There are many who like myself are interested in Mr. Rockefeller's proposal even though we cannot subscribe in toto to his statement, and I wish to express my sympathy with his ideal and to lodge this protest respectfully but emphatically against the tone adopted by Dr. DeWolfe in his recent letter.

He, of course, may demur at one doing so who is not a clergyman of his diocese, but since he has suggested that my Church sever its relationship from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, he has offered one and all the privilege of comment upon his utterance.

Since THE WITNESS has lost the guiding hand of Bishop Johnson I cannot find any spiritual value in the contents; just articles to stir up feelings of one class or group against another and we who live in industrial areas can see and know enough of that. I always thought the clergy were supposed to be "a pattern and example" to others and to create unity among the people. Why not spend your energy in bringing people to church and getting rid of the sins of greed and selfishness which are the causes of all this disunity you try to stir up. Some of your theories sound very good but I wonder if you know anything about the practical side of some of these questions you write so fluently about. Read your ordination service once in awhile. I am sorry the magazine that was once a real Church paper has degenerated into a publication such as it is.

". . . unto the uttermost part of the earth . . ."

FROM the Admiralty Islands, far away in the Southwest Pacific, comes a letter from a soldier to his pastor back home:

"One time we were on one of these lonely islands, and one of the boys made a sermon one Sunday morning from The Upper Room. I had my Bible that the Sunday School had given me, but we had been in the rain for weeks and the leaves were stuck together. Then I happened to remember that I had my Upper Room in a rubber bag, so we used that. We surely made good use of it, too!"

Throughout a war-torn world, The Upper Room is serving as a daily devotional guide to millions of people.

In YOUR busy day, isn't there a place for it? Five minutes a day—to lift your heart in worship? Surely you could not do less!

Are there others, also . . . about whom you are concerned? Why not send The Upper Room to help them, too?

Clifford Nobes Tells of Life In Concentration Camp

Relates of Thrilling Rescue from Prison Skillfully Pulled Off by American Outfit

By W. B. Spofford

San Francisco: — "A householder when plagued with rats has to exterminate them. He can't say 'I must not take life' for if he does it will not be long before his house is unlivable. That's about the way I feel about the Japs, and I say it as a Christian priest. I presume they cannot be exterminated. But they certainly should be quarantined — put on their islands of Japan and kept there."

The speaker was the Rev. Clifford Nobes of the Philippines mission staff, who had that day gotten off a boat with his wife and two small children after years in Japanese concentration camps and prisons which had changed them from strong and sturdy human beings to skin and bones, with no knowledge yet of what diseases may be in their bodies, in spite of check-ups and excellent care and food by the army and the Red Cross since their liberation in February of this year.

The story of that liberation was the most thrilling of the many exciting experiences related to me by the tall, good-looking missionary. On December 26, 1944 the 500 or so Americans who were in a concentration camp at Baguio were told that they were to leave at once for Manila. Japanese army trucks were jammed with about 30 people and arrived in the city 24 hours later. Ordinarily it was a seven hour journey. But on this occasion the highway was thronged with Japanese troops moving north where they expected the American attack. "That Japanese army could have been wiped out," said Nobes. "Planes flying over could have liquidated that entire army. If they had of course all of us would have been killed too. But it just happened that American planes were grounded just at that time because there was not enough gas to get them off the ground. That fact saved our lives."

Arriving in Manila they were thrown into Bilibid prison—the hospital of the prison which had been condemned as unfit for human habitation. "It was crawling with lice, bedbugs, rats and human filth. It was beyond description. We were there until February when we were liberated by the American army. A Japanese who was working for U.S.A. as a spy learned that all of us were to be machine-gunned on February 8th. He got word to General MacArthur who ordered two outfits to race for the city. The first to arrive was the First Cavalry with 6 tanks and 300 men. They could have easily been exterminated by the Japs. But that is where Yankee cleverness came in. They raced those six tanks around and around a block just as fast as they would travel. Our soldiers shot guns, screaming and yelling and making all the racket they could. The Japs counted the tanks as they went around and around and figured there must be hundreds instead of six. They figured the whole American army had arrived. So they took to their heels and this American outfit of 300 men with six tanks then batted down the prison walls and we were again free men and women."

The Nobes was not the only missionary family to arrive. There was also the Rev. and Mrs. George C. Bartter and the Rev. and Mrs. Cambell Gray and their four year old son, Franie. And a very interesting child indeed is Franie since he was born only a few weeks before being thrown into a concentration camp which conditioned his life up to his release just a few months ago. So it is not surprising to find little Franie repeating the commands of army life, such as "Civilians line up for chow; remember the military come first."

The whole story of the imprisonment and treatment of these missionaries, engineers and other Americans taken by the Japanese is too long to tell here. Nobes gave it to me in chronological order, with dates and places and I have it so in my notebook. But let me give you some of the highspots which perhaps will make you understand why this Christian minister is for being tough with our enemy in the Pacific.

He and his family were at Bontoc in February, 1942, having been released from a concentration camp and placed under the authority of the religious section of the Japanese army. They were there when a looting party of Japs came, burned down the town and stole everything they could lay their hands on. They left in about a week on orders, but before going they threw 24 of their own wounded soldiers into a hotel, one of the few remaining buildings standing, and set fire to it. "They could not be bothered with wounded men. So they cremated them. They did not even have the decency to first knock them unconscious. We could hear the screams of these Japanese soldiers being burned to death."

A couple of months later more of the Japanese came to Bontoc. The Americans were prepared to put up a fight this time. The American officer in charge was a no-good coward said Nobes. So an American engineer took over. Pill-boxes and other defenses were built. But the Americans never fired a shot because the Japs on approaching placed American prisoners ahead of them. "We couldn't fire at the Japs without killing our own people," declared Nobes. "The way the Japs treat prisoners of war is frightful. I know of one group of 350 that had only 50 alive when we left. I know of another camp of 20,000 prisoners were 13,000 were killed. I have myself buried prisoners of war who were clubbed to death — clubbed so that there was not a whole bone in their bodies. I have seen men clubbed to death only because they were so weak that they could no longer work. And it is pretty tough to do a day's work on a handful of rice."

Nobes had been made a hostage in May, 1942, and ordered to get all the missionaries to come at once to Bontoc. If he had failed he would have been either shot or beheaded he informed me. But all came and soon were transferred to the concentration camp at Baguio — about 500 in all of whom 35 were Episcopalian missionaries, including Bishop Wilner. Life in the camp was run by committees, with "each for all and all for each" the practice. It was really communal living as he outlined it. They shared what little they had in a truly cooperative spirit under the chairmanship of Dr. Dana Nace, who was described to me as a particularly courageous and efficient man. One day, for instance, a Jap guard was beating a man to death with a baseball bat for a minor offense. To interfere in most instances would cost you your own life. But Dr. Nace ran to the Jap and shouted: "Stop beating that man at once." And Nobes said that the Doctor's command was given with such authority and dignity that the Jap said, "Yes Doctor," threw the bat to the ground and ran away.

Nobes' own job was chief of police. "Not an easy job since I had to keep people from stealing garbage, and once I had to arrest a person for stealing two teaspoons of fat. Food in our camp was mostly moldy corn. Rice was a luxury. Our daily ration made up 300 calories, 95% of which was corn, whereas the minimum sustenance died for a person lying in bed and doing absolutely nothing is 1200 calories. We were compelled to work on those 300 calories. We had gardens for one thing in which everyone over eight years old was obliged to work at least two hours each day. In theory we were supposed to get the produce. But it was always "borrowed" by the guards so that all we got was wormy sweet potato greens. We had meat once in 5 weeks; 15 pounds of meat or fish which had to last 500 for 3 days. I was on the fish cleaning detail for awhile. Every barrel of fish was so rotten that most of it had to be thrown away. And when we got a hog the guards would chop off the head and shoulders for us and keep the rest. You perhaps will understand why Jane, our youngest, has lost all her back teeth and why practically everyone was suffering from some intestinal disease."

I asked if they had not received packages from the Red Cross. "We got only one Red Cross shipment. We found out later that the Japs had stolen all the rest. I got one Red Cross package. It was supposed to last ten days. We made ours — four of us —last a year and two months. A K-ration, which is supposed to be a very bad single meal for a soldier, we made do for three meals for four people. So my children, and all the rest of the children, weighed less after three years than when they entered the camp. I entered the camp weighing 170 pounds; I came out weighing 110. Mrs. Nobes, whose job was teaching and cleaning the moldy corn, went from 145 to 115."

When asked what he plans to do now that he is back in the States, he replied: "Eat and sleep for awhile. Then I shall get ready to go back. There is a missionary school at Alab. The chapel has been completely destroyed. From 20 to 30 American soldiers died at Alab. I hope to raise $15,000 or so with which to build a stone chapel and school as a memorial to those young soldiers."

As Nobes arose to go he held his thumb and forefinger about half an inch apart. "My Christian charity and forgiveness has narrowed to about that as far as the Japs are concerned. And I say that deliberately as a minister of the Gospel."

An example of the social work of the Los Angeles City Mission Society is this picture of men enjoying the relaxation of a quiet game of checkers

LAYMEN ANSWER BISHOP

Brooklyn:—Over 100 laymen and women of the diocese of Long Island issued an open letter to Bishop DeWolfe on May 21st, criticizing him for his recent letter to the clergy in regard to the speech by Mr. John D. Rockefeller. They charge their bishop with misrepresenting Mr. Rockefeller and deplore his suggestion that the Episcopal Church withdraw from the Federal Council of Churches. They also support the position taken by THE WITNESS at the time by stating that Bishop DeWolfe was "wholly inaccurate" in his charges against the Federal Council since that body "had no official connection either with sponsoring the address or with its publication."

Churchman Presents Challenge Of Number One Problem

Mr. Lawrence A. Oxley Declares That Church Is Not Even Aware of Our Greatest Problem

By W. B. Spofford

San Francisco:—"Minority groups is the number one domestic problem and it cannot be solved by any ostrich-like approach." So declared Mr. Lawrence A. Oxley, distinguished Negro Churchman who is the senior technician of the minority groups service of the federal War Manpower Commission. I ran into him quite by chance on a train which gave us an opportunity for a good confab. He has been on the west coast for some time investigating and setting up conferences where leaders of business, labor, church and civic groups face up to the problems they are likely to run into in the days immediately ahead, with reconversion, likely unemployment and all the strains that will go along with it.

He presented me with startling figures on the increase in Negro populations in centers on the coast, and declared quite bluntly that in these cities — Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles — were all the factors that made for riots and bloodshed in other cities. And Oxley should know for he investigated the race riots that took place in Houston, Beaumont, Detroit, New York and elsewhere.

His special concern in his talk with me was with the Church and he pulled no punches. "Our Church," he said, "is not even aware of this great problem, let alone doing anything about it. I know the churches out here for I make it a part of my job always to visit them wherever I go. Other Churches have moved in, investigated, set up programs. With very few exceptions we have done nothing. Yes it is true that a representative of the National Council came out here to investigate. He spent one day in Seattle, one in Portland, three or four in San Francisco, about the same time in Los Angeles and then went back to New York. If the Church is serious about this advance and reconstruction work for which five million dollars is being asked, it might be well for them to consider sending an expert investigator out here to do a thorough job. And that means six months, not a week."

Oxley then presented some startling facts. Before Pearl Harbor the Negro population of Seattle was 3,000. Today there are 33,000. The Episcopal Church has one mission for Negroes, St. Philip's. There is no church. Services are held in one of two rooms that constitute the mission. There is a Sunday school for the tiny congregation. There is no priest, white or colored, but a white priest does come to the mission one Sunday a month for a service.

Bishop Dagwell, he stated, was showing genuine interest in the Negro in Oregon and has been back of the building of a new community house in Portland, also called St. Philip's. But here also there has been a startling increase in the Negro population — from 2000 before Pearl Harbor to 22,000 today — and the Church has much to do if it is to minister to these people effectively.

In the bay area of San Francisco, according to Oxley, the Negro population has increased since the war from about 4,500 to over 75,000. In Oakland there is a parish serving this vast number of people, St. Augustine's. It has been there for 25 years and has about the same number of members today that it started with, in spite of the influx of 70,000 Negroes in the past three or four years. In San Francisco there is a Negro mission with about 50 members, with the work so insignificant that the vicar works during the week in the shipyards.

Los Angeles had about 47,000 Negroes before Pearl Harbor. Today there are approximately 150,000 in the city. Here Oxley thinks a good job is being done by our Church, with St. Andrew's doing a "tip-top job, well backed by Bishop Stevens. A good job is being done in Pasadena also."

However Oxley ended the interview on the same note with which he started it. "This problem of minorities is the number one domestic problem. It is packed with dynamite. Layoffs are already setting in.

Soon thousands are likely to be unemployed and of course the Negro worker is going to be the first to lose his job. Soldiers are going to come home soon. The Japanese-Americans are likely to return. And they will return to find, in most cities, that the Negro population has taken over their 'Little Tokyo.' Well-meaning people are advising the Negro to return to Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Louisiana where 99% of this new Negro population came from. But they are not going to return — not many of them. I have talked with a lot of them and it was all summed up for me the other day by a worker in Seattle who knew the day was not far distant when he would be laid off. I asked him if he planned to return to Arkansas where he lived before he came to help in the war effort by working on the waterfront.

LAWRENCE A. OXLEY

"His reply was typical," continued Oxley, "He looked me straight in the eye and said 'Listen, mister, you too are a Negro. So I ask you, would you rather starve in Seattle or in the dust-bowl of Arkansas? No sir tell 'em I'm staying here.' And he and thousands like him are staying. And it is going to cause trouble and serious trouble. But as I have said, the Church for the most part isn't even aware of the problem let alone doing anything about it. It ought to be the job of the Inter-Racial Commission that was set up by General Convention. I was a member of that. I say was instead of am because as far as I know it is completely dead. You fellows that are connected with the Church press might want to look into that. What and who killed it? Might make an interesting story."

With that he was off the train to set up another conference on race relations. He had recently held them in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Portland. At all he had for speakers the outstanding leaders of business, labor, government agencies, civic groups, churches, newspapers. To check through the list of those who attended was convincing evidence that Lawrence Oxley was presenting the challenge to people who could do something about the situation if they would. But as effective as this government representative is, he is but one man and he would be the first to urge that all of us, and particularly those of the Churches, accept the challenge of "America's number one domestic problem—minorities."

JOHN E. HINES ELECTED BISHOP COADJUTOR

Houston, Texas:—The Rev. John E. Hines, rector of Christ Church, Houston, was elected bishop coadjutor of the diocese of Texas on May 22nd. He has been the rector of the parish since 1941 and is a member of the National Council. Mr. Hines is 35 years of age and is a graduate of the University of the South and the Virginia Seminary.

BERKELEY DIVINITY GREETS BISHOP

New Haven:—Bishop Bell of Chichester visited the Berkeley Divinity School on May 15th and gave an address in the chapel hall before a large group of clergy and laity, and at luncheon in the School refectory met a representative group of New Haven clergy of different churches, as well as the faculty and students of the school. After luncheon, the Bishop was shown about the Yale Divinity School by Dean Weigle, who was a guest at the Berkeley luncheon.

Prefacing his address in chapel hall the bishop spoke of his friendship of long standing with the late Dean Ladd and expressed his interest in the Berkeley plan of English lecturers which has been in abeyance during the war but which will be resumed soon. It has been through Bishop Bell's suggestion and recommendation in past years that a number of English lecturers have come to Berkeley.

The bishop took as the topic for his address The Church and Peace and stated that it was on collaboration between Great Britain, the United States and Russia that the future of world peace depends, and that it is on the collaboration of Great Britain and the United States in particular that the next stage in the war depends. He felt it of great significance that at the moment the European war ended, the San Francisco conference should be taking place. Very great sacrifice should be made, especially by the great powers, in order to secure the success of that conference and the setting up of a satisfactory world organization for such an opportunity may not occur again. If it is achieved, even though not perfect, it will represent one step forward from world anarchy to world order.

Speaking of the political, economic, and spiritual bases of future peace, Bishop Bell dwelt chiefly upon the moral and spiritual factors, insisting however, that "Everything that concerns the people concerns the Church."

A resolution was also passed citing the achievements of the Federal Council of Churches in "increasing the mutual understanding of the Churches, furthering cooperation among them and making their joint enterprises more effective, notably in the case of the general commission on army and navy chaplains." The resolution also commended the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches for its various services.

Power After Pentecost

VICTORY finds us entering one of the most dangerous periods in the history of mankind. It is dangerous for two reasons. First, because for six years the civilized nations of the world have been drenched with blood. That war is destructive of material wealth goes without saying. But that war is just as destructive of spiritual strength is often overlooked. For a long period we have bent our energies on the one hand to destroy all those evil forces that breed hate, distrust, vindictiveness and contempt of one group for another. We wonder if on the other hand we as victors have put forward safeguards that will protect us from becoming victims of the very evil we set out to destroy. The flush of victory is always dangerous. It is easy to become self-righteous and if there was one thing our Lord inveighed against it was that. The parable of the two men at prayer —Pharisee and Publican— stands in sharp outline today. Better, it speaks in strong terms to the victorious nations. This is no plea for a soft peace. It is no plea for a perfectionist plan for insuring the peace of the world. It is a plea for a realistic Christian self-examination of our failures.

Seen against the background of the first day of Pentecost, we realize how far we have missed the goal. The Master said "Ye shall have power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you." The Holy Spirit came and the first disciples went forth with power and changed the course of history.

What of our power today? The Christian Church is an influence in the affairs of men. But even its most devoted followers recognize that it does not have the influence that its Founder intended that it should exert. In the complexities of our modern civilization the Church finds it difficult to define her position. On the first day of Pentecost that position was crystal clear, at least to those upon whom this new power descended—the conversion of the world. The position of the Christian Church is the same today. It may not be as simply and as clearly defined, but it is there and we know it. It is the power that we lack.

Why? We lack the power because in the first place we find ourselves hopelessly divided. We are one in the confusion of tongues of the first Pentecost. Or better, we are the descendents of the children of Babel. This is not to deny the hopeful signs of cooperative Christianity. It is merely facing reality. The war stimulus has forced us to pull together but basically we are still divided into racial, creedal, economic and political groups. We lack the power to work together because we are schooled to think only in terms of man made schemes and not in terms of the God-given principles that alone can band human kind together.

We face a danger. We may meet that danger in the fortitude of Christian faith, or we may dismiss it as of no importance. If we do the first, we take our place beside the first disciples, facing up to defeat but when defeated rising up to carry on the fight. The other way is the way of indifference.

May we as Christians pray more earnestly for power to become true converters, but also pray for the strength to be true examples of the unity which should bind all believers in Christ.

"QUOTES"

THE purpose of God is that his righteousness and love shall be applied to personal life and social order and to all human affairs. That needs power, the power of God to form our minds and bend our wills: the power of God by which we may bear patiently the obstinacy of things, combat resolutely the perversity, poverty and self-pride of human hearts and enlist in his service all the self-abnegation, comradeship and sacrifice of which those same human hearts are splendidly capable. That power God is ready to give us, and gives us through the Holy Spirit. In that power it is for the Church and the nation to fashion society to the will of God, in which each is free to find himself in the service of God and his neighbor.

—GEOFFREY FISCHER,
The Archbishop of Canterbury.

Christian Justice

CONFLICTING reports come from Europe regarding the disposition of the German general staff. One dispatch says that some are to be classified and dealt with as war criminals, while another announces that they may be used to establish order in chaotic Germany. One wonders if we can be foolish enough to follow the latter course and thus play into the hands of the enemy. If the allied military government makes use of these generals because they have standing with the German people, their influence will be enhanced. These generals are already unloading responsibility for the loss of the war on Hitler and the Nazis by spreading the story that if Hitler and the Nazis had not interferred, the war would have ended with Germany victory. And so they prepare for the next war!

There is no doubt about the guilt of the German general staff. Some, like von Runstedt, by planning the systematic and scientific starvation of the children of occupied countries, are more guilty than others, but all are guilty of planning and plotting German wars of aggression.

What shall be done with them? It would be nice if as Christians we could wash our hands of this dirty business and leave it to the military. Yet, as Christians we can neither evade responsibility, nor fail to urge that the treatment accorded war criminals comport with our Christian faith. Does this mean that we must love our enemies and forgive them? Absolutely! But the love with which we love them must be no mushy sentimentalism but sound and solid Christian love which, as the late Archbish Temple reminded us, is based upon justice and righteousness. And as for forgiveness, only the penitent can be forgiven. The person who impenitently awaits an opportunity to repeat his crime, must first see the error of his ways and desire forgiveness.

To wreak vindictive vengeance upon war criminals will not repair the damage that is done. Besides we do not want to imitate the methods of the Nazis. Even execution after a fair and impartial trial seems too easy—for them and for us. To deport them to some isolated isle to live out their days is also too easy. As Christians it is our duty to bring them through education to reformation and repentance, that is, to the state where they see the error of their ways and to the point where they appreciate Christian love based upon justice and righteousness. Why should not the Runstedts, the Goerings, the Keitels together with the whole constituency of the German military caste down to the rank of captain be educated in the cost of war by being assigned to cleaning up and rebuilding the devastated areas in the countries they have ravished? Hard labor on K-rations would reveal the less glorious side of war. Honest toil would help to teach respect for the man who builds and for the product of his labor. Also, keeping these architects of destruction hard at work for the rest of their natural lives at rebuilding what they have destroyed would prevent their planning another war and bring to an end their arrogant Prussian military tradition.

We do not suggest this in hatred or bitterness. When a child ruins a lovely piece of furniture by an injudicious use of his Christmas hammer and saw, it is not hatred or bitterness but plain ordinary justice which prompts the parent to teach the child the proper use of saw and hammer. The least these plotters of destruction can do for the society they have so nearly wrecked is to devote the rest of their lives to rebuilding what they have torn down. The least we can do for the world they have ravaged is to see to it that they never again have an opportunity to plan or practice their evil business.

Our Common Bond

By

ELMORE McKEE

Rector of St. George's, New York

MY FIRST reaction to the horrible persecution of the Jews in Europe is not self-righteously to throw stones. It is a feeling of definite personal responsibility for the plight of the Jew in the modern world. Am I not aware that our own so-called Christian nation is unfair to Jews? Are there not clubs where Jews will not ever be considered for membership? Is it not much harder in many quarters for Jews to secure jobs than for those called Christians? These are but aspects of American anti-Semitism, hidden, yet powerful. Anti-Semitism has existed for hundreds of years to the everlasting shame of the Christian community. The Christian Church's response to the persecution of the Jews in recent times has, on the whole, been inconsequential. To do little or nothing has been, in a measure, to acquiesce. Surely we acknowledge a sense of sin and of common responsibility for an unhappy condition that affects millions of our brothers-in-God.

My second thought is that Jesus was a Jew. My Lord and Saviour was a Jew. We like to westernize and modernize Jesus, and dress him up in our national patterns. But it cannot be done. Jesus was more Oriental than Occidental. In dress, in manner of speech, in imagination and poetic insight Jesus was a Jew, with the great East stamped upon him. It was surely by intent that God chose the most spiritually-minded people of all the ages, at the very peak, perhaps, of their development for the revelation of the invincible power of holy love. It is ironical that it is the race of Jesus which is being treated in some quarters as a menace to mankind. Our heads hang in shame as well as in sympathy.

Thirdly, I am convinced that the colossal problems of our day will be solved not by Jews and Christians separately but by Jews and Christians working together. As Robert Nathan said in The New Yorker: "Shall the flower deny the root or the root the blossom? They are one, one growth, one planting, now and forever." If Christianity is thought of by many of us as the flower, then its roots are in Judaism. Rather than repudiate our roots we would honor them.

FOURTHLY, there is utterly no basis in science for the myth of Nordic supremacy and the inferiority of non-Nordic stock. Where is the scientist of repute who will maintain that any race or color or nation is to be considered biologically superior to any other, however much at any moment in history one group may enjoy advantages greater than another. Rather may the truth be told by the following picture: In August of 1937 I stood high up in the Austrian Tyrol at an altitude of nearly 7,000 feet in a little pass known as the Zeinisjoch near Galtür in Voralberg. My feet were placed on either side of a tiny stream some six inches wide. Just in front of me the little stream forked, and as the nearby sign told, the stream to my right flowed into the Danube and the stream to my left into the Rhine. That to me is a convincingly clear picture of life. God is the source of the river of life. He is the father-spirit of all the sons of men. The peoples of the Danube and the Rhine and of all the world are his common children, however much cultural, economic, political and even religious conditions may have unhappily pulled them apart. There can be no sanctity, no order, no peace save as we refuse to surrender this most obvious starting point for all our thinking, namely universalism under one God.

Fifthly, the tragedies that occurred do not represent the desires of all Germans. The Christian Church in Germany, wherever it is really Christian, hangs its head in shame and sorrow. I do not forget my conversation with Pastor Niemuller a few years ago. We were discussing the attempt of officials to strike the names of Christian Jews from the rolls of the Christian Church. My friend of the Church said, "In injuring them they injure us. For we are all one." Germany has many great Jews and great Christians—some just out of prison. She has heroic churches and synagogues. In so many ways she has given of her scholarship and culture and religion to the world. May God lead Germany to her true spiritual destiny!

And lastly, while we abhor and repudiate the spirit of short-sighted revenge now at work, while we brand its sub-human and sub-personal savagery as anti-Christ and as a reversion to the Dark Ages, let us remember that the doers of iniquity are those really who in the long run suffer most. The plight of the cruel man is no less hell, though he may know it not. Phyllis Bottome in The Mortal Storm, presents the picture of a gallant Jewish professor in a concentration camp speaking thus to his small son who asks, "But could they, father, could they kill you?" "If they kill me," his father said in a cheerful voice, "it would not help to spread their creed. Fortunately, the ideas they have are greatly discredited by their acts. All persecution is a sign of fear."

Out of the broken homes, the cruelty, the bereavement and the deaths of these days may there come a new day when the Christian Church, in humility and sadness, but in redeeming love, shall seek, by study, by prayer and by courageous action to atone for its sins and to set about its great task of healing.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

San Francisco:—Some years back I was a labor manager for a large clothing firm, with the job of seeing that the terms of a contract entered into with a union were maintained. There were to be no strikes or stoppages of work since the contract provided impartial machinery for the settling of all disputes, whatever they were. But there were many times during those days when workers with a grievance, real or imaginary, violated their agreement by folding their hands and refusing to work. The reason was simple: for years those workers, without a union, without any other way of righting a wrong, had used a stoppage of work as their only weapon. It was impossible to change them over night simply because the president of the firm and the president of their union had signed a piece of paper. They had to be reconditioned to peace and it took time. But it was accomplished so that today there are neither stoppages nor labor managers since things run so smoothly that they are not necessary.

The United Nations Conference will set up a world organization to maintain peace. It was for that purpose that delegations from forty-nine nations, with their staffs of technicians and experts, came to this city. They will accomplish their aim and in doing so will do more to give the world peace and security than any meeting in history. It is tremendously important for all of us to keep constantly in mind that the creation of machinery to maintain peace is the primary objective of the Conference, with all other things secondary. This has been stressed repeatedly by leaders here. Mr.

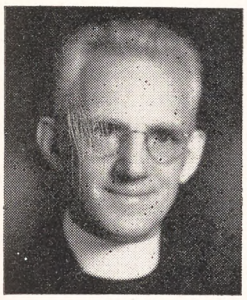
Eden made it clear in his opening speech. Mr. Stettinius said it over and over again —"we are here dealing only with machinery; no consideration will be given at this Conference to specific problems."

Naturally many are disappointed, particularly the hordes of people who are here on the fringe using pressure to have their own special interests served. But if you will read back over the record since April 25th I think you will agree that the Conference ran into most of its difficulties when it considered matters that never should have come before it. This Conference was not called to settle disputes between the London and Warsaw Poles; between the Jews and Arabs over Palestine; between empires and their colonies. This is not a world legislature but an organizing committee out of which will come the set-up with the apparatus to deal with all the hard problems that confront the world. And if that is accomplished, and it is going to be, then this Conference of the United Nations will be the most successful international meeting ever held. Out of it will come, as Mr. Stettinius has pointed out "new world community institutions such as courts, police organizations, parliamentary and welfare groups." He also said that great emphasis is being placed on the importance of the Economic and Welfare Council of the World Organization. "Men see," our Secretary of State told the reporters, "that they have to create a world economy that will give to the people and nations the things they need. You can't talk peace to hungry people."

THAT IT IS a tremendous and long time job of course everyone in his senses knows. The people of India want to be free. The people of Africa want to be free. The people of the world want to be rid of armaments and all the burdens that go with war. This Charter, which will be signed by the representatives of forty-nine nations, will, when ratified by their governments, create the machinery for the peaceful settlement of these and many other problems. But it is of course silly to think that all the problems are to disappear merely because forty-nine men put their signatures on a document. The people of this world are conditioned to get things the hard way — by fighting for it. It is going to take a long time to educate them to understand and use the machinery being created here. So we ought not to expect too much too soon. If it took four or five years to educate 2000 workers in a factory how to work under an agreement which provided the machinery for peaceful living, you can imagine the difficulties we are going to have making this World Organization effective. Again to quote Mr. Stettinius: "The millennium will not arrive the morning after the conference closes but we will be able to say we have made distinct progress toward world peace." And as far as I am concerned — and in spite of all the crabbing and knocking and pessimism that one reads and hears over the radio — I think that is an understatement.

There is another angle to this Conference which I want to report, and that is the recognition by our State Department that there are people other than governmental officials who are interested in world organization. From the very first release of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals the people, individually and collectively, have been encouraged to offer their suggestions and criticisms. The attitude was illustrated by a story told by Archibald MacLeish at one of the meetings held daily here for the representatives of national organizations, sponsored by the State Department. At a meeting on Dumbarton Oaks held this past winter, a woman representing a large organization interested in peace came up to him and said: "Mr. MacLeish I am here upon your invitation. But I want it distinctly understood that I did not come in order to find out what the State Department wants me to do. I came in order to make the State Department do what I want it to do."

If the State Department is not doing what the people want to have done it is surely not because the Department has not made every effort to understand the will of the people. There are 75 national organizations represented here, each with two consultants. There were those who came thinking that it was a mere gesture and that they would neither be consulted or taken seriously if they were. All of them now testify that quite the opposite is true. They do meet regularly with the American delegation and many of the amendments, particularly those dealing with human rights and basic freedoms, can be credited to these consultants. Commander Stassen paid a great tribute to this group at one of his press conferences. Likewise did Mr. Stettinius who told reporters that "many suggestions made by individual citizens or civic groups are reflected in these amendments" and he went on to describe the assistance and advice of the consultants as "invaluable." "Seldom," he said, "has there been a greater demonstration of respect for democratic rights or a fuller proof of the high value of democratic procedures."



All of which is something for all of us to remember when the Charter being drafted here goes to the United States Senate. That will be another time when we have to make the democratic process work by insisting upon ratification.

For Church Schools

By
WILLIAM GRIME

AS TEACHERS we are rightly counselled to use modern authorities on teaching methods. But while doing this we seem to have bypassed the teaching methods of Jesus, the master teacher. True enough his divine nature baffles analysis, yet within his human aspects he is still the world's master teacher.

Take for instance St. John 4. 1-42 where he is teaching the woman of Samaria. Observe first how he uses the element of surprise to arouse an interested relationship between teacher and pupil. "Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink." Though a Jew he had spoken to a Samaritan. He had amazed her, "for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans." Later watch him employ the same technique on his own disciples when they came back with food from the city. "In the meanwhile his disciples prayed him, master, eat. But he said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of. Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought him ought to eat? Jesus saith unto them, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." You see he awoke her curiosity and thus produced a mental readiness needed for the reception of eternal truth.

Then note, if you will, Jesus is using throughout this experience the conversation method. Seven times he spoke and six times she spoke. It was only the return of the disciples that stopped their dialogue.

Also watch him use one of his favorite methods —passing from the concrete to the abstract, from the known to the unknown, from the material to the spiritual, from the particular to the universal. The conversation started with a request for a drink of water but it developed into the disclosure of another kind of water, "living water springing up into everlasting life." The conversation continued about a cup, "thou hast nothing to draw with." It included ancestors and the temple, but it ended in his telling her God could be found everywhere as "a spirit" by those who would "worship him in spirit and in truth." There was no boresomeness in that out-of-doors class room. Certainly from now on her worship must have taken on richer meaning.

Furthermore let us notice how he seeks with quiet confidence for personal inward change which would mature into outward witness. She was a sinner and she tried to bluff him. "Jesus saith unto her, go, call thy husband and come hither. The woman answered and said I have no husband. Jesus said unto her Thou hast well said, I have no husband. . . . in that sayest thou truly." (How quick he is to appreciate genuine response). Then consider here his attempt to pierce her incrusted conscience, not to confuse it but to enlighten and heal it. After a while this friendly dealing caused her to leave her water pot and go back to the city saying, "Come see a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?" And later we read, "many of the Samaritans believed on him for the saying of the woman . . . and they besought him to tarry with them: and he abode there two days." You see he was teaching for personal decisions. She started as a sinner but under his influence she grew into a missionary and an evangelist.

Now there are many more helpful suggestions in this incident. "Seek and ye shall find." And if you wish a stimulating book on the subject, one that will enliven any of your teachers' meetings, get Jesus, The Master Teacher by Horne, Association Press.

Incidentally, you will find here a rewarding way of Bible study.

They Found the Church There. By Henry P. VanDusen. Scribners. $1.75.

This is a perfectly fascinating account of the way in which our armed forces, chiefly in the Southwest Pacific, have discovered Christian missions. In fact a great many of our men owe their lives to the missionaries, either directly or indirectly. Time and again the stories have come back — men have had to bail out from their planes and been cared for by friendly natives, and whereas they expected to fall among cannibals they have come-to in Christian villages where they heard Christian hymns being sung and discovered natives who were reading the Bible. Dr. VanDusen's book is factual — it is made up of quotations from letters that men have written home. Enough of the background of missionary history has been added to make the letters intelligible. This is a book that everyone who believes in missions — i.e. in the Christian religion — will find perfectly thrilling, and one that ought to convince even the hardened skeptic, the man who says that heathen religion is good enough for other people, and that missionaries are an interfering lot. In fact any man who disbelieves in missions these days ought to be challenged to read this book! I doubt if he could survive the ordeal, without changing his mind on the subject. —F.C.G.

Worship for the Unconverted

THE Church has two essential duties: to preach the Gospel to the unconverted, and to nurture the faithful. In many of our parishes today these duties are complicated by the fact that so many of the faithful, i.e. confirmed communicants, are in actuality still unconverted. It is not that they are hostile, or even indifferent to religion. But they have never committed themselves wholeheartedly to the implications of their Christian profession for their own lives and the life of their community. In the case of many, perhaps, they have not as yet clearly understood what these implications are. As to the urgent issues of our time, such as war and peace, economic justice, race relations, it is often difficult to distinguish the views and activities of churchmen from those of non-believers. Alas, that is not always a case of the working of the leaven of sincerity and truth outside the bounds of church membership; often the very opposite, the leaven of malice and wickedness has not been purged from the lump of Christ's followers.

There is too much dead wood in the Lord's vineyard these days. Why? There is no simple answer, but a few reasons may be suggested. "Joining the Church" is too easy; and once one is in, the discipline administered is very lax. In private morals we have been watchful over the flock; but we have been too careless of the public conscience. At Malvern Miss Dorothy Sayers stated the situation bluntly enough: the Church "will condemn those sins which respectability has condemned already, but not the sins by which respectability thrives." Religion is no longer the dominant value in our public education, and the attempts of our "Sunday Schools" to make up for it are notoriously ineffectual. Adult religious education in our Church is still in its infancy. And family worship has almost entirely disappeared.

The impact of this situation upon our "common prayer" is confusing to say the least. The Prayer Book services were not designed for the "heathen" but for those who are "called to be saints." While all of its offices are pre-eminently evangelical; they are by no means evangelistic. Morning and Evening Prayer are appreciated by sophisticated people, sensitive to poetry and style; and sincerely devout people, who know something of the art of meditation and practice it regularly, find these offices gracious and uplifting. But there are so many in our congregations now who do not read and study the Scriptures, who find it difficult to pray imaginatively, and who are very vague in their understanding of the central doctrines of their faith. For such people the Daily Office, which they hear at most three Sundays out of four in the month, rarely conveys anything relevant to the tough world they live and struggle in; it remains by and large an incomprehensible formality. For them the sermon and the hymns, which are strictly not part of the Office, must bear the burden and heat of the day.

The Eucharist, of course, being more dramatic and more concentrated in emphasis, is more searching to the conscience and more evocative of dedication and commitment. But it is too long, and at times too argumentative, and its language archaic. The radical social implications of its Offertory are often missed—God's provident gifts, man's labor, his stewardship of property, his willingness to sacrifice for the common good, especially for the "household of faith." Yet with all its imperfections, the service retains its power to lift men out of themselves and throw their lives into the perfect self-offering of Christ, and attain, for the moment at least, an experience of the holy fellowship of His Body.

The forecourt to this experience of perfect society realized in fellowship with Christ is, and has always been, the Ante-Communion with its simple statement of the Law and the Gospel, and some doctrinal explanation of their relation, in between the two, in the Epistle. We would do well to rediscover the evangelistic possibilities of this ancient catechetical office for our present-day "baptized catechumens." A few hymns, a sermon after the Gospel, and modern prayers relevant to present needs at the conclusion will make it a much better "mission" of worship to the unconverted than Morning Prayer. (Of course, the lectionary will need a thorough going-over.) In the long run, too, its more frequent use may lead to the re-establishment of the entire service of Holy Communion as the norm of worship of instructed, disciplined and re-converted Christians.

Bishop of Chichester Tells Of Task Before Church

He Says Chaos Is Likely On the Continent And Calls for Help to Restore Church Life

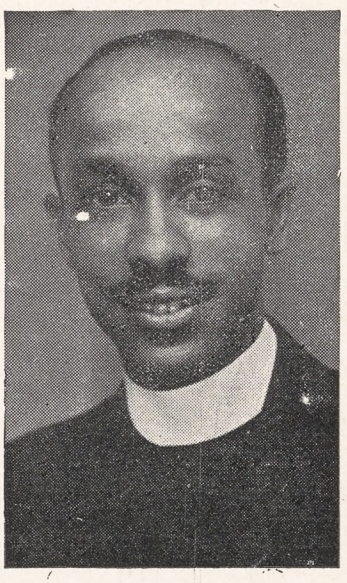
Edited by Rita Rubin

New York:—The new Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Fisher, was very close to Archbishop Temple and the Archbishop of York thought he was an obvious successor to the high office. So declared the Bishop of Chichester, Dr. Bell, at a luncheon given by the Presiding Bishop in honor of the distinguished British visitor. He said that Archbishop Fisher is a good organizer and executive, possesses clarity of mind and lucidity of speech and desires to follow the policies laid down by his predecessor.

Dealing with the problems now facing the Church of England Dr. Bell put recruiting and training men for the ministry as number one. Second he thought there should be a better follow-up of confirmations in order to stop the leakage, and suggested that a separation of confirmation and first communion might provide one means of doing this. An improvement in facilities for religious education is needed, he said, with day schools doing effective work in his own diocese of Chichester. The damage done to church buildings by bombs was on the list of problems but the Bishop was more concerned about the revolution going on in social life, both in England and on the Continent, with the crisis in Europe even greater than in England.

Millions of displaced persons: slave labor; Germans in a chaotic country without any government; people in the liberated countries — Holland, Belgium, Norway, France — trained as patriots in sabotage and in disobedience to law in order to defeat the Nazis; all these and other factors created the most difficult moral and spiritual problems. People trained to make sabotage and disobedience a virtue might well carry on the same tactics against a legitimate government, particularly since that government will have great difficulty in providing the people with food, transportation, employment.

The Bishop then stated that the hope was in the churches, even in Germany, where the Confessional Church has stood firm against the Nazi idolatry. The question is how can we help the clergy to build up Church life in these areas. The World Council of Churches had been organized, fortunately, prior to the war, and it has been able to keep contacts alive and to look ahead to restoration of Church life (see WITNESS, May 24).



He then stated that there had been a remarkable advance in cooperation between the Churches in England during the war, even with the Roman Church. Not all members of the Church Assembly of the Church of England were enthusiastic about cooperation with non-Episcopal Churches, with a compact minority, mainly clergy, raising their voices whenever plans of the World Council are presented. But when the Assembly is asked for help for definite needs the vote is generally unanimous to join fully in the reconstruction program. At the present time a commission of clergy and laity is seeking to raise a million dollars for the World Council program. Each of the 42 dioceses is aiming to raise from five to ten thousand pounds, working at it their own way. The appeal is for the reconstruction of the entire Church in Europe but contributions can be earmarked for specific countries, and it is likely that the first $50,000 will go to the Orthodox in Greece.

The Bishop laid stress on the fact that the money is not to be used for buildings but for salaries for clergy, theological training, religious literature, etc. And he ended by stating that if the Church of England and the Episcopal Church here in America could work together with the World Council of Churches that we could do much for the revival of spiritual life in Europe.

Guests at the luncheon were Bishops Washburn, Gilbert, Budlong, Ludlow, Sterrett, Learned, McKinstry, Gray and Harris. Also Mrs. R. L. Kingland, Mrs. J. E. Hill, Mrs. William Leidt, Mrs. Arthur Sherman, Mrs. Henry Hill Pearce. Laymen present were John Glenn, Samuel Thorne, William Leidt, Colonel Dyckman and Colonel Lydecker. The clergy there were the Rev. Franklin Clark, the Rev. Clifford Samuelson, the Rev. Floyd Tomkins, the Rev. George Wieland, the Rev. Cuthbert Simpson and the Rev. Henry Smith Leiper.

St. Mary's, Sewanee

Sewanee, Tenn.:—St. Mary's School for girls is located here on the beautiful Cumberland Plateau, eighty-six miles from Chattanooga and one hundred miles from Nashville. The altitude is twenty-two hundred feet above sea level and the climate is invigorating. Classes begin with the seventh grade and go through high school; and as the enrollment is limited the atmosphere is that of a happy family and not of an institution. The school is under the direction of The Sisters of St. Mary and is fully accredited with the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

The Rev. Tollie L. Caution, vicar of St. Luke's, New York, is the new secretary for Negro work of the National Council, succeeding Bishop Harris of Liberia. He is a native of Baltimore, graduate of Lincoln University and Philadelphia Divinity School and was the rector of St. Augustine's Philadelphia, before coming to St. Luke's

There are 339 acres in the school property, including a large campus, athletic field, riding ring, a farm and a dairy. The buildings are of stone, well heated and ventilated, and each is provided with fire protection. Special attention is paid to the health of the students. A graduate nurse is employed to care for the sick, and to train the girls to guard against unnecessary exposure. All possible precautions are taken to guard against illness. A healthful location, a pure water supply, and a well balanced diet all help to make the health record almost one hundred per cent.

There is a service in the beautiful school chapel each morning for the entire household. The day is thus begun with the blessing of our Lord. On Sunday the song service is an inspiration for at this service plain song is rendered in all its ancient beauty.

Activities are many. Physical education makes the days merry with basketball, tennis and other sports. Riding days are delightful for after lessons are completed in the riding ring picnics come. What can be more thrilling than to meet the sun coming up, as a woodland trail unfolds itself with bacon and eggs and coffee cooked out in the open. The girls who are interested in good literature enjoy the Edgar Allen Joe club. Dramatic clubs, the school paper, Hilltop Highlights, and the Girls' Friendly Society are active also.

St. Mary's wishes to give every opportunity to students who will appreciate the atmosphere and excellent education offered. The self-help plan provides work in office or house, so that girls who are not able to pay full board and tuition may help themselves and also help the school.

Should any of our readers journey in Tennessee St. Mary's stands ready to give them a warm welcome.

To Have Coadjutor

Hartford: — Governor Raymond Baldwin presented a resolution to the convention of the diocese of Connecticut, meeting here May 15th, urging that consents be secured from bishops and standing committees for the election of a Coadjutor. It was passed unanimously. Since Bishop Budlong had made it clear that he did not contemplate the possibility of three bishops it means that Bishop Walter Gray, now suffragan, will be elected coadjutor and thus will succeed to the office of diocesan.

Bishop of Arizona

Pittsburgh:—The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving 2nd was consecrated Bishop of Arizona on May 29th in Calvary Church where he has served as rector for the past four and a half years. The Presiding Bishop was consecrator and Bishop Beverly Tucker of Ohio and Bishop Walter Mitchell, retired Bishop of Arizona, were the co-consecrators. The presentors were Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh and Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, while the attending presbyters were the Rev. Richard Baker of Baltimore and the Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving of Princeton, a cousin of the new bishop. The sermon was preached by Bishop Powell of Maryland. Following the service a luncheon was served to the visiting clergy in the parish house. Bishop Kinsolving is to have his last service at Calvary on June 3 when, with the permission of Bishop Pardue, he will confirm a class that he prepared as rector.

Food for Italians

Boston: — Food boxes for the women of St. Paul's American Church in Rome, Italy, was urged by Mrs. Samuel Tyler, wife of the former rector of the parish, in addressing the women of the diocese of Massachusetts. She said that for the first time the Auxiliary of the parish in Rome had failed to send in an offering for the U.T.O. because there is so much suffering and malnutrition about them. She further revealed that during the imprisonment of their rector the women of the parish had conducted devotional meetings which were of great value. Also when the Allied armies reached the city the women opened the parish library for the soldiers and aided them in many ways. There is urgent need now for food and clothing. Instructions about mailing can be had at any postoffice. Packages should be sent to Mrs. Katharine Tuccimei, Via Taro 39, Rome, Italy.

To Visit Germany

Geneva (wireless to RNS): — A group of Church leaders will visit Germany "as soon as permission is granted" it was decided at a meeting of the department of reconstruction and inter-Church aid of the World Council of Churches here. It was reported that Church reconstruction plans have been received from France, Holland and Finland, and that tentative plans have been drawn

Urge Reforms

Montreal (RNS):—A more adequate wage structure, improved system of social security, better housing, and participation of the public in industrial negotiations, planning and regulation were demanded in a statement issued here by the Montreal Council on Christian Order. The Council, representing the Anglican, Roman Catholic, Baptist, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Russian Orthodox, Salvation Army, and United Church bodies in Canada, called for the curbing of "irresponsible ownership" in industry, and suggested that "the primacy of human rights over property rights be more fully recognized in positive law."

Peace Proposals

Martinsburg, W. Va.: — Endorsement was given to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals at the convention of West Virginia, meeting here at Trinity Church, with communications sent to the American delegates at St. Francisco urging them "to persist in their efforts to establish a family of nations." Bishop Strider announced to the convention that $28,000 of a proposed fund of $100,000 had been raised for a conference center. The business was largely routine.

Merchant Marines

Philadelphia:—Men of the Merchant Marine came in for deserved praise here on May 20th when the Rev. Frederic Underwood, chaplain at their academy on Long Island, was the preacher at a special service held at historic Christ Church in their honor. Reviewing contributions of the merchant marine in the present war, Underwood said, "Since the beginning of the war men of the merchant marine have participated in every hazardous landing and invasion of enemy held territory. Hardy old timers along with hastily trained officers and men of the maritime academies and schools were at Dutch Harbor, at Guadalcanal, at Tarawa, Saipan, North Africa, Italy, and at the greatest invasion of history — Normandy."

TOGETHER, through

The Upper Room

"My husband, who is in the service and overseas, has asked me to send for two copies of The Upper Room, one for him and one for myself, so that we might read the same thought and chapter together each day and pray the same prayer."

"My husband writes: 'I have received the copy of The Upper Room. It's the best reading I can have over here.' This book always meant so much to him and me; and we read it together still, I in this country and he overseas."

These two letters among thousands tell a beautiful story . . . of persons far apart, yet together in the fellowship of daily devotion through The Upper Room.

We pass this thought along in the hope that others may be similarly blessed through a spiritual "tie that binds."

Orders for the July-August-September issue of The Upper Room should be sent in now. the war, when our fighting forces were not yet ready, that it was the American merchantmen who carried "the sinews of war on the dangerous submarine infested Murmansk route" he spoke of their sacrifice of the highest casualty ratio of any of the services. He pointed out that it was the first service of sufficient size engaged in this world struggle, and that with the end of the European war, "Our merchant sailors shall be our continuing ambassadors, carrying the religion, trade and culture of a free and democratic people into cities and ports where no consuls ever visit."

Underwood pointed out that after the first world war, many merchant ships were neglected, but he hoped that "a grateful and wise nation will keep her merchant marine this time. For here is a proven loyal naval reserve which costs the taxpayers little or nothing, in time of peace, and yet is ever ready to serve our country in every emergency."

Smells of Liquor

Atchison, Kansas:—The Rev. Samuel E. West Jr., says that an Indian named Louis Roubideaux is using his knowledge of the church to sponge cash from the clergy. The man tells a convincing story about his Church connections in South Dakota, and he carries a Niobrara Prayer Book. Word from the Rev. Paul H. Barbour of the Rosebud Mission is that the man is not worthy of assistance. He is nearly six feet tall and weighs about 170 — and if that isn't enough take a good whiff of his breath — liquor.

Parish Celebrates

Detroit:—Christ Church Parish in this city is observing its 100th anniversary this month. It opened on May 3rd when the Presiding Bishop preached. The following Sunday the vicar of the mother church conducted the service, while that evening a reception was held at the reopening of Ledyard Hall, the center of activities for the downtown parish. The final special event was an anniversary service on May 13 when the rector of the parish, the Rev. Francis B. Creamer, was the preacher.

One for Ripley

Birmingham, Ala.: — A year or two ago the Rev. John C. Turner, rector of the Church of the Advent, suggested to Charles Bromberg that carved wooden plaques for the front of the main altar would be suitable for a projected memorial for Mrs. Bromberg's deceased parents. Mr. Bromberg put off a decision, and then he left for service in the navy. Mr. Turner meanwhile had designs drawn for thirteen plaques — for the twelve Apostles and St. Paul — and sent blueprints of the designs to Lt. Bromberg, FPO San Francisco. The ship carrying the prints was sunk, and when the mail cargo was recovered the address had been washed off. Officers opened the envelope and discovered the name of the Rev. John Turner on the blue prints. Efforts to find Mr. Turner, no address, were unavailing, so the prints were turned over to a naval officer for suitable disposition. The officer was Lt. Bromberg! He considers it "divine intention" that brought the prints to him in this roundabout fashion, so he wrote to Mr. Turner and told him to go ahead with the project.

Supports Birth Control

Hartford, Conn.:—The Rev. Lawson Willard, rector of Trinity, New Haven, appeared before a committee of the Connecticut legislature to support a bill which would remove an old law against contraception. He termed the issue as one "involving civil liberty" and contended that Roman Catholics, who strongly opposed the new bill, had a right to refrain from contraception themselves but had no right to put the same restraint on others.

Commencement Speaker

Berkeley, Calif.: — Bishop Remington of Eastern Oregon is the commencement speaker at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific on June 7th. The alumni paper is to be read by the Rev. Pierson Parker. There will be eight graduates.

Dr. Sockman Teaches

Berkeley, Calif.:—The Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist minister of New York, is to be on the faculty of the summer school sponsored jointly by the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, the Pacific School of Religion and the Baptist Divinity School. There are to be other well known visiting lecturers as well as members of the faculties of the sponsoring schools.

Acolytes Festival

Rutland, Vt.:—The annual acolytes festival of the diocese of Vermont was held at Trinity Church here on May 10th — a revival of an event which had been postponed during war days. Many parishes were represented by the 50 boys in the procession. And just so you may know what Vermont can be like in May, a couple of rectors had to cancel the trip because of six inches of snow. Bishop VanDyck preached when the Rev. John B. Midworth, the scheduled preacher, got off the road in the snow storm.

New York Branch

New York:—A new branch service center of Youth Consultation Service of the diocese of New York is to be opened in June, located on 149th Street in a district known as the "Hub of the Bronx." This will make three centers in the city.

Hits Prejudice

London (wireless to RNS):—A proposal of the Johannesburg City Council to transfer all Africans living in western areas of the city to an unspecified district was branded as "a flagrant example of race prejudice" in an article written for the Church Times here by the Rev. Trevor Huddleston. Under the city's plan, slums of Sophiatown and Martindale would be converted into attractive suburbs for Europeans, and a separate native township would be built for the benefit of the Negro community.

While admitting that housing, school, and hospital accommodations for Sophiatown's Negro community of 60,000 persons were "appalling," Mr. Huddleston questioned the expenditure of thousands of pounds in rebuilding and replanning for the European communities and not for the Africans. The answer, he added, was "brutally plain."

"It is because Europeans don't want an African suburb adjoining theirs," he said. "It is an objection based on purely racial grounds. Years ago, the Europeans refused to buy land in Sophiatown, owing to the proximity of a refuse dump. Africans bought what the white man rejected and made homes there. The western native township was built with money from native revenue, and for more than 30 years it has been the home of a large part of Johannesburg's African population.

Mr. Huddleston declared that the residents of all communities in Johannesburg were consulted about the scheme "with the exception of the Africans who are most concerned." They first learned of it, he said, when it was mentioned in the press, and the news "not unnaturally caused serious riots in the threatened areas."

"As Christians," he added, "we cannot allow men to be moved about like cattle without any consideration of personal ties whatever."

Bless Flags

Burlington, Vt.:—Flags of all the United Nations were blessed at St. Paul's here by the Rev. Charles S. Martin. They were carried in a colorful procession by Church school pupils, members of the young people's fellowship and members of the Canterbury Club of the University of Vermont.

Women Vestrynen

Wilmington, Del. (RNS):—Women of the diocese of Delaware will be considered eligible to serve as vestrymen and wardens in local parishes, and as delegates to diocesan conventions or the provincial synod, it was decided at the annual convention here. The decision was announced after a committee named last year to study the question reported that nothing could be found in the Church constitution to prohibit election of women to these offices. Plans for increased activity among migrant workers and Negroes throughout the state were made by the convention, including religious services and instruction, kindergarten and nursery supervision, and social welfare.

Closer Cooperation

Algiers (airmail to RNS):—Closer cooperation of all Protestant groups in North Africa was discussed at the North Africa annual conference of the Methodist Church here, at which Bishop Paul Neff Garber of the denomination's Geneva area presided. The French Reformed Church, Anglican Church, North Africa Mission, Algiers Mission Band, Rolland Mission, Salvation Army, and Plymouth Brethren were invited to send fraternal delegates to the conference.

Despite the war, Bishop Garber said, much progress has been made toward closer cooperation of the

Salary for Chaplains

Toronto (RNS): — The Toronto synod of the Church of England in Canada has decided that arrangements should be made to pay not less than $1700 annually for two years to any returning military chaplains for whom civilian positions are not available. Action was taken when it was reported that no vacancies were open to 45 chaplains who have returned or will return shortly. It was said that several parishes have indicated that they are not eager to accept ex-chaplains as rectors. Archbishop Owen cracked down on this attitude, declaring that chaplains, instead of being discriminated against, should be regarded as having additional qualities.

Racial Commission

Minneapolis:—The Negro worker in Minnesota could obtain full employment in wartime as a fair chance for upgrading. However in peace time a much larger proportion of Negroes than whites cannot obtain work and their chances for upgrading decline. This is stated in a pamphlet being widely distributed in the state by the governor's interracial commission. On the commission are Bishop Keeler and Layman Talmage B. Carey, treasurer of St. Thomas', a Negro parish in this city. Governor Thye has stated that if the report is studied and discussed in the light of fundamental American principles the racial patters for employment will steadily change for the better.

MEMORIAL

THE MEMORIAL to the Rev. Thomas J. Lacey, Ph.D., will be dedicated Sunday morning, June 10th, by the rector, the Rev. Mr. Hutchins, in St. Thomas Chapel, Church of the Redeemer, 4th Ave. and Pacific Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Also several Greek Crosses will be presented by his sister, Dr. Margaret E. Lacey; a small painting of the Crucifixion over 100 years old and a painting in memoriam will be given by some members of the parish and some who are not. A simple repast will be served to visiting clergy and their wives and others. A cordial invitation is extended to all of Dr. Lacey's friends.

THE REV. A. T. MOLLEGEN
Professor at Virginia Seminary

In the editorial, Rivalry with Russia, (May 10th) you write, "We sometimes despair of the accuracy in news reporting." It is a little paradoxical but many of us would like to join you in your despair because we despair of WITNESS accuracy in reporting. It is pretty terrible really. For instance in the same issue there is what appears to be a news item, Urges Northerners Stop Meddling which is a strange blend of news, insinuation and debate. The first two paragraphs qualify as news. The last paragraph begins by "answering" Bishop Barnwell. Who answered him under the place heading Savannah? Why is he not reported by name?

In this last paragraph there is alleged a new fact, that the Southern bishops used "pressure" so that the consecration service was not held in the Washington Cathedral. Fair reporting would say what constitutes pressure and why it was used. I can think of many perfectly valid reasons (for the Norfolk choice) which serve the interests of inter-racial justice and Christian fellowship. Is there any doubt that this paragraph is slanted against the Southern bishops with only insinuation as support?

Frankly, this sort of thing happens so consistently that I would be terribly afraid to go to bat on any issue when the facts were gathered from THE WITNESS. This is a rather bad predicament to be in and I mention it because there are scores of clergymen who feel the same way.

I suggest that news be reported as news and editorializing be done as such. The reporting, then, would be no worse, at least, than the ordinary newspaper.

ANSWER BY W. B. SPOFFORD: Since I am responsible for the news in this paper I'll answer personally. I editorialize news frequently and will continue to do so. I also check facts insofar as possible. A reporter in checking is frequently told not to reveal the sources of his information, for various reasons, one of which is that it would get people in jams. But I can say, on the highest authority, that pressure and a lot of it was used to prevent the consecration of Bishop Harris from being held in the Washington Cathedral. Also the story was not slanted against Southern Bishops. It was slanted against Jim-Crowism and if there are Southern Bishops who are Jim-Crow in their attitudes that's for them to worry about, not me.

There is no reporter, or mighty few, able to write "pure" news. To illustrate: I have read the reports of the United Nations Conference, day by day, as they have appeared in about a dozen metropolitan dailies. I will wager that these stories could be read to me, so that I could not identify them by heads or type, and that I could name the paper in which the story appeared and be right 80% of the time since I know the slants of the papers.

Anyhow I haven't the ability to write "pure" news, nor is that my function in life. I editorialize because I want to. There are those who do not like it; others seem to. So I am not going to worry much about this criticism. I will worry when someone points out to me that the editorializing is off the beam. Up to now, I hope and believe, that it has been on the side of better race relations, more justice in industry, against anti-Semitism, for organic Church unity, for a One World set-up internationally. When it is slanted in other directions on these and other matters I hope some good friend will take me in hand.

But to return to Mollegen's letter: the statement made by Bishop Barnwell at his diocesan convention I consider Jim-Crow stuff. I wrote my piece of news deliberately to bring out that fact. Not to have the consecration in Washington — the first Negro to be consecrated in years — was, in my judgment, a great mistake. I slanted my story to bring out that opinion. That pressure was used, and strong pressure, not to have it in Washington is a fact. I so stated. And if to state the fact without presenting supporting evidence is "insinuation" then I think a lot of people ought to be happy since a number of the facts are not pretty. Also, I repeat, the story was not slanted against Southern Bishops. It was slanted against Jim-Crowism which I had always supposed Mollegen hated as much as I do.

In his comments on reporting he not only shows a lack of knowledge of that job; he also sounds very much to me like a perfectionist. If so then I certainly want to urge him to take a refresher course with his good friend Reinie Niebuhr.

Leading editorial (March 26) "we venture to think that no president since Abraham Lincoln. . . ." How about Woodrow Wilson? As Jan Masaryk said at the San Francisco Conference, "He started all this."

ANSWER: Mr. Masaryk's mention of Woodrow Wilson received applause at the Conference. All the many references to President Roosevelt also received applause. Both were great presidents and it will be for history to determine the greater.

The Evangelical Fellowship Urges Unity Action

Members of THE WITNESS Editorial Board Play a Leading Part in the Conference

By Florence Miller

Wilmington, Del.:—A resolution expressing regret that no report of work accomplished since the 1943 General Convention has been made by the joint commission on approaches to unity and urging that such a report be submitted to the Church for study at the earliest possible moment, was passed at the meeting of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship at Old Swede's Church, Wilmington, Delaware. The major portion of the time of the conference was devoted to a discussion of the meaning of Christian Baptism following addresses by the Rev. Frederick C. Grant of Union Seminary, chairman of the WITNESS editorial board, and Professor Reuel Howe of Virginia Seminary.

REV. F. C. GRANT

Owing to the Byrnes ruling the conference had to be limited to less than fifty people from a distance. As a result there were about an equal number of Wilmington residents and non-residents in attendance. The Rev. H. Edgar Hammond, rector of Old Swede's Church, one of the oldest in the United States, was the conference host. The Rt. Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, Bishop of the Diocese, was celebrant at the corporate communion of the Fellowship, assisted by the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, president of the Fellowship, who also presided.

It was originally planned that the Very Rev. Alexander Zabriskie, Dean of Virginia Theological School, would present and explain the proposals of the joint commission on the approaches to unity appointed at the 1943 General Convention at an evening meeting of clergy and laity. Inasmuch as the commission has neither made any proposals nor given the Church any report of its work to consider, the program had to be rearranged so that Dr. Howe spoke on the Personal and Social Implications of Baptism at the evening meeting and Dean Zabriskie talked informally on the significance of the ecumenical movement at the afternoon session.

On Thursday morning the Rev. Frederick C. Grant read a paper on The Theology of Baptism and the Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, special service secretary of the Federal Council of Churches and a WITNESS editor, spoke on the proposed changes in the marriage canon and commended pamphlets by Dr. Easton, Dr. Grant, and Dr. Pottle, which the joint commission on holy matrimony has had published. He announced that these pamphlets were available through the chairman of the commission, Bishop Davis.

Great regret was expressed both that the joint commission on approaches to unity had not presented any new proposals to the Church for study and if the commission did not do so very soon, there would hardly be sufficient time for members of the Church to study the proposals and be prepared to act upon them at the next General Convention. The resolution was as follows: "Resolved that the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship at their meeting regret that no report of work accomplished by the commission on approaches to unity since the 1943 General Convention has been made. We respectfully request the joint commission on approaches to unity to publish at the earliest possible date the fruits of their labors since the last meeting of the General Convention so that material may be available for further study and an opportunity may thereafter be given the members of the two Churches to express their will in this matter for the guidance of their delegates to the next meeting of the General Convention."

Both addresses on baptism stressed the need for the restoration of the corporate character of baptism as an act, not of the minister alone, but of the congregation. From being a private and often casual rite, both speakers contended that it should be restored to its proper place as part of the regular Sunday service of worship as suggested in the rubrics in the Prayer Book. Dr. Howe, speaking on the personal and social implications particularly stressed four points:

1. Baptism is the sacramental affirmation of the spiritual fact that persons are important as persons in contradiction to the perversions of modern culture which reduces persons to the status of things and values them in terms of their functions. It should mean among other things, protection from the dictations of egocentricity, from insecurity, from the necessity of defensive living and from all the evils that result therefrom.

2. Baptism symbolizes and should effect a new society under God.

3. The ministry of baptism is a teaching ministry since the rite occasions instruction of the congregation, the godparents and the parents, in which all, not only the clergy, participate.

4. Finally, the sacrament is evangelical in nature. Baptism, proclaiming the good news of the gospel, incorporates those who respond into the community of the faithful, sending them out into the world as messengers of a new relationship which is the gift of God to the individual and to society.

The Rev. Frederick C. Grant speaking on the theology of baptism pointed out that many early converts had received the baptism of John which meant not simply a symbolic but a real washing away of sin. In the case of pagans converted to Judaism baptism meant the removal of their defilement through contact with idolatry. The origin of the distinctly Christian practice goes back, Dr. Grant said, to the earliest Christian days. Then there was no theology of baptism as that arose later. The original meaning was the washing away of sins following repentance, but the significance of Christian baptism was that it was in or into the name of Christ, that he participated in a new life in Christ.

Dr. Grant also pointed out that in the early life of the Church, illumination came first and baptism came as a confirmation of it. One had first to undertake to live a Christian life and then you were baptized. This was so important that in the later period of the early Church, people were urged to defer their baptism until they so mastered the Christian life that there was little danger of their sinning again. If one sinned after baptism there was no second chance. The original meaning of the word sponsor was that of a responsible witness who could attest to the good behaviour of the candidate for baptism since the candidate's conversion, for unless he showed that he could live a Christian life, he was not worthy to be baptized.

Dr. Grant said in closing that the early Church would not know what to make of the perfunctorily performed rite of baptism we so frequently see in Christianity today except on the mission field.

CONNECTICUT BISHOP AT HARRISBURG

Harrisburg, Pa.:—Suffragan Bishop Walter Gray of Connecticut, preaching at the convention of the diocese of Harrisburg on May 22, said that "The Church must do all in its power to build a lasting peace and to create Christian brotherhood." He pleaded for closer cooperation between all parts of the Anglican communion. Retired Bishop Hunter Wyatt-Brown spoke feelingly of his years as bishop of the diocese and of his gratification in the progress being made under Bishop Heistand. Bishop Heistand said that after the defeat of Japan "will come the testing of the nations in the great effort to build the foundations upon which we can erect a political, economic and social structure for a lasting and peaceful world. It is in this great effort that we believe the Church can and must play an effective part."

MASSING OF COLORS AT CATHEDRAL

Washington:—A service of massing of colors was held at Washington Cathedral May 27th, with 560 individuals and 104 groups in procession, carrying flags which furnished a colorful grouping in the nave and transepts. Bishop Dun welcomed the bringing of "flags into this house of God. Here we remember before God all those who in this war and other wars have given their lives." Bishop Oliver J. Hart of Pennsylvania warned that "it has become increasingly clear that we have the choice of building a new world or preparing for a new world war. Military victory can only give us liberty with which to work for a decent world order" and then added that "such liberty has been used in the past to accomplish hellish things."

PRESBYTERIANS DEBATE ABOUT C.O.'S

Minneapolis (RNS):—A proposal that the Presbyterian Church should appropriate $15,000 from its wartime service fund to aid Presbyterian conscientious objectors in civilian service camps stirred a hot debate in the General Assembly meeting here. The argument was much the same as that put forward by Episcopalians who want national funds for this purpose—we do not want Friends, Brethren and Mennonites to pay expenses of Presbyterians. It was brought out in the debate that these churches had donated $55,000 since 1940 to aid Presbyterian CO's. The Rev. William B. Pugh, stated clerk and chairman of the general commission on army and navy chaplains, charged however that the "peace churches" had defeated efforts in Congress to get the government to assume the costs of men in civilian service camps. He vigorously opposed using wartime service funds for these men, but did propose a compromise, which passed, which provides that an undetermined amount shall be appropriated for the dependents of CO's because "they should not suffer."

CHANCELLOR

Robert T. McCracken, chancellor of the diocese of Pennsylvania, is the president of the State Bar Association and the vice-chancellor of the Philadelphia Association. He is a director of a number of business corporations. He has served on a number of diocesan committees and is a vestryman of St. Peter's, Germantown

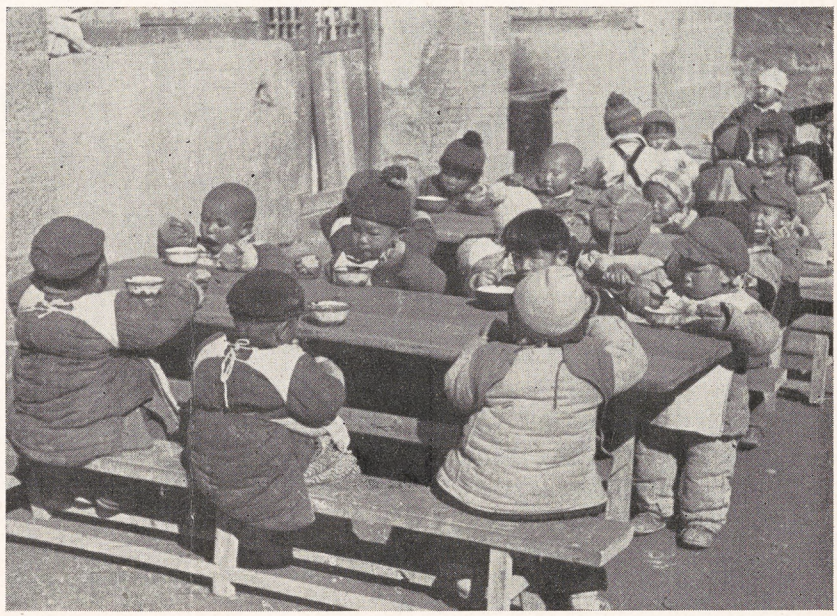
The China Missionary Field Is in a Very Bad Way

Our Government Is Moving the Missionaries Home as a Protection Even Over Protest

By Richard T. Baker
Correspondent of Religious News Service

Chungking:—One of the unnoted developments of the war in China and one which will have important consequences for the future of Sino-American good relations, is the story of what is happening to Christian missions in this country. The missionaries are leaving China. So thoroughly is the China scene being cleared of foreign missionaries that virtually no missionary work will be carried on here until the war is over or the necessary permits are granted again for Christian workers to enter the country. For this to happen to China, long a bastion of the Christian missionary movement in the world, is nothing short of astounding to those who know the history of missions here and the possibilities of work to be done in the present crisis through which the country is passing.



The reasons for this exodus are many. The entire eastern China stronghold of the missionary movement is unworkable for foreign missionaries today for the obvious reason of Japanese occupation. Hundreds of missionaries were withdrawn from Honan province, north China, in the van of the Japanese attack last spring. Hundreds more came out of territories east of the Canton-Hankow railway during the summer. The provinces of Kwangsi and Kweichow became unworkable for missionaries during the winter. Enemy occupation or the immediate threat of it is one of the prominent reasons for the curtailment of much missionary work in China.

Another is the missionary's own weariness after the ordeal he has been through in the past eight years of migration, arduous service under unbearable conditions, no reinforcements and no furloughs. He is depressed and tired.

But a third reason, and the most pressing right now, is the apparent though unstated policy of the American government, as enforced by its embassy here, to strip missions to essential workers only and remove the rest entirely. The embassy position is that no American must be permitted to be captured by the Japanese, because of the degrading treatment he would receive. It has advised all its nationals in the line of Japanese advance to withdraw to positions of safety. But it has not been content to stop there. In the face of the reopening of the Burma Road, with Sino-American military liaison never better, with a stabilization of the military situation in west China, and with hundreds of civilians in China in government-related jobs, the embassy policy has continued to insist upon the removal of missionaries. The American office of war information, for example, has a little under 100 persons in China and is bringing more all the time. No emergency evacuation orders have gone to these Americans nor to others who are here in government-related work.

The procedure of evacuation of American missionary personnel has been for the embassy to advise and counsel an evacuation committee of Church leaders. This committee, working with individuals, has taken responsibility for final decisions. It is known that the American embassy made it clear to the committee that it wanted the civilians removed if it did not endanger American interests, although the embassy itself would take no direct action. The result is a stream of missionaries homeward bound, foreign leadership of the Christian Church decimated, staffs cut to a few men who are no longer doing missionary work but simply safeguarding property interests.

Contributing, also, to the decline of the missionary movement in China today is the missionary's own frustration and exhaustion. For one thing, missionary personnel has not been kept rotating. Reinforcements have not been permitted by the government to depart from the United States, so that personnel here has overstayed furloughs and grown weary. When at last workers have been released for overdue furloughs, they have not been relieved but have simply left holes unfilled. Furthermore, they have lived a harassed existence these past eight years. They have been uprooted from their fields of service and have had to find new ways to serve in places where they are not acquainted and where life is whirling about them. They have lived out of suitcases, moved and moved again, lost all their possessions. They have seen their flocks evaporate into thin air, their work of years apparently dispersed, and it is no wonder that by the waters of Babylon they have sat down and wept.

The care of orphans like these is one of the great tasks of the Church in China. In spite of tremendous inflation the job has been carried on by the Rev. Kimber Den who has been supported generously by readers of THE WITNESS

They have not been able to satisfy their evangelistic drive, have not felt they were accomplishing anything as missionaries. There was no permanent community around them in which they could feel they were making any Christian witness. They have seen the heartache and hunger and death of the refugee lines and not been able to do anything but a little to lighten the load. Their schools have been beset by the Japanese, by government restrictions, by seizure, and always by inadequate funds. Recently the 52-year-old Chiu Ching Middle School in Chungking, a Methodist landmark in the city, has been told to move out of all its main buildings to make room for U. S. soldiers.

One other enormous factor of discouragement has been money. After China's war had run a few months an inflationary cycle set in here which has never abated in the passing years. Missionaries have, as a result, suffered greatly. They have been without funds to buy clothes. All the luxuries, like soap and silk stockings and shirts and toothpaste, have been out of the range of their pocketbooks. The money they have had available for purposes of their work (with the penniless and starving all about them) has been just as scarce. It has been no time for "rice Christians," because the missions have had no rice!

All in all, the picture of missions in China right now is dark. In 1936 there were nearly 6,000 Protestant missionaries working in the country. Two thousand had been subtracted from that sum by the end of 1941. Today, by accurate count, there are 1,085, only 227 of whom are Americans. Two hundred and fifteen are Germans, 239 are Norwegians, 270 are British and Canadians.

CHURCH DELEGATION VISITS EAST

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—Patriarch Alexei and eleven other high-ranking leaders of the Russian Orthodox Church have left for Jerusalem and other Near East areas, it was disclosed here by Georgi G. Karpov, chairman of the State Council on Orthodox Church Affairs.

The delegation includes a group of three churchmen, headed by Metropolitan Nikolai of Krutitsky, second-ranking Russian Orthdox prelate, who will later proceed to London at the invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

After visiting Jerusalem, Patriarch Alexei will tour parts of Syria and Egypt, thus reviving an ancient custom in the Russian Church interrupted by the Revolution of 1917. The visits are being made in response to invitations extended by Patriarch Timothy of Jerusalem and other Near East Patriarchs who attended the Russian church council in Moscow early this year.

In addition to Metropolitan Nikolai, the delegation to London will comprise Archpriest Nikolai Kolchitsky, manager of the affairs of the Moscow Patriarchate, and Archpriest Juvenarius. The Russian churchmen are expected to attend official receptions in Canterbury and York and will remain in England until June 18 or 19, when they will return to Moscow to officiate at Pentecost services. By that time, Patriarch Alexei will also have returned from the Near East.

Asked whether these visits, and others to Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and elsewhere, signified that the Church was seeking to create a pan-Orthodox federation, Georgi G. Karpov, chairman of the Soviet Council on Orthodox affairs, replied:

"Not at all. The trips by Church leaders have been undertaken merely to cement close fraternal ties between all Orthodox Churches and were made in response to invitations extended at the time of the general church council in Moscow. It means the resuming of a practice followed for centuries before the Revolution."

Replying to another question—whether delegations to other Orthodox and Protestant Churches, such as that planned to visit England shortly, indicates an effort to offset Vatican influence—Karpov said:

"This is not the meaning of these trips. The position of Orthodox Church leaders was clearly expressed in an appeal to the faithful made at the sobor, in which the Vatican was condemned for its appeasement of Fascism. No new steps have been initiated in this direction."

"However,' Karpov added, "it must not be forgotten that the struggle of the Orthodox Church against the Vatican has lasted for many centuries and certainly will not stop."

Warmth Is Needed

AS WE STOOD on the corner this morning waiting for the bus, we listened to a conversation between a seven year old girl and her brother. The little girl said she was cold. For the first time in a number of days the sun was shining. Looking up at the sun, she said, "I wish I was the sun, then I would always be warm." Non-poetic brother replied, "If you were the sun you would burn up, cause it's hot.

Two things are suggested by this childish conversation. Both of them are perfectly obvious. The first is that we all need sunshine. Our Christian destiny is to be children of light. The second obvious thing is that it takes darkness to make us appreciate the light and warmth of the sunshine.

For six long years darkness, fears, the havoc of war's destruction has plagued the world. The light begins to manifest itself again. There is still plenty of confusion and the dampness of the long night of terror and destruction is not easily dispelled. It is going to take a lot of sunshine to thaw out the cold of six years of destruction and disillusionment.

As Christians it is our responsibility to assist in that thawing out process. We shall not be afraid to literally burn ourselves out in bringing warmth into this chaotic world. Each convinced Christian may become a burning meteor marking his own pathway across the life of his community, by the sparks of goodness that flow from his works.

To be specific, the chill of unreality hangs over much that we do in the field of race relations. We may preach eloquent sermons, and aid in the drafting of excellent pronouncements, but what do we actually do to further mutual understanding between racial groups? Why should we think we have done a fine thing when we have spoken kindly to a Negro or praised some achievement of his? He is a child of God. He is our brother.

In the area of labor-management relations there clings the chill of suspicion. How much have we actually as Christian leaders done to dispel this chill. Do not most of us belong to class churches? Yet we believe in the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man.

When we are honest with ourselves we find we are very much like the little girl — we are cold. Christianity teaches us to be warm in our friendships; to burn with consuming indignation against all evils that do despite to the dignity of human kind made in the image of God.

The little girl's simple statement can be made a philosophy for Christian action. The chill of six long years of death and destruction can only be obliterated by our becoming children of the son of righteousness.

"QUOTES"

I AM in no position here to judge how close to a real agreement the conference at San Francisco has moved, but I'm in a very good position to judge how desperately, how bitterly such agreement is needed. Without solid agreement there can be no hope for a peaceful, stable Germany and without a peaceful, stable Germany there is no hope for a peaceful, stable Europe. The most dangerous thing in the world would be for us to imagine that the German people have accepted defeat as final and irrevocable. They simply are looking for other armies to take up for them the battle where their own Wehrmacht left off and for this battle they've chosen the armed forces of Britain and America. The enemy of course is Russia. — I am also convinced that this is in some measure the result of a deliberate campaign by Hitler's heirs, whoever they may be. There's one Hitler weapon which our tanks, guns and planes failed to shatter — the divide-and conquer policy. And it is this weapon which remains unsheathed that is Germany's only hope for salvaging victory out of defeat. . . . . Only the achievement of real agreement at San Francisco can teach the German Fascist what he most needs teaching in: that the world really is against him. This unity must be real and firm.

A Fine Decision

IT IS OFTEN said that the successful city rector is not missionary minded. He is prone to become satisfied with his position, feels secure, and therefore is not willing to make sacrifices for the advancement of God's kingdom, either monetarily or by personal sacrifice. Unfortunately this is too often true.

On May 29th in Pittsburgh the lie was given to such generalizations about prominent city rectors. When the House of Bishops met in Birmingham they elected a prominent city rector, missionary bishop of Arizona — the Rev. Arthur Barksdale Kinsolving II, of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh. Calvary is one of the largest parishes numerically speaking in the Church. It is prominent. Its rector carries a tremendous responsibility. True, its beautiful architecture inspires a man to do his best. This does not mean that all is easy sailing and that there are no headaches for the rector. Every parish, large or small, has its problems. Dr. Kinsolving, "Big Tuie" as he is familiarly known, has done a splendid work at Calvary. When he began his ministry there he placed emphasis upon the responsibility of a strong parish to exercise missionary leadership. Under his guidance Calvary has increased its missionary giving. Now Calvary has sent its rector forth as a missionary bishop.

We congratulate Calvary. We commend Arthur B. Kinsolving II for the fine decision he has made. Son of a missionary bishop, nephew of a bishop who was in every sense a missionary bishop to Texas; grandson of a clergyman who ministered long and earnestly in rural Virginia in the hard days following the Civil War, "Big Tuie" brings to his new office a rich heritage coupled with distinctive natural talents, augurs well for the kind of leadership the missionary district of Arizona will receive under its new bishop.

We know of nothing that has done the whole cause of missions more good than this fine decision made by the rector of Calvary to accept the office of Bishop of Arizona. As we heard one Bishop express it, it was like a wounded man receiving a shot of plasma.

May God's richest blessing rest upon the newly consecrated Bishop of Arizona and prosper the work of his hands.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

HOW is Stettinius handling the Conference? That is always near the top of the list of questions thrown my way in talks about San Francisco. The answer as far as I am concerned is that he is doing a good job. There is no question whatever about his earnestness, sincerity and his determination to make this Conference a success. He has handled things beautifully in the plenary sessions, and he has been frank, honest and genial with the press. How he made out in the sessions behind closed doors with Eden, Soong, Molotov and others of course I wouldn't know. My guess is that he has done all right. He has made mistakes. I think he did a sloppy job on the Argentina business. Even if it was desirable to get that South American country in, which I do not believe, then it could have been done less brutally. Also he muffed that arrest of sixteen Poles business, since it was evident from questions by reporters that Stettinius did not have all the facts. But any man with the tremendous job our Secretary of State had to do would have slipped somewhere and I think we can all feel pretty proud of Mr. Stettinius.

Anthony Eden I was prepared to dislike. Handsome guys with striped pants, Homburg hats and Oxford accents for some reason I can't go. A psychiatrist probably wouldn't have much trouble figuring the reason — envy maybe at all those dumb dames who sat around the lobby of the Fairmont Hotel all day just to get a glimpse of the notable Britisher. But the fact is I had to like him. His speech at the plenary session at the beginning of the Conference was the best delivered speech of the affair, and he was a tip-top chairman, with nothing of the stuffy matinee idol about him that I could see. Likewise he handled himself well in press conferences as he handed out the British tory line which of course he was there to do.

Commander Stassen, it is generally agreed among the reporters, is the top man of the American delegation and perhaps of the Conference and has made a lot of friends who will be of help to him in 1948 if he still wants to be the president of the United States. A young man of thirty-eight, he has lots of dignity without being stuffy; is a liberal of the Willkie type; shows a remarkable ability in press conferences in explaining complicated questions in simple language. Also he is a good listener and repeatedly asks reporters to elaborate on some question they put to him with the remark: "Please explain that more fully. I think you have an important point and I want to understand it thoroughly so that I can carry it back to our delegation." That attitude naturally makes a hit with the newsmen. It was my good fortune to meet him with a small group early in the conference and I liked the way he put himself in the other fellow's shoes, as he did on the Soviet's requests for four presidents and for the seating of delegations from the Ukraine and White Russia. He had no trouble in understanding the Russian positions and agreeing with them on both.

Dean Gildersleeve apparently is on the progressive side of all questions and is a real factor in the American delegation but she held no press conferences so that I have no impression of her, one way or the other.

T. V. Soong is quiet, gentlemanly, youthful looking and able, both as a chairman of plenary sessions and in press conferences. His spot of course is not an easy one, particularly when the U.S.A. takes one side of a question and the USSR the other, since China above everything wants to remain friends with both. There are times therefore when he sidesteps questions, but taking it by and large he comes up with quick and frank answers, and has the ability to turn aside the others with witty remarks. He is also the only head of a delegation who calls upon his associates to answer some of the questions shot at him. He says, "Mr. So-and-So is our authority on that" and then he sits down in order to be as inconspicuous as possible while his fellow-delegate carries the ball.

GEORGES BIDAULT, the head of the French delegation, no longer here, was calm, quiet, unruffled by any question shot at him — and reporters have a way of asking some tough ones — was always smiling and was quicker in getting out his answers than any person I have heard in San Francisco. But he avoided giving a clear answer to about every question put to him, whether it was about the Rhineland, the Ruhr, the Saar Basin, the Polish question, Argentina, Indo-China, or Franco Spain. One rather got the impression that he met with the press only because everyone else did and he therefore felt compelled to do so, but that he meant to give them as few answers as possible.

There will be those who will say that it is prejudice, but I think the star of the show was V. M. Molotov. I attended all of his press conferences and heard him vigorously applauded by hardboiled reporters for his frank honesty, his wit and his moral leadership. They hammered him on the Polish question but he kept smiling and insisting that "You cannot solve the Polish question without the Poles," the inference being that Mr. Eden, Mr. Stettinius and himself could hardly be expected to arrive at a solution by meeting in a penthouse on top of a fashionable hotel in San Francisco. When asked why the Soviet Union had not tried to seat delegations for all of the sixteen Soviet republics he came back quick as a flash with "The Soviet Union always asks for the minimum." As for moral leadership I do not think anyone can deny that the Soviets took it in the opening days of the conference and held it throughout. It was they who insisted that justice, human rights and fundamental freedoms be written into the Charter — even if some of the American consultants are now claiming a good deal of credit for those amendments. It was the Soviet delegation alone that stood by labor in its request that it be admitted as an advisor. They wanted the independence of colonies definitely stated as an objective of the World Organization. Incidentally when Mr. Molotov said at a plenary session that "we all know that the time will come when the voice of an independent India will be heard" it made millions of hearts in that far off country beat a little faster. One of my friends in San Francisco, J. J. Singh, reporting for a Calcutta paper, got a cable a couple of days later reading: "Send more on Molotov's speech. It was headlined in every India newspaper."

I think too that most people at the Conference believe that Molotov was right about Argentina. In any case there was stormy applause when he said: "It may be argued that Argentina has sinned but that her sins may be forgiven. This may be true; perhaps we should really forget Argentina's sins. But let me ask you: if certain sins committed by Argentina may be forgiven, why should we forget Poland's services? Why should we forget the great services of the Polish nation in the struggle against our common foe?"

The fact is that the Soviet delegation has been on the side of progress throughout — standing for principles of justice; for equality and self-determination of nations; for human rights and fundamental freedoms; the right of all men to work and to education, with Mr. Molotov asking the press: "Is it not clear that the right to work is of vital importance to working men and women in the transitional period from war to peace, when the danger of mass unemployment will be particularly grave?" That remark may be lost on this conference. But the working masses throughout the world will not forget it, particularly in those days soon upon us with cutbacks, reconversion and perhaps mass idleness. Molotov, alone among the hundreds of delegates, also went to bat for women by asking that it be agreed that there should be no job in the World Organization that might not be filled by a woman.

There were many other outstanding and interesting people here of course — Clement Attlee of England; the scrappy General Carlos Romulo of the Philippines; democratic Trygve Lie of Norway; Peter Fraser of New Zealand; Francis Forde of Australia; Mackenzie King and M. J. Coldwell of Canada; Miss Wu Yi-Fang, a leading Christian of China about whom I shall write more later; Jan Masaryk of Czechoslovakia who, unlike most of the delegates, wandered about the streets like a native, ate his meals at the counters of small eating places and was a master of American slang; the youthful looking Negro of Liberia, C. L. Simpson. Then of course General Smuts got a lot of attention as did also Ivan Subasic of Yugoslavia who pulled no punches in giving the lowdown to reporters on rivals to the Tito government. There was also Lombardo Toladeno, not a delegate but nevertheless very much in evidence. He is the recognized leader of labor in Latin America and on two or three occasions presented an analysis of the world situation that could not be equalled. Incidentally at a little party I attended he made the remark, significant perhaps in view of recent developments, that "Since my American friends stopped talking about the class struggle they seem to think that it has ceased to exist."

I'd like to write about all these people but I'm sure this is all you want this week. As for coming numbers, particularly for the benefit of those who are taking extra copies while these Conference reports are appearing, we plan two more and perhaps three, depending on developments. And in one of them I shall deal with the important question of what our Senate is apt to do with the Charter once they get it and what we can do to encourage speedy ratification.

The Living Liturgy

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Speaking in Tongues

A DISTINGUISHED musician of our Church, to whom I am indebted for a great deal of what little I know about Church music, used to say to his choristers at rehearsal that the acid test of a good choir is to observe their manner of chanting. If this be true, good choirs in our Church are scarcely to be found. For the chanting of the canticles in our parish churches more often than not reminds one of the "speaking in tongues" of St. Paul's Corinthian Church. Doubtless it is edifying to those who "know the interpretation," but to outsiders it must be evidence of sheer madness, if not of irreverence. The learned musicologist, Dr. Percy A. Scholes, in his article on "Anglican Chant" in The Oxford Companion to Music (2nd American Edition) describes the practice neatly: "The tendency of choirs and congregations is to gabble the recitation and dawdle over the rest of the music" (p. 32).

Chanting is a heightened form of speech. Its purpose is to lend added emotional force to the expression of a sacred text. This is achieved only if the rhythm and accentuation given to the chant melody derives from and is subordinate to the clear, even and natural enunciation of the words. There is no reason for singing a canticle with a different pace and emphasis upon words from that used when it is solemnly said. We would be horrified if the minister read the lesson like this:

T h o I speakwithetonguesomennAANNGGlsan-HAVE-NOT-Charty,

ImbecomasoundingBBRRAASSS -OR -A -TINK-LING-SYMbl.

Yet this is exactly the way the Venite and the other canticles are rendered, or rather distorted, to the glory of God Sunday after Supper by many of our choirs.

Jerkiness, heavy beats, long pauses or holds, dropping and slighting of syllables destroy the meaning and the beauty of the sacred words of the Office and are unworthy of a service offered to God's praise. This applies to both the melodic plainsong chants and the so-called Anglican, or harmonized chants. In the case of the latter the music is printed in a conventional way simply to assist the singer in fitting the pointed text to the notes. The bar lines and the whole- and half-notes should have no control over the rhythm. The text determines the rhythm, just as in free verse. This principle has been stated and illustrated most clearly and precisely in the prefatory material of our hymnals.

The way to learn how to chant is first to read the text aloud in its natural rhythm and accent, then to sing it to a monotone with the same rhythm and accent; and, when this is done smoothly and evenly, at last to sing the text to the chant melody with the same rhythm and accent. We shall have more to say anon about the pointing of the texts. But any system of pointing can be rendered with smoothness: a) if the first note of the cadences (i.e., the first note after the initial bar line in each phrase) is set to a syllable which is naturally accented when read; and b) if no heavy stress is given to any syllable which may be pointed to the last note of the melody. This rule is particularly important when the initial and final notes of the cadences and the endings rise in pitch.

In selecting chants for congregational use the following points should be kept in mind: 1) The first note of each phrase, the reciting note, should be at a pitch as comfortable for men as for women. This will often require transposing the chant to a lower key. 2) The chant melody should move by small steps or intervals and keep well within the compass of an octave or less. Large skips and wide range in the melody are awkward for untrained singers. 3) The harmony of the chant should be based on the common chords of the scale. The effect is tedious and sentimental when the chant modulates into several different keys, or when weak chords (i.e., chords that have to be resolved —being unable to stand on their own bottoms, so to speak) are used to support the recitation or the accented syllables of the cadences and endings. 4) The accompaniment should not be marked by extremes of dynamics or abrupt changes in tonal color. Variety is better gained by employing antiphonal singing or occasional descants. 5) Do not overwork the same chant melodies. Change them once a month, or at least at the chief seasons of the Church year.

Crisis in Education

Rector of St. Mary's, Park Ridge, Illinois

OUR BISHOPS meeting in Birmingham called attention to the Church's current failure properly to instruct the people in her essential teachings and requested the National Council to restudy its responsibilities in the light of this failure. It is high time that they did so. Christian leaders have been concerned for years over the obvious failure of our program of Christian education. The holocaust of world war has made it imperative that definite and concerted action be taken.

The resolution specifically recommended "the preparation of a corpus of instructional material to be acquired by every child by the time of confirmation and by the time of leaving high school." It also urged the production of curriculum material, more definite guidance for the clergy, weekday religious education, methods of teacher training, and teaching material suitable for teachers of varying degrees of education. The resolution contains nothing startling or radical. The need that something be done is too obvious for argument. The recommendations are the same that religious educators have been making for years. The cause for rejoicing lies in the fact that the bishops have decided to get some action.

This action, begun at the top, must lay hold on the best thinking of the whole Church or else! The fruits of failure are not pleasant to contemplate. At long last the stage has been reached when it has been decided that ignorance of the Bible, Prayer Book and the ways and teachings of the Church is not funny. For years the average layman has laughed openly at his abysmal spiritual illiteracy. In a period when the means of imparting information surpass anything ever dreamed of before, the least is known about the Church. Some of our chaplains have been writing letters home to their bishops, which make the average teacher and clergyman do some fast thinking. The sheep have not been fed as they should have been. Their malnutrition is appalling.

The general alarm has reached such proportions, that not only do we find new books attacking the problem, such as The New Education and Religion, by J. Paul Williams, but the secular press has taken up the hue and cry. The totalitarian demonstration of the diabolical results of the lack of Christian education has convinced even the most lackadaisical Christian that something must be done. We have been trying to make a format for a shining new world at the San Francisco Conference. It will be difficult enough to draw up the plan with so many different points of view involved but this is purely preliminary. The crucial thought comes as the question is posed, "Will man have enough character to work the plan?"

Added impetus is given to our concern by the fact that as men drift from the fundamentals of the faith through inadequate instruction and indifference, people become fallow ground for the seeds of fascism or any other deleterious ism that some fanatic may seek to sow. Every day the newspapers carry the story of the credulity of some guillible group. By this time most people have reached the stage where they admit, that "it can happen here."

The National Council well realized that the fullness of time had come and took prompt action. The division of Christian education held a two day conference at "281" late in April. In addition to the committee appointed by General Convention, Bishop Tucker called in three bishops, three clergy and three laity to confer with the committee. It was the writer's privilege to be one of the clergy present. The comments of the various members of the conference confirmed his convictions of several years' standing that there are some fundamental considerations, which the clergy and Church School teachers would do well to bear in mind.

During the past dozen years it has been the author's lot to lecture in two seminaries on Christian education, to be the chairman of the department in his diocese and to participate in innumerable conferences. Each time that he has given a series of lectures to seminary students he has asked for a 500 word paper presenting their ideas on Christian education. These papers were requested early in the course so that unprejudiced opinions would be given. Their treatment of the problem makes an interesting study. While some of their reactions were rather far fetched and some suggestions unworkable, it was a delight to find that, in the great majority of cases, the students had done some hard thinking and had come to sound, logical conclusions. These young men feel that the outstanding need is for instruction in the fundamentals of the faith. The importance of worship received proper recognition as did many other prerequisites, such as better trained teachers, more time for class work, parental cooperation, an aroused and informed clergy and better equipment.

THE recent conference at "281" ran the whole gamut of criticism, both constructive and destructive, with the same major emphases as those given by the seminarians. The most encouraging finding was in the general agreement that a syllabus should be prepared, which would sketch the main objectives of Christian education, give a schedule of a year by year program for achieving those ends and suggest materials for realizing them.

It was the writer's hope that out of the conference would come a committee which would reach an agreement on what ought to be taught in each grade, from pre-kindergarten up through high school and that an effort would be made to get the Church schools throughout the whole Church to cooperate in teaching the same subject in the same grade. Thus, fourth grade Mary, moving from Pittsburgh to Chicago, would find the same general subject being taught which she had been studying in her former church.

It is difficult to believe that the various Church schools will ever agree to teach the same text book, but they might be induced to give instruction in the same subject matter. Thus, the syllabus mentioned above, would list the theme for each year of Church school work and the local school would use any text book that it preferred. The syllabus would mention a number of good courses from which to choose.

It is apparent that it was in the mind of the bishops that an official course be prepared. This would be a salutary thing, but any one who knows the clergy realizes that they never could be persuaded to all use the official course. Most of them might employ the course for awhile but after a few years it would be just another good course in Christian education.

When the idea of teaching the same theme in the same year in the schools of the diocese of Chicago was presented to the Bishop and Council it was received with unanimous favor and steps are being taken to carry out the idea as soon as possible. If headquarters evolves a national plan along this line, Chicago will be glad to conform, but as the division is not going to meet again until Sept. 24, it has been decided here to take immediate action as "time is fleeting fast away."

The priest with the small Church school with only a few classes will ask how he can work this plan. The answer is to take as many of the courses as possible, teaching one each year. Such would be the case for the rural Church School. A great deal of the agitation about special courses for rural areas is unnecessary. Children are children whether they live in the city or in the country. The city child has no priority on intelligence. In fact the majority of the leaders in urban life were raised in small towns. Any course, taught anywhere, has to be adapted by the teacher to the members of that particular class. The fundamentals of the Bible, Prayer Book and the ways and teachings of the Church are the same for farm and factory.

Too many priests and teachers are looking for a nostrum that does not exist. There is no easy way to teach. There is no course, no matter how good, that will solve the problems of Christian education. The world will not be remade over night. It is a life-long task. There will be no forthcoming new idea that will make everything all right by next Sunday morning at 9:30.

The crisis must be met by the data suggested above, plus much hard work and prayer. Above all else the determining factor will be found in the atmosphere that the adults build around the growing child. Every adult is a bulletin board keenly studied by young eyes. Of the imitative activity of children, 85% of it is imitation of adults. Progress will be determined by teaching the fundamentals, by better teaching and so forth, but none of these things will reach the desired goal unless the child finds parents, teachers and friends living like Christian people. It is still true that religion must be both taught and caught.

The young bride can find any number of cook books to tell her how to make Shrimp newburg en casserole, honey coffee cafe, or Yorkshire pudding but searches in vain for one that explains how to poach an egg or make gravy. In like manner the average high school chapter of the Y.P.F. is too often confronted with youth guides which omit essentials and overlook the primary needs of the group and its inexperienced officer. In this brief handbook the young president will find the ten commonsense "hints" to a chairman most helpful, the program committee will discover the difference between a round-table discussion and a panel discussion and the advisor will learn to know his place. The sample constitution and suggested topics for study are good. In all this will be found a useful manual for any young people's group.

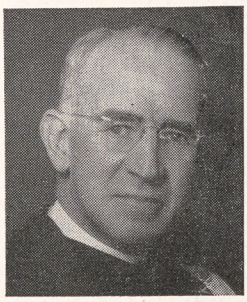
The Russian Orthodox Bishops Reject Reconciliation

Church Retains Her Autonomous Position And Continues Independent Administration

Edited by Rita Rubin

Chicago (RNS):—The council of bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church in America has formally rejected a proposal by Moscow Patriarch Alexei for reconciliation with the Church in Russia. The decision was announced after a two-day meeting here presided over by Metropolitan Theophilus of San Francisco and attended by bishops of nine other dioceses. The bishops "postponed" an all-American Council of the Church scheduled during the fall at which Patriarch Alexei had requested that a new Metropolitan be elected in place of Metropolitan Theophilus, with jurisdiction over all dioceses of North and South America and Canada. Archbishop Alexei of Yaroslavl and Rostov, who is reported on his way to this country, was to have presided at the council. He had been approved by the Patriarch as a candidate for the new office.

The Council's statement stressed that acceptance of Patriarch Alexei's proposals would result in severing connections with bishops living outside Russia. The only alternative, it stated, was for the Church to retain its autonomous position and continue its independent administration "under the right to full civil liberties guaranteed by the American government."



"In this dilemma," the statement declared, "the bishops council found a middle outlet, durable and securing a smooth flow of Church life, namely: the Patriarchal ukase was set aside; the all-American sobor was postponed; and the faithful called upon to continue, in the spirit of evangelic peace and brotherly unanimity, the common Church life and activity under the protection of the American many-starred flag and under the protection of the constitutions of the United States and Canada."

Interviewed after the meeting, Bishop Alexy of Sitka, Alaska, who conferred with officials of the Russian Church in Moscow on the question of reconciliation, said he had found in Russia "a degree of religious freedom" and "the beginning of seminary training," but added: "We feel in the United States that it is best for us to retain our independence at present, although there still remains the possibility of ultimate accord of all Orthodox churches."

Meanwhile Metropolitan Benjamin, who heads another branch of the Orthodox and is apparently closer to the Church authorities in Moscow, expressed his disappointment at the action. He declared that a "great majority of the members of the Russian Orthodox Church in America deeply desire union with the mother Church in Russia." He said that the action was based upon the fact that the bishops here want no connection with the Soviet government but he denied that the Church reconciliation involved "recognition of the Russian temporal government as an authority in Church affairs."

General Seminary

New York:—Thirteen men from eleven dioceses graduated from the General Seminary on May 23rd. Seven graduates of former years, having completed the necessary work, were awarded the degree of bachelor of sacred theology. Honorary degrees went to Bishop Boynton of Puerto Rico; Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh; Bishop Voegeli of Haiti; the Rev. William R. Watson of Bay Shore, Long Island, and the Rev. Charles E. Young, professor at Bishop Payne Divinity School. The commencement address was given by Professor Stanley Wallis of Princeton.

BISHOP GILBERT

The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Bishop Gilbert of New York who declared that "the world is no longer startled by the gospel message. Few people are afraid of it any more—a fact that should have its disturbing significance perhaps. Those who might have reason to fear the effect of Christian ideals upon the life of our world are no longer troubled. The Church, they conclude, is harmless and they know that there are plenty of timid, self-satisfied Christians who would prefer to keep it so. Nothing is going to happen, nothing will be allowed to happen, to disturb the old order of things. But you and I know that something has happened. And something is happening. This world knows no power that can undo the Incarnation. God was in the world in Christ, reconciling the world to himself. And we know that against his redeeming, saving purpose even the power of hell can never prevail. Let us remember that he hath sent us this ministry of reconciliation. There is something we have to do about it. It comes to us loaded with compelling, overwhelming responsibility. For us the Church stands as the instrument which our Lord himself has designed and equipped for this saving task. What then shall we say of the place of the Church in the world that we face today?

"Obviously it is not the function of the Church to draft blue-prints of the new world order for which we all long and pray. Nor is the Church competent to express judgments upon intricate political and economic details of world organization. But that does not mean that the Church's voice may not be heard or the influence of its conscience exerted in forthright and determined insistence upon those standards committed to us by the Christ whom we profess to serve. Experience should have taught us that we may not rely upon treaties or covenants or leagues, however nobly conceived. They prescribe the method. They may define the object. But you and I know that the thing will not live or move until somehow God, through the service and influence of those who owe allegiance to him, breathes into it the breath of life."

St. Agnes School

Albany, N. Y.:—At the top of the hill leading towards Loudonville, and just within the city limits, stands St. Agnes School, an Episcopal school for girls. It faces eastward, and from the front the eye travels across wide lawns, across the valley of the Hudson, to the distant Berkshires; while to the west the Heldergergs, and on clear days, the Catskills, are visible against the sky. So that the already spacious grounds —the campus covers some forty-five acres—seem to blend with the far distances.

The school, founded by Bishop Doane in 1870, and formerly situated under the shadow of the Cathedral of All Saints on Elk Street, moved to its present site thirteen years ago. The building is of stone, and in a niche near the front entrance stands the figure of St. Agnes, brought with loving care from the old building down town, to watch over her "lambs" as the years go by. The tie with the cathedral is still a strong one. Bishop G. Ashton Oldham is president of the board of governors, and takes a keen interest in the welfare of the school. The resident students attend cathedral services on Sunday, and twice a year St. Agnes girls furnish the music for cathedral services.

The school is run on both the boarding and the country day school plan. It is a member of the Middle States Association, and its standing is such that a student holding its certificate may enter any college admitting students by certificate. Most St. Agnes girls enter the leading colleges, and not a few of them have won—and held — scholarships in Wellesley, Vassar, Barnard, Mt. Holyoke, Radcliffe, Briarcliff and other colleges.

While the academic department is a strong one, the music department also is of high standing. Every student, from kindergarten up, has training in choral work, and in the lower grades particular attention is given to tone and pitch. Opportunities are furnished through the year for the girls to sing or play before an audience, accustoming them to do so without embarrassment.

The school building is new, with spacious, well lighted class rooms and comfortable dormitories, an especially well equipped laboratory gives impetus to the study of science. The dining room and library are both of noble proportions. Both have open fireplaces and around these the boarders love to gather for informal parties. The library, with its pretty chintz curtains and covers, and its book-lined walls is homelike and invits its inmates to study. Here the girls make books their friends.

Above the dining room fireplace hangs a portrait of Bishop Doane, the founder of the school. His wise face keeps kindly watch and helps to remind succeeding generations of St. Agnes girls that they must strive to serve their age and generation.

Extra-curricular activities have a definite place in the school life, and are managed by the student government, a very live organization. One of the most popular activities is the publishing of Bleatings, the school magazine, which has frequently won honors for itself in the scholastic press competitions. The students find outlets for their abilities in writing for this publication, and illustrating it, as well as training in editorial work, makeup and proofreading. Another outlet is provided by the dramatic clubs, which from time to time require scenery or costumes designed and made.

Sports are numerous and popular. As soon as the bell rings announcing the end of classes and afternoon study hall, the playing fields are filled with busy figures, practicing hockey, tennis or handball, playing basketball, skating, skiing, or simply playing games, according to the season and the ages of the groups.

Group spirit and willingness to cooperate are as much the object of these activities as the physical development which appears to be their prime objective. Indeed, character-building is stressed throughout the curriculum, and training in taking responsibility runs through it like an invisible thread. Scholarship and character have always been the watchwords of St. Agnes School.

Giving Falls Off

Cleveland (RNS):—Only 1.1 per cent of church family income goes into the collection basket on Sundays. This figure was offered here at sessions of the United Stewardship Council, representing 25 different denominations. Statistics presented at the conference showed national income at its highest point in history but contributions to church activities were reported below the level of 1928 or 1929.

Data presented revealed church giving had increased from $299,416,781 to $441,868,327 in the past 10 years. At the same time it was

CRUSADE FOR FREEDOM

Spiritual Mobilization is a crusade for freedom. It is a constructive movement which believes that freedom cannot be taken for granted but can be regained, post-war, through concerted effort.

In this crusade men and women in all walks of life are joined. Great associations of educators, lawyers, physicians, business men, farmers, and clergymen are all allies. Responsible labor leaders are increasingly concerned because of the collectivist, stateist trend which began before the war.

That Spiritual Mobilization operates through the clergy of all denominations is not a happenstance. It believes it a responsibility of all ministers to protect basic freedoms and spiritual ideals which collectivism would destroy.

The preachers of America must reaffirm the sovereignty of God and the inviolable rights of man by reason of the sole fact that he is a child of God. The tides of materialism must be checked before they sweep us into serfdom under the state. The cause and influence of the clergy are in peril here as they were in other nations whose collectivism was further advanced and reached the totalitarian level. A dominant state does not champion the ideals of Jesus.

Laymen are interested in this crusade and helping to interest their pastors in it. There is a fine and growing comaradia in our ranks—men and women crusading for what they consider Christian and American. Interested?

shown the national income had gone up from 48 billions to 148 billions.

It was shown that 45 per cent of present church membership, represented on the Stewardship Council, contributed "anything of record" for local church support and only 30 per cent to benevolences.

Dr. Harry S. Myers of Hillsdale, Mich., secretary of the Council, said terms used in the promotion of stewardship have been too ecclesiastical and that some plan should be developed to express the "fellowship of giving."

Goodwill Commission

Hartford, Conn. (RNS):—A Hartford fellowship commission, patterned on the Philadelphia fellowship commission, is in process of organization here. A group of Hartford agencies whose major concern is with meeting racial and religious tensions have been invited to become charter members of the organization.

The proposed commission will seek to coordinate and focus "organized community facilities so as to exert broad community pressure and education." According to its stated purpose, "racial and religious tensions must be met by people from all levels of society working together to unite the entire community in promoting racial and religious understanding and in adjusting intergroup tensions."

New Caledonia: — Sgt. Almer Broadhead, a communicant of St. Luke's Church, Jamestown, has written from Camp Barne, New Caledonia that he had a share in building a chapel there and that Episcopal services will be held in it. "I never thought that I would be doing a finished work of carpentry," he wrote. "I have not had a chance to get to service since Christmas Eve and now at last it will be possible."

Harrisburg, Pa. The bill, which previously passed the House of Representatives, results from a controversy between the Harrisburg board of school directors and the Harrisburg ministerial association over whether or not such instruction on released time was legal.

Under its terms pupils would be released on school time for such instruction in the churches of their religious faith for not more than one hour a week upon the written request of a parent or guardian. The school board would recognize the religious instruction courses only if they were formed at the request of a church or churches or clerical group.

No Bishops Allowed

Atlanta, Ga. (RNS): — The Rev. Leo M. Willard of Florence, S. C., was elected president of the newly-organized Southern Methodist Church's two annual conferences — the South Carolina and Mid-South — after it was decided at the first general conference here to abolish the offices of bishop, district superintendents, and presiding elders.

Several speakers charged it was the bishops of the former Methodist Episcopal Church, South, rather than the rank and file membership, who led Southern Methodism into organic union with other branches of Methodism at Kansas City in 1939. Those who refused to enter the merger form the nucleus of the new denomination.

A departure in the method of assigning pastors was also voted by the clergy and lay delegates from ten southern states. Instead of appointment by a bishop or other executive, pastoral assignments will be determined by a committee which each conference will select for itself.

LeRoy, N. Y.:—Little known but reportedly a benefactor of nearly everyone who asked a loan during his lifetime, Charles L. Walker of Pavilion remembered the eight churches of LeRoy in his will which has been filed for probate. He bequeathed $1,000 to each, including St. Mark's, of which the Rev. James Cosbey, Jr., is rector.

Mr. Walker lived alone on his farm near the village. Hospitals, cemeteries, relatives and friends are all mentioned in the will, and the largest bequest was $5,000 to the Salvation Army.

"The Silk of the Trade"

It meets all tests for strength, durability and beauty, and excels as a monumental stone.

It is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known.

It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems.

Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces.

There are many granites which have a surface resemblance to Winnsboro Blue Granite, but they do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

the diocese of Newark to prepare amendments which will permit women to serve on vestries and also be delegates to the diocesan convention. A committee was also appointed to prepare a manual of instruction on family life and marriage.

Call Off Synod

Fargo, N. D.:—Bishop Atwill of North Dakota has announced that the synod of the 6th province, scheduled for this year, has been called off. A conference of the bishops of the province will be held however in the fall.

Praise for Successor

Meadville, Pa.:—Bishop John C. Ward, who retired as bishop of Erie in 1943, returned to congratulate the diocese on the splendid leadership of his successor, Bishop Pinkney Wroth. The address was one of the highlights of the diocesan convention meeting here May 15-16. Another feature of the convention was an address by Major Herbert Pressey, army chaplain, who told the convention that the men in the service did not want to return to find their churches "dusty, musty places."

Made Parishes

Philadelphia:—The Chapel of St. Simon the Cyrenian and the Church of St. Michael and All Angels were admitted as parishes at the convention of the diocese of Pennsylvania. The parishes have father and son as rectors, the Rev. John R. Logan Sr. and the Rev. Thomas S. Logan. The former, during the 36 years of his pastorate, has baptized approximately 2500 persons and has presented 1900 for confirmation. At St. Michael's, where the younger Mr. Logan has served for but five years, 406 have been baptized and 262 presented for confirmation.

There are now six colored parishes in the diocese, more than any other diocese in the country: St. Thomas', the Cruxifixion, St. Barnabas', St. Augustine's, St. Simon's and St. Michael's.

Mixed Marriages

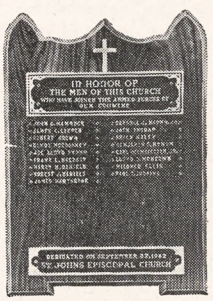
Springfield, Mass. (RNS):—Mixed marriages were strongly hit in resolutions passed at the convention of the diocese of Western Massachusetts. The resolution: "We recommend that the clergy take pains to instruct both young people of high school age and couples contemplating a mixed marriage exactly what that step involves, particularly where any special pledges are likely to be demanded of the couple involved.

"We recommend that wherever possible mixed marriages be discouraged, especially where the ceremony is to be performed outside the Episcopal Church.

"We wish to state our conviction that our church does not recommend the right of members to sign away their responsibility for the Christian nurture of children which may be born to them as result of a mixed marriage."

War Criminals

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Karl Barth, noted theologian, was among those to sign a pronouncement urging "stern justice" for those responsible for crimes committed in concentration camps. The statement however warns against indiscriminate punishment of the German people. It asserts that the people must share in the guilt but adds "We warn all serious people against the illusion of justifying oneself by blind hatred, condemnation and retaliation."



South India Scheme

London (wireless to RNS):—Postponement of the proposed United Church of South India was urged in a resolution adopted by the lower house of the convocation of Canterbury. The resolution requested the Archbishop of Canterbury to use his influence to secure deferment of the proposed scheme "until such time as it can be considered in an atmosphere free from the preoccupations resulting from the war." The motion was carried by a vote of 27 to 17 after the addition of a clause that the South India plan should not be inaugurated "at least until after the next Lambeth Conference."

Orthodox Seminaries

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—Eight new Orthodox seminaries will shortly be opened in the Soviet Union and occupied areas, it was announced by

Western New York

Buffalo:—The Rev. C. L. THE REV. ELDRED C. SIMKINS
Rector of St. Agnes', Sebring, Fla.

After reading the review of Vance Hayes on Mr. Montgomery's book, Why Go to Church I ordered the book. I felt no publisher would publish any book as utterly worthless as Mr. Hayes considers this one. He says the book is boring like the boredom of going to church. He also feels it is too sweet to be wholesome as it, "swelters with piety." Perhaps Mr. Hayes feels the same about the Prayer Book or maybe the Sermon on the Mount. I suppose the book would hold no one's attention as, A Tree Grows in Brooklyn but it expands and explains much that the Prayer Book teaches. His thesis is, "We go to church to worship God." What reasons would Mr. Hayes give, or could he give for staying away?

And, an entirely different subject, Could it be possible that Bishop Harris was consecrated in Norfolk instead of Washington so that it would be possible for more of his former parishioners to attend? I wouldn't know.

ROBERT MCC. MARSH
Layman of New York City

Was it Dr. Samuel Johnson, or was it some other wit, who originated the famous definition of dirt as "matter out of place"? At all events in this sense, if not in the more common one, I think THE WITNESS can be justly criticised for publishing too much "dirt." Take for example, the article by Congressman Jerry Voorhis of California in the issue of April 26th. It is all very well to advocate American participation in the financial as well as other aspects of world organization, and even to endorse in principle such a specific proposal as the Bretton Woods Plan (though perhaps the editors have gone too far in opposing all modifications). This is legitimate application of Christian theology to the economic side of international fellowship. But why should THE WITNESS give space to the Congressman's private ideas on the technical uses and place of gold and other forms of money?

There is certainly no general acceptance of Mr. Voorhis' dictum that gold and the gold standard today "represent a relic of barbarism," and there may be still more dissent from his assertion that the United States must go still deeper in debt in order to have a high national income. These are debatable questions, on which qualified experts differ, as is evident from the dispute that is being carried on between Professor Fisher of Yale, Professor Kammerer of Princeton, and others in correspondence in the New York Times. If THE WITNESS subscribers are interested in the matter, is it fair to give them only one side of the argument: and if they are not interested, is it fair to make this use of space which might be devoted to subjects more closely related to Christian teaching and living?

It seems to me that this is only one instance of a tendency of THE WITNESS Board, in their laudable effort "to preach the social gospel," to get involved in matters that from the point of view of the main purpose are only technical details. A church paper is not expected to be and cannot be expert on such matters and therefore should not be partisan, which it is when giving a predominant amount of space or emphasis to one side, even though disclaiming responsibility for the views expressed. This narrow partisanship is still worse when it appears, as it sometimes does, in the editorial columns.

It is my belief that this policy and effort weaken the influence of THE WITNESS and alienate many potential friends. This is more than a pity when the fundamental purposes and principles of the paper are so high and sound.

P.S.: Perhaps I am all wrong in drawing a line between theology and the gold standard, as I see that the commencement address at the General Theological Seminary was delivered by a professor of chemistry.

I just want you to know that, as one of those back home who is considerably puzzled as to what is really happening at the San Francisco Conference, that Spofford's job of reporting is magnificent. Congratulations and our heartfelt thanks.

THE REV. J. G. MACGOVERN
Retired clergyman of St. Vallejo, Calif.

Some time ago I requested you to discontinue THE WITNESS giving as my reason that I could not afford it now that I am retired on a small pension. I felt that I could not afford a Church weekly, even one so fine as THE WITNESS. However I feel now that your paper seems to express my own attitudes, religiously, economically and ecclesiastically so well that I want to continue it. It is a splendid weekly.

Christian Women Are Leaders At San Francisco

Miss Wu Yi-Fang and Virginia Gildersleeve Give Interviews to the Conference Press

By W. B. Spofford

San Francisco: — There are two women attending the United Nations Conference as delegates that you ought to know more about. First of all they are both prominent in Church affairs; second, both are playing leading parts in the Conference. One is Virginia Gildersleeve, dean of Barnard College, an Episcopalian. The other is Wu Yi-Fang, a member of the Chinese delegation and the president of Gingling College, a missionary institution. Miss Wu is a Baptist.

Miss Wu is gentle, scholarly and feminine who told a press conference that she is "a very cautious type of person" and for that reason thinks it would be a good idea "to get rid of the system" deifying Emperor Hirohito once Japan is defeated. She spoke with a soft, cultured voice in English with hardly a trace of accent, her eyes sparkling with wit behind her steel-rimmed spectacles.

"The Emperor and the Shinto religion have been used by the Japanese military for their own purposes," she exclaimed, "and as long as the Emperor remains the Emperor there will be the possibility that ambitious people will use the legend that he is half divine for their purposes." When a questioner asked if Hirohito should be exiled or punished as a war criminal she merely smiled without making any reply. One rather gathered that she felt either would be better than he deserves.

Chinese women are doing a good work as volunteers, she stated. They collect funds, serve as nurses aids in military hospitals and in some provinces they receive training with the army. She expressed her gratitude to the other United Nations, and particularly to the United States, for the aid in the war against Japan. "The horizon of peace seems not so far away to the Chinese people now as it has been in the long years when we fought Japan alone. We need power plants and flood control and water conservation so that we will be able to reproduce enough food for our people."

As an educator Miss Wu talked at some length on the inclusion within the framework of the World Organization of a division of social, economic and humanitarian relations. "We are working for fundamental principles and I believe that a basic scheme will be achieved covering these aspects of human welfare."

Prior to the opening of the Conference Dean Gildersleeve, the only woman on the American delegation, said: "I can be most useful to my sex by being a good delegate, competent and not too troublesome." Because of her modesty and desire "not to be troublesome" she has been rather inconspicuous, particularly at press conferences. There are reporters here even ready to brush her off as an innocent who does not know her way about such an affair as this. But as the Conference wears on it gradually comes out that she serves most effectively on committees, and that she, along with Commander Stassen, are the progressive torchbearers on the American delegation.

She seems unconcerned about these estimates that appear in the papers about her. "I hope that I have been a fairly good delegate," she said in a recent interview. "But after all there are hundreds of us here and no single one of us can do very much. We all have to do it together." She makes it clear that she did not come here as a crusader for any particular ideas or causes but rather as a human being and a Christian, deeply concerned with the effort to build a workable system of world peace.

She sits on two committees, one of which concerns the principles, purposes and preamble of the world organization charter, the other dealing with economic and social cooperation. As she cannot speak at these committee meetings as an individual, but only as the representative of the entire United States delegation, it is in the daily meetings of the delegation that she most freely expresses her opinions on the concrete ways of building a world structure.

As she is less free in expressing these opinions publicly, her position on such snarled questions as regional arrangements, trusteeships and military arrangements remain something of a mystery.

Miss Gildersleeve's activities in behalf of world educational cooperation are well known, and it is generally conceded that it is due to her efforts that the economic and social council of the new organization will be specifically committed to the promotion of educational as well as cultural co-operation.

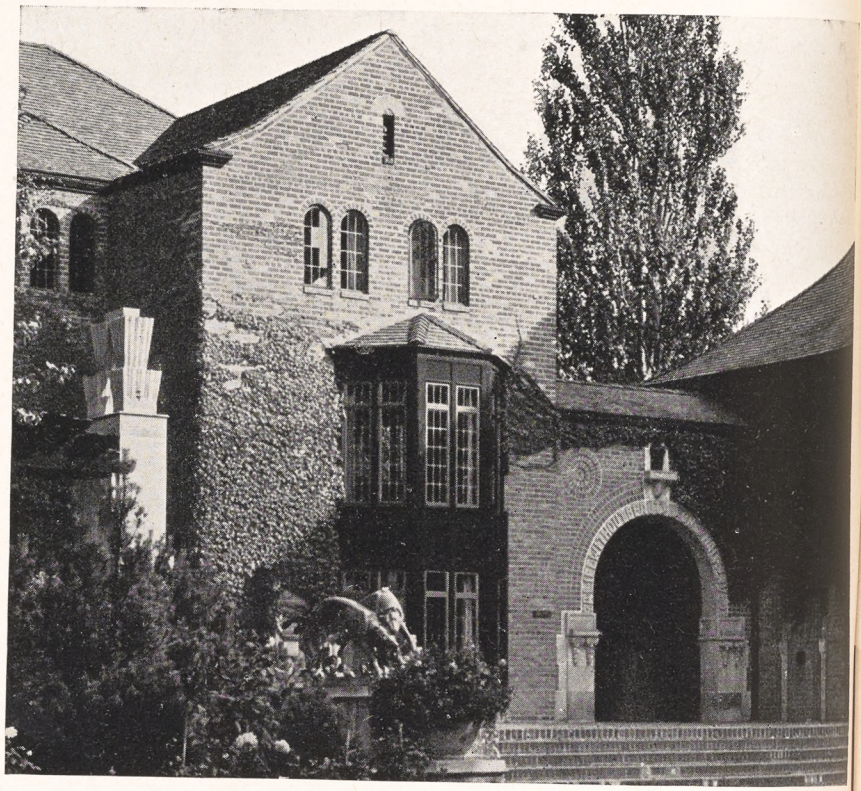
She encountered, she admitted, some opposition to the use of the word "educational." It was largely from members of her own delegation who felt that the Senate, which must ratify the charter, might think that this wording would give the world organization authority to edit American textbooks.

Miss Gildersleeve argued the point effectively and she was backed up by a large group of consultants representing labor, business, agricultural and women's organizations. In the end she obtained the approval of the United States delegation, the reconsideration of her proposal in the committee meeting and its eventual passage.

At the conference Miss Gildersleeve has crusaded for a world educational organization which would be semi-independent of the United Nations organization, a commission on human rights and a strong and vivid preamble to the charter.

"I do feel," she explained, "that a preamble should have some literary quality—that it should warm the heart as well as feed the mind. I would prefer, for instance, that it should say: 'We the peoples of the United Nations,' rather than 'we the high contracting parties'."



Despite the headaches and diplomatic tangles, despite the lengthy arguments over commas and semicolons, despite delay and confusion, Miss Gildersleeve takes an optimistic attitude toward the work that has been done in San Francisco.

"I have no sense of frustration," she concluded. "The one thing I really wanted was to see some kind of world organization constructed. And I really think we're doing it."

Pasadena, Calif.: — Bill Casady, the youngest of the four sons of Philip M. Casady, a member of St. Mark's, here, entered the air corps before Pearl Harbor. He received his commission five days after Pearl Harbor, was married two days later, and within a few weeks was ordered to active duty in the South Pacific. In the spring of 1943 while flying on a patrol he failed to return. Several months later his plane and his body were found in a shallaw lagoon on a small Pacific Island. An airfield was named in his honor. Not long after members of the squadron were pleased when the chaplain who was constructing a small chapel on this same island, suggested that it also be named in honor of Lt. Wilbur L. Casady. CHURCHES DESTROYED IN GREECE

New York:—Over 1,000 church buildings have been destroyed in Greece according to Prof. H. S. Alivisatos of the University of Athens who conferred last week with the Presiding Bishop concerning the needs of the Greek Orthodox Church. Considered the outstanding layman of Greece, Professor Alivisatos represented the interests of the archbishop and regent of his country. An exchange of students between the two countries was suggested at the conference and also the exchange of fraternal delegates between the Greek and American Churches.

Bishop Sherrill Says Unity Of Allies Is Essential

Bishop Oxnam Also Reports On His Visits With Martin Niemoeller Freed from Prison

By W. B. Spofford

Boston:—"Force will solve nothing." So declared Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts at a press conference which he called upon his return from visiting chaplains at the front. "Please note that I am not talking sentimentally about a soft peace. I am not minimizing the atrocity camps nor the misdeeds of the Germans. Those responsible must be punished and Germany must be prevented from waging war again. But in the long run the German people themselves must work out the destiny of their country. We must search out those elements in Germany desirous of building up that nation on Christian and democratic lines and cooperate with them. It is impossible to conceive of a society of 90 million people in the heart of Europe entirely isolated."

He stated that one of the impressions one brings back from Europe is the magnitude of the job ahead. He then stated that "for its execution unity among the Allies is absolutely essential. A unity such as did not exist after the first world war is required."

Bishop Sherrill outlined three steps which be believes should be taken. Military security he declared, must come first. But when that is secured he expressed the hope that the rule against fraternizing with the Germans will be lifted. "You cannot educate people if you are not going to have anything to do with them; moreover the Germans are a law-abiding folk and when they see a rule not being obeyed the effect is bad."

The second step, the bishop stated, is strict punishment for criminals. The third is the realization that rehabilitation must come from within the German people themselves and in that, said Bishop Sherrill, the German Church which resisted the Nazis should be of great help.

He paid a great tribute to chaplains and recalled that they have been in third place in the casualty lists. He also pointed out that more are now needed and also emphasized the great need for families, friends and parishes to keep in close touch with the men in the service. He also thinks that the psychiatric approach to the returned soldier is being overdone; the men think that everyone at home is taking a course in psychiatry in order to know how to meet them and they are worried.

Meanwhile Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches, who visited Europe at the same time as Bishop Sherrill, told the press in New York of visits he had with Pastor Martin Niemoeller who was in German concentration camps from 1937 until released by the American army. Niemoeller believes that German youth between 16 and 22 might be changed in their ideology since their critical faculties are still alert and receptive. The German clergyman stressed that the basis for such re-education must be the "absolute truth," and must involve strict control. He felt that youth of this age, when confronted with facts which they could check, could be persuaded to a fresh point of view. In his discussion, Niemoeller frequently used the phrase "the cleansing power of truth," Bishop Oxnam said.

Asked about Nazi atrocities, Niemoeller told the bishop that what had been published not only was true, but that the stories could be surpassed. In trying to explain how his countrymen could have become so debased he said that a brutality that may at first have hurt the conscience of the perpetrator, when repeated gradually broke down the conscience, as happens when any sin is at first hesitantly practiced, until all inner protest is completely stifled.

On June 5th Niemoeller was allowed to hold a meeting with American newspaper men and told them that he believed the German people to be incapable of democracy in the American sense of the word. Germans must have an authoritarian regime in which ordinary people are not bothered with politics, he said.

He also admitted to the reporters that he had volunteered for service in the German navy, in which he served in world war one, and saw nothing inconsistent in offering to fight in defense of the regime that imprisoned him and denied him religious freedom. He also made it clear that he had not opposed Nazism for political reasons but purely on doctrinal grounds.

He stated that he planned to visit the United States and England to ask Christians to send food through their churches since he does not believe that the British and American governments will send a sufficient amount. John Chabot Smith, New York Tribune correspondent who was one of those to interview Niemoeller, reported that in his remarks the pastor emphasized the word "Christians."

All of which reminds us of an afternoon spent with Niemoeller in

1937, the very week that he was arrested. He revealed quite clearly then that he accepted Hitler politically and opposed him only because Hitler interferred with Church affairs. He told us then that he would gladly fight for the Nazis in the event of war. It is my opinion that American churchmen should hesitate a long while before turning Niemoeller loose on audiences. I will not go as far as some others do in thinking that Niemoeller was saved to "front" for German war lords in the event they lost the war. But there is the possibility that he will do this, even if he is himself unaware that he is fulfilling such a mission.

CONSCRIPTION HEARINGS ARE HELD

Washington: — Leaders of religious organizations were present in great numbers for the hearings which started on June 4 on proposals to enact a universal military training law. According to Religious News Service it is generally believed here that a decisive number of Congressmen have yet to make up their minds on peace time conscription so that these hearings, held before a "policy" committee (house committee on post-war military policy) will be helpful in clearing the air. Among the churchmen appearing are Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches, and Bishop Herman Page of Northern Michigan who was a chaplain before his consecration.

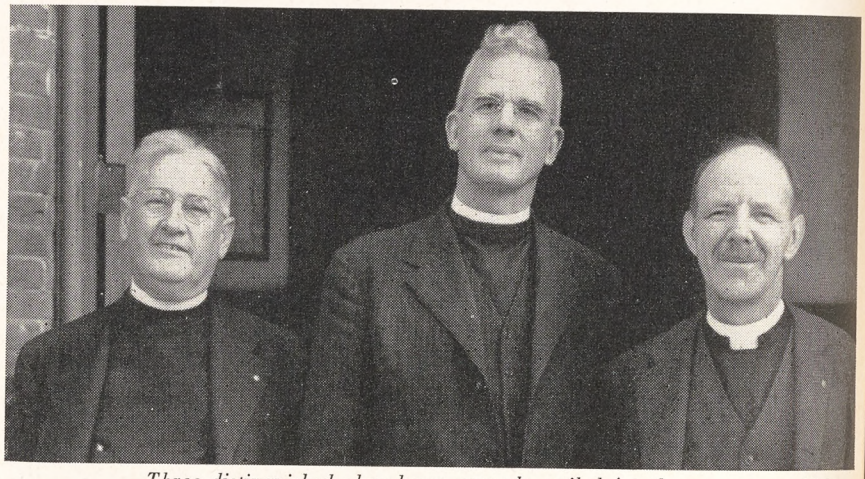
WYOMING CHURCH CONSECRATED

Casper, Wyo.:—Clergy and others from all parts of the state were present at the consecration of St. Mark's Church here on Whitsunday. The church plant, one of the finest in this part of the country, is located on a site facing the city park just outside the business section. A tower and parish house are the next objectives of the building program. The rector is the Rev. M. B. Hitchcock. The consecration service was conducted by Bishop Ziegler who also preached.

URGES MEN FOR MINISTRY

Burlington, Vt.: —Bishop Vedder Van Dyck of Vermont made a strong appeal for men for the ministry at the convention of the diocese, meeting here at St. Paul's. Emphasizing the need for the standards of Christianity to prevent moral deterioration, the bishop noted that men familiar with rural Vermont seldom went into the ministry. Bishop Oldham of Albany addressed both the convention and the Auxiliary meeting on his recent visit to England.

DIFFICULT DAYS FOR MISSIONS



New York (RNS): — Missions in India "may have difficult days ahead as nationalism comes to the front" was the opinion voiced by the Rev. John W. Decker, who has just returned from a 43,000 mile trip in that part of the world. He feels however that the missionary program "may have a beneficial reconciliatory effect between the Hindu and Moslem." In China he found that the Communists have appeal because of "their concern for the common man" and that "the only hope for the Nationalist government (Kuomintang) is in democratic reform with a growing concern for the common man." He reported that he was in China when the staff of the National Christian Council made plans for the future and that they were "bold enough to hope" that the war in the Pacific will be over in 1946. In Australia and New Zealand he found a new appreciation of Christian missions evident among governmental and labor leaders.

A NEW CHAPEL IN TULSA

Tulsa, Okla.:—A new chapel and parish house of this city's east side is to be built soon according to the Rev. E. H. Eckel, rector of Trinity Church. Known as St. Luke's, the work will be carried on as a chapel of Trinity. The buildings are the gift of a member of Trinity and will cost approximately $45,000.

SOCIAL REFORM ROLE IS URGED

London (wireless to RNS):—Clergymen must take an active part in social reform movements if they are not to remain "politically insipid" and negligible in the struggles of the future, Bishop E. W. Barnes of Birmingham told his diocesan conference. "Is it pretended that clergymen," he asked, "should not take part in the general election when on one side there may be a struggling idealist and on the other a big business leader, who ten years ago sold arms to the Nazis and will do the same thing ten years hence?"

Three distinguished churchmen recently smiled for the cameraman: Bishop Jackson of Louisiana, the Rev. Philip P. Werlein, rector of St. James', Baton Rouge, La. and Dean Alexander Zabriskie of the Virginia Seminary

ST. AUGUSTINE'S HOLDS COMMMENCEMENT

Raleigh, N. C.:—Degrees and diplomas were awarded to 28 graduates at the commencement of St. Augustine's College, held here May 30th. President Goold in his address noted that an equal number of young men who started with the graduating class were now scattered all over the world, serving with the armed forces. Dr. Hornell Hart, professor at Duke University, gave the commencement address.

CAMPAIGN FOR NEW PARISH HOUSE

Cambridge, Mass.: —Christ Church here is seeking $150,000 for a new parish house. The proposed building, to correspond architecturally with the old church built in 1761, will be erected on the site of the present parish house. The Rev. Gardiner M. Day is the rector.

SOCIAL SECURITY FOR CHURCHMEN

Washington (RNS): — Congressman Dingell of Michigan, co-author with Senator Wagner of New York and Senator Murray of Montana, of the newly-submitted social security amendments, said here that the "general sentiment of Churchmen is in favor of getting coverage for religious workers." The General Convention of 1943 directed the National Council of the Episcopal Church to work for the inclusion of lay employees under the act.

Magna Carta Day, June 15th

WE DATE the definite beginnings of political and religious freedom from 1215 when Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, and the nobles of England compelled the dictator, King John, in spite of foreign and ecclesiastical influences, to sign the Great Charter. Thus started the process of development of the freedoms which we cherish: the freedom of speech and of the press; the freedom of religion; the freedom from fear; the freedom from want.

Human processes of growth and progress are slow. It took until 1776, more than 550 years, to reach the next milestone, when George Washington and his associates effectively applied the principles of the Magna Carta in the oppressed colonies. This movement focussed in the Declaration of Independence on July 4th, 1776.

We are now, in the year 1945, absorbed in a titantic struggle to preserve all that was accomplished in 1215, 1776 and the years since. All the freedoms summed up by the word Liberty are at stake and we are working for dear life to make sure that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

To those who belong to the Anglican communion Magna Carta has special interest. Its first clause secures the rights of the Church and confirms the charter for a free election of bishops and frees the Church from all outside control. The Latin words are significant: "Ecclesia Anglicana Liberta sit." Note, "Ecclesia Anglicana" not Ecclesia Romana. This should be interesting to over-imaginative persons who still persist in asserting that the Church of England was founded by Henry VIII. He did not "found" it, for he found it. By the Great Charter it is perfectly evident that the Church of England, Ecclesia Anglicana, was strait and going affair in the time of King John and showed its influence in the part it took in extracting the Charter of Freedom from him in 1215. How a Church, thus strong and vigorous in that year, could have been founded by a person who was not born until more than 275 years later is beyond comprehension.

"QUOTES"

I BELIEVE deeply that our attitude toward Russia must be one of critical partnership in a huge world venture in which the common stakes must overshadow the variant social systems. I cannot regard the Russian Revolution as historically a failure or a catastrophe. I would oppose to the end the Russian one-party system or a political police if there were any question of applying them here. But I cannot condemn out of hand for the Russians an economic and social system that seems so completely to fill their needs and which solves many of the ills of modern life. And whatever I may think of it, whether good or ill, I do not regard Russia as a threat to world peace.

—Max Lerner.

How Free Is the Press?

RECENTLY we had an experience that troubled us very much. We attended a great meeting in Madison Square Garden, sponsored by the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship. It was a tribute to the G.I.'s of the armies of the United Nations. There were over 19,000 people present, tier upon tier of them right up to the ceiling. A meeting that draws such a throng would seem to have some news value. The War Department considered the meeting so important that it provided the Combat Infantry Band, led in part of the program by Serge Kaissevitzky. Paul Robeson sang as only he can. The War Department fled from Germany Lieutenant Robertson, the American who made first contact with the Russians at the Elbe. He and a lot of other G.I. men were brought to New York just for this meeting. A three-star American general spoke, as did also a British general and a Russian general. One of the leading addresses was by a United States Senator.

Having finished our own little part in the program, during an intermission while photographers were busy snapping pictures of the celebrities, we saundered over to a press table where a photographer leaned unconcernedly upon his equipment "You don't seem to be interested in these proceedings we said. "What's the use, father, you know as well as I do that this stuff won't be printed," he replied. "Why?" we asked. A quizzical look and then, "Because the Russians are here. I am surprised to find you here, father" to which we addressed another "why?" "Because I thought you priests were not allowed to take part in these things." So I informed him that I was an Anglican priest. There was a startled "Oh" and a hasty withdrawal.

If that was the end of the experience it would have only individual importance. But the newspapers the following day did not carry a single picture of the meeting and gave it scant attention in their news columns. Why should a huge mass meeting, held for the purpose of establishing better understanding between the United States and Soviet Russia, be so treated by the press? Why become excited over the controlled press of Russia or the Argentine? Which is worse, an official censorship which moulds news according to its purpose or an official censorship which chokes news before it is printed? And who are the interested parties who are strong enough to strangle the news? How free is the press of America?

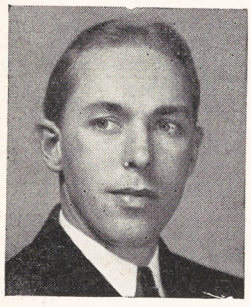
The Price of Reading



EVERY civilized country has a "book post," i.e. a special postal rate for books. The reason for this is that civilized men recognize the all-importance of ideas. If men are to be free, to be civilized, to live upon the highest cultural level, books must be as free to go and come as it is possible to let them. Democracy rests upon intelligence and faith: it is the other systems that rest upon coercion, ignorance, fear. Our present book post was established in 1938 by President Roosevelt at 1½ cents a pound — the regular rate for second-class matter, i.e. newspapers and magazines. In 1942 Congress doubled this rate, for books. In 1944 a revenue act still further increased it. Now it is proposed in Congress that the book post shall be abolished, and books be treated henceforth as "merchandise." The excessive costs which will result in the South, West, and Far West, and in fact throughout the nation, will undoubtedly discourage the present increase in book-reading that has resulted from President Roosevelt's order. Curiously, it is a Southern Representative, McKenzie of Louisiana, who is the proponent of this reactionary bill. We wonder what his motives are? It is said the government is losing money on this book post. So it is — not "losing" but investing in popular education, to the extent of $2,500,000 a year. This is however a mere bagatelle compared with the amount the government is "losing" in the handling of newspapers and magazines: that amount is $99,000,000 a year. At the same time, the Post Office shows a profit — guess how much? Approximately $121,000,000 for the first nine months of the present fiscal year! There doesn't seem any reason then why the book post should be abolished, and books go back into the classification of boots and umbrellas, pig-feed and fertilizer. Here is really a call to bring pressure on Congress, i.e. on your own representatives in Congress, if you believe, as we do, that this bill (H.R. 3235) is benighted, reactionary, uncalled-for, and inexcusable.

A Philosophy of Education

by W. Brooke Stabler

Headmaster of Cranbrook School

MANY and varied are the definitions of secondary education. One facetious writer describes it as "casting artificial pearls before real swine," while another says that it consists of studying "what you please, when you please, as you please, where you please, if you please." A third says that true education is "that which is left after you've forgotten all that you've learned," a definition which merits pondering. Still another points out that our word education comes from the Latin verb educare, which means to nourish, not, as educators frequently insist, from educere, which means to draw out — though perhaps we might well claim both Latin derivatives. It seems to me, however, that our educational purposes are best set forth by William Witt Hyde, late president of Bowdoin College, whose memorable words are applicable on the secondary school as well as on the college level: "to be at home in all lands and ages; to count nature a familiar acquaintance, and art an intimate friend; to gain a standard for the appreciation of other men's work and the criticism of your own; to carry the keys of the world's library in your pocket, and feel its resources behind you in whatever task you undertake; to make hosts of friends among the men of your own age who are to be leaders in all walks of life; to lose yourself in generous enthusiasms and cooperate with others for common ends; to learn manners from students who are gentlemen and form character under professors who are Christians."

If these be our goals, how best may secondary schools attain them? I would make but four suggestions, recognizing that many important emphases and activities cannot be touched upon here.

First, our faculties should consist of men who can inspire as well as instruct. Of course, they must have academic training of the finest calibre, but they must not be mere technicians. Of little use are Alexander Pope's "Booklet blockheads, ignorantly read, with loads of learned timber in their heads." Rather must they be men who are interested in boys and who are both aware of and qualified to meet the difficulties encountered in the student-master relationship. These have been admirably described by Ian Hay: "All their schemes of education are founded on the same amazing fallacy—namely that the schoolboy is a person who is anxious to be educated. Let us clear our minds on this point once and for all. In nine cases out of ten a schoolmaster's task is not to bring light to an eager and groping disciple, but to drag a reluctant and refractory young animal up the slopes of Parnassus by the scruff of his neck. The schoolboy's point of view is perfectly reasonable and intelligible. 'I am lazy and scatterbrained,' he says in effect. 'I have not as yet developed the power of concentration, and I have no love of knowledge for its own sake. Still, I have no rooted objection to education, as such—but I am much too busy, as a young growing animal, to have any energy left for intellectual pursuits. It is the business of my teacher to teach me. To put the matter coarsely, he is paid for it. I shall not offer him effusive assistance in his labors, but if he succeeds in keeping me up to the collar against my will, I shall respect him for it. If he doesn't, I shall take full advantage of the circumstance'."

Second, we must avoid extremes in educational philosophy. We must take the best from the conservative and the progressive schools of thought, not straddling the educational fence, but gleaning and preserving the best from the old, even while adopting and applying the best from the new. This implies a wide variety of courses designed to meet the capacities, the interests, and the needs of the individual student concerned. It means that our primary stress should be cultural rather than vocational, our task being to teach boys to live rather than to make a living. Sound college preparatory work is essential, but let us not become college preparatory "mills," measuring our success solely by the percentage who pass the college entrance examinations. The colleges are allowing ever-increasing liberality in the courses for which credit is granted, and there must be a real place in our curriculum for art, music, the crafts, and other kindred subjects, courses of infinite value to the well rounded individual.

THIRD, a work program should be a vital part of our educational philosophy and not simply a war-time, economic necessity. I have no patience with the silver platter, silver spoon type of education; and to bring boys to fine schools, only to wait on them hand and foot, would be to defeat our major purposes. The boy who has not learned to work with his hands and to make his contribution to the welfare of the community of which he is a part, will be seriously handicapped in the years which lie ahead.

Finally, religion must be central. No one can frame an intelligent definition of education without coming up against religion. In America today we seem to have an unjustified faith in panaceas and to pay undue heed to the medicine man. In other words, we seem to feel that education will cure all our individual and social ills. I would in no way belittle the value of education, but I would most emphatically insist that education alone is impotent. As Andrew Lang once wrote, "Man has been going to Oxford for over six hundred years, and is not yet perfect." Education may be a light to illumine all mankind, but it will be "the light that failed" unless linked with the forces and inspirations of religion. Education alone cannot inculcate true philosophies. Education alone cannot coordinate the knowledge it gives. Education alone cannot provide adequate goals for living. Education alone cannot rid a generation of the haunting feeling of insecurity, unrest, and fear. Religion has been, is, and always will be the mainspring of growth in character; and if the building of men be our purpose, religion cannot be lightly dismissed or superficially treated.

Some people, I realize, are fearful of a religious emphasis in school. Apparently they think that religion is synonymous with narrow sectarianism, that its tenets are out-moded and conflict with other spheres of knowledge, that it is nothing more than a pious practice or a mild, insipid orthodoxy. None of this is what I mean by religion in school. True religion is virile, red-blooded, adventuresome. True religion is dynamic, positive, broad-gauged. True religion is of commanding interest to every healthy-minded youngster who wants to live.

Recently, an editor of Time, after spanking the independent schools rather severely, came to an astounding conclusion. He said, "From the tone of these remarks, you might almost think I went to a Church school. I did. You might almost think I believe in Church schools. I do. A Church school usually means, to the boy, at the time, chapel —too much of it—and a one-hour class called sacred studies. Later on he sometimes finds that it meant more than that. If he ever learns that poetry is not a dead dialect or a snobbish hobby, but a living language, he may remember that it was in chapel that he heard it, every day. When eventually he comes to realize that a man has to have faith, as surely as he has to have bread, he will find that the faith he is looking for is the same faith men have always sought, and that it is in chapels and churches, in traditional forms and worshipping the timeless tradition of God, that they have always sought it."

It is my conviction that concentration upon these four principles, together with sound training in physical education which we can assume without comment, will enable us to build leaders qualified to lead the world into the paths of peace.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

SAN FRANCISCO is the capital of "the peace loving nations" while the United Nations Conference is in session. But to understand what is going on it is necessary to know that it is also the world capital of the Fascist underground. It would take a lot of space to list the organizations which opened headquarters in the city for the purpose of disrupting the conference, largely of course by pouring out anti-Soviet propaganda. It is important also to know that these agencies have a very receptive press, particularly in the Hearst papers which are in effect house organs for these people who apparently would rather have a war between the U.S.A. and the USSR than a world organization to maintain peace.

Charles Rozmarek, president of the Polish-American Congress, opened a well-staffed office from which press releases are issued on every conceivable subject, from demands that the voting procedure of the World Organization be "by simple majority vote" to fantastic charges of Russian atrocities inflicted upon "the democratic leaders" not only of Poland, which he claims to represent, but also of Latvia, Estonia, Yugoslavia, Lithuania, Bulgaria and about everywhere else. His agents pin neat notices of press conferences on bulletin boards urging reporters to come to the Palace Hotel to hear Mr. Rozmarek reveal more of Russia's sins and there are enough papers in this country slanted that way to make it an effective propaganda technique.

There is also Anthony Olis who represents Lithuania and one of whose press conferences I attended quite by chance. I had met that morning T. X. Dombrowski, the editor of The People's Voice, a Polish-American weekly that supports the present Warsaw government. He was anxious to hear what Mr. Olis had to say. So we went to a small hotel room to find an American businessman expounding on the crimes of the Soviets to about a dozen people, including several representatives of Mr. Rozmarek's Polish Congress. Following the meeting my well-informed friend questioned Mr. Olis rather closely on Polish-Lithuanian relations and asked if common hatred of Russia has resolved their own bitter differences. Mr. Olis insisted that he did not even know the Polish gentlemen present at his conference. However a couple of hours later we ran into Mr. Olis arm in arm with two of these London Poles as they got their air and sunshine on the deck of a ferryboat. And the next day the Hearst papers presented the release that Mr. Olis had given to the handful who were interested enough to find out what he had to say. Of course it is not only the Hearst press that gladly picks up these attacks on Russia. The Chicago Tribune, the New York News, the Scripps-Howard papers and many others follow the same anti-Soviet line under such headings as "Fear of Russian Expansion," "German Red State Seen," "Fear Communist Regime," "Russians Issue Veiled Threat," etc., etc. Anything to create fear of Russia, with Columnists Simms, Sokolsky, Pegler, Crowther, Von Wiegand and others pouring it on day after day, with the latter, posing as a champion of Christian civilization, shouting in big black type that "the Christian era of civilization is tottering under the impact of scientifically organized, militant atheism and totalitarian Communism."

YUGOSLAVIA's General Mihailovich has his emissaries at the Conference in the persons of Louis C. Christopher of the Serb National Federation, and Zivko Topalovich, president of the Yugoslav National Democratic Committee, both of whom got big newspaper space as a result of their press conference at which Tito was denounced as a murderer and, of course, a mere tool of the Soviets. Stephen Shumeyko of Maplewood, New Jersey, got a long story sent out by one of the press services when he claimed to represent "twenty-five million Ukranians" who are determined to get out from under Soviet tyranny. Even Carl O. Alexander, representing himself to be a spokesman for Finland, got space for his press release about the "brave democracy of the north" that had not wanted to fight really on the side of the Nazis but had been forced to do so because the Russians are such horrible people. Present also is Capt. Francisco Lucientes, officer of the blue shirt army of the Falangists of Franco Spain, the equivalent of the Nazis' stormtroopers, who has been staging a behind-the-scenes campaign to win a place for fascist Spain in the World Organization — and at one point was making such progress that the Friends of the Spanish Republic called a hasty conference to determine what steps should be taken to offset his campaign.

There are also the agents of Norman Thomas running about, weeping over the fate of the 16 Poles whom they really don't care a hang about but it does offer a swell opportunity to do some more cracking down on the Soviets. Thomas, incidentally, is now writing letters to the papers and making speeches urging a soft peace for Japan, just as he previously urged a soft peace for the Nazis, affirming that the only one to gain by the unconditional surrender of Japan will be "Joe Stalin and the communists."

That of course does not exhaust the list of anti-Conference agencies. The notorious Gerald L. K. Smith was holding press conferences and posted notices for a mass meeting "to which everybody is invited but the Russians" — a meeting which never came off incidentally since a newspaper exposed that the "Protestant League" sponsoring the meeting did not even exist. Then there is Mrs. Lyrl Clark Van Hyning, representing the We the Mothers Mobilize for Peace, Inc., who held a press conference at which she pleaded for a "permanent, righteous peace" which meant that it must not be contaminated by any Russians.

The hierarchy of the Roman Church of course cannot be overlooked. For days before the Conference opened the Rev. Fulton Sheen, the number one anti-Soviet spellbinder of Rome, was addressing mass meetings up and down the Coast on the sins of the Soviets. A well publicized solemn mass was celebrated by Archbishop John J. Mitty "to bless the cause of Poland" (meaning the London Poles) with huge space given to the service while not a line appeared about a United Nations service held at our cathedral which was a standing-room-only affair — this in spite of the fact that members of the cathedral staff personally called upon editors to invite them to the service. And while this was going on in San Francisco mass meetings were sponsored by the Roman Church in Chicago, Buffalo, Cincinnati and elsewhere, with archbishops and other dignitaries as headliners, to present the Vatican line which was frankly stated last week by his Holiness Pope Pius XII who, after first trying to squirm out of the tie-up between the Vatican and the Nazis, charged Russia with having "created those mobs of dispossessed, disillusioned, disappointed and hopeless men who are going to swell the ranks of revolution and disorder in the pay of a tyrant no less despotic than that of those for whose overthrow men planned."

So when Z. Zhukov, a very genial Russian correspondent at San Francisco, charged that there are agencies at the Conference spreading anti-Soviet "calumnies" in an effort to smash the unity of the United Nations, he was reporting facts. When he called it "Catholic propaganda which mostly follows outright reactionary political aims" and when he stressed the tie-up between this propaganda and such agencies as the Polish-American Congress and others I have mentioned he was right again. Likewise when he called them "people who are stubbornly holding to the rags of Goebbel's heritage" he was also right.

The anti-Soviet stuff that fills the papers these days is not accidental. So use your head before you fall for it.

Is Union Possible?

By

JOHN WARREN DAY

Dean of Grace Cathedral, Topeka, Kansas

IN CONSIDERING union between the Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church, the greatest stumbling block will be that which St. Paul referred to as the "letter that killeth." For four hundred years the two Churches have developed their own distinct customs and ways. Friedrich Nietzsche once said that every tradition grows ever more venerable; and the more remote is its origin, the more confused that origin is. Four hundred years is a long time and certain customs and ways of doing things, certain orders of ministry and certain liturgies and polities have gathered a reverence that not only demands veneration but also inspires awe. In a very real sense these customs have assumed in each Church the position of what St. Paul means by "the letter that killeth."

The two outstanding problems of union between the two Churches are the different attitudes of the memberships in regard to the orders of ministers and the sacraments. Union of the two Churches both Churches have affirmed to be the will of God.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Whether it becomes the will of the leaders and memberships of the two Churches remains to be seen. I am quite sure that our own Church is not yet ready for union and I am fairly certain that the Presbyterian is not. First, there must be more of what St. Paul refers to as "the spirit that giveth life" in both communions. The Christian people in these two groups are altogether too well satisfied with what they already have to seek a new synthesis of the cultures and traditions of both Churches. How much of the spirit of St. Paul can be found in these Churches? Can we say that their leadership and their fellowship are full of courage, faith, hope, love, and the missionary spirit that dominated St. Paul's life and work? How many of us can honestly say: "God has made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter but of the spirit; for the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life"? How many members in both Churches really believe and are prepared to act upon the belief that:

> New occasions teach new duties,
> Time makes ancient good uncouth;
> They must upward still and onward
> Who would keep abreast of truth.

IN BOTH Churches the attitudes and convictions about the orders of the ministry and the sacraments are basically good, if they have been useful in spreading the gospel of Christ and making him known to men; but on the other hand, if we really believe it to be God's will that the two Churches unite, then certainly the leadership and the membership of both Churches should be more interested in doing God's will than in preserving the traditions of men, no matter how holy and sacred they may seem to be to the faithful. For certainly there will not be much attention paid to the pleadings and demands of the Churches that the nations of the world establish some kind of world order, based upon international law, unless the Churches first do some uniting among themselves. The Methodists have done a significant work in this field. What will the Presbyterians and Episcopalians do?

At the end of his challenging book, Jesus and the American Mind, Halford E. Luccock says:

> In Mr. E. C. Montague's finely written novel entitled Rough Justice there is presented an unforgettable picture of a boy, the hero of the story, with a great power of love in him.
> We see the boy taken to church for the first time; a church where his uncle was a vicar. The preacher climbed the pulpit stairs and gave out a piece of terrible news. It was a rending tale of some brave and kind man, ferociously hurt a long time ago, and feeling a dreadful pain even now, because there was not done that which he wanted them all to do for him. Bron, the boy, wept beside the nurse in the family pew, shrinking shamefacedly back into his corner. But the people seemed to be strangely tranquil. Instead of rushing out to help, they sang another hymn, quite slowly. Even when they came out of church they walked away as if nothing remarkable had happened and nothing had to be done. And the nurse, when questioned, only said: "We must not take things too much to heart; people would think us odd if we did."
> But there sounds also another voice which says: "Do take it to heart!" For Calvary is the story of a man who took things terribly to heart.

Yes, he took to heart the teachings of the Old Testament morality of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. He took to heart the letter of many of the primitive laws; but that was not all. He did something about changing the letter of the law that killeth. He placed in its stead a spirit which giveth life, and in his endeavor to bring to the world that new spirit which giveth life he found it necessary to make a sacrifice of his own life to his high enterprise.

Will the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches make any sacrifice in order to form a union? What do you think? Will the membership of both Churches be like the worshippers in the church described in Mr. Montague's book? Bron, the boy who was moved by the service, wanted to do something about the man on the cross—the man who had prayed to God the night before he was killed on Calvary that his followers might all be one, as God and he were one. How many of us are deeply concerned about the horrible divisions of the body of Christ, the Church? Have we done anything to help heal the wounds of Christ's body?

It was the utter contentment and smugness of the Pharisees, their assurance that they were the best people, that prompted our Lord to call them vipers and hypocrites. It was their confidence that if they were loyal to the letter of the Mosaic Code they would be sure of salvation, that led St. Paul to doubt the sanctions of the Hebrew religion; while on the other hand, is was the demands of faith, hope and love that attracted him to our Lord's revelation of God's nature, and made St. Paul Christianity's greatest exponent and missionary. He saw that slavishness to the Mosaic Code made bigots and self-satisfied formalists and intolerant fanatical dogmatists out of its most devoted adherents, while loyalty to Christ and his humble, loving spirit gave power, confidence, vision and understanding to his followers. That is why he could write to the people in the struggling church in Corinth: "God has made us able ministers of the New Testament: not of the letter but of the spirit: for the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life."

Bishop Keeler Thinks Unity Is Hope of the World

Tells Presbyterian Assembly That a United Protestantism Is Essential for These Days

Edited by Rita Rubin

Minneapolis (RNS):—Bishop Keeler of Minnesota told the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church meeting here to "be patient, study and have fellowship" until negotiations for union between the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches could be consummated. "On polity some Presbyterians are fearful of bishops," the bishop declared. "However there are bishops and bishops. I have seen some of whom I have myself been afraid. I believe with all my heart and soul that we can come to unity in polity quite as significantly as our unity regarding the word of God, the sacraments and in doctrine." The hope of the world, religiously speaking, he declared to be "a united Protestantism."

Havana Dean

Havana, Cuba:—Bishop Blankingship of Cuba has announced the appointment of the Rev. Elden B. Mowers to be the dean of Holy Trinity Cathedral here. He will succeed Bishop R. H. Gooden, now bishop of the Panama Canal Zone. Mr. Mowers is at present the rector of Zion Church, Philadelphia.

General Convention

New York: — The 1946 General Convention is to be held in Philadelphia, September 4 to 14, according to an announcement made on June 5 by the Presiding Bishop. The early date was made necessary by the fact that only for that period can the Philadelphia Convention Hall be secured.

Laymen Confer

Boston:—The new conference of the diocese of Massachusetts had its official opening on June 9 when the men's division of the Church Service League held a week-end conference. Led by President F. W. Holmes of Dedham and Vice-President Francis A. Parker Jr. of Marblehead, the men discussed the work of men in the diocese.

More Chaplains

Washington: — The war department is asking for more than 700 army chaplains. The appeal to the Episcopal Church makes no mention of quotas but begs that every effort be made to enlist men.

Flag Day

Philadelphia: — The Rev. Daniel A. Poling, Baptist, was the preacher on June 10 at a flag day service held here at historic Christ Church. Historic associations took part in the service, with a color guard of fifty men in dress uniform placing flags before the chancel at the start of the service. Fitting of course to hold a flag day service at Christ Church since Betsy Ross who made the first American flag attended church there and held pew 12 which was next to the pew of George Washington.

ence of Church and labor on consumer cooperation here. The panel was conducted by Benson Y. Landis, secretary of the committee on the Church and cooperatives of the Federal Council of Churches, which sponsored the sessions.

Representative Jerry Voorhis of California, an Episcopalian, told the conference that cooperatives are "the people's surest defense," and appealed for "missionary zeal" by persons of all faiths to build them. He stressed their extensive contributions to agriculture, and called on labor unions to do "collective buying" in addition to practicing collective bargaining.

Wide interest on the part of Negroes in cooperatives was reported, and rapid organization of credit unions was noted, some of it in church parishes. About 20 per cent of Philadelphia's credit unions were reported among religious groups.

Clinton S. Golden of the United Steel Workers of America, CIO, and a vice-chairman of the WPB, spoke on Labor and Co-Ops, and Nelson H. Cruikshank of Washington, director of social insurance activities, AFL, on Labor as Consumers.

Marriage Instruction

Buffalo: — Believing that the Church should be more specific in its counsel to prospective brides and grooms, the newly appointed committee on holy matrimony of the diocese is formulating instructions on marriage to be used by the clergy of all parishes in Western New York.

Headed by the Rev. William Thomas Heath, rector of Trinity Church, Buffalo, the committee is preparing a syllabus to guide rectors in enlightening couples on the demands of married life, including the economic, spiritual and physical aspects.

While many rectors give detailed advice to couples contemplating marriage, the idea of making a uniform syllabus to be used in all parishes is new, Mr. Heath explained. The present marriage canon says rectors must instruct couples before marriage, but it does not specify the kind of instruction to be given.

At the request of Bishop Davis, the committee also is preparing an office of instruction on marriage and family life patterned after offices of instruction in the Book of Common Prayer. Offices in the Prayer Book deal with religion in general while the proposed new offices will treat on the spiritual side of marriage.

As chairman of the national commission on holy matrimony Bishop Davis has led the Church's movement for a liberalized canon on remarriage. He is asking the committee to draw up a new canon covering the whole marriage question and his commission is urging all dioceses to offer suggestions so an "ideal" canon can be drafted for the General Convention in 1946.

Discussing the proposed syllabus, Mr. Heath said he thought it would cover all subjects that couples might have questions on. He said it might deal with reasons for marital failure, use of family income, choice of friends, the matter of "in-laws" and adjustment when differences of opinion arise.

"In my own parish I usually deal with the matter of sexual relations and recommended books on this subject, and also bring up the matter of children and the responsibility of parents to them," Mr. Heath said.

Wide lay participation was sought by Bishop Davis in appointing the committee which is comprised, in addition to Mr. Heath, of the Very Rev.

Rectors Called Down

Boston:—"My rector has written to me only a couple of times during my two years of service," writes a Churchman GI from the Southwest Pacific. "You know of course that griping is the favorite indoor sport among servicemen," he continues, "so I will make this gripe to you, hoping that you may pass it on to rectors and folks back home.

"I was a faithful attendant at all Church services and activities and assisted my rector in every way I could. So I am sure that what is happening to me is probably the fate of many of my fellow parishioners in the service. I feel that he and probably many like him are failing in their duty to us. Just because we are in the service and away from home, we don't want to lose touch with our home parishes. In fact, we need their interest and a sense of belonging now more than ever before. I hope that you will try to stir them up to an awakening to this essential part of their duty, which I think is terribly important.

"After the war we in the service want to return to the sheltering arms of the parish churches that have guided us from our beginning to the present time. Certainly we don't want that care to stop just when we need it most and we don't want to lose that comforting sense of belonging to something as great and wonderful as Mother Church. Just as letters from loved ones at home reiterate their love, so do letters from rectors, as representatives of the parish, reiterate the Church's love for us. I think if the importance of keeping in touch with parishioners overseas could just be emphasized to them, they wouldn't hesitate to take the necessary time to write to us. Please drive that fact home to them."

Missionary Reports

New York:—First of the liberated missionaries from the Philippines to reach New York, the Rev. Raymond E. Abbitt formerly of the Upi mission, stopped at Church headquarters on his way to his home in Victoria, Va., where he will rest and recuperate. Mr. Abbitt, while in New York, is to have a physical checkup, though he said he believes that he is all right. He lost 65 pounds and is unable to eat much food at a time, even now, but he is gaining, and thinks that rest and normal diet will restore him to complete health rapidly. He hopes to return to the Philippines as soon as he is able physically.

He had been interned at the Santo Tomas camp, where conditions were bad. In the camp he worked particularly in ministering as best he could, to sick in the isolation hospital. Illness was mostly the result of malnutrition, and there were many deaths. Never did the internees have an adequate food supply and there was beri beri and tuberculosis. Mr. Abbitt had been a missionary of the Episcopal Church since 1940, going to take up work immediately after his ordination.

ANGUS DUN
The Bishop of Washington

I am not much on writing to church papers, but confess that I am disturbed by the little article in your number of May 10, page 5, referring to the decision not to hold Bishop Bravid Harris's consecration in the Washington Cathedral, and referring also to an address by Bishop Barnwell.

I would like to make one or two things perfectly clear to you and to the readers of THE WITNESS. We did offer to have the consecration service in the Washington Cathedral; I thought it would accentuate the national, and indeed international, significance of this service. I was personally disappointed that our invitation was not accepted, but I have no reason whatever to doubt the motives of Bishop Harris or his advisors. There was surely much reason for holding the service in the area where Bishop Harris had served so effectively.

As to your comments on Bishop Barnwell's address, I am told on excellent authority that he said nothing about outsiders meddling, and did not say, "We know how to deal with the Negro." On the contrary, I am told that his was a fine and courageous plea that the South should go on to solve race questions by efforts from within and not have to be forced to it by pressure from without.

You are responsible for what you quote and for the interpretations you offer. Since my name was mentioned, I want to make it quite clear that I had nothing to do with either of these in this case.

ANSWER: We believe that the consecration of Bishop Harris should have been held in Washington Cathedral for the reason Bishop Dun gives: because it would have "accentuated the national, and indeed the international, significance of this service." We can state positively that it was not held there because of pressure from the South. As for the quotes from Bishop Barnwell's convention address, they were taken from the report sent to us by the officially appointed correspondent for the diocese of Georgia.

H. G. BRANT
Layman of St. Paul, Minnesota

THE WITNESS (May 10) had an article by W. B. Sperry on What Happens at Holy Communion. He says "We know it by other names—the Eucharist and Mass." Who knows it by the other names? Not many Protestant Episcopalians. He also says "we then hear the ten commandments." In some churches the commandments are not recited once a year unless at an instruction class. Surely not at the 11:00 A.M. service. All we get is the summary of the law. Again he says "In the gospel and epistle we listen . . ." We try to and may hear if the priest would face the congregation. It has been my understanding for many years that when the priest faced the altar he was speaking to God for the people and when he faced the congregation, he was speaking for God to the people. Nowadays the priest faces the altar for gospel, epistle and about the only time the congregation sees his face is when he recites the words preceding the offering.

Coming to the consecration of the elements and ". . . each person is given bread and then wine." The first Lord's Supper was "in the night in which he was betrayed"; why so much stress on the early service and to go fasting. If we are to take the words of Christ literally and accept the cup "after supper," where does the element of fasting come in?

In the same issue Prof. Massey speaks of intinction. Again if we are to follow Christ's instructions and acts how can anyone find any ground for intinction for again in the words of consecration "He took bread etc. and gave it to them." Likewise after supper he took the cup . . . saying drink ye etc. Where, with these words can anyone find anything on which to base intinction.

I know THE WITNESS accepts articles to show different points of view of its contributors, but why such articles as that from their authors who should know; articles that cast doubt so that one does not know what to believe. It is a case of "Just as I am though tossed about, With many a conflict, many a doubt." And in my mind after being a churchman for over fifty years and after reading THE WITNESS for over ten years there is "many a conflict and many a doubt" being presented by writers that should know what they are writing about. There probably are many others like me.

The World Council number of THE WITNESS (May 24) is splendid and we certainly owe you a deep debt of gratitude. I do like the way you lay out a number. It's interesting and so many of our Church papers are not. You did a specially good job on this number. I am sure it will give the World Council a big lift in the ranks of your constituency.

ROLLS OF HONOR BOARDS

Those of your Church Membership who have enrolled in the armed forces have earned a tribute which should have a permanent place in your minds.

To preserve this record, to know the full name of each, to pay tribute to them, is the purpose of the "Roll of Honor."

Tastefully designed and skillfully executed these beautiful walnut boards are restrained and dignified enough to blend with any church surroundings. They are inexpensive, yet so skillfully made that they provide an excellent tribute to those who are serving.

The panel is 7/8" thick, is built up of five-ply board, finished in walnut veneer and the decorative detail is a gold toned finish, to blend with any Church furnishings.

The eagle of serviceable plastic wood with the olive branch, represents the eagle of peace.

A sturdy, beveled gold edged card in walnut tone (¾ in. x 3½ in.), with each name lettered in gold, makes the completed board handsome and durable.

Head of Christchurch Tells of Running Small School

Tells of Special Advantage that a Small Church School Has for Student Members

By S. Janney Hutton
Headmaster of Christchurch School

Christchurch, Va.:—Christchurch School for Boys, founded in 1921, is one of the seven Church schools sponsored by the diocese of Virginia. These schools are all under the general direction of a central board of trustees, but each is an independent unit with its own specific character and traditions.

I first visited Christchurch in May, 1943, when I motored the sixty miles from Richmond with Bishop Goodwin and two other members of the board of trustees. I was unforgettably impressed with its magnificent location on a hill overlooking the blue expanse of the lower Rappahannock River, with the attractive school property of level fields and rolling woodland, and with the delightfulness of the surrounding tidewater countryside. I recognized the community as an ideal place for boys to live. I was interested also in the fact that the school has facilities for a limited enrollment of only sixty boys; for I realized that in a unit of such moderate size the regimentation necessary in handling large groups could be fairly well eliminated.

Two months later I found myself settled with my family at Christchurch as headmaster of the school. I was fortunate in having experienced, capable, and enthusiastic teachers and other staff members join us at the school before the opening of the session in September. Together we have had two interesting and stimulating years in our cooperative enterprise of conducting the school.

We seek to make full use of the special advantages the school offers to us and its student members. In the class room we find it tremendously helpful to be able to work with groups of from ten to fifteen boys. Each pupil is known intimately as an individual by all of his instructors. His interests are understood, and can be directed and developed; his difficulties are observed and studied with sympathy and understanding. Varied methods are followed in seeking to get his best accomplishment from each boy; at the same time the subject-matter of the curriculum is in no way experimental. It comprises those studies which have been tried and found successful in training young minds: English, mathematics, science, and the elements of at least one foreign language. The school offers the basic intellectual training requisite as a foundation for higher education and for practical living.

Christian teaching and its application are presented as a normal part of everyday life. The boys and masters assemble daily at the school Chapel for evening prayers, which are conducted once a week by the older boys themselves. On Sunday morning the members of the school attend the service at the local Parish Church, whose rector is also chaplain of the school. Each form follows a graded course in Sacred Studies, meeting once or twice a week for study and discussion of the Bible, the Book of Common Prayer, and the teachings, history, and traditions of the Church, and their application to life.

The fees are moderate; the accommodations are comfortable and adequate without being pretentious. The pattern of life at the school is one of simplicity and genuineness. But the most striking single feature is certainly the location. The grounds and general surroundings are nothing short of ideal. The chief attraction is the tidewater Rappahannock, on which the school has its own waterfront. The facilities for sailing, boating, bathing, fishing, and crabbing invite safe and varied recreation during a large part of the school year. The acres of rolling woodland furnish a natural playground for all seasons. The boys develop interest in vigorous out of door activities on the water and in the woods, as well as in the usual school sports on the athletic field. These natural facilities are supplemented with an excellent gymnasium, which is used when the weather is unsuitable for activities in the open.

COMMENCEMENT AT BERKELEY

New Haven:—Edward D. Myers, dean of freshmen at Trinity College and president-elect of Roanoke College, was the speaker at the commencement of the Berkeley Divinity School. There were about 150 persons who attended the exercises at which degrees were conferred upon six men. Receiving an honorary doctorate was the Rev. George I. Hiller, rector of Trinity, Miami, who is a contributing editor of THE WITNESS.

THREE NOMINATED FOR PENNSYLVANIA

Philadelphia:—The special committee to present not more than five names in nomination for the office of suffragan bishop of Pennsylvania, announced on June 12 that they would offer three names: Bishop William Remington of Eastern Oregon; Dean Charles W. Shreiner of Chester and Dean Chauncey E. Snowden of Germantown. The election took place on June 26th, too late for this number. The committee also announced that nineteen names had been placed before them for consideration, three from outside the diocese and the rest from within. Bishop Hart, in a message to the committee, stated: "I am perfectly willing to say that of the three men nominated from outside the diocese I think that the Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, bishop of the missionary district of Eastern Oregon, is the best choice for this diocese." We'll let you know what happened in our next issue.

LAYMAN HEADS SEMINARY

Berkeley, Calif.:—Ronald Bridges, moderator of the Congregational Christian Churches, is the new president of the Pacific School of Religion. He is believed to be the only layman ever to be president of a theological school in this country. He succeeds Arthur C. McGiffert who becomes the president of Chicago Theological Seminary.

NIEMOELLER CRACKS AT RUSSIANS

Moline, Ill.:—Martin Niemoeller, German church leader, sent a message to the Lutheran synod meeting here through an army chaplain, pleading that American military forces in Germany be allowed to fraternize with the German people. He warned that Russian soldiers now in his country will win the German people for communism unless the Allies are permitted to assume a friendlier attitude.

"The greatest need at the present time in Germany," wrote the famous opponent of Hitler, "is not physical. That may come later. The greatest need is to help the German people to help themselves. At present they are very bewildered. Their faith and authority have been shattered. Their faith in God has been shaken. They are literally like sheep without a shepherd. In a status like this, any offer of love is turned to like a drowning man grasping at a straw.

"So far, because of non-fraternization, the German sees little hope from America. The Russians, however, whom the Germans expected to find cruel and hard, have shown just the opposite traits. Every act of love from the Russians means a plug for communism. To be sure, the German people have heard about the awfulness of communism, but acts of love at a time like this will convince them that everything they had heard about communism previously was propaganda and lies."

The family of the Rev. William H. Kirk, rector of St. John's, Buffalo, have fun singing hymns even if Dad is not there to add his heavy baso. Shown with Mrs. Kirk are Mary Judith, the smallest; Susan Riker, at Mrs. Kirk's right, who is six, and Nancy Mahon, nine

PACIFIC GRADUATES EIGHT MEN

Berkeley, Calif.:—Eight men were graduated from the Church Divinity School of the Pacific on June 7th. Bishop Remington of Eastern Oregon gave the commencement address and honorary doctorates were awarded to Dean Edwin S. Lane of Phoenix, Arizona, and the Rev. Lansing Kempton of Trinity Church, Portland, Oregon.

PROTESTANTS LACK FREEDOM

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—Dr. Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury, says that the problem of religious freedom in Poland will be discussed when a freely-elected Polish Parliament convenes.

Following an extended visit to Warsaw, he reported here that the Roman Catholic Church enjoys full religious freedom in Poland, but that existing laws have not been changed to give liberty to all religions. He said, for example, that registration of marriages, funerals and births at present can only be effected in the Catholic Church.

"This is an extremely important question from the viewpoint of Christian principles, which demand religious liberty," Dr. Johnson said. "That did not exist in old Poland. Such inequality is an unhealthy manifestation from the political and religious viewpoint."

ENGLAND DEVELOPS WOMEN'S WORK

London (wireless to RNS):—Founding of a central college for the training of women church workers will be proposed at the next meeting of the Assembly of the Church of England. It will be recommended by a committee appointed by the Archbishops to study the matter.

ENGLISH BISHOP IN FINLAND

Stockholm (wireless to RNS):—Bishop Basil S. Batty, in charge of Anglican Churches in North and Central Europe, joined with the pro-Nazi Baron Carl Mannerheim, in welcoming the new Archbishop of the Lutheran Church in Finland, Aleksi Lehtonen.

A Former Missionary to China Says Work Flourishes

The Rev. James Thayer Addison Also Declares That Correspondent Gave Incomplete Picture

By S. Harrington Littell
Retired Bishop of Honolulu and former Missionary in China

New York:—As a former resident in central China for a generation I cannot let the statements and the implications of Richard Baker's article on Christian work in China (WITNESS, June 7) pass unchallenged. He wrote as a correspondent for a press service and therefore has a wide circle of readers. His approach is one-sided and strangely uninformed. Basically it is imperialistic. He does not envision the real object of missionary work which is the founding of an indigenous Chinese Christian Church, nor does he indicate the method of reaching this objective nor the measure of progress already made. To him everything seems to depend on "foreign"—that is, non-Chinese—missionaries and he aims to tell "the story of what is happening to Christian missions in this country. The missionaries are leaving China. So thoroughly is the China scene being cleared of foreign missionaries that virtually no missionary work will be carried on here until the war is over or the necessary permits are granted again for Christian workers to enter the country."

Does Mr. Baker know nothing of the founded, already accomplished, of self-governing branches of the Church: the (Episcopal) Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui, for instance, and the (Presbyterian) Church of Christ in China? Does he really think that "foreign leadership" is essential to a Chinese branch of the Church Universal; a branch already deeply rooted and spreading under native leadership? All Christian communions can tell of trained Chinese missionaries. To speak for the Anglican Communion it is not out of place to mention that there are at present nine active Chinese bishops, of whom Bishop Y. Y. Tsu recently received with enthusiasm in this country and England is one, with hundreds of Chinese priests and deacons, many doctors and nurses and a large staff of trained school and college teachers. These carry on, many as refugees from Japanese aggression, continuing schools, hospitals and churches, with or without proper buildings and equipment. There is no finer example in all Church history of courage and stability under war conditions and invasion than the cheerful and the open adherence to their faith—The Faith—on the part of Chinese Christians and their "foreign missionary" associates.

What do they think about Mr. Baker's main contention that the absence of the majority of American missionaries (he does not mention at all English, Canadian, Scotch Churchmen, as well as those from continental Europe), has brought about what he calls "the decline of the missionary movement in China today." Do the trained and skilled Chinese leaders, who out-number the "foreign leadership of the Christian Church" many times over, count for nothing? Are the Christian laymen quite negligible? Dr. T. V. Soong for instance; and Dr. H. H. Kung, direct descendant of Confucius by the way; and Dr. T. Z. Koo. Likewise Dr. Chen-tung Wang, Yale graduate and former minister of China to Washington, and a long list of others, well known in Church and state? They will not be ruled out as an integral part of the world wide ecumenical Church any more than they will accept any longer a secondary place for China in the international life of the world. Mr. Baker's ideas are at heart, it seems to me, imperialistic, ecclesiastically as well as politically and nationally.

The word "decline" used by Mr. Baker might be replaced with "slowed-down." Without missionaries from outside China's vast areas will be covered more slowly in the spread of Christianity; leaders from among the people will be trained, in numbers, less rapidly and the contacts between Chinese Christians and Christians around the world will be less frequent and close. The missionary is a first-rate contact man between inhabitants of lands where he serves and the rest of us in presenting all that is best in our way of life; our ideals of law and government and in all true human relationships. Missionaries are urgently needed in China but are not essential to the existence and spread of the Church there. They are invaluable but not indispensable. All of the people put together (a rapidly diminishing tribe in America) who "don't believe in foreign missions," cannot stop the progress of Christianity anywhere — certainly not in China.

What Mr. Baker says about missionaries having "suffered greatly" is true. But has Mr. Baker ever heard them whine? Has he found many who are not eager to return to China at the first possible moment? Such experiences as he describes are neither new nor unexpected in the labor of extending the realm of Christ through the years,

There are three and a half million Christians in China, like this student, who are carrying on the work of the Church today and in China in our day have not equalled the suffering and death of Christians under persecution repeatedly in history. In our life-time, even in China, there have been worse times than the present for the Church. The Boxer outbreak in 1900 caused the death of over 260 "foreigners," nearly all missionaries, and something over 11,000 Chinese Christians.

Mr. Baker's report says missionaries "have seen their flocks evaporate into thin air." Why not say, have seen them move from the scenes of cruelty and warfare into the atmosphere of more congenial climes, to seek shelter from the storm, hidden until the time comes when they can return home? In this sense "dispersed," they have taken their religion with them. Result: new converts, even whole congregations, have been gained to the Church of the dispersion. The Christian mission field is amazingly fruitful even in these destructive years and is as promising of rich spiritual harvest as any other part of Christendom.

Also writing on this same article by the correspondent for Religious News Service is the vice-president of the National Council, the Rev. James Thayer Addison who is in charge of the overseas work. He writes:

"So many people identify Christian missions in China with Christianity in China that the article China Missionary Field is in a Very Bad Way in your June 7th issue ought to be promptly supplemented if readers are not to retain a seriously wrong impression. The correspondent whose article you reproduce gives a full and probably accurate account of the extent to which foreign missionaries have been withdrawn from China, leaving today only one sixth of those who were active before 1937. This forced migration of missionaries is his only topic, and the picture he paints is true as far as it goes. But he deals only with the negative factor in the present situation, and he completely ignores the positive factor — the Chinese Church and its leaders. Indeed the average reader would naturally conclude from the article that Christianity in China is near collapse. As a matter of fact, however, the departure of thousands of foreign missionaries has provided an unexpected opportunity to prove in the most superbly convincing fashion that the Christian Church in China has grown to maturity and can carry on with vigor and success under its own Chinese leadership. Vastly more important for general information and for future world history than the necessary retreat of five-sixths of the missionary forces is the notable fact that in all the occupied areas seventy or eighty per cent of the evangelistic and institutional work of the Church continues to be maintained.

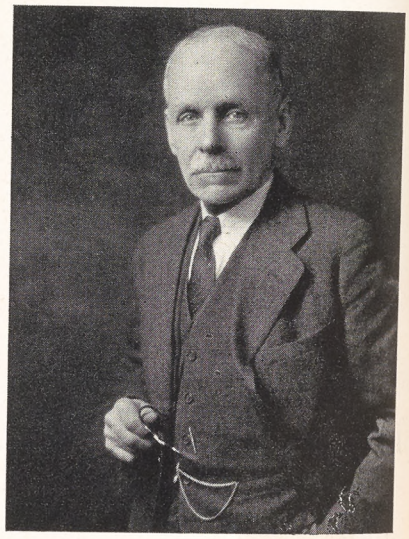
"If the Chinese are to be believed, missionaries are still valued and useful; but the Chinese Church, which calls for more of them, can no longer claim that they are indispensable. Thanks to the vitality of more than three and a half million Chinese Christians, Christianity is flourishing today in China; and to proclaim that the 'missionary field is in a very bad way' is to betray an attitude that was antiquated a generation ago — the attitude which sees the missionary as the central figure, surrounded by obedient native helpers and a handful of obscure converts.

"If an Episcopalian wants to view the situation in its true proportions, he may add to the broader vision of Chinese Christianity as a whole the picture of our own Anglican Communion, the autonomous Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui, with its eight Chinese bishops and its staff of clergy in which Chinese outnumber foreigners eight to one. That is symbolical of the degree to which Christianity is at home in China and it explains why the fortunes of Christianity in China do not rise and fall with the arrival and departure of foreign missionaries."

PRESENT LARGE CLASS AT MIAMI

Miami:—Bishop Wing confirmed 98 at St. Agnes here recently, the class being presented by the rector, the Rev. John E. Culmer. The large church, with a seating capacity of 1000 was overtaxed. The Bishop also blessed a number of memorials, including windows to the memory of Bishop Gray and Bishop Cameron Mann. Since he took charge of St. Agnes sixteen years ago Mr. Culmer has presented 1389 for confirmation and has developed the mission into one of the largest and most active parishes in the diocese. He was also appointed archdeacon of the Negro work of the diocese several years ago.

THE MONEY KEEPS ROLLING IN



New York:—Record-breaking receipts are reported by the Department of Finance of the National Council, the percentage of receipts to amounts due being the highest on record, 130%. Allowing one month for collecting, the amount which should have been received by June 1 was $619,671. Actual receipts total $808,701. During the month of May collections amounted to $250,461. Reports on the Good Friday offering continue to be gratifying also. To date $45,839 has been received, slightly over the amount on June 1 a year ago. During May $13,944 was received for the offering.

CHURCH WOMEN BACK FEPC

New York:—The executive committee of the United Council for Church Women has sent a communication to state presidents urging them to do everything possible to get Church women to send telegrams to Washington supporting the Fair Employment Practices Committee. At the present time there is the possibility that the appropriation will be dropped which would mean that the present agency would go out of business June 30th. The telegrams should be sent to President Truman, Senator Alben Barkley, majority leader, Senator Wallace White, minority leader, and your own two leaders.

Peace Time Conscription

THE Congress of the United States is soon to be called upon to decide an issue that represents a complete break with the jealously guarded tradition of this nation; the issue of peace-time military conscription. It is one that must be met realistically and not emotionally; in terms not of the present alone but of the long future. Will conscription keep the peace for us? Has it done so historically? Will it be good for our young men? These questions are answered in the affirmative by those who favor it and they merit careful scrutiny.

The May Bill calls for the training of our boys for a year when they reach the age of 17 or 18. About 1,250,000 fall into this group; perhaps a fourth of them will be found to be defective physically or mentally and so ineligible to receive the "benefits" of this training. From the strictly military point of view the value of this form of education is very debatable; Major George Fielding Eliot told the house military affairs committee that two years of service would be the least one could expect to be necessary to train the modern soldier properly. It is important to remember that modern war is not as dependent upon masses of men as it is upon highly trained specialists, technicians, engineers, aviators, etc. A year would not suffice for these; they would have to be maintained in a separate category as a permanent military establishment — along with tens of thousands of officers and instructors. The cost is estimated to be up to four billions of dollars annually! It is hardly necessary to mention the other great factor, yet it is often overlooked; the creation of a huge industrial system devoted to producing military supplies only. Conscription alone is a completely futile method of achieving security.

Historically, no nation has yet been immune from attack because of enforced military training. Poland, Norway, Belgium, the Netherlands, France, Greece, Russia, Yugoslavia all had conscription; did this deter Hitler? In 1914 Germany launched its legions against France and Russia; conscription was no prevention of war. France has had twelve wars and Germany ten while under this system. Yet it is supposed, by its ingenuous advocates, to prevent war. Wrote Hanson W. Baldwin, noted military analyst, "Historical experience does not support this . . . Conscription has never stopped war nor made war less frequent." Conscription does one thing inevitably; it forces other nations to adopt a similar method of "protection" — and the race of Mars is on.

As to whether it is beneficial to youth at a critical period in character formation and when a normal environment is imperative, there can be little doubt. As Christians we are committed to one obvious thing by conviction and experience; integrity, self-reliance, discipline are not inculcated by external strictures; they spring from within. The June number of The American Magazine gave the results of a poll of outstanding specialists and leaders in the field of youth; 16% thought military training good; 26% were doubtful and 58% were convinced it would be definitely harmful. Among others (including many Church groups) the educational policies commission of the National Education Association and the American Association of School Administrators, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers have come out strongly against the proposed alteration in our American way of life. Surely they are better able to exercise judgment in this realm than our militarists!

If we want a short-cut to the prevention of unemployment, this regimentation of our youth will undoubtedly do it to some extent; the Nazis found it so. If we are eager to form an officer caste and a militarism that will have a profound psychological effect on our democracy, this is the way to accompish it. We have the experience of Germany, Italy and France (remember the Dreyfus case?) to guide us.

In fear of what specific nation do we undertake this complete break with our past? Germany? Japan? China? Great Britain? Is there no other way to protect ourselves against the former two, and do we contemplate war with the latter? It must be Russia then — as several of our less as-

"QUOTES"

THOU silent light, redeemer of the world, who are encircling the whole earth with thy love, we hear thy prayer from the cross: Father, forgive them. In the name of that all-forgiving love, we ask our father in heaven to grant his and our enemies eternal peace. Lord, forgive those who are shedding innocent blood, and causing us untold suffering, advancing at the cost of their brothers' agony. Lord, judge not those who persecute us. Let our prayer help on the work of reconciliation among those whom our feeble witness to our faith stimulated to opposition to Christianity.

It would seem as if men were again engaged in the tragic and disastrous habit of dealing with symptoms rather than striving to cure the root of the disease. It may be that conscription will one day — God forbid! — become necessary; if it does we will accept it with the reluctant determination we accepted our role in this war. But if it does, let us be honest about it and admit quite frankly that our sons have lately died in vain, our sacrifices counted for nothing, and that all we can hope for is to get ready for future wars which can only issue in the destruction of civilization.

Fortunately there is an alternative, not an easy one but worth all we have to give; to persist in our determination to create a strong international organization with appropriate police powers. By putting our professional army on an economic level that will attract men there should be no difficulty about this latter. A second requisite is to begin to work now for disarmament on a world-wide scale and to mean it — as we pledged ourselves to do after the last war and as Russia offered to do (and was ignored) in 1927. We know full well where the old ways have led us. Peace demands new ways with faith, courage and daring. Has America these qualities? If we believe we have let us make known to our Congressmen that it is our will to continue in the American tradition, and not to adopt one of the methods that have brought Europe to its crucifixion.

A Really Long View

YOU can do a lot of things with ten million dollars. Support the missionary work of our Church, for example. With ten million dollars you could double the work projected under the Reconstruction and Advance Fund. You can also buy yourself "the longest unbroken vista in Christendom." That's the way the Bishop of New York wants to spend ten million dollars, so that anyone stepping inside the Cathedral of St. John the Divine can look farther under one roof than in any other church in the world.

It reminds us of the slogan they had in Detroit some years ago, "A Greater Detroit." When one of the residents of that city was asked what it meant he said he wasn't sure but he thought it meant greater than Cleveland.

We shall watch the campaign for raising this money with great interest. The Cathedral of the diocese of New York is asking for ten million dollars, the Episcopal Church is asking all her members for only half that much to rebuild devastated buildings in the mission field and to meet a few of the waiting opportunities in the world. It's all right with us if Bishop Manning wants to rearrange the stones on Moringside Heights and break a world's record, but if ten million is available for that then we suggest that the same people take on an equal figure for the Reconstruction and Advance Fund. That will give the Church ten million to start with and we'll go on and raise our proposed five million and then we will really be in a position to take a long view in the Church.

Red Wraith Over America

A SPECTRE haunts America, not Europe this time, and those who see the ghost extend all the way from the Knights of Columbus to the clamorous Congresswoman from Connecticut. Communist infiltration is apparently running riot to such a degree that even war with Russia is being advocated. For our part we would like to draw attention to the latest piece of Soviet influence. It has recently been reported that the true magnetic North Pole is no longer in northern Canada but between 200 to 300 miles to the northwest in the Sverdrup Islands of Soviet Siberia! This is going too far especially if we still have enough gumption to note the subtlety of this latest move — the Empire Air Navigation School of the R.A.F. has been the front which has been used to put it over on the people of the Americas. Are we going to sit by and allow all world navigation, air as well as water, to be put under the grasping control of the Kremlin?

The whole thing is absurd — if it were not so serious. Those who would like to maintain control in America are worried by the determination of people's groups, supported openly and courageously by the U.S.S.R., to maintain and advance the control over their own countries which they have won during the war at the cost of their own blood. At the same time their pet spokesmen hasten to tell us that there are really no conflicting interests between the Soviet Union and the United States. The trouble, therefore, must be sought in our domestic situation. Our conservatives do not so much fear Russia abroad as they do at home. They are afraid that their control of this country will be challenged in the postwar world when Soviet socialist full-employment will be contrasted with a depression in this country which can be avoided if these same people show a willingness to merge their own interests with those of the country as a whole. By their anti-U.S.S.R. propaganda they are preparing for the day when the issue will become critical in this the U.S.A. The American people must be steered away from any desire for controlling their own destiny. This Red-baiting was called fascist in Europe but we supposed that to label it such now is un-American. Let us put an end to this silly Soviet phobia not because we would encourage communism in Europe but because we are not afraid of it here in America. For this country we really have something better if we will not allow our gaze to be diverted by far away phantoms.

Marriage Counselling

by William E. Crane

Pastor of the Ruffner Memorial Church
Charleston, West Virginia

I FEEL very much like a man caught walking in his sleep on some prominent residential street —motivated neither by reason nor by judgment, but propelled by the powerful and unconventional forces of the Freudian realm of subconscious desire. This, however, is not an altogether scientifically accurate statement, for I must confess that at least a part of my motivation is entirely conscious—namely, the long-time interest and deep-seated longing for the day to come when the medical, sociological, educational, and spiritual forces of the community should unreservedly and voluntarily unite their resources for the purpose of improving the vital relationships which find their roots and fruitage in the homes of our land.

It does not take superior intelligence nor does it require extensive research to convince us that this is a day of tremendous struggle and emotional tension in the lives of countless people. Evidences of this fact are available to anyone interested in those with whom he rubs elbows every day. The business executive is made aware of the situation as he confronts irritable, anxious, harassed employees. Strikes, discontent, friction, inefficiency, lost time from work are all related to the hyper-tension of our time.

Law enforcement agencies are continually reminding us of the critical upswing of juvenile delinquency. The courts fill their records with divorce suits. More than half of our hospital beds are occupied by persons suffering from emotional or other psychophysical symptoms. Disciplinary problems in the schools have led educational leaders to completely rethink the whole theory and practice of educational methods. Even national leaders find themselves confronted with international situations which have grown out of maladjusted or warped personalities who shape the policies of their nations.

In all these problems we recognize the fact that, ultimately, each one springs from the personal element. Political leaders who mould the destinies and policies of nations, are after all individual persons who have arrived at their slant on life through the process of education in home and school.

Who can doubt that the "mixture of aggressive, antisocial, as well as submissive, neurotic symptoms" of Adolph Hitler is traceable to the emotional instability and immaturity of his father, together with the resulting unhappy marital adjustment between his parents. Certainly the soil was prepared and fertile for just such a son as Adolph became. What other results might be expected from a home where the father is unsettled, immature, short-tempered, and the mother gullible, physically ill, and over-indulgent?

But such tragic situations are not confined to the shores of the Danube nor to the homes of the sons of illegitimate Viennese fathers. They are as common to the shores of the Kanawha and the Ohio as to the Danube. They are all around us and every one of them presents both a challenge and a threat to society, and to us who are its leaders.

If the statement of Dr. Coghill is true that "the unwanted or rejected child is destined on the average to show strong aggressive traits, to be hostile and antagonistic towards those with whom he must have dealings, and to develop tendencies which may lead to delinquency or other forms of crystalized unhappiness," then surely there must be a place for sane marriage counselling motivated by high and pure Christian motives.

During my experience of some twenty years as a pastor, I have seen many heart-breaking and tragic results of ignorance, fear, emotional instability and maladjustment between parents, between parents and their children, and between the children themselves. Some of these cases have led me into homes where unsanitary conditions, little schooling, disease of mind and body, and deterioration of spiritual and moral factors have been the source from which have sprung children who have become inmates of reformatories, causes of wrecked marriages, and other antisocial conduct. Time and again, when I had done everything that my specialized type of training enabled me to do, I have had to admit that my efforts were inadequate. If I could only have had the cooperation, advice and aid of a skilled physician! If the school authorities had been better prepared to understand and deal with so warped a mind as that of this boy or that girl! If someone familiar with the ways of social adjustment could only have been called in to share in the task and responsibility! How different might have been the outcome! But where could one turn for such aid? Time, understanding, mutual respect, and willingness to cooperate were factors which entered into the situation. If only the medical, educational, sociological and spiritual leaders of the community could unite to solve this case before it was too late!

In confronting such a situation, and in seeking such an idealistic solution, we are not unaware of the variety, multiplicity, and complexity of the problems and obstacles involved. Professional techniques, ethics, ambitions, and jealousies come into the picture with all their limitations, threats, and fears. The range of personal and professional aims and motives is such as to give us pause for deliberation and caution as we propose such an enterprise in the interest of marriage counselling.

The well-trained physician may properly hesitate to commit himself wholeheartedly to an undertaking which promises to consume all-too-valuable time in rendering professional services where the financial return is incommensurate to the time and skill involved.

The professional sociologist, knowing as he does the importance and influence of the social environment upon the individual, and feeling the pressure and need for economic and governmental relief, may find it difficult, if not distasteful, to merge his efforts or expend his energies on such a joint task as we have in mind.

The educator, while interested in the home situation of his pupils, finds more and more demands upon his time through the regular curricular activities, and less and less opportunity for home visitation, or domestic counselling. Time and means for even the routine psychological tests now available for the school room, are at a premium, much more so the personnel and facilities for applying the results of such findings to individual needs.

As for the clergyman—and I speak feelingly here—he too often finds himself torn between the ever-present demands of administrative routine, community projects, pastoral responsibilities, and pulpit standards. To ask him to undertake a co-operative program of marriage (or domestic) counselling, is to expect more than he feels he can do.

Aside from these obvious limitations among the professions mentioned, we must admit that there are other and hidden obstacles which defy those who would propose such a venture. Among these are convictions, opinions, and conflicting philosophies, not to mention a variety of techniques which seem to run counter to those of other professions.

For example, there is the clergyman who insists that he has no proper concern for the social problems and procedure of the social worker; and the social worker who considers all clergymen to be hopeless victims of gullibility. Or here is the physician who interprets all social and personal reactions and behaviour in terms of glandular secretions, and therefore resents the approach and methods of the clergyman and sociologist.

My dream and hope is that the time may soon come when we of the clergy are able to distinguish more clearly between moral and physical, social and spiritual causes of domestic problems and personality deficiencies. Until that time arrives we shall be to a degree ineffective and inadequate in the accomplishment of our goal.

But I would not for a moment imply that the minister is more guilty in this respect than is the physician, educator, or social worker. All these professions come in for their share of guilt at this point, and until a higher degree of discrimination and mutual appreciation is achieved, we shall be handicapped in the task of domestic counselling.

WE NEED—and must have—a deeper sense of mutual dependence, and a higher concept of professional responsibility. To attain these we must first count the cost—for cost us it will! We shall be misunderstood, criticized, perhaps condemned by some of our clientele. We shall find ourselves called upon to contribute time and skill to those whom society may consider to be of little importance or worth. We shall be imposed upon by the inconsiderate, plagued by the ignorant, and haunted by the unfortunate, but the prize is the reclamation and rehabilitation of human lives. As these are brought to emotional stability, wholesome living, and personal maturity, we shall find that we have made a lasting contribution to the society of which we are a part, and to the world in which we live.

But to call your attention back more specifically to our subject, it is my contention and conviction that, if marriage counselling is to be done it can best be accomplished by harmonious, voluntary, and enthusiastic co-operation between the interested professions, especially the four mentioned above. Before this ideal can be realized, definite steps must be taken to increase mutual understanding and strengthen mutual appreciation between these professions. As proof of this statement I need only cite your attention to the conflict and open opposition which the Planned Parenthood Federation of America has received, and continues to receive, from the Roman Catholic Church. Such opposition is too important to be ignored, but it is not too powerful to be counteracted if and when leaders of the four major professions attain a degree of mutual understanding, agreement, and co-operation which we are proposing.

That these professions must work together for the welfare of the homes of America is argued by the fact of the unity of purpose and of goal which these professions mutually seek to accomplish. The very nature of the human material with which we must work, requires us to combine our energies and skills to this end.

To illustrate my point, may I be pardoned for paraphrasing a familiar Scripture passage? "The physician cannot say unto the clergy, I have no need of thee: nor again the social worker to the educator, I have no need of you. . . . Nay, much more those professions of the community, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary." In fact "there should be no schism among these professions; but the professions should have the same care one for another. And whether one profession suffer all the community suffers with it; or one profession be honored, all the community rejoices with it."

As Dr. Charles A. Ellwood, the sociologist, says: "We shall not succeed in straightening out our social life by straightening out simply our economic system, or our government, or our religion, or our sanitary conditions; nor shall we succeed by paying attention merely to one of these at a time; for the social life is a unity. . . . We need a synthesis of social movements as well as of social theories."

If this is true of society in general, it must be true of the family in particular. Here, in the needs, problems, and potentialities of the home we have need for the closest cooperation between those who are equipped to offer aid through counselling. The best results cannot be obtained by the physician if, unaided and directed, the patient is suffering from chronic exhaustion or depression as a result of religious frustration or spiritual repression.

The clergyman cannot expect sound and dependable adjustment on the part of his parishioner whose whole attitude is affected by an over-active thyroid.

How can the educator achieve satisfactory results when the pupil is limited by a sense of inadequacy and insecurity resulting from maladjusted and socially immature parents?

Here, then, is our dream of the working basis upon which to build our program of marriage, or domestic, counselling. To achieve it we need in the state, and in our local community, a kind of Marriage Counselling Bureau where individuals of all ages, as well as couples contemplating marriage, or those already married, may seek intelligent guidance and counsel from a competent staff of physicians, educators, social workers, and clergymen.

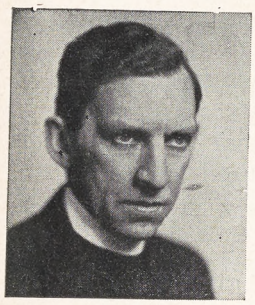
Once a staff is formed, it should be provided with such equipment and tests as may enable it to make a four-square appraisal, of personality profile, of every person involved in the construction of human personality and happy homes. Through the guidance of these specialists curricular will be provided, and assistance rendered to individuals and homes toward the formation of a balanced program or design for living.

As we undertake such a proposal we shall discover a variety of procedures. Each community must choose that one which seems most practical for it. One suggestion may stimulate further thought and research.

First, let a group of interested physicians, social workers, educators and clergymen meet together to consider the needs and resources for marriage counselling in the local community. Once this is done steps should be taken toward the enlistment of other leaders in these fields who will agree to participate in such a program.

Having enlisted this enlarged group of volunteer workers, a program of community education setting forth the need and resources for marriage counselling should be arranged. Pastors in their churches, educators in their school rooms, physicians in their offices, and social workers in their visiting will be constantly alert to discover sources of conflict and maladjustment, and promptly establish contact between parent and pastor, wife and physician, father and school teacher, young person and social worker as the facts in the case may demand.

To improve techniques, increase understanding, deepen cooperation members of these professions will need to meet frequently to consider aims, methods, approaches, and procedures which will best accomplish the desired results among the individuals and families under their care. Reading, study, observation, and practice will add to the store of knowledge and efficiency of operation as together we face the task.



In the light of the mass of statistics and tragic facts that come to us from a world community which is in the throes of a great upheaval; in the presence of human wreckage which might have been prevented; in reach of knowledge and methods which could greatly relieve much of the burden of crime and personality disintegration; shall we not fully and freely offer such skills, technique and experience as the several professions have acquired, and offer them unitedly that men, women, children, and America may be saved? Such, it seems to me, is the task, and such the challenge of Marriage Counselling which lie before us today. Have we the courage, energy, vision and willingness to undertake it together?

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THERE have been pieces in this column about phases of the United Nations Conference; the issues; the personalities; the side shows; the opposition groups. Above all it has been stated from the beginning that the fifty nations represented in San Francisco would succeed in doing what they gathered to do: write a Charter establishing a World Organization to maintain peace and remove the causes of war. This Charter will be an accomplished fact probably by the time this number of THE WITNESS reaches you.

This does not mean however that the job is done. The Charter has to be ratified by the governments of the fifty nations represented here. Our task is to see that the United States Senate ratifies as speedily as possible. There is every indication that the President will present the Charter to the Senate immediately upon the signing of the document in San Francisco. That there are forces already at work urging delay goes without saying. It is their opinion, as one Senator who opposes the World Organization has suggested, that delay will give the opposition a chance to play up petty squabbles between nations, becloud the issues, destroy the confidence of the people and thus defeat the painstaking job that has been done at the United Nations Conference.

It is our task to see that this does not happen. This can be done by insisting in our conversations that San Francisco did accomplish what it set out to do — write a Charter for a World Organization. It is a start for world unity which can be improved as things develop over the years and nations and peoples learn to trust one another.

Above all we must write our Senators urging them to vote for ratification, and that speedily. It is obvious that the Senate cannot take up, point by point, the many matters that were settled, often with great pain, in San Francisco. It is a take-it-or-leave-it affair, with changes and improvements in what is admittedly an imperfect document to come through a process of trial-and-correction. We are going to hear a lot about the Monroe Doctrine; about U. S. sovereignty; about the rights of small nations; about lack of freedom for colonial peoples; about how we are suckers for the Russians. These cries will be raised by the same old crowd that has from the beginning tried to prevent that unity in peace which the United Nations attained in war. Some of them are sincere perfectionists who would rather have no world organization than an imperfect one. Some are Socialists, followers of Norman Thomas, who are blinded by their hatred of the Soviet Union. Some are pacifists who declare that if the world cannot immediately disarm totally that the whole thing comes to nothing. And there are many opposed who are fascists or semi-fascists, who are convinced that the privileged can maintain their power in this world only by driving a wedge between the Soviet Union and an American-British alliance.

These forces will be busy working on the thirty-five Senators who are today listed as "doubtful." That is the figure as near as I can get it from the best informed people I know. Thirty-five Senators who today do not know whether they will vote for ratification of the Charter or not. If all thirty-five vote against ratification, with the entire ninety-six Senators voting, there would be sixty-one voting for ratification and thirty-five against—several votes short of the necessary two-thirds.

So take no chances. Write your Senators. Urge —demand is not too strong a word—that they vote promptly to ratify the Charter.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

Flight to Destiny*. Edited by Ruth Isabel Seabury. Association Press. $1.25.

Those who had the privilege of knowing the late Theodore Carswell Hume will cherish this precious memento of his eager and devoted life. Those who never knew him will gain inspiration from it. It is first a brief account of his life and work and of his devotion to the cause of the World Council of Churches, written by the editor. Then follows a biographical sketch by Dr. Douglas Horton, ending with his death when the civilian plane in which he was flying to Stockholm was shot down off the Swedish coast and Ted was killed. Then follow a number of extracts from his journal and family letters. But the bulk of the book is made up of worship services, litanies and prayers composed by Dr. Hume. Young as he was, and just starting, one might almost say, on his career of service to the ecumenical church, he has left behind him a momentum of enthusiasm and devotion which will certainly travel on in the lives of all with whom he came in contact. —F.C.G.

Chaplain Leslie Glenn Urges Material On Ministry

Declares Men are Interested but that There Is Little Worthwhile Material to Give Them

Edited by Rita Rubin

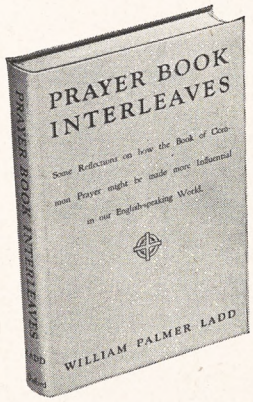
In the Pacific:—How far a sailor gets behind with news from home is indicated by a letter just received from Chaplain Leslie Glenn who writes: "I note that the Giants are in first place. Where are the Yankees? Bob Feller was on here (the ship Glenn is on) for quite awhile and we became close friends. Wait until Cleveland plays Washington after the war. Box seat for Glenn."

What the Chaplain was writing about particularly was the desire of so many men in the service to think of the ministry as a vocation after the war. In an open letter to the Rev. Frederick Fagley, vice-chairman of the army and navy commission, Commander Glenn states that "thoughtful chaplains I talk to, who are with men who have not seen their families in three or four years, believe we have a whole generation of men ready to listen as never before to the call to the ministry." The reasons for this, he thinks, are that their old jobs are gone and they don't want them back; they have had leisure to think; they have suffered so much, at least through "organized boredom," that they are ready to listen to the idea of vocation. The Chaplain goes on to say:

"The general commission got out a questionnaire two months ago asking all Protestant chaplains to send in the names of men considering the ministry. This is a splendid beginning. But the chief task is not to collect names and addresses of men already committed, but to stir up the chaplains to try to get more men to look at the ministry. To this end, all available material, from every church board, and from all seminaries, should be sent the chaplains. Not all in a big bundle, but in small quantities, once a month or so. In that way, our minds would constantly be reminded of this responsibility. Incidentally, this is true of every social and religious problem before the churches; they all ought to be sent out to the chaplains. Civilian clergy are bombarded with new ideas, chaplains are living in a vacuum.

"Individual churches can not do this alone. The Episcopal Church got up some pamphlets on the ministry a year ago, but could not get them out to any but its own chaplains. What if an Episcopal sailor has a Baptist chaplain? Or what about myself who have six Lutherans on board considering the ministry and I haven't any Lutheran material to give them? The general commission alone is capable of handling this. There should be a steady flow of ministry recruiting suggestions and helps to all chaplains from all the churches, I would even include the Roman Catholic chaplains. Many of them would see that it got distributed. There is usually a Protestant line officer who takes the lead in this when the only chaplain is a Roman Catholic.

"Then we ought to consider the great number of fine men in the armed services who were ministers without formal schooling of various Protestant groups, or who intended to study at the Moody Bible Institute etc. Many of them are outstanding in character and leadership. For the first time, in the army or navy, they meet a clergyman with a B.D. who says his prayers. If these ministers or lay evangelists could be directed toward college and seminary afterwards, their ministry would be enriched. Of course some of them would not be ready until 30 years of age, but there's precedent for that.



"I believe we have a chance, as never before, to raise the educational standard of the whole Christian ministry by presenting wider opportunities to men who would never have

Prayer Book Interleaves

By William Palmer Ladd

Late Dean of Berkeley Divinity School

Some Reflections on how the Book of Common Prayer might be made more influential in our English-speaking world.

"A wealth of liturgical and historical scholarship is here provided in suport of the principles of the Liturgical movement"—Canon Cyril E. Hudson in The Guardian (Eng.)

"The Anglo-Catholic and the Liberal Protestant will each find much that is pleasing, some things that are shocking, but everywhere a point of view that is fresh and stimulating."—The Churchman.

"The late Dean Ladd was a scholar of insight and independent judgment. He was perhaps our greatest liturgist. . . . The book is full of wise suggestions which any clergyman, young or old, can well take to heart."—The Chronicle.

"The 80 little essays contained in this volume reveal the wealth of his historical knowledge, together with his sound common-sense in drawing practical conclusions from his research. . . . Should be read and meditated by every clergyman."—The Living Church.

"It was said of him by an English scholar that he was the only man in the Anglican Communion, as both a historian or a liturgiologist, to write the history of the English liturgy. . . . Scholarly, unconventional, acute."—The Church Times (Eng.)

"Scholarly in substance, popular in form and filled with the spirit of sturdy, simple devotion."—Dr. F. C. Grant.

"The most stimulating book on the Prayer Book that I have read in many years . . . the very thing needed to revitalize the worship of our Church."—Rev. Lane W. Barton.

heard of such education if they had not gone into the services.

"There never has been a war like this one, and church leaders do not fully appreciate it yet. It's so long drawn out. The Revolution was seven years but few fought right through it and they went home to plow periodically etc. So with the four years of the Civil War. World War I was over before it began. The present war has uprooted more men than ever, for a longer time than ever. No one quite forsees the social consequences of this because few have weighed the fact of it. I believe the Commission ought to make the boldest plans because the situation is unprecedented.

"When the angel Gabriel blows his horn, there will still be someone shouting above the clamour, 'We don't need more men for the ministry, we need better men.' To which the answer is, "More men means better men.' If every theological school had more applicants than it could enroll, if the authorities of every church had more candidates than they could ordain, the standards would automatically go up, because there would be someone to chose from. My temper is touchy on this point because so often I have seen it as an excuse for inactivity. Every effort to challenge men for the ministry is diluted by the irrelevancy that we don't really need more men, but better men.

"I say, right now, let's stir up as many men as possible (naturally omitting professional gamblers and those who have remained second class seamen for three years) and when the war is over, let the bishops and church boards gradually weed out the less able. Those turned down will be finer Christian laymen for having once considered the ministry. Everyone who enters Harvard Law School does not become a lawyer. But the year or so training he gets in law helps him all the rest of his life. How much more would a year or so of theology help our laymen?"

Discounts Niemoeller

Toronto, Ont. (RNS): — People who talk of making Pastor Martin Niemoeller the chancellor of Germany are "inexpressibly mad," in the opinion of the Rt. Rev. George K. A. Bell, Anglican Bishop of Chichester, who has been visiting the U. S. and Canada as a representative of the World Council of Churches.

"He is a keen spiritual personality, but he would never make a statesman," declared the Bishop, who was in close touch with Niemoeller before the latter was jailed by Hitler. "He has an enormous lot to learn about things. We should remember that he has been in prison for eight years and there is a lot he does not know."

Bishop Bell made his observation in reply to a question as to what attitude might be taken toward the anti-Nazi pastor since he revealed after his release from imprisonment that he had offered at the start of World War II to command a German U-boat, as he did in World War I.

Discussing suggestions that Niemoeller should visit Great Britain and America, Bishop Bell remarked: "I hope he doesn't."

They must not find that the preparation given them for their sacred calling is less careful and complete than that given for military service.

Russians in England

London (wireless to RNS):—The Archbishop of York officially welcomed the three-man delegation of the Russian Orthodox Church which arrived in England on June 11 and remained until the 22nd. The head of the delegation was Metropolitan Nikolai of Krutitsky. Dr. Garbett said: "We welcome you for yourselves. We welcome you as representatives of a great Church. We welcome you as coming from a great and noble ally."

Among places visited were Westminster Abbey; the University of London; the House of Commons and Canterbury Cathedral. They also had a conference with the Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth Palace and with Archbishop Germanos of the Greek Orthodox Church. The delegation also visited York on the 16th and on the 18th they attended the Anglican Church Assembly at which Metropolitan Nikolai replied to addresses of welcome. The Soviet visitors also conferred with reperesentatives of the Free Churches.

Newark Clergy

Delaware, N. J.:—The clergy of the diocese of Newark met in conference June 18-20 at the holiday house here. The Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, recently retired president of Union Seminary, lectured on the use of the Bible in preaching; Prof. Theodore M. Greene of Princeton lectured on the art of preaching; the Rev. Stephen M. Kelker, former rector and now a personnel manager for an industrial concern, discussed how to minister to migrants, returned service men and how to deal with organized labor. Dr. Corydon Wassell, former missionary in China, widely known for his effective evacuation of wounded naval personnel from Java gave one lecture, and there were sessions on international relationships and the United Nations Conference led by the Rev. William B. Spofford.

Honor Rector

Cambridge, Mass.:—Nearly 1,000 persons paid tribute to the Rev. Ernest M. Paddock on June 8th, marking the 35th anniversary of his rectorship of St. James. Both Bishop Sherrill and Bishop Heron were present. The rector, to retire on July 1, was presented with a check for $3500.

Plans for Soldiers

New York: — General Seminary has announced plans for assisting returning service men who wish to prepare for the ministry. Featured is the establishment of a number of special groups which will make it unnecessary to lump the men together but will enable the Seminary to handle each case on its merits, adjusting the course of study to the particular problems and circumstances of the student. The second feature is the further development of a method of instruction in which the lecture-examination technique will be replaced, as far as feasible, by lecture - reading-conference - examination, in which the lecturer will assist the student in mastering the material by personal and group discussion.

Plans are also announced for a "refresher period," open to all former chaplains between their discharge and their return to parochial life.

Dr. Hayden Dies

Ann Arbor, Mich.:—Joseph Ralston Hayden, vestrymen of St. Andrew's here and one-time the vice-governor of the Philippines, died recently. The rector and vestry of the parish paid a tribute to him through a resolution which stressed his devotion to the church and his wise and constructive counsel.

International Unity

New York:—The executive committee of the United Council for Church Women, meeting here, reaffirmed its willingness to share food, goods and money for the restoration of normal living in other parts of the world.

Further realizing that peace is not secured until a spirit of trust, confidence and cooperation exists between the nations, the Executive Committee of the United Council urges that all possible means be used to build goodwill and unity. where. Ours is the diplomacy of spiritual values. Especially must this be carried out among the United States, Great Britain, Russia and China because of the great responsibility of these nations for maintaining peace in the new world.

We urge particular cultivation of understanding and friendly relations with the Soviet Union. On the ability of our two nations to work together for peace as we have worked together for victory, largely depends our chances for a secure world. Only in such an atmosphere of friendship and unity can the San Francisco Charter be an effective instrument for maintaining the peace.

FROM AN ARMY CHAPLAIN
Somewhere overseas

In these days of tragic and exciting events there is some reason for sound optimism in the larger picture. With the lessons we learned from what was alleged to have been a World War, World War I, so fresh and vivid, it doesn't seem possible that we can revert to the same or similar confusions, political and diplomatic, we indulged in then after the present promise of military victory has been fulfilled. It really seems to offer the best opportunity men have ever had to work out a way for international cooperation and good will and well being. Yet what is to be done in that sphere is so contingent upon what is done, what we become in the realm of morals and the intellect and the spirit, that a reasonable optimism as to practical solutions is considerably undercut. As I see it we are as much in danger of wishful thinking now in connection with morals as we proved ourselves to be in connection with the Nazi threat before and after 1939. With such an introduction I want to get something off my chest — concerning an editorial in THE WITNESS of March 1st entitled Yesterday and Today.

I don't feel ready to defend or wash out all of the old conventions. It need not be shown that they were all good in order to leave the question open as to whether some of them were essentially wise, even necessary.

What constantly baffles me is the non sequitur, the bald assumption, that because the older conventions have been scrapped they were bad and because youth accepts and follows the new ones (whatever they are) they are good and, the conclusion, it is silly to be apprehensive because all will be well in the end.

If that is a correct résumé of the point of view of this editorial then it is nothing short of ivory-towered tripe, blind to the facts that stare us in the face everywhere we look. There are young people whom I have married under the impression that it was as good material as one could find —the number of those marriages I now know to be on the rocks, where children are involved too, is a proportion that causes "apprehension," whether it is justified or not. With these facts before me, culled from my own pastoral field, the alternative to apprehension seems to be a humanistic disinterestedness or a blind, shallow, buoyant optimism that could be based on the activities of a healthy liver — never on the heart and affections and the reason. Over here really the optimism of the editorial seems utter nonsense. Married women whose husbands have been away for two, three and four years about to have babies, some of which will be black or brown. Young girls having babies who don't even know the names of the fathers, etc., etc.

THE WITNESS does a pretty good job generally. Getting this off my chest relieves the strain of the present situation.

ANSWER: The point of our editorial was this: in spite of present dangers, "we have been impressed to see how well matched and purposeful" are the majority of the war time marriages we have observed, and that most of the young people "are still mindful of the responsibilities of married life." No doubt the conditions are difficult overseas where abnormal conditions have prevailed for several years now. No doubt there are similar conditions here and there in America — we are merely rejoicing that they are not universal, and that so many war marriages are turning out satisfactorily.

REV. CHARLES LEWIS BIGGS
Clearwater, Florida

Is it not possible to admit into the formularies of the Church a larger measure of the authenticity and validity of modern knowledges? Is it not possible somehow to express and make groundwork of belief the greater and grander concepts of life and therefore of God which have been wrought for us by the astronomers and the bacteriologists? Is it not possible to get into the Church's formularies the more just and accurate picture of the divinely-human Christ brought out into the clear by a lengthening and widening line of Christian scholars like Seeley and Renan and Straus and Middleton Murry?

What I plead for is greater room in our religious expression for modern knowledges that have quite passed the experimental and tentative stage, even if those knowledges run counter to certain biblical and ecclesiastical subsumptions. What impresses me in these latter days is that our services of morning and evening prayer, in the presence of the inundation of modern science, have become, to use the expression of the Malvern Manifesto, "largely unsuitable." To this I should add our beautiful office of the holy communion with its undue emphasis on the death rather than the life and the living of our Lord Jesus.

I realize that this is a large order but I think it can be done without violence to our sense of adoration and without diminution of that reverence in our churches of which we are justly jealous. I think there is ample groundwork already in existence.

Bishop Parsons a Great Leader In Social Relations

Has Been the Champion of Unpopular Causes From the Very Beginning of His Ministry

By William Scarlett
The Bishop of Missouri

St. Louis: — The contributions which Bishop Parsons has made to the life of our Church are many and varied. Not the least of these has been his leadership in the field of Christian social relations. The Church usually has had such a prophetic leader, one who is considerably ahead of the Church of the day, but not too far ahead for his voice to be heard and his influence felt. Franklin Spencer Spalding, Bishop of Utah, was such an one in his day; Charles David Williams, Bishop of Michigan, in his time; in these latter years Edward Lambe Parsons. Few indeed who were present at the opening service of General Convention in the stadium at Cincinnati will ever forget the preacher of that occasion, or the edge which came into his voice as he said: "There isn't much chance of touching men and women fighting for their very bread in the coal fields or the cotton fields, with the message of love; nor to help the migratory worker ranging up and down our valleys in his rickety Ford car, with his wife and four or five children, hating the unsanitary camps where he must refuge, with sullen anger at the owners (who likewise need our sympathy in this impossible world); there isn't much chance to raise him up to God. Shall we say to him: 'Read your Bible, pray, have your quiet time'? Go and try it in the burning sun-baked valley, with bad water, no sanitation, a thousand quarreling children, no shelter, no privacy, and the hourly dread of being let out. Go try it! You will never again say that Christ has no concern with the social order."

It is out of his religious experience and convictions that his social thought and action has sprung. For one who believes in God and that God is concerned for human personality cannot himself escape concern for the social order which conditions human personality either for good or ill. And Bishop Parsons is, as Plotinus would have said, one who has "been there." And from having "been there" arises his social concern. "When thou seest thy brother thou seest thy Lord."

Over 21 years ago he had something to say about the point of view which every clergyman who has addressed himself to social problems has met in some troubled parishioner, "Why do you not stick to the simple Gospel?" In his Convention address of 1924 he said, "The faith once delivered to the saints has always been a comfort to the timid soul when he thought of it as nicely wrought creedal system and a round of religious duties. But . . . that faith is no comfort but rather a terror to him when it is suggested that it is the faith to follow Christ wherever he leads. The Lord Christ leads us face to face with terrifying questions. . . . We often hear men talk about the need of preaching the simple Gospel. It is a favorite view that the Gospel if properly presented is a simple, quiet exhortation to a moral life and comforting withal. . . . The simple Gospel is really a terrifying thing. It is Christ . . . who calls us to search to the root of our problems, who tells us that the way of salvation is by a new birth, a complete change of direction. It is Christ who challenges us to follow the Holy Spirit's guidance into all the truth. That is a challenge to think clearly about all the problems of life."

At the diocesan Convention in 1936, he said: "We must recognize that 'the world for Christ' is no easy achievement. It is not many years since men talked hopefully of the evangelization of the world in a generation. The great Student Volunteer Movement was born of the kind of enthusiasm which that faith produced. We have come to see that it is not the achievement of a generation but of long generations of hard work. . . . Nor is the social order fundamentally very different from those which have encompassed the individual ever since men emerged from primitive or patriarchal society. The ultimate trouble with capitalism is precisely the same as that which wrecked feudalism or swept away the ancient civilizations.

Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, chairman of the commission on social reconstruction, writes of the great contribution in that field made by his friend Bishop Parsons

It is an order taking shape to guard and increase the privileges of the strong. It rides ruthlessly over the weak. It is on the defensive the moment the 'humble and meek' begin to claim their place as children of God, and in that fundamental respect it is one, I say, with every social order which has gone before. I am referring, of course to the system and not to individuals who constantly rise above its limitations" . . . He speaks of the rise of mass movements: "for in this age we have unquestionably reached the time when the upward movement of the disinherited and underprivileged classes can no longer be stopped. That movement is part of men's striving for the Kingdom of God." He is concerned, however, about "the linking of this great movement to lesser aims and false foundations." And he adds, "Our goal is clear . . . Christ's way is the only way out. The Kingdom of God is the only goal worth striving for . . . Kagawa, the great Japanese Christian, has lately come among us preaching of the Kingdom of God, calling upon Christians to enlist in the Kingdom of God Movement. It is a worthier enlistment than in the ranks of communism or fascism or any other movement of the day . . . But what it means for you and for me is that we must judge every movement in the light of the Kingdom of God. However we vote, whatever economic views we take, we must always make our choice in the light of the Kingdom."

At the General Convention in 1933 Bishop Parsons helped to draw up the pastoral letter which stated that Christ demands a new Order. In 1937 he said: "It is not the business of the Church, I am sure every hearer of my words would agree, to espouse any specific economic theory, nor to identify the Gospel with any specific social legislation; but it is the business of the Church and of the Christian who is part of the Church to appraise all social and economic theory in the light of its effect upon the individual. Does it help or does it hinder his reconciliation to God?"

All through his life he has been closely associated with groups and movements having to do with social problems and conditions. For many years he has been President of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, which seeks to open the mind of the Church to the full social implications of the message of Christ, and to place before the Church a concrete program of social action. For many years he has been a vice-president of the American Civil Liberties Union, a rugged movement which seeks to secure the rights of men just as men without regard to the accident of antecedents. He has been one of the editors of Christianity and Crisis, a small journal which has made an invaluable contribution to the thinking of the Church in these years of decision.

In his own community he has engaged in many activities seeking to improve social conditions. In Berkeley he was the first president of the city's charity commission, and organizer and president of the charity organization society. He was a member of the Alameda County welfare board. He opposed the criminal syndicalism law, and was a member of the committee which endeavored to have it repealed and which defended those who were charged under this law. He was also prominent in the movement to free Tom Mooney. In fact it was supposed that he had "wrecked his usefulness forever" when he published a statement on the Mooney case. In the 1934 strike he took the lead in organizing the group which condemned the vigilante work then going on. He became interested in the Harry Bridges case and helped to organize the clergy who importuned the President on Bridges' behalf. He was the head of the anti-fascist committee which backed the Spanish Republicans in the civil war. Time recently said that the three Bishops in America who had been the most outstanding friends of labor are Bishop Oxnam, Bishop Sheil, and Bishop Parsons. "I've had," he writes, "many amusing and interesting brushes with conservative friends both in and out of the Church; but on the whole they have been pretty nice!"

But beyond what he has thought and done perhaps his greatest contribution has been in what he himself is. To a multitude of people Bishop Parsons is the symbol of all that is best and highest in the Christian ministry. It is impossible to measure the influence of such a person; it would be like trying to "follow the flight of a song." But there are many ministers in our Church today, men on the firing line in out of the way places and men at grips with the problems of great cities who would testify that in the light of Edward Parsons they have seen the light, and at the fire of his courage and devotion their own has begun to blaze. May he continue for many years to contribute to the Church the leadership which only he can give.

Bishop Declares Roman Church Does Not Allow Freedom

He Issues a Sharp Warning that They Must Allow Religious Freedom in All Countries

By Religious News Service

New York:—A sharp warning to the Roman Catholic Church that they must stop discriminating against non-Catholics in countries where they are numerically the stronger, was issued by Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches, at a meeting of the Protestant Council here. At the same time he pointed out that there is increasing fellowship between the Protestant and the Orthodox Churches. The "surest way" to develop religious conflict in the United States "is for the Roman Catholic leadership to continue its policy of discrimination against non-Catholics as is now practiced in certain countries."

Bishop Oxnam said it had been hoped that chaplains serving together in the army and navy would become a force for greater understanding between the faiths when the war is over, but "the policy of the Roman Catholic Church in the matter of religious liberty seriously hindered the cooperation that should characterize religious groups in the United States."

"Individual chaplains of different faiths have come to respect one another, and the respect has deepened into affection," he declared. "But church policies, if unwise, may destroy this fellowship. It is a Protestant principle that religious liberty should be maintained. The Protestant will fight for the liberty of the Roman Catholic to worship, to educate, and to serve in accordance with the dictates of his conscience."

Asserting he had talked with 500 chaplains on his recent visit abroad, and that "no single subject was discussed at greater length." Bishop Oxnam stressed that "the Protestant asks very simply that the Golden Rule be applied in the realm of religious liberty and that the Roman Catholic Church in every land in which it serves do unto others as it would be done by."

He hailed increasing cooperation and understanding between Protestant and Eastern Orthodox churches as "a fact of profound significance to Christian leaders," and expressed the opinion that "the peoples who will in large measure determine the course of the next century are Protestant or Eastern Orthodox."

"In Great Britain," he said, "the population is overwhelmingly Protestant, the Roman Catholic population constituting but 7 per cent of the total. In the United States, there are two Protestants for each Roman Catholic, and the Protestant churches are growing at a rate slighty faster than that of the Roman Catholic Church. The church in Russia is Eastern Orthodox."

Citing instances of closer fellowship, Bishop Oxnam said "these facts are evidence of the Protestant and Eastern Orthodox recognition of their new responsibility."

Meanwhile the story is wirelessed from London of the special service held in Westminster Abbey in honor of the first official delegation of the Russian Orthodox Church to visit England. Here the Archbishop of Canterbury spoke feelingly of the "comradeship which gloriously sustained our two nations through the war" and said that peace depends "not a little" on the contribution which the two Churches could make. He said that it "mattered much" that the Orthodox and Anglican Churches, and every Church in Europe, should stand together.

ARCHBISHOP DEFENDS BRITISH COUNCIL

By Sydney C. Luckner
Religious News Service Correspondent

London (wireless): — The British Council of Churches was vigorously defended here by the Archbishop of Canterbury when critics applauded a motion before the Church of England Asssembly to reduce by 250 pounds a 1,275-pound grant proposed for the Council. The motion was moved by Mrs. Eric Coombes, a London member, who was loudly acclaimed when she protested against "the vague theology" underlying the Council and complained of the "frittering of money in small ways when greater needs remain unmet."

When the dean of Chichester rose to defend the Council, his speech was frequently interrupted, but the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is president of the Council, followed with an uncompromising address that commanded attention. "It is true," the Archbishop said, "that there will not be found in the documents of the Council a full statement of the Anglican doctrine at its highest. That is not the purpose for which the Council exists. It exists to tell people, in an age when atheism is rampant, that there are certain common convictions shared by Christians of all kinds and which have a certain effect on the kind of social life that people lead. It is a simple fact that the people of this country are prepared to listen to the Christian churches when they speak unitedly, whereas they will not listen to them in separation, still less in antagonism."

Bishop William Remington of Eastern Oregon was elected Suffragan Bishop of Pennsylvania on the second ballot at a special convention held in Philadelphia on June 27. He received 111 clerical and 87 lay votes while the Rev. Chauncey Snowden of Overbrook received 68 clerical votes and 42 lay votes

Remarking that Mrs. Coombes' objection was said to be based on principle, the Archbishop argued that the logical outcome of this stand would be for the Assembly to disallow any grant at all. "If the Assemby did this," he added. "I should have to consider whether I preferred being president of the British Council of Churches or Archbishop of Canterbury."

At the end of the Archbishop's address, Mrs. Coombes withdrew her motion.

MILLION A YEAR FOR PUBLICITY

London (wireless to RNS):—A proposal that the Church of England spend up to a million dollars annually for an educational and publicity campaign to "convert England to the Christian faith" was submitted to the Church Assembly by the commission on evangelism appointed in 1943 by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York. Action on the report was deferred by the Assembly until its fall sessions. The report, which has been widely hailed as one of the most important documents ever received by the Assembly, painted a gloomy picture of religious life in Britain and called for an unprecedented effort to combat irreligious tendencies.

Increased use of modern propaganda media was recommended including the cinema, stage, radio, television, and the press. It was proposed that the campaign be extended for five years.

Calling attention to the numerical inadequacy of the clergy, the commission stated that between the two wars the population of England increased by 4,000,000, but the clergy decreased by 3,000. During this acute post-war shortage, it warned, the temptation will be for the laity to demand, and bishops to permit, a lower standard of training and personal qualification in order to save parish priests from breaking down under an impossible strain. "We are convinced," the report said, "that were the Church to succumb and to lower instead of raising the ordination standard, fatal and far-reaching damage would be done to the cause of true religion, above all, to the cause nearest the Savior's heart—evangelism."

The report suggested, as a means to relieve the clergy, recruitment and fuller use of women and also greater use of laymen, declaring that "the clergy are far too few to do more than touch the fringe of the problem of evangelizing the whole country," and that "it is only possible for the Gospel to reach the whole population through the active cooperation of all church people."

Commenting on ecumenical cooperation, the commission said that in a divided Church evangelism can only be conducted on one of three grounds: ignoring divided fellow Christians; ignoring vital dogmatic differences; and the ecumenical method. Commenting on the third method, the commission stated: "If the ecumenical method itself is not to degenerate into undenominationalism, it calls for continuous integrity, training, and critical self-awareness, none of which is at present widespread."

BISHOP JAMES BAKER HITS PAPERS

Los Angeles (RNS): — Newspaper editorial and articles calculated to cause ill feeling against Russia were described as the "poisoned press" by Methodist Bishop James C. Baker, who was a consultant at the San Francisco Conference. "To accuse Russia of insincerity in her desire to help establish and maintain peace, in view of her leaders' statements and actions, is a betrayal of the spirit of humanity.'

NEW CARDINALS EXPECTED

Rome (wireless to RNS): — Pope Pius is expected to convene a consistory later this year when about a dozen cardinals will be appointed, among them Archbishop Spellman of New York. Reports that the New York churchman will also become papal secretary of state are given credence in some quarters here because of the European political situation. While the choice of a non-Italian to the important office is a departure from Vatican tradition, it is felt that the expansion of the influence of the Russian Orthodox Church in Europe would force Rome to look to the western hemisphere and particular to the United States for a large part of its support.

CHURCH PENSION FUND REPORTS

New York:—Assets of $38,992,676 and an annual pension roll of $1,378,528 are reported in the 1944 report of the Church Pension Fund, just issued. The increase in assets during the year was $1,363,253 while the market value of the Fund's investments is now $2,635,508 in excess of their book value. Since the inception of the Fund in 1917 it has paid out approximately $25,000,000 to beneficiaries.

EDITORIALS

A Christian Gentleman

THE CAPACITY for making friends deserves little credit but the ability to keep them is another story. Propinquity, personal appearance, similarity of interests are among the adventitious circumstances which account for the beginning of a friendship, but when friendships last for a lifetime they cannot be explained by any accidental factors.

Edward Lambe Parsons is a man with many friends. Still retaining the regard of college mates and keeping up such intimacy with them as differing responsibilities permit, one might say that he has walked through life acquiring and keeping friends. His notable ministry has been marked by a keen understanding of its opportunities and a wise solution of its problems, but its usefulness has been due less to his fine mind and quick perception than to the facility with which the people in the communities in which he lived have been drawn into the circle of his friendliness.

Bishop Parsons has never disguised his convictions. He is able to differ theologically from his fellow churchmen without losing their confidence. He has not hesitated to espouse the unpopular side of an issue, as when he pleaded for justice for Tom Mooney whom he believed to have been condemned for a crime he did not commit. Those who thought him mistaken honored his courage and sincerity. His economic principles are well known, but many who oppose them are warmly attached to him. He has had enemies of course, as every positive character must, but they have been astonishingly few.

What explains the unanimity with which so many have valued his friendship? Perhaps the first characteristic to notice is his unfailing courtesy. Social training does not guarantee that conduct. Experts in social usage can be unbelievably rude. Respect for the personality of one's associates, acquaintances, or those with whom one comes in casual contact, is the secret of true courtesy. Without that respect one neither makes nor keeps friends. Suspicion that this attitude, which we commonly take for granted, is lost, embitters the closest and strongest of ties. Finally an undemandingness, a forgetfulness of self and a readiness to promote the comfort and well-being of another, creates a loyalty which has every prospect of enduring.

Such qualities — courtesy, respect, selflessness — are not the products of environment nor inheritance however much these factors may influence behaviour; they are created by faith in him who showed us the worth of the individual soul and the love of a universal Father. A Christian gentleman makes and keeps friends. Edward Lambe Parsons is such a gentleman.

"QUOTES"

A NEW ORDER is coming whether we like it or not. We are living in the twilight of the gods of capitalism. We cannot help the coming night but we can do our part in trying to make the new order, whose dawn a not far distant generation will welcome, one which approximates more closely the commonwealth of love. Its goal must be that commonwealth. The dedication of its citizens must be to the common good. Freedom must be a reality in order that men may really grow toward the measure of Christ and indeed that there may be any kind of free fellowship at all.

—Edward L. Parsons
From Christ Demands a New Order, a leaflet of the Church League for Industrial Democracy of which he is president.

A Civic Leader

SOME clergymen never seem to break out of the confining walls of a parish church and some bishops become so involved in diocesan affairs that they have no time for community interests. Edward L. Parsons, either as rector or bishop, never could be that kind of a Church leader. By temperament and conviction he has had to be always a part of the life of his home community in its broadest aspects.

His interest in civic affairs stems from his profound conviction that religion is concerned with all of life. The ivory tower philosophy is abhorrent to him because it denies our Lord's concern for the physical and social welfare of one's fellows. Bishop Parsons is still an unreconstructed liberal and unashamed of the label. Further than that he has a real love for people — all kinds of people — which overcomes the natural shyness and reticence that often makes such men withdraw from their fellows. And there is also a surprising fearlessness in him which offers one of the best modern examples of the strength of the terrible meek.

Of course, he has been criticized bitterly by powerful reactionaries in the Church and out. It all started when as the new Coadjutor of California he came out in defense of Tom Mooney in the days when to say anything on Mooney's behalf was the rankest sort of heresy. Some have never forgotten nor forgiven that. And when to his initial "mistake" one adds his well-known sympathy with labor, his defense of Harry Bridges, and his willingness to sponsor any cause which he believes to be right on the liberal side, in a city and diocese where these issues have been exceedingly hot, it is not difficult to understand why he was a prophet without honor in his own country during the latter years of his active episcopate.

Not that there were not those who honored him. There were and are thousands without the Church as often as within who still think of him as the leader of the liberal cause. He is much in demand as a speaker and adviser to many groups. He is an active and important member of the Commonwealth Club — that unique San Francisco organization which does a remarkable job in resolving controversial issues and molding public opinion.

Not often does a prophet outlive the criticisms of his enemies, but Edward L. Parsons is one of those favored few. One of the great satisfactions those of us feel who have always admired and believed in him, is to see him full of years, yet full of physical and mental vigor, and honored as a great citizen of the city to which he has given so much for so long.

Bishop Parson's Liturgical Work

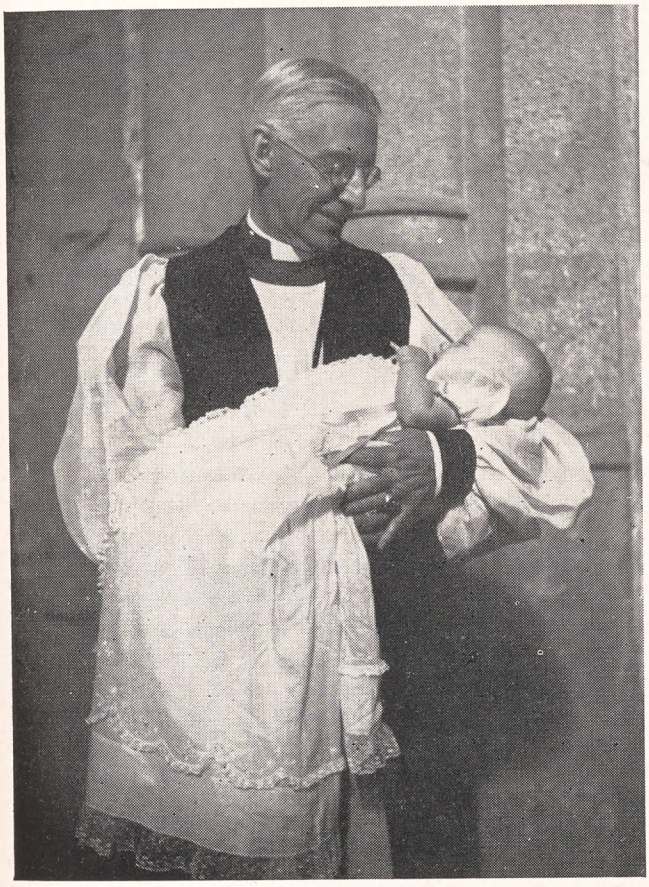
by Bayard H. Jones

Professor at the University of the South

IN 1894, EDWARD LAMBE PARSONS, newly ordered deacon at the age of 26, became curate at Grace Church, New York, under the Rev. William R. Huntington. Dr. Huntington, then rightly celebrated as "the First Presbyter of the Church," had been the mainspring of the revision of 1892. The richness and power of his mind are convincingly preserved to us in his Short History of the Book of Common Prayer (Whitaker, N. Y., 1892). This little book is remarkable for a heartiness and humanity, an urbane humor and a sort of relishing gusto, which clothe with vigor and grace the author's scholarly grasp, and his profound awareness of the needs of the Church of his day.

Young Mr. Parsons had the benefit of hearing Dr. Huntington discourse often and at large on the issues of the worship of the Church during the movement for Prayer Book revision from 1878 to 1892. But Huntington also remembered vividly the great days of the Muehlenberg Memorial of 1853 — that frustrated attempt toward comprehensiveness of the Church, and flexibility of its liturgy, which was nevertheless a prophecy of good things to come, and an inspiration of movements still working mightily in our Church to this present day. Thus Mr. Parsons was made the heir of a living tradition, his historical perspective enriched by a vital inherited memory of times anteceding his own actual lifetime.

The particular interest in the Church's worship as determining its faith and expressing its life which was thus implanted in Mr. Parsons' early days, remained as an important preoccupation of the future Bishop's parochial ministry. He was a broad and assiduous scholar, reading every year all the principal current contributions to every department of sacred learning, assimilating them in his lucid mind, and applying them effectively in his preaching and teaching. The field of liturgics was by no means neglected. As rector of two large parishes in California, St. Matthew's at San Mateo and St. Mark's at Berkeley, his services were models of dignity and propriety. Without any assumption on his part, he gradually became known as a diocesan authority on the history and use of the Book of Common Prayer. When a movement for another revision appeared in the diocese of California, the tactical direction of the undertaking was by common consent committed to him.



The occasioning cause of the movement was the act of the Rev. Clifton Macon, who still, at 77, is in active service, and a vigorous champion of Prayer Book revision; but who then, as the new rector of Trinity, Oakland, innocently introduced the service of shortened Evensong, which had been legal in England since 1871. This proved too much for the ritual conscience of Dr. Bakewell, the rector emeritus, who solemnly but tenderly brought the case of ritual disobedience to the attention of Bishop Nichols. The result was a memorial from the Diocese of California, requesting a new revision of the Prayer Book.

At the General Convention of 1913 this memorial was formally presented on the floor of the House of Deputies by Archdeacon Emery, as senior deputy from the diocese; but the task of advocating it was performed by Mr. Parsons, so simply and cogently that the resolution was adopted in that House, and subsequently by the Bishops. When the joint commission for the revision of the Book of Common Prayer was appointed, Mr. Parsons was one of its charter members, and is now the sole survivor of that original group. When in 1931 a permanent standing liturgical commission was set up by canon, Bishop Parsons was elected its chairman, and still presides over its deliberations.

Those who are concerned with tracing the literary history of the Book of Common Prayer have cause to regret that no contemporary record has been preserved of the exact source of the alterations and additions of the last revision. Long and close association with the Bishop makes me think that I see his hand at a number of significant places; but it is only fair to say that in every such case he has disclaimed personal authorship. Of course the fact is, as I found later in the framing of the new lectionary, that in a great cooperative undertaking, there is no such thing as a personal pride of authorship; and after the work is completed, it is no longer possible even for the participants to say precisely who was responsible for each constituent. It is definitely known that Bishop Parsons wrote the collects for Independence Day, and for The Family of Nations. These are perfectly typical of his mind, in their simplicity, lucidity, forcefulness, and entire originality. But beyond that, it happens that I can bear witness to the nature of his liturgical work by inferences drawn from the privilege of collaborating with him in writing the book on The American Prayer Book (Scribners, 1937), which is still the principal standard treatment of the Prayer Book of 1928.

SHORTLY after the completion of the revision of 1928, a number of interesting and attractive little books were published, treating of the new Prayer Book in a popular manner. But W. L. Savage, religious editor of Charles Scribner & Sons, conceived the idea that all the older systematic manuals on the Book of Common Prayer had been made out of date by the revision: and specifically, that it was desirable to have a book to replace that of the Rev. Samuel Hart, and to spread before the Church all the new knowledge of the history and meaning of Christian worship which had been brought to light since Dr. Hart wrote, and which had so largely inspired the revision itself.

Mr. Savage first offered this task to Bishop Charles L. Slattery, the last chairman of the revision commission. Unfortunately, Bishop Slattery died before he had fairly made a beginning on this project. Then Mr. Savage patiently brought the matter to the attention of Bishop Parsons, as Bishop Slattery's successor as first chairman of the liturgical commission. Bishop Parsons accepted; planning to write the book with the invaluable collaboration of Dr. John W. Suter, Sr., who had been secretary of the revision commission since 1916. Dr. Suter assisted in drawing up a structural outline of the task; but found that his advanced age made it impossible to take part in the actual writing. The Bishop knew that with his diocesan responsibilities it would be indispensable to have some help in an undertaking of this size; and did me the signal honor of inviting me to share the work, knowing that for twenty years I had been making an intensive study of the history of Christian worship, though with the unusual restraint of not having published a word on the subject.

Of the many things I might say about my experiences in this fruitful and most enjoyable collaboration, there are three that seem worthy to go on record, as revealing the quality of Bishop Parsons' mind.

He said to me at the beginning, "Now if our book is to have any value, it must contain a critical estimation of the Prayer Book. No doubt this will mean sometimes that we think some mistakes were made, especially in comparison with other Anglican revisions. But while another revision must come, and perhaps soon, nevertheless we don't want to provoke another instantaneous revision by what we write now. So when we do disapprove, let us put the matter as impartially as possible; or remark artlessly that, say, 'the English book offers an attractive feature' in this or that; or if we have to be really severe, let us put the stricture in a foot-note, where no one but a competent scholar will read it!"

Then I represented to him that while I was utterly unknown in the Church, he was very well known, and would be held personally responsible for every expression appearing in the book. Therefore if we happened to hold divergent opinions on any point, we would discuss it through to a common agreement if we could: but if we could not, he must have an absolutely final editorial veto on every statement. He said, a little reluctantly, "Yes, I suppose you are right. I would be held so responsible." After the book was in print, I reminded him of this conversation — and also of the fact that we had always succeeded in finding a statement to which we could both subscribe, ex animo, so that he had never had to exercise his right of veto. "No!" he said: "I had never thought of that conversation from that day to this. But we always did get together, didn't we?"

But most of all I remember the extreme care with which the Bishop considered every expression, to make perfectly certain that not even any inadvertence would give gratuitous offence to any Churchman of any party. Even when he thoroughly agreed with me in something incisive I had written, he would not suffer a barb of even mildly malicious humor to remain. He had mastered the principle of James Russell Lowell's reproach of those who "leave the r out of sprightfulness!" I have always considered him one of the First Gentlemen of Christendom — possibly the only man I ever met who really lived up to Theodore Roosevelt's challenging definition: "A gentleman is a man who never hurts any one else's feelings unintentionally!"

From all this I absorbed from Bishop Parsons a principle which I am certain governed all his contributions to the content and use of the Prayer Book, and which I am convinced should be the fundamental charter of any future revision: a principle of trusteeship for the whole Church, and every party therein: a resolve that no proposed change should be partisan, in the sense of tendentious or propagandist, and an insistence that new liberties in one direction should be balanced by others in the opposite direction: so that in the result, no party should feel that it had lost ground, but that every party should feel its own position strengthened, its devotion enriched, and its witness enhanced. Precisely this spirit was basic to every liturgical contribution of Bishop Parsons: and I count it his most valuable legacy to the Church which he so richly serves.

Bishop Parsons and Unity

by W. Bertrand Stevens

The Bishop of Los Angeles

BISHOP PARSONS tells this story on himself. His small grandchild was taken once by her mother to a service at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin in San Francisco. The Bishop appeared in the pulpit garbed in the white sleeved rochet and black chimere at which the perplexed grandchild asked in a very audible tone, "Mother, why does grandpa preach in his shirt sleeves?" Perhaps this is a parable. When Bishop Parsons goes at important subjects it may be said that, with all his well known urbanity and courtesy, he goes at them in his shirt sleeves — as if he were really in earnest.

Young Edward Lambe Parsons, a Yale graduate, just out of the Episcopal Theological School and the Rt. Rev. Joseph Horsfall Johnson, the first Bishop of Los Angeles arrived in California at approximately the same time. Bishop Johnson used to lament that Ned Parsons chose to go to the San Francisco area rather than to come to the newer Church atmosphere of Southern California. Bishop Johnson (who, by the way, was one of the earlier American Tractarians) said southern California needed what Ned Parsons had to give. It is too late to do anything about that now except to say that as the years have passed, the diocese of Los Angeles has been proud and insistent in claiming a share in Bishop Parsons' life and influence. We have regarded him as one of California's first citizens and the fact that his appearance in the state goes back to the same year that the first Bishop of Los Angeles came gives him the right to be called a pioneer. Incidentally, in the early days of Stanford University, Dr. Parsons was the entire Philosophy department of the university. President Jordan placed his emphasis chiefly on the sciences, and when there came an insistent demand for philosophy he called in the young neighboring rector who for some time taught all the philosophy that was offered in that university, which was great even in its infancy.

Bishop Parsons' interest in unity is no recent development. Those who associate him only with the existing commission on approaches to unity forget that his two great passions have always been Christian unity and liturgics. In his early days he was also a doughty champion of the cause of the deaconess and of the education of deaconesses. He was for many years one of the very constructive members of the commission on faith and order and had given careful study to the causes that underlie the disunity of Christianity. But naturally the present generation knows him best as the leader and chairman of the commission on approaches to unity. The pastoral letter of the House of Bishops for 1928, a letter for which he was largely responsible, gives the key to his whole approach to the problem of unity. To him unity was no subordinate matter. "If the unity of society is the goal of man's striving, it is obvious that for the Church which foreshadows that goal and has to lead society to it, unity is no subsidiary or chance idea. It is essential." Nor is it to be any easy matter. "No commission in Christendom has in respect to unity a more complex task than ours. . . . We have in the good providence of God succeeded on holding together in some fashion two fundamental types of religious expression. But the extremes are far apart and often seem impossible to reconcile." But difficulties are not to discourage us. "We must move. We cannot wait for a day when through some miraculous divine intervention unity will drop upon us like a new Jerusalem from the heavens. We will seek for unity where the response is likely."

WHEN Bishop Brent proposed a "joint commission to act with similar commissions from the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches in the study of matters of Christian morality, looking toward organized unity" and Bishop Parsons was appointed he rubbed his eyes over the cumbersome and obscure title and accepted membership, feeling that somehow the commission might be an instrumentality in the furtherance of unity. (This was the famous commission that was to be made up of "younger theologians" and had only two men under sixty.) The late Bishop Fiske was convenor but he almost immediately withdrew and Bishop Parsons was elected chairman.

The committee largely dropped its cumbersome title and became for all practical purposes the "commission on approaches to unity." Early overtures towards the Methodists revealed the fact that because of their internal program for unity they were in no position to hold conferences with outside groups. That left the Presbyterians as the first body with which the commission would work and for such contacts Bishop Parsons was admirable. He had been a Presbyterian, in fact he had studied for the ministry of the Presbyterian Church and was highly regarded by the leaders of Presbyterianism.

Those ot us who have set with him in committees and especially in the commission on approaches to unity, have always been impressed by the boundlessness of his courtesy and kindness. The most trivial suggestions received his close attention and respect. He had the rare gift of presiding in such a way as to make everyone feel that he was having an important share in the proceedings. It would be a mistake, however, to regard him as mere coordinator and pacifier. He can explode if an explosion is required — never at persons, however, only at error and falsehood.

Nevertheless the predominating quality of Bishop Parsons as presiding officer is courtesy. It is no mere urbanity. It is always courtesy with fairness and he strives to understand the other man's point of view. On the commission on approaches to unity he sought to have represented those views that were the exact antithesis of his own. Fairness is native to him and he knew furthermore that it would not be just to the Church to secure a partisan victory in any matter so close to the core of the Christian religion as unity.

Bishop Parsons' kindness and fairness, however, are shared by others who could be mentioned. Not so his passionate faith in the possibility of unity. It is his hope, but it is also his deep seated conviction, that it is not too remotely realizable. Some of his critics have suspected him of deliberately ignoring difficulties. Those of us who know him best can testify that if at times he seems a jump or two ahead of the rest it is only because of that profound belief that if unity is God's will, mountains of difficulties can be removed. Withal he tries to think and act in concert with his more cautious brethren. Whatever history may say of the three tentative "approaches" of the commission on approaches to unity up to the time of the 1943 General Convention it must admit that Bishop Parsons, with rare statesmanship and fine Christian spirit, moved from one to the other with adaptability and a ready will to work experimentally.

Unrecognized by many there is in Bishop Parsons, as in all great religious leaders, much of the mystic. He feels thoroughly at home in ecumenical conferences when the clergy of the Orthodox Churches of the East speak frequently and insistently of the function of the Holy Spirit. He works at the task of creating the conditions that will make unity possible. He works in those figurative shirt sleeves. But he does so with the conviction that there is a spirit that broods over the troubled waters of our disunity that will ultimately guide us into all truth, not the truth of the spoken word alone but the all embracing truths of God's purpose.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

IN MEMORIAM: WILLIAM PALMER LADD
May 13, 1870 - July 1, 1941

IT IS four years since William Palmer Ladd entered into life eternal. Those who were not blessed with his friendship "face to face" have at least the good fortune of some acquaintance with his spirit and thought in the papers which he published in THE WITNESS, then gathered together, when at death's door, in the volume Prayer Book Interleaves. This is his last will and testament to the Church whose heritage he so dearly loved and for whose integrity, honesty and boldness of witness he so courageously fought. Few men have equalled him in so complete an understanding of the centrality of worship in religion, in so thorough a translation of its revelation into social action. He was a single-minded, but an open-minded man, with an indomitable will tempered by humility, patience and candor. He was never afraid of the truth, and he never stopped seeking it.

My own friendship with Dean Ladd began in the winter of 1938 and grew in intimacy until his death. I want to record here a few unforgettable memories. When I first wrote to him about making a visit to Berkeley he sent me a letter of urgent welcome (he always wanted to know young people), to which he added, characteristically, that the seminary had but one rule for visitors — they must be faithful in attendance upon morning chapel services. In this way, he said, visitors were made members of the School family. I have never known a more rare school regulation, nor a more proper one.

But my memory of Dean Ladd is associated with two chapels in New Haven, chapels unlike any others I have ever seen. One is the inimitable "upper room" of the seminary, where one discovered a worship formal without formality and artful without artificiality. In it we sang plainsong and prayed for social justice, a combination in worship not in the least incongruous. For plainsong is the communal folk-song of a once united Christendom. The other chapel was in the Yale Museum, the house-church from Dura on the Euphrates, the oldest extant place of Christian worship outside the catacombs. Dean Ladd literally made all his visitors go to see it. The two chapels, so distant in age and clime, united to describe the Church as the home of the family of God.

One of Dean Ladd's most passionate convictions was that the reunion of Christendom must center in the Eucharist and not in the ministry. To this end he bent every bit of his unfailing energy to get Christians of all persuasions to meet together and discuss the meaning of the Holy Communion. I recall a meeting he gathered in Newark, with the help of Dr. Douglas Horton, a Congregationalist and old friend of Middletown days. There were nine of us, two Episcopalians, a Lutheran, a Baptist, a Methodist, and two Roman Catholic Benedictines recently come to this country from Maria Laach Abbey in Germany, besides Dean Ladd and Dr. Horton. The Dean wanted to make this a permanent discussion group; but we came to grief when the Lutheran objected to the Dean's proposal that this type of discussion be encouraged among Young People's Groups. He said he did not think the liturgy a fit subject of consideration among "catechumens." This hit the Dean in a very tender spot; for he had already had great success in New Haven with his Liturgical League, an interdenominational project organized for young people, with the hearty cooperation of the local ministers.

Not only did Dean Ladd see the liturgy as the unifying principle in the Church Catholic, but he believed that the Liturgical Movement was the earnest of unity within our own Episcopal fold. He had a scorn of partisan churchmanship especially in matters liturgical which was truly prophetic, and his acid criticism cut into the prejudices of high, low and broad alike. He rightly saw that adoption of the principles of the Liturgical Movement would modify the traditions and usages of all parties. The liturgy is a living thing, and needs constant adaptation to be made relevant to the issues of human society. No greater tribute to Dean Ladd's truly 'catholic' and 'liberal' spirit, and to the ministry of Christ which he lived, has been paid than that of the congregation of all sorts and conditions of men, white and black, rich and poor, who gathered at his Requiem to thank God for one who so served in his generation as to be gathered unto his fathers, "having the testimony of a good conscience; in the communion of the Catholic Church; in the confidence of a certain faith; in the comfort of a reasonable, religious, and holy hope, in favour with . . . God, and in perfect charity with the world." And we all sang his favorite chorale:

Wake, awake, for night is flying:
The watchmen on the heights are crying,
Awake, Jerusalem, arise!

Kimber Den Expresses Thanks For Generous Support

He Tells of Fifty More Families Joining His Christian Rural Service Union Station

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—An air mail letter dated April 14, that cost him thirteen Chinese dollars to send, has just been received from the Rev. Kimber Den, thanking WITNESS readers and CLID members for the support you are giving to his Christian Rural Service Union at Kiangsi, China. "I am anxious to let you know that I am still surviving in spite of all experiences of trials and dangers," he writes. "For a short time last winter we were threatened with the danger of immediate invasion, but by the grace of God we were again spared the horrors of fighting near us. Now we are again enjoying peace which gives us cause for much praise and thanksgiving. Since the winter refugees from all corners in this province flocked to us. The whole staff of our mission in Southern Kiangsi has also come to us after their evacuation in January. Our field service center has recently been made one (here three lines were cut from the letter by the censor of the U. S. army.) I do hope that we have the strength and resources to develop our religious work in proportion to the vast developments of other activities of life.

"As to my own work I am still on the go as usual in spite of our financial difficulties which seem to have no end. So we are in need of your help more than ever before. Without the help that has come to us from America, and particularly that given so generously by WITNESS readers and CLID members, we would hardly have been able to carry on at all. I can tell you that it is highly appreciated. I have no idea when and how this letter will get to you but if it does arrive by some miracle at some remote future it will surely bring to you and all my many friends in America my best love and greetings."

Also on June 22 the Presiding Bishop released a letter he had received from Den, telling of the arrival at his center of a new group of fifty refugee families. He has put them to work on his land-reclamation project in a new colony about four miles from the field service center at Lichwan. Mr. Den said that these people all migrated from the South China Seas, chiefly from the Malaya Peninsula where they had lived for many generations. "Since the Japanese invasion," he said, "they were driven out by hunger and starvation. Not long ago I visited their colony on a short inspection tour. As I watched a group of them working in the hot sun, barefoot and knee-deep in muck, their bronze skin glistening with sweat, I could not help marveling at the spirit of their hard toil and also the epochal transformation that this war has wrought in them. Even the white-haired women were wielding spades and shovels on the farm with a vigor and steadiness that would have done credit to any worker anywhere. Owing to lack of funds, we did not provide them with any cattle to help them in their farming. However, they work very happily under many handicaps. By this time next year they expect to raise a crop of rice and other agricultural products that will help them to live on and to stand on their own feet financially. Nothing gratifies me more than to help this group of hard-working refugees to rehabilitate themselves on a new basis of life both physically and spiritually. Should I have ever accomplished anything in this work of relief it is truly, 'The Lord who has made me fruitful in the land of my affliction'."

We have not yet received acknowledgement of the receipt of the last $1,000 sent to Kimber Den which was forwarded to him by cable. That is the way things are these days in China. There have been times in the past when it has taken nearly a year to get cash into his hands. But so far it has always arrived. We are now planning to send him another $1,000 not later than the first of August. And as readers undoubtedly know a thousand American dollars is multiplied many, many times when exchanged into Chinese currency.

There are those, we feel sure, who will wish to make a thank offering for the great leadership given the Church by Bishop Parsons to whom this number is so largely devoted. Among his many activities he has for years been the president of the Church League for Industrial Democracy which in the past five years has raised many thousands of dollars for Kimber Den's work. If you are one so disposed kindly make your check payable to "Treasurer, CLID" and mail it to the CLID, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N.Y. Incidentally the letter we received from Kimber Den written last October stated that $15 would still care for a refugee child for an entire month. Whether this is still true we do not know. In any case we know that we speak for Kimber Den and his many refugees when we say that they will be grateful for any donations, large or small.

Prayer Book Interleaves

By William Palmer Ladd

Late Dean of Berkeley Divinity School

Some Reflections on how the Book of Common Prayer might be made more influential in our English-speaking world.

"A wealth of liturgical and historical scholarship is here provided in suport of the principles of the Liturgical movement"—Canon Cyril E. Hudson in The Guardian (Eng.)

"The Anglo-Catholic and the Liberal Protestant will each find much that is pleasing, some things that are shocking, but everywhere a point of view that is fresh and stimulating."—The Churchman.

"The late Dean Ladd was a scholar of insight and independent judgment. He was perhaps our greatest liturgist. . . . The book is full of wise suggestions which any clergyman, young or old, can well take to heart."—The Chronicle.

"The 80 little essays contained in this volume reveal the wealth of his historical knowledge, together with his sound common-sense in drawing practical conclusions from his research. . . . Should be read and meditated by every clergyman."—The Living Church.

"It was said of him by an English scholar that he was the only man in the Anglican Communion, as both a historian or a liturgiologist, to write the history of the English liturgy. . . . Scholarly, unconventional, acute."—The Church Times (Eng.)

"Scholarly in substance, popular in form and filled with the spirit of sturdy, simple devotion."—Dr. F. C. Grant.

"The most stimulating book on the Prayer Book that I have read in many years . . . the very thing needed to revitalize the worship of our Church."—Rev. Lane W. Barton.

Support for Charter

New York (RNS): — The United Nations Conference performed "a great task of creation" in fashioning a charter which can be a "Magna Carta for the world," John Foster Dulles told the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches meeting here last week.

Because Church agencies had criticized the Dumbarton Oaks security proposals, Mr. Dulles stressed that "the charter which emerges from San Francisco is a totally different instrument than the draft of Dumbarton Oaks."

"To a very large extent the specific recommendations made by our church groups have been given effect," he stated.

The basic conception of Dumbarton Oaks, he pointed out, was that a few great powers would wield overwhelming military might to repress violence, but at San Francisco the emphasis was shifted.

"The Charter," he declared, "was rewritten to make the organization one which would promote justice and human welfare. There was a tremendous development of what our Commission has referred to as 'curative and creative' processes."

He added that the "result will be an organization which is subjected to principles of justice and of international law and which is designed to recommend the change of any conditions which might impair those principles or the general welfare or friendly relations among nations."

"It will be an organization which is dedicated to protect human rights and fundamental freedoms without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion; to create conditions of stability and well being and, through international cooperation, to promote higher standards of living and cultural and educational cooperation," he said.

"It will be an organization which binds members to treat the administration of nonself-governing peoples as a sacred trust: to protect those peoples from exploitation and to develop self-government and free political institutions."

EDWARD LAMBE PARSONS

President

THE Church League for Industrial Democracy welcomes this occasion to salute Bishop Parsons who has been the President of the organization for many years, succeeding the late Bishop Williams of Michigan.

Bishop Parsons writes of the League as follows: "The CLID exists only to help the Church and its people to go forward with more complete devotion to the mission of making the whole world Christian. Its appeal for a thorough-going discipleship is no new appeal. It is but the re-emphasis of the age long appeal of Christ. It asks us to think again and yet again what our discipleship means and then go out and live as the new realization of God and Christ demands. The appeal is to honesty and purity and self-control—yes—but it is also to love and service; and love and service will not be satisfied until the Kingdom of God, the cooperative commonwealth, has come among us."

THE REV. F. RICKSFORD MEYERS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Detroit

Three cheers for the churchwoman of St. Paul, Minn., who suggested in THE WITNESS (May 17) that we need a Fair Employment Practice Committee in the Episcopal Church.

MR. F. L. KERSHAW

I believe THE WITNESS is giving a very useful help to those desiring to live a modern Christian life. Things worthwhile are presented in your columns in which you urge your readers to become interested.

MR. JOHN KREMER
Layman of Philadelphia

Your editorial Victory in Europe is very fine and very timely. My own pastor has repeatedly warned us of the corporate sin of this nation and I hope we realize it before it is too late.

ROSE PHELPS
Contributing Editor of THE WITNESS

Returned from the Philippines, the Reverend Clifford Nobes ended his recital of tortures by putting thumb and finger close together and saying, "My Christian charity and forgiveness has narrowed to about that as far as the Japs are concerned. And I say that deliberately as a minister of the Gospel." (WITNESS May 31)

One can easily sympathize for a moment before one feels ashamed of oneself, as no doubt Mr. Nobes did when he saw his statement in print. And the shame is more nearly true than the sympathy.

Either Christ died for sadists, for monsters of cruelty, for perverts, for corrupters of young people, or else the religion he founded is just pale pink eyewash. He said he came "to save sinners"—a declaration no mere man would think, or dare, to make. We stack up our cold hearts, our narrow, rigid minds, our ungenerous actions, our self-serving instincts, confess such of our faults as we can permit ourselves to see, receive him at the altar, and fondly consider ourselves saved. Then we go out eager to exterminate men whose more obviously dreadful sins, weighed against their background and experience, may cause the scale to dip less sharply than our own familiar, politely covered, "civilized" meanness and selfishness weighed against our own background and opportunities.

Have we never lynched a man, or drenched his clothes with gasoline and lighted them? Have we never tortured prisoners with "sweat-boxes" or live steam? Have we never thrown young girls into the oldest profession or taught high school kids to take drugs? Who shall say which is worse: to club a man to death or to ruin a young fellow's life?

Condemnation slips easily into the mind, even more easily from the tongue. It makes us feel fine. We forget the truth stated by Oswald Chambers in approximately these words: "Discrimination is given us not for criticism, but for intercession."

Christ died to save sinners. Would we?

THE REV. J. BURT WEBSTER
Staff of Army and Navy Commission

Would you be kind enough to insert a request for 1945 Living Church Annuals? We have been asked to furnish many to the various redistribution centers so that chaplains will have easy access to the addresses of our churches and priests. Anyone who is kind enough to let us have an annual will be doing the commission a great favor. Address: 1 Joy Street, Boston 8.

MR. EUGENE P. WHITTIER
Layman of Winthrop, Mass.

Many churchmen, like myself, enjoying so much more privilege and comfort than is the lot of most in this crazy world, tend to become smug and even resentful when "one of their own" like Henry Wallace speaks out for the common man. I await with anxious interest their reaction to the recent noble utterances of our greatest of generals, Ike Eisenhower, in behalf of the meek and lowly throughout our world; the millions of men, women and children who have suffered cold, hunger and death while we grouch about the inconveniences of rationing etc. even while we become more prosperous as the result of world's more dire need. I subscribe in numerous periodicals but none is more welcome than THE WITNESS.

To share the radiance of faith—

LIGHT OF CHRIST

by Evelyn Underhill

The addresses are the fruit of long thought and mediation growing, as they do, out of the author's daily life and practice; they represent the spoken rather than the written word. To her friends they give a picture of Evelyn Underhill as she was, revealing unconsciously her inner life. She takes her readers in imagination into a great Cathedral and stands with them before the various windows of Christ's Mysteries, windows which transmit the very radiance of Eternity.

The book is prefaced by a memoir of Evelyn Underhill from the pen of Lucy Menzies who writes with charming simplicity and an intimate knowledge of her subject.

New York Takes Steps to Curb Juvenile Delinquency

Governor Dewey States It Is Experimental But Says It Is a Step in Right Direction

By Religious News Service

New York:—Increasing interest on the part of state lawmakers in proposals designed to prevent juvenile delinquency and provide more effective means of rehabilitating juvenile offenders is revealed by analysis of developments in state legislative sessions throughout the country this year. Indicated trends include improvement of court machinery for dealing with juveniles; more effective correctional agencies to handle convicted juveniles; institutional separation of convicted juveniles; imposition of greater legal responsibility on parents; preventive measures such as broader recreational facilities and programs; and creation or extension of legislative commissions to further study the problem.

New York state's legislature enacted a series of bills recommended by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey designed to prevent juvenile delinquency and improve the care and treatment of juvenile offenders. One of these measures, expected to be watched closely by other states, creates a state youth commission, composed of the state commissioners of correction, education, labor, mental hygiene and social welfare, a member of the board of parole and one other member to be named by the governor. With an appropriation of $800,000, the new commission is empowered to assist cities and counties in establishing youth bureaus to coordinate prevention of delinquency and efforts toward youth service in the communities. It also is authorized to assist municipalities, including towns and villages, in organizing recreation and education projects.

Under the New York state plan, the commission will match contributions of localities, dollar for dollar, in setting up youth bureaus, up to a maximum of $15,000, with the exception of New York City for which the maximum would be $75,000. The commission also will furnish state aid to communities up to a maximum of $250 for each 1,000 children, where the communities spend a like sum, in setting up recreational and educational projects.

Referring to the program as "frankly experimental" and admitting that it could not be expected to eliminate crime and delinquency overnight, Governor Dewey, in requesting the legislation, said state authorities did not know whether it would succeed or how long it should be continued.

"But it is, at least, a constructive program," he told the New York lawmakers. "It means action where action has been too long hit or miss or absent entirely. And it is the product of more than a year of effort and research by responsible cabinet members, each with wide experience in the field. I feel confident that it is an important step in social progress and that this sound and vigorous program can do much in overcoming the more menacing aspects of the increasing amount of delinquency that we find in our communities."

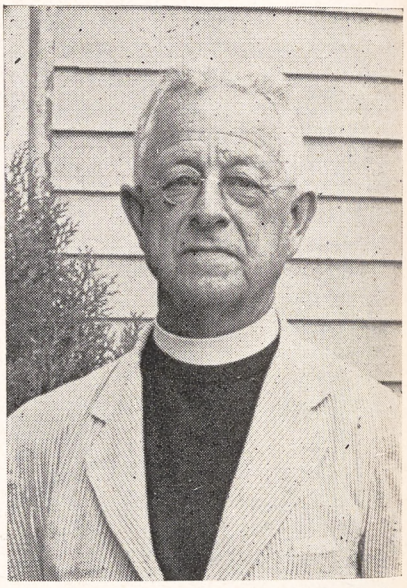
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY IN AFRICA

London (wireless to RNS):—Four Churches in South Africa have joined in plans to establish a school of theology at Rhodes University, Cape Province. They are the Church of England, the Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches. There is a great shortage of ministers in South Africa and the school will enable them to get training without going overseas.

It is also reported here that the Church of England, the Baptists and the Church of Scotland are to unite in sponsoring a theological school in Bengal, India.



ORTHODOX LEADERS HIT VATICAN

Erivan, Armenia (wireless to RNS):—Charges that Vatican "Ambitions" are hindering "the lofty aims of Christianity" were made in a statement issued by the general council of the Armenian Gregorian Orthodox Church at the conclusion of sessions here. The statement was signed by newly-elected Catholicos Georg VI, and other leaders of the Church.

"Regretfully, the Vatican, heading the Roman Catholic Church, entangles itself in political ambitions," the statement said, "thereby hindering the bringing into life of the lofty aims of Christianity, and it defends destructive German forces that are the source of harm of all humanity. For this reason, the National Church Council denounces the position of the Vatican as not corresponding with the lofty ideals of Christianity."

Declaring that the Christian churches are called upon to play an extraordinary role in promoting ideals of "brotherhood, justice, and liberty" throughout the world, the statement added: "Politically directed activities on the part of Christian churches can only serve as a barrier to these aims. They prepare the groundwork for a new and terrible war that may cause the destruction of millions of people and of the creative culture of mankind and bring incalculable disaster to mankind."

Among those who signed the statement were: Catholicos Gagerin I of Cilicia; Patriarch Kiuger II of Jerusalem; Bishop Mampre Siruni-an, head of the Egyptian diocese; Chief Archimandrite Vagan Kostanyan, head of the Iranian diocese; Bishop Tiran Nersoyan of the North American diocese; Bishop Mampre Calfayan of the California diocese; Archbishop Karapet Mazlumian of the Greek diocese; Bishop Grigor Karpetian of the Bulgarian diocese; and Archimandrite Nerseyan of the Ararat diocese.

The Rev. Caleb B. K. Weed who has done remarkable work over a period of many years as city missionary of New Orleans

ESTONIAN SCHISM IS ENDED

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—The so-called Estonian schism which arose after the Russian Orthodox Church in Estonia was granted autonomy in 1941 has been ended, according to an announcement in the Journal of the Moscow Patriarchate. Under the terms of reconciliation the synod of the Estonian Church will be liquidated and an Estonian diocesan council established, headed by an archbishop and consisting of two Russian and two Estonian members.

The same paper announces that more than 200 theological students had expected to enroll in the Russian Orthodox Theological Academy this fall.

The Sewanee Military Academy Has High Standards

Its Beautiful Location in the Cumberland Mountains Gives Academy Many Advantages

By G. R. Allin

Brigadier General. U.S.A. (Ret.), Superintendent.

Sewanee, Tenn.:—The Sewanee Military Academy is located on a 10,000 acre domain which was ceded to the Episcopal Church by the state of Tennessee. This domain is part of a plateau, 2000 feet above the sea, in the Cumberland Mountains. The plateau has long been a summer resort for the people of the surrounding areas. The flowering trees and shrubs furnish an ever changing scence of beauty and the views from the elevated points of vantage are always inspiring.

The Academy was founded in 1868, as a part of the University of the South, to meet a dire need for such an institution in the South after four years of war. It is a college preparatory school which has maintained high standards of scholarship and conduct throughout its existence. It is a member of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools which entitles its graduates to the privilege of admission to any college or university which accepts applicants by transcript of credits. It is a member of the Cum Laude Society, the National Preparatory Scholarship Society organized for the purpose of encouraging and rewarding high scholastic attainment. That its purpose is being attained is evidenced by its reputation and influence which have extended beyond the Southern states to the nation at large and to many Central and South American countries.

The Academy has a unit of the Reserve Officers Training Corps to which are detailed officers and men of the regular army to supervise and give military instruction. This unit has long held, as a result of annual inspections by officers detailed by the secretary of war, the rating of "Honor School" and has contributed many fine young men to the officers reserve corps who are now serving their country as officers. It has always had a large number of its students in the national academies at West Point and Annapolis. At the present time there are 13 at West Point, 4 in each of the upper classes and 5 in the entering class and 2 at Annapolis. When the average number of students is considered this is an unusually large number.

As a war measure the Academy is operating on a trimester basis with three sessions of equal length during the calendar year. This plan enables students to complete three years' school work in two calendar years. The primary purpose of the plan, which was inaugurated in 1943, is to enable boys to complete their high school work before they become subject to induction into the armed forces. It also permits some who desire to obtain some college work before entering the armed forces to accelerate their preparatory work and enter college at a younger age than they would normally.

Believing that a man should be able to think clearly and speak convincingly the Academy gives thorough training in speech through the medium of forensics in its English department and in interscholastic competition. URGE CATHEDRAL FOR ROCHESTER

Rochester, N. Y.: — Bishop Reinheimer of the diocese of Rochester urged the building of a diocesan house to provide offices and conference rooms, in his convention address delivered here at St. Thomas' Church on June 5th. He also urged the establishment of a cathedral foundation looking to the ultimate erection of a cathedral. Due to wartime restrictions the convention was strictly business which was transacted in one day.

AFRICAN STUDENTS TO BE LODGED

London (wireless to RNS):— Church families in England have been urged to provide lodgings for African students expected to enter British universities in the fall. The appeal was made by the Church Missionary Society, an organization of the Church of England. They are urged also to offer hospitality to the students during weekends and holidays.

DELAY ACTION ON CONSCRIPTION

Washington (RNS): — Although adoption of the "broad policy of universal military training" was recommended in a report signed by 16 of the 22 members of the House committee on post-war military policy, observers here are convinced that Congress will not pass any peacetime conscription legislation this year.

COMMANDER STASSEN ADDRESSES CHURCHES

Washington—Commander Harold Stassen, a member of the United States delegation to the United Nations Conference, told churchmen here that churches should help inform their members about world affairs and so end "devious" diplomacy. The former governor of Minnesota, who is about to return to active duty in the navy, declared that Americans almost unanimously agree that "the walls of isolation are gone forever."

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN POLAND

Warsaw (wireless to RNS): — A series of laws guaranteeing religious freedom to all sects in Poland is being prepared by the new Polish government, is was announced at a press conference here by minister of justice Henryk Swiatkowski, who has been placed in charge of Church affairs. "Poland is basically a Roman Catholic country, and the government is of the opinion that, first of all, full rights must be accorded to the Roman Catholic Church, but this must not be to the detriment of other denominations," Swiatkowski said. The present government is trying to eliminate past errors which aimed at damaging and impeding the activities of the smaller denominations and will guarantee full freedom of conscience and belief to all."

Referring particularly to the Methodist, Baptist, and Anglican denominations which, he said, had not been given equality under Polish law, Swiatkowski added: "Poland operates under the Constitution of 1921, and this constitution guarantees full religious freedom. Before the war, however, the government did not observe the constitution, especially in regard to religious problems."

SUMMER CAMPS HELD AGAIN

Birmingham, Ala.:—Two camps for young people were held this month in the diocese of Alabama, a resumption of diocesan camps after an interval of four years. Both sessions drew capacity crowds, as did also the adult conference held the weekend of July 7th.

When the convention of the diocese of Los Angeles met this year a notable visitor was Derwyn T. Owen, Archbishop of Toronto and Primate of Canada. He is shown here with the two Los Angeles Bishops, Bishop Stevens and Bishop Gooden

URGES WIDER USE OF RADIO

Galgary, Alberta:—The Church of England in Canada was urged to make wider use of the radio in a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the diocese of Calgary which covers all southern Alberta. Another resolution called for a "friendly attitude" toward loyal Japanese-Canadians and recognition of their equal rights as citizens. Need for greater national unity among Canadians was stressed by Bishop Ragg who said that the country needed national instead of provincial education, one marriage law for the whole of Canada and one language. He warned against the establishment of French-language radio stations in western Canada as part of a "carefully and well-laid plan for the conversion of Canada into a French-speaking country."

Bishop Anderson Was Right

THE next General Convention is scheduled to meet a year from this coming September. One of the most important matters to come before it is the proposed union with the Presbyterian Church of the U.S.A. We have had a commission of the Convention at work on the proposal ever since 1937 when the Convention adopted the following resolution: "The General Convention . . . acting with full realization of the significance of its proposal, hereby invites the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. to join with it in accepting the following declaration: The two Churches, one in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word of God, recognizing the Holy Scriptures as the supreme rule of faith, accepting the two sacraments ordained by Christ, and believing that the visible unity of Christ's Church is the will of God, hereby formally declare their purpose to achieve organic union between their respective Churches. Upon the basis of these agreements the two Churches agree to take immediate steps toward the framing of plans whereby this end may be achieved." This resolution was unanimously adopted by both houses of the Convention, amid great enthusiasm, and with prayers to God for his blessing upon the undertaking. The Presbyterians, on their part, were equally responsive and enthusiastic, and met our proposal more than half-way.

But where are we today, eight years after? Three plans of union have been put forward, have been accepted by the Presbyterians, and then we have backed down. With another Convention scarcely more than a year ahead of us, the commission has not given us any indication of what it intends to report—no further plan has been submitted, or revision of an earlier one. It is said that the commission has difficulty in getting some of its members to attend meetings. What right has a man to accept appointment to a commission if he does not have the time to attend its meetings? Some of the most violent and determined opposition to the very proposal of reunion has come from members of the commission—as if they were entitled to such views, after accepting appointment on a commission acting under the authority of the General Convention and committed to "take immediate steps toward the framing of plans whereby this end [reunion] may be achieved." A man who objects to the whole idea has a right to his views; but he has no right to accept appointment on the commission and then sabotage every plan that is proposed. It was a confidential confession of an early member of the commission on faith and order, years ago, that he accepted appointment on it with the idea of preventing the commission from doing anything—"since anything it might do would be dangerous." Are there men of like temper on the present commission on approaches to unity? If so, the Church has a right to know it. We would hang our heads in shame if we discovered this to be the fact. But better to hang them now, among ourselves, than to wait and let the whole plan die of internal disagreement, and then hang our heads publicly the rest of our lives. "This man began to build, but was not able to finish." We have something to be ashamed of, to begin with—for this is now the third time in less than a century that we Episcopalians have invited the Presbyterians to join with us in a reunited Church, and we have backed down, every time! It is becoming a disgrace. Let us either "put up, or shut up," as the late Presiding Bishop C. P. Anderson said at the Washington Convention in 1928.

"QUOTES"

AMERICA has had gifted conservative statesmen and national leaders, and they have often determined the course of public affairs. But with few exceptions, only the liberals have gone down in history as national heroes. America is, as we shall point out, conservative in fundamental principles, and in much more than that, though hopefully experimentalistic in regard to much of the practical arrangements in society. But the principles conserved are liberal and some, indeed, are radical.

Road to Revolution

PM of July 5th, under a Washington date line, carries an interesting comment by Frank R. Kent, political columnist of the Baltimore Sun. PM's lead line is as follows: "Kent has plan to curb labor." The gist of the story is simply this. Mr. Kent passes on the suggestion made by a large contributor to one of the political parties that he was going to refuse to make any more contributions to his party's campaign fund unless that party went on record advocating strong anti-labor legislation. Mr. Kent picks up the story here and makes the further suggestion that a strike by campaign contributors to force both major parties to adopt anti-labor policies would be in line with popular feeling.

It is always dangerous to take issue with an astute political commentator as Mr. Frank Kent, but we beard the lion in his den. We are sure Mr. Kent and the group he represents do not wish a revolution. We are certain that if the method he suggests was adopted it would be a sure road to revolution. Of course substantial contributors to any political party or philanthropic organization have a perfect right to withhold their contributions if they disagree with the purpose of that political party or organization. However we wonder if Mr. Kent has not forgotten that both the Republican and Democratic parties are made up largely from the ranks of the ordinary citizen; and it is the ordinary citizen that holds the balance of power. There are many union members in both parties. To follow the logic of Mr. Kent's suggestion union members and ordinary working folk would have to be barred from both parties. I suppose this would eventually lead to a third party composed entirely of management and the heads of large financial corporations. This would lead away from democracy to managerial dictatorship. Managerial dictatorship might well lead to revolution.

The road away from revolution will come by clear implementation of the democratic processes of government. If labor needs to be curbed, let us think of curbing it in the honest democratic way by the orderly method of legislation.

One further thought—after all there may be some virtue in having a further curtailment of large contributions to political campaigns that would make them more representative of the people as a whole.

We wonder when even enlightened political commentators will learn that collective bargaining is now accepted as a part of the American way of life. This will not lead to revolution.

PASCAL: SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

AT THE very hour when this scholar was being acclaimed by the world of secular science, he was urging his sister Gilberte to mark the great difference between religious and secular truths. The distinguishing mark of secular truths is this: It is enough to learn them once, and to retain them well in the memory, so that there is no further need to be taught them again. Religious truths, on the other hand, can never be reduced to impressions in our memory. A person knows religious truths only in virtue of the inward operation of God's Spirit.

"Going to Be All Right"

By

CHAS. S. TIPPETTS
Headmaster the Mercersburg Academy

SEVERAL days ago I was informed that one of our old boys, an army lieutenant, was sitting in a car outside of the administration building. He had sent word in asking if I would come out to see him, as he had been wounded, and it was hard for him to get out of the car. No wonder he said he could not come in! He had had both legs shot off last August in France. He told me he had artificial legs but was not used to them yet and felt uncertain when he stood up. Soon, however, he would be walking as well as ever. His attractive young wife was with him, smiling, cheerful, trying hard to be gay. The boy wore on his jacket the ribbon of the Silver Star for gallantry in action. When I asked him about it he said it was nothing. He waved his hand and laughed as they drove off, calling back, "Everything is going to be all right."

You and I have complained about little inconveniences during this war. We have been critical of things that made us less comfortable, or interfered with what we wanted to do. I was on a train a while ago on which there were people returning from vacations in the south. They complained because the car was not air-conditioned, because there was so little choice of food in the diner, because they could not get red caps and had to carry their own luggage, because they had to ride in uppers instead of lowers, because they could not get enough gas for their cars.

I wonder what this boy who had lost his legs to defend these complaining people would have thought had he heard them. Probably he would have wondered whether his sacrifice had been worthwhile. What had they endured compared to him?—lying for hours before he could be moved from the spot where he was wounded, agony on the stretcher, operations on his legs, ten months in the hospital being waited on hand and foot until he was ready for artificial legs. They complained, but he did not. "Everything is going to be all right."

You hear many persons say, "These boys are going to be such a problem when they come home. It will be hard for them to settle down. What shall we do with them?" My feeling is that those of us who stayed home will be the problem, not these boys. We shall have to be careful or we shall be such a problem to them that some of them will wish they had never come home.

Of course, they may be different. Why not? How can we expect boys and men to go through what they have experienced and come back the same as when they left home for service? There will be a period of readjustment. But we should be willing to make some readjustments ourselves and not expect them to do it all.

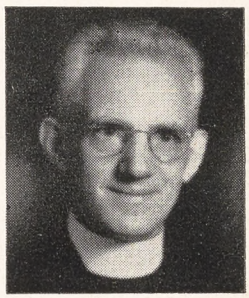
MY OWN conclusion is that people as a whole expect too much of the returning veteran. I remember how irritated I became when I returned from France in 1919, after serving in the infantry. Crowds will form, give a few cheers, throw a few flowers around and then go on about their business.

I found people still being as petty as ever, still as selfish as ever, still complaining about things that to a soldier have little importance. I tried to find a job; was offered $15 a week. The reason given for the low salary was that I had "lost" two and a half years in service and would have to start at the bottom. If my old university had not needed a teacher and given me an opportunity, I do not know what would have happened to me.

This week I read in the papers that a trade union was insisting that a veteran had lost his seniority by going off to war. If there is anything that can stir up more bitterness than decisions of that kind, I do not know what it is. Men who have known the miserable existence of a soldier in combat are not going to put up with any policy that discriminates against men who have faced death in favor of those who stayed home and made big money.

The legless officer said, "Everything is going to be all right." It will be if we see to it. We cannot afford to have him and others like him disappointed or disillusioned.



We must make certain that all this does not happen again. We are now trying to create a world organization for the prevention of another war. But we will not get it if we continue to criticize our former allies at every opportunity and create distrust on every hand. If we break with those who fought beside us in this war, there is no hope of peace. Yet, many Americans are doing their best to drive us apart. An isolated America is not possible. No country can have all it wishes. Each must give up something. To make a political issue of these differences of opinion is laying the powder train for another conflict.

Finally, let us postpone consideration of post-war compulsory military training for at least five years. There is no necessity for an immediate decision. To adopt compulsory training now, would, in my opinion, wreck what chances we have of creating and maintaining a successful organization for the maintenance of peace. Other nations would become suspicious of us and conclude that we must be watched carefully to see whether or not we would be the next to embark on a career of aggression and conquest.

For Church Schools

By
WILLIAM GRIME

THE CHALLENGE OF THE CHURCH by R. C. Miller is a fascinating course from one who understands the hearts and minds of high school students. Its six units of work—The Church and the Crises of Life, How the Church Came to Be, The Church's Faith, Prayer and Worship, What is the Church Doing?, How Wide Is the Church?—are not just more old stuff. They are a series of fearless challenges designed to bring students to say "here are more facts about the Church, put to us without any authoritarian imposition, facts calling for thought and action, facts which find us being persuaded to recommit ourselves to the blessed company of the faithful. There are some who may not like the amount of freedom-under-guidance given here, but many are the students who will respect this trust.

In the leader's book there is a wealth of rich content and a variety of sound methods. Its approaches and procedures with individual lessons are alive. They sparkle at times with good humor and show genuine realization of the needs of this age group. Yes, here is a guide that really guides, one that will give confidence to any teacher who is in earnest.

Likewise the pupil's book is attractive and full of rewarding reading. It starts with the students confused ideas about the Church and her ways and leads them through its historic strength and weakness to its challenge to themselves and the world today. Thus they are brought to see the truths and purposes of the Bible, Prayer Book, sacraments, creeds, missions, Church unity and the Christian principles of social action, mediated to men through the Church, can never be treated as optional truths and purposes, but that they must be dealt with as the indispensable means of grace for the redemption of man and his entire civilization.

While it is true this course will be welcomed in our high school departments, it can also be of great value in our week day religious education and confirmation classes. Cloister Press. Teacher's book, 90 cents. Pupil's book, 80 cents.

Then if you want a good sixth grade course consider The Story of Jesus in Pictures by Charlotte Jones. Its thirteen lessons are centered around the world's best Christian art, beautiful copies of which are in the pupil's workbook. The aim of the course is to help boys and girls to appreciate the main events and truths in the life of our Lord by Bible reading and study that leads into picture interpretation, creative writing, and correlated activities. The procedures in the pupil's book are simple and varied. Also they give much opportunity for student participation and individual expression. The teacher's book gives clear suggestions for starting and sustaining interest in individual lessons. Some of these helps you may not want, others you will want to enrich. But this must be said—you don't have to be a critical judge of art to guide this endeavour into significant consequences, for sufficient information is supplied for each picture to be studied. Vacation Time

By

GEORGE I. HILLER

THE period up to a vacation is a rather trying time. This is true whether we have a good time or a dull one, because it means a break with habits and who is not more of a creature of habit than he realizes. It often means new friends, and friends color our thoughts; it means another type and kind of financial planning. At the best it is up-setting to the regularity of our lives. To be sure we need a change and it is of inestimable value if only we get the value out of it; while if we are totally indifferent to real values it can be frought with considerable harm.

If a vacation is to be entirely without thought of God, if we are to forget our prayers because our habits are interrupted, if we have no desire to thank or praise him because new friends and pastimes occupy all our waking moments; then we may return with the idea that we can get along without him.

The same thought presses hard on me in relation to the Church school. If a vacation in Church school meant that parents and pupils found additional time to worship God in one of the regular services of the church, it would be a valuable change; but if parents are going to encourage children in forgetting the day and all duty to God then the vacation is not a refreshment but a lapse.

I am not pleading particularly for church attendance during vacation period, but for what is far more important—you cannot leave God home when you go away on a vacation—if he is at all real to you.

God is the same. Your need of a change may evidence itself in a change of your method of worship or thought of him, but it cannot demand a change of Gods. New pleasures, new interests, new friends, mean a refreshment and invigoration, but they cannot mean a new God.

There is another value in the leisure which some types of vacations afford. Many of us have little or no time in the daily round of things to think—I mean serious and worth while thinking through. We are prone to declare our snap judgments and the decision of our prejudices, environment, customs or experience to be the product of our thoughts, when in reality they are but by-products of a rather full life.

We would not lose the joy or fun of a period of leisure if instead of just being lazy we did some real thinking; on the contrary many of us would be strengthened and refreshed beyond our hopes.

What is the purpose of my life? How can I use it to a greater adventure? What have I done with the blessings that a merciful God has given me? How can I give more of myself to my children, not simply provide material things for them? Have I tried to think for what God might use me? Do I know what are the enduring values? Have I faced squarely the disposal of my material wealth should I die? Have I tried to make intelligent provision for the people and things I love? Will I leave something more than money in the world when I go out? Do I know what spiritual strength is? Is hope and courage within me or dependent entirely on material things outside of me? Am I repulsed by sin in myself? Do I try to forgive and understand it in others?

In other words a vacation might be a glorious opportunity to know thyself.

Sick and Nervous People

By

CARL J. WEBB

Rector, St. Philip's Church, Easthampton, Massachusetts

ONE of my duties is to serve as Episcopal chaplain in a large state hospital for mental diseases. Many patients are referred to the chaplain by patients, parents, friends, and out of town ministers. It is quite obvious that one cannot be strictly sectarian working among over 2000 sick people. I therefore conduct public services of two types. One is an informal service of hymn singing, prayers, scripture reading, and sermon. Sick people love to sing or to hear singing. The real opportunity for emotional release and self expression comes best through music. The old familiar tunes bring comfort and healing. The sermon is the same as one would preach to well people. Sick people who are able to attend a public service want to be considered normal. Many of the mentally disturbed patients have their normal periods. Harm may be easily done by talking down to them as if they were children. The sermon should be from ten to fifteen minutes long, drawn from familiar scripture, and illustrated and applied to life by the use of simple everyday life illustrations.

The other type of service is the regular Prayer Book service of Holy Communion. The patients use the Prayer Books and follow the service with enthusiasm and reverence. The page numbers are mentioned frequently to make it easy for all sorts and conditions of men and women to follow the service with as little distraction as possible. Participation by kneeling, sitting, and standing, and the saying of responses are as normal and reverent as in most parish churches. When the communion is received, some kneel and some sit, depending on the condition of the patient. It is an inspiration to share the reverence and whole hearted participation of the patients in this service. Not once has a Holy Communion service been interrupted by a disturbed patient. Most of those who receive Holy Communion are Episcopalians.

The service has real healing value, especially for those who have a good Church background. Recently, at the close of a communion service, a young man who was frequently confused, uttered this ultimate insight: "The service is helpful and a man's own conscience ought to make him attend regularly." Would that more laymen in our parish churches possessed this insight! On one occasion, when I was taking communion to those who were not able to attend the service, I almost passed up a young lady in her teens who appeared too confused to make any response when I offered her the communion. But when I closed my case to leave the room, she knelt by the closed door, held out her hands, and said in a clear voice, "You haven't given me my communion." My next visit found her improved.

One cannot tell how much the communion means to a mentally sick person by the way he acts. However, I am convinced that the service does bring comfort and calm to many troubled souls. Although many patients will never regain normal health, they are certainly entitled to the ministries of the Church during their illness.

In America today, over 50 per cent of all hospital beds are occupied by mentally disturbed patients. The percentage is being increased every day by the casualties of the war and the problem of keeping the ministry of the Church with the sick is an increasing challenge.

_The Westminster Historical Atlas to the Bible._ Edited by George Ernest Wright and Floyd Vivian Filson. Westminster Press. $3.50.

This is one of the most beautiful books we have seen, and one of the most useful as a companion to the Bible and as a guide to its historical geography. It makes the geographical and historical background really live before our eyes. The maps are almost like aeroplane views of the world — drawn and printed by a new process, specially devised for this volume. In fact, the book is three volumes in one, we might almost say; a history of excavation in Palestine, a history of the Bible (which is superbly illustrated from 77 photographs), and a first-class modern Atlas with maps that are accurate and reliable. It is a book that ought to be in every clergyman's library, every parish library, every public library throughout America — in addition to libraries of colleges, universities and seminaries, and also, we hope, many private libraries of Christian people who read and love Holy Scripture.

_The Church and the Returning Soldier._ By Roy A. Burkhart, Harper and Brothers, $2.00.

If there are words that can persuade you to read Roy A. Burkhart's _The Church and the Returning Soldier,_ I would like to set them down here; for this book should be read by all.

Realizing the immensity of the Church's task in helping the soldier to return to the ways of the civilian, Dr. Burkhart has wisely refrained from advocating patterns and formulas. Instead, he has tried to set forth the issues involved and to motivate each church and community to prepare its own plans as best adapted to its needs.

Not only has he put the challenge squarely up to the individual church; he has, with deep sincerity and conviction, tried to show that we first must prepare ourselves for the job of helping the returning veteran personnel.

Perhaps the full scope of his views will be grasped by quoting Dr. Burkhart's own words: "The return of the soldier is part of a larger epic: the redemption of mankind, the salvation of men, the freeing of individuals and of groups from whatever hinders growth toward a discovery and acceptance and readiness to live by the will of God and for the good of all men."

Such a view could hardly avoid an appeal for Church unity, with which Dr. Burkhart concludes his book. In the long run, only a Church that unites men around the world in Christian brotherhood can satisfy the majority of veterans whose fervent prayer is to see the end of war for all times. How else, but in the unity of all God's children, can we avert the war that will bring with it the problem of the returning veteran in still another generation?

THE "CHALLENGE TO RELIGION"

"FOR a Christian these days are stirring days. The way which is breaking up modern man-centered civilization . . . is driving us back to the fundamentals of our Faith. When journalists describe this situation, as they are apt to do, as a 'challenge to religion,' they reveal a singularly superficial understanding of the real condition of society. It is as if a patient who has consistently disobeyed his doctor's explicit instructions, and now finds himself at the point of death, should regard himself as a 'challenge to medicine.' It is not the Christian Faith that is being called in question, but the whole basis of modern civilization."

These spirited words launch an unusually competent and pithy little book by the Rev. Gordon W. Ireson, diocesan missioner of Exeter, entitled Church Worship and the Non-Churchgoer (London: S.P.C.K., 1944), which I feel obliged to recommend to those of my readers who may not have come across it. I had not seen it when I wrote my article "Worship for the Unconverted" (WITNESS, May 31, 1945). To my great surprise I received a large number of letters from all parts of the country, from chaplains and civilian clergy, all in unanimous agreement with my remarks. This testimony seems to me to give evidence of the serious situation we face in our immediate times regarding the lack of understanding, even by confirmed communicants not to speak of those outside the Church, of the basic principles of our liturgical worship. And this stems in turn from their lack of understanding and whole-hearted espousal of the primary dogmas of our faith. This is the thesis also of Fr. Ireson, a liberal who has turned Catholic, but a Catholic very much tempered by the spirit of the Liturgical Movement. And I might add that he is also thoroughly in sympathy with the declaration of the Malvern conference.

What can we do about this situation? Fr. Ireson has some very practical suggestions, based upon a number of years' experience in mission work. Unlike so many writers on worship, he is not doctrinaire. He tells you what you can do and how to do it. At the same time he never oversteps the bounds of sound liturgical principles, or the authority and aims of the Church's worship as set forth in the Prayer Book. Unlike many Catholics he is not contemptuous of Matins, and unlike many liberals he refuses to condone the practice of bowdlerizing the service to make it "popular." In brief, his thesis is that adults must be instructed in doctrine before they can honestly and helpfully participate in the liturgy. He calls for the development of an adult cathechumenate, extending beyond confirmation if need be, organized about small groups ("cells"). The leader of these groups will first explain some major doctrine, then direct a period of "training in prayer" based upon that doctrine. He gives a number of sample talks and devotions to show how it is done. He also discusses the education of children in worship. In their case he believes it is better for them to participate in the drama of the liturgy before instruction. They must experience it before any teaching about it can be significant. My space only allows me one more quotation to give you a taste of this savory book, but you will see from it that you are in for some good food for thought:

"The leader who hopes really to train his people in the art of prayer and worship will be extremely careful never to plunge them into any act of thanksgiving, confession, petition or intercession without a preparatory act of recollection and dedication. . . . The purpose of all prayer and worship is not (of the two alternatives) to make us more real to God, but to make God more real to us. It is not as if we should say, 'O God, here we are. Please give us your attention for a few minutes, as there are one or two matters we want to put before you.' In the first place, it is unnecessary to call God's attention to us. 'And it shall come to pass that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking I will hear.' Neither, secondly, is prayer a method by which we try to persuade God to do something that we want done. The purpose of prayer is to put ourselves into the way of doing what God wants. A recently published pamphlet . . . contains the following piece of advice: 'Bring God into the things of your everyday life.' It is not mere quibbling to say that such advice is fundamentally misguided. It should run, 'Bring the things of your everyday life to God.' It is very natural that Christian apologists should strive to show that God is 'relevant' to modern life. But ultimately what man must do is to make modern life relevant to God."

Many Millions Will Be Spent On European Churches

The Estimated Property Loss of Protestant Churches Alone Runs to Billion and a Half

Edited by W. B. Spofford

New York (RNS):—A tentative four-year budget of $8,980,000 has been set by the World Council of Churches for relief and rehabilitation activities in Europe. Nearly a million and a half has been allocated for repairs to damaged churches and partial rebuilding of destroyed churches, which represents but one tenth of one per cent of the estimated loss of $1,450,000,000 suffered by the Protestant churches on the continent.

Of the four-year overall budget $3,600,000 would be devoted to relief for pastors; $1,200,000 would be used to train a new ministry and $1,400,000 for literature.

Denver, Col.:—Dean Paul Roberts of St. John's Cathedral is the chairman of a committee in Denver, made up of all religious faiths, to combat prejudice and discrimination against minority groups.

Conference Held

San Rafael, Calif.: — No trains were necessary to transport the 201 students who attended the California summer conference, held here June 24-30. One bus was needed for those who had no other transportation.

Praises Charter

Chicago (RNS):—The Charter of the United Nations was hailed by Archbishop Stritch of Chicago as the only promise the world has that international anarchy will not return. Roman Catholic leaders generally have been critical of the document, but the Chicago Churchman stated that defects can be eliminated gradually.

Urge Ratification

Washington:—Various Church organizations have urged the Senate foreign relations committee to ratify the United Nations Charter promptly. Among the organizations were the Federal Council of Churches, the national board of the YWCA, the United Christian Council for Democracy and the Church League for Industrial Democracy.

Bishop Harris Preaches

Philadelphia:—A missionary service was held here at Holy Trinity at which Bishop Harris of Liberia was the preacher, the service being under the auspices of The Clericus, an organization consisting of the Negro clergy of the dioceses Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The procession consisted of 200 choristers, 50 acolytes, 9 layreaders, 3 divinity students, 30 priests, 1 deacon and 2 bishops. A collection of $300 went for the work in Liberia.

Metropolitan of India

London (Wireless to RNS):—Bishop George C. Hubback of Assam has been elected Bishop of Calcutta and Metropolitan of India, to succeed Bishop Foss Westcott who is to retire at the age of eighty-two. Originally opposed to the South India reunion scheme, Bishop Hubback later advocated its adoption as a means of healing breaches among Christians.

General Is Honored

Beverly Farms, Mass.: A service of thanksgiving for the leadership of General George S. Patton Jr. was held recently at St. John's here by the rector, the Rev. A. Abbott Hastings. General Patton was married in this church in 1910. Following a sermon by the rector, General Patton spoke briefly.

Ludlow In Bostin

Boston:—Bishop Theodore R. Ludlow, suffragan of Newark and on the WITNESS editorial board, is the guest preacher for the fourth consecutive summer at Trinity Church here.

Appeal for C.O.'s

New Haven, Conn.: — Conscientious Objectors receive no pay, no disability allowance, no allowance for dependents, no death allowance from the government, Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence, chairman of the joint committee on conscientious objectors, points out in an appeal to the Church to help maintain the very small group of Episcopal CO's who are now working in mental hospitals, and in civilian public service camps.

"One of the four freedoms for which this country is fighting is freedom of conscience," Bishop Lawrence said. "We want the people of Germany and Japan and the other countries to have the right to worship and think with freedom of conscience. Certainly we want that right maintained here in the United States. I am sure you will agree with me that it would be unthinkable to have it otherwise in our own Church."

The last General Convention set up and authorized the joint commission to raise funds to meet the $30 a month maintenance expense for CO's. "It is easy to believe in freedom of conscience for others in distant places, at no cost to ourselves," Bishop Lawrence concluded. "Here is a chance for people to show that they really believe in freedom of conscience at home within our Church, by supporting these men with whom they differ."

Joins Council Service

Syracuse, N. Y.:—Bishop Malcolm Peabody of Central New York has been made a member of the commission for World Council Service. The commission was organized early this year and is closely related to the department of reconstruction and inter-Church aid with headquarters in Geneva. Included in its program is work with the chaplaincy commission of the prisoner of war camps.

Honorary Degree

Princeton, N. J.: — The Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, rector of Trinity Church here received an honorary doctorate from Princeton University on June 23rd.

Race Relations

Johnson, Vt. (RNS):—White families in 20 different towns in this area will be hosts this summer to 125 Negro children from New York who will spend a two weeks' vacation in Vermont homes, a project launched last year by the Rev. A. Ritchie Low, pastor of the United Church here. In an effort "to increase friendliness between the white and colored races, and break down the barriers of racial prejudice," Mr. Low last summer arranged for 75 children to visit white homes here. The experiment was so successful, he said, that "this year they have been offered more homes in which to spend the vacation than there are children available."

The children are to be selected from the Abyssinian Baptist Church, where the Rev. Clayton Powell, U.S. Congressman, is pastor, and St. Philip's Episcopal, where the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop is rector. As reported here at the time, Mr. Bishop recently addressed a group of Church people at Grace Church, Manchester, N. H., on this plan and there is every likelihood that a similar project will be carried out there under the direction of the Rev. Bradford Young, the rector.

Church on Okinawa

Boston:—A chaplain in the Marines, now on Okinawa, writes to the army and navy commission that things have quieted down "though artillery fire moves overhead and I can see a slight sniper scuffle." He doesn't like sniper fire, saying that "it is very annoying because it is hard to detect its source." Under existing conditions it is impossible to hold regular church services, "for to concentrate a group of men in one spot would be foolhardy." He tells of visiting the men up on the front lines, talking with them, taking hastily scribbled messages to be mailed home, and distributing New Testaments.

Exploring the Island, this chaplain discovered a small church. "It had been pretty well demolished," he said, "but I had a good chance to rummage through what was left, for there was a lull in the fighting at the time. From the things I found there, and from subsequent talk with natives via an interpreter, I learned that the clergyman in charge was an native Okinawan, educated in Japan. The books from Union Seminary in New York indicate his thinking was not necessarily controlled by Japan. Shattered glasses about the size used for communion in Baptist churches point toward a Protestant group, and a picture of Wesley suggests Methodist leanings. Old Christmas and Easter cards signed with English names may testify to the rector's having acquaintances, perhaps religious, amongst white people before, and when asked if they have seen white people, the natives always refer to the Chinese who happened to visit the island. There were large picture studies of God in Nature, Easter, and numerous Old Testament subjects. The mission seems to have ceased functioning about two years ago, possibly with the interruption of Japan's war efforts.

"I found the large Bible which must have stood on the altar or reading desk. It is written in Japanese, although on the cover are the gilt-lettered words 'Holy Bible,' in English. The binding is broken and a piece of shrapnel must have hit the book, for it has been considerably torn.

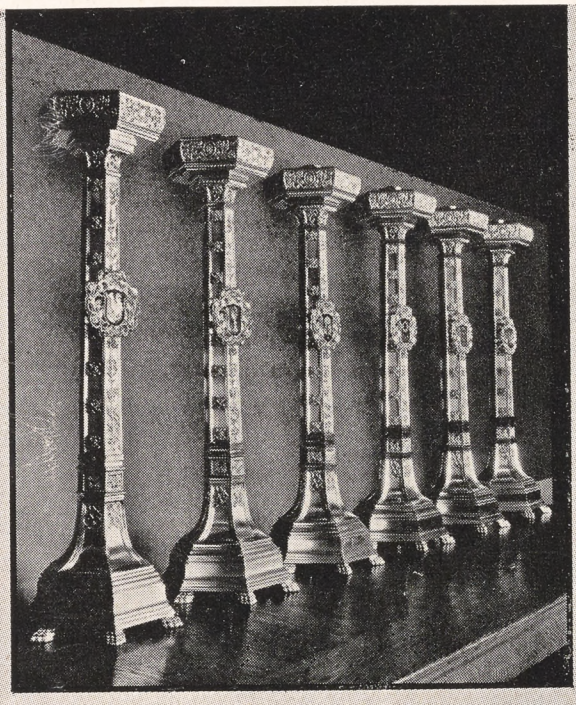
"There is a Japanese doctor on this island who claims to be a Christian. I hope to locate him and learn more about the mission. If I can locate any members of the congregation, they may be in a civilian compound set up near the site of the church, I plan to hold a Christian service for them in the hope that it will not only be of spiritual help to them, but also may make them realize that if we have nothing else, we have Christ in common."

Interrace Meeting

Swannanoa, N. C.:—Students and faculty members representing 11 theological seminaries, both white and Negro, met at Warren Wilson Junior College here for a three-day conference. Speakers included Dr. Walter M. Horton, of Oberlin Divinity School; President J. W. Haywood of Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga.; Dean J. H. Satterwhite, of the Hood Theological Seminary, Salisbury, N. C.; and Dr. William E. Cannon of the Candler School of Theology, Emory University.

Summer Vacation

Chicago:—For the first time in the history of this city, Negro boys and girls will spend two weeks in the homes of downstate white families. Duplicating the Vermont experiment of last summer, 45 Negro children, all members of the Presbyterian churches here, will be the guests of white Presbyterian families in Ashton, Franklin Grove, Hersman and Danvers. They will also attend a vacation Bible school which formerly had only white children.



Training Center Filled

New York: — Windham House, graduate training center for Episcopal Church women, is completely filled for its summer period. Sixteen young women are there for special study. They come from thirteen dioceses and districts, and in the group is a teacher from China, two Negro girls and one Japanese. All are here for graduate study. Miss Ellen Gammack, personnel secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary is in charge at Windham House as acting director, for the summer period.

No Basic Stipend

Montreal (RNS):—Basic stipends, which would provide for equalization of clerical salaries with addition of family, living and traveling allowances, were a subject of debate for the third successive year before the Anglican Synod at its closing session. With clergy and laity split on the question, no agreement could be reached and the special committee constituted to deal with the subject was asked to further explore the matter and report at a later date.

Clergy in the diocese of Montreal are at present guaranteed by canon a minimum basic salary starting at $1200 a year for mission priests and $1500 for rectors. Adoption of the principle of one basic diocesan stipend would result in the pooling of available funds for equal distribu-

Negro Priest Called

Crane, Ind.:—The Rev. John Quincy Martin, serving here as a navy chaplain, has resigned as rector of Calvary Church, Philadelphia, to enable the calling of the Rev. Thomas Logan, vicar of St. Michael and All Angels. Neighborhood changes have been so great since the war that Mr. Martin last fall recommended the calling of a Negro priest as his successor and offered then to resign to make it possible. It is expected that the entire congregation of St. Michael and All Angels will transfer to Calvary and an effective evangelization of the neighborhood will result.

Sympathy for Jews

Montreal (RNS): — Concern for the "sufferings of the Jewish people in recently liberated concentration camps in Europe" was voiced by the annual synod of the Anglican Church's Montreal diocese in a resolution adopted at the close of its four-day sessions here. The synod also expressed "sincere and heartfelt sympathy with our Jewish people in Canada on their long period of strain and anxiety."

New Professorship

New York: — Francis Cho-min Wei, president of Central China College, is to be the first incumbent of a new professorship at Union Seminary which will bring to the school each year a leader of world Christianity. The chair was established in honor of the Rev. Henry Winters Luce, a graduate of Union who was an outstanding leader in the development of higher education in China. Dr. Wei will also give lectures at Andover-Newton School and the Episcopal Theological School.

Half the Fund

New York:—The army and navy commission of the Church had received $215,600 up to June 6 it was announced at a commission meeting held at the Church Missions House. The amount needed for the year, at the present rate of expenditure, is $400,000. Brigadier General Luther D. Miller, new chief of chaplains, attended the all day session and urged that steps be taken to get more Episcopal chaplains even if they must come fresh from theological schools. It was also reported that a commission is working on plans affecting the placement of chaplains when they return, with Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania reporting that the committee feels that the needs of the returned chaplains will be for jobs, rest, study and readjustment to normal life. The responsibility for placement is with the dioceses but the army and navy commission is ready to help in all possible ways. Bishop Sherrill, head of the commission, reported on his recent trip to England and the Continent.

Contrary to a widely prevalent belief, the close of hostilities in Europe has not ended the need for additional chaplains in the armed forces. Seven hundred are called for at once by the army and four hundred for the navy. The end of the European war finds many chaplains overseas who have endured for months and even years the heat and burden of the day. Constant strain, borne of combat duty has reduced their physical and nervous reserve. To the end that armed forces may return these veterans to less arduous posts in the U. S., it is imperative to secure replacements. Young clergymen, up to the age of 35, are urgently needed for duty with combat troops. We must recognize that because the clergy do not come under selective service, nonetheless they can not escape their moral obligation to meet this vital spiritual demand. In order to serve their country, men of other professions have left their families and splendid incomes. For the clergy in this critical time to do less is unthinkable. It is our considered judgment that this is the time for renewed self-examination by every clergyman in this age group not now in uniform, to determine whether he can still refuse his country's call.

Every church, including the Roman Catholic, was represented in the pageant. Another event was a union service, participated in by all the local churches, at which Bishop William Scarlett preached.

THE RT. REV. OLIVER J. HART
Bishop of Pennsylvania

There is in the United States a deep emotional recognition of the necessity of our nation taking its full responsibility for world order. To do this we must have

(1) a large professional army or
(2) universal military training.

To me it is just that simple.

I am under no illusion that universal military training marks an advance in civilization. I earnestly wish that all nations could be delivered from the burden of it. But collective security will depend, in part at least, upon military force and we in this country have much more to fear from a large standing army than from universal military training. A large standing army might go a long way towards militarizing the country while universal military training could produce citizen soldiers in whom has been developed sound and clear ideas of responsible American citizenship.

It is a sound American principle that the military should be subordinate to the civil. As citizens we should demand that the best possible provisions be made from an educational point of view. I have confidence that the general staff will want the advice and counsel of the ablest civilian educators in the country. I believe that such a group can deal intelligently with the educational difficulties involved in military training and let us recognize frankly that they do exist. I am sure that the war department does not want to kill the initiative and creative spirit in our young men. It does not want to teach them merely to obey and not to think. Certainly we should be strong enough to compel the war department to change its plans if we detect that its real purpose is to develop millions of militarists.

The war department has stated that it does not recommend nor desire that trainees be inducted into the army for military service. It does not propose that all of our young men spend a year of indolence in military barracks. It proposes a year of training. I have heard various schemes of training proposed. I should like to see us decide the issue now and then bend all our energies towards making the training as effective as possible. It would be worse than folly for us to suppose it will be easy to make universal military training a creative extension of our educational opportunities but we can try to achieve that goal.

Many of my friends are violently opposed to universal military training. One of the main arguments is that we ought to wait until four or five years after the war before taking action on this important matter. By that time, it is argued, we would know better whether or not it was necessary, we could think more calmly and above all the veterans of World War II would have a chance to vote their opposition. I have heard it said that at least seventy per cent of the men now in service are opposed to universal military training! I do not know how such information could have been obtained. It is clear that if such is the case, the veterans will have enough influence to have universal training abolished.

Universal military training seems to me the better plan for us at this time. Its adoption now will reassure the other peace loving nations of the world that the United States proposes to cooperate with them in outlawing war. At any time that it becomes apparent that universal training is not needed or is undesirable, we can easily drop it.

I have been a reader and admirer of THE WITNESS from the beginning. I think the paper is the most informing in every way. Spofford has a mind and knows what to say and how to say it and does no trimming at all. And the editorial staff does excellent work. Best wishes to you all.

THE REV. W. APPLETON LAWRENCE

Let me heartily commend your editorial against peace time conscription. It is straight to the point, telling and persuasive, as well as being forthright and courageous. Some will condemn it. I write to praise it.

THE REV. J. CLEMENS KOLB
Chaplain at University of Pennsylvania

Under the picture of Bishop Remington in the July 12 WITNESS it said that he was elected suffragan on the second ballot. This is a mistake by just one ballot. We elected him on the first and are rather proud of that fact as not too many Episcopal elections are settled with such unity of opinion. The vote as listed in the caption was correct.

The World Council Will Deal Cautiously with Germans

General Secretary Says Council to Reserve Liberty of Decision and Action on Churches

By Religious News Service

Geneva (wireless):—The World Council of Churches has not established constitutional ties with any Church group in Germany but has reserved decision until "full and frank discussions" are held with representatives of the German churches, according to W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the Council. Mr. Visser 't Hooft revealed that the Council will send delegates to Churches in Germany as well as liberated countries to discuss future relationships. The Council retains ties with the German Churches at present only through their membership in Life and Work, and Faith and Order, the two ecumenical movements which merged into the World Council.

"The Council," Visser 't Hooft said, "reserves all liberty of decision and action with respect to the relationships which will have to be established with the German churches. First, it will contact those who have given clear witness of their Christian faith and have taken a clear stand against Christian dealings with Nazism. Future relationships will depend on frank and full conversations between the Council's delegates and representatives of the German Churches."

Visser 't Hooft praised the work of the Rev. Eugen Gerstenmaier who was a key figure in the anti-Nazi movement inside the German Evangelical Church, but said that a false impression may have been created that his activities were carried on under mandate from the World Council of Churches. Gerstenmaier was one of a number of Confessional Church leaders who took a leading part in the plot against Hitler in July, 1944.

"Dr. Gerstenmaier," Visser 't Hooft said, "represented Bishop Theophilus Wurm of Wurttemburg in the foreign office of the German Evangelical Church where he carried out a policy that was often quite independent. He initiated a series of activities to bring spiritual aid to prisoners of war, civilian internees, and foreign workers deported to Germany. He also took special pains to promote the work of ecumenical organizations among these different categories of war victims. Thus, on his own, he rendered an important service to ecumenical groups."

Recalling that during the war, the World Council had kept in touch with outstanding figures of the Church in Germany, Visser 't Hooft said that up to the time he was imprisoned, Pastor Dietrich Bonhoeffer was "the one man who played an outstanding part in keeping up ecumenical contacts."

Meanwhile Bishop Bell of Chichester has revealed that two years before the attempt on Hitler's life in 1944, the British government was informed of the plot by the late Pastor Dietrich Bonhoeffer, anti-Nazi leader of the German Evangelical Church. Bishop Bell made the statement at a memorial service held in Trinity Church here for the pastor who was slain by an S. S. commando-unit in the concentration camp of Flossenberg near Neustadt, Bavaria, last April.

Bishop Bell told the congregation that Pastor Bonhoeffer went to meet him secretly in Stockholm in May, 1942, acting on behalf of anti-Nazi German generals who were cooperating with the Confessional Church in its fight against Hitlerism. One of the requests conveyed by Pastor Bonhoeffer, Bishop Bell said, was that the British government should take a favorable stand toward the new Christian government anti-Hitler plotters were preparing to establish in Germany.

Born in 1906, Pastor Bonhoeffer studied in the United States and was a clergyman in a German Lutheran Church in London, from 1933 to 1935 before being appointed head of a Confessional Church training college in Pomerania. He was a member of the youth commission of the World Council of Churches and of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches, and was on friendly terms with British Church leaders. In collaboration with the Bishop of Chichester, he helped pastors and laymen of the German Confessional Church forced to emigrate during the Hitler regime.

MAYBE HE OUGHT TO LEAVE

Jamaica, N. Y.:—The Rev. Joseph Titus, rector of Grace Church here, is wondering if guidance is not being given him to resign and find another parish. For the second time the church has been hit by lightning. The last time was on July 19th when the brownstone spire, erected in 1861, was split by a bolt from the summit to the belfry. This means that a steel cage will have to be built around the tower, the stones taken down after being numbered and then re-erected. The operation will not only be hazardous but complicated and the loss is likely to run to $30,000. It is covered by insurance with the Church Properties Fire Insurance Corporation.

TOWN-COUNTRY CONFERENCE AT MADISON

Madison, Wis.: — Bishop Elwood Haines of Iowa was a headliner at the national town-country conference held here for two weeks and attended by fifty Episcopalians, representing every province and three Canadian dioceses. He outlined elements in an intensive and extensive program for rural Church work. The Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson of the national domestic missions department told of ways theological seminaries might advance rural work, while Prof. J. H. Kolb lectured on various phases of rural life. Others to give lectures were the Rev. W. F. Allison on visual-audio aids; the Rev. Allen Cook on using the mail; the Rev. Charles Conder of the mobile chapel; Miss Bernice Jansen of the rural community center; Deaconess Evelyn Seymour on mountain work; the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker on education in a small church.

ST. PAUL'S MANAGER TO RETIRE

Lawrenceville, Va.:—Mr. A. H. Turner retired on August 1st after serving for forty-two years as business manager and treasurer of St. Paul's School here. He has seen the school grow from an elementary school of a few hundred to a polytechnic institute that enrolls more than 1,000 annually. The institute is one of the colleges of the American Church Institute for Negroes. Mr. Turner is himself a graduate of Tuskegee College.

Washington: — Chaplain (Capt.) Robert C. Clingman, son of the Rt. Rev. Charles Clingman, Bishop of Kentucky, was awarded the Bronze Star for heroic achievement in connection with military operations against the enemy on Luzon, P. I., from January 9 to March 4, 1945. As battalion chaplain during this period Chaplain Clingman made many trips through hazardous and enemy infested mountain terrain in order to assist in the evacuation of wounded and dead. He performed Christian burials for fallen comrades in full view of the enemy. On one occasion it was necessary for him to crawl 200 yards through heavy sniper fire in order to find a place for safety. His presence at forward positions gave great inspiration to the men of the command.

SCHOLARSHIPS OFFERED VETERANS

New York:—Inauguration of a $60,000 program providing scholarships to veterans and presenting the claims of the ministry to service men was announced July 30th by President Henry Van Dusen of Union Seminary. He also stated that a series of refresher courses for returning chaplains will begin during the coming academic year. Speaking of the financial aid Dr. Van Dusen said: "In most cases the government grant will go far toward meeting the expense of the student. Those with family responsibilities and those who wish to accelerate their course without the necessity of carrying heavy remunerative field work may apply for scholarship aid to supplement the government grants."

SECRET BALLOT DEMANDED

London (wireless to RNS):—Bishop Wand, former bishop of Bath and Wales, was elected Bishop of London after a secret ballot had been demanded. No such demand has been made at an episcopal election in the past sixty years. The request came from one of his opponents who criticized the bishop for Anglo-Catholic tendencies. When the ballots were counted it was found that no dissenting votes had been cast but one blank paper was returned.

REGULAR BROADCASTS FROM GUAM

Guam:—Lt. Comdr. R. T. Blomquist, navy chaplain who was formerly the rector of St. Luke's, Forest Hills, Long Island, broadcasts regularly each Sunday morning from the picturesque native-built chapel here. The services reach not only units and hospitals on the island but are also picked up by ships in the harbor and at sea.

Ministry to Migrant Workers Provided by the Church

Large Trained Staff Gives Varied Program To the Thousands of Seasonal Farm Workers

By Religious News Service

New York:—Nearly 600,000 agricultural migrant workers in 23 states are being provided a united religious and social ministry this summer through the cooperation of 23 Protestant denominations in the Home Missions Council of North America, it was reported here by Miss Edith Lowry, executive secretary of the Council and administrator of migrant work. Now in its 26th year, the project is conducted among laborers who cultivate and harvest crops on farms and process food at canneries. Many have no permanent homes and live in shelters of various types supplied by the farmer, the canning companies, and the War Food Administration.

They are served by a trained staff of 274 workers, including 31 white, American Negro, Jamaican Negro and Japanese American ministers, 102 community workers, 124 child care workers, 10 assistants in vacation Bible schools, three teachers, and two survey specialists. This summer's budget for migrant work totals $123,450.

"Through the religious ministry provided by a cooperative Protestant home missions program," Miss Lowry said, "not only are church activities taken to the migrant, but he also is aided in developing a more adequate standard of living and a sense of belonging and being wanted in American community life."

Church services, Sunday schools, Bible classes, recreational programs for children, youth and adults, leadership training, child care center, counseling, language classes, and other activities are developed for the seasonal farm workers wherever they can be found in groups without regard for race, nationality, or faith.

Nearly 85,000 of this year's migrants have been imported by the Federal Government from Mexico, Jamaica, the Bahama Islands and the Barbadoes Islands. Migrants include 203,000 Spanish-speaking natives, 68,000 American Negroes, 1,000 Japanese Americans and 200 Indians. The balance are white people from southern states and a few northern states.

Texas has the largest number of seasonal workers this summer, with 190,000, while California has 168,000, Arizona, Oregon, and Washington 25,000 each, Michigan 15,000, New York 20,000 and New Jersey, 10,000.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IS DEFENDED

Oslo, Norway (wireless to RNS):—Capital punishment for Norwegian traitors "must be considered justifiable" in the present situation, according to Lutheran Bishop Gabriel Skagestad of Stavanger. Commenting on the action of a people's court in Oslo in passing the death sentence on Reider Haaland, accused of collaboration with German occupation authorities, the Bishop said: "For my part, I consider this in accordance with God's word in the Old and New Testaments that legal authority may use the death sentence."

PROSPECTS FOR UNION ARE POOR

London (wireless to RNS):—Although immediate prospects of church reunion are "poor" there is an "increased friendliness" between the churches, Archibald Walter Harrison declared in his presidential address to the Methodist conference of Great Britain.

"We are not going to engage in controversy," he said, "because we believe toleration is almost the finest flower of truly catholic Christianity, but we are not going back on the Reformation, which reaffirmed the infinite value of the human soul."

The churchman, winner of the military cross in world war I, spoke at Nottingham to the denomination's first fullsize conference since before the war, following his election to succeed W. F. Howard as president.

RUSSIAN CHURCH LEADER TO VISIT HERE

New York:—The Most Rev. Alexei, Archbishop of Iarislavl and Rostov, will shortly visit the United States as a special envoy of the Patriarch of Moscow and all Russia, according to information from Moscow received at the New York office of the Russian Patriarchate in America. The Metropolitan has advised Presiding Bishop Tucker of the forthcoming visit, the date of which is not yet known. The Metropolitan adds, "The visit will resume the contacts with the American Churches, completing the trips of the Patriarch and the Metropolitan Nikolai to the Holy Land, Egypt and Great Britain."

MASSACHUSETTS DIOCESE HAS CHOIR SCHOOL

Boston:—A junior choir school, consisting of eighty girls from ten parishes of the diocese of Massachusetts, will meet the last week in August at Lincoln-Hill camp at Foxboro. They attend as choir groups rather than as individuals for training in rhythm, music reading and the learning of canticles and chorales.

AFRICAN SEMINARY REOPENED

London (wireless to RNS):—St. Augustine's Seminary for training men for the ministry of the Church of England has been reopened at Kumasi, diocese of Accra, after being closed for a number of years. The Rev. George Laing, African clergyman, is dean.

RELEASE SOLDIERS FOR MINISTRY

London (wireless to RNS):—In view of the serious clergy shortage in England, 1500 theological students are to be released from the armed forces. However only those with a minimum of three years of service will be eligible.

CANTERBURY URGES MARITAL ADVICE

London (by wireless to RNS):—A nationwide network of "advice centers" to help adjust marital troubles and restore homes broken by the war was urged here by Geoffrey Francis Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury. The centers, he said, should be equipped to offer spiritual, medical, psychological, and legal help by specialists, particularly to liberated war prisoners and returning service men and women.

Addressing the Canterbury diocesan conference, the Archbishop called on the mayors of every town in England to take immediate steps to create such centers and declared that public money should be available to finance them.

"The return from captivity of great numbers of prisoners and the release of service men and women makes great demands for understanding and help," he said. "Many marriages have been and are being broken up or imperilled for reasons directly or indirectly connected with the war."

The Archbishop warned, however, that "whatever remedial measures are devised, they cannot avail much unless at the same time the community is deliberately determined to raise the general standard of honor, loyalty, and obligation in marriage and sex relations."

Dr. Fisher stressed that the need for advice and help is not confined to service men and women because many civilians also have been obliged during the war to live away from their homes. "Long separations under unnatural conditions" and hasty wartime marriages, he said, have helped to make the divorce rate "a grave national problem."

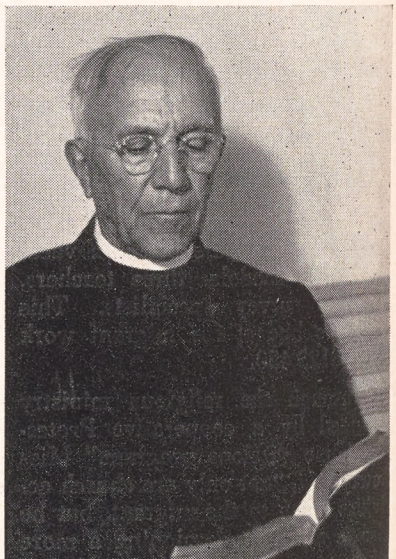
One of the basic requirements for restoring home life is the provision of adequate housing, and this demands, the Archbishop declared, "action as violent as any war operation."

BULGARIAN EXARCH ON RUSSIA

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—A statement stressing friendly relations between the Bulgarian and Russian Orthodox Churches was issued by Exarch Stefan of Bulgarian on his return to Sofia from Moscow. Speaking on behalf of the Bulgarian delegation which recently visited Russia, Exarch Stefan declared, "We have come to the conclusion that between the Russians and the Bulgarians there can be no more misunderstanding and division."

"All intrigue directed toward spoiling our relations," the Bulgarian Church head asserted, "will meet the united and single-minded resistance of both our churches."

QUISLING BISHOP OF OSLO



Oslo, Norway (wireless to RNS): —Charges of membership in the Nazi Party and of writing pro-Nazi newspaper articles have been made against the former Quisling Bishop of Oslo, Lars Andreas Froeyland, at preliminary hearings here. Froeyland was made "bishop" in 1942 to replace the imprisoned Primate, Bishop Eivind Berggrav. The 57-year-old prisoner told the court he had never been a member of the Nazi Party nor expressed sympathy with it. He said he had written a series of sermons for newspapers, but claimed these did not refer to National Socialism. Asserting he had been forced to accept the Oslo bishopric because the Norwegian bishops "laid down their offices" after the occupation, he added: "My congregation boycotted me because of my rumored membership in the National Socialist Party and my colleagues excluded me from their meetings."

CATHEDRAL PLANNED FOR CHICAGO

Chicago: — If sufficient donations can be obtained in the post-war period, the Diocese of Chicago may have a cathedral costing from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000, Bishop Conkling revealed here. The diocese has been without a cathedral for more than 20 years since the Cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul was destroyed by fire.

Bishop Conkling said his plans call for a cathedral similar to the Rockefeller Memorial Chapel, large Gothic structure at the University of Chicago. It is estimated that the cathedral would cost $2,500,000 and diocesan offices, a convention hall, and residences for the bishop and the cathedral dean would require an additional $500,000. A million dollar endowment fund is also planned. An added sum would have to be provided for the purchase of a building site.

Last May, Bishop Conkling announced that the diocesan debt, which had been $1,000,000 when he came here three years ago, had been completely paid off. At that time he named a committee to publicize the need for a cathedral, but stressed that the funds must come from individual donations and not from assessing parishes of the diocese.

The Rev. Carl Reed Taylor is the vicar of St. Matthew's, Pacific Palisades, California, a mission which was started in 1941 by a small band of residents and has had remarkable growth in spite of the difficulties of wartime

The Church in Germany

AMERICAN Churchmen will do well to watch their step in dealing with Protestant leaders in Germany. That hundreds of German pastors resisted the Nazi regime is an established fact. That many did so solely because the Hitler gang sought control of the Church is also a fact. Of no one is this more true than of Martin Niemoeller, the most publicized of them. He told a group of Americans in 1937, just three days before his arrest, that the resistance to the Nazis on the part of the Church was "not a question of the suitability of one political system or another. It is merely a question of the independence of the Church." He made it clear that he did not himself oppose Hitler on any other grounds and declared that he would gladly serve again as a submarine commander in the event that Germany went to war. Since his release he has given several interviews without in any way indicating that he changed his mind during the eight years that he was a Nazi prisoner. He now states that he plans to visit England and the United States at the earliest moment. We will do well to see that he stays in Europe, at least until we can know more of what is in his mind and what he would say to the large American audiences that would undoubtedly come to hear him.

There are other stories now coming out of Germany which indicate that Church leaders of both confessions have been, and still are, more afraid of the Soviet Union than anything else. There was the plot of German generals with their demand that the British take a favorable stand toward "the new Christian government." Leading German pastors took part in that scheme, as the Bishop of Chichester now reveals (see page three). By "the new Christian government" did these men seek to smash the unity of the United Nations by turning the British against their ally of the east?

More recently there was a secret meeting of Church leaders with German industrialists, so largely responsible for the rise of Hitler and of the war, where a "plan" was drawn up for postwar Germany. Here too it appears that fear of the left is driving Church leaders into reactionary activities.

There is but one way out for Germany in our opinion and that is to follow the British lead and take a decided and definite turn to the left. Left free to do so we believe the German people will take such a step. But any such movement will be vigorously opposed by the industrialists, with evidence that it is already being opposed by the American army of occupation, some of whose leaders are talking of using the western Germans as "Landsknechte" (hired soldiers) to fight the Russians. We are not prepared to say that German Protestantism is identified with these reactionary forces. We do say that some of their leaders unquestionably are. Churchmen of the democracies, and particularly those leading the World Council of Churches, will do well to keep this in mind as they confer with their German brethren.

The simple fact is that the people of this world have aspirations which they mean to translate into realities. The British election, with its two-to-one mandate for socialism in our time, ought to make this perfectly clear even to the most dull-witted. The Church, true to itself, should rejoice in this movement and, insofar as it is proper for the Church to do so, identify itself with it and cease being either the dupe or the paid-servant of reactionaries, in Germany and everywhere else.

"QUOTES"

IF THE American Churches would support the masses of the European people against the dividers of Europe from the east and from the west, and against the monopolistic rulers from this country, organized Christianity could make an invaluable contribution to the emerging social order of Europe. But is there a chance that this will happen or are we going to see the third act of the great tragedy of world transformation?

Why Not Try?

REPRESENTATIVE Joseph W. Martin, Jr., House Republican leader, deserves commendation and support for introducing in the House of Representatives a resolution asking the administration to seek, through the United Nations Security Organization, the outlawing of universal military training. Could anything be more obvious, more sensible or practical? Yet we find chairman of the House committee on postwar military policy stigmatizing this action as "a wonderful idealistic contemplation." We would question whether anything in this world has ever been devised for the good of mankind that has not at first been called just that! It is certainly the description the synics and the sceptics give to the teachings of Jesus. And has anything ever really worked that was not in its inception a wonderful idealistic contemplation? It has been the way of all science, all moral and social advance.

Said Mr. Martin, "The system which has long been the practice of European nations has never prevented war. It is always viewed with suspicion and fear by other countries, forcing them to adopt the same policy. It becomes an insupportable burden, a constant drain on the people of the world, and a further incentive to war." We have so far found few people who really want post-war conscription. Even those who are its most fervent advocates say that the state of the world demands it for our protection. "Other nations will have it, we must have it too." Only recently it was front-paged that Russia had begun to conscript its fifteen year old boys. This turned out to be an entirely fallacious report but denials, when published at all, were tucked away in an inconspicuous part of our newspapers. We have no doubt that most people still believe it.

The most logical nation to make an effort to bring this "idealistic" plan to pass is the one our statesmen constantly praise as the most idealistic; the United States of America. We cetrainly are the most powerful. We covet for our country the honor that will come to the nation that is willing to take the first step towards removing this curse of militarism from a war-sickened world.

False Gods of Education

by George St. John

Headmaster of The Choate School

IN THE emergency of war, in the struggle of life and death, when a kind of X-ray light breaks in on our follies and the truth stands out naked, this is the time—not only for our boys at the front but for us all—to analyze and evaluate that most important thing in the world which we call education—to see whether as parents and teachers we are putting first things first.

"What you would first have in your nation, you must first put in the minds and hearts of your youth."

What shall we say of our education in America? Horace Taft used to say, "Whatever else we may say about American education, we have to admit that it is in a bad way." The prayer of us who work intimately with boys is that American fathers and mothers and so-called educators, in the lurid light of war, are going to see clearly the educational mistakes of the past, and swear in the words of the Prayer Book that they will "renounce them all; and, by God's help, will endeavor not to follow, nor be led by them."

Educationally, we have run after false gods. We have made a fetish of the word progressive, a fetish of so-called "courses," percentiles, and degrees. Without a college degree in some states you can't go into the undertaking business!

We have run after I.Q.'s. I have often thought of it: Laval's I.Q., I understand, is high. On the other hand Mr. Churchill was in some things at the university as poor a student as I.

I want you to understand that this article is subjective. In education we might well have done with too great objectivity. Too often a student has had explained to him all sides of a question, and then with no experience to guide him has been told objectively to judge for himself—make his own choice; whereas what the poor fellow needed was a decidedly subjective thing, a compelling conviction and burning faith. Too often "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed."

When approaching any matter touching the things that move men, the subjective convictions which now our boys at war have to live by, we have acted almost as if we were ashamed, or as if convictions were to be identified with prejudice—and being intellectual, we could see both sides.

About a student's right to choose his own courses or his own beliefs we have been conscientious to the point of negativeness: cold exposition of both sides, elective systems, voluntary or compulsory chapel. To no other phase of education except chapel do we apply the damning contrast: nobody ever speaks of compulsory mathematics or compulsory science or compulsory English, but all the best that a school or college can give—because there is only one best place to give it—we stigmatize with the opprobrious word compulsory. We have made a god of individual choice—we have made a god of the question mark.

AND in public life we have made a god of food and of things. Away from the point of view, away from character and the moral virtues, emphasis has shifted to things, until the meaning is almost gone out of "Ye shall not live by bread alone." The New Deal with its security from the cradle to the grave, the Republicans with their full dinner pail (Mr. Hoover's two dinner pails!), the idealistic and communist with their satisfaction, theoretically, with no dinner pail—so long as they can prevent anybody else from having one—it all has to do with making a god of things. Sometimes the idealist, and sometimes the communist, is most materialistic of all.

We have given our children things rather than stamina. Discipline has become synonymous with harshness or abuse. Self-expression has taken the place of self-sacrifice. We have lost not only our way, but also "the truth and the life."

We have neglected direction, purpose, convictions, goals, ambition, and those things not too fancifully called ideals. Too often we have been working on facts easy to tabulate, and on a certain kind of mental horse power easy to express numerically; when we should have been putting emphasis on character, on standards, on direction, on nobility and the things of the spirit. Much of what we have done has been good, but it has received wrong emphasis. We have analyzed and known all about a boy's mental machinery, without putting half enough emphasis on what makes it go right. We have often put more thought on the analysis of what is wrong than on working to find a cure. For the future of our country it is an ominous fact that academic speed and cleverness we have rewarded with generous scholarships, while scarcely noticing a fine point of view and noble philosophy of life or their opposites. Generosity, self sacrifice, persistence, nobility—these there is no way to measure, and we tend to ignore them. We have done these things until one wonders if the time may not soon be upon us when "A man may be an ass and think what he pleases, so long as he has a vocabulary to back up his opinions."

It was LeBaron Briggs who said, "He who writes nonsense about education is at least in good company." It is a sad thing—the amount of nonsense written by so-called progressives, psychiatrists, school superintendents or whatever. About the deepest of all subjects, education, almost anybody feels free to write; and there is in America a strangely eager and humble and gullible public to listen, and follow.

Graduates of teachers' colleges, Ph.D.'s, people with certificates representing all kinds of courses—all flourish. "And Dukes were three a penny." A commonplace person, inexperienced and ordinary by nature, but equipped with a degree or so many hours of courses, receives a good appointment in our schools, while a teacher born to teach may find it difficult to gain in our school system any but an obscure and impecunious job.

Of character, of experience, of spiritual values, of the fact that a man's a man for a' of courses or degrees, our highly organized educational system has lost track.

"It is to the initiated a self-evident fact that for the thoroughly successful teacher there can be but one standard. He must be an angel for temper, a demon for discipline, a chameleon for adaptation, a diplomatist for tact, an optimist for hope, and a hero for courage."

No amount of courses or degrees and teachers' colleges can make teachers like that nor do they usually put emphasis on the things that would help most to do it.

But with all this criticism of American education there are among our schools, both public and private, the few exceptions that prove the rule. Amid all the educational shallowness and misguiding it has been given to a small handful of teachers and schools (because they so believed in their mission) to preserve for youth what in New England

THE SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

Maurice's Prophecy of Hitler

That the spirit of the Cross prevails very little in the nations which still profess to honor it; that self-sacrifice is very generally and very systematically denied to be the law of our being,—most of us are ready with shame to confess. And therefore the expectation is surely very reasonable, that the experiment which was so successful in the nations of the East [under the Crescent of Islam] will be made, under other conditions, in the West. We have had many preparatory Antichrists, many sovereigns reigning by the strength of mind and will, and scorning all other right; why should we doubt that this image will be yet more completely manifested?

May God preserve those who live in the day when it is manifested to the world, and when the world goes wondering after it! In that day when intellect and will shall be utterly crushed under the car of the idol which they have set up; in that day when the poor man shall cry, and there shall be no helper, may God teach his saints to proclaim these words to the sons of men: He was born of the Virgin; He suffered under Pontius Pilate; He was crucified, dead, and buried, and went down into Hell; He rose again on the third day; He ascended on high; He sitteth on the right hand of God; He shall come to judge the quick and the dead. May they be enabled to say, This is our God; we have waited for Him.

a century ago was a boy's and girl's natural heritage. As in the Dark Ages the monasteries kept alive the spark of civilization and learning, so in our age a handful of schools have kept alive among youth a philosophy of hard work, of common sense, of high standards, of the ethics of Christ's life and death and parables. To these things these schools are dedicated. Sometimes it seems as if these schools were among youth the last strongholds of the things of the spirit.

As a handful of independent colleges have tended to raise the standards of a hundred state colleges and universities, so this handful of schools exert an influence far beyond their numbers on a thousand schools the country over. For the sake of the character of our country, through those who are soon to carry its responsibilities, the number of such schools should increase.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

ONE American fascist has been stopped, at least temporarily. Stopped not by government but by the people. Gerald L. K. Smith, who places a "Rev." before his name, descended upon Los Angeles in May with the announcement that he was to make his national headquarters there. He sought to establish himself by a series of mass meetings. The first was at the Embassy Auditorium on May 31. It was largely ignored. The second was at the Philharmonic Auditorium on June 25. It was held under vigorous protest by the citizenry and was poorly attended. The third was at the Shrine Auditorium on July 20th. It was filled with empty seats. On the same evening an anti-Smith demonstration was held at the Olympic Auditorium. Every one of the 12,000 seats were occupied and there was an overflow meeting for the 5,000 unable to get in. It was arranged on short order but in spite of this the meeting is described by Carey McWilliams (a speaker at the CLID forum at the Kansas City General Convention) as "one of the most successful and most exciting mass meetings ever held in Los Angeles."

It was sponsored by 200 organizations, whose representatives responded to the roll-call by the attorney general of the state, Robert W. Kenny, who was chairman. Among the organizations were the veterans' organizations; business organizations; the CIO and the A.F. of L.; leaders of the Jewish community; the League of Women Voters; the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; the central committees of both the Democratic and Republican parties; the Free World Association; the Federation of Churches and a long list of other organizations. The only important element not represented was the Roman Catholic Church whose head, Archbishop Cantwell, declined to participate for reasons best known to himself.

The speakers included Orson Welles, Gregory Peck, Burgess Meredith, all of the movies; Phil Connolly and William Bassett, labor leaders; Sam Balter, John B. Hughes and Alvin Wilder, radio commentators. Attending and answering the roll-call were Mayor Fletcher Bowron; most of the members of the city council; most of the legislators from Southern California, including the colorful Albert Dekker, who is both a representative in the California legislature and a Hollywood actor. He made the collection speech when over $10,000 was tossed on a captured Nazi flag, the money to be placed at the disposal of a continuation committee charged with the task of waging a continuous fight against native fascism.

AS A result of it all Gerald L. K. Smith packed his bag, sputtering and ranting, vowing he would return and giving the press an alibi for his departure and for his poorly attended meetings. He was "planning on leaving soon anyhow" and his meetings were poorly attended because "communists" had packed the street cars so that his followers could not get to his meetings.

The moral is that the effective way to meet rabble-rousers like Smith is to do what these Los Angeles citizens did so effectively: organize counter-demonstrations, with representatives of all the organizations in the community willing to join, with stress on a positive program for the future and not mere denunciation of an individual. And most important of all, a continuation committee, representative of the organizations sponsoring the meeting, to mobilize the community against any fascist bids for power in the future.

At least it worked in Los Angeles where the man who once boasted that "when chaos comes I'll be the leader" found that the City of the Angels was not his happy hunting ground. Might be a good idea for the citizens of Detroit to follow through with similar action.

Rethinking Christian Marriage

by John W. Tuton

Rector of Saint John's Church, Baltimore

THE incongruity of our position regarding the marriage of divorced persons is obvious. For instance, a priest of the writer's acquaintance, was recently approached by a divorced man desiring to be married. Under the particular circumstances all that the priest could do was to baptize the man (which he did!) and send him on down the street where his relationship was blessed by a fellowship of Christians. Fortunately, the man in question must have been a simple soul. Otherwise, the whole situation would have appeared ludicrous. And it is ludicrous!

This is but one of many considerations which should prompt our thinking on Christian marriage. Society is becoming increasingly concerned with the problem of family relationships. The war with its increased emotions has plunged thousands of young Christians into marriages, many of which were ill-advised. The average parish priest is already finding the problems which have come out of some of these marriages. And most of us probably have felt that something better could be done than our Church has yet done.

But the answer does not seem forthcoming by viewing other Christian groups. On the one hand one large branch of Christendom claims, in effect, that a large proportion of the human family is illegitimate. But her loyal children, if disobedient, can, by the machinations of legalism, find life again within mother Church. On the other hand, and at the opposite end, there is probably too little law: marriage, in such situations, is viewed largely as a matter of convenience, and does not really exist if the state says it does not. To the average Episcopalian neither extreme is the real solution. But before any solution to the problem of divorce and marriage can be reached let us attempt to understand what Christian marriage is.

Our Lord said very little about marriage. And what he did say appears to be singularly uncompromising. The nearest thing to a compromise might be the reference in Mark 19:11, which, if it is in reference to the preceding passage regarding marriage, suggests that all men cannot accept the ultimate rule regarding marriage. But there are at least two things which we must bear in mind: the first has to do with the circumstances in which Jesus lived historically, the other has to do with the principle involved in Jesus' attitude.

When Jesus taught regarding marriage, marriage was not as ideal an institution as we might suspect. Neither was family life as stable as we might believe. Divorce consisted, in effect, of a man telling his wife to leave. Under such circumstances a compromising attitude would have watered down the whole effect. Easy divorce then (and still) robs life of the dignity for which God meant it.

Now what of the principle behind the law which Jesus seems to have given? May we not say this: that the concept of God's fatherhood is the real principle at stake? To talk of God as father to people whose experience of earthly fathers is but transient, borders on the impossible. But where there is substantial family life, where there is the experience of a dependable father on earth, the stage is set for that moving and wonderful drama which will take place as men begin to discover God as father. Marriage and family life we would suggest is meant to condition the individuals within it so that they can move towards making the discovery that the supreme reality is a personal reality and a father reality. Jesus saw his own meaning in terms of showing fatherhood through his relationships with others. And that we believe is the basic Christian principle upon which not only Christian marriage must hinge but all the other areas of life as well.

But now we come to a major difficulty. We all agree that easy divorce robs us of the father concept, without which Christianity could hardly exist. Must we not go a step further and say that inflexible laws do the same thing? For laws have a strange way of contravening the principle out of which they originally grew. For instance, stop signs at busy intersections are good things. They are meant to save life. But if one is taking a desperately ill child to a hospital one forgets the law and returns to the principle out of which the law sprung.

And is not this the situation within our canon law regarding marriage? Assume for example that a child has a drunken father, or a cruel father, or an indifferent father. The Church (without benefit of canon law as far as is known to the writer) may advise the mother to separate from the father (if he deserves to be called such). Now what if someone enters the picture who would either create or restore the true Christian idea of fatherhood? Can the Church ask God's blessing upon such a union? Not at all. Is not the principle lost within the law?

WHAT can the Church do, beyond what it is already doing in the way of instruction? If Christian marriage exists primarily for a growing understanding of the fatherhood of God, if this be the basic principle, then this basic principle must reach out to redeem the concepts which have been shattered in homes that have been broken. How could such a principle, which at one time most adequately expressed itself in the words of Jesus, best express itself in our own times?

In order that the primary Christian principle regarding Christian marriage be preserved and expressed, we would suggest the formation of a family commission or court within each diocese. We suggest that it should be made up of the bishop, two priests, a social worker, a psychologist or psychiatrist, and a lawyer. Reasons for such a constituency will be indicated later.

Such a court (i) would act as an advisory board in issuing marriage and family instructions within the diocese. Its rulings and advice could not contravene the canons of General Convention. (ii) It could adjudicate that Christian marriage had not existed in certain marriages. That is, from the evidence available, it could judge that fatherhood of God could not become known through a marriage under some circumstances. Then (iii) upon making such decisions, it could sanction a Christian marriage within the Church, providing, however, that the court was satisfied that the evidence available indicated that the contemplated union would be Christian in its true sense.

As to the make-up of the court, it is felt that the various aspects of marriage could best be analyzed by including those who would judge the legal, social, and mental aspects, as well as the religious aspects. The manner of selection of the court, as well as procedure, could best be ruled upon by the General Convention. The court might well include, in its deliberations, the individual clergy interested in specific cases.

Such a court we maintain would more accurately speak the mind of Christ than would law, itself. Being constituted, as we suggest, it would not endanger the position of the bishop within the Christian community (as would be the case where matters of divorce and remarriage were left to his individual discretion). Further, with lay representatives, it would more adequately express the mind of Christ than would a group of clergy or laity. Nor would its duties be over-burdensome. Few would be willing to face such a commission or court. Only those who really love the Church and truly desire its blessing would be willing to go through it. But those who did and found a favorable response might truly find God as father. Any solution which we make will have its flaws. But any solution which does not see Christian marriage in terms of the basic principle of the fatherhood of God is doomed to failure. Whatever changes come within the canon law must hold this principle above all others.

_Pascal_, Genius in the Light of Scripture. By Emile Cailliet. The Westminster Press. $3.75.

This is not gossipy biography, lost in the minutiae of daily life. You will find here the development and religious concerns of the man Pascal, based not on dubious reconstructed conversations, but on the historical record wisely interpreted. This kind of biography is strange to American eyes. It brings before us the majesty of the Scriptures and the depths of the Gospel, as they penetrated the intense nature of the seventeenth century mathematical prodigy Pascal. For the sake of this, it is worth enduring pages of eulogising. Professor Cailliet, though an internationally recognized scholar dealing with a thinker of undoubted position, still has the uncertainty of an enthusiast. He does not need to tell us that Pascal is a great man, that the Bible is the Book of Books, and that it had decisive effect on Pascal. That is clear in the evidence. Below this dross lies the gold of Christ's Gospel. "Let us learn from Pascal, then, that Christianity is essentially a matter of commitment; that theology is a matter of authority; than that in the last analysis the supreme authority in theology is that of the Incarnate Son, the Supernatural Christ. He, the Living Word, is therefore the measure of all things spiritual, even of Scripture. Let us once more realize, as in this final assurance we behold the serenity of Pascal's death mask, that the only true Church is the Communion of Saints."

St. Bernard's School Stresses The Practical in Life

School Provides for Trips to Industrial Plants, Farms and Many Welfare Agencies

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Gladstone, N. J.:—Headmaster H. D. Nicholls, in his recent report to the association of St. Bernard's School, reviewed the part graduates and boys of this Church school have played in the war. There are 176 in the service, with two missing in action and seven killed. He also stated that the fund for the proposed addition to Conover House, one of the school buildings, was progressing satisfactorily. Later at the same meeting the treasurer, Mr. R. Stuyvesant Pierrepont, stated that the fund had reached $33,000 and that plans were under way to start construction in the spring.

St. Bernard's offers a college preparatory course that provides every opportunity both for spiritual development and training in the practical problems of life. In addition to individualized instruction in small classes, it has had long experience in training boys in the practical affairs of the farm, the printing shop, the work shop and in landscaping. It also provides comprehensive and well-planned field trips to industrial plants, farms, and welfare agencies. It is the only Church school for boys in the state of New Jersey.

Pastor Arrested

Copenhagen (wireless to RNS):—Pastor Erik Johannes Stroebech, notorious pro-Nazi Danish clergyman, has been arrested here on charges of carrying on espionage for the Gestapo during the German occupation. He is also accussed of complicity in the murder of a young Danish pastor named Johannesen.

Aid for OPA

New York:—The Office of Price Administration has assigned a consumer relations officer to explore the possibilities of church cooperation in support of price control and rationing to combat inflation and the black market. During the summer, Miss Elizabeth Lam, professor of religion at Western Reserve University in Cleveland, O., is conferring with national religious leaders to ascertain if information on the OPA and its objectives is needed and wanted by the churches.

While in New York, Miss Lam told Religious News Service that she found the churches keenly interested in helping to eliminate the black market, in creating public acceptance of rationing in order to feed the starving peoples of war-devastated countries, and in the necessity of price control to prevent inflation.

Books for Russia

New York: — Religious groups throughout the country are being urged to cooperate in a campaign for 1,000,000 English language classics to re-stock Russian libraries looted by the Germans. The appeal was issued here by the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, pastor of Christ Church in New York City and chairman of the inter-faith committee of the American Society for Russian Relief, formerly Russian War Relief, which is sponsoring the project.

Sockman pointed out that the Germans, in their invasion of Russia, destroyed 12,000 public libraries and reading rooms, and more than 20,000,000 books, including collections of English language volumes. As the study of English in the Soviet Union is nearly universal, he added, the demand for English and American literature is far greater than the supply. The books will be shipped to Russia on Soviet vessels as soon as they are received by the American Society for Russian Relief.

End Segregation

San Jose, Calif. (RNS):—Calling for an end to racially segregated churches, the Christian Churches of Northern California, at their annual meeting here, urged that Japanese Americans be invited into membership in local congregations. The convention also requested authorities to prevent un-American and undemocratic incidents as Nisei evacuees return to the West Coast. Other resolutions endorsed continuation of the national Fair Employment Practices Committee, recommended a state FEPC, opposed peacetime conscription, and supported all organized efforts to control and suppress sales of alcoholic beverages.

of union between the Eastern and Western Churches," according to an article by Professor I. G. Aivazovosky in the latest issue of the Journal of the Moscow Patriarchate. The article is regarded here as one of the most detailed anti-Vatican statements to have appeared in the Russian press for many years. Professor Aivazovosky accused the Vatican of having "introduced novelties in matters of faith and church organization" and condemned the Pope's "claim to be Vicar of Christ on earth."

"All appeals by the Pope for union," he declared, "signify, not union, but enslavement of the Eastern Orthodox Church. To such appeals, the Eastern Church must reply negatively."

British Salvage

London (wireless to RNS):—Masonry and glass from churches in Bath, England, destroyed or damaged by air raids have been sent to Lakeview, Ontario, to be used in a new church being built there.

Churches Damaged

Paris (wireless to RNS):—Minor damage was suffered by the American Protestant Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity here when vandals attempted recently to set fire to the building. The fire burned itself out after having charred a part of the altar. Vandals also broke into the Anglican Church of St. George, causing considerable damage to furniture.

Future Church

Boston (RNS):—Church choirs of the future will waft their music from airplanes to earth-bound audiences, Prof. H. Augustine Smith, professor of choral music at Boston University, predicted at a conference of the Arts Guild of the Congregational Christian Churches at Newton-Andover Theological Seminary. Professor Smith said that, in a rapidly developing air age, churches will have to revise their programs around the 40-hour week and Sunday travel by train, bus, plane, and motorboat. He added that Protestants will be compelled to follow somewhat the timing of the Masses of the Roman Catholic Church, with five to seven Sunday morning services.

for their annual conference they discussed lively topics. Rabbi E. I. Jacob of Springfield, Mo., and the Rev. V. E. Holly, rector of St. Philip's, Syracuse, stirred them with talks on race relations. There was an interesting course on the popular subject of home making, offered by Mrs. Harold C. Kelleran of New Berlin, N. Y., and other courses on the new hymnal, on the New Testament, on missions, on worship were offered by the Rev. H. W. Foreman of Adams, N. Y.; the Rev. James Plankey of Seneca Falls; the Rev. Charles Sykes of Tioga County Missions; Miss Elizabeth Britton of Birmingham. The director of the conference was the Rev. James E. Wolfe of Bainbridge. The chaplain was the Rev. Fenimore E. Cooper of Syracuse, while the Rev. Gilbert V. Hemsley, described as "that genius of creative fun and friendship" was in charge of recreation.

Virginia Conferences

Roslyn, Va.:—Three well attended young peoples' conferences were held in the diocese of Virginia from July 1 to 24, all under the chairmanship of the Rev. James W. Kennedy with the Rev. Reginald W. Eastman as dean. Guest speakers were the Presiding Bishop, Bishop Goodwin, the Rev. Hubard Lloyd, the Rev. Churchill Goodwin and the Rev. John Page Williams. Bishop Mason was chaplain at one of the conferences.

Cooperation Demanded

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—The people of Holland were urged to subordinate personal interests to the welfare of the country in a message by the general synod of the Dutch Reformed Church. The message stressed that Holland's reconstruction calls for "complete consecration to the true renewal of righteousness and peace." Declaring that the black market must be abolished, the message asserted that "lives of luxury are absolutely intolerable" in face of the great need of the whole people. It demanded stern measures against profiteering and warned that private fortunes "must not take precedence over the needs of an impoverished community."

"Christian righteousness," the statement said, "demands of the people, especially employers, owners of capital, and workers, that they do not return to the class struggles of the past, but concentrate their energy on attaining a just order wherein the worker is recognized as a responsible collaborator, and security of existence is guaranteed. This righteousness demands that workers returning from abroad be integrated as soon as possible in the normal process of production, so that they may feel their fatherland knows how to give its workers a place at home where they can work and live and help in reconstruction."

Auto Sunday School

Regina, Canada (RNS):—A Sunday school on wheels—that's the Sunday school caravan of the Church of England in Canada which, this summer, started its 25th year of activity in the western provinces and northern Ontario. The caravan consists of 24 separate vans and was organized in 1920 by Miss Eva Hasell, who is still in charge. Plans of Miss Hasell call for the addition of two more vans before fall, with 16 more volunteer workers. She is at present making a tour of western points, giving lectures and appealing for funds.

A former driver for the British Red Cross in World War 1, Miss Hasell founded the Sunday school van system in Saskatchewan to provide religious instruction for young people in rural districts. She also laid the foundations for the Sunday school-by-mail.

The women who have served in the caravan for the past 25 years have received no pay, but are supplied with food and travelling expenses. The caravan is operated from early spring until freeze-up. Reports for 1944 show that 4,724 new members were enrolled, and 11,314 old members were visited. Altogether, 9,553 homes were visited on the prairies.

Church Leaders

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Four Confessional Church leaders have been given key posts under Dr. D. Otto Dibelius, recently-named head of the new Evangelical Church government in Berlin and Brandenburg. All four were formerly associated with Pastor Martin Niemoeller and were active in the anti-Nazi church resistance movement in Germany.

Serving as liaison between the Evangelical Church and Russian occupation authorities is Pastor Heinrich Grueber, who was sent to a Nazi concentration camp for two years because he formed the Confessional committee to aid Christians of Jewish descent. He has been assigned also to organize relief projects for displaced persons.

Pastor Hans Lokies, at one time Lutheran missionary in India, has been placed in charge of youth work and religious education in schools. This is regarded as one of the most important tasks confronting the new church government.

Others on the central committee are Pastor Hans Boehm, prominent in German Church affairs for the past ten years; and Pastor Helm Jannasch, who was active during the Hitler regime in organizing aid for persecuted Confessional pastors. Both Dr. Dibelius and Pastor Boehm have played leading roles in the ecumenical (world Church cooperation) movement.

All so-called "German Christians," an element which compromised with the Hitler regime, have been completely ousted from control in the Berlin and Brandenburg province. Dr. Dibelius, who was displaced as superintendent of the United Church of Prussia when the Nazis came into power, has now recovered his position and will assume the title of bishop.

Orkney Springs, Va.: — Shrine Mont, Church conference center, had two impressive dedications this summer. First was a fine portrait of the founders, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Help for China

Bromley, Liberia: — School girls in Liberia are sending a gift to school girls in China. The sixty boarders at Julia Emery Hall, Bromley, Liberia, heard how the students of the Hankow Diocesan School had traveled a thousand miles into free China and moved their school four times, seeking safety. The girls in Liberia on their own initiative got up a program of music and recitations, invited everybody, telling them to bring an offering, and are sending the total amount to China, "to be used for the children who have had to move so often and suffer so much, in order to do what is easy for us in this country."

Church in Mexico

New York:—Retirement of the Ven. Samuel Salinas of Mexico after fifty years of service—he was ordained deacon in 1895—has cut down still further the small staff of active clergy in that field. New Church activity in Mexico has been started at two places within the past year, at Chapulaco in the state of Hidalgo, northeast of Mexico City, and at Tlajomulco, in the state of Jalisco to the west. At five other places, small groups of people are interested in the Church, and Bishop Efrain Salinas is doing his best to send some one to meet with them and teach them.

from Roman Catholic sources early in 1944 threatened all non-Roman work but later reports indicate that it "had a beneficial result among the population; great numbers of people are now interested in the study of the Bible, and many of them in the work of the Episcopal Church." The school and kindergarten in Tacuba, near Mexico City, started 1944 with 276 students, lost 60 per cent of them in the face of uncertainty and general uneasiness, and then grew until it is now packed with 400 students after having to turn many away. "Our Church people," the Bishop adds, "have reaffirmed their loyalty; their interest has increased; their spirit is stronger and their decision to stand for Christ is magnificent."

Many Confirmed

New Guinea:—The Bishop of New Guinea, Philip N. W. Strong, has returned to his cathedral at Dogura after a three months' tour of his diocese. "I have been to all our mission districts and military areas which needed episcopal ministrations," he writes. "I have taken eighteen confirmation services and confirmed over 400. Of these, 220 were army or air force men; 170 were Papuans. At one service I confirmed both races, using two languages all the way through. On the Gona battleground, where the church had been destroyed, the native people had erected an outdoor altar with a canopy for shade from the scorching sun."

A number of the Bishop's missionaries and native people were killed in this diocese. The Bishop adds, "There are now many stirring witnesses to the fact that the blood of the martyrs is already proving the seed of the Church."

MR. WINSLOW AMES
Civilian Public Service Camp, Coshocton, Ohio

Thanks very much for your editorial against peacetime conscription. The recommendation voted by the Woodrum committee indicates that the fight needs to continue steadily. The minority on that committee against permanent conscription, or at least against a decision in wartime, was sizeable, and that gives ground for hope. The lobbies in favor of permanent conscription are, however, powerful; and they are armed with an important current item, namely the fact that contributions to the Legion and to the most prominent committee in favor of peacetime conscription are deductible for income tax; whereas attempts to deduct contributions to most of the organizations opposed will doubtless be declared not deductible in the case of groups formed for the purpose, and might embarrass older organizations that have long enjoyed deductibility. This is a minor matter but it shows how the wind blows.

THE REV. JAMES L. SMILEY

Allow me to thank you for the editorial on peace time conscription (WITNESS, June 28). It is the expression of consecrated common sense. The opposition bears the germs of reviving Prussianism.

THE REV. GEORGE NOSTRAND
Rector of St. Philip's, Cleveland

I have read in a current magazine an article on "Russia's Own Church Elects a Patriarch," with eleven archbishops, each staggering under the full weight of ecclesiastical ornament. Is this the sight which is to revive the longing eyes of the Russian people? Pomp is useful in its place and traditional with the Russian Church but I wish we might see more of the same Church in action seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Where can we hear more about the people in our sister Church over there who want something more than to restore things to the way they were in the days of the czars?

THE REV. PAUL T. SHULTZ JR.
Rector of Emmanuel, West Roxbury, Mass.

Congratulations on your editorial Power after Pentecost in a recent number. It prompts me for a third time in as many years to remind you that Forward in Service is producing in the Episcopal Church the very unity for which you plead and again to ask why THE WITNESS remains silent about this significant movement in the Church's life.

ANSWER: Last winter the managing editor of THE WITNESS visited Mr. Shultz at his home. Because of the great enthusiasm Mr. Shultz expressed for Forward in Service, our managing editor met with the Rev. Avery Mason, director of Forward in Service, to find out how THE WITNESS could best cooperate. It was suggested that we could best aid by devoting our Lenten Series of articles to the topics that Forward in Service was urging the Church to study during the season. We not only complied with this request but the authors also were selected by Mr. Mason. THE WITNESS extensively publicized this series of eight articles, both with advertisements and with circulars, in which we pointed out that they were tie-ins with the Forward in Service Study Outlines. We feel therefore that we have not "remained silent." Our records however indicate that Mr. Shultz did remain silent, at least as far as organizing in his parish any group to study the series planned almost entirely by the director of Forward in Service. Fact is, we were a bit disappointed that the man who was the one to initiate the series didn't order at least five or six copies while the articles were appearing so that a few of his people might catch some of the enthusiasm for what he calls "this significant movement."

THE REV. PHILIP L. SHUTT
In charge of Trinity, Belvidere, Ill.

Dean Day's article Is Union Possible in THE WITNESS (June 14) raises many questions and since he has asked his readers "what do you think?" here is one answer. I am much concerned over our Church divisions, and I can go along with much of what he says, but I am forced to ask what other system of ministry and the sacraments than ours has been as successful in "spreading the Gospel of Christ and making Him known to men," to quote Dean Day? At all costs we must preserve the commonly accepted tradition of at least 1700 years that the three-fold ministry of apostolic origin and authority is basic to any union. Once this is accepted everything falls into place. If such a system had been contrary to God's will it would long ago have disappeared from among Christian communions.

The Stand of Church in Norway Explained by Bishop

Bishop Berggrav Issues Personal Statement After His Liberation by Quisling Forces

By British Information Service

Oslo:—"My personal faith is not worth many words," said Bishop Berggrav, "but it is symbolic of the position of the Norwegian Church during this difficult time which now at last has come to an end."

In giving an account of his work, his arrest and his imprisonment in a cottage in Asker during the war, Bishop Berggrav said: "The Norwegian bishops in January 1941 wrote their well-known pastoral letter which stirred the entire people. The Nazis tried to intercept the pastoral letter and they succeeded in capturing some copies and also started to confiscate dispatches to North Norway. This matter was dealt with quite simply. Dr. Fjellbu, at that time dean, knew a pilot of a German aircraft; thus it happened that the Germans themselves flew the pastoral letter to North Norway. This pastoral letter and the Supreme Court action in December 1940 proved to be the beginning of the spiritual fight which Norway carried on afterwards. We were expecting the worst and it was not long afterwards that I was arrested. The state police were after me and the arrest took place on the train near Hvalstad station. I was taken to Bredtvedt and my imprisonment started. On several occasions I was brought from here in order to explain myself both to Quisling and to Terboven. Quisling's attitude was belligerent and he said that I ought to be beheaded a hundred times because I was responsible for it all.

"My most interesting experience was an interrogation by Terboven and Himmler at Skaugum. Hardly had I entered before Terboven began scolding me, using terrible language. Neither Himmler nor I took much notice of him. Himmler appeared sympathetic and intelligent during the conversation and I felt that at heart he respected my views entirely. The fact that he did not dare to stand by his convictions only goes to prove how devilish is the whole system which he supports. Himmler asked why the Norwegian Church and the Norwegian people resisted the new order. I gave him a comprehensive explanation. At the end he explained that it would be stupid to make a martyr of me. 'There is another way to break your power and influence,' he said, 'and that is to let you be forgotten.' After the interrogation at Skaugum I returned to Bredtvedt. Some time afterwards I learned that I was free. But when I left the camp a car from the state police was awaiting me in which I was taken to the cottage in Asker, where I have been ever since. Here also I found my son interned. Thus in all these years the cottage in Asker has been my place of work. I have worked, read and written and on the whole achieved a good deal. A series of good books can be expected."

Asked whether after short acquaintance with the Nazi guards he won them over to his views he said: "I came in October and by Christmas time I got on well with my guards. I can mention this: an order given to erect an electrified fence 2 metres high around the camp was never carried out. After I came to an agreement with my guard, life became more bearable. I was allowed to walk into the woods around the cottage and could take exercise. Thus while I was there I chopped 14 cords of firewood.

"From the very beginning we established communication with all necessary organizations both in Norway and abroad. We even contacted the Church opposition in Germany. On several occasions they smuggled me away from the cottage into town where I had conferences with leaders of the Church and Home Front. Like other secret organizations in Norway we were using letter-box addresses and disguise, so excitement was not lacking. Never once was contact with the Swedish and Danish Churches interrupted. Among others I have personally corresponded with Bishop Aulen in Stockholm. The help received from our brother people, spiritually as well as materially, can never be valued highly enough. On several occasions prominent German representatives visited me amongst whom were a German Count and several high-ranking reserve officers.

Bishop Eivind Berggrav of Norway tells of the stand the Church took against the Nazis upon his release

"We benefited much from the fight of the Confessional Church (Bekenntniskirche) in Germany. We have learned from its methods, its victories and its failure. We learned that it was useless to compromise with Nazism and that the only way when the Church was concerned was a definite No.

"With regard to our brother people, during these hard times, we have all taken the same line and we have fought for the same principles and from the same foundation, in the Home Front. Today I can reveal to you such a leader: Pastor Conrad Bonnevie Svendsen."

Bishop Berggrav was asked about the attitude of the Church towards the state.

"It is no unpleasant position for the Church to have so close a relationship with the state. It is, however, a necessity that the Church should have greater freedom in her internal spiritual affairs. Through our work we hope to achieve this for the benefit of the Church and the people." The Bishop attached great importance to the economic [?œcumenical—Ed.] work of the Church after the war. He expressed deep regret over the passing away of the Archbishop of Canterbury, William Temple.

Finally, Bishop Berggrav answered a question regarding the tasks of the Church in the immediate future. He said: "We want the religious life to be natural and true. Now we are going back to our work."

San Antonio, Texas:—The cover picture is the corner of the Schoolhouse at St. Mary's Hall, diocesan school for girls. It is one of eight fine buildings on a six acre campus that is beautiful in its tree surrounded setting. All of the buildings are in keeping with the spirit of the Southwest Spanish architecture. Many student organizations offer opportunity at St. Mary's for work and play and experience in leadership. Courses are offered in the arts and sciences and stress is placed upon a wholesome religious atmosphere. It is both a residence and day school and prepares girls for the leading colleges through its fully accredited curriculum. The head mistress of St. Mary's Hall is Miss Katharine Lee.

COMMISSION ON RURAL WORK

Madison, Wis.:—Bishop Lewis of Nevada was elected chairman of the joint commission on rural work which was organized here after a lapse of six years during the sessions of the town-country conference. The Rev. Clifford Samuelson, associate secretary of domestic missions, was elected secretary. Focusing on minimum standards for country work, improved theological training, establishment of several demonstration centers were discussed at the two day meeting.

CHAPLAIN QUINN IS KILLED

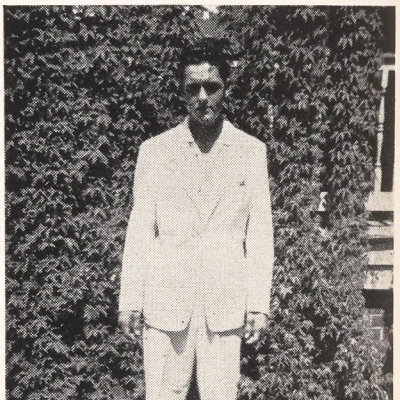
Washington:—The navy department has announced that Chaplain David L. Quinn was among the 1001 Americans who were killed when the Japanese prison ship on which they were passengers was torpedoed and sunk last December in Subic Bay. He was assistant rector of St. Paul's, Washington, before entering the service.

GERMANY CHURCHES GET HELP

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—The World Council of Churches has made its first contribution to the reconstruction of religious life in Germany. The sum of $180,000 has been voted to be used for the building of wooden halls suitable for services and meetings, literature, the transportation of ministers.

PEOPLE'S MOVEMENT HEADED BY PASTOR

Amsterdam (wireless to RNS):—The Rev. Willem Banning, pastor of the Dutch Reform Church and leader of the resistance movement during the war, is chairman of the newly-created Netherlands People's Movement. He succeeds Prof. Willem Schermerhorn, one of the founders, who was recently named prime minister of Holland. The movement seeks "to promote social action on behalf of the common man."



WHY CATHEDRAL WAS SAVED

London (wireless to RNS):—Salisbury Cathedral was spared by German bombers during the war because its 400-foot spire served as a landmark in raids on strategic centers, according to Ernest Neville Lovett, Bishop of Salisbury. Bishop Lovett spoke at a service of thanksgiving for the preservation of the cathedral.

"When the spire was built in the Middle Ages," Bishop Lovett said, "it was intended to point to heaven, but the enemy used it as a signpost on the path of death and destruction."

RELIGIOUS CENTERS IN GERMANY

London (wireless to RNS):—Plans to set up religious centers in Germany "during the coming years of occupation" have been drawn up here by the chaplains department of the 21st British Army. Every center will have a chaplain's house, library, and recreation room. The centers will be established in hotels, houses, or other suitable buildings requisitioned for the purpose. About 60 persons will be accommodated at each center. It is planned to distribute religious literature and make use of religious programs sponsored by the British Broadcasting Corporation. Another suggestion is that religious dramas be presented at the centers.

MEMORIAL TO HONOR BISHOP AZARIAH

London (wireless to RNS):—A memorial to the late Bishop Azariah of Dornakal, India, is being planned. In view of Bishop Azariah's special interest in the advancement of Indian womanhood through Christian higher education, it has been decided that the memorial shall include a chapel for the diocesan girls' high school at Bezwada, extension of school accommodations, more hostels and scholarships, and the development of teacher training. Other girls' schools in the diocese will profit by the scheme which will culminate in the erection and endowment of a women's Christian college for the Telegu country.

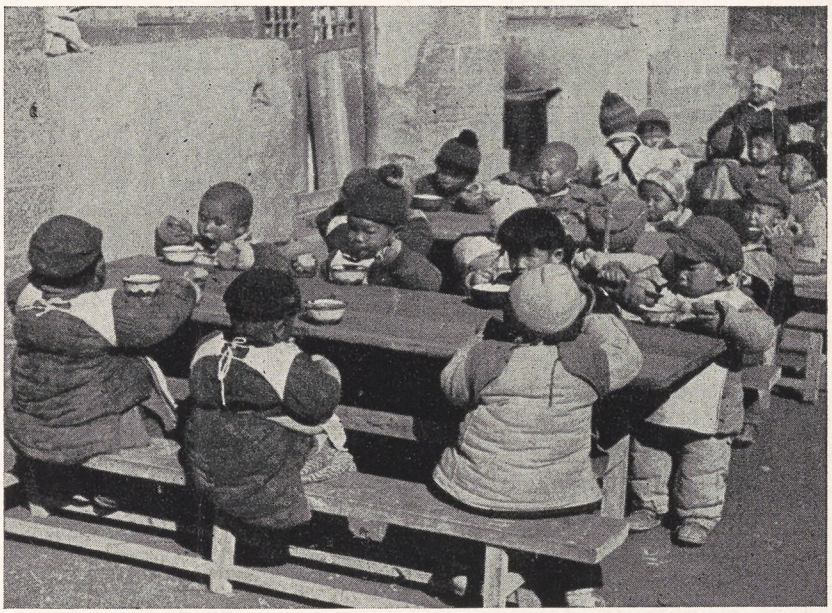
Chinese Leaders Ask Coalition To Solve China's Needs

Armies Have Fought Thousands of Battles With Practically No Help from the Outside

By W. B. Spofford



New York:—Talks with leaders of the Yenan set-up in China is not only revealing. It is likewise disturbing. Three of them were in New York the other day, on their way home from San Francisco by way of London where they hope to confer with leaders of the new government there. Mr. Tung Pi-Wu is a quiet man with one of those drooping mustaches that we used to see on the royal high executioner in the Mikado. His face breaks out in one of the most contagious smiles I have seen on the least provocation. Mr. Chan Chia-King is about four feet nine; weighs 100 pounds dressed for winter weather; looks about eighteen. It brought a gasp to learn that he is thirty, married, the father of children, and the secretary of the party that rules one hundred million people in nineteen liberated areas of China. Mr. Chang Han-Fu, like Mr. Chan, educated in America, is the editor of a daily paper in Chungking and seemed to get a lot of fun out of having a heart-to-heart chinwag with a few sympathetic Americans. Mr. Tung was one of the eight to serve on the Chinese delegation at the United Nations Conference. The other two men were advisors.

There isn't room here to set forth the facts about Yenan and the hundred million they govern. Agnes Smedley, Edgar Snow, Harrison Forman and other writers have told the story of their fight against illiteracy, for better living for the people, for democracy. They have told also of their two famous armies with nearly a million soldiers even today in spite of losses that run close to half a million . . . armies that have taken a toll of three Japanese killed for every one of their own. The story of their military achievements is almost unbelievable. For more than eight years these two armies have fought over 115,000 battles against the Japanese and their puppets and have out-maneuvered and out-fought the enemy in every campaign. And while fighting the Japanese they have somehow found time to establish democratic governments, elected by universal suffrage; to start industrial cooperatives; to start schools and publish 198 newspapers; to reduce rents and interest; to organize and train a militia for home defense now numbering over two million, largely composed of boys and old men and women. "What's more, these armies, after fighting and training, have made themselves largely self-supporting in order to overcome their economic difficulties, to improve their living conditions and to lessen the burden on the people," to quote Mr. Tung.

And how much help do you suppose these Eight Route and New Fourth Armies have received from the United Nations to aid them in their 115,000 battles against our common enemy? According to Mr. Tung during the more than eight years that they have been in the forefront of the war they have received altogether 120 light machine-guns and six anti-tank guns. For awhile they received cartridges and other explosives but this was entirely stopped in 1940. Since then they have got on the best they could by making their own. They also have received one motor car, four ambulances and four trucks. But these did not come through lend-lease. They were contributions from individuals in America, England and elsewhere which were sent to Madame Sun Yat-Sen who has faithfully stuck by the principles of her famous husband in the face of tremendous opposition from other members of her family.

It was made abundantly clear by these Chinese leaders that the Kuomintang is pretty much of a fascist set-up, with supression of all freedoms; with kidnapping of democratic leaders; with concentration camps, and they gave some pretty sordid tales from first hand experience to back up their statements. Certainly it is clear that the Kuomintang is keeping some of its best troops to bottle up these liberated areas, with headquarters in Yenan, when they should be fighting the Japanese. And little Mr. Chen, with a broad grin, said: "It is rather amusing to hear some Americans denounce the Russians for not fighting the Japanese, while they say nothing about an army of a million Chinese soldiers who do not fight the Japanese because the Kuomintang government would rather have them fight China's Democratic Areas."

They were very polite in asking questions about U. S. policy. But just why is it that your government gives no support whatever to our armies that have fought the Japanese for more than eight years? Why is it that your government does not stand for a coalition government in China and a united supreme command? Why is it that your government does not support us in our demands for the mobilization of all forces for the complete defeat of the Japanese invaders? Why is it that your government does not support us in our demands for people's freedom; for people's unity; for a people's army; for the development of industry; for cultural and educational reforms; for agrarian reform; for the freedom of religion for which we stand and which we practice in the liberated areas?

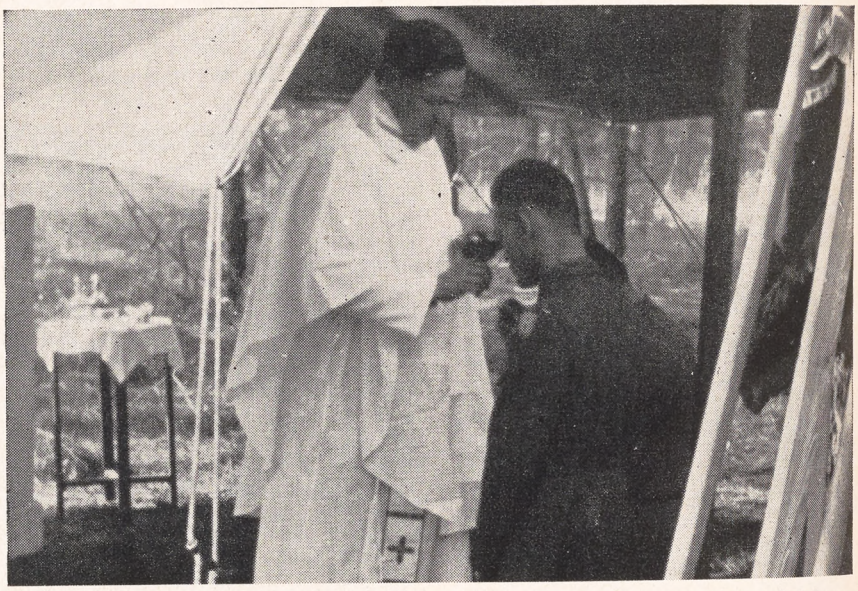
The answer of course is a simple one; the United States has always found it easier to cooperate with fascist and semi-fascist groups and governments than it has to support genuinely democratic groups and governments. This is true in Africa, in Italy, in France, in Germany, in Poland, in China. And it is something that has to be corrected by the people themselves, just as the Gerald L. K. Smith situation was taken care of by the people themselves in Los Angeles (WITNESS, August 9). Come the end of summer, if we have to wait that long, and maybe a few mass meetings can be staged over this business. Meanwhile it is always possible for wide-awake people to ask questions of Congressmen, Senators and other officials in Washington.

CHRISTIAN UNITY AND WORLD PEACE

Stockholm (RNS):—"The Swedish Church is convinced that the first step toward peace and reconstruction must be to develop a sense of unity among all Christian communions," declared the primate of the Swedish Lutheran Church, Archbishop Erling Eidem, in an interview here. "The experiences of the war have taught us how close to one another are the peoples of the earth. In laying the foundation of peace, it is necessary to strengthen and increase this feeling of inter-dependence and mutual responsibility. There must be no difference between victors and vanquished within the Christian community.

"Naturally, great difficulties exist when it comes to building closer ties of understanding and cooperation between Christian churches in all countries. Germany presents a special problem. We have, however, a strong connection with the German Confessional Church and we hope soon to be in contact with its leaders and to devise means for future relationships.

"The Swedish Church has open windows to cooperation with the west, the east, and the south. Christian understanding must continue and deepen between religious bodies within our country and between the Swedish church and churches in Scandinavian and other countries. At the same time it is important to ensure that efforts for Christian unity will not result in an attempt to set up a political organization inside the Christian Church."



After stressing that the Swedish Church is "anxious to intensify our relations with the Churches in the United States," the Archbishop also said that the Church is anxious to open its arms to the Russian Orthodox Church "and to resume relations through the ecumenical movement."

KENTUCKY CHURCH BECOMES PARISH

Owensboro, Ky.:—Trinity Church here became a parish last month when the vestry assumed full payment of the rector's salary. The church was organized in 1868 and has never had parish status until now. The visit of Bishop Clingman also marked the 6th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. Wilfred Myll under whose leadership the church has developed a fine program, with a number of thriving organizations and with many improvements made in the plant. The goal of self-support having been attained, plans are now under way to further beautify the church and to enlarge the parish house.

Prayer and What Else?

THE revelation of the atomic bomb stunned the world, filling many with panic. That it presents a tremendous challenge to religious forces goes without saying. Thus the executive director of the Protestant Council of New York immediately issued a press release asking "What can the Protestant Church contribute to help carry America safely through this crisis?" He gives his own answer: "To this question I see only one answer. The problem is beyond human remedy. The answer is prayer."

To which we reply, "Prayer and what else?" Prayer means, among other things, that a person seeks guidance for action. Certainly two things are required at once of those governments which, at present, have control of this new discovery which opens a new era for the human race. First, it should be placed under international control so as to protect the world against its wanton use. Second, means must be found through international agreement, whereby the discovery can be developed and harnessed for the good of mankind throughout the world.

It is not going to be easy to accomplish these ends. Everyone agrees that the new marvel, used rightly, can end war and bring mankind untold blessings. They agree too that, used wrongly, it can mean the end of humanity. Yet in announcing the discovery Secretary of War Stimson spoke of "substantial patent control." Men are now speculating on what he meant. Does it mean that this power is to be placed in the hands of the exponents of "free enterprise"? What will happen to society and human relations if this power is given into the keeping of a small group of men, representing an Anglo-American chemical cartel?

As for us we subscribe fully to the statement that appears in "Quotes" on this page. Let the people pray, certainly, as well they may with both thanksgiving and fear. But let them arise from their knees to make the most persistent and insistent demand upon governments that has ever been registered in this world. And the demand must be for the complete control by the people themselves of this discovery which is to revolutionize life.

"QUOTES"

THERE have been many "moments of destiny" in human history. If that phrase were used now for the first time, in all the pristine power of its wording, it would still be inadequate to express the responsibility that rests upon the human race today, most heavily of all upon the American people and their government. We are compelled, at one step, to bridge the gap between the scientific genius which produced this marvel, and the social sluggishness which has made lesser marvels a two-great tax upon our powers of adjustment. There is no escape. The split atom may shatter humanity, but not before then will it retreat into the physical void form which it came. The dust of creation is in our hands. We must master it. We must make it the servant of mankind, the servant of peace, the instrument by which man proves his right to rule that part of the universe in which he has his being.

Utterly Incomprehensible

THE other day we were invited to a small reception to meet three Soviet women who are members of the trade union delegation now touring the United States as guests of the CIO. During the question period a Negro woman said that the minds of her twin sons had been scared beyond healing when they read of the lynching of a Negro and their subsequent discovery that the American people as a whole were indifferent to the tragedy. "In Russia do you have so-called superior and inferior races," she asked of the Soviet women, "and what do you do in circumstances like this?"

There was complete silence for what seemed like five minutes. It then suddenly dawned upon the rest of us that the question was utterly incomprehensible to the Russians. It was a situation completely out of their experience. Ruth Draper, the chairman, was obliged to answer the question from her knowledge of Soviet culture and law. After her explanation, Iraida Shostak, chairman of the Scientific Institution Workers of the Soviet Union, arose and said simply: "In the Soviet Union we are all brothers, irrespective of race, religion or culture."

It is true, as Bishop Harris of Liberia insisted in his address in Cleveland, reported elsewhere, that the Christian Church can learn a good deal from the Soviet Union about the dignity and sacredness of personality.

A System of Bible Reading

THE Oxford University Press, at the suggestion we suspect of Mr. William Krause who manages its Bible and Prayer Book division, has done a real service in publishing a booklet on the New Lectionary. Written by the Rev. Bayard H. Jones, a member of our liturgical commission, it sets forth ways in which the tables of the lectionary, found in the front of the Prayer Book, are capable of being put to a very direct and valuable use by everyone. Prof. Jones tells a story about Bishop Parsons when he was the rector of a parish. He was stressing the value of the private devotional reading of the Scriptures in a class when one of the wardens looked up at him with wide and innocent eyes and inquired: "But Mr. Parsons, is it necessary for Episcopalians to read the Bible?" Prof. Jones says that he does not know what Bishop Parsons answered but he does give his own: "Yes it is, unless he attends Morning and Evening Prayer in church every day of the year."

Very few Episcopalians do that. This booklet therefore provides a most excellent guide for those who wish to follow Prof. Jones' advice. Attractively printed in two colors, the pamphlet The New lectionary, may be purchased through your book store for but five cents a copy. Or if the store does not have it we suggest that you send to Mr. William Krause, Oxford University Press, 114 Fifth Avenue, New York, for a copy. Clergy would do well to lay in a supply for general distribution or for use with confirmation classes. We are informed that the supply is limited because of the paper shortage so do not delay.

Izaak Walton: Fisherman, Churchman

by Louis Augustus Parsons

Priest of the Diocese of Massachusetts

AN ARABIC proverb says: "Allah never deducts from man's span of life the time he spends in fishing," which means, I take it, that God loves a fisherman. And this seems obvious when we remember that he chose Peter, James and John to found his Church. Perhaps, too, it helps to explain the indulgence that Church people usually show for the parson's piscatorial proclivities. If at this season of the year he is missing for a few days, merely smile and say nothing. The time he takes out for this kind of recreation is seldom counted against him.

Unquestionably there is an affinity between faith and fishing; something about gently flowing waters that induces thoughts of a meditative and religious character. This becomes clear if we examine the world's vast literature on fishing, the English branch of which began before the dawn of the sixteenth century. There the earliest book on the subject was written by a nun, Dame Juliana Berners, prioress of the convent of Sopwell, near St. Alban's; a lady of noble family, celebrated for her learning and accomplishments. It was printed at Westminster by Wynkyn de Worde in 1496, as a part of his second edition of The Boke of St. Andrew's, and entitled The Treatyse of Fysshynge Wyth an Angle. I have in my library a facsimile copy of this quaint book, and I have often turned with amusement to its frontispiece. It is a woodcut of a medieval gentleman in stylish attire, landing a small fish to place beside two more (still smaller) in a receptacle which is unmistakably a washtub. This has been cited as history's most impressive manifestation of optimism.

The Treatyse contains instructions for making tackle, rods, baits, etc., together with a description of the most skilful manner of using them; also an account of the various species of river fish, and their respective merits as food; and it concludes with some laudable rules for the conduct of anglers toward each other, and toward those whose lands they frequent. Here is one: "That ye breke noo mannys heggys in goynge aboyte your dysportes: ne opyn noo mannys gates but that ye shutte theym agayn. And all those that done after this rule shall haue the blessynge of God & saynt Petyr: whyche he theym graunte that wyth his precyous blood vs boughte."

Nearly a century was to elapse, however, before the author of the world's most famous book on fishing opened his eyes on this earthly scene. Izaak Walton was born on August 9th, 1593, in the parish of St. Mary, Stafford. Of his early life we know next to nothing. But that in 1613 he went up to London and became a merchant, and later a warden of St. Dunstan's, Fleet Street, is certain. Twice married, his first wife was Rachel Floud, a descendant of Archbishop Cranmer. By her he had seven children, all dying in early childhood, she herself following them to the grave in 1640. Six years later he married Anne Ken, sister of the illustrious bishop and hymn writer, and by her he had a son and a daughter.

In 1643, at the age of fifty, he closed his little shop and moved out into the country. He had no liking for the times. Like ours, they were times which tried men's souls. England seethed with civil strife. War's shadow darkened the land. "Only we," he writes, "who have lived these last twenty years are certain that money has been able to do great mischief." And yet it was during those troublous years that he was planning a book which was destined to take its place among the great masterpieces of English literature—The Compleat Angler, or the Contemplative Man's Recreation.

It seems strange, indeed, that so tranquil a product should have come out of such turbulent times. But Izaak Walton was the kind of man to produce such a book. Quiet, meditative, peaceful, his mind naturally turned to religious and pastoral subjects. He enjoyed the companionship of his clerical friends. He loved to roam through the dreaming countryside. He lingered by still waters.

So he bought a small place in Shallingford, near his birthplace, and for the next few years divided his time between his rod and his pen; fishing the Dove, the Test, and the Itchen, and writing the lives of Donne, Herbert, Hooker, and other worthies of his time. "I have laid aside business," he tells us, "and gone a-fishing."

BUT from 1650 to 1661 we find him in Clerkenwell, at that time a rural suburb of London; and it was here in 1653, that the first edition of The Compleat Angler was published. They were eventful years in the course of which occurred the Plague and the Great Fire. He must have witnessed both of these calamities, but he left no record of them. He went on quietly with his work, revising his book, and fishing the river that flowed close to his home. Five editions followed in the course of his lifetime, and since then over a hundred more have been issued. And so celebrated has it now become that a high value attaches to the earlier copies.

The book, however, should not be regarded as a technical treatise on angling. Its minute descriptions of tackle, baits and flies, no doubt, have made it popular with sportsmen; but its quaint and touching descriptions of familiar incidents and rural scenes, its literary charm and human appeal, have endeared it to every reader of taste and feeling. Its author never intended it to be a handbook of instruction in any literal sense. Measured by the standards of today, he was probably not a very expert fisherman. His methods were antiquated, even for his own time. Authorities now believe that he made little if any use of a reel, indeed, he found it difficult to describe one. The supplement on fly fishing was contributed by Charles Cotton, his friend and fellow fisherman. And it seems likely that his own list of flies was borrowed from Dame Berner's earlier work.

But Izaak Walton was for his day a fair fisherman, and never a greedy one. He was a sportsman, not a "sport." Angling, for him, was never an affair of record making or competition, except in playful fashion. I can imagine his amazement and disgust could he have seen a modern sporting magazine, with its vulgar descriptions of record-breaking contests and its pictures of prize fish. For him it was "not all of fishing to fish." There was something more—the peaceful countryside; sweet riverside pastures and silver streams; culverkeys and cowslips; contemplation and quietness. "No life," says he, "so happy and so pleasant as the life of a well governed angler: for when the lawyer is swallowed up with business and the statesman is preventing or contriving plots, then we sit on cowslip banks, hear the birds sing and possess ourselves in as much quietness as these silent silver streams which we now see glide so quietly by us. God never did make a more calm, quiet, innocent recreation than angling."

His last years were spent with his daughter and her husband, Prebendary Hawkins, in their home at Winchester. There he died, December 15th, 1683, in the ninety-first year of his age; the contemporary of Shakespeare and Spenser. And there he lies buried in the great Cathedral, in Prior Silkstead's Chapel, a simple slab in the pavement marking his resting place. But overhead gleams softly the magnificent memorial window, a tribute

The Parable of the Family, as the Pattern of the Church

True marriage is the subordination of self to the love of the family. True faith is the subordination, not only of the self, but of all loyalties and allegiances, particularly of the family, to the love of One God Almighty in His Church. No flower can grow in a garden overshadowed by trees. No guest can be made welcome if all the seats are taken round the fire. Surrender is the first condition of grace, as humility is the essential condition of worship.

I still had to learn that a prayer is as acceptable to God when it is said in a motley crowd as when it is whispered in a bedroom, and that as long as I was presumptuous enough not to realize that I was in the same need of salvation as the most unattractive individual in that crowd, I was not in a fit state to pray.

from the hearts of multitudes of his brethren of the angle, who fish in the streams of all the world.

As we read the good old fisherman's book, what a winning insight we get into his character. No placid trout pool ever reflected a truer image. Here we see an upright, cheerful, friendly man; a lover of God and of the world he made; a devout Churchman; a humble follower of that gentle Galilean who loved the flowering fields and the blue waters of Gennesaret, and whose last meal on earth was a fish.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE story's from Middlebury, Vt. On a day this summer, the year's most unusual weather was climaxed by a hail storm. Vermonters, as our correspondent reminds us, call any weather "most unusual." This was —- hail stones the size of bird's eggs, at least so reports came in from corners of the Champlain district, though the cautious natives ducked whether they were talking about ostrich or peewee eggs. Anyhow there was damage; 6,000 panes smashed at a greenhouse; the front windows of stores wrecked. The Episcopal Church didn't escape. Twenty-seven panes were broken so vestrymen went to the archives to learn that the windows were installed in 1827. Most of the panes were diamond shaped but some were of unusual design. Looked like a tough repair job. But that's the half of it. Examination revealed that glass was painted. So Benjamin Wissler, warden, took a pane to his wife, once an art teacher. She matched the paint. Then Warden Wissler, professor at Middlebury College, sprayed it on glass cut to match the broken panes. He and fellow churchmen next installed the glass, worked the lead back in place—there you are—everything good as new and costing nary a dime. Thrifty Cal in his thriftiest days couldn't improve on that.

JUST the same I don't let this story pass without a claim that I have been through a more severe hail storm. It was when I was a lad. It was at Lake Sunapee in N. H., where I loafed each summer from June to Labor Day with the carefree comfort of poverty. Then I came to New York to be told that laying something in the bank was true wisdom. Since I have sweat it out in a stuffy office each summer, in recent years not even taking an occasional two or three hours for a ball game lest I miss a dollar.

To get back to the storm. Stones came down the size of tennis balls with the speed of light, though I am making no claims at being a scientist. This breed, with their atomic bombs, probably will all have to be hung before they do any more harm, so I don't mean to get mixed up with them. In any case as my brother and I sat by the cabin enjoying the phenomenon we noticed that black bass were flopping around in the water. Being bright lads we quickly grasped the significance of this —the hail stones, some by this time the size of baseballs, hard as billiards, were shooting into the water like spears, clunking bass between the eyes. Stunned, they rose, flopped, with a few of the talking-species shouting, "What goes on here?" dressing up their indignation with words which must not be used in a Church paper, let alone THE WITNESS. But you can imagine how you'd feel under similar circumstances.

So brother and I ran to the flat-bottom boat. We were agile in those days so that it was not difficult to dodge between the hail stones. It was this agility which made me such a football player in my youth in spite of my 110 pounds. But I musn't go into that. Out into the lake we went. Soon we gathered in 96 black blass and 15 land-locked salmon (for which Sunapee is justly famous—adv.) We could have had more but we threw back any bass under 5 pounds and scoffed at salmon weighing less than 15 (Sunapee is full of 'em—adv.)

It was great sport for a time but it could have ended in tragedy. We soon discovered that the hail stones had filled the boat. It was sinking. We amused ourselves for a time trying out our pitching arms. But the stones came down faster than we could throw them out. The boat went under. But not until we had saved the fish by taking off our pants and stringing the fish through the gills on the pants legs. A good thing too, for it is no easy thing to swim four and a half miles with your pants on, especially with bass around your neck (to say nothing of land-locked salmon for which Sunapee is justly famous.—adv.) However we made it with ease and that evening, just as the sun broke through the clouds to make a wonderful triple (3) rainbow, we feasted—as was our wont when we could get anything to eat—on bass and salmon, broiled outdoors over pine combs and dried hemlock boughs, as the great pines swayed in the gentle breeze.

There is more of course. But I must not bore you with details. Dear Mr. Goodrich, a summer neighbor who was rector of the church in Claremont (we called him "Reverend" in those days, having been brought up Methodists before joining the true Church)—Mr. Goodrich said we might find deer if we went into the woods. So off we scampered, little lads of 13 and 11, to find what we could find. Sure enough. We returned with four fat deer, three bucks and a doe, strapped on our backs, killed by these New Hampshire hail stones which, I am sure you agree by now, make those Vermont hail stones look pretty silly.

The next day father, ever law abiding, walked over Burkehaven Hill to the Harbor to find out from the OPA Board if we could keep the deer without giving up red points. Being lawyers they assured him that it was all an act of God—red points were not involved. So we dressed the deer and laid them away in our ice house and enjoyed venison for months to come. We also got a number of loons—the sad, mournful-calling kind of loons. They I must say were a disappointment. They were the fish diving kind and tasted a lot like duck out of New York harbor.

My wife has just read this. "I knew it would get you sooner or later. Come on. We're going for a rest." So we are off for a visit in Dayton with Marcia Russell, daughter, husband Tony and Lynn and Peter. There I shall tell the children of the time I rescued two orphans lost in a storm, as I raced across Sunapee on the back of a broiled-live lobster, hotly pursued by a huge un-cooked fresh water shad. Peter, male child of six months, I imagine will scoff at the whole thing and say "Grandpa's nuts." But Lynn, more understanding at two, will believe it just as her mother did before her. And after all if the women believe you what else matters.

Then too while out that way we are going to sail on the Ohio and down the Kanawha on a Mark Twain sidewheeler. Who knows, maybe hail will knock a few possums out of trees so that my wife can stop grouching about her lack of red points next winter.

Every yarn I'm told should have a moral so let this one be: If you must have hail stones be sure they're big enough to do somebody some good.

*Christianity and the Cultural Crisis by Charles Duell Kean. Association Press. $2.

The author, who is the rector of an Episcopal Church at Kirkwood, Missouri, has written an able book which business men sincerely seeking to be Christians, would do well to read and study. Our mass production system with all that goes with it—dividends, wages, finance—capitalism, imperialism—is quite as capable of blowing up our civilization as the atomic bomb that has nearly everyone scared out of their wits. Kean seeks in this excellent and timely book to make us face up to this fact. He seems to offer no solutions beyond his insistence that organized Christianity must face each of the concrete problems he presents. Perhaps that is to follow in another book. In any case he has done a good job with this one.

—W. B. Spofford.

*Hymns We Love. By The Rev. Charles Granville Hamilton. 50c.

Descriptive comments and histories, which previously appeared in The Witness, of 52 well-known hymns. Briefly and excellently done, this is a very useful booklet for use in the Church School or other parish groups. Copies may be obtained from the author at Corinth, Mississippi.

—J.H.T.

*Pacifism and Conscientious Objection by G. C. Field, Cambridge University Press, $1.25.

This is the latest volume in the Current Problems series edited by Sir Ernest Barker. The author is professor of philosophy in the University of Bristol and from 1940 until the end of 1944 he served on the Southwestern Tribunal in England before which all conscientious objectors had to appear. The book is therefore based upon actual experience in handling thousands of cases during more than four years and the author takes up the various types and classes of conscientious objection to military service and deals with them in reasonable, sympathetic and yet thoroughly illuminating fashion. Both pacifists and non-pacifists should give this book a careful reading. He has a word for the non-pacifist as well as the pacifist—"The non-pacifist can never afford to forget that when he has rejected the simple solution of the pacifist, he is only at the beginning of his own problems."

—F. C. Grant.

Narrow Is the Way by William E. Park. Macmillan. $2.

In its special field, presenting age long truths to students, this is a helpful book. Its vocabulary is contemporary and often colloquial but its thought is true and its simple, straightforward style disarms the usual student prejudice against "preachers."

—Bishop Ludlow.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

War-time Prayers

OUR experience with the problem of suitable war-time prayers in common worship over these past few years should be of inestimable value in any future revision of the Prayer Book. It cannot be said that what is now offered for use by our Prayer Book, in times such as these, is altogether satisfactory. Supplementary materials, issued from time to time by duly constituted authority, do not give evidence always of having been carefully considered. And the parish clergy, more often than not taking matters into their own hands, frequently inflict on the devotions of their congregations some bad theology or work of poor literary quality.

My purpose here is to make a few annotations and suggestions regarding some of the Prayer Book material. By and large what was added in the 1928 revision is superior to the older prayers, which derive from the usage of the Church of England at a time when men still thought of Church and nation as more or less coterminous. Our generation has seen the Church more critical of government's conduct of international relations. We were more cautious in this war before labelling it "just," let alone "holy." And it is conceivable that the time may come when the Church will find itself in "sedition, privy conspiracy, and rebellion" against the nation at war. At any rate we have felt no qualms of conscience in asking the Church in Germany, Italy and Japan to revolt against tyranny and injustice. Some Christians would give similar advice to Spain and Argentina; and there are a few, doubtless, who would do the same as regards Russia. The totalitarian states have made us conscious of the mischief that can be done by the Church accepting too literalistic an interpretation of St. Paul's views about "the powers that be" (Romans 13:1 ff.).

The collect For the Family of Nations (p. 44 of the Prayer Book), composed by our own Bishop Parsons, could not be improved. For style and content it stands unsurpassed among all prayers for peace. Its teaching is thoroughly sound. As Archbishop Lang said in 1936, peace can never be a policy in itself, but only the consequence of wise and just policies. The collect has also the advantage of being as suitable to peace-time as to war-time. When the Church of England was considering its proposed Prayer Book revision in the 1920s several eminent liturgiologists objected to the inclusion of any war-time prayers as acceptance by the Church of the inevitability of recurrent war. This consideration is not without weight; but our noble collect meets whatever argument is contained in this objection. The same applies to the first prayer For Missions (p. 38) and the prayer For Social Justice (p. 44), both of them apt for peace—or war-time conditions.

The prayer For the Army (p. 41) is good, too, and for the same reasons. It avoids the unreal petition so often heard in war-time prayers of asking God to keep the soldiers out of harm's way "in the day of battle." Free of both magic and sentimentality, it sets the ideal of a soldier's behavior on a high ethical plain. Future revision might well entitle the prayer "For the Armed Services" and read "soldiers, sailors and marines" (not "soldiers, sailors and airmen" as it is so often amended—unless meanwhile the government erects the air force into a distinct service). For the Navy (p. 42) is less up-to-date. It is an adaptation of a seventeenth century prayer for the British fleet. There is a dash of romance about it, redolent of the days when pirate ships infested the Spanish Main, the Caribbean and the Carolina coast, when the British, the Dutch, the French and the Spaniards were jockeying one another for colonial trade and empire. Our sentiment for this prayer is strong. We should find it hard to give it up.

The prayer In Time of War and Tumults (p. 41) and the thanksgiving For Peace, and Deliverance from Our Enemies (p. 52) are of little use any more. They smack too much of overwhelming nationalism. We no longer believe God to be a good Anglo-Saxon who speaks the King's English. Bishop White in 1789 found the English version of the former prayer to need improvement "by ye Omission of some rough Expressions"; and Dr. Lowther Clarke, writing of the latter prayer in 1943, said "the comparison of the Lord to a strong tower is not appropriate to a generation which has learned to associate safety rather with deep shelters." Finally, the prayer for Memorial Days (p. 42) is both elegant and serviceable. But I confess I am always puzzled to know just what the last clause refers to ("that the good work which thou hast begun in them may be perfected"), whether it refers to their service in time or in eternity. Is it that the offering of their self-sacrifice upon earth is in some way to be perfected in paradise?

Look to Russia for Leadership Says Bishop Harris

The Dignity and Sacredness of Personality Is Stressed in Soviet Union He Declares

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Cleveland:—A large number of people now look to the Soviet Union for leadership declared Bishop Harris of Liberia in an address at Trinity Cathedral here. "If we as a nation do not give an answer to the hope of humanity that every child of God shall achieve dignity and sacredness of personality, the masses of mankind will look elsewhere for the answer, and Russia at least offers a promise of the material improvement of the under-privileged."

Introduced by Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, the new Bishop of Liberia said that the food problem in Liberia is critical, with the people still farming on the basis of primitive agriculture.

"Another grave problem is that of education. There is no single school in Liberia which measures up to American public high school standards. One of our tasks is to find teachers who can teach more than reading, writing and arithmetic; who can teach people how to make a living. We must teach the people over there to develop their own leadership, for it is only by developing its own leadership that any people has a future.

"Still another problem is health. The hospitals now in existence are almost as much centers for spreading disease as curing disease. About half the population are spending most of their life in torment, fighting disease. A great task lies ahead of us in improving the health of the people.

"We hope to build at least one school for the purpose of training native leaderships. We hope also to get from America the kind of qualified leadership which we need for training local leaders. When we have accomplished these things our work will be well under way." He announced that he was planning to leave for his new work in Africa in September.

Memorial Chapel

London (wireless to RNS):—Men of the U. S. army air force joined with inhabitants of Great Ashfield in Suffolk to dedicate a memorial chapel within All Saints Church. Given by our soldiers it is dedicated to British airmen and "a symbol of the friendship existing between our two countries."

Healthy Activity

New York:—Returning from the visit to the Hawaiian Islands, made on behalf of the Christian education division at the request of Bishop Harry S. Kennedy of Honolulu, Miss Charlotte C. Tompkins reports much healthy activity in educational work carried on among the churches, particularly, a happy interracial fellowship which is an educational influence in itself. When any normal group or school or congregation may include people of Chinese, Japanese, Filipino or other Oriental parentage, along with Hawaiians and haoles (people from the States), whose presence is taken for granted, there is no need for formal teaching of "race relations."

Miss Tompkins reports, "There is good work going on in the Church schools of the diocese, I was especially pleased in the development shown of real pupil participation, young people taking responsibility for having a part in conducting services, reading the prayers and lessons. The educational work is headed in the right direction."

Catholics in Commons

London (wireless to RNS):—Seventeen Roman Catholics were elected to the new British House of Commons, some for the first time. They comprise 6 Conservatives, 8 Labor, 1 Independent Labor, 2 North of Ireland representatives. Among the Conservatives is Christopher Hollis, editor of a Roman Catholic weekly. There are 48 Roman Catholics in the House of Lords.

Missionaries Return

Chungking (wireless to RNS):—Fifty Protestant missionaries are expected here from the United States in September, the first replacements since before the war. Permission to return was granted by the U. S. embassy. There are no Episcopalians on the list.

Holds Services

New York:—Dr. Carey C. Womble, lieutenant in the medical corps of the U. S. navy, who anticipates eventual medical service with the Church overseas, wrote Church headquarters about his experiences on the Destroyer Robert H. Smith, in the campaigns of Iwo Jima and Okinawa. "By the way," he said, "I have been holding services on this ship for the men whenever possible on Nantucket, Mass.:—Bishop Frank Hale Touret died on August 2 at his summer home here. He retired as missionary bishop of Idaho in 1924. He had formerly been bishop of Western Colorado and served for two years as acting bishop of Utah.

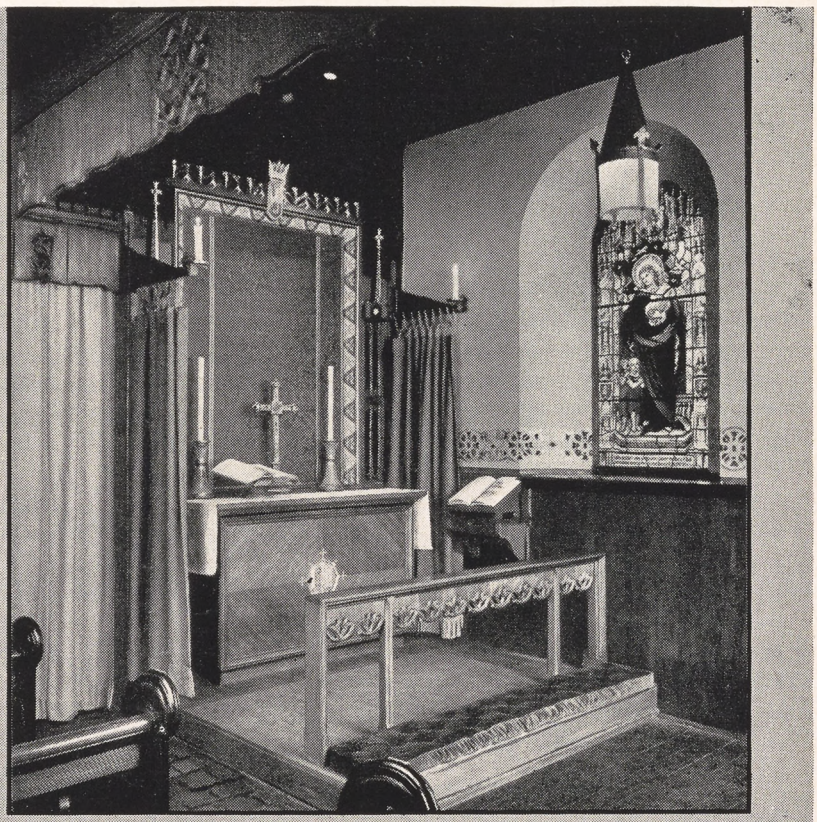
Conference Center

Davenport, Iowa: — Bishop Morrison Lodge at Clear Lake, diocesan conference center, has undergone extensive improvements this summer at a cost of $10,000. The money was raised at small group meetings conducted in various parts of the diocese by Bishop Haines. This summer the expanded program went into effect with conferences for boys, girls, youth and adults. The diocese now anticipates the addition of a chapel, infirmary and six cottage units as soon as building is permitted.



Church Cooperation

Topeka, Kan. (RNS):—A Church comity committee has been formed by the Topeka council of Churches to systematize the placing of churches through voluntary interdenominational cooperation. The committee will seek to settle as fairly as possible all questions between denominations on establishing or relocating churches in Topeka.

When two or more denominations seek to enter the same area, or when any church or denomination wishes to organize a new church or re-locate an old one, the proposal will first be submitted in writing to the Committee. It will give the matter at least 30, but no more than 60 days' study, consulting with the denominational executives concerned and with the people living in the area to be affected. On completion of its investigation, the committee, through its chairman, will issue its decision to the church bodies concerned. According to the Rev. H. C. Bradshaw, executive secretary of the council, five cases have already been referred to the committee. A minister and a layman from each denomination represented in the Council of Churches form the committee, and similar representation is offered any other religious body that wishes to share in the deliberations.

to five million man days of work for the government, worth more than ten millions dollars valued at army base pay, according to a report by Friends Civilian Public Service here. Work to which C.O.'s have been assigned or have volunteered has included soil conservation, park maintenance, forest fire fighting and prevention, public health, care of the mentally ill, and medical research in which CPS men have served as "guinea pigs."

Over half the work assigned to drafted CPS men consists of simple manual labor, although large proportion of these men have higher qualifications, and 38 per cent are professionally trained. Much of this "waste of manpower," according to the report, could have been prevented, if the Selective Service ruling permitted a greater number of CPS men to be assigned to private as well as government agencies on projects of urgent social value.

The Quaker report has strongly recommended that CPS men, who have been receiving no pay or family allotments, be paid wages comparable to those paid other drafted men, and that federal allowances be granted their dependents.

Urges United Appeal

New York (RNS):—A coordinating committee to unify existing post-war financial programs of the churches into an interdenominational "Crusade for Christ" was suggested here in a report to the United Church Canvass by Stanley I. Stuber, its acting director. Stuber pointed out that 16 religious bodies are raising $112,750,000 for world relief, restoration, and reconstruction, and that other post-war programs are being planned.

"How much more challenging these would become when presented together as a part of a much greater whole with one slogan and one common symbol," he observed.

Stuber added that a coordinating committee, while not interfering with the internal affairs of any denomination, would present the programs through press, radio, and other means of communication.

"It would encourage other denominations either to begin or enlarge post-war programs," he said, 'to support interdenominational projects, and to think of their individual programs as a part of the

H. G. He sums up his conclusions as follows:

"As this present world war goes on, and even if there is some sort of temporary half peace before it deepens into a tangle of minor wars, it will become plainer and plainer that it is no longer a geographically determined warfare of governments, nations and people, but the world-wide struggle of our species to release itself from the strangling octopus of the Catholic Church. Everywhere the Church extends its tentacles and fights to prolong the Martyrdom of Man."

A Soldier Speaks

Cambridge, Mass.: — An overseas soldier who is a member of Christ Church here wrote this to his girl recently: "Did you read the article John D. Rockefeller Jr. wrote recently in which he said that the Church should come down to earth and share life with its people? Well the Church replied that they had no intention of doing any such a thing. The Church has lost its place in the world it seems to me because it hasn't been able to change with the times and it will be lost completely if it doesn't wake up to the fact that it will have to share religion with the mass of humanity."

"The profession and practice of the Catholic religion, which is the religion of the Spanish state," the charter reads, "will be given official protection."

According to the charter, "no one will be molested for his religious beliefs and the private practice thereof," but "no other ceremonies or external manifestations will be allowed except those of the Catholic religion."

Wyoming, which he has now given to the Church. He retains a life interest in the property, intending to spend the rest of his life there. He has been logging for the Bishop, in connection with a church now under construction at Esterbrook. After attending a service the Bishop recently held for prisoners of war, Mr. Raymond took the Bishop to see the property, and when he found it was just what was desired he promptly turned it over to the Bishop.

Peaceful Generals

New York (RNS):—Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church, and president of the Federal Council of Churches, has had to revise his opinion of Generals since his recent trip to the European and Mediterranean theaters of war.

"In my contacts with at least 25 Generals," Bishop Oxnam told 200 employees of Methodist boards in the denomination's headquarters here, "there was not a war-monger among them. Each one resented the fact of war and shrank from the necessity of it."

Referring to the generally sympathetic attitude of high-ranking officers toward the work of the chaplains, Bishop Oxnam described one in the European area who asked his regimental officers not only how many divine services had been held in their command, but also "how many have you attended?"

THE REV. RANDOLPH CRUMP MILLER
Faculty, Church Divinity School of the Pacific

Congratulations on a fine issue about a great man (WITNESS, July 12). Bishop Parsons is loved and admired by us all. He is still active as professor of theology and liturgics at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, and he is always present at meetings of the liberal evangelicals. Our students learn about the Prayer Book from one of the greatest liturgical scholars of the times, and they learn much more about how gracious and charming is this perfect Christian gentleman.

ANSWER: We allow this to stand alone as typical of many letters received about the number devoted to Bishop Parsons.

THE REV. HERBERT W. PRINCE
Rector of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest, Ill.

I hear and read in official and unofficial circles of the Episcopal Church's fine program of Reconstruction and Advance, familiarly alluded to as the R.A.F. These famous initials have by common consent a universal and single meaning. Everywhere and to everyone instantaneously they carry one name—Royal Air Force. It is the name which distinguishes the most illustrious legion of young men who ever fared forth to save their country from destruction, who did in truth actually save their country from destruction, who by night and day for six tremendous years gave life and suffered death with utter abandon and without dismay in ceaseless flight over sea and land to bring to naught the enemy's productive power. Their deeds are immortal, their fame is indelible. "Never before in the history of human endeavor have so many owed so much to so few."

With devout reverence for this illustrious legion of the air surely it is unseemly for us as a Church to use their ever-famous initials for a project, which however noble and unselfish, must not enter into competition with the creators of a universal symbol.

R. A. F. means Royal Air Force and nothing else. Leave them for the men who have made them. Let us not take from the R. A. F. the slightest fraction of the honor all the world accords the indomitable British Army of the Air.

The Christian Church must be the last organization to be casual or graceless in its actions. A slight change will acquit us. Call our noble project the Advance and Reconstruction Fund—the A.R.F. I believe the whole Episcopal Church will agree that the point is well taken and will give its approval.

MR. RICHARD EVANS
Layman of Deefield, Illinois

In Bishop Oliver J. Hart's letter (WITNESS, July 26) he states this nation, in order to take its full responsibility for world order, must do one of two things: (1) have a large professional army, or, (2) universal military training. He then chooses to support universal military training and ends by stating it can be dropped when no longer needed. In other words: Bishop Hart simplifies the choice for keeping Satan enthroned on earth.

However, if I were a bishop, I would not separate myself from the affairs of men but I would certainly refuse to choose between two wrongs. This earth is hell because our "heavenless" leaders are always choosing to support the lesser of two evils without knowing what must be done, or, how to lead to eliminate it entirely.

There are so many Ecclesiasts that, if they were united on the spirit of God's law (not the letter of it which killeth the spirit) there would be no war. Unitedly they have a following sufficiently large to bring about heaven on earth if they would project their vision into heaven and discover how to lead.

Unfortunately, and to themselves they must admit it, they know neither God nor his law. Because they must do something, not knowing the right, they practise the wrong. This results in a misled mankind which then brings about (1) large professional armies, or, (2) universal military training, both being the same thing, and keep Jesus weeping outside the door. (Their own closed minds).

American Red Cross Offers Fine Scholarships

Employment Offered on Service Job After A Year of Training in Accredited School

By Catherine H. Johnson

New York:—It has been the practice of the American Red Cross to be At His Side not only in the theatres of war, but at home as well. Our wounded men are coming back for treatment and discharge in ever increasing numbers, and they are still finding the Red Cross "at their side" in military hospitals, and in their home towns.

The Red Cross through its social and recreation workers has been able to assist soldier and sailor patients in deriving maximum benefits from their hospital care by helping to relieve them of personal and family problems. The home service departments of all local chapters of the Red Cross have aided service men and veterans and their families in thousands of cases by assisting financially and giving counsel in cases of personal and family problems.

In order to continue these needed and appreciated services, and to expand its program to serve the thousands of fighting men who are returning, the Red Cross must increase its staff by hundreds of workers. To meet this need the Red Cross is offering one-year scholarships in accredited schools of social work.

These scholarships are of two types. The student receiving one may train either for medical or psychiatric social work, or for family case work. Both scholarships provide for either first or second year graduate work in preparation for employment with the American Red Cross. A student receiving a scholarship for study in medical or psychiatric social work will be assigned to an army or navy hospital as a hospital social worker at the end of her year of study. The recipient of a scholarship for family case work study will be assigned to the home service staff of an American Red Cross chapter.

In either case the applicant for a scholarship must agree to at least one year's employment with the Red Cross. Other qualifications are that the applicant should be between the ages of 21 to 40, a graduate of an accredited college, and a citizen of the United States.

Further, she must be eligible for acceptance by one of the accredited schools of social work and recommended by the school of her choice for a Red Cross scholarship. In addition, she must be able to give employment references satisfactory to the Red Cross, or good personal references if she has no work history. The applicant's choice of a school will be followed whenever that school is able to accept scholarship students. Likewise, if she chooses family case work her geographical preference for assignment will be respected as nearly as possible.

The Red Cross scholarship for study in social work provides for the payment of tuition in the school selected, and a $100 in addition for each month of the school year.

These jobs require special training, aptitudes and techniques, which only the skilled social worker possesses. The need for them is urgent and immediate. Their services to wounded and discharged men may mean the difference between a serviceman's taking his place in his community as a confused misfit, or as a well adjusted and happy person.

Many thousands of doctors and nurses are needed to take care of the physical ills of our fighting men. In addition to medical treatment, these same men now need service of a different kind. They need the help and assistance of an understanding person who has the skill and the training to help them solve problems outside the realm of the physical.

SO NOW WHAT!

LAST FALL THE WITNESS presented a series of articles by civilians on what should be done to aid the returning serviceman to adjust to civilian life. This Fall we are to reverse the process by asking a number of soldiers, chaplains and others, to present their ideas on what sort of a world they expect and want now that the war is over, and how the Church can contribute toward it. A number of excellent articles are already in, with others to be announced. Among those who will contribute are S/Sgt. Frederic D. H. Gilbert; Brig. General Luther D. Miller; Lt. Commander C. Leslie Glenn; Capt. Karl Kumm; Capt. Edward B. Guerry; Chaplain F. Tittmann; Chaplain E. A. deBordenave. The first of the series, to appear under the title of IT'S OVER—So Now What? will appear in THE WITNESS for October 4th. We urge rectors to order bundles at once in order that their people may read these thought provoking articles by men in the armed forces. Simply send a postal to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., giving your name and address and the number of copies desired. We will then start the bundle with the issue of October 4th and bill you later. Single subscriptions will be entered at $3 for a full year or $1 for a trial subscription of twenty weeks.

fifty, which is about capacity, with a staff of eight fine teachers and housemothers. Asked to comment on life at St. Faith's, the Rev. Leonard W. Steele, the rector, stated that "A Church school, like any other Church organization, seems to combine all the recognized departments of Church work: missions, social relations, Christian education.

"About half our girls are from families connected with the Episcopal Church; the others have widely different backgrounds. Some have had no Christian training at all and come from homes in which religious practice of any kind is practically non-existent. Occasionally, a parent is very honest and confesses the entire absence of religious training and practice but wishes the daughter to have what she realizes she lacks. Others simply do not care whether the child has a religious life or not. This opens a door of opportunity for the Church school to present the Christian religion and the Church to many who would, otherwise, grow up in complete ignorance of our religion. Each year, a few are drawn to the Church and seek the sacraments. Some are prepared to be confirmed in their own parishes. Every effort is made to cooperate with the home parish and make the child a member of the parish where she resides.

"The Church school does practical work in social relations for we provide homes for children whose parents are not in a position to give them the necessary care. This appears to be an increasing need for we have many inquiries about a summer program—which, unfortunately, we do not offer—as well as for the regular school year.

"We all know that religion is 'caught rather than taught'. It is the business of Church schools to provide an atmosphere in which 'catching religion' is possible. We do have opportunity to impart more religious facts than Sunday schools do because we may devote several times as much time to it and our pupils are always present. But religious knowledge does not make religious people any more than ceremonial practice, alone, does. So daily worship as well as daily instruction is a part of our life. So, it seems to me, the Church school does not have any more reason to apologize for its existence than a parish does. Essentially, it does the same sort of work for children but under more favorable conditions.

"St. Faith's School has the same needs as all other Church schools: the intelligent and practical interest of clergy and laity in their welfare. One admits with shame to inquirers that the Church takes no responsibility for the maintenance of the Church schools. Each one seems to be a private corporation of Episcopalians who happen to be interested in a particular institution. Even if a school can manage its current expenses from its income from pupils' fees, major improvements and repairs have to be made from time to time and these require gifts from those who believe that the Church should be engaged in the kind of work the Church school can do.

"Another need of the schools, and an opportunity for service which ought to appeal to some of our young women, is the need for teachers and other workers who wish to offer their services for less cash salary than they might command in the open market. The spirit of sacrifice is not a characteristic of Episcopalians but there must be some who would respond if they knew the need. If any such should chance to read this statement they are invited to communicate with me at St. Faith's."

Labor Sunday Message Issued By Unofficial Groups

Six Church Organizations Present Program for People in Dealing with Postwar World

By Richard Morford

New York:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy, together with the unofficial social action groups of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Evangelical and Reformed, Baptist and Unitarian Churches, all affiliated with the United Christian Council for Democracy, issued the following statement as a Labor Day Message for 1945:

We have been victorious in war. Even before V-J Day our nation had been carried into the swife currents of world transition which flowed from V-E Day. Now, almost overnight, we have been plunged into the major whirlpools of the struggle to win the peace. A staggering economic crisis impends in our own country to add its confusion to the economic crisis which grips the rest of the world. Reconversion is on top of us. Plans for constructing a peacetime economy are in the hands of a few leaders but we are not geared for the immediate, comprehensive shift-over that is required as we could have been. In spite of all the warnings we are in danger of relating the chronic boom-and-bust and mass unemployment.

Yet there is no reason for a cynical view of the postwar period. We are a fortunate nation. The ravages of war have not devastated our land. We are not broken in physical strength and resources as are the nations of Europe and the Far East. Under stress of war we have shown capacity for unified effort and titanic accomplishment in fulfilling requirements as the arsenal of democracy. We can win the battle for the peace!

To win the peace, as to win the war, we must achieve a maximum production. Yesterday it was to supply the materials to destroy life; today it is to provide the goods to build life. So long as there are unsatisfied material needs, there should be full production. Full production should and can provide full employment. But full employment is not enough. It is essential that every laborer receive adequate compensation for his part in producing goods and services so he will be able to buy what he needs and wants out of what he and his fellow-workers have produced. We are awed by the tremendous task for we realize that this three-way combination must be worked out on a world scale if it is to succeed in our own nation. But it is highly important that a fundamental truth on the economic side shall be driven home to the American people. Full production, full employment and full pay constitute an interdependent and indispensable triumvirate of human welfare and, therefore, of peace.

IN THE NEWS: Phillip E. Osgood, former president of the House of Deputies, who has been deposed at his own request: Dean Arthur Lichtenberger, chairman of the CLID which sponsored the Labor Sunday Message printed on this page: The Rev. Theodore Wedel, warden of the College of Preachers, who was the leader at a summer conference of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship

Progressive church men and women will be the first to recognize that bread-and-butter realities sharply influence the life of the spirit. Man does live by bread! Only when there is bread can there follow the appreciation that bread alone is not enough to make life worth living. Bread assured, the consequent freedom from fear and want constitute the best stimulant to man to strive toward the more abundant life of the spirit. We believe God is in the midst of the struggle of the common man for bread. The best in our Judao-Christian heritage compels us to share in that struggle; it is the road to brotherhood.

In our time a tremendous dynamic is being demonstrated by the forces of labor. This dynamic may display elements of selfishness, it is granted. but we believe the desire to win a decent, secure living for all people is the primary motivation and the source of labor's increasing power. The common welfare is the workers' goal. The forces of religion gladly honor the forces of labor in the observance of Labor Day in 1945.

For church people to offer lip service alone to the workers on Labor Day would be blasphemy. Reciting again for public approval the church's social creed proclaiming "the right of labor to organize and to bargain collectively through representatives of its own choosing" merits the ancient rebuke addressed to respectable religionists: "What do ye more than others?"

If labor is to believe that true religion produces allies, not content with talking from a safe distance, but ready to fight by their side, this is the time for demonstration. Reactionary forces are campaigning to break the back of organized labor, taking advantage of the reconversion crisis and operating in subtle and devious ways not easily exposed. A counter campaign is necessary. Progressive churchmen will enlist on Labor Day in 1945 in the defense of the hard-won gains of the trade union movement. Let us be clear, the battle of organized labor to safeguard and extend its rights within constitutional lines is certain to serve the common welfare and to assure the rights of all of us.

Labor seeks allies but it welcomes only those prepared for discipline and team-play. Hard work is required. The tasks may prove both difficult and embarrassing for those unaccustomed to aggressive action on behalf of causes not enjoying full public favor. Required will be attendance at meetings; participation in public demonstrations; constant letter-writing to elected representatives in the legislatures; the distribution of literature; door-bell ringing and personal interviews; delegations to meet public officials. By persistent and thorough-going political action of this kind are the victories won.

The attention of church people is urgently directed to one major proposal which labor believes constitutes "a clear and present danger." Appraisal should be made immediately of the omnibus labor-industry bill sponsored by Senators Ball, Burton and Hatch, now pending in the Congress. (Its number is S-1171. Send to the clerk of the Senate for a copy). Offered as the means of bringing about "industrial peace," the great labor organizations with almost complete accord have called for its rejection. It is labor's reasoned conviction that from first to last it is aimed at the crippling of all labor organization, the restriction of the legitimate rights of workers which have been written step by step into this nation's policy during the past fifteen years.

Off-hand opinion for or against this legislation must not be indulged; study is called for. It is a disarming proposal. Its proponents say it will bring "full democracy" into industrial relations. Yet it overflows with "legal" restrictions. It is filled with provisions to amend or supplement existing rights which, labor's advisors say, are in reality designed to take away those rights. Many progressive leaders not identified with labor unions have already condemned the measure. Ample evidence indicated that big-business enemies of organized labor intend to come through with a high-powered, streamlined campaign in its favor; if they cannot get it all, they will settle for parts. Introduced in late June the summer vacation schedule has delayed adequate discussion among church people. But church people should make up their minds soon and prepare for prompt action with the reconvening of Congress.

While defensive battles must be waged, a wide range of constructive measures commend themselves to church people prepared to swing into action as allies of labor. Certain steps are absolutely essential, labor declares, if we are to succeed in winning in peacetime America the full production, full employment, full pay and full security of which we are capable. Modifications may be necessary but in general terms progressive churchmen will agree with the following home-front objectives submitted by labor. Included are emergency actions long overdue; practically all are in the "immediate" class so far as labor is concerned. These objectives are to be implemented by legislation, much of which is already pending in the Congress. All allies of labor should pledge themselves on Labor Day, 1945 to concerted action to win approval of legislation to realize these worthy objectives.

(1) Emergency unemployment compensation (a) for war workers out of jobs during the reconversion period; (b) for federal employees, members of the merchant marine and all other employees not now covered (c) increased and lengthened protection for returning GI's.

(2) Full Employment Act "to establish a national policy and program for assuring continual full employment in a free competitive economy through the concerted efforts of industry, agriculture, labor, State and local governments, and the Federal government."

(3) Revision of the national wage policy: (a) authority conferred upon the War Labor Board to approve or direct such upward wage adjustments as may be necessary and which will not substantially affect the cost of living (revision of the Little Steel Formula); (b) establishment of a minimum wage standard of 65c per hour; (c) guarantee of equal pay for equal work, eliminating discrimination against women.

(4) Maintenance of a high level of purchasing power through continued stabilization of prices for major cost-of-living items.

(5) Adoption of Fair Employment Practice as a permanent policy and the establishment of an agency to assure its enforcement.

(6) Revision of the surplus property law to guarantee that war plant and equipment, built and supplied by the government shall not be disposed of in a way to give profits to the few at great loss to the entire American people who paid for it, but shall be disposed of in a way, so far as practicable, that will bring it into immediate service in civilian production providing maximum employment.

(7) A national housing program aimed at the construction of at least 1,000,000 dwelling units per year for the next ten years, providing financial encouragement to private enterprise to participate, at the same time authorizing supplementation through public enterprise.

(8) A further concrete public construction program which may be put into operation to the degree that private enterprise is not able to provide work for the jobless.

(9) Federal aid to small business.

(10) Stabilization of farm income and extension of low-cost credit to family-type farming.

(11) A national medical care program and extension of the present Social Security Act as embodied in the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill.

(12) Security of employment on an annual basis through application of the system of guaranteed annual wages to all workers.

(13) Repeal of the federal poll-tax to give 10,000,000 citizens of 7 states their right to a free ballot, making possible a people's choice that can remove from the U. S. Congress anti-labor, anti-democratic representatives who block progressive legislation.

The Rev. Robert M. Hatch who became the dean of the Cathedral Church of St. John, Wilmington, Delaware, earlier this year. Mr. Hatch, 35, married the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. James Thayer Addison and they have one child, Martha.

Religion and labor are worthy allies in the struggle for justice, equality, security and freedom for the common man. And these are the prime requisites of the enduring peace for which all men pray. If victory in war is to become victory in peace, the efforts of progressive churchmen and progressive workers should be joined. Labor Day of 1945 becomes the best of all possible times for both to dedicate themselves to the unfinished task.

EDITORIALS

Nothing New Has Been Added

RECENTLY some thousands of our laity and many of our clergy have received a letter inviting them to join the "National Council of Churchmen." It is a new and unofficial organization, though doubtless some will assume that it is sponsored officially since those promoting it have seen fit to borrow the name of the official agency of General Convention, the National Council.

It is described on its letterhead as "an association of the laity organized to maintain, defend and propagate the historic doctrine, practice and teaching of the Anglican Communion as held by the Episcopal Church and contained in the Book of Common prayer." The president of the organization is Dr. Clark G. Kuebler, president of Ripon College, Ripon, Wisconsin and the vice-presidents are Messrs. William R. Castle, Washington, D.C.; Spencer Erwin, Rosemont, Pennsylvania; Edward N. Perkins, New York; Clifford L. Terry, Evanston, Illinois; and Elwood Wheeler of Cleveland, Ohio. One of the circular letters signed by the executive chairman, John Whiteley of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin in New York, announces: "For what is the first time in the history of the Episcopal Church a nation-wide organization of the laity has been formed to teach, by direct mail, the fundamental truths of the faith to all members of the Church." The letter is accompanied by an application blank for membership and "our first folder."

The letter states that in addition to the first 10,000 people to whom the letter has been sent "thousands are being mailed weekly to communicants of all degrees of Churchmanship" and then it asks its recipient to send in names, even parish lists to whom the literature may be sent, and notes that "the source of all names will be confidential."

The blurb on the application blank entitled, "Faith of our Fathers, Holy Faith!" declares that "The folders distributed by the Council will not be controversial in character, they will not promote divisions or dissentions of belief within the Church. They will be founded upon known and accepted truths and will clearly interpret the sound teaching of our faith as held by the Church through the centuries. They will contain positive—not negative propaganda."

A fine start! We pick up the pamphlet eagerly to learn what the first of the fundamental truths of the faith this "nation-wide organization" desires to emphasize in this year of our Lord 1945. We opened it rather anticipating a thoughtful article on "The significance of Christian faith for the world today," or "Living our religion in the post war era," but instead we find that the folder contains an address delivered in 1903 by the late Bishop of Chicago, William E. McLaren, to his diocesan convention elaborating upon that old chestnut of the Anglo-Catholics, namely, that the word Protestant should be dropped from the official name of our Church as it appears on the title page of The Book of Common Prayer: The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

Surely this group of educated Anglo-Catholics who presume to call themselves the "National Council of Churchmen" are not so naive as to think that a folder suggesting the change in the name of our Church, let alone this particular change of dropping the word Protestant, will be smallowed by the laity, or even the clergy, as a pamphlet "not controversial in character" or designed "not to promote divisions or dissensions of belief within the Church." It is rank, unmitigated propaganda from an extreme point of view and we believe that those receiving this literature will recognize it as such.

A proposal to so change the name of our Church was brought before some 18 General Conventions by the Anglo-Catholics during the past 75 years and every time it has been defeated. We sincerely hope and pray that if it ever comes up again it will be again defeated—and it looks as if this group formed their organization with a view to reopening this question at the next convention. They ask those receiving their literature to read

I WOULD urge the Church, the people of the Church, and especially the ministers of the Church, that, with all their rightful interest in the great things which we discuss and plan, they forget not the greatest thing — "that repentance and remission of sins should be proclaimed among all nations." Repentance and remission of sins to all the nations. Have we grown accustomed to think of these words as concerned only with individual piety? Ponder them well in the light of what is said about them in Scripture and you will see that they have a bearing, not only on the individual, but also upon the great political, social, and international matters which fill our newspapers today.

this folder "carefully and study your Prayer Book for the authority of the statements made." Again we refer the supporters of this organization to the title page of the Prayer Book and suggest that they support the Protestant Episcopal Church rather than try to split it.

The pamphlet by the late Bishop of Chicago gives some nine reasons why the word Protestant in the Church's name is a mistake. Space will not permit comment on all nine, but it is worth noting a few as illustrative of the temper of mind of the "National Council of Churchmen." Dr. McLaren's first two reasons which occupy about a third of the pamphlet are that the word Protestant is "controversial" and "negative." He declares that "the word Protestant stands for protest, contest, opposition, uncharity . . . It recalls the time when one Christian accused another Christian of being impious, heretical, dangerous and damnable." No this is not Roman Catholic propaganda against Protestantism; it is the meaning of the word Protestant held by this group of Anglo-Catholics. Surely they know that the word Protestant is a great affirmative word deriving from the Latin word meaning to witness for, and surely they realize that the Protestant Church, despite all its faults, has witnesses for fundamental principles of freedom in religion without which we doubt if this democracy of ours would ever have come into existence. They must realize that it was not Luther who damned the Pope but the leader of the charitable Catholic Church who said that Luther was "heretical, dangerous and damnable."

Again, Bishop McLaren declares: "When Apostolic hands were laid upon you in confirmation, you were not made Protestant Episcopalians. You were made Christians and churchmen." The Prayer Book makes it clear that we became Christians at baptism, perhaps even churchmen. But adopting Bishop McLaren's suggestion and assuming that we become churchmen at confirmation, we ask what does that mean? Surely, confirmation does not give us the right to call ourselves Methodists, or Presbyterians or Roman Catholics, but distinctly accords us the privilege of counting ourselves as Protestant Episcopalians and we hope that our pride in being so designated is not inordinate.

The author of "our first folder" objects to Protestant Episcopal because it is "too narrow," and so suggests that "American Churchman is a sufficient distinguishing mark." "Who calls himself a Protestant Episcopalian nowadays?" asked the good Bishop in 1903 and then continued, "The American Church is the prevailing language of our ecclesiastical literature." Can anyone imagine a more overwhelming if not insulting presumptuous suggestion than that the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the face of the many Christian communions that are numerically much larger than ours, calling itself "The American Church." In a day when we want to emphasize the inclusive international character of our Church shall we give it a title with a nationalistic flavor?

A sad commentary it is that in a day when every Christian should be striving to make the Christian Church in every way a more effective and united instrument of the divine will, the best that the "National Council of Churchmen" can contribute is the revival of a forty year old pamphlet advocating the change in the name of our beloved Church. Is it too much to hope that when the General Convention meets next fall all churchmen will determine to cooperate in enabling our Church to make the spirit of Christ more vital in our secular age and that all such divisive questions as that of changing the name of the Church be forgotten. What difference will the name of our Church make in the future if man is not able to attain enough of the grace of God to control the use of atomic power?

A War Casualty

WAR casualties cannot be limited to the maimed and missing. A war which can threaten to unhinge the universe by discovering the secret of its composition does many subtle and unrealized things to some who are far from the firing line. In a day when man asserts his collective will, even to the destruction of lives and values of all kinds, it seems logical to some to assert their own personal wills in defiance of established standards.

We believe that Phillips Osgood, former rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, and president of the House of Deputies, is such a casualty. A mind ever alert to the dramatic can become the victim of its own instinct for drama. That is one of the dangers of talent. His many friends deeply regret his misjudgement of values. He has made his decision, has resigned his offices and been deposed from the ministry at his own request.

Men come and men go but the Church of Christ goes on undaunted by failure and loss. We can rejoice that in a careless age it refuses to yield its principles and applies them, many times with an aching heart, to high and low alike. We will close ranks and carry on as good soldiers of Christ.

Peace in Industry

By

ELLIOTT W. ROBBINS
Layman of Great Neck, Long Island

ALTHOUGH the headlines give an almost unrelieved picture of human friction in industry today, there are uncounted times when employees and employers work together in ways that would doubtless startle readers of some newspapers. For the Christian, these acts of cooperation recognizing the essential mutuality of employer and employee interests are worth study. They should point the way to seeking still greater cooperation, greater community of interests and more harmonious relations.

Three recent actual examples illustrate the nature of a nonheadlined type of relationship that is frequent.

In a large mass-production industry improvements on a certain machine convinced management that higher outputs could be obtained. They approached the operator (a woman) with the proposition that production could be raised from 500 to 750 pieces an hour. She protested, first because it was "impossible" then because "it hurts my fingers." Further insistence by supervision brought the prompt reaction, "All right, it's a grievance. I want to see my steward." The steward, also a woman and on a similar machine, came over, listened to the problem and came to a surprising conclusion. "If you won't make it go 750 an hour, I will." The operator demanded the grievance be taken to the chief steward. Several days later when he came to the plant she confronted him.

"What am I paying union dues for?"

"To be a member of the union."

'Well, I thought this steward was supposed to protect my interests."

"She is—but the company can't keep its costs in line if it doesn't improve its production figures. She's got her production close to a 1000 an hour now and you'd better, too."

In another plant, to combat absenteeism (a really terrific problem today) a "three strikes is out" policy was adopted calling for discharge of anyone with three unexcused absences. Within the first three months, the vice president of the union fell by the wayside. No protest was made because the policy had been enforced strictly and impartially.

The third illustration comes from a smoking car conversation between an industrial relations man and an international official of a union that was organizing his plant. The union official warned the industrial relations man emphatically to "fire all your inefficient operators now (for inefficiency) because if you don't until it comes time for layoff we (the union) will have to make you keep them on the basis of seniority."

No layman can achieve a sane, balanced outlook on the labor problem without understanding two facts. Enlightened management for years has known and profited from the fact that well treated and fairly treated employees help make a successful business. Intelligent labor leaders, as illustrated above, have cooperated in policies that contributed to efficiency and profits (depression times usually excepted). Both recognize the grimness of the long-term prospects of the unfruitful tree and the unproductive servant.

Mr. Robbins presents interesting illustrations but, in my judgement, further facts are needed if proper conclusions are to be drawn. In his first, I would raise the question as to whether technical improvements are to accrue solely to the company, and thus throw further out of balance production and consumption (which is our real social problem rather than "costs") or whether the workers also are to share in the increased production. Whether the worker is on an hourly rate or on piece work would contribute to the answer, but Mr. Robbins, doubtless in order to be brief, does not give us the whole picture.

Figures released by the U. S. army do not support the assertion that absenteeism is "a really terrific problem today." A letter to General Marshall in Washington will bring you his comments on this. But I see no objection to a "three strikes is out" policy providing it is agreed upon through collective bargaining.

As for the third illustration, who is to determine who is an "inefficient operator"—a section boss, a foreman, an industrial relations man? I was employed for some years as a labor manager for a large firm and it was not uncommon for section heads and foreman to fire workers for "inefficiency," only to have it discovered at hearing before an impartial chairman that the worker was actually fired because he was a Jew or a Catholic or something or other that the man doing the firing did not like. I have even known attractive girls to be fired because they were smart enough not to make dates with their bosses. Any union official who tells management to fire for "inefficiency," without impartial machinery to arrive at facts, ought to be fired by the rank and file.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Individualism Versus Liturgy

THE revival of a truly liturgical life in the Church directly depends upon the realization in Christian thought and practice of the essentially social character of our religion. Liturgy is common prayer, corporate action in offering. It cannot flourish where there is no sense of communal inter-dependence and responsibility. Our very belief in a God who is Trinity and who is Love stands over against all cults of the autonomous, self-sufficient individual. When our Lord stated the two chief commandments he said that the second was like to the first. It is a fact not without importance that the last and most formidable enemy to the establishment of the Christian religion in the Western world was the Neoplatonic philosophy whose supreme ideal of religious experience was the "flight of the alone to the Alone."

It is a truism, not needing argument, to say that in our modern world Christianity confronts again a no less crucial battle for the spirit of true community among men and nations, even, alas, for the spirit of unity and brotherhood among the dismembered limbs of her own Body. Modern man is the spiritual heir of the Renaissance. He has followed too long after the false ideal of "self-made" man. His values have been aggressive individualism, specialized interests, imperialistic domination of the strong over the weak. He has worshipped success rather than sacrifice. His education, even in the best of schools, is factual and technical, seldom concerned with moral realities. Art is defined as self-expression. Modern philosophy stems from Descartes' "I think, therefore I am"—egocentric, self-conscious. No matter what I am thinking — and if I am thinking, I presume I am thinking something—the important thing is, I AM. (In Holy Writ "I AM" is the Name of God.) But for all his self-consciousness modern man finds himself more and more depersonalized and mechanized (whether in industry or warfare). Is it any wonder that religion has become "a private opinion"?

This individualistic spirit has seriously corrupted our heritage of common worship in the classic liturgical tradition which the great Reformers of the sixteenth century sought to purify and preserve. But they could not stem the tide of several centuries' swelling. It engulfed not only Protestants but Roman Catholics as well. Among the latter the Mass has remained static, unchanged, unrevised since 1570. The religious life has been cultivated particularly through extra-liturgical devotions, exercises and meditations designed to promote individual excellence and to confer individual benefits both material and spiritual. Benediction has become the popular service, a service of individuals' adoration, not of corporate offering and communion. At Mass the laity more often than not say their rosaries instead of "praying the Mass" with the celebrating clergy. The clergy themselves seldom say their Breviary offices in choir, as these noble offices were intended to be performed, but read them privately, often in noisy subways and crowded trains. Of course, this is more "convenient"; but, then, the beautiful word "convenient" no longer means what is fitting but what is easy.

Protestantism has cultivated the individual with successive waves of pietism and revivalism, all aimed at deepening "personal religion." But personal religion cannot be sustained apart from the discipline of the Church's corporate tradition of praise and prayer. We are members one of another no less than members of Christ. Common worship has become progressively specialized in the hands of clerical experts and their troop of musicians. Congregations will allow a soloist to take the Sanctus away from them. Academic architects house them in imitative Gothic, no longer a living style; and craftsmen fill the windows with ascetic-looking saints, though few in the congregation have the slightest interest in or appreciation of monasticism. We have even put our lay servers into vestments. (What a joy it has been of late to see pictures of our chaplains at the front celebrating the Holy Communion and being served by soldiers in their working, fighting clothes!) We advertise our worship with tantalizing sermon topics and special-feature music, as though one went to Church as to the movies—for a sensation. The chaste restraint, the objective, God-centered spirit of the liturgy is overladen with subjective, ego-centered "old favorites" in the Hymnal which may be good for the parlor but which do not mix well with the Te Deum, the Magnificat, the Sanctus, the Gloria in excelsis. The nadir of this form of "personal religion," I think, is to be found in one of our most popular Lenten hymns, which ends on this note:

Content to let the world go by,
To know no gain nor loss,
My sinful self my only shame,
My glory all the cross.

This is the "flight of the alone to the Alone."

For Church Schools

By
WILLIAM GRIME

RECORDS of creative writing continue to come to me. Some have emerged from studies of favorite Psalms, some from interpretations of Christian pictures and some from courses on the life of our Lord. This should be encouraged. It is more fruitful than the fill-in method. The latter usually consists in mechanically copying words from the text and inserting them in blanks.

The author is especially interested in the creative writing of juniors centered in the life of Christ. It appears to have the following advantages. (1) Students handle the Bible or Prayer Book gospels. They must know the portion of scripture they are to transcribe in their own words before they can proceed with their writing. Many prefer the modern versions of the Bible. They say "we can understand it better to start with." Furthermore, any method that arouses student readiness to acquire Christian content is indispensable. (2) It is a challenge to their imaginations. It is not a "just imagination" experience. Imagination has its good uses just as reason has, and one of imagination's good uses is to deepen appreciation. (3) It gives chances for individual initiative, thoughtful participation and joy in one's creation. (4) It gives the teacher opportunity to interpret the meanings of words which the students find difficult to understand. (5) It is highly valuable when each student is given responsibility to work out a portion of "The Life" which is to be fitted into the total achievement of their class. Here are the efforts of two eleven year old boys.

THE PHARISEE AND THE PUBLICAN
TRINITY — 11TH SUNDAY AFTER
ST. LUKE 18.9

Jesus liked to tell stories, and he told this story about some men who thought themselves high above others.

Two men had an idea that they ought to go to the temple to pray. One was too proud of himself. The other was a man who didn't think he was so good. The too-proud man prayed, "I thank you God, that I am not like any other man. I give up food a couple of times a week, and when I come to church I give you lots of money."

The other man who didn't think he was so good prayed in a quiet manner, "God, help me for I have a bad conscience."

Then Jesus said, "This man went home feeling happier than the other, for those too-proud people who think they are so great are not as great in God's sight as the ones who care little for themselves and a lot for God."

THE GOOD SAMARITAN
TRINITY — 13TH SUNDAY AFTER
ST. LUKE 10.30

One day a traveling man was walking from Jerusalem to Jerico. He was attacked and beaten by robbers, and all his money was taken from him. While he lay there, half dead, a priest came along. He passed by. Then a man who worked in the temple came along, and passed on. Both these men were members of the Jewish Church. Then a Samaritan came along and fixed him up and put him on his donkey and took him to an inn. When he had done this, he said to the inn-keeper, "When I come again, I'll pay for the rest of his needs." Jesus' purpose in telling this story was to teach them and us that we should do unto our neighbors as we would have them do to us.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

*The New Education and Religion by J. Paul Williams. Association Press. $2.50.

A very provocative book because the author tackles in a realistic and practical way the thorny problems of religious education in its relation to democracy, education and the Church.

—LANE BARTON.

*The Lord's Supper in Protestantism by Elmer Stone Freeman. Macmillan $1.75.

Cheers for a straight, clear, hard-hitting, broad-minded, unimpassioned study. Mr. Freeman, Congregational minister of Menasha, Wisconsin, an Episcopal minister for fifteen years, purposed "to attempt an evaluation of the Lord's Supper which will be, as far as possible, true to the intent of Jesus, intelligible and credible in the light of contemporary knowledge and inspiring when translated into the terms of corporate worship." He succeeded brilliantly.

The six historical chapters and that on "The Lord's Supper: Bridge or Barrier to Christian Reunion" deserve special commendation. Opinions will differ as to the value of suggested forms of celebration but all readers can enjoy Mr. Freeman's sincerity and courage plus his vigorous prose.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

IN compliance with a request from the editorial board of THE WITNESS, I am glad to start a periodic column on our contemporary dramatic arts. Some months ago THE WITNESS published an article of mine dealing with religion and the movies in which I maintained that the motion picture was the most popular and, in some respects, the most vital art form of our contemporary culture. By means of the camera and screen many million of people throughout the world are receiving both entertainment and education—of both the good and bad variety. The same can be said for the productions of the radio industry and the legitimate stage. With such widespread influence these various dramatic media have the power to affect our social, political, economic and moral attitudes for good or ill. THE WITNESS editors therefore think that it is appropriate for a Church paper to produce some critical comment on the products that the dramatic arts present to contemporary culture.

In this column, I hope to give brief reviews of the better motion pictures, radio programs and plays and, at the same time, castigate the cheaper and less artistic productions. Naturally, I have many prejudices along these lines and, hence, I hope that readers will compensate for them. Believing that to be "fore-warned is to be fore-armed," I present some of the prejudices here and now: I generally like murder mysteries, especially of the Double Indemnity variety; I'm afraid I never entirely recovered from my childhood predilection for Westerns; I generally enthuse over foreign productions—English, French and Russian; Bing Crosby and Ingrid Bergman can usually make any picture worthwhile for me; those pictures that are directed by Orson Welles, Val Lewton, Alfred Hitchcock, John Ford and Carol Reed seem to me to be invariably excellent; the radio plays of Arch Oboler, Norman Corwin and Les Weinrott are uniformly fine and, finally, the musical plays of Rodgers and Hammerstein and any production of that Shakespearian lady, Margaret Webster, tend to receive my rave notices on the legitimate stage. That, I think is the complete list although there are probably more floating around in my subconscious mind. Now you can accept my criticisms for what they are worth.

EARLY this month the board of censors of Memphis banned the picture, The Southerner, because it gives an "unfair picture of southern life." It is to be hoped that this ban will kick-back in the manner of Boston's foolish book censorship and make this picture widely exhibited and popularly received. Directed by the French director, Jean Renoir, The Southerner is the simple and dignified story of Sam Tucker and his struggle to rise above the bondage of share-cropping and tenant-farming. Receiving permission to work a piece of fallow bottom-land from his "big farm boss," Sam Tucker fights disease, hunger, storm, flood and hostile neighbors in his attempt to earn his place as a "free man." At the end of the film, he still has to contend with the same enemies—but he is on the land, clearing and planting, and waiting to take on all enemies. Basically, it's a very simple story. And yet its honest simplicity makes it one of the best products to come out of Hollywood in many years.

The cast of the picture does a uniformly fine job. Honors, and perhaps an academy award, should go to J. Carrol Naish in the role of the hostile and anti-social neighbor who has become embittered by the long, hard struggle to be considered a free land-holder. The new-comer, Zachary Scott, is convincingly bewildered, courageous and idealistic as Sam Tucker and Betty Field is excellent as his wife. Beulah Bondi, who has been turning out good character roles for many years, shines as the cantankerous grandma of the Tucker family and Estelle Taylor has a wonderful bit as a bar-girl. It is hoped that you will take notice of Werner Jensson's accompanying music. Always subordinate to the plot—and yet an integral part of it—it is a fine example of the intelligent use of incidental music.

Using the logic of the Memphis board of censors, is is very easy to understand why they would ban the picture—it presents too fair a picture of southern life to be safely shown in their "poll-tax democracy." But, the Memphis board notwithstanding, The Southerner should be seen by all who believe in the value and dignity of human beings.

The Churches Join in Support Of Republican Spain

Hundreds of Thousands of Loyal Republicans Now in Exile Need Aid to Continue Struggle

By Edward Harrison

New York:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy has joined with a large number of organizations in sponsoring a rally on behalf of Republican Spain, which will be held in Madison Square Garden the evening of September 24th. Dr. Edward K. Barsky, national chairman of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, in announcing the meeting stated that "The action of the United Nations Conference at San Francisco in barring Franco Spain from the family of nations, and the Potsdam declaration of the Big Three against Franco have put the entire democratic world on record that an enemy to a durable and lasting peace is at large. The Spanish Republicans have been fighting this common enemy of peace-loving humanity for nine long years. Besides their historic three-year struggle against Franco, Hitler and Mussolini in Spain, they fought with the Allies at Narvik, at Dieppe, on the Russian front, in North Africa and up through Italy. They played an important role in liberating France from the Nazis. Hundreds of thousands of Spanish Republicans are in exile, in need because of their struggle against fascism in Spain. The New York Times in a recent editorial said, 'No group of people in the world is in sadder plight today than the 200,000 or more Spanish Republican refugees, men, women and children in exile in southern France.' We must show these heroic Spaniards that the American people are with them and will continue to support them."

PHILLIP MURRAY

The Spanish Refugee Appeal is using the established facilities of the Unitarian Service Committee in France to distribute aid to the Spanish exiles there. Funds raised here are sent to the Unitarian Service Committee, which has offices in Paris, Toulouse, and Marseilles. A rest home and hospital for Spanish Republicans has been opened at Lourdes in France, with funds supplied by the Spanish Refugee Appeal. Plans are under way to establish at least one other hospital and rest home, and possibly two, in the near future. Food purchased in Switzerland is being distributed to the Spanish Republicans in France. Cash relief is being given families that are without a breadwinner.

There are over 2,000 Spanish Republican families in France whose breadwinner was killed fighting in Spain or with the FFI, or was deported to Germany and never returned. This one group of families alone requires more aid than is being sent to France by all agencies now operating there.

The Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee also operates a hospital in Mexico City where free medical care is given needy Spanish Republican and Central European anti-fascist refugees. The Committee was instrumental in transporting hundreds of Spanish refugees out of war-torn Europe to Mexico, Cuba, and Santo Domingo. It sends financial aid to Spanish refugees in North Africa and Lisbon.

Dorothy Parker, author, is acting chairman of the Spanish Refugee Appeal. Speakers at the mass meeting will be Barkly Crum, distinguished attorney of San Francisco; Frank Sinatra; Prof. Harold Laski who will broadcast by short wave from London; Isabel de Palencia, former ambassador to Sweden of the Spanish Republic; Noel Field of France. It is expected that other speakers will be Mary MeLeod Bethune, Negro educator; William Green and Phillip Murray, representing labor; Justice Hugo Black and Humphrey Bogart.

Church Cooperation

Cincinnati:—Parish and institutional activities of West Cincinnati Presbyterian Church and St. Barnabas Episcopal Church have been united under the supervision of a board representative of both denominations. Church schools of both have united in the buildings of the Presbyterian Church, with Sunday services also held there, with the worship based upon the Book of Common Prayer and the Presbyterian Book of Common Worship. Facilities of the Episcopal Church will be used for community service and as an institutional church for Negroes, with the employment of a Negro social service worker contemplated. Bishop Hobson declared that the experiment offers "great encouragement" and states that it is "a symbol of definite progress in the achievement of future unity for which Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches have been striving in recent years."

Texas Consecration

Houston, Texas:—The Rev. John E. Hines will be consecrated coajutor of Texas on October 18th, with Bishop Tucker as consecrator and Bishop Quin of Texas and Bishop Block of California as co-consecrators. The sermon will be by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri.

Church in Geneva

Geneva, Switzerland:—The American Church here, which is Episcopalian and under the direction of the Presiding Bishop, has been reopened with the Rev. Benjamin J. Bush, Presbyterian minister on the staff of the World Council of Churches, in charge of services. The only other English speaking churches here are the Church of Scotland, which has a service once a month, and the Church of England.

Parish to Move

Norfolk, Va.:—The Church of the Advent here has purchased a former club house for $20,000 and plans are now under way to make the necessary alterations in order that it may be used both as a church and a parish house. It is expected that the structure can be occupied and consecrated in December.

Unity Essential

London (wireless to RNS):—The Church will perish unless it brings a positive gospel to the people, Sir Cyril Norwood, president of St. John's College, Oxford, declared in his presidential address to the annual conference of Modern Churchmen at Oxford. He said Christianity has been weakened by "endless division" among Christians and by the widening gulf between the clergy and people.

Stressing the appeal of communism to young people, Sir Cyril asserted that the British churches, including the Anglican Church, "being complicated organizations, cannot move, change, and adjust themselves with the requisite speed to keep in line with modern developments."

Regarding Christian unity, Sir Cyril said the Anglican Church has been severely criticized for going out of its way to extend fellowship to Eastern Orthodox churches while refusing inter-communion and denying the hospitality of its pulpit to neighbors in the same village, even on special occasions.

house for Negroes has been purchased by the diocese of Louisiana, a step made possible by the successful results of the victory fund campaign. Building will start as soon as conditions are favorable. The fund, incidentially, has gone over the top. The goal of $250,000 has been exceeded and a new goal of $275,000 has been set. Urge Assured Wage

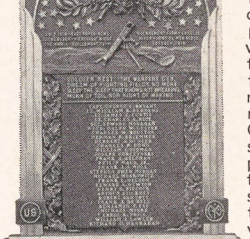
New York:—An assured annual wage for all workers and an adequate annual income for every family was urged in the annual Labor Sunday Message issued here by the Federal Council of Churches. Prepared by the Council's Department of Christian Social Relations, the statement will be read in churches throughout the country.



Cooperation among government agencies, churches, employers and workers in the rebuilding of the postwar world, was stressed by the Council. It urged united efforts by these groups to obtain an adequate and secure standard of living for all, based on full employment, a high level of production, good housing and adequate social insurance; elimination of discrimination in employment because of sex, race, creed or color; extension of workers education; and effective relocation of war workers in a peacetime economy.

Urging the preservation of legislative gains for labor, the statement said: "Having championed the fundamental rights of labor for many years before their recognition in statute law, the churches feel a peculiar responsibility for their maintenance and further extension."

"In particular," the Council added, "support should be given now to exploited workers in backward areas of American society where the local culture is almost fascist in character. Management cannot afford to be judged by such conditions any more than organized labor can permit them to go unchallenged."

In the place of repressive legislation, the message advocated "democratic methods" of conference and negotiation as a means of solving industrial disputes and averting industrial warfare.

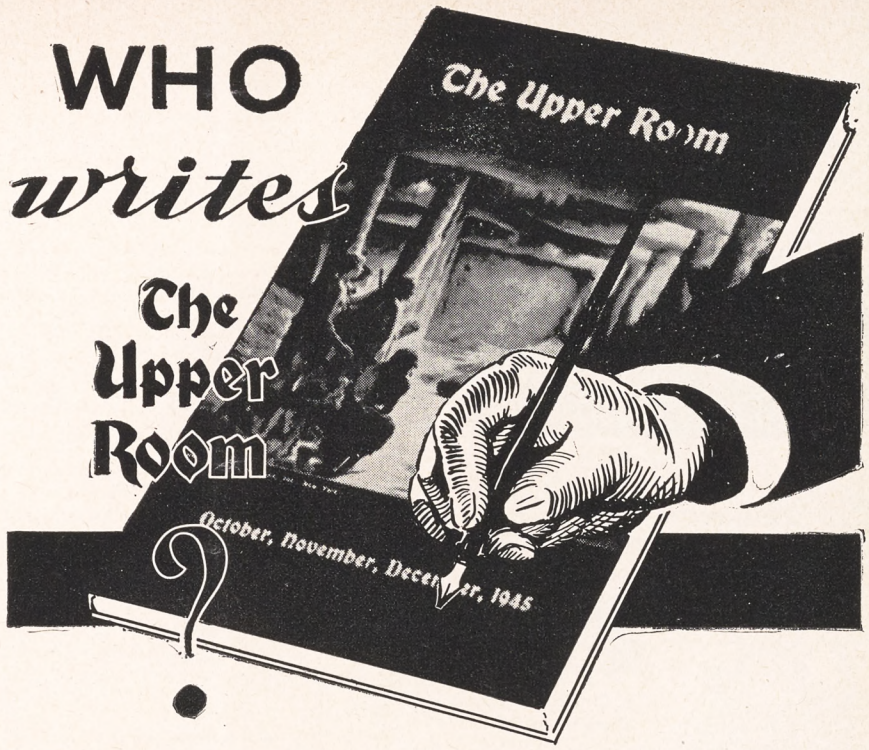
"No man is free so long as a single slave remains; no family is secure so long as refugees are homeless; no nation is great so long as some nation is impoverished," the Council concluded. "Ours is the task of finding prophetic vision for the decisions the hour requires, and of engaging in vivifying deeds for the redemption of the times and the shaping of the future."

Full Employment



Washington (RNS):—Passage of the full employment bill will "take its place in history among the significant legislative acts of our time." Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches, told the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency at a hearing on the measure here.

Asserting that he knew of "no factor more menacing to the Republic than that of mass unemployment," Bishop Oxnam described the bill as "not only an expression of sound ethical ideals, of common sense and of justice," but as "fundamental to the preservation of the Republic itself."

"This bill is of great interest to religious bodies," he said. "The churches recognize that it is not enough to proclaim religious ideals. The ethical ideals of religion must be translated into the realities of world law and order, economic justice and racial brotherhood. Nor is it enough for us, as citizens, to enunciate democratic ideals. They, too, must come alive in concrete measures that give them reality. Ideals thus become meaningful for the common man."

Bishop Oxnam pointed out that in the Federal Council, the major Protestant denominations "have again and again expressed themselves in favor of the fundamental concept of full employment." He voiced the belief that when the measure becomes law it will be supported throughout the nation by church people everywhere.

Declaring that he regarded the right to work as fundamental, Bishop Oxnam said: "Christianity believes that men and not things are the goal of social living. It believes in the solidarity of the human family, and seeks to put the common good first. It believes in equal rights for all, and understands that we progress insofar as we learn how to work together. It finds in love and good will the cohesive factor essential to social unity. Democracy likewise insists upon the worth of the human being, and recognizes the dignity of man."

Move for Unity

Pittsburgh, Pa. (RNS):—Voicing the belief that "these times require the constant cooperative efforts of the best that Lutherans can offer to combat a secularized nation and world," 15 laymen of three large Lutheran bodies met here and organized a movement to be known as Lutheran Men in America.

Those present at the two-day session were members of the American Lutheran Conference, a federation of five Lutheran groups; the United Lutheran Church; and the Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio and Other States. Together, these bodies represent almost 90 per cent of Lutherans in America.

According to spokesmen of the movement, its aims will be: "1. To develop better understanding and fellowship among all Lutherans. 2. To help meet the great challenge which has come to all Christendom as the result of the world crisis arising out of the war. 3. To foster publicity looking toward a wider dissemination of the Christian philosophy of life. 4. To encourage local fellowship and cooperation among all Lutherans. 5. To encourage Christian education at all age levels."

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. LLEWELLYN O. DIPLOCK
Rector of Christ Church, Yonkers, N. Y.

I read with interest but nevertheless with great dismay the editorial entitled A Really Long View (WITNESS, June 28). I don't for a moment question the right of anyone to hold a different view about Bishop Manning's plea for ten million dollars to complete the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, but this editorial contains gross mis-statements of facts which I believe should be corrected. Your editorial puts it this way—"You can do a lot of things with ten million dollars . . . buy yourself 'the longest unbroken vista in Christendom.' That's the way the Bishop of New York wants to spend ten million dollars so that anyone stepping inside the Cathedral of St. John the Divine can look further under one roof than in any other church in the world."

It was not for this purpose that Bishop Manning has asked ten million dollars, as anyone can see who carefully reads the Bishop's address. The Bishop spoke of two separate matters. First, he mentioned the plan to beautify the Cathedral and open the "long vista" from one end of the Cathedral to the other by removing the present reredos (this work is under way). The second matter, entirely separate from the first, was to raise a fund of ten million dollars to complete the Cathedral after the war. In the interest of accuracy and in accord with your standards I am sure you will want to correct the misleading statements of your editorial.

MR. E. E. BREADY
Layman of New York City

Thank you for the editorial on the atomic bomb which puts in a few words on how every thinking person should feel about this new invention. For any one country, and even more for a few people in that country, to have control of this discovery which, for good or evil, can do so much in this world is unthingable. Pricate profit must be completely eliminated at once and the whole thing internationalized. Here is a major test for the United Nations structure in which you have urged us to put such reliance. As you suggested I have already written my Senators and Representative in Congress urging such action.

THE REV. SIDNEY TEMPLE JR.
Member WITNESS Editorial Board

May I raise just one question in regard to the letter from Bishop Hart (WITNESS, July 26). Why is it considered bad to have a large professional army? We have a large police force in New York City, large enough to keep at peace those who wish to make trouble. We do not think it is so immoral a thing that we are going to do away with it and have all our college age men take over our protection by giving up one year to compulsory regimentation. We ought to get over the Tommy Atkins point of view and realize that a man in the permanent army to keep peace is as noble as any man who met at San Francisco to set up the framework of peace. Provision should be made for adequate housing abroad or on distant islands for the families of enlisted men as well as for officers. We have learned to respect our police, our members of the F.B.I.; let us now respect in peace as in war the guardians of world peace. Let us not defeat the purposes of the United Nations Charter by forcing every man in the world to be trained to kill in order to keep up with the universal conscription of the youth of America.

A CHURCHWOMAN

For some years THE WITNESS has come to me as the gift of an old friend who recently died. I am not financially able to subscribe for the paper myself so must ask you to stop sending it. As I have known THE WITNLSS and read it constantly from the very beginning I shall sorely miss an old friend as will, I fear, a missionary in South Dakota to whom I send my copy as soon as I have read it. Good wishes and long life to the excellent WITNESS.

ANSWER: We are of course continuing the paper. If there is any one who cares to make this their gift subscription we will be glad to enter it as such.

MISS AZALIA E. PEET

Kindly send me several extra copies of THE WITNESS for July 26. It contains a letter from a Marine Chaplain who tells of finding a small church in Naha, Okinawa, "pretty well demolished" and with "a picture of Wesley." I am a Methodist missionary evacuated from Southwest Japan in 1941. I had the oversight at one time of the Japanese and Okinawa women workers of our six Methodist churches on Okinawa.

Mexican Protestants Launch A Counter Attack

There Is Bitter Religious Strife Between Roman Catholics and Protestants in State

By Jack Starr-Hunt
Religious News Service Correspondent

Mexico City:—Plans for an open counter-attack against the anti-Protestant "crusade" launched by Roman Catholic Archbishop Luis Maria Martinez, in his pastoral letter of November 13, were announced at the annual Methodist Conference of central Mexico here.

"We are suffering a tremendous persecution on the part of the Catholic Church, but are asking our preachers to pray for them and to forgive them," the Rev. Eleazar Guerra, bishop of the Methodist church in Mexico, told the delegates who included pastors and missionaries from eight Mexican states. At the same time he urged the faithful to deepen their spiritual life so as to live as true Christians. Outstanding business at the conference was the decision to declare the motives of the Methodist Church to all the nation, and the organization of a committee of seven members to draw up plans. A spokesman for the Methodists, who represent the strongest Protestant group in Mexico, said they plan to expound their attitude and to outline Methodist achievements in Mexico to date, not only in religious teachings but in their medical clinics and social work among Mexico's poor.

Funds are being raised during 1945, a spokesman said, to buy a printing shop for the three official Church papers, and for the printing of propaganda. Two new Methodist churches in northern and southern Mexico, and two new social centers, one rural, and one in Mexico City, will be opened this year, it was announced. Plans will also be inaugurated for a big 1947 celebration to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Methodist Church in Mexico.

Since the Archbishop's pastoral letter was read in all Catholic parishes of Mexico and given wide publicity in the press, anti-Protestant placards have peppered Mexico City, appearing on walls and in windows of private homes, linking Catholicism with patriotic Latin-Americanism, and admonishing Mexicans to repudiate both Protestantism and Anglo-Saxonism.

Twenty-two Protestant ministers, who, according to a Methodist spokesman were denied space in Mexico City's three big daily newspapers, have published a manifesto which has appeared in four "liberal" publications, including Baluarte, organ of the Committee of the Defense of the Revolution (the committee officially named by the Chamber of Deputies to take steps to safeguard the principles of the Mexican Revolution of 1910). This paper is directed by deputy Salvador Ochoa Renteria, outstanding protagonist of Mexico's officially defunct — but nevertheless alive and kicking — National Synarchist Union, strongly Catholic political movement. The manifesto also was featured in Alerta, which defines itself as "the newspaper of revolutionary defense," and whose directors are Masons.

The statement was reproduced in 150,000 pamphlets printed and distributed by private organizations and workers' syndicates. The pastors represented congregations of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Pentecostal, Nazarene, Baptist, Lutheran, Interdenominational and Christian Independent churches, the Assembly of God and the Salvation Army in Mexico City — all Mexicans. The Anglo-American congregations of Christ Church (Episcopal) and Union Church (inter-denominational) were not represented in the manifesto.

The manifesto asserts that the Archbishop, through his pastoral letter, incites disunion and violence among the Mexican people, and says that Protestantism in Mexico is not a campaign but a natural development through its more than three-quarters of a century in Mexico, and that it counts four generations of faithful in its fold, with a present total of more than a million Protestants.

In answer to the Catholic argument that Mexico is a Christian country and is offended by propaganda which places it at the level of pagan countries, the manifesto declares that the great majority of the natives are not fundamentally Catholics since the Indian continues adoring, at bottom, his old idols; that for the Indian the saint is a fetish, even an idol, and that the moral mechanism of religion is the simple matter of making offerings to God to indemnify him or to bring his favor.

The manifesto says, "The Protestant initiative has been decisive and very fruitful in the matters of popular education, anti-alcoholism, social morality, in sports and other progressive activities. Our history abounds in patriotic deeds by Protestant elements. The evangelical church is not pleading for tolerance, but exercising a legitimate right which the Magna Carta concedes it, and in these solemn moments through which the world is passing, and in which historic courses are being set, we make a call to the Mexican people to unite in a single effort for social betterment in which ideals of justice, fraternity, and salvation will excel for our people."

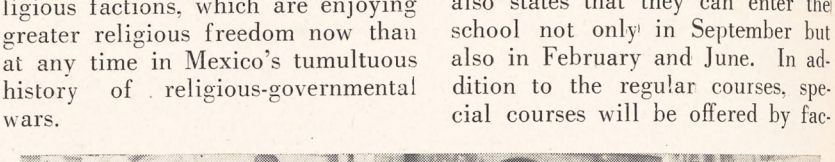
The ministers who signed the manifesto are members of the "Alliance of Pastors" who meet monthly in Mexico City to exchange opinions and arrange plans of work.



Meanwhile, following the organization of various Catholic committees to carry on the fight against the "Protestant invasion," apparently spontaneous Catholic-Protestant incidents broke out in various parts of the country. The weekly magazine Tiempo stated that Vera Cruz has been the scene of several religious disturbances. More than a thousand Catholics, it said, recruited from various nearby villages, and armed with stones, sticks and pistols, invaded a reunion of 300 Protestants who had assembled from towns of the district. The reason, says Tiempo, was a rumor that the evangelists planned to burn the Catholic church. Federal troops were reported to have disbanded the crowd. The newspaper Novedades published a similar account from its correspondent in Cosolapa, State of Vera Cruz, prominently headlined "Sanguinary encounter between evangelists (Protestants) and Catholics."

Millions of words of anti-Protestant statements have appeared in Mexico's newspapers and magazines. Probably the most influential and widely read of these, apart from the daily newspapers, is the strongly pro-Catholic weekly tabloid, La Nacion, which has been running a series of articles attacking "the Protestant invasion" which it claims is directed and financed from the United States.

Among the alleged Protestant activities in Mexico attacked are the distribution of Bibles to the army, the attempt to convert Catholic "braceros" (Mexican laborers) to Protestantism while they are in the United States so that they will convert others when they return to Mexico, and the dissemination of Protestant propaganda by Mexican radio stations, all of which activities, it is charged, are initiated, and mostly financed, by Protestants in the United States.

La Nacion quotes a prominent Mexican as saying, "That which most hinders friendship between the United States and Mexico is that irritating presumption of the Protestants to de-Catholicize us. Let these propagandists return to their house; there they have enough to do — with something like 70,000,000 pagans in their own territory."

The Mexican government has apparently in most cases adopted a "hands off" policy toward both religious factions, which are enjoying greater religious freedom now than at any time in Mexico's tumultuous history of religious-governmental wars.

London, England: — The cover picture shows the delegation of Russian Orthodox churchmen on their visit to Windsor Castle this summer. Shown in the picture are Metropolitan Nikolai Krutitsky, a member of the patriarchial council; Arch-priest Nikolai Kolchitsky, protopresbyter of the patriarchial council; the Rev. Juvenaliy Lunin, a monk. The latter is a young man, twenty-six years old, who just recently completed his theological training at Kalenin.

OFFER COURSES FOR SOLDIERS

Cambridge, Mass.: — Episcopal Theological School last week announced special courses for returning chaplains and for servicemen thinking of the ministry. The announcement for chaplains points out that the G. I. bill provides financial aid for one year of study and states that chaplains will be welcome at E.T.S. for any period from a year to a few weeks. For servicemen the announcement stresses that the school admits to full standing only those who "have had at least three years of college or its equivalent." It also states that they can enter the school not only in September but also in February and June. In addition to the regular courses, special courses will be offered by faculty members if the number enrolled warrants.

CAMPAIGN FOR CHURCH SCHOOL

Cleveland: — St. Philip's, where the Rev. George Nostrand is rector, has had a month's campaign to increase the enrollment in the Church school. Teams were organized, trained, and each assigned a district with a map showing where calls were to be made. Armed with attractive booklets giving a calendar of parish events, what the school has to offer, etc., calls were made at a vast number of homes. The campaign closed on September 16th with a service conducted entirely by the children, with an address by Mr. Nostrand welcoming the newcomers.

Church Has Great Opportunity When Boys Come Home

A Canadian Rector Presents Various Ways That the Church Can Be of Service to Men

By G. P. Gower
Rector of St. Paul's, Vancouver, Canada

Vancouver: — There are, broadly speaking, three types of Service Personnel who will need help in efforts at self-adjustment.

1. The young man who had just left school or who enlisted straight from school.

His skills and his abilities may be exceptional. Most men trained in modern warfare are remarkably adept. But he has had no experience in fitting himself into civil life.

He has found his manhood and in some cases knows how to wield authority. He won't want to be spoon fed. He is sure that life presents nothing in peacetime anymore difficult that what he has already met in war.

He will want to know that governments, industry, and society generally have done all that is humanly possible to afford him an opportunity. For him the sense of frustration must be removed.

He has been taught that it is a noble thing to die for his country. He must now be allowed to see that it is an equally noble thing to live in and for his country.

2. The older man who must be made to feel that his services are still valuable to the community. Four or five years out of a man's life at a time when he was just getting established puts him in a bad position when he comes up against the competition of men younger than himself.

The especial case is that of the married man with family responsibility who is as great an asset to the country as any, and whose children must have their chance.

The older man will want to feel that he is not presently going to be put on the shelf in a country where there are such vast possibilities.

3. Lastly — there is the casualty. The casualty is the price of war just as much as the cost of guns and planes. Whether a man is a temporary casualty or a permanent charge on the country makes no difference. It is the cost of the war and must be faced.

In this war there are, more than ever, casualties of mind and spirit as well as of body. This is a war of terrific tensions and fierce conflicts. Out of it are coming some mental and psychological problems which will be very hard to solve. The appearance of normality in behavior will overlay many deep-seated effects of the strain.

Probably the best cure for these will be to offer an ordered life of reasonable security. The steady sweep of peace-time living in which the trivial worries are not made important by the added worries of lack of food, shelter, clothing, and medical care will carry many along giving them time to feel the convalescing effects of "home."

If the disturbance is more permanent the casualty remains even more the concern of the Church.

It would appear that the authorities have begun to appreciate the magnitude of the task. The initial steps taken by the government should be studied by any who wish to make themselves fully acquainted. Soldier settlement schemes, higher education grants, training courses, rehabilitation grants, pension schemes — all these seem to have the seal of genuine interest.

One would like to have information on a like scale from industry. If as it appears there will be a large measure of free enterprise, that same free enterprise will have within its power the effective means of providing many opportunities for absorbing and even training the "rehabilitee."

The writer feels that free enterprise is here presented with a legitimate challenge. It must be as ready to find jobs as it is to draw profits. Certainly if enterprise is free the governments cannot interfere and it all depends on the good will of industry's leaders. Let us hope that it is forthcoming.

We should remind ourselves what rehabilitation really means. It means that men and women should be granted the privileges and protection, and share in the prospects of society, not so much as a reward for exceptional service rendered but as a part of a birthright which can not be withheld. It also means that the recipients on their part accept the responsibilities of the society into which they are incorporated.

Indiscriminate handouts constitute a social sin and violate the principle embodied in the saying, "If a man will not work neither shall he eat."

The Church has already an organization which could be made to function. The diocesan council for social service could have its rehabilitation committee whose business would be to obtain information, maintain contact with all other agencies, correlate local efforts and provide representation on other properly constituted bodies.

It is quite obvious that if we are to be responsible for helping individual cases we must mobilize the manpower of each parish. Men's groups might do a whole lot worse than to start now and study the problem.

The Rev. Richard Emrich will give a course on Types of Modern Theology for returning chaplains and service men at Episcopal Theological School. Others to offer special courses are Adelaide Case, Rollin Fairbanks, Joseph Fletcher, Massey Shepherd, Sherman Johnson and Dean Taylor

To do the latter means getting information. Probably the weakest spot in the Church's effort is the lack of proper information. It is so often thought that altruism and emotional drive can make the Church effective. No greater mistake can be made. This is an age of specialized knowledge. The Church must know all about the problem from a scientific, economic and political viewpoint. We must be hard-headed and better informed and ready with the correct answer.

The Church must be able to gather its material on which to work. How many churches know what service men have already returned and are trying to settle in the locality? When a man comes home, is he given the right kind of welcome by the members of his church? Does he know that the church can be effective in helping? Indiyidual contact is absolutely essential.

This seems to call for close cooperation and conference between all religious communions. During the bad period of relief problems many cities had bureaus acting in a supervisory capacity ensuring that no case was overlooked or receiving duplicated assistance.

All committees should consist of workers who have been carefully chosen. The returned men and women are in many cases going to be extremely sensitive, with preconceived ideas and perhaps with awkward spots in their thinking. Tact and commonsense will be great gifts.

Most service men are by this time club or canteen conscious. That is, they have been accustomed to finding recreation, companionship and inspiration in places provided for them. They will do exactly the same as they did after the last war, develop their corporate life along the same lines.

The parish or the community will have a chance of directing that tendency and making good use of it if local clubs can be formed. Probably community groups are better here and if church members can be put in positions of responsibility so much the better.

The Church will be deeply concerned about the purely spiritual side of the problem. The writer believes that the Church in this country has yet to pass through its most critical stage. It is not a question of lack of finance or of manpower. It is a question of the relevance of the Church to the need of the time.

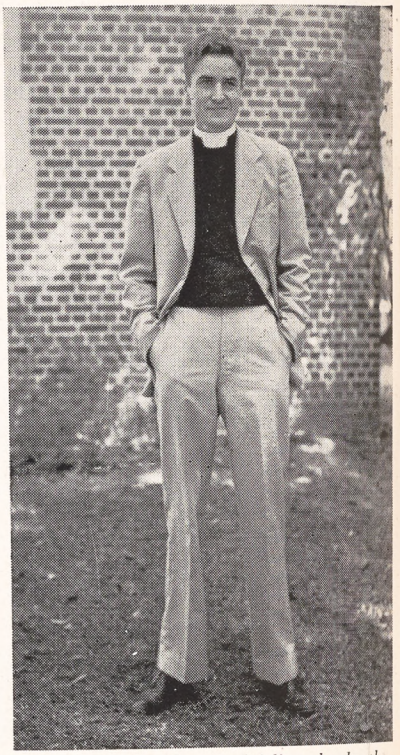
We can not close our eyes to the fact that the vast majority of the people do not see what difference the church makes to the life of the nation. They are not convinced that its thinking is up-to-date. They are extremely sceptical of its claim to be free from protected privilege and uninfluenced by large interests in the secular field.

The rehabilitation of millions of people presents an unprecedented opportunity. Service chaplains have already prepared the ground. Having men in close knit units has afforded an opportunity of getting to know them. A large body of goodwill towards the Church has been recreated. The Church at home can "follow up." Preaching that is applicable, services that are understood of the people, sympathy of church people that is practical. If the Church is really set on doing something it will go far to avoid the resurgence of the "hobo army" of the unchurched.

It should frankly be recognized that the Church as a body politic is in no position to offer a blue print for the rehabilitation of large groups of people. This however by no means exhausts its effectiveness or its relevance to the problem. It can be of immense value in three directions:

The Church exists to promote and support all good works. Both in its corporate capacity and through its individual members it must give every support to all efforts put forward by the state, by industry, and by local welfare agencies. The power of discernment is needed in greater degree and a more closely integrated opinion is demanded from the Church.

The Church must be free to criticize and to bring that integrated opinion to bear wherever she thinks the rights of man or the principles of Jesus are being violated. Fear of offending certain interests must not deter the expression of charitable but courageous opposition to such violation. The Four Freedoms are the charter of rehabilitation. The Church itself must be free of fear in order to promote the other freedoms among her children.



The Church must never lose sight of the fact that she has always had a plan of rehabilitation. She is pledged to the task of fitting every man, woman and child into the scheme of life. That plan has always been known as the plan of redemption. It is wider in scope than any temporary measure. It is longer in time and deeper in purpose than any scheme man can devise.

LAYMEN HOLD MEETING

Southborough, Mass.: — Laymen of the diocese of Massachusetts held a two day conference, September 15-16, at St. Mark's School here. Bishop Keeler of Minnesota was the guest speaker and preacher, but otherwise the leaders were all laymen. In the two days immediately before the clergy of the diocese held a conference directed by Bishop Sherrill.

SHATTUCK HEADMASTER RETURNS

Faribault, Minn.: — The Rev. Donald Henning, rector and headmaster of Shattuck School has returned to be discharged from the chaplains corps and was present for the opening of the 86th year on September 13. He has been on active duty in the army since June 15, 1942, serving in Africa, Corsica, Italy, France.

The Rev. James Stirling heads the work among Episcopal students at Florida A. and M. College at Gainesville

GREEK REGENT VISITS CANTERBURY

London (wireless to RNS):—Archbishop Damaskinos, regent of Greece, visited Canterbury Cathedral last week as the guest of the Archbishop. It was the first time in history that an Archbishop of Canterbury had welcomed a head of the Greek Orthodox Church.

NO MORE CHAPLAINS ARE NEEDED

Boston: — The army and navy commission has received the expected word that further commissions for chaplains will not be granted. Chaplain Webster, associate secretary, explains that only applications now in the hands of the adjutant general of the army will be considered. He thinks navy procedure will be similar.

EDITORIALS

Protestant Sunday

WE ARE fond of saying that the Episcopal Church is both catholic and protestant, though perhaps the clergy more than the laity are sensitive to the subtleties of that description. While we may have the satisfaction of possessing both characteristics in our communion, the actual fact is that the vast majority of our members think of themselves as Protestants and let it go at that. And it is something of which we can well be proud, for, as protestant and reformed, the Anglican Church sloughed off many of the abuses and errors of the Middle Ages and returned to a position much more like that of the primitive body which was its ancestor.

As we look about the world today and contrast protestant culture and practice with that which (however wrongly) is thought of as catholic, we can only be profoundly grateful that our Church bears the adjective Protestant in its name.

On October 31, 1517, Martin Luther nailed his ninety-five Theses to the Castle Church door in Wittenberg. Not all that he accomplished is above criticism, but here was a great gesture that initiated a purifying and liberating movement that we do well to remember. The Sunday nearest this date, October 28, is known as Reformation or Protestant Sunday. As those who fell heir to so many of its benefits let us celebrate this anniversary in fraternal spirit with our brethren of other branches of Christ's Church. It is not too soon to plan for interchange of pulpits—or even congregations—and union services that will demonstrate to our constituents and communities our fealty to and pride in the reformed Church.

It's Over: So Now What?

WE HOPE readers do not object to unmitigated circulation plugging on this editorial page two or three times a year. The fact is that our circulation falls off during the summer, largely through the discontinuing of bundles, so that it is our practice each fall to offer a series of articles designed to tempt rectors and others to get us back to normal. This is a frank appeal for your help.

This fall we go at it rather blindly. Hundreds of articles have appeared in the press about what should be done for the returning servicemen. THE WITNESS ran a series on this subject last year, with all the articles by civilians. So this fall we thought it would be interesting to reverse the process. We have therefore invited a number of servicemen (chaplains, officers and enlisted men) to tell us what kind of an America and world they want, now that the war is over, and what they think the Church should do about it. Some of the articles have arrived and they are stimulating. But we have also asked others to write whose contributions have not yet been received . . . mostly from men still overseas. So we cannot indulge in superlatives. All we can say is that we have gone at it carefully by inviting men to write who have shown concern with the subject and have a genuine interest in the Church. It is our belief that these men, of various ages and rank, who have stood the rap of a world war, must have something to say that is worth listening to and will stimulate our parishes to greater activity in things vital.

We hope that we may have the help of many between now and the publishing of the first article in the issue of October 4th. First, we ask that rectors order a bundle each week. It can be done by simply sending a postal with name and address and number of copies desired to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. We will bill later at 5c a copy, with the understanding of course that the bundle may be discontinued at any time. Second, if you will send us the names and addresses of a number of people you would like to have receive THE WITNESS, we will mail a copy directly to them for twenty weeks for just one dollar. We believe that there are many rectors who will be glad to do this for their vestrymen, Church school teachers or other key people. Third, if you have no discretionary fund to pay for trial subscriptions, send us names with a request for sample copies, and we will see that they are sent with an invitation to subscribe. Finally, we hope that

I BELIEVE our call and duty now is to put ourselves at the disposal of God to help the returned men and women who will need our fellowship. I do not mean pity or sympathy; they don't need that; they would scorn it. I mean friendship and real understanding in the new problems that new experience and a new age bring. We must be ready to go out from our homes and churches, and into our hospitals and rehabilitation centres and wherever returned men are found, and to share with them what may not always be the easy task of finding a place and a work in ordinary life. and a solution to things which puzzle them.

many lay men and women will also act on one or more of these suggestions. We will be most grateful for your cooperation.

James Arthur Muller

JAMES ARTHUR MULLER was a man of gaiety and enthusiasm. These are rare qualities in an age when so many people are tired and half-hearted. But Dr. Muller could be counted on to dispel such weariness. There is a petition in one of the Grey Book litanies which describes him well: "That thou wilt give us the gifts of Galilee, the gifts of gaiety and freedom and simplicity to make our tired world grow young again." In his many years of teaching he was always close to the lives of his students and he knew them well.

Dr. Muller taught at Boone University in China, at St. Stephen's College, the General Theological Seminary, and was for twenty-two years professor of Church history in the Episcopal Theological School. He was the author, among a number of books, of one of the best missionary biographies we know: "Apostle of China," the fascinating story of Samuel Isaac Joseph Schereschewsky.

We shall remember Jamie Muller with affection and gratitude.

A Layman's View of Unity

By

EWING EVERETT

Vestryman of St. John's in the Village, New York

WHEN a mass-circulation magazine devotes an entire editorial page to the problem of Christian unity it must be assumed that the question has reached popular proportions. Large segments of many denominations feel that Christendom is in dire need of a Dumbarton Oaks. They fear that unfettered religious competition is being or may be exploited to promote intolerance, that the veteran who caught the spirit of Christianity in a foxhole may revert to scepticism when he is returned to the niceties of doctrinal and formal differences, that over-zealous proselyting may produce more consternation than converts. They feel that if Christians are to take a leading part in paving the road towards national and international unity they must avoid the quagmires of particularities which beset their own paths.

Unfortunately every advocate of unity runs the risk of provoking a new schism or fostering an old one within his own house. Two obstacles beset his path. The major hurdle is the simple fact that the average layman is more suspicious of enforced uniformity than desirous of voluntary unity. The second difficulty is that in religion—even within the Christian religion—one man's meat is still another man's poison, notwithstanding the fact that without food life cannot be sustained.

In our current stage of religious development there is little agreement among Christians as to even the meaning of Christian unity—much less the means of reaching such an end. At present there are four general concepts, each with its own variations and modulations. These may be roughly characterized as (1) absorption, (2) cooperation, (3) selective amalgamation, and (4) metamorphosis. All Christian groups absorb with enthusiasm, many cooperate of necessity, a few espouse selective amalgamation, with conditions and reservations, but the metamorphosis of complete and absolute unity is still beyond the religious horizon of most laymen. To a few it is a star which serves as an ideal, a secret thought to be brought out and discussed — well out of earshot of the clergy. But even those who view with approval recognize that it may shed more heat than light upon the earth today.

The mere thought of absolute unity leads the Episcopal Bishop of Long Island to eschew even cooperation, lest cooperative association pave the way to the abandonment of doctrinal emphasis. Whereupon sixteen clergymen (approximately 8%) of the diocese of Long Island register a vehement objection to the pastoral letter of Bishop James DeWolfe in which he indicated that "no priest can throw in his lot with the Federal Council of Churches in America (and the Protestant Council in New York) and remain true to the vow that he took at his ordination." A few days later a larger group of Episcopal clergymen, meeting in New York City, condemn their sixteen brethren from Long Island for condemning Bishop DeWolfe for condemning the Federal Council and the Protestant Council because they refused to condemn the Rockefeller concept of Christian unity. Before the bewildered layman adds his condemnation to the potpourri, let him remember that each of these actions was taken in a serious effort to promote the interests of unity; before he mutters "A fine kettle of fish," let him recall that group clergy action usually has the support of group lay thought; and finally let him thoughtfully observe that the unity of the theorist may and frequently does produce anarchy in fact.

It is strange, but doubtless only human, that the white light of the Four Gospels, after passing through the prism of the eye of man, should appear as a series of contrasting colors, producing a religious spectrum where truth is found only in the shade which matches the doctrine of the group.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Some might suggest that Christendom is more concerned with the prism than with the beam. I am inclined to feel that Christians are afflicted with a peculiar kind of color blindness. Our own wave-length in the spectrum always appears to be pure white. I say this with the full knowledge of the fact that it may be tantamount to heresy to suggest that the Episcopal wave-length appears to be pure white.

Inherent in any approach to the problem of unity is the question of doctrine and doctrinal emphasis. Our reactions towards absolute Christian unity, or towards unity within the Church, vary in proportion to the degree in which we lean towards the view that doctrine is truth, or towards the idea that doctrine is an attempt to perceive truth.

The Church of the Living God as proposed by Mr. Rockefeller, in which "denominational emphasis would be set aside" and "a life, not a creed would be the test" of admission, is merely a full adoption of the view that "doctrine" is not synonymous with "truth," that it is one of the paths cut through the wilderness of human fallibility leading towards the light. Its antithesis is the doctrine of Rome, which identifies doctrine with truth and substitutes the crystal lens of the papal eye for the prisms which are the source of all non-Roman "fallacies."

While the Rockefeller proposal refers to "a life, not a creed" it probably means the doctrinal emphasis which springs from a creed. It is the doctrinal interpretations of a creed which has fostered disunity among Episcopalians. The extent of the divergencies of doctrinal interpretations is known only too well to the clergy of our Church. I do not refer to the differences in form of worship or ritual, but to basic doctrinal differences as we observe them translated into terms of thought and action.

THE average layman hears the sound of clashing foils but frequently dismisses it with the thought that it is a friendly fencing match among the Presbyters. But anyone who has witnessed some of these "friendly" jousts will state that the buttons have been removed from the rapiers and blood has been drawn on many an occasion.

It is a fact which can be fully substantiated that even a "moderate" among the Anglo-Catholic group avoids discussions of many religious topics with a "moderate" of the Evangelical group, lest the one or the other forget the second of the two Commandments upon which "hang all the law and the prophets." The extremists of the clergy simply aren't on speaking terms in a doctrinal sense and sometimes in a literal sense.

For Episcopalians the first step towards Christian unity is the reconciliation of some of the major doctrinal differences within the Church, at least those differences which are leading one group away from the other, and the development of a desire on the part of Episcopal groups to approach internal unity. At present there are some groups (or segments within groups) within the Church which do not even have a desire for internal reconciliation. To them ecclesiastical fratricide is the only means of achieving Episcopal unity.

Would it not be a great step towards Christian unity if the bishops and priests of the Episcopal Church in the United States (irrespective of their concepts of ultimate unity) were to adopt . . . and practice . . . the slogan "Let unity begin at home," and interpret "home" as meaning the Episcopal Church?

Under present conditions the urging of amalgamation with any non-Episcopal group can only operate to widen our intra-mural schism. While in theory a union with Presbyterians may be highly desirable, every effort in that direction fans the fire of Anglo-Catholics towards union with the Catholic Churches of the world. I am inclined to agree with Bishop Manning of New York (with whom I frequently disagree) that the "central fact is that none of the Churches, including the Episcopal Church, is yet spiritually ready for reunion."

In the tract racks of Anglo-Catholic churches we find the repeated threat that: "Such proposals do not deserve the name reunion" . . . "We must do all that we legitimately can to end our quarrels with the other branches of the Church," i.e. the Roman Catholic Church and the Eastern Churches (tract on Church Unity by Bonnelle Spencer, O.H.C.) . . . "Any reunion scheme based on compromise . . . would lay aside all hope of future reunion with the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Churches" (The Living Church, March 18, 1945)—"Every effort should be made to—work for the visible union of the three parts of the Church, the Anglican, the Eastern and the Roman." (Anglo-Catholic handbook, The Practice of Religion, by Rev. A. C. Knowles.

There is a growing disunity within the Episcopal Church for the reason that High Church and Low Church groups have become so engrossed in the idea of selective union with non-Episcopal groups that they have failed to make any serious effort to stage an Episcopal get-together. Doctrinally they have moved away from one another and the greater the distance between them the greater will be the inclination to unite with non-Episcopalian groups. In so doing they may be in the process of destroying the bridge which spans the High Church-Low Church chasm. Before the cables be severed by advocacy of extra-mural union, whether it be with the Roman Catholic Church, the Syrian Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Church of the Living God (as conceived by Mr. Rockefeller) or any other Church, is it too much to ask that the clergy of the "Church, according to the use of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America" (or the "Catholic Church" or the "Anglo-Catholic Church" or the "Anglican Church" or whatever name you choose to use with respect to the Church in the United States which Episcopalians attend) get on speaking terms with one another for the stated purpose of creating a desire for reunion within the Church? Certainly there is no precept in Episcopal doctrine which forbids a desire that factional groups within the Church move closer towards one another.

At the present time unity for Episcopalians simply means a desire for Episcopal unity and a desire to keep the Church intact even though it involves that terrifying word "compromise." Not until they have achieved that will Episcopalians be in a position to do more than make polite gestures towards any kind of Christian unity. Until they do achieve that, there will be some unchristian and untutored people who will entertain doubts whether Episcopalians have earned the right to call themselves Christians.

For Church Schools

HOW can we improve the worship experiences in our primary departments is a country-wide question. No one has the complete answer to this difficulty. Yet because the group worship of little children is so essential and determinative we should be quick to share whatever procedures we have found of value.

The following suggestions have been found helpful in several different localities:

(1) We ought to keep in mind these children, six-year-olds to eight-year-olds, have little capacity to grasp abstract language. Sometimes these children are given symbolic language and told "you will need it by-and-by." The fact is they are not interested in the indefinite by-and-by; their time sense is poor; they are interested in the now, and if the now is dreary, their interest will lag. This means the postponing of so-called simplified forms of Morning Prayer and frequent uses of the Offices of Instruction. They are not ready for such experiences.

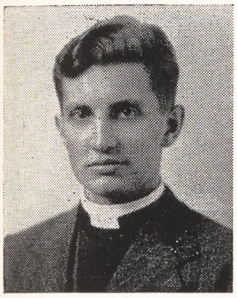
(2) We should aim to teach less in our worship services and thus teach what we do teach better. In our eagerness to transmit the faith our tendency has been to go too fast and to want to give them too much. Think of the forms and content we expose these little children to—God, Christ, Jesus, Spirit, the Bible, Baptism, The Ten Commandments, Nature, the Christian year, Missions, etc. Some of us select a few facts about these truths, and repeat them over and over, giving the children chances to ask questions and to carry into action their new insights.

(3) We should endeavor to offer all prayers to God the Father. Of course this is not always easy to arrange. Still we need to often recall that these little ones become more confused than is necessary if prayers are offered sometimes to God, then Christ, then Jesus, then Lord and Saviour. Let us remember we do not lose anything valuable here if we wait until they are ready for a growing understanding of God's triune nature.

(4) We should afford opportunity for intelligent giving in their worship services. "What happens to your money after it is taken from the altar?" makes a good start here. They must be given chances for conversation whereby they can see what their money pays for in light, heat, candles, broken windows, and other budget items. This kind of giving will tend to make them feel they have a responsible part in promoting the fellowship and purpose of the Church.

(5) We should not forget that these children are becoming less self-centered and more sympathetic and desirous of getting along with other children. This means they are ready to listen to stories setting forth simple social problems, like those in Now we are going to school, Adams, Cloister Press. For if we make children, in less fortunate circumstances, real to them, then they are more than anxious to help.

(6) We should surely see that since these children in grades one and two can neither read or write as yet very well, therefore we shall be wise to plan from time to time for these groups to dictate a prayer or simple litany which can be used later in their worship. This objective is sound for it aims to change their sheer love of activity into significant worship experience.



These thoughts will perhaps suggest others to you for your teachers meetings. If there is reverent, careful, sustained planning there you can improve any primary worship service.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

ACCORDING to one newspaper report, General Eisenhower has stated that the movie dramatization of Ernie Pyle's Pulitzer prize-winning columns on fighting Americans, The Story of G.I. Joe, is the best war film he has ever seen, topping even What Price Glory. I'm inclined to say that General Ike, on this issue, as on so many, is right. The Story of G.I. Joe is the best and most realistic treatment of the combat phase of modern warfare that has come out of any commercial studio. If it were to be shown with the army film, San Pietro, as a "rider," any civilian should know what a soul-shattering, body-killing business war really is—and there would be a strong possibility that he would come out of the theater with a synthetic case of battle fatigue.

The Story of G.I. Joe, in essence, traces the development of Co. C, 18th Infantry, from the time its men suffer a crushing defeat as green troops in Tunisia to the day they help smash open the gate to Rome at Monte Cassino. The major portion of the picture deals with the weeks that the infantry is bogged down before St. Benedict's monastery, which is being used as a look-out and artillery station by the Nazis, waiting for the high command to make up its mind whether or not it would be expedient to bomb the historic building. During that time, Co. C. is bivouacked in muddy fox-holes, which are pin-pointed by the German guns, and are engaged only in routine patrols—which are anything but "routine," since half of each patrol never comes back.

I remember that at the time of the bombing of Monte Cassino many Church people were shocked and slightly out-raged that the high command should make such a decision. The Story of G.I. Joe, I think, shows that the only mistake made by the high command was in not opening an offensive against Monte Cassino sooner. Certainly, the balance sheet between human lives and the historic edifice is heavily weighted on the side of the former.

The picture, as directed by William Wellman, who made The Ox-Bow Incident three years ago, contains a number of really fine scenes: the men in their pup-tents on the African desert listening to the German radio playing jazz records and giving them "inside dope" on their own strength and movements; the men in their muddy dugouts on Christmas eating soggy beans while the radio announcer from America cheers-up the home-front by telling it how well the fighting men are being fed on that joyous holiday; the shock and terror of the men when they see their beloved captain being brought into camp draped over the back of a mule. In all the scenes the emphasis is on the men who fought the war on foot—and the film is truly a worthy tribute.

By and large the picture features little-known actors. The part of Captain Bill Walker, the tough, human and conscientious commandant, is played by Robert Mitchum, who in his other appearances has been a cowboy star. Sergeant Warniki, who goes crazy with battle fatigue, is acted excellently by Freddie Steele, a former prize-fighter, and Private Dondaro, played by a true new-comer, Wally Cassell, is a fighting man by day and a Romeo by night. The part of Ernie Pyle, which is wisely kept subordinate throughout the film, is handled by Burgess Meredith who has long been one of our better actors. But, in back of these leading players, are the American G. I.'s who are continually caught in the camera lens in brief and sharp portraits and it is truly surprising the way these men of the army handle their brief lines. It is they who put much of the punch in the film.

Certainly, The Story of G. I. Joe could be called a great anti-war picture, since it ruthlessly points out the cost in human souls. As I was coming out of the theater, a soldier in back of me murmured to his girl: "God, I wish they would show that to everybody in this country at least once every three years." The soldier was wearing campaign ribbons from Africa and Europe. I think that he had a very good idea.

Yet in a recent number of the newspaper PM, John McManus announces that a number of films on the war are being held up by commercial red-tape because the timid U. S. film exhibitors think that the public doesn't want any more war in its movies. Among these films is "The Story of G. I. Joe"—the film that is both a tribute to our fighting men and an excellent sermon on war.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Revisers Beware!

THE structural design of the liturgy is a species of folk art whose order and integrity of form calls for sympathetic respect from all would-be revisers. It is seldom wise to tamper with any work of art, whether by adaptation, alteration, "pious restoration," or by just plain snipping off the rough edges. To attempt this sort of recasting and renovation as an appeasement to philistine prejudice is almost certain to do irredeemable damage. The Protestant Reformers of the sixteenth century had a perfect right and a plain duty to restore the traditional Western Mass to its pristine purity of doctrine by removing the meretricious accretions of the Middle Ages. But when Archbishop Cranmer, in the Second Prayer Book of 1552, disturbed the artistic form of the liturgy, he was indulging in a dangerous operation. Fortunately for us he was too sensitive a liturgist to destroy any essential elements in the design. He did not leave behind him a mutilated rite, as did his Continental contemporaries; but he did bequeath to us a somewhat disordered one.

Take, for example, the position of the Gloria in excelsis. In the 1552 book it was moved from its original place after the Kyrie. On the face of it, it might seem a happy idea to employ it as a part of the post-communion thanksgiving. But in actual practice nearly every performance of it in this post-climactic spot is tedious. Not that it is monotonous (like the fashion of some who invariably substitute "O Saving Victim"); it is simply too long. Psychologically all that is needed after Communion is a brief thanksgiving and dismissal. The Gloria adds nothing essential to our very apt prayer of "thanks after meals." In fact, it interrupts the quite logical relation between the petition for the assistance of grace to "do all such good works as thou hast prepared for us to walk in" and the bestowal of the blessing of peace passing understanding to keep our "hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God, and of his Son." And what shall we say of the habit of some celebrants (and choirmasters) who without justification of either tradition or rubric insert before the Blessing further intercessions, devotions, canticles and songs? The liturgy makes full provision for all these goodly things in their proper places.

It is often charged that Cranmer removed the Gloria from its traditional place in line with other rearrangements he make in the service in order to make the liturgy acceptable to the Puritans and unacceptable to the conservatives, many of whom found the 1549 rite close enough in order and spirit to the old Mass. It is possible, however, that he made this particular change as a consequence of his misunderstanding of the true meaning of the Kyrie. Like the medievalists he considered it penitential in tone; hence his adaptation of it as a penitential response to the Commandments. Used as such it serves as a logical link between the Law of the Old Covenant, which we acknowledge to have broken, and the Grace of the New Testament which can restore us to communion with God only if we repent. The sequence of thought and feeling here is straightforward and makes sense. To insert into it a hymn of praise such as the Gloria disturbs the logic and rhythm and makes nonsense. Consequently if we are to restore the Gloria to its early position in the liturgy, we must necessarily restore the Kyrie to its original function and meaning.

Kyrie eleison ("Lord, have mercy") was used by the ancient Greeks in both sacred and secular ceremonies, in both paganism and Christianity, as an acclamation by the assembled people of the sovereign who was the center of attention in whatever ritual and ceremony was going on. It was at once a huzza and an entreaty—an acknowledgement of lordship and a hope of its favor and help. The Hebrew word Hosannah offers an interesting parallel in meaning and usage. Its modern vernacular equivalent would be something like "God Bless America." The Kyrie was shouted by Christians in religious processions and litanies: and when introduced in the Roman liturgy, probably about the fifth century—with or without accompaniment of a litany it is impossible to say with certainty—it served as the solemn but jubilant greeting and acclamation by clergy and people of the Lord who would propitiously meet with them in His temple. The introduction of the Gloria in excelsis, immediately after the Kyrie, was only the extension of this outburst of exultant laudation on particularly festal occasions. It was known as the "great doxology"; its text is a collection of customary acclamations—but we must hold over until another time an analysis of its several parts. Thus Kyrie and Gloria together form, not a penitential, but a laudatory beginning of the Roman rite. Their combined effect is exactly described by a comment of a certain composer upon the opening of Brahms' First Symphony: "It comes in like God Almighty!"

Army Chaplain Declares Church Lacks Any Program

Gordon Reese Finds the Church Interested In Buildings with No Concern for People

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Houston, Texas:—The Rev. Gordon Reese, recently returned from Hawaii where he represented the army and navy commission, stated in an address here that the Churches are mainly concerned with building programs rather than rehabilitation programs.

"I see a wonderful lot of back-patting over the fact that the Church debt has been paid during the war; that a Sunday school building is to be added to the main church; that elevators to the Sunday school rooms are going to be installed; that everything is going to be air-conditioned. But where are the rehabilitation programs for service men? I don't hear of any."

His indignation over the program of the Church—or the lack of one—was forcefully expressed with the remark that what he has seen and heard in his travels throughout the country "burned me up."

Missionaries Meet

New York: — Fifty missionaries to China held a two-day meeting at St. Faith's House, September 11-12, with Bishop Roberts of Shanghai as chairman. Bishop Craighill of Anking was also present. The purpose was to re-orient the missionaries to the new situation in China prior to their return to that field. No definite plans have been made for this but it is possible that some may be able to return soon. Addressing the group were the Rev. J. W. Decker of the International Missionary Council and the Rev. J. Thayer Addison, vice-president of the National Council.

Peacetime Chaplains

Washington: — Rear Admiral William H. Miller, chief of navy chaplains, has stated that about 500 permanent chaplains will be required for the postwar navy. This is about five times as many as the navy had in 1939. The new figure is based on estimates that the navy will have a minimum postwar strength of a half million officers and men. Admiral Miller stated that a "goodly number" of reserve officers among the chaplains desire to remain in the regular navy and he figures on little difficulty in obtaining all the chaplains needed for many years to come.

Professor Dies

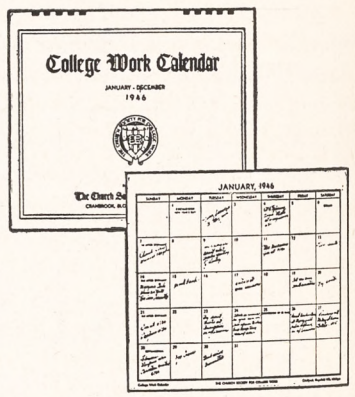
Cambridge, Mass.: — The Rev. James A. Muller, for many years on the faculty of the Episcopal Theological School, died on September 5th after a brief illness. The funeral service was held in the school chapel on the 8th with Bishop Sherrill conducting, assisted by Dean Taylor. (See Editorial.)

New Secretary

New York: — The Rev. Thomas Barrett, rector of Our Saviour, Akron, and formerly chaplain at Kenyon College, has been appointed secretary of the National Council's division of college work.

Personnel Chairmen

New York: — Personnel chairmen from northeastern dioceses held a conference at Windhom House on September 13 to discuss enlisting women for social work, nursing, teaching, parish work, college work, rural work. Leaders were 281 secretaries: Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, head of the Auxiliary; Frances Young, educational department; Clifford L. Samuelson, rural work secretary; Edith Balmford, Church mission of Help; Helen Turnbull, head of Windham House; Ellen Gammack, personnel secretary of the Auxiliary; Gloria Wysner of the Foreign Missions Conference.



Martin Niemoeller

Frankfort, Germany (wireless to RNS): — Pastor Martin Niemoeller has denied charges made abroad that his attempt to enlist in the German navy while a prisoner was inspired by loyalty to the Hitler regime. He stated that he wanted to get free so he could take part in the plot against Hitler which he believed was being engineered by German officers and others. "None of my friends," Niemoeller stated, "understand the press campaign against me as they all know what my motivation was." (It is nevertheless a fact that Niemoeller stated to a group of Americans in 1937, several days before his arrest that he would gladly serve in the German navy if called upon to do so by Hitler.—Ed.)

Niemoeller admitted however that criticism of the traditional Lutheran teaching concerning the supreme authority of the state was justified. "I was raised a Lutheran and did not realize that the traditional Lutheran theology regarding the state was wrong until recently during a conference of Congressional Church leaders at Treysa. This was, for me, a most interesting discovery. I believe Lutheran teaching can be changed on this point. Lutherans can learn and they must choose democracy as the best form of government."

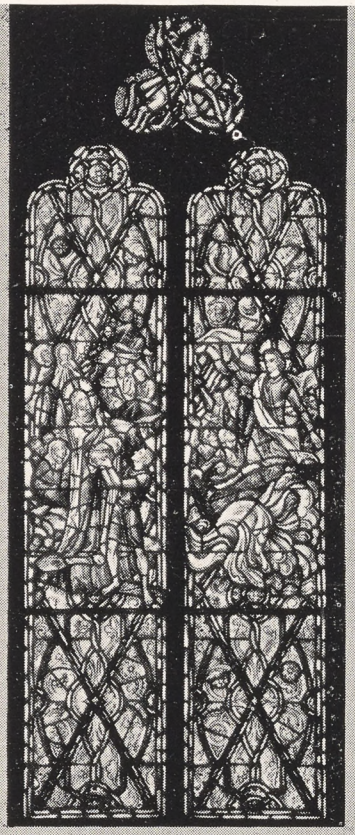
At the same time Ernest Zaugg, reporter for Religious News Service, sends information by wireless that the task of contacting Churches abroad has been entrusted to Niemoeller in his capacity as vice chairman of the 12-man provisional council named to direct activities of the new Evangelical Church of Germany. He came out openly in favor of a democratic form of government in Germany as opposed to totalitarianism. He said: "A government which guarantees liberties and fundamental rights is better than one which does not. Nor is this a matter of indifference for the Church." He ended the interview by calling upon Churches throughout the world to help prevent the threatened reduction of Germany's population by starvation during the coming winter. (See editorial, The Church in Germany, WITNESS, August 9).

Hotel Services

Eagles Mere, Pa.: — The Rev. William Porkess, rector of St. Stephen's, Wilkinsburg, Pa., spent August at a hotel at this mountain resort owned and managed by Quakers. He went for a quiet rest, away from the usual routine of parochial life. But a rather unusual thing happened. He was invited by the Quakers to conduct a 15 minute devotion each day immediately after breakfast. So he gave five minutes of the time each day to a meditation—28 successive talks while on his vacation. "To me it was a home-missionary privilege," said the rector, "even if I was on my vacation. And it was a rather unusual thing for Quakers to extend such an invitation to an Episcopalian."



To Direct Trips

Gladstone, N. J.: — Col. Arthur F. Cosby, former New York attorney and veteran of three wars, is to direct the field-trip program at St. Bernard's School. The plans provide for a comprehensive series of trips to industrial plants, farms, welfare and other agencies, aimed at a greater understanding of American life and the meaning of democracy.

Record Membership

New York:—Church membership in the United States totals 72,492,669 according to the Federal Council of Churches. It is a figure arrived at from reports of 256 religious bodies. It represents 52.5 per cent of the population, now estimated by the bureau of census at slightly over 138 million. Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations reported 44 million; Roman Catholic, 23 million; Jewish congregations, four and a half million. Methodists have over eight million; Southern Baptists, five and a half million and Northern Baptists, four million. The Episcopal Church is down for two and a quarter million, with the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. having slightly less.

Benson Y. Landis, editor of the year book presenting the figures, warned against confusing official reports of membership with reports of attendance, pointing out that these figures imply nothing as to people's activities or financial support.

THE REV. HAROLD C. GOSNELL
Chaplain in the U. S. Navy

Receiving THE WITNESS has been a real pleasure and privilege out in these Pacific wilds. Usually a bishop has been consecrated by the time that I get the copy telling of his election, for magazines don't filter through the mail sacks very rapidly, but at least I'll have a general idea when I get home of who is where! Out here we more or less lose our Church identity and the ties with dear old Pecusa are all too rare, especially when for sixteen or eighteen months you have been the only Episcopalian chaplain on any island or ship on which you have been. Therefore the news of the Church at home and abroad which I have gotten from THE WITNESS has been doubly pleasurable and valuable. Thanks a lot!

HENRY I. BOWLES
Layman of Richmond, Va.

Interesting as an expression of the English Church attitude towards one of our almost fundamental social difficulties is the short bit by Canon Guy Rogers which recently appeared in THE WITNESS. To me the pacifist is a psychological problem, and should be treated as such. I recall, as a boy, being in a boat off the Maine coast, when a male passenger nearly wrecked the craft through fear of "shipwreck," and afterwards boasted to his friends how he succeeded in saving the group in the face of tremendous opposition. Annals of the war are filled with this sort of thing on the part of the "conscientious objector" so-called, really a species of fear or inferiority complex. I presume they are psychologically ill, and involve many angles of mental disease. I am glad to see the good Canon is able to take such a wholesome attitude towards this human phenomenon.

As an editor, I am besieged with requests to eliminate Westbrook Pegler from my columns. I wrote one person recently the story of the mosquito, without which a good man would die of dry rot. I included these lines:

The poor weak-minded Moron,
He does the best he can.
I'd like to be a Moron.
Good Lord! perhaps I am.

So perhaps infinite wisdom and infinite patience are needed not only with our Morons, but with ourselves.

THE REV. HOWARD HARPER
Rector of St. Paul's, Jackson, Mich.

For some time I have been interested in the growing interest on the part of some of our clergy in the incorporation of the psychoanalytic philosophy into pastoral counselling. Two facts within my own observation cause me to believe that the clergy in general must become acquainted with modern methods of helping troubled people discover the hidden and unconscious sources of their maladjustments to life: 1. Having used depth-psychology methods myself over the last two years I have demonstrated to my own satisfaction that such methods provide a new channel of God's grace, and one of hitherto unsuspected potentiality. 2. Psychiatrists and psychoanalysts in their therapy stop short of the Christian adjustment to life, which, as we believe, is the only realistic, and therefore the only permanently satisfactory, adjustment.

Because of these two facts I have been hopeful that a group of clergymen with the proper interest and experience could be brought together under adequate professional leadership for a conference, the purpose of which would be at least the beginning of some definitive statements on 1. the relationship of the Christian ministry to mental hygiene, and 2. the adaptation of psychotherapeutic techniques to the pastoral relationship.

It is unfortunate that the Church is not equipped to encourage the incipient gropings of those of us who have this sort of interest and help us to get together and progress beyond the groping stage.

I am writing this to you in the hope that if you see fit to publish it, it will strike a response among enough of your readers that we may constitute ourselves an informal group within the Church and proceed to some organized pioneering in this field.

I am a little skeptical about a Mrs. John Gardner who with her husband claims to be a circus performer and who asked me for financial aid. I think she is the same red-headed woman who touched me for money in Odessa five years ago. Will you kindly ask any of the clergy who have been approached by her to communicate with me. Mrs. Gardner and her husband and six children are touring the country in a dilapidated 1934 Packard sedan bearing a Nebraska license. I want to do what I can to stamp out rackets among the gullible clergy.

The Church of the Advent

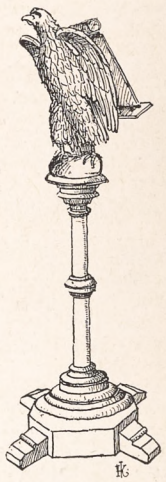
The history of the Parish of the Advent in Boston for its first one hundred years is now available in book form.

This history furnishes an interesting story of the struggle, in a community with Puritan traditions, to establish a church with seats free for all and with daily services in which the spirit and the religion of the Prayer Book should be fully set forth.

Equally interesting is the later development of the parish, and its attainment of a position of influence in the diocese. The progress of the parish during the location of the church in three different buildings,—the erection of the present church, and the enlarging of the parish house are told in detail.



The new volume has 220 pages and 55 illustrations, most of them full-page half-tones. These pictures add to the interest of the subject matter and help to give the atmosphere surrounding the development of the Parish of the Advent through its first hundred years.

The book is handsomely bound in washable pyroxylin cloth. The price is $1.75 postpaid.

European Churches Face Big Reconstruction Task

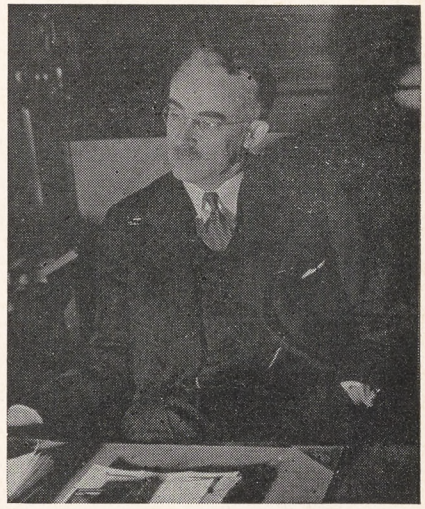
The Protestant Church on the Continent Suffered a Loss of a Billion and a Half

By Erik Modean

New York (RNS):—Few church bells ring in Europe today. Before they peal again in all their former glory, the churches face a stupendous program of reconstruction out of the ruins of World War II. Billions of dollars, and many years of labor, will be necessary to rebuild and restore the thousands of churches destroyed or damaged during the last five years. Complete and accurate figures are not as yet available on the total losses suffered by the churches, but present information is sufficient to reveal the staggering task ahead in repairing the ravages of war.

In a way, the church bells are symbolic. Nazism had no use for the church in its ideology. But it had use for church bells. As Germany invaded one country after another, thousands of bells were confiscated from belfries throughout Europe, to be melted down into munitions for the Nazi war machine. In Belgium alone, it is reported that 3,692 bells were stolen by the Germans. Many more were buried by Belgian patriots to prevent their seizure. Not all the bells, however, were used by the Nazis. They didn't have time, in the face of the rapid advance of the Allies. Only recently, British authorities discovered more than 800 bells, including some famous carillons taken from the Netherlands and Belgium.

As the tempo of aerial warfare intensified, the churches lost not only their bells but their buildings as well. In England 4,000 historic churches were damaged, and 2,800 destroyed. France reported nearly 5,000 churches destroyed between 1939 and 1945. In Greece the total was put at 1,000.



A typical example is found in the Netherlands Reformed Church, one of the smaller denominations. Throughout Holland, 151 churches, 90 rectories, and 30 other buildings were completely destroyed. These figures do not include all the damage that is repairable, and was caused by artillery fire and inundation. In addition, many ministers lost their houses, their property, their libraries, and even their gowns.

Of Britain's famed cathedrals, Exeter, one of the finest examples of Middle Gothic architecture, was the most badly damaged, according to Francis H. Taylor, director of the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art, and a member of the American commission for the protection and salvage of artistic and historic monuments in war areas. Three high explosives dropped nearby rocked Canterbury Cathedral, but did not cause serious damage. However, British historians feel the blast may have threatened its life expectancy. Wells Catheral received a direct hit, but damage was not as great as might be expected, it was reported. All the great Christopher Wren churches in London were seriously damaged—St. Bridges, St. Giles Cripple Gate, St. Mary le Bow among them—and many have been reduced to rubble. St. James Piccadilly was destroyed by a bomb.

In France, all but one of the 25 famous cathedrals, chateaux and other historic buildings listed by the French government as part of the "cultural heritage of France" are either intact or only slightly damaged. Most seriously damaged church edifice was Rouen Cathedral, which, however, was found to have suffered far less from the 1944 Allied bombardment than Rheins Cathedral, which was exposed to German attack in the last war. The medieval cathedrals of Chartres, Amiens, Beauvais, Leon, Rheims, and Notre Dame in Paris, as well as the famous Sainte Chapelle in Paris, have remained safe and virtually unscarred. Strassbourg Cathedral was hit by two bombs in August of 1944 but the damage is insignificant.

In Italy, there was relatively little church destruction. Outside the reported damage to the Church of San Lorenzo, Rome remains untouched. Two churches of small artistic significance were wrecked in Siena. At Assisi, the convent famed for its stained glass windows was intact. At Viterbo, the Cathedral of the Duomo escaped lightly.

According to Robbins W. Barstow, director of the commission for

The Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert is at present in Europe to aid in the plans of the World Council for the rebuilding of Churches World Council service of the American committee for the World Council of Churches, Protestant churches on the continent suffered an estimated loss of $1,450,000,000.

"The best figures we have been able to secure give us roughly 75,000 Protestant churches in Continental Europe," Barstow said, and added: "For a guess, let us assume that 20,000 are undamaged; 20,000 are lightly damaged and repairable at $10,000 each or $200,000,000; 20,000 are heavily damaged and repairable at $25,000 each or $500,000,000; 15,000 are totally destroyed and replaceable at $50,000 each or $75,000,000. That gives us $1,450,000,000."

While churches in the United States, and in other countries, will contribute millions to postwar relief and reconstruction in Europe, these funds will not be used to restore physical property.

RUSSIAN ORTHODOX OF CHINA

New York (RNS):—Russian Orthodox leaders are certainly busy people. They have ended schisms in most of the countries of Europe and the near east. It is now reported that the schism between the Orthodox Churches of Manchuria and China and the Moscow Patriarchiate has been ended. This fact was disclosed by Archbishop Alexei of Yaroslav and Rostov who is now in the United States to bring about the reunion of the Orthodox Churches of the Americas with Moscow.

CHAPLAIN CASUALTIES REPORTED

Washington: — Casualties among army chaplains totalled 397 as of August 31, it was reported by Brig. Gen. Luther D. Miller, chief of chaplains. The list of 138 deaths consists of 76 killed in action, including 12 lost in the sinking of Japanese prison ships, and one killed during the bombing in Germany and 62 non-battle fatalities, including one who died of disease in a Japanese prison camp. In addition 216 chaplains have been wounded in action. Chaplain Miller, an Episcopalian, also announces that 1,326 decorations had been awarded to 1,038 chaplains.

CATHOLIC MONARCHY PLAN DENIED

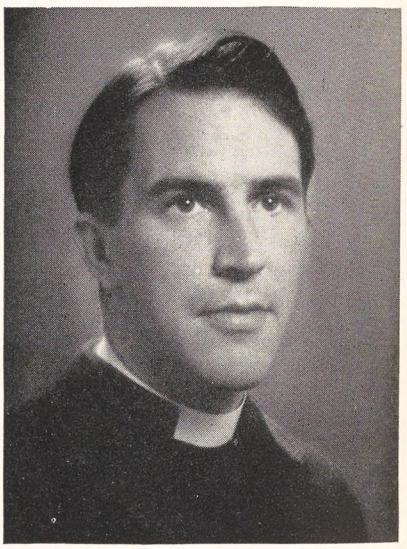
Rome (wireless to RNS): — Vatican authorities have denied rumors that the Holy See is backing plans for a Roman Catholic monarchy that will embrace Austria, Bavaria and North and South Tyrol. One of the chief obstacles to such a proposal, officials stated, is the Soviet occupation of the areas in question which makes it impossible to foresee future developments. The reports here mention Heinrich of Bavaria and Otto of Hapsburg as the two most likely candidates for a new Catholic throne. Otto has been a frequent visitor to the Vatican but he is not supported by the Holy See. Creation of such a monarchy is said to be favored principally by Cardinal Innitzer of Austria, but it is said that he has not been given encouragement by the Vatican.

FULL EMPLOYMENT IS URGED

Red Bank, N. J.:—Mr. Spencer Miller Jr., road commissioner of New Jersey and formerly the consultant on industry of the National Council, was the top speaker at a mass meeting held here September 19th in support of full employment. The meeting was sponsored by a citizens committee and had the backing of trade unions, the League of Women Voters, churches and other groups. Canon Robert Smith, head of social service of the diocese, was the chairman. Resolutions were passed and sent to Congressmen and Senators urging support of a full employment program. A continuation committee was also appointed.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY RENOVATION

London (wireless to RNS): — A fund of 20,000 pounds, raised three years ago as a memorial to those who fell in the Battle of Britain in 1940, is to be used to renovate and furnish the eastermost chapel of Westminster Abbey. The chapel is connected with two earlier battles of Britain, the War of the Roses and the Civil War. It was originally intended to receive the remains of Henry VI, murdered in 1471, and Cromwell's body rested there for a year before being taken up and hung at Tyburn.



A circular hole in the chapel's wall, made by fragments of a bomb which fell in the old palace yard, commemorates the 1940 battle and will be preserved when the chapel is restored.

Of the 99 dioceses and districts 79 have paid the amount due and 5 have paid their full expectation for the year."

Many Problems Being Raised By Closing of Centers

Authority on Problems Presents Solutions Of the Difficulties of Japanese-Americans

My Daisuke Kitagawa

Minneapolis: — The War Relocation Authority has announced that all the relocation centers shall be closed according to a schedule which closed the last one on December 15th. As a matter of principle, this is good. The sooner the camps cease to be necessary, the better it is both for the Japanese Americans and for the United States. But actually the closure of the camps presents another complex problem.

When Japanese Americans of the West Coast were put into relocation centers, these centers were deemed of utmost necessity for various reasons: 1. The majority of evacuees were unable to find places to go to by themselves, nor could they financially afford to move eastward, thus making it necessary for the government to move them collectively out of the coastal area. And before the evacuees could re-establish themselves individually, the government had to subsidize them collectively.

2. The general public of the United States was not quite ready to accept evacuees freely into different communities for a long time. It is natural for the public to be suspicious of the people whom the federal government by its decree had to order to vacate the coastal area which was of strategic importance from the military standpoint.

Now, after more than three years since the first group of Japanese Americans were evacuated, the above-mentioned two reasons are no longer valid, at least categorically speaking, because since the beginning of this year, the West Coast has been re-opened to Japanese Americans and they can return to their former homes and communities any time they wish, and furthermore the public in the rest of the United States is fairly well enlightened as to the status of Japanese American evacuees so that they may be reasonably assured of a fair acceptance no matter where they go. Therefore, let it be repeated, categorically speaking there is no longer a need for relocation centers.

But in the course of the past three years the situation has greatly changed on the part of the evacuees, which makes the liquidation of relocation centers extremely difficult and makes it almost unfair.

By the end of 1944, roughly 60,000, or slightly more than one-half of the total number of the evacuees, had been relocated outside of the restricted West Coast area. They left the camps because they were of the kind that could not stand the camp life and also could afford to take the risk of leaving the camp. They are by and large young and vigorous, American citizens with the English language as their mother tongue, educated in American schools, trained or skilled in something or another to make themselves useful and employable in wartime America, and furthermore accustomed to the American way of life. The simple fact that they are young is of basic importance, for it means that readjustment to different climates, new types of employment, new communities, etc., could be made relatively easy. Besides, they did not have too many dependents for the largest majority of them were single men and women. Even those who were married did not have too large families. For them to re-establish themselves was not too difficult.

After those who are relocatable in the above-outlined sense have left the camps, we find still remaining there the aged folk, children of minor age, and families with a large number of dependents. They look almost unrelocatable for various reasons. To be sure, they are remaining in the camps, not because they like it, but because they feel they could not do anything else.

Many of them had to sell their homes and other property at the time of evacuation for whatever they could get, which means they virtually lost all they had. Hence there is nothing they could go back to on the coast.

Unattached children of minor age are not accepted by any state other than their own home-state. Unless, therefore, their parents decide to relocate, children have to stay in the camps with their parents. Now many parents hesitate to leave the camps for fear that they may lose the last semblance of security. They are usually Japanese from Japan, thus legally enemy aliens, with a language handicap and a sense of political inferiority. They are afraid that the general public might maltreat them because of their enemy alien status. Most of them have sons who are now serving in the United States army. After having lost their material resources, their last resort of security is their grown-up sons and daughters who could earn a living for the entire family. When, however, those sons are called to the colors, the aged parents are incapable of making a living with a number of small children.

While the general public has been enlightened during the past three years concerning Japanese American evacuees, their status and nature, and has become more and more receptive, the evacuees in the camps, on account of the life of seclusion and confinement, have developed the most unfortunate sort of psychology — suspicion toward people at large. Indeed many of them have lost their faith in their fellow-men. They have convinced themselves that no one wants them in this country. This mental attitude cannot help but reflect on their children's character too. In a word, those who are now in relocation centers are more or less socially unfit sort of people. The longer they stay there, the worse they will grow in this respect. This alone is an important enough reason to close the relocation centers, but at the same time in it is found one of the most serious reasons why they are nearly unrelocatable!

No matter how hard the task is, the relocation centers must be put out of existence, but mere liquidation of camps will not do unless all the evacuees are adequately relocated. The basic principles of the Constitution of the United States demand it, not to mention the basic principle of Christianity. Furthermore, there are by this time approximately 20,000 Nisei soldiers serving this country, willing to give up even their lives for the United States. Their parents, brothers and sisters ought not to be deprived of their freedom and basic human rights if they are cheerfully and willingly fighting for the cause of democracy. Until the last evacuee could safely re-establish himself in a United States community, the United States cannot be fully free from the sin of double-crossing. It is thus not only for the sake of Japanese Americans but also for the United States herself that the relocation centers must be liquidated. Even the simple law of human social living makes it clear that it is to the benefit of the dominant group itself fully to accept minority groups rather than to exclude them or to accept them only half-heartedly.

At the liquidation of the relocation centers, however, it must be insisted that every evacuee be properly re-established, which means he is self-sustaining and fully participating in community and national life. If such is the ultimate aim of the War Relocation Authority program, and it surely is, the WRA cannot afford to violate the basic principle of democracy while it toils to achieve the aim. In other words, any coercive measure be entirely banned as far as the WRA is concerned. It cannot compel any community to make room for a certain number of evacuees unless the citizens of the community wish to do so. Neither can it force any evacuee to leave the relocation camp or to relocate at any given community unless the evacuee himself chooses to do so. Mass evacuation was conducted by compulsory measure. Resettlement must not be conducted either on a collective basis or by coercive methods.

In order that the resettlement program be conducted according to the principles of democracy, the following conditions are required: 1. Evacuees themselves must want to relocate. The desire and volition, not to mention the willingness, to relocate on the part of evacuees depend on the pronounced attitude toward Japanese Americans on the part of the general public. Isolated incidents of mis- or mal-treatment of returning evacuees on the West Coast, isolated cases of discrimination against resettlers in the field of employment or housing, and especially antagonistic attitudes toward the Nisei veterans—even if these are exceptions and not rules — are enough to make the evacuees lose their desire to live among United States citizens of other racial backgrounds.

2. United States citizens throughout the country ought to be aware of the share they have to do in terms of remedying the bad situation created by the mass evacuation. It is not enough for the rest of the country to blame the West Coast for having made such a blunder because it was not a local issue of the Pacific Coast but a national issue. Now that the loyalty of Japanese Americans has been fully tested, and their value to the country is more than proved, each and every community ought to be willing to accept a few Japanese American families into its midst.

3. Both among the evacuees in relocation centers and among the general public, civic-minded people should be outspoken enough to create public opinions which are favorable for our cause. One of the weaknesses of democracy is that only the crooked and reactionary are outspoken and organized and the decent and just are neither outspoken nor organized.

4. As a resourceless evacuee leaves his relocation camp and arrives in a strange community, there is a series of problems he has to face, and the well-established Christian citizens of the community could help him in many ways. Job-hunting and house-hunting are bad enough for a person who is just out of confinement. He has no bank credit, no friends or acquaintances in the city where he has just arrived. In case of an emergency sickness or some other misfortune, there is financial aid made available for him through the Federal Social Security fund, but it must be channelled through the local county welfare board where he is treated categorically the same as any other migrant. This is fine from the standpoint of racial equality, but his situation is so fundamentally different from that of other migrants that special consideration is almost imperative. He is not equipped to walk around governmment red tape. Well-informed civic leaders in the community should be called upon to step in and help.

Undoubtedly there are many other things the evacuee needs and the people of a community can do for him. It is neither possible nor necessary to state them in detail. Where there is genuine willingness to be of service to people in need, there must be ways and means to do so. May the Christian citizens of the United States be vigilant and alert to all sorts of opportunity that they may be helpful in carrying out the program of resettlement for Japanese American evacuees.

New York (RNS):—The need to continue a united ministry to former war workers in industrial housing areas during the reconversion period was stressed here by the Rev. Mark A. Dawber, head of the Home Missions Council.

"Because millions of former war plant workers now are without jobs, they are in greater need than before the war ended for pastoral counseling and the ministry of the church," Dawber said in appealing to home missions boards of Protestant churches for continued cooperation. "Then, too," he added, "many people in congested industrial areas now will have more time to go to church than they did when they were working long hours each week."

Calling on local churches near government housing projects and trailer camps to "take immediate steps to welcome these people into their churches," Dawber declared that "many of the former war workers will remain in the industrial centers, and local churches can help them to be integrated into the permanent community life."

Mr. Dawber announced that the Rev. Ronald F. Pielstick, the Council's field secretary in Chicago, has come to New York headquarters to direct the work of the reorganized industrial committee, which is assuming some of the functions of the recently disbanded commission on camp and defense communities.

URGE ACTION ON UNITY

Birmingham, Ala.:—The clergy of the diocese of Alabama, meeting in conference here Sept. 11, expressed great concern over the failure of the commission in unity to publish any report which might be studied between now and General Convention a year hence. A letter to that effect was adressed to Bishop Strider of West Virginia, chairman of the commission.

Reconstruction and Advance

THE accession of the British Labor Party to power in England has repeated an interesting phenomenon. The Tories, both in Britain and in the United States, headed for their storm cellars yelling, "Communist!" The Laborites, elated with the heady wine of an unexpectedly great victory, talked in terms of the millenium, then they settled down to a realistic facing of the facts under the sobering responsibility of power. They have not given up the millenium, but they have postponed it under the pressure of responsibility.

At some time in his career, every clergyman in our Church should serve a short term on the staff of our National Council. The writer has so served and counts it as one of the valuable experiences of his life, because for the first time he visited the whole Church and saw it as a whole under the pressure of responsibility. The latter fact is the important point.

Perhaps you have a particular line of interest in religious education and think that the National Council is hopelessly archaic in its methods. Perhaps you are keenly alive to our need for social and economic reformation and feel that the National Council is under the dominance of mid-Victorian Tories. Perhaps you hear the call of Christ to unify the fragments of his body and so help to heal a broken world and feel that our Church clings wilfully and stubbornly to a narrow sectarian way of life. And, perhaps, because of your different emphasis you are slow to respond to the call of the National Council.

Perhaps you are right in your point of view (and that is said seriously), but we are all under the primary responsibility of bearing witness in a broken world to the power and joy which spring from a fellowship bent upon obedience to Christ's command to make disciples of all nations. In the face of the world's need, our purpose and our effort must be worldwide. Once being gripped with that necessity, then we will be in a better position to wisely co-ordinate our varying emphases through the democratic processes provided for us in our constitutional Church.

"QUOTES"

THERE is small chance to nourish a true Christian life for those ground under the wheel of modern industrialism, or for those who must go out to slaughter other children of God in order to open markets or save investments or increase the material power and prestige of a nation. There is small chance for a true Christian life for those who hold wealth without responsibility or for those who see in unrest only a menace to privilege. The form which the social order takes must be one which helps rather than hinders the good life.

---Edward L. Parsons
Retired Bishop of California

It is because we feel keenly the need for a wholesome, worldwide witness on the part of our Church at this time, that we are glad to support the Reconstruction and Advance Fund and to urge the hearty co-operation of all our readers. Personally, we do not like the word Reconstruction because it seems to suggest restoring that which has been and doing so without reference to present day need and without reference to other Christian bodies. The handy, indefinite word "Advance" when used by the Episcopal Church creates in us an impish desire to ask: Whither? And the word Fund is frankly materialistic and detracts from the great spiritual surge that should well up within each one of us, a surge of gratitude to those men who shed their blood that we might have this opportunity to redeem our mistakes and build a new world,—one world. Of course, our offering must be of self in worldwide worship and service and not merely of our money.

Every Christian has a world responsibility and, in the face of the world's need, we must not be sticklers for words or for methods. Our tired people will drop back into intensified parochialism unless we keep their eyes and wills fixed upon tasks beyond their daily experience and strength. Also, we all need to realize what it will mean to our fellow Christians in other lands to have us gladly sacrifice so that they may begin their Christian work anew with proper equipment. We cannot hold back in the hope that some government agency like War Damage Insurance will cover the losses. For our own spiritual welfare we need to prove our fellowship with them by sharing their sacrificial life.

We are painfully aware of the moral, economic, social and spiritual problems here at home. They must not be neglected. They will not be neglected if we humble ourselves before the master as did the ten lepers of old. In their hour of great need, he said to them: "Go show yourselves to the priests." What did they whisper among themselves as they heard those words—"priestcraft, formalism, futile, old stuff?" We do not know what they whispered, but we do know that they obeyed and "as they went they were cleansed." We, too, have been given a command by the same master, "Go, make disciples of all nations." That is our primary responsibility which takes precedence above every question of method. As we obey that command with willing hearts our other problems will share in and be enriched by a greater outflow of God's grace. We urge wholehearted support of this project that God may use us in his way to build world peace.

Rather Hard to Figure

GOVERNMENT met the crisis of the thirties by artificially creating scarcity and by giving the millions of unemployed purchasing power, however inadequate, through a vast make-work program. Business generally condemned the program. "What sense is there in killing pigs, plowing under cotton and paying loafers to lean on shovels" was the conversation whenever two of the more prosperous of America's hundred and thirty million met. It was all the work of "professors," dreamers," "radicals," who somehow or other had gotten control of affairs. Then came armaments and after that war and with it full employment and production for "use"; the "use" being the laudable one of blasting our enemies out of a global war. Now that's all over.

So we enter the period of reconversion with Mr. Truman offering a program which is the opposite of the scarcity economy of the early thirties. He says stabilize prices, boost wages in order to provide increased purchasing power and then let's go ahead and have full production with full employment. It is his answer to the question that everyone asks: "If we can organize our economy on a full employment basis for war, why can't we do it for peace?" His message calls for full employment legislation; increased and extended unemployment compensation; boost minimum wages; expand the federal employment service; make FEPC permanent; provide public works and develop natural resources; provide federal aid for home building and slum clearance; protect small business; aid farmers through support of prices and crop insurance; give increased aid to returning servicemen; aid other countries in postwar reconstruction. It is a program for an economy of abundance, based on the theory that we can produce in abundance but only if we have the sense to distribute the goods by providing sufficient purchasing power.

To generalize about "business men" is as unfair as to generalize about any other group. But it is amazing to find pretty much the same people who denounced Roosevelt's scarcity economy now as bitterly opposed to Truman's program for abundance. Yet in the demands of these people for a hands-off policy they offer no proof that they have left behind them the beliefs and practices that caused the last depression. They still think, apparently, that they can pay workers and managers five cents for making an electric light bulb to sell for a dime and still have a market. In that direction lies stuffed warehouses, curtained production, unemployment and depression.

This is not to say that we believe Mr. Truman has all the answers. He makes no such claim. But it is his answer for our day to the demand of the people for a more secure, stable and prosperous way of life now that war is over. And it is well for us of the Church to remember that we encouraged people to make these demands. For proof it might be well for us all to re-read the report of the Commission on Reconstruction, headed by Bishop Scarlett, that was unanimously passed by both houses at the last General Convention. Or if you want to go further back ponder this from

MARRIAGE AND LAW

OUR LORD'S attitude towards the Old Testament is one of sovereign freedom but basic loyalty. Later Christians often (as we do) contrasted our Lord and the Old Testament, but it is very doubtful whether this represents real understanding or following of our Lord. To Him the Law was holy and good to be fulfilled, not abolished. To declare that Moses' provision for divorce was in itself wicked and wrong is going far beyond any attitude that Jesus was likely to take. Permanent monogamy is God's ideal. The true son who walks in his Father's way will be faithful to the wife of his youth and the faithful daughter loyal to her husband. But what of the woman who has had five husbands and is now living in sin, or the adulteress caught in the very act? That our Lord would have insisted that there was no way out for such people but to become celibate is very unlikely. The law mercifully makes provision for such in allowing the bill for divorcement. This provision is given for the hardness of men's hearts—but men's hearts are hard, and there is need for exactly this sort of provision. Is it possible then that our present system, with the state allowing considerable freedom of divorce and the Church rejecting marriage after divorce, is in harmony with the mind of Christ, that it preserves the tension of the ideal and at the same time makes practical provision for the sinner or the one caught in the penalties of sin?
—The Rev. William L. Griffin, Jr. Marriage in the Gospels, read before the Marriage Commission of the Diocese of Newark.

the Pastoral of the House of Bishops read in all the Churches in 1933: "Business and religion are intimately related; to divorce them issues in confusion and chaos. The Master's concern for the under-privileged and neglected folk was repeatedly manifested in his habit and teaching. That millions of the people of our country are denied the common necessities of life, that approximately one-third of our population is below the poverty level, that there is wide-spread want in a land that is abundantly productive, make evident the lamentable inadequacy of existing economic systems.

"With these conditions the Church is immediately and vitally concerned. If our present Christian civilization produced these ills then obviously it has departed from the right principles enunciated by Christ.

"No mere establishment of an old economic order will suffice. Christ demands a new order in which there shall be a more equitable distribution of material wealth, more certain assurance of security for the unemployed and aged, and, above all else, an order which shall substitute the motive of service for the motive of gain."

The Parish and the Press

by Frederick Ward Kates

Rector at Oswego, New York

PIETY just does not replace technic, which is perhaps the explanation of this modest attempt to suggest to the average, garden-variety parson some ways by which he can obtain better publicity for his parish and its activities.

The very word "publicity" is suspect in many minds. It conjures up thoughts of contemporary American advertising methods and practices. It brings to mind numerous instances when over-zealous press agents have rendered harm to a cause rather than advanced it. But, for all of this, publicity and a discreet and intelligent use of the press is an asset and an ally that an alert parish priest can ill afford to neglect.

Goodspeed's little volume of lectures on how the early Church availed itself to great advantage of the medium of the printed word . . . Christianity Goes To Press; the attention the Roman Church accords every agency of promotion and publicity; the success of the Methodist Church in our own country through its publications; the benefit to the Church achieved by Bishop Hobart's use of pamphlets and The Gospel Messenger in upstate New York, the Tractarians' use of the printed word for disseminating their ideas . . . these but suggest the merit and the value of a wise and intelligent use of publicity for the Church's advantage in these times.

The reason for Church publicity of whatever type it may be is simply to interest other people in what we believe to be supremely worthwhile—the Church, its work, its program. The parson with an evangelical, missionary spirit will use the three principal mediums of publicity—press, radio and motion-pictures—and so will his Church for this end: to tell all and everyone who can read, hear or see about the Church, what it is doing, where and why.

Our own Church is increasingly availing itself of these three mediums of spreading information and news. And all over the country individual parsons are making valuable use of radio-stations in their communities and local newspapers.

As we understand it, the aim of Church publicity, be it for the Church as a whole or for one parish in particular, is to reach two groups of people: 1—Parishioners, to inform them and to deepen their enthusiasm and loyalty; 2—Non-active parishioners and potential Churchmen, to attract and to enlist their active interest and support.

Too many people misunderstand the true nature of publicity. It is not propaganda in a direct sense, but of course it is indirectly. It is simply the art of making things known. It is the things the Church as a whole is doing or your particular parish that make news. And generally a good photograph is worth a half-column of words. Publicity in the newspaper press is free, it pleases your people, it helps your work. The question then is: How can a parson obtain more and better publicity?

We have found that the amount and quality of publicity a parish will get in the local press depends on four factors: use of available newspaper talent in the parish; the degree of cooperation between minister and newspapers; newspaper friendships and connections; and finally observance of newspaper rules and ethics.

Make Use of Available Talent

There is hardly a parish of any size which does not have on its rolls a parishioner who is qualified to help the rector with this part of the parish work. Some clergymen are fortunate enough to have a trained newspaperman in their parishes. If you have such a man or woman, make good use of him. Profit by his counsel. It's the way perhaps that this person can best serve the Church and help promote the Christian cause. If no experienced person is at hand, some parishioner can be trained to take care of this responsibility. It's a recommended way to make use of a man and win his active interest and support.

Co-operate with the Press

This suggestion is obviously just the better part of wisdom. If you wish news of your parish in the press, play ball with the local newspapermen.

May we offer several practical suggestions?

1. Be of help to your newspaper friends. Do what you can to satisfy all reasonable demands of the press for information. Assist them with names, proper titles, Church terminology. Remember reporters do not deliberately try to be inaccurate and wrong!

2. Anticipate the newspaperman's needs. For example if an important meeting is taking place in your parish, either personally or through a qualified deputy aid the reporter and photographer to get any legitimate pictures desired.

3. Regarding important statements, addresses, sermons: prepare in advance a carbon-copy or summary for the reporter. The newspaper account will then probably bear some resemblance to what you said or tried to say.

4. Let newspapers know they can rely on you as to accuracy of your stories and that you will notify them in advance of news or a picture they might want.

5. Cooperate with newspaper staffs, as suggested above. This will work to the mutual benefit and advantage of both parties.

6. Don't be so busy that you can't spare a few minutes for a reporter. Reporters can be useful allies and friends, and they are human beings!

Establish Newspaper-friendships

The main thing is to do it yourself. Make yourself known to the editor or owner of the small-town newspaper. Know the city-editor or church-news editor on a big-city newspaper staff. Such personal connections and friendships will prove invaluable.

The Church and the clergy have far better friends in the editorial rooms of the country's newspapers than they suspect.

Observe Ethics and Rules

Yes newspapers do have rules to be followed and most of them have a very clear-cut code of ethics. Observing them will help a parson secure the better publicity he desires.

1. Be prompt—ahead of time if possible. Find out the dead-line on your local newspaper and get your copy in well in advance. Early copy naturally gets preferential treatment.

2. Be courteous. Don't demand service, request it. The press holds the Church and the clergy in high esteem. Don't abuse this head-start and seek to maintain it.

3. In preparation of copy: Write out your story, don't phone it. Use one side of a sheet of paper only. Type if possible and use double-space. Legible long-hand is permissable but busy editors will not bother to decipher illegible manuscript. Conform with style usages of your local newspaper. Don't attempt to write head-lines or leads for your story. Be sure you have covered in your first paragraph—who, what, where, when, how. Paste caption for photograph on reverse of glossy print. Do not write with hard pencil on back of print. Have story complete in all details.

4. Names—first of all, use them—"names makes news." Secondly, spell them correctly, and, thirdly, use a man's name as he wishes it to be used. Everyone likes to see his name in print—correctly spelled.

5. Timeliness. Most events that happened 24-hours past are dead. Present and future events are of interest to the press.

6. Time your stories judiciously. Don't overwhelm a newspaper with a sudden batch of stories. Spread them out.

7. Release of stories. Release a story of general interest to all newspapers at the same time. Play no favorites. Be fair and on the-up-and-up with all alike. Don't conceal from one newspaper a story given to another. And even up the score soon as you can.

8. A few tips:

Don't manufacture stories.

Try to get printed in the Sunday edition. There is always space and Sunday papers are thoroughly read. Avoid Saturday editions if possible—they are least read of any day in the week.

Don't write your stories primarily as publicity. Publicity is simply news, not notices, and news that is primarily people and action.

Don't try to write literature. Emphasize the news.

Regarding unpleasant news or publicity. Face up to it and help to get it straightened out. Don't be unavailable, don't say you won't talk. By the way you handle such a matter, you will win or lose valuable newspaper connections.

What's News in a Parish?

It may be helpful, in conclusion, to enumerate what events are news, that we may be able to recognize news right under our noses.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

IT IS HARD to tell whether the British film companies generally produce more mature pictures than their American counterparts or whether we just receive the cream of the crop in this country.

Whatever it is, we have been receiving some really fine pictures from the United Kingdom during the past few years. Most of the pictures, naturally, have dealt with the war and, by and large, all of them have pictured the war as a turning-point in history, with great political, economic and moral connotations, and not simply a glorified game of "cops and robbers" played by a smirking Errol Flynn and an incredibly stupid bunch of Gestapo agents. The British films make one perfectly aware of the fact that war ends in some sort of peace and all of them have very positive statements to make on the kind of peace it should be. Generally, the American producers have deliberately shied away from getting out on any kind of limb whatsoever and as a result most of their war pictures have been completely innocuous.

A few of these British films are still being shown around the neighborhood houses and they are well worth the price of admission. Three, in particular, stand out: First there is Thunder Rock, in which Michael Redgrave and Barbara Mullen star, dealing with a disillusioned newspaper reporter who seeks to escape from the dirty mess of a world at war by hiding away in a light-house in the middle of Lake Michigan. There he creates a dream world of his own, peopled by characters who were drowned in the wreck of a lake steamer some eighty years before. Gradually, as these dream characters come to life and are filled out, they show the reporter exactly what social history is all about and the necessity for every single individual to play his part in the great task of social redemption.

Another picture which deals specifically with the post-war world is They Came to a City, starring John Clements and Googie Withers and written by J. B. Priestley. In this film, a group of individuals from various stations in life get lost in a mysterious fog and find an enchanted city which is the post-war world. Some of the group find the city very charming and much greater than anything they had ever known before, whereas others are appalled by it and seek to return to the world as they had always known it. The film contains some fine statements on the "why" of the war and gives dramatic body to the ideals called the Four Freedoms. Unfortunately, this picture is directed at too slow a tempo and tends to drag a great deal in spots but, nevertheless, it is superior to most of our American productions.

The third film is Colonel Blimp, based on an original story dealing with the great cartoon character created by David Low. The Colonel Blimp of the film isn't the reactionary fuddy-duddy of Mr. Low but he possesses enough of his characteristics to be recognizable. The film, which was produced by Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger, stars Roger Livesey, Anton Walbrook and Deborah Kerr and helps to trace the birth and growth of the Cliveden Set mentality which led to the great sell-out at Munich and which, likewise, fought to the finish under the great blitz of 1940. Colonel Blimp is pictured as a rather schezophrenic individual who can understand democracy and human decency when it touches himself but has no adequate point of reference when someone talks about applying the same principles to, say, African natives or Indians.

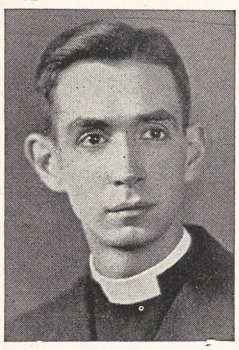
Other British films that are well worth seeing are Forty-Eight Hours, starring Leslie Banks and Elizabeth Allen; The Silver Fleet, starring Ralph Richardson; and The Way Ahead, starring David Niven. All of them are superior entertainment and feature fine camera work and really suspenseful plots. Forty-Eight Hours was written by my favorite detective-story writer, Graham Greene, author of The Ministry of Fear and The Confidential Agent, both of which have been made into movies by American companies.



Two British pictures that are now being made and should be well-worth waiting for are Anthony and Cleopatra, starring Claude Raines and Vivien Leigh and made from G. B. Shaw's play, and Mary Magdalene, which will star Ingrid Bergman and Joseph Cotten. From these movies, I should say that British film production, like British political thinking, is probably about twenty years ahead of the American brand.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Major Doxology of Church

WE SAID in a previous article that the Gloria in excelsis was introduced into the Eucharistic liturgy as an extension on festival days of the laudatory acclamation of Kyrie eleison. It is a hymn in four parts, some of which may be very ancient in liturgical use, but which received their present combined form sometime in the fourth century. All four parts are still to be found separately, however, in slightly altered versions, in various places of the Eastern liturgies. Such acclamations seem native to those rites. The nearest equivalent in our Prayer Book liturgy is the Gloria tibi and Laus Christe before and after the Gospel lesson is announced and read.

The first verse we recognize as the angels' song at the Nativity, a circumstance seized upon by medieval allegorists who saw here a symbolic announcement of the Savior's advent in the Sacrament. In actuality it is an old Messianic song of the Jews, variant forms of which may be found in Psalm 118:25 ff. and Luke 19:38. Combined with the other sections of the Gloria it serves as a fitting antiphon to the whole since it states the two chief themes of the hymn—and for that matter, of the whole liturgy itself—the praise of God's glory and His salvation of men through the Messiah-Redeemer. Our Prayer Book version follows the Greek threefold phrasing instead of the Latin twofold:

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good will.

New Testament scholars are about evenly divided as to which form is the original; but in either case the meaning is the same, the "good will" being of God. (We ought in any case to correct our Prayer Book translation to "in the highest.")

The second part is a series of brief acclamations of praise ending in a primitive doxology. A later modification moved the reference to the Holy Spirit to the last verse. The original form was:

1) O Lord,
Heavenly King,
God, Father
Almighty

2) O Lord,
Son Only-Begotten,
Jesus Christ, and Holy Spirit.

A hymn to Christ makes up the third part and builds itself around the Kyrie-acclamation. It addresses itself particularly to our Lord's passion and exaltation. One remarks at once a striking analogy in the literary structure of the Gloria with that of the Te Deum, which is contemporary in origin. A hymn to the Redeemer is directly attached to a hymn to the Trinity.

The last part of the Gloria is certainly related to the acclamation in the Eastern liturgy when the celebrant turns to the people just before communion and lifts up the consecrated bread, saying: "Holy things to the holy." And the people call back:

One holy,
One Lord Jesus Christ,
To the glory of God the Father.

This response recalls Philippians 2:11, the oldest Christian profession of faith: LORD JESUS MESSIAH! Compare also Acts 2:36 and I Corinthians 8:6.

The use of the Gloria in excelsis in the Mass is peculiar to the Roman rite and those liturgies, such as ours, which stem from it. The Easterners employ it in the daily office and call it "The Great Doxology" to distinguish it from the Gloria Patri, "The Little Doxology." Likewise the old Gallican rites used it in the daily office, interestingly enough, with the versicles at the end which are now attached to the Te Deum. Doubtless they were shifted to the Te Deum when the Gallican liturgies in the sixth and seventh centuries, under Roman influence, shifted the Gloria to the Mass. Now believe it or not, our American Prayer Book has the Gloria not only in the Holy Communion but in the daily office too. But we need more space to talk about this; so we shall take up at this point next time.

Rector Gathers His Evidence And Presents Problem

A Family of Circus Performers Have Been Panhandling Rectors for Great Many Years

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Avon, N. Y.:—We had a letter in Backfire last week, written by Rector Donald C. Ellwood of this town about being asked for help by a family representing themselves as Church people. Mr. Ellwood, who seems to be a determined indivdual with a great desire neither to be a sucker himself not allow others to be, has now come up with a further report on this family. The information came to him from people all over the country as a result of his letter to the Church papers.

Here is Mr. Ellwood's interesting report, to date, on Mr. and Mrs. John Gardner, circus performers, and their six children.

"These people asked me for help on August 15. The day before they had been in Binghampton; the next day they were in Batavia, and a week later in Cortland, N. Y. My mail shows that they have panhandled the clergy of the Episcopal Church in practically every state since 1938. Clergy from New York, Ohio, and Texas say they have been visited twice by them. The rector at St. Paul's, Norwalk, Conn., says that Mrs. Gardner or Gordon, as she sometimes calls herself, was baptized in that parish as Marion Buttery, although she told me her maiden name was Arlene Stoddard. He and a rector in North Dakota offered to give Mr. Gardner steady work, but he refused.

"When I first saw this couple in Odessa, N. Y., in 1938 they had 3 or 4 children. Now they have 6, all under ten. Most of the clergy are soft-hearted when they see the youngsters, and although they know the parents are fakes, they do something for the sake of the kids.

"Sunday I had a phone call from Cortland and that rector, after hearing what I knew about the family, said he had sent them to the welfare and told them to get out of town as soon as possible. Last night my call from Richmond, Va., came, and the clergyman had just sent the woman to the welfare five minutes before. He thought there might be a criminal charge against her, but when he found out it was just vagrancy he said he would do nothing except tell her to get out of the city as soon as possible.

"I firmly believe that those children should not be leading that kind of a life, and since the family invariably calls upon Episcopalians I think the Episcopal Church is, in a way, responsible for them. Certainly we cannot persist in 'shrugging them off,' as we are now. Perhaps the Norwalk, Conn., parish is their home parish and that is where they should stay, but the rector does not want to assume too much responsibility for them, although he writes, 'She knows perfectly well that aid can be obtained if she will settle in some one place, or that work is available without difficulty.' He has had letters from Philadelphia, Texas, Georgia, Indiana and other places where the Gardners have given his parish as reference.

"What I would like to do is to marshal all the evidence I obtain, present it in the Church press, and then be able to offer some advice to the next Episcopal clergyman the Gardners call upon. I think all of us clergy have failed the parents and the children during these last seven years when this family has literally been living off the Episcopal Church. Is there a charge upon which the family can be held by the police? Could the children be taken away from the parents if the parents do not settle down? Could the parents be forced to settle down and support the children and care for them properly? Whose responsibility are they?"

Selling a Lot

Marion, Va.: — Christ Church here recently paid off the indebtedness on the church and then decided to buy a lot on which to build a rectory. They didn't go out to get subscriptions. Instead they made a blue print of the lot, divided it up into 55 sections, and then sold the sections to members of the congregation.

"Wanna buy Section 26? Only cost you $13.63." The plan worked beautifully. Some "bought" one section, others bought two or more, and very soon the entire lot was "sold."

It was quite a scheme. And now one thinks of the possibilities that will arise if the people in Christ Church, Marion, decide to build the rectory the same way. "Who wants to build the chimney at the South

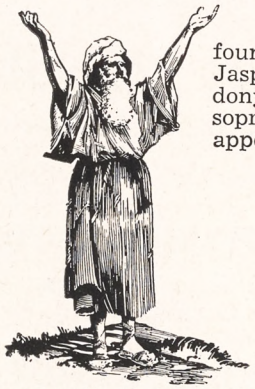
A report by Metropolitan Nikolai of Krutitsky said that this and other Church plans were discussed at the recent interview granted by Marshal Stalin, to an Orthodox delegation headed by Patriarch Alexei.

The Journal also contained a message from Exarch Stefan of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church, who headed a delegation to Moscow last month. Hailing the spirit of religion in Russia, he said, "we are hopeful that Russian mysticism will save the restless, egotistic world."

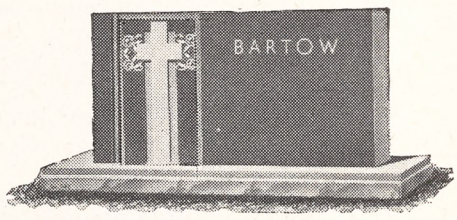
Movie of Chaplains

Washington: — A 17-minute film entitled "Navy Chaplain," suitable for use by all faiths, has been released and is available to religious groups, it was announced here by Rear Admiral W. N. Thomas, chief of chaplains of the navy. It is a 16-millimeter film, and is non-sectarian in appeal. Photographed on the campus of the College of William and Mary at Williamsburg, Va., and at a continental naval shore station, the film also combines pictures by combat photographers of chaplains at work overseas, Chaplain Thomas said.

Church Attitudes



Minneapolis (RNS):—Three out of every four adult Minnesotans regard themselves as official church members, but only two in every four say they attend religious services regularly.



These are findings of a state-wide survey of religious habits and attitudes conducted by the Minnesota Poll, a service maintained by the Minneapolis Star-Journal and Tribune. More than half of the state's residents think the churches are playing a proper role in the social betterment of their local communities, but three out of every 10 persons think the churches are not doing enough in this respect. Two out of every three Minnesotans with college educations do not believe the churches are doing enough, while very few persons with only grade school education share this view. Least criticism of all comes from the laboring classes. Most of the critics call for the church to work more, "in a modern way," with young people.

Seventy per cent of those interviewed feel the political activities of the churches, whatever it may be, is "about right." However, 83 per cent of Minnesota's residents are agreed that ministers should remain neutral in politics in the pulpit, but 73 per cent are convinced that a minister's views on public issues would not affect their votes, anyway. These views might "sometimes" influence, however, the votes of 13 per cent of the state's citizens.

Responses on the question of official church membership revealed that the age group of Minnesotans 21 to 29 years old contains proportionately more church officers—70 per cent—than does any other age group, whereas the group over 60 years old contains the least—58 per cent.

A similar breakdown by economic level shows that the top income group in the state has the largest percentage of church memberships—87 per cent—while the lowest income group has the smallest number—60 per cent.

The Lutheran Church was found to have the greatest numerical strength in Minnesota when residents were asked in which denomination they held official membership. The Roman Catholic Church was numerically second.

Hit by Flood

Fort Yukon, Alaska:—As soon as the airfield at Fort Yukon, Alaska, came out from under water so that planes could land, Bishop John B. Bentley went to inspect the damage to mission property caused by the recent flood. The breakup of ice in the Yukon sent the water in some places nineteen feet above normal level.

Damage to the Hudson Stuck Hospital was considerable, chiefly to the foundations of the building. Also the woodpiles were undermined and a lot of the year's invaluable fuel floated away. Extent of damage is not yet known but Bishop Bentley writes: "I think we need not make any special appeal for help. The hospital funds are in good shape, due to Dr. Lula Disosway's splendid administration of them, and my discretionary fund can come to the rescue. I feel sure that we can take care of this without making an appeal to the Church."

Water was four inches deep in the hospital. The staff stood in water to cook, and waded into the wards to serve the patients. There is no regular cook on the staff, and besides the hospital population, fifty completely stranded Indians had to be fed for several days. The flood in the basement stopped all pumps and motors, leaving the hospital without drinking water or sewage disposal. Quantities of heavy supplies had to be moved upstairs. "But for the long hard work of the entire staff our losses would have been much greater," the Bishop reports.

The Laity's Responsibility

When General Convention in 1940 requested every minister of the Church to present to his congregation yearly the subject of Theological Education, it said in effect:

"Let every member of the Church know that support of the training of the Church's leadership is his responsibility."

MRS. JOHN SWIFT
Methodist of Richmond, Va.

Whether we practice it or not we of the Methodist persuasion teach "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy." Bishop Johnson wanted to play on Sunday so he quit us and joined "the true Church." It would be a sacrilege I presume for a mere Methodist to now ask Brother Spofford why he left us, more the pity for us, and joined the "true Church." In any case it does not seem to have helped his outlook for his picture looks more like a candidate for the mourners bench than like a happy, conscience-free Churchman. However I can see that he is still receiving nourishment from the tap root of the original tree. So I read and enjoy his articles and enjoyed most especially the one about the hail storm (WITNESS, August 23). It is pretty hard to see how you all dodged the hail stones, coming so fast and furious and as big as baseballs, or to visualize the stringing of the bass on the pants legs. However it is a good Methodist yarn, so again it is a relief from war, peace conferences, doctrines, etc. Well, good luck to Brother Spofford, THE WITNESS and "the true Church."

ARTHUR LICHTENBERGER
Dean of the Cathedral, Newark

I was much impressed by Spofford's story of what New Hampshire can do in the way of hail storms (WITNESS, August 23), but as a loyal summer-time Vermonter I must set him right. Those were sizeable hailstones on Lake Sunapee, a creditable showing for New Hampshire, but does he know what happened west of the Connecticut on that same day?

It happens that I was out fishing with my father that very afternoon. I was four years old and was spending my second summer on Vermont trout streams. Having mastered the use of the worm, the wet fly and the streamer the previous summer, I was perfecting my technique with the dry fly. We saw the storm approaching from the east but we were prepared for it. At a moment's notice we had out our steel trench helmets which father had brought home as souvenirs from the Mexican War. Used to hail stones much larger than those that fell that day we went about our fishing unperturbed. The trout, unlike your sluggish and dull witted New Hampshire bass, knew what to do. In a flash they were safely hidden under stones, peacefully wagging their tails. The more agile ones made a game of it, dodging the stones that came crashing into the brook. It was great sport to drop a fly over a spot where an old trout was lying and watch him, through the crystal clear water found only in Vermont, as he rose with one eye on the hail stones unerringly to the Royal Coachman.

Then suddenly two tremendous stones roared by overhead, darkening the sun, which in Vermont always shines brightly through the fiercest hail storms, and landed with the roar of a B-29 up the hill. Depositing our rods on the bank, and taking off the burden of our creels, which by then were filled with the day's legal limit, save one, we scrambled up the hill into the lower meadow. There the first stone had landed and it had accomplished in one motion what father had dreamed of doing for years. He had always wanted a trout pond of his own, and there it was, scooped out to perfection. As the hail stone had come in at an angle it had shoved dirt, rocks, trees, like a gigantic bull-dozer compressing them into a solid and immoveable dam. All we had to do was cut a small sluice-way and the pond was finished. It's still there, teeming with fish, through somewhat overgrown with vegetation.

The other stone had landed above the second meadow on the side of the mountain. We made our way there in record time wondering what further accomplishment we would witness. And there it was! Another need met. Our spring had been running dry and we were up against it. But the hail stone had landed directly in the old spring hole without damaging the pipe which carried the water to the house. We hastily built a new spring house over the stone and went down the hill to sample the water from our new spring. Incidently we used the last of that hail stone this summer and the water was still fresh and sweet.

So you see what I mean. The next time Bill wants to see hail stones let him come over into Vermont where they're really worth while.

National Council Approves Increased 1946 Budget

Support of Advance Fund Is Also Stressed But No Figures Released at Present Time

By W. B. Spofford

New York: — A budget of $2,735,058 for 1946, which is $117,421 more than this year's budget, was adopted by the National Council at the meeting held September 25-27 at the Church Missions House. A statement was also issued about the Reconstruction and Advance Fund for $5,000,000 but no figures were released on how it is coming along. It was a "get-on-the-bandwagon" sort of statement which you doubtless will have read to you in due time since it is to be sent to the clergy for that purpose. A bit of inquiry however did reveal that the large-gift campaign, now in process, is going along in such grand shape that the propaganda from here on doubtless will stress the need for a sum greater than the five million now being sought. A new salary scale for the employees at headquarters also was approved, with stress on the fact that it does not include officers. It means that stenographers, clerks, porters etc. are to get on the average of $2 more a week.

Announcement was made that the Council has received a farm and cash of over $100,000 from Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Cochel of Kansas City, Mo., to be used as a center for training of the town and country ministry, with the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, in charge of rural work, informing the Council that a small conference was held there this summer.

There has been considerable to-do in the Church for some time over whether or not the division of religious education is doing a good job. Criticism was sufficiently widespread for the House of Bishops to give it attention at their last meeting, with a resolution calling for an investigation. The committee appointed for that purpose reported at this Council meeting through Bishop Angus Dun and it is presented elsewhere in this number at the request of the National Council.

A delegation is to be sent to the Orient as soon as travel facilities are available to study and plan for the missionary work in China, Japan and presumably elsewhere. The Presiding Bishop is to make the appointments but it was strongly urged that the members be the Presiding Bishop, Vice-president Thayer Addison and Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin.

There is also to be a conference of Bishops whose jurisdictions are in the Caribbean, both of the Church of England and our own, with Bishop Creighton of Michigan, Bishop Blankingship of Cuba and Bishop Voegli of Haiti elected as the representatives of the Council. It will be held at Kingston, Jamaica, sometime in 1946.

The Council voted to support the Federal Council of Churches in maintaining a new office in Washington and $1,200 was appropriated toward the expenses. This office, as previously reported here, is for the purpose of keeping Church leaders informed on legislation that affects the Churches, such as taxes on Church property, social security and kindred matters. It was emphasized by several speakers that it was in no sense for the purpose of lobbying.

Unallocated balances in the $30,000 item in the 1945 budget for aid to European Churches are to be reserved for the same purpose in 1946, and it was voted to retain in the 1946 budget, as provided by General Convention, the sum of $52,132 for this purpose. Hope was expressed that further grants will be made from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund.

Following an address by Bishop Sherrill, chairman of the army and navy commission, it was voted that this work should become an agency of the Council at the end of this year. The opinion was expressed that this work, which will mean a new department at 281, should be run by an executive secretary who is a returned chaplain with a good record in some combat area.

Other bits of information: the youth commission stated that young people want a magazine of their own and the Council was asked to help finance it. The matter was referred back for further information. . . . Report from Japan is that St. Luke's Hospital as well as St. Paul's University, Tokyo, escaped damage. The hospital is now being used by the American army. . . . Bishop Dun, Bishop Dandridge and the Rev. Robert A. Magill are to visit the Bishop Payne Divinity School to look into the state of the buildings and make a general investigation. . . . Suffragan Bishop Edwin J. Randall of Chicago is now a member of the Council, succeeding Bishop Creighton as the representative of the Midwest province. . . . The Rev. Robert R. Brown of Waco, Texas, was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Rev. Jones Hines, soon to be consecrated bishop coadjutor of Texas. . . . Visitors were Bishop Voegli of Haiti, Bishop George A. Chambers, bishop of a diocese in Central Africa of the Church of England, and Francis C. M. Wei, president of Central China College. All of them spoke of the work in their countries, with Dr. Wei stressing that, while reconstruction of buildings in China is necessary, the far more important thing "is the rebuilding of the Church that it may be able to rebuild the world." . . . Oh, yes, one other thing. There is now a cute little movie theatre at the Church Missions House. Seats for eleven people. It is the work of Mr. Jordon, the producer and author of Thy Will Be Done. Have a look the next time you are around.

EDITOR'S DAUGHTER IS MARRIED

Montreal: — Miss Jean Grant, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Frederick C. Grant, was married here on September 20th to Dr. Laurence C. Tombs. Miss Grant was formerly employed by the Office of Strategic Services while Dr. Tombs is the secretary of the International Air Transport Association. He received his doctorate in philosophy from the University of Geneva, Switzerland.

NEW PROFESSOR LEADS RETREAT

Berkeley, Calif.: — Charles F. Whiston, who is now on the faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, led the devotional period in connection with the opening of the school last week. He is to teach Church history. It was also announced that Bishop Parsons would give a course in liturgics.

SPECIAL SERVICE FOR JUNIOR POLICE

Washington:—Lt. James J. Sharkey, navy chaplain, lead a special service at Washington Cathedral for the Junior Police and Citizens Corps on September 23rd. The service was sponsored by the social service department of the diocese to provide a stimulating religious experience for the boys and to focus attention on the organization. Taking part in the service were Bishop Dun, Dean John W. Suter, Canon W. Curtis Draper Jr. and the Rev. J. Brooke Mosley, director of social service. The Junior Police was organized about three years ago by Oliver Cowan, a Negro member of the police force, due to his concern over the increase in juvenile delinquency and youth gangs. The gangs are not broken up but are turned into self-governing bodies that seek to uphold standards of good citizenship. There are now more than 10,000 members.

CHURCHES COOPERATE IN MISSION

Buffalo, N. Y.: — Three hundred churches of 12 denominations are cooperating this week in the Erie County preaching mission. Sessions are being held simultaneously in 19 churches under the auspices of the local council of churches and that of Erie County.

MAJOR PROBLEMS SOLVED

Moscow (wireless to RNS):— Patriarch Alexei announced here that all major problems of Church-state relationships in the Soviet Union have been satisfactorily solved. He also indicated that Stalin is taking a personal interest in the work of the Russian Orthdox Church. He described him as "a great friend of all believers" and at the same time refuted charges from abroad that Church activities are controlled by the government. Church schools, theological training, priests and sermons, declared the Patriarch, "are not controlled by anyone but the Church." He also praised the American people and stated that "together, fortified by our belief in the Lord and benefitting by his blessing, we must create a peaceful, satisfactory, plentiful life for all."

HOODLUMS BREAK INTO CHURCH

Albuquerque, N. M.: — Bishop Stoney of New Mexico and Southwestern Texas has written to the Roman Catholic Bishop of El Paso and the Archbishop of Santa Fe, calling attention to an incident which happened at St. Anne's Mexican Mission at El Paso, Texas, where the Rev. Sisto J. Noce is in charge. In his letter to THE WITNESS Bishop Stoney said that "although I had no idea that the officials of the Roman Church had instigated this or other similar depredations, nevertheless the spirit of intolerance often preached by them toward other faiths could not help but inflame the ignorant; and, in the light of constant public statements of good will and the need for united effort on the part of Christian people of all faiths, I urged their cooperation in discouraging this sort of thing."

The excerpt from the letter written by Mr. Noce to his bishop, and upon which Bishop Stoney's letter to the Roman Catholic bishops was based, follows:

"Last Thursday afternoon, while Mrs. Noce was at the U.S.O. and I was making some parish calls, some hoodlums broke into our building by breaking two panels of glass in the door of my study. What I found at my return, it was sickening. Broken glass all over downstairs. They broke all the glass tops of the desks, overhead lights, pictures, candles and furniture. They broke in two and flattened the chalice and broke the cruets. My corded silk cassock and white stole were torn to ribbons. They upset the steel closet in the women's kitchen, breaking all the glasses and dishes and took $22.50, belonging to the Boy Scouts, that I kept in my desk. They had the typewriter, electric clock, electric fan and two lamps near the door, ready to take away, but my return prevented it. They relieved themselves in the chapel and smeared human refuse on everything. They left a Catholic religious magazine in Spanish, published in Mexico City, with a marked article in which the Protestants were branded as Judas."

Kagawa Looks for Democracy And Freedom in Japan

Leader Says That Only Kindness Can Revive Christianity and Not Mere Words and Creeds

By Manfred Gottfried

What has war done to the number-one Christian of Japan? Many people have asked that question but it took Manfred Gottfried, Time's chief correspondent in the Pacific to find out. He talked at length with Toyohiko Kagawa, the founder of Japan's Kingdom of God movement, author, social worker, radical Christian. This is Gottfried's report:

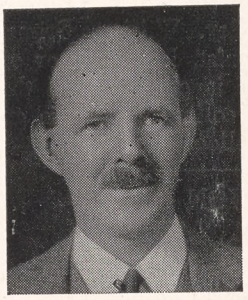
Tokyo:—Kagawa is a small man with a ready smile, a forthright, friendly personality, and clothes as shabby as most Japanese. I had been told he was more likely than any to speak the truth about Japanese politics. This has been a police state, but his answers, in his own emphatic brand of English, were without hesitation or circumlocution.

I asked how Christians had fared during the war. "We had a terrible time. All Seventh Day Adventist males were arrested. Everybody who believed in the second coming of Christ or the Last Judgment was asked to appear in court. I was three times arrested. I could not preach."

I remarked that he had been reported as making anti-U. S. propaganda. Instantly he answered: "I did. I did intentionally. The Americans said that when America won I would become Premier of Japan. That made me and all Japanese Christians traitors. Therefore, intentionally, I said America must return to the spirit of Abraham Lincoln. I was sorry I had to come down from international Christianity to national Christianity. I had no choice."

Has Japan now a real urge for freedom and democracy, I asked. His spirited answer: "Oh, sure! The army is gone [with a sweeping gesture]. The Potsdam Declaration promised to revive democracy in Japan—revive, not create. We are very glad. But Americans must not expect democracy here with American zip. What Americans do in one hour takes Japanese a day."

There would probably be five or six parties in the new Parliament, among them liberals, capitalists, socialists. "But the army and navy cannot form a party. They have disappeared. Japan had a good whipping. The Emperor signed away the army and navy—permanently. Not just for now, but permanently."



Kagawa's words were not calculated, but spontaneous, ringing with conviction. Plainly he believed and rejoiced. The Japanese feel that the Emperor's peace-making is a major revolution like that of 1869. Kagawa explained: "Japan is like Sweden, which was once a very warlike nation. Gustavus Adolphus fought many battles, sometimes winning, sometimes losing, but in the end Sweden found that war was no use.

"All that is past now. Prisons have been made into art galleries. Under the Shogunate Japan had 250 years of peace, developed the tea ceremony, color prints, love of nature. This terrible war experience shows us that we have made a serious mistake. The atomic bomb was rather a terrible thing, but it also shows how much Japan fell behind by neglecting culture and science. I am organizing a committee to take out all warlike sentences from schoolbooks. We are doing this without the Americans asking us, but I shall ask other nations to do the same."

Kagawa on wartime Christianity: "The Americans burned down 2,100,000 houses, so the common people don't like Christianity. Thousands of people—250,000—living in dugouts in Tokyo alone. More people cannot come back till we have food and houses, but winter coming, no food, no clothes, no storage . . . March 10th, within three hours, 100,000 people killed in eastern Tokyo. Only kindness can revive Christianity, not mere words or creeds. Because of prejudice now, I don't often preach. The people need help, not words. Missionaries are no use now unless they help."

COMMISSION ON SOLDIERS

New York: — The Rev. Beverley Boyd, WITNESS editor and head of the social relations department of the Federal Council of Churches, is head of a new commission on the Church's ministry to returning servicemen.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Dean Zabriskie announces programs for returned chaplains and servicemen at Virginia Seminary: Alfred L. Banyard is consecrated Suffragan bishop of New Jersey; Ernest W. Churchill is the associate director of the new school of religion at Calvary Church, New York

DISCRIMINATION HAS LESSENED

Washington (RNS):—A committee of the Washington federation of churches, after an exhaustive study of race relations in the Nation's capital, reported that discrimination against Negroes has diminished during the war years. "A maximum amount of energy, wisdom and tolerance will be required to hold the gains that have been made under the stress of war conditions,'" Wilbur Laroe, Jr., chairman of the civic affairs committee of the federation, said.

The committee explained that "Many barriers against Negroes have fallen during the past two years . . . due in part to the notable contribution which colored men in the armed forces have made toward the winning of the war."

As evidence that discrimination against Negroes is lessening the committee cited: 1. Real gains in Negro employment opportunities in the federal government. 2. A trend toward adoption of non-segregation policies by Washington restaurants, shown by most government cafeterias, the YWCA cafeteria and other privately-operated restaurants. 3. Operation of federally-owned recreation facilities on a non-segregated basis. 4. Extension of some local department and grocery stores services to Negro patrons. 5. Partial end of discrimination toward Negro taxicab operators. 6. On the other hand, the committee named certain discriminatory practices which it said "deprive the Negro of a full participation in the advantages of our democratic system."

DEATH SENTENCE FOR PRIEST

Sarajevo (wireless to RNS):—A Roman Catholic priest, Father Bralo, has been sentenced to death by the federal supreme court of Bosnia and Herzegovina on charges of pro-Nazi collaboration. Similar sentences were passed on two Serbian Orthodox leaders who, it was charged, collaborated with the Nazi puppet regime in Croatia.

RACE RELATIONS PROGRAM

Raleigh, N. C.:—Interracial meetings of ministers, presentation of Negro speakers to white Church groups, and proportionate representation of Negroes on civic and other committees were urged in a report adopted by the ministerial association of this city. The report was based on a thorough study of prevailing conditions in Raleigh. According to the committee the measures suggested are considered "by no means ideal" but rather "reasonable objectives" for the association to strive for in the next five years. Other recommendations included sermons on race relations and observance of a special week each year when attention would be called to the "contributions of Negro citizens to public welfare."

BETHLEHEM CLERGY MEET

Mt. Pocono, Pa.:—The clergy of the diocese of Bethlehem met here September 10-12 for their annual clergy conference, under the leadership of Bishop Sterrett. Speakers were the Rev. Sherman Johnson of the Episcopal Theological School and the Rev. James Carman of the department of promotion of the province of Washington.

NEW ORLEANS HAS NEW CHURCH

New Orleans:—Erection of the new St. Martin's Church is shortly to get underway. It is located at Metairie, a rapidly growing suburb of the city. This is the first unit of a long range building program and will cost $20,000. While construction is going on services and Sunday school are being held in the high school auditorium.

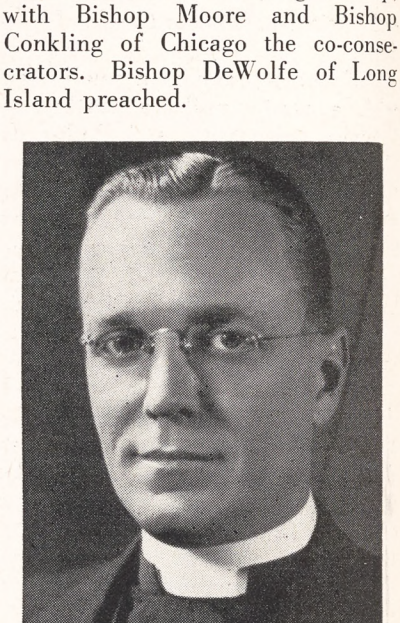
NEGRO'S STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM

Great Neck, N. Y.:—A series of four lectures on the Negro's struggle for freedom is being given at St. Paul's Church here under the auspices of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The Rev. William Grime, WITNESS columnist, is the rector of the parish and is chairman of the meetings. The collections are to go to the Negro college fund.

CONSECRATION OF ALFRED BANYARD

Trenton, N. J.:—The Rev. Alfred L. Banyard was consecrated suffragan of New Jersey at Trinity Cathedral on September 29th. The Presiding Bishop was the consecrator, with Bishop Gardner and Bishop Matthews the co-consecrators. Bishop Gardner entertained the clergy at a luncheon following the colorful service.

BISHOP PENICK SPEAKS AT ST. AUGUSTINE'S



Raleigh, N. C.:—Bishop Penick of North Carolina and president of the board of trustees, was the speaker at the opening of St. Augustine's College on September 20th. The service in the college chapel was conducted by the president, the Rev. Edgar H. Goold.

METHODIST CHURCH RECOGNIZED

New York:—The Polish provisional government has accorded full rights to the Methodist Church as a "legally recognized sect in Poland" according to the Polish press agency here. The Methodist Church was established in Poland after the last war to do relief work and was recognized as a "religious society" under the constitution of 1935. Prior to the German advance on the Soviet Union in 1941 it had 33 worshipping groups embracing 1,300 churches.

CONSECRATION OF AVERY MASON

Dallas, Texas:—The Rev. C. Avery Mason was consecrated coadjutor of Dallas at St. Matthew's Cathedral on September 21, and will succeed Bishop Moore as diocesan when the latter retires at the next General Convention. The consecrator was the Presiding Bishop, with Bishop Moore and Bishop Conkling of Chicago the co-consecrators. Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island preached.

Bishop C. Avery Mason was consecrated bishop coadjutor of Dallas on September 21 at a great service at St. Matthew's Cathedral in Dallas

RACE RELATIONS CLINIC

Portland, Ore. (RNS):—More than 100 leaders from a dozen sponsoring organizations held a clinic on race relations here under the direction of George E. Haynes, head of the department of race relations of the Federal Council of Churches. After reports on housing, employment, recreation and health, the meeting called upon the governor and mayor to appoint committees to deal with the problems. They also urged that race, color, creed or national origin should not be a factor in the right to occupy homes.

EDITORIALS

Let's Get Facts

AMBLING describes the current discussion of the common cup. Periodically since the last General Convention, the Church press has expressed opinions, and if matters take their course, the Philadelphia Convention a year hence will receive the question in a befuddled condition and proceed to muddle through it. As an attempt to clear the situation, we propose a thorough-going adoption of experiment.

Evidence for contagion by the chalice is at present sketchy but impressive. There are cases in which it seems to have been the main cause of tuberculosis infection. A few scattered experiments have been made in laboratories, some of which attempted to reproduce the conditions of the altar rail. At the moment, the evidence is inconclusive and somewhat contradictory. State tuberculosis associations are concerned about the practice of the Lutheran and Episcopal Churches and have begun to urge the enforcement against them of the laws forbidding public drinking cups. The common cup, the one legal practice in canon law, is possibly illegal in civil law. Something should be done, and we believe that the possibility of infection is a scientific question which deserves complete scientific investigation.

We suggest that a commission be appointed by the Presiding Bishop, which would consist mainly of competent medical men and biologists, with a few clergy. It might represent both extremes of opinion and include several impartial non-Episcopalians. The commission could plan an exhaustive series of experiments, supervise them, and report to the General Convention. The costs should be met by the National Council, for the following reasons: 1) The Episcopal Church is in a very ambiguous position in relation to state law. 2) The common cup, restored by the Reformation, is a great symbol of the unity of the members of Christ's Body. If it is to be taken away from the people, the evidence should be conclusive. 3) When the health of our people is in question, every scientific means should be used to determine facts.

With the facts in hand, the General Convention could act with responsibility. If the results showed positive danger of infection, we believe that permission for both communion in one kind and intinction would be a just and reasonable solution.

"QUOTES"

WITHOUT divine guidance and a renewal of our reliance on the everlasting reality of religion we shall labor in vain to make the world a better and a happier place in which all men may dwell together in peace. We have defeated forces of evil which knew neither conscience, justice nor mercy. This should quicken our appreciation of the part which spiritual forces must play if we are to bring order back to a war-torn world.

—PRESIDENT TRUMAN
in his endorsement of Protestant Press Month, observed this month, as a means to "emphasize anew the need of a revival of the religious life of this nation."

A Plan That Works

WE ARE not infrequently asked if those listed as the Editorial Board on page two actually meet regularly. We started in the fall of 1941 to do group editing. Every week since, except for less frequent meetings during July and August, this board has met for a half-day session, often with a full attendance, never with more than three or four absent. We begin with self-criticism by going over the issue for the previous week, both for content and make-up. Articles that have been submitted are then either read or assigned to an editor for a report at the next meeting. We then take up editorials. Sometimes editorials are brought in by editors which are read and criticized, with changes made according to the will of the majority. In cases where there is a minority of one or more they have the privilege of expressing their signed opinion in Backfire, as has happened on several occasions. We then discuss issues about which we think editorials should be written, after which the topic is assigned to one of the editors who is charged with the task of expressing the will of the majority as accurately as he can.

Last year we had a long discussion of the desirability of having rotating vestries in parishes. One of the men present said, "Why not practice what we preach and have rotation on this board?" That practice, started then, now goes into its second year as you will see by glancing through the names in the masthead on page two. At their fall meeting the Executive Committee of the Church Publishing Association, a membership organization for whom THE WITNESS is published (see back page), created the new office of Editor. This is filled by the

Rev. Frederick C. Grant who has been the head of our board from the start. They elected Dean Arthur Lichtenberger as Chairman. Bishop Theodore R. Ludlow and the Rev. Gordon C. Graham leave the board this year, while Bishop Charles K. Gilbert and the Rev. Lane W. Barton, who were off for a year, have been reelected to the board. The Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, rector of the Ascension, New York, where the board meets each week, becomes a member to fill the place of the Rev. William M. Sharp who is now the rector of a parish in Washington. Two others have also been added to the board, the Rev. Dillard H. Brown, a priest of the diocese of Newark, and the Rev. William K. Russell, the rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania.

Contributing Editors, one will see, are men and women living at a distance from New York and therefore unable to attend meetings regularly. It is their privilege to attend meetings of the board whenever possible, with of course voice and vote. Special assignments are given them from time to time and we also call upon them for advice on how better to make THE WITNESS vital and interesting.

This plan of group editing is no longer experimental. It has worked for four years to the enjoyment of those who are a part of it and we trust to the profit of our readers.

A Service of Holy Baptism

by Joseph H. Titus

of The Witness Editorial Board

Compiled and Arranged from Various Sources and Submitted to the Church for Consideration

The Parents and God parents (or Sponsors) standing at the Font, and the congregation facing the Font, the Minister shall say:

O how amiable are thy dwellings; thou Lord of hosts!

Blessed are they that dwell in thy house; they will be always praising thee.

Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee: in whose heart are thy ways.

For the Lord God is a light and defense; the Lord will give grace and worship; and no good thing will he withhold from them that live in godly life.

O Lord God of hosts; blessed is the man that putteth his trust in thee. (Psalm 84)

Hear the words of the Gospel, written by St. Mark, in the tenth chapter, at the thirteenth verse:

They brought young children to Christ, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.

Then shall the Minister address those presenting their children as follows:

Dearly beloved, in presenting this child for Baptism you confess your faith in the universal fatherhood of him who said, "All souls are mine," and in the tender care and redeeming love of him who took little children in his arms and blessed them, saying, "Of such is the kingdom of God." You bring him acknowledging that he is a gift and trust from God, and desiring that he may be dedicated to the Christian way of life. Let us therefore pray that God's blessing may rest upon this his child, saying together:

O God, the creator and father of mankind, we beseech thee to bestow the blessing of eternal life upon this child whom we now dedicate to thee; grant that he, increasing daily in the knowledge of thee and of thy son, may ever grow into thy divine likeness; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Then shall the Minister speak to the Parents and Godparents as follows:

Beloved, in order that the saving power of Baptism may become a living reality in this child, it must continue in his Christian education.

Will you therefore take care that he be instructed in the Christian faith?

Answer: I will, by God's help

Will you faithfully guide him, and help him to resist all sin and temptation?

Answer: I will, by God's help

Will you pray for him, and by word and deed encourage him to keep God's holy will and commandments and to walk in the same all the days of his life?

Answer: I will, God being my helper.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Then shall the Minister speak to the child's parents:

Will you, his parents, endeavor so to pattern your lives that through you he may come to know the loving care of his Heavenly Father, and that his childhood home may be a haven of blessing?

Answer: I will.

Let us pray:

O Heavenly Father, grant to this child the spiritual strength to withstand temptation and to overcome the forces of evil. Amen

Grant to this child the life of victorious faith, and the daily assurance that thou art mighty to save. Amen.

Grant to this child, that being brought up in the true knowledge of thee and of thy Son, Jesus, Christ, he may never depart from the way that leadeth unto eternal life. Amen

O Lord and Heavenly Father, whose beloved Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ, was himself baptized, and gave commandment to his disciples to teach all nations and to baptize them; grant that Baptism may be to this child (this thy servant) the abiding pledge of thy fatherly love; through the same Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen

Then shall the Minister take the child into his arms (or if he be an adult he shall kneel) and say:

N. I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen

We received this child (person) into the congregation of Christ's flock, and do sign him with the sign of the Cross; in the name of God the Almighty Father who created him, and of Jesus Christ who lived and died for him, and of the Holy Spirit, who sanctifieth him.

Let us pray:

We yield thee hearty thanks, most gracious Father, that it hath pleased thee to receive this child (person) into the body of Christ's flock. Grant that he may ever be a loyal and faithful member of this holy fellowship, and lead the rest of his life according to this beginning; through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. Amen

And now, as our Saviour Christ hath taught us, let us say:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen

Then shall the Minister say to the Parents and Godparents:

Forasmuch as you have promised to train this child to be a Christian, I therefore beseech you in the name of our Lord Jesus, the lover of little children, that you fail not in this your promise. Earnestly endeavor to fit yourself for the faithful discharge of your duty in this matter, and let your daily life be such that this child may ever look on you with love and reverence, and learn the lesson of true religion from your life as well as from your lips. You are to take care that this child be taught to say his prayers, to receive instruction, and to attend divine worship, so that in due course he may be brought to the Bishop to be confirmed by him.

Let us pray:

The Almighty God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named; Grant you to be strengthened with might by his power in the inner man; that, Christ dwelling in your hearts by faith, ye may be filled with all the fulness of God. Amen

At the Baptism of Adults

Following the Psalm, the Minister shall say:

Hear the words of the Gospel written by St. Matthew in the twenty-eighth Chapter at the eighteenth verse:

Jesus came and spake unto them saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

Well beloved, who hast come here desiring to receive Holy Baptism; I demand of thee in the name of God:

Dost thou renounce the service of self, and all that is sinful and evil?

Answer: I do

Dost thou believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God?

Answer: I do

Dost thou accept him, and desire to follow him as thy Saviour and Lord?

Answer: I do

Wilt thou be baptized in this faith?

Answer: That is my desire.

Wilt thou then obediently keep God's holy will and commandments, and walk in the same all the days of thy life?

Answer: I will, by God's help.

Let us pray:

O merciful God, grant that this thy servant may, through thy grace, vanquish all sinful affections and evermore triumph over evil. Amen

Grant that he, being illumined by thy Holy Spirit, may overcome all distrust and fear, and may ever believe and trust in thee. Amen

Grant that all things belonging to the Spirit may so live and grow in him that he may ever give to thee the love of his heart and the service of his life. Amen

Grant that all who are here dedicated to thee by our office and ministry, may also be endued with heavenly virtues and attain unto eternal life; through thy mercy, O blessed Lord God, who dost live and govern all things, world without end. Amen

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

THE OFFICE HYMN

ONE of the novelties introduced into our American Prayer Book at the time our Church became independent of the Church of England was the permission to use the Gloria in excelsis in place of Gloria Patri at the conclusion of the psalmody in Morning and Evening Prayer. It is doubtful whether much use has ever been made by us of this alternative, though the singing of Gloria in excelsis in the daily office has the very good precedent of its similar use in the Eastern Orthodox Churches and the ancient Gallican Churches of the West. Ordinarily we Episcopalians have a passion for anything in our tradition which links us with non-Roman Catholic custom. But this little piece of it in our liturgy has unfortunately been a "dud." In our 1928 revision we curiously removed the alternative from Morning Prayer, but left it in Evening Prayer; although ancient custom associated the Gloria with a morning office.

The clue both to the introduction and to the disuse of the Gloria in excelsis in our daily office is revealed in a letter to Bishop Brownell of Connecticut, dated Feb. 8, 1822, from the venerable William White, great founding father of our Church and first Bishop of Pennsylvania. He wrote:

> "The 'Gloria in excelsis' was introduced under ye Notion, that ye singing of it would add to ye Beauty of ye Service. I wish we had left it, in its Restriction to ye End of ye Communion Service. It adds to ye length of ye other Service, confessedly rendered too long, by ye Junction of Services intended to have been distinct."

Bishop White is here referring to the practice of combining Morning Prayer, Litany and Holy Communion (or Ante-Communion), which our forefathers found time for on Sunday mornings. But the American mind, so succinctly revealed in this letter, prefers speed to beauty. And our over-developed pragmatic sense responds more readily to edification and supplication in worship services than to adoration. We seem so much more willing to receive than to give. So we pick the shortest canticles, reduce the psalmody to a minimum, even shorten the Benedictus, and cut out stanzas of hymns of praise that require much breath. We commonly say we have "received Communion," almost never say we have "offered ourselves" in praise and thanksgiving as a living sacrifice.

The late Miss Evelyn Underhill in her classic Worship (Harpers, 1937) defined the daily office as "the ordained form within which the whole Church performs from hour to hour, by night and by day, that unceasing praise of God which is the chief purpose of her existence." From the time St. Benedict wrote his Rule for his monks (sixth century) the office hymn sung with the psalms has had an honored place in the liturgy of the daily office. In the Middle Ages these hymns had a luxurious growth and added color and variety to the daily round of praise. Not all of them were good poetry, but the best of them (such as those put in our Hymnal 1940, Nos. 157-164) have a timeless, objective quality and are "liturgical" in spirit. When the Reformers reduced and simplified the daily office and designed it for common use by the laity they eliminated all the office hymns. It took us two centuries to recover from that blow to the Church's hymnody. And when we did take to singing hymns again in liturgical worship we cultivated the kind more suited, both from a literary and musical standpoint, to use "before and after sermons" than to the exalted prose of the liturgy.

Now I am not proposing that we restore to the Prayer Book the metrical office hymns. The taste for them is not widespread among our people. Many expressions in them are unreal on modern lips, such as "Withhold from us our ghostly foe, That spot of sin we may not know." But I would like to suggest that we consider restoring the Gloria in excelsis as the office hymn at our morning praises, at least on Sundays and festivals, to round off the psalmody. For Evening Prayer I would suggest an equally ancient and anonymous hymn (qualities we seem to admire in matters liturgical), used from time immemorial in the East at the time of Lamp-Lighting (and how we love Eastern elements in our liturgy!). The Hymnal 1940 contains two metrical versions, Nos. 173 and 176, of which the second is by far the superior both in text and music. Of the many English varieties of this jewel of evening praise, the prose rendering of John Mason Neale is most faithful to the original:

O Joyful Light of the holy glory of the Father, Immortal, Heavenly, Holy, Blessed, Jesus Christ:
beholding the evening light we glorify the Father, and the Son, and the holy Spirit of God.
Worthy art Thou in all seasons to be hymned with sacred voices,
Son of God,
Giver of hope,
wherefore the world glorifieth Thee.

Report on Christian Education

Presented by Bishop Angus Dun To the National Council on September 27th

YOU will recall that at the last previous meeting of the Council, February of this year, there was presented to the Council and referred to the division of Christian education a resolution of the House of Bishops calling attention to the Church's failure properly to instruct the people in her essential teachings and recommending specifically that what the resolution called, "a corpus of instruction of material to be acquired by every child" be prepared; that the department of Christian Education revive its functions of producing curriculum materials; and that consideration be given to certain other subjects intimately connected with the educational task of the Church.

As I reported at that time the division discussed these criticisms and suggestions at length and frankly in its February meetings and instituted plans for the future consideration of the very serious and fundamental problems involved.

I wish at this time to report the further steps we have taken since that meeting. We held a special two-day meeting in April when the Council meeting was omitted. There met with us twelve invited consultants, two bishops, four other clergy and four educational workers from the field. This group included some of the severest critics of the department.

Very frank consideration was given to the widespread dissatisfaction with the work of Christian education in the Church, and to the prevalent criticism of the department. Among the topics stressed in the discussion were the need for clear guidance regarding the goals and scope of Christian education for children and adult Church members; the need for greater emphasis on content and definite instruction; the demand for more specific guidance regarding the best available curriculum material; the lack of material suitable for small Church schools with relatively untrained teachers; the importance of more effective adult education if mature Church people are to be equipped to transmit our Christian inheritance in the Church to the young; growing opportunities for week-day and vacation school instruction; and the insufficiency of the present staff and budget of the department to do the work rightly asked of it by the Church.

The opinion was strongly expressed that the Church's weakness in the task of Christian education can only be met fundamentally by a profound renewal of its total spiritual vitality in the face of the increasing secularization of the general education and of our society, and that no provision of printed materials can be effective if parents and teachers are not devoted and informed Christians. At the same time it was agreed that this fact should not be the excuse for a defeatist or vague policy. Every effort should be made to offer clergy and lay people definite guidance regarding the aims and content of Christian education, and to put into their hands the best possible teaching aids.

It was agreed that as a first step, a serious attempt should be made to prepare a syllabus which shall state clearly the knowledge and experience which should be the personal possession, after specific periods in their development, such as confirmation or completion of high school, and suggest the progressive steps, year by year, by which the goal might be reached. It was also agreed that after this syllabus has been prepared, the next step should be to indicate definitely what existing curricular materials are best fitted to implement this plan of education in schools of different types. Then if the need for better materials for particular ages or subjects is evident, the division should seek to secure the preparation of such materials.

Emphasis was placed on the importance of carrying forward the work already begun of securing teaching aids for small church schools. And the conviction was strongly expressed that the department staff should be strengthened and increasingly set free to bring the maximum help to the field.

IN CONNECTION with this present meeting of the Council your division held an extended extra session on Monday evening in addition to the regular one on Tuesday morning.

We discussed carefully two initial sketches of the proposed syllabus which had been prepared at our request, and agreed regarding the general form of the document to be prepared for our consideration at our December meeting. This document as now planned will include an introductory interpretation of the central purpose and meaning of Christian education and of the means and conditions essential to its accomplishment. It will then seek to set forth the minimal content of Christian education in terms of faith, worship and practice as embodied in the official standards of our Church. This crucial section will be submitted to the criticism of representative theologians of our Churches before it is published. Finally the document will include a syllabus proposing the specific content and objective for each year of Church school through Grade 12. The whole document will be submitted to criticism by selected workers in the field before it is agreed upon by the division for publication.

After the syllabus has been agreed upon, the division and department will undertake to suggest the available educational materials best adapted to the agreed content and objective for each year.

The division has not forgotten that the resolution of the House of Bishops requested the production of curricular materials by the department. Nor are we insensitive to the fact that there is an insistent demand in many quarters for the production of a single standard course. The division has not reached a common mind on the wisdom and practicality of this request but this does not mean that we have shelved it or have a closed mind towards it. Some members of the division definitely favor this as our ultimate goal. Others take the somewhat cynical view that we had better do it because the Church will not be satisfied until they get such a course though they will probably not be satisfied after they get it.

In any case the preliminary work we are now doing is essential before any such ambitious task could be undertaken. Having agreed on what we want to do and when we want to do it, it is only intelligent to decide next whether existing curricular materials are reasonably satisfactory for particular stages in our agreed plan. After that we shall be better able to decide wisely what new curricular materials are most essential. Plainly no standard course could possibly be produced short of several years and it will be necessary to use existing materials even if we are to work towards such a revived standard course.

In the meantime it is gratifying to be told that the first one year unit for small Church schools entitled Through the Church Year has been widely commended by those in the field to whom it has been shown.

The second main subject to which we have given our thought in our most recent meetings is the function and structure of the division and department of Christian education. Certain convictions have begun to take shape as the result of our discussions of these topics. I might summarize them as follows:

1. The primary and fundamental task of the division and department is to provide the Church with direction and stimulus regarding the objectives, content, materials and methods of the Christian education of the children in our Church schools and youth organizations. That is the first demand upon us from the Church. The department staffing and activities should be shaped first of all by that task. This is not to deny or minimize the importance of many other educational tasks and needs.

2. The emphasis of the department's program and activities should be shifted increasingly from a consultative function, in which it seeks to answer miscellaneous requests from all over the field to a promotional function, in which it seeks to bring to the whole Church a clearly defined program of Christian education.

3. Since the department cannot possibly reach directly all the parochial subdivisions of the Church it should systematically seek to work through diocesan and provincial departments and leadership, and undertake to establish thereby an effective "chain of command."

4. The existing staff of the department is insufficient for the task committed to it even if it concentrates more narrowly on its initial task as defined before. We have asked that a report be prepared at the next meeting as to the character and structure of the staff which would be required for greater effectiveness in the performance of this initial task. Comparative studies of parallel departments in other Churches reveal how thinly staffed we are for this purpose. The Church must face the fact that if this or any other division of the National Council is to do the task which the Church asks of it, the Church will have to be prepared to pay for it.

A Progressive Message Issued By Woman's Auxiliary

List Various Problems That Must Be Solved If the World Is to Have Any Lasting Peace

Edited by W. B. Spofford

New York:—"Peace is still only a hope" and will become a reality only if "we cultivate Christian attitudes in such fields as family life, Church groups, business and professional life, labor relations, interracial and intercultural relationships, interchurch cooperation, international understanding." So declared the executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary, meeting in quarterly session at the Church Missions House, September 21-24.

Among the specific objectives which they feel must be achieved are full employment, improved housing, prevention of inflation, full democratic rights to minorities, support of world relief and rehabilitation, strengthening of the United Nations organization. They also urged that rationing and price control be continued "as long as necessary to increase the world food supply and prevent inflation."

It was reported that the United Thank Offering to be presented at General Convention a year hence now shows a $300,000 increase over what it was at the corresponding time in the previous triennium. In preparation for the triennial meeting which opens in Philadelphia on September 10, 1946, four commissions are at work under these chairmen: commission on the Christian faith, Miss Leila Anderson of Berkeley, Calif.; Christian home, Mrs. G. Russel Hargate of Elyria, Ohio; Christian world, Mrs. Randall Chase, Sanford, Fla.; the world mission of the Church, Mrs. Edwin A. Stebbins of Rochester, N. Y.

It was attended by the youth commission, president of youth groups and a number of the clergy. The Rev. Marshall E. Travers gave an address and Bishop Carruthers concluded the affair by conducting the service and preaching at the Church of the Holy Cross at Stateburg.

His interest has always been in the work of other Christian communions in China, and for nearly ten years he was chairman of the China Christian Council, an interdenominational group.

University Not Damaged

New York:—The first and only report to be received about St. Paul's University in Tokyo is that it was not damaged by bombing. The message was received through Lt. Warren Muenzenmayer, army intelligence service, who was the interpreter on the plane that took the Japanese delegation from Iwo Jima to Manila to meet with General MacArthur. He was also interpreter to the commanding officer of the first group of airborne troops that landed at the air field outside Tokyo.

held a conference at St. Paul's, Jackson, with the same leaders giving the addresses. Then on the 17th the women of the diocese met at Dearborn, also with about 100 present, to hear of the work of the diocese and the national Church.

Virginia Seminary

Alexandria, Va.: — The Virginia Seminary has announced plans for refresher courses for chaplains and men leaving the services. It is hoped soon to have on the staff a demobilized chaplain to help both groups by interpreting the ministry and the seminary to the veterans; to assist chaplains to find parishes; to arrange quiet days, retreats and seminars. The seminary plans to admit service men, regardless of college background, after faculty members have passed on his ability to do the work. It is also announced that servicemen will be admitted at different times during the year. Standards will not be relaxed, it is stressed.

As for chaplains, following a study made by Dean Zabriskie, it is known that the men want, not special courses, but the fellowship, worship and life at Alexandria; a chance to read under direction; seminar meetings; freedom to attend such courses as they see fit. The seminary is therefore prepared to welcome as many chaplains as can be provided for on this basis.

Speaks on Coops

East Orange, N. J.:—Congressman Jerry Voorhis of California, an Episcopalian, is to be the headliner at a meeting on the cooperative movement at the high school here on October 12th. Middlebury, Vt.: — St. Stephen's Church has plans for a new parish hall. During the past two years $3,300 in bonds have been given by organizations and individuals for this purpose, in addition to $2,400 donated by the parish Auxiliary.

Church Survey

Cleveland (RNS):—If a poll conducted by the Cleveland Press is accurate, 70.5 per cent of Clevelanders are church members, and 92.5 per cent believe the churches are doing a good job in the betterment of the community.

Conducted by reporters of the newspaper in widely scattered sections of the city, the poll revealed that 42.5 per cent of the persons questioned attend church regularly, 32.5 per cent occasionally, 14 per cent hardly ever, and 11 per cent not at all.

Women Migrants

An intensive study by church mission boards of "the disparity between the opportunities of minorities and those of majorities" was called for here by the Rev. Benjamin N. Moore, pastor of St. James' African Methodist Church, St. Paul. Addressing session of the Minnesota school of missions, an interdenominational Protestant group, Mr. Moore said the church "should open every door fully to every person without regard to race, creed, or color." A person should not be in a church because he is a certain color, but "because he is the son of God," Mr. Moore maintained.

"Churches," he went on, should "re-think" their entire missionary program to minority group people in terms of world citizenship. As needs for minorities, Mr. Moore listed a spirit of equality of opportunity for them, a greater resourcefulness and spirit of co-operation among them, greater pride in themselves and an attitude of love and fellowship toward all peoples.

The Rev. Mark A. Dawber, head of the Home Missions Council, urged the churches to aid in the reorientation of 37,000,000 American people uprooted during the war. The figure he cited includes 25,000,000 persons who migrated to war industry centers and 12,000,000 men and women in military service. One of the worst aspects of the uprooting problem, Dawber said, lies with womanhood. "This is the first time," he declared, "that we have seen a great avalanche of migrancy of women. The recent reports on crime increase are very disturbing, and the whole delinquency problem can very largely be traced to the changed status of womanhood."

has been mailed to all members of Parliament in Canada as well as to Labor leaders, principals of schools and colleges, and daily and weekly newspapers, it is announced.

The council, made up of representatives of six Protestant churches, the Roman Catholic Church and the Salvation Army, seeks to coordinate the thinking of Montreal's Christian communions on social and economic problems.

The statement prepared by the council opens with an affirmation of Christian principles on which alone, it claims, a sound social order can be built, and closes with a list of proposals "conducive to the attainment of true democracy and brotherhood in industrial relations."

Among the recommendations is recognition "in our laws and practice" of the rights of association and collective negotiation and of the full partnership of labor with capital in industrial management, economic planning and governmental regulations.

Other recommendations are wages "that will ensure a decent standard of living for the family" and a system of social security to meet economic needs arising from such contingencies as unemployment, accident, illness, old age or the death of the bread-winner."

Harrisburg Meeting

Eagles Mere, Pa.:—A number of the diocesan clergy gave the talks at the conference of the diocese of Harrisburg which met here for three days under the leadership of Bishop Heistand.

Church and State

Hartford, Conn.:—The Rev. Massey H. Shepherd Jr., professor at the Episcopal Theological Seminary and WITNESS columnist, told the annual pastors conference meeting here that one great question which western Christianity has never solved is the relationship of Church and state. "We have tried all sorts of solutions but we have not solved this great problem. The American method is a modus vivendi not a solution. Especially is this true in the field of education where we have allowed a great proportion of our youth to slip away entirely from the moral values of the Christian faith." The conference was attended by about 125 ministers of all denominations.

Religious Freedom

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—The World Council of Churches here has appealed to the American and British governments to establish complete religious freedom for Protestant Churches in Italy. The appeal stated that the Council "is greatly perturbed by trustworthy reports of increasing denial of religious freedom to Protestants in Italy. The withdrawal of Allied troops will increase Protestant difficulties. We plead for inclusion in Italian and other treaties of an emphatic statement on freedom of religion as in the Atlantic Charter and the Charter of the United Nations."

Assistant Chaplains

Halifax: — Canadian girls have been appointed as assistant chaplains in the army.

In England there's a girl—Miss Allison Harvey, a former Church of Scotland missionary in India—who has just been appointed for overseas service. Miss Harvey is the first woman army chaplain to be assigned for duty in Germany.

Miss Harvey says that there'll be a lot for her to do among the girls stationed with the occupation army in the defeated Reich. And she says these girls probably will prefer coming to a woman to discuss their difficulties.

Schools of Religion

Burlington, Vt.:—The men's club of St. Paul's here, the Rev. Charles Martin, rector, is sponsoring a school of religion on the five Tuesday evenings of this month. Professors of the University of Vermont are among those giving courses. A similar school is being held on Wednesday evening at Trinity, Rutland. with a number of the diocesan clergy giving the lectures.

Leads Campaign

Manchester, N. H.:—The Rev. L. Bradford Young, rector of Grace Church, and the chairman of the social action committee of the state council of Churches, is leading a campaign through which people sign cards urging continuing rationing of food, in order that more may be sent to the peoples of Europe and Asia. The cards, distributed through churches in all parts of the state, are to be sent to the secretary of agriculture, Clinton Anderson. The card reads: "I assure you of my support of your efforts to provide needed food for the people of Europe and Asia this winter and am willing to have rationing if necessary to that end."

Church Re-opens

London (wireless to RNS):—Prime Minister Clement R. Attlee will read one of the lessons at St. Margaret's when Sunday evening services are resumed next Sunday after a lapse of five years. This historic church is in the shadow of Westminster Abbey, and the famed Studdert-Kennedy was the vicar there for a number of years following World War I.

Honor Missionary

Calgary, Alberta (RNS):—Indians from the Blackfood and Sarcee reservations attended funeral services here for Archdeacon John William Tims, pioneer Anglican missionary of Southern Alberta. They held in their hands prayer books translated by Archdeacon Tims into their own language—a work he performed when he first came West more than 60 years ago.

Archdeacon Tims left England for missionary work among the Indians of Western Canada in 1883. He settled among the Blackfoot Indians and soon won their confidence. After 12 years among them, he took up the same work among the Sarcees, remaining for 35 years. He became recognized as one of Canada's leading authorities on the lore and customs of the Indians.

London (wireless to RNS):—The 150th anniversary of the London missionary society of the Congregationalists was observed here with a week of special meetings, including a commemorative sermon by the Archbishop of York in Westminster Abbey.

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—Having healed Orthodox schisms all over the world, and at work now on that task in the United States, a delegation from the Moscow patriarchate will leave shortly for Manchuria, Shanghai and Japan to consult with dissident Orthodox Churches in these areas which have asked to be re-united with the Russian Church.

Intellectual Leadership

London (wireless to RNS):—Measures to regain intellectual leadership in Britain and to combat anti-religious influences were urged upon the Church of England by Geoffrey Francis Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury, in his presidential address here to the central Council of the Church for religious education.

"The duty of the Church," Dr. Fisher declared, "is to cast out the implicit atheism that has been creeping among our people for more than two generations, to recover for the nation and its members, young and old, Christian theology and Christian education and the knowledge of worship and grace.

"The spheres in which, if we operate at all, we operate in complete freedom, are: the home, the Sunday school, the congregation, and the voluntary groups ranging from confirmation classes and youth groups

WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals—is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

Winnsboro Blue Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known.

Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

to adult schools and discussion groups. Here the Church has its full opportunity to educate in the fullest sense in Christian knowledge.

"Parents must be helped to rediscover their vocation as teachers and not to abdicate in favor of the clergy or the schools. Sunday must be recovered from secular uses by which, under the pressure of war, it has been invaded.

"Often there is a complaint that the language of the Prayer Book services is difficult. The language is not difficult, but rather the ideas expressed and the Christian conceptions, which are not understood even by Christians, and which, in any language are foreign to many outside. The Prayer Book demands public worship be carried out with spirit and with understanding."

Bibles for Soldiers

New York: — Members of the army, navy, and merchant marine were provided with 8,213,070 copies of Bibles, Testaments, and portions of the Bible by the American Bible Society during a five-year period which ended June 30 last, it was announced at the Society's headquarters here. The total included more than 5,500,000 copies of a special edition of the New Testament, streamlined to fit the blouse pocket, distributed by chaplains to service men who expressed an interest in the books. Recent requests filled by the Bible Society included one for 5,000 copies of the New Testament from the maritime service training station in St. Petersburg, Fla., and for 10,000 New Testaments and 2,000 Bibles monthly from the twelfth naval district at San Francisco.

Criticism of UNRRA

Geneva (wireless to RNS): — The World Council of Churches here has decided to establish an extensive relief organization to distribute food and clothing in Europe because it believes the Allies have failed to do "an adequate job."

Charging that government programs had "broken down," W. A. Visser 'tHooft, general secretary of the World Council, asserted the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration had become "one of the greatest scandals" of wartime. He also criticized the American Red Cross for lack of cooperation with the International Red Cross declaring that the American agency had shown little interest in the situation on the Continent. He said the International Red Cross twice recently had pleaded with the World Council of Churches for assistance, and he observed that "the Church is perhaps the only organization which can mobilize relief through the Red Cross."

Replying to a report that American churches were critical of the World Council for not serving in the relief field, Visser 'tHooft explained that the Protestant churches had not established an agency earlier because UNRRA was expected to do the job.

Take Communism Seriously

Toronto (RNS):—Asserting that "in our generation communism may emerge as a new proletarian religion," the Toronto and Kingston synod of the Presbyterian Church in Canada adopted a report by its committee on Church life and work which warned that "the time has come when the Church must take communism seriously."

"Russia's amazing achievements in the war have astounded the nations," the report said, "and have proved that there is within communism a spiritual as well as a material power."

It added that "it is the business of the church to lift this great issue out of the realm of blind prejudice and direct the minds of our people to the rock of solid thinking, so that they shall not be the victims of stupid and unworthy fear."

The report charged that "already one great church has, by a methodic and persistent policy, poisoned millions of minds against one of our great Allies," and "imputed to her sinister motives and ambitions that do not belong to the Soviet."

There is no reason whatever that we should close our eyes to the atheistic and materialistic philosophy of Marxism," the report declared. "But let us remember that it was Jesus who said 'Those that are not against us are for us': and there is no denying the fact but that the social ideals of communism bear striking resemblance to the social emphasis of the Christian gospel.

"If Russia has been successful in the application of state medicine, we should be willing to learn from her. If she has succeeded in removing forever the idle men from the market-place, then we should discover her secret. If she has established justice between man and man; given cake to none and bread to all; applied the teaching of Jesus' parable of the rich man and Lazarus more realistically than professedly Christian nations, then let us take off our hats to her."

Hits Discrimination

London (wireless to RNS):—Archbishop Fisher of Canterbury called for removal of race and color discrimination in an address here before a meeting of missionary societies.

"The removal of discrimination on the grounds of race and color alone, removal of all that impedes the fullest development of each constituent part of society and its members, is required not only by reason of justice, but because in the end it is the only way to economic welfare and social unity," the Archbishop stated.

He said public opinion must be "kept moving" in respect to racial discrimination in the British colonies, and "at a speed commensurate with the necessities of the situation."

"The scattering of thousands of members of the African forces in all the theaters of war emphasizes the need for speed," Dr. Fisher said. "We are convinced that economic progress, social unity, frank and free relationships, are only possible by treating this problem from the point of view of a principle which is right. That principle, of course, is a Christian principle, and that is why it will work out well, socially and economically."

MR. RICHARD MCLAUGHLIN
Layman of Philadelphia

The objective of the United Nations Charter is world peace. This objective cannot be attained by wishful thinking nor by pretty speeches. It cannot be attained by lip service no matter how flowery the lip service may be. We, as individuals and collectively as a nation, to attain peace must have the desire for peace deep rooted in our hearts. Individually and nationally it is not enough to merely preach forbearance and tolerance to others but we must practice these virtues in our daily lives. If we are to attain peace among men and among nations the brotherhood of man must cease to be merely a high sounding slogan. It must become a living and vital thing in which we believe with all our hearts and souls.

Many of our chosen leaders are right now preaching world peace out of one side of their mouths and clamoring for compulsory military training out of the other side. It is impossible to make these two things harmonize. We can have one or the other but we can not have both. In all the years of our national life we never had peace time conscription. We have become the richest and most powerful nation on earth. We are the light and hope of all oppressed people throughout the world.

Now when, as a nation, we have attained to these great heights; when a war weary world is waiting and watching for us to lead it into the paths of peace what do our leaders say? They proclaim to the world that this great nation has reached the point where, for safety's sake, we must change our national policy. These leaders tell us that instead of letting our boys continue in the American guarantee of the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" they must devote a year of their boyhood to train to become killers of men.

Of course the proponents of the plan will deny this. But if military training is not training to kill men what is it? It is also the instilling of hate and intolerance instead of peace and charity. In bayonet practice you can not get a boy to put his heart into the job by telling him the dummy, on which he is practicing, is his good neighbor or his brother. So it is all through his training.

This writer contends that the condition of the world today is not caused, fundamentally, by the lack of preparedness by the Allies but rather to the failure of our leaders to live up to their responsibilities. The Versailles treaty had a special provision against the rearming of Germany. In spite of that Germany did rearm and openly for all the world to see. Moreover much of the money for this rearming came, through loans, from the United States and England.

Had these so called leaders taken a firm stand when Manchuria was first invaded, about 1932, there would have been no World War II. For if Japan had been stopped Italy would not have invaded Ethiopia nor would Germany have grabbed Austria nor invaded Poland. So it was with the mandated islands in the Pacific. Japan was not supposed to fortify these islands. But fortify them she did and under the very noses of the World's Leaders.

Why should the "kids" be made the "goats" for the failures of our leaders? Everyone knows, and admits, that military training does make a man more fit both physically and mentally. But, while admitting that, we Americans object to compelling a boy to spend one of the most formative years of his life in doing something for which he has no inclination.

We believe the same objective, physical fitness, can be obtained under much better conditions. Start a physical training program with the first year of a child's schooling and continuing through his entire school life. For those children whose parents do not take them away for the summer have school camps where the children could live outside for three or four weeks a year. Supplementing this program we should enlarge our military and naval academies as there are many who will voluntarily prefer to follow that life. Also make membership in the national guard more attractive to induce young men to join. Have well furnished gyms. Have baseball, football, basketball and other teams connected with each armory.

Your editorial A War Casualty (WITNESS, Sept. 6) is one of the finest I have ever read. It is charitable, understanding, but firm. It is beautifully expressed and should bring consolation to many. You have summed up the thoughts of many at this time and we owe you a debt of gratitude. It is a pleasure to say this especially when I often disagree profoundly with much that you publish and say.

To Witness to the Gospel
To Maintain Evangelical Faith
To Attain Ecumenical Fellowship

We believe that God wills the Church to be Catholic in its inclusiveness, Liberal in its essential spirit, Evangelical in its witness to the Gospel of Christ.

We believe in the interpretation of the Christian religion in contemporary terms; in the rigorous application of the principles of Christ to our social life; in simplicity and dignity of worship; in immediate action toward Christian unity.

We believe that discussion of these principles must be accompanied by adventurous action.

The Marriage Canon Discussed By Bethlehem Clergy

Express Their Opinions on Various Canons So Far Proposed by Ballot After a Report

By Clayton Melling

Mauch Chunk, Pa.: — The clergy of the diocese of Bethlehem enjoyed themselves no end at a recent conference with a discussion of the proposed canons on marriage and divorce. The Rev. Thomas B. Smythe, rector at Birdsboro, chairman of the diocesan commission, had prepared a summary of the various opinions set forth in pamphlets issued by the national commission. These were first distributed, with various groups discussing the points informally the first evening of the conference. The next day Mr. Smythe presented his report officially, asking for comments and criticisms. They were forthcoming in generous measure.

Many points of view were aired, of which the following comments are rather typical: "The marriage vow is a promise made before God and man and it holds the person promising. The Christian life often means bearing a cross. A Christian must stick to his promise." "Marriage is a sacrament and cannot be destroyed." "What constitutes a Christian marriage?" (No answer from anyone). "The exceptive clause 'because of adultery' is indefensible on many grounds." (Unanimous agreement.) "We cannot have a lower standard for non-members of the Church than that applying to our own members." "The confusion between state jurisdiction and Church jurisdiction is almost as bad as the confusion between the states of the union concerning marriage." "The General Convention should revise its mode of procedure and define in narrow limits the powers of the committee on canons." "At the 1946 General Convention this matter should receive consideration by the House of Bishops first."

The general tenor of comments was in the direction of liberalizing the canon, emphasizing the forgiveness of God and his mercy.

At dinner, following this informal discussion, many felt that some sort of vote should be taken for the information of the General Convention's commission on marriage, headed by Bishop Cameron Davis of Western New York. So a series of propositions, very hastily drawn up, were written on a large blackboard and the men voted on pieces of paper, each one numbering his paper but not signing it. Here are the propositions and the votes:

Any marriage should uphold the Christian ideal of a life-long union: yes, 43; no, 0; undecided, 0.

The mind of Christ should be expressed by the marriage canon: yes, 40; no, 0; undecided, 3.

The Church has the power to declare a marriage dissolved: yes, 20; no, 12; undecided, 11.

The marriage canon should indicate clearly when a Christian marriage in fact exists: yes, 36; no, 2; undecided, 5.

(Annulments) The canon should provide some means of determining if a Christian marriage does not exist: yes, 38; no, 1; undecided, 4.

Marital failure creates circumstances which require special treatment other than that accorded to general failures in Christian living: yes, 22; no, 8; undecided, 13.

The Church should refrain from attempting to enforce a discipline over its people when it is not in fact able to do so: yes, 16; no, 13; undecided, 14.

If the Church is justified in enforcing discipline in regard to divorce it should also exercise discipline for other sins: yes, 2; no, 1; undecided, 10.

The Church should endeavor to avoid action which directly or indirectly stigmatizes people: yes, 31; no, 2; undecided, 10.

The canon as it now stands (canon 42) is the best solution of the four proposed so far: yes, 0; no, 40; undecided, 3.

The so-called Wattley canon (allowing no re-marriage after divorce, following the law of the Roman Catholic Church) is the best so far proposed: yes, 5; no, 32; undecided, 6.

The joint commission's proposed canon of 1943 (which liberalizes the present canon by allowing remarriage after divorce following review by an ecclesiastical court) is the best so far proposed: yes, 1; no, 39; undecided, 3.

The so-called Phister canon (most liberal of those proposed at the Cleveland General Convention, by allowing remarriage after divorce granted on several other grounds besides adultery. It also provides that the bishop shall be the council of review, in consultation with others he may select) is the best so far proposed: yes, 29; no, 10; undecided, 4.

The Phister canon would be improved if amended to make mandatory the creation of a consultative court in each diocese: yes, 34; no, 3; undecided, 6.

The Phister canon would be improved by making it necessary that the rector or rectors involved in each case be consulted: yes, 37; no, 1; undecided, 5.

The Phister canon would be improved by providing a means for securing uniformity of procedure in Church courts: yes, 10; no, 1; undecided, 2.

The 43 votes were cast by one bishop, one army chaplain, two seminary students, one vestryman, one retired priest and thirty-seven parish clergy.

Washington:—A luncheon honoring the chief of chaplains of the army and navy was held recently. The picture shows Rear Admiral Robert D. Workman who recently retired as navy chief of chaplains; Bishop Henry K. Sherrill of Massachusetts who is the chairman of the army and navy commission of the Episcopal Church and is also the chairman of the general commission, and Brigadier General Luther D. Miller, an Episcopalian, who is now the army chief of chaplains. An article by Chaplain Miller appears elsewhere in this number, and is preliminary to the series by Servicemen on the general subject of what sort of a world they want now that war is over and what they think the Church can do about it. The article next week will be by the Rev. Ernest A. deBordenave, former rector at Alexandria, Va., who is serving as chaplain in the navy and who saw combat in both Europe and the Pacific.

SERVICEMEN'S WIVES SUPPORT UTO

Coronado, Calif.:—The chairman of the service committee of the United Thank Offering, Miss Harriet Neal, reports that wives of men in the service gave $933 through the blue boxes in the fall of 1944 and $1,068 as their offering in the spring of this year. The money was gathered at various army and naval bases. A communication has now been issued urging these women to continue their offering through their parish churches when they return home.

FORWARD IN SERVICE TO BE ABSORBED

New York: — Forward in Service and the Forward Movement was discussed by the National Council meeting in executive session, with a resolution passed stating that work should continue as now directed during this coming winter "but all such work should be carried out in such a way as to prepare for a final distribution of the functions of Forward in Service among the departments of the National Council by the time of General Convention of 1946." It was decided also that no plan of action shall be prepared under the name of Forward in Service for 1946-1947 but that the proposals for emphasis shall be referred to the proper departments of the National Council.

It was also suggested that there be added to the staff at 281 an officer charged with stimulation of the devotional life of the Church; the study of history, doctrine and missions, with stimulation also of evangelism in parish life.

MICHAELMAN TERM AT GENERAL

New York: — General Seminary opened its Michaelman term on September 26th with 32 new students. Of these 17 are juniors, 12 are graduate students and 3 are specials. The juniors hold degrees from 17 colleges, and there are 15 dioceses represented. Two of the graduate students, the Rev. Raymond Abbitt and the Rev. Leopold Damrosch, were missionaries in the Philippines and have recently returned after three years' imprisonment in Manila. The Rev. Wayland Mandell, special student, likewise is a Philippines missionary who was imprisoned.

ELECTED COADJUTOR OF CONNECTICUT

Hartford: — Bishop Walter H. Gray, suffragan of Connecticut, was elected Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese at a special convention held at the cathedral here on October 2nd. There was one ballot. In the clerical order Bishop Gray received 121 votes and the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Trinity, Boston, received one vote. In the lay order Bishop Gray received 119 votes with nobody else receiving any.

ST. BARNABAS GUILD TO MEET

Newark, N. J.:—The Rev. John G. Martin, chaplain-general of the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses, has announced that the annual meeting will be held at the Advent, Cincinnati, October 20-21. The organization was founded in 1886 in Boston by the Rev. Edward W. Osborn, later Bishop of Springfield. Its aims include spiritual, social and cultural activities for nurses and student nurses. In addition to the chaplain of each branch who guides in these activities, the Guild provides an important place for associates who are lay women and physicians interested in the welfare of nurses.

REVIVAL PLANNED IN GERMANY

Frankfort, Germany (RNS):—Leaders of the German Methodist Church have plans for a religious revival, with a series of weekly meetings having already been held here that have attracted overflow crowds. Requests have been made of the Allied military authorities for the use of halls, materials for destroyed and damaged churches, travel permits for preachers. Other requests are for permission to publish a weekly church paper for the American, British and French zones; release of ministers, lay preachers and seminary students from prison camps; permission to start summer camps, institutes, teacher training courses, open air meetings.

Congressman Jerry Voorhis, of California, an Episcopalian, is to be the headliner at a meeting in East Orange, N. J. on the cooperative movement tomorrow evening, October 12

The Methodist Church in Germany did not suffer as much persecution at the hands of the Nazis as the German Evangelical Church, but was severely affected by bombings and the break up of parishes in evacuated areas. Before the war there were 55,000 members and 45,000 sympathizers, 1,000 places of worship, 300 ministers, 1,200 lay preachers, and 33,000 Sunday school members.

Unique Experiment Is Launched In New England Town

The Rev. Philip Steinmetz Engaged to Serve Episcopalians and Also Congregationalists

By Sara Dill

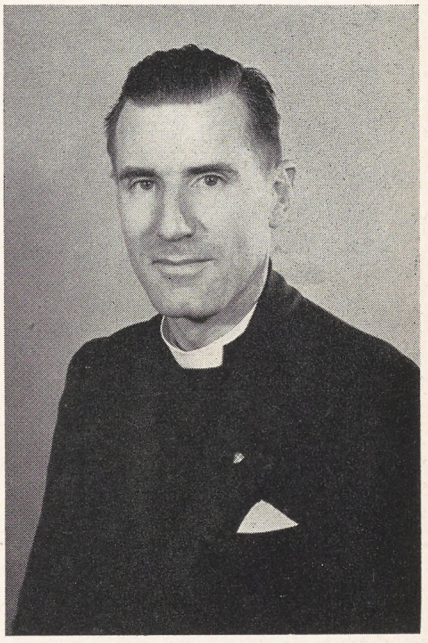
Ashland, Mass.:—Across the countryside of the U.S.A. are hundreds of communities, large and small, each with several churches. Many of these churches cannot give full-time support to a clergyman as their leader in the service of God in their community. Often, therefore, one clergyman directs the work in two or more churches of the same denomination in towns not too far separated. In many cases there is no resident, full-time leader in the Christian church is a town though there may be two or more churches there. Each has the part-time leadership of a man who lives in some neighboring town. Or if the part-time parson lives in the town, he has obligations out of town which force him to scatter his ammunition and energies.

In some of these communities far more effective Christian leadership would be provided by some sort of working arrangement between the several churches in town whereby one half a Methodist, one quarter an Episcopalian, one half a Baptist, one half a Congregationalist, and sundry other fragments could be united in one or more full-time resident ministers.

This end has been achieved in many instances by federating or combining several churches. But there are many instances where this is not acceptable and there are cases when this course leads to the forming of just another denomination "The Federated Church" and cuts off the local church from worldwide missions, the main purpose of having organized Christian groups.

In some of these communities, not able or willing to combine churches or for those who feel that the Federated Church has more defects than advantages another plan is being tried involving no drastic change in existing church life but rather a common planning so that the same man is called to two or more churches of different denominations and is authorized to officiate in each church according to its laws and customs while remaining still in good standing in the church of his original membership.

Such an arrangement has been worked out and is to be tried for the next year in Ashfield, Mass. In this ancient and attractive New England village there are two Christian churches, St. John's Episcopal Church and the Congregational Church of Ashfield. Both have long histories of friendly service of God in the community. Neither is strong enough to maintain a full-time, resident leader. Under the guidance of the Rt. Rev. Wm. A. Lawrence and the cabinet of the Congregational Church in Ashfield a plan has been formulated whereby a clergyman of the Episcopal Church, the Rev. Philip H. Steinmetz, is to serve as vicar of St. John's and as pastor of the Congregational Church. By virtue of his ordination in the Episcopal Church he is able to officiate in the Congregational Church when officially called as pastor thereof. He has been so called and has accepted the call and on October 1st officially entered upon his work in Ashfield.



The result of this arrangement will be that the community will have one resident clergyman under whose leadership such activities as can best be carried on by both churches working together can be so arranged. Those things which are distinctive in each church and if abandoned would result in a loss to the cause of Christ can be maintained separately. The wisdom required to decide into which category a specific activity falls must come from the Holy Spirit working through the leaders of both churches.

It is planned at the outset that there will be a service in each church each Sunday. It is likely that the Church schools will be combined. When there is a fifth Sunday in the month there will be one service only, alternating between the two churches so that members of each will be having direct experience of worshipping together. The financial affairs of each church are to be kept distinct as is also the relationship to national and foreign missionary work of each denomination.

The whole arrangement is subject to revision and change in the light of the experience gained in working under it.

LEXINGTON PLANS CONSECRATION

Lexington, Ky.: — The Rev. William R. Moody of Baltimore will be consecrated Bishop of Lexington at Christ Church here on October 24th. The Presiding Bishop will be the consecrator with Bishop Clingman of Kentucky and Bishop Maxon of Tennessee the co-consecrators. SEABURY-WESTERN OPENS

Evanston, Ill.: — Seabury-Western Seminary opened on October 7th with 23 men admitted as members of the student body. Bishop Keeler of Minnesota was the speaker at the service. Accredited to receive veterans under the G.I. bill of rights, the Seminary already has a number of returned servicemen enrolled. A special program of study and training has been inaugurated for them which will accelerate the training without reducing the scholastic standard of the school. Dean Alden

OVER QUARTER MILLION FOR LOUISIANA

New Orleans:—The victory fund drive in the diocese of Louisiana has reached $257,256 and is expected to exceed $275,000. The sum sought was $250,000. St. James', Alexandria, and Trinity, New Orleans, each gave over $30,000. The money is to be used largely to develop Church work in colleges of the state.

BISHOPS' SALARIES STUDIED

New York:—A committee is to be appointed by the Presiding Bishop to study the salary scale of missionary bishops and others on the payroll of the National Council. The report will be made at the meeting of the Council in February, 1946.

MISSIONARY WORK IN KOREA

New York:—The Presiding Bishop informed the National Council that the Church of England, through the Archbishop of Canterbury, has suggested that the Episcopal Church take over the responsibility for a part of their work in Korea. The matter is being studied by officers at 281.

DESTROYED CHURCH REBUILT

Auburndale, Mass.:—The Church of the Messiah here, destroyed by fire two years ago, has been completely rebuilt and was dedicated on September 30th by Bishop Merrill. A large part of the parish house also has been completed and the rectory remodeled. The Rev. Richard P. McClintock has been the rector since 1938. The first young people's fellowship in the diocese was organized here in 1919. It was also in this church that Horation Parker, famed organist and composer, first played a church organ in 1880.

MEDICAL STUDENTS GET ADVICE

London (wireless to RNS):—Speaking to medical students at Westminster Hospital's Medical School here, Geoffrey Francis Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury, likened the doctor's profession to that of a priest. He invited the students to Lambeth Palace where, he said, he would be glad "in some suitable form to commission them to the ministry."

The Archbishop stressed that the social responsibility of medical science was discharged above all in its service to the family, and that problems of marriage and sex were among the most important with which the medical profession had to deal.

In this field, he added, people look for advice from the doctor which they might equally seek from the priest, because the two were dealing with the most intimate, important, and personal matters.

Asking if medical students were trained to give skillful understanding and advice in those problems, the Archbishop said he had the impression that many doctors handled these matters without studying the ethical or theological problem behind them or, what was more important, their sociological aspects.

FIRE IN BISHOP'S RESIDENCE

New Orleans:—Small children forced their way into the home of Bishop Jackson, unoccupied at the time, and started a number of small fires, principally in the upper floor, by lighting candles. They made efforts apparently to extinguish them but without success, and becoming frightened left the house without giving warning. The fire department was called by a neighbor who saw smoke and the flames were brought under control before serious damage was done. The children, about ten years of age, later confessed their part in the fire but were unable to give any connected story of their activities.

CONVOCATION OF NORTH DAKOTA

Devils Lake, N. D.:—Friendly Anglo-American relationships were stressed by Archdeacon George R. Calvert of Winnipeg at the dinner held in connection with the convocation of North Dakota held here last week. He also pleaded for a Christian witness, stating that "all the questions have been asked; it is time now for the Church to give the answer. We have been given a second opportunity for witnessing not for questioning." Bishop Atwill in his address emphasized the necessity of frankly facing our social and economic problems.

A resolution was passed urging that the commission on marriage and divorce of General Convention consider the advisability of providing a canon which would make it unlawful for any member of the Episcopal Church to sign a premarital agreement binding the signatory to bring up children in any other religious instruction than that of the Episcopal Church.

And here you have the first election for deputies to the General Convention of 1946: the Rev. G. M. Armstrong of Jamestown and Mr. A. S. King of Fargo. Alternates: the Rev. A. E. Smith of Bismark and Mr. J. G. McCutcheon of Valley City.

A Weapon For Peace?

THE reverberations of the atomic bomb are still being heard in our land, long after the radio activity has all but stopped in Hiroshima. The hue and cry has not died for even yet the pulpit voice is raised here and there to decry the fact that the United States officials made their decision to use that means of warfare. The use of the bomb has lowered the morality of a nation, one preacher states. Another ecclesiastic claims that civilization has been set back by hundreds of years.

What about it? Was the use of the atomic bomb immoral, was it degrading? What are the arguments most generally used?

The first argument against its use seems to be that it was "unsporting." A preacher quotes an old line general who compares the use of the bomb to the act of shooting an animal that is tied without giving it a "sporting chance" to run. Frankly, the idea of sportsmanship which uses a high powered rifle to shoot a defenseless and unsuspecting deer leaves many persons a little cold. And most men approve of tying up a mad dog and putting him out of the way with one well-aimed shot. But that's beside the point, for the real point concerns the sporting attitude toward war. It's time we realized that war isn't a grand sport, a jousting match in which we must be careful about our sportsmanship. The day of chivalry is over. War is hell and there's no such thing as a half-way hell. The sooner we realize this the sooner we'll recognize war for what it is and the better chance we'll have to rid humanity of its scourge.

A second point which is often made is that the killing of civilians is so inhumane. Why is it more inhumane to kill civilians than it is to kill men of the armed forces? In the eyes of God the life of a man with a pack on his back and a rifle in his hand is just as valuable as the life of a man in an office or cocktail lounge, or of a woman cleaning house or playing bridge. Why should one group of men be singled out to be in danger of death because they are of a certain age and of sound health and all the others who have stomach ulcers or bald heads be safe at home where it's considered inhumane to drop bombs.

Total war is one of the greatest forces for peace. As ministers and as peace-makers we can say, "Bomb the cities and let our cities be bombed." When the war-mongers and war-profiteers are in as much danger as those they vote to send to the front, then the rulers will think more carefully before they entangle their nations in war.

For a Christian death lacks much of being the greatest of evils. As we all must one day die we leave to God the determining of our purpose in life and in death. We who live in the knowledge of the resurrection of Jesus Christ are willing to give our lives for the cause of bringing his Kingdom on Earth, when the need should arise. But we are far from believing that war is his method.

"QUOTES"

TO THE VICTORS belong awful, almost overwhelming responsibilities in the building of a broken world, the desolate and disjointed nations, and the defeated nations. We have a tremendous task—calling for vision and work, and for wise planning and patient effort. And, second, is this. If ever a generation has been taught the awful tragedy of one of humanity's root problems, it is this generation. Root problem—what is that? That of war. This time we know—that awful atomic bomb, the prolonged and tragic sorrow of nearly six years of war, has taught us this,—that if we cannot learn to get along with each other we must die. War now means surely the end of the human race. And war is just the extreme illustration of that which sometimes devastates a home, a Church, a community, a country. The quarrel at the crossroads, and World War II are members of the same family. We have been told in the Bible, from Cain and Abel to the end of Revelation, that quarrels mean death. All history illustrates it. The atomic bomb clinches the matter. We have to learn to get on with one another, or be destroyed.

St. Luke Stayed

WE COMMEMORATE on October 18th St. Luke the Evangelist. He was a man of exceptional ability. He was a physician. He wrote the gospel which bears his name and the Acts of the Apostles. He embraced and eagerly proclaimed the Christian faith. But what is most impressive about him was revealed by St. Paul who wrote from his prison cell, "Only Luke is with me." St. Paul's other companions had left him—Demas because he loved this present world, and Crescens and Titus for undisclosed reasons. Luke, too, might have had reasons for leaving; there were many sick who needed his skill. But St. Paul was in trouble. His prison cell may not have been as grim as Dachau, but he was alone, his life was in peril, and he hungered for human companionship. And St. Luke stayed with him!

It is not easy to be that kind of a friend. Not all people have a gift or capacity for great friendships. It takes a depth of patience, insight, and sympathy beyond the endowment of the run of the mill person. Yet all of us could do better than we do. We would not rebuke Crescens and Titus for leaving. It is quite possible that they went at the insistence of St. Paul on urgent Church business. But St. Luke was on urgent Church business, too! He was staying faithfully with his Christian brother in an hour of need. This example of St. Luke is a welcome reminder that friendship is urgent Church business. The clergy, often burdened with administrative responsibility or preoccupied with making worship vital in the life of the parish, need this reminder. The laity need it, too! So often lonely people hungry for human companionship pass through the portals of our churches with never a word or sign of friendliness. In the neighborhoods in which we live there are many distressed, bereaved, lonely people. Wooing them out of their unhappy isolation is not the easiest task in the world. It taxes imagination, resources and sympathy. But it is urgent Church business. And the man who loves his Lord will find this love sufficient incentive to try to be the kind of a friend St. Luke was. One wonders what would happen in this world if all of us who call ourselves Christians were to cultivate St. Luke's brand and quality of friendship!

How To Treat Returning Soldiers

by Brig. Gen. Luther D. Miller

Army Chief of Chaplains

OUR fighting men are returning to civilian life. They have served honorably; they answered when their country called; went where they were sent; stayed where they were put; and did what they were told to do. The public is asking the question, "What shall we do with and for the veteran?" One prominent factor in this inclusive question is the emotional, mental, and physical condition of the returning veteran. The approach to this question is warped when one thinks primarily of the veteran as a problem.

Wherever the veteran has been fighting there is no doubt that he will be returning from experiences which have affected his mind and feelings, and his outlook on life will probably be altered by what he has seen, suffered, and done. But, to take the attitude that consideration of the veteran should be based on regarding him as a problem is to make a bad beginning.

A better start is to regard the soldier as normal. The twenty-year-old lad who has been away from home a couple of years and wears a Purple Heart for a sacrifice in combat is not the carefree boy he was, but certainly he can be considered a normal man. Exposure to danger and the assumption of hourly and daily responsibilities have made him older than his years. Treat this as a fact but not as a problem.

The number of men with psychiatric disorders of such a degree of severity as to make impossible normal living will be relatively few. The overwhelming majority of the veterans will return to civilian life with a capacity for sustained duty and a passion for the blessings of a normal life with home and family. It must be remembered that these men have met the exacting demands of separation from home, regimentation, lack of privacy, extremes of climate, hunger, exhaustion, and the danger of bodily injury. To assume that they will fail now is to go from the sublime to the ridiculous.

In his army service, a veteran has demonstrated ability to get along well with associates and chance acquaintances and to observe the rules and regulations without any impairment of initiative or aggressiveness. He may not have the conventional standards and attitudes of the community he left, but his attitudes and standards will not be lowered but will be broadened and more adaptable.

A profit can be found in the sharpening of his intelligence and in the stability that he has acquired from the responsibility of army service. To think of the veteran as being emotionally unstable, unreliable, and as possessing psychopathic tendencies when he has demonstrated such durable characteristics during his service is to prove oneself a very poor observer and analyst.

THE veteran will possess tenacity of purpose and in most instances will have learned to fix definite objectives for his post-war life. The very process of selective service in which the fit are chosen is an important factor to be considered in thinking of the veteran as a picked man rather than a problem.

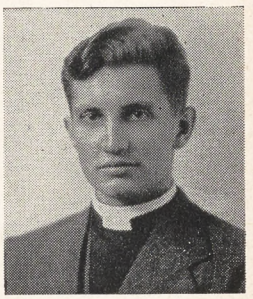
Fortunately, unwarranted is most of the apprehension concerning disturbed personality, which we called shell shock in the last war. Most disturbed personalities were that way, potentially, or in a degree, when they joined the colors. They will go back to homes and communities which understand them. They can be absorbed rather easily. Disfigured bodies, and the mental conflict that may accompany them, will need careful, prayerful handling. Here is a field for the finest of guidance. The vast majority of returnees to their old homes will slip back into community life with the aid of understanding kinsfolk and friends.

And so, when the soldier returns, he will not fit a generalization. He may be coming from the swampy, malaria-infected South Pacific. He may come from glamorous Hawaii. He may come from peaceful Panama. He may come from the fogs of London, with its nerve-racking buzz-bombs and flying telephone poles, or he may come from an action field in Normandy or the Rhineland. It may be that he comes from a prison camp, where he was "detained by the enemy." Do I make my point that forty lads coming back from forty fronts may have had forty very different experiences? The little homeside church, that bade them Godspeed and a safe return so many months ago, will have to deal with them as individuals.

A word of reassurance might well be spoken concerning those who suffer from combat fatigue. This assurance is found in the following statement issued by the surgeon general's office: "Colonel William C. Menninger, chief, division of neuropsychiatry, surgeon general's office, says that thus far in the war we have returned to duty with their units after a brief treatment behind the lines sixty per cent of the fighting men suffering from combat fatigue. Seventy-five per cent of the remainder have been returned to further duty in the army and a very high percentage of the balance to normal civilian living."

Thus, when one views these figures the reaction should be one of optimism and hope rather than of gloom and despair. Yes, some will come back disabled and handicapped, but we must not underestimate the fortitude of spirit and its healing capacity. Don't sell the battle-tested veteran short in the inner life. He will make it.



Editor's Note: This is preliminary to the series of articles by Servicemen on "It's Over: So Now What?" in which chaplains, officers and enlisted men will present their ideas of what sort of a world they want, now that the war is over, and what they think the Church can do about it. The article next week will be by the Rev. Ernest A. deBordenave, navy chaplain, who was in combat in both the European and Pacific theaters.

By

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

I RECENTLY finished reading Dorothy Sayers' series of radio scripts entitled The Man Born to Be King. These short dramas deal with the Gospel story in a fashion that is both modern and vital and, when presented over the B.B.C., aroused a great deal of interest and comment in Great Britain. Some thought that it was sacrilegious to have an actor portray Our Lord on the radio; others stoutly defended the experiment. Unless I am mistaken, the argument even had its day in the House of Commons. But, certain it is, the short plays aroused more interest in the life of Christ and his message of redemption than a whole century of sermons in English churches.

The plays were sponsored jointly by the Church of England, with the late Archbishop William Temple taking a leading part in representing the Church, and the British Broadcasting Company. Miss Sayers, who is notorious both for her Peter Wimsey detective stories and her solid books on theology, put in many hours of original research before writing the plays and then had the scripts edited by some of the leading writers in England. A top-notch director and a carefully chosen cast of professionals were employed to give the programs the best possible production. In other words, the whole project was handled as a major radio adventure and as a work of art. It brought overwhelmingly good results—the British people were interested.

In this country, we have some fine radio writers —men like Norman Corwin, Arch Oboler and Les Weinrott—and new ones are coming forward all the time; we have some excellent radio actors; Orson Welles, Martin Gabel, Arnold Moss and Susan Peters; and all of our seminaries have expert theologians and biblical scholars. Being patriotic, I would like to state that if England can do it, we can do it also. Therefore, I would like to make a suggestion.

Suppose 281 call a moratorium on all paper work that issues forth from that office in one year and, as is usually the case, finds its way to assorted waste-baskets. The money saved could then be put into a really fine radio program, written, produced and acted by the best talent money can buy. Then, we can all sit back and watch what happens. My guess is that we would find, along with the English, that the radio is a wide-open, yet unexplored, channel for spreading the Kingdom.

_Mythology_. By Edith Hamilton. Little, Brown, $3.50.

This is the way a book on mythology should be written! Edith Hamilton is a most accomplished interpreter of classical life and thought, and she writes a clear and attractive style. She stresses the important thing, with the result that the student, the casual reader, the boy or girl interested in the old tales will see them in their full splendor and feel their full fascination. Too much writing on mythology has been pedantic, and has lost the main thread in tangled thickets of detail—especially when every fancy and turn of imagination of a late poet has been duly catalogued. Miss Hamilton sticks to the Greeks, in the main; Ovid is recognized as what he is—an artificial reworker of the old tales, and one who did not believe there was a word of truth in them!

Miss Hamilton insists, quite properly, that the myths did not form the substance of Greek religion; they are secondary, explanatory, and are more akin to science than to religion—i.e. as a rational and satisfying account of the whys and wherefors, in relation to natural phenomena. And they are far from primitive: relatively to primitive thinking, primitive social life, primitive religion, these myths are really modern! Finally, they are human: it was characteristic of the Greeks that they humanized everything they handled, even their gods. Compared with the gross and dreadful deities of Egypt and the Near East, compared with their early chthonic powers, the Olympians are a family of cultivated aristocrats, with the virtues and the vices of an aristocracy. But they are human, intensely and completely human.

These old stories will never cease to fascinate us; and they have never been better told, in English prose. The illustrations, by Steele Savage, are superb, and catch the authentic Greek feeling of the myths—some of them are majestic, a few of them charming, many of them simply terrifying and overwhelming, where men and even gods are pitted against the brute forces of the universe.

Why Man Works

By

RANDOLPH CRUMP MILLER

Of the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific

THE attitude of some men toward work is that it should be avoided. This antipathy is based on two factors: the old class distinctions and laziness.

Until recent times, the "gentleman" was one who did not have to work. He had servants (or slaves) to cater to his every wish; and while he might follow some hobby or other, he did no constructive work. The laborer was patronized because he was necessary for the comfort of the gentleman; but there was no social equality. Privileges were reserved for the leisure class, and a social stigma was placed on labor.

In America conditions were never as bad as in Europe. Pioneer conditions made the "gentleman" a useless luxury, although we still secretly admire the man who has made enough to take it easy. Many look forward to the day when they can retire and become a gentleman in the medieval sense, but this is a hangover from the social snobbishness of the old days.

The second reason why work is frowned upon is the natural laziness of many people. An occupation is a necessary evil, but they believe they would be happier if they could refrain from work.

Of course no self-respecting worker admits these things. He does not believe he is a snob or that he is essentially lazy. These feelings are disguised by various other excuses.

His snobbishness is hidden by his feeling that his particular task is below him. He does not deserve to be a clerk; he should be an office manager (with the authority over others and the time for golf which it allows). He should not be a welder; he should be a foreman. A young wife thinks it nobler if she works outside and has someone else do the housework, which is somehow beneath her. Or one's job does not challenge the creative genius which is being wasted. Or the doctor, lawyer, or preacher thinks he should have wealthier patients, clients, or parishioners; these poor people are all right, but they do not bring out the best in them. Or again, "Just wait until I make my pile—so I can retire and have servants do just what I want." And of course we are not too lazy to work; "Why look at the time I spend in my victory garden (after loafing in the office all day). I have so much energy and take vitamin pills, but I need more time off or I'll have a nervous breakdown."

Christianity has always been a religion for working people. We have misinterpreted the fourth commandment and have argued endlessly about keeping the Sabbath, but the other part of the commandment is equally important: "Six days shalt thou labor" (or five).

Men, being weak, need an incentive to work. In the first Christian community, they pooled their resources and then worked to support the community. This was WPA psychology and did not pan out. You will recall what Paul wrote to them: "If any man will not work, neither let him eat. For we hear that some among you are disorderly, but work not at all—and are busybodies." Jesus associated himself with working people. A carpenter himself, he sought out fellow-laborers to assist him.

When we see work as a necessary part of living, as something creative and vital, as giving meaning to life, then we can no longer think of escaping it. Some labor with their hands, others with their brains, and some perhaps with their mouths. But we recall that:

> All labor gained new dignity
> Since he who all creation made
> Toiled with his hands for daily bread
> Right manfully. (Hymn 510)

Professor D. C. Macintosh of Yale recounts this story of his arrival from Canada. "As we neared the American border, an American immigration official came around, asking the usual questions:

'Are you a citizen of the United States?' I was not.

'Are you going to reside in the United States?' I was.

'Are you going to work?' 'Yes.'

'Have you got a job?' This, too, had to be answered in the affirmative.

'Where were you when the contract was made?' I had to say, 'I was in Canada.'

'Well! You can't go farther. You must get off the train.' I smiled incredulously.

'Yes, I meant it! You must get off at the next station. You are violating the alien labor law.'

'That's very strange,' I replied. 'The President of the United States (Taft) was a member of the corporation that hired me.'

"The officer eyed me narrowly. 'What are you going to do?' he asked. I answered apologetically that I was going to be a professor at Yale University.

'Oh, well!' said the agent, 'if you're going to be a professor, that's all right. I thought you said you were going to work!' "

THERE are many ideas of work, and the test is not whether we have a job where we work with hands or brains, or, preferably, both; it is not even a question of salary or wages. A certain university professor, when pitied for the smallness of his salary, replied: "If I were able, I should be glad to pay for the privilege of doing what the university pays me to do."

When we see work in this way, it has value which no other activity can possess. It is what gives daily living its integration and meaning. It saves us from despair and anxiety, from the sense of uselessness and meaninglessness and frustration. People who have lost loved ones find escape from worry, anxiety, and self-pity in work. A self-absorbing activity gives healthy extraversion to our thinking, and saves us from looking inward and from the constant, unhealthy examination of our souls.

But work is not all glory, not all fulfillment of integration, not all even escape from self-pity. Some work is plain drudgery, some is needless, some is purely on a monetary basis. We need three tests to determine whether what we are doing can be called work in the Christian sense. It is a problem of vocation, of being called by God to this task. Professor Robert Calhoun has asked these questions:

Is what I am doing truly needful? Not every occupation is needed by society, and in wartime many tasks are classified as non-essential. But, we ask, in the long run and in normal times, is my job an intelligent effort to meet the needs of other human beings. Have I taken what I am able to do, and made it of service to my fellow man? Is it more important that I do this job for less money or in less desirable circumstances—be it soldiering, coal mining, preaching, digging ditches, or keeping house? And if I am not now doing needful work, can I learn to do a needed task?

Does my job do justice to me? Is it a job where I can develop my best efforts and abilities and potentialities? Will it make me a better person? Every man does not have the same capacities. Lou Gehrig became great in baseball and stands for American character at its best. George Washington Carver was a great scientist who developed his capacities in spite of almost impossible handicaps of rare prejudice and lack of opportunity. Abraham Lincoln rose to the presidency in spite of limitations of background and formal education. And Brother Lawrence washed dishes for the glory of God. All are called by God to work, but as he has endowed many with varying capacities, so he calls them to different tasks.

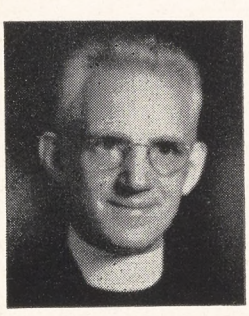
Does my work contribute to the betterment of the world in which I live? Is my work a form of competition which serves my profits, or does it contribute to the common welfare? I have made myself needed, but is it for the best?

This last question brings the whole competitive system under survey. The impersonal machines of modern industrialism, with monopoly and efficiency as key words, do not contribute to the common welfare. They block new markets and new developments, they treat men as machines, labor as a commodity, and customers as empty bags to be filled. Until employers and labor union leaders learn to treat workers as persons (and not just through speeches from the boss as "dear friends" the workers), industry is going to find it difficult to fulfill the third requirement — that our work should contribute to the common welfare. And there is also another problem—that of providing opportunities for creative work within our society; for when there is a shortage of jobs, and a man must work in order to eat, he cannot worry much about whether it is needful, creative, or contributive to the common welfare.



So we are called of God to do needful work, to fulfill our own destiny in the light of our capacity, and to contribute to the common welfare, and this challenges the Church to teach the right kind of vocation in the right kind of an economic system.

For Church Schools

By

WILLIAM GRIME

ONCE again many of us have begun a new year of teaching children the creed, the Lord's Prayer, Church history, the sacraments, their values and uses. During this year you will be urged to remember the old maxim "practice makes perfect." What this phrase really means is that practice in learning is inclined to yield either good or poor results. Therefore, I urge the use of this great law with care. Why?

Because while you are geting your children to learn and use the creed, the catechism or scripture, if in the learning process you cause irritations to arise, these irritations will tend to become sealed into your children's future reactions to the creed, etc., and teaching practices of that kind will be a long way from perfect. Let me give you an illustration or two.

Here is a conscientious teacher questioning twelve-year-olds on their duty towards God. She insists her boys keep still and learn this material by repeating its phrases over and over. Then she would test them one by one and if their answers were not correct she would sternly scold them. Well, what do you think happened one Sunday as she asked a boy his question? He answered, "My duty is to get out of his way," and the scene which followed resulted in the loss to the Church of that boy. He was so stung by such teaching that he wanted no more of the God she was revealing.

Here is another teacher getting her girls to learn the Venite. The rector had said it must be learned for on children's day the class was to recite it for their parents. (Not for the glory of God but for their parents.) So a few weeks before this special service, while checking as to who in the class knew this canticle, she came to one girl who said it perfectly and then asked the next girl to recite. She halted badly so the teacher said, "Aren't you a bit ashamed you can't do this as well as Jane?" Whereupon the girl who came from a home where there was little interest in religion broke down crying and left the classroom so that when she was in her twenties she remarked, "It's strange but I've never liked the Venite, I am always glad when we are past it in worship services."

Now call these illustrations childishness if you will, but remember that does not destroy the damaging facts here.

Neither let this discourage you, but rather let it put you more on your guard, for I could give teachers many illustrations of rectors who have done something like it, and I am no doubt guilty myself.

What I want us to see here is this: we are to strive to keep a happy friendly relaxed atmosphere in our classes; to keep our tempers under control; to avoid being looked upon as just drill masters; we are never to use the sarcastic or shame motives for the consequences of such tend to get sealed into children's future reactions to their Christian experience within the Church. Therefore and with emphasis, let me urge us to take deeper care of our life of worship, for without the grace received therefrom, none of us are wise enough, calm enough or steady enough to teach in any classroom.

Episcopal and Presbyterian Laymen Demand Unity

Call on Vestries and Other Church Bodies To Pass Resolutions to Be Sent to Leaders

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Montclair, N. J.: — Lay members of the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches here have determined that the proposals for unity between their two communions shall not die of inertia. A joint committee of six laymen was formed, three Presbyterians and three Episcopalians. They arranged a meeting for members of the two churches, with the Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin speaking as a Presbyterian and the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel as an Episcopalian. In spite of bad weather the meeting was largely attended. One Episcopal layman, Mr. Merritt F. Farren, commented as follows about the meeting: "Those who think the laymen of the churches are uninterested are mistaken. People do not go out in bad weather to attend a church meeting unless they are in earnest."

One result of the meeting was a joint statement which was sent to the Presiding Bishop; the Rev. Franklin J. Clark, secretary of the House of Bishops; the chairman of the commission on unity; and to the convention of the diocese of Newark. The statement follows:

"(1) We believe that Church unity is not merely a matter of preference. It is the duty of Christians to unite. Disunity is a sign of spiritual separateness, weakness, and ineffectiveness. As a step toward complete unity, we believe that the Episcopal and Presbyterian communions should unite.

"(2) A proper basis for unity, which should be satisfactory to any reasonable person, may be found if there is a will to find that basis.

"(3) If the laymen of both communions indicate their interest and determination that unity shall be achieved, the means to that end will be found.

"We, therefore, call upon our fellow churchmen in both communions to express their conviction that the basis for such unity can and should be found and such unity achieved.

"The Episcopal members of the committee with humility express their belief that the failure to make more rapid progress is due largely to the Episcopal Church. They, therefore, recommend the adoption by the Episcopal vestries and other church bodies of the following resolution:

" 'RESOLVED: (1) We believe that union with Presbyterian Church should be effected. (2) We call upon the joint commission to agree upon reasonable terms for such union, and report without further delay. (3) We call upon the General Convention, both lay and clerical delegates, to take such action as may be necessary and desirable to effect such union.' "

Leaders' Training School

Louisville: — A Church leaders' training school was held here, September 24-26, with five courses offered on various phases of church work. Over 100 attended. The dean was the Rev. E. Thomas Rodda of St. Stephen's. Similar schools, with the same leaders, are to be held October 15, 16 and 17 at Henderson, Paducah and Bowling Green.

Parish Celebrates

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.:—Bethesda Church here celebrates its 115th anniversary on October 15th. A feature is the fulfillment of the centennial endowment fund which began 15 years ago under the direction of the Church Life Insurance Corporation, a subsidiary of the Church Pension Fund. Both Bishop Oldham and Bishop Barry take part in the celebration. The rector is the Rev. Irving G. Rouillard who has served the parish since 1917.

Prohibit Divorce News

Sydney, Australia (wireless to RNS): — Plans of the New South Wales government to introduce legislation prohibiting publication of salacious evidence in divorce court cases has been greeted with satisfaction by Australian churchmen. The proposed bill is patterned after similar measures in England, and in Victoria, South Australia, where press reports are restricted to the names of the parties involved, the grounds for the petition, the result of the suit, and the remarks of the trial judge. During the war, the tendency of even conservative Australian newspapers was to publish the most intimate details of family troubles.

Install Bishop

Phoenix, Ariz.:—Bishop Kinsolving was installed as Bishop of Arizona at a service held at the cathedral here in connection with the three day convocation of the district which opened October 9th. The service was arranged by Dean E. S. Lane and Canon Dowell and was followed by a tea and reception for Bishop and Mrs. Kinsolving.

Claim Two Million

Los Angeles:—Spiritual Mobilization, Inc., generally considered a thoroughly reactionary organization that is using the guise of religion to put over its program, claims now to have over two million laymen as members, and 1,731 clergymen from 19 denominations. The organization claims to champion basic freedoms but observers agree that the stress is upon "free enterprise."

Large Registration

New York:—Union Seminary announces the largest enrollment of graduate students in the history of the institution—one hundred and sixty one. The Rev. Frederick C. Grant, professor at Union and editor of THE WITNESS, is the chairman of the faculty's committee on graduate students.

No Action Taken

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—The World Council of Churches has not been officially informed of proposals for German church leaders to visit Allied countries, W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary, declared here. His statement contradicted a report from London that the Council has turned down a recommendation of this nature made by Dr.

Theophil Wurm of Wurttemberg, head of the new Evangelical Church of Germany.

"The World Council has not received a request from German church leaders to visit the Allied world," Visser 't Hooft declared. "Therefore, the Council has not had the opportunity for favorable or unfavorable action on such a reported request."

He stated that the Council is in constant touch with German church leaders through several secretaries and hopes to have representatives at the first full council meeting of the new German Church on October 18.

Historic Flags

Edinburgh (wireless to RNS):—Two historic, smoke-begrimed flags of world war II were delivered to the custody of St. Giles' Cathedral here in a solemn service that was without precedent in the annals of the Cathedral.

The banners consisted of the white ensign of HMS Warspite, which was flown at the mainmast of Admiral Sir Arthur Cunningham's flagship at the battle of Matapan in 1941, and the red ensign of the maritime service which was worn by the Queen Elizabeth during wartime voyages in the Atlantic and Pacific.

With the King and Queen and Princesses of England looking on, the flags were borne through the nave of the Cathedral and presented to the Dean of Thistle, Charles L. Warr.

Rare Bible

New York (RNS):—A first edition of the "Martin Luther Bible" has been unearthed deep in the cellars of the Reformed Evangelical Church in Warsaw, according to a report received here by the Polish Press Agency. The Bible contains Luther's translation of the Scriptures from Hebrew into German and was printed under his direction more than 400 years ago.

Another find was two copies of the first Bible translated into Polish for the Calvinist denomination, under the patronage of the famous Radziwill family, which later became converted to Roman Catholicism. Dated 1563, these are known as the Bizesc Bibles and are especially rare.

Record Congregations

Berlin (wireless to RNS):—Record congregations attending Thanksgiving Day services here heard appeals from pastors to share their slim rations with more than a million refugees from eastern provinces. At Johannes Church in Lichterfelde suburb, worshippers dropped their offerings into great baskets, some bringing slices of bread, others a handful of potatoes or other vegetables. The church was so packed that several hundred who had come to hear Bishop Otto Dibelius, Berlin's most popular Evangelical preacher, had to be turned away.

"From the human standpoint," Bishop Dibelius declared, "we know that several million of our people will not survive this winter. In eastern Germany, those farmers still on their farms behold empty stalls and bins and fields going to weeds because farm implements were carried away."

He said that in the province of Brandenberg, of which he is Evangelical Church superintendent, "pastors are preaching their Thanksgiving sermons today seated in chairs because they are starving."

"Yet gratitude to God is given the Christian both as a duty and as a goal," the bishop continued. "We do not pray for more than daily bread. We pray neither for fuel for the winter, nor for the dwellings we once had. Poverty is nothing new to Christians. They know that neither poverty nor riches separate us from the love of God in Christ."

"Nevertheless, poverty can poison the mind just as prosperity can atrophy moral responsibility. Of himself, man has no claim even on subsistence living. The most meagre daily bread is God's gift of grace, and the church in this hour calls on the people to use this experience of hunger to draw close to One who is the true bread of life."

Bishop Dibelius stressed the social consciousness reflected by the Lord's Prayer in the phrase, "Give us our daily bread." He recalled that in a small Brandenberg town he visited recently he found the pastor and the entire congregation working together to provide relief for hundreds of refugees passing daily through the town. Every day, he said, dozens of children, too weak to continue in flight with their parents, are being turned over to care of the parish.

Now Its Finland

Helsinki (wireless to RNS):—Archbishop Grigorii of Pskov and Porkhov has been named by Patriarch Alexei, head of the Russian Orthodox Church, to visit Finland and report on conditions in Greek Orthodox churches there. It was reported that the Russian prelate, who is in charge of the Leningrad diocese, will seek to establish closer ties between the Moscow Patriarchate and Finnish Orthodox communions.

New York Conference

New York:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York; Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council; the Rev. Shirley C. Hughson of the Order of the Holy Cross are to speak at a conference of the clergy of the diocese of New York on October 22. The theme of the meeting is the advance fund, with the Presiding Bishop also on the agenda to explain what the appeal means to the Church.

Laymen Promote Unity

been accepted by the Hon. Mr. Justice Roy L. Kellock, of the Supreme Court of Canada.

It is planned to have an ecumenical lay gathering simultaneously with next year's convention of the Canadian Council. It is also hoped to hold lay retreats in the provincial capitals to keep laymen in touch with the ecumenical movement. The Primate of All Canada, the Most Rev. Derwyn T. Owen, has appealed to 36 bishops of the Church of England in Canada to aid the movement.

Steps have been taken to unite the Social Council of Canada and the Canadian Council of Churches into one incorporated body. Up to the present, the Social Council has been an autonomous body functioning for the Council of Churches in social matters.

Interracial Council

Seattle:—Formation of a city-wide interracial council under the leadership of the Seattle Council of Churches was approved at a two-day interracial clinic opened here by Mayor William F. Devin. The clinic was attended by 380 representatives of 175 organizations and agencies, including 100 churches.

It was agreed that the interracial council's program of action should be directed against restrictive housing covenants affecting Negro, Japanese, Chinese, and Filipino minorities in Seattle, and toward seeking collaboration of federal agencies in the rehousing of returning Japanese-Americans.

Delegates also urged support for state and federal fair employment practice legislation, and called upon the national association of real estate boards to change residential codes discriminating against racial groups.

Bishop Sherrill

Boston:—A service of thanksgiving is to be held at Trinity Church on the evening of October 14th in recognition of the 15th anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Henry K. Sherrill.

Urges Unity

Toronto (RNS):—The world unity movement will not be effective unless it operates locally as well as internationally was a warning sounded at the second annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Churches. The sessions were presided over by Archbishop Owen, primate of the Church of England in Canada, who was elected president for another term at the closing session. The warning came from the Rev. William Barclay, former moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, who urged that all denominations be urged to join the Council. Attending the meeting as fraternal delegates from the United States were the Rev. Henry Smith Leiper of the World Council of Churches and the Rev. Roswell Barnes, associate general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches.

Diocesan School

Boston: — Sixteen varied courses are offered at the diocesan school, being held at the cathedral for eight weekly sessions. There are three unusual features, in addition to the intensive training offered Church school teachers. A course on sermon preparation is being given by the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Trinity. A laboratory class in which pupils will be taught by a teacher from the weekday Church schools is offered. There is also a course on industrial relations, with leaders of labor and management taking part, directed by the social service secretary of the diocese, the Rev. Howard P. Kellett. Similar schools are being held this month at Wrentham, New Bedford and Salem.

Ministerial Association

Fairbanks, Alaska (RNS): — E. Stanley Jones, internationally-known missionary leader has completed a four weeks' visit to Alaska, where he held a series of services in Fairbanks, Juneau, Anchorage and Ketchikan, in connection with the national Christian mission sponsored by the department of evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches. This is the first time a national evangelist from the United States has appeared in Alaska. Outcome of Jones' visit to Fairbanks was formation of the first Ministerial Association in the city. The president is the Rev. Charles O. Hirschy, Church of God pastor, and members include clergymen of the Church of the Nazarene, the Norwegian Lutheran Church, the Presbyterian Church U.S.A., the Episcopal Church, and the Baptist Church. The group will aim at concerted action by denominations in promoting church work in the city.

Race Relations

Guilford College, N. C. (RNS):—Steps to further understanding, cooperation, and fellowship between races were taken by the North Carolina Council of Churches at its annual meeting here. On recommendation of its committee on race relations, the Council approved proposals for a study of such problems as housing, health, and transportation which affect harmony between whites and Negroes. and also authorized an investigation to locate places where interracial meetings may be held.

Church Army

New York:—Mr. Samuel Thorne, president of the Church Army in the United States, has isued the following appeal to returning Servicemen:

"Nearly nineteen hundred years ago St. Paul had a dream. In fact dream he saw a man from Macedonia who said: 'Come over into Macedonia and help us.'

"The undersigned has not heard of the national director of the Church Army in the U.S.A. having had any such dream but he has been advised that during the past six years calls from forty-eight bishops in various parts of the U.S.A. have come to the Church Army for thirty-nine captains and nine sisters and from the clergy fifty-four additional requests for forty-five captains and nine sisters to further the work of the Church. For lack of trained candidates to the great regret of the organization, these calls could not be met.

"To you who have been in the recent world struggle in which force largely figured, the opportunity of helping to win the peace along constructive lines of Church Army work is offered. It calls for a similar spirit of self-sacrifice but with a much more lasting and satisfactory reward, spiritual, if not material.

"Captain Earl Estabrook at the Headquarters office of the Church Army in U.S.A., 292 Ninth Avenue, New York 1, N. Y., will be glad to advise any inquirers as to the opportunities and training for Church Army work."

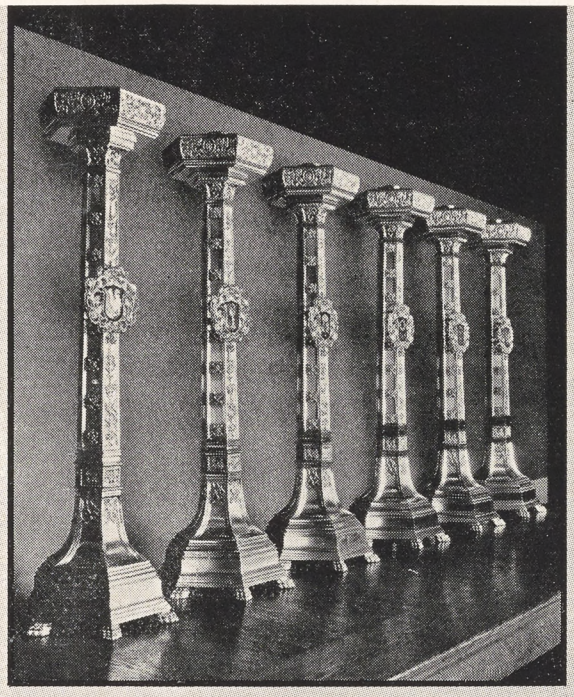
Arab Priest Ordained



London (wireless to RNS):—An Arab priest was ordained recently at the Anglican Collegiate Church of St. George in Jerusalem. The ordinand was the Rev. Musa Azar, who since 1943, when he was made a deacon, has been in charge of a church at El Hasa in the Trans-Jordan. Many Anglican priests assisted in the service, which was conducted in Arabic throughout.

Pleads for Unity

New York (RNS):—Francis Chomin Wei, Episcopalian and head of the Central China College, declared in an interview that Christian missionary policy in China must be revised to conform more closely to the Chinese way of life and must stress the essential unity of all denominations. He stated that during the next fifteen years "there must be a great Christian impact upon the thinking and planning of China's leaders." He said this impact must be made through "a strong, progressive and aggressive center of intellectual Christian activities."

"A new China is in the making," Dr. Wei declared, "and Christian leaders must make their influence felt during this plastic age. If the Church is not prepared to make its best contribution, it will regret it afterwards when the policies of the nation have already been given definite shape.

"To bring the churches together, it will be necessary to get them to work together. By working together they will learn to understand one another and out of this understanding will grow mutual respect. The process of unity may be slow, but it will be easier in China than in other countries where Christian traditions have been longer established."

Churches Destroyed

Berlin (wireless to RNS):—Only 20 Lutheran churches are open in Berlin at present, according to the Soviet military commander in the German capital. Reopening of the churches is one of the matters being dealt with by Russian occupation authorities in efforts to reestablish normal civilian institutions. One reason why so few churches are functioning is the great destruction caused by Allied bombing. The entire center of the city has been ruined and not one church has survived.

According to Burgomeister Dr. Artur Werner, Soviet occupation authorities have encouraged local officials to pay special attention to reestablishing religious facilities in the capital.

Dr. Werner announced that plans have been made to introduce religious instruction in schools, and that "this instruction will be for Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish children." He added, however, that "Church and state will be separated."

The Burgomeister disclosed that the town council has a subcommittee of clergymen headed by a Catholic priest—Father Buchholz, formerly of Plotzenzee—and that a Protestant pastor and a Jewish rabbi shortly will be appointed.

He recalled that Father Buchholz, at a meeting of his group, described the hanging of 165 prisoners in Berlin by the Nazis.

"We were so moved by the recital," Dr. Werner commented, "that we had to suspend the session for a while." When a newspaper correspondent interrupted, saying, "Didn't you know of much worse cases of atrocities committed by the Germans elsewhere?" Dr. Werner replied: "Here in Berlin very little was known of these atrocities."

At the close of his press conference, Dr. Werner surprised correspondents by asserting that there are still 6,000 Jews in Berlin. According to official German statistics, there were formerly 165,564 Jews in the city.

MR. JOHN C. SPAULDING
Chancellor of the Diocese of Michigan

In your issue of August 9th, you commend the people of Los Angeles for organizing a mass meeting and raising a large sum of money in opposition to Gerald L. K. Smith. You refer to his return to Detroit in such a way as to imply that he has a large following in Michigan, including fascist-minded capitalists. If so intended, the author is misinformed. I have never heard any favorable mention here of Smith's views or activities. That he is not influential here is shown by his overwhelming defeat in the Republican primary of 1942 for the United States Senate. The Smith vote was particularly small in the, so called, wealthy and aristocratic districts. I believe the Detroit method of silence is more effective in eliminating undesirable political promoters than one which magnifies their importance by publicity, as will be shown by the enclosed item from the Detroit Free Press, entitled "Monetary group too broke to hire hall."

Editor's Note:—Mr. Spaulding enclosed a clipping reporting a meeting of Mr. Smith's followers that was attended by about 100 persons. Incidentally THE WITNESS received a long letter from Mr. Smith, devoted mostly to denunciation of Jews, which charged THE WITNESS with receiving subsidies from them.

THE REV. LOUIS H. MATHEUS
Rector at Ottumwa, Iowa

The Rev. Donald C. Ellwood, of Avon, New York, is well justified in his skepticism about a Mrs. John Gardner. (Cf, Correspondence, WITNESS. Sept. 20th.) We have had experience with this family, or one making similar representations, over a period of years. Our clergy should be on their guard concerning them, and I believe would be justified in turning them over to the proper authorities.

Add to this warning: One claiming to be D. W. Woods, of Mobridge, South Dakota, and posing as one of our clergy, is being sought by the F. B. I. for cashing worthless checks. He recently defrauded a DesMoines, Ia., hotel in the sum of $360.00, and his operations in other localities are now known to total the sum of $1500.00. Any trace of this imposter should be reported to the F. B. I.

F. C. LEROY
Layman of Chicago

I am looking forward eagerly to the articles by servicemen on what they think our world should be like, now that war is over, and what the Church can do about it. I have had contacts with several men now out of the service who left as good Churchmen but are now rather disillusioned about the Church. They point out that we seem to be going on with our same old ways, interested primarily in getting money to perpetuate an institution whose chief purpose seems to be to provide jobs for clergymen and secretaries. I hope that in these forthcoming articles I will find material that I can place in the hands of these men.

ANSWER: It is our plan to start the series by Servicemen, under the general heading of It Is Over: So Now What? with our issue of Oct. 11, thus giving time for those who care to do so to order bundles or otherwise make it possible for non-subscribers to have copies. As for the articles, all we can say is that those we have so far seen are lively and stimulating. We are confident that others, yet to be received, also will be.

THE REV. ALMON R. PEPPER
National Secretary of Social Service

May I address this letter to the many Churchmen who have ordered cartons to be filled and shipped to churches overseas as part of the Church Christmas package program. The response to this appeal by which Christmas packages will be distributed to the most needy individuals and families in Europe and the Philippines has been splendid. It continues to be so. This is all the more reason why we are sorry that some orders for cartons have not been received as promptly as might be expected. A combination of warehouse difficulties and post office facilities have been the cause. We are doing all we can to expedite matters. Fortunately overseas shipping has improved and we have been able to extend the deadline for shipment to November 15th. However we urge Churchmen to send their packages to the warehouse as soon as possible.

"So little means so much! Give through your own church."

GREATER NEED THAN EVER

Many who have given generously to the great work being done in China under the direction of the Rev. Kimber Den have written to ask if there is still need, now that the war is over. The answer definitely is that the need is greater than ever—more children to take care of as well as adults—less to do with because of inflation.

Universal Military Training Bill Well Sponsored

Wife of General Patton Among Those Urging Support of the Measure Now Before Congress

By William Butler Sperry
Contributing Editor of THE WITNESS.

Pittsfield, Mass.:—Twenty clergymen from almost as many different states were gathered at a conference at the College of Preachers. California, Wisconsin, Nebraska and half a dozen southern and eastern states were represented with the college staff adding the proper tone of sophistication and profundity to the gathering.

During a brief period of leisure after dinner one day someone asked, "What about the universal military training bill? Is it likely to pass?" Little interest was aroused by the question and the comments were that what with V-J Day and the atomic bomb it was a dead issue. If it is a dead issue there is a very active and apparently well-heeled group who are not aware of it. On returning from the conference the writer was invited to a tea where the matter of universal military training was to be discussed. The tea was at the summer home of a French baroness. We found the home after a pleasant drive along autumnal Berkshire roads and it proved to be all that a baroness' summer home is supposed to be. A state patrolman in a neat blue uniform was keeping watch on thirty or forty cars parked in a spacious courtyard. A butler in white tie and tails who could have stepped out of a detective story waived us in with a flourish. Some attractive young women conducted us through a hallway and a room which reminded one of a stage set of an English manor house and we came to a large drawing room where about a hundred women and three or four men were seated on folding chairs.

A madame chairman whose voice and appearance suggested that she was Elsa Maxwell's alter ego was introducing Mrs. George S. Patton (yes, the general's wife). Mrs. Patton let us in on the secret that General Patton came from a fine Virginia family and that she herself was not exactly ashamed of her New England lineage. She thought that being an army wife was just about the finest career that an American girl could have. And of all the men she has ever met, she thinks that the ones who hate and detest war more than any others are the officers of the regular army. They are the core of the real peace lovers of America. Of course, she is referring to the regular army and she could not speak for all these reserve officers that have recently been added. And because they know war so well and love peace so much she feels that the task of preserving peace should be turned over to the regular army officers.

And the army wives share this sentiment. In answer to a question about how the men in the army feel she said that, "of course we don't have much to do with the soldiers," but still the army wives find splendid ways to be useful and make life happy for the peace-loving officers.

The madame chairman thanked Mrs. Patton most graciously and then introduced her "dear friend whom she had known for years," Mrs. Anesta Barlow, national chairman of the Women's National Committee for Universal Military Training for Young Men, "and if she can't convince you then God help you and the United States." Mrs. Barlow, who I was later informed was the former wife of the former ambassador William C. Bullitt, was to tell us the facts about the universal military training bill. She proved to be an excellent speaker with a fund of knowledge. She told us how the young men of America were in dire need of discipline, health, recreation, education and spiritual life and how this bill would supply all these things. Some of us were somewhat surprised to learn that the bill would accomplish all this and showed our appreciation by polite applause.

As Mrs. Barlow explains, the bill is to provide military training only and is not to provide men to be used for military purposes. The peace-loving officers of the regular army will see to that because they will now allow any more wars to occur.

Mrs. Barlow answered questions also. To one question she replied that some of the opposition came from people who accused the army and navy of wanting to perpetuate and enlarge their services so that they would have more prestige and more control of the life of the nation. But only an old meany or one who does not really know the army and navy officers would think a thing like that. As for the opposition of some educators, she could answer that because she was the daughter of a college president and had two brothers who were professors at a college. If the educators would really admit it their opposition was because they did not want to relinquish a sort of vested interest in youth which they now have and turn over their present control and direction of young people to the army and navy. At least that was her opinion.

Mrs. Barlow said that she had talked frequently and recently with General Marshall, Secretary of War Patterson and Chaplain General Miller of the army all of whom had given her information and inspiration for her crusade. According to her account this legislation is very close to their hearts and they feel that the welfare of the country depends upon it. This reminded your correspondent that he had spent the previous week in Washington at the conference at the College of Preachers mentioned above. Brigadier General Luther D. Miller, chaplain general of the army was living at the College and took his meals in the refectory with the conferees. The conversation ranged over a wide variety of subjects including service men, ex-service men, the world in general, the army, the chaplains, youth and most of the other things that a score of men will talk about at the dinner table. The subject of universal military training did not happen to come up on any of the half dozen occasions when this writer sat at the table with Chaplain Miller but if this legislation is a burning issue with him he successfully concealed it all during that week and apparently had hidden it from the college staff with whom he is living.

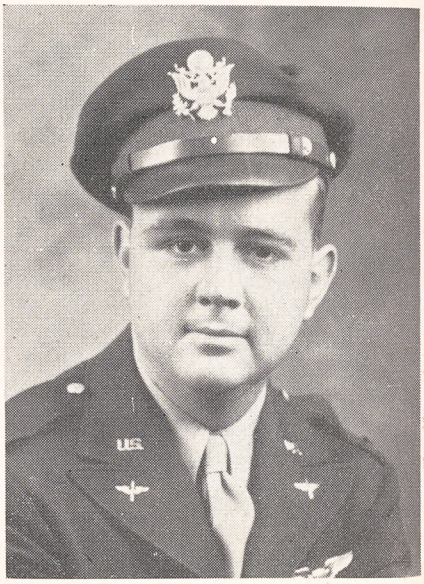
When Mrs. Barlow had finished speaking the madame chairman announced in booming tones, "Now let's all have some tea," and then having retired from one door of the drawing room soon appeared at the other end of the room where the attractive young ladies were hovering and whispered, "Come on girls, get going, we have to get those drinks mixed."

This signal, as to which was the proper exit, your representative was unable to follow because the one who had invited him to the proceedings insisted on piloting him up to one after another of the more articulate of those who had fallen under the sway of the oratory and deftly managed to involve him in discussion. One of these was a most voluble French woman, possibly the baroness herself; introductions were very casual. She assailed him with a withering blast in which it was revealed that "America is zee marvelous country. You have everysing, good health, zee playgrounds for your young people, zee colleges, zee school—everysing for your young people but zay will do noszing for ze country. Zis law will give zem zee discipline, it will give you ze esprit de corps. Ze butler's son and zee millionaire's son will wash zee dish togezer, zay will do zee drill togezer, zay will sleep, zay will play togezer and you will see—zen you will have no more of zeze strikes."

Eventually Mrs. Barlow herself was captured for a few moments. When she discovered that a clergyman was among those who had accepted the afternoon's studies with reservations she promptly produced from her brief case a statement by the Rev. John Witherspoon which she read—and read very well indeed. The Rev. John Witherspoon was a signer of the Declaration of Independence and he once said some very severe things about men who were unwilling to fight for their country. There did not happen to be any conscientious objectors or pacifists present but if there had been they would surely have felt very embarrassed to have heard Dr. Witherspoon's opinion of them. It seemed to clinch the argument for Mrs. Barlow but to make it very clear she again summed up the purpose of the bill, this time under three points. It will provide military training for youth, it will provide scientific research and development for the nation, and it will be a blue print for industry and production. Who would want to argue against such fine purposes? So the tea and the drinks were left to the peace loving militarists.

Few of those present seemed to realize that the road to peace lies in such surrender of sovereignty as will replace international anarchy with international law. They did not seem to understand that Berkshire county had surrendered some of its sovereignty to the state of Massachusetts and thus did not have to defend itself against Hampshire county; that Massachusetts had surrendered some of its sovereignty to the United States and thus did not have to war on New York state. Surrender of sovereignty by this nation would no doubt have struck them as treason.



This group seemed unable to realize that the lesson of the atomic bomb is that man has mastered one physical problem after another until the air provides his means of travel, the ether his means of communication, the atom his source of destruction; wind, waves, fire and heat he has learned to master or control but he has not learned how to deal with human beings. The relationship of man to man, race to race, nation to nation is the magnificent field before us for research and control. Yet here were people of education, culture and more-or-less Christian allegiance bidding us go back to the principles of the cave man.

One can not argue against the universal military training bill by denying the various ways in which

The navy photographer, who is one of the leading artists in the country, succeeded in catching a tenseness and a fear that was experienced by everyone on board. "Even the most irreligious turn to religion before battle," explained the photographer, "for there was nobody aboard ship who was not fully aware that life might soon end for him. This turning to God very often does not last, once battle is over. But the picture I think does indicate how real it is at the moment."

This is one of a series of navy combat pictures which will be featured in coming issues, all taken by the same photographer whose name cannot be revealed due to navy regulations.

It is a fitting tie-up with the article in this number by the Rev. Ernest A. deBordenave, formerly rector at Alexandria, Va., which was written aboard a warship in the Pacific. A Story of Lay Cooperation In a New England City

Active Laymen's Group Brings a Fruitful Cooperation Among New Bedford Protestants

By Shirley B. Goodwin
Rector of All Saints', Attleboro, Massachusetts

Attleboro, Mass.:—In the short and narrow streets of the old whaling city of New Bedford, Massachusetts, changes of a startling nature have been made. Perhaps the weather-beaten Yankees of those early adventurous days would feel more content (if they could but know it) as fishing fleets again leave this port in search of the abundant piscatorial wealth of the Atlantic Ocean. The transition in the middle of the 19th century from whaling to the manufacture of fine cotton textiles was largely responsible for this upheaval and the gradual but steady increase in population.

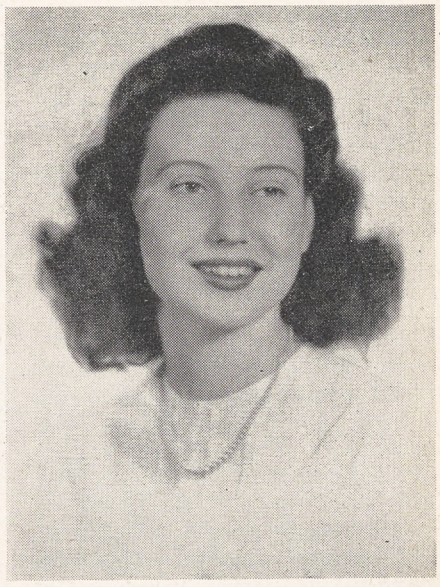
Culturally, an influx of hundreds of English, Portuguese and French families who worked in the cotton mills, changed the atmosphere and thinking of the city. The original Quaker leaven was no match for the expanded lump. Out of it grew the many denominational churches so characteristic of New England cities. And with them a distrust and competitive attitude built of prejudice and old world tradition.

By way of contrast two forces in New Bedford worked ineffectively to bring the Protestant peoples together. A council of religious education was established after the first world war with the missionary motive of religious training for underprivileged children. The ministers' union, of uncertain origin and including representatives from the Boy Scouts, Y.M.C.A., and Childrens' Aid Society feebly carried on at first a program of interest to its members only. Later at times the union gave expression of opinion on controversial religious and moral questions which caused divisions among its own highly transient membership.

In the 1920's an abortive attempt at Protestant cooperation under the council of religious education with ministerial union blessing met with failure and left some pessimism in the city concerning such an effort.

In January 1939 with the religious education council fearing for the future of its pet project—the daily vacation bible school, and the unsteady ministers' union inadequately sponsoring lenten union services in the center of the city, several hardy souls sent out a letter to the Protestant churches suggesting the formation of an inter-church council.

In February a letter followed calling for a meeting in March of the Protestant forces in the community to consider an enclosed proposed constitution for the new council which would be set up for formal action in April of that year.



The happy plan emphasized the use of laymen and women, so essential a provision in a city beset with short-term clergy leaders. The April meeting was held, the constitution adopted and the Rev. Robert Weaver, young pastor of the small South Baptist Church elected president. Under his leadership and that of the Rev. Michael Testa, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, the next president, the foundation of the inter-church council was laid and the tradition of Protestant cooperation formerly carried.

Here for all of that the story of Protestant cooperation in New Bedford might have ended in mediocre achievement so much like the struggling efforts of many new ideas which lie almost in a fallow condition—alive with some sowings but not seeded completely nor in any sense developed for full production.

In 1942 the daily vacation bible school was set up with a budget of $600 but by July the treasury of the council was over $200 short. Publicity was poorly conducted and with the willing and free facilities of a good local newspaper and a radio station this was almost sinful. Two additional difficulties were obvious:—subtle friction between the council and ministers' association as to function in the community, and indifference by several of the churches, particularly the largest denomination in the city, the Episcopal Church with its five parishes.

The finance committee's method of solicitation by mail was ineffective; but stirred by the new president and the urgency of the situation, in the middle of a hot July it raised the necessary funds by personal solicitation.

This experience left a vivid impression on the mind of the president who determined to inaugurate a plan for additional support for the work of the council. In the fall of 1942 he arranged (on paper) geographically and according to interest the forty-eight Protestant churches in the greater New Bedford area and also the five service organizations. Then group by group he called the clergymen and lay directors together to discuss his proposal for increased support of the inter-church council's work for 1943. He suggested that each church agree to raise one-half of one per cent of their total budget, and indicated further that this amount could be raised in one or more of three ways:—through the church budget, by special collections or through special individual gifts.

Priscilla J. Hannah, communicant of St. Mark's, Pasadena, California, is a member of the national youth commission of the Church. A graduate of Pasadena Junior College, she is now a student at Occidental College and is preparing for vocational work in the Church, probably with college students

The meetings had the advantage of bringing together both those partial to the plan and the skeptics; and resulted in greater unanimity brought about through the moral pressure exerted by those who believed in the feasibility of the project. Furthermore, plans were laid to have a drive in January 1943 with a monetary goal of $2500. Actually the money raised by this method was only $1500.00 but increased activity of the council committees for the year brought the budget to the sought for goal.

The experience had been invaluable and more ambitious plans were made for 1944. Out of many small preparatory meetings a certain strength came:—namely, the great value of the democratic method of free discussion which brought to light certain weaknesses in the new plan.

A nine point program, stressing the things Protestant churches could do together and could not do separately, was set up as an expression of the opportunities and needs for inter-Church cooperation in New Bedford:—1. The employment of a full-time clergy executive secretary; 2. The appointment of hospital chaplains for all local hospitals; 3. The furnishing of religious services to adjacent military camps; 4. Provision of facilities for religious counselling for discharged soldiers; 5. The establishment and supervision of a program of week-day religious education; 6. The expansion of our daily vacation bible schools; 7. The organization of a religious survey of greater New Bedford; 8. A united church canvass; and 9. Many special projects including those already in operation.

Individual conferences with the clergy were set up by the president to secure their cooperation in publicizing and adopting the program. The plans were similar to those of the previous year with the important addition:—the clergy were asked to assume responsibility for special lay committee cooperation.

Negotiations were made for a dinner. Each clergyman was persuaded to bring his important business men. One hundred and fifty clergy and lay men sat down together in the ball room of the hotel for an unusual meeting. There was no scheduled big speaker or dazzling entertainment to be presented. The men were there at the request of their pastors. The business part of the meeting was opened with an explanation of the opportunities for inter-church cooperation which could be achieved through the adoption and support of the nine point program. Men rose from all over the floor and voiced confidence in the ability and desire of the churches for such a program. The Rev. Frank Jennings, executive secretary of the Massachusetts Council of Churches, answered detailed questions as to the feasibility of certain aspects of the program especially the establishment of weekday schools for religious education.

The climax of the evening came in the presentation of a startling resolution, evidently prepared before the dinner but known only to one or two lay people, for the adoption of the nine point program and a yearly budget of $10,000 for a period of five years. The toastmaster called for an expression of opinion which brought out a unanimous raising of hands for the adoption of the resolution.

The important laymen of the Protestant churches in New Bedford were interested in an inter-church movement for the first time. The support of the lay women was also essential for a successful venture. A dinner for the women similar in many ways was held and their response was equally whole-hearted.

A special committee to publicize the program and raise the budget was formed. The details of setting up special lay committees in the thirty-three cooperating churches may be passed over, also the doubts of mid-campaign sluggishness and the thrill of accomplishment as the campaign passed its goal on the final report night.

Certain observations can be made, however:—that the lay people had done the work, that the technique of asking anyone and everyone in the area for help was not only acceptable but the best one, and that a deeper sense of appreciation for each other and willingness to cooperate with each other was brought about by the campaign.

Here the story of the inter-church council of greater New Bedford would seem to end, but in reality, it was only the beginning of the real effective work of the council. Nine months have passed since the Rev. Joseph W. Merchant, pastor of the Congregational Church in North Wilbraham, Mass., was chosen as executive secretary. In this period the daily vacation bible schools increased in number, a successful school for adult religious education has been held, the radio program of daily devotions well organized, all publicity greatly enhanced, three part-time but paid hospital chaplains appointed, a religious census completed and plans for a program of weekday religious education set up for the fall of 1945. So the pioneering work carries on with greater and fuller lay participation and support.

Now It Swings Both Ways

THE Christian Church has been filled with talk down through the ages and much of it has been aimless, circuitous talk that has continued to turn back upon itself without resulting in any positive action. At the Cincinnati General Convention the Church Society for College Work had in their exhibit a working model of the inside of a church with a glass covering one side. The "working" part of the exhibit was attached to a funnel in the pulpit. Periodically a handful of confetti would spray forth from the pulpit, only to be sucked back into the funnel in the next moment and then the same confetti sprayed again. Too often this picture has fitted our talk about Church unity.

Now the news comes that in one diocese men of courage and conviction are cutting through the cycle of consideration and talk, deliberation and talk, submission to committees and talk. The Rev. Philip Steinmetz, as you read here last week, has accepted a call to be pastor of a Congregational Church in the same town in which he is vicar of the Episcopal Church. In this town of only five hundred people the only two Protestant churches have thus joined hands and strengthened the work of both. Bishop Lawrence has not simply given permission but has approved the plan in these memorable words, "These are the days which call for more than talk. The Church can ill afford to stand in judgment of the nations, or urge them to come together, unless she herself does something to heal her own divisions. . . . We are now exploring this possibility." Here is a case where action has replaced talk and Christian unity takes another real step forward.

This exploration is doubly important for it ties in with that provision we have in our canons which makes possible a joint ministry for one who comes from another communion. Canon thirty-five, section one, sets the rules by which a minister from outside our Church may minister to a group of Episcopalians under his charge. Some portions of this canon are worth quoting for its regulations are not generally known: "In case any minister who has not received episcopal ordination shall desire to receive such orders . . . without giving up or denying his fellowship or his ministry in the communion to which he belongs, the bishop . . . may confirm and ordain him: provided also that the congregation . . . in which such minister officiates shall declare . . . its desire for such ordination on behalf of its minister and its purpose to receive in future the ministrations and the sacraments of one who shall be ordained to the priesthood by the bishop."

In communities where it is inefficient to have many denominations, each with a pitifully small congregation, there is nothing to keep us from uniting with other communions, when canonical requirements are met. The law of the Episcopal Church as it now stands makes ample provision for the minister of another Church to have supplemental ordination so that as a priest he can administer the sacraments to our people. The courage of Bishop Lawrence in approving the action in his diocese has opened the door for our clergy to minister to members of other communions. The door now swings both ways.

It means that we have finally gotten over the hurdle of talking unity and are now ready to practice it. If the negotiations with the Congregationalists which took place prior to 1922 and the meetings on unity with the Presbyterians have been more than mere talk-fests we should now be ready, without any further resolutions of General Convention, to put our plans into action. The Methodists sometimes ask why we have talked unity with them and we are often reminded that the southern division of the Presbyterian Church has had no part in our discussions with the northern section of that Church. When it is generally recognized that provision has been made and precedent established for the two way movement of the ministers between our Church and any Christian communion in America it will be evident to all that the Episcopal Church means what it says about Christian unity and that it does not limit its approach to any one or two Churches.

CHRISTIANS should strive with unending determination toward the kind of society that will provide full employment, that will enable every man to have a self-respecting job. It is axiomatic that the nations of the world cannot live as a family in peace and harmony if there is widespread unemployment throughout the world or even in some nations of the world irrespective of whether these nations be former friends or enemies. This was the lesson of the decade of the thirties when we experienced the world-wide unemployment that was one of the causes of the war.

It means that a new day should dawn in missionary efficiency both in the domestic and the foreign field. How much fruit this joint ministration could bear in a missionary district like Nevada, for example, where the population is scattered very thin! The congregations in each place could be more sizable; the ministers could receive a reasonable stipend and so would be willing to remain in the field; there would be much less need for travelling over great distances. In the foreign field, where the work is taking on renewed vigor after the difficult years of war, the money and the missionaries can be used to much better advantage if we are willing to use this provision for joint ministry.

It means that we need not depend on resolutions and speeches to bring unity in the Christian Church in America. The Churches can begin now to grow together as the need arises and the spirit of the people is found ready. We need neither hurry into immediate formal unity as one group in our Church seems to desire nor yet veto the whole idea of uniting with other Protestant groups as another group appears to demand. The unity to come by this road will not be the unity forced down from above, but a oneness of Christian brotherhood built upon the basis of common congregational worship. The Church which led the world in the movement for Christain reunion when it brought forth the Chicago Quadrilateral in 1886 has been true to its promise and is still moving forward toward its ideal of a one, holy, catholic and apostolic Church for all Christians. The Episcopal Church has begun to show its true catholicity by acting like a Catholic Church.

It's Over: So Now What?

THINKING is all confusion at first. San Francisco. Potsdam. Abandon ship. Peace. Atomic bomb. Reconversion. Full Production. Baka bomb. They all clamor for attention when one thinks—but gradually out of the confusion a picture of the future begins to take shape. It seems familiar too.

Man wills to have peace. Nations meet to devise the means. Words are produced, examined and acclaimed. Fundamental cleavages—ambitions and interests that conflict—are barely touched, making necessary the continued preparedness for war and thus adding to the surety of its coming. Is it 1919 again so soon?

You know, we believe in a God who wills—and in the long run—requires justice. That means a caring for our fellow men—putting them first in our efforts, thus making real our love of God. How else can love for him have any reality? And the whole record of his relationship with men is a story of nations refusing to achieve the justice he requires until through catastrophe and suffering they are brought to repentance—to change—to an effort to achieve what God demands.

Believing this, I am disturbed about what I saw and experienced in those few months that I spent in the States. Instead of the suffering that has come to innumerable families having produced a real penitence, it seemed that there was the most acute avarice on every hand. From what we hear now, instead of new insights into how to implement our will to peace we feel a new pride in our physical might.

The future? Inevitably a Russia, stronger and more influential in Europe and Asia than we dare to admit or have any idea how to prevent or ability to understand. And a Russia unable to allay her suspicions enough to begin to understand us. Britain has her areas of conflict with Russia, but economically her dependence is on us. To meet this challenge—and opportunity—from Britain will appear to be a conflict with our own self interest because it will demand a real sacrifice. I see nothing to indicate belief that we will make it. She'll get a better deal for her far eastern oil, Gibraltar and Suez from the Russians and, for survival, will take it. It then becomes the new world against the old—except that Roman Catholicism with what influence it has, will be with the new. The paradox is, however, that the new world will be defending what will have become the old—the old order of things.

That will really be the struggle! As Niebuhr pointed out recently, it will be a struggle "within civilization," without the clear decision of the war period when civilization itself was attacked. The present struggle will cause cleavages within nations on each side—and within the souls of individuals on each side. Which represents the scourge of God and the object of his displeasure? It will be a difficult question. Probably no Christian group, except the Roman Catholic Church, will have the arrogance to presume to answer definitely.

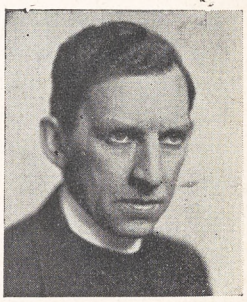
THE one thing that will be clear will be that the struggle itself is the judgment of God—for it will undoubtedly leave the whole world so prostrate that history itself will reveal to nations that they co-operate or die.

Does this sound like the prophecy of doom to come? Yes—I guess that's what it is. Yet I am not dismayed by the prospects and I hope that my children will not be dismayed by its actuality. It is really an assurance that God is king—only that we haven't suffered enough to acknowledge it.

When Britain was being blitzed it seemed that her suffering was producing a penitence—then the prospects of victory appeared to have undone the good. Yet the recent elections there reveal that it was not entirely lost. The people have registered a desire and a determination to achieve a greater measure of justice. Whatever the results—a measure of penitence has come to them.

And our country is not without suffering—at least with those who faced the imminence of death. I've seen its effects. A few weeks ago there were sailors aboard who were irresponsible kids, with a normal proportion of loafers and bums. But many of them have seen hundreds of shipmates killed and others know it. As we shoved off for the Kamikaze zone there wasn't a man aboard who didn't realize his own responsibility and his interdependence with his shipmates. Maybe some of us will remember this experience, when we become civilians again.

But I must close now. There's one last boat going ashore and I want to be sure to catch it. I have business to attend to! Its a funny thing though. One of the fellows just heard that his wife is dying of cancer and I'm going ashore to try to arrange to have him flown back to the states so that he can be with her before she dies. What's funny about it? Well, its funny that Christianity makes us do things like that, while not so long ago we sent the rest of the guys aboard up to die if need be, at the hand of the Japs—with none of their loved ones with them before they shove off.



Life is certainly a profound and paradoxical thing.

And certainly only a thing as profound and paradoxical as Christianity can make any sense out of it.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

LETTERS received about intinction, following our editorial of October 4 urging the appointment of a fact-finding commission, indicates clearly that it is a practical problem. Dean Jack Day of Topeka, commending our suggestion, writes that if laymen were less immune to some of the antics of the clergy there would have long since been passed legislation approving intinction. He also says that communion has been administered by intinction at the Topeka Cathedral for fifteen years and that "the number of people receiving communion the first year after intinction began increased twenty-five per cent over the year previous." The practice there was started by a physician who had been recently confirmed and at his first communion was one removed at the altar rail from a person who had been in his office the day before with a virulent mouth disease. The physician commented to the dean and to the bishop: "It is a strange thing that of all institutions the Church has to be the one which disobeys the state law in regard to the unhygienic use of the common cup." "A few more protests by laymen," writes the dean, "would no doubt convince the House of Bishops of the necessity of stopping passing the buck to the Lambeth Conference which has no jurisdiction for our Church."

A letter also comes from Rose Phelps, one of our contributing editors, who says that "Current excitement about intinction suggests the question, which is more desirable: to uphold a symbol or to prevent hard feeling? The symbol of unity in the common cup is very pretty until it causes communicants to be less 'of one heart and mind.' He whose keen eye always penetrated through forms to their essential meaning does he care whether the symbol of his blood be received on a wafer or directly into the mouth? Why should the physical method of reception matter if the heart of the recipient be truly and gratefully open to our Lord? If his heart be closed let him shun the altar rail. Surely forcing common cup supporters to receive by intinction, or intinction supporters to accept the common cup, divides solely on grounds of form and symbolism faithful people whose fellowship could well be strengthened by freedom to receive their Lord by whichever method seems to them most cleanly, most reverent, most meaningful. Have we not more vital religious matters to absorb our energies?"

THEN there is my friend and classmate, Sam Edsall, the rector of Trinity, Geneva, N. Y., who has coped with the problem for two years without finding a satisfactory answer. He has therefore sent a letter to his people reminding them that "We have tried it out over this period in an optional manner at our late service. During this period your rector has found it almost impossible to administer the Blessed Sacrament in this way without touching the lips or the tongue of one or more communicants with his fingers, or having his fingers breathed upon in some way, surgically speaking, contaminating. In the Burrows and Hemmers report, read by the rector at the last parish meeting, these two Chicago University bacteriologists proved that the silver or gold plated chalice has a positive sterilizing action that makes it less possible through its use to spread infection than the air itself, much less than the fingers of the priest. For this reason we will discontinue the method of intinction. If however there are communicants who do not wish to receive from the common cup let them simply leave the rail after they have taken the consecrated bread which will be placed in their hand as usual. It is needless to add that those with any contagious disease whatever should receive in this way. And finally those who use lipstick should remove it before touching their lips to the chalice."

Pastoral theology, if that's the head this comes under, is not my department, and I hasten to agree with Rose Phelps that we have more vital religious matters to absorb our energies. Just the same I do want to add my bit. A number of years ago Harry Darlington, the rector of the Heavenly Rest, New York, invited me to take services in the summer. The practice of administering the communion there seems so sensible that I have practiced it ever since, with satisfaction to everyone, in Christ Church, Middletown, N. J. which I serve. We use two chalices, one a small private communion chalice. When the bread is administered those who wish to receive by intinction hold it between thumb and forefinger, easy for the priest to see. When the wine is administered, with both chalices used at the same time, these communicants merely dip the edge of the wafer in the small chalice and place it in their mouth. Those who prefer to receive from the common cup do so. It is a method which is not difficult for the celebrant and is dignified. Furthermore, even in a small parish where everyone knows everyone else rather intimately, I doubt if anyone in the congregation could say, following the service, how others received. Certainly it is a method that overcomes the difficulties that Sam Edsall describes. Anyhow I pass it on for what it is worth.

A QUOTE from The True Glory: "When things go according to plan in a war, well, that's good. But when things go better than the plan, you begin to figure that the chaplain's been working overtime."

D-Day to V-E Day; from the Normandy hedgerows to the Belsen concentration camp; from a lingering death on the beach to a glass of vodka on the Elbe with the comrades of the Red Army —all of that is the picture, The True Glory, filmed by 1600 cameramen of the western Allies. This full-length documentary, edited by Garson Kanin and Carol Reed, two of filmdom's most talented directors, is a picture that has to be seen by every single person who had even the slightest part to play in the war. Invasion and victory were complicated movements involving plans, resources, ideologies—and human beings. None of the ingredients could be left out and, as the picture vividly shows, none of them were.

The True Glory traces the whole intricate pattern of our victory in Europe. It show the periods when the "chaplain was working overtime"—at Montain, where the infantry held off the first great counter-attack; Saint Lo, where Patton's third army broke through; the Remagen Bridge, where the Allies crossed the Rhine without wetting their feet through the courtesy of the 9th army. Likewise, it shows those periods when the chaplain didn't seem to be working at all—that section of the invasion coast known as Omaha Beach; the paratroopers trapped and wiped out at Arnhem; the chill and fear and death of "The Battle of the Bulge." Throughout the war, cameramen of all nations have been recording history. The True Glory coordinates their work and presents us with what is certainly the best documentary film yet made.

War as seen through the eyes of those who fought it—from the members of the supreme command down to the private driving a supply truck—and narrated by their voices: that's The True Glory. It's religious significance? Well, it shows what human sacrifice and human greatness can be. Likewise, it shows what a horrible thing, what a powerful thing, what a demonic thing, human sin really is. Call it "Moral Man and Immoral Society" or "The Children of Light and the Children of Darkness"—or just call it The True Glory.

PM's John McManus has said that it is a picture that every American should see. I second his motion—and widen it to include all human beings. Especially, I hope it will be seen by certain U. S. senators from Ohio and Montana and by certain newspaper publishers from Chicago and New York — and by all others who go around speaking glibly of America's power and the possibility of another war. The True Glory should prove to them that it was a great and dirty job which the human race will never be able to repeat.

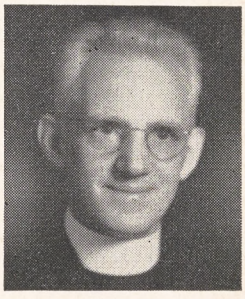
LIFE IN THE CHURCH by DuBose Murphy. Cloister Press. $.75.

Few things are harder to find than a good confirmation manual. There are plenty of manuals but so many of them are so overladen with detail or baffle the reader with intricate points of Church doctrine or history that they are of little help to the ordinary layman. Some express such an arrogant Episcopalian attitude that a Christian with a sensitive conscience hates to give them to people and thereby advertise the fact that one of the besetting sins of Episcopalians is an inordinate pride in his own Church. For example, in one manual the author in explaining the difference between the Roman Catholic, Protestant, and Anglican Churches declares that the Roman Church is like a glass of muddy water, the Protestant Church is like a glass from which the mud has been filtered out but some of the other qualities have been lost, "whereas ours is all pure as it was everywhere originally."

Consequently, it is a pleasure to commend this excellent little book of DuBose Murphy to rectors who are looking for a simple straightforward, concise, and well-written manual covering many of the things that a rector would want to impress upon the members of his confirmation classes. The pamphlet is so clearly written that it can be used not only for adults but also for older young people.



No two persons writing a confirmation manual would devote the same amount of space to any one of the various subjects presented. Mr. Murphy has chosen well on the whole in both the quantity and quality of his instruction and I am confident that this manual will be welcomed by many teachers of confirmation classes. Mr. Murphy is to be commended for leading up to his final chapter on Christian doctrine rather than beginning with the difficult phrases of creedal belief. I cannot recall having read a chapter on the Reformation period particularly in relation to England covering the essential facts so well and yet so briefly.

For Church School Teachers

By
WILLIAM GRIME

YOUR teachers meetings can be improved. Whereupon someone says "how?" It depends upon the church school supervisor who in most cases will be the rector. If he genuinely cares about reviving these meetings so as to be willing to give them the time, study and devotion they deserve, then and only then will they improve. Furthermore he will be wise at the start to work out with his teachers and officers some objectives as to what constitutes a good teachers meeting. Vagueness at this point can mean only failure later.

Here are the results of one group who gave some real thought to this matter that turned out to be rewarding. Teachers must be made to feel that the meetings are opportunities and not just requirements. Meetings must be well planned. General topics suggested for the current year and for future years:—the laws of learning, the transfer of learning, the art of questioning, the use and abuse of memorization, the teaching methods of Jesus, meanings in the Apostles creed, the history of Christian worship etc.

Topics for the six monthly meetings must be decided upon and posted where all teachers can see them. A time schedule must be decided upon for the supper, devotional presentation and discussion periods. Administrative details and other irrelevancies are to be avoided. Routine matters can be taken up directly with the rector or with the teachers in one's own department. Incidentally, this opens the way for many parishes in a community to hold their teachers meetings together.

There must be something cumulative in these gatherings. Something definite must be accomplished by the end of the year. Teachers should be prepared and encouraged to lead in the discussions and a record of proceedings should be kept and filed. A good friendly happy spirit must prevail if unity and cooperation within the group are to be promoted.

The Living Liturgy

"One World"

AN ACQUAINTANCE of mine in the British diplomatic service was telling me of his favorite hymn, Ellerton's "The day thou gavest, Lord, is ended," and as he recited it he became rhapsodic at stanza 3:

As o'er each continent and island
The dawn leads on another day,

The voice of prayer is never silent,
Nor dies the strain of praise away.

The sun never sets on the British flag, you know. Yes, and it never sets on the Book of Common Prayer. Future historians of Christianity can say of the Church's life from the early nineteenth century to our own day that its greatest single achievement has been the planting of the Gospel in all parts of the earth. This achievement is all the more marvellous when one considers the obstacles set in its way: the imperialism of the western powers, the increasing detachment of so-called "Christian nations" from the sanctions of moral law and spiritual order, the wasteful rivalries of Christian denominations living contrary to God's will in open schism. Indeed the modern missionary enterprise more than anything else has opened our eyes to "the great dangers we are in by our unhappy divisions."

This bloody war, too, strange as it may seem, has opened our eyes. For God is able to make the wrath of man turn to His praise. We are conscious as never before of the inter-relatedness of all nations and peoples, that God truly has made them "of one blood." We know that the peace and well-being of our own land is bound up with the success of the Gospel of peace in China, in Brazil, in Russia, in the once dark continent of Africa. In one world it is no longer accurate to speak of home missions and foreign missions. Thousands of our young men and women have seen the Church at work on a front as world-wide as their own armed services. They will come home from the South Seas, the Burma Road, and the concentration camps of Europe with a challenging vision of what the communion of saints means, that "in Christ there is no East nor West." They have knelt with peoples of all races and tongues at the same altar rail to receive the same grace.

The Bishop of Melanesia wrote in Forth last January: "Witness of the Church in Melanesia has utterly and completely changed the outlook of many a Marine, sailor, soldier concerning missionary work. They have seen the sons of former head-hunters as men of a kindly disposition, ready and anxious, at no matter what cost to themselves, to serve those in need. They have seen the change from the bondage of heathen darkness into the glorious liberty of the children of Light in the faces of these Solomon men and women, boys and girls. . . . The Melanesians have seen things, too. They have been thrilled at the kindliness of the Americans who have lived among them; and the readiness of so many of them to come in and share in the worship in their little village churches. It has been an encouragement which will mean a tremendous amount to them in their citizenship with each other in the Kingdom."

As our Church launches its Reconstruction and Advance program there will be some ignorant and perverse people turn up who say they do not believe in "foreign" missions and who will resist the opportunity afforded them of doing something concrete for the Gospel they profess. Such people should be warned that they are hypocrites and perjurers so long as they come to Holy Communion. In the Holy Communion we offer ourselves completely in response to our Lord's complete oblation of Himself for the sins of the whole world. The Holy Communion is the most perfect missionary service in the Prayer Book. It is sacrilege for a religious isolationist to partake of it. And there is no thrill in blaspheming. After a wonderful fashion we are born into this world by nature in divers nations, races and tongues. But more wonderfully still we are reborn by baptism into the Holy Catholic Church, a citizenship international, supernational and supernatural, a royal priesthood who with one voice praise and magnify one holy Name. This is the most exciting privilege of life.

Churches Call for World Wide Spiritual Reformation

Support of United Nations Organization Urged as One Hope for an Enduring Peace

Edited by Sara Dill

New York (RNS):—Christians of all lands were called to "join hands and hearts in a spiritual reformation that will encompass the earth," in a message issued here by the Federal Council of Churches, the Foreign Missions Conference, and the American Committee for the World Council of Churches. Together, these national inter-church agencies represent a constituency of more than 27 million persons.

The message, which is being transmitted to the official heads of church bodies in 50 countries through the department of international justice and goodwill of the Federal Council, asserted that "we interpret the cessation of hostilities as a clarion call to Christians to achieve in the here and now a righteous world order."

It appealed for a total mobilization of the Christian forces throughout the world to support the United Nations Organization, urged relief for countries devastated by war, and invited representatives of church bodies overseas to visit this country.

The message warned that neither the end of the war nor the projection of the United Nations Organization "has brought to an end the crisis of our generation," and stressed that "this crisis is primarily spiritual in character."

Outlining the principles which North American churches have proclaimed essential to the establishment of a just and durable peace, the message said: "We believe it is contrary to the Gospel that nations in their dealings with one another should be motivated by the spirit of revenge and retaliation. We believe it to be incumbent upon our own and other nations to promote and safeguard the general welfare of all peoples. We believe that that government which derives its just powers from the consent of the governed is the truest expression of the rights and dignity of man."

The message expressed the desire to be associated with Christians everywhere in the task of making the United Nations Organization an effective instrument for the removal of the political, economic, and social causes of war, for the peaceful settlement of disputes and the achieving of justice in international relationships.

"Beyond this," the statement said, "we see for ourselves and our fellow Christians the duty of bringing the life of nations into conformity with the divine imperatives of the Gospel."

It added that an enduring peace must be a global peace, and requires that all nations willing to accept and fulfill the obligations of the Charter should thereupon be made members of the United Nations Organization. The statement expressed the belief that "the treatment of Germany and Japan should aim to bring these nations at an early date into normal relations with the world community."

The message proclaimed "again and yet again our citizenship in a kingdom that is without geographical or racial division." It indicated a desire to reestablish fellowship at the earliest possible moment with Christians all over the world, and extended a welcome to representatives of the churches from other countries affected by the havoc of war in order to "strengthen the bonds of Christian love within the family of God."

Uprooted Peoples

New York (RNS):—Increased efforts to aid uprooted peoples in congested emergency housing areas during the reconversion period were urged upon community religious leaders, councils of church women, and ministers of local churches, in an appeal issued here by the Volunteer Service Division of the Home Missions Council of North America.

Miss Edith E. Lowry, executive secretary of the Council, pointed out that surveys just completed show that only about 25 per cent of those now living in government housing projects and trailer camps in the war industrial areas are going "back home."

"With USO units closing their activities in congested housing areas by March 1, 1946, there is a greater need than ever before for community programs and individual help for these people sponsored by religious groups on an interdenominational basis," Miss Lowry declared. "The church must not lose this chance of serving the industrial migrants who remain in the community."

Convention Plans, 1946

Philadelphia: — A preliminary meeting of the General Convention committee has been held, to discuss tentative details. Bishop Oliver J. Hart met with the chairman of the General Convention Committee, Thomas S. Gates, president of the University of Pennsylvania; William H. DuBarry, vice-chairman of the committee and vice-president of the University of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Francis A. Packard, president of the Pennsylvania Woman's Auxiliary, and the Rev. Charles H. Long, secretary of the diocese of Pennsylvania.

It was arranged that the opening meeting of the General Convention is to be held in the Convention Hall, Tuesday, September 10, 1946, followed by the organization of the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies in the Irvine Auditorium, and the House of Bishops in Houston Hall. The Woman's Auxiliary Triennial will meet in the University Museum auditorium.

Plans are being worked out to have all three bodies provided with luncheons in the Museum, and space is to be provided for non-commercial exhibits.

Further details will be announced as worked out.

World Churchmen Meet

New York (RNS): — Churchmen from all parts of the world are scheduled to convene at Geneva, Switzerland, next February. They will attend the International Missionary Council meeting Feb. 16-19, and the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches, Feb. 21-24.

Restoration of missionary work in countries where it has been interrupted by the war will be one of the many questions dealt with by the International Missionary Council in considering the opportunities and problems which lie before Christian missions in the post-war world.

Composed of 26 national missionary organizations and Christian Councils, the missionary groups sessions will be attended by representatives from American, British, Scandinavian, French and Dutch missions, as well as from the churches in India, China, Africa, and other countries. Occupation authorities have been asked to permit a delegation from the German missions to attend.

The provisional committee of the World Council of Churches will discuss plans for calling the first assembly of the Council to constitute the organization, formally. Countries represented on the provisional committee include United States, England, France, Switzerland, Sweden, Germany, Yugoslavia, Scotland, the Netherlands, Russia, Denmark, Canada, and Hungary.

Delegation to Russia

New York:—The Most Reverend Alexi, Archbishop of Yarislavl and Rostov, special envoy of the Patriarch of Moscow, called upon the Presiding Bishop at the Church Missions House on October 9. He expressed his interest in the Episcopal Church in the United States, and told of progress being made by the Russian Church.

"The Russian Orthodox Church," said the Archbishop, "wants to get acquainted with the churches in other countries. Hitherto the Russian Church has been somewhat isolated. We feel it is important to have contact with other religious bodies, and that much benefit will result from friendly intercourse with churches abroad, especially those in Great Britain and the United States."

Archbishop Alexi said that he is encountering many new and strange customs in America, especially the shortage in housing. He expects to be in this country for about a year, and thus far has been unable to secure a house or apartment.

Following the visit of the Russian churchman, Religious News Service issued a release stating that the Presiding Bishop had announced that an official delegation would visit the Soviet Union shortly. No definite arrangements have been made regarding the personnel nor has any time been fixed for departure.

Protestant Enthronement

London (RNS): — Several hundred persons milled about the entrance of St. Paul's Cathedral here in a demonstration against the enthronement of J. W. C. Wand as bishop of London. The demonstration was organized by the national union of Protestants, whose director, the Rev. W. St. Clair Taylor, spoke to the assembled crowd through a loud speaker and protested "Roman catholicism in our Protestant church of England, where it is illegal."

Many in the throng carried banners bearing inscriptions saying "Shall priests our laws defy?" Others listed the names of Protestant martyrs. On the arrival of the lord mayor of London, and a corps of sheriffs, demonstrators stood on the cathedral steps and sang, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus."

Within the cathedral, the enthronement ceremonies proceeded without incident.

Urge Share A-Bomb

Janesville, Wis. (RNS):—Sharing of the atomic bomb principles with all members of the United Nations was urged by the Wisconsin Congregational conference here. Copies of the resolution are to be sent to President Truman, Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson and to Senators Alexander Wiley (R) and Robert M. LaFollette (Progressive) of Wisconsin.

Atomic Bomb Control

Boston (RNS):—"No one nation should claim or maintain an exclusive monopoly over the atomic bomb," Bishop Lewis O. Hartman urged recently in a statement issued on behalf of the Methodist Federation for Social Service, of which he is president.

Bishop Hartman favored control of the atomic bomb by the United Nations Organization and its Security Council and warned that temporary American monopoly over the bomb cannot guarantee the security of America or the peace of the world. He criticized the current campaign aimed at withholding the secret of the bomb's manufacture from her war allies, and from Russia in particular.

"Peace makers cannot emphasize too strongly," Bishop Hartman said, "that the atomic bomb is no substitute for international cooperation in general or friendship with the Soviet Union in particular."

The Federation asked that immediate consideration be given to the constructive possibilities of atomic power, and declared itself in favor of public or social ownership and control.

Charge Bishop

Moscow (RNS): — German-born Roman Catholic Bishop of Danzig, Msgr. Karl Maria Splett, is charged by the Polish authorities with having been ill-disposed toward the Polish populace and in favor of the Nazi occupation regime, according to a report here from Warsaw.

Bishop Splett is accused of having issued a pro-Nazi pastoral letter in September, 1939, and with having prohibited use of the Polish language in churches or during the hearing of confessions. He is also said to have ordered removal of Polish inscriptions in cemeteries.

Proceedings against the bishop were said to have been ordered by the Polish minister of justice.

Ask Humane Treatment

London (RNS): — The British Council of Churches has appealed for "orderly and humane treatment of populations which have been or are being transferred" in Europe. In a resolution sent to Prime Minister Clement R. Atlee, the Council urged the British government to act with other governments to attain this objective, as envisaged by the Potsdam declaration. The Council also requested the British government to intensify its efforts to bring immediate relief to liberated countries and Germany "by all available and devisable means," and to facilitate the relief work of accredited voluntary organizations.

Stressing the "terrible conditions of destitution and disease prevailing in Europe today," the Council's resolution expressed certainty that "these sufferings will become more terrible unless remedial efforts are made comparable in determination with that which brought military victory."

The Council said it had "good reason to believe that members of the Christian Churches and others are prepared to this end to accept willingly the continuation of existing restrictions, and further, where the economic situation allows, to make voluntary surrender of food and clothing."

Education of Japan

Sydney, Australia (RNS): — Despite antagonism towards the Japanese by returning prisoners of war, Australian churchmen are urging that Japan be educated to take her place in the family of nations.

Bishop C. L. Riley, Anglican chaplain general, declared that Japanese atrocities were the hardest problem the church had to face, but that "somehow the Japanese have to be brought into the Kingdom of God."

The Rev. E. J. Davidson, Anglican clergyman of Sydney, asserted that "we cannot afford the dubious luxury of hate as hate perpetuates the problem of war by obscuring and enlarging the area of self assertion."

Accepts College Post

Brunswick, Maine:—Walter Houston Clark of Lenox, Mass. and Westfield, N. J. has accepted a position in the department of psychology at Bowdoin College here for one year. Mr. Clark recently resigned as senior master at Lenox School in Lenox.

Mr. Clark is in the unusual position of being a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Westfield, N. J. and of the vestry of Trinity Episcopal Church in Lenox. He was a member of the standing committee and the committee on church unity of the Episcopal diocese of Western Massachusetts and was secretary of the board of managers of Ascension Farm School in South Lee, Mass. He is an associate of the American psychological association. He was one of the original masters on the staff of Lenox School and acted as headmaster in 1942-43.

Study Latin America

Boston:—Bishop C. Alfred Voegeli of Haiti and the Rev. Curtis Fletcher, Jr. of southern Brazil spoke this week on Latin America before the women's division of the church service league in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul.

Latin American handicraft, examples of missionary shipments from the supply bureau and church school work and illustrated material was displayed. Miss Josephine F. Bumstead, diocesan chairman for Latin American missions, was in charge of the program.

Memorial Triptych

Washington:—The beloved Negro employee of the National Cathedral School for girls for 40 years, the late J. Archie Thompson, has been memorialized through a triptych given by the alumni association of the school for a mission in New Guinea.

Mr. Thompson was "Dean" of the custodial staff of the Cathedral for many school generations. Long before his death early last spring, his ability to remember names had become legendary. He is supposed to have been able to recall upon a moment's notice the name of every student of the school during his regime.

The triptych was executed by Ellis Wilson, a Negro artist. The center panel shows Christ carrying his cross up Calvary, and back of him, lifting the burden slightly, is a Negro disciple.

Religious Education

Providence:—The importance of religious education in our time was stressed in an institute of religious education held in Grace Church. Providence, R. I., the evenings of Oct. 9, 16, and continuing for the next two Tuesday evenings.

The institute is sponsored by 38 Episcopal parishes of the Blackstone Valley and Providence area. The sponsors arranged courses to attract people who are interested in making religious education more meaningful and relevant to the present needs.

Courses for Chaplains

Berkeley, Calif.:—Chaplains who wish to spend a week, month or more in study will find a program especially designed for them at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific.

Under this program chaplains may enter the school at any time, take courses for credit, audit them, or establish special tutorial courses for their own benefit. Chaplains will be given free room and tuition.

Some of the special courses are recent theological literature, Paul and the mind of today, devotional life of a priest, and modern liturgical problems.

Does Psychiatric Work

Great Barrington, Mass.: — After spending three weeks' research in psychotherapy and volunteer work in psychiatric interviewing and counselling in personality problems at the Southard Clinic, Boston, the Rev. Richard Mortimer-Maddox, recently resumed his duties as rector of the St. James' Church.

His work was chiefly with new patients who came to the outpatient department. The youngest was a 10 months old baby girl who was looking for adoption. The oldest was a man in his 70's, who has lost all interest in life. There were a number of men and women who are just tired or worried and boys and girls who have difficulty with lessons, teachers, or parents.

Recruit Rural Clergy

Philadelphia (RNS) — Systematic recruiting of young men for lifetime service in the ministry of rural churches will be undertaken by denominational executives of Protestant churches that are members of the committee on town and country, it was decided at the closing session of the committee's annual meeting here.

Stressing the shortage of ministers in rural churches, Benson Y. Landis, executive secretary of the committee, called upon Church leaders to aid in the recruitment campaign. It will be aimed at campuses of agricultural colleges, and cooperation of federal and state departments of agriculture will be sought.

Open Midwest Office

New York (RNS):—The American committee for the World Council of Churches has opened a midwest regional office to promote international interchurch coperation in that area, it was announced at the committee's fall meeting here.

The Rev. Paul G. Macy, who has been secretary for education and promotion of the American committee, has been appointed director of the office. The midwest region includes Minnesota, Missouri, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio.

Detroit:—The relationship of the women of the Church to the world situation was the theme of the recent meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the diocese of Michigan. The meeting, under the chairmanship of Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas of Highland Park, was held in Mariners' Church.

Lots of Money

New York:—Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin reports another excellent month in payments on expectations from dioceses and missionary districts. His statement shows that amounts received to October 1, 1945 amount to 108.6% of amount due; that 83 dioceses have paid amount due, and four dioceses have paid the entire expectation for 1945, these being Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee and Honolulu.

Amount due on expectations to October 1 was $1,239,341. Amount paid by the dioceses and districts, $1,346,305.88.

Religious Schools

Detroit:—Perhaps indicative of a growing interest in religious study, a report from Michigan points out that there are three schools of religion operating simultaneously in as many different centers of the diocese.

The Wayne Episcopal school of religion, developed by the Rev. Waldo R. Hunt, is being held in St. John's Church, Wayne, on Sunday evenings, Oct. 7 to Nov. 11.

Two institutes on religious subjects will be conducted as convocational features in cooperation with the diocesan department of Christian education. In the Southwest Convocation a Christian education institute for Church School teachers, officers, parents and young people will be held in St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, on Tuesday evenings, ending its proponents claim it may be indirectly useful. These may be questioned, but the only real argument against the bill is its basic, primary purpose. That purpose is wrong. That purpose is to arm our nation because we fear our neighbors. We have just concluded a pact with these neighbors which provides that we will help maintain an international police force. We know that there are predatory people, unjust people, covetous people, unfairly ambitious people, and we trust in a police force to cope with them. There are predatory, unjust, covetous, unfairly ambitious people in the United States, in the state of Massachusetts, in our home towns, and we trust the police force to cope with them. We do not employ our own private guards. We assume that our neighbors are peaceable and if they are not the police will handle them. Nations must surrender their right to carry arms the same as citizens have surrendered that right.

GREATER NEED

Many who have given generously to the great work being done in China under the direction of the Rev. Kimber Den have asked if there is still need, now that the shooting has stopped. The answer is a positive yes. There was never greater need—or a more vital work for those who believe that the building of men will accomplish more toward making a Christian world than the erection of buildings.

It was said at this meeting that if the United States knew that other great nations would not have universal military service we of course would be glad to forego it. In other words, we know it is wrong and are asked to take the lead in the wrong doing. Fear of damage to our property or our pride is the cause of war. Surrender of some of our sovereignty will provide the means of our protection; justice in dealing with all our neighbors all over the world will provide us with security; unreserved application of Christian principles will provide the atmosphere in which peace may be designed and won. It is beneath the dignity of mankind as created in the image of God to conscript his own sons because we are afraid of our neighbors.

We were given one bit of practical advice at this tea. Write your Congressman, your Senators and your President about this bill. Talk to people about it. Organize meetings about it. Write to your local newspapers about it. Tell them you do not want it.

Those who do want it are not idle. The United States Chamber of Commerce is still sending out literature in favor of it. The citizens committee for Universal Military Service still thinks it is a live issue. So does the National Committee for Universal Military Training of Young Men. And Mrs. Patton and Mrs. Barlow and others who are equally able to impress people with names and teas are going about the country. Whether it is because they love army wives, want to prevent strikes or relieve the youth of the land from the domination of educators it is hard to understand. But one thing is rather demonstrable and that is that universal drafting of young men for military service has never prevented wars from beginning, nor won wars after they have started.

The issue for a Christian to decide is simply this, is this bill right or is it wrong? Even its proponents do not claim it is right. They claim that it is useful or practical or desirable. So are many other things but Christians have to say "No" to things that are wrong.

THE REV. LANE W. BARTON
Rector of Grace Church, Orange, N. J.

You run a lousy sheet which gives one a dangerous case of blood pressure. In fact it's about all I can stand. So to keep my wife out of my hair, off my neck etc., I am entering a subscription for her so that she and I won't fight for the paper as soon as it comes in the house and both try to read it at the same time. This is an exorbitant price to pay for domestic peace and tranquility, but a man has to have some peace and if he can't get it reading THE WITNESS I guess the only other place is home. So for more peace at home if we can't get it from THE WITNESS, and with ardent good wishes, I am—

REV. HENRY H. WIESBAUER
Canon, St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo

I thought there was some pretty solid thinking in the article on unity by Ewing Everett (WITNESS, Sept. 20). It says what a wise old priest who was vicar of our college town mission used to utter every now and then: "There are just two kinds of churchmen, high and low. The high are very high type and the low are very low." These tags can be misleading I find. That old priest was considered a very low churchman but all of us who knew him knew that he was very high type. And it seemed to me then, and still does now, that he had made a rather accurate observation. I agree with Mr. Everett in his thinking and believe that unity, like charity, must begin at home.

May I heartily amen the Rev. Frederick W. Kates' excellent article on The Parish and the Press (WITNESS, Sept. 27). I am a newspaperman and canvass my church for news of my denomination, but the advice to rectors and churchmen upon sound relations with the press is excellent. I have graduated from Columbia University's school of journalism with a graduate degree and worked two years for the Associated Press before returning home to help manage my father's newspaper so that I have had wide experience in knowing how clergy and churches can help the newspapers.

REV. C. LESLIE GLENN
Chaplain in the Navy

Many people at home have sent clippings from the daily press and Church papers of the fact that one thousand men in the armed services had expressed their intention to go into the ministry. Several of my correspondents had the impression that the thousand men were all Episcopalians. An analysis of the figures published in The Chaplain (July, 1945) gives the following sobering statistics: Church of the Open Door, 1; Evangelical Congregational, 1; Friends, 1; Jewish, 1; Moravian, 1; Plymouth Brethren, 1; Unitarian and Universalists, 1; Christian Reformed, 2; Church of the Brethren, 2; Four Square, 2; Holiness Christian, 2; Missionary, 2; Pentecostal Holiness, 2; Pentecostal Assemblies of the World, 2; Bible Protestant, 3; Christian Science, 3; Church of the Open Bible, 3; Evangelical Free, 4; Latter Day Saints, 4; Pentecostal, 5; Reformed Church in America, 6; Salvation Army, 6; Seventh Day Adventist, 10; Church of the Nazarene, 11; Evangelical, 11; Christian and Missionary Alliance, 12; Evangelical and Reformed, 12; all Mennonite bodies, 12; Disciples of Christ, 33; all Lutheran bodies, 72; all Presbyterian bodies, 103; all Methodist bodies, 188; all Baptist bodies, 276; denomination undesignated and churches not listed in the Year Book of Churches, 40.

A mathematical eye will detect that this adds up to 834 instead of 1,000. It is to be hoped that the missing 166 men in the list are all Episcopalians. I know of one ship where, out of 12 candidates whose names were sent in, 3 were Episcopalians. Almon Pepper at our Church Missions House, for the Presiding Bishop's committee on the post war ministry, has quietly gone ahead and collected several hundred names of Episcopal candidates, and some of these must be in the list of the first thousand.

Important questions are, does the number compare favorably with the candidates for the ministry that the Church lost by the war? How many men normally go into the ministry each year? And how large a deficit was created because the normal supply of candidates was cut off?

I write this, not to detract from the cheering effect of an ambiguous news item, but to urge greater efforts at recruiting for the ministry among returning service men, and stronger support for Canon Pepper's fine work.

An inspiration for those who fought
..a living memorial to those who fell

AT LAST the angry guns are still . . . and G. I. Joe is coming home.

But the ageless song of the bells, which steeled him with spiritual courage unconquerable, will not be silenced.

For the Liberty Carillons from which this soul-stirring music welled and swelled have a peace-time duty to perform.

Already they are being recruited to serve as living, audible memorials to those who fought and fell that the long-awaited promise of "Peace on earth, good will to man" might have glorious and lasting fulfillment.

IT WAS four years ago that the Liberty Carillon was cast in the mold of wartime urgency.

A mighty army then was in the making, and a morale-building force was needed to help convert men of peace into battle battalions, dedicated to a righteous cause.

Only the reminiscent peal of great bells, which have rung for centuries over ancient cathedrals, could provide that spiritual inspiration, but the belfries of the Army and Navy chapels were too small to house them.

So science was called upon to create an authentic means of mass communication that would help fire the hearts and souls of our servicemen with religious and patriotic fervor.

And a miracle was wrought—the Liberty Carillon was perfected with all the fidelity of tone, the mighty volume and majestic resonance of bells of great tonnage.

These were the miracle bells that called G. I. Joe to prayer . . . put resolution in his step as he boarded the gray troopship . . . echoed in his heart on the crimson beaches of Anzio and Normandy and in the embattled foxholes on Iwo Jima and Okinawa.

TODAY, and for untold years to come, the Liberty Carillon can add audible beauty to memorial buildings, parks and playgrounds of enduring worth and inspiration.

In addition, these miracle bells can help to perpetuate the peace so dearly won.

They can turn church belfries into watch towers . . . serve as ringing reminders of the inviolate trust we must keep with those who died that freedom might live . . . keep us ever mindful of our pledge to root out all seeds of future tyranny and oppression.

Chaplain (Major) Robert S. Hall at the console of Fort Hamilton's Liberty Carillon, which is typical of those heard by millions of servicemen in the camps and by radio on far fighting fronts.

The compactness, the modest cost and other factors that make the Liberty Carillon the ideal memorial are set forth in our illustrated brochure, "The Heart of a Bell." In requesting a copy, kindly use your personal letterhead

Pointers for That New Church You Plan on Building

Billions to Be Spent on Church Building Projects in Next Few Years Survey Says

By Sara Dill

New York:—Hundreds of churches which have held off making improvements and constructing new buildings during the depression and war years are now beginning to take action to make their post war building plans a reality.

From $1,750,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 will be spent in church building projects within the first five post war years, according to a recent survey by the Tile Council of America. Right now as much as six hundred million dollars' worth of church building projects are in various stages of planning. In the last years of building inactivity, shifts in the population have left more than 700 permanent communities without church building facilities.

As the center of the life of the church the church building should be wisely and carefully planned. E. M. Conover, director of the interdenominational bureau of architecture makes the following suggestions to churches planning building or improvement projects.

1. The congregation should be united in a deep conviction of the need for such a program of building.

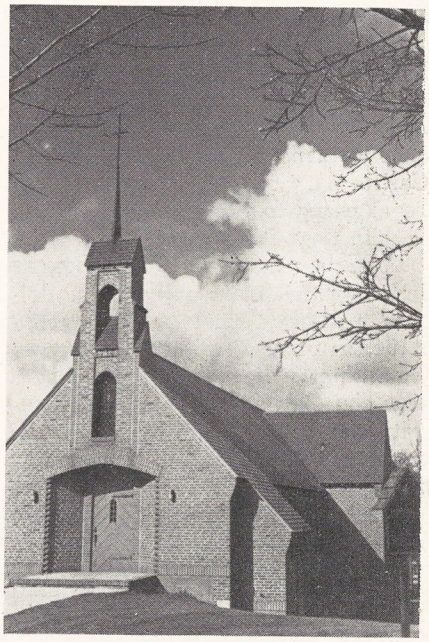
2. A survey of the field: population study, comity considerations, etc. should be made.

3. A future program of worship, education, fellowship, and service should be laid out and the plans for the church building and equipment built around these plans.

4. The best possible financial program and policy for the particular congregation should be organized.

5. The limit of building debt to be allowed at any time should be fixed by congregational vote.

6. Architectural service should be investigated and expert advice sought before definite action is taken.



7. The church should give the architects sufficient time to study its particular problems.

Conover predicts that the new church buildings will provide for more effective services of public worship, greater use of liturgy, more appreciation of good religious art, and a highly developed program of Christian education, including church school periods on week days and summer vacation school sessions.

Many church plans include provisions for social and recreational activities, as an integral part of the total church plant. Conover points out that there is a strong tendency to link recreational work with Christian education, on the ground that religious character can be effectively developed through supervised play and recreation and because church members increasingly find their social and community life within their congregations.

The new church building will have air conditioning, acoustical correction and the best mechanical equipment. Many include provisions for the use of sound pictures in religious education as well as for recreation. Conover suggests as minimum recreational equipment a general purpose social hall with clear floor area and a high ceiling, equipped with stage for dramatics and pageantry and a kitchen. Such a hall will be available for all types of indoor games and recreation. Added to this will be boys' and girls' club rooms, a church parlor, and rooms for floor and table games. In larger churches, there will be bowling alleys, and in some cases a second hall for athletic games, releasing the first social hall for church suppers, entertainments, motion pictures.

The tile council survey indicates a trend among the new church building plans in larger cities to construct separate units for the church proper, the Sunday School, and the chapel. The religious education building, they predict, will be two or even three stories high and will have ample class rooms, large assembly rooms and space for church offices. The church proper will be used for worship and the chapel for weddings and funerals.

Gothic, Georgian, Tudor, and Colonial architecture will continue popular in Protestant churches, the study indicates, with Spanish influence evident in the southwest and California. Colonial architecture can be expected to grow in favor in the middle west, it pointed out.

A survey made by THE WITNESS indicates that many millions of dollars will be spent for the construction of new Episcopal Churches in all parts of the country. Where new churches are not planned, renovation and improvements are to be made. This information is contained in replies to a questionnaire sent to diocesan authorities throughout the country. There is not a diocese that does not have plans for construction, ranging from the building of small rectories and parish houses to million dollar cathedrals and churches.

Dayton, Ohio:—One of the finest exhibitions of religious art yet shown in this country was the one held at the Art Institute in this city. Exhibited there was the Chapel of Christ the Worker, which is our cover picture in this Church of the Future Number. The chapel was designed by Barry Byrne, New York architect, and the stained glass was designed and executed by Emil Frei of St. Louis, whose glass is in St. Mark's Church in that city. From that exhibit, also presented elsewhere in this number, is the famous Last Supper by Walter Houmeré of Lausanne, Switzerland.

GREAT VALLEY CHURCH RESTORED

Paoli, Pa.:—St. Peter's in the Great Valley had a special service on October 7th to celebrate the completion of the major part of its restoration program. The address was given by Owen J. Roberts, former Supreme Court justice and the service was conducted by the rector, the Rev. J. Jarden Guenther. St. Peter's was founded about 1700 by the Rev. Evan Evans of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel of the Church of England. A log cabin was the first place of worship with the present church built in 1744. St. Peter's was one of the five original parishes admitted at the first convention of the diocese of Pennsylvania in 1785.

The church was "modernized" in 1900. The picture shown in this number will give readers some idea of the beauty of the present restoration. The parish incidentally is more than a colonial shrine. It has become an active parish under Mr. Guenther, with an ever increasing congregation, a good church school and a parish house that is the center of social life in the community.

DETROIT CHURCHES PLAN BUILDING

Detroit (RNS):—Nearly 60 Detroit churches are set for a postwar building program which will involve a total expenditure of about $3,000,000, according to a survey made by the Detroit Council of Churches. Most of this will be spent for new buildings, including churches, educational units, and recreational facilities, according to the survey.

A view of the altar and altar rail which was recently installed in Emmanuel Church, Cleveland, the work of John W. Winterich and Associates

YOUTH FOR CHRIST CONDEMNED

Chicago (RNS):—Efforts of the Youth for Christ movement, which has been denounced for having fascist leanings, was condemned last week by a number of clergymen here for trying to establish a segregated Negro department. Asserting that the proposal runs contrary to the trend toward interracial religious cooperation, the protesting group voiced its opposition to "segregated religion" and a "religious movement which so far has not shown concern with the social and economic ills of our society. We wonder why, if the Youth for Christ sincerely wants the participation of Negro youth, they are not invited to the city-wide rallies instead of to special south side rallies on the same evening? Surely Christ would have no part in this latest effort which mocks his name and his principles."

The survey revealed that 15 congregations have initiated projects for the construction of churches, educational units and recreational equipment. The estimated cost of the projects is $1,335,000. Nineteen churches are planning erection of education buildings, most of them with community recreational facilities. According to council figures, their total cost will exceed $1,150,000.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS TO BE RELEASED

Washington:—On the basis of age and service performed about 400 conscientious objectors are to be released by January 1. Those in public service camps who are 38, regardless of length of service, will be released within sixty days.

A Sexton Presents His Ideas On a Modern Church

Suggests That Those Who Design Churches Would Learn Much By Sweeping Under Pews

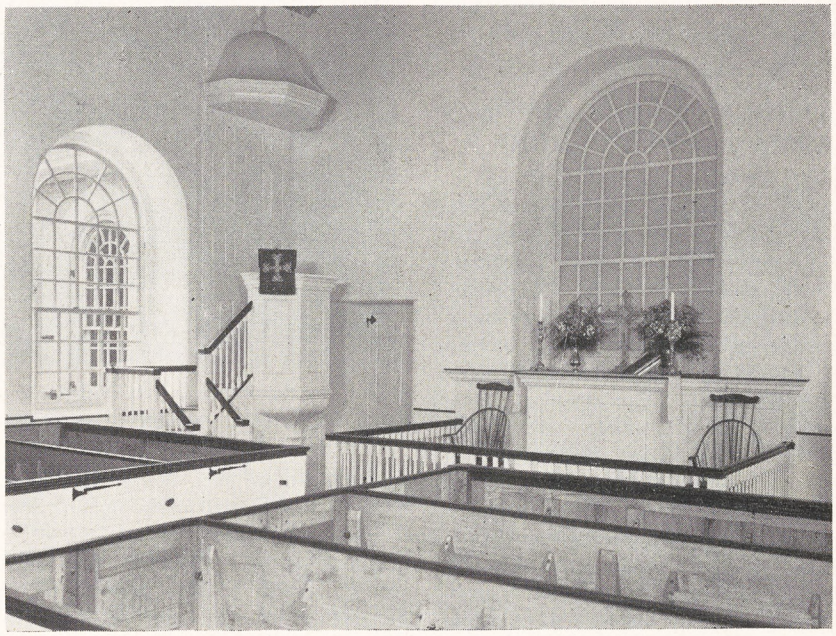
By Leslie Hamilton Ball
Sexton of a Church in Denver, Colorado

Denver, Colo.:—Here's an angle of the ecclesiastical architecture question which may possibly have suffered from involuntary neglect.

The viewpoint to which I refer is that of the sexton. Having done this kind of work for my living over a period of years I feel entitled to be heard. There seems to be a tendency in all trades for the book-trained experts to rather disastrously at times override the man of mere practical experience. But apart from this the paying customers are apt to get a disproportionate percentage of the breaks in the matter of design.

In fact it would, I believe, be a wholesome innovation for the white-collar men to be obliged to spend a portion of their pre-graduate time working in the same surroundings which they are learning to plan for others to have the care of. They should be able to say they had sampled in person the sensations, sorrows and sensibilities of the sweeper caste!

It's bad enough of course that seats should be either torturous to sit in, or too comfortable for properly sustained attention to sermons. But when one considers the long drawn-out repetitious soul-deading monotony of a year of sweeping under low immoveable pews, one naturally wonders if there is no better discoverable plan. Add to this that the hundreds of kneeling pads in a large church have to be dusted every week, and the dust recollected from the varied corners to which it has been driven and it seems that electric "outlets" at convenient intervals would perhaps be as pleasing to the Lord of the (eventually) "blessed" poor as some of the more obvious architectural advantages.



Again, to be obliged to even once thoroughly clean up under the choir seats, removing paper and peanut shells or other boyish residue, and at the same time sweeping the carpeted central aisle and polishing the woodwork ought to be a truly inspiring experience to the inventive genius of an artist-soul.

Then there are heating problems. The lofty ceilings which are so uplifting to the sensuous souls of many worshipers are too often the set-up for painful problems in thermodynamics (if that is the word) complicated by perfectionist complexes in those who feel that a sexton was designed by Deity in the form of a convenient combination of laboring Hercules and the miracle-working minion of Aladdin's lamp! Why can not architects really try to conserve fuel and also comfort values, and the Sunday labors of the sexton?

Do I hear the mocking merriment of "lesser breeds without the Law"? Well why not endeavor to find a way to beat the rap?

And how about plumbing and lighting? A lavatory, where people go for personal cleanliness—and janitors have to clean up after them—surely should be lighted without a trace of "religious" dimness? Are not sanitation and stinginess sworn enemies?

To conclude my diatribe with a really glaring instance of short-sightedness. I know a church where the big air-conditioning fan is set so close to a brick outer wall that it is a physical impossibility to fill the oil-cups on one end of the fan axle. True, it still runs. But some day!

St. Peter's Church in Great Valley, near Paoli, Pa., has recently been restored to the way it was in 1744 the year in which the present church was built

CHURCH MUSIC COMMISSION

Gloucester, Va.:—The diocese of Virginia now has a commission on church music with the Rev. Reginald W. Eastman, rector here, as chairman. It plans to give choirs information about small organs suitable for church use, lists of anthems and hymns best suited for small choirs. A conference for organists, choir directors and interested clergy also is planned.

PHILIPPINE CHURCHES PROMOTE UNITY

Manila:—The first meeting of the Philippine federation of evangelical churches since the Japanese occupation four years ago has met here with plans made to promote religious education throughout the islands. The meeting also approved a report by the committee on Church unity suggesting a vigorous educational program to promote organic unity of the Churches. Dr. E. K. Higdon, executive secretary of the Philippine committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, who has just made an extended tour, reported large damage to churches but stressed that the urgent needs were clothing, medicine, food and shelter—something perhaps for those in charge of the Reconstruction and Advance Fund of the Episcopal Church with its stress on buildings, to take into consideration.

MEAD-AIKEN BILL OPPOSED

Chicago (RNS):—Opposition to the Mead-Aiken Bill, which would provide public funds for private and parochial schools, was expressed here by the board of trustees of the International Council of Religious Education.

"The International Council looks with disfavor upon the proposals in this bill," declared Roy G. Ross, general secretary. "It believes that, in taking this stand, it represents the general conviction of its constituent agencies against the appropriation of public funds for sectarian education."

A cooperative agency of 40 denominations and 183 state, city and provincial councils of churches and religious education, the International Council represents 90 per cent of American Protestantism.

CATHOLIC BISHOP OPPOSES GERMAN SCOUT GROUP

Frankfort on the Main, Germany (RNS): — Roman Catholic Bishop Albert Stohr, who was charged by the German bishops with reorganizing the Catholic youth movement, has expressed opposition to any mixed youth movement such as the boy scouts in which Catholics are members with Protestant, Jews, Socialists, Communists, etc. He termed a boy scout movement as "foreign to our traditions."

Speaking of such mixed groups, he said "We had that system in the pre-Hitler free youth groups. We found that these principles as applied to Germany led to a weakening of the spiritual content of the youth movement. Only the lowest common denominator of all groups could be used. It was mixing wine with water. We desire for our youth a firmer religious and ideological foundation."

"Our aim," the bishop said, "is to rescue the substance of what Christian civilization is left in Germany against anti-Christian tendencies."

MORE PSYCHIATRISTS ARE NEEDED

Barrington, R. I.:—The small number of physicians who are trained to handle mental and nervous cases is one major difficulty confronting this country in treatment of mental ailments of returning veterans, Dr. Arthur H. Ruggles, superintendent of Butler Hospital pointed out at the first fall meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. John's Church recently.

Out of the 167,000 doctors in practice in the United States there are only 4000 qualified psychiatrists, he pointed out. Many of the existing out-patient departments in hospitals are quite inadequate. "I hope that we won't stand for shabby treatment for veterans of this war. Treatment should be easily available. Service-men should be seen for at least one hour and the treatment should last at least 30 minutes."

Dr. Ruggles predicted that economic chaos would result in a trebling of the number of hospital entrance applications." Human ills are often forgotten or neglected as long as one is kept busy," he said. "Veterans' problems in many instances have been overemphasized and they are no greater than problems of everyday life."

BOMB'S IMPLICATIONS TO BE STUDIED

London (RNS):—Can nations control atomic energy for beneficial uses or is it to be the "last and worst destroyer of civilized life."

A committee of experts to study this question and other moral and spiritual implications of the atomic bomb has been created by the British Council of Churches. Dr. Geoffrey Francis Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury announced at a joint meeting here of the upper and lower houses of the convocation of Canterbury. The Archbishop declared that the subject was one "about which denominational differences are quite irrelevant and cooperative investigation especially suitable."

MANY SERVICEMEN WANT TO ENTER MINISTRY

Washington (RNS): — Questionnaires with names of young men who want to enter the ministry, are coming in at the rate of 100 a week, the general commission on army and navy chaplains reported here. As of September 28, the commission had received the names of 3,789 young men interested in preparing for the ministry. Of those who expressed a preference in denomination 225 wanted to go into the Episcopal Church.

An attractive, modern Sunday school hall. Notice the exciting and inexpensive glass murals, closets, files, proper seats for the children

CHURCH COOPERATION URGED BY BENES

Prague (wireless to RNS):—President Eduard Benes of Czechoslovakia urged a conference of young people here to "follow ecumenical aims." "We are unable to say when the churches, especially the Protestant, will be united but you must never forget this: your goal won't come tomorrow or the day after but a process that goes on constantly must reach its goal."

Churches to Live and Work in

A PROFESSOR of architecture in one of our leading universities bemoans the newer trend in church buildings because it is based upon the utilitarian forms of our industrial and commercial age. He is a romanticist. He wants churches to look like pictures out of old books full of tales of knights-errant and gargoyles. He forgets that the medieval stone-mason was just as utilitarian in his manner of construction as the modern builder in steel, cement and plastics; that his artistic imagination adorned and beautified his structure with symbols and emblems which, however real to him, are for the modern man but wistful sentiment and make-believe.

The modern home, school and office are a delight to live and work in. We should not wish to abandon them for the gloomy, drafty and pretentious buildings of even a century ago, however sentimental their associations. We like the simplicity, the straightforwardness, the sunlit cheerfulness, the conveniences and utility which newer designs and techniques have achieved. And many of them strike us with their beauty because they are healthy in appearance and true to their purpose. As Ruskin said in the Stones of Venice, "We require from buildings, as from men, two kinds of goodness: first, doing their practical duty well; then that they be graceful and pleasing in doing it."

God forbid that our church buildings should ever become merely graceful and pleasing. The tremendous awe which the Gothic expressed must never be lost. Yet the new realization that the Church is the body of Christ also must have its effect on our churches. They are the homes and workshop of God's family. In them is set the pattern of life for the men and women who are trained to serve their own generation. So many of our churches, placed along side the clean and sturdy buildings of modern life, are long, dreary halls which separate people instead of bringing them together as one body. Against the dynamic conflicts and possible vistas of plenty and fellowship which a scientific age has brought us, too many churches cloister faith and vision behind outworn facades in a dim religious light of mystification and fantasy.

The Gothic church expressed the aspiration and spiritual energy of the age of stone in vernacular forms of its own epoch. Can we not also dare to employ the heroic struggles of the age of steel towards the end of drawing together the scattered children of God in architecture "understanded of the people"?

"QUOTES"

THE Churches' innate, necessary conservatism in matters of faith has led to a blind traditionalism, an over-reliance on accepted convention in many of their outward forms, certainly in their use of the arts. The vital contemporary artist has wisely preferred not to accept such patronage if it means acceptance of such discipline. In fact it is hard to be moderate in commenting on the degradation of official religious art in the past hundred years, its neo- or pseudo-architectural styles, the cheapest of commercial illustration, which it allowed to masquerade as religious painting, the tawdriness of even its liturgical crafts. On his part the artist has not always benefited today, and in the recent past, from his non-social individualism. Untrammelled independence has sometimes led to dissipation of energy, dearth of imaginative inspiration, or plain lack of direction. Now when the cynicism of a material civilization threatens Church and artist both with extinction there is reason in plenty for their making common cause. The logic of the present and the precedent of the past argue to the same end. And here are indications that such an alliance is not only possible but is actually being formed.

For the Record

A NOTICE has been sent to subscribers of The Christian Century informing them that there is a strike in the Chicago printing industry and that the next number of that weekly will be mailed on the resumption of union printing operations. The notice states that the strike affects "all publications printed in union shops in the Chicago area, except only the daily newspapers."

By implication this means that any magazine printed in Chicago at the present time is printed in a non-union shop. Since THE WITNESS is printed in Chicago we want our readers to have the matter straight without in any way implying any criticism of the labor policy of The Christian Century since we know that they contract the work and therefore have little if any control over such matters. However THE WITNESS is printed now, as it has been for over twenty-five years, by the Clarke-McElroy Publishing Company. It has always been, and is now, a one hundred per cent union shop.

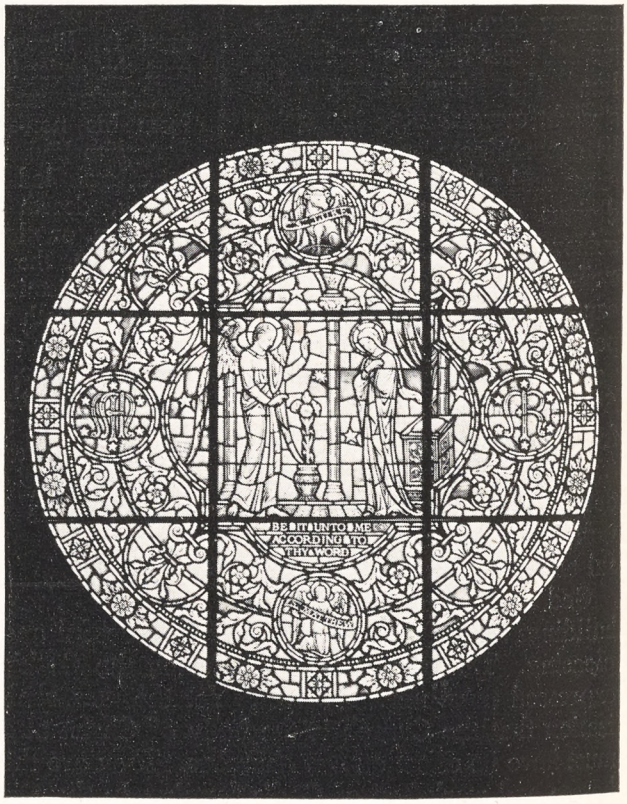
All Sufferers and All Saints

ALL SAINTS DAY falls on a Thursday this year. In churches scattered throughout the world, handfuls of people will gather to hear of "a great multitude which no man could number"; on some continents (even on ours, at places) some will take comfort from the words "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you and persecute you." With so great a cloud of witnesses this globe-scattered remnant will celebrate the eucharist in a devotional manner, and that will be that . . . While outside the holy places, busy swarms of humanity seek their survival caught in a net of bewildering inventions which blind most of them to the fact that men have ever become blessed. A yawning gulf separates All Saints Day and the Every Day which surrounds and ignores it. Can this gulf be bridged? The earnest Christian answers with an everlasting Yea! He believes that whole company of heaven is there —yes, here—interpenetrating all things visible with that fourth-or-many-dimensional world of all things invisible. Across the apparent gulf, the Christian sees mankind's urgent physical needs and senses its need of the spirit. All Saints and all suffering people are not in separate, uncommunicating compartments of the universe! All saints and all sufferers are in God's hand, and the saints most surely have concern for the sufferers. The saints are at the side of those who are fighting exploitation, tyranny and prejudice, for their Lord is there. We have no right, then, to separate our economic-political application of the faith from what we weakly call "our belief in the future life." All Saints triumphant recognize no such separation. We can profitably listen to them on All Saints Day. For, as T. S. Eliot says in his Four Quartets, " . . . what the dead had no speech for, when living, they can tell you, being dead: the communication of the dead is tongued with fire beyond the language of the living." May they not have as much to say about atomic energy and living standards as they have said about the dark night of the soul?

The Church of the Future



by Thaddeus Clapp

Rector of St. Mark's, Worcester, Massachusetts

WHEN Max Reinhardt wanted to produce an atmosphere of religiosity to support the mood he was creating in his great production of The Miracle, he went to great lengths to turn the theatre into a pseudo-gothic cathedral. While a few people confused the resulting emotional effects with religion, most people were aware that the very beautiful atmosphere, and the nostalgia thus produced, was a tour de force of romanticism. Never for a moment did most of them believe they were undergoing a living and valid religious experience.

It is one of the anomalies of modern culture that the same people who correctly understood what happened to them when they saw The Miracle are completely taken in by the similar experience they undergo when they step from a modern street into a large gothic church. This is of course only to say that much of what passes for religion today is not religion at all, but a certain type of feeling which is essentially the same as the feeling produced when one suddenly hears a popular song that was current in one's youth and that calls up memories and ideas accompanied by feeling states from the past.

I say essentially the same feelings are produced, because both stimuli, the jazz song and the gothic church, make memories and associations. That they are not identical is due to the jazz recalling memories of first hand experience, while the gothic, even if it does recall experiences in various churches, also recalls historical experiences known only through reading, in other words, experiences that are essentially literary.

Now there is nothing wrong in using psychological aids to worship, nor is there anything wrong in enriching the content of worship with history and tradition provided it is understood and not confused with worship, but one cannot help but wonder if the Church today can risk the luxury of evoked nostalgia, and it is the latter, not the former, that our church buildings most often produce. We are too prone to shirk building a new age of faith to dare rest in memories of a past age of faith.

I have conducted several funerals in "funeral homes" where the organist has played Sullivan's The Lost Chord as a prelude because it sounds "religious," and have known people who thought that the love song The Rosary was deeply religious. For some reason, both tunes, and on a higher cultural level, The Good Friday music from Parsifal, make them think of religion. This is our real danger. Today too many people think they are religious when they think of religion, and this is why the Church can hardly afford to build in a style that is reminiscent of a past faith.

In a non-Christian culture people will grab at any straw that helps them avoid the central implications of Christianity.

All this is by way of introduction to the church building of the future, and the buildings of the future, some of them at least, will be built in the next few years.

WHAT, then, will the church building of the future be like? Probably a large number of the buildings we are planning will be like the ones built before the war, and some few may be what we call lunatic fringe buildings, but it is legitimate to hope, so here is my hope.

First: the church building will be a real meeting house where the Church can meet in convenient comfort.

Next: the meeting house will be so designed as to make clear to every one that it is the house of the Church, and that the Church is a living thing, more interested in spreading the faith we have received than in thinking about the ages of faith that are passed. This implies the use of a contemporary design, or style, and contemporary techniques.

Finally: the building will have straightforward decoration, and a dramatic emphasis that avoids leading people into side issues.

Translated into concrete terms what do these three hopes mean?

As a good meeting house, the building will fulfill the standards set for such buildings in regard to light, ventilation, heat, acoustics and cleanliness. Also it will be open and cheerful and not too expensive to build and maintain.

As an expression of contemporary life it will

The painting of the Last Supper by Walter Houmeré which was shown at the exhibition of Religious Art of Today at the Dayton Art Institute be so designed as not to offer escapes from reality into wonder at archaic structural methods and the inclusion of elements, the ambulatory, the chevet, etc., that ceased to be functional long ago. Nor will it express its closeness to modern life by including scenes from modern life depicted in thirteenth century style glass or in carved grotesques, but rather by its clean functionalism. As such it will be neither quaint nor "olde" nor deliberately picturesque. In other words, it will be what we call "modern."

Above all it will be planned in such a way that the altar will once more become the focal center of the building. It will not be hidden by a reredos or a roodscreen, or shut away from the people by a rail or by choir stalls. The altar itself will be a table, not a tomb, and as the focal center of the building will express the unity of the Church in the eucharistic worship. This means that the side altars and shrines will be suppressed, and pieces of furniture will be out of sight when not in use.

In decoration our church buildings should be as contemporary in feeling as in their plan and general design. Windows and paintings will not provide a series of puzzles, through the use of involved heraldic symbols, to be worked by the congregations during dull sermons. St. Ambrose will be labeled St. Ambrose in letters, not by means of a mitre, beehive, and book, in a quaint but involved heraldic still life. The mother of Jesus will not be portrayed as a medieval queen with a crown on her head for the edification of people in a twentieth century democracy, nor will the conquest of evil be depicted by St. George, historically a highly dubious personage at best, but by Frederick Dennison Maurice or Archbishop Temple or, best of all, by the cleansing of the Temple. Let us also hope that these subjects will be in a contemporary style and not be reduced to paintings in the manner of Italian Primitives.

There is room in our church buildings for the use of painting and sculpture to present history, and to commemorate the heroes of the Church. Certainly the tradition of the Church is enshrined in the liturgy and set forth in the propers of the seasons and the saints. Can we not bring out its truly contemporary reference by the art forms we use? Can't we really express the centrality of the eucharist as sacrifice and joyful banquet in contemporary terms? Can't we bring the past into the present instead of trying to retreat into the past? Is the Lord's supper a memorial of a meal once held or is it a continuous process of living communion? Can't we express that in our buildings?

If we build in the so-called modern style, future Christians will laugh at our buildings and pull them down to rebuild them in their own way. Why not? The history of taste is full of such incidents. Romanesque, Gothic, Renaissance and Baroque, each have been laughed at in turn by creative men who preferred the living style of their day to museum pieces. That is healthy, for in the history of culture, vitality has always found expression in new art forms, and sickness in revivals of past styles. Are we sick? Do we live only on memories, or can we still act and create?

A TRULY modern Church should be a record of man's effort to make God real and alive for this present age. It will seek to use the rich traditions of historic Christianity but it will always attempt to express them in ways that have real, concrete and specific meaning for our own times. In other words, it should be a contemporary Church, reaching out into the past for inspiration and experience and looking forward into the future with a hope and a vision; not a dogma.

The spirit of its builders will be as old as art and religion themselves. They will go back to the meanings of past traditions and seek to express the ancient truths in a language understandable to modern man. They will sift the vital from the dead; the important from the irrelevant and check all that they do in terms of the needs of their contemporaries. They will not be imitators of the external forms of the past for to do so marks the decadence that confuses the outward expressions of art and religious culture with its true inner meaning. They will understand the significance of a majestic Gothic Cathedral and the spirit which created the Parthenon and the Pyramids, the Tudor Towers and the warm Georgian Chapel. And in the same spirit that produced these great classical monuments, all of which were truly modern in their day, they will seek to interpret for today the truths that are abiding.

To express the "spiritual" in concrete physical terms is one of the oldest and most constant drives of religious man. Creatures of the senses we have an abiding hunger to translate that which is beyond our sensual perception,—the eternal—into those forms that are real; which we can understand and enjoy. A Church building, honestly conceived, is such an effort. The word modern as it is commonly understood (i.e. as something new or different) is not the best term to apply, nor is "The Church of the Future" too apt. All honest expressions of religion have been modern and no building should try to dictate to the future a pattern no longer usable. Such pretension is ridiculous, particularly in the face of the atomic revolution which none of us can begin to comprehend. We can say nothing to the future that is dogmatic: at best we can only leave a record of that which has honest meaning and value for us today. The trouble with many of us in the Church is that we seem to be so afraid of dying that we cling with drugged allegiance to the old forms and attempt to make our children obey the same rules in the vain hope of finding an immortality within ourselves or within that which we know. Such an immortality does not exist and to think we have it is a lack of faith. It gets bombed out in every generation and all that we can say of life is that it is subject to change without notice!

BUT the struggle to make the eternal real is always with us. And the greatest joy in the world is to construct some symbol, however crude, some definite piece of work created out of the materials at our side, that will somehow remind us of God. We therefore, must live in this day; we begin with what we know, with the facts of everyday existence and if we are fortunate enough to discover some part of their meaning we will begin to know God. The facts that we must deal with are these: reconversion, rationing, atomic energy, strikes, price controls, politics, and many more. The materials at our side are steel and oil, aluminum and pewter, brick walls and super stratospheric liners. Let the Church once begin realistically to deal with these facts and to use these materials and modern men will begin to understand us. It is a little stupid of us to think that we can appeal to honest men who live in this stream-lined world by building churches with imitative flying buttresses that serve no purpose. We can no longer get by with gold-plated Chi Rho's and those horrible Alleluias that appear on frontals that hang like little bibs from fake and overdecorated altars in letters that only an archeologist could read. How can we expect a man to feel the meaning of Allelulia in an archaic atmosphere that suggests to most men the effeminate and the weak. Of course the ladies guild are proud of their needle work but the average man is discouragingly unimpressed.

The functional approach to church architecture has been too little understood and appreciated. The functional style is not modernistic in the sense that it seeks to be different or bizarre in a shallow effort to make an impression. Functionalism is the honest use of materials in a simple forthright manner in the belief that these materials themselves can reveal truth in a beautiful form. It is an attempt to take the rough material of our lives and shape it into beauty, thus giving it meaning. It says that eye-beams and brick walls can speak of God to modern men. It tries to make the structural parts of a building the essence of its form, and with imagination this can be done very effectively and beautifully. It is also both honest and economical; two essential Christian virtues. It isn't necessary to decorate a church wall with every curlicue design known to man or to tack on to an altar irrelevant (and for that matter irreverent) patterns that only confuse the worshipper by hiding its real meaning. An altar should possess, above all, a solemn austere and strong character. It could be made of stainless steel or marble; granite or wood but it should never be covered with endless frescoes and covers until its central meaning is lost in the ambiguity of an artist's mind. The message of an altar is that sacrifice of self and death are essential prerequisites to an undertsanding of God and you just can't say this with opulent designs that shout to high heaven with false pride. Let the materials with which men build their factories and their homes speak to them in church of the sacredness of sweat and toil, and let them not be despoiled by bric-a-brac and old lace. This approach is simply trying to say that religion has a virile message for modern men and that it should not be cloaked in the pious conventionalities of the past.

Depicting the Four Freedoms this nave window was recently installed at St. Paul's, Canton, Ohio, in memory of an airman killed in action. It was designed and executed by the Rambusch Craftsmen

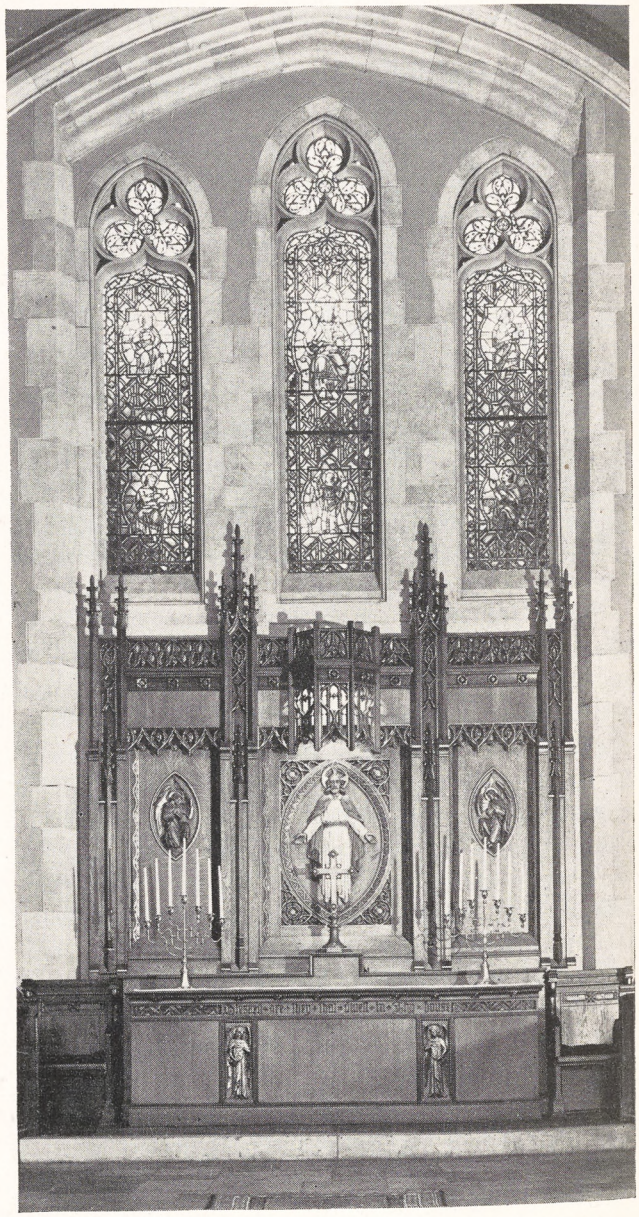
Talking It Over



By
W. B. SPOFFORD

MY NEWSPAPER friends tell me that money is news. So since I must be brief this week I'll give you a few figures from the Statistical Abstract of the United States, based, so my studious informer tells me, upon official census material. The value of 173,754 churches of all denominations at the time of the study was $3,411,875,457. Which is about three billion dollars too much I would judge from reading the pieces this week by Thad Clapp and Charlie Wilson. Gives you some idea of the tremendous task ahead of these two reformers. The value of 5,715 Episcopal churches was $266,400,447.

The expenditures for one year of 188,766 churches was $518,953,571, with 6,117 Episcopal churches spending the tidy sum of $29,288,532.

Break these figures down and the average value of all churches is $19,636, while the average value of Episcopal churches is $46,614. The average annual expenditures of all churches is $2,749, while the average expenditures of Episcopal churches is $4,788.

Pretty all this up in a nice loose-leaf book with gold edges and pretty charts and graphs in four colors and I presume a good commercial advertising man could do something with it. Anyhow I hand the information to you as a possible subject for meditation in your quiet time.

Stress Need for New Churches In the United States

Conference on Architecture Is Told That Six Hundred Million Makes Mere Beginning

Edited by Sara Dill

New York: — That the large volume of church construction planned in the United States is an indication of American selfishness and thoughtlessness, in view of the ruination of churches in Europe, was denied at a conference on church architecture here.

Replying to "certain allegations" in this regard, Elbert M. Conover, director of the interdenominational bureau of architecture, stressed that in proportion to the total need of Protestant churches in America the $600,000,000 proposed investment in new buildings is "a very small amount."

"Rather than being accused of self centered selfishness," he asserted, "the churches that are raising funds, often with sacrificial effort, to do more effective work in this country, are to be commended for their advanced steps."

Dr. Conover stressed the need of rehabilitated and modernized American churches, to get Sunday school classes out of dark cellar rooms, to provide recreational centers under religious leadership, and to help establish churches in the hundreds of new industrial communities which are now wholly unchurched.

Asked to approve an appeal to churches to contribute 10 per cent of their building funds for reconstruction of ruined churches in Europe, the conference referred the matter to a committee for further consideration. The question was raised as to whether such aid should be given state-supported churches in Europe.

"DR. JOHN EWING"—The two decades after the election of Dr. John Ewing, minister of the First Presbyterian Church and Provost of the College of Philadelphia, as President of the Fund in 1767, were most difficult. During the next few months, the committee will seek to expedite paroles of the 3,000 objectors in prison, three-fourths of whom are Jehovah's Witnesses, and releases from civilian public service. Other work will include pressing for army review of court martial convictions in cases where claims of conscience were raised.

Marital Counseling

Albany, N. Y. (RNS): — Marital counseling courses should be taught in Protestant seminaries, and also at conferences or institutes sponsored by state councils of churches, in the opinion of Mrs. Grace Sloane Overton, author and lecturer on family problems. Mrs. Overton spoke at three seminars on "The Church and family life" at Watertown, Massena and Saranac Lake in connection with the annual area conventions of the New York State Council of Churches.

Calling for a "healthy attitude toward sex," Mrs. Overton urged the "dropping of prudery" by churches and church members in their attitude toward the question.

Wilbur T. Clemens, general secretary of the state council, said he hoped to arrange institutes on marital problems "when we get time," and added that "probably this should have been done 25 or even 100 years ago as this question is one of paramount importance and should be faced unflinchingly by the Church."

death at the hands of Filipino guerrillas is reported in a letter just received from Bishop Norman S. Binsted in Manila. Bishop Binsted states in answer to the guerrilla accusation that Mr. Clapp was a collaborator with the Japanese, that he is sure Mr. Clapp died as a loyal citizen and faithful Christian.

In 1903 the Rev. Walter C. Clapp, visiting the Mountain Province with Bishop Charles H. Brent, noticed a singularly attractive and lively little Igorot boy named Pitapit, clad only in a loincloth and a fiber cap adorned with dog teeth and horsehair plumes. Walter Clapp became his godfather, baptized him as Hilary Clapp and later confirmed him. The young Igorot went to Easter School at Baguio, then to Bishop Brent's school, Trinity, at Port Hope, Ontario. Returning to the Philippines in order that he might not lose touch with his tribespeople he attended the University of the Philippines and its Medical School.

In 1924 he took charge of the Bontoc Government Hospital and became district health officer for the Mountain Province. In 1931 the governor general appointed Dr. Clapp to the Philippines Legislature as representative of the Mountain Province. In recent years he served as governor of that Province. During the war he continued to serve his people and the mission in any way he could.

Bishop Binsted now writes: "The saddest experience of this trip, my first return to the Mountain Province, was my meeting with Mrs. Hilary Clapp who had been definitely informed, the day before, that her husband had been killed. Her greatest grief was that he had been labelled as a collaborator. In my address to the congregation after the Service I told of my several meetings with Dr. Clapp during the occupation and said I knew that in all he did during the war he had but one desire, to do the utmost in his power for the good of his people. I said that I was sure that he died a loyal citizen of the Commonwealth and a faithful Christian."

Farewell Visit

Hood River, Ore.:—Prior to leaving to become suffragan bishop of Pennsylvania, Bishop Remington made a farewell visit to Hood River. The guild and vestry of St. Mark's Church presented him with a gift of $100 for the Bishop and Florence Remington fund.

Combat Race Tension

Gary, Ind. (RNS):—As a result of the recent anti-Negro strike in Froebel high school, where white students protested the enrollment of Negroes, a new organization open to clergymen of all faiths was formed here.

The new group asserted that "the common approach of our entire community and its public institutions" must be the belief in and loyalty to "the basic Christian doctrine of brotherhood and equality of all men, regardless of race, creed, or national extraction."

Christian Service School

San Francisco (RNS):—Sponsored by the San Francisco Council of Churches, a school for Christian service opened in Trinity Church here on Oct. 8. Classes will be held on six Monday evenings until Nov. 12.

Young People's Church

Los Angeles (RNS):—As an answer to the complaint that "preachers don't seem to be able to preach sermons that have anything to do with a fellow's daily life," the Rev. Clarence W. Franz, former chaplain in the 81st "Wildcat" division has opened the Young People's Church of Hollywood, which he hopes will be the "kind of church that youth wants."

"Religion must be brought into focus with the personal and social needs of youth. There will be nothing 'sanctimonious' in our program at the Young People's Church," Mr. Franz declared.

Religious Probation

New Orleans (RNS):—A religious probation system, rather than jail terms, for war veterans arrested as first offenders for minor violations of the law was recommended here to Robert S. Maestri by Recorder Harold J. Moore for adoption by the commission council.

If the city approves the religious probation system, Recorder Moore said, veterans arrested for the first time for slight infractions of the law will be required to report one to four times a month to a committee representing their religious group.

Birmingham Churches Build

Birmingham, Ala. (RNS): — Birmingham churches will spend more than a million dollars for improvements to present buildings and construction of new chapels. education buildings and other facilities, according to church leaders here.

Bonds purchased for this purpose will finance some of the projects, while building campaigns will be conducted to finance others. "Buy a brick" has been the slogan of one church and as the material has become more available their brick pile has grown.

Build in Louisiana

New Orleans: — The Church of Louisiana is going into the first year of peace with $600,000 for new construction and improvements, the largest sum it has ever had at its command. A total of $363,200 was recently raised by 27 congregations for needed additions to their home plants.

Plans Expansion

Grand Rapids, Mich.: — The American Seating Company, manufacturers of church seats have included in their post war expansion, plans for the purchase of extensive new manufacturing equipment, for the rearrangement of plant facilities and the erection of at least one new building. They plan an expanded line, including improvements on various products, as well as new ones. During the war the company manufactured wing spars and other assemblies for A-26 Invader attack bombers, pilot seats and packboards.

Wright Consecrated

Wilmington, N. C.:—Thomas H. Wright, former rector of St. Mark's, San Antonio, Texas, was consecrated bishop of the diocees of East Carolina on October 5 at St. James' Church here. The sermon was by Bishop Everett Jones of West Texas who was also the rector of St. Mark's before he was elected bishop. A large number of bishops took part in the colorful service and the crowd was so great that many were unable to get into the church.

Youth Meeting

Dignified Fund-Raising Campaigns Enrich Church Life

For over thirty-five years, the firm of Ward, Wells & Dreshman has specialized in the raising of funds for religious, educational and philanthropic organizations. In all, it has been privileged to direct campaigns which have produced in excess of $1,300,000,000 for new building, expansion and other purposes.

Our most recent campaign in the Episcopal field had for its purpose the raising of funds for a new Parish House for the historic Christ Church in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The accomplishments of this campaign are well described in the following letter from The Reverend Gardiner M. Day, Rector.

My dear Mr. Dreshman:

I want to express to you my very real appreciation of the splendid service rendered this parish by your firm in our fund-raising campaign for our new Parish House which has just closed. Not only through the splendid guidance of Mr. Streit and Mrs. Blair did we raise more than $100,000 in pledges and gifts, but the campaign committee feels strongly that had we not had professional assistance, we would probably have raised scarcely half that sum. I believe that it is a remarkable feat for a parish to raise that sum of money without any outstandingly large gifts.

I also want to add the fact that the Vestry and I feel very keenly that the whole campaign was, from the point of view of the fellowship and life of the parish, a very valuable asset. The report dinners were not merely occasions for recording amounts received, but were real parish get-togethers. Ever so many people expressed not only appreciation of the fellowship of the dinners, but also of the visits of the workers in the homes. I believe that new spirit will be evident in our organizations when they come together in the fall, and I rather expect that there will be one or two new organizations as the result of the leadership and teamwork given by Mr. Streit and Mrs. Blair.

Last but not least, we appreciated very much your visit and the talk that you gave to the Special Gifts Committee. Any time that you are in this vicinity, you may know that you always have a warm welcome at Christ Church.

Very sincerely,
Gardiner M. Day

Reasons for Aiding New York City Mission Society

Director Tells of Vast Work Being Carried On in the Various Institutions and Camps

By William E. Sprenger
Director New York City Mission Society

New York:—Even though the Society is celebrating its 115th Anniversary, that is not an adequate reason why one should give liberally and generously to its work. As with an individual, old age may make him distinguished, venerated and respected, or simply a problem, depending upon what life has done to him.

The Society was originally organized to develop chapels for the poor people in the various parts of New York City who could not afford to pay pew rents in the other churches. Since that time, under consecrated leadership on its board of managers, it has adjusted its program to meet the needs of individuals as the city grew and the ramifications of life became more complicated. From its honorable beginning and single purpose, it has now developed into a multiple-functioning Christian organization, consisting of nine institutions and departments with an annual budget of $266,000. It serves over 38,000 different individuals each year, who are the heirs of every kind of difficulty known to human personality.

You should contribute to the Society because its activities and its services are so widespread. All our energies are devoted to the sick, the needy, the aged, and the troubled. Our 23 Chaplains may be found in 37 institutions. These priests of the Church perform a highly specialized aspect of the ministry and most of them have had clinical training to insure a better understanding of people's problems. Each year they minister to over 32,000 individuals and hold nearly 100,000 consultations regarding their needs, make 13,000 visits to the critically ill and pre-operative patients and hold 4,372 services.

A released prisoner wrote this note to one of our chaplains: "The solace given by your ever welcome greeting to me — a prisoner and a convict — will always be a memorable milestone in my life. My faith is so much stronger and renewed under your spiritual leadership. For that I am grateful. Courageously I look forward to brilliant, worthwhile days that will not be discolored by the drabness of a prison regime."

You should contribute to this work because 33 churches last year referred 1,027 individuals to our family service department, where they were given understanding care and advice by graduate, Christian social workers. They were not always poor people. Many of them came from good backgrounds but had been unable to cope with the new situations created by the war economy. We discovered that these people originally represented every diocese in the United States. Why they came to New York, we do not know, but they felt that they had a right to call upon their Church to help them in their time of difficulty.

Too often, we thoughtlessly say to ourselves that people do not appreciate the help that is given them. We have evidence that this is not always true. The director of the Society remembers distinctly a gentleman who walked into his office and stated simply, "You do not know me, but three years ago, the family service department gave me a decent suit of clothes, a new pair of glasses and made it possible for me to get some dental work done. This permitted me to go back to my regular work as a waiter. I figured that this cost the Society $147. I am deeply grateful for what you did for me and I wish to return this money to you now." The Society has had an annual caller for the past 10 years, who had been given similar constructive help, and who each year brings in one weeks pay, so that some other person may receive a fresh start in life.

You should contribute to the Society because St. Barnabas' House has been giving temporary shelter to women and children, day and night, for over 80 years. The time has now come when these buildings must be replaced, if the work is to continue to be a credit to our great Church. One of the 937 guests last year was 10-year-old June, brought to us for shelter at 4:30 in the morning, when her mother was taken to one of our city hospitals for psychopathic treatment. Her father was overseas on active duty and it was necessary for us to look up her grandparents, who lived in the south, and see that she was safely given over to them during this emergency in her family.

The Hon. John A. Lyons, commissioner of correction in New York; Walter Wallack, warden of Wallkill Prison; Osborne Budd, the City Mission chaplain at the prison

You should contribute to the Society because Schermerhorn Convalescent Home needs $125,000 to modernize its equipment and enlarge its facilities for children. This is necessary to give the nearly 1,100 women and children who come to us each year the most effective care. Children under 2 years of age needing convalescence have increased 300% since 1942. Certainly, we ought to help other children like Dorothy and Jane, who came to us at the age of 2, weighing 15 pounds, the result of neglect and malnutrition. They left us weighing 22 pounds for a new home.

You should contribute to the Society that we may continue to help the girls committed to Westfield State Farm, where our social worker is the voluntary friend of some 280 girls every year. Our work with these girls begins at the time they enter the institution and continues until they return to community life and become adjusted in their family, church and social relationships. It benefits a whole community when a formerly unstable, weak girl is given a new incentive in life and develops a good standard of conduct. While we fail in many instances to help these girls, our percentage of success with them is beyond the average.

You should contribute to the Society because with the end of the war, our work at Ellis Island is increasing rapidly. It is changing quickly from caring for interned Allied seamen to unraveling the complicated problems of large numbers of foreign-born wives of servicemen, who are arriving in this country. The significance and importance of this task can easily be understood when we realize that the Roman Catholic Church has a staff of five and our Jewish brethren a staff of ten. We only have a staff of two. During the war, 103 people were assisted with their naturalization problems and 328 repatriation cases were aided. The need for skillful understanding and trained workers is increasing rapidly at the Island.

You should contribute to the Society to help provide new and modern camps for the more than 1,000 children, whom we take each year and who are referred to us by 45 churches and 40 social agencies. Our three camps are organized to accommodate children four to sixteen years of age. A good camping program is one of the very effective ways to help a child in a short period of time.

If you could have seen six-year-old Conrad when he came to the camp, the victim of abnormal fears and serious inhibitions because he had only two crippled parents to take care of him, and watched the same boy when he went home a month later with a clearer understanding of his parents' handicaps and a definite knowledge of how he intended to fit into the family pattern, you would have been convinced that the investment in this boy had paid big dividends.

You should give to the Society because it is an organization dedicated to help people in need in the name of Christ, and every dollar contributed to it becomes a living memorial to the donor in the lives of the men, women and children, who are the beneficiaries.

ROELIF H. BROOKS PRAISES CITY MISSION SOCIETY

New York: — The rector of St. Thomas' Church, the Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, is giving wholehearted and active support to the present campaign for a million dollars by the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society. Preaching before a large congregation at this famous Fifth Avenue church, Dr. Brooks stated that it was the first time during his rectorship of eighteen years that he had made a special appeal of this character. "It is because of the importance of the work of the City Mission Society," stated the rector, "that I have broken the promise made to the people of St. Thomas' that but once a year would I make an appeal and that would be for the support of our parish and its various activities."

He then went on to tell the congregation of the vast work of the Society and ended by urging the people of the parish "to take the lead in generous gifts that the campaign may be a complete success."

CONSECRATED COADJUTOR OF TEXAS

Houston, Texas:—The Rev. John E. Hines was consecrated bishop coadjutor of Texas on October 18th at Christ Church here where he was formerly rector. There were ten bishops and two hundred clergy and choristers in the procession, with members of twelve parish choirs constituting the massed choir. The new bishop was attended by the Rev. C. Gresham Marmion, rector of the Incarnation, Dallas, and the Rev. Robert R. Brown, rector of St. Paul's, Waco.

Bishop Scarlett of Missouri in the sermon urged upon the congregation which overflowed the church the necessity of world cooperation in the face of the release of atomic energy, and of the Church meeting that power as the only agency in the world that could do so adequately.

Bishop Jones of West Texas and Bishop Carpenter of Alabama presented the candidate. Bishop Mason, coadjutor of Dallas, and Bishop Jackson of Louisiana read the epistle and gospel. The Presiding Bishop was the consecrator with Bishop Quin of Texas and Bishop Block of California the co-consecrators.

City Mission Society Assets Explained by Treasurer

The Greatest of Them All Is the Work Done By the Society for Over a Hundred Years

By Thomas M. Peters
Treasurer New York City Mission Society

New York:—A treasurer is supposed to deal with assets, so at the beginning it might be well to state that the greatest asset of the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society is one hundred and fifteen years of Christian service to people in and about New York City. That is a great record and constitutes a major achievement for the Episcopal Church.

The second set of assets is more prosaic, but very useful. It consists of an endowment built up over this 115 years and totaling nearly a million dollars. The greater part of this fund is restricted as to principal and the Society can use only the income from it. Consequently when we need new buildings we must appeal to those who believe in the great and varied work of the Society for contributions.

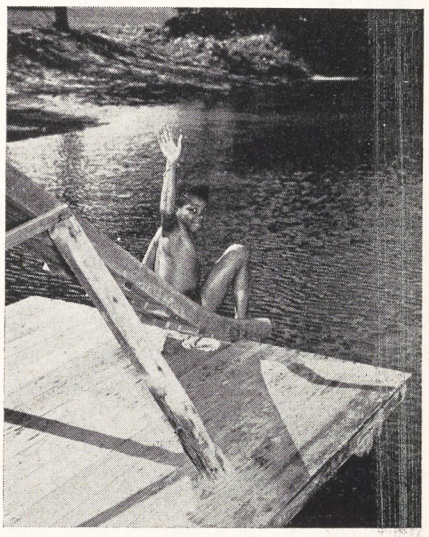
The third set of assets cannot well be valued in money for it consists of the plant of the Society. That is best estimated in terms of the work that can be done in it. At our camp site north of Liberty we have one of the finest locations for a camp in the east. Camping always takes care of itself as far as running expenses go but we need money, a very substantial sum of money with which to equip it so that it can be used to give physical and spiritual health to the greatest possible number of boys and girls.

Children have a lot of fun at St. Barnabas House, one of the centers of the City Mission Society in New York City

That spiritual health is the golden thread that runs all through the work of the Society and differentiates it from the work done by the average agency. It is something all church people should stand behind and encourage.

We are doing that same kind of work with women and children at St. Barnabas. We have been doing it there for the past 80 years. Naturally our buildings are not modern. They are expensive to maintain. To do the kind of work that should be done by the Episcopal Church we need a new building. Of course we can close up and turn the work over to the city, but that would snap the golden thread of spiritual help which is a tradition at St. Barnabas. All too often that thread had been snapped in various countries of the world. Do you want that to happen here?

At Schermerhorn House where those who are convalescing are sent by the hospitals we need repairs and alterations.



The New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society is your Society. It is the means by which the work of God is done by all the parishes of the diocese acting together. By means of this Society 23 chaplains are kept in 37 hospitals and prisons in and around the city, and the word of God is brought to those who cannot themselves go to the churches to get it.

The Society has a great history, a great past. But we are living in the present, and the present is our responsibility. So it is our decision as to whether we are going to give up the work at St. Barnabas or at Schermerhorn House. Without greater support we may have to.

We have just fought a great war which we hated. We fought it and won it because it was forced on us. Now the war is over it seems right to express our real feelings by rededicating, reconsecrating to God, this work of helping people to know him. It seems right to express our belief in his love for all mankind by showing that we care for those in misfortune about us. These are the vital principles of life—and the only way to that permanent peace for which we all long. We ask your help in this essential work.

HOW A MILLION DOLLARS WILL BE SPENT

New York:—Mr. William M. Chadbourne, New York attorney who is the chairman of the campaign for a million dollars, now being conducted by the City Mission Society, has given THE WITNESS a breakdown of where and how the money will be used, once raised. For one thing it will be used to relieve the strain of administering aid with inadequate facilities and insufficient staff.

The first plunge on arriving at Camp Wanasquetta which is maintained by the City Mission Society for lads who otherwise would never leave the city streets

"Saint Barnabas' House, which serves as a temporary shelter for homeless women and children as well as unmarried mothers, wayward minors, neglected children, has completely outgrown its eighty-year-old, four-storied building at 304 Mulberry Street," said Mr. Chadbourne. "We are planning a new and larger structure which will also serve as headquarters for administration, the chaplains' quarters, parolee and immigration follow-up work which are some of the vital concerns of the society."

The new building will also house the family service division now expanding to include additional services for returning men and women in the armed forces. "Jobs will have to be obtained for them," Mr. Chadbourne continued; "occupational therapy taught the physically disabled and philosophies revised for the mentally ill. Reconciliations within the families will be our task; housing problems must be solved, and civilian clothes collected for the needy. Through the careful use of temporary assistance in time of emergency we need not be faced with the usual post-war problem of permanent maladjustments.

"Current plans include repairs and additions to the Sarah Schermerhorn House in Milford, Connecticut, a year-round convalescent home for women and children, a memorial gift to the society by Schermerhorn family in 1921. The waiting list of referrals from city hospitals grows as war-frazzled nerves add to the normal number of rest-cure patients."

A fund will be established to furnish chaplain fellowships for an intensive three-year training course, in addition to the chaplaincies the society supports in 37 penal institutions, hospitals and homes for the aged in New York State. Another project will be more modern buildings for three fresh-air camps for boys and girls.

Mr. Chadbourne also pointed out that a larger staff is needed at Ellis Island "where in addition to aid given allied merchant seamen and internees, trained workers are needed to clarify the status of shiploads of foreign wives of servicemen on their arrival in this country."

To put it all into figures this is the way the board of managers plan to use the million dollars:

House for St. Barnabas', Family Service, Administration, Parolee, Immigration and Chaplain's Quarters	$375,000.00
Furnishing and Equipment of same	46,060.00
Schermerhorn House	125,000.00
Boys Camp	95,430.00
Girls Camp	75,136.00
Chaplaincy	100,000.00
Family Welfare	100,000.00
Sustaining Funds (annual)	50,000.00
Total	$966,626.00

NEW DIES COMMITTEE CONDEMNED

New York:—A call to the American people to force the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities is voiced by the Rev. Richard Morford, head of the United Christian Council for Democracy, in a statement issued last week. The UCCD is a federation of six unofficial Church social action groups, of which the Church League for Industrial Democracy is one.

Citing the recent activities of the House committee in "investigating" Hollywood film industry, the New York municipal elections, the Communist party and the labor movement, as well as its bid for possession of personnel files from government war agencies, Mr. Morford says: "Who's the committee out to knife this time? The answer: everybody the Dies committee sought to undermine—the Jew and the Negro, the labor union leader, the Communist and the New Dealer, the foreign born and every friend of the Soviet Union, every liberal and democratic fighter for the people's cause. Given time enough, the only people Rankin intends shall be left out are the America Firsters, the isolationists, the seditionists, labor's enemies, Jew and Negro haters, Red-baiters and certainly Mr. Hearst and the rest of the Axis-press crowd.

"Our united effort proved effective in winning the war," he continues. "All forces in the nation must pull together in democratic fashion to meet the problems of reconversion and win the peace."

EEF LEADERS VISIT OHIO

Cleveland:—Meeting with groups of clergy and laity, the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, president, and the Rev. Joseph H. Titus, treasurer, visited the diocese of Ohio to present the program of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. Meetings were held at Maumee where the Rev. R. M. Ward is rector; the cathedral here, with Dean Emerson presiding; at St. Andrew's, Akron, where they were the guests of the Rev. W. Murray Kenney. Similar meetings are planned for officers of the Fellowship in various parts of the country.

There is real thanksgiving when mealtime comes at Schermerhron House, a home for convalescents maintained by the City Mission Society at Milford, Connecticut

REFORMATION SUNDAY OBSERVED

St. Louis:—A great united Church service marking Reformation Sunday was held in the civic auditorium here on Sunday, October 28th, with Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist and president of the Federal Council of Churches the chief speaker. There was a massed choir of 1,000 voices directed by Professor H. Augustine Smith of Boston University. There were fully 11,000 persons attending the service. A more detailed story, with excerpts from Bishop Oxnam's address will appear in THE WITNESS for November 8th.

A Society of Self-Faith

THE war has increased our physical dimensions and expanded our outlook. As a nation we have grown in breadth and vision. We have gained a great deal in our ability to cope with the large problems facing the world.

But most gains contain some losses and we are testing now whether or not we have lost some of our sense of responsibility for the single person, the man, woman or child in our midst. Global concepts, discussions of immense problems of social welfare and development, tremendous schedules for government relief at home and abroad, can distract us from the relatively small duties of citizenship which are only valuable if directly applied.

Government programs, in their fields and in their scope, are a thing apart, insofar as our own responsibilities are concerned, and our task is to see that within our own minds they do not supplant our feeling of personal duty.

Personal charity, free and independent, is the touchstone of democracy and of the American way of life.

The New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society is rooted in the principle of self-faith. On this principle, within itself and for those it serves, it has grown always stronger and always more widely useful for 114 years. This concept of self-faith is its priceless heritage. To maintain it has required sacrificial devotion, spiritual and intellectual conviction and a genuine respect for the dignity and individuality of the men, women and children to whom its works are dedicated. It regards the individual as the essential element of our community and of the nation and, above this, conceives of each person as a spirit and a conscience and asks only to do all it can to protect, elevate and improve that spirit and that conscience.

In this holy undertaking our own self-faith is challenged for as we respond to the appeal of the Society we express our own confidence in the individual man by our contribution. It is an exhilarating thing to do this for in the doing we express our own self-faith without which we are nothing.

A Prayer

ALMIGHTY GOD, creator and father of us all, we ask thy blessing and guidance for our City Mission Society in its work for all sorts and conditions of men.

Give to the chaplains, and to all the members of the staff, wisdom and zeal that they may minister faithfully to the needy, the burdened, the lonely, and the sick. Enable them to bring thy grace and healing to those whose lives are darkened by sin, and to minister with loving care to all, especially to the children and the aged.

In this day of new responsibility and opportunity drive out from each one of us, we beseech thee, those attitudes of mind and spirit which bar the way to brotherhood among all races and nations, and open our hearts to give generously of our means that the work of our City Mission Society may be strengthened and enlarged, for the honor of thy name, for the upbuilding of thy Church, and for the help of all whom our ministrations may reach, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The May-Johnson Bill

PRESIDENT Truman's first message on the domestic control of atomic power was reassuring for it showed a realization of its significance for the world. The more dismaying then was his later utterance that, while he had not discussed the subject with Britain or Canada, he was sure they would agree that "Its secret will not be shared." Coupled with this is the May-Johnson bill, which is but one of a dozen bills before Congress, which if passed would mean that we propose to keep this terrible secret in our possession so that nobody can hurt us. An effort was made to railroad the bill through Congress without sufficient hearings. Mounting public opinion, including the testimony of leading scientists that the secret cannot be kept ever if it were desirable, may have prevented the passage of the act. Thus last week sixty men and women, including twenty-seven scientists who worked on the atomic bomb, met in an all day conference to consider the matter. At the end of the day, by unanimous action, a telegram went to the President urging the withdrawal of the May-Johnson bill.

"The May bill could have the effect of treating knowledge as criminal and those who possess it enemies of society," the telegram asserted. "The bill might also promote a competitive armament race while at the same time tying American scientific hands and brains. A new bill should be written which more clearly recognizes the dual aspect of atomic energy and which emphasizes the peace-time opportunities science has presented to us. We cannot abolish atomic energy any more than we can outlaw electrical energy. Fire itself creates great havoc yet we use it intelligently. The release of atomic energy has opened up a vast new horizon in human development. We urge the withdrawal of the May bill. We further urge full and extended public hearings on this and any other legislation pertaining to atomic energy."

To list the sixty who signed this telegram would take more space than we can give to it, but among them was Albert Einstein; Harold Urey, winner of the Nobel prize in chemistry and a prime mover in the atomic-bomb project; Bishop Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches. Also signing was Harlow Shapley of Harvard, who previously had brought out a fundamental point in testimony before a committee of the Senate. "Except in the emergency of national defense," he stated, "our scientific advances should be promptly revealed to all who can profit by the knowledge and we should systematically expect the scientists of other nations to reciprocate. As soon as it is emotionally possible we should accept the principle that scientists are world citizens, serving all mankind, and are working not for the past but for the future. It is selfish, and perhaps dangerous, to conceal knowledge or obstruct its use. And in some instances, as in the current situation with respect to atomic energy, it is in my opinion unwise to withhold for any appreciable time essential knowledge that can be of value to the whole world."

If these men of knowledge and vision are heeded, we will not be back where we started before the war which came near to bringing civilization to an end. And there is no better way for you to see that they are heeded than to follow their example by wiring the President urging the withdrawal of the May-Johnson bill and asking for extended public hearings on any other legislation pertaining to atomic energy.

Making a Clear Distinction

THERE has been considerable to-do because Frank Fay, star of the current Broadway hit, Harvey, publicly assailed five of his fellow members of the Actors Equity Association for participating in a meeting on Spain during which Harold Laski of England, speaking by radio, called the Roman Catholic Church in Spain "a rich monopolist."

We are not concerned with the internal affairs of Equity, the council of which has censured Mr. Fay for his attack. But we do want to congratulate The Commonweal, Roman Catholic weekly, for making the distinction between the Church as a political and economic power and the Church as a household of faith. "What Mr. Laski attacked," says the editorial in Commonweal, "was the discipline and politics of the Church and not the Church itself, and it is a sad thing when Catholics so easily earn the dislike of their neighbors by the assumption that any criticism of any aspect of the Church is inadmissible. We must ever be watchful not to allow our faith to serve as a cloak under which we strive to smother political discussion."

This of course is a distinction which THE WITNESS has made consistently, though we add that it is one that some of our readers do not seem to grasp. Anyhow it is nice to have such an esteemed magazine as The Commonweal on our side.

A Woman's View of City Missions

by Mrs. William C. Dickey

Board Member of the New York City Mission Society

FROM my connection with several of the City Mission activities I have come to know the tremendous value of its work. Therefore I want most earnestly to commend the City Mission's appeal to you because of the care they take of the spiritual and material well-being of troubled fellow-citizens in this great community. The City Mission is making an appeal for funds to replace outworn facilities and to increase its scope.

The New York Altar Guild, of which I have been a member for many years, cares for the altars of City Mission chapels. It has been my profit and my pleasure, in my dual role, to visit these chapels in various institutions and to see what the chaplains are doing in hospitals and prisons. In ministering to the sick, holding themselves ready at all hours to bring comfort or strength to the anxious about to undergo some serious operation. To assure the lonely and discouraged of our Lord's caring for them individually. To provide them with the Blessed Sacrament and so bring them into union with their Saviour. In the penitentiaries to endeavor to awaken in the minds and hearts of men and women with a distorted point of view the value of straight thinking and clean living. Such chaplains need to be men with a high sense of vocation and fine skill.

The City Mission would train more such and send them out into these fields not only as devoted Churchmen but skilled case workers. Men, who to the sure basis of Christian faith have applied the best that modern social science can offer.

In the interests of the Midnight Mission as well as the Episcopal City Mission I periodically visit Westfield State Farm Reformatory at Bedford Hill, N. Y. Miss Henrietta Additon, one of the two women wardens in New York State, said to me in an informal conference about Mrs. Elizabeth Kjaer, the City Mission worker at Westfield: "I cannot stress too much the value of your place at Westfield State Farm." Mrs. Kjaer keeps in contact with the girls, serves as liaison between the girl and the family, and between the girl and the job when she is ready for parole. And above all she makes herself her friend. Whatever Church affiliation a girl has, our worker keeps her in touch with it. If a girl has no knowledge of the Christian faith, from the depths of her own belief, Mrs. Kjaer so often emerges with a real convert.

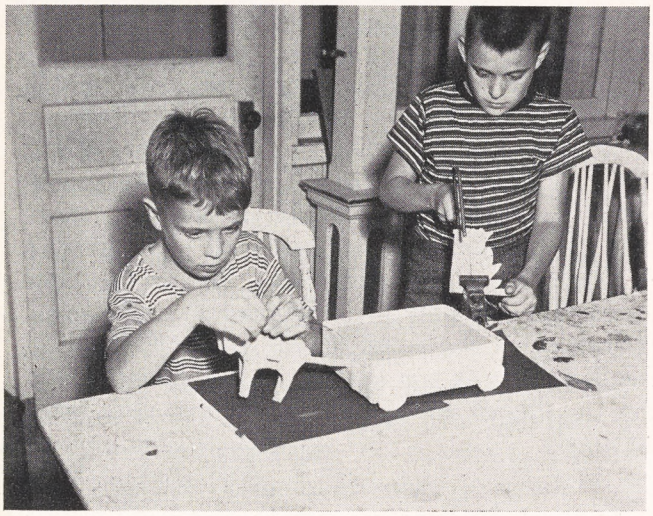
What woman who has visited St. Barnabas House could come away with heart untouched! To see mothers who have been despondent because of a temporary crisis caring for their children in the sanctuary of St. Barnabas House! To know that the unmarried mother is sheltered with sympathy and sent forth with new hope. To see children who would otherwise be neglected living in the atmosphere of a wholesome home. And all this, I am sorry to say, in a building that is altogether inadequate to the vision of service that the Episcopal City Mission has. When this house was built in 1865 its four stories filled its needs. But today in this huge metropolis, it falls far below the standard that we know to be right and to be needed. It would seem incredible to us who are so interested that our plea to build, and to build anew, a shelter for the youth of our city should go unheeded. I urge you to give, and to give generously, for the citizens of tomorrow and your peace of mind.

What the City Mission Means To Me

by John H. Johnson

Rector of St. Martin's, New York

ONE of the earliest sadnesses that I experienced was my departure forty years ago from the rustic little town of Petersburg, Virginia. At the time, it seemed to me tragic and unnecessary, for it meant saying goodbye forever to my horse, my dog, the cow and all the barnyard animals which were my good friends. But just the same, our small family gathered together such of its belongings as could be moved, and we came to New York where my father took work as a chaplain with the Episcopal City Mission Society. From then until now the City Mission Society, in one way or another, has been a part of my life.



My father served the Society as a missionary priest for twenty-five years, representing it in its ministrations to the thousands of Negroes then migrating to New York from all parts of the South and from the West Indies. He was a high-spirited, magnetic, friendly man, ideally suited by temperament to undertake the pioneer work that was assigned to him. These colored people were strangers in New York and many of them settled in the section known as San Juan Hill on the west side. It might be added, incidentally, that San Juan Hill is in the midst of what was then a predominately Irish community, and that our Irish neighbors also had only recently come to the city. There were many skirmishes between the two groups. In order to remain healthy, contestants, no matter on which side, had to have two talents. They had to know how to fight and they had to know how to run. If the sides were evenly matched, you fought, but should you be so unwary as to intrude all alone into the territory of your opponents, of a sudden you would hear an ominous war whoop, "beep, beep, beep"—a gang would be upon you, and you escaped a trouncing only by the speed with which you departed. It was all in good fun even though a few heads were cracked when rocks or bricks found their targets. The press was much more understanding in those days—an altercation between schoolboys was not magnified into a "crime wave." After a few years conditions between the races in San Juan Hill were most peaceful. St. Cyprian's had much to do with bringing this to pass. Some of my best friends today are Irish police officers with whom I fought and played in the old days.

There was no Harlem then as far as colored people were concerned and San Juan Hill was the most populous colored district in New York. The City Mission originally organized for the purpose, among other things, of "providing free sittings in mission churches for the churchless strangers," decided to open a mission church. What progress we have made! Today the church with rented pews is the exception rather than the rule.

My father organized St. Cyprian's Chapel on West Sixty-third Street, with the backing of the City Mission. The first congregation sat in the parlor of a private house with packing boxes serving as pews. St. Cyprian's was one of the early missionary efforts of the Church among the colored people in this city, and from it sprang many important movements affecting the life of colored people in New York. The Amsterdam News, now one of the most successful of colored newspapers, was started by a member of St. Cyprian's. It was a risky venture and had a hard time getting under way. The members of St. Cyprian's and its vicar helped immensely. The YWCA organized its first branch for work among colored girls and women, in one of the houses owned by the Episcopal City Mission on West Sixty-third Street. It soon outgrew our cramped quarters, but that's where it began. St. Martin's in Harlem, now an active, independent parish, is an outgrowth of the work at St. Cyprian's and was started by the City Mission Society in 1928. Forty years ago there were not more than fifty or sixty thousand colored people in New York. Today, there are four hundred thousand. The City Mission Society has been active in serving this portion of our population throughout these years.

In the old days, at Thanksgiving and Christmas time, the Society distributed huge bundles of edibles—fruits, vegetables—these good things surrounding a fifteen or twenty pound turkey. We have heard Chinese missionaries deprecate the so called "rice Christians," but I can never forget what a tremendous influence those turkeys had on church attendance in the fall of the year. The better class of colored people lived downtown in those days, many of them on Fifty-third Street and took great pride in their flowing, lace curtains, a sure mark of prosperity. But when Thanksgiving time came around not a few of them crashed the "turkey line" at St. Cyprian's.

This child rests on her luggage in crowded Grand Central Station, smiling as she thinks of going to the camp for girls that is maintained by the City Mission Society

AS ALL efficient organizations, the City Mission no longer distributes its foodstuffs "in kind." Nevertheless, the Society has continued faithfully to serve the needs of people of our Church who call upon them in time of distress. The depression in the Nineteen-thirties fell most heavily and devastatingly on the colored people of New York. Never was the saying more vividly and wickedly demonstrated, that the Negro is "the last hired and the first fired." At one time during that period, fully fifty per cent of the colored people in New York were unemployed and most of these unfortunate people subsisted by means of relief in some form. During the peak years of the depression, the City Mission Society distinguished itself by the calibre of the assistance rendered to the needy. There was no discrimination—families were held together, starvation was prevented. Those of us who can look back to those years and who wish to avoid their repetition, will surely support all the efforts now being made to establish fair employment practice acts, whether in federal, state or municipal governments.

In recent years, the Society has more or less streamlined its activities. No longer does it maintain mission chapels. But the work that it did long ago in that field is still bearing fruit. By concentrating on special services in critical areas of need, it hopes to do better work. One of its important activities is its fresh air program. Schermerhorn House in Milford, Connecticut, now a convalescent home, was one of its first steps in that direction. When I was ten years old, I spent two weeks there on a vacation period. In those days the boys slept in tents. There were no electric lights and we went to bed with the chickens. Whenever there was talking or any disorder after 8 p.m., all the occupants of the offending tent were turned out and made to stand for a couple of hours under a kerosene lamp hung on the flag pole. It was lovely in the moonlight, of course, but I still marvel and shudder as I recollect the size and spirit of those Connecticut mosquitoes. Now the Society, with a new site at Liberty, New York, is hoping to secure adequate funds to make this a model camp. The fresh air program is inter-racial in character and the experience of white and colored children living together under proper surroundings and guidance is calculated to foster inter-racial goodwill.

The City Mission Society is governed by a devoted board. I know of no group of directors more dedicated to the task of carrying forward a humanitarian program. The staff, from the director down, is efficient and filled with the spirit of sacrifice. This Society fully deserves the generous backing so much needed if the pressing needs of the post-war period are to be met.

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

A FEW brief notes and comments on sundry subjects dealing with the lively arts. . . . Richard Barnes had an indignant little piece in the New York Herald-Tribune the other day dealing with the bad booking The True Glory is receiving. He says: "It is shocking to learn that The True Glory is closing at the Victoria Theater this week. It is bad enough to learn that this great documentary, sponsored by General Dwight D. Eisenhower, had so much trouble in getting booking in this country that it played in many places in Europe before it arrived at a small Broadway film playhouse a short time ago. What the fate of the work will be now is problematical. Perhaps there is something wrong with the whole set-up of film exhibition that needs considerable airing." All I know is that The True Glory only stayed in Boston one week and then as the tail-end of a double-feature.

PM carried the following brief: "Pope Pius XII in an audience with 15 U. S. radio executives, praised radio as 'the angel of protection and solace and charity to unknown thousands'." I don't like to disagree with the Bishop of Rome but I wish he could have commented on the untold persons in this country who find the radio one of the greatest banes of their existence. As far as I'm concerned, the performances and advertising that are put on the air by the American radio are real arguments for the socialist economy. If free competition leads to such baby-patter and nonsence . . . well!

Speaking of the radio, it is announced that the Reader's Digest will no longer sponsor the Town Meeting of the Air after October. It will be interesting to see what change is made in the program. A couple of weeks ago, this program considered the question: should Hollywood make movies designed to influence public opinion? I don't see how they managed to get two people to uphold the negative side of the debate, but they did. The "nay" side consisted of Donald Crisp and James K. McGuinness. The latter is a representative of the reactionary Motion Picture Alliance for the Preservation of American Ideals and his argument was that the sole function of the films should be "to restore laughter to the world." Crisp argued that films should be "entertainment—100 percent." I recall that Crisp, in his last picture, Valley of Decision, had this for his punch line just before he was killed: "I will recognize the union but any person who wants a job with this company can have one regardless of his affiliation—just so long as he wants to work." That is certainly 100 percent entertainment, eh, Mr. Crisp?

Now perhaps the Town Meeting can sponsor this question: should radio sponsor programs designed to influence public opinion?

Walt Disney's best film, Pinocchio, has been reissued and is well worth seeing again. It's really great adult entertainment. Children, I'm afraid, would miss most of the humor and would run the danger of being frightened out of their wits. But more on Disney at some other time.

Elderly people and children are equally well cared for at Schermerhron House, the home for convalescents of the City Mission Society at Milford, Connecticut

*Bringing Our World Together, by Daniel Johnson Fleming. Charles Scribner's Sons, $2.00.

Daniel Johnson Fleming, for many years on the faculty of the Union Seminary, has a naive but winsome philosophy of history. It is his conviction that it is man's God-given destiny to live together with all his fellow-men eventually on this planet as members of one family. "Man finds his meaning in co-operating with God in shaping the course of history toward the realization of a world family."

Prof. Johnson sees the trend of evolution, as described by paleontologists, anthropologists and psychologists, pointing in the direction of ever-greater social solidarity. He believes it to be the function of the Christian Church to guide this trend and to give it a dynamic ethic. In his views, he shows himself to be an incorrigible optimist, with unfortunately little grasp of the cumulative problem of history. The volume also suffers from both literary and historical carelessness to some extent.

Nevertheless, this is a brave little book, which if used guardedly by mature leaders might serve as a discussion-course text.

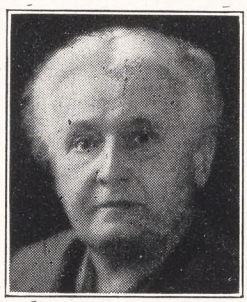
Churchmen Hold Meeting with Labor and Management

All Present Agree Industrial Relations Is One of Vital Concern to the Church



Edited by Sara Dill

Cambridge:—"The Church is interested in industry, not because it is important, but rather because industry is so unimportant," said the Rev. Joseph Fletcher, director of pastoral studies at the Episcopal Theological School, speaking at the conference on Christian industrial relations held on October 12th at the School. The Conference, which was attended by approximately 100 representatives of management, labor, the Church and the public, was sponsored by the committee on industrial relations of the diocesan department of social service.

"The Church regards industry as only a means to the end of the more abundant life and greater human fellowship," Mr. Fletcher said, "and when the Church sees our great resources — materials, labor power, technical skills, machinery— and their potential ability to create the more abundant life and, then, sees the overwhelming need and misery in the world, the Church says there is something wrong." In our modern culture, the creation of wealth has become an end in itself, he stated, and human and social welfare has been relegated to a secondary position. Therefore, the Church, through all of its people, must concern itself in the problem of industrial relations until this confusion of means and ends is straightened out. He said that in its prophetic function the Church should at all times speak as loudly and firmly as possible to give witness to the imperatives and demands of Christian standards for social morality and industrial justice. In its concern for the redemption of the world, the Church must be concerned in any area of man's relation with God, man or nature (religion, politics and economics) where failure of establishing right relationships precludes the possibility of achieving human redemption.

Speaking for management, Mr. Ulysses Lupien, director of public relations for Pacific Mills, Lawrence, said, "Men are and should be honest with themselves and their fellowmen whether they represent management, employees or the Church. Management must anticipate and eliminate causes of grievances and irritation of its employees, insofar as possible. Labor must so conduct itself as to avoid wasting time on petty grievances or those which are manufactured for stage play. The Church and the community must afford leadership to bring into being the spirit of the golden rule and fair play." Mr. Lupien further stated that Church leaders should acquaint themselves with conditions in industry; should exercise its educational function in this area; should recognize that all employees of the community are free to become or not become affiliated with organizations as a condition of employment and should help both management and employees to protect themselves from foreign competition.

CHRISTIANITY AND PROPERTY is the subject of a two day conference to be held at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, November 16-17. Among those to read papers are the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher and Professor Vida D. Scudder. The conference is sponsored by the Church League for Industrial Democracy whose chairman is Dean Arthur Lichtenberger

Speaking for labor, Mr. James Bamford of the CIO said: "I think government forgot about labor in the reconversion—that is why labor generally is striking for a 30 per cent raise. The farmer is protected with guaranteed prices and the employer with guaranteed profits but labor has no guarantees." Stating that some kind of planning on the community level is imperative for our economy, he said that the Church should become active in the post-war world in the area of industrial relations to see that the right principles of justice are incorporated into our economic system.

Mr. George Driscoll of the A. F. of L. applauded the great gains that had been made in the whole area of industrial relations but said there was still a great way to go. He said the Church should be an unbiased third party in this area and should instil the spirit of reconciliation into the whole field of industrial relations.

Mr. Samuel Merrick of the National War Labor Board, in speaking for the public, stated that the public was largely ignorant of the primary issues confronting both management and labor and stated that the Church should attempt to counteract the lack of understanding and misrepresentation coming from the press and radio. He deplored the lack of public machinery to tackle the problems of industrial relations in peace-time but stated that neither management nor labor really wanted such machinery. He stated that under our present economic system conflicts between labor and management were inevitable and that the public reacted in an emotional manner to objective sociological and economic facts. The public is concerned in good industrial relations, he said, but it should consider them in the face of realities rather than with emotionalism and utopian idealism. The right to strike is one of the basic freedoms of the country, Mr. Merrick said, and "only in a truly fascist country could you have no strikes."

The Rev. Archie Crowley, rector of Grace Church, Lawrence, and chairman of the committee on industrial relations, acted as moderator for the conference and Dean Charles L. Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School acted as host.

the conference that one on Christianity and Property would be held at the School on November 16-17, sponsored by the Church League for Industrial Democracy. The plan is to have papers presented for discussion and criticism, with the papers and the findings of the conference later published. Those to present papers and their subjects are Old Testament Teaching by Dean Taylor of ETS; New Testament Teaching by the Rev. R. S. M. Emrich of the ETS faculty; Early Church Teaching by the Rev. Edward Roche Hardy Jr. of the faculty of the Berkeley Divinity School; Medieval Teaching by the Rev. Thomas H. Chappell of Dedham, Mass.; Reformation Teaching by Professor Lehman of Wellesley College; Capitalist Development by the Rev. Charles D. Kean of Kirkwood, Mo.; Marxist Influence by Dr. Hulda McGarvey of the Samuel Adams School, Boston; Modern Anglican Teaching by Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley; Theological Perspectives by the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the ETS faculty.

Those planning to attend are asked to notify Mr. Fletcher at 2 Phillips Place, Cambridge, Mass., at once so rooms may be assigned.

Right to Strike

New Haven: — Support of the legal and ethical right of labor to strike and picket was expressed by 70% of the religious and labor leaders who answered a questionnaire sponsored by the Religion and Labor Foundation. Answers were received from 3000 with 80% upholding labor's right to engage in political action; and 70% favored forums in church buildings where all sides of industrial disputes would be discussed.

Charge Discrimination

Middlebury, Vt.:—Protestant ministers here have addressed an open letter to President Stratton of Middlebury College, charging that a new interpretation of a college rule "sets up a status of religious discrimination." The catalogue of the college states that "students are required to attend daily chapel services as well as Sunday vesper services led by distinguished clergymen and educators." An exception has now been allowed whereby Roman Catholic students may attend service at their own church instead of the college service. The letter contends that "the administrative decision grants rights to some students and not to others on the sole basis of religious affiliation."

The ministers say further that "We regret that in conference with you, Dean Lee, Dean Woodward and Chaplain Jenkins we could not have it understood that we were not questioning the right of the college community to make rules for its members but that we are protesting against an interpretation of a college rule which sets up a status of religious discrimination."

The point of their protest, according to the Rev. Harry H. Jones, Episcopal rector in Middlebury, is that the Protestant ministers do not see why Roman Catholic students should be exempt from attending college chapel in order to attend service in their local church whereas Episcopalians and others are not given the same right.

The statement is signed also by the pastor of the Baptist Church, the minister of the Congregational Church and the minister of the Methodist Church.

Church Their Hope

Sydney, Australia (wireless to RNS):—Native races in the Pacific have no hope of security without Christianity, Bishop P. N. W. Strong, Anglican bishop of New Guinea told the annual religion and life convention here. "Australia's first duty is to give the native peoples of the Pacific a Christian faith. The government should insist upon treatment based on Christian principles."

Urge United Action

Rochester, N. Y. (RNS):—United action by government, management, labor and the church to prevent unemployment was demanded by the Presbyterian synod of New York meeting here. It also urged Christians not "to shirk the task of acquiring a better understanding of economic problems" so that they may know how to implement the Christian ideal of an opportunity for all to work.

Oppose FEPC

St. Louis (RNS):—The American Council of Christian Churches, a small federation composed of 12 fundamentalist Protestant groups, opposes a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee. The council which came into being several years ago is a rival to the Federal Council of Churches. It asserted that the FEPC "attempts to force by law what can only be secured by the patient processes of education and growth" and "will sharpen rather than moderate racial differences."

The meeting also endorsed "the principle of universal peacetime military training" and charged that "pacifism being spread by the Federal Council of Churches and other agencies will not prevent future conflict and might result in the destruction of the United States."

Strikes also were condemned as "efforts to subvert collective bargaining into collective coercion of the public."

Clergymen Banned

London (wireless to RNS):—A ban on the employment of clergymen as teachers in state-aided schools, except in very exceptional circumstances, was upheld by a vote of 194 to 18 by the House of Commons. Action was taken after warm debate on a motion to annul the regulations which were imposed under the 1944 education act.

Church and State

Rome (wireless to RNS):—The Pope has warned Roman Catholics that Italy's new constitution must not "conflict with sound religious and moral principles" but should be inspired by Church-approved doctrines. The message was conveyed in a letter addressed to Church leaders in Florence where a Catholic social action week is being observed.

The Pope asserted that a new law does not necessarily ensure the happiness of the people, but often leads to radical innovations and the sacrifice of individual dignity. He stressed that fidelity to established spiritual and juridicial traditions does not mean hostility to certain social innovations. He also warned against "class hatred and class egotism."

The Pope's message was interpreted here as a direct answer to Communist and Socialist groups who are agitating for removal of the clause in the present constitution which declares that "the religion of the state is Roman Catholic," and who have demanded equality for all religions. Leftist groups are seeking complete separation of church and State and have urged abrogation of the 1929 Vatican-Italy concordat.

Join World Council

Stuttgart (wireless to RNS):—The Evangelical Church of Germany has joined the World Council of Churches. The announcement was made following the first assembly of the Church's newly-created twelve-man council.

Honolulu:—The property owned by the Sisters of the Transfiguration at Kaimuki, Honolulu, has been turned into a home for Episcopal girls attending the University of Hawaii who are from the other islands of the Territory. The name of the home is St. Michael's House and is located on a beautiful spot overlooking the ocean. A matron is in charge of the girls, but all jurisdiction is under the guidance of Sister Helen Veronica, Sister Superior of St. Andrew's Priory, who conceived the idea of this Church home for girls.

GREATER NEED

Many who have given generously to the great work being done in China under the direction of the Rev. Kimber Den have asked if there is still need, now that the shooting has stopped. The answer is a positive yes. There was never greater need—or a more vital work for those who believe that the building of men will accomplish more toward making a Christian world than the erection of buildings.

Cathedral, Detroit, was the preacher at the service. Taking the service were two chaplains of St. Luke's, the Rev. H. Campbell Dixon, assistant at St. John's, and the Rev. Edgar A. Lucas of the city mission staff, and the Rev. George Backhurst, now rector at St. Clair, Michigan, who was formerly the head of the city mission work and chaplain of St. Luke's. Bishop and Mrs. Creighton attended the service as did many of the diocesan clergy and their wives.

Labor Service

Detroit:—Bishop Donald Aldrich was the preacher at a labor service, held October 14th at the cathedral here. This date was chosen rather than the Sunday after Labor Day since it was thought it might make for a larger attendance. The Bishop stressed that essential to social tranquility is recognition that the dignity of labor is necessary for industrial peace; understanding that when confusion arises it is because we do not work with God; in the technique of production there are no guesses — mathematics and blue prints insure accuracy but the human relationship is a variable quality. Taking part in the service were Dean Kirk O'Ferrall, the Rev. Malcolm Dade, rector of St. Cyprian's and the Rev. James G. Widdifield, chairman of the diocesan social service department. Following the service there was an open forum with the Rev. Francis B. Creamer, rector of Christ Church, the moderator, with spirited discussion of the problems of labor and management and the relationship of the Church to them.

Washington Cathedral

Grosse Pointe Farms, Mich.:—About 125 members of the Michigan women's committee of the National Cathedral Association met here on October 16th to hear an address by Dean John W. Suter of Washington on the place of the cathedral in the life of the nation. He stresses its worth and usefulness to peoples of all races and creeds. The chairman of the meeting was Bishop Creighton.

Large Bequest

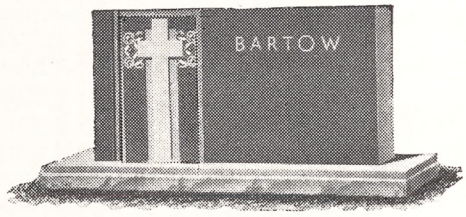
Topeka, Kan.: — A bequest of $40,000 has been made to the National Council by the will of the late Mrs. John McEwen Ames, for many years a resident of this state. The diocese of Kansas receives $10,000; Shattuck School gets the balance of the principal of the trust fund, not to exceed $10,000, the income of which is to be used for deserving boys and particularly sons of Episcopal clergymen and missionaries. The National Council and the diocese of Kansas are also residuary legatees of a $20,000 fund left to a friend of Mrs. Ames. Other bequests: Grace Cathedral, Topeka, $500; Trinity Church, Williamsport, Pa., $500; hospital at Youngstown, Ohio, $2,000.

Convention Delegates

Phoenix, Ariz.: — Governor Osborn of Arizona and Mayor Fleming of this city were among those to attend the service at which Bishop Kinsolving was installed as bishop of the missionary district of Arizona. Clergymen were present representing other denominations. At the convocation following Dean Edwin S. Lane and Mr. Ralph Metz of Bisbee were elected deputies to the 1946 General Convention.

Missionaries Return

New York: — Eight missionaries from China returned on the hospital ship Sanctuary. They are Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Brown and their two children, released from the Chapei internment camp; Gwendolyn L. Cooper, released from the same camp; George J. Sullwold and T. Foster Teevan from the Pottung camp, Robert J. Salmon, and Edward N. Throop.



Unique Paper

Hudson, Mass.: — Marking the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of St. Luke's Church, was an evening visitation by Bishop Sherrill on October 18 for confirmation and an anniversary service including the institution of the rector, the Rev. Harry Eugene Goll. A most remarkable parish newspaper called St. Luke's Jubilee, was printed and distributed and aroused intense interest by a novel presentation of historical matter and news lightened by a vivid sense of wit and humor. The weather forecast, in best newspaper style, for instance, quoted Leviticus 26:3. There were cartoons, funny ones and sparing no one, the contribution of a professional cartoonist on the local paper; there were lost and found advertisements, one of which is easily believed: "Found: Good fellowship at St. Luke's Church." And there was a crossword puzzle, "home made," with a smattering of diocesan information tucked

Friendly Trailer

Detroit:—Our correspondent says it was fine to stand on the lawn in front of All Saints' on the afternoon of October 14 and watch people passing by in cars crane their necks at the Friendly Trailer which Miss Olive Meacham has brought to the city before beginning work in a congested textile section of the diocese of Upper South Carolina. Usually the only activity on a large open lot in this city is a carnival. This Girls' Friendly trailer, with its colored canopy, and music from its loud speaker provided an interesting diversion. Many members of the society and their friends visited the trailer and also saw moving pictures of Miss Meacham's work which were shown in the parish house. She was processes involved in production and formerly a war emergency worker in this diocese. Last summer, with the trailer she devoted to social service work for the Girls' Friendly Society in Missouri.

Orlando, Fla.: — Bishop Wing consecrated St. Luke's Cathedral here on October 21, the property now being free of all debt.

Russian Cathedral

New York (RNS):—The Russian Orthodox Cathedral of St. Nicholas, former see of the ruling Russian bishop in the United States, but for many years controlled by the so-called Living Church in Russia, has become once more the possession of the Moscow patriarchate. The transfer was climaxed when the Rev. John Kedross, former adherent of the now defunct Living Church formally submitted to the jurisdiction of the holy synod in Moscow and surrendered possession to Metropolitan Benjamin, who represents Patriarch Alexei as exarch of North America and the Aleutian Islands. Formal return of the cathedral, built at the beginning of the century largely through the contributions of Russian nobility, was marked by a celebration of the liturgy by Metropolitan Benjamin and Archbishop Alexei of Yaroslavl and Rostov who is now in this country to effect a reconciliation of Russian churches still regarded as schismatic by Moscow.

William R. Moody Consecrated

Lexington, Ky.:—The Rev. William R. Moody of Baltimore was consecrated bishop of Lexington on October 24th by the Presiding Bishop. It was a colorful service with the church unable to seat many who came to attend.

May-Johnson Bill Assailed

Washington: — The May-Johnson atomic control bill and the proposal of President Truman for peace-time military training were assailed by the national board of the United Council of Church Women, meeting here on October 24th. The board also voted that future meetings would be held only in cities "where the right to hotel and restaurant facilities are available to all members." At this meeting Negro delegates were guests in white homes with some of the white delegates staying in Negro homes.

On the matter of the atomic bomb the board went on record as favoring legislation "by which it would share its knowledge of present industrial

Federal anti-poll-tax legislation was favored. Also the board came out strongly for the full employment bill now before Congress and for the establishment of a permanent fair employment practices committee. The 10,000,000 women who are affiliated with the United Council are being urged to write their Congressmen on all these matters. The president of the Council is Mrs. Harper Sibley, Episcopalian, who stayed at the residence headquarters of The National Council of Negro Women.

Send Challenge

New York:—The Federal Council of Churches, the American committee of the World Council of Churches and the Foreign Missions Conference have sent a message to "Christians in all lands" with a challenge to "achieve in the here and now a righteous world order." The message commends the charter for World Organization and points to the Christian duty of joining hands and hearts in "a spiritual reformation that will encompass the earth."

MARY HEILNER
Churchwoman of New York City

In your issue of Oct. 11, there is an article describing the union of an Episcopal and a Congregational church in Ashfield, Mass. It should be noted that this experiment is in no sense "unique" as the title of the article would indicate. With the approval of Bishop Malcolm E. Peabody, it has already been tried successfully for two years in Candor, N. Y., where the Rev. Charles Sykes is both priest-in-charge of St. Mark's Episcopal Church and pastor of the Congregational Church of Candor. The services are held alternately one month in each church, with the two congregations united and the church schools combined and meeting in the church where the services are being held during the month. The forms of worship customary in each church are used. The only separate activities are those pertaining to the missionary and national work of the churches, as is the case in Ashfield.

Such experiments give us a pattern and a greater measure of hope for the ecumenical movement. Much has been written on the theoretical grounds for church unity and the difficulties of such unity. More publicity should be given to the concrete, realized expressions of it.

MR. GEORGE ARMITAGE
Layman of Philadelphia

Your editorial Rather Hard to Figure (WITNESS, Sept. 27) is nothing but downright Socialism and has no place in a Church publication. The same is true of President Truman's program for the post-war world which you support. There is but one way to manage affairs and that is for the government to keep its hands off business, to allow labor to compete for jobs as business concerns have to compete for orders, to regulate labor unions just as business is regulated by endless and often needless reports to government (including annual financial statements from unions, run for the most part by racketeers). If you sincerely desire that abundance which you speak of there is a simple way to get it: hands off business by government; regular unions; and thus restore confidence so that business men can go ahead with some degree of confidence.

MRS. GULIAN LANSING
Churchwoman of Westfield, N. J.

As a member of the executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary I am grateful for the generous headlines you gave us (WITNESS, Oct. 4.) But I do wish that you had added a few more lines to include the emphasis on personal religion which we felt was important. In all of our discussions there was apparent a wide-spread sense of the urgent need within the Auxiliary of renewed spiritual fervor, so we included in the preamble a statement of our "responsibility to proclaim the redeeming power of Christ and show forth in every area of our lives obedience to his teaching" and headed the list of specific objectives with a call to personal re-dedication, daily prayer and Bible reading and regular participation in corporate worship.

Since we felt that this emphasis was basic and that only with boldness of faith and confidence in the power of the Holy Ghost could we approach the grave problems which must be solved if we are to have a lasting peace and a decent social order, I should be glad if you would give space to some additional words on the message we framed.

MR. JOHN E. VINCENT
Layman of New York

The editorial Rather Hard to Figure (WITNESS, Sept. 27) is excellent and I am grateful to you for expressing the situation so clearly and yet so briefly. I have shown it to a large number of my business friends and I must say that on the whole they disagree with it to the point of anger. Yet it seems obvious that unless we can devise some means of giving purchasing power to the masses of the people that there will be no means of distributing what we can produce in such abundance. It is the great problem that is before us and the world, and I am glad that the Church officially, and THE WITNESS as a Church organ, has spoken out so courageously on the matter.

JOHN W. DAY
Dean at Topeka, Kansas

May I add to the comments already printed in THE WITNESS about the "trapeze" family which has disturbed so many of our clergy in the East recently? When I first ran across this family, about ten years ago, there were three children —a pathetic group, traveling about in a coupe, enroute to circus winter quarters in Dallas. Like so many of the clergy, we helped the family because of the children. In one case, we hospitalized one of them. The last time the family appeared here in Topeka we were compelled to be hard boiled and refuse any aid unless they were willing to settle down here and try to make a home for the children. We have not seen them since. That was about three years ago.

Rector of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest, Ill.

Nothing could be better than the gentle and delicious satire of William Butler Sperry's leading article in THE WITNESS of Oct. 18, nor his forthright and convincing argument with which he winds up his Christian opposition to the universal military training bill. I had not yet thought the thing through for myself, but he has thought it through for me and carried me along with him by the sheer weight of sound reason, implemented by Christian principles, and certainly not spoiled by the irony of good humour, extremely well expressed. Thanks, Brother Sperry, for doing a good job in print and on me.

CAMBRIDGE books recommended by THE WITNESS

PACIFISM AND CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION

G. C. FIELD, professor of philosophy at the University of Bristol, bases his book on his experience of 1940-1944 as a member of an English Tribunal before which all conscientious objectors had to appear. "Both pacifists and non-pacifists should give this book a careful reading."—F. C. Grant, THE WITNESS $1.25

WORSHIP AND THE COMMON LIFE

ERIC HAYMAN makes a plea for worship that would integrate human experience. This book is incisive, penetrating, and sure-footed. These pages may well be read not only for their subject matter, but as an example of delicate and precise moral strategy addressed to a crude and confusing situation in our social environment."—Willard L. Sperry, REVIEW OF RELIGION $2.50

ONE KIND OF RELIGION

By HELEN WODEHOUSE. "Here is a daring book that tries to bring God down out of the clouds and make him part of the common life. The book does a great service in slaying some of the superstitions which have so degraded genuine religion through the centuries."—THE BOSTON HERALD.

Activities of Rome Protested At Reformation Service

Bishop Oxnam Declares It Is Not Intolerant to Protest Against Her Political Activities

By Sara Dill

St. Louis:—Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches and the bishop of the New York area of the Methodist Church, was the headliner at a great Reformation Service held in the auditorium here on October 28th. All of the Episcopal Churches in the city participated with most of their choirs joining in the massed choir of 1000 voices. Bishop Scarlett, Episcopal Bishop of Missouri, pronounced the benediction which dismissed the throng of more than 11,000 people who attended.

Others to take part in the great service were the Rev. W. B. Lampe, moderator of the Presbyterian Church; the Rev. B. Frank Hall, president of the church federation; the Rev. S. J. Schmiechen, president of the Missouri Valley synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church; Bishop Ivan Lee Holt of the Methodist Church; Bishop Noah W. Williams of the African Methodist Episcopal Church; the Rev. Oscar Johnson, pastor of the Third Baptist Church. Every Protestant denomination joined, with the exception of the Missouri synod of the Lutheran Church, in a service described by one of the sponsors as being for the purpose "of making the fact known that we tremendously value our Protestant heritage, the values inherent in it and all that this has meant to the United States of America."

Declaring that the serious tension developing between Roman Catholics and Protestants is "regrettable, inexcusable and sinful," Bishop Oxname called upon religious leaders of all faiths to do all in their power to eliminate the causes that contribute to tension. "Christians who believe that a just and brotherly world depends upon the enthronement of the spiritual teachings of Jesus must be one in discovering the means to translate the ethical ideals of religion into the realities of world law and order, economic justice and racial brotherhood. To waste energy on racial strife in such an hour is to betray our Lord."

He said that he knew many Roman Catholic leaders in various fields "who are eager to join hands with their Protestant brothers to establish a society in which the sacredness of every personality is recognized and in which everyone finds opportunity for the fullest self-expression of which he is capable. This does not mean that such men cease to be loyal to the Christian faith as it is taught in their Church but that they do not believe in an exclusiveness that keeps Christian from working and worshipping with fellow Christian. Roman Catholic and Protestant worship the same God, adore the same Christ and are inspired by the same Holy Spirit. Both know that religion is loving God and brother. Both believe that sin is the violation of the will of God and that forgiveness is found in his mercy. Both believe in Jesus Christ as Saviour and together they hold fast to the sustaining faith in immortality. There is much more they hold in common and in such an hour Christians should center upon their identities rather than accentuate their diversities. The world desperately needs a new unifying concept."

After thus calling for greater understanding Bishop Oxnam stated that "understanding awaits plain speech. Such speech must be respectful, friendly and reveal Christian love, but it must be frank and deal with real issues. The polite niceties of inter-faith meetings avoid divisive problems and therefore make little contribution to unity."

He then declared that "Protestants are gravely concerned over what they believe to be an attempt upon the part of the Roman Catholic Church to exercise political domination here, similar to the control exercised in many nations. Protestants will fight to preserve religious liberty, not only for Protestants, but for Roman Catholics and Jews and other faiths. I believe Protestants will labor to see that no Roman Catholic suffers disability of any kind because of his faith. Where Protestants have failed to do this, and thereby have not lived up to their cherished principle of religious liberty, we ask for forgiveness. In the plain speech that is essential, the Protestant speaks to himself as well as to his Roman Catholic brother.

"The Protestant pledges himself to accept, and in humility calls upon his Roman Catholic fellow Christian to practice, a very simple principle to govern in matters of religious liberty and religious association. The principle comes from the highest authority, and is 'Do unto others as ye would be done by.'

It is not intolerance to object to abuses Dr. Oxnam told the thousands attending the notable service in St. Louis

"Protestants have been subjected to serious misrepresentation in the Roman Catholic press. When Protestants have protested against intolerance upon the part of the Roman Catholic Church their protests have been called intolerance.

"It is not intolerance to protest against Roman Catholic activities that seek through boycott to threaten newspapers and therefore to control them in Roman Catholic interest. This is to endanger a free press and to destroy civil liberty.

"It is not intolerance to protest against actions of certain Roman leaders to deny Protestant ministers access to the radio by threatening station owners with the loss of consumer support of products advertised.

"It is not intolerance to insist upon the separation of Church and state, and therefore, to object to the use of public funds for private and sectarian education.

"It is not intolerance to refuse to accept dictates that would deny Protestant Churches the right to engage in missionary work in other lands, at the very moment the Roman Catholic Church affirms its right to carry on missionary work in all lands.

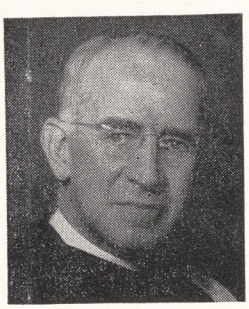
"It is not intolerance to protest against Roman Catholic support for the fascist regime of Franco Spain when our sons die to destroy fascism everywhere and to preserve democracy for mankind.

"It is not intolerance to point out that Protestantism will oppose the clericalism that has cursed other lands whenever such clericalism manifests itself in this land. Clericalism is 'the pursuit of power, especially political power, by a religious hierarchy, carried on by secular methods, and for purposes of social domination.'

"It is not intolerance to insist that a Church must be a Church, that it cannot be both Church and state. Protestants, therefore, oppose the establishment of diplomatic relations with the Vatican. This is no lack of respect for the distinguished, devoted, brilliant and brotherly Christian who is the present Pope. It is to state that there is no reason that justifies an ambassador from the Vatican at Washington, that would not justify Mohammedans, Buddhists, Hindus and Protestant communions in establishing token states and appointing similar ambassadors to represent them.

"It is not intolerance when Protestants repudiate Roman Catholic theories of Church and state which lead logically to a subservient state dominated by an absolute Church.

"It is not intolerance to point out the fundamental contradiction that lies in the Roman Catholic position on religious liberty, that in effect means a demand for religious liberty where the Roman Catholic is in the minority, but denies it in practice where the Roman Catholic is in the majority.



"The very statement of these concerns is apt to evoke bitter response. I trust this may not be so. It is made in the friendliest of spirit and with but a single purpose, namely to make it clear to Roman Catholic leaders that Protestants in this nation are gravely concerned with certain practices that we believe are leading to religious strife. How much better to state our views in Christian love, listen to counter statements, and together seek to create so much of the spirit of Our Lord that we may remove the causes of dissension, demonstrate the meaning of Christian unity, and lead mankind to a better day."

Washington: — These men have been in battle for forty-eight hours without being able to leave their stations for hot food. K-rations it has been. But the battle has now subsided so that a few at a time are allowed to go below deck for a hot meal. The mess hall on this particular occasion registered 130 degrees. And the men have something a lot more serious on their mind than food. They have seen death and destruction. Their faces are worth a few moments of careful study. The picture was taken by one of the foremost photographers in the country whose name cannot be revealed at this time because of navy regulations. This is the second of a series of ten we plan for our cover.

BISHOP GILBERT HONORED

New York: — Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, suffragan of New York, was honored on October 29th, the fifteenth anniversary of his consecration. There was a service at the cathedral, followed by a luncheon at the synod house, attended by a number of the clergy and leading laity of the diocese. Bishop Gilbert is a member of the editorial board of THE WITNESS. He is also the father of Sergeant Gilbert whose article is featured in this issue.

SYNOD MEETS IN ALBANY

Albany, N. Y.:—Bishop Littell, retired bishop of Honolulu, was the preacher at the service held at the synod of the 2nd province meeting here October 23-24. He gave a picture of the extent and expanse of the missionary field of the entire Anglican communion and proposed a coordination of the work of the world-wide church. This was given official recognition by the synod when a resolution was passed to memoralize General Convention favoring the proposal. A resolution was also passed calling for action by the Church to accelerate release from the armed forces of men who were students for orders. The synod closed with a luncheon at which the speaker was President John M. Potter of Hobart College who spoke on the responsibilities and opportunities we have to cooperate for world peace.

Bishop William Scarlett of Missouri had a leading part in the Reformation Service held in the city auditorium in St. Louis

Meetings of the Auxiliary, youth, and other organizations of the province were held in connection with the synod.

INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF ATOMIC BOMB

Portsmouth, N. H.:—International control of the atomic bomb, and sharing its secret with the world, was urged at the synod of the first province meeting here. A resolution was also passed urging General Convention to so interpret the word "layman" in the canons as to make women eligible as delegates to synods.

The Roman Catholics in Poland Raise Vital Issues

Decrees Similar to Laws in the United States Are Considered Unfavorable by the Hierarchy

By W. B. Spofford

New York: — Full religious freedom may mean one thing in Poland and something else again in the United States. Thus William E. Mueller writes from Warsaw as correspondent for Religious News Service to say that "the Catholic Church appears on the surface to enjoy full freedom of religion but communist influences are also much in evidence. This in a nut-shell is the situation under the present pro-Russian Warsaw governmment."

He declares that large numbers of Catholics flock to war-damaged churches in Warsaw, Danzig, Breslau, Poznan and other cities where temporary facilities have been set up for the celebration of mass and other services. He also says that a large number of Catholic weekly publications are now being printed. Likewise he states that Bishop Zaczynski, former head of the defunct Polish Catholic press agency in London, who recently arrived in Poland, is allowed to tour the country at will, even though communist circles have accused him of attempting, in collaboration with Cardinal Hlond and Archbishop Sapeiha of Cracow, to form a new London government. Bishop Kaczynski was minister of education in the defunct government-in-exile.

The correspondent then lists what he calls "tendencies unfavorable to the Catholic Church." One is that communist headquarters in Cracow display cartoons showing the Pope giving benediction to fascists. Another is that the new Polish government has decreed that official registration of births, deaths and marriages should cease to be controlled by the Church and that all registration fees must from now on be paid to the state. Marriage in church is now voluntary while civil marriage is compulsory. Another decree, now being prepared, would make two-hour weekly religious education in elmentary and high schools voluntary instead of compulsory. Under the 1921 constitution, Catholicism was recognized as the religion of the state but the new government is expected shortly to adopt measures granting equal rights to all religions.

It is difficult to see how any American, Roman Catholics included, can object to the proposals of the new Polish government. The fact is that previously every birth, marriage and death, whether of a Catholic, a Protestant, a Jew or a non-believer, had to be registered at a Roman Catholic parish and fees paid the priest. The new law is similar in most details—perhaps in every detail—to the laws of the United States. All of this was pointed out some weeks ago by the Dean of Canterbury, following a visit to Poland, who stated that the country has religious freedom for the first time; meaning freedom for Protestants as well as for Catholics. Neither will many Americans figure how voluntary religious education in schools is a "tendency unfavorable to the Catholic Church" but rather is a decree in line with what people in the United States mean by religious freedom—the right of all to worship as they please, or not to worship at all if that is in line with their convictions.

Another little sentence in the report has great significance for those with ears to hear and eyes to see: "Church property has not been taken over by land reformers but the Catholic clergy fear that if the present government continues in power confiscation of Church estates may be only a matter of time."

Mind, it is Church "estates" not "churches." Harold Laski said of Spain that the Roman Church there was a "rich monopolist." In spite of the to-do on the part of Catholics here and elsewhere, most people know perfectly well that what Harold Laski said was perfectly true. What he said of the Church in Spain can be said equally of the Church in Poland. It is a rich monopolist and is the most powerful single agency working against a greater degree of freedom and security for the masses of the people. If the new Polish government is really establishing genuine religious freedom for all people, Protestants, Jews as well as Catholics; if it is smashing the old racket of having all births etc., registered only at Catholic Churches; if it is taking the huge landed estates of the Church and distributing them to the peasants then I say, in the name of the religion of Jesus Christ, more power to it.

When the Canterbury Club meets at Tulane-Newcomb in New Orleans there is usually a lot of fun. Here Fred Schwarz gets laughs from a lot of pretty girls and it must have been good for even the boys enjoy it

FAIR TREATMENT IS PROMISED

New York:—Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes has assured the Federal Council of Churches here that the war relocation authority is making every "feasible effort" to provide for the basic needs of Japanese American evacuees as they leave WRA centers and return to private life. Ickes' letter, sent to J. Quinter Miller, associate general secretary of the Federal Council, replied to a communication in which the national inter-church body expressed concern over the announcement that all relocation centers would be closed by Dec. 31, 1945.

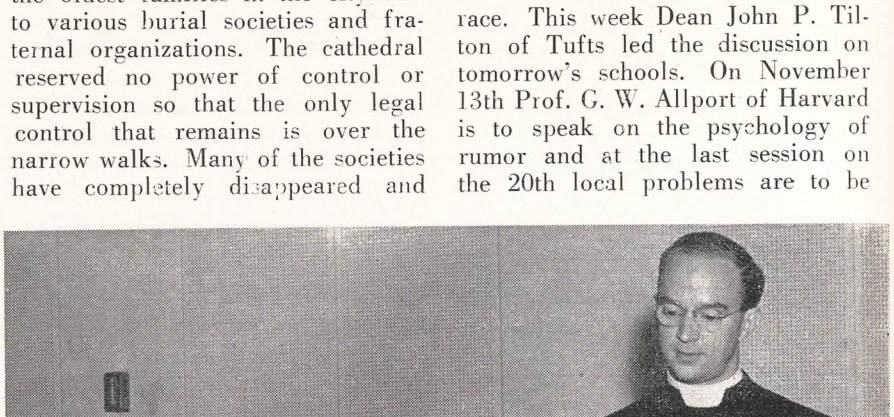
The Council called upon the government for assurances that adequate provision will be made for the basic needs of the evacuees, including housing, assistance in employment, and the care of the aged and orphans before evicting them from the war relocation centers.

Commending private groups such as the Federal Council for their work "in assisting the Japanese to return to the mainstream of American life," Ickes asserted that he shared their determination to see that "the members of our displaced Japanese American minority are treated with human consideration."

BISHOP DUN ASSAILS ARROGANCE OF U. S.



Washington:—Bishop Angus Dun last week declared that America's greatest danger today is "pride and arrogance," bolstered by the potential of the atomic bomb.

"We publicly thank God that we are not as other men, and practically invite them to thank God with us, all the while holding the little bomb behind our backs," he declared at the anniversary banquet of the Central Union Mission here.

"Is that the way to grow in favor with God and man? That is the pride that goeth before destruction. Atomic energy is being spoken of as 'the basic power of the universe.' Perhaps that reflects our deepest godlessness. Atomic energy is not the basic power. The basic power is the spirit of God that brooded on primeval darkness and brought order out of chaos. We shall not find safety by matching atomic power against atomic power. There is no way of safety except by being brought ourselves under the power of that spirit which entered our world so powerfully in Christ. The best promise ever offered to me is still the old promise that to the humble in heart who truly seek, that spirit will be given."

PROTESTANT CEMETERY IS NEGLECTED

New Orleans:—The 123 year old Protestant Cemetery here, once owned by Christ Church Cathedral, may be demolished unless lot owners agree to repair and maintain the property. Still nominally controlled by the cathedral, it is of historic rather than of current interest for it has long since been abandoned and is in a sad state of ruin and neglect. When it was established by Christ Church, the first Protestant church in the entire Louisiana Purchase, the lots were sold with a clear title to many of the oldest families in the city and to various burial societies and fraternal organizations. The cathedral reserved no power of control or supervision so that the only legal control that remains is over the narrow walks. Many of the societies have completely disappeared and the ownership by families is so widely diffused through many generations that the legal problems of ownership are difficult to put it mildly. The cemetery has become a menace to health and public safety so that it would probably be best to have it abandoned and converted to some useful purpose, such as a park or playground.

One of the most popular and frequent broadcasters in the Church is Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles. With him on this occasion is the Rev. Ronald Merrix, field officer of the National Council and the Rev. W. E. Craig Jr., chairman of publicity in the diocese

COMMUNITY AFFAIRS DISCUSSED

Dorchester, Mass.:—A series of meetings on community affairs with stress on intercultural relations are being held here on six successive Tuesday evenings under the auspices of the Good Neighbor Association. On October 16 servicemen of world war two gave their views of what a new world should be like in a round table forum. On the 23rd Dean H. M. LeSourd of Boston University spoke on rehabilitation and world peace, and the following week Miss Ethel Alpenfels, anthropologist, held forth on sense and nonsense about race. This week Dean John P. Tilton of Tufts led the discussion on tomorrow's schools. On November 13th Prof. G. W. Allport of Harvard is to speak on the psychology of rumor and at the last session on the 20th local problems are to be faced. The executive director of the Association is Episcopalian Katharine A. Wells.

MICHIGAN YOUTH HAS MEETING

Detroit:—Young people who are leaders in twenty parishes held a conference at Pine Lake, October 19-20 to plan a program for the year. Then on the 21st youth Sunday was observed in most of the parishes in the diocese, usually with a corporate communion followed by breakfast. In the afternoon a service was held at the cathedral with 700 young people on hand. The Rev. William Crittenden, new national secretary of young people, was the preacher.

A Great Vision?

IN A RECENT editorial we commended the Reconstruction and Advance Fund as deserving the support of Church people. We are all the more dismayed, therefore to receive from the National Council as a part of the publicity for our missionary work in Latin America a sermon curiously entitled "A Great Vision," by the bishop-coadjutor of Puerto Rico. We cannot think of anything more calculated to dissuade our people from supporting missions than this. He imagines a community where there are a number of Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches. Admitting that it is already "over-churched," he proceeds to defend vigorously the right of the Episcopal Church to be established there. This, he says, should be our policy in foreign missions and "certainly" in Latin America. At least the Bishop is brutally frank. He writes, "missionaries of various Protestant Churches have preceded us, establishing churches, hospitals and schools. There is no doubt that to the extent of our missionary efforts in these countries, once we did begin, we increased the percentage of empty pews per Sunday—yes, and further confused the issue by adding one more expression of Christianity." (Italics ours.) And what reason does he give for this extraordinary attitude towards our brethren? Because, forsooth, "the unity of the future will depend upon a synthesis of the three present-day manifestations of Christianity" which he calls "Roman Catholicism, Evangelical Protestantism and non-Roman Catholicism." It is in the latter category that he places the Protestant Episcopal Church. In order to achieve unity, competition must be set up!

So this is "A Great Vision"—we are to give our money to increase empty pews and confuse people about Christianity! Can the bishop be so naive as to think that a synthesis is possible with Rome? Is he not aware that over and over again her spokesmen have stated that the only synthesis that Rome will tolerate is complete submission? It is considerably different with our fellow Christians of the Protestant Churches. Their record and that of the Roman Catholic Church in Latin America is not to be compared, morally, ethically or spiritually. Cooperation with them, not competition, is the only justifiable and decent missionary policy.

We hope that the leaders of our Church will promptly repudiate this point-of-view before too much damage is done. With the world seeking unity as the only means of survival, with our nation committed to the Good Neighbor policy in Latin America, it would be shameful and tragic if our Church chose the opposite way.

"QUOTES"

SPECIFICALLY our conclusions are: (1) Other nations will be able to produce atomic bombs; (2) No effective defense is possible in atomic warfare; (3) Safety cannot be obtained by superiority in atomic armament; (4) Henceforth war will mean the destruction of a large fraction of civilization; (5) International cooperation of an unprecedented kind is necessary for our survival.

—From a statement on international control of atomic energy issued on October 30, signed by 515 physicists, chemists and engineers who were employed on war research at Harvard and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Revision Is Needed

WE NOTICE that the Archbishop of York has called for certain reforms in the Church of England. One of them is revision of worship. Just what he has in mind we do not know, perhaps he is thinking of certain words in the Malvern Declaration: worship "must be so directed and conducted that its relevance to life and to men's needs is evident. For this purpose our traditional forms of Matins and Evensong, presupposing as they do acceptance of the tradition of the Church and unfailing regularity of use, are largely unsuitable. They must in most places be supplemented by services of another type, whether liturgical or not." We would certainly like to see the Church of England and our Church provide and authorize such services for public use.

But, further, much could be done to make our traditional forms of service more credible and understandable vehicles of worship. We're not concerned at the moment with any profound liturgical principles (we refer you to Massey Shepherd's column, The Living Liturgy, for that approach) but with some very simple things. Why, for example, must we continue to use archaic words as in the collect for the 17th Sunday after Trinity: "that thy grace may always prevent and follow us?" In the English book the familiar occasional collect begins: "Prevent us O Lord in all our doings." We have changed that to read: "Direct us O Lord," but in the collects generally, as elsewhere in our Prayer Book, the American revisors have been little influenced by modern English usage. Why, to take another example, should we continue to mystify worshipers with passages from Pauline epistles which only scholars can understand? And why cling to the King James version of the epistles when a modern rendering would make sense out of a 17th century translation which is at times incomprehensible? We now have an excellent lectionary for Morning and Evening Prayer; is there any good reason why the Liturgical lectionary should not be thoroughly revised as Dr. Grant suggests in his article this week?

We believe that next General Convention should appoint a commission to revise the Book of Common Prayer and to prepare other supplemental services along the lines suggested by the English Grey Book.

Not Peace, But Justice

by Frederic D. H. Gilbert

Layman of New York and Former Air Corps Sergeant

WHEN I was asked on my return from overseas to say something here I wondered what message was expected of me. A sort of god-fatherly interest in THE WITNESS arising from a small share in launching the Church Publishing Association hardly qualifies me as one having a message for its readers. Nevertheless after a more or less intimate acquaintance with war one naturally has ideas about it so, for what they are worth, here are a few thoughts bearing on the theme of war and peace.

Among many people, both service men and civilians, there seems to be a growing feeling of disillusionment about events following the end of the war, resulting in a rather disturbing mood of cynicism. To a large degree this arises I think from a certain ignorance which needs to be ceaselessly combatted for such disillusionment and cynicism are dangerous. They create a mood which, lacking faith in success, dooms all constructive effort to failure.

Bill Mauldin, creator of those immoral GI's, Willie and Joe, has portrayed with searching accuracy certain phases of the war which need to be understood and which too many of the home folks, even would-be omniscient pundits of press and radio, have failed to grasp. Yet in his book he claims to be too young to understand what the war is about. I think Mauldin's confession, if it implies a failure at least to try to understand not only how but why the war was being fought, is a sad case of just that dangerous ignorance. We must try to comprehend at the same time both the big and the little, the general and the particular, of the war and of the peace which is to follow. We must see Bill Mauldin's war and also the war of the pundits. We must go even further and without losing sight of these aspects seek to comprehend the moral and spiritual implications of it for mankind now and in time to come. Many of us see clearly one or another of these aspects but too few of us, whether through ignorance, closed minds or blunted moral perceptions, integrate them as we should or even realize that all of them exist. It is not strange then that we are sometimes disagreeably surprised by events and in our bewilderment give up the fight before it has begun. In short too many of us have not learned much about war and peace and still expect too much of both. So it is perhaps not so absurd as it might seem to stop and ask ourselve what war and peace are.

WAR of course is a test of strength between adversaries which in the decorous days of old used to be armies but which, now that we are more democratic, consist of whole peoples. War is thus a positive, dynamic thing; a definite method of settling a dispute, the ancient trial by battle. It is also a beautifully simple thing; it has only two sides—mine and yours, and every relevant act has only two possible interpretations: it favors my side or it opposes it. Hence its appeal to the minds of men hungering after certainty in a universe too complicated and dangerous for mortal peace of mind. War at least does what it sets out to do, which is to establish that the victor is stronger than his adversary and therefore able to compel him to do his will. But that is all that war does. It cannot determine the justice of either adversary's cause, nor can it solve the problems that gave rise to the conflicts. Failure to realize this is cause for much of today's disillusionment. We forget that the world was sick before the war and that the war has cured none of the world's disorders. What has happened—all that we had any right to expect—is that we, as victors, have elected ourselves to the task of curing these disorders in our way. If we had lost, and one shudders to recall how close at times we were to losing, that task would have been Germany's and Japan's, through their then masters, to perform in their way. To my mind this fact alone justifies our part in the war, given the state of the world as it was in 1939 (I say nothing here of our American share of the guilt for allowing it to reach that state) but it brings us only to the beginning of the task.

WHAT now of peace? I have reached the conclusion—I say it though it agrees with the Junker view in every age and nation—that of all the goals for which men strive, peace as an end in itself is the most sterile and the least worthy of men's ambition. For peace is only the negation of war. No conflicts can be settled by the mere absence of one of the traditional methods of settling them. Trial by battle at least settles the issue of who shall undertake the solution. Peace cannot even settle that. Peace is a sort of vacuum; there is nothing in it until something is put there. If we do not fill it nature will—with materials we may not like. Nor is filling it exactly a peaceful business for whatever we do is done not by a single mind but by a collaboration of minds; the collective minds of many nations with differing, even irreconcilable, points of view.

Too much glorification of mere peace has blinded too many of us to these facts. Because the coming of peace confronts us with the appalling task of restoring world order, involved as it is in all the cross currents of greed, prejudice, pride and hate among peoples, classes, races and creeds, many of us find ourselves diagreeably surprised and flung back into the dangerous mood which cries, "plague on all your houses!" But we should have known better. We were asking too much of mere peace.

Not peace but order is the first requisite in this post-war world; not peace but justice is the final goal. The establishment of either order or justice involves necessarily the application of force, but force controlled by accepted rules of the game which is law; not the uncontrolled force of today which is anarchy.

With the destructive forces now at man's command the alternatives are clear. Either we create a world order under which conflicts can be settled, wrongs righted and human society change and grow, protected from physical violence by the sanctions of law, or we go down into the universal annihilation of human society that our stupidity and wickedness will have so richly deserved.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

FREDERIC WHITNEY FITTS, 1872-1945

THE venerable abbot of Maria Laach, Dom Ildefons Herwegen, has said that the purpose of the liturgy is the transfiguration of life. Father Fitts realized that transfiguration. Now he beholds the King in his beauty. The heavenly choirs received him into their company for the matins office on St. Matthew's day,—singing:

O ye Priests of the Lord,
O ye Servants of the Lord,
O ye Spirits and Souls of the Righteous,
O ye holy and humble Men of heart,

Bless ye the Lord,
Praise Him, and magnify Him for ever.

Few servants of God have lived the liturgy so entirely as did Father Fitts. His never-failing goodness, seemingly instinctive, was enkindled at the flame of holiness. His serenity, reminding one of those plainsong melodies he loved, was lifted upon the elevation of his mind to God. He was a real Catholic. He had learned what true catholicity is from the meekness of prayer rather than from the contentions of the schools. Like his master, he did "not strive nor cry." Above all he was loyal—loyal to his God, loyal to his Church and to his diocese, loyal to his friends (and he never knew an enemy), loyal to his Prayer Book. As the ornaments in his sanctuary, he was simple as wood, splendid as silver and gold; there was no base alloy in his metal, no brass.

The parish worship of St. John's in Roxbury, where Father Fitts served for thirty-seven years, is the monument of his tasteful care, his sincerity, his hold upon fundamental principles. He never used "dumb ceremonies," but only those of teaching value. For example, instead of those choir processionals and recessionals which do not mean anything of importance, he would have such significant actions as the Gospel procession, where the Word is brought to the people, and the Offertory procession, where our gifts are brought to God for his hallowing. He placed only two lights on the holy table because they signify a great truth about our Lord, whereas six or eight of them do not. He would sing hymns—and how gloriously are they sung at St. John's—which point objectively to God or to the primary tenets of the faith. Such hymns carry with them their own cleansing and elevating emotions. He did not consider it courteous or fitting in God's presence to sing sentimental hymns aimed at arousing one's feelings. He never encouraged mass without communions; for he understood that "the sacraments were not ordained of Christ to be gazed upon, or to be carried about, but that we should duly use them."

Father Fitts was not a "Sarum-ite" in the sense in which many employ the term with an off-hand suggestion of 'being out of fashion.' He held a consistent and entirely defensible theory about liturgical ceremonial which it is a pity so few of our clergy have taken very seriously. Back in 1910 he wrote in his parish leaflet: "The object of ceremonial first of all is the glory of God. . . . Second, ceremonial is for the edification of man, to help the reverent devotion of his spirit by what he sees done in the worship of God. Third, ceremonial is a means of setting forth the great truths of Christianity. . . . The proper ceremonial for the American Church today will be discovered first in the rubrics of our Prayer Book, which have behind them the rubrics of the English Prayer Book, both of which must be interpreted by the ancient ceremonial which was endorsed and has never been repudiated by either the English or American Churches." And again, most recently, in his excellent papers published in the news sheet of the Anglican Society (1942-43), he said: "Common sense should deter us from introducing ceremonial made up by the parson according to his predilections and idiosyncrasies, while both loyalty to our own communion as well as common sense should lead us to follow Anglican tradition and not to look to a foreign communion for guidance."

The test of Father Fitts' soundness in matters liturgical is to know the congregation of all classes and races which he welded into a body "of one heart and of one soul," who have learned from his teaching and example "to live more nearly as we pray."

The Bible in the Prayer Book

by Frederick C. Grant

DURING the past eight years a committee has been at work upon a revision of the Revised Version of the Bible. The revision of the New Testament is now complete and has gone to press. According to the announcement made by the head of the committee, Dean Luther Weigle of the Yale Divinity School, this new version of the New Testament will probably appear some time early next year, depending upon the paper supply. The revision of the Old Testament will take much longer and may not be published for several years.

Now that the New Testament revision is expected, it might be well for the Episcopal Church to consider a revision of the Epistles and Gospels in the Prayer Book—and also, ultimately—a revision of the Psalter. It is to be hoped that any such revision would combine two things: (a) accuracy in rendering, in accordance with the best modern scholarship, and (b) the preservation of as much as possible of the old language, where it is still perfectly clear and at the same time accurate. The purpose of the Epistles and Gospels is of course liturgical. One does not turn to the Prayer Book for scholarly translation or the highest accuracy of rendering. The beauty of the unforgettable phraseology of the Prayer Book is one of our priceless possessions; at the same time we must recognize that many passages are obscure, and either misrepresent the meaning of the original or else hide it completely from ordinary people in the pews. What we need is a moderate revision, which will strike a happy mean between complete modernization and surviving antiquarianism.

This is something that has been thought of many times heretofore. In fact a number of concrete proposals have been made. In 1939 Professor G. A. Cooke of Oxford published The Prayer Book Psalter Revised. Five years earlier appeared a beautiful little book entitled The Epistles and Gospels for the Sundays and Chief Holy Days of the Christian Year: A New Translation with Some Collects and Prayers. This was published by Basil Blackwell at Oxford in a pocket size volume for two shillings and sixpence. The author, that is the translator, was the Rev. Thomas Fletcher Royds, rector of Haughton in Staffordshire. He took the best modern edition of the Greek text of the New Testament (Nestle's) and with the help of various modern versions he produced a translation of the Epistles and Gospels which succeeds in keeping much of the old, making it more intelligible and more accurate and at the same time preserving its liturgical beauty. He did this in the interest of the parish school where these translations were used. The book ought to be considered by all Episcopalians who are interested in a better translation of our Epistles and Gospels.

The need for revision is clear. Take for example the Epistle for St. Mark's day: "He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists"—etc. Even when this passage is well read by the clergyman there are a good many people who completely misunderstand it. Or take the Epistle for the Sunday after Ascension: "Be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." No one would think of translating the passage that way nowadays. Or take the Gospel for Rogation Sunday: "These things have I spoken unto you in proverbs"—proverbs is hardly the word for it. Or take Quinquagesima: "Whether there be prophecies." No one would write that way these days. Or take the Gospel for Septuagesima, where the laborers are paid "a penny a day." Or take the end of the Gospel for Epiphany IV: "There shall be weeping"—it means, of course, "where there shall be weeping." Or take Epiphany III, in the story of Cana: "When they wanted wine"—it should be "lacked" or something like that. The clergy probably understand these nuances of Elizabethan and Jacobean English but the ordinary person does not get them. Or take the same Gospel—how many even of the clergy can tell us how much "two or three firkins" amount to? In fact there are dozens of places in the Epistles and Gospels where a very slight change would bring out the meaning more accurately, without any modernizing at all, and without giving up the blessed archaisms that still are understood, such as "thee," "thou," and "thy." Of course they did not speak such an archaic language in the first century, nor was this language archaic when the Authorized Version appeared. The Authorized Version, in other words, was in the language of every day; at least, ordinary people could understand it. It has become archaic in the course of three hundred years. Mr. Royds in his translation uses modern English. Take for example the Epistle for Trinity I, in Royds' translation: "We love because he first loved us. If a man says, I love God, and hates his brother, he is a liar: for he who does not love his brother whom he has seen, cannot love God whom he has not seen. And we have this commandment from him, that he who loves God must love his brother also."

IF WE do anything about the translation we ought also to do something about the choice of passages. Never a year goes by that we do not hear complaints, from clergy and laity alike, about the Epistle for Lent IV, Abraham and his two sons, and Agar which is Mount Sinai in Arabia—etc. It just doesn't mean anything to most worshippers. Perhaps we could use it at a week-day service, and thus reserve it for those who claim to understand it, but in its present place have something more suitable for Sunday when a larger congregation of non-experts is present.

We ought also to pay attention to the beginnings and endings of the Epistles and Gospels. Some of them go on too far, some ought to go farther. The same is true of the beginnings of the passages—sometimes they ought to begin a verse or two earlier. Take for example the Gospel for Trinity XXI—the parable really ends, "And the wedding was furnished with guests." The continuation, in which another parable or fragment of a parable is added on, destroys the whole effect and creates an impossible situation—the man who lacks a wedding-garment is condemned even though he had been haled in from the highway. Another instance is the Epistle for Easter II which ought to begin a little before verse 19. The thought certainly begins with verse 18, "Servants be subject . . ." In fact it probably begins in verse 13. There are a number of passages where this kind of situation exists and ought to be carefully studied.

On the whole our selection of Epistles and Gospels, being the traditional one in the Western Church, is quite good; however, that does not mean that it cannot be improved. I venture to add here a list of passages which we do not hear read in the Gospels at Holy Communion. Some of them ought to be included, at least in part, and some might well be substituted for one or two selections we now use. The list is limited to the Gospels. It would be easy to add a list of passages in the Book of Acts, in the Epistles and the Apocalypse, which might well be included in our Prayer Book.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

AS THIS is being written the "ghoulies and ghosties" of Halloween are stalking the streets of Boston so this column might fittingly be called On a Note of Terror. Two evenings ago we saw The Body Snatcher, directed by Val Lewton and starring such worthies as Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, Henry Daniell and innumerable cadavers. On this Halloween, the memory of that picture is deliciously pleasant.

The horror pictures have always intrigued me from that time when John Barrymore in the role of Svengali rolled his eyes back so that the pupils disappeared and nothing but fuzzy, milky whiteness remained. Those eyes haunted me for many nights in my youth. And likewise they transformed me into an ardent follower of the horror movie. Most of them, like Frankenstein, Dracula, The Wolf Man, etc., were really tame stuff because, even to the adolescent mind, they were unreal, illogical and poorly directed. We all knew that those images on the screen couldn't and wouldn't hurt a soul.

But, now, we are confronted with Val Lewton's new technique in horror and his consummate skill as a director. His technique is to take some logical story dealing with normal people (even as you and I), mix in some good psychology and add a generous dash of excellent camera work and mood music and, lo and behold, the result is a genuine case of screamy-weamies for the spectator. Such a technique has stood Lewton in good stead in such productions as The Cat People, The Curse of the Cat People and The Leopard Man. Don't let those titles fool you . . . they are really logical pictures dealing with "real" people.

The Body Snatcher, which is Robert Louis Stevenson's old story, opens in sunny Edinboro, complete with street singers, shepherds and kilted guards of the Queen's Regiment. A placid beginning. But then the picture takes off and ends with a mad buggy ride through the moors in the midst of a terrible thunder-storm. And in the buggy is a really good doctor driven slightly mad and a cold and white body which he imagines to be that of Boris Karloff just dug up from the soil. In between the beginning and the end, we have street-singers throttled at the exact instant they hit high C; we have Karloff delivering newly stolen bodies at regular intervals and, above all, we have Karloff fighting Lugosi in that biting-kicking-gouging manner that I haven't really seen since I used to cover wrestling matches out in Springfield, Ohio.

Don't ask me if it's good for people to see such pictures. I only know that I enjoy them tremendously and the way that Val Lewton does them is tops. Maybe it's psychologically bad for people to see them—but, believe me, your kids are going to sneak down and see them whether you like it or not. It may give them a few nightmares but I, personally, don't think any permanent damage will ensue.

And then, too, there are many kinds of horror pictures. One of my advance agents states that the Episcopal Church isn't any slouch at producing horror pictures either. And you can just guess what missionary picture about China he had seen.

Rev. Bert Williams of El Paso Receives a Tribute

Business Man Who Is Also a Devoted Priest Has Education Center Named in His Honor

Edited by Sara Dill

El Paso, Texas:—A donation for a parish house isn't particularly news. But there is news in a check for $10,000 that was handed the other day to the Rev. B. M. G. Williams, associate rector of St. Clement's here.

First of all the check represented the donations of over 100 non-Episcopalians. Some weeks ago Mr. E. H. Schwartz, one of the leading Jewish citizens of El Paso, sent a letter to a number of non-Episcopalians stating that a fund was being raised in honor of Mr. Williams on the 75th anniversary of the founding of St. Clement's and that contributions would be welcome. The result was $10,000 contributed by 106 people, none of whom are members of the Episcopal Church. When the check was handed to Mr. Williams at a little affair he said: "It is difficult to put into words all one feels upon such an occasion as this. The tribute paid me by my fellow citizens, irrespective of race or creed, will live with me as long as life lasts."

Bishop James M. Stoney's comment was equally enthusiastic as was also that of the rector of the parish, the Rev. William G. Wright.

The money is to aid in building a new educational building at a cost of about $150,000, ground for which was broken last week. It is to be named Williams Hall in honor of the Rev. B. M. G. Williams, which brings us to the chief part of this story. For Mr. Williams is no ordinary parson. He is the owner of a large baking company. It is an extremely successful business which Mr. Williams ("Bert" to nearly everyone) still manages. He was ordained a "perpetual deacon" some years ago and has served not only St. Clement's but outlying missions ever since. Later he was made priest under the new canon which make it possible. He has served from the beginning without any remuneration whatever. He probably is the only business man-priest in the entire Church, at least the only one who has given nearly a lifetime to serving his Church while continuing to run a business. At the same time he is almost always the chairman of everything worthwhile and progressive in the city.

To have $10,000 contributed by such a large group of non-Episcopalians—Jews, Roman Catholics included—under the chairmanship of a committee headed by a Jew, was itself a great tribute. But perhaps even more significant was $9 that came to the fund all in pennies. It was from the orphans of the Southwestern Children's home and represented a tithe on their earnings at odd jobs. They said they wanted to do something for Mr. Williams who is the chairman of the board of directors of the home and was the head of a committee that not long ago raised $80,000 to construct a new building.

As far as the Church is concerned it is perhaps best summed up by the rector of the parish, the Rev. William G. Wright: "Mr. Williams has served as lay reader, deacon and priest and has held the titles of curate, assistant minister and associate rector. He has served seven rectors and three bishops. There are very, very few in his category with his record and none who have served as long."

Leave for China

New York:—Bishop Craighill of Anking and Bishop Roberts of Shanghai are now on their way back to their mission fields. Also returning is the Rev. Claude L. Pickens, for fifteen years a missionary in China. They sailed from Baltimore on November 4th. Their families are remaining in the states for the present.

Sixth Province

Des Moines, Iowa:—Bishops of the province of the northwest met at St. Paul's here October 17-18 and petitioned the National Council for a field secretary. A resolution was also passed urging General Convention to provide a canon which will make unlawful any premarital declaration or pledge in the matter of the religious upbringing of children in a Church other than our own. The motion was adopted unanimously and later unanimously endorsed by the executive council of the province. It means, of course, that an Episcopalian marrying a Roman Catholic should not agree before marriage to bring up any children as Romen Catholics.

To Explain Laws

Albany:—The synod of the 2nd province meeting here voted to issue a pamphlet which would explain the anti-discrimination laws of New York and of New Jersey. It is an attempt to promote better race relations by explaining how parishes can cooperate in the enforcement of the law.

Dean of Canterbury

New York:—The Dean of Canterbury, Hewlett Johnson, who has recently returned to England from a visit to the Soviet Union, is to fly to the United States to be the headliner at a meeting at Madison Square Garden on November 14th. Others to speak are Dean Acheson, under-secretary of state, the son of the late Bishop Acheson of Connecticut; Nikolai N. Novikov of the Soviet embassy and Paul Robeson. Joseph E. Davies, former ambassador to the Soviet Union, will preside. It is a USA-USSR goodwill meeting.

Bible in Schools

Albany, Calif.:—A course in the Bible as literature is being taught as part of the adult education program of the Albany public schools by the Rev. Randolph C. Miller, vicar of St. Alban's and a professor at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. With a special certification as a secondary school teacher, Miller will give a series of eight lectures on the Old Testament, including discussion of translations, authorship, the Bible and modern literature, the King James version, great heroes, and the relevance of the prophets.

Jobs for Chaplains

Hartford:—Looking forward to the day when clergy from the diocese of Connecticut, who were serving as chaplains, would be returning to civilian life, the Diocesan Convention voted to create a post-war reserve with particular reference to assistance to and placement of its clergy who had been in the service of the United States and our Allies.

This plan is enabling the diocese to care for each of its returned clergymen by making them diocesan missionaries from the day of their discharge until they are placed in their new positions, at a stipend equal to that which they were receiving in the field in which they were serving at the time they became chaplains.

School of Prayer

Berkeley, Calif.:—The Church Divinity School of the Pacific is sponsoring a school of prayer for the laity on six successive Sunday afternoons, under the leadership of Prof. Charles F. Whiston. Other courses by various faculty members will be offered in the future.

Full Employment

Cincinnati (RNS):—A program of education and full employment, as the only means for combatting elements subversive to the American democratic ideal, was advocated by Congressman Emanuel Celler of New York at the Judaism and democracy conference in Hebrew Union college here.

As utopian as it might appear, Congressman Celler asserted, complete reeducation of youth with respect to racial and religious problems was the only key to the solution of such problems. Supplementary action, he added, called for "complete revision of textbooks used in our educational system," through which all vestiges of racial and religious aspersions, international or otherwise, might be removed.

In such a crusade, he foresaw clergy of all creeds lending assistance. But Congressman Celler saw economic factors involved in the spread of subversive propaganda, deemed the economic approach as important as the educational. There would be less likelihood of the spread of poison if every man and woman, ready, able and willing to work, had suitable jobs, he commented, adding: "where there is mass-enforced idleness, racial antagonisms flare. Fullest employment, in my opinion, is a major remedy."

Judge Charles C. Simons of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Detroit, called for the strengthening of democracy as the only adequate safeguard for minority groups. He said: "Whatever threatens any group in the body politic, both reason and experience demand that we resist such threat with all the forces with which we are capable, no matter how our sympathies or prejudices may temporarily be enlisted."

Martin Niemoeller

Berlin (wireless to RNS):—Martin Niemoeller last week visited his old parish for the first time since his arrest by the Nazis in 1937, motoring from Stuttgart with his wife. Technically he is still the pastor but he will not continue this ministry since his position as director of relations with churches abroad for the Evangelical Church of Germany will require residence in the neighborhood of Frankfurt. His election as a bishop of the Evangelical Church is expected shortly. It is stated that both he and Mrs. Niemoeller, in spite of nervous exhaustion, work long hours daily in what they call "the continuing struggle to reconstruct Europe on Christian foundations."

Visit Japan

New York:—Four Protestant leaders are now in Japan, having gone by plane to confer with Japanese Christians "as a first step toward reestablishing unity among Christians of the east and west and toward healing the divisions caused by the war." Heading the delegation is the Rev. Douglas Horton, Congregationalist and chairman of the American committee of the World Council of Churches; Bishop James C. Baker of Los Angeles, chairman of the International Missionary Council; the Rev. Walter W. Van Kirk of the Federal Council of Churches; the Rev. Luman J. Shafer, chairman of the Japan committee of the Foreign Missions Conference. They expect to remain in Japan three weeks.

Social Security

Montreal (RNS):—A system of social security "to meet economic needs arising from such contingencies as unemployment, accident, illness, old age or the death of the breadwinner," was urged here by the Montreal Council on Christian Social Order.

The Council also recommended "recognition in our laws and practices of the rights of association and collective negotiation and of the full partnership of labor with capital in industrial management, economic planning and governmental regulations; and wages that will ensure a decent standard of living for the family."

Composed of representatives of the Roman Catholic Church, the Salvation Army, and six Protestant churches, the Council sent its statement on human relations in industry and commerce to members of the Canadian Parliament, labor leaders, school and college principals, and other prominent public figures.

In making its recommendations, the Council warned that "external adjustments can never by themselves produce harmony and goodwill in industrial relations."

"Religious faith is needed as well as social programs," it said. "The heart of all our problems is the heart of man; for systems must be worked by men, and evil men can corrupt the best-devised systems."

Asserting that the present economic and industrial order "is built largely upon false notions of self-interest and competition, which have resulted in confusion and division," the Council added:

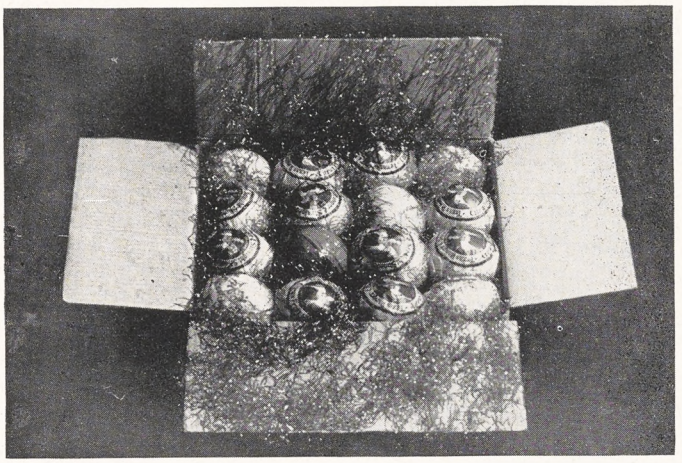
"From the social and economic chaos into which the application of these notions and methods have brought him, man in recent years has been frantically trying to extricate himself by a state collectivism which may, perhaps, ensure a measure of economic security and material well-being but inevitably at the cost of essential human freedom under a totalitarian state."

Stanley Jones Leads

New York:—A conference on evangelism for ministers of all denominations is to be held in New York on November 12 led by the Rev. E. Stanley Jones. Bishop Gilbert of New York and a WITNESS editor, is one of the sponsors for the conference which is under the auspices of the Protestant Council of New York. The missionary is also to lead a series of evangelistic meetings in Brooklyn, November 11-16, addressing meetings of students, women's organizations, service clubs and other groups.

Confer on Race Relations

Providence:—An all youth race relations conference sponsored by the diocesan youth council was held Oct. 21 at Grace Church.



The speakers and discussion leaders included the Rev. Henry Mattocks, a missionary recently returned from the Philippines who held missions in Mindanao, Island of Zamboanga and Islands of the Sulu Sea, was formerly chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, and was captured and imprisoned in Manila; June Suzuki, student at Pembroke College who will speak on "Problems facing Japanese youth"; Laura B. Morris, relations secretary of Providence Urban League who spoke on "Problems facing Negro youth"; and the Rev. Leonard H. Flisher, rector of St. Paul's Church in Wickford and youth advisor for the Narragansett district, who spoke on "The year's program for young people."

Repudiate Military Aide

Washington: — Brigadier General Harry Vaughan, military aide to President Truman, was officially repudiated on October 18th by the general commission on army and navy chaplains. The general was reported by a number of magazines and newspapers to have stated:

"I don't know why a minister can't be a regular guy, but unfortunately some of them are not. You have to give the Roman Church credit. When the War Department requests a bishop to supply 20 priests for chaplains, he looks over his diocese and picks out the 20 best men. But it is different in the Protestant Church. Frequently a Protestant (minister) does not have a church at the moment, or is willing to go on a vacation for about three years."

The resolution passed by the commission, which represents thirty major Protestant denominations states that it "considers these remarks highly offensive and prejudicial to the service of Protestant chaplains, since Protestants are asked to provide 68% of all the chaplains."

The statement continues by pointing out that "The requirements set down by both the war and navy departments demand that only ministers with actual experience in pastoral work are eligible, except in the case of seminarians who are accepted direct from the theological seminaries by the navy, and who undergo special training after receiving a commission. All applicants for the chaplaincy are selected by special denominational committees after personal interviews and with their records of previous work at hand. The screening committees took into account the motives of the ministers making application, which was the determining factor as to whether or not he was granted ecclesiastical endorsement.

"General Vaughan has done a great disservice to thousands of his fellow officers. Chaplains who have made great sacrifices and won imperishable honor are deeply insulted. The brave deeds of the scores of chaplains who have given their lives, suffered wounds and imprisonment, refute the slur gratuitously cast by this officer whose special assignment gives his words an added sting.

"General Vaughan's remarks are calculated to cause ill feeling between religions who have worked together and who have all given faithful and conspicuous service. He has also exhibited a spirit which it has been the task of all high-minded officers and men in our armed forces to discountenance.

"A wave of protest has come to the commission not only from individuals and churches in America, but also from Protestant chaplains serving with troops in all parts of the world. These protests and discussion in the meeting move the commission to take action.

"Protests to the President by our officers against the utterances of General Vaughan have not elicited any public retraction or expression of regret.

"We therefore respectfully call for an official repudiation of this stigma by the President's military aide cast upon Protestant ministers serving in the armed forces as chaplains."

The chairman of the meeting that passed the resolution was Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts who is the chairman of the commission and was attended by distinguished leaders of the Churches, including Bishop Edwin F. Lee of the Methodist Church; William E. Lampe, moderator of the Evangelical and Reformed Church; William B. Pugh, stated clerk of the Presbyterian Church; Bishop Angus Dun of Washington and Roswell Barnes, associate general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches.

Urges Cooperation

Zagreb, Yugoslavia (wireless to RNS):—Roman Catholics and communists can and must work together, declares Monsignor Svetozer Ritig of St. Mark's Church and head of the Croatian state committee on Church affairs. "Communist economic science in itself is not contrary to Christianity," he declared in an interview. "As you know, in this land we have many Christian cooperatives in the form of monasteries which were established on the principle of collective land ownership. Thus on philosophical grounds we are apart, but on economic and social views we are not divided. As Christian Socialists, we separate philosophy from economics and social studies."

Monsignor Ritig voiced the belief that with good will from both sides —from the Yugoslav Government and the Catholic Church and Orthodox Church hierarchies "it is possible to find full agreement for mutual work for the good of the people."

He said proposed measures for separation of Church and State would be settled by the constituent assembly, and that he was willing to accept its decision.

Asked by Religious News Service whether he spoke solely as an individual or whether he had any support among higher ranking clergy, Monsignor Ritig replied that he had received recognition from many bishops "who see I am working for reconciliation of both sides and to overcome difficulties."

Nevertheless," he said, "I cannot carry all this on my own shoulders alone. We must foresee sanctioning of these positions by the hierarchy and the Papal See. The Papal Legate, Monsignor Joseph Marcone, spoke to me on my return from the Partisans and said he understands my work and approves of it as far as he is concerned."

Nationalize Property

Belgrade (wireless to RNS):—Legislation to nationalize and redistribute church as well as other landed property will be introduced soon by the new Yugoslav government, it was disclosed here by Mosha Piade, vice-chairman of the National Liberation Front meeting.

Under a law to be considered by delegates, holdings of churches and monasteries will be limited to a maximum of five hectares, with the exception of historic institutions, which will be permitted to have 20 hectares.

If the assembly passes this law, it will mean the introduction of land reforms much more radical and far-reaching than any adopted in Eastern European countries.

Concern among Roman Catholic church leaders over the proposed measure was revealed in a letter sent to the Belgrade assembly by Monsignor Louis Stepinac, Archbishop of Zagreb, who asserted that church lands "are in the hands of God and must not be touched."

Metropolitan Joseph of Skolpje, deputy Patriarch of the Serbian Orthodox Church, declared the Serbian church is opposed to the measure, but added that if it is enacted, means must be provided to assure income for the church and compensation for loss of its holdings.

According to Piade, no compensation provisions have been included in the land bill. He said peasants are already seizing land wherever they can and that "they will not be completely satisfied even with land reform."

Proletarian Church

Paris (RNS):—A new type of "proletarian" missionary who will "live with the proletarians, speak their language, and understand their souls," has been proposed to the French Protestant churches. The proposal is part of a detailed "program for post-war evangelization" drawn up by Pierre Couprie, a member of the Ecumenical Council of France. Couprie urged that the church train teams of specialized missionaries who will "endeavor to gain for Christ the leading personalities of proletarian circles" and use these as the nucleus of a new type of "proletarian" congregation.

Two important facts with which the church will have to reckon, Couprie asserts, are "the vigorous paganism which governs the lives of masses and elite of this country, and the mass problem, which has been made far worse by the war."

"If the church wants its message to be convincing, it must consent to be 'de-bourgeois-ed'," he adds. "Because the church, far from championing the cause of the poor, compromised with the propertied classes and chained itself to the existing social order, she must break the chain that rests upon her and repent. Only a church that accepts the revolutionary Word of God in the field of Society will be able to talk to the de-Christianized masses."

Stressing that the church must "really speak the language of the people," Couprie says it is "urgent that it take especially seriously the creation of a religious literature and press that will be modern in its makeup and give out a realistic message."

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THOMAS E. DEWEY
Governor of New York

I am happy indeed to send my warm greetings to my fellow members of the New York City Mission Society through THE WITNESS, the news magazine of our Church. As a member of the board of managers I have come to know the heart-warming and essential work carried on in so many directions. The Society is devoted to giving help to those who need it most and in the most precious American tradition: through religiously sponsored institutions.

The helping hand of the City Mission Society is extended to all whom it has the capacity to help, regardless of race, color or creed. The service is rendered with the warm human and friendly touch which is characteristic of the voluntary assistance of neighbor to neighbor. It is deeply important to the human needs of our people and the maintenance of our form of society that the work of the City Mission Society go forward with the broadest possible support and I earnestly trust that the fund-raising campaign now in process will be liberally over-subscribed.

NORMAN S. HOWELL
Chaplain, U. S. Army

May I seek from your readers their comments and suggestions to the following proposal: That we need in the Episcopal Church a general missionary college. For many years since my own missionary days I have felt such a school to be necessary, and this belief has been so strengthened while serving as an army transport chaplain that I hope upon discharge to establish such an institution.

A missionary college, such as I believe necessary, should have three main purposes: (1) To impart the necessary specialized training to missionaries; (2) To forward research into missionary methodology; and (3) To recruit missionaries.

The missionary college should be under the general supervision of missionaries themselves; and administered under them by an executive board and teaching staff. It should, ultimately at least, have some degree of official standing so as to be guided by the whole mind of the Church.

The course of training should be for at least one year; and should include the training, not only of the clergyman, but of the medical doctor, nurse, teacher and other types of missionaries. It should embrace all phases of the missionary life. (This training program has already been fairly well worked out but I would welcome further suggestions.)

A large institution need not be established; for by locating the missionary college near an adequately equipped university and securing affiliation with it, we need maintain only a small teaching staff and could thus keep the budget at an absolute minimum. And the missionary college might well be associated with one of our seminaries or colleges.

The location of this missionary college is a difficult problem. We have in the Episcopal Church at present four main areas of missionary work: the domestic field in the western half of our country; the eastern foreign field, including Alaska and Hawaii, largely in the Orient: the southern foreign field in Central and South America and the West Indies; and the great missionary areas contained within the dioceses. The missionary college should be located where missionaries, going to any one of these fields, could be adequately and conveniently trained. I should appreciate the opinions of your readers to this proposal.

WINSLOW AMES
Layman of Cochocton, Ohio

The number devoted to the church of the future (WITNESS Oct. 25) contained several philosophically sound articles. I wish very much that you could have found illustrations that really illustrated them. It is true that we have had appallingly few truly modern churches built. Few though they are it would have been possible to find pictures of them. Your actual cuts include one honest 18th century interior; one honest 19th century exterior; one honest 20th century painting and a reasonably honest cover picture. Everything else, and that includes all the advertisements, is derivative and retardataire. I hope you try again. More power to you.

In Bill Spofford's Talking it Over October 18th he speaks of the method of intinction which he has used for a number of year—suggested to him by Harry Darlington . . . and which he has found "so sensible." It may be of interest to him, and to many of your readers, to know that precisely the same form has been used for at least twenty years in Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, Arizona, and in other places in the District, and has been found not only "sensible" but simple, reverent and eminently satisfactory.

Set Forth Program in Church's Crusade for Christ

The Methodist Church Issues a Progressive Program for Action and Urges Mobilization

By Sara Dill

Chicago: — The commission on world peace of the Methodist Church has issued a program for action which is perhaps the most progressive to come from a Church official organization in years. With the program the commission has sent a pamphlet called Register Christian Opinion which lists the names of all Senators and Congressmen and charges Methodists to express their opinions on leading issues by writing them. The program for action is set forth as follows:

1. A genuine internationalization of the development of atomic energy with an outlawed atomic bomb under the control of the United Nations, and ultimately of all nations. An officially constituted body of scientists might well be part of the administration. The United Nations should make the manufacture of the atomic bomb illegal anywhere in the world and make this provision effective both as to members of the United Nations and of non-member nations. This would necessitate an international inspection under scientists organized and authorized by the United Nations.

2. The support of liberty and democracy in the United States, not only in preserving political freedom but in advancing democracy in economic, social and minority group affairs:

(a) Vigorous maintenance of the provisions of the Bill of Rights;

(b) Opposition to the passage of peace-time universal compulsory military training legislation;

(c) Abolition of the poll tax and other discriminatory restrictions upon citizenship;

(d) Support permanent fair employment practices committee;

(e) Support provisions for full employment;

(f) Support adequate minimum standards of income;

(g) Support prevention of inflationary measures.

3. Relief for Europe, specifically support for America's share of the cost of UNRRA. Write to your representatives in the House and Senate immediately supporting an additional UNRRA appropriation of $550,000,000. We are convinced that lacking funds thousands are destined to starve in Europe this winter. Action now is imperative. Conditions in Europe point to intense suffering for lack of food, clothing, heat and essential medical supplies.

4. Insistence upon the maintenance of mutual good will and understanding with Russia as one essential basis of peace. This does not require "appeasement" but should require the elimination of prejudice, bitterness, and conclusions not based upon facts.

5. Support for essential tariff concessions which, with the elimination of empire differentials, and an eye to the meeting of widespread human need will make for increasing production and a free flow of international trade.

6. Support for the St. Lawrence waterway project, in the interest of good faith with Canada on the part of a "good neighbor," for the purpose of providing a great outlet to the seas for the potential production of the middle west sections of the United States and Canada and for the benefit of international trade.

7. Support of necessary funds for peace: for the United States' share of responsibility in the United Nations Organization and the demands which will grow out of recommendations of the United Nations after the organization begins to function.

8. The Church can, and under God must, make a unique contribution by winning the acceptance of men and of nations to the moral laws of the universe which constitute the foundation for international peace, security and progress. Around these moral laws and spiritual values derived from the nature of God and respect for personality, man's social, economic and political ways on the international level must be organized.

Washington:—This lad, a crewman on an aircraft carrier fighting in the equatorial Pacific, catches a few winks of sleep as he hugs his pillow, drenched in perspiration. The picture was taken by one of the foremost photographers in the United States and is one of a series of ten combat pictures to appear on our cover.

BISHOP DONALD ALDRICH TO RESIGN

Detroit:—Bishop Donald B. Aldrich, coadjutor of Michigan, will resign at the next meeting of the House of Bishops. He does so upon the advice of three doctors who have discovered a heart strain. They state that it would be impossible for him to do full justice to the responsibilities of his office without further impairment of his health. Bishop Aldrich therefore feels in fairness to the diocese that he must concur with their judgment. The doctors have ordered a protracted period of rest before he assumes a ministry less exacting in its demands.

Bishop Creighton made the announcement to the clergy in a letter on November 5th which he requested be read at all services on November 11.

EPISCOPAL PACIFIST FELLOWSHIP

Providence: — The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship held its annual conference here last week to set up its post war position and to enlarge its program to meet the problems of a lasting peace. A resolution, offered by Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, was passed opposing any type of universal military training; another, offered by the Rev. Roger Bennett, was also passed which stated that the United Nations organization "reveals a reliance upon power politics and national spheres of influence" and therefore urges that "all possible steps be taken to revise it along democratic lines looking to the eventual organization of a world government." Miss Adelaide Case, professor at Episcopal Theological School, proposed a resolution which carried, which, after pointing to the starvation that is widespread throughout the world, calls upon churches to make use of established channels to dispatch food and other necessities to needy areas and also urges Congress to appropriate at once a half billion dollars to UNRRA. The resolution also declared that rationing should continue in the United States as long as the needs abroad exist.

Bishop Lawrence is the honorary chairman of the organization; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce the chairman; the Rev. Elmore McKee and Professor Case the vice-chairmen. About fifty attended the conference.

CONFERENCE ON THE MINISTRY

Chantry Flats, Calif.:—Over fifty people, including three veterans of world war two, attended a conference on the ministry and professional lay work, held here October 26-27 by the diocese of Los Angeles. Various leaders of the diocese, both clergy and professional women workers, presented various aspects of the subject.

CONGRESSMAN CALLS FOR UNITY

Washington:—Congressman Brooks Hays of Arkansas, speaking at a mass meeting sponsored by the churches of Arlington, Va., declared that the days of world reconstruction find a "tremendous need" for unity within the Church, which he described as "the only institution that is everywhere."

CHAPLAINS FOR INDUSTRY ORGANIZE

Newark, N. J.:—A new non-profit organization, Chaplain Counselors for Industry, Inc., has been announced here by A. Herman Armerding, an industrialist. He stated last week that surveys undertaken during the past year indicated that "a new approach, industry-centered on the one hand and Christ-centered on the other, with a realistic first century evangelism will be necessary to gain wide entrance to industrial plants and meet the challenge squarely."

Ernest L. Chase of this city, a research engineer, has been named director of the organization and will devote all of his time to selecting, training, placing and servicing chaplain candidates for industry who will be known as "Chaplain Councelors." All of the services of the organization are free, Mr. Chase said, as expenses are being met by gifts from Christians interested in industrial evangelism. It is the plan of THE WITNESS to find out something further about this organization and its possible tie-ups with other groups.

Bishop Donald B. Aldrich, coadjutor of Michigan, who is to resign his office due to a heart strain. He was consecrated on May 4 of this year

ANOTHER WARNING TO THE CLERGY

Kansas City, Mo.:—The following letter has been received from the Rev. Richard M. Trelease, rector of St. Paul's of this city. "A week ago a man by the name of James Joseph Johnston made an appointment with me, saying that he was a paroled convict from San Quentin. He is about 5 feet 9 inches tall, has long wavy gray hair, florid complexion, neatly dressed, and walks with a limp due, he says, to being shot in the leg in prison, I believe. He claimed to have been sent up for bank robbery in Los Angeles some five years ago. Says he has a wife and daughter, Dolores, and that he was introduced to me by Dean Bloy of Los Angeles. He wanted money to pay rent on an apartment not far from our church, and said that his parole papers had to be signed by a clergyman every Sunday, testifying that he had attended church. He claimed that he had reported to the police and had to report every day for a week. Also claimed to be getting a job at the Jones Store Co. of this city.

"I checked with Dean Sprouse and the Rev. Charles Tyner, and found that he had visited them with the same story some time previously.

"I gave him some help for that day and instructed him to bring his wife and daughter in to see me the next day. We have seen nothing of him since, and I am under the impression that he is working the clergy wherever he goes. I think the clergy should be warned."

The Director of Chaplains Visits the Pacific

Two Months' Trip Enough to Convince Him That Humanity Is on the March Everywhere

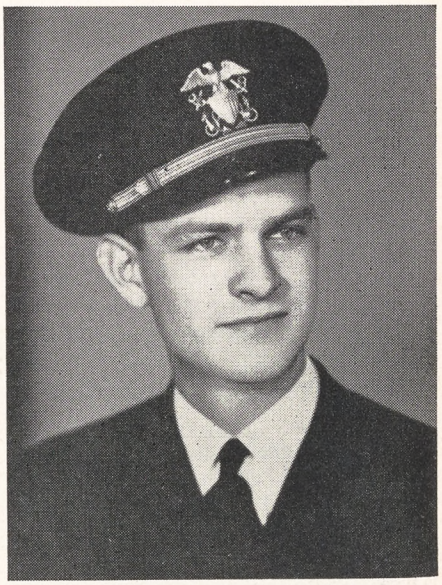
By Bishop Edwin F. Lee
Director General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains

Washington: — The following observations stand out in rather sharp focus in my memory of the 30,000 mile journey by plane recently completed in the southwest Pacific area. This included the Philippines, the Admiralty Islands, New Guinea, and Australia. When one thinks of comfortable air travel between New York and Washington or Chicago, he should not conclude that this is the kind of travel available for the average man in our armed forces. Airplanes, frequently almost filled with bags of mail and freight, were provided with rough seats along the sides. Flying from Honolulu to a small island some 3000 miles to the west, I was the only passenger and found myself much interested in the cargo which was labeled, "explosives."

The army and navy departments were most cooperative in making it possible for me to visit several hundred chaplains, and also to observe the effects of the war upon that part of the world. For it was through this general territory that the American forces advanced to final victory over the Japanese army and navy. On returning from the Far East in April, 1942, I ventured the assertion that the delaying action fought by American forces in the Philippines, which kept the Japanese from conquest of Australia and New Zealand, will go down as one of the most decisive battles of history.

After touching in Honolulu, Johnston Island, and Kwajelinn, I spent two days in Guam. There one observes the evidence of the full fury of the war of the Pacific. I asked a chaplain to show me the place where the Marines first landed. It was on the beach along which now runs a well constructed military road. Near the shore line I found a well kept cemetery where some 600 Marines lie buried. This is one of the first records of the price paid in our Pacific war.

My next point of arrival was the naval base at Samar which is in close proximity to Leyte where the army made its first real landing in the Philippines. One unacquainted with the magnitude of war, finds himself literally amazed at the mass of supplies necessary for such wide-scale combat.



On a late Saturday afternoon the seventh fleet navy chaplain, who was my host and guide, was determined that we should reach a Seabee organization thirty miles distant so as to be on hand in the early morning for the dedication of a lovely little seaside chapel. Our only satisfactory method of travel was by hydroplane. We finally reached a perfect harbor. As we looked at the boats in that harbor, large and small, I asked an officer if there were probably 300 or 400 boats at anchor. His reply was, "There are over 900 boats." Our pilot skillfully found a small water surface on which we could land. We then climbed out on the end of one of the wings of this hydroplane and jumped from there down to a barge that would take us to the shore.

My recent experience in the Southwest Pacific reveals to me that our divinity schools may advisedly reduce some emphasis upon philosophy and emphasize gymnastics. Also that at each conference session there be added to the question about the acceptability of each preacher the question, "How much does he weigh?" For in this complex world where every type of experience must be faced, there is no place for the fat man.

On that same Saturday evening in a natural amphitheater there was a movie available for all who wished to attend. It was a good picture with plenty of music and provided an evening's wholesome entertainment for men who were out of touch with the life of any city. I was also impressed as I saw 200 native civilian Filipinos come over the hills from their villages nearby. They enjoyed the picture and especially the music. I found myself impressed by their sense of utter safety as they joined these American troops, in contrast to their experiences of a few short weeks before, under the brutal control of the Japanese troops.

On Sunday morning I shared in the dedication of a lovely chapel, which seated nearly 300 men. Above the small altar was an appropriate painting by one of the enlisted men. The picture depicted Seabees engaged in their landing on the beach; a surveyor charting roads; supplies being unloaded; and buildings in process of erection. In the background was the figure of the Christ as the spiritual motivation of these courageous men.

Manus, in the Admiralty Islands, is a large natural harbor and is probably one of the bases that will be continued under American control in the South Pacific. It lies directly east of New Guinea. A speci-

Chaplain Frank W. Robert was in charge of churches at Natchitoches and Winnfield, Louisiana, before joining the navy man Sunday, as an official visitor to chaplains, began at eight o'clock on Sunday morning with a communion service. At 10:30 I preached in the finest chapel to be found anywhere in the Far Pacific. Benches were brought in to accommodate nearly 200 British navy men who came from the fleet that was anchored nearby. A well trained colored choir not only furnished good music, but added to the international and interracial character of the congregation. It should be remembered that the men attending these services come voluntarily. At 11:30 we participated in church service regularly broadcast over the wide expanses of the South Pacific area. I know something of the importance of a broadcast originating in these remote centers. Since Sunday in New York is Monday, west of the mid-Pacific international date line, it is inconvenient for many people to avail themselves of the best broadcasts from our metropolitan centers. I hope the time may not be far distant when our missions can broadcast to the inhabitants of these thousands of islands entertaining and constructive programs for all who battle against loneliness or the lack of inspirational contacts.

At 2:00 p.m. I was on board a fast launch which carried our party several miles to a British warship. At 4 o'clock I shared in a vesper service conducted by a chaplain of the church of Scotland. At 7 o'clock we addressed 5,000 American navy men in the open amphitheater.

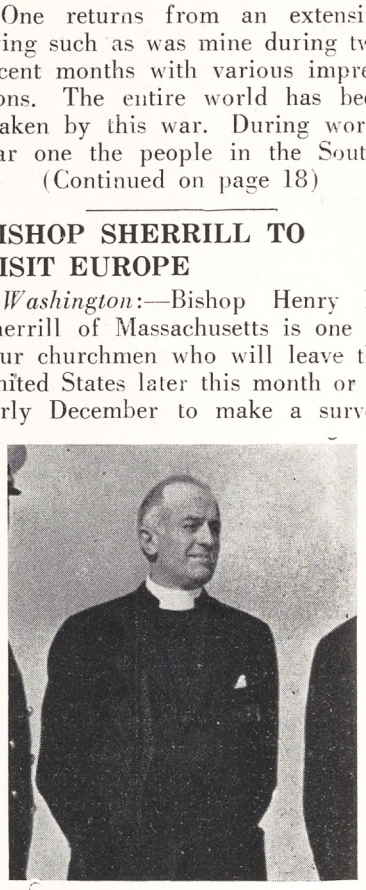
The humor of the average American soldier enables him to endure not only hardship but danger. In New Guinea I was told that when our forces were advancing against the Japanese, a certain ridge needed to be taken. It was hard going up to the crest of that ridge, and many men were wounded in this advance. One young soldier who happened to get through among the first, fastened a sign to a sapling on which were these words: "If you want to go any higher, you'd better see your chaplain."

I made careful inquiry both in the Philippines and in Australia about the influence left upon the local people by our servicemen and women there. Replies from such representative individuals as President Osmena of the Philippines Commonwealth; President Gonzales of the university of the Philippines; Mrs. Asuncion Perez, director of the relief and welfare program and a most representative member of our Filipino Protestant Church, as well as district superintendents, pastors, physicians, lawyers, and others, whom I have known across the years, revealed the fact that our armed forces have left a wholesome influence upon the Filipinos. This is the gist of their report: The American forces have commanded not only our sincere appreciation for what they have done to rescue us from Japanese domination, but they will also depart carrying with them our general respect. The same general report was received in Australia from some eighty clergymen and other representative citizens including such men as the Anglican Archbishop of Sydney. When one visualizes the dislocation of hundreds of thousands of Americans sent into the confusion not only of foreign countries, but of war conditions, it is gratifying to know that such reports are forthcoming.

There are two other things that I found of real interest as follows: The Australians were much impressed by the high average level of education of American servicemen. The Filipino people throughout the provinces were much impressed by the large number of Protestant chaplains. They have never before known of the large proportion of Americans associated with the Protestant churches.

In Hollandia, New Guinea, I was shown a lovely new church building that had been erected from local materials. It gave one an impression of peace to enter this house of prayer standing on the site that had shortly before been a battle ground, and in a location that is still one of the frontiers where civilization is just pushing forward into the jungle of paganism.

The chaplain and a young Dutch lieutenant in the reorganized colonial administration very proudly showed me a tablet that was placed at the front of this church. It was in English, Dutch, and Malay. The inscription stated that this church was presented by the men of the American armed forces as a gift to the Christian people of that community to replace their church which had necessarily been destroyed in the line of fire against Japanese troops. One is deeply moved to appreciate that our American forces restore Christian civilization.



The cessation of hostilities which came while I was in Manila brought a sense primarily of relief. There was no wild celebration. I heard less expression of bitterness against the Japanese among the armed forces than one hears among civilians in a typical American city. It took a number of days following the formal surrender to receive the capitulation of troops in hiding in the mountains. Chaplain Leon W. Hawley of Seattle. Washington and Chaplain William E. Cooley of Virginia, and I went into the northern part of the Island of Luzon, some 200 miles north of Manila. We crossed Balite Pass over which I have traveled on numerous occasions visiting the Cagayan Valley. I stopped to see a simple monument erected there which was placed in recognition of the thousand American soldiers who had given their lives to push through that difficult Pass against the entrenched Japanese forces. We proceeded to the village of Aritao where I was the guest of the American army. Fifteen miles away was General Yamashita's hideout.

One returns from an extensive swing such as was mine during two recent months with various impressions. The entire world has been shaken by this war. During world war one the people in the South-

A Failure of Nerve

OUR Roman brethren have been celebrating of late the centenary of the submission of John Henry Newman to the Pope, which took place one hundred years ago this fall. This conversion was hailed at the time, and is still hailed by Roman Catholics, as a great achievement, and a harbinger of the ultimate submission of Anglicans —and perhaps of all Protestants—to the Holy Father and the Church he heads. But we have not heard of any notice being taken of the equally important event that took place also one hundred years ago when Ernest Renan left St. Sulpice and became an usher in Monsieur Crouzet's school for boys—that is how he left the Roman Church. But these men, Newman and Renan, were romanticists; that is, both were under the spell of the German Romantic movement, whose first principle was "Feeling is everything: Gefuehl ist alles," whether in art, literature (especially poetry), or religion—or even philosophy. Renan was by far the more learned of the two, and has had a greater influence upon later thought, outside purely literary circles. Moreover, he had a more objective, fact-finding kind of mind that Newman; though he too wrote with a soft pen, and left a kind of glossy finish upon his pages: Feeling is everything! If one may hazard a guess, the loss of Renan was scarcely compensated by the acquisition of Newman, a hundred years ago. Perhaps that is why our Roman friends have not mentioned the exchange.

To keep on cheering for Newman is to ignore history. The leader fell, the ranks closed and moved on. The Catholic movement in the Anglican Communion has gone on from strength to strength, these hundred years. Newman would scarcely recognize it today. Instead of a little group of academic minds, centered mainly at Oxford, alarmed over the progress of liberalism in science, philosophy, biblical criticism and politics, the movement has become world-wide and aggressive. Its achievements are not merely theological or ceremonial, but embrace the social application of Christianity as well. It has had a heroic advance on more fronts than one. It has inspired, and been served by, men who loved it passionately and yielded their whole hearts in its promotion; it has had its fanatics, even its martyrs. There is no use discounting the Catholic movement and pretending it is a mere aping of Rome which should lead eventually (as Romanists assume and hope) to the submission of the whole Anglican Communion to the papal obedience. Instead, Catholicism within the Anglican Churches is fed like the sun, nourished upon its own internal fires, and is no pale reflection, like that of the moon, of the golden glory of another body. Newman's abandonment of the Church of England a century ago was merely an example of the failure of nerve that overtakes even leaders now and then; if he had waited ten years, or fifty (!), he would have seen how futile his step was to be.

Renan, on the other hand, has had no such positive fruits to show for the movement he represented. Modernism, which in some ways shared his point of view, was outlawed and crushed early in the twentieth century. Biblical research has been laced into a strait-jacket by the Roman authorities. Roman Catholic scientists have had to pursue their tentative way, saying in effect, "If we had not the divine revelation to guide us—as interpreted by the Church—we should suppose that species originated as Darwin thought, and so on." The political machinations of the Roman hierarchy are as active still as in the fifteenth century. Newman left behind him a movement that has gone on, conquering and still to conquer; Renan left behind him a Church that only closed and barred its gates even more firmly against the questionings of modern thought. The Vatican Council, the Syllabus of Errors, the overwhelming of the modernists, all this followed in due course. Anglicanism cannot match that record, nor does it aspire to do so!

"QUOTES"

GRANT us brotherhood not only for this day but for all our years—a brotherhood not of words but of acts and deeds. Grant us a common faith that man shall know bread and peace; that he shall know justice and righteousness, freedom and security, an equal opportunity and an equal chance to do his best, not only in our own lands but throughout the world. And in that faith let us march toward the clean world our hands can make.

parish, diocese, nation and world, is one test of our love for God. It sounds the depths of our conviction as to the importance of his Church in the work of world redemption and regeneration. It has been argued that there is no connection between religion and money; that God wants dedicated lives rather than money; that the canvass is a mercenary appeal unworthy of the Church's spiritual function.

This argument might be impressive were it not employed almost exclusively by people who manifest as little interest in the Church's spiritual and religious life as in supporting the budget. That is why the canvass is a test of the Church's love and conviction. We give to the things we believe in and we give in proportion to the values we attach to those things. The man who gives to the Church what it costs him to go to the movies believes as much in the Church as he does in the movies, but no more. The man who wears his old coat another year because he gives to the Church what it would cost him to buy a new one, believes that it is more important to maintain the work of the Church than to have a new coat. The canvass tests us because it makes us think through our scale of values. Furthermore it compels us to decide how much we love God. The debt of our sacrifice is the measure of our love. We have to decide whether we love God as much as the movies or a permanent or the opera.

Peacetime Military Service

by W. Appleton Lawrence

The Bishop of Western Massachusetts

THERE are many reasons both for and against universal peacetime military service. Most of them are of a secular and secondary nature. There are, however, in my mind, three or four basic Christian reasons against such an innovation to the American way of life, which I think deserve more attention than they have been given. Indeed, it has been my experience that many people have not thought the question through to basic principles and motives, but have been content to rest on arguments of expediency and of unproved military necessity. The three points I would set forth are (1) personal possibilities; (2) ultimate loyalties; and (3) basic motives.

In regard to personal possibilities, I think it would be generally agreed that Christianity sets supreme value upon the individual. We believe that the Christian way of life should both demand, and contribute to, the full development of personality. In times of war there are certain opportunities and occasions which bring out the best as well as the worst in individuals. Persons do rise to supreme heights of courage and of self sacrifice. In times of peace however military experience is of a very different character. Even two-fisted Teddy Roosevelt and Admiral Mahan advised their sons against entering a service which gave such little opportunity for initiative and in which so many men deteriorated under the influence of dull routine. A while ago General O'Ryan was frank enough to confess that in making a soldier "The first thing to be done is to destroy all initiative. . . . We must make men so that they are machines. The recruits have got to put their heads into the military noose. They have got to be jacked up. They have got to be bawled out." And Colonel Gray at a hearing before a Senate Committee in 1936 said, "The whole military training is based on instant obedience. A man is not allowed to think. He is not expected to think. He is expected to obey orders and obey them right or wrong, foolish or wise, drunk or sober." It is true that military training is founded on discipline, and that undoubtedly youth might profit by more discipline; but the discipline of the military is not the self discipline which is Christian. It is superimposed discipline which works only when the authorty is maintained and is apt to react in reverse when the authority is removed. No military man would even presume to argue that peacetime military service would develop the personality of the individual—but that is the Christian goal and purpose. The contention of the military would probably be that in this case the good of the individual must be submerged for the benefit of society and the good of the state.

This leads me to my second point—ultimate loyalties. The most constant and most serious rival of Christianity has always been the state. The commonest cause of Christian martyrdom in the early centuries was the refusal to set Caesar above Christ. It has been an in-and-out struggle down through the ages ever since. In the last few years this has been dramatically evident in Europe. We have seen how whole nations, including many fine Christians, have been led along by plausible arguments and superficial physical and economic improvements to a point where they suddenly awoke —too late—to find themselves caught in a totalitarian system. We have seen here in the United States the power of the federal government grow apace in the first world war. After it was over we succeeded in defeating peacetime conscription and recovered some, although not all, of our former liberties. This growth of federal authority has become a veritable colossus during world war II, and for several years the military have even been able to keep criticism silent on the basis of military necessity, so that we have become accustomed to accepting their declarations. I know full well that we shall never return to normalcy as we knew it before the war, and it is well that we should not; but I hope we are still alive to the fact that "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance."

IN THE war just ended it is true that allowance was made for conscientious objection; but by the arrangement provided the government, up to January 1, 1945, secured ten million man-hours in mental hospitals alone free of charge. In all areas of service—hospitals, forestry service and fire-fighting, human "guinea pig" experimentation, and the like—the government secured approximately free, thirty million hours of man labor. In the process twenty-five men have lost their lives and the peace churches have paid out five and a half million dollars for the support of the conscientious objectors, with the cost of all the churches running to approximately six million dollars.

Possibly some allowance may be made in the bill to be proposed, but as such, it is only a concession to those who on religious grounds oppose all war. It makes no recognition of those who might oppose any war the government might see fit to wage, and at best, has been bought and paid for—not given as a right. It is not, and never will be real liberty of choice,—a fact which is even more plain when we learn that one in every six persons in the federal prisons today is there not because of any ordinary so-called "criminal offense," but simply because of his conscience and convictions.

That leads me to my last point—basic motives. What is the real purpose and reason for universal peacetime military training? The very name seems to me deceptive if not dishonest. The proposed training frankly is not universal, as there seems to be no intention of applying it to the unfit, or of providing a means of improving their physical opportunities. It is not really democratic although that is offered as a plausible argument by those who say it takes the rich man's son as well as the poor man's boy,—but it will not take the handicapped boy of either; and certainly there is no civilian social group which has such a definite caste system as the military. It is the very antithesis of democracy. As for the military training,—it is perfectly evident that if it is for the toughening process needed for warfare, it must be repeated when warfare comes; and if it is for technical training, the developments of modern science taking place daily will mean that it must be repeated later. Indeed the military themselves testify that one year is of little use and that the chief reason for military training was the indoctrination of youth for military purposes. I quote from General Eisenhower's letter written for the Woodrum committee at its hearing in June: "Physical training will always have to be repeated after the war starts but takes the least time. Psychological indoctrination and moral training requires the longest time but fortunately it is never completely forgotten."

On such an important matter which involves such a fundamental change in our way of life, it is well that we should make careful analysis of the motive

THE SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

We, the Early Christians

COMPARED with the development of man on this planet, the diffusion of Christianity over the human race seems to go like a flash of lightning—for two thousand years is almost nothing in the history of the universe. (Never forget that we are all still 'the early Christians.' The present wicked and wasteful divisions between us are, let us hope, a disease of infancy: we are still teething. The outer world, no doubt, thinks just the opposite. It thinks we are dying of old age. But it has thought that so often before! Again and again it has thought Christianity was dying, dying by persecutions from without or corruptions from within, by the rise of Mohammedanism, the rise of the physical sciences, the rise of the great anti-Christian revolutionary movements. But every time the world has been disappointed. Its first disappointment was over the crucifixion. The Man came to life again. In a sense—and I quite realize how frightfully unfair it must seem to them—that has been happening ever since. They keep on killing the thing that He started: and each time, just as they're patting down the earth on its grave, they suddenly hear that it's still alive and has even broken out in some new place. No wonder they hate us.)—C. S. Lewis, Beyond Personality, Macmillan, 1945.

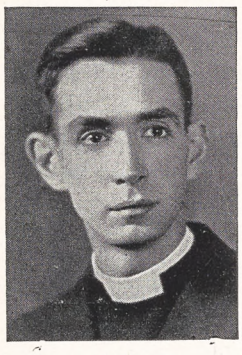
behind it. This motive certainly is fear—fear of others—which produces fear in them, and will inevitably produce such an armament race as the world has never seen. This is set in opposition to Christian faith in others and in the Charter of the United Nations—which, we have been told repeatedly, is the only hope for world peace.



If we are to have peacetime conscription (for such it really is, although its proponents scrupulously avoid the use of the word "conscription"), why not peacetime conscription of industry? In the Christian scale of values, human beings come ahead of things, but in wartime preparations it has always been the lag of things—tanks, guns, equipment—which has slowed proceedings. Let us do some real thinking on this very important subject, and not be duped by secondary and superficial unproved window dressing such as health, education, and disciplinary benefits.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

"Defend, O Lord, This Thy Child"

WHEN one considers how many different hands and viewpoints have in the course of time given shape to our American rite of confirmation, one marvels that the resulting composition is such a masterpiece. Some of it is very ancient, such as the prayer of invocation of the comforter and the "manifold gifts of grace" before the laying on of hands. The prayer of supplication following the Lord's Prayer is a product of the Reformation and is based on a model in the famous liturgy of Archbishop Hermann of Cologne, a Lutheran. Our 1892 American Prayer Book introduced the formal presentation of the candidates and the lesson from Acts.

The service divides into two parts, which in turn correspond to the two principal actions of the rite. The first consists of the solemn renewal before the Church of baptismal vows by candidates who have come to "a competent age." This is the subjective side of "confirmation," a contribution of the Reformation, and it is peculiar to the Protestant Churches which practice the rite. The second part begins at the versicles. It contains the ancient, Catholic, objective emphasis, not upon what the candidate does, but upon what God does. In this sense the rite partakes of the nature of the sacramental; i.e., it is not simply a badge and token of Christian men's profession, but rather a certain sure witness and effectual sign of grace, "and God's good will towards us, by the which he doth work invisibly in us, and doth not only quicken, but also strengthen and confirm our Faith in him" (see Article XXV).

It is popular to speak of confirmation as "ordination of the laity." And the form of our American service does suggest a certain analogy with the rites of the ordinal. But there is danger in pressing the analogy too far. For it might mislead people into thinking that in baptism they did not become fully members of Christ's body and sharers in his eternal priesthood. The denial of the Eucharist to the baptized but unconfirmed is purely a part of the Church's discipline, not of its faith. But if we keep this caveat in mind, we might use the analogy with ordination with profit particularly in regard to the ceremonial of confirmation.

For example we might integrate the service with Holy Communion so that the lesson from Acts serves as the Epistle. The candidates would then receive their first communion from the hands of the bishop, who serves both as a bond with the Church universal and as chief pastor and priest of his diocesan flock. Such a custom would be far more meaningful to the newly confirmed than having them wait for a separate little corporate communion at 8 A.M. the following Sunday in a largely empty church. Besides the bishops should consider it their highest privilege to celebrate the Holy Communion regularly upon their visitations to the several parishes under their shepherding care.

It would be well too for provision to be made for silent prayer by the congregation for the candidates immediately after they have renewed their promises; and then, before the versicles, to sing a hymn comparable to the Veni, Creator Spiritus. Another suggestion from the ordination rites is to place the bishop's address or sermon at the beginning rather than at the end of the rite. He would probably get better attention from the class; for there is to be expected a release of tension with consequent loss of interest after the laying on of hands.

The opening rubric directs the bishop to sit in his chair near the holy table but gives him no further guidance as to his position and posture. I trust my friends on the episcopal bench will not consider me presumptuous in suggesting that they come to the center of the chancel for the versicles and stand there during the remainder of the rite. The candidates will come and kneel before them there, where the congregation can best witness the imposition of hands. If the bishop confirms by passing along the chancel rail his action will for the most part be hidden from the congregation by our "monastic choirs" and many parents and sponsors will be disappointed. However, this difficulty could be obviated if the rubrics were revised so as to direct choir and congregation to kneel—and pray—during the laying on of hands. It need hardly be said that the bishop offers prayer during the imposition of hands; he does not transmit authority as in ordination. Hence it is highly discourteous to the Almighty for him to sit (unless he is weak and infirm) with a mitre on his head while praying, "Defend, O Lord, this thy child."

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

A NUMBER of chaplains have been in my office in recent weeks with amusing stories to tell of the way the Church is treating them once they are discharged from the service. "I guess the flag waving days are over," one of them said a bit bitterly. "We read in the Church papers nearly every week in the early days of the war of the great need for chaplains. So several hundred of us resigned our parishes, parked our families the best we could and went off to war. We're out now, some of us. So we get in touch with the army and navy commission of the Church about where we go from here. We are told to get in touch with our bishops. But some of us wouldn't know our bishops if we ran into them on the street. There have been a lot of changes in dioceses since this war started. Take my own for instance . . . when I went into the army my diocese was rather low church and I fitted in ok. The new bishop is pretty much of a spike and has his own ideas about the type of men he wants. In any case he hasn't shown any interest in me, either when I was in the army or since I got out.

"Next folks tell us to call at 281. I've done that too and it is to laugh. I've seen most of the big shots and I got a run around from them all. 'It is not under my department; I suggest that you see so-and-so.' The old merry-go-round. It has its funny side. Congregationalists for instance are not supposed to have much of a central organization. Yet Congregational chaplains can go to their headquarters, see a list of vacancies and be given real help in getting in touch with the committee of any church one is interested in. The same is true of Presbyterians, Unitarians, Methodists and other churches. And do we get a kidding from these fellows about the great Episcopal Church that is supposed to be so well organized with shepherds of souls who trace their lineage to the apostles. All I can say is that it doesn't help a guy find a parish."

THE synod of the second province passed a resolution about hurrying up the process of getting men out of the armed forces who were studying for the ministry before they went to war. Also there has been a lot of talk about the soldiers who are considering the ministry and how badly we need them. But what sense is there in this talk if we fail to take care of the chaplains who pulled up roots in order to do their jobs in the army and navy? As things stand at the moment about all they can do is to get in touch with their friends with a "please, if you hear of any vacant parish will you keep me in mind?"

Which is a sloppy and inefficient way of handling the situation to put it mildly. Here's the province of the northwest, for instance, showing such great concern because of the thirty vacancies in their eight jurisdictions that they have established a placement bureau headed by Bishop Conrad Gesner of Sioux Falls, S. D. But why not a national clearing house to which chaplains—and others for that matter—can turn with the hope of getting men and jobs together?

Five million dollars for rehabilitation and advance is just plain nuts if the Church hasn't enough imagination to take care of its man power, and particularly chaplains who have made such sacrifices. Ballyhooing about the need of millions for buildings but nothing can be done—at least isn't being done—for four or five hundred parsons who are, or soon will be, ex-servicemen.

"I'M TEACHING because the rector finds it hard to get teachers." "I'm teaching because someone has to do it, not that I like it." Such remarks are common, for too many teachers are failing to discover good helpful reasons for teaching. If this is true of you, you will get tired and your children will get tired of you, though they may not tell you so.

Try this: go where you can gather in "the harvests of a quiet eye," preferably in your own room or church, and read the gospel for the second Sunday in Lent. This will help you to remember how Jesus spent forty days of "worshipful problem solving" after which he came from that wilderness with his mind clarified and confident as to what his teaching purposes should be. Then select the best teacher you know and try to recall what he or she was aiming at. Here resolve those aims shall be yours.

Still you may say, "I have never known a really inspiring church school teacher." Then take the following near and long range aims and meditate on any or all of them. Try this not once, but several times, by yourself or with a friend, and see if it makes a difference in your desire to teach:

To guide children into knowing and living by the spirit of Jesus' Life and teachings.

To draw youth into finding what is in the Christian Gospel—God, "one Lord Jesus Christ . . . Very God of Very God . . . By whom all things were made," . . . from which basic affirmations they can build a sound philosophy of life and the universe.

To arouse in young people a desire to better understand the great words and services of the Prayer Book and to give them a great use.

To get young people to see Christian democracy as a way of life that needs to be shared with more and more people if they want to keep and enrich it.

To help youth to manage their powers—personal charm, skills, reason, leadership and possessions —with deepening humility, and social responsibility.

To bring them to discern all forms of work contributing to the development of persons as necessary, valuable and religious.

To awaken ambitions within them to build not just houses but homes wherein two people love each other in a way they don't want to love any other human beings, thus exhalting the beauty and sanctity of the marriage vow.

To give them a critical knowledge and love for the abiding truths of holy scripture that each may testify through the years "Thy word is a light unto my feet and a lantern unto my path."

To aid young people to participate in the fellowship of the Church, as members of the family of God, for they are not just to know about their church school or the Church in general. They are to be kept as the steady glad sharers in the Church's universal life of work and worship.

To give them opportunities to treat persons of all races as sacred, as "brothers for whom Christ died," because intelligent goodwill does extend and nurture the new kingdom.

To get young people ready to join in sacramental action, as set forth in the communion service. Growing children are not to be trained as spectators but to say as actors in the divine drama—"here we present unto thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice." And if these surrenders on the part of creatures to their creator are sincere and often, then each can expect the precious gifts of a grateful mind, a love of the brethren, a cleansing from selfishness, a new motive for giving or suffering, if one must, a gradual redemption from evil and death plus a re-creating companionship with Christ "whose service is perfect freedom."

There are other ways of stating the aims of a church school teacher. But if during your meditations you have been persuaded that some of these aims ought to be yours, then go and talk over your findings with your superintendent as to ways and means of achieving these objectives. The outcomes of your experience will surely call his attention to this method of "worshipful problem solving."

A German Bishop Cries About Women and Children

Suggestion Made That He Might Be Reminded Of Concentration Camps and Death Factories

Edited by Sara Dill

London:—Bishop G. K. A. Bell of Chichester, an official of the World Council of Churches, has received a letter from Bishop Theophil Wurm, head of the Evangelical Church of Germany, charging that the people of Germany are being "subjected to the harshest retribution." He asks whether it is necessary once again in history "that victorious powers come to be infested by the spirit of those they have vanquished."

"Was it not possible," he suggests, "to take preventive measures in order to save innocent women and children from ghastly misery? Was it really necessary to proceed in such a manner that the war propaganda of Goebbels seemed to be vindicated?"

Recalling the pledge by leading Allied statesmen at Teheran that "we will not rest until we have won the victory over tyranny for freedom and tolerance," Bishop Wurm continued, "How we long to see this pledge redeemed! The future destiny of the human race will be determined by the outcome of the struggle between the heathen spirit of revenge and the Christian spirit of mercy and forgiveness. Which will prevail? The spirit of forgiveness won the day in 1815 after Europe had been freed from enslavement endured for twenty years under Napoleon. A peace was made which respected the integrity of France proper. The spirit of forgiveness did not prevail in 1918-19. Today whole German populations are subjected to the harshest retribution."

We have not received a copy of Bishop Bell's answer to the German divine but we think he might well send him a few pictures of concentration camps and murder factories with the suggestion that he and the other "innocent women and children in ghastly misery" meditate a while longer on the crimes their nation committed.

Speaks on Divorce

London: — The Archbishop of York, Cyril F. Garbett, addressing a diocesan conference, stated that adultery must not necessarily be followed by divorce. He said that adultery is often committed under circumstances of great strain and temptation with the person committing the sin never really losing his or her love for wife or husband. He deplored the increase in divorces and also spoke of the falling birth rate, and charged that the lack of proper housing was one of the chief causes for the shattering of the foundation of Christian homes.

"Marriage is no longer regarded by the nation as a whole either as a sacrament or as a holy estate," he said, "but as a contract which can be broken fairly easily by mutual consent. The old idea of marriage is gone, and with it divorce is condoned."

Children, he declared, are a deterrent to divorce, but the birth rate in Britain is falling to such an extent that Britain's population may decrease 5,000,000 by 1980, with the number of persons over sixty-five increased by 1,600,000. The male population of Russia between fifteen and thirty-four years, he added, will have increased in the same period by 13,000,000.

The widespread use of contraceptives is not alone responsible for this decrease in births, he said. Housing conditions as they exist at present are as great a contributing factor.

Oppose State Aid

London:—The world youth conference, meeting here with 400 delegates from 63 countries, has gone on record as opposing state aid to denominational schools.

Spanish Refugees

New York:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy is urging members and Church people generally to support the drive for clothing for Spanish Refugees which started November 12 and is to continue through December. Urgent appeals have come from refugees now in France indicating that unless there is a generous response many will die this winter. They are not only inadequately clothed but are also completely without fuel and many of them are also weakened by undernourishment

Many of these refugees fought for three years against the forces of Franco, Hitler and Mussolini in Spain in the prelude to world war two. After fleeing Spain when the republic was overthrown they joined with the French resistance movement to help liberate France from the Nazis. Some fought also with American troops in North Africa and up through Italy. Among those urgently in need of clothing are several thousand Spanish refugees recently returned from Nazi death camps. They came back to France wearing only a shirt, a pair of pants and whatever additional clothing they could pick up.

The clothing will be distributed in France by the Unitarian Service Committee which is doing one of the most effective relief jobs in Europe. The appeal, which the CLID is urging churches to support, is made by the Spanish Refugee Appeal with Dorothy Parker as chairman. They ask that the clothing and footwear be sent to the warehouse at 715 Second Avenue, New York, addressed to Spanish Refugee Appeal, with a note or a card sent to Spanish Refugee Appeal, 192 Lexington Ave., New York 16, N. Y., notifying them that a package has been sent in response to the CLID appeal.

We Were Wrong

St. Louis:—This is the sort of mistake THE WITNESS likes to correct. In reporting the Reformation Service in our November 1 issue we stated there were 1,000 in the massed choir. There were 1,400. We said that about 11,000 attended the service. Bishop Scarlett now informs us that there were at least 18,500 attending with about 5,000 others turned away.

Endorse FEPC

San Francisco:—Creation of fair employment practices commissions on national, state, and local levels to prevent discrimination in employment on the grounds of race, color or creed was recommended here by directors of the San Francisco council of churches. In a resolution, the directors specifically urged the passage of RH2232 and S101, bills to establish a permanent fair employment practices commission as an agency of the federal government. The directors also indorsed the effort to secure signatures for an initiative measure to be placed on the ballot establishing a FEPC in California.

The Council passed resolutions supporting: A bill to lift discrimination in regard to the naturalization of Filipinos already in the United States. The Downey bill to provide for the admission of alien Chinese wives of American citizens on the same basis as other alien wives of American citizens. Bills to authorize the naturalization and admission into the United States under quota of natives of India and Korea. The Tydings bill to permit the people of Puerto Rico to determine their future political status.

The Council approved publication of a leaflet opposing racial segregation and restrictive covenants. Approval was given to a conference with members of the returning Japanese-American minority to consider the relation of the returning Japanese to the churches in the Bay Area.

Chaplains Mustered Out

Washington:—Seven hundred and fifty-two army chaplains have been mustered out during the past two months, it was reported last week by Brig. Gen. Luther D. Miller, chief of chaplains. There are still 7,584 on active duty. Casualties number 76 killed in action, 67 non-battle fatalities and 233 wounded in action.

Unite for Service

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.:—The Episcopal Churches in the Wilkes-Barre district held a united service on the evening of November 11th at St. Stephen's when the sermon was by the Rev. A. Roden Blackledge, who served as chaplain of a British warship.

Ceylon Diocese

London:—The centenary of the Anglican diocese of Colombo, Ceylon, will be commemorated at special services here in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. Similar services will be held in the Church of St. Martin in the Fields.

It was announced that the Rev. Lakdasa de Mel, native Singalese clergyman, will be consecrated a bishop in St. Paul's Church, Colombo, in ceremonies preceded by the cutting of the first sod for the site of a new cathedral. The first member of his race to be made a bishop in the Anglican communion, Dr. de Mel will assist the Bishop of Colombo, the Rt. Rev. Cecil Douglas Horsley.

Native Fascists

New York: — Army Talk No. 64 which is used in orientation courses to teach soldiers how to spot fascists is now available to the public. The document warns of the existence of home front fascists; describes in detail their activities and methods and shows the identity of their objectives with those of fascists everywhere. It is now issued as an attractive, illustrated pamphlet under the title They Still Carry On and it may be had in single copies for the asking by writing the National Council for Constitutional Liberties, 205 East 42 Street, New York 17, N. Y. The Church League for Industrial Democracy has issued a bulletin urging all of its members to read the pamphlet themselves and to order copies for distribution.

Unknown Soldier

London:—Belgian ex-service men assembled in Westminster Abbey on November 7 to light a torch from the flame burning before the tomb of the unknown soldier. The torch was kept in the Belgian embassy overnight and was then brought to Ostend, Belgium, to revive the flame before the tomb of the unknown soldier there.

Youth for Christ

Detroit: — Youth for Christ groups throughout the country are being urged by the interdenominational Detroit Youth Council of Applied Religion to resist "fascist influences."

A mimeographed open letter circulated by the Council asserts that "isolationist publishers, anti-union industrialists, anti-Semitic preachers and anti-Negro rabble rousers would mobilize American youth on the ensnaring basis of 'Christian nationalism'."

G-SUITING THE BODY

A Necessity of Health and Voice

RALPH M. HARPER Author of The Voice Governor

"Did you ever think of applying the Navy G-Suit principle to your own voice, in talking as well as in singing? Anyone who has any pride in making himself heard can do it in a few easy lessons, for it is all a matter of body mechanics. Without doubt the G-Suit principle can help when the diaphragm is dormant or takes a sharp nose dive. It can eliminate a speaker's fade-away, commonly called mumbling, with the same precision as in warding off a pilot's blackout. It can also slip a ring in the nose of a roaring Bull of Bashan, musically known as a soloist. Therefore, if one intends his voice for more than a mumble or a single do-or-die maneuver, he may want to learn which mechanics of the body offers the rational way."

"Your ideas about The Voice Governor seem to me entirely sound."
FRANCIS ROGERS, Chairman The American Academy of Teachers of Singing, New York City.

"It should help many in solving vocal problems in choir training, and I believe it to be a most valuable contribution to the cause of decent and natural singing."
EVERETT TITCOMB, Composer, Choirmaster, and Instructor in the New England Conservatory of Music.

"This book should be a source of profitable interest to trainers of choirs—in fact, all who have to do with voice training."

cused certain leaders of the Youth for Christ Movement of being closely connected with Gerald L. K. Smith's Nationalist Party organization. A photostated statement sent out by the institute quotes an endorsement of Youth for Christ by Smith.

Attacking "Christian nationalism," the Youth Council declared that "the basis of true religion, as all Bible readers know, is world brotherhood."

250th Anniversary

Philadelphia:—Bishop Rawlinson of Derby, England, was the preacher on November 11th at the service celebrating the 250th anniversary of Christ Church here. He spoke of the world being unified in one sense through modern science, communication and transportation yet he said that "it is obvious that in the sphere of the spirit mankind is deeply divided" and he stressed the responsibility of the Church to find ways "to bring home to the hearts of men a converting power."

The service opened with a procession of ecclesiastical dignitaries, including the Presiding Bishop; Bishop Oliver Hart of Pennsylvania; Metropolitan Benjamin of the Russian Orthodox Church; Rabbi D. A. J. Cardoza; Bishop Frank B. C. Cloak, the presiding bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church; the Rev Henry H. Trotter, president of the local federation of churches; the Rev. G. H. Bechtold of the Lutheran Church; Dr. Rufus Jones of the Society of Friends; the Rev. Leon T. Moore, superintendent of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Vincent F. Pottle, acting dean of the Philadelphia Divinity School; the Rev. Clemens Kolb, chaplain of the University of Pennsylania.

Harrisburg Auxiliary

Lewistown, Pa.:—Bishop Wroth of Erie was the headliner at the annual meeting of the Auxiliary of the diocese of Harrisburg meeting here October 30-31. Other speakers were Bishop Heistand; Miss Dorothy Stabler, secretary of social relations; Miss Gladys Spencer, who spoke about the work in Japan where she was a missionary.

Theologians Meet

San Francisco:—A little known group of west coast theologians hold their semi-annual meeting this week. The group was organized by Prof. John C. Bennett, now of Union Seminary, New York, and has been continued under the leadership of the Rev. A. C. McGiffert Jr., the president of the Pacific School of Religion. The members are now cooperating in preparing a book for the inter-seminary movement.

Following a Hunch

Monticello, Fla.: — When four men from the Nativity, Dothan, Ala., which is the only town in the United States so named, visited Christ Church here to prospect for a new rector they were startled to hear Dothan mentioned in the first lesson (2 Kings 6:8-17, old lectionary). The coincidence worked out—they called the Rev. E. Laurence Baxter and he accepted, effective December 1.

Face Confiscation

Prague:—A major political issue has developed in Czechoslovakia over a Communist-supported bill to confiscate Roman Catholic parochial and other private schools. Final decision rests with President Eduard Benes, who is reported to have promised he will not sign the bill if Successful churches realize the importance of extending their message beyond the pew . . . into the very homes that make up the community.

Indorsed by hundreds of churches throughout the nation, Schulmerich Carillonic Bells are the perfect medium for projecting expressive and soul-satisfying messages of welcome, faith and hope—a dignified, effective reminder of the church's existence and purpose.

The result of a quarter-century's electronic research and development, Schulmerich Carillonic Bells are noted for their clarity, brilliance and carrying power. Easily installed because of their unique, compact design; they may be played either automatically or from a conveniently located keyboard.

two political parties can be found who clearly oppose the measure.

The bill provides for confiscation of all private and denominational kindergartens, grammar and high schools. Parochial schools represent 7 per cent of all schools in the country.

Only party which so far has taken a definite stand against the school bill is the People's Party, a revival of the former Catholic Party. Opposition to the bill may come from the Slovakian Democratic Party, at present largely controlled by Protestants, who also have church schools.

The Slovak government, whose seat is in Bratislava, and which acts virtually independently of the central government in Prague, has already closed Catholic schools, but some may be reopened in deference to objections by Democratic Party leaders. In Prague, the ministry of education, headed by Zdenek Nejedly, a Communist, ordered four Catholic schools by telephone to close their doors, but this action brought a strong protest by school authorities and parents, and the schools are continuing their work.

Flour for Relief

New York:—Twenty-one churches representing six denominations in four small Kansas towns have donated 1,100,000 pounds of flour for overseas relief. It is being sent through the agency of the World Council. In addition to the flour tons of other relief goods are pouring into the newly-created relief committee.

Joint Centennial Service

Chicago: — Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island was the preacher at a service at St. Luke's, Evanston, commemorating the centennial of the revival of religious orders in the Anglican Church. Six Episcopal bishops took part, as did also a Russian Orthodox bishop and leaders of the Polish National Church and the Serbian Orthodox Church.

Offer to Arbitrate

San Antonio, Texas:—Clergymen here offered to arbitrate labor disputes and other controversial questions. The clergymen stressed that their suggestions "would bind no one to compliance," but would "possess the force merely of a well-considered, prayerful, and, we hope, informed judgment on our part as representatives of religion in the community." They pointed out that "we possess at least the advantage of impartiality."

Asserting that energies of conflicting groups can be turned into progress "if their divisive force be restrained by calm reasoning and good will," the clergymen added: "Special interests must be conformed to the common interest. Men must not trample one another in a vain quest for advantage or security. We must go forward together or not at all."

The statement of the religious leaders included a set of principles which, it was said, would be applied to disputes considered by the group.

Men for Ministry

Boston:—Bishop Henry K. Sherrill of Massachusetts is the chairman of a new commission of the Federal Council of Churches to recruit young men for the ministry.

Wars Provide Organ

Birmingham, Ala.: — An organ was dedicated twenty-five years ago at the Advent here, a memorial to those who served in world war one. The organ was rededicated on October 28th, having been renovated and enlarged, as a memorial to those who served in world war two. Practically the same service was used on both occasions.

First Indian Student

Sewanee, Tenn.: — Ernestine McGhee is the first Indian girl to be enrolled at St. Mary's School here. She is a member of St. John's mission near Atmore, Alabama. A scholarship of the Woman's Auxiliary made it possible.

Post-War Chaplains

New York:—About 2,200 Protestant chaplains will be engaged in post-war activity in the army and navy, veterans administration, general and mental hospitals, penal and correctional institutions, and other agencies, according to a study by the commission on religion and health of the Federal Council of Churches. The figure represents five times as many chaplains as were similarly employed before the war.

Announcing results of the survey, based on estimates made by the agencies involved and by specialists in the field, the Rev. Seward Hiltner, executive secretary of the commission, predicted the number of chaplains would grow during coming years in proportion as the churches, institutions, and public better understand the value of their services.

"If the religious needs of persons in all types of special situations were to be properly served," Mr. Hiltner said, "nearly 4,000 full-time chaplains would be required."

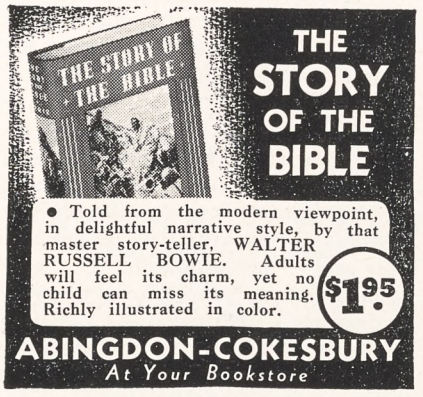
In view of the need for specially trained men to fill chaplaincy positions, the commission on religion and health has recommended that theological schools provide special basic training for chaplaincy candidates.

Problems of Peace

Jamaica, N. Y.:—The Rev. Richard Morford, executive secretary of the United Christian Council for Democracy, and Mr. Walter Kiernan, an attorney, were the speakers at a meeting held here November 11th at Grace Church, and sponsored jointly by the social service and education departments of the diocese. The subject was world organization and the problems of peace. Bishop DeWolfe was the chairman of the meeting.

Cavert in Amsterdam

Amsterdam:—The Rev. Samuel Cavert, director of the Federal Council of Churches, now working with the World Council at Geneva temporarily, was one of a number of representatives of foreign churches to attend the general synod of the Dutch Reformed Church which opened here on October 31.



Jesuit an Advisor

Washington:—The Rev. Edmund J. Walsh, Jesuit educator here, is an advisor on geopolitics to Justice Robert A. Jackson, head of the war crimes commission, it was revealed last week. No announcement was made by the government but the fact became known through its publication in a bulletin circulated among Jesuits. It also states that Father Walsh recently visited the Soviet Union.

He was in the Soviet Union immediately after the last war as the head of Roman Catholic relief, and is said to have refused relief to the people unless the government in Moscow agreed to recognize the Roman Catholic Church. He later made other efforts to put through deals with the Russian government for the Vatican but they all failed.

Youth Meeting

Providence:—An all-youth meeting was held October 21 at Grace Church sponsored by the diocesan youth council. June Suzuki, a student at the University of California when the war started and later in a relocation center, spoke on the problems confronting the children of Japanese parents; Laura B. Morris of the Urban League spoke on Negro youth and the Rev. Henry Mattocks, recently out of a Japanese concentration camp and later a prison in the Philippines told of his experiences in that country.

Pleads for Labor

Springfield, Ill.: — American industry must either meet the pleas of workers for social justice or face the end of the system of free competition, Roman Catholic Bishop James A. Griffin told the annual convention of the Illinois State Federation of Labor meeting here. He declared that Henry Wallace's "symbolic goal" of 60,000,000 jobs can be achieved only when leaders of management decide "to sit down on all fronts and talk things over with conscientious representatives of organized labor."

Urge Social Action

Paris (RNS): — Participation of the Church in social and political action was urged here by the Protestant Youth Council of France. "It is the duty of Christians," it said, "to participate in the efforts of their fellowmen who are drawing up new political, economic and social systems and try to make these as faithful as possible to the Christian requirements."

west Pacific area sensed only vaguely that a war was on. This present war, however, in all of its glaring brutality has struck at men, women, and children in the far corners of the earth. Many of the old provincial attitudes cannot be changed for it is still true that man resents being jostled out of his comfortable niches of mental security. Words such as "independence" and "freedom," are only vaguely understood. It is a long road that must be traveled by certain segments of mankind before an understanding of what we generally call modern civilization is reached. We must be patient as these hesitant steps are being taken by various tribes and national groups. I believe the signs on the horizon give real hope for, despite all the confusion, humanity has struck its tents and is on the march. The confidence that is placed in American leadership is amazing.

MASSEY H. SHEPHERD JR.
Professor at E.T.S. and WITNESS Columnist

I heartily agree with our Editor's article The Bible in the Prayer Book (WITNESS, Nov. 8). I have only two suggestions: he might mention the fact that our canons allow us to use the revised version at Morning Prayer as well as the authorized. We ought to have the same privilege in using the Holy Communion lectionary.

Second, I should be inclined to make a stronger statement about the need for revision, especially in the light of the long series of passages which are now omitted. A daily series for Lent would take up much of this material. I personally feel that the present system of selection, as well as the system of coordination of Epistle and Gospel, needs thorough overhauling. I would not be so tender with the "western" tradition here. And Biblical criticism has created a revolution in our approach to scripture. For example, the Easter propers have always bothered me. We have the poorest Gospel of all as to historicity. I should think it better to use I Cor. 15:1ff as Epistle (the best historical account), and as Gospel some such passage as John 11:25ff. And then take the Transfiguration Gospel: why not use Mark instead of Luke, which is secondary?

I am gathering some material for an article on this theme, which I feel very strongly.

FRANK L. TITUS
Chaplain U. S. Army

Bishop Kennedy's visit to the Marianas and the Ryukyus has brought to the front again the need for a bishop of our Church to be especially consecrated and assigned for work with the armed forces. In the future we will doubtless have thousands of troops in camps and forts in the United States and in distant bases. Evidently some form of conscription with military training for all our nation's young men will be necessary. We will have large numbers of chaplains and youth of our Church in service at all times. There will be a definite need to continue the work of the army and navy commission. It would seem to me that the leadership of such a commission should be in the hands of a bishop especially set aside for this work. During the emergency of the war Bishop Sherrill, Dr. Washburn and lately Chaplain Webster have done excellent work. In the case of Bishop Sherrill it has been in addition to his other duties and we appreciate his work and that of the others throughout the Church. Now it would seem we need a bishop to recruit, train and give leadership to our chaplains, to represent our Church in religious matters pertaining to the armed forces, to contact the thousands of Episcopalians in military training, to administer the sacrament of confirmation in the distant camps and bases both at home and abroad.

It has been suggested that a bishop should be elected suffragan to some diocese and should be set aside for this work. Just how the mechanics can be worked out is a matter for our legislators.

This we know: The Church must plan with wisdom to administer to the men of the armed forces. We are apt to think, now that the war is over, that there is no longer the great need for such work. It is imperative that we rid ourselves of this misconception. We must keep pace with the needs of our men in the armed forces.

May we urge the clergy and laity not to lose this opportunity through procrastination. Let us have a clean cut workable program. Certainly the Episcopal Church can do just that if its leaders will apply themselves to the task. We need the program and we need expert leadership in administering it if we are to properly meet the challenge of the greatest youth work that the church can undertake.

MRS. JOHN H. WOODHULL
Churchwoman of Kenmore, N. Y.

I don't quite like your method of dealing with the Roman Catholic Church, because it tends to inflame Christians against one another, and promote hatreds, of which we already have a surplus. Granted that the Papal Hierarchy is a monstrous superimposition of the Holy Catholic Church, by which a certain group aims to play God, and exact from others the same unquestioning obedience as is due Deity; granted that this paternalistic system is obviously open to abuse and corruption; granted that if they could exact universally the obedience which they claim, the result would be the prostitution of religion for the personal gain of self-seeking men, who would manage to worm their way into places of advantage; granted that this has happened over and over in history, and happens today in parts of the earth where this authority is virtually undisputed; granted that there may exist a positive effort to gain this control; there still must be an approach to dealing with it, which God would like better than stirring hatreds of one man for his brother. Hatred is a dangerous emotion which goes off berserk, and brings all sorts of evils in its train. We never can control its direction, once it is let loose. It can work to the great harm of him whom it possesses, without accomplishing anything at all against its object; but rather strengthening his position. There must be a different, though more difficult angle which more becomes the members of Christ and children of God.

ANSWER: We promise not to go outside the area Mrs. Woodhull defines in any criticism we feel called upon to make of the political activities of the Papal Hierarchy and always to do our best to speak the truth with love.

Most Japanese Episcopalians Were Loyal to Church

American Soldier Meets a Japanese Bishop Who Was Only Recently Released from Prison

By T/Sgt. Murray Carroll
Candidate for Orders, District of Wyoming

Aomori, Japan, Oct. 29: — The majority of Episcopalians resisted the effort of the Japanese government to unite all faiths other than Roman Catholic into one State Christian Church. They stood by their rights at a heavy cost. Bishop Sugai of South Tokyo, with whom I spent the day yesterday, was released from prison only in June and all of our clergy and lay people alike suffered at the hands of the imperial government. In spite of the loss they suffered in the bombings, in spite of the persecutions of their own countrymen, they have managed to keep alive their faith and to increase their flock.

I am stationed here with the garrison hospital. We left Leyte, P. I. in the early part of September and made the original occupational landing of northern Honshu Island. The whole operation has gone very smoothly, with the Japanese people actually seeming to welcome us. There have been no incidents at all, in fact, the troops are getting along better here than in the Philippines.

The city of Aomori was the center of commerce for northern Japan, but one fine bomb raid and a few carrier raids leveled the whole area, not only neutralizing it as a military and industrial target, but leaving the majority of the civilians homeless. They seemed to have lost all spirit until we arrived, but at present rebuilding operations are going ahead with all possible speed.

The surrounding area is very delightful. The city is built on the slope between the mountains and the sea, a patchwork quilt of rice paddies and vegetable gardens starts at the city's edge and extends to the very mountain edge. It is criss-crossed by many swift-flowing mountain rivers that enrich the land on their way to the sea. Apple orchards are seen everywhere. This is the apple kingdom of the empire, and in addition is one of the chief fishing ports—it is really the nation's bread basket.

The Church had an extensive congregation and had accomplished a great deal in the area. The see city of the diocese is Hirosaki. I have been unable to contact the Bishop so far, but yesterday I spent the day with Bishop Sugai of South Tokyo. The local Church, St. Andrew's, was well built, a brick building about the size of St. Mark's in Cheyenne. It was in the very center of the burned over area and is about all that was left standing. The building was, of course, gutted by the fire so that the walls are all that are left. Bishop Sugai doubts if they will be usable in the rebuilding, so actually it is a complete loss. In addition three of the four kindergarten and primary schools the Church had established were completely destroyed. On all Saints' Day they plan to reopen the one school that is left. As soon as lumber can be had they plan to build a chapel on the site of the church. They have not lost faith, they have not lost hope, and above all, they have not lost confidence in their home Church, in us. I think very few of us could undergo the hardships they have faced and come out with the same spirit.

I have started to obtain the necessary permits from the army to help them as much as I can. The non-fraternization ban has been lifted, so I can move among them freely. There is a great deal they need to continue their work; I realize of course that the National Council will, in time, send help, but there are a lot of things that are needed now, a lot of the little things that go to make up a parish or a mission. I will be home in January and I hope to be able to make a personal appeal for help at that time, but I would appreciate it if you could see a way to help while I am over here.

Bishop Sugai has no communion vessels at all, the two churches left in Tokyo were missions and not equipped with their own sets, so he has no vessels left at all. All of his library of Church periodicals, etc. is gone. He would particularly appreciate any Forward literature. The local kindergarten lacks nearly all supplies, except for willing hands and hearts, and all of the local church fixtures were destroyed. I know that people will, naturally, be a little reluctant to send anything to Japan, but if they could see the faith these people have it would make them feel very humble. I never realized how important our mission work was until I arrived here. These people are the seeds for the new Japan we all hope to see; this is a means, better than any other, to help that seed develop.

Murray Carroll is a technical sergeant who plans to enter a theological seminary when discharged from the service. This report, written October 29th, was first sent to Bishop Zeigler of Wyoming, his bishop, who in turn airmailed it to THE WITNESS.

New York:—We thought the cover picture a nice one for Thanksgiving. The two youngsters are at the Everett Hall farm at Lyman, Nebraska. Just what they are gazing at was not revealed but those with imagination will be able to bring to their mind's eye the golden pumpkins and the fields of stacked corn. Anyhow they are two nice looking children, and well-fed too which can't be said of children is most parts of the world (See Editorial page seven).

PROMINENT LAYMAN DIES

INTERRACIAL CONFERENCE IN NORTH CAROLINA

Durham, N. C. (RNS) : — Several of this country's most pressing problems were discussed and acted upon by the annual interdenominational and interracial conference on applied Christianity. Sessions were held at Duke University and the North Carolina College for Negroes.

The resolutions that followed favored continued rationing of food in this country if necessary to prevent starvation in war-torn lands. Defeat of peacetime conscription and the internationalization of the atomic bomb was also strongly urged.

Declaring that social, spiritual, economic, and political problems in the south are vast, the conference said that the southern Church must become more conscious of social needs for the under-privileged, poverty-stricken minorities.

URGE CONTROL OF BOMB

New York:—The national board of the YMCA urged that the first assembly of the United Nations appoint a special committee to study and report upon measures to control the use of atomic energy. When such controls are set the U. S. should be willing to share knowledge of industrial processes.

MATRICULATION AT GENERAL

New York:—Bishop F. L. Barry, coadjutor of Albany, preached the matriculation sermon at General Seminary on October 31. The following day 27 new students signed the matriculation book, pledging themselves to be loyal to the life and work of the seminary. Of these 19 are juniors, 2 are middlers, 3 are graduate students and 3 are special students. There are 69 students in all at General this year, including several chaplains who are taking refresher courses.

URGES EXCHANGE OF SECRETS

Philadelphia: — Asserting that "war must be stopped at all costs," Prof. Thorfin Hogness of the University of Chicago said here that it can only be halted by international agreement. He went further in speaking to the commission on a Just and Durable Peace of the Federal Council of Churches saying, "We should ask for international control of the (atomic) bomb with international inspection and free exchange of the basic scientific information." Hogness declared that "there is no counter measure, no secret that other countries cannot work out for themselves in a relatively few years" and that should there be another war it "could be over in an hour's time."

UNO ENDORSED BY CHURCHMEN

Pittsburgh, Pa. (RNS) :—Religious leaders from the United States and Canada meeting here set up a nine-point program endorsing the United Nations Organization and embracing social and economic reforms through religious education work. The program was outlined at the victory conference of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches. Henry A. Atkinson, general secretary of the Church Peace Union and World Alliance, sounded the conference note when he said that "a lasting peace cannot be won by material force alone—spiritual drive is equally necessary." Among the speakers at the conference was Bishop G. Ashton Oldham of Albany.

RACE RELATIONS DISCUSSED

Richmond, Va. (RNS) :—Problems of the demobilized Negro service men were among the subjects discussed at a two-day conference on the returning veteran, sponsored here by the Virginia Council of Churches and the Southern Regional Council. Thomas W. Young, Norfolk publisher, asserted that Negro service men want a fair chance to compete for jobs, freedom from fear and oppression, reasonable educational facilities, and the "privilege of enjoying public facilities and using public conveyances without humiliation and inequality which inevitably follows senseless separation." White and Negro religious leaders, civic officials and labor representatives participated in the sessions.

The Rev. J. S. Ditchburn receives a visit from Lt. Col. J. L. Golsan at the church center at Baton Rouge, La. The cane was presented sixty years ago by the clergy of the diocese to the officer's great-grandfather, the Rev. Alexander G. Bakewell, for many years senior priest of the diocese

CANTERBURY CLUB AT COLBY

Waterville, Me.:—Bishop Loring of Maine visited Colby College recently for the formation of a Canterbury Club, Episcopal students society. He was the guest of honor at a tea given by the college president, Dr. Bixler, attended by members of the faculty and students.

Friendship With Soviet Union Urged by English Dean

He Addresses Three Mass Meetings to Tell Huge Crowds That Russia Wants Cooperation

By W. B. Spofford

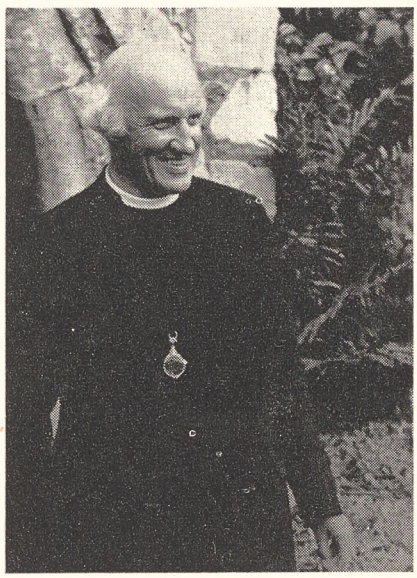
New York:—The Dean of Canterbury, Hewlett Johnson, addressed three large mass meetings last week to urge the closest relations between the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union in order to insure world peace. The first of these was held in Madison Square Garden, here, on November 14, before a capacity crowd (18,000). This meeting was followed by meetings in Boston and Chicago.

"Nothing in the world," he declared, "is of greater importance today than to create sympathetic understanding between the great powers of the west and the great powers of the east; in particular between your country and mine on the one hand and Soviet Russia on the other."

Having visited the Soviet Union for three months this summer, the Dean gave a stirring picture of conditions there, and particularly of their tremendous war losses and their determination to reconstruct their country in a peaceful world. "We must recollect all this loss and suffering when Russia seeks what appears to us to be super-security in the west and expresses by her acts her determination to insure that the government of her immediate neighbors shall be friendly."

He declared that he was allowed to go wherever he liked in Russia and to confer with anybody he wished to see. He also stated that there is religious freedom there and he quoted Stalin, with whom he conferred for an hour, as saying: "the state has learned the patriotism of the Church and the Church has learned the patriotism of the state." The Dean dwelt particularly on religious freedom in an address to about 400 clergy the following day—a thrilling address.

"Backed by unlimited resources of all essential commodities," the Dean pointed out, "and of a courage for which Stalingrad speaks, Russians could be terrible foes in any future war. They could no less be splendid friends in war or peace if once her suspicions were overcome. And Russia seeks both friendship and peace. Russia desires peace not war. Peace to develop her own vast resources and work out to its conclusion her own theory of life."



Speaking also at the New York meeting was the under-secretary of state, Dean Acheson, son of the former Bishop of Connecticut. He declared that there is no reason why America and Russia should not be friendly, recalling that the two nations have gotten along well for nearly 150 years; "remarkably well when you consider that our forms of government, our economic systems and our social habits have never been similar." Never in the past, he said, "has there been any place on the globe where the vital interests of the American and Russian people have clashed or even been antagonistic and there is no objective reason to suppose that there should, now or in the future, ever be such a place." He then pointed out that both nations have adequate living space and are interested in developing and enjoying that space through peaceful development and trade.

Perhaps the most effective address of the evening was made by Joseph E. Davies, former American ambassador to Russia, who spoke quietly and yet with such conviction that it moved the vast audience to a deep emotion. He, too, told of the great suffering of the Soviet people; of their longing for peace and security, and received tremendous applause when he stated that no country has a more consistent record of trying to preserve peace.

Others to speak at the New York meeting were Paul Robeson and Nikolai V. Novikov of the Soviet embassy in Washington, the latter pledging the full support of his country to the United Nations Organization. He said that there were obstacles and difficulties, obviously, confronting his country and the United States in building real friendship but that "our efforts in this direction have every chance of being fulfilled with complete and brilliant success."

Dean Johnson arrived from England by plane on November 12, the plane being forced to land in Maine because of fog. On the following day he was feted at a party in Washington, given by Mr. Davies, which was attended by members of the cabinet, Supreme Court justices, and a large number of Congressmen and Senators. He also had a few moments with President Truman at the White House.

On November 15th he met at Calvary House here with about 400 clergymen, at the invitation of the Presiding Bishop, where the colorful dean, dressed in gaiters and the traditional full dress of British ecclesiastics, painted a glowing picture of life in all parts of the Soviet Union. On the welcoming committee,

Dean of Canterbury, Hewlett Johnson, addresses great mass meeting in New York and points out need for mutual understanding between the great powers sponsored by the Presiding Bishop, were most of the big-name rectors and pastors of the city. All of which was in striking contrast to a few years back when THE WITNESS received scores of protests from subscribers for running a series of very illuminating articles by the noted dean. All of which, as far as this writer is concerned, can be placed very decidedly under the head of progress. These articles, incidentally, are available in pamphlet, under the title of Christ and Society, 15 cents, from THE WITNESS.

It might be added, just to give a final touch to this piece, that among the notables to have their names listed on the flossy welcoming committee I found the names of two distinguished Episcopalians who just a few years back wrote me vigorous letters of protest for publishing these articles. Perhaps it is too much to say that the world is moving ahead, but at least it can be said that some people seem to be.

BISHOP HARRIS IN LIBERIA

New York:—Bishop Bravid W. Harris has arrived in Liberia after a layover in Brazil awaiting plane reservations. He was greeted in a heartwarming manner and from the very start took on his numerous duties there. The Bishop writes that, "There has been a constant stream of visitors both by our own churchmen as well as officials of the government extending a most cordial welcome."

CANON V. A. DEMANT TO LECTURE

New Haven, Conn.:—The Berkeley Divinity School has announced that it has chosen to resume its former policy of inviting prominent scholars of the Church of England to join the staff for part of each year. The Rev. V. Auguste Demant, Canon of St. Paul's, London, has been asked to come into residence as a special lecturer for the autumn term of 1946. Under this plan men like the late Rev. G. A. Studdert-Kennedy; Canon Percy Dearmer of Westminster; the Rev. F. W. Dwelly, Dean of Liverpool; the Rev. C. E. Hudson, Canon of St. Alban's, and the Rev. L. Dewar, Canon of Gloucester, have been introduced to the American Church.

Canon Demant is one of the outstanding thinkers and scholars of the Church of England. His part in the Malvern Conference, his books on The Religious Prospect and Prospect for Christendom together with earlier writings mainly in the field of Christian sociology have earned him a solid reputation as a leader of Christian scholarship to acute problems of the day. Canon Demant will lecture to the Berkeley students in the general field of moral and pastoral theology and will in addition give the Kingsbury and Page Lectures.

Canon Demant first visited the United States a number of years ago when he gave a number of addresses in various cities under the auspices of the Church League for Industrial Democracy. He was also on the faculty of the School of Sociology which was a part of the Wellesley Conference and which was directed by the CLID.

MILITARY TRAINING CONDEMNED

Boston:—The social service department of the diocese of Massachusetts at a regular meeting on November 9th passed a resolution "that it would be ill-advised for Congress to act on any of the present proposals for compulsory military education until a more adequate study be made of their implications in terms both of our foreign and our domestic policies." The commission then urged that Congress set-up a commission comprising leaders in education, business, industry, labor and public life "who with the aid of military advisors should make a survey" to determine the best plan for "the security not only of the United States but of all mankind from war in the future."

FULL EMPLOYMENT IS URGED

Washington:—Congressman George E. Outland (D.-Cal.) in a speech favoring the full employment bill told his colleagues in Congress that Church organizations are backing the bill "because they realize it is the necessary first step in assuring continuing job opportunities for the working men and women of America." The Congressman quoted at length in his defense of this measure from testimony previously given before a Senate committee by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches and Msgr. John O'Grady, secretary of the national conference of Catholic charities.

The bill has been the subject of extended hearings in a House committee having passed the Senate last September. President Truman recently upbraided the committee for holding up this important legislation.

BISHOP PARDUE WILL BROADCAST

Pittsburgh, Pa.:—The Rt. Rev. Austin Pardue, Bishop of Pittsburgh, will be the next speaker on the Episcopal Church of the Air. He will speak from here over a network, at 10:00 A.M., December 23. His subject will be related to the Christmas observance.

RELIGIOUS DISCRIMINATION IN ITALY

New York:—A plea for aid in procuring religious freedom in Italy was made here by Bernardo Cacciapuoti, professor of physics at the University of Rome, who said the position of Protestants had suffered severely even before the war because of the Concordat of 1929 between the Vatican and the Italian government. As a result of the signing of the Concordat, "Roman Catholics and fascists were united in their efforts to restrict our liberties and our religious work," Cacciapuoti said at a luncheon of thirty Protestant leaders. The luncheon was sponsored by the American committee of the World Council of Churches.

HUNTINGTON PARISH CELEBRATES

Huntingdon, Pa.:—At a service of evensong on All Saints' Day Bishop Heistand of Harrisburg challenged the congregation of St. John's Church here to measure up to the courage and devotion of those who organized the parish a century ago. The occasion was the celebrating of the one hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of the church. On November 3 the parish held an open house, entertaining its many friends in the community. The church received congratulatory messages from nine former rectors; and from the presiding Bishop, Governor Martin and President Truman.

RELIGIOUS SURVEY IN BOSTON

Boston (RNS):—About 4,000 Protestant volunteer workers, representing 65 churches and 20 communities in greater Boston, engaged in a simultaneous house-to-house survey on Nov. 11 to determine the religious affiliation of residents. Although part of the Greater Boston Baptist Church School enlargement program, some of the communities conducted the survey as an interdenominational effort. Purpose of the campaign is to develop more effective programs and facilities for Christian education.

BISHOP'S HOUSE MADE CENTER

London (wireless to RNS):—Bishop F. R. Barry of Southwell, England, has turned over his manor for use as an education center because he has found it impossible to mainmain the large official residence. The Nottinghamshire education committee will undertake responsibility for maintaining and improving the building, but the arrangements are temporary. Meanwhile Bishop Barry will retain the use of the chapel and an apartment in the building, and its large hall will be available for diocesan activities.

Effective Thankfulness

A VERSE from I John 3:17 haunts us this Thanksgiving Day. Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? While we sit at our groaning tables, people in Europe will be dying of starvation and the diseases fostered by starvation. We are told that twenty pounds of fats and oils a year are needed to maintain health. Italians consume five pounds and Poles three pounds while we in the United States put away forty four pounds! In seeking to hamstring the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration by curtailing appropriations to that agency, (our appropriation was a solemn obligation agreed to by Congress) a member from Michigan is said to have informed Congress that Europe did not need these supplies because they were not used to having them! True perhaps, but this does not alter the fact that fifty five babies out of every hundred in Italy die before their first birthday. It is hardly necessary to recite more figures of deficiency diets and the resulting mortality rates. Nor will it accomplish much if we forego our fat Thanksgiving turkeys. What we can do if we would give expression to our thankfulness is to translate those turkeys into an avalanche of protests to our Congressmen that immediate and adequate action be taken to carry out our full commitments to the UNRRA. Some may think of this as charity; some will consider it political wisdom; all who call themselves Christian will regard it as nothing less than proper gratitude to God. God has given us this good land and all its bounty not to hoard but to be used to his glory. We shall be truly thankful only as we exercise our stewardship. We are a people in a land of plenty. The use of that plenty in ministering to a bitter, bewildered and stricken world is the measure of our gratitude to God as we celebrate Thanksgiving Day.

"QUOTES"

IN EVERY part of the world where, under adversity or in extremity, the Christian Church has stood unshattered, uncorrupted and undaunted, it has been made strong to endure by profound revival of life and faith. This is the teaching of these latter days: the Church is strong just in the measure that it is united; and, where it is united, God grants renewal. Unity and revival—these have been the two secrets of the Church's power in wartime. Christian unity has moved through two stages: consultation and cooperation. A further step is clearly indicated for us—our own national history furnishes precedent. Confederation, coalition—the pooling of resources, a united strategy and unified deployment of men and means, the conscription of the ablest leadership out of very Church for the service of all the Churches, loyal enlistment in sharing tasks at whatever private or organizational sacrifice.

—HENRY PITNEY VAN DUSEN
From an address November 16 when he was inaugurated President of Union Seminary.

The War Against Want

DO YOU now pay rent, but hope to own your own home? We trust you have the know-how to build it with your own two hands. Lacking that you had better keep on with those monthly rental checks. Your government has so arranged it that you write the same amount on that check this month as you did last month. If you build with your own hands you will also find the government has exercised its governing power over the materials you'll be buying. The price of lumber and bricks, mortar and lath is kept in good condition by the ceiling which our government has kept in reasonable repair for our benefit. But there is no longer a protective ceiling over a finished house—houses for sale are left out in the bleak postwar weather of "free competition." Of course it may not matter to you whether you pay $6000 or $7500 for your house. If fifteen hundred dollars is small change in your particular pocket this editorial may not concern you. But it does concern most of the nearly four million families who want and need houses. Two thirds of these four million people can't pay more than $5000 when they buy or $50 a month if they rent.

Two thirds is a good-sized majority. It is for the majority that price ceilings are maintained. The majority of the people are in favor of price control; the opinion polls have shown that. In other words the government is exercising its authority by consent of the people which happens to be the democratic basis of governing.

Now Mr. Ira Mosher, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, disagrees with the government's price control system. In the October 27th issue of a national magazine, Mr. Mosher said that the OPA must go by June 30th next. On November 9th the NAM dared shorten the time to February 15th. This demand (representing, remember, only one segment of big business) is interesting. If government does not determine prices, who or what does?

Well, after world war I, government did not interfere. Maybe you remember tramping city streets with a list of "for rent" ads clutched in your hand. Rents you found had climbed 54% above the pre-war level. Then perhaps you looked into the possibility of building your home since rents were so exorbitant. That bit of investigation really did something to your morale, for you found that building materials were up 218 per cent, and construction costs 189 per cent above the 1914 level. As for food you may remember some of these interesting items from the statistics of that time: 5 lbs. of sugar, $1.34; what you are paying today is 34c. Oleomargarine, 44c a pound; you now pay about a quarter. Coffee was 49c compared with the 30c you are now paying. Ten pounds of flour was 88c; now it's 64c.

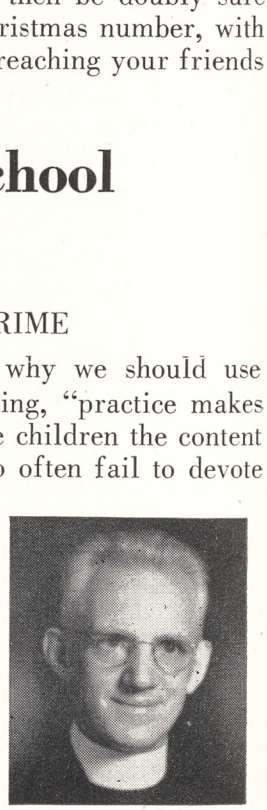
Perhaps in the last war you were a business man. If you weathered the 1920 price storm yourself you knew men who sank in that storm—good men too, some of them friends of yours. For 106,000 businesses went bankrupt and 425,000 farmers lost their farms through foreclosure—over half a million Americans were caught in that squeeze. Five million workers lost their jobs in industry. In a labor force of some 42 million, 5½ million, one-eighth of the whole, disappeared as parts of our economic system.

Responsible business men have faced this historic picture. As a result, the Committee for Economic Development and the National Planning Association (which also includes leaders of labor and agriculture) have sought responsible solutions for post-war problems to avoid the kind of irresponsible anarchy which prevailed from 1918 to 1920. Apparently the NAM has not been impressed with the aftermath of world war I. They advocate the very conditions which produced it and they give it little emphasis in their publicity.

The sensible opinion, expressed and unexpressed, of the great public is faced with the loud frenzied expressions of the NAM pressure group: — that in a nutshell is the price control situation at the moment. This is one battle in the war against want, a battle against the mistaken prejudices of powerful men. Against these men are pitted the great mass of the American people. Mere numbers will mean nothing without organized effort. The OPA, believing in price control, has furnished leadership in this battle: the proposal of Victory Over Inflation weeks in communities throughout the nation. Get in touch with the information panel of your local OPA board and see what you can do. This is an opportunity to share in the feeding of the multitude of this nation.

A Double Gift

WE ARE earlier this year than usual in asking you to consider giving subscriptions of THE WITNESS to friends for Christmas. In previous years a considerable number have acted on the suggestion that is announced on page seventeen this week. Naturally we hope that a great many will avail themselves of the opportunity this year. It has always been the policy of THE WITNESS to keep the price at the lowest possible figure, thus making it possible for a larger number to subscribe. This means that we operate on a narrower margin than most papers so that we have little money for circulation promotion.



This Christmas gift offer is a way for those who believe in what the magazine stands for to extend its influence. It is a convenient gift for the donor; an acceptable gift to the recipient. And it is actually two gifts, for it is a gift to us as well as to the one who will receive THE WITNESS each week during the year ahead.

The time necessary to place a new reader on our lists is longer than it was in former years, due to the shortage of stencils and other war-time shortages. Hence this early announcement. Won't you please give the matter consideration and if it does appeal to you, send us the names and addresses of those for whom you wish to have subscriptions entered? We will then be doubly sure of starting these with the Christmas number, with the card announcing the gift reaching your friends Christmas week.

For Church School Teachers

By
WILLIAM GRIME

THERE is another reason why we should use wisely this law of learning, "practice makes perfect." In our zeal to give children the content of our Christian faith we too often fail to devote enough time to guiding them into the meanings and testings of that content. For instance, examine the current curriculum material on the Prayer Book. It reveals a strong preference for teaching facts about the book instead of going on from there to suggest rich purposeful experiences with the book. My friends, to use Christian language just to give us the satisfaction of receiving the sounds of printed symbols back again from children is an abuse of Christian language. Language is to be used not only for memorization and recitation but also to convey, clarify or correct the meanings of words; to awaken desirable attitudes; to control emotion; to arouse commitments and challenge its recipients to reproduce within the world-wide fellowship of the Church, not only the Christian experience behind the language, but also a desirable quality of Christian experience for themselves.

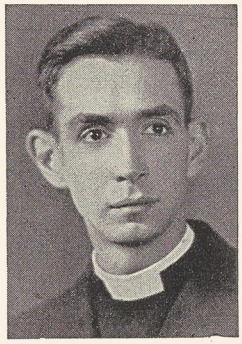
Furthermore, it is not being suggested here that we discard indoctrination in sound Christian content. If we don't do this "the world, the flesh and the devil" will. Children seldom get fed up with Christian truth. It is what we leave out in our spirit and methods of presenting Christian truth that gets children fed up with it. This over-accenting, this letting children drift into the getting of misunderstood content is to my mind one of the chief causes for all this unchecked rise in secular learning. It is one of the reasons why our bishops across the country have to keep speaking to us about lapsed communicants by the thousands and one of the chief factors as to why too many communicants are giving five dollars to the Church's universal mission when they should be giving fifty dollars. How can we expect young people to relate with conviction the rites and teachings of the Church to their worship, to their individual and social problems, if the significances and emotional drives within the rites and teachings of the Church are well nigh un-thought-about and un-tried-out forms to them?

Now I know that considerable parts of the historic Christian revelation have to be taken on faith. I am one who is glad there always will be mystery in "The Mighty Acts of God" to beckon us to come and search for more of the eternal truth therein. I also firmly believe that "spiritual things are spiritually discerned" and "The Holy Spirit shall take of mine and show it unto you." But I also remember our Lord saying, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind." Therefore, in our pupil-teacher relationships let us by all means count on the former but let us by all means not forget the divine demand of the latter.



If we must err here, let us select better. Let us even reduce the amount of content we strive to teach, to give us more time to guide our children into the intents and intended experiences within the forms. Oh I realize what some of you are saying, "we don't always know the meanings of these holy words." Some of you tell me that you skip the hard words Ah, but if you do this, your children will interpret your silences. So don't bluff, don't bluff. Your rector should be approachable enough and never too busy to give you the help you deserve here. And perhaps this matter I am raising, if taken seriously at your next teachers meeting, might raise it from the dead.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.

"What Hath God Wrought"

ANYONE who has been a leader of classes or conferences on Christian worship has come up against this question from his listeners: Why do Roman Catholics attend their Church's worship more faithfully and dutifully than do Protestants (including, of course, Episcopalians)? Some people have a very ready answer to this. Roman Catholics, they say, are afraid not to go, not only because of the penalties imposed by their Church, but also because of a dread of the consequences in the life after death. I should not for a moment wish to deny that there is an element of truth in this answer; but it is such a partial truth as to be well-nigh a distortion. Most of us count many Roman Catholics among our friends. It is safe to say that we seldom, if ever, meet them on their way to mass showing any sign of being under the tension of fear or dread. Quite the contrary, they appear most happy to be about their Father's business.

No, the difference in this: Roman Catholics believe something very important, indeed a thing most important, always happens in the Church's worship. Too many Protestants do not. The fault is not with the Protestant theory of worship, which is as sound in principle and as objectively centered in God's living and redeeming word as is the Catholic mass. Rather the fault is in the devotional attitudes and habits which are allowed to pass among so many Protestants, who have otherwise a very respectable "standing" in the Church. When we meet a professing Christian who says he does not go to Church regularly because "he gets so little out of it" or because the minister does not speak to his heart and need, he reveals a sad reversal of values. The obvious answer to him is that "he gets so little out of it" because he doesn't go with the intention of giving very much to it. He fails to understand that common worship is an act of offering, doing with Christ the work of Christ, manifesting before God and the world his salvation, and "filling up that which is lacking in Christ's sufferings for His Body's sake, which is the Church" (cf. Col. 1:24).

(the publication of which by the Dacre Press is the outstanding event in liturgics this year) has with the support of his massive learning and moving eloquence brought home to us the central place of the eucharistic action as the very essence of the life of the Church. Speaking of the contrast between Christian worship in the age of persecution and the pagan mysteries, which, as Aristotle said, men attended "not to learn something but to experience something," Dom Gregory says: "The Christian came to the eucharist, not indeed 'to learn something,' for faith was presupposed, but certainly not to seek a psychological thrill. He came simply to do something, which he conceived he had an overwhelming personal duty to do, come what might. What brought him to the eucharist week by week, despite all dangers and inconveniences, was no thrill provoked by the service itself, which was bare and unimpressive to the point of dullness, and would soon lose any attraction of novelty. Nor yet was it a longing for personal communion with God, which he could and did fulfil otherwise in his daily communion from the reserved sacrament at home. What brought him was an intense belief that in the eucharistic action of the Body of Christ, as in no other way, he himself took a part in that act of sacrificial obedience to the will of God which was consummated on Calvary and which had redeemed the world, including himself. What brought him was the conviction that there rested on each of the redeemed an absolute necessity so to take his own part in the self-offering of Christ, a necessity more binding even than the instinct of self-preservation" (p. 153).

The liturgy is the celebration of what God hath wrought and what God continually works in the members of his son. Something always happens in this celebration, be our faith ever so frail, and however we may "feel" at the time. The work of man's redemption is set forth, and because this is so it is a Christian's "bounden duty and service" to assist in this work and to realize his status as a living member of Christ's holy Church. As the dark night of envy, hatred, malice and fear settles upon our world, there is no place for a Christian to grope for some future revelation of God's redeeming purposes. The liturgy reminds him of the fact that in Christ evil has already been conquered, Satan has been overthrown, the sting of death has been taken away and the gate of paradise opened wide. So with "boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him" he may come joyfully, courageously, resolutely, "strong in the Lord and in the power of His might" to win with Christ in the holy mystery of perfect self-oblation the victory which overcometh the world.

War Service and Church Unity

by C. Leslie Glenn

Chaplain in the United States Navy

WHAT effect has experience in the armed services had on Church unity? 1. It has made men more sympathetic to other churches. 2. It has made them have a warmer loyalty to their own church. I write these two apparently contradictory effects together because they have to be discussed as a paradox.

We are thinking of men who have the root of the matter in them and want an opportunity to worship God. These men have had to take whatever service was provided by the chaplain assigned to them, whether Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, Roman Catholic, or Lutheran. In Bible classes and informal discussions they have seen how other Christians hold the truth. If they have the root of the matter in them, and this must be emphasized, they have recognized in widely divergent forms the universal experience of Christ.

It annoys an Episcopalian to hear a Baptist say, "There was a real message in that hymn we just sang, fellows. Let's hum the last verse over again, very softly," and it disappoints a Baptist to find an Episcopalian limited to these words on the ship's public address system after a battle: "We yield thee praise and thanksgiving for our deliverance from those great and apparent dangers wherewith we were compassed. We acknowledge it thy goodness that we were not delivered over as a prey unto them. . . ."

In spite of these and more serious differences, each has testified on innumerable occasions that his heart has been warmed by the devotion of his fellow Christian of a quite different Church. If he were capable of so precise a statement, Isaac Pemington's words in the 17th century would be his: "All truth is shadow except the last truth. But all truth is substance in its own place, though it be but shadow in another place. And the shadow is a true shadow, as the substance is a true substance."

But men have grown fonder of their own Church in the war. Whenever they run across a chaplain of their faith in conversation or in public worship there is a stirring of childhood memories and all the old familiar ways. When Episcopalians have an opportunity to make their communions with one of their own priests, according to the Book of Common Prayer, there is renewed devotion, not only to Christ, but to that part of His Church represented by the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Practically, it means that the average soldier or sailor will be glad to get back to his own Church, but he will also say quite vehemently that he met plenty of fine Christians in other Churches. And practically also, if he moves to a new community after the war, where he does not find a branch of his Church, he will not have difficulty in settling into a different branch of the Christian Church.

Every clergyman must be prepared to find that the communicant veterans that move out of his parish won't necessarily transfer to an Episcopal church in the place they move to, but by the same token, many non-Episcopalian veterans moving into his parish will come to the Episcopal church.

It should not be summed up by saying that denominational lines have been weakened, but that appreciation of other denominations has been strengthened. Veterans won't love their own Church less, but will love other Churches more. And that is a positive factor in church unity.

The thoughtful ones realize that unity does not mean uniformity. Informed ones know that in the undivided church, before the Reformation, there was more liberty of expression than in any of the Protestant churches or the Roman church after the Reformation.

3. It has made Protestants realize afresh the reason for the Reformation.

The full story of what the average Episcopalian (both lay and clerical) has learned in the armed services, from close contact with a non-Protestant Church, will take space in the Church papers for a long time to come. Here we are concerned only with the effect of this first-hand knowledge on Church unity.

The Episcopalian differs from other Protestants in that he has no horror of Rome. He does not mind attending her services when there are no others, and he will go readily to her priests. (In this way, he has learned how high is their average of manliness and consecration.) For this reason it is fair to say that the Episcopalian returns from war with a fairly objective estimate of Rome, and as a result, he is once more glad for the Reformation. As the late D. B. Updike used to say about Church restoration in architecture, "If you restore something, you will see why they took it down in the first place."

There is no open conflict. On the contrary, my observation is that socially, the Episcopal chaplain gets along very well with his Roman Catholic brother. But the outlines of spiritual totalitarianism begin to appear as soon as they leave the ward-room. This is noticed also by the Episcopal layman, who usually likes the Roman chaplain. Yet he feels, although he does not have the terms to give reasons for it, that the differences between Protestants are superficial, the difference with Rome is profound.

The effect of this on Church unity is clear—veterans sense that Rome is completely distinct from the rest of the Catholic Church, and Rome herself insists that she is and repeats it in many ways. Hence veterans are bound to be impatient if any possible unity is postponed among other branches of the Catholic Church for the purpose of waiting for the Roman branch. The same day by day living together and fighting together which has shown the essential unity of Protestants has also shown the hopeless alienation from Rome. And this may hasten unity, for it has destroyed for many men the hope of finding terms with the Pope other than unconditional surrender.

4. It has underlined the great practical dangers of disunity.

Because they did not act together, the Protestant Churches were never able to do as much for Protestants as the Roman Catholic Church or the Jewish welfare board did for their relatively much smaller groups. By this is not meant bringing political pressure or securing privileges. We discount the tales of quick access to influential ears that certain Churches are supposed to have had. Even if true, such influence is undesirable. And unnecessary for the army and navy are scrupulously fair. Such intolerance as existed here against Protestants, there against Catholics, and in another place against Jews, was corrected as quickly as reported.

NO, THE failure of Protestantism was not that it wasn't enough of a political unit, but that it never brought into action its full ministry. This point is not appreciated by all ranks like the first three, but is an observation of Church leaders. They see what a tragedy our disunity was in the face of the opportunity of the war, and this additional evidence will be a factor making for unity.

Individual Protestant Churches did all they could as individual Churches, but there was a limit to this. The fullest ministry could only be exercised in co-operation. It was as if we were being forced to work together or be restricted.

Some Church leaders held that the only thing that was forcing us to work together was a government that had thoughtlessly lumped all Christian non-Roman Catholic Churches into one category, but it is clear that even if the Episcopal Church had been allowed to operate in a separate and distinct ministry it could not possibly have covered the army and navy. Sheer numbers precluded it. The question was a purely academic one as far as this war is concerned, although it is a fair question for the future.

For all the Churches in this war, it was cooperate or limit your ministry. There was no way, for example, of reaching all Episcopalians with Church war crosses or prayer books unless we distributed them through chaplains of all Churches, since only one Episcopalian in twelve ever saw an Episcopal chaplain. There was no way by which the Lutheran Church could reach its men on my ship interested in the ministry except through me. And no Church official could visit only the Episcopal chaplains, or only the Baptist chaplains. He had to visit all Protestants in the name of all Protestantism, or not come at all. Consequently, for quite a while, nobody came at all, though greatly needed.

So haphazard was the joint effort at the start that letters or printed material of interest to all chaplains could be sent only by the slow method of securing the list of each church separately. Of course, the war or navy department could address all chaplains, but we are discussing the direct communication of the Church with all her ministers in the services, such as Rome had with all her priests, or the Jewish welfare board with all her rabbis. As an instance the work of peace study under John Foster Dulles' leadership reached the soldiers only through the public press in months old papers. Here was the Federal Council of Churches carrying on a magnificent program of education and having no way of informing its members under arms.

The heroic work which Bishop Sherrill did for our own Church as chairman of the Episcopal commission, he and Dr. Pugh of the Presbyterian Church were unable to do in the General Commission until the last six months of the war, because of the lag in all cooperative efforts. Thus failure to act unitedly meant that the enlisted man (depending upon his chaplain) was cut off from the stream of American Church life, since his own Church acting alone, could not keep him in touch with it. The disunity of Protestantism had grave practical consequences in what was left undone.

a. Here in the army and navy was the largest concentration of young men and women the world has ever seen.

b. For a long time, up to five years! People were bemused by the memory of the last war—over in 18 months. The interim efforts that were made by Protestant Churches acting individualistically shows that they never grasped the immensity of the numbers and the time.

c. The government pleaded for chaplains and more chaplains, and while it did not make adequate provisions for getting enough older men, it gave chaplains every opportunity for influencing personnel. But Protestantism never supplied all the government was willing to take. Christian missionaries were asked for a whole generation of men, at no expense to the Church, to be with them for an average of three years, and the Church did not supply the man power! There are several reasons, but no list of reasons is complete without the phrase disunity of Protestantism.

d. Over ten thousand Protestant chaplains were able to serve, and then the Christian Church lost them. I don't mean they did not make up their salaries, pay their pension premiums, keep positions open and follow them with prayers and affection. I am talking about a further practical step for the Church's benefit. These ten thousand clergy were in key places of influence for the future. The Church by letter and above all by visitation, should have kept them inspired and informed, just as for instance civilian Episcopal clergy are inspired and informed by their brethren and Bishops and by our Presiding Bishop. The chaplains were cut off from the Church's life at the very moment when they had the greatest opportunity to transmit that life. And no list of reasons is complete that omits disunity of Protestantism, for it was impossible for the Churches in this vast field to visit independently.

e. One important detail in this is the procurement of men for the ministry. The war seriously curtailed the supply of Protestant ministers. There are spiritual advantages for our future seminarians in that they were in the armed services instead of colleges through these war years, but somehow the loss in numbers must be made up of those whose education was put off by the war. Or to put it positively, the Church might have recruited many more men for a great advance in the ministry from those touched by the war.

To do this would have meant encouraging the chaplains to do it, and sending them materials and reminders and visiting them. And that was the precise job which a disunited Protestantism seemed incapable of doing, except at the very end of the war, and in an inadequate way.

These considerations weigh on the minds, not of Christian G.I.'s, but of Church leaders among them, and will be a negative factor making for unity. In the face of such an opportunity our disunity was appalling. War experience may be another means by which God's grace seriously lays to our hearts the great dangers we are in by our unhappy divisions.

Clergy of Massachusetts Want Bomb Internationalized

Urge a Three Power Conference to Prevent An Armament Race Through Planned Control

Edited by Sara Dill

Boston:—The Massachusetts Clerical Association, comprising 240 clergymen of the diocese, passed a resolution by unanimous action on November 13 calling upon President Truman to call a conference at once of representatives of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States, to devise ways of controlling atomic energy internationally. The resolution was later unanimously approved by the social service department of the diocese.

The resolution first stated that:

"1. The use of the atomic bomb marks the discovery of the most destructive force known to mankind.

"2. Any attempt to formulate our foreign policy on the basis of temporary superiority in atomic weapons will force other nations, as well as ourselves, into an atomic armaments race.

"3. A domestic policy providing for free scientific investigation and discussion as well as public surveillance and criticism of the application of atomic energy, is the best guarantee that peace will be secured and that the public will be given full use of any scientific developments which, furthered under government sponsorship, belong primarily to the people.

The resolution then declared that "1. A system of international control and cooperation be established in order to safeguard world peace, and

"We urge that the President of the United States immediately invite the governments of Great Britain and the Soviet Union to a conference to prevent a competitive armament race, to plan international control of mankind's most devastating weapon, and jointly to utilize international machinery to make available to all people the peace-time benefits of atomic energy.

"2. That a domestic policy for the control and development of atomic energy, in harmony with an international system of control and cooperation, be established by the President and the Congress of the United States providing for scientific freedom and a peace-time utilization of atomic energy in the interests of the people as a whole."

Following the meeting the Rev. Howard Kellett, executive secretary of the social service department, stated that during the discussion a number of speakers expressed the hope "that some of the other brethren will do something about it" by passing similar resolutions and sending copies to the President and their representatives in Congress.

Van Dusen Inaugurated

New York:—The Rev. Henry Pitney Van Dusen was inaugurated president of Union Seminary in special ceremonies November 14-15. Attending were 300 delegates of universities and seminaries. A dinner in honor of the new president was held when the speakers were John Foster Dulles, Congressman Walter Judd of Minnesota and the Rev. John A. MacKay, president of Princeton Seminary. Van Dusen is a Presbyterian minister who is also a confirmed member of the Episcopal Church.

Invited to Russia

Vancouver, B. C. (RNS):—The Rt. Rev. H. E. Sexton, Anglican Bishop of British Columbia, has been invited by George Zarouin, Soviet Ambassador to Canada, to visit Russia in December. Bishop Sexton has not indicated as yet whether he will be able to make the trip.

Tito Wasn't There

London (wireless to RNS):—Patriarch Gavrilo, head of the Serbian Orthodox Church, officiated here when the infant Crown Prince of Yugoslavia was baptized according to Greek Orthodox rites in Westminster Abbey, with King George VI of Britain acting as godfather. It was the first time that the sacramental rites of another Church were performed in the Anglican cathedral. Present at the baptism were King George II of Greece, Princess Helen of Serbia, Princess Aspasia of Greece, the Duchess of Kent, and godmother Princess Elizabeth heir apparent to the British throne. Assisting Patriarch Gavrilo were Serbian Bishop Nikolai and Archbishop Germanos, of the Greek Orthdox Church.

The British monarch carried the infant three times around the baptismal font before Patriarch Gavrilo anointed him with holy oil. He was then immersed three times in warm water and given the name of Alexander, after his grandfather, Alexander I. Overhead was suspended the sacred ikon of St. Sava, Serbian national saint, which was brought to England for the occasion.

In acting as godfather, King George VI fulfilled a promise made when he served as best man at the wedding of the Crown Prince's parents, King Peter and Queen Alexandra. In the Serbian Church, this entails an obligation to be godfather to any children of the marriage. The British monarch was dressed in an ornate naval uniform.

Study France

New York:—The men's club of Holy Trinity held on November 5 the second forum in a series to consider the Allied Nations, with France considered. The leaders were Prof. Andre Mesnard of Columbia University and Mme. Pierre Chareau, English born, who has spent a large part of her life in France. The evening before a special service was held honoring France at which the Rev. John A. Maynard, rector of the French Church, L'Elise du Saint Esprit, was the preacher.

Day of Penance

Berlin (wireless to RNS):—An appeal to cleanse "our personal and public lives" has been made by the Brandenburg synod of the Evangelical Church of Germany which urged special emphasis this year on Busstag, traditional day of penance in Germany, to be observed November 21.

The message was issued to the Brandenburg parishes, all of which, except three sectors in Berlin, lie in the Russian occupation zone, and was drawn up at a meeting of the synod in Spandau, British-controlled area of the German capital. It was the first statement made by the church body since the war began.

"We Germans," the message said, "have removed the Ten Commandments from our public life and have acted contrary to the law of God. Now we are reaping the consequences of our deeds. We have become a godless, outlawed people. But God's word also calls us to the cleansing of our personal and public lives. All the innocent blood shed cries to God against us, all the blasphemy against his holy name, all the inhumanities which took place in our midst, especially against the Jews."

The Brandenburg synod supported Pastor Martin Niemoeller during 1933 in the first open church resistance against National Socialism. Thirteen out of fifteen members of its governing council were arrested by the Nazis, including Pastor Hans Scharf of Oranienberg who recently returned from a war prisoner camp in Italy.

Another to Moscow

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—Transfer of the Mukachevsko-Priashovsky diocese of the Serbian Orthodox Church to the jurisdiction of the Russian Orthodox Church was announced here by Georgi G. Karpov, chairman of the Soviet Council on Orthodox Church Affairs. This is believed to be the first development of its kind affecting Orthodox churches in two friendly countries.

Petition for transfer to the Moscow Patriarchate was made last December by a delegation of Serbian church leaders from Mukachevo, northeast Galicia, once part of the old Austrian-Hungarian empire, and now under Russian occupation. The petition was signed by Deputy Bishop Abbot Feofan Sabov and twenty priests of the Mukachevsko-Priashevsky diocese, and was declared to represent the wishes of all its Orthodox clergy.

Tito Attacks Hierarchy

Belgrade (by wireless to RNS):—Marshal Tito, premier of Jugoslavia, has published an open letter here charging that the Roman Catholic hierarchy is "deeply hostile toward the new federated Jugoslavia." His statement, which appeared in THE VOICE, official organ of the Jugoslav National Front, was in reply to a recent pastoral letter signed by all bishops in the country.

The bishops had protested religious persecutions which allegedly have taken place throughout the country, complaining especially against "false accusations" of war guilt crimes which had been made against ecclesiastics. The hierarchy urged that an impartial international commission be formed to conduct trials of persons accused as war criminals. "The enemies of the Catholic Church," the pastoral stated, "being also the followers of materialistic communism, which the entire Croatian nation with one assent rejects, have in our Croatia, exterminated with fire and sword priests and the more eminent of the faithful."

Marshal Tito warned the Jugoslav prelates that "there are laws forbidding sowing chauvinism and discord and endangering the achievements of the great liberation fight." He said that in the bishops' pastoral letter "roves the old spirit of sowing hatred among peoples, not only against people of another faith, but also among Croats themselves."

"The best proof that there is no persecution of the Church in Jugoslavia," he added, "is that all the authors of the letter enjoy freedom and that up till now nobody has hindered them in their destructive work. Speaking in Zabreb with representatives of the Church, I expressed my wish for collaboration and loyalty from the Church in the new Jugoslavia and showed my readiness for friendly solution of all questions between church and state, but I did not promise any concessions to the Church at the people's expense, nor anything in disagreement with the spirit of the new federated Jugoslavia. I emphasized that we remain faithful to the policy not to touch freedom of faith and work of the Church for the benefit of the people. I expected at the same time that the bishops would take the lead so that by pacification of spirits the last traces of the disgrace the Ustashis put on the Croatian people would be removed, but that was a mistake, and the pastoral letter is proof."

Ecumenical Service

Berlin (wireless to RNS):—A strong plea for unity among Christians was voiced by Archbishop Alexander of the Russian Orthodox Church at the first ecumenical service held here since the beginning of the war. The service took place in St. Mary's Church, a slightly-damaged Evangelical sanctuary in the Russian sector of Berlin. Archbishop Alexander, who was accompanied by two other representatives of the Russian Church, asserted that "all branches of the Christian Church must unite against the forces of ill will and hatred in the world," and that "we must forget our separation and affirm those things which unite us."

In welcoming the ecumenical representatives, Bishop Otto Dibelius of the Evangelical Church of Germany, said that a similar meeting would have been impossible after the first world war. "That such a meeting can be held," he declared, "is a tribute to the great world leaders who during the last two decades taught belief in the Holy Universal Church."

Dr. G. K. A. Bell, Anglican Bishop of Chichester, was the principal speakers. A member of the World Council of Churches, he also heads relations with churches abroad for the Church of England.

After the service, huge throngs milled at the church entrance to greet Pastor Martin Niemoeller, making his first visit to north Berlin after eight years in concentration camps.

Look to Ministry

New York:—From Bishop Norman S. Binsted in the Philippines a letter has been received in the office of the Presiding Bishop's committee on the postwar ministry. Bishop Binsted writes:

"One of the most delightful parts of my work now is the hours that I spend with churchmen in the armed forces who are good enough to call on me. I have had interviews with at least twenty-five postulants or candidates for orders. In addition I have had several conferences with men who feel strongly that they have the vocation for the ministry but have not yet become postulants. With one or two exceptions all are of the highest type which makes me feel most hopeful for the future of the Church.

"It is reasonable to think that some of these men, after they have completed their studies, will wish to return to the mission fields with which they have become acquainted during their life in the army. I take every opportunity to acquaint all the churchmen who come to the house with the work in this field and the other fields known to me. I feel that this is an opportunity which seldom comes to the Church. I think we spend an average of eight to ten hours a day with the G.I.'s who call on us.

"It is especially gratifying to me to meet all Church chaplains, who, without exception, are doing splendid work. Their work is appealing not only to men in our own Church; when one sees their work at first hand, he realizes what a strong appeal our Church makes to men with various religious backgrounds. There is no doubt in my mind that our Church, with its dignified service and fine leadership, has something to offer which the men in the armed forces find helpful when they are facing the issues of life and death.

Life in Service

Boston:—A WAVE assigned to hospital duty in Honolulu was much impressed by the work of the Church there. She wrote about it to her home rector who passed her letter on to the army and navy commission.

"My first Sunday out found me in St. Andrew's Cathedral. It was communion and I wish you could have heard the singing. The choir was made up of Japanese, Chinese, Hawaiians and Americans of the U. S. All were clad in brilliant choir robes of a red orange against an altar of white marble. Each child and adult sat side by side singing praises to Christ. Soldier, sailor, marines, all sat side by side.

"The following Sunday I went to our chapel service here. It was then I thought about home. My thoughts were not of a very pleasant kind because I was wondering just how many folks back home had remembered the day to be Sunday. Yet around me were boys standing against a crutch, reading the prayers with a patch over one eye, holding a hymnal with only one arm. That chapel was so crowded that we had marines standing outside the doors and in the aisle. Most of these boys were without a complete set of clothing. One boy with a locked jaw asked if he could go to church. He was afraid he couldn't because he had no tie. As you know, our boys are never turned away from church because of such details. Later on this same fellow saw me and said, 'Do you know why I didn't receive communion Sunday?' It never dawned on me to ask him that question. He told me he really wanted to receive, but couldn't open his mouth enough to accept the wafer. Little things like that are the things that wake us up and make us think about our blessings and our good fortune. Back home I just wonder how many lifted themselves out of their beds to give a second's thought to God who has given them everything. After seeing as I have seen, no excuse is good enough for me when folks say 'I was too tired to go to church this morning'."

Friendly Relations

Paris (wireless to RNS):—Promotion of friendly relations between Protestants and Roman Catholics in France was urged by speakers at a meeting of the General Assembly of French Protestantism at Nimes. Guests at the meeting included W. A. Visser t' Hooft, of Geneva, general secretary of the World Council of Churches. Two former war prisoners among the delegates asserted that one lesson their captivity had taught them was the need for closer relationships between Catholicism and Protestantism in France. The Protestant attitude, they declared, should be one of "fidelity to convictions, but also fraternal charity and understanding." Another speaker, Pastor Jean Bosc, asserted that with the moral position in France "as grave as it is," only a return to Christian principles "can ensure a real national renaissance."

Experts on Race

LaGrange, Ill.:—Social science experts are being employed by the Congregational-Christian Churches to serve as counselors to cities in which racial tensions arise, it was reported to the annual meeting here of the denomination's American board of foreign missions. Declaring that tensions between Negroes and whites will be one of the major problems of the next few years, Alfred Grant Walton of Brooklyn, N. Y., president of the Congregational board of home missions, told the delegates that the social science staff had been organized to be called into areas where race riots seem imminent.

"The Negro will never give up the gains he has achieved," Walton said, "but there are certain to be those who will resist him and attempt to thwart his efforts to realize the justice to which he is entitled."

Shelter for Homeless

Sydney, Australia (RNS):—The Rt. Rev. E. H. Burgmann, Bishop of Goulburn, has gained wide public support for his demand that the federal government take drastic steps to provide immediate shelter for homeless people in Australia. Bishop Burgmann is the first Church leader to speak out on this crucial situation.

World Council Relief

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Prof. Joseph L. Hromadka, who is on leave from Princeton University, has been named by the World Council of Churches here to take charge of the Council's material relief program in Czechoslovakia. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the Council, said that consideration was being given to the possibility of sending goods to Czechoslovakia by Swiss airplanes, because of the acute need which exists in that country.

In a telegram to Mr. Sylvester C. Michelfelder, commissioner of the American section of the Lutheran world convention, who is heading the Council's new division of material aid, Professor Hromadka said he was compiling a list of needy persons and groups. He urged immediate delivery of heifers, mules, bicycles, wheat and other goods.

Mr. Hromadka, who has been in Europe for about four months, was recently elected persident of the student Christian movement in Czechoslovakia.

Vestrymen to Recruit

Chicago:—Bishop Conkling has asked vestrymen of the diocese to bring him 500 men for confirmation in February, the 5th anniversary of his consecration. "The growth of the Church is largely dependent upon the witness of her laymen," the bishop stated in making his request. "A single word from a layman to the unchurched means ten times more than it would from a clergyman. We are a self-contained, self-satisfied Church. We are not producing children. Unless we can bring ourselves to greater witness to the faith we love the picture of the Church in the future is a sad one."

Parish Clears Debt

Chicago:—The Advent here is to have a special service the first Sunday in Advent to celebrate the clearing of the debt of $35,000. The church is to be consecrated on Whitsunday by Bishop Conkling. The Rev. Gordon E. Brant is the rector.

During the past year and a half seven other parishes in the diocese have removed all indebtedness: St. Luke's, Evanston; St. Matthew's, Evanston; Christ Church, Winnetka; St. Lawrence's, Libertyville; the Annunciation, St. Thomas' and St. Alban's, all in Chicago.

Atomic Energy

New York:—Bishop Gilbert, suffragan of New York and a WITNESS editor is the chairman of a committee of church leaders which is planning a conference on the significance of atomic energy to the churches. Under the auspices of the Protestant Council the plan is to set up an organization through which the Protestant churches of the city may express most effectively their opinion on public issues.

WILLIAM E. SPRENGER
Director New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society

THE WITNESS did a splendid job for our Society (Nov. 1) and I am sure that everyone who received this paper will become conscious that New York does have a City Mission Society. There is one problem that I would like to bring to your attention with the hope that in a succeeding issue you may be able to clear it up, and that is the omission of the word "Episcopal" in referring to the Society. New York City Mission Society is the corporate title of a non-denominational organization. Since I have been here we have had two legal cases because people in wills did not mention our full title. Do you suppose there is some way to make it clear that if anyone desires to contribute or remember us in their will the money should be sent to the New York Protestant City Mission Society, 38 Bleecker Street, New York, 12, N. Y.

DANIEL E. WILLARD
Layman of Nebraska City, Nebraska

Mr. Richard McLaughlin in a recent letter to THE WITNESS states that "the objective of the United Nations Charter is world peace." He says, truly, that "to attain peace we must have the desire for peace deep rooted in our hearts." That is absolutely so. Then he says, "Many are preaching world peace but clamoring for compulsory military training" and "it is impossible to make these two things harmonize."

Here we part company. I think the great majority of the American people desire peace, love peace, desire to live and let live in peace. I think the great majority of the American people have so great desire for peace that they would be willing to fight for it if compelled by the attack of a greedy nation which attempted to wrest that peace from us by force and make us slaves. This is my sentiment. Let us love peace, seek peace, live peace. Let us love peace so much that we are willing to guarantee it by force of arms if necessary.

Mr. McLaughlin thinks there would have been no world war 2 if our leaders had taken a firm stand when Manchuria was invaded and Germany grabbed Austria and invaded Poland. I quite agree. But we were not prepared and both Germany and Japan knew it. Greed led them to think that they could overcome their neighbors before they could get ready to defend themselves. Japan thought she could overwhelm the United States before we could get ready to defend ourselves. If we had been militarily prepared by previous training of our young men it seems to me there would have been no war. We sought peace but it was known we had no big stick. A good big stick does not necessarily mean a large standing army. It rather means a large body of trained men who can be quickly called to their country's service in time of necessity.

It seems to me that a sensible system of universal military training would be a guaranty of peace. Mr. McLaughlin says we cannot have this and world peace. I do not see why. I do not see how we can be assured of world peace unless we have military training. Mr. McLaughlin thinks physical fitness can be obtained by other means. What means, pray tell, will train men to take care of themselves on the field of battle or foxholes but vigorous military training? College gymnasia and football fields are a poor parallel to the terrible conditions of the battle front. When attack comes, and it has come intermittently between nations since the world began, talking peace but not carrying a big stick will not stop greed which has been the cause of wars throughout the history of the world.

About intinction: There is another factor besides sanitation, especially in the larger churches. The use of two cups is almost as slow as the traditional method, and one of the problems when communicating over 100 people is that of time. A method which has become popular in many places is to ask the people who wish to receive by intinction to come first, and the priest administers the wafers after dipping them in the wine, going down the row just once. This combined operation has the value of simplicity (no accidents, no psychological barriers, no worry about method by the communicant), of elimination of sense of hurry (because one trip suffices), and of actual saving of about half the time it usually takes. Then, those who wish to receive in the traditional manner come afterwards, with the usual method. There are two disadvantages to this method: inadvertantly, the damp wafer may leave a trace of wine on the hand, and it separates the methods with obvious movements (sheep from goats, as Hal Hallett criticises). But, in my opinion, the advantages far exceed the disadvantages. The combination of sanitation, no accidents, less loss of time, and reverence makes for a satisfying spiritual experience. It eliminates the problem of communicants' leaving the church while others are communicating; it helps where there is a shortage of assistant priests; and it increases the number of those receiving. And in most congregations, from 75% to 100% prefer the option of intinction!

Editorial Board Asks a Few Questions of Readers

The Information Gathered from Subscribers Will Be Basis for Possible Improvements

By the Editors

New York:—The editorial board of this magazine has sent a questionnaire to a sampling of 1,000 subscribers with the hope of getting information to guide them in the improvement of the paper. We made no selection of names but did a blind sampling. We now want to give those who did not receive the questionnaire an opportunity to state their opinions and we will greatly appreciate your cooperation if you can find the time to jot down your answers and mail them to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

1. Is our coverage of Church news adequate?

2. Do you feel obliged to take another paper in order to get adequate news?

3. THE WITNESS is three dollars a year; The Living Church is five dollars. A check of numbers of the two papers for any given week will reveal that we both offer about the same news. But for five dollars, and therefore more pages, The Living Church is able to give greater detail in reporting. Should we advance our price to five dollars a year in order to give you 24 to 32 pages an issue instead of 20?

4. We subscribe to Religious News Service (items marked RNS). We have been printing a fairly large amount of their releases, particularly news from foreign countries. Should we continue this policy or would you prefer greater emphasis on Episcopal Church news: dioceses, parishes, etc.?

5. Our space is now about evenly divided between news on the one hand and articles and editorials on the other. Would you change this ratio?

6. Would you like more pictures, keeping in mind that to do so would mean less space to news and articles?

7. Comment freely on our columns (Living Liturgy, Dramatic Arts, For Church School Teachers, Books, Talking It Over, Sanctuary); also make suggestions for possible features.

8. Do you approve our editorial policy which can perhaps best be described as liberal and progressive on Church unity, race relations, international affairs, labor?

9. Please offer any suggestions for the improvement of format.

10. Please add any other comments you care to make.

In sending in your answers we will be glad to have your name if you care to give it but it is not necessary.

The answers we are sure will aid us in making THE WITNESS a more useful and attractive paper. A report based upon the answers will be presented in due time.

Washington:—Crewmen on a big aircraft carrier try to forget. Some play cards; others try to sleep; some just sit and think. This is one of a series of ten pictures we are running on our covers, taken at sea by Fons Iannelli who was one of fifteen picked photographers assigned to a special navy photo unit under the direction of Captain Edward J. Steichen.

MEMORIAL REREDOS DEDICATED

Binghamton, N. Y.:—A reredos and chancel was dedicated on November 18th at Trinity Church here to the memory of the Rev. Wilson E. Tanner, rector from 1918 to 1943. Mr. Tanner served in many civic and social welfare capacities during his ministry in the city and was an able preacher and speaker, a beloved pastor, a faithful priest, loved and respected by all who knew him.

MEMORIAL DEDICATED AT ST. JAMES'

New York:—A memorial to the 675 men and women of the parish who took part in world war two was dedicated on November 18 at St. James' Church by the rector, the Rev. H. W. B. Donegan. A high relief of St. George, the memorial is the gift of Vestryman Edwin S. S. Sunderland and was designed and executed by Katharine T. Hobson, a member of the parish and a sister of Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio.

Mr. Donegan in his sermon stated that the Church must concern itself with controversial matters like industry, race relations and international affairs if it is to have the respect of people and particularly those of the younger generation.

Get-Together

THE story about the difficulty chaplains are having in locating parishes (Nov. 15) has brought letters from a number of parishes stating that they are seeking a clergyman. THE WITNESS believes that it may be of service to clergymen, particularly chaplains, and also parishes by providing a get-together. Thus a parish in the New York area is seeking an assistant, preferably a former chaplain: salary $3,000; apartment; maintenance of car. . . . A city missions society in a mid-western city is seeking for an additional clergyman for its staff. . . . Another parish in the New York area, an industrial city, is looking for a clergyman as assistant; $2,000 to start with apartment. Clergymen interested should write Get-Together, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. Parishes or bishops seeking men, particularly former chaplains, may have their needs printed here if they will send a few details. This department is an experiment and will be continued only if the number of letters, both from clergymen seeking positions and parishes seeking clergymen, indicate that there is a need for it.

MATERIAL AID PROGRAM IN PENNSYLVANIA

Philadelphia: — A Church material aid program was launched in the diocese of Pennsylvania on November 16th to give aid to Churches in Asia and Europe. Bishop Hart, speaking at the meeting, stated that "It is a difficult thing and the day is far distant when we can get the Church working together on a theological basis but here is a practical way to show what it means to have a universal and ecumenical Church. It is simply beyond imagination to realize what it will mean to these people when these things come to them."

The Rev. Almon Pepper, social service secretary of the National Council, declared that the Churches in the United States, cooperating on relief through the World Council of Churches, seek $6,500,000 for 1945-46. He declared that "the Episcopal Church seems prepared to play its proper part in the cooperating Church program." However this statement hardly seems to be borne out by the facts since, to quote Mr. Pepper, "the current campaign of the Reconstruction and Advance Fund includes $350,000 for aid to sister Churches, which amount will only be assured if the Fund is over-subscribed."

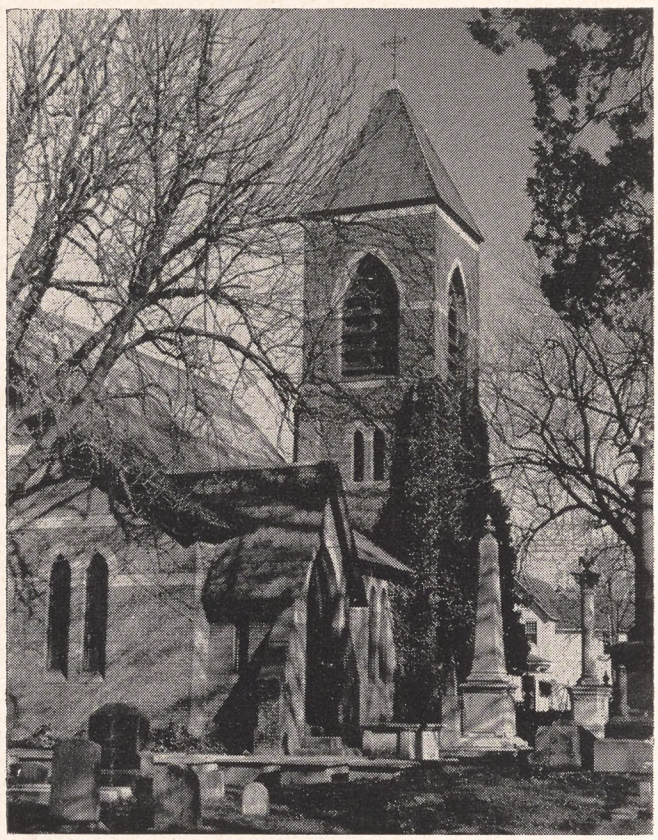
In other words, the people of the Episcopal Church are asked for $5,000,000 for the Episcopal Church, with nothing going to overseas Churches where "food, goods and materials are desperately needed" unless the Fund is over-subscribed.

Mrs. George A. Trowbridge is the chairman of the Pennsylvania committee which is under the auspices of the social service department of the Woman's Auxiliary.

CHURCHMEN RETURN FROM JAPAN

San Francisco:—Japan is "wide open for the Christian gospel" declared the four delegates of Protestanism who arrived here Nov. 21 after four weeks in Japan and Korea. They addressed a mass meeting to tell the story soon after leaving their plane. The four are Douglas Horton, chairman of the American section of the World Council of Churches; Bishop James C. Baker, Methodist; Luman Shafer of the Foreign Missions Conference and Walter Van Kirk of the Federal Council of Churches. A more detailed report will follow next week.

CHRISTMAS PACKAGES ON THE WAY



New York: — Church Christmas packages, 32,000 of them, have left New York for Asia, the first of 160,000 cartons which American non-Roman Churches are sending to Europe and Asia. The project is directed by the material aid committee of the Church Committee on Overseas Relief and Reconstruction. Of the first shipment 8,000 are on their way to Burma; 8,000 will reach Manila early in December and 16,000 are consigned to Shanghai.

MISSION SERVICE CELEBRATED

Edmonton, Alb. (RNS): — One hundred years of missionary service by the Baptist, Anglican, Presbyterian, and United Churches of Canada were commemorated in the second annual world missionary conference here. Twenty-two missionaries from India, South Africa, British Guiana, China, Spain, Nigeria, Alaska, Sierra Leone, Bolivia, and Rhodesia participated in the program. One of the highlights of the observance was a youth rally in which young people of Chinese, Russian, Japanese, and many other nationalities took part in a pageant entitled, "Edmonton: the Crossroads of the World."

CHURCH CRITICIZED BY VAN DUSEN

New York (RNS): — The Rev. Henry Pitney Van Dusen, in his inaugural address as the president of Union Seminary, defined the present age as one "dominated by both the concept and the reality of tension" and declared that "men's minds today can find no unity and therefore no meaning amidst enveloping confusion" and that "they can only declare the contradictions they cannot solve." He said that theological schools react to all the various tensions in the world and he mentioned the strain between the "reality of the true Church and the actuality of our churches." He pointed out that students enter the seminaries "ardent to bear that gospel undiluted to Church and society but the insistent demands of the market, of the churches to whom these youth shall minister is "Send us no revolutionaries, no questioners of the accepted conventions, no disturbers of our comfortable complacencies'."

Chaplain Says Navy Officers Approve Brothels

He Declares Large Percentage Had Syphilis With Some of the Women Exposed to Leprosy

By Religious News Service

Washington:—Chaplain Lawrence L. Lacour, navy chaplain who is described by Congressman Howard H. Buffett (R. Neb.) as "the first navy chaplain in Japan, landing ahead of MacArthur" has charged that enlisted men visit Japanese brothels with the official permission of high navy officers. The charge, in the form of a letter, was sent to the DesMoines conference of the Methodist Church; was sent to a local newspaper and was later read over a radio station at Norfolk, Nebraska. It was then read into the Congressional Record by Congressman Buffett and has caused a stir among government officials here.

The letter, as published in the Record, follows:

Since a large percentage of the navy are reserves, many of them under 20; and we chaplains are entrusted with the moral and spiritual welfare of these men, we believe the American public should be informed when conditions and policies exist that jeopardize the morality and faith of our servicemen. As a policy of venereal-disease control, the navy is permitting unrestricted access by all men on liberty in the Yokosuka area to houses of prostitution where the venereal incidence among the prostitutes is considered 100 per cent. The control is the prophylaxis administered by naval corpsmen on duty in the house.

Since September 11, liberty parties have been permitted ashore in this area. Our ship was the first to be granted liberty and as we are tied up in the navy yard I have been able to observe the situation from the beginning. On September 2 the medical officer in charge of venereal control told me that it would be his policy to supervise the places of prostitution by examining the prostitutes, by segregating those infected, by insisting on cleanliness within the houses, and by establishing adequate numbers of prophylactic stations throughout the town.

When liberty parties went ashore men gathered the impression that the medical department had eliminated all immediate danger. Military police and naval corpsmen informed the men in the lines in front of the houses that everything was medically inspected. As a result many enlisted men and officers, including a number from our ship, had sexual contact without using any prophylaxis. Prior to sending men ashore some ships ran training films on venereal disease, and announced that a high percentage of venereal disease could be expected in Japan. On other ships the commands refused to do anything to discourage promiscuity and gave no warning about expected venereal incidence.

On September 14 it was disclosed that out of a typical group of prostitutes, 51 out of 60 had syphilis, were not being treated, that there would be no further examinations and that no policy of treatment or segregation would be followed.

Coincidental with Archbishop Spellman's visit here, by September 16 all red-light districts were declared out of bounds. A group of us chaplains inspected the restricted area after a week of suppression. We found that although the method was not totally effective, the number of offenders that got into the restricted area was small as the geographic location of the area made policing comparatively easy.

It was not so easy to suppress the freelance prostitutes and the smaller houses in the unrestricted area but there was little open violation. A man intent on sexual contact could find it but he had to exert considerable effort and run the risk of arrest. Men were treated as usual at prophylactic stations with no great threat of disciplinary action, and, during this period of suppression, the number of treatments ashore and afloat decreased remarkably.

At a meeting of the fleet medical officers on September 26 it was proposed that one large house be opened, that it be operated with the understanding that all the women were diseased, and that a voluntary system of prophylaxis be available by placing a navy-operated treatment station within the house. Although some medical officers and two chaplains in attendance protested, it was stated by the senior medical officer that this was to be the policy. Subsequently the chaplains of the fleet met and submitted to the flag a memorandum that represented the unanimous opinion of the group. The action of the chaplains was ignored and Sunday, October 7 the Yosuura house was opened to enlisted men, with geisha houses permitted to accept the patronage of chiefs and officers.

Although the number of men on liberty next day was considerably under normal because of rain, I observed, in company with four chaplains and the officer of the day of the military police, a line of enlisted men four abreast almost a block long, waiting their turn. MP's kept the lines orderly and permitted only as many as could be served to enter at a time. As men were admitted into the lobby they would select a companion on duty that day, according to one of the Japanese attendants, pay the 10 yen to the Japanese operator, and then go with the girl to her room. We inspected several of these rooms and found them to be reasonably clean. When the men returned they were registered and administered prophylaxis by navy corpsmen. Although approximately 20 men could be treated at a time, there was a line waiting. True, many of the men were the type one might expect to patronize such a place, but the bulk of the customers were younger men. The open accessibility of women in this place has been a factor contributing to the first sex experience of some of my men.

Nominations Please

AT THE end of each year THE WITNESS presents an Honor Roll of men and women who have made during the year outstanding contributions to Christian life and work. Big names come to mind at once and of course they are not disqualified for that reason. But we also hope that readers will send us the names of people who have served effectively and yet are unknown to most of us . . . the hidden saints. All readers are invited to send in nominations, with facts to guide the editorial board. All of these will be carefully considered as a special order of business of the board and the Honor Roll printed in the December 27th number. We request that all nominations be at the WITNESS office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, not later than December 15th.

When one considers the rate of disease, that there are some forms of venereal disease in the Orient that do not respond to treatment, that some of the women have been exposed to leprosy. On the basis of these facts, it is contended that:

1. The Navy's policy of unrestricted sexual opportunities with diseased women is no solution for the problem of venereal control.

2. American people would insist that the navy immediately adopt a policy of rigid suppression in regards to prostitution.

3. The navy, which completely ignored moral implications in the present situation, be charged to consider the moral aspects of policies governing personnel.

4. The people who loan their sons to the government demand moral protection or refuse to supply the personnel for our armed forces.

5. Although many naval officers are gentlemen, others by example and advice have encouraged immorality among our men.

6. The navy's unlimited sale of beer, which has contributed to moral delinquency and numerous incidents here, be discontinued. And that throughout the navy, soft drinks be made just as available as beer whenever beverages are provided by the navy.

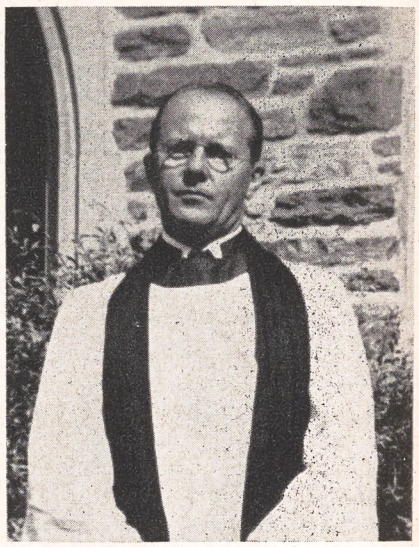
7. An organization that has dmonstrated such brilliant strategy in defeating the Japanese military not permit our men to become the open victims of Japanese prostitutes in the final round.

THANKSGIVING AT ABBEY

London: — Westminster Abbey was filled with American servicemen on November 22 for a Thanksgiving service. The Archbishop of Canterbury was the preached and John G. Winant, ambassador to Great Britain, read President Truman's Thanksgiving proclamation. The Archbishop urged international friendship and told the servicemen that they must not forget the cause for which they fought.

FINE RECEPTION FOR BISHOP HARRIS

Monrovia, Liberia:—The Weekly Mirror, newspaper published here, carried a front page story of the enthronement in Trinity Pro-Cathedral, of the Rt. Rev. Bravid W. Harris. Denominational Churches had announced that their regular services would not be held, so that their congregations could attend the service at Trinity, so that, as the Mirror comments, "the Pro-Cathedral was literally filled to overflowing, despite the recurring showers."



The President of Liberia, the secretary of state, secretary of the treasury and other government officials, as well as the United States minister to Liberia, the British charge d'affaires and representatives of the United States navy, attended.

The service, at which Bishop Harris preached, was followed by a reception and a program including addresses of welcome, presentation of a pastoral staff to the bishop and a chain to Mrs. Harris.

The Mirror referred to Bishop Harris' sermon with enthusiasm. "The text chosen was John 4:24. And in one of the most powerful, eloquent and soul-stirring sermons ever heard within the four walls of this thirty-three-year-old edifice of a parish whose history runs back to colonial days, Bishop Harris held his listeners spellbound. So captivated was the congregation by the discourse, characterized by an effortless delivery without notes or manuscript, until when the ascription was pronounced after forty minutes, it seemed as if only a bare quarter of an hour had elapsed since the bishop commenced to preach."

At the reception a speech was made by C. D. B. King, senior warden, suggesting certain specific things which Liberian Church people hope will be given careful consideration by the new bishop. These include "Restoration of our general and local convocations; reopening of Cuttington Institute or a similar theological institution anywhere within the Republic to prepare Liberian youths for the ministry of the Church; more concrete and effective steps looking toward an autonomous Liberian Church within the Anglican Communion; securing and dissemination of information concerning the whereabouts, state and condition of various district funds established by this field; better attention on the part of the Church to the many churches, chapels, schools and mission stations where native missionaries and catechists are working with little or no financial support; an annual pastoral message from our Episcopal head on the work, achievements and progress of the Church here."

In addition Mr. King said that in view of "our status as a purely missionary field, let us insist upon greater emphasis on the preaching of the word and more careful teaching of the faith and doctrine of our Church, and not so much on certain types of its ceremonial forms and ritualistic observances," and finally, "A nearer approach towards Christian fellowship with the other Protestant Churches operating in this field which will make for Christian unity and interdenominational understanding and cooperation."

WANTS MEN TO STAY IN THE ARMY

Washington:—The Rev. M. S. Sheehy, head of the department of religious education at Catholic University, speaking here after three years of service as a navy chaplain in the Pacific, stated that demobilization should be halted and that all returned veterans should re-enlist immediately. He also proposed strengthening the power of peoples friendly to the United States and recommended that the United States and England continue to share the secret of the atomic bomb "until Russia makes up her mind."

BISHOP POWELL A DIRECTOR

New York:—Bishop Powell of Maryland has been elected to the board of directors of the Church Properties Fire Insurance Corp., it was announced last week by Bradford B. Locke, president of the corporation.

EDITORIALS

Good News of Damnation

ADVENT with its mixed mood of doom and hope, of judgment and promise, concides singularly with the mood of today. Its challenge is that of Deuteronomy, "I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live." Such is the choice this generation must make; never has it been clearer. There is virtue in the fact that we are coming to recognize this; Chancellor Hutchins of the University of Chicago has well called it "The Good News of Damnation." Certainly under the present circumstances it is better to know the worst; to be faced with the certitude that if we continue to follow the path we have so far trod mankind cannot escape extinction.

There are discouraging indications that the world is "in the grip of big forces and little men." So much the more reason that those who possess, however dimly, some of the spirit of Christ must work and fight to persuade our leaders that following the old weary shibboleths will but lead us down the same blood-drenched paths. We must muster all the strength we can to convince them that we live in a new age; that a return to the discredited idea that military might, the playing of power politics, will command respect can only eventuate—as it always has—in the horror of destruction.

Advent calls for a radical break with the past; "cast away the works of darkness and put on the armor of light"; it calls for drastic action. Above all else we need light; that we must not only pray for fervently but labor to disseminate. At the moment the most light is coming from the spiritual leaders and the scientists; the latter have been roused to see that new occasions teach new duties while our political leaders fumble among the outworn methods of the past.

Yet we shall have to go still further. It has been amply demonstrated that man cannot stand on his own feet; alone he is helpless against the terrifying forces of evil that he has unleashed. As he seeks aid in his desperation he will only find it outside himself. That is the clue to history; there is simply no alternative to the power that God alone can give. The night is far spent; it may soon be too late. These weeks before Christmas should not only constantly remind us of the one way of our salvation but whip us to action; to a resolve to put on the armor of light and seek new ways.

A Prayer

O GOD, whose purposes are from everlasting and whose kingdom is unshakable: Help us to know that the end of battle is but the beginning of opportunity, and that all the energies once consecrated to the waging of war must in time be offered in the struggle for peace. Grant us such courage that our efforts may never falter; such love, that every barrier to brotherhood and equality may be beaten down; such wisdom, that every problem of boundary and trade, of production and distribution, of language and culture, may be solved; such faith, that when the way is long and hard we may yet persevere to the end, in the knowledge that Thy sovereign will reigneth as revealed in the redeeming power of Thy Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

—from the parish paper of Grace Church, Amherst, Massachusetts.

Between Men and Nations

RECENT addresses of President Truman fill us with misgivings. Hoarding the secret of the atomic bomb, maintaining the world's largest navy, and conscription to ready a powerful army is not an effective way of achieving justice, democracy and a cooperative world. Certainly we would not have our nation lapse into the impotence and irresponsibility which followed world war one. The years ahead are to be restive and chaotic; a police force can serve a useful purpose. Yet the program outlined by the President seems to be for a very different purpose. Can it be that this array of power is inspired by our distrust of Russia? If so, it can be Hitlerian in its effect by dividing the world into hostile camps. Furthermore, we are uneasy because the program seems to be the very thing the Pattersons, McCormicks, Hearsts, and other anti-Russians have been advocating. We must expect the path to cooperation and understanding with the Soviet Union to be difficult. But our attempt to hoard the secret of atomic power and peacetime conscription are not the best means of encouraging the confidence, harmony, and cooperation we desire.

The decisions our statesmen have to make require a wisdom beyond anything we have ever known. We hope and pray that the decisions now being made may make for a world of justice and democracy. But we can do more than hope and pray. As Christians and churchmen we can intensify our ministry of reconciliation by working for economic and political solidarity among the nations and for spiritual solidarity among Christians. In these two areas Christians can really go to work. If suspicion and fear are to be replaced by confidence and trust, the extension and deepening of understanding between nations and among Christians of various communions is a necessity.

It's Your Turn Now

by Richard L. Harbour
United States Navy Chaplain

A BLUEJACKET said to me in the subway last night, "Sir, I'm trying to get to 600 Lexington Avenue. Can you direct me?"

600 Lexington Avenue sounds like a simple address; one would expect to find it at Sixth Street, or perhaps Sixtieth. As a matter of fact it's at the corner of Fifty-second Street and Lexington Avenue. My sailor acquaintance of the moment was confused because he could find no relation between the building address and the number of the street. So I explained the New York number plan to him as well as I could. Then he asked, "Sir, are you a line officer?"

"No," I replied. "I'm a chaplain."

"Line Officers are pretty cold," he mumbled. "Civilians are pretty cold too."

I made an effort to keep that conversation going. Noting his campaign ribbons, I said, "I'll bet it's good to be home again, after your months in the Pacific."

"Yes," he answered "but you know, I miss something."

"What is that?"

He paused a moment, and then said, "Sincere friendship."

He's not the first sailor to have mentioned the aloofness of civilians to me. I've been somewhat confused by their coolness myself. This particular bluejacket mentioned that one can get used to frigidity in officers of the line, but what have we in the service done that should fix a seeming great gulf between us and our friends at home?

A few weeks ago I conducted Sunday service aboard a ship in port. One of the lads who stayed aboard in order to attend the service came to me afterward asking for directions to some service in town. He was a Baptist. I asked him what type of Baptist service he preferred, for even the Baptist communion has stripes in its churchmanship, and the lad answered, "All I want is a friendly church."

A friendly church, what rare institution that is! I have visited many churches since returning from sea duty. Whether they be Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, our own Episcopal Church, or any other, I find that sincere friendliness in the churches is a rare virtue.

Our Church, and other churches too, are saying and writing a good many words about programs for re-establishing returning veterans in the Church at home. Some of these programs involve complicated activity schedules of far reaching significance. What about a simple technique for friendliness at home, something that all the pillars, posts, and props, of the local parishes can put into effective practice right away?

On the Sunday nearest V-J day I took a midshipman acquaintance to the eleven o'clock service in a church I like. The people of that parish are true to the best traditions of exclusivism. But I like the churchmanship, the architecture, and the music in that parish church so I visit there often and usually wear my topcoat. After the service on V-J Sunday we walked slowly out of the church. People were chattering in their exclusive little groups, and as we moved down the walk to the street we wished devoutly that somebody would at least act as if strangers were welcome. Finally a lady following us said, "My boy wears a uniform like yours." Grasping that one straw, for I feared that the midshipman, who was not a churchman, would get a false impression of coolness in the Episcopal Church, I hastened to make conversation. The lady chatted amiably—without gush or effusion, just quiet top-of-the-morning conversation—and I secretly marvelled at so much friendliness in the Church. Then the bubble burst.

"Of course, I'm not a member here," she said. "I belong to Dr. L. O'Quence's church. But I came here to take part in the special thanksgiving service for V-J Day. Glad you were here too." Well, there we were, welcomed in a parish church of the Anglican Communion by only one person, and she was a member of another congregation in another communion!

Sometimes I feel like the little boy in one of Percy Crosby's comic strips about Skippy. Skippy asks a boy carrying a wash tub that almost covers him who he is.

"I'm the kid that gits thrown outa the libree."

"Where ya goin' now?" Skippy asks him.

And the boy says from under the tub, "Back to the libree."

We're going back to church too. Nevertheless, no amount of shaking hands by the rector at the door can steady the shuddering that was started by cold shoulders when we entered the church door.

WHILE conforming to the ranks and files of military life most of us have learned the gracefulness of that virtue known as meekness. When a man discovers that his strength is of little worth without its being joined in the strength of many other men, he stands meekly in the presence of powers greater than himself. The strength of our life in military service is in our unity as shipmates, buddies, or as the Australians say, "Cobbers." As cobbers together we have had ample opportunity to serve together and we veterans from the service are coming out well prepared to share in the Church's corporate enterprise, if only the Church will let us in.

Jesus, in the parable of the sheep and the goats, relates a dramatic story of the king's invitation, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." That's a soothing word to churchmen who are on the Lord's side. But the invitation is not to them, it is to all the rest of humanity. The Lord's mission is the Church's Mission to all men. At the moment that mission extends to the returning service personnel. They are coming home by the thousands. Are we making them at home in the churches?

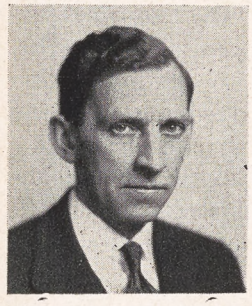
"Come ye blessed of my Father," goes out to them from the stewards of the mysteries of God in the Church. Now the veterans do not think of themselves as particularly blessed. They would be as surprised as the righteous in the parable if "Come ye blessed" were spoken directly to them. Nevertheless, they have the Lord's word for it, "Inasmuch as you have done it unto the one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

"It," according to the parable, includes such things as feeding, housing, clothing the needy, releasing prisoners, and welcoming strangers. In the immediate future the Church may not have much call for housing, feeding, and clothing these least of the Lord's brethren. Perhaps in the next decade, which H. G. Wells calls "The Famished Fifties" there will be ample opportunity. Let be, there's a wonderful chance right now to do far more than that for veterans. They are hungering and thirsting for the gentle virtue of friendliness. Bluejackets and G. I. Joes will be looking for it in the churches. We teach that the Episcopal Church is apostolic. Where then is the apostolic fellowship?

Fellowship, friendliness, kindness, love are greatly misused and misunderstood terms. The professional worshipper, beaming a fixed smile, and shaking hands with colossal heartiness is not what veterans will be seeking. They want the friendly spirit that is born of sincerity. Will they find it in the churches?

Veterans are leaving army and navy separation centers by the thousands every day. Chaplains at the centers are having a final word with the dischargees. I work in one of the navy separation centers with fourteen other chaplains. We see to it that every man, whether he is Protestant, Jew, or Roman Catholic is admonished to attend synagogue or church on the first Lord's Day after returning home. We ask them to take their families with them and to make special prayers of thanksgiving to God for the ending of the war, and for his inestimable benefits.

In addition, the chaplains are sending letters at dischargees' requests to next of kin and to ministers. One chaplain at the separation center in Norman, Oklahoma, begins his letters to the clergy with a headline in bold face type which says: "It's Your Turn Now."



The dischargees go out from the separation centers in high spirits, laughing and talking of home. As they separate from their buddies in the service for the last time they enter the company of the least of the Lord's brethren, that's all. So it is the Church's turn now. We hope that the clergy, and more especially the laity, will give friendliness and hospitality straightway when the veterans come home to church. Remember it's your turn now.

Talking It Over

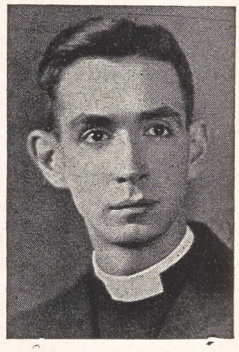
By
W. B. SPOFFORD

AT THE General Convention in Washington, years ago, an effort was made to raise money for our Church hospital in Toyko. As I recall it the money was raised. But those in charge of the campaign could have had more if they had not tried to scare people into giving. The argument was: "There is a rising power to the east of Japan. This power is Bolshevism. It is menacing. This great hospital in Japan will be a bulwark against this threat to us."

Following a meeting at which this argument was developed with all the stops out a very wealthy layman said to me: "If all that he said is true, believe me I am going to give my money to something besides a hospital. I'm going to do my best to see that it goes into battleships."

I do not pretent to knowledge of the psychology of advertising. Fear presumably can sell toothpaste by scaring people about "pink toothbrush" and "one out of four have it," and a bottle of smelling water worth about a cent can be sold apparently for a quarter if you hammer away on "even his best friends won't tell him." But one would hardly expect the Christian Church to indulge in this sort of fear-mongering even to raise five million dollars. Yet from reports that come to my desk, those in charge of our Reconstruction and Advance Fund campaign seem to think that they can scare money out of pockets—particularly the pockets with a lot of money in them—if they harp enough on the menace of communism. Even the Presiding Bishop is handing out this line by setting "some ideology" over against "Christian ideals" and then urging his listeners to give to the fund. Mr. Jordon, in charge of the campaign, is even more specific by talking definitely about the menace from the left and presenting Christianity as an antidote.

Well it may work. After all I presume people with large sums of money are more afraid of communism than they are of fascism, though from my knowledge of recent history they have far less reason to be. But I can also say this: there are a lot of people in the Church who would like to back the Reconstruction and Advance Fund campaign who are not doing so because of their disgust with the way it is being conducted. Everyone isn't afraid of the Soviet Union and what it stands for, even in the Episcopal Church. Indeed there is a considerable number . . . a tiny band certainly, but still a considerable number . . . who look to the Soviet Union with hope. Indeed, where else? Downing Street? Washington? Chungking? Vatican City?



There is a star in the east. Wise men will follow it as far as its beams cast light and do so without fear merely because its color happens to be red.

The Living Liturgy

Notes on Morning Prayer

THE Prayer Book is full of prefaces and exhortations. To the modern man they often seem stilted, tedious and unimpressive. He reacts, with a sound instinct surely, against the Puritan attempt to force all our approach to God into a didactic mold. Hence each fresh revision of the Prayer Book sees some of these godly and righteous admonitions quietly dropped or made optional at the minister's discretion. We certainly do not regret the passing of the old prefaces to Baptism and Confirmation. The one to the Marriage service—certainly the best of the lot—has undergone a skillful operation of amputation. But it would be a distinct loss if the increasing neglect of the exhortation at the opening of the Daily Office should lead to its complete retirement. It may not be ideal in every respect, but its merits stand out rather forcibly if one compares it with the lame modernization of it in the English 1928 Book. In its latter part there is an admirable statement of the nature and contents of common worship and a clear outline of the Daily Office itself. Its practical advantage is that it gives the people some chance for recollection and reflection before confessing their sins.

It is devoutly to be wished that the next revision will put the "Our Father" always and invariably in a position after the Creed, where it can only be in this service, as it should always be in every service, climactic.

It is perhaps best to understand the Gloria Patri of the opening versicles as an antiphon to the psalmody. The "praise ye the Lord" which follows is only a literal translation of "Alleluia," which originally accompanied the Gloria in festal seasons. The addition in the 1662 Prayer Book of a response: "The Lord's Name be praised," is a feeble piece of tautology. Our American Prayer Book now has in the invitatories a group of additional antiphons to the Venite proper to the seasons. These should be sung both before and after the canticle. An antiphon is a poetical and musical frame enclosing a psalm like a picture. When these invitatories are used it would be better to take advantage of the rubrics and not sing the Gloria after the Venite, but at the conclusion of the whole psalmody. The sequence would then unfold as follows:

Gloria (of the versicle)
Invitatory
Venite
Invitatory
Psalm(s)
Gloria

Occasionally one meets with the complaint that Morning Prayer lacks a strong emphasis upon Redemption. But this impression can only come from hearing it rendered repeatedly without either the Te Deum or the full Benedictus. One of these canticles at least should always be sung, and preferably both. It is doubtful if the Prayer Book compilers intended the Jubilate ever to be used except when the Benedictus occurred in the second lesson (which happened only three times a year in the 1552 Book, which introduced the Jubilate). We should not, of course, ignore the Benedicite; least of all, make people associate it with Lenten penance. As for the Benedictus es, it might be reserved for occasions when it is extremely necessary to save a couple minutes' time in divine service! But the canticle has this advantage: it is not burdened with mid-Victorian musical settings.

The two invariable collects of Morning and Evening Prayer are correlative. Those for peace—the morning one for outward, the evening for inward peace—are general supplications for the universal Church, without limit of time and place. The second ones, for grace and aid, are immediate in reference both to the hour and the worshippers. Classic liturgies always have this double perspective, with precedence given the wider horizons of prayer (cf. the arrangement of the petitions of the Lord's Prayer). There is an enormous amount of doctrinal teaching in these collects. Almost every phrase is a sermon text in itself. The original Latin behind "whose service is perfect freedom" literally means "whom to serve is to reign." Either rendering illumines the profound meaning of the other.

The concluding prayer from the St. Chrysostom Liturgy of the Eastern Church curiously conflates the teaching of Matthew 18:19-20 and results in an unwarranted statement of the theology of prayer. Future revision should correct this blunder. The original Greek says, "when two or three agree in thy Name," etc. It is unfortunate, too, that in modern English usage the quality implied in "expedient" has deteriorated.

Readings in St. John's Gospel* (First and Second Series) by William Temple. Macmillan, $3.50.

These "readings" were published in 1939 and 1940, and now appear in one volume. They are the fruit of many years of meditation upon the Gospel of St. John by one whose mind was peculiarly open to the type of thought it represents . . . . Temple was a philosopher, something of a mystic (but not overmuch: neither was the author of the Fourth Gospel), and a profoundly religious man. It was the defect of his qualities that he was not much of a historical critic. He tells us that this book is not for the scholar or theologian, save as he too is a soul on pilgrimage. But then he launches into an introduction which is very positive in affirming positions that most New Testament critics have abandoned. Indeed, the whole spectacle of English New Testament scholarship, especially Johannine scholarship, for the past fifty years has been a slow and gradual, reluctant, but inevitable retreat from traditional positions. In consequence, English theology has usually been several years behind the times in biblical interpretation. One wonders what fine results might ensue if English theology really caught up with biblical scholarship! If, for example, it were frankly to be admitted that the Gospel of St. John is not by John the Apostle, and has no connection with him; that it is not "Palestinian through and through," and so on, but stands on its own two feet as a new, fresh, independent, thoroughly Hellenistic work of interpretation and of re-interpretation, that it gives us a dramatic presentation of the heavenly, exalted Christ of the Church's faith . . . might not new and fresh values emerge from a

The communion service needs to be understood as something living, something which is applicable to the present situation and has meaning to the man in the pew. This little volume aims to fill this need. The author is aware of the implications of the liturgical movement, of the race problem, of the influence of humanism on the modern mind, but he does not parade the theological, philosophic or critical problems. Instead he shows in plain words that our Lord's service has something to say about each. The text is filled with homely and well-applied illustrations and is written in a friendly manner. Behind every plain statement and simple analogy there is strong and basic theology. In other words John Higgins has done a good job.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

LAST year Bing Crosby won the academy award for his performance as Father O'Malley in Going My Way and Ingrid Bergman won the same trophy for the excellent job she did with the harassed wife in Gaslight. And now director-producer Leo McCrary has put them together in The Bells of St. Mary's and, as far as one reviewer is concerned, they might as well dispense with the academy awards for this year and let last year's presentations cover this year as well . . . particularly in the case of Miss Bergman.

In the new film, the transformed "groaner" again plays Father O'Malley but, instead of contending with the crotchety Barry Fitzgerald and a run-down parish, he has to cope with a run-down school and a rather hostile group of nuns under the leadership of Sister Mary Benedict (Miss Bergman). Needless to say, all is peaches-and-cream at the end with the school a thriving institution and any difficulties encountered along the way happily resolved.

The Bells of St. Mary's labors under the handicap of being a repeat job on a good thing and, astonishingly enough, gets away with it. Despite the lack of novelty, it struck me as an immeasurably better picture than Going My Way (but that might be my intense prejudice for Miss Bergman standing forth). Still, somehow, Hollywood has its difficulties with the religious film—i.e. making the spiritual life all intense facial contortions and eyes-lifted-to-heaven; making the representatives of organized religion invariably understanding people with a goodly dash of the "pixie" mixed up in their blood; and all the rest of it. But certainly The Bells of St. Mary's is an excellent one of its type and is definitely not going to hurt the cause of the Roman Catholic Church. Unfortunately, Hollywood sometimes can't understand that there can be two-sides to every question—or, realizing it, wisely decides to be politic.

Serious faults of the picture are: it runs too long and it has too many plots. During the approximate two hours, I counted no less than five stories all interwoven into the one film. At times I wondered if even such a whiz of a pastor as Father O'Malley could get them all solved—but he did.

But, in spite of its evident faults, The Bells of St. Mary's is fine entertainment and it contains a whole host of wonderful scenes: Sister Mary Benedict teaching one of her pupils "the manly art of self-defense," the same sister working on a rather testy entrepreneur to give St. Mary's a new school building, and, especially, a Christmas Play rehearsal in St. Mary's kindergarten in which the baby Jesus looks like a infant replica of Babe Ruth and all of the children, instead of singing Silent Night, give forth with Happy Birthday to you, Jesus. This last, I know, would make my seminary religious education professor, Miss Adelaide Case, just bubble for joy.

This picture will certainly arouse much discussion and resentment in Protestant circles. Well, that's probably all to the good. Maybe the Protestant churches will then get together and help Hollywood turn out something that is just as good. And, if they do, I hope they get Ingrid Bergman to play the leading role. Then, it's bound to be a success.

Missionary Fund Wasted Unless We Are More Christian

Presiding Bishop Declares People of Asia Are Unimpressed Unless We Apply Beliefs

Edited by Sara Dill

Chicago: — Unless the Christian West can demonstrate that Christianity can do those things at home which it claims Christianity can do in the un-Christian East, no amount of money spent for a missionary program will do any good, Presiding Bishop Tucker told the 300 clergy and laymen who attended a luncheon in Chicago, November 15.

"Unless we can make greater progress toward the solution of our Negro problems at home, we cannot expect Christianity to be respected or followed abroad," the Bishop said.

World War I and world war II were severe setbacks to Christianity in the eyes of the un-Christian East, the Bishop pointed out, However, because of the loyalty and courage of the missionaries during the last war the prestige of Christianity in China is very high today.

China, the Bishop said, was no longer "a football to be kicked around by the Western powers" but a great power of the future. Whether as a great power, it will be guided by Christian ideals or whether some ideology will guide its destiny, will depend upon whether the Christian West is ready to sacrifice today to give aid.

In his discussion of Japan, the Bishop stressed that the spiritual and moral characteristics the Japanese people will need to develop before democracy can be established can come only through the Church.

"America today is like a city set upon a hill. Are we qualified to give the kind of leadership expected from us," asked the Bishop.

"We must be more than Christian in name only. We must realize that groups, be they national, political or business, are obligated by the same moral laws as are individuals."

Oppose Subsidy

Boston:—The Massachusetts Council of Churches, meeting here November 14, went on record as vigorously opposing the subsidy of private schools which it contends is provided by the Mead-Aiken bill now before Congress. The churchmen urged that no bill concerned with the subsidy of public education be used as a medium for "violating the American principle of separation of Church and state."

Connected with the meeting, 1,000 laymen, representing ten denominations, attended a dinner at which Bishop Sherrill, Lt. Governor Robert F. Bradford, Ralph E. Flanders, president of the federal reserve bank of Boston, Prof. Paul J. W. Pigors of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Bishop Lewis O. Hartman of the Methodist Church were the speakers. They urged negotiated settlement of labor disputes with the public as arbiter.

The Council approved plans for ministering in state institutions, including veterans, general and mental hospitals. It also resolved "that the time has come when concerted Protestant action and influence are more important than denominational work alone" and urged its member bodies "to pledge their combined efforts for the reaffirmation and extension of the principles of religious freedom and Christian democracy."

Bishop Hartman was elected president to succeed Bishop Lawrence of Western Massachusetts and the Rev. Gardiner M. Day of Cambridge was elected one of the three vice-presidents.

An Anniversary

New York:—The board of trustees of the American Church Building Fund at a recent meeting adopted resolutions of appreciation for the services of the Rev. Charles L. Pardee who has served as secretary for thirty years. He was also secretary of the House of Bishops from 1922 to 1940 when he declined re-election to that office.

Cleryman Killed

San Francisco:—The Rev. Cyril Leitch, vicar of St. Luke's, Hollister, Calif., was killed on Nov. 12 in a highway accident while riding in a car driven by the Rev. Allan Geddes, rector at Watsonville. They were returning from a fishing trip when their right of way was obstructed by another car causing theirs to overturn and land in the way of a car coming from the opposite direction. Mr. Geddes was last reported to be in a critical condition as a result of injury and shock.

Call for Karloff

New York:—Visions of a horror-man under the bed at strictly feminine Windham House, came to Miss Helen Turnbull, director, when she answered a phone call on a recent morning. "Is this Windham?" said a masculine voice. "Yes," Miss Turnbull replied. "Well give me Boris Karloff." . . . "Oh, Mr. Karloff isn't here . . . there's no one here but us girls."

It developed that the inquirer wanted the Windham Hotel, where Mr. Karloff was staying. Windham House is calm again.

Aid to Chaplains

Brooklyn:—The altar guild of Long Island gave 593 finished articles to the army and navy commission since 1941 and an additional 158 to chaplains direct.

Consecrate Church

Hansford, W. Va.:—The Church of the Good Shepherd was consecrated here on November 4th by Bishop Strider—a happy day for a congregation of about fifty persons. This hamlet consists of about 200 people, with most of them working in the coal mines or industrial plants located up and down the rich Kanawha Valley. The Good Shepherd, in charge of Capt. Albert J. Sayers of the Church Army, is the only church in the community.

This is the second church of the Good Shepherd. The first one was located on the side of a mountain and had to be torn down when landslides made it unsafe for further use. The landslides were caused by the construction of a new road at the base of the mountain. As soon as it was found that the old church could be used no longer the people determined to build a new church, despite the war and the difficulties of priorities. The vestry received $2,000 damages for the old church and a gift of $1,000 from the diocese. The new church cost approximately $8,000, $5,000 of which was raised by the people with the help of friends outside the parish.

For the past 3 years they have had a parish victory garden, the produce of which was sold to raise funds for the church. This netted about $650. This year they used pence cans, (1 cent per meal), and in 36 weeks gave over $420. At the time of the first service, Nov. 5, 1944, the church owed approximately $1,500, and this debt was liquidated in less than one year, so that the consecration service could be held on the anniversary of the first service.

The new Church seats about 130 people and it was filled to overflowing for the consecration service. Immediately after the service a reception was held in the basement at which the women of the parish served ham, potato salad, green beans, rolls, cake and coffee to over 150 people.

Rural Areas

Columbus, Ga.: — The responsibility of the Church to young people in rural areas was stressed by Canon Colin R. Campbell of the cathedral at Atlanta, in speaking here at a meeting of educational and recreational directors of the state. It was the first of a series of meetings to be held throughout the state. Mr. Campbell, well known in this part of the country as a successful football coach, is active in young people's work in the diocese and is also head of college work.

Fund for Missions

Philadelphia: — The entire estate of the late Bishop Taitt, amounting to approximately $68,000, has now been turned over to the Church foundation of the diocese of Pennsylvania, following the death of his sister who was entitled to the income during her life. It is to be known as the Bishop Taitt Fund and is to be used for diocesan missions.

Bishops Speak

Lafayette, La.:—Bishop Everett H. Jones of West Texas and Bishop Jackson of Louisiana were the headliners at the annual meeting of the Auxiliary, meeting here at the Church of the Ascension, November 14th. Both spoke of the great opportunities the Church has today, with Bishop Jackson stressing the need there is today for leadership among young men and women.

Old Church Restored

Brimfield, Ill.: — November 4th was a red letter day in the little town of Brimfield, Illinois, for it marked the rebirth and rededication of the venerable Zion Episcopal Church. Coincidentally this year marks the centennial of the pioneer church, for it was founded in 1845 by Bishop Philander Chase, the leading prelate in the state of Illinois.

Bishop Chase was an uncle of Salmon P. Chase, secretary of the treasury in Lincoln's cabinet. In 1831 he resigned from the presidency of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, and the episcopate of Ohio. He was chosen Bishop of Illinois in 1835. Soon he visited England and raised $10,000 with which he founded Jubilee College, eight miles east of Brimfield, Peoria County. The college was built in 1839. It was constructed of golden colored limestone with slender windows of leaden glass.

The work of restoring Zion Church has been directed by Godfrey G. Luthy, a retired business man of Peoria, now living near Brimfield. When work was started on Zion, there were holes in the roof, the ceiling plaster was down, the windows had been boarded up for 25 years or more, and no services had been held in the church for nearly 50 years. Termites had invaded the ruins and were adding to the destruction. Weeds six feet high and giant thistles had overrun the entire churchyard. But the impossible has been done. Seven memorial windows have been placed in Zion to the memory of pioneer members of the community.

The rededication services were under the direction of Bishop W. L. Essex of Quincy. Gordon K. Chalmers, president of Kenyon College, as one of the speakers, placed great stress on the pioneering ability of Bishop Chase and emphasized the unique work he did in bringing the teachings of the Church to this distant land then on the fringe of western civilization.

Tells of Japanese

Scarsdale, N. Y.:—The Rev. Leo McAfee, for twenty years a missionary in the Philippines, was the preacher at St. James' here on November 18th and told of a letter recently received from a member of the mission at Upi.

"We here at Upi certainly experienced the hardships of a people at war," the letter said. "The Mission, Nuro and Baringstan were scenes of battles between the Japanese and guerrillas. Our houses were burned down; our animals, clothes and palay were either burned, commandeered or looted. Besides suffering from the lack of material goods, we were also arrested and imprisoned by the Japanese. I remember a day when those Japanese bayoneted and killed men, women and children simply because one of their officers was killed by a guerrilla. Those civilians who had no contact with the Japanese, who lived all the time in the mountains, had a different sort of suffering. There they suffered from sickness, malaria and dysentery, and too many of them hunger."

Prayer for India

London (wireless to RNS):—Leaders of the Anglican and Free Churches have issued an appeal for observation of December 2 as a day of prayer for the welfare of India and for the solution of "her human and welfare problems." The appeal was signed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and the moderators of the Church of Scotland and the Free Church Federal Council.

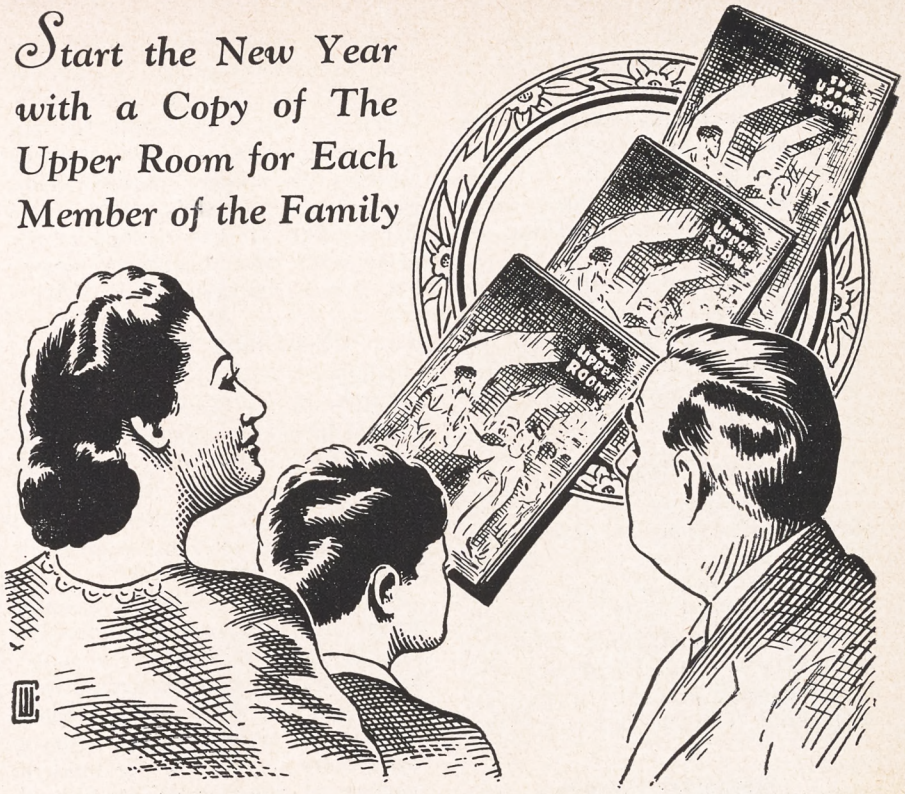
parochial and diocesan treasurers are forming a habit of remitting each month one-twelfth of their quota. This practice has enabled the National Council during the last few years to continue its work through the lean summer months without borrowing anything from the banks.

"There is still nearly $500,000 to collect during the months of November and December but that is a task which does not look too difficult. Already nine dioceses have paid the total amount of their expectation for the year and almost all of them are up to date on their remittances."

Military Training



New York:—International agreement on reduction and regulation of armaments, the fixing of military quotas and the abolition of peacetime compulsory military training was urged by the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches. It was suggested that a civilian commission, with technical advisors from the military services and other branches of the government make a comprehensive survey of all aspects of national defense. This commission should make recommendations "consistent with the expressed desire of the nation to seek security through international cooperation."

Progressive Program

Chicago: — Three hundred and fifty delegates representing the 386,000 Methodist women who are members of the North Central jurisdiction of their denomination's Woman's society of Christian service adopted resolutions here calling for support of "progressive legislation" such as the full employment, $25-a-week unemployment compensation, and price control bills. They also sent a telegram to President Truman asking that the atomic bomb secret be placed under international control and condemning his compulsory peacetime military training proposal.

The convention's list of resolutions on federal legislation included an endorsement of the permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee bill; a recommendation that rationing be continued along with price control "to prevent inflation and to provide more reasonable distribution of food and clothing"; approval of bills to raise the minimum wage level; and endorsement of federal housing legislation.

Start the New Year with a Copy of The Upper Room for Each Member of the Family

Encourage your loved ones in the regular practice of daily devotions by giving each member of the family his or her own copy of The Upper Room.

Having a personal copy "personalizes" these daily devotions far more than where there is only one copy to the family. Try it and see!

Where a member of the family is away from home, as at school or in the service, family unity can be sustained by all members reading The Upper Room each day, possibly at a stated hour.

Fortunately, the cost of this little book of daily devotions is so small that its "unanimous" use is within the means of almost every family. Also, the Pocket Edition affords a new handy size for easy carrying on the person.

Note: The war-time "emergency edition" has been discontinued, and henceforth The Upper Room will appear in the regular format and also in the Pocket Edition for those desiring it.

Send your order for the January-February-March issue today. Ten or more copies to one address, 5 cents each, postpaid. Single yearly subscriptions in U. S., Canada and Latin America, 30 cents, postpaid; four years, $1.00. Other countries, 40 cents; four years, $1.35. Special envelopes for remailing The Upper Room, $1.00 per 100.

In the field of international relations the resolutions asked that the members of the society "support all measures that will strengthen the effectiveness of the United Nations Organization" and seek the abolition of compulsory military training in all countries, including the United States.

They also asked that the financial appropriations for the United Naions Relief and Rehabilitation Administration be increased and that "former enemy peoples" be included within the scope of UNRRA.

Want Tiso Back

Prague (wireless to RNS):—Roman Catholic groups in several Slovakian villages have staged demonstrations in favor of Msgr. Joseph Tiso, imprisoned chief of state in formerly Nazi-dominated Slovakia. He is held as a collaborationist. Villagers carried placards bearing the inscription "Give us back our Tiso."

Memorial Chapel

London (wireless to RNS):—Proposed erection of a memorial chapel in St. Paul's Cathedral to American servicemen who died in the war has been warmly endorsed by the British press. A fund is being raised for the purpose with all the money in excess of the amount required to be used to promote Anglo-American understanding.

Service at Coventry

London (wireless to RNS):—Reconstruction plans for historic Coventry Cathedral, which include a Christian service center and a chapel for joint Anglican and Free Church use, were inaugurated at services commemorating the fifth anniversary of the cathedral's destruction by German air raiders.

Heading a procession that moved from one part to another of the floodlit ruins, the Bishop of Coventry, the Rt. Rev. Neville Vincent Gorton, read a message from the Archbishop of Canterbury expressing appreciation of the "spiritual vision" behind the rebuilding plans.

Greeting Free Church representatives, Bishop Gorton blessed the crypt which will serve as the Christian center service. The Rev. Leslie Cooke, president of the Coventry Free Church Council, then read a statement describing the purposes of the center.

Among those taking part in the commemoration were Archimandrite J. Virvos, of the Greek Orthodox Church in London; D. Lamont, former moderator of the Church of Scotland; Lt. Col. W. E. Hoffenbacher, senior U. S. army chaplain in Britain; and chaplains from Canada, Australia, Sweden, Norway, France, India, China and Africa. The services opened at the same hour that incendiary bombs first fell on the cathedral in 1940.

Advertising Campaign

London (wireless to RNS):—The assembly of the Church of England has voted here to launch a five year $4,000,000 advertising program which will utilize the theater, cinema, radio, press and other media to bring about a religious revival in Britain.

Responding to a warning from Bishop C. M. Chavasse of Rochester, that the clergy's "spiritual anemia" has left half of the country "worse than heathens," the council adopted a 172-page report calling for a "missionary invasion of the modern agencies of propaganda" to spread the Christian Gospel.

"Our task today" declared Bishop Chavasse, head of the commission which drafted the report, "is far more formidable than that which confronted the early church in missionary lands. "It is impossible to exaggerate the gulf between the church and the ordinary life and thinking of the English people."

University Reopens

Heidelberg (wireless):—Courses in theology were the first to be offered students when the University of Heidelberg reopened here.

Political screening revealed that members of the theological faculty resisted Nazi "coordination" far better than others. Some of its scholars even succeeded in publishing books which included strong anti-Nazi passages. A correspondent of Religious News Service attended the opening lecture, at which Prof. Martin Dibelius, dean of the theological faculty, and cousin of Dr. Otto Dibelius, Bishop of Berlin, presided. The session began with a moment of silent prayer in memory of theological students who died in the war. Professor Dibelius told the students that pastors must be well grounded in Bible and Church history "or pseudo scientists will usurp the field with ulterior motives."

Young men attending the lecture seemed of an especially high calibre. I met one student from Hungary, and two from Latvia. It is expected that the enrollment will reach 200 in the near future.

Honor Primate

London (wireless to RNS): — Bishop Eivind Berggrav, Primate of the Norwegian Lutheran Church, was presented a Lambeth Cross here by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Geoffrey Fisher. The ceremony took place at a Nikaen Club luncheon. The award conferred on church and lay readers for furthering understanding and closer relationships between their communions and Anglicans has previously been given to Archbishop Germanos of Greece, Bishop Brilioth of Sweden, and Prof. Alivisatos also of Greece.

Bless Franco

Rome (wireless to RNS):—Broadcasting in Spanish to Madrid Catholics assembled to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Apostleship of Prayer, Pope Pius XII expressed confidence that Spain, through the good work of devout faithful, will find her rightful place among the nations.

"Today's meeting," the Pope declared, "must have a threefold purpose: to give thanks to providence for having escaped the dangers and horrors of war, to resolve firmly to meet the need for mutual charity and common prayers, which makes all souls brothers, and to renew the consecration of Spain to the Sacred Heart made on May 30, 1919."

The Pontiff extended a Papal benediction to Generalissimo Franco as head of the Spanish state and after his broadcast received members of the Spanish embassy in special audience, together with ecclesiastical and lay members of the Spanish colony.

Report from Moscow

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—Freedom of the church in Russia will be "more extensive" in the future than it is at present, the Rev. Antonio Laberge, Moscow's only Roman Catholic priest, predicted in an interview. He arrived here three weeks ago to replace the Rev. Leopold Braun, formerly in charge of the French Embassy chapel, who has returned to his home in the United States after nearly twelve years in Moscow.

The priest, who hails from Central Falls, R.I., declared he has been "favorably impressed by what I have seen so far." He added that present religious conditions confirmed his opinion that the original persecution of the church in Russia was caused by political motives inspired by the church's close connection with the state under the Czarist regime. He expressed the hope that good relations may soon be established between the Vatican and Russia, and pointed out that the Holy See has often made concordats with states whose political forms were not in accord with its own ideas.

Protest Lynchings

Jacksonville: — Leading Florida clergymen, whose names are being temporarily withheld, are planning what may develop into a state-wide campaign to prevent an outbreak of post-war lynchings of Negroes in this state.

Action was launched by the churchmen when the Suwanee Grand Jury, meeting in Live Oak, "no billed" Tom Crews, chief of police in Branford, and two other men on charges of killing Sam McFadden, a Negro, and throwing his body in the Suwanee river.

It is understood the churchmen may press for another grand jury investigation of the case and also for further investigation of the lynching of Lonnie Davis, 30-year-old Madison county Negro, on October 1.

No Atheists Aboard

Metz, France:—Ewart E. Turner, correspondent for Religious News Service, tells of his experience aboard a crashed plane, when all the occupants except a wirehaired puppy and a major of the Red Army prayed fervently while they were in danger and declared that they would go to church on Sunday if they were spared to do so. The trip was a two-hour routine flight from Frankfurt to Berlin. Lost in a fog the plane was in the air seven and a half hours and then made a crash landing in a boggy field in France, with the fuselage coming to rest forty feet from a drainage canal.

Turner, who says that he learned the hard way that there are no atheists in a plane in such a predicament, states that during the hours of suspense "the four members of the crew and the twenty-one passengers prayed fervently and declared with equal fervor that they would attend Church on Sunday if spared to do so. Regretfully it must be reported that no permanent church attendance was indicated in these promises."

He then states however that two of the passengers were unmoved by their experience. "One was a little brown wirehaired puppy. The other was a Russian major, a member of the reparations mission, who slept through it all."

Turner gave it as his opinion that "chief responsibility for the mishap is the general disrupting of services which has been caused by confusion due to redeployment pressure for boys to be shipped home. It has created a psychology here that is most unfavorable to American responsibilities in Europe."

In Those Packages

New York:—If you had practically nothing and were to receive a Christmas package from your friends in another country what would you want in it? There are 160,000 packages being sent to Europe and Asia, the gifts from members of twenty-five American Churches.

Packages prepared for adults include dehydrated soup, bouillon cubes, canned soup, razor blades, comb, toothbrushes, towel, washcloth, needles, thread, darning cotton, writing paper, envelopes, socks, gloves, and hard candy. Those for children contain powdered milk, washcloth, paper, pencils, colored crayons, a toy, handkerchiefs, mittens and socks; while those for babies include baby food, cereal, towel, washcloth, comb, hand-made sweater and a toy.

With the completion of its Christmas package campaign, the Church Committee on Overseas Relief and Reconstruction is stressing the need for food, clothing, and bedding to feed and clothe destitute peoples in war-devastated countries.

Urge Confiscation

Prague (wireless to RNS):—Leftist party members here are demanding the confiscation of the property of the Teutonic Order, organization of German Sudeten Roman Catholics, on the ground that it was managed by the Nazis and hence should be regarded as enemy property. Catholic political leaders insist that the property should be returned to the Church.

L. H. WALLACE
Layman of New York

I want to thank you for reporting the statement by Bishop Angus Dun of Washington (WITNESS, Nov. 8) in which he stated that the United States suffers from pride and arrogance. The evidence of this is increasing and it is well that our Church leaders call attention to the fact. Mr. Truman's navy day speech suffered in that regard with his threats to others. Likewise, I think, it was arrogant and hardly the road toward peace and understanding, to have our president meet with Mr. Attlee and Mr. King to hug closely to their breasts the atomic bomb while that other great ally, the Soviet Union, was not asked to attend this all-important conference.

I have four missions at which a copy of THE WITNESS is given to each family attending on each Sunday. The remaining copies are sent to shut-ins and one or two copies sent each week to the near-by Pasco naval air station. Each week during my announcements I mention articles of interest in the recent issue and feel sure that they are read by the congregations. I believe these copies are read and enjoyment found in them.

ANSWER: Mr. Dyson is our largest single customer, taking 75 copies each week. We thank him for his splendid cooperation and want to commend his method of calling attention to the magazine during announcements.

GEORGE H. BOYD
Rector of St. Peter's, Perth Amboy, N. J.

I have been enjoying all the articles in THE WITNESS. However I wish the editorial board would soon run an article on the celebration of the Holy Communion in the evenings. I find in this industrial area that many of our men work Sundays or are involved in shift work. I am wondering in my own mind if we could not reach these men and their families if a service of Holy Communion were held on Sunday night or on some evening during the week.

ANSWER: The editors, with ten present, discussed this and each one gave names of several parishes where the Holy Communion is celebrated regularly in the evening. No one could think of any reason for not doing it. If the parish teaches that communicants should receive fasting they could be told to abstain from food for three hours before the service which is, we understand, the practice in Roman Catholic parishes that have evening masses.

JOSEPH F. TITUS
Witness editor and rector at Jamaica, N.Y.

I think your stand in the editorial of the Issue of November 8, A Great Vision? is well taken. The pamphlet undoubtedly does give the impression that we are out to promulgate sectarian Christianity at the cost of competition and divisiveness. But in justice to the Coadjutor Bishop of Puerto Rico I would like to quote from a letter received from him in reply to one I wrote protesting his position in the pamphlet. I am sorry that it is too long to quote it all. He writes, ". . . what I meant to say is that wherever we have built a church, we have increased the percentage of empty pews by adding our empty pews to those in the other churches; in other words, every church building in these days of inactive church-going has empty pews." Also, "Actually in Puerto Rico we have been doing quite what you have always assumed; 'wherever at all possible, not to attempt to duplicate missionary efforts.' Except for three major cities on the island where we quite naturally started work both for Puertoricans as well as continental Americans, most of our efforts have been in the mountains where no one was doing anything. Because of our efforts we have stimulated both the Roman Church and other Protestant bodies to come up and 'help' us." That puts a different light on the subject and it is to be regretted that Bishop Boynton did not make these statements in the pamphlet. It is reassuring to know that this is his attitude.

PROF. E. THEODORE BACHMANN

Ever since I received the first copy of THE WITNESS several years ago I have appreciated the paper as a helpful tie extending across denominational lines. I am professor of Church history and frequently THE WITNESS has circulated in my classes, particularly in regard to matters of the Church and social action.

VINCENT GLOVER
Churchman of Chicago

Why none other than Mr. Mosher, the NAM and the whole like-thinking business aristocracy. (WITNESS ed. Nov. 22.) They are a minority of the citizenry. They ask us to permit them freedom to determine prices, and insist that government has no right to interfere in business. This is a doctrinaire position which merits further scrutiny. The nobles sit in their swivel chairs and by telephone-fiat or by long-distance warfare among themselves determine what price 140 million people shall pay for a home, for a pair of overalls, for a loaf of bread, a piece of cheese and a glass of milk. By what right do they so determine? Where does that authority come from? The government (and the OPA is still a part of government) rests its authority on the consent of the governed. The doctrinaire position of the NAM smacks of the old doctrine of the divine right of kings without consent of the governed. These gentlemen have been termed "economic royalists." There is truth in this title; we aline ourselves with the economic democrats.

Well, after world war I, the barons had their way; government did not interfere.

Clergy Criticize Advance Fund For Neglecting Europe

A Group of Massachusetts Clergymen State There Is Wrong Emphasis in the Fund Drive

By Sara Dill

Boston:—A group of clergymen of the diocese of Massachusetts met here on November 26th and prepared a statement which severely criticizes the leaders of the Reconstruction and Advance Fund for neglecting to provide aid to European churches. The statement has been sent to the Presiding Bishop and other leaders of the present drive and also to members of the National Council. The statement follows:

"Recently the three religious and two largest non-sectarian relief agencies, namely, the World Council of Churches (Protestant), the World Jewish Congress, and Caritas (The International Catholic Welfare Agency), the International Red Cross and the Save the Children International Union sent to their American headquarters an urgent telegram of which the following is a part: 'Children by the millions are in imminent danger of starving and freezing as winter comes to Europe, unless immediate help comes from countries which have food, clothing, vitamins, and medicines. . . . Every official, humanitarian, and religious agency must come to the rescue immediately or it will be too late . . . We pledge ourselves to work together in meeting needs without regard to nationality, race or creed. . . . Only by immediate and coordinated effort can colossal catastrophe be avoided. . . . Conditions in several of the European countries compel us to make this common appeal, in the strongest possible way. . . . We who have seen these conditions and heard these cries for help must lay it on the consciences of all to share to the limit of their money and goods now.'

"Obviously the extent, severity, and the immediacy of the need in Europe could hardly be exaggerated.

"Meanwhile, our Church is working hard to raise a Renconstruction and Advance Fund of $5,000,000 for the 'reconstruction of war-damaged properties, and for the expansion of the missionary program wherever the needs are greatest.' Bishops, rectors, laymen and women, and special gifts' committees are on the job. The National Council is sending out a stream of promotional material. Each week every clergyman receives suggested copy for his parish bulletin telling of the need in a specific place. If a prospective giver becomes curious about the allocation of the $5,000,000 he discovers from looking at the tentative budget sent out with a letter from the Presiding Bishop that not only are funds allocated for war damaged areas like China and the Philippines but also that $400,000 is assigned to Cuba as well as a half a million to the Southern part of our hemisphere, and $500,000 for the eight schools in this country sponsored by the American Church Institute for Negroes. He may look up and down the columns hoping to find that some part of his contribution will go toward the damaged and destroyed churches in Europe, but all he will find relating to this area of desperate need is the statement: 'It is hoped that the amount raised will also permit some aid to European churches.'

"His heart has been moved by European correspondents' stories of suffering in Germany and elsewhere and by news reels of the destruction in European cities. He wants to help the bombed out Christian congregations of Europe, not sometime in the future, but now when the need is so urgent. He gets in touch with the National Council and he learns from an officer in the promotional department that $300,000 has been tentatively assigned for the relief of European churches. He meets an officer of the department of missions who tells him that no definite amount has been assigned for European churches, as it is generally considered that the needs of the East take priority, and as they can't be estimated at present no amount can be allocated to Europe now. Nevertheless he expressed the hope that the fund will be oversubscribed so that there will be more money available for Europe inasmuch as none was included in the tentative budget given the Church by the Presiding Bishop.

"Mr. Prospective Giver finds himself wondering why, when Christians in Europe are facing starvation, let alone lack of housing, fuel, medicine and other necessities of life which will cause untold suffering this winter. $400,000 should be sent to Cuba and other large amounts designated for work in the United States where no churches need physical reconstruction because of war damage. Why can't $1,000,000 be allocated immediately through the overseas committee of the World Council of Churches to help Christians in Germany and Central Europe now and let the Church raise money to aid missions in Cuba and Panama, Puerto Rico and Brazil, at some later date. Christians in the latter areas are not lacking in life's necessities because of the war, while a year from now many of our fellow

★ Three parishes in a mid-western diocese seek rectors, so far without success. There are also several vacancies in a south western diocese. In a large midwestern parish the rector is seeking an assistant who will undertake the introduction of religious education in the public schools for the local council of churches. A parish in the metropolitan area of New York is looking for an assistant. If there are chaplains or others interested write this department, giving some details about yourself. A number of chaplains have stated that they are finding it difficult to locate once out of the service. This is a two-way department so we are anxious to hear from clergymen seeking parishes and from parises seeking men. Write THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

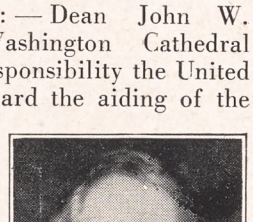
Christians in Europe will not be alive unless they receive immediate help.

"It is also significant that the British Council of Churches has agreed to raise ten million pounds for reconstruction work, one million of which will be given for European relief. The Church of England has agreed to raise one quarter of the ten million pounds. Despite the extension destruction in the British Isles, the British Council of Churches as early as April 1944 expressed the hope that the Churches in America and the Dominions would send their gifts to help the European Churches rather than the British.

"From a spiritual standpoint we face a crucial situation in the world today. The United States is a victor nation. It is also trustee of the world's greatest storehouse of food. Are we going to act in a way that will help to build that mutual understanding and trust between the peoples of the world that will lay the foundation for a permanent peace or are we going to act in such a way that the people of Europe will be consumed with hatred of us and deep regret that we are the victorious nation.



"This is a world emergency and the time to act is now. The National Council has announced that part of the Reconstruction and Advance Fund will be given to aid European churches. The resolution of the General Convention of 1943 instituting the fund indicates that it may be used not only for China and the Philippines but 'in other places where the Episcopal Church may assume a share in the process of reconstruction and relief (italics ours), and authorizes the National Council to determine the amount of the fund, the time when the need should be presented to the Church, and the methods of its distribution.' Let the National Council announce now to the Church that the first million dollars of the Reconstruction and Advance Fund will go to the churches in Europe through the World Council of Churches overseas relief committee. If any action will cause the fund to be oversubscribed, it would be this. Then we can all put our shoulder to the wheel to put the fund over the top and over a reasonable period of time no doubt we can raise funds to help missions in this hemisphere as well."

Those signing the statement were Howard K. Bartow, editor of the Church Militant, diocesan paper; William Brewster, rector of St. Mark's School; T. H. Chappell, rector of St. Paul's, Dedham; Gardiner M. Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge; Joseph F. Fletcher of the faculty of Episcopal Theological School; Ralph M. Harper, rector of St. John's, Winthrop; Howard P. Kellett, secretary of social relations of the diocese; Frederic B. Kellogg, chaplain to Episcopal students at Harvard; John S. Moses, rector of Christ Church, Andover; David W. Norton Jr., rector of St. Stephen's, Boston; Charles L. Taylor Jr., dean of the Episcopal Theological School; Cornelius Trowbridge, rector of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill.

A spokesman for the group, on releasing the statement for publication, stated that "the feeling of those signing the document was so unanimously strong that I am sure many more would have done so had there been time. As a matter of fact there was no one who was asked to sign the statement who refused to do so."

RESPONSIBILITY TO SUFFERING

Washington: — Dean John W. Suter of Washington Cathedral stressed the responsibility the United States has toward the aiding of the suffering peoples of Europe and Asia in a sermon on Nov. 25. "Some people say that a preacher should stick to the simple gospel," he declared. "The gospel is as simple as the Lord's Prayer which asks for only two things—bread and forgiveness. Any normal child knows what these two things mean—'Give us this day our daily bread'."

Washington:—When planes came back to carriers after a mission what crewman said was not always nice. At the best they saw men exhausted and harrowed. At the worst they saw them severely wounded and sometimes blown to bits so that their bodies literally had to be shoveled out of the planes. This picture, taken just as a plane was landing, is one of dejection and horror at the sight he saw. It was taken in combat by Fons Iannelli who was one of fifteen picked photographers assigned to a special navy photo unit under the direction of Captain Edward J. Steichen.

PHIL MURRAY ADDRESSES MINISTERS

Washington: — Philip Murray, president of the CIO, called on ministers to grapple with the "big sin" if they want to bring to an end the lesser evils that beset the world. "Stop the big sin that causes the smaller transgressions of individual men and you will wipe out the smaller transgressions," he told a meeting of the Washington ministerial union. The union leader, speaking in Calvary Methodist church to Protestant ministers, declared that today's "fundamenal problem" is to "achieve equality of job and property rights."

"By everything that is logical, a man's job is just as much his own property as the stockholder's securities are his own property," Mr. Murray said. "The day when labor was considered a commodity to be bought and sold on a free market has gone, and in its place we must put a new legal concept—that of the right to work." He said ministers and labor leaders "have a common ideological heritage" to improve the lot of the common people.

Referring to labor, he declared: "I don't believe that labor can hope to make any reasonable degree of progress unless it draws from the wellsprings of humanity which lie in Christian living." Mr. Murray defended the Political Action Committee and said that today "sentiment must be turned into action." Replying to critics who accuse the CIO of being "too dynamic," he asserted that a workers' organization should protect labor's welfare "by giving them a just share in the working of the government." "Political action," he said, "is the logical outgrowth of our insistence upon spelling out our ideals in the language of the political world in which we live."

Committee Says Women Workers Are Badly Underpaid

Suggest That Minimum Salaries in Certain Selected Fields Should Be Met by Church

By W. Bertrand Stevens
The Bishop of Los Angeles

Los Angeles: — "Don't bother about salaries of women in Church work. You won't get anywhere." That is what a group of us was told when we were charged by National Council with the job of investigating the salaries of women Church workers. "Why?" we asked. "Because everybody is involved in some way in paying sub-standard wages to one or more women," was the reply.

The committee proceeded with its study, and made its report, nevertheless. It was made up of Lewis B. Franklin, the Rev. Robert A. Magill, Mrs. Arthur Sherman, Miss Frances Young, and the writer. The report in itself is not epoch-making, but the subject is of prime importance. We shed tears for the underpaid workers in industry (as we should) and at the same time connive in the tragic underpayment of women workers in the Church. Why not carry the torch for them for a while? Dioceses, parishes and even the National Council itself are involved in the defiance of justice and social values.

Said the report: "The importance of raising salary standards for the women workers of the Church in all fields has been recognized by many individuals and Church groups but no concerted concrete action has been taken in the matter. With the increased number of women in industry and social work and the growing competitive bidding for the service of competent women, the Church and its various associated agencies should face the question and demand action if they wish to retain their women leaders and attract young women to their service.

"An inquiry by one member of the committee revealed the fact that certain women Church workers who left the Church work for secular employment did so for four main reasons. Two were directly related to the salary factor: (1) low salaries as compared with those in comparable fields and (2) lack of any system of advancement. Two were indirectly related: (a) lack of status and (b) lack of system of placement.

"The salary schedules for the Episcopal Church as indicated by the 1943 survey are generally lower than those for comparable positions in other professional work as for example YWCA secretaryships and public school teaching.

"A thorough study of the problem has been made by the National Council's committee on the training and employment of women for work in the Church. Among the other data of this exhaustive study there is a table showing the range of stipends for a selected group covering the various fields of religious work in which women of the Episcopal Church serve. This table, especially in the column of minimum salaries in each field, is a shocking revelation of the inadequacy of the Church's wage scale for women employees. In many classifications the minimum is $600 with $300 mentioned in some cases. In the Church there can never exist between services rendered and compensation received such a fixed relationship as there is industry, but it should be a closer relationship than it is at present.

"The fact that so many women workers give highly expert services for inadequate salaries and often as volunteers has muddled our thinking. Always, we hope, there will be in the Church of God men and women giving service of a value far beyond their remuneration. But if the Church is to do its job it must think in terms of adequate salaries for adequately trained workers. It must use part time and volunteer help without exploiting it or seeming to encourage the employment of inadequate people at nominal stipends or at wages below the subsistence level."

Suggestions for minimum salaries in certain selected fields have been made by the committee. These are but suggestions.

Another part of the committee's report concerned the important matter of providing some plan for a retirement income for women workers, who are at present excluded from the federal plan. The National Council passed a resolution urging every diocese, parish, and other employing agency of the Church to consider carefully the recommendation of the 1940 General Convention that such groups secure the future of their full-time lay employees by the purchase of retirement contracts. These contracts would be the property of the employes so that in case of change of employment the premiums could be assumed by the new employer or paid by the employee.

The report is being mailed to all bishops. Whether they will accomplish what we have in mind remains to be seen. We need to create sentiment everywhere. Is the Church willing to face a basic social question?

DELEGATES REPORT ON JAPAN

New York:—Four Church leaders recently returned from Japan presented a report at St. Bartholomew's Church here on November 29th and declared that the country is so "wide open to the Christian gospel" that they are worried about it. They declared that the people of Japan sense the bankruptcy of their old system, know that they were defeated and are now asking why. They are now testing Christianity to seek an answer. There is some danger of large numbers of people coming into the Church without an adequate understanding of Christianity, though the four men think that Christian leaders in Japan will be cautious about welcoming any rash mass movement into the Church.

The delegates were Douglas Horton, chairman of the American section of the World Council of Churches; Bishop James Baker of the Methodist Church; Luman J. Shafer of the Foreign Missions Conference and Walter Van Kirk of the Federal Council of Churches. They reported on talks they had with many Japanese leaders, including the emperor, as well as with many officers of the occupying forces.

Each of the delegates expressed astonishment at the tremendous welcome the American army is receiving in Japan. American officers and men walk the streets unarmed, and there is a growing pro-Americanism in every walk of life.

Describing Toyohiko Kagawa, Japan's eminent Christian, Van Kirk said he had lost a quarter of his weight during the war and was now "respected by the people of Japan as are few men there." He is dedicating himself to the organization of cooperatives, labor unions, and housing, clothing and feeding campaigns for the war-ravaged people. He told Van Kirk that the rumors he would run for a seat in the diet at the next elections were untrue.

Christian schools were pressed to alter their constitutions and eliminate all reference to Christian principles. Some gave in, Shafer said, but the majority worked out arrangements which satisfied the government and still kept a Christian allegiance. Of 157 pre-war churches in Tokyo, Shafer continued, only nine are now in existence and only six buildings intact. Eighty per cent of Osaka's churches were levelled to the ground.

The delegates will recommend to their sponsors that American Christians not attempt now to rebuild church edifices, nor to send large groups of missionaries. It would not be right, these men contend, to build churches when homes are needed, and to send missionaries into a country that is already starving for lack of food.

GERMAN CHURCHES READY FOR RELIEF

Geneva (airmail to RNS):—Prospects for distribution of food, clothing and medicine to needy Germans through their own churches have improved recently, according to S. C. Michelfelder, representative of the World Council of Churches who has just returned from visits to the American and French zones in Germany. "The problem will not be Germany but getting the stuff to Germany," he said. Transportation among localities and zones is the big problem, he stated, but he is convinced that it will be available and he stressed that the new Evangelical Church, uniting Lutheran and Reformed elements and representing also the free churches in relief, is already organized for the job. He also emphasized that needs in other countries are no less acute than in Germany, particularly Finland, Italy, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia.

UNITED PROGRAM FOR JAPAN

New York (RNS):—Thirteen mission boards have agreed to participate in a united program for Japan it was announced Nov. 27 following a meeting of the Japan committee of the Foreign Missions Conference. The Episcopal Church is not one of the thirteen but does maintain a consultative relationship.

SPONSOR YOUTH CAMP IN EUROPE

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—An international youth camp will be held in Switzerland next summer according to plans made here by the executive committee of the world's YWCA. It was also decided to hold a summer training course for national leaders of European countries.

Nominations Please

AT THE end of each year THE WITNESS presents an Honor Roll of men and women who have made during the year outstanding contributions to Christian life and work. Big names come to mind at once and of course they are not disqualified for that reason. But we also hope that readers will send us the names of people who have served effectively and yet are unknown to most of us . . . the hidden saints. All readers are invited to send in nominations, with facts to guide the editorial board. All of these will be carefully considered as a special order of business of the board and the Honor Roll printed in the December 27th number. We request that all nominations be at the WITNESS office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, not later than December 15th.

CHURCHMEN CONSIDER INDONESIA

Amsterdam (airmail to RNS):—The Netherlands Reformed Church which has emerged from the war with a new desire to relate Christianity to the life of Holland, has set up a special commission to study empire policy toward such outposts as Indonesia. The Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, secretary of the American Federal Council of Churches, who attended the synod stated that he was impressed by the desire of the Dutch churchmen for "more democratic processes and a united facing of social issues."

Wilburn C. Campbell resigned on November 28 as director of laymen's work of the National Council to accept the rectorship of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, effective May 1

SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Philadelphia: — The school of Christian education of the diocese of Pennsylvania, meeting at the Church House on successive Tuesday evenings, was concluded on December 4th with its sixth session. Among those giving courses were the Rev. Peter C. Van der Hiel, the Rev. Frederick B. Halsey, Mrs. William H. Jefferys, Miss Elizabeth P. Frazier, the Rev. Franklin Joiner, the Rev. David O. Trauger, the Rev. John K. Shryock, the Rev. Aaron Manderbach, the Rev. Frank Williamson Jr., Mrs. C. Stanley Rogers and Miss Marjorie D. Gammon. The Rev. Herbert W. Jones was the dean.

EDITORIALS

Read, Mark, Learn

IS THE Bible anything more than a devotional manual? Does the whole Bible have a story to tell, a message for men and women today? Should the Bible be read still; can it be intelligible to the layman? Generally speaking the answer we in the Church seem to be giving is decidedly in the negative. It is a book that is of concern to a few scholars and a great many members of fundamentalist sects. But we use the Bible for piecemeal reading with such guides as the Forward Day - by - Day and that's the extent of our interest.

Dr. Bayard Jones, in explaining the purpose of the daily lectionary points to a fact about the Bible in relation to the Church which we are liable to forget: "It happens that Christianity is a historic religion in a unique sense. It is not only, like all others, a religion embedded in human history, or with a history of its own. It is simply not a speculative system at all, but a faith founded upon history, based upon facts, grounded in things that really happened." Is it not possible that men today fail to recognize the importance of God's Word in the direction of current history because they have become unfamiliar with the impact of God on the history of the world as recounted in the Bible? We started by doubting the Bible in the 19th century, then we were affected by the Modernists "spiritualizing" of the Bible truth in the first part of this century, now we have settled down to forgetting the Bible.

We need sorely the return of an appreciation for and a familiarization with the Bible story. The stories of Genesis hold religious truth which we dare never forget. If any doubts this let him read the tale of the Tower of Babel in the light of our experience in a modern civilization which men tried to build without God. The historical books show God's hand active in the leadership of a primitive people moving toward an ever-widening knowledge of God's will and spirit. In the prophets we find warnings that have contemporary application and the Writings display some of the most profound searchings for religious truth which man has ever written. The events of the incarnate life of our Lord as given in the Bible are hazy in the minds of thousands who are supposed to follow him in their lives. The true meaning and importance of his sacrifice and atonement for the salvation of mankind are not understood because we are not familiar enough with the Epistles.

We need instruction in the whole of the Bible for children and adults alike. The daily lectionary provides a guide for those who would follow the complete text. But the people need guidance. Are our Sunday schools doing an effective job in this field? Could not the Lenten season be used for regular adult Bible courses? Too often when we think of Bible courses we mean the teaching of the background or the application of the content. Let us return to the content itself. Let us teach and read the Bible.

"QUOTES"

TO BE A CHRISTIAN means to hold convictions radically opposed to many if not most of the ideas which are constantly expressed over the radio, by the press, in the movies, by government officials and from many church pulpits. A major problem for Christians then is how to hold loyally to our beliefs about the meaning of love in personal, international, racial, political and economic relations, without permitting the constant tension of disagreement with personal friends, church associates, social institutions, and political policies to embitter or to crush us. There can be but one solution. It is to be found in more selective listening, reading, and meditation on what is good and true and beautiful; in more constant communion with God; in more daring ventures to bring in his kingdom of righteousness and peace.

—James Myers
Industrial Secretary of Federal Council of Churches

A Great Need Neglected

ANYONE who will examine the Estimate of Needs, a document sent out by the Presiding Bishop to inform us how the money being raised by the Reconstruction and Advance Fund is to be spent, is certain to agree with the group of Boston clergy whose statement will be found on page three. First asking for three million dollars our leaders, after further surveying the needs, raised the asking to five million. As the campaign developed other imperative needs were added so that this latest document, sent out over the signature of the Presiding Bishop, asks for a grand total of $9,257,500. But not a single penny of this sum is allocated to aid Europe which is dismissed with the casual statement that "it is hoped that the amount raised will also permit some aid to European churches."

There is hardly anything we can add to the statement issued by the Boston clergy except to say that we agree wholeheartedly with it. We commend it to your careful reading. If you agree with it we would suggest that you so inform your own diocesan authorities and also the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Places Where God Speaks

by Sherman E. Johnson

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

THE end-product of biblical studies in college and seminary ought to be an enhanced appreciation of the Bible as the word of God. It is just here that the fundamentalist or non-critical preacher has a temporary and specious advantage. He says in no uncertain terms that the book is God's word. He may make many mistakes: he may set the lower manifestations of religion on the same plane as the highest and make the lesser commandments seem as important as the greater; he may lead the people astray with truncated and warped conceptions of Christianity; he may drive many of the educated away from religion; yet he reaches and brings closer to God many of those unchurched common people among whom Christ himself did his greatest work. Unless the standard brands of churches, which by now are committed to the historical approach to the Bible, can show that their understanding of scripture has a greater evangelical power than any other—no, there is no "unless" to it; we simply must.

With this in mind I have chosen, as reading for Bible Sunday and the weeks that follow, certain Old Testament passages which are seen, in the light of the Christian revelation and modern knowledge, to contain the word of God with particular vividness and clarity. They are addressed to the Hebrew people at various stages of their national life, yet each reflects some new revelation of God and of his will. These sections can be used in private devotions, or as subjects for Bible classes or sermons. I strongly recommend to the reader that, even if he employs the King James, he should also make use of The Complete Bible: An American Translation, published by the University of Chicago Press.

The apprehension of God's presence in early Israel. Gen. 18: 20-33: a man can confidently intercede for other men because he knows that God is both just and merciful. Gen. 22: 1-14: an attempt to explain why human sacrifice was once performed but is nevertheless contrary to the will of God. Gen. 32:3-30: this story is an excellent example of what Rudolf Otto called "the idea of the holy"; man feels awe in God's presence and yet is irresistibly drawn to him and cannot let him go. Men of all generations have found in this mysterious and haunting story something that answered to their experience.

The Hebrew nation-church was founded on the conviction that God had made a covenant with Israel. Exod. 3:1-14; chapter 14; the decalogues of Exod. 20:1-17; 34:10-27 and Deut. 5:6-21. Various teachings about national life in I Sam. 8:10-18; I Kings 12:1-20; 19-1-18; 21:1-24; and Deut. 8 (to be compared with Judges 5). These passages belong to different periods and embody several points of view, but behind them all lie the still valid beliefs (a) that the Israelites did not choose God but he chose them, not because they deserved it but because of his mercy and love; (b) that he is a God of justice and expects his people to live by a standard higher than any that the world has known; and (c) that to break the agreement with him, and go against his will, means disaster.

The great prophets. The prophet's integrity, Amos 7:10-17. His call and his disillusionment, Isa. 6:1-13; Jer. 1:4-19; 20:7-13; 23:16-29. Denunciation of individual and social sin, Amos 1:3—2:16; 3:13—4:3; 6:1-8; Isa. 5:1-7. As long as these sins exist, worship will be unavailing, and God's visitation of his people will be bad news instead of good, for the only hope is repentance, Amos 4:4-5; 5:4-27; Ica. 1:10-20; 58:1-12; Micah 6:6-8. Punishment, Isa. 10:5-15. All primitive peoples have some sense of the divine such as we have observed in the stories listed above. The belief in the covenant made possible a unique understanding of God because it set him apart from the gods of all other nations. But without the teaching of the prophets the Hebrews could not have been led into a higher religion capable of embracing the whole world. The peculiar glory of Israel is that the prophets added a clear sense of the moral content of God's demand and the conviction that he is active in historical events. The teaching of our Lord presupposes the prophetic movement and cannot be understood apart from it. One who would seek the word of God for our day should immerse himself in the books of Amos, Isaiah and Jeremiah, carefully observe contemporary events in state, church and everyday life, and then ask what the Holy Spirit is saying to us through these prophets.

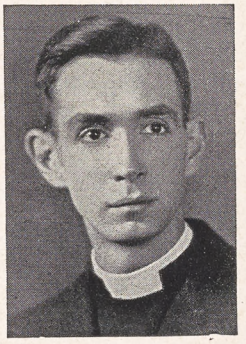
PROPHECIES of Hope. Monotheism, Isa. 40:12-31. Redemption, Isa. 50:1-3, chapters 55 and 61. A poetic picture of the ideal king of the future, Isa. 11:1-19. These passages belong to the period of the exile or later. Taken by themselves, they might encourage false hopes, but read against the background of the earlier prophets they tell us of the other side of God's character. He will come to those who wait upon him, and man's sin will not always frustrate the operation of his holy and loving will. Such passages as these encouraged the later Jewish hope of a time of redemption, which often included belief in a Messiah or ideal king, and so provided the background for the earliest Christians' interpretation of Jesus' significance.

The problem of suffering. Job, chapters 9, 10, 19, 31, 38-41. Before attempting the entire Book of Job, one might first read these sections, which set the problem and provide part of the divine answer. The earlier Hebrew solution of the problem can be seen in the book of Deuteronomy and in Psalm 37, and it is too simple: the man who is good will be blessed, the sinner will be punished. Job may not be perfect from the Christian point of view, but he knows that the conventional explanation of his suffering is cruel, unjust, and unworthy of God. Through it all he clings to faith in God and is answered by a revelation of God's greatness. Another answer is indicated in Isa. 52:13—53:12. Probably God's servant is originally the nation of Israel, though the writer may have had such a figure as Jeremiah in mind also. Christians of the first century and later looked back at this passage and believed that it explained the cross of Christ.



The scriptural sections listed above are by no means a complete summary of the best of the Old Testament. For one thing, none of the Psalms is included. Furthermore, I have not listed the great narrative sections, although much of the inspiration of the Old Testament is to be found directly in the story of Israel as it unfolds itself. What these readings are intended to show is that the Bible speaks for itself; it does not require the imprimatur of any Church or the critical judgment of the scholars for its truth to be validated, though there is a legitimate place both for Church canonization and historical research. The point is that such passages as these ought to speak to any right minded man and commend themselves as true words of God. These words once being accepted in faith and humility, we may go on and do further building, knowing that we have a firm foundation.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Notes on Evening Prayer

WE HAD occasion last time to speak of the value of the Exhortation at the beginning of the Daily Office. The short bidding which is an alternative to it first appeared in the Prayer Book in our 1892 revision, when it was placed in Evening Prayer and given a certain preference over the longer form by virtue of its initial position. Probably the idea in the minds of the 1892 revisers was that the long Exhortation when said at Morning Prayer would serve, like the Venite, for the whole day's worship and repetition of it was unnecessarily tedious. We must remember that in 1892 it was more common to have both the daily services in parish churches, at least on Sundays, than it is now.

But in our current mood and desire to shorten services, the custom is growing more widespread of omitting the whole penitential introduction to Evening Prayer, even when Morning Prayer has not been said in the church. When we consider this in the light of the fact that our evening congregations tend to be composed largely of persons who have not been to a morning service, or at least not to "Solemn High Matins" at 11 o'clock, we should think twice before we deny these evening worshippers their needful and proper preparation for communion with God. For only after we have confessed and removed the barrier of sin are we in a right relation both with God and with one another for the act of common praise and prayer.

Moreover it might be argued that the spirit of penitence is more congenial to worship at the close than at the beginning of the day. There is always in us the disposition to sin, to be sure; but at the end of the day's activity—or inactivity, as the case may be—we can more readily make up a lengthy list of the times we have given in to our sinful disposition than we can when, arising from refreshing sleep, we instinctively turn our minds first to thanksgiving to God for having brought us safely through the night to a new day of opportunity in His service. (I am not concerned here with the illogical practice of saying Morning Prayer an hour before noon.)

The short alternative Absolution, allowed in our 1928 Book, is fittingly taken from Compline. It is a prayer, not a declaration; and it is curious that it lacks any oblation "through Jesus Christ our Lord," especially since we have just besought God to forgive us according to His "promises declared unto mankind in Christ Jesus our Lord." The "grace and consolation" of the Spirit is not a soothing balm, but encouragement and good cheer. Think of the lines in the Veni, Creator Spiritus:

Anoint and cheer our soiled face
With the abundance of thy grace.

Speaking of Compline, we should like to ask what is the value of the revival of this office of bedtime prayers in so many of our Church conferences and religious meetings? Why are we not content with the Church's official evening prayer, especially since our flexible rubrics make it quite easy to include in it all the best elements of Compline: the psalms, a short lesson, the Nunc Dimittis, the Collect for Aid, and the Compline office hymn, "To Thee before the close of day"? Besides, such a shortened Evening Prayer remains logical and direct in its structure, whereas Compline has undergone so many and various cuts and additions as to leave a haphazard impression despite the beauty of its single pieces. The "living Liturgy" is no longer alive when we go behind a creative development, such as is Evening Prayer, to revive one of its sources whose form, though not its substance, is outmoded.

A good example of the "fitness of things" in Evening Prayer is the relative position of the two Gospel Canticles. The Magnificat sums up the preparation for Christ in the old covenant and looks forward to His Incarnation. The Nunc Dimittis is the response to the historic advent of the Savior which is proclaimed in the New Testament. Some have thought that a slight change in Morning Prayer would accomplish the same logical sequence; namely, to put the Benedictus after the first lesson and the Te Deum after the second. Why not? It would make the Te Deum more climactic.

The Study of the Bible

by Robert M. Grant

Professor at the University of the South

OFTEN we hear that what people know of the Bible is only what is read to them in church. The old-fashioned Bible reader is gone. The sheer volume of printed matter, including the Sunday supplements, has overshadowed the Christian book. If this is true—and I think to a considerable extent it is—the Church must make every effort to restore Bible reading, not only among its laity but among the clergy as well. If the Bible is the source of Christian doctrine we must remember that a river cut off from its source dries up and dies.

Why do we read at all? We read what we think will be interesting and what will have relevance to our own life. Often we read for escape. But we want to escape to situations which are imaginable as situations for us. We usually cannot face the prospect of jumping more than two thousand years into the past. Yet why do novels with Biblical subjects almost always sell well? The life-situations of the Bible are the same as ours. It is not the ancientness of the Bible which makes it seem difficult to read.

Then why don't we read the Bible more? Part of the problem is the translation. We do not ordinarily read seventeenth-century English for pleasure. Shakespeare may be an exception, but I for one find him far more attractive on the stage than on the page. The Pocket Book editions have glossaries, but looking up every fifth word does not make for interesting reading. And the King James version was made to be understood, not to sound mysterious. Readers who try the Moffatt or the Goodspeed translation of the Bible are usually delighted with the freshness and closeness to real life which they meet. The book of Acts, for example, reads like the story of an adventure (which it is) rather than a musty travelogue or a source book of Elizabethan theology.

Another difficulty is the bugbear of modern criticism. The ordinary Bible reader, ordained or not, knows vaguely that criticism exists, and takes one of two opposite attitudes. Either he manfully declares, "The Bible is the word of God," and proceeds with closed eyes to swallow everything literally, including Jonah; or else he becomes progressively more skeptical and ends by doubting everything, including the historicity of Jesus. Awareness of the real nature of criticism might save him from both errors. After all the difficulties and contradictions of the Bible as it stands are as obvious today as they have been since the second century. And to neglect the answers which honest scholars are trying to give is to bury your head in the sand. Is criticism hard to read? Sometimes; but it can be presented clearly, simply, interestingly, and easily—as it is in a new series of quarter pamphlets called Know Your Bible put out by Abingdon-Cokesbury. They are invaluable for young people, for older Bible students, for the minister who wants to refresh his memory.

BUT the problem still remains, Why read the Bible at all? Isn't it one more ancient book which has little point as far as our times are concerned? Didn't its writers live before modern science and the discovery of laws of nature? Don't they ignore what we all know of psychology? These questions take us into the deepest waters of theology. They involve the questions of God, creation, providence, miracle. They need to be answered in a book; and fortunately there is such a book, brilliant and not too technical, by the English Old Testament scholar H. H. Rowley—The Relevance of the Bible (Macmillan, $1.75). This ought to be in every clergyman's library.

A fairly simple answer is this. Some people believe that our religion can be carried on simply by rites—even sacraments—which satisfy the emotions and make little appeal to the mind. Others think that one or two simple principles are enough. But an adequate religion must answer the needs of the whole man. One reason the ancient mysteries died is that they occupied themselves exclusively with symbolism and had no theology. And simplicity alone is no evidence of truth. Experience is often complex and paradoxical and our theology must be capable of guiding us through complexity and paradox. Where can we find a guide book for the obscure ways of modern life? In the Bible; for in the Bible is the record of God's self-disclosure to sinful man, and man's search for the holy and merciful God, and God's act of reconciliation in Christ. On the foundation of the Bible theology can be built.

Just as our nation has a constitution, so the Church has the Bible. But the constitution comes from one group for one nation at one point of time. The Bible covers a period of nearly two thousand years; it is written for all nations; its writers and readers represent many classes and points of view. It is a universal book. And it is universal because it is the book of God. In the Bible from the story of creation to the vivid visions of the apocalypse we hear God speak. To be sure, he speaks through men—fallible, limited, sinful—but it is God who speaks, and the Bible must rightly be called the word of God.

The great unknown author of Hebrews describes us Christians as those who have "tasted the good word of God." But just to taste it is not enough. We must read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it. "For the word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." And again, "Today, if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." For in this book God speaks, not only to his people in the past, but also to us. He is not only the God of the dead, but the God of the living. And to us he speaks, if we will hear his voice, in his living word.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

RECENTLY I wrote that it might be a good idea for the Church to make more use of the dramatic presentation of religion over the radio in this country, following the lead of the Church of England. It still sounds like a good idea. But, after seeing some facts and figures, I'm not so sure that we could get on the air with any programs which really presented the Christian gospel.

We often bemoan the fact that "freedom of the press" has many illusory qualities in this country. These statistics deal with the "freedom of the air":

We have today some 900 standard broadcast stations varying greatly in size or power. Thus, a 50,000 watt station on a clear-channel uses 200 times as much power and occupies 40 to 80 times as much channel space in the spectrum as a 250-watt local station. There are, for example, 10 clear-channel 50,000 watt stations licensed to members of the National Association of Manufacturers which utilize more power and more space in the spectrum than all of the nation's 444 local 250-watt stations put together. The same is true of the 7 clear-channel stations licensed to CBS and its stockholders, and of 8 clear-channel stations licensed to newspapers.

More than two-thirds of all stations, including substantially all the powerful stations, are affiliated with one or more of the four national networks, further concentrating control. Control of the networks themselves is exercised by a few big advertisers and advertising agencies. Thus: 26 per cent of CBS's revenue in 1944 came from 4 advertisers, and 38 per cent from four advertising agencies. 25 per cent of the Blue network's business came from 4 advertisers and 37 per cent from four advertising agencies. 23 per cent of Mutual's business came from 4 advertisers and 31 per cent came from 4 advertising agencies. More than half of all network revenues came from two industries, drugs and toilet goods, 27.9%; and foods and food beverages, 22.4%. The largest single group of broadcast station operators today are the big newspaper publishers, approximately 250 stations being owned by or affiliated with newspapers. In more than 110 cities, where there is only one newspaper publisher and only one radio station, the radio station is owned by or affiliated with the newspaper publisher. As a side comment, we might say that some 208 newspapers which also owned radio stations took sides in the 1944 presidential campaign. Of these, at least 152 or 73% "backed the wrong horse."

I'm no statistician, but any way these figures are looked at, they seem to indicate that "freedom of the air" likewise has its illusory qualities in this country. A little popular protest to Congress and the Federal Communications Commission might help.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

_Citizenship and the New Day_ by Parley Paul Womer. Abingdon-Cokesbury Press. $3.

In writing _Citizenship and the New Day_, Dr. Womer has produced a book which should be priority reading for every teacher who attempts to reveal the meaning of citizenship. The book is written in a style that makes it easy reading for teachers and students alike and for the ordinary layman. It is divided into three parts; Part I is entitled _The Origin, Function and Character of Citizenship._ In five chapters the historic development of citizenship is described from earliest times to the incubation of citizenship in America and the gradual assumption of natural citizen competence. Differentiating between a "citizenry" and a "crowd" the author presses towards the need for individual responsibility in the voting process and in the solution of all problems involved in democratic government.

In the seven Chapters of Part II, under the title _The Idealistic Character of Citizenship,_ the author discusses the important problems of liberty, equality of rights, paternalism and citizen motivation, as they affect social justice, legal justice and the outreach toward a world state and world citizenship.

The author pulls no punches when discussing capital and labor in Chapter III, under the title _Social Justice and Free Enterprise._ The law of the jungle has played an extensive and significant part in free enterprise and still dominates its workings. For those who are constantly standing at the bench condemning the New Deal, he has some challenging words by way of experimentation and valuable accomplishments.

In the last five chapters of the book, entitled _Education for Citizenship,_ the author points out the dire need of educating for citizenship in family, school, citizen groups and Church. This section is especially valuable for the clergy and lay leaders of the community. In the last chapter he emphasizes the necessary place of creative religion in educating for citizenship. Here the author has done a notable piece of work in connecting the rule of reason with creative religion. Without religious motivation the founding fathers of our government might readily have failed even though they stood on the firmest grounds of reason. It was the utter assurance that a moral universe and the God behind it were being served in their thinking and action in first, fighting a war and second, in establishing a republic, that sustained them and gave them courage. "Kinship with the Eternal, the sanctity of the individual person, the rule of reason, conscience, courage and love—these are findings of the religious consciousness, and they therefore figure as absolutes of personal character, of social relationships and equally of the social and political order. Fundamentally democracy is democracy, not merely because it is based on a certain form of government, and a voting process, but because it takes account of these absolutes and in its educational processes, the promulgation of its laws, and the building of its institutions it endeavors progressively to give them expression."

In addition to the vital contents of the book on citizenship the author lists at the end of each chapter a bibliography on the particular subjects discussed. These are of great value as resource material to whomever is interested in the democratic process.

This reviewer highly recommends this book to all who find interest and stimulation in a scholarly work, written in an easy style on an important subject. —JOHN WARREN DAY.

New Youth Campaign Launched With Fine Challenge

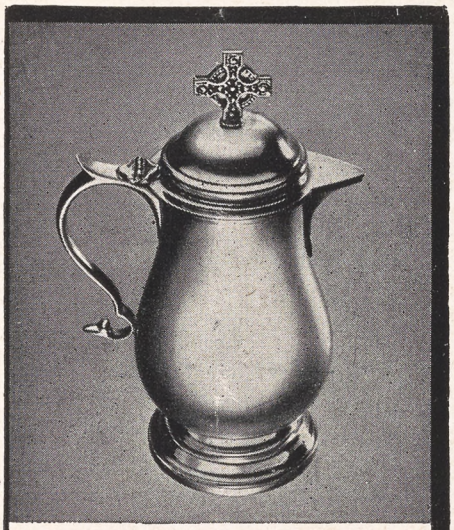
It Is Designed to Meet Challenge of Youth For Christ Movement Charged With Fascism

Edited by Sara Dill

Detroit:—A campaign to reach young people under the heading of "Youth Marches for Christ and the Church" was launched here last week. The program, designed to meet the Youth for Christ movement, charged with having fascist tendencies, is being sponsored by the Christian Endeavor Society but has the active support of Episcopal, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Congregational youth groups.

The campaign, to be extended to twenty other cities, was launched with a mass meeting attended by over 3,000 young people, preceded by a parade through the streets of the city. Following this opening meeting others were held in various churches where addresses were given by such leaders as Channing H. Tobias of the national council of the YMCA; the Rev. Daniel A Poling, president of the world's Christian Endeavor Union; John Ramsay, public relations representative of the CIO; the Rev. Jutsuo Morikawa; Harry N. Holmes of the World Alliance for International Friendship; Jesse M. Bader of the Federal Council of Churches; Walter W. Woodbury of the Northern Baptists; Mr. J. C. Penny, business leader. At these meetings two or three young people also spoke. It is estimated that about 10,000 persons attended the rallies, of whom 1,581 made decisions involving joining the church, fulltime Christian service, commitment to daily meditation and tithing.

Following these meetings a continuing committee was appointed and plans laid for monthly rallies, summer retreats and other interchurch get-togethers looking toward interdenominational cooperation.



Most of the Episcopal parishes joined in the program. The official agencies of the diocese gave their endorsements and the Rev. Richard U. Smith, director of education of the diocese, was on the general committee. Other Episcopalians to take part were the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, rector of St. Alban's, Highland Park, and the junior choirs of the cathedral, St. John's and St. Matthias'.

The next phase of the campaign will be conducted in Philadelphia late in January, followed by meetings in Boston from January 31 to February 3. Other cities which have asked for meetings are Baltimore, Richmond, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Dallas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Denver.

Peace Conference

New York:—The executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches has approved a statement prepared by the commission for a just and durable peace which, among other things advocates a general peace conference "to give moral principles a maximum chance to prevail." Five principles that must be applied in order to promote the general welfare were set forth as follows:

"1. Territorial changes should conform to the natural long-term aspirations of the inhabitants. Strategic and economic considerations ought to be subordinated to human considerations. There ought to be no

Plastics in Church Lighting

Rambusch Lantern No. 11-G-165, first made for St. Francis of Assisi Church, New York City, has proved so popular that mass production methods are being installed. Costs are down to one-half and shipping costs are down even more. This lantern marks a new development in the science of church interior illumination in that it departs from the use of metal framework and adopts a more practical and serviceable material. The new lantern frames are made from a ligno-cellulose product which is durable, non-corrosive, easy to transport, assemble and install. The new diffusing material is plastic. It is shipped in flat sheets and bent into cylindrical form during assembly.

wholesale displacements of peoples.

"2. Colonial peoples should be assured independence or self-government within a fixed term wherever practicable. Meanwhile, genuine international trusteeship should be provided through the United Nations Organization.

"3. Armaments and military establishments should be limited to the needs of internal order and of international order as planned by the United Nations. There should be a beginning of such international supervision and control as must become general if the human race is to protect itself against its own total destruction.

"4. Reparation should be limited to productive capacity over and above that required to maintain average living standards. It should not be an instrument of vengeance. There should be no enslavement and, as stated in the Atlantic Charter, the vanquished should see the possibility of 'access on equal terms to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity.'

"5. The treaties of peace should make a beginning in realizing the conception of an international Bill of Rights."

Describing the United Nations Organization as an international body "which has the power and opportunity to establish a peace which will accord with Christian principles," the Commission urged that its "curative and creative" functions be utilized so that through common effort against common threats to the general welfare the peoples of the world may find fellowship.

Stoned by Mob

Rome (wireless to RNS):—Roman Catholic Archbishop Stepinac of Croatia was recently attacked by a mob when he attended the opening of a parish house in Zagreb, according to a report received at the Vatican. It is said to have been inspired by his reported opposition to land reforms introduced by the Tito regime which would divide among the peasants the large estates held by the Church.

Ask Wage Increase

New York:—The executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches last week declared that it favors an increase of the minimum wage to 65 cents an hour with 75 cents an hour after two years. The current provision of 40 cents an hour or $16 a week for a 40 hour week is "wholly inadequate under present costs of living."

Meeting Discrimination

Chicago:—The Church Federation of this city held a youth rally that was attended by about 800 Protestant young people in order to help counteract tension among south side high school students. They were stirred up because Negroes attended certain high schools and recently staged strikes. A young Japanese-American, Perry Sieto, a student at Illinois Wesleyan, pleaded for racial tolerance.

War on Church

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Detailed Nazi plans for combatting the movement toward international Church cooperation, as examplified in the World Council of Churches, were revealed in a secret Gestapo document that has just been found in southern Germany.

Released by World Council headquarters here, the document, drawn up in 1938, asserted that the Church cooperation movement has a "Marxist, pacifist Jewish character." It stressed that cooperation of Roman Catholics and Protestants must be scrupulously watched because "the ecumenical (Church cooperation) movement constitutes for the Vatican a further means to effect reunion of the two faiths."

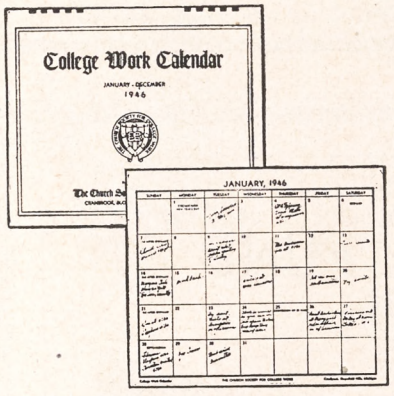
many had the task of getting an agent into the meetings of the World Council of Churches at Geneva.

Nazis were also instructed to penetrate into the Confessional Church government in Germany, to watch theological faculties, and to scrutinize "illegal methods" the Church employed in its struggle against the state.

Another job assigned to the Gestapo was to collect incriminating material against Roman Catholic orders and confessional societies. Control of these institutions and leading figures was held necessary because they were considered by the Nazis as a threat to Germany's national and cultural life.

It was proposed that attacks on the Churches should be conducted gradually "from the bottom up," instead of by immediate frontal attack. The most important problem, the instructions said, was to "create a new conception of Christianity."



Interracial Service

New York:—The Rev. Irvin W. Underhill, formerly a missionary to Africa for the Presbyterian Church, was the speaker at an interracial and interchurch service held at the Central Presbyterian Church here December 2. Mr. Underhill, said to be one of the most successful missionaries ever to go to Africa, was at one time a candidate for orders in the Episcopal Church. Following an address he gave not long ago an Episcopalian came to him and said, "I only wish we had leaders like you in our Church." To which Mr. Underhill replied: "I was in the Episcopal Church at one time but since my bishop insisted that all Negroes be segregated at diocesan meetings I felt obliged to leave it."

The director of the interracial choir at the meeting here was Mr. William King, the discoverer of

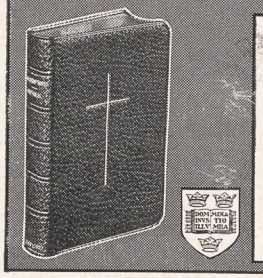
Sectarian Instruction

New York (RNS):—Sectarian instruction, and observance of religious festivals, such as Christmas and Easter, in the public school system was opposed here by the executive council of the Rabbinical Assembly of America, which represents the conservative wing of Judaism. In a statement issued by its president, Robert Gordis, the assembly asserted that religious education is not a responsibility which the state or any state agency can assume or discharge with success.



It also contended that the public schools cannot do justice to all religious ideologies and still achieve the main general goals of education. Such formal instruction, the statement said, would tend to identify the school system with particular denominationalisms, and the program might bring into the education system all the evils involved in union of Church and state.

Toronto: — Twenty-four Protestant denominations in the U. The total marks a gain of $68,502,714, or nearly 16 per cent, over 1944.

Harry S. Myers of Hillsdale, Mich., making his 26th annual report as secretary of the Council, revealed that the religious bodies, with a membership of more than 30,000,000 exclusive of infants, gave $406,913,320 for congregational expenses, and $103,457,720 for benevolences. Since 1934, with the exception of 1940, the trend in giving has been up, he said.

Archbishop Speaks

London (wireless to RNS):—The Archbishop of Canterbury stated last week that the Jewish problem "cannot be found wholly or mainly in Palestine." He declared that governments have "a bounden duty to make provision for Jews in Europe who have been the first and worst sufferers in the last ten years. It is not to be accepted that none of them can again find security and happiness in the countries in which they have suffered. Some will take part in, and contribute gifts to, the prosperity of Europe."

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

JAMES FOSTER
Rector of Christ Church, Gary, Ind.

I was glad to see your article, The Bible in the Prayer Book (WITNESS, Nov. 8) and I heartily concur in your recommendations. Especially, I wish that some of the Epistles and Gospels should be changed. Not only Lent 4 but Sexagesima, Lent 2, Lent 3 and Lent 5 could be bettered. Would like to see an alternative gospel for Lent 6 to be used at the early service. Are the Gospels for Easter Day the best we can have?

Also grateful for your listings of notable Gospel passages not included in the Prayer Book and would like to have a similar listing for the rest of the Bible, with the Church's permission to choose from these for the lessons at Morning Prayer. We here have Holy Communion every Sunday from First Advent through First Epiphany and from First Lent through Trinity Sunday, using Morning Prayer the other Sundays. On Sundays when we have Morning Prayer, it would be good to present the most notable passages not given in the liturgy. I do often use the Gospel for a lesson. All good wishes and our thanks for the fine work you are doing.

J. BURT WEBSTER
Associate Sec'y, army and navy commission

I am sure you will be interested to learn that to date 139 chaplains of our Church have been released from the armed forces and returned to civilian life. A few of these have not definitely been released, but they have sufficient points and their requests for release are in process of being granted. Some of them are also on terminal leave, and of these 139 men 91 have already been placed or have secured parishes. This, I think is a splendid showing.

The army and navy commission as such is not authorized to place chaplains in parishes but we are doing everything we can to be of assistance. One thing we do is to notify all bishops of the Church every two weeks of the men who have been discharged. We are constantly writing letters to bishops concerning these men on our own initiative and upon request giving the rectors of parishes and senior wardens of churches information they desire. We are now in the process of preparing an information card on each chaplain that will give us the information necessary when members of the clergy write to us. This card gives us information as to a chaplain's desires concerning special types of work or locations where he would like to serve.

We stand ready to do everything in our power to bring chaplains and parishes together and after all, other Churches differing from us as to ecclesiastical organization can do no more since in each case the chaplain has to be called by the local church or presbytery as the case may be. The Methodist bishops do appoint their men to parishes but the tendency in that Church is increasingly, in the larger parishes at least, coming around to the point of the local church calling the man they desire and requesting the bishop to appoint him.

JAMES R. SHARP
Executive Secretary, diocese of Tennessee

I was much interested in the article by Editor Frederick C. Grant in THE WITNESS (Nov. 8). All his illustrations are excellent as showing the real need of revision of the liturgical Epistles and Gospels. Doubtless he did not include many of which he made note. My own list has, not in Dr. Grant's article, Advent 1, insert "first" before "believing" in the Epistle, v. 11; Maunday Thursday Gospel, v. 32 put "others" "for other" (to discourage readers from overlooking the following comma, as I have heard done); and some more.

One Epistle I'd like to see lengthened is Advent IV by adding vv. 8, 9.

In the case of "they wanted wine" how about the marginal reading, "when the wine failed"?

If the parable of the clever steward, which he cites as a "notable passage not included in the Prayer Book" and which was displaced in 1928 to make way for the so-called parable of the prodigal son, is ever replaced certainly "when ye fail" at the end should be more intelligible; "of" earlier in the same verse should be made to read "by means of."

All in all I rather think that Dr. Grant's "dozens of places" is distinctly an understatement.

FREDERICK W. GOLDEN-HOWES
Rector at Fernandina, Florida

Talkinig It Over for November 15 on chaplains interested me keenly. It was a good job. It's not a new condition. The same problem faced the separatees in 1918 which was a skirmish compared to world war two. Remember some of the letters written then and during the depression? Weren't they to the effect that men made their own decisions when they embraced the vocation of the sacred ministry and that neither their Church, nor the officers of the Church, had any responsibility respecting their security or reemployment? Do you recall that the suggestion that a national clergy placement bureau be set up was given little consideration by General Convention? You doubtless also recall the reception given to the report on clergy unemployment. My personal experience upon my return from Mexico was identical to that of the chaplains today. I made an accurate and up-to-date analysis of clergy unemployment but got nowhere with it. The reaction was fair to middling but doubt was expressed by about everyone as to its workability so, with so little encouragement, I dropped it. But it is still a major problem.

THE NEW CHAIN-REFERENCE BIBLE

Truly a Bible PLUS a Biblical Library in ONE Volume

EDITED BY REV. F. C. THOMPSON, D.D., PH. D.

READ WHAT OTHERS SAY:

Justice Glenn Terrell, Former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Florida: "The inscription over the entrance of the Library of the Florida State College for Women in Tallahassee, Florida, is:

'The Half of Knowledge Is to Know Where to Find Knowledge.'

The New Chain Reference Bible is the 'Where' to find the fullest spiritual truths and to gain the most complete knowledge of the Bible in the easiest way. For the past two years I have used the New Chain Reference Bible and I have found it the best of them all." Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Ph.D., LL.D., D.D.: "It contains so much in such concise form that I use it above all others. I have never seen a Bible edition which equals it for study work and general use." Rev. E. E. Helms, Ph.D., S.T.D., LL.D., D.D.: "In my judgment the Chain Reference Bible is the most valuable and useful volume ever published. Anyone using it a week would not part with it at any price." Rev. J. Stanley Durkee, Ph.D., LL.D., D.D.: "I have to confess that in the New Chain Reference Bible I have found my greatest and best thus far. It is a marvel of condensation." Rev. Walter A. Maier, Ph.D., D.D.: "I use the New Chain Reference Bible with continued delight and would not be without it. It has been a great help to me in my radio work, preaching, literary and editorial activities." Rev. William Evans, Ph.D., D.D.: "I find it all that you claim for it. It is a most efficient and scholarly and helpful Bible, and I recommend it heartily." Rev. H. Framer Smith, Ph.D., Th.D., D.D.: "I find that it surpasses them all for real practical helps. The more I use it, the more I value it. It is not only a very scholarly work that will be greatly appreciated by the deep student, but it is so simple that even a child nine years of age can use it. To anyone desiring a better knowledge of the Scriptures I would say, examine this work before buying any other Bible."

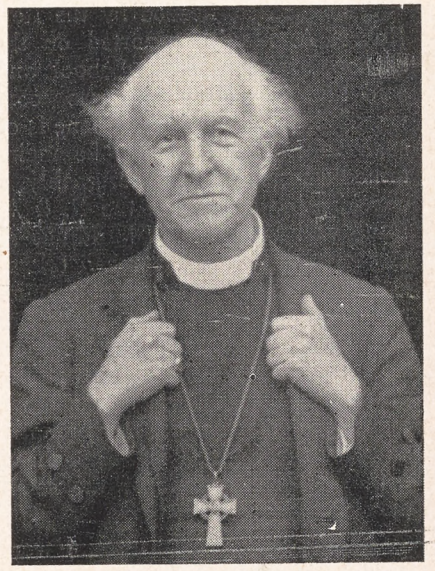
National Council Votes a Cut to Sufferers Abroad

Ten Per Cent of All Advance Fund Receipts Is to Go to Churches of Asia and Europe

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—Ten per cent of the receipts of the Reconstruction and Advance Fund will go for world relief, the money to be distributed by the Commission on World Council Services, the Church Committee for Relief in Asia and other accredited inter-church agencies. This action was taken at the meeting of the National Council, December 4-6. At the same time the minimum asking in the drive was raised from $5,000,000 to $8,800,000 "in view of the desperate world situation."



The report was presented by Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio who prefaced the reading of the formal report with the statement that people of the Church are disturbed because of the inadequate part the Episcopal Church is playing in the program for relief, both in Europe and Asia, that is directed from Geneva by the World Council of Churches.

The statement declared that "Millions are today facing the threat of death from starvation and pestilence in war-torn Europe. Millions in Asia face a similar fate . . . As Christians we dare not neglect this responsibility and are confident that God will give us wisdom and strength as we meet this opportunity to bring hope and life to his children in their dire need."

There was no expressed opposition to the granting of the 10 per cent but there was considerable discussion as to whether or not the program is sufficiently specific in presenting needs, and with various opinions expressed as to how successful the campaign would be. Bishop Hobson and Miss Mary Johnston were both of the opinion that the Church is not asking for enough to appeal to the imaginations of people, and both were wholeheartedly for aiding the people of the sister Churches of Europe and Asia. Lewis B. Franklin on the other hand was pessimistic about the amount of money that would be raised by the Fund, as was also Mr. Jordon, director of the campaign. Mr. Jordon set the figure at from five and a half to six million. Mr. Franklin thought it would be considerably less than that, and both of these gentlemen had strong words for bishops and clergy whom they say are not backing the drive (see Talking It Over). Mr. Franklin stated that only about one-third of the dioceses have set goals for the campaign and that these totalled only $3,200,000. "To set a goal is one thing; to get the money is something else again," he declared. Others, he believed, would set goals but the treasurer of the Council was of the opinion that only a feeble effort would be made in some dioceses.

Anyhow the minimum amount sought is now $8,800,000 with the World Council of Churches having 10 per cent of all money raised turned over to their relief agencies.

The other news of this Council meeting was the adoption of a plan, presented by Mr. Jordon head of promotion, and unanimously approved, whereby a coordinated program of all the departments at 281 will be presented to the Church at the beginning of each year. This will be offered as a book wherein the emphasis of the Church for the year, plus the departmental programs, will be in the hands of clergy and others in advance of provincial and diocesan conferences at which representatives from headquarters will present the program personally. It is also believed that such a book will enable the clergy to build their own diocesan and parish programs in harmony with the national plan of the Church. Bishop Peabody of Central New York, while for the idea, pointed to the danger of imposing a program upon the Church which many might not like. He also said that he hoped that representatives of 281, when they went about to conferences, would not act as though they had all the answers but would rather come in the spirit of conference for the exchange of ideas. Remarks were also made about the unrelated mass of promotional material that comes from headquarters with the Rev. John Huess Jr. of Evanston stating that if presenting the program in one book would pull this unrelated material together it would be a great gain.

Cosmo Gordon Lang, former Archbishop of Canterbury died suddenly on December 5 in his eighty-first year. He collapsed while taking a walk and was pronounced dead when taken to a nearby hospital Training women for work in the Church was discussed at length after Vice-President Addison introduced the subject with a lengthy report telling of various institutions able to supply adequate training. The report stressed the fact that jobs are available for those who have the qualifications, and a committee was appointed to study the matter of placement, with a personnel bureau likely to be recommended at the April meeting of the Council.

The committee on the post-war ministry reported that a total of 562 service men have registered as looking forward to the ministry. Ages range from 18 to 42 and military rank from privates to majors. The integration of the army and navy commission with the National Council was effected by setting up a new department at 281, the army and navy division.

A committee, headed by the Rev. Robert A. Magill, reported on the Bishop Payne Divinity School and said that the committee was convinced that the work being done is of such value that it should be maintained adequately. So, presumably, a considerable sum from the R. & A. Fund will be used for buildings at this seminary for Negroes. (Resolutions have been passed at a number of places to the effect that there should be no seminary for Negroes, since this is segregation, but that Negro students should go to the other established seminaries. Apparently however the Council is to go ahead with the development of the seminary for Negroes.)

Guest speakers at the meeting were the Rev. Douglas Horton of the Federal Council of Churches, recently returned from Japan, who told the Council what has previously been printed in these columns; also Bishop Thomas of Brazil, who spoke feelingly of opposition our Church receives from Roman Catholics in that country.

Guess that's about all, except that they have a rule at these Council meetings that there is to be no smoking until four o'clock. At 3:59 Dr. Sill, president of Bowdoin College, and Dr. Alexander Whiteside of Boston lit their pipes, whereupon fifteen people lit up cigarettes in self defense.

Also one of the gentlemen, speaking with his hands in his pockets and so displaying a nice Phi Beta Kappa key, brought to mind a crack I once heard, that the height of frustration is a man with a Phi Beta Kappa key wearing a double-breasted suit.

COLLEGE WORKERS HAVE SERVICE

Washington:—On December 9th Dean John W. Suter of the National Cathedral here, and the Church Society for College Work sponsored a special college work service at the Cathedral, emphasizing the place of religion in education.

A notable gathering attended. Thomas S. Gates, president of the University of Pennsylvania, delivered the address. The Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, recently appointed as executive secretary of the division of college work of the National Council, and Commander C. Leslie Glenn, a director of the Church Society, on terminal leave from naval duty in the Pacific and now back as rector of St. John's Church, read the Lessons. Other features included: a special litany for students, written for this service by Dean Suter; Canterbury Club representatives, college workers, chaplains and faculty members from George Washington University, the University of Maryland and other nearby educational institutions marching in the procession. The Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, warden of the College of Preachers and a director of the Church Society, also participated in the service.

CELEBRATION IN WASHINGTON

Washington:—The 50th anniversary of the diocese of Washington was celebrated on December 2 with an impressive service at the Cathedral. The preacher was Bishop Powell of Maryland, with the procession including the clergy of the diocese and hundreds of leading laymen and women were present. Bishop Angus Dun, under treatment in a hospital in Boston and therefore unable to be present, sent a special message which was read at the service.

The Rev. Frederick T. Ashton (right) is being congratulated by Mr. Simms, vestryman of St. Matthew's, Wilmington, Delaware, for the fine work he did for the church. Mr. Ashton, chaplain of hospitals in the city, also found time to minister to the people of St. Matthew's and did it so effectively that he would have been named rector had he been free to accept. Bishop McKinstry describes his work as "the most constructive interracial work in the diocese"

ARCHBISHOP LANG DIES SUDDENLY

London:—Lord Cosmo Gordon Lang, former Archbishop of Canterbury, died suddenly here on December 5. He was eighty-one years of age. He collapsed while taking a walk and was pronounced dead by the time he was taken to a nearby hospital.

WANTS SIMPLER SERVICES

London (wireless to RNS):—The Archbishop of York urged "simple and non-technical" language in a plea for new methods of evangelism. "Much of our theological vocabulary is Arabic to the man in the street. The unchanging gospel must be preached in modern terms so that the man of science and the artisan can equally know what we mean."

Catholic Newspaper Employees Organize for Franco

They Are Among Pickets to Protest Meeting Addressed by Harold Laski of Labor Party

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—When Harold Laski entered a hotel in this city on the evening of December 3 he was greeted by a parade of pickets carrying posters which read: "Franco Saved Spain from the Reds"; "Hands Off Catholic Spain"; "Oust Laski, the anti-Catholic hatemonger." The presence of the pickets did not disturb the distinguished chairman of the British Labor Party who, with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Prof. Leo Szilard of the University of Chicago, addressed an overflow dinner meeting which concluded a three day conference on the atomic-bomb sponsored by The Nation, a national weekly.

This is not the story of this meeting but a story behind the story. On a recent evening about 250 members of the Catholic Institute of the Press met in another hotel in this city. They were told that unless the Catholic writers of the country helped to defend and preserve Franco they would eventually find themselves "sovietized" in the United States. Franco's only aim they were told was "to bring the government of Spain in line with the teachings of the Catholic Church" and because of this these newspaper workers were asked to use their influence "to try to save Spain" from Stalin who was termed "the enemy of God and the human race."

The Catholic Institute of the Press was organized about three years ago among reporters and rewrite men who work for Hearst's Journal-American and the Patterson-McCormick News. Its membership was at first open exclusively to Catholic employees of newspapers and magazines but since that time employees in all branches of radio, advertising and allied fields have been included. It now claims a membership of 800, many of whom are secretaries, typists, telephone girls and other workers in the communication field. There are also a number of reporters, editors, photographers and others whose influence might conceivably be of some value. In general it appears that Roman Catholic reporters and photographers connected with the New York Times and the New York Herald-Tribune have stayed away from this organization. All of them however were circularized when the organization was founded.

The meeting of the Institute was held largely to back up Frank Fay, actor, who recently protested when other members of the stage took part in an anti-Franco rally in Madison Square Garden. Mr. Fay, it will be recalled, had been particularly incensed because the Roman Church in Spain had been termed "a rich monopolist" by Mr. Laski who addressed the rally by radio from London. Fay spoke at this meeting of the Institute, although briefly and some observers believed, incoherently. He received a big hand from those present for declaring: "I have insisted all along that there be an investigation as to whether these people aided and abetted a rally that would sponsor the horrible attack of one Mr. Laski in a cowardly way across the ocean." He then dashed off to a performance of his play and the meeting was taken over by Professor Edward T. Walsh of Manhattanville College of the Sacred Heart. Dr. Walsh has passed some time in Spain since the civil war and is rumored to have been once decorated by Franco, although this has not been confirmed. In any case his subject on this particular evening was The Real Story of Spain and it began with an attack on Laski and on "all the people of a slight pink or red tinge who say that Franco must go."

He charged that the Republican government in Spain had "robbed" the Church. He also stated that "because of the crooked election laws, which they had set up, the reds—or popular front—were able to have a majority in the Cortes. All their claims are now based on this crooked election." He then devoted some time to what he called "the red terror" of 1938, claiming that 11,000 priests and nuns were butchered and raped by the Republicans. "Nothing like this," he said, "has been seen anywhere except perhaps in Soviet Russia in 1917. It was not Spanish in character—it was Soviet. Franco was almost too late—but he was just in time. What he did was to prevent the Sovietizing of Spain and to set up Spain as the western bastion of Christianity."

He admitted that "not everything Franco does is holy, or is the man a saint," but maintained that Franco was not a Fascist. "A Fascist," declared the professor, "believes that the state is all-powerful. Franco has repeatedly said that the state comes second, the Church first. He is a very good Catholic . . . his only aim is to bring the government of Spain in line with the teachings of the Catholic Church."

He explained Franco's use of German munitions and soldiers during the civil war by the assertion: "Franco got help where he could, just as George Washington got help where he could during our revolution."

"Franco has not set up a Fascist state; he has set up a Christian state, and he has done pretty well. He has a country that is out of debt in spite of the fact that the Reds took most of the gold out of the Treasury."

After crediting Franco with a number of reforms, particularly in establishing "twelve great universities where Christian religion is taught," the speaker said that the leaders of the Republican government could not better this record for they are "murderers and blasphemers, dominated by Soviet Russia. If

Nominations Please

AT THE end of each year THE WITNESS presents an Honor Roll of men and women who have made during the year outstanding contributions to Christian life and work. Big names come to mind at once and of course they are not disqualified for that reason. But we also hope that readers will send us the names of people who have served effectively and yet are unknown to most of us . . . the hidden saints. All readers are invited to send in nominations, with facts to guide the editorial board. All of these will be carefully considered as a special order of business of the board and the Honor Roll printed in the December 27th number. We request that all nominations be at the WITNESS office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, not later than December 15th.

we listen to their siren songs it will mean that the Soviet will control Western Europe as well as Eastern Europe and there will be nothing between us and Moscow. You will then have Gibralter not in the hands of a Christian gentleman but in the hands of someone like Marshall Tito."

His final plea to the members of the Institute was based on the assertion that Franco, like them, was "a member of the mystical body of Christ. No civil membership is as important as that membership in the mystical body of Christ. We American Catholics will be dumb dogs if we take any more of this nonsense about Spain from Mr. Laski or anybody else!"

After a prolonged period of applause Professor Walsh was asked by a rather timid young man whether any of the charges against Franco as a dictator were true, and whether any instances of insurgent brutality had been proved. At the request of a priest on the platform the young man and all subsequent questioners were asked to identify themselves. "Perhaps Franco is a dictator," Dr. Walsh replied. "But there are times when dictatorships are necessary. And as for brutality—the atomic bomb exploded any charges against Franco on that score."

The only voice of dissent in the audience was raised by a young woman who identified herself as an ex-employee of the News. "If you excuse Franco for obtaining munitions from Germany by saying that George Washington got help where he could," she asked, "why don't you excuse the Loyalists for obtaining help from Russia on the same grounds?"

Dr. Walsh answered that yes indeed, the Loyalists had gotten munitions and help from Russia and repeated that Stalin was "the enemy of God and the human race."

Several angry suggestions were made that the young woman be thrown out of the meeting but she stayed in her place.

As the question period ended another young lady asked the speaker how she and the other members of the Institute could act effectively on what they had been told about Spain. "That is not for me to say," he replied. "That is for all of you to decide."

Which brings us to the pickets in front of the hotel on December 3rd with the posters denouncing Harold J. Laski. Meanwhile inside the hotel Mr. Laski, in a brief reference to the matter said that he had been charged with having "assailed the Roman Catholic religion all over the world. Nothing could be more fantastic or untrue. My life has been devoted to advocacy of tolerance wherever tolerance may be found." He referred to the Vatican as "a state widespread and powerful in influence though small in territory" and claimed the same right to criticize the Vatican as he has to criticize Great Britain. Charging that the Vatican has "assisted in the massacre of a great democracy," Mr. Laski said that he distinguished "between the right of men and women to hold a full faith in the religious beliefs they hold and the right of a political state arising out of these beliefs to turn to principles not built on democratic foundations."

Since this is the position of THE WITNESS on this matter (see editorial, Nov. 1) it is perhaps a good place to end this story and turn to other and possibly more important happenings.

Members of the Spanish Hierarchy give the Fascist salute following a service at which their blessing was given to a number of Franco's generals. Roman Catholics in the United States are now organizing to defend the "Christian gentleman" who allied himself with Hitler

SPANISH REFUGEES RECEIVE AID

New York: — Dorothy Parker, author, is the chairman of a committee now seeking clothing for Spanish refugees in Spain. Word was received by her last week from the head of the relief agency of the Unitarian Church, in charge of the distribution, that unless large amounts are sent soon many people who had to flee from the terror of the Franco regime will die this winter. The clothing should be sent to the warehouse, Spanish Refugee Appeal, 715 Second Avenue, New York. Cash donations for this work should be sent to the CLID, which is cooperating with the appeal, checks being made payable to "Treasurer, CLID" and sent to the organization at 155 Washington Street, New York 6.

CLOTHING AND FOOD FOR EUROPE

New York:—Five hundred bails of clothing, bedding, linens, shoes and food have been prepared by the Church committee on overseas relief of the World Council of Churches and have left here for shipment to Europe and Asia. It represents about seventy-five tons of goods. The collections are being continued indefinitely. A collection, called the Victory Clothing Collection, is to be held January 7-31 with the goal set at 100,000,000 garments.

Men for the Ministry

WE UNDERSTAND that a good number of men in the armed services have let it be known that they would like to enter the ministry. Naturally we hope that many of these men will choose the ministry of the Episcopal Church. But whether it be our Church or some other, the choosing isn't all on one side. The collect for the Ember Days suggests only part of the process: that the hearts of many may be moved "to offer themselves for this ministry." We need to pray that the Church may select from those who so offer themselves only the most capable. We need to see to it that the Church get busy and go after the best men. Let chaplains in the service and in the colleges, and clergy in our parishes go after those who are first-rate and persuade them to come in.

There will always be candidates from the ranks of the All-American Altar Boys, as one of our bishops calls them. And some of them make very acceptable parish priests in time if enough obstacles are put in their way so that they have to struggle to get in and in the course of the struggle lose their fascination for ecclesiastical trappings and the imagined prestige that comes to a man when he puts a stole around his neck or a chasuble on his back. The Church needs more men who would not naturally choose to be priests, but who, through the efforts of those who recruit them and by the power of the Holy Spirit, may be convinced and converted and dedicated to the Christian ministry.

Before the war a man who teaches in one of the great universities in the east said that the most capable men he knew chose science, medicine, the law, but rarely the ministry for their life work. During the past few years the college training of most men has been determined by the army or navy; the opportunity of choice has been greatly restricted. But if it was true in 1940 that candidates for holy orders were not usually top men it is quite likely to be so in 1946. And as the joint commission on theological education reported to the last General Convention, "The laity must be made aware that the adequacy of what the seminaries can do depends in large part on the calibre of their students. Unless our Church folk help recruit some of the strongest and ablest young men for the ministry, no seminary can produce competent clergymen."

The Church Society for College Work has done a good job in seeking out the finest material in our colleges. They continue to do a good job. But the same kind of selective recruiting is the task of the whole Church, laity and parish clergy and certainly bishops. Let's go out and hand-pick the best men we can find. We certainly need them.

"QUOTES"

EVERY implication of this discovery (atomic bomb) means planned internationalism, economic, social, political. It is an international discovery. The planning of its application has been international. The organization of its future use must be international also. There is no nation-state fit to be trusted with the development of atomic energy.

—Harold J. Laski.

The Day of the Lord

WE RECOMMEND for pertinent study at this moment in history Isaiah 2: 6-19. In the first five verses of this chapter Isaiah sets forth a vision of the world united under the rules of Jehovah with war giving way to universal peace. This happy vision is followed by a passage dealing with the day of the Lord. The contrast between these two visions is striking. In the former the nations come voluntarily to bow before God and submit to his rule of justice and peace. In the latter all human glory is debased before the majesty of God when he comes to shake terribly the earth.

The prophet addressed these words to a people who lived many years ago. They were filled with pride; their land also was full of silver and gold, neither was there any end of their treasures. There land was also full of horses, neither was there any end of their chariots. Their land was also full of idols; they worshipped the work of their own hands. In the day of the Lord, as seen by Isaiah, the loftiness of men shall be bowed down and the haughtiness of men shall be made low and the Lord alone shall be exalted. And they shall go into the holes of the rocks and into the caves of the earth for fear of the Lord and for the glory of his majesty when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

These words have an ominous ring. Are there people today who glory in the fabulous wealth of their nation? Are there people today who rejoice in the military might of their nation and imagine themselves secure behind this panoply of worldly might? (For "chariots" read tanks, planes, world's largest navy, powerful army, atomic bomb.) Are there people today who worship the work of their own hands? (For "idols" read industrial machine, selfish pleasure, Nordic supremacy, atomic energy.) Are there people today drunk with haughty pride and arrogant conceit? (An army clique is reported to be agitating for war with the Soviet Union within the next few months.)

The prophet warns that nations which will not humble themselves before the majesty of God will be humbled by their own arrogant pride.

The way of man leads to the caves of the earth and the suicide of civilization.

The way of the Lord leads to the mountain where God is worshipped; where his law is heeded and under whom the nations of the earth live together in peace and justice.

Hope or Despair?

by Henry Knox Sherrill

The Bishop of Massachusetts

FIFTEEN years ago I was consecrated bishop. Fifteen years is a short period in the history of the Church but it has been long in the seriousness of the times. It is literally true that there has not been a normal year in the fifteen; first a depression of unprecedented severity, then years clouded by the threat of war and then the war itself. As a result, as I look back, I realize that we have not met all our hopes and anticipations. We have made progress in certain directions and above all else we have retained a deep unity of the spirit. I believe it to be a fact that with healthy differences of point of view, essential if we are to keep a sane balance, we are a Christian Fellowship.

If I were to choose a text for the times it would be "A great and effectual door is opened and there are many adversaries." Let us start with the adversaries. We must face the facts with unblinded vision and courage and we must beware equally of wishful optimism, as well as of hopeless despondency. We live in apocalyptic days. They echo that mysterious and awesome picture in the twenty-fourth chapter of St. Matthew "For there shall be great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time." It is not the physical destruction of property, nor is it alone the millions of men, women, boys and girls in sorrow, in suffering, in utter destitution. The sobering fact is the spiritual failure of men everywhere which has made these things possible. To say this is not to lessen the responsibility of arch criminals, for their deeds of utter cruelty, but no people, no nation, no individual can escape responsibility for our lack of spiritual power and the resulting moral chaos. The important questions of the present are: have we learned anything in the crucible of these war years? Have our lives been transformed in any deep way? I wish that it were possible to give a strong affirmative answer, but sincerity does not allow this. Abroad one has the impression of the dead weight of despair without great faith, and at home there is the all-out effort to return to prewar life and habits, and especially comforts, as rapidly as possible. We lower the speed limit to conserve tires, but we cannot keep it there to save human lives. The air is filled with talk of competition between nations and groups. The foreign ministers conference dragged along to a weary and disillusioning end. There are riots in India, Java and Indo-China as a protest against the empires of the west. Nowhere does there seem to be the clear northwest wind of high purpose and of acute spiritual perception. The churches themselves are not awake to the fact that they are placed in a pagan world to witness to the truth and especially to the way of Christ. They still seem to feel that they can hold to the luxury of division and of secondary aims and purposes. Despite all that we have seen and heard the iron has not really entered into our souls.

In any generation this is serious, but today it is doubly so. It is obviously impossible to assess accurately one's own times. But everything points to the likelihood that we are in a turning point in history. The secret of the atomic bomb must be shared with other nations. We do not as yet seem to realize that the discovery of atomic power, with its possibilities of cruel destruction as well as of blessing, cannot and must not be kept as means of political power. For selfish and unselfish reasons it must be shared with the world under the noblest of scientific practices and conditions.

All the signs are here. Is the cataclysm through which we are passing the agonized throes of a dying civilization or are we seeing the birth pangs of a nobler day? What we are, what we do, is of untold significance to generations yet unborn. Do we see this, do we understand? The adversaries are not without, but within the human heart; pride, selfishness, lust, greed, these cannot be conquered by force of arms. They cannot be overcome by man alone. We can devise new and terrifying forces of mechanical power, but within our own limits we cannot take the place of God. In a moment of clear perception we may well cry, "Who can deliver us from the body of this death?" Perhaps if we can truly utter that cry of despair, there will be found the beginning of wisdom.

FOR us the answer to that question is found in the simple and perhaps too familiar statements, "The word became flesh and dwelt among us." "The light shineth in darkness." Strange as it may seem to many of the wise and prudent, we who are Christians, see in Jesus of Nazareth, who walked the highways of men, the character and the purpose of the everlasting and eternal God. This is not merely a figure of poetic imagination, nor is it a subtle compliment to ourselves and our own humanity. He was human, yet he was a gift of God bringing new power, new strength and new assurance of eternal life. His teachings stand the acid test of experience and never more so than today. The absurdity of greed is so clearly revealed in the short sentence "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." The falsity of position and power is shown "He that is greatest among you shall be as one that serveth." The shallowness of discrimination among men is so simply defined by the question "Who then was neighbor to him that fell among thieves?" No clearer chart of the way men and nations should go can be given than again the all too familiar "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Here is wisdom for the market place, arbitrative assemblies, homes, for us all in every walk of life. It is absolute realism and the sooner we realize this to be so, the wiser we will be.

The master not only taught, he lived. In his communion with God, in his courage and steadfastness, in his complete self sacrifice, we see in life all that is meant by his words "Be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

Companionship with him lifted men and women above themselves to great heights. Fishermen, a publican became apostles of the kingdom. With his resurrection, his living presence strengthened the early Christian community. Those early disciples had no easy time, but they were changed and possessed with great sources of inner strength and power. They went out into that cruel, sordid, materialistic Roman world with the message of the good news.

It is that power from Christ which the world of today so sadly needs. Millions in despair call for the assurance that God is love. Thousands in sorrow long to know that "death hath no more dominion over us." Multitudes, strained and overburdened would hear the truth in "quietness and confidence shall be your strength." We need character which alone can come from daily companionship with God in Christ. The one unanswerable apologetic for Christianity is the Christ-like life. Men are set, as perhaps in no time since Apostolic times, for the evangel of a Church which attempts bravely to be Christian. The picture of Christian missions as an attempt to force a religion upon someone else having an equally good religion is utterly false. Christian missions at the best is not to be confused with the spread of western civilization, if there is such a thing, but the desire to share with others the blessings which are ours as the gift of God. We have learned that the world cannot remain part Fascist. We should know that the world cannot remain largely pagan and part Christian, and that is true, too, of ourselves.

These years should have taught us, too, something else. We have found out that the war could not be won without great cost in money, in material, in effort, in human life. We should know that this is always true. Nothing worthwhile is ever accomplished without paying the necessary price. The Church only goes forward as there is sacrifice of time, of money, of consecrated lives. The wonder is that so much has been accomplished by so few, for if most of us are honest we will be forced to admit that our Christianity has been an aside rather than the central fact of our existence. Yet Christ's call is imperative.

Given mothers and fathers who follow Christ, there will be no question as to the quality or the quantity of Christian ministers. Given men and women who care for Christ, we will be given the resources to carry on the world-wide work of the Church at home and abroad. Without this central fact of our own devotion, all our ventures are but sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. It is in the long run only the reality of the spiritual quality of the Church which counts.

We face difficult days, not only in the building of peace, but in the use and control of new and awe-inspiring sources of physical power. But this is no reason for faint-heartedness. The Church has failed most when she has been complacent. The Christian saints have always responded to trying times. There is something in adversity which draws out the best in true men and women. The days of testing and of opportunity are here.

Certainly we have great spiritual resources. We have a sacred heritage from the years which have gone. We have above all our faith in God in Christ, with the promise "Behold I give unto you power." Without that power man would be inexorably caught in the pitfalls of his own making. With that power we can overcome all things.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

WOMEN have not been members of the National Council long. In that conclave, like all august bodies, you are supposed to keep your mouth shut until you have earned your letter. So, I imagine, Miss Mary Johnston, representing the Auxiliary, had a pretty fast heartbeat when she told the assembled brethren that they were a bunch of pikers for setting their sights so low with the Reconstruction and Advance Fund, the condition of the world being what it is. She was saying what that group of Boston clergy said last week (WITNESS, Dec. 6), namely, that the Episcopal Church ought to stop thinking exclusively about its own needs and start thinking about "children by the millions who are in the imminent danger of starving and freezing as winter comes to Europe unless immediate help comes from countries which have food, clothing, vitamins and medicines" (cable from Church leaders in Europe).

Bishop Hobson, to his credit and with a good deal of what folks call dialectics, had offered a resolution proposing that ten per cent of all money raised by the Fund should go to aid the people of Europe and Asia, the money to be handled by the committees of the World Council of Churches (story on page three). He declared that the people of the Church were disturbed because we were doing so little to aid in this great emergency. He mentioned the statement by the Boston clergy, which brought out an aside from the Presiding Bishop to the effect that "Church people all over the country are saying the same thing."

At this point Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the Council, was asked for his opinion. Prefacing his remarks by asking whether "they wanted the truth or just pleasant remarks" he launched into a denunciation of bishops and clergy for not enthusiastically backing the Fund. "It was ordered by General Convention," he asserted. "The program was then approved by the House of Bishops. But there is a lack of willingness on the part of bishops and clergy to follow any plan. The laity want to give. The clergy, instead of giving leadership, merely get in the way. We are not a Church but merely a collection of congregations. Not more than ten per cent of our parishes have asked for material to conduct the canvass. This means, I take it, that ninety per cent will have nothing to do with it, with some saying so frankly. For the Church not to respond to this appeal in the face of the world's need is an outrage."

He really took the clergy—including two-thirds of the bishops—for a ride and Mr. Jordon, in charge of the campaign, made it unanimous as far as he and Mr. Franklin were concerned, by arising to say: "I endorse completely what Mr. Franklin has said." So, boys, you can take it from these two top officials at your Church headquarters that you are just a bunch of no-good guys.

MR. FRANKLIN'S denunciation, so it seemed to me, was based on sheer legalism. What he said was true enough—a lot of the clergy are not backing this program of 281. What never seemed to occur to him is what was pointed out by those Boston clergy, by Miss Johnston and by Bishop Hobson, that they have offered a program which does not even remotely meet what he called "this world's need." General Convention, sure enough, authorized 281 to raise money for reconstruction and relief. The bigwigs went into a huddle and made up a program. It asks us to give solely for Episcopal Church needs, without a dime for the suffering people of this world. But if you don't like it—if you have shriveling children on your mind—then, take it from Mr. Franklin and Mr. Jordon, you are just a disloyal so-and-so.

As you will see from the story on page three, the protests that came from Boston and other places has at least partly corrected the situation. The Boston clergy asked that the first million dollars raised go to the suffering people of Europe and Asia. They believe, rightly I think, that if the Episcopal Church will stop being a petty sect and start doing something for somebody else that our own needs will then be adequately taken care of by Church people, made enthusiastic by an imaginative program that has some relationship to the immediate needs of this world. The National Council apparently didn't have quite that much faith in either God or man. But they did vote a cut of ten per cent to put a bit of food into the bloated bellies of Europeans, providing the remaining ninety per cent could be used to put up buildings in various parts of the world, including Cuba, Brazil, Haiti, Puerto Rico, Panama, the Virgin Islands and various parts of continental United States. Pretty hard to put some of these places under the head of "this world's need," but let that go.

After all, ten per cent is a pretty big crumb to fall from the rich man's table, so I presume those starving people of Europe and Asia will be duly grateful.

Evelyn Underhill and Our Times

by Marjorie Hoagland

Churchwoman of New York City

A DISTINGUISHED authority on modern European history recently left his job with one of the country's great educational and research institutions. His reason, tersely stated, was this—"I am convinced that five years' time will see the end of the world, of all present civilization. I might just as well do the many little things I've always wanted to do, before the holocaust."

He was thinking of the atomic bomb.

He was thinking of the statements issued by the scientists whose researches made usage of atomic force possible—the men who have said that it gives to mankind power hitherto wielded by God alone. That power conceivably might, they add, result in the death of 40,000,000 Americans in 20 major cities during a few hours of enemy attack.

It is pathetically evident that we have won the war—and scared ourselves half to death in the process. Everyone recognizes that other nations soon will develop the bomb. Almost no one believes that mankind has the brains and the attitude of heart—in short, the political and spiritual maturity—to keep from wiping itself out. We are remembering too late and too feebly the warning issued a decade ago by England's Maude Royden—that certain earlier forms of life (for instance, the huge Neanderthal man of the Stone Age) died out, not from lack of brute strength but because of being literally too stupid to survive.

I suggest, however, that political and spiritual maturity can be developed—adequately, and on time. I urge with all the fervor I command that the issue basically is spiritual. I would stress that God has the power (now, as in ages past) to save his people everywhere—that his alone is the power—and that the most glaring defect of these times is that we are looking tremblingly to ourselves and to each other to find a ray of hope, whereas the leading and power would be here in abundance if instead we looked to God. We must get the right focus . . . and it is upward, not on ourselves. We cannot save ourselves, even physically.

It now has become a matter of serious moment (of "life and death") to every human being whether he and his neighbor are Christian. For the first time in history, universal Christianity is a stark essential. As never before, most men and women are sobered by the realization that unless we live greatly, we may not live at all.

The situation resolves itself into this—

During the next brief years of leeway, shall we—like the history professor—turn in despair to the "little" things, the last mad pleasures of desperate men . . . or shall we turn with such conviction and utterness to God that from him can come the leading and power to save the worthwhile potentialities of civilization?

That is the issue, the primary issue of these times. The decision is up to us. If we want to perish for lack of vision, we can. More than all else we need voices great enough to give us an adequate Christian call to arms—voices saying in mighty strength that if we would become humble because of the end—all contretemps to which our human "brilliance" has brought us, then perhaps we might let God lead us to sanity, and righteousness, and peace.

WE NEED many such voices. One of the most distinguished was that of the late Evelyn Underhill of England. She continues to speak through her books, many of which, despite their high degree of specialization were best sellers. In those books she performs two major services: (1) she summarizes the richest resources available from the past, tying them in with present social and spiritual requirements and making them available anew to us; and (2) she presents, in peculiarly vivid style, the need for that contemplation of and commitment to God from which lasting socio-political action best springs. In other words, she gives the gist of what the Christian mystics have found to be true and does it in understandable terminology, and then she says in effect, "You too can have power . . . real power . . . as and only as you find it in God, in pure love of him and secondarily and as a consequence in a turning outward to others." She suggested always the primacy of God. Many moderns have worshipped God, but apparently thought—in a dangerous confusion of identity—that they were he. Real spiritual strength and insight is a derived thing—derived from God.

Evelyn Underhill knew that. Evelyn Underhill . . . 1875-1941.

She is listed in the 1940 Who's Who (London) as a fellow of King's College (faculty of theology), University of London. She was educated privately and at King's College for Women. During 1921-22, she was Upton lecturer on religion at Manchester College, Oxford. She was married to Hubert Stuart Moore, F.S.A., barrister-at-law. In 1939 she received an honorary D.D. degree from Aberdeen in recognition of her immense contribution in the field of religion. She was religious editor of The Spectator and reviewed books for it and other publications. She spent much time in retreats and in making addresses on the spiritual life; for instance, her superb little volume Concerning the Inner Life was made up of three lectures to clergymen of the Liverpool diocese.

Though Dr. Underhill's first full-length books were novels, they contained some of her most profound teachings—a clear forecast of the potential scope of her work. Among the novels were The Lost Word, The Grey World, etc.

Her major contribution, however, lies in these books: Mysticism, Practical Mysticism, The Life of the Spirit and the Life of Today, Worship (The Library of Constructive Theology series), and The Golden Sequence.

Many Church authorities regard Worship (1937) as one of the most scholarly and also most spirit-filled contributions made in this century to our religious life and thought. To them, it synthesizes her best teaching.

She makes a thorough survey of the nature of worship, ritual and symbol, sacrament and sacrifice, characters of Christian worship, corporate worship, liturgical elements, The Holy Eucharist, its nature and significance, and personal worship. Then in a broad way she studies other forms: Jewish, the beginnings of Christian worship, eastern and western Catholicism, the reformed Church practices and that in the free churches, and finally—intensively—she focuses upon the Anglican tradition in all its glorious realizations and outreach.

Throughout the whole, Miss Underhill points supremely to one fact valid for all time! that man's life cannot come to anything momentous while it is self-centered and earth-centered, but instead has lasting significance only as his small life is lifted to God and lived in the glow of that ultimate and radiant reality. As she has it, ". . . The successive life of man freely offered . . . and the abiding life of Christ received, not for our own sakes, but in order to achieve that transfiguration of the whole created universe, the shining forth of the splendour of the holy. . . ."

Here classically stated is the solution to mankind's present problem, available to those who hear. If we try to save our lives, even in a broad social sense, we shall lose them, because we shall be making them the end-all of existence. We must yield to higher influences, mightier forces—we must yield to God and live constantly in the light of the "splendour of the holy." We are behaving collectively like a swimmer who has gone down for the second time—grasping wildly and fatally at everything within reach, choking off our own salvation. If we open our lives to him, we'll find that there is a "wonder-working power" entirely adequate for all situations.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

_The Coming Great Church_ by Theodore O. Wedel. Macmillan. $2.00.

"The ecumenical movement . . . is scarcely a generation old. One has to go back in Christian history hundreds of years, a thousand years, or even longer to find real parallels to it. Here is a Christian family once more gathered. It is again a universal ecclesia, an assembly." As the title of the book suggests, the author looks to the challenge of Christian unity as presenting great promise for the ecumenical Church not simply as representing a forced expedient for the healing of schims. He sees catholicity as something which concerns the future as well as the distant past, the Reformation past and the confused present. He approaches his subject with a positive point of view, thinking of the contributions each can bring to the "Great Church" which will add up to more than the sum of its component parts. The supreme value of this work consists in the fact that it begins the whole discussion of Church unity with a consideration of the doctrine of the Church, and that it makes a real contribution to sound thought on this important subject.

Canon Wedel is one of the few men in the Episcopal Church whose words are accepted by all parties, Evangelical and Anglo-Catholic, Liberal and Conservative. This small volume has the greater contribution to make for that reason. He is aware of the great contributions to the united Church which every denomination has to offer yet he will sell short neither the catholic Church order nor the historic tradition of Anglicanism. He is not afraid to use harsh words in stating that the extreme Anglo-Catholics run the danger of forming a new sect, but in the same breath states, "An ecumenical Anglo-Catholicism would, I believe, be welcomed by the whole of non-Roman Christendom." If this is true Canon Wedel has struck a positive and hopeful note in the discussions of Church unity.

John Johnson Heads Committee On Negroes in Baseball

Ten Man Committee Agrees Keeping Negroes Out Nothing But Prejudice and Tradition

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The Rev. John H. Johnson, rector of St. Martin's, last week submitted a report to Mayor LaGuardia as the chairman of the mayor's committee on baseball. The task of the committee was to deal chiefly with discrimination against Negroes in the sport, but the report also brought out other interesting facts. There are forty leagues in normal times operating with about 8,000 players involved and doing an annual business of approximately one hundred million dollars.

There are also four Negro leagues, loosely organized, without any proximity to the quality of discipline and training achieved in white baseball. The report states that about 400 Negro players participate in baseball through these leagues. These four leagues do a two million dollar business annually, with $100,000 paid in rentals to the New York Yankees alone for use of their parks in New York, Kansas City, Newark and Norfolk.

On the matter of discrimination the report declares that the committee did not find "a single individual who would admit that Negroes do not possess potential physical capacities which would make them worthy of major league competition" and the exploits of Negroes in boxing, football, basketball and track are pointed out to back the statement.

The conclusions drawn from the study of the ten man committee, which included Larry MacPhail of the Yankees and Branch Rickey of the Dodgers, were as follows:

That there is no difference between the potential ability of Negro and white youths. Keeping Negroes out of organized baseball "is sheer prejudice and tradition."

Negro youths have demonstrated their abilities both to perform and to cooperate with other players in team-work in practically every other sport, leaving organized baseball as one of the last to square itself with the ideals of democracy.

The exclusion of Negroes is due to segregation—something more than silence is needed if this barrier is to be hurdled—positive action is required.

Southern white players should respect the customs and laws of those sections of the country in which the big league clubs are located.

"We believe that the only equitable solution to this problem is that individuals be treated alike and with relation to their abilities throughout organized baseball."

The report concludes with a tribute to the Brooklyn club for having signed Jackie Robinson, a Negro, to a contract, and states that it "paves the way for others to follow."

Turns to America

Woonsocket, R. I. (RNS):—Europe is no longer the bulwark of the Catholic Church, declared the Rev. Louis Bouchard, Jesuit of Quebec, in speaking at a communion breakfast here. He explained that in 1940 the Pope, realizing how weakened was the condition of the Roman Church in Europe and in Asia, saw the propagation of the faith as a task for the new world.

A Big Brother

Detroit:—One of the most effective factors in the battle against juvenile delinquency in Detroit is the Big Brother Movement, which in recent years has been commended many times by the courts and various official groups for its excellent service. The Rev. Edgar A. Lucas, of the staff of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission, is the Big Brother worker for the diocese of Michigan, and part of his responsibility is the Boys' Republic, famous for many years under the name of the Ford Republic, where a practical rehabilitation program is carried on successfully.

For three successive years, Mr. Lucas has prepared and presented for confirmation a class of teen-age boys from the Republic, each class larger than the one before. The latest confirmation service for this group was held November 19, in St. Paul's Cathedral. The class presented by Mr. Lucas consisted of 19 boys, and they were confirmed by the Rt. Rev. Donald B. Aldrich, bishop coadjutor of Michigan. Mr. Lucas had baptized nine of the boys.

Church Cooperation

London (wireless to RNS):—Interchurch cooperation to meet post-war problems was stressed here by Bishop Eivind Berggrav, primate of the Norwegian State Lutheran Church, who returned to Oslo after several weeks in England. In a farewell interview, the Norwegian Church leader said he had been impressed during his stay in England by the "comradeship" among the Churches in seeking to meet common problems.

"The barriers between Churches," he declared, "have been broken down, and we can now work together for the Christian reconstruction of Europe."

Commenting that the British people have lost their so-called insularity, Bishop Berggrav said he was "amazed" by their warmhearted desire to help rehabilitate his country.

"This is all the more astonishing when I look around and see your blitzed cities, and when I notice how overworked and tired you all are," he added. "Norway does not like to be in the beggar market of Europe, but at the moment she is forced to rely on outside help."

Give to World Council

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—A gift of $10,000 from the American section of the Lutheran world convention will be used by the World Council of Churches to pay one-fifth the cost of its new headquarters here. The money is a token gift in appreciation of the Council's work.

Lutherans Give

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—The Lutheran Synod of Missouri has presented $100,000 to the World Council of Churches for aid to deportees in central Europe. Earlier the synod gave a similar sum to the Lutherans in Germany to provide an orphanage in the northern part of that country.

Student Pastor

Hartford:—The Rev. John G. Magee of St. John's, Washington, has been appointed pastor of Episcopal students at Yale, it was announced on December 3 by Bishop Budlong and Bishop Walter Grey. Mr. Magee was a missionary in China for many years and has more recently been in charge of the Washington parish during the absence of Rector Leslie Glenn who has served during the war as a navy chaplain. Before going to China he was general secretary of the Yale University Christian Association.

Million Dollar Gift

New York (RNS):—The World Council of Churches has received a gift of a million dollars from John D. Rockefeller Jr. About half of the money will be used for the Council's relief and reconstruction program in Europe and Asia while the rest will go to establish and maintain a laymen's training center in Europe.

Study Strikes

Detroit (RNS):—The local council of churches has appointed three committees to study the strike situation here and to formulate an expression of Christian opinion. Under the leadership of the Rev. Owen M. Geer, minister of Mt. Olivet Methodist church, Dearborn, one committee will study the facts and issues in the strike and the industrial situation generally; another headed by the Rev. Thoburn T. Brumbaugh, executive secretary of the council, will formulate a statement of the Christian position on labor and industry; and the third, with the Rev. Paul G. Musselman, rector of St. Alban's Episcopal church, Highland Park, will deal with certain questions the church has to ask of both labor and management.

Interracial Clinic

Toledo (RNS):—Racial discrimination in employment, housing and recreation was protested here by the clinic for interracial unity, sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches. The city council and the state assembly were urged to pass legislation against discrimination in employment.

Archbishop Appeals

London: — The Archbishop of York appealed to America for increased aid to starving war-sufferers in Europe at a mass meeting held in the Albert Hall here. He also called upon British authorities to do all in their power to fight starvation and disease in Europe. He warned that unless speedy and urgent action is taken Europe may witness "a catastrophe setting back for centuries the recovery of western civilization."

Albany, N. Y.:—The Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving, rector at Princeton, N. J. was the preacher at a union service held here at St. Paul's on December 9th. The service was sponsored by the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, with the invitation extended by the Rev. Bradford Burnham, president; the Rev. George A. Michigan Auxiliary

Detroit:—The bishop of Derby, England, was the headliner at the meeting of the Auxiliary of the diocese of Michigan on November 26 at which Bishop Creighton was guest of honor. There were over 200 present, representing most of the parishes of the diocese.

A Long Service

Cheyboygan, Mich.:—We used to hear of services in the days of our pilgrim fathers that lasted all day but in these days for a congregation to stay in church for three or four hours is a rarity. It happened here at St. James' on November 25 when Bishop Creighton made his visitation. There was a confirmation; then the choir and congregation had a procession into the parish house for the dedication of a children's altar. This was followed by a simple breakfast after which they went back to church for the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. George W. DeGraff who is in charge.

Harrisburg, Pa.: — The Pennsylvania Council of Churches took steps at the annual meeting held here to set up council in every county in the state. At present there are 21.

Report on Japan

New York:—The Rev. Luman J. Shafer, a member of the delegation of four Protestant leaders recently returned from Japan, declared on December 4 that Christians in that country were regarded as spies and traitors during the war. Spy activities, in propaganda movies, were invariably placed in Christian circles and the military government sought to destroy Christian churches and schools. Many Christians were imprisoned and some died there. Some leaders yielded to the pressure "but we found no case of actual defection from the Church among Christian leaders. There were conspicuous examples of defiance."

"We found the Christian Church depleted but intact," declared Shafer, "with its leadership tired and aged by the experiences through which they had come. However they were vigorous, resilient and eager for the new day with its opportunity to create a new Japan."

What Christians themselves most desire, he said, is that some plans be worked out for meeting the critical shortage of food and clothing.

Bi-Racial Community

Americus, Ga. (RNS):—An experiment aimed at demonstrating the workability of the New Testament plan of a Christian community of goods is entering its fourth year near here. Known as Koionia Farms — the name deriving from the Greek word for "commune" or "fellowship"—the project was originated by the Rev. Clarence L. Jordon, 33. A prime purpose of the experiment is to show that Negro and white Christians can live together on the principle of love.

The project began in November, 1942, when Jordon purchased a 440-

Reverend and Dear Sir:

We don't know whether you have just finished your seminary training or if you've been running a parish successfully for a number of years.

We are quite certain, however, that as a priest you are always on the alert for information on the best way to handle the many responsibilities that fill your priesthood.

That there is a best way to handle parish duties Bishop Conkling has discovered (from twenty years' experience). In "Priesthood in Action" ($2.50) he passes on his acquired information to you. The eighteen chapters which make up the book cover everything you need to know — about administering the sacraments, public worship, pastoral care, the Church School and programs for youth, money-raising, parish guilds, clerical etiquette, preaching—and all the other problems which every priest faces.

Bishop Conkling has written this book for the priest in the small parish in Hartsdale, New York and for the priest in a large parish in San Francisco. In other words, he has written this book for you.

"Partnership is not on the basis of monetary investment but on life investment—we share and share alike and all expenditures are made on the basis of need," Jordon explains.

No More Cruelty

London (wireless to RNS): — Clergymen of the Church of England who are divorced for desertion or cruelty must resign their posts under an amendment to the clergy discipline act of 1892 which has been given general approval by the Church assembly here. The measure, however, does not yet become law, pending final acceptance at the spring session. At present, the act makes it imperative for clergymen who are divorced on a charge of adultery to vacate their post without further ecclesiastical court trial, but its does not provide for the cases of clergymen divorced for desertion or cruelty.

Versailles, Ky.: — The Sisters of the Convent of St. Anne have formed a new community, to be called the Order of St. Helena, having been released from their obligations to the Order of St. Anne. The new order is under the direction of their former warden, the Rev. Alan G. Whittemore, Superior, O.H.C. Bishop James M. Maxon of Tennessee, continues as Episcopal visitor. The Sisters are continuing their work at Margaret Hall School.

A Simple Question

London (wireless to RNS): — Greater recognition for women in the work of the Church of England was urged at a meeting of the Church assembly's house of Laity here. T. W. Balmer of Chichester, father of 12 children, said that the midwife who attended his wife was a good churchwoman and when one of the children fell seriously ill, the midwife baptised it. If she could baptize a child at the mother's bedside, why, he asked, couldn't she baptize it in church. The house passed a resolution approving the appointment of a sub-committee to draw up a statement on the history of the order of deaconesses.

"Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled."
—LUKE 14:23

MRS. BRADFORD YOUNG
Churchwoman of Manchester, N. H.

Are we to infer from the heading and final paragraph of your news item on Bishop Wurm's plea for mercy for the women and children of Germany (WITNESS, Nov. 15) that THE WITNESS rejects Jesus' revision of "an eye for an eye" and, indeed, would like to see it expanded to include "a woman's agony for a woman's agony, the death of a child for the death of a child"?

JOHN M. KRUMM
Rector at San Mateo, California

Perhaps a letter like this published in your paper will serve to change a most unwise directive which has recently been made by the war shipping administration, which will abolish the chaplaincy of the merchant marine corps by January 1st, 1946. Here in San Mateo where we have a cadet basic school of the merchant marine corps, we have had opportunity to see the fine work that the chaplains have done and the enthusiastic response the cadets have made. Until late September the chaplain for the Protestants was the Rev. Clinton R. Jones, a priest of the diocese of Connecticut. I know that several men were baptized and confirmed under Chaplain Jones' supervision. After he left and before the arrival of his successor I took one of the Sunday services and found an amazingly large and enthusiastic congregation. The reason given for the abolition of the chaplaincy is "economy." The question remains as to why the merchant marine cadets should be denied religious ministrations made available still to army and navy trainees.

A protest ought to come from every Churchman interested in the welfare of young people. Perhaps if the volume of protest is large enough a change will be made and this ill-advised directive rescinded. Direct your protests to Commodore Telfair Knight, War Shipping Administration, Washington, D. C.

E. T. LAWRENCE
Layman of Tillicum, Washington

When a bishop of the Church takes up two whole pages of our valued magazine, as did Bishop Lawrence (WITNESS, Nov. 15th) he should at least tell us something calculated to give us both a spiritual and moral uplift, but instead he goes into a rigamarole about pacifism which, if it means anything, means that it is a sin for a man to fight in defense of his country, or rather prepare himself to fight. I personally hate war as much as any man living but at the same time I am somewhat of a realist and when I see a nation arming itself to wage an aggressive war, I do not close my eyes and imagine it is not so, it doesn't make sense, and if the bishop was not blinded by his obsession, he would realize as all straight-thinkers do, that unpreparedness invariably invites attack.

Take this last war as an example. Hitler told all of his neighbors that they had nothing to fear from him, well, we know what happened. Then take our own case. If the United States had been in a position to call a large army of trained fighters into active service at short notice with a navy strong enough to command the seas, the Japanese most certainly would never have attacked us; our criminal negligence at Pearl Harbor notwithstanding. Of course we all know, with shame, how the pacifist members of Congress opposed every effort made by our late President to meet the attack which he and all other sensible people knew would come and we also know how dearly we have paid, both in blood and treasure for our pacifism.

Of course there is another side to this question; namely, the religious side. It is customary to speak of the peoples of our continent and the continent of Europe as Christians, which should mean if it means anything, that they and we believe in and follow the teachings of Christ. Now if this were true, or if but 50% of the people were motivated by the Christian spirit, there would be no wars, and of course, no preparation for war, but alas, we know only too well that the majority of the population in all these countries are anything but Christian save only in name. That being the case, we can expect no help from a God we do not serve, consequently, we have to fight our own battles and the victory will invariably go to those who can fight the hardest and last the longest.

THOMAS F. OPIE
Clergyman at Great Barrington, Mass.

Massey Shepherd (WITNESS, issue Nov. 22nd) tells us in so many words that "Roman Catholics attend their Church's worship more faithfully than do Protestants." That would seem to be the common view, for one hears it on all sides. I challenge the truth of this presumption. The way to ascertain whether or not this is the case is not to look in on a single Protestant church and then to look in on a Catholic church! That's a fallacy. Rather, look in on half a dozen or a dozen Protestant churches at a given time—and then look in on the one single (united) Roman Church in the same community. Compare the totality of church attendance in all of the local Protestant churches in a given locale with the total attendance at a specific Catholic church (which church ministers to all of the Catholics—while all of the Protestants are by no means found in a given Methodist, Episcopal, Baptist, Lutheran, Congregational, Presbyterian church). Just why thinking folk cling to this presumption, without in the least measuring the implications, is more than I am able to understand. Let's stop this canard—for it simply is not true that more Catholics, in proportion to total Catholic-noncatholic membership, attend their church activities.

Church Groups Give Opposition To Anti-Labor Bills

The President of the Chamber of Commerce Testifies Against Bills Before Congress

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy has joined with other unofficial Church groups affiliated with the United Christian Council for Democracy in calling upon leaders to work for the defeat of anti-labor bills now before Congress. The bills singled out for action are the Hobbs bill, the May-Arends amendments to the Smith bill, the Ball-Burton-Hatch bill and the proposals of President Truman.

Declaring that the National Association of Manufacturers is the principal agent seeking the passage of the bills, the statement declared that the Hobbs bill, sponsored by Congressman Sam Hobbs of Alabama who admits that it is directed at labor, would make it possible for bad courts to decide that peaceful picketing was intimidation and might even decide that the collection of dues was extortion and thus outlaw union shops.

The churchmen declare that the Smith-Connally act provisions for strike vote should be repealed "but what Smith proposes, together with the May-Arends amendments go far beyond this. Labor is not permitted to collect and use funds for political elections or in any way to advance political interests. It is an open-wide attack against all political action. Another provision makes it criminal for labor to strike 'in violation of contracts' and makes labor liable to damages. No law makes it criminal for an employer not to fulfill the terms of a contract. All told it is a ruthless attempt to cripple collective bargaining and the rights of workers to take political action as citizens."

The Ball-Burton-Hatch bill, sponsored by Senator Joseph Ball of Minnesota, according to the statement by the church groups, is so bad that it cannot be made right by amendments. "It has the over-all design of weakening labor unions and destroying workers' rights; it must be thrown out bodily." (The CLID, in a statement to its members, recommends that those who wish a detailed analysis of this bill should send to the organization for a pamphlet entitled B-B-H, An Evil Bill; there is also available an analysis of the bill prepared by Mr. John Ramsay, Presbyterian layman. Either of these are available without charge.)

In regard to the proposals on labor by President Truman, the churchmen state that his proposals should be held up, not alone because of objectionable features and because many of them are unworkable, but because they constitute an open invitation for the passage of other anti-union bills. "As a matter of fact," the document declares, "the President's proposal embodies several provisions of the B-B-H bill which in turn is a sweeping version of the railroad labor act which since its passage has depressed the conditions of railroad workers. You begin with the fact-finding body, as the President asks; in practice you come out with compulsory arbitration with the advantages stacked on the employer's side."

It is significant that Mr. Eric Johnston, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, who has given leadership to the liberal wing of business since he took office, in testimony before a Congressional committee on December 11, was fully as insistent as the churchmen that none of these bills should be passed. He declared himself to be wholeheartedly for collective bargaining and stated that these bills were designed to make that difficult if not impossible.

The statement by the churchmen ends by urging Church people to "tell your representatives that you expect them to speak out and vote against the above measures. Your representative must know that you know the score exactly and that you will hold him accountable for his vote in each instance."

NEW SPANISH LAW DISAPPOINTING

Geneva:—Protestants in Spain are disappointed with results of the new law which appears to grant greater religious freedom. Some Protestant churches are said to have received government approval to open but the official attitude towards others is described as unclear. General policy is that only private exercise of worship is authorized for non-Catholics.

Episcopalian Eric Johnston, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, opposed anti-labor bills now before Congress in testifying last week

PROSTITUTION IS SUPPRESSED

Washington:—James V. Forrestal, secretary of the navy, has verified the accuracy of the report of Chaplain Lawrence L. LaCour regarding prostitution and sex laxity among naval personnel in the Yokosuku area of Japan. (WITNESS, Nov. 29.) "What Chaplain LaCour observed," Mr. Forrestal states, "was the result, in large part, of group pressures, sudden release of inhibitions long pent up by many months of hazardous sea duty, cessation of hostilities and the general let-down in moral stamina of all personnel, all occurring during the confusion incidental to the occupation of Japan by American forces." Strict compliance with the long-established and documented navy policy for the suppression of prostitution has been ordered.

UNITED CHURCH IS URGED

Khartum, Egypt (wireless to RNS):—Bishop A. M. Gelsthorpe was enthroned as Anglican bishop of the newly created Sudan diocese at the cathedral here. He announced that an aim of the Anglican Church in the Sudan will be development of a United Church and said this objective will involve closer cooperation with Eastern Orthodox and Free Churches. He added that all Anglican churches in the diocese will be available for worship by members of other denominations.

COUNCIL OF CHURCHES IN POLAND

WOMEN'S RIGHTS IN AFRICA

Capt Town, South Africa (wireless to RNS): Meeting for the first time since 1939 the provincial synod of the Anglican Church of South Africa has voted to allow women to become eligible for membership. The 124-16 vote reversed a stand made on a similar resolution at the last meeting.

BISHOP SHERRILL RETURNS

New York: — Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts, together with Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam and the Rev. Franklin C. Fry, president of the United Lutheran Church, returned from Europe on December 10th after a two weeks' visit to Europe. They expressed gratification that a half million tons of food will be shipped from the U. S. to Germany and made available in the American zone. These supplies will assure German population there and the anticipated three million forced evacuees who will enter the zone, a standard of 1,550 calories a day. They added that in Germany as a whole, "the expulsion of millions from their homes in territory once German is causing unspeakable hardship." The delegation visited Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Munich, Nuremberg, Hof and Berlin and conferred with leading German churchmen.

SUGGESTS SHRINE FOR WAR DEAD

Islip, N. Y.:—A war shrine of all faiths in Washington has been proposed by the Rev. Newell D. Lindner, rector of St. Mark's here, who until recently was a navy chaplain. In a letter to Senators and Congressmen he suggests that it be of such design as to be acceptable to Jews, Protestants and Catholics and that it be called "The National Shrine of Brotherhood"; that it be a place where all people might come to pray and that it be the repository of a book of remembrance containing the names of all Americans killed in world war two.

Mr. Lindner was chaplain of the battleship South Dakota for sixteen months and for some time prior to that was the chaplain of WAVES who were receiving preliminary training in New York.

BISHOP PITHAN HONORED

Porto Alegre, Brazil: — Bishop Pithan, suffragan of Southern Brazil, has been elected to a chair in the academy of letters of the state of Rio Grande Do Sul. He is the fourth member of the Episcopal Church to receive the honor. The incumbent president, Dr. J. Mozart de Mello, and the Rev. George U. Krischke are also members of the Episcopal Church. The academy is composed of a closely limited group of scholars and writers of the country.

THANK COUNCIL FOR ACTION

Boston:—The dozen clergymen who issued the statement urging relief for the sufferers of Europe from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund (WITNESS, Dec. 6) issued a statement on December 10 expressing their "hearty appreciation of the prompt action on the part of the National Council in voting ten per cent of the receipts of the fund for world relief through the churches to be applied to Europe and the East. Let us all, clergy and laity alike, get behind this fund so that we shall raise an amount far larger than we dare to hope and thereby help both the war damaged churches in Europe and the East and at the same time, to borrow Bishop Sherrill's term, supply a real 'blood transfusion' for the missionary work of our Church everywhere."

DIOCESAN TREASURER DIES

Marquette Mich.:—Stuart B. Miller, treasurer of the diocese of Northern Michigan died suddenly at his desk on December 3. For a number of years he has served as treasurer both of the diocese and the trust association. "Coming into office at a most difficult period in diocesan history, by his quiet and modest efficiency and devotion he recreated confidence throughout this section of the Church," said Bishop Herman Page.

MISSION FOR NEGROES IS STARTED

Greenburg, N. Y.:—A new diocesan mission has been launched here, with the congregation at present worshipping in a store that is called St. Francis Chapel. Arnold M. Ross, vicar of St. Augustine's, Yonkers.

Japanese Church Leaders Are Severely Criticized

Young Presbyterians Ask for Resignation Of Staff and a New Organization Formed

By Richard T. Baker

Tokyo (wireless to RNS):—Spirited debate in the war-time leadership of the United Church of Christ in Japan highlighted the opening session of the first post-war meeting of the executive committee of the Church here.

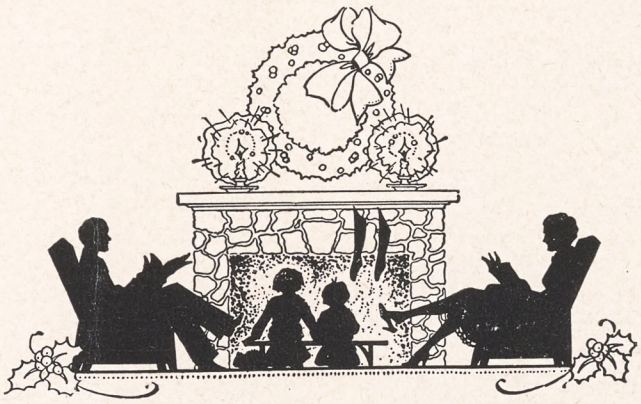
The Rev. Mitsuru Tomita, director of the United Church, and his entire staff, were censured by some members of the executive body. However, the committee, with many members abstaining, voted a mild expression of confidence in Tomita and his administration. The committee instructed the war-time leader and his staff to remain at their posts until a general convention can be held in February.

Spearheading the Tomita opposition was the Rev. Masakazu Taniguchi, former prosecuting attorney, now a pastor. He told the delegates to the two-day conclave that he had steadfastly maintained throughout the war that Christianity was a religion of peace and Tomita rebuked him for that stand. He accused Tomita of compromising his Christian principles and asked for his resignation.

In his own defense, Tomita replied that he was not responsible for the war, arguing that there was no one to do his or the staff's work until the Church as a whole ordered a change in personnel.

"I may resign if it's the will of the General Convention," he said.

The United Church of Christ was formed in 1940 under government pressure and includes all major Protestant denominations except the Seventh-day Adventist Church. (Most dioceses of the Episcopal Church remained independent.—Ed.)



There is a strong feeling among its members that the war-time organization must go, to be replaced by an entirely new structure. Only a few days ago the so-called "Young Presbyterians" petitioned the Church, asking that the staff resign and the organization disband.

No mention was made of this petition at the first day's meeting. The dissenters argue that the Church is an undemocratic bureaucracy, organized from the top down and concerned more with governmental relations than with the spiritual leadership of the people.

Spurring this movement is the fact that the government no longer has the power to restrain offshoots, and occupation policy has opened the way to complete religious freedom.

In his opening address, Tomita outlined the main points to be discussed at the meeting as: (1) substitution of the prejudiced religious legal corporations law to take the place of the annulled religious bodies law; (2) amendment of the constitution; (3) rehabilitation of damaged and destroyed churches; (4) catechism and creed; (5) use of missionaries in the post-war Church; and (6) religious education.

A resolution urging the return of foreign missionaries as soon as possible was adopted and the committee also advocated immediate temporary rehabilitation of 500 damaged or destroyed churches. Church policy is not to erect expensive buildings until the vast housing problem has been stabilized.

TRAINING CENTER FOR CHURCH ARMY

New York:—The Church Army is to open a training center in Cincinnati in the building formerly occupied by the Graduate School of Applied Religion which is now connected with the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, under the direction of the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher. The announcement was made here by Mr. Samuel Thorne, the president of the Church Army. Capt. Earl Estabrook, national director, is now in Cincinnati, getting things ready for the reception of the first group to go in training at the new center. The headquarters of the Army remains in New York.

BISHOP HEADS FAIR WAGE GROUP

Washington (RNS):—Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, Roman Catholic auxilary bishop of Chicago, has accepted appointment as chairman of the national committee for a fair minimum wage, consisting of representatives of educational, farm, social service, industrial, labor and religious groups. The organization is working for the passage of the Pepper-Hook bill which provides a minimum wage of 65 cents an hour. The vice-chairman is Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina.

RENAISSANCE OR CHAOS

Los Angeles (RNS):—"The demonic power of the atom bomb has assured even the unimaginative that we have reached a critical point in human history," Bishop Karl Block told an interdenominational conference meeting here last week. Stating that we are not spiritually prepared for the emergency that confronts us, the Bishop said that "the virus of the world has infested the blood of the Church. However it is not too late to prepare; we still have time to change. Our decision must be made soon. It is to be Christ or chaos, and the time for decision is short."

CHARLES P. TAFT THE SPEAKER

Bloomfield Hills, Mich.:—Charles P. Taft, prominent layman of Cincinnati who for some time was director of wartime economic affairs of the state department, was the headliner at a dinner held here attended by about 700 laymen. He spoke on the present world situation, both national and international, and declared that "You will find your Christian principles helpful in answering the questions of everyday life and your everyday business matters." Bishop Creighton, Mr. Gordon O. Rice, president of the Laymen's Club of the diocese, and Mr. Richard F. Weirum, new superintendent of the Detroit city mission also spoke briefly.

LONG YEARS OF SERVICE

New York:—Frank A. Zubrod, cashier at the Church Missions House, has retired after 55 years at 281. Another to retire is Louis Laubenheimer, accountant, after 45 years of service.

BROOKLYN VESTRY URGES UNITY

Brooklyn: — The vestry of Holy Trinity here passed a resolution, which came spontaneously from the laity of the parish, urging unity of the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches. "We regard the division of the Church of Christ into various sects or denominations as injurious to Christian fellowship," the statement declares "and obstructive to the development of Christian unity. This obstruction would be removed by composing doctrinal differences and by merging religious groups now separated by those differences. Achieving the proposed union of Episcopalians and Presbyterians would be an impressive advance towards that objective. We are convinced this union is desirable and should be consummated with appropriate promptness. Therefore we desire to have our vote favoring this union recorded with the committee on approaches to unity."

PROTECTION URGED FOR MIGRANTS

New York:—Adequate legal protection under the fair labor standards act and the social security act for agricultural migrants was urged last week by Roman Catholic, Protestant and Jewish leaders. "Migrant workers are the most depressed labor group in the United States," the statement declared. "There is a lack of decent housing for most of the workers employed in commercial agriculture. In many areas there is still an absence of health and educational facilities. Farm groups tell us about high hourly and daily rates of pay here and there but more important than the high rates of pay is continuity of employment." The statement is signed by twelve Church leaders, four from each group, with Episcopalian Clifford L. Samuelson, representing the National Council and WITNESS editor Beverley Boyd, representing the Federal Council of Churches among them.

WAR AREAS WORK DECREASES

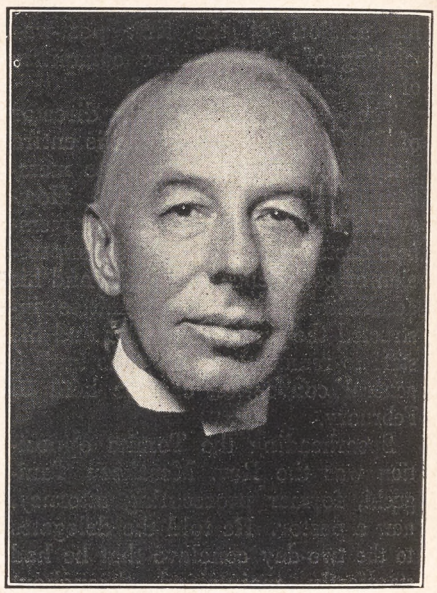
New York:—The work of the Church in war areas will decrease during 1946, with a reduced 40% in expenditures, Bishop Dandridge of Tennessee reported to the National Council on Dec. 6. He, as chairman of the committee, thinks it possible that the need for the committee will not exist after this coming year. Already some projects have been discontinued and most of them have been cut forty to sixty per cent.

APPROPRIATION FOR MISSIONARIES

New York:—The National Council on Dec. 6 appropriated $10,000 for the relief of clergy and other workers of the Church in Japan.

CHURCHES URGE AID TO ENEMY

New York (RNS):—Five interdenominational agencies here have united in an appeal to the government for permission to send relief supplies and funds to former enemy countries, notably Germany and Japan. Uniting in the plea were the Federal Council of Churches, the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, the Church Committee for Relief in Asia, the Commission for World Council Service, and the Church Committee on Overseas Relief and Reconstruction.



"One of the greatest tragedies of the civilized world may take place unless churches of America act now," the joint statement declared, in taking issue with the state department policy which prohibits entry of all private agencies for relief to Germany.

It was pointed out that UNRRA is limited to caring for displaced persons in former enemy countries, and that a German or a Japanese is never classified as a displaced person.

Citing reports of "alarming and deplorable" conditions in Germany and Japan, leaders of the five Protestant agencies urged the nation's churches to seek changes in current government rulings in order that immediate relief may be provided.

WRITE YOUR OWN HEADING

Buffalo:—Bishop Cameron J. Davis of Western New York, who reached the age of seventy-two on December 13, promptly announced his resignation, effective at the General Convention next year, thus acting in conformity with the canons which require that bishops tender their resignations at that age.

PENSION FUND BUYS BONDS

New York:—The Church Pension Fund bought $425,000 victory loan bonds, bringing the total to $10,307,000 of purchases which the C.P.F. and its affiliates have made in the various bond drives.

HARTFORD AND PHOENIX DEANS DIE

New Haven:—Dean Arthur F. McKenny of Christ Church Cathedral, Hartford, died in a hospital here on December 13. He was stricken with a heart attack on the 8th while playing golf. He was fifty-one.

Dean Edwin S. Lane of Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, died on December 5, also of a heart attack. He was fifty-nine.

Both men were well known throughout the Church and had represented their dioceses at General Conventions.

Is It Christmas?

IT'S CHRISTMAS — and yet it isn't. The calendar says so, children say so, the store windows say so, even the Church says so. But the sensitive heart has misgivings and the mind its reasons for doubting whether Christmas can ever come to a people so faithless to the things which belong to their true peace.

Christmas is God's gift of peace to men of good will, men who will deny themselves that the starving may be fed; men who will stand by their partners in war that together as trusted friends they may win that peace which God has promised; men who will understand that atomic power can be held in check only by the greater power of the spirit of love.

Recently a wise woman went to Europe as an official observer of the destitution which has followed in the wake of war. Her observations of the frightening and pitiful conditions which prevail everywhere on the Continent are keen and moving. Out of their poverty and prostration they are doing what they can. But her account of what she sees as she returns to America is damning. "To one returning from Europe," she says, "it is not the Europeans, cold, hungry and miserable as they are in the wake of the six years' war, who are most to be pitied, but ourselves. We are to be pitied because we, with our wealth, technical genius and potential compassion, are displaying less courage, less stamina, less capacity to take great risks for great ends than some of the peoples of a war-ravaged continent. . . . Surely we are not as weary as the British and the Russians, the French and the Norwegians, yet the tone of our discussions of world affairs is frivolous and adolescent."

It is not comforting to recall that Jesus was born in oppressed Palestine of a despised race rather than in Rome, the center of power and also the frivolity of an older civilization than ours, but one just as perishable. We have grave reason to fear that Christ may not come to dwell with us this Christmas. There seems to be so little room for him in hearts in love with bread more than brotherhood, with security more than service, and with pride and power more than peace.

Yet Christ will be born somewhere. He comes again and again wherever humble, simple, loving hearts will bid him welcome, and share with him the sorrows of God's children everywhere.

It's Christmas somewhere. It could be Christmas here.

"QUOTES"

WHILE we have special and real grounds for rejoicing and thanksgiving on this Christmas, yet let us remember that Christmas signifies a beginning and not an ending. The birth of our Lord Jesus Christ was indeed God's answer to age-long hopes and prayers for deliverance. This did not however mean that God's purpose for mankind was finally achieved through the coming of the Saviour but rather it meant the opening of an opportunity. To as many as received him and believed on him the Saviour gave power to become the sons of God. That first Christmas was not the end of history. It was a turning point in history, the beginning of a new era. Our Christian faith is that he who hath begun a good work in us, will perform it unto the end.

—H. St. George Tucker
The Presiding Bishop

Dedication at Christmas

AT CHRISTMAS we must dedicate ourselves to the two-fold theme of the angels. First, to peace on earth. We must do everything in our power to see to it that those who have fallen in action have not given their last measure of devotion in vain. Surely the nations and peoples of the earth can work out some kind of an arrangement whereby it will not be necessary for men to settle differances by slaughtering their fellow human beings. If this were a dictatorship there would be no use talking; but we live in a democracy. Every individual has some influence, be it small or great. The leaders of our democracy cannot move in the family of nations any farther or faster than we, the people, will approve. Therefore we must use all our influence to see that the fiasco which occurred after the last war does not happen again, but rather by the grace of God a means will be worked out by which the nations of the world can live in peace.

Second, our dedication must be: to create good will among men. The most sinister and devastating evil of war is not in the destruction of property or even of human life. Most of the property destroyed can be recreated; and the souls of those who have fallen in action are in the hands of God. The most sinister evil of war is that it opens the floodgates to the swiftly flowing poison of cruelty and sadism, distrust and prejudice, hatred and vengeance, which undermine man's faith in his fellow man. This poison of distrust is everywhere today; we cannot help but be conditioned by it to a greater or lesser degree. Who can tell how long it will take to recreate any confidence between, let us say, Germany and the peoples of Europe, or Japanese and the Chinese. Yet without trust and confidence no permanent peace can ever be established.

Strange as it may seem this poison frequently affects civilian minds more insidiously than those who have been in the armed forces. The strain and tension created by separation, anxiety, and other forms of suffering are so great that civilians are more susceptible to these poisons of hate than would be normally true. The poison flows into the heart of civilian life. Its evil effect is witnessed by the mother who will never again feel kindly toward a person with a German accent because her son was killed in Germany or the small child who has been running around the house these past few years making a rat-a-tat-tat of a machine gun believing that he is shooting the Japanese and now is naturally unable to think of them in any other terms than a race of evil demons.

Once this poison is released it is extremely difficult to eradicate. It comes upon us unawares and we become increasingly susceptible to it. A cultivated Jewish woman living in an eastern seaboard city told a friend that she had never experienced any feeling of being different from others until the past year during which her son had been picked on in school, insulted with derogatory epithets, and frequently had his belongings taken from him forcibly by other children. Unfortunately this is not an isolated instance. Nor is this the kind of episode about which we can say; "This must be done by children of people who have no connection with the Church." In this case investigation revealed that some of the persecuting boys belonged to families who claimed to be members of the Episcopal Church.

Let our dedication this Christmas 1945 be in the form of an atonement for the fact that, while we delight to play the part of the shepherd and the wisemen and kneel in adoration before the Babe of Bethlehem at Christmas, we all too readily sally forth into the world and, putting on the mantle of King Herod, kill the spirit of the Christ to whom we consecrate ourselves on Christmas. Our consecration at Christmas will not be a vital one if we think simply in terms of an event 1945 years ago, but only if we think of the rebirth of his spirit and only if we meditate on what the rebirth of his spirit must mean in ourselves now.

Though Christ a thousand times in Bethlehem be born
And not within thyself, thy soul will be forlorn.
The Cross on Golgotha thou lookest to in vain,
Unless within thyself it be set up again.

Great Need Recognized

WE ARE happy to see that the National Council is responsive to the sentiment of the Church at large. Many individuals and groups have had misgivings about the allocation of the Reconstruction and Advance Fund. Two weeks ago we carried a news article on the statement of a group of Massachusetts clergy protesting the failure to include the needs of stricken European Christians. This statement gave voice to a widespread opinion within the Church, which was given consideration at the last meeting of the Council. The result was in our news columns last week: that ten per cent of the Fund will be given to the World Council of Churches for relief work in Europe and Asia. This is democratic Christianity at work. The Protestant Episcopal Church appears to be not deaf to the cry of the poor; nor is her Church government remote from the will of her people.

The Peace of Bread

By
GORDON C. GRAHAM

CHRISTMAS is here and so is the war. The large scale shooting has admittedly ceased but there is still much fighting on many and diverse fronts, from the industrial to the international. These frictions are war's dregs, for that reason no less important, but rather deeply indicative of the real nature of this struggle which refuses to stop. Many people have hoped that it would all be over by now. The soldiers want to go home. People want to get rich quick. But through it all there is a genuine longing for peace. Christians would like to proclaim the birthday of the Prince of Peace with a little more sense of reality. Why can't we have peace?

There are various answers and proposed solutions to this problem. There is the continued use of force, or the threat of force, which can be seen in the colonial uprisings against old empires, or in the refusal to negotiate labor difficulties, or in atomic diplomacy and power politics. Peace here means either subjugation or an expeditious truce. Then there is the spiritual appeal to the heart that would work through individuals to change the whole situation. This is the one dear to religious people, which will be heard much at this season. It is wonderful as far as it goes but that is not very far being almost impossible in the present world climate for it to pass from one person to another. Another remedy, dear to democratic affections, is the conference which would talk it over in an atmosphere of understanding to work things out for the benefit of all concerned. It is all so very reasonable if it were not so hypocritical because under each table, be it surrounded by diplomats or fact-finding delegates, there lurks the unsolved and usually unfaced conflict of economics . . . a piece of bread.

There are four symbols of peace—the sword, the heart, the table and the piece of bread. The first is the one we all want to get rid of and the second and third do not seem to get at the roots of the problem. Why not try the fourth? Perhaps the others fail because we do not begin at the beginning. On the first Christmas the Prince of Peace was born in Bethlehem, a place which in Hebrew means "house of bread." There is great significance in this association of ideas. The Son of God who came to earth to save mankind always related himself to this common commodity. He began his life in "the house of bread" and he ended it by taking bread and declaring it "to be his body." He is, in fact, "the bread of life." Yet people have never taken him seriously in the radicalism of his Incarnation. In his name they have become involved with the sword. They have easily found him in the heart and often have sat around the table, but they have refused to "know him in the breaking of the bread" and to understand its deeper meaning.

Peace, on this association, must begin with the sharing by all mankind of "the bread of the world." Unless and until this basic question is seen and settled there can be no real solution around the table or in the heart. Freedom from Want is what it has been called in our time but it is not enough to specify it; it must come first. There can be no peace as long as all men do not have free and permanent access to the produce of the earth in the economic order. It is not only almost useless to try the other remedies. It renders them virtually ineffectual. Personal religion is frustrated at every turn and social relations are becoming increasingly fraught with hostility and distrust. The world needs economic democracy before it can achieve the same thing on the political and social levels. This order is not derived from red propaganda but from the Prince of Peace who on Christmas was born in the House of Bread.

Christmas is here with its message of peace. It is the great privilege of Christians to find the peace, not just in family celebrations or personal joy but in the bread of the altar. The Prince of Peace comes to the House of Bread in the Holy Communion. Christmas Communion should mean therefore that we begin the establishment of the "Peace of God" by the sacramental symbol of bread, finding our Lord under the form of a material sign. There is a real association of these ideas and an important meaning in their order. If we approach the Christmas altar with this intention we are committed to the same association and order in dealing with the problems of the world for the coming of peace. God has declared himself and does his part. When we receive let us resolve to begin to do ours.

For Church School Teachers

By
WILLIAM GRIME
Rector of St. Paul's, Great Neck, N. Y.

WHEN questions arise concerning the improving of relationships with youth of other races, are you puzzled, forthright, or do you try to change the subject? Do you feel uncertain about the bearing of Christianity on such social questions?

Try this: First, read Matthew 6:6-13. Now, realizing you are in the presence of God, read the prayer again and stop after the first two words. Then reflect on the word "Our." If you cannot get started, I suggest you read the following thoughts as a stimulant: This very first word Our is the most difficult of all, for to lay aside selfishness is the hardest thing in the world. However, this is what we have to try to do when we approach this prayer in the spirit of Jesus. The word includes all those who are separated from us by impassible barriers, those who are so far above us we cannot reach them, those who are so far beneath us that we reckon the slightest act of human recognition as a gracious condescension, all those who belong to the opposite faction in politics, those who belong to hostile nations, those whose religion or whose irreligion wars with our deepest conviction; all those who are outcasts, too, and criminals, the enemies of society, and those—it is hardest to remember—with whom we have had disagreements, and those whom we feel we cannot like. He is our Father only in connection with these others also. . . He is their Father as much as ours, and we cannot say "Our Father, who art in Heaven" unless we have first learned to say "Our brothers who are on the earth."

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Becoming a Cross-Bearer

WHEN the Russian people received the Christian faith in the ninth century their missionaries had some difficulty translating the technical terms of their theological and liturgical books from Greek into the old Slavonic tongue spoken by the people. But they managed to do so at times with uncommon originality and insight. One example is their translation of "to be baptized" by a word meaning "to be crucified." To become a Christian was to become a cross-bearer. There is point in this lesson from the ancient East for the modern West,—and modern East, too. Our world has been goaded by the devil and his vain pomp to the very brink of that abyss wherein we see nothing but dust and ashes. The banner of the Cross of Christ, by which we Christians were signed and sealed when we were enlisted in the ranks of His faithful soldiers and servants, has seldom, if ever, been in such desperate plight.

It is hopeful that the Church is becoming aware of the dangers of this situation. One of the signs of it is its revival of interest in the initiation-rite of Baptism. More careful attention is being given to the instruction and preparation of parents and sponsors as to their responsibilities. Many of the clergy are now insisting that sponsors be baptized persons and practicing communicants of some Christian Church. The Scottish Prayer Book has actually written this requirement into its rubrics. Our American Church should do the same (or else write it into the Canon Law). Private baptism is becoming less common and a return to the normative ministration of the sacrament publicly in the presence of a congregation is being made, whereby (to quote the English Prayer Book) "every man present may be put in remembrance of his own profession to God in his Baptism." The service is thus rendered with greater solemnity and impressiveness, and opportunity is given to instruct the people regarding the dangers as well as the privileges of a Christian man's profession.

Another sign of renewed concern over admission "into the fellowship of Christ's Religion" is the widespread dissatisfaction with the service as it now stands in the Prayer Book—I am told on good authority that our Standing Liturgical Commission receives more proposals for the revision of the rite of Baptism than for any other Prayer Book office. Some desire less redundancy and more incisiveness in its wording and design; others would clarify its theological implications and emphasis. Our last revision of 1928 made a good step forward when it brought 'order out of chaos' by reducing three distinct offices (plus various combinations of them) into one. But further sifting needs to be done.

First of all, there is the intention of the rubric which suggests that Holy Baptism should normally be administered after the Second Lesson at Morning or Evening Prayer,—a link with the ancient tradition of associating the service with the Divine Office. But many of the clergy find that this combination is too long a service. Hence they tend to use the Baptism rite separately, either before or after the Divine Office, with a consequent loss in the size of the congregation present; and the purpose of its public ministration is in large measure thwarted. It would be difficult to cut out much more of the Baptism rite itself, except for some redundancies in its phrases; but perhaps we might shorten the Divine Office itself on such occasions by omitting one lesson and canticle, since the Baptism rite has its own lesson. If, too, the Apostles' Creed were restored in full to its original and proper place in the Baptism rite, we could omit the latter part of the Divine Office altogether, or add such prayers after the Thanksgiving on page 280 as the minister may deem fit. Curiously, I cannot find in my Prayer Book any list of proper psalms which may be used at the Divine Office before Baptism. Psalm 27 (appointed for Easter Even) is good; also Psalms 25, 33, 107:1-15, 114, and 145.

Many of the parish clergy are returning to the ancient custom of appointing stated times for Baptism, particularly Easter Even (with its magnificent collect). Many sponsors may find it inconvenient to be present at such stated times; but it is not nearly so inconvenient as some of them seem to find the fulfilment of their promises. Our opening rubric about admonishing the people not to defer the Baptism of their children should be interpreted with common sense, and not in accordance with the medieval notion, of which the rubric is a relic, that infants must be hurried to a washing in the font, lest if they die unbaptized God will damn them everlastingly for old Adam's sin.

Let the Earth Echo Round

by William B. Sperry

IN THE years after the atomic bomb had brought to the children of men a respite from precarious appeals to arms the writers of all the Christmas stories in the world decided to have a convention. The purpose of the convention was to discover by some miraculous sign the writer of the most beautiful Christmas story of all time and after the manner of the twentieth century to present the winner with a trophy.

In an age of nuclear energy and television it was not difficult to arrange that all writers both past and present could be invited. There was warm discussion in the committee on credentials as to whether Isaiah, Malachi and Micah should be admitted. Fortunately their case was presented by Luke the Evangelist who foresaw that their exclusion might give rise to unpleasant rumors and even jeopardize the position of Matthew and John and it finally was decided to include them all.

Of course the convention was to be held in Bethlehem and the presentation was to be on Christmas Eve. The huge attendance of participants in addition to all those who could afford to make the trip as spectators made it necessary to requisition all hotels within scores of miles. Jaffa, Tel Aviv, Beyrout and Damascus all furnished entire hotels while even Cairo and Alexandria felt the influx of visitors.

Since the date of the presentation was in the midst of the Mediterranean tourist season and UNRRA was still busy with the feeding of starving populations the shipping problem was acute. Priorities were eagerly sought however as no one cared to be accused of lacking in appreciation of Christmas or do less than pay homage on such an occasion. Moreover with the whole world and even the whole universe emphasizing the implications of Christmas it might build morale among the unfortunate populations.

As Christmas day approached it became apparent that the greatest difficulty would be with the radio arrangements. Celestial stations had to be tuned in since it was from here that a sign was expected and one of the features was that reciprocal arrangements would enable those in the audience at Bethlehem to hear how the program was being received throughout the universe and thus get the universal reaction. Everywhere public gatherings were being arranged so people could follow the program and then add such local touches as would be appropriate to their own community.

An atmosphere of expectancy hung over the universe and particularly over Palestine. The weather was all that the travel agencies had promised. The fields where Ruth had gleaned and Boaz had loved were bathed in gentle moonlight each night. The camels seemed less sardonic as they went their condescending way, the donkeys wagged their ears cheerfully while shepherds and flocks were seen in picturesque groupings among the hills. In the larger cities lights and stars and wreaths were seen everywhere while animated electric signs in the downtown sections portrayed Christmas scenes along with properly unobtrusive gift suggestions.

In spite of the expectancy there was a puzzling undertone of uncertainty. Everything seemed right but the plans were so vast that though no one voiced such a thing there was a tacit wondering about how the event would turn out. Of course the winner of the contest would not be announced until midnight Christmas Eve and general headquarters gave out a good deal of background material but there was no real news. Though the days were hastening on a subtle impatience was apparent.

But the Christmas spirit was well maintained and "The Stadium of the Nativity," the specially designed but temporary structure where the pageant and presentation were to take place was nearing completion. The radio engineers were having some difficulty about the reception and rebroadcast of the universal programs but preliminary tests seemed to be adequate.

CHRISTMAS EVE came with a hush over Judea. The rest of the universe paused in reverent attention. The stars came through a richer, deeper blue to shine more brightly in their eagerness to watch this universal pageant. Vehicular traffic had been prohibited within a mile of the stadium to avoid congestion. The throngs walked quietly through the cobbled streets of Bethlehem talking in subdued tones or humming Christmas carols. Through the windows of homes soft beams of light escaped to the friendly December night.

The audience arrived promptly and every seat was taken well before midnight. Costumes of every land and every age were mingled and the light from the crystal chandeliers reflected from exquisite jewelled ornaments. The house lights began to dim. A faint glow from concealed footlights highlighted the rich folds of the proscenium curtain. All the expectancy of the past weeks was concentrated in this vast theatre. Movement and breathing were forgotten in sheer, eager waiting.

Such waiting could not last and though no one either said anything or did anything, there was a subtle change in the atmosphere as the latent uncertainty made itself felt. Still nothing happened. Up in the instrument room the same curious silence and uncertainty showed on the faces of the engineers as they stared at their various dials and turned them inquiringly.

Music began to fill the air. It seemed familiar yet it was not what was expected to begin this great pageant. This was a choir, but not a great choir, and they were singing Hark, the Herald Angels. The choir faded out and in its place were heard the chimes of church bells. Apparently it was from a large city because above the chimes could be heard the sound of traffic and a policeman's whistle. Then an announcer's voice was heard, "This is the municipal radio station bringing to our listeners our own participation in the great observance of the Nativity as it is now taking place in Bethlehem of Judea. The beginning of their program a few moments ago was not heard here because of some technical difficulties that we hope will be cleared up in a few minutes. Meanwhile keep tuned to this station. We continue the broadcast of our program from Bethlehem."

The audience in the stadium stirred, first with uneasiness, and then attentively. The voice faded and in its place was heard the music of a Eucharist. The words of the Sanctus could be heard clearly, "Heaven and earth are full of Thy glory." The throng raised their heads. The uncertainty pressed less heavily. Then as the choir sang, "Glory be to Thee O Lord most high," the uncertainty disappeared.

But this too died away and another station merged into the fading music and an announcer was saying, "We are bringing you the reaction of the man in the street to this greatest of all observances of Christmas. Standing here under the marquee of the Imperial Hotel on this most famous boulevard in the world I will try to get some of the people to tell you their impressions. Here is a young man wearing a discharged service man's button. 'Would you mind telling the radio audience your impression of this great event?' " A gruff voice answered with a single word, "Wonderful."

The listening audience sat in unmoving silence as the stations came and went. The stage was forgotten. The language was different with each broadcast but no matter how strange the tongue each one present was able to understand. Another clear voice was coming over. "Here beginneth the . . . gospel . . ."

For the first time there was a stirring of people in the auditorium. Some one stood up. Then another and then the vast throng was on its feet. "In the beginning was the word. . . . He was in the world and the world knew him not. . . . And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us. . . ."

As this station faded out another came on giving a program from a small faraway community. The hymn was Adeste Fideles. The audience was still standing and one after another began to hum with the music. Then the humming turned to words and the vast hall was filled with the chorus, "O come let us adore him, O come let us adore him, Christ the Lord."

And still nothing happened on the stage—no miracle—no sign. The people were moving toward the doors. Some paused and knelt or bowed while waiting to get to the aisles. Outside others could be seen walking quietly away under the still, starry night. The lights from the homes continued to send their little paths of light across the thin coat of snow that was drifting silently from an apparently cloudless sky.

The great auditorium stood vast, pretentious, empty. Celebrities had found their way home. Cleaning men and scrubwomen came to go about their work. Finished, they put away their mops and brooms.

On the table in the center of the stage where the spotlight would have found it when the curtain rose was the trophy . . . ornate, gaudy, and meaningless in its emptiness. The pageant was over . . . or never had begun.

Only the radio continued to come in all through the night and day as Christmas went around the world. Carols, prayers, stories of home-comings and family gatherings echoed through the great hall, as they filled the rest of the world wherever prayers are said or hymns are sung or love is present.

World Council To Hold Meeting To Plan First Assembly

Will Meet in Switzerland With Churchmen From Various Parts of the World Attending

Edited by Sara Dill

New York: — Churchmen from various parts of the world, including a large number of Americans, will gather in Geneva, Switzerland, February 14-23, to attend special sessions of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council. Episcopalians on the provisional committee of the World Council who will attend are Bishop Oldham of Albany, the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, secretary of Faith and Order and Mr. Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati. Plans will be made for the first assembly of the World Council which has been in process of formation since 1937.

Statement on Bomb

Cambridge, Mass.: — The social action committee at Episcopal Theological School have sent a statement to the representatives of the interseminary movement, relative to the atomic bomb. It is sent preliminary to the forthcoming conference with the hope that it may further discussion. The students repeat what well-known scientists have made clear, that it is one world or none, and they ask the conference to petition the Senate committee (McHahon committee) that it report a resolution which will empower the U. S. delegate to the United Nations Organization to present to the other nations who are members, the processing formula of the atomic bomb. The chairman of the E. T. S. committee is Student Fred C. Hammond.

War Damage

London (wireless to RNS):—War damage to Great Britain's churches has been far less than expected, according to the ninth report of the Anglican central council for the care of churches. Not one of the great cathedral churches was lost, and only a very few were damaged, in no case irreparably, the report disclosed.

Medieval churches suffered the least, since most of them are far from big cities. The only medieval church of the first rank that was destroyed was Coventry Cathedral, and that was architecturally in the class of greater parish churches.

Parish churches that were destroyed or seriously damaged included All Hallows Barking and St. Clave in London, St. Peter's and the Holy Cross Temple in Bristol, St. Martin's in York, and St. Andrew's in Plymouth. Restoration of the last two mentioned is considered possible.

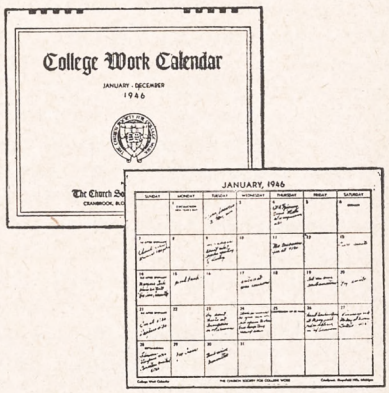
Losses among the English Renaissance churches were described by the report as "much more serious," including many erected by Sir Christopher Wren and his followers after the 1666 London fire. The report also said that a "lamentably high proportion" of classical churches were destroyed.

Refugee Committee

Geneva (wireless to RNS): — A new ecumenical refugee commission has been established by the World Council of Churches here to expand and develop the work which its refugee department carried on during the war. The new group will be more widely representative and larger in scope than the original agency. At a meeting scheduled for London in January, according to Adolph Fruedenberg, secretary of the World Council's refugee work, one of the major topics of discussion will be church aid to refugees and displaced persons in Central Europe.

Bethlehem Broadcast

Jerusalem: — There will be a broadcast from here on Christmas afternoon, with traditional carols, a sermon by Anglican bishop in Jerusalem, Bishop Weston H. Stewart, and prayers by British chaplain Carlyle Witton-Davies and American chaplain, Francis J. Bloodgood.



In sending this bit of information by air mail Bloodgood adds a number of other interesting bits: for example the high commission of Palestine, Field Marshall Lord Gort, is of the family of Captain Miles Standish of Plymouth Rock fame. Also he states that where there is trouble, Arab and Jewish children in the Christian mission schools give each other protection.

Bishop Mann Honored

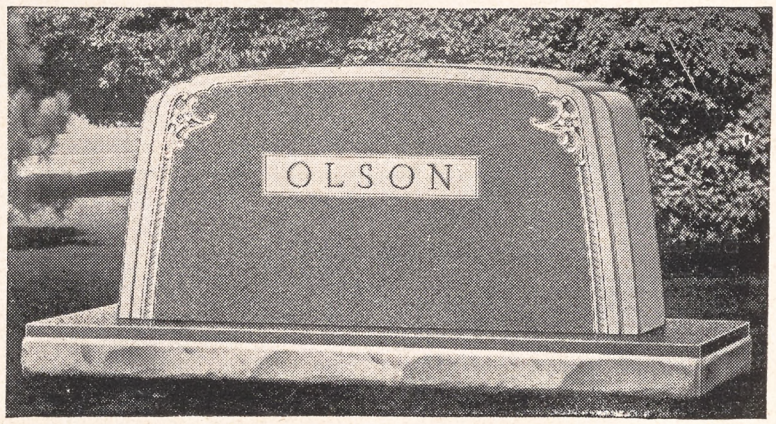
Geneva N. Y.:—Bishop Alexander Mann was honored at Hobart College on December 2, his 85th birthday. The Rev. David R. Covell, chaplain at the college, paid him a glowing tribute at a service in the chapel after which there was a reception and birthday party, with a cake with 85 candles, at the chaplain's house. Bishop Mann, retired bishop of Pittsburgh, is a native of Geneva and is the only living alumnus of the Hobart class of 1881.

Takes New Work

Boston:—The Rev. Raymond S. Hall who got a lot of space in the newspapers while he was chaplain of an airborne division of the parachute infantry, is the new director of the Seaman's Club here. The club is sponsored by the city mission society and ministers annually to thousands of seamen. His service record is a distinguished one and includes landing on the Normandy beaches; being wounded and hospitalized to England; taking part in the invasion of Holland where he was captured by the Germans. He was sent as a prisoner to Poland where he managed to escape and join the Russian lines. An arduous journey followed before he reached home by way of the Black Sea, Egypt and Italy.

Preaches in Tokyo

Tokyo (wireless to RNS):—Japan's surrender "was God's way of opening the road to peace," Bishop Paul Sasaki, Anglican bishop of mid-Japan, declared on December 2 at Holy Trinity here. He added that a Japanese victory "would only have increased the problems of the nation and the world." He spoke to a congregation of Japanese and GI's at a service of the Holy Communion.



Social Workers Meet

Harrisburg, Pa.: — A conference on the Church and social work was held here recently, due largely to the efforts of Mrs. Robert K. Jones, social relations chairman of the diocesan auxiliary, and the Rev. Robert C. Batchelder, the chairman of the diocesan social relations department. Helen G. Hubbell, supervisor of rural child welfare, stressed that the Church and social work have a common motivation in laying stress on the right of the individual, while Mr. Batchelder declared that just as God is concerned with man, so man must be concerned with the welfare of his fellows.

At the afternoon session E. Preston Sharp, director of community work of the state department of welfare, spoke on the reconversion of youth. He said that he was not afraid of the atomic bomb but of those who would handle it, and stated that we have to survey all community resources so as to plan a safe, secure and happy home for future generations. The conference has the enthusiastic approval of Bishop Heistand who was a speaker at the opening session. The conference was attended by about forty professional social workers and clergymen.

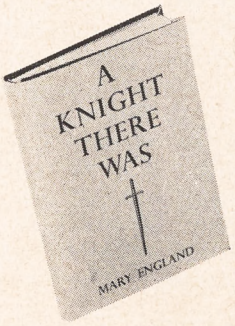
ed here by Mark Dawber, executive secretary of the Home Missions Council. "We must make the church so real that these people who are insulated against the church can no longer get along without it," he told the woman's division of Chrisian service of the Methodist Church.

Because of atomic energy, Dawber declared, "we can no longer afford to have 'bad people' in the world." He urged an expanded "outreach ministry," particularly among women and children in areas not now served by the Church. He said the "uprooting of womanhood has been the most serious phase" in the disruption of home and family life. He stressed that the Church is almost wholly dependent on women for missionary education and for keeping alive the missionary zeal and interest of the Church.

Achievement of a "world mind" through agencies and techniques usable by church women was considered at an open meeting of the department of Christian social relations. Principal speaker was the Rev. Richard M. Fagley, secretary of the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace of the Federal Council of Churches.

War on Communism



Prague: — The Roman Catholic Church is waging a winning battle against communism in Czechoslovakia according to Catholic leaders, reports Religious News Service. The People's Party, largely controlled by the Church, is agitating for social reforms and for political and religious freedom. An offensive has also been launched by Catholic Action in universities and intellectual circles where communism has gained its strongest foothold.

Communist doctrine has made virtually no headway in Southern Moravia, where the peasantry is noted for piety and churches con-

For Clergymen

The Bohlen Lectures for 1945

DR. W. NORMAN PITTENGER here presents a study of the nature of the Church and of the essential place of the Church in the Christian scheme of things. He does this with skill and scholarship, stating the old truth of the one holy, catholic and apostolic Church in an entirely new way.

Dr. Pittenger begins his work with a consideration of the Church as seen in the New Testament. Then he moves on to a discussion of the place of the ordered ministry in the Church and the significance of the historic episcopate. In succeeding chapters he speaks of the problem of dogma and authority in the Church, the other-worldly aspects of the Church, and the relation of the Una Sancta to society.

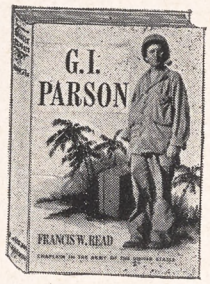
tinue to be filled. In Moravia generally, it is estimated that two-thirds of the Catholic population have remained faithful to religious duties, and enrollments in theological seminaries is proportionately higher than anywhere else.

Communist influence is regarded as greatest in Pilsen, Ziln and other large industrial cities where populations have lost vital contacts with religion. In their fight against Communist doctrine, priests in these centers are said to be handicapped by lack of leadership. It is pointed out that while normally there are seven bishops in Bohemia and Moravia, at present there are only two—Bishop Picha of Hradec Kralove, and Bishop Leopold Precan of Olomouc—and they are advanced in years.

Another adverse factor is the lack of Catholic periodicals. Before the war, there were 1,200 Catholic publications in Czechoslovakia, but so far permission has only been obtained to republish fifteen journals and magazines, only nine of which have a popular appeal.

A village priest in Moravia is reported to have become a Communist and with him his entire flock, but this instance is highly exceptional. Even in Prague, where Communist influence is most deeply felt, only three out of 300 priests are reported to have espoused Communism. There is no organized atheistic movement in Czechoslovakia, though there are individual atheists.



A question widely debated is whether priests should "mix in politics." There are seven priests in the newly-appointed parliament, and many Catholics urge that a strong Catholic party is needed to counteract policies of the two leftist parties, the Communists and the Social Democrats. Main argument against clergy participation in politics is that priests should serve all the people and not identify themselves with any particular economic or political tendencies.

Columbia, S. C. (RNS):—Belief that Protestantism is not fairly represented in motion pictures was expressed by the South Carolina Baptist state convention at its annual sessions here.

Protestant groups," the Convention declared.

The convention deplored easy divorces as a threat to the sanctity of the home, condemned any effort to legalize gambling, urged renewed attempts to outlaw the liquor traffic, and called for an end to U. S. diplomatic relations with the Vatican.

It also observed that "a great deal" could be done to relieve racial tensions "by seeking to bear real Christianity in our relation to persons and problems in our communities."

Warn the State

Prague (airmail to RNS): — A warning to the Slovak government against campaigns aimed at the Roman Catholic Church was issued by five bishops in a pastoral letter read in all Catholic churches. A decree banning the Catholic youth organization is regarded by the bishops as part of the campaign against the Church. Other blows have been the confiscation of Catholic schools and the partial suppression of the Catholic press. More than fifty Slovak priests have been arrested on charges of having been collaborationists with the former pro-nazi regime.

On the other hand the Evangelical Church in Slovakia has "nothing to complain of" under the new government, according to Bishop Samuel Osusky, Lutheran. "Protestants are in a more favorable position than they have been in a long time and feel themselves free in the Czechoslavakian Republic," he declared. It was pointed out that four Protestant pastors occupy leading positions in the Communist party and that both clergy and laity who are Communists remain good Church members.

Is Crozier Work of Art?

Belfast (wireless to RNS):—The board of trade here has to decide whether a bishop's crozier is art and therefore tax free. The problem was tossed into the lap of the board when the Rt. Rev. W. S. Kerr, new Protestant bishop of Down and Dromore, ordered an episcopal crook at a cost of about 100 pounds and was told he would have to pay a tax of 100 per cent. Until the board makes up its mind the bishop has decided to borrow a crozier when needed.

Clergymen Needed

London (wireless to RNS):—The Church of England will need twenty million pounds (about 80 million dollars) in the next ten years to meet its future tasks, according to spokesmen at the Church Assembly here. Presenting a report by the financial commission, Philip Inman called for a complete overhauling of the Church's central machinery and for an accumulation of all funds in a central treasury to meet the "enormous" demands that will be made on churches.

Lady Bridgeman stressed the importance of an adequate number of trained men and women to carry out church plans. She said that between 4,000 and 5,000 additional clergymen are needed.

Urges a Congress

Geneva (wireless to RNS): — An interfaith congress of religious leaders to consider the great relief needs of Europe is urged by the Rev. J. W. Behnken, president of the Lutheran Synod of Missouri, now here to consult with leaders of the World Council of Churches. He said that sixty million American Church members could achieve results by unitedly demanding to do charitable work and refusing to be blocked from their purpose. If Americans realized that 12 to 16 million homeless persons were roaming Germany, he declared; they would "rise up and do something so that they will not have to starve and freeze to death this winter."

Many Aid Quakers

Paris:—Howard Wriggins, head of American Quaker relief in France, states that the work is inter-denominational, with only ten per cent of the money coming from Quakers. He also stated that half of the personnel is non-Quaker, with Episcopalians, Congregationalists and Baptists represented among the staff members. Without the help of these other Churches the work would not be able to go on, he declared.

Country Clergy Meet

Des Moines, Ia.:—A conference of clergy in charge of churches that are receiving aid from the diocese was held here recently, with each man given an opportunity to present special plans, needs and opportunities in the field. There was a discussion of the whole diocesan picture, led by Bishop Haines, and plans made for improving the work. Among the suggestions made were regular meetings of the bishop's committee; new types of church services to reach the unchurched; distribution of literature; improvement of property. Information was provided each man on existing sources on rural and small town work. Teaching missions in fifteen centers are planned for the fall of next year, conducted by diocesan clergy who will be prepared for the task at a conference to be held sometime after Easter.

JAMES S. COX
Rector of St. Paul's, Winston-Salem, N.C.

I read with interest and chagrin the news article about the Reconstruction and Advance Fund (WITNESS, Dec. 6). How could these men bring themselves to time their article in such a way as to endanger the success of the best effort the Church has made on a national scale in many decades, perhaps in its whole history? Could the Fund be changed at this late date? Could they hope to stimulate greater interest in conserving whatever good interests were represented in the campaign?

We all admit the need in Europe. As a matter of fact there is need everywhere in the world and the best Christian is the one who sees the most of it and meets it with the greatest sacrifice to himself. My brethren of Massachusetts are aware of this and are to be commended for wanting to do something for Europe. I hope that as soon as the R. & A. campagn is concluded these brethren will start a campaign for European relief and I promise them my support.

With regard to the R. & A. Fund's work about four-fifths of the total money raised is to be allocated for reconstruction and advance in China and the Philippines. If I had my way all of it would be used in these two countries. In view of our Church's hope to make some impact on the thinking of man to insure a world more closely resembling the Kingdom of God, I do not think that the National Council could have showed greater statesmanship in putting the greatest emphasis on these two countries. By ideological, economic and political ties both China and the Philippines are closely allied to the United States, and in both of these countries our Church occupies a strategic position. If ever we are to influence the thinking and culture of the people, we have our chance in the East today.

In my opinion the R. & A. campaign is the greatest single united effort our Church has ever made. It may not bring in the Kingdom of God, but there is no reason to sabotage it because it doesn't do everything. What it does contemplate doing is worth the greatest sacrifice of every member of our Church and we shall rue the day our Church's generation was born if we fail to support it.

ANSWER: The objectives of the campaign can be changed at this late date, and were changed at the meeting of the National Council, Dec. 4-6, due in large measure to the criticism of these Boston clergy and others throughout the country. (WITNESS, Dec. 13).

LESLIE H. BALL
Layman of Denver

I was startled to see my piece printed with all the trimmings (WITNESS, Oct. 25). My emotions were about this way—first, surprise (very marked); then pleasure mingled with amusement, followed by quite a percentage of dismay for reasons that follow. When I first came to this city in 1938 the people in charge of St. John's Cathedral gave me work from time to time and at a slightly higher rate of pay than I had been able to obtain elsewhere. Later I took the place of a man who retired on account of ill health. Now, ingrate that I was, instead of going to the dean with my report on the condition of air-conditioning fan, I exposed the matter in a public periodical. So absorbed was I in presenting my ideas that I had forgotten to be considerate of others who had tried to be a help to me. However, since the question of church furnishings has been opened I have a suggestion to offer. Let the seats of the pews be hinged, permitting them to be folded back against the pew backs and make sweeping operations much easier.

CHARLES E. HILL
Priest of Williamstown, Mass.

The desire of the Massachusetts group of clergymen that the R. & A. Fund should be used in larger part for Europe will doubtless meet with welcome. I know that in two dioceses at least the feeling is that the Fund should aim at ten million instead of five. Perhaps the solution is (it would be welcomed I am sure at 281) that the Boston group should raise a million dollars exclusively for Europe. Meanwhile and of more importance see that Congress dallies no longer over allocation of funds to UNNRA.

HELEN A. COOK
Churchwoman of St. Louis

Permit me to congratulate you on publishing the article It Is Your Turn Now by Navy Chaplain Richard L. Harbour (WITNESS, Nov. 29). If there is one besetting sin of Episcopal parishes from coast to coast it is the holier than thou attitude toward the visitor or the newcomer within the Church. When all is said and done who are Episcopalians that they can look down their noses at these strangers within our gates. Let us hope that the fine article will strike home where most needed and so point the way to happier times.

HAMILTON H. KELLOGG
Former Army Chaplain

That was a fine and very helpful article in Talking It Over (Nov. 15) relative to the parochial placement of returned chaplains. It is a great shame that some central clearing house has not been established. A lot of people are talking about the article and I have high hopes of it doing some good. Bishop Sherrill then whom our chaplains never had a better nor stouter friend, is doing all that he possibly can but strength and time simply will not permit him to shoulder this placement problem all alone. It is a problem for the Church as a whole, not for just one bishop or one diocese. It will need concerted action and the united wisdom of all.

The Witness 1945 Honor Roll Nominated By Readers

Selected for Outstanding Contributions In Furthering of the Christian Ideals

By The Editors

New York:—In this last number of the year we present, as is our custom, the names of a number of men and women who in the judgment of readers and editors have made outstanding contributions to the furthering of Christian ideals during the year. A considerable number were nominated who have been on our Honor Roll in former years. However great their contribution may have been in the year now closing, they are not listed since it is our rule not to repeat. Those selected in other years are listed at the end of this story. All nominations sent in by readers were carefully considered at a meeting of the editorial board and the following selection made. The names are presented alphabetically.

Chaplains who served with the armed forces. Many chaplains were nominated and it is of course true that there were those who stood out above their fellows for one reason or another. However we give our salute to all.

Chester Bowles, who has fought an uphill fight almost single handed to maintain price levels and thus prevent inflation.

Stephen R. Davenport Jr., who has done a notable work in charge of the Episcopal church at Oak Ridge, Tennessee, of atomic bomb fame, where he has ministered to all people irrespective of denomination.

Charles Granville Hamilton, the courageous and colorful priest of Mississippi who has used his gifts as a writer and speaker in the people's fight against discrimination and corruption in high places.

Eric Johnston, for the progressive leadership he has given to American business as the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

C. D. B. King, layman of Liberia who, on the occasion of the installation of Bishop Harris, offered a realistic and well thought out program for this missionary district.

Bishop Harry Kennedy, for the fine leadership he has given the missionary district of Honolulu and the Pacific area.

Daisuke Kitagawa, for his outstanding work during the war and since with Japanese-Americans.

F. H. La Guardia, for his great service to the people of New York as mayor and for his leadership in all forward-looking movements.

Mrs. Stephen Mahon, churchwoman of Toledo, Ohio, whose interest in race relations, international affairs, industry, has been a potent factor not only in her own city but on various national Church boards where she serves.

Richard Morford, executive secretary of the United Christian Council for Democracy, for outstanding work in Christian social action.

Walter P. Morse of the Cowley Fathers, a missionary in China, who single handed smuggled medical supplies through the Japanese lines to Chinese sufferers.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist, for his all-round progressive leadership of Christian forces.

Mrs. Arthur Sherman, the able administrator of the Woman's Auxiliary who is also a leader in Christian thought and action.

Edward Stettinius, for his leadership in the formation of the United Nations Organization.

Helen Turnbull, who has made Windham House, New York, a fine training center for women of the Church and who has made a sojourn there a practical experience in corporate Christian living and worship.

Raymond Walsh, Episcopalian, formerly professor at Harvard and Hobart, who has distinguished himself by his factual studies as head of research for the Congress of Industrial Organizations and as a radio commentator.

Francis Wei, president of Hua Chung University, who through the long years of war in China stuck by his task, moving the university literally thousands of miles to keep it out of the hands of the Japanese, and who turned down high government posts in order to do so.

Charles C. Wilson, priest of St. Louis for his outstanding work in social service and more particularly for the support he gave to a large number of Negro families who were threatened with eviction from a federal housing project.

Doris K. Wright, the principal of the Rock Point School at Burlington, Vermont, for her wise, profound and Christian understanding of young people in managing this school for under-privileged girls.

We list, without citations, the names of those on Honor Rolls of other years. A number of these were nominated again for the 1945 list but were not considered for that reason:

GET-TOGETHER

★ We have satisfied ourselves that there is need of some agency that will bring clergymen and parishes together and we will do the best we can until something better comes along. But kindly keep in mind that THE WITNESS is understaffed so please do not call but send your requests in writing. At present we have twenty-three men seeking positions, of whom five are chaplains. We have fourteen parishes seeking rectors or assistants. We will continue to send available information to those inquiring either for a parish or for a clergyman. But we cannot hire another office worker to look after this so kindly make it as easy for us as possible by enclosing return envelope and also give as much information as possible if it is a parish seeking a rector or assistant, or a clergymen seeking a new position. THE PICTURE ON THE COVER

Washington:—We have had letters asking us why, now that the war is over, do we run this series of pictures taken by Fons Iannelli, one of America's foremost photographers who was a member of the special navy photo unit directed by Captain Edward J. Steichen. Some have said that they want to forget the war. We think this is precisely what we should not do. These pictures are not horror pictures, unless expressions of deep anxiety, fear, and "what's this all about?" can be called horror pictures. We believe that Fons Iannelli caught, as words cannot, something of what young men went through during the war which it is well for all of us to keep in mind.

The picture this week is of a plane just landing on a carrier. Horror and fatigue is stamped on the face of the tail-gunner. The ground crew, just having brought the plane to a stop, anxiously peer at him to see if he has been wounded, perhaps critically, and needs assistance, not an infrequent occurrence.

When WITNESS columnist Bill Grime went to Springfield, Mass., recently to talk to the Western Massachusetts clergy about Church Schools he had this picture taken with Dean Donald Campbell of the cathedral and the Rev. Francis X. Cheney, rector at Southbridge, who is the chairman of the department of education

MISSIONARIES GO TO JAPAN

New York (RNS): — Six experienced missionaries will return to Japan as soon as travel arrangements can be made for them, according to plans approved here by the Japan Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

The missionaries will assist the Christian Church of Japan and the foreign mission boards of the United States and Canada, in a planning capacity.

They will also confer with educational institutions in Japan which have requested the early return of Christian educators from America, and will prepare the way for the return of missions personnel in large numbers to resume activities interrupted by the war.

Initial steps for printing 250,000 hymn books in the Japanese language were taken by the committee, which also was informed that the Japan Bible Society has requested the printing and shipment, if possible of 2,000,000 New Testaments in Japanese within the next 18 months.

NO NUMBER NEXT WEEK

New York: — Readers seldom glance at a masthead of a paper or magazine. But if you will turn to the inside cover page you will find this standing notice "THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week of January." There will therefore be no number January 3. The next issue will be that of January 10.

Bishop H. K. Sherrill Reports On the German Church

Says There Is No Need for Close Cooperation With Leaders in Order to Have Democracy

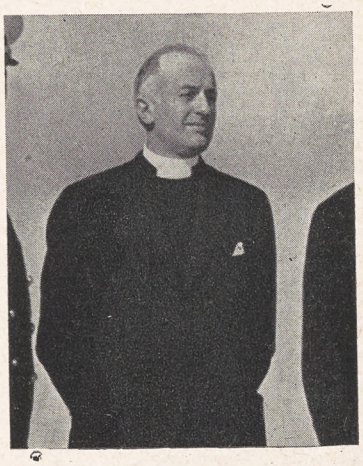
By Henry K. Sherrill
The Bishop of Massachusetts

Boston:—Upon the request and recommendation of the Federal Council of Churches, President Truman approved a proposal to send a delegation of American churchmen, representing Protestantism, to Germany. The purpose of the visitation was to seek to establish fellowship with and to ascertain the present status of the Churches in Germany; to discuss with Church leaders there the matter of re-establishing relationships between the Churches in the United States and the German Churches, as the latter seek to rehabilitate the spiritual life of their nation; and to discuss problems of relief and reconstruction with the American occupation authorities and the leaders of the German Churches.

On November 22 the Federal Council announced that the delegation would be composed of Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council and bishop of the Methodist Church; Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, president of the United Lutheran Council in America and member of the department of reconstruction and inter-church aid of the World Council of Churches and the writer, as chairman of the general commission on army and navy chaplains and bishop of Massachusetts of the Episcopal Church.

The delegation proceeded at once to Germany and travelled extensively, visiting such centers as Frankfurt, Stuttgart, Munich, Nuremberg, Hof and Berlin.

Among the military and Church leaders with whom they conferred were Generals Joseph T. McNarney, L. D. Clay, D. P. Echols, and B. L. Milburn; and Bishop Theophil Wurm, chairman of the council of the Evangelical Church in Germany and Bishop of Wuttenberg, Pastor Martin Niemoller, vice-chairman of the Council, Dr. Hans Asmussen, chancellor, Bishop Hans Meiser, Bishop of Bavaria, Bishop Otto Dibelius of Berlin, and Michael Cardinal Faulhaber of Munich.



This delegation is fully aware of the history of this war, of the story of the concentration camps, and of the responsibility of the German leaders and people. Two of its members visited European and Mediterranean theatres of war during the war. The sacrifices of the American soldiers and sailors, the homes made desolate by the loss of sons, the incalculable costs borne by the Allies in destroying the totalitarian threat to freedom and in freeing the peoples enslaved by the Nazi invaders have been present in the thoughts of the delegation throughout its visitation. Yet with all this in mind and more, we believe that the aims for which we fought and won the war, the necessity of a peaceful world, above all, the very nature of the religion of Christ, demand a wise and understanding approach to the people and, more especially, to the Churches of Germany.

The Protestant Churches in Germany, comprising 60% of the population, have experienced a vigorous upsurge of life and activity since the end of the war. This is profoundly gratifying in view of the vicious persecution it suffered under the Nazi regime. The overwhelming majority have banded themselves together in a new nation-wide federation, the Evangelical Church in Germany, which holds a particularly hopeful promise for the future. At its core is the gallant fellowship of sincere pastors who defied National Socialism fearlessly, in many cases at the cost of being imprisoned in concentration camps. Church attendances have increased substantially, far beyond the low standards of the past. This leadership and the remarkable response from the German Church people are reassuring in a nation which, it was feared, had been thoroughly poisoned by anti-Christian teaching.

The Church is in process of solving many difficult and complex problems, such as its complete de-Nazification, its relation to the state, the creation of religious literature, and its fellowship with the Churches of other lands.

Generalizations concerning hunger, disease, lack of clothing, inadequate housing and widespread physical suffering are apt to be misleading. There is more than one Germany; the Germany of the bombed cities; the Germany of the rural areas largely unscathed by war; the Germany of the refugees composed of perhaps ten million persons evacuated from territory once German and now moving into communities of the present Germany. Then, too, there are Russian, French, British, and American zones. Living conditions differ radically in these different areas.

The total destruction of the German economy and the chaos following in the wake of war result in a lowered standard of living in which available food is ill-balanced and inadequate. We are gratified to learn that 500,000 tons of food will be shipped from the United States to Germany and made available in the American zone, thereby insuring for the German population there and the anticipated 3,000,000 forced evacuees who will enter the American zone, a standard of 1550 calories per day. Under these circumstances, there will be no need or opportunity for the Churches or individuals to contribute food or money to purchase food; but on account of the inevitable lack of heat, there is a serious need of clothing. We appeal to the government to grant permits for Churches and relief agencies in the United States to provide the same.

However, in Germany as a whole, the expulsion of millions from their homes in territory once German is causing unspeakable hardship. These millions have been torn from their homes, their personal property taken from them, and forced to migrate to Germany under conditions that result in starvation and the unnecessary death of tens of thousands. They are without food, medical supplies, adequate clothes, shelter. Children and old people die en route, many diseases are becoming epidemic, and the cruelty accompanying this evacuation will affect all of Europe and manifest itself in widespread disease in the present and in hatred tomorrow.

It is not generally known that the UNRRA does not provide food or clothing for Germans.

The Christian Church faces opportunity and responsibility in the situation confronting the German Church. It must re-establish fellowship with the new Church of Germany, and strengthen the democratic forces now leading the Church.

The Allied military government is charged with the difficult task of de-Nazifying Germany and of establing democracy within Germany. Methods that result in loss of faith in democracy must be eliminated. The German people must be shown that while considerations of security are at present paramount, and while the German war potential must be destroyed, nevertheless the policy in this period of transition is one that looks to a free and democratic Germany. It is thus that hope will be kept alive, co-operation will be forthcoming, and Europe saved from revolution and further war.

The Churches must support such policies and give assurance to political leaders who desire a wise and constructive approach to the whole question of a peaceful Europe. Above all, the Church must proclaim and practice those great principles of her Lord upon which enduring peace alone can rest. and through which humanity may be saved.

BISHOP TUCKER SPEAKS

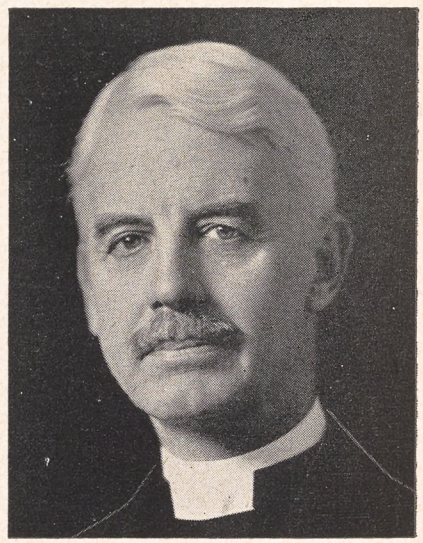
Harrisburg, Pa.:—Bishop Tucker, the Presiding Bishop, was the speaker at a recent meeting of the clergy of the diocese of Harrisburg. He stated that the Reconstruction and Advance Fund drive was not merely a money-raising effort but was preeminently an evangelistic effort to enlist the intelligent and enthusiastic cooperation and support of every member of the Church in applying Christian principles to the problems of the world in the days ahead.

Bishop Dandridge of Tennessee is to address meetings in the diocese in January on behalf of the fund.

THE MISSIONARY WORK IN JAPAN

By JAMES THAYER ADDISON,
Vice President of the National Council

New York:—The problem of resuming our missionary work in Japan is one of the most urgent problems to confront the Church in 1946. When the National Council meets in April to formulate a proposed budget for the coming triennium and when General Convention meets in September to adopt the final budget, no more critical question will arise than this—"What about Japan?"



At its meeting in September the National Council adopted resolutions declaring that we would get in touch as soon as possible with leaders of the Church in Japan; that we would learn from them what kind and degree of cooperation they desired; and that in the light of this information we would formulate a program of cooperation.

We have already learned that their first desire is for a visit from some representative of our Church. Our immediate answer to this request has been the brief visit to Japan during early December of Bishop Binsted of the Philippines, formerly Bishop of Tohoku in Japan, an able administrator and beloved missionary. To supplement his visit another representative may be sent before the National Council delegation leaves for the Far East, probably in May. Their next plea is for the return to Japan of a certain number of teachers and professors to aid in restoring the vigor and maintaining the standards of educational institutions. The call for ordained missionaries may come at a later stage. This much we now know, though fuller and more direct information will soon reach us from Bishop Binsted.

The needs which these messages from Japan express are what we might have expected, and they are more likely to increase than diminish. It is thus true already, and will be true in growing measure, that the Church in Japan once more calls for our help in strengthening and developing its own life. That help will be more specifically limited than it used to be, but it is none the less warmly desired. We have assurances from every quarter of the rich opportunities that are now open to the Church in Japan. And so the question is definitely before us, "Shall we begin again, on a scale less extensive than before, to send men and women and money to Japan?"

I believe that the answer from the American Church will be a resounding yes. I can think of no reasons to the contrary except reasons which could not be safely uttered in the presence of Christ. But I can think of many reasons for positive and generous response. Some of these are hard-headed and half-worldly, though none the less sound for that. Others are more appropriate to a Church which bears the name and accepts the standards of Christ.

Thinking on the level of practical statesmanship, where men are moved by farsighted self-interest, it is plain that lasting peace in the Far East depends on the triumph in Japan of those liberal and democratic forces which have been opposed, and will be opposed, to aggressive militarism. If Japan's future relations with China and the United States are to be increasingly cordial, these peaceful and progressive elements in the national life are those which must be developed and encouraged. Since their natural ally and their strongest stimulus is the Christian religion, no wiser policy could be devised than to promote by every sound method the spread of Christianity in Japan. It is the surest way to make her a good neighbor.

This is a firm conclusion which ought to appeal to any American who is not too emotional to think.

Act or Apologize

WHEN General Convention meets in Philadelphia next September it will be nine years since the Episcopal Church invited the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. to enter into conversations and negotiations looking toward organic union of the two Churches. The resolution which initiated this action was adopted enthusiastically. We take it that those who proposed the resolution and those who voted for it meant what they said; that there was to be a real effort made to achieve organic union. In a minority report three members of the commission previous to the present one said, "Repeatedly it has been said that 'we have agreed to unite.' Many of us do not believe we have done any such thing. We have declared 'our purpose to achieve organic union' which is quite another matter." That is very true, the 1937 vote was not "to unite." But it was a vote to have unity as our purpose and it is evident that little progress has been made in the direction of unity and that many who object to proposals made by a majority of the commission do not offer any means of pursuing our avowed purpose which could be acceptable to the Presbyterians. Certainly no one could have thought that we were asking the Presbyterians to make an act of submission and to become Protestant Episcopalians. We were asking them to negotiate, to attempt to reach an agreement by which we and they would bring our essential convictions and traditions into a united Church.

What has happened in the eight years since the Cincinnati Convention? The succeeding Conventions have not taken a single step forward. Yet it was our Church which started this business. Each year the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church patiently and courteously holds on, waiting for us to do something, to give some indication that we were serious when we made our original proposal.

Time is running out. By our inaction we've got ourselves into an embarrassing and untenable position. We must do one of two things at Philadelphia next fall. Either prove our good faith by some concrete action, even though it be a small first step; or apologize to the Presbyterians, tell them we took an unconsidered and hasty vote in 1937 and ask to be excused. That would be humiliating but it would be honest. Our present course, or lack of one, is both humiliating and of doubtful sincerity.

We of THE WITNESS believe that a large majority of the laity and clergy of our Church do not want these negotiations to fail; do not want us to withdraw. We urge you to write to the chairman of the unity commission, Bishop Robert E. L. Strider, 1300 Market Street, Wheeling, W. Va., asking for action which will be unmistakable evidence that we do propose to achieve organic union with the Presbyterians and are ready to do something toward that end.

"Quotes"

THERE will be no questioning as to whether I have won man; no questioning as to whether I have gained some earthly advantage; no questioning about what results I have produced, or whether I may have produced no results at all; or whether loss and the sport that others make of me were the only results I have produced. No, eternity will release me from one and all such foolish questions. If it should so happen that in this talk I have spoken the truth, then I shall be questioned no further about this matter.

Effective Action

SOME time ago we talked with a man who was much opposed to communism. Since most Americans are against communism there was nothing surprising in this. But this man had unusually strong antipathy for the communists. He thought the government was entirely too lenient with them. If he could have his way they would all be shipped out of the country. His main ground of objection to the communists was religious. They are the enemy of Christianity. They are fighting against the Churches. If they were given a free rein they would close up all the Churches.

We were delighted to find such a staunch defender of the faith and told him so. Quite naturally we asked him to what Church he belonged. Imagine our surprise and disillusionment when he admitted that he did not belong to any. It developed that he did not even attend church; had not been inside a church for years. He has not so much as contributed one dollar for the work of the Church during the past five years.

It was impossible to refrain from reminding our friend that actually he was in league with the communists—assuming that what he said about them was true. He was pursuing a policy just as inimical to the Churches as theirs. Indeed his would probably be even more effective in closing them up. Open opposition to the Churches often makes them correct their faults, strengthen their program, and it raises up friends for their defense. But to ignore the Church—stay away from its services, neglect to contribute to its support—that is really the effective way to close it up.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

THERE has been quite a discussion of the picture, Mildred Pierce, with one group saying that it is a picture that shouldn't be sent into the foreign market since it gives a "totally false view of American life" with the other saying it is a fine picture. After seeing the picture, starring Joan Crawford, Jack Carson and Zachary Scott as typical James M. Cain characters, I'm inclined to agree with both sides. Just call me mugwump. We Americans can't be so unalterably evil as the persons in this film who deal exclusively in terms of money, double-dealing and seduction. Such a film would certainly reinforce that complex among foreigners whereby they think all citizens of the United States are gun-toting gangsters. In fact, Mildred Pierce is the nearest thing to a completely immoral picture that I have ever seen.

And yet, it is an astonishingly good picture. Miss Crawford and Mr. Carson will doubtless be among the runners for the Academy Award on the strength of their performances. And Michael Curtis who did the directing has done so with vigor and imagination. One scene was particularly note-worthy since it was done almost exclusively by camera technique. In it Jack Carson is locked in a deserted building with a corpse and, through an active camera and odd angles and lights, it is developed into an excellent study of oppressive horror. Another such scene involves the hypersensitiveness of Joan Crawford while she is waiting to be grilled by the police. The horrible noises of a newspaper crackling, a clock ticking, a chair squeaking and a pencil being sharpened really get across the psychological stress under which she is laboring.

From a technical point of view, Mildred Pierce is one of the really fine pictures of the year; from the story point of view, it is very exciting—but certainly off base.

Did you notice the news release which stated that some arrests had been made in Oberammergau. Among those arrested were the persons who played the parts of Jesus, Mary, Joseph, Peter and John in the famous Passion Play. They were all active Nazis. In fact, the only person who was exonerated on the grounds of being an active member of the democratic underground was the person who played the part of Judas Iscariot. Read into that what you will!

The film, Too Young To Know, deals with a laudable theme—the marriage of teen-agers under the stress of the war years and the ultimate conflicts—but, chiefly due to amateurish acting and lack of imagination, it doesn't get across the idea. Besides it is one of those pictures which ends with one of those terrible Hollywood cherubs which makes certain spectators "ooooh" and "aaaah." That's enough to condemn any picture.

Educated Episcopalians

GEORGE I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity Church, Miami

PERHAPS there are not other Church people in all the world so well satisfied with themselves as the Episcopalians. Unless of course it be the Church of England. They have a Catholic heritage of which some of them are proud. They have too a Protestant heritage of which some more are proud. If you combine both you have something of which anybody might be proud — but that combination is the hard part.

As I look at this picture the problem is, in the best sense, one of knowing.

Ignorance is the source of intolerance, and when Episcopalians do not know the history and principles of their Church, they are about as impossible as any group of uneducated people anywhere in the world. A bigoted Churchman is worse than any uninstructed heathen because he does not know for what he is standing, though he stand with the fervor of Thermopylae.

Churchmanship does not consist in assertion. It consists in knowledge. An uninstructed Churchman is not a Churchman in the real sense—he is a bigot.

We in the Episcopal Church greatly need to be able to give an answer for the faith that is in us. It is a glorious and well authenticated faith, but after all, we must know.

We need real Church instruction in the Church schools. We need thorough and complete confirmation instruction before that rite. We also need instruction in the history of the Church.

It may be a harsh judgment but I dare to make it. Too many people are ready to accept the Episcopal Church because of its standing without knowing why it stands.

A more thorough instruction in the Church, its history, place, teachings, and Prayer Book is the greatest need in this Church of ours today. Only those who know can defend what they believe, and only those who know will carry on to the ultimate conversion of the world.

We need today more than ever before educated Episcopalians. Our Church has a glorious heritage —it can be claimed only by those who know.

Religion in Education

by Thomas S. Gates
President of the University of Pennsylvania

UPON the shoulders of the modern university rest many grave responsibilities and golden opportunities. Some of these are obvious and generally receive liberal considerations in centers of higher learning. I think especially of the concern which is shown for the intellectual, the physical, and the social welfare of the student. But there is another vital area of human life and experience which is not always allowed such generous attention but which is nonetheless vital in any well-rounded educational process. I refer to a subject which is of mutual concern to us all, namely, the place of religion in education.

Religion and education were united as long as 800 years ago, when a school attached to the cathedral on the Ile de la Cite in Paris grew to be the University of Paris. Only a few years after the cathedral on the Ile de la Cite became the sheltering roof of one of Europe's oldest universities, a school was opened within the precincts of the nunnery of St. Frideswyde and Oseney Abbey in England; that school grew to be the university of Oxford. And in that same century, canons of the Church of St. Giles developed educational work which later became the University of Cambridge. Education as we know it began under the aegis of the Church.

In our own country history repeats itself. Harvard founded in order that the colonies might have an educated ministry; Yale had the same purpose in mind; Dartmouth founded to bring education to the Indians; Columbia to the Episcopalians. The religious motive in education has been incalculable and fundamental.

At no time perhaps in the history of the world has this spiritual approach toward education been more essential than now. The astounding revelations of science with their almost cosmic implications will be of little value to mankind without the discipline which comes from the greater development and exercise of the spiritual values. If the world ever needed the spiritual strength to guide its events for the good of mankind, it needs it now, and the youthful mind in the process of development, which can be reached and inspired in the interests of good rather than evil with respect to these great forces of nature, would be a source of power and strength as contrasted with the dangers of too great specialization along purely technological lines.

In the universities of the past and some of those of the present day, the importance of religion in education was recognized by the very organization of the university faculties themselves. For the ancient European universities were divided into four faculties, those of medicine, law, arts and theology. It was presumed by all men that those four fields belonged together and that human knowledge must include not only a knowledge of this world but also a knowledge of God and his purposes.

Today we gather not to emphasize something that is new, but to re-emphasize something that is old and has been partially lost sight of. Indeed, when education and religion no longer work hand-in-hand, both are the losers; for without education, religion can lose its intellectual respectability; and without religion, education loses its aim.

In recent times, there was a tendency to divorce religion and education. We had taken the faculties of medicine, law, and arts and added business, engineering, architecture, social studies, physical education and I know not what, but we had dropped or never organized a faculty of theology. Very few universities have any official representative of religion on campus. The university chaplain is somewhat of a novelty in modern education. This is strangely incongruous. We want the Church in all the crises of life. When our children are born we want the Church and the rite of baptism; when we marry we want the Church to bless that union; when we are sick or in distress, we want the clergy at our bedside or our door; and when we die, we again turn to the Church. If that is true then how foolish it is that in the great crisis of the change from home life to college life, we think our children have no need of religion.

The University of Pennsylvania had its origin in a charity school founded in 1740 as part of the plan of the free congregation gathered as a result of the preaching of George Whitefield. A meeting house which was erected by this group was to provide for preaching in the building to any group which professed certain doctrines. The Academy was also under obligation to continue the Charity School. In his "Proposal Relating to the Education of Youth in Pennsylvania," which preceded the organization of the Academy, Franklin says: "History will also afford frequent opportunities of showing the necessity of a public religion, from its usefulness to the public; the advantage of a religious character among private persons; the mischief of superstition, and the excellency of the Christian religions above all others, ancient or modern." And it should be noted that Franklin's two principal associates were Provost Smith, prominent churchman and pioneer in the field of education, and Bishop White, first Bishop of Pennsylvania and great conciliator.

IN AMERICA, we place our faith, and justly so, in higher education. It is a light which may illumine all mankind. But it is not some wonder-working panacea which will cure all our ills. Education will be "the light that failed" unless it works hand-in-hand with the forces of religion. "Mankind," Andrew Lang once said, "has been going to Oxford for some six hundred years, and is not yet perfect." Education alone does not integrate the knowledge it gives. Education alone does not furnish adequate goals for living. Education alone cannot rid a generation of the haunting feeling of insecurity, fear and unrest. Education alone cannot inculcate true philosophies. Noble secularity will not do. Something more is needed.

During the formative college years, it is especially imperative that religion of high quality be kept before the student mind. Bishop Lawrence puts the case forcefully: "Do we not often assume that a boy may go to college, pass four years without thought or act of religion, and then come home, and pick up the threads of his religious associations again and show no loss? . . . Is this reasonable? . . . We are familiar with the fact that in the trunk of a hewn tree and its circles within, we can not only count the number of the years of its life, but in the quality and width of the circles, discover the kind of seasons through which the tree has passed—were they wet or dry, fruitful or barren. Two or three successive bad years leave their mark forever in the depth and strength of the tree."

It is entirely possible, without being either sectarian or dogmatic, to hold and to teach a spiritual philsophy of life, one that is in accord with the experience of the world throughout the ages, that furnishes an inspiring ideal, a scientific basis for ethics and a sound standard of values; that illumines and explains the events of life and is in harmony with scientific truth and human reason.

In the early 1930's we were involved in the reorganization of the University of Pennsylvania. We felt that education, as it was then offered in the average American university, lacked this integrating principle. Believing as we did that religion belongs at the center of life of the university—every university—at Pennsylvania we decided to put religion where it belongs, at the center of things. We restored the ancient office of chaplain of the entire university. That, we felt, would be the logical way of putting our faith into practice. We made it possible for the chaplain not only to come into contact with all the students, but also into the actual administration and educational life of the university. We made him an officer of the corporation, so that he could meet with the trustees; we put him on the committee for student affairs, so that he would be at the very heart of the students' life; we gave him an office in the students' center; we made him a full professor on the faculty, to teach a course in religious orientation; we gave him a house near the campus, where he could entertain students in groups both large and small.

To set up this kind of a program for a university had its problems. There was some questioning from many sides; from denominational chaplains, who felt that their own programs might be interfered with; from educators, who thought that these two parts of life should be kept separate; and so, for the first few years, the development was gradual. But Christianity has a strange way of surprising us by its strength and this we saw in the response of our students. Through the years an increasing number attended chapel services planned for the entire university when, several times a month, an hour was set aside, free from all class responsibilities and attendance of students placed on a voluntary basis. A different group assumed leadership each time—classes, fraternities or honor societies or faculties. We made the chapel a part of the college world—a factor in its life—and during the war years, when many men in the service were assigned to us for training, often so far from home, we found they depended more and more upon the chaplain for advice and help and comfort in so many matters touching their lives. He in his services was usually the last remembrance they had of their university experience before leaving for difficult assignments abroad, and if you could have looked in at a chapel service often requested by their commanding officers or by the boys themselves, or upon the services held for such special occasions as invasion days, V-E Day or V-J Day, you would have seen our large auditorium often crowded with boys attending in a body, along with large numbers of those left to serve at home.

In his work with students, the chaplain comes in contact with all phases of their lives and the great variety of problems which this involves. He associates with them at work and at play and learns to know them more intimately perhaps than any other officer of the university. He entertains them in large numbers in his home throughout the year. Frequently, fraternity meetings end at the chaplain's house in an hour of informal conversation and good fellowship.

The Church Society for College Work came into being at the University of Pennsylvania to promote knowledge and acceptance of the Christian religion and to strengthen the work of our Church in colleges and universities. That work, begun over ten years ago, has gone on from strength to strength and the time will come when adequate provision will be made for religion in every college and university in this country.

The officers and directors were chosen mostly from the East so that they could meet frequently. They were few in number at first, feeling their way but believing that a useful purpose could be served if they would make available in colleges throughout the country the facilities which they then lacked in furthering the work of the Church. The early steps were modest, but earnestly taken, and in a few years the system became a factor in the Church at large because of the vehicle it supplied in large centers of learning.

I welcome this service that combines religion and education. It is so auspicious for the future. May we never falter in our aim to have religion and education always go hand-in-hand, not only in this country, but in foreign lands as well.

Let me stress again the tremendous privilege and opportunity which is ours. Colleges and university centers have always been the birthplaces of religious rivivals which have contributed immeasurably to the welfare and advancement of mankind. The same may be true in the colleges and universities of America where the leaders of tomorrow are being trained to bring the American dream to its richest and highest fulfillment.

*Church, Continuity and Unity. By H. Burn-Murdoch. Cambridge University Press: Macmillan Co. $3.50.

Emphasizing the continuity not only of Christian thought but of the institution of the Church, Dr. Burn-Murdoch urges the importance of our spiritual genealogy, which is not to be traced through the ministry alone (the "golden chain" theory) but through the whole household of faith. Though at times his historical criticism is somewhat antiquated, his theological argument is sound and trenchant. "The sought-for medium of unity, the great essential of that unity in diversity for which we yearn and pray, is the ancient and enduring outward organism of the Ekklesia" (p. 179).

*John Henry Newman by Charles F. Harrold. Longmans. $3.50.

This is an interesting, scholarly and sympathetic study of Cardinal Newman. In the biographical chapters as well as in the selections from his writings, Newman is presented as the tragic figure who was hounded by insecurity. Destined for the law, "too solicitous about fame," and failing in school, he decided to study for holy orders. He had no sympathy for a religion of feeling. He complained of Luther that "he found Christians in bondage to their works and observances . . . and left them in bondage to their feelings." Yet one sees in this book by Prof. Harrold how poor Newman was a victim of the very religion of feeling he so deprecated in others and how to satisfy his feeling of insecurity, he sought refuge in Rome. One cannot read the book without thinking of how Pusey stands in striking contrast to Newman. Both were concerned and unhappy about trends in the Church of England. Newman looked to the leaders of the Church for help and when they failed he made his submission to Rome. Pusey put his trust in God, and though the Church leaders disappointed him, he lived and died in the Church of England. This is good reading for a restless generation seeking security. It reminds and warns us how easy it is for great, good and intelligent people to be so obsessed by insecurity as to seek security in an institution rather than in faith in the living God.

The Living Liturgy

Further Comments on Holy Baptism

THE structural pattern of our Prayer Book rite of Baptism consists of five sections, each of which might well be given a title or heading, as in the Scottish Prayer Book form. Any future revision of the service should keep within the framework of these five parts which are logically sequential to one another. Our purpose here is to suggest a few moderate changes in the content of the several parts for consideration on their merits.

1. The Preparation. This section ends with the thanksgiving on page 276 said by minister and people together. It contains all that is left of the lengthy disciplines of the catechumenate, known as "scrutinies," which the ancient Church observed during Lent in preparation for the baptismal liturgy on Easter Even. Incidentally, the signing of the cross originally belonged in this section, but the 1552 Prayer Book was well-advised in transferring the ceremony to an association with the Baptism itself. There is little need any more for the opening question of our service. If the officiating minister does not know the answer before the parents and sponsors arrive with the children, he has not been on his job. I know that the liturgiologists explain it by saying that the question implies that Baptism ought not to be repeated. This was all very well in a superstitious age when many parents sought for their children a magic grace as often as possible, and the clergy baptized indiscriminately without much inquiry or instruction before Baptism. But in these days our problem is to get people to the font even once.

The Exhortation should state in full the meaning and purpose of Holy Baptism. Our present form does so only partially. If one combs through the service for statements as to what Baptism does, the following list may be made: remission of sin, spiritual rebirth, sanctification with the Holy Spirit, incorporation into the Church, the fulness of God's grace, and the inheritance of everlasting salvation in the Kingdom of God. These gifts are all related but they are not synonymous. It would be helpful if all these gifts and graces were gathered together at the beginning of the service; it is confusing to the laity to have some of these come forth suddenly and without preparation in the course of the service.

A good example of what I mean is two phrases in the first prayer, "Almighty and immortal God." One is the reference to God as "the resurrection of the dead." Of course this is related to the ancient custom of administering Baptism on Easter Even. But it is asking too much of ordinary people to understand this allusion all of a sudden. The other unprepared phrase is the reference to "remission of sin." What sin? It is hard to think that anyone nowadays believes that God holds little infants accountable for original sin, who have not yet committed actual sins. Incidentally, this reference to sin is not in the original Latin of this prayer. It might be better translated: "We call upon thee for this thy servant, who seeks the gift of thy Baptism and desires to receive thy eternal grace by spiritual rebirth."

The three lessons from the Gospels are intended to be used as follows: the first when there are only infants, the second when there are only adults, the third when there are both. The Scottish Prayer Book has added the people's responses to the Gospel as in the Eucharist. The brief exhortation or bidding (much reduced from what was at one time a little homily) and the prayer of thanksgiving following are unnecessary and redundant. It might be possible to re-phrase the prayer and make it an alternative to the opening prayer.

2. The Renunciations and Promises. These are very ancient, but it is a curious anomaly that we no longer have the candidates or their sponsors recite the Creed in full. This Creed was first formulated for the very purpose of being professed before the Church at Baptism. The supplications on page 278 originally belonged with the Blessing of the Font, but in their present position it is difficult to associate them with what follows rather than with what precedes, for they do sum up the prayers of the Church for those who have just renounced "the devil, the world, and the flesh." They also introduce the idea of "death and resurrection" which is to be dramatically re-enacted in the ceremony to follow.

A Review of the Church News For the Year 1945

Churches Deal With Vital Issues In Both National and Also International Affairs

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The ending of war and the planning for peace was of course the big news of the year for the Churches as with everyone else. The World Council of Churches developed a fine program of relief and reconstruction to aid the people and the Churches in the war stricken areas, a program which was set forth in a special number of THE WITNESS, May 24. Most of the denominations launched campaigns of the same sort, with the Episcopal Church first asking for three million; raising it to five at a later meeting of the Council, and finally setting the figure at nearly nine million. At first the asking was entirely for the rebuilding of our own churches, schools and other institutions. But it was finally decided at the meeting this month to give ten per cent of all money raised to relief, the money to be handled by the committees of the World Council with headquarters in Geneva.

The Church also played a greater part in the creation of the United Nations Organization than perhaps most readers realize. Various organizations, many of them unofficial like the United Christian Council for Democracy with which the CLID is affiliated, sent out many thousands of copies of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, urging Church groups to study them and send their findings to the state department. The commission for a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches stood wholeheartedly back of the proposals. Our own Church, through the commission on reconstruction headed by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, issued a ringing endorsement of the proposals at the end of a three day conference held at the College of Preachers early in January. The Churches also followed through on their early enthusiasm by having representatives at the San Francisco Conference working for its success. All of which brought commendation from Mr. Stettinius, Mr. Stassen and others of the American delegation who agreed that without the support of the Churches the conference might well have failed.

Abroad perhaps the most significant development during the year was the rivalry that has developed between the Roman Catholic Church and the Russian Orthodox Church for the allegiance of the masses of people in Europe. "In Rome is an orthodoxy with a rightest political orientation; in Moscow is an orthodoxy with a leftist orientation. The fight is on between them," is the way one Church leader summed up the situation. In any case it can be said that the Russian Orthodox is healing one schism after another throughout the world and is rapidly becoming a powerful factor in the religious world.

The place to be taken by Church leaders in Germany is still a question mark. Pastor Martin Niemoller has been the center of heated debate in the American Church press. After eight years in a Nazi concentration camp, one group looks to him to be a militant anti-fascist spokesman; others suspect that the noted pastor, because of his fear of the Soviet Union, will be used by the German military gang and the industrialists, to split the unity of the allies. The last word on this subject came from Methodist Bishop Oxnam, who, on returning from Europe on December 13, expressed his complete confidence in Niemoller. (See Bishop Sherrill, page 5.) This coming year will reveal the role the Churches of Germany are to play in the years ahead.

The fight for freedom from want through a program of sixty million jobs and full employment also has not been neglected by the Churches. But here also the spearheading of the fight has been by the unofficial Church social action groups, but with excellent statements by such official groups as the Federal Council of Churches, the executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Council of Church Women, interdenominational, which also has taken a progressive position on all social and economic questions. The unofficial Church groups have now entered the fight against anti-labor legislation before Congress (WITNESS, Dec. 20) with it extremely unlikely that the Churches officially, except possibly the Methodists, will touch such a hot issue. In our own Church the CLID, early in the year, formulated a program calling for full employment at adequate wages; a public works program to pick up any slack there might be in employment in private industry; support of collective bargaining; racial equality, with support of the FEPC and condemnation of all poll-tax legislation. Later in the year the Methodist Church, in connection with its Crusade for Christ movement, issued a similar program which is perhaps the most progressive to come from any Church officially (WITNESS, Nov. 15).

The youth of the Churches have been much in the news throughout the year. For some months a movement known as Youth for Christ has been staging mass meetings in cities all over the country. It was not long before they were charged by many with being fascist, some going so far as to say that the organization has a definite tie-up with avowedly native fascist groups. So a counter movement was launched recently in Detroit, Youth Marches for Christ, interdenominational, with mass meetings planned for the larger cities where young people will be organized for Christian and democratic ends.

Unity, and specifically unity of the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches, which was a high spot in the 1944 news, was definitely shoved into the back pages and more often than not, out of the papers entirely. Laymen of Montclair, N. J., of both churches, came out in force on a stormy night and issued a statement demanding unity. More recently the vestry of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, made similar demands. With a General Convention in 1946 the subject may be back in the news—it is hardly there now.

Perhaps the most successful Church meeting to be held during the year, at least as far as the Protestant Churches are concerned, was the one held in St. Louis on October 28 when Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist Church scored "Roman Catholic theories of Church and state which lead logically to a subservient state dominated by an absolute Church." There were 20,000 at the meeting, with other thousands turned away, and the outstanding Protestant leaders of the city were united in sponsoring the meeting.

Foreshadowing events in 1946 was a lively debate on the marriage canon which took place at the conference of the clergy of the diocese of Bethlehem in the early fall. It is to be, apparently, one of the top issues of the next General Convention, with a good many opinions likely to be expressed in the meanwhile.

As for individuals in the news during 1945: Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts, as the head of the army and navy commission and an officer of the Federal Council of Churches, made two hurried trips to Europe and is unquestionably the leader of the Episcopal Church in the field of international affairs. Even more in the news was Methodist Bishop Oxnam, who likewise has made two trips to Europe and has given courageous and intelligent leadership to the progressive forces of the Churches.

The election of Geoffrey Francis Fisher as the Archbishop of Canterbury was top news and he has shown a leadership which was hardly expected from one who had the difficult task of following Archbishop Temple. But Archbishop Fisher has spoken out plainly for the unity of the Churches; has taken an advanced position on social and economic matters; has declared that the cooperation of the United Nations must be maintained if civilization is to survive.

On race relations the most significant pronouncement came from South Africa where the Anglican Bishops united in a statement against any kind of discrimination. The year also witnessed the consecration of Bishop Bravid W. Harris to be the Bishop of Liberia and his installation at the cathedral in Monrovia in the presence of high state officials, at which the senior warden of the parish, Mr. C. D. B. King, outlined a far-reaching program for the Church in this mission field.

Among the distinguished visitors to the Churches were Bishop Bell of Chichester, here as a representative of the World Council of Churches; the Rev. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council, who came here to attend a meeting of the World Student Christian Federation; Hewlett Johnson, the Dean of Canterbury, who last month addressed mass meetings in American and Canadian cities urging friendly relations with the Soviet Union.

And perhaps the greatest loss of the year was the death of one who will go down in history as a great Christian leader—Bishop Azariah of Dornakal.

Report Big Increase

New York:—Inclusive church membership in the United States showed an increase of 32.8 per cent during the 18-year period from 1926 to 1943-44, according to statistics compiled by the department of research and education of the Federal Council of Churches.

The census of religious bodies for 1926 reported 54,576,346 church members, while figures for 1943-44 place the total at 72,492,669, representing 52.5 per cent of the nation's population.

In the same interval, the number of members 13 years of age and over increased 33.4 per cent, the number of religious bodies reporting, 20.8 per cent; the number of local churches, 9.3 per cent; and the estimated population, 17.9 per cent, the department revealed.

Of the 256 religious bodies reporting statistics in 1943-44, only 185 reported in 1926. The department's comparative studies revealed that six of the 52 larger groups, these with 50,000 members and over, suffered losses in membership, while 50 of the 133 smaller bodies also showed a decrease.

Among the 13 largest religious bodies—those with a million and more members—the National Baptist Convention U.S.A., Inc., and the National Baptist Convention of America reported the greatest gain, 99.4 per cent. In 1926, their joint membership was given as 3,196,623. For 1943-44, the incorporated body reported 4,021,618 members, and the other 2,352,339.

In the 18-year period, the Southern Baptist Convention gained 60.8 per cent; the United Luthern Church, 39.2 per cent; the Lutheran Missouri Synod, 30.4 per cent; the Roman Catholic Church, 25.9 per cent; the Disciples of Christ, 21.4 per cent; the Northern Baptist Convention, 20.6 per cent; the Protestant Episcopal Church, 19.8 per cent; the Methodist Church, 19 per cent; Jewish Congregations, 13.7 per cent; the Congregational Christian Churches, 8.1 per cent; and the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., 7.7 per cent.

No Christmas Gifts

Cambridge:—The Episcopal Theological School community, led by the social action committee, staged a unique campaign before Christmas. Using the slogan "Make your Christmas gift a Christian gift," the members of the community, faculty and students alike, were urged to put the money saved by not buying presents into a special fund to be used for food and clothing for the children of Germany. Mrs. Robert Ulich, wife of the Harvard professor of education, is shortly to go to Germany to aid that country's children and the money will be placed at her disposal.

Moscow Proposals

Chicago:—The council of bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church in America will shortly announce its decision on proposals submitted by Archbishop Alexei of Yaroslavl and Rostov for re-union of the so-called dissident Church with the Moscow Patriarchate. Archbishop Alexei was sent to the United States on a mission of reconciliation by Patriarch Alexei. The bishops held a two-day meeting here, on the proposals, but neither Archbishop Alexei nor Metropolitan Theophilus, head of the American Russian Church, would make any comment on the probable outcome of the conference. Earlier, however, Metropolitan Theophilus told Religious News Service that he expected the bishops to reject the Moscow proposals.

A Simple Way

Rome:—Pope Pius has an easy solution for Church unity—return "to the Catholic faith." The occasion for the invitation to those with "a desire for that necessary union with Peter and his successors, that most unfortunate circumstances four centuries ago so tragically breached" was the anniversary of the Council of Trent.

Presiding Bishop Tucker, asked for a comment, said that everyone wants unity but "the branch of the Church which I represent cannot agree in his expression of the terms upon which such unity can be achieved, namely, by absorption into the Roman Catholic Church.

New York:—The Rev. Ralph S. Meadowcraft, rector of All Angels', begins his seventh season of national broadcasting on January 6th. He broadcasts over a number of national hook-ups through June.

Honor Former Bishop

Detroit:—Children of the diocese of Michigan are honoring their former bishop, Bishop Herman Page, in contributing to the Memorial Foundation named after him. Collections are being made during Advent, the children using mite boxes that are similar to their Lenten boxes. Bishop Page was noted throughout the Church for his stress on Church schools and Christian education and under his leadership the schools of the diocese showed an increase in membership greater than that of any other diocese in the Church.

Joins Faculty

Evanston, Ill.:—The Rev. Joseph G. Moore, former chaplain of the army, has been appointed lecturer on pastoral theology at Seabury-Western Seminary. He is known throughout the Church for his work as rector at Evansville, Ind., and for his work with the Church League for Industrial Democracy, particularly in connection with the promotion of the Malvern Manifesto. He recently returned from the Pacific where he served in Australia and New Guinea. A story about his unique parish in New Guinea appeared in THE WITNESS some months ago.

New Congregation

Charlotte N. C.:—In 1943 a new congregation was organized in a residential district in Charlotte. It was named Christ Church. At the last Convention this new parish reported three hundred and ninety-nine communicants. Due to war conditions no steps had been taken towards building until now. Services and Sunday School have been held in two vacant stores, but these stores have to give up in 1946. So it has become imperative to build. It is planned to erect the parish house first. This first unit will cost about one hundred thousand dollars and over half of this is already in hand. An excellent situation has been secured, and the lot is already paid for. The rector is the Rev. M. George Henry.

Church-State Issue

Belgrade (wireless to RNS):—The importance of separation of Church and state in the proposed new Yugoslav constitution was emphasized by Vice President Edvard Kardelj here in a speech before the constitutional assembly. Calling the principle of separation essential, Kardelj stated that in his opinion the constitution would not be "democratic without such a decision."

"The essential separation of the Church and the state means in no way that we want to quarrel with the Church," he said, "but the Church must accept the democratic principles acquired during the national struggle for liberation."

As a specific example he cited the question of civil marriages, asserting that it was "Too serious an institution in the life of the state" for the state to leave it in the hands of any other organization.

Missionaries Criticized

Parkville, Mo. (RNS): — Sharp criticism of Protestant missionary methods in China was expressed by Mankwan Wong, dean of the college of commerce in the University of Canton, China, in an address to the student body of Park College here.

Dean Wong declared that Protestant missionaries "live in the cities rather than the rural areas. They mingle with English-speaking people in the foreign communities. They do not enter into the real life of China."

Roman Catholics were credited with making headway because they have concentrated in areas of rural population and have devoted their whole lives to isolated communities.

Praise for Church

London (wireless to RNS):—Appointment of a joint Anglo-American committee to examine Jewish problems in Palestine was hailed here by the Archbishop of York as promising to clear up difficulties that stand in the way of a fair solution. The Archbishop declared that the Church of England has "a real contribution" to make in Palestine, and asserted that meanwhile "it is the duty of every Christian and every freedom-loving citizen to resist and rebuke anti-Semitism, of which I notice with anxiety some signs in Britain."

On the other hand, he added, leaders of Jewish opinion have a great responsibility to restrain persistent attacks on Great Britain being made by Jewish speakers and writers and by the Jewish press on both sides of the Atlantic. Emphasizing the urgent need for a just solution of the Palestine problem, the York prelate warned "there will be an outcry throughout Christendom if ready access to the Holy Places is barred or if they come once again under the control either of the Jewish or Moslem state."

General feeling in Church circles is one of gratification over American cooperation in the Palestine committee. In the House of Lords, Lord Altrincham paid tribute to the Church of England in Palestine, declaring it is "one of the forces there that is most truly representative of the British people."

"There are terrible rivalries in Palestine," he said, "but the Church of England has worked wholeheartedly for harmony between all races, creeds and cultures there."

The man is the author, "Friar Tuck," and the two sharply differentiated lives he pursue are those of newspaper man and priest. Relief Campaign

Tokyo (RNS):—The Japan Religious Society, an organization combining Buddhists, Shintoists and Christians to mobilize all religious efforts in the country for "the moral regeneration of the people," is embarking on a program of relief for Japan's war sufferers. It will make overtures to religious organizations abroad for restoring communications on a basis of international understanding and goodwill.

At a meeting here attended largely by Buddhists it was proposed that religious bodies cooperate in raising funds for the relief of Japanese soldiers and civilians now cut off from their homeland in China, Manchuria and Korea. Religious organizations will aid the repatriation of these overseas Japanese, and Buddhists are offering their temples to house the repatriates until they find homes.

Soichi Saito, general secretary of the Japan YMCA, addressed the meeting. He reviewed the findings of the four-man Protestant delegation which recently toured this country and urged the society "to find ways, though the faiths may differ, to cooperate on a humanitarian level for the betterment of all the people."

Saito was invited by the society to go to China and Manchuria to help in the repatriation of Japanese there, but he indicated he would decline the offer because of his busy schedule here.

The Japan Religious Society functioned throughout the war. The Rev. Mitsutaki Suzuki, an Episcopal rector, is the Christian delegate on the board of the organization. During the war it helped in the relief of bombed-out civilians.

E. T. Lawrence
Layman of Tillicum, Washington

A few days ago I received a newspaper from England which contained an account of the stormy demonstration at St. Paul's Cathedral on the occasion of the investiture of the new Bishop of London when such cries as "traitor" and "down with popery" were hurled at him. It is therefore safe to infer that he is another of those disciples of Rome masquerading as a high churchman. I think the people of England are quite right in looking at such abuses as treasonable. Of course we have the same disgraceful state of affairs here, to our shame. We hear a lot these days about Church unity and the Episcopal Church could become a great leader in this direction with the right kind of leaders at the top and with a rank and file willing to do a little evangelizing. The beautiful ritual as set forth in the Book of Common Prayer if properly carried out constitutes a very enobling service and I have seen many of other faiths who have become so impressed thereby that they have eventually become regular communicants. On the other hand I have seen many who have attended a high church and turned away in disgust saying it was just Roman practices in disguise. When is this double dealing going to stop?

Sgt. James F. Manser
Chaplain's Assistant, Hamilton Field, Cal.

If ever again our Church is called upon to supply a large number of chaplains for the services, it seems to me that the endorsement committee should be careful and observant, at least more than they have been during these past years. The thought of being classified a Protestant has been nothing short of horrifying to many of the Episcopal chaplains I have met and observed, and they treat their duties as Protestant chaplains accordingly. They recoil at the thought of conducting a worship service suitable to all Protestants. They have complete lack of interest in doing this thing. It is a sin and a shame because whether they like it or not, our Church is as truly Protestant as it is Catholic. (Ask the average Episcopalian in what catagory he places himself, and he will say the Protestant group.) I have been ashamed to admit being an Episcopalian when some of our chaplains have behaved in the forementioned manner. If some of our clergy are so anxious to mimic Rome, save a recognition of the Pope, let them give in to that small difference of thought, and go where they seemingly want to belong.

Along this same line of thought, I recently read a letter written to the editor of another publication in our Church in which the writer, a clergyman, said that as Episcopalians we had the obligation to worship God from the Book of Common Prayer every Sunday, even if it be a private service, and then after fulfilling this "obligation" it would be O.K. for us to attend a service in some other branch of the Christian Church. Just what kind of a God do we worship that he can only be properly praised from the Prayer Book? A lover of the Lord can go to any service in any church, and if he is a real Christian, will know that God is there. God can't be locked up in a denominational service of any kind, and if we truly seek him, we will find him, from a Prayer Book service or in an emotional revival meeting. We don't have a God who must be pleased by certain stated services, rituals or duties. The motive, I feel, behind worship is to corporately praise God, testify to our faith and together seek the Lord; to raise our thoughts God-ward and to know and practice his presence.

Yes, I am going into the ministry, and I imagine I'll be most unpopular with many of the good brethren. The thing that steams me up in the very beginning is the fact that whenever anyone asks me what Church I belong to, and I reply Episcopal, they pipe up, "That is just like the Catholic (Roman) Church, isn't it?" I am sick of it, and it is the fault of the clergy in our Church who refuse to feel Protestant as well as Catholic about the whole thing.

Frederick C. Grant
Professor at Union and Witness editor

The Rev. Ralph Harper of St. John's, Winthrop, Mass. continues his valiant efforts to encourage the clergy and seminary students to cultivate proper habits of breathing, speech, and posture. The more power to him! Almost everywhere we go, laymen open up the subject of the clerical voice. "Can't the seminaries do something about it? . . . Mr. X. is an admirable man—but no one can hear him. Father Y. drops his final words in every sentence. Even the Bishop (no, not Bp. Z., not if you know our good friend Wyoming Win)—even the Bishop has a weak voice.

Mr. Harper's Voice Governor has done good service, and is about to appear in a new edition, with a new chapter on "G-suiting the Body." A G-suit is a tight rubber suit to hold the body in place, internally, during bombing dives, etc. The principle Harper advocates is a similar muscular control, with consequent good results for the voice, not to say for health generally. I am not an expert in voice training, but I have seen the results of the application of Mr. Harper's principle, and I commend his book and his idea. But mere reading won't do it. That takes practice! But there is probably not a clerical voice in Christendom that couldn't be improved—and a good many of them need it.

The VOICE GOVERNOR

Give It a Chance

Correct Body Mechanics Does It

RALPH M. HARPER

"This work may be the most accurate study of the voice as a whole which has been published.

"The original observations on which the conclusions are based were made by Phillips Brooks' voice teacher—the result of unpublished study extending over a period of 70 years. Miss Hooker entrusted her notes to the author who, thus far, has spent 32 years in research.

"Phillips Brooks was happy in having a physician, Dr. Henry I. Bowditch, who counseled him to take daily voice lessons for a year. For the remaining 17 years of his life he continued to profit by occasonal instruction, saving himself from what he acknowledged 'vocal catastrophe.'

"His voice problem was strikingly similar to the unsolved one of Wendell Willkie."

—RALPH M. HARPER.

Sixty-five years of Experience:

"I found that your explanations were perfectly exact because I have been teaching the same principles for 65 years. Among the thousands of voice treatises written since Mancini and Tosi The Voice Governor stands ahead of all, and I hope it will turn a new page in voice production."

—LINO MATTIOLI, Professor Emeritus, College of Music, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"I liked it from the start. It is physiologically sound, basically scientific, and far removed from the funny little isms that prevail in studios using almost psychopathic practices with never a hint of the basic laws of the human body."

—H. AUGUSTINE SMITH, Professor of Church Music, Boston University.

"It should help many in solving vocal problems in choir training, and I believe it to be a most valuable contribution to the cause of decent and natural singing."

—EVERETT TITCOMB, Composer, Choirmaster, and Instructor in the New England Conservatory of Music.

"A genuine contribution to the literature on the voice. It is an interesting and valuable new approach to a subject which needs scientific treatment."

—E. W. ZIEBARTH, Director, School of the Air, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis.

"This book should be a source of profitable interest to trainers of choirs—in fact, all who have to do with voice training."

—THE DIAPASON, official organ of the American Guild of Organists, Chicago.

G-SUITING THE BODY

A NECESSITY OF HEALTH AND VOICE

(Two chapters and twelve illustrations from The Voice Governor are included in G-Suiting the Body for use in speech classes and church choirs.)

Fifty Years

"G-Suiting the Body I intend to use in my classes, also for individual cases which come to me either for speech or general well-being. It synopsizes and simplifies what I have been trying to teach for some years. I have rather consistently tried to exorcise the Imp, 'Stick out your chest,' and all his kin."

—A. J. KUHLMAN, S.J., West Baden College, West Baden Springs, Indiana. At speech work in many phases for 50 years and more.

"Good posture and abdominal breathing, under the control of the 'governor' are fundamental to good speech and song. The speaker, singer, and voice teacher will find this small volume interesting."

—Journal of the American Medical Assn., Chicago.

"I am delighted with The Voice Governor. The appearance of the book is pleasing. I not only enjoyed this but am as much pleased to have this record of careful study of the mechanics of the different parts of the body."

—JOEL E. GOLDTHWAIT, Member of the Board of Consultants, Massachusetts General Hospital; Ex-President of American Orthopaedic Association; Organizer and First Chief of Orthopaedic Service, Massachusetts General Hospital.

Forty Years

"I am pleased to get a copy of G-Suiting the Body and I am enclosing check to pay for four copies which I think I can use advantageously, as the ideas therein contained re-inforce what I have been teaching for more than forty years."

—WALTER L. BOGERT, Charter member and for 20 years Secretary of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing.
