courts.

On the afternoon of Palm Sunday the largest gathering in connection with the Archbishop's visit will be held. This will be a mass meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House, at which the distinguished Churchman will make an address, which will embody a formal public expression of the purpose of his visit. On Monday morning the Archbishop will meet the Clerical Brotherhood at its usual conference. In the afternoon he will make an address in the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany. The Church authorities also are arranging for a number of public receptions and dinners, in addition to other religious functions.

Considering the present friendly relations between this country and Great Britain, a brilliant welcome to the distinguished prelate is expected. An effort is being made to have some of the demonstrations in his honor representative of every grade in society, to carry out the purpose of his visit—the safeguarding of democracy. While large, exclusive functions will take up a large part of the Archbishop's visit, the crowds will have several opportunities to see him and give him their support in the unique mission which he has undertaken.

THE THIRD LIBERTY LOAN

The Presiding Bishop Writes a Letter

On the eve of the great Liberty Loan drive to begin April 6, Bishop Tuttle wrote, in his own hand-writing, the followinag virile message:

"Fellow Americans:

"All that we are in good will and strong nerve, and all that we have of spare means, should be at the service of our country, now that she is in a determined struggle for her own safety, and for international rights, and for freedom and justice and fair play for all the world.

"It's a time when, under the colors, and through Liberty Loans, and on the firing line, we should cry aloud with Shakespeare's Wolsey,—

"'Let all the ends thou aims't at be thy country's, thy God's and truth's.'"

The picturesque ecclesiastic will lend his voice and hand at all times to see the third Liberty Loan through.

A message by Bishop Daniel Sylvester Tuttle of Missouri always commands national attention. He has been a Bishop for more than fifty-one years, a clergyman for nearly sixty years. He comes of Revolutionary stock, and is President of the Missouri Sons of the Revolution.

Though in his 82nd year, the venerable Bishop is as vigorous and alert as he ever was, a veritable watchman on the tower of his country.

Your boy is offering his life for you. Show him your appreciation. Lend money to Uncle Sam.

Support the boys "over there."

WARDENS AND VESTRYMEN

By the Bishop of Massachusetts

More than 40,000 men are appointed annually as Wardens and Vestrymen in our Parishes throughout the United States. Some are efficient—some are a burden. A wonderful power for good when each one fills his place with credit.

Some years ago Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts addressed a Pastoral Letter to the Wardens and Vestrymen in his Diocese. It is full of thought for those thousands of men elected on Easter Monday to serve in the Church. It ought to be in the hands of those who hold these offices in every Parish in the land. It suggests the broad lines of responsibility and opportunity given to these men.

"First and most important," says the Bishop, "the Wardens and Vestrymen of a Parish stand to the Parish and the community as the representative men of that Parish, the representative Churchmen in that community. In accepting an office in the Church of God, a man not only undertakes a real duty, but enters upon a position of honor. If at any time it is not so considered, that serves as a warning that we have not upheld the Church in her honorable position. Whatever, therefore, a Warden or Vestryman may do or not do officially, he is bound above all things to be a man of true and high character. In all business and social relations he is, whether he be of lowly or high station in life, honorable, pure, and worthy of respect; he is reverent and generous in word and deed; full of the spirit of charity, and altogether Christian in temper.

"Being an official in the Episcopal Church, he is loyal to its doctrine and discipline, intelligent in its principles, and faithful to its traditions. He appreciates the value of the Church to the community, and in accepting the office binds himself to a reasonable devotion to the interests of the Parish. This means that the younger members of the Parish can fairly look to him to see what their relations to the Church should be." At the close of his letter, Bishop Lawrence expresses his strong appreciation of the quiet, faithful work that is done by the members of the Vestries of the Parishes in Massachusetts. He says: "I see men of large affairs giving their valuable time to such details of Parish administration as in their own business they would hand over to others; they realize, however, that there is something representative in their official work for the Church; it has a higher meaning and a larger influence than the figures signify. I find officers of the Church, of all social ranks, working together for the Church in the finest spirit of Christian brotherhood."

WHAT ARE THE DUTIES OF CHURCH WARDENS?

The ancient traditions are that by them "Churches be kept in sufficient preparations," "bread and wine be provided against every Communion," "loiterers be not suffered near the Church in time of Divine Service," and "disturbers of Divine Service be presented." These, with a few other traditions, suggest the Wardens' duties in three relations.

(1) The Wardens have the general care of the fabric of the Church, Parish House and Rectory. It is their duty to see not only that everything is kept in decent repair, but that the whole appearance of the buildings is worthy of God's temple. It is for them and not for the Rector to see that the walls are well painted and the roof tight; that the Church lawn is well kept; that after a snow-storm the Church's side-walk be not the last one on the street to be cleaned; also that the interior of the Church be well appointed, that the carpets be whole, the walls and ceiling clean and free from weather stains, that the chancel and pews be fresh and dustless. To them belongs the arduous duty of seeing that the Church, which probably has no modern means of ventilation, is well ventilated, and that the temperature of the Church and Sunday School is good. Of course the Sexton, who is also at the Rector's command, is their agent, but such matters require vigilance, and all of these, as many other details, add to the comfort and dignity of the Church's service.

(2) The Wardens, with the Rector, prepare for the administration of the Holy Communion, and indeed for all the services of the Church. They are the body-guard of the Rector, ready to respond to any reasonable request, quick to aid him in his work, attentive to his interests.

They "receive the alms in a decent basin and reverently bring it to the Priest." It is a dignified and representative act, that of the Wardens giving the alms of the people into the hands of the Priest.

To the Wardens, as representatives of the people, a wise Rector will turn for counsel, criticism and guidance. I am convinced that neither Rector nor Wardens take sufficient advantage of the confidential relations in which they may stand to each other. I believe that, if Wardens would in all kindness sometimes speak their minds more frankly to the Rector, and the Rector would confide in his Wardens, some of his questions, difficulties and personal cares, there would be mutual advantage and a gain to the Parish.

(3) The Wardens guard and assist the devotions of the congregation. Whatever tends toward edification—the seating of the people, the reception of strangers, the provision for Prayer Books and Hymnals—falls within the Wardens' province.

I know that many of these duties have been taken, no doubt with increased efficiency, by members of St. Andrew's Brotherhood and other young men. I am old-fashioned enough, however, to feel that they are doing it as the agents of the representative Parish officers; and I trust that, while the Wardens will encourage the services of young men in every way, they will not abdicate their office as the responsible curators of the Church and of the general interests of the congregation.

WHAT ARE THE DUTIES OF THE VESTRY?

The Vestry as a body stands responsible for the financial condition of the Parish. The duty of raising money cannot be given over to the Rector or the Treasurer or some active Vestryman. While one or another may take certain lines of work, the responsibility is with the whole Vestry; and no good Vestryman will hear the Treasurer report a deficit or a delay in the payment of the Rector's salary without a sense of shame and a resolution that he will try to prevent it happening again. Above all other institutions, the Church should bear a high name for financial honor. Busi-

Well Known Temperance Worker Dies at Boston

The Rev. Samuel Haven Hilliard, Secretary of the New England Department of the Church Temperance Society for the past thirty-two years, died at Boston, Mass., on Tuesday, March 12th, aged 79 years. He was born at Cambridge, Mass., December 13, 1838, graduated from Harvard University with the class of 1859, from the General Theological Seminary in 1863, and was ordained Deacon by Bishop Horatio Potter, and advanced to the Priesthood the same year by Bishop Eastburn. May 18, 1870, he was united in marriage with Alice Anne Johnstone of London, England. He was Rector, during his ministry, of several Parishes in New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. His last charge was Trinity Church, Woburn, Mass., which he resigned in 1886, and since then devoted his energies to the work of the Temperance Society until the time of his death.

The Rev. Dr. Jackson of Fall River, Mass., says that the death of Mr. Hilliard "removes one of the pioneers of a great cause. He was known throughout the Diocese, has done a large part toward the awakening of our communion to an enlightened conscience. He was not the typical reformer; rather with a tenderness and sympathy he made one understand the value of his coffee rooms, and by contrast to realize the sin and desolation of alcoholism. Many knights appear clad in armor, or, as we say, in a red robe; Mr. Hilliard had about him something of the saintliness of those clad in white. To the younger men in the ministry, to whom total abstinence was as natural as breathing, he always seemed like an echo of days by-gone, when it took courage to stand for the Church Temperance Society. May his memory be precious to us of this generation, who gain by his labors, and may perpetual light permit full radiance in his life beyond."

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Easter Even

THE COLLECT

Grant, O Lord, that as we are baptized into the death of thy blessed Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ, so by continual mortifying our corrupt affections we may be buried with him; and that through the grave, and gate of death, we may pass to our joyful resurrection; for his merits, who died, and was buried, and rose again for us, thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Every baptized person is dedicated "to follow the example of our Saviour Christ, and to be made like unto Him; that as He died and rose again for us, so should we who are baptized die from sin, and rise again unto righteousness; continually mortifying all our evil and corrupt affections, and daily proceeding in all virtue and godliness of living".

"Baptized into the death of Jesus Christ" does not mean that we are free from our sinful nature; it simply means that that sinful nature is doomed to death. The death of Jesus was a slow and lingering death. So, in the baptized, sin is only gradually killed. The spirit is willing, the flesh is weak. The flesh lusteth against the spirit. There is a law in our members warring against the mind. So our life in the Church is not that of perfection, but of growth toward perfection, which is obtained by continual mortification. But mortification should lead to burial. Bishop Hall says that "mortification is the wound which makes it possible to put the mortified sin out of sight and mind, and so to bury it". This is the encouraging message which Jesus put into His disciples' mouths when he commanded them to disciple all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Self-Existent One, whose life is eternal.

The grave is only a gate to life. Only by dying to the lower can one hope to live to the higher things. Baptism is the gate to eternal life, which, however, is only won by continual mortification. The Church is not presenting to the world a dead Christ, but an empty cross, which is to serve as a stone against the grave into which we put the old world of sense and sense-indulgence. "In the garden there was a grave." Unless the cross is also in the garden, we who are put into the garden to dress and keep it will fall slaves to its pleasures and become unable to reckon, that is, to intend and desire ourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

"Our joyful resurrection." After all, this is the aim for which men long. This is to be the flower, of which eternal life is the fruit, and a mortified earthly existence the bud. "A joyful resurrection!" a coming forth from old habits, old customs, old likes, old longings, that were spotted, stained, soaked with sinful tendencies. God help us so to live that each morning may be a joyous resurrection. To make this possible we must cleanse our consciences each night before we go to rest. And to preach the gospel of, as well as to pray the prayer for, a joyous resurrection should be our ambition. This is what Jesus did: "Who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame", and out of His death He rose as the first fruits of a permanent return to that life whose chief quality is joy, joy in the Holy Ghost.

THE EPISTLE

It is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ: who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.—I St. Peter iii:17.

One of the attractive heresies of the day lies in the appeal of that so-called religion which lures suffering out of its reckoning, and which is not a religion, but a philosophy. If we yield to this subtle appeal, we will have to banish Jesus and His Cross from our daily lives, and blot out much of the Gospel message. The resurrection message which the true Church offers is a message which has suffering imbedded behind its outlines, along with the qualitative, "if the will of God be so".

"Christ suffered that He might bring us to God." Christ's Church will and must suffer in bringing men to God, Christ's ministers, His missionaries, must suffer if they will bring men to God. If we do not agonize our souls, we will not have much power with souls.

"Quickened by the Spirit" is not so much an exhilirating as it is a purgative experience. One does not progress rapidly when one is quickened by the Spirit, but one progresses steadily and persistently, and with the deep throbbing of a sincere purpose. If we have been "quickened by the Spirit", that quickening will manifest itself in speech as well as action. We will be moved to preach to "the imprisoned spirits", to those souls who long to "mount up as on eagles' wings", but are held back by the confining bars of ignorance and superstition and fear and hopelessness. What joy to relieve an aspiring soul from such bonds as these! What comfort to realize that such a release is being made by our help, although through others' efforts.

"Preaching to the spirits in prison!" Here is the call to an aroused missionary zeal. Here is the challenge to increased missionary giving. Here sounds the summons to souls who want to do work in the world that is well worth while.

"Few, that is, eight, souls were saved." What a hope lies herein for the feeble mission at home or abroad. What a rebuke to those who fall into the lust of figures, and act and speak as if salvation is only worth considering when big results are in sight.

"The answer of a good conscience." In this phrase lies the ability to thrill over the words, "a joyful resurrection". If a good conscience, that is, a well-trained conscience, cannot or does not answer to the call of God, then you may be sure that that conscience is not good, and that the thought of the resurrection will inspire terror and fear; and to such people death is not a gate to life, but an entrance into continued spiritual and mental torment. Easter has no real thrill for the man who does not share the suffering of Good Friday. Eternity means nothing to those who do not recognize that Time spells our one opportunity to make as well as to be good.

THE GOSPEL

When the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathæa, named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple: he went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered. And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, and laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed. And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre. Now the next day, that followed the day of preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first. Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone and setting a watch. —St. Matt xxvii:57.

"Begged the body of Jesus." What are missionary appeals but appeals for the body of Jesus, appeals for "the Church, which is His body"? Let us make it our business to see that no impediment is ever cast by us in the way of granting such appeals. For where the body is, there also can come the Spirit of the Lord, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty; and liberty is to be proclaimed throughout all the world by the body; and until it is so proclaimed and accepted, people will remain children of the bond-woman, instead of becoming children of the free.

"There was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre." Blessed ministry of watching and praying! Blessed love, which practically cried, "I will not let Thee go until Thou bless me". No use to sit by a grave unless one hopes to find thereby a blessing. So these two women typify the heart and love of all humanity, which continues to sit by the grave which the wise men and philosophers of all time have sought to seal up with their arguments, and stamp with their skeptical signatures and surmount by a carved and weeping figure of hopelessness and despair. Mistranslation that it is, nevertheless men will ever thrill to the true message which lies in the quotation, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another".

Thank God for the Easter Even message, which bids you tarry by the grave. Do not let your prayers for a soul cease because the body which housed that soul is in a grave. Every Saturday bring to mind the souls of those whose bodies are in their graves, and beg that by reason of His own rest within the tomb, the souls of Christ's faithful departed may rest in peace. And every Saturday bring before God the names of those who should be buried with Christ in Baptism, and ask the Holy Spirit to help you win those souls to this grave in the garden message and its resurrection hope. So will you become a willing, helpful, useful messenger of the Lord, and Giver of Life.

The history of the Easter lessons in the past century or so in the Churches of England and Canada, and the Episcopal Church in this country, is illuminating. The English and Canadian gave only Exodus 12, divided into two parts, for morning and evening, with chapter 14 for an alternate. The American Church did likewise, except for 14. Later, we cut out the second part of Exodus 12, and substituted the first 21 verses of chapter 15, a great improvement, though the eliminating of all history leading up to the Exodus, and proceeding from it, seems a blunder. Later, the English (Canterbury) and Canadian revisions have enriched the readings for the day by adding Isaiah li:1-16, lii:1-12, and chapter xii. The point to be noticed is that these new lessons from Isaiah add the historical fact of redemption from exile to that from Egypt as the background of the Easter message. And even before this was done, the American Prayer Book had already prepared the way for this in a measure by the use of Isaiah xliii and xlviii on the first Sunday after Easter. It thus appears that the plan of the New American Lectionary, basing the use and arrangement of the Old Testament on these two fundamental facts of redemption, is only the logical development of a movement that has been going on for some time in the whole Anglican communion.

Our first lesson Easter morning brings together in one view these same two redemptions (verses 9, 10, 15), and prophesies the return: "The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; everlasting joy shall be upon their heads, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Later on there will be given, in accordance with the historico-topical plan, the story of the return, reaching a climax in the re-establishment of the law, on Whitsunday (Nehemiah 9).

For the second lesson we have given the story of the resurrection, as told by the angels in St. Luke's Gospel, which we have been following through Lent: "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen. Remember how He spake unto you, saying", etc.

For the first lesson, we have had recourse again to Isaiah (verses 11 and 12 should surely be included). It is God's appeal to the Church to awake and avail itself of its redemption: "Break forth into joy; sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem; for Jehovah hath comforted His people; He hath redeemed Jerusalem". The morning lesson contains an appeal to God to awake; the evening, to the Church. St. John's story oft he Resurrection is the second lesson, and we begin right away to prepare for the Ascension, and for the gift of the Holy Spirit. (Some might prefer to make this the morning lesson, which is permissible.)

The week day lessons are determined, first, by those passages of the Old Testament which belong in connection with the deliverance from Babylon, and this means the 40th and following chapters of Isaiah, no matter whether written before, during or after the exile. The other selections, morning and evening, are topically made, having reference either to appearences of the risen Lord, or to previous deeds or sayings, in either Testament, which find their fulfillment in the Resurrection. A comparison of these selections with the week day readings of the Prayer Book (April 1-6) will show the appropriateness of the one set and the inappropriateness of the other, except for a single incident, and that is given in the New Lectionary as well: Luke vii:11-16, raising of the son of the widow of Nain.

LIFE

'Tis a Christian Word
He Lives Forevermore

DEATH

'Tis a Heathen Word
The Christian Cannot Die

Death of the Rev. Dr. Neide

The Rev. Dr. Howland Neide, D. D., died at the Rectory of St. Mark's Church, New Canaan, Conn., on Wednesday, March 6th, from a stroke of apoplexy. He had been Rector of St. Mark's Church for over twenty-eight years, was greatly beloved by his parishioners and highly esteemed throughout the Diocese. The burial service occurred from the Church on Saturday, March 9th, Bishop Brewster officiating, and was attended by a large number of the clergy. Dr. Neide was an alumnus of St. Stephen's College and of the General Theological Seminary. He was ordained Deacon and Priest by Bishop Doane.

Dr. Silver Speaks in New York Cathedral

On Sunday evening, March 10th, at the Cathedral in New York, the Rev. Dr. Silver, Chaplain at West Point, preached to an interested congregation on the need of furnishing adequate support for the war work of the Girls' Friendly Society and the Church Mission of Help. In the many years of his experience in military work, Dr. Silver said, it was the first time to his knowledge that the powers for righteousness had banded themselves with a consecrated purpose to defeat the powers for evil, which were always well organized, in the neighborhood of camps and cantonments. The only way that evil can be overcome is by the power of good. To make this influence felt, consecrated trained workers must be sent out, and money must be given for their support. Money is not everything, but it is a powerful agent, and must be freely given. The first army of men and boys are fighting for us at the front. Without the consecrated effort of the second army, those at home, to sustain and support our men, their efforts will be defeated. The best we have must be given, even at great cost and self-sacrifice. Nothing is too much for us to give—ourselves, our prayers, our money. "I will not give unto the Lord that which shall cost me nothing." It must be literally the offering of ourselves on the altar of the nation, which is already stained red with the blood of those who for us and our righteous cause have paid the supreme sacrifice.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

O Almighty God, the supreme Governor of all things, whose power no creature is able to resist, to whom it belongeth justly to punish sinners, and to be merciful to those who truly repent; Save and deliver us, we humbly beseech thee, from the hands of our enemies. Abate their pride, assuage their malice, confound their devices that we, being armed with thy defence, may be preserved evermore from all perils, to glorify thee, who are the only giver of all victory; through the merits of thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord.* Amen.

O Thou who alone dost rule in the kingdoms of men and determine the events of war, guard and guide us now, we beseech Thee. Be merciful unto our sins; save us from violence, discord and confusion; from pride and arrogance, and from every evil way. Grant unto our rulers the spirit of wisdom, that they may direct and use the power committed to their hands for the honor of our country, the deliverance of the oppressed, the good of all mankind, and the glory of thy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

* This is the Collect appointed by the Church to be used in war time. The words in black face are in the English Prayer Book, but not in the American, and in the public use of the Collect should be omitted. They seem very suitable, however, at this time.

COMMUNION OFFICE

Catechism: Learn the ten parts below. (Prop. 1.)

Prop. 1.

The Anaphora, or Communion Service proper, consists of the following parts:

1. The Sursum Corda ("Lift up your hearts, etc.").
2. The Proper Preface (used on great festivals).
3. The Tersanctus ("Therefore with angels, etc.").
4. The Prayer of Humble Access.
5. The Canon, (being that part of the Prayer of Consecration in which the elements of bread and wine are consecrated) attached to which are the Oblation and the Invocation as indicated in the Prayer Book.
6. The Words of Administration.
7. The Lord's Prayer.
8. The Thanksgiving.
9. The Gloria in Excelsis.
10. The Benediction.

Prop. 2.

In taking part in this service you are doing several things.

1. You are performing an act of obedience to Jesus Christ, who told you "to do this."

2. You are bearing witness, "in the memorial which He commanded us to make," to your faith in the Saviour. "You are showing faith in His death till He come."

3. You are participating in the Communion with all Christians in all ages and in all places, both the living and the departed.

4. You are receiving the great Sacrament of pardon for your sins, "for the blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sins."

5. You are giving thanks to God, through Christ, for all the blessings that you have received. It is your Eucharist or thanksgiving.

6. You are receiving the grace of eternal life which Christ attached to this Sacrament. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, ye have no life in you."

7. You are participating in a complete act of worship, joining the sacrifice of yourselves, your souls and bodies, to the sacrifice of Jesus Christ: giving Him yourself, and receiving Christ in return.

Prop. 3.

In the Holy Eucharist, we participate in the Priesthood of Christ, as in reading the Gospels we share in His prophetic office.

Christ came to show us the way and so He taught us; but Christ came also to be the Way and so He died for us.

But He did not merely die for us; "In the night in which He was betrayed He took bread and when He had given thanks He brake it and gave it to us saying, Take, eat this is my Body."

That is, He permitted us to share in the great atonement which He made for our sins.

Thus we do not receive the benefits of Christ's sacrifice, merely by thinking of it; but He left us a means by which we could both offer ourselves to God through Him, and receive Him into ourselves.

We are not merely hearers of His Gospel, but we are also recipients of His life in the sacrament which He ordained, so that we become "members of His Body, of His flesh and of His bones."

The purpose of the sacrament is that "Christ may dwell in us and we in Him."

The sacrament of the Altar is therefore the channel through which the life of Christ is imparted to those who receive Him: for salvation to those who receive Him in faith: while those who eat and drink unworthily, (that is without faith), eat and drink damnation to themselves, for they do not discern the Lord's Body.

QUESTIONS

1. Recite the various parts of the Communion Office beginning at the Anaphora?
2. State seven reasons why we should receive the Lord's Supper.
3. Of what is the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper a channel?
4. What effect does the receiving of the Sacrament without faith and reverence have upon us?

TEXT

"Let a man examine himself and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup." I Cor. xi:28.

READINGS

1. The Act of Obedience. St. Matt. xxvi:26-28.
2. of Witness. I Cor. xi:23-26.
3. of Fellowship. I Cor. x:16-21.
4. of Pardoning. Heb. ix:11-15.
5. of Thanksgiving. Acts ii:46-47.
6. of Receiving Life. St. John vi:31-51.
7. of Worship. Heb. xiii:9-16.

The Epistle to the Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

XXVIII.

Vs. 5. Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of heart, as unto Christ.

Sadler: Servants, not hired laborers or domestic servants, but slaves, whose persons and labor entirely belonged to their masters.

Ellicott: Masters according to the flesh. Your bodily earthly masters.

Wordsworth: Earthly masters as distinguished from heavenly.

Sadler: He exhorts them to be obedient not only to their Christian masters, but to their own masters according to the flesh, who in many cases would be heathen. He did not intend slaves to act on the principle that their freedom in Christ enabled them to assert their freedom from the obligation of their respective households.

Blunt: With fear and trembling. Not the fear of punishment, but the anxiety and self-distrust which makes the best Christians say to their Master in heaven, "We are unprofitable servants". (St. Luke xvii:10.)

Ellicott: The anxious solicitude they ought to feel about the faithful performance of their duties.

Wordsworth: In singleness of your heart. With a single eye to what is good and right, not with sinister regard to our own good.

Sadler: Having one aim, which is to please Christ in the service of your earthly master.

Vs. 6. Not according to eye service as men pleasers, but as servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart.

Sanderson: Not with eye service. Many servants there are who will work hard as long as their master's eye is upon them, but when his back is turned can be content to go on softly.

Moule: As men pleasers. With no higher aim than the personal comfort of getting anyhow the master's approval or indulgence.

Ellicott: Doing the will of God. He does his work heartily, and besides this, feels a sincere good will to his master.

Sadler: All service is acceptable to God if it is done with the intention of pleasing God in the doing of it.

Moule: From the heart. Literally from the soul.

Vs. 7. With good will doing service as to the Lord, and not to men.

Ellicott. With good will. In reference to the well-disposed mind with which the service was to be performed.

Blunt: With cheerful diligence.

Sadler: Do it with alacrity, not of necessity; upon principle, not upon constraint.

Vs. 8. Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall be received of the Lord, whether he be bond or free.

Ellicott: Knowing. This gives the encouraging reason why they were to act with this honesty and diligence.

Wordsworth: Shall receive, i. e., shall receive back, as a deposit or as a seed sown.

Ellicott: Whether he be bond or free. Whatever be his social condition here, the future will only regard his moral state.

Theodoret: He showed the servitude and mastership obtaining in the present life, but after the departure hence, the difference to be no longer servitude and mastership, but between virtue and wickedness.

Vs. 9. And ye, masters, do the same thing unto them, forbearing threatening, knowing that your master also is in heaven; neither is there respect of persons with him.

Sadler: Do the same things to them, i. e., serve them, do what you can for their bodily and spiritual welfare.

Blunt: The masters are required to rule as those who have authority committed to them by God. The servant has to account to God for his service, the master for his rule.

Moule: Faithfully consult their true interests, be loyal to your responsibilities in regard of them. Those are "the things" you look for from them towards yourselves.

Ellicott: Forbearing threatening. The too habitual threatening of master towards slave.

Wordsworth: The common menace of masters to slaves.

Sadler: No respecter of persons. All in His sight are equal, made out of the same dust, redeemed by the same blood, having the same Baptism, the same faith, the same heavenly and spiritual food.

Meyer: At the judgment, He (Christ) without partiality alike will sustain the injured rights of the slaves and punish the unchristian threatenings of the masters.

Vs. 10. Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.

Ellicott: Finally—as to what remains for you to do.

Jerome: Wisely does the Apostle, after the special injunction to husbands, wives, etc., now in gereral enjoin it upon all together to be "strong in the Lord".

Sadler: Be strong in the Lord. Renew, realize your union with Him.

Moule: Their strength was already permanently theirs—let it be continuously used.

Blunt: As duties are laid upon them, because they are part of the mystical body of Christ, so, through being part of that mystical body, they will receive strength to do them.

Myers: This phrase denotes the Christian strengthening, which cannot subsist outside of Christ, but only in Him as the life element of the Christian.

Ellicott: In the Lord, our only element of spiritual life.

Sadler: In the power of his might. The power of His might is His Spirit.

Vs. 11. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.

Meyer: The whole armour of God. Appropriate to yourselves all the means of defense and offence which God bestows, and in order to be in a position to withstand the machinations of the devil! In the very fact that not merely in single pieces of the armor, but the whole armor of God, is put on, resides the capacity of resistance to the devil.

Sadler and Blunt: The sight of the soldiers who guarded him probably suggested to St. Paul the idea of the panoply of God and recalled to his mind parts of the Old Testament writings on which this passage seems to be built. (Isaiah xi:5, Wisdom v:17-20.

Jerome: By the whole armor of God, the Saviour is to be understood. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ."

Moule: To stand—the keynote of the passage.

Theodoret: The wiles of the devil. Machinations.

Blunt: In Eph. iv:13 this word is rendered "craftiness", and is not found elsewhere. In both places it implies a systematic scheming to deceive, a going in crooked ways.

Ellicott: The stratagems of the devil.

Luther: The wily assaults of the devil.

The Great Sacrifice

By Dr. James E. Freeman

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Thomas Carlyle wrote illuminatingly on "Heroes and Hero Worship." There is nothing that makes a larger appeal to the imagination than the heroic. Emerson says somewhere, "All men are commanded by the saint." It may be said with equal force, All men are commanded by the hero. Where life is prosaic and commonplace, there is little disclosure of heroic qualities, although to the close observer they are evident in many forms of life.

Today, however, we are the witnesses of a revival of the spirit of chivalry, and we are having new and appealing evidences that witness to the heroic in human nature. A new literature has literally been created in the past three years, and almost every page of it serves to indicate that men and women, the world over, respond to the call of service, cost what it may. The kind of sacrifice men are called upon to make today is by no means a common one, at least not in the present generation. After years of unruffled peace, where men pursued the ordinary tasks and occupations, tasks let it be said, that seemed to unfit them to endure hardness, especially in the most strenuous conflict the world has ever known, the call to the colors was heard.

What an exhibition of loyalty was disclosed, and how generously America's adopted sons, as well as her native-born, answered the nation's appeal. We have been privileged to talk with many of these "soldiers of freedom" in camp, and before they went forth from their homes, and it has seemed to us that they witness to a new kind of manhood. The very appeal has ennobled their vision, stirred their finer impulses and endued them with a new spirit of consecration. They may not say it in so many words, but they have by their deeds declared: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

It is a part of the philosophy of Jesus that man's highest development comes through sacrifice, and that is demonstrated in a thousand ways in every age, whether it is the mother giving her life for her child, the father sacrificing himself for his son, the fireman or policeman counting not his life dear unto himself that he may do his duty, the soldier bearing arms for home and country—all are exponents of the high ideals of service. Such days as these almost make those who are compelled to stay at home feel that their part in this world-conflict is pathetically inconsequential, but we beg to submit that this need not be so. "They also serve who stand and wait." The opportunities at home are vast and multiform and if we can only rise to recognize and assume responsibilities that hitherto we have neglected, we too shall enter into the fellowship of the world's sufferings, and may come ultimately to the joy of its resurrection. Today, the man who simply seeks to do what he has hitherto done, and who feels no call to a service that involves some personal sacrifice, can hardly be accorded the respect of his fellows.

Said a soldier to us recently, in a training camp—"I hope, sir, the war will not be prolonged one needless day, but I sincerely hope that it will not stop until America has learned her lesson as the nations of the older world have done, and not until we have made some sacrifices that really touch us to the quick." We think we understand what he meant. It was Coningsby Dawson, in his remarkable book, "Carry On," who maintained, that he would not exchange his hard and exacting camp experiences for all the luxuries and enervating days that had gone before.

The large question for each one of us to answer today is, how much is this war to reveal to us of the privilege of service for our fellows, and what in the coming days of large readjustment are we, individually and collectively, to contribute to the solution of the world's unsolved problems? A big business man said recently in our hearing: "As I look at life, we have hitherto done what we were compelled to do. In the coming days we shall do what we ought to do." We understand him to mean, that in the near future a more practical application of Christian theories is to be made to human conditions as we find them. Jesus Christ sought to give men great basic principles by which to live, and so high was His estimate of sacrifice that He declared: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." The universal and eloquent appeal of our time is for unselfish, whole-hearted service.—Courtesy of the Minneapolis Tribune.

A Bit of Billy Sunday's Sarcasm

"Never bring anybody to Church with you," said Billy Sunday the other day, in Chicago, to an audience of fifteen thousand people. "Let the pastor do all the work. The general does all the fighting, while the privates sit around under the shade, smelling the coffee boil and the bacon fry. See that his salary is always behind time. He can work down here and board up in heaven.

"And if he doesn't visit you as often as you think he should, or that you deserve, treat him very coldly. He has nothing particularly to do but to wait on you. He only has to preach two sermons a week, and run the prayer meeting, and marry people, and bury people, and settle individual and Church quarrels, and visit the sick, and pray with the dying, and collect Church subscriptions. The Church hires him just to look nice and amuse you. He hasn't anything special to do.

"And try and run the Church. If you see anybody willing to take hold and help with the Church work, be sure and find fault with them and accuse them of being bold and forward, and never speak to anybody about Jesus Christ. Your pastor should do all that kind of work—don't you say a word. And don't be particular about how God's house looks inside or out, but keep your own fine.

"Oh, you've got Persian rugs and the candelabra of wealth on your floor; the Church is good enough for the 35-cent ingrain.

"Insist on your views being adopted on all questions brought up before the Church. And don't give in for the majority. This Government is run on the majority rule, but in the Church, the tail wags the dog."

ELL FROM ORTH AND SOUTH

was held in the Church of the Transfiguration on the evening of March 7. The Rev. Father Huntington, O. H. C., conducted the service. Fully 300 women and girls were in the congregation, all feeling, in these days of stress, the need of spiritual strength. Friendliness was the general subject of the addresses—God's love and friendliness to us, which must result in our love and friendliness to Him and to each other.

The Rt. Rev. R. L. Harris, Bishop Coadjutor of Marquette, made his visitation of St. James' Parish, Sault Ste. Marie, on the fifth Sunday in Lent, and confirmed a class of twenty-three. The Bishop was greeted by very large congregations both morning and evening, and preached most helpful and inspiring sermons. Two soldiers from the fort were in the class. The interior of the Church is being redecorated, and, under the direction of the Rector, the work is being done by volunteer workers.

The Rev. A. M. Hilliker, who has been spending the past few months in Florida, in a letter to his parishioners at Lonsdale, R. I., written in February, says: The seasons here are strangely intermingled. We should think plants and animals, as well as men, might become confused. The calendar lists January and February as Winter months, but the flower-covered earth, the fresh young leaves, the growing vegetables and blossoming fruit trees tell of Spring; the temperature prompts us to call it Summer, while falling leaves and ripened fruit convince us it is Autumn. Which shall we call it? I guess we shall have to assume a fifth season and call it Florida."

A series of Sunday afternoon musical services have been held during Lent at St. Philip's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., with different organists of the city presiding at the new organ, which has been in use about a month, and is greatly admired. The Rev. Dr. Boyd will complete his fiftieth year as Rector of the Parish on the first of May.

Trinity Church, Jacksonville, Ill., was entirely destroyed by fire March 14th. Trinity was erected in 1832, and it is believed to have been the oldest Church building in the State. It is a fine old historic Parish, and we confidently hope the many former members all over the country will rally to its support and help rebuild the Church.

Miss Madielne H. Harding, daughter of the Rev. Dr. John H. Harding, Secretary of the Second Province, died in New York on March 10th. She was a devout communicant of the Chapel of the Intercession. Owing to her illness and death, Dr. Harding was compelled to cancel engagements to conduct Missionary campaigns at Mankato and other points in Minnesota.

The annual report of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary of Long Island shows total receipts, covering a period of sixteen months, amounting to $8,195.57, and disbursements, $7,952.31; 147 boxes were sent to missionaries, valued at $10,224.97, and 62 boxes by the Juniors, valued at $1,571.72. The Little Helpers distributed offerings amounting to $369, while the United Offering shows a balance of $2,391.87.

take work in the Diocese of Lexington, has been ill, and unable to leave Brooklyn.

The Rev. Franklin C. Smith, Rector at Rawlings, Wyo., has resigned his work in the District, and will leave on Easter Tuesday to take up work in the Diocese of Bethlehem, under Bishop Talbot.

The Rev. Arthur G. Wilson of St. Barnabas' Church, Havana, Ill., expects to be called into military service at an early date. He did not claim exemption when drafted, passed a good physical examination and was accepted for service.

The Rev. W. S. Claiborne, Archdeacon of Sewanee and East Tennessee, has organized among his own people a hospital unit, which has been presented, through the local Red Cross of Chattanooga to the Government. A large majority of the doctors in this unit are Sewanee men.

Bishop Thomas of Wyoming delivered a series of lectures in St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, during the week ending March 16th, and repeated the lectures in Cheyenne, at St. Mark's Church, on the 19th to 22nd. The Bishop then started on his tour of Confirmation visitations throughout the District.

The Rev. Stanley S. Thomson, who for more than a year has been in charge of the work at St. Thomas' Church, Dubois, Wyo., has recently resigned and has enlisted in the Army.

The Rev. John W. Cromwell recently became the Rector of the Church of St. John the Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y. He was ordained in the Diocese of Long Island, and was in charge of St. Mary's Church, Amityville, for several years following his ordination. He was afterward Rector of the Church of the Evangelists, Oswego, N. Y., and from there returned to his home Diocese.

Marquette Notes

St. Paul's Parish, Marquette, began the new year under new leadership, the Rev. A. J. Wilder assuming the Rectorship on Jan. 1. An elaborate reception and supper was given for the new Rector and Mrs. Wilder in the Guild Hall two weeks later, at which time the preliminaries for a strong every-member canvass was discussed, with the result of that canvass being made by the Vestry, and increasing the yearly Parish treasury some $2,000 over previous years.

A special Fund has been started for the benefit of the Church music by Mrs. Mary L. Mather, in memory of her husband, the late Mr. Henry Richard Mather, who, during the years 1858 to 1878 devoted his rare musical talent to this Church as its Organist and Choirmaster, and who in these capacities rendered the Parish incalculable service.

Just as the Parish was joyous over the coming among us of the new Bishop (Dr. Harris), we were shocked by the sad tidings of the death of Mr. Dan H. Ball, one of Marquette's most prominent citizens, Senior Warden of St. Paul's, and Vestryman for many years. Only a day or so before God called him, Mr. Ball made a warm and happy speech of welcome, full of cheer and hope. The people of this Parish will miss him in many ways, but chiefly will they miss his words of encouragement and help for the worth while things of life.

Bishop and Mrs. Harris arrived in Marquette on Feb. 11th, and auspiciously on the first train in on time in three months. A representative committee met them and bade them welcome to the Upper Peninsula. Ash Wednesday being only two days away, a prompt and fitting introduction of the Bishop to his clergy and people was brought about at once. Hence, the same day, a 6 o'clock luncheon was served by St. Paul's Guild, in the Bishop's honor, to him and some fifty clergy and laity of the Diocese, the Rev. Dr. A. W. Ryan and Mr. Thos. S. Wood of Duluth being also present as bringers of welcome from the neighboring Diocese.

From clergy and laity alike, words—strong words—that presage new life and work, greeted the man, who in turn answered the strong with strength. In no feeling of cheap optimism did the men leave that board, but they left it with a sense that soul had been fused with soul for the strengthening of the work of God in the Diocese of Marquette.

Promptly at 8 p. m., Bishop, clergy and laymen were ushered into the Guild Hall, where a reception met the Bishop of which any one would have been proud. Here was the opportunity of the Bishop's first day among his own, and here was found in richer measure the spirit of hearty co-operation for every high endeavor awaiting an open door.

On the Sunday following (the first in Lent) Bishop Harris preached his first sermon in the Diocese. To a large, expectant and rapt congregation, he gave utterance to a long to be remembered message on the text, "He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it". The clash of the material with the spiritual, selfishness with unselfishness, the clash of greed in individuals, corporations and nations, the creed of to have and to hold for self, versus the Christ of the creed. This is the high truth of this our hour of warfare—things versus souls, Germany after things soulless, Belgium stripped—yes. But Belgium gave her soul and found it. It was a fine Lenten sermon. It was the old satanic vision in new form—the seeing of all the kingdoms of the world, and the "all these" But what of God and a man's soul?

The house occupied formerly by the Bishop of Marquette was found to be inadequate for the Bishop Coadjutor's family. Negotiations were therefore entered into by which it was sold, and purchase made by the Diocese of a more commodious residence. Considerable alterations are under way in the newly acquired property, and the house is to be ready for occupation in a short space of time.

The Rev. R. P. Ernst is now in the Diocese, and is fast making a place for himself here. He is acting Bishop's Secretary and maker of surveys of vacant Parishes and Missions, thus bringing accurate information to the Diocese at first hand. His humor is fine, and his visits have been full of rich finds, and the wonders he brings home to the joy of others.

Episcopal visitations have been made at Ishpeming, Houghton and Menominee. Twenty-eight were confirmed at Houghton and twenty-one at Ishpeming. There were inspiring services at both places, and Bishop Harris returned praising the spirit of clergy and people alike.

The visit to Menominee was elemental in more than one sense, the Bishop coming in contact with a Lake Superior blizzard for the first time. The train from Marquette to Menominee, composed of day coaches only, was held by drifts for 26 hours, reaching its destination late Sunday afternoon instead of Saturday evening. Time, however, was unwasted. Bishop Harris had service Sunday morning on schedule time, converting the day coach, which had done service as diner and sleeper, into a chapel of ease. Grace Church, Menominee, had service Sunday evening. After services, a Parish meeting was held, when it was decided to have regular services again, the Church having been closed for months.

In St. Paul's Parish, Marquette, Mich., has been started what may prove a good thing elsewhere. We have nearly forty stars on our Service Flag in the Church. The Rector asked the mothers and friends of the boys in the service to meet in the Chapel on Thursday afternoons and bring with them excerpts or whole letters received from camp and front, to be read aloud. This has been done, with the result that a great bond of sympathy is growing among these women, such as it is hoped will help in a large measure, should gold stars have to replace some blue ones on the flag. The mother's loss is softened even now, and her heart is warmed in a new comradeship of prayer and desire.

DEATH DOES NOT END ALL

Our assurance is like the sunlight. It illumines the whole landscape. We can distinguish which objects are mountains and which are clouds. Now the spiritual towers above the animal. Now the eternal overshadows the temporal. The imperishable takes precedence of the things which perish with the using. We get a truer and higher estimate of our real and rightful place in the universe. We are sons of eternity. It gives our existence a dignity and a largeness which enriches our moral life, and makes us better, stronger and happier men.

Personal Mention

The Rev. James Williams has assumed charge of the Church of the Holy Cross, Brooklyn, N. Y. He was formerly Curate of the Church of the Redeemer, Astoria.

The Rev. John A. Goodfellow celebrated his forty-sixth anniversary as Rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Philadelphia, Pa., on Sunday, March 3.

The Rev. E. R. Jones, Rector of Grac Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., has been called and is now with the Emery Hospital unit, now at Camp Gordon.

The Rev. F. C. Powell, Provincial Superior of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, is conducting a Mission, and is the special preacher this Holy Week at St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A Pastoral Letter

The Bishop of Washington Addresses His Clergy

My dear Brother:

I am impelled by the urgency of our need of Divine guidance and power in these critical days, to ask you to add to such words as you may have in mind to speak to your people, my earnest hope, as their Bishop, that they will spend these days of Holy Week in penitence and prayer and in withdrawal from the world for this season that they may be thus alone with Him.

I especially urge upon them diligence in family prayer, as well as daily attendance upon Divine worship; well knowing that you my brethren will give them every opportunity practical for enjoying this privilege, and that now as always you will lead them. It would be well if the opportunity for Holy Communion with Intercessions were made frequent during the continuance of this Western drive.

Faithfully yours,
ALFRED HARDING,
Bishop of Washington.

March 23, 1918.

"Let the Church return to the life of prayer and give proof that she is willing to trust to spiritual means alone for success, and in that same hour the era of enduring conquest will begin."—William J. Dawson.

God wants to hear about whatever occupies our time and thought, not that He may be informed, but that we may keep in communion with Him.—Ex.

Hope never hurt any one, never yet interfered with duty; nay, always strengthens to the performance of duty, gives courage and clears the judgment.—Macdonald.

"With God, over the sea; without Him, not over the threshold."

Virginia Notes

Bishop Randolph, who has been ill for some time, continues about the same.

Miss Jane Colston Howard, Principal of Stuart Hall, has resigned on account of the illness of her mother. She has been in charge of Stuart Hall for several years, succeeding Miss Maria P. Duvall. Miss Mary Williamson of Hollins College has been elected to succeed her as Principal of Stuart Hall. Miss Williamson has every qualification to fill the position, and all interested in Stuart Hall most earnestly hope she will accept the position.

Christ Church congregation in Roanoke will use their beautiful new Church on Easter Day for the first time. This Church is built of stone, of old English Gothic type of architecture, will seat 400, and is finished with great taste and beauty. Bishop Tucker will be present on Easter Sunday morning to have charge of the opening services and to confirm a large class. The congregation is to be congratulated in securing a large and commodious Church, Parish House and Rectory in the most desirable location of Roanoke.

The Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, Rector of St. John's Church, has been ill during most of the season of Lent. His illness has not been critical, only that he has been confined to his house and unable to take but an occasional service in his Church. The doctors promise that he will be able to be on duty Good Friday and Easter Day. During this period, the Rev. T. C. Page of Bedford, Rev. F. H. Craighill of Wytheville, Va., Rev. T. F. Opie of Pulaski, Va., Rev. C. E. A. Marshall of Radford, and the Rev. G. Otis Mead have given services at St. John's.

It is not so much the teaching of Jesus, which is very like that of the best of His predecessors in Israel, that accounts for his influence in the world. It is Jesus Himself.—Bosworth.

"To be dead in earnest is to be eloquent."

Make it a faithful Lent, and a glorious Easter will be yours.

EDITORIAL

Men have curious attitudes toward religion.

For example, a man does not stop being an ardent American because some politician is a grafter, nor does he resign from his lodge because some frater has disgraced himself.

But men like sheep are gone astray, and it is a most silly and stupid and sheeplike method of going astray, too.

If somebody who said he was a Christian turns out to be a scalawag, of course that is an excellent reason for being a slacker also. One black sheep has broken through the fence,—what can you expect of a poor wooly lamb but that he also should break through?

One sheep turns out to be a wolf in sheep's clothing, therefore all sheep must be wolves in disguise.

This is manifestly the case in the effect that the Kaiser's claim to familiarity with God is having on some folks.

German plots are far more dangerous than German bullets.

It is something, I presume, to be an artistic liar. And any plot which involves deception is one in which a professional liar ought to be an expert.

But, then, why believe a liar?

It is true, is it not, that religion is one of the fundamental motives for courage in battle?

It accounts for the courage of the Turk as well as the Christian.

Naturally, anything that will help the German soldier to be courageous and that can be had at little expense, is an asset that the Kaiser cannot afford to lose.

So he claims an intimate familiarity with God and attributes every success to Divine favor, and the state clergy justify the campaigns of frightfulness on the ground that God approves, and that there will be an exemption for the Teuton warrior on the Day of Judgment for all of his brutalities done in war. Of course it is a God "made in Germany."

Naturally the hypocrisy involved in all this is colossal, and really harmless to any but those who utter such blatant blasphemy.

But we are told that a good many of our own woolly lambs are being incited to hostility to God because the Kaiser lays claim to Divine favor.

Of course this is just what the Kaiser wants. If he could get every American to give up his religion because he has established his claim to proprietorship therein, then he will have secured for his troops a powerful incentive to die in his behalf.

Anyone who has read his Bible and knows anything about the history of Christianity knows that to claim God's favor is one thing. The Pharisees did that. Yes, and they crucified the Christ, but they did not win the battle for which they fought. For Christ's principles prevailed, and the claims of the Pharisees were forfeited. They were abandoned by God, and so will this war end in the overthrow of the Prussian Molock, to whom thousands of women and children have been basely sacrificed.

ness integrity is essential to the efficiency of a Parish. I occasionally come across a clergyman who, unpractical or careless in finances, does not pay his debts. I have no excuse to offer for him. I can say, however, that I look with admiration upon the great body of the clergy and their wives, for their economy, their good sense, their self-denial and sensitiveness to financial honor. And I know of few more cruel situations than that of a faithful clergyman who, keenly sensitive, has not been paid his salary and, therefore, cannot pay his bills because of the listlessness of the Vestry and people. The work suffers through the Rector's anxiety, and thus the Parish suffers doubly in reputation and spiritual leadership. Fortunately such instances are few, but they exist; and I confidently ask every Vestryman to see to it that no such conditions find a foothold in the Parish of which he is an officer.

There is no doubt that the change from the Pew System to a Free Church or pledge or envelope system has made the collection of the Church's income far more difficult, and has also tempted Parishes to give less to missionary interests. Our Vestries have, therefore, a more difficult task before them than in other days. It is neither right nor wise to make the Rector appeal for his own salary. The officers of the Church should have such a large conception of the Church's work, such a high estimate of its usefulness to the community, and such confidence in its Divine purpose, as to create a deep and abiding enthusiasm in themselves and the people, which will bring forth fruits in large and systematic offerings.

There is, as a rule, money enough in the people's income to support the Church. One discovers this when some object of special interest arises. I have known a Parish raise enough money in a few weeks to purchase a fine organ, while their Rector, an efficient man, silently endured the shame of unpaid bills because his salary was in arrears. The most valuable asset the Parish has is the Rector's best work and buoyant spirit.

We are well aware that, when a Church depends upon fairs, entertainments, and spasmodic efforts, it loses its dignity and influence throughout the whole community. When a Vestry develops and sustains with energy systematic and business-like methods for gathering in the income, it is surprising how steadily the amount increases; the raising of the Rector's salary becomes possible, and there is cheer and buoyancy all along the line.

There are a few other considerations that I would like to suggest.

(1) The Rector is the appointed leader of the Parish. In addition to his routine duties, he should be alert to opportunities for the development of the work of the Parish and the increase of its influence. Toward such movements the Rector should take the first steps. If, however, he be drawn by his enthusiasm into plans and enterprises which are not wise, the Vestry serves as a wholesome check; and a wise Rector will heed the Vestry's advice. At the same time, the Vestry should in general recognize the fact that the Rector is the appointed leader. If he has shown himself to be a man of judgment as well as enthusiasm, he has a right to expect a sympathetic consideration of his plans; and if, after full discussion, favorable action is taken, he should be able to count upon the support of the whole Vestry and through them of the Parish. In a well ordered Parish, Rector and Vestry work together as one, the Rector leading, the Vestry supporting him with full confidence and loyalty.

(2) As the Vestry represents the Parish, I wish that it were possible for the members of the Vestry to know personally a larger proportion of the people of the Parish. The Rector knows all. The Vestryman usually knows but very few. It is not his fault; he has no means of knowing them. At the same time, I am confident that, if the people of the Parish knew their officers better, and the officers, being earnest and enthusiastic men, knew the whole people, there would be vastly more unity and more momentum to the Parish life than there is today. How that may be accomplished I leave to you. I am sure, however, that our Parishes would do a mightier work if, by mutual acquaintance and a sympathy which comes with it, there were more esprit de corps. It is that which wins the battle, whether it be in a South African war or in the battle against godlessness in a town of Massachusetts.

Bishop Wise Holds Mission at Ft. Scott, Kan.

Bishop Wise's Mission at St. Andrew's Church, Ft. Scott, Kansas, was held from March 3rd to 10th. The Bishop arrived in Ft. Scott on Saturday night, March 2nd, and began the Sunday services with Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M. and morning prayer at 10:30. The Rector, Rev. R. W. Rhames, who also is in charge of St. John's Church, Girard, joined the Bishop at the evening service, which was the first regular mission service.

The preparation for this mission was conducted all the preceding week by a daily service and short address on the way to co-operate by work and prayer to make a mission successful. The early morning Eucharist was emphasized as the service of Intercession for the success of the mission. This resulted in a good attendance each day and a large per cent of the communicants at the close.

The Daily Tribune of Ft. Scott gave large contributions of notices and news about the mission, and the Parish published a display ad every day for two weeks on what may be called "Religious Rousers" to attract attention. These were not explanations of Church teaching on controverted points, but expressions of the common sense which underlies all religion. One of these paid advertisements is quoted as a sample.

"A Man is a Man for a That"

Pigs is pigs. There is no dishonor in being a pig, if you are a pig. But a man is a man for a' that. If you are a man you can't live like a pig. For the present enjoyment, for the food you eat. Fasting emphasizes the highest things in human nature. Fasting is a help to spiritual living. Lent is a call to Fasting and Prayer.

COME TO THE MISSSION

St. Andrew's Church, March 3 to 10

Other preparatory work was done by window posters, a big banner, automobile penants and service, and a helping band of Church scouts to deliver letters and messages.

Conferences on "How to Make Christians," were held each day at four o'clock with a large and enthusiastic attendance. These conferences roused great interest in parochial affairs and resulted in the lifting of a $4,500.00 debt of long standing. The mission preaching services were held at night and were attended by many outsiders. The service was short and unlitургical, followed by a sermon based on "The Prodigal Son," then after a hymn an "Instruction on the Teaching of the Church." Bishop Wise made the parable of the Prodigal Son so impressive and graphic that it seemed like a new Gospel of God's love for sinners. An influential Jewish family who were seen in constant attendance sent flowers for the Sunday services with a kind note of appreciation.

There were six baptisms, four adults and two children, and nine confirmations. St. Andrew's Church, Ft. Scott, is rejoicing in renewed spiritual life and confidence for the future.

Two new movements are going on for the continuation of the effects of the mission. One is the organization of a training class for workers under the Rector, and the other the formation of an organization for social services.

An Old Friend in New Quarters

Many readers will recall Dr. Mary Glenton as "somewhere" in the Mission field—long ago, it may be, in St. Peter's Hospital, Helena, Montana; then for a year in the negro work in Columbia, S. C.; again at Anvik on the Yukon; later for years at Wuchang, on the Yangtse; invalided home; "trying again" at the Settlement, La Grange, in the Diocese of Atlanta. An infected joint necessitated her leaving there, and after struggling a while to help in a children's home in Michigan, she went for treatment to the hospital of her training in Chicago. There it was found necessary to amputate, but with all her old courage and cheerfulness, she is accustoming herself to the makeshift which takes its place.

And now we hear of her from St. Agnes' Hospital, Raleigh, N. C., where she has been visiting in the late winter. Mrs. Hunter writes on the seventh of March:

"Dr. Glenton is really to be with us. She is improving steadily in her walking, though she feels it is very, very slow. She is able now to walk up and down stairs and make the rounds of the wards once every day, which is all that is necessary for a resident, as we have an interne and a regular hospital staff. She is to do a good deal in the way of drug room work, saving, she thinks, many dollars by compounding ointments and medicines herself. During her "visit" she has done a good deal of back filing work on charts, etc., and relieving me of some of the office work which has to be done at the hospital. She has not been idle at all since she came, and her cheerful spirit does us all good.

Our new superintendent of nurses, Mrs. Lottie R. Jackson, R. N., retains the old position as head nurse as well as the new as superintendent. She is very firm, but kind and friendly with the nurses and patients and very efficient. The hospital looks as clean as a pin, and she is never at a loss in an emergency. We have, too, a very good interne, one of our own graduates, who for the years he was in school was our confidential secretary and stenoghapher. Also, notwithstanding the exodus of so many doctors for war work, we have been able to keep a number of our general staff, including the most important of all, our surgeon-in-chief, Dr. Hubert A. Roster.

"I regret that we are facing a deficit in the hospital treasury. We have not enough money to pay a quarter of our February bills. This has not happened before in months, if in years."

Girls' Friendly Society of New York Makes Drive for Funds

A joint drive to raise sufficient money to increase and maintain their work and to provide for special war service, was begun March 6th by the Girls' Friendly Society and the Church Mission of Help, New York City. A meeting to inaugurate the drive was held in Cathedral Synod Hall that afternoon. Bishop Burch presided. Patriotic music and songs were kindly arranged for by Mr. Richards, Organist of St. James' Church. Mrs. Pease, Secretary of the Church Mission of Help, outlined its work among girls who, humanly speaking, never had a chance. During the past year, 469 girls have found sympathetic friends in this Society, ready and able to help them in their several needs.

Miss Potter, Manhattan Vice President of the G. F. S., most impressively spoke of the great need of ALL girls in these troublous times. The special war mission of the Girls' Friendly is to look out for girls unattached to churches or societies, who must be made to realize the importance of the service they can render their country. Very many have joined the Girls' Patriotic Service League. The Federal Government has given this special work in Westchester County, N. Y., to the Girls' Friendly. There is one Field Secretary; more are needed.

The great privilege of the presence of His Grace, the Archbishop of York, was granted to this meeting. The Archbishop is a patron of the Girls' Friendly Society in England, and for nine years was in charge of all the Church's rescue work in the city of London. With full knowledge of the work of our two Societies, he spoke on the present special need of guiding and protecting girlhood. Men have responded gallantly to their call to duty; so also have their womankind. Thousands upon thousands in England are working with the Red Cross in hospital and camp, in munitions factories, and also tilling the soil, and doing it cheerfully. These women and girls are laboring under new conditions, meeting temptations hitherto unknown, and they need the sympathy and love, as well as the protecting care, of all interested in their welfare. The entirely natural attraction of young men and women for each other is intensified by the excitement incident to the war. The need is for moral and spiritual self-control. There is a great spiritual awakening everywhere. We must come out of this struggle inspired by a new spiritual experience. The men are feeling this intensely. The strength of the women must be behind them. Their mothers, sisters, wives and sweethearts are a tower of moral defense to them. "We can live if you stand fast," said the Archbishop. Bishop Perry of Rhode Island also spoke and gave the final benediction.

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

Easter Day

We all love Easter Day in the Parish. It seems to have for many people a more spiritual appeal than Christmas Day. We do not have to seek far to account for this. Christmas time is a holiday season, a time of distractions. The people are rushed to weariness in buying gifts, addressing cards, making presents and decorating houses and trees. They are too harassed to appreciate or enjoy the full spiritual privileges of the day.

Then again, Christmas often falls on a week day. Our American people, except the Roman Catholics, have not the habit of thinking of a week day as just as suitable time for a Church service as a Sunday. Some seem to advocate the closing of the Church on Christmas Day, as if it were an intrusion. They forget that the Church has given Christmas Day to the race.

At Easter the atmosphere is different. The long season of Lent is now noticed if not observed by most Christian people. Good Friday is more and more observed and only ignorance prevents its universal observance. It is a strangely inconsistent and spiritually confusing thing to keep Easter and pay no attention to Good Friday.

At any rate, Easter is neither a time of gifts, nor of holiday distractions, nor does it fall on a week day. Hence it is more universally observed and our Churches are crowded.

This creates a problem for our clergy which they solve each according to his own judgment. Some of us revel in the satisfaction of a congregation for whom chairs must be carried in. It is so unusual. Some of us see the duty of providing for one service what might properly be distributed between two or three because we feel we have a chance (which will not occur again for a year) of making some impression upon the multitudes.

For my own part I have a suspicion that many strangers get the impression that, owing to its extreme length, the Easter service provides religion enough to last until Fall, at least. There is a danger here. Whether or not we can obviate the danger by not prolonging the service beyond the saturation point of the congregation, I am not sure. But if the chance or occasional attendant gets the impression that all of our services are as long as the Easter service, we can surely count him among the "missing."

Whatever may be our practice upon Easter Day, I am quite confident that the old practice of having together on the first Sunday of the month the Service of Morning Prayer and Holy Communion is passing away. It was productive of one of the most disconcerting spectacles ever witnessed in a church, the retreat of a vast number of the people after the prayer for Christ's Church Militant. There is really no need for the abandonment of the services by the people at this point. The people will remain if they are instructed properly and if the service of Holy Communion is not prolonged by any preliminary devotional exercises except a hymn. The sermon too, should be short, even upon Easter Day. We have scarcely any reason for making any service an ordeal.

Easter Day is a good day for the distribution of tracts or books on the Church to members of the congregation as they depart. Inadequate as occasional attendance at Church may be, the strangers there on Easter Day have been prompted to attend the service for a reason that implies a choice of your Church. A book or tract may bring some further interest and possibly attachment.

In the brightness and joyousness of the day, in the midst of unaccustomed numbers and with the prospect of a large offering, we must not forget the real meaning of the day, and our real duty in it, "that like as Christ died, and rose again for us, so should we die from sin and rise again unto righteousness."

stern and often harsh measures adopted by the monks and friars of the early Christian Church for the mortification of the flesh and the chastening of the spirit, the cutting off of a few superfluities, and the renunciation of some accustomed pleasures and luxuries, were not impressive. But they were seeds from the original hardy plant of Christian self-denial. And they were planted in good soil. And now that the country has need of the full measure of the primal virtue, they are springing into vigorous growth.

The religious season of Lent symbolizes and emphasizes the larger national season of Lent through which every man and woman in America is passing. Nobody can place any definite limit to this period of world passion. It may last for forty days or forty weeks or forty months, but until the glorious Easter of humanity triumphant at last breaks above the calvary of democracy's crucifixion, every American will "carry on" to the finish, however severe the self-sacrifices and however prolonged the trial and the suffering.

That the self-denial already precticed on every side by America's devoted men and women, since the necessity of war refused all compromise, has attained amazing proportions can be demonstrated in a prosaic but very convincing fashion—by the cold test of figures. Nor do we need the hair shirt or the scourge or the stone cell of the hermit or the religious recluse to add a dramatic touch to the recitation. Possibly our lesser present self-denials are more worthy than these because they are serving a worthier purpose. They are not isolated but communal.

To compute accurately the figures, even to the nearest millions of dollars, of the sums subscribed voluntarily by the American nation for the great cause we have espoused is beyond the power of any statistician. In nine months' time the membership of the Red Cross has increased from

Staying at Home

When the Government exempted the clergy from active military service it knew what it was about. Many have refused exemption and gone to the front. All honor to these brave fellows. In certain respects they are to be envied. They will see and hear things which will remain indelibly upon their memories. Their lives will acquire an experience incalculable in value. When they return they will be the idols of society and every ear will be attentive as they rehearse things now unlawful for men to tell. But we are not thinking especially of these at present. We are thinking instead of the men who remain at home. These latter are not one whit less patriotic than the others. They are neither cowards nor slackers, and when the end comes, the honor due them will be none less than the honor paid those who have gone to the front. This is not an individual, nor even a national conflict, but it has enveloped the world in its scope. It's a great thing these days to behold the exalted position of our own beloved America. It's an inspiration to remember that today the sun never sets on the Star Spangled Banner; and what the sun doesn't do, it's a safe wager that no German will be able to do. As we recall these things our blood runs a trifle swifter and we should like to get into the thick of the fight and snatch from the hand of Liberty the victor's crown. But we are not going to do it. We are going to stay right here and work along the same plane, for there are a lot of things here that must be done. We are making the supreme sacrifice by staying at home. Remember the day the circus came to our home town and we wanted to go the worst way, but father was poor in those days and our little brother wanted to go as badly as we did but there was only enough for one admission. The little fellow went and had the fun. We stayed home and said we didn't mind—but we did. The analogy is very poor, but the moral is the same. Uncle Sam has straddled the Atlantic and a lot of us must stand by on this side to prevent his foot slipping. Over there he is making the world safe for democracy and a lot of the boys have gone over to lend a hand. Back here he is making democracy safe for the world and its our job to back him up on this side. There is more need for religion in America today than ever before, because the whole world is depending on us to furnish the brand that will save the State and bind the wounds of the nations. The peoples of earth have forgotten many essential things and we must refresh their memories. The Cross has been buried under a load of false sectarian, commercial and political ideas and we must dig it out. The Sabbath and God's Holy Name have been profaned beyond expression and we must call the people to repentance. Some of our fine young soldiers and sailor boys are never coming back and the Church cannot afford to send them forth unprepared to meet their God in the Judgment. There are going to be many widows and orphans in America before the treaties of peace are signed and somebody must be here to comfort the broken hearted and care for the fatherless ones. The Altars of Christendom must be kept in readiness for the offering of the Blessed Sacrifice when the burden of sin and grief becomes intolerable. All these things and more remain to be done by the brave fellows who stay at home. Little is known of Simon of Cyrene save that he was present when our Lord most needed him, but that fact alone immortalized his name. There is considerable doubt about the identity of her who broke the alabaster box over the feet of Jesus, but she did "what she could" and her Friend was pleased. The press will probably not make much fuss over the men who stay at home and tend the Altars, but He who is the rewarder of the faithful will mark these things to their credit against that Day.

Forward Movement at Dayton, Ohio

A notable step was taken in the forward movement of the Church in Dayton, Ohio, at a recent meeting held at Christ Church, which was attended by Bishop Reese, Archdeacon Dodshon, the Rev. T. W. Cooke, Rector of St. Andrew's Church; the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer, Minister-in-Charge of Christ Church; Mr. Oswald Cammann, Senior Warden of Christ Church, and Mr. George Harshman, Senior Warden of St. Andrew's Church. Tentative action was taken pending its ratification by the Vestries of the Parishes participating, that a committee, to be known as the Dayton Inter-Parochial Church Extension Committee be organized, to be composed of the Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese, the Archdeacon of the Convocation, the clergy of the Dayton Parishes, and the Senior and Junior Wardens of each Parish, to promote Church extension in the city of Dayton and vicinity. The Rev. Mr. Reinheimer was elected Executive Secretary. This action promises much for the future development of the Church in Dayton, which will go far towards doing away with mistaken parochialism, and place the work of the Church on a basis that will command and make available the interest and loyalty of every Churchman in the community. A plan was formulated at the meeting for the development of Church work at Oakwood, and the Rev. Mr. Cooke was given oversight of the work at St. John's Church.

THE FACT OF THE RESURRECTION

These warm bodies, these seeing eyes, these hands, these throbbing nerves, this beating heart, will some day be a heap of nerveless, bloodless ashes. And there is only one fact with which we can confront this fact of death—and that is the fact of Christ's resurrection—the earnest of our own.

Bishop Harris Holds Services on Snowbound Train

Meals while you wait and religious services Sunday morning on schedule time was the experience of 50 passengers on a train held in a snowbank near Loomis, Mich., 26 hours. The passengers were all happy and not the least put out by the delay.

The Right Rev. Robert L. Harris, the new Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Marquette, accompanied by the Rev. W. M. Poyseor, general missionary, was on his way to Menominee to meet the communicants of Grace Church and to conduct services Sunday, and was snowbound with the other passengers. The accommodating train crew kept the passengers comfortable Saturday evening, Saturday night and Sunday morning with well heated coaches and plenty to eat, and the Bishop and Mr. Poyseor conducted services on board the train at 10:30 o'clock Sunday morning.

The brakemen were sent back to Loomis for coal to keep the fires going and the stores and farm houses were canvassed for good things to eat. There was no kicking or bickering, and all turned in for the night on the seats, improvising beds as best they could.

SERVICES ON TRAIN

In the morning, Bishop Harris, possibly through force of habit and to properly observe the Lord's Day, went about the preparations for holding services the same as if a vested choir were present to arrange all the preliminaries. At the hour of 10:30 when services were being held in every church in the land, services aboard the snowbound train conformed to the religious program throughout the nation.

In the afternoon a snow plow with a crew of 40 shovelers arrived and dug the train out, and the passengers arrived at Menominee about 4 o'clock, more pleased than disappointed with their experience.

The Season of Self-Denial

Under the test of actual worldly experience, the religious observances ordained by the pioneers of Christianity have proved of immense practical value to mankind. They were as truly social, civic and personal as spiritual and religious. Rites and ceremonies and fixed seasons served chiefly to impress them on the minds and hearts of the worshipers. Especially is this true of the Lenten fast.

When the first organizers of the Christian Church set apart this special season as forty days for self-denial, personal abstinence and individual discipline they did far more than simply commemorate these qualities in the life of the Redeemer. Apart from the spiritual significance of this most sacred of Church observances, they supplied through it a physical and moral tonic for all Christian people. And today, in its hour of greatest trial and difficulty, Christian America is reaping the reward of this old-established period of self-control.

For among all the sects of our present Christian faith the season of Lent has been held in reverence. Some have observed it more ceremoniously and formally than others, but to all it has stood for that most essential of all virtues, the virtue of self-denial. We can say without exaggeration that the spirit with which the whole American nation is meeting the present exhaustive sacrifices, in the name of suffering humanity, is closely associated with the religious discipline taught by the fathers and followed by the children since the first Christian Church was organized in Corinth.

During the latter days of peace and affluence, before the hell-hounds of Prussia were turned loose upon the world, it is true that the self-denials practiced during Lent by the American people appeared somewhat trivial and unimportant. Compared with the 500,000 to 23,000,000, while the funds subscribed to the work of cure and rescue run into the hundreds of millions of dollars. During their last year the Young Men's Christian Association collected $35,000,000 for war relief and the fund is still growing. The Young Women's Christian Association is cusseccfully carrying out a drive for $4,000,000 for the same purpose. The many fraternal orders no less than the different churches in America are all pouring streams of gold into the reservoir. To the two issues of Liberty Loans the American people have subscribed $7,500,000,000; men, women and children are turning their small savings into war stamps in quantities that will make the final results a revelation.

Now let the citizens pause and consider just what these billions of dollars—sums beyond the imagination of the mathematician or the poet to even vaguely conceive—really represent. They are the product of countless and ceaseless acts of self-denial that in their magnitude and devotion surpass anything of the sort ever witnessed before in the records of the nations. All this mighty sum was offered voluntarily in the course of a few months by a people actuated by altruistic ideals through an unbroken period of abnegation. We called them cold figures, but every digit is ablaze with generosity, unselfishness, sacrifice, patriotism, religion, Christianity—they prove that this nation will gladly deny itself personal pleasure and comfort to make others happier and freer in lands not so blest as we are and threatened, as we can never be, by powerful and unscrupulous neighbors.

Lent—the season of self-denial—is not the whole United States observing it as only a people trained to Christian devotion and filled with the Christian spirit can adquately observe it? These small acts of personal surrender—the giving up of a theater party here, a box of candy or a bouquet of flowers there, the substitution of plain fare for rich diet, the cutting off of a few pleasure rides, of an after-dinner cigar, the indorsement of prohibition by those who can use the privilege of the wine cup without abusing it; 101 such small acts of patriotic self-denials are insuring at the close of the season of Lent the singing of Te Deums by a world freed from the age-worn menace of militarism.—Los Angeles Sunday Times, Feb. 17, 1918.

Poems Worth Preserving

Selected by Pastor Suburbanus

AURORA LUCIS RUTILAT

Ancient Latin Hymn ascribed to St. Ambrose.
Translated by Bishop James H. Van Buren.

Crimson glows the ruddy morning,
Alleluias fill the skies,
Earth rejoices, hell is mourning,
Mingled groans and shouts arise.

For the King, renowned, all glorious,
Comes His captive saints to free,
Over death and hell victorious,
Pain and woe before Him flee!

Vain the rock with sealed portal,
Him no Roman guard can keep,
Lo! in triumph clad, immortal,
He, the Victor, wakes from sleep.

Groans forevermore are ended,
Ended now the woes of hell,
"Jesus back from death ascended!"
Angels bright the message tell.

Chosen ones, with visage mournful,
Wept their Lord, betrayed and slain,
By the cruel, base and scornful,
Tortured, agonized with pain.

Now with voices wondrous tender,
Angels to the women speak,
"Homage to your Master render,
Him in Galilee to seek."

While they now with joy and fearing
Speed, the message to repeat,
They behold the Lord appearing,
Worship Him, and kiss His feet.

When His brethren learn the story,
Hasten they to Galilee;
There, in resurrection glory,
Longing sore His face to see.

Now the world with light rejoices,
Cloudless beams the Easter sun,
Saints lift up exultant voices,
They have seen th' Anointed One.

Seen by them, His body wounded,
Shines as with celestial light,
Christ, with witnesses surrounded,
Stands confessed, the Lord of might.

Christ, Thou King, most gracious ever,
Claim these restless hearts of ours,
That with rapture ending never,
We may justly praise Thy powers!

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

Wake Robin

The greatest Queen in all the world and the one that has reigned longest upon the Earth is Queen Flora, the queen of all the Flowers since the world began.

One year she awoke after a long winter's sleep. There were no Flowers, no Grass, no Birds singing, no Butterflies flitting about, none of the glad things of Spring to welcome her, and this made her very sad.

Queen Flora saw just one Flower on the bank of a little Brook, a Trillium. She had been sleeping all the Winter through in the dark Earth where Mother Nature had placed her to rest when Jack Frost first appeared. Gradually she had unfolded the green Leaves that protected her as she came up through the brown Earth and faded dry leaves. As the Leaves spread apart she herself appeared in all her whiteness, smiling up at the Sun. How sweet and pure and fresh she looked.

It was just at this moment that Queen Flora saw her, and Trillium bowed her head in reverence to her Queen. In a grieved voice the Queen asked, "Where are all your sister Flowers, that none are here to welcome me this fair morning of the Year?" "They are sleeping in their little beds, my Queen. The Winter has been long and cold, the Snow was deep and the Sun had a hard time to melt it away. But then, you know, I am one of the first to awaken. Still, all should be waking up by this time."

Then the Queen, smiling graciously, said, "I will awake them." She waved her wand over the sleeping, silent Earth, and lo! there sprang to life a thousand Flowers, graceful in form, bright in their many colors, sending their fragrance over all the land. She waved her magic wand again, and then came Birds and Butterflies and Bees, the air was laden with hum and song. And their gladsome voices mingling with the fragrance of the Flowers, told to men, the old, old story, yet ever new, "Spring is here."

The Queen called Trillium to her side and said to her, "Each year I have much to do at this season and I need a helper. I have task enough to wake the Flowers. It shall be your task to awaken the Birds. The Robin shall be the first true mark of Spring, and as it is your duty to awaken him, you shall be called "Wake Robin."

How a Woman Kept Guard at Changeha

The New York Times for February 15, 1918, contained a statement from Bishop Bashford, the Methodist Episcopal Bishop in China, in view of possible race wars to arise when this war shall be ended. "The only solution of the problem," he concludes, " is the multiplication of Christian Missions, to win the yellow and black races to Christianity."

Miss Alice Peavey has neither Bishop Bashford's years nor his experience, but fifteen months in China have brought her to the same conclusion. She went from Western Massachusetts in the summer of 1916, spent her first half-year at the language school in Peking and her first summer in Kuling, then in the fall of 1917 was stationed at Changeha, at which time the Rev. and Mrs. Walworth Tyne were at home on furlough.

Thence she writes, on December 10, 1917, "I suppose people at home are tired of hearing that now is the time to evangelize China, but those of us here can see, oh, so plainly, that now as China is beginning to grasp western civilization, she is going to be pretty much what we make her. Now when she is going through the internal strife that nearly all countries have had to go through, we must give her of our best and set before her Christian ideals. She will pull through if we have faith in her and take advantage of every opening."

It is not every new-comer to whom one would defer, but sometimes a brief experience gives discernment which many uneventful years would fail to bring. In forwarding the letter from which we have quoted, Bishop Roots says of Miss Peavey, "She has been doing excellent work at Changeha, and her conduct during the disturbances of which she speaks in such a modest way was beyond all praise."

Remaining portions of Miss Jeavey's letter read as follows:

"Changeha is a fascinating place, but very, very different from the north and much more typically Chinese than Peking. The streets are very narrow and dirty. Nearly all the houses have two stories; in the north they have only one. It is a much larger city than I expected to find, and there are over two hundred foreigners here. In some ways it is not at all like Central China, in others I feel as though I were off the ends of the earth. I have seen only three newspapers in the three months I have been here, and the mails come by fits and starts. Now that the water is low, boats cannot come up, and mails, etc., have to come in little sampans which are very easily upset. Until the Tyngs' return I am living in the Yale Mission Hospital just outside the city.

"I am so glad I am not an official in China; their lives seem to be such uncertain quantities. A little while ago the ex-governor was in hiding in this Mission till he could get a foreigner to escort him safely down the river.

"At last I feel that I am really in a non-Christian country, that has been closed to western civilization. Here I have had my first sight of what a country divided within itself, without a real head, with different customs and not even the same spoken dialect, can come to. It is quite the most interesting and thrilling thing I have ever seen. Somehow there is a touch of medievalism in it to me.

"One night last month I went to bed with everything quiet, expecting to go on my usual round of duties the rest of the winter. The next afternoon the city suddenly became full of northern soldiers retreating from the south. Still I thought nothing of it. Late that night I heard that our Mission had been appointed a Red Cross station and that the Chinese were fleeing there for foreign protection.

"With the Tyngs away there were no foreigners there. I could not get in that night because the city was under martial law and anyone on the streets after 8 p. m. was shot. The next morning I was awakened by the servants coming into my room and telling me they were very frightened and that there was a big fire near. I jumped up and found that the barracks near us were burning and the northern soldiers were retreating under my window and I could hear shooting everywhere. At seven I went in to the Mission and found over a hundred Chinese women and children gathered there. After quieting them and having the morning service (which I very much fear was only a lip service, considering the shooting that was going on around us), I went out on the street to do what I could for the wounded and dead. The most distressing thing was to meet a man going to be executed and have him tell me he was a Christian and ask me to save him. I was perfectly helpless. Mr. Fang, our Chinese priest, spent the whole day on the street, taking wounded to the hospital and helping everywhere. The American Consul ordered foreign women off the street but allowed me to stay on at the Mission, on the condition that a foreign man stay in the Mission and go out with me when I went. The man he sent is a young Churchman from St. Bartholomew's Parish, Norfolk, who is out here for a year under the Yale Mission. The streets seemed fairly quiet all day, foreigners were safe anywhere. We only had to look out for pot-shooting and hid in stores when it got too thick.

The whole thing seems a tempest in a teapot, and the Chinese become scared at anything. The northern soldiers were here twenty-four hours before the southerners, and so scared that most of the killing was amongst themselves in their desire to get away. Many were killed trying to go aboard a moving train, many in trying to swim out to boats in the river, and practically all the shooting was done by them. At the end of the week, there were six hundred wounded in the Red Cross Hospital and seven thousand prisoners of war (whom the foreigners are taking care of), and yet there had been no real fighting within a good many miles of us.

"I spent that whole week living at the Mission and existing on canned goods and an alcohol stove. After Sunday night some of the Chinese left, but we had about fifty all through the week. On Monday the southern soldiers arrived, and after that all northerners who came were simply disarmed and taken prisoners. The police disappeared and every official left the province. There was no one in command and no one to make or enforce laws, and the city was said to be in a state of anarchy, but a more quiet state of anarchy I cannot imagine. Of course there was some looting, but only in houses of those who had supported the north. It is very interesting to think that only seven years ago the foreigners here were looted, and now the Chinese come to the foreigners for protection! The times are changing!

"On Monday the Consuls ordered the women to leave. A few did, but before the others were ready there was fighting down the river so that they could not leave. The single women had no intention of doing so.

"During that week at our Mission we harbored the workers of a lace factory, whom I have been very anxious to get hold of. They are all non-Christian women from the country, and I hope their stay with us had some effect upon them. At least they have been coming to church ever since. At the end of the week all the Chinese left, and I was very glad to get back to bed and bath. The next week I helped out at the Red Cross Hospital, as they were rushed to death and most of the foreign nurses ill. At present all is quiet and peaceful, but we hear today that the southerners have been beaten in the north and that the northerners are coming back to rescue the prisoners. However, that whole week was a most valuable one to me in many ways. I only hope and pray that I rightly used the wonderful openings which were given me, and that even though my Chinese is very poor, I made the people realize that I am here to serve them."

THE RESURRECTION GIVES US THE THOUGHT OF HEAVEN

A place somewhere, it matters not where, so long as it is where the holy feet of Jesus stand; where His lips that left blessings on earth will speak, and where His voice of welcome will sound in our ears as sweeter music than all the choirs of heaven.

Written Word of Cheer

There is probably no agency in the field, endeavoring to keep the home and Church ties a little closer, which is daily in touch through personal letters with more soldiers and sailors than is the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which under the direction of Executive Secretary F. S. Titsworth and Chief Secretary B. F. Finney, has its headquarters at Church House, Twelfth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia.

Through its secretaries in the field, through the civilian chaplains of the Church's War Commission, through regular chaplains and through Y. M. C. A. secretaries who are Churchmen, and through the home Parishes and Dioceses, the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood has been diligently gathering together the names and addresses of Churchmen who are serving in the Army and Navy. This gathering has been going on day after day until the card records now contain the names and addresses of more than 20,000 young Churchmen, and in addition to their names, the cards usually bear other information, such as home Parish, Brotherhood chapter, if any, and pertinent items which tell of their closer touch with the Church.

And for each name in the card index, a kind hearted brotherly letter has been sent. A copy of St. Andrew's Cross goes with this first letter and then when the answer comes back, other letters go out, the St. Andrew's Cross is sent regularly, if it is requested, and a close personal contact through the medium of the written word is kept with the men in the camps, in the naval training stations, aboard ship and overseas.

The hearty response which these letters meet with is sufficient to show how they are adding their "bit" to the work of keeping the home and Church ties from breaking.

Dean Pond Supports the Billy Sunday Chicago Revival

Dean Pond of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Chicago, and Superintendent of the city mission work comments as follows on the Billy Sunday meetings in Chicago, through the columns of the Tribune:

"Monday afternoon, at the Hotel La Salle, the Billy Sunday meeting might easily have passed for a Presbyterian affair or a Methodist meeting, or as a program operated for the benefit of the Baptists.

"Had I been called on to say anything, I should have used for my introduction the thought that I affiliated myself with Mr. Sunday's campaign as an Episcopalian, and, by the grace of God, I intended to come out of the campaign as an Episcopalian, but a more consecrated kind of an Episcopalian.

LISTS CAUSES FOR EVIL

"Waiving aside some other matters, there are two reasons why I am helping, to the best of my ability, to make this work of the evangelism of Chicago a success while the opportunity is at our doors. With the best figures that I have at hand, which are up to date, including the licensed saloons as well as the unlicensed, there are 5,987 saloons in operation in our city limits today. There are 283 liquor selling dance halls; 167 vicious poolrooms. ther are only 1,424 churches.

In my official capacity as superintendent of the Episcopal city missionary work I have ministered to precisely 169,500 men, women, and children in some five penal institutions in the last three years. Most of them seem to be young people. Thousands, who have made a confidant of me, told of their sad plight, are victims of sin. As far as I have the facts, the liquor business and the lust business seem to be the chief factors in this downfall of thousands of our people from year to year.

TWO WARDS BLACKEST

For the last eleven years I have specialized in relief work in the two blackest wards, spiritually speaking, in the city of Chicago. Those two wards, according to the police court records published from time to time, seem to produce more criminals, from year to year, than the total produced in all other wards put together. And in these two wards the saloon has been the big evil which is fighting against the home, industry, the church, the juvenile problem, and the health interests.

And I am boosting Mr. Sunday's work for the sake of the good which he has proven his ability to do. I am not prepared to discuss at this time the evils that may follow as a consequence.

My second reason for supporting Mr. Sunday is my concern about the use of my own influence in this great municipal campaign for righteousness which is upon us.

ALL WATCH FOR SIGN

Some of our best citizenship which may be wasted in this fashion is reading the newspapers today, to see where the so-called Christian ministers of Chicago stand in regard to Mr. Sunday's fight for Christ as against the saloon. Any attitude of mine which may cause them not to go to hear Mr. Sunday would worry me much, because of what I know regarding the types in our municipal jails. But if this word of mine, which I am penning by request, will help some one lost sheep to go to hear Mr. Sunday, by way of finding Christ, then I shall be happy. I shall not be concerned what the "ninety and nine" think about themselves, as certain methods are employed for the finding of that lost sheep.

The Soldier and the Camp Secretary

An Incident of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew Work in one of Uncle Sam's Cantonments.

(Owing to the modesty of the Camp Secretary, his name and the name of the cantonment are not given in this report of an incident in one of the camp hospitals.)

The scene was a camp hospital in one of the Southern cantonments.

A soldier lay on one of the cots. One week before he had injured his foot. It was an ugly injury, and septic poisoning set in.

The man grew worse. He appeared to be dying.

During the first stages of his illness, when he was able to converse with the nurses and the men around him, he had won the sympathy and friendship of all.

He was one of those men who seem to radiate sunshine. His laugh was infectious; he had a pleasant word for everyone; one became his friend merely by looking at him.

There was genuine sorrow among the nurses and the other patients when the poison began to seep through his body, and he grew languid and too weak to speak.

Finally, the doctors decided that he was about to die. He was sinking rapidly. His case appeared hopeless.

Those around him noticed that he appeared to be looking for someone. Weak as he was, he would raise his head from the pillow and gaze toward the door.

This was repeated many times.

"Are you looking for someone?" the nurse inquired.

"Yes," he replied, feebly, "I'm looking for that Brotherhood man who gave me a Testament."

He was referring to the Camp Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, who had visited him on several occasions.

The nurse decided to break the bad news to him.

"You are a very sick man," she said.

"I know it," replied the patient.

"Don't you want to see a minister?" was the next question.

"No," answered the man. He explained that he had never been connected with a Church.

"But I would like to see that Brotherhood man," he told the nurse.

A few minutes later, the Brotherhood Camp Secretary entered the hospital. The sick man greeted him with a smile and a feeble hand-clasp.

They conversed for a few minutes, and it seemed to have the effect of a tonic upon the patient.

But he was very weak. His head sank back upon the pillow. The Brotherhood man sat there, clasping the soldier's hand, until he fell into a doze.

Within a few minutes he was asleep.

When the soldier awoke, he was better. The doctor was summoned, and examined him.

"He has passed the crisis; he will live," he said.

Whereupon there was rejoicing in that camp hospital.

There was rejoicing in the heart of the Camp Secretary.

But he thinks that prayer had something to do with it.

Bishop Stirs Interest

HOUGHTON GAZETTE COMMENTS ON VISIT TO COPPER COUNTRY

The Houghton Gazette remarks on the first visit to the copper country of Bishop Harris as follows:

"The first visit of Coadjutor Bishop Robert L. Harris of the Episcopal Church to his new field of activity, the Upper Peninsula, has created an unusual amount of interest. This is due, in a large measure, we believe, to the charming personality of the Bishop himself. Outside of the Church and among the members, the Bishop has created a most favorable impression. This impression is based on his apparent energy, his certain Christian attitude, and his willingness to undertake a work that requires a maximum of talent and effort. His Pastoral Letter, published complete in the Gazette of Wednesday, was a very fine American document. The Church is, and has been during all its life in this Uppper Peninsula, a strong and worthy influence for good, for progress and development. There is no doubt whatever that it will make further rapid strides in the way of a kind of progress that results in a betterment of the communities in which it operates."

Our New York Letter

VARIOUS WAR FUNDS

The raising of great funds for war work is the order of the day in New York, as elsewhere. The Jews were early at it with $5,000,000, and now the Baptists and Roman Catholics are raising $1,500,000 and $2,500,000, respectively. This refers to what may be called the Metropolitan District. The Roman Catholic Fund is for the work of Knights of Columbus in various camps, and is supposed to be drawn from the Archdiocese of New York, which includes not only the city, but several adjoining counties. Although the Archdiocese has more members than the whole Episcopal Church in the United States, and includes some of the wealthiest men of the country, besides most of the metropolitan breweries and saloon keepers, the Roman Catholic committees are openly and urgently soliciting contributions from every Protestant source. A considerable part of the more than $2,000,000 raised up to date came from Jews, and some of the largest gifts, notably one of $50,000, are from Episcopalians. Every door bell in the city was rung, and every person asked, "irrespective of creed", as the convenient saying is. This energetic catholicity of method is in line with the well known custom of the Roman Catholic Church everywhere find it discreet and protective to contribute generously. In the present case, there is the additional desire to aid all patriotic effort. It is interesting to note that Rabbi Silverman and Dr. Manning, Rector of Trinity, were much applauded speakers at the great rally in the Hippodrome last Sunday night for this K. of C. Fund.

ARCHBISHOP OF YORK RETURNS TO NEW YORK

The Archbbishop of York, after flying trips elsewhere, returned to New York for Holy Week, and was the preacher of the Thuee Hours' Service in Old Trinity. Perhaps the most satisfactory part of his whole itinerary, clerically speaking, was the meeting with the clergy of New York and neighboring Dioceses at 3 o'clock on Maundy Thursday, March 28, in St. Thomas' Church. This was arranged by Dr. Stires, the Rector, acting as President of the New York Churchman's Association, the largest of our clergy clubs.. It was a means of allaying a growing criticism that, besides a failure to let the poorer elements of the city hear the distinguished guest, the average clergyman had been practically shut out from the privilige of meeting one of his greatest and most admired official leaders. Boston had provided a fraternal opportunity at a luncheon in the City Club, by the generosity and thoughtfulness of Bishop Lawrence, and that included all the clergy of the Diocese; but in New York City the clergy, outside of the exclusive "Thirty-nine Club" and a Presbyterian ministers' dinner in the Archbishop's honor, were not considered until this belated event in St. Thomas'.

It will help those disposed to complain to be more charitable if they recall a witicism of the Evening Post editorial paragrapher. After the end of the first strenuous week of Archbishop Lang's stay (or flight) among us, the editor remarked that by an unfortunate inadvertance it was discovered, too late for rectification, that nineteen minutes of the Archbishop's time had been left without an engagement, but that suitable apologies would be made on the floor of the House of Commons, and perhaps the affair could be amicably settled without international difficulty.

Perhaps the thing that saves the Archbishop from break-down is his powerful and musical voice, which he never has to strain in order to be heard at a reasonable distance.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS

Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist and master of the choir of St. Thomas' Church, was once organist of York Minster, and brought with him to America not only great gifts and extraordinary Church experience, but an unusual love of public choral work. Each year since coming to New York he has got together a chorus of several hundred singers and rendered some famous piece of music, either in the Parish Church on Fifth Avenue or in some popular hall. March 20, this year, he gave Cardinal Newman's "Dream of Gerontius", set to music by Sir Edward Elgar. He was assisted by the St. Thomas' Festival Chorus, St. Thomas Church Choir, the Choir of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and the orchestra of the Symphony Society of New York. Mr. Reed Miller was the tenor, Mr. Robert Maitland, baritone, and Madame Nevada Van Der Veer, contralto. There were nearly 2,000 people in the Church. It was a wonderful sight to see the choir and chancel massed with the hundreds of musicians in cotta and cassock. The singing was extraordinarily effective in the beautiful edifice, the muttering and roaring of the demons being as dramatically impressive in their way as was the beautiful carolling of "the angelic voices" welcoming the soul of Gerontius. Dr. Stires had prayers before and after the music. For the first time in any great public way, a fine new patriotic hymn, beginning, "Heaven sent liberty, our nation's pride", was sung by the choirs and the congregation.

The Red Cross work benefited to the amount of several thousand dollars by the contributions of those who were admitted by card.

CHURCHES ECONOMIZE

The larger Parishes of the city have had a higher income than ever the past Winter, but a great effort has been made to cut down running expenses, in order to put more and more strength into war activities. Dr. Stires expresses it this way: "Our dearest and our best, all our toil and our treasure are well spent to achieve victory. Let us rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer in the holiest cause which ever appealed to men." St. Thomas' is said to have saved $8,000 on parochial expenses, and St. Bartholomew's $6,000. This is done by avoidance of things important, but not essential. One item, for example, was in the reduction of of the number of copies of expensive Year Books. There is also a disposition on the part of Rectors to get along without assistants. Because of the severity of the Winter, it was not possible to save on the heat bills—even though rooms were closed, and in some cases the Church itself was left cold and unused for a month or more. Steam bills were almost doubled in many Parishes, though the heat given was less than ever. It is worth recording in this connection that St. Thomas' Parish expends about six dollars for "outside" work to every dollar put into parochial effort. St. Thomas' and Grace contributed together nearly $100,000 to the National War Commission Fund of our Church, almost one-fifth of the total amount. This is explained better by loyalty than by wealth.

A SUCCESSFUL CAMPAIGN

The Every Name campaign, just completed at the Chapel of the Intercession, was the largest ever conducted in any single Church in the country. Between 2 and 4 o'clock, 6,118 persons at 2,350 addresses were called on; 1,185 pledges were received, totalling $18,875, an increase of 188 per cent over last year's pledges, which amounted to $6,500. The object of the campaign was to increase interest not only in the war work of the Church, but to meet the demands both in money and workers caused by the war. The Honor Roll of the Intercession now numbers 187. The Rev. Milo H. Gates, D. D., is Vicar of this energetic part of Trinity Parish, and is greatly in demand as a preacher, because of his clear, manly thought and delivery.

Ordination at St. John's Church, Wichita, Kansas

On Passion Sunday, Mr. Percy T. Fenn, Jr., the son of the Rector of the Parish, was ordained Deacon by Bishop Wise. By a peculiar coincidence the ordination took place on the 29th anniversary of his father's ordination to the Diaconate, at Zion Church, Dobbs Ferry, New York.

Mr. Fenn came on from Cambridge Theological School that he might be ordained in his Parish Church, and he returned immediately to finish his studies. He will graduate with his

Church Training and Deaconess' House—a Splendid Institution

By Mary Louise Hudson

"This is the law of the House—the whole limit thereof round about shall be most Holy."

One can not enter even the vestibule of the Church Training and Deaconess House at Philadelphia without being impressed with the strength and beauty of that motto which falls as a blessing of peace on him as he waits at the door for entrance into the sweetly beautiful family and spiritual life that exists within. It is as though in leaving the sordid street, he passes through a cleansing fire in standing beneath such a motto before entering walls which immediately impress him as being "most Holy."

Primarily this House is a Home. It was built as a home, and the atmosphere of family life of years ago permeates through every room, and the blessing of that atmosphere falls upon us who are privileged to live within its walls. Truly the heritage of hopes and ambitions of the saints of God who have made this house possible for us falls upon us with their special prayer for the spread of Christ's Kingdom on earth.

The family life is demonstrated in the hominess of the drawing rooms, which are typical and characteristic of any family living room; baskets of sewing and knitting about; books and magazines on the table and music open upon the piano. Our one hour of the day when all cares and worries are put aside and we meet for a sweet and intimate family time together is indeed an hour when character is molded; the hour which influences all our lives and follows us as we leave this house for our own work elsewhere. One can not be in the atmosphere of our family circle long without raising to a higher standard already high ideals, and without feeling a zeal for greater attainments. The influence of our House Mother characterizes this hour, and her sweet motherliness and understanding is our inspiration.

At the top of the stairs, with the door constantly open, and where the students are constantly reminded of the presence of God, as they pass to and fro to their work, is the Chapel—a consecrated place breathing the spirit of departed saints—saints who have left their mantle of grace to fall upon us; saints who have left their influence in the world by "work well done"; a chapel filled with sacred memories and enriched by loving memorials. As one enters one is unconsciously strengthened by the motto on the door which is very much the motto of the House and the spirit of the Home: "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." Only by prayer can we gain knowledge and strength, and now certainly do we feel the pressing need to learn His will and be ready to perform it. If our worship and praise to our Lord and Master can in any way prove our love and devotion to Him, then most certainly in our little "Haven of Peace" do we raise with one accord our hymns of peace and love over the turmoil of the world at the present time. The service flag hanging near the altar, with its one star, is emblematic of our gift toward our country and our spirit of service while one of our students is in active duty as a nurse and spiritual leader. Certainly now as never before does the Church need such women. With our clergy going as chaplains and our fine laymen as soldiers, the women must rise to carry on the work here. Seventy thousand of our laymen are in the trenches and seventy-five chaplains are already taken from the home fields, and as this is an age for vocational work and specialization of all kinds, we women are strongly feeling the call to action in the vineyard of our Lord. Our young women blindly go into Y. M. C. A. work, settlement work and general philanthropy, hunting for an outlet for their pent up desires to do relief work, never realixing that the Church for over twenty years has offered training for those very things and has fitted them for very effective work in the practical lines of relief and usefulness which every true Christion woman is best fitted to do.

The highest ideals and influences effect our lives in the Church Training and Deaconess House. The Board of Managers are all strong, spiritual women who give us freely of their interest and love. Our instructors are truly servants of God, and every lecture given us is a free will offering from a very busy life. The inspiration and spiritual guidance of these men in our lives is immeasurable, and each student feels an untold debt of gratitude to them for their untiring devotion.

It is impossible to continue further with this "impression" of our House and the divinely beautiful and blessed influence of it without paying the just and loving tribute to our dear Miss Coles, who is probably the one most influential in bringing it to pass and has given us most deeply of her love and interest. Being interested in Church work for women, she gave the house, 708 Spruce Street, for the purpose of a "Church Training House." Just as it was about to be opened, under the guidance of Bishop Whitaker and Deaconess Sanford, the order of Deaconesses was established in this country, and Miss Cole immediately enlarged the title to "Church Training and Deaconess House." Miss Coles continues her love and personal interest in the gifts and it is a blessing of great value to have her visit the House and shed the radiance of her personality. She is, indeed, one of the Lord's saints, and her spirit will live forever in this House and in the girls doing their Master's work "in all the world" after leaving here. Under such influences and surroundings, our lives are indeed blessed.

Talks on Favorite Hymns

(By Alice S. Mullard)

Among the twenty or more hymns which are common to all selections, and are sung alike by Christians of every shade of opinion, "Rock of Ages" stands foremost. It was written by Augustus Toplady, a clergyman of the English Church, about the year 1762. Toplady was Rector of a Parish in the beautiful county of Devonshire, and was one day walking among the picturesque glens and coves which abound in that part of the country, when he was overtaken by a severe thunderstorm, and, looking around for shelter, saw a point where a precipitous crag of limestone rose to the height of a hundred feet, and having a deep fissure down its center. Here he took refuge, and in that wild and suggestive spot wrote the hymn, which has proved as enduring as the rocks which inspired it.

Toplady was a bitter controversialist, and had many fierce battles with John Wesley on points of doctrine; but the controversies and the uncharitable feelings they provoked have long passed away, while "Rock of Ages" still continues to be "a living and dying prayer for the holiest believers"—to quote its original title

"Christian, dost thou see them," that most vigorous Lenten hymn, comes to us from medieval days, and from the vivid imagination of one of those saints to whom the eternal fight between the Christian and the powers of darkness was a real warfare.

"Just as I am, without one plea," which is so often sung at Confirmation services, was written by Charlotte Elliott, an Englishwoman and a lifelong invalid, during a season of great depression on account of the apparent uselessness of her life. It is good to learn that she lived to know some of the good accomplished, under God's blessing, through her written words.

"Thine Forever, God of Love," was written by the wife of an English clergyman especially for a class of girls whom she was preparing for Confirmation. The beautiful hymn soon became a favorite, and was chosen by Queen Victoria to be sung at the Confirmation of one of her daughters.

Dr. Ray Palmer, one of the first and best of American hymn writers, is the author of "My faith looks up to Thee," which was written at the age of twenty-two years, when the author was fresh from college. To quote his own words, he wrote what he felt and with much emotion, ending the last verse with tears.

"Draw, Holy Ghost, Thy sevenfold veil," another Confirmation hymn, is by John Keble, and forms part of the beautiful poem for Confirmation contained in "The Christian Year". Those of our readers who possess a copy of that work (and every Churchman should) will be well repaid by reading the poem, in view of the service so soon to be held in St. Peter's.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath the heart of man conceived the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

"GONE WEST"

Let the men of the world make pause
As the sun sinks low in the sky,
Let them halt and recall
Each man of them all,
Their comrades who went to die,
Who went to swell the ranks of those Who were posted where God only knows,
But who went to the lines of the Setting Sun,
Where the soldiers went whose work was done,
Who were sent by the High Command to rest,
Who were called by their Master—WEST.

WHAT IS THE WAR TO YOU?

What is the war to you?
Is it anything more than a time to grouse,
And to wish you were home in a comfortable house,
To dodge every job that comes your way,
Then to growl because of the miserable pay;
To blackguard the "nob" in the red-band hat,
And laugh at the yarn you'd blush once at,
To learn to swear and to laugh at curses,
To mock at religion and all its uses,
Never to care for a chum in a cart,
So long as you're not concerned in the part;
Are these the things to which you'd confess,
The war means to you, perhaps more, perhaps less?

No! you'll shout if you've thought at all,
The war has taught me I'm something small.
One! An infinitesimal mite
Of a world's great peoples engaded in a fight
For all that's manly and all that's right;
And I've learned at least that they're folks at home
Who love me so that I'd cry for shame
If hidden they heard me blind and swear
And filthily answer a man for the cheer
That the ignorant always give to your face
(Yet they even know its just a disgrace
To swear and blaspheme for the sake of a grin
From those ever ready to smile at sin.)
And so for the sake of the folks at home
Play straight, play straight,—and play the game!

Christ Before Pilate

We in our wisdom find so many faults
In those we love, in friends or foes
But he the cruel, said of Him the just
"I find no fault in Him."

Blind, blind are we, not innocent nor good.
We wage a war of conflict—and oppose
All things not suited to our mortal ken
And find much fault with them.

Thus do we grovel—mentally bereft
Of greatest love that might have been akin
To that our great Exemplar gave to us
To be our position fair.

We little heed that mightiest bequest
But do our best to wallow in the dust
And take no thought of life's amenities
But give instead—a crust!

And thus our life is going year by year,
Pursuing phantoms—messengers of ill,
And never waking to the unseen woes
That grasp us in their train.

A sorry medley do we make of life
That should have been so sweet, so full,
Of God's best gifts so lovingly bestowed,
So fair, so free to all!

ARCHBISHOP OF YORK VISITS MID-WEST—PRAISES ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Cincinnati, Chicago, Evanston and St. Louis Among Cities Visited by Distinguished Briton

Thousands of Church people and American citizens had the great privilege and pleasure of seeing, greeting and hearing the Archbishop of York, during his itinerary from the Atlantic coast to the Mid-West, at Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Cincinnati, Chicago, Evanston, St. Louis and other important points. He spent two days at the latter city, where he was extended an unusually warm welcome by bishops, the clergy and laity, and especially by the Presiding Bishop of the American Church, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Tuttle. In welcoming the Archbishop at the Cathedral, Bishop Tuttle said, in part:

"The man second in ecclesiastical rank in the Church of England has come to us to strengthen the brotherhood of hearts and the deepened sisterhood of churches between the real mother church and ourselves. His Grace's words of greeting and counsel will, I am sure, affords us pleasure and will give us valuable guidance and help."

The Archbishop gave four addresses during his stop in St. Louis. The daily papers of that city have the following to say of his noon-day Lenten address:

The Archbishop of York's favorite American is Abraham Lincoln.

He did not say so in as many words, but there can be very little doubt of it since he actually quoted Lincoln three times in as many addresses, always a different quotation, and in his Lenten noon-day address yesterday at the Shubert-Garrick theatre before a capacity house, he paid a beautiful tribute to the "martyr President."

"Of all the leaders of your history," said his Grace with much repressed feeling, "is that great embodiment of American democracy and all it stands for, Abraham Lincoln.

"I fancy him as brooding over you today and asking you to give to the world that freedom he gave to America.

"But if Abraham Lincoln were visibly to enter this theatre, we should all stand. If Jesus of Nazareth were to enter here, we should all kneel. Jesus is the Master Man for this time."

On the stage were three Bishops: the Rt. Rev. Daniel Tuttle, the Rt. Rev. Frederick Foote Johnson and the Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske of Syracuse, N. Y. Back of these prelates sat nearly every clergyman of the Episcopal Church in St. Louis.

NO PRELIMINARIES

There were no preliminaries, save the singing of "America." The Archbishop of York at once plunged into his theme, which dealt with the spiritual side of the war. In part, he said:

"I sometimes wonder during these days as I pass from city to city in your great country, whether I am not moving in a dream. How strange, if you come to think of it, that an Archbishop of a city where there were Christian Bishops ruling the church of God more than 1,600 years ago, where Constantine was proclaimed Emperor—how strange I should be right here in the center of this vast country, speaking in a theater to you of St. Louis.

"It is indeed a wonderful linking between the old and the new. The distinctions between these have been done away with. Here we are, facing the greatest of all ordeals. We can't go through it on our own strength. You are so full of confidence and hope and are thrilled by a great cause and readily respond to it. At home we are in another atmosphere. There we ask not for thrills, but for steadiness to endure, and we, too, need this strength greater than our own.

"But your time will come. You don't know how long this war will last or what sacrifices you may be called upon to make.

"Where are we to get the strength we need for this mighty trial? I know the answer. In a world struggle you need a world leader whose spirit you will most care for and to whom your loyalty will stay unfaltering. He is Jesus Christ.

"MUST SANCTIFY OURSELVES"

"You must see Christ going before your lads to France, and see him going before your own nation here, and see him going before the future of your country.

"We must bring our personal lives at home up to the level of the sacrifices offered by our brothers in battle. Are you living the life worthy of their deeds? Is the American at home worthy of the devotion they offer? The only thing that could ever make me doubtful of final victory would be a failure to feel, through every class, the spirit of moral self-sacrifice and self-dedication.

"We must sanctify ourselves before we can have with us the strength of the prevailing cross. We are right to pray to God for victory, but we shall be most sure of an answer if we form the high resolve, "Our Victory for God.'

"Keep before you the picture of the Man of Sorrows, embracing the sorrows of all our homes. It is sacrifice nobly offered, sorrow nobly borne, that redeems a life, a nation, a world."

THE ARCHBISHOP AT HARRISBURG

The Archbishop of York and his chaplain arrived in Harrisburg, Penn., at 1:30 p. m. on March 23rd. He was met at the station by a committee, headed by the Governor of Pennsylvania, the Bishop of Harrisburg, Dr. Darlington, and State Librarian Montgomery. The chimes of Zion Lutheran Church greeted the party as they emerged from the station and drove to the Bishop's house. In the Bishop's Chapel of the Holy Spirit, the Archbishop prayed earnestly for the soldiers giving their lives at the front. He then ascended to the Great Hall where he addressed the crowd of citizens and soldiers. The party then went to the capitol, above which the British flag was waving for the first time in the history of Pennslyvania. In the House of Representatives, reputed to be the only legislative chamber which rivals the House of Lords in splendor, the Governor, the Mayor, Rabbi Haas, the Rev. Dr. Mudge of the Presbyterian Church, and A. S. Patterson of the Chamber of Commerce voiced their welcome. The Archbishop then delivered a masterly tribute to America's place in history and her opportunity in this critical hour of peril, closing with prayer for the boys at the very hour falling in the greatest battle in human history.

A Word For Our Choirs

Among the many improvements in habits of reverence that have grown up in our Churches during the last few years, none is more marked than the manner of leaving the churches after the various services. Formerly, the first few notes of the retrocessional were a signal for a subdued buzz and bustle, and almost before the last chorister had left the church, the whole congregation was moving towards the door.

Now, we remain kneeling, or at least quietly seated, until the final amen is chanted in the choir room.

What could be more fitting than that these last few moments of devotion should be spent in earnest prayer for the individual members of our choirs?

The average choir boy is not a saint! The "white-robed singer" of story and sacred song, with the voice of an angel and the devotion of a Samuel, is a rara avis in our Western choirs. In his place, we have a very human boy; but he is a faithful boy, devoting many hours of his play-time to perfecting the music which on Sunday we accept as our right.

It is only the few who can subscribe liberally to the choir fund, but all can speak a cheery word of appreciation and encouragement to its members, and all can pray that the words that are continually on their lips may be grafted inwardly in their hearts and bring forth the fruits of good living, that through all their lives they may "Carry music in their hearts

Through darksome lane, and wrangling mart;
Plying their daily task with busier feet,
Because their secret soul a holy strain repeats."

—A. S. M.

HERE ARE SIX REASONS WHY WE ARE AT WAR

Rev. James Sheerin Outlines Some of the Points Which Has Drawn the United States Into the Conflict

Perhaps it would be a good thing if each soldier had an indelible "scrap of paper" somewhere on his person, containing a brief statement of our belief about the terrible war. This would tell his patriotic story, whether living or dead. If a prisoner of war, it would speak for him better than he might be able himself, and so it would spread American principles wherever his body went. Just how it should be worded I shall not venture to claim, but it could well include a sentence or two of President Wilson's as to our defense of world democracy, and it should reveal our general opposition to war in itself. We are not ashamed to be known in the world at large as a people who believe more in business and industry than we do in war. But we should be glad, also, to have everybody realize the great truth that we are an idealistic people in the history of civilization to come out boldly and openly, and say we hate all war and all war-makers.

2. We are in the war because we believe in the people's right to go on peacefully and hopefully in the development of a healthier, happier domestic and social life, unimpeded by any exterior and unnatural force.

3. We are in the war because we believe that tyrannical and despotic forms of government are irresponsible and hurtful to their own best interests, as well as to the needs of the people at large.

4. We are not in the war because we wanted to intrude in European affairs, but because a long course of diplomatic insults and brutalities, on land and sea—attended by cruelties and a vindictiveness that we had hoped were at an end, even in war—convinced us that the safety of the future depends on an immediate and final ending of all such governments in the world.

5. We are in the war not because we think we can accomplish these hopes ourselves, but to give heart and courage to the various peoples of the earth who have been trying, apparently in vain, to protect themselves from systems of government and misgovernment, of deceit and treachery, which stood in the way of either happiness or prosperity, whether individual, national or social.

6. We will gladly get out of the war the moment when our fellow men of other races show that they are able to take care of themselves. When that day comes, as we hope it will soon, we shall return promptly to our own hearths and homes, thankful that we and others have an opportunity to live a human and civilized life once more, unthreatened by brutal ambition of any sort or from any quarter.

This is the Kind of Co-operation That Helps

Editor Witness:

Enclosed please find One Dollar for which send me copies of the March 23rd issue for distribution. I am so satisfied of the good that THE WITNESS is doing as a messenger of the Church, and as a strong supporter of the Christian faith, that I take this opportunity of giving a helping hand in furtherence of its great work. I am going to distribute these copies among our people at the Congregational Meeting on Easter Monday night, adding my appeal for subscribers. The paper should be in every Christian and especially in every Church home.

I remain yours sincerely,

Crucial Time in China and Japan

Mr. Dwight Edwards, formerly of St. Paul, Minn., now secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Pekin, China, recently talked to a Red Cross surgical dressing class at St. Clement's Church, St. Paul. He is now on his way to minister to the hundred and seventy-five thousand Chinese coolies in France who are manufacturing munitions, but although he spoke of them and of possible contributions from China's army of half a million, and her great resources, Mr. Edwards laid his emphasis upon the necessity to the world of the education of leaders with Christian ideals in the orient. At the present time, among her three hundred and twenty million people there is a great upheaval. Armies shift with generals, none of whom are equal to the emergency. Japan, the autocrat, menaces her weak giant neighbor. She, too, needs a leadership with a breadth of vision and Christian ideals. The whole hope of the future lies with the young men of the present. To them we must give our help. Instead of decreasing our aid to missions we must increase our contributions. Now is the crucial time. China, with her vast population, Japan, with such a large birth rate that she has an excess of population each year of seven hundred thousand, are to play an enormous part in the future, perhaps in the immediate war. An increasing democratic party in each must be given leaders with ideals of love, service and peace, or the world will face another conflagration in the far east like that against which we are now struggling in the west. If we do not share our best with China now, our children will have to make Red Cross dressings for another terrible war. Let us seize our opportunity and help China emerge as a tremendous factor for peace.

—perhaps more so than the world has ever seen, in spite of appearances; that we love education and home virtues as no race has ever done; that the books, buildings, pictures and statues of Europe are more interesting to us than their dynastic struggles; that the struggles of the various peoples of the world for political freedom and social justice touch our hearts more than the sight of their rulers' grandeur and palaces; that the ruins of the past draw us to Europe only because they are pathetic monuments to the defeated hopes and ambitions of men that are gone. All this, and much more, that is true of us could hardly be expressed in a brief label or card of identification for every American soldier, which could not be easily destroyed by fire or water. But a suggestion of the thought behind it may be found in the following, which can be expanded or simplified, according to the tastes of the reader:

1. We American soldiers are in this war because we think it is time

General Pershing's Name On Honor Roll of Wyoming Church

The name of John J. Pershing has been placed upon the Honor Roll of St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne, and among the twenty-eight stars appearing on the new service flag, unfurled and dedicated on Palm Sunday, is a star for General Pershing. The people of St. Mark's are deeply sensible of the signal honor done them, which was made possible by the following letter just received by Bishop Thomas from General Pershing:

"France, February 15, 1918.

"Bishop N. S. Thomas,

"Cheyenne, Wyoming.

"My Dear Bishop:

"I regret very much to find that your letter of October 31, 1917, has not been answered and wish to assure you that this was not due to a lack of appreciation but through inadvertence.

"I should be very glad to have my name placed on the honor roll of St. Mark's Church, Cheyenne, and deeply appreciate your kind thought of me in this connection.

"With warm regards and very best wishes, believe me, as always,

"Sincerely yours,

"JOHN J. PERSHING."

MISSIONARY MESSAGES FROM THE CHURCH'S HOLY DAYS

By the Rev. Francis S. White

Monday in Easter Week

THE COLLECT

Almighty God, who through thine only begotten Son Jesus Christ hast overcome death, and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life; We humbly beseech thee that, as by thy special grace preventing us thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect; through Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost ever one God, world without end. Amen.

"Bring the same to good effect." It requires power to bring good desires to good effect. The power of a resurrected life is the power which helps men persevere. Easter calls us to persevere in the good desires which Good Friday always wakes in men's hearts. The lack of perseverance has chilled more missionary enthusiasm than any other single cause one might mention. Some one from the Orient, or some one from the fastnesses of our mountainous Southland, or some one from the Black Belt, or some one from the Indian reservations, or some one from the isolated cross-roads towns of our own states, tells us tales of spiritual needs, and of endeavor to meet those needs, and our hearts are moved, our consciences are quickened, and we resolve and determine to support the workers and their cause. Collections are taken up, and the future seems rosy with the promise of steady support and consequent fruition. But suddenly something blows cold on our good desires, and they do not come to good effect, and the work languishes, and the Church stays weak and struggling, instead of growing from weakness into strength. Pray for the grace of perseverance. It is the heart-throb of progress. Surely God, who puts good desires into our hearts, can furnish the power to bring those desires to good effect. The help is always at hand. There is no limit to the grace of God—there is a continual supply of grace. What is needed is a continual drawing upon that grace. The Holy Communion leads us to the source of help, which the death and passion, the mighty resurrection and the glorious ascension have made possible for human and mortal beings to absorb and utilize. When we plead the Cross, we should plead it in such a persistent and whole-hearted way as to go from that pleading strong in the resurrection power of the living Christ. Through Him we can do all things. His grace is sufficient for us, if we will only systematically and persistently seek it.

"Opened unto us the gate of everlasting life." Jesus' resurrection was not the beginning of everlasting life. Everlasting life has neither beginning nor ending, because it is of God. Jesus, on Easter, opened the gate, showing men how the sublimest hope of the human race is really an eternal fact, on which they could rely as a permanent possession, if they would only fulfill the conditions which the Source of everlasting life lays down as necessary to obtain it. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." The more we die unto sin, the more will we be alive unto God. The more alive unto God we are, the more persistent will we be "to make His way known upon earth, His saving truth unto all peoples". God help us seek for the grace of perseverance in the paths that lead unto eternal life for others, as well as for ourselves.

THE EPISTLE

Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:) that word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judæa, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached; how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him. And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree: him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.—Acts x:34.

He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. God accepts all who come to him working righteousness, and fearing lest they lose sight of Him. The Gospel message, beginning with the birth and ending with the resurrection and ascension of Jesus, is a spreading message. Men's carelessness and indifference cannot entirely suppress its leavening power. The cause of missions is a live cause. It can quicken the dead person, and the dead parish, and the dead diocese, once it is given even half a chance. Give the word which preaches peace through Jesus Christ a chance to begin at Galilee, and after a while it will be published throughout all Judæa. People are hungry for power—hungry for spiritual power to fight spiritual enemies. In their self-will and their ignorance they take hold of the mysterious and the occult, in the hope of obtaining such power as will make them free from the results of their transgressions. The Church's mission is to show men that there is only one Divinely appointed being who can judge whether men are quick or dead. And His message is not an occult or hidden message, but one that is out and open and in the light. "In the light shall we see light." If we try to see light with an evil eye, what we see will make for blindness; we will be constantly stumbling; we will become blind leaders of blind people, and there will be great danger of falling into the ditch. It is a horrible thing to fall into the ditch which runs foul through the streets of daily life; but a more horrible thing is to stay in the ditch. And the business of a witnessing Church is to help men raise themsleves out of the ditches into which they fall, and to help turn ditches into streams of living water. Out of the witnessing Church must come those who have eaten and drunk with the risen Jesus, and who have companied with Him with eyes opened to His presence. If we break bread with Jesus, and see Him not, our witness will not be a convincing one, nor will it be a very lively witness. And if we are to be prophets in our generation, our witness will be no good at all, unless by our lives, as well as by our lips, we can proclaim that we have experienced the remission of our sins. Let us bend every effort to make the ministry of reconciliation a very vital message. There must be prophets to preach this message, as well as priests to convey its blessing. Prophet and priest alike must practice what they preach, and when this is done there will be found a Church zealous in good works—a source of far-reaching power, a home of peace, and the rallying place for men of good-will. Is that the kind of Church your Church is?

THE GOSPEL

Behold, two of his disciples went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about three score furlongs. And they talked together of all these things which had happened. And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them. But their eyes were holden that they should not know him. And he said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad? And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas,, answering said unto him. Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days? And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people: and how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and besides all this, today is the third day since these things were done. Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre; and when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive. And certain of them which were with us went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but him they saw not. Then he said unto them, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken: ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?" And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself. And they drew nigh unto the village, whither they went: and he made as though he would have gone further. But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them. And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight. And they said one to another, Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures? And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon. And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.—St. Luke xxiv:13.

It will be a great day for the Church when she sends her workers "to the villages" by twos. The associate mission is the mission of real help, and the more our Church can function its message in that manner, the more vital will that message become, and the happier will be the resultant life of the Church in both town and country. Jesus sent out his disciples two by two, and the habit clung to the Church in the early days; and wherever it has been adhered to, there has the Church flourished and grown.

"Certain women also of our company made us astonished, saying they had seen a vision of angels, which said that He was alive." In the prophetical writings it was promised that "your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions". As long as our women continue to see visions of life, where most of its men only think in terms of death, there is hope for the Church. And when our young men in the Church cease being astonished at those visions, then may we have reason to believe that "the Spirit is indeed being poured on all flesh". If the Spirit be not yet poured on all flesh, may God be able to hold us guiltless when He judges the quick and dead. For he will use us and our sons, if we will but let Him; and the more vision of the living Christ that we can have, the more radiant and vigorous and rhythmical spiritual life will we manifest. O Lord, open Thou our eyes, as well as our lips, then may we be able to co-ordinate our vision and our speech, as we show forth the things concerning the Son of God and Mary! And why not also pray Jesus to make Himself known to those of our boys who see visions and form partnerships with earthly aims in view, so that they will see the wondrous power and beauty of going out two by two, with the purpose of opening to others the Scriptures concerning Jesus?

"Did not our hearts burn within us while He talked with us by the way, and opened to us the Scriptures?" Ought we not to feel the obligation of keeping so close to Jesus that when we talk to others about Him their hearts will burn with a desire not only to know Him, but to know about Him? And will not the Easter message mean more to us if we have with our Easter offerings made it possible for some one somewhere to open up the Scriptures to those who read, yet do not understand? F. S. Keep the Home Ties From Breaking

The work of the Brothernood of St. Andrew in the field touches, or aims to touch, all Brotherhood men and Churchmen whether they are in the field or at home. Naturally, with the work of trying to care for the men in the field the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood can give little more than a passing glance at the home field but it is rather for the home field to volunteer its services.

Saving food and buying Liberty Bonds is a great material help to those who have gone, but what are you doing for their spiritual aid? One of the greatest things to be remembered is to keep the home ties from breaking and that entails keeping the Church ties from breaking.

Those who live near any of the great camps should see to it that they are doing something for the men in the camps. They may not be your boys in the camp which is so near your door. But they are someone else's boys and someone else is looking out for your boy in that far-away camp.

This week there comes a story from the secretary at Camp Cody, which is located at Deming, New Mexico. One of his big tasks was to help cheer up the men at the base hospital and when a consignment of phonograph records came to him one day from some unknown donor in Florida he was happy for he thought surely the machine would follow.

But the machine did not come and he did not like to turn the records over to one of the "Y" shacks because he knew the place where the music was needed most was at the base hospital. He mentioned the records in his report to headquarters. It was mentioned about the office and then one of the men who was a member of the Philadelphia Home Guards mentioned it to his squad. His squad bought the machine and sent it on its way.

There you have Florida records, plus a Philadelphia machine giving comfort to boys in a base hospital in New Mexico all through the medium of a Brotherhood secretary. There is no telling where this work of helping others will end nor what turns it may take. Is there anything you can do to help?

If the main thought of Easter is redemption—and the Church needs to be brought back to that truth on account of the passing of absurd and immoral theories of atonement—the teaching of the Sundays immediately following Easter is, consequences of redemption; or, redemption applied. If redemption is itself not made enough of with some, it is over-emphasized with others. Redemption is not salvation, and there does not seem any better way of bringing out both the nature and value of redemption, on the one hand, and the relation of that, on the other, to salvation, than by historical illustrations. Redemption from Egypt broke the power of Pharaoh—it did not of itself land the Children of Israel in the Promised Land. In the same way, Cyrus' decree made possible the return of God's people from Babylon; it did not plant them there, and, as a matter of fact, many refused to avail themselves of the privilege of going back. So, all mankind are redeemed by the death and resurrection of our Lord. That does not save anybody, nor is justification equivalent to sanctification. This is the truth that is so clearly brought out in the Collect, one of the few Collects, by the way, composed by our reformers, and substituted for the old one in 1549 (Goulburn on the Collects, Vol. 1, page 362).

The second lesson for the evening is St. Paul's discussion of this very topic, concluding with "that grace may reign through righteousness". Note also (verse 10) that we are "reconciled" (not saved) by His death, and saved by His "life", through His Spirit poured into us and become the life-blood of our character and conduct. This is illustrated by the Old Testament lesson. It was by the grace of God that Israel had been redeemed; but this only made possible the return, and inspired them with a glorious hope. The message is one that is fulfilled in the true Promised Land of the soul, and ought to bring comfort to millions today: "Refrain thy voice from weeping and thine eyes from tears, for thy work shall be rewarded, and they shall come again from the land of the enemy (death)."

In the morning historico-topical course, the first lesson follows up last Sunday's promise of return, with the explicit prediction that Cyrus should act as God's shepherd and anointed, saying of Jerusalem, "She shall be built", and to the temple, "Thy foundation shall be laid." And this promise being read, it is not left suspended in mid-air, but will be followed on subsequent Sundays with the record of fulfillment. Topically, this is also in accord with the teachings of the day and season. The experience of Israel, historically, illustrates, as does the resurrection of our Lord, God as providential ruler of the world, with its mingled light and darkness, and good and evil, and its issues in righteousness (verses 5-8).

The second lesson tells the story of what happened on this very day, the Sunday after the resurrection—Thomas' doubt and conversion—concluding with the purpose of belief, "that we might have life in His name".

For week days, we continue, in the morning, selections from Deuteronomy Isaiah, paralleling them with sermons on the resurrection.

In the evening, we fill in the week with Philippians, founded on the resurrection (note especially chapter 3), and give, for first lessons, stories from Genesis, Exodus and I Chronicles, the point of which is man's need and God's promise of eternal life.

THE SANCTUARY OF PRAYER

Note—These prayers by the Bishop of Massachusetts can easily be adapted for use on Sailors' Day, the second Sunday after Easter, by changing from the first to the third person, the pronouns in black type.

FOR PROTECTION

O Eternal God, who alone spreadest out the heavens, and rulest the raging of the sea; *receive us and the ships in which we serve into Thy Almighty and gracious protection; preserve us from the dangers of the sea and from the manifold temptations and trials which beset our lives; grant that we may return in safety to our homes, with a thankful remembrance of Thy mercies, to praise and glorify Thy holy name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FOR ALL SEAMEN

Almighty Father, with whom is no darkness; We beseech Thee to bless on all seas the vessels of our navy and merchant marine, our sailors and our fishermen, with all that go to and fro and occupy their business in great waters; save us from dangers known and unforeseen; deliver us from strong temptation and from easily besetting sin; fill us with kindness, loyalty and faith, and make every man to do his duty; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FOR SICK SAILORS

O Heavenly Father, whose loving care follows Thy children wherever they go, look with favor, we beseech Thee, upon all those who are sick in hospitals, in ships or in foreign lands.

In their loneliness may they be comforted by the thought that Thou art with them, in their temptation may they be upheld by the prayers of loved ones at home, and in their sufferings may they recall the patience of their Saviour. Kindle in them courage, hope and faith. Help them to rest in confidence that when they trust in Thee, All's well.

Grant our prayer, O God, which we ask in the name of Thy Son, Jesus Christ. Amen.

*After the word "receive" substitute "all seamen" for the word "us".

Catechism: Read carefully the Marriage Service.

Prop. 1.

There are two things to remember in the sacramental rite of Holy Matrimony.

1st. That the union of a man and woman in marriage is a natural relationship that man has in common with every living creature.

2nd. That the blessing of that union by Christ and the Church lifts it out of a mere natural relationship into the holiest of all unions, in which the man and wife become one flesh and are entrusted by God, not only with the begetting of little children but with the training of immortal souls for the glory of God.

The statement made in one of Mrs. Eddy's books that "marriage is legalized lust" is an insult to the Creator and to the men and women whom God joins together in the holiest of all bonds.

This statement springs from the fallacy that matter is evil, whereas Christ shows us that matter can and ought to be sanctified, and that the Christian family is the holiest of relationships.

Prop. 2.

The essential elements in a Christian marrigae are:

1st. That the man and the woman should each of them be baptized members of the Church. Holy Baptism is the sacrament wherein we are made children of God, and no child of God should "be unequally yoked together with an unbeliever," as St. Paul states.

2nd. That the two should be joined by a priest of the Church, who blesses the marriage and uses the ring to symbolize the perfect union that is established between the two.

3rd. That as God has decreed that a man should have but one living wife, and a wife but one living husband, it is necessary that the Church should not bless the marriage of those who have another living partner.

(The only exception which the Church permits is that in the case of adultery of either party the priest may remarry the innocent party, but so strong is the Church's feeling regarding this, that no priest can be required to solemnize this service, nor can he do so without the consent of the Bishop.)

Prop. 3.

Like all sacramental obligations, the privileges of marriage cannot be enjoyed unless each party makes a vow at God's altar to assume the responsibilities of this obligation.

These responsibilities are:

1. That the obligation is for as long as they both shall live, "till death do us part."

2. That the obligation requires that each shall "forsake all others," and keep the marriage relationships pure.

Nor is there in the sight of God one law for man and another for the woman.

3. That each takes the other "for better or for worse, for richer or for poorer, in sickness and in health."

A vow is a sacred thing, and when one finds that he has promised to do something which is worse than he thought, he is in honor bound to keep the obligation, although it may be to his own hindrance. God requires that we shall be men of our word.

4. That the man shall be the head of the household, not in a tyrannical manner, for he has promised to love and to cherish, which is just as binding as the vow "to obey." And there is no hardship in obedience where there is love. It is rather a privilege.

There simply cannot be two heads to an institution, just as there could not be two Presidents of the United States. But the office of President carries with it more obligations than privileges.

It is a poor travesty on Holy Matrimony when the woman feels that she must lead the man, just as it is a wretched travesty when the man feels that he can boss the woman. It is a partnership in which the man promises to fight the battles with the woman's help and co-operation.

QUESTIONS

1. What is the difference between marriage and Holy Matrimony?
2. What can you say about Mrs. Eddy's comment?
3. What are the essential elements in a Christian marriage?
4. What is the Church's law about the remarriage of those who are divorced?
5. What are the responsibilities which are assumed in the marriage vow?
6. What is the significance of the word "obey"?

THE RETINUE

By Katharine Lee Bates

Archduke Francis Ferdinand, Austrian Heir-Apparent,
Rideth through the Shadow Land, not a lone knight-errant,
But captain of a mighty train, millions upon millions,
Armies of the battle-slain, hordes of dim civilians;

German hosts who see their works with tortured eyes, the sorry
Specters of scared tyrants, Turks hunted by their quarry,
Liars, plotters red of hand—like waves of poisonous gases
Sweeping through the Shadow Land
the host of horror passes;

Spirits bright as broken blades drawn for truth and honor,
Sons of Belgium, pallid maids, martyrs who have won her
Love eternal, bleeding breasts of the French defiance,
Russians on enraptured quests, Freedom's proud alliance.

Through that hollow hush of doom,
vast, unvisioned regions,
Led by Kitchener of Khartoum, march
the English legions,
Kilt and shamrock, maple-leaf, dreaming Hindoo faces, Brows of glory, eyes of grief, arms of lost embraces.

Like a moaning tide of woe, midst
those pale battalions
From the Danube and the Po, Arabs and Australians,
Pours a ghastly multitude that breaks
the heart of pity,
Wreckage of some shell-bestrewed
waste that was a city;

Flocking from the murderous seas,
from the famished lowland,
From the blazing villages of Serbia and Poland,
Woman phantoms, baby wraiths,
trampled by war's blindness,
Horses, dogs, that put their faiths in human loving-kindness.

Tamburlane, Napoleon, envious Alexander
Peer in wonder at the wan, tragical commander,
Archduke Francis Ferdinand—when shall his train be ended?—
Of all the lords of Shadow Land most royally attended!

The Epistle to the Ephesians

By B. W. Bonell

(A running commentary compiled from various sources for the devotional study of this Epistle, by Dean B. W. Bonell of the Diocese of Colorado.)

XXIX

Vs. 12. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

Ellicott: Wrestle. Literally wrestling—a mixed metaphor. Wrestling is impossible for a man clad in armor. The word was adopted to carry the idea of the personal, individualizing nature of the encounter.

Sadler: Against flesh and blood, i. e., against human nature within or human beings without.

Blunt: But against principalities. There are doubtless evil angels (Rom. viii:38; Col. ii:15), the spiritual agents of the evil one.

Theodoret: Rulers of the darkness of this world, not because they had received any such rule from God, but because the world submits itself to their rule, and eagerly sells itself into slavery to them.

Ellicott: The world rulers of this darkness, those who extend their world-wide sway over the whole world, inasmuch as all men are subject unto them.

Jerome: Of the darkness. It is the opinion of all the doctors of the Church that the intervening air between heaven and earth is full of adverse powers.

Moule: In high places. The import of the words is that we have to deal in the combat of the soul and of the Church with spiritual agents of evil occupying a sphere of action invisible and practically boundless.

Vs. 13. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand.

Ellicott: Wherefore—since we have such powerful adversaries to contend with.

Take unto you the Divine armor, perfect and perfectly ready, which lies at the Christian's feet, and is his own. Let him, by the grace of God, appropriate it in act.

St. Ignatius: The whole armor of God. Let none of you be found a deserter; let your baptism abide with you as your arms, faith as your helmet, love as your spear, patience as your panoply.

Meyer: In the evil day. This is the day when the satanic power puts forth its last and greatest outbreak of the anti-Christian kingdom St. Paul expected shortly before the Parousia.

Ellicott: The day of violent temptation.

The dark crisis of the campaign, whenever it may be.

Ellicott: Having done all, i. e., all things that the exigencies of the conflict required.

Moule: To stand, i. e., unmoved at your post, ready for the next assault of the unseen foe.

Vs. 14. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness.

Ellicott: Stand therefore. Not, as in verse 13, in the fight, but, as the context requires, ready for the fight.

Chrysostom: Having your loins girt about. What the keel is to the ship, the same are the loins with us, the basis and groundwork of the whole body, for they are the foundation upon which our whole frame is built. Then, in girding the loins, he is bracing together the soul.

Ellicott: With truth—as the girdle which bound all together and served to make the Christian soldier expedite and unencumbered for the fight.

Blunt: This defensive girdle of truth signifies the Christian's steadfastness at his post, and his immovable fidelity to that "Captain of his salvation" under whom he moves.

Moule: The breastplate. The breastplate covers the heart. The believer is armed at the heart against the tempter by definite and supreme reverence for the law, the supreme perceptive will of God. The breastplate is faith and love.

Sadler: Of righteousness—the righteousness of Christ. If we have not righteousness, which comprehends all conformity to the will of God, the missile of the evil one can come straight to our heart.

Ellicott: The righteousness which is the result of the renovation of the heart by the Holy Spirit.

Vs. 15. And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace.

Moule: Your feet shod. If the warrior is to stand, he must have no unprotected and uncertain foothold.

Sadler: The allusion to the sandals of the Roman soldiers, studded with hobnails, for taking firm hold of the ground.

Beza: He does not wish only to teach us that we ought to be shod, but, so to say, offers us the very sandals.

Meyer: Preparation, readiness. Preparedness, whether it be an outward standing ready, or an inward being ready.

Wordsworth: An allusion to the attitude and attire of the Israelites eating the Passover in a state of preparedness to leave Egypt and march to Canaan.

Ellicott: Of the gospel of peace. The sum and substance of the Gospel was peace, not with one another merely, but with God—a peace that can only be enjoyed and secured if we war against His enemies.

Sadler: This peace of God, through the realization of the Gospel, makes us stand firm in the sight of God.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION

By Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.

THE INDISPENSABLENESS OF RELIGION

"Man shall not live by bread alone." —Matt. 4:4.

That religion is an essential of life is universally true. From the untutored savage with his ideals of immortality as expressed in the "happy hunting grounds," from Darwin's Patagonian savage with his crude notions of God, down through all the stages of human life, the world over, we have expressions of man's yearning for the divine. The Psalmist cries out, "My Soul is athirst for God," and this thirst is just as pronounced in the life of every age and people as is was when the King of Israel gave utterance to his yearning. Some one has well said that "life is a continuous adventure into the unknown." In other words, man is ever reaching up into the heights beyond him, seeking for some clear and fixed realization of God, and some definite experience that will make more evident to his consciousness his own relation to God. It is unquestionably true, as the Frenchman says, "Man is incurably religious," and however simple or grotesque or dignified the forms may be in which he casts his unfailing religious convictions, nevertheless they bring satisfaction to his soul and a serenity of mind that nothing else affords.

This need of the divine seems at times to suffer almost complete paralysis. In one way or another and for one cause or another men will shut out of their lives, so far as they are able, the consciousness of the need of God, and from the many philosophies, systems or theories of life, they will seek to draw that which furnishes satisfaction and seeming peace. Again and again we have observed that only some strange happenings, some misfortune, or disappointment seems to arouse the dormant spiritual nature and to give it expression. Nations, like individuals, sustain these periods of soul-atrophy and seem for a time to be self-sufficient and self-confident and self-sustained. They have no need of God. They have no sense of insufficiency. In such periods the fires burn low upon the altar of sacrifice and the sense of devotion to high spiritual ideals becomes inactive, if not impotent.

Two evident purposes mark the ministry of Jesus, the one to make more clear to man his own sense of God-help and to more clearly articulate this need, and the other to reveal to man more fully and completely the great need of the Father and His eternal purposes and will concerning His children. With this revelation He also coupled a clear pronouncement of man's relation to his fellows. In His own amazing ministry He sought again and again to illustrate these profound truths. To questioning disciples, who thought only of things material, He said, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of," and again, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me." He declared repeatedly that the real things that make for the more aboundant life are the invisible and spiritual things, and without these life is impoverished and unsatisfied. We have fallen upon a time when spiritual ideals are being discussed as they have not been for a generation past. In camp and field, in home and office, men are seeking to make more real to their consciousness those things that withstand even the shock of war and the catastrophies of time. Every soldier that has returned from the trenches comes back fairly aglow with new conceptions of religion's worth, its utter sufficiency in the hour of need. Only recently we received from one of the leading military instructors in an American camp the statement, that the greatest need of the camp, as expressed by the men themselves, was for a fresher and clearer presentation of spiritual ideals. It is amazing that in the most material occupation in which men engage there comes the deeper yearning for the invisible and the intangible. Here it is that men come to realize the profound meaning of the words, "Man shall not live by bread alone." Whatever else this war may or may not produce, it has already effected a revival of profound and far-reaching religious interest. How this interest is to crystallize or what form it is to take, the coming days must disclose. Sadly and helplessly impoverished must he be who, in the midst of the world-storm, clings only to a material fabric that already is shaken to its deep foundations.

THE CHURCH

This term is used in the Book of Common Prayer to designate the body of those who hold and practice the Christian faith. Therein it is described as One, Holy Catholic, and Apostolic, and is spoken of as God's Church, God's Holy Church, and the Household of God. It is also spoken of as the Church Militant, because those who are baptized are pledged "to confess the faith of the Christ crucified, and manfully to fight under His banner against sin, the world, and the devil, and to continue Christ's faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end". It is also spoken of as Christ's mystical body.

Now we find about us Christendom divided into many different organizations, visible to men, each claiming to be either the Church of God or parts of that Church. Which is the true visible Church, or do they all, with all their differences, make up that body? In the Book of Common Prayer we have a definition of the visible Church given in the xixth Article.

"The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men, in which the pure Word of God is preached, and the sacraments be duly (recte) ministered, according to Christ's ordinance in all things that of necessity are requisite to the same."

Here we have four marks given by which to recognize the Church of Christ.

First, such a body of men must be faithful i. e., they must hold the true faith, which faith has come down through the ages by means of the Christian creeds. These creeds are those of the Book of Common Prayer.

Second, the Bible, the written Word of God, must be accepted and preached. The fifth Article says: "Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation, so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man that it should be believed as an article of the faith, or be thought requisite or necessary for salvation. * * *" It is to be noted that it is the Church that determines what is contained therein, since she settles what books are to be considered the canonical books of the Bible, or what is the Bible.

Third, the sacraments are to be rightly ministered in all things ordained therefor, and under those conditions that make a sacrament a true sacrament, being "requisite to the same".

Fourth, a ministry, by whom the sacraments are to be duly ministered.

All of these marks must be recognizable in the visible Church of God.

Letters have gone out from the office of Bishop Thomas to all the clergy now living who have had anything to do with the work in the District of Wyoming, inviting them to be present at the Eleventh Annual Convocation of the district to be held in Douglas June 21st-24th. The number of the letters was approximately eighty-five, and it is earnestly hoped that a number of the former workers may be present and take part in the commemoration of the entrance of the church into Wyoming fifty years ago.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL FROM EAST, WEST, NORTH AND SOUTH

There are 300 stars on the service flag of the University of the South.

General Pershing is a professed Prohibitionist. He is on record as favoring a "bone dry" army.—Temperance.

A summer conference for Church workers of the Province of the Mid-West will be held at Racine College, Racine, Wis., in July.

The church building of Trinity Parish, Jacksonville, Ill., was completely destroyed by fire on Friday morning, March 15th.

There are now forty-six secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew engaged in religious work at war camps in this country.

St. James' (colored) Church, Baltimore, Md., was the first African Parish organized in the South. In 1924 the parish will have been established one hundred years.

As soon as the weather permits the corner stone of the new building of the Church of the Good Shepherd, West Springfield, Mass., will be laid by Bishop Davies.

"Good-bye, St. Louis! I leave you with a warm heart and a fragrant memory." This was Archbishop Lang's parting message to the people of that city, conveyed through his chaplain, the Rev. F. A. Iremonger, as they boarded the train for Cincinnati.

St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, of which the Rev. Dr. Freeman is the rector, united with Westminster Presbyterian, Plymouth Congregational, Hennepin Avenue Methodist and Trinity Baptist Churches in a service on Good Friday night.

The new church building of St. Simon's Mission, San Fernando, Cal., was formally opened to worshippers on Easter Day at the 11 a. m. service by the Bishop of Los Angeles, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Johnson, assisted by the Rev. Robert Renison, missionary in charge.

We are glad that a number of people are taking advantage of our offer to send the MONTANA CHURCHMAN and THE WITNESS for $1.25 a year. We can only expect people to take a real interest in the work of the church where they know something of what the church stands for and what the church is doing.

At a service held in the Church of the Holy Communion, Rock Springs, Wyo., two Boy Scouts, John W. Hay, Jr., and Mark Young, were decorated with the war service medal, conferred upon them by the treasury department of the United States for conspicuous service in securing subscriptions towards the second Liberty Loan. The medals were pinned on the boys by Hon. T. S. Taliaferro, United States commissioner.

Work will be started soon to remodel the stone barn on the Bethany College campus at Topeka into an Episcopal residence for the Bishop of the Diocese of Kansas, says the Capital of that city. This will release the present house used by the bishop and his family for an associate mission for clergy who will work in Topeka and vicinity. Bishop Wise has conceived of this plan, believing that more efficient and economical work can be done if a home can be maintained in Topeka for the clergymen working near there, instead of missions being obliged to support a clergyman in each town.

Bishop Rowe has sailed for Alaska. He expects to make a trip into the interior from Cordova, going as far as Aanana Crossing, to visit the Indian Missions in that most isolated section. This trip is made at the urgent request of the Reverend F. B. Drane, missionary in charge of the Tanana Valley Mission, who writes him that the Indians have been eagerly anticipating his visit. This journey will prevent Bishop Rowe from attending the special meeting of the House of Bishops in New York on April 10th.

The suffragan bishop of South Dakota, the Rev. Dr. William P. Remington, who is serving as chaplain of Base Hospital Unit No. 36 in a Southern camp, writes to Bishop Burleson that "It seems so strange for me to have been consecrated bishop and then to have gone back to my college days; for that is exactly what I am doing here in this camp: playing base ball, coaching glee clubs, and so forth. There never was a bishop set such a queer job as mine, and yet I believe that this is the way to win these men, and unless we do win them, they are going to be lost for the church afterwards."

A series of very successful Lenten noon-day services were conducted at the Neenah Theater, Neenah-Menasha, Wis., under the direction of the Rectory Club of St. Thomas' Church, March 18th to 28th. Neatly printed programs containing the order of services and appropriate hymns were distributed and the addresses were given by the rector, the Rev. Wm. G. Studwell, B. D., on the topic "Some Comments On the Cross." The rector presented a class to the bishop for confirmation recently of seven persons, six of whom were men.

Chaplain Evan Edwards, on a furlough from Camp Doniphan, spent his vacation at his home in Lawrence, Kansas, and with the parishioners of Trinity Church, Lawrence. On Sunday, the 10th, he officiated at the services and preached a most inspiring and instructive sermon, connecting this with the Christian work among our soldiers of the army—showing very clearly the need and value of the work of the church in this strenuous war period. On Monday, the eleventh, at a parish supper given in his honor, Rev. Edwards talked for nearly two hours in giving a graphic description of his own work and of those who were his co-laborers in the field. Surely the church is a centralizing influence to moral and spiritual uplift in our Army!

Arrangements have been made for a great patriotic rally "For God and for Country," to take place at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, Minn., on Wednesday, April 24, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in which the churchmen of the twin-cities are expected to participate. The Rev. Dr. George Craig Stewart, rector of St. Luke's Church, Evanston, Ill., will give the principal address. Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, field secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for the states in the middle west, will also be present and take part in the program. Dr. Stewart will give the address before the Minnesota Church Club at a meeting to be held in Minneapolis on the previous Tuesday evening, April 23rd.

Reports in the daily papers indicate that the plight of the city of Halifax is still deplorable and its needs are great. The general destruction and ruin may be judged from the fact that not one of the buildings of the several church parishes in the city escaped from injury. The parishes are of necessity hampered and must face the problem of reconstruction. The Canadian government is making partial provision for the rebuilding of the churches, but it demands that the reconstructed buildings shall be fireproof. With the government aid and the utmost the stricken congregations can give there is still urgent need for outside help before the task can be undertaken.

"Anyone, whose faith in prayer is waning, ought to be made responsible for a city parish," says the Rev. Frederick G. Budlong, rector of St. Peter's Church, Chicago. "There is so much to be done and the days are so short. There are such multitudes of people on one's heart and it is practically impossible to see very many of them in any week. People come from all over the city to the services and each individual one counts and is missed when absent, yet it is difficult beyond compare to personally follow up those whose interest appears to fluctuate, and who neglect their spiritual opportunities and the duty of coming to God's house every Sunday to worship Him and to encourage their fellows.

Without faith in prayer, a Rector would lose his mind worrying over what he cannot manage to do in any week of seven days."

Bishop McCormick in a letter to his diocese—the Diocese of Western Michigan—gives the following vivid description of a great aeroplane raid on Paris, France, the night of January 30th, which he witnessed: "The newspapers have told you the details—the thirty-six killed, the 190 injured—the destruction of property, and other facts. I was in bed reading at 11:30 when the alarm was given. I got up and dressed and watched the wonderful and awful sights in the air. You could see the French avions signalling to each other, the star-shells and rockets, and you could hear all around the crack and roar of the guns, and the rather dreadful swish and smash of the bombs and aerial torpedoes. Several fell within a short distance of our hotel, but none immediately around us. The people seemed to take the raid quietly and calmly, although it was the worst they have had."

The Easter edition of The Churchman and Church Messenger, the official organ of the Diocese of Los Angeles, contains a photograveure of the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Joseph Horsfall Johnson, eighty-four pages of very readable news matter and other contributions and advertisements, printed on high grade calendared paper and bound in an artistic cover. The editor says: "We should feel that there would be something wanting were we to omit the picture of our honored Diocesan, whose work has been so very successful in his long Episcopate as the first Bishop of the Diocese of Los Angeles. Indeed, it would be impossible to issue such an Annual without alluding to some new, or more prosperous or highly-developed Church Institution which, since the previous Easter, the Bishop has founded, or whose financial support he has not largely or wholly secured. And this only shows how successful Bishop Johnson's efforts have been in many directions in connection with the growth of the church committed into his hands twenty-two years ago, and from which has developed the present-day diocese of which we are all so justly proud."

The Rev. Stephen Alling, rector of St. James' Church, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., recently delivered an address before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of his city and county, in which he reviewed the saloon situation in that community and made some valuable suggestions as to the best way in which to meet and handle the conditions which will obtain after the saloons are closed. The welfare of the men who will lose their means of support and those who are dependent upon them, and the use to which the vacated buildings should be put are given consideration. "The greatest mistake which most reformers make," says Mr. Alling, "is that they do not always use all the common sense with which God has endowed them and consequently instead of sticking to their job till it is thoroughly finished, they are satisfied with making a good beginning and then calmly sit back and let the opposing forces rally and defeat them in the end. The children of the world, indeed, are constantly proving themselves to be wiser than the children of light and so I feel that we ought to rouse ourselves and be ready for the reconstruction period, which will follow the closing of the saloons and which will be marked with the attempts of the "wet" element to prove that prohibition is "no good" and that the only salvation for the city and the state is found in voting in the saloons at the next election."

Personal Mention

The Rev. Edwin S. Hicks, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, Md., accepted a call to the rectorship of Grace Church, Elkridge, Md., and assumed charge the first of this week.

The Rev. W. S. Ziegler, vicar of All Saints' Church, Leighton, Pa., for the past three years, has resigned to accept a call to Grace Church, Dorranceton, Pa.

Dr. Durlin S. Benedict, rector of the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Anniston, Alabama, has received and accepted a call to Emmanuel Church, Bristol, Virginia.

The Reverend J. J. Bowker of North Platte, Nebraska, has sent official notice of his acceptance of the call from St. Thomas' Church, Rawlins, Wyoming, and will take up his new duties on May 1st.

The Reverend Frank J. Chipp has been transferred from work at St. Michael's Mission to have charge of Riverton, Shonshoni, Dubois and Pilot, Wyoming. Mr. Chipp has been supervising the industrial work at the mission as well as doing his clerical duties at Wind River.

The Rev. John Williamson enters upon his duties this week as rector of St. John's Church, Lancaster, Ohio, succeeding the Rev. James A. Miller, who recently accepted the deanship of Trinity Cathedral, Michigan City, Ind. Mr. Williamson was formerly rector of Holy Trinity Church, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

The Reverend Samuel E. West has accepted the call of the vestry of St. Peter's Church, Sheridan, Wyoming, and will go to Sheridan on May 1st. Dean West has been in charge of the work in St. Luke's Church, Buffalo, nearly three years.

Bishop McCormick of the Diocese of Western Michigan, who is engaged in religious work at the front in France under the Church War Commission, sent a cable to Mrs. McCormick recently announcing his appointment by the government as head of the Red Cross Chaplains, with the rank of major.

Lieutenant Colonel Ronald C. M. G. Storrs, who was recently appointed by the English government as governor of Jerusalem, is a son of the Very Rev. Dr. Storrs, Dean of the Diocese of Rochester, England. Mr. Geoffrey Storrs, a cousin of the governor, is a member of the vestry of the Church of St. Augustine-by-the-Sea, Santa Monica, Cal.

Chaplain William E. McCord, with the rank of major, has resigned as rector of St. John's Church, Cold Spring Harbor, L. I. Shortly after the entrance of the United States into the war, the Rev. Mr. McCord answered a call as chaplain and is now located at Camp Wadsworth, Spartansburg, S. C.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel McComb, D. D., canon of the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Baltimore, Md., has won the $1,000 prize offered by St. Andrew's University of Edinburgh, Scotland, for the best essay on Paper. There were 1,700 contestants. Dr. McComb received his degree from the University of Glasgow.

Bishop Sage of Salina has been appointed by Bishop Tuttle to preach the annual "Flower Sermon" at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, Mo., on May 19th, next. The late Mr. Shaw, who presented to the city the Shaw Botanical Gardens, set aside in his will a generous fund to provide for an annual flower service and sermon.

Mr. G. Frank Shelby, field secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for the Western states, will leave this month for France to co-operate with Mr. Franklin S. Edmonds, general secretary of the Brotherhood, in looking over the field and making arrangements for religious work at the front.

The Rev. Clark L. Attridge, student at the Nashota Seminary, has been extended a call to St. John's Church, Portage, Wis.

Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, field secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for the middle west, visited several points in Minnesota and other states during the month of March, including Duluth, the Twin Cities, Mankato, Minn., and Sioux Falls, S. D. He will return to Minnesota to be present at the formation of a chapter of the Brotherhood in St. Mary's Church, St. Paul, on Sunday the 21st inst., a meeting of the Minnesota Church Club in Minneapolis on the 23rd inst., and a Brotherhood rally in St. Paul on the 24th. Mr. Spencer is a genial, capable young man of wide experience and is doing a splendid work for the Brotherhood and the Church. He makes his headquarters at Chicago.

A Breezy Texas Editor

The Texas Churchman, with the March number, passed under new editorial supervision. The Rev. William H. Williams has retired from the editorship of the paper and has been succeeded by the Rev. Joseph Carden, rector of St. James' Church, Taylor, Texas, who has had considerable experience in newspaper work and shows himself to be a breezy paragrapher. Here are a few samples of his pungent pencilings:

The most popular seat in the church is the back pew.

If you are compelled to close your church or your garage for the period of the war, which are you going to do?

A lot of churches up North are closed for lack of coal. A lot of ours in Texas are closed for lack of parsons.

Suggestions to the vestries of closed churches: "Get a rector." Your farms will produce no crops unless they are cultivated.

A bishop may be defined as "a superior parson who sleeps in a different bed every night."

We confess we prefer even corrupt government to Krupp government.

Parishes looking for rectors, these times, would better not be too critical. There are not enough parsons to go 'round.

News from Indianapolis

The Lenten services in Indianapolis have moved in their customary way. The Monday services at Christ Church have been conducted by the Rector, assisted by the city clergy. Wednesday night united services have been held at St. Paul's Church, with addresses by the laymen. Judge Thomas L. Sullivan spoke upon "The Vestry"; Mr. J. R. Marsh "The Sunday School"; Mr. W. D. Pralt "Church Finance"; Mr. W. W. Hammond, "Lay Readers", and Mr. Louis Howland, "The Layman as a Communicant." The services were distinctly valuable and proved of deep interest. The Friday morning services at Christ Church for women took the form of a Bible class, conducted by Mr. O. O. Jones. In the various parishes the attendance has been up to the average.

Bishop John McKim has been in residence in the diocese for the last month, taking Confirmations and other duties as planned by the Standing Committee. He has made a delightful impression and won all hearts. He has been the guest of Dean White at the Episcopal residence. On March 21, he admitted Mr. H. R. Hole to the diaconate at Christ Church. The candidate was presented by Rev. William Burrows of Bloomington. Rev. Lewis Brown, Ph. D., was the preacher and Rev. Messrs. Stanley, White, Young, Burbank and Bradley assisted in the service. The Indianapolis Clericus entertained the Bishop and other visitors at luncheon, after the ordination, at which words of greeting were spoken by all of the guests. Rev. Mr. Hole has made a place for himself in the hearts of the people of St. Paul's Church, Columbus, and is proving to be the right man in that important charge.

The Indianapolis Clericus was entertained by Rev. Doctor Brown at its March meeting, who was also the essayist, with a paper on, "The Rights of the Laity." At the annual elction Rev. G. G. Burbank was elected president and Rev. G. E. Young secretary-treasurer. The annual reports were most gratifying and the Clericus is proving a needful social factor in the city and diocese. Meetings are held on the second Monday of each month and are open to all vestry and clergy.

The annual council will be held at the cathedral, as usual, on May 14th and 15th. May 14th will be Woman's Auxiliary day. Bishop Woodcock of Kentucky has kindly accepted the invitation to preach in the morning and also address the council at the opening services at night. The main business of the council will be the final adoption of the new constitution and canons.

Rev. Marshall M. Day of Indiana Harbor has accepted the call of Grace Church, Muncie, and is now in residence in that important parish.

Salina (Kansas) Notes

St. Paul's, Beloit, Kan., has been presented with two flags—one the "Stars and Stripes", the other a service flag—from two local patriotic organizations respectively, the Women's Relief Corps and Ladies of the G. A. R.

The Reverend Alfred G. Miller, priest of the parish, who is also chaplain of Company B, Beloit State Guard, held a consecration service Sunday afternoon, March 17th, which was attended by Company B in uniform, representatives of the donor societies, and so many others that the church was filled to the doors.

The altar was lighted with vesper candles. Very small acolytes carried the flag in the processional. The services, compiled from the Book of Offices, was impressive and beautiful. Psalm nine and Ephesians six were the praster and lesson.

The hymns were, "Onward Christian Soldier" and "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," and "America."

In his address, Mr. Miller's points were, value of the flag in the hearts of the citizens and its emblamatic significance. He said: "May our country's flag ever stand for honesty of purpose and high ideals."

The Rev. Robert S. Chalmers, who is to succeed Bishop Harris of Marquette as the rector of St. Mark's Church, Toledo, Ohio, has made a notable record during his short period in the ministry. He was ordained to the priesthood December 5th, 1915, and immediately became the rector of Trinity Church, Tiffin, Ohio. The annual income of the parish has since then increased over fifty per cent. and the membership has practically doubled. Mr. Chalmers gave up a good position with the Goodrich Rubber Company to enter the ministry. He had been very active in Sunday School work in St. Paul's Church, Akron, O., prior to seeking holy orders.

EDITORIAL

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, Who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory."

These words form a great Easter message, especially in these anxious days when the world seems out of joint. But the Christian should remember with gratitude that he has a rock to stand upon, even when the floods of human passion are at their highest mark.

"Just beyond the cannon's roar
Thou are on that farther shore."

For that rock is Christ.

St. Paul wrote these words in a time when one of the greatest tyrants that ever lived sat on the imperial throne; at a time when no man's life and no woman's honour was safe; when, as St. Peter said, "the devil stalked about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour," just as he is doing now.

These are the words of faith and courage to the people of God, when there seemed to be nothing stable about them and nothing decent ahead of them in the way of human character.

It was the courage inspired by these words that enabled the little remnant at Colosse and elsewhere "not to faint as men without hope, but rather to see in the very hopelessness of the world the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

Nor were these words intended to create a body of religious enthusiasts who, in their fanatical hope of redemption, should be indifferent to the things that were taking place in the Roman world about them.

To St. Paul, the man who refused to work because the millennium was near should not be fed. It was the calm word of hope in a world so dark and chaotic in its evil that the pagans wrote, "Abandon hope all ye that enter here," upon their tombstones—but the Christian wrote, "Then shall ye appear wih Him in Glory."

Surely this is a time when Christians ought to go back to those days when the pagan world glutted itself on Christian martyrs in the Roman arena, as they offered incense to their Roman gods; just as the Kaiser, fit descendent of Caligula, slays Christians and offers their blood as a libation to that Moloch, made in Germany, whom he blasphemously calls God.

For no matter how the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing, we have the rock from which we were hewn and that rock is Christ. For, though Nero may slay us, he cannot deprive us of that city whose Builder and Maker is God.

I could not help feeling that the second chapter of the second Epistle of St. Paul to the Thessilonians was written as though St. Paul had forseen the Kaiser.

After commending them for their faith and charity in all the tribulations which they had endured, he tells them that the Lord Jesus would come, not as a paficist, but "revealed from Heaven with His mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," especially with relation to "that man of sin, the son of perdition, the wicked, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all powers and signs and lying wonders." How could the present situation be better described?

The word "power" in the Greek is the same as the word from which dynamite is made—signifying tremendous power. The word "signs" signifies marks of approval, as though God was approving, but the words "lying wonders," related to falsehood, gives the twist that the power and signs are not of God but of the devil.

And St. Paul's advice to the Thessalonians is exactly what we need to read this Eastertide.

"Therefore, brethren, stand fast and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle."

Like Moses, who withstood Jannes and Jambres and their lying signs, so we are not deceived by fair words from bloody mouths, and religious phrases out of brutal faces.

We fight against principalities and powers, against wickedness in high places, confident in this one thing that whether the world stands or falls, our Christ will win the final victory.

And as for those who perish in their struggle with the Beast, the vision of St. John speaks for us as he foresees those who were slain in their struggle with the Beast.

"And I heard a voice from Heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

There they lie together, English, French, Belgian, Italian, American—those who counted not their lives dear unto themselves, but gave them, cheerfully, gladly, joyously, as a ransom for many.

Spokane Notes

An impressive patriotic service was recently held at All Saints' Cathedral, Spokane, Wash., as a farewell honor to the dean, the Very Rev. W. C. Hicks, D. D., who left Easter Monday to take up his duties as secretary of the Y. M. C. A. work in France. Bishop Herman Page presided, and in the chancel were grouped also the dean's brother and successor, the Rev. Reginald T. T. Hicks, the Rev. W. A. A. Shipway of St. Matthew's, the Rev. J. A. Palmer of Holy Trinity, and the Rev. M. J. Stevens of Hillyard. Addresses were given by Thaddeus S. Lane, president of the Chamber of Commerce, who emphasized the fact that in losing Dean Hicks the city of Spokane loses a valued citizen, but the army gains a valued champion, and W. S. Gilbert, speaking for the local Y. M. C. A., said he was glad the dean was going on his mission and that as a member of the Y. M. C. A. he was mighty proud the organization had gained such a man. A reception followed the service, when Fred Phair, representing the people of the parish, presented the dean as a parting gift with a purse of $500. The dean's reply was full of feeling and intense earnestness. He spoke of the new consecration everyone should feel, because of the needs of the day and closed with his blessing on the people for their generosity and loyalty. Until the dean's return his brother, the Rev. R. T. T. Hicks, will be in charge of the parish. The reverend gentleman has only been in Spokane for a few weeks and has rendered valued service at St. James', St. Peter's, and also at Christ Church, Glenrose.

St. Matthew's Church, Spokane, recently installed a new organ, feeling that such was not a luxury so much as it was a necessity. The present organist, John G. Bee, has been choirmaster and musical director of the church for over six years. In spite of a transient congregation the work is steadily progressing. Ten people have been confirmed this year, most of whom were adults.

In the current issue of the Church News, edited by the Rev. Gilbert W. Laidlaw, of Pullman, Wash., appears the first of a series of articles by Bishop Wells, entitled, "Memories of a Pioneer Missionary." The whole issue is unusually full of what the newspapers would call good copy.

The first chapter meeting of the South East Deanery was held at Starbuck last month and was opened with a conference on the Christian Nurture Courses. The rector of St. Paul's Church, Walla Walla, the Rev. B. A. Warren, officiated at the evening service, assisted by the Rev. John Leacher, M. A., and the address was given by Dean Laidlaw on "The Doctrine, Discipline and Worship of the Church." All the sessions were well attended.

The Rev. G. H. Severance reports growth on his field in the Okanogan country. He has an unusually large field to serve to which he has recently added the town of Orient, where he finds a keen interest and large congregations are in attendance at the monthly services. Improvements are being made in the property at Republic and at a recent fair held by the Senior and Junior Guilds enough was made to cancel all debts. The Sunday School has seven graded classes.

The work at Colville is making headway under the leadership of the new vicar, the Rev. C. M. Budlong. Colville for its size possesses more than usually found—a splendid set of wide-awake patriotic business men—and the outlook for the church here is a very hopeful one.

Holy Trinity Church, Palouse, Wash., has sustained a severe loss in the passing hence of George N. Lamphere, Sr., who for many years has been a devoted parishioner.

Clergyman's Daughter Goes to France to Drive Motor Truck

It was very impressive to see a young woman in khaki receiving Holy Communion recently on the morning of the day she was to sail for France as a motor driver in the great American work abroad, says the Rev. James Sheerin, vicar of St. Thomas' Chapel, New York. She was the daughter of the late Rev. Philip A. H. Brown, once prominent in the Metropolitan Church as vicar of St. John's, one of Trinity Parish's well known down-town chapels. The widow and children live on Park Avenue, not far from our chapel and are frequently at the early Sunday celebrations.

Beautiful Custom Observed by New York Parish

In St. Mark's Parish, Rochester, N. Y., the beautiful custom was observed during Lent, of conducting what is known as a Flower Mission, that proved of untold value and helpfulness both to those who participated in and those who were receipients of the service. On every Saturday afternoon, volunteers, called Earnest Helpers, met with the rector and made plans for the distribution of flowers secured for the day. A special prayer, written by the Rev. H. C. Whedon, as a memorial of the Rev. Edward P. Hart, who was the founder of the Flower Mission in 1891, was said by the Earnest Helpers before they started on their mission to carry a bit of color and fragrance to those who were sick and shut in. Others who were unable to participate in the mission said the prayer in their homes in union with the Earnest Helpers at the time appointed. Many are the testimonies of those who have received this service that the evidence of such thoughtfulness on the part of their Christian friends, as well as the beauty of the flowers, have brightened many a weary and lonely hour. The mission concluded with the distribution of the flowers used in the church on Easter Day. A special offering was taken on Ash Wednesday to provide the flowers which were distributed. The following is the prayer which was said by those who took part in the mission:

O God, our Father and Creator, who carest for the lilies of the field; accept, we humbly pray Thee, the gifts and the service now being offered in Thy Name.

For those who shall receive them, we ask that the beauty of these, Thy graceful creatures, may bring a renewed sense of Thy Presence and Thy Holiness; their fragrance a reminder of the prayers and alms which should ever arise as a sweet savor before Thee; and their frailty an asknowledgment of the dependence of all men upon Thy care.

Send Thy Holy Angels to guard and guide Thy messengers who go about doing good.

And unite us all, we pray Thee, more and more in the bond of perfectness and Christian charity.

All which we ask in the Name of Him who is as The Rose of Sharon, Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

Work Among Boys in Tennessee Mountains

The Rev. McV. Harrison, headmaster of St. Andrew's Industrial School for Mountain Boys, Sewanee, Tenn., conducted a mission in St. Matthew's Parish, Los Angeles, Cal., last month, and spoke in several parishes of his work in the mountains of Tennessee. The Southern California Churchman, in commenting upon the mission, says that Mr. Harrison is "surely doing a great missionary work in his school, taking the boys from the sordid misery of mountain cabin life, teaching them to be useful citizens, working at trades or other suitable employments. Now and then, a boy rises above the average and distinguishes himself at college. The 'average' is fairly high, and with the training of the school, the boys are able to take good positions. Agriculture is very appealing to them, and most useful, as a community asset, for the boy learns how to make the mountain acres yield a good income. All of his previous life, land has been wasted, as well as the individual. Traces of refinement, even in the most sordid misery are often found—a heritage from a remote past. That the boys, if taken in time, are cured of the universal and excessive habit of cigarette smoking, and made healthy, normal boys, and are able to go through all the grades, and become fine citizens to offer to the community, is the achievement of this wonderful school. An unusually large number of the older boys have enlisted, and passed all the examinations—up to all the standard requirements. Thirty from the graduating class are now serving their country.

"It is only by the utmost self-denial on the part of those in charge that the expenses are met in these days, and all contributions are greatly appreciated. To curtail this work would be 'unpatriotic,' for it is making good citizens and good Christians."

Educational Conference To Be Held In New York City

A conference under the auspices of the Board of Religious Education and the Junior Auxiliary, Board of Missions, will be held at the Old Synod Hall, New York City, on next Tuesday, April 9th. Topic: "Win the War—Win the World. The Kingdoms of the World, the Kingdoms of our Lord." The Rt. Rev. Dr. Frederick Courtney will preside. The following is the program for the afternoon session at 4:30 o'clock:

"The Reconstruction of Christian Society Necessitated by the War." The Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, Jr., D. D., Chairman Executive Committee, War Commission of the Episcopal Church.

"The New Phase of Missionary Work Necessitated by the War." The Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop of Spokane.

"A Suggestion: The Junior Plan." Miss Frances Withers, General Secretary, Junior Auxiliary, Board of Missions.

Four simultaneous conferences will be conducted from 7 to 7:45 p. m.:

Missions: Leader, Miss Muriel Ashwell, President, Diocesan Junior Auxiliary, Board of Missions.

a. Primary Grades: Miss Frances Withers, St. Paul's Church, Yonkers.

b. Club Work for Older Boys and Girls: Miss Grace Lindley, General Secretary, Woman's Auxiliary, Board of Missions.

War Service in Church Schools: Leader, Mr. Frank H. Hackett, Christ Church, Riverdale.

Teacher-training: Leader, the Rev. Wilbur L. Caswell, St. Thomas' Church, Mamaroneck.

a. Recruiting Teachers from the Older Boys and Girls: Mrs. W. L. Odell, Church of the Ascension, Mt. Vernon.

b. Co-operation of Parishes to Meet Common Problems: Mrs. J. B. Getchell, St. Paul's Church, New Rochelle.

Diocesan Organizations a Church School Teacher Should Know: Leader, the Rev. Floyd S. Leach, Ph. D., Executive Secretary, Diocesan Social Service Commission.

Two addresses will be given at the evening session beginning at 8 o'clock:

The Challenge to the Church for Future Leadership: The Rev. William E. Gardner, D. D., General Secretary, General Board of Religious Education. Dominating our Children's Life with the Thought of the "World for Christ": the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel Seymour Thomas, D. D., Bishop of Wyoming.

Harold McGrath: Lord, give me this day the manhood to stand straight. Lead me into battle with a clean heart and sober mind. Deliver me from blind hate and wanton ruthlessness. Give me only that which leads righteousness to battle. Help me to preserve the idea of my forefathers. Let me keep my mother's face before me, and the feel of my father's hand upon my shoulder, and strengthen them against the day when I shall return no more. Amen.

If Jesus is right in His teaching about the Divine Fatherhood, immortality follows as a matter of course.

Theological Students Becoming Extinct

By Rev. Paul Micou, Secretary Collegiate Department General Board of Religious Education

Seminaries Lost Twenty-three Per Cent of Their Students

If it were proved that two more years of war would leave us only sixty theological students, would the Church at last view with alarm her scarcity of candidates for Holy Orders? Calculations show that in 1919-20 there will be sixty-four men studying in our twelve seminaries. Dividing equally, and granting the General Seminary by courtesy the remainder, nine students will occupy the time of fourteen professors at Chelsea Square, and the other seminaries will have five each to use their fine equipment and endowments.

The Draft Invades the Seminaries

Statistics are fallible, and on them no one ventures actual prophecies. But it is hard to deny the probabilities shown by the figures collected by the General Board of Religious Education. Their validity rests entirely on the effect of the next draft upon the seminary Junior classes. This is only a matter of estimate at present.

The Two Assumptions

Juniors are liable to draft. Middlers and Seniors are not, for they were in ceminaries when the draft law went into effect. The new draft regulations place most of the Juniors in Class I. This multiplies many times the likelihood of their being called to the colors this spring. The chances are that three-fourths will be so summoned.

Furthermore, with the draft operating on our postulants in the colleges as they come of age it is hardly likely that more than one-fourth of this year's Juniors will enter the seminaries each fall during war-time.

On these two assumptions hangs all our argument. Lest we be accused on figuring on too high a loss of theological students, let us remind the reader that we are not providing for any loss of middlers and seniors, as the call to various forms of altruistic war service becomes more insistent. Experience has shown it is very hard for a man to stay in a seminary when he seems so much needed in our cantonments or "over there." Overestimate in one case, if there is any, is balanced by underestimate in the other.

The Calculations for Next Year

Last year's enrollment in the seminaries was 396 (an increase of 45 over the preceding year). This year the seminaries have 305 students, a loss of 23 per cent. As indicated above, the draft will probably take away 63, which is three-quarters of the '85 Juniors. From the remaining total must be subtracted all the Seniors, who number 99, and probably one-half of the 51 special students, or 26. This leaves 117 students to be carried over the next year.

According to our assumptions the fall of 1918 will show only 21 new students entering (or one-fourth of this year's Junior class). Thus the total enrollment of 1918-19 will be 138.

If the War Lasts Until 1919-20

The present middle class numbers 70, and they, with the remaining 25 "specials", leave the seminaries in June, 1919. This leaves only 43 students to be carried over into 1919-20.

Add to this number the 21 new students we have assumed to be the normal number entering in war time, and 64 will be the total enrollment for 1919-20.

We dare not think of the effects of still another year of war, for this is bad enough. Putting the calculations on a percentage basis, we find that the total number of theological students in 1917-18 is 77 per cent of the anti-bellum enrollment; in 1918-19 it will be 35 per cent; and in 1919-20 it will drop to 16 per cent.

Why is There Cause for Alarm?

Some may say that this is a situation caused by a wholly unusual national and world crisis and, as it will pass, we need not worry. But the Church looks to the seminaries to furnish annually the majority of the men who are ordained. Similar causes will cut down the number of those entering the ministry from other sources than the seminaries.

Hence we face a period when we will stand still in our Church development, if indeed we do not actually go backward. For not only will there be this falling off in ordinations, but several hundred of our ministers are engaged in one form or another of war service, and their places in the parishes have not been filled.

Furthermore, consider the need of the foreign field. The minimum of ordained men called for by our Board of Missions is eighteen. Many more could be used, but even this minimum is not forthcoming.

Our Seminaries Lead All Communions in War Service

We would not have our seminary students fail to take part in the most tragic moments of mankind. Rather are we proud that the 23 per cent of loss this year is higher than that of any other communion.*

*8 Baptist seminaries lost 19 per cent; 8 Methodist, 18 per cent; 4 Congregational, 17 per cent; and 10 Presbyterian, 14 per cent.

But the gap in the line of the Church's leaders can only be endured if we prepare for an immediate advance at the termination of the war. Our seminaries must be filled to overflowing in the first year of peace. How can it be brought about?

(The Remedy—next week.)

Some Important War Lessons

From the Convention Address of Bishop Hall of Vermont.

In a pastoral letter addressed to the clergy in Advent your Bishop gave counsel concerning some questions connected with the war. I may somewhat enlarge on what was then said. We must all be ready to make real sacrifices in the service of the country, and in the service (as we believe) of liberty and justice in the world. On these foundations alone can true and lasting peace be built. Money, ease, convenience, comfort we should be glad to offer, along with the best of our men, in this sacred cause: and, in spite of war-weariness, to persevere in such sacrifices, even though they increase in costliness, until a worthy end of the struggle is attained. Otherwise there would indeed have been a waste of treasure and of blood, as well as a loss of honor. As the Archbishop of York, who is about to visit America, put it in a New Year's letter to his diocese: If we are hereafter to say of war 'Never hereafter,' we must be ready now to say of peace, 'Not yet.'

Amid all that is painful and horrible in the war, we can see gains in a great seriousness and a heightened sense of responsibility for the use of gifts, and in the subordination of lesser to greater and of private to general interests and concerns. In our extremity durmg the last few months the country has learned lessons of solidarity and co-operation between classes and sections and interests, which we trust will never be unlearned.

One quite understands the desire of a clergyman who is in sympathetic touch with the young men of his congregation to accompany them to the camp and to the front, to share their hardships and dangers, and to exercise a controlling influence among large bodies of men. All this is perfectly natural. But, apart from the possible admixture of lower motives such as restlessness and love of excitement, there is involved a consideration of proportion and of the distribution of functions. The people at home need steadying and upholding, and will increasingly need this; there will be bereavements and anxieties and privations; the wounded and sick will be sent home: for a pastor who is fitted to be of real service with the army there will be abundant opportunity of service here, not least in helping to supply the places of those who are sent. Of course we must send chaplains, and they must be taken from among our best men; we must be ready to spare such when they are called for. But such priests should not go to do work which, however valuable, could be done as well by earnest and competent laymen, who have not been trained and set apart and commissioned for the ministry of the Word and Sacraments. Holy Orders are not required for Y. M. C. A. secretaryships and like positions. We must recognize the differences of functions among the various members of the Body. Our own war commission understands the necessity of using laymen to supplement the ministrations of the chaplains, and it enlists the aid of members of St. Andrew's Brotherhood and of others for this purpose; but it does not appoint priests for laymen's work.

Talks on Favorite Hymns

Alice S. Millard

It is only in comparatively modern times that writers have been moved to compose hymns that children can "sing with understanding."

And here we must draw a distinction between hymns and poems written on behalf of children, and children's hymns. The gift of looking at things sacred or secular from the child's standpoint is possessed by very few writers; compare for instance the stiff and stilted "Lines On a Sleeping Child," and similar effusions of the older poets with such gems of simplicity as abound in Eugene Field's poems or Stevenson's Child's Garden of Verse.

It was Dr. Watts, the author of "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," and many hymns of perennial value, who first conceived the idea of writing verses for the young, and early in the eighteenth century published "Divine and Moral Songs," primarily for the use of the children of his friend, Sir Thomas Abney.

"How doth the little busy bee," "Let dogs delight to bark and bite," and "'Tis the voice of the sluggard," were included in this volume and still remain fresh in the memories of some of our older friends. Those of a more religious nature were deeply tinged with the severe theological views of the age; it is hard to believe that such a verse as the following could have been written for the use of children even by the most ardent Calvinist:

There is a dreadful hell
And everlasting pains;
Where sinners must with devils dwell,
In darkness, fire and chains.

Still, among these Divine and Moral Songs there are some beautiful poems, for instance, the cradle song, "Hush, my child; lie still and slumber," which has unfortunately dropped out of knowledge with those of less value.

Another celebrated writer, Charles Wesley, to whom, by the way, we owe "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," without which Christmas would hardly be Christmas to church-going people, published some hymns for children, but with one exception they were without the true ring and have, consequently, dropped out of use. The one exception is "Gentle Jesus, Meek and Mild," that little child's prayer which will never grow old. The companion hymn, "Jesus, Tender Shepherd, Hear Me," was written about a century later by Mary Duncan, since which time women have taken the lead in this important field of literature. Space will not allow us to mention "Hymns for Infant Minds," by Jane and Ann Taylor, which embody many of the hymns sung by the children of a past generation. The ever popular "I think when I read that sweet story of old," and "There is a happy land," were both written by women, and it is to Mary Cecil Alexander, the wife of the Bishop of Derry, that we owe "Once in Royal David's City," "All Things Bright and Beautiful," "We Are But Little Children, Weak," and many others which occupy such a prominent place in our hymnal. It is pleasant to note that the unhealthy sentimentalism which was so prominent in the children's hymns of a generation ago is fast disappearing. We no longer hear "I Want To Be An Angel," or "Here We Suffer Grief and Pain," nor do the stories written for children leave the impression that a good and holy child must of necessity die young but, on the contrary, both hymns and stories emphasize the fact that

With smiles of peace and looks of love,
Light in our dwellings they may make;
Bid kind good humor brighten there
And do all still for Jesus' sake.

Easter Mystery Play Given at Rome, N. Y.

A strikingly beautiful, impressive and instructive Easter play entitled "The Power of the Resurrection," was presented at Zion Church, Rome, N. Y., on the afternoon of Easter Day, under the direction of the Rector and author of the play, the Rev. Carroll Lund Bates, whose recent contributions to THE WITNESS have attracted much interest. "The story of the Mystery Play," says Mr. Bates, "is to visualize the story of the Resurrection, and, at the play's conclusion, to impress the lesson that the church is 'the Body of Christ,' her office being to bear to Christ's disciples the presence of the Living Lord, thus compensating Christians for His withdrawal from us in the flesh." The play is designed to be acted by young men and women in choir vestments. Mr. Bates is also the author of mystery plays covering the incidents and teachings of The Epiphany and The Ascension. Copies of the plays may be had of Mr. Bates at a cost of ten cents for ten copies.

ROUND ABOUT THE PARISH

The Early Celebration of the Holy Communion

(The following article may be secured, in leaflet form for distribution, from The Parish Publishers, Akron, Ohio, at a cost of two cents apiece.)

"I was glad when they said unto me, we will go unto the house of the Lord."

"For many years I have had a vacation each week. It is a very short one measured by my watch, for it lasts but an hour, but it is a long and refreshing one judged by the satisfactions that I have crowded into it.

"Everyone realizes that a vacation is not necessarily a change of place, or the substitution of one activity for another of the same sort, but it may be a mental change.

"The vacation to which I refer, I take early each Sunday morning. It is a very inexpensive one, but most satisfying. It is an early Sunday morning half-hour walk, followed by an hour in the church.

"Before the automobiles disturb the peace of the day, before the varicolored Sunday paper greets the eyes with its grain of wheat in a bushel of chaff, before the world is awake, I walk the familiar streets. They present an unfamiliar and unusual aspect, however. They are more picturesque in the morning light. The petty activities of men do not disturb the tranquility of my walk. A spiritual overtone pervades the air. From some vantage point I overlook the city. The atmosphere is clear of the smudge of industry. A little wisp of smoke may lazily curl from some factory chimney, an indication that the world is not dead, but sleeping. One can easily imagine himself in a strange city. Imagination transforms the scene and a delightful but willful self-deception transports one to the quiet of a New England village, to the snug compactness of rural old England, to an Italian village lying in the sun or to a town of beautiful France. The quietness of it all casts a spell of indefinable charm over me as I take my early Sunday morning vacation.

But more alluring are the by-paths of thought into which I wander as I stroll: It has been a constant rule of such a walk not to think of the tasks or troubles or incidents of the day, or of my duties. I solve no immediate problems and think of no pressing burdens. My mind is open to suggestion from the unfamiliar phrases of the surroundings, and open to the suggestions of memory. All else is forbidden. To meet the milkman is to suffer an intrusion, for I do not want one single thought of the utilitarian present. But the joys of the days that are past, the clinging memories of the essential values of past experiences, the pure enjoyment of being alive and in relation to things that perish not, these are the things on which I dwell.

"Gradually the higher relationships and valuations gather form in the receptive mind. In the light of those I begin to realize how meagre are many of the tasks that I did in a yesterday that, for a moment, seems so remote in the past. I begin to realize how many fears I had admitted to my mind which destroyed my peace, how many petty ambitions or cupidities which engaged my thought and heart to no purpose. How much more splendid to live in freedom from life's intricacies, and to become a soul conscious of its higher destiny.

"And then to the greatest of all relations is an easy step,—to the eternity of God, who has watched the race, from His yesterday when the ancient peoples lived out their lives thinking that their worldly efforts were the pinnacle of what man might live for, through all the times when millions of creatures spent their moment of worldly self-consciousness, to the present, when God is about me, and in me, endeavoring to tear from before my eyes the veil of worldly distractions which prevented my knowing and feeling the great Presence.

"'Why doesn't God speak? Why not make His presence more clear?' I ask the question only to assure myself that He has spoken, and that the difficulty is not in His voice, but in my hearing ear, so attuned to worldly sounds. He has spoken. One spot on earth glows with the suggestion of this presence above all others. Seen with the eyes of sense it is commonplace, perhaps, one impression of human craft amidst countless others; but to the eyes of the spirit, it is shining with the unusual light and color, and radiant with the warmth of a spiritual mystery, the approach of God to men, in the simple way in which the man may be impressed and aroused to God's presence.

"As I walk I approach that spot where God will speak to me. I see first the tower of the Temple of God, and the outline, familiar, yet with a constantly fresh aspect, of the Parish Church. What does it mean? My mind, liberated by the vacation in which time and space have disappeared, apprehends more keenly the proclamation which that Parish Church heralds forth from every familiar feature of the structure.

"As I approach, I absorb that message. It is like the approach to the cheery warmth of home, after a troubled day. The Church tells me that the things of God are supremely worth while. It greets my mind, as I draw near, with the welcome of a love so deep that it will shelter me all the days of my life. It says, 'You may have forgotten God, but God has not forgotten you.' It says, 'You may have seen in me yesterday merely man's attempt to reach God, but today you see in me God's attempts to reach and hold you.'

"Could I pass by the door? Not unless my heart changed to stone. I enter. For the Church is about to speak again with a real voice this time, and to refresh me and others with a real act of refreshment. It is very quiet and peaceful. It, too, has an unfamiliar but impresive aspect in the morning's freshness. There are none of man's devices such as summon the later congregation. Just you and the Presence, and the mystery of the power of the Cross of Christ brought to your soul.

"Now I summon my burden, whatever it may be, and view it in the light of my power to bear it, reinforced by God's power. I still my petty ambitions, to give place to the greater one of being His disciple. I cast away my temporal possessions to replace them by the pearl of great price. I forget the weekday scramble to gain some human end before it is too late, realizing that God has given me time without limit to gain the lasting satisfaction. I bring my sins, so that they may be lifted from my heart. I renew and refresh life. Repentance cleanses it, faith strengthens it, love heals it.

"And then I approach the altar, even though I may likewise be priest, with those who have gathered together to live for a time in the Presence, and in the Holy Communion I share in the power and efficacy of Christ's Body broken and Blood shed.

"When I leave the Church door, I cannot think of my experience merely as a duty done. That would be a grudging acceptance of a great blessing. But I think of it as an opportunity to have lived for a time in the presence of Him who maketh all things new, even my heart and life.

"Would you not enjoy the unlimited sense of the power of life in the Presence of God? Then you may share my vacation, my practice. Take your early morning Sunday walk, unhurried and undisturbed, meditate upon the thinks that endure, and then go to your Parish Church and partake of the great Sacrament of the crucified but living Christ."

When tyrant feet are trampling
Upon the common weal,
Thou dost not bid us bend and writhe
Beneath the iron heel.
In Thy name we assert our right
By sword, or tongue, or pen;
And e'en the headsman's axe may flash
Thy message unto men.

PERSONAL SERVICE

An Address at a Noon-Day Meeting of the Brotherhood Convention

By the Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, D. D., Bishop of Chicago

My dear brothers, I am asked to speak to you today on the subject of "Our Great Need," and I have about twenty minutes to do it in. Really I do not require more than one or two minutes. I think that in a very few sentences I could enumerate what I consider to be the great needs, or the great need, of our Church today. I shall put that into a sentence or two, and then I shall devote the rest of my time to re-enforcing my position, not by any abstract arguments, but by a series of concrete examples.

Our great need in the Church at the present day is Personal—that is the adjective, and I want to lay as much emphasis upon the adjective as upon the noun which follows—our great need in the Church today is Personal Service; personal application to duty, personal conviction, personal consecration.

Concrete Examples

In re-enforcing that statement let me give you some concrete examples. Let us go back and begin with God. When God wanted to save the world He did not content Himself with sending messages to the world by various angels, although He did that. He did not content Himself with writing letters, although He inspired men to write some holy letters. He did not content Himself even with directing some one to form an organization, although an organization was formed, the Holy Catholic Church. When God wanted to save the world He came in Person to save it, and He came to minister unto it. That is the center and the circumference of the Christian religion. It is the programme of life and duty and service. If you want to know what God is like, and if you want to know what man ought to be like, look at Christ.

And, after all, that is the cry of the human heart the world over, "What is God like?" For a man's conception of his own life and dignity and duty will depend upon his conception of God. If he has an inadequate conception of what God is like he will have an inadequate conception of his own life and duty. "What is God like?" It is the cry of the universe: "Bow the heavens, O Lord, and come down;" "Touch the mountains and make them smoke;" "Say something, do something, make a star shoot through the sky, come out from your hiding place that we may know what Thou art like and what we ought to be like!" Now, the Christian religion in its central Person is the answer to that universal prayer. If you want to know what God is like look at Christ, and if you want to know what man is capable of doing, or what he ought to be like, look at Christ. If I had to sum up the whole Christian religion in a sentence or two, those would be the sentences that I should employ. And when God came to this world to save it in His own Person, in the only way in which a man could comprehend God, namely, in the form of a Man, that whole Life was characterized by service. Our Lord made very few public speeches, apparently, but it was a Life devoted solely to service. If you want to know what God is like look at the Babe in Bethlehem and learn there to reverence childhood and motherhood and the family. If you want to know what God is like look at the Boy in the carpenter shop and learn to appreciate the incalculable potentiality of every boy. If you want to know what God is like look at Christ as He was rebuking the Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, and then learn what righteous indignation ought to be in a man. If you want to know what God is like look at Christ with His arms upon the Cross, and then learn something of the love that man ought to have and the service that he ought to render.

Let us take some human examples. Take St. Paul, or shall I say Saul, before he became St. Paul? Saul was,—if I may use a modern term—was what we in these days might have called a "gentleman," a scholar and a man of means. I was reading one of Ramsey's books not so very long ago, and I took infinite pleasure in being persuaded that St. Paul had considerable private means. I do not know why I got such comfort out of that. Perhaps it is because so few of his successors have had any private means. But at any rate I could not help but be glad that he who had undergone so many hardships had at least the comfort of having something in his pocket. Now think what a life he might have led. This is not a case "of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these, 'it might have been,'"—it is the reverse of that. He might have lived a life of leisurely, dignified, ease; a life of leisurely, selfish, comfort, but he couldn't, his conscience wouldn't allow it, his convictions wouldn't allow it. He had come into spiritual contact with Christ, and just because of that there was only one word that could spell out his life, and that was the word Service. What if his service did involve shipwrecks and perils and fastings and imprisonments and all that sort of thing? They counted as nothing.

I have a friend who is a very rich man. I do not think he has ever done a day's work in his life. He has gone around the world probably a dozen times. He is a college graduate; he has lots of money and he has nothing to do. I sometimes say to him, "Why don't you bring back from various parts of the world that you have visited some new kind of tree or flower that we have not in this country; or why don't you take from this country something that they have not in some other country, and thereby do some thing that will enrich your life?" I talk to him that way because I know him very well; and I am sorry to say he talks back. Now, let us suppose that that man, a scholar, a gentleman and a man of means, just as I have described Saul in his earlier life,—suppose that man were to get a glimpse of a life of Service, just think of the incalculable happiness that would come to him which he does not now have, and of the incalculable good that he would be able to render in this world.

Take the late treasurer of our Board of Missions, George C. Thomas. He might have lived a life of ease and comparative uselessness, but he would not have been the happy man that he was. He found his greatest happiness not in accumulating a vast fortune but in the service that he was able to render to God and to man.

Let me take another example, because I am departing from the usual style of speech today in order to pick out some concrete examples of how to interpret life, how to measure up what a man is. Take St. Augustine. There was a time when we was a roue, a mere man about town. He came in contact with Christ and it made such a complete transformation in him that the whole of the rest of life was changed to a life in which he tried to atone to some extent for the errors and the follies of his youth. Take Francis d'Assisi. The one note that describes the life of St. Francis is nothing else than that one word Service.

Take John Wesley,—a life of dignified, heroic Service. When Livingston wanted to do something for Africa he went right into the heart of Africa to perform his work. Not very long ago there was a young man, very much like any other young man. He had come in contact with the message which Christ gives to the world, the message of Service. I refer to Dr. Wilfred Grenfell. After he got that idea it seemed that the only way in which he could interpret Christianity was by the service that he was able to render where he could render it to the greatest possible advantage. Howard got the idea of service, and prisons to this day are appreciating the Service that Howard rendered. Florence Nightingale got the idea of Service, and sick and dying soldiers from that day to this have reaped the benefit of that life. It is so the world over. If you begin with God and come down to the smallest good act that ever was accomplished, there is one word which interprets a man's creed more than anything else and that is the Service that he is able to render to God or to his fellow men.

I want here to correct a possible misapprehension that might be created in your minds. Some of you are saying, "We can't do the great work such as you are describing, we are not men of the capacity of a St. Paul or a St. Francis, a John Wesley, a Keble, a Pusey, those persons occur to us naturally because they are conspicuous, but the same idea is just as real in the life of a person of the most limited capacity as it is in the life of a person of great capacity.

Opportunities for Service Near at Hand

I remember on one occasion having preached a sermon in which I made an earnest plea for Service. Weeks went by and then there came to my office one morning a woman who said that she had made up her mind to live a life of service. Of course I smiled all over. She wanted to begin by getting from me a letter of introduction to three of the richest men of this country, whose names you would all know if I were to mention them to you. I asked her what she wanted this letter for. Well, she said, she had a scheme of a life service, but it involved the getting of fifteen million dollars to begin with. Then I found that she had an idea of going out in the great Southwest of America to establish a Christian colony with a Christian city, with a Christian mayor and aldermen, all Christian people. She was not the first one to have dreamed of that Utopia; but the sad part of it was that there were a thousand things that that woman could have done that she was overlooking in her desire to do something grand that was away far off. Now, I do not want you to get that idea. Do not get the idea that because you cannot do a great thing, therefore you will do nothing. Do not get the idea that for fear you will make a mistake, therefore you will not try to do anything. It is much better for a man to make mistakes in trying to do something in this world than it is to do nothing for fear that he will make a mistake.

I have in my mind now some concrete examples of what Brotherhood men can do. I have a parish in mind in which there was a vestry and on that vestry a vestryman. It was a dead sort of a Church, the kind for which we are apt to apologize. That vestryman went to Church on Sunday morning, put something in the plate, and that was about all. He came in to see me one day and said that he would like to widen his horizon of service. I said, "Begin right back there in your own parish by going to Church every Sunday, starting in at 7:30 in the morning and doing everything that lies in your power." There is scarcely a single aspect of that parish the influence of which was not multiplied two-fold, three-fold, four-fold, because one single vestryman got down to a life of concrete, practical Service.

I have in mind another man who had a real genius for getting along with boys. I said to him one time, "Why don't you rather concentrate your time upon that? You have a rare faculty with boys." Now, that is the rarest thing in the world. It is a very rare thing to find a man that has a manly, moral, uplifting, controlling influence with boys, and if any clergymen here have such a man in their parish, I would say to use him for all he is worth. So I had this man devote himself in that way, and literally, I think, I could count by the dozen the boys that have grown up to be fine Churchmen, fine business men, fine Christian citizens, under the influence of one man who had a special genius for dealing with boys.

I have in mind another person who has done extraordinary work in quickening the missionary activity of his own parish. I have another man in mind who has had extraordinary influence over the boys of a particular choir, and so I could go on as every clergyman could here, as many a layman could, in looking over their parishes, in looking over the Church, and find every time that the whole question is reduced to a matter of personality and of Personal Service. Here is a man and there is a man; here is a woman, here is a boy, there is a girl, who will interpret their Christian creed in a life of love to God and Service to their fellowmen, and, I tell you, they are the only ones that count for very much.

I am going to give you an instance out of my own personal experience. I told this story in the car last night to a group of people, some Brotherhood men and some others, because it illustrates precisely what I have in mind. I began my ministry in the northern part of Canada. I was living in one of those little lumber towns where the people drive the logs down in the spring and then wait for a couple of months before going back to the woods. It was a pretty rough sort of a place. In a village that was remote from any railroad there was a great big, tall, muscular man, much over six feet in height, a braggart, an infidel and an atheist, a notoriously bad man. I used to see the man frequently, and I talked about everything except religion, not because I was wise, but because I was timid. One day the man came into Church—I don't know why except that the grace of God was working on him—and I was preaching a very poor sort of a sermon. I was telling how often it happens that even very bad people will have good ideas come into their mind some time, but they do not give those ideas a permanent lodgment there. Well, I was going on in that way,—and then—I will tell you precisely what he said, for it isn't very nice—he jumped right up in his pew and he clapped his hands as loud as thunder, and he said, "By God, Parson, that's me!" Well, of course, it threw me off the thread of my discourse, but I recovered. Later I went to see the man. He went eighteen miles to get a Prayer Book. He used to go up along that line of saloons, and he would say, "Now, boys, you know what I have been, but it is all wrong. Come with me now because I am on the right track now;" and the extraordinary influence of that one rough, crude man from that day to his dying day was one of the most moralizing forces in that community. Now, I tell you this same story, whether it is in the backwoods, or in Buffalo or in Chicago, whether it is on the boulevard or in the slums, is the story of Christianity. There is only one thing that tells the story of our greatest need today, and that is Personal Service, personal work, personal obligation, personal dealing with problems, personal dealing with men, personal sacrifice.

I conclude with a story that used to be told in the Brotherhood classes, and will be remembered possibly by the older men but not by the younger men. There was an American traveling in Switzerland. He wanted to ascend one of the hills. An omnibus was going up, and there were three kinds of tickets, first, second and third class. The American, being an American, bought a first class ticket. He noticed that the purchasers of second and third class tickets got into the same omnibus with him. He didn't like that idea, and he said: "Why is it that a person who gets a third class ticket rides right alongside me, who bought a first class ticket?" The driver told him to wait. They came to the foot of a hill. The driver said, "First class passengers may keep their seats. Second class passengers can get out and walk. Third class passengers can get out and shove." Now, we Brotherhood men probably do not claim to be first class passengers. We are not Puseys, Wesleys, Simeons, Vanns, Kebles, Howards and Grenfells. Probably that is beyond our capacity. You and I represent the great Christian Democracy, upon which the hope of America depends; and in the name of God let us get out and shove.

OUR CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE MOTHER DEER AND THE LITTLE BOY DEER

This is not a Flower story but I am sure you will like it. Once upon a time there was a Mother Deer and a little Boy Deer. This little Boy Deer had a reddish brown coat, and there were white spots all over him and he had such big ears. These two were wandering thru the Woods and it was very warm. The Mother Deer said to the little Boy Deer: "I am very warm so I think I will go down to the Lake and splash in the water. I wish you would lie down beside this tree, and don't move till I come back, as I wish to be very sure where you are." The little Boy Deer smiled and said to his Mother: "Yes, Mother, I will mind you." So he lay down beside the tree.

The Mother Deer went down to the Lake and splashed around in the water; she came out again and ran along the shore, then into the water and out again thre or four times, having such a good time.

After the Mother Deer had gone the little Boy Deer lay quietly beside the tree for a long time and there was no sound but the moving of the Leaves as they were blown about by the Wind. Then a Bear came along, and saw the little Boy Deer, and stopped and said to him: "Come out here and play awhile." But the little Boy Deer said: "No, I cannot do that for my Mother said I was to lie down here and not move till she came back." The Bear said: "Never mind your Mother, she isn't here; just come out and play, she won't know anything about it anyway." The litlle Boy Deer answered: "But I must mind my Mother." Then the Bear came up to him and tried to pull him out of the place where he was lying. Just then the Mother Deer came back and saw the Bear, and ran up to him and cuffed his ears, and struck him with her feet. Then the Bear started to run away and the Mother Deer ran after him, the Bear going just as fast as he could and the Deer striking at him all the way. The Bear ran down a path thru the Woods and there just ahead of him was a deep hole in the ground. He leaped into this and it was so deep that the Deer could not reach him.

Then the Mother Deer went back and found the little Boy Deer and rubbed her soft nose against him and licked his soft fur in love. He was glad to see her, too, for he had been very much frightened. Then they wandered off together thru the Woods, eating leaves and Grass and the tender Bark upon the low growing Bushes. Then when the Stars and the Moon came out they lay down side by side in a soft mossy place and slept soundly till the Sun came shining thru the Trees the next morning.

Large Class Confirmed by Bishop of Oregon

"In addition to the distinction of having presented the largest class for confirmation in the history of the Diocese of Oregon, St. David's Parish, Portland, has the most unique Sunday school, devotes more attention to the training of the child, is more liberal in home and foreign missions, and responds more quickly and fully to every demand or apportionment for Church work and all other purposes than any other parish in the diocese."

This unusual praise, says the Journal was given St. David's congregation and "the exceptional man who is your rector"—Rev. Thomas Jenkins—by the Rt. Rev. Walter Taylor Sumner, Bishop of Oregon, after confirming a class of more than thirty children and adults on Sunday morning, March 17.

Bishop Sumner preached a vigorous sermon, predicating his address on a letter from the Council of National Defense, to the effect that constant repetition of the statement that the kaiser and the German people are the "chosen people of God" to Christianize the entire world, is having an effect upon the people of this country. The National Council of Defense asked that expose the fallacy of such an idea.

"You and I," said the Bishop, "know enough of psychology to realize that a lie, repeated often enough, will come to be believed. I have often heard this statement regarding the kaiser and the Germans, but it passed by me without a thought, as being too silly to be worth any consideration, and if I had given it a thought, I would have believed that others with as little coosideration. I take pleasure in doing as the National Council of Defense asks, however, and denounce as utterly absurd such an idea.

"Do you think that a people who did what the Germans did to Belgium would be chosen by God as His chosen people? Do you think that a people who support as allies the Turks, would be chosen by God as His chosen people?"

"Who Are God's Chosen People?" was the specific text. The Bishop contended that no group of people is God's chosen people: God's chosen people are those who acknowledge and avow God and His Son, Jesus Christ, he argued.

Missionary Campaigns by Rev. Dr. Rollit

The Rev. Dr. C. C. Rollit, secretary of the Sixth Province, arranged for and conducted very successful missionary campaigns at points in Minnesota. During the second week in March he visited Hibbing and Mankato, and made preliminary arrangements for the campaigns which were to have been conducted by the Rev. Dr. Harding, who was prevented from filling these engagements owing to the death of his daughter. Dr. Rollit completed the work at both places. At Hibbing, the amount pledged for parish support was increased from about $1,200 to $2,500, or more than doubled. Much interest was aroused at Mankato, but returns from the canvass have not as yet been received. The canvass was made at the latter city on Palm Sunday afternoon. Dr. Rollet closed a campaign at Proctor, Minn., on the 17th inst. The attendance upon the services was good, and the parishioners were deeply interested in the series of addresses given. Preliminary arrangements have been made for campaigns at Omaha, Neb.; Topeka, Kan.; Denver, Col.; Los Angeles, Cal., and in the Twin Cities, Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn.

Girls' Friendly Society Doing Good War Work

The Girls' Friendly Society of America is doing a splendid work in war emergency and war relief. The work is under the direction of the War Emergency Committee created by the Council in 1917 to care for and extend special work for girls during the period of the war. A report which appeared in the March number of The Associates' Record, shows some of the things that have been done by the society:

Helped with the Red Cross drive, adding many thousands to the membership of that society. Formed First Aid, Hygiene and Home Nursing classes for members and associates—many of whom have received diplomas in these subjects. Made surgical dressings by thousands. Knitted sweaters, socks and helmets for the Red Cross and for the navy. Supplied hospital garments, comfort kits, Christmas packages, etc., in great quantities.

Contributed money to war relief societies. Adopted war orphans.

Helped to sell Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps.

Given clerical assistance in draft and other registrations.

Planted and cared for war gardens.

Formed canning classes and taught food economics and conservation.

Contributed to the support of the Paris Lodge used for war purposes.

Given the rent for one year of a lodge for munition workers in Hereford, England. Contributed to the support of other English war emergency work.

Given three ambulances to the Red Cross.

Established a new lodge for girls in Washington, D. C.

Opened war service headquarters in New York.

Co-operated with the Fosdick Commission, the National League for Women's Service, the National Council of Defense, the Y. W. C. A., and the Y. M. C. A., helping the last two in their drives to raise funds and, in some places, with their camp work.

Promoted the formation of patriotic leagues.

Extended hospitality to soldiers and sailors at lodges, holiday houses, and branch entertainments.

Provided two Travelers' Aid Agents at Chillicothe, Ohio, near Camp Sherman.

Established community work for girls at New Rochelle, New York.

Sent a field secretary through the Fifth Province to arouse interest, organize work for girls and form patriotic leagues.

Investigated housing conditions and aroused community interest at Elizabeth, N. J., which will result in the opening of a lodge, cafeteria and rest room for workers in an aeroplane factory.

Made surveys at Dover, N. J., where there is an arsenal with many women workers, and at various other points.

Enlarged the lodge in San Francisco, in order to accommodate some of the many girls coming to that city to replace men called to the colors.

Made contributions of money everywhere to meet the needs of relief organizations, etc.

Sent posters and pamphlets throughout the country calling upon girls and women to give themselves for work and service.

Tried to show that in every way our "War Emergency Work is a part of our friendliness to those girls who are not members."

The war emergency committee plans to go on doing all these and other things.

A New Prayer Book for Dakota Indians

The Rev. Dr. Edward Ashley, general missionary in the Niobrara Deanery of South Dakota, states that "Many years ago the Prayer Book, according to the Standard before the revision of 1892, was translated into the Dakota tongue, and afterwards a selection in Dakota-English was made and printed for the use of returned students and others. This contained only the Morning and Evening Prayer, Litany, occasional prayers, the old ten Selection of Psalms, the Communion Office, and Collects. With the growth of the work, and the present needs, Bishop Biller appointed a committee to consider the question of revising the Dakota-English book and to make it conform to the present Standard. A month before his death the committee was ready to report, but his death stopped the completion of it. Having no Bishop on the ground, the matter was further delayed till Bishop Burleson came, and going over the field he saw the great necessity of having such a book in the hands of clergy, catechists, helpers and people, and after conference with the presbyters, who unanimously urged the project, he reappointed the old committee to complete the revision and select the Offices that should be in the new book. The committee has reported to the Bishop that "copy" is now ready for the printer. The work cannot go on further until funds are obtained to pay for the printing. We know that calls for money are many at the present time, but it is hoped that some generous persons may be found willing to give to the Bishop the money needed to enable him to supply this need. There are other needs, but at the present time this is the most important. The book as arranged by the committee, put into the hands of our people and native workers, will give the Church among the Dakotas a larger boost than anything else; it will be a great missionary!"

Indians Like Giant Instruments In Orchestra Of Life

Blanche M. Berry gives her impressions of South Dakota, through the columns of the South Dakot Churchman, in the course of which she says:

"I love it all, but best of all the Indians, so sensitive, so full of imagination, so misunderstood, many times. Why, to me, they are great instruments in life's orchestra, all tuned and waiting for love and sympathy to set the chord ringing out with sweetness. Every one interested in missions must know of St. Elizabeth's and Deaconess Baker's great work here. Here is one place, at least, where the Church is setting those instruments into their proper places, and the music is already blending with others.

"To me, the unquestioning obedience of these children, when they know you are truly their friend, is a constant wonder. Having had experience with all kinds, it is startling in contrast. The secret of the whole is that their race traditions demand a "chief", and obedience to his will. Hence, to win and hold the trust of the leader is the key to a teacher's success, and to train that leader in high ideals is to help materially in the whole school.

"From the very first, it seemed to me that the Indian has an innate love of fine things which have been obliterated, in many cases, only tarnished in others, by contact with unprincipled white men—and women. I am ashamed of my race when I hear of their methods. To be sure, they are a small percentage, but the Church has a great responsibility in proving to this native race that there is a difference.

"It is all so pitiful to see these people still as merely wards of the government, instead of responsible citizens. Let them "buck up" against life and build characters, great and strong, which it is in the Sioux Nation to do. Other Indians have done it, why not these? You teach a boy to swim, in the East, by throwing him overboard, telling him to make good, while you stand near to assist when necessary. Why not the same principle here, while the Church stands by to help? Responsibility is a fire in which dross is burned and gold is left—the gold of the true worth of being.

"As a child I loved to hear and read of the Indians. It is still better to be with them—the real, true Americans—watching them make good with the help of the Church."

A young officer, just returned from the fighting front in Flanders, says: "There are no atheists within a half mile of the front trenches." Men may scoff and be indifferent when death appears to be a far-away thing, reserved for some distant old age. But they become serious when it may descend suddenly from the clouds, or spring out of "no man's land".

Rev. Dr. Beauchamp Celebrates His 88th Birthday at Syracuse

A dinner was tendered the Rev. William Martin Beauchamp, S. T. D., by the Men's Club of All Saints' Church, Syracuse, N. Y., on March 11, in honor of his 88th birthday, which fell on March 25. The celebration was put ahead two weeks on account of the natal day coming in Holy Week. Dr. Beauchamp is a well known and highly esteemed clergyman on the retired list of the Diocese of Central New York, and is the dean of the Clerical Club of Syracuse. The Post-Dispatch of Syracuse gives the following account of the celebration:

"With an intellect as bright and keen as that of a much younger man, Dr. Beauchamp received congratulations of his friends and responded to a toast, 'What Can An Old Man Do?' with remarkable fervor.

"Concluding his speech with an original verse, Dr. Beauchamp was applauded with a heartiness that bespoke the feeling of every person in the room. That he is admired and appreciated by the men of his communion, and, in addition, by a wide acquaintance outside of his church, was evidenced by words and letters of felicitation which reached him.

"Dr. Beauchamp has always been a great student. He has not confined himself wholly to ecclesiastical matters. He has studied and written much concerning the Indians, and he has gathered matter concerning churches and other subjects for the Onondaga Historical Association. He has been asked to write a history of the Episcopal Diocese of Central New York. This he will not undertake because of the amount of traveling it would require. He will, however, write a history of St. Paul's Church, with which he is well versed.

"With his church activities Dr. Beauchamp has always found time to assist in getting together the history of early military life in Central New York. His knowledge of Revolutionary and Civil War days has served many committees that had to do with placing tablets and monuments to the memory of early heroes.

"For many years Dr. Beauchamp was rector of Grace Church, Baldwinsville, and his missionary work in those days was quite as important as the ministry which he performed in the village. Upon retiring he found himself in demand as a supply in all parts of the diocese, and scarcely a week has passed during the past fifteen years that he has not been invited two or three times to either take a service or assist.

"He urged his friends last night to make a study of the men who figured in the early history of their respective parishes and declared: 'It is certain that an old man can at least impart information concerning the past, to the present generation.'

"He closed his address with the following original verse, which was afterwards distributed in printed form, with his compliments:

"Good friends, who clasp my hand tonight,
All saints, I know you are—
With pure and loving hearts you greet
The pilgrim from afar,
Who now, for four score years and eight,
Has trod life's varied way;
Who soon will sleep, in hope to wake,
In scenes of brighter day.
Joys there are here. Thus wrote a friend,
But three years since, when near his end:
'Tis surely good to be alive
At eighty-four and eighty-five!'
And so I find it not too late,
Great joy to find at eighty-eight;
To do some good, to fill some need,
To sow, perchance, some precious seed;
And then to wait upon the shore
And dream of loved ones gone before.
And so, good friends, just one more line,
Be still my friends till eighty-nine.

"Paul M. Paine, public librarian, paid a high tribute to Dr. Beauchamp in a short address and compared him to some of the striking characters found in the Old Testament. Rev. Dr. William De Lancey Wilson, rector-emeritus of St. Mark's Church and a life-long friend, told of Dr. Beauchamp's valued service to the community with special reference to the assistance he has rendered parishes, both large and small. Dr. Wilson also called attention to his helpfulness at all times in making the Clerical Club a factor in the life of the clergy of Syracuse and vicinity.

"Dr. C. M. Ryan, president of the club, was toastmaster. E. L. Beesley entertained with Scotch songs, dances and stories. The dinner was served by women of the church."

Missionary Goes Places Where He Is Not Wanted

"S. D. H.", in the Montana Churchman relates his experience as a missionary traveling about the diocese as follows:

"In doing missionary work about the diocese, one meets with such a different reception in different places. In one place you are met at the train on your arrival, and are given a hearty welcome, and entertainment is provided for you, and people seem glad to see you, and thankful that you have come to give them the services of the Church. And when Church time comes, the members of the Church turn out, and you have a joyous, hearty service, and the people seem to enjoy it, and tell you so, and say they hope you will come again soon. And, being somewhat human, there is joy in your heart, and you feel encouraged, and you think it is worth while to travel three or four hundred miles to minister to people who really care. And you forget about the inconveniences, the waiting for trains, and the unpleasant experiences of the journey.

"And then you go to another place, and it seems like a frost. No one meets you, no one seems to care that you have come to town. Perhaps they will tell you that they don't think it is worth while to try to hold services there. If they do condescend to come to the service, they seem to think they are doing you a great favor. And very likely some members of the Church who live within a stone's throw of the church will not take the trouble to come, though you may have come four or five hundred miles to minister to them. And no one seems to care whether you have a bite to eat or a place to sleep or not. And, being somewhat human, you are not likely to be filled with joy over the reception which you have received. And you may possibly contrast places like this with the other kind. Of course, you go again, just the same, because you have faith in the grace of God to change indifference into earnestness and love, and you hope that the thaw of righteousness may eventually melt the frost and warm up the atmosphere."

"My father knowed more than any man that ever lived."

"Go long, nigger. Your father knowed more than any man that ever lived!"

"Yes, he did. He knowed just the day and just the hour, and just the minute he was going to die."

"How come?"

"The sheriff done told him."

"We may not always be consciously thinking of God, only we must think of all things in and through Him, as we do not always look at the sun, yet see all things we know only by the sun's shining."

Renewal Notice

Several thousand subscriptions to THE WITNESS have become due during the past three months. We have delayed sending notices, because many of them came to us through Guilds and individuals, and we wanted as many as possible to renew through these agencies. Even now we shall be very glad to have the subscriptions pass through their hands, but during April we shall enclose a renewal notice in some issue, and shall hope to receive a prompt remittance.

We have won our way to the hearts of thousands of laymen. THE WITNESS is no longer a venture—it is a pronounced success.

Now the problem is how to reach every Church family. We hope to go a long way in this direction this year, and we want all our present subscribers to help us by renewing their own subscriptions and saying a good word for us to their friends.

A Jerusalemite in Montana

The following is an excerpt from a letter written to a clergyman of the church in Montana by a rancher who is a native of Jerusalem:
