TIME was when it was considered indelicate to refer to a lady's age. With the coming of woman's era, however, "length of days" is a thing of which to be proud; at least so far as educational institutions are concerned. We find numerous claimants for the distinction of being "the oldest school for girls", "the oldest Church school for girls", "the oldest Church school in the South", and the like.

Stuart Hall claims a continuous existence of over one hundred years. Way back in 1831 a school for girls was started in Staunton, Virginia, by a Church woman, Mrs. Maria Sheffey, and called The Kalorama. In 1843, at a meeting of the "friends of Mrs. Sheffey's school", it was decided to organize a Church school for girls. This organization was effected and the school chartered by the legislature of Virginia as the Virignia Female Institute in 1843. Mrs. Sheffey and the Rev. James McElroy were unanimously elected principals.

At first the school was conducted at Mrs. Sheffey's home, The Kalorama. Gossip, still alive after all these years, has it that the board and the school marm could not agree on the rent. A separation was effected, amicably we hope, and the first of the present group of buildings was begun in the spring of 1846; the corner stone being laid June first "with much ceremony and the order of Masons in procession".

Mrs. Sheffey and Mr. McElroy were succeeded in 1847 by Mr. B. B. Minor, of Richmond, who evidently found that his experience as editor of the Southern Literary Messenger did not qualify him to preside over a seminary of young ladies, since he resigned before the end of the session and was succeeded by the Rev. R. H. Phillips. Dr. Phillips, during his thirty-two years of service, built up for the school a wide reputation.

In 1880 Mrs. J. E. B. Stuart, widow of Virginia's famous Cavalry leader, succeeded Dr. Phillips, and for nineteen years of the trying reconstruction period trained the daughters of the new South. In grateful memory of her services the name of the school was changed in 1907 from the Virginia Female Institute to Stuart Hall.

SO MUCH for history. From the years "befo' de war" the school has inherited traditions rich in the glory of the old South; traditions which have not been lost even in this high powered, motorized age. In the apt phrase of the present principal, Mrs. H. N. Hills, one of Wellesley's first graduates, Stuart Hall is "rich in traditions of the past; alive to the needs of the present". It is the present and future which hold our chief interest, even while we cherish the memories of the past.

Located in the heart of a section in which education is the chief rival of apples as a product, Stuart Hall ranks among the best educational institutions of the country. It was said of this school by the dean of admissions of a well known eastern college for women: "Stuart Hall is third on our preferred list of preparatory schools." Girls who graduate here have little difficulty in passing college board examinations, and have consistently stood high in their chosen colleges.

Stuart Hall is accredited by the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges. It does not profess to be a junior college; the idea being that it is better for a girl to enjoy the benefits of a full four year course in one of the larger colleges rather than to do her first two years work in a preparatory school environment. There is, however, in addition to the college preparatory course, a general course covering six years, the last two of which parallel very closely the first two of college, intended for those who do not expect to go to some higher institution of learning.

OUT FOR A CANTER

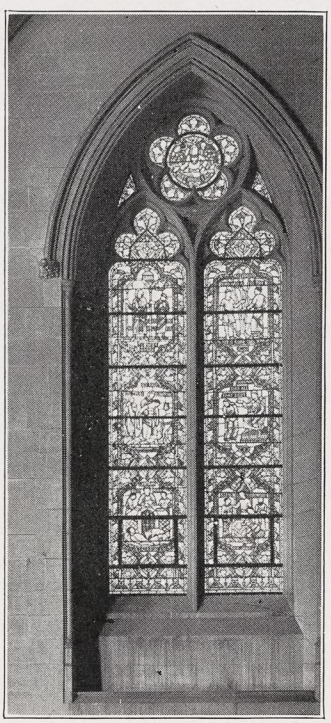
All study and no play has as serious an effect on Jill as on Jack. Every encouragement is offered to girls to enjoy healthy outdoor exercise. The four modern tennis courts are crowded in fall and spring. Archery is one of the most popular sports on the athletic field, and in season hockey teams disport themselves on a nearby field. The beautifully equipped new swimming pool is a popular place all during the session. Basketball and regular classes in the recently completed and fully equipped gymnasium furnish an outlet for a vast amount of surplus energy when the weather does not permit exercise in the open. Although the school has no horses of its own, it has access to quite an extensive riding stable, and the girls, under the tutelage of the physical director and her assistant, both expert horsewomen, are frequently seen on the bridle paths of the city park and the unpaved country roads nearby, enjoying this most delightful exercise. A horse show in the spring gives the community an opportunity of judging how adept the girls have become in the equestrian art.

STUART HALL is a Church school, owned and operated by the dioceses of Virginia, Southern Virginia, and Southwestern Virginia, and makes no apology for so being. The only excuse the Church has for entering the field of education is that it may offer its own young people, and those who care to avail themselves of its facilities, an opportunity to attain a well-rounded life; to develop mind, body, and spirit into a harmonious personality. The last of these objectives is by no means the least of the contributions which Stuart Hall makes to education.

The formal side of religion is presented by the attendance of the entire school at church services Sunday mornings and afternoons. Emmanuel Church, being just across the street from the school grounds, and closely identified with the school management, is to all intents and purposes the school church. The rector of the church is also the chaplain of the school, and he, together with the principal, who is a devoted Church woman, give instruction on the Bible and related subjects as a part of the regular academic curriculum. Prayers are conducted by the principal every morning and evening in the school.

It is recognized that this is merely the formal presentation of religion. The whole atmosphere of the school is designed to foster those ideals of honor, truthfulness, self-control, helpfulness, and consideration for others which mark the Christian gentlewoman.



In its physical equipment Stuart Hall combines the richness of past traditions with alertness to present needs in a most remarkable way. The original building, to which three wings have been added during the past century, has about it the atmosphere of an old Colonial mansion as, with its stately columns, it nestles among the magnificent old trees which shade its rolling lawns. Within the past year there has been completed and put into use a fully equipped modern academic building. In this building are located the splendidly appointed gymnasium and eighteen well lighted and well ventilated classrooms. On the first floor of the unit which connects the new with the old buildings are located showers, lockers and dressing rooms. On the floor above are the chemical and physical laboratories. The top floor is an arcade, or covered passageway, leading from the library to the classrooms. Off of this it is expected, as soon as financial conditions warrant, to build a new dining hall, the foundations for which are already in place and house an up-to-date central heating plant.

At very small cost Stuart Hall is prepared to give to Church girls, and their friends, the advantages of an unexcelled climate in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, a healthy normal life, and a well-rounded education.

The Art of Glass

By
ELEANOR H. WILSON

SOME three years ago a notable artistic project was begun when Washington Cathedral established its own glass making plant at Huntingdon, Valley, Pa., under the direction of Lawrence Saint. Here Mr. Saint and his craftsmen actually create the glass itself from ancient formulas, a rather unusual departure as practically all other glass used for the making of windows is imported in large sheets of various colors from abroad.

PARABLE WINDOW
In Washington Cathedral

In addition to several years of study in England and the Continent, Mr. Saint during eleven years was connected with the building of the Church of the New Jerusalem at Bryn Athyn, Pa., where he not only painted and designed windows, but was enabled to penetrate deeply into the technical secrets of the Middle Ages in the making of glass, which fitted him admirably for his present undertaking.

"My main inspiration", says Mr. Saint, "is a spiritual one, the artistic part, important as it is, coming second in my mind. It is my purpose to translate the Bible thoughts and subjects into the beautiful art of stained glass, hoping to bring honor to our Lord Jesus Christ." Ordinarily he does not use professional models, but secures his inspiration from persons whose lives resemble those of the characters portrayed, endeavoring to catch the expression in such faces, conventionalizing them to fit properly with lead lines and iron bars. In the window on page seven the Good Samaritan appears. He met a man on shipboard who had charge of mission stations in a part of Africa where Christians were persecuted by Mohammedans. Lines of character in his face recorded his contact with and sympathy for the deepest human suffering. In response to Mr. Saint's appeal he came to the studio and posed for the head of the figure of the Good Samaritan.

Symbolism, the main key to the interpretation of the spiritual message of stained glass is illustrated in the topmost medallion, the "Rich Fool". He was spoken to by God,—symbolized by a cloud; suddenly,—symbolized by lightning at the top of his head; at night,—by the moon to the left; and told he must die,—symbolized by the skull at the right. The decorative scheme of the window is based on a leaf motif, and a truly American touch was given by the use of the maple leaf. "Stained glass should be to the Cathedral what the tulip flower is to the plant", says Mr. Saint, "The accent and the thrill". The ancient glass workers assembled elements that enabled their product to withstand the test of time. Consequently he believes that modern glass with a chemical composition similar to the past will also weather the elements and the ravages of time. The window illustrated is one of seven already completed for Washington Cathedral by Mr. Saint in the choir aisle chapels of St. Mary and of St. John, those in the first depicting in rich colors the Parables of Our Lord, in the second, His Miracles. The windows were viewed for the first time by thousands who attended services on Ascension Day, when the choir and sanctuary were opened for public worship.

RESURRECTION WINDOW

The Metropolitan Museum in New York selected the Huntingdon Valley studio as the scene for a motion picture film, "How to Make a Stained Glass Window," portraying the steps involved beginning with the putting of the chemicals into the crucible to make the glass and ending with the installation of one of the windows in the Cathedral. Inquiries relative to procuring the film should be addressed to Ralph S. Hawkins, in charge of cinema work at the Museum.

OLIVER SMITH whose studio is in Bryn Athyn, Pa., was for three years a co-worker of Mr. Saint's at the Swedenborgian Cathedral of New Jerusalem, under the direction of Raymond Pitcairn, a pioneer in developing the mediaeval principles of craftsmanship in this country. Mr. Smith also manufactures his own basic material. "Since the Guilds of the Middle Ages made glass", says Mr. Smith, "there has been little change in its fabricating. True, we now use a machine drawn 'came' lead instead of the hand drawn and whittled out lead, a cutting wheel instead of a hot iron and water for cutting the glass, paper for drawing the cartoons instead of white washed lime board, but the principles are fundamentally the same."

Mr. Smith studied for six years at the Rhode Island School of Design, receiving a travelling scholarship which took him to Europe, observing and sketching the important glass in England and France and the mosaics of Italy. The illustration shows the Resurrection window in Christ Church, Oyster Bay, the Roosevelt Memorial Church. The pew where the president sat is roped off and draped; here also is a tablet in memory of his son Quentin, killed during the World War. Mr. Smith prepared the design for this window, as well as for those in the transepts while he was at Chartres in 1927. The rose window with lancets above, center aisle windows and four gallery windows of Temple Emanu-El in New York are the work of Mr. Smith as well as many beautiful windows in churches scattered over the country.

NEWS NOTES OF THE CHURCH

Edited by
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD

IN HIS convention address Bishop Ablewhite of Marquette recommended a preaching mission in every parish and mission of the diocese the last week of October and the first week in November. He also recommended that the clergy join hands with community agencies in the formulation of programs of recreation for the benefit of the unemployed. He said that play is the antidote of revolutionary discontent and activity. His recommendation went so far as to place parish houses, guild halls and even churches, with the sanctuary properly screened off, at the disposal of community agencies. So the diocese, apparently, is to do what it can to keep the unemployed from thinking by getting them to play ring-around-the-rosie and drop-the-handkerchief. Well it may work for a time but I have an idea those unemployed people, once they get wise to the motive behind all the playfulness, will turn and rend the instigators. Perhaps it would be fairer for me to say that they should. What we need is more Christian revolutionary discontent not less.

There were two visitors to the convention, the Rev. Percy Houghton, field secretary to the National Council, who spoke at the diocesan banquet and Miss Margaret Marston of the Auxiliary who addressed both the Auxiliary meeting and the convention.

Social Service School
In Western New York

To inform the younger clergy in the diocese of the principles of social service and the facilities for the discharge of their responsibilities in this field a short summer school of social work is provided this year by the diocesan social service department of Western New York, the Rev. Leslie F. Chard, chairman. They are to meet on four days and consider Relief, the Handicapped, Correction and County Health Work. Each day begins with a lecture, followed by a sightseeing trip to institutions and ends with an expert summary.

History of Church
Stressed In Michigan

Trail Blazers is the name of a manual now in use in the diocese of Michigan. It sets forth the history of the Church in the State. The centennial of the diocese is to be celebrated in February and this study book is being used to make people familiar with the outstanding incidents in the life of the Church during that time. Daily Vacation Schools are now in session in 22 centers under the direction of diocesan leaders, and other schools are being held under local auspices. In all of these this book is being used.

Manby Lloyd
Writes From England

A communication has been received from our English correspondent, the Rev. A. Manby Lloyd, whose breezy letters have not appeared here for some time. He writes:

Doubtless your readers think your correspondent is like the Cuckoo. He sings a song in April, sings again in May, sings another in June Month and then he flies away. We have been hemmed in by Floods, and the only live business has been Noah's.

Will you believe it, but we are still discussing, (in the columns of the Guardian) why churches are full or empty! For the latter phenomenon we blame Darwin, Blatchford, Sir James Jeans or the clergy who do not keep pace with these specialists. One man blames the revised lectionary, another tells us that the old Prayer-book language is stilted and unintelligible to the half-educated, who are the bulk of the parishioners. But I seem to hear the merry laugh of Fr. Paul Bull, C. R. at a garden-party in Birmingham. A lot of us had been discussing this very question when he brushed aside the specious arguments by saying, "Why are the churches empty? We don't believe in God!—that's the real reason." Which we might have thought of before.

The anonymous letter-writers who are angry with me because I said a good Edgar Wallace novel was better stuff than bad theology may be somewhat mollified when they hear Edgar Wallace was a devout churchman who seldom missed his Sunday duties. Mrs. Wallace broadcast the B. B. C. Appeal last Sunday night that her husband should have made. The Bishop of London preached the radio sermon the same night. It was a Church Army service, and Dr. Ingram broadcast a sermon that would have done credit to him 30 years ago. Before, he said, you reject the mysteries of religion, please explain some of the mysteries that we are up against every day of our life. Life itself, the Atom, even the Wireless—no one can really explain them.

Mob-rule has removed more than one clergyman from his charges in recent months, and a remarkable case (that of the rector of Stiffkey) now deluges the daily papers with more or less questionable copy. Clergy, it seems are ill-advised to neglect their parishes to attend to the needs of nurses and chorus-ladies. The judgment has yet to be delivered, so we refrain from comment.

Graduation At St. Stephen's College

Thirty men received Columbia University degrees at the commencement of St. Stephen's, the Church's undergraduate college of arts and sciences in Columbia University, at the 72nd commencement held June 5th and 6th. Seven of the graduates are to start training in the fall for the ministry; three enter medical schools; three go to law schools; two go to graduate schools of business, four are to enter schools of research. The preacher of the baccalaureate sermon was Dean Philemon Sturges of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston. The Phi Beta Kappa oration was delivered by John Erskine, professor, novelist and Churchman. The commencement address was delivered by Mr. Stephen Baker. It was announced during commencement that of the $50,000 needed to underwrite the expenses of the college during 1932, $36,000 had already been secured.

There have been stormy days for both institutions but it is hoped that under the leadership of Mr. Hastings these large properties of the Church may again serve fine purposes. Meanwhile the Rev. Barrett P. Tyler, former rector of All Saints', Brookline, Mass., has accepted the appointment to be warden of St. Michael's mission to the Arapahoe Indians at Ethete.

Home For Retired
Clergy In Long Island

Some years ago the Rev. Charles Gragg of the diocese of Long Island made a speech in the diocesan convention. He said that pensions for retired clergymen are rarely sufficient to take care of their needs and that the diocese ought to provide for them also by giving them a place to live. Nothing came of the suggestion at that time. However the idea was apparently kept in the back of the minds of the diocesan authorities. The bishops learned of several small dwellings on the large property of the Society of St. Johnland. They needed to be fixed up some, but with money that could be done. Some weeks ago Bishop Larned preached at St. John's, Cold Spring Harbor, and was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jennings. Mrs. Jennings asked if there was anything she might do to aid the work of the diocese. Bishop Larned told her of these little houses. Fine idea, thought Mrs. Jennings, and it didn't strike Mr. Jennings as so bad either. As a result two of the retired clergy of the diocese, with their wives, are now comfortably established in the country. What's more, an endowment sufficient for the upkeep of these houses has been provided.

The records show an annual visitation of about three thousand people—quite a handful and yet not so many considering our communicant strength, for Glebe House is after all to the Church what Independence Hall is to the nation. At the General Convention Mr. Burton Mansfield introduced a resolution calling for the appointment of a commission to arrange for a suitable recognition of the sesqui-centennial of the election of the first American bishop and of his consecration which took place in Scotland on November 14, 1784, a year and a half later.

Chicago Brotherhood Hold Spring Meeting

Two hundred men, clergy and laity, met at St. Mark's, Glen Ellyn, Illinois on Saturday last for the annual spring assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The headline address was given by Bishop Stewart who said that Christianity has an opportunity of a lifetime to stand out in a world rocking to the base. He predicted a new alignment of political forces as a result of the present economic situation, adding that "we will not be satisfied until we have a social order which does not create victims such as we have by thousands today."

Mrs. Gardiner's Daughter Upset Her Plans

It seems that Mrs. Robert Alexander Gardiner, Park Avenue, New York, had plans for the marriage of her daughter to Mr. James Creel. It was all to be according to Hoyle and a credit to the family. The young lady had other ideas on the subject however and for several days she was reported lost. Last heard from she was going for a canter in Central Park with a nice young man. Instead of this, it later developed, she cantered over to Garden City, along with Mr. Creel, bank clerk, and there they were married by Dean Sargent. All of which very much upset Mrs. Gardiner, mother, who packed herself off to Garden City, with her son, armed herself with a policeman and called upon the dean to give him a bit of her mind. She then discovered that there is now a canon forbidding clergymen to marry without three days' notice. She therefore threatened to report him to the diocesan authorities. To all of which Dean Sargent merely smiles and says, "Don't let anyone worry about me breaking the canons of the Church." Which I presume ends the matter until the newspapers tell us of Mother Gardiner welcoming home her daughter and her new son-in-law.

Natives Pay Great Tribute To Miss Ridgely

When Margarette Ridgely left Liberia a few weeks ago on furlough, citizens presented her with a resolution expressing their appreciation of her twenty-seven years of service in that country. It is filled with "whereases" and "Therefore be its" which makes this resolution, like all others, anything but snappy reading. Nevertheless it is a tribute to a real missionary that should be passed on. It tells of Miss Ridgely being left alone in the field and of carrying on not only educational work but medical work as well, even though she made no pretense at being prepared for it. The influence of this missionary, according to this resolution, penetrates the country. They express their grateful thanks to God for His servant, and "we further express our deep sense of gratitude, respect and love for Miss Ridgely and her accomplishments among us as a race and people. We pledge our undivided interest and support to the work at the House of Bethany so loyally served by Miss Ridgely. We memorialize the National Council of the Church in America and the good Christian people thereof to spare no efforts to continue this laudable undertaking of Miss Ridgely until such time as we can do so ourselves."

Memorial Dedicated At Canon City Parish

A Sanctuary lamp and eucharistic tabernacle for the altar was dedicated on June 5th at Christ Church, Canon City, Colorado. Both were the gifts of a member of the congregaton as a thank offering. The Rev. L. A. Crittenton, who is also chaplain of the state prison at Canon City, is the rector of the parish. Bishop Johnson preached the sermon at the service of dedication.

Dedicate Student Center In Texas

On June 1st the Church's student center at Texas College, Luddock, district of North Texas, was dedicated as Seaman Hall, in honor of the bishop of the district. At the same time the sanctuary was consecrated as Creighton Chapel in honor of Bishop Creighton. The Rev. Bradner J. Moore is in charge and is doing a notable work among the students at the college in addition to his parish work.

Nurses Hear Alfred Newbery

The Rev. Alfred Newbery, rector of the Atonement, Chicago, was the speaker at the graduation exercises at St. Luke's Hospital Training School, held at St. James Church. The church was packed to witness the graduation of 77 nurses. Said Mr. Newbery: "Do not be ashamed to confess that your dominant idea in having entered the profession of nursing was and is to earn a living." Now there is a bit of honest speaking for you. Most parsons, probably, would have discoursed on the theme of service to humanity. "Neither be ashamed" he went on, "if it is an abiding hope that you will sometime abandon this profession to make a home. These are legitimate aims, necessary, praiseworthy. But whether you contemplate self-support or household duties as your main activity, the important accomplishment that challenges you is the making of some kind of personality. Nurse, doctor, teacher, merchant, whatever you may become, the one supreme task by arranging for it to be liquidated or reduced considerably within a maximum period of fifteen years?

Why Not Pay Off Your Church Mortgage

Such financial obligations, even now when all expenses must be lowered, need not be a burden to the supporters of the Parish or to the individual church. A fund to which a payment as low as fifty cents a month means a contribution of $100.00, can be provided. A small annual payment, the amount determined on a percentage basis, will take care of a subscriber's entire pledge and create a surplus emergency fund as well.

The Church Life Insurance Corporation helps you manage the plan in expert fashion and places its facilities at the disposal of your Parish.

The fund, when it is established, is administered by the Vestry or by a special committee, and guarantees liquidation or reduction of the indebtedness at the end of a definite period.

Full information about this convenient method of settling a debt on church property will be sent upon request.

Lay Corner Stone For Holderness Building

The corner stone of the social hall, one of the new buildings of Holderness School, was laid on June 7th, the last day of the 52nd commencement. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. William P. Niles, a trustee and son of the late Bishop Niles, one of the founders of the school. The building will contain the rectory, dining hall and offices and for the coming year will also house the boys. This is but the first unit of a large plant which it is hoped may soon be constructed to take the place of the school buildings destroyed last fall by fire. The Rev. Edric A. Weld is the rector of the school.

The Answer of Whitsunday

Weeks elapse before rainfall at the headwaters of a great continental drainage system registers where the river enters the sea. A month after Whitsunday the final total of contributions to the Deficiency Fund is not known at Church Missions House.

The indications are that the General Church will receive $325,000 of the amount that is needed to meet an estimated deficiency in income under the reduced budget for 1932. This statement is based on the following figures:

Contributions already received	$167,401.55
Reported but not transmitted	50,934.08
Additional assurances	82,742.17
Estimated from dioceses not heard from	25,000.00
TOTAL	$326,077.80

This is not a full measure of success (*) but it represents earnest effort and genuine sacrifice, and it is sufficient to transform an impossible situation into one which is possible of solution before the end of the year. This hope is justified by the following considerations:

(1) Further economies in administration of the budget of the National Council.

(2) The door remains open for additional gifts to the Deficiency Fund throughout the remaining six months of the year. Many are contributing a percentage of their salary in instalments as the salary is received.

(3) The receipts from the dioceses on quotas may exceed "the expectancies" reported last January.

In the midst of days of fearfulness and difficulty the people of the Church have met valiantly a desperate situation. Every little brown penny in this offering has a religious lustre.

SURSUM CORDA!

* If sums raised for diocesan emergencies are included, the total given on Whitsunday is nearly a half million dollars.

Vol. XVI. No. 45 JUNE 30, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

A COMMITTEE OF THREE BISHOPS, Bishops Lawrence, Davis and McDowell, was appointed at the conference of the House of Bishops and the National Council held in April at Garden City, for the purpose of advising the Council in matters of finance. A communication has now been received from Bishop Lawrence, chairman of this committee, which assures the Church that "large savings have been effected and that a process of reduction in the force and expense has been initiated and carried forward as rapidly as principles of humanity will permit." The committee was appointed for the purpose, largely, of dealing with the matters raised in the report submitted at Garden City by a committee of bishops of the second province of which Bishop Fiske was the chairman. Bishop Lawrence however, states that his committee, representing but one house of General Convention, felt that they had no authority to advise the Council on questions of policy. He does point out however that on two of them, namely, the static work and comparative allotments to missionary jurisdictions and aided dioceses, executives of the Council and a committee of General Convention are already at work. The communication concludes by saying that "As to the year 1932, we are confident that, assuming that the dioceses will meet their pledges, the funds in hand and promised will end the year with a balanced budget. As to 1933, we have advised heavy cuts and by the beginning of the year may have to advise even heavier, for at this early date it is impossible to name exact figures. The executives of the National Council are with us in the confidence that without further emergency appeal, but by drastic economies, much sacrifice and extraordinary effort to obtain gifts, the 1933 budget will be balanced. To go over the top in 1933, however, will call for the fullest devotion and most generous gifts from every member of the Church, and towards this there must be more thorough and vital organization in every diocese and parish."

THE BRIEF COMMUNICATION, which is merely an informal letter approved by the three members of the committee and in no sense a report, gives little indication of what may be contained in the formal report which presumably will be presented at the next meeting of the National Council in the fall. The fact that they have advised heavy cuts for 1933 leads one to hope that a real evaluation of the work of the National Council has been undertaken. The people of the Church generally, we believe, have for a considerable time been under the impression that there is waste and extravagance at the Church Missions House. The fact that this committee of bishops is now able to report that "large savings have been effected" seems to indicate that there was justification for the rumpus raised largely by Bishop Fiske and that the Church is indebted to him for a real service, as well as to the executives at the Church Missions House who are now putting through these economies. The communication from Bishop Lawrence leaves many questions unanswered which are of interest to informed Churchmen. He states that heavy cuts for 1933 have been advised but he gives no indication as to where these cuts are to be made. However the committee is composed of three exceedingly capable men and we have confidence that they have made a thorough study of the work being done at the Church Missions House by the various departments, and that when their formal report is submitted that they will recommend the elimination of all work which is not absolutely essential.

MANY LETTERS have been received inquiring whether or not we are to publish in book form the series of articles on "The Story of the Church" by Bishop Johnson, recently concluded. For their information, and for the information of others who may be interested, we wish to take this opportunity to say that we plan to bring out such a book this summer, ready for delivery in the early fall. We cannot as yet give the price but we hope to keep it low enough so that rectors may purchase the book in quantities for use with confirmation classes and in their parishes. There have also been inquiries about the series of articles which appeared during Lent on "The Christian Way Out of Our Economic Difficulties." These also will be made into a little book this summer. There will be further announcements about the dates of publication.

by the Soviet Government and is now a leader among the Russian Orthodox in Paris. He has just published a book, "The Russian Revolution" which is a treatment of that subject from the religious standpoint. Dr. Berdyaev is, as you can well imagine, no communist. But do not turn to his book to secure comfort based upon that fact. For he gives it as his opinion that "if there is not a Christian revival in the world, a re-birth not only among the elite but also among the great masses of the people, atheistic communism will conquer over the whole earth" since communism "acts truths which rhetorical, tattered, decadent Christianity has neglected." "Christianity", he writes, "is again face to face with the question whether it takes its Christianity seriously . . . if the Christian peoples do not make a tremendous spiritual effort to adopt the Christian way of life atheistic communism will be triumphant in the world."

GRIT AND GRACE

An Editorial by
BISHOP JOHNSON

"AS WE journey through life, let us live by the way." And it is more difficult to live with ourselves and with others, than it is to make a success of one's business. Each human soul is a little world in which the conflicts and trials of the larger world are reflected. In order to live joyously we must not only get along with one another without undue friction. We must also see that there is no root of bitterness springing up within ourselves whereby many will be defiled.

In order to do this successfully we must depend upon three motivations: gratitude, grit and generosity. The grace of God is like the sunlight. It shines continuously, but like the sun it hardens one field, whereas it fertilizes another. The difference lies in the receptivity of the soil. If the soil is properly cultivated and irrigated, the sun will cause the seeds planted therein to grow. If the soil is hard and baked, then the sun only intensifies that condition. The love of God shining upon the Cross made it a fruitful tree. The same love toward those who crucified Christ only intensified their malice. "The Kingdom is within you."

Wherever a soul has disciplined itself to have gratitude to God, grit to overcome obstacles and the generosity to endure the faults of others, then the grace of God can be depended upon to bring forth the fruits of the spirit which are love, joy and peace, but the grace of God is not a mechanical force that will produce results in those who merely observe the conventional habits of religion. The three go together, grit, generosity and gratitude as conditions of the soul which make grace effective.

If you are unhappy in your religious life, do not blame your minister or your community. Examine yourselves and discover the limitations within, which cause the grace of God to be of none effect. If as fishers of men you fail to catch fish do not blame the fish. Study your bait. God's grace is the permanent factor in our lives; it makes no difference what the circumstances which surround us may be, His grace is sufficient for us. Just now the conditions of life are very hard and if grit abounds, grace will much more abound.

The confident leaders of an economic and political world are amazed to find that they are not really the supermen they were supposed to be. Even our leading educators are baffled. With a multitude of riches, people are hungry and with a plethora of education crime is on the rampage. As usual these leaders look upon religion as a negligible factor in the progress of the race, but in spite of this contemptuous attitude, many of us wonder whether the real trouble with the world may not be that such a small proportion of men have really loved God and their neighbors; and have regarded man as of more value than gold and a child more important than a machine. As a spectator of the game of life I unfeignedly believe that "thou shalt love God" and "thou shalt love thy neighbor" are as basically axioms of decent living as the axioms of geometry and that a merely materialistic leadership will inevitably end in chaos. It is this conviction which makes me confident that the ministrations of the Church are more necessary now than ever, for it is the one place in which it is still possible to lift up our hearts and receive the peace of God which passeth man's understanding.

BUT we, clergy and laity, need to discipline ourselves more than we need to criticize conditions. I am convinced that the habit of complaining and criticizing is usually a defense mechanism for incompetency. What may happen in the world if conditions do not improve, no one can foretell, but one thing is certain that whatever reconstruction society must make, unless there is a respectable leaven of those who love God and man, civilization will end in a mess, in which local demagogues will impose their theories by force, upon a herd of bewildered sheep. He is still the Good Shepherd. One looks in vain for national leadership in which reverence for God and human lives is the animating motive.

As James Truslow Adams has well said, we have surrendered our morals as well as our fortunes into the hands of financiers and diplomats, and they have bankrupted both. I am of the opinion that an evil and adulterous generation (I do not see how it could be more aptly described if the press, the movies and the modern home be an index) is seeking after a sign and it may be that no sign will be given it. The age is intensely superstitious rather than religious. As the manager of a radio station recently said, "The program in a certain large city which drew the greatest mass of mail, was that given by an ignorant woman who posed as an astrologer." Men are as eager for cheap methods of salvation as they have been for easy money.

People do not believe in God but they are crazy over any fad which will satisfy their curiosity without increasing their obligations. In my judgment there is nothing that the Church can do about it as a Church, but continue to bear witness to the truth whether men hear or whether they fail. For the Church, as such, to enter the political arena is always to demonstrate that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light; that ministers are poor politicians, and that as soon as they become good politicians they lose their spiritual influence. I do not mean that they are to refuse service to their country in whatever way they may be called to serve as citizens. That is imperative upon us all, but the Church as an institution has no more business in politics than has the university or grand opera. "In quietness and confidence shall be our strength," and not in entangling alliances with sects or parties, neither of which has much in common with the spirit of the Church or its aims and purposes. We need to go on saying our prayers, reading our Bibles, making our communions, and then doing unto others as we would have them do unto us. In the homely phrase of the frontier, we all of us need to be sawing wood.

The Great Picnic

A STORY FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

By

EVELEEN HARRISON

WHERE were all the people going? Such crowds passed quickly through the streets, talking earnestly about something.

"Haste thee, Sarah, or we may be too late to see the wonderful things!"

"Tell us again, Samuel, what saw ye the great Rabbi Jesus do?"

"When we find Him, think you that He will help our Rachel?"

So they talked, as men, women and children passed down the street.

The whole town seemed to be interested in this strange journey; a boy broke through the crowd, and pushed open the door of a small house.

"Mother, may I go? Will you give me some lunch? All the town goes today out to the brow of the hill at the end of the Lake, to see such wonderful things! for the great Rabbi Jesus is here!"

The mother looked lovingly into her boy's eager face.

"Yes, my son; see, Reuben, here is thy lunch, fresh barley bread, and fish just caught from the Lake. Take thy basket, and God go with thee."

A long, hot walk, but what of that? The wonderful things were to come.

"On top of that grassy slope,—see that knot of men? There He is!"

The crowd pressed eagerly on; such a strange crowd. Blind men stretched out their hands to be led. Deaf ones kept eyes fixed on the hill. Those who carried dear friends on litters, took up anew their heavy burden. The lame hobbled painfully forward. Lepers followed afar off.

Hush! through the clear air comes the music of His voice.

"Come unto Me, come unto Me—ye weary and heavy laden." And the burdened crowd passed on up the hill.

Right in the front ran Reuben, full of a boy's delight in the wonders to be seen and heard. At the side of the great Rabbi he stood; joined with delight in the shouts of joy as the blind first opened their eyes to the glorious light; the deaf answered the questions of their friends; the lame rose to their feet, leaping and singing for joy; the sick took up their beds and walked, and the lepers, bowing to the ground at the feet of the great Healer, rose clean and whole.

Oh, the gladness and rejoicing! the tears of happiness on the faces of friends and loved ones!

And then the stories the great Rabbi told; of the birds and the flowers, the animals and the jewels. Earnestly Reuben listened and wondered.

Hour after hour passed. Finally the Rabbi Jesus turned to His special friends. "I have compassion on the multitude; give them to eat!"

Give them to eat?

"Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not enough, that each may have a mouthful!" exclaimed Philip.

At these words Reuben, eager to help, stretched out the little lunch basket that his mother had given him.

One of the special friends named Andrew stopped and opened the basket.

"Master," he called, "there is a lad here who hath five barley loaves and two small fishes; but," he added, with a shrug of his shoulders, "what are they among so many?"

The Rabbi Jesus smiled down upon the boy, and turned with outstretched hand. "Bring him hither to Me."

With a radiant face Reuben laid down the basket at the feet of the Master.

"Bid the men sit down," the quiet voice commanded.

Like a large flock of birds the great company settled down upon the grassy hillside. Fifty, and fifty, and fifty; in row after row; men, women and little children, lots of little children.

St. John 6:5-14.

Closely Reuben watched to see what the great Rabbi would do. What could He do, even He, with five little rolls and two tiny fishes? Hardly enough for one hungry boy.

The hands of the Rabbi Jesus were outstretched, raised to Heaven. Every head was bowed, and a deep silence passed through that great company; for a blessing was asked from God above on the lad's bread and fish.

And then what a marvelous wonder took place! Basket after basket was filled and handed to the special friends. Back and forth they went, up and down the rows of people, urging them all to take what they required.

When a basket was empty, back went the carrier to the Rabbi Jesus, and again it was filled. The more He gave away, the more He had to give.

Could it be possible? Five small loaves and two wee fish?

With joy Reuben helped carry back and forth the baskets. Over and over he kept repeating: "My lunch enough for five thousand people!" His heart beat so fast with joy and pride that he could hardly breathe. For was he not permitted to help the Rabbi Jesus?

Had not his missionary offering—all he had to give —been accepted and magnified a thousand fold?

"Gather up all the fragments, let nothing be lost."

And again the baskets, this time full of broken pieces, were laid at the feet of the Rabbi Jesus.

The people bowed their heads in awe and wonder, then leaped to their feet, shouting: "This is the Prophet, the Great One!—let us make Him our King!"

But the Master had disappeared.

"And Oh mother!" exclaimed Reuben that night, as he told the wonderful story, "He allowed me to help Him; He accepted my offering, and I am only a boy!"

Haunted Pews

By

CURTIS B. CAMP

DID you ever think what the Empty Pew means. It does not mean merely that you do not go to Church regularly. It means much more than that.

In the first place the Church always represents a considerable investment. There is always an expensive site and plant usually comparable with other important investments in the community. The plant is kept in repair, the grass cut, or the snow shoveled, and the whole place is heated, cleaned and dusted just for you to spend a little more than one hour a week in your pew, and then you do not go. From the standpoint of use or economy of the investment, it is wrong for you to be connected with the Church at all, and not go occasionally to sit in your pew.

Some people belong to golf clubs and play very little golf, but that costs them money and they usually are complaining about how much their golf costs them when they do play. Belonging to a Church and leaving your pew vacant is the same kind of a thing except that you would have more real pleasure and get more benefit, socially, morally, intellectually and spiritually by going to church regularly than by playing golf regularly.

Then again the empty pew is a sign of poor breeding. It is impolite to leave your pew vacant Sunday after Sunday without cause. Somebody has worked hard to make that particular hour pleasant for you. Someone has prepared a program of music, the rector has prepared a sermon, your friends are expecting you. Under such circumstances if the occasion was a social or business meeting, it would be poor manners to stay away, yet the church is more intimate in its relation to you, to your family and to your home life than either of these other groups. Give the church an even break with other things in which you would not purposely disappoint anyone who has made a special effort in your behalf.

If you were in your pew every Sunday, and never missed, you would only spend about as much time in Church each week as you spend each day eating your luncheon. About one hour a week, but that hour is the culmination of a whole week's work for your rector. He has been busy ministering to the sick, with young peoples activities, character building probably with your own children, and with other duties that show results in human lives over the years. Priceless results that time alone can measure, but almost devoid of present encouragement—except through your pew, which every week casts a silent vote for or against the success of his efforts. Don't you want to vote every Sunday in the affirmative?

Some folks say that habitually vacant pews become haunted like vacant houses, and that the ghosts that infest them are the excuses people give for not going to church. So that we might have in our pew, if we habitually allow it to be vacant on Sunday mornings, a ghost as our representative at the service, by the name of "Indifference" or "Procrastination," or whatever reason we may give for not going to church. We might have as our proxy at the service a ghost with an Indian name, like "Young-Man-Who-Works-in-the-Garden" or one of less cheerful mien as "Anti-Loyalty" or "Lack-of-Faith."

And then there is the golf ghost whose chief characteristic is certain physical defects, such as "dropping the shoulder," and "looking up." This poor fellow also suffers from a malady called "bringing the heads ahead of the club." He has a distinctive worried look resulting from repeated failures to attain his ideal, and from an ever-present belief, never realized, that tomorrow he will overcome all of his physical defects. His is a sad case, but there are others such as "Rainy Day", "Fair Weather", "Picnics", etc.

But suppose there aren't any ghosts as some will probably contend, well, in that case, this is just poetical license. Suppose our vacant pews are not haunted and that no trace of ghosts can be found in the church, well then we retaliate that the ghosts, although no trace of them can be found, are just as real as the excuses they represent. If you believe in the excuses people give for not going to church, you will have no trouble whatever believing in ghosts. Even a flimsy ghost is made of more substantial stuff.

But let's first forget the excuses, and then their ghosts will not bother us, and then in that Church hour on Sunday morning we will have a lot of pleasure and good fellowship, and the satisfaction that comes from doing our duty to God and to our neighbors, by supporting with our presence His church that stands for all that is best in the individual and in the home. Being in your pew regularly every Sunday will mean so much to so many people, yourself included. And then when you really need the church some day, in that emergency that comes to us all, it will be the natural thing for you to avail yourself of it, instead of an unfamiliar thing to you in that hour of need. Being in our pews regularly sounds like such a simple matter that we do not realize how important it is.

BISHOP WILSON

Peter's Pence

THE fortunes of war in Anglo-Saxon England brought to Offa, king of Mercia, the controlling sovereignity in the eighth century. He found the Church organized in such a way that bishops ranked as "ealdermen" while archbishops ranked as princes of the blood, having even the right to issue coinage. There was an archbishop at Canterbury and one at York but none in the kingdom of Mercia. The ambitious Offa therefore determined to have his own archbishop and thereby check the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of Canterbury. The see of Lichfield was chosen for this elevation and the support of the Pope was sought. At a Church Council held at Calcuith in 787 two papal commissioners were received as guests and the plan was put through. In return, Offa promised to pay to Rome an annual sum of money to be collected by a tax of one penny on every household in his kingdom which was not entirely destitute. It was called Peter's Pence or the Rome-fee (Romefeot). The Archbishop of Lichfield lasted only twenty-five years, when it was abolished, but, like most taxes, Peter's Pence was not so easily disposed of. The popes continued to call for it and it was paid intermittently and in varying amounts.

After a couple of centuries the sum was settled to a flat amount of 299 silver marks. At the time of the Norman conquest of England (1066) it was far in arrears. Pope Gregory VII construed it as payment in recognition of the feudal vassalage of England to the Pope and demanded of William the Conqueror that he should make up the payments and at the same time should render feudal homage to the Pope. William's answer is on record—"to do homage I refuse, because I never promised to do it, nor do I find that my predecessors have ever done it. The money shall be more regularly paid."

So for the next five hundred years Peter's Pence was paid irregularly, depending chiefly on the cordiality of relationships between England and the papal see. In 1553 is was officially abolished by act of Parliament. During the reign of Queen Mary it was restored and, in 1559, with the accession of Elizabeth, it was finally terminated.

Efforts were made, during the Middle Ages, to bring other countries to follow the English example. In the eleventh century Denmark and Poland paid it but the effort to bring Prussia into line failed. The following century Sweden began to send it in and the custom spread to Norway, Iceland, and the Faroe Islands. Attempts to introduce it into France and Spain were entirely unsuccessful. At the time of the Reformation it disappeared.

When, in the middle of the nineteenth century, the movement for a united Italy got under way and the papal territories began to be chipped off, contributions were sent to the Pope from various countries to compensate for the losses of the Papal States. These were also called Peter's Pence and had reached such a sum that the Pope felt justified in refusing the pension of three-and-a-half million francs offered by the Italian government back in the seventies. There is no connection between the modern Peter's Pence and that of the Middle Ages. The amounts received have never been officially published nor any accounting of their use. The Catholic Encyclopedia estimates that after the occupation of Rome they reached a total of four million dollars in one year. Since then they have been greatly reduced. Nobody knows what they may be today.

BISHOP STEARLY SPEAKING AT COMMENCEMENT

ST. JOHN BAPTIST SCHOOL

By

A SISTER OF THE COMMUNITY OF ST. JOHN BAPTIST

MORRISTOWN is well known as a town of beautiful old houses and shady streets in the hilly section of Northern New Jersey. Drive out westward from Morristown on the Chester road for eight miles; first you will pass through picturesque little Mendham, then high on a hill, 650 feet above sea level, you will see St. John Baptist School, a substantial concrete building of the Georgian type, commanding a view in all directions,—Bernardsville to the south, Mendham, with its houses and spires, to the east, and loveliest of all, Mount Paul and blue distant hills to the west.

The school faces north, so, as we enter, we cross the wide corridor and, stepping out on the enclosed roof of the colonnade, we look down on the playing field, a double tennis court, a running track, the beginning of an orchard on one side, the rose garden, and beyond that, the place destined for the hockey field. To the west lies a pretty little birch wood, with possibilities of a stream and a wild garden. Now we will turn our steps within and walk down the corridor; we shall see four cheerful sunny classrooms, and at the west end a large school room with desks for most of the girls.

The school can accommodate forty-four boarding pupils, and there are a few day pupils from the neighborhood. The girls are from twelve years old and upward, for there is a six years' course of study. The school is over fifty years old; founded in 1880 in the Sisters' House on Stuyvesant Square, New York. Then in 1885 given its separate establishment, moved to a country house in Ralston in 1915 and in 1929 settled in its larger well-planned home in Mendham, the result of twelve years of prayer and effort and generous gifts from old and new friends.

Our bishop asked once if we found our new building satisfactory, and we could gladly assure him that it is so. On the south exposure of the ground floor is the spacious dining-room, and a music room. There is also a gymnasium and a sun parlor opening on the colonnade. The second and third floors are used entirely for bedrooms; single for teachers, double for girls, but each girl has her own set of furniture and closet. Nearly all the bedrooms face the south, leaving the north side for bathrooms, linen rooms, etc. The main floor is chiefly given to classrooms.

THE ALTAR
In the School Chapel

THE school has always aimed at a high standard in studies. As far back as 1891 one of our graduates entered Harvard Annex (which later became Radcliffe College) and since then our girls have entered Wellesley, Smith, Bryn Mawr, Barnard, Wilson, Hood and other colleges. For girls not going to college, general cultural courses are provided. While the Sisters have the planning and general supervision of the studies, there is a good staff of secular teachers, young college graduates, a native French mistress, special teachers for music, art, household arts, dramatics and physical training. Athletics are not neglected. There is a vigorous basket-ball team, while tennis, track, archery, riding and aesthetic dancing have their turn in the year's activities.

And religion? Yes, first, there is now (as always, since the school's foundation) a regular obligatory course of sacred studies, beginning with Old Testament and New Testament history and ending with Wakeman's English Church History and Burleson's Conquest of the Continent. Besides this there is a good deal of individual teaching and class preparation for confirmation and first communion. And second, there is the chapel, the dearest and most used place in the school. At present it is temporary, the large east room corresponding to the main schoolroom, and destined to be the library eventually,—but with its lovely altar and reredos it makes a very devotional chapel. Here the girls assemble for brief morning prayers and later for evensong, on one weekday for holy communion, while on Sunday they may go early to the convent chapel and later to the parish Church in Mendham. The chapel is theirs. One of them sometimes plays the organ, the altar guild rings the bell, lights the candles and cares for the altar. They may also use the chapel for their private prayers, and before bedtime we see the blue veiled figures flitting in and out. Sometime in the '80's, the sister in charge of the school said to a young sister, "Sister, we must teach our girls, but as long as they simply believe what we say, and do as we tell them, it will not last. Every girl must come to a personal knowledge and love of Our Lord for herself, if it is to carry her through life." That saying has since been passed on from one school sister to another, and that personal conversion is what we watch and pray for. That it comes the after lives of many of our girls show. As instances, one has done heroic missionary work in China and the Philippines, two are the mainstay of the women's work in a southern diocese, one is at the head of a large summer camp, and sees that Sunday is rightly observed, several are wives of clergy and real help-mates, several are sisters in different religious communities. Truly school work is missionary work and carries far.

A HOMELIKE ATMOSPHERE
Is Maintained at the School

IN THE early days of our building campaign, our bishop, the Rt. Rev. Wilson Stearly, said, "The school is needed in northern New Jersey." One proof of this is the large proportion of girls from our own diocese. A school with good college preparatory work and happy and protected home life at a moderate cost meets a real need. During the past two years every place in the boarding department has been filled.

Like every live thing the school ought to grow and develop. It always makes special terms for the daughters of the clergy, but a few fully endowed scholarships ($10,000 to $15,000) would be a great blessing, and what a lasting memorial such a scholarship would be!

A separate chapel (for which we have beautiful plans) would be a great thing in itself, and also set the present chapel free for a library. A large gymnasium and swimming pool would mean endless health and delight to generations of girls. $8,000 to repair and refurnish the former school would make it available for a teachers' residence, and enable us to take fifty girls instead of forty-four.

The school is incorporated under the laws of the State of New Jersey so it can legally receive gifts and bequests. May God, Who has blessed and guided the school thus far, now lead to it new friends and helpers.

BEAUTIFUL TRINITY CHAPEL IS CONSECRATED

Nine bishops and scores of clergymen took part in the consecration of the beautiful new chapel at Trinity College, Hartford, the gift of Mr. William Mather of Cleveland. The service was an exceptionally fine one, being worked out in great detail by President Ogilby. Prominent in the service were the architects, the engineers and what is perhaps something new for a service of this sort, the laborers who toiled on the building. The bishops present were Bishop Brewster who consecrated the chapel; Bishop Perry, presiding bishop; Bishop Cook; Bishop Acheson; Bishop Budlong; Bishop Cheshire; Bishop Roberts; Bishop Bartlett and Bishop Lawrence. The chapel is without doubt one of the most beautiful churches in the country and is well worth visiting whenever you happen to be in Connecticut. In addition to the chapel the new Cook Dormitory was also opened for the first time and the visiting alumni had their first look at this thoroughly modern building, with large dining hall and common room. So the commencement was a real success even though the baseball team did take it on the chin to the tune of ten to three from Harvard.

NEWS NOTES OF THE CHURCH

Edited by
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD

THEY are offering prizes in the diocese of Long Island to stimulate a bit of thinking along international lines. They are to have a conference next week for young people and three scholarships for the conference are to be awarded to the three members who give the best speeches on Christianity and World Peace. In addition to these speeches peace is to have its innings in the form of a pageant on the subject, to be produced on the last night of the conference under the direction of Miss Mildred Brown.

Clergy Give Most of Fund in Rhode Island

The diocese of Rhode Island contributed $5,000 to the deficiency fund of the National Council, with $4,800 of the sum coming from the clergy. It is also announced that the diocese has taken steps so that there shall be no deficit at the end of the year, having made adequate provision for the balancing of the budget of $96,500. Although the diocese has met its pledge to the National Council for the past several years it has done so only by intensive solicitation of laymen late in the year. The fact that they have balanced their budget so early in the year is a notable achievement, particularly in this year of depression.

Bishop Page Sees End of Modern Political Systems

Bishop Page of Michigan, speaking at the commencement of the Western Theological Seminary, said that modern political systems are doomed unless reconciliation of conflicting blows and forces are brought about shortly. He asserted that while basically Christianity is a gospel of reconciliation the divisions of the Christian world tend to accentuate the divisions and competitions of the secular world. "We must admit," he said, "that Christianity is largely a divisive force in modern life. Who are we to tell business men, races, nations and married people that they must compose their differences and cooperate with each other when we Christians cannot cooperate among ourselves? If those who worship the same God and follow the same Christ cannot reasonably work in harmony how far can we expect a needy world to believe that in Christ is to be found the hope of our distracted civilization?" Speaking of the situation Bishop Page asserted that our civilization is being brought to ruin by the very achievements of which we have had the greatest pride; business efficiency, mass production, inventions that are miraculous, scientific research, national self-determination and even education. "It is clear", he said, "that the great problem in the business world today is coordination of effort. Cut-throat competition must be changed into cooperation, not only within a nation but throughout the world."

Bishop Brent
Professorship at Hobart

It was announced at the commencement of Hobart College that a chair of International Relations had been founded in honor of the late Bishop Brent of Western New York. The choice of the field of international relations as the most fitting memorial to Bishop Brent was made because such a field best represents his ideals and his place in history, both as an advocate and a worker for world unity in religion and world friendship among nations. Those honored with degrees at the 107th commencement were the Hon. Vincent Massey, first Canadian minister to the United States; Hon. Cuthbert Winfred Pound, chief justice of the Court of Appeals of New York; Dean F. B. Blodgett of Erie; the Rev. John W. Suter Jr., executive secretary of the department of religious education; Percival H. Whaley, editor; and the Rev. W. W. Way, president of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, North Carolina.

Caleb R. Stetson Was Eleventh Rector of Trinity

The newspaper stated at the time of the death of Dr. Caleb R. Stetson, reported here last week, that he was the twelfth rector of the parish whereas he was the eleventh. The mistake probably arose from counting the Bishop of London as the first rector. For the purposes of the charter the king of England did appoint Henry Compton, the bishop of London, as the rector but he never exercised the office and has therefore not been counted in any American or legal sense as the rector. The first rector was William Vesey who served from 1697 to 1746.

Prominent Georgia
Rector Dies

The Rev. Horace C. Chase, College Park, Georgia, and in charge of the Holy Comforter, Atlanta, died on June 7th. Mr. Chase spent twenty years of his early life in religious work in Mexico. He came to Atlanta and was ordained in 1922. Since that time he has been in very active service in spite of his advanced years . . . he was 84 at the time of his death. He was a grandson of Philander Chase, first bishop of Ohio. He was also one of the oldest graduates of Trinity College, Hartford. He and Mrs. Chase celebrated their golden wedding a few months ago.

Dorothy Canfield Fisher
Writes Pageant for Vermont

Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, novelist, was the author of a pageant presented recently at exercises marking the 100th anniversary of the organization of the diocese of Vermont. It was descriptive of scenes and events leading up to the formation of the parish at Arlington. It was in five scenes, the first in England when our forefathers decided to migrate to the new country. The last scene represented a group of moderns, deploring the decline of all that is good and holy, but their pessimism is knocked into a cocked-hat when there suddenly appeared fifty children behind a processional cross all singing "Onward Christian Soldiers" very lustily.

Church Colleges
Competing for Brains

The Church colleges may not be so hot on the football field but they appear to be right there with the brain power, which after all is said may not be such a bad thing for a college to possess. It is revealed that in a psychological examination conducted last fall by the American Council on Education among the freshmen of colleges throughout the country Kenyon College ranked eighth, Trinity was sixteenth and Hobart and also William Smith were not far behind. Of course I presume a lot of the credit for these brains will have to go to the prep schools since it was a freshman examination, and taken in the fall of the year. Now if they could have an examination of seniors it would be possible for us to determine just how valuable a college education really is.

Canon of York
Coming to Berkeley

The Rev. Lindsay Dewar, canon of York, England, is to be the special lecturer at the Berkeley Divinity School next year. Oxford, University of London, pastor, army chaplain, college lecturer is his background. He is an authority in philosophy and psychology and is the author of several books. While at Berkeley he is to do a certain amount of outside lecturing and preaching. Those who desire his services should communicate at an early date with Dean Ladd, New Haven. He is to be at the school during the first term.

Dr. Silver Doesn't Think So Much of Keynoters

The Rev. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Incarnation, New York, doesn't think so much of keynoters at political conventions. In his sermon last Sunday he said that delegates to political conventions showed little intelligence in insisting upon self-praise and blackguarding their opponents. "Keynote speakers usually have the intelligence of a ten year old boy", he said, but he corrected this later on by saying that some of them might have the minds of eleven or twelve year olds. He made it clear that he was referring to no particular convention. "Keynoters are an insult to the American intelligence. They select a man with a big voice who can fill a big hall and say a lot against the other party."

Woman Layreader in Colorado

Things are getting modern in Colorado. Bishop Ingley began his 12th year as Bishop Coadjutor by visiting the Denver Poor Farm for a confirmation. The class was presented by the Rev. E. J. Skinner, a retired priest, who ministers there regularly. One of the features of the service was the bishop's commission of one of the residents, Mrs. Pettit, as lay reader. She is to read Morning Prayer there every Sunday, with Mr. Skinner continuing to come regularly for communions. As far as we know this is the first licensed woman layreader in the Church.

Hundreds at Funeral of Caleb R. Stetson

Fully fifteen hundred people crowded into Trinity Church, New York, on Saturday, June 18, for the funeral of the rector, the Rev Caleb R. Stetson. The service was conducted by Bishop Manning, former rector, and he was assisted by the vicars of the seven Trinity Parish chapels. There were over fifty clergymen in the procession, with scores of others attending the service. Among the prominent laymen present were Nicholas Murray Butler, Mr. Samuel Thorne, Mr. Monell Sayre, and Mr. Alfred E. Marling while scores of leading bankers, ministered to by this downtown parish, were in the congregation.

Brady has been driving 45 miles to Byers for a service and for a confirmation class.

Smart People
Pay a Big Price

It is tough to be smart. The Rev. Edward R. Hardy Jr. matriculated a college when he was five; passed the Harvard entrance examinations when he was ten; entered Columbia when he was twelve; had his Phi Beta Kappa key when he was fourteen; had his master's degree when he was sixteen. Then he went to the General and knocked them over there also. 'Tis said that when he came up for his canonical examinations some of the examiners thought they would have a bit of fun by asking him a lot of obscure and impossible questions. He answered them all. Anyhow the newpaper boys, naturally enough, have their eyes on him so that he has his picture in the papers frequently. June 20th was the last time for he was ordained to the priesthood on the 18th by Bishop Gilbert. He had been ordained deacon in 1929 but he had to wait until he was 24 in order to be advanced to the priesthood.

Holds Commencement

The 104th commencement of Kenyon College took place on June 20th. President Peirce conferred degrees upon five leading Churchmen; Mr. Monell Sayre, vice-president and director of the Church Pension Fund, who was given the degree of Doctor of Laws. Mr. Sayre incidentally is at the moment the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Princeton district of New Jersey. Dr. R. E. Dyer of Washington, who has done great things in medical research, received the degree of doctor of laws; Very Rev. N. R. High Moor, dean of the cathedral in Pittsburgh, was given the degree of doctor of divinity; the Rev. James P. DeWolfe of Kansas City was also given the same degree. Both are Kenyon graduates, the former in the class of 1916 and the latter in the class of 1917. A degree of doctor of sacred music was conferred upon the Rev. Louis E. Daniels, lecturer on Church music at Bexley Hall.

Send for a Catalog

WHEN your girl or boy is ten or eleven years old the time has arrived for study of possible boarding schools. A boarding school of the type maintained by the Episcopal Church offers pupils a wide variety of education in addition to preparation for college, important as that is.

Ask for catalogs. Study them carefully. Visit a school near you when there is opportunity. Talk with the head of the school and learn the advantages of a good private school over the schools which may be available in your home town.

Many parents send their children to boarding schools long before they are ready even for the first work of the secondary school. They count this a wise investment.

Investigate for yourself. Take plenty of time. See what courses are offered. Learn the advantages of boarding school life with its lessons in responsibility and participation in the small world represented in the school.

Any of the Episcopal Schools listed here will be glad to send catalog and other literature. The heads of the schools will also be more than glad to talk with parents on education problems.

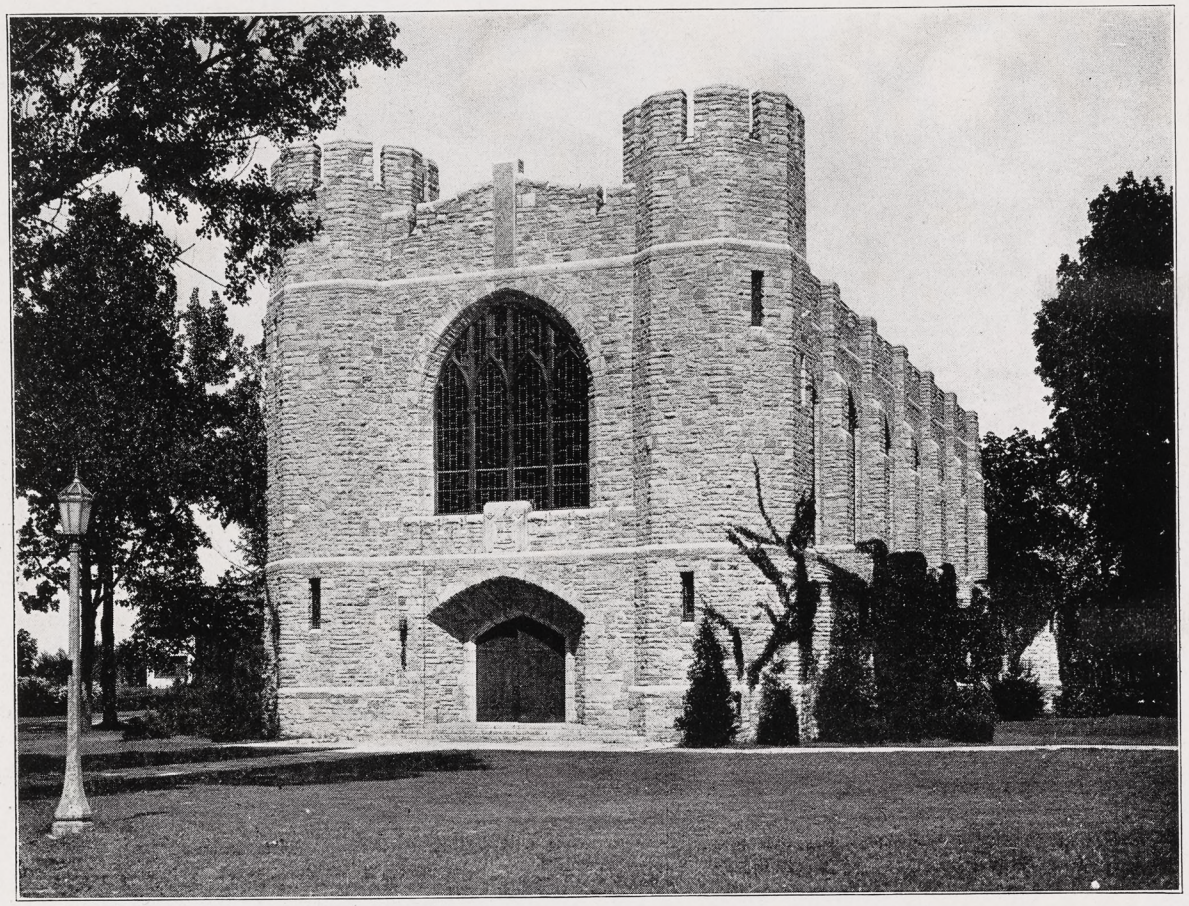
Vol. XVI. No. 46. JULY 7, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.



A NEW NOTE IN INTERNATIONAL Christian fellowship and brotherhood will be heard across the Pacific this summer when a group of some two hundred Churchmen of various nationalities meet at St. Paul's University, Tokyo, for the conference of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Realizing that all nations are facing grave problems, with great areas of conflict appearing in international life, the leaders of the Brotherhood instigated this conference at which Churchmen of various nationalities will face each other to discuss problems of economic readjustment, international comity and interracial relations. For a number of years various Christian groups have come together in Europe for fellowship and discussion, but as far as we know this is the first conference of the kind to be held in the Orient. The Brotherhood deserves a large amount of praise for its initiative and for its vision.

FREDERICK COOK MOREHOUSE, editor of The Living Church, died on June 26th after an illness from which he has severely suffered for the past four years. There have been few laymen of this generation who have had the influence in the Church that was exerted by Dr. Morehouse. A forceful writer, with strong conviction, he made of the paper which he edited so well for many years one of the great forces in the Church. He was also a power in the councils of the Church, international, as well as national and diocesan. God in His mercy has relieved him of his suffering. May his son and successor maintain the high standards of journalism set by his distinguished father.

IT IS UNNECESSARY, of course, to inform you that the Church Weeklies are having a difficult time. Unlike most industries printing costs have remained at 1929 levels so that relief for a decreased income must be met by other economies. Salaries can be cut, and in the case of all the Church weeklies they have been, very drastically. Some of the papers have also found it necessary to cut the number of pages in each issue, at least for the summer months. We hope, with THE WITNESS, to maintain the paper as it has been for the past few years. This hope however can be realized only if we receive the cooperation of our readers. We therefore wish to take this opportunity to make a request. Each month we send by first class mail a renewal notice to each subscriber whose subscription expires that month. This is followed with another notice the second month and still a third if neither of these are given attention. It is an expensive procedure, now increased fifty per cent by the increase in first class postage from two to three cents. On your wrapper there is printed the date of the expiration of your subscription. If you will send us your renewal two or three weeks before this date it will make possible a considerable saving. Failing that we urge you please to give attention to the first notice you receive, thus making it unnecessary for us to send you others. If a considerable number of subscribers will do this it will effect a considerable saving—at least enough to absorb the burden of the increased postage rate. Your cooperation is earnestly solicited.

THE STORY THAT COMES out of the Northwest where thousands of unemployed people are employing themselves is an interesting and significant one. There has been organized in Seattle the Unemployed Citizens' League, the members of which have been cutting wood for fuel on land donated by timber companies; scouring farms and bringing in tons of food for distribution among the needy; taking over dilapidated houses, repairing them and living in them. The movement, started last fall, has grown so that now it includes farms, dairies, fisheries, logging camps, canneries and even clothing factories. The relief agencies of the city distribute food through its commissaries. It put up candidates at the last municipal election and elected its full slate. Now it has field workers organizing councils in other cities. Recently a convention was held, with bankrupt farmers sitting in with unemployed workers, and there was organized the United Producers League of Washington. They adopted resolutions for federal relief and public works, increased income and inheritance taxes, legislation for the six-hour day and five day week, unemployment insurance, public ownership of utilities and natural monopolies, demanded a popular referendum before the declaration of war, called for the recognition of Soviet Russia and protested against the threat of war on Chinese workers. They speak with confidence for their resolutions say: "If the bankers and captains of industry, who admit their helplessness in solving unemployment, would stand aside we would show them how." Possibly the leadership for the new day will be found in the Northwest.

ST. JOHN'S VICTORY MEMORIAL CHAPEL

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY ACADEMY

By
ROSS FARRAND

FOUR years ago a father entered his son at St. John's. When he bade the boy goodbye, the lad's lip quivered and he stifled a sob. He was fifteen, but still a baby to his parents. Actually the boy was so shy that he blushed and stammered when anyone addressed him. For four school years he worked and played and studied with other boys—his business associates of tomorrow. He learned how to get along with people by getting along with them, an experience which it was difficult for him to get at home. Did it help him? Listen to this. Last June he graduated as Battalion Commander, the highest post attainable by a cadet. His life with other boys at St. John's had broken the armor of shyness and enabled the hidden bud of leadership to grow into full bloom. Of course not every boy becomes Battalion Commander. But every boy has a chance. And the spirit of conquest, inherent in every youth, gets full play here. As a result the boy develops ability, resourcefulness, and bearing which almost invariably surprises both his parents and himself.

St. John's Military Academy is located at Delafield, Wisconsin, one hour from Milwaukee. This nearness to the city makes it possible for the cadets to go into town occasionally on holidays, accompanied by an instructor, provided that the privilege has been earned by avoiding demerits and obtaining a sufficiently high scholastic average. At the same time, however, they are able to enjoy the benefits of living in some of the most beautiful country in Wisconsin, namely the Waukesha County Lake region.

Many people whose knowledge of military schools is small, object to them on the grounds that they bring about a one-sided development. That this idea is based on ignorance can be shown by a glance at the cadets' daily program. The cadets spend their mornings in the classroom, with the exception of the twenty minute drill period which is inserted between the third and fourth recitations. This change from mental to physical activity furnishes relaxation for tired minds and sends the cadets back to the classroom refreshed and ready to continue their work, which comes to an end just before noon mess.

The afternoon drill period runs from 2:15 until 3:00. Following this the cadets are allowed sufficient time to change into athletic clothing before the call for practice sounds. This practice takes care of the boys' physical development, for everyone is required to participate in some form of athletics. In order to make the athletic work as interesting and stimulating as possible, several teams are organized in each sport. Thus, a boy who likes football but who is too light or too small for the academy team can satisfy his desire by going out for one of the smaller ones. Each of the four elevens has its own coach and student manager, and plays a regular schedule of outside games. The same thing is true of basketball. During the spring term such a wide choice of sports is offered that every boy is sure to find one that he enjoys. Baseball, track and crew attract a large number, but the excellent tennis courts and nine hole golf course maintained by the academy have their quota of adherents. Company baseball, swimming, horseback riding and trapshooting also have their share of participants. There is a sport for every boy, and each is under the direction of an instructor.

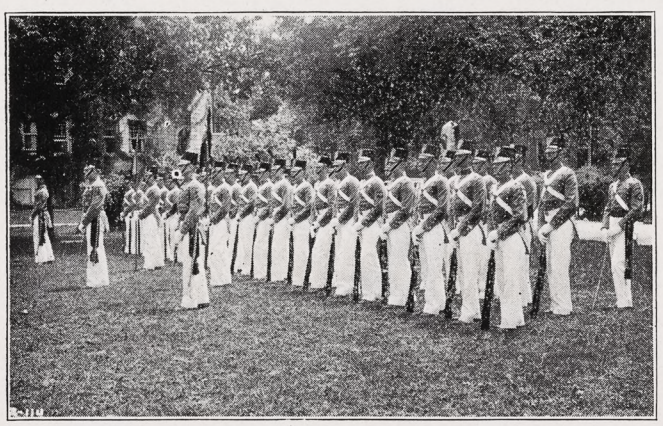
In the past year a course in aviation has been added to the curriculum for those cadets interested in flying. St. John's is affiliated with the Land o' Lakes Airways Corporation, which is located at Delafield on Lake Nagowicka. Instruction is offered in both sea and land planes. Students have an opportunity not only for ground school work but for actual flying as well. Courses leading to a private pilot's license may be taken, and also those leading to the license for a limited commercial pilot and that of a transport pilot.



Evensong is held every afternoon at five-thirty, in the Victory Memorial chapel. This building, which is one of the most beautiful school chapels in America, is of stone throughout and was built as a memorial to the alumni of St. John's who served in the World War. Two services are held every Sunday, in addition to the celebration of Holy Communion at seven in the morning. Attendance at the early service is voluntary, as it is during the week, when the service is celebrated at six-thirty every morning. The cadet acolytes serve in turn at the altar.

The cadets' evening is devoted to study. From seven until nine-fifteen, nothing is allowed to interfere with his preparation for the next day's classes. There are no distractions, as every other boy in the dormitory is doing the same thing. This makes it easier for the boy who has not learned concentration at home to settle down to work. An instructor remains on duty in each dormitory during this time, and boys are at liberty to go to him for help in their work if they so desire. The scholastic standard of St. John's is very high, which is demonstrated by the excellent record made by those of its graduates who attend college. At present the academy has graduates in sixty-seven colleges and universities, scattered throughout the United States. Two former St. John's students were recently named honor men at Carnegie Institute of Technology, one of them for the second time. This is an example of the excellent work being done by St. John's graduates all over the country.

St. John's is frequently referred to as "the West Point of the middle west." Although only two periods a day are devoted to actual drill, yet the basis of the entire school life is military. The numerous formations held during the day, such as mess, chapel, etc., are of course military in character. Respect for a superior officer and obedience to rules are among the foremost duties of a cadet, as they are those of a soldier. Things move according to a strict schedule, and the boy who has been used to taking his time at home, secure in the knowledge that everything will wait for him, soon discovers that he must manage to be at a designated place at a certain time, if he wishes to avoid demerits.

One of the most important lessons that a boy learns by attending a school of St. John's type is how to get along with other people. He learns that the world, which has, perhaps, been run exclusively for him during the past fifteen or sixteen years, really contains a great many other people of equal importance who have just as much right to consideration. He learns, first of all, how to get along with his roommate. Mutual consideration must be a part of this relationship, if boys are to live in such close contact with one another. Sooner or later the boy realizes the value of cooperation. Then, too, as he advances in rank, he learns how to direct other boys successfully—how to assume responsibility. All of this will stand him in good stead when he has finished school and begins to associate with others in business or professional life.

The equipment of St. John's is of the very best. The buildings, as well as being artistic, are modern and practical, and the plant and physical equipment of the school appraise at more than $1,000,000. The big gymnasium with its four basketball practice courts, the cadet library, well supplied with both reference books and fiction, furnished with comfortable reading tables and carefully shaded lights, the large, airy classrooms and fireproof dormitories—all these are the equal of any school in the country. The boy who enters St. John's has around him every facility and every aid to a well-balanced, happy, healthful life. He has in addition to this the incentive to grow and develop mentally, morally and physically, until he finds himself, at graduation, measuring up in every respect to the true measure of a man.

THE CITY OF GOD

An Editorial by

BISHOP JOHNSON

THE scientist is an observer of things that have happened. He looks into the past and makes his deductions. He goes into his laboratory and studies elements that were created for him. He investigates the laws that have governed the universe and discovers their relationship. He is apt to be impatient with that which may happen in the future. Whether there be a future life is not his concern. And yet there has been a trend in creation which has constantly produced that which scientific observation could not have anticipated. A scientist at the dawn of creation could not have anticipated life. A scientist in the reptilian age could not have anticipated human society.

God was working His purpose out in His own way, and yet in a progressive manner which has been successfully revealed. St. Paul states this truth when he says that "the invisible things of God since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being perceived through the things that are made." Gradually there have emerged new forms of life and new manifestations of that life, until we come to man and the human relations which man has developed. While it may be true that many of these qualities which we describe as human are to be found in the animal world, yet the social, political and religious institutions with which we are familiar have been essentially the result of human needs.

There are three propositions which seem to be incredible: 1st—That the orderly procession of life on the earth could possibly be the result of chance. 2nd—That the author of these processes should have no adequate ultimate purpose. 3rd—That man should be the last word of God's creative genius, and that progress ceases with him.

The river of life is a stream which flows on regardless of man's insistence that it cease its flow when he ceases to breathe. The whole process is too stupendous to be blocked through the conclusions reached by those who are looking backward. One cannot stop the process by a syllogism. It is interesting to trace the development of life, but it is more interesting to anticipate the things that have not yet been attained, and we are endowed with faculties which urge us to look beyond that which has been observed.

It is one thing to trace man's emergence from a savage state, but it was equally true that the savage, looking forward, was moved by an unerring instinct to cultivate faculties of whose value he was scarcely conscious. The first savage who felt an urge to develop his mind was walking by faith and not by sight, as he peered curiously into the future and advanced laboriously into his new estate. He gradually perceived certain truths:—that verily "thou art a God who hidest thyself," that the treasures of creation are also hidden, such as the power of steam, of electricity, of chemicals, of mental research; that these treasures remain hidden until man develops a capacity within himself by which they are gradually and laboriously discovered.

In all these things the primitive man was seeking "the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen," and the great bulk of savages refused to receive these things and died in the ignorance of their own inertia.

It was through such faith that cities arose from the jungle and the decencies of life emerged from the brutality of the barbarian. It is this forward progress through faith that seems as fascinating as the backward retrospect through observation.

IT IS true that we have arrived at a certain station, but is is also true that we are still on our way. But it is exasperating to the savage to depart from his animal existence, and so prophets have been persecuted in every age.

Christ was not crucified because He was a good man, but because He upset the conventions of His time and made people angry by the obligations which He imposed upon them. It was because He told people to "do this" and to "go" and to deny their comfortable propensities. One of the greatest proofs of the validity of religious experience is the opposition that it creates and the perversities that it begets. The Russian savage puts a priest to death either because the priest contradicts his theories or else because the priest misinterprets his religion. If anything the communist is more angry at a Christlike priest than he is at a Judas, although he may slay them both.

The American behaviorist is not religious because he does not choose to be, but he is anti-religious because of this primitive hatred of anything which disturbs his status. He is not satisfied to let Christians alone. He must attack them, although he never would think of attacking a man who indulged in liquor and is very lenient toward immorality. It is the invariable law of emerging life that those who pressed on to something which was higher than the conventional level were not only the objects of contempt but also of persecution. It is not the beauty of the City of God which is the subject of attack, but rather the process by which love, joy and peace are to be attained. The very thought of labor is hateful to a loafer and the idea of purity is distressing to a sensualist. In the same way the ideals of the poet, the joys of a mystic and the words of a prophet arouse the antagonism of one who is accustomed to reduce everything to a formula or to a syllogism.

To my mind one of the most conclusive proofs of the verity of religion is the anger that it arouses in those who reject it. It is the irritation which is produced by a sense of inferiority to real righteousness which like many inferiority complexes results in contempt for and antagonism to that which is really superior. It is not that these men are superior to Christ, but that they resent His superiority and the obligations which it places upon them.

The whole process of religious discipline becomes reasonable when we assume that the same God who made the world without, created the spirit within man. If this is so then the urge to righteousness and a future life is just as legitimate as the urge of the first student for knowledge and the unknown treasures which it revealed.

Then the Kingdom of God is truly within us as well as beyond us, and if we follow the urge within we will attain the end toward which it presses, even though that end is beyond observation.

The miracle involved is not The City of God, but the City of New York, which came to pass because some few savages believed that if they developed the capacity within, they could appreciate and appropriate the treasures that were forever hidden to the savage who refused to believe.

Yo-Yo Religion

Christ to Thee I give my heart—
Give it all and not in part;
If there's something I can do
Believe me Christ—I'll see it through.

A YO-YO is one of those little wooden spools which keeps spinning up and down on a stout cord. Wherever you see children you also see a number of these playthings winding and unwinding. I think the man who invented them is very clever, and that both childhood and the grown-ups owe him a vote of thanks. He has given children something to do—something to keep their fingers busy—something to serve as an outlet for their stored up energy. Goodness knows what they would be into if they didn't have these spools to play with. As a matter of fact even those who are supposed to have put childish things away get quite a lot of fun in spinning the spools. Here is one man at least who has slipped away from his work to learn the art of "yo-yoing." There really is a knack to it—you can't step right up and perform—it takes practice and lots of it to do the thing right. And I am not going to be embarrassed by any youngster should he ask me to take his yo-yo and keep it going!

"Yo-yo religion" is something else. We see so many people today interpreting their loyalties to God in terms of diversion. Some twiddle their thumbs and find complete satisfaction in doing so. Others are absorbed in trivialities—they are so busy doing nothing. Some watch their pet doctrines like the great big cat and the "teeny weeny" mouse. Meanwhile the splendid, heart-appealing, soul-enriching spirit which makes religion real and vital, which makes religion the instigator of peace and happiness and good-will, is held in abeyance and told to "wait outside" until the little things, the petty things have their fling. Isn't it time we stopped this foolishness—this tinkering and bickering, and get at the fundamentals? What the world needs is Christ and not "yo-yoism"! Religion, at least the Christian religion, involves not diversion but divinity. And divinity demands energy and faithful application of the best in man. He must work out his salvation—it cannot be conferred on him in the spirit of gratuity. If we really want the Christ then for heaven's sake let us stop toying with our religion and go about our Father's business!

NEW BOOK INFORMS THE CLERGY HOW TO WRITE SERMONS

By Gardiner M. Day

Dr. Joseph Fort Newton has just edited a volume with the rather curious title If I Had Only One Sermon to Prepare (Harpers). A lady to whom I presented the book remarked, "In that case, he must be in a bad way," but as a matter of fact the contents of the book consists of essays by such well known men as Dr. Fosdick, Dean Willard Sperry, Ernest Tittle, W. Russell Bowie, and Abba Hillel Silver, on their method and purpose in preaching. Among the most interesting of the essays is one by Dr. Fulton J. Sheen, a Roman Catholic priest and a professor in the Catholic University of America. He is evidently one of the outstanding preachers in that church. Another essay is entitled "A Voice from the Pew," by Paul Hutchinson, a layman, in which he discovers, among other things, that the layman particularly wants to receive from the pulpit some "intimation of immortality." The reviewer has a chapter entitled "Ethical Realism."

Gregory Mabry is the author of a volume entitled The Priest and His Interior Life (Morehouse) which is concerned with the devotional life of the minister. It contains some interesting and helpful suggestions for a minister's spiritual discipline but some theological implications with which many priests of the church would not agree.

One of the difficulties which a minister faces is a means of giving the necessary background for the teaching of the New Testament to his Church School teachers. The Reinterpretation of Jesus in the New Testament, by Carl E. Purinton (Scribner's), ought to be immensely helpful in accomplishing this particular thing. The book contains in a relatively brief form a summary of the sources of knowledge of the life of Christ and the early disciples and an excellent interpretation of the meaning of the life and death of Jesus. It is the kind of book that would give a Church School teacher a good background for Testament teaching and would be no doubt helpful when little Johnny asks questions.

In The People of Ancient Israel, (Scribner's $1.75) Miss Dorothy Mills, head of the History Department in The Brearley School, New York, gives us a volume in which she recounts Old Testament History with a simplicity and modernness which will appeal especially to young people and in consequence should be of great help to any who may be teaching the Bible to children in the "teens".

Mr. Leon C. Palmer, the Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, has brought together in the space of 130 pages a most helpful summary and analysis of the modern developments in the field of religious education. The book is published by The Morehouse Publishing Co. under the title The New Religious Education ($1.50). This book should be invaluable to busy rectors who have found it impossible to keep abreast of modern developments in this field. It would serve as an excellent text book for next year's teachers training class. A brief commendatory foreword was written for the volume by The John W. Suter, Jr.

In Tomorrow's Faith Dr. John R. Oliver gives us the reasons he believes in Anglo-Catholicism. Most of the book is devoted to explaining why he thinks Anglicans should not become Romanists, while in a dozen pages he shows why he has so little esteem for Protestantism. Persons interested in Dr. Oliver will find here his prejudices clearly revealed, but the reviewer cannot but feel that this is the poorest of Dr. Oliver's books. (Morehouse $1.)

A more extensive mention has already been made in these columns of Canon Prichard's The Minister, The Method, and The Message (Scribner's $2.50), but we want to take this opportunity of commending it especially to clergymen as a most charming and helpful volume on sermon preparation understanding this last phrase in its broadest aspect.

CHILDREN CONDUCT THEIR OWN SERVICE

While the Rev. John B. Clark of Sisseton, South Dakota, was recovering from an operation in the hospital, the children of the Church School took complete charge of two Sunday evening services. The children, with the exception of one girl in high school, were grade pupils. The shortened form of Evening Prayer was used with the two lessons. Four children took part each time. The first Sunday the talk was given by a grown-up but the second Sunday the rector's ten year old son talked on the qualities of a postage stamp. The offertory was sung by a ten year old girl and the plate passed by a third grade boy. During the winter the children had used the morning service for Church school and were ready to step in when needed.

NEWS NOTES OF THE CHURCH IN BRIEF PARAGRAPHS

Edited by W. B. Spofford

There is in the process of formation an organization in the Church known tentatively as The Liberal Evangelical Group Movement, with the rector of Grace Church, New York, as chairman, the Rev. Howard C. Robbins, professor at the General Seminary as vice-chairman, and the Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, student secretary of the National Council as secretary. Others on the executive committee are the Revs. Karl Block, Oscar Green, A. L. Kinsolving, Beverly Tucker and Frank Nelson. In addition to these a statement of principles recently sent out is signed by the Revs. Samuel M. Dorrance, William Norman Guthrie, E. Felix Kloman, J. Howard Melish, Robert Norwood, Robert Rogers, Guy E. Shipler, Roland Cotton Smith, Joseph Titus, George A. Trowbridge and Luke M. White. The statement of convictions says:

"We believe that our western civilization, and organized religion within it, have passed into a period of critical change which may result either in a disintegration of our moral and spiritual heritage, or in a creative movement of redeeming forces capable of grappling with new conditions through the power of an intellectual and spiritual rebirth.

"We believe that many individual men in the ministry are aware of the critical character of the times, and feel the need of a more adequate and positive formulation of their Christian beliefs in relation to present facts and a need likewise of a clearer objective for the Church's work. But many such individuals are baffled by their isolation, and are unable to shape their fragmentary ideas and purposes into any confident unity.

"We believe, therefore that there is a call today for a clearly-conscious, though flexible, organization, which may bring together into common understanding—and positive effort all those clergymen—and ultimately laymen also—who are as vitally concerned with our Church's present and future as with its past, who will approach all reality with an open-mind, who look forward to an inclusive Christian fellowship among men of all Communions to be created not primarily by agreement in ancient definitions but by the will to find and to express the purpose of the living Christ, and who want a formulation of the Christian gospel which both intellectually and spiritually can master the life of our present world."

The organization is along the lines of the Evangelical group in the Church of England; an organization that had their annual conference in England last week which was attended by Dr. Bowie. An effort is now being made to enroll those of the Church who are in sympathy with the aims. It is then planned to set-up local groups leading to a national conference to be held sometime next year. At this national conference more definite direction will be given to the movement and a more adequate statement of convictions and purposes will be formulated.

Bishop Wilson
Writes History Outline

The Morehouse Publishing Company have recently published an attractive pamphlet on the history of the Church in the United States, written by our Bishop Wilson of Eau Claire. That it is a job well done goes without saying since all WITNESS readers are familiar with Bishop Wilson's writing. It is necessarily brief, being but a small pamphlet of sixty-five pages, but it does give about all the history of the American Church that the average layman requires to be well informed. And since it is inexpensive (18c a copy) it should have a wide sale, particularly among the clergy who will find it a fine pamphlet to use with confirmation classes.

Louisiana Young People Had Fine Summer Camp

Over one hundred members of the Young People's Service League of the diocese of Louisiana have just closed the most successful summer camp they have ever had. To be exact there were 117 full timers taking courses, with 32 part timers and a flock of visitors. In 1926 they had 109 full time and 16 part time. It was a serious business this year with five credit courses and two minor courses, with everyone taking final examinations.

Brotherhood Party
Sails for Japan Next Week

About fifty Churchmen and Churchwomen from all parts of the country are to sail for Japan from Seattle on July 13th to attend the International Brotherhood Conference, which is to be held this summer at St. Paul's University. Bishop Taitt of Pennsylvania heads the party. Enroute there are to be lectures by Mr. Paul I. Noguchi on "The history of religions in Japan" and by the Rev. Herbert H. Gowen, professor at the University of Washington, on "Japanese Customs". The theme of the conference, which will be attended by Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Manchurian, North American and English Churchmen, is "The World Call to Share", with lectures by outstanding authorities on evangelism, education, medicine, social service, industry, internationalism and problems arising out of racial differences. In addition to the conference the party will visit Sendai, Osaka, Kyoto and Yokohama, with shorter conferences in each place. They will also visit the mission stations, parishes and institutions that make up the framework of the Church in Japan. Among the American Churchmen who are to be leaders in the conference are Dr. Benjamin Finney, vice-president of the Brotherhood and the head of the University of the South, Mr. Eric W. How Periodical Club
Used Thirty-five Dollars

How a gift to the Church Periodical Club can be put to use was illustrated in a recent article in the Junior Record of St. Andrew's Church, South Orange, the Rev. F. Creswick Todd, rector. Some time ago the church school there made a gift of $35 to that organization. The money went to three objects: purchase of a set of large colored Bible pictures for a kindergarten class in a Virginia mission; a set of lesson materials for an entire year for a school in North Carolina; and a blackboard for a mission in Nevada in which mission the children are almost all Indians.

Clergyman Is
Tricky With Cards

The Rev. C. D. Maddox, vicar of St. Jude's, Tiskilwa, Illinois, is tricky with the cards. In any case he is so much of a magician that he was recently elected international chaplain of the International Magic Circle, a society of tricksters. Not only that he put on a show at the convention of the society which met recently at Kalamazoo, Michigan. It is said that Mr. Maddox, long interested in magic, now has one of the largest and most elaborate shows in the country. He does not put it on

The money represents remuneration reputedly due for timber that the government derived from lands awarded the Indians in treaties signed between 1832 and 1854.

Dr. Ray Says We Must Cut the Hocus Pocus

Recovery from "that terrible term, the depression" is impossible for either the individual, the country or the world unless we abandon heathen "hocus pocus" and obey the laws of Christian living, said Dr. Randolph Ray, rector of the Transfiguration, New York, last Sunday.

"The pursuit of mankind, whatever may be your personal philosophy, is happiness in life," he said. "The trouble with us is that we still believe in magic, in getting something for nothing, in a change for the better, somehow, somewhere, without any effort on our part. Even we in Christian America who say, 'In God we trust,' seem to believe that if we do or say a few things, as in ancient magic, God will set about working out our troubles for us."

All the Thriving Work Is Not in the City

All of the work being done by the Church is not in the large cities. True it is difficult to get a real news story out of many of the small missions scattered throughout the country where the work goes on steadily week after week. There is nothing particularly spectacular about it —no thousand dollar offerings or prize choirs. And because of this they are seldom heard from. Occasionally however we do get a bit of news from them which we are more than glad to print here. An item of this sort recently came from Harriet P. Tabb who is the superintendent of the Chapel of the Redeemer, Anniston, Alabama. She writes of the services they have each Sunday, in charge of the Rev. James M. Stoney, rector of Grace Church, and of their Wednesday evening prayer meetings also. There is a growing Sunday School, with a fine corp of teachers. Then they were recently presented with a little organ, which was quite an event, and also a set of altar hangings, all brand new. The women of the chapel then got busy and made vestments so that now they have a vested choir. Not to be outdone in their devotion the girls of the chapel organized a Garden Club and have planted flowers in the chapel yard. What is more they are not merely looking after themselves, for the guild is helping to supply food to needy families in the neighborhood. So you see it is a mission that is very much alive—not very newsy perhaps, but after all it is places of this sort, multiplied by the hundreds throughout the land, that make up the Episcopal Church.

Now that's something, what?

Tells of What Japanese Are Reading

In connection with the information recently published about the Japanese Government's grants to the library of St. Paul's University, Tokyo, and the importance of the library's work, the following facts are relevant.

Most people know that Japan has a very high rate of literacy, but just what do the people read? Miss A. C. Bosanquet, compiling facts from various sources, says that fifty books are published in Japan every day; that in 1929 there were 21,000 published, second in number only to Germany of all the nations of the world, with the United States and Great Britain far below.

Tastes change. A few years ago there was a craze for books on sociology, and now foreign languages are in the lead. A Tokyo newspaper last year tabulated the average number of books on each of several subjects sold by each bookshop in that city, of which report the following is a summary:

Books on foreign languages, 230 sold; books about children, 210; on sports, 177. Novels, 141. Books about law, women, sociology, and travel, from 126 to 110 each, in that order. Poems and songs, 100. Translations, 100. Engineering, mathematics, electricity, philosophy, history, from 90 to 70 each. Education, music, fine arts, literature, drama, and chemistry, 65 to 45 each.

The high place held by books on children is noticeable; also the interest in sport, a new and absorbing subject.

Many long novels of unhappy family life come out in the newspapers first, then in book form. One has run for seven months in two leading daily papers which are read by millions. Such stories emphasize the evils of the geisha system, of worldly-wise match-making parents and go-betweens, and other problems which entangle the lives of the young and innocent. They are generally tragic stories.

A large group of propagandist writers are at work, varying from moderate socialists to extreme anarchists. Much of this writing carries an insidious contempt for religion.

Detective stories have an enormous vogue. They began harmlessly but have grown increasingly horrible and immoral. Exciting American novels are in the ascendant. Any new one which makes a stir in the States is translated into Japanese in six months or so. All Quiet on the Western Front made the greatest popular sensation. Book, drama and screen version all thrilled the general public so much that the Japanese phrase for "all quiet" has become a common word. It has given the people a new sense of the degradation of modern war, and probably the present growing feeling for disarmament and against militarism is partly due to it.

"We must be thankful for much that is good," Miss Bosanquet says. "Still, it is an anxious time. The Christian forces must pull together well and wisely and strongly and take a worthy part in the production of reading matter of the very best. A good deal is being done in this direction."

Work Among the Basques of Nevada

Some one was reading Dorothy Canfield Fisher's recent book, "Basque People," just at the time when The Spirit of Missions for January, 1932, published an article by Mrs. H. S. Lascelles whose husband is in charge of the mission at Winnemucca, Nevada. The reader was surprised to discover that the work of the Episcopal Church includes the pastoral care of a number of Basques in that country, and looked up a little more about them.

These Nevada Basques are a "pastoral" people, in the other sense of that word. Sheep ranches up and down the valley between Winnemucca and the Oregon state line, fifty to eighty miles from a railroad, are owned by companies who put Basques in as managers. They are naturally a religious people, but the Roman Church has not followed them out to these inaccessible regions where they live. There are good schools in many of the small towns, but the people are neglected as to religion and the children grow up as educated heathen.

As Mrs. Lascelles mentioned in her article, when she and her husband began visiting them a year or two ago they found many places where there had been no service of any kind, no children baptized, no religious instruction, for at least two years.

The Basques are thrifty people. They save their money and as soon as possible leave the ranch, come into town, usually to Winnemucca which is about half Basque, and buy a general store or perhaps a gambling hall—it is all one to them. And then they and their children who go to high school come up against the difficulties and evils of those hard frontier towns with no religious and moral training to meet them. They are friendly people and they welcome religious care.

They are only one part of the huge field of some sixteen thousand square miles in which the Lascelles are working, and now with reduced appropriations, the Church's work among them must needs be less effective.

Since the above was written, word has come that a Roman Catholic priest has been appointed especially for rural work in this region.

Transfers Keep Nebraska Numbers Down

Bishop Beecher of Western Nebraska has commented recently on the disastrous effect of the transiency of the Church population in his district; disastrous, at least, in the way it prevents the development of financially strong, self-supporting parishes.

"Nearly three hundred persons were confirmed in 1931," he says, "which is more than usual, but our removals and transfers keep our communicant enrolment reduced to the minimum. This is one of the discouraging features of our work in the mission field . . . and is the main reason why our missionary fields do not become self-supporting dioceses."

Indian Work In Nebraska

Indians in Nebraska are ministered to by the Church at several places. At Genoa 250 children in a government school are instructed, and 23 were confirmed during the year. The boys here re-shingled the roof of the church as a "service project." At Winnebago a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary has been reorganized among Indian women. Among the Ponca tribe conditions have been very hard for three years, due to drouth and grasshoppers. People have been destitute of food and clothing. In spite of help from the Red Cross and the Church, children have died from under-nutrition, and animals have starved. This Indian work receives about $1,500 through the National Council.

New Church For Liberia

The name of the Rev. James Dwalu is familiar to many Church people as the African priest in charge of the station far inland in Liberia, at Pandemai. His church, a native thatched structure, collapsed last year, since then services have been held outdoors. Both at Pandemai and Bolahun missions there has been considerable successful experiment in making bricks. With absolutely no means of transportation except porters, the difficulty of bringing in the usual building supplies may be understood. Now comes word that Mr. Dwalu has accumulated enough brick and cement to start building a new church.

Young Missionary Writes of His Work

A young Seminarian gave up a Seminary Fellowship last year to go out to the Philippine Islands as a missionary. He is the Rev. Clifford E. N. Nobes. He writes, in the Philippines Diocesan Chronicle, of parish visiting:

Last year, while I was still a student in Seminary, I took a course in pastoral theology which purported to tell the how, what and why of parish visiting. At the time, I was minister-in-charge of a small mission. The course, I then thought, was very helpful, but in recent months I have come to revise my estimate. As I look through the notes I so diligently took, I don't find a single helpful hint on how to climb a hill severa kilometers in length, or what to do when a dog of the parishioner on whom one is calling defies one to step into the yard, or how to convince a parishioner that his child is more likely to get well if he brings it in to the dispensary than if he offers sacrifices on its behalf to the evil spirits. But then, I dare say that the advice given in the course was never meant to apply to one whose parish visiting is done in the mountain villages of Luzon.

I have done parish visiting in effete Long Island, and I have done the equivalent thereof in primitive Luzon. Of the two, I infinitely prefer the latter! True, it is far less wearying to jump into a car and dash from house to house than it is to mount one's not-so-trusty steed and canter along a mountain ledge (that for some unknown reason has been called a road), or to put on one's hob-nail boots and climb up and down (one never walks on the level for any considerable distance in these parts) in order to reach one's parishioners, but anyone who knows the beauty of the Igorot country is bound to agree that paying calls on Christians out here is far more satisfying.

The Sagada Mission has a string of more than a dozen out-stations which must be visited at least once every two weeks, and it has been my good fortune to have made trips to six of these. Whether it has been after an arduous five-hour hike to Tambuon, during which one climbs a thousand feet and then drops three thousand feet, only to have to mount another thousand, or after an hour's horse back ride over a really decent trail to Bagnen, or a rather rough ride over a far from decent trail down to Suyo, the experiences the visiting priest encounters among his primitive parishioners in these different ilis are similar.

First of all, he is certain to have his every action closely watched by all the little tots in the town. Unless he puts a wall between himself and their little black eyes, and then it must be a wall without any cracks in it, he can know for a certainty that he will have no privacy.

Secondly, because he is an American, and all Americans are regarded as minor deities by most of the ili people, he must be prepared to do anything from straightening out a family row to diagnosing and prescribing remedies for an illness of the most baffling sort.

In spite of the uneasiness caused by this, I know of nothing that brings greater joy than a leisurely out-station trip. It is in the ili that one sees most clearly what the coming of Christianity has meant to the Igorot people. To hear some old chap who in his youth collected a few heads and was only sorry that he couldn't decapitate more of his enemies, confess sorrowfully that he has spoken harsh words to his grandchildren, or even, in a fit of temper, whipped them, makes one realize acutely how revolutionary the Christian way of life is for one unaccustomed to it.

To see hundreds of people crowding into the Church eager to hear more of the Gospel story, more than willing to confess that they have not merited the love that God has shown for them, anxious to make their Communions, that they may have within them the Spiritual Life of Him Who made them, makes one ashamed of many so called Christians back home.

Bishop Demby Writes of His Work

Bishop Demby's journal for recent months, printed in the Colored Churchman for June, notes in addition to many other activities the confirmation of thirty-six people in eight colored missions of Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri; also the reception of a family of six from the Roman Communion. Bishop Demby is the colored suffragan bishop of Arkansas, with oversight of colored work in the vast Southwest Province. His small staff of workers has been crippled by two deaths: Lois Lockhart, a Church social worker in Forrest City, Ark., whose death was the first among the twenty-five graduates of Tuttle Training School, Raleigh; and the Rev. James E. Stratton, vicar of St. Thomas Mission, Tulsa, Okla., a young man who graduated from General Theological Seminary in 1930 and overworked himself building up the Church among the people of his race in Tulsa. Bishop Demby has recently ordained one man to the diaconate, the Rev. M. R. Hogarth.

Keeping Jack in School

"OUR meals do not cost as much as they did and I am having Bertha only one day a week. I think I can save $100 from my housekeeping money toward Jack's tuition."

Thus spoke the mother of one private school pupil.

"Jack is doing good work, and is certainly getting training that he would not receive in the local school. We must keep him in school."

Parents in all parts of the country are straining themselves in every way possible to keep their children in boarding school.

The secondary schools operated under the direction of the Episcopal Church appreciate the support given them, just as the parents appreciate the high grade instruction in scholastic subjects and in life conduct which pupils receive.

These are times that try men's souls, but the younger generation must move on, and they can progress only as they are well educated. The Episcopal schools are eager to serve you.

LIFT UP YOUR HEARTS

BISHOP JOHNSON

THE SECRET OF JOY in our religion is within us. If we fail to find interest in our spiritual life we at once set up a defense mechanism and blame it upon some external circumstances whereas the fault lies within ourselves. The Church is not interesting because we have lost interest. To blame our lethargy upon the faults of a minister, or the actions of our fellow worshippers, or the inconsistencies of the administration is to acknowledge our own lack of faith and courage.

If for example we have an urge to be a musician we do not give up the pursuit of music because the village bands plays badly or because the bandmaster is a disagreeable person. We pursue our quest in spite of the obstacles which confront us. If we quit worshipping God because we do not like the minister we make the personality of the priest more important than the performance of an obligation. We are bored, not because the minister is tiresome, but because we are easily tired. We find people uninteresting because we ourselves lack interest. Of course there are some bores in the world, but if we discover that few people interest us then the fault is probably in ourselves. People do not interest us because we have so little interest in people.

THE CHURCH properly begins its services by having us confess our own faults whereas so many people begin their service to God by confessing the faults of other people and exonerating themselves. After all joy in life consists in what we ourselves put into service, not in what we collect from others. If for example the average Churchman approaches his religious observance in the same spirit that he brings to a game of golf or bridge he would develop an interest therein quite different from that which comes to him when he goes to a dentist or to a photographer. When one looks at the average congregation as he begins his morning sermon he feels like asking his auditors to look pleasant as the photographer does. Why bring a gloomy countenance into the Lord's house, expecting to reap the fruits of love, joy and peace from such a beginning? Of course the preacher ought to radiate good nature and joyousness, but possibly he lacks power to overcome the gloom which confronts him.

I have often wondered why pious people so often regard a smile or a laugh as proceeding from the devil. I am sure that it doesn't. It is God's gift to His children and we ought to cultivate is as we grow older. Particularly at this time when fear and suspicion and bewilderment has seized the world the Church ought to be composed of those who laugh and sing. And it is a poor sport who demands that this shall be supplied to him when he does not supply his share.

IT IS RIGHT HERE that we might make pause. What does it mean to be a Christian? Does it mean that by virtue of your devotion to Christ and by means of His grace you are to be a potent force in lifting up the tone of society in which you live? Or are you a Christian in order to be a recipient of blessings which you do little or nothing to create? Are you a soldier of Christ or a pensioner upon His bounty?

What the Church needs today is a nucleus of faithful people who approach their religion as an adventure in overcoming obstacles by patient and determined effort; who recognize that behind any vocation there must be discipline, for it is through discipline that we acquire the ability to appreciate and appropriate the good or the true or the beautiful. Undisciplined Christians are as futile as undisciplined scientists or artists or musicians. It is only by conscious effort that we ever acquire those unconscious habits which are the final indices of character. Undisciplined soldiers have been accurately described as cannon fodder. Undisciplined Christians are likewise the victims of every assault made upon the Christian faith.

As I see it the Church is the one bright spot in our present muddle, for it gives us the keynote of life which is contained in the Sursum Corda. "Lift up your hearts" for the Lord God does reign and He and He alone can bring love and joy and peace out of this modern chaos. But in order to lift up your hearts in tribulation you have to keep your heads and train them to meet difficulties with serenity.

The Boy King

A STORY FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

By

EVELEEN HARRISON

ONCE upon a time there lived in Palestine a very powerful queen, named Athaliah, but for many years she had used her power in the wrong way. Instead of trying to help and protect her people, the Queen was so selfish and cruel that she put the people in jail, or chopped their heads off, if they did not carry out her wishes.

Her son, who was the real King of the country, was weak and foolish, and cared far more about having a good time than for learning how to serve his nation; so the Queen Mother had her own way, and made or broke laws just as she pleased.

At last the King had to give up his pleasure and go off at the head of his army to fight a battle, and not many days after a messenger galloped up to the palace with the thrilling news that the King had been killed.

"Now," decided the Queen Mother, "I will seize the kingdom for my own, and reign as I please." Then a dreadful thing happened. One terrible day she ordered the soldiers to kill the little princes of the royal house; and then, entering the great throne room, proclaimed that she was the monarch of the whole country.

How proud and secure the wicked Queen felt, seated upon an ivory throne, while all the nobles of the land bowed the knee before her! "All the princes are slain, and I only am left to reign as I wish." So thought the haughty Queen in the pride of her heart, but she had made a great mistake. For a baby prince had escaped.

There lived near the palace a good woman, a princess, sister of the King; she was married to the High Priest, who had charge of the beautiful temple, and they both loved and served God.

Secretly, on that terrible day, a maid servant had crept trembling into the room of the good Princess, and whispered to her the awful thing that the wicked Queen had ordered. Under cover of darkness, through secret ways, the Princess flew into the royal nursery. The baby prince Joash she loved dearly. Would she be in time to save him? Already the tramp of the soldiers' feet sounded down the passage.

"The baby! Quick!" called the Princess to the royal nurse. Up from his downy bed she caught the sleeping boy and rolled him in a dark silk coverlet. "The inner room, in the big chest—hide him!" she whispered, and thrust him into the arms of the nurse.

When the nurses entered, the nursery was empty. "He must be in the garden with the other children," said one. A hasty glance around and they were gone.

But at midnight, out of the back door of the palace, went the baby, hidden safely under the cloak of his aunt.

So as the soldiers bowed low before the Queen, and in answer to her question replied, "The royal princes sleep with their father," the wicked Queen smiled in her pride and power, but the baby prince was taking breakfast in his aunt's home.

For six long years the Queen reigned in triumph, and the little prince was hidden in secret. Then one day the high priest called a meeting of the five war generals, a very secret meeting, held in the innermost court of his palace. There he told them the great news.

Prince Joash, the rightful King, was alive, and the time had come to destroy the power of the wicked Queen, and to crown him King. The five war generals were glad, for they did not wish to serve the Queen, and with joy they answered, "Behold, the King's son shall reign!" Then they swore a secret oath to make him King.

Throughout the whole land the five generals (under cover of darkness, for fear of the Queen) sent secret messengers to the loyal soldiers of the late King. As they gathered at the meeting place, they were divided into three companies—one to guard the temple, one to watch over the palace—to prevent the Queen from interfering—and the third to keep order in the streets.

At last, when all was in readiness, the generals assembled in the outer court of the temple, surrounded by a large band of soldiers, officers and nobles—all eager to see the little prince. The door of the inner court was thrown open, and out walked the High Priest, dressed in his beautiful embroidered robes, with the golden breastplate, set with twelve precious stones, on his breast, and holding by the hand a little lad of seven years.

Straight into the centre of the great court the High Priest led Prince Joash, and up on a raised platform, that all the people might see him; then, kneeling down before the Prince, placed on his head the crown of gold, in his right hand the golden sceptre, and poured the sacred oil on his head, anointing him as King of Israel.

The trumpets blew a loud salute, and all the people shouted, "God save the King!" In her royal palace sat the Queen, feared and hated by her subjects. "What makes the trumpets to blow? Why all that noise and shouting?" she demanded. But no one dared answer her or tell her the truth. In anger the Queen descended from her throne and entered the temple court. There before a pillar stood the boy King Joash, while all the generals and nobles bent the knee before him.

"Treason! Treason! Conspiracy!" shouted the angry Queen. "Arrest that boy!" But not a hand was raised at her command. Her power at last was at an end.

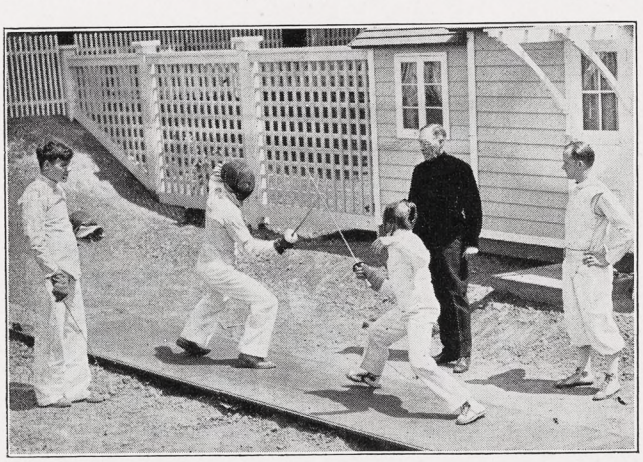
The High Priest stepped forward: "Seize her, soldiers; take her out of the temple; let justice be done upon her!"

So the wicked Queen died, and the little boy of seven became King Joash, and was seated upon his father's throne, the throne of the Kings of Israel.

His uncle, the High Priest, and his good aunt guided him; and as long as they lived he was a true, loyal King and ruled his people in the fear of God.

THE SOMERSET HILLS SCHOOL

By



H. ADYE PRICHARD

ONE of the happiest and most successful of the smaller Church Schools is the Somerset Hills School, located at Far Hills, New Jersey, a community of country estates about forty miles from New York City. The School was founded by the Rev. James H. S. Fair in 1924. Mr. Fair is a son of the Very Rev. Campbell Fair, at one time Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, Nebraska; and was educated at Saint Paul's School, Concord, New Hampshire, Yale College and the General Theological Seminary. Before being called to organize this School he served as Chaplain at Saint George's School, Newport, Rhode Island.

With this background it would be inevitable that he would consider the spiritual training of those under his charge one of the governing features in his work. He believes that children, who are idealists by nature, will respond to the tenets of the Christian faith when they can be brought to realize that these tenets can be practical guides in every-day life. His aim, therefore, is to show them that the Christian life can bring real happiness and lasting satisfaction.

As guides to this end, he proceeds more by example, by the general atmosphere of the school life, and by personal discussion with individual boys, than by formal class instruction or emphasis on the importance of Church Services.

The School began as a Day School; but there was shortly imperative need for the opening of a boarding department, which now numbers about thirty boys. The total enrollment has grown from a dozen pupils to about fifty-five. The staff consists of a dozen teachers, fully competent to take care of boys ranging in age from six to seventeen years, with the obvious necessity of separate and different supervision.

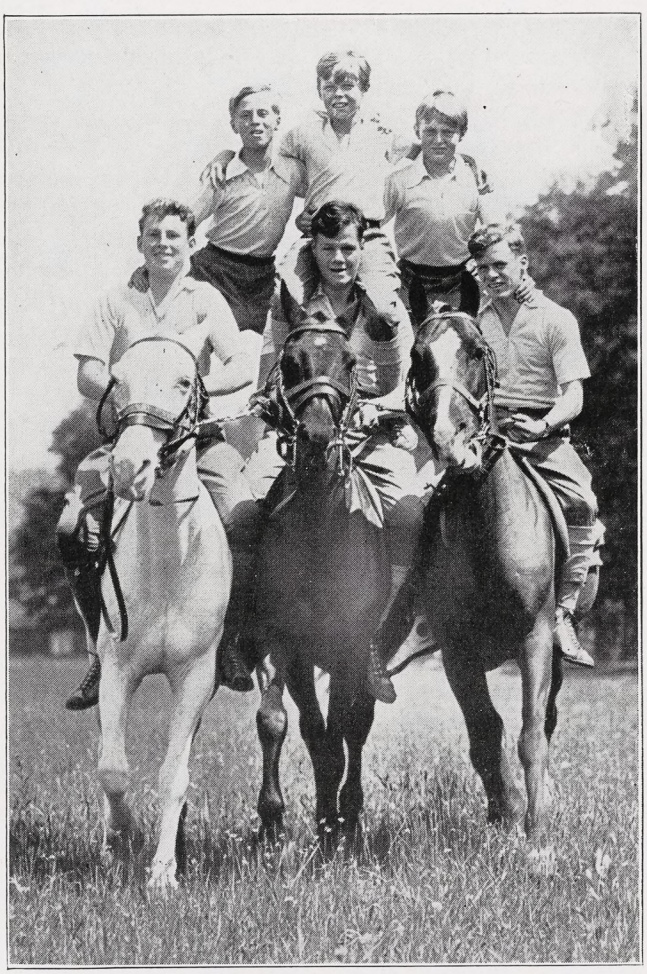
FENCING IS A REGULAR PART OF THE PROGRAM

The School is housed in an old Colonial homestead, which has been enlarged and modernized, but sufficient of the home-like atmosphere has been retained so that the idea of the school family may always be kept at the fore. A boy does not feel he is merely a member of a group, but a valued and important member of an intimate circle.

The principle underlying this method of corporate life is the natural feeling that a boy will develop along more normal lines when he is prompted to understand and appreciate his true place in a fellowship than when he is merely the victim of disinterested rules and regulations.

Until 1931 the school specialized in preparing boys for the leading Secondary Schools of the East, and has sent boys to such schools as St. Paul's, St. Mark's, Kent, St. George's, Lenox, Hotchkiss, Exeter, etc. While this work is still strongly emphasized, a small group is now organized for college preparatory work. This group is primarily for boys who, for one reason or another, can do better work and be happier in a small informal school than in a large institution.

An interesting development of the past two years has been the acceptance of a few boys who are not planning to enter college, but who might receive real benefit from the associations of a boarding school. The work of these boys has been varied to meet their individual needs, and many of their classes have been organized along very informal lines. Languages are taught largely by the Direct Method, courses have been and are being started in such subjects as elementary psychology, finance and banking, mechanical drawing, mechanics, Current Events, etc. The experiment has been a distinct success, and these boys have contributed much to the success of the school.



In the recent surveys for Scholastic Achievement, the school has always ranked at the top, largely on account of the individualized work that is done with each pupil. Scholastically, several goals are sought: first, to arouse the interest of the boy for his work and progress; secondly, to guide him into habits of independent study and thinking; and also to develop an intellectual curiosity that will lead him to a definite quest for knowledge. The teaching is somewhat informal, avoiding whenever possible the rigidity of set class recitations and formal fixed study periods. Modern methods of classification are regularly used to determine each boy's scholastic capacity.

The recreational program is a varied one, so that all boys may participate in sports of their own choosing. The school is regularly represented in inter-scholastic competition by teams in football, hockey, soccer, fencing and baseball; but the boys also play tennis, golf, etc., as well as learn rifle shooting, ride horseback and receive instruction in other out-door activities. The school has a private pond which is utilized for picnics, over-night camps, shooting, swimming, hockey, etc. Colonel Frank B. Edwards of the U. S. Cavalry has charge of the riding and fencing, and has introduced most comprehensive courses in both activities. The fencing team has won victories over several college freshman teams, although the boys average less than 15 years of age and have only recently taken up that sport. About a third of the school ride regularly with Col. Edwards and his assistant, and there are also special classes in theoretical horsemanship. Several of the boys assist in the care of the horse and gain that added experience. Many miles of well kept bridle paths provide unusual facilities for road rides with complete safety; and a well equipped fair grounds, with stables, show rings, paddocks, a full set of jumps, etc., gives opportunity for practice in jumping, fancy riding, drills, etc. By combining with Colonel Edwards Summer Camp in Canada, many of the boys have the same general management and instruction through the summer months as they receive at school during the year. Many of the boys remain for all or part of vacations to go on with this work under these ideal conditions.

At present the school is trying to meet economic conditions by establishing several Self Help Scholarships for boys who are able to earn part of their tuition expense, have demonstrated a definite sense of responsibility, and are capable of maintaining a high standard of scholastic achievement.

BISHOP WILSON

In Perils

DON'T think that perils in spreading the Gospel ceased to exist several centuries ago or that they were confined to the jungles of Africa and the South Sea Isles. I have just been glancing over some of the correspondence of the Rev. James Lloyd Breck covering his missionary activities in Wisconsin and Minnesota less than a hundred years ago. In 1845 he writes of a night in Wisconsin as follows:

"In the simplicity of Western life, we did not think of bolts or bars for our doors and windows, and not infrequently these would remain open, even during the night, especially in very warm weather. On a very hot night, I think in August, about two o'clock, while in a doze, I was aroused to full consciousness of a breathing above me. My bed was immediately under the window in the basement of the chapel (north-east corner). Looking up I saw the glaring eyes of a wolf. With a scream I bounded to the floor, rousing all about me. Nimham sallied forth (sans culottes) with his rifle; but the beast had made off."

In 1853 he was opening work among the Indians in Minnesota and writes—"Our journey to the old Chief's residence was in many respects a novel one to me, for notwithstanding I have camped out, sleeping upon the ground for thirty nights in succession whilst traveling, yet this one had its peculiarities. . . . The intensity of the cold rendered large fires necessary to be kept up during the night, and hence it was quite impossible to use a tent. We therefore slept upon the ground, after clearing away the deep snow, wrapping ourselves in blankets, and lying down with our feet towards the fire. . . . The weather during this journey ranged from 12 to 18 degrees below zero. And yet we slept in the open air without peril to our lives."

He tells of Bishop Whipple sleeping out in the snow

for three nights running and, in 1858, writes—"On Friday last (30th of July), we had a most severe hail-storm, such as has scarcely ever been known before. There were with the hail large masses of ice, which fell from the clouds, measuring from ten to twelve inches around, and weighing over a pound. I had such like in my hands. . . . It was the day after this great storm, that we went forth to meet an appointment for a Sunday service at Waterville, eighteen miles from the Mission centre. A Divinity student accompanied me. We were on foot, sometimes going through thick woods, and sometimes over prairies. We had each a knapsack upon his back. In these, besides a little change of raiment, we had prayer-books, tracts, and Sunday School books. We also took a little lunch with us."

He tells of trouble with Indians who had secured whiskey from the white traders—"The drunken Indian has visited us at our Mission House at various times. My own experience has been, to be kept at bay in Mrs. Breck's private room, by the drawn knife of the half-drunken savage, who entered to gratify his unreasonable demands. On another occasion, a heavy-framed, drunken Indian danced like a maniac in the midst of the broken glass of our front windows, which were smashed to atoms by himself and others, who would enter our house. . . . This man in the window demanded my life, and only by arts and with great difficulty, he was kept from bursting open Mrs. Breck's door with a great club."

We scarcely know what hardship for Christ means in these privileged days. Thank God for men like Breck.

The Beautiful Gate of the Temple

By

BISHOP EDWARD L. PARSONS

MANY years ago when I was an assistant in Grace Parish, New York, the Rector Dr. Huntington preached one Sunday a memorable sermon on the text "The Beautiful Gate of the Temple", that gate by which sat the lame man whom Peter and John healed. He spoke of the way in which Beauty becomes a gate to truer knowledge and the more perfect worship of God. The details of the sermon have long passed from my mind, not because they are forgotten but because they have been merged from year to year in a constantly widening and enriching experience of the truth of the preacher's message.

Beauty is a way to God. We are prone to forget it. Ascetic traditions from the Middle Ages and Puritan traditions from our nearer forefathers have conspired to throw such emphasis on God's goodness and perhaps on His truth that many of us have quite forgotten that beauty is as much a part of the Divine Being as either truth or goodness. God is for the Christian as he was for the enlightened Greek the Eternal Goodness, Truth and Beauty. That is to say that just as in Him is the Ultimate Reality and the embodiment of all moral ideals, so in Him is also the harmony, the proportion, the fine adjustment of matter and form or of spirit and utterance which constitute beauty. In God truth and righteousness are beauty and therefore the beautiful is likewise the true and the good.

When once that vision of the eternal beauty of God has dawned upon us the gates to the temple open on every side. The flaming rays of the sunset are from the brush of the Divine Artist. The glory of the shrieking tempest is His. His creative art unfolds the splendor of the snow-capped mountains, of the forest slopes and the restless ocean. Every glory of nature speaks of God.

We turn to man's creative art and the same is true. Every thing of beauty is not only a "joy forever" but a gate to enter upon eternal joy. "Art", says Consin, "belongs neither to religion nor to ethics, but like these it brings us nearer to the Infinite, one of the forms of which it manifests to us. God is the source of all beauty. . . . . The most exalted goal of art is therefore to reveal in its own manner the touch of the Infinite." Once more then as our eyes are opened these doors stand ajar here, there and everywhere. The loveliness of woods and fields in autumn as revealed in painting, the thrilling harmonies of great music, the lifting power of noble verse, are all ways by which the soul enters the temple. They all speak of God to him who has ears to hear. All art if true is handmaid to religion.

BUT since all art which is true art reveals God, religion when true to its best has always sought to make and open beautiful gates to the temple. No one can look in quiet thoughtfulness at the spire of Salisbury or the tower of Canterbury without being lifted to God. No one can gaze on the immense solidities of Durham without feeling surer of the underlying certainties of God; nor watch the sunlight through the windows of Chartres without something of the radiance of heaven in his soul.

And so it is of the furnishings of the Church.

Real beauty brings richer and truer knowledge of God. Cheap decoration, ghastly images, tinsel and gaudiness open no doors to the temple of Eternal Beauty, nor does shabbiness or that barrenness which springs from ignorance and which is utterly different from the austere beauty of a New England meeting-house or an old brick Church of Maryland.

If all this be true, if God is Eternal Beauty, then it must be our joy with increasing care and growing appreciation of beauty to open ever more and more beautiful gates that men may enter more easily the temple. "We must," says Dean Inge, "prepare hopefully for the next flowering time of the arts and make up our minds that when the radiance of the divine loveliness once more shines upon the minds of men, we will not leave this precious gift to be snatched by the world, the flesh and the devil."

Reaching Young Men

By

REV. F. M. WETHERILL

Founder Knights of Sts. John

HOW well we know each other in the Church School depends very largely upon our contacts outside the classroom. That a class of boys should have the pleasure and attraction of making friends in the school is obvious. The Knights of Sts. John affords this friendly opportunity. Teachers and rectors are looking for an organization which will not only win boys to the church, but will at the same time supply these young men with things to do in and about the church. Now, hiking and scouting are good in themselves. But they take the fellows away from the church to field and stream, and city street. Something which appeals to the "gang spirit" in the same way is the Knights of Sts. John. Yet it makes more loyal and better informed churchmen.

Initiations of this Order instruct young men and boys fourteen years and older in the ways of his church. This is exclusively an Episcopal organization. Other boys may join. The chapters are located in Episcopal Churches. Installations are held within the church. So a Disciple, Friend or Brother, according to his rank, is made familiar with the church and chancel. At the altar rail he is made a Sir Knight for his accomplishments for his Church.

Degrees are conferred for merits, earned and won. In this manner a young man is induced to become resourceful, ambitious and well rounded in achievements of a practical and churchly character. It is a manly way of getting the best out of boyhood. It has also the advantage of the boys being near at hand in their good times where they can get the value of the best the Church has to give.

Backed and endorsed by many of the leading bishops and clergy, the Knights of Sts. John is a decided force in a parish for the ideals and practical working of religious education. Friends working and competing together in the things most worth while in life, at the same time having a whole lot of fun, has won the imagination of leaders in religious and churchly education. Its adaptability to all types, sizes and location of churches is a factor in its favor, as well as a further assurance of its progress and endorsement.

A Manual has been published containing the sixty tests for degrees. Besides all this there is a chapter on "Things to Do." These will be beneficial in their diversified interests. These degrees maintain the interest of the boy growing up thru the 'teen years and into manhood.

As priests and laity were primarily interested in making gentlemen, so the Knights of Sts. John encourages the ideals and finer feelings of a Christian. Its spirit of knighthood emanates from the Christ. We put each young man through tests. Can they serve the Christ as a page or esquire would serve his knight? The principles of this Fraternity are based upon the word of God, not mere legends nor ideals, but particularly the Gospel according to St. John. Our young men through their sport, their Bible, their church doctrine and their hobbies, become fast friends. Their achievements have very definite recognition before God's altar. They are not only shown how to win souls but in the parishes where chapters have been established there are copious proofs that they have brought souls to their first communion.

According to the modern conception of religious education, we are trying to allow our young men to get religious expression as well as receive religious impression. The Knights of Sts. John does this more than any other organization in the world. Yet with it all they do the things that their best instincts make them fond of doing. They have a whole lot of fun in doing them.

REVIEWS OF A FEW BOOKS THAT ARE WORTH ATTENTION

By GARDINER M. DAY

In A Preface to Christian Faith in a New Age Dr. Rufus Jones, the well known Quaker, has written a good summary of the trends of the best Christian thinking of the present time, but it nevertheless lacks the fire and incisiveness of a book like Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr's Does Civilization Need Religion of five years ago or the directness of a volume like Allyn K. Foster's The New Dimensions of Religion which appeared last year. All these are Macmillan books. The first two chapters, dealing with "Obstacles and Hindrances" to faith and "A reexamination of the Spiritual foundations", should prove immensely helpful to the layman who desires to learn the point of view of modern religious thinkers without having to wade through theological tomes. While the author points out that the mission of the Church must always be twofold, "the perfecting of personal character and the transformation and rebuilding of the social fabric", the lack of both emphasis upon and specific suggestions in regard to the latter makes the book as a preface to faith in the future disappointing.

No book has suffered more than the Bible from being read too much. People hear sections, often taken for special purposes out of the context, read in Church and Sunday School; some people have read blindly chapter by chapter from cover to cover in order to achieve a gold watch or some less material reward; others have had it read to them by pious parents; and still others have tried to read it with the aid of a commentary only to react against the mass of material or the meandering of the commentator. Evidently aware of this, Dean Inge has compiled a devotional Bible, which he has called Everyman's Bible, published by Longmans, Green & Co. He has placed the material most valuable in his estimation for devotional purposes under four general heads: God, Christ, The Christian Graces, and The Christian Experience. He has not only given a thirty page introduction but has also written notes to help the reader to a fuller understanding of more difficult sections.

For persons looking for a book to use for devotional reading I recommend The Religion of Jesus and Love the Law of Life by Toyohiko Kagawa published by The John C. Winston Co. Kagawa is one of the great Christian leaders of our day. This volume opens with a biographical sketch by Robert E. Speer and what a biography the life of Kagawa makes. Few men have pressed so much action and thought into so few years. The picture which this Japanese writer gives of Jesus is the more interesting to Occidentals because it comes from the mind of an Oriental. In the second half of the volume Kagawa treats such subjects as, The Evolution of Love, Love and Sexual Desire, Love and Romance, Love and Education and the Ethics of Love. Rufus Jones has well characterized the book in the following sentence: "It traces love up through lower unconscious stages, in forms of mutual aid and the sacrifice of the self for the group, to the joyous radiant, conscious dedication of the personal life for the sake of others, flowering at its highest and holiest culmination in the Great Galilean, through whom God's character as grace and love at last stands revealed in its full glory".

Dr. Fosdick is a man as well known for his devotional books as he is for his lucid and fearless analysis of the modern mind's approach to religious problems. Hence the latest volume from his pen, As I See Religion, published by Harpers, will be welcomed by all who know his earlier books. Although Dr. Fosdick's writing is generally termed "popular writing", he has been steadily building up year by year a constructive philosophic basis for his Christian faith. Hence in this volume we find emerging a genuinely workable philosophy of religion expressed in terms that the "man in the street" can fully appreciate.

In distinct contrast to these religious volumes I want to call the attention of WITNESS readers to an amazingly exciting book, Way of the Lancer by Richard Boleslavski in collaboration with Helen Woodward published by Bobbs-Merrill. This is the story of the experiences of a Polish Lancer in the Russian Army during the World War and the Bolshevik revolution. Commencing with the hanging of two spys in the first chapter the book is as thrilling as the best detective story from cover to cover. I wonder whether anyone could write a more vivid picture of the terrific upheaval the revolution caused. The author reveals how the suspension of the regular enforcement of law and order marked the occasion for everyone to achieve his own petty ambitions until a practical state of anarchy existed. The writer's deft characterization of human beings and extraordinary descriptive power make the scenes live. The entire account bespeaks the colossal waste which is always attendant upon a great social change.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

I have been connected with THE WITNESS now for over twelve years. I know that because my daughter was six months old when I started on the job and she has had her thirteenth birthday. During that time I presume I have taken a slap at people in these notes ten or a dozen times. And out of the dozen I have been entirely wrong in fully nine instances. The day will arrive, I hope, when I shall cease taking slaps at anyone. The latest instance is the case of Bishop Ablewhite of Marquette. You may recall that a few weeks ago I picked on him for his address before his diocesan convention. He had urged rectors to cooperate with social agencies in recreational programs for the unemployed. Nobody certainly can object to that, but as I read the report that came to us it seemed to me that the motive behind the plan was entirely bad; encouraging people to play in order that they might forget their empty stomachs and thus keep them from becoming discontented. I hopped on the Bishop for this, remarking that what we need in this country is not less discontent but more, and that the Church should not be a party to any plan to give them a circus in order that they remain exponents of Mr. Hoover's doctrine of rugged individualism.

Now I have received the finest sort of a letter from Bishop Ablewhite, with a copy of his address enclosed. Not only do I fail to find any such motive stated in his address, but in his letter he says: "I heartily agree with you that we need more Christian revolutionary discontent and not less. I have preached and taught just this idea upon all occasions." Then turning to his address I find him saying: "Where masses of people are idle there should be something planned each week in the way of free, clean and wholesome amusement and recreation. Guild halls, basements and even the church itself can be used in various ways by curtaining or screening off the altar and sanctuary. The congregation, vestry and clergyman that sits back and assumes no leadership in such times cannot expect to hold the respect of the community or justify their existence. In this connection it would be well to speak of the church's duty in another direction. In various parts of the diocese we have groups of people who, for lack of nomenclature, we call Reds. I speak particularly of certain groups among the Finnish people. I have suggested to the Woman's Auxiliary that they make a special study of the background habits and history of these people. They are among us. Damning and saying that they should be put in jail will not help much. Here is a challenge to every rector and missionary—but above all a challenge to a small group of people in every parish who through prayer, study and love can perhaps help these people to think clearly. Not a program of Americanization, but a program for promoting Christian living, knowing that Christian living makes for the best citizenship in any country."

Now that, to my mind, is just fine, and I want to take back as far as possible what I said previously and publicly to apologize to Bishop Ablewhite for having created an impression about his address which was false. There is only one sentence in this address I wish might have been different. Where he says "help these people to think clearly" I wish he might have said "help each other to think clearly" for it is barely possible that these so-called Reds have something to contribute to the thinking of Christians. However that is a minor point, and one upon which, I rather imagine, Bishop Ablewhite would thoroughly agree.

Wild Life At
New York Cathedral

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine has received many valuable and highly interesting gifts from foreign nations; from various organizations and from about five hundred thousand individuals, but it has just received rather a unique testimonial. Not long ago, in the early morning, a large owl was noticed under the deanery windows. It was found to have a broken leg, but it was a magnificent bird. It occurred to Mrs. Gates, wife of the Dean of the Cathedral, to call the zoo and ask whether the owl could be sent there. The zoo welcomed the owl and, as the following testimonial shows, the creature is now a member of its interesting bird household:

THE NEW YORK ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY has received from THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE the gift of
ONE BARRED OWL
for which it tenders a grateful acknowledgment
W. REID BLAIR
Director
New York Zoological Park

The Cathedral Close is, in reality, a bird sanctuary. In addition to the families of English sparrows, of starlings and pigeons, who are permanent residents throughout the year, in the spring, summer and fall robins, flickers, bluebirds, brown thrashers, juncos, chickadees, black and white creepers, downy woodpeckers, scarlet tanagers, orioles, thrushes, cedar waxwings, pheasants and owls visit us.

No statement relative to the other than human denizens of the Close should omit the squirrels. These scamper about the grounds and in the trees at will and are very tame. Not only will they approach their human friends to be fed, but they will climb up to second story window sills for nuts and have even been known to accept nuts while sitting on office desks.

Endorse Action of Missouri Church Officials

A bit of a rumpus was raised by the service held some weeks ago at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, under the auspices of the Christian Unity League in which ministers of several denominations joined in the service. A resolution has now been signed by 144 alumni of the Theological Seminary in Virginia commending Bishop Johnson, Bishop Scarlett and Dean Sweet for granting the use of the cathedral for the service and for themselves taking part in the service with the ministers of other Christian churches. "We believe," says the resolution, "that such an act of Christian fellowship is in harmony with the mind of Christ Who prayed that His disciples might be one, and that it is consonant with loyalty to the spirit of the Protestant Episcopal Church in its often expressed will to advance the cause of Christian reunion among the separated members of Christ's Church."

Says Clergy Should Know Psychiatry

The Rev. H. Ralph Higgins of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, said at the opening session of the Racine Conference that it was imperative that the clergy should be reasonably well acquainted with the principles of modern psychology and the technique of psychiatry if they are to do their jobs properly in these days. "To a considerable extent," he said, "the psychiatrist already has displaced the spiritual advisor. People in difficulty have more or less unconsciously come to feel that the clergy are too closely tied to traditional prejudices and that they lack knowledge of and sympathy with the newer discoveries." The conference which has just come to a close after a two weeks' session was attended by over one hundred. Bishop Stewart was the preacher at the sunset services the first week, and Bishop Irving P. Johnson had these services the second week as well as a course for the clergy. The Rev. LeRoy Burroughs of Ames, Iowa, gave a very popular course on Church history. The Rev. Gerald G. Moore of Chicago was the conference chairman and the Rev. Walter Bihler of Chicago was the dean of the faculty.

Chicago Laymen
Discuss Prayer

Resolutions endorsing prayer may seem a bit strange to you but some folk probably have the resolution habit. In any case when a group of laymen met recently at St. Alban's School, Sycamore, Illinois, for the annual Houghteling Forum resolutions were adopted declaring that laymen should have a definite program for the prayer life. The first attribute of prayer, they decided, is a searching of one's self to see what is at variance with the will of God, and out of this should grow a definite and unceasing effort to correct the wrong. They also decided that one of the causes of the present economic situation is a loss of faith in personalities, in leaders, and until that is restored there can be no recovery.

Answer English Church Leaders On Question of Debts

The Federal Council of the Churches have made public the reply of its Administrative Committee to the manifesto signed by more than fifty Christian leaders of the major church bodies of England, who some weeks ago appealed to the churchmen of America and other lands "to press for the cancellation of reparation payments and of international war debts."

In its reply, the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council points out that although in its constituency "there is as yet no complete agreement as to a practical solution of the problem" there is a common mind as to the spirit in which the question should be approached. "Our primary interest as Christians," the reply declares, "is to release in the life of the nations the spirit of forgiveness and reconciliation to which the Christian Gospel summons us and which is the supreme need of the world today."

Strong emphasis is placed, also, upon the responsibility of the Church to "lay special stress upon its teaching of the oneness of the human family and the interdependence of nations."

After pointing out that "insofar as the European peoples are relieved of the burden of the debts, a corresponding burden is placed upon the American people," the Federal Council's reply to the English churchmen suggests that, although the United States would doubtless not be willing to assume this additional burden if it were urged on legal grounds, our country "ought surely to be willing to consider the matter when it is proposed as a question of Christian brotherhood and mutual helpfulness. Quite apart from the theoretical justification which might be made for continuing either reparations or debts, the statement declares that "the existing world situation renders attempts to continue them on their present basis futile and harmful" and expresses the judgment that a downward revision is necessary.

It is frankly stated, however, that the American people are not likely to be willing to make further reductions in the war debts unless the debtor nations "show strong determination to reduce their armaments." The amounts due the United States on account of the war debts are shown to be "far smaller than the expenditures of the debtor nations on their military establishments" and there is a pronounced insistence that a downward revision of the war debts should "go hand in hand with substantial reductions in the military and naval budgets of the nations."

Church Insurance Corporation Provides Life Pensions

The Church Life Insurance Corporation, which is as you know a subsidiary of the Church Pension Fund, provides life pensions for the clergy, lay officials and lay workers of our Church, and for their families as well. There have been inquiries about this so that we are very glad to present the information here. There are some apparently who are under the impression that only the clergy can have the advantage of the low rates of the corporation, whereas it is available for all doing Church work and also for their families. In addition to all standard types of life insurance policies and annuities, there are three unique types offered by the corporation. 1. Annuity income bond, which provides a guaranteed life pension of specified amount, beginning at age 65, purchased on the installment plan over a period of years. No medical examination is required. 2. Personal retirement policy, which provides a guaranteed income of specified amount, beginning at 65, at the same time giving full life insurance protection to one's family. 3. Immediate annuity, which provides a guaranteed life pension of specified amount, beginning at once. This is purchased by cash and is especially attractive for men and women of sixty or over. The office of the corporation is 20 Exchange Place, New York, in case you wish to get further information.

Summer School In the Parish House

The summer school of the diocese of West Texas was held in the parish house and educational building of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio. There was a fine faculty, including the Rev. The attendance was only fair, which is at least an unique thing to say about a Church event.

chairman should select the best men for team captains. Before September 20th these men should select their assistants. On September 22 and 23 all the clergy of the diocese are to attend a diocesan conference. From the 23rd to the 25th each parish chairman and one assistant are to attend a diocesan conference. In October the laymen of the parish are to check over the parish lists, making sure that the addresses and telephone numbers are correct. A parish folder is prepared, including therein an adequate parish budget. This budget should be arrived at only after discussion with parish groups. It should not be the work simply of the vestry or the finance committee. Incidentally if there is an advertising man in your parish enlist his help to make the printed material attractive. The rector is then urged to preach four sermons during October and November on the Church Program. Between the dates of October first and November 10th parish or vestry conferences are to be held; "helpful last year; a practical necessity now". On All Saints' Day, or some other convenient date, have a day of Intercession for the work and workers of the Church. October 15 to November 10 have meetings for your canvassers and see that they know their job and their Church. Avoid or eliminate untactful, uninformed or apologetic canvassers. Discuss and prepare to meet situations this fall which are new. Arrange for thorough distribution by mail or effective messenger, about a week apart, the National Council folder, the diocesan folder and the parish folder. November 13; corporate communion and commissioning of the canvassers. Between November 13 and 27 have your Every Member Canvass. Have the canvass completed by November 27. Five elements of a real every member canvass, according to Chicago, are: 1. Willing and confident leadership. 2. Adequate parish budget and acceptance of whole quota. 3. Education by sermons, conferences, etc. 4. Individual apportionment. 5. Thorough canvass, which is the result of due preparation.

Indians Have Their Own Idea About Washington

According to Bishop Burleson, writing in the Spirit of Missions, the Indians have their own ideas about George Washington. So highly do some of them esteem him that they consider him to be the only white man who has gone to heaven, and even he hasn't really gotten in yet. On the other hand some tribes, possibly not treated too well by the General and his troops, do not have

Harrisburg Clergy Hold a Conference

Twenty-nine clergymen of the diocese of Harrisburg held a conference at Eaglesmere, Pa., June 27 and 28, with Bishops Brown lecturing on preaching, priestly ministrations and pastoral work. Discussions were led by Dean Treder, the Rev. J. T. Heistand of Bloomsburg and the Rev. F. F. Lynch of Corning, N. Y.

Successful Conference In Western Michigan

The annual summer conference of the diocese of Western Michigan was held at Montague from June 19 through the 25th with a full time enrollment of 116, with an additional 50 taking courses part time. What's more the conference met expenses and carried over a balance to help with next year's gathering.

Bishop Oldham Hits at Nationalism

Preaching at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, on July 3rd Bishop Oldham of Albany said that there was need in these times for clear, detached, sincere thinking, divorced from prejudice or party shibboleths, and that this applied particularly to the international situation. "The world is one, yet we witness a recrudescense of narrow nationalism which bids fair to rob mankind of all the blessings that might result from the tremendous discoveries of science and the great achievements of industry." The service at which he preached was for students of Columbia University attending the summer school and was attended by several hundred of them.

Indian Boys and Girls Have a Summer Conference

A new venture in South Dakota this summer was a Young People's week-end conference for the Indian boys and girls from the ten chapels of the Crow Creek and Lower Brule missions. Their homes are so scattered that it is difficult to get a group together, but with careful planning and by calling for many who had no means of transportation, the Rev. David Clark and Sister Horner, Church Army worker, gathered seventy of them at Fort Thompson. Such a gathering means a great deal both socially and religiously to these young people, some of whom go for weeks without seeing anyone and with no change of any kind.

Teachers and Parents Hold Meeting in Eau Claire

An institute in religious education for teachers and parents of the diocese of Eau Claire was held recently at Rice Lake. There was a discussion as to how best to inculcate ideals in children; how to hold a children's mission; how to train people to be generous with their cash; and how to improve the small school.

Imagine! No Deficit And a Balance on Hand

The board of trustees of DuBose Memorial Training School, a school in Tennessee which prepares older men for the ministry, held their annual meeting the other day and the treasurer reported that they closed the year without a deficit and with a balance of cash on hand; that the school owes no debts whatever; that the capital investment has not decreased a single dollar, and that the income from investments likewise has not decreased. Now can you imagine that. There is genius mixed up in that somewhere.

Headlines, As You Know Often Misinform

For instance there is this headline that recently appeared in a newspaper of Utica, N. Y.:

St. Anthony Defeats
Our Lady of Lourdes
in Sharp Slug Fest

To the uninitiated that of course brings up a mental picture of the enemic St. Anthony swinging his fists about wildly, much to the discomfort of a sainted lady. In reality it was the heading over the report of a baseball game between teams representing Roman parishes by those names.

Large Attendance At Wellesley Conference

The attendance at the Wellesley Conference, which closed last week, was close to four hundred. This is somewhat less than the highwater mark of last year but is nevertheless encouraging considering the times. The faculty was, as always, particularly strong, with added attractions in the way of popular evening lecturers. There was also in session at the same time in another build-

Parents Inflict Strange Name Upon Child

Since reporting here of the young man, about to be baptized, who told Bishop McCormick that his name was Halley Comet, we have received a number of stories about strange names. The latest comes from the Rev. Joe Harvey of Alabama who reports that a child was born into the home of a family named Horn on the day of the cyclone of March 21st. The parents therefore promptly named the child "Cyclone Elam Horn". Joe isn't sure but he thinks the child has a brother named "Gabriel Horn."

Parish Chairmen Meet in Georgia

The parish chairmen of the diocese of Georgia met for two days recently at St. John's Church, Savannah, to discover just what their job was to be in the fall. They received their instruction, mind you, from a mere woman, Miss Edith D. Johnston, who directed last year's canvass at St. John's and made a particularly fine job of it. Bishop Reese also had a hand in the conference, which was received so enthusiastically that before adjourning they organized the Parish Chairmen's League, with Miss Johnston as president. Incidentally Miss Johnston is again directing the canvass at St. John's and has it already well under way. The other day the Rev. Robert Emmet Gribbin, Winston-Salem, was the special preacher on "I am a debtor", with a missionary talk that evening at a men's forum.

Speaking on Alaskan Work

The Rev. William R. Macpherson, missionary at Anchorage and Seward, Alaska, is supposed to be on a vacation, visiting relatives in Oregon. But he is combining business with pleasure by delivering a series of addresses on the work of the Church in the romantic Northland, all illustrated with fine picture slides. Some of his most interesting pictures show the wild life in Alaska, since his charge takes him into the Kenai region, a rugged section which abounds with wild life of all kinds, including the Kodia bear, the largest carnivorous animal in the world. There is also abundance of moose, mountain sheep, goats, caribou, numerous fowls and birds—a hunter's paradise. Mr. Macpherson is to return to his mission field next month.

Influence of Church Schools Can Never be Tabulated

THE FULL history of the influence of the Episcopal Church on the educational life of America will never be written. It can never even be fully estimated. The Church, through its many private schools preparing boys and girls for college, has influenced young people of the country during the years that are extremely important.

No matter where boys or girls may go to college—or what they may do in later life — they can never forget the impress of the moral standards set up during secondary school days.

To the hundreds of teachers and principals of such schools the Church may never erect a monument of stone or bronze, but in the minds and hearts of pupils and their parents these faithful men and women will ever be held in high esteem.

The secondary schools operating under auspices of the Episcopal Church are listed here.

THE WITNESS

A National Weekly of the Episcopal Church

IRVING P. JOHNSON

Managing Editor
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD

Vol. XVI. No. 48. JULY 21, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

COWLEY FATHERS, in their magazine, comment interestingly on the Bible as it is being produced by the twentieth century publisher. "Pious persons of a puritanical turn of mind," writes the editor, "have made it almost impossible to present the life of Christ in its native attractiveness. Podgy-looking Bibles with lap-edges and a garter around them, their text besprinkled with a. b. c.'s, x. y. z.'s, and other tiresome reference marks, are enough to frighten anyone from reading them. If only the Gospel could be published as a 'Borzoi' book we might find that there is more real flaming youth in the life of Jesus Christ than in any other life written or unwritten."

DR. WILLIAM C. THAYER, retired rector of the famous St. Mark's School, some weeks ago made a survey of Church Secondary Schools for the department of religious education of the National Council. He visited sixteen schools in all; ten upon special invitation, seven of which are receiving appropriations for the general Church, and six self-supporting schools which he visited for comparative purposes. His report mentions many notable successes and gives genuine tribute to the sacrificial service which is being rendered by those serving the Church in this field. The academic standards in practically every school he found to be high and the management efficient. Any fault he had to find with them on the latter score was on the ground of too great generosity in giving special rates. We have every reason to be proud of our Church schools, all deserving of our support in students and cash.

PERHAPS YOU FEEL that you have a handsome nose, but ask opinions as to that in Africa. White people's noses, so long and pointed, look very queer to African children. A missionary in Nyasaland was assured the other day by the children of his mission that we white people pull and stretch our noses into their present form. God, they said, simply never would have made them so funny.

CHURCHMEN INTERESTED in the relationship of the Church to social and industrial questions will do well to send to the national office of the Presbyterian Church, 518 Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, for a copy of a leaflet containing resolutions passed at the General Assembly of that Church, which met in Denver during May. It is a courageous and masterful statement which calls attention to the stupidity of our present economic situation. "The resources of the earth are still unimpaired, the means of production and distribution never so abundant. Despite these incontrovertible facts, we are faced with the facts of world-wide involuntary unemployment, and that in every land multitudes lack the very necessities of life and must depend upon doles and charity or starve. It is not the harshness or the niggardliness of nature which is oppressing us, but our own incompetency and wrong-headedness which hinders us from making wise use of the fruitfulness of inventive science and equitable distribution of the products of industry. Surely this is an arraignment of the present economic system under which the trade of the world is maintained, which calls for immediate revision and adjustment." But send for the leaflet and read it in its entirety. Its title is "Social and Industrial Relations." No price is given which leads us to assume that it is freely distributed, but since Presbyterians are no more flush than Episcopalians these days it might be well to enclose a postage stamp.

A LITTLE BOY at St. Simeon's Mission for colored people, Glendale, Ohio, where the Sisters of the Transfiguration teach in the Sunday School, was retelling in his own words the feeding of the five thousand. All went well and accurately until he came to "There is a lad here," his version of which was, "There is a boy here and he has five loaves of bread and two pork chops."

METHODISTS ARE MAKING no bones about condemning capitalism and they are not hesitating to urge Methodists to forsake the two old political parties. A movement has sprung up as a result of their Call to Action Conference, held some time ago in Chicago, which has resulted in local conferences in various parts of the country. One was recently held in California which declared flatly that "the declaration of principles and the economic aims of the Socialist Party of America most nearly coincide with the principles for which we stand." But this endorsement of socialism did not go through without a fight; but it was a fight from the left rather than the right, since a number of those attending the conference were of the opinion that church people should support communism.

RIDING IS A FAVORITE SPORT AT CHATHAM

A SCHOOL OF THE FINEST ART

By

DR. EDMUND J. LEE

WHAT is education? Is it not preparation for life; the equipping of the rising generation with the best in the cultural heritage of the race that they may start from the vantage ground attained by past generations and lead the progress of humanity onward and upward? In the field of education the secondary, or college preparatory school, holds a strategic place. It comes in the fateful years of adolescence, when character is taking shape for life. Before college is reached the battle is generally either lost or won.

Now the Church School is founded on the conviction that religion is not only an essential part but the most important part of education; that unless truth is presented from the religious standpoint it is only partial truth and cannot be fully understood. Furthermore it holds that fellowship with God, the essence of religion, is the glory of human life and the only true method of self realization.

This is our philosophy of education, which we may also express in the words of our title that a Church School should be a school of the finest art. An art seeks to embody conceptions of truth and beauty through some medium capable of giving them expression. What medium so fine as the human spirit, and what art so high as that which issues in beautiful characters and noble lives?

Let me now record what we consider our assets as we seek to embody this philosophy of education in the life of our school at Chatham Hall. First a location ideal for healthfulness and beauty in one of the loveliest parts of Virginia. A superb climate, not too hot and not too cold, allowing out-of-door life the year round. An altitude of 800 feet giving that invigorating air that makes for vigorous health. All that nature can do for a school she has done for Chatham Hall.

Secondly we would mention fine equipment. We have inherited this and must thank those that have gone before us. The school buildings, surrounded by a grove of magnificent trees, crown a hill in the midst of a 200 acre estate. These buildings are equipped with everything necessary for the varied activities of the modern school. In addition we may mention our courts and athletic fields for all forms of athletics, our swimming pool, and golf course, our barns and stables for our dairy herd, and our 20 horses, with the farm and gardens that furnish sustenance for man and beast. The mention of the 20 horses suggests what is unquestionably the most popular sport at Chatham Hall. Three-fourths of our students are horseback riders. The surrounding country is perfectly adapted to the sport, and our wonderful riding master has found and developed 200 miles of bridle trails within ten miles of the school.

THERE IS PRACTICAL TEACHING AT CHATHAM

BUT a school is not buildings nor equipment. More important than all these are its teachers. These are carefully chosen for a knowledge of their subject and ability to impart it; a love of their profession and a love of youth that is a continual urge and inspiration.

We are of course a college preparatory school. We prepare carefully for College Entrance Board examinations, while our graduates enter without examination all colleges that admit on certificate. Most of our students go to college. We are however even more interested in preparation for life; the training of the faculties of body and mind; the opening of doors into the great fields of science and literature; the bringing of our students face to face with the great problems of their day and generation and leading them to think constructively in regard to them with a sense of responsibility to aid in their solution.

Our next asset is "atmosphere". It is hard to overstate its importance. It sustains the life of the school. Our atmosphere, as we seek with some success we think, to maintain it, is one of good will and friendliness; an atmosphere of freedom under law, equally removed from too much restraint, and from the liberty that degenerates into license; the atmosphere of teachers and students working together to produce the finest richest life for all. Our atmosphere engenders a spirit of joyfulness which we think is the finest medium for development and which St. Francis declares to be a great defense against the Devil.

OUR last asset, mentioned last, but really first is religion. This is the informing spirit of the whole. It is because of our sense of its transcendant importance, however, that we seek to avoid that overemphasis that creates a distaste and defeats its own ends. We do not spend as much time in chapel as do most Church schools. We try however to make these services deeply vital. The students share in them, and in our four years at Chatham Hall we have been rewarded by a growing spirit of reverence and a deepening sense of reality.

One of the school regulations is that every student should take a course in religious education. This work is taught by one of the finest teachers in the school and the whole course is so thorough that it is accepted as a one unit credit for college entrance by most of the leading women's colleges.

Deeper than all this however, we seek, without violating the sacredness of personality, to lead our students individually to that effort of faith which lays hold on God and to the adoption of those principles of sacrificial living which we associate with the name of Christ.

In closing let me return to the idea of our title that a Church School should be a school of the "finest art." Chatham Hall is dedicated to the pursuit of beauty in character and life and finds its ideal and the perfection of this beauty in the life and character of Him who said "I am in the midst of you as He that serveth."

"NEVER UP; NEVER IN"

An Editorial by
BISHOP JOHNSON

THE game of golf has been defined as the effort to put a small ball into a small hole with instruments very ill adapted for the purpose. This isn't a bad definition of the game of life. If you will consider your own personal objective as a small ball and your bounden duty as a small hole, you will agree with me not only that it is a difficult task to find your duty and do it, but also that the tools in your bag are not always adapted to the purpose. Of course the trouble is that we don't keep our eye on the ball, and we don't follow through and we lift up our head at the critical moment and so the ball doesn't sink. In other words the essential quality in playing good golf or in doing one's duty is that quality known as concentration. As the Master put it, you cannot serve God with your eye on Mammon.

I wonder if the world is not in a mess today because of the fact that greed has distracted Christians from keeping their eye on the true objective of the Christian life. They have been directed by the pomps and vanities of this wicked world. Instead of sacrificing everything else to the one purpose they have tried to serve God while watching the stock market. You really can't have two chief objectives and achieve either. A covetous Christian is hopelessly handicapped. He doesn't make a good speculator and he is a mighty poor Christian. He is apt to fail in both. He has too much conscience to be ruthless and too little to be devout. In the language of golf he is a dub in both.

You can't play golf and contract bridge at the same time, and do either successfully. Each requires concentration and each calls for different qualities. In the game of golf there is an expression that one hears frequently on the links. A player sizes up the distance from his ball to the hole and then fearful that he may overshoot, he holds back and when the shot is made he finds that he is only half way to the hole. His partner will probably remind him that if one is never up he never can hope to go in. "Never up! Never in!" It is true that if you reach the hole there is a chance of sinking the ball, but if you fail to hit it hard enough there isn't a chance of your dropping it in. In other words timid people make poor scores at golf. They make poor records in any game. "Never up! Never in!"

WHEN one contemplates the courageous spirit of adventure which caused the Apostles, who were Jews, to leave all and follow Him, we understand why the gospel had such tremendous force in the Apostolic days. It was a sublime illustration of what it means to the world for a group of men to be animated by high courage. They not only sacrificed their possessions but they gladly laid down their lives in the cause which they regarded as preeminent. It is certain in the light of subsequent events that their personal sacrifices gave to the world more joy and peace than they could have imparted if they had lived comfortable and indulgent lives. Of course it makes a difference what you want to do with your life. If you aim to pamper yourself then the Apostles' lives were dismal failures; then Christ's life was a useless tragedy. But if you desire to contribute something to the world because you have lived, then their lives were lifted out of the drab obscurity in which peasants toil and die into the most glorious manifestation of personal service. But they won their exalted honor because they had the courage to risk all in their venture. Contrasted with them our timid efforts to follow Christ are like the half hearted strokes by which a timid golfer approaches his goal. We venture so little and consequently we get so little in return.

The immediate task which faces Christians today is not one of selling all that they have. One couldn't get much for it if they did. It is not one of inviting martyrdom. The Church is not heroic enough today to invite persecution. It is one of carrying on in spite of grave difficulties.

There are certain objectives which the Church must maintain or its lamp will go out amongst us. The Church must not exist merely for itself. To do so is to defeat its purpose. When the Master founded it, He supplied it with a charter. The little Church in Jerusalem had no money, no influential members, no knowledge of drives, but still it had its commission to go unto all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. No wonder that the Apostles lingered in Jerusalem appalled by the task to which they seemed so inadequate. I have no doubt they reasoned that there were many many souls to convert in Jerusalem, why go elsewhere? It took a severe persecution of the Church in Jerusalem to drive them out. The Lord had to add Paul to the company of the Apostles in order to start work among the Gentiles in Antioch. Having no other assets, they depended upon healing the sick and providing for the poor in order to further their enterprise. But they finally did the task. When Philip went down to Samaria to preach Christ unto them there was no Board of Missions behind him and no wardens and vestrymen to greet him. Possibly if there had been the work would have stopped there, for the Board would have sent word that they already had a deficit and the vestrymen would have said they were having trouble hiring the necessary musicians and building the much needed parish house without attempting any further expansion. Moreover we love Philip and Philip loves us and so long as we pay his salary we shall expect him to devote all his time to us.

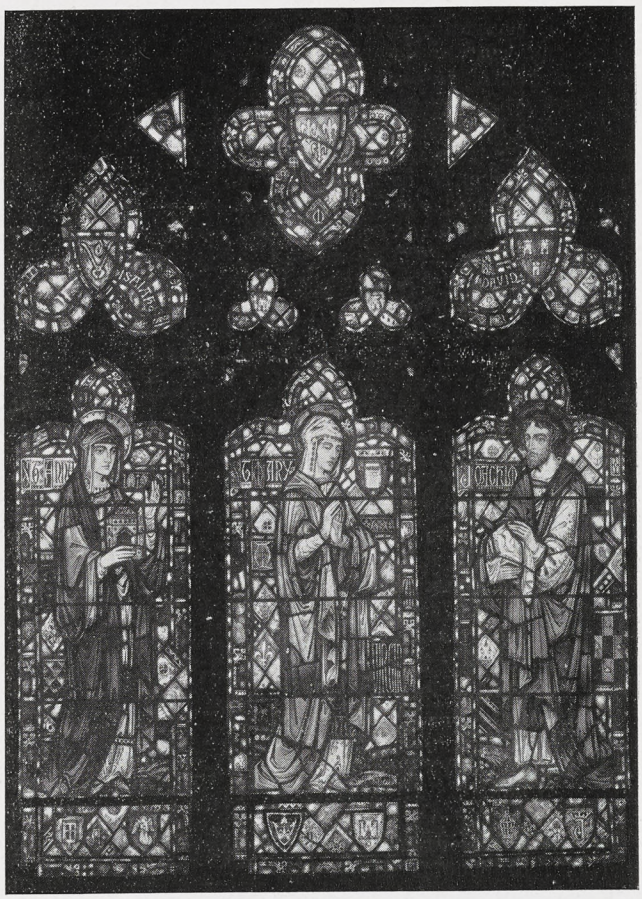
LET us face the facts. We are trying to hole out on the task the Lord has given us. We must concentrate on that. In golf you cannot pass; no matter how difficult your lie you must make the stroke or lose the hole. It is not enough for the individual Christian to support his parish. He must also help to keep the ideal before the Church, no matter how poor or how inadequate his support may be. We must remember that our task is not to dig in but to advance. When we lose sight of that objective our parishes will become monitoriums of decadent respectability. The people without a vision perish and how can we hope to win the game if we refuse to hit the ball? When we cut down our quotas to keep the parish up to its standard of parochial comforts we are foozling an approach. Half measures merely illustrate the truism of golfing. "Never up! Never in!" You cannot move the ball. You are expected to hole out from where you are with the instruments with which you are provided. It is a poor sportsman who is willing to quit the game because the play is difficult.



The Art of Stained Glass

By

ELEANOR H. WILSON

"NO ONE of the artistic crafts is more rigorous in its demands upon the artist than is that of stained glass, for he who makes the water-color design should be absolute master of all the processes that follow," says one of the master craftsmen,—in other words, he should be able to design, cartoon, superintend the color selection of and paint the window himself, even though through force of necessity other heads and hands may be called to aid him.

Ernest W. Lakeman of New York received his early impressions and training in the making of stained glass in a small studio in the north of Ireland, thus obtaining a first hand knowledge of all the different stages in the process of window making, and it is upon this principle that his Studio is conducted. He chose this as his life work because of his natural love of color and the possibilities which glass offers with its endless scope in the developing of color sense. His chief source of inspiration is the early English glass, particularly that of Canterbury and York Cathedrals. He believes it possible to produce under modern methods the glorious color effects found in the work of ancient times, "although the magnificence was to my thinking", he says, "not so much due to the quality of glass used as to the inspired arrangement of it; the mellowing effect of centuries has done much in supplying the subtle and elusive charm found only in the old work."

WINDOW IN LADY CHAPEL
Chapel of the Intercession, New York

Before opening his own Studio three years ago, Mr. Lakeman was associated with Henry Wynd Young, Inc. where he designed and executed windows now in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Bishop Freeman Chapel at Washington and many others. His recent and best work is to be found in Christ Church, Manhasset, Long Island, which he is slowly filling with glass, also in the Lady Chapel of the Chapel of the Intercession, N. Y.; the comprehensive plan for which was prepared by Dean Milo Gates while vicar of that parish.

The window reproduced is one of two in the Lady Chapel. In each of the three lancets a simple figure in full color is silhouetted on a grisaille background,—in the center, St. Mary the Virgin, in an attitude of devotion, symbols surrounding her,—Isaiah's Book of Prophecy, the Royal Crown and the Tower of Ivory. On the left St. Anna (Mother of the Virgin) supports the Golden Gate, associated with the Virgin's birth; on the right, St. Joachim (Father of the Virgin) holding his Temple offering of two doves, the initial "J" beneath the Royal Crown indicating his direct descent from the House of David. The general color scheme has been arranged with the idea of preserving the necessary amount of light in the small chapel and at the same time maintaining a brilliantly colorful effect.

JAMES OF ULM
Patron Saint of Glass Painters

Another example of Mr. Lakeman's work, having especial appeal to lovers of stained glass, is the window representing the patron saint of glass painters the Blessed Jacques L'Allemand, or James of Ulm, 1410-91, the only glass painter to receive the honor of beatification. He is shown supporting in his hands the arms of the early glass painters' guild, viz. the ancient form of grozing irons crossed, together with four glazing nails similar to those used in the craft today. The four smaller figures in the insets on either side are St. Eloy, patron of smiths and metal workers, St. Joseph, patron of carpenters, St. Wolstan, patron of architects and St. Thomas, patron of builders; thus are represented the four main structural elements supporting the craft. The architectural features shown as background are treated in a free and whimsical manner; on the right a tiny mason figure is engaged in completing the stone fabric, surmounted by the text,—"Except the Lord build ye labor in vain." Below St. Thomas, who is shown with his emblem, a builder's square, is seen the mason's helper with his hod of mortar to complete the work. The effect of the whole is one of silver and gold with passages of pure color.

Just Souls

By
C. RUSSELL MOODEY

Headway is heartway—
A spirit persisting
In high initiative
That broods with Christ
Life and happiness.

IT DOES one good to pause at times and watch a hen mother her chicks. There is something fascinating the way she struts around the farm as if she were in complete charge. I have a particular liking for the hen that has shown initiative by stealing her nest, and her triumphal march back to the barnyard is quite a spectacle. How proud she is of her brood, and why not? She went away alone—and came back with twelve little downy forms full of life. And what a thrill they get in their new surroundings! They toy with the worm, and chase the bugs. Now and then they get lost and their plaintive call is answered by a few guttural clucks from the mother, and they come bounding back with wings outstretched to their feathery haven. "Brooding" in this sense is a great creative art that turns in positive results.

When a man goes away to brood he seldom if ever comes back. There is no triumphal march for him, or anything like it. He broods over his weakness—his losses—his mean deal at the hands of fate. In his foolish moments he feels like ending it all, and the tragic record of suicide today is sufficient evidence of his folly. He has lost the art of creative living, and the lack of moral initiative has caused him to surrender the most precious thing he owns. The world will try and bolster up his previous record and reputation out of respect for his past but it isn't long before his good deeds are veiled in the shadow of his weakness. History will say he committed suicide—he took his life.

Brooding has a place and part in our Christian Faith. Some of us, like the hen on the farm, set out to create something. And with the Christ Spirit supporting and directing us we make headway. We have initiative—we want to do things. The success of our effort leads into a triumphal march full of exalted moments and happiness. But there are others who take their life not in the spirit of sacrifice but because of the persistent desire to end their days. They have failed miserably and now they yield to their weaker nature. They sometimes continue on in the flesh but their spirit is dead. It is all a matter of persistent initiative, and to brood with the Christ means happiness and positive results.

IMPORTANT BOOKS DEALING WITH THE PRESENT CRISIS

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

"If a man does accept in any sincerety a faith in Jesus and Jesus' God, whether he calls himself orthodox or modernist, it is impossible to see how he can be at peace with the present social order whose God is profit and whose largest social loyalty is the inadequate and divisive loyalty of nationalism". Thus speaks Norman Thomas in a chapter on The Church in his latest volume, As I See It published by Macmillan. The book is much shorter and lighter than America's Way Out but none the less serious. It is a collection of essays and addresses written during the spring and summer of 1931. It is unfortunate that its appearance was delayed, nevertheless the drift of affairs during the past year has been one which supports rather than weakens the author's arguments. The first chapter is aptly called "Reconsiderations" and is largely Mr. Thomas' reflections upon the reception by the reviewers and critics of his earlier book. The poll of reviewers found them according to themselves usually in general agreement with the writer and seldom becoming sufficiently specific to mention clearly their points of disagreement. Most of them misunderstand what the Socialist means by the class struggle and the author is at pains to relieve them of this difficulty. "Not vengeance on a middle class but absorption of it into a classless world of prosperous workers for the common good is our socialist hope". Mr. Thomas believes that the coming decade will see American drift steadily toward Fascism and he fears the inevitability of violence. Upon this latter difficulty he writes: "The responsibility for violence is never chiefly on those who rise at last against oppression. It is rather on those whose selfishness, apathy and stupidity, make them stand unyieldingly for their privileges at no matter what cost of violence—usually vicarious!"

Chapters on Disarmament, Liberty, and Planning contain many a cutting observation, while the chapter on New York City is one of the best in the book. The chapter on The Church is concerned largely with explaining the relation of the socialist and the Christian. The essence of Mr. Thomas' impatience with the Church is implied in these two sentences: "The man who says that he lives by the Golden Rule only conceives life in its visible personal relations. He has no conception of how completely the Golden Rule is denied by the rule of gold which is the master of economic life." The volume closes with a delightful description of the Christian home in which he was reared but from which his conscience has forced him to stray. Born and bred in the Christian Church, a friend of the Church, Mr. Thomas now stands challenging it to make a really whole-hearted attempt to build the Kingdom of God here on earth.

Another volume which may well be read in connection with the above book is The Road Ahead by Harry Laidler, the Executive Secretary of the League for Industrial Democracy, published by Thomas Y. Crowell. It bears the sub-title, A Primer of Capitalism and Socialism, and is a description of our present society in contrast to an ideal Socialist society, written avowedly for the "intelligent boy and girl". If many people of the younger generation read books like these, the leaders of that party will not have the difficulty which has hindered them in the past, namely that so many people have an entire misconception of what a socialist means by socialism. While this book shows a certain resemblance to New Russia's Primer, it is sufficiently different to stand upon its own feet.

A couple of weeks ago I spoke of books in connection with the Church School. I omitted to mention then a book which every teacher ought to know: How I Learn to Teach Religion (Harper) by Prof. Blanche Carrier of the University of Pittsburgh. It gives a clearer explanation of the modern experience-centered teaching method than any other volume I know and the fact that it has run through some nine editions is further testimony to its value.

BROTHERHOOD PARTY SAILS FOR JAPAN

Among those who sailed for Japan from Seattle on July 13 to attend the conference of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew were Bishop Taitt of Pennsylvania, Mr. Paul Rusch of St. Paul's University, Tokyo, who is in charge of the party, Miss Anne B. Blackwell of New York, Rev. Rodney F. Cobb of Rock Island, Illinois, Mr. E. B. Danson of Glendale, Ohio, the Rev. Richard Lief of Boston, Mr. Eric W. Gibberd of Glendale, Ohio, Ven. L. P. Hagger of Detroit, Rev. and Mrs. Harris Masterson of Austin, Texas, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Smith of North Adams, Mass., Mr. J. H. Stansbury of Baltimore, Rev. Wilson Sutton of New York, Mr. A. A. Traster and Mr. Robert F. Weber of Detroit and Rev. J. W. Watts of Bala, Penna. The party is to return to Seattle on August 23rd.

NEWS NOTES OF THE CHURCH IN BRIEF PARAGRAPHS

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

The fifteen commissioners representing the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry who have been studying foreign missions in the Far East since last fall for seven Protestant church denominations, with the aid of John D. Rockefeller Jr., have returned to this country with the bulk of their task completed. A comprehensive report will be issued some time in the fall.

The Rev. Dr. William Pierson Merrill, minister of the Brick Presbyterian Church, who was one of the commissioners, arrived in New York last week from San Francisco. At his summer home, in White Plains, he refused to discuss any of the findings of the commission, but described freely the economic and social conditions found by the party of thirty in its extensive tours in India, China and Japan.

Dr. Merrill was particularly impressed with the intellectual and higher social classes of China, and expressed the belief that if other nations would stay out of China, even for as long a time as fifty years, that nation would develop into one of the highest order. In every country, he said, the commissioners were impressed with the respect shown to Christian people and Christian institutions.

"Everywhere we found matters greatly disturbed," he said. "In India the nationalist feeling is boiling over and seething, but it is very difficult to form any judgment there. I have a feeling that the larger classes of India will never be satisfied with anything less than a dominion status, such as Canada has, or even complete independence. There is also a danger that, at most any time, all of the complex parts will fly apart.

"I think the really critical fact is that so many intellectual and high-minded leaders of India are determined on a large measure of independence. At the same time, both sides are using a memorable amount of restraint. A great many changes are coming in Indian life, and a large number of these are due to Christian missionaries. The lead, however, has been taken by Hindoos and Moslems as well as Christians.

"In China, things are, so to speak, in a mess. It is said there are 3,000,000 men under arms, divided in loyalty to different leaders and sets, and the government has only a faint control of large portions of soldiers. On the other hand, the intelligent men and women impress me as being of the very highest order. Cultured Chinese are of the highest type in the world. I had a great deal of respect for the Chinese before I went there, but my respect has increased since being there.

"Comparatively few of the Chinese have grasped the nationalistic idea. I have a feeling that if other nations would let China alone, for say as much as fifty years, it would work itself out. I think the Chinese are a remarkable people. They have a high appreciation for arts and culture. Returned students stand out and the Christians have had a great influence. Although the Christians number but one-tenth of one per cent of the population, they number 11 per cent in the Chinese Who's Who.

"Japan, on the other hand is the very incarnation of loyalty to the nation. It has seen the most remarkable upbuilding of national loyalty in the world today. We found the Japanese very sensitive to the attitude of America toward them. We of course, were not qualified to speak so we tried to be quiet, and see all we could see while there.

"We were met everywhere with the greatest courtesy and kindness. It's no mistake to say that in all three countries there are thousands who are Christians in everything but name. Because of family ties, and for other reasons, they cannot call themselves Christians, but in fact and in point of view they are Christians."

The commissioners will meet for two weeks in Maine during August to compile their report, and then it will be presented to the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry. After that a report will be made public. The denominations participating in the survey are the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A., the Reformed Church of America, the United Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Episcopal, the Congregational, the Protestant Episcopal and the Northern Baptist.

Other members are Dr. Arlo A. Brown, president of Drew University; Dr. Charles Phillips Emerson, dean of the medical school of Indiana University; Dr. Henry S. Houghton, dean of the medical college of the University of Iowa; Albert L. Scott, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Harper Sibley, of Rochester; Dr. Frederic C. Woodward, of the University of Chicago; Dr. Orville A. Petty, New Haven, Conn.; Dr. William Ernest Hocking, of Harvard University, chairman and Mrs. Hocking; Dr. Henry C. Taylor, of Burlington, Vt.; Edgar H. Betts, of Troy, N. Y.; Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, president of Brown University; Dr. Rufus M. Jones of Haverford College, and Miss Ruth F. Woodsmall, of Indianapolis.

Western and Seabury Consider Uniting

A conference has been held between the trustees of the Western Theological Seminary and Seabury Divinity School looking toward the uniting of the two institutions. No announcement of results of their deliberations has been given out but it is understood that progress is being made. The Western is located in Chicago while Seabury is at Faribault, Minnesota.

Austin Organ Goes to the Holy Land

A four-manual concert organ has been shipped to Jerusalem to be installed in the elaborate group of buildings soon to be completed by the Y.M.C.A. there. It is the largest organ ever shipped to that part of the world. It is to be installed in the Golden Hall of Friendship, "where Moslem, Jew and Christian will mingle together in functions of education, recreation and religious nature." The anonymous donor of the instrument specified that it should be American built and the Austin Organ Company was chosen as best fitted to build an organ to meet the exacting conditions caused by the extremes of dampness and alternate dryness, of heat and cold.

Cheerful News About Finances

To be able to announce to the world that "We owe the banks no money" is an event these days, for the Church no less than for a business establishment. The vice-president-treasurer of the National Council, Lewis B. Franklin, made such an announcement the other day in behalf of the Council. He writes:

"How long we remain in this satisfactory situation depends on you. As of July 1st we had slipped quite a bit as compared with June 1st and are now $83,711 below the proportion due on "Expectations." Last month we had 57 dioceses and districts out of 99 in the 100 per cent class, now the number has dropped to 41.

"Just before the end of June a diocesan treasurer had nearly $12,000 ready to send us when the bank in which the money was deposited closed. We will probably be borrowing money before long and the safest use for money is in the payment of one's debts. So please keep your parish treasurers on the job this summer and then remit to us frequently. We will put the money at work without delay."

He makes the further announcement that the Deficiency Fund (Whitsunday Offering) had reached $241,576 up to July first.

Meet to Discuss Church Rural Work

The second regional rural conference of the province of Sewanee met at All Saints College, Vicksburg, Miss., in June for a ten day session. There were four distinct divisions, worship, study, special lectures, inspiration. One of the features was also the visits to rural missions and parishes where services and meetings were held. The conference made several definite recommendations to the Church in regard to rural work through a report of a findings committee which was adopted by the entire conference. First it stresses the value of such conferences and urges that they be held in other parts of the country. They urged the teaching of rural sociology in our theological seminaries, and congratulated the General for being the first to do so. They urged preaching missions in rural communities; the seeking out of isolated Church people so that they may be definitely tied up with the Church; the holding of classes and round table discussions on the economic situation; a real study of the condition of tenant farmers—in other words it was a very lively conference, capably led, and tackling real problems. Among the leaders present were Bishop Green of Mississippi, Professor R. J. Colbert of the University of Wisconsin, the Rev. Goodrich Fenner, rural secretary of the National Council and the Rev. Val H. Sessions, who is the capable editor of the Rural Messenger, Church paper, and a leader in all efforts to improve the lot of the farmer.

Teachers Have Meeting Every Week

A fine letter comes from a parishioner of St. John's, Hampton, Virginia, which is another one of those steady, plugging-away parishes that are the backbone of the Church. And St. John's has been plugging away for a very long time, as the first church was built between 1612 and 1620. The quiet existence of this history parish has been interrupted by three wars—the Revolution, the war of 1812 and the Civil War—with the enemy quartered in the church yard during the last two. But the point of the story is not to relate ancient history, as glorious as it is, but to inform you that a class of 114 was confirmed there recently, presented by the Rev. A. A. Pruder, a retired Army chaplain, who is now in charge. A class that size may not mean so much to a large city parish but believe me it is a real event for a comparatively small parish. But as fine as this is I think that the real news of the letter was contained in an afterthought in the form of a "P. S." This informs me that once a week for over forty years some of the officers and teachers of the Sunday School have been meeting for prayer, discussion of the needs of the school and for teacher training on the points to be emphasized in the lessons for the following Sunday. This Teachers Circle has not been interrupted for over forty years. Sometimes there have been but two or three there, but the average attendance is around twenty. The writer of the letter says: "We are not a great church but we have some wonderful traditions" and one may well believe it. Certainly this Teachers Circle must have developed a real Sunday School.

Dollars and Yen in Offering

An envelope containing $8.00 in United States currency and $5.00 in Japanese yen was handed to Dean Beal of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, recently by the Rev. Franklin T. Osborn of Rio Grande, Brazil, when he visited the Cathedral. The money is for St. Mary's Japanese Mission, Los Angeles, and is the offering given on board the Japanese liner, "Buenos Ayres Maru" at a service conducted by the Rev. Mr. Osborn. Mr. and Mrs. Osborn and their four children passed through Los Angeles on their way to Idaho, where they will spend their furlough with Mr. Osborn's father.

An Unusual Gift for Confirmation

I hope you don't mind my baseball news. The simple fact is that one item on the subject brings others, and they are usually too good not to pass on to you. One arrived this morning from the Rev. Allen Jacobs, rector at Duxbury, Mass., who relates of taking two boys of high school age to see their first big league game. There they met the picturesque Rabbit Maranville, captain of the Braves, and the rector informed him that the boys were to be confirmed the following Sunday. And low and behold on that day a package arrived by special messenger. It was opened with trembling fingers and was found to contain two autographed baseballs, with a message on each one congratulating the boys "on this memorable day." Nice of the Rabbit, what? Then my little item about Bill Terry, managing first-baseman of the Giants, being a vestryman brought this further information. When his parish in Memphis announced a campaign for funds to paint the church Bill Terry supplied all the cash and also bossed the job. It is also reported that he has a suppressed desire to sing in the choir but is prevented since he hasn't the time for rehearsals.

Disaster May Be Ahead Says Rector

Bible Class Develops Into a Real Mission

Some weeks ago we had a little item here about the breaking of ground for the new building for the Japanese Mission of St. Peter's in the White River Valley of the diocese of Olympia. There is a real story behind the enterprise. It seems that years ago a Japanese house boy working in the home of the Rev. R. J. Arney in the White River Valley asked whether he and some other Japanese boys might not have a Bible class. This mission is the outgrowth of that Bible class and the boy who asked for it is the Rev. Gennosuki Shoji, now priest in charge of the work. The Japanese farmers turned out in great force for the ground-breaking ceremony which was conducted by Bishop Huston. The Rev. Dr. Herbert H. ton, author of learned and fascinating books, and priest in charge of St. Barnabas Mission, started this Japanese mission twenty-five years ago. Most of the farmers in the Japanese colony in the valley are Buddhists, and when that Church's former missionary, a Japanese clergyman, died there some months ago, the diocese thought perhaps the Buddhists would take the opportunity to secure a teacher of their faith, but instead they asked for another Christian teacher for their children.

Tennessee Leaders for Newark Conferences

Bishop Maxon of Tennessee and the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. Paul's, Chattanooga, did such a fine job in conducting missions in the diocese of New Jersey this spring that they have been asked to lead conferences this fall in the neighboring diocese of Newark. A layman's conference is to be held Sept. 10 and 11 and a clergy conference the 12th-14th, both at the Girls' Friendly Holiday House at Delaware. Then a conference for women is to be held at Grace Church parish house, Orange, on the 15th and 16th. All of these conferences are in preparation for a Teaching Mission to be held throughout the diocese in October.

Have Interesting Services at Mamaroneck

The month of June was a memorial one at St. Thomas's, Mamaroneck, New York, because of the many interesting services and customs that have been introduced in this historic parish by the rector, the Rev. Frank Dean Gifford. On the first Sunday of the month, for instance, all couples who were married in the parish had a "Harmony Reunion Service," with a sermon on harmony in human relations. The point, I take it, is that of reminding married couples occasionally of their marriage vows, which may not be a bad idea at all. Then on the following Sunday there was a young people's corporate communion, followed by a breakfast; a parish anniversary service later in the day with a reunion of older parishioners and still later the annual June babies' service. At this service a boy barely three years old acted with a five year older as usher and marched around the church with the offering plate like a real veteran, having received his training in the kindergarten service held each Sunday. The third Sunday was the rector's anniversary, with a reunion of all those whom he had presented for confirmation. The last Sunday in the month marked the commencement service of the Church School.

Vol. XVI. No. 49. JULY 28, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

EACH YEAR the Federal Council of Churches, through its social service department, issues a Labor Sunday Message with the request that it be read in churches on Labor Sunday or on the first available Sunday thereafter. The message for 1932 is printed in this number of THE WITNESS and we would suggest that it be read in our churches on September fourth. The Federal Council also offers other suggestions for the observation of the day; special sermons dealing with the relation of Christianity to industrial problems; special prayers seeking divine aid in building a brotherly economic order; a union service at which the speakers might well be a representative of labor, with special delegations representing various labor organizations attending the service. In a number of cities outdoor services are held, sponsored jointly by the churches. At the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and also at Washington Cathedral there are great services on this day, when the addresses are made by outstanding labor leaders. The Federal Council also suggests that plans might well get under way that day for a study of unemployment, its causes and suggested cures. And we would like to suggest further that something concrete be done on Labor Sunday for the workers. Organizations of the parish might prepare a box of clothing to send to the miners in Kentucky or West Virginia —or to some group that is no doubt at the very parish door. Collections also might well be taken at the Labor Sunday service for some struggling workers organization or the unemployed of the city or parish.

IF YOU ARE INTERESTED in knowing how men should be trained for the ministry in the opinion of bishops, you should secure a pamphlet recently published by the Philadelphia Divinity School. It is called "The Bishops' Advice on Training for the Ministry" and is a symposium of opinion, with a foreword by Bishop Cook of Delaware in which he explains that each bishop was asked two questions; first, to mention those clergymen whose work for the Church had been most effective and notable; and, second, what elements in the known training of these men had been of the greatest formative importance. The pamphlet would have had more human interest if the notable clergymen named by the bishops were listed, but to have done this would probably have brought the wrath of the scorned upon every bishop's head. The pamphlet has been confined therefore to the publication of the answers received to the second question. With ninety bishops contributing one finds, of course, much divergence of opinion, with some presenting a complete three year course of study that men should take in the seminary, while others merely make a suggestion or two. Bishop Fox, for example, knowing that progress is slow, would start improving the parsons by giving them a course in modern business methods and teaching them to be prompt in answering letters. Deep conviction, devotion, an honest concern for the sick and suffering, social vision, more attention to the reading of the service, better preaching, deep spiritual experience, integrity, industry—the virtues are all listed in the little book, and since many of them are not distinctly clerical virtues it could be read profitably by the laity as well as the clergy.

MR. W. H. DEWAR is a Y. M. C. A. secretary of Canadian birth who was anxious to become an American citizen. Appearing before Judge Alfred A. Stein in Elizabeth, N. J., he was asked to present a written statement giving his position in regard to war and peace. This he did in the following language: "I have no reservation whatsoever about bearing arms in defense of the country. Should the government, however, undertake war 'for the solution of international controversy' I could not guarantee now what my conscience might dictate under such circumstances, or should the government enter any war that is used 'as an instrument of national policy' in expressing our relations with another nation I could not give assurance now as to what my position might be at such a time". In presenting his statement to the judge Mr. Dewar called attention to the fact that the quotations were taken directly from the Kellogg Peace Pact. Nevertheless Judge Stein said that on the basis of previous decisions he would have to deny Mr. Dewar's application for citizenship. According to the Kellogg Pact the United States has renounced war as an instrument of national policy. But it objects, apparently, to having its prospective citizens do so. We have one position, it seems, for consumption abroad and another for home use. No wonder people by the thousands are going to the New York musical comedy "Of Thee I Sing" to roar at their own government. As one reviewer put it, "The play is funnier than the government and a lot less dangerous."

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE, 1932

(Prepared by the Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America)

ON LABOR SUNDAY, as on Christmas, the churches of Christ repeat the promise of peace on earth, goodwill to men. They seek to interpret for themselves and the world what this gospel of goodwill implies for our industrial civilization. On Labor Sunday, as on Easter Sunday, the churches acclaim the living Christ and declare that His spirit should guide all human relations. On Labor Sunday, as on the Day of Pentecost, the Churches of Christ desire to speak with new tongues so that their message shall be understood by all men. The churches want their young men to see visions and their old men to dream dreams of a better world in which industry shall be planned to meet human needs.

The thing that really matters in any industrial system is what it actually does to human beings. For this reason no society that would call itself Christian or even civilized can tolerate such unemployment as we now see in our economic life. Unemployment terribly increases the strains which even in so-called prosperous times bring many to the breaking point. Homes are threatened and broken. There is more overcrowding as families double up in quarters which do not give adequate privacy. Resources are exhausted. Morale is undermined. Physical and moral resistance is impaired.

Those who depend upon income from savings suffer from reduced interest, rent, or dividends and, in many cases, this reduction has now gone to the vanishing point. But workers who lose their jobs are obviously more disastrously affected than the average investor since their margin of security is smaller.

RELIGIOUS prophets have always denounced the gross inequality between the incomes on the one hand of those who toil in factory, mine, farm and office, and of those, on the other hand, who by inheritance, or privilege of ownership, or speculative investment derive an income not earned by actual service. The simple and searching comment of Jesus, when the rich young man whom Jesus loved at sight went away sorrowful because he had great possessions, needs to be remembered: "How hardly shall they that have riches enter the Kingdom of God." The constant suggestion of the parables of Jesus is that great wealth in the midst of poverty is a hindrance to the good life. This is still the fact. Inequality is a peril to the rich because it tempts them to a narrowing of their sympathies and a false scale of values. It is a curse to the poor because it means misery for under-paid, irregularly employed workers, crowded in unsanitary tenements, shacks or company houses, exposed to the constant fear of sickness unprovided for and of old age insecure. Our economic resources, our progress in invention and the arts, our social inheritance should now make possible a worthy standard of living for all if the organization of production and distribution were directed towards that end.

It is not denied that many persons of wealth are rendering great service to society. It is only suggested that the wealthy are overpaid in sharp contrast with underpaid masses of the people. The concentration of wealth carries with it a dangerous concentration of power. It leads to conflict and violence. To suppress the symptoms of this inherent conflict while leaving the fundamental causes of it untouched is neither sound statesmanship nor Christian goodwill.

IT IS becoming more and more clear that the principles of our religion and the findings of the social sciences point in the same direction. Economists now call attention to the fact that the present distribution of wealth and income which is so unbrotherly in the light of Christian ethics, is also unscientific in that it does not furnish purchasing power to the masses to balance consumption and production in our machine age. Economists further point out that control of the great economic forces which affect the welfare of all nations cannot be achieved by any one nation acting alone. World cooperation is becoming more and more a practical necessity.

The method whereby a just, brotherly and scientific world social order shall be brought about is a question of major importance. The churches do not condone violence nor encourage resort to force, but look with sympathy on all peaceful and constructive efforts—by individuals, by labor, by employers, by social agencies, and by political movements—to accomplish the desired end. Among the measures which in our time may advance the cause of human welfare in the direction of that ideal social order which we call the Kingdom of God, are intelligent planning and direction of industry, credit and finance for the common good; an extension of minimum wage laws, and above the minimum wage the highest possible wage as distribution becomes fairer and the productivity of industry increases; collective bargaining; cooperative ownership; and social insurance against accidents, sickness, old age and unemployment.

The Christian religion demands the dedication of power to the more abundant life of humanity. Such consecration of talent especially in the fields of industry and statecraft must become a test of the Christian life. It is the special responsibility of privileged classes to cooperate in movements toward economic justice, thus creating a spirit of fellowship instead of conflict in social progress. A similar obligation rests upon labor and its leaders.

With malice toward none and charity for all, the churches send their greetings on Labor Sunday to all who toil with hand or brain and look forward with them toward a better day.

A WINTER SCENE AT SHATTUCK

SHATTUCK

A Western School With Traditions

By

C. W. NEWHALL

THIS year Shattuck School celebrates the 72nd anniversary of its founding in 1860 as a small mission school in a frame building in the frontier town of Faribault. As we look back over these 72 years, seeking for the reasons why Shattuck has endured and prospered when other schools have failed, we find them in the soundness of the principles upon which the school was based, in the establishment of a solid foundation upon which to build future traditions.

James Lloyd Breck, the pioneer missionary who started the little mission school, and Bishop Whipple, who helped it grow and develop, were men of unusual faith and vision. There were few precedents for the work they were proposing to do—there was only one American school that might be taken as a model of the sort of school they planned to build, and this school, St. Paul's at Concord, New Hampshire, was only two or three years old. Bishop Whipple and Dr. Breck had confidence in the fundamental soundness of their belief that back of any education of real value there must be the influence of the Church. To supplement this influence in the building of character there must be high standards of scholarship, and a firm discipline.

Upon these simple principles was Shattuck founded—the insistence upon them is very clear through all of her early history. As the school grew in numbers and reputation, these basic principles became part of the growing body of Shattuck traditions—a priceless heritage from the founders of the school. As the Shattuck life grew more complicated, other traditions were gradually added—traditions of excellence in military drill, traditions of sportsmanship in athletics, traditions growing out of various school customs and practices. And so we have the school of the present time a composite of traditions, some a legacy from the early ideals of the founders, other growing out of the changing conditions in the school as it grew and developed.

One of the oldest and most cherished of the Shattuck traditions comes down to us directly from the English schools which have been the models for most of the American Church schools. It is the one which decrees that the older boys in the school, the members of the graduating class, shall exert a strong leadership for the right through their example and influence. So well is this precept ingrained in the consciousness of the school that even the youngest new boy realizes that the school spirit for any given year is but the reflection of the attitude of the Senior Class.

Within three or four years after the founding of Shattuck by Bishop Whipple in 1860, the Bishop visited some of the famous schools of England seeking for ideas that he might incorporate into the school that he was starting in Faribault. Among others with whom he talked were the Archbishop of Canterbury, who had been the Headmaster of Harrow, and the Bishop of London, who had succeeded Dr. Arnold at Rugby. In his autobiography, Bishop Whipple states that the advice he received from these distinguished school men might be summed up in the one sentence: "Remember that your school has as real a life as an individual—its character is the sum of all of its traditions."

RELIGION AND HEALTH

By

ELWOOD WORCESTER

OUR work in behalf of sick people is primarily religious in aim though scientific in method. Great as is our interest in psychotherapy as a science, greater still is our interest in the spiritual life. Our primary thought in regard to the men and women committed to our care is dominated by the moral and religious motive. We wish not merely to help make them well, but to make them better, to open to them the door of a larger, freer, happier and more useful life. We would restore to them the gift of self-mastery, so that they may better consecrate themselves to the work of life in a spirit of love to God and man. The purpose of our work is to deepen and strengthen the religious instinct, and in doing this we try to remove the forces that make for nervous misery and disorder. And we believe that in the Christian religion we have a therapeutic and prophylactic power of the first importance.

We know that religion has emotional elements. Are not love, faith, hope, peace, repentance, the deepest feelings within the compass of our experience? Are they not definite psychic states? And as such must they not have definite nervous and physiological effects? Thus it turns out that we can deny therapeutic power to religion only by first of all depriving religion of some of its essential elements. But let us turn to the actual history of the Christian religion for light on this question. Now the essential quality of a religion is expressed in the spirit and life of its founder. We must then look at the life and activity of Jesus Christ if we would understand the capacities and aptitudes of the religion which He created. And the fact is too obvious to be denied that He appeared both as Teacher and Physician. His work as a teacher has received large recognition in the Church, especially since the Reformation. His ministry as a Physician has been, since the fourth century, ignored or explained away as allegorical by believers, and denied as fictitious or mythical by unbelievers. That Jesus Himself attached great importance to His healing activity is plainly shown in the gospels. When, for example, John the Baptist sent two of his disciples to ask "Art thou the Coming One, or are we to wait for another?" Jesus answers, "Go, report to John what ye hear and see; blind men receive their sight" etc. He asks that His ministry which founds the kingdom should be judged by its saving, healing, redeeming quality. It is not that He emphasizes His healing deeds as signs of supernatural power, but that He points to them as tokens of boundless love and pity. As Harnach remarks "By vanquishing and banishing misery, need, and disease by the actual influence which Jesus was exerting, John was to see that a new day had dawned."

ACCEPTING, then, as in all essential matters correct, the narration of Christ's healing work common to the first three gospels, let us ask what, in a general way, we may learn of the Lord's idea of disease and His treatment of it.

He does not deny the reality of the diseased state. For Him, disease is not the figment of "mortal mind." He does not confound sickness and sin and refer both to a false belief. Disease He calls disease, and health He calls health. To Him all evil and misery is something terrible. It is part of Satan's realm. But He feels the power of the Saviour within Him. He knows that progress is possible only by overcoming weakness and healing disease. He raises no speculative question as to the origin of sickness. He appears to regard sin and suffering not always as cause and effect, but rather as two elements in the kingdom of Evil, to overthrow which He has come into the world. His aim throughout is practical. He knows Himself armed with boundless faith in God, and he knows that in answer to faith God stands ready to give all men forgiveness of sins, love, joy, peace, and the self-control that is the secret of health.

He speaks to man as a whole. He is not careful to distinguish between moral and physical states. The redemption He preached is a redemption of the whole man, body, soul and spirit.

His healing acts required the forthputting of power. They were not wrought by a sort of omnipotent wave of the hand. "This kind," He says, "can come forth by nothing save by prayer"—prayer which has power to move God. He does not undertake to cure a disorder without making inquiry into the nature of it.

His personality has the great instrument of healing. Occasionally He does not disdain the use of physical agencies.

He demands faith on the part of the sufferer or of his friends or of both as the psychological medium for His healing power. (St. Mark) The profound truth of the observation is confirmed by modern medical science. Today we know that the faith of the patient, whatever the nature of the disease may be, is the most powerful ally the physician can count on.

Christ did not distinguish, as modern medicine does, between organic and functional diseases, or between curable and incurable diseases. To some of His cures there are no authentic analogies in modern time. Yet it would be a mistake to reject these narratives of the gospel history, because we do not know how far mind can influence body, nor can we estimate the power over disease of such a personality as Christ. Dr. Schofield says, "Believing as we now do that our old division into functional and organic diseases is merely the expression of an ignorance, and that all diseases, even hysterical, probably involve organic disturbance somewhere, we are prepared to believe that faith and other unorthodox cures, putting into operation such a powerful agent as the unconscious mind, or the 'forces of nature' are not necessarily limited to so-called functional diseases at all."

Christ does not claim a monopoly of healing power. He admits that our Jewish teachers had the power of exorcism. They, too, could cast out demons.

THERE was one type of disorder prevalent in Palestine in our Lord's day (demon possession) in the treatment of which He was particularly successful. This belief arose in times when as yet the pathology of the nervous system was unknown, and when at the same time there was a widespread doctrine of demons and their activity in human life. When the friends of the mentally or nervously disorganized person saw the strange alteration in his behaviour and speech, when they noted the moral change which had passed over him and heard the ravings from his lips, they naturally enough attributed these abnormal phenomena to the presence and potency of an evil spirit that had entered into him and taken possession of him. The belief in demons prevailing among the Jewish and Gentile peoples would by the power of suggestion seem to create and perpetuate the disorder of demon possession. Wherever at the present day there is a profound belief in the activity of spirits, the same phenomenon appears. Missionaries today heal these cases chiefly by prayer in the name of Jesus, the spirits confessing His name and departing from the sufferer. The very belief in spirits is itself a malady, which, if uncontrolled by faith in God, is capable of producing the phenomena described. It assumes an outer form, as it were, and becomes an objective power ruling the minds of men, and gathers to itself special strength when allied with morbid moral and physical tendencies. It is worth noting that in his treatment of the demoniac he does not blame him as though his miserable state was the penalty of sin. He regards him as a victim, as enslaved to forces over which he has no control. Hence it will be observed that Christ does not ask for faith as in the cases of ordinary sickness, simply because the physical energy requisite or implied in faith was not possible. The man had lost self-control. He believes himself to be the slave of a demon, and the belief deepens his wretched state. Hence the Lord addresses the demon, because only by doing so could He carry conviction of cure to a mind full of belief in the reality of demon possession. The result of our study, cursory though it has been, is to prove that the weapons which Christ used in His struggle against physical and mental disorder are in a measure open to every Christian. Here as elsewhere He shows Himself to be a true Son of Man. His inspiring motives and spiritual qualities are imitable. His faith in God and in the latent power of the human soul, his boundless hope, his self-restraint, his sane outlook on life, his quiet steadiness amid an overstrained and neurotic society—all these are human qualities, and he who has them exercises a healing and uplifting influence wherever he goes. Religion (I would rather say spiritual faith) is the most powerful of all preventives of nervous malady, and if properly interpreted and applied can help the sick back to freedom and health.

The Wonder Jar

By

EVELEEN HARRISON

IN DAYS long ago there lived in the hill country of Palestine a woman who had two sons. They were very poor since Father died; sometimes they did not have enough to eat, but they had each other, and a tiny home on the edge of the village, and so they were happy.

One day a big man came into the house, and had a long talk with Mother, and afterwards she drew the boys to her arms and told them with white and sorrowful face that this would be the last day in their dear home—and worse than that, the last day with their Mother.

For there was a big debt to be paid, and no money.

And Oh, the horror of it! the little boys were to be sold as slaves by the cruel man to whom they owed the money. Sold as slaves! Chains to be put around their hands, they would be carried far, far away; perhaps never to return!

In an agony of terror the boys clung to their Mother; was there no help?

The little room they called home was very dark and cold that morning—no furniture, not even a table or chair—nothing but the mattress they slept on, rolled up in a corner, and the big brown stone jar that held oil for their food, now almost empty.

* II. Kings, iv. 1-7.

Oh God! was there no help? Must she lose her boys forever?

Suddenly a thought came. She rose to her feet in haste; the great prophet Elisha, down in the village, or on the mountain top—it might be that he could show her a way out of this sorrow!

Tenderly she kissed her boys, as they clung to her.

"I will return quickly; watch for me, there is one hope."

So she waved goodbye, and covering her head and face, hurried down the village road.

The old prophet was deep in prayer when the widow bowed to the ground before him and laid hold of his feet.

"Tell me thy sorrow." said the kindly old voice.

And the sad story was told—one short day and the home would be gone, and her little lads sold into slavery forever!

With eyes of sympathy the old prophet listened. He had no money and knew not where to turn for it.

"What wilt thou have me to do?" he asked sadly.

The woman looked at him with anguish in her eyes.

"Tell me," continued the prophet, "what hast thou in the house?"

"Not anything," replied the Mother sadly, and slowly she rose to her feet.

There seemed no help — even her last hope was gone.

"Not anything in the house," she repeated as she turned to go, "save a jar of oil."

A great light came into the eyes of the old prophet. A jar of oil—then he could help her! Quickly he spoke.

"Go, borrow thee vessels, empty vessels, plenty of them from thy neighbors — shut the door upon thee and thy sons, and pour out oil into all the vessels."

A gleam of hope came into the Mother's eyes. Could it be possible? Would God work a miracle for her, as He had done in the days of old?

At least she would obey the voice of the prophet as a command from God. Hardly could she walk quickly enough, so did her heart beat with hope and fear.

As she turned the corner near home, the little lads ran out to meet her. At the sight of a smile on her face they broke into a shout of joy.

Mother had found a way out. As she bent to kiss the eager little faces, she whispered: "Go ask the neighbors for oil vessels, all they have. Go into every house you can reach. Hurry! hurry! bring them to me!"

Up and down the village streets, in the hot sunshine, went the eager little feet.

"Vessels for oil? Empty vessels? Yes, surely, but what wilt thou do with them?" exclaimed the neighbors, as they filled the outstretched arms of the little lads.

"We know not, but are obeying Mother's will," was the answer.

At last every inch of space on the little floor was covered with all kinds of oil pots, thin and fat, small and big, wide and narrow, until there was no more room.

Then Mother shut the door, and with a prayer in her heart, she lifted the old jar of oil—so little left in the bottom — and all these empty vessels? Her faith trembled.

But the boys on each side held up the borrowed vessels—the perfect confidence of childhood shining in their eyes.

Often Father had told them in the old days, of the wonderful works of God. The dry path through the sea—the food from Heaven in the wilderness—the guiding pillars of cloud and fire—water flowing out of the rock! Why not such a little thing in comparison as filling a few empty jars with oil to save a little home?

And she poured out the oil,—one, two, three, four, five; one after another the boys held jars up empty, and put them back full.

Each time the Mother glanced with fear into the old jar of oil—always a little remained.

Vessel after vessel was filled. How the little arms ached, and the backs grew heavy with lifting.

But their hearts became lighter and lighter. Merry laughter sounded in the once sorrowful room.

Even Mother's face wore a smile of joy. "Bring me another vessel and another," she called. At last they cried, "There is not a vessel more!"

And then the oil was stayed.

The sun shone through the tiny window into a room full of vessels filled to the brim with precious oil, and on the heads of Mother and sons bowed in thankful prayer to God.

Oh, the wonderful love of God! her boys were saved!

"Come, let us go tell the man of God," the Mother said.

"Go sell the oil, and pay thy debt," said the prophet Elisha, and may the Lord bless thee and thy family."

A CAPABLE BOOK ON THE RUNNING OF CHURCH SCHOOL

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

How many rectors or church school teachers have become disgusted with a text book and have desired to change but did not know how or where to find a better one. How many times rectors wish that they knew what method other parishes employed in meeting some problem in the Church School. Is it better to have small classes or large ones? How can the parents be more thoroughly interested in the work of the school? Which is the best course in the Life of Christ for the junior-high age? What is the best method of keeping records? How can the growth in Christian learning and practice be successfully measured so that it can be determined whether the Church School is really accomplishing anything? The answers to these and hundreds of other questions concerning the Church School can be found between the covers of a volume published this month by Macmillan entitled The Church School Comes to Life. It is from the pen of Miss Mildred Hewitt, who for the past four years has been Secretary for Church Schools in the Department of Religious Education of the National Council.

I am frank to state that when I picked up this book, I thought to myself, "Here is another one of those books about Church Schools which tell you in pious platitudes everything you already know about conducting a Sunday school". I was delighted to find that I was entirely wrong. Here is a book which every Rector and every Church School Superintendent will find helpful. It treats of practically every aspect of the Church School and its problems from kindergarten to senior high, summarizing the experience of the most successful schools in both large and small parishes. No teacher could read it without gleaning some helpful ideas for the improvement of his own class. The book is written from a thoroughly modern educational standpoint. For example, the value of the "project method" is made so evident that even a reader, who had thought he was opposed to it, would find himself wanting to employ it. It is a real reference book on the Church School. A hurried Rector could take the index and look up any part of the Church School work about which he felt in need of information and in a few pages would find the result of past experience in other schools carefully recorded. Not the least valuable part of the book is the splendid bibliography of books on religious education and the Church School in the Appendix.

Every parent, as well as every teacher, knows all too well the difficulty of trying to explain the meaning of the Christian religion to the small child. How much can the child mind understand? Can beliefs be made sufficiently simple? How much does the parent understand his own faith? I believe that The Rev. H. W. Fox in The Child's Approach to Religion, published by Long and Smith, has written an explanation in less than a hundred pages that is far and away the best yet put into print. In the very simplest words he has elucidated the most difficult Christian doctrine. Beginning with his approach to the child mind through "The kindliness of Jesus" he gradually leads up to the deeper mystery of the Cross. He shows how such difficult subjects as miracles, the future life, and Biblical Criticism can be explained not only intelligibly but helpfully to the small child. To the parent who says: "Oh, I just don't know how to teach religion to my children" this is the book to recommend.

If you want to get an idea of what a coal miner's life is like, read Miner, by F. C. Boden (Dutton & Company). The volume gives a moving picture of the life of "Danny," a young Welsh miner. The reader accompanies the hero through many of the experiences of the life of the average miner and he is made to feel the atmosphere of the miner's home life, of his dangerous work in the mine, and of his relations with his associates as only a novel or a moving picture could make him feel it. Those who have never lived near coal mines would especially profit by reading this book.

A second novel of interest is The Master of the House, by Radclyffe Hall (Jonathan Cape). It is the story of a young lad who feels a real kinship with Jesus. The hero is pictured as a modern Christ, and all the power of the writer's exquisitely beautiful style, made so famous in The Well of Loneliness, helps to make vivid the thoughts and feelings of the hero as he runs up against the brutalities of modern life. In many ways the best part of the book is the intimate description which is given of French life in Provence.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

Children throughout the United States are to cooperate in sending to the children of China symbols of goodwill in the form of a Friendship Folio, each containing messages to the children and teachers of China, pictures which children love, snap shot photographs and other tokens of goodwill. The project is sponsored by the committee on world friendship of the Federal Council of Churches and is the fourth to be sponsored by them. Some years ago they sent dolls to the children of Japan; later school bags went to the children of Mexico; more recently treasure chests went to the children of the Philippines, and now the friendship folios are to be sent to the children of China by the children of America. It is planned to present the folios in the schools of China on Memorial Day, October 10, 1933, in connection with the patriotic exercises celebrating the establishment of the Republic of China. The department of education of China is cooperating in the project.

Bishop McKim Has Eightieth Birthday

July 17th was the eightieth anniversary of the birthday of Bishop McKim of North Tokyo. As a young priest he went to Japan in 1879. He was consecrated bishop of Tokyo in 1893 and is today the senior bishop of the American Church in active service. Bishop Graves of Shanghai was consecrated at the same service and is therefore his junior by only a few moments. Bishop McKim has served continuously in Japan for fifty-three years —a record as far as the mission fields of the Church are concerned. When he went to Japan the missions of the Church in the United States and the Church of England were only beginning to get a foothold in the Empire. The number of communicants was insignificant. There were no Japanese clergy and a mere handful of lay readers. When the Holy Catholic Church in Japan was organized in 1887 there were only two Japanese deacons and no priests. At present the membership of the Church in Japan is over 39,000, with 243 congregations of which 38 are entirely self-supporting. The staff of foreign clergy is only 50; the staff of Japanese clergy is 283. In addition there are 117 unordained Japanese workers. For the year 1931 there was one person baptized for eight communicants in the Church in Japan. Here at home one person was baptized for every 21 communicants. When Bishop McKim reached Japan the institutional work of the Church was insignificant in amount and elementary in character. Today it is expressed through such institutions as St. Margaret's, Tokyo, and St. Agnes', Kyoto; St. Paul's, Tokyo; St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, and St. Barnabas' Hospital, Osaka.

Young Men's Conference Held in Seattle

The young men's division of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held a conference in Seattle, July 10-12, with sixteen states and two Canadian provinces represented. There was an address on the social responsibility of the Churchman by the Rev. Richard Lief, secretary of the social service department of the diocese of Massachusetts. This was followed by an address by Mr. Eric W. Gibberd of Glendale, Ohio, on the challenge offered by the Church to youth today. The service of the conference was held at St. Mark's Cathedral, with the bishops of Olympia, Pennsylvania and Nebraska present. The addresses, however, were made by laymen. Among the speakers were Robert F. Weber of Oberlin College, Joseph T. Howell of Vanderbilt, Paul I. Noguchi of Tokyo, Charles M. Seymour of Knoxville and Allan L. Ramsay of Jackson College. There were about two hundred at the conference dinner when addresses were made by Bishop Huston, Bishop Taitt and Mr. Paul Rusch, Brotherhood secretary.

Graduate School for Religious Educators

Something new in the way of Church conferences was held from July 9-16 at Bronxville, New York, when a graduate school for religious leaders was held. To enroll you really had to be a trained religious worker. There were five diocesan and fourteen parish directors of religious education, one seminary student, three clergymen, one secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, two leaders of young people's work, twenty-one public school teachers, seventeen volunteer teachers, three workers in the Auxiliary and eight lecturers. There were lectures by experts and also evening meetings when addresses were given by such leaders as Bishop Gilbert who spoke on our social responsibilities, the Rev. Daniel McGregor on international relations, the Rev. Burton Easton on the art of worship and Bishop Creighton on evangelization.

Many Demands on City Mission Society

Never before in the history of the New York City Mission Society have its four fresh air centers been called upon to provide country relief periods to so many half-starving boys and girls and mothers as they are doing this summer. Last Tuesday 508 children and women, from families of the unemployed, left for two weeks at the various centers. This brings the number for the season to close to a thousand, with another thousand waiting to hear whether or not they will be allowed to have a vacation this summer.

More than 700 Church children are enrolled in vacation Bible schools in the parishes of Chicago. And from the schedules it looks as though they were having an interesting time. Just why these schools are called Bible Schools is not quite clear, but it is a minor point.

Courtenay Barber Tells of Man-Made Chaos

Describing our present state of affairs as a "man-made chaos" Mr. Courtenay Barber, president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in a radio address the other day stated that the application of Christian principles to business was the surest cure for our ills.

"My religion means more to me than any other factor in life, because it gives to every other factor its true value and is the highest motivating power in life," said Mr. Barber. "The realization that I am living in God's world in which man is permitted to use his God-given faculties in building the kind of a man-made world he wants to live in, helps me to understand my own failures and the failures of others.

"We need to realize that all human relations can only function perfectly in God's world under His guidance, and that ignoring or deliberately violating God's laws is responsible for every difficulty which we face in life. God's kind of co-operation appropriated and applied by the leadership of the world today would end the man-made chaos in which we are engulfed. God's way of life is the only means through which man-made fear and mistrust such as is destroying our civilization can be dispelled and the kind of confidence and cooperation restored which is needed to insure the kind of civilization God intended man to enjoy."

Invaders Protest
'Popery' at Liverpool Cathedral

Members of the Protestant Reform League staged a demonstration on Sunday last as the new Liverpool Cathedral was being dedicated, and the trouble was not ended until the police had quelled several rushes by the crowd. The demonstration took definite form in the smashing of four stained glass windows. Religion, as you can see, is taken seriously in England.

Manning, who is said not to approve of this Body and Soul Clinic, and to the vestry of St. Mark's which also decided that the church would go on better without it. In his latest letter to Dr. Guthrie, given to the newspapers for publication, Mr. Cowles says that the only justification for the maintenance of the parish was in the large humanitarian ministry of the clinic where "I and those associated with me have given skilled service to about 400,000 persons—the victims for the most part of fears, split personalities, neurasthenia, hysteria, melancholia, nervous exhaustion and other disturbances." Dr. Guthrie's sole reply was to the effect that Mr. Cowles was feverish and was not to be taken too seriously. In any case the clinic is closed, and from present indications it is to remain closed.

Famous Ancient Crypt To Be Sacristy

At Westminster Abbey there is a famous crypt which is not open to the public and has been seen by few visitors to that celebrated edifice. I was fortunate enough to be invited down there last fall when I was in England. I saw a clergyman unlocking a tiny door with a key as large as a policeman's club so naturally my eyes popped out and my jaw dropped. He was about to show the prize spot to the preacher for the day. Noticing my interest he said, "Come along my good people if you like" and so the four Spoffords trooped down the winding stairs behind the talkative canon whom I later discovered to be Canon Storr. This crypt was the place where the monks used to hide their valuables, and in the massive pillar one still sees the safe. It was here that the most famous burglary in English history was committed in 1303, when the treasury of King Edward I, at the abbey, was robbed of valuables worth over fifteen million dollars in modern American currency. The burglar was Richard Podelicote, and he performed the feat by getting the aid of several monks who removed the valuables from the safe and placed them outside the one tiny barred window in the crypt. The burglar was never caught, nor were the jewels recovered, but if I remember Canon Storr's account correctly several monks had their heads chopped off for their part in the undertaking. In any case the crypt is now to be converted into a sacristy. It is located below the Poet's Corner, and is the most ancient room directly connected with the church, having been built about 1248. It was built to serve as a treasury, and that they intended it to be a safe place to store jewels may be judged from the fact that it is guarded by three heavy doors, two of the steps leading into it are false and served as a trap for thieves, and the walls are eighteen feet thick.

Confirms a Class of Girls

Thirteen girls at the Helen Dunlap School, Winslow, Arkansas, were recently confirmed by Bishop Saphore, suffragan bishop of the diocese. Most of the girls came from homes where little or nothing is known of the Church and were baptized after they entered the school. The school and also the mission work in the surrounding mountain country receive appropriations through the National Council.

Bishop Takes on New Name

The use of the second name for the suffragan bishop of Mexico, whom we now find referred to formally as Bishop Salinas y Velasco, is due to the custom of a man's adding his mother's name to his own when he has won some notable distinction.

There Is Need for Advertising

"Sort of exclusive, like a lodge, ain't it? It never announces its services in our newspaper." So a merchant remarked recently of the Episcopal Church in his town. The Churchman to whom it was said observes: "Parishes which use neither newspapers nor outdoor signboards are usually discouraged, and no wonder. The neglect of such obvious methods to attract people indicates a general lack of zeal."

Bishop Roots' Christian Motto

"The whole world seems to be in one awful mess at the present time," writes a China missionary in a personal letter, "and yet last night I said to Bishop Roots that a good motto was, 'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof,' he said, 'No, there's a better motto than that—Rejoice in the Lord always'!"

Tornado Destroys Mission Church

I do not know exactly what a double-funnel tornado is, but whatever it may be it apparently has a real wallop for it destroyed the most beautiful and best equipped mission building in Kansas on the afternoon of July 4th, Grace Church, Washington. It is a mission of St. Paul's Church, Manhattan, and is at present in charge of a seminary student from Sewanee, Mr. Howard Giere. Mrs. Giere is the United Thank Offering worker in that part of the country and the mission is the center of the rural work of the diocese. Mr. and Mrs. Giere were in the east when the double-funnel struck and they received the cheery news by wire, informing them that the church and their home had been completely destroyed except Mr. Giere's study. Also in the curious way of tornadoes this one left the window over the altar entirely unharmed.

"MOST VALUABLE AGENCIES"

AT THE meeting of the General Convention in Denver a resolution was adopted stating that "The Church Boarding Preparatory Schools are among the most valuable agencies the Church possesses for executing the teaching mission of the Church and for the development of character." The resolution further states that "because of the failure of our Church people generally to appreciate this fact these schools have received such scant support that almost every year one or more of them either has to be closed or is lost to the Church."

The Convention instructed the department of religious education of the National Council to begin "a sustained campaign of education of our people to the end that proper support may be secured, both in students and in gifts."

The Schools listed here would like to share in this campaign of education by sending you literature which will give you information about what we are able to do for your boy or girl.

Information about these schools, and the others, all recognized Church Schools, whose notices appear elsewhere in this paper, may be secured from The Witness, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Vol. XVI. No. 50 AUGUST 4, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

RESEARCH EXPERTS from Columbia University are attempting to discover the cultural rating of Americans. They went to Westchester County, New York, figuring it to be a bit swanky, and asked the residents what they did for amusement — the theatre, the movie, bridge, poker or books. It was discovered that those of the so-called professional and executive group preferred the legitimate stage to the movie. Those doing the work of this world, down in the report under the heading of laborers, prefer the movies, with nearly half of them testifying that they preferred them to all other forms of amusement. Thinking that cash might have something to do with the preference the experts asked if they would shift to the legitimate theatre if their income was increased $1000 a year. Only 10 per cent replied in the affirmative. But films were not alone high in the rating. Books had a fine following, with many insisting that they had rather have a good book than any other form of recreation. And the bridge table also attracts a good many apparently. Unfortunately no effort was made to discover the number of poker players. The committee of experts has just gotten under way. They are to be at it for a year or so and during that time hope to discover how much time people devote to social activities, sports, education, motoring, the radio, and attending church.

A REVIVAL of the economic virtues of frugality and of industry which marked the early settlers of this country was advocated as a way out of our difficulties in a sermon preached recently in a New York parish by the Rev. S. H. Prince, who is a professor of economics and sociology at King's College, Halifax, Novia Scotia. "Those who condemn the practice of hoarding," he said, "should remember that the trouble with the world is not that some are hoarding now, but that all were not hoarding during the years of plenty and prosperity." Possibly we should not expect a professor to know much about what is going on in the world but one would think that he might see that this "scarcity" economics is as dead as the do-do in this age of plenty. Why, in heavens' name, should we grub when there is more food in the world than we can use, more coal than we can burn, more cotton than we can possibly turn into cloth? Certainly everyone must know that we could increase our wealth many times by working our industrial and agricultural machinery at full capacity. The problem before the world is not how to produce goods. It is how to deliver to consumers the goods and services we are capable of producing so abundantly. Our Church, at successive General Conventions, has suggested the answer in this oft-repeated resolution: "Cooperation for the common service must be substituted for the present competition for private advantage as the paramount motive and end of all industry—ultimately it involves a fundamental change in the spirit and working of our whole industrial system." A fundamental change for those enjoying private advantage is a bit hard to take, but what intelligence fails to accomplish necessity will.

PARISHES THROUGHOUT the country might well do this summer what is being done in the diocese of Chicago. There a diocesan wide organization is collecting foodstuffs in the country, trucking it to the city and there distributing it to the various parishes where it is canned so that it may be available for the unemployed this coming winter. Every parish that has a kitchen should make it available for canning. Women's organizations should direct the work. Farmers, owners of large estates and state departments of agriculture will contribute fruits and vegetables if they are approached. Contributions of sugar and jars can be obtained. By getting busy this summer and fall the families of the unemployed will at least have something to eat next winter. At Morgantown, West Virginia, the churches united in opening a community kitchen. So far six thousand quarts of apples, apple butter and tomatoes have been canned and over two hundred bushels of apples have been dried. A diet of apples may not sound particularly enticing but when winter comes it will prove to be better than no diet at all.

OUR CHURCH has always had the reputation for knowing how to build beautiful and well appointed churches. It is fair to say also that our leadership has been a stimulus to other communions so that today you see throughout the land really beautiful churches of all denominations. Ours has been a leadership of which we may be proud and one which it is worth making an effort to maintain. The way to do it, in our opinion, is to make use of the Commission on Church Architecture, appointed by General Convention, of which the Very Rev. Milo H. Gates is secretary, whenever a church or a parish house is to be built. It is a commission skilled in the laws of fitness and beauty for such structures. Then too in several dioceses there are now diocesan commissions doing notable work in this field, with that of Colorado having been particularly effective.

THE GREAT SIN

By

SAMUEL M. SHOEMAKER, JR.

AMERICA'S great power places upon her a special obligation to take the lead in ridding the world of war. We must begin by changing our emphasis. We are spending considerably more than eight hundred million dollars annually on our army and navy, exclusive of pensions, retirements allowances and interest on war debts. If these are included, our annual disbursements on account of wars past, and current preparedness, reach the colossal sum of nearly two and a half billion dollars. Secretary Mellon has said that "the expenditures which are directly and indirectly attributable to war and the national defense compose over eighty per cent of total federal expenditures."

War springs from seeds sown deep in our society. Those who are fairminded today grant that while Germany hastened the world war and provided the occasion for it, war was inevitable as the world was organized. Germany was the boil; but the blood of the world was out of order.

I know English newspaper reporters who twenty years ago were sending back to the great London dailies news unfavorable to the relations between England and Germany because somebody's interests would thus be served, and if Germany's commerce would be crushed, England's might be made to come first. War grows not alone out of political absolutism, but out of industrial absolutism as well. And while we have eliminated some of the political emperors, we have still to get rid of those industrial despots who by virtue of the control of the lives and destinies of masses of men may force them to work under intolerable conditions, while those same despots roll about in great motors and private trains, and so increase that class hatred which makes such divisive ravages through all our human family, and which lies at the base of a good deal of war.

War does not reform nor punish the guilty. Some years ago, I looked across a Dutch lawn to the walls of a comfortable country house, where the old Kaiser lives in splendor and receives the homage of his little retinue as he did in the days of his glory. It isn't quite Potsdam, but it is a long way from a graveyard. Those who had nothing to do with bringing on the war were killed; those whose minds did not swell with inflated egotism and mad aspirations to rule the world, they are gone; but the Emperor maintains his court at Doorn. We cry about Germany not being penitent; of course they are not. The responsibility is too intricate for a whole nation to assume the guilt of it. The few individuals who caused the war are probably out of power now. War doesn't get the guilty, either to change him or kill him—it gets the other fellow.

WAR does not purify the nation. When England, and later ourselves, entered the war, everyone talked about the beneficial effect upon a soft and selfish generation. It would carry them out of themselves, put moral drive into them, and teach them to spend themselves for a cause. We heard that it would usher in a period of spiritual revival. The war was compared, I think blasphemously—to Calvary itself, so enobling was the unselfishness of the motives of it. But all this came to be seen as the talk of the people who stayed at home. I doubt if the men who went to fight themselves gave much credence to that kind of talk. Men were not gotten to fight until a campaign of hate had made victims of us all.

It wanted some excessive stimulus before a farmer lad, minding his sheep on the green slopes of Sussex or Kent, or a smithy hammering his horseshoes in an Indiana village, could see why he should go into training to shoot down a carpenter from Saxony. Purify the nation? You know that after the war moral conditions were worse than ever before in Europe. You know that there is a flaunting of lust and sin in the faces of us all in our cities at the present time which is nauseating. Why? Because we took off the lid during the war, and we have not found it so easy to put it back again. Whatever else has happened, no nation has been in any sense purified by the war. You cannot gain the ends of heaven by the means of hell. We were brutalized and debauched by war, not enobled.

There are innumerable problems which face us all as a human family—supplies and transportation, and communication, and food, and currency and language. But until we get a chance to sit down and face these things in concert, with minds unhaunted by the ghost of war just around the corner, we cannot solve any of them. A man and his wife do not make up their accounts, or talk about whether they will repaint the house, while a mad-man is terrorizing the countryside; they sit in fear and trembling and hope he will not disturb them, but they cannot live and work effectively together. The first great need of the world is an enduring peace to form a climate in which we can settle our other problems that are arising from the continual shrinkage of the world into a neighborhood.

YOU and I have a direct obligation in this matter to our own country and to the world. Whatever has been its action in the past—and the church has backed almost any war that happened to be going in the past—none the less, the Christian Church is irrevocably committed to the creation of a fraternal and peaceful world. No one can read the Sermon on the Mount and believe it can be practiced on a battlefield. It is high time that what the Church has always condemned in theory it begin to reject in practice. We cannot look to statesmen to stop war—some of them like the taste of it. Some of the capitalists profit by it too easily. If war is stopped, it will be stopped by a great moving in the Christian conscience of this country and all nations that war is sin. We dare not talk longer about the economic wastes of war. War from now on is sin. I do not ask you to say that the last war, or any previous war was sin, although I do say they have not accomplished what they set out to do. I say that from now on war is sin. We know better. We have found other ways to put our brains to our common problems before we get at each other's throats. It is common sense and cold logic that one day we shall have a "federation of the world". We can no more live on terms of economic and news intimacy with our neighbor-nations and not band ourselves into a world brotherhood, than a group of neighbors in a village can fail to combine for unity and efficiency and mutual helpfulness.

It cannot be the purpose of God that men slay each other in the futile business of war. He is the God of Peace, and in his Kingdom they shall not learn war any more. I ask you in the name of the Prince of Peace to bend every effort to eliminate from the earth this sourge of war. Talk peace, think peace, pray peace, live peace.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

BISHOP JOHNSON

FOLKS are quite insistent that the Church is not measuring up to its responsibilities and probably it is not. But what is the Church's responsibility and why does it fail to meet it? That seems to me a more important question than the more sweeping statement of its failure to assume its full opportunity.

What is the Church? It is an institution created for man's good. It is not imposed upon him but offered to him. We may take it or leave it as we choose. If the Church had been started in Sodom or Gomorrha it would probably have been regarded as a failure. One reason for the Church's failure may lie in the fact that "an evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign and no sign is given it." Are your minds set upon righteousness O ye children of America and are you really seeking the Kingdom of Heaven? Do the American people really want that which Christ has to offer? Is there a real desire to worship God or a passion for loving our fellowmen? The Church must maintain its ideals whether men heed or whether they disregard. The first reason for Christ's failure to reach more than a handful of people who stayed with Him lay in the character of the population in Jerusalem. They did not want what he had to offer. They hated it and crucified Him. The Church became an object of vicious persecution for three hundred years. It could not be influential and popular no matter how ably it was presented to the people. Then the character of those without has a very important bearing upon the calibre of those who come within the fold.

The Christian is one who has to live in both worlds and is more or less affected by the practices of this world. The Church does attract a large number of people who are baptized and confirmed. They constitute the militant force who are to do the Master's work. What kind of soldiers do they make? If a parish has a hundred laymen how many of them take more than a languid interest in the Church's program? What can we do?, says the layman. There is no work cut out for us. Well first of all you can worship God regularly and faithfully. Secondly you can support the Church generously, that is in comparison with what you spend for other things. Thirdly you can carry the love of God into your daily life and make those who come in contact with you feel the genial warmth of your faith and love.

That isn't much but it is the power which the Church must possess if it is going to influence those without. It is far more important that you do these things, than it is that you do the unusual tasks which may arise. If you leave these undone nothing else that you do can be effective. To fail in these because you are not asked to do great things is to fail as a soldier in training because you are asked to do nothing heroic. It is the soldier's conduct in a training camp which enables him to win the battle when called upon to fight.

I FULLY acknowledge and lament the failure of the clergy. I am profoundly conscious of the fact that there are few men of outstanding talent or unusual leadership. But where are those who are competent to lead. They are not in politics or in social efforts. The man who has talent is making money. It is a laudable and fascinating enterprise but he ought not to complain because some weaker brother has gone into politics or into the ministry. He could not make much money honestly in either profession. Naturally the men who seek these offices are not the top-notchers in their ability, but they have accepted the draft. It seems to me that they are entitled to the support of those who evaded the draft for more profitable and less vulnerable positions.

It is not altogether easy for a man of medium talent to live on a small salary and be subject to personal interference and censorious judgments. It used to be that the hypocrite stood up in the Church and thanked God that he was not like those without. Now he stands on the sidewalk and congratulates himself that he is not like those on the inside. He seems to me to be the same type of man wherever he stands. Really good men and great men live for principles regardless of the persons who agree and disagree. Really good soldiers fight for their convictions regardless of the official personnel under whom they serve. Thank God there are many men who are really good and really great who support the Church regardless of circumstances, but in Jerusalem their number was one hundred and twenty.

I wonder how many men can be found of this calibre in the average city of one hundred thousand inhabitants today. Not many more than one in a thousand. If you were to take this one hundred and twenty men out of our parishes in such a city today the Church would be sore stricken. Christ didn't give us the Church to coddle us. It is true that He said "Come unto Me!" and it is a wonderful invitation, but to these very ones whom He loved dearly He said, "Go ye unto all the world!" There must be those who both welcome the invitation and also accept the command, if the Church is going to be a force among men.

IT IS a curious but significant fact that while incomes have shrunk tremendously, especially large incomes, that the Church is from ten to fifteen per cent off in its offerings. This is quite significant. It means that the bulk of those who have supported the Church in prosperity are supporting it in adversity. The ten or fifteen per cent represents those who cannot give and it also means that enlarged incomes in prosperous times are seldom given to using its surplus for the glory of God.

In all times of our adversity and in all times of prosperity, it is the faithful who support the Church and maintain its benevolence. In short the measure of the Church's strength lies in the body of the faithful who carry on in season and out of season. As one layman expressed it to me, "I want to earn enough each year to make a generous offering for my ideals." In other words he could regard his life as a failure if he couldn't make a contribution to the ideals of the Master.

It is going to be hard to keep up the morale of the Church in the face of present conditions but the martyrs are not all dead and there will be those who put their ideals first and will cut them last, just because they live for their ideals. So who is to blame? Manifestly those who reject the Master's invitation to come and those who having accepted this invitation refuse the request to go.

The measure of the Church's influence must be dependent upon the body of the faithful who both believe in the Master and do His commandments. The man outside too often excuses himself from any service because his neighbor is not all that he should be. The man inside too often excuses himself because he doesn't like the minister or the people, but I do not believe either excuse will be valid in the last analysis.

Just Souls

C. RUSSELL MOODEY

THAT expression "My word" is another victim of psilology. And it is a shame too because there are in the phrase such great possibilities. In days gone by thinking people and serious minded people made it a sort of a pass-word to the portals of their inner self and better self. The expression was not used promiscuously or uttered lightly. When spoken it always caught the reverent attention of those in the group. But now it has fallen from grace and we find it on the lips of most anybody. It serves as a connecting link in silly and sometimes "gossipy" conversation. It sort of begs the muckraker to go on and tell it all. You know what I mean. And then at other times it is used just to fill in to make conversation as we say. People feel they have to say something, for mutual silence sort of embarrasses them.

I have a feeling that the phrase is an abbreviation of "I give you MY WORD of honor." If this is so then we ought to be more careful in our use of this idiom. We ought to put it back in its rightful place and not utter it indiscriminately. Of course if "Our word" doesn't mean anything then let us use the expression and forget the serious significance it entails.

"My Word!" My word is sacred—it is a promise which I must keep. And when I give you my word I make it represent the best that is in me. If I say I'll do a thing I'll do it. Nothing under heaven will stop me from doing it. And if I must surrender everything I own the last thing I will part with is my word which is my honor. The problem isn't a question of physical policies but spiritual integrity. We used to seal our promises with the qualifying statement "the Lord being my helper." We better revive that phrase too if our honor is to be sustained. In other words any promise without Christ in it is nothing more than an empty verbal gesture signifying nothing. From these facts we can infer that the expression "My word" is no shallow exclamation but a pledge backed up by those holy feelings within me. I cannot break my promise and betray Christ!

ST. ALBAN'S SCHOOL

By

HAROLD L. BOWEN

IF YOU are looking for a school which will train your boy for leadership, and because of private attention and the general atmosphere about the institution, instill in him the quality of scholarship and social cooperation which will best fit him for the world, you will make no mistake by coming to St. Alban's. St. Alban's School was founded in Knoxville, Illinois, in the year 1890 by the Rev. Charles W. Leffingwell. In the year 1919 it was moved to Sycamore, Illinois, and re-established in the buildings which had formerly been used by Waterman Hall, a school for girls. The Waterman Hall Buildings are set on the edge of an estate of seventy acres on the outskirts of Sycamore, fifty-eight miles from Chicago, and with the additional improvements which have been made since St. Alban's took possession, they make a splendid center for a boys' school.

While St. Alban's is in many ways like any other good boarding school for boys in that its academic standard is guaranteed through its membership in the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and it has an honorable record in athletics, the regular routine, the churchly atmosphere, the friendly supervision by carefully chosen masters all make for the building up of a stalwart Christian character which cannot always be purchased in the field of education. There are certain features which also distinguish St. Alban's from other schools in the Middle West. For one thing, St. Alban's is a small school and so the Headmaster and his assistants are able to know every boy individually and to plan a program for him which will meet his particular needs. At the beginning of the year a study is made of each new boy's past record accompanied by an intelligence test taken at the School. A careful watch is kept over the boy's program through the year in the classroom, in the dormitory and on the athletic field. This individual attention on the part of the masters means that every boy is given a fair chance to do his best work. This means, too, therefore, that every boy is assured of consistent and real advancement.

IN THE second place the school life is built on the principle that the purpose of the secondary school is to develop leadership and that leadership is developed by responsibility. To this end boys are given a real share in the planning of the work and the life of the School. All of the boys look after their own rooms and have a share in the daily work of keeping the buildings and grounds in order. The older boys help to supervise these jobs and some of the seniors help the masters who are in charge of the dormitories. The Senior Council has a real responsibility not only for the school discipline but for planning the boys' activities. The boys feel that St. Alban's is really their school. They take pride in the appearance of the grounds and buildings and in all that makes for the welfare of the School.

Another distinct feature of the life at St. Alban's is Scouting, which plays an important part in the program of the boys through the first year of High School. Many of the activities of the younger boys in class and out of class center around the scout program. A number of the older boys who have come up from the ranks have a part in the program as troop officers. Two or three over-night hikes are taken in the spring and fall. Boys are encouraged to make progress in their scout work and every month a number of boys earn merit badges for proficiency in various phases of scout work. The scout program provides for boys at St. Alban's a certain amount of military drill, an organization through which loyalty to their country is instilled and a means for all around character development.

CERTAINLY not least in the considerations of St. Alban's is the person of the Headmaster. The Reverend Charles Larabee Street, A.B. Yale, Ph.D. Columbia, is recognized as one of the leaders in the educational centers of the country. He understands boys and the success of the School is largely due to his efforts and through his personality. If you chance to visit the School during the summer or early fall, do not fail to meet him and any other of the masters who make up the faculty of St. Alban's. You will then be even more confident that St. Alban's is the place for your boy.

St. Alban's accepts boys from the fifth grade through high school. The tuition is $720.00 for boys in the grades and $800.00 for boys in high school, which amount is just sufficient to cover the actual cost of the kind of an education a boy receives at St. Alban's. There are, however, certain scholarships given each year which enable the headmaster to accept some boys whose parents cannot afford the full tuition, and there are certain jobs outside of the regular "job system" by which a boy can earn a part of the money to apply on his school account. St. Alban's is an example of a real Christian democracy with all its members working together for the building up of the School and the welfare of the whole group.

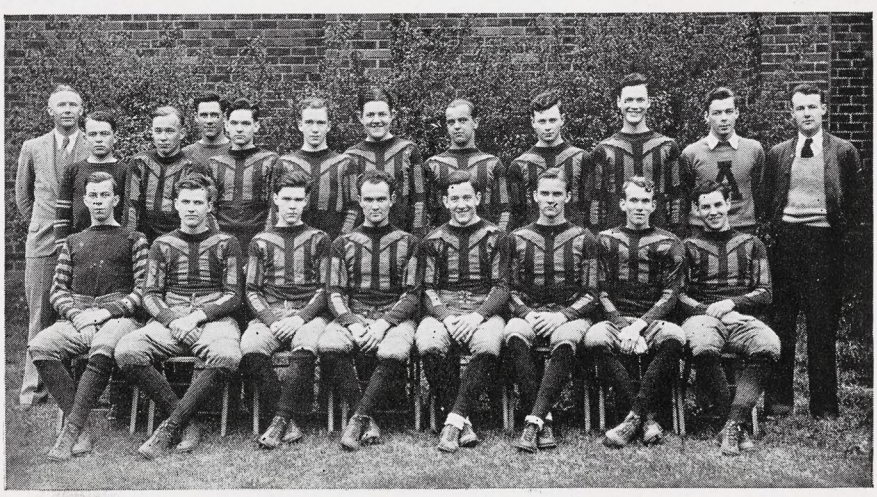
FINE NEW BIBLE COMMENTARY IS JUSTLY PRAISED

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY



For many years there has been a real need for a Commentary on the Bible which was not a theological tome, was not fundamentalist in point of view, and was not expensive. At last such a book has been published by Harper, entitled, The Teacher's Commentary. Planned by Hugh Martin, the very capable editor of the English Student Christian Movement Press, it has for its chief editors Prof. T. H. Robinson of University College, Cardiff, England and Prof. L. W. Grensted of Oxford. As the book first appeared in England most of its writers are English, and the long list includes such familiar names as those of Canon Charles Raven, Dean Selwyn of Winchester and Deaconess Emmet of Durham. The American edition was prepared for the press by Prof. Moffat of The Union Seminary.

The significant feature of the commentary is that it has been prepared with the avowed purpose of aiding teachers of the Bible. It is not in competition with the commentaries prepared by Gore, Peake and others for the use of clergymen and theologians, but is specifically for the layman who desires aid in understanding but has neither time nor interest in detail points. Consequently all the writers are men who have had teaching experience and the books and passages of the Bible most essential in religious education receive the most extended treatment. Thirteen maps and diagrams, twelve illustrations, many bibliographies, a twenty page chronological scheme of dates and a subject index enhance the value of the volume.

The general point of view of the writers is well represented in the article on "Inspiration" by Prof. M'Fayden of Glascow in which he points out that "to approach the Bible with the view that inspiration must involve infallibility or inerrancy, is not reverence but arrogance." The writer then shows clearly why a fundamentalist point of view in this regard is untenable. This is only one of several fine general articles on both Testaments, not the least valuable of which is one by Prof. Paul P. Levertoff on "The Jewish Elementary School in the first century" in which he says all that can be said with certainty of Jewish elementary education in Jesus day.

The Association Press has brought a book of real interest to parents. It is Growing Up with Our Children by W. H. Burger. It is a small book of only seventy pages in which the author summarizes the result of some tests which he gave to 600 boys and girls. With his summary, relying upon the most modern psychological approach, Mr. Burger presents practical suggestions for parents in dealing with their children in connection with the problems which arise in the teen age in the home, in school, in "gangs", in church and in relation to the other sex. A few quotations from his latest findings will be of interest. In his test on the latter subject Dr. Burger found that 77% of boys pet with anyone who is willing and 70% of girls pet in order to "have a good time." He also found that 86% felt they would be better off if they had more information about sex. Four of his ten suggestions on sex to parents are the following:

1. If you have a chance, answer the first question of your child intelligently and unemotionally.

2. Associate with your children in the nude, beginning when they are very young.

3. Be "shock proof" whatever happens.

4. Be sympathetic in attitude toward young persons, even if you can't understand them.

While I am on this subject let me recommend an excellently written little book by Dr. Helena Wright called, "The Sex Factor in Marriage" published by the Vanguard Press. It is especially for those who are married or who are about to be married and deals frankly and soberly with the actual physical side of the marital relationship. It bears an introduction by Dr. A. Herbert Gray and Mr. Abel Gregg. Published first in England it had the good fortune to meet the approval of the authorities at the Port of New York and unlike so many others on this subject the American edition is a copy of the English. Its information and advice will be a blessing to many a young couple.

LOTS IN PRESENT TO ENCOURAGE US

Great crises, which on the surface seemed unmitigated evils, have been recognized by history as blessings, the Right Rev. G. Ashton Oldham Bishop of Albany, said last Sunday in his sermon at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. He said a reading of history should make men "incurable optimists."

"The fall of Jerusalem," he said, "which saved the Christian Church from being a mere Jewish sect and enabled it to become a world-wide religion; the fall of Rome, which at the time seemed an unrelieved catastrophe, but set the Church free from bondage to a pagan state; again, the fall of Constantinople, which Dean Millman tells us shook Europe to its foundations, and which many persons believed meant the end of civilization, proved in retrospect to have been a great blessing inasmuch as it ushered in the great revival of learning we know as the Renaissance.

"These instances should give us courage and hope in the present. God is still directing the affairs of this world. Whatever dire condition may appear now, there can be no doubt that the historians of the future will look back and see manifold blessings that apparently could have come in no other way.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

In the current issue of The Cathedral Age, emanating from Washington Cathedral, there is a story about the Japanese baseball team from St. Paul's University, Tokyo. It seems that the boys visited the cathedral and placed a wreath on the tomb of President Wilson. The writer closes his story by saying: "Several members of the team were Christians, while others were members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew". A justifiable distinction possibly—I really wouldn't know.

Hoboes Pay Tribute To Departed Leader

It hasn't anything to do with the Church but I cannot resist the temptation to pass on an item I picked up the other day. It seemed that hoboes throughout the land paid tribute on the second anniversary of the death of James Eads How, their departed benefactor and leader. How was a Harvard graduate and a physician and also a man of great wealth. But he devoted his life and his money to the hoboes in order that they might receive at least some of the comforts of life. And he lived the life of a hobo himself. I remember a number of years ago attending a conference with him. We were lodged in a rather swanky hotel. But not so, Eads How. He spent the week in a box car on a siding in the freight yard. Not only that, several hoboes spent the week with him and he saw to it that they attended the sessions of the conference too. I never knew the man well enough to be able to say whether or not his live was motivated by Christianity. But I can say that it was a life of unselfish devotion to a much abused class of men. Incidentally it is important that we know how essential the hobo is to our life. He cuts the ice and the lumber in the winter; he harvests the grain in the fall; he picks and cans berries, and does other essential chores. He is not a loafer as we are apt to think but a migratory worker upon whom we all depend. Irwin Tucker, Chicago parson, who once ran a college for these men with Eads How, is constantly making the distinction between a hobo, tramp and bum. The hobo is the migratory worker. The tramp is not a worker at all but a man who moves about from town to town, living as far as possible without work. The bum also is a non-worker but instead of moving about as does the tramp he stays in one town.

Large Numbers at Oxford Houseparty

There were close to 800 in attendance at the houseparty of the Oxford Group Movement held recently at Oxford, England. In case you do not know I should hasten to inform you that the Oxford Group Movement is the English version of what we know as the First Century Christian Fellowship, or the Buchmanites as some persist in calling them. This English party, like the American one held recently, was not only a large affair but also ran over a considerable period of time, and ended with the commissioning of 150 young men and women to "evangelize" England.

Men and women from all parts of the world were there as members of the house party. There were men distinguished in public service, bishops, deans, a provost, admirals, generals, educators, editors, writers, titled English and Dutch, Germans, Swiss, South Africans, Parsees, Australians, Scotch, Irish and Americans. There were women from Mayfair and country places, from universities, social settlements and church organizations. Some arrived in motor cars with coronets on the doors, others pedaled their way on bicycles, and here there was no difference in their rank. Some dressed for tea and dinner, others dressed in the morning for all day. The only prime necessities were a Bible, a notebook and pencil. Each Sunday morning of the ten-day party a communion service was celebrated by a Church of England priest and bishop, with an open communion table.

house party were the Rev. Garret R. Stearly, of Newark, N. J., and Mrs. Stearly; the Rev. J. Herbert Smith, associate rector of Calvary Church, New York, and Mrs. Smith; Mrs. Aymar Johnson, of East Islip; Dr. Irene Gates, of the staff of Roosevelt Hospital; Miss Kathleen Smith, of Englewood, N. J.; Dr. John Jacobs, of the Rockefeller Institute; the Rev. Cleveland Hicks, of New York; Dean Lee Vrooman, of Smyrna College, and William Gilland, of State College, Pennsylvania.

Also present were Aymar Johnson, Thornwell Jacobs, president of Oglethorpe University, and the Rev. D. W. Carruthers, pastor to the students at State College, Pa., with Mrs. Carruthers, and their children. The house party was a strange mixture of race, color and age, the oldest being eighty-four, the youngest six weeks.

Body and Soul Clinic Continues to Stir Things Up

We had thought that we had come to the end of the Body and Soul Clinic business when the rector of St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, the Rev. William Norman Guthrie, said positively that it was not to be carried on longer under the auspices of the parish. But he had figured apparently without Mr. Edward S. Cowles, neurologist, psychiatrist and son-in-law of William Gibbs McAdoo. To him this clinic was an exceedingly precious thing which he did not propose to allow anyone to kill without a fight. So he continues to issue statements accusing the vestry of the parish with all sort of pernicious things; insists that Dr. Guthrie has sold out to them completely, and that in any case behind the whole business is the figure of Bishop Manning, who doesn't like the clinic because it has ministered to Jews and Dr. Manning, says Mr. Cowles, doesn't like Jews and he can prove it. The dead line for the existence of the clinic was set at July 31st. Just what happened on that day, if anything, I do not know at this writing. Perhaps it doesn't matter too much.

Interesting Devices For the Deaf

The Globe Phone Manufacturing Company of Reading, Mass., has brought out an attractive folder describing various devices to install in churches to assist the deaf. It is said that there are now over 2000 churches in this country equipped with hearing aid devices, and that practically all the new churches have installations by concealed wiring. You would find the folder interesting and I am sure the company would be glad to send you a copy.

Bishop Jenkins After Man in the Street

Bishop Jenkins of Nevada, in the address before the convocation of his missionary district, urged an effort to reach the unchurched. He suggested three methods; preaching missions, house to house canvassing, and preaching on street corners, in parks and at holiday resorts. He paid high tribute to the ministry of women in the Church, and especially to the six now engaged in work in Nevada. Earlier in his address Bishop Jenkins related the marks of progress in the district; renewed work and improved plants; work with the isolated; several new buildings; the vacation schools which are filling a need. The convocation was held at Lake Tahoe and was followed by the annual summer school.

Bishop Manning Denies Charges

Oh, Oh . . . here is some more on that Guthrie-Cowles-Manning fracas in New York that has just come in. Mr. Cowles accused Bishop Manning of disapproving of the clinic at St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, New York, because it has ministered to the Jews. Cowles says that the Bishop dislikes Jews and took it out on the clinic for this reason. So Bishop Manning authorized the publication of a telegram which he sent from his summer home in Maine to the editor of the Jewish Daily Bulletin in reply to a letter from the editor asking Bishop Manning to state his attitude. The telegram: "Your letter received. The statements attributed to me are malicious and slanderous and totally untrue. My feeling toward the people of your race is well known and I am proud to count many of them among my best friends. I shall be glad for you to publish this statement." Bishop Manning also sent a telegram to Dr. Guthrie saying that the matter of the clinic was entirely in the hands of the authorities of St. Mark's and that he declined to enter the controversy, "but I fully approve the action (of closing the clinic run by Mr. Cowles) for reasons well known to you and to many of the medical profession". One of the charges made against Bishop Manning was that he would not allow a Jew to speak in an Episcopal Church —rather silly charge since one of the principal speakers at a service held for the suffering Jews of Eastern Europe a number of years ago at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine was Mr. Louis Marshall, prominent New York Jew. But don't think that this fracas over that clinic really amounts to a great deal. It is a typical little scrap in a tiny corner of the great diocese of New York—amusing, which places it on the front pages of the newspapers, but really unimportant.

Santa Barbara Rector Dies Suddenly

The Rev. C. E. Deuel, rector of Trinity Church, Santa Barbara, California, since 1914, died suddenly on July 18th following a heart attack. He had preached the previous day and arose on Monday morning in apparent good health. Dr. Deuel was a native of New York but came west when a comparatively young man, first as a missionary in Wyoming and later as the dean of the cathedral at Boise, Idaho. One of the interesting bits about his life, not generally known probably, is that for thirty years he had not missed an early Sunday celebration of the Holy Communion. When away from his parish and out of reach of a Church service he would improvise an altar on a camp table and with his own communion set, and with his family for a congregation, have the service.

Dr. Fosdick Condemns Our Present Social Order

The present economic order, with its amazing new tools, has been primarily devoted to "the private gain of the few rather than the social welfare of the whole nation," the Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick said in his sermon in Riverside Church, New York, last Sunday.

"We invent "movies" and then let them fall into crass, commercialized, conscienceless hands where they are vilely used," Dr. Fosdick said. "We put our new physics and chemistry at the disposal of war and, using improved means for an unimproved end, make war more terrible than ever in history before. Everywhere we face in modern life a contrast between amazing new instruments for living and the trivial or evil ends for which they are employed."

The basic problem of our civilization, he continued, is not scientific, but moral. We have definitely proved our ability to provide technical means for living, he added, but have shown neither ability nor inclination to make the most of that skill and intelligence.

"Here lies the source of our present economic tragedy," he said. "Business has improved the means by which it works, with such accession of new tools as our fathers could not have dreamed. Yet see in what chaos and despair we now are plunged, so that we face the stark insanity that we starve because we have produced too much food, go unclothed because we produce too much cotton and, in general, suffer want in the midst of plenty.

"Behind the specifically economic explanations of this situation, the basic moral seems clear. Business ought to be the basic social service of all the people, but too little has this social end of business been clearly seen.

"What shall it profit, even business, if it gain the whole world of new techniques and scientific inventions and lose its soul, the moral goal of business, the welfare of all the people?"

Money Making Madness Flayed by Bishop Creighton

Entirely too many figures today in public office and professions are there for selfish reasons, and have no thought for constructive work, the Right Rev. Frank W. Creighton, Bishop of Mexico, said in his serman at St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University.

"There are many, many people in this world," Bishop Creighton said, "millions, perhaps, who have in their heads the idea that our main purpose in life is to make money. These are the makers of wars, for their own interests; the deliberate disturbers of international relations; these are the makers of punitive tariffs, exploiting our innocent women and children—creators of panics and depressions—and God help you if you ever condone anything of the kind.

"We are all born for a purpose, and those of us who are diffident as to our future should make these lives of ours purposeful and useful. The fact that we are born for a purpose makes it imperative for us to find what that purpose is. We have no reason to be leading purposeless, drifting lives."

There is as much harm done by those who through ignorance follow the wrong vocation as by those who deliberately follow their own desires, he said. He cited his own profession, saying many young men and women are attracted by the romance and glamour of missionary work, but soon become tired of the work and small financial return, and find that they have not the true spirit to continue.

"More damage has been done to Christianity and the teaching of the Gospel by unfit people than you will ever realize," he said. "The sense of vocation is not enough. Even a sense of unfitness is a better thing, because it acts as a spur to make us fit ourselves."

Bishop Stewart
Ordains Four

The priest of the Church must be a man who can interpret modern times in the light of eternal truths, particularly with relation to such conditions as exist today, declared the Rev. Gerald G. Moore, rector of the Advent, Chicago, preaching at an ordination service which was held in St. Luke's, Evanston. These three requirements of the priest were listed by the preacher; he must be a man of God; he must be a man who loves his brother with a passion for souls; he must be a man of his time. Those ordained were the Rev. William D. McLean Jr., Rev. Albert E. Taylor, Rev. Henry T. Bakewell and Mr. John Strachan.

Baby Born into a Family of Parsons

A baby boy was baptized at the Church of the Holy Nativity, Forest Park, Baltimore, on July 24th, whose ancestors on both father and mother's side have been Episcopal clergymen for the past hundred years, serving chiefly in the State of Maryland. The baby was baptized James Archibald, Third, the son of the Rev. and Mrs. James A. Mitchell, Jr., the father at present being on the faculty of the Virginia Theological Seminary, but formerly rector of the Church of the Messiah, Baltimore. The grandfather, the first James A. Mitchell, was rector of St. Paul's Church, Centreville, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, for twenty-nine years. The great-grandfather, Richard Barnes Mitchell, served in Southern Maryland throughout his long ministry, and more than a hundred years ago was rector at St. Mary's City, his ancestors being among the early settlers of that region. The baby was baptized by his maternal grandfather, Rev. Hugh White Sheffey Powers, rector of the Church of the Holy Nativity, Baltimore, whose father was William Henry Harrison Powers, rector of Trinity Church, Towson, for thirty-three years. His father in turn, Zebulon Montgomery Pike Powers, was a clergyman in Richmond, entering the ministry from a professorship at the University of Virginia. To add to this clerical heritage there are a number of great-uncles and great-great-uncles. What the baby will become is a question!

Blind Indian Gets Help From Church Society

Howard McKinley may be remembered as the blind Navajo boy of the Good Shepherd Mission, Fort Defiance, Arizona, who graduated with honors from high school two years ago, won the Governor's silver cup for all around excellence, and went off to the University of Mexico. He has now completed his sophomore year and stands high in all his classes. An exceptional boy even without his life-long handicap. He had qualified as an Eagle Scout before he left Fort Defiance, except for learning to swim, which he had no opportunity to do on the Reservation. On finishing college he hopes to return to do Church work among his own people.

Some of his college work has been done through readers but indispensable assistance has been rendered by the transcribing of textbooks into Braille which is done by volunteers working in connection with the Department of Missions' special Committee on Literature for the Blind.

Mrs. W. J. Loaring Clark of Jackson, Tennessee, secretary for this committee, writes of other accomplishments. A blind man somewhere in Australasia who had drifted into

Group of Notable Indians To Visit England

Some mention has been made of the expected visit in England and Ireland of a group of Christian leaders from India. The most definite statement in regard to this comes from the Cambridge Mission to Delhi, as follows:

In the autumn of this year a small band of Indian Christians, led by the Rt. Rev. J. S. C. Bannerji, Assistant Bishop of Lahore, is coming to England on a mission of Christian friendship and fellowship from the Churches in India to the Churches in Great Britain and Ireland. The visit is unique. It is the first practical outcome of the feeling which found expression during the Jerusalem meeting of the International Missionary Council at Easter, 1928, that, in order to make more real the fellowship in the Gospel of East and West, the younger Churches on the mission field should share what they have learned of God in Jesus Christ with the older Churches. The invitation has been given and accepted on the understanding that its aim is wholly spiritual. The Mission, arriving about the middle of September, will visit a dozen centers in Great Britain and Ireland, concluding with a special service in St. Paul's Cathedral on December 12th.

Here Is One for You Prohibitionist

In Michigan, so I am told, they arrested a man the other day for operating a beverage stand without a license. When he appeared in court he proved to the satisfaction of the judge that he sold no soft drinks, requiring a license to dispense; that all of his customers were supplied with the best of beer and rye whiskey. Posterity—Then Prosperity

POSTERITY is more important than prosperity, we hear educators say.

The education of your boy or girl in one of the church schools should not be neglected at this time. It is a matter that cannot be postponed. The crucial year will have passed. Wrong habits will have become fixed. Weak foundations will have been laid. Perhaps the edge of intellectual interest will have become dulled by poor teachers and over-crowded class rooms.

No sacrifice is too great to give your boy or girl the best in private school education.

But the education of posterity has a very direct relation to prosperity. Private schools and colleges are one of our most important industries. Probably ten million dollars a year are spent on private school education in New England alone and another ten million in the Middle Atlantic States.

Wherever there are private schools the country over, these fees go into teachers' salaries, laborers' wages, supplies, new equipment and upkeep. All of this money finds its way readily back into commercial channels to keep the wheels of industry turning.

You, the readers of The Witness, are of the class that have made possible the remarkable high grade private schools. There is no way in which you can perform a greater service to church and country than by insisting that your own boys and girls shall continue to study under the very best educational auspices.

Information about these schools, and the others, all recognized Church Schools, whose notices appear elsewhere in this paper, may be secured from The Witness, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Vol. XVI. No. 51 AUGUST 11, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

THE RECENT SQUABBLE between Japan and China would hardly be called a war by most people; the Japanese in fact never recognized it as one. Yet this comparatively tiny bit of violence well illustrates the futility of war. Chinese authorities now estimate the damage done at Shanghai at one and one-half milliard silver dollars. The number of Chinese citizens killed is estimated at 8,000. Buildings destroyed were worth over 140 million silver dollars and the factories destroyed were worth 68 million silver dollars. Then as a result of the destruction of property 350,000 people have become unemployed. Instruction for the most part has stopped, with 3000 teachers without work. Twelve institutions of higher learning, seventeen secondary schools and 49 elementary schools have been destroyed, with a total loss of 14 million silver dollars. The railroads suffered losses estimated at 17 million silver dollars, while bridges and roads destroyed amounted to about a million and a half silver dollars. Ten million silver dollars worth of damage was done the harbor. Yet there are few citizens of the countries involved who know what the fighting was all about, let alone the peoples of other countries.

READERS OF THIS PAPER are familiar with the School for Seminary Students which has been conducted each summer in Cincinnati by Dr. William S. Keller. Each year this physician, believing that to be a good pastor requires real knowledge of the social sciences and social service work, invites to his city a selected group of students. They spend their time working in the settlements, the hospitals, jails, orphanages and other institutions, thus receiving first hand knowledge of a side of life which they are not brought in contact with through seminary training but which they most surely will run up against once they go out into parishes. A news item in this issue is some indication of the widespread influence of Dr. Keller's self-sacrificing work. In far off China this summer a conference of Church workers is being held. The inspiration, and no doubt also the wisdom to a large degree, behind this conference is the Rev. Robin Chen. And behind Robin Chen is not only the training of the Philadelphia Divinity School but also two inspiring summers at Dr. Keller's school in Cincinnati.

THE MOVE TO CONSOLIDATE the Western Theological Seminary with the Seabury Divinity School will receive the approval of most people, particularly since it will be done apparently without giving up the prized traditions of either institution. Seabury has had a great history, linked with the pioneer days of the northwest and the lives of some of our greatest missionaries. Yet there can be no question but that we are preparing clergymen at tremendous costs due to small enrollments coupled with big overheads. A first rate seminary in Chicago, as Seabury-Western most certainly will be, will give the Church a centrally located seminary in the middle west where men can receive the best of training at a reasonable cost to themselves and to the Church. Conditions which required our scattered seminaries have been largely removed by rapid transportation and the end of provincialism. It is encouraging to learn that the authorities in these two seminaries recognize the change and are eager to act accordingly.

IN YEARS PAST we have operated a fund called THE WITNESS Fund. Into this Fund went the donations of subscribers who were kind enough to send in a bit of extra money with their own subscription renewal. It was then drawn upon to help pay for the subscriptions of others who desiring the paper were nevertheless unable to bear the cost of it. We want to revive this Fund and we hope that it may be a healthy revival. There is not a day that letters are not received from Church people who have taken THE WITNESS ever since the paper was started informing us that because of unemployment or some condition which they cannot control, it is necessary for them to discontinue the paper. We do not want to lose these old friends. Yet it is quite impossible for the paper itself to carry them. We therefore appeal to you, our readers. A dollar or two will enable us to inform these people that they are to continue to receive the paper for another year as a gift from you. We plead with you earnestly to do what you can. As in previous years we will acknowledge gifts from time to time under the heading of THE WITNESS FUND.

AMERICAN LIFE at its worst and also in some of its better aspects is faithfully reflected in articles constantly appearing in the Arabic newspapers and magazines of Cairo. The penetration of Egypt with American business and American films in post-war years, added to the influence of missionaries and tourists in earlier years, has made America a treasure house of news-interest for the native press. Dr. E. E. Elder of Cairo, in The Moslem World, has listed a number of subjects recently written up in Cairo papers. Among the subjects are Pola Negri, Colonel House, Al Capone and Admiral Byrd. A leading article by a Moselm editor mentions that a group of "red American Indians" have embraced Islam. A full-page illustration in another paper, showing a lynching, has for its title, "This is the way negroes are treated in America." But on the whole, Dr. Elder says, the Arabic papers are fair in their mirroring of American thought. The influence of American life is far out of proportion to the small number of Americans resident in Egypt.

KEEP YOUR HEAD DOWN

BISHOP JOHNSON

WHEN you go to an instructor to learn how to play golf, you will be repeatedly told to keep your head down. Somehow human curiosity is always anxious to look up in order to see the result of a play rather than to keep an eye on the ball until one has completed his shot. Then lift up your head if you want to because you have done your best.

One is reminded of the passage of Holy Scripture when after our Lord's ascension into Heaven, the apostles were looking up to see what would happen next. They were rebuked by the Angelic Messenger, who said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into Heaven?"

The Lord's work on earth had been completed and now the labors of the apostles were to begin. They were to keep their feet on the ground and their eyes upon the task before them. Gazing into Heaven would not help them when such gazing took the place of the unpleasant tasks that lay before them. We are reminded of the incidents connected with the Transfiguration on the Mount. St. Peter and his companions were so overcome emotionally by the vision which they saw that they were content to feast upon the scene. Let us build tabernacles and live here in this atmosphere of emotional ecstasy. That was a very human reaction but we must remember that it was premature.

There was the episode of the epileptic child when they descended from the mount. They had not yet entered into their reward. They had merely seen a picture of the joys that awaited them.

Before they could enter into these joys, they must keep their head down and be cognizant that they had a duty to perform to an epileptic world. If ultimately we are to lift up our hearts, we must be willing to keep our heads down until we have completed our task.

BUT it seems to me that the intellectuals need this advice as much as those whose emotions are easily stirred. I read a great many articles in some of our religious journals which pride themselves on their academic exaltation. It is curious but true that those who despise one another are apt to have the same fault themselves that they discern in others. Possibly the reason that they are such apt critics is because they are so familiar with the error which they are anxious to correct in others.

The academic mind has a persistent tendency to lift their heads and in doing so they are apt to miss the mark. In their anxiety to be scientific they are apt to take their eye off the ball and so foozle their approach.

As much as we hold learning in reverence, one would scarcely recommend that we entrust the affairs of Congress to professors of political science or experts in psychiatry. One feels sure that in any emergency they would fail to keep their head down.

You cannot cure the diseases of the slums by turning loose a group of students into the district. They would eventually have to call in the plumber and the baker and the pastor to solve those problems of human relations which refuse to react to the yardstick and the laboratory. Our Lord began His labors by calling in ordinary men to do the work. It is true that He did call an expert in St. Paul to complete the process, but St. Paul was an artizan as well as a psychiatrist.

THE Church labors under a disadvantage because it steadfastly inclines to believe that human equations can be solved in terms either of emotional ecstasy or those of academic analysis. Somebody has to do the hard work in an epileptic world and in doing this one must keep his head down.

Another human tendency especially noted in ecclesiastics is that of egotism. I would define an egotist in this connection as one whose first impulse was always to hold his head up and to impress his auditors that "We are the people, and wisdom will die with us."

I do not know of anything more tragic than the religious leader who puts the ego where he ought to put God. They seem to do great things and to gather large congregations, but when they are gone, their building is in ruins. Instead of worshipping God and working for man, they make the fatal mistake of worshipping man and working for God. When one hears an ecclesiastic telling what he has done or what he could have done if he had had the chance, one feels like calling out, "Keep your head down," for humility is the only basis upon which the Nazarene is willing to build His Church. The more credit you take to yourself, the less you are doing the Master's will.

If our chief motive is to be seen and applauded by men then we will fail to reach our goal and will have no rewards for our efforts. In short whatever we begin to do, let us keep our head down at the beginning if we are to expect any glory at the end of our play. The emotionalist approaches religion to satisfy his emotions; The rationalist to satisfy his opinions; the egotist to gratify his vanity; all we can say to each is "Keep your head down." "Lift up your hearts" all you want to but keep your eye on the task that Christ holds you responsible for, whether it be little or big.

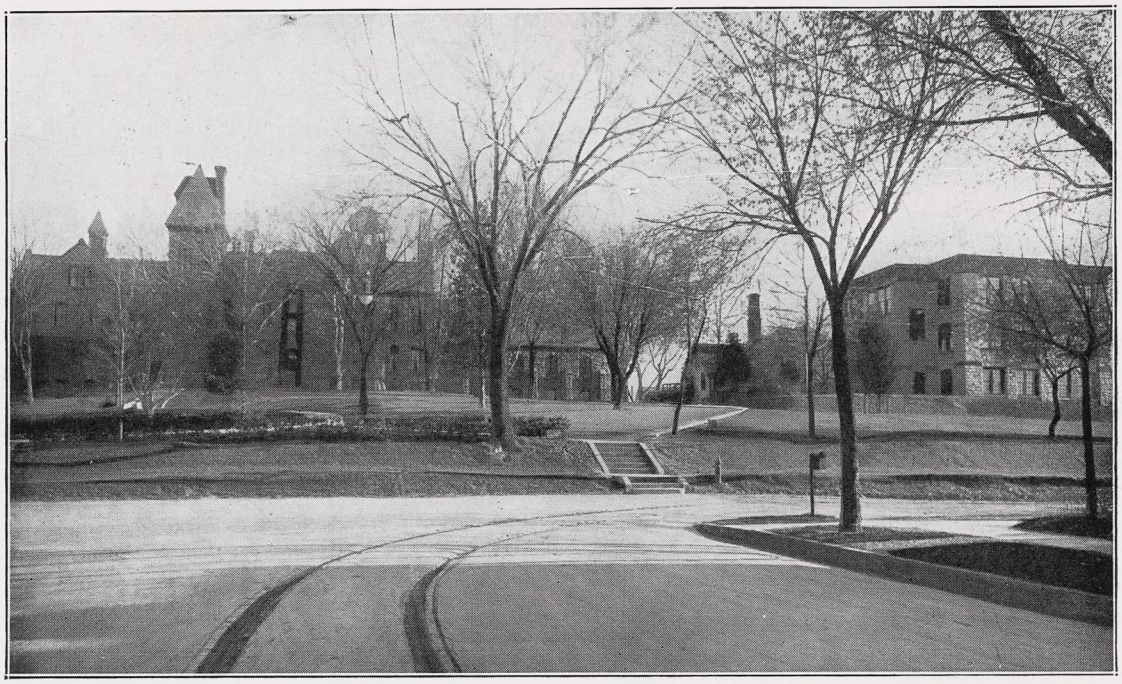
The Art of Stained Glass

By

ELEANOR H. WILSON

IT IS a pleasure to chronicle the achievements of a woman, Anne Lee Willet of Philadelphia, in the field of stained glass. The Willet Studio was established by William Willet and his wife, partner and coworker thirty years ago. Eleven years ago Mr. Willet died at the heighth of his career, and Mrs. Willet carried on the tradition of his work. The art of stained glass was at a low ebb when Mr. and Mrs. Willet began their work,—a narrow Puritanism had deadened all effort toward ecclesiastical beauty, and numerous commercial glass firms in Europe and America had flooded the churches with an inferior "art" glass lacking entirely in the spiritual beauty possessed by mediaeval glass. "From my childhood", says Mrs. Willet, who before her marriage was a portrait painter, "my father, a Presbyterian minister, inspired me with the idea that the artist instinct which had been ours for generations should be dedicated to bringing beauty back to the churches."

Since 1900 there has been a decided impetus in the building of churches by all religious denominations, the architectural style applied to ecclesiastical and collegiate buildings alike being Gothic, and stained glass developed along with and as a part of Gothic architecture. The Willets were pioneers in the return to mediaeval methods in the making of windows. Twenty-three years ago Dr. Ralph Adams Cram, authority on church art, wrote of the medallion chancel window designed and executed by the Willets for Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, as "unquestionably one of the most notable examples of the revival of the fundamental principles of the art of stained glass as they were understood in France at the highest point in the development of mediaeval art."



Their best known work is in the West Point Chapel,—the Great Sanctuary Window aisle and clerestory windows and the World War Memorial window of the front facade, the latter installed in 1923. It is based on St. John's revelation, vouchsafed to him on the Isle of Patmos for the comfort of the early Christians in the midst of persecution and war. The central theme of the window is the victory of Christ over sin and death. Here, as in the chancel window, the Academy motto, "Duty, Honor, Country" appears.

The Thorndike Hilton Memorial Chapel, a gift to the Chicago Theological Seminary from the parents in memory of the young man whose name it bears is intended primarily for those who require quiet and beautiful for private thought and prayer, easily accessible from the busy street. The crowning glory of this chapel are the windows designed and executed by Mrs. Willet. Recently as I entered, the sanctuary window enriched by the morning sun glowed with jewel like radiance. There runs through it the melody of young manhood's ideals and achievements, consistent with the purpose of the chapel itself. The three lancets contain three medallions in each of which biblical characters are portrayed,—the one of David and Jonathan is particularly striking. In the upper left medallion, the Return from Calvary, the three crosses are outlined against the sky; John is supporting Mary as they wend their way homeward. Mary's robe has caught on a thorn and the little angel is releasing it. This is characteristic of the quaint details often introduced into their work by the artists of the Middle Ages. Looking back as I left the chapel my eye was caught and held by the tiny luminous figure of The Three Kings at the base of the center lancet, gazing expectantly at the star which they are following toward an unknown goal.

Mrs. Willet says: "The stained glass artist does literally paint with light. How dead is the finest architecture without the glory of vibrant light, beautified, controlled and distributed by color and how essential that he bear in mind always that he is working with two media: light and glass which holds in its own atoms the colors of the rainbow". In this poem dedicated to Hilton Memorial Chapel John Davidson well expresses her thought of "pictured light".

"Love built this shrine, these hallowed walls uprose
To give seclusion from the hurrying throng,
From tumult of the street, complaint and wrong,
From rivalry and strife, from taunt of foes,—
If foes thou hast. On silent feet come in,
Bow low in penitence. Whoe'er thou art
Thou, too, hast sinned. Uplift in prayer thy heart, Thy Father's blessing waiteth. Read within
This holy place, in pictured light portrayed,
The characters of worthies who, from years
Long past, still speak the message here displayed
In universal language not to fade.
Leave them thy burden, all thy cares and fears;
Faith, hope and love are thine, for thou hast prayed."

VIEW OF GROUNDS AT ALL SAINTS SCHOOL

ALL SAINTS SCHOOL, SIOUX FALLS

By MARY B. PEABODY

FORTY-NINE years ago Bishop Hare was the Missionary Bishop of Niobrara, the name given to the field in which lived the Dakota or Sioux Indian tribes,—people at that time largely uncivilized and unchistianized. In October, 1883, the House of Bishops enlarged his jurisdiction to include all of what is now the state of South Dakota. The bishop's mind turned at once to what the change might mean for the isolated missionaries at work on the nine Indian reservations in his district. One thing that would lift a burden of anxiety from their shoulders he realized could now be done. "I can provide a place which shall be both a home and a school where their children can live and be educated in Christian surroundings among people of their own race"—so his thoughts ran.

He looked over the whole territory for a location and chose Sioux Falls as the place giving greatest promise of becoming an industrial and trade center and therefore the place where cultural advantages would be most abundant. A building to house both home and school was the problem put up to the architect. The building was to be constructed of the handsome, durable Sioux Falls quartzite. It was to be as beautiful and homelike as its purpose and the funds available would allow. An essential and dominating feature was to be a chapel, for which one of the earliest gifts toward the enterprize had been made—a memorial to her mother given by Miss Mary Coles of Philadelphia. Mrs. John Jacob Astor, who had been interested in Bishop Hare's work for years, gave the first $1000, "to lay the foundation of your girl's school," she told the bishop. Many other eastern friends came to Bishop Hare's assistance. Sioux Falls contributed $10,000 in money and land. It was possible to lay the corner stone in 1884 and to open the building to receive its first students in September, 1885.

AS PRINCIPAL Bishop Hare chose one who knew by experience the privations, discipline and joys of missionary life,—Miss Helen S. Peabody, daughter of a pioneer missionary in northern Wisconsin. Associated with her was her elder sister Sarah. Miss Helen remained as the beloved head of the school for thirty-six years. She shared whole-heartedly Bishop Hare's desire that the life of the school should be that of a Christian family rather than that of an institution. There never was that marked separation between teachers and pupils which so commonly exists. In selecting members of the faculty, not alone character and thorough training, but the ability and inclination to live in an elder-sisterly relation with the younger members of the household was considered. The result has been the imparting of ideals of conduct and attainment, held perhaps unconsciously, until the problems and stress of life call them into play.

Among the first boarders in the school—they had a dormitory on the third floor where Bishop Hare's bedroom and study were located—were the two little sons of the Rev. Henry Swift, missionary on the Cheyenne reservation; the eldest daughter of the Rev. W. J. Cleveland, missionary on the Rosebud reservation; the young son of the Rev. W. W. Fowler, missionary on the Santee reservation; two sons and two daughters of the Rev. J. M. McBride, missionary at Pierre. Very soon the demand for room for girls excluded boys from the boarding department; but through all the forty-seven years of its life, the daughters of clergy of South Dakota and neighboring states have received their secondary education within the walls of All Saints School. So, too, have hundreds of fatherless or motherless girls.

Within five years the original building was too small for the growing number of pupils. It has been enlarged three times. At intervals four additional buildings have been erected: a music studio and class rooms; the Dexter Memorial, containing an infirmary, rest room and sleeping rooms; the Bishop Hare Memorial, containing a gymnasium and class room; a central heating plant. All the buildings are connected by lighted under-ground passages, so that on stormy days and in bitter winter weather one can pass comfortably from building to building.

THE HEALTH of the pupils has always had careful attention. Wholesome food, sufficient sleep, plenty of play and exercise in the open air are matters of course. Perhaps the large rest room in Dexter House where girls "under the weather" can be quiet, has been largely responsible for the fact that there have been few cases of serious illness and no deaths among the boarding students in all the years of the school's existence.

As for scholarship, All Saints is a fully accredited member of the Northcentral Association of Schools and Colleges. Its graduates enter these institutions on the basis of their school credits and generally make good records, some of them Phi Beta Kappa. What degree should be given to one who passed from the primary grades to graduation and is now the wife of a bishop, a member of the board of the Woman's Auxiliary and of one of the departments of the National Council, let schoolmen decide!

The impress of All Saints School upon its students and faculty members has been deep and abiding, an impress which bears its most abundant fruit, probably, when as wives and mothers former students find themselves responsible for guiding young lives. "How would Dr. Peabody deal with a case like this?" is a question many a young mother has put to herself, and found a good solution in the answer of her memory.

Undoubtedly the person who had the deepest influence on those who were in All Saints during the last twenty years of his life was Bishop Hare. His gentleness and strength, his ingrained refinement and keen sense of humor, his courageous bearing of intense pain, his understanding heart and considerate tactfulness made him deeply revered and loved and gave those associated with him an ideal of Christian character never to be lost. In his simple talks in the chapel he emphasized the fundamentals of religion and ethics, not as abstractions but as the basis of satisfying life in home, school, play ground and work room. The chapel became a dear and sacred place which diffused its atmosphere into every part of the home. Through its open doors the altar with its shining cross and the beautiful Good Shepherd windows above them silently speak their deathless message to the girls passing to and from classes, play and recreation. A gift of flowers in memory of her mother from a recent graduate was accompanied by a note which said, "There is no place on earth dearer to me than the chapel of All Saints School."

More intimate and personal than his chapel addresses was the talk Bishop Hare gave when the seniors were his guests at an afternoon tea. It had a sacramental character for those who were privileged to be present. The tangible thing they took away was the cup and saucer they had used: the intangible but more treasured thing was the bishop's fatherly advice and counsel hidden in their hearts.

Such is the heritage of All Saints School. Though time inevitably brings change in personnel, curriculum and methods, the fundamental ideal of a Christian home combined with a thoroughly up-to-date school remains. That ideal those responsible for the school today intend to hold fast.

Let's Know

By

BISHOP WILSON

Our Name

ONE of our readers raises a question which keeps cropping up about every so often. Apparently more and more of our Church people are wondering about it. The question is—where did the official name of our Church originate and why do we retain it?

To get at the origin one must go back to the Revolutionary War and to the foresightedness of the Rev. Dr. William Smith, a priest of Maryland at that time. Up to that time the Church had been known as the Church of England in the colonies and Dr. Smith realized that when hostilities terminated there would be complications regarding the property rights of the Church in Maryland. Therefore, as early as 1780 he called a conference of a few clergy and laymen at Chestertown who prepared a "Petition to the General Assembly of Maryland for the Support of Public Religion." The petition asked that an act might be passed empowering vestries to raise money for the upkeep of Church property. It was necessary to append some name to the Church making the request and of course the old name was out of the question. It was moved, seconded, and carried that "the Church of England, as heretofore so known in the province, be now called the Protestant Episcopal Church." Three years later, at the conclusion of the War, another meeting of Maryland Churchmen was called who drew up a "Declaration of Certain Fundamental Rights and Liberties," in which they set forth the identity of the Protestant Episcopal Church with the Church of England as it had formerly been in the colony and asserted its title to the property previously held by the Church. The Declaration was sent to the Governor and received approval. This was a great help to the Church in all the newly constituted states because it set a legal precedent regarding property rights.

We know nothing of the particular considerations which led to the selection of this title. No doubt the "Episcopal" part of it was to differentiate the Church from the Puritan groups which were Presbyterian in polity and the "Protestant" part of it was to distinguish the Church from the Roman Catholics who had originally settled the Maryland colony.

When the preliminary General Convention met in 1785, bringing together delegates from all the states, this was the only title known in law and was automatically written into their documents. The Convention of 1789 which adopted the Constitution had no other precedent to follow and no other name was in the field. "Protestant Episcopal Church" was therefore written into the Constitution and there it has remained ever since. During the Civil War when the southern dioceses temporarily set up a distinct organization of their own, it was seriously proposed that "Reformed Catholic Church" should be the title. But the feeling prevailed that it would be safer to stay as close as possible to the old Church in the North and the southern Church was thereupon called the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Confederate States of America, which disbanded when the Civil War was over.

It is felt by many Churchmen that however descriptive the present name might have been in Revolutionary days, the course of events since that time has made it a misnomer and it ought to be changed. Conservative sentiment is, however, always fearful of changes and nobody considers it of sufficient importance to create an issue out of it. Some day a change will naturally come.

LIFE STORY OF A MODERN SAINT, REV. C. F. ANDREWS

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

All who have been fortunate enough to hear Dr. C. F. Andrews—or "Christian Father Andrews" as some of his best friends have called him—on any of his recent trips to America will rejoice in the appearance of his autobiography, What I Owe to Christ, which has just been published by The Abingdon Press ($1.50). Some thirty years ago Dr. Andrews went out to India as a Missionary of the Church of England and because of the absolute purity, and sincerity, simplicity and beauty of his life has become one of the most influential Christians in India today. While he does not wear "Gandhi pants" and live on goat's milk and dates, nevertheless he more nearly approximates the example of St. Francis in the twentieth century than anyone I know. The jacket of the book in no wise exaggerates when it calls the autobiography "an impressive human document." The quality of Dr. Andrews' spirit bears no better testimony than the fact that he is probably the best Anglo-Saxon friend of the poet Tagore and one of the most intimate friends of Gandhi.

Three aspects of C. F. Andrews' career make it interesting even to those who have never heard of him before. First, the autobiography tells of the deep personal experience of the living Christ which came to him with unmistakable vividness as a college student and has enabled him to "endure as seeing him who is invisible." Secondly, his work along Christian lines to improve relations between different races in India, Africa and the Fiji Islands is an amazing story. Thirdly, the influence that deep spiritual personalities have had upon his life, notably, Kagawa, Albert Schweitzer, Sundar Singh, Tagore and Gandhi. A further interest in the book for those who are Anglicans lies in his story of how he was gradually forced by his conscience to leave the parish ministry because of his inability to repeat the so-called damnatory clauses of the Athanasian Creed in the presence of the almost Christ-like lives of some of his Buddhist and Hindu friends.

A brief review cannot even attempt to give the outline of the chief events of his life, far less of its deeply spiritual nature. His conversion was the starting point of his career. His description of it is too long to quote, but an example of the kind of reaffirmation of it which he has had is worth quoting: "It was just then, in an hour of utter heart weariness and exhaustion, that there came to me a light and a vision that left behind an ineffacable memory and changed once more the whole tenor of my life. I saw no outward form, but I was conscious of an over-shadowing Presence and an ineffable peace, as though the Everlasting Arms were upholding me and I was utterly at rest. The radiance was inward, not outward, and it flooded my whole being. It came upon me, suddenly, unawares, just as in the former instance of my own conversion. . . . The joy that accompanied this assurance was overflowing and it remained with me almost undimmed for many months after the occurrence, flooding my whole being with gladness."

Surely there is not a Christian today who has not wrestled with the problem of how literally Jesus himself would want us to take "The Imitation of Christ" today. The author tells of three consecrated Christians, Samuel Stokes, Sundar Singh and Brother Western, who bound themselves in an order called the Brotherhood of the Imitation of Jesus. They were to live like the Franciscan "Little Brothers of the Poor." The order was later abandoned, however, when the leader Stokes "discovered more and more certainly each year that they (the natives of India) were mistaking altogether the true motive of his Christian service, regarding it as self-seeking with a view to his own spiritual advancement. So serious was the misunderstanding that his Christian witness was in danger of being given to no purpose and even of leading to wrong impressions."

While Dr. Andrews' story is singularly interesting in the many practical aspects of religion upon which it touches, the charming way in which the author's mysticism is revealed in every chapter gives his life experience an unusual vividness.

FAMOUS BRITISH AUTHOR TO LECTURE HERE

The Rev. W. G. Peck, rector at Manchester, England, whose "The Divine Society" has been read widely on this side of the Atlantic, is to deliver the Hale Lectures next year at the Western Theological Seminary. His subject is to be the "Social Significance of the Oxford Movement." Readers of The Witness will possibly recall a brilliant article by Dr. Peck in the series on "The Christian Way Out" which appeared here this past Lenten Season. Incidentally that series will soon be in book form.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

During the past couple of weeks we have been sending letters to clergymen asking them to nominate some person for recognition here for their meritorious service to the Church — not necessarily some mighty deed done in the name of the Lord, but rather a faithfulness and perseverance the relating of which will inspire others. After all it is upon the foundation of such souls that the Church is built and we would like to seek these people out in order that all might know of them. And we would like to start out by telling you a bit about Mrs. Robert Smallwood Middleton, a rosy-cheeked, bright-eyes woman of seventy-four who lives in Vienna, Georgia. In Vienna there is a little church on the corner, unfamed and unsung, and yet because of this one woman this Church of the Prince of Peace has a history as unique and as thrilling in many ways as is the story of St. John the Divine in New York, or the justly famous little Church Around the Corner. There are no marble spires here nor rich tapestries. But it does have this great distinction. It claims a one hundred percent attendance for a period of ten years. Each Sunday services are held, the organ played, the hymns sung and the collections taken with a one hundred percent attendance. And that one hundred percent consisted of Mrs. Robert Smallwood Middleton, the sole communicant of the mission. And with equal faithfulness has she been ministered to by the Rev. J. B. Lawrence, rector at Americus, Georgia. There is no vested choir, no feverish bustling about with multitudinous departments vieing with each other; no barbecue dinners or picnics. Just "two or three gathered together in My name" and in this case it is two not three. But the work goes on. Mrs. Middleton, postmistress of the village for the past twenty-five years, takes care of the property, solicits funds for improvements and takes care of all the details. A good share of the necessary funds she gives herself — from the sale of pecans which she raises. So when you turn to your Living Church Annual and see, in the list of parishes and missions, this; "Vienna, Prince of Peace (1)" just remember that the (1) stands for Mrs. Robert Smallwod Middleton whose faithfulness, while unsung, will surely be rewarded.

Dr. Suter Is New Prayer Book Custodian

Succeeding the late Lucien Moore Robinson, whose death occurred on March 13, the Rev. Dr. John Wallace Suter of Boston has been appointed Custodian of the Standard Prayer Book. The appointment is made by the Presiding Bishop, acting under the provision of Canon 44, section VI, which orders that a vacancy occurring in the office during the recess of General Convention shall be filled in that manner. The Canon further defines the Custodian's duties. The appointment was made in view of Dr. Suter's long and active connection with the Commission on the Revision and Enrichment of the Book of Common Prayer and the leading part he took in guiding the deliberations of the General Convention to the adoption of the revised Book.

Dr. Suter was rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Winchester, Mass., from his ordination in 1885 until 1912, since when he has been rector honorarius of that parish.

Mission Workers of Alaska Are Married

A wedding of interest to the Church generally took place at Fort Yukon, Alaska, on July 24th, when Bishop Bentley, youthful suffragan bishop, united in marriage two of his missionaries, Miss Lucy Ogden Cornell, nurse at the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital and the Rev. Merrit P. Williams, for the past three years in charge of St. Stephen's Mission. The bride and groom are now on their way to the states for a furlough of a year after which they plan to return to Alaska for another five years' service under the bishops of Alaska. Miss Cornell is the daughter of the executive secretary of the diocese of Florida, Mrs. William P. Cornell. Mr. Williams is from St. Louis and is a graduate of the General.

Clergyman's Wife Runs For Office in California

Mrs. C. Rankin Barnes, wife of the executive secretary of the social service department of the National Council, is a candidate for a political office in Los Angeles. The newspapers there are giving her a great play-up, for her exploits as a leader in the Women's Air Reserve Corp quite as much as for her political ambitions.

Need Better Christians Not More

Preaching at St. John', Far Rockaway, Long Island, the Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, rector of St. Thomas', New York, said that the Church needs better Christians rather than more. If those who are already Church members lived more closely to the teachings of their faith the world could be transformed. Dr. Brooks was a candidate for Orders from the diocese of Long Island and spent the early years of his ministry as a curate at the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn.

Hiking Is a Problem in England

Parsons in England are agitated over hiking. It seems that people in increasing numbers over there are now putting on their oldest clothes on a Sunday and hitting out for a walk in the country. Most of them, it seems, do not bother to go to church first with the result that there has been a marked falling off in church attendance. Some of the clergy are all for encouraging the hikers to attend church en route. Others, sticklers for the proper, feel that people should not be encouraged to attend church in anything but their best clothes.

Bishop Gailor Has An Anniversary

Bishop Thomas F. Gailor of Tennessee recently celebrated the 39th anniversary of his consecration. The Chattanooga News in a leading editorial pays a real tribute to him. After first stating that they have always been on the other side of the fence from the Bishop on the question of prohibition, with the Bishop "strongly against", the paper concludes by saying:

"Just the same, if a vote were taken to choose the first citizen of Tennessee, undoubtedly Bishop Gailor would receive a splendid tribute.

"He lends dignity to high place, and yet he is a warm-hearted, impulsive, neighborly gentleman. He might be called a cosmopolitan provincial—a man who can mingle with the other great of the Earth and yet not lose that native Southern wit and charm and friendliness which makes the best of the Southerners a sort of Lord of Creation.

"Tennessee is inordinately proud of him; not because he has held high place in the Protestant Episcopal Church, but because he is Thomas F. Gailor."

Long Island Plans Teacher Training Courses

Training classes for Church School Teachers in southern Queens County, Long Island, were arranged for at a meeting of several of the clergy of this district, held at Jamaica on July 28th. The project should be of general interest, since it not only provides for the instruction of the teachers, and a wider fellowship and sense of unity among the various parishes, but also accomplishes this at no expense. Beginning Sept. 22nd, the group will meet once a week for ten weeks. Each night six courses will be offered: simultaneously during the first hour, Creative Teaching, Church School Administration, and Religious Drama; during the second hour, The Prayer Book, The Modern Interpretation of Old Testament Stories, and The Life of Christ. Between classes devotions will be held, and after the last class a social period with refreshments. The courses will be taught by local clergymen and competent lay workers, who will give their services, while the entire plan is under the supervision of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. The fee for attendance will be twenty-five cents a person for the ten weeks. Eight parishes and missions have already joined the group, and more are confidently expected to come in.

Progress Made On Seminary Consolidation

Progress is being made in the effort to unite the Western Theological Seminary and Seabury Divinity School, about which we gave you a bit of information in our issue of July 21st. The boards of trustees of the two institutions have considered the plan favorably and it remains for a joint committee to work out final arrangements for the consolidation. The combined institutions would be known as Seabury-

Western Theological Seminary and would occupy the plant of Western at Evanston, Illinois. Seabury was founded seventy-four years ago by the Rev. James L. Breck, pioneer missionary of the Northwest, and was one of a number of Church institutions which he founded at Faribault. It was named, as you of course know, after Bishop Samuel Seabury, the first American Bishop (and I will refrain this time from typing his name up with Judge Seabury of New York, which has come to be the accepted practice). Western was founded in 1883 by the late Tolman Wheeler and the guiding spirit for many years was the late Dean William C. DeWitt, known to every seminary student for his book "Decently and in Order". In 1923 steps were taken to accept the joint invitation from Northwestern University and the Garrett Biblical Institute in Evanston to move from Chicago to Evanston, thus giving the seminary the privileges of the two institutions. This was eventually effected, the first buildings of a million dollar plan were erected, the Very Rev. Frederick C. Grant was called as president and dean and the school has had prosperous days ever since.

Great Swatting Campaign Put on in China

Among the forlorn hopes and lost causes of the world, a Swat-the-Fly Campaign in a Chinese city would seem as hopeless as any, but one has been carried out in great style in Wuhu, organized by the local Y.M.C.A. Children all over the city could be seen pursuing their prey. In three weeks two million dead flies were turned in to the official counter, and after being counted were burned. The children were paid one copper per fifty flies. Two years ago a similar campaign netted a mere 300,000 flies. Such is the progress of health education.

The purpose of this "movement" was partly health education and partly the urgent need of checking cholera. "At present there is a great deal of cholera in Wuhu," says the Anking Newsletter, "and many deaths from it. We have all had cholera innoculations. Northeast, about fifty miles from here, there are roads under construction,

Summer Conference in China

For the past two summers one of the students at the summer school for seminary students in Cincinnati, guided, directed and financed too I guess by Dr. William S. Keller, Cincinnati layman, was the Rev. Robin Chen, young Chinese priest studying in this country. There he absorbed all sorts of social service ideas and ideals as he worked under Dr. Keller's direction in the various social service agencies of a great American city. The experience he received there is bearing fruit this summer in a conference on the subjects of social service and religious education which is being held in Wuhu, China, for a period of ten days. Largely due to Mr. Chen's efforts Church workers for the first time are gathering for a real conference on such subjects as cooperatives, public health, mental hygiene, psychology, preaching and practical social service activities of all sorts.

Everything Is Lovely in Mongolia It Seems

Incredible as it may seem, there is at least one missionary in China who reports as to conditions in his field. "We have been absolutely quiet and peaceful." This is the Rev. F. J. Griffith, an Englishman in charge of work among the Mongols in the far northwest. "The terrible events which have taken place in other parts of China," he says, "have had no effect at all upon us up here in the north-west frontier of China, on the borderland of Mongolia."

Through the winter, the work of this Mongol mission is carried on at the base, in the city of Tatung. In the summer, Mr. Griffith goes out to visit the Mongol villages and encampments to the west. A few years ago when this mission was being planned and just about to start, various things occurred to prevent it and Mr. Griffith was assigned to other work as it seemed that an opening could not be found among the Mongols. Then there was a great famine and for the first time the authorities allotted some 200 tons of millet grain for relief of the Mongolians, provided it could be distributed by the missionaries. Mr. Griffith took on the responsibility, and had a 27-day tour through the very country he had been patiently waiting to enter as an evangelist. He was most hospitably welcomed by Mongol officials, the result being a wide-open door for him when he was able to return.

Except Bishop Norris, Mr. Griffith is senior missionary in the diocese of North China, having gone to China in 1894.

The heathen in his blindness can sometimes point a moral to Christians who have eyes to see. Almost every little Mongolian settlement of a few tents or huts has its own priest of Lamaism. A room in the principal compound is fitted as an oratory and there the priest offers daily prayers. The underlying idea and the attitude toward what they know as religion is superior to the indifference of many nominal Christians, even though the religion itself is devil-worship founded on fear and ignorance and without moral power or effect.

Twenty-nine dioceses and missionary districts were represented and the group from the Episcopal Church comprised over 50 per cent of the total attendance at the leadership school. Church extension, as applied to the small town and country life, rural religious education, rural sociology and aids to rural work through the established agencies of the Church were the principal emphases of the group conferences. The courses offered by the university consisted of psychology of community life, co-operative marketing, personality and social adjustment, social welfare from the standpoint of rural community life, agricultural economics, public speaking and the theory and practice of rural recreation.

Vacation Back Home In England

The Rev. Herbert Scott-Smith, vicar at Bainbridge, Georgia, sailed on July 23 to spend his vacation with relatives in England. Lots of item come in to this office about clergymen sailing for a six weeks or two months' vacation abroad. It would be interesting to know just how many do spend their summers on the other side of the Atlantic but I don't suppose there is any way to find out. A year ago I might have taken a crack at the leisurely life of the clergy, depression or no depression, but having fallen myself last year I am for ever hamstrung . . . . the old mess of pottage gets us all eventually, what? Oh well people deserve vacations . . . all of them . . . so do not begrudge the parson his trip abroad if he is fortunate enough to have the cash for his fare.

These Church Schools are recognized as official schools of the Episcopal Church. Among the chief characteristics of these Schools are the following:

1. Founded by Churchmen with a religious purpose they remain loyal to their heritage.

2. They devote themselves to the secondary education of young men and women and in this field maintain standards of recognized excellence.

3. Seeking quality rather than quantity, they limit their student enrollment and apply with success personal methods in instruction.

4. Their students lead a common and wholesome social life under the uplifting influence of the Church's system.

Vol. XVI. No. 52 AUGUST 18, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

WE HAVE RECEIVED a delightful letter from an honest sinner, long a subscriber to THE WITNESS, informing us that now that his stomach is full of acid he has been compelled to stop drinking and that as a result he has joined the ranks of the other washed-out elders who criticize youth for their excesses. One wonders how much of this criticism does come from people of that sort—fast steppers once upon a time who have been slowed down to a walk by the infirmities of their bodies, and so express their envy by complaining about the moral standards of others. For in spite of much talk about the breakdown of the morals of the younger generation there seems to be plenty of evidence that they are more vitally interested in religion than were their elders twenty years ago. Word comes, for instance, from a rector in which he says that he finds a very keen interest in religion on the part of young people. His parish has a young people's group numbering forty-five boys and girls between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five. A corporate communion is held once a month at the early service, with a good percentage of them there each month. Meetings are held twice a month when there is a discussion, following the reading of a paper prepared by one of the group, on such subjects as "Why I Believe in God"; "Why I Believe in Jesus Christ"; "Why the Church?"; "The Teachings of the Anglican Church," and "My Duties as a Church Member." If his experience with young people is at all typical then certainly we have more serious problems to worry about than the morals of youth.

THE BIBLE is still the best seller. The British and Foreign Bible Society recently announced that they distributed ten and a half million volumes last year. The National Bible Society of Scotland gives for its total for 1931 over four and a half million. Add to these the distributions made by the several American societies and the total of books distributed is said to pass twenty-five million copies. This, of course, is in addition to the sales of the various commercial publishers of the Bible.

LAST WEEK we urged those able to do so to make small contributions with the renewals of their own subscriptions in order that others desiring the paper might continue to receive it. Donations to THE WITNESS Fund will be acknowledged from time to time in the paper. That there is a great need for such a fund may be judged by the following letter, typical of letters being received regularly. "It is with real regret that I am writing to ask you to discontinue my subscription. I have had the paper from the beginning of its publication. However the stress of the present conditions of finances makes me feel that it is something that I simply must do without. I do hope that too many are not doing the same thing and so crippling the paper which is so deserving of support." Many are doing the same thing, we are sorry to report. To them we can only urge that they see if there is not some other place where they can economize. Four cents a week—perhaps if a real effort is made the paper can be continued. And to those who simply must cancel their subscriptions, we ask that they so inform us if it is because a saving is imperative. We will then hope to receive sufficient contributions to THE WITNESS Fund to enable us to continue sending the paper each week, drawing upon this fund to pay for it.

DURING THE PAST YEAR the government of Brazil, in order to increase the price of coffee, has burned seven million bags, valued at thirty million dollars. Another seven million bags are now on hand waiting destruction. Funds for the purchase of the coffee to be burned are secured from a tax on exported coffee. An interesting little sidelight on the working of present day economic life.

MANY READERS have requested that the series of articles by Bishop Johnson on The Story of the Church be put into a book. We are now happy to announce the publication of such a volume, ready for immediate distribution. It is printed in large type on a standard book page size. The binding is of a heavy paper called leather embossed which is durable and yet inexpensive. The book sells at 50c for single copies and at $4.00 for ten copies. We believe the book will be of value not only for the individual reader but also for study groups. At the same time we are bringing out as a book the series of articles which appeared in THE WITNESS during Lent on The Christian Way Out, to which such eminent people as Nicholas Murray Butler, Archbishop Temple, Bishop Parsons, Bernard Iddings Bell, W. G. Peck, Vida Scudder, and others contributed. It has a binding similar to that described above and sells at the same price. Orders should be sent to our Chicago office at 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue.

LOVE AND REASON

BISHOP JOHNSON

THERE are certain elements in the material world that defy analysis. Every once in a while some one has tried to manufacture gold but since gold is an element they have never succeeded. We can resolve water into hydrogen and oxygen, but we are unable to resolve either of these elements into component parts.

There are certain things in the spiritual world which are elemental in character, and stubbornly refuse to be analyzed. It is true that psychologists and psychiatrists attack various labels to these elements but one does not alter the character of an element by giving it another name.

When someone tells me for example that lust and love alike are merely examples of behaviorism for which the person is not morally responsible, they tell me something that is very difficult to believe because it is contrary to the way men act toward these elemental characteristics and they haven't told me a thing about either lust or love. When they say that man is merely a mechanical device without any moral responsibility, they have not helped me to interpret my actions and they have forgotten that mere machines are limited by the functions that each part of the machine performs.

For example there is in every automobile both an engine and a steering wheel. Now the engine requires fuel and the steering wheel requires guidance. If I get out of fuel going uphill, I cannot call on the steering wheel to furnish the lack. Each has its own appointed task. Now man is dependent for his progress upon two very different elements. We call them love and reason. Each has its own particular function.

THE child starts out with a potential power of loving but with very little power of reasoning. The parents must provide the guidance, although the child may furnish the motive power. The child who loves a wise parent is well equipped to begin life's journey. If the child is unfortunate enough to have a parent who refuses to guide, the chances are that the desires within will dominate the direction which the child may take. If the child is one who dislikes his parents and refuses their guidance, he will probably end in grief. However as the child grows older elemental desires become subject to reason which is developed within the growing child. Until a child is fourteen the law does not regard him as morally responsible for his acts. In other words love and reason are not the same thing.

Love, or desire, or whatever you label the libido within, is that which impels the machine forward, while reason and logic determine the direction that it will ultimately take. In a general sense desire is the gasoline and reason is the pilot wheel. Certainly you cannot evaluate the needs of the engine in terms of the pilot wheel.

LET US SUPPOSE we are starting a family. The parents are both eminent scientists. A child is born into the family. They are anxious that the child shall have a real home. Unless they love one another, no matter how unscientific love may be regarded; unless they love the child; unless the child loves them, no amount of scientific rules can make a home. There must be something that we label personality in the heads of the family or the relationship will become intolerable. This personality must manifest itself in consideration of others or the home will be a tragedy. These two cannot argue themselves into loving one another. It would be like calling on the steering wheel to supply the vacuum in the gas tank.

It is true that the more reasonable the two may be, the more hope that the elemental love will take a desirable direction but unless the relationship is based on love the situation is hopeless.

It is for this reason that the Master tells us that the first and great commandment is that we must love. As the philosophers say there must be an awareness of one another and an otherness in the regulation of personal desires. This is the essence of religion. It is futile to say that religion is unscientific. One might reply with equal force that science is unspiritual.

The pot and the kettle may call one another names but each has its own particular function. After all practical results are obtained when the engine and the pilot wheel cooperate. Of course a machine can go down hill without fuel and the pilot wheel is very useful in the downward progress. If life was all down hill, the pilot wheel would be all that one would need. But if you are going to lift savages out of barbarism, I doubt if the reasoning power will do it. I have never yet heard of psychologists who could lift races out of savagery. These seem to me rather to find themselves on a high level of Christian civilization and then they tell the world how respectably they can descend to lower levels.

It is true that education can and ought to guide, but I have never observed that academic people had any driving power to lift up either themselves or others. Of course the whole idea of progress is as unscientific as lifting oneself by his own boot straps. How can anything emerge from a lower to a higher state, dependent upon the elements which are the sole property of the lower condition?

Yet there has been a something within all living creatures, other than observation which has impelled men upward. The law of gravity demands that water shall go down hill and yet the inventive genius of man has compelled water to go up hill. I have great respect for the scientific mind. I believe that I have still greater respect for the God-fearing peasant. I dislike to hear the one call the other a boor because he is not educated and I also dislike to hear the peasant call the scientist a pedant because he fails to be a lover of his fellow men. All I can deduce is that each has his own excellent qualities and society is fortunate when each respects and accepts the qualities of the other. I do not believe that the force which makes one man a savant and the force which makes the other a saint is the same force, nor do I believe that they can be valued each in the terms of the other.

The urge which causes one man to study astromony and the other man to minister to his neighbor's distress do not proceed from the same source, and the process by which a great astronomer is made is entirely different from that which makes another man a lover of mankind.

PERHAPS THERE ARE THOSE who feel that it is more important to have great astronomers than it is to have kindly and sympathetic souls. It is the function of our universities to make the one and it ought to be the function of the Church to produce the other. If it is a fact that not many great scientists come out of our universities and also that not many philanthropists come out of the Churches, the reason is the same. Neither College nor Church can make its ultimate product out of anything else than the material which offers itself and disciplines itself for the task. The fact that the University can make some scientists and the Church can make some saints must be the justification for the preservation of both institutions. But it ought not to be expected that the function of the University is to make saints and of the Church to make scientists.

If the Christian is living on an hypothesis which cannot be proved, so is the scientist, and the theory that bothers me is that if the high dignity which Christ gave to human life and the ultimate purpose which He held out for human character is not true; if we are merely a race of chemical compounds, what is the use of discussing and fretting over the nature of a machine that isn't going anywhere in particular. Either religion and science are partners in a great adventure, or else each are engaged in an equally futile task and the final issue of the controversy will be an absurdity.

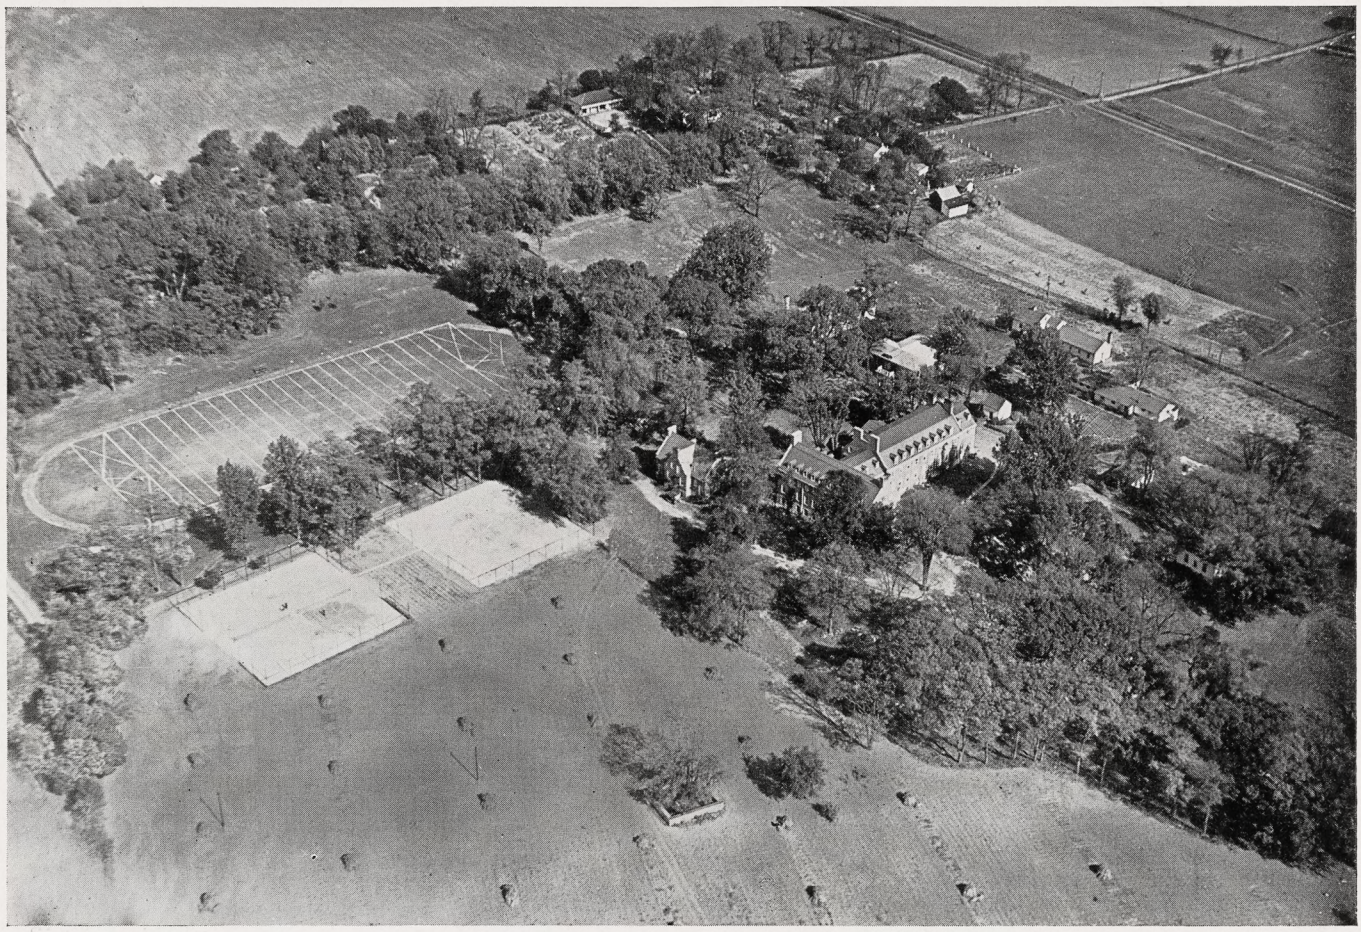
Psalter Again

A FEW weeks ago I attempted to answer a question from one of our readers—"where does the translation (of the Psalter) in our American Prayer Book come from?" My reply was that "the same Great Bible version was taken over with a few verbal emendations brought in under the last revision of 1928." I explained the Great Bible and gave a little history of the versions of the Psalms.

Another letter takes me to task for not really answering the question. With only the English language at my disposal, I do not know how I can make it much clearer. The Prayer Book Psalter is taken from the Great Bible of 1539 except for a few minor changes which were introduced in 1928. Some of these changes are single words, some are several words in a verse, and they depend on no specific version with which I am familiar. They are, I believe, the fruits of recent scholarship designed to increase accuracy of thought, aid devotion, and relieve certain obscurities. There were a large number of such changes, mostly trifling in nature, which were recommended by the Commission on the Revision of the Prayer Book. General Convention agreed that it would be absurd for a large body of deputies to debate and pass on every one of them. Therefore the Convention adopted the whole report on the Psalter after it had been submitted to them in print with adequate time for those to study it over who felt so disposed. By action of the Convention this revised Psalter is now an authorized part of the Prayer Book. It is too much to be expected that every such minor change should commend itself to every Churchman but I think all will agree that the Psalter itself is much improved by them.



For instance, in many places "nations" is substituted for "heathen" and "peoples" for "people". In Psalm 45:5 the old version says, "Thy arrows are very sharp, and the people shall be subdued unto thee: even in the midst among the King's enemies". But the new version makes it read—"Thy arrows are very sharp in the heart of the King's enemies, and the people shall be subdued unto thee". This is both more accurate and more intelligible but it does not appear in exactly these words in the Authorized version, or in either the English or American Revised versions of the Scriptures.

In Psalm 73:27 the old version read "thou hast destroyed all them that commit fornication against thee", which is changed to read "thou hast destroyed all them that are unfaithful unto thee." Surely an improvement for public devotional reading, in spite of some of our modern realistic authors. Psalm 68 has more variations introduced than any other. This is due to many allowable differences in translation from the original text because the Hebrew itself is very uncertain in spots. Transcripts of the Scriptures used to be made by hand and it was inevitable that mechanical errors should appear now and then. In the course of many centuries and many copyings such accumulated mistakes "corrupt the text", as the critics put it, so that even when the thought is clear, the exact form of expression may be uncertain.

In Psalm 2:7 the old reading said "I will preach the law". The new reading is "I will rehearse the decree". The latter is more accurate but, for my own part, I would prefer the rendering in both the English and Revised versions of the Bible—"I will tell of the decree". However the difference is not worth bothering about.

I trust I have answered my questioner this time.

A BIRDSEYE VIEW OF SAINT JAMES SCHOOL

SAINT JAMES SCHOOL

By

WILLIAM G. McDOWELL
The Bishop of Alabama

THE FOUNDATION of the present Saint James School was laid in 1842, when it was determined to open, at the historic "Fountain Rock Manor" in Washington County, Maryland, a school for the instruction of youth, under the discipline and doctrine of the Protestant Episcopal Church. This was the outcome of a meeting held by the Rev. T. B. Lyman, rector of Saint John's Church, Hagerstown, and several gentlemen of his congregation. Their plan was enthusiastically received by the Rt. Rev. Wm. R. Whittingham, Bishop of Maryland, who with characteristic energy sought its fulfillment.

In those days the idea of a Church school was entirely new in this country. A modified form of the English system had been tried with great success by Dr. William Augustus Muhlenberg at Flushing, Long Island. To him then did Bishop Whittingham turn for help in establishing his new school, and Dr. Muhlenberg finally consented to give up his chief assistant, the Rev. John Barrett Kerfoot, to be its head.

The next consideration was to find a suitable location for the school. Just at this time the "Fountain Rcok Manor" happened to be for sale. It was conveniently situated, being about six miles southwest of Hagerstown and two miles off the Sharpsburg turnpike. Nature had made the spot beautiful, and man had done his best to render it pleasing to see and dwell in; and after much consultation it was purchased, largely on the faith of the promoters.

Saint James Hall was accordingly opened on October 3, 1842, by the Bishop of Maryland, with a most solemn service of dedication. From the first the growth of the school was steady and continuous, despite many difficulties, financial and otherwise. In 1844 the plan of the school was changed and to meet it a charter was obtained under the title: "The College of Saint James." As such it drew a wide patronage from Maryland and the South, which continued up to the Civil War. At the College and the Grammar School were educated many who became distinguished in various walks of life, and who exemplified the training there received, as educated Christian gentlemen.

As increasing numbers demanded increased accommodations, a wing was first added to the original mansion, called "Claggett Hall," after the first Bishop of Maryland; then other buildings were erected, called "Paradise" and "Purgatory," respectively, and finally a large, five-story building, called "Kemp Hall," after the second Bishop of Maryland. Thus the College grew and prospered under the able administration of Dr. Kerfoot and his faculty, many of whom afterward became distinguished as educators and churchmen.

One very prominent feature of the training received at Saint James was the wholesome Christian influence thrown about each individual student. The rector himself belonged to the High Church school, and selected his associates with care, so that all would exert a positive religious influence. With manliness and character thus exemplified before the eyes of the boys, the formation of like traits in them was inevitable, and the type of Christian manhood thus produced has become a potent factor today in the councils of the Church as well as in the ranks of her laity.

BUT JUST AS ALL seemed well, a terrible blow befell the College. In January, 1857, "Kemp Hall" was burned. The loss was felt most keenly, but with an indomitable will, the authorities and friends of the College set about turning the disaster to good account. A generous sum was soon raised to repair the damage but other considerations changed their plans. At that time the College was very inaccessible and it was deemed advisable to devote the new endowment to bring Saint James within the reach of patronage. Accordingly a site was purchased in Baltimore County on the Northern Central Railway, plans were drawn, and the buildings begun which were to be the home of the College in its enlarged sphere of usefulness. "Fountain Rock" was still to be used as the Grammar School.

These plans were destined, however, never to be carried out. The outbreak of the Civil War found them but half completed and left them utterly ruined. All efforts had to be bent toward maintaining the College at the old site. But this was impossible. Its neighborhood had become the field of contending armies. The thunder of battle at Antietam, six miles away, shook the buildings and dashed all hopes of success, for Dr. Kerfoot was a Union sympathizer, and his students were Southern boys. Off they went to give their boyish enthusiasm, and perhaps their lives, to the cause of the Confederacy, leaving but a handful of students to the peaceful pursuit of learning. The second battle of the Gettysburg campaign was to have been fought on the very College grounds, had Meade chosen to attack Lee at bay. Then came the arrest of Dr. Kerfoot, as a hostage, by General Jubal A. Early, and yielding to the inevitable, Saint James was closed.

It was five years before Saint James again opened its doors to receive pupils. The South had been its largest patron, and this now lay devastated by war and prostrated by reconstruction. Its youth could no longer be spared to go off to school, so the College had to wait for more prosperous days. At last, in 1869, Bishop Whittingham was moved by the many inquiries he had received about reopening the school to seek the right person as Dr. Kerfoot's successor. He found such a one in Henry Onderdonk, a teacher of wide experience and singular ability. His plan was to reopen only the Grammar chool. Here unceasing labor was rewarded by the love his pupils bore him and the rank they attained in college and subsequent life. During the twenty-six years of His Head Mastership, Saint James maintained its high rank as a preparatory school, offering to the boys of Maryland an excellent training in mind and body, together with the rare influence of a Christian home life. A new "Kemp Hall" was built, and a third story was added to "Claggett Hall". Thus the school held the even tenor of its way, till in 1895 the Head Master, full of years and honors, was called to his reward.

IN 1896, THE NAME was changed to Saint James School, and Julian Hartridge became Head Master, a position which he held till 1900, when J. Henry Harrison succeeded him. When the latter withdrew in 1903, the school underwent a reorganization, and Adrian Holmes Onderdonk succeeded to the place formerly ocupied by his father, with Henry Webster Keating as Senior Master.

After more than fifteen years of occasion with the school upon which he had impressed his sterling ideas and lovable character, Mr. Keating was killed in an automobile accident,—an irreparable loss to Saint James and his friends and colleagues there.

In the spring of 1926 the school was visited by a disastrous fire which completely destroyed the entire main building. A recess of a month was declared, during which temporary quarters—dining hall, class rooms and sleeping barracks — were constructed in order that the work of the rest of the year might be completed; and after an absence of only two weeks more than the normal Easter vacation, the boys returned to Saint James, which they had left burned to the ground, scarcely a month before, and completed the year's courses without the loss of a class or a period of recitation—a remarkable, as well as a significant, accomplishment.

Mr. Onderdonk set out with untiring zeal to raise funds for a new Main Building, which, because of his invincible spirit and the splendid cooperation of the alumni and friends of the school, together with the Diocese, now stands on the site of the original building, a memorial to his efforts. A new wing, Whittingham Hall, has since been added, and this, with the Laidlaw Memorial Infirmary, makes it possible for Saint James to boast of not only an excellent but also a modern plant.

IT IS, HOWEVER, the personnel of such an organization that stands the real test, and it is in this that Mr. Onderdonk has been most fortunate. With the aid and assistance of Mr. Campbell, his associate of over twenty-five years, he has built up around him a faculty of carefully-chosen and well-tried men, who are aptly fitted to undertake the instruction and training of growing boys. It is here that the responsibility of a school lies, and it is here that Saint James, by an individual and studied analysis of each boy, undertakes to carry out her program in a spirit of progress and achievement. The unsurpassed worth of a close contact between masters and boys within an atmosphere of home life has been only too well proven by her success.

And so it has been that Saint James, the mother of church boarding schools, founded on the English type, in America, under the guidance of Dr. William Augustus Muhlenberg and his assistant, the Rev. J. B. Kerfoot, has stood the tests of her years, and advances toward the centennial anniversary of her founding.

Today Saint James stands for all that her founders intended and for much more of which they never dreamed. The Saint James School of today is a growth, the gradual outcome of the influence and the toil of ninety years. Things that are, in other schools, matters of rules and regulations, are with her traditional. The honor system is observed because there has never been any other. Her boys are gentlemen because of their constant contact with refining influences which they imbibe as naturally as her pure mountain air. Her ideal has ever been, Christian Manliness, as based on strength of mind, body and character; and this ideal she proposes to maintain.

Just Souls

C. RUSSELL MOODEY

IF YOU wish to get a real conception of the psychology of man today regarding matrimony just lay the engagement and wedding ring side by side and study the two. The engagement ring has its large beautiful diamond—its platinum setting, and possibly many smaller stones tucked in its filigreed appointments. One would think that the wedding ring led into the engagement. But the fact is the flash and show of the engagement ring leads into the simple yet beautiful ring that designates the estate of matrimony. Sound reflection proves the logic of this fact. When mutual love is first discovered it is usually in the hands of impulses. And impulses cater to display and the filigreed mentality. They demand flash and show simply because they are impulses with the tendency toward immaturity. But the value and the beauty of the wedding ring is its utter simplicity. As this ring is eternal so may the love of the man and wife be in the days together. The engagement ring is the symbol of a promise. The wedding ring is the symbol of a vow and covenant made.

There is a move on foot today away from any spiritual interpretation of wedlock. People think that matrimony is nothing more than a commercial venture. Judging from the frequent divorces one might believe this. But with the increasing barnyard morality one ought to see the foolishness of such attitudes. Back to God we must go for our basis of respect and decency and permanence. No matrimonial agreement can go on the rocks if the Christ is in the heart of it. Maturity signifies reverence and continuous recognition of the spiritual sharing in the covenant. With Christ happiness and success are guaranteed. Those whom God hath joined together no man can possibly put asunder! The engagement ring may glitter and look pretty. But the simple, eternal wedding ring is the symbol of maturity, and indicative of love and peace in mutual consecration.

DEVOTIONAL BOOKS THAT ARE WORTH YOUR ATTENTION

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

Not only is it difficult for the Christian to actually take the time each day to linger in the presence of God, but it is also difficult to find devotional books which really stretch the imagination and lift the mind to new visions. So many devotional books consist in Bible quotation and comment and the latter is often superfluous. Living Creatively by Kirby Page (Farrar & Rinehart) represents a distinctly new type of devotional book and one which ought to be of great help to many people.

Kirby Page has found in his own experience ten paths to the abundant life, ten ways of learning to live creatively. These paths might well be named ten roads to the spirit of God, although in only one is the Deity specifically mentioned. The ten paths are those of 1. Relieving human misery; 2. Transforming unjust social systems; 3. Gaining vision and serenity through silence; 4. Seeking beauty; 5. Cultivating friendship and fellowship; 6. Recovering strength through penitence; 7. Exploring great biographies; 8. Following the Noblest Personality; 9. Cooperating Creatively with God; and 10. Being willing to run risks and accept penalties.

The first hundred pages of the book is divided into brief sections in which the author gives an introduction to the use of each of the paths. The last two hundred pages are filled with inspirational quotations of both prose and poetry each falling under one of the above mentioned ten topics. The tremendous diversity of the quotations may be readily seen by mentioning the first three: 1. A passage from Paul de Kruiff's story of the victorious battle against yellow fever as told in Microbe Hunters under relieving human misery; 2. "Fired at Forty" from Stuart Chase's The Nemesis of American Business under transforming unjust systems; and 3. "Thank Offerings" quoted from Tagore's Gitanjili under gaining vision and serenity through silence. The volume is a veritable mine of beautiful and telling quotations. I recommend the volume to anyone who wants a devotional book which will stimulate his conscience and stretch his imagination. A man using this book ought to rise from his knees awakened anew to the unChristian phases of the world in which we live and determined to fight them both more zealously and more intelligently. The book is so indexed that it could well be used as material for a High School class in religion.

Another book which ought to prove a help to the devotional hour is Bishop George C. Stewart's The Face of Christ (Morehouse) a series of noonday Holy Week addresses delivered last Lent in the Garrick Theater in Chicago. In his delightful style Dr. Stewart writes of the radiance and the resoluteness, the compassion and the majesty, and the suffering and the glory which is revealed in the personality of Our Lord. It is a small volume of only 78 pages.

I dare say the clergyman in our church today who has not read at least one book by the late Bishop Charles Gore is a very rare specimen. Hence a little biographical sketch, Charles Gore (Morehouse) by Gordon Crosse will be widely welcomed. In slightly more than one hundred pages the author has given an outline of the great Churchman's life, an outline which is all too brief to bring much satisfaction to his friends. A glimpse of the wealth of material upon which Mr. Crosse could draw is evidenced by the following about Dr. Gore when he was about to leave Westminster for Worcester: "True the bishop-designate had become the greatest spiritual force in the Church. But in the eyes of many he was all that a Bishop ought not to be. He was head of a community of 'monks'; he was a ritualist; he was a Christian Socialist; and he 'didn't believe the Bible'." A good sample is this book, but it is to be hoped that it will be followed soon by a life and letters which will give a great deal more extensive picture of the man's mind and personality.

NOTICE

THE next issue of THE WITNESS will be that of September first, thus omitting the issue of August 25th. Subscription renewal dates will of course be moved forward one week. The reason for omitting the issue is a very simple one. It is my responsibility to edit each issue of the paper. Therefore the only way for me to get a vacation is to leave out a number. For one week I am going to climb New Hampshire mountains, paddle a canoe and lie in the sun. I hope that our readers will consider this a sufficient reason and will grant me this indulgence. Thanks.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

Many of you, presumably, will visit Chicago another year to attend the World's Fair. All of the places that you will want to see will not be located at the fair grounds on the water front. Way over on the northwest side is little St. Stephen's Church; a little frame building at the end of a tiny road. I spend last Sunday there with the clergyman in charge, the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker. He took charge of this mission five years ago and today it is one of the show places of the city.

It all happened in a rather strange way. Both Mr. Tucker and his gifted wife were frequent contributors to "The Hit or Miss Column" which appears in one of the Chicago newspapers, each of them contributing their poetry. Keith Preston was the conductor of this column. He died rather suddenly and some of those contributing regularly felt that it would be nice to have a memorial service. They were invited to hold it in little St. Stephen's. The service was attended of course by the literary people of the city and several of them brought with them original poems that they had written and presented them to the church. They were framed, these autographed verses, and hung on the walls of the church. There were artists there too. One of them suggested that there should be a service each year for them as well as for poets. At this service, just as the poets had given their verse, so they presented their paintings. Other groups—many of them—asked that they might have services. For five years this has been going on so that today the little frame building is literally filled with paintings, sculpture, poems—contributed by famous people.

The church yard is equally famous. When Mr. Tucker went there it was a dumping ground for tin cans. Today it is a Garden of Memory, with flowers, plants, shrubs, trees, dedicated to the memory of loved ones. Great stately trees dedicated to the memory of Walt Whitman, Longfellow, Edison, Peter Lutkin, Marguerite Wilkinson, Baby Lindbergh. There are shrubs and flowers planted by members of the little congregation and dedicated to the memory of some one they wish to honor. As a result the dump has been transformed into a Garden of Memory.

There is nothing imposing here. One might walk right past the little church without even realizing that it is there. Nevertheless today it is a shrine, visited each week by scores of people, as the register at the door of the church, filled with hundreds of names of people from all parts of the country gives simple testimony. So if you are to visit Chicago save a half day to see St. Stephen's.

Memorial Chapel for St. James School

Henry Onderdonk in the year 1903 took his wife and together they reorganized St. James School, one of the finest of our Church boarding schools. It was no easy undertaking to do this as you may judge from the article by Bishop McDowell in this number. It was a wreck at the time but through their efforts it was made one of the most beautiful and famous of our schools. At one time there were memorials to both Henry Onderdonk and his wife, but they were destroyed by fire. So at the commencement this year the class of 1932 announced to the present headmaster, A. H. Onderdonk, son, that it was their purpose to start out that day to raise sufficient funds to build a lasting memorial in the nature of a Colonial Chapel. It came as a surprise to the present headmaster, the boys having been successful somehow or other in keeping it from him until the announcement. The plans have been made and the chapel is said to be a building of unusual beauty.

New York Auxiliary Presents Gift to Japan

The Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese of New York has a missions committee with a number of subcommittees on different fields. The sub-committee for Japan, Mrs. Frederick M. Pedersen, chairman, has recently completed a gift intended for the building fund of St. John's Church, Utsunomiya, and sent a check for it to Bishop McKim as part of his celebration of his eightieth birthday, in July. The congregation at Utsunomiya, where the Rev. J. K. Ban is priest in charge, has for the past twenty-five years held its services in the kindergarten building, rearranged every Sunday to serve as a church. They too have been raising money for the new church and now find that, in spite of recent hard times, they have on hand more than the amount they pledged.

Churchmen from Christ Church, Williamsport, and from Montoursville and Muncy made their annual pilgrimage recently to the Church of the Good Shepherd, in Upper Fairfield Township, Pa., where worship was conducted in the quaint little church on top of the hill. The church, erected 57 years ago through the efforts of the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, then rector of Christ Church, Williamsport, has become an historic spot. Canon Hiram R. Bennett, Rector of Christ Church, preached a sermon, and the service was read by the Rev. Samuel Sayre, rector of St. Mary's Church, Williamsport.

Chicago Parish Seeks Large Fund

As evidence of its belief that prosperity is coming back, the Church of the Ascension, Chicago, has announced plans for a campaign to raise $75,000 in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of its founding and the fiftieth anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the present church. The campaign is said to be one of the most unique launched in Chicago.

The pledges sought are to be undated as to fulfillment, each being left entirely to the individual. On this basis, the invitation to participate calls for pledges of from four to ten times the amount parishioners might give at this time.

"We need $75,000 to free our property from debt and rehabilitate our endowment fund," says the Rev. Wm. B. Stoskopf, rector, in his letter to his parishioners. "Can this amount be raised this year of depression? I do not believe so and if I did, I would not ask it from you whose contributions would mean a sacrifice of from four to ten times what you might give under normal conditions. I am turning to you to raise this amount as a pledge contingent upon the return of prosperous times."

"Are you an optimist? Then certainly you can afford to be generous in looking toward a future increase which you believe will come. Are you a pessimist? Very well then, the signing of this pledge will cost you not one cent if prosperity does not return."

Formal celebration of the double anniversary will take place early in October.

Fewer Marriages in Diocese of Chicago

The number of marriages performed by clergy of Chicago during the last year declined approximately ten per cent, according to statistics compiled by the Rev. Gerald G. Moore, secretary of the diocesan convention. Christ church, Waukegan, led parishes in the number of weddings with 49. Among city churches, St. Chrysostom's stands first with 45; then St. James with 43; St. Paul's, third, with 30. Christ church, Winnetka, and St. Luke's, Evanston, were among parishes recording marked declines in marriages during the year.

Fine Work Done by Chicago Shelter for Women

In less than a year since its establishment, the Cathedral Shelter for Women, Chicago, has shown its value and usefulness, according to a report from Miss Ruth B. Gibson, manager. The report shows that since the Shelter was opened on Oct. 22, 1931, 606 individuals have been cared for, constituting 11,018 night's lodging and 32,817 meals.

The Woman's Shelter is one of the emergency relief stations of Chicago and receives funds from the Governor's Relief Commission. It consists of three ten-room houses which adjoin each other. It has accommodations for fifty-eight women. The women admitted to it must register with one of the case-working agencies. Whenever possible, they are placed in positions suited to them. Clothing is given freely to enable them to make a presentable appearance. Medical care is provided through the Women's and Children's hospital. The Woman's Shelter is an outgrowth of the great work being done by the Cathedral Shelter under guidance of the Rev. David E. Gibson.

Florida Concludes Summer Camps

The series of four diocesan camps and conferences of the diocese of Florida have now come to a close. The Young People's Service League, the adult and the junior camps for both girls and boys, have been smaller in attendance then in former years, but perhaps this was to be expected during these "hard times". In spite of this fact Bishop Juhan and the directors of the several Conferences are enthusiastic over the Japanese Bishops Issue a Pastoral

The House of Bishops of the Japanese Church for the first time has issued a pastoral letter, signed by the eleven bishops of the Church of whom two are Japanese, four English, one Canadian and four American. It rejoices that the Church "combines freedom of intellectual enquiry with strict and passionate adherence to the fundamental truths of historic Christianity. We affirm our deepest conviction that in matters of faith, orders, worship and intention we are in the true Apostolic Succession: that that Succession has never been broken and that in all spiritual essentials we possess and represent the mind of Christ and His Apostles." The pastoral urges unity among all Christians and the deepening of fellowship and understanding. In regard to social questions they say: "We hold that the teachings of Christ rightly understood, on the relationship of man to man and class to class, are the supreme social teachings for all time. It is a regrettable fact that in the past many of those who are Christians in name have not followed these social teachings of Christ. If man had obeyed His teaching, many of the occasions and reasons for the present social confusion, unrest and evil would not have arisen.

"Our work is to teach and impress upon mankind the precepts of

Bishop Visits an Invaded City

The Chinese city of Changsha, up the river beyond Hankow, will be remembered as the place which just two years ago was invaded, terrorized, looted and burned by Communists. They thoroughly looted our church and burned out the girls' school. Bishop Gilman now writes of a recent visit there:

"It was a pleasure to see our granite church standing, as of old, the only church visible from the street within the old city of Changsha. It is built on the Gothic plan, best adapted for the close city streets. The Chinese style of building is beautiful in its adaptation to the Christian Church, but to be really effective it requires a long approach.

"I had been told that seventeen separate fires had been required to consume the building of the Trinity School for girls, and it was really amazing to see how the brick and concrete walls stood erect and true from the ground up to the peak of the gable. Mr. Tyng (the Rev. Walworth Tyng, foreign missionary at Changsha) has been assured by the architect that practically none of the masonry will need replacement. It is indeed a joy to know that this building will soon be restored to its former usefulness, and that if the Communists should return in greater fury, they would find that not only are the Church walls made of granite, but that the roof beams turned into stone!

"Since my last visit to Changsha, the Sun Yat-sen asphalt-paved broad avenue has been completed, and not a sign of the destruction of two years ago could I see. Electric clocks have been placed in various parts of the city. As we went through the busy streets, we were amazed at the quantity of all kinds of goods — silks, satins, woolen clothing, hardware, notions. One would think it would take years to dispose of all these goods. Their abundance showed that there were courageous merchants who knew that this capital and commercial center supplied a great population who, through the wealth of their production, would be enabled to take away all these things."

Bishop Gilman attended a three-day convocation of Hunan province here at Changsha, at which all the clergy except himself and Mr. Tyng were Chinese. They brought reports of vigorous and encouraging work, including, of course, some difficulties.

Missionaries Hold Service in New York

Liberia and Alaska were united in the service in the chapel of Church Missions House Friday noon, August 5, when there were present Miss Winifred Olivia Moore, a nurse, sailing that day for Liberia, and Dr. and Mrs. Grafton Burke, returning to Fort Yukon. Next to Miss Moore sat Miss Margaretta Ridgley, missionary of longest service—twenty-eight years in Liberia. Dr. and Mrs. John Chapman were also present. With their forty years service in Alaska, and the Burkes' twenty-five, more than a century and a half of missionary work was represented in the chapel.

New Mission Started in Hawaii

Yet another new mission has started in Hawaii. At a place called Keaukaha, near Hilo, a Hawaiian lay reader, Joseph Koomoa, under the direction of the Rev. H. H. Corey of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Hilo, has begun services for a group which so far is composed entirely of Hawaiians. There is much need for constructive Christian work in that area. Mr. Koomoa is assisted by two other lay readers from the same parish. Bishop Littell, when he made his first visit, found about 125 persons present, including a number of young people.

Erect Building for Medical Work

A number of the old men of Sagada, in the Philippine Islands, and the presidents and councillors of surrounding villages came to the mission a few weeks ago to offer their services in connection with the erection of the new building for medical work. They said they had come many times in the past to ask that a doctor be sent to them, and now that Dr. Jenkins is hard at work among them, they want to do all in their power to help. They promised free labor in carrying lumber from the sawmill and collecting stones for the buildings. These are not small items; carrying the lumber alone will save the mission about 1,500 pesos or $750.

Ordinations Held in Japan

According to the Canons of the Japanese Church (Nippon Seikokwai) all candidates for Holy Orders must serve at least one year as catechists before they are ordained deacons. Three deacons and one priest were ordained in the diocese of North Tokyo this summer. All were graduates of St. Paul's College and the Central Theological College, Tokyo. Two of the deacons continue serving the churches where they worked as catechists, one comes to the General Theological Seminary for postgraduate study, and the priest is to assist the Rev. James Chappell who is in charge of five missions in the North Tokyo diocese.

Church Reaches Students in Philippines

What the Church in the United States knows as "student work" is an important part of missionary activity in Baguio and Sagada, Philippine Islands, for many young people from the primary schools in distant missions come to Baguio to attend the Trinidad Industrial School or to Sagada for their high school course. Our clergy have it on their conscience to keep these children in touch with their church while they are in what is to them the distracting life of a large city. There are over a hundred Church girls and boys at Trinidad and about thirty-five in the Sagada high school.

Wear Clothes When Attending Church

A missionary writes from Sagada complaining gently that all the picturesque local color is to be found in the out-stations. "Here in Sagada," he says, "the people are more sophisticated. Almost everybody wears clothes at the Sunday services." At every week-end service there are at least 150 people but "it doesn't seem worth writing about when it is an every-day experience."

Hospital in Liberia, he worked on a German palm-oil plantation on one of the coastal islands of Portugese Guinea among natives untouched by civilization. The first time he had occasion to give an anesthetic, he was assisted by an engineer from a freighter then in the harbor, who administered so much ether that the patient, a young native, did not wake up when he was expected to.

Dr. Ronnefeldt persuaded another native to speak to the sleeping patient in his own language, which the young man was loath to do. He believed the patient was dead, and if you attempt to call back a man who has died, he may really come and make trouble. So they said. He was prevailed upon, however, and finally addressed the sleeping man in what the doctor afterwards learned was a magic incantation. The patient at once woke up and had a rapid and normal convalescence. The doctor's reputation was established from that moment, when it was seen that he could kill a man and restore him to life.

Another belief, however, complicated matters somewhat, namely, that when old men die, they return as children, but when young men die, they come back as women, unless the witch-doctors perform certain elaborate and costly ceremonies at their graves. The result, for the doctor, was that he found it almost impossible to persuade young men who needed some serious operation to submit to an anesthetic. If it could not be done with local anesthesia, they endured it without any, without a whimper, rather than risk being turned into women.

Chinese Professor Becomes a Christian

One of the six Chinese who were baptized at Hsiakwan on Whitsunday is a professor in the national university at that place. He had spent six years in America, at Cornell and Iowa State University, and was first interested in Christianity by some Christian Oriental students at a Christmas house-party at Taylor Hall, Racine (which has been succeeded by Brent House, Chicago). He also attended the Episcopal Church at Ames for about a year. In recent years he has been in despair over the evils he saw around him in China, and two years ago he said to the Rev. John Magee of Hsiakwan, "Christians have something to give them hope when everything is utterly hopeless." He read and studied and talked with Mr. Magee, and tried to find reality in prayer, and at last reached the point where he could become whole-heartedly a Christian.

Posterity—Then Prosperity

POSTERITY is more important than prosperity, we hear educators say.

The education of your boy or girl in one of the church schools should not be neglected at this time. It is a matter that cannot be postponed. The crucial year will have passed. Wrong habits will have become fixed. Weak foundations will have been laid. Perhaps the edge of intellectual interest will have become dulled by poor teachers and over-crowded class rooms.

No sacrifice is too great to give your boy or girl the best in private school education.

But the education of posterity has a very direct relation to prosperity. Private schools and colleges are one of our most important industries. Probably ten million dollars a year are spent on private school education in New England alone and another ten million in the Middle Atlantic States.

Wherever there are private schools the country over, these fees go into teachers' salaries, laborers' wages, supplies, new equipment and upkeep. All of this money finds its way readily back into commercial channels to keep the wheels of industry turning.

You, the readers of The Witness, are of the class that have made possible the remarkable high grade private schools. There is no way in which you can perform a greater service to church and country than by insisting that your own boys and girls shall continue to study under the very best educational auspices.

Information about these schools, and the others, all recognized Church Schools, whose notices appear elsewhere in this paper, may be secured from The Witness, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Vol. XVII. No. 1 | SEPTEMBER 1, 1932 | Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

IN SPITE of modern critics it seems that at least some miracles reported in the Bible have a basis in fact. You are of course familiar with the miracle of the quail whereby the hungry Israelites, fleeing from Pharaoh, were fed in such abundance that many of them had an uncomfortable night, to put it mildly. Many books have devoted chapters to that little affair with some of the great scholars discrediting the possibility of such a phenomenon. Now along comes Major C. S. Jarvis who lives on the desert of Sinai with his say on the subject—and since he knows more about that remote spot than anyone living weight must be given to his words. He relates the entertaining tale of the annual migration of quail from eastern Europe to Sinai. It seems the birds fly across the Mediterranean and then fall exhausted on the shore. Arabs leisurely pick them up, box them and ship them by way of the Suez to the dinner tables of Europe. The inference is an obvious one; if quail migrate now what reason have we to suppose that they didn't do so in Moses' day, and if Arabs turn them into cash so easily may we not suppose that the Israelites, unable to turn them into cash by way of the Suez Canal, did the next best thing and used the birds to ward off starvation.

GEORGE LANSBURY, venerable Laborite member of the House of Parliament, pleading with the law makers of his country for a recognition of Christian values is another encouraging bit one digs out of the back pages of the daily newspaper. He reminded his colleagues that they were the chosen representatives of a supposedly Christian nation and that it might be well for them to keep that fact in mind as they considered the many serious matters before them. He also said, what so many preachers have said, that solutions would be found for our social and economic problems only in the teachings of Jesus.

INFORMATION COMES by way of a southern newspaper that about twelve million or ten per cent of all Americans are on the government payroll—either state, federal or municipal. The statement is credited to Representative Beck of Pennsylvania. Meanwhile a responsible New York publisher brings out a book informing the tax payer that three Senators went on a ten day fishing trip at a cost of almost $200 a day—bills paid by the United States treasury. Another group of six senators and three guests chartered two houseboats in Florida for five days, costing the government exactly $1687.50. Stories of elaborate meals, of travel at 40c a mile, of bills for fishing bait, of bills for turkish baths and bills for extravagant tips to fair maidens fill the volume. All of which you may recall to your comfort the next time you send in an income tax payment.

WE ARE HAPPY to announce a new series of articles by Bishop Johnson, to commence in the issue of September 22nd and to run continuously for several months. In this series, "What I Believe and Why" the Bishop of Colorado will present his beliefs and their defense. We are confident that not only all clergymen will wish to follow these articles but that they will also wish to place them in the hands of members of their congregation. In the same issue there is to appear the first of The Witness Bible Lessons. These are to appear throughout the year and will be followed, according to present plans, by lessons on the Prayer Book and on the Teachings of the Church. Thus do we launch a Training School for Church Workers. And just as our Church summer training schools present a certificate upon the satisfactory completion of a course so will THE WITNESS present a certificate to those passing a written examination at the end of this course of study. Church people should know their Bible, their Prayer Book, the Teachings of the Church. To study them is fascinating, particularly when the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker is the teacher, as he is to be with this first course. So we hope all our readers will enroll. It is a simple matter to do so—a postal to THE WITNESS, editorial office, 931 Tribune Building, New York, stating simply: "I wish to be a member of The Witness Bible Class." We hope also that rectors will urge members of their congregations to join this great class, making the paper available for them by adopting the Bundle Plan. Order blanks, together with an announcement, are to be sent the clergy within a few days. May we take this means of begging your cooperation.

SOMETHING NEW and startling has turned up in the courts of Massachusetts. A sisterhood of the Roman Catholic Church was willed a large sum of money. There were no strings tied to it. They could use it in whatever way they wished. The other day however the court was asked permission to refuse the bequest. It seems the sisters have their own ideas on the subject of poverty to which they are pledged, and the inheritance of several hundred thousand dollars is not one of them.

JESUS AND THE UNEMPLOYED

By

RICHARD ROBERTS

IT IS SOMETIMES URGED that the teaching of Jesus has grown out of date, and is in any case inapplicable to the circumstances of this age. Jesus lived in a simple rural civilization, and if there was a social problem at all, it was all confined within the bounds of the town or village: and if the problem could not be altogether solved, what was left over was taken care of by the mutual helpfulness of the neighbors. But today our social problems are national problems: some of them are already world problems. The simple handwork of long ago has been superseded by machine industry and mass-production. And there are other things. None the less it is true that there is no difference of kind in the problems of modern society from those of the Galilean society with which Jesus was familiar. There is only a difference of scale. Our problems are larger but they are the same old problems. From "the parable of the unemployed" (Matt. 20: 1-16) it is quite evident in that simple society they were familiar with the problem of unemployment.

Now Jesus did not speak this parable as in any way suggesting how unemployment should be dealt with. He was really thinking of something else: and He uses the fact of unemployment in order to illustrate another and more far-reaching point. This is a parable of the justice of God: and it is no doubt intended to suggest the kind of justice that men should practice toward one another. But Jesus does show incidentally what He felt about unemployment. It is clear that Jesus did not regard it primarily as an economic problem, but as a human problem. With us it is regarded primarily as an economic problem: and our plan is to solve the human end of the problem by charity. But that was not Jesus' way. He puts the human end first; and the economics of the matter has to adjust itself to the human necessities of the case. He didn't think that economic laws and processes had their roots in the nature of things and were therefore incapable of change. The view of Jesus if He were here today would be that it is not the man who must adapt himself to an economic system but the economic system that must adapt itself to the man.

So unemployment would naturally be to Jesus first of all a human problem. And anyone who has contemplated unemployment at close quarters can hold no other view. During the unemployment crisis of 1907-1908 in England it fell to me to see the actual human consequences at close range. I lived day by day in the presence of the tragedy of human deterioration—seeing decent men sink into despair as one after another of their household goods make their way to the pawnshop; seeing unemployed men gradually becoming unemployable, seeing their hearts gnawed and torn by the hunger of their wives and children and an immense anger arising in their souls against a social system that permitted such things to be. I did not hear of it, but saw it all with my own eyes: and being very close to it for many months I confess it looked sometimes as though I lived in an insane world. For, after all, the wealth of a nation is its people, its men, its women, its children; and a system that permits this periodic wastage of its human wealth is in sad need of overhauling and reconstruction.

I AM NOT an economist: I do not know whether it is inevitable that there should be these recurring cycles of prosperity and depression. In my heart I do not believe these things are inevitable: but it is a region in which I am not competent to speak. It should not be beyond the wit of man to exercise that social foresight which should at least mitigate the stringency of these reactions. But of this I am sure, that it is our business to see to it beforehand that there is a wise provision for these contingencies in some form or other of unemployment insurance. The maintenance of the human wealth of a nation should not be left to the caprices of private or semi-private charity: nor should men who are out of work through no fault of their own be subjected to the humiliation of anything of the nature of private or public doles.

Now, in this parable, Jesus implies—even if He does not statedly lay down—the principle. Why stand ye here all the day idle, says the owner of the vineyard to the men in the market place. Because, they answered, no man hath hired us. They had been ready to work all day, if they had had work to do. At the end of the day, each man, the man who had worked a full day and the man who had worked only an hour, received the same pay—from which it is evident that Jesus regards it as proper that the men who went into the vineyard at the eleventh hour should be paid for the work they would have done if they had had a chance to do it. Jesus, as I said, is here expounding the justice of God, which should be the justice of man, but isn't. In our world, we go on a principle of equivalence. We pay for what we get—goods or services rendered—we get what we pay for. We work by the hour or the day or the year; and so we are paid. But there is a deeper principle in the divine justice: which, looking first not at the work but the worker, decrees that the willing worker shall not go wanting his daily bread.

It is a commonplace among us that it is a man's duty to work; and we rightly despise the idler and the slacker. For myself, I would subscribe to St. Paul's principle: If a man work not, neither let him eat. And apart from genuine evidence that a man is by his record proved willing to work, I would, for my part, compel a man to perform a labor task before letting him eat; and I believe that there are in every community men who should be sent to special institutions where they may be disciplined back into habits of work. No society can afford to maintain able-bodied parasites. But what about the willing worker! If it is, as we say, a man's duty to work, it would appear to follow that it is a man's right to have work to do. For rights and duties imply each other. But supposing there is no work for him to do? I do not know whether human society can be so organized that there will always be a full-time job for every man. It seems to me that not the most acute social planning can quite provide for accidents of nature, vagaries of weather and climate; and that, at the best, there is likely to be periodic unemployment. Well, then, since, because it is his duty to work, it is a man's right to have work to do, and there is no work to do—it seems to be the logical conclusion that some provision should be made beforehand to enable him to tide over the period of idleness. In the parable, the fine justice of the owner of the vineyard makes the provision, and there ought to be the same fine justice in human society to see to it that the honest worker is not in his time of idleness exposed to the humiliation of seeking and receiving charity or to that deterioration of his human quality to which unemployment always does expose a man.

IT IS NOT for me to say how this should be done. As I said, I am no economist. All that I can see is that, to any provision that is made, there are necessarily three parties. The first is the worker himself. It will belong to his personal dignity and self-respect that he contribute his share to the provision. The second is industry; it will be foresight and wisdom on the part of the industry in which a man is engaged to share in the provision that when the bad times is over he returns to his job in good heart, unembittered and undemoralized. The third party is the rest of us—the consuming public, who should have the fine justice to care for the unemployed worker, the wise prevision to avert the deterioration of the human quality of the nation and to secure the well-being of the whole social organism. This triple alliance of the worker, the industrial system and the nation as a whole is the groundwork of a scheme of unemployment insurance that would save us in the future from the recurrence of the shame and the tragedy which these times has laid or should have laid so heavily on our consciences and on our hearts.

It would be a substantial and noble application of the principle of divine justice (which Jesus is expounding in this parable) to our own social conditions. And I pray you, for Christ's sake, to lend the weight of your advocacy and support to the project now afoot of unemployment insurance. It will take us some time to achieve a just and workable system, and it ought not to be done in a hurry. But done it should be, as the first installment of that Christian justice which is the only alternative today to the materialistic and terrorist communism that is bidding so vehemently for the franchise of the world.

*St. Mark, v. 35-43.

The Girl Who Came Back

By

EVELEEN HARRISON

ONCE upon a time, in a village far away, on the the shore of a Lake, a lot of girls and boys in bright colored clothes ran down to the beach after school, to play games.

"Let us go out fishing," cried Samuel.

"No, let us play wedding," said Ruth.

"Oh yes, and we will make Talitha the bride."

"Don't you know, Mary, that Talitha is very ill?"

"But that was some days ago," answered Mary, "and she may be quite well now."

"No, she is worse," called out Joseph, "because my father has gone with her father to get the great Rabbi Doctor who has cured so many people, and Father says"—

The hurried sound of running footsteps made all the children turn around, as a little girl in breathless haste came around the corner.

"What do you think?" she gasped, "Talitha is gone!"

"Gone?"

"Yes! she is dead!"

With sad faces, and hushed voices, the children gathered in a group, talking about their little friend.

"Listen," exclaimed Nathaniel, "I can hear the women wailing at the door."

"And see, there goes the Rabbi Doctor and his three friends."

No games were played that day, the children missed their little leader.

As twilight came on, they started to go home for supper, when one small boy, who had run ahead up the street, suddenly gave a cry, and covered his eyes with his cloak.

"What is the matter with thee, Joseph?" called out his sister Miriam.

With trembling finger Joseph pointed up the street.

Coming toward them, out of the twilight shadows, was the dancing figure of a little girl, her face radiant with joy.

"Talitha! Talitha!"

In fear the children clung close to one another.

"It must be her ghost!" whispered Mary, with a sob in her voice.

"Girls, boys, it is I, Talitha; you need not be afraid of me!"

"Is it possible?"

"Really you, Talitha?"

"But, but, aren't you dead?"

A merry laugh answered them. "I was dead, but am just as much alive now, as you are, Ruth. Come, let us sit down and I will tell you all about the wonderful adventure I have had. Don't be afraid of me, Samuel; see, I am not a ghost, and can jump and run, and talk the same as ever."

"Tell us, Talitha."

An eager, frightened little group sat down close together on the shore, never taking their eyes, full of wonder, off the young girl's radiant face.

And with her arm around little Samuel, Talitha told her marvelous story.

"It was so hard to lie in bed and suffer; to hear you all calling, and playing; and I wanted so much to be with you. I couldn't eat, and my head ached, and I was all burning up with fever. Mother and father were so worried, and all those herb drinks they gave me tasted so nasty, and the plaster hurt so; and then I got very, very sleepy, and my head went round; I saw mother crying, and the room full of faces looking at me.

"Then suddenly it was dark! But before I could be frightened I went sound asleep. And I dreamed that I was walking through a lovely garden, filled with flowers; birds singing, and Oh! such wonderful music away up in the air! There were lots of children in shining white dresses playing with the flowers, and the butterflies, and laughing so happily.

"As I watched them, a shining one stood before me with outstretched hands.

" 'Welcome home, Talitha,' she said. 'This is Heaven; come and I will show you some of its wonders.'

"The shining one took my hand, and we walked through the most enchanting places; I never could tell you all the glories I saw. Singing voices sounded on all sides, colors of radiant light were wafted through the air, and as I listened, one voice, more beautiful than all the others, seemed to be calling me—

" 'Talitha, Talitha, arise, arise!'

"I looked up; and there, bending over me, was the most wonderful face, full of love and longing; and there were my mother and father, and three strange men; and would you believe it, I was lying on my own little bed, in my own room, and the great Rabbi Doctor was holding my hand and saying—

" 'Talitha, damsel, I say unto thee arise!'

"I sat up in bed, and my beautiful dream was over; I had come back from Heaven.

"Then the Rabbi Doctor told mother to give me some supper, that I was all well, and could get out of bed, and mother took me in her arms while the tears ran down her cheeks; outside the door the women were wailing and crying, for they thought I was dead; and Oh! you ought to have seen their faces when I went out and stood before them; some of them were so frightened they ran away.

"Then after the Rabbi Doctor and his friends had gone, mother gave me my supper, and I came out to see you all. Oh! isn't it lovely to be alive on earth again! All my life long I will remember the Rabbi Doctor, and will thank Him for making me well."

So many eager questions the children had to ask Talitha. Over and over again she told her story. Then, when the darkness was falling, the children jumped up.

"Let's go home and tell mother."

In a few moments the beach was deserted, little feet were running in all directions; doors were thrown open, and excited voices were calling out, "Oh, mother! Talitha has come back from Heaven! She was dead, and is now alive on earth again!"

So the story traveled, all up and down the country, from mouth to mouth, and with it all the other wonderful stories of what the Rabbi Doctor did and said; until one day wise men gathered all the stories together, and put them into a book, and we call it "The Gospel," or "Good Tidings" of the life of Jesus the Christ.

Just Souls

By

C. RUSSELL MOODEY

As we climb the steep ascent
Which leads up through the soul
We look out over life anew
And make the Christ our goal!

ONE doesn't have to climb the Empire building of New York to get a view. I spent a few very pleasant minutes with a friend of mine who has his office in one of our local buildings. Of course I wasn't above the clouds or anything like that, but still high enough to get a good glimpse of this city and its outline. In our little confab I faced the window, and in between words I looked out and over the roofs of the nearby edifices and to the homes beyond. This thought came to me as I sat there—my ideas and impressions born down there on the street were subject to drastic change when I occupied a seat near the window and could look down on the city. My perspective was not only altered some, but broadened and extended. I held a new conception of my city—its buildings and its streets.

We think we are civilized. Our opinion is based on the experiences and contacts made on the "first floor" if not the "basement" of life. Our thoughts and ideas convince us that we are a part of a glorious humanity, and we get quite a deep sense of attainment as we mingle with our fellowmen. These conclusions, of course, were born "down there on the street." But I wonder how God looks at these apparent achievements? From His point of lofty elevation —it may be that He sees things and people in a totally different way. From His seat "at the window of heaven," He can see better and farther than we can. I also feel that the nearer we get to Him in our spiritual climb our profound sense of satisfaction will give way to a new and more noble expectancy. After all skyscrapers and other mighty structures are not true evidence of a great civilization. Spirituality is the basis of genuine advance. Until you and I leave the lower realm and climb the steep ascent of heaven we will continue to boast about what has been done. Only in the ascent do we change our mind, and a new conception of our city and people gradually absorbs us. Through the eyes of the Christ we see what hitherto we had not seen. Material things bring us a passing exultation. Spirituality and the Christ supply that high estate and high conception which alone can foster and maintain a great civilization.

HOOSAC SCHOOL

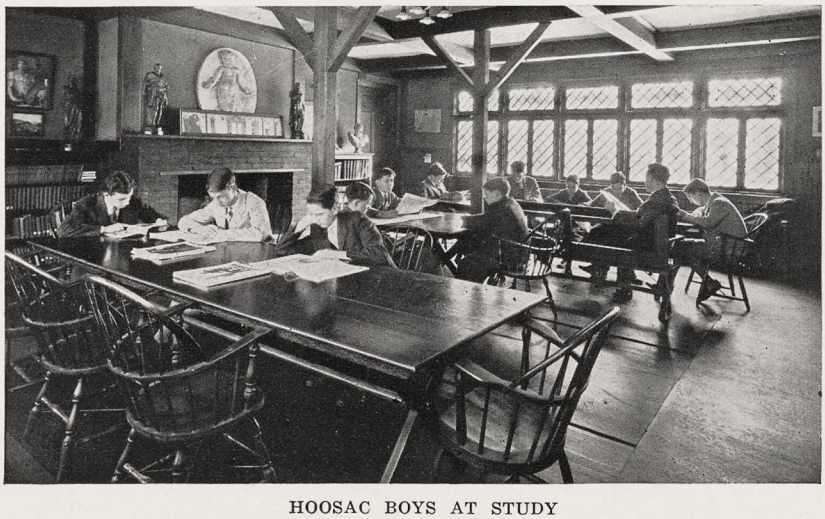
JAMES L. WHITCOMB
Headmaster

BY THE vision and the generosity of the late Rev. Edward Dudley Tibbits, D.D., Hoosac School has for forty-two years administered to the academic needs of boys. In the evolution of the present Hoosac, in which its boys find themselves possessors of rare traditions of spiritual and cultural living, there has been established an educational institution devoted to the development of the individual boy. Herein is still preserved his right to those things whereby men may learn to love God and know him better.

Hoosac takes advantage of progressive or scientific educational methods for the better evaluation of the conventional and necessary standards of preparation for higher education. The School is pledged to measuring capacities and developing in the boy in all things to make the moral decision based upon the facts of his own self activity whereby he accepts and knows this responsibility in academic terms.

The objectification of these ideals is daily observable in the application of the "Self Help" principle. Recognizing the right of the growing boy to share in the objectified task of caring for his own personal needs, a systematized, domestic routine is carried out to fit and develop his individual capacities in their relation to others. This makes for the successful accomplishment of the necessary economies of living. The student gains first hand knowledge of the actual cost of living not in terms of dollars but in those terms by which dollars are made and their values maintained. Hoosac boys learn to help themselves by helping others. They share in the wide range of domestic responsibilities of a home and family. School life therefore does not exclude that most valuable asset of a wisely oriented home. Work schedules are made out and managed by boys themselves through the Prefects who share the responsibility directly with the Headmaster.



In the academic discipline the same perspective is maintained in fact, by arousing a spirit of greater emphasis upon the percentile success of the whole school rather than the individual.

In athletics and extra curricular activities, Hoosac teams are outstanding in their ability to play the game to the best of their own ability. Hoosac does not permit its teams to be dominated by a master coach mind for sports are considered not ends in themselves, but the wisest means the adolescent has for keener perception of self in relation to others.

The same principle carries through the religious life and spiritual exercise of the boy. From the smallest to the oldest all share equally in the ministrations of worship. Thus the ecclesiastical clique or a religion of passive receptivity gives place to conscious, enthusiastic giving for Consecration at God's table, in the privilege of sharing His hospitality with the greater and eternal society of mankind.

THE CHARMING HOOSAC DINING HALL

HOOSAC BOYS AT STUDY

PREFERENCE is given to boys wishing to enter the lower of the six forms. These forms correspond to the standard pre-college grades of the Regents of the University of the State of New York under which Hoosac is chartered. The rules governing admission are in general unlike other ranking preparatory schools. Hoosac has no scholarships but attempts to provide financial assistance to those who cannot pay full tuition by all sharing in reducing the cost of operation. A maximum and minimum tuition figure is maintained. The standard and traditions of Hoosac School emphasize the character, rather than the financial standing of the pupil in making choice of its student body.

The school is located in a section of New York State shown by reports to have a high rating for healthfulness. The vigorous mountain climate is conducive to sound physical morale, high mindedness, and spiritual well-being. Hoosick is a small hamlet three and a half miles from Hoosick Falls, thirty miles East of Albany on the road to famous Old Bennington, Vt., and thirteen miles from Williams College, Williamstown, Mass. The school campus possesses that geographic isolation, that makes for walls without stone, so precious to the educator and valuable to the growing boy in providing for him the widest range of freedom in nature's workshop, and a social orientation of life which is not pseudo-adult, but genuinely the boys own.

IN ANSWER to a popular anxiety of modern parents and a familiar complaint to the Church School; the danger of too much religion and not enough attention to academic preparation; we seize this opportunity to witness our faith in the greater reality of a "3Rs" task Consecrated to God rather than to big business.

The academic standards of Church Schools are not in danger when unafraid to measure up to the standards of our best Universities. The Church School which has not sold its birth right, gives academic security and more, because it defends the right of the child to learn of the reality of God and the joy of his companionship.

To parents who face the problem and the sacrifices always attendant upon the choice of a better education for their children in these days of confusing values and depressing indecision, Hoosac wishes to add its brief in favor of a scholastic life that not only presents the problem but illuminates the child mind to the fact that the biggest business and reality in life is God's business and reality or it's no business and a sham.

HERE IS A PARISH THAT IS ONE

In Nevada they call Elko County a "parish." It is about 200 miles long one way by 230 the other, mostly sage-covered hills, lofty mountains and some fertile valleys, with a population of 9,000. Cattle and sheep raising and a little mining are the chief industries. The Rev. Frederick C. Taylor, in charge of St. Paul's Church, Elko, visits Wells, Clover Valley, and some other points, involving motor trips of 150 to nearly 300 miles. Last winter the roads were blocked from December 1 until late in March.

VITAL STATEMENT OF MODERN FAITH BY REV. F. R. BARRY

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

"I want to write a book," said Donald Hankey, "called The Living Goodness, analyzing all the goodness and nobility inherent in plain people, and trying to show how it ought to find expression in the church." Father Barry writes that Christianity and the New World (Harpers $3.) is not the book that Donald Hankey would have written but it is an attempt to follow the same clue. If it is not the book that Hankey would have written, it certainly is a book with which he would be thoroughly delighted. In this volume, the Rev. F. R. Barry, fellow and tutor of Balliol College and vicar of the Church of Saint Mary the Virgin, Oxford, gives us a statement of the Christian faith for 1932 that I believe will serve as one of the best answers to the intellectuals like Lippmann and Krutch. Father Barry attempts to show how the Christian world view, centered upon faith in God and accordingly supernatural in emphasis, offering itself as an interpretation of life today, can make a vital appeal to the thoughtful mind of our time as well as to the man in the street.

Commencing with an analysis of the genius of the New Testament and the origin and growth of Christianity and its ultimate victory in a pagan world, Dr. Barry brings the volume immediately up to the present time with the discussion of humanism. In contrast to secular humanism the author points out that there is a real Christian form of humanism "which sings its way through the New Testament, especially the Epistle to the Ephesians." The necessity of our age is to return to a belief in God and in the supernatural; to discover God meeting us in Christ as the father of our spirits and in the gifts and discipline of life itself as the creator of a living universe. God manifests himself through the Holy Spirit, and the meaning of man's life in its innumerable forms has to be found in doing God's will.

Perhaps the most interesting section of the book is that on the content of God's will and the meaning of values. The author points out very clearly the danger of finding God's will only through emotional religious experience. God he sees working throughout the whole universe making Himself felt in many different kinds of experience. For example, he writes: "The clergy are apt to invite the laity to turn aside from the office or the golf course, the laboratory, garage or consulting-room, at the end of the day or maybe in the lunch hour, in order to 'give part of your time to God.' But what do we think they have been doing all day? If God is not present in the enterprises, the scientific research, the 'city' life, the school, the home, and even in the pleasures of this richly coloured and absorbing age, I cannot conceive where in the world He is. It is vital that we should acclaim the work of God, His power, His presence, His creative activity, even where men cannot consciously recognize Him." And in another place he further elucidates this idea by pointing out that there are many situations in which we find ourselves "when the specifically 'religious' response is not that which God's will requires of us. God's will in engineering, for instance, is primarily (though of course not only) obedience to the laws of mechanics. The religious engineer says his prayers: but that will confer no absolution from fidelity to his professional technique. At the least he cannot hope to be doing God's will if he is insensitive to that obligation. The same cardinal principle holds over the whole area of men's enterprises."

After having explored the presuppositions and the adequacy of the Christian philosophy of life, the author proceeds to discuss the problems which a modern Christian faces in his personal family relations, in dealing with the very difficult subject of sex relations, and in the very wide and varied subject of his relation to the state, taking up such questions as his attitude toward other races, toward other nations, his patriotism, and finally he concludes the book with a chapter on the life eternal. The volume constitutes one of those rare comprehensive treatments of a modern Christian faith which will be of vital help to both clergy and laity and particularly ought not to be missed by the former.

CHICAGO CITY MISSION IS BUSY

The city mission society of Chicago was never busier than at present according to a statement just issued by the superintendent, the Rev. John F. Plummer. Several institutions have been added to the long list of those to which visitations are made regularly; street meetings are being held in Jefferson Park, under the direction of Captain William Hosking of the Church Army, and just recently new work has been inaugurated in the hospital for the mentally sick at Manteno, Illinois.

With an idea possibly of injecting a bit of life into an otherwise dull summer the diocese of Arkansas is staging a pretty little scrap over the election of their new bishop, the Very Rev. John Williamson, dean at Little Rock, who was elected bishop in May. It seems that Bishop Denby, suffragan bishop for Negroes in the province of the Southwest, together with the Rev. Samuel H. Rainey and the Rev. W. S. Simpson-Atmore, white priests of the diocese, did not like the way Negroes were treated at the diocesan convention which was held at St. Paul's, Newport, on May 11th. On May 4th the rector of the parish, the Rev. William T. Holt, wrote Bishop Denby informing him that there would be no objection to Negroes sitting in the church and voting but that there might be some objection if the two races received Holy Communion together. He therefore suggested that the Negroes have their own communion service in the chapel. Bishop Denby was not too keen about this arrangement, writes of "the uncatholic proceeding of the whole affair" and says that he refused to be a party to it, as did the other Negro clergy. It is because of this incident that he and the two clergymen oppose the consecration of Dean Williamson and they have sent letters to the bishops of the Church suggesting that they refuse to ratify his election. Just what connection Dean Williamson had with the whole unfortunate affair is not made clear in any evidence presented to us.

Meanwhile diocesan leaders have sent out a well documented statement of considerable length explaining the action and urging the bishops to ratify the election. From this evidence it seems that the vestry of St. Paul's, Newport, where the convention was held, instructed their rector, Mr. Holt, to avoid the race issue by inviting the Negroes to have their own service. Mr. W. A. Billingsley, senior warden, in a letter to the standing committee, says that "we desired to make the colored clergy comfortable and happy and we were most eager to avoid their being offered any indignity." So apparently to effect this desired result the Negroes were asked not to receive with their white brothers. They didn't, though diocesan authorities now state that they might have done so had they cared to. Mr. Billingsley concludes his letter by stating that "This is purely a local affair and has nothing whatever to do with the diocese or the convention or the election of Dean Williamson." Probably by this time, if I may be allowed to inject a comment, Mr. Billingsley has discovered that any action taken by a local parish which can by any stretch of the imagination be interpreted as an insult to an entire race is of interest not only outside the parish but outside the diocese as well.

Meanwhile Bishop Oldham of Albany has objected to the ratification of the election on entirely different, and it seems to me, much stronger grounds. He points out that the diocese of Arkansas, a comparatively weak diocese, already is supporting three bishops; Bishop Winchester, resigned; Bishop Saphore, suffragan, and Bishop Denby, Negro suffragan. To add another bishop, to his way of thinking, will add too great a burden not only to the diocese but to the whole Church since Arkansas now received a considerable slice of cash from the National Council.

The executive committee of the diocese meets these charges by informing the bishops of the Church politely that Arkansas should be allowed to handle its own affairs; that the salary of $3500 paid to Bishop Denby is for work he is supposed to do in the entire province and not merely in Arkansas; that Bishop Winchester is granted $125 a month, "purely a diocesan affair, granted through love as an honorarium"; and that the salary of Bishop Saphore has recently been substantially reduced.

We are informed that Dean Williamson's election has been approved by a majority of the diocesan standing committees but has not been approved as yet by a majority of the bishops.

AN APPEAL

EVERYONE apparently agrees that the Church should have a free press; one in which honest opinions and criticisms may be expressed. General Convention meeting in Denver was strong in expressing this need. Yet it must be obvious that papers worthy of the Episcopal Church cannot be maintained unless there is generous support. THE WITNESS solicits this support in the form of circulation. We believe we have a better paper than ever before. We are about to start features which will add to the paper's value. We are bringing THE WITNESS out at a price which barely pays publishing costs. We wish to take this opportunity to urge all who believe that the Church should have an unhampered press to support the weeklies. Pleading for ourselves in particular may we urge rectors at this time to send in orders for Bundles: Ten or more copies to be sold each week at the Church. We will bill quarterly at 3c a copy. Will you, Mr. Rector, please do what you can by placing an order at this time.

Doing the Job Up Brown

Running true to his oft repeated idea that when you go a long ways to a mission you should make the trip worth while, Rev. George B. Gilbert of Middlesex County, Connecticut, recently put on a program at the close of which all agreed to call it a day. The service began with confirmation of a large class for that church after which followed a sermon. Then came the ordinations of a Deacon, George B. Gilbert Jr., after which came the ordination of a priest, Gilbert Vaughn H. Hemsley, and after this came the celebration of the Holy Communion. A picnic dinner and social hour was enjoyed on the church lawn after which the program was continued. There was the public baptism of an infant and this was followed by a full Children's Day program with recitations and singing. Then came an historical address telling of the early days of the parish, with many reminiscences, by a former rector of the parish. There was one very old and feeble person present and it is said that some lingered to see whether they could not attend a funeral before they went home.

Sam Shoemaker Goes On the Road

Announcement has been made by the vestry of Calvary Church, New York, that the Rev. Samuel Shoemaker Jr., rector, has been granted a leave of absence for six months to devote himself, with Mr. Frank Buchman, to a campaign on behalf of the First Century Christian Fellowship. As our readers know Mr. Shoemaker has long been a leader in this movement and the vestry in their announcement give much credit to the movement for the spiritual and material well being of Calvary parish. For my part I have long been impressed with the earnestness and zeal of the followers of Mr. Buchman. Indeed there have been occasions when I felt they were both too earnest and over zealous. Nevertheless one does have to take one's hat off to a group that really means business. But I often wonder why it does not occur to them that their great earnestness is expended largely on relatively petty problems of personal relations. One can hear them discuss a problem like smoking by the hour for instance, and I cannot for the life of me see that it matters very much to anyone, let alone God, whether or not I take an occasional drag at a pipe. Members of the Fellowship are a fine lot of sober Christians wasting good energy on over-introspection at a time when the world is yelling for social vision. Not that Sam Shoemaker hasn't social vision. I am sure that he has. Here's hoping that he has been "guided" to devote this six months to the movement in order to inject a bit of it into his fellows.

Ministers On Vacation Have a Meeting

It occurred to the Rev. Elton K. Bassett, pastor at Boothbay Harbor, Maine, that there were a great many clergymen summering in his part of the country and that it would be nice to bring them together. So he sent out invitations. As a result whole flocks of them met the other day for a couple of hours of friendly chatter. There were no addresses and no man was called upon to say anything. The Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick of New York was one of the forty or fifty present, as was also the Rev. Charles W. Gilkey of the University of Chicago. Another attending was the Rev. Mrs. Mary S. Gibson who is in charge of a Methodist Church in Maine. Among the Episcopalians present were the Rev. Leonard W. S. Stryker of Youngstown, Ohio; the Rev. Sidney T. Cooke, assistant at St. James Church, New York; the Rev. George E. Manson of Providence and the Rev. Cameron F. McRae, missionary in China.

Lexington to Hold Conferences

The diocese of Lexington is to hold conferences for the clergy September 14-16 and for the laity the three days following. The leaders are to be Bishop Abbott, General George B. Duncan, retired officer of the army and the Rev. Eric M. Tasman, field secretary of the National Council. The conferences are to be held at Margaret Hall, Versailles.

Secretary of College Work Goes to Pennsylvania

The Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, secretary for college work under the National Council has resigned to accept an appointment as chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania where he is to take up his work this month. The following statement has been made public by the Rev. John W. Suter Jr., the executive secretary of the department of religious education, under whose direction Mr. Stabler worked:

BISHOP OLDHAM
Opposes Arkansas Election

Mr. Stabler's work with the National Council during the past two years has been marked by statesmanship and constructiveness. During his tenure of office, and with his direct help, thirty-six positions in colleges and universities have been filled and arrangements are under way at the present time to fill fourteen vacancies. The confidence of bishops and college presidents in the student-work policy of the National Council has been both maintained and increased. One of the outstanding forward-looking pieces of work done by Mr. Stabler was consummated last spring when the National Council created the Episcopal Student Foundation, which seeks to place ultimately at the disposal of religious work in colleges a sum of money which shall be commensurate with the undoubted interest of Episcopalians in this great missionary field.

Plans for continuing the work of college secretary of the National Council will be announced later. The National Council's commission on college work, of which Bishop Dallas of New Hampshire is chairman, will have a statement to make in the autumn.

Griswold Hall Project Outlined

Plans for the creation of a building fund and an endowment for Griswold Hall, home for aged and disabled clergy of the diocese of Chicago, are under way, in charge of a commission of several clergy and laymen appointed by Bishop Stewart.

The Hall as now established consists of a six-apartment building, purchased by the Church Home for Aged Persons on a site adjoining the Home on the South Side. Two apartments are occupied and are paid for by the Bishop to the Church Home for his discretionary fund. The commission hopes to interest friends of the late Bishop Griswold in giving funds to build upon endowment, the income of which will pay the rental on the present apartments; to create a building fund so that the commission may purchase the site and building from the Church Home, and eventually to replace the present apartment building with a new and appropriate structure worthy of the name of Bishop Griswold.

Bishop Williams' Son Becomes a Rector

The Rev. Benedict E. Williams, son of the late Bishop Charles D. Williams of Michigan, becomes the rector of Trinity Church, Detroit, today. He was ordained deacon in May, 1930, and since then has been an assistant at St. John's, Detroit. He succeeds the Rev. M. J. Van Zandt at Trinity, he having accepted a call to St. Thomas', Neenah-Menasha, Wisconsin.

Idaho Has Own Summer Conference

The missionary district of Idaho held a summer conference at McDonald's Point for nine days in July. McDonald's Point is on Lake Coeur d'Alene and is a church property owned jointly by the districts of Spokane and Idaho. There were about ninety persons present, including three-fourths of the clergy of the district. The Rev. V. E. Newman of Wallace was director; Bishop Barnwell was chaplain and lecturer on the Church's Program; Dr. Francis Laney of the University of Idaho lectured on Science and Re-

Rev. W. M. Partridge On Preaching Tour

The Rev. W. M. Partridge of the diocese of Massachusetts has his own ideas about memorials. His brother was Bishop Partridge, late bishop of Western Missouri, and as a memorial to him this clergyman is travelling about the country in an automobile of ancient vintage, accompanied by a companionable dog of uncertain parentage, holding preaching missions. He stopped recently in Louisville, Kentucky, and according to the Rev. Humphrey Dixon, rector of St. Stephen's and Calvary Churches, his message was full of the sort of mission spirit which is greatly needed by most congregations. Father Partridge, as he says he is to be called, plans to cover thousands of miles, is travelling on no fixed schedule, and gladly places himself at the disposal of any who can use him.

Establish School for Girls in Brazil

Two steps of far-reaching importance have recently been taken by the Brazilian Church in purchasing in the city of Pelotas, properties for founding a school for girls and for establishing an orphanage. A school for girls to correspond with the Southern Cross School for boys in Porto Alegre has long been one of the outstanding needs of the Brazil mission. An appeal was made and friends of the mission in the United States contributed the necessary funds. After careful deliberation, it was decided to establish the school in Pelotas, one of the most beautiful and progressive cities in Southern Brazil. The lot purchased is near the center of the city and is situated on one of its highest points, an ideal location. Construction will begin in the near future. The project has created much interest in the city and has received the widest publicity. Already, several outstanding citizens have announced their intention of enrolling their daughters in the school when it is opened.

A large house and a twenty acre tract of land, located a short distance from the city, were purchased for the orphanage at a very small price. This enterprize is being financed almost entirely by the native Church. The house, after slight alterations, will be able to shelter twenty children. The spacious grounds are partly wooded and a bold spring on the property will furnish abundant water for the establishment.

started properly and in good order. In Japan, among Christians at least, they inaugurate a new home by having a worship meeting, when the essentials of a Christian home are discussed. They may eat too but at least that is not the primary purpose of meeting. One of these house warming services was attended recently by an American missionary who writes that it was a significant ceremony which might well be adopted in America. Aside from that remark the chief impression she received seemed to be the discomfort of sitting for fifty minutes on straw matting.

"My legs cramp and go to sleep after thirty minutes," she declares. "I was finally given some cushions. I simply had to stretch once during the prayer. A man is allowed to sit tailor fashion, but the women cannot do this. It tickled me to see our Japanese friends squirming a bit under the dear old pastor's long discourse. These folks sit at desks in school or office, and use chairs a good deal of the time, so it is as hard for them as it is for us to squat on the floor these days. After a while I went out into the little dining room where I could stretch in private and found Saji Sam's mother there doing the same thing! She is a dear old lady."

Maybe we can swap ideas—we'll go in for the prayer meetings and the Japanese will go in for chairs. That ought to be a gain all around.

Presiding Bishop Meets With the Indians

The Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry attended the annual Niobrara Convocation for Sioux Indians on the Cheyenne Reservation, South Dakota, August 19-21. The first of the Church's elected presiding bishops to participate in this famous Indian gathering, Bishop Perry addressed the convocation, sat with the Indians in council, and ordained three Indians to the diaconate. This gathering which brought together thousands of Christian Indians from all over South Dakota for three days of fellowship and worship was initiated by Bishop Hare, when there were no Christian Indians in his district. The Cheyenne Reservation on which the Niobrara Convocation was held this year is adjacent to Standing Rock. It has twelve chapels ministered to by Indian clergy and catechists under the general supervision of a white priest. Here, for three days, the Presiding Bishop, the bishop and clergy of South Dakota with hundreds of Indians from every reservation—Crow Creek, Lower Brule, Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Standing Rock, Sisseton,—lived together in Wigwam and tent, gaining strength from their fellowship, friendly counsellings, and common worship for the tasks of the days ahead.

Bishop Quin's telegram concluded with the unique sentence: "We are not asking aid but just telling you."

A Service for Laughter

Services which are intended "to express the sense of God in men's week-day occupations, . . . to give thanks for the creative use He makes of each profession with its distinctive contribution to the life of the whole people of God," are held from time to time in the Cathedral at Liverpool. One marked the centenary of a railroad and emphasize the fact of God bringing human beings together through engineering and transport. Another service held at the time of the Lancashire agricultural show was a thanksgiving for God's gift of bread and all the kindred wealth of farming. The British Association for the Advancement of Science celebrated its centenary with a service in which its centenary president, Jan Christian Smuts, took part, and which was a thanksgiving for the progress of knowledge through the Holy Spirit.

Latest in the series was "a service of thanksgiving for imagination and laughter," occasioned by the Lewis Carroll centenary and an anniversary of Edward Lear of Nonsense fame. Canon Soulby of the Cathedral describes this service in the midsummer issue of The Cathedral Age (Washington, D. C.) and quotes parts of it, including a meditation written by John Masefield. Canon Soulby says that these special services have heightened the appreciation of the people for all the regular feasts and seasons of the Christian year.

Presents First Confirmation Class

The first confirmation class in many years at Nixon, Nevada, was presented this year, by Miss Alice Wright. The class was composed of ten well prepared Indian children. The day included the service of the Holy Communion, breakfast, confirmation, a funeral, and a reception to welcome the Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Stimson, newly arrived to take charge of the mission.

Miss Wright has since gone to Fort McDermitt, on a new venture, starting the Church's work among Indians who, so far as can be learned, have never had the Gospel preached to them, unless possibly in the old days when the fort was occupied. They are on the Fort McDermitt Reservation, seventy-five miles from a railroad, up north of Winnemucca, on the Oregon state line. McDermitt itself has been visited by the Rev. H. A. Lascelles of Winnemucca but there has been no work on the Reservation. The government has been most helpful and is allowing the use of a roomy building for the work. Equipment is needed for it.

for Americans residing there. The school was reopened last fall, with the number of students increased from 27 to 54, with a registration of at least 75 expected this September. There have been material improvements also, particularly through the installing of running water and plumbing. A summer school for younger children was opened on June 15th, while the main building is being used this month and next as a hotel, the profits going toward the school maintenance. Bishop Lloyd expresses the gratitude of the trustees, of which he is chairman, for the unwavering backing Kuling has received. He also points out that the school is facing increasing needs and a decreasing income and expresses the hope for the continuance of as generous support as these difficult days make possible.

News From District of Mexico

"Entusiasmo" is the word most frequently found in recent issues of El Heraldo, a Church paper from Guadalajara, Mexico, containing accounts of the first visitations of Bishop Salinas y Velasco. They seem to have been joyful occasions. At Christ Church, Guadalajara, he confirmed five persons and instituted the Rev. Jose N. Robredo as priest in charge. From there he went on the same day to San Martin de las Flores where they had a great feast after the service. At Zoquipan, in the Mission of St. Francis of Assisi, the Bishop and his wife were sponsors at the baptism of a little boy.

At San Sebastian, Bishop Salinas was welcomed with "el mas justo entusiasmo," by friends who had known him there as a deacon in 1916. People came from surrounding villages, San Sebastianito, Tlajomulco and Las Lomas. Nineteen were confirmed.

The trouble with Mexican news is that it loses nine-tenths of its life when removed from its native language and surroundings. At Guadalajara, for instance, the humble little church was hung with bright garlands of cedar, there were quantities of flowers on the altar and at the windows, and decorations of white and purple crepe paper were "profusamente distribuidos." Typical of all the reports is the closing sentence from Zoquipan: "May God grant that we be permitted the pleasure of again having our beloved Bishop among us".

Vol. XVII. No. 2 | SEPTEMBER 8, 1932 | Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

WE HAVE INDULGED in special pleading on this page in the last two numbers quite aware that it is hardly the place for it. We promise that this shall be the last. There are two seasons of the year when we are anxious to bring articles that we are to feature to the attention of our readers, particularly the clergy; just before the Lenten season and at this season when the fall work of parishes is again putting on a full head of steam. It is no secret certainly that all the weeklies of the Church are having a difficult time maintaining themselves. Advertising revenue, meager even in good times, has fallen off materially. There are various reasons for this, none of which need be dealt with here. That circulation figures should also drop is a bit more difficult to understand. It is generally conceded by authorities in journalism that the Episcopal Church maintains the best weeklies in the religious field. That but a comparatively few out of the hundreds of thousands of cultured people who make up the membership of the Church are regular readers of a Church paper is therefore not due to any low standard of journalism. The reason is doubtless that given by Bishop Johnson in the foreword of his new book, "The Story of the Church" where he writes that "In theory we are an Episcopal Church having a world wide mission. In practice we are very much of a Congregational Church, chiefly interested in parochial affairs." The news presented in the weeklies of necessity has to be of more than local interest and for this very reason is not of particular interest to those concerned merely about the happenings within their own parishes. It is desirable, we believe, to widen the vision of our Church people. And we are convinced, we hope impartically, that the weeklies of the Church are an effective means of doing this.

Commencing in the issue of September 22nd we are to start two new features; a series of articles by Bishop Johnson on "What I Believe and Why," and a series of Bible Lessons presented each week through the next year by the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker. We hope that a great nationwide Bible Class is to be built around these lessons, with Church people all over the country following them carefully each week and seeking, at the end of the series, the certificate which will be presented to each one passing a written examination. In addition to these articles we will present the regular features; editorial comment on this page; Bishop Wilson's articles; the "Cheerful Confidences" by Dr. Atwater; the brief editorials by Mr. Moodey; stories for boys and girls by Eveleen Harrison and at least one contributed article each week. In addition there will be the news of national interest, presented by a staff of over fifty correspondents through the managing editor.

We are now pleading with rectors particularly to bring the paper to the attention of their people. The Bundle Plan, experience has proven, is the most effective method of doing this. A bundle of ten or more copies will be sent each week. These can be sold each Sunday at the Church door, with a boy or girl in charge preferably. If not then have them placed on a literature table, with a sign which we will send upon request, asking people to drop five cents in a box for a copy. We charge three cents for a copy, billing each quarter. In addition to selling copies through the Bundle Plan we hope rectors will arrange to have an individual, or a parish organization, solicit annual subscriptions upon which we allow a liberal commission of 33%. Clergymen are to receive from us this week an announcement of our feature articles for the fall and winter, together with the offer of Bishop Johnson's "The Story of the Church" and the new book, "The Christian Way Out" to all who order a bundle of ten copies for a period of three months. Knowing the costs of publishing the books and of producing THE WITNESS each week we can assure you that this is a generous offer. But we are not pleading with you to take advantage of a bargain. Rather we urge you to use the weeklies—this one or some other—to widen the vision of your people; also support the weeklies in order that these journals, vital to the life of the Church in the opinion of our authorative General Convention, may continue to exist.

APPARENTLY THERE ARE many Britishers who believe that the American public is gullible enough to turn out in droves to listen to any Englishman who seeks to fatten his purse by taking to our lecture platform. The latest to announce that he plans to visit America for lectures is the Rev. Harold Francis Davidson, the clergyman of the English Church who was recently found guilty of misconduct by an ecclesiastical court. It is his plan, according to a press report, to tour the United States, accompanied by one or more of his lady friends, in order to raise funds with which to finance his appeal to another court. It is probably impossible for any Church authority on the other side to prevent his coming if he takes it into his head to do so. But we would like to pass the word on to the Reverend gentleman that, in spite of appearances to the contrary on more than one occasion, we doubt if he could pick up enough cash over here to pay his fare, travelling Tourist Third.

JUST HOW FAR churches should go in raising funds for depleted coffers is raised by a report that the department of justice is campaigning against lotteries conducted by fraternal orders and churches. Their first gun indictments have been brought against a number of prominent individuals and a large American corporation, charging them with having been parties to lotteries for fraternal orders. The Christian Century editorially questions whether churches have been guilty of such practices and challenges the government to produce the facts. That there are churches who have used the mails to raise funds in this way may well be questioned. Nevertheless there can be no doubt that questionable methods are frequently used by parishes at bazaars and fairs. On any summer day in a fair sized American city one can find church fairs, with elaborately decorated booths setting forth spinning roulette wheels. Poker, red dog, black jack—we are not in a position to condemn any of these games. But we believe they should be confined to the sanctity of the home if they must be played for stakes; certainly not brought into the parish house or church yard. As a matter of fact the bazaar system of raising church funds might well be questioned. For Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith each to make a freewill offering of a dollar has greater merit spiritually than for Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith to swap cakes in the parish house, with the church gaining two dollars by the transaction. And we rather imagine that Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith might be so persuaded if the matter was quietly presented to them. After all swapping food and buying kewpie dolls is a rather cheap way to support your church.

ROBERT STANKE, resident of Louisville, Kentucky, doesn't know too much about higher criticism but he is a serious Christian doing his best to live up to the light God has given him. Born of German parents in a part of Russia that is now Poland he is a citizen of no country. So he applied to this land of his adoption for citizenship. He was asked if he would bear arms in case of war. He replied that he would do acts of mercy but not bear arms. Said he; "I would not take up arms at no time and in no war, because the dear Lord Jesus saved me from sin and His word tells me not to kill nor fight with carnal weapons, and therefore, according to my conviction, I would never take up arms at no time in no country and in no place, entirely trusting the dear Lord Jesus for my protection." Edward J. Kennedy, immigration inspector, told Mr. Stanke he could not approve him for citizenship in view of the United States Supreme Court decision in the MacIntosh-Bland cases. United States Judge Charles I. Dawson expressed his sorrow but said that it would be impossible to admit him to citizenship. "Sweet land of liberty — may freedom ring."

BISHOP JOHNSON

WE HAVE discussed the habits which make a good golf player. Some people may ask why we connect religion with golf. Well from a scriptural standpoint we can quote St. Paul who evidently attended the Corinthian games and in them saw a parable of the Christian life. "So fight I not as one that beateth the air." Now fighting in these games was a most irreligious affair. Men fought with brass knuckles instead of with soft boxing gloves. When one was hit he was badly gouged, and yet St. Paul was able to see beneath the combat that which applied to the warfare of a Christian. If one were to "beat the air" he would undoubtedly become the recipient of some terrific scars. The powers of evil would punish severely anyone who fought without adequate defense mechanism. It was important that Christians should know the technique of their vocation, and that technique could be compared to the rules of boxing.

In the same way the game of golf resembles the game of life. This does not mean that a good golfer is necessarily a good Christian. He is apt to be quite otherwise. Many Christians make golf a substitute for worship, inadvertently declaring that it is more important to knock about a golf ball than it is to worship God.

But the rules of sportsmanship are similar in all games. A good sportsman is one who meticulously observes the rules of the game that he is playing. A Christian who substitutes golf for worship is as poor a sportsman in the great game of life as is the golfer who substitutes a good lie for a bad one. As a fighter he is beating the air and deceiving himself. He may be playing the game of golf according to the rules but he is not playing the game of life in a sportsman-like fashion. He is not "so running that he may obtain".

THERE are three cardinal rules of golf with which the golfer is familiar. The strange thing is that he has to be told them over and over again. They seem so simple and yet are really quite difficult. It ought to be easy to keep your eye on the ball. It ought to be easy to keep your head down, but its very simplicity seems to defeat its attainment. We are so anxious to complete the play before it is finished. Our curiosity gets the best of our commonsense. Our overconfidence causes us to foozle our shot.

Now there is another rule that is not so simple. It requires some practice. It is called "following through". It is not enough merely to hit the ball with brute strength. The perfection of the shot consists in form, rhythm and the thoroughness of the stroke. It is one of the exasperating things about golf that a slender stripling will send the ball two hundred and fifty yards straight down the course, while the village blacksmith, if he hits the ball at all, will send it about a hundred yards into the rough.

Why this discrepancy? It is to be found in what one might call technique. I wonder that it does not occur to more people that if golf and bridge and business and professions have technique that religion, which is the most difficult of all games, has even more need of it. We have said that the technique of a stroke in golf depends upon three things, form, rhythm and following through.

NOW in religion it is quite common to hear someone say that form is a bad thing. They want to worship God in any old way which usually means that they do not worship him at all. Form is merely the expressing of a habit. Of course there are good and bad habits in any game, but it is silly to deprecate good form because bad form is common and to advocate that therefore we should not try to have any form at all.

The Bishop of Derry once described life as "transforming conscious effort into unconscious habit." If you are learning to play the piano it is at first a conscious effort to hit each key, but a real musician, who has form, strikes the keys without conscious effort. He really isn't a musician if he doesn't. Our habits determine our permanent character.

Prayer at first is a conscious effort to seek God. Prayer can become a habit of the soul by which all that one does is orientated to the presence of God. That is form but it can be acquired only by conscious effort. There are no people who deceive themselves more than those who think that prayer is a casual reference to God when we are in trouble or need. Prayer is not teasing God for things.

As I once told a congregation in Colorado, if you are going to go into the mountains instead of worshipping God on the Lord's Day, go, but don't lie about it. Don't say that you are going there to worship God, because I predict that if you mention God at all on the trip it will be when your automobile is out of order, and that isn't worship.

Then there is rhythm which means that you should add beauty to form. Formal worship has a tendency to be mechanical unless it is surrounded by beauty. That is why we add color, music and ritual in our worship. To one who is accustomed to a colorful service life seems drab without it. And worship is more than just talking to God. It is not that religion without beauty is vicious. It is rather that it is dull and colorless.

BUT the stroke is not complete unless one follows through. This means that you hit the ball in such a way that the club pushes the ball along instead of merely smacking it. At least that is the way it seems.

To form and rhythm in religion one needs to add persistence which is a way of following through. Religion is or ought to be a continuous process rather than an occasional spasmodic effort. So many people worship God in a succession of spasmodic efforts. There is no thoroughness or throughness in the process.

Professor Eddington in his "Nature of the Physical World" says that "the quest of the absolute is the best way to understand the relative appearances of the physical world." I think the same thing is true in religion. It is only as we seek God Who is the absolute that the relative appearances of life have any meaning or end in any adequate purpose.

You are doing one of two things in your life; you are either orientating yourself to God as a habit of your life or you are trying to orientate everything in the world to yourself. In the latter event I fail to see how you can follow through to any ultimate purpose.

Keep your eye on the ball!
Don't look up prematurely!
Follow through!

So run that you may obtain.

The Witness Fund

IN THESE days of unemployment particularly there are many people, desirous of THE WITNESS, many of whom have had it since it started sixteen years ago, who feel compelled to discontinue their subscriptions. It is obviously impossible for the paper to bear the burden of continuing these subscriptions. We therefore appeal to readers who are able to do so to add a bit to their checks when renewing their own subscriptions and thus make it possible for us to continue to send these old friends their paper each week.

We acknowledge with many thanks the following donations to THE WITNESS FUND:

TEA TIME AT ST. MARY'S SCHOOL

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL

By

MRS. CLINTON A. McLANE

Principal

THE vital purpose of Saint Mary's School is to combine and coordinate the most valuable characteristics of a church school with those of a progressive school. Established in 1886 in Concord, New Hampshire, by Bishop Niles, it perpetuates the tradition inspired by his vision and derives fresh impulse from the significant results of modern educational practice.

If a church school is worthy of the name, it means a deepened spiritual life. Religious study and training are of importance to a child only as they are actually related to his everyday activity and enrich his whole personality.

Progressive education certainly recognizes this fact though the term embraces countless other ideas and objects. Perhaps its most distinctive aim is the guidance of a child so that he will adequately adjust himself to whatever problems and environment he may eventually encounter. This implies, of course, nothing less than emotional, as well as mental and physical, development of self. To accomplish this end, it is desirable that the child's education, in the real sense of the word, start at an early age and be a continuous unified process so that coherence and effectiveness will result. At Saint Mary's this is possible because of the nursery-school which boys and girls enter at the age of two. Here they learn to work and play happily together, to form correct mental and physical habits and to develop their powers of sense perception and creative expression. From the nursery-school to the kindergarten is a natural step, after which the girls enter, successively, the lower and upper schools, where they are prepared for any college recognized by the college entrance examination board, or where they follow a more general course covering a wider range of subjects.

THE physical aspect of the school is decidedly attractive, comprising as it does four separate buildings in a spacious setting, of which the principal residence is occupied by the principal and the younger children who are under her especial care. Its natural, informal atmosphere is that of a delightful home, not of an institution; it contains the main living rooms, library and dining room. The fully-equipped gymnasium is in a separate extension. Alumnae House, one of two other residences, was presented to the school by its former students, and provides a guest room for their own use and excellent facilities for practice work in connection with the household arts course. The school house, planned and furnished according to the newest, most approved design, has various departmental class rooms, a large sunny study hall, a well-equipped science laboratory, a music room and studio.

AN AFTERNOON OF WINTER SPORTS

The school program has been prepared to meet the actual needs of the pupils. Administered by the principal and a carefully selected faculty, it is adapted to human as well as academic requirements. Devoid of mechanical and meaningless detail, the schedule thus produces interest rather than inertia. The fundamental purpose of the curricula is to teach the girls to study intelligently and to think independently. Originality, initiative and self-discipline are encouraged, for the attainment of mental maturity is considered an achievement more valuable than the mere passing of an examination. As all classes are small, individual attention, as well as the conference method, is possible. The courses are correlated in such a way that they cease to be dissociated subjects, and become part of a living, organic whole. For instance, the girls studying child psychology have the opportunity for practice in the nursery-school, where direct contact and experience with little children enable them to test and apply the theories they have learned.

Extra-curriculum activities involve the question of the wisest use of leisure,—a question especially insistent under contemporary conditions. Both indoors and outdoors, the pupils occupy themselves with wholesome recreation which calls into play their creative abilities and enlists their sustained enthusiasm, implying both imagination and definite constructive effort. They discover for themselves new interests of permanent appeal, and capture the thrill of hitherto unexplored delights which have a lasting value.

IN THE field of sports—played for the intrinsic satisfaction each affords, not for the sake of rivalry and competition—the scope is unusually wide. It includes riding, swimming in an indoor pool, cricket, riflery and mountain climbing, and the school grounds have tennis, Badminton and croquet courts, as well as space for other games. All sports are, of course, carefully supervised. A large tract of land has recently been secured, several miles out in the country, and here the girls in learning to know nature at its loveliest find unexpected sources of happiness. Here too they enjoy all kinds of winter sports, followed by tea or supper which they prepare in the "Wee Little House", a small red cottage on the property, that they have transformed into a club house.

There are other expeditions, however, no less enjoyable than those to Beech Hill, though undertaken for different reasons. Sometimes these entail a trip to Boston, whose unequalled advantages in the way of plays, concerts, exhibitions and lectures supplement those nearby. Interesting also are the visits of personal investigation made in order to gain practical knowledge not to be secured from books. The pupils learn how a legislature, court, bank, library, printing-press and other typical organizations really work, by seeing them in action, and therefore acquire a clearer comprehension of the functions and institutions which effect civic life.

Saint Mary's School recognizes also the values inherent in social experience, and their essential influence in the development of character. For no individual can express or fulfil his personality who ignores the opportunity for friendship and social contact, or who is unresponsive to human needs. And at a time like the present, when the fabric of society and the strongholds of civilization seem to be crumbling, it is more than ever necessary that children should be fortified by the armor of light which only education in mental balance, emotional control and spiritual integration can give.

Ancient Gunmen

WE WHO read the newspapers with their daily accounts of the activities of racketeers and gunmen, may sometimes be led to believe that such persons are the fruits of modern American civilization. They are really a very ancient institution.

Josephus, the eminent Jewish historian, gives a graphic account of the events leading up to the Jewish insurrection of 66 A. D. It was the period when the notorious Herod family dominated the affairs of Palestine and the Jews suffered severe suppression under the Roman emperors. Certain bold spirits decided that violence was the only alternative. They were known as the "Sicarii" because of the short, curved dagger which they wielded very effectively. Partly they were patriotic zealots and partly they were ordinary gunmen—using daggers instead of automatics. They would mix into crowds, with their weapons concealed in their robes, and having spotted their victim would quietly insert the dagger in a vital spot. Then they would conceal the weapon again in the folds of their garments and howl vigorously with the rest of the agitated mourners. At first it was political enemies who were dispatched but presently the method was found to be very effectual in settling personal feuds. Finally the dagger-men turned professional and were ready to hire themselves out as simple killers for a price. The populace was terrorized, never knowing who would be the next recipient of a secret and deadly thrust.

The Roman governors had their hands full putting these assassins out of the way. Occasionally the governors found them useful. For instance, Felix had difficulty persuading the High Priest Jonathan to do what he wanted to have done. Finally, he appealed to these bands of murderers to get Jonathan out of the picture. They came up to Jerusalem to a religious festival, mingled in the crowd and at a convenient moment did away with the High Priest.

Agitators took advantage of the situation and sometimes organized the dagger-men for their own purpose. On one occasion an Egyptian Jew came to Palestine and declared himself a prophet. He collected a number of assassins on the Mount of Olives and told them that he could make the walls of Jerusalem collapse at his command. The governor sent troops out after them, killed about four hundred and captured a couple of hundred more. The Egyptian himself escaped and, according to another account, went out into the wilderness and gathered a very large following for a time. It was not long after the Mount of Olives incident that St. Paul was set upon by unfriendly Jews as he was preaching in the Holy City and a Roman officer rescued him from the mob. When St. Paul tried to explain to the officer, the Roman asked—"art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?" (Acts 21:38).

One, Eleazor, organized the dagger-men at the time of the insurrection of 66 A. D. and spread terror in all directions. Roman troops pursued them and they were obliged to take refuge in the fortress of Masada, on the Dead Sea, where they withstood a long siege. When the Romans were finally on the point of capturing the fortress, the dagger-men massacred each other in a kind of wholesale suicide pact, so that when the captors won the fortress they found only dead captives inside.

NEW FELLOWSHIP IS DESCRIBED BY MR. A. J. RUSSELL

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

In For Sinners Only Mr. A. J. Russell gives the history of the First Century Christian Fellowship (known to many either as the Oxford Groups or the Buchman Movement) of which he has recently become a member. The book has not yet been published in this country, but many copies of the English edition of Hodder and Stoughton ($1.50) have been imported. As the Fellowship in this country has been especially influential in several Episcopal parishes in the East, it will be of interest to THE WITNESS readers.

The book is written in a most delightfully snappy style and contains the best survey of the work of the Fellowship between two covers we have seen—indeed the jacket carries a special note that it is "The Book of the Oxford Groups." The first five chapters give a splendid summary of the principles of the group, while the rest of the book tells of various conversions and house-parties, and individual and group experiences beginning with the conversion of the founder of the movement, Frank Buchman, and concluding with a description of a recent house-party in Geneva. Most of the story is told in conversational form as Mr. Russell learned it from members of the group.

A study of the principles of the group as elucidated by Mr. Russell will show that they are essentially old Christian principles descending through many generations from the First Century Christians, as one might suspect from the title of the fellowship. A summary of these principles might read something like this. We believe that all men are sons of God but they do not realize it because sin separates them from His spirit. Hence the first thing for a man to do is to eradicate sin. This he can only do through confession. Confession is best to another Christian individual as well as God for it insures release and restitution and gives added check against repetition. This done, the next step is complete surrender or dedication of one's life to the will of God. Through prayer the consecrated individual then endeavors daily to discover the will of God for him. As Christ directed His disciples to go out and teach all nations, in like manner the convert usually finds that the will of God is for him to go out and witness, that is to share his experience with his neighbor in order that he too may know God through Jesus Christ. Hence whatever he does after his surrender he believes to be on the guidance of God or it is sin. This guidance the good convert checks with other members of the group in an effort to prevent the substitution of his own will for that of God. In this way membership in the fellowship means a severe discipline for one's personal living and the added inspiration and help which comes from working with a Christian group.

A few of the chapter titles give a good idea of the contents of the book beyond many elucidations of the above principles: "Guidance at work," "Bill Pickle," "The First House-Party," "What Sin Is," and "The Calvary Miracle." The last named is the story of the work of The Rev. Samuel Shoemaker, in creating a strong religious life in Calvary Church, New York and thereby naturally making it the fountain head of the movement in this country.

It is difficult to lay aside this book and realize that it is written about people in the twentieth century so little mention is made of any of the great social issues of our day—upon the treatment of which the very progress of our Christian civilized life depends.

So far as the characters mentioned in the book are concerned, if they feel that a Christian today has any obligation in regard to: the relief of the terrific human misery of the present time, the ten million unemployed, the problem of world peace, the ethics of our industrial and social order, the continual denial of civil liberties in this country and the negro queston also in our own country, a reader will not find more than a passing mention of it and these very rare. I cannot but feel that if this group is to be a vital power in this century, as their forbears were in the first, they must recognize that they live in a different age and pitch in to the great social battle for a more just and equitable order of society—which battle is the great challenge of our country.

LAYMEN MEET IN CALIFORNIA

The fifth annual lay conference for the men of the diocese of California was held over the Labor Day weekend at Menlo Park. Among the speakers were Bishop Parsons; Mr. R. H. Braden of Trinity, San Francisco; Mr. F. M. Lee, treasurer of the diocese; Mr. Theodore Dredge; Mr. Winthrop Martin of the Advent, San Francisco; Mr. M. E. Hopkins of Ross and the Rev. David Covell, general secretary of the National Council. On Sunday evening the Rev. Lindley Miller of Berkeley gave them a show of motion pictures. There was a lively bit of discussion following each of the excellent addresses.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

One of my favorite pastimes being that of crabbing others for taking long vacations perhaps I should pass on to you this story which was handed me by a friend the other day. A well-known pastor of Toledo had in his congregation a woman of positive conviction and determination—a valuable person in many ways and yet a thorn in the flesh on occasions. As vacation time approached she one day said to him in the presence of a considerable group of his people: "There is no reason for a minister to take a whole month of vacation. The devil never takes a vacation."

"Certainly not," replied the minister. "That's why he's a devil. I'd be one too if I didn't."

And he got two months instead of one.

What Two Women Accomplished

A few weeks ago we announced our intention of presenting here bits about hidden saints; folks whose witness for God and humanity has gone unsung. Over in Philadelphia, in a laboring mans neighborhood there is St. George's Mission, in charge of the Rev. Arnold H. Hord. The last report in the diocesan journal shows this mission to have a membership of 353 communicants, a Sunday school of about 200, an annual budget of $5,000 and a property value of $25,000. This mission owes its existence and its usefulness to the devoted service of a young public school teacher, Miss Katherine C. Coulter. Twenty-five years ago the authorities of the diocese decided to transfer St. George's Church to a better location. However the Rev. A. J. Arkin, in charge, was unwilling to have the old church tumble into ruins from lack of use. So he asked Miss Coulter if she would not take charge of a Sunday school there. She accepted the task, reluctantly at first, for the field was anything but promising, surrounded for the most part by empty lots and small truck farms. However she accepted the task in the spirit of a faithful missionary. Love for the people of the neighborhood, mostly extremely poor, became her passion and she devoted herself to improving their lot. Her Sunday school grew. Then she organized a young people's society. She visited in the homes on Sundays and evenings. Finally the church was reopened for services on Sunday mornings, with Miss Coulter as organist and with a layreader taking the services. Many were brought to baptism and the confirmation classes were large, due chiefly to her visits. Eventually the authorities of the diocese, recognizing the growth, placed a clergyman in charge of this mission, brought back to vigorous life through the devotion of one woman. She is still teaching in the Sunday school and 'tis said that there is no one more loved in the neighborhood than Miss Coulter. Meanwhile her sister, Leah, with whom she lives, should come in for her share of the praise, for she has been the one to polish the pots and kettles at home, thus making her sister's work for the church possible. Martha and Mary, both equally deserving of praise.

Rector's Disappearance Brings Probe of Church

Investigation of the condition of Grace Church, Mobile, Alabama, and of the Seamen's Church Institute in that city is under way following the disappearance last week of the Rev. Rupert C. Witt, rector of the parish and chaplain of the Institute. No trace of Mr. Witt has been found up to the end of the week after six days absence. Bishop McDowell, who carried on the investigation, later reported that the finances of both institutions were in perfect order. There have been numerous rumors concerning the disappearance but none to which the police would give credence, except possibly amnesia. He has been carrying a very heavy load, with a great deal of anxiety and worry over the many seamen who are out of work.

Church School Teachers Meet in Chicago

Mr. Leon C. Palmer is a headliner at a conference of Christ school workers, being held this week in Chicago. The first session is being held at Grace Church, Oak Park, with a special children's service, conducted by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Harold Holt, being a feature. A second conference is to be held at St. Luke's, Dixon, on September 17th when the Rev. Daniel McGregor of the Western Theological Seminary is to be the principal speaker and the Rev. Charles L. Street, headmaster of St. Alban's School, the chaplain. These fall conferences have been successful in past years with about 300 workers registering for the sessions.

Faculty Changes at Pacific Seminary

A number of changes have been made at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, California, which opened its fortieth year on August 15th. Beginning with the present semester a department of supervised pastoral practice has been established under the direction of the Rev. Schuyler Pratt. The course is to include special lectures by a number of experts, including Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles, Bishop Rowe of Alaska, Bishop Parsons of California, Bishop Mitchell of Arizona, Bishop Sanford of San Joaquin, Bishop Jenkins of Nevada, Bishop Sumner of Oregon and Bishop Cross of Olympia. And just to prevent the boys from getting the idea that the Church is composed entirely of bishops it is likely that a priest or two will be run in for a talk or so. The Rev. Charles W. Lowry, a graduate of the Cambridge Seminary who has just completed two years of study at Oxford, has been added to the faculty as a lecturer in theology. In addition he is to have charge of student work at the University of California. Dean Powell, after a year abroad, was welcomed back to the school. He is now the oldest seminary dean in years of service in the church.

Rector to Study Music in New York

Due certainly to some extent to the fact that he has an attractive young wife who was once on the stage, there was a lengthy piece sent over the wires the other day by the Associated Press in regard to the Rev. Henry Scott Rubel of Berwyn, Illinois. You see the story gave the news gatherers a chance to run her picture, an adornment to any newspaper. It seems that the young rector got himself somehow or other a year's leave of absence in order to study music in New York. He is to be accompanied, naturally, by his wife who was before her marriage a member of a vaudeville team, billed on Broadway as the Deuel Sisters. There has been considerable dancing in the Berwyn parish since the arrival there of the young couple. Mrs. Rubel, having a fondness for it since she had done it professionally, started in by organizing a dancing class of the youngsters. But it wasn't long before the mothers were on the scene and for all I know the fathers the tidy sum of $3,000 by giving too. Anyhow the rector's wife raised dancing lessons to the parishioners, all of which was used to pay the debts on the church. And lest you get the idea from this that this was a rector's wife's parish it should be added that the Rev. Mr. Rubel has done a grand piece of work in Berwyn, the parish under his direction having grown both spiritually and numerically.

Bishops to Be Heard On the Air

The department of publicity of the National Council, with the endorsement of the Presiding Bishop, has completed arrangements for a series of eight nation-wide broadcasts, under the general title, The Episcopal Church of the Air, which will begin on September 11, and continue at intervals until May 7, 1933. The series will be inaugurated from Boston by Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts. A peak of interest will be reached on Christmas Day, which falls on Sunday this year, when a message appropriate to this season will be delivered by the Presiding Bishop. The time problem has proved somewhat difficult owing to the fact that in many sections the daylight saving schedule will still be in effect on September 11 when the radio series is inaugurated. Bishop Sherrill will broadcast from Boston at nine A. M. Eastern Standard Time, but subsequent broadcasts will take place at ten A. M. Eastern Standard Time. Conflict with morning services which begin at ten-thirty will be avoided as far as possible by having the address conclude not later than ten twenty. The following is the schedule of broadcasts:

September 11, Bishop Sherrill; October 23, Bishop Page; November 27, Bishop Woodcock; December 25, The Presiding Bishop; January 29, Bishop Ivins; March 5, Bishop Creighton; April 9, Bishop Darst; May 7, Bishop Mann.

Why You Should Support the Church Weeklies

FROM week to week, year after year, these journals of your Church carry the news of the mission field into Church homes—the homes of people whose interest is genuine, the people who are the key people of the Church, the people who give the money and the workers to maintain the Church's Mission.

Their special articles and their editorials give strong backing to the missionary enterprise.

Through their columns thousands of dollars have been raised, without cost to anyone except the publishers, for the work of Missions and for other worthy causes. Week by week these journals keep the mind of the Church stimulated and enlightened on the work in which you have a vital stake.

No one of them is a commercial enterprise. They have a right to your help in securing subscriptions—a right which, exercised by you, returns many times what you give in such a service.

The National Council last year passed a resolution stating in part:

"We cannot too strongly declare our conviction of the value and need of these Church weeklies, and appeal to all loyal Church people to give their support that these papers may continue their valued service to the Church."

Every individual who subscribes to a Church paper, or secures a subscriber, thereby helps every organization of the Episcopal Church.

Racial Work Carried On in California

In and near San Francisco there are at least eight racial groups cared for by the Church: Two Chinese missions, in San Francisco and Oakland, each with flourishing day and night schools in addition to their Church work, and a third Church school for Chinese children in Palo Alto; a Japanese mission in San Francisco with a good Church school and five other organizations, and a group of about fifty Christian Japanese in San Mateo; two Negro missions, in San Francisco and Oakland, and a group of about forty Assyrians in San Francisco. These are all under Archdeacon Porter's comprehensive wing and each general group is in charge of a priest of its own race.

There Is a New Garage In Delaware

Earlier in the summer the Rev. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Incarnation, New York, went to Laurel, Delaware, to address a graduating class. A visitor at the rectory he discovered that there was a parish automobile but no garage to keep it in. As a result the "Silver Garage" today adorns the yard in back of the rectory.

Moving a Church Across the Mountains

On a recent trip through his district Bishop Jenkins of Nevada visited the mining town of Belmont where the first church in Nevada, built by Bishop Whitaker, still stands as mute witness of the prosperity that once existed there. Today but one family remains in the community. Bishop Jenkins now plans to tear down this church, have it carried across the mountains and reassemble it in the substantial gold min-

Synod of the Northwest To Meet in Wyoming

Bishop Perry, presiding bishop, is to conduct a quiet day for the bishops of the province of the Northwest on the opening day of the synod, to be held at Casper, Wyoming, September 27th and 28th. He is also to preach at the opening service and will give an address at the synod banquet. Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, representing the department of religious education, will speak on the importance of school work; there will be a report on the survey of Negro work in the province by the Rev. H. E. Rahaming of Denver; Bishops Schmuck, Bartlett and Kemerer will speak on loyalty to the Church Program; Dean Woodruff of Sioux Falls will address the synod on young people's work, with Bishops Perry, Keeler and Ingley the speakers at the final session.

That Job of Canning Still Goes On

That job of canning fruits and vegetables under the "Friendly Farms" program of the diocese of Chicago is steadily gaining momentum. Twice each week a group of churchwomen gather for the job at St. James' community house, while out in Riverside, at St. Paul's, another group gather for the same purpose. The idea, in case you are not familiar with it, is that farmers donate fruits and vegetables, making their pledges to the church in this way. These are then canned and stored away to be distributed when the snow flies and the wind howls, through social service institutions in Chicago.

Brotherhood Conference Presents Findings

Members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held an international conference in Japan from July 27th to August 11th, with a large number attending from the United States. There was delegates present also from China and Canada, with the Japanese of course well represented. In dealing with evangelism the findings committee presented several methods of reaching people; with newspaper evangelism heading the list. Then they felt that group meetings in private homes was a valuable method, particularly in rural districts. Next there is the personal evangelism, and the reaching of people through the various social agencies of the Church. "The committee feels, however, that the crux of the matter is not to be found in methods but in men. The object of evangelism is to bring the non-Christian to the feet of Christ. This, we feel, can only be accomplished by the action of personality upon personality. The man who has been touched by Christ is after all the best means of bringing another to know that touch."

Dealing with the subject of education the conference stressed the need of maintaining high standards for Church institutions, and expressed the opinion that the faculty for such institutions should be composed exclusively of persons of outstanding Christian character. They also expressed the opinion that the chief purpose of such educational institutions was the training of leaders in the Christian movement.

On the subject of social service the conference stated that:

"The gravity of social problems now facing the world makes it impossible for the Church and its members to side step this question. There is a moral and ethical phase to the social and economic situation that confronts us and where moral and ethical considerations are at stake the way of our Lord must be sought and followed if we be loyal to Him. We believe and affirm that the spirit of Jesus offers a solution to the sickness of society even as it does the sickness of the individual soul. We make an earnest plea for a closer partnership between social study and scholarship and prayerful seeking of the mind of Christ."

Former Rectors to Join in Streator Mission

What is called an "Old Time Mission" is being planned by Christ Church, Streator, Illinois, the Rev. Norman B. Quigg, rector. The special feature of the program will be that former rectors of the parish will conduct the services. The Rev. L. W. Applegate, Hobart, Ind., who built Christ Church, the Rev. James E. Foster, Gary, and the Rev. T. W. McLean, Chicago, are among those expected to return to their former parish for the mission, which opens Sept. 26 and closes with a parish party on Sept. 30.

More About That Gulf Storm

Later information about the recent gulf storm informs us that it caused the complete destruction of four of our Texas missions. St. Paul's, Freeport, St. John's, Brazoria, and the church at Hitchcock were totally destroyed. In addition the rectory at Freeport and the rectory and church at Angleton were about half destroyed. The damage was done by a driving rain and a wind storm that at times reached a velocity of seventy miles an hour. Every Church family suffered some damage to its physical property but fortunately none were numbered among the fifty persons killed. Plans have not as yet been announced by Bishop Quin as to the rebuilding of the missions. It is known however that no storm insurance was carried on any of the buildings.

The Steady Subscriber Who's Never In Arrear

We have a little verse on the back of the renewal subscription notice which some of you are doubtless familiar with, about the steady subscriber who pays in advance. It often inspires others to verse. One of these, this time from a Baptist who likes THE WITNESS, just came in which I pass on to you:

How dear to our heart is the steady subscriber,
Who pays on the dot, and is ne'er in arrear;
Who lays down the money and does it right gladly,
And casts all about him a halo of cheer.

He ne'er says: "I'll stop it; I can not afford it,
I'm getting more bills now than is my just meed."
But, "Always I'll send it; the Kingdom can use it;
I'm sure I can help, and relieve a sore need."

How welcome his check when it reaches our sanctum!
It makes our pulse throb! the millenium draws near!
We outwardly thank him; we inwardly bless him—
The steady subscriber who's ne'er in arrear!

The Religion of the Presidents

This being a presidential year and everything I presume this is as good a time as any to pull out the old bit of copy about the religious affiliations of the various presidents. There were eight who were Episcopalians—nine if you count Thomas Jefferson, who was baptized in our Church. But he claimed no Church relationship. The eight were Washington, Madison, Monroe, Harrison, Tyler, Taylor, Pierce and Chester Arthur. The democratic candidate

Bishop Taitt Returns From Japan Trip

Hale and hearty Bishop Taitt, who led the pilgrimage of members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew to Japan, is home. He is outspoken in his praise of the far east. Japan has her problems with the depression, according to the Bishop, but not in the same proportions as the United States. On the whole signs of the depression were hardly noticeable over there. Prohibition also is not a problem in Japan and is not likely to be in Bishop Taitt's opinion. Japan will have temperance through education. He said that he failed to see a single person drunk on the streets. He brought back with him a prized relic in the form of an anti-Christian edict board, issued in 1638. It was presented to him for the Philadelphia Divinity School and is one of the few such boards remaining in existence. It declares: "So long as the sun continues to warm the earth let no Christian be so bold as to come to Japan; and let all know that the King of Spain himself, or the Christian's God, or the Great God of all, if he dare to violate this command, shall pay for it with his head."

Chicago Parish Has Junior Church

One of the most interesting projects in Chicago as a means of keeping up the interest in young people is at the Church of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest, where the Rev. Herbert E. Prince, rector, some time ago inaugurated a "Junior Church." Under this plan, the older members of the Church School are organized as a congregation, with junior vestry, acolytes' guild, altar guild, etc. Each Sunday morning they have their separate service in the children's chapel, which is ideally equipped for the purpose. Mimeographed sheets provide the order of service which is varied from time to time. Mr. A. E. F. Anderson, student at the Western Theological Seminary and lay assistant in the parish, is in charge of the service. The attendance is carefully checked each Sunday by the secretary and follow-up is planned for those who are not present. Dr. Prince announces that the experiment has proved highly successful and that it has been a factor in providing confirmation candidates and a group of young people well schooled in the worship of the Church. Approximately eighty, about equally divided between boys and girls, are in the Junior Church.

The Boys too Attended That Early Morning Service

Some weeks ago I had a paragraph informing you that at Allair, New Jersey, there is a Boys Scout Camp and that a group of the executives got up very early in the morning, drove to Bradley Beach, miles away, and there attended a six o'clock communion service. Now I am informed that the boys of the Scout camp are a bit put out because I wrote "executives" when as a matter of fact most of the party consisted of the boys themselves. The other Sunday another large group, headed by a number of Churchmen who are in charge of the camp, again drove over to Bradley Beach for this early service.

Vol. XVII. No. 3 SEPTEMBER 15, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

DOUBTLESS MANY have had the experience Helen Cody Baker had without doing anything about it. She is a social worker in a midwestern city, living in a suburban community and a member, like most moderns, of a club or two. She discovered as somewhat of a shock that, of the dozen women who belonged to a reading and discussion club, she alone was religious in the accepted sense of the word. Discussion inevitably turned to religion at each of the meetings and she found herself the sole defender of the faith. She jotted down on a bit of paper the various questions she was asked and took them home to ponder over them. Do you believe in God? What do you mean by God? Do you believe in prayer? Why go to church? Do you believe in the discoveries of science? Do you believe in immortality? These and many other questions she worked out to her own satisfaction and presents us the human document in a recent number of The Survey under the title of Confession of Faith; A Modern Woman's Catechism. It is worth your attention. There must be a copy of the magazine in your public library. If not it will be an opportunity to tell the librarian that there should be.

TWO CONVENTIONS were held in New York last week. In Brooklyn the Federated Russian Orthodox Clubs met at a fashionable hotel, with princes and princesses, dukes and duchesses mingling with bearded priests and well dressed refugees, all bemoaning the passing of the old order in the name of Christ. The high spot was struck when Grand Duchess Marie told them about the Kremlin, with her description of the splendor and pomp of the Czar's Court which she, and apparently the others present, wished might be restored. That, to her at least, was the religion of the Russian Orthodox Church; "quiet services in the many chapels of the Kremlin, with soft bells and enchanting music and priests in brocaded robes." In an upper room in an old building just off Union Square another convention was in session. There three hundred American working men and women, representing thousands, were discussing how they could bring to American soil the sort of workers' republic that has taken the place of this czarist splendor, the passing of which Grand Duchess Marie so much regrets. These workers living in the midst of an economic order which they believe to be mortally wounded —certainly one which has brought them only misery —look across the seas and are inspired by the one nation on earth that has purpose and courage and faith; a country without unemployment; a country without grafters and racketeers; a country where children are taught the dignity of labor and where money chasing is a social crime. These American workers may quarrel as to ways and means of arriving at the goal, but they have no quarrel with the objectives of the Soviet Republic. No mention was made of the Church at this meeting. But from mingling with them one very soon learned that their general opinion was that churches are always to be depended upon to support special privilege and the old order. Certain it is that the convention of the Russian Orthodox, with addresses by princes and grand duchesses given wide publicity in the daily newspapers, is not a tremendous help to those who would like to remove from the minds of working people this opinion about the Church which we hope is erroneous.

WITH THE beautiful city of Rio de Janeiro as host and with a lively revolution taking place during their visit, one may well imagine that those who went to Brazil this summer to attend the Sunday School convention were well repaid. Thousands of delegates attended, representing thirty-three nations. Several of the mass meetings were attended by as many as ten thousand people. The real work of the convention went on in small conference groups where there was detailed discussion of curriculum for religious education, the relationship between education and evangelization, the work in colleges, the part the Sunday School should play in the missionary programs of the churches. So the convention itself was a real success. The revolution as a side-show for the benefit of the visitors was however somewhat of a flop. It did deprive the convention of about five hundred delegates from progressive Sao Paulo but aside from that, much to the disappointment of a few who longed to see fighting in the streets, one was completely unaware that a revolution was under way.

ACTION TAKEN at the annual convention of Negro Roman Catholics, just closed in New York City, will be of interest to all of our Churches interested in this work. It is no longer the Federated Colored Catholics but the National Catholic Federation for the Promotion of Better Race Relations, with white people admitted to membership for the first time. Thus is the color line smashed with the elimination of any idea of the separation of races within the Church. Resolutions were passed indicating a liberal trend of economic thought. The profit system was scored; Negroes were urged to join labor unions and to demand equal pay for equal work, and the pursuit of wealth as an end of life was held largely responsible for the present condition of world affairs. The convention was addressed by Catholics of distinction, both Negro and white, with the mass, attended by thousands, at St. Patrick's Cathedral being the high-water mark of the affair. It all indicates clearly that Romanists recognize the trend of events among the Negro people and mean to keep up with it. Our Church, leader in Negro work for decades, might well follow the example of our Romanist brethren.

THE PRINCIPLE OF BROTHERHOOD

By

JOHN HOWARD MELISH

LIBERTY, equality, fraternity—these three have moved mankind and which of them is the greatest? The British and Americans say, liberty; the French and Russians say, equality, but to the Christian, whatever his nationality, it is fraternity.

What the world needs today is the application of Christianity to social, economic and industrial life. It is religion of the brotherhood kind which has the solution of our many and difficult problems. The social Gospel is a democratic movement, its aim is to bring about the greatest possible maximum of justice, co-operation and good will.

It is fitting to put two questions to every program proposed as the way out of our present social difficulties. The first is, Will this plan be more favorable than present organization to a spirit of humanity and freedom in social relations? And the second which is a practical question is, What is the procedure of its establishment and the technique of its administration? There are many dreamers today who have pictured for themselves an ideal social order, but few of them have shown either how the dream land can be reached, or how their scheme will work when it is reached. And there are innumerable practical and efficient men destitute of any social dream whatsoever. Would that these two types of men, the dreamer and the practical, could pool their abilities and supplement their mutual weakness with mutual strength!

In the family where there are several children the parents know that they are not equal. One is short and another tall, one is bright and another dull, one is healthy and another sickly, one is personally attractive and the other unattractive. It is not true of parents, however, because of these individual differences and inequalities, that they organize and run the family on the principle of inequality; they do not give the best food to the healthy and the poorest to the sickly, the finest to the bright and the inadequate to the dull, opportunity to the attractive and withhold it from the less attractive. Whenever such discrimination and favoritism prevail in the family there must be hard feeling, bitterness, suspicion, despair. Wise parents, on the contrary, put all their children on an equality and treat each one according to his need. When a choice must be made the strong is asked to help the weak and all to act, not as grains of sand but as different organs of the one body. "Ye are members one of another and should bear one another's burdens," say these parents to their children, even as St. Paul said to the Christians of his day.

IN THE larger family of the economic and social community today there are of course individual differences; natural endowments differ profoundly. No one in his right mind will either deny them nor ignore them. There are, however, inequalities in the larger family which have no basis whatsoever in natural endowment; they are based rather in the organization itself. Different sections of the community are distinguished from each other by sharp differences of economic status, of environment, of education and culture and habit of life. A Boston grande-dame once described the society of the Hub as divided into five classes: the historical families which had kept their property, the families equally good which had lost their property, the professional people such as college professors, certain lawyers, doctors and clergymen, the nouveaux riches, and finally the rest of humanity. This conventional use of the word class makes a rough division of individuals according to their resources and manner of life, the amount of their incomes and the source from which it is derived, their ownership of property, or their connection with those who own it, the security or insecurity of their economic position, the degree to which they belong by tradition, education and association to social strata.

Is the principle of brotherhood derived from the family, applicable to the economic and social community? Society will not be Christian until it eliminates such inequalities as have their source in its own organization.

No one will maintain that a child born in the old "lung block" of New York, so named because every resident soon or late became tubercular, had an equal chance for health with the child born on Riverside Drive. When the community came at last to realize that simple fact it abolished the old "lung block". Today it is estimated that not less than two million of our people in New York are indecently housed, and that under present rates of interest it is impossible even for the city to build decent houses for its poor much less private tenement house owners. The inequalities of health have their basis to no small degree not in individual differences, but in our economic organization. But they can be eliminated. The community, the larger family of the state, can put its cheaper credit at the service of the city or the limited dividend corporation for the building of decent houses for the people who need them. The Christian conscience and intelligence can clear the slums and give to every child an equal chance with every other child to health and life.

It is to the great credit of the community that it has applied the principle of brotherhood in large measure to the education of all its children. No child however dull or poor is excluded from the public schools; even for the handicapped and sub-normal there are special classes. For those children, both boys and girls who desire higher education, the community freely furnishes high schools and in many American cities and states, colleges. So what wise parents do for their children the larger family is now doing for all its families in the educational field. The educational status of no child in America is fixed as it is in other lands. Of course many children are kept from higher education because their earnings are needed by the family, and others because the schools are slow to adopt these methods to the varying need of children. But the community educationally considered is organized upon the principle of equal opportunity for all. It is in fact a family and has won the right to be called after the name of Christ who laid His hands upon all childhood and blessed it.

THE great task before the community which would be Christian is to give equal opportunity to its children to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. Will any one say that the son of a wage earner is the equal of the son of a rich man in this respect? The family principle, the idea of brotherhood, asks that the community shall be so organized that every member who wants to work shall be given by the community the opportunity to work. Parents who make it possible for their children to live without work do them a great injury. And the community which passes out a dole to its people does them an injury. That of course is an emergency measure, but when the emergency becomes prolonged a better method must be found. There are those today who offer every suggestion of constructive social action on the ground that the rich should help the poor and that the poor must be left free to help themselves. They are not in touch with the realities of their world. What men want is not a dole, either from individuals or the community, but an opportunity to work.

What reorganization of our industrial system is necessary in order to accomplish this fundamental purpose? Is it the co-operation of organized capital and organized labor? Is it the co-operation of the consumer with these two other factors of production? Is it economic planning on a wider scale? Is it the community entering into every industry and laying down the rules of the game and refereeing it? All these measures are being tried today in various industries and in different countries. Or is it the more radical methods put forth in the name of fascism and communism? The time has arrived when these questions must both be asked and answered by our American people. Our organization has been hitherto based on liberty. It was a great organization for a new country with a vast frontier and unlimited resources. But the frontier exists no more, the conservation of natural resources has begun, the country has reached its majority. We need a new and more comprehensive principle than liberty and Christianity supplies it. Our task as a nation is to become a brotherhood.

Just Souls

By
C. RUSSELL MOODEY

TALKING with a foreman the other day who was laying gas pipes, I was told that the men were "purging the line." That phrase caught my attention and I began a little questionnaire. The information I gathered I'll pass on to you.

When a gas line is purged the gas is sent through the pipes under heavy pressure. Naturally the air is forced out as the gas moves in and along. Therefore it is necessary to watch the gauges and to see that the valves are working properly. A faulty gauge might ruin the job. But the thing that interested me most was the way the foreman used that word "purge." I had always associated the word with the idea of merely cleansing. But here it had a far greater significance. For purging not only eliminated the air resistance but the gas rushing through the new line gave added service, and provided another convenience for the life of man. A new community would be benefited by the purging of the pipes.

Cleanliness has always been associated with godliness, and even the psalmist sang of purging himself with hyssop and then would he be clean. But religion involves more than cleanliness; it demands usefulness. So in purging the soul we must work with this in mind. Just as the gas rushed through the new line with a double purpose, the purging power of God must also be applied and utilized as it surges through the heart of man. This is another way of saying that character must be a utility. Let us always bear this in mind when we use the word "purging." A clean heart and a right spirit are in themselves only the half-way point. When we take this "clean heart" purged by God, and set this "right spirit" to work then and only then do we become useful in the spiritual evolution of man. And I might add that the community will be benefited by the purging of our souls. Let us be clean. Let us be useful.

MARGARET HALL SCHOOL

By

MOTHER LOUISE

Principal

THE present Margaret Hall is a continuation of a Church School which has been in existence in Versailles, Kentucky, since 1898. It went under its new management in 1931, and is now conducted by the Sisters of S. Anne. Their aim is to develop the souls, minds, and bodies of the children that come under their care; and every detail of the school routine and life is planned with this end in view. The school provides for the education of girls through the grammar school and on through high school or college preparatory.

The six-acre tract of land on which the school buildings are located is situated on the outskirts of the little city of Versailles, in the very heart of the famous Blue Grass country. The surrounding landscape is beautiful, and the location altogether healthful. The campus invites to outdoors life—in fact, when the weather permits, the girls are apt to spend every free moment on the lawns and tennis court. Tennis, basket ball, and country walks provide pleasant and profitable exercise outdoors, and for rainy days there are the large gymnasium and the swimming pool. The latter is commodious and up to date, large filters ensuring a continually pure water supply. The Saturday night swimming parties, with the electric lights making what the children call "moonbeams" in the water, are especially popular.

The equipment of the school buildings is modern, with airy, well-lighted class-rooms, and bedrooms arranged for two occupants. Each bedroom has running cold and hot water, two closets, steam heat and electric light. Each floor is provided with bathrooms and showers. The large dining room is bright and airy, and the table provides an abundance of wholesome, well-cooked food, especial attention being given to a careful balance of diet.

THE standard of study is equal to that of other first-class college preparatory schools. A staff of highly-trained teachers co-operate with the Sisters in inculcating in the children the principles of study. A great deal of individual attention is given by the teachers to the students, and the needs and development of each mind are given careful consideration.

The atmosphere of Margaret Hall is frequently commented upon by the visitors as being strikingly that of a happy, normal Christian home. The aim in discipline is to have such a friendly relationship between faculty and pupils as shall insure a common understanding of the problems of school life and willingness to co-operate in their solution. Punctuality, order and courtesy are required of all the members, and a willing obedience is expected to such rules as have been found to be necessary for the good of all. Hand in hand with the home atmosphere goes a religious influence calculated to teach the children the truths of their religion and to practice its behests. The school has a small chapel, which the children are encouraged to use, and each day begins and closes with short devotions. On Sundays the girls attend the services of St. John's Church in Versailles, and those who are confirmed are taught and encouraged to make a weekly communion.

For amusements there are picnics and occasional trips to Lexington for attendance at concerts and good plays. Monthly dances are given for the High School and Preparatory departments in the large gymnasium, to which young men and boys well known to the Sisters or the rest of the faculty are invited. At such times the gymnasium presents a gay scene—the girls being allowed to wear full evening dress on these occasions. A three-piece orchestra furnishes lively music, and simple refreshments are served during the course of the evening. From 8:30 to 11:30 the young people dance to their heart's content, and every effort is made to secure a good time for everybody.

THE week day begins at 7:00 a. m. At 7:30 breakfast is served, consisting of fruit or fruit-juice, cereal, hot biscuits with butter and marmalade, cocoa, milk and coffee. After breakfast the bedrooms are put in order, and at 8:30 the assembly bell rings. The children—day and boarders—assemble in the large study-hall for roll-call and such announcements as the principal may wish to make. Then all go down to the chapel for short prayers and a morning hymn, after which they are taken out on the tennis court (on rainy days or in the winter, into the gymnasium), where five minutes' setting-up exercises are given. At 8:45 the school-bell rings, and all disperse to their classes. At 10:45 there is a half hour's recess, during which the children have a lunch of milk and crackers, and play or rest. Then classes again, and at 1:45 there is luncheon. After the two-course luncheon, the children disperse to their rooms until 2:30, when, the weather permitting, all go out-of-doors for sports or walks or games. On rainy days the physical exercise takes place in the gymnasium. At 3:30 the girls may go for a swim and then dress for the afternoon. Study hall follows, and dinner is at 6:15. Meat, or fish, two vegetables, and dessert (puddings, fruit, ice cream), furnish the menu. At 7:20 there is a short evening devotion, after which the upper school repairs to the study hall until 9:00, and the younger children play games or read in their sitting room until 8:15, which is their bedtime. The "lights-out" bell rings at 9:30. In the evening the seniors are allowed to study in their rooms, and to have their lights burning until 10:00 P. M.—a much coveted privilege.

Amusements are planned for Saturday afternoons whenever possible, and Sunday afternoons are spent quietly, writing letters and reading.

In conclusion it might be well to quote the following letter from a mother, representative of many others:

"Each day my daughter tells me more of her year at Margaret Hall and of your kindness to her. I do want to thank you very, very much for the interest you took in her, and I also want you to know that I deeply appreciate the affection you gave her. I am more than pleased with the progress she made in her school work."

Perhaps this expresses better than a more elaborate statement the spirit of the life at Margaret Hall and the response of the girls to the influence around them.

REVIEWS OF FOUR RECENT BOOKS ON VARIED SUBJECTS

By GARDINER M. DAY

Pearl S. Buck, who achieved so vast a reputation from The Good Earth, has written a beautiful short story in The Young Revolutionist published by The Friendship Press (in paper $.75). The story is of a young Chinese boy, who runs away from the temple to the service of which his parents have dedicated him and joins the Communist army. The process by which he was gradually converted to Christianity is most realistically told. The boy, Ko-sen, and his companion Fah-li have taken part in the desecration of a Christian place of worship and are going to sleep when Fah-li says: "I looked at one of the pictures when the captain's back was turned. Ko-sen, it was the picture of a man hanging on a piece of wood—a very sad and sorrowful sight, and his face was kind and not angry as he hung there. What do you think it meant?" Ko-sen reproved him for thinking kindly of the foreign devil's pictures, "But still Ko-sen thought a moment before he slept that the picture was a strange one, for not in any temple had he seen any god who suffered". Unable to forget the picture of the suffering God, Ko-sen eventually gave his life to Christ.

From China our next book carries us to its military neighbor, Japan. Harpers has published a life of the great Japanese Christian Kagawa by William Axling. ($2.00). Because Kagawa is a really great Labor leader, social worker, and Christian crusader the book is bound to interest many readers, but unfortunately as a biography it possesses too much the appearance of one long eulogy. Had Mr. Axling spent more space in detailed descriptions of Kagawa's work and less in estimates of the man's unquestionable worth the book would be of greater interest and value. To my mind the very best part of the book is the collection of Kagawa's own meditations of which there are some forty pages.

Sex, Marriage and Religion is the title given to a brief well written volume by the Rev. Alec R. Vidler of the Oratory of the Good Shepherd. Cambridge, England published by Macmillan ($1.25). Father Vidler covers the whole subject on sex relations as a Christian has to face them in the modern world and treats his material with a wisdom which married men can truly admire. The usual suggestions, as for example that the Church should undertake a far more thorough preparation of its members for marriage, are made. His chapters on the question of the use of contraceptives is especially to be commended. His conclusions may be summarized in his own words: "Traditional Christian morality has allowed married people to have intercourse when the possibility of conception is excluded or avoided. Contraception, which achieves the same end by different means, is not inconsistent with traditional Christian morality, unless these means can be shown to be wrong or harmful in themselves." He further suggests that Christian married persons should explore the possibilities of the very highest possible standards, namely marriage as a genuinely equal partnership, and intercourse only for procreation in accordance with the will of God. The book reveals a vast amount of consecrated Christian thinking on this most difficult of subjects.

In Youth and Creative Living (Long & Smith $1.25) Cynthia Pearl Maus gives plenty of wholesome advice on the best ways of developing a full Christian personality in this day and generation. The first half of the volume is devoted to the most difficult subject of understanding one's self in one's physical, mental, social and spiritual aspects and the second part to the development of the abundant life. Perhaps the spirit of the book is well represented by a reply made by Mr. Raymond Robbins and quoted by the author to a man who asked Mr. Robbins why he tried to improve conditions when his fortune would allow him to live in luxury. Said Mr. Robbins: "About nineteen hundred years ago a MAN came down to this world leaving His Father's Home to do some heavy work for me, and for every man. He was bruised and battered about by men for me, and for every man; and at last they nailed Him to a Roman Cross and left Him there to die for me, for every man. I belong to Him and He bids me to go and to serve His other children".

FINE LABOR SUNDAY SERVICE AT NEW YORK CATHEDRAL

As in previous years there was held on the afternoon of Labor Sunday a great service in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine at which the speaker was a well known representative of organized labor. This year the speaker was Mr. Hugh Frayne, a representative of the American Federation of Labor. He pleaded for the abolition of child labor, for a shorter working week and for other constructive measures which he said were demanded by these times.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

In the issue of September first we gave you a bit of information about the situation in Arkansas where the election of the Very Rev. John Williamson of Little Rock as bishop has been protested. Two white priests of the diocese objected, as did also Suffragan Bishop Denby, Negro, on the ground that the dean was a party to racial discrimination which manifested itself at the convention that elected Mr. Williamson. About the same time Bishop Oldham of Albany objected to the election on the ground that the diocese of Arkansas is already possessed of a suffragan bishop, a retired bishop which costs them money, and a Negro suffragan, whose salary is paid in part by the diocese. He points out that since Arkansas has little cash, and since a good share of that comes from the treasury of the National Council, he questions the wisdom of adding to the burden with still another bishop.

Now a letter has been sent out, presumably to the bishops of the Church who have yet to ratify the election of Mr. Williamson, by Bishop Capers of West Texas, which he signs as the president of the province of the southwest. Bishop Capers states first that he has made several visits to the diocese of Arkansas and therefore writes with knowledge. The financial conditions of Arkansas are in a tragic condition. He then goes on to say:

"Realizing the fearful condition of the diocese it was agreed among the laity and the clergy of the diocese that only a small salary could be given the bishop to be elected and that the choice of a bishop would have to be made from the diocesan clergy. It was thought, also that the election of a bishop was necessary in order to stabilize the diocese and to give some promise of improvement for the future. The result of the election was the choice of Mr. Williamson which has divided the diocese and produced a most deplorable situation which, in my judgment, makes the future of the diocese utterly hopeless. All that led up to this election has split the diocese wide open.

"Mr. Williamson is a genial man and has won the confidence of the Rotary Club as indicated by his recent election as president; he is generally popular among the citizens of Little Rock. Along these lines he is a worthy citizen and a helpful priest of the Church. But his abilities are far below the requirements of a bishop in the Church of God. His work in the ministry would not indicate that under ordinary conditions he would ever have been thought of for the office of a bishop. Now, it seems to me that the duty that confronts me is to save the Church in Arkansas. It is not at all pleasant for me to have to face this issue, but in my judgment the future of the Church in Arkansas is at stake. If Williamson, as the bishop of the diocese of Arkansas, had the united effort of the clergy and laity of the diocese behind him I do not believe that he could swing the job. What then will become of the Church in Arkansas with its divided ranks and its deplorable financial condition?"

This letter of Bishop Capers' brings a rejoiner from Bishop Moore of Dallas, also sent to all the bishops of the Church. First he protests against Bishop Capers sending out a letter as the president of the province. "He is usurping a right and a privilege which does not belong to this office." Next he points out that Mr. Williamson is in no sense responsible for the financial condition of the diocese of Arkansas. Is he to blame, asks Bishop Moore, for the drought, for the depression, for Bishop Winchester's physical condition? He then goes on as follows:

"The third paragraph of the letter of the Bishop of West Texas repeats the item of the fearful condition of the diocese of Arkansas, and then goes on to state certain internal affairs of the diocese prior to the election of a bishop. The argument then turns abruptly to the fact of the election of Mr. Williamson, which election receives the condemnation of the Bishop of West Texas. But there is a hiatus here which must be filled, in the doing of which we shall come to the gist of the whole matter. The important factor is, were there any irregularities in the matter of the election itself? Was Mr. Williamson guilty of any acts unbecoming a presbyter on that occasion? So far as one can judge the matter from the facts submitted, there are, and can be no such charges brought, and if the Bishop of West Texas is in possession of such evidence, it is his responsibility to produce it. If he cannot do so, he must either hold his peace or he must accept the responsibility of condemning the action of a properly appointed diocesan council in which he has no concern.

"The Bishop describes Mr. Williamson as a 'genial man, who has the confidence of the Rotary Club of Little Rock'.' Granting him these qualifications, does he still fall short of the unique qualifications of a bishop? Bishop Capers is a genial man, and is, or has been, a devotee of the Rotary Club. If his success as a bishop is due in any part to his geniality and his adherence to Rotary, why make use of it in the present case as a vague charge against Mr. Williamson. But the Bishop says Mr. Williamson's abilities are 'far below the requirements of a Bishop'. Upon what assumption does he base such a statement? Is he ready to condemn the majority action of a duly organized convention of a diocese of this Church, and in the place of such decision to substitute his own opinion?

"And after all, one might ask just what qualifications the reverend authority would demand? I believe there is no stigma attached to the birth of Mr. Williamson, his family, or his life; his preparations for the ministry, as well as his ordinations, were entirely regular, and during the time of his ministry he has served in both the foreign and domestic fields. At the present time he is the loved and respected dean of Trinity Cathedral, Little Rock, in which position I am sure he holds the affection of his people; and now that the diocese of Arkansas has seen fit to choose him as their bishop, it is an act of great injustice and presumption for any man or set of men to attack him as unfit for the work, without definite facts which would negative the above.

"In making my protest to the letter of the Bishop of West Texas, I would ask the privilege of stating that I have no personal interest in the confirmation of the election of Mr. Williamson, otherwise than that of seeing fair play in the whole proceedings. My acquaintance with him is most casual, and the only time we have ever had any conversation, was an occasion of some weeks ago, when at my request he came to Dallas and spent the afternoon with me, which act on my part, and I am equally sure on his part, was one of courtesy only.

"It is only in the interest of fair play, that I am making my protest. And in my desire to see justice done, I am bound to express my personal opinion that the objections presented by the Bishop of West Texas, are trivial, and are irrelevant to anything concerning the bishop elect. His letter presents no facts which might have to do with the decision of any bishop in his approval or disapproval of such election. If the Bishop of West Texas is in possession of any facts involving the character or integrity of Mr. Williamson, I would plead with him to present them to us for our own information and as a means to our wise decision. In case there are no such facts which can be presented to us, then one would be entitled to assume that there were other reasons, perhaps other motives; and if this be true, we are equally entitled to know these facts. All this would be in the interest of fair play, and I believe Mr. Williamson is entitled to this consideration."

Federal Council's Labor Sunday Message

Each year the Federal Council of Churches issues a message which they request be read in churches on the Sunday before Labor Day. Having served on the committee charged with the task of preparing the statement I can vouch for the care that is taken with it. The year I served —and I was asked to serve but once incidentally which may be further testimony to the care they take with it—there were five on this committee. We must have had at least a half dozen meetings of a day each preparing it. It then went to the secretaries of the Council for their suggestions and corrections. Later it was presented to the social service committee, a large body of men and women of learning, and I can assure you they did not spare our feelings in ripping into it. Having passed that body it went to still another where it received similar treatment.

This year's message, which seemed to me to be particularly good, came

NOTICE

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made that the series of articles by Bishop Johnson "What I Believe and Why", together with THE WITNESS Bible Class to be conducted by Irwin St. John Tucker would start in our next issue. Both of these features have been postponed for one week. The material is at hand. However we were delayed several days in getting notices to the clergy therefore this postponement is made in order that they may have an opportunity to get orders in before the appearance of the first articles. We wish to say that we have been gratified over the response to the announcement of these features made in the paper. Many have already written us that they are to organize classes in their parishes for the Bible Class, while many rectors are ordering Bundles in order that Bishop Johnson's new series may be placed in the hands of their people each week.

in for a panning at the hands of the Rev. Harrison Rockwell, brother and comrade, in the sermon he preached last Sunday at the Little Church Around the Corner in New York. Said Comrade Rockwell: "I find it impossible to imagine Christ signing His sacred name to this statement. It denounces our present industrial system, the economic order which has reduced thousands to poverty and attendant suffering; it points to the injustice prevailing in the distribution of profits; it pleads for a real co-operation among our people based on the Christian principle of universal brotherhood. Certainly this is a time when the voice of Christ's Church cannot be silent. But when it does speak it should speak as He would. There is a vastly different tone in the New Testament records. There was a different policy in the policy of Christ. The sayings of Christ are notably silent as to the denunciation of wealth and power wrongly used. His was a decidedly different policy. His was a constructive policy. It was summed up, most concisely, in two great words, 'Follow Me'. It would be vastly more effective if the authors of the message had confined themselves entirely to the spiritual life and followed more closely the method of Christ. The Church speaks with authority and gets a hearing when it pleads directly for man's consecration of himself to Christ. When it gets off that one great subject and offers opinions on politics, economics and other matters really beyond its province, the Church's influence is weakened. People create the conditions. We shall remedy the latter when the individuals are changed."

As a matter of fact I think if Brother Rockwell will read that message through a second time he will find little denunciation in it. It merely points out a fact that is becoming increasingly obvious to thinking Christians that something must be done soon to bring our present economic and political life more in line with the fundamental principles that Jesus gave us. As for the statement that Christ was notably silent as to the denunciation of wealth and power wrongly used it must be that Brother Rockwell skips over hastily those chapters in the Gospels that I read most frequently. If he will take the 23rd chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel, for instance, put it into modern English and shout it from a soap box in Madison Square, a thing I surely would not do, I guarantee that it won't be many minutes before he will be calling up his friends asking them to arrange his bail. Those words about hypocrites, fools and blind guides who devoured widows' houses and swore allegiance to the great god, gold, according to the Biblical record, are the words of the Master Himself.

J. HOWARD MELISH
Writes on Brotherhood

All of which is of no great moment of course. It is simply that the Federal Council Message did express the convictions of a learned and consecrated group of Christians, at a time, so it seems to me, when such a message is badly needed. So I for one am grieved that Mr. Rockwell had to give further evidence of a divided Christendom by shouting hokum and bunk in sixteen point type in the columns of the secular newspapers.

New York Rector
Preaches on Russia

Adjustment of the machine to higher social purposes rather than to the ambition and desire of a few for accumulation of wealth at the expense of the many is the great problem confronting modern industrial civilization, declared the Rev. Charles B. Ackley in a sermon last Sunday at St. Mary's Church, New York.

He has just returned from a trip to Russia, where he said he had found the Soviet regime an interesting experiment, one of several now being applied or advocated in various parts of the world. He added that only time could tell which of the plans would succeed. It was possible, he thought, that none of them would prove successful, but he saw certain general principles that seemed to be gaining recognition in all lands today. These principles he listed as shortening of the workday to increase employment opportunities, regulation and direction of industry to insure stability of employment and investment, higher wages to extend the purchasing power of the masses, industrial insurance against unemployment, and old-age pensions.

"Whatever the plans or methods are to be we must insist on a greater measure of fair play and a more general distribution of the advantages if our present system is to go on," Mr. Ackley said. "The day of favored classes and protected interests has passed just as surely as the day of the divine right of kings. We still have some kings left who rule in unrestricted form, and we may have the favored classes with us for some time in modified form. It is hoped that the leaders will have more foresight than did Charles I. If our modern civilization is to go on for long without serious upheavals we must awaken to our corporate responsibility for each and every member of society. This does not mean any dead level of socialism, with no rewards for education, ability, initiative and efficiency. But it does mean the practical application of the Christian principle that we are 'our brother's keeper' and that the more we have of individual gifts and talents the more of that responsibility we must assume.

"And along with this we must do our utmost to dignify labor and get away from the false idea that the end and aim in life is to get enough money so that we will not have to work."

About the Picture
On the Cover

There is pictured on the cover this week a memorial that is in St. Paul's, Toronto, to the officers and men of the Queen's Own Rifles who fell in the great war. The casket contains the book of remembrance and is of wrought bronze, enriched with enamel, and rests upon a richly carved table of Derbyshire alabaster. Details of the ornament include the battle honors of the regiment, poppies of Flanders, dolphins which are symbolic of the sea passage and other emblems recalling the story of the regiment. The work of art was designed and executed in the studios of J. Wippell & Company of Exeter, England.

Chicago to Conduct Aggressive Campaign

Plans have been completed for an aggressive campaign for the Program of the Church in the diocese of Chicago. The first phase of the work of a diocesan character will be the annual conferences for clergy and laity to be held September 22-25th. At these conferences the Program will be considered from various angles and methods of approach outlined. Following these diocesan conferences it is hoped that parish conferences will be held in the early days of October. There will then be a diocesan day of intercession about November first with the canvass later in the month.

Sacramento Bids Goodby To Bishop Moreland

The two convocations of the diocese of Sacramento met in a joint session in Sacramento on August 24th to bid farewell to Bishop Moreland, bishop of the diocese for over 33 years. Speakers at the luncheon included the Hon. James Rolph, Jr., Governor of California, and Mr. James Dean, city manager of Sacramento. At the afternoon session representative speakers of the diocese paid fitting tribute to the bishop; Mrs. I. E. Baxter, president of the Woman's Auxiliary, speaking for the women of the diocese; George N. Merritt for the laymen, and the Rev. E. S. Bartlam for the clergy. A beautiful pectoral cross was presented to the bishop by Mrs. Baxter on behalf of the Woman's Auxiliary, and a purse of gold made up by contributions from all over the diocese was given him by the Ven. Barr G. Lee. Bishop Moreland, after expressing his appreciation, reviewed the accomplishments of his long episcopate. Bishop Moreland left for New York on September 3rd.

So 3000 of them have gone on strike to better their conditions.

Massachusetts Parish Has 165th Anniversary

The 165th anniversary of St. Luke's, Lanesborough, Mass., was celebrated on September 4th and 5th. The parish was founded in 1767, the first church was built in 1784 and the present one in 1836. There were a number of services during the celebration, with Bishop Davies a preacher at one of them.

Adding Variety To Church Services

Some city parishes in the United States, in some seasons, might like to try a plan which is found enjoyable at St. Stephen's Chinese Mission in Manila. On a Sunday afternoon when the weather is fine they use the school bus and whatever private cars are available to take the whole congregation off to some beautiful hillside or other quiet outdoor spot to hold a vesper service. After prayers, hymns, lessons and a short address, a brief period of quiet is observed. After that there may be a walk or a visit to some near-by point of interest, and the congregation returns, much refreshed, to the crowded city.

Real Growth in College Work at St. Augustine's

The college department at St. Augustine's, Raleigh, N. C., was started only a few years ago and now outnumbers the high school. For the past year there were 17 seniors, 29 juniors, 50 sophomores, 83 freshmen, a total of 179; the high school had 122; St. Agnes Training School for Nurses, 42; the Bishop Tuttle School for Church social workers, 15; a total of 358 students on the campus of that famous educational center for young colored men and women. This was the school's sixty-fifth year. Finances have been exceedingly difficult of course, but the year closed

St. Andrew's Mission Hopes to Raise Funds

Down in Tennessee where St. Andrew's School is located, run by the Order of the Holy Cross, they contracted for a new fireproof building in the days of prosperity. A month later the depression hit the country. Of course they had to go ahead; they had signed a contract. Besides they needed the building badly. Well sir in one way or another they have met their bills as they have come along to the tune of $95,000. They still owe $9,000, and of this $6,000 is in sight. So they are now after the remaining $3,000 to clear the building entirely of debt. With this out of the way Father Parker, in charge, figures that things will move along smoothly. There is considerable endowment, with prospects for more, and 25,000 Church people have been lined up to give $1 a year which, with other income, will about balance the budget. I am assuming, in writing this, that you know all about the grand job being done at St. Andrew's. It is a school for mountain boys; fellows who would never amount to a great deal, to put it bluntly, were it not for this school. As it is the school is turning out each year a lot of first class artisans and farmers, with not a few merchants, civil engineers, doctors, teachers and clergymen. One is even the president of a large bank, if that is a mark of distinction in your eyes. So if you have extra cash I am sure helping to pay the balance on this building would be a good place for it. The prior is the Rev. Francis W. G. Parker, O. H. C., and the address is merely St. Andrew's, Tennessee.

A NEW SERVICE NOW OFFERED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLICITY

A PARTLY PRINTED PARISH PAPER

Call it "boiler-plate, "patent inside" or what you will, it will solve one difficult publicity problem in many a parish and mission.

A four-page parish paper (page size 6 x 8¾ inches) supplied monthly or weekly, to any parish or mission in any needed quantity,—with two pages (1 and 4) blank, and two inside pages (2 and 3) printed with missionary and general Church information and illustrations.

SENT POSTPAID FOR 50c. A HUNDRED

The supply of papers reaches the parishes well in advance of the date they are to be used, so that pages 1 and 4 may be filled with the local parish news, announcements, rector's message or any other parish material. The local pages may be set in type and printed by any local printer, or they may be mimeographed or multigraphed. The cost is trifling, because there are but two pages to be filled, and there is no paper stock to be bought.

The Department of Publicity offers this new service at the request of many clergy. Publication started with October issues, and the first edition was more than double the most optimistic forecast, and late orders exhausted the edition before it was in the mail.

Write for samples—or send order for desired quantity.
Now is a good time to start.

Vol. XVII. No. 4 SEPTEMBER 22, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

THOSE WITH ABILITY to interpret figures doubtless could draw a fairly accurate picture of the financial state of the Church from the figures sent out each month by the treasurer of the National Council. In New England for instance there were but two dioceses that accepted their quotas in full, New Hampshire with $14,500 and Rhode Island, where loyalty to their own diocesan, the Presiding Bishop, is expressed by the acceptance of a quota of $65,500. What is more the seven-twelfths of that sum due up to September first has been paid to within a few hundred dollars. In the province of New York and New Jersey no diocese accepted its full quota. New York, more heavily taxed than any diocese of the Church, did promise $275,000 of the $330,000 requested, and up to the first of this month had given $112,379. New Jersey, asked for $82,000 promised $45,000 and is the only diocese in the province ahead of schedule. Central New York, which some assume is critical of the National Council, had given $22,503 of the $26,250 due up to the first. Long Island, Newark and Western New York on the other hand had given but little more than half the sums due. Delaware is the only diocese in the third province to accept its quota in full, and was one of several dioceses in the provinces to pay more than the proportionate share to September first, Erie, Harrisburg, Southwestern Virginia and Washington being the others, with Pittsburgh being about even with the board. Pennsylvania, asked for $247,000, second to New York in this respect, promised $200,000, and had given nearly half that sum on September first. The dioceses of the south, if Church figures mean anything, have been hit hardest by the depression, since the disparity between assigned quotas and amounts promised is much greater in the south and west generally than it is in eastern dioceses. East Carolina alone of the fifteen dioceses in the fourth province accepted its full quota and even it was way behind on payments. In the fifth province Southern Ohio is the only diocese to accept its full quota, $63,000, and has paid in more than any diocese of the province, $29,297; though Chicago, asked for $132,000 promised to give $80,000 and has paid $27,766 of the $46,667 due to September first. Michigan, asked for $92,000, agreed to give but $20,000, with about half that sum already paid. The diocese of Springfield, asked for $12,200 promised but $1,500, and has already paid $1,630, indicating possibly that they are more able than they consider themselves to be. Get into the west and one finds a considerable number of districts where quotas have been accepted in full; North Dakota was asked for $4,100, and themselves raised it to $4,200; South Dakota, $9,800; Western Nebraska, $4,900; Oklahoma, $11,000; Arizona, $6,500; Idaho, $6,000; Nevada, $1,800; Utah, $4,100; Eastern Oregon, $2,700. However back slapping in these cases is less muscular than it might be since they give to the Council but a small proportion of the amounts that they receive from national headquarters. The Church as a whole was asked for $3,374,000, promised $2,155,403. Of this sum $1,257,318 was due on September first and $997,579 was received.

THESE FIGURES bring out other interesting comparisons. The dioceses within the states of New York and New Jersey expect to give this year to the National Council a sum nearly equal to the amount given by the sixty-five dioceses and missionary districts of the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth provinces—that is, the entire south and everything west of the Allegheny Mountains. The diocese of New York alone has promised to give more than any one of these five provinces. Of the $2,155,403 which the National Council expects to collect nearly three-fourths of it is to come from dioceses along a little strip of the eastern seaboard, from Maine to Virginia. These dioceses expect to give over a million and a half, with $765,000 of it coming from the dioceses of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Long Island. Add Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Jersey and you find that a still tinier strip running from Boston to Philadelphia, is to supply nearly half the sum that the National Council has been told it may expect from the entire Episcopal Church. All of which lends itself to various interpretations. Ask the easterner and he is apt to say that he is expected to give more than his proportionate share. Figured on communicant strength alone this is true, since these geographically small dioceses have only about one-third of the communicants of the Church while supplying about half the cash. The answer to this is that quotas are not based upon numerical strength but on parochial expenses, so that all are asked to give to others a proportionate share of what they spend on themselves. Westerners, receiving large sums from the Council, will further inform you that had the strong Church of the east adequately supported missionaries in pioneer days we would have independent dioceses in their country today instead of dependent missionary districts. Time is working out its own justice, with grandsons and great-grandsons paying interest on their ancestors' selfishness. The more courageous will further inform you that it might be well to pay off some of the principal too and thus ease the burden which will fall upon your children and grand-children; by which they mean that it is not yet too late to build up strong self-sustaining dioceses in the west. The argument holds only if the money is wisely spent. Protecting a bad investment by spending more good money upon it is poor finance, as many have discovered to their sorrow in recent months. A commission now at work studying the domestic missionary work of the Church will soon supply sound advice on the subject. Meanwhile it will be well for all to give as generously as possible without too close study of figures showing what the other fellow is doing.

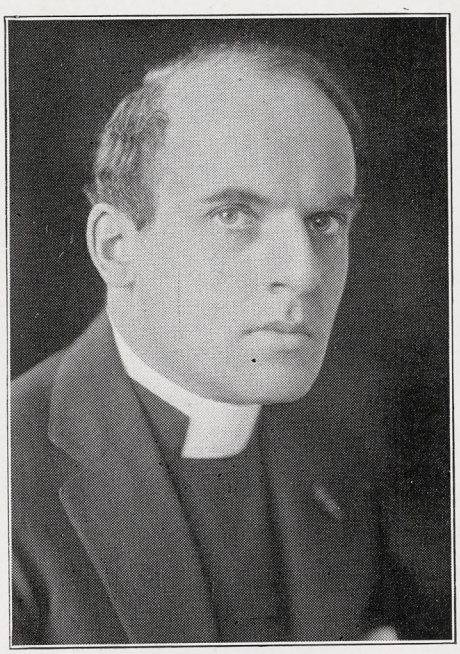
TYPICALLY AMERICAN, Mayor Anton J. Cermak of Chicago returns from a holiday in Europe to inform us that we should have publicity agents in European capitols. The general impression throughout Europe, he said, is that New York and Chicago are the most wicked cities in the world. So he suggests that items be added to their budgets to provide for publicity men; nice, attractive fellows who dress well, make pretty speeches and can turn out good advertising copy, informing our European neighbors that " 'Taint so." He didn't say so but apparently he thinks this would be easier and cheaper than making our two great cities less vile.



HELP IT ALONG

By

GEORGE CRAIG STEWART
Bishop of Chicago

WE LIVE in one of the great hours of history. I need not depict the world situation. It is graphically, dramatically depicted for us: "Distress of nations with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

It is a glorious time to be alive. Some day the story of these times will be set down and chroniclers will give the dry record of the close of an era, the opening of a new one — days when the world turned over, days when out of the travail emerged a new social order. You and I may or may not be here when the story is written. I shall speak, then, of a few of the signs of redemption which call us to look up and lift up our heads.

BISHOP STEWART

Whether we have learned the lesson or not remains to be seen, but certainly we have had a demonstration of the nemesis which inevitably follows upon individualistic competitive organization of society for private profit—in other words for selfishness and greed. We have seen with our own eyes the debaucheries of a mad, pagan, worldly scramble for money. We have seen the deadly sin of avarice transformed into the haughty virtue of big business enterprise, and we have seen the whirlwind of economic loss like the winds of the wrath of God sweep the earth like a cyclone burying high and low alike in the debris.

In the face of this situation two antagonistic groups emerge—those who in their fear stand stubbornly by the old order and hope—in vain, I believe—for the old kind of selfish prosperity to return to them. They have not learned the lesson. They are too old to learn. They are reactionaries, Bourbons, who if they had a chance would bend both the Church and the state to protect what they esteem to be their vested interests. And opposed to them are the reds, the communists, the iconoclasts, the advocates of violence, the Jacobins who would usher in a reign of terror and bring the many under the heel of the few and sacrifice all individual initiative and surrender the will of a million people into the hands of proletarian dictators.

THE Christian religion is the only true socialism. It inaugurated a new society, a new social ideal, where the individual personality is sharpened and developed, but where selfish individualism has no place in a fellowship of mutual dependence; it is created with one Body, one Spirit, one Lord and Father of all. The Church today has an unparalleled opportunity to guide the way into a new social order which shall be Christian.

Then there is the reaction from a mechanical age to the sacramental teaching of the Church. The machine has its uses. I do not deny this. Neither Caesar nor Alexander nor Napoleon nor Washington was able to effect in the world in which he lived one one-thousandth part of the change which began to come over it when the steam engine of James Watt girded up its loins. But men have begun to ask important questions. A modern Minneapolis flour mill can turn out 17,000 barrels of flour a day. An Athenian miller could produce but two. Question: Is Minneapolis made up of men superior to the Athenians? A workman in 1830 could make thirty needles a day. A workman in 1932 can make 500,000 needles a day. Question: Does the modern needler live more happily and serviceably than did the earlier one?

IN a word, the world is shifting back to the man behind the machine. The recurring battle in philosophy today is right on the doorsteps of the Church, and it is this: Shall personal experiences be explained in terms of machines and of impersonal forces, or shall the impersonal mechanism of the life of the universe be explained in terms of personality and claimed as the agent of personality?

The people are everywhere in their distress—bent by adversity, chastened by disappointment, quickened by hard thinking—turning back to God. They are in a mood to listen to the good news of the compassionate Christ as never before in years and decades and generations.

In the midst of the world war an immense crowd gathered near Charing Cross to welcome the returning British soldiers. First came the slightly wounded. Then came those suffering shell shock; then closed ambulances containing the desperately wounded. In that great moment of universal stillness two men held aloft an enormous sign where all could see it. On it was painted:

"Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

In the course of a public address Thoreau said: "There's a good time coming." A heckler sarcastically yelled out: "Can you fix the date?" And Thoreau replied: "I have one question: Will you help it along?"

Let's Know

PEWS

WHEN you go to Church next Sunday, you will most likely occupy a "pew". Rather a queer name, isn't it, for the seats or benches with which our churches are generally equipped?

The name comes from an old French word, spelled variously as "pui", "puy" or "peu" which meant an elevated place. It is connected with the older Latin word "podium" which meant a balcony. In old English use it meant a more or less elevated enclosure for business purposes in a public place. Sometimes it applied to a box in a theatre.

Originally, you know, there were no seats at all in church buildings. People stood thru the services, or knelt on a stone floor, and the services in those days were very long, often continuing for two or three hours. In some very old churches in Europe, you will find a stone bench running along the side walls of the interior which was built there in early days as a concession to physical infirmity. People who were not strong would become excessively wearied during one of the long services and might perhaps grow faint standing in a crowd. If such a person felt a collapse coming on, he could edge his way to the wall and find rest on the stone bench provided. That seems to be the origin of the phrase you often hear that "the weak go to the wall".

It was not until the latter part of the Middle Ages that seats began to appear in church buildings. They were oblong, box-like enclosures with seats around the inside and with a door which could be locked. These came to be called "pews". At first they marked specially reserved places for people of local importance—the lord of the manor or some such person who could scarcely be expected to take his chances with the crowd. He would lead his family into church, unlock the door of his pew, and be effectively cut off from the rest of the worshippers. These pews and the right to use them were inherited in families and were often purchased like any other articles of furniture. In the passage of time the locks and doors have disappeared but you may still see examples of the old box pews in some of the surviving colonial churches in this country at the present time.

In Europe a great many churches still have no fixed seats but use movable chairs. Some churches in this country do the same, tho the low-backed, open, and uniform pew is much more common. Even after the enclosed pew began to go out of fashion, the custom still prevailed of renting them or purchasing them for use in public worship. A generation ago the rented pew was the chief source of revenue for most parishes. Gradually the idea began to spread that private possession or special purchased privilege was out of place in the House of God. Pew rents began to be abolished in favor of pledged offerings. Today, I believe, there are very few parishes left where pews may be rented and those few are rapidly diminishing in number. Far better so. No members of any congregation ought to have a pre-emptive claim on the privileges of public worship which the Church properly offers to all.

ROWLAND HALL

By

ARTHUR W. MOULTON

Bishop of Utah

IN 1880 Utah's great pioneer missionary Bishop Tuttle founded Rowland Hall. The property on which the school stands, originally belonged to Brigham Young and was purchased in 1881 in memory of Benjamin Rowland of Philadelphia by his wife and daughter. It consisted of a fine old adobe house standing in the midst of a beautiful orchard. Many of the old fruit trees still add splendor to the now spacious lawn, but the adobe house has grown into a group of attractive buildings. In the center of these buildings and joining them together is the chapel given in 1910 by Mrs. Rowland's daughter in memory of her mother. Here centers the spiritual life of the School. Each day begins with a short service sung by a vested choir membership in which is one of the most coveted honors of the school.

Rowland Hall consists of a day school and a boarding school. The latter is not large and consequently the happy, informal atmosphere of a gracious and well regulated home is preserved to an extent not possible in a larger institution. The faculty, carefully selected from the graduates of the best American and European colleges and universities, come into close contact with the girls and share intimately all phases of their life.

Academically the school has a growing and enviable reputation in the intermountain district for its influence and high standards. Most of the girls prepare for college. The class of 1932 has the unique honor of having three of its members accepted at Leland Stanford University. The rest are going to Barnard, Scripps, Connecticut College for Women, and Mills; each to the college of her choice. Recent graduates are doing splendid work in Vassar, Wellesley and many universities and twice the Carpentier Scholarship at Barnard has been won by a Rowland Hall girl.

Besides the College Preparatory Course there is a strong general course planned to meet the needs of the individual. The Music department is headed by a former pupil of Leschitizky, of Vienna and its influence permeates the entire life of the school. One of Utah's best known artists teaches art and history of art. Last year the first prize and gold medal for the best Community Chest poster was won by a Rowland Hall girl.

A healthy physical development is insured by the enjoyment of all forms of summer and winter sports. The school has a well equipped gymnasium, swimming pool, tennis courts and playing field. The beautiful canyons and mountains with which Salt Lake City is surrounded offer marvellous opportunities for camping, picnics and skiing. One of the most enjoyable and invigorating expeditions of the year is the mid-year week-end trip to Pinecrest, nestled in the heart of the mountains about twelve miles from the city.

In such a healthful environment with a carefully planned schedule, which takes into consideration the "whole girl" it is easy to understand why such rapid progress is made by each student and why its graduates look back with such love and loyalty upon the years spent at Rowland Hall.

A VIEW OF THE LAMB STUDIOS

THE ART OF STAINED GLASS

By
ELEANOR H. WILSON

FOR three generations the House of Lamb have been designers and workers in stained glass. Founded in 1857 by Joseph Lamb, an Englishman by birth, this Studio has for seventy-five years specialized in ecclesiastical interior work, particularly stained glass, stressing the English school and the 12th and 13th century antique. Charles R. Lamb, the son of Joseph is the present head of the firm and with him are associated his two sons and a daughter. The latter, Mrs. Katherine Lamb Tait, a member of the Society of Mural Painters, has achieved a number of beautiful windows; the most notable, the Froelich Memorial window, was originally planned for placement in a high school, but due to its beauty and authenticity was finally placed in the Newark Museum of Art. Another window designed and executed by this firm won a gold medal given by the French government and is installed in the Brooklyn Museum of Art. The members of the family now identified with the J. & R. Lamb Studios have made approximately twenty visits abroad for the purpose of studying glass in England and on the Continent.

THE FROELICH MEMORIAL
In the Newark Museum

In speaking of the glass used in the making of windows by this Studio, Mr. Karl B. Lamb says: "Practically every stained glass artist buys his glass from firms who have specialized in the manufacture of stained glass for generations. For example, we buy a great deal of our antique glass from Chance in London who have been making it for probably three hundred years and they have every possible shade and tone of color, therefore it is quite unnecessary to attempt to make our own glass. As a matter of fact, no one can do it as well in this country, in our opinion, as some of the specialists in England who have developed formulas, etc. over such a tremendously long period of time. These specialists have been able to duplicate the tones of color in the glass of the old cathedrals, although of course no one can duplicate the actual weathering of glass which has taken place over a period of five or six hundred years."

As to the lasting qualities of modern glass, Mr. Lamb says: "We consider it not only as durable as the ancient glass but better in many ways because the chemistry of glass has progressed very greatly." With the exception of the making of the glass itself, every step in the creation of a window is carried on by this Studio from the original color sketch to full size cartoons, patterns, selection and cutting of the glass, leading, cementing, including the installation of the finished window.

Among the commissions executed by the J. & R. Lamb Studios are a series of sixty windows in Leland Stanford Memorial Chapel, which are outstanding examples of the American School of glass—the Richard Mansfield Memorial window in the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City, as well as the entire series of historical windows in the old Henry Ward Beecher Church (Plymouth) in Brooklyn. Examples of English antique are two large windows in Calvary Episcopal Church and a chancel window in St. George's Church, New York City. Examples of their work are in eighteen cathedrals in this country, including St. Andrews Cathedral in Honolulu, in thirty-one university, college and school chapels as well as in numberless churches.

The Two Voices

By

EVELEEN HARRISON

ONCE upon a time, many long years ago, a young farmer walked through the woods on a winter's day. A glorious day; the sun glistening on the clean white snow resting on the branches of fir trees, his feet crunching its crisp surface at every step. Good to be alive on such a glorious morning, but the young man looked worried, and walked quickly, for it was war time.

For months, years, the country had been fighting for its very life: at any moment a spy might appear from behind a tree, and the farmer knew he was taking a great risk, to walk through the woods alone; but his errand on secret service to headquarters was a matter of life or death.

For hours he marched quickly forward; suddenly he heard a noise, a strange noise to hear in a thick wood. Stepping behind a tree he listened; it sounded like a horse pawing the ground restlessly, not far off. Stealthily the young man scouted from tree to tree, his gun ready cocked under his arm. Then he saw the horse, a large white one, tied to a tree, still pawing the ground with his front hoof. A horse — but no rider in sight. Perhaps he was dead, or lying wounded on the ground.

Closer and closer crept the farmer, slipping from tree to tree. Again he paused, for he heard a voice speaking. Who could it be? Perhaps he would surprise a group of enemy spies and could overhear their message!

The voice continued, low, earnest, as if pleading with someone for a great gift. What could it be? . . . Who was the man behind the voice?

A few steps nearer—then the young farmer stopped in awe and wonder.

Praying to God for guidance, on his knees in the snow, knelt George Washington . . . The great General of America.

One hot summer day, not long ago, a business man walked down Wall Street towards the great Treasury Building. In front of the building stood a little news boy, a bundle of evening papers under his arm, ragged shirt, torn trousers, bare toes sticking through the holes in his shoes, but his head erect, and a smile on his face; he was looking earnestly at the fine bas-relief of George Washington kneeling in prayer on the snow at Valley Forge: his big white horse tied to a tree near by.

As the business man drew closer he heard the little news boy say: "Well, if he could do it, so can I. If a great General like him, could kneel in prayer, I will too," and tucking his papers closer under his arms the boy marched whistling down the street.

MR. FRANK TELLS OF WHAT HE SAW IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

So many books have appeared about Russia recently that one hesitates to recommend another even though we have not reviewed any since writing this column. Waldo Frank's Dawn in Russia (Scribners $2.25) is so fascinating an account of the author's trip through the Soviet country that no one will be disappointed in it. It is not a volume full of statistics, estimates of the five year plan or of Communist objectives, but rather a description of what Mr. Frank saw as he travelled about Leningrad, Moscow, and down the Volga—seeing everything with the imagination of an experienced writer. Open the book anywhere and the vividness of the description will give you the feeling that you too are seeing the Russian scene.

Imagine yourself with the author on a Volga boat: "It is past midnight, The last samovar is out. Soon the sun will come as the night out of Asia. It is very cold. The bearded faces glow faintly in the gloom. . . . From their sad eyes an aura drifts across the pavement. It is the spirit of human suffering abroad in the night. These men have suffered, all their race, tragically suffered. What I feel is not their poverty, not even their past serfdom. The pain that vibrates in their Muzhik eyes is more terrible than these. I have no word for it; all I can fix is a sense of a mortal deprivation. These are men, and destiny has so far denied them some inalienable, some mortally needed experience of manhood. This explains why the mass about me is like a herd: animal, softly bestial."

In the last forty pages Mr. Frank sums up his conclusions. He is mildly optimistic about the experiment as a whole. While he found signs in the political realm of the "corruption of personal power," while he deplores the lack of liberty, and the relatively poor literature, nevertheless he believes that, provided the Union can ward off Japan and the Western powers for the next few years, it can achieve and maintain a fine type of state socialism, but he does not believe it can achieve a real Communist state. While the class conscious workers, the office holders, and the young people are happy, Mr. Frank detected a certain unrest among the young, "due probably to the fear that their personality is suffering."

The real test of Communism, the author sees coming, after the Union has won its first battle—that of abolishing poverty, establishing security, comfort and leisure for everyone—and must fight to achieve higher cultural values. Then the old Marxian dialectical materialism will have to be scrapped and the question of the creation of a new philosophy will turn the balance of the scales up or down. Says Mr. Frank: "Communism is a cultural movement more fundamental than any which the world has known since Christianity began. All it needs is an adequate philosophy (and art)—the labor of the creative men of today—to make it a religious movement: to make it the religious movement for which the world is passionately crying."

While the author sees clearly the potentiality of communism, he sees the darker aspects of the picture as keenly as the brighter and the reader's final impression is that of fair mindedness.

When a youth goes from a New York night club to mass at St. Patrick's he must have an experience somewhat like ours in jumping from Russia to our next volume entitled, Catholic Sermons. This book contains a series of brief addresses on the Catholic Faith by forty English Anglo-Catholics and one American, the latter being Prof. Frank Gavin of the General Seminary. It is edited by Dr. Humphrey Beevor, Librarian of Pusey House Oxford (Macmillan $2.40), and presents a comprehensive survey of Catholic belief written for the laity rather than the clergy.

The first group of sermons deals with the creation, miracles, other religions, science and psychology; the second with the doctrine of the Church; the third with worship, prayer, and the Holy Spirit; while the last deals with the Church itself. The underlying note of the book is well expressed by the Archdeacon of Chesterfield: "Those who look for joy for themselves in worship fail to find it. Worship is and must be a giving to God. It is only as we give to God, and forget ourselves, that sometimes in His infinite love He gives us this joy." All the writers stress the obligation of worship as our offering to God and the necessity of the sacramental view of life. Perhaps one ought not to single out any particular sermon for comment, but Dr. Bede Frost's seven pages on "Mental Prayer" is the best brief sermon on the subject I have ever seen.

LABOR DAY SERVICE AT NATIONAL SHRINE

A Labor Sunday service was held at the National Shrine of the Prince of Peace, Gettysburg, Pa., on the evening of September 4th. The church was filled. The sermon was by the Rev. Archibald M. Judd, rector at Harrisburg, and the service was in charge of the Ven. A. A. Hughes, vicar.

NEWS NOTES OF THE CHURCH IN BRIEF PARAGRAPHS

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

Cash, I find, is always an interesting subject, whether one is considering one's own or that belonging to the other fellow. So possibly I cannot do better, for a lead-off, than to report that the National Council received from the dioceses during July and August $163,205, whereas they were presented with $240,889 during the same months last year. On the first of July the Council was $83,711 below the proportion due on "expectations," meaning the amount promised. On September 8th the Council was $279,738 short. No money was owed the banks on July first. Today there are notes outstanding amounting to $200,000. On the other hand the Deficiency Fund, known to you possibly as the Whitsunday Offering, has reached $352,000; something to be cheerful about. The treasurer, Lewis B. Franklin, reports that "through additional savings effected since February we are assured that we can close the year without a deficit but only if every diocese and district pays its 'expectation' in full." And beginning with the word "if" in that sentence he has capital letters heavily underlined.

Council to Meet in Early October

The National Council is to meet in early October; the 12th and 13th to be precise. Whether or not the committee appointed by the House of Bishops to study affairs at the Church Missions House will report at this meeting it is impossible to report at the moment. You may recall that Bishop Lawrence, chairman, in a communication released in June stated that heavy cuts had been advised for 1933, "and by the beginning of the year we may have to advise even heavier." It has been assumed by some that the Church generally would be let in on the nature of their advice at this October meeting, the first to be held since the Bishops' committee was appointed in April. However, there is a rumor about that executive officers at the Church Missions House are of the opinion that it will be unwise to have this report, with its recommendations, given out before the Every Member Canvass. To inform the people of the Church that less money is to be spent, they reason, will be to suggest that less is required. The net result, likely as not, would be that people would store away in the toe of their sock coins that they otherwise might shake into the lap of the Council—not bad reasoning on the part of someone. However this is all rumor and, like Babe Ruth's appendicitis, it may be exaggerated.

Where Most of the Clergy Are

We can tell you, if you happen to be interested, where most of the clergy are, since we have just mailed to them a folder announcing our plans for this fall and winter. They went out as permit mail which requires the sender to tie them up by states and cities and to mark the number on each package. By this laborious process we discovered that there are 280 clergymen who get their mail in New York City; 74 in Brooklyn; 25 in Rochester; 15 in Albany; 32 in Buffalo; 14 in Utica and 493 in New York state outside these cities. Philadelphia has 182 and Pittsburgh 26, with the rest of the state of Pennsylvania having 466. There are 721 Episcopal clergymen residing in New England; 314 in New Jersey; 217 in Virginia; 195 in Maryland. And lest you assume that I am interested only in the east I hasten to add that the letters to other parts of the country were mailed before it occurred to me to jot down the information for you. I only hope that you parsons pay some attention to those letters. Addressing and stuffing all those envelopes kept me out of the Yankee Stadium on more than one afternoon at a time when I really should have been there.

Vestry Asks Rector to Quit

The Rev. Rollin Dodd, rector of All Saints', New York, has been asked to resign by his vestry. They say that he is "fully determined to make it a colored parish." The story is a simple one. Up until a few years ago the parish was composed entirely of white people. The district changed and so did the parish. Today there are about 300 Negro families in the congregation and fifty white families. The whites, or at least some of them, haven't taken to the idea very much and have used various methods of keeping it a white man's church. The rector, on the other hand, accused by his vestry of favoring the Negroes, claims that he has paid no attention to racial origins whatever—that, being a Christian Church, he figures everyone is welcome. A minority of the vestry and a considerable number of the white members of the congregation, I am glad to report, support the rector in his position. In fact they felt so strongly on the subject that they presented a resolution to the vestry stating, "We wish to go on record as being opposed to discrimination in the House of God because of the accident of birth." In addressing his congregation last Sunday Mr. Dodd, after first calling attention to the cosmopolitan character of Harlem, where the church is located, rebuked the vestry for their intolerance. He said that except for an occasional church there was no discrimination or segregation in public or semi-public institutions in Harlem. "It is therefore the more regrettable that Christian men and women, who worship the one God and Father of us all, sometimes fail, in practice, to recognize the common brotherhood of man." He declined to bow to the will of the majority of the vestry, said he was proud of the work done at All Saints, which was a "House of Prayer for all people," stated that he believed he had been called by God to the work, and that he would leave the issue in the hands of God and to the godly judgment of the Bishop of the diocese. More power to him.

LAST CALL

THE series of articles by Bishop Johnson, "What I Believe and Why" will commence in the issue for next week. In the same issue we start THE WITNESS Bible Class to be conducted by the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, Grand Master of the Order of the Sangreal. We will appreciate it if those planning to follow the lessons regularly will enroll in the Class, simply by mailing a postal to the editorial office, Tribune Building, New York City. We are anxious also to have information about classes that have been organized in order that news items about them may be placed in the paper. Those planning Bundles should place their orders at once, sending them to the Chicago office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue. If they are received by Monday, September 26th we will be able to send the issue of September 29th containing the first articles.

This Week's Nomination for the Hall of Fame

Those persons who feel it is best for a clergyman to move from one parish to another every five years or so would perhaps be interested in the case of the Rev. Frank Mezick at Arrington, Virginia. Mr. Mezick attended Washington and Lee University and Virginia Seminary and was ordained Deacon in 1899 and Priest in 1900. In September 1902 he became rector of Nelson Parish and he has been there ever since, so that this September he will have held the same charge thirty years. And—he is just as much beloved as he ever was. Nelson Parish covers Nelson County. Christ Church at Schuyler, in the extreme Eastern edge of Nelson, is being cared for by the Rev. W. Roy Mason of the Diocese of Virginia. Mr. Mezick has all the rest of Nelson County with three churches: Trinity at Arrington, Grace at Massies Mill and Christ Church at Norwood. Naturally he is one of the best known men in the county. Also he is one of the most popular, not only in his own congregations, but among the people of other denominations as well.

Every year, some time in August, Bishop Jett makes his visitations to all three of these churches in one trip, spending two or three days in the county. And every year while the Bishop is there the members of the three congregations gather together for a big picnic at Trinity Church. In this way all the folks in the parish see something of each other and the Bishop has a chance to make an informal speech to them all at once. It's a great occasion for the Episcopalians in Nelson—and a lot of other friends. Going to the Nelson picnic is one of the chief pleasures in the Bishop's life. This year the Bishop was in Nelson August 21st, 22nd and 23rd—from Sunday to Wednesday. He visited the three churches and confirmed five persons. The picnic was held on Wednesday and was a great success; really a community affair, rather than just an Episcopal party.

Another Generous New York Rector

The way to get something nice for your church apparently is to invite a New York rector to preach for you. The other day we reported here of a nice garage being built on rectory property down in Delaware by the rector of the Incarnation, the Rev. Percy Silver. Now word comes from the Rev. Thomas R. Hazzard, informing us that Dr. Brooks of St. Thomas Church preached at St. Thomas, Amenia Union, N. Y. He had a rather tough time of it apparently, what with no pulpit light and the oil lamps overhead shedding a dim light on his notes. So he saw to it that an electric light equipment was installed in the church.

Sewanee Goes in for Summer Conferences

The province of Sewanee, which includes all of the dioceses in the south, goes in for summer conferences in a big way. Forty such gatherings have been held in the province this summer, attended so I am informed, by the executive secretary of religious education down there, the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, by three or four thousand Church people. Most of these conferences are the direct result of training that has been given at the Sewanee Conference, held each year at the University of the South, since practically all of the leaders received their training there. At Sewanee alone there was held this year no less than seven separate conferences, running through the entire month of August. The attendance this year was better than ever, the faculty stronger and the purpose more serious apparently. They went after all sorts of important problems, not only dealing with Church affairs but with economic and world problems as well. The young people, for instance, felt so strongly on the subject of international relations that they passed resolutions informing the world that they stand for world peace; that should threat of another war arise they should be consulted as to whether they approved of it or not. They also made it clear that they propose to inform young people throughout the province, and the entire Church if possible, just where they stand on the matter. All of which is cheerful news I think. Much better than spending their time toasting marshmallows and singing lustily that favorite Sewanee hymn, "Out the Window You Must Go."

Federal Council Meets in December

Reports vitally affecting Protestant denominations in the United States will be presented and acted upon at the quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, to be held December 6 to 10 in Indianapolis.

Among the many important matters to be considered will be the report of the committee on function and structure, which, throughout the present quadrennium, has been studying the organization and policies of the council. A new president to succeed Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the New York area, Methodist Episcopal Church, will be elected. Important reports on the subject of Church and State, and a revised social creed of the churches also will receive attention.

Venerable Sexton Has an Anniversary

'Tis said of Mr. William J. Boyd that he never forgets a person; once he has looked into your face and shaken your hand, regardless of the years that have rolled by, he will call you by name at the next meeting. I, of course, can't vouch for this. I shall check up on it one of these days, having met Mr. Boyd on one occasion some time ago. Anyhow, he is the sexton at Trinity Church, New York, a position he has held for the past eighteen years, though he has been connected with the parish for seventy-one of the seventy-eight years of his life, celebrated the other day. And some day when you are in New York go to Trinity for the noonday service and afterwards go into Mr. Boyd's little office and have a chat with him. He can tell you more about New York than any lecturing guide. He knows all the buildings, past and present, and most of the prominent people. As for the Church there is hardly anyone of consequence about whom he cannot tell you a story or two.

Philadelphia Training School Opens Next Month

The Church Training School of the Diocese of Pennsylvania will open on October 5, 1932 for the winter term. This is one of four schools in the United States which offer resident training to young women who wish to prepare for work in the Church. The training consists of a two year course in Church history (including missions), Prayer Book, doctrine, Christian mysticism, Bible, with additional courses in religious education, psychology, sociology, social case work, hygiene and sanitation, voice culture, and practical experience in institutions, hospitals, settlements, and the like. The courses are designed for women who desire to enter work in Church social service, religious education, to go into mission fields, or to prepare for the life of a deaconess. Programs are also arranged for women who wish to enter as special students or for post-graduate work.

Speedy Boys in Chicago

Visiting 4,000 homes in four hours? Yes, six acolytes of St. Ansgarius Church, The Jenny Lind Memorial, Chicago, Ill., did that recently. The rector of the church the Rev. William Tullberg had his printer donate four thousand little pamphlets with pictures of the Church and a letter from the pastor and the church school superintendent. It took the boys three hours to fold the pamphlets for the mail-boxes and four hours to distribute them in the neighborhood of the church. The boys, walking fast, covered one square mile, proud of doing something for their Church.

Can't Accuse This Rector of Proselyting

The Rev. F. P. Goddard, rector at Marlin, Texas, took fifty-two members of his boys' club camping for two weeks at Galveston, where they were the guests of Trinity Church at their beach camp. Of the fifty-two boys but two of them were members of the Episcopal Church. Of the one hundred and ten boys who belong to the club, and who meet with Mr. Goddard two nights a week, but six are Episcopalians. That is a record for the books.

Bishop Wise Conducts Conference in Detroit

Bishop Wise of Kansas conducted the annual men's conference of the St. Columba's parish, Detroit, on September 10 and 11. They met at the diocesan camp for boys, Camp Frisbie. Primarily for the men of this one parish laymen from other parishes were present upon the invitation of the rector, the Rev. Otey R. Berkeley. Among the subjects discussed was the present economic situation and what a Christian should do about it.

A Call for Volunteer Lawyers

If there are lawyers who read these paragraphs interested in seeing that civil liberties are maintained in this country they can perform a real service by serving the American Civil Liberties Union in a volunteer capacity as occasions may arise in their localities. As you may be aware many famous lawyers thus serve this organization; Clarence Darrow, Arthur Garfield Hays, Felix Frankfurter, George W. Kirchwey, Amos Pinchot and others. The organization is anxious to expand their list, so if you feel that you can be of service to them write them at 100 Fifth Avenue, New York City. It should be stated that the American Civil Liberties really believes in free speech, free press and free assemblage and not merely in granting these rights to those with whom they happen to agree. So if you do volunteer you might be called upon to defend someone with whom you thoroughly disagree.

A Bishop Boosts the Church Press

Bishop Jenkins of Nevada in the last issue of his diocesan paper writes: "Then about the Church papers. The General Convention urged their wider circulation. The people will never be more than lukewarm till they are informed. Much depends upon the attitude and diligence of us clergy. Let's see how many new readers we can secure this fall." Which I naturally say is a good idea.

Long Island Charity Foundation Has Deficit

The 80th annual report of the Church Charity Foundation of Long Island, principal philanthropic agency of the diocese, has recently been published. Financially, the institution has felt the depression, as have all charitable organizations. The calls upon its hospital for free and part-pay services have greatly increased, while the receipts from gifts have fallen off. Income from endowments, though sufficient to keep the work going, have not been sufficient to prevent a deficit. The total current expense for the year 1931 was $405,885.81 not including $16,763.28 interest on borrowings. The income, including all donations, was $391,586.43. The deficit amounts to $31,062.66. The Home for the Aged cared for 88 people during the year, the Home for the Blind 17, the Children's Cottages 45. The service of St. John's Hospital was in volume the largest rendered. 4,060 patients received a total of 54,886 days' care. Of this total, 9,400 days' care was given at no charge, and 18,544 days' care for part payment only. The report shows that the endowment funds were increased during 1931 by $271,891. The total endowment is now $3,004,043.88. It is interesting to observe that the endowment began in 1872, and the first million dollars of endowment took 50 years to accumulate. In ten more years two more millions has been added.

All the Clergy Were Not Vacationing

All of the clergy of the Church were not sitting in the sun this summer. For instance one of the clergy of Nevada during the month of June travelled 1,149 miles, held 28 services, made 133 calls and conducted a vacation Bible school. Another out there travelled 913 miles, held 21 services, made 208 calls, prepared a class for confirmation and organized two Bible schools.

Italian Church Feeds the Children

At the Italian Church of San Salvatore, maintained by the New York City Mission Society, 1486 lunches were served during the summer from a special fund. In a period of five weeks and two days, 119 children, all of them very little tots, were enrolled. A daily average of 68 were fed.

Try to Get the Point of View of the Other Fellow

From the diocese of Texas comes word that a group of nearly forty girls connected with the Young People's Service League spent three weeks at the diocesan camp actually living in the spirit of other nationalities in an attempt to understand them. Six groups were formed, each to represent a foreign country. Costumes were made during handicraft periods to fit the different nationalities. A couple of yards of oil cloth furnished the Russian boots, and kimonas and pajamas, sufficed for the Japanese. The flags of the various countries were made by the girls themselves and waved over each group's cabin. As the flags were

The Job of the Church for These Times

Economic depression demands that the Church show people the way out of difficulties, declared the Rev. D. A. McGregor, director of adult religious education of the National Council, in an address before 200 Church school teachers in Chicago last week.

Dr. McGregor declared that adult religious education has nothing to do with learning interesting things. To the contrary, its aim is to teach how to deal with disturbing problems of all sorts, he said. Older people, Dr. McGregor explained, are hungry for religious education in its true sense, but dislike the idea of being schooled.

"Adults do not care when King Josiah died, but they are eager to learn what they can teach their children," said Dr. McGregor. "They may not be interested in the names of the minor prophets, but they are tremendously interested in learning what we can do to end the depression. They can get along without knowing who Zerubbabel was, but they would like to learn more about how to live happily and successfully."

The place of the Old Testament and the Bible generally in adult religious education, Dr. McGregor said, is widely misunderstood. The Old Testament, he declared, must not be looked upon as history, but rather as a series of first class sermons dealing with actual situations of men and women of another day.

No Deficiency in 1933

WHAT Bishop Lawrence calls "THE DEMOCRATIZATION of GIVING" can assure that, in 1933, the people of the Church will give enough money to provide for the budgets of parish, diocese and General Church.

Every parish has a number of people who do not contribute regularly. Democratize giving by seeing that this unreached fringe is taught to give something —regularly.

The Every Member Canvass, when it is a visitation of Every Member, without exception, can and will achieve this result. No other known method can achieve it.

A real Canvass is safe insurance against a deficiency in 1933.

Printed material as to how to do it and why to do it is obtainable from your Diocesan Office, or from

It has taken a great depression to convince us that the Church can be spiritually more influential and powerful if it is supported by the many of its members with small and average contributions.

This is the power of the mass and of numbers, but it is something more than the operation of a mathematical or a physical law when it represents the voluntary act of men and women actuated by motives of brotherhood for all mankind and obedience and gratitude to God and loyalty to Jesus Christ.

Vol. XVII. No. 5 | SEPTEMBER 29, 1932 | Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

CHAOS AND CONFUSION have seized the world. Old foundations once thought secure are crumbling. New problems, undreamed of even a few years ago, are terrifying those who look into the future. We must know how to answer the problems of the present with such knowledge of the facts and profound trust in our goal and guide. It is to aid in making you familiar with the knowledge which the Bible supplies that we have inaugurated THE WITNESS Bible Class. They are strictly modern, intended for educated men and women and for children trained in our schools today. You may find many of your old ideas sharply challenged. But old ideas have not averted the disasters of today. New interpretations of eternal truths are needed to guide us out of present darkness. This class, we hope, will force many to stretch their ideas—possibly to rise to wholly new conceptions of religion and the Church, of God and themselves. Thus may we do our share in recruiting vigorous fighters for the Army of God, with methods adapted to the tasks ahead.

HAVING EXPRESSED our opinion at various times about judges who seem to have small regard for American traditions of liberty it is a pleasure to compliment Judge M. A. Musmanno of Pittsburgh for the decision he handed down the other day. Last June a number of students at Pittsburgh University expressed opposition to a commencement address delivered by Major General Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the United States Army. Three were arrested and fined for disorderly conduct. They appealed. On September 16th Judge Musmanno reversed the decision and at the same time gave a little lecture of his own.

"It is utterly amazing to this court that these three youths should have been subjected to such criminal action," Judge Musmanno said. "The court regrets that the University of Pittsburgh permits such sensational developments. College students are not intended to be empty tanks into which knowledge is poured. Without free speech you cannot have thinking."

DO NOT FAIL to wish your Jewish friends a Happy New Year on Saturday of this week. It is then that they celebrate the festival of the New Year, or Rosh Hashanah, with religious services in all the synagogues of the world. They are ushering in the year 5693. Their New Year's Day is followed by ten days of penitence, culminating in the observation on October 10th of Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, a day for the searching of the heart to find peace with God. The fast is described in the sixteenth chapter of Leviticus. In those days the people fasted and afflicted themselves while the priest made atonement for the entire house of Israel by means of sacrifices and especially by the symbolic rite of driving the scapegoat into the wilderness to bear away the sins of the people. Now prayer takes the place of sacrifice. Yom Kippur is followed by the Feast of Tabernacles, Sukkoth, commencing on Friday evening, October 14, and continuing for eight days. This is first of all their harvest festival, with rejoicing and thanksgiving to God for His bounteous crops. The festival likewise has an historical significance, commemorating the forty-year journey of the Israelites through the wilderness after the exodus from Egypt, and is reminiscent of the fact that the Israelites dwelt in tents (Sukkuth) during the entire period. For this reason the Jews are commanded in the Bible to dwell in tents during the festival, a custom which is quite popularly observed even today.

IN EXTENDING NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS to our Jewish friends it might be well for all of us to consider our attitudes toward each other. It is brought to mind by a message which has recently been received from Roger W. Straus, son of the late Ambassador Oscar Straus, and given out by the National Conference of Jews and Christians, an organization which is working for justice, amity and understanding between the many groups that comprise America. Mr. Straus points out that in spite of the fact that the dominant religion of the Western world is based upon the Golden Rule, violent prejudice nevertheless still exists, resulting often in fanatical persecution and at all times in economic, political and social discrimination. Mr. Straus further stresses the fact that the Jew is not the only religious or racial group to suffer from prejudice and that Jews would do well to eliminate their prejudices against others. He also, in the name of the National Conference, believes that "we should dismiss as unworthy the proselytizing efforts of those who seek to break down Judaism in order to add numbers to Christian ranks. Judaism and Christianity are two cultural groups, each with contrasting background and traditions, each with its own religious faith and hopes, each with its peculiar genius to contribute to American and world life. The American ideal is that each group shall carry forward to the highest state it can, at the same time learning to live together constructively with other groups."

A VERY INTERESTING FACTOR in the economic life of the nation, which has been one of the results of the world crisis, may be found in the increased confidence in and reliance upon the facilities of insurance companies for economic security. While securities have depreciated, and while incomes therefrom have fallen off and in many cases ceased altogether, sound insurance companies have carried on unwaveringly through the depression, serving millions of people, paying out billions of dollars to beneficiaries of policyholders, conserving fortunes, and keeping millions of family units from poverty and disintegration. Men and women whose fortunes have shrunken heavily during the course of the last few years have turned to life insurance as a means to restore their estates. One of the most significant economic developments of the past ten years is shown by the startling increase in the sale of annuities. On making a survey of the premium income of ten of the leading insurance companies, we find that annuity premiums have increased approximately 1900% between 1920 and 1931. Annuity premiums for 1931 in these ten companies amounted to $102,635,553. The reason for this interesting development is that individuals realize that they must provide for their advanced years, and that the only way that that may be accomplished with absolute certainty is by means of retirement income insurance or retirement annuities in sound life insurance companies. In 1922 the trustees of the Church Pension Fund formed a corporation to furnish all standard types of annuities and insurance policies to the clergy, lay officials, and lay workers of the Episcopal Church, and their families, at the most advantageous possible terms. The Church Life Insurance Corporation is owned and controlled entirely by the Church Pension Fund. The officers of the Church Pension Fund are also the officers of the Church Life Insurance Corporation, and Mr. J. P. Morgan is its treasurer. The Church Life Insurance Corporation exists in order that the groups for whom it was organized to serve may have a non-commercial but reliable company affiliated with the Church through which to make advantageous annuity arrangements and secure low-cost insurance protection. The Corporation now issues immediate and deferred annuities, joint and survivor annuities, ordinary life insurance, limited payments policies, and endowment policies. Two new contracts have recently been authorized by the Insurance Department of the State of New York, under which the Corporation operates, and are now available: the Annuity Income Bond, which is a form of deferred annuity providing a life income beginning at age 65, containing no insurance provisions and requiring no medical examination; and the Personal Retirement Policy, which is a form of deferred annuity providing a life income beginning at age 65, and containing insurance provisions for one's family in the meantime. It requires the usual insurance medical examination. The clergy and others engaged in work for the Episcopal Church, and their families, may receive full information about any of these contracts by writing to the Church Life Insurance Corporation, 20 Exchange Place, New York, N. Y.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

SOMETIME ago I attended the play "The Green Pastures" in which an effort was made to present to the audience the conception which the ante-bellum Negro had of God and Heaven and sin and mercy. Essentially it did not differ from the American business man's conception of these things. It was the interpretation of the supernatural in terms of immediate surroundings. God was a glorified preacher. Heaven was a fish fry. Sin was being mean and mercy was inevitable. I imagine to the American business man God is a glorified capitalist; heaven is being prosperous; sin is violating business ethics and mercy is the forgiveness of everything but sins against the capitalistic system.

Religion works out that way if we are not careful. The greatest argument against "The Green Pastures" is that this conception of things heavenly hasn't made the post-bellum Negro a higher type of man. It throws one back upon the question: What is the basis of belief? In "The Green Pastures" it is an exaggerated fundamentalism. In Latin countries it is trust in a hierarchy. In America it is confidence in psychiatry. Unless our basic assumption is right our conclusions are bound to be unsatisfactory.

What is the foundation of belief? It is bound to be an assumption which we cannot prove but must accept as a starting point at the fork of roads which we have not yet travelled. After you have taken one road or the other you cannot change your direction without going back to your starting point.

WHAT is your starting point? What is your major premise? With me it is contained in the statement that "God is love."

Love precedes logic and reason in our human relations. We are to love God with all our heart and soul and mind. The heart comes first. If the heart becomes a vacuum the head cannot supply the lack. One cannot think himself into love nor argue himself into devotion. Back of all our scriptures, creeds and ecclesiastical systems is the fundamental truth that without love they are empty forms.

The child begins with love as the motive power and adds reason as the guiding wheel. An engine without fuel is powerless. You cannot substitute the guiding wheel for the motive power. When scientific people tell us that religion is non-scientific they are merely stating an obvious fact. It is equally true that science is non-spiritual. That is to say that the engine is the engine and the pilot wheel is the pilot wheel, and you cannot substitute the one for the other. But the two can cooperate if each realizes its proper functions and its inherent limitations. Religion begins where "The Green Pastures" ends. Fundamentally God is our Father and He is the kind of a Father which our earthly condition requires. That is why the God of the primitive Hebrews is one kind of a Father and the God of the educated Christian is another. At the bottom of each condition is the basic fact that God adapts Himself to man's need as man emerges from the primitive to the cultured state. But back of human character, whether in "The Green Pastures" or at Harvard, is the love of some one or admiration for the reality behind some thing. Modern unbelief sees no reality underneath the thing. A charming vista is just a bunch of trees. A symphony is just a concatenation of sounds. A man is just a chemical compound. There is no place for art or music or fellowship in such a conception of things.

The fundamental difference between Christ and Bertrand Russell for example is that Christ was a lover of mankind, and because he loved he did something for men and so won their love and devotion. He didn't begin with a mental concept and end in a cynical attitude toward creation. The first and great commandment is that thou shalt love, and because one loves one tries to act reasonably toward others. When you assume that one must first analyze and then deduce from such analysis a system of human conduct, all one can say is that it doesn't work. Children cannot begin that way. People who are motivated merely by logic cannot produce from it a love for mankind. It is putting the cart before the horse and so nothing happens.

IT IS because Christ loved that he captured the human imagination. You may question the authenticity of the Gospel Story. You may doubt some articles in the creed. You may censure the Church as it exists. But you cannot deny the power of Christ in human lives. Like the product of the electric dynamo you cannot deny its power even if you are dubious as to what it is or how it sheds light.

Our character must be grounded in love. It may take curious forms, as it does in "The Green Pastures" but its basis is correct. If such a primitive faith produced nothing but the Negro spirituals it would be justified.

When we start with love of God and man we can then apply reason to guide us in our conduct, but if that fundamental reality is lacking there is nothing to guide. There is much more in the opening words of the Lord's Prayer than there is in the opening words of the creed, because in the former we approach God as our Father in a personal way, whereas in the latter we say merely that we have a Father who may or may not be intimately related to us personally. The Christian faith really begins in a prayer and ends in a statement, but it is the prayer that is the elemental factor. I may recite my creed without love but I may not approach God in prayer without confidence in His love as a correlative to mine.

It is this that we must ever keep in mind; my faith does not rest either in a code of laws, or an ecclesiastical hierarchy or a collection of books, but in the fact that I love therefore I act. How I may act is another question.

It is the love of the child that lies at the basis of his future usefulness. As he grows older he is apt to become ashamed of his heart and proud of his head, but no process of growth can so change his spiritual anatomy that his head can really perform the functions of his heart.

"Except ye become as little children you cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven." We start with the equipment of a child if we are ever going to find the Father of us all. "Beloved let us love one another, for love is of God, and everyone that loveth is begotten of God and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love."

I believe that God is love because He is the author of love.

Witness Bible Class

Conducted by

IRWIN ST. JOHN TUCKER

YOUR tools of this course will be a Bible, Prayer-Book, and a note-book. The Bible should have large, clear type, without footnotes, so that you can mark it up.

Open it at the index table of the books of the Bible. The word "Bible" means "books" or "library." The Holy Bible therefore is The Divine Library. You will notice in the table that these books are in two divisions, called The Old Testament and The New Testament. The word "testament" is better translated "covenant." A covenant is an agreement concluded under oath between two or more parties for the accomplishment of a certain purpose. Each party agrees to a certain course of action; and this agreement is solemnly sealed so as to be binding on both parties.

The Old Testament is the story of the working out of the Old Covenant. The New Testament is the story of the working out of the New Covenant.

In both Covenants, God Almighty is the party of the first part, and His chosen people the party of the second part. In the Old Testament, the Chosen People was the Hebrew nation. In the New Covenant, the

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Chosen People is—not was—but IS the Church of Christ.

In both Covenants, the purpose of the agreement is to bring about the Kingdom of God on earth.

Books composing The Divine Library were written by very many different people over a period of fifteen hundred years. The one thread which holds them all together is the struggle for the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth.

Men's idea of this Kingdom broadens and deepens from age to age. At first it was only the idea of possessing certain land. Then, by suffering and sorrow, men came to understand that they can hold title to God's land only if they are worthy of Him. And at last it was made clear to us that we must share the nature of God, to be worthy of His promises. Although the idea broadens through the sacred books, it is always the Kingdom of God of which the Bible treats, and the task of members of the Chosen People always is to make it come true on earth. God already has established it in the spiritual world.

Look at your index. Compare the sizes of the two sections in the volume itself. The Old Testament is about three times the bulk of the New Testament. This is because the New Testament records only the beginning of the New Covenant. The story of its progress is the story of the Church of Christ. One of the greatest and most exciting chapters in that story is now about to open. All nations are ready for it.

You and I, at our baptism, were enlisted as soldiers of God in this great struggle. God's warfare, old as humanity itself, requires new, brave, and well-trained recruits. You are now training, by this study of the Bible, for better service.

PERSONAL APPLICATION

TAKE your Prayerbook and turn to the Baptismal Office, top of page 280. This is your oath of allegiance to the Covenant. A Sacrament is an oath affirming a covenant. The Christian Sacraments are thus personal renewals of the agreement between God and the Chosen People of Christ. Thus the study of the Old and New Testaments has a vital meaning for you. All through the worship of the Church, these Covenants are referred to constantly. They form the motive power of all Christian worship and life.

HOME WORK

Say the Lord's Prayer. You will notice that the central petition is "THY KINGDOM COME: Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven." The second clause is an explanation of the first. God's kingdom will come when his will is done on earth as it is in heaven.

Read Genesis 17, 1 to 9. This is the Old Covenant. It is referred to many times in the Old Testament, and in daily worship.

Turn to the Benedictus in Morning Prayer (Prayer book, page 14) and read its reference to the Covenant with Abraham.

Turn to the Magnificat in Evening Prayer (page 26) and read its reference to the Old Covenant.

Now turn to the Holy Communion (page 80) and read the story of the establishment of the New Covenant.

As often as you worship God in the Church, you renew the Old and New Covenants.

MEMORY WORK

Books of the Old Covenant number 39. Those of the New Covenant number 27. Here is an easy way to remember these figures.

Count the letters in the words "OLD TESTAMENT." There are 3 in old, 9 in Testament. Put this together:—39. There are 39 books in the Old Testament.

Count the letters in "NEW TESTAMENT." There are 3 in New, 9 in Testament. Multiply them. 3 x 9—27. There are 27 books in the New Testament. Add them. 39 plus 27 is 66. There are 66 books in the Bible.

OUR MISSIONARY WORK

By

HUGH L. BURLESON
Assistant to the Presiding Bishop

THERE are three great world enterprises which center in America. They are: The Standard Oil Company, the British and American Tobacco Company and the missionary enterprise of the Christian Church. Do you realize that the latter covers more territory, employs more agents, touches more lives, and spends more money than either of the others? As a business undertaking, missions takes first rank. This surely means something, though the more spending of dollars is not in itself a commendable achievement. The fact, however, that Christian men and women are willing to give those dollars for that purpose—and not only their dollars, but also their sons and daughters—surely proves something.

Next, I would emphasize that wherever missions have gone, education and civilization have followed. Perhaps you are not very keen about some of the features of our present-day civilization. I am not, myself. It certainly has its seamy side, but which of us would be willing to return to barbarism? Even Russia, who thinks herself in a position to do whatever she will, and to make the kind of world she wants to live in, is seeking—with toil and sacrifice—the material fruits of civilization.

It should not be necessary to prove that Christianity promotes civilization. The Bible itself has been one of the greatest educators and civilizers of mankind. There was no written language among the Sioux Indians until the missionaries reached them; now they have Bibles, prayer-books, hymnals, and even a monthly religious paper in their own language. The same has been true in hundreds of other instances. Dr. Livingston took modern medicine into Africa, and Charles Darwin was so impressed with the transformation wrought by the missionaries among the degraded inhabitants of Tierra del Fuega that he became, thereafter, a yearly contributor to the Church Missionary Society. I think we need not further argue this point.

MY THIRD assertion is that the message and example of the missionaries have made the world cleaner, sweeter and safer. The story is told of a group of sailors from a shipwrecked vessel who, after long hours in a small boat, managed, just at dusk, to reach a little island. They knew nothing of its inhabitants, and feared the worst. With such weapons as they could lay hold upon, they were marching through the bush when they saw a clearing ahead of them, evidently an inhabited village. The officer who was leading them pushed ahead with uncertainty and fear. His comrades followed. Suddenly their leader raised a shout, saying: "Come on, boys! It's all right! I see a building with a cross on it." And it is true that wherever that cross has gone, it has stood for brotherhood and peace.

Now all this is good, but the size of the enterprise, the spread of civilization, even the betterment of the world, excellent as they are, are not the primary reasons for believing in and earnestly supporting the missionary cause. The great reason, for Christians at least, is that Christ wishes it. It was His last command to those whom He left behind to carry on His work. He said: "Go, and teach!" This in itself should be enough for those of us who call Him Lord and Master. It is He, not we, who plans the campaign, and in following Him, we march behind the captain who has never known defeat. If failure came, it was the failure of his followers to follow.

No doubt there are some readers who say, and who really think, that they don't believe in Missions. I imagine such an one before me now. He really doesn't; and, honestly, I don't see why he should. I reply to him: "Quite right, old chap! You probably haven't any religion that is worth giving to anybody else. I think you might be excused until you get a real religion—or better, until it gets you. But when that happens, don't try to keep it to yourself—for it won't keep."

This is the vital point which I wish to emphasize: That you, if you are a Christian, can't keep your religion unless you're giving it away. The very essence of Christianity is sharing. Can you imagine Peter, or James, or John, or Paul, not caring particularly whether anyone else heard about Jesus Christ? The story is told of an old Scotsman, who, dissatisfied with the religion he knew, formed a church of his own. It contained himself, his son, and their two wives; and his daily prayer was: "God bless me and my wife, my son John and my son John's wife—us four, and no more." But does that sound like Christianity? Can it be the religion of "us four, and no more"? Yet I fear that to some Christians it is not much more than that.

I HAVE seen lives ennobled by being consecrated to missionary service. No greater heroism has been displayed on battle-field or desert-march or polar expedition than that shown in their daily work by missionaries of the Cross. Think of Livingston and Hannington in Africa, Patton and Judson in the South Seas, Grenfell in Labrador, and Rowe in Alaska—these and a thousand others. It is a long and wonderful roll which one might rehearse, every name breathing courage and patience, faith and victory.

Such lives, of course, transformed the lives of people whom they touched. It could not be otherwise. I myself have stood by a grave-side where we laid to rest a consecrated and devoted priest of God, who had helped to make over the lives of his people, but who was born a pagan savage, and whose hands had many a time wielded the scalping-knife. I think also of our own latest martyr in China, the Rev. Fung Mei-T'sen, who from the prison where the soldiers were keeping him, and from which he might have emerged by denying his faith, facing his death on the morrow, wrote cheerfully to Bishop Roots, rejoicing that he could witness for Christ, at whatever cost, and asking only that his wife and children might be cared for.

Also, I have seen the Name of Christ glorified in what would have otherwise been very sordid lives. Meagre souls have become great by contact with and consecration to Him; for He must shine through us into this world if His light is to reach it effectively. His Incarnation is still going on in the lives of those who try to follow Him. Think, if you can, of a world without His presence in it; but pray, at the same time, that neither you nor any whom you love may ever have to live in such a world.

TWO VOLUMES ON PSYCHOLOGY IN PASTORAL WORK

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

Psychological movements like Behaviorism have given many people the belief that the teaching of psychology undermines religious faith. The fact that psychology has a real contribution to make to theology and religion, however, has become increasingly evident. Such books as Prof. Walter Horton's A Psychological Approach to Theology (Harpers 1931) and Dr. Valentine's Modern Psychology and the Validity of Religious Experience (S.P.C.K. Macmillan 1929) are two fine recent attempts among several to present this contribution of psychological knowledge.

A problem which the modern minister faces is that of determining the best ways he can use this knowledge in his work. Two recent volumes aim to aid him in doing this. The first of these is Psychology for Religious Workers by two English clergymen, the Rev. Lindsay Dewar and the Rev. Cyril E. Hudson, published by Harpers ($2). We note in passing that the religious books published by Long and Smith have been taken over by Harpers since the publication of this particular volume. Among the books which Harpers thus secured is that justly famous and marvelously beautiful story of Jesus' life, By An Unknown Disciple, written anonymously, and originally published by Doran. Returning to Dewar and Hudson's book I may well say at the outset that I have not seen any book in this field which can compare with this volume in helpfulness. Commencing with two extremely valuable chapters on the knowledge of God and self, in which the chief values of psychological knowledge in the religious life are pointed out, the authors proceed to a study of practical cases of moral disease and the best methods of treating them and conclude with several chapters showing how the knowledge may be applied in the pastoral, preaching and teaching relationships of the ministry. In their psychological approach the authors generally follow that of Prof. William McDougall.

Perhaps the most valuable chapter is that on the knowledge of self. If a person could read this chapter before he tried to use most of the manuals of preparation for Holy Communion which I have seen he would be able to make his self-examination more truthful and consequently more valuable. The authors write with truth: "The ordinary idea of self-examination is, in fact, inclined to be somewhat misleading. The aim of the art of self-knowledge is to know ourselves as we are rather than to remember precisely past mis-deeds. The authors further warn against the danger in self-examination of looking for specific deeds as sins and isolating them, rather than looking for sinful tendencies. Sin is not in isolated acts but in evil sentiments. Hence, the authors write: "In thus looking for tendencies we are quite in keeping with the best traditions of thought at the present day. Just as we no longer think of the material world as made up of tiny atoms or pellets of 'matter', so we should cease to think of sins as pieces of dirt adhering to the soul, or as being like rust on a mirror. At any rate, if we thus speak of them we should remind ourselves and our hearers that we are using loose, pictorial language. Sin is rather to be likened to stresses and strains threatening the stability of a building."

A second book which aims to aid the priest in making use of modern psychological knowledge is Dr. John Rathbone Oliver's Pastoral Psychiatry and Mental Health (Scribners $2.75). Dr. Oliver, who is well known to WITNESS readers for his articles in our columns in the past, believes that while a minister has not time to be a psychiatrist, he ought to be such a well trained physician of the soul that he can recognize quickly the symptoms of mental maladjustment and that having recognized them he "should often be able to check the development of such mental habits before they reach a stage that demands specialized advice and help". To do this the minister must have time, sympathy and understanding for "the secret of the care of the patient is caring for the patient." Dr. Oliver discusses at considerable length and with many actual examples the various types of mental sickness with which a pastor is likely to come in contact.

After suggestions in regard to the keeping of case records and the examination of the patient, the author considers: Manic-Depression, Schizophrenia, Paranoia, Epilepsy, Paresis, Alcoholism, the drug habit, mental deficiency, Psychoneuroses and in addition two chapters are occupied with problems of sex. In a final chapter dealing with religious faith and practice, the Priest-physician points out how his conviction has grown steadily stronger that the real solution for most mental difficulties "is to be found in one type of mental and physical activity alone: in the Christian faith and in Catholic practice."

In the consideration of each form of mental trouble Dr. Oliver tells specifically how the pastor should deal with the matter. He gives examples of definite suggestion and

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

A flock of editors of religious newspapers, mostly clergymen, met the other day at the call of Mr. John R. Mott, chairman of the international missionary council, to talk over the prohibition situation, if any. There were Methodists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Congregationalists, Christian Scientists and Baptists in abundance around the table for this all day pow-wow. Episcopalians were not invited, nor Roman Catholics, possibly for fear that the seeds of discord might be sown in an otherwise peaceful fellowship. My report therefore has to be taken from the printed record.

They began by jotting down on a bit of paper the chief values of prohibition which must be preserved at all costs. As a start off they declared that the liquor traffic had been abolished by prohibition. Then they decided that a tremendous gain had been made by the elimination of the saloon. Three, booze has been removed from politics. Four, prohibition has raised the standard of living for the masses. Five, labor is more efficient. Six, it is now safer to drive automobiles. Seven, there are no liquor advertisements in the papers. Eight, there is less public drunkenness. Nine, there has been a general improvement of the situation among young people. The general conclusion was that "We are immeasurably better off with national prohibition at its worst than with the legalized liquor traffic at its best."

I haven't strong feelings one way or the other on this question of prohibition, but I must say that if the case for things as they are has to rest on these "facts", put forward by the leaders of the dry cause, then it is going to crumble under the weight of its own dishonesty. They say that the saloon has been eliminated and that "nowhere in America is it countenanced by intelligent people." Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler had a good answer to that in a statement he issued the other day. "The saloon", said this educator, "has not 'gone' anywhere; it has only married the speakeasy and taken its wife's name." A blind man with a heavy cold in his head could stumble into several dozen of them within a hundred yards of where these crusaders were meeting the other day in New York. And if they really believe that the liquor traffic has been removed from politics how come that several thousand speakeasies are allowed to operate on little Manhattan Island?

As for raising the standard of living for the masses and improvement in the efficiency of labor through habits of sobriety, a natural question is "Efficiency for whom?" Through efficiency we have learned to produce goods so rapidly that a good twelve million less workers are now required to do the job. Convince the workers of this country that sobriety is responsible for their present "improved standards of living" and I know a lot of them who will immediately go out and get a skin full, and do it as patriotic citizens.

As for the improved situation among young people you'll have to ask someone who knows a lot more about them than I do. But I have an idea there is as much drinking among them today as there ever was, and I think it is a lot less wholesome. In the old days college boys used to tank up and tear down fences and build bonfires. They were stag affairs strictly. Today the drinking is done at the "nice parties", with the girls, so I am told, rather heavy on the consuming end. This may be an improvement but I would hardly call it one in the field of morals.

After reading carefully the minutes of this meeting of prohibitionists I would write my own conclusion as follows: We would be immeasurably better off under a legalized liquor traffic than under national prohibition as it is now functioning.

Regional Conferences In Harrisburg

Bishop Spencer of West Missouri and Bishop Darst of East Carolina are to lead conferences in the diocese of Harrisburg at Altoona on October 5, Lancaster on the 6th and Williamsport on the 7th. Others on the program are Spencer Miller Jr., of the social service department of the National Council, and Miss Helen Brent of William Smith College. On the 9th inspirational services are to be held at St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisburg and Christ Church, Williamsport, to be attended by the congregations of the churches in each neighborhood.

St. Agnes School Opens New Building

St. Agnes School, diocese of Albany, opened the other day in the new building erected on the outskirts of the city. The structure is a fine stone building, planned in accordance with the highest standards of education in mind, and is located on a thirty-three acre campus. The school opens with an increased enrollment. Bishop Oldham conducted the exercises.

BISHOP PENICK
Hits High Spots at Synod

Virginia Church Has 300th Anniversary

There was a northeaster blowing with fury but that did not prevent Church people of Virginia from jamming the Old Brick Church, Isle of Wight County, Virginia, for the celebration of the 300th anniversary. The celebration began on the 15th when an historical address was delivered by the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker of Richmond. He quoted his authorities to prove that the church was founded 300 years ago, on the identical spot it now occupies, by English settlers who landed in Jamestown and who subsequently crossed the James River to establish homes in the inviting country. He also pointed to the fact that the Puritans, who landed in Massachusetts, established their church with the avowed purpose of breaking away from the established Church, but that the settlers at Jamestown established their Church with the English ritual and forms intact. "It is the oldest church extant in the country today. It is a substantial and enduring monument to the faith of our first settlers."

A second service was held on the 16th at which the sermon was preached by the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving of Baltimore.

Clergy Meet in Lexington

The clergy of the diocese of Lexington, one hundred per cent strong, gathered at Margaret Hall, Versailles, Kentucky, on the 14th for a conference on the work of the Church, led by Bishop Abbott. It was followed on the 16th by a conference for the laity, with fifty per cent of the parishes and missions represented. Bishop Abbott conducted quiet hours, delivered lectures on preaching and conducted conferences on diocesan and parochial problems. The Rev. Eric M. Tasman, new field secretary of the National Council, also lectured on the National work of the Church.

Tennessee Starts Things in Newark

Bishop Maxon, coadjutor of Tennessee, and the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, Chattanooga, who have been paired up of late in evangelistic work, were on hand for conferences in preparation of missions to be held throughout the diocese of Newark October 15-19; 22-26 and November 19-23. The conference was held on the 10th and 11th for the layman and on the 12-14 for the clergy. Eighty-three laymen were present, representing 42 parishes and missions, while there were 98 clergymen at the second conference. It is planned to have a mission in every parish in the diocese with a clergyman from some other parish conducting it.

New Parish Papers Worth Attention

I would like to give a bit of a boost to the new parish papers which are being put out by the publicity department of the National Council. As you no doubt know by this time they are tiny affairs of four pages, printed on one side with items about the work carried on by the National Council, with a picture or two. The other side is blank, thus making it possible for you to have it printed as your parish paper. I have seen five numbers, edited I believe by the ingenious Jack Irwin, and I commend them to any who may feel that it is desirable that their people know something about their Church outside their parish.

Synod of Sewanee Meets at Lake Kanuga

The synod of the province of Sewanee met at Kanuga Lake, N. C., September 13-15 with an attendance that exceeded expectations. This Church conference centre was an ideal place to meet, being able to care for 300 people under one roof and in one dining room. The result was a fine spirit of fellowship. One of the high spots was an address by Bishop Penick, youthful bishop coadjutor of North Carolina, who struck out with bold utterances on such topics as "The Industrialization of the South", the Negro question, "the untaught laity", and the quality of our witness to Christ. He called for the same sacrificial quality that marked the testimony of the Apostles, and concluded with the observation that the world may not be impressed with our religious profession because it is difficult to discern the cross in our way of following after Him. Speaking of the industrialization of the South, he said: "The Church cannot remain true to the social gospel of Jesus Christ and be satisfied with an aenemic, sentimental teaching, unconcerned with the human aspects and the spiritual needs of this new social order."

Three representatives of the National Council were present: the Rev. Robert W. Patton, Bishop Creighton and Spencer Miller, Jr., all of whom spoke at mass meetings.

Of great interest to the Synod was the report of the committee on Negro work, which for two years has been studying the situation. The report, read by Bishop Bratton, embodied valuable findings and suggestions. The report was re-submitted to the committee for further study, and the conference of Negro workers was asked to name four members of its own race on it.

Newark Young People Working for Peace

The young people of the diocese of Newark held a conference this summer to discuss the subject of world peace. They decided that there was too much apathy and prejudice at work, and that there is a need for a change in the attitude of individuals as well as for a change in our economic and social order. "We believe," they say, "that the young people of the Church can exert a great influence in the nation and the entire world in overcoming the existing greed and selfishness. We urge our Church young people to get the facts and proposals on this question, think them through, and compare them with the attitude, teachings and practice of Jesus Christ."

Becomes Everybody's Parson In Southern Town

There has been nominated for our Hall of Fame the Rev. William J. Gordon who has devoted his entire ministry of over twenty years to the cotton mill town of Spray, North Carolina, and has become, so the nominator informs us, "everybody's parson." He began his work with three communicants. He now has 120, with a Church school of over two hundred. He also has one of the most active young people's groups in the diocese—all of them young folks from a cotton mill background and yet they have been winning diocesan honors regularly. He built a handsome church, with members helping with the work. He had faith that it would be paid for, and it was. Every diocesan gathering finds him there with a car-load of his people. And of course, as you might know, he has a great helpmate in his wife. She is a diocesan leader of the Auxiliary, and also finds time from her five children, being brought up on the meagre salary provided, to lecture on gardening so that she has done much to beautify this mill village. The sketch I received ends with this paragraph: "Gordon has no striking gifts. The secret of his power is the presence of God electrifying an ordinary personality. He has boundless energy, he loves people, he has a simple and working faith."

Bishop Jenkins Heads Anti Gambling Campaign

It takes a good man to stop gambling in Nevada, if one can believe the newspapers. But the job has been tackled by Bishop Jenkins, who heads a committee that is now getting signatures in order to present the matter to the next meeting of the state legislature. What's more he is optimistic over the possibilities.

Rhode Island Clergy Have a Conference

A conference of the clergy of Rhode Island was held at Newport on September 15-16 for preparation for the every member canvass. Bishop Bennett, assisting Bishop Perry in running affairs there, presided, and also gave a talk on "Our Responsibility." Other talks were given by the Rev. A. H. Beer, missionary from the Dominican Republic; Mr. Lewis D. Learned, executive secretary of the diocese; Mr. Philip Stafford, field secretary of the diocese of Massachussetts; Rev. Irving A. Evans of Lonsdale, who had the interesting topic, "What can be done in a manufacturing village," meaning I presume, is it possible to get cash out of empty pockets. Then the Rev. John B. Lyte discussed the same subject for a city parish, he being the rector in Newport; and Rev. W. H. Langley, Jr., who told about the situation in rural parts.

North Texas Hopes To Raise Quota

The missionary district of North Texas held a meeting of the executive committee on September 14 and decided that while cash was scarce they would cut down their local budget and pledge the full amount asked to the National Council. The Rev. Richard W. Trapnell, field secretary from New York, was present and delivered a stirring sermon on the missionary work of the Church at a public service.

Dedication Service for Teachers

At St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., the Rev. William Porkess, rector, there was held the other Sunday a service of dedication for the twenty-nine teachers of the Church school. Statements, questions and answers for the teachers, were printed on a special program. At the singing of a hymn the teachers came forward to the chancel steps for this impressive service. Good for the teachers, of course, and for the parents as well as the boys and girls.

Japanese Church Dedicate New Building

one that they were about to take possession of their own church building. The occasion was the dedication of the fine new parish building built solely for the Japanese people of the city. It is a fine building, with a hall seating five hundred and well equipped to carry on the religious and social activities of the mission. Bishop Huston led the service, assisted by the Japanese priest, the Rev. Gennosuki Shoji, and a number of the Seattle clergy.

One Way to Get a New Church

One way to get a new church is to build it yourself. The Rev. F. O. Taylor is the vicar of Elko County out in Nevada, a small parcel of land covering 17,000 square miles. The town of Wells is a growing railroad centre in the rear of this ranching and sheeping area, and is one of the promising and permanent towns of the state. A couple of lots were bought recently and plans drawn for a simple chapel and apartment. Next month Bishop Jenkins is going there with his little hammer and saw, take on a couple of workmen, and with the vicar erect this building themselves. Deaconess Miriam B. Allen is on the job there already, and is to carry on the pastoral work and Sunday school, with Mr. Taylor making a regular visit for services.

Rector Is Sued for Large Sum

The Rev. Louis B. Howell, rector of St. Paul's, Norwalk, Connecticut, is the defendant in a $55,000 damage suit. It seems that he had an elderly parishioner, the late Mrs. Alice F. Burritt. It is charged that Mr. Howell used his clerical office to influence Mrs. Burritt in making her will. It is charged that he wrote the will, that he named himself as executor and that he was not bonded. The relatives of Mrs. Burritt further charge that he has disposed of all but $8,000 of the large estate and that he has given no accounting.

Reinheimer, head of the field department of the National Council, Mr. Earl Coppage, executive secretary of the diocese of Minnesota, and Rev. Thomas P. Foster, rector at Escanaba. Plans were made for a diocesan preaching mission this coming month, with local clergy assigned to missions throughout the diocese for four day missions to be held from October 9th through the 12th. Missions in parishes are also to be held from the 23rd through the 30th.

Educator Returns to School

It isn't every one who is smart enough to know that there is still room for improvement. Apparently Miss Zettan Gordon feels that way. She has been the director of religious education in the diocese of Bethlehem for eight years, and has done a grand job at it I judge from the reports that come in from rectors. But she is knocking off for a year in order to enter the Deaconess Training School in Philadelphia, figuring that with a little more knowledge she can do even a better job. sir, a lot of people came, so the service is a fixture. So now Dr. James is able to announce in his parish paper that his parish has everything in the way of services from the plainest; plain to the most elaborate, so that everyone should be able to satisfy their needs. Good idea.

Layman Takes Over the Job

A layman, and a newspaper man at that, took hold of All Saints', Seattle, when the parish was left vacant by the retirement of the Rev. T. A. Hilton from the active ministry. And Mr. Raymond Holmes has built up a real choir and a considerable congregation, and his Sunday school is going so well that it has opened up a branch in another district of the city.

Long Island Clergy Hold Conference

The clergy of the diocese of Long Island met in conference for two days last week at East Hampton, with over one hundred present. The guest for the occasion was Bishop Spencer of Western Missouri. There were conferences and round table discussion on the work of the Church, both national and diocesan. Bishop Stires and Bishop Larned both addressed the conference.

Presiding Bishop Asks for Prayers

Here is a message from Bishop Perry, Presiding Bishop:

"Rarely has the National Council, and the Church whose agent it is, faced more important questions than those which will confront us at the meeting October 11th-13th next. The generous response of the Church to the Emergency Appeal has given temporary relief for the needs of 1932, but the program for 1933 will be urgently before us. We seek guidance that we may wisely administer the charge laid upon us and I earnestly ask the prayers of the Church at this time.

"May I suggest the following prayer for those who care to make use of it either publicly or privately:

"O Spirit of Wisdom and Power, by whom the whole body of the Church is governed and sanctified; may thy controlling presence direct and guide our National Council in all its plans and purposes; that our service for the establishment of Christ's Kingdom may be wisely

A Back to the Farm Movement

The Rev. Goodrich R. Fenner, secretary of rural work of the National Council, is encouraged by a back-to-the-farm movement which seems to be in full swing. The cheerful thing about it is that they are not going back to make money but rather to get away from it. Disillusioned by the wealth-seeking motive of industrial life they are returning to the farm to live, not to raise crops for others to eat. Says Mr. Fenner:

"If one can trust the temper of current articles, these are not a people who are afraid to stand up and fight in a ruthless competitive system, but they seem to be the earliest voices speaking out in behalf of a sane, well reasoned social movement seeking the inner satisfactions and contentments of life removed from the life and work of industrial cen-

One Way of Handling the Depression

Times have probably been as hard in the Ozarks as anywhere, and no one has been nearer to them than Deaconess Hurlbut, but her annual report of her work in the diocese of Missouri, aided by an appropriation through the National Council, reminds one of the mother who on seeing the wolf at the door, brought him in and made a coat of his fur. Deaconess Hurlbut says:

"One could not write even a cook book these days without coming around sooner or later to the depression. I would say that one of the best things we have been doing in the Ozarks is enduring it. I know many an old Noah here for whom no ark of refuge has been set afloat, who yet at dawn opens his eastern windows with confident expectation of God's ultimate mercies.

"The Sunday school begun a year ago has grown and prospered, and has now enrolled thirty children who come regularly. The work of the Church Periodical Club is wonderfully effective; books and magazines are a continual source of blessing to us. The recreation room, last year just a dream, is in actual daily use. With victrola, books and games, it is a community project which brings not only happiness, but a richer, fuller life to the entire neighborhood. Altogether, it has been a happy, successful year in southern Missouri."

advice which the pastor might well give to a lad suffering from the habit of self-abuse. He explains the best way in which the pastor might help an epileptic to be an epileptic and yet at the same time to keep on being his best self. Similarly he makes suggestions for the treatment of other mental diseases. All in all, this volume ought to be of enormous help to pastors and of very great value in Seminary courses in the Pastoral Ministry. Ministers will long be indebted to Dr. Oliver for the careful preparation which he gave to this book and to the Western Theological Seminary for their part in initiating it.

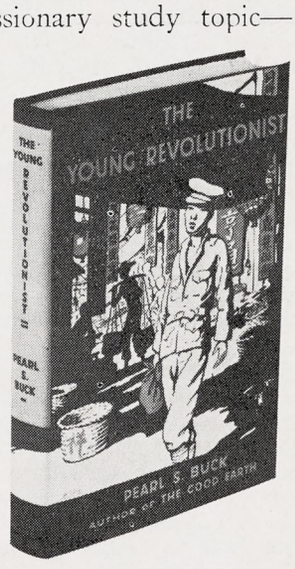
The YOUNG REVOLUTIONIST



By PEARL S. BUCK

A new book by the author of the Pulitzer Prize winner, "The Good Earth." In it Mrs. Buck portrays Chinese youth today with the same skill with which she pictured the Chinese family in her earlier book.

It is an authentic picture of great numbers of Chinese boys and young men as the author has seen them during recent years.

With compelling power she shows modern Chinese youth torn by the strife between the old and the new, aflame with patriotism, blindly devoted to ideals but half understood, groping hungrily for a religious faith and eagerly helping to build a new China.

This book is of special usefulness in connection with the forthcoming missionary study topic—China.

Vol. XVII. No. 6 | OCTOBER 6, 1932 | Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

AN EXAMINATION of the amounts paid to the National Council by the dioceses will soon convince one that the comparatively few dioceses along the eastern seaboard are the most generous in their support of the National work of the Church. That an overwhelming percentage of the money paid to the Council should come from the few dioceses making up the First, Second and Third Provinces is as it should be, since the communicant strength of the Church is largely there. It is not so clear why these eastern dioceses should so far outstrip the rest of the Church in the percentage of payments of assigned quotas. These quotas, so we are repeatedly informed, are based upon current parish expenses; that is, each parish is asked to give to the National work of the Church a percentage of what they spend upon themselves. So while it is true that the quota system has largely broken down under the Pay-As-You-Go Plan, nevertheless the percentage of payments on quotas do serve as a measure of parochial generosity. Look at the figures for 1931, the last available, and you will find that the percentage of payments on quotas of the three eastern provinces far outstripped the other provinces of the Church. New England paid 85%; New York and New Jersey paid 71% and Washington paid 82%. There is then a sharp drop, with Sewanee paying 51%; the Mid-west 65%; the Northwest 57%; the Southwest 48% and the Pacific 62%. Assuming that quotas have been properly assigned there is but one conclusion. Eastern dioceses, more critical of the work of the National Council judging by statements of their diocesans at the last meeting of the House of Bishops, are nevertheless the most generous in their support of the Council's work. Why this should be so is a question which might well concern the leaders at the Church Missions House.

CHURCH PEOPLE will be glad to learn that a comprehensive study of the relation of Church and State, including an inquiry into controversial questions as to the part the Church should or should not play in "politics," is now being carried on by a representative group of Church people, under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches. Speaking of the study Dr. F. Ernest Johnson, research director, says:

"There is a very wide range of opinion among members of the Protestant churches as to the propriety of participation on the part of the Church in political processes, such as the election of public officials when moral issues are believed to be at stake and the enactment of legislation which is held to be in the interest of public welfare. There is also confusion as to the limits of the authority of the State in matters of conscience. This issue was brought forcibly to public attention in the Macintosh case when the Supreme Court decided that a man who could not agree without reservation to bear arms in defense of the country was not eligible to citizenship. The dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Hughes is supported by large groups of church people and yet there is apparently no consensus within the churches on this question. The current study is surveying the historical background of the present situation, analyzing and comparing positions taken on the subject by different religious bodies in America and gathering opinions from church leaders concerning the extent to which any type of political action on the part of the churches is proper and desirable."

THOSE WHO ARE WORRYING about modern youth can stop if we can take as authoritative the findings of the Welfare Council of New York, based upon a survey of the social life and recreational desires of Brooklyn boys. The study upsets a number of common notions about boys. It shows, for one thing, that reading is a more popular pastime than baseball, or even swimming in the month of June or July. Films had no particular appeal to the hundreds of boys questioned. Hiking was put down as their favorite pastime by a large number, with fishing—just sitting on the end of a dock with a line tied to the end of a pole—came in for a high average. Only 13 boys out of a total of over 1400 had any desire to play golf. But fifty-nine stated that they preferred to spend their spare time "going out with girls," with only fourteen expressing any desire to attend parties and dances. The conclusion drawn by those making the survey was that "an overwhelming majority voiced desires that, judged by strict social standards, were entirely sane, wholesome and reasonable. Few gave answers that would cause even the most conservative parents any alarm."

REFLECTIONS OF A LIBERAL CATHOLIC

By

JOHN RAYMOND CROSBY

Rector of Saint Luke's, Seaford, Delaware

DURING the last few weeks when the admirable bass fishing reminds both Catholic and Liberal that, as successors of the Apostles, angling is an appropriate ecclesiastical recreation for tired fishers of men, I have had the pleasure of entertaining in my hitherto peaceful rectory an extreme member of the Anglo-Catholic party, and following him a brilliant young liberal, whose acquaintance I made between papers at the recent Church Congress in Hartford.

As a consequence, I am in a condition of mental and moral collapse. To say that I am "stunned" only tends to show the limitations of the English language. To quote Doctor Guthrie's Buddhist friends, "the boat of my soul has been rocked." I am in a condition of mental and moral confusion that can be better imagined than described. One young gentleman left me with the feeling that I was a dangerous heretic of anarchistic leanings, a puller down of the temple and a menace to the peace of the Church. The other left me strongly of the opinion that I was a hidebound mediaevalist, a blind follower of obsolete tradition, that I had missed my day and age, and that I ought to have lived in Spain a few centuries ago, as assistant to the late lamented Father Torquemada.

They were both kindly young fellows about twenty-seven years of age, and I believe knew very nearly as much as I thought I did at about the same period, if that was possible. I was interested to compare the difference in their minds. The Catholic youth's outlook seemed to be that of a locked iron chest containing valuable but mouldy papers and only to be opened by the application of a high explosive. My liberal friend's mind seemed to resemble a large bag in which my wife deposits fragments of variegated rags, which ultimately emerge into, what I am told, is termed a "crazy quilt." To quote the Vivar of Wakefield, who I believe to have been a mild Liberal Catholic, with a taste for the Stuart divines and fishing, "There is doubtless much to be said on both sides." I can understand the contempt, and perhaps the scorn, with which the convinced and zealous members of both extremist parties regard us who walk the middle of the way; who regard the "via media" as the ideal state; and who are, perhaps, liable to be overtaken, and occasionally run over by the automobiles and carriages of our better equipped neighbors, whether the Catholic Juggernaut, or the Liberal limousine.

WHY should the term Liberal-Catholic be sneered at by the rest of the members of this Universal Church of ours? I was listening to a conversation respecting a professor in one of our seminaries who is tainted by this heresy (at the time I was untouched) and I gathered from one party that he had profaned the Ark of the Covenant and was beyond the pale of Catholic sympathy, and from the other, that he was a weak minded individual who was afraid to come out boldly and join the revolutionary army that was in a few weeks to revolutionize the American Church. Personally, I think that we have a much stronger case than either of them. I believe that we do represent the "ethos" of this Church, and the historical outlook which prevailed at the time of the Reformation. If we are not a "via media," what are we, and what justification is there for our existence? If we are Roman in theology, and tradition, why do we not go to Rome? If we are Protestant in the meaning of our fellow non-Roman, non-sacramental and non-Episcopal brethren why have we bishops, sacraments, and a Book of Common Prayer? If we are going to let all do precisely what we please from interdenominational Communions to Egyptian dances, why have constitutions and canons, ordination vows and other bars to progress? If we are going to exist as a Church and not either go over to Rome—which is logical; become Universalists—which seems probable; or go down in a welter of internecine warfare—which seems inevitable, we must adopt a middle way upon which we must all walk in unity. As a body we must have laws; as a denomination we must have dogma; if we would exist as a religious force we must have peace. Two cannot walk together unless they are agreed. In this lies the strength of the Liberal-Catholic.

I CAME into this Church late in life. Before I arrived I had formulated certain definite ideas concerning the Episcopal Church, which I still hold, and which if I did not hold I should leave again tomorrow. And I am firmly convinced that among the main reasons for this Church failing to function as a living branch of the Church Universal is because so many of our brethren have on the one hand gone back to the hidebound tradition of the dark ages, and that many more—in pure intellectual revolt—are substituting ecclesiastical anarchy for the liberty in Christ promised in the New Testament.

I hope that please God, I am a liberal. I believe that all branches of the Christian religion are climbing up the same hill, and by different paths approaching the same goal. Naturally, I also firmly believe that we Episcopalians will get to the top of the hill first—if I did not I should not be an Episcopalian. Certainly I believe—here comes the mediaeval spirit—that the Protestant bodies have fallen away from the Catholic, primitive Faith in doctrine, tradition and practice, and I hope and pray that in God's good time we shall be united in one fold under One Shepherd. I do not think that I am illiberal in not believing in Union Communion services of the St. Louis type. I believe, and am bound to believe, that only an episcopally ordained priest can consecrate what is to me the body and blood of our Lord. I have never refused, and have always invited all baptized Christians to participate in the sacrament of love at the altar of my Church. That is one thing—indiscriminate love feasts are another.

I am firmly of the opinion that much good is being and can be done by encouraging fraternal intercourse between all Christian bodies, but I am also of the opinion that Episcopal churches are primarily for members of our own Church to be instructed in the Word of God and to receive the Holy Sacraments. I believe even more firmly that our loyalty to our Church requires us to stick to every iota of the authorized Prayer Book provided for our use in the regular services of our Church. Pageants, dances, and faith healing have their own place for those who require them. But I do not feel that Rabbis, Mahatmas, Mullahs and Vegetarians have a place in a Christian pulpit. What are parish houses for?

I do not see an iota of difference between the American Missal and the ecclesiastical vaudeville practiced in some of our churches. There was not a word written in The Living Church regarding St. Marks-in-the-Bouwerie that could not be applied to the American Missal, and not a word in The Churchman regarding the American Missal that could not be applied to the St. Louis celebration.

I do believe that the episcopacy is a divine institution, that the bishops are the successors of the Apostles, that they are by divine authority the rulers of the Church of God, and that we owe them respect and obedience in all matters over which they exercise legitimate authority.

I do believe that at ordination one receives special gifts indelibly imprinted on the soul, that are not given to laity and that distinguish the priest of the Church of God from the minister of religion. Can any one tell me why both Liberals and Catholic priests regard deacons with such an air of conscious superiority?

I AM also hidebound enough to believe that the priest ought to insist on receiving the outward signs of respect from the people, and speak with authority and not as the scribes. I remember some young people from one of our universities coming to the parish and holding what I understand is called a "House Party," and inviting me to attend. On entering a seventeen year old girl of the parish came forward and addressed me as John. I also remember taking her across my knee "coram publico" and administering a sound spanking—it may have been mediaeval but it did a lot of good. It also caused a lot of talk, but appeared to be generally approved.

I believe emphatically that the Holy Eucharist is Christ's own service, and ought to be the central service in every Church on the Lord's own day. I believe that every member of the congregation has the right to make their communion at any celebration. While I teach and hold to the doctrine of fasting communion, I feel that until it becomes part of the constitutions and canons of this Church I have no right to enforce my peculiar ideas upon my people.

While I am a strong believer in Reservation, and while the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament is—next to the Mass—my favorite devotion, I refuse to allow either of these devotions in any church of which I am rector, until such practices are authorized and sanctioned by the General Convention as part of the doctrine of this Church.

While I believe in using to the fullest extent the vestments and ritual allowed and hallowed by the tradition of the Anglican Church, I abhor from the bottom of my heart the travesty of Roman devotions, theology and practice indulged in by the extreme section of the Anglo-Catholic party.

There is rather a lot of "I" in this article, but I believe that I am expressing the views of a very large number, if not a majority of the priests of this Church, and I believe of the generality of the laity. They dislike equally the extremes of both sides. We are an Anglo-Saxon Church, with an Anglo-Saxon temperament. I notice too, that the aggressive element of both parties is confined to a few who make the noise. I plead guilty myself. The great majority of both clergy and laity are, I am convinced, lovers of the middle way.

I notice that when I was feeling my feet in this Church, and was a more or less rabid member of the Anglo-Catholic party, that outside the Greeks and my foreigners, the congregation was mainly composed of equally rabid members of the same party. Now I notice that the Catholics come to confession and communion; the evangelicals come and say their prayers; and that the few liberals "coo as gently as any sucking dove;" while curiously enough the Presbyterians, Baptists and other denominations who have no church in this community all come to our church. The rectory seems to be always full of children, the church school is crowded. We get more young people than old at church, and the members of the Auxiliary keep on fighting as usual. Everybody seems normal.

And all of them, Catholics, Evangelicals, Liberals, and the strangers within our gates call me Father as matter of course. I think that there is something in Liberal-Catholicism.

The Lion

THE Jordan River is a tumultuous stream that rushes down between two sets of banks—a channel within a channel. During most of the year the water is confined to the lower set of banks but in times of high water it rises and spreads over the wider area. In the Scriptures you read about the "swellings of Jordan." These upper banks, subject to occasional floods, are scarcely habitable and remain in a wild state of jungle-like character. They made a fine place of hiding for wild beasts and in the old days many of them roamed about, including the lion. The Palestinian lion was not as large as the African species and probably not as ferocious, tho he was capable of killing and devouring a man. He was noted for his power, strength and courage.

In the book of Genesis the tribe of Judah is likened to a lion. St. John, in the Revelation, evidently refers to this when he pictures our Lord as the "Lion of the Tribe of Judah." We are not surprised, therefore, to find the Christians in quite early times taking the lion as a symbol of our Lord in some of their religious pictures and carvings. The lion was easily representative of the spiritual strength, power, and courage which they found residing in Him.

But, of course, that was not enough. Several other reasons, explanations, and interpretations were gathered about this symbol. The ancients used to think that the lion slept with one eye open. This fitted in with the text in Psalm 121—"He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep"—and was considered very suitable when applied to our Lord. When the cubs were born they had their eyes closed and the people of the olden days thought they were born dead, being brought to life on the third day by the voice of the male lion. Out of this they drew the anology that the Crucified Savior was brought to life again on the third day by the voice of the Heavenly Father. Another ancient legend said that the lion was able to obliterate his tracks by sweeping his tail across them as a means of evading the hunter. A parallel was found for this in the fact that our Lord was able to conceal His glory from His enemies and accomplish the Divine Will in spite of their efforts to obstruct Him.

In the Book of the Revelation no one was able to open the book bound with the seven seals except the Lion of the Tribe of Judah who was possessed of supreme power. He is so pictured in many of the old churches. In such picturing He is always surrounded with the nimbus containing the three bars which indicate the Holy Trinity and show His divine nature. This is to distinguish the Lion of the Tribe of Judah from the other lion which was often used to indicate the second Evangelist, St. Mark, and also from the "roaring lion" which was symbolic of Satan seeking whom he might devour.

There is a real language of Christian symbolism, containing many shades of meaning. Therefore one needs to be careful about the embellishment of a Church building or one is likely to say just the opposite of what is intended. The lion with the plain nimbus means St. Mark. The lion with no nimbus about his head means Satan. It is only the lion adorned with the nimbus containing the three upper bars of the Greek cross which means the Lion of the Tribe of Judah and is properly symbolical of our Lord.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

What Is Love?

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

SAINT PAUL was a scholar but back of his scholarship was the love of Christ which constrained him to do that which he did. As a philosopher he might have believed but there would have been no engine forcing him to do the self sacrificing things which he did if his belief had been merely in his head. And in preaching to his disciples he emphasized this when he bids the Ephesians to be "rooted and grounded in love." Thank God he didn't say logic. The ecclesiastic puts it a little differently when he puts first being rooted and grounded in the faith. That naturally comes first to the teacher. But the fact is there must be love in the heart before the faith can be an effective agency.

When we speak of love what is it?

"We love Him because He first loved us." This must be true. There are very few atheists who believe that the forces of nature originated in matter. They believe in some sort of deity who started the purposeful creation which man analyzes but does not create. If this is true of natural forces it is also true of those spiritual qualities in man which exist because they first existed in the mind of the creator. There is every reason to believe that all the good in life comes from God. Whence comes the evil we may not know. It is the puzzle of the ages. But of this I am persuaded that "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of light." That seems to be my major premise. What is yours?

It is the only hypothesis that can ever bring order out of chaos. Any other source of goodness, any other end of goodness than God, would destroy all moral order and all spiritual endeavor. What then is love?

FORTUNATELY St. Paul gives us a clear picture of its essential character. In his Epistle to the Corinthians he is speaking of the gifts of the spirit. He writes how the early Christians were attracted to the miraculous gifts which came from Pentecost. They were intrigued by the gifts of healing, of prophecy and of tongues. St. Paul does not minimize the value of these extraordinary powers but he cautions his readers that there is a more excellent way. He then gives them his wonderful chapter on Charity.

In order that his readers may not be deceived he begins the XIII Corinthians by pointing out what love is not. It is not magnetic oratory. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not Charity I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." One is more or less familiar with the brazen affrontery of a certain type of evangelist who leaves behind him, not charity, but bitter prejudice and religious hatred. Power these prophets possess but ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes from thorns? They do not.

Next he addresses himself to those prophets who claim to understand all mysteries, who revel in the occult. Again we are reminded of certain types of leaders whose cults are not distinguished for loving those who are not of the elect. The world has had many cults who claimed to know occult mysteries; many groups who claim superior knowledge; many teachers who claim to heal by faith. But St. Paul says that unless these prophets are animated by love they are nothing in God's sight.

It is quite the fashion to contend that philanthropy is the essential element in religion. "No," says St. Paul, "though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and have not charity it profiteth me nothing."

Another type believe that zeal is the essential thing. But again St. Paul says: "Though I give my body to be burned and have not charity" the result is still zero.

In short St. Paul makes a difference between the root principles of religion and the various fruits which may be the result of spiritual effort. Unless you are rooted and grounded in love you cannot produce the fruits of the spirit.

WHAT then is charity? St. Paul defines it by analyzing it. If you analyze water it is composed of hydrogen and oxygen. Neither of these elements is water but water is the combination of them both. You do not destroy water because you are able to analyze it. So there are certain basic elements in love, all of which combined in proper proportions produce the waters of life.

These are the elements. First, a soul that loves men rather than condemns them. One of the most potent arguments against the Church is the censorious nature of Christians. "Judge not that ye be not judged" is a principle that they accept in the abstract but reject in the concrete. They sincerely hope that they themselves will not be severely judged but surely God could not expect them to be merciful to A and B who have injured them. Note this first element in charity. It is something within us that induces us to suffer long and yet to be kind toward those who cause the suffering. It is something within us that prevents us from being easily provoked and refuses to behave itself unseemly under great provocation. It is a rare quality in human nature because it is so difficult to acquire, but it is an essential element in the production of love.

Second, a soul that can accept defeat with equanimity and take losses without bitterness. How do we react when we fail in our endeavor; when someone less able than ourselves passes us in the race of social distinction or self expression. Are we good losers? "Charity envieth not, seeketh not her own." It is just that. Love puts God's will first and one's own prominence entirely submissive to that will.

Third, are we good winners? Or when we gain some advance in wealth or reputation do we become snobs and look down on those who lack our good fortune. "Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." "In all times of our adversity, in all times of our prosperity, Good Lord deliver us," for it is in these two circumstances that our love is tested.

Finally what is our reaction to the ordinary events of the day? Do we enjoy scandal? Are we fond of dwelling upon the faults of others? Are we sympathetic with the illustrious company of muck rakers? "Charity thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity." It is the attribute of love that it believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things and beareth its full share of all things.

After all the lovers of mankind have first been lovers of God and they are those who realize that if we do not love our brethren whom we have seen we deceive ourselves in thinking that we can love God whom we have not seen. I believe that love, joy and peace are the fruits of those who are rooted and grounded in love.

IRWIN ST. JOHN TUCKER

THE BRIDE OF GOD

LET us get a picture of the grand sweep of the story of the Bible. Turn to the first chapter and read the first five verses. This is a picture of the creation of the world. "Genesis" means "Beginning."

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Now turn to the last book of the Bible, Revelation, chapters 21 and 22. Read the first verse of 21. "I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea." This is a picture of the "Re-Creation." Read verse 5: "Behold I make all things new."

The Old Creation is full of sorrow. Turn back to Genesis and read chapter 3, verses 16, 17 and 18.

The Re-Creation shall be full of happiness. Read Revelation 21:4.

The words "And there was no more sea" in Rev. 21:1, refer back to Genesis 1:3; "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the deep"—or "The waters"—the disorderly chaos of primeval matter. "There shall be no more disorder before God."

All that lies between these two books is a picture of the effort of the Divine Energy to accomplish the goal and purpose of evolution. But the Bible pictures it, not as a dry mechanical evolution, but as a love-story—a romance; the story of the Bride of God. Read Revelations, chapter 22, verses 16-17. "The Spirit and the Bride say, 'Come.'"

In the first chapter of Genesis, the Spirit is moving to bring order out of chaos, light out of darkness, form and meaning out of formlessness and void.

In the last chapter of Revelation, the work has been done; the Holy City is ready for all who will enter.

Thus the whole Bible is pictured as a heavenly romance; as the wooing by the Spirit of God of the fickle and stubborn Spirit of Humanity. The Church is constantly depicted both in the Old and New Testaments as the Bride of God.

Old Testament prophets dwell continually on this idea of the marriage of God to Israel, and the unfaithfulness of the nation to the Old Covenant is described as the unfaithfulness of a wife to her husband.

It is a magnificent sweep of action which meets our vision as we survey the Bible in this way. The whole course of human destiny is shown as a steady drive toward the establishment of the Holy City, in which God and Humanity dwell together in perfect happiness.

HOME WORK

Follow up this story of the wedding of God and his bride by reading Isaiah 54:5: "For thy Maker is thy Husband"; Jeremiah 3: 20: "As a wife departeth from her husband"; Hosea 2:19-20: "I will betroth thee unto me for ever."

In your Prayer Book, turn to the opening sentences of Morning and Evening Prayer. In them the Church is pictured as the dwelling-place of God, and home of his children.

The second sentence in Evening Prayer should read "Lord, I have loved the home of thy children, and the place where thine honor dwelleth." Every church is a home of the family of God. "Parish" and "diocese" mean "around the house" and "household." Conversely, every home is a temple. The chief objective of God's civilization, pictured as The Holy City, is to protect all homes from want, sin and fear; from evil without and evil within.

Read the exhortation in the Marriage Service on page 300, referring to the "mystical union that is betwixt Christ and his Church" as the pattern and example of a happy home.

Now read, or sing softly to yourself, the first stanza of hymn 464, "The Church's One Foundation:"

"From heaven he came and sought her
To be his Holy Bride;
With His own blood he bought her
And for her life he died."

Thus all our worship centers in the Heavenly Wooing.

MEMORY WORK

Turn to your table of the Books of the Bible. It looks like a hopeless task to memorize these. But it is really very simple. Take a pencil and mark a bracket enclosing the first five books of the Old Testament. In the margin, write "The Law."

Bracket the next twelve; write in the margin "History."

Bracket the next five, from Job to Song of Solomon. Mark them "Poetry."

Bracket the next five. Isaiah to Daniel. Mark them "Greater Prophets."

Bracket the last twelve. Mark them "Minor Prophets."

You now have them grouped thus: 5-12-5-5-12. Say these figures over and over until you have them memorized, like a telephone number. List them in your notebook thus: Law, 5; History, 12; Poetry, 5; Greater Prophets, 5; Lesser Prophets, 12.

Say these over until you have them perfectly memorized.

Just Souls

By

C. RUSSELL MOODEY

Is he lost? No—
He merely went ahead
Across the field of the dead
To find his Christ on the other side
As he found Him here on earth.

WHEN a loved one dies we send a notice to newspapers and they in turn print it in the obituary column. Now wouldn't it be more appropriate to place this notice in the lost and found column? The obituary column is so forbidding, so funereal in its settings. On the other hand the lost and found column represents the general experience of hearts who have had one of their loved ones suddenly snatched away. In the shadow hour they are weighted down with grief—lingering night is in their soul—and in the prevailing gloom their thoughts are only on this—he is gone—he is lost—the family circle is broken.

The months fly by and yesterday's setting sun is brightening up the corners of today. And by that light we see many things which in our hour of sorrow were obscured by grief. Yet we must not say that time is a great healer and that it can take away the sting of death. It isn't time that does this, but the soul finds release in the feeling that he who was lost is found. Our loved one is now a part of God's immortality—the soul has merely graduated from its earthly limitations and now in the majestic sweep of heaven it finds joy and greater freedom. This conviction comes not by reason—there can be no such thing as rationalized immortality—it is born in the cradle of instinct and nourished by the persuasive evidence of the glory and beauty and usefulness of this soul that left us a few days ago. He was lost to us through grief—now he is found for us in the reality and the realization of his virtues. He rests from his labors, but not from his God.

The secret to immortality is revealed in Jesus Christ. People who have the Christ Spirit in them also have access to ultimate victory. Not even death can destroy the soul—the soul that seeks out Jesus day by day. And though in our sorrow hour this soul seems lost, the remaining days of our own life here below bring us convincing evidence that this soul is found. Our tears of sorrow become tears of joy. The family circle is not broken—its diameter is merely lengthened to include the immortal.

WHEN ASKED ABOUT KING HENRY WHAT DO YOU ANSWER?

Reviewed by GARDINER M. DAY

"I have a question I would like to ask you," timidly says Miss Doolittle to her rector.

"O.K. put the question now," replies the rector.

"Well, it is this: Pat Murphy says the Episcopal Church is no church, for it was founded by a bad King in order to get a divorce from his wife and," continued Miss Doolittle, "while I know it isn't true, I don't know how to tell him."

I don't suppose there is a rector in the country who has not had this question thrown at him many times. If the questioner or the accuser were people of a non-studious turn of mind, he probably found himself somewhat puzzled to know exactly what to give them to read to correct this erroneous view of history. It could not be a long volume like Patterson's History of the Church of England. It must be very brief, unmistakably clear and absolutely to the point. Now he can secure exactly the book for Miss Doolittle in The Story of The Church by Bishop Irving P. Johnson. It is a WITNESS publication and costs only fifty cents.

In the space of 86 pages Bishop Johnson tells the story of the Anglican Church from its founding unto the present day. The story written in Bishop Johnson's inimitable style moves along with the rapidity and delight of a novel. Special emphasis is given to the reformation period and to our way of thinking this is the most useful part of the book. A good example of the author's writing may be gleaned from these few sentences concerning Henry VIII: "It is quite the fashion for those who are critical of the Anglican Church to point to Henry VIII as its founder, thus raising two questions and blending them into one indictment. Henry's morals were one thing and his relation to the English Church quite another. If Henry was a licentious king he differed in no way from Pope Sextus IV (1471-1484) who was accused of advancing his illegitimate children to profitable positions—Henry was no better and no worse than the Popes from whom he received his inspiration. It was the perfidy of John, the most immoral of all the English kings, which surrendered the English Church to Papal misrule; it was the wickedness of Henry which dissolved the bonds. The vital question is whether in the dissolution of relations between Rome and Canterbury, the Church lost anything which was essential to its continuity or to its witnessing function."

This book ought to be of real value to all who want a brief history of our Church. Every parish would do well to have one copy at least in its Church School Library, especially for the benefit of High School children who are constantly confronted by Miss Doolittle's dilemma.

The Christian Way Out is the title of another WITNESS publication. It consists of the brief replies of fourteen prominent people to the question put to them by our managing editor Mr. Spofford: What is the Christian Way Out of our International and Economic Difficulties? Among the writers are such men as Harry Laidler, Spencer Miller, Archbishop Temple, Bishop Parsons and and Nicholas Murray Butler. The replies appeared in THE WITNESS last spring. As none of the writers knew what the others were saying there is no continuity in the volume. In general the majority, if not all the essays, agree that if our modern society is to be rebuilt in the likeness of the Kingdom of God, the Christian ideal for society, cooperation must replace competition, the motive of service must replace that of private profit, security for those who work must be achieved through unemployment insurance, and the purpose of man's work must find expression not in material, but in human ends. The various writers believe this recreated society will be secured in different ways. Dr. McGregor thinks it will come through voluntary sharing on the part of the Christian world family, while Dr. Niebuhr feels workers organization and political pressure will be essential for its achievement. Different replies will appeal to different people. Those by Drs. Laidler, Niebuhr, and Mrs. Simkhovitch appeal to me as most practically helpful. In any case it is an encouraging sign that so many prominent Christians openly acclaim the need for a really radical transformation in our present economic order. The volume is only seventy-five pages long, costs only fifty cents, and has several pages of questions to aid in its use as a religious discussion group text.

THE RURAL REGIONS OF MARQUETTE

Few of us realize the extent of the great northern country in the diocese of Marquette, 18,000 square miles of territory, a country that has made many people in the cities rich with its lumber, iron and copper. Bishop Ablewhite says the rural missions of the diocese are doing their best to build up character, in order that the people who go out by dozens every year to the cities may enrich the city parishes to which they go.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

Mr. John A. Lee of Portland, Oregon, raises the startling question as to just what is the function of a church choir. The obvious answer is "to sing" but you can't get by that easily with Mr. Lee. He raises his question in order to answer it, which he does by reminding us that the choir also should take the lead in the responses; that it should be neat, prim and proper thus affording a nice background for the officiating clergyman. Then as I read his letter I take it that Mr. Lee feels that we should not be too fussy about the vocal abilities of those who aspire to places in the choir. After all it does offer people an opportunity to serve which we should welcome even though they are off key on occasions. There will be differences of opinion here but Mr. Lee illustrates his point with a nice little story which he says is a true one. Priest and choir were doing their best to sing the service and were making a bad job of it. It bothered a good many in the congregation, a fact which was noticed by a little girl attending the service with her father. At the conclusion of the service she looked up to her dad, who was obviously distressed by the singing and said; "Daddy, God does not mind if they sing as well as they can, does He?" I am not informed that there was any response on the part of the proud parent, but just to show that there are two sides to every question I think papa might have whispered softly, "No daughter, God does not mind, but I do."

San Francisco Parish Has Double Anniversary

Trinity, San Francisco, has recently celebrated a double anniversary. Forty years ago on September 18th Bishop Nichols laid the corner stone of the present building. In 1901 the first General Convention held west of the Rockies assembled there and had the distinction of creating six new missionary districts; the Philippines; Porto Rico, Cuba, Salina, Honolulu and Hankow. Last July the Rev. C. P. Deems completed ten years as rector of the parish. They have been having services and receptions to celebrate these events.

Colorado Parish Has Anniversary

The fiftieth anniversary of the Church of the Good Samaritan, Gunnison, Colorado, was celebrated last week. Bishop Ingley was present and took part in the service and was also the speaker at a parish dinner to mark the event. The Rev. Victor Mck. Walne is the rector of this parish, which also sponsors a number of surrounding missions, all of which were visited by Bishop Ingley.

Veteran Detroit Clergyman Is Killed

The Rev. Harry Midworth, retired priest of the diocese of Michigan, died the afternoon of September 19th from injuries sustained earlier in the day when he was struck by an automobile. Mr. Midworth was born in England in 1859, was ordained priest in Detroit in 1920 and was the rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Detroit, until he retired in 1930.

Bishop Francis Has An Anniversary

Bishop Francis of Indianapolis observed the 33rd anniversary of his consecration on St. Matthew's Day with a service at the cathedral. Assisting him in the service was the Rev. Francis P. Keicher who was a boy in one of the missions of the cathedral in Milwaukee, served by Bishop Francis nearly fifty years ago.

Tells the Auxiliary About the Church Army

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary of Emmanuel Church, Petoskey, Michigan, were told the story of the Church Army at a recent meeting by Mrs. Nicholas DeKruyter of Grand Rapids, who is the secretary of the organization in that particular part of the country. She told an interesting story about the work in England and of its expansion throughout the world. She said that the Army in the United States was organized twenty-four years ago by Captain Mountford. She is wrong there I think—eight or ten years ago would be enough. Incidentally will someone please tell me why it is "The Woman's Auxiliary" and not the "Women's Auxiliary"—for the life of me I can't see why it should not be plural instead of singular.

Western Seminary Opens Next Week

The Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, Illinois, opens on the 10th, with the faculty the same as last year with the addition of five tutors. These young men, who are to serve as intermediaries between professors and students and keep the boys hustling in good American style, are the Rev. John R. Ramsay Jr., a recent graduate of the General; the Rev. Robert G. Purrington of Baltimore, a recent graduate of Seabury; the Rev. John Heuss Jr. who graduated from Western in 1931 and studied last year in Germany; Mr. Allen D. Albert Jr., of the University of Chicago and of Harvard, and Mr. Richard H. Hadley, a graduate of the School of Speech of Northwestern University, whose job it will be, I take it, to teach the boys not to mumble their words—which is a very good idea. Indeed so important is it that they do not mumble their words that the school has two speech tutors as Mr. Rex Wilkes Jr. is to labor with the boys of the middle class. A junior faculty, as you see, since four out of five have it.

Dedicate New Pulpit in Denver

The highlight of the story is not that a new pulpit was dedicated, that it was blessed on Homecoming Sunday, or even that Bishop Ingley was the first to preach in it. The story is that Mr. Edward Hempt, a member of the congregation, a Hungarian by birth, hand carved the entire structure and did a very neat and handsome job which brought forth enthusiastic approval from everyone. This pulpit is in St. Luke's, Denver; is a memorial to Rachel Gunson Smith, donated by her husband; was dedicated on September 18th by Bishop Ingley who preached the first sermon from it. There is also a new chancel rail and lectern.

Selling Them Something Near at Home

Last year on the day the Rev. Irving A. Evans, rector at Lonsdale, Rhode Island, made his every member canvass the mills of the town posted notices announcing that they were to be closed indefinitely. It looked like a rather hopeless task getting people to pledge to the support of the church under such circumstances. But Mr. Evans, in speaking on the subject of the every member canvass the other day at a conference of the Rhode Island clergy held at Newport, told them that he obtained pledges amounting to nearly $500 more than his quota. And he did it by having the canvassers stress, in calling upon the parishioners, the work of the church school and the fact that there was a considerable sum in the budget for the relief of the poor.

Bushels of Cabbages and String Beans

The diocese of Chicago, as you have been informed, is collecting foodstuffs from the country, canning it at a couple of centers in the city, and storing it away for distribution among the needy next winter. The other day the Rev. Quinter Kephart of LaSalle, drove into town with a truck loaded with 435 pounds of cabbage, 20 bushels of potatoes, 10 bushels of turnips, 10 bushels of beets, 5 bushels of peppers, 9 bushels of string beans, 10 bushels of tomatoes, 4 bushels of onions, 3 bushels of apples and 4 bushels of pears. Another truckload was received from St. Andrew's, Farm Ridge, as a payment on their quota, though the number of bushels needed to pay off the assigned sum of cash is not stated by our correspondent. About 6,500 cans of food have now been packed away for distribution in the winter.

BIBLE CLASS

IN ADDITION to several hundred individuals who have taken the trouble to send in postals enrolling as members of The Witness Bible Class we can report the formation of at least several classes. At Christ Church, Hudson, N. Y., the twenty-five teachers of the Church school have organized a class and are meeting each Friday evening. At Grace Church, Newton, Massachusetts, a class of Church school teachers also has been formed. In the diocese of Western Massachusetts there is little St. Andrew's chapel, located on the top of Washington Mountain. It is open only in the summer, but they propose to keep in touch with affairs of the Church by seeing that each member of the mission, twenty-five in all, receive THE WITNESS each week. At Mariette, Wisconsin, where the Rev. Edward P. Sabin is rector, a letter has been sent to every parishioner urging them to buy the paper each week from boys of the Church School, the profits from sales being split, half to the boys and the other half into the treasury of the Sunday school. Send us news of classes organized in your parish; drop us a card enrolling individually; urge the adoption of the Bundle Plan in your parish so that all may have the opportunity to follow the lessons as well as the series by Bishop Johnson and the other WITNESS features.

Arizona Gets a Newspaper Write-Up

A bit of spontaneous publicity comes from the Aguila correspondent of the Yuma newspaper, name of paper not supplied with clipping. The Rev. and Mrs. E. T. Simpson have been doing work among various scattered unorganized missions in southwestern Arizona. Here's the quaint way the correspondent put it:

"Parson Simpson and the Missus stopped a few moments with us last Thursday on their way from Salome to Skull Valley, where they go to visit friends. The Simpsons have just moved into their new modern adobe parsonage at Salome which their church, the Protestant Episcopal of Arizona, built for them. Next to it they are erecting an almost magnificent two-story rock and adobe structure to be used as a Church and Social Hall. We've got to hand it to his boss, Bishop Mitchell. He's a great rustler. We only wish we had his line. But we can say this for both Mitchell and Simpson, with all their faults, durn 'em, their hearts are in the right place. We hope that the country grows as substantially as their work has in this territory."

Meetings on Canvass In Olympia

The Rev. David Covell, field secretary of the National Council has been holding meetings on the every member canvass in the diocese of Olympia. He declared the canvass to be the only method of approved value in promoting support for the work of parishes and the National Church. He ran into some opposition in Seattle where the rector of one of the largest parishes gave it as his opinion that the canvass did more harm than good, since it gave parishioners an opportunity to make complaints which often could not be effectively met by the canvassers. He felt that calling the parish together for a dinner where all the problems could be faced together was the more effective way.

Indian Christians Visit England

The delegation of Christians from India have arrived in England for a mission of fellowship which is to extend through December 15th. In welcoming them to the country the Archbishop of York said:

"At the great missionary conference held in Edinburgh in 1910 less than a dozen 'nationals' from the mission fields were present, and they were selected by missionary societies. At Jerusalem in 1928 nearly half the conference consisted of such 'nationals,' chosen not by missionaries, but by the indigenous churches themselves. They met as colleagues of the 'sending' churches to cooperate in the determination of

The Religion of Scientists

Compiled by C. L. Drawbridge

This book collects and tabulates the answers to six questions sent to the Fellows of the Royal Society under the auspices of the Christian Evidence Society. The questions: Do you credit the existence of a spiritual domain? Do you consider man responsible for his acts of choice? Is belief in evolution incompatible with belief in a Creator? Does science negative the idea of a personal God as taught by Jesus Christ? Do you believe the personalities of men and women exist after death? Do you think the recent developments of scientific thought favourable to scientific belief? The answers given here constitute the most decisive material yet published on the controversy between science and religion. $1.25

David Gibson Has an Anniversary

A long line of unemployed and hungry men stood outside the office of Canon David E. Gibson at the Cathedral Shelter on Wednesday. The day as far as this is concerned was no different from other days. But it was recalled by Canon Gibson's friends that the date was the thirteenth anniversary of his ordination and marked the completion of thirty-six years of service as layman and priest to the Church.

An interesting feature of this long service is the fact that it has virtually all been in the same place —for twenty-three years at the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul; for thirteen years on the same site as the Cathedral Shelter.

A few figures indicating what Canon Gibson is doing today were revealed. During the past four months, the Shelter lodged free 12,149 persons; fed free at the shelter, 18,680; provided clothing for 10,561 and gave financial assistance to 3,151. The Shelter is one of the institutions recognized by the Joint Emergency Relief Commission and bears a heavy burden with regard to the unemployed situation in Chicago.

Another "Way Out" Series

Following the lead given by THE WITNESS last spring the Christian Century is about to launch a series of articles on the way out of our present economic and international difficulties. All of which gives us an opportunity to tell you again that the articles that did appear here have been reproduced in a handy little book which you may purchase from our Chicago office. You will agree I am sure that the contributors are a notable array, including such well known people as Archbishop Temple, Bishop Parsons, Vida D. Scudder, Nicholas Murray Butler, Harry W. Laidler, Spencer Miller Jr., Bernard Iddings Bell, W. G. Peck, V. Auguste Demant, Conrad Noel, Mary Simkhovitch, William Green, Reinhold Niebuhr and Daniel McGregor. It costs but fifty cents since it bound in durable paper instead of cloth, thus affording a considerable saving in publishing costs.

ORDER OF S. VINCENT

The Order of S. Vincent, a National Guild for Servers and Lay-Readers, which was founded nearly twenty years ago and has enrolled during that time over seven thousand members, has completed a reorganization and election of officers necessitated by the death of its founder and first Secretary-General, the late Robert T. Walker.

The governing board of the Order, the Council, consists of six priests and six laymen, of which the following have been elected: Reverend Edmund L. Souder, of Hankow, China; Reverend Harry S. Ruth, of Burlington, New Jersey; Reverend Charles E. McCoy, of Williamsport, Pennsylvania; Reverend Julian D. Hamlin, of Boston, Massachusetts; Reverend Kenneth R. Forbes, of Stamford, Connecticut; Very Reverend Archie I. Drake, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Mr. T. T. Wu, of Hankow, China; Mr. Kenneth Ruhling, of Chicago, Illincis; Mr. Benjamin M. MacDougal, of Providence, Rhode Island; Mr. Walter W. Gaskill, of Boston, Massachusetts; Dr. Frederick G. Brathwaite, of New York City; and Mr. Walton C. Seitz, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

The Reverend Kenneth R. Forbes has been elected Director-General of the Order, The Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens, Bishop of Los Angeles, California, has been elected Honorary Chaplain-General of the Order, and Mr. Douglas S. Gibbs of New York City has been elected Secretary-General and Treasurer of the Order and a member of the Council, ex-officio.

The Council calls special attention to those interested that the Order is designed to be of service to lay-readers as well as to servers; that its Manual, containing the Constitution, Rules For Members and the official Office of the Order, has now been published, together with forms of Application For Membership, and may be obtained from the Secretary-General at 420 Lexington Avenue, New York City. The Director-General or the Secretary-General will consider it a privilege to give such aid and advice as they may be able to those wishing to form parochial or diocesan guilds of the Order, or in any other way to assist in the enlisting and training of capable and devoted laymen as lay-readers and as servers at the altars of the Church.

Aim for Victory—Not Defeat in the
Every Member Canvass This Fall

IT IS so easy to say, "The depression continues. We can't get money where there is none. There is no chance to secure pledges enough to care for a normal budget."

Easy to say—but not true.

This year's Canvass is vitally important, just because it is so easy to accept defeat in advance, rather than to go out to win a victory.

Economic conditions are improving, and last year's Canvass furnished many proofs that the number of contributors in any parish can be increased.

The irregular contributors must be converted into regular contributors. If this is done, there is no need for giving to drop to a point where work in parish, diocese and General Church is jeopardized.

The gifts of the MANY will make up the Budget. But the Canvass needs to be planned, organized, executed, so that the many will be reached and converted. That calls for the most thorough, painstaking Every Member Canvass ever conducted.

That sort of Canvass will win a victory; just as it did last year in Emmanuel Church, LaGrange, Illinois, which reported:

"Last year there were 195 pledges for $14,000; this year there are 465 pledges for $18,000."

NEW METHODS FOR OLD

By

JAMES MYERS

Industrial Secretary, Federal Council of Churches

INVOLUNTARY unemployment is a curse to the human race comparable in its effects only to the institution of chattel slavery. Unemployment, like slavery, must be abolished! But until unemployment can be abolished, the victims of this economic disease must be supplied at least with the bare necessities of life. What is the most effective, the most self-respecting way in which this can be done?

I have seen the bread lines in this country, the giant "flop houses" where thousands of men are sheltered, the unremitting labors of the skilled caseworkers of the social agencies, the emergency relief organizations with their relief and made-work programs. I have seen, too, the men sleeping on the ground in the parks and prone upon the sidewalks of New York; I have seen the bonus army with its shacks, many of which looked like make-shift dog kennels—a rusty sheet of iron for roof and a bed of straw; I have seen the shanty-town of Father Cox's followers in Pittsburgh where men have dug themselves into the ground in a litter of abandoned foundations, and I have seen the untold misery of our coal fields. I have seen something, I think, of most of the varieties of the American dole, the efforts of private charity and public relief to meet the terrible strain of our widespread distress.

I must confess that it was a refreshing experience last May when I had the opportunity to inspect the Labor Exchange at Cologne, Germany, where 30,000 unemployed men and women a day are cared for in orderly and systematic fashion. The outstanding impression which I received as Dr. Barwasser, the director, kindly showed me through the many departments, was the look of self-respect on the face of practically everyone as he waited for his weekly unemployment insurance benefit. The whole air of the exchange was one of accepted, business-like routine. One sensed no stigma of charity in the transaction. The unemployed did not look hopeless or even worried. They were not "down in the mouth." I could not get over it. "There is no doubt about it," said Dr. Barwasser, "the sense of security which comes with unemployment insurance—limited as it is—makes a great difference in the morale of the workers." I received similar impressions on pay day in the Labour Exchange in London.

Is it not odd that some people object to the proposal of setting aside reserves for unemployment insurance as a "dole" which they say destroys character and self-respect? Is it not still more strange that many people who object to unemployment reserves as a form of dole are often themselves the recipients during hard times of dividends which are paid from quite similar reserves set aside for the stockholders of a corporation? The latter practice is considered by them as "only common sense" and "an evidence of intelligent management."

To be sure, provisions for unemployment insurance, to the degree in which it may be paid for by the company or the state, would constitute an increase in total financial return to wage-workers. But who that is familiar with actual earnings of wage-workers doubts that they should have and are entitled to a higher total income?

Viewed from another angle unemployment insurance would merely tend to place wage-workers more nearly upon a footing with salaried workers whose remuneration is calculated on an annual basis.

The state of Wisconsin has adopted the first Unemployment Reserves law in America. Churches and ministers helped, according to reports from the field, the state bodies of Presbyterians and Congregationalists declaring in its favor and individual Baptist, Methodist and Episcopal ministers favoring it at hearings. Unemployment reserve bills will be introduced in many state legislatures and in Congress this winter.

HAVING said so much in praise of unemployment insurance as over against the American dole of charity or public relief, it must be said that while unemployment insurance is the best form of relief, nevertheless certain evils growing out of unemployment itself undoubtedly persist in spite of the best unemployment insurance plans. The worst of these evils is the effect on human beings of being idle. The Directors of Labor Exchanges abroad admit that after a long period of enforced idleness men suffer spiritual and mental as well as physical deterioration. Some go to pieces under the strain of anxiety which eventuates in despair. Some, on the other hand, lose the capacity or the desire for work.

Anyone close to the unemployed in this country will tell you that the same is true in America under our wholly different system of relief. It is not "the dole" which is to blame. It is in both cases the lack of regular occupation, the indignity of having little or nothing to do. Labor is a divine law of life. Without regular, useful creative work to do, human character tends in one way or another to lose its moral fibre. We can see this not only among the unemployed poor who cannot get work, but also among the unemployed rich who are not obliged to work. I should not favor such high payments in unemployment insurance or in relief—or in dividends—as would remove a man's incentive to work when work is available. The low benefits of unemployment insurance cannot be said to do this any more than does our American dole. But in both cases the opportunity to work is lacking.

When our economic system fails to supply this opportunity to work and government fails to launch adequate public works programs, here is a place for voluntary organizations to function in a useful if limited way. After many years of experience with the effects of unemployment in England a strong conviction has grown up that some opportunity for work must be supplied for the unemployed. As a consequence allotment gardens have been developed for summer work and workshops for winter occupation. Here is a particularly valuable suggestion for American social and religious organizations. Relief in food and clothes, even the opportunities for recreation, reading rooms, games, etc., and the educational classes which have been offered by the Y.W.C.A., Y.M.C.A. and the churches are not enough. Even our conferences and our efforts toward social legislation are not enough. Men and women want something useful to do. They want to work.

The English Quakers have helped to organize garden clubs, in which 64,000 plots have been made available for the unemployed around principal cities and in the coal areas. The purpose has been "to save personalities from the despair and deterioration of being useless burdens on the community." Even a small plot of land where he can do useful, interesting work and raise fresh vegetables and winter supplies of potatoes for his family restores a man's self-respect. "He begins to feel himself back in a world of men with a job on hand."

Subsistence gardening, along similar lines has been promoted on a wide scale in America during this last summer. Many churches have also made their kitchens available for canning of the products against next winter's need. It is not too late to arrange for canning fruits and vegetables which may be donated from nearby farms and estates. It would be well to lay plans now for a great extension of subsistence gardening for next summer.

EMPHASIS on need of opportunities to work in the winter time as well, brought the development of work shops by civic, labor and religious organizations in Lincoln, England, and later in other cities and in South Wales (the latter under the Quakers). An empty store or the basement of a church is fitted up with work benches and tools, cobblers' lasts, hand looms, and other simple equipment. Instruction is provided and unemployed men and women are given the opportunity to repair their own furniture, make toys for their children's Christmas, and small articles for the home, repair shoes, weave rugs, make dresses and clothing for their families and knit socks. Because the unemployed have at least a little cash from their unemployment insurance, they are able to pay penny dues and to pay for materials used. The articles produced may be used in their own homes or sold to members of the club at low rates. In some places a device for exchange of products has been arranged without the use of money. "Scrip" is issued or books kept in terms of the hours of work a person has put in at any kind of work—shoe repairing, clothing manufacture or repairs, furniture making, bread making, and in South Wales, potato raising and digging coal or cutting wood! The holder of credit for work he or she has done in any of these lines then "purchases" what he needs of the others' products. Professor Frank D. Graham of Princeton University has outlined a plan whereby such a device could be adopted on a large scale by American industry itself during times of unemployment. The practicality of such plans indeed raises basic questions whether our money and credit system could not be made to function more in harmony with the actual realities and possibilities of production. Here is some food for thought!

Since unemployed families would not otherwise buy articles sold or exchanged at the work shops, it is felt in England (where organized labor is most particular on such matters) that the work shops do not compete in sales or decrease the demand for regularly manufactured articles. "When a man has been out of work eight or nine years," said the Director of a Work Shop, "it is like giving him a new lease of life to make it possible for him to do creative work and see the results of his labor." In fact there have been many cases where men have gained new courage and begun to feel that life might be worth living after all. Some have been saved from actual suicide.

Could not many Y's and churches organize such shops this winter? The American Friends Service Committee has already started shops of this kind in some of the coal camps. Of course, our American unemployed have not even the small cash income of the English unemployment insurance, but with all our emergency relief, there are no doubt many men and women who are receiving at least a minimum of food who would be glad of the opportunity for self-expression, renewed hope and additional income or the advantage of exchange of products which can come through the work shops.

AN INTERESTING phenomenon in unemployment relief has appeared in the organizations of Unemployed Citizens Leagues in Seattle and other American cities, and one which may well spread to significant proportions. There is a special appeal in the opportunity for self-expression and the maintenance of self-respect when the unemployed band themselves together for mutual self-help and for organized pressure upon local, state and federal governments in favor of adequate relief measures.

A typical program includes the establishing of a headquarters in an empty store or other place, gathering of fruits and vegetables donated by nearby farms or the public markets and distribution to League members together with the milk and bread which are donated by bakeries and dairies. The investigation of all applicants is carried on by the League itself, checking with city relief lists. Cutting firewood for League members (trees donated by estates or state forests), educational open forums, social meetings and non-partisan political action, are all included in the program. Committees write to or wait upon municipal and state government officials seeking adequate relief, and give publicity in the press to their replies. This technique offers real opportunity to assure better relief in many places and especially to preserve and develop among the unemployed a self-respecting sense of "amounting to something" in the community—a precious human value which is usually so quickly and tragically lost by those who are out of work. Churches can help by offering leadership and helping to secure meeting places. Perhaps no greater Christian service could be done than to assist in this general movement.

While we seek to utilize the best methods of unemployment relief, we should constantly remind ourselves that relief is not enough. It is our principal task to abolish unemployment, to inspire the development of an intelligently planned economy in which there shall be work for all and in which all shall work. For work is a divine law of life.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

The Approach to Christ

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

LET us pursue the path that St. Paul points out. It does not have its foundation in reason but in love emerging into reasonable conduct. Christ reveals Himself as one who came on earth to be man's friend.

Now friendship is a phenomenon which we can study. We do not begin our friendships in an academic manner. If we do we don't make friends. Men are drawn to one another in fellowship by an intuitive process which is no less real because it baffles analysis. Friendship begins in that mysterious magnetic attraction by which souls are united. Christ did not seek the friendship of the twelve by logic but by contact. When that constant fellowship became a fact then the apostles began to think. He did not impose Himself upon them by argument. He won them to discipleship because they loved Him, not because they understood Him. Finally He asked them whom they believed Him to be. Then they had to reason.

So if our religious life follows this natural process its elemental need is contact with the Christ which causes us to admire and then to love. As St. Paul puts it, our religion begins when we are rooted and grounded in love, "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." It is like a friendship in which the proof of its value lies in the experience of its development. Without this preliminary relationship there can be no real growth in friendship. We cannot begin friendship by a syllogism. As friendship proceeds, reason comes in to justify it, but we love first and think afterwards.

It is this which makes a betrayal of friendship so tragic. It is a betrayal of something deeper and finer than mental processes.

AND so it is only those who love who can forgive. Forgiveness of offences is not scientific and yet it is absolutely essential to the preservation of the home or the brotherhood. As St. Paul says in speaking of the development of Christian fellowship, it is only as you begin in love that you are able to comprehend the dimensions of Christian character.

The cynic begins at the wrong end when he refuses to walk with Christ before he attempts to understand Him. We are all familiar with the obstinacy of prejudice. We do something from pure motives and we know at the start that the man who doesn't like us is bound to misconstrue our actions. There is nothing more unscientific than the bias of scientists against the Christ. They begin with a doubt which can never emerge into an understanding relationship. No one can be filled with all the fulness of God who begins in any other premise than the desire to cultivate His friendship. If we wait for proof we will never begin to enter into close and cordial relations with another person, not even with God.

It is curious that those who reject the supernatural should demand that they should approach God and Christ in the natural way. Surely God does not invite man to analyze Him first and to love Him afterwards. If God be a person then He is conditioned by the laws that govern personal relationship. And so we love Christ because He first loved us. No one can question that Christ was a lover of mankind. He yearned to gather them to His breast in confidential relationship. If this be so then men should be drawn to Him by the cords of affection and then test the relationship in terms of experience. That is the natural process by which friendship is tested.

AFTER all the approach to Christ must be the natural one. Does an intimate contact with Him satisfy the needs of friendship. Of course there are dangers. Christ realized that some followed Him for the loaves and fishes, and some because they sought signs and wonders, and some because they hope to be rewarded. The Church has no brief for false relationships. It is the penalty of greatness that it is surrounded by those who are self seekers. The emphasis which has been laid upon salvation by zealous evangelists has too often resulted in creating soldiers who put their own personal safety first. They are not inspiring soldiers but they do not nullify the other type, however rare it may be, who say, "though He slay me yet will I trust in Him and though I walk through the vale of the shadow of death I will fear no evil."

Christ never said "I will have no friends because so many friends are merely self seekers." He did not refuse the love of John because He had to endure the treachery of Judas.

Let us keep our quest upon the same high level which He invites. If friendship with Christ, based upon sound motives results in giving values to life and purpose to the daily grind, then why should I not follow, even though I may never rise from the dead or meet Him hereafter.

It is a frequent sight in these times to see scores of tramps riding in freight trains. They are traveling hither and thither on the continent. As a class they have lost all sense of values and any definite purpose. I do not see how they differ in principle from the great mass of travellers on this terrestrial sphere who are on their way but going nowhere in particular, and who have lost all sense of the values that lie hidden under the things which symbolize values. "Verily thou art a God that hideth thyself." This is true whether we think of Him as the God of science, art or religion. Truths lie hidden under things. Beauty is concealed from the dull eye which sees only things. Goodness is not on the surfaces of life but is also hidden under our daily tasks and relationships.

Christ has done for life what the scientists have done for things. He has revealed to men the sublime realities which lie hidden under the otherwise trivial acts of our daily life. If we are really and truly seeking righteousness as the highest value in life we will find in Christ that which will satisfy our need.

THE CHURCH PAPERS

THE Episcopal Church has half a dozen national Church papers.

They are not as smart as the New Yorker or as urbane as the Saturday Evening Post, or as snappy as Time, but they do represent a lively account of real people, doing real things in this great Church of ours.

You would be surprised at the result if you would subscribe to a Church paper, and really read it; not every word perhaps, but what caught your attention.

Suppose some good friend should come to you and say, "Old man (or young man), I am going to do you a favor. I am going to build an additional room to your house. It will be different from the ordinary rooms. It will have a different atmosphere, different pictures, suggest a different outlook on life. When you are tired of the radio and bridge, and all the old set-up you can step into this room, and lo, and behold, you will have a new experience. And it will cost you just two or three dollars."

Would you take it? You would. Now, along comes the editor of the Church paper. He is not some pedantic old bookworm digging up the driest and most moth-eaten padding in the whole market to put into his paper. I know most of these editors and they are alive; young, alert, keen and interesting. They say to you, "Here is a whole realm of serious human effort. It is full of interest, romance and achievement. We will build a little additional room to your brain, and we will furnish it with some notable furnishings. We shall bring you the serious thoughts of intelligent men; we shall give you opinions on subjects of vital importance in this world. And we shall carry you into the remote places, so that you may learn what your Church is doing in spheres of which you have never heard. We shall tell you stories of heroic endeavor that will touch your hearts. One of the greatest gifts of man, Imagination, will be enlisted to make a new world, a present day world, a pulsating, throbbing world. Very soon you will be looking forward to our gift of printed pages, as the man away from home looks forward to news from the old town. We shall make you residents in a new world. We shall make you realize that your Church is not a little building, up the street, whose chief excitement is a chicken supper, but is a nation-wide force, pioneering, struggling, achieving, aspiring and conquering. You will say as St. Paul said, not 'I am a Roman citizen,' but 'I am a member of a great group, a mighty army.'

"You will be inspired to make your post of duty in the parish one that the inspecting officer will commend. And because of the great cause which we represent, you will realize more and more what it means to share in the abundant life."

How will this be accomplished? Go to your rector and subscribe to a Church paper, and read it faithfully for one year.

As I write these words, I know that many persons have recently spent about twenty dollars to see three baseball games, Cubs versus Yankees, the thrill of which lasted less than a week. Why not try a new thrill and give the mind a chance to enlarge its borders. It may seem a little queer at first, but soon the outlook will seem familiar. Think of the condition of our land without its newspapers. Can our Church flourish if its people are deprived of its papers, the mental food that enriches the life? So hunt up your rector today and subscribe for a Church paper.

THE CREATION

GENESIS begins with the story of the creation of the world. Read the first chapter and the first three verses of chapter 2. It ends with the statement "And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which he had made."

How about this matter of the seven days? We know how days are made; the world revolving around on its axis, turning from sunlight into shadow. Before the sun and the earth were made, how could there be days?

Turn to Psalm 90. Across the top of it is written "A Prayer of Moses the man of God." Read the first four verses. It says "A thousand years in thy sight are but as a day."

Now turn to 2 Peter, 3:8. He writes "Beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day."

So both to Moses in the Old Testament and St. Peter in the New, a Day of God may be a thousand years long. Psalm 137 says "Remember Edom, O Lord, in the Day of Jerusalem." Jesus says (John 8:56) "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day." He certainly did not mean a day of 24 hours. He meant the time of triumph; of success; of accomplishment and victory.

We know from the testimony of the Creation itself, by the record written in the rocks, that not only thousands, but millions of years were required in these earth-forming periods. Any length of time in which something is accomplished is a Day of God.

The first chapters of Genesis set forth the teaching that God made the world, and called it good.

To keep forever in memory this teaching, the Sabbath Day was instituted among the Hebrews. Every seventh day all work ceased. The time from Friday at sundown to Saturday at sundown was observed in strict reverence. No other nation had such a custom. Hebrew children, like any other children, would ask "Why do we do this?" And they would be told "To remind us that God made the world, and it is good."

The story of the Creation was told in the natural order in which children notice things. Most striking of all outward facts, and the first noticed by a baby, is the difference between Light and Darkness. Then the difference between Heaven and Earth. Then the difference between Water and Land. Then the Sun, Moon and Stars. Then birds, fishes and beasts, and lastly man. This order corresponds in a rough way with the process of evolution; but the order in which they are given is simply the order in which a child would ask about them.

In time the Sabbath, given as a memorial of the Creation, became something of a superstition. In the days of Jesus the heads of the Jewish race held that it was wrong even to do good on the Sabbath Day. For this reason Jesus had a continual battle with them. The whole fifth chapter of John describes one of these conflicts. So does the 12th chapter of Matthew. Jesus explained his actions in healing on the Sabbath Day by saying "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," meaning that God has never stopped working, and that if one does God's work, the Sabbath is as good as any other day for doing it.

The whole Bible is full of references to the Creation and to the Sabbath, as the seal of the worship of the Creator. In Deut. 5:14, the reason for keeping the Sabbath is to show mercy on slaves and cattle "that they may rest as well as thou."

PRACTICAL APPLICATION

TO PRESS home the teaching that God is still making the world and wants our help, establish a Temple of Science within your church and a Garden of Memory around it.

Let the children plant grass, flowers, shrubs and trees. Name the trees after famous characters, and put their names on the trees. Get the congregation to plant roses or other flowers as acts of thanksgiving.

Let the children start collections of rocks, leaves, flowers and other scientific specimens. Get the aid of a teacher of science in the public schools to help classify and mount them. Explain that God is still creating the world, whenever flowers bloom or gardens grow.

This will help bridge the gap sometimes felt between science and religion. Science is the tool; religion is the motive and the skill which guides it.

MEMORY WORK

Take the first section of the Books, The Law. Write in your notebook their names, thus:

Genesis Exodus LEVITICUS Numbers Deuteronomy

Say these names over and over until you have learned them. Learn also their abbreviations; Gen; Ex; Lev; Num; Deut. To us, the book of Leviticus is the least important, and we are apt to skip it. But to the Hebrews it was the central one, because it deals with the rules of daily life which they had to observe. These five are called the Books of Moses, not because they were written by him but because they are mainly about him.

More than half of the five books is taken up with rules of conduct. From Exodus 19 to the end, half of Numbers and all of Deuteronomy are rules of conduct. The stories are given to explain the rules; how they originated, and why they must be kept.

Turn to the Communion office, page 68, and read the Ten Commandments. Then say to yourself the Summary of the Law "Hear what our Lord Jesus Christ saith. . . . On these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets."

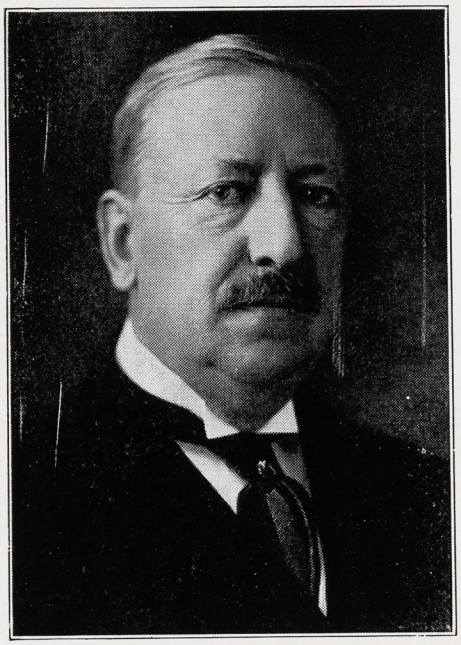
RECENT SERMONS BY R. J. CAMPBELL AND J. F. NEWTON



Reviewed by G. M. Day

A new book of sermons by most men would not attract a very wide audience, but a new volume from the pen of Dr. Joseph Fort Newton will be welcomed not only by a multitude of old friends, but will undoubtedly make for him a host of new friends, especially when the Spirit veritably moves upon the faces of its pages as it does in The Angel in The Soul. (Harpers $1). The sermons are very different. For example, there is one on Newman's deservedly popular hymn "Lead Kindly Light" and another on world peace. Nevertheless the main emphasis which runs through them all is upon that deep mysticism which Dr. Newton rightly believes is at the heart of all religion. If there is a greater master of the sermon than Dr. Newton living to-day I have yet to hear of him. The remarkable combination of depth of thought and feeling and beauty of style must be evident to every reader. Let me quote a few sentences as an illustration: "A vision of unity at the heart of multiplicity, finding focus in myriad ways, now suddenly as in a flash, now slowly in quiet unfolding, the mystical experience has one invariable characteristic—it unifies the life of man, gives it depth and direction, and endows it with power. It was a blinding vision at noonday, brighter than the sun, which healed a deep schism in the soul of Saul of Tarsus, organized his life on a new basis, and fed the undying fire of his interpid ministry. But that is only one form of the experience; in other lives it takes other forms, depending upon training, temperament, and the contour of the thought world in which men live. . . . Our fathers called it conversion; in the jargon of our day it is called adjustment to life. No matter; when man makes contact with the reality behind the shapes and shows of life, by what name soever it may be described, his nature is harmonized. His chaos becomes a cosmos, and his life is lifted out of a trembling fear that stands in weakness into a faith that walks in power."

Christian Faith in Modern Light is the title of the latest volume by The Rev. R. J. Campbell, Chancellor and Canon Residentiary of Chichester Cathedral in England. (Macmillan Co. $1.75). Unlike some, the title of this book tells what the book is about with accuracy, for it consists of twelve lectures delivered by Dr. Campbell many times in different parts of his Diocese in the fulfilment of his duty as Canon-teacher of the Diocese. The chapter headings give a good idea of the content of the book. A few are: "Varying Conceptions of God, Jesus Christ and the Modern World, Human Nature and its Needs, The Historical Christ, The Influence of Belief in Christ upon Belief in God" and "The Meaning and Scope of Redemption". The lectures are written out of the fullness of the author's wide experience and deep spiritual living and are full of real theological meat cooked in a palatable modern form. If I could buy but one volume of recent sermons or sermon-lectures, I would commend this as the one which I find most thought provoking and helpful.

When I pick up another book of Dr. Charles R. Brown's I am reminded of the student reporter for the college paper who told me he liked Dean Brown the best of the college preachers because he was the easiest to take notes on inasmuch as he always had three or four points made unmistakably evident. A reader of Have We Outgrown Religion (Harpers $2) will be struck by the remarkable clarity, and matter-of-factness of these sermons. In contrast to Fort Newton's mystical, and R. J. Campbell's theological note the practical emphasis of these sermons stands out sharply. For example, a sermon entitled "Getting Started" gives college freshmen fatherly advice on four important choices: studies, habits, associates, and religious adjustment; while another entitled "Right Standards" compares from a religious standpoint the various standards which may be used in judging men, namely that of: money, social position, learning, or the Chris-

Edited by W. B. Spofford

One would hardly expect the second son of the third Marquis of Salisbury, Queen Victoria's famous prime minister, to give the Soviet government a pat on the back, but he did just that the other day in an address before the few people who make up the social service commission of the Federal Council of Churches. This second son I mention is the Lord Bishop of Exeter, England, a brother of Lord Robert Cecil and of Lord Hugh Cecil. He is now in this country preaching and lecturing and being entertained, for the most part, quite properly, by dignitaries of our Church. He said in this address that what we need to learn primarily is that the world is essentially one, and that an injury to one is an injury to all. We have got to get together or perish. Russia, he said, is essentially Christian, whether they know it or not, in what they are doing for the workers and in their effort to establish a system of society that will make for a greater fullness of life for everyone. And mind you it is the second son of the Marquis of Salisbury who is saying this and not the managing editor of this paper, who on occasions has been hopped on vigorously and denounced as a raving red for saying much less.

The Lord Bishop of Exeter, if you are interested, is an attractive man. He is a huge man, has nice blue eyes, a gorgeous beard, and a lot of grayish hair on his head which he apparently never bothers to comb. It probably wouldn't look as nice if he did. He is a prayerful, spiritual man; it was easy to see that. And he spoke easily and smoothly and without any show of emotion whatever. What he said to us, I thought, was a bit trite, considering his audience. But I always marvel at the way these Britishers can be interesting, even thrilling, in handling commonplace matters. They are educated—I presume that is the answer. Also they have lived through changes in their country and so have a perspective which casts out fear.

The Laymen's Foreign Mission Inquiry

A committee of laymen, representing seven denominations, including our own, have returned home after having spent a great deal of time in the Far East studying foreign missions. The final report is to be released early in the winter but they have given out a statement announcing that it will make recommendations for far-reaching changes in the plan and scope of missionary work.

In dealing with the question as to whether or not foreign missions should be continued the committee states in this preliminary report: "That these missions should go on, with whatever changes, we regard as beyond serious question. There is in this fact, however, no ground for a renewed appeal for the support, much less for the enlargement, of these missions in their present form or on their present basis. This commission makes no such appeal. In our judgement, there is not alone room for change, there is necessity for change, in respects which our report will indicate; and the effecting of such change should be the condition for every further enlargement of the enterprise."

Dr. Atwater Recovering Rapidly

The little paragraph that appeared here a couple of weeks ago telling you of the illness of Editor George Parkin Atwater apparently caused undue alarm, since many letters have been received asking for more details. So I take this means of informing you that, while still in the hospital, he is chipper and gay, and will soon be back on the job.

Money Is Still Coming in Slowly

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council, reports on October 5th that "there was no improvement in September for in that month we received from the dioceses only $71,471 while one-twelfth of the 'expectations' for 1932 amounts to $180,000. As of October 1st we have received only 73% of the amount then due even after allowing a full month for collection and transmission. We owe the banks $350,000. Only three months of the fiscal year remain in which to catch up and 100% payment of 'expectations' is needed from every diocese in order that we may close the year without a deficit. We are confident that the Church will do its utmost."

Helena Dudley Dies in Geneva

Miss Helena Dudley, prominent Church woman and social worker of Boston, died in Geneva, Switzerland, on September 29th. Miss Dudley was widely known for her work at Dennison House, Boston, where she was head resident for many years, and for her activity in bettering the lot of her fellows. An intimate friend writes: "Miss Dudley has left us. She was a beloved comrade for forty years, and life looks blank and sad without her. But for her I can rejoice; and she went peacefully, surrounded till the last by tenderest care. It was strangely fitting that she should die in Geneva, the home of efforts for international peace—and on All Saints."

Connecticut Chancellor Burton Mansfield Dies

The Hon. Burton Mansfield, chancellor of the diocese of Connecticut, and known to everyone who has attended a General Convention during the past twenty-five years, died at his home in New Haven on October 4th. He was 76 years of age. He has been an active and prominent Churchman all his life; a trustee of Trinity College; a trustee of the Berkeley Divinity School, and a member of the National Council from its inception until his resignation last year because of illness. His death is a tremendous loss to Connecticut and to the entire Church.

Bishop Colmore Reports On Porto Rico

To be crouching in church, surrounded by sixty or seventy huddling people who had come there to seek refuge from the fury of a hurricane, and then have the roof come crashing in, smashed to bits by the rectory which had been picked up bodily and hurled on top of the church—not too pleasant, what? That was the experience of the Rev. Modesto Rivera of Vieques. Two people were killed, his wife was injured, the rectory and the church were of course ruined, as was everything in Vieques for that matter. Bishop Colmore reports other losses from the recent storm; St. Luke's, Puerta de Tierra, probably a total loss; St. Hilda's, Trujillo Alto, roof badly damaged and dispensary entirely blown away; the roof of Bishop Colmore's house was blown away, and much damage was done by water; and there was minor damage to other church property. Bishop Colmore writes that it was by far the worst storm that the island has ever experienced.

Our Own Hall of Fame

We will let Dean Maurice Clarke of Marquette, Michigan, tell you about the person selected for our Hall of Fame this week, under the title of "The Angel of the Woods". He writes:

This is not a name given in soft sentimentality by soft handed and soft lipped people to another of their kind, though different from them. It is a garland of love woven by the horny hands of husky lumber jacks and placed with reverence upon the brow of a dark haired, bright eyed, gentle little woman named Mrs. Hugh Campbell. They called her "The Angel of the Woods" only because in their childlike shyness they couldn't express it more intimately. What they really meant was "The Angel of Our Woods," or even "Our Angel."

For thirty years this little woman has been living and working in the northern woods of Michigan where now the little town of Ralph is about 400 miles due north of the city of Chicago.

When first she went there, Ralph was just a lumber camp and the air was filled from morning till night with the sounds of the axe, the falling trees, and the "jacks'" not-too-drawing-room-like exhortations, denunciations and cries of pain. It was a cry of pain that took Mrs. Campbell into those woods. It came from the lips of Hugh Campbell—a cut, infection, blood poison — the shadow of death! Her nursing was rewarded by his recovery. They were married. The lumber camp became her home. New sounds mounted on timid wings into the air. The sound of lumber jacks singing hymns; the sound of a gentle woman's voice teaching them the Bible with its deathless message of the redeeming, fatherly love of God; the sound of childrens voices singing in the Sunday School which she started and taught, and later the sound of the voice of that great missionary of the Northern Woods, Archdeacon Poyseor, reading the services of the Prayer Book and preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ. The years passed.

Then a new sound. Axes on wood —falling trees—saws—yes and hammers and nails. What did it mean? A little log Church—"beautiful for situation: the joy of the people." There it stands in its setting of beautiful trees and they call it—"The Cathedral in the Pines." The witness of the woods to the Angel of the Church in Ralph. She is still there. Gentle as ever—the light in her eyes that never was on land or sea—loved and revered by all.

Mr. Charles J. Stakel Tackles Several Jobs

Mr. Stakel is the superintendent of a mining company in Northern Michigan; the diocese of Marquette. There isn't an iron mine open in his district. But that doesn't mean starvation and misery for the workers and their families, not with Mr. Stakel on the job. First of all they are occupying company owned houses, rent free. Then the whole gang, hard-handed and soft-handed workers alike, went into the woods this summer and cut down company lumber to provide fuel for all the families. There were gardens for every family on company land. It is getting a bit cold up there now, but every family has a house, fuel and food for the winter, leaving only the clothes problem to be solved. With that job out of the way Mr. Stakel accepted the appointment as chairman of the diocesan field department. He was at a conference the other day, presided over by Bishop Ablewhite, and reported that he had enlisted a layman in every parish and mission to conduct the every member canvass. What's more every one of these local chairmen are at least acquaintances of Mr. Stakel and he is confident they will do their jobs thoroughly.

There is now, besides Bishop Huntington, only one foreign priest in the missionary district of Anking, China. The Sisters at St. Lioba's Mission, Wuhu, and Miss Alice Gregg, whose work is specifically religious education, and Miss Margaret Monteiro are the only other foreigners doing evangelistic work exclusively; Miss Sada Tomlinson, a nurse, has returned to do chiefly evangelistic work.

"Which leaves me," Miss Monteiro says, "to commute from Anking to Nanchang in the vain hope of keeping up with all the chance for women's and children's work. The opportunity is great. Just a little help and things go so well. But we are so short-handed that when as just now I have malaria, it makes me uneasy."

breath of relief at getting rid of a worse than useless mayor (Walker) and falling heir to a better one (McKee), we still face a system which shamelessly regards politics as a chance for private graft." And while he does not name the Insulls, Churchmen of Chicago, it was clear that he had them in mind when he said:

"In our economic life, too, there are processes for which the men who indulge in them know well that there is no ethical justification. To see public utilities intended for the service of all the people made the sport of private greed until the speculative pyramid collapses, millions are lost to investors, and a basic social service without which life cannot go on is bankrupt and bedeviled is a tragedy for which there is no excuse, for when that happens, as it has been happening, the men responsible know better. They have deliberately surrendered a public trust to private greed. Evidently, they do not think very highly of themselves."

Bishop Perry Visits Texas

Bishop Perry, presiding bishop. was the headliner at a meeting of the clergy of the diocese of Texas, held on September 26 and 27 at Houston. He stated that it would be necessary for the stronger parishes to do more than their share this coming year in order to raise the sum necessary to carry on the work of the Church. The Rev. Richard Trapnell, field secretary of the Council, was also present and assured the clergy that the Council's budget for 1933 was not an impossible goal.

Plan National Meeting of Young People

According to "The Challenge", publication of the Young People's Fellowship, plans are under way for a national convention of the young people of the Church in the summer of 1933 for the purpose of creating a national organization. An attempt was made to hold such a convention in 1931 but it had to be called off since the response was not great. The publication states that "the success of the meeting of 1933 must be great enough to overshadow the failure on 1931." No definite plans as to place or time are announced, though the Young People's Fellowship of the province of the Mid-west are urging that it be held in or near Chicago, thus affording delegates an opportunity to attend the world's fair.

Begin Work at Boulder City

In the new St. Christopher's, Boulder City, Nevada, the Rev. H. M. Peck began his work as vicar on September 18th. Bishop Jenkins was present at the opening service. Boulder City is a town without a depression. With a population of 5,000 and a daily payroll of $18,000 and the plan to spend $376,000,000 before the completion of the government project it is quite natural that everyone is in a happy frame of mind. Bishop Jenkins says: "We hope that the Church will take a prominent part in the lives of those engaged in this most stupendous piece of hydrolic engineering ever undertaken by man. This is only a beginning of what is to come. With the cheap power from the Hoover Dam it is expected that Nevada will become a great manufacturing center, and with the benefit from the irrigation canal which will irrigate two hundred million acres of land in Arizona, California and Nevada, southern Nevada should in reality become an oasis in the great American desert."

Brooklyn Rector Defends Capitalism

The Rev. William S. Blackshear upheld the present system of economic life in a sermon at St. Matthew's, Brooklyn, last Sunday.

"Christ was happy to be at the banquets of the rich. It was at such a place that the woman broke the vial of costly ointment and annointed His feet. There were those who cried out for the improvident and rebuked the woman, saying that this should have been converted into cash and given to the poor. It was then that Christ spoke on the economic plan, 'The poor ye have always with you.'"

Christ never thought about economic problems as bearing on the real welfare of mankind, the rector said. "The government in His day was builded on the capitalistic basis. He constantly upheld the government of His day even when they executed Him. Salvation by government and legislation was to Jesus a weak prop for a stalwart soul. The truth of this is being daily proved to us as witness the failure of the prohibition law."

tian spirit. I cannot refrain from wishing, however, that Dean Brown would give us more of the philosophy and theology back of his good advice.

Speaking of advice, The Rev. Louis Jabine of Baltimore has written a small volume called How to Use Your Church (Macmillan $1) which consists of some seventeen chapters telling the new parishioner how he can most wisely avail himself of the privileges of the Church in the ordinary routine of life, as well as in connection with a marriage or a death. The book's chief merit is in its simplicity and brevity and it may prove useful to the busy city Rector in helping new members to make full use of the Church. The country parson, however, ought to be able to give this sort of advice through his various organizations.

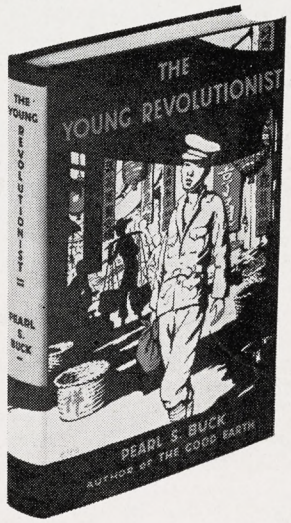
Mrs. Buck writes superbly; she understands her characters, and she portrays them without a hint of that febrile exoticism which mars other interpreters of the Orient.—New York Times.

One lays down the book with a feeling of having read a lovely bit of purposeful writing.—Record of Christian Work.

A sensitive and subtly written study of the new China and of the complex forces at work there. It is full of delicate but convincing character sketches, and is written throughout with the sympathy and understanding that came of real knowledge of the people and the country.—Manchester Guardian.

Has all the power and the rare qualities of sympathetic insight that made "The Good Earth" a best seller. —Eastern Press.

The YOUNG REVOLUTIONIST



By PEARL S. BUCK

A new book by the author of the Pulitzer Prize winner, "The Good Earth." In it Mrs. Buck portrays Chinese youth today with the same skill with which she pictured the Chinese family in her earlier book.

It is an authentic picture of great numbers of Chinese boys and young men as the author has seen them during recent years.

With compelling power she shows modern Chinese youth torn by the strife between the old and the new, aflame with patriotism, blindly devoted to ideals but half understood, groping hungrily for a religious faith and eagerly helping to build a new China.

This book is of special usefulness in connection with the forthcoming missionary study topic—China.

Vol. XVII. No. 8 | OCTOBER 20, 1932 | Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

IN THE DIOCESE of Southern Ohio some years ago, they abolished parish quotas and adopted a self-apportionment plan. In each parish and mission there is year around preparation for the every member canvass so that communicants are familiar with the entire work of the Church, at home and abroad. There is then a thorough canvass when people are given an opportunity to give to work which they understand and in which they therefore believe. Here the canvasser is not a tax-collector, as he is apt to be considered in parishes where stress is laid upon a quota which must be raised instead of upon work that must be maintained. The plan has worked in Southern Ohio, always near the top in that list of dioceses making full payment to the National Council. Three years ago the same system was adopted in Minnesota, with the result that there has been an increased income from pledges in the canvasses of 1929, 1930, 1931, in spite of the growing intensity of the depression. The fact is that the full budget of the parish, the diocese and the National Council can be raised, in spite of difficult times, if, first, people are made thoroughly familiar with the work of the Church; if, second, a systematic and complete canvass is made so that every one of these people has an opportunity to give.

TACTFUL AND WISE canvassers will be needed for the every member canvass this year. Let a thoughtless person call at the home of an unemployed parishioner and seek a pledge, when the family is itself on the ragged edge, and the results may readily be imagined. But as a wise rector pointed out to us the other day, it will be equally unwise and unchristian to ignore such families. They must not be allowed to feel that they are outside the parish family merely because they are short of cash. The call should be made and the work of the Church explained in such a way that they are made aware that they are sharing in it even though, for the time being, they are unable to pledge money for its support. Canvassers should be informed as to the financial condition of every home. Canvassers also should be carefully instructed just how to deal with each situation.

THE SUGGESTION THAT some of the work now done under the National Council be distributed among provinces has again come to the fore as a result of a communication recently sent out by the joint commission on provinces, of which Bishop Parsons of California is the chairman. There are those who feel that some of the work now attempted from New York might be done more effectively by smaller units since, they argue, it is obviously impossible for secretaries in New York to know of conditions throughout a country as vast as ours. The immediate communication from the commission deals with the possibility of changing provincial boundaries in order to make the work of each province more effective. After stating that in their opinion the time has come when the provinces can and should carry out the intention of the General Convention and become more effective units in the national work of the Church, the commission raises a number of questions with the request that they be dealt with at synods and diocesan conventions. Would a reduction in the number of provinces to four or five, instead of eight, make for greater power and support? If it is desirable, as many believe, that the provinces take over part of the work of the National Council, could this be more effectively done were the number of provinces reduced with a corresponding increase in size, power and resources? Would it also enable them to render better service to their constituent dioceses? What present advantage, if any, would be sacrificed by the adoption of either of these plans that they propose? Plan 1: province 1, to be composed of the states included in the present first, second and third provinces, with the exception of the states of Virginia and West Virginia. The District of Columbia is also to be in the first Province. Province II, to be composed of the present fourth province, to which would be added the states of Virginia, West Virginia, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas and Oklahoma. Province III, to be composed of the present fifth province without change of boundaries. Province IV, to include the present sixth province and also the states of Missouri, Kansas and New Mexico. Province V, to be composed of the present eighth province without change of boundaries. A second plan submitted by the commission for discussion is as follows: Provinces I and II the same as in the first plan. Province III, the present fifth province, to which would be added the states of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota and South Dakota. Province IV, the present eighth province, to which would be added the states of Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico.

newspapers. From a publicity point of view it may be wise since these papers doubtless will give space to a number of short stories whereas they would probably ignore a detailed report. However it is doubtless true that many people will get a lopsided impression from these short statements, particularly if they read but one or two of them. Thus the first release stated that there is "no ground for a renewed appeal for the support, much less for the enlargement, of these missions in their present form or on their present basis." That rather large body of people who "do not believe in missions" will probably take comfort in that statement, and yet we are certain that it is not the conclusion to be drawn from the full report. May we urge Church people to come to no conclusion until it is possible for us to present them with a detailed statement based upon an analysis of the entire report of this important commission, to be issued early this winter.

HERE IS a news item sent to us by the publicity department of the National Council:

> "We are having to cut down on our pastoral visiting a bit," writes a missionary who covers a large field in Mississippi. "The reason? The car will not run without gas, and the gas will not come without money, and the money has not come in. So that is that."
> What a boon it would be to the progress of the Church's mission if there were a generous fund whose income could be used only for gasoline for Church cars on missionary business. Not only pastoral calls but sometimes services for whole congregations are having to be omitted.

It prompts this suggestion; a simple and, we believe, fair way to create such a fund would be to pool fees paid the clergy at the Church Missions House for Sunday work. There is no clergyman at 281 Fourth Avenue whose salary is inadequate, certainly not when compared with those received by the clergy generally. Yet these salaries are supplemented generously by Sunday work, the assignments frequently coming from the supply bureau which is maintained at the expense of the whole Church. We hazard the guess that there are clergymen at the Church Missions House who pick up in extra fees sums greater than many clergymen receive as salaries. If officials of the National Council really believe that such a gasoline fund is desirable this would provide an effective way of maintaining it. The staff at headquarters could then have the satisfaction of knowing that pastoral calls were being made and services held in the far off mission fields due to their devotion.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

Belief in God

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

LOVE is the basis of confidence. It is the source from which spring friendships, homes and churches. Unless belief has its foundation in love it is purely an academic thing without fruitfulness.

In the first article in the creed we affirm that "we believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth." Unless we accept Him as a Father there is no particular value in asserting that He is our Creator. Both the creed and the Lord's Prayer begin by asserting the relationship which exists between God and ourselves. Unless we are the sons of God, His power and wealth are not matters that vitally concern us.

I have recently read "The Story of My Life" by Clarence Darrow, who, claiming to have no religion, therefore talks about religion most of the time. He is a savage critic of the Creator and gives the impression that man could have made a better world than this one. Somehow his criticism reminds me of an ant crawling across the floor of a great cathedral and making observations as to its origin and purpose. Darrow's world springs from a vacuum and ends in futility. He calls the world "a speck of dirt" on which "we are drifting to our common doom."

Of course when we come to the fork of the roads our destination is determined by the road we take. We cannot see the end of the road but we believe that the sign posts correctly indicate which road leads to which place. It is true that we cannot prove our major premise. It is the basic assumption in which we differ. Any one of us can make a correct syllogism from this or that fundamental assertion. As children we start on one road or the other.

WHAT are these basic assumptions? Either "I believe that there is a God who created me for an adequate purpose, and that there are signs along the road which indicate the destiny of man," or else "I think I am a thing flung into space for no other purpose than the temporary sensations which give me a transient interest in the journey." In this latter case the road ends in nowhere.

"Verily," said the prophet, "Thou art a God who hideth thyself." That is certainly true of religion, but it is also true of science and art. The precious stones of life are hidden from all eyes but those who seek truth or beauty or goodness. The savage has no eyes for these things and he does not find them. "Seek and ye shall find" is the law that governs any worthwhile attainments. The inner urge is as much of a necessity and as great a reality as the ultimate goal. It is true that we see through a glass imperfectly, but it is also true that man has attained all of his culture because at a certain stage in his progress he sought "the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen."

Such is the rule of the game which is a kind of hide and seek. The truth hides itself and man seeks to dig it out. In all games there is a beneficial reaction. It develops the seeker. It gives to life its thrill of adventure. God hides Himself because man is a better creature for having sought. It is the way of good fathers in producing satisfactory sons. Instead of doing everything for them the good father insists on his children doing something for themselves. In the exercise of their faculties they develop character, and in no other way.

The primitive scientist started with an hypothesis; then he made his experiments until he arrived at a conclusion that satisfied the equation. At first he saw through a glass darkly; then the medium became clearer until he finally emerged into the light of clearer vision. But the contemporary crowd did not and could not see what he visualized. Copernicus saw clearly that the sun and not the earth was the center of the solar system, but those who had not travelled the path in which he had plodded denied the truths that he discovered.

In this we find a principle which we ought to recognize. That in any quest for truth or beauty or righteousness we must develop the capacity if we are ever going to appreciate or appropriate the discovery. In science this capacity is the ability to observe, analyze and arrange knowledge. In religion this capacity is the ability to love and trust and sacrifice. It is only as we walk in the path that we arrive at the destination. At first the signs are faint and obscure but as you travel along the day begins to break and things become clearer to the vision.

I REMEMBER how on one occasion years ago I was obliged to walk on a dark night for several miles through a dense forest, on a very faint trail. Fortunately I had a box of matches. Some of the time I could follow the path with my feet. Then I would get off the path and lighting a match get my bearings once more. In this way I completed my journey. I learned two things about life that night. First, that a path was essential to the task, and secondly, that there is greater difference between absolute darkness and the light of a match than there is between the light of a match and the noonday sun. Newman's hymn, "Lead Kindly Light," "The night is dark," "One step enough for me," has had new significance to me ever since that experience. It is perfectly true that I could not see the path, but I could feel it and when the day dawned I could see it.

There is a great deal of difference when we walk by faith and not by sight. It seems to me as I look back over a long and rather busy life that there are many things which were felt rather than seen in youth that are now matters of clearer vision.

Belief is trust in God verified by experience. If you accept the basic assumptions that God is our Father and that He will reward honest effort to seek Him, then faith, which is hypothesis and not knowledge, will eventuate in sight. Of course it is not enough to find the road. One may travel the right road and yet wreck his car. One may be on the right road and then take a wrong side road. One may be on the right road and make no progress. The road is not to blame for these mishaps.

SOME one has said that belief means "By live." Ethmologically this may not be its proper derivation but it is an excellent interpretation of the word. We believe only that which we live by. The traveller must not only be on the right road, he must also make forward progress. If I say "I believe in God the Father Almighty" I must transform that faith into action or my faith is merely an academic theory which nullifies any progress toward the end of the road. It is not enough to be on the right road; we must go forward along that road.

We have an illustration of the futility of academic knowledge in the attitude of modern youth toward politics as well as religion. Our college men get more political economy than any other students in the world and take less interest in the political welfare of America than most any other group. Why? They confuse theory with sacrificial effort. It is not enough to have a theory either of religion or politics. We must be willing to add to knowledge our sacrificial effort. We must be willing to walk along the road as well as learn about it or we fail utterly to live by that which we claim to believe.

We do not believe in God unless we act as though God sees our actions and our motives.

Religion is not merely a philosophy. It is a toilsome journey along a road which we believe leads to a definite conclusion.

Cheerful Confidences

Sniping at the Clergy

A CLERGYMAN visited me recently, who told me that he had not received his salary for six months. He is rector of a parish, he is doing earnest work, he is well thought of, and no exceptional circumstances seem to have arisen, except the general depression. He has a family to support.

I have a suspicion that he is one of many clergymen in a similar predicament.

The problem is more than local. It involves principles of that high moral order that seem sometimes to be ignored by the Church.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Suppose you laymen light up your pipe, and settle down for half an hour, and do a little serious thinking on this subject. For in the long run you are the ones who have permitted this condition and you can remedy it.

Let's start from the beginning. Some bishop has ordained a young man to the priesthood, thereby incurring a responsibility that must weigh very heavily upon that bishop. For he thereby separates that young man from almost every other vocation.

To what does he introduce him by that act. In the eyes of the assembled and proud family, in the eyes of the people who throng the Church, he is introduced into a life of service. To the more secular he is entering one of the professions. The now obsolete classification is that of the professions of doctor, lawyer or clergyman, formerly the so-called learned professions.

Contrast the outlook for the young doctor or lawyer and the young clergyman. The doctor for example, if he meets all the requirements of the state, may go anywhere in the state and hang out his shingle. He may form a partnership with an older doctor. He may remain in the locality as long as he cares to do so. Or he may remove to another place. He may build up a practice that will in time bring him a good income, if he is competent. No group of discontents may make life intolerable for him. No ambitious superiors may deprive him of his well deserved remuneration. No Board turns him into a mendicant for schemes of which he knows little. No false modesty prevents him from sending a bill for services rendered. No solemn group of vestrymen collects, in his presence, dimes and quarters to meet his stipend.

Now for the clergyman. Speaking for the Episcopal Church only, I must paint a different picture. The young clergyman may not practice his profession anywhere unless he is either (1) called to a parish or (2) sent by a bishop to a mission. His field of direct action is strictly local. If he leaves a parish because some discontents think he is "too something" he is a derelict. He cannot practice his profession anywhere, without intrusion (unless invited). He is a man without a country. If by chance some place wants him, various formalities must be complied with. He is subject to whims, prejudices, neglects and indifference. He cannot send bills. He cannot collect his salary if it is in arrears. There is no more humiliating position in any profession than that of the clergyman, who is a party to a contract with irresponsible parties of the second part.

Who are the parties of the second part, the ones responsible for the maintenance of the agreement between rector and parish? Not alone the parish, but the bishop, the diocese, and the parish. If the bishop and the diocese do that which impairs the ability of the parish to maintain its contract with the rector, then they are equally guilty of a breach of contract.

To the credit of our parishes and missions it must be said that there are but few instances where the contract is not kept. But those few stand out like accusing fingers and point at some one.

The layman sitting with his pipe at his comfortable ease, must get this thought firmly in his mind. The obligation of a parish to pay the salary of its clergyman is a primary obligation. It takes precedence over any other obligation whatsoever.

And it is good sense too, to pay the salary. The rector can make a stiff campaign to pay a debt for repairing the roof, but he is humiliated to make the same kind of a campaign to collect his salary.

So pay your rector's salary. You have him on the spot. Don't shoot him with the machine gun fire of neglect.

Just Souls

By

C. RUSSELL MOODEY

WE WERE discussing the other day the advances that modern medicine had made. And one of the party began to cite the various aids to the upbuilding of the body in its fight against disease. She mentioned cod liver oil, sun lamp treatments, proper diet and inoculation. While she was speaking one of the children slipped in and joined the circle. Being a child she had to get in on the conversation. When it came her turn to say something she startled the group by asking each one to show the mark of vaccination. When her mother rolled up her sleeve to show the scar, the youngster, after carefully studying it, blurted out—"Is that where you were baptized?"

Vaccination—baptism—are they as far apart as we suppose? In the mind of the child they seemed to be closely related. And in a way they are. Vaccination is the medical process of establishing immunity against smallpox. If the vaccine "takes" then the body is fully protected against disease. Baptism represents the granting of the Holy Spirit and its reception by the child. It also supplies immunity providing the sponsors are true to their trust. It too will "take" if the god-fathers and god-mothers are conscientious in their new responsibility. So often they are not and the child is forced to get along as well as he can. There is no religious education, no instruction in the nurture of the Christ. The immunity is broken down because those who assumed a serious obligation turned it into farce. Neither vaccination nor baptism cater to the magical, for it is foolish to think that the doctors and clergymen are magicians. They are not! But something does happen when the body receives vaccine. And something does happen, when the soul receives the Holy Spirit. Each leads into "newness" of the body and soul. Baptism was not instituted by man but by the Master. He took the little children up in His arms, laid His hands upon them and blessed them. He told Nicodemus that a man had to be born again and of the Spirit.

These lines are written to remind you who have been baptized of your profession which is to follow the Christ faithfully all the days of your life.

IRWIN ST. JOHN TUCKER

THE CREATION OF MAN

READ Genesis, the second chapter. It gives the story of the creation of humanity in a slightly different form from that given in the first chapter.

In chapter one, God created man "in His own image; in the image of God created He him; male and female created He them."

In chapter two, God made the male of the human species first. The man sought among the animals to find a help meet for himself, but found none. So God took a rib from the man's side and of it made a woman. And Adam said, "This is bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called Woman (Ish-shah) because she was taken out of Man (Ish.)."

What does this mean?

There are two great battles fought out in these passages. One is a war against the Beast-Gods; the other is the war for the Humanity of Women.

Close beside the land of the Hebrews was the great empire of Egypt. In it beasts were worshipped as Gods. There was a temple to the Bull-God, the Jackal-God, the Ram-God, the Snake-God, the Crocodile-God, and other horrible divinities. Forty-two Beasts were revered as Gods in Egypt. This chapter of Genesis taught the Hebrews that the Creator is a spirit; that the difference between men and beasts is vast, since only into Man did God breathe the breath of life, so that he became a living soul, and that only man is made in the image of God. This of course does not mean the outward shape, since monkeys are very close to the shape of man. It means that the spirit of man, the "living soul" of man, is the image of God.

What about Adam and Eve? The story of the taking of Eve from the side of Adam was directed against the idea that women are inferior creatures, of a different stock from men. In some savage races even today women are regarded as on a level with the dogs and horses and other domestic animals. In the African jungles, a man may have as many wives as he can buy and feed, and he has the power of life and death over them.

This story of Genesis holds up the ideal but there is a gulf between mankind and the beasts (among the animals was found no help meet for the man) and also that Woman is the shield and defense of the life of man. The rib is the protection of the heart; without that strong shield and support, the heart which is the life of man could not beat.

In the Hebrew language, the word Adam means earth, or clay. Genesis 3:19 reads "until thou return unto the adamah—ground." The word Eve, or "Havvah," means life. So the story simply says that mankind is the result of the marriage of Adam—adamah—ground—with Havvah—life. We are all the children of the marriage of earth and life. No scientist will dispute that.

How are we to understand the story that the curiosity of Eve led to the transgression of the law, and the expulsion from Eden? Again this is pure common sense. A dead body cannot sin. An automobile which stands still can never run off the road; it cannot, indeed, run at all. Inert clay can do no wrong. But the moment Life begins, danger of doing wrong begins. A child does not fall until it begins to walk; but the moment it begins to walk it is in danger of falling.

So this whole story of the Fall of Man conveys the teaching, in which we will surely all agree, that progress is made only at the risk of failure.

PERSONAL APPLICATION

NOW read St. John 1, 1-14. "In the beginning was the Word." The Greek word for "Word" is "Logos," from which come our words "logic" and all words ending in "logy," like biology, psychology, geology, etc. It means purpose, plan, or order; roughly translatable as science. Biology is the science or "word" of life; geology is the word, or science, or logic "logy" of the earth; psychology the "word" of the mind; and so with all branches of science.

The New Testament teaches that God made the world, and made it good, and made it for a certain purpose, in accordance with a definite plan. This purpose was explained to us, in the coming of Christ, as the embodiment, or "incarnation" of God in humanity. The WORD WAS MADE FLESH; the logic of Creation is seen in the perfect Humanity of which Christ is the beginning and example.

Our altars give a picture of the creative process; the candles and curtains representing the stars and the skies; the flowers, stones and brasses representing the earth; and the sacrament on the altar is the token of the perfect union of God and humanity in Jesus, both true God and true Man.

MEMORY WORK

Next in our divisions of the Books of the Bible comes History. They fall in three divisions, easy to remember if you list them rightly. In your notebook write them in three columns, thus:

Joshua	I & II Samuel	Ezra
Judges	I & II Kings	Nehemiah
Ruth	I & II Chronicles	Esther

The first three tell the story Before the establishment of the Kingdom of Israel.

The second group, three doublets, tell the story of the kingdom of Israel.

The last three tell the story After the fall of the kingdom of Israel.

You can memorize these in five minutes. Try it.

NATIONAL COUNCIL ADOPTS REDUCED BUDGET FOR 1933

By W. B. SPOFFORD

The National Council met in New York October 12th and 13th and spent the better part of thirty hours dealing with finances. Sessions on these subjects were held behind closed doors which makes it rather difficult for a reporter to give a comprehensive picture of just what took place. However by piecing together information picked up here and there I here present what I believe to be an accurate account, even though it is lacking in the details which presumably will be released eventually.

In thinking of the matter of the Budget of the National Council it is first of all important to keep in mind that it was determined by the General Convention that met in Denver, and calls for the expenditure of $4,225,000. However, under the Pay-As-You-Go plan, the Council is required annually to balance expenditures with the total sum promised by the people of the Church. This year the budget was reduced, and an emergency fund had to be raised to meet even that. In meeting now to consider finances for 1933 the Council assumed that it would not be possible to raise the budget for 1933 authorized by General Convention; a reconciliation of income and expenditures, they reasoned, would be necessary so they tackled the difficult job in October instead of waiting until next February when the returns on the Every Member Canvass are in.

Here is the way they went about the job: as you know a committee consisting of Bishops Lawrence, Davis and McDowell was appointed at the meeting of the House of Bishops held last spring, for the purpose of advising with the Council on matters of administration and finance. These bishops have been hard on the job ever since and submitted their report, including a detailed recommended budget for 1933, some days ago. The officers of the Church Missions House, that is the heads of the various departments, also prepared a recommended budget. These two budgets were then presented to the finance committee of the National Council and they worked hard and long in preparing still another budget, based upon these recommendations, which was the one adopted by the Council, with only very minor changes.

It is impossible for me to give you the details of this budget for the very good reason that I do not possess them. But I can inform you that the budget of 1932 totalled $3,611,360; that the committee of three bishops recommended a budget for 1933 totalling $3,174,869; the officers at the Church Missions House recommended a 1933 budget calling for the expenditure of $3,576,841 and the budget finally adopted calls for the expenditure of approximately $3,460,000.

Readers, naturally, will be interested to know why there should be a difference of over $400,000 in the budgets recommended by the committee of bishops and the officers of the Church Missions House. This information also, I am sorry to say, I cannot supply at this time though I believe that an explanation will eventually be given out.

At the conclusion of the meeting of the Council a statement was prepared and authorized by the Council in which it is stated that "We are mindful of the serious conditions which still confront all of us, in spite of the many and undeniably hopeful signs of economic recovery; and your National Council therefore proposes to continue in 1933 the economies of its operating budget now in force. Moreover it has at this meeting put into effect still further economies in every department of its work. . . . In 1933 there should be no repetition of the emergency appeal which was made in 1932. But how shall this be prevented? There are but two ways; either the every member canvass must provide for 1933 a total of expectancies at least equal to the 1932 expectancies plus the emergency appeal fund; or, if this be not accomplished, it is clear that even further cuts will be necessary." This is followed by the reassuring note "that parishes and dioceses everywhere are girding themselves for an unprecedented effort, that the laity are rising up in ever increasing numbers to join their clergy in a determined quest to reach every person in the Church with the message of the Program and to secure from every person a fresh allegiance and consecration to the great task of the Church."

The statement concludes with a ringing appeal to all members of the Church to do their very best this fall in order that further cuts which would be nothing less than disastrous may be prevented.

A recommendation by the committee of bishops that alternative quotas based upon a revised estimate of expenditures be sent to the dioceses was turned down by the National Council.

Also a recommendation of the committee of bishops that the salaries of officers and staff members at the Church Missions House be reduced an additional 10% (they were cut 10% last February) did not receive the support of the National Council.

So much for finances. There were one or two other high lights. Mrs.

NEWS NOTES OF THE CHURCH IN BRIEF PARAGRAPHS

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

The rector of the Church of Our Saviour, North Platte, Nebraska, the Rev. Francis J. Pryor, told his vestry that the interior of the church should be renovated. You can imagine the answer that came from these men; depression, great needs all about, etc., etc. But it just happened that the young people of the parish had finished their job of raising money for cassocks and were looking for something else to do. The rector said: "How about cleaning the interior of the church. I know how to muresco walls." Fine idea. They borrowed ladders and brushes, and bought some muresco. Then they all set to work. Members of the congregation heard about it and dropped in to take a look. "Why the little dears. Isn't that splendid. I must help too." So they dug down and bought materials. Well, sir, they started in with an idea of merely cleaning the walls. But the spirit of the young folks got such a hold on the parish that before they were through they had a new carpet, new kneeling benches, and all the wood work was scrubbed and painted. You can imagine what a service they had the Sunday after this job was done—and how well attended it was. But that isn't all. "How about tackling the outside too." So surest thing you know the boys of the parish got themselves paint and brushes and went to work. That job out of the way after several weeks they turned to the basement and, with the help of various organizations of the parish who supplied the cash for materials, they put that in ship shape. So now they have practically a new church. My goodness there seemed to be no end of it —money came to repair the stained glass windows and for all sorts of things. Then they decided to have a grand thanksgiving service. This was held. Then someone suggested that it might be a good time to send out envelopes so that people could give from 2 to 5 cents for each year of age to wipe out the parish deficit.

After what I have already related I don't need to tell you that this was done, with cash to spare, depression or no depression. Well the rector, being a man with a sense of fitness of things, then secured a piece of an old pre-Volstead saloon bar and had a plaque carved in honor of the young people. This was properly dedicated at another service. And Mr. Pryor informs me that it was quite proper that memorials in this church should be made of mahogany saloon bars since the reredos and altar are both made of the same material and hand carved. They are the work of an old bar keeper who was converted twenty-five years ago, and made his fixtures into church ornaments, doing the hand carving himself. Well, there's the story and it is almost impossible to believe. . . . a church completely transformed by the enthusiasm of a hand full of kids who had the nerve to go ahead. The material gain to the parish is obvious. The spiritual gain of course is all the greater and is the real achievement. And I doubt if it ends there. Like as not this story will be presented to young people's groups in all sorts and places and before long we will be getting the reports of other jobs done because of the enthusiasm kindled by the devotion of these youngsters in far off Nebraska. Let me know if you hear about any further chapters to this story.

We Need to Defend Our Prized Liberties

Sit down with yourself before a comfortable fire and in your security ask yourself whether or not you believe in free speech and the chances are that you will say "Surest thing you know." There it is in the bill of rights of the federal constitution, put there, so I am told, by that great man we are hearing so much about these days, Thomas Jefferson. "Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble." Or if you prefer a Republican authority turn to the platform for 1932 and you read "Freedom of speech, press and assemblage are fundamental principles upon which our form of government rests. These vital principles should be preserved and protected." If it is a Church authority that you want turn to the pronouncement of our own General Convention and you find: "This Church deplores any tendency on the part of some in authority to limit free discussion . . . .no Christian democracy is possible unless such be based on the principles involved in free assembly, free discussion of national issues, a free press and a free pulpit." It is all very clear.

And yet I wonder how many good American people realize that this freedom is being denied people every day of the week, probably in scores of places. I happen to be a member of the board of directors of an organization that makes it their business to keep track of such things, the American Civil Liberties Union. And I can assure you that our time is very well taken up each Monday afternoon in discussing the many cases brought to the attention of the organization. Occasionally the task is assigned to me of going into a community to test out this constitutional right. The other day for example we were informed that all meetings had been forbidden in the town of Garfield, New Jersey. By "all" those in authority meant of course those with whom they disagreed. In this particular instance they happened to be the Communist Party and a Tax Payers League, organized to see what might be done to ease the tax burden on small home owners. A peaceful and orderly meeting of the Communists was held, four were arrested, and rather badly handled by the police. Then the mayor made the statement that no meetings would be held except "over my dead body."

Now the American Civil Liberties Union believes that the only way to have free speech is to practice it. So the Rev. Frank Kingdon, a Methodist pastor of Orange, New Jersey, and I were asked to trot out our little box, set it up on the same corner after first telling the mayor we were going to do so, and go to it. I don't mind telling you that I did not look forward to the party. The meeting was to be at night; a communist speaker was to share the platform with us, for after all free speech is meaningless unless it is also granted to those with whom you disagree; the place was a district thickly populated with the foreign born, and the mayor had talked rather gibly about dead bodies. However it would have required more courage not to go, so I trotted over. Nothing happened. We talked to our heart's content, and it was not until our show was over that I learned that the police had even been about. In any case they didn't bother us. Why, after their threats, I do not know. But I rather have an idea that it was because Mr. Kingdon and I represented respectability in the form of an Anglo-Saxon and a church background, so that the authorities decided that there might be trouble if they threw us in the jug or cracked us over the head. Anyhow I arrived home safely after a rather tame evening, with all of the excitement of the affair coming through speculating as to what might happen.

The moral of this little yarn is that if we are to preserve freedom for ourselves we must also insist that it be granted to those whom we are apt to think less capable of handling it wisely. I can never quote accurately but Voltaire put it something like this: "I do not agree with a word that the man says, but I will give my life for his right to say it." I have no doubt whatever that there will eventually be an enfringement of free speech in your community. When it happens dig up the Constitution, party platforms and Church resolutions and hurry yourself to the authorities and tell them like a good American, where to head in. Such protests on the part of a few people of standing in the community will do more than anything else to put an end to the lawlessness of those in authority.

Confer About New Rector for Trinity

With three large parishes in New York City without rectors there is a great deal of speculation in the east as to the selections the vestries are apt to make. Trinity, vacant since the death last spring of the Rev. Caleb R. Stetson, is apt to be the first to select their man. Indeed the vestry met the other day and went over a list of forty men, with several vicars of Trinity chapels being high on the list. The Rev. Frederic Fleming of the Intercession is the most frequently mentioned. It is also stated over the tea cups that the Rev. Barney Phillips of the Epiphany, Washington, is in the running. The name of Joseph Fort Newton is most frequently spoken of as the next rector of St. Bartholomew's to succeed the late Rev. Robert Norwood. Since the collapse of the joint rectorship of St. James, Philadelphia, due to finances, Dr. Newton has been available and because of his preaching ability he is a logical choice. On the other hand word goes about that Dr. Newton has gone high Church recently and that for that reason he may not be chosen by this parish with a liberal tradition. Gossip is not so rife about St. James, now without a rector due to the recent untimely death of the Rev. Frank Crowder. The. Rev. Howard Robbins is frequently mentioned, though close friends say that he is most happy in his present work and would likely as not decline an election. The popular H. Adye Prichard of Mount Kisco is also frequently mentioned for both St. Bartholomew's and St. James'.

Alabama Hard At Work on Canvass

The diocese of Alabama is doing its best to make the canvass this fall a real success. To this end a conference of the clergy was held at Grand View September 21-23 when all aspects of the undertaking were discussed. The leaders were Bishop McDowell, the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, the Rev. Charles Clingman, the Rev. V. C. McMaster, the Rev. R. A. Kirchhoffer, the Rev. P. N. McDonald and the Rev. T. H. Evans, with the Rev. Oliver Hart of Chattanooga as the invited speaker. It was found impossible to hold a similar laymen's conference so regional conferences are being held this month instead in several centers of population. Assisting in these conferences from outside the diocese are Bishop Maxon of Tennessee, the Rev. Oliver Hart, the Rev. E. P. Dandridge of Nashville and the Rev. D. H. Wattley of New Orleans. As a further step toward the success of the campaign Bishop McDowell is visiting every congregation in the diocese in order to confer with the vestries and to help with the solution of parish problems.

Conference in Quincy

A conference of lay men and women was held at St. Paul's, Peoria, Illinois, October 4th and 5th. Bishop Fawcett and the Rev. OUR BIBLE CLASS

WE ARE happy to pass on to you the following message from Mr. Leon C. Palmer, the general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew: "Let me congratulate you upon the initiation of THE WITNESS BIBLE CLASS, conducted by the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker. This is a good move and you have picked a good man to conduct it. I shall take pleasure in calling attention to it through the columns of St. Andrew's Cross, and personally among Brotherhood men." We would also like to tell you of a class that has been organized in Quincy, Illinois. A Church woman, always active in Church life, has been ill for a year and forbidden to continue her strenuous parish activities. However, she has ordered a small bundle of papers each week and has organized a small class of women who meet each week in her home to study the Bible and to discuss Bishop Johnson's articles on "What I Believe and Why."

Send us a postal or a note telling us of your WITNESS activities.

Another vacancy in Providence is at All Saints', where the Rev. A. M. Aucock closed his long rectorship on October first.

Protest the Name of Oxford Groups

The organization of Christians known to some as the First Century Christian Fellowship and to others as the Buchmanites, of which the Rev. Frank Buchman and the Rev. Samuel Shoemaker are leaders, have in recent months been calling themselves the Oxford Groups. The use of this name brought forth a protest the other day from the Plainfield, N. J. Clericus in the form of the following resolution:

"Resolved: that this Clericus go on record as protesting vigorously against the use of the word 'Oxford' in connection with the Group Movement of Dr. Frank N. D. Buchman and his First Century Christian Fellowship, in view of the fact that the Movement is not Oxonian in its origin, and in view of the further fact that the use of the name 'Oxford' all too frequently results in people wrongly identifying the Group Movement with the Oxford Movement, the Centenary of which is to be celebrated throughout the world in 1933."

"Our program for this year must be based on what finances we have; our budgets must be worked over month by month to include only the things we can pay for." Mr. Courtenay Barber, president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, spoke on the work of that organization, the Rev. Albert L. Schrock spoke on the value of publicity and urged that an effort be made to place a Church weekly in every home; the Rev. James Foster spoke on social service, and the Rev. L. C. Ferguson spoke on missions and Church extension. The conference was attended by about one hundred.

Our Own Hall Of Fame

In 1848 the Rev. William B. Corbyn went west as a missionary and teacher to Governor Clark Mission, which later became St. Paul's College at Palmyra, Missouri. Here he became famous for managing unruly boys, and his influence still lives in the lives of many who have grown to useful manhood because of the training he gave them. Their gratitude, occasionally expressed, can be illustrated by the story of Dr. Corbyn walking into a steamboat office in New York and asking the price of a ticket to England. "Not a cent, Dr. Corbyn. I am Billie Garrison. You made a man of me and that pays the fare." The history of his work at this school would fill an interesting book.

In 1870 he resigned to become the first rector of the Good Shepherd, Quincy, Illinois, and the deepest roots of the parish life today are found in the personality, character and life of this first rector. And with the trend today so markedly toward very young rectors it might be well to point out that this man who left such a mark on an entire community began his pastorate as a mature priest, beyond the prime of life, bringing with him a ripe experience, convincing wisdom, and a patience combined with a rare humility. Here he trained the first boys choir in the Mississippi Valley and his understanding of boys made this choir a school of character as well as of music. Many of these choir boys are men of prominence today. He was also a real builder with a sense of the beautiful, as is witnessed by the interior of this parish church today. His devotion to the Church is evidenced in his readiness to sacrifice part of his own salary when the new diocese of Quincy was formed, and to turn again to teaching part time in the public high school in order to maintain himself. He was a great pastor and a great teacher, still loved and revered by those who came under his care, though he died over thirty years ago.

Here's a Parson
Who Gets Around

As an indication of the job of a rural parson in the great west, our missionary in the San Juan Basin of Colorado, who covers a territory larger than three or four eastern states, reports that in two years he has driven his Ford over 30,000 miles in covering that territory, and has dug up over a hundred names of isolated Episcopalians who are so far from any church that we put their names on our diocesan list, to keep in touch with them through correspondence, sending sermons, leaflets, prayer cards, etc., each month. In this great territory he has been able to officiate at 365 services, with 43 baptisms, 40 confirmations, and 16 burials.

Bishop Seaman Preaches
To Students

Bishop Seaman of North Texas was the preacher at the opening service at Texas Technological College, Lubbock, held in the high school auditorium and attended by 1000 people. The service was attended by all the pastors in town, including the Roman Catholic. The leader of the service was Bradford Knapp, president of the college, who was one of the rural life speakers at the General Convention in New Orleans. The Rev. Bradner J. Moore, under whose direction the student work has gone on successfully for the past few years, terminated his pastorate on September 30th. His views, both theological and social, were not acceptable to Bishop Seaman and the resignation was the final result. As a matter of fact there was quite a bit of excitement at Lubbock during recent months, with a member of the faculty of long standing and a Y. M. C. A. secretary being forced off their jobs for holding opinions which were not acceptable to a number of the college trustees who are said to be closely identified with the electric power interests. Perhaps eventually we will learn that these so-called-radicals have not been so far wrong as the Insulls and other power magnates have led us to believe.

Wyoming Entertains
Synod of the Northwest

St. Mark's, Casper, Wyoming, entertained the 12th synod of the province of the Northwest, September 27-28, the first time that it has met in the state. Distance did not prove to be a barrier for the attendance was tip-top. Bishop Burleson preached at a mass meeting on the problems now facing the Church. Bishop Fox made a hit with a paper on rural work, and Mrs. E. I. Boyd of Colorado gave an outline of methods she uses in reaching the isolated in that diocese. Bishop Schmuck and Bishop Kemerer spoke on "Loyalty to the Church Program", a topic, so I am informed by my operative, which caused spirited discussion though he does not give me the interesting details. Reaching the college students was dealt with snappily by a couple of young men who know that job, the Rev. LeRoy Burroughs of Ames, Iowa, and the Rev. L. W. McMillan of Lincoln, Nebraska. The Rev. Oliver Riley of Nebraska dealt with the high school student and the young people's fellowship.

Makers of Hymn Books
To be Honored

It isn't every year that the makers of hymn books are singled out for honors. But of course there is no reason why they shouldn't be so I am glad to report that the Hymn Society, a national organization of Hymn writers, are to have them as guests of honor at a dinner to be held in connection with their three day convention to be held at the Union Theological Seminary in November. There are to be learned addresses on hymns by people with "professor" and "doctor" before their names. There will be a festival service of Hymns at the Riverside Church, when the preacher will be Prof. James Moffatt of Union, with Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick leading the service—presenting an antiphonal litany with music of all things, just imagine—then there is to be another music service at St. Bartholomew's, with a sermon by Dr. Howard C. Harper Sibley Comes
Out as a Wet

Following the lead of John D. Rockefeller Jr., and other prominent drys, Mr. Harper Sibley of Rochester, New York, and member of the National Council of our Church, always one of the most vigorous drys in the state of New York, announced last week that he favored the repeal of the 18th amendment. "Although I am a dry personally I cannot escape the conviction that no law can be enforced that is so regularly disrespected by those men and women that I believe to be the finest people in the community," Mr. Sibley said in a letter to the Monroe County Division of the Crusaders.

"The abolition of the saloon has not meant the abolition of the use of intoxicating liquors," he continued. "Nine out of ten of my friends in Rochester and across the country serve cocktails freely on all occasions without the slightest moral compunction. The men in the community whom I look up to with the greatest respect and admiration buy liquor from bootleggers without hesitation.

"Why should our police force be expected to take a position different from that of our important citizens? These thousands of leaders in American life are actually engaged in paying thousands of our young men to break the law.

"In the old days a few reckless men became open law breakers. Now it is profitable, because our church people make it profitable, for thousands to organize for the very purpose of breaking our laws. The matter has gone far, it seems to me, beyond the immediate question of prohibition. Yet in my opinion, the prohibition amendment is one of the basic roots of this dangerous situation."

Dean Gates Goes In for Cheerfulness

Dean Gates of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine has announced that he is to preach a series of "Cheerful Sermons" to see if he can not offset some of the gloom that seems to be the favorite form of pulpit oratory these days. He preached the first last Sunday.

"In the old days, intellectuality was judged by what a man could construct; what he could make. Now, alas, it seems that the man who can knock hardest, complain most pitifully and attack most vitriolically is considered the most intellectual. Illustrating this, you might remember what was said about the church when the war began. The church was said to fall because certain leaders who, to my knowledge, had nothing to do with the church, were not members of the church, and were always attacking the church, had plunged the world into that awful disaster. The church, however, was blamed for everything.

"Now, this is a sermon of thanksgiving for the church, its founding, its nature, its ideals and, its accomplishments. I am thanking God for the church. I cannot understand the

FOR THESE TIMES

A Plan That Benefits Everyone Concerned

Most rectors have communicants these days seeking work. We have a suggestion. Everyone seems to agree that it would be a desirable thing to have a weekly of the Church in every home. The General Convention and the National Council pass resolutions about it; rectors make announcements about it; most everything is done, in fact, except calling upon people and asking them to subscribe. We therefore suggest that one or more of these people seeking work be assigned the task of taking subscriptions in your parish.

As a Special Offer for These Times We Will Allow a Commission of 33%, or 67c, on Each Annual Subscription at $2.

A postal card and we will send you sample copies and subscription blanks at once.

mind of the minister who spends so much of his time, as some seem to do, in attacking the church, the very thing he is supposed to have given his very life to work in. You know perfectly well that no other activity, institution or enterprise in the world would allow for a moment those who were its enlisted officers or soldiers to spend so much time in attacking the institution or organization of which they were members."

Memorial Chapel
At Westminster

In the lofty chamber beneath the southwest tower of Westminster Abbey and not far from the grave of the Unknown Warrior a new place of pilgrimage has recently been opened to the British public. With as little damage to the medieval structure as possible, and with all due reverence for the traditions of the historic abbey, a chapel in the nature of a war memorial has been constructed—the first new chapel to be opened in the abbey since the dissolution of the monastery.

The Warrior's Chapel, dedicated by the prince of Wales in a solemn ceremonial, is to serve as a place for rest and meditation for the constant stream of visitors to the shrine of the Unknown Warrior. It has been the acknowledged purpose of the authorities to endow the chapel with a devotional atmosphere and this character is implicit in the design and decoration which have been carried out in the project.

The idea of the chapel was the conception of an unknown benefactor who is said to have given half of his life's savings toward defraying the cost of the project, the rest of the sum being raised by "widows' mites" offerings. The cost of the project is placed at about £4,000.

There has been some criticism of the project, it is understood, on the ground that the work has been carried out in a somewhat over-ornate manner. But the whole arrangement has been managed in such a way that it can all be altered or entirely removed if occasion arises and the authorities experience a change of heart.

Report on Children at Work

More than 2,000,000 boys and girls from ten to seventeen years of age, according to the National Child Labor Committee, were gainfully employed in 1930, of whom 667,118 were under sixteen years. Over 3,000,000 children seven to seventeen years of age, inclusive, were not attending school in 1930, of whom 1,332,872 were under sixteen years.

Preaching on Lies That People Tell

It was the Rev. G. A. Studdert-Kennedy who first made lies interesting by his book by that name. Now a preacher in Worcester, Mass., announces a series of sermons on the subject "Lies" in this order: "Lies the Newspapers Tell", "Lies, the Radio Tells", "Lies the Politicians Tell", "Lies the Preachers Tell." Just to make it inclusive he ought to have one on "Lies I Sometimes Tell Myself".

NATIONAL COUNCIL REDUCES BUDGET

Harper Sibley, who was a member of the commission sent by Mr. Rockefeller to study the missionary work of the Far East, addressed the Council and briefly presented in barest outline, since her time was very limited, the findings of that commission. A committee was appointed by the Council to attend a large meeting in November when that commission's report will be dealt with by the various churches.

A large committee, headed by Bishop Stewart of Chicago, was appointed to work out details and plan for an exhibit of Church work in the Hall of Religion, which will be one of the buildings at the coming World's Fair in Chicago next summer.

The Rev. LeRoy Burroughs, student pastor at Ames, Iowa, has been asked to serve as acting secretary of the student work of the Church, succeeding the Rev. Brooke Stabler, recently resigned.

Mr. William Peterkin of the diocese of West Virginia and Mr. Collin M. Gair of Los Angeles were elected members of the National Council to fill vacancies.

There are other details which possibly should be reported but I have an idea this just about fills the space allotted to me, and besides it is time to eat—so cheerio—if other matters on this meeting do pop up of any importance I shall pass them on to you another week.

Regulars vs. Casuals

The Rev. A. W. Price, of St. Philip's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., uncovers a fact of vital importance to every rector and every parish:

"Please remember that it takes five casual givers on the average, no matter what their aggregate financial capacity, to equal one regular giver, no matter how small his capacity may be.

"If you elect to keep your association with the Church upon the easy-going plan of giving when you come and coming when it is convenient, you are of course free to do so.

"It is not upon such a plan, however, that this or any other Church can build its program and meet its obligations as a Christian institution."

If—Regulars and Casuals can be reached by means of a real Every Member Canvass this fall. . . .

A Canvass with correct balance of spiritual and material;

A Canvass that is an adventure in Christian Fellowship instead of a dunning expedition;

A Canvass so brimming with inspiration and education that it is a regenerating force;

THEN—There will be no Casuals left; and next year the parish, the diocese and the General Church can press forward, joyfully realizing the Promise of Power.

DEFENSE MECHANISM

by

CHARLES R. BROWN

Former Dean, Yale Divinity School

CERTAIN psychologists, men who have not lived very long or grown very tall, contend that God is only a defense mechanism. Look at the hills and the beauty of nature and then say, "A defense mechanism created the heavens and the earth." Go to some one in sorrow and say "A defense mechanism is our refuge in time of sorrow." Test the claims of religion on the palate of your own life. There are many things I know by experience and you cannot tell me they are not true. You cannot tell me that there is not an immense dynamic force for life in belief in Jesus and the power of prayer. Science is great but it is not all. All the machinery of civilization is only a tool; if wielded by greed or fear or ill-will, it might destroy all that man holds dear. If wielded by friendliness and co-operation it may be used to build a finer social order.

Vol. XVII. No. 9 OCTOBER 27, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year: in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

1874 - - George Parkin Atwater - - 1932

CHEERFUL CONFIDENCES are to be no more. Word reaches us as we go to press of the death of Dr. Atwater, whose genial column has appeared in THE WITNESS ever since the founding of the paper over sixteen years ago. He was a great Churchman, a builder of a large parish in the Middle West, an author whose works have been consistently best sellers year in and year out, and an editor whose abilities were recognized throughout the Church. His death will be felt not only by THE WITNESS, where he can never be replaced, and in his present parish where his abilities had brought new life, but in the councils of the Church where his judgment was frequently sought. May he rest in peace.

THE LAYMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONS INQUIRY is going to revolutionize our whole idea of missions unless we plug up our ears. This group of distinguished laymen and women went to the Orient where an exhaustive study of the missionary work carried on by seven denominations, including our own, was made. In this they were aided by a group of expert inquirers who first went ahead to prepare the ground for their study. Their report is to be presented at a meeting in New York on November 18th and 19th at which time they will urge upon the various denominations greater unity and cooperation in the conduct of foreign missionary work, not only in the interest of greater economy but also to make for greater efficiency and more effectiveness. In statements the inquiry has already given out it is clearly indicated that in their opinion radical changes must be made in order to justify the enormous sums spent upon missions annually. Indeed they have already said publicly "that there is no ground for the renewed appeal for the support, much less for the enlargement, of these missions in their present form or on their present basis." Subsequent statements give some of their reasons for forming such a judgement. First, they point out, there must be cooperation with other religious groups in the Orient in order that religious forces may present a united front against the materialistic philosophies which are making great headway there. "Why compare Mohammed and Budda," they ask, "when all the utterances of religious intuition are threatened with discard in the light of practical reason? It is no longer which prophet or which book. It is whether any prophet, book, revelation, rite, church, is to be trusted." Missionaries are too prone to consider it to be their task to make converts of those attached to other religions, rather than uniting with them against the non-religious forces which are so widespread.

AS A RESULT OF THIS INQUIRY the reasons for supporting foreign missions that have been to the fore in the past are again being questioned. "The pioneers of Protestant missions", says the report, "were moved by the disturbing sense that many in Asia had not so much as heard the Gospel; millions of souls, believed to be in danger of eternal death, might be given the opportunity of life; there was but one way, the way of Christ. There was need for haste. Mingled with this concern for individuals, there was the appealing vision of the world-wide Church. "These reasons for supporting missions have now largely passed. There is little disposition today to believe that sincere seekers after God in other religions are to be damned; doomed to the everlasting torment of the unsaved. Also the argument often advanced that western civilization has something precious and unique to give to our brethren of the Orient no longer has much weight, either at home or abroad. There is a disconcerting consciousness of the defects of our civilization, much sharpened by the world war, and, as the report states, "a much more critical attitude toward our institutions, our democracy, our education, our religion. Under these circumstances, the connection of Christianity with western life, formerly a matter of prestige, now has its disadvantages."

THE INQUIRY IS ALSO CRITICAL of the 10,000 missionaries in the Far East, representing the seven denominations for whom they made the study. "Of the thousands of missionaries", the report states, "there are many of conspicuous power, true saintliness and a sublime spirit of devotion, men and women in whose presence one feels himself at once exalted and unworthy. The greater number seem to us of limited outlook and capacity; and there are not a few whose vision of the inner meaning of the mission has become obscured by the intricacies, divisions, frictions and details of a task too great for their powers and their hearts.

"The human side of the mission seems on the whole unduly weak. For there are two things which we may rightfully demand of the mission personnel. First, that in those services where there is a recognized standard of efficiency, as in teaching or medicine, the mission staff shall stand well. Second, that in the essential service of interpreting Christianity to the Orient, it shall not too far fail of its great theme. In neither of these respects can we speak of the total impression with the high enthusiasm we should like to offer.

"As a member of a church, sent out by a church, the missionary is prone to conceive his task as primarily that of promoting this organization. His Board, as a rule, embodies and intensifies this conception; and the missionary is likely to be dominated by the expectations of his Board.

"Every human organization has its hunger for influence, funds, membership; tempts its servants into ways of ambition within its ranks, and into a reputed 'loyalty' which involves petty competition with other organizations of similar aim. The trail of self-interest within the organization lies like the trail of the serpent over the missions of Asia within our purview.

"Our judgment of the possible future value of the mission movement depends, more than upon any other factor, on the question whether there is a real likelihood that, either through changing the conditions of work or through improvement in quality, the personnel of missions can be materially strengthened.

"We recommend that the initiative for calling missionaries for work within the sphere of the Church shall in the future be the right and privilege of the churches on the mission field, and that they shall indicate through the proper channels the type of person needed for the specific task in sight as well as the length of the expected service, whether for a short term of years, or for a life engagement."

All of which no doubt means a pretty lively battle between the long established missionary boards, fighting for the power and control that they have built up, against a growing conviction on the part of Church people, particularly the laity, that the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry presents adequate reasons, supported by a thorough study in the field, for radical changes in the entire missionary set-up.

What I Believe and Why

I Believe in Christ

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

THE second article of our creed is that we "believe in Jesus Christ His only Son our Lord." This statement would be more acceptable to many people if the word "only" was left out. There are many who claim that we are all Sons of God and that Christ is the most delectable Son. But the creed is insisting upon a different conception of sonship than that which these people have in mind. There is a real difference between a son who is begotten and one who is adopted.

When St. John said that "the word was made flesh and dwelt among us and that we beheld His glory as the only begotten of the Father", he was disclaiming that Christ was a Son of God in the same way that St. John was. When St. Paul called Christ a second Adam he did regard Christ as of the same kind as the descendants of the first Adam. Christ was the beginning of a new creation, as unique in His characteristics as was the first Adam, if compared to creatures who existed prior to the time when God breathed into Adam and he became a soul, possessed of conscience and moral responsibility. In a very real sense the first man was a new creature, even though his physical properties might closely resemble the brute creation.

So Christ was man in the highest sense of the term but He was also more than man. What was that something more?

He was God manifesting Himself as love in human form. In the universe God reveals Himself as truth, and the seeker after truth is searching for the things of God. In nature God reveals Himself as beauty, and the artist is searching for the things of God. In a good man God reveals Himself as righteousness and those who follow Him are searching for the things of God.

But in Jesus Christ God reveals Himself as love and He that hath seen the Christ has beheld the Father. For how else could God reveal Himself as love but through a person who could manifest that love and so win the devotion of those who sought Him?

Now this is a statement of the Church. Why do I believe it? There are three principle reasons why I believe in Jesus Christ as the express image of God.

FIRST because He and He only satisfies the expectation of the Hebrew people. The Old Testament comes to us as the record of a peculiar people who were the instruments under Providence for developing through the centuries an idea of God which satisfies the need of man. Differing from other ancient religions it is a steady progressive revelation which finds its culmination in a prophet like Isaiah and a leader like Jesus Christ. It has in it the elements which resemble the processes of evolution as we see it in the world around us. It begins in a crude way it is true but it emerges into a glorious fruition. Beside it all other ancient religions are static.

Jesus Christ is the adequate fulfillment of Hebrew expectation. His coming into the world is not an unrelated incident but the culmination of a long expectancy on the part of a wonderful people. "When the fulness of time was come God sent forth His Son, born of a woman, born unto the law". It was this fulfillment which convinces St. Paul that Jesus was the expected Messiah.

Secondly I believe in Jesus Christ because His power is different from other religious leaders. One may question scriptures and creeds but one may not deny the power of Christ in human society. He has raised savage tribes to a high level of moral conduct. He has been the guiding spirit in the development of civilization. He has won the devotion of all conditions of people in every race and in every station of society. He has achieved a stability, a universality and an influence for service entirely unique.

THIRDLY He satisfies the need of those who truly seek the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, as is attested by their own experience and in no other way. It is neither accident nor chance that the person of Jesus Christ finds its place in the warp and woof of history. You could not subtract Christ from history without rewriting the story. He is the central figure of human annals. Compare Him with any other leader and you will at once realize that He is unique in His influence upon the course of human events.

Of course to those who believe that history is merely the fortuitous sequence of events this argument has little weight, but to those who see in history the guiding hand of Providence, the power of the Christ is an evidence of such guidance.

Either Christ is the greatest deceiver of all time or else He is the manifestation of God's provision for human need. I might say therefore that I believe in Christ because I find it impossible to regard Him as a charlatan.

After all one has to take the world as it is and the history of mankind as it is. The academic mind cannot alter facts in order to confine theories. The fact is that the power of Christ is the most potent and the most beneficient power in the whole story. Except in the purely materialistic ideas of the Russian soviet it is difficult to find those who do not reverence and admire Christ even if they do denounce the Church.

What does this signify? It means that the Christ is justified but the instruments who represent Him have failed. He never promised otherwise. "When I return" He asked, "shall I find faith on the earth?" He seemed to forsee that those who represented Him would fail. But truth is not affected by man's ignorance or sin. The facts of science are independent of man's appreciation of them. So the righteousness of Christ is not affected by the failure of clergy or laity adequately to manifest Him.

I believe that Christ is true although every Christian is a liar. It was this upon which the apostles insisted. It was Christ and not themselves to Whom they directed men. I think that the significance of this is vital. "What think ye of Christ?" is an entirely different question from "What think ye of Christians?"

It would have been rather mean of St. John for example to have deserted Christ because the other eleven had exploited Him or betrayed Him. Rather I imagine St. John would have been even more devoted to Christ because He was being misrepresented.

"I believe in Jesus Christ, His only Son our Lord" because I cannot believe Him to have been an impostor and there seems to be no middle course but that of accepting Him on His own testimony.

Queer People

THE Puritan agitation in England from the middle of the sixteenth to the middle of the seventeenth centuries produced a lot of very queer people. The Church of England has been severely criticized for being rather hard on them but when one inquires into the circumstances, they are found to have been a very irritating lot. They were not persecuted merely because they had different ideas of religion.

For instance, there were the Anabaptists. They denied all rights of property and all forms of government and continually stirred up all kinds of trouble. They went in for experiments in free love and broke pledges and promises even when made in courts of law because they believed every one's individual conscience to be his own infallible guide—which simply meant that people could do exactly as they pleased.

Then there were the Quakers who at that time were far from being the quiet, peace-loving folk they are generally supposed to have been. They were riotously fanatical, courting persecution and fairly hurling themselves into jail. One of their habits was to parade the streets naked and smeared with soot. They derided everything and everybody and became a social nuisance.

The Familists were another queer lot, taking their origin from Holland. They played strange tricks with the Bible, developed a peculiar kind of mysticism, credited their leader with being another incarnation of God among men, and pestered the English monarchs to disrupt the Church in their favor.

The Brownists are generally counted as the originators of the Congregational Church. Their leader was a Robert Browne who for years conducted a highly contentious campaign in England and Scotland. He was violent in speech and manner and wrote a lot of scurrilous literature. As a matter of fact he was treated with much consideration due to the influence of Lord Burleigh who was a kinsman. Eventually his fervor passed, he was reconciled to the Church, and stoutly opposed his own followers. Friendly commentators have attempted to excuse him by saying that he was insane. It seems rather likely.

One of the queerest of them all was the group known as the Fifth Monarchy Men. They were millenialists. They said that the Bible told of four monarchies of Anti-Christ (Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome) and that Christ was about to establish a Fifth Monarchy of His own over which He would rule for a thousand years. At first they thought they saw their chance with Cromwell and the Puritan Commonwealth but they were soon disillusioned and turned against that regime. They organized a plot to overthrow the Cromwell government but they were discovered and temporarily suppressed. A few years later they set out to capture the city of London, marching thru the streets with cries of "Long live King Jesus". Most of them were killed in the outbreak and the rest were imprisoned or executed—this, not by the Church of England but by Cromwell and his Independents.

Is it any wonder that such people received some harsh treatment? Today when we see so many friendly variations in religious affiliations, we wonder why there should have been such intolerant persecutions. The answer is that religious differences in those days were different.

LIFTING THE CURSE

IN THESE first five books of the Bible—The Law—we are apt to read the stories and skip the rules as unimportant. With the Hebrews it was just the opposite. The rules were the important thing; the stories were told to explain the rules. Hebrew ceremonies were framed so children would ask questions, as at the Passover. (Read and underline Exodus 10:2—12:25—13:14 and 15.) Children naturally ask vital questions, such as "What makes people do wrong? Why is it so painful to have a baby? What is a rainbow? Why do not all nations speak the same language? Why do we have to work so hard?" In answer, the Hebrew parent told the stories of the temptation, the fall of man, the expulsion from Eden, the covenant of the Rainbow and the Tower of Babel.

St. Paul says "When I was a child, I spoke as a child, I felt as a child; I thought as a child; but now that I have become a man I have put away childish things." (1 Cor. 13:11) So in the childhood of the human race, the origin of things was pictured childishly. Jesus bade us become as men in such things; His message "Repent" means "Think again; change your minds"; or as St. Paul puts it "Be ye renewed in the spirit of your minds." (Eph. 4:23) Many of these primitive stories were changed utterly by Christ's teaching.

The most fundamental of questions is "What makes people do wrong?" The Temptation story (Genesis 3) puts the blame on the serpent, appealing to the woman's curiosity. But this serpent was not the common snake, for it was "more subtile than any animal of the wilderness which the Lord God had made." Evidently, then the Lord God had not made this serpent. It was the ancient dragon of the deep, — chaos, or disorder — which all through the Scriptures is pictured as the Enemy of God. It is often identified with the sea, whose tameless fury terrified the land-loving shepherd people.

The Spirit of God which brooded on the face of the deep was pictured as a Dove; so that when Jesus said to His apostles "Be ye wise as Serpents but harmless as Doves" He was holding forth the idea that the search of knowledge, which sometimes leads to disorder, can also be creative. The curse upon the serpent condemns this ancient foe of God—disorder—to humiliation. Enmity between creative man and chaos is pledged, with the final triumph of man over chaos. This looks forward to the vision in the Revelation, when there shall be "no more sea" except the sea of crystal mingled with fire before the throne of God. This curse on the serpent, "with promise of the Seed," is called sometimes the "First Gospel".

The Punishment of Woman—When there were no hospitals and all of life was lived in tents, children were appalled by the pain of becoming a mother. If pain is always punishment they reasoned, women must have offended God terribly. Not for centuries was it realized that anything of value costs pain, so that life, most valuable of all things, costs the most pain. Jesus transformed this old story when He compared His crucifixion to the pangs of childbirth of a new Life, a new world-order, in His farewell to His disciples. "When the child is born she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world." (John 16:21.)

Because of this Eden story, education of girls and women was for centuries strictly forbidden in many lands. Jesus destroyed this false idea again, in his rebuke to Martha, who felt disgraced because her sister Mary desired an education along with the disciples. (Luke 10:40) Jesus said "Mary hath chosen that good inheritance, which shall not be taken from her."—thus shattering the idea that ignorance is superior to knowledge. Jesus set womanhood free.

The Curse on the Ground — Neither Man nor Woman were cursed, in this story, but the serpent and the ground. The curse on the ground, "thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee" is to be lifted by labor; "In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread." It takes labor to defeat the serpent—to bring order out of chaos. Even God is pictured as so tired by His labor of creation that He has to rest. Man also must labor along with the Creator. No Hebrew family permitted its sons to grow up without knowledge of some useful trade, lest they should be idlers and wasters, and so take part with the serpent rather than being fellow-creators with God.

PERSONAL APPLICATION

The best commentary on this is Abraham Lincoln's. He said: "In the early days of our race it was said to our race: 'In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread.' Since then no good thing has been or can be enjoyed by us without first having cost labor. But it has so happened in all ages that some have labored, and others without labor have enjoyed a large proportion of the fruits. This is wrong, and should not continue. To secure to every man who labors the full product of his toil—or as nearly so as possible—is the worthy object of any good government."

Our Catechism insists that part of each person's duty is to "Learn to labor truly to get mine own living and do my duty in that state of life to which it shall please God to call me." St. Paul says emphatically "He that will not work, neither let him eat." To "labor truly" means to follow some productive occupation. Gambling, whether at cards, horse-races or in stocks, is not "laboring truly." The question to be answered by you is "Do I, by labor of hand or brain, help God's creative work?"

MEMORY WORK

We have a short lesson this time, the Poetry section in the Old Testament. Do not forget your Telephone Number 5-12-5-5-12. This is the third 5. The books are:

Job — PSALMS — Proverbs — Ecclesiastes — Song of Solomon

Of these, the Psalms is most constantly used. Job is one of the world's great poems on the problem of sin and punishment. Proverbs and Ecclesiastes are Wisdom Books. The Song of Solomon is a marriage hymn. There are 150 Psalms. The Shortest is the 117th—two verses —and the longest is the 119th—176 verses.

THE GOLD RUSH

THE gold rush has begun in our land. You remember that a few months ago every one in Great Britain began to search for remnants and articles of gold. They took them to the proper offices and received paper money. A gold sovereign, worth in normal times 20 shillings, brought 27 shillings. Dukes brought their coronets and circus-men stripped the gold foil from the resplendent ornaments on their wagons. The British gold reserve was augmented by the gold thus secured.

Today in our land the Churches may bolster up their resources by a search for gold. The members do not have to go into the hills with mining equipment or to build sluices to wash out the precious metal from huge quantities of earth. The search must be made in the home.

It is estimated that there are more than twenty million homes in our land. It is probable that some discarded gold lurks in each one of them. If such gold could be found and gathered by an official of the Church, the Church Treasurer would have a broader smile at the next vestry meeting.

The method is quite simple. The members of the family must search the house for gold. I can only give you a suggestion of what to look for. Old watch cases, old chains no longer in use, rings that no one wears, lockets and buckles and pins; souvenir spoons, old spectacle frames, bracelets, bangles and gold pencils; possibly some gold foreign coins, the heads of old canes.

Let your imagination guide you. Look through drawers and chests and cupboards. Gather the gold and then take it to the proper officer of your Church.

If your enthusiasm is aroused you might ask friends and neighbors to help you. Inaugurate the gold crusade. Enlist your dentist, your optician, your jeweller. And take it all to your Church.

The officers of the Church must then discover, through local jewellers, the best and cheapest way to redeem the gold by the crucible. The banks will give information as to the method of turning the refined gold into cash, through the assay office.

Not only will you help your Church, but you will help your country, by adding to the gold reserve of the land. Join the gold rush and gather up the fragments.

PLANNED SOCIETY PRESENTED BY A GROUP OF EXPERTS

By Gardiner M. Day

Not a few Republicans and Democrats are admitting that a considerable vote will be polled this year by Norman Thomas, and yet many of these same citizens have only the vaguest notions of what the Socialist Party stands for. Such strange views as: "Let the Socialists into office and they will take all the money abroad" or "The Socialists will take away everybody's property" are samples of some the writer has heard from Yankee lips. People, who wish to be intelligent about Socialism, would do well to read Socialist Planning and a Socialist Program, a symposium by some thirty prominent Socialist writers, edited by Harry W. Laidler with an introduction and an essay by Mr. Thomas. (Falcon Press $2).

Such a variety of essays covering so wide an area make the book difficult to review briefly. The purpose of the book is to show in considerable detail what a Socialist United States would probably be like and matters ranging from coal to art are treated. Part I considers the present social disorder and shows the need for socialist rather than capitalistic planning for a permanent cure. Part II gives suggested blueprints for the management of different phases of our economic order. Part III deals largely with the agencies for bringing into being a Socialist Society and what an individual may do to further it.

For the reader who desires to secure a general idea of Socialist principles and plans without going into too great detail we would suggest his reading Stuart Chase's "Society Adrift" and Paul Blanshard's "Planning for Service" in the first part; C. E. Warne's "A Proposed Socialist Blueprint," J. W. Hughan's "Some Features of the Industrial Structure Under Socialism" and F. S. Cohen's "Politics and Economics" in the second part; and Mayor Hoan's "Socialists in City Government," and C. B. Cheney's "Educating for Socialism" in the third part. Then if the reader finds arising in his mind such questions as: "Why not have government regulation rather than ownership?" or "Will standardization drive culture out of a Socialist society?" he can readily pick out articles dealing with his questions as for example Louis Waldman's thoughtful argument on "Regulation vs. Public Ownership" concerning the former, and Robert Morss Lovett's "Culture under Socialism" concerning the latter. The reader will not agree with all the writers, not all of them are in detail agreement, but like the true Christian they desire a better society and a Christian would do well to give the most thoughtful consideration to their suggestions.

Speaking of Socialism, we would like to call attention to a book published about a year ago, but which has not received as much notice as it deserves, namely The Christian Socialist Movement in England by Clive Binyon (Macmillan S. P. C. K. $3.50). We hear a good deal these days of the way in which the Church has lost influence with the working class. Surely one of the reasons for this is the fact that in most of our theological seminaries practically no attempt is made to give the students any vital appreciation, not merely of the great proletarian movements but also of the attempts of socially minded Churchmen to understand and aid these movements. The aim of Dr. Binyon's volume is to fill this educational gap. He traces the development of the Socialist movement in England from the days of Ludlow, Kingsley and Maurice to the present time. It is not a very encouraging story, ending so often in such complete failure to attain its ends, but the author rightly concludes: "It appears that the movement whose history we have been tracing, so far from having now run its course, has scarcely begun." Unfortunately, the history of the movement is a shameful reflection on the narrowness of our average Churchman's sympathies, revealing as it does his lack of active interest in changing the conditions which have made and in a large measure still make, the lot of the poor and the laboring classes very hard.

Although it would be at the price of brevity we wish that Dr. Binyon had given more of the spirit and essential beliefs of some of the men prominent in the movement as it would have given life to many rather dry paragraphs. We find ourselves wondering also whether the author did not lose by confining his story almost entirely to the Church of England. Nevertheless the volume is one which we believe every theological student and minister would do well to borrow from his Seminary library.

Edited by W. B. Spofford

A joint commission was appointed at the last General Convention to consider the matter of creating a national Church organization for laymen. The commission, of which Bishop Strider of West Virginia is the chairman, has now sent out a preliminary report announcing the creation of such an organization, to be called the Laymen's League of the Episcopal Church. The report contains constitution and by-laws for the organization of the League first in parishes, then in dioceses where at least five parish leagues shall have been formed. Also a skeleton national organization is set-up to foster the movement. The aims of the League are to promote among laymen a more definite and intelligent understanding of the Church's life, history and program; to enlist every layman in some form of active service for the Church; to keep before the members their duties and obligations; to promote the Program of the National Council; to promote the work of the dioceses; to promote the work of the parishes. Every baptized man eighteen years of age or older, who is in sympathy with the general objectives of the organization and is willing, aside from other Church work, to pledge at least one full day's attendance upon an annual laymen's conference or retreat, is eligible for membership. The dues are not less than one dollar a year. The officers of the national organization are as follows; Bishop Perry, honorary president; Mr. Eugene E. Thompson of Washington, D. C., president; Mr. Warren Kearny, New Orleans, executive vice-president and secretary; Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, Boston, treasurer.

Bishop Stewart Cracks At Corruption

Bishop Stewart of Chicago, in addressing the Sunday Evening Club, attended by 3000 people, with many more thousands listening-in, assailed "lazy judges, tip-taking bailiffs, bootlegging policemen, bail-bond fixers and professional criminals." He said that there were four causes for crime today; the mixture of crime and politics; too much politics in the police force; insufficient cooperation from the state's attorney; too much leniency in the courts.

"Our churches are the glory of this and every city. But the glory of the churches, like the glory of the city, is not in buildings or institutions or art or painting or music but in the character of men and women. It is not enough to be good

Federal Council to Meet in Indianapolis

The quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches is to be held in Indianapolis, December 6-9. Among other matters of importance there will be a thorough discussion of the "Social Ideals of the Churches", to be presented by a committee that has been working upon them since the meeting in 1928. Among those on the program are Bishop McConnell, Methodist; Mary E. Wooley, delegate to the Geneva Conference on Disarmament; Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, who is to speak on "The Function of the Church in developing a Christian social conscience" and Dr. Robert E. Speer, Presbyterian, who is to speak on "The World Mission of the Church".

More Notes on the Council Meeting

Here are a few more notes on the meeting of the National Council, held in New York on the 12th and 13th. Bishop Perry stated at the start that he and the officers felt the need of more frequent advice from the Council. It was therefore decided at this meeting that the finance department be called to meet monthly for consultation with the officers and executive secretaries. It was also voted that no vacancies be filled except upon action of the National Council, except temporary appointments, and these only upon the approval of the president and the vice-presidents. I take it this means vacancies in the field as well as in the Church Missions House. It was also voted to have only the departments of domestic and foreign missions and the finance department meet in December, when the Council next meets, in order to save expense.

Bishop Barnwell of Idaho appeared before the Council and presented the financial needs of St. Luke's Hospital, Boise. It seems that there is a debt of something like $100,000, with the probability of foreclosure by the bank and the loss of the property. He received a loan from the Council of $25,000.

The executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary met prior to the meeting of the Council. There were addresses by the Rev. John Suter, executive secretary of religious education; Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, vice-president and treasurer of the Council, who stated that there has never been a greater opportunity in the mission field than now; Mrs. William E. Leidt, of the department of religious education; and the Presiding Bishop, who emphasized the fact that "present difficulties are not a crisis or emergency but the continuing task and responsibility which have rested upon the Church ever since our Lord sent out His apostles as missionaries."

Rector Forced From Church by Vestry

Bishop Johnson's remarks this week about "What think ye of Christians" are worth keeping in mind as you read about All Souls Church, New York City. It is there, you will recall, that a battle has been going on between a majority of the vestry and the Rev. Rollin Dodd as to whether or not Negroes should be allowed to attend the services. The neighborhood, once white, is now largely colored so that in recent months a majority of the congregation has been Negro. And Mr. Dodd welcomed them, much to the disgust of these vestrymen. He only said; "I believe the function of the church in a community is to minister to the community." The vestry stopped paying Mr. Dood. So a committee of Negroes of the parish took care of that matter, at least to the extent of keeping him alive. Then the vestry padlocked the church on the pretense that repairs were being made so that services could not be held. On Bishop Mannings request the vestry did allow a service to be held two weeks ago—in the basement. Last Sunday however they did not allow even that, so that a hall had to be hired. Here the Sunday school met—about 150 children—and after them a service, attended by about eighty people of whom three-fourths were Negroes. There is a cheery side to the messy business in that a considerable portion of the white people of the parish are standing by the rector. One of these white worshippers said last Sunday: "The vestry just wants to be high brow. They want to fire Father Dodd because he is too nice to the Negroes. He treats us all alike."

Our Own Hall Of Fame

At St. Timothy's, over in Philadelphia, you will notice a crucifer who is not the usual boy in his teens. He is Samuel A. Hawthorne and he has been carrying the cross at the head of the procession for forty-five years. He was appointed in 1887 by his rector, the Rev. Robert E. Dennison, succeeding his brother, the first crucifer of the parish, who is now the Rev. William J. Hawthorne, the rector of St. Luke's, Philadelphia. The appointment came at a time in the boy's life when most boys think they have about reached the "graduating age from church." The fact that he has carried on for forty-five years certainly should prove an incentive to other crucifers who are inclined to say to their rectors: "I think I had better quit this: I am getting a bit old for it." Here is a boy who has grown gray in the service to which he remains consecrated. He has outlived many prominent in the parish, including clergy, wardens, and vestrymen. Indeed he is now serving under the Rev. G. Herbet Dennison, son of the rector who appointed him to the post. All honor to him.

Bishop Bratton and Bishop Green of Mississippi met with the three convocations of the diocese during this month to discuss whether or not an Every Member Canvass should be undertaken this year. Just what the results of the canvass will be remains to be seen for conditions there are extremely bad, with homes and plantations sold by the banks and insurance companies.

Honor the Man Who Started Unique Endowment

The other Sunday they dedicated memorials at Trinity, Clarksville, Tennessee, to Thomas W. Frazer and his wife, who many years ago had a grand idea of putting the parish on its feet financially. He had a number of slaves. These he willed to the parish, and suggested in his last will and testament that if there was a sufficient amount of breeding among them that it wouldn't take long before the parish would be well off indeed. Merely hire out the slaves at a wage and run the parish on the cash thus received. Of course a war had to come along and spoil his scheme.

Seek Relief Funds In New York

Bishop Manning has sent out an appeal to the clergy of the diocese of New York urging them to raise funds with which to aid the destitute Church families of the diocese. "They have a right to look to us for help", said the Bishop. "Moreover by caring for our own we shall lighten the burden that otherwise would fall upon the community agencies." He announced that 1069 Church families whose parishes were unable to care for them were provided for last winter. Bishop Gilbert is the chairman of the relief committee.

OUR BIBLE CLASS

FROM the Rev. R. W. Plant, rector of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Falmouth Foreside, Maine: "I have a group of ten men in our parish following the weekly lessons. During the winter we are to meet once a month to go over together the subject matter—a sort of round table conference. I am confident that this plan will develop a fresh interest in Bible study. Incidentally the weekly visit of THE WITNESS into ten homes will be of great value." Also word is received from the Rev. Thomas H. Carson, rector of St. John's, Donora, Penna., that the twelve men and women making up the staff of the Church school are now meeting regularly, under his direction, to follow the lessons. A Couple of Bishops For One Meeting

It isn't every men's club that can boast of having addresses by two bishops at one meeting. But on the 17th there was a meeting of the men's club of All Saints, Providence, with addresses by Bishop Perry and by Bishop Bennett, who is assisting him in the diocese, and also by the Rev. W. A. Lawrence and the Rev. Arthur M. Aucock.

Bishop of Exeter Urges Pacifism

The Rt. Rev. Lord William Gascoyne Cecil, bishop of Exeter, England, apparently only needs to take off his bishops' regalia and mount a soap box in Union Square to have the authorities look him up as a subject for deportation. The other day, as I reported here, he was loud in his praise of the Russian experiment. Now he comes out, in a sermon in Providence, as one of the "impossible idealists" who thinks that war is a silly business and that Christians should have nothing whatever to do with it.

Connecticut Rector Has Anniversary

The Rev. T. J. Shannon, rector of Immanuel Church, Ansonia, Connecticut, celebrated the 10th anniversary of his rectorship on October 2nd. In his sermon he congratulated the parish not only on its accomplishments during the decade, which include the building of a fine Gothic Church, but even more for the spirit of harmony and cooperation that has been characteristic of the life of the parish. On the following evening the vestry was the host at a parish dinner, with speeches and gifts.

Reduce the Budget In Georgia

The executive council of the diocese of Georgia met in Savannah on October 11th and prepared a budget for the diocesan work for 1933. It was reported that there was a deficit for the first nine months of this year amounting to $5000, with a number of missions having paid nothing whatever on their pledges. A budget of $12,500 was approved for next year, a sum that is $4,000 under 1932.

Lower Rates Mean One of Two Things to You . . .

You can either purchase more insurance at the same cost, or else the same amount of insurance will cost you less.

The Church Life Insurance Corporation was established by the Trustees of the Church Pension Fund for the sole purpose of reducing the cost of insurance and annuities for the benefit of the Church. Its rates are net rates, without the usual loading for profit, commissions, and heavy administrative expenses. In addition, it has for years been making annual refunds to policyholders.

Its complete facilities for insurance or guaranteed annuities are open, and gladly offered, to clergymen and their families, to the lay officials and to the lay workers of the Church, and their families. It has no agents, but all inquiries addressed to the Corporation will receive immediate and friendly attention.

Burton Mansfield Remembers Church Institutions

Mr. Burton Mansfield, prominent Churchman of Connecticut, who died recently, remembered several Church institutions in his will. The Rev. Stewart Means, rector emeritus of St. John's, New Haven, is left $10,000 in cash and 2-13ths of the residuary estate. Christ Church Cathedral, Hartford, is to receive 1-13th of the residuary upon the death of an employe who is to receive the income during her lifetime. Berkeley Divinity School and Trinity College also are to receive similar shares of the estate, likewise upon the deaths of individuals who are to have the incomes during their lives. St. Thomas' Church, New Haven, received 1-13th of the estate immediately, as does also the missionary society of the diocese of Connecticut of which Mr. Mansfield was treasurer for forty-three years. The National Council of the Church also received one of the shares. Mr. Mansfield left an estate of close to one million dollars.

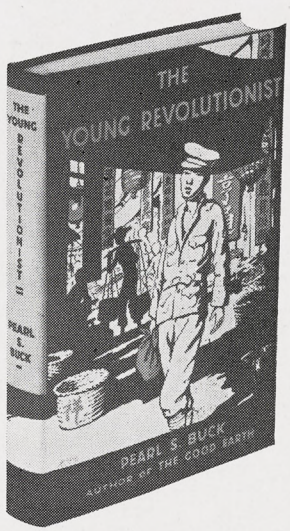
Mrs. Buck writes superbly; she understands her characters, and she portrays them without a hint of that febrile exoticism which mars other interpreters of the Orient.—New York Times.

One lays down the book with a feeling of having read a lovely bit of purposeful writing.—Record of Christian Work.

A sensitive and subtly written study of the new China and of the complex forces at work there. It is full of delicate but convincing character sketches, and is written throughout with the sympathy and understanding that came of real knowledge of the people and the country.—Manchester Guardian.

Has all the power and the rare qualities of sympathetic insight that made "The Good Earth" a best seller. —Eastern Press.

The YOUNG REVOLUTIONIST



By PEARL S. BUCK

A new book by the author of the Pulitzer Prize winner, "The Good Earth." In it Mrs. Buck portrays Chinese youth today with the same skill with which she pictured the Chinese family in her earlier book.

It is an authentic picture of great numbers of Chinese boys and young men as the author has seen them during recent years.

With compelling power she shows modern Chinese youth torn by the strife between the old and the new, aflame with patriotism, blindly devoted to ideals but half understood, groping hungrily for a religious faith and eagerly helping to build a new China.

This book is of special usefulness in connection with the forthcoming missionary study topic—China.

a strong influence over him. The young Hindu told his family of his intention to become a Christian and they ridiculed and persecuted him and did their best to lead him into a rich marriage with a Hindu girl, but he stood firm and waited until he was of age. Shortly after that time, when he went up for examinations and filled out an entry form, he wrote himself down as a Christian in all good faith. It was explained to him that he was not actually a Christian before baptism and he went for further instruction to an English missionary, who found him so sincere and earnest and so familiar with the New Testament that he was very soon baptized.

Almost immediately afterward he was decoyed away by his own family, locked up at home for two or three days, and his Bible was burned. When he was let out the family appointed two men to follow him everywhere and letters to him were intercepted. This went on for six weeks, and then he escaped and fled to the mission for refuge.

Since he was of age and the family had exceeded their rights, the mission sent the boy off with an evangelistic band for a time and later placed him as an assistant in a boarding-school. He was confirmed and has served very satisfactorily. The family have continued their attempts to destroy his religion but he has withstood them. He hopes to take a college degree and then to study for the ministry, and his intelligence and devotion seem to warrant his choice.

A Message from the National Council to the People of the Church

ON THE Eve of the Every Member Canvass for the work of the Church's Program, when another earnest appeal will be made for the support of the mission of the Church in parish and in diocese, at home and abroad, your National Council, in session assembled, grateful for the loyalty of the Church to her Mission and confident of your support, sends to you this brief and candid statement of our present financial situation and of our tentative plans for 1933.

You will recall that in February, 1932, most rigid economies in our operating budget were effected. These economies, made necessary by the decreased total expectancies reported for 1932, were many, but they were not enough to balance our budget. A special emergency appeal was therefore authorized, culminating on Whitsunday. The total sum subscribed as a result of this appeal is over $325,000, a sum which witnesses to the heroic and sacrificial effort made through the length and breadth of the Church. For this we are deeply grateful.

These measures, both the economies effected and the emergency fund subscribed, will make it possible for us to complete the year 1932 without a deficit, provided of course the original expectancies for 1932 are fully received.

Your Council has now met to consider well in advance the prospective reconciliation of income and expenditures in 1933.

The income, your valiant efforts will determine. The proposed expenditures you rightly expect us to plan and determine by creating a schedule prudently built upon the experience of 1932 definitely committed to the principle of strictest economy and yet so loyal to the authorized budget of the General Convention as jealously to guard the great missionary enterprises of the Church. This we are met to do.

In this task we are aided by the valuable recommendations of the committee of three bishops appointed by the Presiding Bishop at the request of the joint conference of the House of Bishops and the National Council held in Garden City last April; by the careful studies and recommendations of the departmental officers of the National Council, and by the detailed recommendations of the Finance Department based upon a minute and comparative examination of these reports. The results of our own consideration of the subject are briefly as follows:

The authorized budget of the Church's Program for 1933 is, and must be, the budget adopted by the General Convention in Denver. This is a canonical requirement. The total amount of this, the authorized budget, is $4,225,000, and the quotas already distributed are properly based upon this sum.

This budget by no means represents the total need of the Church in her vast work. It does however represent the considered judgment of the General Convention in the fall of 1931, that to do less than this would imperil important enterprises. It does represent a definite responsibility and task committed to the whole Church by its authorized representatives and if in 1932 we have been forced by stern necessity to modify its claims according to the wise instructions of the General Convention that we should pay as we go, nevertheless we have not surrendered our loyal adherence to the authorized budget as our annual goal in this triennium.

We are mindful however of the serious conditions which still confront all of us, in spite of the many and undeniably hopeful signs of economic recovery; and your National Council therefore proposes to continue into 1933 the economies of its operating budget now in force. Moreover it has at this meeting put into effect still further economies in every department of its work. Indeed the total difference between the authorized budget of the General Convention for 1933 ($4,225,000) and the tentative proposed operating budget of the National Council for 1933 (approximately $3,460,000) is more than $760,000.

The economies represented by this difference we have set up in a special account of the authorized budget to be known as THE RESTORATION ACCOUNT. This means that if the expectancies for 1933 exceed the totals received in 1932, this account will in such measure be available for the restoration of such items as the salary cuts of missionaries in the field and of other items involving vital work which have been temporarily suspended.

In 1933 there should be no repetition of the emergency appeal which was made by the National Council in 1932. But how shall this be prevented?

There are but two ways: either

The Every Member Canvass must provide for 1933 a total of expectancies at least equal to the 1932 expectancies plus the Emergency Appeal Fund.

Or, if this be not accomplished, it is clear that even further cuts will be necessary over and beyond the $760,000 referred to above, and the results of such further cuts could be nothing less than disastrous.

Reassuring word comes to us from every part of the Church that "The Promise of Power" is being fulfilled, that parishes and dioceses everywhere are girding themselves for an unprecedented effort, that the laity are rising up in ever increasing numbers to join their clergy in a determined quest to reach every person in the Church with the message of the Program and to secure from every person a fresh allegiance and consecration to the great task of the Church.

Your Council is keenly aware of the sacrifice thus demanded of all our people, especially of those who have already suffered most, but it is equally confident that the men and women, and children of the Church will not fail in this hour to make a supreme effort.

Together we face the stern facts of these times in which we are living but as Christians we face them not with fear but with faith, not in despair but in hope. Together we place our dependence upon God and our confidence in the clergy and laity of this Church knowing that the work of the Church is His work Whom we love and Whom we serve and that we who are signed with the Cross have pledged ourselves unreservedly as fellow-laborers with God.

THE BISHOPS' REPORT

There was appointed at the meeting of the House of Bishops last April a committee consisting of Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, Bishop McDowell of Alabama, and Bishop Davis of Western New York, to confer with the officers of the National Council upon matters connected with the present economic situation. We present their report:

FROM receipts to date on the diocesan expectancies and from reports on the Whitsunday Offering, there is reasonable expectation that the revised schedule for 1932 will be met, with the aid of lapsed balances and undesignated legacies. This means that expectancies must be realized at least 95%, and the Whitsunday Offering bring in at least $300,000. Every effort should be made to avoid the large use of undesignated legacies, and it is advised that the economies hereinafter recommended for 1933 be put into effect so far as possible in 1932 in order to minimize the use of undesignated legacies, a process, we are informed, already under way.

In 1933 the Budget must be balanced without resort to emergency appeals. While neither the Church nor the National Council should labor under the fear complex which today paralyzes business but should exercise a strong faith in the sovereign power of God, yet they should face frankly the implications of the present economic conditions, including the anxiety and sensitiveness which these conditions create in men's minds. There has been possibly a tendency at the Church Missions House to underestimate the effect of widespread financial disaster on the giving power of the Church's most loyal supporters. It is our belief that even if it is true that business has "turned the corner," it will be long before the giving power of the Church reaches its normal level.

In order to face conditions frankly, we advise that in our opinion the time has come when a drastic reduction in expenditures must be made, and further that while the Council must apportion the Budget authorized by General Convention it should also give an alternative quota to the dioceses, based upon a revised estimate of expenditures. If the Church, thus taken into the confidence of the Council, accepts the challenge, as we believe it will, and by extraordinary effort goes over the top which is represented by such a budget, we believe the effect will be renewed hope and courage. We advise that this consideration be made a part of the appeal.

The construction of such a budget is, of course, most difficult. No one can prophesy accurately what the Church's income will be in 1933. It is our opinion, however, that the maximum probable income, exclusive of legacies, is a sum equal to the expectancies of 1932 plus the equivalent of the emergency offering, plus the income from trust funds and the United Thank Offering. The committee advises, first, that the alternative quota, referred to above, and budget expenditures should be based upon this maximum probability. And second, that the budget adopted should not count upon undesignated legacies and lapsed balances. Lapsed balances form the only margin of safety, and undesignated legacies are resources to be used only as a last resort. Thus the expenditures in our revised budget will be based on the following estimate of income:

Expectations from dioceses.....	$2,148,403
Less 5% estimated loss.....	107,450	$2,040,953
Interest on trust funds, U.T.O., etc.		825,000
Equivalent of Emergency Offering.		325,000
Total		$3,190,953

IN SHAPING expenditures to fit these figures this committee has studied the resolution of the last General Convention regarding priorities in any reductions that may be necessary. We believe it to be more mandatory in its nature than was realized by the National Council. The committee also, however, recognizes the changed conditions beyond anything contemplated by General Convention and feels the National Council used its best judgment in meeting difficult circumstances. The committee believes the National Council bound to conform to this resolution of General Convention in every detail possible of fulfilment, such as the abandonment of "The Church at Work," but study of conditions now facing the Church makes it evident that even if all departments save those of Domestic and Foreign Missions were completely eradicated, the remainder of the Budget adopted by General Convention in 1931 would still not be balanced, and that, therefore, the appropriations for the Departments of Missions must also suffer curtailment, including appropriations for aided dioceses, if our estimate of income is at all accurate.

In making up this revised schedule, the committee has in Budget B followed the plan in general of reducing salaries, number of employees, etc., along a horizontal line. This has been done with all possible regard to the policy ordered by General Convention. We advise that if the Church balances this reduced budget for 1933, the askings for 1934 be increased only within reason and the Church be informed as to what the additional askings will be used for. We advise that one of the first appropriations to be restored to its former figure be that for the salaries of missionaries in the field.

Editor's Note: There then follows, somewhat in detail, a recommended Budget for 1933, with the present operating Budget in parallel columns in order that it may be seen where cuts have been recommended. There are also comments. However because of our limited space we here present merely the Budget in Summary, together with the comments on departments made by the Bishops.

	A. The Present 1932 Operating Budget	B. The Recommendations of the Bishops for 1933
Domestic Missions	$ 918,825	$ 751,600
Foreign Missions	1,807,304	1,726,000

Contingent Fund	36,986	36,000
	$3,648,346	$3,211,869

Comment of the Report on Department of Domestic Missions:

A number of aided dioceses receive small amounts, which if possible should be relinquished. It would seem possible for instance for California to support its own Chinese and Japanese work. Others might relinquish their U.T.O. workers as Alabama and Virginia have already done. Aided dioceses sometimes have two bishops, or a state has been divided into two or more jurisdictions, resulting in one or more weak dioceses requiring aid. The present survey of Bishop Creighton shows a large amount of apparently static work; the present financial condition of the Church requires a drastic readjustment in both of these conditions. The province receiving aid for Deaf-Mute work should provide this out of its own resources. Many of the above remarks apply also to the Continental Missionary Districts. Several of these have notably large appropriations out of proportion to the rest.

Comment of the Report on Department of Foreign Missions:

Vacancies should not be filled except where absolutely necessary. If possible, salaries below $700 should be met in full, other salaries reduced 10%. Appropriations for institutions should be held to a minimum, and local support encouraged. Static work must be reduced. Salaries of officers are reduced 20% from the original appropriation, staff 10%. Travel is reduced.

Comment of the Report on Department of Religious Education:

This means a reduction in the number of officers and staff and a reduction in salaries of 20% for officers and 10% for staff. The regrettable reduction in college work means a transfer to diocesan and provincial responsibility. The N.A.L.A. and commissions can receive no appropriations.

Comment of the Report on Department of Christian Social Service:

The reduction is in accordance with a memorandum submitted by the executive secretary.

Comment of the Report on Field Department:

It is recommended that vacancies be not filled. Salary reductions, 20% for officers, 10% for staff. It seems vitally important that the work of this Department should in no way be crippled at this time. Since the large number of publications issuing from the Missions House is a cause of irritation, and also since the complaint is made that it is difficult to get practical advice or information from some departments, we suggest that the field department and that of religious education collaborate on a year's course of lessons in the program of the Church, of a character to be used in congregations on occasions of public worship, and that other publications and printing be reduced to a necessary minimum.

Comment of the Report on Interdepartmental Expense:

Dr. Franklin suggests savings in almost every item. If Dr. Suter's suggestion about the Lenten Offering is adopted there will be considerable saving in the item for boxes. We suggest further that printing can be very much reduced; that parishes or dioceses be asked to pay for the Lenten boxes; and that General Convention expenses should be further reduced, both in attendance of the organization of the National Council and in the expenses of commissions.

Comment of the Report on the American Church Institute:

It is recommended that the Institute lay by for the time being its building program, and bend its efforts towards raising funds for the salaries of officers and teachers.

Then the report continues:

The committee has thus recommended severe economies but they were gratified to learn that a process of reduction in numbers of employees and in expense had already been initiated and is progressing as rapidly as humane consideration will permit. The subject of "static work" is under thorough and efficient investigation by the National Council, and a Commission of General Convention is considering the matter of proportionate allotments to missionary districts and to aided dioceses. There can be no doubt that in both of these fields there should be drastic changes. We urge further that the Council consider at once possible steps to encourage progress towards self-support on the part of missionary districts. It would seem that the very fact that allowance to some of these and to some aided dioceses remain unchanged over a period of years indicates lack of close supervision or of fixed policy.

We have checked figures as to overhead cost, given in the report of the bishop's committee of the second province, with the treasurer. We find that the committee of bishops in their computation have used only that portion of the income of 1930 which was derived from quota payments, whereas the total income was much larger, namely, $3,890,779. Also, the treasurer's computation of expenditures at the Church Missions House, which excludes certain salaries and expenses that belong to the field, is $631,620 as against $900,307, the figure used in the computation of the bishops. The percentage of expense is not 31.2%, as suggested in the statement, but 16.2%.

The statement of the bishops of the second province also inquires as to the "drastic cuts" which, it was announced, were made in 1932. It is a fact, apparently, that the Budget of February, 1932, totals $3,648,346, only $47,000 less than the total expenditures of 1931. The explanation is, of course, that the "drastic cuts" were of the Budget and not of work actually in operation. The committee is of the opinion that greater care should be exercised in distinguishing between budget cuts and cuts in existing work in making announcements, since such confusion ultimately weakens the force of an appeal.

WE FEEL that our committee, representing, as it does, but one House in General Convention, is not properly constituted to advise the National Council in many of the questions raised by the Statement of the Bishops of the Second Province, which are not already committed to committees and commissions for consideration. But, believing that these questions are being asked by many in the Church, especially in view of the present stringency, we feel that they should be answered either by a committee of the National Council, to be appointed now, or by General Convention. Every step possible should be taken to establish and deepen confidence in the relations of the National Council and the Church, and to this end, friendly and loyal criticism on the part of leaders in the Church should be welcomed in the spirit in which it is given.

We urge, meanwhile, that the forces of the Church, the National Council, especially the field department, the bishops, clergy, diocesan secretaries and parish workers put forth every effort so to enlarge the field of givers as to build up not in one campaign, but by a steady process of education, a sense of stewardship and a deeper personal religion, that the last man, woman and child shall feel the touch of an invigorating and outpouring power. To this great purpose, the democratizing of the offerings of the Church, the gathering of the whole people in devotion and loyalty, by the every member canvass, the duplex envelope and above all the personal touch of Christian enthusiasm, the effort of every diocese, parish and mission station should be directed.

If, however, the hope of the Church is unhappily not realized in the canvass of 1932, the committee is prepared to submit in detail, if requested, suggestions for further reductions in expenditures, in accordance with certain principles. Whereas the cuts suggested in Budget "B" in general follow a horizontal line, beginning with salaries, our further suggestions deal with a narrowing of the scope of work, beginning, as directed by General Convention, with the departments which function at the Church Missions House. The committee feels that further economies must be sought in a stringent limitation of activities, resulting also in a large reduction of overhead expense. If it shall appear that the National Council must operate on a smaller budget for some time to come, this process of selection should be continued. We advise further that when conditions improve, activities be resumed only with the utmost care and deliberation in order that those proved and acknowledged most useful be given priority. To illustrate the application of these principles we shall advise, for example, that the activities of the department of religious education be confined to the formation of curricula and lesson courses with child study, and to the giving of practical advice by correspondence to diocese and parishes, and that this work be carried on by two secretaries and three staff members; that the department of Christian social service carry on through one Secretary the annual conference of Church social workers, promote diocesan schools, such as that at Cincinnati, and further the teaching of the social Gospel in our seminaries; that the activities of the publicity department be limited to such as seem most important but can be handled by a much smaller organization. Such limitation of activities in these departments, while not sufficient in themselves to balance a further reduced income without further cuts in the Department of Missions, will, nevertheless, result also in large savings in such schedules as that of interdepartmental expense and general administration, as well as in such items as that of printing and supplies.

In conclusion, we desire to express our deep appreciation of the unfailing, friendly and whole-hearted cooperation we have received from the officers of the National Council in our study and in conference.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE,
WILLIAM McDOWELL,
CAMERON DAVIS.

A Letter

This report has been of invaluable assistance to the National Council in preparing the formulation of its fiscal policy for the year 1933. In the budget for 1933 as thus far tentatively adopted, the economies effected earlier this year are continued and further reductions are made. Appropriations taken out of the operating budget have been placed in a Restoration

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Account so that if sufficient funds are made available through pledges of the dioceses, there may be reinstatement from this account of items which have been eliminated or reduced. For the most part the conclusions of the National Council and the recommendations of the committee of the House of Bishops are in substantial agreement. Certain radical changes advised by the committee have not yet been made. The Council does not feel justified in reducing to a minimum the support of college pastors as recommended by the committee, this work having been given a place of precedence in the appropriations advised by the General Convention. Neither the dioceses nor parishes concerned are able at this time to assume a larger share in the cost than already agreed upon. Additional reductions in appropriations for domestic and foreign missions adopted in February 1932, are tentatively continued and indeed increased for 1933. The Council has postponed consideration of the more drastic reductions in domestic and foreign mission fields which the committee suggests. This matter will be the special order of business for the December meeting of the Council. The proposal to decrease by 20% instead of 10% the salaries of officers of the Council was considered inadvisable at this time.

The decision of the Council as to other questions raised by the committee is covered in a statement to the Church, published in the last issue of the Church weeklies.

Faithfully yours,
JAMES DE WOLF PERRY, President.
LEWIS B. FRANKLIN, Treasurer.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

The Virgin Birth

By
BISHOP JOHNSON

BEFORE discussing why I believe in the Virgin Birth of our Lord, I wish to clear up a common misunderstanding which is to the effect that when a man says he believes in a statement, he neither says that he knows it nor that he can prove it. As a matter of fact I presume that I believed in the Virgin Birth because it was a part of the Creed and I believed in the promise of our Lord that His Holy Spirit would guide the Church into all truth in its official utterances where there was unanimity of witness.

In other words, my conception of the Holy Catholic Church is that it is as St. Paul says, "the Body of Christ" which is guided and directed by a living Christ enthroned on high.

To me the Creed as a whole, springing out of the simplicity of the early Church before it was involved in intellectual controversies, is the best testimony there is as to the nature of the original faith of the Church.

It represents to me the form of sound words which I accept as a whole rather than piecemeal. Then I am afraid that I lack any great veneration for the efforts of science to explain the origins of life on this terrestrial ball. I agree with Professor Osborn that we could scrap all the theories of origins put forth by scientific minds without losing anything of any value. And this in spite of the fact that I am a believer in evolution as the method of creation but I know no theory of evolution which gives my adequate origin for that which is to be evoluted. The argument that because all the Adams which we know of were born in wedlock is no proof that either the first or the second Adam was born that way.

I know that it is the old conundrum of the hen and the egg, and which came from which, but I still can conceive of a primeval egg which was not laid by a hen, or if you please, a primeval hen which did not come from an egg, but I am not profound enough to think of neither. Consequently I have no mental opposition to any act or method of creation which the Almighty in His wisdom may have seen fit to adopt. In short, I don't believe anybody knows much of anything about how life originated on a cooling, red hot ball.

NOW there are certain things that cause me to believe in the Virgin Birth. I can see no reason why the evangelists should have put it into the Gospels if they had not honestly believed it. I agree that it is essentially a woman's story and that it was not something that either Joseph or Mary would have talked about in a general way. They had sense enough to know that if anybody believed that the Virgin Mary had been indiscreet they would not have been persuaded by any such defense. I would say that St. Matthew believed it because he had learned it from Joseph; that St. John believed in it because our Lord had placed the Virgin Mary in his care and he enjoyed her confidence, and that St. Luke believed in it because he was a physician personally acquainted with the chief women of the Gospel narrative and that he introduced his Gospel with that which he felt to be good news and to be important. St. Paul refers to it very slightly because it did not pertain to his correspondence and because it had no vital relation to his doctrinal views.

I believe that the early Christians all believed in it and that they did so because it had a vital bearing upon their worship. The early Christians worshipped Jesus Christ as the Son of God. They didn't worship St. John or St. Paul, but they did worship Jesus Christ.

They lived among pagans who worshipped idols and emperors, and all sorts of creatures. Surely, they would ask themselves whether in worshipping Christ they were also worshipping a creature, and they would meet that difficulty by saying, No! We worship one who was born not of the will of the flesh or of the will of man, but of the will of God.

He was a second Adam in the sense that His birth did not follow the ordinary law of birth. In addition to this the Virgin Birth fits into the idea of the Word made Flesh more than would a natural birth. In short, this article of the Creed satisfies a need in the life of the Church.

I know that this line of talk is very objectionable to many liberal friends who do not hesitate to limit the Almighty in His powers of creation. All I can say is that the attitude is mental. I find myself less impressed with their ability to dictate to the Almighty than I am with the power of the Almighty to disregard His ordinary methods of generation. I presume after all it is a question of the authority to which you attach the greatest credibility.

Now if you ask me whether you must believe in the Virgin Birth to be a communicant of the Church, I doubt whether this clause was put into the Creed to keep such skeptics out, but rather perhaps to keep some of us in. I am free to confess that today if someone could prove to me that Jesus was the natural son of Joseph I would at once cease to worship Him. That may be my limitation but at once He would become a creature like the rest of us and that is one thing that I believe Jesus Christ is not. He is not like other men and so I am thankful that the Church has had consideration for my limitations by giving me a reason why I can still believe Christ is man and also worship Him. If my liberal friends do not need this crutch, I see no reason why they should not act up to their conviction, without haggling over such a matter of belief which is essential to me.

AND so to sum up the matter: Christ had a gospel which He entrusted to His Apostles who embodied it in a liturgy, in a Church and in a Creed. I accept that which is general and not local in the testimony of the early Church. I do not mean that I slavishly accept everything that the early Church set forth unless it has endured the test of time. That which has been set forth unanimously and for all time is the foundation of authority for me.

The Virgin Birth is a part of this universal testimony. Moreover, it serves a very vital purpose for me. Now when I have said that I do not care to cram it down any one else's throat any more than I care to have them cram their objections down mine. It is there as the witness of the Church. I object to having it taken out as the act of a skeptical group of individuals. If they want to have mental reservations about it, that's their business, but on the other hand I can't see why a real liberal has to be a fundamentalist and say that unless he can accept every word in the Creed he will not accept any of it. Let him omit the clause if he cannot believe it, but do not let him remove the ancient landmark because all the landmarks would soon disappear as it is much easier to reject than it is to accept the mysteries of the faith.

The moment that you begin to suggest amendments to the constitution you change it from a foundation to a collection of philosophical bric-a-brac. There are plenty of theological museums without adding to their number. There is only one institution which has survived the attacks of the ages. It includes the historic Church, the historic creeds and the historic liturgies. When you have rebuilt it you will have a rococo monstrosity in place of a colonial mansion, and you have destroyed the atmosphere in order to satisfy the whims of a locality.

George Parkin Atwater

GEORGE PARKIN ATWATER was a big man; one of the biggest this Church of ours ever had. His life was the Church, and the Church in no narrow parochial sense, as grand a job as he did do in his Akron and Brooklyn parishes. To him it was a divine institution, founded by Christ to do God's work here upon earth; an institution that was to be here for a very long time. With this in mind George Atwater approached the problems he saw ahead and had the courage to tackle them, even when more timid souls cautioned him to walk softly. He had great ability in analyzing situations and working out solutions. What's more once he had what he considered to be the solution he stayed with it until he put it over. He did that in Akron, where he created one of the strongest parishes in the middle west out of a handful of people and a vacant lot. Believing that we were weak in the field of religious education he worked out his own system and established it where given the opportunity. Convinced that many parishes, doing splendid work, need to prepare for rainy days ahead, he worked out his A-A Method of Endowments, which has worked successfully wherever tried. Once persuaded that an inexpensive Church weekly, free from controversies over Churchmanship, was a desirable thing for the Church he went to work as an editor and week in and week out, over a period of seventeen years, established himself as one of the real teachers of the Church. Having convictions on the conduct of National Church affairs he stated his case, even though he was well aware that taunts of disloyalty (much abused word) would be hurled at him. He is gone now. And in his passing the whole Church suffers. We have lost a statsman of conviction and courage. His funeral was held in Grace Church, Brooklyn. With the chancel filled with flowers, the church jammed with friends, and as many clergy in procession as one sees at the convention of a large diocese, his earthly life was brought to a close. It was a triumphant occasion. May the rest of us be half as deserving of tribute when we reach the end of our days.

THE CHAIN OF ALTARS

ALL human history centers around the altar. Destiny was shaped by national ideals, represented by the divinities worshipped at national altars. The Bible centers around a chain of altars stretching from the gates of Eden to the throne of God in the vision of the Heavenly City. This chain is unbroken, although the sacrifices offered and the idea of God represented changed greatly from age to age.

The Line of Altars—In Genesis 3:21: "The Lord God made for the man and his wife coats of skins, and clothed them." This does not mean that the Lord God turned dressmaker, but that animals offered in sacrifice to God provided the first clothing. Cain and Abel offered sacrifice; Noah, on leaving the Ark, built an altar and offered sacrifice; wherever Abraham went, he builded altars. So did Isaac; so did Jacob, Moses and Joshua. The book of Leviticus, in its first chapter alone, mentions the word "altar" 12 times. The Temple of Solomon was built to enshrine the altar. Christ uses the word frequently; (Matthew 23:19; Matthew 6:23). The Epistle to the Hebrews centers around the interpretation of the altar and its sacrifice. In the Revelation, the Altar has become the Throne of God.

The Changing Sacrifice—The Man and the Woman at the gates of Eden offered animals in sacrifice. Cain and Abel came to offer the first fruits of their toil. Cain, a farmer, offered vegetables; Abel, a shepherd, offered lambs. God "had respect to Abel's offering," which means that Abel obtained his desires, and grew prosperous. Cain grew envious of his brother's prosperity, and killed him—a human sacrifice to greed. This story pictures the origin of war, always the fruit of covetousness. "Am I my brother's keeper?" is always the callous response of the strong to the suffering of the weak. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground," is the terrible response of God the avenger. Much of the Bible records the struggle of mankind to answer the cry for justice. At first, wholesale vengeance; then "life for life"; then the offering of a sacrifice for atonement; then the divine plan of changing the heart of the slayer.

Cain was not killed, because he repented; "my punishment is greater than can be forgiven" his words read. But the "brand of Cain," the mark of a guilty conscience, was put upon him.

Cain Builds a City—To the shepherd people, murder and all iniquity abounded in the city; every evil doer fled for refuge to the cities, where he might defy pursuit. All the early stories of the Bible reflect abhorrence of cities—like the stories of Sodom and Gomorrha—until Jerusalem became the capital of the Chosen Nation. Then the idea of cleansing and consecrating the City to God by placing the altar there changed their views, until at last Heaven itself was pictured as a City.

In Genesis 11 to verse 10, the story of Babel answers the problem, "Why do not we all talk the same language?" Shepherds from the plains were bewildered by the clamor of the great market cities of Babylon, where traders from many lands thronged, speaking different tongues. In these cities the most conspicuous figures were the ziggurats, or tower temples, reaching up so high that sometimes clouds touched their tops, as they do the skyscrapers of New York and Chicago. There was a natural connection in their minds between these towers and the confusion of tongues.

They reasoned that God, jealous of mankind, had adopted this method of blocking progress. Not until the descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost (Acts 2) did the realization dawn that God, so far from being jealous of man's progress, calls all nations to understand one another. He has gathered them all into one universal Fellowship speaking the common language of the altar which bears a cross.

PERSONAL APPLICATION

Bringing of the firstfruits in sacrifice is a natural human impulse, as a child joyously brings home to mother the first work done at school. Among the Hebrews, the firstborn was especially sacred. Firstfruits of every crop must be offered to God. Christ is the "firstborn among many brethren" and the believers themselves are a "kind of firstfruits" which offer themselves to God, says St. James.

The chain of altars down through the ages has born many varying sacrifices, until gradually we came to understand God's goal. Before our altars now we say "Here we offer and present to Thee, O Lord, our selves, our souls and bodies" in union with the sacrifice of Christ, to help God bring about the goal of creation, the Holy City, composed of all races and tongues gathered into a common civilization in which no temple is needed, because Humility itself shall be the temple of the indwelling God.

Mark these references.
Noah's sacrifice: Genesis 8:20.
Abraham's altars: Genesis 12:7; 13:4; 26:25; 33:20.
Moses' altar: Exodus 17:15.
Elijah's altar: I Kings 18:30.
Christian altar: Hebrews 13:10.

MEMORY WORK

Our memory lesson this time is the Greater Prophets. Write them in this way:

Before	Fall of Jerusalem	After
Isaiah	LAMENTATIONS	Ezekiel
Jeremiah		Daniel

The first two books predict the Fall of Jerusalem before it happened. Both of them end in "Iah", one of the names of God.

The middle book, Lamentations, is a long poem of mourning at the time of the Fall of Jerusalem.

The last two were written after the Fall of Jerusalem, and predict the future triumph of the nation. They both end in "El", another one of the names of God.

Thus the Greater Prophets are a unity around the Fall of Jerusalem, which is their main topic.

THREE WORTHWHILE BOOKS WARRANT YOUR ATTENTION

Reviewed by G. M. DAY

Dr. Samuel McComb has made a contribution to our religious life of immeasurable worth in giving us an English translation of Freidrich Heiler's Das Gebet in a volume called Prayer published by the Oxford Press ($3). The sub-title of the book, which well describes it, is "A Study in the History and Psychology of Religion." The original work of Heiler was so long that it was necessary to omit in translation certain sections of secondary importance, but in the three hundred and seventy-five pages there is such a wealth of material that the omissions will not be missed.

The book gives a history of prayer in all its manifold forms from the dawn of consciousness in man until the present day with innumerable illustrations throughout. Primitive prayer, prayer in Greek civilization, ritual prayer, mystical prayer, prophetic prayer, the prayer life of great souls and prayer in public worship are all the subjects of at least one chapter. In addition there is a chapter on the ideal and critique of prayer in philosophical thought and a concluding chapter on the essence of prayer.

Few people would find it anything but overwhelming to read the book from cover to cover, but I do not believe there is a more comprehensive history of the prayer life of man in one volume in the English language. While the book lacks a good index, the table of contents is so well tabulated that it may be readily used as a reference book and as such I imagine that it will find its way on the shelves of most Rectors' studies in the future. It is not a book like Concerning Prayer edited by Canon Streeter in 1916 which deals with such questions as what kind of petitionary prayer may a Christian feel justified in using or what are the grounds for the belief in the efficacy of intercessory prayer? But it rather gives a history of the types of petition and intercession which have been addressed to God by various types of people as different as the savage and the philosopher. So extensive is the material in it that I cannot recommend it too highly as a fascinating reference book on the subject. The Rebel Prophet (Harpers $2) is a study of Jeremiah by Dr. T. Crouther Gordon in the form of a series of lectures delivered a year ago in Trinity College, Glascow. This is no dry-as-dust study of a much studied old Testament prophet but is a charming series of lectures in which the personality of the ancient prophet is made extraordinarily vivid. Approaching the prophetic personality from the psychological standpoint, Dr. Gordon brings to his interpretation of him a wide knowledge of history which enables him by analogy and comparison to reconstruct the ancient situations so that they seem almost modern.

The author is particularly anxious to dispel the erroneous but prevalent idea that Jeremiah was hopelessly pessimistic and in striking contrast shows that Jeremiah was the only true optimist of his day for after facing squarely the ugliest facts he was able to see strong ground for hope. The most significant contribution of the volume is the chapter in which Dr. Gordon shows why he is convinced that Jeremiah was "the First of the Mystics." In a chapter which is really a treatise on the whole subject of mysticism Dr. Gordon tests the prophet's mysticism by William James's four standards of ineffability, knowledge, ecstasy and passivity and I believe successfully proves that the "finest expression of mysticism in the Old Testament came from the mouth of Jeremiah." The author's style is extremely lucid and the book affords most enjoyable reading.

In the Presence is a small book of less than a hundred pages designed to aid the individual in his preparation for the Holy Communion. Its authors are two Englishmen, K. F. Jones and R. M. Prichard and the American edition contains an introduction by The Rev. John W. Suter, Jr. (Macmillan $1.25). Simplicity, brevity and naturalness of expression are three notable positive merits of the book. It also lacks the excessive piety of many preparation manuals. It would be more useful, however, if it could be published with a paper cover at half the present price, for while it has merit it does not appeal to me as worth the present price.

BISHOP CREIGHTON POSTPONES TRIP TO MEXICO

Bishop Creighton, bishop of Mexico and executive secretary of the department of domestic missions, has deferred his semi-annual trip to Mexico, since it was deemed unwise to extend government facilities for entry to an ecclesiastic of Bishop Creighton's rank at this time. Bishop Creighton states that he deems the action of the government to be in the interest of a calm and judicial handling of the religious situation, and that he entirely concurs in a wise decision.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

Bishop Manning has entered the Battle of Harlam and shares the hero's toga with the rector of All Souls', the Rev. Rollin Dodd, who has refused to make of his parish church a Jim Crow affair. The story up until the entrance of Bishop Manning into the fracas has already been related here. Seven of the twelve vestrymen did not want to have Negroes allowed at the services. They told the rector so. He told them that he was there to minister to the community and that there was no place for racial discrimination in the Church of Christ. The battle raged. The majority of the vestry first cut off the rector's salary. That failed to do the trick so they closed the church and padlocked the doors, announcing to the world that it was for the purpose of making repairs. One Sunday the service had to be held in a hired hall. But last Sunday Bishop Manning marched up to the door of the church. He couldn't get in. Mr. Dodd asked him if the door should be forced. The reply came in a loud voice, "Certainly." So the door was forced, in spite of threats of the vestry that they would call for the arrest of anyone who forced their way in. The service was held, with Bishop Manning preaching the sermon and literally reading the law to the vestrymen. Said he:

"Those members of the vestry who oppose the rector have, I am sorry to say, taken action which is quite unwarranted and indefensible. They have proceeded to obstruct the work of the rector, they have demanded his resignation—a demand, of course, to which he pays no attention—and without making any provision for religious services have summarily closed the church for repairs, apparently with the purpose of preventing the rector from continuing his policy of admitting colored people to the services. This action is not only uncanonical and illegal, it is contrary to the central principles of our religion." In support of this statement he read the canons of the Church.

Now the vestry, or rather that part of it that wants to throw Mr. Dodd out, say that they never wanted to discriminate against Negroes; that the trouble really is over high and low churchmanship — a statement which causes broad smiles. We have previously said "More power to Mr. Dodd." Now we add a "More power and length of days" for Bishop Manning who backs him up in such grand style.

In Which Mr. Cutler Does a Bit of Hopping

The rector of St. John's, Charlestown, Massachusetts, the Rev. Wolcott Cutler, is a real crusader of determination and social vision. Among his numerous passions is a strong conviction that the Eighteenth Amendment should remain in the constitution and that it should be enforced. So strongly does he feel this that he takes pen in hand whenever he finds anyone expressing himself on the other side of the question. Now he writes me a charming letter to hop on me for so much as announcing in these columns that Mr. Harper Sibley, member of the National Council and prominent Churchman generally, has taken himself out of the ranks of the drys and is now laboring with those who want their beer. I pass the letter on to you: "In THE WITNESS for October 20th you quote (for what it is worth I suppose) Mr. Harper Sibley's reasons for favoring repeal of the 18th amendment. Prominent if not pre-eminent among Mr. Sibley's reasons for opposing federal prohibition is the statement that 'The men in the community whom I look up to with the greatest respect and admiration buy liquor from bootleggers without hesitation.' Without arguing for or against the retention of the 18th amendment I would like to remark that Mr Sibley's reasoning takes a thorough unchristian position, as you yourself should be the first to recognize. How many of these men whom Mr. Sibley looks up to with the greatest respect are enlightened enough to support any minority position whatever? How many of them are perfectly content to see (or not to notice) Mooney and Billings languishing indefinitely in a California goal? How many of them support the American Civil Liberties Union, for which you appeal in this same issue, by gifts or word or deed? How many of them will risk a vote for Norman Thomas? How many of them have said a word against Samuel Insull's gift of stock at half price to influential friends? How many of them protested against the Fordney-McComber tariff and American conduct in Haiti? When Christians look to the 'finest people in the community' to settle matters of private judgement or Christian conscience for them, you and I might just as well gird our loins with a leathern girdle and follow John the Baptist into the wilderness. There are many noble and consecrated people living in the community where I work, but in eight years I cannot recall discovering two of them who felt as we did about Sacco and Vanzetti, or who agree with you and me on any other vital economic or political or social injustice. Shall we therefore on Christian grounds accommodate our convictions to the beliefs of that 'nine out of ten' of our friends who 'serve cocktails freely on all occasions without the slightest moral compunction'? I for one prefer to do my own thinking and to live and preach and agitate accordingly."

BISHOP MANNING
Wants No Jim Crow Churches

All of which is not only telling me, but also Mr. Sibley and his distinguished friends.

Bishop Stires Wants More Religion in Colleges

Preaching in St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University, Bishop Stires of Long Island, deplored the lack of religion in colleges and universities.

Bishop Stires declared that the churches as well as the educational system were to blame for existing conditions. "Everything has been mechanized and materialized," he said, and the "great machine that we have built is ready to crush the spirit of the living creature, caught in its own machine."

The watchwords of education are success and money—"that means always material success," he continued. The universities and schools prepare "boys and girls to be money-makers," the bishop asserted. "We must put the chief emphasis on making men and not making money. I believe that the present educational system is largely responsible for the lack of vital religion in the world. Our present system is largely irreligious.

"I am not advocating teaching religion in schools or turning our colleges and universities into seminaries, but I do believe that anyone who teaches the younger generation should believe in God. While it is true that teachers must possess knowledge, I am suggesting that they add to their knowledge a knowledge of God."

church organization of any kind within a radius of forty-five miles. She gathered a little band of friends together for religious services, which were held first in the schoolhouse and later in the town hall, formerly a saloon. Archdeacon Bywater offered to come for an occasional service. $156.00 was raised locally as a nucleus for a Church building, $100.00 of this sum being donated by two religiously inclined ranchers who made the remark, "We might as well give this money for Mrs. Merten's Church, for she is going to build it if she has to take in washing to raise the money. Friends of Mrs. Merten at Grace Church, Galena, Illinois, sent contributions through the years to add to this nucleus, and from St. Paul's, Clay Center, Kansas, Mrs. Merten's second church home, came donations of money and church furnishings. All these years Mrs. Merten was busily engaged with her needlework, the proceeds of which she gave to this cherished cause. In October, 1907, her dream was realized when the first service was held in Ascension Mission! But, alas, the consummation of her efforts was destroyed by fire in February, 1908. However, undaunted, Mrs. Merten was again the inspiration for renewed efforts, and another church, an improvement on the former one, was erected. Today the register records fifty baptisms and thirty-five confirmations, a beautiful testimony of her untiring efforts. Three years ago St. Barnabas' parish, Denver, took Ascension Mission, Byers, under its wing. The rector, the Rev. Charles H. Brady, drives the forty-five miles for an afternoon service on the second Sunday of each month, often staying over (at the Mertens') for a 6:30 Communion Service the next morning. One family drives in from a ranch five miles away to attend that service. In October the men of the mission gave a week's time to paint the church and put on a new roof, the ladies started a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, and a Church school was organized. Mrs. Merten is very happy to see the hopes of years being fulfilled and to know that her pioneer labors for the church at Byers were not in vain.

Parish Carried on During Depression

Over in Pittsburgh there is Emmanuel Church, presided over by the Rev. A. W. S. Garden. It was formerly a parish of aristocrats and plutocrats but the population shifted so that today it is in one of the very poorest parts of the city. Recently Mr. Garden got the Unemployed Relief Fund of the city to supply the wages of the unemployed of his parish whom he put to work creating a basement parish hall. Wages ran out, but the skilled men stuck to the job without cash and completed a parish hall that would cost about $15,000. Thus the church benefits by a fine hall, the men benefit by having work and everyone is happy, including the rector, though he himself has not been paid his salary since last April. Mr. Garden is now the chairman of a community organization which is handling relief for the city relief organization and the Red Cross. Bishop Cook of Delaware was the guest of Mr. Garden during the recent meeting of the synod in Pittsburgh and he writes: "Altogether it strikes me as one of the most outstanding pieces of social service work in the face of present conditions which I have come across; done by a parish so poor that it has not been able to pay it's rector's salary."

Bishop Brown asked that his salary be reduced ten per cent; a request that was granted. It was also voted to reduce the salaries of diocesan missionaries. The expenses of the diocesan office were reduced, and the allowance to the diocesan paper was cut so that the size of the already small paper will have to be reduced. They also voted to reduce all quotas placed on parishes by ten per cent. You will recall that a reduction in quotas was one of the recommendations of the Bishops' Committee in its report to the National Council, but it was not acted upon favorably at the October meeting of the Council. And here along comes a diocese and reduces the quotas on their own say-so. They also voted to make still further cuts in diocesan expenses the first of next July if it is clear at that time that the budget for 1933 cannot otherwise be balanced.

New Windows Placed In Grace Church, New York

James H. Hogan, the well-known artist, has designed three stained glass windows which have been placed in the western apse of the Chantry of Grace Church, New York City. The windows, which were executed by James Powell and Sons (Whitefriars) of London, represent the Annunciation, the Nativity, and the Presentation. Writing in the parish service sheet, the Rector of Grace Church, Dr. Bowie declares: "They are unsurpassed by any glass in the Grace Church buildings, for not only are the particular colors singularly pure and rich, but the combination of colors gives that jewel-like quality which one associates with the famous glass of the mediaeval cathedrals."

Parish Tells You Movies to Attend

One of the services performed by the clergy of Grace Church, Providence, is to list each week in the vestibule the titles of the movies that are fit to see—if any. The other day in opening the box containing requests for prayers, this was found: "Pray for yourself, as long as you have notices in the vestibule advertising the movies". The following week this reply appeared in the parish paper: "The clergy are readily agreed that they need to pray for themselves, for many reasons other than that expressed, but still are of the conviction that the way to improve the movies is to show our appreciation of the good movies by supporting them, and our disgust at the bad ones by not attending them. Box office receipts are a very sensitive point. So we are continuing to post a list of the better movies in town each week."

Fine Job Being Done By Negro Worker

A fine bit of work is being done at St. Philip's, Hawkinsville, Georgia, by Miss Ada Speight, in the Negro community of the city. She only started at it in July but already has built up a considerable communicant list and an even larger Sunday school. A lot of the credit for the growth also goes to Dr. R. Archie Tracy, a Negro physician, who has been serving as layreader and as boss of the school. Indeed there has been so much activity here that recently a house was obtained and converted into a community house. There is a great deal of work done along social service lines as well as in religious education.

The Love of God Does it Dwell in You?

By Endowing BIBLE DISTRIBUTION You can also Receive a LIFE INCOME of 4% to 9%.

IN THE holiest sense, these are times that try men's souls. "Our brothers have need"; they are hungry, physically and spiritually. Ours is the blessed call to give into their hands the solace and the comfort of the Bread of Life—God's Holy Bible.

Earnest Christians have found the way to answer this call, to manifest that "the love of God doth dwell in them"—and at the same time to apportion some of their share of "this world's goods" so that it returns them an assured income for life.

Safeguarding the ANNUITY BONDS of the New York Bible Society is the firm foundation of 122 years of Christian service. These Bonds pay from 4% to 9% a year (see chart). Every six months, without fail, you receive your income check.

These Bonds Yield (for example)
Your Age	Income

tion, Atlanta, Ga., the Rev. G. W. Gasque persuaded the young people's organization to sell the paper each week. The first Sunday that the bundle arrived it was raining, with a smaller congregation as a result, yet the president of the young people informs us that they sold all their copies and could have sold more. Dr. Gasque announced the undertaking from the chancel during his announcements, called attention to a number of articles, especially Bishop Johnson's, and informed his congregation that all Church people should read a weekly regularly if they wanted really to know what was going on in the Church. The other boost comes from Brother Hance, the superior of St. Barnabas' Home in Gibsonia, Penna. A subscription was recently entered for the Home by a friend in Washington. So he writes the donor: "We are more than happy to have THE WITNESS. It is a real up and coming paper, with some very interesting writers. The Brothers are very happy indeed to have it." Suggestions: order a bundle yourself and call the attention of your people to the fact that it is for sale after the service. Second, donations to THE WITNESS Fund make it possible for us to send the paper regularly to Church institutions, public libraries and individuals who otherwise would be without it. Excuse the puff please, but with the editors of the other weeklies I believe we are carrying on a truly missionary work, and one that of course needs your support.

THE VITAL THING

by

BISHOP FISKE

THE vital thing in the coming every member canvass is to show families or individuals struggling with difficult problems that we care; that their fellowship is appreciated; that they can easily add to the strength of the parish by their regularity in worship. Some are staying away because they cannot contribute. Tell them we want them; not merely theirs; although in plain fact, of course, regular attendance will usually mean contributions from more people. Our weakness is not so much in the lack of giving as in the failure of coming.

ON TAILS WAGGING DOGS

By

JOHN R. CROSBY

Rector, Saint Luke's Parish, Seaford, Delaware

I HAVE just been informed by the proprietor of a kennel and dog breeding establishment that the reason that the tails of fox terriers and certain other breeds are lopped in early puppyhood is because long tails, though doubtless ornamental, prevent them turning rapidly and seriously hamper their steering ability. To use the words of the kennelman, "No dog is any use that lets its tail wag it." While riding home I reflected that my friend has stumbled upon a profound philosophical truth and the principle might well be applied to other organizations besides kennels.

Directly any organization begins to become so unwieldy or powerful that it begins to dominate the body from which it sprang, the time has come to consider very seriously whether the exuberant growth should be pruned, cut away altogether, or whether the parent organism should give way entirely to the younger growth. To carry the biological parable further it would be well to make sure that the bodies concerned are genuine outgrowths from the parent stock, or parasitic organisms sucking the lifeblood from the mother tree.

Can it be possible that in certain instances, our Church—or quasi-Church—organizations, admirable and efficient as many of them are, may be developing a marked tendency to attempt to dominate the policy of the Church, whether national, diocesan or parochial, and to forget in some cases that they are the handmaids of that Church, whose founder stated very clearly that a disciple is not above his Master.

From the very beginning of the Church's corporate life, societies of men and women have existed within its borders having for their object the deepening of the spiritual life, and the expression of that life in terms of acts of charity, devotion or mercy. The great guilds of the Middle Ages, the confraternities, the tertiary branches of the great religious orders were and are the most powerful influences in promoting the spiritual life of the common people, and in the corporate practice of the Christian virtues. We all know how St. Paul speaks of "Phebe our sister" and of Priscilla and Aquila, his "helpers in Jesus Christ" and of the church, or society, in their house.

The very essence of all these societies was that they were very definitely not only in and of, but subject, to the Church. Their objects were sanctioned and endorsed by ecclesiastical authority, and the whole of their religious training together with their practice of the corporate works of mercy was for the good of their own souls and the advancement of the glory of God in and through the Church. The intimate history of the Universal Church shows the wisdom and necessity of this point of view. We must remember that all schisms, and most heresies started as admirable movements within the body of the Church itself. It may be stated as an historical truism that if in a parish, diocese or national Church any subordinate organization begins to assume or arrogate the authority that can only come through the commission given to that Church by its Divine Head, the consequences are bound to be trouble, dissension, loss of spiritual power, and finally disruption and schism.

THE commission to bind and loose, to go forth and teach, and to rule in the name of Christ was not given to the First Century Christian Fellowship, the Woman's Auxiliary, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, or the Society of Nazarene, admirable as the motives animating these bodies may be, but to one Church founded upon a rock. The only justification for any other body is the secondary commission it holds by the authority of that Church to carry out certain objects and those objects only. They are to serve and not to rule.

These corporations, guilds, and confraternities, were unfortunately broken up in the welter of spoliation following the Reformation, and outside a few secularized companies and corporations were not re-established until comparatively late years. Whether their successors have captured their spirit and are maintaining their tradition would seem to be rapidly becoming a question of serious importance to the Church of God.

Are we in the American Church beginning to surrender our teaching and authoritative commission to the many auxiliaries, guilds, leagues, brotherhoods, fellowships and societies, which we have raised like the Frankenstein monster to cover our own shortcomings.

I hope that, please God, we are not. I believe from the very bottom of my heart that the thousands of devoted men and women who constitute their membership are really attached and loyal sons and daughters of their mother Church. It is, however, folly not to admit that in many cases certain societies, or, to be more accurate, groups within societies are beginning to feel that they are a part of the authoritative organization of the Church, and ought to share that authority with those in whom it is vested by all tradition and canonical authority.

We all know parishes and even dioceses whose policy, administration and expenditure is largely controlled by its various organizations. We ought to have enough foresight to see that if this ever happens to become the case the branch of the Church so affected, whether small or large, ceases to become a functioning member of the body Universal and becomes a mere puppet show dancing on the wires and to the tune played by the children it fails to control.

Of course the possibility of this state of affairs is very largely due to the fact that our financial obligations have become too large for our contributions and we have had to surrender the power of the purse to those organizations who provide the money. Money talks, and the man that pays the piper is beginning to call the tune. A lay pope will kill any parish, possibly with the best intentions. The Lord knows what two or three corporations of lay popes would do to the whole Church. So long as the Society of Methodists confined itself to the salvation of its members under the authority of the Church's teaching it was a great spiritual force in the Church of God. As soon as it began to dictate to that Church—deplorable though the condition of that Church may have been—as an independent body arrogating to itself the right to dictate policies and doctrinal matters over which it had no jurisdiction, we get the greatest act of schism in any non-Roman Church since the Reformation.

So long as the Society of Jesus confined itself to its missionary and teaching activities it was the greatest and most powerful institution the Roman Church had ever seen. Directly it got away from its primitive spirit and the "Black Pope" was substituted for the General of the Order, the Church in self defense was bound to suppress it.

I HAVE before me a few letters. One is from the diocesan president of a Woman's Auxiliary, rebuking the rector of a parish who invited them to a corporate communion and quiet day, expressing her dissatisfaction with the celebration of the Holy Communion and advising him not to call himself a "prayer book Christian" but to watch the bishop next time he celebrates and by copying him to attain the standard of excellence required by the Woman's Auxiliary.

Another is from the bishop of a Southern diocese expressing his anxiety to start a certain brand of missionary activity in his territory. He states that he has consulted with the officials of the Woman's Auxiliary but as they refuse to assist on the financial side, and have expressed their definite disapproval of this particular work, he is unable to consider it.

I have a letter from another rector in which he states that the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in his parish has taken the whole of his juvenile work out of his hands, and have put on a program with which he is absolutely out of sympathy, and that he is unable to check them owing to the definite antagonism of a few strong monied individuals. That he has consulted his bishop and been advised to let them alone, as although the bishop agrees with the rector, in the present condition of the Church's finances they are too strong a body to be antagonized.

I have just finished reading a report of the Triennial Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary 1931 printed in the annual report of a diocesan branch. There are no less than twelve references to "Realizing the power that lies in our hands," and referring to the exercise of that power in influencing the sessions of the General Convention on such subjects as the marriage question, the American Missal, placement of clergy and a few other points of general Church policy.

Lastly, I have a letter in my possession from a member of the First Century Christian Fellowship to an ex-member of the society. He states that a certain rector recently called to his parish is antagonistic to the fellowship, that he stresses the efficacy of the sacraments as a means of grace, that he uses tobacco and is socialistic in his ideas, and that it is the duty of the members of the fellowship to endeavor to get him out of the parish and get a suitable sympathizer of different calibre in his stead.

Now I respectfully beg to submit that whether a priest uses the American Missal or the lowest form of celebration known to the Episcopal Church has nothing to do with the Woman's Auxiliary; and further that for those handmaids of the Church to disapprove or threaten not to support a missionary project sanctioned by the ecclesiastical authority is a gross abuse of the admirable purposes for which the Auxiliary was instituted. While "Realizing the power that lies in their hands" and either by lobbying, or by using coercion in their parishes or dioceses to sway the canonical, theological or disciplinary policy of the Church in its General Convention constitutes a very grave menace to the well-being of the Church.

THE intentions of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew are admirable, its objects excellent. The fact of such a state of things as is revealed in my friend's letter, deplorable. Whether we approve or do not approve of the First Century Christian Fellowship is of no importance. We all admire their sincere desire to forward the cause of Christ even if we dislike their methods, and have suffered from the results. The fact remains that the spirit shown in this letter is prejudicial to the unity and discipline of the Church of Christ.

I do not believe that in ninety-nine per cent of the membership of these organizations this spirit exists, and I believe that it would generally be viewed with abhorrence if realized, at least among the societies of the Church. The seed, however, is there and I do not think that a word of warning can possibly be construed as antagonistic or prejudicial to those devoted servants of God and His Church without whom it is almost impossible for us to carry out the farflung program we are trying to carry out in His name. But let us remember: one authority makes a Church; two authorities make a schism; three, chaos.

By all means let all the faithful band themselves together in societies for the salvation of their souls and the greater glory of God and His Church, but let them remember that the Church is a divine institution and that any society within that Church is born of men, and is not there to either dictate or coerce those to whom our Lord gave a definite commission to guide it. Unless my theology is gravely at fault, I do not think that He divinely instituted either the Woman's Auxiliary, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, my Parish Guild, the Vestry system, or the First Century Christian Fellowship, although I am quite sure that He will bless them so far, and so far only, as they perform the work that the Church has authorized them to perform.

To get back to my thesis. A tail is a most important and necessary part of the organism of a dog, but it was made for the dog to wag, and not to reverse the operation.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

The Mystery of Suffering

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

IT IS the glory of the Gospel that it faces the hard facts of life and never evades realities. The Christ accepted the role of one who strives for righteousness in an aggressive manner and so was misunderstood, betrayed and crucified. We believe in a Christ who "suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried." If the creed stopped there it would be a confession of tragic failure. It is solely because it is followed by a glorious resurrection that it is not. To secularize the Gospel by demanding that a crucified Christ should have suffered merely to produce a materialistic idealism would be to miss entirely the climax of the Gospel.

It is the revelation of a victorious Creator Who ultimately defeats the malice of evil men and compensates for those who like Lazarus have endured intolerable suffering. It is not a Gospel in which we are promised that as a result of Christ's life the kingdoms of this world will in this world adopt His standards. Quite the contrary, when He comes again He questions whether He will find faith on the earth. It is true that He looks forward to a time when the kingdom of this world shall become the kingdom of the Christ, but in the creed as well as in human history the grave must intervene between the effort and its outcome.

This is most irritating to the materialistic idealist whose faith can be satisfied only when there is an equal distribution of physical comforts to the children of men. In Russia today this has manifested itself in the hatred of the Christ and His Gospel and the substitution of a committee who will successfully regulate the affairs of society. The query is, when such a group shall have succeeded in achieving its purpose what then will give sufficient interest in life to make it endurable? One can visualize a society in which everyone has the same advantages without furnishing the individual with any motive for effort. Life would become a succession of physical sensations ending in dust and ashes.

It is this very culmination that Christ avoids. He makes no effort to change the social order but rather accepts it as incidental, and urges men to overcome evil with good rather than to exhaust their efforts in trying to make a kingdom of heaven out of the children of this world. Whenever the Church as an institution has been invoked to alter secular institutions it has invariably resulted in producing a secularized Church and ineffective governments. You cannot change the objective of the Gospel without perverting the Gospel to ends which in His teaching were inadequate.

FOR better or worse the disciple of Christ was to find in the risen Christ the answer to his sufferings. This does not mean that the Church is to have no share in the kingdoms of this world, but it is to act as a "leaven hid in three measures of meal" rather than a force dominating and determining secular policies. It is only as Christian ideals permeate government, business and education that they will have an uplifting influence. In other words the Christian must expect to be misunderstood, betrayed and executed, if need be, looking to his ultimate justification in that place which a loving Father has prepared for those who seek the Kingdom of God and His righteousness.

It was this assurance of ultimate victory which enabled Christ to endure the Cross and which caused Him to warn His disciples that it might be their lot also. To subtract the resurrection from the drama of our Lord's life is to remove the source of courage and of hope from the martyrs who have suffered in His name.

The Christian must never forget that it is the broken body of our Lord which he receives in the sacrament and also His poured out blood; signifying that His disciple must look to the comforts of God's grace rather than to the comforts of this world to sustain him in the fight.

It is true that we pray to God for peace and prosperity because no soldier willingly invites self martyrdom, but if the necessity arises he must be willing to accept persecution without withdrawing his allegiance.

In order to make myself clearer let me visualize a member of the Church, indignant at the injustices of society, conscious of the lukewarmness of Christians, realizing that neither in the Church nor in the world does he receive hope or encouragement. What shall he do? First he should ask himself frankly what he himself is doing that merits praise? It is quite possible to substitute an intellectual indignation for personal self-sacrifice. Then if he himself is embodying the precepts of the Gospel in his own life to whom shall he turn for comfort. I know of no other than to Jesus, the author and finisher of our Faith. If he is truly a disciple of Jesus Christ then betrayal and desertion will intensify his loyalty and fortify his faith.

To whom else shall we go when the world around us seems to be against us. I know that it is quite the thing to say that the Church has failed. That is incorrect. If failure there is then Jesus Christ has failed. Failed to do what? Failed to persuade men to follow Him. Well if this be failure, He failed when He was on earth and accepted His failure as a prelude to His victory.

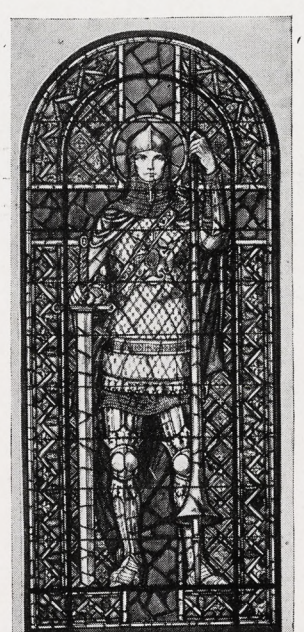
It is quite a defense mechanism to attribute our woes to institutions, but institutions are not persons, neither are they endowed with personal responsibilities. They are merely collections of men and they fail or succeed in proportion as they are composed of individuals who are true to the ideals of the institution. Society will be leavened by the number of devoted disciples whom Jesus has, who are personally loyal to Him and His objectives. There is no evidence that He ever expected or promised that the institutions of this world would be true to Him. It is quite the fashion to substitute a hierarchy, a book or a cult for the Christ, but in the last analysis we stand or fall as we are loyal to Him and to His teaching.

There is nothing that He gives you as a substitute for the simple mandate, "Follow Me." The Church may be ineffective, the world may be out of joint, our own personal relationships may be impossible, yet it is the suffering Christ and not the glorified One Who is our Master in this world.

ONE may sum up the results of His life by saying that through all of human history Christ has suffered under those who represent Pontius Pilate, has been betrayed by those who claimed to follow Him, has been crucified by those who hate His message, has been dead in many eras and buried in many localities, but that He has always risen from defeat and found some disciples in all times and in all places.

The Church, it is true, is an instrument through which He carries on His witness, but it is not guaranteed against spiritual bankruptcy and moral turpitude in the transactions of its representatives. If at times one finds it difficult to remain in it, one may well ask, "Where else shall I go, what else shall I do, by which I may attest my own loyalty to His person and my own willingness to show my love by keeping His commandments."

It is true that the Church has often failed to function as it might but it is in it that the remnant has always been found who fight on a weary battle against the same forces which opposed Him while on earth. It is because of His example that we recognize those who sit in Moses seat, even though they act as Annas and Caiaphas did.



So I believe in the Suffering Christ because I find no adequate explanation of the Cross than that which He exemplified in His life and therefore that which I must try to carry out in mine. When He bade us to take up our cross and follow Him, He asked us to do that which He did, animated by the same confidence that God will eventually overcome evil with good.

The Art of Stained Glass

By

ELEANOR H. WILSON

"THERE is no life in art unless there is change and development and the future of the craft of stained glass lies along these lines", said Mr. Len Howard, artist and designer, who is in charge of stained glass work of the R. Geissler, Inc. Studio, New York City. This should be taken into account when comparing mediaeval and modern glass. We know that corrosion in conjunction with the accumulated dust of many years has had a great deal to do with the beauty of much old glass, — the patina of age, and it is to the credit of the best of modern glass workers, referring particularly to those in the United States, that they produce windows rivalling the earlier work in both color and design, and have been outstandingly successful in embodying in the windows when installed that effect which only the passage of centuries added to the work of the early artists, in the opinion of Mr. Howard.

His chief reason for entering the profession of glass was a love of color and the urge of the craftsman,—the desire to create. Mr. Howard received his early training in London, where he won a two year scholarship from the Camberwell School of Arts and Crafts. He gained a thorough grounding in the technique of the profession during eight years he was associated with Messrs. James Powell & Sons of London. During the war as a member of the Camouflage Corps he had an opportunity to study the glass of France. Since the war, and while President of the New York Society of Craftsmen, he has continued his study, visiting Chartres, Angers, Le Mans, Sens.

An outstanding example of the work of the Geissler Studio are three large chancel windows in St. George's Church, New York City, which were designed and executed by Mr. Howard, the middle one representing an heroic figure of St. George. The writer wishes to correct a statement made in the previous article crediting the chancel windows in this church to the J. & R. Lamb Studios. A chancel window in a chapel of St. George's is the work of the Lamb Studios. Two windows in the nave of the church proper as well as five windows in the Mortuary Chapel are the work of the R. Geissler, Inc. Studio.

While Mr. Howard believes that the craftsman in glass should derive his inspiration and his motif from the early artists in glass, he deplores a tendency to merely copy mediaeval mannerisms and to produce 12th and 13th century glass by formula. With the greater range of colors available, the improvement of the technique and the general feeling for correct drawing, he believes it possible, without offending the best principles of the craft, to use a wider range of colors and avoid the monotonous repetition and contorted drawing often found in early windows.

GAILOR WINDOW
St. Mary's, Memphis

Another beautiful example of the work of this Studio is the window placed by Bishop Gailor in memory of his mother in St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis, Tennessee. The two great west windows, the seven light chancel window, as well as all other windows in this Cathedral, known as the Bishop Gailor Memorial, were designed and carried out by Mr. Howard. Other commissions executed by the R. Geissler, Inc. Studio are: — Four west windows, Christ Church, Nashville, three chancel windows in St. Paul's Church, Murfreesboro, one of these in memory of Mary Noailles Murfree, novelist, known in literature as Charles Egbert Craddock, who lived here.

Sabbath Laws

THE Mishna is a part of the Jewish Talmud and is a detailed exposition of the Hebrew Law, attempting to tell just what things are allowed and what are prohibited in actual practice. Its authority used to rest on the story that it comprised certain oral regulations given by Moses to Joshua, by him to the elders, who gave them to the prophets, and the prophets passed them on to the members of the Great Sanhedrin. This is what our Lord refers to as the "traditions of the elders."

A large part of the Mishna has to do with the proper observance of the Sabbath and shows the curious way in which the Scribes and Pharisees struggled with their legalistic convictions. For instance, it was provided that one might travel 2000 cubits beyond one's dwelling-place without violating the prohibition of labor on the Sabbath. That meant about three-quarters of a mile and was the "Sabbath Day's journey." But if, on the preceding Friday a man were to deposit food for two meals at a point 2000 cubits away from his house, he could call that spot his dwelling and go on for another 2000 cubits.

On the Sabbath one must not carry a burden but it was a question as to just what constituted a "burden." It was decided that the weight of a dried fig, or more, was to be reckoned as a burden. Then they argued as to whether one could carry half a fig twice without breaking the Sabbath. A woman could not wear a necklace or a ring on the Sabbath because she might be tempted to take it off to show it to some friend and thereby be guilty of carrying a burden in her hand. Was it or was it not permitted that a parent might carry a child in his arms? The Mishna was considerate enough to allow that much latitude.

Cattle might be taken out to water or to feed on the Sabbath but only with the minimum of harness. It was not even permitted to add a protection against the rubbing of a wound. If a man himself had a wound, he might put a plaster on it only if it was intended to prevent the wound from becoming worse —not with the object of healing it. Hence the question as to whether or not our Lord was breaking the Law by healing on the Sabbath. If a woman got mud on her dress, she could crush it and shake it off but she mustn't rub it. If water fell on a dress, some thought it could be shaken but not wrung out, while others thought it could be wrung but not shaken. There was also a difference of opinion as to whether, after a bath, one could dry one's whole body at once or only one limb at a time. It was quite wrong to rub out a large letter to make room for two smaller letters but it was permissable to rub out two small ones in order to write in one large one. If a house caught fire on the Sabbath Day, it was permitted to save only such clothing as was absolutely necessary; but no objection was raised if one put on a dress in the burning house, ran out with it, took it off, and went back for another one. If a hen laid an egg on the Sabbath, it could not be eaten; but if the hen were being kept for fattening, not for laying, and just happened to produce an egg, then it was considered a part of the hen which had fallen off and could be eaten.

This is the kind of thing with which our Lord had to contend. No wonder he objected—"the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath". No wonder St. Paul talked about being freed from the Law and released into the liberty of Christ's Gospel. Yet we are not without Sabbatarian sects today which come near to doing the same thing.

NOAH: COVENANT OF THE RAINBOW

READ the Story of the Flood, Genesis 6, 7, 8 and 9. Every nation has stories of some tremendous upheaval of the sea; the Greeks, the Mayas, the Babylonians. Possibly they are memories of the vast disturbance caused by the sinking of Atlantis; possibly they date back to the melting of the Glaciers at the end of the Ice Ages. Babylonian accounts of the Flood are found on their brick cylinder-books. The Hebrew account is told from the standpoint of the desert-dwellers. Their country is flat and low like the plains of Shinar. The statement that "fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail—all the mountains that were upon the face of the whole earth were covered" show that they regard a depth of 15 cubits—about 20 feet—as amazingly deep.

Noah's Ark. In the floods of our own Mississippi Valley, we often hear of animals, both tame and wild, taking refuge together from the waters on a flatboat or on the roof of a floating house. The descendants of the family of Noah enlarged upon the story as they passed on. The size of the Ark given in this account is not enough to provide shelter for the enormous number of animals, both "clean and unclean" indicated. But the desert children, to whom the story was told, knew very few kinds of animals; they had no alphabet books or zoo books, as our children have, with pictures of strange jungle beasts. Even rain was something of a novelty to them. So it did not seem so impossible to them.

Covenant of the Rainbow. This story of Noah is really the story of the Covenant of the Rainbow; the first idea of a Peace Treaty between God and man. Rainbows are rare indeed in that rainless desert land. Startled children cried "What is that?" and were told "God has hung up his war-bow; it is a sign of peace with men." Among the ancient people, to "hang up the bow" was the sign of peace, as "burying the hatchet" was with the American Indians. When the king took down his warbow from the wall, it was a declaration of war; when he hung it up, the war was over. Bows and arrows were their chief weapons of war. So after the flood refugees landed, Noah built an altar and offered sacrifice in token of acceptance of the Covenant of Peace.

This is the Second Covenant. It is a milestone in the history of the human intellect, since it establishes the discovery that God keeps faith with mankind; that He is friendly to them and not a destroyer. All modern science is built on the knowledge that the Universe keeps faith; that what is found to be true today will be true tomorrow. But it took a long time for humanity to get this idea. Down to the time of Christ, Greeks and Romans believed that the gods were jealous of men and that they made and broke promises on the slightest pretext.

The terms of the Noah Covenant are threefold. It is known as the Covenant of Life, and it provides;

A. Man may take for food every living creature or herb; only the blood, which is the life, may not be eaten, but must be poured out to God, for all life returns to God, Who gave it.

Read first chapter of Leviticus.

B. Man's life is sacred to God. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."

(Underline Exodus 21:12—Lev. 24:17)

C. God also will regard man's life and the increase of it as sacred, and will keep faith with the orderly succession of seasons.

Noah went forth and began to be a farmer. He planted vineyards and drank of the wine. And herein is a story.

The name "Noah" means "Comforter." The song of his father Lamech at the birth of Noah (Gen. 5:29) is an old drinking song, which in Hebrew has a rollicking rhyming chorus. It means that although there is a curse upon the ground, so that it brings forth thorns and thistles, and labor is required to cultivate it, yet the jollity of the harvest-festival atones for all this labor. Coupled with this acknowledgement of the "comfort" of wine is a story warning against drinking to excess, and against ridiculing those who are intoxicated. St. Paul, who commends wine as medicine, warns also "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess."

MEMORY WORK

The Twelve Minor Prophets are hard to learn, unless we divide them up. The shortest book in the Bible is Obadiah. Underline that book in your Index.

Almost as short is Habakkuk. Underline that book.

The Bridge of the Testaments is Malachi, the last book in the Old Testament, which leads directly into the New. Underline that. Now you have them divided into groups of three. Copy them out this way.

Hosea, Joel, Amos	Obadiah	Jonah, Micah, Nahum	Habakkuk	Zephaniah, Haggai, Zechariah

Malachi

Take the first group of four and learn their names; Remember that Obadiah is the shortest book in the Bible.

Take the second group of four. Remember that Habakkuk gives us the opening sentences in Morning and Evening Prayer; "The Lord is in his Holy Temple." Note this in your Prayer Book.

Take the third group, remembering that Malachi leads into the New Testament.

Two others of the Minor Prophets furnish sentences for Morning and Evening Prayer. See if you can locate them.

THIS BOOK WILL MAKE THE PSALMS MEAN MUCH MORE

Reviewed by G. M. DAY

Were I required to name the particular portion of our services of morning and evening prayer which are the least appreciated I would be compelled to say the responsive reading of the Psalter. The reason for this is in large measure that the members of the congregation do not know the background or setting out of which the particular psalm was taken, and but few of them probably have more than a vague idea of whether they are reading a psalm which was originally a Hebrew processional hymn or a lyric expressive of a special mood of the author.

Dr. Earle B. Cross, Professor of Old Testament Interpretation in the Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, has written Modern Worship and The Psalter (Macmillan $2) expressly to help people to a greater appreciation of the psalms. There are innumerable books like the Cambridge Commentaries which will give anyone an admirable understanding of the Psalter, but so many of these books are too long and contain so much detail that the layman is discouraged at the start. Prof. Cross has avoided this difficulty by eliminating the detail, and gives the reader in less than three hundred pages a very enjoyable commentary and literary appreciation.

After an opening chapter on the origin and nature of the Psalms and the inherent limitations of some psalms, Dr. Cross divides the psalms into the following nine groups and devotes a full chapter to each: Lyrics, Dramatic Lyrics, Individual Prayers, National and Royal Prayers, Hymns with refrains, and Hymns without refrains, Hymns with the focal point in the center, Liturgies, and Acrostically arranged psalms. While Dr. Cross brings to the work his knowledge of the Hebrew language, the volume in many ways resembles the writings on the literature of the Bible of Dr. Richard Moulton in its combination of sound scholarship with lucidity of style.

We turn now from this Hebrew book for the development of character to two modern books whose chief interest is in that development. The first is Educating for Citizenship by George A. Coe (Scribners $2), and the second is Character in Human Relations by Hugh Hartshorne (Scribners $2.50). Everything which Dr. Coe writes is not only interesting but also penetrates any mists which surround the mountain of thought to reveal frequently unobserved data. In this volume Dr. Coe is doing for secular education what he did for religious education in his earlier book, What is Christian Education. The entire field of the relation of the public school to the state, to its task in training for citizenship, to the political parties, to propaganda, to the federal government, and to the future is considered, and in addition there is a chapter on our private schools. One of the most interesting chapters is that on the Federal Government in which the author shows how dangerously near to federal control of education, with the War Department dictating the emphases, the nation came during the Great War. To show how perilous such control might be let me quote Dr. Coe: "Not long ago the Department of War actually printed a document—no longer obtainable by the public — which, by numerous quotations from the Bible, endeavored to show that war is approved in both the Old and the New Testament, and that it is not repugnant to the Jehovah of the one nor to the Christ of the other! Teaching by the War Department concerning the will of God in respect to war is anomalous, but it accords perfectly with the logic by which this Department has made itself a teacher of civics."

Anyone vitally interested in the whole question of secular education in this country will want to see this book for if it does nothing else it will surely raise a lot of questions concerning what is being taught in relation to what ought to be taught and these questions should be considered far more seriously than most

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

Mrs. Pearl S. Buck, after long residence in China, suddenly finds herself one of the most famous people in the world, due of course to the fact that she is the author of two best-sellers, "The Good Earth" and "Sons". As a famous person she is naturally much sought after, and her opinion on missions is particularly desired, now that that subject has been brought to the fore by the Laymen's Inquiry. She spoke on the subject last Wednesday before a large number of Presbyterians who honored her that day with a luncheon.

China, she said, was not an anti-foreign country, although there were, of course, ultra-nationalistic elements in it, and yet the missionaries were often disliked by the intelligent Chinese. "The intelligent Chinese," she remarked, "are unwilling to see a narrow and sectarian form of religion fostered among their people in return for a few hospital facilities, a little flood relief, a little education. The truth is too many of the missionaries today are too small for the situation. I have heard them criticized in the bitterest terms and agreed. I have seen them narrow, arrogant, sure and stupid in their own belief, and disdainful of a great culture. I have seen them scornful, vulgar, ignorant and superstitious, and I have seen them making over Chinese converts in their own image."

She wondered, she said, when she first came to this country if the average American Christian was as mediocre as many of the men and women sent out. She found that those sent out were sent very often because there was nothing else to do with them. "Good, consecrated—and what a quantity of sloppy thinking that word covers — people so boring that no congregations at home could bear them, young men and women unprepared for any sort of work, much less for that which takes more preparation than any other" — such were the types she found being considered for mission work.

When even a mediocre man was placed in another culture without resources of his own he became narrow, she declared, and moreover, even a good man had obstacles put in his way by those at home. "Our forefathers believed," she continued, "that out of some Christian church, or even out of their special church, a soul was eternally damned, and that remains in the hunger for statistics of conversions on the part of mission boards that hinders many good men. I have watched one great missionary, one of the men that provide the final justification of the work for me, go further and further into the interior, further and further from the organization that called him unorthodox because day by day in the magnitude of his work he was outgrowing and casting off his creed and getting closer to the actual gospel. If I go to one of the villages where he worked his name is a passport today, years after his death."

Why, she asked, did she still believe in missions? Because she was unwilling to see the figure and idea of Christ, whether He was only the finest imagination of mankind or no, forgotten on earth. She had come to the conclusion, she said, in spite of all her disgust and irritation, that Christians were on the whole better than the average, no matter how very little Christians they were.

"Let us send fewer and finer men," she concluded. "Let them become a part of the country, not professional intruders, really nice Christians. Let the messenger and the message suit the people for whom they are intended. I should like to see every missionary sent out to satisfy a real need of the people in a particular place. Above all, that removes the stigma of moral arrogance that goes with preaching to a people more skillful in the arts of life than we ourselves are. I am weary unto death of preaching. I have spoken as a countrywoman of your race. By years and understanding I am Chinese, and as Chinese I say to you: Come to us no more in arrogance of spirit, but come to do and to work, to understand and become a part of the country."

A Correction of a Bit of Gossip

Nature in the Raw is Seldom Mild, and there is nothing, I find, that brings out the natural man like the appearance here of an error. Thus I have been jumped on most vigorously by a number of nice people for saying that the joint rectorship at St. James Church, Philadelphia, had collapsed, due to the difficulty of financing it. Dr. Mockridge and Dr. Newton, I presume you know, are the joint rectors. It is an elaborate plan, calling for the expenditure of considerable cash, so that of course everything has not sailed along as smoothly as they had hoped when plans were originally made in prosperous days. But as for "collapse", my dear sir, nothing could be further from the truth. So if that bit of gossip is lodged in your head somewhere please do what you can to remove it.

Incidentally this job of presenting bits of news in such a way that people will read them gets me into all sorts of difficulties. To print here the sort of thing that parsons and church people generally talk about whenever they meet invariably gets me in a jam; while if I express myself naturally the postman is sure to bring in a stack of letters in which the word "flippant" is hurled at my unprotected head. Probably nothing much can be done about it. I shall continue to be as constrained as possible, but somewhere during the course of my pilgrimage I picked up the notion that a long beard, a sad countenance and a diet of sour milk and dill pickles was not the only mark of a disciple. No doubt I have carried the idea too far; long since I discarded the dog collar and bought myself a pretty black tie. But once degeneracy sets in, one is often quite unaware of its creeping development. Thus a check-up this morning of my tie-rack reveals not only black ties but ties with stripes and dots, and even one or two that are red. And my best pair of shoes I discovered, much to my horror, were tan, though as I recall it now the sale was rather forced upon me by a capable salesman who was unable to fit me with blacks. Moreover I am quite willing to admit that this lack of solemnity has creeped into these columns. It will take time no doubt to make these notes as grave as the Bishops' Diaries which feature so many diocesan papers, but we will set that perfection as our objective.

Church Colleges at Football

There are, I presume, flocks of alumni of our Church Colleges among our readers who are still young enough to want bits of football news. Hobart, which for years gave the newspaper boys something to write about as the team that never won, put its name on the front pages of the New York papers by winning on October 29th from Rochester by the tune of 6-0. Earlier in the year the two Church Colleges, Kenyon and Hobart fought it out to a 7-7 tie. On the 29th Kenyon lost to Marietta 15-7. On the same day Trinity took on Wesleyan in their big game of the year and thrilled flocks of alumni even though they did come out on the short end of the score, 7-0. It was an evenly fought game, with Trinity holding Wesleyan several times inside the ten yard line and once having the ball themselves within inches of a touchdown. Late in the fourth quarter an intercepted lateral pass put Wesleyan in the position that resulted in the only score of the game. However since the early dope favored Wesleyan to win by two or three touchdowns everyone left the field singing the praises of the scrappy Trinity team.

THIS MAN'S IDEA IS A GOD-SEND TO FOLKS WHO NEED MONEY

By P. H. Graham

This is a true story. I know this man personally. I know of the folks he has helped. I know of widows with children to support who thank him for their incomes. I know of men who lost their jobs but are now making more money than ever before. Yes, I know of literally thousands of folks to whom this man's idea of doing business is a god-send.

How Much Do You Need?

If you need money I know you will be interested in the wonderful opportunity this man has to offer you.

He is President of a large million-dollar manufacturing company. He started a few years ago with an idea. It was this. He said, "I will share the profits of my business with the folks who help me." His business became tremendously successful. And today it is still growing. Right now he needs 300 men and women in all parts of the country. He needs someone in your section to help handle increased business. To everyone who comes with him he guarantees a fair, square deal and an amazing opportunity to make money in pleasant, dignified work.

Will $40 a Week Help You?

You don't have to invest any capital. He has taken care of that. You don't need any experience. He tells you the few things you need to do in simple, plain language. I'll be surprised if you don't make $25 to $35 a week for a few hours of your spare time. If you want to, you can stay on with him permanently. Your earnings will be in proportion to the time you can devote. I know of people who make anywhere from $40 to $100 in a week.

Your Income Can Start at Once

I sincerely ask you to fill out and mail the coupon. You don't obligate yourself or risk anything. You will receive complete instructions by mail. You can start right away and have the money you need coming in. It will certainly pay you to give this a trial. By all means, get the details. Just put your name and address on the coupon. Mail it today.

sex in mind when he wrote to the faithful in Corinth, yet with no undue stretching of the imagination, this statement can be made to apply to countless women, who throughout the long history of the Church have quietly and without dramatic show, contributed to the life and growth of the Kingdom of God on earth.

Over forty years ago Mrs. Evelyn Lehrritter moved from her home in New Orleans, Louisiana to the pioneer settlement of Gunnison, Colorado. From a civilization that was old and steeped in culture, she and her husband came into the pioneer wilds of Western Colorado. Life was hard, with none of the conveniences that city dwellers had learned to cherish, yet for many years this courageous woman lived and worked surrounded by the hardness of an early mining camp. As a steward, she remained faithful.

Above all else, Mrs. Lehrritter desired to be blessed with the joys of children, but this gift was denied her, as her husband fell sick and after a short illness passed away. Denied the overflowing joy of a family of her own, she has consecrated the rest of her life to the care of the souls and bodies of other women's children. She is now the matron of Cheppita Hall, dormitory for women at Western State College in Gunnison, where she has a family that surpassed all of her dreams in size. She is mother, doctor, and personal friend to the girls of the college. Many are the girls she has directed into the Church. Many are they whom she has helped in hours of grief and sadness both of soul and body. To-day, she is quietly going about her work, doing the tasks of several ordinary women, with no idea of the contribution she has made to the life of the Church, but spontaneously giving her rich personality to those about her.

Among other things, the Church of the Good Samaritan in Gunnison can thank her for its Altar Guild, its Girl's Friendly Society, and many of its beautiful altar hangings. Surely, the Master will repeat to her the words which He uttered to many persons centuries ago: "Ye are the salt of the earth."

Hymnals and Prayer Books

for the Christmas Season

At Christmas, the most sacred of festivals, each parish should have a full complement of Hymnals and Prayer Books.

As publishers of the Prayer Book and of the authorized and approved Hymnal of the Church, we recommend the placing of orders in plenty of time so as to insure delivery before Christmas. It is suggested that these books, as a gift from a communicant, would form an appropriate and lasting memorial.

In the interest of improved congregational singing, the General Convention has urged all churches to place the musical edition of the Hymnal in the pews, so far as possible.

HYMNALS

Standard Musical Edition at $1.20 per copy (or $1.00 per copy in lots of 100 or more).

Special Choir Edition, heavily reinforced, at $1.50 per copy (or $1.30 per copy in lots of 100 or more).

Word Edition at 40 cents per copy.

PRAYER BOOKS

Pew Edition, 3½x5½, in various bindings at 25 cents per copy.

Chancel Edition, 5x7½, in various bindings and with larger type, at 50 cents per copy.

Church Institute Held in Maryland

A Church Institute was held in the diocese of Maryland, at Old St. Paul's and at Emmanuel, Baltimore, October 24th to 30th. Rectors in Baltimore addressed the noonday meetings: The Revs. Robert S. Chalmers, Don Frank Fenn, H. W. B. Donegan and Philip J. Jensen. Each forenoon the Rev. William A. McClenthen lectured on the art of worship. In the afternoons there were classes, with mass meetings each evening, addressed by Bishop Strider of West Virginia, Bishop Darst of East Carolina, Bishop Cook of Delaware, Mr. Coleman Jennings, and the Rev. Arthur Sherman, secretary of missionary education.

St. John's College Has Twenty-Five

St. John's College, Greeley, Colorado, opened this fall with an enrollment of twenty-five students. This school offers a five year course, with the students doing undergraduate work in the first years at colleges located in Greeley, with the theological work following at St. John's.

BOOK REVIEWS BY G. M. DAY

people, particularly school teachers, consider them at present. For persons interested in religious education Dr. Coe's earlier work already referred to is distinctly more pertinent and valuable.

In his volume, Dr. Hartshorne discusses the character building institutions and agencies which exist in our country today, the most important theories of character now held by psychologists and educators, and the empirical approach to a theory of character which he believes to be the best. The author considers successively the Trait, Habit, Pattern, Factor, and Self theories of character before developing his own Functional theory. This is a book essentially for educators. In closing this review I will quote the author's definition of a man of character. He is "one who functions well as a human being, who follows in his own contacts with others the divine strategy he has discovered at work in the world, providing for others the conditions through which they may themselves achieve selfhood, forgetting himself in this adventure into the creative life of the universe in which he finds himself always and everywhere at home".

BOOKS MACMILLAN BOOKS

THE CHURCH
IN THE ROMAN EMPIRE
By P. Gardner-Smith

THE CHURCH
IN ENGLAND
By F. J. Foakes-Jackson

These two books are parts I and III of the second volume in the series: The Christian Religion, Its Origin and Progress. The first book describes the expansion of the Church to A. D. 476. The second deals with Christianity in England, mainly during the periods since the Reformation. Brief, compact summaries of the outstanding facts of Church history.

$1.25 each

PETER ABAILARD
By J. G. Sikes

This is the only study of the famous, romantic Abailard in English which considers all the findings of recent research and which covers in one volume the full story of Abailard's life and a complete survey of his works. The ordinary reader will be especially interested in the details included here of Abailard's love affair with Heloise, rescued from the sham importance of romanticism and restored to its true perspective. The scholar will appreciate the fine critique of Abailard's mediaeval philosophy.

CHRISTIAN FAITH IN MODERN LIGHT
By R J. Campbell, Canon of Chichester Cathedral

These lectures by a widely respected and loved English theologian state in the simplest language the fundamental doctrines of Christianity as they are applicable today. "In this book Dr. Campbell enriches the thought of the Church he serves. His book is evidence of the serious purpose of that Church and its leaders to meet the challenge of the times we live in."—Christian Leader. $1.75

THE ISRAEL SAGA
By Brooke Peters Church

The author taught Old Testament in Columbia University and found that a majority of her students had never really read their Bible, did not recognize even the most obvious references to it. This book gives a survey of Old Testament writings with their historical background. As a background book for Sunday School classes studying the Old Testament it is complete and reliable, and will lead to intelligent reading and appreciation of the Bible itself. $3.00

DIGGING UP BIBLICAL HISTORY
By J. Garrow Duncan

"The world is turning over with skilled fingers the pages of the ancient world." In these two volumes the world of the Bible is disclosed through all the vivid detail that has been "dug up" in Palestine. You will find here the most complete account of archaeological discoveries that has yet appeared. "Every page is full of fascinating reading and shows an expert acquaintance with the subject . . . replete with information of the highest value to the Biblical student."—The Expository Times.

Vol. I, $3.50; Vol. II, $3.75

THE TEACHING OF JESUS
By T. W. Manson

"Mr. Manson joins in the very small band of theologians whose books are indispensable to all serious students. This book is great in its originality, wisdom and restrained spiritual fervour."—Church of England Newspaper.

"One of the most valuable books on New Testament interpretation that have appeared in recent times."—The Church Times. $5.00

LANDS AND PEOPLE OF THE BIBLE
By James Baikie

A new edition of a famous Bible study book. A well-illustrated history and geography for students by one of the best-known scholars of our age. $1.60

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE
By Oscar Hardman

Two volumes deal with Christian standards and discipline. Among the many prominent contributors are Dr. Gavin of the General Theological Seminary, Dr. Cadoux, Dr. Goudge, Canon Mozley, Canon Belton, and the Rev. T. H. Passmore. Here is much solid, rewarding reading on the philosophy of Church today.

Vol. I, $4.50; Vol. II, $5.00

PHILOSOPHY OF THE SCIENCES
By F. R. Tennant

Co-ordinated knowledge of the philosophic inferences of the sciences leads to a basis of theistic belief. In elucidating this thesis the author points out differences between scientific and philosophic knowledge and explains the unified philosophy which may be formed from modern scientific tenets.

$1.50

CHURCH AND GNOSIS
By F. C. Burkitt

Professor Burkitt deals with some of the problems which exercised Christian thought in the second century. These problems are in many ways similar to those discussed today. As both history and Christian philosophy the book has unusual interest.

$2.00

PROPHETS OF JUDAH--PIONEER PROPHETS
By Ursula Wells

These two books give historical material about the Prophets of the Old Testament necessary to an understanding of the full significance of their writings. The books are small, easily read, and serve as excellent teacher's material.

$1.35 and $1.00

STORIES AND LESSONS
By Marion Powers

This is another volume in the series. The Old Testament for Home and School. As the previous volumes, it is a Sunday School text of the highest standing.

THE WITNESS

A National Paper of the Episcopal Church

Associate Editors
FRANK E. WILSON
GEORGE P. ATWATER

IRWIN ST. J. TUCKER

Vol. XVII No. 12 NOVEMBER 17, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

READERS OF THE CHURCH papers have a right to expect editorial comment on the report of the Committee of Bishops which appeared in our issue of November third. Nevertheless we are withholding any comment on the conduct of national Church affairs, raised by that report, at this time. A tentative budget of $3,460,000 has been set for 1933 by the National Council. A sum very close to that amount must be raised in the approaching every member canvass. Failure to do so will mean the wrecking of work which has been built up through the years. To raise any such sum in these days is a colossal undertaking. We do not propose to make the job more difficult by discussing policies of administration and thus possibly dampen the enthusiasm of Church people. The immediate job before the Church is to do whatever is possible to supply the funds necessary to carry on the work. With that done we believe there should be a frank and open discussion of the many matters stressed by the excellent Bishops' Report, in order that an enlightened Church may come to the next General Convention prepared to make any alterations that may be desirable. The task immediately before us is the important one: the raising of a large sum of money to maintain existing work. With that done we propose to return to the matters brought to the fore by the Bishops' Report and the equally important report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry. It is our hope to have a series of contributed articles from leaders of the Church on these matters, thus opening what we believe will prove to be a healthy discussion.

THE LAYMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONS INQUIRY is to present its report tomorrow to about three hundred officials of leading members of the seven denominations. This report embodies a two years' study of missions by experts, and those connected with it hope that it will eventually result in a new program for mission work in the Far East. At this meeting tomorrow the proposal is to be made that there be created "a single administrative unit for the foreign Christian enterprise in place of the complex, costly and duplicative machinery the existence of which is encumbering the great work that Christian good-will is trying to do." Those sponsoring the move state that the scrapping of existing missionary boards, and the creation of a united missionary council upon which all churches are represented, will have the following advantages: "(1) A new view of the functions and responsibilities of the Christian Church; a call to wider allegiances, and a rebuke to un-Christian divisiveness. (2) An administrative basis, simple, adaptable and economical. (3) Centralized disbursement, accounting and audit of funds. (4) A body of creative leaders raised above the level of denominationalism. (5) Experimentation under expert guidance. (6) A united and coordinated front on the mission field." The report goes on to say: "The plan relates to the organization of the foreign missionary enterprise alone. It does not suggest the union of denominations in any other field of endeavor, much less in matters of creeds, forms of worship and internal organization and policy. What we contemplate is not a unity which would override differences in the home churches, but one which, while recognizing that diversity at home may have its advantages, nevertheless would draw Christians together in enterprises which have for them a common meaning and value."

That is, the proposal is made that our Church unite with six other denominations in the administration and the financing of missionary work in the Far East. The group making the suggestion is made up of a distinguished group of men and women, who have arrived at their conclusions after a most thorough study of missions in the field, aided by experts. Their report, and the suggestions growing out of it, deserve and will receive the most careful consideration by Church leaders. Our own Church, through the National Council, has appointed a committee to attend tomorrow's meeting. The report will then, undoubtedly, have the careful consideration of the National Council, will be presumably discussed wherever Churchmen gather, officially or unofficially, and, we believe, will be a matter of major consideration at the next General Convention.

BISHOP BREWSTER OF MAINE believes that men and women should be allowed to vote even though they are unemployed. At Lewiston, Maine, the board of registration announced that they were to enforce an ancient law depriving paupers of the right to vote. One thousand unemployed persons receiving municipal relief, they ruled, came under this heading. The vigilant Bishop of Maine therefore prepared to journey to Lewiston in order to protest against "the arbitrary revival of an archaic statute." Meanwhile others had voiced their protests, carrying the matter even to the President of the United States. As a result one of Mr. Hoover's secretaries telephoned to Lewiston to find out what it was all about. Consequently the board of registration changed its mind, thus saving Bishop Brewster the bother of voicing his protest. All of which demonstrates that a single person can accomplish much if he takes it upon himself to act.

HERE IS A STORY told by a canvasser of the diocese of Chicago that is worth passing on:

"Some years ago I called on a well-to-do resident whose family occasionally came to our church. I was received cordially and told that the pledge card was filled out and signed. I said there was no hurry about the card but I would like to tell them a little about the Church and its work. Very soon the small daughter put her arm around her mother's neck and said:—'Oh mother! Please be a teacher in the Sunday School.'

"I told them how welcome they would be in any of our activities and, on leaving, asked that the pledge card be given, at a later date, to the rector. The following Sunday the children were enrolled in the Church School, the lady became a teacher and, a little later, became a volunteer member of the choir. About a year later the husband gave the church a very beautiful altar in memory of the mother of his wife."

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

He Descended Into Hell

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

OUR Lord's life, death and resurrection set forth a dramatic representation of the processes which His disciples must undergo in following Him. The article in the creed which intervenes between His death and resurrection is the basis of the Church's teaching about the intermediate state. Unfortunately the English word "Hell" has a double meaning. It is used to translate two Greek words which have entirely different meanings. The Greek word "Gehenna" is used by our Lord to describe the abode of the wicked. Literally it means the valley of Hinnom which was the crematory of Jerusalem, into which the refuse of the city was thrown. Here it was burned so that the smoke was constantly ascending. This fact is probably responsible for the conception of Hell fire which was so prevalent in the Church for many centuries. Really it signifies the destruction of useless material.

The other Greek word, "Hades," meant simply the abode of the dead who were waiting the day of judgment. It is this latter word which is translated "hell" in the creed, and this conception is borne out by St. Peter's statement that in the interval between Good Friday and Easter our Lord preached to the spirits in prison who were at some time disobedient in the days of Noah. This is contrary to the popular idea that when a man dies he goes into a long sleep or that he goes directly to heaven. Our Lord's teaching on this subject is not extensive or significant. To the thief on the cross He said: "Today shall thou be with Me in Paradise," and in the parable of Dives and Lazarus He pictures Lazarus in Abraham's bosom and Dives in a place of torment, and says that there was a gulf between them. This would seem to indicate that, while there is a separation in the intermediate state between the good and the evil, still it is a temporary rather than a permanent condition.

He told the thief that both of them would be in paradise on that day, so the creed might more appropriately have said, "He descended into Paradise." This would mean a garden of delight and was the Hebrew conception of the place of waiting. Abraham's bosom was another piece of oriental imagery intended to convey the idea of intimate fellowship with the elect.

It would seem therefore, when we consign our dear ones to the care of Him Who created them, that they are neither asleep nor are they in heaven, but are in a place of contemplation and fellowship where they can grow in grace and in the knowledge of those things that are hid from them here.

ALL this sounds fantastic to those who limit God's creative powers to that which they themselves have already observed, and yet when we consider the process by which man has emerged from the jungle one realizes how difficult it would have been for the first mammal to have visualized our civilization. To me there is not so much that is miraculous in a future life as there is in the one that we now enjoy. The fact that God has made me thus is a guarantee that He has the power to use me for some adequate purpose, and that in accordance with His previous habits it will be one of growth rather than one of sudden change.

The process seems a reasonable one. After a period of testing in this world, we are interned in a training camp where we will be prepared for that which awaits us ultimately. When I think of those intimate friends whom I loved long since and lost awhile I cannot feel that their personalities have ceased to exist. In a world in which no energy is lost, I believe that the most wonderful dynamic force in all the world will not be dissipated nor resolved into chemical elements. To me certain personalities set forth the greatest force in nature. It is true that they are yoked up with a physical body which returns to the dust, but such dissolution of the body does not necessarily involve the dissipation of spiritual characteristics. They too have their purpose which cannot be valued, either now or hereafter, in terms of a chemical laboratory.

The human race has always had an intuition of a future life, and of some sort of heaven to which men shall go and where they shall be held accountable for their deeds done in the flesh. The fact that the future is hid from our eyes does not invalidate the soundness of the intuition. Most of the wonderful discoveries in science have been hid from the eyes of men before they were revealed. It was an intuition which caused men to seek for them before they knew of their existence. So intuition that leads us to seek is as much a part of creation as microbes or fossils.

In the drama of the crucifixion Christ merely leads the way and we follow confident in the integrity of our guide. The fact that He died has confused those who would evade the necessity of death. The fact that He assured us that He would be in Paradise that day gives us an assurance that we shall not lose consciousness after death. The fact that He rose again assures us that the God Who gave us life has the power to restore that life under new conditions.

I BELIEVE therefore in an intermediate state in which men will have the opportunity to grow in such manner as shall fit them for their ultimate destiny. This is quite apart from that rather childish conception of purgatory which assumes that a soul may pass from a place of torment to Abraham's bosom because someone here on earth has purchased a parole for the unfortunate sinner. The abuse of a truth does not in any way affect the value of it, and the acceptance of a statement depends upon the credibility of the witness.

After all we must decide for ourselves whether the events of the crucifixion and resurrection were facts or whether they are the result of a cunningly devised scheme on the part of Christ and the Apostles to deceive a little group of unimportant people, who, humanly speaking, would be the only ones involved in the transaction.

Believing as I do in their integrity as witnesses I accept the inevitable deductions to be drawn from the story. Among these inferences is the one that Christ spent the time between the crucifixion and the resurrection in conscious communication with other souls who had departed this life. This is the significance of the clause in the creed that He descended into hell.

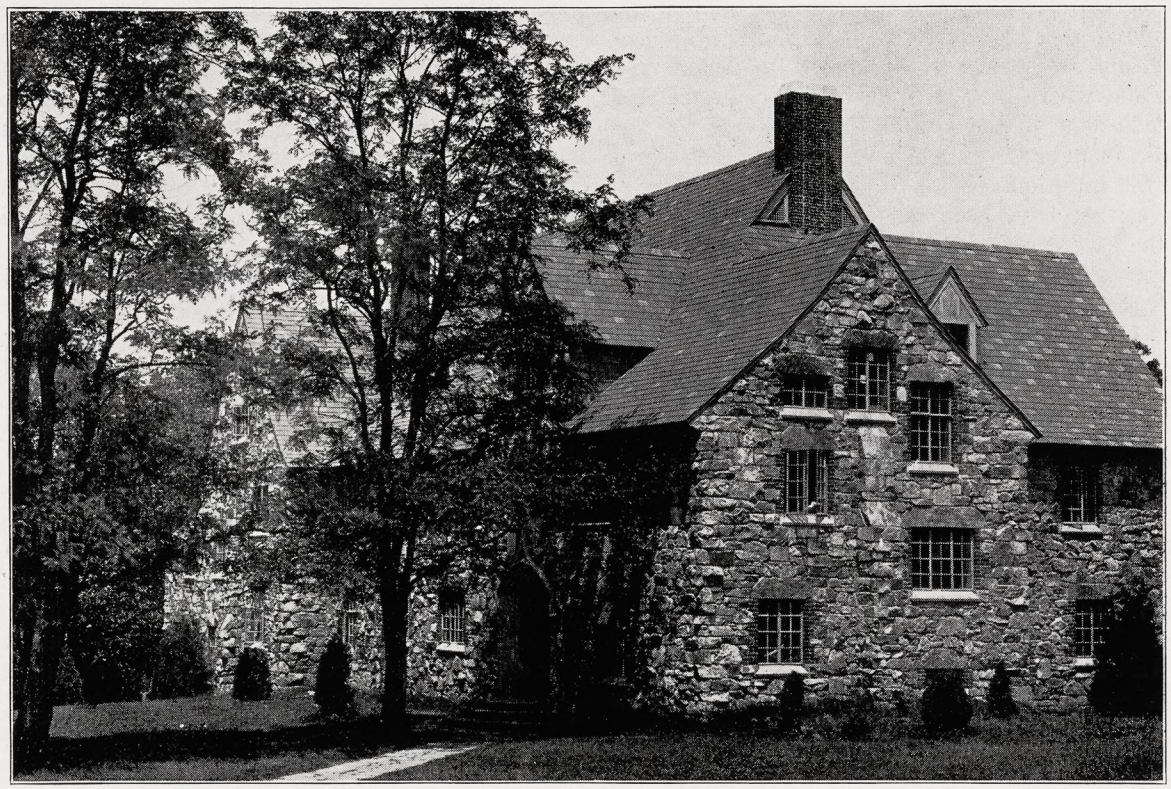
SEWANEE: THE MODERN ARCADIA



By

C. E. THOMAS and F. V. D. FORTUNE

"THE college has about three hundred young men or inmates, or students as they are sometimes called, and besides, quite a number of old ladies, who always were old ladies, and who never die. It's a long way away, even from Chattanooga, in the middle of the woods, on top of a bastion of mountains crenelated with blue coves. It is so beautiful that people who have once been there, always, one way or another, come back. For such as can detect apple green in the evening sky, it is Arcadia—not the one that never used to be, but the one that many people always live in; only this one can be shared." So begins William Alexander Percy in his article "Sewanee" in the Sewanee Review, an essay which every lover of English should know. So it is, truly Arcadia, not only to the students but to all who live on "The Mountain." Once a distinguished visitor approached the little village that lies immediately adjacent to the campus proper and asked an old negro there where he could find the university. "This am the university," answered the servant. The visitor persisted that he wanted to find the university, whereupon the old negro answered, "We is the university—us folkses and the boys what comes to live here with us." Nothing could more truly portray the spirit that permeates the atmosphere of Sewanee—just one big family with each member doing his part toward the realization of a living ideal. The word Sewanee itself means "Mother Mountain," and it is the sentiment of the University perfectly expressed.

Sewanee, the University of the South, is the realization of the dreams of a number of Southern bishops and clergy, to say nothing of the many ardent laity, to build in this country a university which would follow the principles and ideals of Oxford in the cultivation of Christian manhood. The road to the fulfillment of these cherished hopes of Bishops Otey, Polk and Elliot has been fraught with many hardships: Bishop Polk had hardly laid the corner stone of the young university when the forces of the Civil War laid the buildings in ashes; reconstruction days saw slow progress in the rebuilding of the university; poverty hindered its work and many a professor worked without compensation during the trying times; but the "spirit of Sewanee" lived on. "What is the spirit of Sewanee?" asked Bishop Perry in his Anniversary Sermon delivered last June at the Seventy-fifth Anniversary Celebration of the founding of Sewanee. "It is the spirit of prophecy and faith: 'The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen'." Today Sewanee stands as one of the outstanding universities of the Episcopal Church dedicated to the thorough education of the young manhood of the nation in the liberal arts and the sciences, truly a small university opposed to mass production taking pride in the artistry of individual training.

MR. LAWRENCE F. ABBOTT, in his article, "Mass-Production versus Artistry" in The Outlook, says: "It is pleasant to find even in these days of mass-production, little institutions of which the public scarcely hears that with limited means are doing telling work in real education. One such is the University of the South, at Sewanee—The University is small, enrolling scarcely 350 students, I believe. But it has an influence, especially in the South, and in the field of letters and liberal culture totally disproportionate to its size." Again President Theodore Roosevelt, after discovering that his aides, Major Archie Butt, Dr. Cary T. Grayson, later admiral and personal physician to President Wilson, and General William C. Gorgas, M.D., the man without whom the Panama Canal could not have been built, were all Sewanee men, wrote:

"I do not know of any institution of the same size in any part of our country which has done more for the cause of good citizenship than Sewanee has done. As an American, I am proud of it; as a citizen, I am grateful to it. It is entitled 'The University of the South,' but it is more than that: it is a university of all America, and its welfare should be dear to all Americans who are both patriotic and far-sighted, and therefore anxious to see every influence strengthened which tends for the betterment and enlightenment of our great country."

Sewanee's ideals and traditions are English as is its general appearance. Early in her history the University adopted Oxford customs; the first procession of college students in America wearing the Oxford cap and gown passed through Sewanee's cloistered walks, and since that day, no junior or senior in the college, nor any faculty member or graduate student has entered a classroom or chapel without his gown. Will Percy puts it: "Neither from experience nor observation can I say what they (the students) learn in their Arcadia, though they gad about freely with books and pads. Indeed many of them attempt to assume a studious air by wearing black Oxford gowns. In this they are not wholly successful, for no matter how new, the gowns always manage to be torn and insist on hanging from the supple shoulders with something of a dionysiac abandon." Beyond the gown, the government of the University is that of Oxford with the Chancellor, the Vice-Chancellor, the Board of Trustees, the Board of Regents and the Hebdomadal Board. The idea of the founders was the union of small colleges under the one University—such as is the case in Oxford. At present there is one college of arts and sciences and a college of theology, but the University plans call for more colleges and the ten-thousand acre domain of the University in the midst of the Cumberland Mountains permits of wide expansion in the future.

THE University buildings are reminiscent of the English-design—the famous ecclesiastical architects, Cram and Goodhue have seen to that. Breslin

Tower with its three-faced clock and Westminster Chimes is a copy of the sturdy Magdalen College Tower. Even the dormitories are of the English cottage style as are several of the national fraternity houses. There are other English ties peculiar to Sewanee: the handsome ermine vice-chancellor's robe presented to the University by the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge; the Painswick stone from Henry VII's chapel, built in 1502 in Westminster Abbey; the stone from the High Altar of Canterbury Cathedral, and the stone on the cross imbedded in the altar of All Saints' Chapel which was taken from the altar of St. Colomba's Cathedral at Iona, erected in 1203 on the site of the ancient church and monastery built by St. Colomba in 563. Beneath the Iona stone is the inscription, "This fragment of Iona marble serves as a connecting link between the American Church and the beginnings of Christianity in Scotland from whence we (Protestant Episcopal Church in America) derived our Episcopate."

Coinciding with the atmosphere of culture and refinement of

"A towered city set within a wood,
Far from the world, upon a mountain's crest,
Where storms of life burst not, nor cares intrude;
Where learning dwells and peace is wisdom's guest"

there is the spirit of fellowship and of play. Sewanee is known throughout the college fraternity world for its ideal relationships between the various national fraternities represented on the campus. Sewanee fraternities are more or less unique in that the chapter houses are used merely as club houses and all the men live in the several university dormitories. The chapter houses are monuments to the diligent efforts and dreams of their members. The whole university life revolves around the activity of the fraternities and the present Vice-Chancellor of the University is quoted as once saying, "I cannot picture Sewanee without fraternities and I should hate to think of administering its affairs without the assistance we receive from the social fraternities represented here." Nor is Sewanee without its reputation in the realm of collegiate athletics. The record for one of its teams for games won within a certain length of time and the points scored has yet to be equalled by any team in this country. Ralph McGill, one of the outstanding sports writers of the south, says of Sewanee: "No review of Southern Conference football teams could pass by without one of Sewanee."

"Sewanee nests with the eagles on the rocky crags of one of the Cumberland mountain chains that frown down on the Cumberland plateau. And there has always been a look of eagles about Sewanee's teams and something of the eagle in their spirit. They call the team "the Tigers," but one thinks of eagles. There is something of the old crusader spirit about her teams —a squad of 23, nine hard games—and optimistic. The Tiger always is."

And with it all, there is still something quiet and restful, something delightfully unique about Sewanee —it is Arcadia. Mr. Will Percy again has it expressed (for he is a true Arcadian): "If some evening a personable youth happens in on your hospitality, greets you with the not irreverent formality reserved for uncles, puts the dowager empress of Mozambique, your house-guest, at her ease, flirts with your daughter, says grace before the evening meal with unsmiling piety, consumes every variety of food and drink set before him (specializing in hot biscuits) with unabashed gusto, leaves a wake of laughter whenever he dips into the conversation, pays especial and apparently delighted attention to the grandmother on his left, enchants the serving maid with two bits and a smile, offers everyone a cigarette, affable under general disapproval, sings without art a song without merit, sits at last on the doorstep in the moonlight, utterly contented, with the dreamy air of the young Hermes (which only means the sense of impending adventure is about his hair like green leaves), and then if that night you dream of a branch of crab-apple blossoms dashed with rain—pursue that youth and entreat him kindly. He hails from Arcady."

Just Souls

Christ of reality and not of dreams,
Christ the "I am" and not "it seems,"
Help me now to do my part
Then at the end accept my heart.

"SOME DAY!" is a favorite expression denoting fine weather, and possibly a little touch of ecstacy in the heart. It deals with the present. "SOME day!" is another phrase well known to us all as representing a happy state of affairs. It deals with the future.

We cannot deny the heart its right to reach over into the days to come for hope and comfort. Man seems to be built that way for in his breast he carries fanciful aspirations which seem to sustain him in his present uncertainty. But there is the danger of leaning too heavily on the future. Oftentimes man's "SOME-day" attitudes prove to be his downfall. His dreams make him a dreamer, his visions invite idleness, and frequently laziness. He becomes a good-for-nothing! He is prone to wait when he should be working. I for one have more confidence in the man who makes the present his first concern. Who rests his life on the "now" of time. This man is energetic and industrious. He turns to the world and says "Some DAY!" And he means it.

Far too many people who profess Christ are looking ahead when they ought to be looking around. They need the present as well as the future. They fail to see that there is a "now" in immortality. They forget that "this mortal must put on immortality." It is a curious fact that if we spell "now" backwards we have "won." This ought to give us something to think about. What the Christ Kingdom needs today above all else are energetic and industrious souls seeking to solve the present moral problems. We need more men and women with courageous convictions, and faith in the present humanity. Men and women who in the face of apparent difficulties can turn to the world and to their neighbor and say "Some DAY!" Thus the "now" becomes "won" as mortality moves on and into immortality. The Christ would have it this way. He said so.

ABRAHAM

MUCH of the Bible, both Old and New Testaments, is an expansion of the Covenant with Abraham. We refer to this covenant constantly in Morning Prayer (in the Benedictus) and in Evening Prayer (The Magnificat). Jesus' arguments with the Pharisees were largely about Abraham. (John 8:33 to end.) St. Paul's epistles devote a very large amount of their attention to the Covenant with Abraham.

Who was Abraham? A wealthy, childless old cattleman, wandering between Babylon and Egypt; friendly with kings; a mighty warrior, helping to defeat invasions; and constantly yearning for a son who should be his heir. (Read Genesis 11:31; 12:4; 12:14; 13:2.)

At night he saw the stars, spread out in miraculous profusion overhead. By day the sands of the desert crunched under his camel's feet. God spoke to him, saying "As the stars of heaven, and as these sands, so great shall be the number of your children." (Genesis 22:15-18.)

How did God speak to him? Why is Abraham known as "Father of the Faithful" to Jews, Mohammedans and Christians alike?

In Egypt, where he had dealings with Pharaoh—doubtless selling him cattle for his armies in their Syrian campaigns—he saw the Egyptian temples with their statues of beast-headed gods. In Egypt forty-two such beast-gods were worshipped, besides Osiris (the Nile), Isis (the land), and Horus (the sun). In Babylonia there were numberless gods; Bel-Marduk, Ishtar, Nebo, Nannar, Ea, and many others. Along the seacoast Moloch was worshipped. Moving from country to country, and spending much time alone between the stars and the sand, Abraham received the great revelation: There is but One God, creator of sun, moon and stars, earth and sea.

The old man ardently desired a son, since religion was handed down from father to son; and he did not desire that this revelation should perish with him. He was very old when Isaac was born. The word Isaac means "Laughter." The word "laugh" occurs constantly in the story of his birth. (Read Genesis, Chapter 17:17; 18:12, 13, 15; 21:6). The name Isaac might be translated "Merryheart." One can imagine how much joy a baby would bring an elderly couple who had despaired of having one.

In all the countries round about, the custom of sacrificing the first-born son prevailed. Among the Phoenicians, he was burned to Moloch. Among the Chaldaeans, he was buried alive. Abraham doubtless was reminded by servants and neighbors of this custom. "Of course," they would say, "you will sacrifice Merryheart." Driven and tormented by this constant pressure of public opinion, Abraham started to sacrifice Isaac on the top of Mount Moriah. Then "an angel spoke to him"—a direct inspiration came to him from the Mind of God; a great, revolutionary light—saying, "God wants no dead boys; He wants the services of the living, not the blood of the dead."

Abraham struck the first great blow against human sacrifice. Instead of killing his son on the altar, he dedicated him and all his descendants to the service of God for all generations. A mark was made in the flesh of every boy, a mark known as circumcision. This was the seal of the Old Covenant.

In your Bibles mark the places where this Old Covenant is referred to: Chapter 12: verses 1, 2, 3, 7, 8; Chapter 13: 4, 18; Chapter 15: 1-19; Chapter 17: 1-14; Chapter 22: 15-19.

On the basis of this Covenant, the Hebrew nation laid claim to Palestine. The whole Old Testament is the story of the working out of this Covenant.

It is a little confusing to follow the story of Abraham, which fills up the chapters of Genesis from Chapter 12 to Chapter 25. It seems as though there were two or three different accounts woven together. In fact, this is just what happened. Just as in the New Testament there are four Gospels, each telling the story of the Life of Christ in a way somewhat different from each of the others, yet all forming the Life of Christ, so in the Old Testament there are several different accounts.

Grouped around their fires at night, with nothing to do but look at the stars and sand, the descendants of Abraham heard these stories told from generation to generation, with such slight variations as always occur when several people tell the same story. We shall hear much more about this later.

PERSONAL APPLICATION

As Abraham dedicated his son to the service of God, so should we dedicate ourselves and our possessions to the service of God and humanity, and to the building of His Kingdom upon earth. In fact this covenant is made between each Christian and God in the service of Holy Communion: "Here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee."

MEMORY WORK

Memorize these texts (Genesis 22:18. God said unto Abraham: in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.)

John 8:56; Jesus said; Your father Abraham rejoiced to see My day; and he saw it, and was glad. Verily, verily I say unto you, before Abraham was, I am.

AN UNUSUALLY FINE BOOK ABOUT MAHATMA GANDHI

Reviewed by G. M. DAY

That Strange Little Brown Man, Gandhi by Bishop Frederick B. Fisher (Long and Smith $2.50) is such a fascinating book and at the same time contains so much information concerning the life and principles of Gandhi and the conditions with which he is dealing in India that it would be difficult to praise the book too highly. It gives an insight into the tremendous problems of that great country and its people and faces the perplexing questions so fearlessly that it would be of great value if every Westerner and especially every Western Christian could read it. Coming out of the experience of Bishop Fisher's twenty-eight years as a missionary in India, it has the particular advantage of the vividness and in concrete detail which only a man who has been an eye-witness can give.

So full is it of excellent material that the problem is to know which part to touch upon in this review. After showing why he believes Gandhi is not a fanatic but on the contrary a statesman of the highest order, Dr. Fisher gives accounts of his hero's fight against indentured labor in South Africa; of the development of Gandhi's pacifist convictions during the world war; of the influence of Thoreau, Emerson, William L. Garrison, Lincoln, and Wilson upon the Mahatma's thought; of his beliefs about the relation of Hinduism and Christianity and his attitude toward Christian missions; of the development of sex ideas in India and of the beautiful character of Madame Gandhi; of the causes of India's poverty; of why the strange little brown man spins; and concludes with chapters giving evidence of India's readiness and ability to govern herself.

Some of the facts given in the chapter on India's poverty will not be palatable to the Anglo-Saxon conscience. Ancient India was a wealthy country but after its exploitation began by the East India Company, the dividends to the stockholders of that company never went below one hundred and fifteen per cent for one hundred years. In 1787 India exported a million and a half pounds of muslin to England but within thirty years England had crushed this manufacture completely. When the Crown bought the country from the company, it paid the bill by taxes laid on the Indian people. Even to-day living in the midst of this poverty-stricken land the Viceroy receives three times the salary of the President of the United States and the "ecclesiastical department" of the government costs the Indian people more than a million dollars a year.

One may imagine how Gandhi feels when he realizes the tax burden India bears for the maintenance of the Church of England in India and yet when he went to a service a few years ago at a cathedral in South Africa with C. F. Andrews, the ushers refused to let Gandhi enter because of his color. Fortunately, the wife of the Bishop came along at the critical moment and bravely said: "Come in, both of you, and sit with me". As the author remarks "the incident did not encourage a sensitive Hindu to believe that all love and truth were contained in the Christian church". As we read in the chapter on "What's Wrong with Foreign Missions" of the many unfortunate mistakes made and attitudes assumed by missionaries, we can only wonder that Gandhi not only is tolerant but sees through it all to the supreme beauty of Christ's personality and has the courage to say so. In 1925 Dr. Fisher tells us that over the entrance of one of the tents at the Indian National Congress in Cawnpore, was hung a large framed portrait of Christ on the Cross. "Every Hindu, every Moslem, every Jain, and every Sikh who passed through the entrance gazed at the picture with reverence. Many of them stopped and bowed their heads. Over several doorways of shops surrounding the Congress tent were signs 'Believe in God'. The Hindu not only takes his religion seriously; he takes your religion seriously."

A long jump backwards it is to the story of the young Princess Elizabeth of Hungary who preferred to be a Sister of St. Francis rather than Frederick Barbarossa's Empress, but Saint Elizabeth (Holt $2.50) by E. Von Schmidt-Pauli is the story of the life of this girl who only lived twenty-four years. The style of the book is strikingly beautiful and communicates to the reader much of the quiet charm which we imagine characterized the life of noble women in those days. Turning from the forceful thought and action of a modern Saint like Gandhi, however, I find it hard to thrill to the piety of this mediaeval girl.

DEATH OF JOHN S. LITTELL

The Rev. John Stockton Littell, rector at Lewes, Delaware, died on October 21st after a brief illness. A graduate of Trinity College and the General Seminary he served parishes at Brockport, N. Y.; Keene, N. H.; Hartford, Connecticut, and his last parish in Delaware. He was well known throughout the Church for his writing.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

There is nothing in this world quite as powerful as a man who means it. Gandhi is one. Toyohiko Kagawa, the great Japanese Christian, is another. Recently he wrote this letter to Chinese Christians: "Dear Brothers and Sisters; I want to ask your pardon for my nation. I call your attention, however, to this fact, that even in Japan the minority of the Japanese were against the sending of troops. Pardon me especially because our Christian forces were not strong enough to get the victory over the militarists." Kagawa was later jailed for resisting the policies of his government in sending troops to Manchuria and Shanghai. He said: "Jesus Christ could not live in Japan unless he took out naturalization papers."

A Letter from the Council's Treasurer

The following communication has been received from Mr. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council: "The situation with regard to the collections to November 1st on the quotas allotted to the dioceses is indeed serious. With only two months remaining in the fiscal year the dioceses have remitted to the National Council only 53 per cent of the total they notified the Council to expect and there is a balance still due of $1,014,850. Up to the year 1931, the dioceses had paid to the National Council an average of 99 per cent of the amounts they notified the Council to expect on their quotas. In 1931 the payment was only 91 per cent of expectations with a total shortage of $231,099, and the Council was in consequence faced with a deficit of $252,855 only avoided by the use of Undesignated Legacies heretofore used for new buildings or other permanent objectives. This year legacies are an uncertain asset.

"Through large reductions in appropriations and the fine response of the Church to the 1932 Deficiency Fund Appeal the budget for 1932 has been balanced but only balanced if the dioceses pay what they have told the Council to expect. Our whole system of the balanced budget depends upon the fulfillment of the expectations from the dioceses. A deficit must be avoided.

"Only twelve dioceses and districts out of ninety-nine have sent in the full proportion of their expectations, even after allowing one full month for collection and remittance. The receipts to date are

$355,234 below what they were last year, exclusive of the amounts received for the 1932 Deficiency Fund.

"It seems evident that some dioceses have been using most of the receipts to date in payment of their own diocesan expenses. Such a plan places the full burden of any shrinkage in the payment of pledges upon the National Council instead of a proportionate sharing in such shrinkage by the dioceses. Under the partnership plan now in effect the National Council is dependent upon the several dioceses for the collection of the missionary gifts of the people and relies upon the dioceses to divide all sums received between the diocese and the National Council on the basis of their proportionate share in the objective placed before the people.

"The Church is showing a fine spirit in preparation for the Every Member Canvass. Let the same spirit of determination and sacrifice lead us to make good on our pledges for 1932 and provide the National Council with the money we have authorized them to spend in the support of our missionary work.

"Gird up your loins!"

Patriotic Service at the Heavenly Rest

The Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York City, the Rev. Henry Darlington, rector, was crowded with 3000 members of military and patriotic organizations last Sunday for the service of massing of the colors. This was the 11th consecutive year in which this pageant of patriotism has been held in this beautiful new church. More than 200 flags were displayed in the parade before the service, including the flags of a number of foreign nations.

A similar service was held on the same day at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit.

The supposition is, of course, that he will eventually be ordained to Episcopal orders and be installed as dean.

Matriculation Day at Trinity College

November 2nd was Matriculation Day at Trinity College, with the service being held for the first time in the beautiful new chapel. The address was delivered by Mather Abbott, headmaster of Lawrenceville School. In accordance with the college custom, before the new students were enrolled, due honor was paid to the alumni who had died during the year. Among these was A. P. Burgwin of Pittsburgh, who, while still an undergraduate fifty years ago, took the music of an old Negro spiritual "Was you there when they nailed Him to the tree?" and made of it the Alma Mater song of Trinity, "Neath the Elm." A week before the matriculation service the Mapton Institute quartet visited Trinity and sang this spiritual with deep feeling.

In most American colleges the old ceremony of matriculation has been neglected or simply merged with registration at the beginning of the year. At Trinity it has been retained and is one of the most impressive services of the college year. There are 146 men in the freshman class and 25 men admitted by transfer to the upper classes.

New Kind of Party In New York Parish

Something new in the way of parties is being held today at St. Peter's, New York City. The Auxiliary there is having a measuring party. It seems that the waistlines of the ladies are to be determined and each one has to pay a penny an inch admission. Prizes are given to the most slender and the most corpulent. I know women who wouldn't be too strong for the idea but in the long run it may have a beneficial effect at that. Publicity and public opinion can accomplish wonders.

Awards of the Order of the Sangreal

The Order of the Sangreal, of which the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker is grand master, has announced the conferring of awards for 1932 for distinguished service to God and humanity through the Church. Here they are: Mrs. Hugh Campbell of the diocese of Marquette who as a nurse has ministered for thirty years in the backwoods of that region. Rev. Henry E. Chase, diocese of Eau Claire, for his missionary work. Louisa T. Davis of Virginia for her work as president of the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary. Rev. J. W. Hobson, diocese of West Virginia for his work in the coal areas of that state. Mr. John K. Kent, layman of St. Philip's, Chicago, for his untiring work in that parish. Rev. Gardiner C. Tucker, Alabama, for fifty years the rector at Mobile, Alabama. Mr. Guy T. Barry, layman of Independence, Kansas, for his courageous work for the Church despite grave physical weaknesses. Rev. Gerald H. Catlin, Kentucky, for his missionary work along the Big Sandy River. Mr. E. G. Moon, diocese of Iowa, for his untiring work for the diocese and the National Church. Rev. F. W. Hardy, canon of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, Kentucky, for his work in the field of religious education. Rev. John H. Fitzgerald, Bay Ridge, Long Island, for his work in his parish and for his unusual efficiency in executive positions both in the diocese and in the Church at large. Rev. W. A. Braithwaite of Cortland, N. Y. for having built up his parish to a high standard of generosity, earnestness and devotion. Rev. A. P. Curtiss of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, especially for his work among boys and young men. Rev. George F. Dudley, Washington, for constructive statesmanship in the upholding of Christian ideals in the nation's capital.

The awards are made annually on All Saints' Day. Nominations for the honor are made by members of the Order of the Sangreal and the selections are made from those nominated by the executive committee.

Bishop of Exeter on War Debts

The Bishop of Exeter, England, now preaching and lecturing in this country, stated the other day in Chicago that he is for the cancellation of all war debts and the removal of any suggestion of war guilt from the shoulders of Germany. "Forgiveness is one of the great needs of the world today. We must forgive and forget. Otherwise permanent world peace is impossible." He also stated that the worst of the depression is over and gave it as his opinion that the United States is further on toward recovery than is Great Britain. He gave a number of addresses while in Chicago, including a sermon at St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral and an address before the Sunday Evening Club.

Dr. Darlington Ridicules New York Architecture

The Rev. Henry Darlington, rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York, stated last Sunday that the architecture of the city's great buildings was ridiculous. The sermon was preached at a service at which forty-one memorials were dedicated. "The Church of the Heavenly Rest," he said, "has been erected for permanence. One principle of the Gothic form is that everything shall be as it is represented to be. This church is a contribution to architecture and it will stand century after century."

consisting of Bishop Bratton of Mississippi, the Rev. C. B. Wilmer and the Rev. Moultrie Guerry was appointed to study Negro work in the province. They presented their report at the meeting of the synod this year and their recommendations were unanimously adopted. They were that Negro archdeacons and deans should present their reports to the National Council as well as to their bishops, thus making for the most direct contact possible under present conditions; closer conference and cooperation between the races was urged in the performance of Church work; urged high standards for Negroes seeking the ministry; stated that there should not be discrimination in Church work; and finally recommended that the commission be composed of members of both races.

Opportunity to Worship in Sacramento

One so often hears of vast rural regions where the Episcopal Church is not known that one reads with thankfulness a passage in an address Bishop Moreland of Sacramento made just before his recent retirement from that diocese where he has been bishop since 1899.

"Statistics," he says, "do not measure spiritual growth, yet I may state for our encouragement just a few facts. There are only 27 towns in northern California of 2,000 population or over, and in 24 of these there are Episcopal Churches. There are 10 towns with between 2,000 and 1,000 population, and in 9 of these there are Episcopal Churches. In towns of less than 1,000 we have 11 Episcopal Churches. I do not believe there is

Fiction With a Soul—

Only at rare intervals—once in a very great while—is the unceasing flood of books punctuated by a novel in which plot and theme are so closely interwoven that the story seems to generate a vitality within itself. Such books have soul. Above and beyond their power to entertain; greater than their purpose of depicting a phase of Life or a period of civilization, is this intangible, often unintended, inner significance.

Of such a class is the new novel issued by the Macmillan Company of New York, based on modern Biblical scholarship. Historically accurate, showing how monotheism became triumphant over paganism through a great struggle for social justice in the midst of conditions like those prevailing today. Warmly commended by religious leaders, such as Bishop F. J. McConnell, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and Prof. Shailer Mathews.

By the Waters of Babylon, A Story of Ancient Israel, by Louis Wallis. From all booksellers, or from the Macmillan Company, New York City, for $2.00—Advt.

Delaware Parish Celebrated Anniversary

Over the last week-end St. Luke's, Seaford, Delaware, celebrated their patronal festival and also the tercentenary of the founding of the parish. Lord Delaware, so the story runs, arrived with a load of supplies in 1610, and then came back the following year with still more supplies, and also with 650 people. Among them were families from Seaford, Sussex, England, and they settled in what is now Seaford, Delaware. In this second party was a priest of the Church of England, who traveled up and down among the scattered colonists, ministering to them. This clergyman, who later returned to England, kept a very nice set of records which have recently been discovered, and from them we now know that there were services at Seaford in the homes of the settlers as early as 1632, and

Looks Like Revolution In Germany

Professor Johannes Hempel of the University of Gottingen, Germany, said at the Western Theological Seminary, Chicago, the other day that the political situation in Germany is dependent almost entirely upon the life of President von Hindenburg. If he should die Germany would fall into the hands of radicals, Professor Hempel believes. All of which might prompt the remark, "It won't be long now," since the president is about ninety.

Layman's Work in East Carolina

Bishop Darst of East Carolina has commissioned J. Q. Beckwith of Lumberton to visit the parishes of the dioceses to address the men on laymen's work. One feature of his talks before the men is the story of Captain C. B. Fry, director of the chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Lumberton, who, with the aid of friends, has been doing personal house to house visiting, with a result that the men attending services, on successive Sundays, have been 24, 34, 49 and 66. Also largely as a result of Mr. Fry's work a large class was recently presented to Bishop Darst for confirmation. "It is the sort of work that every Brotherhood chapter should be carrying on," says Mr. Leon Palmer, executive secretary.

Texas Clergyman Begins New Work

The Rev. Bradner J. Moore, formerly in charge at Lubbock, Texas, who resigned under pressure because of his radicalism, has begun work as one of the directors of a cooperative settlement in Louisiana, known as Garden Homes Community. The project is to supply comfortable homes, opportunity for work and study, and security against the vicissitudes of illness and old age, to a selected group of socially minded people. Maintenance farming is the chief aim.

Vol. XVII No. 13 NOVEMBER 24, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

A PAPER MESSAGE

By
CURTIS B. CAMP

THIS article, which came to us entirely unsolicited, is written by a prominent business man and churchman of Chicago. We urge you to read it, after which we hope you will be disposed to use one or more of the coupons on the last page. It is not our intention to run a contest but we do hope there will be sufficient response to his suggestions to warrant us in presenting you with the results by dioceses.

IF YOU knew a good thing to do would you do it? This article is based on the belief that you would, especially if you knew it was something that would help to build up the spiritual life of our Church, and bring new interest into the lives of many of our people. Let us assume it is a thing of that character, and then we will prove it to you in this article. You are going to be convinced that this is something you ought to do, but, will an opportunity to be of service to others, and to your Church (even though it costs very little money and will take very little of your time), overcome your natural tendency not to act. That is the question that is going to be tested if you read this article. It is sometimes called "Indifference," but that is a tame name for it, because it is more deadly to any question than open opposition.

We are told that printing was invented many centuries ago by the "Heathen Chinese." They were not as efficient about it as the modern newspaper printing the news before the event happens, but they were nevertheless printing, while the rest of the world was conveying its information by means of single copies. And the rest of the world, far from being abashed by the source of the information when it finally leaked through the great Chinese wall, fell upon it as a great boon to mankind in every relation where the dissemination of information was desirable. So that the art of printing came into use in every village and hamlet and tongue, and I am very sure you will agree that only a dumb people would have been unable to appreciate its importance. In fact, nobody, up to the present time, ever contended that printing was not an important and useful invention. And if they had, they would by that act have become nobody, seeing that that would have put them, not with, but back of the Heathen Chinese, for they appreciated it. It seems almost impossible, therefore, to imagine anyone today acquiescing in a situation that would curtail or limit the use of printing in our Church. And yet our Church people are showing a strong tendency in that direction. They have almost decided, indirectly, and due to that Indifference we were just speaking about, that there shall be no more news printed, or editorials, or contributed articles made available in Church papers for our people to read.

It is unbelievable, but true, and here are the facts. There are, as you know, a number of high grade, ably edited Church papers devoted exclusively to the interests of our communion. They bring us the news of our National Church, contributed by hundreds of regular correspondents, and edited in an interesting form for us to read. They also carry interesting editorials and contributed articles, written by our bishops and leading clergymen; "shop talk," they might be called, for Christians. If our people read these papers they would speedily become a well informed body of laymen, with a more complete knowledge of their religion, their Church's history and what it is doing in other locations than their own. They would know how our progress compares with that of other communions, and they would be more interested in their own parish, and its activities, because of this knowledge. And how else can our Church, or any organization composed of individual units, make effective progress except through some medium that creates an organization consciousness and loyalty.

If you are a business man you know that it cannot be done in any other way. You know that organization consciousness and loyalty underlie all progress, and that success is directly proportionate thereto. You know also that one of the surest and most approved methods of creating such a cohesive intelligence in the membership, is through the medium of these religious papers we have mentioned, the "trade journals" of our Church. And yet only a few among our Church membership know that such Church papers exist. The great majority of our people have never seen a copy of them.

AS AN example of what could be done if our religious papers were really supported by our Church membership, we have only to look about us in similar situations. There is no line of business today, if it is important enough to bear that title, that does not have its trade papers. There is an index in the New York Public Library containing the names of many thousands of such papers. For instance, the oil industry, the steel industry, the automotive industry, coal, public utilities, drugs, dry-goods, furniture, boots and shoes, hides, public carriers, cotton goods, the wool industry, live stock, chicken magazines, farm produce, medical journals, dentist publications, cosmetics and beauty shoppe magazines, club and lodge magazines, to mention only a few. In fact, every business that consists of a large number of isolated units or branches, as our Church does, has its trade journals to create interest and solidarity among the people composing those units. And the people engaged in those lines of endeavor subscribe for and read those journals. They are the pulse of the industry, because from them the people learn what is going on in other locations than their own, they get a perspective of the progress being made in their industry all along the line. It is common knowledge that these publications are indispensable in business.

Well, they are then, just as indispensable to the Church, and for the same reasons. And you will know this if you have been reading your WITNESS, but can we persuade you to do anything about it? The Church is exactly the same kind of an organization as those in which these trade papers are so invaluable. In fact, they parallel each other in organization. The Church has a head, the Presiding Bishop and main divisions, the dioceses, and isolated branches, the parishes and missions, just as the largest of these business organizations, and like them also it covers the whole United States and beyond.

Here is the proposition we want to put up to you. You are a subscriber to a real Church paper, a snappy weekly of generous circulation, edited by a staff of able men, and the price of the paper is only a trifle, but it is not read by enough people. Only a comparative few receive the benefit intended for many. Wouldn't you like to help this situation by seeing that someone else knew about this paper, so that they might also have the stimulus of it, as it would bring to them a message of religious interest each week from outside of their own parish. Wouldn't you like to take some action that would increase the number of people who would enjoy its news items, its articles and editorials, and thus keep in touch with the progress and sometimes the controversy, not to exaggerate it, that is going on elsewhere in our Church. Of course, not in your Parish, but there is controversy in our Church, and sometimes it is amusing, sometimes instructive, and sometimes it develops into a good wholesome fight, and everyone ought to know about it.

THIS Church paper needs your help as a subscriber because it cannot sell remunerative advertising space as can the business trade journals we were just talking about. It gets so little advertising that it must depend almost entirely upon paid subscriptions. It is different in another vital respect also. It is not a commercial enterprise. It is not published for profit. It is published solely to be of service to our Church people, and it is appealing to its subscribers at this time for two reasons: to enable it to keep alive, and because a better, stronger paper can be produced, and more good accomplished for its readers with a larger circulation. There is no other motive.

And here is what you may say about THE WITNESS, a National Weekly of the Episcopal Church. It is a sixteen page, beautifully printed and illustrated paper, edited by the Right Rev. Irving P. Johnson, Bishop of Colorado, and by Right Rev. Frank E. Wilson, Bishop of Eau Claire, Rev. William B. Spofford, Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, Dr. John Rathbone Oliver, Rev. C. Russell Moodey, and Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, and articles are contributed by our other bishops, leading clergymen and laymen. Mr. Tucker is conducting a national Bible Class through the columns of the paper. Both Bishop Johnson and Bishop Wilson have articles every week, such as Bishop Johnson's popularly written History of the Church, now published in book form, and he recently started another interesting series of articles. His writings alone are of inestimable value to any churchman; and the subscription price of the paper is four cents a week! Four cents a week, the price of five cigarettes! An ice cream soda or a malted milk would pay for the paper for a month, and three or four movie tickets, depending on the movie, would purchase a year's subscription. It costs only two dollars a year and a good part of that goes for postage to get the paper to you.

Everyone would be a subscriber if they only knew about it, it costs so little. The men who edit and publish this paper and give their time and ability to help our religious life through its columns, are among the biggest men in our Church. I ask you if we do not owe it to them, just as a matter of fairness or polite appreciation, to give their efforts, spent in our behalf, our support, at least to the extent of attempting to interest some additional churchmen in the work they are doing? So that their work may not fail because our people do not know about it, but that it may have an opportunity, due to that knowledge on the part of our people, to go forward with success.

THE WITNESS is now in its seventeenth year, but unless some of its subscribers, those who know about it and read it, are sufficiently interested to recommend it to others, this national magazine might be lost to our Church. Will you help by using one of the coupons printed on the last page of this issue?

If we have called your attention to a real need in your Church, one that you may help to supply, and one that will help some one else in their religious life, won't you act before the good impulse fades, by cutting out and mailing at least one of those coupons, which we will mention in the order of their desirability.

Coupon No. 1 is to be filled in with the name and address of some new subscriber whom we assume you will secure. It should be very easy to do.

Coupon No. 2 is to be filled out with the name and address of some person to whom the paper may be sent with your compliments for six months.

Coupon No. 3 provides for the name and address of two or three persons in your parish whom you think might like to subscribe for the paper, and with whom THE WITNESS may communicate. Giving the paper to some friend for six months will get them started as a subscriber, and they will be advised that it is being sent to them with your compliments. Please obey the good impulse by cutting the coupons out now, and putting them in your pocket as a reminder that later on you are going to use one and maybe all of them.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

The Resurrection

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

WHATEVER we may believe as individuals, the Gospel of Christ comes to us as the work and plan of our dear Lord. Whatever we do, we cannot change the foundations and at the same time preserve the structure of the Christian Church. God has given man liberty to lay any foundation and to build any temple that he choose, but he cannot build the Christian Church upon any other foundation than that which is laid. Such an institution may be ever so attractive as a building, but it is not the Church of Jesus Christ. St. Paul intimates that it is better to use hay and stubble in building on His foundation than it is to use precious stones on another foundation than that which is already laid. It is folly to put up an ambitious structure on a weak foundation. Far better to erect a simple temple on a secure foundation. What then is the foundation of the Christian Church?

It consists of the facts in our Lord's life supplemented by His teaching. The Church is built upon a rock and that rock is Christ. So the Creed properly presents the sequence of events in our Lord's life as the basis of the promises with which the Creed concludes. The Creed is an arch of which the Keystone is "I believe that on the third day He rose again from the dead."

It is not merely that a future life is the reward of virtue but also that the whole Gospel of Christ is meaningless without it. His suffering would have been fruitless, the exhortation that His loved ones suffer death rather than deny Him would have been little less than criminal if death were the end of the story; His Church would have been built on the sands of defeatism if He had not prevailed over sin and death.

You cannot subtract the Resurrection from our Lord's life without changing the entire content of the Gospel. It would be literally true, as St. Paul says, that Christians of his time would have been of all men most miserable, for his whole life was committed to that which he said to King Agrippa, "Having therefore obtained help from God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, that Christ should suffer and that He should be the first that should rise from the dead and should show light unto the people and to the Gentiles."

MUCH as may be said for the small value of virtue which acts solely for an ultimate reward, still it is difficult to see how the Gospel could have appealed to primitive people if it had nothing to say upon this subject. This is the very essence of Christ's life, upon which the Church has been built and while much can be said of the failure of the Church to exemplify the effect of such a faith, it is not so great a failure as are the substitutes for it that have been tried.

If the Church has succeeded, as it has, in making many saints, it has done fully as well as the universities whose percentage of scholars is not very great. The truth is that in science, art and religion, the percentage of achievement is not very impressive. Nor did our Lord hold out expectations that there would be many who would have faith. "Few there be that find it," and "when I come again shall I find faith in the earth." No great truth is dependent for its reality upon the number of people who accept it and least of all where truth demands sacrificial effort. Then "because I tell you the truth you will not believe it."

I believe in the Resurrection of our Lord because it is the only satisfactory climax that could have justified His life of suffering and death. It satisfies the equation of human need, and divine recognition of man's righteousness.

Certainly there is nothing in this life to justify the martyrdom of those who place righteousness above policy.

I believe in the Resurrection of Christ because it is attested by a jury of twelve men who were averse to lying and utterly incapable of such a gigantic piece of deception as their story would have involved.

I believe in the Resurrection of Christ because it has been able to raise men out of savagery and out of misery unto the glorious liberty of the Sons of God. No one can adequately measure the power of His Resurrection in its effect upon human character wherever pure motives have been accompanied by sincere effort.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

I believe in the Resurrection of Christ because it is the vindication of the Creator's goodness and power to bring order out of chaos and life out of death. When our Lord was questioned by the Sadducees as to the truth of the Resurrection, He summed up this conviction in the words "God is not the God of the dead but of the living."

In other words the last word of God's creative genius is not dust and ashes but life and purpose. After all the miracle of life is to be found in the world; the purpose of life lies beyond the veil. To say that Christ's life ended on the cross is to assert that He Who made us exhausted His power and left His work sadly incomplete. The Cross, detached from the Resurrection, proclaims that human malice is victorious over righteousness and that death is the final acknowledgment of God's impotence.

Looking at the Resurrection from the standpoint of Hebrew expectation, it satisfies the prophecy. Looking at it from the view point of contemporary Greek and Roman life, it supplies the one thing lacking to make their moral philosophy effective. Looking at it in retrospect from our own time, it has brought love, joy and peace to millions of homes.

From the angle of the fitness of things in a well ordered universe, it is almost too good to be true but who can really question either the goodness of God to do the obvious thing or His power to bring it to pass. I believe that He Who hath begun a good work in us is both able and willing to bring it to its fitting consummation, and that is victory over sin and death.

WHAT are the implications of this article of the Creed? First, that man is morally responsible to God for his deeds done in the flesh. Secondly that moral responsibility involves the continuity of the ego for we must give account of our stewardship. Third, that death involves a reconstruction of our earthly attributes based upon our life on earth. "We shall not be unclothed but clothed upon." Fourth, that the constituent elements of our personality shall not be destroyed but developed and perfected.

There is considerable difficulty in visualizing the Resurrection because of our theories about soul and body. Of course, no one really knows what either spirit or matter is except that they are not what they seem. Modern science has repudiated the mid-victorian conception of matter and propounded theories that seem to invest matter with the properties of the soul. It would seem from their deductions that there may be a very close relationship between soul and body in which I am confident the materialistic element is secondary to the spiritual.

I believe in the resurrection of the body because our Lord so rose and also because I believe the electrons that go to make up the body are intimately related to the elements which constitute the soul. Any theories, however, of soul and body are worthless unless we know what the soul is and what the body is. Until such definite information is acquired I am content to believe that when I awake after His likeness I shall be satisfied with it.

I prefer to accept the leading of God's providence in the affairs of men than to be impressed with the theories of men who are unable to define the terms which lie at the foundation of their theories. After all it is possible to be so infused with technical knowledge that one is unrelated to the things that are included in common sense.

Let's Know

BISHOP WILSON

WHAT ONE LAYMAN CAN DO

SAMUEL GUNN was born way back in 1763 in Connecticut and was baptized before the Revolutionary War. He was one of the first to be presented to Bishop Seabury for confirmation. The time came when his parish church was without a priest and for ten or twelve years Gunn acted as Layreader holding together the little congregation with regular services.

Pressed by the pioneer spirit he then moved over to a frontier settlement in New York where he gathered about him a group of people and began to read services again. Eventually the congregation grew until it was able to secure a priest of its own and Samuel Gunn left a parish behind him.

In 1805 he moved on to the receding frontier, embarked on a boat and sailed down the Ohio River. He stopped at a new settlement which came to be known as Portsmouth. Still considering himself a Layreader at large, he proceeded to read services once more. For some time his own family comprised his entire congregation but gradually more began to attend. In 1819 word reached him that Ohio had been formed into a diocese and had elected its own bishop—the redoubtable Philander Chase. To Gunn's surprise and delight he discovered that the new bishop was none other than the same Chase whom he had known as a priest in New York and who had frequently visited at his home. Thus two pioneer spirits, bishop and layman, were drawn together on a new frontier. He wrote Bishop Chase telling of the beginnings he had made in Portsmouth and placing himself under the new bishop's episcopal supervision. Presently the bishop sent a priest to Portsmouth to visit the little congregation and after a time came himself. Bishop Chase formed the congregation into a parish and appointed Samuel Gunn as Layreader in charge. His efforts were aided by the discovery of some Prayer Books in a store in the village which had long since been marked as unsalable commodities. Now, however, they came into demand. Cash was a rare article but at least one of those Prayer Books brought as high a price as twenty bushels of corn. For years Samuel Gunn kept the congregation together. Disease and other frontier hardships thinned them down until at one time there were scarcely any left but he never gave up. In 1823 he was able to arrange for a monthly visit from a priest fifty miles away in days when that much travel was a real achievement. At last in 1831 a room was fitted up in churchly fashion and their numbers had grown to such a point that they could have a resident priest of their own.

By that time Samuel Gunn was not so young and his health was breaking. He had a severe accident which practically incapacitated him. But his heart was set on building a church for his faithful flock. He called together some of his friends and among other things said to them—"You know, my friends, that I am not rich and that twice I have lost my all. Yet Providence has given me enough, and my property is now worth a little more than two thousand dollars; of this I will give one-third towards the erection of the proposed edifice, on condition that you will contribute the remainder of the necessary amount." Who could resist such an appeal? The money was raised and the church was built but, unfortunately, not until after the good man's death.

Today Portsmouth, Ohio, has a parish of 318 communicants and, most appropriately, it bears the name of All Saints.

Casual Comment

BERNARD IDDINGS BELL

IT IS with certain misgivings that I take up the pen of him who wrote "Cheerful Confidences." My hesitancy is due partly to the fact that the late Dr. Atwater was one of the honored mentors of my boyhood. It always comes as a shock to realize that the older men have gone, one by one, and left their labors to be borne by those of one's own generation. Not that I am any youngster. I kissed youth good-bye, as any sane man will, when I reached thirty-five, and that is a decade ago. Still, I was a boy in Dr. Atwater's eyes. Even his geniality might not lead him to look with happiness upon his column in the hands of a tyro like myself. But the editors have asked me to do it and do it I shall, with appeal to all readers for indulgence and to God for His grace.

It is chiefly necessary to breath a long sigh of relief that the election is over. What unpleasant things, even though necessary, such campaigns are, and how inescapable. Thanks to the ghastly radio, the populace becomes more wearied than the candidates. Is politics really worth all the pother? Statecraft is a noble trade; but must there be such yelling at the hustings? Well, it is past. Members of every party agree in recognizing that the ins are now very much put out, and the outs very much put in. The new blood may help the nation, and a vacation will possibly rejuvenate those who have gone a bit stale on the job.

What fun it would be if we could have a national plebescite every four years in the Church, with a couple of rival parties contending for the control of the National Council, and three or four lusty members of the heirarchy talking their heads off in order to get Bishop Perry's job. It might have certain disadvantages; but at least we should all get to know a lot of things, that we do not know now, about ecclesiastical persons and policies. Who is the Hoover of the Church? Who the Roosevelt? Who the Norman Thomas? Who the Al Smith? Who the Ogden Mills? Whoever they are, if we could only turn them loose in a quadrennial election, we could shake the dry bones!

But does any one wish to shake them? It is doubtless much better to go on governing by means of a bureaucracy re-indorsed every three years at a love-feast. That is, doubtless, what we shall continue to do until we go broke, or dry up and blow away.

THE QUARREL OF THE HEIRS

Lesson Nine

GREAT discoveries sometimes follow unlikely beginnings. Sir Isaac Newton formulated the law of gravity, explaining the orbits of the sun and stars, because a falling apple struck his nose. So the Old Testament, on which the New Testament and all our world-wide Church of today is based, arose from a claim to property; a real estate transaction. Abraham's descendants claimed the enormously valuable tract of land between the Euphrates River and the River of Egypt, the southern desert and Lebanon, as the result of a promise made to Abraham in a vision, and confirmed in similar visions to his son Isaac and his grandson Jacob. "I will give this land to you and your heirs," was the substance of the Old Covenant, "if you will worship me." It became of great importance to decide just who were the rightful heirs.

Abraham had two sons, the one, Ishmael, the elder, by Hagar a bondmaid; the other, Isaac, the younger, by a freewoman, his wife and cousin Sarah. Ishmael was the father of the Arabs; Isaac of the Hebrews. The Hebrews claimed the Canaan estates on the ground that Abraham had repudiated Ishmael, when he sent Hagar, his mother, into the wilderness to die. Read Genesis 16; also Genesis 21: 9-22; and Galatians 4:21. According to St. Paul, "these things are an allegory." But to the Hebrews, they were the ground of their property rights.

Isaac also had two sons, Esau and Jacob. Esau was the elder of twins, and was recognized as the first-born. But Jacob claimed the inheritance on the ground that Esau had sold it to him for a stew of red herbs—which is why Esau is called "Edom," which means "red." Gen. 27.

Jacob and all his twelve sons went into Egypt in the time of famine and stayed there a long time. Meanwhile the people who remained in the land of Canaan had forgotten the claim of the heirs of Jacob to possess it. When they came back to take it, under the leadership of Moses and Joshua, the Canaanites fought them bitterly. We can hardly blame them.

We find ourselves greatly perplexed, when we read these accounts of the quarrels of the heirs of Abraham for this land. We find the household disputes of Isaac and Jacob, their wives and their children, set forth in great detail; we find stories which are unpleasant and even repulsive, in these books of the Old Testament. We find that the reason why they are included in The Law is not for any moral reason, but because they form evidence in a long and bitter international quarrel over the right to certain valuable property. It is like the transcript of a Probate Court hearing of a long fight over a rich ancestor's will. In fact, that is just what it is.

How, then, can we regard all this as the Word of God?

The Bible does not regard itself as the Word of God. The Psalm says, "By the Word of the Lord were the heavens made." The Bible certainly did not make the heavens. In another place it says "Thy Word, O Lord, is eternal in the heavens." The Bible does not fulfil this saying. St. John says "In the Beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God and the Word was God." The Bible is a printed book; it is not God.

The "Word of God" is the divine purpose; the Creative Impulse. When the "Word of God came" to one of the prophets, this means that he perceived the Will of God; that he understood the Divine Purpose, and proclaimed it. The Bible is the written Record of what was done by those who perceived the Creative Impulse.

The Word of God is much bigger, grander and more glorious than any printed book. The whole Universe is the Created Word. Christ and all the saints of God forming His Body are the Incarnate Word. The record of what they have done is the Written Word.

God is always writing His Word, and we are forever trying to read new pages in it. Frequently we find that old ideas have to be thrown away under the impulse of new truth.

Columbus set sail westward to discover a trade route; what he found was a new world. So the heirs of Jacob in attempting to establish a claim to their ancestral estates, were driven by their continual failure and disappointment to seek ever higher and higner knowledge of the nature of God. Christ repudiated many of their ideas. But we must know what their ideas were, so we can understand what Christ meant.

We must follow these quarrels of the heirs of Abraham, in order to understand how they reached the sublime moral height from which they became the messengers of God to the world.

MEMORY WORK

We ought to be able to name the twelve tribes of Israel, because so much depends on them. Divide them up into groups of four, thus:

Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah;
Issachar, Zebulon, Naphtali, Gad;
Asher, Dan, Joseph, Benjamin.

Just Souls

By

C. RUSSELL MOODEY

I HAD to cut the whole top out of the old pear tree last week. The old pear tree that stands near the lich-gate which leads to the church. It was not a pleasant experience I can tell you, for this tree has stood there as a sentinel at the gate for many years. It was not only rooted and grounded in the earth, but with the passing days it had grown into the hearts of the people. Year in and year out it sent forth its beautiful blossoms to increase the glory of the setting. People paused to pay tribute to its majesty. But now, with creaking and crashing, its limits dropped to the ground. This spring instead of blossom only naked arms reached up, in grim bareness, to mar the picture. The pear tree was dead—its top rotted away. Why did it die? This is why—because another tree closeby had been the victor in the struggle for survival. It had lifted itself until it towered over the pear tree. Its great branches pushing outward year by year slowly throttled the growth of its neighbor. In other words the pear tree was crowded out, and therefore it died. Crowded out, mind you, till it rotted away.

I wonder if many souls are not going through a similar experience. I wonder if God isn't crowded out by those other interests which seem to tower above the spiritual. After everything else is tended to then we begin to ponder over the destiny of the soul. Queer attitude isn't it—and yet are you and I exceptions to the fact? And what can the outcome be, may I ask, but death—grim death to that which should be immortal, eternal. Strange, how much time we have for everything under Heaven except God. We cannot feed our heart on excuses and expect it to thrive. The old struggle between the alibi and the alible is going on. Unless we nourish these souls, unless we fill them with the vitality of the Christ they cannot survive. They may blossom for a time but then they are through. If we have any regard for the soul let us nurture it—bring it regularly to the Sanctuary for Christ to renew it, to strengthen it. To give it Life from on high. If we fail in this matter, some day time will "cut out the Top," and all because the Christ was crowded out.

MISSION REPORT IS PRESENTED AT GREAT MEETINGS

Reported by W. B. SPOFFORD

Seven hundred church dignitaries, representing scores of denominations, were present at the meetings in New York, November 18th and 19th, when the long-awaited report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry was presented. Our own Church was represented by all the officers and department heads of the Church Missions House and by a number of National Council members, officially appointed at the last meeting of the Council. Messrs. Stephen Baker, Lincoln Cromwell, George Wharton Pepper, John E. Rousmaniere and George W. Wickersham represented the Episcopal Church on the Board of Directors of the Inquiry, but served not officially either for the General Convention or the National Council but as laymen who are convinced that an appraisal of foreign missions is desirable.

Those critical of the Inquiry on the ground that the group assumed official backing were put straight before the meeting was five minutes old. Mr. Albert L. Scott, Baptist, business man and engineer, who is chairman of the directors of the Inquiry and one of the fifteen commissions to go to the foreign fields for study, stated at once that "We do not represent anybody but ourselves." He explained how the Inquiry came into being in January, 1930. A committee of five Baptists was formed as a result of a meeting called together by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. They decided that a thoroughgoing and scientific study of foreign missions should be undertaken. Soon laymen of other denominations asked to be represented on the committee. First a group of 27 expert fact-finders were sent to the Far East. With their findings in hand a group of 15 commissions then went to the Orient. Thus this Report, the work of 42 trained observers who spent two years on the field, is something to be taken seriously by all interested in Foreign Missions, according to Mr. Scott; a statement with which few will be disposed to quarrel.

The outstanding address at this week-end conference was made by Dr. William E. Hocking, professor of philosophy at Harvard and the chairman of the Inquiry commissioners. In simple language, without oratory, he presented a defense of foreign missions which was a masterpiece. The Report, he insisted, was written by a group of outstanding church people who are thoroughly in sympathy with foreign missions, people "who look upon the mission enterprise as being not a matter of choice but a matter of obligation." Yet they returned from their study also convinced "that changes are imperative if the mission enterprise is to maintain its dignity and importance, its pertinence in this world."

BERNARD IDDINGS BELL
A New Witness Columnist

Those making the study, he said, represent both the liberal and the conservative point of view. But they have not tried to establish a common denominator. Rather, recognizing their differences, this group of distinguished men and women returned from the foreign field convinced that cooperation on matters which are of common concern is not only desirable but imperative. "Our belief is," said Professor Hocking, "that in the process of cooperation these differences, which are in part differences of expression, will come to clearer understanding, and that we shall be drawn nearer together through that preliminary act of sharing in a common deed and in a common purpose."

Foreign missions, said the speaker, no longer stands prominent as one of the few great things to which men give their support. Now it stands as one of two hundred benevolent things, with the demands upon men's pocketbooks multiplied ten-fold, a fact which must be recognized by those responsible for missionary appeals. The Inquiry group, he said, recognized that missions is the work of God, "too holy to be touched and judged by our feeble intellects; but we tried to recognize also that the work of God has a side which de-

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

The Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, vicar of the Chapel of the Intercession, New York, was elected rector of Trinity Parish, New York, on November 14th, and will I presume spend the next two weeks acknowledging congratulatory messages. Well he is a top-notcher, deserves all that he gets and certainly is no more to be congratulated than the parish that had the wisdom to call him to this important post. Dr. Fleming was born in Maine in 1886. He went to college but had to leave because of family reverses and went to work for a large biscuit company. He rolled trucks I presume for a starter, but he ended up on that job as the assistant to the president. He then entered the Western Seminary, also taking courses at Lewis Institute, Chicago. Later he attended Oxford, England, for a time. He was first the rector at LaSalle, Illinois, leaving there to become the rector of the Atonement, Chicago, where he did an exceptionally fine piece of work. He went from there to St. Stephen's, Providence, and in 1930 to New York as the vicar at the Intercession. He is particularly well known as a Lenten preacher and as a lecturer at various summer conferences. He is a member of all sorts of boards and committees and doubtless will be on a lot more before the year is out. He is married, has a daughter fourteen and a boy eleven, and his picture is on the cover so that you can see what the new rector of Trinity looks like. He is a very human individual, is known to his intimates as "Fritz", and has the happy faculty of making you feel that you are one of his intimate friends after two or three meetings. On hot summer afternoons he is often seen behind first base in the Yankee Stadium. Here's hoping that the new job won't keep him so busy that he cannot continue to be a real fan.

A Bit About the Cleveland Dean

As a matter of fact the Rev. Chester B. Emerson is not as yet the dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland. However this former Congregational minister, by an ancient custom, can become canon residentia, and he is to take that office next month. Dr. Emerson was confirmed at St. Paul's Cathedral recently by Bishop Page. He moves to Cleveland within a week or two where he is to serve as canon and layreader, and later as deacon. Eventually, supposedly, he will be ordained priest after which he will be elected dean. Meanwhile Bishop Rogers is to be the acting dean.

According to Archdeacon Patterson of Ohio, Dr. Emerson, who was the pastor of the largest Congregation in the United States, outside of New York City, has long had leanings toward the Episcopal Church. Last winter members of the executive committee of the Cathedral went to Detroit to hear him preach with an idea of calling him to the Cathedral. A dozen men had been nominated for the post by Bishop Rogers, but to them none seemed as desirable as Dr. Emerson. So the other day, after a lapse of a number of months, he was called.

Dr. Emerson has been prominent in the Congregational Church; a former moderator of the Michigan state conference and a member of the executive committee on missions of the National Council of the Congregational Churches. Last year he was president of the Detroit Pastors' Union and is now the president of the Detroit Council of Churches. He has been the pastor of the Detroit church for nineteen years, is a graduate of Bowdoin College and of the Union Seminary and has been a life long friend of Bishop Rogers. Last year he was made a 33rd degree Mason.

Puts His Congregation to Work

The way to interest people in the Church, so wise men say, is to give people something to do. In any case it is working out that way at the Ascension, Pueblo, Colorado, where the Rev. H. C. Benjamin has about fifty members of his congregation working at relief among the unemployed. The city is distributing about $50,000 a month, with Mr. Benjamin in charge of the delivery of groceries and coal to the needy. On a recent Saturday night he had about 200 orders on hand undelivered, with hungry and cold people waiting for this relief. So on Sunday morning instead of preaching a sermon he told the congregation about this work and asked every person who drove to church to meet him in his office following the service. These cars were loaded up with groceries, and I take it with coal also (I hope in baskets) and delivered to these people. Mr. Benjamin reports that the Episcopal Church in Pueblo has taken the lead in relief work. "The ministerial association", he writes, "passed resolutions commending the work of relief but couldn't be found when the work had to be done. They were busy drafting new resolutions on the prohibition amendment and closing the picture shows after midnight."

Unveil Monument to Bishop Garrett

At Dudley, Texas, a monument honoring Bishop A. C. Garrett, first bishop of the district, was unveiled on November 6th. The monument marks the site of the log house in which Bishop Garrett in 1878 held the first service in what is now the district of North Texas, after having driven in a buck-board nearly 200 miles from Dallas. Masons in that part of the country contributed generously to the fund for this sixteen foot monument, and Mr. H. B. Robertson, 33rd degree Mason, represented the fraternity by delivering an address. Bishop Seaman also paid tribute to the pioneer bishop. The service was attended by large numbers, including two sons and several grand children of Bishop Garrett.

One of the last articles to appear in this paper by the late George Parkin Atwater was one in which he appealed to vestries and parishes to pay their rectors' salaries. He stated that a number of clergymen had informed him that the wherewithal to keep the parson and his family alive seemed to be considered the last obligation in many parishes today. Two or three had even told him that great pressure was placed upon them to pay diocesan and national Church quotas under penalty of never being called from their missions to parishes unless they did so. Dr. Atwater, you possibly recall, stated very definitely that the first item in any parish budget should be for the rector's salary.

Now further evidence comes to hand that many clergymen are paid these days in groceries rather than cash. At a meeting of church pension organizations the other day in New York a report was presented, based upon a survey, showing that there was a marked degree of unemployment among ministers, drastic reductions in salaries, and a tendency either to fall considerably behind on the payment of salaries or to pay them in turnips and carrots.

Hymn Writers Meet in Convention

The convention of hymn writers and composers met in New York last week and got quite a shock when three clergymen, reporting as a committee, assailed the majority of hymns and asserted that the traditional tunes and words were driving young people from the churches. They said that old hymns in many instances forced people to lie by singing words they did not believe, and that large numbers of them were refusing to do so. The majority of hymns, the report said, were "hectic, sentimental effusions of medieval mystics.

"It certainly would amaze many a worshiper if he sat down quietly and studied the hymns which he is singing. Do they really express for him the highest religious values? Can he use such words, even as the poetry of the past, and mean what he says? Granted that mature and sympathetic churchmen can do this, may we reasonably expect it of youth? The answers of those who know best the temper of college students will vary from serious doubt to frank denial.

"Certainly a multitude of boys and girls in the 'teens are turning away from the church entirely. For this there are many reasons; but surely one may be a sense of unreality, a lack of practical helpfulness, a certain quaint and curious queerness in the services, and one element in that unreality may be in the hymns.

"Of those who come no doubt a goodly number do sing what the minister ordains and try to sing it sincerely. Others, however, are simply 'making a joyful noise'—not always to the Lord!—singing for the sake of singing, even for mere politeness, words which belie their true thoughts and needs and which, in the eyes of God, must seem to be pious ecclesias-

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

WE ARE very happy to announce two new columns in THE WITNESS. The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, warden of St. Stephen's College, Columbia University, is to conduct a column each week in which he will comment, in the vigorous style for which he is so well known, upon current events which he believes should be brought to the attention of Church people. Rev. John Rathbone Oliver, noted author and psychiatrist, is also to conduct a column in which he will answer questions of general interest dealing with matters that would naturally be asked of a man serving in the double capacity of priest and psychiatrist. Any questions for Dr. Oliver should be sent to the editorial office of THE WITNESS, 931 Tribune Building, New York, and not directly to him. Dr. Bell's column appears in this issue; Dr. Oliver's will start with the first issue of December.

tical fibs — for the singers do not mean to lie.

"We teach youth that in speaking prose with persons, they must tell the truth; too often in church we suggest that it is proper to say anything, true or false, if it is only rhymed, set to music and sung to God."

New English Missionary Bishop

The Rev. W. H. Baddeley will be consecrated Bishop of the English diocese of Melanesia on St. Andrew's Day. The new bishop goes out to take charge of a staff of fifty missionaries, thirty native priests and deacons and a staff of six hundred native teachers. This is the diocese where just sixty-one years ago the first bishop, John Patteson, was martyred in revenge for the kidnaping of natives by English traders. Old mission reports contain gruesome tales of cannibalism in these regions. Melanesia, in case your son or daughter is not keeping you up on your geography, is a long stretch of islands off the north-east coast of Australia. It has a population of about half a million, of whom 141,000 are Christians. The diocese is one of nine which make up the Anglican province of New Zealand.

Real Campaign Effort in Bethlehem

If the diocese of Bethlehem fails to raise its full quota this fall it won't be because a real effort has not been made. Among those who have given addresses on the subject during the past few weeks are Bishop Roberts of South Dakota, Bishop Moulton of Utah, Bishop Cross of Spokane, Miss Sallie Dean of Richmond, the Rev. B. H. Reinheimer, executive secretary of the field department of the National Council, and the Rev. C. H. Collett, general secretary of the same department. Then in addition Bishop Sterritt and the Archdeacon of the diocese, as well as a number of local clergy, have devoted much of their time recently to the canvass.

Bishop Wilson Preaches on Church Unity

The Rt. Rev. Frank E. Wilson, bishop of Eau Claire, delivered the Hale sermon at the Western Seminary last week, taking Church unity as his subject. He spoke of steps recently taken looking toward intercommunion between the Church of England and to the National Church of Sweden, which, he said, might well result in a similar relationship between our Church and the 200,000 members of the Augustana Synod of Swedish Lutherans in this country. "Out of this also emerges a hopeful promise of closer contacts with that larger number of 2,500,000 Lutherans of various synods. Intercommunion with the Polish National Catholic Church, with a membership of 200,000, and with the Eastern Orthodox churches with 500,000 members, were other trends noted by the bishop.

Fiction With a Soul—

Only at rare intervals—once in a very great while—is the unceasing flood of books punctuated by a novel in which plot and theme are so closely interwoven that the story seems to generate a vitality within itself. Such books have soul. Above and beyond their power to entertain; greater than their purpose of depicting a phase of Life or a period of civilization, is this intangible, often unintended, inner significance.

Of such a class is the new novel issued by the Macmillan Company of New York, based on modern Biblical scholarship. Historically accurate, showing how monotheism became triumphant over paganism through a great struggle for social justice in the midst of conditions like those prevailing today. Warmly commended by religious leaders, such as Bishop F. J. McConnell, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and Prof. Shailer Mathews.

Does Your Church Pay Its Bills Three Years in Advance?

YET, for some strange reason, more historical than equitable, your church probably pays for fire insurance protection three and five years before the protection is delivered in full.

FOR IT IS THE CASE, and indisputably so, that fire insurance protection is delivered day by day during the 1826 days for which a five-year fire policy runs.

YET IT HAPPENS
so accustomed are we to existing methods (be they good or bad) that few vestrymen think of this. Nor did we think of it ourselves until the financial problems of churches first exercised our mind.

AND SO IT IS
that already, fifteen hundred and forty-seven Episcopal Vestries pay for their fire insurance protection with us not three and five years in advance, but much in the same way as they pay their other parish bills.

THAT IS TO SAY
as the commodity we sell (Fire Insurance Protection) is delivered to the church for its use, by quarterly payments that are easy to assimilate in the Parish Budget.

Church Property Destroyed in Cuba

Holy Trinity, La Gloria, Cuba, was demolished by the hurricane of November 10th, and the rectory also. The missionary, the Rev. Frank S. Persons, and his family are safe. In Moron the rectory was seriously damaged, and the church and rectory at Cespedes were destroyed.

Rector and Wife in an Accident

The Rev. Arthur W. Taylor, Glascow, Virginia, and his wife were seriously injured in an automobile accident on November 5th. Their car failed to make a curve and they plunged about 100 feet down a mountain. They are both in a hospital at the moment, both recovering nicely. And beat this; the car was badly smashed of course but for some reason or other none of the glass was broken.

A Priests Choir in Buffalo

At a meeting of the clericus in Buffalo the other day Bishop Davis said that it was difficult to secure a choir for special services held at the Cathedral. So the clergy have formed themselves into a choir to render service whenever requested to do so by the Bishop.

What Englishmen Think Of American Preaching

Just who the author is is not stated, but here is an appraisal of American preaching that appeared recently in an English religious journal:

"A word about visiting American preachers. Mine is purely an individual impression, and I trust that nothing so poor as national prejudice has helped to form it. But I have listened to so many American sermons which, I have thought, would have served admirably as speeches at a Rotarian lunch. They have been cheerful bits of philosophy, worldly wisdom with anecdotes, useful essays on the ethical plane, but rarely plumbing any spiritual depth. Some American preachers—and some other preachers as well—are addicted to rhetoric. How fatal a gift it is, perhaps only a reporter appreciates. The ornamental phrases are quite pleasant to the ear, the succession of images gives one the same sensation as that with which one watches an acrobatic display, and only when one comes to reduce them to black and white, or to summarize in a paragraph the message of the speaker, does one realize how thin and veneerish it all is."

mands our most vigorous criticism, simply as a part of our loyalty to Him." There is no note of retreat in the Report, he said. There is nevertheless an effort to face present day conditions which demand concentration and unity of action between the missionary boards of the various churches, in order that the entire missionary enterprise may be lifted to a higher level and placed upon a better administrative and more economical basis.

Dealing specifically with what the commissioners discovered, the speaker stated that in too many instances missionaries were disposed to deliver the Christian religion as a little box neatly wrapped, rather than beginning their teaching with a thorough understanding of the background and training of those they seek to convert. The proof that missionaries are faulty in their teaching is found in the fact that Christianity in the Orient is not self-propagating after one hundred years of effort. We have not put Christian life into foreign missions, said Dr. Hocking, until we have a group of converts who are determined to carry on without subsidy from American missionary boards. "Let us see that our interpretation is worthy and that we do not transmit our own fears. Let us see to it that we do not misinterpret a fear for an impulse of loyalty, and so much for the orthodoxy in the mission field which looks like loyalty is accompanied by an impulse of fear."

The address ended with a plea for cooperation. "The truth is that we are members of one body, and that if we don't know how to cooperate, let us find out. If nothing else in this Report were worth anything, I should hope that this would be worth something: a little suggestion of the method whereby we can hold sacred our differences and still cooperate. We shall learn to cooperate with each other by beginning with the simple things, the simple things that are germinal, and which have in them the seeds of all the rest."

Other sessions of the conference dealt with the Problems of Personnel, and with the Problems of Administration, Reorganization and Cooperation. These sessions will be reported fully in our next issue. Incidentally the Report is now available to the public in a book called "Re-Thinking Missions," and may be secured from The Witness, 931 Tribune Building, New York. The cost of the book is $2.50.

CULT OF AMIABILITY

WILLIAM E. HOCKING
Professor of Philosophy at Harvard

CHRISTIANITY runs the danger of becoming soft by its cult of amiability. There is something too closely associated between the love which is the essence of Christianity, so far as it deals with human attitudes, and that love, that amiability, which hesitates to give a full, manly, critical blow. Christians have sometimes been felt by the outside world to be a little shrinking. Religious work suffers because people refrain from using their critical faculties. There is something of the sheltered character when one gets into religious institutions. There is something musty about them, because the air of criticism does not blow like a ventilating wind through them.

From an address at the presenting of the Report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL

By
JOHN R. CROSBY
Rector of St. Luke's, Seaford, Delaware

I HAVE only within the last few weeks become a member of THE WITNESS family, and was delighted to find on opening my first number the Witness Bible Class by Irwin St. John Tucker. I have not finished rubbing my eyes yet. Can it be possible that a responsible Church paper is putting on a course for which the tools are simply a "Bible, Prayer Book, and a note book." That it is possible to educate without pageants,, religious drama, get-together picnic lunches, psychology, teacher's institutes, or inspirational talks is indeed unique; something that a rector can use without the assistance of the corps of elderly maidens humorously designated superintendents of religious education.

That there is something radically wrong with our present system of religious education we all agree. We have all, from the National Council down to the smallest diocese, gone education crazy. Only yesterday I met a brother clergyman who was being hounded to distraction by his diocesan department of religious education—I hasten to say that he did not belong to Delaware. It is he who insisted that I write this article. I asked him to suggest an alliterative and catchy title, and he somewhat bitterly suggested, "Baloney, Blah and Ballyhoo." While not going quite so far as my reverend brother, I can sympathize with him from the very bottom of my heart, and this article is a humble attempt to look at the matter from the standpoint of plain commonsense, and to respectfully suggest a remedy that the wisdom of General Convention has stowed away in obscurity together with Family Prayer, the Articles of Belief, and other superannuated relics of a byegone day.

Right at the back of the Prayer Book, where nobody ever looks, is an obsolete document called a Catechism, and in very small print at its very end are four rubrics. As nobody ever reads them, I make no apology for transcribing them here.

> "The minister of every Parish shall diligently, upon Sundays and Holy Days, or on some other convenient occasion, openly in the Church, instruct or examine as many children of his parish, sent unto him, as he shall think convenient, in some part of this catechism.
> "And all Fathers, Mothers, Masters, and Mistresses, shall cause their Children, Servants and Apprentices, who have not learned their Catechism, to come to the Church at the time appointed, and obediently to hear and be ordered by the Minister, until such time as they have learned all that is here appointed for them to learn."

We have here the concrete instructions of the Church. The minister has definitely laid upon him the responsibility for the training of the souls of the children committed to his charge, and the parents the equal responsibility of seeing that their children are sent to the minister for instruction. Further the nature of that instruction is clearly shown. Added to which we have now an Office of Instruction apparently composed with the express purpose of developing the Catechism into a regular Church service, and again laying down the limitations of the curriculum that the ministers of the Church must give.

There is nothing in either the Prayer Book, or the Constitutions and Canons, dealing with or enjoining Church schools, diocesan superintendents of education, psychology, pageants, religious drama, summer schools or institutes. Admitting that all these things may be admirable as side issues in the life of a parish, they do not relieve the rector of one iota of his responsibility to carry out the rubrics of the Church that he swore at his ordination to obey. It is plain that the ordinary parish cannot—even if it is desirable—provide the necessary buildings, apparatus and teaching staff that can enable it to compete with the worst equipped public school. The children are bound to compare the standards they work under five days a week, with the conditions they are asked to put up with on Sunday. In addition to which the public school insists on a standard of discipline, and of professional efficiency in the teaching staff which we are unable to either approach or enforce.

I would suggest that the Church, in its wisdom, realised this and in its Catechism and Office of Instruction laid down a definite ruling as to what should be taught, and by insisting that this instruction should be given in the Church by its ordained minister provides both the standard of efficiency for the instructors, abolishes the badly equipped and irregularly staffed Church school, and gives, in the atmosphere and reverence for the House of God, a substitute for the discipline it is impossible to enforce in a parish building.

I respectfully suggest that there is something in the age old traditional educational system of the Church. It is extremely nice to dress little boys and girls up as St. Joseph, the Blessed Virgin, angels and shepherds, but it is eminently necessary for them also to know the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments. It is not enough to know the topography of the Holy Land, the details of Solomon's temple, why I wear a chasuble, and what the Church is doing in Honolulu. They are all admirable in their place, but I take it that "Seek ye first the Kingdom of Heaven and its righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you" also applies to Sunday schools.

The Church gives us a definite picture of the children gathered together in the House of God being instructed in the Word of Life, the practice of the Christian religion, and "those things which a Christian ought to know," by the priest of God as the Father and teacher of his people.

WHAT is the situation today? The bishop of a diocese realises with regret that all is not as it should be in his Church schools. The National Council has been sending out disturbing circulars. An adjoining diocese has been putting on an exhibition which is the envy and admiration of its less up to date members. The children's Lenten offering is a source of revenue that has not been properly exploited. The bishop brings the matter to the attention of the Executive Council, who, realising the seriousness of the situation appoints one of their number to act as chairman of religious education, and vote a sum of money to finance the work. The next thing is to "keep up with the Jones" and secure a superintendent of religious education. Unfortunately, the diocese can only appropriate from twelve to fifteen hundred a year for this purpose. For that sum it is impossible to obtain a decent janitor, not to speak of an expert in psychology, pedagogy, kindergarten, religious drama, and method.

Fortunately someone remembers Miss Pamela Prettyman of the diocese of Kalamazoo, the daughter of a deceased clergyman, who has not missed a summer school for thirty years, and whose father was an old seminary friend and fellow student. In the absence of any other candidate, and to secure the support of the rector of St. Dives-in-the-Suburbs, Miss Pamela is appointed. The clericus is entertained at lunch, and a fervent lecture given to the members on loyalty to the diocese, ideals, and the importance of the children's Lenten offering.

Miss Pamela starts in with enthusiasm. She has attended six consecutive summer schools specializing in religious drama, and the chairman of religious education has a pet series of graduated Sunday school lessons that were used by the superintendent in his last parish. A brand new diocesan scheme is presented to the bishop, who, delighted with the zeal of his new department, and glad to be rid of a pressing responsibility so as to turn his attention to his many other problems, endorses it gladly. The larger parishes ignore Miss Pamela and the chairman altogether, while the clergy of the smaller and rural parishes bitterly resent what they consider an attack on their independence and a reflection on their ability, and although compelled to accept it, consider it foredoomed to failure from the start.

Two rectors hail it with joy as a means of escape from a troublesome problem, and implore Miss Pamela to come into their parishes and run the whole thing. The rector of St. Dives puts on an admirable pageant which is duly featured in the Society Sunday Supplement. The chairman of religious education reads a paper at the provincial synod, and Miss Pamela gives an exhibition of woodwork, scrap books, religious drama and bookbinding at the bazaar of the Auxiliaries in her two parishes.

The rest of the diocese carries on as usual. Articles by Miss Pamela and the chairman appear in the leading Church papers, and the diocesan reporter thanks heaven that he has something to say at last.

Fired by success, Miss Pamela decides that the higher education of Church school teachers is a crying diocesan need. It generally is. She formulates an admirable scheme of teacher's institutes at central points in the diocese, to which teachers can foregather and be instructed in the Higher learning. The bishop is delighted, and theoretically everything is lovely.

Miss Pamela collects a faculty consisting of herself as expert in chief; the Old and New Testament by any clergyman who happens to drop in; the Prayer Book by the Reverend Timothy Toots lately escaped from deacon's orders, and child psychology by Miss Priscilla Pennington, who believes that all children are trailing crowds of glory deposited by storks under berry bushes. The trouble starts when neither clergy or teachers will drive from ten to thirty miles on cold nights to be instructed in a course about which they have not been consulted, do not want, and care nothing about. Finally the chairman loses his head and writes a monitory letter to all the clergy accusing them of lack of cooperation and issuing categorical instructions. He is promptly told to run his own parish and go and boil his head. A few parish priests, goaded to desperation, tell Miss Pamela to go away and mind her own business. Both sides rush to the unfortunate bishop who, pestered to death, makes an injudicious speech on lack of cooperation which is bitterly resented by the clergy.

The chairman, who did not want the job anyway, resigns, and Miss Pamela retires in tears to Kalamazoo. After a brief respite, the whole rigmarole starts over again.

I DEFY anybody to say that this picture is an exaggerated one. The modern methods will not work. We have not the money, the personnel, the material, the experience, or—let us be candid—the brains.

Our business is to turn out good men and women as members of the Holy Catholic Church. The Church has given us a program and method hallowed and sanctioned by the experience of eighteen hundred years. We are throwing this experience overboard, and recklessly undertaking a program which lies outside the province of the Church. We are here to teach the love of God and to point the path of salvation to the individual soul, and not either civics, psychology, music or the drama.

I suggest that it is time that we individual rectors —who are after all the responsible parties—cast all this farrago of rubbish to one side, get back to the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, and teach our children to fear God and honor the State, leaving unto Cæsar the task of instruction in those things that are due unto Cæsar.

Personally, I stand wholeheartedly behind Irwin St. John Tucker on the Bible, the Prayer Book and a note book.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

The Ascension

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

IT IS very difficult to translate a spiritual vision into the language of terrestial mortals, because one is describing something foreign to human experience and yet necessarily expressed in language made up from such experience. It is thus when we speak of our Lord's Ascension. His session at the right hand of God and His presiding at the great Assize. The Church is forced to use terms which suggest rather than explain these actions.

Our modern scientists in their doctrines of relativity and the fourth dimension are similarly handicapped. They have the unfortunate alternative of using language which nobody comprehends or else of failing to explain what they mean in the language of popular understanding. The Church was obliged to adopt the latter course at the risk of being misunderstood and severely criticized by the intellectuals. Our Lord never hesitated in this dilemma. "I thank thee, O Father, that Thou has hid these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes." A significant statement based upon the necessity of our becoming as little children in spiritual matters and accepting a kindergarten method of instruction no matter how injurious it may be to our vanity. The trouble is that the worldly wise and prudent are always orienting the wisdom of God to their limited knowledge instead of orienting their ignorance to His wisdom.

So I can hear the criticism of the worldly wise that our Lord did not go up or sit down and that God hasn't hands and at the same time believe that our Lord ascended into a realm of which we know nothing, and that He reigns over a Kingdom of which we know little and that He is the source of that judgment in which those who seek righteousness are separated from those who are indifferent to its lure.

In a progressive creation it is inevitable that the lower forms of life are themselves incapable of visualizing the Kingdom into which they are subsequently taken up. If the ape became man, it is quite evident that as an ape he could not contemplate the estate into which he was destined to emerge. Books and paintings and sonatas are mysteries which his mind could not comprehend and his language could not describe. In the survival of the fit I imagine that the highly educated apes would be the most satisfied with their simian state and would be the least likely to progress. They would feel that they had arrived.

In the same way I am aware that there is a cultivated group who are perfectly satisfied with their high estate. They are seldom listed among the progressives but are quite reactionary toward any improvement. There can be no ascension if we flatter ourselves that we have reached the top and there can be no judgment of our acts if we are secure in our own infallibility.

PERSONALLY I believe in a Kingdom of Heaven because I am so dissatisfied with exhibits A and B of this earthly Kingdom, said exhibits being composed of the wise and prudent, so-called. To me the greatest man who ever lived is incomplete and everything in nature seems to be capable of higher forms. It is this persistent upward thrust that either ceases with man or continues after the phenomenon which we call death.

In the economy of nature there is a conservation of energy which permits nothing to be lost. The reactions of chemistry produce new wonders out of the ordinary constituent elements. Hydrogen and oxygen are in themselves most uninteresting gases but in their chemical reaction they produce the miracle which we call water, capable of a thousand uses.

Thus insignificant individuals, like the twelve apostles, have created a wonderful mystery known as the Holy Catholic Church. So I believe there are tremendous possibilities in love and worship and fellowship which are by no means exhausted in our human relations and which will not be lost in the alchemy of creative power, where baser things are transmuted into precious realities.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

So when I say these words in the creed—"Ascended into Heaven . . . sitteth on the Right Hand of God . . . coming to judge the earth", I am fully aware that in a literal sense they are accommodations to my ignorance and in a spiritual sense they lift me up to a higher life which I see through a glass imperfectly, so that "the invisible things of God from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead."

The materialist says these things are visionary and so they are but "without a vision the people perish." It is faith and not sight and because it is faith, it is not capable of demonstration. Yet wrapt up in this vision are such words as worship, reverence, love, faith, hope and devotion which, if they have no meaning to men, demonstrate either that they lack reality or that man lacks the ability to comprehend their profound significance. My faith compels me to believe in the reality of the idea as being more conclusive than is man's superiority to them. That too is a matter of faith. Do you believe in God's power and goodness? Then you believe in the reality of these words as far more inspiring than the mentality of man. To me the miracle is not the ascent of Christ but the ascent of man.

THERE is nothing to prevent that ascension from going on in a universe where no energy is lost. And in that process I confess that I am a little child in understanding but that I have such confidence in the wisdom and goodness of the Master that I prefer to follow Him than to follow the lead of those who invariably get lost before they reach the end of their trail. His trail leads on beyond my earthly vision it is true but I have such confidence in His leadership that I am willing to follow the trail, even when its end is obscured from my vision.

It sounds like a fairy tale to those who are literally minded but so has every progress made by men seemed to those who have been content with their previous status. It is only the men who have seen visions that have ever found any treasures which were hidden from their superficially minded and self-satisfied contemporaries.

I had rather go adventuring with Christ than to wander about with other leaders. That is why I believe there is no use saying, "You cannot prove it." Of course, I cannot. It would be no adventure if I could. When the scientists have reduced everything to proof, they will perish of ennui.

I believe in a risen ascended Christ Who reigns on high and will judge the world in justice just because it is the only tenable explanation of the purpose of creation or the end of man.

I repudiate the belief that the last word of God's creative genius is an ash-pit or a cemetery. How much more credible that it is the ascended man of God who triumphed over sin and death and vindicated righteousness!

You may call one a fool for pursuing such a quest but after reading Lippman's plaintive wail, and Darrow's dismal croak, I thank God that I am a joyful fool, and believe that God is not mocked with a world that is a tragic failure. At least the universe that Christ pictures is one which still attributes to the Creator some vestiges of reasonable intelligence.

SINGERS, DANCERS, STORYTELLERS

Lesson Ten

BY THIS time the question will have arisen in your mind; "How did we get these Bible stories? How were they handed down to us?" The answer is in itself one of the most fascinating stories in the world.

Picture to yourself the ancient life, when there were no radios, no movies, no newspapers, no telegraphs or telephones, and no railroads; no printed books; very few written books, and they mainly written on clay—and no schools. Families lived very much alone. On great occasions, such national days as Fourth of July and Thanksgiving are to us, celebrations would be held at famous national shrines. Families would gather from far and near, and hold a big open air dinner. Because meat was so rare, it was never eaten except in connection with some sacrifice; God was invited to have His share in the family dinner, and His part was burnt in the sacrificial fire.

Around the great camp-fires, as dusk fell, dances were held like the festival dances of the American Indians. Men danced in groups by themselves and women by themselves, not two by two, as our custom is. These were religious dances. "Praise the Lord in the dances" say Psalms 149 and 150. David danced before the Ark; Miriam and the women of the Hebrews danced at the crossing of the Red Sea; Jephthah's daughter came to meet him dancing, and the women came dancing and singing to greet David and Saul when they returned from their victories. The daughters of Shiloh went to dance in the vineyards, to help make the crops grow.

These dances were always accompanied by songs, sung to the music of timbrel (a sort of tambourine) and harp. Usually they were solo and chorus songs. At the dance of the Passover they sang the Song of Miriam, (Exodus 15) in which the leader sang the verses and all the women and girls came in with the chorus. Another such dancing song is Psalm 136, in which the second half of each verse, if translated "For eternal is his love" gives a better idea of the rhythm of the chorus.

When the dancers were tired, or between the festivals, the elders would tell the children the meaning of the observance. The story of the Exodus, or of the victories over Sihon and Og, or the stories of Samson, Jephthah, Gideon, and Barak, were told over and over again down through the centuries, to the accompaniment of clapping hands, clashing cymbals, and the chorus of many voices raised in song.

Wording of the stories varied a little, in accordance with the shrine around which they were told. At the Northern shrines, like Bethel and Gilgal, the name used for God was "El" or "Elohim" (The Judge). In the Southern nation, at Hebron, Beersheba and Bethlehem, they used the name "Jehovah" (The Living One). So when the Bible story tells the same thing over and over again, that means that two of these accounts have been woven together. Long afterward, when David took Jerusalem and established the kingdom there, and when Solomon built the Temple, these stories were collected and written down in one volume. But for centuries they had been preserved in the living memory. People in those days had little else to think about; no other books to read. Such well-trained memories are often more reliable than written records. So the Bible really came out of the soul of the nation, and many hundreds of thousands of people took part in the making of it.

MEMORY WORK

We have memorized the Old Testament books. Let us begin on those of the New. First get this number right, like a telephone number;

Four——One——Thirteen——Eight——One.

Then learn this list;
Four—Gospels.
One—History. (Acts of the Apostles).
Thirteen—Letters of St. Paul.
Eight—General Letters.
One—Revelations.

Casual Comment

By

BERNARD IDDINGS BELL

IT IS a startling challenge to all of us that Bishop Wilson of Eau Claire has presented, in the Hale Memorial Sermon at the Western Theological Seminary. His subject was "The Episcopal Church and Non-Anglo-Saxon Elements in the United States." There are 500,000 Eastern Orthodox people (Greeks, Russians, etc.) who wish close cooperation with us, looking toward eventual union and inter-communion; 200,000 Polish Old Catholics who wish immediate inter-communion; 20,000 Assyrians who wish the same, etc. What are we going to do about it? That is what Bishop Wilson wishes to know. That is what all these fellow-Americans, fellow-Christians, wish to know. They do not ask us to repudiate our concept of priesthood and sacraments, or to pare down our creeds, or to forswear our heritage as historic and normal Christians. We have talked a lot about Christian unity. Has it been all words and nothing more?

This is a little startling to many Episcopalians. They have thought that Church unity meant getting together with nice, conventional Anglo-Saxon people like the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists and the Methodists, with possibly a generous inclusion and toleration of the Lutherans who, while not Anglo-Saxon, are at least Nordic. To be sure, these good people, thoroughly Protestant, have not welcomed our overtures. They have curtly asked us to give up about everything we hold dear, as the price of their comradeship. But maybe, after awhile, we could hit it off with them. That is about all that has been in the minds of very many Episcopalians, when they advocated "reunion."

And lo, here come well-night a million folks, holding out the hand of proffered fellowship, smiling all over with brotherhood. There is hardly a Nordic among them. They are swarthy of face, very largely Slavonic or Levantine in complexion and traditions, definitely Catholic in religion. They are sure that we too are Catholics, though as little Roman in obedience as they themselves. Well, well, well! This is not what some of the brethren have been anticipating. Are we big enough, wise enough, Christian enough to embrace the opportunity; contribute ourselves and what we have to a greater Church to which these brethren wish to give what they are and have; lose the P.E.C. in a bigger, better, more American, non-Roman but Catholic Church in this land? Or shall we be "little Anglicanders"?

In order to face the issue effectively, we must realize that America is no longer an Anglo-Saxon country. Almost every Englishman with brains who of late years has visited us has remarked that, in our ways of thinking and acting, we are now far more like continental Europeans than we are like Englishmen. Even our language, which once was English, rapidly becomes something else. The surest way for our Church to perish is to stress the fact that it is Anglican. America is no British colony, but a great new nation on its own hook. Shall we not turn our attention from our origin to our destiny?

Write to the Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, Illinois, and get a copy of this Hale sermon. It will stir you up no end.

Confidences

By

JOHN RATHBONE OLIVER

NEVER in my wildest dreams did I ever imagine that I should someday be asked to be responsible every week for a column in a periodical. It is the type of work that I have always admired because it seems to be so generally useful, but that I never felt capable of achieving myself. I should like this column to be a kind of extension of my daily correspondence. Every morning letters come to me from all over the country asking my advice about various matters. I do what I can to answer these people. I have felt however, that there are hundreds of other people who feel that they would be intruding or taking up my time, if they wrote personal letters to me. Still others are unwilling or unable to put into a letter the details of their personal difficulties. They do not like to sign their names at the bottom of a letter. They often imagine that my letters pass through the hands of a secretary before they reach me. For years I have been anxious to create for such people what I have often called " a protected approach." That is, some arrangement that would obviate the necessity of a personal letter; that would make it possible for the person to get the advice that they need without being forced to give me their names and their addresses.

The editor of THE WITNESS has been kind enough to help me in arranging this protected approach. Any one who feels that I can be any help, may write to the editor of THE WITNESS at his office in New York stating their difficulties and the matter on which they need advice. These communications will then be submitted to me and I shall try to answer them in this column. I should like to make the column a real help to others, but I should not wish it to become a mere letter box for unnecessary or unimportant complaints and questions. I shall be obliged to reserve to myself the decision as to those communications that I shall answer in this column. I do not intend either to conduct it like so many columns in the daily papers in which "Aunt Susie" or some other fictitious person answers communications from "Mary" or "E.H.S." about the conduct of their love affairs or the type of dress that is most suitable to their particular type of beauty. I shall not therefore answer communications in this column directly under the initials or assumed names of the people who write. I shall however, attempt in a general way to answer the questions that come in and anyone who has written to the editor will probably find something about his or her various difficulties in this new column of mine.

I shall welcome any criticisms or suggestions about the way in which the column is to be conducted. I am groping myself more or less in the dark in my desire to reach and to help the class of people who often need help badly enough, but who do not know exactly how to get it.

Editor's Note: Communications which readers wish to have brought to the attention of Dr. Oliver should be sent to the editorial office of The Witness, 931 Tribune Building, New York City. They will then be placed in his hands without being read by any other person.

Let's Know

CROSS ROADS

IN THE minds of our earlier ancestors there was something sinister about cross-roads. Travellers moved along the highways and where two of them met there were likely to be more people. So it seems to have been taken for granted that the same would be true of ghosts. Dead people were often buried along the roadside so that their spirits might have a better chance to enter a passing traveller and secure a re-birth. Cross-roads would offer still better advantages.

Then there were those people whose ghosts were regarded as dangerous. Criminals were often executed and buried at cross-roads. Tyburn, for instance, was at the junction of the London, Oxford, and Edgeware roads. Up to a late date suicides were buried at cross-roads with a stake driven thru their bodies and a stone placed over the face. Their ghosts were undesirable as wanderers. Therefore a cross-roads was a good place to bury them because the more persons who tramped over their graves, the more their ghosts would be held in restraint. The stake thru the body and the stone on the face were also effective means of limiting ghostly activity. This custom was not abolished in England until 1823.

It was natural that people should consider a cross-roads as a natural meeting place for evil spirits and the special delight of the devil. Roads were usually the boundaries of fields and when evil spirits were driven by sundry incantations from the fields for the benefit of the harvest, they took to the roads. Miserably migrating from various directions these evil spirits would meet at the cross-roads. Witches were supposed to foregather with them there. In the old story it was at a cross-roads that Faust met the devil and sold his soul. Among many primitive people it was considered necessary to placate these spirits for the safety of travellers. Thus we find religious rites and sacrifices being frequently offered at cross-roads. Some of the old pagan deities were invoked for special protection at such dangerous spots and were known as the particular guardians of travellers. But in some instances the cross-roads atmosphere seems to have been so deeply tainted that even these guardian deities were corrupted, became leaders of the bands of evil spirits, and had to be constantly placated with sacrificial offerings in order to ward off their mischievous tricks.

I wonder if possibly the origin of all this may not have been the very same thing that makes a cross-roads dangerous today. The driver of an automobile is warned by signs along the highway that a cross-roads is ahead of him. He meets stop signs and arterials when he approaches the intersection of a couple of roads. To us it is a safety precaution. We cannot tell what may be coming from some other direction—hence, beware. To early travellers thru forest trails, the perils must have been just as great or greater. The ghostly trimmings could easily be added.

In any case, Christianity has turned an old superstition to better account. Many a cross-roads in the old countries is adorned with a crucifix for spiritual reassurance. I recall a day in 1918 when I was tramping along a road in France with a group of American soldiers that we came upon a large figure of our Lord on the cross where two ways met. Nobody said anything but we all instinctively saluted the Captain of our Salvation—and we all went on feeling a little bit better about it.

REVIEWS OF A NUMBER OF FINE BOOKS OF SERMONS

By G. M. DAY

Seeing the Invisible is the title that Dr. Harold Cooke Phillips has given to the second of Harpers Monthly Pulpit series of dollar volumes of sermons. The first volume, previously reviewed in this column, was Dr. Newton's The Angel in the Soul. The writer of the new volume, who is minister of the First Baptist Church of Cleveland, possesses a touch of Dr. Newton's mysticism which reveals itself from time to time in his sermons, but the major impression made by the book is that of the direct practicalness with which Dr. Phillips deals with the pertinent problems in the realms of both thought and action. Keenly alert to the inroads of humanistic, cynical, secular, and even atheistic thought in the mind of the younger generation today, hardly a page goes by in which he does not take one of the bulls of modern agnostic thought by the horns and tell why he believes the answer to the problem lies in Christ's teaching.

Let us give a sample: "One is divulging no secrets when he says that it is precisely man's moral significance that is being challenged today. Cynicism is abroad. The cynic has been aptly described as the man who knows the price of everything and the value of nothing. Least of all does he know the value of personality. He satirizes all that is highest and most sacred in human life. He would free us from the haunting suspicion that we are morally responsible beings. When the sense of our moral responsibility goes, we have lost the one thing that makes us men. The fact is that many of us are losing the awareness of our moral responsibility, for cynicism is contagious. It is because Jesus gave up His life in this very moral struggle, which we are being asked to discount, that His ethical ideals remain the highest and most compelling that we know." The book is 121 pages long and contains a three paragraph introduction by Dr. Fosdick.

Books of "canned sermons", that is ready made outlines of sermons, I usually avoid. Few are of any value and most of them are breeders of bad habits for the minister. Doubly happy am I, therefore, to be able to commend Outlines of Teaching Sermons for a Year prepared by Dr. Cyril E. Hudson, Diocesan Chaplain to the Bishop of S. Albans, (Macmillan $1.25). The book took form in response to the need for more definitely teaching sermons which was felt by the S. Albans Diocesan Board of Education. These are not prepared sermons but simply outlines for a year's course of teaching sermons in which the main concerns are: Belief in God, a modern approach to the Old Testament, the life of Christ, and the essential teachings of the Church in regard to such subjects as prayer, faith and the sacraments. A few books are suggested for reading with each section and a sample of the way in which one country vicar used the first outline is also given. The editor does not intend to make preaching easier for the minister, but to help him make it more fundamental in planning a long view educational program for the adults in his parish. The book carries commendations by both the Bishop of S. Albans and the Archbishop of York.

Planning your Preaching by W. L. Stidger is not even "canned sermons", but might more accurately be called ministerial "frosted foods" (Harpers $2.50). It is a collection of materials for about every conceivable occasion in which the minister might appear on the scene. Not only does it contain several years worth of suggested preaching programs, but it also contains collections of jokes, "long prayers", Church form letters, prayer meeting talks, and poems for special days. A single fact will suffice to show the type of book it is. In the first year's sermon plan in February "Month of Biographies" the minister would preach on Roosevelt (Teddy), Lincoln, Washington and Christ. The book fairly gushes with sentimentality. Its chief aim appears to be not to aid in preaching the gospel of Christ, but rather to aid

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

The Rev. Joseph Dutton. a district superintendent of the Methodist Church up Michigan way, proposes to sing his way into the heart of America and thus save us from washing our grief away in four per cent beer. He writes us that he is sending to 150 religious papers each week "a brief, pungent poem for publication once a week, all dealing with some phase of the liquor question." Number one is sent to us as a sample. It is entitled "Prosperity" and runs as follows:

Today, forsooth, men think
That selfish, sordid drink
Released by law, taxed, and consumed
Prospers America!

Pollute innocent grain;
From froth and foam get gain?
With poor poorer, and rich richer,
Secure America?

Tomorrow must needs teach
Again to all and each:
Toil, faith and stern sobriety
Exalt America!

I think Brother Dutton would be of more service to the dry crusaders if he stuck to prose. Ordinarily I am no rip-roaring rollicking rounder but I swear verse like that makes me want to go out and sit around the table with the consciously sinful, who, released from their inhibitions by a drink or two, raise their tankards high and bellow, in four part harmony, verse that brings the note of joy into a gray world. I shall now receive letters accusing me of aiding the forces of unrighteousness. But I think Mr. Dutton is the person who should receive the complaints for, unless I am a bad judge of poetry, the average person will require a drink or two after reading his stanzas in order to get back to a healthy frame of mind.

Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry

The opening meeting at which the Report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry was presented to the representatives of foreign missions boards was reported to you last week. Other meetings were held the following day, equally inspiring. It is impossible for lack of space to present to you here the details that came out in these meetings. But they are all presented in a thick book of 350 pages or more, published under the name of "Re-Thinking Missions" which may be secured from THE WITNESS for $2 and not $2.50 as reported last week. Mrs. Pearl Buck, author of wide repute and herself a missionary in China for many years, in reviewing this Report in the Christian Century last week said: "Having read it from cover to cover, I put it down with a sense of complete satisfaction. I have not read merely a report. I have read a unique book, a great book. The book presents a masterly statement of religion in its place in life, and of Christianity in its place in religion. The first three chapters are the finest exposition of religion I have ever read. The later chapters present a true and perfect picture of missions, and last of all are a series of constructive plans for the reorganization of Christian missions, which if followed must result in a great new impetus not only to missions but to the life of the church in America.—I think this is the only book I have ever read which seems to me literally true in its every observation and right in its every conclusion."

There will be many of course who will not share Mrs. Buck's enthusiasm. Nevertheless to understand what is going on, not only in missions, but in the Episcopal Church for the next few years one must be familiar with the contents of this Report. For it is a critical appraisal of mission work in India, China and Japan, where our Church alone spends hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, and where the seven denominations that had a share in this study spend annually approximately fifteen million dollars. The Report lays down as its first principle that "missions should go on", but after establishing that idea firmly, it goes on to recommend changes in policies and administration which are imperative if the work is to continue to receive the loyal support of the average church member. These criticisms and recommendations are already the topic of conversation whenever Church people meet, and I hazzard the guess that problems raised by this Report will be the chief concern of the next General Convention.

The nub of the whole business is the proposal which we outlined in our issue of November 17th—should we join with other churches in creating a united missionary council which will formulate policies, appoint executive officers, field directors and missionaries, and also raise and administer funds? And certainly it is fair to say that you cannot arrive at an intelligent answer to this important question without reading this Report which is the work of forty-two trained experts who spent two years in the mission fields gathering the material upon which they base their conclusions. Which is perhaps all we need to say about the matter for the moment. Get the book. Then when the every member canvass and Christmas are behind us we hope to present here a number of articles by leaders of our Church dealing, among other things, with the questions raised by this all-important Report. Again the Report, called "Re-Thinking Missions," is $2 a copy and will be mailed to you at once upon receipt of your order at the editorial office of THE WITNESS, 931 Tribune Building, New York City.

Synod of Second Province Meets in Syracuse

Opening with a great service at St. Paul's, Syracuse, with ten bishops taking part, the synod of the 2nd province was held November 15th and 16th. Resolutions were passed urging a reduction of armaments, which was sent to the President of the United States and the Senators of New York and New Jersey. There were sessions on rural work, college work, auxiliary work and social service work. Among the speakers at the synod were Bishop Perry; Archdeacon Jaynes of Central New York; Rev. William Vincent of Whitesboro, N. Y.; Rev. Wendell Phillips, assistant to the chaplain at Columbia University; Rev. John Crocker, student pastor at Princeton; Rev. George Norton of Rochester. The synod dinner was held on the 16th when addresses were made by Chancellor Charles W. Flint of Syracuse University and Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester, who was one of the commissioners of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry and spoke on that subject.

The New York State Conference on social work was in session from the 15th through the 18th so that people attending the synod had a real opportunity to listen to capable addresses on social service topics by outstanding leaders. Indeed the social service department of the province very definitely tied into the conference and had a large share in the program, with addresses by the Rev. Niles Carpenter, professor of sociology at Buffalo University and the Rev. Shirley C. Hughson of the Order of the Holy Cross. One of the most discussed addresses was given by Mr. William Hodson, social worker of New York City who said that "the church is in a peculiarly fortunate position to enlighten the minds of people in the terms of social implications. We must translate the social structure in terms of social security, cooperative living, so that the mass of men can look forward to the possession of an economic, industrial and social order created by men and dedicated to their uses."

Conference on Ministry To Be Held

A conference on the ministry is to be held at St. Paul's School, Concord, New Hampshire, December 30th to January 1st, for the purpose of presenting to young men in college and young men in the business world the ministry as a possible career. Dr. Drury, rector of the school, in writing of this coming affair, is not too pleased with the word "conference." "It is said," he writes, "that the reason why the priest and the Levite did not stop on the road to Jericho to help the man in distress was because they were hurrying forward to attend a conference." So he describes the coming affair as a series of friendly meetings. Writes Dr. Drury: "Thanks to the generosity of a few friends and the hospitality of the school, attendance at the meeting will be entirely a matter of invitation and guestship. If duly accredited young men come, and pay their traveling expenses, the committee on arrangements will be glad to act as hosts. Friday evening, December 30th, will be spent in considering the subject of the ministry. So will Saturday morning. Good men and true will be available as speakers and advisors, without too much formality. Saturday afternoon will be kept inviolate for outdoor recreation. The trouble with many conferences is that the attenders have no chance to be oxgenated. Reassembling on Saturday evening we shall observe a watch night service in the school chapel. That is bound to be, always and everywhere, an hour of profound personal re-formation and redirecting. After the Eucharist on Sunday morning and an opportunity for quiet companionship, the group will disband on Sunday afternoon, January 1st.

"What sort of men do we want; what sort of men should come? We must leave that to the discerning reader, be he clerical or lay. We can accommodate about 100 young men and naturally we hope for the best available material. A letter addressed to Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, one Garden Street, Cambridge, Mass., will elicit an invitation."

Churches Should Plan For the Future

Planning for churches is quite as necessary as for highway commissions and zoning departments according to a study just completed by the Institute of Social and Religious Research. The conclusions of the report are based on the study of 2,000 churches in 16 of the larger cities of the country, and was directed by Dr. Ross W. Sanderson.

"Churches," Dr. Sanderson explains, "usually vary, like grocery stores, according to the kind of neighborhood in which they are located. Instead of being institutions with power to transform the life of the community, churches are themselves usually an expression of the kind of community life found in their immediate environment. If the population is dwindling, and the remaining residents are victims of poverty and other social blights, then the churches show the marked effects of this community deterioration. Where the population is increasing, and the life of the residents is growing richer, churches grow and prosper."

Only the occasional church, the report finds, is able to stem the tide of social decay in its neighborhood; it is quite the exceptional parish that makes real headway in the face of community deterioration. So also it is the exceptional church in a good neighborhood that does not succeed more or less automatically. Usually "as goes the neighborhood, so goes the church." In other words, the white Protestant church is usually "a function of its environment."

On the other hand, the report shows that an occasional church, about one in eight, does the unexpected. In the midst of favorable social change some churches lag; in the midst of unfavorable social change some churches make outstanding progress. The report undertakes to discover the ways in which this exceptional behavior on the part of a significant minority of the churches manifests itself. In this connection Dr. Sanderson declares that "many a minister has ridden to professional renown on a tide of neighborhood progress, in the midst of which he could hardly have failed; and many another minister has been blamed for the decay of a congregation which had relatively small chance for survival in the midst of community decline."

The conclusion of the study, according to Dr. Sanderson, is that Protestantism "must give up its laissez faire policy of church planting, if it desires to create anything that can be called a strategy of city church planning."

"Comity, in the sense of the mere adjustment of disputes in the spirit of denominational legalism, is seen giving way to social engineering as applied to the churching of the city. If American Protestantism is going to occupy the city strategically it must cooperate with the urban sociologists and the city planners in studying the social geography of the city. It must master facts of church distribution and progress, and it must pool its resources for the adequate churching of the changing city."

In the midst of swift urban change, with an increasingly mobile population, the report contends that parochialism and denominationalism alike are inadequate, and that Protestantism must develop "a common strategy analogous to the unified policies of the great public utilities, the public schools and the Roman Catholic Church."

Working on Canvass in Western New York

Bishop Davis of Western New York has asked each rector in his diocese to give some time each of the Sundays prior to the every member canvass to the setting forth of the mission work of the Church. The department of religious education of the diocese has also prepared a series of lessons on the subject for use during this season.

Anniversary of Old Connecticut Parish

Christ Church, Stratford, Connecticut, is celebrating its 225th anniversary this year. The town itself, a suburb I believe of Bridgeport, was settled in 1639. As early as 1702 settlers applied to the Bishop of London for a clergyman, but without success. Three years later the rector of Trinity Church, New York, was asked to visit Stratford, but the distance was too great for his delicate health. However in 1706 the Rev. George Muirson came up from Rye, preached to large congregations and baptised twenty-four persons. The following year the parish was organized and its parish records from that day to this are filled with interesting bits of history. For instance there are bullet holes through the weathercock surmounting the spire, the result of sharp shooting on the part of British soldiers; there is an entry in the record for one shilling paid to the sexton for ringing the church bell on July 6, 1776, when news came through of the signing of the Declaration of Independence; there is also recorded the protest of a member of the congregation over the mentioning of King George in the Prayers, whereupon the rector ceased to pray and pronounced the benediction. The Rev. Jeremiah Leaming was the rector of the parish following the Revolution, and was the first choice of the clergy of Connecticut for bishop but he declined owing to his health, whereupon Samuel Seabury was elected and became the first American Bishop. It is also said that the first confirmation service was held by Bishop Sea-

Patriotic Services in Indiana

It is a bit late to report Armistice Day Services but the one in Gary, Indiana, is so much a community affair that it should be recorded. Everyone joins in this annual service which is traditionally held at Christ Church. Then at St. James', Goshen, the patriotic organizations of the city were all represented at a service held on November 13th, when the sermon was preached by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Albert L. Schrock, who has been the chaplain of the local American Legion post for the past nine years.

Report from Archdeacon of Cuba

The Rev. Jack Townsend, archdeacon of Camaquey, Cuba, writes as follows about the damage done by the recent cyclone: "The damage area of Cuba's cyclone extends almost from Santa Clara to Santiago, but its center was Camaquey province. When we emerged after November 9th in the calm to take stock of losses a frightful loss of life in Santa Cruz del Sur was reported; the complete loss of the fruit crops; the destruction of many thousands of homes and buildings and large damage to the sugar mills. It means businesses ruined, people ruined and broken. We lost three churches and all our people have suffered heavily."

Discuss Changing Economic Order

A luncheon meeting of the Church League for Industrial Democracy was held in New York on November 19th when the question "The Job of the Church Today" was the subject discussed under the leadership of Miss Mary Van Kleeck, director of industrial studies of the Russell Sage Foundation and a vice-president of the League. It was soon agreed by the forty-five Church people present that the Christian religion and the present social order were incompatiable, and a considerable number expressed it as their opinion that the Church should definitely advocate the socialization of industry. Others felt that the chief task of the Church was to educate her members to greater unselfishness, while still others felt that any fundamental changes in our present social order would be forced upon the possessing classes by the workers and that those in the churches who felt that such changes were desirable should definitely line up with radical labor groups. Among those taking part in the discussion were, in addition to Miss Van Kleeck, the Rev. Worth M. Tippy, executive secretary of social service of the Federal Council; Rev. Ernest Johnson, research director of the Federal Council; Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, executive secretary of our department of social service; Miss Caroline B. LaMonte, a vice-president of the Church League; Rev. Guy Emery Shipler, editor of the Churchman; Miss Marsh, secretary of the New York Church Mission of Help and Rev. Bradford Young, assistant at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn.

Fiction With a Soul—

Only at rare intervals—once in a very great while—is the unceasing flood of books punctuated by a novel in which plot and theme are so closely interwoven that the story seems to generate a vitality within itself. Such books have soul. Above and beyond their power to entertain; greater than their purpose of depicting a phase of Life or a period of civilization, is this intangible, often unintended, inner significance.

Of such a class is the new novel issued by the Macmillan Company of New York, based on modern Biblical scholarship. Historically accurate, showing how monotheism became triumphant over paganism through a great struggle for social justice in the midst of conditions like those prevailing today. Warmly commended by religious leaders, such as Bishop F. J. McConnell, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and Prof. Shailer Mathews.

By the Waters of Babylon, A Story of Ancient Israel, by Louis Wallis. From all booksellers, or from the Macmillan Company, New York City, for $2.00—Advt.

Hymnals and Prayer Books

for the Christmas Season

At Christmas, the most sacred of festivals, each parish should have a full complement of Hymnals and Prayer Books.

As publishers of the Prayer Book and of the authorized and approved Hymnal of the Church, we recommend the placing of orders in plenty of time so as to insure delivery before Christmas. It is suggested that these books, as a gift from a communicant, would form an appropriate and lasting memorial.

In the interest of improved congregational singing, the General Convention has urged all churches to place the musical edition of the Hymnal in the pews, so far as possible.

HYMNALS

Standard Musical Edition at $1.20 per copy (or $1.00 per copy in lots of 100 or more).

Special Choir Edition, heavily reinforced, at $1.50 per copy (or $1.30 per copy in lots of 100 or more).

Word Edition at 40 cents per copy.

PRAYER BOOKS

Pew Edition, 3½x5½, in various bindings at 25 cents per copy.

Sewanee Also Has a Football Team

Mr. F. R. Fortune, business man of Cleveland, writes to inform me, apropos of remarks made here about the football played by the Church colleges, that the University of the South, Sewanee, also has a football team, "the one outstanding football team of our Church colleges." It is true they didn't win many games, but then they took on about the toughest teams they could find, and I am inclined to agree with Mr. Fortune that Sewanee would slaughter Hobart, Kenyon or Trinity. Incidentally I proposed this fall to a group of alumni of Trinity that a league be organized among the Church Colleges, the winner between Hobart, Kenyon and Trinity taking on Sewanee in a post-season game. But these gentlemen seemed to feel that it would be a handicap rather than an aid if it became generally known that Trinity was tied-up with the Church so they unanimously voted down my suggestion. Oh, and lest any should think that I am purposely leaving out Dr. Bell's St. Stephen's College in this sport news I hasten to inform you that they had the good sense a number of years ago to cut out football.

Gas Company Dedicates Memorial

We are used to news of the dedication of memorials in churches but it isn't every day that we get items about the dedication of memorials on the part of commercial organizations. On Armistice Day the Consolidated Gas Company of New York dedicated a tablet in the tower of its new building to the memory of the 3,052 members of its organization who served in the world war, 74 of whom were killed in action. High up in the tower of this building is the large set of Westminster chimes, made by the Meneely Bell Company of Troy, as a part of the memorial. These bells can be heard chiming the quarter hours all over the lower part of Manhattan by means of the largest tower clock in the world.

THE LAYMEN'S INQUIRY

BISHOP JOHNSON

IT IS quite natural that those who have been giving large sums to missions should desire an appraisal of their value and it is quite in the order of things that a commission should be appointed to do this valuation. Such a commission will, however, have the limitations which are peculiar to all commissions. They will value work in terms of their own convictions. In so far as this commission has given us a picture of missions as it springs from their own viewpoint it is a very painstaking and thorough investigation colored, however, by their conception of what Christianity essentially is. Their conclusions that missions must go on; that whatever changes are made should be real and not nominal; gradual not abrupt; and that nothing can displace the importance of a true and well qualified evangelism, are such as should hearten us to increase our efforts to give the best that we have to a great enterprise.

It is also unquestionably true that everything depends upon the personality of the missionary and that greater care should be taken in his selection and training, and that a godly life is more effective than a glib vocabulary. We also agree that as soon as possible missions in the Orient should become native churches maintaining themselves and expressing their own genius, and we are fully aware how difficult it is to pry people loose from the subsidies to which they have become accustomed.

And yet we are unable to agree with what is probably the main thesis of the report, which involves not merely the kind of religion which we give to the Orient, but also the kind of religion which Christ imposes on us. It is true that we may be mistaken in our interpretation of Christ's commands, but we are in duty bound to adhere to such interpretation as we believe to be true. Our criticism of this part of the report is not based upon any question of sincerity but rather of principle lying behind our efforts. It involves the kind of a gospel which we must preach regardless of results and the attitude which we must take toward other religions with which Christianity comes in contact.

The Commission says that "the Christian (missionary) will regard himself as a coworker with the forces within each such religious systems which are making for righteousness." Of course, so far as this involves a courteous attitude toward these oriental religious leaders one can agree. Definite convictions do not necessarily go with uncharitable attitudes. But the report seems to go deeper than this and to involve the necessity of regarding the enlightened Confucian as a disciple of Christ, and it advocates turning our Christian institutions to non-Christian admistration. It seems to separate the humanism in Christ from His claim to be the Son of God in an exclusive way. It is a very plausible contention but it runs counter to the history of missions in the past, and would, I believe, result in the dissipation of the Christian ethics in the Orient. It is not a new idea but I believe that in the end it is a fallacious one. I mean that it will not work. Let us trace the story of missions in relation to this idea.

THE early Christians were confronted with a Herculean task in their commission to preach the gospel through the Roman Empire. If they had been willing to compromise with pagan philosophy and to place Christ in the Pantheon, they would have had an easier time and made larger numerical gains. After Constantine's time, they were more accommodating. Arianism was an effort to reconcile the Christian religion to the demand for a humanistic Christ. It was a plausible appeal and was acceptable to the world, but it petered out for lack of conviction as to the divinity of our Lord and His place in Christian worship.

Fortunately it was the Catholic Christians who were interested in Missions and so converted the Franks to the Catholic Faith. The Arians were very indifferent to Foreign Missions. Subsequently the British Isles were evangelized and so we received the heritage of a definite faith.

Since the days of William the Conqueror up to comparatively recent times there was very little interest in Foreign Missions. It was after the revivals of Wesley, the Evangelicals and Oxford leaders that our Lord's command to extend His Kingdom into all the world had its impetus. These men all had definite convictions as to the place of Christ's divinity in religion.

The problem of the Orient is not unlike that which confronted Christians in the Roman Empire. The Romans had religions and philosophies which contained much that was admirable. In the days of Marcus Aurelius, when the Church was cruelly persecuted would such a coalition have resulted in a better Roman world or merely a Christianity as to be inoperative? Of course, I believe that Christ was crucified because of His exclusive claims; that the early Church was persecuted because it refused to compromise and that the Church has survived the ages just in so far as it has demanded the worship of Christ as fundamental to its existence.

It is not bigotry to believe that Christ is the way and that no one can come to the Father but through Him. It is simply loyalty to a fundamental conviction. It is one thing for Christian missionaries to refrain from attacking the ancient religious of the Orient. That is largely a matter of diplomacy. It is quite another thing for a little group of Christians surrounded by non-Christian beliefs to surrender their fundamental tenets in the interests of a wider humanism.

I HESITATE to criticize a report that is so excellent in most of its contentions. I am sorry that the Commission felt the necessity of transferring their functions from the question of the value of foreign missions to the basic question as to the essence of the message which seems to be implied in their findings. I assume that the Commission was composed largely of what one might call liberals in theology, to whom the visible Church is a nebulous thing; to whom definitions of faith are irritating, and to whom righteousness is something which is a potential quality in the natural man.

In making its appeal to the world, there are those who are uncompromising in their belief that Christ is the sole leader of men and that all others have been thieves and robbers. It is because Confucianism and Taoism and Mahometanism have done so little for the common man that we feel the necessity of sending Christ to the Orient.

It is true, as Pearl Buck says, that the missionaries are ordinary folk because they are sent by mediocre people. I wonder if in the whole history of missions the appeal has ever attracted many wise or noble. After all, possibly Christ has never depended upon supermen to do His work.

And I also wonder whether the liberal theologians who minimize but do not deny the worship of Christ can furnish the motive necessary to supply the Orient with men and money to do this work.

We shall watch the experiment with a great deal of interest, but because we do not believe in that method, the Church must, I believe, decline to fraternize with pagan religions, although I trust we shall ever be courteous, and charitable to them and to their leaders.

We still believe that definite convictions about the fundamentals of our religion will still be the source of supply for men and missionaries in the Orient. We shall be sorry to differ from the Commission in this essential feature which forms so much of the report as we shall be grateful to them for the illuminating picture of the conditions.

I do not believe that the average among the missionaries today is below those who converted our pagan ancestry to the Catholic faith, and that God will still raise the foolish of this world to confound the mighty as He has done in the past.

We have yet to see a great missionary movement inaugurated or carried on by the intellectuals of any age or by those who make the worship of Christ in any way subordinate to humanistic efforts.

The Report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry is now published in a book of over 350 pages under the title of "Re-Thinking Missions" and may be secured from THE WITNESS, 931 Tribune Building, New York City, for $2.00.

Editor's Note: To make room for this editorial it has been necessary to omit from this issue Bishop Johnson's article in the series on "What I Believe and Why". That series will be resumed next week with an article on "The Holy Spirit."

The Art of Stained Glass

By

ELEANOR H. WILSON

HEATON, BUTLER AND BAYNE is an old established English firm of glass painters and because for many years they have had their own branch establishment in the United States, managed by an official from their English studio, their inclusion in this series of articles is entirely fitting. The firm is comprised today of artists who are descendants of one of the founders. During its many years of activity the firm has been honored by the patronage of royalty, receiving also, by royal warrant, the appointment of artists in stained glass to H. M. the late King Edward VII.

The two points invariably aimed at by Messrs. Heaton, Butler & Bayne in all their work are artistic pre-eminence in design and absolute permanence in execution. As a result of his researches, Mr. Heaton discovered a pigment which will practically defy atmospheric effects. A specimen piece of painted glass, which had for seven years been exposed to the deleterious influences of a London atmosphere, was sent to Canon Lonsdale of Litchfield Cathedral for his examination. He made the following comment upon its durability:—

"You probably know the 16th century glass in this cathedral; we have some of it down at the present moment, for the mullions want repairing, and the leading of the glass is bad; but we tried this glass with a chisel. No more effect was produced on it than if it had been a piece of iron. And so, as you say, it is with the piece of glass you have been so kind as to send for my inspection. The pigment seems thoroughly fused into the glass, as if they were one substance." So many examples of the work of this firm are to be found in the cathedrals and churches of this country, as well as in Europe and other parts of the world that it is difficult to choose any for special mention. There is in England one place dear to travellers, the parish church of Stratford-on-Avon. The great transept window, the work of Heaton, Butler and Bayne, is the gift of Americans to Shakespeare's church. Among historical events of the old and new world represented in the window are the Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers and the Consecration of Bishop Seabury.

TRANSEPT WINDOW

Outstanding among the many delightful entertainments given by our English hosts during the last Lambeth Conference, was the evening reception tendered the Bishops and their wives by the Society for the promotion of Christian Knowledge in Merchant Taylor's Hall in Threadneedle Street, just back of the Bank of England, sometimes known as the "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street." It is interesting to know that Heaton, Butler and Bayne designed and executed the stained glass and decoration in this Guild Hall, the extraordinary beauty of which lingers long in memory.

All of the windows in Christ Church Cathedral, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, are the work of these artists. The large and very beautiful east window in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, the rich windows in Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, which show an early style of treatment, and those containing historical subjects in old Christ Church (Washington's Church) Philadelphia, are outstanding examples which in beauty of color and permanency stand pre-eminent.

Casual Comment

By
BERNARD IDDINGS BELL

TWO years ago a mission church was being conducted in a suburb—let us call it Dalehurst—not far from a metropolitan city. The Rev. Danby Jones —that is not his real name—a quiet man of singular sympathy, understanding compassion and rare intellect, looked after it in his simple way. In the congregation were most of those in the little town who had brains—several teachers, two medical men, five young chaps fresh from the University—in short, the wiser part of the community. That is not the larger section of the suburb, whose citizenry is predominantly pedestrian in mind and dull of spirit. The priest was poorly paid, but content. Missionary offerings were small, but not from lack of interest on the part of the people. They simply did not have much cash.

A year ago the Bishop removed the Rev. Danby Jones from cure of souls in Dalehurst. What was the matter? A delegation waited on the diocesan in his city office. There were no charges against the good priest. "Only", the Bishop added, "he does not fit into the picture. Dalehurst is growing. It has doubled in size in five years. The local bank has five times the deposits it had in 1926. Yet St. Bride's gives no more to missions than it did then, and the communicant list has grown only five per cent. I wish a more active missionary."

The committee respectfully pointed out that the new growth in Dalehurst mostly consisted of new-rich, fast-living braggarts who cared no more for things of the spirit than jack-rabbits value astronomy. "They have souls", replied the Bishop, "and they must be reached. I shall send you someone else. Thanks for calling."

The Rev. Dogberry Bang began to reign in Dalehurst. Things go better now. Mr. Bang is the life of the country club, a broad-minded man of the world. He rather likes to hear off-color jokes, although he does not tell them himself. He dances expertly and flirts discreetly. His sermons are short and snappy. He neither yaps about divorce and all that, nor moons about the life of prayer. There is a lot of snap and go to St. Bride's now. That is what folks tell you on the 8:12 train. The nominal membership has increased sixty per cent. There was a class of thirty-five adults confirmed last spring—good eggs and their wives. Bang did not have confirmation instruction for them—just one good, peppy talk about God's tolerance and all that. Eight of them have not been to Church since they "joined up", but they all subscribe. Missionary offerings have gone up 250%. The Bishop is delighted.

One of the doctors has "gone to Rome." The other laughs at the Church and curses His Lordship. The school-teachers are not seen in St. Bride's pews. The Unitarians and the Presbyterians each have one of the young men fresh from college. The other three go nowhere. Small price brains where Bang presides! But what does that matter? Look at the treasurer's report. Let no one blame poor Bang. He was born a bounder. Let us not blame the Bishop, either. He has neither time nor facility for examining the quality of his people.

Let's Know

ORIENTAL CHURCHES

DID you know that nearly a hundred years ago the Episcopal Church began to extend a friendly and helpful hand to the so-called Oriental Churches? There is nothing new or recent about our interest in the Churches of the Near East. The present promising prospects of full-fledged inter-communion with them are the result of ninety years spent in building up friendly relations. The "Spirit of Missions" of June, 1842, contains a report from the Rev. Horatio Southgate who had spent a long time among the people of Mosul (Mesopotamia) which runs in part as follows:

"Their Liturgy embraces a religion nearly or quite as pure as our own. In some particulars relating to worship, it is even more primitive than ours. It was formed when life was most vigorous, piety most ardent, and the standard of Christian obedience most exalted in the Church. In their Liturgy they have the great Truths of the Bible drawn out and set in order, and this done when Christianity was in its pristine purity. They will not break into schisms, because they have a common standard which they all love. They will find themselves surrounded by all the holy doctrines and forms of religion—of the religion of the Bible and of the early Church. It is not ours to impart to them the treasures of everlasting life. They have them already. Our work is one of fraternal love.

"There is needed a seminary of high order for the training of teachers, who shall afterwards be sent out into the cities and villages of the nation to diffuse everywhere the light of sound learning. With this system of education religious instruction should go hand in hand. But it should be instruction in the Church and by the Church. We have little or nothing to supply in this department.

"They need friends and benefactors. Their ancient theology lies scattered in books, many of which are rarely found. They need the aid of the press to preserve these treasures, and scatter them, like healing leaves, far and wide. Who will bestow upon them the blessings of the press? From school cards up to the text-books of science they are wholly destitute. Who will supply this deficiency? It is ours. I know my beloved Church too well to believe that it will be deaf to an appeal from any suffering and neglected member of the body of Christ. If one member suffer, the other members suffer with it. That is the law of Christian unity.

"The Syrian formulary of faith is the Nicene Creed. What they call the Apostles Creed is not known among them. They have no Articles of Religion. Their Creed is the simple formula of their faith. They have the same canon of Scripture with ourselves, reading the Apochryphal books "for example of life and instruction of manners" but not admitting them to be canonical. They administer the Eucharist in both kinds. I need not add, as it is common to all the Eastern Churches, that they reject the doctrine of the supremacy of the pope, and regard him simply as the Patriarch of Rome, holding of right no power out of his own Church."

Two years later Horatio Southgate was consecrated our Bishop in Constantinople, holding that office for six years. His efforts seem to be bearing fruit, for which our Church ought to have nothing but gratitude.

Just Souls

By

C. RUSSELL MOODEY

"ZIGZAG" is a funny word given to a funny fence. At least it looks funny to the average eye. And sounds funny to the average ear. This species of enclosure is fast becoming extinct and I am afraid that in a few years it will be gone. Our forefathers didn't think it was so funny, in fact they were rather proud of their zigzag fences. They had a right to be because in this method of fence construction they hit on some basic facts. One was economy in cost and labor. No posts and no post-holes were needed and thus time was saved as well as work. Then again the zigzag fence, set up it was, defied the law of gravity and laughed at the gale and the storm. On the side-hill it could hold its own.

Man carried this principle over into mountain climbing and zigzagged his way to the top. I am writing now about real mountain ranges such as seen in the Alps. The road or the path invariably zigzags as the map indicates. Even treading the side-hill you and I know that it is easier to move laterally at an acute angle rather than going straight up. And after we have gone quite a way bearing to the left then we swing off and up to the right. Back and forth we go until we have reached the summit.

Religion is best illustrated by mountains. So we must learn the art of climbing. The ideal bids us go straight up. In the moment of high hopes many people set out to climb the steep ascent of heaven. No sooner are they under way than they begin to feel exhausted and ready to quit. And many do. The wiser ones recognizing their human limitations and realizing that they can reduce the grade by zigzagging, set out to master the mountain. They know that they cannot go straight up even though their heart is set on rapid ascent. Day by day they plug along humbly and courageously and little by little they mount to the top. They conquer where others fail. The Christ advocated the zigzag policy for He knew that the sure way to succeed is to mount above failure and change our way. Day by day and little by little we master our ideals and the heights they rest upon. Be zigzag Christians and yours is the Kingdom of Heaven.

OLD TESTAMENT AND NEW

Lesson Eleven

ANOTHER question has arisen, after last week's discovery of the way we got the Bible. What use are all these stories to us? Why should we learn these long accounts of how the Israelites established their claim to the Canaan Estates?

You will note that in public worship the Church never reads the Old Testament by itself. Always it must be accompanied and interpreted by the New. The First Lesson in Morning and Evening Prayer is from the Old Testament, and the Second from the New; but if only one lesson is read, it must be from the New Testament. In the Great Thanksgiving (The Holy Eucharist) both Epistle and Gospel are from the New Testament. The Old Testament is used only once in a long while for the Epistle. You will find that a great many passages in the teachings of Christ cannot be understood unless you know the old story.

There is, however, another reason why we should learn them. Sometimes it is impossible to make a child work at a hard lesson, unless a reward is offered. After a while, when the child makes some progress in the study, the reward is unnecessary; the lesson itself is its own reward. So in the early days of the race, lower motives were appealed to, leading on to the higher.

Let us go back a little to the sons of Abraham to illustrate this. Isaac, or Laughter, grew up to be a young man. His mother and father disliked the "children of Heth" intensely; so they sent back to their old home back East to get a wife for him—his pretty cousin, Rebekah. Isaac had two sons; Esau and Jacob. Isaac liked Esau, but Rebekah liked Jacob; and when a quarrel arose between the boys over the trick Jacob played, his mother sent him back East to get a wife, for the "daughters of Heth" were a great grief of spirit to her. Within the past few years we have discovered that the "children of Heth" were a great empire, known as the Hittites, with whom the Egyptians made treaties.

Isaac was very wealthy; so that the division of his estate between Jacob and Esau meant a good deal. Isaac is principally known as the Well-Digger. In Genesis 26 he is mentioned seven times as digging wells. This means he was something of an engineer; for that country is all underlaid with limestone rock, and the digging of a well was difficult.

Sent away from his father and mother in disgrace, (Gen. 28) Jacob was very lonely and discouraged as he trudged back east. His mind was full of stories his mother had told him about Padan-Aram, or Mesopotamia, her native country. She told him about the tower-temples, reaching the clouds. He lay down to sleep with his head on stone; and he dreamed he saw a ladder, reaching up to heaven, with angels ascending and descending; and God stood at the top, promising Jacob that he should inherit all the vast estates of Abraham and Isaac. When Jacob arose he anointed the stone on which he slept and callet it "Bethel", which means "House of God." This became a great shrine in later days.

The tower-temples of Mesopotamia had winding stairways going round and round them up to the top. Jacob had never seen any stairway except a ladder. This probably explains the dream.

It is very difficult for us to reconcile the character of Jacob, the "Schemer" or "Supplanter" with our ideas of morality and right. He cheated his brother and then when he got to Mesopotamia, he and his father-in-law, Laban, cheated each other. To an ancient Oriental mind there was something admirable in this trickery. But Jesus thought otherwise, and dealt a heavy blow against it. In the calling of his first disciples, Philip brought Nathanael to him (John 1; 47). Jesus saw Nathanael coming to Him and said "Behold a son of Israel indeed—in whom there is no guile."

Nathanael had been praying under the fig-tree, which was a sort of an outdoor or garden chapel. What Jesus meant was that He had heard Nathanael while he was praying. So when Nathanael believed, Jesus said "Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and angels ascending and descending upon the Son of Man."

"No guile—angels ascending upon the Son of Man!" Here is where Jesus shatters two Old Testament conceptions. The true "son of Israel" must lay aside Jacob's guile; and hereafter the Son of Man is the ladder, or stairway, between heaven and earth. Not the son of Israel—the Son of Man! By this he meant that all humanity is just as sacred to God as the Jews thought themselves to be.

Luke: The Greek Gospel.
John: The Spiritual Gospel.

Draw a cross. Write Matthew on the lower part, or stem; John on the upper part, or top; Mark on the left arm, and Luke on the right.

Matthew connects up with the past; John points up to heaven. Mark and Luke stretch out their arms to all the world. At the center, where the arms meet, write the name of Jesus. This diagram will help you remember the Gospels' different qualities.

OUR CENTURY IS LIKE FIRST NEW BOOKS REVEAL

Reviewed by G. M. DAY

In the Columbia University Records Civilization series the press of that University has just published The Literature of the New Testament by Dr. Ernest F. Scott, Professor of Biblical Theology in the Union Theological Seminary ($3.00). In this volume Dr. Scott does for the Christian testament in a manner which few other men could equal, what Dr. Bewer did for the Old Testament in the same series. Dr. Scott devotes the first chapter to the "origin and nature of the New Testament" and the second to the complex problem of the synoptic gospels. He then gives a chapter to each book of the New Testament discussing the problems relative to the date, authorship, purpose, background, and literary and religious value of each. Avoiding technical detail he endeavors to give the results of the findings of modern scholarship on the main problems in connection with each book. In considering questions in regard to which different groups of scholars hold different points of view Dr. Scott briefly summarizes the two sides. Throughout the author has taken pains to make clear the permanent message which produced the pages of the New Testament. The book ought to be of great value in our Church School Libraries for the use of teachers of the New Testament. In addition Dr. Scott's remarkable ability both as a scholar and a writer will recommend the book to the laymen desirous of informing himself regarding the sources of his religious belief.

Series of books are evidently popular today. Let us hope that it may be a sign that the modern reader has caught the scientific spirit and really wishes to delve to the roots of his religious interest. One of the most useful short lives of Christ which we have ever read is Early Traditions about Jesus which was written by Dr. Bethune-Baker for The Christian Religion series of the Cambridge University Press, and hence it was with great expectation that we received the latest one of the series The Church in the Roman Empire by The Rev. P. Gardner-Smith of Jesus College Cambridge ($1.25). In scarcely more than a hundred pages the author traces the history of the Church during its first four hundred exciting years. An immense amount of material is packed into this tiny book; but so well are the selections made, or we might better say the omissions, and so lucid is the style that the reader instead of being overwhelmed with detail is given a vivid picture of the events of the time, the struggles of the early Church, and the life and beliefs of the earliest disciples. Naturally this book is not for ministers nor seminary students (for the latter it might serve as a sort of pre-exam. "trot"), but for the busy layman who may be looking for background for his Church School class in "The Long Life of the Church". At the end of each chapter are references for more detailed study.

As one reads the author's account of the world into which the first missionaries of Christ went, the most striking fact is the number of sentences about the first century which apply also to the twentieth. Let me quote a few. "Most of the great cities, particularly Rome, maintained a vast population who were permanently unemployed, and who, by their numbers and unruly habits constituted a perpetual danger to the public peace. The government endeavored to keep them quiet by bribes and amusements; doles of corn were regularly distributed . . . To the outward eye it was a splendid world, in which the arts of life had been developed to minister to the luxury of the few, and the safety, if not the welfare, of the many. Wealth abounded, great buildings arose on every side, fine roads secured commercial prosperity . . . A large proportion of mankind were in some degree educated . . . There was regular and rapid communication between all parts of the empire. Greek was almost a lingua franca. Yet all was not well with the world. By their interest in oriental religions men were revealing their spiritual hunger, and the reckless extravagance of the rich, no less than the brutal irresponsibility of the poor, betrayed deep-seated social disease". Not so different this world of St. Peter and St. Paul! Change a few words and you have the world faced by yourself and all the rest of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America today.

PROVIDENCE NEWSPAPERS COOPERATE IN CANVASS

Newspapers of Providence, Rhode Island, gave liberal space three times a week to illustrated articles on the work of the Church in Rhode Island, in connection with the every member canvass in that state. Through the publicity department of the diocese articles were prepared on the work of diocesan institutions and upon Bishop Rowe's work in Alaska, Bishop Campbell's work in Liberia and St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo.

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

Accompanied by a nice little drawing showing an army plane discharging bombs on innocent non-combatants with a pretty halo over it, The New Yorker presents to its eager readers a letter recently sent out by Congressman Britten of Illinois, who is on the committee on naval affairs of the House of Representatives. The Congressman takes advantage of this Christmas season to invite all good Americans to attend a forthcoming moving picture. He writes: "These thrilling pictures show seaplanes being catapulted from battleships; airplanes taking off and landing upon the decks of monster plane carriers at sea; the laying of a smoke screen at sea; diving submarines; the United States fleet in battle maneuvers with aviation forces, and a reel made in the Holy Land showing Bethlehem, Jerusalem, and scenes closely connected with the life of the Savior. They are more than instructive—they show the American Navy as only officers and men of the fleet see it."

"This," says the editor of The New Yorker, "is a combination offer that has never been equalled, one that only a congressman with his heart in his work could evolve."

To which we would like to add, in these days when there is so much discussion of just how to Christianize the Orient, that somehow or other arrangements should be made to get these films into the hands of our foreign missionaries so they may graphically demonstrate to the natives how thoroughly Christian we are on our side of the Pacific. Meanwhile it might not be a bad idea for the Congressman's pastor, if he has one, to take the belligerent statesman off into a quiet corner for a bit of a talk.

Oxford Group Meetings in Canada

Information reaches us of large and enthusiastic meetings in Canada of the Oxford Groups, the name by which Frank Buchman's and Sam Shoemaker's First Century Christian Fellowship now wish to be known. One of the meetings was a party attended by the Prime Minister of Canada at which this distinguished gentleman, properly moved by the occasion, stirred the assembly by laying before them his deep religious convictions. It just happened that this news reached me only a few minutes after I had attended a meeting of the directors of the American Civil Liberties Union at which a professor from a large Canadian university told us of a public speech made by the Prime Minister but a few days ago, in which he stated that the ruthless use of the Iron Heel was the only sensible way to deal with radicals. And by radical I gathered that the statesman had in mind anyone who differs too drastically with him on just how the affairs of state should be managed. The movement sponsored by the Prime Minister, according to our professor friend, is already reflected in the attitude of the police who are handling unemployment demonstrations by taking a firmer grip on their clubs. All of which makes me wonder just what were the deep religious convictions piously exhibited before the Oxford Group. It may be that I have a wrong slant on the whole business but I cannot refrain from bellowing out "Applesauce" at a man who one day paraded his piety before a group of comfortable Christians and the next advises his police to crack his hungry subjects on the head merely for saying that some way should be found to prevent their families from starving to death in a land of plenty. Here's hoping that Mr. Shoemaker and Mr. Buchman will again call upon the Prime Minister to point out to him some of the implications of his deep religious convictions. Or if it is impossible to see again such a distinguished person they might send to him a marked copy of St. James' Epistles.

Conference on the Ministry

As we have already reported there is to be held at St. Paul's School over New Years a conference at which the ministry as a vocation will be presented to a group of young business men and college students. Further information about it may be secured from the Rev. Leslie Glenn, 1 Garden Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Meanwhile we would like to hand on to you remarks by Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts on this subject which seem to us to be exceedingly wise. He points out two facts; first, that because of the present economic situation there is today already an oversupply of ordained men. Second, in spite of this fact, there is also a great demand for men of exceptional ability. "The task", points out Bishop Sherrill, "is to recruit these men and see that they are well trained and placed. The Church should be more adequately manned with fewer but better candidates." I take it that this conference at Concord is for just this purpose—to encourage the best and to discourage those who feel that they have a call to the ministry but who, in the judgment of the leaders of the conference, do not come up to the high standards which have been set by the canons of the Church and which should be strictly adhered to. Meanwhile it might not be a bad idea to have a committee gathering information on this subject: how many unemployed clergymen are there at the moment; what is being done to provide for them, for, misfits or not, they were accepted as priests and the Church has a very definite obligation to them; are there more men now being trained in our numerous seminaries than can be placed? Certainly the whole matter could be handled more intelligently with such information at hand.

C. L. I. D. Meets in Baltimore

The Baltimore Chapter of the Church League for Industrial Democracy held a luncheon meeting on December 7th, with the headliner Dr. A. J. Muste, Congregational minister and the president of Brookwood Labor College. The topic discussed was "Will the Church survive the imminent collapse of the capitalistic system?" It was the opinion of Dr. Muste and other speakers at the meeting that if churches assume that the capitalistic system is sacrosanct and lines up with the status quo, as she has done historically, that they will go down, at least temporarily, with the present order. On the other hand if they put into action the fine positions that most of them have taken on social questions in official resolutions their service will be recognized, and they will not be treated as counter-revolutionary agencies, as they were in Russia. It was pointed out that the Roman Church is now forming an organization of priests and laity the immediate goal of which is a crusade of education so that industrialists and workers alike may be brought to recognize "that capitalism in its present form has failed and must continue to fail." This organization also expressed the opinion that a social upheaval is inevitable and warns its members, and the Roman Church generally, that what happened in Russia may happen here. The current depression, so this Romanist organization states, marks the breakdown of a political, social and economic order.

A Letter from Bishop Lloyd

We are glad to pass on to you the following letter from Bishop Lloyd, suffragan of New York:

"Almost by accident my attention has been called to the Annual Hale Memorial Sermon delivered by the Bishop of Eau Claire at the Western Theological Seminary on November 9th. I cannot but feel that if the Bishop's statement received general attention, it would result in the House of Bishops at its next meeting preparing such a recommendation to the General Convention as would compel that body's careful consideration of the problem which every reasonable person must recognize as of fundamental importance to the Church in its service of civilization. If you will give this letter space, it may tempt those who are competent, to discuss in the Church papers the questions raised in Bishop Wilson's statement."

We would add that the sermon preached by Bishop Wilson was commented upon editorially in our last issue by Dr. Bell and that the entire sermon may be secured in pamphlet form by writing the Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, Illinois.

Memorial Shrine Dedicated by Bishop Manning

Bishop Manning of New York, on December 4th, dedicated at the cathedral of St. John the Divine, the memorial shrine which is to hold the golden book of remembrance on the pages of which will be preserved the names of all those whose gifts, great and small, have helped to build the cathedral. The book will contain an unprecedented number of names and will be an important historical record. The shrine is more than thirteen feet

A BEAUTIFUL MEMORIAL

THERE is pictured on cover this week the new memorial reredos recently dedicated at St. Peter's, Westchester, New York City. The main panels depict events in the life of St. Peter. The central section is flanked on either side with niches containing figures representing representative rectors of this old parish. On the elaborately carved tracery appear the seals of the parish, the diocese of London and the diocese of New York while on the inside of the doors are the figures of the Apostles, with their symbols. On the outside of the doors, which are to be closed during Advent and Lent, symbols of the Passion are done in gold, with a pastel green background. The reredos is the work of A. R. Mowbray & Company of London, represented in this country by Mr. Paul S. Buck. At the service of dedication there was also dedicated a large number of other memorials, all designed and made by Mowbray. This historic parish was formed by act of the Provincial Assembly in 1693, and Bishop Samuel Seabury was among its early rectors.

Dean Sargent Called to St. Bartholomew's

Dean G. Paul T. Sargent, of the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, has been called to be the rector of St. Bartholomew's, New York City, which has been without a rector since the death of Dr. Norwood early this fall. Dr. Sargent, an alumnus of Berkeley Divinity School, became the dean of the Long Island cathedral in 1927 after having had a successful rectorship of fourteen years at Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Michigan. He is a member of the executive council of the diocese of Long Island and is chairman of their commission on religious education. He was a delegate to the General Conventions of 1913, 1916, 1922, 1925 and 1931. He was born in Cincinnati in 1881.

Congregational Laymen for Cooperation

A group of laymen of the Congregation Church met in New York on November 26th and adopted resolutions strongly favoring further interdenominational meetings throughout the country for the presentation and study of the Report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry. They also warmly commended the Report and approved in principle its recommendations. Resolutions were adopted recommending to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions of the Congregational and Christian churches, first, that it shape its policies along the lines recommended in the Report and, second, that it cooperate with the Laymen's Committee and other denominations in working out the measures to be taken toward united action in mission work.

Fire Destroys Baltimore Chapel

All the fire apparatus in Baltimore, all nearly that much, was unable to control the fire at St. Paul's Chapel, Baltimore, that broke out at midnight on November 28th. It is believed to have started in the rear of the chapel and then moved forward. Freezing weather prevented the firemen from making much headway. The Chapel is under the direction of the vestry of Old St. Paul's, that parish having contributed an Easter offering of $27,000 in 1916 for the construction of a new guild hall and for the rebuilding of the organ. The Rev. Frank H. Staples has been the vicar for thirty years.

Have Christians Any Answer

There has been appearing in a contemporary religious journal a series of articles dealing with the present economic situation under the heading of "The Way Out". Articles have appeared by communists, socialists, facists, and others, all of which prompts a subscriber to ask through the correspondence columns of the paper if it isn't time for someone to attempt to tell the readers what is the Christian Way Out. It was therefore my opportunity to dispatch to the gentleman a postal (nothing like saving postage) informing him that there appeared in this unpretentious Church paper a series of fourteen articles on this very subject nearly a year ago, with contributions by such notables as Archbishop Temple, Nicholas Murray Butler, Harry W. Laidler, Vida D. Scudder, William Green, Bishop Parsons, Mary Simkhovitch, W. G. Peck, Conrad Noel, Spencer Miller Jr., A. Auguste Demant, Reinhold Niebuhr, Daniel McGregor and Bernard Iddings Bell.

well I keep up on such highbrow things I can inform you, with the help of a cultured correspondent, that Haydn began the score of "The Creation" in 1795 on the text of Baron von Swieten, the librarian of the Emperor Francis; he finished the work in 1798 and the work was performed some weeks later at the palace of Prince Schwarzenberg, with the composer as leader.

Christmas Greetings From Council Officers

Christmas Greetings from the topmen at the Church Missions House have been received for publication and we wish that we had the space to present them to you in full. Our Presiding Bishop in two short but beautiful sentences wishes you all the joy of the season; Bishop Burleson, assistant to the Presiding Bishop, is inspired to verse; Mr. Franklin, treasurer, informs you that the Church family is made up of those who are continually offering their gifts and that he, "the treasurer, who had the privilege of receiving and transmitting your generous gifts, sends you his earnest Christmas Greetings and his prayers that you may find ever increasing joy in sacrificial service to the Babe of Bethlehem." Bishop Creighton sends you the message: "We of the domestic field recognize the blessings that have come to use through Him; and the anniversary of His Nativity is a divine incentive to give the Best Gift possible to the other members of the all-inclusive larger family in the world He came to serve." Dr. Wood, foreign missions, says that a confused, distracted and suffering world, as never before, needs to be made glad by the yearly remembrance of the birth of Jesus. Mr. Barnes, social service secretary, points to the suffering of children in these days and expresses the strong hope that, on the day we celebrate the Nativity of the Christ Child, no true worshipper will fail to render practical aid to some child beyond the circle of his own relatives and friends.

The head of the department of religious education, Dr. Suter, unlike the other secretaries, neglects to tie the Festival up with his own particular work, but he does issue a beautiful scriptual message which I dare say you will see printed in many parish and diocesan papers. Mr. Reinheimer, head of the field department, begins his message with the disturbing statement that "All the world should be taxed" which made me think for a minute that he was going to have something to say on quotas. But it wasn't that; he merely pointed out that whereas Christ was born into a distracted world and gave light to those in darkness, so "The Field Department greets you with a conviction that we are in the midst of a re-birth of the holier attributes of human nature and human relations that will make this Christmastide unforgetable." To which I give my strong Amen, for I too am on the side of those who rejoice that a new society is being born. The birth pains of a new society, which we all must share, can be suffered joyfully by those who see the glory of the new day.

Finally there is the message of Dr. G. Warfield Hobbs, head of the department of publicity, who reminds us that whereas the voice of angels and shepherds once alone proclaimed the Glad Tidings, that now we have the "printed word, the broadcast, pictures of the silvered screen, alive and speaking." "Those of us who as

Only at rare intervals—once in a very great while—is the unceasing flood of books punctuated by a novel in which plot and theme are so closely interwoven that the story seems to generate a vitality within itself. Such books have soul. Above and beyond their power to entertain; greater than their purpose of depicting a phase of Life or a period of civilization, is this intangible, often unintended, inner significance.

Of such a class is the new novel issued by the Macmillan Company of New York, based on modern Biblical scholarship. Historically accurate, showing how monotheism became triumphant over paganism through a great struggle for social justice in the midst of conditions like those prevailing today. Warmly commended by religious leaders, such as Bishop F. J. McConnell, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and Prof. Shailer Mathews.

The Love of God Does it Dwell in You?

By Endowing BIBLE DISTRIBUTION You can also Receive a LIFE INCOME of 4% to 9%.

IN THE holiest sense, these are times that try men's souls. "Our brothers have need"; they are hungry, physically and spiritually. Ours is the blessed call to give into their hands the solace and the comfort of the Bread of Life—God's Holy Bible.

Earnest Christians have found the way to answer this call, to manifest that "the love of God doth dwell in them"—and at the same time to apportion some of their share of "this world's goods" so that it returns them an assured income for life.

Safeguarding the ANNUITY BONDS of the New York Bible Society is the firm foundation of 122 years of Christian service. These Bonds pay from 4% to 9% a year (see chart). Every six months, without fail, you receive your income check.

These Bonds Yield (for example)
Your Age	Income
44	5%
54	6%
63	7%
73	8%
81 or over	9%

Rates paid other ages fully explained in free booklet.

Meanwhile you help further the good work of this Society, which has distributed over 17 million Bibles and Scripture portions, in 75 languages—to the lame, the halt, the blind; to sailors, to immigrants, to the poor in slums and the sick in hospitals; to all those who ask, and to whom, with God's grace, we are giving his holy word.

"A Truly Christian Investment" —Sent Free

If you would "shut not your compassion from them"—mail this coupon for your copy of our booklet, "A Truly Christian Investment". It is free; it implies no obligation howsoever. But it will explain to you this righteous way to earn—and to share. Mail the coupon this day.

The Depression and Beer
Our Chief Concern

"The American people do not want salvation," said Archdeacon Frederick Deis, in addressing a gathering of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Chicago the other evening. "A release from the depression and beer—these are the great desires of Americans today. We must present to the people religion as something from which there is no escape; something which is absolutely essential to their lives."

Junior Workers
Beautify Their Church

At St. John's, Linden Hills, Minneapolis, fifteen young girls have been raising money in various ways to buy an altar for their church. They have been at the job for three years and on the 27th of November had the satisfaction of seeing their work brought to an end when Bishop McElwain consecrated a handsome altar. But that wasn't all. Inspired by these ladies, ranging in age from six to fifteen, other organizations of the parish took it upon themselves to raise funds for other pieces of ecclesiastical furniture, while a group of men of the parish bought themselves materials and completely redecorated the chancel and the nave. Another case of the little children leading the whole flock.

Canvass Results Start Coming in

News of the every member canvass begins to come in. In the diocese of Florida the canvass was from October 30th to November 13th. Financial returns are not yet available, but it is definitely reported that more thorough and enthusiastic preparation took place this year. In Chicago word comes that early reports indicate a favorable result, with the Redeemer, Hyde Park, being the first to report its 1933 budget in sight.

The Bible

An Estimate by

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW

A GREAT deal of the Bible is much more alive than the morning newspaper and last night's Parliamentary debate. Its Chronicles are better reading than most of our fashionable histories and less intentionally mendacious. In revolutionary invective and utopian aspiration it cuts the ground from under the feet of Ruskin, Carlyle and Karl Marx, and in the epoch of great leaders and great rascals it makes Homer seem superficial and Shakespeare unbalanced.

A National Paper of the Episcopal Church

C. RUSSELL MOODEY
IRWIN ST. J. TUCKER

Vol. XVII No. 16 DECEMBER 15, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

COLLECTING the sum of $949,690 during the month of December is no easy task. That is our job if we are to keep our word to the National Council. It is the balance on the sum pledged by the dioceses that must be paid before the books are closed. The Council, in a statement that appeared in these pages last week, stated that they confidently expected the money. We believe their confidence is well founded. Episcopalians keep their word.

SINCE A GREAT effort has to be made each December to collect the sum promised for that year we wonder if it might not be advisable to have the every member canvass at some other time. With a man having a difficult time raising the cash to pay his pledge for the current year, it is hardly the psychological time to approach him for another pledge. Individuals, parishes and dioceses are saying: "I made a promise for 1932 and I am going to live up to it but believe me I am going to see that I do not pledge for 1933 more than I can pay." In addition to this psychological reason for having the canvass at some other season is the fact that unemployment relief drives, and drives for social agencies generally come in December. Why should we not have the canvass during the Whitsunday season? After the success of the emergency campaign last Whitsunday there is certainly something to be said for it. It looks like bad business to be driving people for two things at once.

IF IT WAS the idea of Mrs. Randolph Frothingham, of the Beacon Hill Frothinghams, to make her country ridiculous she has succeeded. She was the lady who informed the state department in Washington that Albert Einstein, eminent scientist, should not be admitted to this country, even though he was invited here to carry on his research. He was, so she said, "affiliated with more communist organizations than Josef Stalin himself." So the state department instructed our representatives in foreign countries to question him carefully before giving him a visa to enter the United States. He refused to be questioned. Instead he informed the world that if he did not receive his visa within twenty-four hours he would not come to our shores. In less time than that the state department issued a statement to the effect that Mr. Einstein had been questioned as to his opinions, that he was deemed a suitable person to mingle with us, and that the visa has been granted. Thus does Mrs. Frothingham, with apparently the hearty cooperation of our state department, make us look very silly indeed. The whole trouble started of course many years ago. Had the Indians who inhabited the rock-bound coast of New England only boasted a properly organized state department the Beacon Hill Frothinghams never would have been allowed to land. We would then have been saved, not only this present embarrassment, but also the embarrassment of the D.A.R. black list for which this lady was largely responsible, upon which was engraved as undesirable citizens such people as Jane Addams, Bishop Brewster of Maine, Bishop Parsons of California and others equally eminent.

STEPS HAVE BEEN TAKEN by the Lutheran Synod of New York to care for their unemployed pastors. Each employed clergyman of the synod is asked to make systematic contributions from their salaries to care for those who are without charges. The problem should be faced in the Episcopal Church. That there are scores of clergymen without work we know since we are constantly receiving letters from them. But as far as we know no effort has been made to get at the exact number or to determine their needs. The frequently expressed attitude toward these unemployed clergymen is that they are misfits, incapable of performing their jobs—men who should not have been ordained in the first place. In some instances this is no doubt true. Nevertheless the fact remains that they were ordained. The responsibility for providing for them therefore rests upon the Church that admitted them to Holy Orders, and particularly upon the dioceses that admitted them.

GEORGE A. COE, professor at the Union Theological Seminary, is unquestionably one of the leading religious authorities in the world. He was recently asked, "What, in this troublous time, is the outlook for religion?" The reply was substantially this: "Our religion is in trouble, deep trouble, because it is implicated in our decaying economic order. But our religion contains, and always has contained, the principle of love or social justice which, if it should be followed, would produce a radical social and economic transformation. The future of Christianity depends altogether upon the use that it makes of this radical principle. The one and only chance that our religion has for recovery and rejuvenation is, in the name of this principle, to reject capitalism and to work for a new economic order in which the love that is justice shall have full opportunity. If the churches should take this course, they would experience a more vigorous life than they have had since primitive days."

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

The Holy Spirit

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

"I BELIEVE in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and the Giver of life." I believe in the Holy Spirit because it gives me a reasonable explanation of creation; of the origin of reason and conscience in man; of the promise that man may become a new creature in a new heaven and a new earth. "The spirit of God brooded on the waters and there was life." "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." "And there appeared unto them tongues of fire and it sat upon each of them and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."

I am told that this is unscientific but as compared with any scientific explanation of the origin of life and its ascending progress it is most illuminating. Of course, it all starts from a basic assumption that there is a God who has a vital interest in man and an ultimate purpose for him. As we follow the story of this process as revealed in the declarations of Holy Scripture, we find that the Hebrew people had three successive conceptions of God: First, as a divine providence guiding them to an ultimate conclusion. In the Old Testament we find the idea of one God who is holy and who has a concern for the destiny of the Jewish people which shall be consummated in one who is to redeem mankind. The prophecy of Isaiah is full of this concept.

Second, you have a group of Jews who believe that the Messiah has come in the person of Jesus Christ who is the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world. Christ is to them "the word made flesh, who tabernacled among us" that men might come to a knowledge of the Father's love through the medium of His Son. If the Old Testament taught God over us, the Gospels proclaimed God with us in an intimate fellowship through Christ.

Third, we now come to Christ's own interpretation of His mission. "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I go away I will send Him unto you and when He is come He will guide you unto all truth." Now He said, "If you love me keep my commandments," and if you do this, "I will pray the Father and He shall give you a comforter that He may abide with you forever, even the spirit of truth whom the world cannot receive, neither knoweth Him, but ye know Him, for He dwelleth with you and shall be in you."

IT WAS imperative that Christ should come to a people prepared for His coming, and out of this people so prepared, He selected the nucleus of His fellowship. He then warns them that in order to appreciate and appropriate the Spirit whom He will send, they must first of all love Him and keep His commandments; then, and then only, may they know the Spirit which the world cannot receive and thus their justification will be found in their own experience.

He never expects that the world will receive that spirit because it refuses to see in Him that which He manifested. It is an orderly process. First, we must come under the law and believe in God who is over us. The foundation of the Gospel lies in moral conduct. Then we must be so enamoured of Him as setting forth a life of righteousness and love that we will do the things that He commanded us to do. Then as a result of such performance, we will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit which He promised to His Apostles and to which gift they ascribed the power that they displayed.

The Gospel, therefore, is not a symposium out of which we select what we choose and reject what we dislike, but rather a way of life which you accept step by step in an orderly process.

It is in my judgment the failure of men to follow the process which prevents them from receiving the grace. If some one whom I trust says to me, "If you will do thus and so, I will promise certain results," and you then refuse to follow the prescription, I am of the opinion that you are not entitled to the results. Here we have a description of the Apostles' own experience which I have no reason to question. First, after three years' fellowship with Christ they accepted Him as their Lord and Master. Second, He bade them to abide in Jerusalem until they should be embued with power from on high. Third, they remained there for ten days after His disappearance and were rewarded by an outward manifestation of this promise of supernatural power. Fourth, they themselves attributed their unusual ability to found and perpetuate a church to the power of the Spirit which they had received and which they gave to others who were to succeed them by the simple act of laying on of hands. This is quite contrary to many evangelists who attribute their success to their own powers. Modesty is always a mark of truthful men.

Fifth, they exhorted their converts to receive this gift, to stir up the Spirit and to quench it not, for they attributed the ability of the Church to continue in the bond of peace through the unity of the spirit. It is this loss of unity which in my judgment has been largely responsible for a failure to value the gift of Pentecost as Christ's statements should lead us to value it.

THE gift of Pentecost lies at the foundation of the Church's sacramental system. In Holy Baptism we pray God to give His Holy Spirit to the one being baptized. In confirmation and in ordination we invoke this gift. In the Holy Communion we ask the blessing of the Spirit upon the gifts of bread and wine.

To leave out this agency of Christ's own institution is to dilute the Gospel from being a means of grace to becoming a school of philosophy. The Church has a philosophy but it is based upon the foundation of accepting and utilizing the gift which Christ promised and gave to His Apostles. The whole system as He and the Apostles constructed it and as the primitive Church accepted it was based upon the power of the Spirit, operating not merely from within, but also in contact with the divine gift of Pentecost. The result of ignoring this gift has been to weaken the fellowship of the Spirit and to substitute an individualism that argues much and does little. To substitute individual cells for the dynamo of Pentecost is to reduce the power from the high voltage of the early Church to the weakness of our modern impact upon society. The power is there, if we use it as it was given to us.

I believe, therefore, in the Holy Spirit as the Lord, and giver of Life. As the Spirit of God he dwells in those who love Christ and keep His commandments and He not only inspires them to personal righteousness but He also binds them together in the unity of the spirit so that they may live in love and charity with one another. After all, the Church was not intended to be a group of unrelated pious people but rather of those who were members one of another in the body of Christ. It is in His work that we should all endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, rather than to keep the uniformity of our opinions in the bond of prejudice. It was the prayer of Christ that all should be one, and He gave us the Spirit so that we might become every one members one of another.

SITTING ON THE FENCE

By

JOHN R. CROSBY

Rector of Saint Luke's Church, Seaford, Delaware

MARIE LOYD, a vaudeville singer of the days of my unregenerate youth, used to sing a song of which the refrain was, "Tact, tact, tact; you can take it for a fact, that what oils the old machinery, is tact, tact, tact." I did not realize at the time, but I do now, that in those words she embodied what is known to most readers of the Church papers, as the "genius" of our Church. Now, tact, I take it, is the art of handling difficult situations gracefully, and as such is a most commendable and much needed virtue, and I believe to be enjoined by Saint Paul in his recommendation to suffer fools gladly and to be all things to all men. Whether the general variety of so-called tact, as frequently, and, I fear, very generally practiced in ecclesiastical circles is the genuine article, or a more or less spurious imitation, would seem to be a suitable matter for discussion in this article.

My first introduction to tact as an ecclesiastical virtue in the Episcopal Church was a few months after my initiation into our communion. The rector of an extremely select suburban parish had, in a fit of absent-mindedness, asked me to preach a course of Lenten sermons. After the first one, he led me to the study, and gave me a few words of fatherly advice. He said in effect, "My boy, that was a good sermon, but you will never do any good in this Church if you don't alter. Find out what your congregation wants and give it to them. You talked about the woman taken in adultery tonight, and you have upset some of my best people. It's a sore point. Next Friday talk about lawlessness and give Chicago hell. It's a thousand miles off and doesn't matter. Use more tact." The longer I am in this Church, the more I am convinced that the old man was right. If you would be a successful shepherd of souls, a beloved pastor, a popular preacher, use tact; be very careful not to offend the susceptibilities of the better class sinners whom it is the particular province of this Church to lead into the pleasant valleys that lead into the heaven reserved for the elect, and, remember that "more flies are caught with molasses than vinegar."

After all it is sound theology that it is our duty to be as happy as possible in this beautiful world that God has made, and we cannot be really happy with uneasy consciences. Why talk about unpleasant things? Does not the very Prayer Book tell us to use tact, and sit on the fence ecclesiastical? If the word "Hell" upsets our delicate susceptibilities, even in the Creed we can substitute "He went to the world of departed spirits"; "He did not abhor the Virgin's womb" was far too crude for decently nurtured, really refined Episcopalians, and "humbled himself to be born of a Virgin" sounds so very much better; the reference to the "procreation of children" in the marriage service, in this day and age is repulsive to delicacy, contrary to psychology and had far better be omitted. What modern young couple wants to be reminded of children, on the day when two young souls are more or less permanently joined together subject to the decisions of the Committee to Study the Whole Matter of Marriage and Divorce.

PLEASE everybody. If a religion cannot make everybody comfortable, of what good is it? Who are we to have convictions in this modern day? Provided that we do not offend anybody, let us preach the truth that is in us. The Lord did not create all souls in the same model. The stark lesson of the Cross can be wrapped in beautiful allegory; the crude precepts of the Gospel, "Thou shalt not kill; Thou shalt not commit adultery; Thou shalt not steal," were merely generalities and not intended to apply to individual cases. Say what we like, the Pharisee was really an excellent churchman. If he had lived in the present day he would probably have been a vestryman, and I do not see how he could have helped being a delegate to the General Convention. He could not have missed the Provincial synod, and his wife must have been a leader in the women's organization. The Publican must have been a most unpleasant individual. He could not possibly fit into the modern social life of the Church, and we all know that only the social activities make the modern parish.

Thank God that we have practically abolished sin. We no longer kneel at the feet of God's priest and acknowledge that we are erring children begging forgiveness at the hands of his accredited minister. Any up to date minister will tell you that sin is a matter of glands or psychology, and that your peculiar difficulties are due to your peculiar temperament, and not to be judged by ordinary standards.

All we have to do therefore, now that all the unpleasant and sordid side of religion has been eliminated, is to remember that the Church exists to make as pleasant as possible the path to the flowery New Jerusalem to which all the best people must inevitably repair. To carry out this mission as efficiently as possible, to remember that we are the "via madia" and that a swerve one way or the other will precipitate us into the most unpleasant decisions, besides alienating our most valued financial supporters, is the clear duty of the entire Church. We must balance ourselves accurately on the top of the Church yard fence; strong convictions, or indeed any convictions or their expression, would mean lack of tact, and tact is the very greatest of Episcopalian virtues. To practice tact, offend nobody and avoid convictions should, and indeed must, be the motto of every aspiring parson if he as the shepherd of his flock would lead his lambs, their fleeces nicely curled (and shorn), to gambol on the smooth shaven lawns of modernised New Jerusalem reserved for the elect.

OUTSIDE certain extremists of all three parties, it is acknowledged that the teaching and authoritative mission of the Church is gone with the snows of yesterday. Give the people what they feel they want, and not what the Church thinks they ought to have. It is a medieval institution and hopelessly out of date anyway, and all the good things of this world shall be added unto you.

The genius of our Church lies in "blessed compromise." Father Blank who wears white Eucharistic vestments because his people think it is a surplice; Doctor Pliable who preaches such comforting sermons on the doctrine that as there is no sin there can be no responsibility; Mr. Weakmind who does not hold an early celebration because Mrs. Brown does not like the idea; faithful ministers to their congregation and worthy descendants of poor old Cranmer thrusting his hand in the fire because he too had compromised.

Bishop Temple of London once wrote in an album that his pet aversions were "Society curates, jelly fish and lemon squash," but he was the last of an old school. What sons of Boanerges we all could be with heavy endowments and no vestries. God forgive us all.

THE REPROACH OF EGYPT

Lesson Twelve

WE ARE spending the first 12 lessons of a year's course on the book of Genesis. Sixty-five books remain. It is worth while to take a long while to get started right. We have learned that the Holy Books are the outgrowth of the lives of a very large number of people over a very long time. The crucial event in the lives of these people, the Hebrew race, was their manner of leaving their captivity in Egypt.

How did they get into Egypt, and how did they get out? Psalms 105 and 106 tell the story in hymns which were sung constantly for many centuries. The great land of Egypt hung on the consciousness of Hebrews as the great city nearby hangs on the consciousness of dwellers in small towns. Caravans were always going into Egypt; long files of camels and donkeys and travellers passed through Palestine every day in both directions. Many of the people had been there on business. And it gave them a glow of pride to say "One of our boys used to rule that country." That boy was Joseph, the Dreamer, who irritated his brothers beyond endurance by bragging that he would be a great man some day. They grew so angry at him that they threw him in a pit, and then sold him to a caravan going into Egypt.

There is a difference in the accounts as to which of his brothers saved his life. One story says Reuben, another Judah. Reuben was the first-born, and as such was entitled to the lion's share of the father's estate.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Joseph irritated him more than the others, perhaps, for this reason. But Judah turned out eventually to be the father of the kingly line. So in later days, the story tellers in the Southern Kingdom gave Judah the glory of having saved Joseph, while those in the Northern country gave it to Reuben.

The story of Joseph's sale into slavery; of his being thrown into prison; of his interpretation of dreams while in prison; and of his being taken out thence and promoted to be the Food Administrator, are fascinating and picturesque. But the main fact involved, which colored all their subsequent history, is too often overlooked. This was the matter of the land titles.

It is necessary to read over Genesis 37 to 50 to get the whole story. In doing so, be sure to omit chapter 38, if you are reading with a class. If you have not time for all this read chapter 41, marking verse 33 to 36.

One-fifth of all the grain was stored up by Joseph in huge store-houses, like our own Federal Farm Board's wheat transactions.

In the story of Jacob's going into Egypt, in chapter 46, we are suddenly interrupted by a list of names. To us, this seems needless; but to the Hebrews, it was the meat of the whole matter; for every one who claimed to hold land in Palestine had to trace his ancestry back to some member of this family.

Now read Chapter 47; verses 13 to end. With the stored grain Joseph bought the land from under the feet of the people; he bought all the cattle; he bought all the people to be the slaves of Pharaoh. All the land and all the people and all the livestock became the property of the king—except the land of the priests. They lived on the royal revenues, for the verse, "The priests had a portion assigned them of Pharaoh, and did eat the portion which Pharaoh gave them" means that they were supported by a royal grant. One-fifth of all produce was the tax levied. That is, twenty per cent of ALL incomes went into the treasury of the government and the church.

During their sojourn in Egypt, the people of Israel learned one thing very thoroughly; which was that all the gorgeous splendor of the royal court and of the priestly temples was paid for by the abject slavery of the toiling poor. While the priests of Egypt, the king and his nobles, lixed in luxury which is still the amazement of the world, the people labored and starved. Therefore, when Israel broke away from Egypt, it was reiterated in their law again and again, that the priesthood should be absolutely dependent on freewill offerings. The priestly tribe of Levi must not own land. Furthermore, the land must descend ONLY by inheritance. It could not be sold in perpetuity, but only leased for a time. The Law of Gleaning protected the right of the landless and the disinherited to a share in every crop. And although the priesthood of Israel gained great power, endowment of the church was strictly forbidden. It must not own land, lest it should forget its dependence on goodwill.

All history shows the validity of this lesson. The Reproach of Egypt was the reduction of the people to serfdom under the heel of Church and King. Wherever the Church has amassed great wealth, and through the gifts of the dead has become independent of the goodwill of the living, it has incurred the enmity of the people and eventually been violently dispossessed of its lands, as at the time of the Reformation in Europe; and in France, in Russia, in Spain, in Mexico, in our own time. It is a lesson we need to learn. God is a God of the living, and not of the dead. Endowments are the gift of the dead; offerings are the gift of the living. The Hebrew law is that the church shall be forced to depend on the living.

St. Paul also refers to this when he says, "Know ye not that they who minister at the altar must live of the altar" in First Corinthians, chapter 9, verse 13.

MEMORY WORK

Let us memorize the Epistles of St. Paul. These are not arranged in the order in which they are written, but roughly in the order of their length. Romans and 1 Corinthians come first, and are each 16 chapters in length. Philemon comes last; it is one very short chapter, the shortest in the New Testament. Romans is put before Corinthians because the book of the Acts ends with St. Paul in Rome, and it hooks on naturally.

Here is the list, with the number of chapters in each.

Romans—16
I Corinthians—16
II Corinthians—13
Galatians—13
Ephesians—6
Philippians—4
Colossians—4
I Thessalonians—5
II—Thessalonians—3
I Timothy—6
II Timothy—4
Titus—3
Philemon—1

NOTED ECONOMIST PRESENTS AMERICA WITH A NEW DEAL

Reviewed by G. M. DAY

Stuart Chase's latest book, A New Deal, (Macmillan $2.) has the unique distinction among the books we have reviewed for this column of being the only one for the review of which we have received special requests from WITNESS readers. You have only to read it to know the reason why: namely, that it is at once so instructive and so fascinating that some WITNESS readers wanted the rest of you to know about it.

The author presents in his amazingly vivid style a critique of the present economic order from the point of view of a technician and "wayfaring economist" desirous above all else of having the system revised in such a way that it will give an abundant economic life to every living person. After an opening chapter on the sixteen ways men strive to get rich, Mr. Chase traces the working of the foremost Nineteenth Century economic doctrine, laissez-faire, and proceeds to give his analysis of the causes of the present depression. The second half of the book is devoted to concrete suggestions of the way in which the present economic system can be drastically and progressively revised while avoiding the definite break with the past which Communism or Fascism would require. It is scarcely necessary to add that for different reasons, Mr. Chase believes that neither of the latter systems will work in these United States, but since great change is necessary owing to the present bad conditions, he does not see why the Russians should "have all the fun of remaking a world".

One note which is so seldom found in books on the "dismal science" is the ethical, but Mr. Chase has no hesitation in emphasizing and reemphasizing ethical judgments and like a refrain through the book runs the primary question What is an economic system for? Unless and until the economic machinery of civilization is regarded from a functional viewpoint the author sees little hope of preventing the financial mechanism from being carried of its own momentum over a precipice and dashed to fragments on the rocks of violent revolution. Two sentences suffice to state his views: "If the production and distribution of goods are left to some millions of private individuals, each striving to become rich after his own fashion, working more or less in the dark and frequently at cross purposes with his fellows, the whole mechanism is bound to lose its balance from time to time; and the more complicated and interdependent the engineers make it with their inventions and 'progress', the more tipsy we may expect it to become. The business cycle is the spree and hangover of an undisciplined economy."

The author's plan requires that the economic order be controlled from the top through planning boards. Some of the chief items in the new economy would be: a managed currency, increased income and inheritance taxes in the upper brackets, higher real wages, elimination of tariff barriers, control of investment and speculation, a progressive shortening of the working week, industrial decentralization, long term government budgetting, and a huge program of public works. The entire economic machine would be controlled by National Planning Boards and by the socialization of profits a better distribution of wealth will be ensured and most of the evils of the present rugged individualism avoided.

Undoubtedly the reader will exclaim, "But can it be done? and how?" Not even Mr. Chase feels that he can competently answer this question. The plan will only work provided the "intelligent minority" are at the controls, but the perplexing question is whether our voters can be educated to the point necessary to vote the intelligent minority into office? Mr. Chase is far more optimistic than the reviewer about the ability of a third party, representing this intelligent minority, to win an election, as he is also of the inability of an American fascist party to gain control in the near future. Agree or disagree you will find this volume amazingly exciting —and unlike so much exciting reading—worthy of your serious consideration.

TO HOLD BENEFIT IN CHICAGO STADIUM

You can have your parish bazaar and street fairs if you like but there is to be none of this piker stuff for Chicago. On December 21 the Church Club of that city is going to stage a charity benefit that is one, and just to prove that they are not petty in the enterprise they are going to hold it in the Chicago Stadium which will seat 20,000 people. A turkey dinner is to be served at a dollar a head; Bishop Stewart is to deliver a Christmas message; a choir of 200 voices is to sing carols and there will be entertainment features.

NEWS NOTES OF THE CHURCH IN BRIEF PARAGRAPHS

Edited by W. B. SPOFFORD

It is always real news when a clergyman is called to a parish particularly for the clergy since I have an idea that a considerable portion of them are hoping that someday they too may receive a call. The news fills them with both hope and envy. Bishop Johnson once told me that ninety per cent of the clergy want to move, a statement with which a number of bishops who were within earshot immediately agreed. It is even true of not a few bishops. Thus I was told yesterday on good authority that a parish a hundred miles out of New York which has been vacant for some months has had applications from 125 clergymen. Naturally it a very swanky parish. Another parish within the metropolitan area, I understand, is being looked at longingly by hundreds of clergymen who feel that they can reach the heights only by mounting the steps of a New York pulpit that they can call their own. All of this is preliminary to the belated announcement that the Rev. John W. Suter Jr., executive secretary of the department of religious education, has accepted the rectorship of the Epiphany, New York City. Dr. Suter is to take up his new work on January 15th. He has been the head of religious education since 1925, coming to that work from his native Massachusetts.

A Couple of Announcements

First of all John Rathbone Oliver is a columnist for this paper. He is to answer questions that might be asked of a priest and psychiatrist if you care to send them to him through the editorial office. So shoot them along. He will have an article in the next issue incidentally. Also I can tell you that the article on Church Schools by Dr. Crosby which appeared here recently has brought in enough other articles to keep the paper filled for weeks. Many say, "Hurrah, that's the stuff; it is time some one was saying just that." Others are saying in effect, "Where does that guy get that stuff?" All of which is fine—a good article is one that stirs the boys to take pen in hand. Maybe he will have something more to say on the subject as soon as Christmas is out of the way. Don't forget Dr. Oliver — shoot in your questions.

Dean Sturges of Boston was the guest preacher at the morning service at the cathedral, with Bishop Perry commissioning Church Army men at an afternoon service. Bishop Burleson was the preacher in the afternoon at St. Thomas Church. Dean Dumper of Newark preached in the morning at St. James. The Rev. Hugh Black was the preacher at St. Paul's, Columbia University. Dean Blodgett of Erie is the preacher at Trinity all this week at the noonday services. The Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, head of the department of publicity of the National Council is taking the services, we understand through the winter, at Grace Church, Brooklyn.

Rhode Island Considers Social Service

The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, executive secretary of social service, National Council, spent the last weekend in Rhode Island. He preached at Bristol on Sunday morning and addressed a forum in the parish house of the cathedral in the afternoon. The following morning he addressed the clergy of the diocese. He said that it was time the Church advocated human rights and economic justice not because they are expedient, but because they are true; not to prevent revolution but to promote decent living. "No recovery of the era of unrestricted, cut-throat competition is longer possible. The only feasible thing is reconstruction, based on just human values. This implies that the Church must insist upon a new social and economic order." All of which brings a lusty "Here, Here" from this corner.

Presbyterians Do Not Like Laymen's Report

We have already reported to you in other issues that the Report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry was received most favorably by Methodists and Congregations. The Presbyterian General Council on the other hand has practically repudiated the findings of the Laymen. In an official statement they condemn the Inquiry for releasing statements to the press criticising missions and missionaries. They say that their judgments are unjust and that confidence in missions has been shaken as a result of the Inquiry Report. They state that the interpretation given to the Christian religion by the Report is virtually a denial of Christianity. They question the completeness of the information contained in the Report. "We cannot accept its judgment of the attitude of missionaries to peoples of other races and faiths, nor its definition of the theological tenets of the missionaries representing American churches generally. "We cannot accept its judgment of the fitness of missionaries in general to accomplish their task, nor the estimate in which Christian foreign missions are held by governments, by representative civil officers and by a great number of thinking Christian and non-Christian nationals. We cannot accept its test of the vitality of the indigenous churches, nor its estimate of the place of the church, with its divine dynamic, in bringing men to the knowledge of God in Christ."

In other words, I take it, the General Council of the Presbyterian Church thinks that it is a rotten Report. On the other hand one of their missionaries, now famous, Mrs. Pearl Buck, who has given her lifetime to missions in China, crys out from the housetops that the Report is true down to the last sentence and that every one of it's recommendations are sound. So there you are—take your choice. And while I am at it, though I do not want to turn this into an ad, I think you should read the report. It is published under the title of "Re-Thinking Missions", sells for $2 and can be secured from THE WITNESS if you haven't a book shop handy.

Federal Council Holds Quadrennial Meeting

rately. Our own Church, as you doubtless know, is not affiliated but does cooperate, largely through the department of social service of our National Council.

Many matters of vital importance were discussed at this meeting; worship; race relations; the relationship of church and state, upon which subject there was an interesting debate, following the presenting of a report which was the result of careful study by experts. World peace had its innings, with a report presented by a commission upon which Churchman Alanson B. Houghton, formerly Ambassador to Great Britain served as chairman, assisted by Churchman George W. Wickersham and other notables. Miss Mary E. Woolley, who was a delegate to the Geneva Conference on disarmament, delivered a stirring speech on this subject in which she urged the churches to support the League of Nations and to press for international reductions of armaments.

Evangelism was stressed in a report presented by a commission in which the churches were challenged to launch aggressive campaigns in order that our social and economic problems may be solved "in the presence of the Spirit of God." Then the Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, Congregationalist, and former president of the Federal Council, announced, amid enthusiasm, that plans were under way to convene a World Conference on Christian Life and Work in 1937, at which it is hoped to bring together 500 leaders of Protestant and Greek Orthodox Churches to deal with the problems of practical Christianity.

Bishop Francis McConnell, outgoing president, made a plea for a larger measure of cooperation among the religious forces of this country. "It is perfectly amazing," he said, "how well you can get along with another denomination if you have any kind of an opportunity to sit with the representatives of that denomination long enough, no matter what your own theories may be."

One of the most interesting sessions, and one in which there was the warmest debate, was when the new "Social Creed of the Churches" was presented. There have been no changes in the "Creed" for twenty years but at the last quadrennial a commission was appointed to revise it. It was a distinguished commission headed by Dr. Edward T. Devine, former president of the national conference of social work, and our Bishop Gilbert of New York was a leading member of it. The new "Creed" deals with economic planning, marriage and the family (Professor Howard Robbins of the General has a lot to do with this), agriculture, prison reform, war, freedom of the press, of assemblage and of speech. It is an inspiring document about which we will hear a great deal, I hope, within the next few years for in it the churches that are affiliated with the Federal Council are committed to a definite program.

In addition to these business matters the delegates and visitors had the opportunity to listen to a number of outstanding addresses, among them one by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri who spoke on the function of the church in developing a Christian social conscience.

Vice Presidents of Jerusalem

To be appointed a vice-president of Jerusalem sounds like quite an honor, though a bit vague, if allowed to stand without explanation. The new bishop of Jerusalem, Dr. Graham Brown (of the English Church naturally) developed a plan before taking up his new job of making the Jerusalem and the East Mission more representative of the Anglican Communion. To that end the American Church is to be represented by three vice-presidents; Bishops Dallas, McCormick and Sanford. Then the Presiding Bishop has appointed a secretary for each province. It is the task of these gentlemen to promote and maintain interest in the Good Friday Offering which supports the work carried on in the East by our Church, all of which seems to indicate that the new Jerusalem Bishop is a very wise man if you know what I mean.

Church Army Has Anniversary

The fifth anniversary sermon of the Church Army was preached by Bishop Perry on December 11th at a service held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York. Seven more presented for commissioning at the service, including the first three of the mission sisters to enter the Church Army in this country. All seven have been in training at the Army Training Center in Providence for the past eighteen months. Prior to this service the group attended a quiet afternoon at the cathedral in Garden City conducted by Bishop Stires and also received Holy Communion at a special service with Bishop Manning as celebrant.

On the 13th a meeting of the board of directors of the Church Army was held in New York when the most important matter discussed —guess—that's right—how to raise funds to carry on this important work. There is a real crisis. The

Concerned Because so Many Go to Church

Not exactly concerned perhaps but wondering why. You see in Concord, New Hampshire, there has been an apparent increase in church attendance during the past few months. So the Council of churches of that city are conducting a survey with the idea of finding out just what it is that has made people suddenly turn to their churches.

Find Way of Raising the Mortgage Money

The problem of financing churches has become more acute in many parts of the country due to the reduced circumstances of church supporters. During the business depression when immediate funds have not always been available, an original plan for church financing has been devised to liquidate mortgages on church property. This plan is about to be put into operation on behalf of Grace church, Kingston, Pa., for the purpose of liquidating a mortgage of $30,000. The rector of Grace church is Rev. Ralph A. Weatherly.

The Church Life Insurance Corp. of 20 Exchange Place, New York offers a proposal which may be said to have been created for the depression. The plan operates over a maximum period of fifteen years. Parishioners make stipulated contributions to the mortgage fund, which is held under the control of the vestry. The vestry has made an arrangement with Church Life Insurance Corp. whereby a certain proportion of the contributions are placed with the corporation at compound interest, and in connection with the issuance of endowment contracts in favor of the mortgage fund. The plan provides for the annual payment by the contributor of but 6 per cent of the amount he subscribes for fifteen years. For example when $1,000 is pledged, the pledgor pays $60 a year to the mortgage fund. To balance each such subscription Church Life Insurance Corp. issues a $1,000 fifteen year endowment contract which becomes payable to the mortgage fund at the end of the 15 year period or under certain conditions, prior to that time. Subscriptions for ten years, five years or cash contributions are also made possible under this plan.

ber of years ago, changed the hour of early service from 8 to 8:45. The number receiving doubled, then trebled. He attributed it to the fact that people want to sleep late Sundays and that we have to recognize that fact. He also has his church school in the parish house at the same time as the morning service so that parents and children can come together. More, he has breakfast served in the parish house between the early and later services. The early service is always a high celebration. The 11 o'clock service is always Morning Prayer since in the rector's opinion the closeness of the hours makes it unnecessary to have the communion service at eleven. But the 8:45 service is a real one—with exceptionally fine music and all the rest of it.

Clergy of Long Island Want Another Bishop

Archdeacon Duffield of Long Island, ill for some time though now on his way to health, has submitted his resignation to Bishop Stires. A committee was appointed to consider methods of filling the vacancy and they have reported three plans; 1. that a new archdeacon be elected; 2. that the present acting archdeacon be continued in office; 3. that the bishop be requested to ask for the election of another suffragan bishop. The matter came up for a vote at a recent meeting of the Archdeaconry of Queens and Nassau and a majority favored the election of another bishop.

Suggestions for Sunday School Classes

Here are suggestions for Sunday School classes, cleared after trial by the department of religious education of the National Council. Maybe you will want to try one or two. Eighth grade girls rewrite the collect each Sunday in their own words. A class of boys takes notes on the sermon for use in class discussion the following week. A class dramatizes the debate on the creed at the Council of Nicea—rather ambitious, what? Still another wrote the service of Morning Prayer in their own words. Which makes me wonder just what adults would put to paper if they were asked to rewrite the service they had just attended in their own words. I would wager that not 25% would be able to put down anything intelligent about the Old Testament lesson, and I rather question whether the psalms or the canticles would mean much to them. Might be an interesting experiment, and a real check up on the effectiveness of the service, to have a few adults do this sometime—not warning them in advance of course, but asking them to do it as they leave the service. I'd like to see the answers.

Unemployment is on the Increase

Here are figures to ponder over—all based upon a careful survey made in Buffalo, New York. The field covered by the study included 14,909 men and women classified as "Usually employed". Of these but 46 per cent are at present employed on full time, with 31% unable to get any work at all. And to show how unemployment has increased in November 1929 only 6% of these people were out of jobs; in November 1930 seventeen per cent were unemployed; a year ago the figure was 23% and now it has mounted to 31%. Figure it out.

Tells of Work In Liberia

The Rev. James H. Gorham, member of the Order of the Holy Cross and connected with their work in Liberia, was the preacher last Sunday at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin's, New York.

A clearer conception of many of the tenets of Christian faith might be obtained in the Liberian hinterland than in cosmopolitan New York, declared Father Gorham, who is the son of Edwin S. Gorman, well known bookselling churchman of New York.

"The true meaning of what St. Paul meant by 'the household of God' appears most readily in the tribal constituency at our mission's field," he said. "The Occidental institution of the group composed of father, mother and children is a home, but not, strictly speaking, a household. In Africa I was once asked by a young man to meet his 'family.' I greeted his grandfather, the chief of the clan; his parents and then one whom he called his brother. Then another 'brother' came along, then another, and then about twenty more. Then came one who was introduced as his 'truly brother,' which meant that this last came of the same father and mother. The others were his household brothers. Does this not illustrate perfectly what Christ meant by calling men His brothers?"

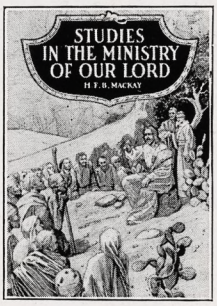
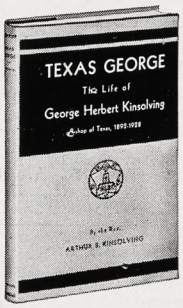
BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS



A CHILD'S STORY OF JESUS
By Marion Ryan



The ideal Church school gift: a book which both interests and teaches. A story written with the simplicity which is true reverence, and with that "marching" vividness which all children like. Illustrations historically accurate, each a source of teaching material, yet clearly outlined, brightly colored, attractive to even the youngest child.

Paper, 25 cts.; Cloth, $1.00.

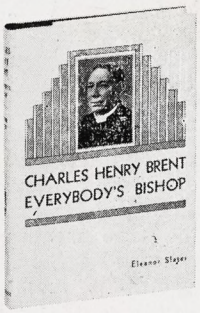
STUDIES IN THE MINISTRY OF OUR LORD
By the Rev. H. F. B. Mackay



The life and ministry of our Lord as revealed to the writer from a close study of the four Gospels. Here we are brought into personal contact with the intimate fellowship of our Lord and His disciples and learn the great lessons which show us clearly what He would have us do today to bring about the Kingdom of God on earth. $2.00.

TEXAS GEORGE: The Life of George Herbert Kinsolving, Bishop of Texas, 1892-1928
By the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D.D.

Dr. Kinsolving has written a vividly interesting biography in the Life of the Bishop of Texas. Master of a terse and vigorous literary style, the author, while writing intimately of his own brother, achieves his task so impersonally, with such simplicity, directness, and restraint as to command the admiration of the reader. $2.00.

CHARLES HENRY BRENT: Everybody's Bishop
By Eleanor Slater

"In these days of heart-searchings in the mystery of religion, it is a stimulating and steadying privilege to have an analysis such as this of the character of one whose daily strength came from humbly walking with his God. Few men of his generation have lived a more profoundly spiritual life than Bishop Brent."—From the Foreword by Bishop Ferris. $1.50.

52 SERMONETTES FOR THE CHURCH YEAR
By Fifty-two Clergymen of the Episcopal Church

Foreword by the Most Rev. James DeWolfe Perry, D.D., Presiding Bishop

"Utterances from many of the clergy of our Church appear in this volume. Sermons they are on single themes treated with utmost brevity. They give to many readers the benefit of such addresses as are heard usually by limited numbers."—From the Forword. $1.85.

WHAT IS THE OXFORD MOVEMENT?

Vol. XVII No. 17 DECEMBER 22, 1932 Five Cents a Copy

THE WITNESS is published weekly by the Episcopal Church Publishing Company, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The subscription price is $2.00 a year; in bundles of ten or more for sale at the church, the paper selling at five cents, we bill quarterly at three cents a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter April 3, 1919, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under act of March 3, 1879.

"TO WISH you the old, old wish"—how often that message reaches us at this season of the year! But what is the wish we receive and give so freely? It is not enough to say that we wish to be merry, that we wish to remember old friends, that we wish for a good time, good fare, costly gifts or a reunion of family relations. As Christians we are bidden to wish for greater things than these. We are bidden to bring back to remembrance the stable of the village inn at Bethlehem and of a new born Child and His mother, of God made flesh.

So we would word our wish that Christ may be born in our hearts by faith. For till Christ be formed within each one of us there can be no new birth. And to all of us comes from time to time an instinct that will not let us be satisfied with our lives, however successful they may be from a worldly standpoint. There rises within us a wordless protest against mere materialism. As we contemplate the Virgin and her Child we realize anew that there is life. Conversion may be defined as the acceptance of God's scale of values. If, then, we bring our worldly aims and ambitions and anxieties to the test of the manger throne we find an immediate reversal of our earthly standards. We recognize—however unwillingly—that here lies a greater than all. We live again—yet not we ourselves—but Christ liveth in us.

If we turn aside from ourselves and consider for a moment what other wish we would have for the world this Christmastide, we may also wish that the ideal relationship which existed between Jesus and His mother might become the whole world's ideal of the divinity and dignity of womanhood. A holy secrecy conceals much of that intimate life, but we are permitted some revealing glimpses and these should be enough to show us that even Christ did not pass through His life on earth unhelped by a woman's love. He revealed to us a new divine meaning in motherhood; He gave us a Christian standard of chivalry; He gave us a fresh standard of tender respect for all women. Indeed it may be said that He showed the world by His incarnation that women have the world's destiny in their keeping.

Finally, we must wish to worship. That is not a popular demand today. Morality, fellowship, brotherhood, these are all commended. Nevertheless it remains man's first duty and privilege to worship God. No fellowship is possible until men combine, not for success in aggression, but in bending their wills humbly before that which puts all their pride to shame. Heroics only produce a spirit of emulation. It is the supreme self-abnegation, the emptying out of glory, the all-embracing condescension of love that produces the essential quality from which true worship springs. He lies in the manger because there is no room for Him in the busy caravanserais of life. Oh, come, let us adore Him.

DO YOU WANT to have a joyous Christmas? There is one sure way—do as much as you possibly can for others. Never has there been a Christmas with so many desolate and lonely, without a home to call their own. So if you are one of the fortunate, share your good luck in the name of Christ with those who, through no fault of their own, are compelled to depend upon you for their very existence. Then too remember the many institutions and societies that minister throughout the year. In these days of heavy demands and high taxes there is a disposition on the part of many to hold back that check that has been going annually to some orphanage, institution or charity. As a result great work is seriously threatened. Or if you by chance are one of those who never established the habit of sending a few checks at Christmas time, may we suggest that it is a blessed custom that reaps rewards beyond imagining. Practical aid, particularly in these days, is worship of the Christ Child on an exalted plane. There is listed on another page in this issue a number of institutions and societies worthy of aid. Or inquire at your diocesan office or from your rector as to where your dollars may serve most effectively. It is more blessed to give than to receive. Test that statement this Christmas, not by giving merely within your own family and friends, but by giving to those in desperate want and to worthy organizations whose very existence depends upon the small gifts of many friends.

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAYS

By
GARDINER M. DAY

IF THE prophets were ranked according to their accuracy, surely the writer of the book of Ecclesiastes would go to the top of the list by virtue of his prophetic declaration that "of making many books there is no end." Although the wayfaring man may not be aware of the stream of books which flow forth from our presses at any other time, he certainly is when he takes his list—you know how it reads, Aunt Bertha, Cousin Julia, Uncle Howard and then a few friends, including not infrequently some with whom a religious book would make a bigger hit than a loud necktie—to the local book store. A special enhancement to the value of a book as a Christmas gift, for which the publishers and dealers deserve much praise, is that if the book is unmarked but has already been read, the recipient can exchange it for another which he has not read but always desired. The purpose of this article is to serve as a very incomplete guide to the gentleman with a list who wants a few religious selections. Our selections must necessarily leave out many volumes which deserve mention. The best we can do is to remark upon those which we have felt particularly worth while.

In the field of religion in general the two most outstanding recent books which you do not want to miss are: Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr's Moral Man and Immoral Society (Scribners $2.) in which the distinguished professor and author writes illuminatingly upon the modern Christian's most serious dilemmas, and Re-Thinking Missions (Harpers $2) being the conclusions of the Laymen's Inquiry's Appraisal Commission in regard to the present condition of foreign missions with definite recommendations for the future. Two other splendid books in the general field of religion which appeared earlier are: Father Barry's Christianity and the New World (Harpers $2.50), the message of Christianity in modern dress, and Dr. McComb's translation of Friedrich Heiler's study in the history and psychology of worship, Prayer (Oxford $3).

Three small books deserve special mention: Christianity by Edwyn Bevan (Holt $1) sounds like a case of Jonah swallowing the whale, but it is a remarkable little essay; Christian Outlines by the Head Master of Eton School, Cyril Arlington, is an admirable brief statement of the beliefs of a modern Christian and why he holds them (Macmillan $1.25); and THE WITNESS publication The Story of the Church by Bishop Johnson (costing only $.50), we have mentioned at length in previous reviews.

In these times of rapid changes there is a hunger in people's minds and hearts for spiritual insight and interpretation. In response to that need Harper's is publishing a series of small dollar books of sermons by distinguished ministers. Two of those which have already appeared are by Episcopal Rectors upon whom one can always count for something very worth while, When Christ Passes By by W. Russell Bowie and The Angel in the Soul by Joseph F. Newton.

Forty Years for Labrador by Sir Wilfred Grenfell is the outstanding religious and missionary biography of recent publication. Dr. Grenfell here completes the story of his adventuresome years in Labrador as a Medical Missionary (Houghton, Mifflin $4). A close second to this book in interest is That Strange Little Brown Man, the story of Gandhi by Bishop Frederick Fisher (Long & Smith $2.50). For one who has not been to India it gives a fascinating and instructive interpretation not only of the life of the famous Indian but of general conditions in India. What I Owe to Christ, the auto-biography of the Saintly Dr. C. F. Andrews, is in a class by itself owing to its great beauty and amazing spiritual quality (Abingdon $1.50). In Men Against Death Paul de Kruif dramatizes the lives of seemingly undramatic scientists and research workers in such a way as to vividly display their heroic quality (Harcourt, Brace & Co. $3.50). St. Paul by Fr. Wilfred Knox is a splendid popular life of the missionary apostle (Appleton $2) and Lewis Browne's Blessed Spinoza is a moving account of that deeply religious and saintly man who in his own life time was condemned and persecuted as a dangerous atheist (Macmillan $4).

With articles on technocracy and the modern machine appearing continually in our magazines, great interest is evident in present economic conditions. For those who are looking for an interpretation of economic trends from an ethical viewpoint Stuart Chase's A New Deal will prove at once instructive and fascinating (Macmillan $2), while a runner-up is a book by the noted British Labor Party Member and detective story writer G. D. H. Cole entitled A Guide Through World Chaos (Knopf $3.75).

Anyone interested in psychology and religion will find Pastoral Psychiatry and Mental Health by Dr. John R. Oliver, who is now himself a WITNESS columnist, full of valuable material (Scribners $2.75). While the book consists of lectures given to theological students, laymen will find them not only engaging, but also most helpful reading. Another book of worth in this field is Dewar and Hudson's Psychology for Religious Workers (Harpers $2).

Few greater aids to a Christian's daily devotional period can be found than the use of some new and sometimes very different type of manual from that which one has been accustomed to use. Such a manual is Kirby Page's Living Creatively (Farrar & Rinehart $2). It helps to relate the devotional life to Christian practice in no uncertain way. The Way of Light is another excellent manual which tries to make vital the same relationship. It has been compiled by Dr. Howard Robbins (Gorham $1.50) and not only contains meditations but also a carefully considered list of readings and subjects for study which should be used at the same time if the religious life of the individual is to be thoroughly quickened.

In Religion in Our Times Dr. Gaius G. Atkins has done for the religious life of the past forty years what Mr. F. L. Allen has done for the socio-historical movement in general in the same period (Round Table Press $2.75). The high literary quality of Dr. Atkins' work is well known and the book is exceedingly interesting. Another author who brings to his historical writing in addition to style and knowledge a high ethical note is Mr. James T. Adams, whose history of our country up to the Civil War has appeared under the title of The March of Democracy (Scribners $3.50).

In the sphere of the Church School we have seen no more helpful book this year than Miss Mildred Hewett's splendid The Church School Comes to Life (Macmillan $2), while The Teacher's Commentary edited by Hugh Martin (Harpers $2.50) fills a need in the Church School Library for a Biblical Commentary which is neither confusingly erudite or unscholarly. The writers know their subjects and for whom they are writing, namely teachers.

One recent volume of poetry must not be forgotten, Nicodemus, by Edward Arlington Robinson, which contains more than one poem on a religious theme, the title poem being a conversation between the sophisticated Nicodemus and the cynical Caiaphas (Macmillan $1.75). In the realm of fiction Mrs. Pearl Buck has written a sequel to The Good Earth entitled Sons (John Day $2.50), which appears on most lists of the dozen best recent novels, and just prior to it the author published an exquisitely beautiful story of a conversion in China, The Young Revolutionist (The Friendship Press in paper $.75). The Morehouse Publishing Company also has just published three books which are sure to be most worthwhile, though they have just arrived so that adequate reviews will have to come later. They are Texas George, a biograph of Bishop George H. Kinsolving, written by Dr. Kinsolving of Baltimore ($2.00); Charles Henry Brent, written by Eleanor Slater ($1.50), and 52 Sermonettes, a reprint of the column that appears weekly in The Living Church ($1.85). However, of the commenting on recent books this must be the end, although it is scarcely a beginning.

Books may be secured from George W. Jacobs & Co., 1726 Chestnut St., Philadelphia; Edwin S. Gorham Inc., 18 West 45th St., New York; The Morehouse Publishing Co., Milwaukee; Witness Books, 931 Tribune Building, New York, and 6140 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago. A few cents should be added to the book price for postage.

Confidences

By

JOHN RATHBONE OLIVER

IN ONE of his unpublished letters or sermons Father Richard Benson says "there is nothing divine in hurry and there is no hurry in anything divine." Our modern life has deified haste and we have come to think ourselves effective and efficient when we have dashed through a day's work at high tempo without a single moment of rest or relaxation. Quite different is the way in which God deals with the world. His revelation of Himself to the Hebrew people stretched over centuries of time. Since the Incarnation, the Christian church has never hurried. She is too sure of her goal and too sure of herself to need undue haste. As Isaiah said "He that believeth shall not make haste." In the same way God deals with individual human souls. Holiness is not achieved in one hurried hour and the very essence of spiritual life is the exclusion from it of time values and of time standards. The trouble with our modern life is that we really do not believe that we are working towards any definite goal and because we do not believe, we make haste. We dash from one activity to another and when evening comes we do not compliment ourselves on having achieved anything but are merely thankful because we have managed somehow to get through the day. We exhaust a tremendous amount of energy in pushing ourselves through the day's routine and as a usual thing we might have got through that same day's work at the expense of much less vitality. This constant wastage of mental energy shows itself in sensitiveness, in loss of emotional control, in anger over little things and in all sorts of personal antagonisms. Our lives move forward not with the steady impetus of a railroad train in full motion, but like a freight train at the beginning of its movement when it starts by jerks and jumps. We acquire no calm impetus from the past and our work is done in a series of uncoordinated mental heavings. Most of us have lost the power of intense and protracted concentration. It is a good thing occasionally to slip away from the breathless haste of a city street or office and to stop for a few moments in the shadows of some church. If we kneel down there in some dim corner and identify ourselves mentally with the timeless unhurrying presence and love of God we may bring back with us into our work the realization that old Father Benson knew more than we modern people do, when he insisted that "there was nothing divine in hurry and no hurry in anything divine."

Communications which readers wish to have brought to the attention of Dr. Oliver should be sent to the editorial office of The Witness, 931 Tribune Building, New York City. They will then be placed in his hands without being read by any other person.

BERNARD IDDINGS BELL

CHRISTMAS EVE

I HAVE been listening to some Slavonic Christmas carols—sung for many generations by peasants who have lived in the foothills of the Carpathian mountains. These songs are strangely different. They have neither the simple jollity of most English carols nor the sentimentality of many of those which have had origin in Germany. For the most part, they are composed in a minor key, and full of sadness, but a sadness somehow sublimated into joy. It is as though these peasants knew quite well that life is no joke and that sin makes for all men an every-present tragedy. God comes, and the world has no room for Him. Men push the most beautiful of births out of the inn into a dirty barn, even as later on they are to thrust the most heroic and lovely of all deaths outside their city to a lonely hill named Golgotha. And yet, for all rejection, God and good are triumphant; beauty and love live on. God becomes man, though only angels care. God dies, in solitary triumph. It is men who fail. All of that, these peasants seem to have known. The music tells it, and the words as well. Take one of them:

"Through the night, as all the world slept,
Christ His lonely vigil in the manger kept.
Darkness and cold, all around Him,
Met the shepherds when they came and found Him.
Thus the plight of Jesus' birth,
Thus His dreary, lonely first night here on earth.
Allelujah!"

With what simple penetration these peasants have understood the Christmas Gospel. "He came unto His own, and His own received Him not. He was in the world, and the world knew Him not. But to those who receive Him, gives He the power to become the Sons of God."

On this Saturday night, Christmas Eve, once more He comes. There is still for Him no room in the snug inns of the moment:—the inn where politicians congregate, the inn where current philosophers debate, the inn around whose fires our business policies are determined. Even from the inn of the family He is apt to be excluded. Yet somehow, somewhere, He is born again, as angels proclaim and as certain simple shepherds of us know.

In many parts of the world it is the custom to place a lighted candle in one's window, on Christmas-Eve at the time of the evening meal, to signify that, in that house at least, there is a place for the lonely and lovely Christ. Why should not all of us who call ourselves Christian gather the household, explain what is being done, let the oldest child light the flame, and pray "Come, Lord Jesus. There is room for You here"? Those who do, will find in their midst not merely Christmas cheer, but something far more precious, holy peace. And then, in the night, we shall go to the Mass, to see what the Lord has done for us. Poor men we are with Him that night, whether we be shepherds or great kings.

THE CALL OF MOSES

Lesson Thirteen

COUPLED with the joy of Christmas is always the background of sorrow for the slaughtered babes of Bethlehem. Back of the story of Moses is always a double horror; the slaughter of the Hebrew babies at birth, and the slaughter of the Egyptian firstborn at the Exodus.

Read Exodus 1. Jacob's family increased greatly during their long stay in Egypt. How long was it? In one place (Gen. 15:16) it is referred to as four generations, about 120 years. But in many others it is referred to as 430 years. (Exodus 12:40; Acts 7:6; Gal. 3:17.) It seems more likely that the four generations is correct, because in the lapse of 430 years—as much time as stretches between the period of Columbus and our own—oblivion would have covered the memory of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

The Hebrews multiplied so fast that "the land" was filled with them. But this means the district of Goshen, in which the Hebrews lived; not the whole valley of Egypt, which is 1500 miles long. Goshen was near the Isthmus of Suez, near the entering in of the Shur highroad, and it contained the two store-cities, Pithom and Raamses. Ruins of these two cities recently have been dug up by the explorer Naville, who found the great brick pits, sunk in the sand, on which the Hebrews worked. In these vaults were kept Egyptian grain intended for the northward traffic, and stores brought in from Palestine, Babylon, India and China in the great overland traffic which flourished from time immemorial.

The Hebrews protested against the terms of their enforced labor, but their protests went unheeded. Because of their unrest and increasing numbers, orders were given to exercise a harsh kind of birth-control. The maternity nurses were given instructions to kill all the boy babies at birth. These two maternity nurses, Shiphrah and Puah, are important factors in history. By them we can get a fairly clear idea of how many Hebrew families there really were in Goshen. It could not have been any enormous number, or more than two nurses would have been needed. How many Hebrew children were thus slaughtered, we do not know. But the order had important results. Moses' mother placed him in a little boat which she set afloat among the rushes of the River. Found by a princess, he was adopted and raised in the palace. When grown, he discovered his kinship with the slave nation, and killed an Egyptian whom he saw beating a fellow-Hebrew. Accused of the slaying by one of those he sought to protect (fair warning of their future attitude toward him) he fled into the desert to escape punishment.

There at a desert well he met the daughters of the priest of Midian, in a desert romance which has profoundly influenced the history of the world; for he married Zipporah, one of these girls. He tended the cattle of his father-in-law, and learned with him the religion of the One God.

What was Moses doing during all those desert years? His flocks could not pasture long in one place. They must be driven from oasis to oasis. When the time of sale came, they must be driven to market and delivered to the purchaser.

As a cattle-man, Moses went all over the desert through which later he was to lead his people. He knew the springs, the oases, the camping places, the routes. Doubtless from time to time he drove his cattle into Egypt for sale. This bearded Arab stranger was not recognized as the young prince who had killed an Egyptian overseer.

During the "40 years"—an indefinite period—he doubtless went also into the land of Canaan attaching himself to some caravan. He may have driven cattle to Beersheba, or Hormah, or Hebron, or even to Jerusalem. There he must have heard stories about his ancestors. Every well that Isaac dug must have been familiar to him, and every one would bear testimony to his ancestral claims. He must have heard that all these lands were claimed by Jacob as his inheritance, as a gift from God. He must have seen that these lands were now even more worth the claiming.

We do not know just what happened when Moses saw the vision of the Burning Bush. It was something which brought to a focus his long-growing resolution to lead his people out of slavery to claim their ancestral estates. Moses shrank from the task a long time. There was of course no stenographer present to take down long conversations between God and Moses, such as is recorded in Exodus 4. These chapters are the accounts built up during later years by the story-tellers around the desert fires or at the great feasts. What we know did happen was that Moses, on the sacred mountain and in the sternly simply faith of the Kenites, received the call to lead his race into liberty—and accepted it.

Moses left nothing to chance. Year after year he went over the route. He tried out the camping places and the wells. And when at last he sounded the call for the dash to liberty, he had a plan prepared, and he knew his ground.

In our endeavors at the present time to lead our fellow-human beings out of the slavery in which the whole race toils, slavery to the curse of greed and stupidity that chains us to senseless serfdom and more senseless war—do we prepare the ground, as Moses did? Do we survey the route out of which we are to travel from the house of bondage? Or do we just trust to luck?

FORTY YEARS

Note on the Forty Years—"Forty years" is a common Biblical expression for an indefinite time. It does not always mean a very long time. In ii Sam. 15; 7, Absalom is said to have spent "40 years" in stealing the hearts of the people from David. Yet thereafter he is still referred to as "the young man Absalom." Moses was said to have spent 40 years in Egypt; 40 years as a cattle man; and 40 years in wandering through the wilderness. In the book of Judges, every little while we come across the expression "And the land had rest 40 years." Judges 3; 11, Judges 5; 31; Judges 13; 1. Jonah cries "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall fall." It is an Oriental expression meaning "a long time."

MAN OF VIOLENCE

Moses was of the tribe of Levi, which later became the priestly tribe. Among the Hebrews, even today, the priest is the butcher. All meat must be "kosher"—killed in a certain way so that the blood is entirely drained from the meat. The whole book of Levi—Leviticus—seeps with the blood of sacrificial victims.

Levi and his brother Simeon were characterized by their father Jacob as men of violence. In the blessing of Jacob, it is written;

> "Simeon and Levi are brethren; instruments of cruelty are in their habitation. O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united; for in their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they hocked an ox".

Moses was of the tribe of Levi. The record of his life is far from showing him as "meek." He was always issuing fierce orders for the slaughter of those who disagreed with him. He began by killing an Egyptian. Those who disputed his orders were slain with the sword, swallowed up alive, struck by lightning, thrust through with javelins. Even Miriam and Aaron, his sister and brother felt his wrath when they disagreed with him because he violated his own express command, by marrying an Ethiopian woman. We shall be less surprised, taking this view of him, at what we shall read in the next chapter about the sacrifice of the first-born.

Angels

THE word "angel" means a messenger. Angels are spiritual beings who render service to God in the spiritual sphere. They are not men and women who have died and taken on wings. Nobody knows what they look like or whether they have any appearance in the way we humanly understand it. If the Bible means anything, it tells us distinctly that angels are a different order of creation from human beings. "Thou hast made him (man) a little lower than the angels."—Psalm 8:5. "Are they not all (the angels) ministering spirits?"—Hebrews 1:14. Or our Lord's significant words—"Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."—St. Matthew 18:10.

When in Christian symbolism it is desired to suggest the cooperation of the spiritual service of angels with human service in achieving God's will, it is necessary, of course, to use some representation which will be significant to the human point of view. Therefore they are pictured in some human type (for that is all we really know) and wings are added to indicate their swiftness and accuracy in doing God's will. But to depict them after the fashion of a portrait as idealized ladies equipped with swan's wings is the height of sentimentality—poor theology and bad art. They should be beardless, sexless, human in form, winged, and barefoot. All of which is purely symbolical. They may properly be clothed in vestments depending on the particular type of service they are to symbolize.

If they are shown carrying a censer, it is a symbol of heavenly adoration. If they bear musical instruments, it means praise offered to God. An angel with a palm branch may appear in a representation of the Resurrection, which simply means spiritual victory. Other kinds of leaves mean other things. An angel placing a laurel wreath on the brow of a human being speaks of divine recognition of some special Christian service in poetry or in art. If it is oak leaves, it means strength and fortitude, just as the yew leaves express immortality and the cypress leaves, mourning. An angel carrying a lily is a special symbol of purity and therefore is often used to represent the Annunciation.

In all cases the angel is a symbol, not a photograph. Features, proportions of the figure and other details should be treated with conventional lines so that they will not suggest male or female. Angels are spiritual beings. Sex is a human distinction. You are not an angel and you can never be one, any more than an aviator can ever be a bird or a diver can ever be a fish. By a turn of metaphor we might say that anyone acting as a messenger for God is an angel, much as we might say that anyone swinging a hammer is a carpenter. The point is that angels are God's spiritual messengers and are distinct from human beings. They should not be pictured in sentimental sweetness but in dignified symbol.

NATIONAL COUNCIL MAKES FURTHER CUTS IN BUDGET

By W. B. Spofford

Cuts in the 1933 budget of the National Council totalling $425,000 were made by the National Council Meeting in New York on December 14th and 15th. The present situation was faced courageously though reluctantly, since our leaders were thoroughly conscious of the hardships that these cuts will impose upon those carrying on the missionary work of the Church. There was a detailed discussion of each appropriation in the budget for aided dioceses, domestic missionary districts and foreign work, the final outcome of which was a cut of $215,270 in the foreign work, $168,000 in the domestic field and $33,000 at Church Missions House due to a further cut of ten per cent in salaries for the staff members. There were in addition further economies which brought the total to the $425,000 mark. These cuts become effective January first but will be reconsidered at the February meeting if the expectancies so warrant.

The unpleasant task was tackled with a vengeance at this meeting. The stars of the session were Bishop Creighton, Dr. Franklin and Dr. Wood, all of whom showed a detailed knowledge of their jobs without which the task would have been impossible. For the Council did not make cuts in a blanket fashion but went into the items one by one, depending largely upon these three men to supply them with the information.

There will undoubtedly be squawks, to use an inelegant but expressive word. The cry will come from the field, where most of the cuts will be felt, that we are being governed by a group of bureaucrats and that bishops have been shorn of authority which has now become centralized at the Church Missions House. Yet, while I will not take second place to anyone when it comes to the enjoyable pastime of crabbing those in high places, I want to testify to the fact that at this Council meeting they did get down to hard-pan and accepted the unpleasant responsibilities that have been thrown upon them by the decreased giving on the part of the rest of us. It was an encouraging meeting simply because the Council has finally come to realize that the theme song of America is no longer "Happy Days Are Here Again" but "Brother Can You Spare a Dime".

The committee of the Council to report on the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry presented their report, stating that it was "a highly significant document." The significance of the Report, said the committee, consists largely in the fact that it presents a non-professional and unofficial estimate and point of view. Assurance was given officially by the Council that immediate and intensive study would be given to the recommendations contained in the Report. This study is to start at once, Dr. John Wood, secretary of foreign missions being requested to communicate with our missionary bishops in the Orient, asking for their comments on the Report.

They state that criticisms of missions contained in the Report need cause no alarm "if we may assume that it is not primarily intended to apply to the missionary work and methods of the past, but rather to indicate the changes that will be required in view of the conditions and the nature of the task that lies ahead of us."

The committee of our Council welcomed the Mission Report's insistence upon an understanding attitude toward non-Christian religions; self-support on the part of the indigenous Church; high standards of efficiency in educational and medical work and the emphasis upon the importance of a careful selection of missionary personnel. "In regard to many of these problems decisions have already been reached, and in some we have made real progress."

On the critical side our National Council committee raises the question as to whether or not those responsible for the Report hold to a conception of the nature of the Church that we can accept. However they state that, "What the Commission probably had in mind was that too much emphasis was placed upon the subtleties of doctrine." On the subject of Church unity the committee give it as their opinion that the goal of our Church, both at home and in the mission field, should be organic unity. But they go on to state that "There are many practical advantages which can be secured through cooperation, and that it may be beneficial in promoting the spirit of unity. The Commission's recommendations along this line should therefore receive our serious consideration".

The report of the committee, consisting of Bishop Tucker of Virginia, Bishop Burleson, and Messrs. Sprouse, Castle and Newbold, was received enthusiastically by the National Council and appropriate resolutions were passed in line with their recommendations.

The Council took action request-

Edited by W. B. Spofford

A popular young rector of the northwest informs me that I have fallen down on the job in not following the established journalistic custom of selecting an All-American football team. He thinks that it might be a bit out of place to turn to the collegiate world for my material, but "why not an All Episcopal team." I take it that he is referring to the House of Bishops. So after days of research into weights, speed and all around coordination I am happy to be able to announce my selections. In the center of the line I have placed Bishop Longley of Iowa. He is an unfailing passer and is not easily moved from his position once he gets set. In the guard positions I have placed Bishop Johnson of Missouri and Bishop Beecher of Western Nebraska. There is a trio of heavyweights for the middle of the line, which is the primary consideration, though it must be admitted that these gentlemen are a bit slow in charging and getting down the field. However they are flanked in the tackle positions by a couple of agile and speedy boys who also possess plenty of poundage, Bishops Dallas and Hobson. That gives us a line from tackle to tackle that makes Notre Dame or any of the top teams look pretty silly. On the ends I am placing Bishop Cook of Delaware and Bishop Wise of Kansas since both have demonstrated their ability to cover ground.

Turning to the backfield Bishop McElwain of Minnesota is placed at quarter back since he has demonstrated his ability to think fast and to keep the boys playing together as a team. In the other three backfield positions I have placed Bishop Burleson, selected for his coolness and ability to outsmart the opponents, Bishop Perry who is a good steady plugger and Bishop Fiske, who wins a place because of his scrappiness and fight. Also places should be found in the backfield for Bishop Creighton, who has demonstrated his ability during the past year to cover ground, and Bishop Stewart who is unquestionably one of the most versatile players ever to take the field. Merry Christmas.

More Study of Our Missions

If our missionary enterprise is not managed efficiently and economically it won't be because they haven't been sufficiently investigated. There is a large commission, headed by Bishop Cook, now at work studying aided dioceses and missionary districts; Bishop Creighton, secretary of domestic missions, is constantly at that job; now Bishop Burleson has been asked by the National Council to devote all his time between now and the February meeting to an analysis of our work both at home and abroad, with members of the Council assisting him with personal surveys. In addition, as reported elsewhere, the Presiding Bishop is going to visit the Orient this spring to look things over there.

Romanists Demand New Social Order

At a regional conference held November 20 at Fordham University, one of four such conferences being conducted by the National Catholic Alumni Federation throughout the country, a crusade for social justice was launched, with the immediate goal of spreading the word that capitalism, in its present form "has failed and must continue to fail." The Rev. James Gillis, editor of the Catholic World, asserted that a social upheaval "is necessary and is bound to come . . . . what happened in Russia can happen here." Thomas F. Woodlock, former Interstate Commerce Commissioner and an editor of the Wall Street Journal, stated that the depression was not merely part of a cycle, but was the end of an era. "Our present system," said Mr. Woodlock, "will not work; unfortunately we made this discovery before we found it was unjust." The delegates decided to extend their crusade beyond the limits of the Catholic Church and to make it a national issue.

An Ex-Gob Does Some Squaring Off

I have received a pleasant little letter from a gentleman from Green Bay, Wisconsin, who didn't like having me call attention to the belligerent moving picture that is being boosted by Congressman Britten (December 8 issue). Signing himself "Ex-Gob" he writes: "If you had any horse sense you wouldn't rile some of us so much, at least to the extent of wondering why a minister of our church has to display such low mentality at times. Where would your missions be if there wasn't a navy to yell too for help every time the natives throw a powwow? Don't you wish you had half the intestinal fortitude of Congressman Fred Britten?"

Does Your Church Pay Its Bills Three Years in Advance?

YET, for some strange reason, more historical than equitable, your church probably pays for fire insurance protection three and five years before the protection is delivered in full.

FOR IT IS THE CASE, and indisputably so, that fire insurance protection is delivered day by day during the 1826 days for which a five-year fire policy runs.

YET IT HAPPENS
so accustomed are we to existing methods (be they good or bad) that few vestrymen think of this. Nor did we think of it ourselves until the financial problems of churches first exercised our mind.

AND SO IT IS
that already, fifteen hundred and forty-seven Episcopal Vestries pay for their fire insurance protection with us not three and five years in advance, but much in the same way as they pay their other parish bills.

THAT IS TO SAY
as the commodity we sell (Fire Insurance Protection) is delivered to the church for its use, by quarterly payments that are easy to assimilate in the Parish Budget.

Juvenile delinquency seems to be closely associated with certain environmental and hereditary factors, though no agreement exists as to the relative weight of them in contributing to the waywardness of youth. The economic uncertainty and lack of control in broken homes, are very frequent factors. Older children who are delinquents often lead younger children into crime. Neighborhoods in which the population frequently changes seem to lose those social controls that reduce delinquency. Street trades and other employments of juveniles either tend to attract or develop delinquent children. Truancy at school, usually the first overt act of the potential delinquent, may arise from home or community conflicts.

Start Building Hall of Religions

Ground was broken last Sunday for the Hall of Religions, one of the imposing buildings being constructed in Chicago as a part of the 1933 World's Fair. There were representatives there from most of the churches, and the address was delivered by Bishop Stewart, representing not only his diocese but the National Council of the Church as well. The Hall will contain a large assembly room, a chapel and rooms for exhibition purposes. The total cost is to be $75,000.

Bishops Speak in Rhode Island

For such a tiny bit of territory the diocese of Rhode Island surely does itself proud in the way of bishops. There was a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary the other day at St. Paul's, Pawtucket, with speeches by Bishop Bartlett of North Dakota, who held forth in the diocese for several weeks in behalf of the every member canvass; Bishop Bennett, who is aiding Bishop Perry in the diocese, and Bishop Perry himself. Bishop Bartlett spoke on the needs of the farmer. He said that he entered a commercial club in Fargo and found exhibited five bushels of farm produce, among them a bushel of number one hard wheat which is essential to the making of good bread, and upon inquiry discovered that the entire five bushels could be purchased for 85c. He said that the farmers were sore and they showed it by their vote. Bishop Bennett pleaded for justice to the Indians after all these years of injustice and exploitation.

These People Never Saw a Bishop

For the first time our Church group at Marshall, Liberia, had a visitation from Bishop Campbell a few months ago. Indeed it is said to be the first time any bishop has visited there. Marshall is on the coast between Monrovia and Grand Bassa. The people have an organized congregation and a day school and Sunday school, but no Church building. They are eager to build when hard times let up a little. When the Bishop went there, the Methodists loaned their building and the Baptists adjourned their service to attend. The Rev. W. D. Jones baptized fourteen persons, and the Bishop confirmed twenty-six. Most of those confirmed were Dru and Bassa tribes people. The Church school is directed by Mrs. W. A. Corbin, mission school teacher. Mr. Jones is president of the Montserrado convocation, in which Marshall is included. This was one of the first trips Bishop Campbell made in the new motor launch, the Samuel D. Ferguson. It took five hours, from Monrovia.

Interesting Little Facts to Think About

That millions of people the world over should be suffering for the want of things that have been created abundantly seems hard to believe. But here are a few facts, taken from a German newspaper:

"Australia destroyed in the fall of 1931 approximately 800,000 sheep because they had no value worth mentioning; England threw a half million herring back into the sea because they were unsalable; America burned two million of its six million superfluous bushels of wheat; Mexico destroyed millions of rotting bananas in storage; Egypt burned a hundred thousand tons of unsalable cotton; Central America heated with corn and barley; Brazil burned 70,000 sacks of coffee and sunk 1000 sacks in the ocean; Czechoslovakia, because of high tariff, poured tons of pickles into the Danube; Upper France left two-thirds of its harvest of hops on the fields in 1931 because of the low price. Contrast with this that in China 60,000,000 people are threatened with starvation; in India in 1931 in a period of eight months approximately 600,000 people starved to death; in Germany 30,000 people commit suicide annually."

Certainly an order of society that allows such wholesale destruction while people starve for the want of them has not long to live.

Training Negro Workers At Tuttle House

Members of the Woman's Auxiliary have a personal interest in news from the Bishop Tuttle Training School, Raleigh, N. C., established by the Auxiliary for the training of young colored women in Church and social work. Six Negro colleges, Fisk, Howard, Morgan, Wilberforce, North Carolina, and Brick, are represented in the present junior class. Of the fourteen students in both classes, nine have college degrees. Of last year's graduates, one is a United Thank Offering worker in a southern town where there is no resident clergyman; she gathers candidates for baptism, organizes clubs, does parish visiting, "uses every bit of training she has had." Another U. T. O. worker is in the Church school and community cen-

Kentucky Mountain Church Consecrated

Bishop Almon Abbott of Lexington recently consecrated Christ Church, Patsey, Estill County, Kentucky. The property for this church, as well as the labor and the material, were all given by the mountain people themselves. It is situated seven miles from the highway and is reached by mule back or mule wagon over creek beds and seemingly impassable roads. The service was attended by about a hundred mountain folks, some of them travelling for miles to attend. The bishop confirmed a class of eleven, presented by the Rev. Frederick J. Drew, who is carrying on the work in Lee and Estill Counties. One old mountaineer, eighty-four years of age, was so impressed with the service that he asked to be confirmed himself, and was confirmed forthwith on a muddy mountain side. This is the first time that our Church has penetrated into this remote region. The people seem to be enthusiastic in their reception, especially the younger people who are dissatisfied with a fundamentalist interpretation of Christianity.

ing that Presiding Bishop Perry plan to visit the Orient following the February meeting of the Council to study our work there and to confer with leaders in the field.

Dr. Percy Silver of New York urged the Presiding Bishop to do everything possible to make it clear to our missionaries that the cuts that have been made were forced upon the Council by circumstances. "We are all heartsick over this, and our missionaries should somehow be made to realize that the Church at home is behind them with our prayers and with what resources we can raise. I think as a matter of fact that too much has been said here about necessary cuts and not enough about plans to raise the money necessary to support the work."

Christmas Money for You
Without Trouble or Expense

High Prices Paid for Old Stamps on the Original Envelopes

MANY OLD STAMPS, both U. S. and Confederate, are worth from $50 to $5,000 each. Not all old stamps are rare, but generally speaking, the most valuable ones are of the old issues. Collectors during the past few years have been studying postmarks as well as stamps so that today nearly all old stamps are worth more on the original envelopes than those which have been cut off. A rare stamp removed from the envelope while still valuable, is worth from 10% to 50% more when on the envelope.

When clearing out attics and storerooms, old correspondence is often destroyed. There may be good reasons for burning letters of a private nature, but the envelopes bearing stamps should be saved and sent to Mayor Brooks of Marshall, Michigan.

MAYOR H. C. BROOKS of Marshall, Mich., Stamp Expert

Mr. Brooks requests the readers of THE WITNESS to make a thorough search through old trunks for correspondence running from 1845 to 1870. The letters may be saved and the envelopes (or folded letters) sent to him for inspection and appraisal. He will examine them carefully and make a prompt report. No one is obliged to sell unless Mr. Brooks' offer is acceptable. In the event the envelopes are not purchased, he guarantees to return them in good order.

The stamps especially desired are U. S. and Confederate, but Canadian, Hawaiian and other foreign issues are purchased provided they were used before 1870. The majority of stamps used after that date are extremely common and of little or no value.

Mr. Brooks is a private collector who during the past eight years has paid thousands of dollars to people answering his advertisements. Loose stamps he does not buy except very old issues unused, or mounted collections formed before 1880. Revenue stamps, such as found on old photographs, deeds, mortgages, etc., are not wanted. Other things like old coins, Confederate money, old books or relics, may be of value but he is not interested in these. He is, however, willing to appraise and submit offers on old autograph letters of men who were prominent in early American history — Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Marshall, Hamilton, etc.

Besides the rare stamps, Mr. Brooks buys thousands of duplicates of the commoner varieties for study purposes, so nothing should be thrown away even though many stamps may appear to be exact duplicates.

No dates or other marks should be written as these are not needed and are often hard to remove. Bunches of envelopes should be well wrapped and protected with cardboard to prevent wrinkling or damage in the mails. If sent by registered mail Mr. Brooks agrees to refund the postage expense.

If you have no old letters written during or before the Civil War, show this notice to your friends—especially those whose families have lived in the same home for several generations. Many old families, old banks and law firms still have stored away hundreds of letters, waiting either to be burned or sold for large sums. Before destroying such envelopes or folded letters investigate their value.

Mr. Brooks' address is as follows:

HAROLD C. BROOKS
Box 285, Marshall, Mich.

Holy Communion

by

BISHOP PAGE

THOSE who come regularly to Holy Communion do find the help and strength of God for their lives. It is the experience of every clergyman that although there are good people who do not come to the Lord's Supper,—nevertheless the heart and the motive power of the Church are found in the lives and devotion of the faithful communicants. Somehow, at the Lord's table they do find God and the living Christ, and go forth strengthened and refreshed for the responsibilities and privileges of life.

THE FAITH OF A LAYMAN

By
LEWIS T. GREGORY
Physician and Churchman of Urbana, Illinois

WE ARE living in an age of many and varied religious beliefs, probably greater in numbers and disagreement than at any other time in the history of the world. At one end of the gamut we find the religions which seem to have stood the test of time and at the other we have some novel idea based on the whims and fancy of an individual. In between we find the great mass of sects commonly known to all of us. Even in our own Episcopal Church, we have the "high" Churchmen, the "low" Churchmen, the "broad" Churchmen and the "good" Churchmen. The latter, I like to look upon as a sane mixture of the other three.

I hope some day some inquisitive rector will pass out to his congregation some examination books and pencils at the time of the sermon and instead of listening to him preach, the congregation will spend the time in answering the question "Just what is my religious belief?" I wonder what the answer would be?

Yet there must be some norm or average or mean which makes up this great Communion of which we are so proud. And if so, what is it? Or putting it in another way, perhaps, what is the minimal that a sound Churchman must believe?

I am presumptious enough to think I am an "average". Why? Well, first, I am proud that I am a catholic, enjoying all the glorious history and tradition of the original Christian Church. Second, I am protestant, in that I protest against the hierarchy and abuses of the Roman Church or any Church where obedience to the canonized authority is so arbitrary and absolute. Third, I am a "high" Churchman in that my views are "catholic" and I like ritual. Fourth, I am a "low" Churchman in that "form" for mere form's sake is most distasteful. I cannot "stand" mechanical ritual. Fifth, I am a "broad" Churchman in that I believe that all baptized persons are brothers and that their own peculiar and particular religious beliefs and practices should at least be respected. Finally, I am a great believer in Church unity. In fact, I believe it must come if Christianity is to be considered worthy of its name. Church unity will never come, however, until Christians become less intolerant, until they study the other fellow's religious convictions, and until they adopt a give-and-take philosophy toward such matters.

For the above reasons, I consider myself an "average" Churchman and what I believe in religious matters must be somewhere near the minimal necessary. Others may elaborate on this belief, but to substract from it would result in its falling below the norm. Furthermore, I think my religious belief is universally simple and workable. I wonder how many Churchmen will agree with me? The reason why I am putting my faith down in black and white, is to learn from others whether my "minimal standard" is to their way of thinking the minimal standard. And yet I am absolutely sincere in what I am writing.

FIRST; I believe in God. This universe with its natural laws, its orderliness and its wonders, did not just happen. Some supreme power, whom I choose to call God, planned its minutest detail. To God we owe obeisance for what He has given us.

Second; I believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God. Why it is such a stumbling block for so many to believe in the Divinity of Christ I cannot reason. Why is it so hard to believe that this God, who planned all the wonders of nature that aghast us daily if we think about them, came down to earth, incarnate, to show us the way to worthy living? We gullibly accept electricity, for example, because we have learned a few laws about it and find it works to our pleasure and comfort. But who will dare say what electricity is?

Can anyone name a person in all of history, who shaped the destiny of the world more than Christ, whose teachings are as applicable today in the rush and complexity of the twentieth century as they were two thousand years ago when He first presented them? God created the world and He gave it to man and man abused his prerogative. So God sent His Son to the world in the form of a man to show us the way of righteous living. He lived a simple life—not that of a king or potentate—but the life of an ordinary man. Yet His teachings have astounded the greatest thinkers of the last twenty centuries and have influenced countless millions during this time. Who has offered or can offer a more workable set of rules of life than this man, Jesus? That in itself, is sufficient proof to me, as it has been to millions in the past, that He was superhuman. No one who ever saw an electric light, the workings of an electric motor or a radio ever said that they did not believe in electricity. Many can say that they do not understand but not that they do no believe.

Third; I believe in the apostolic succession. Christ in His divine wisdom ordained certain apostles to carry on the work of His Church after He left the world. And He directed them to continue ordaining their successors. History tells us conclusively that this has been done since then down to the present day. These vicars of Christ, throughout the Christian ages, have been given spiritual powers by the rite of the laying on of hands by proper authority, just the same as a judge in our civil courts is given certain legal powers by proper authority and assumes this authority after the rite of raising his right hand and taking the oath of office, as administered by the proper authority.

Yes, I know there are those who say that this is not necessary. If that were true, why is the apostolic succession older than the Bible, the Apostles' Creed, and the Prayer Book? Yet it is. And who can give these powers if they have not been handed down through the ages by proper authority? You and I cannot seat a governor or a judge by our own prerogative. Nor can we ordain a priest of the Church unless we have been ordained by authorities who in turn have been ordained by authorities back to the Living Christ.

OUR Protestant ministers are, in most cases, Godly men, doing a fine work among God's people. But they are not ordained priests possessing the spiritual power which has been handed down in simple fashion throughout the last two thousand years. I know many able lawyers, more able perhaps than many a jurist, but their judicial authority is not recognized as they have not been authoritatively placed upon the bench. I know bishops and priests—history mentions many—who are not righteous. That is their human side. Because one occasionally hears of a judge who has gone wrong is no argument that our judicial system is wrong too. Neither is the principle of the apostolic succession wrong, simply because a priest of God occasionally succumbs to the frailties of man.

Fourth: I believe in the sacraments of the Church, especially the sacraments of baptism, confirmation and the eucharist. By means of the first I am made a Christian, by the second, I received the gift of the Holy Ghost—a spiritual power invested in me to use to my own selfish interest in maintaining the Christian standard. By the third, I receive the spiritual food to sustain my spiritual life. As the body needs recreative elements so does the soul. The eucharist is not merely a memorial service; it is not simply an act of worship. It is much more. It involves confession, absolution, consecration of the elements, reception of the host, and thanksgiving. It is essentially a great pageant in which I am personally one of the participants and by which I receive personally the grace to live my Christian Life properly if I so will.

These sacraments then are truly "outward and visible signs of an inward and spiritual grace, ordained by Christ."

Finally, what do I believe about the Bible, the Creed, the Prayer Book and ritual?

The Bible is a composite book of history, philosophy, poetry, prophecy, the teachings of Christ, the letters of Saint Paul and others, and the Revelation of Saint John the Divine. As such it is essential, yet merely supplementary, to the sacraments of the Church. It is what might be considered the hand book of the Church, or a ready reference volume. The acceptance of the Bible as the inspired word of God, alone, is not sufficient to spiritual completeness.

The Creed is the formal statement of the Church regarding her Christian doctrines and accepted (supposedly) without reserve by all adherents of the Christian religion.

The Prayer Book is a wonderful volume, containing the Liturgy of the Church, prayers and Scriptual passages. It is the product of ecclesiastical evolution during the last twenty centuries. It is subject to change as time goes on. Apparently the changes that have been made have in each case enhanced its beauty so that at the present time it is considered one of the greatest pieces of literature of the world.

Ritual, Church architecture, vestments, Church music, etc., are simply means of enhancing the beauty of the services of the Church. A service in a great cathedral, with all its solemnity and beauty of surroundings, is no more valid a service, no more acceptable to the Creator, I am sure, than a service conducted by a Priest in the great outdoors on the prairie, without Church furniture, vestments and other paraphernalia.

So there it is. My religious belief in its simplicity yet workability. I am sure that it fulfills the demands of orthodoxy; it is not vague, I hope, but on the contrary, very concrete and definite.

FROM time to time, I shall mention in this column new books which interest me—mention them not by way of criticism per se, but because they throw light on practical matters, of moment to Christian people. Such a book is The New Morality, by G. E. Newsom, Master of Selwyn College, Cambridge. It was published in September, in London, and its sales are already mounting through printing after printing. In six months' time, it will be much talked of over here. It deals with Bertrand Russell, Aldous Huxley, and their friends who advocate the so-called "modern sex morality." That "new ethics" has, most people know, three principles: viz,

1. That unrestricted sexual license is more important than the family, which must be abolished in favor of promiscuity;

2. That modern science and civilization make such unrestraint possible (by contraceptives), necessary and normal;

3. That it is not desirable that men should become as sexually self-restrained as women have been, but rather that women should become as unrestrained as men have been.

This is the doctrine hailed by quite a number nowadays as lovely gospel; and Bertrand Russell's Marriage and Morals has become its widely circulated defense. Russell therein has maintained that all science, and particularly anthropology, backs him up. Mr. Newsom's book simply pulverizes that contention. At the end, you see Lord Russell for what he is, a whacking good mathematician who as a moralist violates scientific method, misinterprets evidence, generalizes on insufficient data, and reasons a priori. Whatever may be the merits of Lord Russell's contention, after this book no sane man can regard his as other than a system inspired by inner and somewhat sinister desire. It has not a scientific leg to stand on.

It would be delightful if this coming year we could consign all this "sex-freedom at the expense of the family" to a well-deserved limbo, and get at some of the really important moral questions of the day—chiefly at the difficulties due to covetousness. They are what ruin life, far more than troubles which spring from sex. Why not let these "new-sexers" retire to the barnyard, while we turn our minds to serious things? The answer is, that irresponsible sex and irresponsible greed have an intrinsic connection—both are irresponsible. The task of the rational moralist is ever to show that irresponsibility is both contrary to reason and suicidal in fact. Until that is acknowledged, Christian moralists must contend on two fronts: the sexual and the economic.

But there need be no fear. Back of Christian morals is not merely pious theory, but also scientific necessity.

WHAT I BELIEVE AND WHY

The Church

By

BISHOP JOHNSON

INSOFAR as it affects one's worship, fellowship and service, I am inclined to think that what one believes about the Church is a vital issue. Man today operates through institutions in all walks of life. It is all very well for him to be an individualist in his thinking, but in his actions man conforms to the state, to the corporation, to the party in which he finds himself allied to others. The idea that Christ came into the world in order to insure personal safety and ultimate rewards to unrelated individuals has no standing today in the religious arena. The evangelist who dwells upon the fact that we become soldiers of Christ for our personal salvation is passé. Whether you are a Catholic or Protestant, you function in a group formation or you do not function at all. This fact ought to impress upon us the importance of the institutions to which we belong and of which we are an integral part. It is because I believe that Christ knew the value of institutions that I attach tremendous importance to His statement that He would build His Church upon a rock and that the gates of Hell should not prevail against it.

But what is this Church? I am sure that if our Lord created a Household of Faith it would have certain marks or characteristics. It would be such a simple organization that a peasant or a child could be a part of it. I am not surprised therefore, that the sacrament of entrance should consist of water and the word; that the Gift of the Spirit should be imparted by a touch of the hand; that the rite of fellowship should be related to bread and wine. What could be simpler than the touch of the hand and the word of mouth to be the symbols by which He incorporates us into His mystical body? I know that simplicity arouses the indignation of those who identify religion with philosophy, but then the person of Christ has always been foolishness to the Greeks.

I love this simplicity for it is a note of that catholicity which Christ always manifested. "I thank Thee O Father that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes." I do not know why this appeal to the common people has such a fascination for so many whose education would seem to demand a different emphasis. It illustrates the principle that simplicity is after all an evidence of reality and a mark of true dignity. So water, bread and wine, the laying on of hands are the symbols by which the Church has been distinguished. This may explain why not many great or noble take it seriously and why it has such a strong appeal to the humble and meek.

THE next mark of the Church would be its universality, or as the Creed states it, its Catholicity. Man is bound by racial and national limitations. Nationalism is no doubt the greatest impediment to an international vision. So men have tried to create national churches. In St. Paul's time the Hebrew Christians, claiming St. Peter as their patron, tried to make it a Jewish Church and St. Paul withstood St. Peter to his face. Later on the Latins, also claiming the patronage of St. Peter, tried to make it a Roman Church, but again Greek and Anglican have withstood them to their face. The Church of Jesus Christ is one in which there is neither Jew nor Greek but all are one in Him. Let us hope that we who have inherited a Catholic lineage do not try to make it an Anglican Catholic Church. Christ is superior to any national limitation and so therefore is His Church.

Anyone who was present at the latest Lambeth Conference would realize that the Anglican Communion is rapidly losing its English connotation. The presence of Chinese, Japanese, Negro and East Indian bishops demonstrated that the Church has passed out from under any racial or national control. It is destined to become international if we are faithful to our trust.

Probably the greatest difficulty that the Church has experienced lies in the realm of authority. To whom did our Lord give the authority that He claimed and the power that He manifested? To bestow authority without incurring the abuses of authority has never been easy in politics or religion. At first the Church recognized the authority of the Apostles, and that authority seems to have been exercised by a council being called (as we read in Acts xv) when the Judaizers tried to capture the Church. Following this precedent the Early Church settled its controveries in General Council, which was attended by bishops; local differences were settled in synods over which the bishop presided.

Papal domination was an afterthought and was confined to that portion of the Church which was known as the Roman Church, because it coincided with the Western Roman Empire. The Greeks would have none of it because it was an innovation.

Congregationalism was a much later conception, coincident with the rise of individualism.

It would seem from tradition that the authority resided in the body of the faithful under the leadership of bishops, but that bishops had no personal authority other than in the success of the discipline that the canon law of the Church recognized. At least such an authority saved the Church from tyranny or anarchy as long as it was accepted by all, as it was in the first few centuries. The importance therefore of that which is known as Apostolic succession does not lie so much in the possession of Episcopal power, as in its transmission of solidarity and continuity. As this theory operates in this Church, there to be a maximum of freedom with a minimum of police power, which would seem to be an ideal situation.

THERE is no system, not even the Congregational one, which in certain times and at various places will not exempt men from popes, either clerical or lay. That is the weakness of our nature. Let me quote James Truslow Adams in his March of Democracy: "Protestantism, when it had denied the authority of the single Catholic Church, had opened the way to an anarchic individualism in the interpretation of the Bible as the Word of God." (p. 8.) And again: "As we have pointed out, resistance to intellectual or religious authority and insistence upon private judgment do not unfortunately, necessarily result in tolerance. Indeed the exaggerated importance given to his own views by the protesting individual seems rather to be likely to result in an aggressive intolerance." (p. 22.)

The soldier who renders obedience to his captain or his general may still be a profound believer in personal liberty as the aim of his warfare.

So I believe in the Holy Catholic Church as the household of faith which our Lord established in order to conserve His Gospel and perpetuate His grace. I cannot agree that the Papal Claims are primitive in history or universal in application. When it was at its best in theory it was at its worst in practice.

I cannot accept the modern idea of a creedless Church and a spineless authority, which is individualism run riot. I want a continuous ministry accepting an historic gospel and administering the sacraments that our Lord instituted. Insofar as the Anglican Church preserves this heritage, I welcome its ministrations as those best adapted to preserve the soldidarity and continuity of fellowship, which I believe to be an essential part of the Gospel.

The very fact that it includes within its membership those whose sympathies are both with Catholic and Protestant is both its strength and weakness: Its strength because it is a cross section of legitimate religious expression; its weakness because it is difficult to arouse zeal unless a premium is set on partizanship. It strives for an ideal, which because it is difficult of realization, is apt to be condemned as a failure. Most high ideals have few proponents.

THE DASH FOR LIBERTY

Lesson Fourteen

READ Exodus 12.

A servile race, rising in rebellion, is apt to strike wildly and hard. The French Revolution and the Russian Revolution gave vent to a fury of despair accumulated through centuries. During their years of serfdom in Egypt, the Hebrews had seen their children ruthlessly slaughtered. Their own condition had grown progressively more miserable.

Into the huddled huts of the brickmakers of the Nome of Goshen, grouped around the store-cities of Pithom and Raamses, came a stranger from the desert. At night, after their long, hot day's toil under the lash of the taskmaster was ended, he went from hut to hut, speaking strange words. He said "You need not stay here in serfdom to Pharaoh. You are heirs to vast wealth. The whole estate of Canaan belongs to our family. It was given by God to Abraham, our ancestor. All we need to do is go and claim it." And they bowed the head and worshipped. (Exodus 4:27 to end.)

Again and again Moses sought to effect a peaceable release. Whether it was Pharaoh himself to whom he spoke, or the governor of the Nome of Goshen, representing Pharaoh, is a little doubtful. To the Hebrews it would have seemed much the same, whether the king himself or one of his high officials carried on the negotiations. But the heart of the federal government proved obdurate. At length the word went round to all the huts of the brickmakers:—"Get ready. Tonight is the night. Kill a lamb, sprinkle its blood on your door, and let none of you appear in the streets after dark until you hear the signal, or his life will pay for it. But when you hear the signal, run for the seashore."

At midnight the "angel of death" went through the land, and in every household the eldest son was slain, and the jewels, silver, gold and fine clothes of the Egyptian taskmasters were grasped by eager Israelitish hands.

What really happened? Are we to understand that God Almighty stooped from heaven to kill the oldest boy in every family of Egypt? If it was God Who did it, how did the Hebrews get into these houses full of mourning and come out with their arms full of jewels, silver and gold?

It seems rather that the Angel of Death who swept through the land had a human form. Moses had trained the sons of Levi, a fierce and terrible tribe, and his own bodyguard, in this idea:—"For all the years that our babies have been killed by the Egyptians, for all the years that we served in slavery, atonement must be made. The God of our fathers has had no sacrifices all these years; the Egyptians refuse to allow us to sacrifice to him. There we must sacrifice the first-born of Egypt. Strike at midnight in every house where there is no bloodmark on the door!"

Does this seem a violent interpretation? Then read Exodus 32: 26 to 28, in which these same sons of Levi took their swords and went through their own camp, slaughtering 3,000 men who had sought to make atonement to the gods of Egypt by offering sacrifices to the golden calf.

At midnight a terrible cry arose throughout Goshen. The Egyptians already hated the Hebrews. Now when they saw their eldest sons murdered and themselves despoiled, no wonder the wild demand for vengeance sent the chariots of Egypt thundering after the Hebrew serfs, as with all their possessions bound on their backs, and dragging their children by the hand, they made off hastily through the night to the seashore.

There they were, caught between the sea and the pursuing troops. No wonder they were in terror. But during the night the heavy sea mist settled, and heat-lightning flashed in the thunder cloud; the Lord looked through the cloud (Ex. 14:24); a strong east wind blew, and the tide ran out until they could walk across the wet sands to the eastern shore. The chariots of Pharaoh plunged after them; but the wheels and the horses' hoofs were bogged in the sand, and when the tide returned to his strength, the pursuing foe was drowned.

On the eastern shore of the Red Sea stood the shivering fugitives while dawn came. When they saw their retreat thus protected, and their enemies drowned, the wild Song of the Passover arose. Moses stood on a hillock and led the song, while Miriam and the women danced in ecstasy and the men shouted and screamed in adoration of the God of Battles who had saved them.

It was a barbarous, savage cry that went up from the shores of the Red Sea. Much of our hymnology at Easter is built on the story of the Passover; the unleavened bread, the blood of the passover lamb, the crossing of the Red Sea and the drowning of Pharaoh's hosts. But surely, with a better understanding of what really happened, we can change much of that. It will be good for us, instead of singing forever about the deliverance of the Hebrews from Pharaoh four thousand years ago, to set about delivering the slaves who toil in misery and want under our present industrial system; to deliver the babies doomed to hunger, want and death through our national neglect. The Passover is not only a historical event; it is a stern and increasingly necessary warning.

How many Hebrews joined in the Exodus? The number is officially translated as six hundred thousand. But it would have taken days and days for an army of highly disciplined men numbering that many to make such a crossing. In Exodus 15:27, it says "They came to Elim, where were 12 wells and three score and ten palm trees." Six hundred thousand people getting water from 12 wells would have meant 50,000 to a well; there would have been 8,000 people to every palm tree. To house this multitude, reckoning six people to a tent, would have required 100,000 tents. To carry such an enormous number of tents, with their tent poles and cordage; and to pitch them at night and strike them at dawn, would have been a task at which highly skilled generals might quail. What is the answer?

The word translated thousand—aleph—also means "family," and is often so translated. Gideon refers to his "thousand"; "Behold, my thousand is poor in Manasseh"—and it is translated "Family." So what really happened was that 600 FAMILIES took part in the dash for liberty.

The book of Numbers begins with a long census of the fugitives. "Of the tribe of Reuben were numbered 46 thousand and 500." Which means that the tribe of Reuben were 46 families, about 500 people in all. Of the tribe of Simeon were 59 families, about 300 people. Of the tribe of Gad, 45 families, 650 people.

Thus by the translation of one word, the whole story becomes intelligible. We can see how 600 families could wander over the desert; how with 12 wells, there would be 50 families to a well; and how they could manage to exist between the oases.

THE BUNDLE PLAN

TEN or more copies each week. Have the paper sold at the church at five cents a copy. We bill quarterly at three cents a copy.

The plan works well in hundreds of parishes —from the largest of city Churches to the smallest of Missions.

Yes, it requires a bit of effort—someone to handle the papers and an occasional announcement. But those who have made this effort are glad.

Drop us a card telling us how many copies to send you.

BOOK SHEDS MUCH NEW LIGHT ON THE TEACHING OF JESUS

By Gardiner M. Day

In My Neighbor Jesus Mr. George M. Lamsa, an Assyrian from Iraq, has written a beautifully sympathetic and imaginative portrait of Our Lord, which, according to Mr. Henry Lanier in the introduction "seems to be the first such presentation of the historical Jesus by one who speaks Aramaic" and he means of course as his native language (Harpers $1.50). Aramaic has changed but little since Jesus' day and in consequence the author gives us some striking, if not revolutionary interpretations of some of Jesus' words and actions.

Space will only permit me to give a few here, but they are suggestive of many another. The word used for Holy Ghost in Aramaic means also wind, pride, temper, rheumatism and healing power and Mr. Lamsa believes that in the declaration of Jesus that whosoever sinned against the Holy Ghost would never be forgiven, by the Holy Ghost He meant healing power. God will forgive man because man has not seen Him; Jesus will forgive man's inability to recognize Him, but how can a man be forgiven when he sees the healing power at work with his own eyes and yet blasphemes against it. Mr. Lamsa translates, "do not lay for yourselves treasures in the ground" as he explains Jesus referred to the customary habit of hiding money in the ground; "tell no one" as meaning in Aramaic "Go and tell everybody"; "what is truth?", Pilate's question in contradiction of all who thought it showed the Roman's scepticism, means: "What are the principles which you support and for which the priests are accusing you?"; and most startling of all Jesus' cry from the cross should read, "My God, My God for this I was kept" or for this destiny have I been preserved. The final cry thus becomes not a confession that God had forsaken Jesus but "an acknowledgment that God had at last fulfilled His purpose through the death of His Son".

It will be interesting to learn what the New Testament scholars will have to say about these interpretations, but even though they may not wholly agree with Mr. Lamsa the book has value in the background of native customs he brings to the subject. Later Christian art has so colored our mental photograph of the last supper that Mr. Lamsa's picture of the usual seems unusual: "When the time came and supper was ready, Jesus and His disciples according to custom, sat on the floor in a circle in one of the small chambers. Tables were unknown to them, and are still unknown in some Eastern countries. The little group of friends sat down, their feet folded under, their hats on their heads, and their shoes removed."

It is natural that there should be no end to books on the literary aspect of the Bible, but Dr. George Sprau's Literature in the Bible (Macmillan $3.50) does not commend itself to us. In a book of over 400 pages to devote only 7 to giving the background of the Synoptic gospels not only makes an adequate treatment of them impossible but also points to a lack of perspective on the author's part. We are not captivated by the author's own literary style and in the treatment of many other books of the Bible, he does not give as much of the probable historical background as a book of this sort ought to possess. Again Dr. Sprau appears to read in much from his imagination, as for example when he declares that St. Luke is interested in the "Christ ideal" as revealed through the teaching of Jesus or when he comments that the miracles "if not wholly the product of popular fancy, must be attributed to some form of imaginative idealization". To one desiring this type of book we would again commend the two volumes on the Old and New Testaments in the Columbia University Records of Civilization series by Drs. Julius Bewer and E. F. Scott, respectively, each a recognized authority in his field.

Edited by W. B. Spofford

If the National Council doesn't spend its money properly it won't be because an effort isn't being made to discover how it should be spent. As we reported last week Bishop Perry is about ready to pack his trunks for a trip to the Orient to look over the work there. Bishop Creighton, head of domestic missions, is carrying on a perpetual study of the domestic field, and the other day the National Council directed Bishop Burleson to study both the domestic and foreign mission fields.

In addition to these efforts the commission on aided dioceses and missionary districts is on the job and reported to the finance committee of the National Council the other day through their chairman, Bishop Cook of Delaware. He gave some of the recommendations they now figure on making to the next General Convention, to whom this commission is responsible. The greatest need of the Church, said Bishop Cook, is more knowledge of what actually is being done in the mission fields. This requires an evaluation in a fair and impartial way of all the work, with the added requirement that the facts be set forth with the utmost frankness. This the commission is attempting to do in our continental mission field. As things are at the moment, according to the commission, neither the committee on budget and program of the General Convention, the National Council, nor the House of Bishops meeting with the Council, as they did last April, have sufficient knowledge to know where and how to make cuts in the budget when that becomes necessary. Hence they put through general cuts when it is apparent that all work is not of equal value. The job is to find out what is static and unproductive—"places which have received major support from funds of the National Council for twenty, even fifty years, which remain in much the same condition as when this support was first given them. There are institutions, such as schools and hospitals which, due to change in conditions, have survived their usefulness. There are appropriations given which by every rule of wisdom should be secured from local support. There are also pieces of work so productive, so full of promise, that they ought to be sustained in fullest measure of generosity. The commission is convinced that the greatest requirement of the present time is that the Church, and all its agencies, be placed in a position to know how to discriminate between these different types of opportunity."

They then suggest that the canons of the Church have a provision which may serve to accomplish this result (Can. 59, Section 8, paragraph 1).

> In connection with the preparation of such budget (that is the budget presented by the National Council to the General Convention) the National Council shall, at least fifteen months before the session of the General Convention transmit to the President of each Province a statement of its existing appropriations for the dioceses and missionary districts within such province, showing the items for which such appropriations are expended, for the purpose of obtaining the advice of the province as to changes therein. The synod, or council, of each province shall thereupon, in such manner as the synod shall determine, consider such budget and report its findings to the National Council for its information. The National Council shall also submit to the General Convention with the budget a plan for the apportionment to the respective dioceses and missionary districts of the sum needed to execute the program.

The commission is of the opinion that if the requirement of this canon is carried out in fullest measure it gives opportunity for just the kind of survey most needed in the present emergency.

They have therefore asked the Presiding Bishop to call the attention of presidents of provinces to the canon, reminding them that it is their duty to bring this matter to the attention of the synods well in advance and to get their action thereon. Then Bishop Cook, as chairman of the commission, is to ask that the program for each synod be so framed as to allow for this action. And what is also extremely important, the commission has appointed committees from its own members, supplemented by at least one in each province not of its membership, whose job it shall be also to evaluate work in the province that is supported by funds from the National Council.

That is, as I get it, each diocese and missionary district will have to justify each item in the budget of the National Council at the synod of its own province. And lest there be a temptation to do a bit of back scratching there will be gentlemen present, representing this commission, to check up on things a bit. Bishop Cook said the other day that it would make synods, generally extremely dull, rather lively affairs; it would help to educate those who are likely to represent the Church in General Convention so that they would really have some idea as to what was going on when the Budget comes before future General Conventions, and, most important of all, the reporting back to National Council by synods on work done within its borders will be of great value in making up the program for the next triennium.

BISHOP PERRY
Plans Trip to Orient

Other Suggestions of This Commission

Bishop Cook also reported that this commission on aided dioceses and missionary districts was gathering a mass of data and information which they were sure would prove of great value. He also stated that certain principles had been adopted to guide them in the work. First, they hope to develop a sense of responsibility for local work. Also if a diocese or missionary district wants to continue "static work" they are of the opinion that it should be paid for by themselves and not from national funds. "To that end we are seeking to discover where such work exists and to gather facts which seem to the commission to justify the application of this term to it."

Then a proposition has been made to the bishops of aided dioceses that their dioceses assume responsibility for all work for which they are now receiving support from the National Council, with the understanding that their payments to the National Council be reduced that much. This looks like mere book-keeping. They give as their opinion however that if people could actually see within their own dioceses what they fail to give actually means that they would be more generous. The commission also discovered "dioceses that were holding back for local support funds which properly belong in the treasury of the National Council. Just as parish treasurers have often used mission funds for local support, so it is also true that some dioceses have fallen into the habit of using National Council funds given for the program of the Church for local diocesan support. We have discovered more than one instance of this. In one case at least a parish is under quota for support of the diocese and also support of the Church Program (National Council). The figures show that the diocese has not sent on to National Council for the Program as much as that one parish contributed for the Program of the Church outside the diocese. The funds of the Woman's Auxiliary have been used in the same way. Of a single contribution of one woman of a hundred dollars only ten was forwarded to the National Council. These are instances of wrong practice which the synod should know in evaluating the work within its own borders."

The commission is also of the opinion that practically all work, except Negro, Indian and other special work, should have local support to the extent of 50% of the cost of the work as a condition to receiving a like amount from funds of the National Council. "Further study may modify such a recommendation but all the thought of the commission bends in this direction."

Bishop Cook concluded his report by reminding the finance committee, to whom he reported, that the commission is still in the midst of its study and that final action must await further meetings.

Bishop Sumner Is Gravely Ill

According to reports from Oregon, Bishop Sumner is at present in the hospital suffering from a severe heart attack. It is said on the best of authority that it will be a considerable time before he can resume his work, and there is a possibility that he may never be able again to carry on his work.

Getting Together on Missions

It begins to look as though the Churches might get together on at least some of their mission work. As we have previously reported the Methodists, in dealing with the Report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry, were all for it. The committee of our own Church stated that "there are many practical advantages which can be secured through cooperation" and now the American Board, representing the Congregational and Christian church overseas, and the oldest foreign missionary society in America, has declared that they are eager to act with other boards looking toward closer cooperation. Not only that but they have taken steps looking toward definite action, which is more to the point. A committee of five has been appointed "to serve with like committees of any other board or group of boards with respect to further cooperation and to lead in a further study of the findings of the Appraisal Commission of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry." Dr. Arthur E. Holt, professor at Chicago University, is the chairman of this committee.

Dr. Osgood Accepts Emmanuel

The Rev. Phillips E. Osgood, rector of St. Mark's, Minneapolis, whose election to Emmanuel, Boston, was announced here last week, has accepted the rectorship of that parish. He takes up his new work about the first of February. He has been the rector of St. Mark's for eleven years, the longest rectorship in the history of that parish. He has played a notable part in both Church and community life. During his ministry at St. Mark's 600 new members have been added, a new parish house built, a new organ installed and a complete educational system established.

Dr. Keller Sends Message to His Boys

As you probably know Dr. William S. Keller is the physician who heads up that really remarkable school that meets each summer in Cincinnati, when men from various seminaries come together for social work—and believe me it is work too. He has just sent one of his messages to his "boys" telling them of the great opportunities that lie before them in these days of a decaying economic order. The message is now in the hands, during the Christmas season, of the more than 150 young men who have passed through this summer school in its short history. They represent 31 dioceses, all the seminaries, two of them are in China, one in Canada, one in the Far East and one in Brazil. The message is signed just "Doc Bill" as he is affectionately known to hundreds of seminary students.

General Students Attend Greek Service

A celebration of the Orthodox liturgy was held at the Greek Cathedral, New York City on December 17th especially for the students of the General Seminary. It was thought that maybe a dozen students would attend. What do you think —over a hundred. There were several women students from St. Faith's Deaconess School and from Windham House, Woman's Auxiliary student centre, also present. The celebrant explained the service and the clever Frank Gavin, professor extraordinary, gave an address in Greek and then preached in English.

Canvass Is Disappointing In Bethlehem

This word comes from the diocese of Bethlehem, "The pledge cards are coming in slowly. From the figures on them the depression is still on. It looks very much as though the National Church as well as the dioceses will have to sharpen their scissors for still further cuts."

Good Piece of Social Service Work

The Church Welfare Association of Los Angeles, now a part of the national Church Mission of Help, is doing a grand piece of professional case work in the name of the Church. It was founded in 1927 when Miriam Van Waters, Churchwoman, was the judge of the Juvenile Court. So it has five years of creditable work with problem girls and children behind it. Since Miss Van Water left Los Angeles to take up work in Massachusetts fewer cases are turned over to the association by the court, but it is being used increasingly by the clergy, schools and police. The association is sponsored by the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary.

individuals in the parish the Women's Guild is responsible for a shop where goods are sold to those who still have cash. This shop has turned over to the relief committee over $1500 since the first of July, with more to follow. In addition to this cash, all clothes requisitioned by the Federation for poor families is supplied through this parish enterprise. In a single week recently contributions of clothing were made to four hundred individuals. It is an outstanding bit of social work.

Christmas in Chicago Churches

Always at the top of the news in the celebration of Christmas in Chicago is the Cathedral Shelter. This year 3,000 Christmas baskets were distributed under the direction of the Rev. David Gibson. He was assisted by St. Luke's Pro-cathedral; Emmanuel, LaGrange; St. Martin's and St. Chrysostom's. Chase House gave parties to many children, and their parents too, and also distributed many baskets. Then there was the Christmas Benefit and children's party staged in the huge Chicago Stadium by the Church Club on the 21st. There were over a thousand children present, and a choir of 300 choristers. Midnight services were held in practically all of the churches. Most parishes cared for the needy families in their own neighborhoods.

Economic Future Depends on Agriculture

The missionary service of the Christian church, at home and abroad, has for a century been largely urban-minded. In the future the church must give increasing emphasis to Christianizing rural life; giving new dignity and new value to the soil itself, to the tiller of the soil, to the farm family, to the women in rural villages, and to every activity of the rural village. It must make the farmer happy on the land by providing him with a fair share of the culture and the wealth of the world. So might be summarized the theme that ran through the addresses and discussions at the annual meeting of the International Association of Agricultural Missions, held in New York December 9th and 10th. Among those giving addresses were Dr. Henry C. Taylor, agricultural economist, formerly of the department of agriculture of the government. Dr. Taylor was a member of the Appraisal commission of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry. Others taking part in the sessions were Miss Anna M. Clark, Mrs. Sam Higginbottom, Miss Ruth F. Woodsmall and Mrs. Harper Sibley, the latter also a member of the Laymen's Inquiry, who urged the need for trained specialists to help in the education of national women for Christian service in the rural villages of Asia.

A LETTER

"BEFORE being asked by a friend to send in my first subscription to THE WITNESS I was very inactive in a Churchman. Having moved from one section of the city to my present address, without transferring my church membership, I had not been a regular attendant at any church for almost ten years. Soon after I started to read THE WITNESS it occurred to me that I was falling short of my duty. I took steps to have my transfer made and have been a regular attendant and contributor in my parish ever since."

The above letter was received recently from a subscriber in the South. With the letter, in addition to his own renewal, he sent in subscriptions for three friends.

Will you now give your friends an opportunity to know their Church through the regular reading of a Church paper? Subscribe for them—your renewal at two dollars with as many introductory gift subscriptions as you care to send at one dollar each.

Or if you are a rector order a bundle and have the paper on sale each Sunday. THE WITNESS sells at five cents a copy—we bill quarterly at three cents a copy.

Gardiner Day Gives Ideas on Peace

In a recent sermon on peace preached at Williamstown, Mass., the Rev. Gardiner M. Day got down to hard pan on the subject of world peace. "Until we face the economic factors we cannot eradicate war", he said. "Many people believe that the church must confine itself to training motives and attitudes and deal with general principles, always being careful not to become entangled in specific matters. This is like telling a child he ought to be honest, but not pointing out the various specific forms of dishonesty. The idea that the church can be a power if it preaches only general principles is an illusion and it puts the church in the position of uttering platitudes, accepted in theory, but only in practice in the most obvious circumstances.

"Hence, this morning I want to present certain things which I believe ought to be done if peace is to be brought nearer as a reality. You may not agree with these specifics, but I believe they ought to be considered seriously by every Christian from the ethical standpoint of the teaching of Jesus. First, I believe that the United States ought to cancel the war debts making provision that any money which might be released (if any should be released) could not be used for more armaments. Such action now would not have the ethical value of forgiveness in it that it would have had if done in 1929, but it would surely promote the trust and good-will essential for permanent peace. Secondly, I believe that we must stand as a nation for far more drastic disarmament cuts. To pass resolutions declaring that bombardment from the air will be abandoned or that the use of chemicals or bacteria in warfare will be given up is hardly of much use for in the fury of war nations will almost surely return to their use. Only drastic budgetary cuts and cuts in the actual building programs will have any effect. Thirdly, I believe that an embargo on the sale of munitions by neutral nations in time of war should be made an international law. Such an embargo would halt profiteering in this field and could be easily enforced. In the fourth place I question how long we as a nation can stand in judgment of a government which for more than the past decade has ruled one sixth of the world's territory. The Russian government repudiated certain of its obligations, but perhaps it was the only way it could bring about its rebirth from a mediaeval feudalism. Our engineers and business men are quick to reap any advantages they can from trade with and business in Russia and we meet their representatives in peace councils, but we will not recognize their government. Can this breed the kind of trust and good-will necessary for the world planning essential for permanent peace? Indeed can it breed anything else but distrust and ill-will? Finally, I believe the tariff must be considered more and more from an international standpoint rather than only the standpoint of national self-interest.

Young Parson Tackles a Job

From Jeffers, Montana, the Rev. William T. Reeves, Jr., a young deacon graduated only last spring from the General Theological Seminary, writes of his work in that great rural missionary district of the West:

"I've been on the job only about two months but I love it so much already that I am certain I shall always love this type of work. I am the only 'priest, minister or rabbi' in an area considerably larger than the state of Rhode Island, so there are many demands. Being only a deacon is a great handicap but I hope to be ordained priest before long. I have three missions, widely scattered. The people are enthusiastic and grateful, although terribly poor. In one mission in a poor mining town, I am trying to train a choir of sixteen. They have no hymnals with music and cannot afford to buy any." (Church Periodical Club is helping with this.)

"Then I have a Church School of over forty children who seem very appreciative of the training here. Those I can't haul in my car come on horseback from miles around—a bit of a change from the Church school where I helped in New York, where the children were brought to the door in a red-plush limousine.

"Of course when the long and severe winter sets in, which will be soon, the item of transportation is difficult. I carry fire-wood, blankets, shovels and stimulants in my car, in case I get into an impasse somewhere and have to wait for daylight and help. It is adventurous and exciting and it appeals to me. And it is God's work and must go on."

Build Their Own Church in Shanghai

For the first time in the missionary district of Shanghai a group of our Church people have bought land and built a church entirely by their own efforts. All the money for land and church was contributed by Chinese Churchmen without help from the Chinese Board of Missions or foreign friends. This is St. Paul's Church, Ku San, consecrated by Bishop Graves in October, 1932. The building is small but ample for present needs, built of brick with tile roof and curved roof-corners. The priest in charge is the Rev. C. S. Ku, and there is also a woman worker, Mrs. Tsang. Ku San is outside the city of Zangzok. A number of people went out to the service, the first time in many years that foreign women had been seen in Ku San. Fourteen adults were confirmed at this time, at Ku San, and after that, thirty-nine were confirmed in Zangzok.

How Expensive Is Religion

Well according to figures compiled by the United Stewardship Council there was contributed in the year 1931 to the Protestant Churches alone in this country the sum of $475,685,894. A lot of money but even at that it is but six-tenths of one per cent of the income of the country.

The Old Booze Question Again

And just to show that I am impartial on the matter here is a pat quotation taken from a parish paper: "If the United States can drink itself into prosperity, why is it that the nations of Europe, all of whom have booze, cannot drink themselves into sufficient prosperity to pay their just debts to this country."

Mission Study Material for 1932-1933

WE CANNOT know everything but there are some things it is our business to know. It is the Christian's duty to know about the progress of His Master's Kingdom. It is the Churchman's duty to know his Church is carrying out our Lord's last command.

Just how much do you know about your Church's work in the world? You can further inform yourself. It is the people who know who help.

Organize for Mission Study in Men's groups, Women's groups, Young People's groups, College groups, mixed groups.

For further information, address the Secretary for Missionary Education, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.
